I want to see Senate Bill 91 repealed. It was tried out and is not working, it's time to admit that it needs to go.

It doesn't do enough to deter crime when offenders are able to walk out after being arrested. Not including out of state arrests in the criteria to let someone walk or not is a serious fault. The majority of Alaskan residents come from some other state, many of them are "end of the road" types running from something else they did.

Our law enforcement agencies are sorely lacking staff and stretched too thin to be having to "catch and release" over and over. This leaves Alaskan crime victims pretty much on their own when nothing happens to the people who steal their vehicles or rob and ransack their homes. Alaskans shouldn't have to resort to carrying guns and having to stand guard over their homes because of a broken law.
