Teacher Education Update

UA Teacher Education Programs

- UAA's loss of CAEP accreditation for its initial licensure teacher preparation programs required University and Board action to meet student needs
- The only certain path for UA education graduates to state licensure from an approved and accredited program was for UAF and UAS to step in to provide programs after August 2019
- The Board of Regents approved the discontinuation of UAA programs and accepted the modified UAF and UAS proposals to meet student needs. These decisions were implemented such that Southcentral students were offered several options beginning in Fall 2019 to pursue teaching degrees that would lead to state licensure

Timeline of UAA College of Education and Initial Licensure Accreditation Review

- August 2017 Self-study submitted to CAEP
- April 2018 CAEP Site Visit
- January 2019 CAEP notice of revocation of accreditation
- January 2019 UAF and UAS receive UAA student transfers
- January 2019 DEED waives regulation requiring CAEP accreditation for UAA completers in May and August 2019 but not for subsequent program graduation dates
- April 2019 Board of Regents votes to discontinue initial licensure programs
- August 2019 UAS and UAF recruit students in Southcentral Alaska into teacher education programs. UAF begins to offer face-to-face classes on UAA campus

Below the image, a quote says 'You can do great things and we want to support you every step of the way.' The page is divided into four sections: 'Awarding' (listing requirements like completing the application, submitting test scores, and meeting SAT/ACT requirements), 'Eligibility' (listing requirements like being admitted to a baccalaureate program, enrolling full time, and meeting the Satisfactory Academic Progress Policy), 'Usage Limits' (stating the scholarship is available for up to four years of continuous enrollment), and 'Appeals' (stating appeals for continuing students not meeting Satisfactory Academic Progress criteria or a short break in enrollment will be reviewed by the Financial Aid Office).
