Dear Mr. Jackson:

Thank you very much for your kind letter of February 6, 1969, asking that either I or my representative appear before the House Judiciary Committee to discuss Bar Association activities, plans and problems.

Mr. Stanely Howitt, the Executive Director of the Alaska Bar Association and myself will be in Juneau on February 17th through the 19th. Would it be possible for us to meet with the House Judiciary Committee at that time?

I apologize for this very short notice, but my recent schedule has been extraordinarily chaotic.

Very truly yours,

Lester W. Miller, Jr.

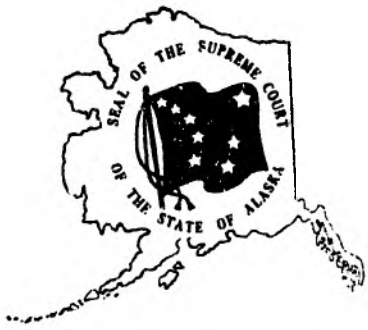
Dear Mr. Ray:

The House Judiciary Committee has reviewed with the responsible administrators, the programs of the Court System, Department of Law, and Public Safety as budgeted for FY 1971.



While the committee did not review these budgets in detail to the degree that the Finance Committee will, I have been directed to state that the Judiciary Committee generally concurs with the Governor's recommendations for these agencies.

Very truly yours,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

Dear Representative Jackson:

Your letter of February 5, 1969, requested that I or my representative meet with your committee in a general information meeting to deliver a formal oral presentation concerning the activities of the court system, our problems and our plans for the future. I note that Chief Justice Buell A. Nesbett received a similar letter and has accepted your invitation. I shall likewise be available.

Inasmuch as the Chief Justice and I will both be in Juneau from the 17th through the 21st of February, if you have any specific questions which would require back-up statistics we would appreciate an immediate response as this does not allow much time.

I note that the Chief Justice has outlined his itenerary and mine during our visit in Juneau. Even so, we shall contact you after our arrival.

The Honorable Bill Ray
Chairman, House Finance Committee
Pouch "V", Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Ray:

The Judiciary Committee has reviewed the programs and analyzed the budget of the Division of Corrections in detail, with the assistance of Mr. Charles G. Adams, Jr., Director of the Division of Corrections.

The committee was pleased to note that the 1970-71 budget as approved by the Governor did include many provisions for increased services, all of which the committee approved.

Inasmuch as prisoner reformation and rehabilitation is the desired goal of the State under Article I, Section 12 of our Constitution, we would like to recommend the positions of Psychology Counselor I in the adult camp, Group Worker III in N.R.C.I., and Correctional Officer I at Wasilla. These additional positions will provide much needed counseling service so necessary to attitude changing.

Most of the inmates of our correctional institutions have no developed skills and poor work habits. Part of the rehabilitation process is learning skills. To this end the committee would like to see the budget include items proposed by the Division of Corrections for vocational training and job experience.

Food service is one area in which there is a marked shortage of workers in the State. It would seem advisable to fill the Cook II position in the N.R.C.I., enabling inmates in that institution to be trained in culinary arts insuring them of employment upon their release.

The expansion of the kitchen facilities and the addition of refrigeration at the adult camp would make possible food service training as well as the training in the processing and freezing of produce.

We know you are deeply interested in prisoner rehabilitation and wish to lend you the support of the Judiciary Committee in improving the State's program.

Sincerely yours,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

Budget Review

March 5, 1970

Bill Ray, Chairman
House Finance Committee
Pouch "V", Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Gentlemen:

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has carefully considered the proposed budget of the Alaska Public Defender Agency. After taking testimony and discussing the issues, the committee unanimously recommends that the budget of the agency be increased in the following specific particulars:

1. An Attorney V position in Anchorage to be responsible for appeals, cost $38,800 including secretary and necessary equipment;

2. Investigators for the Nome, Ketchikan, and Juneau offices, cost $55,537 including necessary transportation (the investigator can prepare the information for bail proceedings and assist in developing sentencing recommendations);

3. Counselors for Fairbanks and Anchorage, cost $38,111;

4. Two law students for summer internships in Fairbanks and Anchorage, cost $6,975;

5. A training program for agency staff, cost $1,000; and

6. Increased contractual services to offset reduction of personnel, cost $10,000.

Total cost of $150,000.

We feel that the addition of these items will very substantially improve the service of the agency, and will enable the agency to adequately and properly perform its duties.

Very truly yours,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

STATE OF ALASKA

KEITH H. MILLER, GOVERNOR

PUBLIC DEFENDER AGENCY
Pouch AE, Juneau, Alaska

February 18, 1970

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Chairman
Judiciary Committee
Alaska State House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your request for a letter confirming my testimony on February 17, 1970. Your questions concerned possible alternative positions to the proposed funding of the Alaska Public Defender Agency at a $500,000 level for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1970.

Alternatives include:

1. an attorney V position in Anchorage to be responsible for appeals, cost $38,800 including secretary and necessary equipment;

2. investigators for the Nome, Ketchikan and Juneau offices, cost $55,537 including necessary transportation (the investigator can prepare the information for bail proceedings and assist in developing sentencing recommendations);

3. counselors for Fairbanks and Anchorage, cost $38,111;

4. two law students for summer internships in Fairbanks and Anchorage, cost $6,975;

5. a training program for agency staff, cost $1,000; and

6. increased contractual services to offset reduction of personnel, cost $10,000.

The above total is $150,000. The requested appropriation of $500,000 does not include any of the counselors, investigators for Nome, Ketchikan or Juneau, neither Attorney V in Anchorage, no summer law students, and does not include the possibility of additional judges in Sitka, Kenai-Kodiak and Fairbanks.

Enclosed are copies of excerpts from the evaluation of the Offender Rehabilitation Project for the District of Columbia. Your continued interest in the Agency is appreciated.

Very truly yours,

BACKDROP FOR THE EVALUATION

A. Evolution of the Offender Rehabilitation Project

In the summer of 1964 the staff attorneys of the Legal Aid Agency for the District of Columbia discussed how they might improve overall services to their indigent clients. A part of their thinking arose from the understanding that their role as defense attorneys was far less importantly the romantic notion of vital adversary participation in a dramatic determination of guilt or innocence than it was competent representation of a client in working out a non-trial disposition and, more often than not -- trial or no trial -- representing a guilty defendant before the judge at sentencing.[6/] A major shortcoming, they felt, was the lack of comprehensive social background data and rehabilitative planning assistance in their cases, particularly at the time of sentencing when the judge based his decision largely on a probation office presentence report not available as of right to the defendant and his counsel.[7] All the attorneys were full-time personnel carrying demanding caseloads, and it was concluded that if this important assistance was to be properly and beneficially rendered it would have to be done by specialized supplemental staff.[8]

In applying shortly thereafter for a grant from the National Defender Project of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, request was made to include two social service oriented staff persons among the additional attorneys, investigators, and clerical personnel sought for expansion of the Legal Aid Agency's total program. A $200,000 grant was received and from October 18, 1964, to March 31, 1966, two social service workers gathered social background information and developed rehabilitation plans for use by attorneys in selected cases. Used primarily at sentencing in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, which has jurisdiction over all felonies prosecuted in the District,[9] the attorneys generally found these services helpful in several ways: attorneys could be a more effective part of the dispositional process, judges were receptive to sentencing alternatives and the somewhat new (to them) concept of community-based rehabilitative planning, defendants were greatly assisted toward more constructive functioning in the community by the individually tailored plans presented to the court in their behalf.

On April 1, 1966, the Institute of Criminal Law and Procedure made funds available to expand this first-of-its-kind social service staff to eight people -- a coordinator, a social worker supervisor, four social work assistants, and two secretaries. The results of this pilot project, lasting through March 1967, have been thoroughly reported;[10/] some of the basic concepts of the Offender Rehabilitation Project evolved directly from this pilot experience. An understanding of its evolution provides important insight to the expanded Project funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity and to the directions this Evaluation has taken in consequence.

The pilot project under the Institute of Criminal Law and Procedure was primarily focused toward defendants in the U.S. District Court. Seventy-three percent of its clients were involved in cases in that court and only 18 percent were from the D.C. Court of General Sessions.[11] The essence of the program, as with the initial social service assistants provided under the National Defender Project grant, was on providing defendant studies and rehabilitative plans which defense attorneys could use at the time of sentencing. That this was in fact the primary thrust is confirmed by the finding that at the time of initial referral to the pilot project, two-thirds of the defendants had already pleaded guilty to at least some of the original charges.[12] The report on the pilot project, however, describes an important broadening of concern based on this experience:

> "As time went on, it became increasingly clear to the [Pilot] Project staff members that they should be brought into the case as early as possible after the defendant was assigned counsel. Early referral was seen as necessary to do the kind of thorough background study that was required and to get the defendant, if he was on bail, into a job situation, a training program or a form of therapy, if indicated, prior to trial and case disposition. This early attention to the defendant's needs was important not only for the ultimate disposition of the case, but was essential in order to help alleviate the impact and crisis confronting the defendant and his family as a result of the arrest and often as a result of the removal of the head of the household from the home.
> As the [Pilot] Project developed it became clear that early referral of a defendant . . . had a separate value and purpose. It permitted the development of background material on the defendant and a plan for rehabilitation that could be relevant for discussion between the defense > lawyer and the prosecutor even before trial. The concept of early diversion developed out of this recognition . . . . Under this concept, the same information that was being made available to the judge for sentencing purposes could be made available to the prosecuting attorney to guide him in exercising his discretion to divert the case out of the criminal system for a solution through other community resources."[13/]

The concept of early diversion, endorsed by the National Crime Commission,[14/] became a fundamental part of the expanded Project evaluated in this report. Moreover, an appreciation of the fact that the less serious criminal cases prosecuted in the Court of General Sessions were far more susceptible to such diversion also led to plans for the expanded Project to begin operations in that court, as had not been possible with the comparatively small staff of the pilot project. Indeed, it was recognized that defendants in the District of Columbia suffered from an anomalous situation: accused misdemeanants, who had not yet "graduated" to the status of accused felons in the U.S. District Court, had fewer services available -- especially from the Probation Department -- than U.S. District Court defendants, yet could most benefit from social services to interrupt the all-too-usual progression from lesser crimes to the more serious.[15/]

Lack of early referral of defendants to the pilot project led to other problems as well. Defense attorneys frequently deferred making use of the program until they had determined for themselves a dispositional strategy in a particular case. Once the defendant had been referred, often after a guilty plea, it frequently left too little time for competent rehabilitative planning, much less an adequate opportunity to judge the appropriateness of the plan and the defendant's willingness and ability to follow it. In fact, a defendant's situation often deteriorated in the interim between arrest and referral because an already precarious social situation was aggravated by the pendency of a criminal charge. In many instances, too, the pilot project's experience was that the defense attorneys emphasized the need only for specific services, particularly employment, since they believed that was the most important factor in judges' dispositional decisions. The lawyers, consequently, were frequently making their own diagnoses of social service needs and doing so, quite naturally, from their own perspective concerned with immediate disposition rather than long-range rehabilitation. The net result was that the pilot project prepared only 88 defendant studies from among its 226 clients, 39 percent. Attorneys tended to request studies only in those cases where they thought a disposition could most likely be affected.[16/]

These problems, too, the expanded Offender Rehabilitation Project set out to correct. Under the Office of Economic Opportunity grant, the enlarged staff would permit automatic referral, as soon counsel was assigned, of practically all indigent cases for the full range of Project services as needs were determined by the Project staff. The Project was to be unique for its lack of restrictions on intake. Limited only by its primary obligation to the indigent clients of the Legal Aid Agency for the District of Columbia, it would service defendants ranging from those charged with murder to a traffic violation, those with the proverbial criminal record "as long as your arm" to the first offender charged with a misdemeanor -- a truly ambitious undertaking, as should be borne in mind in reading this report. A correlative aim of the Project, arising from the experience of the pilot effort, was to expend greater effort to sensitize defense attorneys, as well as others within the criminal justice system, to a greater awareness of the needs for and benefits of social services for all defendants.

Two additional departures were planned for the expanded Offender Rehabilitation Project. In addition to continuing its use of non-professional social work personnel, a manpower utilization endorsed by the National Crime Commission,[17/] the Project planned to utilize indigenous ex-offenders as "rehabilitative aides," later called "follow-up counsellors." This seemed appropriate both because the Project was to be funded by the "Poverty Program" and because, again, of the endorsement by the National Crime Commission:

> "People who have themselves experienced problems and come from backgrounds like those of offenders often can help > them in ways professional caseworkers cannot. Contact with a person who has overcome handicaps and is living successfully in the community could mean a great deal more to an offender than conventional advice and guidance."18/

These follow-up counsellors were to operate as a "follow-up unit" within the Project to prevent, by providing extended service, breakdown in rehabilitation plans and to assist defendants with other significant problems which might occur while released on bail or probation.

The Project planned also to utilize a part-time psychiatrist and a part-time psychologist to help identify mentally disordered or deficient offenders as early in the criminal process as possible and to recommend community-based therapeutic treatment programs if possible. These staff members were not themselves to give treatment, but were to provide psychiatric and psychological evaluation reports and testing for the assistance of Project personnel. Nor were they to assist defense attorneys in presenting insanity issues in court, though they would help to identify defendants with possible problems in that area so that the attorneys could pursue the usual channels for mental examination of indigent defendants.19/

In summary, the Offender Rehabilitation Project had a definite evolutionary basis for the direction and form proposed for it as an expanded two-year experimental project. It would continue to provide a valuable presentence service to the criminal defense. But in order to better perform that function, and in order to provide a new and additional component of involvement in the pretrial stages of the criminal process, it was to be brought into every new case as soon as counsel was assigned on an automatic basis not dependent upon selective referral by the lawyer. Further, it was to begin operating in misdemeanor cases in the Court of General Sessions, it was to utilize indigenous ex-offenders in a social work role, and it was geared to attempt to influence the criminal justice system toward a greater sensitivity to offender rehabilitation issues, including influence upon the community and governmental resources with potential for providing vitally needed social services to the criminal offender.

B. Underlying Features of the Evaluation

There are features about the Evaluation Program and its relationship to the Offender Rehabilitation Project which should be kept continually in mind in interpreting the evaluation results which follow.

First, the organization and staff of the Project and the Evaluation Program were separate and distinct entities. Each had virtual autonomy and each did its own job to the best of its ability affected at most by peripheral matters of cooperation with the other. When cooperation was required, from the Evaluation Program's

Excerpt from "An Evaluation of the Offender Rehabilitation Project of the Legal Aid Agency for the District of Columbia"

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

One June 1, 1967, a demonstration program known as the Offender Rehabilitation Project was funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity Legal Services Program. The purposes of the Project were to provide defense attorneys with social background information on indigent defendants for use in the criminal process; to work with those defendants to develop rehabilitation plans based on community social and rehabilitative services; and to embody the social information and planning in reports for the attorneys' use in facilitating, where appropriate, negotiated dispositions before trial or community based sentences for convicted defendants. The Project utilized college educated non-professionals and indigenous and ex-offender personnel supervised by professional social workers.

Since the Offender Rehabilitation Project was the first systematic effort in the nation to help public defender attorneys develop rehabilitative programming for their indigent clients, the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance, U.S. Department of Justice, concurrently funded a thoroughgoing evaluation of the Project. The aim was to discover as much as possible, within the time available for evaluation, about the Project's impact upon the defendants it attempted to service and upon the system of criminal justice. The Office of Economic Opportunity included funds in its grant for the Evaluation Program's research assistant personnel.

The evaluation was conducted on three levels: (1) the effect of the Project on defendants; (2) the impact of the Project on the criminal justice system; and (3) the internal functioning of the Offender Rehabilitation Project. Randomized experimental and control groups of defendants were set up so that the experimental group defendants had the services of the Offender Rehabilitation Project while the control group did not.

