ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This legislation would require the licensing and regulation of entities involved with the transmission of money or currency exchanges. The division estimates there will be about 40 businesses subject to licensure and examination each year under the bill. The division assumes that many of the money transmitter businesses operating in the state will be subject to dual licensure as they are affiliated with a large national money transmitter company, such as Western Union. Alaska currently does not regulate this industry. The division anticipates the need for the addition of one-half of a new Investigator II position to carry out regulatory duties mandated by the Act, such as, licensing, complaint investigations and conducting on-site examinations. Travel funds would cover cost of the travel associated with examinations and training. Contractual expenses include funds for the Department of Law to draft legal documents, represent the division at administrative hearings resulting from license revocations/disciplinary actions, and enforcement orders.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

Revenue: The division estimates this legislation would generate $80.0 in each of the first two years due to the initial licensing of an estimated 40 licensees at $2.0 per licensee. In years 3 and 4, it is estimated there will be an increase in the number of licensees from 40 to 50. In years 5 and 6, it is estimated there will be an increase in the number of licensees from 50 to 60. Because this legislation would require the department to establish fee levels so that the total amount of fees collected would approximately equal total regulatory costs, licensing fees would be expected to drop after the first two years.
