ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 399 requires state agencies to use the Uniform Mechanical Code as the basis for building inspections and testing for occupational licensing. The state fire marshal currently uses the International Mechanical Code as its standard for safe construction, and HB 399 will supercede that standard.

Passage of this legislation will require a number of small, targeted changes to regulations of the Department of Community and Economic Development, and require voluminous and detailed changes to regulations of the Department of Public Safety. Though our legal review of regulations does not typically generate a fiscal note item, HB399 has an immediate effective date. In order to expedite the review of these regulations, the department will need to retain a contract attorney to stay within any accelerated review schedule. We estimate the cost of such contract counsel would be approximately $10,000.
