Executive Summary

Professional licensure portability and practice standards for providers using telemedicine are some of the biggest challenges for health care providers considering telemedicine adoption. Providers often encounter a patchwork of conflicting and disparate requirements for insurance claims and practice standards that prohibit them from fully taking advantage of telemedicine.

The American Telemedicine Association (ATA) has captured the complex policy landscape of 50 states with 50 different telemedicine policies, and translated this information into an easy to use format. This report extracts and compares physician practice standards for telemedicine for every state in the U.S. ultimately assigning a grade which indicates existing policy barriers that inhibit the use of telemedicine that would enable patient and provider choice to quality health care services.

Our analysis indicates that decades of evidence-based research highlighting positive patient compliance, clinical outcomes and increasing telemedicine utilization have been met with a mix of strides and stagnation in state-based policy. Since the initial release of our September 2014 report, there has not been much variance in the composite grades given to the states. When comparing the numerous state laws and differing medical board standards regarding telemedicine, twenty-two states averaged the highest “composite grade” suggesting a supportive policy landscape that accommodates telemedicine adoption and usage. Twenty-six states and D.C. fall in the middle with room for improvement. Two states averaged the lowest composite score suggesting many barriers for telemedicine advancement (Figure 1 and Table 1).

When compared to the September 2014 report and broken down using the four indicators, the state-by-state comparisons still reveal a great disparity.

- Regarding physician-patient encounters, twenty-two states rank the highest, while Alabama, Arkansas, and Texas are ranked the lowest with failing scores mainly because they create the most stringent clinical practice rules for telemedicine providers when compared to in-person practice. (Figure 2).
- Regarding telepresenter requirements, Alaska, Hawaii, and Louisiana are ranked the lowest with failing scores (Figure 3). An overwhelming majority of states do not require the presence of a health professional during a telemedicine encounter. Although most of the country does not require patient informed consent before a telemedicine encounter, sixteen states and D.C. require physicians to obtain patient informed consent (Figure 4). This growing trend is largely due to states adopting language developed by the Federation for State Medical Boards (FSMB) which promotes a regulatory requirement for patient informed consent for telemedicine providers.

According to our scale, no state achieved a top score (A) for their licensure policies. This means that every state imposes a policy that makes practicing medicine across state lines difficult regardless of whether or not telemedicine is used.

Purpose

A frequently asked question among people interested in telemedicine is “How does my state compare?” To answer that question for two key areas, reimbursement and medical practice rules, ATA has developed an easy-to-use, state-by-state report for each area.

This report on medical practice rules is especially timely with several licensing boards reviewing the emerging and evolving telemedicine practices and telemedicine use within their state.

This report helps answer the basic questions:

- “How does my state’s telemedicine policies compare to others?”
- “Which states offer the best policies for physicians using telemedicine?”
- “Which states impose barriers to telemedicine access for patients and providers?”

It is important to note that this report is not a “how-to guide” for becoming a telemedicine provider. This is a reference tool aimed to inform future policy decision making and serve as a reference for interested parties. The results presented in this document are based on information collected from state statutes, regulations, medical board statements, and other federal and state policy resources. However, the report does not assess unwritten medical board policies. It is ATA’s best effort to interpret and understand each state’s policies. Your own legal counsel should be consulted as appropriate.

Overview

Health care providers have seen a considerable amount of state policy activity to improve coverage and reimbursement of telemedicine-provided services by various payers. However, despite improvements to address the payment challenges, health care providers are encountering conflicting and sometimes confusing policies from their own colleagues.

Within the past year, over 25 states have considered proposals, with varied results, to revise health professional standards and licensure requirements when using telemedicine. Some states are creating new laws that impact access to care via telemedicine, while others are amending existing policies with greater implications.

More notably a few state medical boards are adopting practice standards with higher specifications for telemedicine than in-person care. Specifically, these boards have considered legal guidelines requiring an initial examination be conducted in-person and a physician-patient relationship be established in-person. Boards have also considered other telemedicine barriers including requirements for a telepresenter, in-person follow up exam, and patient informed consent. These decisions leave telemedicine providers no choice but to navigate the medical practice laws in their state or risk punitive action by their board.

Licensure portability, the ability for health care providers to practice out-of-state using one license, is a contentious issue for health care providers whether services are deployed via telemedicine or not. Most states require that a physician is licensed in the state where their patient is located. However, these state-by-state approaches prevent people from receiving critical, often life-saving medical services that may be available to their neighbors living just across the state line. They also create economic trade barriers, restricting access to medical services and artificially protecting markets from competition.

Assessment Methods

Scoring

This report evaluates telemedicine policies in each state based on two categories:

- Physician practice standards
- Licensure.

These categories were measured using 4 indicators. The indicators were chosen based on the most recent and generally accessible information assembled and published by state public entities. Using this information, we took qualitative characteristics based on standards for the physician-patient encounter and licensure requirements and assigned those quantitative values. States were given a certain number of points for each indicator depending on its effectiveness. The points were then used to rank and compare each state by indicator. We used a four-graded system to rank and compare each state. This is based off of the scores given to each state by indicator.

Each indicator was given a maximum number of points ranging from 1 to 9. The aggregate score for each indicator was ranked on a scale of A through F based on the maximum number of points.