To provide perspective for the Evaluation, the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance requested the evaluators to conduct a nationwide survey to determine the existence and extent of social services provided by defender agencies throughout the nation. Among 133 defender agencies responding, 41 percent had one or more means of providing social services to their offender clients. Only two agencies were found to have their own formal programs providing social services to offenders, one of which was the Offender Rehabilitation Project. Nineteen agencies had formal or informal arrangements with outside resources in the community; in 44 agencies the attorneys made referrals; and in 23 agencies the attorneys themselves provided services to defendants. A mere 2.1 percent of the clients of all these agencies, however, were beneficiaries of the social services provided.

As expected, the Offender Rehabilitation Project's clients were predominantly male, black, relatively young, often single, of relatively low educational attainment, unskilled, erratically employed, recidivists, and having generally marginal income. The experimental and control groups of defendants were closely similar to each other and to all other Project clients; if anything, the experimental group was slightly more handicapped, being charged with a higher proportion of crimes against the person, having more previous juvenile arrests, and earning less income.

In the reports the Project wrote on its clients and transmitted to the defense attorney for his use, the Project made recommendations for probation or suspended sentence in 69 percent of them. The Project's sentencing recommendations were followed by the U.S. District Court (where felonies are prosecuted in the District of Columbia) 53 percent of the time. Its recommendations were followed 59 percent of the time in the Court of General Sessions (where misdemeanors are prosecuted, some of which are reduced felony charges). In the 342 full defendant reports examined, the Project suggested some 604 elements of rehabilitation plans for its clients. In addition, 59 separate community resources were mentioned 229 times in a total of 405 reports abstracted by the Evaluation.

The Project appeared to have, through direct and indirect means, a significant effect upon dispositions of criminal cases. In the Court of General Sessions only 52 percent of the experimental group defendants were convicted and 54 percent of these were sentenced to probation or given a suspended sentence. In the control group, on the other hand, 63 percent were convicted and of those, only 35 percent were sentenced to probation or given a suspended sentence. All other Project clients in the Court of General Sessions had a conviction rate of 57 percent and of those, 56 percent were sentenced to probation or given a suspended sentence.

In the U.S. District Court 58 percent of the experimental group defendants were convicted compared to 88 percent of the control group defendants. All other Project clients were convicted at a rate of 78 percent. The effect of the Project on sentences in that court was less clear, though the incarceration rate was 42 percent of the total experimental group and 65 percent of the control group. Legal Aid Agency attorneys achieved a conviction rate 16 percentage points lower than private practitioners using the Project in the Court of General Sessions and 9 percentage points lower in the U.S. District Court.

A cost analysis comparison between the experimental and control groups shows a conservatively calculated correctional cost saving to the community of almost $540 per client over and above the cost of operating the Project itself. At the rate the Project serviced clients, this saving comes to approximately $360,000 per year. Not included are indirect savings from the fact that more Project defendants are in the community as taxpayers rather than in prison and unable to support their families. The average correctional time to which experimental group defendants were sentenced was 37 months compared to 48 months for the control group.

Recidivism was measured by rearrests of Project clients within the District of Columbia whether convicted or not convicted on the charge pending at the time of Project referral and without reference to the length of time they had been in the community since referral. Twenty-two percent of the Court of General Sessions defendants recidivated as did 15 percent of the U.S. District Court defendants. A greater proportion of Court of General Sessions defendants were free in the community with opportunities to recidivate. In the Court of General Sessions 28 percent of the experimental group defendants recidivated compared to 44 percent of the control group defendants. In the U.S. District Court 15 percent of the experimental group defendants recidivated compared to 18 percent of the control group defendants. These differences are even more significant in light of the fact that more experimental group defendants were free in the community with opportunities to recidivate.

Judges interviewed by the Evaluation could be analyzed in three groups in terms of their attitudes toward sentencing -- those who gave primary consideration to the defendant and his rehabilitative potential when considering an appropriate sentence, those who primarily considered protection of the public, and those who fell somewhere between the first two groups. The first group of judges was very enthusiastic about the Offender Rehabilitation Project and had had substantial contact with it through receipt of many of its defendant reports. The second and third groups of judges had had very little experience with the Project and were less enthusiastic about it. But since these judges were by no means negative toward the Project, the evaluation concludes that defense attorneys were unduly cautious in their "judge-shopping" and use or non-use of Project defendant reports at sentencing.

The Project has a very favorable image within the defense bar and enjoys a full and thorough appreciation of its use to the attorney at sentencing. Its role in pretrial negotiations is less well understood and less utilized. Public defender attorneys seem to have a broader appreciation of the Project's usefulness as well as a broader understanding of the defense role. Defense attorneys who had not utilized the Project showed much less comprehensive views of the attorney's role at sentencing and after. The strongest criticism of the Project by defense attorneys was that its services were not rendered quickly enough. This criticism was tempered, in a pretrial negotiations pilot study conducted by the Evaluation, by a finding that attorneys moved their cases too quickly for the Project to act in many instances.

Prosecutors did not exhibit a thorough understanding of the Offender Rehabilitation Project. One-third of them had received information in pretrial negotiations that they knew to have come from the Project. Few prosecutors were willing or able to rate the Project on any specific issue, but when informed more fully about the Project's operations all felt that it could provide valuable services and information to them. The nature and seriousness of the offense and the defendant's prior record were the most important factors cited by prosecutors in determining whether to prosecute or in negotiating a guilty plea.

The Court of General Sessions probation officers interviewed were younger and more hetrogeneous than the better educated, more experienced U.S. District Court officers. While the latter were considerably more negative toward the Project, the general attitude among all probation officers was one of cooperation with the Project even though there may not have been general sympathy with its aims, of crediting its innovative character, and of favorable recognition of its emphasis on rehabilitative planning and the use of community resources. Primary negative attitudes expressed were criticism of the Project's defendant reports and the overlap of effort to produce them, a feeling that the skills and abilities of Project personnel were inferior to those of probation officers, and the view that probation officers had a greater fund of information about defendants. The Evaluation concludes that the Project seemed to have broken down some communication barriers with probation officers and to have done so in an atmosphere of benign rivalry with them.

The Project was in contact with at least 137 community agencies and organizations in the Washington metropolitan area plus many private employers. A few agencies were used very heavily. There was some evidence of a tendency by the Project to become a service agency rather than a referral agency for its clients. The Project's major failing in the community resource area was its inability to develop and consistently execute a program for coordinated mobilization and use of community resources.

An instrument known as the "Decision Game" was used with probation officers, prosecutors, and Project workers to compare sentencing or dispositional recommendations, information utilized in making those decisions, and the effect of rehabilitative planning. Results showed the tendency toward somewhat more community oriented decisions by Project workers and the poor emphasis on rehabilitative planning by District Court probation officers in comparison to other players (except prosecutors). A significant effect of rehabilitation plans, comparable to those prepared by the Project, was also shown, especially upon prosecutors in a pretrial negotiation context. Information most often used in decisions made were the defendant's offense, his prior criminal record, his employment and his own statement about the offense.

As originally organized, the Project designated two types of staff workers. Program developers were to work with and develop rapport with clients, develop community resources to serve them, and devise rehabilitation plans for them. Follow-up counsellors were cast in a supportive role to check on the suitability of rehabilitation plans and to help put them into effect. Program developers were college educated and most were white females. Follow-up counsellors were not highly educated, were black males, products of the ghetto, and the majority were ex-offenders. The Evaluation observed some degree of acculturation toward a middle class life style by the follow-up counsellors during the life of the Project. They seemed to be more self-confident than program developers and began to assume some of the duties originally assigned to program developers. This caused some confusion and tension within the Project which was augmented by a salary differential between the two types of personnel.

The Evaluation found evidence of various communication difficulties within the Project, some of which related to misunderstandings about in-house training, staff and unit meetings, and a rising level of black militancy. Difficulties arose over inefficient deployment of psychological staff and employment counsellors. There were occasional problems of hurried and insensitive demands placed upon the Project by defense attorneys.

The Evaluation found that approximately 50 percent of all Project time accounted for during a ten-week test period was spent in travel or waiting. The Evaluation attributed much of this inefficiency to poor location of the Project's central office, a problem which has since been rectified. Analysis of non-travel or waiting time highlighted the planning functions of the Program developers and the community oriented, implementation functions of the follow-up counsellors. The data suggest that there was much less overlap in roles than was perceived or imagined by Project staff.

Conclusions

The Evaluation concludes that the legal dispositions achieved through utilization of the Project, while obviously good from the defendant's point of view, are acceptable from society's point of view only if the fundamental premise of the Offender Rehabilitation Project is accepted: that community oriented rehabilitation is more effective in reducing criminality and preventing recidivism than is correction through incarceration. The Evaluation accepts this premise as valid and feels its preliminary recidivism data tend to justify it. It therefore concludes that the Project succeeded, to a degree justified by its cost, in its goal of wrenching the legal system farther away from an orientation which tends toward incarceration because of failure to offer something better. The Evaluation further concludes that the Project is unique in that it was able to help all defendants to some degree. It concludes that Offender Rehabilitaton Project type services are more widely effective and desirable within a defense context at the present time. Disadvantages of adversary status and duplication of effort are outweighed by the need for adequate defense services, confidentiality, and a counter to secret probation office presentence reports.

The Evaluation concludes that the Project is better utilized by organized public defender attorneys. The Project's use in pretrial negotiations ought to be optimized, perhaps through the greater use of short form reports or automatic screening of Project defendants. Informal communication and cooperation with probation offices ought to be expanded and opportunities for joint in-service training ventures and staff programs explored. There should be full-time responsibility in one or more Project staff persons in the aggressive and dedicated pursuit of community resource development. Further, there should be greater flexibility in recognizing latent talent among Project workers without arbitrary distinction based upon formal education. The Project's services ought to be expanded into Juvenile Court proceedings. Replications of the Offender Rehabilitation Project would more likely be benefitted by ongoing in-house evaluations.

House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature

Attention: Mr. Barry Jackson, Chairman

This follows a narrative rundown of the activities, problems and future plans of the Division of Corrections in the Department of Health and Welfare, as requested in your letter of February 5, 1969.

To briefly introduce myself and touch lightly on personal qualifications, please be advised that I entered the Federal Bureau of Prisons System at Alcatraz in December of 1936. I retired from that service December 30, 1966. During 1967 I served as a consultant in penal management and operations to the Federal Bureau of Prisons and the American Correctional Association. As a consultant I did studies for the States of Maryland and Alaska and a survey of all the county jails on the Pacific Coast between Everett, Washington and San Jose, California. As a followup to the Alaska study, in March of 1967 at the request of the then Deupty Commissioner, Health and Welfare, Richard B. Lauber, on December 16, 1967 I came to Alaska as Director of the then Youth and Adult Authority, now the Division of Corrections.

Comments are based on varied experience and training and fourteen months as Director. I join other penal practitioners and share in the extreme difficulty of developing and understanding and explaining to the lay individual the purpose of modern day corrections. Unless the problem touches the lives of the individual, the concept of punishment transcends and literally eliminates all thoughts of corrections, or what is broadly referred to as rehabilitation of the individual. Thus the problem of correctional enlightenment in all its ramifications seems insurmountable, and our attempts to enlist the support and cooperation of government, labor, business, management, industry and the community at large is a discouraging and futile action. Yet crime and delinquency is increasing at an alarming rate and reaching deeper and deeper into our youth, tomorrow's society. In short, it is a matter of one's point of view.

For many months I have felt the urgency of statistical support for our programs, and a means of conveying to the uninitiated the growth and seriousness of crime in Alaska. I am reliably informed that soon the Department of Health and Welfare will become a member in the electric data processing system which will provide the Division of Corrections with the information essential to annual and semi-annual reports and support for our correctional program effort.

I believe that Alaska at this point is at the crossroads and can look back with considerable satisfaction to the accomplishments in updating the institutions since becoming a state. The future, however, is limited by the desire for continuing progressive action. The vision and concern of legislators attending early sessions brought into existence the new Regional Institutions in Fairbanks, the McLaughlin Youth Center in Anchorage, and this year the Regional in Juneau. During the past year we have changed the name from Youth and Adult Authority to the Division of Corrections. Programs implemented the past year are, in part, the Citizens Action Committee at Fairbanks, which works closely with the community at large in the area of foster home placement, post-release employment, and public education. From the existing staff at Fairbanks we have developed a teacher working with the juvenile and the adult groups. A number of cases are on work furlough; others care for the lawns and gardens of the Pioneers Home, which is adjacent to the Fairbanks Institution.

In Anchorage we have a class of adults working toward a certificate in GED. There are group counselling sessions with trained employee group leaders. We have the largest number at Anchorage on work furlough.

In Juneau we have a full-time and approved vocational training class in food service, also individual counselling sessions.

At the Adult Conservation Camp, Palmer, fire fighting crews are trained and moved to various points throughout the State to combat fires. The only full-time instructor is at Palmer, teaching adult basic education. There are group and individual counselling sessions.

At the youth institutions we have active educational programs--at McLaughlin Youth Center, with instructors supplied by the Anchorage Borough School District, and at the Youth Conservation Camp, Wasilla, with teachers from the Mat-Su Borough School District. Several youngsters are leaving the McLaughlin Youth Center and attending community schools. At the Alcantra Youth Conservation Camp, Wasilla, educational classes are conducted by the Mat-Su Borough School District with emphasis, due largely to educationally retarded students, on the program learning instead of the formal classroom setting.

Many of the offenders sent to outside "contract" institutions, largely because of length of sentence, or that our facilities are not adequate for their needs, are engaged in advanced programs of education, vocational training, and social adjustment activities. At a given point they are reclassified for return to the Alaska institutions. Contracts for the adult and the deeply troubled youth are with the Federal Bureau of Prisons; with California and Utah Youth Authorities for the less troubled youth, and to the Good Shepherd Homes of Spokane, Denver and Seattle for the pre-delinquent boy and girl.

Our efforts at education, pre-vocation and vocational training, and social adjustment, are broad and demanding. Recognizing this I have worked closely with Commissioner Hartman, Department of Education, in hopes of enlisting help for our specialized needs. At the adult level, four to five and occasionally six years exist in educational achievement between the same age group in the community. Further, larger numbers are without a salable skill; consequently the revolving jail door for those unprepared to cope with the demands of a competitive society. At the juvenile level are youngsters who fail in school, who are unable or unwilling to conform, consequently become involved in runaway, truancy, and reveal pre-delinquent tendencies. As a result of my conversations with Dr. Hartman and members of his staff, the Department of Education included in their fiscal year 1970 budget an employee qualified to serve the needs of the Division of Corrections. I am reliably informed this position was removed during early budget considerations.

Some of the problems presently confronted by the Division of Corrections:

1. Full-time employee in the Department of Education to serve as a liaison in the specialized field of correctional education, pre-vocational and vocational training.

2. Enlarge upon the furlough program to include not only the privilege of work, but also study and home visits where indicated. This places greater responsibility on the institution classification committee that only those eligible are accorded this privilege.

3. Under the judicial banner:

   (a) Furlough is the responsibility of the institution and not the courts. However, their recommendation is well received and encouraged.

   (b) We are having problems with the amended sentence. We perform extensive preliminary work only to discover the original sentence has been amended to "time served."

   (c) Sentences that require the individual serve sentence in the jail weekends and evenings only. The responsibility for booking and release, the control of contraband, inventory of clothing and personal property, is vital to the security and is working a hardship on the institutions.

4. Employee training to effectively cope with the increasing number and different type individual, juvenile and adult, committed to our institutions. During recent months there is noticeable increase in the numbers of the criminally sophisticated, prison-wise offenders entering our system. The attraction of the economic development and availability of work is bringing this element in with legitimate interests.

