

Palin critics question ethics rules proposals

PALIN ERA: New regulations would address traveling on the state's dime, paying legal bills.

JUNEAU -- A legislative committee on Monday took up ethics issues that erupted during the Palin administration, but it's not clear whether the panel intends to take any action.

Attorney General Dan Sullivan has proposed state rules establishing when it's appropriate for the state to pay for the travel of family members of the governor or lieutenant governor. Another proposal sets out when the state should pay legal bills for state officials defending against ethics complaints.

Former Gov. Sarah Palin was hit with numerous ethics complaints during her 2 1/2 years in office. She said she quit in part because of what she called frivolous ethics complaints and personal legal bills amounting to an estimated $600,000.

Most of the ethics complaints against Palin were dismissed. But she settled one by reimbursing the state more than $8,000 for her children's air travel.

Some parts of the package Sullivan is proposing go beyond the Palin-era controversies. For instance, another proposed rule change would do away with a requirement for state officials to disclose as gifts any travel for state business paid by others. But they still would have to file travel reports, which would be public.

Sullivan is trying to make the changes through new state regulations, which don't need legislative approval.

Oversight comes from the joint House-Senate Administrative Regulation Review Committee, which examines regulations to make sure they are allowed under state law.

The panel agreed to hold a public hearing on the ethics measures after being pushed by Palin critic Andree McLeod. House leaders also requested it, said state Rep. Wes Keller, R-Wasilla, who is the committee chairman.

LEGAL FEES, FAMILY TRAVEL

Under the proposed rules, the state could cover the costs of defending a public official against ethics complaints if the official were exonerated, Assistant Attorney General Judy Bockmon told the committee.

Travel would be covered if the presence of a family member is required for state business or has a public purpose. The proposal says that would include a state-sponsored event that the family of the governor or lieutenant governor usually attends, or an event in which the family member is representing the state.

State Rep. David Guttenberg, D-Fairbanks, asked Bockmon whether state law gives any guidance on paying for family travel.

It doesn't, she said.

In that case, why try to decide when it's appropriate -- maybe it shouldn't be permitted at all, Guttenberg responded.

That's up to the Legislature, Bockmon said. There might be value to the state for the family to attend. It depends on the nature of the event.

State Rep. Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, said it might just save worry and time for a governor with young children to bring them along.

CRITICS TESTIFY

McLeod, who filed a number of ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, urged the committee to reject the changes.

"Are these changes valid? Do they improve the standards of public service? Do they promote the faith and confidence of the people in this state in their public officers? I submit that they do not," McLeod told the legislative committee.

McLeod said private citizens with questions about whether a public official has crossed a legal or ethical line can't get ethics opinions the way state employees can. So the public has no recourse except filing complaints to get answers, she said.

The Executive Branch Ethics Act is important, and the attorney general shouldn't be trying to change the law, another Palin critic, Zane Henning, told the committee. The Legislature should make any needed changes, he said.

"I object to the entire process that is being pushed through here," Henning said.

The ethics law needs reform, but not in the way the attorney general wants, Henning said. Elected officials, not the governor-appointed Personnel Board, should oversee ethics complaints against state officials, he said.

Both of his complaints against Palin were dismissed. One involved an interview about the vice presidential campaign that she gave to Fox News in her state office; the other concerned the fact she collected state expense payments while living in her own home in Wasilla.

ARM'S-LENGTH INVESTIGATORS

Henning's concerns about the Personnel Board seemed to resonate with legislators.

"I'm just wondering is there maybe too close of a relationship there," state Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, asked during the hearing.

Bockmon told the committee an independent counsel investigates ethics complaints against the governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general in an effort to separate the Personnel Board from those high-level officials.

The committee can't halt the regulations from taking effect during the annual legislative session, but can express disapproval and propose new laws to override any objectionable regulations.

The Department of Law has solicited public comment and held a hearing on the ethics changes, Bockmon said. The period for comment has ended and the department must now decide what to do. It could adopt the provisions as is or with minor changes, or let the matter drop with no action.

The committee hasn't yet decided how to proceed, Keller said.

Costs of dismissed Palin ethics complaints pile up

Personnel board member says tab is "close to about a third of a million dollars."

The Alaska Personnel Board, clearly frustrated with the pile of ethics complaints filed against Gov. Sarah Palin, wants to publicize the cost of dealing with them.

The personnel board members decided at a Wednesday meeting to work with the attorney general's office on how to make public the cost of addressing each ethics complaint, without violating the board's confidentiality rules.

"We've spent pretty close to about a third of a million dollars, and it's getting to be really expensive," said Al Tamagni, a member of the board.

Also Wednesday, the three-member board dismissed another complaint, this one involving Palin and her political action committee, and heard testimony from a woman who asserted fear of retaliation has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor.

The governor's office said it is the 13th ethics complaint against Palin or her staff that has been resolved without finding of an executive ethics act violation. But Palin has agreed to reimburse the state in order to settle an ethics complaint over 10 state-paid trips taken by her children. A "few more" complaints are pending a decision by the personnel board, the governor's office said.

Andree McLeod, an Anchorage activist who has filed multiple ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, said after the meeting that the board is trying to squash accountability by saying it costs too much.

"The whole way to mitigate all this is for Palin to behave ethically," said McLeod, who filed the complaint that was dismissed by the board on Wednesday.

Valerie Henning told the board that fear of a backlash has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor's practice of collecting per diem for time spent at her home in Wasilla. Henning's husband, Zane, earlier had an ethics complaint dismissed by the board. His complaint alleged Palin violated ethics law by holding national television interviews concerning her run for vice president from the governor's office.

Valerie Henning brought up to the board the statement that Palin's chief of staff, Mike Nizich, made on April 22 after the filing of an ethics complaint against Palin that was released to the press.

"I hope that the publicity-seekers will face a backlash from Alaskans who have a sense of fair play and proportion. I served six previous governors, and I've never seen anything like the attacks against governor Palin," Nizich said in a press release distributed by the governor's office.

Valerie Henning tried to get board members to suggest some alternative to making the ethics complaint, saying "I'm afraid of retaliation, basically."

Palin spokesman Bill McAllister said Nizich was simply asking that Alaskans who have a "sense of fair play and proportion" speak up about what's going on.

"I don't know what she means by retaliation, but certainly some people have been raising their voices in protest of this abuse of the ethics act," McAllister said. "People make these allegations against the governor and they keep getting dismissed and dismissed and dismissed, and some people are saying 'What's going on here?'"

Pro-Palin bloggers have assailed "ankle biter" ethics complainants in writing and KBYR talk radio host Eddie Burke has gone after McLeod on his show, saying he was going to hunt down evidence she was motivated by not getting a state job.

One of the personnel board members, Tamagni, last fall asked a state attorney if the board could charge attorney fees for Alaskans who file "a frivolous or meritless" ethics complaint. It's not clear how the state would judge a complaint frivolous, but charging for them would require changing the law.

Personnel board members spoke Wednesday about possibly pursuing changes in the law regarding their ethics complaint procedures -- such as changing the "thresholds for investigations."

Ethics complainants in the audience asked board chair Debra English for detail after the meeting, but she curtly brushed them off, saying the meeting was over and she wasn't going to say more.

English also refused to answer when a Daily News reporter asked what the board had in mind. She said the reporter should have come before the board and given public testimony in order to get any questions answered from its members.

Members of the personnel board are volunteers appointed by the governor, although all three of the current members were in place when Palin took office in 2006. Palin last year reappointed English to a six-year term but hasn't had a role yet in either of the two other positions, which have terms expiring in 2010 and 2012.

The governor also has the power to remove members of the personnel board, but only for cause.
