FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS #5

STATE OF ALASKA
2014 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSSB 201(JUD)

Analysis

This bill proposes to repeal subsections (b) and (c) from AS 11.46.350 relating to the definition of terms used in burglary and criminal trespass laws; essentially removing the exception (privilege) that allows a person to remain on private property that is unimproved and apparently unused land unless notice is given. This specifically relates to criminal trespass in the second degree under AS 11.46.330.

Criminal trespass in the second degree has a default culpable mental state of "knowingly " per AS 11.81.610. The definitions contained in AS 11.46.350(b) and (c) give parameters of what constitutes "knowingly" for the purposes of trespassing onto private property that is unimproved and apparently unused. If (b) and (c) are removed, "knowingly" will default to the definition given in AS 11.81.900 which is more ambiguous than the necessary conduct described in (b) and (c).

Though it is anticipated that the Alaska State Troopers may spend more time investigating reported trespass cases on unimproved land trying to establish whether the conduct would constitute "knowingly" trespassed, this is part of the normal job duties of a trooper and would therefore not result in a fiscal impact. Consequently, a zero fiscal note is being submitted.