5. Division of Corrections should be permitted the flexibility of placing the aggressive and mature 17, 18 and 19 year old juvenile offender in an institution best suited to the interests of the community and the individual. Example--the Adult Conservation Camp at Palmer or even placement in a correctional institution. Many of today's older youth are hardened beyond their years; consequently disrupt the atmosphere of the juvenile institution and the cost of "outside" commitment is high.

6. Long-range study of the physical needs of the Division of Corrections:

   (a) Replacement of the Anchorage State Jail

   (b) Completion of McLaughlin Youth Center

   (c) Rebuilding the Youth Conservation Center at Wasilla

   (d) Removing the children from the jail settings of Fairbanks and Juneau.

7. Adequate staffing in the institutions and the field units. Strengthen the Central Office personnel complement. There is critical need for more space in the Central Office.

8. Community involvement--citizen participation.

9. Labor-Management sharing in our treatment efforts.

10. State use industries. Productive and contributing to the economy of the state at large, yet providing a salable skill and a better educated individual upon release. In this latter connection, agreement has been made with the Department of Natural Resources, Division of Lands, to preserve and maintain historical monuments throughout the State. For example, Chilkoot

Trail, wayside parks, and picnic areas, thereby making them inviting to resident and tourist alike.

Engage in experimental programs of tree culture, creating a nursery at the Youth Camp, and otherwise engage in statewide reforestation projects. Also, remain in constant state of readiness for fire-fighting.

Still has been introduced? or in AG 9/12

11. Uniforms to implant pride and dignity to correctional work--distinguish employee from inmate.

12. Salary imbalance as compared to like work.
need to raise salary — are working w/ Dept of Admin

13. In many cases "concurrent" sentence meaningless.

14. Remove impediments and eliminate delays to speedy justice.

JUNEAU BAR ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION

RELATING TO THE DEDICATION OF A PORTION OF DIVISION OF CORRECTION'S INSTITUTION BUDGET TO THE REHABILITATION OF THE ALCOHOLIC CRIMINAL OFFENDER.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE JUNEAU BAR ASSOCIATION:

WHEREAS the overwhelming majority of prisoners institutionalized by the State of Alaska at anytime, are Alcoholics or problem drinkers; and

WHEREAS most of these prisoners are recidivist as a direct or indirect result of alcohol consumption; and

WHEREAS it costs the tax payer approximately $18.00 per day or $6,500.00 per year to incarcerate these individuals in present facilities; and

WHEREAS the present facilities are security institutions and cost approximately $20,000.00 per bed to construct; and

WHEREAS the present facilities are not equipped to rehabilitate the alcoholic and have no programs specifically calculated to rehabilitate the alcoholic; and

WHEREAS there is no need for costly security jails and a disproportionate number of guards to detain the alcoholic; and

WHEREAS to continue the present system will only continue the problem and perpetuate a wasteful and ineffective method which has totally failed;

BE IT RESOLVED both legislative and administrative action be taken which will result in the dedication of a portion of Division of Corrections Institutional budget to institutions and programs specifically calculated to rehabilitate the incarcerated Alcoholic Criminal Offender; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED the Alaska Bar Association is respectfully requested to join the Juneau Bar Association in supporting and implementing this objective by it's inclusion in it's legislative program; and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Lester W. Miller, Jr., President of the Alaska Bar Association and to Stanley Howitt, Executive Director and Bar Counsel and to each member of the Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors, and to Glen Wilcox, Director of Alcoholism, Department of Health and Welfare, and to the Health, Welfare and Education Committee, Judiciary Committee and Finance Committee of each house of the Alaska Legislature, the Honorable Keith H. Miller, Governor, and the Honorable J. Scott McDonald, Commissioner of the Department of Health and Welfare.

Dear Bill:

I do agree that this section should be amended, but I think it is too late now to introduce a bill and get it through this session.

Hopefully, it can be included in the Revisor's Bill next year or in a general revision of AS Chapter 48.

Revisor of Statutes

SUBJECT: Bill Moran's March 13 letter regarding AS 08.48.260 (licensing of architects and engineers)

As Mr. Moran pointed out, the revisor's note (written by my predecessor) under AS 08.48.260 states: "Subsection (b) is incomplete and conflicts with paragraph (1). Legislative action will be needed to correct this conflict." That section, in more-or-less its present form, was derived from sec. 5, ch. 111 SLA 1949, the relevant part of which stated:

> (5) (Holders of certificates from other state or country.) The board shall from time to time examine the requirements for the registration of professional engineers and professional architects in other states, territories and countries and shall record those in which, in the judgment of the board, standards not lower than those provided by this Act are maintained. The secretary of the board, upon the presentation to him by any person of satisfactory evidence that such person holds a certificate of registration issued to such person by proper authority in any state, territory or country so recorded, may, upon approval by an examining quorum of the board hereunder:
> (a) Reciprocity Registration: Issue a certificate of registration as provided hereunder, upon submission by the applicant of satisfactory proof of his fulfilling the residence requirements for examination, of this Act and upon payment by him of a transfer fee of Twenty ($20.00) Dollars and such annual license fees as are prescribed herein.
> (b) Non-resident Permit: Issue a non-resident permit for a period of not to exceed one year, for a non-resident within the meaning and intent of this Act, upon presentation by the applicant of a detailed description of the work upon which such applicant will be engaged within Alaska and upon receipt by the board of a non-resident Permit Fee of $250.00. Such non-resident permit shall cover the work specifically described in the application therefor.

That was amended by sec. 2, ch. 84 SLA 1951 to delete the provision on non-resident permits and add the confusing language presently in AS 08.48.260(b)(1), below. The conflict is as follows: the lead-in line in (b) gives (or used to give) the registration authority to the secretary of the board with the approval of an "examining quorum" (three out of the nine members [see AS 08.48.090]), whereas (1) now gives the authority directly to the board without mentioning the type of quorum (under AS 08.48.090 a regular quorum is five members); in addition, (1) recognizes registration by certain national professional organizations. The 1951 amendment wasn't made to fit the lead-in line, which makes the material between the present "(b)" and "(1)" (the last part of the material between the "(5)" and the "(a)" in the 1949 version, above) look incomplete.

I haven't checked with the architects or engineers and I don't know how AS 08.48.260 has been interpreted, but, assuming that they would prefer the most recent and broadest language, and assuming that the quorum matter is not important, my suggested amendment is as follows:

* Section 1. AS 08.48.260(b) is amended to read:

(b) [THE SECRETARY OF THE BOARD, UPON THE PRESENTATION TO HIM OF SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE THAT A PERSON HOLDS A CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION ISSUED BY PROPER AUTHORITY IN ANY STATE, TERRITORY OR COUNTRY SO RECORDED, MAY, UPON APPROVAL BY AN EXAMINING QUORUM OF THE BOARD HEREUNDER:

(1)] The board may, upon application and payment of a fee of $20, issue a certificate of registration as a professional engineer or professional architect to a person who holds a certificate of qualification or registration issued to him by proper authority of the National Council of State Boards of Engineering or Architectural Examiners, or of the National Bureau of Engineering or Architectural Registration, or of any state or territory or possession of the United States, or of any country. However the applicant shall meet the requirements of this chapter and the rules established by the board.

Presumably that last sentence refers to the character and education and experience requirements in AS 08.48.160. It should perhaps be noted that although AS 08.48.150 requires registration and licensure before practicing professional engineering or architecture, and several sections talk about an examination, there is nothing in AS 08.48 that requires a person to take an examination in order to become registered and licensed. Also, it is not clear what function AS 08.48.260(a) serves; it requires the board to make a list of states, etc., in which the standards are not lower than those specified in AS 08.48, but when (b) refers to other states, etc., it doesn't mention standards; perhaps (a) should be deleted (repealed) too. As Felix Toner indicated at yesterday's House Judiciary Committee meeting (with regard to HB 626), some architects and engineers organization is planning a completely revised licensing chapter.

Dear Barry:

I had occasion to review the subject section of the article dealing with the registration of professional engineers and architects. The revisor's note reflects the observation that sub-section (b) thereof is incomplete and in conflict with paragraph (1) - an observation with which I heartily agree, but I have found no evidence that legislative action has been taken to correct the error. I should think it important that appropriate action be taken.

Dear Rep. Jackson:

Yours of February 6 requests that I or my representative meet with your committee in a general information meeting to deliver a formal oral presentation concerning the activities of the Judicial Council, court system problems and plans for the future.

I accept your kind invitation.

Senator Phillips has arranged for the annual meeting between all members of the Alaska Judicial Council and the legislators to be held at 4 p.m. February 20, 1969. In past years these meetings have included the President, Speaker, Majority and Minority leaders and the Chairmen of the Finance and Judiciary Committees of both houses plus any other interested legislators.

The Administrative Director and I will be in Juneau presenting our 1969-1970 budget to the finance committees on February 18. On February 19 there will be meetings of the sub-committees and of the full statewide committee of the Alaska Judicial Council on sentencing. (Notices were mailed to you as a member) At 9 a.m. on February 20 the Alaska Judicial Council meets in the library of the Supreme Court. Sometime between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. on the 20th the Council will meet with the Governor, and, as mentioned, at 4 p.m. it will meet with the legislators.

I will contact you after my arrival in Juneau to arrange a time satisfactory to all concerned.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Enclosed are copies of my letter to you of March 4, 1969 together with the proposed bill mentioned in that letter.

In my letter of March 4 I neglected to explain the reason for including section 22.30.145 which is on page 5 of the proposed bill. It would appear that under AS 44.62.330(b) the Administrative Procedure Act would not be applicable so far as adjudication is concerned. However, it may be that the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act relating to filing and publication of regulations, procedure for adopting regulations, etc. may be applicable. I suggest that they should not be because the rules which will be adopted deal only with judges of the Alaska Court System and are not the kind of rules or regulations which have general application to persons throughout the state. What the commission plans to do once the rules have been adopted is to make copies available to every judge and to every member of the Alaska Bar Association and to all other persons who may be interested.

Sincerely yours,

John H. Dimond

Dear Mr. Jackson:

As you know, the last session of the Alaska legislature enacted SLA 1968, chapter 213, which established the Commission on Judicial Qualifications. At the same session House Joint Resolution No. 74 was approved. This resolution proposed amendments to the Alaska Constitution which would also establish the Commission on Judicial Qualifications. The membership provided for in the resolution differs somewhat from that established in chapter 213, in that the resolution provides for three superior court judges whereas the statute provides for only two, and the resolution provides for only one district court judge whereas the statute provides for two.

The amendments to the constitution proposed in the resolution were approved by the voters at the August 1968 primary election. It appeared logical to assume that the provisions of the constitution would govern the membership of the commission. Therefore, membership of the commission was selected according to the provisions set out in the resolution rather than those set out in the statute.

The commission believes that the statute should be made to conform to the resolution. In order to accomplish this, among other things, the enclosed proposed bill has been prepared. I spoke to Mr. Kerttula, Speaker of the House, as to how to go about getting the bill introduced. He suggested that I refer the matter to you with the thought that perhaps the House Judiciary Committee would introduce and sponsor this legislation. I shall appreciate it if you can let me know whether or not your committee will introduce this legislation.

Here are some specific comments on the proposed bill:

1. Section 3 on page 2 would take care of a situation where a judge might be charged with a serious offense involving moral turpitude but will not have been tried and convicted. It seemed to the commission that such a charge, even before final determination by a court, might be such as to bring disrespect upon the judiciary and that in such a situation a suspension of the judge might well be in order.

2. Section 4 on page 2 is included to make certain that when a judge is removed by the supreme court he will not lose his retirement rights and benefits.

3. The new sections under Section 5, beginning on page 2, line 26, are provisions which the commission thought should be included in the law in order to confer upon the commission sufficient authority to perform its functions. These sections are taken from the California statute on judicial qualifications.

I shall be very happy to answer any questions that you may have regarding this proposed legislation.

Sincerely yours,

John H Dimond

Dear Barry:

In this morning's Anchorage Daily News, Friday, April 11, 1969, there appeared the original of the enclosed xerox copy of inquiry with respect to Hubert A. Gilbert.

The 1968 legislature passed a statute authorizing the appointment of a Judicial Qualifications Committee to whom, it was anticipated, all inquiries would be directed regarding the qualifications of any judge in the state of Alaska.

I strenuously object to the methods utilized by the writer of this ad who is seeking information. Primarily, because it implies a failure of qualification and/or dereliction in performance of his judicial duties. Frankly, it smells of McCarthyism and is a type of character assassination which the members of the judiciary should not be exposed to. I can certainly see and anticipate that the nature of the replies to this ad would be hearsay and when the mass of hearsay from disgruntled litigants is presented to the Judicial Qualifications Committee and they seek affidavits in support of the so-called charges, and these affidavits could not be produced then, of course, both the Bar and the judiciary would be accused by the non-lawyers interested, of working hand in hand to deprive the non-lawyers of a proper hearing. Contrary to this, proper grievance methods, both as to attorneys and the judiciary, have been utilized in the past and I have been advised rules of procedure will soon be adopted by the Judicial Qualifications Committee.

It is my opinion that the judiciary committees of both the senate and the house should take forceful action to avoid putting members of our judiciary before the public in a like manner as has been presented here. Proper methods of procedure are available without the necessity of impugning, even by implication, the character of any member of the judiciary. I trust you will see this in the same light as I.

Very truly yours,

Peter J. Kalamarides

Sir:

For the past six months I have been handling a substantial percentage of the juvenile appointments in the Fairbanks Superior Court. My clients come from an area between Barrow and Bethel with about half of them from the Fairbanks area. I have been continually shocked by the existing detention and treatment facilities and by the cumbersome and somewhat unfair procedures for juvenile delinquents and dependents.

At any one time there are between fifteen and thirty juveniles held in the Juvenile Detention Wing of the Fairbanks State Jail. Both delinquent and dependent children are held in the jail with no separation. There is absolutely no program of any kind available to these children: no schooling, no physical exercise program and no therapy. (There is a library with very few books, almost all of which are unsuitable and unattractive.) The first four days of detention are spent in solitary confinement awaiting physical examination and are immediately followed by physical abuse from other inmates; the juveniles regularly beat each other up with potentially serious injuries; a child with the "proper" attitude can gradually advance in the pecking order and become the abuser rather than the abused. Some of the children go "stir crazy" while others become withdrawn and still others obtain an unfortunate sophistication about their new way of life. None of them can really understand that his detention isn't punishment but is rather a step on the road to rehabilitation. In addition, due to the construction of the ceiling there is free secret access between the boys' and girls' dormitories. The children are exposed to both sexual and homosexual experiences. Almost all of the children held in "temporary" detention stay there more than two months, and I know of one girl detained there for eight months. As a result each child held there is in danger of losing a year of school, especially those who are placed outside of the available but inadequate State institutions. Most of them are in academic trouble anyway, and this loss becomes too great to overcome.

The problems in the Juvenile Detention Wing of the Fairbanks State Jail are acute, but solutions to these problems should not be exceedingly difficult. I understand that a proposal (for which there are available funds) has been made to provide the Fairbanks Jail with two part time teachers and a psychologist, that this proposal was forwarded to Mr. May, that his reaction could be termed lukewarm at best because the problems have not as yet caused enough pressure upon anyone at that high a level in the Department, and that he turned this proposal over to Mr. Hartman upon whose desk it is now collecting dust.

