SB 23: Alaska Film Production Incentive Program Extension

Senate Bill 23 ensures Alaska's competitiveness with other states and countries by continuing the successful Alaska Film Production Incentive Program. Since its inception, the film incentive program has brought millions of production dollars to Alaska. Productions have also created hundreds of jobs and provided marketing and promotional opportunities for Alaskan businesses, products, and the tourism industry. The continuation of these incentives will create the economic stability required for the private sector to better plan and invest in Alaska's growing film industry infrastructure.

The law currently sunsets after five years or after $100 million in tax credits have been issued. The program offers an incentive of 30% on all qualified spending in Alaska, with an additional 10% for Alaskan hire, 2% for shooting in rural Alaska and 2% for working in the winter months. Eligible productions earn a transferrable tax credit certificate which they can sell to any company with an Alaska corporate income tax liability, offering tax relief to industries as varied as commercial fishing, mining and other business owners. Tax credits are issued only after the film production money has been spent in Alaska, the filming has been completed, and an independent CPA has verified all expenditures.

We have already seen the enormous benefits of "Everybody Loves Whales," a feature film project with an estimated $30 million production budget. On any given day of production, there were more than 100 Alaskans working both in front of and behind the camera. Over 1,000 Alaskans were employed as extras representing towns and villages across the state. Local businesses enjoyed a boost of more than 12,100 hotel nights, 8,800 car rental days and 7,900 security man-hours during what are typically the quietest months of the year.

Businesses that benefitted from this production included construction companies, towing companies, aerial charters, hardware stores, lumber yards, communication companies, landscaping, restoration companies, dumpster services and rentals, plumbing, heating, rental equipment companies, truck leasing, crane companies, paving companies, catering, cleaning, boat charters, diving companies, survey companies, engineering firms, printing, office supplies, motor-home rentals, shipping companies, airlines, hotels, and restaurants.

Although the legislation creating the film incentives passed in April of 2008, it took quite a while to get this new program up and running. The regulations took more than a year to write and implement, and the current film office director wasn't hired until mid-2009. The first feature film project, "Everybody Loves Whales", didn't even begin filming until the fall of 2010. As has been reported recently in the press, some states with huge budget deficits have been cutting their film incentive programs. Alaska is fortunate that our finances are in good shape, and this only helps to make Alaska and our program all that more attractive to producers.

Senate Bill 23 would extend the film incentive program for 10 years. The legislation will provide an additional $100 million in tax credits for the first five years of the extension and $100 million for the final five years. Passage of Senate Bill 23 will continue to attract this new industry to Alaska. It will build on the jobs and business opportunities created by the existing film incentives and bring our state positive attention and substantial investment. It will continue to help in developing a strong and diversified economy that will entice our graduates to remain in Alaska instead of looking for jobs elsewhere.
