

Fiscal Veto Threshold

By a +6-point margin, Alaska voters support amending the Constitution so that two-thirds of members of the legislature would be enough to override any veto, including budget vetoes.

Alaska Voters Think Two-Thirds Should Be Enough to Override Any Kind of Veto

Under Alaska's Constitution, the legislature needs three-quarters (75%) of all members to override the governor's veto of a spending bill or budget item. For all other types of bills, only two-thirds (67%) is required.

Do you support or oppose amending the Constitution so that two-thirds would be enough to override any veto, including budget vetoes?

July 21–27, 2025 survey of 678 Alaska likely voters

DATA FOR PROGRESS

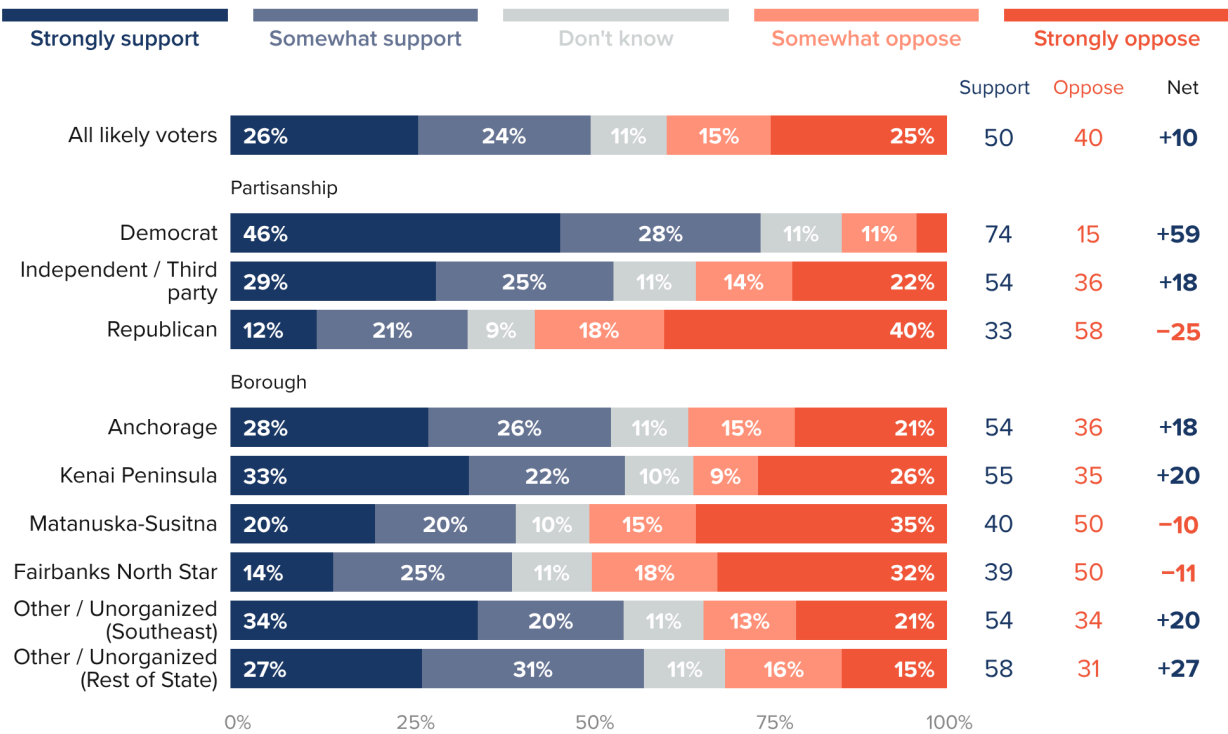

We wanted to understand what information might make respondents more favorable of lowering the threshold. Respondents were subsequently told that Alaska is the only state in the country that requires a three-quarters vote to override vetoes on spending and budget matters and that until this year, the legislature hadn't overridden a governor's veto since 2009. With this information, the margin of support increases to +10.

Additional Context Makes Alaska Voters More Likely to Think Two-Thirds Is Enough for Veto Overrides

Under Alaska's Constitution, the legislature needs three-quarters (75%) of all members to override the governor's veto of a spending bill or budget item. For all other types of bills, only two-thirds (67%) is required.

Alaska is the only state in the country that requires a three-quarters vote to override vetoes on spending and budget matters. Until this year, the legislature hadn't overridden a governor's veto since 2009.

Knowing what you do now, do you support or oppose amending the Constitution so that two-thirds would be enough to override any veto, including budget vetoes?

July 21–27, 2025 survey of 678 Alaska likely voters

DATA FOR PROGRESS

Source:
<https://www.dataforprogress.org/blog/2025/7/31/alaska-legislature-special-session-polling-voters-overwhelmingly-support-overriding-vetoes>