Prior to adjudication a child may be detained although the District Attorney's Office does not yet have possession of a police report from which to draw up a petition against him; the State need only make a prima facie showing of cause for temporary detention at a short hearing at which no defense attorney is present. The State can then wait thirty days before the next hearing at which the child is to admit or deny the allegations against him. In the meantime the State has time to collect information on which to base its petition; it could never put an adult in jail without a complaint against him. If the child denies the allegations against him, there is further delay until the hearing on the truth of the allegations. In addition, it has happened that a child's papers are lost and nobody knows he is in jail. One of my clients was there for 64 days before he could admit or deny the allegations, and after he denied them, the State couldn't even prove its case. Once a child is adjudicated dependent or delinquent, the bureaucracy and red tape of the Department of Health and Welfare keep him in jail for a further unconscionable length of time. There is no real program planned for the children until after adjudication, and the planned program must go through so many channels for modification and approval that it is not unusual for a child to spend at least another six weeks in jail before he is sent anywhere for "rehabilitation".

There are problems also with the legal proceedings against juveniles. Sometimes the State will bring a petition of delinquency against a child to remove him from an intolerable home situation because this is a more convenient procedure than proving dependency or terminating parental rights or because there are more facilities available for delinquents than dependents. This is done more often to children from the bush whose parents do not understand what is really happening, find it inconvenient, if not impossible, to come all the way to Fairbanks to protest. In general, the legal proceedings are supposedly aimed at the best interest of the child, but the juvenile is not provided with the basic rights afforded an adult defendant. A child can be institutionalized for many years for an act which would not be a crime if committed by an adult or for a longer period of time than provided by statute for adult criminals. In addition the juvenile rules of procedure state that an allegation must be proved only by a preponderance of the evidence although the State must prove charges against adults beyond a reasonable doubt. The purpose of the secret juvenile proceedings is to remove the stigma of crime from delinquency and to rehabilitate the child, but at the moment the tight secrecy surrounding treatment of juveniles also serves to keep the public unaware of existing conditions. In Fairbanks attorneys are routinely appointed for juveniles, but, from my experience, this is not true in Anchorage or in the small native communities of the State. Also, some of the judges feel that children should not be subject to the trauma of a trial; this means that the child should admit the charges whether or not the State has acted properly in the matter. Many of my clients resent this attitude and refuse to admit inaccurate charges or charges where they feel some State official has violated their confidence. Some of the charges are also unrealistic. I have yet to have a client who will admit associating "with vagrant or immoral people", and I have also had difficulty when the charge is being "uncontrolled by parents". Either of these charges is sufficient for delinquency, but it seems to be psychologically difficult for the child to call his friends "immoral" or to admit his parents are unable to handle him.

The State facilities for treating delinquents are inadequate, overcrowded, understaffed and unprofessionally staffed; they are vastly superior to the facilities for dependent children when a foster home cannot be found. In some cases the institutional environment is actually worse for the child than it would be if he were returned to the community after his "brief" stay in jail. In addition, for some reason children from Fairbanks and the bush are not accepted by McLaughlin Youth Center but are almost always sent to other institutions.

No proper physical examination is given to most of the juveniles at any time during their institutionalization. The examination at the jail when the child is first taken into custody is mainly to check for communicable diseases. Any child who is not sent permanently to McLaughlin is not tested further unless an obvious need presents itself. Children sent to Alcantra Youth Camp are often shipped through McLaughlin, but no diagnostic work-up is done. It seems to me as a layman that these children should be tested for such things as epilepsy, diabetes and low blood sugar, all of which can influence criminal behavior and can be treated. In addition, many of these children need extensive psychological evaluation.

In considering these problems I cannot in all fairness blame the local authorities who are almost all acting in complete good faith, but they have no authority and no money to help these children. The procedure to get a child's papers through the committee at McLaughlin, which decides where to place the children, is very slow, and the committee often ignores the the local probation officer's recommendation, sometimes sending a child to an institution which cannot help him. Much of this is due to the lack of space and programs, but having the power to decide the child's placement in a body outside of the community presents real problems. The parents or anyone in the community interested in a child have no real recourse when a poor placement decision is made. The probation officer and the judge who know the child also have little power over the decision. The child and the family resent this naturally, especially when the local probation officer informs them of the program he will recommend, and another program is put into effect. Generally, the recommended program is more palatable to the family than the program finally decided upon.

As I understand it, the police say that only one out of every twenty-seven serious delinquents in Fairbanks is prosecuted; only one out of every nine cases involving at least three felonies is prosecuted. In the city this backlog is not due to the police; the police reports have already been prepared and are sitting on someone's desk. The State facilities are already overcrowded; the Division of Corrections employees are already overworked; it is probably impossible with the present facilities and personnel to do anything about these children. However, I cannot understand why the Division of Corrections does not make the Legislature aware of the need for much more money, for better and bigger facilities, and for more and better qualified personnel. It seems to me that more expensive programs can be made palatable to the taxpayer if he is made to realize the high cost of delinquency and the general failure of rehabilitation. One might almost say that the current Alaskan treatment of juvenile delinquency is aimed less (in practice, not, of course, in theory) at rehabilitating delinquents than at putting them away for several years, thereby merely deferring and sometimes actually contributing to their potentially serious criminal behavior. Experiments in California have shown that expensive, almost individual treatment of delinquents with highly qualified and highly salaried personnel leads to a lowering of the recidivism rate to the extent that the taxpayer actually saves money in the long run in terms of the cost of crime and of institutionalization.

Up to this point I have refrained from attempting long-term drastic legal action or attempting to publicize the atrocities of the present system because I was afraid the local authorities might well receive the blame, and they are not at fault. However, if something isn't done soon, I shall feel morally obliged to attempt what I can. The present problems are threatening to multiply to the extent that the cost to the State would be astronomical, and the seeming indifference and lack of understanding of the administrators in the Division of Corrections and the Department of Health and Welfare must be corrected.

If I can be of any assistance to you in this matter, please do not hesitate to call on me. I would be happy to give you further information and anonymous case histories if you wish. In addition, Judge Arthur Robson is extremely knowledgeable in this area and will probably be coming to Juneau to discuss the public defender bills. He would be happy to discuss any of these matters with you.

I can no longer in good conscience refrain from attempting to publicize these problems, but I would prefer practical legislative solutions to merely shocking the public conscience. However, I do also hope to arouse community interest and action in this area.

Very truly yours,

Native Land Claims

February 5, 1970

The Honorable Henry Jackson, Chairman
Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, D. C. 20510

Dear Senator Jackson:

This memorandum is with reference to the brief of Solicitor Melich of the Department of the Interior of October 23, 1969 on the subject of Alaska Native Land Claims.

The memorandum of the Solicitor concluded the following: "Congress thus cannot impair the title to lands granted to the State of Alaska by Section 6 by the imposition of the two percent royalty urged by the Alaska Natives." The State of Alaska agrees with that conclusion, and merely observes that the conclusion of the Department of the Interior is in agreement with Opinion of the Attorney General No. 6, September 5, 1969, of the State of Alaska. That opinion, as well as Supplemental Opinion of October 3, has already been sent to you.

The State of Alaska, however, strongly disagrees with the legal conclusion that "Congress may grant the Natives a royalty interest in proceeds received under the Mineral Leasing Act, 41 Stat. 437 (1920), as amended, 30 U.S.C. sec. 181, et seq (1964)." The reasons for that disagreement are contained in this memorandum.

The legal basis of the Solicitor's memorandum is the following. The Solicitor first argues that Section 28(b) of the Statehood Act is not a part of the compact between the State and the Federal Government because it was not a clause inserted in the Alaska Constitution and only those clauses included in the Alaska Constitution which were repeated in the Statehood Act constitute the compact. The Solicitor next argues that the ratification of the Statehood Act by Alaskan voters did not relate to Section 28(b) of the Statehood Act because it was not a grant of property within the meaning of Section 8(b)(3) of the Statehood Act. This memorandum will discuss each of the arguments of the Solicitor.

First, Section 28(b) of the Statehood Act is part of the compact between the State of Alaska and the Federal Government. The State Constitution did not constitute the offer which led to the compact between the State and the Federal Government. It should be readily evident that the purpose of a state constitution is not an offer to the Federal Government to form a compact, but is only intended to relate to those domestic affairs which are the province of a state. The delegates to the Alaska Constitutional Convention certainly did not believe that they were offering to form a compact with the Federal Government. The nature of the clauses contained in the State Constitution, for example, the complete absence of any land grant to the State, militate against such a construction. The only clause in the State Constitution which directly relates to the compact is Article XII, Section 13, which states: "All provisions of the act admitting Alaska to the Union which reserve rights or powers to the United States, as well as those prescribing the terms or conditions of the grants of lands or other property, are consented to fully by the State and its people." This clause, of course, is a substantial restatement of Section 8(b)(3) of the Statehood Act, which was approved by the Alaska voters when it ratified the Statehood Act on August 26, 1958.

Further, the basic law of contracts demonstrates that the State Constitution did not constitute an offer of a compact. The language of the document and the circumstances surrounding it indicate that the document adopted by the Constitutional Convention on February 5, 1956 and approved by the people of the Territory on April 24, 1956 constituted a pre-compact petition or solicitation by the people of the Territory of Alaska to the Congress for admission to statehood. It manifested the intention of the people of the Territory to become a State, but it did not indicate the terms upon which it would become a State. In legal terminology, the document constituted a solicitation of an offer and not the offer itself. Restatement of the Law of Contracts §24. The offer of statehood itself was the Statehood Act, and the acceptance of that offer by the people of the Territory occurred with its ratification by the people of the Territory in the referendum election held on August 26, 1958. The State Constitution did not become operative as a legal document until January 3, 1959 when Alaska officially became a state of the Union with the signing of a presidential proclamation.

Next, the Statehood Act itself, when looked at as a whole rather than piecemeal, shows that the State Constitution did not constitute the offer of statehood. Section 1 of the Statehood Act provides, in pertinent part: ". . . the constitution formed pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska entitled, "An Act to provide for the holding of a constitutional convention to prepare a constitution for the State of Alaska; to submit the Constitution to the people for adoption or rejection; to prepare for the admission of Alaska as a State; to make an appropriation; and setting an effective date", approved March 19, 1955 (Chapter 46, Session Laws of Alaska, 1955), and adopted by a vote of the people of Alaska in the election held on April 24, 1956, is hereby found to be republican in form and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence and is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed. (emphasis added) Section 3 of the Statehood Act provides: "The constitution of the State of Alaska shall always be republican in form and shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence." (emphasis added) The Constitution of the United States, Article IV, Section 4, provides in pertinent part: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government. . ." It should be clear from a comparison of these quotations from the Statehood Act and the U. S. Constitution that the legal reference between the Statehood Act and the State Constitution is that the Statehood Act "accepted, ratified, and confirmed" the State Constitution as being in conformity with the U. S. Constitution as "republican in form" and that the Statehood Act in no way recognized the State Constitution as an offer of a compact.

Second, Section 28(b) of the Statehood Act is included within the language of Section 8(b)(3) of the Statehood Act which was ratified by the people of Alaska on August 26, 1958. Section 8(b)(3) provides: "All provisions of the Act of Congress approved.....(date of approval of this Act) reserving rights or powers to the United States as well as those prescribing the terms or conditions of the grants of lands or other property therein made to the State of Alaska, are consented to fully by said State and its people." (emphasis added) The Statehood Act itself, as well as the history of Section 28(b) make it clear that Section 28(b) was a grant of "other property" within the meaning of Section 8(b)(3).

The history of Section 28(b) of the Statehood Act clearly shows that it was a grant of property. Senator Barrett of Wyoming and Senator Anderson of New Mexico were responsible for the inclusion of the 90% grant in the Statehood Act and the record of the 1957 Statehood hearings reflect that they believed that the people of Alaska had a right to these revenues based on the Treaty of Cession. The entire discussion of the Senate hearings on this point are included in this memorandum at this point because of the importance of the question.

> "SENATOR BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question or two. I have to leave here very shortly.
> Governor Gruening, I am somewhat concerned now about the economic status of Alaska when it becomes a State. I am rather intrigued by your reference here to the treaty with Russia when these lands were ceded to the United States.
> It is my interpretation of that treaty, which by the way, of course, is the highest law in the land, and certainly binds this country explicitly without any question of doubt--I may say to you that it is my understanding of this phase in the treaty: "shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all of the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States and shall be protected in the free enjoyment of their liberties, sovereignty, and religion," has been used in several treaties in substantially the same language, first with the treaty with France in 1803 and later with the treaty with Mexico nearly half a century later.
> The courts have interpreted that language to mean that the--territory--which is the way they referred to lands in those days, shall be held in trust for the States to be carved out of the lands granted for the benefit of the people of the States.
> Now, when they speak here "shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States," they mean that the people up there will enjoy certain rights as citizens of the State of Alaska and they come into those rights by virtue of their citizenship in the State of Alaska.
> As a consequence, I think it is very important here when we consider this legislation that we

take into consideration the rights that those people have up there in natural resources of that new State and in your intense desire to get statehood I hope that you will not fail to stand up and assert the rights that you are entitled to under this treaty which you mention here, and under the law of the land which, of course, has been somewhat forgotten for a long period of time, in my judgment.

Now, to be specific, I think that the territory up there belongs to the people of Alaska and not to the people of the present 48 States. I think that you have to have those resources if you are going to develop and control your own destiny as a State, and you will need them.

And I think it is unwarranted for the Congress to take any action that would deprive you of that income.

Now, under the leasing act of 1920, unfortunately as far as my State is concerned, we got thirty-seven and a half percent of the royalties from leasing act minerals that were produced within our State.

Fifty-two and a half percent went to reclamation fund and 10 percent was retained by the Federal Government.

Just to show you what that amounts to since that act went on the books, about $155 million or $160 million has been taken into the Treasury of the United States from royalties from the minerals produced in Wyoming alone.

Now, that law is applicable to Alaska and fifty-two and a half percent of the leasing act minerals produced in Alaska goes to the reclamation fund.

DELEGATE BARTLETT. No.

SENATOR BARRETT. I have just checked with counsel and he says they do.

DELEGATE BARTLETT. Could I answer that particular provision?

We are in a worse situation than that, Senator Barrett. We get thirty-seven and a half percent and all the remainder goes to the Federal Government.

SENATOR BARRETT. That is what I said.

DELEGATE BARTLETT. We are not under the Reclamation Act so we get no benefit at all.

SENATOR BARRETT. I did not say you were under the Reclamation Act. What I said is this:

That under existing law fifty-two and a half percent of the income from the Leasing Act minerals produced in Alaska goes to the Reclamation fund; thirty-seven and a half percent goes to Alaska, and 10 percent is retained in the Federal Treasury.

Now, you do not get any benefits from the Reclamation Act, I know that, but that makes it all the worse as far as you are concerned.

So I think it would be eminently fair and just and right and proper, when we write this bill up, that we provide here that the Leasing Act of 1920, as amended, and let them retain the title to the lands up there except that which is granted--personally I hate to see that done, but to be realistic we probably have to do that--let the Federal Government retain the title to the minerals except such public lands as are granted to you, but give the Territory now and the State of Alaska-to-be ninety percent of the income from the minerals under the Leasing Act royalties that come in from now on out.

I believe you need it; I think it ought to be done. I think that the banker, Mr. Rusing, who just got through testifying here, was hitting the nail right on the head, if this State is going to have a chance to develop and to become one of the strong States of the Union, certainly you need your own assets up there and if you are only a one percent stockholder, that is bad.

I would like to give you a fair shake on the thing.

Now, what do you think about that?

MR. GRUENING. I appreciate that very much. I think that would be excellent, Senator Barrett. I hope that will be done.

I understand that in a House bill it is planned to do that.

DELEGATE BARTLETT. Upon that particular point, the House committee has approved and there is now on the House consent calendar a bill which will give the Territory ninety percent of these proceeds.

SENATOR BARRETT. It is not in this bill here over in the House?

DELEGATE BARTLETT. No.

SENATOR BARRETT. But it is in a separate bill?

