STATE OF ALASKA
2015 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 15

Analysis

The bill, if enacted into law as drafted, would require the courts to grant credit, against a term of imprisonment, for time spent by the sentenced defendant in a private residence or under electronic monitoring. The bill would also require the Department of Corrections to administratively award "good time" deduction from a sentence of imprisonment for any period spent by the sentenced defendant in a treatment program, in a private residence or while under electronic monitoring.

The effect, if the bill became law, would be to increase the amount of time credited to a prisoner on his or her sentence for time spent by that prisoner "in a private residence," in a treatment program and/or under electronic monitoring. There could be a corresponding reduction in the costs to the state associated with housing incarcerated prisoners in jails and prisons and a corresponding increase in the costs associated with administering treatment programs and electronic monitoring programs, since the latter would likely become a preferred mode of supervision for many accused defendants, both pre- and post-trial, as a way of reducing the time spent in jail or prison.

The Departments of Law, Public Safety and Corrections and the Alaska Court System, along with accused and sentenced defendants, organizations and businesses concerned with victims' rights and bail/monitoring of defendants, all would likely be materially affected by the law.

What is meant by the term "in a private residence" is not defined.

The bill as such would not materially affect the operations or mission of the Office of Public Advocacy (OPA) but would definitely affect criminal defendants represented by OPA attorneys. The agency, therefore, submits a zero fiscal note.
