

Nation & World

Alaska health department reports data breach

Originally published June 28, 2018 at 3:58 pm

By The Associated Press

The Associated Press

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Personal information of hundreds of Alaskans may have been disclosed as part of a security breach involving the state Division of Public Assistance.

State health department spokeswoman Katie Marquette says there has been no indication that personal information on the computer infected with a virus two months ago had been used in an unauthorized way.

Those who have interacted with the public assistance's northern region offices are urged to take steps to guard against identity theft.

Marquette says the department waited to notify the public until it had a more accurate picture of what happened.

Most Read Nation & World Stories

- 1 A hunt for clues in Hawaii after a tourist couple falls ill with coronavirus
- 2 A small bookstore pondered its future after a day without a sale. After a tweet, it became overwhelmed with orders.
- 3 Pizza sends record number of people to the ER
- 4 Everyone loved George Washington — until he became president

She did not know how the computer got infected. The department says the breach involved more than 500 individuals but Marquette did not have a more precise number.

Sign up for Evening Brief

Delivered weeknights, this email newsletter gives you a quick recap of the day's top stories and need-to-know news, as well as intriguing photos and topics to spark conversation as you wind down from your day.

Sign up

The Associated Press

The Seattle Times does not append comment threads to stories from wire services such as the Associated Press, The New York Times, The Washington Post or Bloomberg News. Rather, we focus on discussions related to local stories by our own staff. You can read more about our community policies here.

Contact

About the Company

Advertise

My Account

Today's Front Page

 Facebook

 Twitter