DELEGATE BARTLETT. That is right.

SENATOR BARRETT. I think that is a very wise piece of legislation. I think you are certainly entitled to it.

If the Department has no objection to it, I think it ought to be incorporated right here in this bill.

MR. GRUENING. I know Alaskans will certainly appreciate that, Senator Barrett." Senate Hearings on S. 49 and S. 35, March 25 and 26, 1957, pp. 29-31. (Emphasis added)

"SENATOR BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement that Mr. Bartlett made about the improvement in this legislation. I think it could be improved quite a little bit. I am offering an amendment here for the consideration of the committee. I think this is probably as good a time as any to do it.

I discussed this amendment this morning when you were absent, Senator Anderson. I propose to insert a new section 21 on the last page of the bill and provide in here that 90 percent of the income from coal and 90 percent of the income from the leasing act minerals shall go to the new State of Alaska.

When I mentioned that this morning, Delegate Bartlett told me that the House committee had considered a bill doing precisely that and had reported it out favorably. Since then I have looked up the record and I find that the Secretary of the Interior has filed a favorable report on the bill and agreed that it should be enacted into law but suggested that the statehood bill was the proper place to insert such a provision.

Maybe it would be well to have in these hearings a copy of the report that the Secretary of the Interior made on the House bill.

SENATOR JACKSON. Without objection, the report and the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming will be included in the record at this point, if this is agreeable. The report and the amendment should go together.

BARRETT AMENDMENT TO S. 49

Sec. 22. (a) The last sentence of section 9 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved October 20, 1914 (48 U.S.C. 439), is hereby amended to read as follows: "All net profits from operation of Government mines, and all bonuses, royalties, and rentals under leases as herein provided and all other payments received under this Act shall be distributed as follows as soon as practicable after December 31 and June 30 of each year: (1) 90 per centum thereof shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State of Alaska for disposition by the legislature thereof; and (2) 10 per centum shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts."

(b) Section 35 of the Act entitled "An Act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920, as amended (30 U.S.C. 191), is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the colon preceding the first proviso thereof the following: ", and of those from Alaska 52 1/2 per centum thereof shall be paid to the State of Alaska for disposition by the legislature thereof". Ibid, pp. 66-68. (Emphasis added.)

The Senate Report on S. 49 adopted the Barrett Amendment which granted 90% of federal revenues to the State. See S.Rep. 1163, 85th Congress, 1st Session 3. The identical provision was later incorporated into H.R. 7999 as a section of the Statehood Act.

The inclusion of revenue grants to the State in the Statehood Act further evidence that it was the intention of Congress to make the grant a permanent right of the State of Alaska. If this were not the case, it would make no sense to include the provision in the Statehood Act. Public Law 85-88, approved July 10, 1957, Sec. 2 had already provided that the Territory of Alaska receive 90% of the mineral revenues. The proper place for a statutory formal revision of Public Law 85-88 to change "Territory" to "State" would have been the Omnibus Act and not the Statehood Act. The inclusion of the revenue provision in the Statehood Act meant and was understood to mean that it was part of the compact between the people of Alaska and the Federal Government.

The language used in the Statehood Act also shows that Section 28(b) was included within the Section 8(b)(3) "grants of . . . other property. . . ." It is useful at the outset to consider how the term "property" has been defined by various courts. Generally the term property has been afforded a broad definition by most courts which have had cause to interpret it. Unfortunately, none of the cases which interpret the word property interpret it quite in the context in which it is used in the Statehood Act. Typical of the cases is Goldsmith v. Albion Public Schools, Calhoun County, 373 Mich. 397, 129 N.W.2d 377 (1964), which was a proceeding to test the validity of a school bond election. The question presented was which persons were entitled to vote in the elections as property holders. Some plaintiffs were contract vendees under land sale contracts and others owned property pursuant to deed but their names did not appear as such on the assessment rolls. The court stated that all of those persons held interests in property and defined the term as follows:

> The word "property" is susceptible of broad definition. In a broad sense, it is defined as any valuable right or interest considered primarily as a source of wealth [case cited]. The word is said to be so all-embracing as to include every physical object, intangible benefit, and prerogative, susceptible of ownership, possession, or disposition. (129 N.W.2d at 379).

The concept of property as a source of wealth is one employed by many cases and its use in the Calhoun County case is not an isolated one.

The Supreme Court of Maine in McInnes v. McKay, 141 A. 699, 127 Me. 110 (1928) discussed the concept of property. This case was an action by plaintiff to recover a certain sum of money for services. The defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the court by way of attachment and in reviewing the history of the particular attachment statute then applicable, the court had occasion to define the word property:

> Property in legal conception is the total of the rights and powers incident to a thing rather than the thing itself. The legal right to use and derive a profit from land or other things is property. (141 A. at 702)

It is noteworthy that in the McInnes case the court again tied the concept of property to the right to derive a profit from land.

The United States Supreme Court in a series of early cases in which it had to adjudicate the significance of property rights acquired under the laws of earlier sovereigns to territory then in the United States, defined in several instances what that term meant. Soulard v. United States, 29 U.S. 511 (1830), was an action by plaintiff to quiet title to certain lands in the Louisiana Purchase under title which plaintiff had derived from the former Spanish Government. The court held the matter in abeyance until more light could be shed on the nature of plaintiff's claim. The court noted that in the Treaty of Purchase, the United States stipulated that the innabitants of the ceded territory should be protected in the free enjoyment of their property. The court stated:

> The term "property" as applied to lands, comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete. It is supposed to embrace those rights which lie in contract, those which are executory as well as those which are executed. (29 U.S. at p. 522)

Thus the Supreme Court recognized that property could be an inchoate right, the existence of which depended upon the terms of a contract which had not yet been executed.

Strother v. Lucas, 37 U.S. 410 (1838) was an action in ejectment where plaintiffs based their claim to certain property upon the Treaty of Cession of Louisiana by France to the United States. The Treaty stated that the inhabitants of that territory should be protected in the free enjoyment of their property. The court again defined property:

> This Court has defined property to be any right, legal or equitable, inceptive, inchoate, or perfect, which before the Treaty with France in 1803, or with Spain in 1819, had so attached to any piece or tract of land, great or small, as to affect the conscience of the former sovereign with a trust, and make him trustee for an individual, according to the law of nations, of the sovereign himself, the local usage or custom of the colony or district, according to the principles of justice, and rules of equity. (37 U.S. at 436)

Thus, in Strother the concept of property is recognized not only to be legal but to be equitable in nature and if the right which is sought to be protected as property should be protected according to the principles of justice and rules of equity, then that right is no less a property right.

The Supreme Court in the same case also defined the term "grant":

> This Court has also uniformly held that the term "grant" in a treaty, comprehends not only those which are made in form, but also any concessions, warrant, order or permission to survey, > possess or settle, whether evidenced by writing or parol, or presumed from possession . . . . (37 U.S. at 436)

Thus, a grant need not be in any particular form and need not be a warrant but it would be a concession.

It could be stated that 30 U.S.C. §191 is an assignment from the United States to the State of Alaska of 90 per cent of the money in the form of sales, bonuses, royalties and rentals of public lands received by the United States. Specifically, what is assigned by this section is a right to money and there is no doubt that that money is property. Also, what is assigned is the interest of the United States as to certain rights which it has retained as lessor in certain leases of public mineral land. The interest of which the United States is possessed in respect to that land can be characterized in several ways. The interest is a right to rents and royalties and bonuses under its mineral lands. All of these terms have been considered in Summers in his treatise on oil and gas law and he has had no difficulty in determining that they are property rights. Volume 3(a), Summers Oil and Gas, § 572 (1955), discusses the legal significance of the term "rent" or "royalty". Summers states:

> The question which usually arises as to the nature of the royalty interest is whether it is real or personal property.

Also, Summers states:

> All jurisdictions recognize that the right to receive royalties under the existing lease may be transferred apart from the land, ...

Thus, the rental or royalty interest is either real or personal property and it is a right which may be transferred apart from the land to which the right attaches. It is elementary contract law that an assignee takes the same rights as the transferor in the thing transferred, no more or no less.

Summers also states:

> But where the lease is limited to a definite term of years and the royalty under > the lease is assigned, the interest may be properly classed as a chattel real and in that sense personal property.

If the royalty is unaccrued, Summers states:

> . . . unaccrued royalties, if the lease may continue indefinitely, are incident to the reversion in the land or minerals, and pass with a sale thereof, and when separately transferred are usually held to be interests in land.

Thus, Summers recognizes that unaccrued royalties may be transferred separately and when they are, they are usually an interest in land. Again that interest has been defined as a property interest.

Summers also defines at section 586 of his work, the term bonus:

> "Bonus" is usually defined as any consideration given for a lease in addition to the usual royalties reserved in the lease, whether paid in cash or payable out of production.

Bonus then, like royalty, is a right to payment to the owner of the land arising initially out of his ownership of the land. There should be no reason why as in the case of a royalty, a bonus which is an amount payable in addition to the usual royalty may not be assigned with all rights of the assignor.

Thus, there is ample authority to support the proposition that the term property as used in section 8(b)(3) of the Statehood Act encompasses the money, either accrued or unaccrued, to which the State of Alaska would be entitled by virtue of the provisions of section 28(b) of the Statehood Act.

Sincerely,

G. Kent Edwards

Dear Barry:

Your letter to the bar association regarding the proposed probate code was read at our weekly meeting today. A committee has been appointed to study the code and will be reporting to you shortly.

I would wish to remind you that, according to the last draft which I had seen, Sections 13.20.330 and 13.20.340, the wrongful death statutes, are repealed. There is no statute comparable reenacted in the proposed code. I am sure that not even the most reactionary insurance company would seriously contend that the action for wrongful death be repealed.

Very truly yours,

MAN IN NATURE: A STRATEGY FOR ALASKAN LIVING*

Robert B. Weeden

Alaska Conservation Representative
Box 5-425 College, Alaska 99701

People move to Alaska for many reasons, and because of the distance and cost of moving, the reasons rarely are trivial. Major population increases have come in boom times; one might infer that the lure of economic benefits has been paramount. But recessions have followed the booms and those with purely economic motives often have gone back "Outside" where, if they were going to starve, they could do it in a comfortable climate. Even in our exciting times in Alaska a man spends $1.32 for what he could buy in Seattle for $1.00; he earns only $1.21 for a dollar's worth of labor by national standards. Clearly the Alaskan is not as well off as the average American.

Or is he? Is there something in the air, the romance of Alaska that creates the captivating incentive that money fails to provide? Do people stay because they expect to take part in a legend? I think they do. In Alaska people perceive and respond to a uniqueness comprised of the freshness of history, the indefinable lure of "frontier," and, above all, the wilderness. Despite the comings and goings of boomers, I think the heart of Alaskans is in Alaska.

If ever it was important for a people to gauge accurately their own feelings about themselves and their environment, it is true in Alaska today. History and Nature have proffered an array of choices that our civilization has never seen before. The only decision we cannot make is to stay aloof from change. If we Alaskans do not make our own choices, others will happily do it for us.

The most obvious element in the situation is the economic upheaval since the September 10, 1969 oil lease sale in Anchorage. On that day Alaskans, who had earned a total personal income of a little over a billion dollars in 1969, received slightly over $900,000,000 in lease payments and bonuses on State lands near Prudhoe Bay. The expectation of significant continued income from future lease sales and from oil and gas production suggests that the rather desperate search for revenue characterizing the decade after statehood is over.

An equally important ingredient is that the inherent character and productivity of the land are largely undiminished. Over vast areas of the State there is hardly any evidence of human use. Air and water are as pure as anywhere in this polluted world. Renewable resources are (with a few exceptions) harvested below or barely at annual production levels. Surface transportation nets cover only one-fourth of the State, sparsely. In short, the present array of choices is not greatly diminished by past mistakes or heavy capital investments.

Third, a major group of Alaskans, the approximately 60,000 Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts of the State, may suddenly gain economic and landowner stature such as they have never had before. These people face individual and group choices that are in many ways more difficult and unsettling than those confronting other Alaskans.

Fourth, the richness of the present opportunity is largely due to the recognition by Alaskans that their new wealth brings new responsibilities of decision. To some the responsibility is mainly fiscal: to invest for greatest dollar return in time. Others see the social good that could come from expenditures for education, sanitation, public works, or various welfare programs. As just one example of this widespread awareness, there will be a series of public discussions this autumn, sponsored by the Brookings Institute and led by the Alaska State Legislative Council, in which Alaskans will consider policies for the uses of public revenues.

In this context it seems both appropriate and urgent that there be full and vigorous public debate of various strategies fo. Alaskan living. Among the several alternatives, I am urging one that involves exceptional recognition of Nature as an integral part of the human environment. If this style of life touches the hearts and minds of Alaskans we will necessarily have to adopt bold policies relative to population growth and industrialization. These, in turn, will require that specific tactics of resource and environmental use immediately be brought to bear on current political and economic decisions.

The general idea is simple. I see Alaska as a place where people elect to withhold the full force of their technical and procreative powers so as to reap the rich harvest of tangible and intellectual resources the wild North can promise. I do not propose turning Alaska into a permanent nature preserve, administered by some monstrous conservationistic bureaucracy. Neither do I propose that Alaska welcome industrialization unreservedly, mimicing the unenviable environments technology has spawned all over the world. The middle road is not, in this case, a politically viable compromise, because walking it will be much harder than taking either of the other paths. Rather, I chose it because I believe in diversity of opportunity--economic, materialistic, creative, recreative--as a prime element in the good life. Not everyone wants to be a bird-watcher. Not everyone should be ensnared in the television syndrome.

POLICIES FOR LEADERS

If this idea is to work, Alaskans and their governments must adopt three basic policies: limited population, selective industrialization, and environmental consciousness. All are indispensable. All are fraught with emotional polarities, and their acceptance and institutionalization will be extremely difficult.

There is no need to belabor the now-obvious perils of excessive population. In policy terms, whereas much of the world cannot long survive without a reduction in population, and whereas America itself must take steps to limit further pupulation growth, Alaska is one of the few self-supporting units of government that can justify conceiving of and working toward an optimal population (which may be at a level somewhat higher than our present quarter-million people). The concept of optimal population, admittedly, is poorly defined. To me it means the general population level at which people enjoy the widest freedom of cultural and economic pursuits. There is an obvious interaction of dollars, culture, and population; a few rich people could finance a performance of an opera, but it takes more middle-income people to do the same thing. "Optimal pupulation levels" may be dynamic rather than static, raising and lowering as cultural and environmental shifts take place.

The life style I advocate will be impossible unless we develop and practice a policy of population regulation. We will need to limit the number of births among Alaskans through legalized abortion, birth-control measures, incentives for small families, or other methods and combinations that are acceptable and effective. We will have to restrict immigration, possibly approaching this tricky problem from a strategy of reducing the incentive for people to immigrate, rather than by barring entry to those who knock on the door.

The spacing or geographic distribution of people is an equally important subject. In Alaska, big settlements have been growing bigger and small places have been getting smaller for several decades, with a net annual increase in total state population. Roughly one-third of all Alaskans now live in Anchorage and its satellite communities. Another one-third live in the towns of Fairbanks, Palmer, Kenai-Soldotna, Ketchikan, Juneau, and Sitka. The trend toward urbanization is essentially conservative of landscape, and it should be encouraged in Alaska. Towns and cities should be made more attractive in both opportunity and appearance. Conversely, outdated programs such as the Homestead Act (by which the federal government gives large acreages to private persons, ostensibly for agriculture but now for other uses including land speculation) should be abandoned. These programs result in the scattering of people along road systems, leading to high costs for services, and degradation of the countryside.