The report also includes a category to capture the existence of a state policy or statement on internet prescribing in each state. We have included a matrix with hyperlinks to the policy or board statement language highlighting the position on internet prescribing.

Limitations

Physician licensure and medical practice policies vary in each state. Although groups such as the FSMB offer a uniform application for physician state licensure and guideline recommendations on practice standards, each state medical board has their own unique requirements and process for authorizing and permitting medical practice standards.

We analyzed statutes, regulations, and medical board statements/positions regarding the clinical permissibility of telemedicine. As such, the information in this report is a snapshot of information gathered through April 2015. This report does not assess unwritten medical board policies. The analysis and scores are reflective of the written medical policies regarding telemedicine.

Indicators

Physician Practice Standards

A. Physician-patient Encounter

Telemedicine is the use of telecommunications to facilitate health care delivery. As such, telemedicine is seen as a tool to augment, and not replace, the clinical practice, judgment, and expertise of a health care provider.

Each state was assessed based on policies pertaining to the use of telemedicine before, during, and after a patient encounter. Some states institute more stringent standards for physicians when using telemedicine, and may require an in-person visit in addition to any clinical examination performed via telemedicine. Unlike similar policies related to conditions of payment, these policies affect a provider’s licensure status and permissibility to practice medicine.

We measured components of state policies that permit or obstruct the professional use of telemedicine before, during, or after the physician-patient encounter.

Scale – Physician-patient Encounter
A	9 points
B	7-8 points
C	5-6 points
F	≤ 4 point

Figure 2

Twenty-two states rank the highest, while Alabama, Arkansas, and Texas are ranked the lowest with failing (F) scores mainly because they create the most stringent clinical practice rules for telemedicine providers when compared to in-person practice (Figure 2). When compared to the September 2014 report, some states are ranking lower because they are developing separate and distinct clinical practice standards for telemedicine when compared to in-person care delivery. Alabama and Texas Medical boards find telemedicine as an acceptable mode of delivering care only when the patient is at an established medical site. Arkansas is the only state that requires an in-person visit before most telemedicine encounters. Alabama, Georgia, and Texas are the only states that require an in-person follow-up after a telemedicine encounter.

B. Telepresenter

For this report, we measured components of state Medical board policies and private insurance parity laws that apply more stringent requirements for telemedicine as opposed to in-person services. States were evaluated based on requirements for a telepresenter or health care provider on the premises during a telemedicine encounter.

Scale – Telepresenter
A	3 points
B	2 points
C	1 point
F	0 points

Figure 3

Alabama and Texas only require a health care provider to be on the premises and not physically with the patient during a telemedicine encounter. Alaska, Hawaii, and Louisiana are ranked the lowest with failing (F) scores (Figure 3). Legislation enacted last year in California allows the initiating provider to obtain a patient’s informed consent verbally which no longer requires a telepresenter at the patient site.

C. Informed Consent

We measured components of state Medical board and private insurance parity policies that apply more stringent requirements for telemedicine as opposed to in-person services. States were evaluated based on requirements for written or verbal informed consent, or unspecified methods of informed consent before a telemedicine encounter can be performed.

Scale – Informed Consent
A	4 points
B	3 points
C	2 points
F	≤ 1 point

Most of the country does not require patient informed consent before a telemedicine encounter (Figure 4). Sixteen states and D.C. have informed consent requirements with Alabama, Indiana, Oklahoma, Texas, and Washington requiring written acknowledgement from the patient. Rhode Island’s medical board requires informed consent when using e-mails and text based communications.

Licensure

D. Licensure and Out-of-State Practice

Licensure portability is an often debated topic. “Where should a health care provider be licensed”? “Which states allow health care providers to consult with one another across state lines”? “Which states inhibit patient choice by limiting the types of providers that can treat them”?

As the use of telecommunication to complement health care service delivery becomes readily available, some states have responded with policies that accommodate patient choice, peer consultation, and health provider shortages. For this report, we measured components of state Medical board licensure requirements for out-of-state telemedicine providers including reciprocity for bordering states, physician-to-physician (P2P) consultation exemptions, and conditional/telemedicine licenses.

Scale – Licensure and Out-of-State Practice
A	9 points
B	6-8 points
C	3-5 points
F	≤ 2 points

According to our scale, no state achieved a top score (A) for this indicator. This means that every state imposes a policy that makes practicing medicine across state lines difficult regardless of whether or not telemedicine is used. Michigan, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota are the only states that do not allow some type of licensure exemption for physician-to-physician out-of-state consultation. The Massachusetts Board of Registration in Medicine confirms that telemedicine is allowed to facilitate a peer-to-peer out-of-state consultation. Further, D.C., Maryland, New York, and Virginia, are the only states that allow licensure reciprocity from bordering states.

Alabama, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, Ohio, Oregon, Tennessee, and Texas are the only states that extend a conditional or telemedicine license to out-of-state physicians. Montana enacted a law this year to repeal their telemedicine license in favor of a full unrestricted license requirement for out-of-state physicians.

Internet Prescribing

This report also includes a category to capture the existence of a medical and/or pharmacy board policy or statement on internet prescribing in each state. We have included a matrix with hyperlinks to the policy or board statement language highlighting the position on internet prescribing.
