FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS

STATE OF ALASKA 2016 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HJR 30

Analysis

HJR 30 states the Alaska State Legislature believes the term "post-traumatic stress disorder" should be universally changed to "post-traumatic stress injury." It urges the American Psychiatric Association (APA) to change the term "post-traumatic stress disorder" to "post-traumatic stress injury" in the next revision of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, and encourages the Governor to support using the the term "post-traumatic stress injury" instead of "post-traumatic stress disorder."

HJR 30 is intended to 1) bring greater public awareness to the plight of people suffering from post-traumatic stress injuries, 2) encourage both the public and service providers to recognize and reject the stigma associated with terminology describing a medical condition as a disorder rather than an injury caused by an external source or event, 3) encourage the Alaska Departments of Military and Veterans' Affairs and Health and Social Services and agencies nationwide to continue educating service members and veterans, victims of abuse, crime, and natural disaster, their families, and the public about the causes, symptoms, and possible treatment of post-traumatic stress injuries, and 4) support the nationwide effort now under way to change the convention of referring to post-traumatic stress from a disorder to an injury in order to increase awareness, remove the stigma, and help more Americans get the help they need to recover from post-traumatic stress injuries.

The Alaska Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs applauds any effort to raise public awareness of post-traumatic stress injuries in both military and civilian populations, and welcomes broader understanding of their causes, effects, and treatments. While it is conceivable and even desirable more sufferers of post-traumatic stress injuries would seek treatment as a result of the passage of this bill, the Department's Office of Veterans' Affairs anticipates no measurable increase in service demand. OVA personnel and Veteran Service Officers assist tens of thousands of veterans each year and are equipped to address whatever case load increase might result. Further, unless and until the APA, medical providers, and federal and state administrators adopt the naming convention of "post-traumatic stress injury," medical diagnoses and treatment will continue to be prescribed and carried out under existing terminology, and there will be no effect on anyone seeking, receiving, or providing treatment under the old terminology. Consequently, the Department anticipates no fiscal impacts from the passage of this bill.