(The entire mix of federal, state, and local government programs for hinterland development are in dire need of overhaul, reappraisal, coordination, and redirection. Again, Alaskan conditions favor concerted, long-term land planning because large blocks of land are under jurisdiction of a few public agencies responsible for management in the public interest. There is an unbreakable two-way relation between public lands management, access and transportation, settlement patterns, and population policy.)

The second policy, that of selective industrialization, is closely tied to the first. If we reject outright the conventional myth that population growth is a necessary handmaiden to progress, we do not have to look for industries that "provide jobs"--and end up attracting 102 job-seekers for every 100 jobs they offer. We can foster industries that are capital-intensive rather than labor-intensive, and select those least likely to degrade the natural environment through noxious effluents or outputs. We can also reject extravagant power generation projects justified with self-fulfilling projections of demand from processing industries and population growth; neither the manufacturing plants nor the increased population are desirable. Traditional tax enticements to new industries could be scrapped unless they carry out the environmental or social policies of the State.

Out of a total civilian work force of about 100,000 people in 1968, approximately 91,000 had jobs. Over one-third of all working people were employed by governments. About one-fourth were employed in trades and services, about 6 to 8 per cent each in transportation, manufacturing (including logging), contract construction, and smaller proportions in mining, financial, and other occupations. The main sources of "new money" in the Alaskan economy have been federal government expenditures, commercial fish, oil and gas, forest products, minerals, and tourism, in order of decreasing dollar value.* In 1969 the great increases in oil and gas revenues (mostly lease payments and bonuses, not production) have changed the relative ranking of these sources of money, and the new picture may hold for a number of years.

The important point for this discussion is that revenue from the Cook Inlet and Arctic oilfields has given Alaska a tremendous bank balance after many years when federal expenditures were the critical factor in survival of the economy. Assuming that gas and oil revenues from those fields will be high for several decades, and assuming a continued net inflow of federal dollars, there is no need for economic policy that strains the productive capacities of renewable resources, and no need for aggressive expansionism in mining, tourism, manufacturing, and other industries. There is a greater need to turn our attention to the serious social inequities in our local economy, a prime example being poverty and joblessness among Alaskan natives--a condition that is worsening rather than improving as our total dollar flow rises.

The third policy, which I coined "environmental consciousness," depends on Alaskans adopting Aldo Leopold's "land ethic." Incorporated into government it would become "ecomanagement," a term Jare Mayda coined* to express the broad new tasks of conservation, encompassing all individual aspects of environment, the whole concept "environment" (since this is more than the sum of its parts), and the interplay of man and environment. Operationally this policy would seek always to maximize the full spectrum of human benefits from the use of space and other natural resources, not merely to maximize revenue. It would defend man against himself in the common environmental problems of air, water, and noise pollution. It would be the basis for defense of those delightfully "useless" animals, plants, and empty miles that may be the ultimate salvation of man, and which unquestionably are an important foundation for scientific knowledge, artistic creativity, and personal re-creation and pleasure.

*Jare Mayda, 1967, "Environment and Resources: From Conservation to Ecomanagement," School of Law, University of Puerto Rico.

As I said earlier, adopting these policies would mean completely different approaches to environmental management. Alaskan oil developments provide an excellent and timely example; I will describe the current situation briefly and suggest two steps to take immediately to cope with the oil giant.

If the first guesses of petroleum geologists are correct, close to one-half of Alaska and its offshore waters may be underlain by oil- or gas-bearing strata. This includes most of the State outside of the Alaska Range, Brooks Range, and mountainous Interior areas. Some private seismic work or drilling has occurred in practically all of the oil regions of the State, but two, Cook Inlet and the central Arctic have had the lion's share of attention. The first production wells were spudded on the Kenai Peninsula in 1958; the Swanson River field was developed there and, together with about 15 wells offshore in adjacent Cook Inlet, this field produces all of Alaska's present output of about 200,000 barrels per day. A small refinery exists near Kenai, but most Alaskan oil is shipped as "Crude" out of shore facilities on the east and west sides of Cook Inlet.

Exploration and production activity in the Inlet and on the Kenai Peninsula gave Alaskan's a fairly clear idea of the sorts of problems oilfield development brings. The network of thousands of miles of intertwining tractor trails across marshes, forests and alpine areas jolted people into sharp awareness that even looking for oil causes problems. Strictly enforced regulations helped: anyone who compared the seeded roadsides and healing "cat" trails on the Kenai National Moose Range with the debris and scarring on state lands just outside the Range could see this readily. Air and water pollution came, as inevitably they will. A cloud of smoke is sometimes visible for miles when wasted natural gas is flared from the Inlet's wells. Hundreds of oil spills from tankers, wells, and pipes have been recorded by government agencies. A few big ones have killed ducks or befouled the nets of fishermen (Cook Inlet has an important commercial and recreational salmon fishery). Life in Anchorage has changed, too, with the advent of oilmen and boomers. No longer a small town serving nearby military bases and tourists, Anchorage has swept into an era of burgeoning population, acute land allocation problems, and school and public service expansion suggesting that, like Alice, someone ate from the wrong side of the mushroom.

But Anchorage had its growing pains and Kenai its land scarring before oil. Petroleum development simply intensified and added new facets to the problem. It is in the Arctic, with its virginal and vulnerable landscape, that the impact of oil is most obvious. The gnawing scars from seemingly harmless trails of construction vehicles, the puzzles of permafrost engineering, the unsuitability of ordinary sanitation techniques, the fantastic longevity and visibility of debris, the oil spills, the huge demand for gravel for camps and airstrips, the question of whether caribou will be frightened and displaced by surface feeder pipes and the general bustle of oilfield operations--these are now commonplace topics of conversation in the North. Technological man has burst upon the Arctic, a stranger. He can ride roughshod for a time over the tundra to his shining golden visions, but always nagged by the feeling he could do much better. Science cannot yet be of much help. Government is an uncertain watchdog, alternately barking and licking its chops.

Bigger questions for Alaska lie beyond Prudhoe Bay and Cook Inlet. Can petroleum be shipped out of Alaska by pipeline, tanker, or any other means without chronic and catastrophic oil spills? Will the Arctic oilfield, now confined to the central Arctic north of the Brooks Range, expand west into the huge Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4 and east to the lovely Arctic National Wildlife Range? Will the semi-secret explorations in Bristol Bay and on the Alaska Peninsula turn that fabulous big-game, waterfowl, and salmon paradise into another Prudhoe? Can offshore drilling in the savage Gulf of Alaska or the Beaufort Sea be done without a series of Santa Barbara's? Will the next big strike be on the delta of the Yukon River, where Secretary of the Interior Walter Hickel is said to have more than a passing financial interest at stake?

In view of these and other managerial complexities that neither industry, state, nor federal governments have been able to solve, I propose a complete shutdown for at least three years of all further oil and gas exploration in Alaska and adjacent waters, outside of present lease areas in Cook Inlet and the central Arctic. In my judgement the immediate and permanent benefits from this action would far outweigh any temporary reduction in revenues to geophysical contractors or to the State of Alaska. First, this action would let the oil and gas industry turn its full attention to getting known petroleum reserves into production and to market safely and with minimum losses to the environment. Second, the moratorium would give governments time to establish a full range of regulations for oilfield conservation and for the protection of the landscape and wildlife. Even more critical is the need for resource agencies to obtain the staff and funds to explain and enforce these regulations, and to establish training programs jointly with industry. Third, universities and others could begin basic, full-scale studies of tundra and taiga disturbances, so that better evaluations of the regulations would be possible. Fourth, and very importantly, oil companies and the government could steadily improve techniques of slant drilling, seismic systems, helicopter, hovercraft, and overland vehicle usage, and sanitation, so that future exploration could be done in safety and with minor and tolerable damage to the land. Fifth, the State of Alaska could study its new role as rich man, learning how to make the most social mileage out of its financial windfall. Finally, the moratorium would allow resource agencies and private groups to develop sound proposals for lands to be reserved permanently from oil and gas exploration and exploitation, based on their importance to science or exceptional wildlife, scenic, or recreational values.

Eventually more of the potential oil lands would be explored. This should come on the initiative of the government, not industry. It should be done when the national and global situation clearly calls for development of new reserves, and it should be done on lands selected by the government. And, as oil and gas are public resources under public land, the public, through government, should dictate the conditions and techniques of exploration. I suggest that a separate industry-government corporation be established to explore each parcel as it is opened up, with companies and individual entrepreneurs bidding for a share in the venture. The corporation would then conduct all exploration work with the best technology available, sharing geophysical data within the corporation. This would eliminate the haste and secrecy that have caused such wasteful and destructive duplication of seismic lines, shot holes, camps, roads, airstrips, test wells, and gravel pits in the Arctic. Petroleum discoveries would be developed by the private members of the exploration group, under a unitization plan, dividing proceeds in the ratio of original bids for exploration.

I am convinced that if we act sensibly, using the knowledge we have or can soon develop, the Arctic, Cook Inlet, and perhaps other oilfields can be developed into showpieces of public and private cooperation. Alaska would necessarily have to sacrifice some of her wildness, some of her cleanness of landscape, and some of her outdoor playgrounds and classrooms, doing this not blindly but in full knowledge that a good bargain has been struck by men for men.

ALASKA AND THE WORLD

The future Alaska I rather wistfully envision would have more people than now--perhaps 500,000 or so--but they would be in the same population centers as now. There would be awesome stretches of semi-wilderness where people lived who prized solitude, or who enjoyed making their way from the seasonal fruits of the countryside. There would be relatively smaller stretches of true wilderness, balanced by local areas where facilities were developed for the enjoyment of Nature by larger numbers of visitors. There would be a comfortable network of roads where needed, planned, mile by mile, to display and preserve the countryside and to host appropriate commercial, residential, and recreational uses. Public revenues would come from the usual range of personal and corporate taxes and from the State's share of Alaskan resources extracted for private profit: oil, gas, fish, minerals, timber, water. Alaskans would be teachers, scientists, civil servants, tradesmen, miners, fishermen, loggers, financiers, artists--a reasonable sample of the whole range of occupations open to modern societies.

Anyone who knows Alaska will remark that what I have in mind is simply to perpetuate the present. Today's Alaska, however, is a result of a complex and dynamic history. The economic, psychological, and global events that made Alaska what it is are already pushing it towards something else. That "something else," I fear, is a repetition of the dollar-rich, culture-poor, trash- and poison-ridden landscape so characteristic of industrial America. Changing this destiny requires a revolution in the attitudes of everyman (and especially of those who lead), towards his own sources of happiness, his own life style, and his own environment.

In a very real sense what I am proposing is not only a milieu for Alaskans but an opportunity for the world. The world needs an embodiment of the frontier mythology, the sense of horizons unexplored, the mystery of uninhabited miles. It needs a place where wolves stalk the strand lines in the dark, because a land that can produce a wolf is a healthy, robust, and perfect land. The world desperately needs a place to stand under a bright auroral curtain on a winter's evening, in awe of the cosmic cold and silence. But more than these things the world needs to know that there is a place where men live amidst a balanced interplay of the goods of technology and the fruits of nature. Unless we can prove that a modern society can thrive in harmony with the land, the bits of wildness we salvage in Alaska will be nothing more than curious artifacts in the sad museum of mankind.

IN THE HOUSE BY THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

Censuring the President of the Senate.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS, to resolve the differences between the House and Senate versions of HB-857 (trust companies), on May 25, 1970, the President of the Senate (at Page 1140 of the Senate Journal) and on May 27, 1970, the Speaker of the House (at Page 1398 of the House Journal) appointed the members of a free conference committee (with powers of free conference); and

WHEREAS this free conference committee, consisting of Senators Zeigler, Vance Phillips, and Josephson, and Representatives Borer, Chance, and Kay, completed its work by May 28, 1970, as shown by the committee report and House adoption of it at Page 1406 of the House Journal; and

WHEREAS ever since May 28 the President of the Senate has intentionally withheld this free conference committee report from the Senate, thus preventing that body from adopting it and in effect exercising his own veto of the bill; and changed in form

WHEREAS Paragraph (1)(j) of Appendix A to the Uniform Rules of the Alaska State Legislature, setting out the duties of the presiding officer, requires him, as a ministerial function, "to receive all messages and communications and to announce them to the body;" and

WHEREAS passage of HB-857 am, as recommended by the free conference committee, is essential for the regulation of trust companies and the protection of the public;

BE IT RESOLVED that the legislature censures Senate President Brad

February 24, 1969

Representative Barry Jackson
House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Mr. Jackson:

We urge your support of the bill introduced by Rep. Bronson in the House last Friday, requiring mufflers on snowmobiles. We urge, however, that this not be confined to those used within a city's limits, but in any populated area. We live just outside the city limits of North Pole, and we think this limitation would encourage unmuffled snowmobiles to be used in an area such as ours. In truth, we feel it is fair for snowmobiles used in populated areas to be subject to the same regulations as automobiles.

Thank you for any support you can give to this bill.

Yours truly,

Joseph Seale

FORM SA-1B

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO:

Mel Personett, Commissioner
Department of Public Safety

DATE : October 24, 1969

FROM: G. Kent Edwards
Attorney General

SUBJECT: Review of Regulations

By: Robert J. Mahoney RJM
Assistant Attorney General

This office has completed the review of the proposed regulations to be adopted by your department consisting of chapters 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, and 15 of Title 13 of the Alaska Administrative Code. During the course of my review I have made notations on copies of the proposed regulations furnished to this office to indicate changes that will add to the clarity, simplicity, and consistency with other regulations. I have also recommended the deletion of a few sections or parts of sections which the Department of Public Safety is without authority to adopt or which could adequately be covered by rewording other sections in the regulations.

The copies of the regulations containing my comments have been forwarded to Captain Barkley, reviewed by him, and returned to this office. Most of the changes recommended by this office have been incorporated in the regulations to be adopted. Other recommendations were withdrawn or modified by this office following conferences with Captain Barkley. These conferences clarified the factual framework within which the regulations were to be applied and revealed difficulties that could be encountered if the recommended changes were incorporated in the regulations. Several additional changes have been made based on the recommendations of the Department of Highways.

The proposed regulations, incorporating the changes referred to above, are approved by this office as satisfying the criteria set forth in AS 44.62.060. They are in a proper form to be filed with the Secretary of State after adoption, and need not be reviewed again by this office unless substantial changes are made in the regulations following the public hearing.

DEPT. OF PUBLIC

TO: Mel J. Personett
Commissioner
Department of Public Safety

DATE : December 8, 1969

FROM: G. Kent Edwards
Attorney General

SUBJECT: Regulations -
File No. 334

By: Robert J. Mahoney RJM
Assistant Attorney General

Your memorandum of December 1, 1969, enclosing chapters 02, 04, 06, 08, 10 and 15 of 13 AAC, is hereby acknowledged.

This memorandum will confirm my conversation with Captain James Barkley on December 1, 1969, in which I advised Mr. Barkley that the regulations were in proper form for filing and that the memorandum of this office dated October 24, 1969, approving those regulations, should be filed at that time.

The listing in your memorandum of all significant changes that have been made in the regulations as finally adopted, has been noted by this office. Please be advised that Captain Barkley conferred with this office concerning each of these changes prior to the time that they were incorporated in final draft of the regulations. They have been approved as satisfying the requirements of AS 44.62.060(b).

Stevens Village Investigation

SPECIAL JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE MINUTES OF THE MEETING
APRIL 20, 1970
8:00 p.m.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Fink at 8:05 p.m. in the Masonic Temple. Present were Miller, Cornelius.

Fink gave a synopsis of proceedings so far for the benefit of Mr. Cornelius who had not been present when this problem first came up.

