Senators:

The revenue crisis is obvious every year. Where can we find the money for education? Where can we insure the functioning of our government?

The days of full PFD dividends are over. That's hard, but we can accept it because the money is needed for vital services.

Like us, the oil companies like Hilcorp cannot expect to operate without reducing their profits and paying their share of the necessary funding for continuing operations.

This is common sense for all of us. Are we in this situation for the long haul and as a community? The big corporations should pay their fair share.

Dear Alaska Senate Finance Committee,

It is only fair that all companies pay taxes. Alaskans need and are ensured constitutionally to benefit from the use of lands and its parts. In the case of extraction, which by definition means taking away, it is particularly crucial that Alaskans see more benefits than harms from any venture involving us and the lands we all depend on economically. Allowing a corporation to take both fossil hydrocarbons -- with harms to land, waters, and intensifying climate change consequences--as well as untaxed capital profit out of the state does not benefit Alaskans. (And there is no evidence the state will get more revenue or jobs by giving corporations a tax break. And there are many, many other better options than tax breaks for extractive industries for Alaskan to global economic thriving.) I wish to see Alaskans benefit from all ventures touching us. And, by benefit, I mean the health of our bodies fundamentally dependent upon clean ecologies - lands, air, and waters - inseparable from local economies. I support SB 92 because it is more compatible with a vision of intergenerational health and prosperity.

Thank you,
Julianne Warren

Dear Committee Members,

I am writing to encourage the passing of SB 92 to tax oil and gas companies. At a time when our state faces deep deficits, this is an obvious and simple solution to reclaim some of those funds.

Thank you,
