ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill makes several amendments related to the protection of crime victims. It makes the violation of a protective injunction a class A misdemeanor. Like protective orders in a domestic violence case, protective injunctions may be ordered by the court to prevent or limit a person's contact with a child if it is established that the person has sexually or physically abused the child, or engages in conduct that constitutes a clear and present danger to the welfare of the child. While domestic violence protective orders are a class A misdemeanor, under current law, the only remedy for violations of a protective injunction is a finding of contempt by the court.

The bill also would clarify the means by which a victim can petition for the return of their property seized by law enforcement from a pawnbroker or second hand dealer; and broadens prohibitions against "compromising misdemeanors" (paying a victim's expenses in return for criminal charges being dropped) to include domestic violence as defined in current law. The bill also adds a new mitigating factor for presumptive sentences when a defendant pleads guilty or no contest within 30 days of arraignment on a charge.

Any potential fiscal impact of the bill on the Department of Law would come from the creation of the new class A misdemeanor for violating a protective injunction. The department expects to see only a handful of new cases arising from this provision each year, and anticipates any increased workload can be handled with existing resources.