Friday Mr. Young brought up on the floor that he had information from the council in Stevens Village that they were not in favor of an injunction and he questioned the propriety of the suit. John Sackett felt that things were in order. Saturday Mr. Fink met with John Hedland, and went over copies of the complaints. I have copies of the papers for the litigation signed by Mr. Evans, president of the council, Mr. Smoke, Mr. Silvers, and William Pitts.

I have a resolution dated in January signed by the native villages of Minto, Rampart, Alakaket, and Bettles. (There was mention of the DNH corporation at this point.) Requests to Revoke the release from all claims for right of way.

There was complaint of the suit of the various villages and natives against Hickel. (Peterson arrived 8:08) I have copies of the complaints and affidavits Allakaket, Bettles, Rampart, Stevens Village filed against Keith Miller, Beardsley, and Kelly.

We have requested a copy of the OEO guidelines on legal services. (Metcalf arrived as a spectator at 8:09)

There is also some information from Alaska Legal Services.

Copies of this information will be made for all subcommittee members.

~~First witness:~~ Cornelius wanted to ask some questions before he had to leave. What is DNH? It is an organization consisting of natives organized by the Tanana Chiefs to take care of the contract rights of the villagers. Are they a client of the ALS? Is DNH a profit making organization? It is hoped to be. Does Legal Services ordinarily represent profit-making organizations? Yes. When this initial suit was filed, was this done after legally constituted meeting of the Stevens Village council including 30% of the people?

Fink asked him to hold his questions and ~~have~~ allow the witnesses to testify first.

First Witness: Don Young - (Miller asked whether or not the testimony should be recorded. He meant with a recording device. No arrangements to this affect had been made. The secretary will take as complete a set of notes as possible.)

I may ramble a little on this. You have heard Friday's discussion and the orientation on the floor and you have had about enough of it. At that time I was not attacking ALS. Stevens Village happens to be a village that I represent even though I don't get that many votes out of it. It is my duty as a representative to inquire into any problem in my area. This was the sole purpose of bringing it to the floor. To try to defent the village. They will be thoroughly jeopardized now and until after all the oil is gone. I am going to do something tonight that maybe I shouldn't do. I made some allegations and they were wrong. After cooling down I went through all my records and found that there were two letters written. One to Isabel Holm. This is the one I have the answer to. I offer my apology to Mr. Croft. It is basically the same letter but it is pleading the cause of the state. It wasn't in the form that they would not receive certain things. It was a representative's inquiry of those people, the same things that I requested of Isabel. Many times the people are not present so I dealt with someone who knows what is going on, and that is the postmistress. The answer to my letter will be submitted. (a). He next submitted the letter to the village council (b). This is where we have the heat of battle. I apologize to Mr. Croft. They are basically the same letter. After this occurred, I contacted a friend. I have a good personal friend, Joe Nichols, in Fairbanks, and I called him. Joe, I have a letter. Are you going into Stevens Village in the near future? Would you find out exactly what happened? I am sending a letter to Charles Evans and xk asking him to answer. The letter and the man arrived the same day. I received a letter back with an answer. The letter he sent back to me that has caused so much trouble. (c). Next letter presented was on MMM DNH. (d). When I received that letter, as a legislator, I was in a quandary as to what to do. ALS asked why I didn't come to them. I was at a loss as to what to do. I believed that these people did not know what they were doing. Anybody can sell me anything if they are smooth talkers. Same way with the xxxxxxxx. natives. I went to the only lawyer I know that represented the people in the state of Alaska. I went to the AG's office. I asked for a legal form or affadavit. I requested that they send the AG in Fairbanks, Steve Cooper, into Stevens Village to find out if the xxx natives had been consulted and if they had voted on this issue. This is what I requested. (e). The original of this has been turned over to the AG's office today and another copy has probably gone to Washington, D.C. The originals of both "e" and "f" will be provided for the subcommittee. (f). My opening statement was that I had no argument with ALS on Friday. I was trying to protect the people from Stevens Village from being abused. In doing so, I had to bring these things to light. ---remote area for a long while. I know that I can go there and receive a reverse affadavit to the one that was read on the floor today. I want to make sure that the people xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx who represent the people in the villages cover both sides of the issue. ----think they are helping the people who cannot help themselves. I will state what your purpose of a hearing is in this committee. The ALS and the committee want to see what happened before this was ever brought to light before this was ever considered. Did they truly represent the people in Stevens Village or not? Were the legal governing bodies consulted? If they were not, then the statement I made was true,then my information was true. (Miller) What is your opinion on whether the people were approached and fairly treated? I would say this. The Stevens Village people probably received more benefits-------for--approached-------as in the affadavits, this wasn't an attempt- -- they did not know that the information was going to be filed. Were they fairly treated? I don't think that they were because they were not exposed to all of the facts.

(Fink) It appears to me that we are going to xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx get contradictory xxxxxxxx affadavits. The original ones and the ones that you received. How will the committee solv this? I don't xx think we can solve this. The people of Stevens Village will have to solve this. The committee and ALS should be ------. The sad part about this is that the people in the remote areas don't really know. It is like they mentioned on the floor. Bill Carlowe. He is a native man. If they knew this would jeopardize their jobs and their situation they never would have done this. It is so easy to go in and sell something to a group of people that don't really understand. If I think they understood this-----. They referred to the ecology and the game. There is nothering I can see that mentioned the litigation. The people of Stevens Village ----. The persons that have the legal need to give both sides of the story. Don, have you been in Stevens Village since this issue arose? [illegible] affadavits? Who drew up these papers? Do you know where he got the information to draw up these affadvaits? [illegible] Did he contact the natives before he drew up the affadavits? To my knowledge, he flew into the village to inquire about the letter. You don't know the source of this information? This [illegible] is information from the council of the village.

(Cornelius) Have you ever found out whether this initial action was taken in a duly constituted meeting of the [illegible] Stevens Village Council at which time ALS would file an injunction to stop the pipeline? The council [illegible] never met on the injunction and the affadavits were sworn to. -----to hiring legal services. Were [illegible] they informed that an injunction would be [illegible] requested? Were they told of any course of action that the ALS might take? I can't answer that. They may have. ----why Isabel in her answer stated she knew nothing about this injunction. She is the postmistress. She is active in village affaris and knew nothing about it. That is what prompted me to do what I did. When the suit was originally filed, it stunned me. Even more so when the injunction was granted. This is what prompted me to right these two letters. Have you inquired about their arrival? Would it be a charter airline. Legal Services. Definitely. They went in on Saturday and are here on Monday.

(Miller) I would respect your secrecy regarding the individual. Is it a person that would know these things? The person I am referring to has access to all persons entering or leaving the village. (Cornelius) Was he ever in Stevens Village? I don't think he was. (Miller) Would you recognize signatures of Evans and the others? Yes. In the council how many votes would it take to be a majority. The chief, is he an ex-officio member? He has a vote because they have a vote in their capacity. This is a majority of the council? I had no knowledge of any of these. The action I took was ~~xx~~ not before I knew.

Second Witness: Robert Price, AG's office. At this time I would like to perhaps correct the record. I really believe that the information you are looking for is something like Mr. Young submitted. I ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ would merely like to comment on a question by Mr. Miller. Affadavits which had been brought back to Juneau and secured by Mr. Stephen Cooper, DA in Fairbanks. I discussed the ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ affadavits with him after his return from Stevens Village on the 14th. He said that he put the affadavit -------He discussed this first with the villagers as to what had happened. Same kind of factfinding that you are doing tonight. Then their own language was put in the form of a statement which they signed. That is the only statement that I have at this time. (Miller) Was any motion for discovery made? As far as we know we have not been served a summons. It was the inquiry of a legislator that ~~xxx~~ wanted to know what had happened to the people which he represented. The AG has broad powers. Merely to determine what set of facts or circumstances were ~~xx~~ true. Did the state at any time enter into amicus curiae? No. It depends upon what stage. There are three different law suits. The one in Washington, D. C. There has been a preliminary injunction against Secretary of Interior Hickel. The state is xxx in no way involved. Just an interested party. Are there any suits against the state? A complaint against Miller, Beardsley, and Kelly. This was instituted ten days ago. The state has not yet received the summons. Was your Stevens village inquiry prior to that suit being brought? Probably, We still have not been served a summons in the suit. At the time Steve when up there were you anticipating that the state was going to be sued? Yes. We had been sued but we had not been served. Yes. Through the newspapers. Was your action in contacting the village not involved with that suit? I xxxxx don't really know. I may have been. Our greatest concern was in the Washington, D. C. suit. Were the documents you received in the village used in any way in any of these actions? They have not been used. They have been transmitted to the Department of Justice. For use in that suite? For whatever use the department sees fit to make of them. Do you have any xxx idea as to what that might be? No. Do you think it would have any effect on the suit as filed? I would assume that it could have a certain weight. As is sits now, do you still have the decision that you have to file a motion of discovery? We are still only an xxxxxxx extremely interested party in all of the suits filed. We have not yet been served. It is my xxxxx knowledge that xxxxx there is not litigation until you are served with summons, especially since this is more than a week ago. You can file an answer without being served, can't you? I am not aware of this. Then in your testimony to this committee your testimony was prepared in the xxxx villagers own words and transcribed from them. It could have been recorded, but wasn't.

Third witness: Alaska Legal Services - (1) There has been a tremendous amount of unsworn statements of an unidentified third person. -----conclusion by various witnesses. That the Executive director was not in Stevens Village, Mr. Price------ That the affadavits were obtained by Mr. Cooper after talking to the villagers. (Mr. Croft) I am interested in the scope of your investigation. Inquiry so far is to determine if they have the authority to institute the suits which they did. We do not plan to submit such evidence. The reason is because this constitutes correspondence between the attorney and the client. We do not have authorization from the client to release the correspondence that we have had sent to us. We would not in the presence of the AG's office give information regarding our strategy in this case. It is unfair to expect that we would come before the committee and tell them everything that we had advised our clients. We are willing to show that we did have authority to do what was done. We obtained the authority initially. We have affadavits which are not part of the litigation but are related to the inquiry here. We will present these. I am curious as to the scope of the committee in this case. (Fink) There were no specific guidelines. Question was raised on the propriety of a profit-making corporation------. We are just trying to see what everything looks like. Judiciary Committee might have an interest. -----AG's or ALS. Give any attorney/client information is not required. I just wanted it understood that we are willing to cooperate with the committee. Our clients have the same rights and respect as other clients. It is a matter of great public interest to the state. We will certainly within our limits answer your questions. David Wolf and John Hedland are here to testify.

(Miller) As I read that authorization, I wondered how suits are brought against the state. Certainly that might be something to be inquired into. The one one interested in this is the Secretary of Interior Hickel suit. Authorization is not as broad as the action that is taken. I don't intend to be limited in any aspect. I wonder about that authority, if it has not been exceeded. John Hedland, is on the Board of Directors of Alaska Legal Services. David Wolf, Director of Litigation and supervisory attorney in Fairbanks. William H. Jacobs if present Director of ALS. John - scope of the authorization granted to Bill Jacobs and any attorney that he cared to associate with. The affect is to permit and authorize ALS to take any action including litigation directed at restraining the grant of a pipeline permit by Hickel. Then the action of the governor. Against construction of the pipeline or the road. He was going to authorize road construction by himself. Secretary of Interior notified him and requested his assistance. He then went to the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to see whether his prime action in lifting the land freeze would authorize this action. So any action TAPS took did not affect building. It is planned that the pipeline---------by the Secretary of Interior, unless a road is built. I believe that the scope of this committee is necessary. Prevent TAPS from building the pipeline across land owned and claimed by natives.

(Miller) Were you authorized and directed to take any action to release a claim granted on the pipeline system? That apparently is a contract. ----right to do anything you can to release that claim. The second goes to the Secretary of Interior regarding the right of way. The governor took another older authority. Has the provision that he can grant the right of way-----and he has taken these steps. Suits have been filed on this. The only suit filed against the state was directed at enjoining ------ federal court in Washington in the case in which we are not involved.. The Secretary of Interior has no authority to issue right of way permit for a road. He cannot issue a pipeline construction ----------there will be no answers for it.

Do you have an authorization from the Stevens Village council to sue the state. Yes, we have now. When did you obtain that? 18 of April 1970. -------6 of April. You feel that the authorization is broad enough? Yes. If that was so, why did you feel it necessary to obtain further authorization. This was when the newspaper reported that we were----------. You were given authorization on April 18 to continue the suit. I was aware of the fact that they were circulating these documents since last Tuesday. Nobody from the AG's office had been involved in obtaining them. This authorization signed by the Village Council, where is it? It is not on here. It was signed on the 30th of January. This was in the possession of ALS when they entered the village. It was the intent of ALS to ask for this authority. We had previously represented the DNH Corporation. ------about our inability to get contracts from TAPS. They though this was their right in the agreements with TAPS. DNH was the beneficiary of the arrangement between DNH and TAPS. If they intended to rescind the waivers as a means of putting pressure on TAPS that it would be necessary for the villages to execute the recision. The firm, DNH, without the ALS and obtained from them -----to rescind the waiver. One further thought I became involved in the matter.

ALS went back along with people from DNH. They would have to themselves rescind the waiver. We had forms as well as the authority from--------. When problems like this come up-------. We want evidence that we have been acting on the request of our clients. Was Stevens Village ----------. It was not intended to obtain them as a client. Yes. To solicit them as a client. We were seeking to protect the rights of the DNH Corporation. You also sought authority from the council? They had already ---- authority DNH to rescind the waivers. This is the resolution about DNH. Is ALS authority the same as any other attorney? Can you solicit clients? Yes. We have been instructed that it is our duty and our right to advise a person whose rights are being violated. This was the result of an informal complaint. We were instructed to do it and criticized because we did do it. We have concluded that it would be proper where a practice that is detrimental, even if he does not request it. We sent it to the ethical matters for the board of governors. After the ---- meeting. I talked to Skip Matthews. Merely advising the client does not mean that you go out to seek a client. Didn't you have to have the client come to you first? Yes. Supported by United States vs. Button. In this case you had prepared authorization with you when you went into the village to have them become your clients. You feel that you haven't solicited them? I don't think it is improper for any attorney to suggest that the third party become a party to the action. We represented DNH it their request. The only say to protect the interest in the contracts was for these other parties who had made a contract for the benefit of DNH to support this other action. In order to adequately represent my client, could I go out and solicit another client. Example was in a airline crash. I needed further evidence. There are three of four other survivors. Not because I wanted the additional fees but I wanted to get further evidence for my own case. I need that other client so I could adequately support my other case. I have read your complaint. The authority that you had at the time authorized you to take such action as was necessary. What did the villagers consider just compensation? The considered preferential hiring. ----and in contracts in DNH. Suit against Keith Miller has nothing to say about compensation or contracts. If you don't mention what your authority tells you to do. You are to do these things until just compensation has been made. It is our view in the action of the ----------governor would have been illegal. Is it your view or is it your people's view? I have made my own judgment on that point. Should not you have received an authorization as broad as your action? We have already received that in my opinion. You consider that a ratification? As I read the authorization, and perhaps I am wrong. This authorizes whatever action is necessary to stop taking land for the pipeline until they have been adequately compensated for this. What is the precedent of "any action"? It is limited by (practical) capability to do something for his client. Getting a release to these claims. ----limited on the right of way against Hickel. (Miller) Seems to be a very limited authority. Our action was authorized and it was the understanding that the village authority covered this. There has been a lot of talk about the time the AG went to Stevens Village to speak to our clients to get them to sign papers to drop our law suit, but they say they haven't been served so there is no litigation. (2) The position of the state at that time we have been told is that the state was planning to intervene in the Washington action against Hickel and had in fact had filed documents in support of this. -----active part in the litigation. In my mind there is no question that this action was proper.

(Wolf) I suppose it is an aside at this point. Compensation. There isn't a legal provision for the type of land you are dealing with her. There is no recognized provision where you could sue for the money involved----------is to insist through that injunction until the consent is given. That is why both suits say nothing about money. There are many provisions for just compensation. Do you have an opinion as to what compensation means? Originally in July 1969 ------- The Tanana Chiefs had a meeting and they agreed on what it meant. I don't know what they did consider proper. I have no answer. What about the subject of eminent domain? We are talking about a right of way. I am not sure that they do. ----over private land now. Villages claim this land. Title is not the same as what you and I own. It is unique from all other titled land. It is in some other form. There is no analogy.

(Five-minute recess) (Croft) I might say that I discussed what was my understanding about the question of authorization. The ---- had been my understanding and it is now that the suit originally was instituted aginst the Secretary of Interior Hickel enjoining him from issuing a permit for the pipeline. The governor shortly thereafter announced that he could issue --------permit for the right of way for the construction of a road. --------did not have to wait for the authorization from Interior to go ahead. It was the opinion of ALS that if a permit were obtained by the governor of Alaska that the governor could authorize the secretary of Interior to construct the pipeline. Since the basis of our suit had nothing to do with the ecology. (Wolf) I went to Stevens Village and other people went in at my direction. Yes, there were forms prepared ahead of time so that one would be large enough to cover everything.

Preparatory to going we were representing DNH and they had gone to the villages and obtained the resolution that I gave you. The village of Bettle signed their resolution and sent Evans to Fairbanks to sign. He came to my office. He signed that resolution in my office. By then several days later we had decided that that did not suffice in the situation. It was in my office that Bettles signed their authority. Having discussed it with the village council with no one present. After that------- I didn't go to Allakaket ----and other people-- ----did to people for DNH with the forms that we had prepared. I went to Stevens Village with Ruby. I did not go to Minto. Others did. Ruby and the lawyer who had gone to each of the other places also a law clerk. The -----each-----stage we spent three or four hours. In Evans home. All members of the council were present. I had a stack of these authorizations. And the recisions. After an hour and a half of talking--------I gave one copy to everybody. I explained all terms contained in the papers regarding any action we would be taking. I don't think I solicited these people as clients. You don't go in with an authorization saying you don't do anything. I don't think the situation was the type of situation that we had the authorization to do. Was a village meeting called where 30% of the people were present? We advertised over the radio that we would like to meet with the council. There were several other people who wanted to sign but I told them I didn't think they should sign. A village meeting calling for 30% of the people signed the agreement. We sis not ask for a village meeting. I was operating under the opinion that this was a council decision. Do you feel that the council had the authority to bind the whole village? -------TAPS when it obtained its waivers in the first place which was all right to lift the land freeze. The releases were only signed by the president. These were signed only at Fairbanks. At that particular meeting did you state what your course of action would be to stop the pipeline or that you were going to place an injunction? I told them we would issue a restraining order. The state has not funded this organization (ALS) this past year, did it? And so far the federal government hasn't? No. We had a slight amount of money which carried us a way this year. You are a public organization (ALS) a nonprofit corporation. We have contracted with the federal government to render legal services on the behalf of poor people in the State of Alaska. You have borrowed this money to continue your operation now? How big a budget do you have a month? We have the figures for 14 months. We have used approximately $490,000 in the 14-month period. We have applied for approximately $460,000 for a 12-month period. $40,000 or less per month. Where have you obtained your funds to operate? Rural CAP. Authority came for OEO out of Washington, D.C. to lend the money to ALS. That has been your sole source of support for the last two months. Have you obtained any funds for this project from any conservation groups? We have two other sources of funding: (1) Services allegedly rendered by contributions in kind, and (2) we have three foundation-type----of attorneys ---pays salary-----is paid by the foundation but we supplement their pay. We receive no contributions of any kind. Attorneys have done this without charge. Did you personally go back on the April 18 meeting? Why did they change their mind from the affadavit from what Mr. Young had? Mr. Evans gave me two documents - signed.--------5------- one from each village council member. Horace Smoke's affadavit is the most interesting. This is after the village council meeting April 19. He said he went to Evan's house-----taken from affadavit. The rest of the affadavits indicate that the letter that was signed by all village council members. Written by Allan John after Nichols came on that Saturday and had it in his possession when Bill Karlow came in on Monday. ---FNA meeting that week on Tuesday or Wednesday night stating that he was taking this letter to the DA. What happened to it, I don't know. Steve Cooper typed up a version of that letter and had everyone sign it. This was going on at the same time. -----handed out other affadavits. There was a great deal of tension when I came to the village. They felt that a village meeting ought to be held. There was one held from 4-7 p.m. on the 18th. After that meeting that Evans showed me the two documents sent by Cooper. Until that time-----that the council members told me about the affadavits. I knew Cooper had been there but I didn't know what was going on. At the same time, there were other people-- (Al Ketzler)---(He was in attendance at the committee meeting.) ----also a BIA official. ----get the air cleared was my intent. This was typed in the village. The rest of these were handwritten. This explains that there was a village meeting. There was some confusion because Evans did not show the other council member the letter that I had sent and in fact he had not opened the last one I sent. Two members were not in town at the original decision. Also the letters had not been distributed. There was some confusion as to what was going on. (Fink) I cannot understand where they sit. The one form by Evans to Young. Did Mr. Evans write this letter? Yes. (Miller) Get Don Young's permission to let someone see the documents.------whether or not these people have been misled and whether they do or do not want an injunction.

April 18 there was a meeting. There was the Chief of Minto. The three villages originally in the suit ------ that we dismissed from the suit. Was a meeting of the people of Stevans Village---------. Misconception in the press. Minto and Stevens Village are IRA villages and the law applies the same. Allakaket, Rampart, and Bettles are not IRA villages. The regulations that applies is different. Brings the same result. Judge Hart heard arguments with respect to an IRA village and decided at 3:00 that he would issue the injunction as from Stevens Village even though Minto was only a mile away. Minto was not included in the injunction. At the time the attorney asked the judge if he would like to hear about the other three villages and he said no, not at this time. I don't need to talk about the other three villages. Their claims are still alive and they are parties in the law suit. Minto's claims seems to be unclear. Because of the confusion there is no injunction from Minto. How do you reconcile the affadavits that are entirely contradictory? In one case they say yes and in the other they say no we do not want to have anything to do with this. Do the people know that they are suing or not? These affadavits are explaining how the other affadavits were obtained and when the visits were made. The villagers signed the papers to tell you to stop the law suit and they refused -------state officials at state expense that they did get such things as power plants and freezers because they were visited by the AG's office and Representati Young told them that they wouldn't get an airport. The state official Nichols in ----------He did not file a law suit because he had children. There is a great deal of troubles. People losing their jobs. There are no jobs for negroes or natives ------- this was to provide jobs projects in the villages through a state office. The very same things that the people say they want. This man goes on to -----to the village and tells them that they are going to get these things. He also told them they should drop the law suits and to be careful because of their children. -----and with the AG's attorney telling them to crop the law suit. Did someone tell them that the state would lose a lot of funds if the pipeline was stopped. Was the economic affect stated to them? The original discussion at the first meeting ------and I feel I cannot tell you about this. Do you have any objection to have members of this committee go into the village? How long have you been in the state? Two years in Alaska. Both of them. ------Earth Project or Sierra Club members, either of you? No. It is not the intent of the villages and ALS to stop the pipeline. There is no way the villages can get favorable results----was to have the pipeline. Get themselves jobs and contracts in the construction of the pipeline because their land and subsistence economy is going to be affected by the pipeline. Hasn't their action stopped all the rights? What rights to they have left now that the injunction is in effect? It is the reason that the pipeline isn't being built ------because of the Stevens Village injunction. Do you not contend that Secretary Hickel gave them authority that he would be cited for contempt of court? If this is so, you continue what is the most important to you or to Stevens Village. I said it was my judgment as to whether this could be legal authorization for the road. The value is the same for any person. If somebody is going to take your land without paying for it----- There is nothing that would match a monetary settlement. The injunction says that the secretary is enjoined from issuing right of ways ------pipelines without consent of the villagers. --- if the people wanted to give their consent. Would they have to talk to you to consent? You would have no objection to them enter-into such an agreement without your authorization? ----if I think they are making a mistake. I would give them my opinion.

(Fink) Can I ask you when you became involved with DNH? In the last couple of weeks of January 1970. I knew the people in DNH and knew about it by also being contacted about legal problems. DNH organized in 1969. It is your opinion that 9,000 Athabascan Indians---------being held in trust to have a roll call. All the people in the Tanana Chiefs. All are equally stockholders. When were the waivers signed? July 27, 1969. The following month DNH was organized. ------8 or 9 on the board and they have an executive board of three. Do they have a full time chairman? Tim Wallace. Ruby Tanzy in Secretary/Treasurer. When they felt TAPS did not cooperate they felt their agreement was being breached? DNH said we are not doing business with you. The villages ought to consider revoking your provision because we haven't lived up to their agreement. I don't know what Tim said. ------without any lawyers going out. Tim went out first. No one from ALS was present. You had nothing to do with DNH operations? I did not go out when it was signed. You did not represent the village at that time? It was subsequent to this that you ----------. Did you advise these people to go to the villages. The decision, I think, had already been made. He had sent a telegram on the 21st. ---- was sent to Hickel and oil company ----- because of the problems DNH was having with them that --------. You knew at the time of the resolution that this was being done. Yes. Question was some of the wording.

You went to the villages on the 18th and talked to these people ------ that they advised you that they would like to drop the law suit. Did they advise of the affadavits given to Don Young? They indicated some documents had been signed but did not tell me what they said. I asked them about this. Were they sticking to that story when you arrived there? The council didn't meet and make a decision one way or the other. Didn't they meet, the entire village, the time you were there? They wanted the whole thing to be -------. We did not have enough funds to stay long enough to have a village meeting. There never have been any of these problems. There was a meeting of the whole village. What did they do at that meeting? They discussed whether or not to continue the suit. Did any one speak on the opposing side? Yes. I am concerned about that part. Discussed if the records that had to do with settlement---------. This was at that time. It is not a privileged communication. The whole village is a client. I don't think it was an open meeting. ------times others were asked to leave. Larry Braaten was there and the council asked that he leave. Because it was their understanding that he was a newsman. I told that they could ask him to leave if they wanted to. You more or less directed the meeting while you were there? You gave the best legal advise to them. I told them what the choices were. You didn't seem to care what the ------. Action of a city council is that the hearings are public records. Do you not consider these council meetings as public records? I don't think so when you are involved with litigation possibility. Were there other people there other than natives? Me, Larry Braaten, and Larry's wife. Is the postmistress there a native? Are they all of the descent that they would own property in the village? -----have these rights under the 1934 Act. Yes. I think so. If you are excluding people who have rights under the IRA xxxxxxxxxx Village Act. Evans has lived in the village 10 years. He was born in Rampart. They have the rights of the villages that they are residents of. They have given affadavits xxxx two different ways. Do you consider that area privileged? I told them now that it was going to this committee and it would be public. They are privileged communications. Either in your xxxxxxx documents or in the ones Don Young presented to us? I think the one with the affadavit that I know of signed by five members of the xxx council referring to the first meeting-----/ I think that was confidential or privileged. I would be willing to consider it xxxxx if the council said, "yes". ----waived where you give a public statement. ---- joined the control of the attorney. We have three statements here on this. Do you still consider those privileged even though they xxxx have become public documents? I don't think they were free choice of the villagers. Nichols-----Frank xx Gardler-----. Three hours is how long they were there. Later-----. (Miller) You are saying due to the fact that some-----things xxxxxxxxxxxx they are not freely given. Even though they have been made public------. I think so. -----any subject that might relate to the xxxxxxx affadavit. If the affadavits were used in court-------. -----could be opening yourself up for some sort of cross examination. You got involved with the villages because you represented DNH and this was necessary for you to do the best job for DNH. The village members are stockholders and DNH was third party beneficiary. (3) W Any settlement that would come at the time ------and it would go to the villages. It was doubtful that DNH would ever profit from the law suit. We went in because of the involvment of DNH. As a result of one village coming to my office. The way things stand now the villages are the prime client in the returns from the law suit. It cannot go directly to DNH and they may decide not to give them anything. Why didn't they file against labor unions instead? Jobs seem to be emphasized. Some were actually employed while we were there. Some eventually got jobs on the ice bridge. -----merely compensation for a piece of property. This in the confusion of the press is being overlooked. What is the stake? It is a lot more than jobs. The value is greater than jobs on a pipeline or road for a year or two. Villages need water, airports, power plants, and other things. This is what they want in exchange for this property; not to be under BIA control but have some economic base for that village. That is worth a great deal more than jobs. I believe jobs is a smoke screen. It was in the paper that a member of Legal Services said that. How could you limit it to jobs? It would give them an opportunity for training and money that would not be available for just mere jobs. I was going to say that the article he was referring to-----. ----.---jobs and construction contracts------. Refusal to settle on jobs and contracts. Croft read an article to the committee from the Saturday paper. One of the reasons for DNH was to perform contractual services and not just perform manual labor. When the waivers were given by the villages were they for jobs or for contracts? Hedland read some information regarding this to the committee. Wolf read the covering resolution. -----corporations owned will receive contracts. Do not want to stop the pipeline but want to profit from it. These were drawn by Barry Jackson.

DNH----Ketzler and Mr. Sackett. There have been some allegations that the villagers are not kept informed. There are 12 affadavits signed. ---------March 22. ------included advance notice. Miller would be in favor of asking authorization for the committee to visit the village to talk to them regarding this. What would be the purpose? (Five minute recess - 10:30)

Our position that we are not at this time willing to give consent on behalf of ourselves or our client. We are not capable of making our own decision. Not without conferring with our clients. I don't think the committee has to get consent from anyone. Maybe not as attorneys but if we go over there as laymen we probably would have the right. Croft I think there is a concern on our part and we would like to investigate it further with our client. As to the committee coming into the village and investigating--nobody has suggested that the attorney for TAPS could be called in and asked any question about TAPS. There is some reluctance on our part in the behalf of our clients. (Miller) It is not to investigate attorney-client relationship but to determine the two sides of the issue that have been charged.--------because of attorney/client privilege. Why did they give Young affadavits and you affadavits? Signed by the same people.

Tanana Chiefs-------a little insight on the indians.--------dealing with the whites, attorneys, and others in authority over them. Through the years, I have been involved in the council at Tanana. (Ketzler) I have gone through this process. The whites, attorneys, agency heads, come in ; have all education; and things we don't have. Say we will give you this if you do this for us. So they do it. Without any thought to their legal rights. This is the case in Stevens Village. The people came in to Stevens Village; talked to them telling them ---------. When I ended up I would sign anything. When he went in on the 18th. ------being head of the AFN. I look at both sides of the questions. Trying to determine what the affect will be. When I went in to the meeting I tried to give them the opposition and what their legal rights were.

From this meeting the one from Minto who believes they have legal rights. They made this decision. You could lead them with your questions and get anything out of them that you want. Someone would have to know exactly what the legal rights were. ---not what they know to be right but what they think that you want to hear so you will go away. (Miller) By your comments, you think that we are going there to get support for some attorneys. I would like to ask why they signed, without the influence of anyone. Just ask the individual natives what they want. Forget what anyone has told them. (Cornelius) Their attorneys should have a right to be present so that they would know what was said at this particular meeting. I don't think the committee nee our counsel to do this. Now we are not going to tll you how-------- This is an unusual assignment for this committee. We needed to kno We can't get answers from you. Letters go to the people. (1) Will they believe that you have no interest? What is your point of view (2) Another problem you have to face. People who have never had th rights ------litigate before. Or had anyone ever considere that they had rights to this land. Hickel tried to issue permits denying they had any rights. It took a court order to stop that. ------should have hearing is a problem for people that are not used or part of extensive experience in owning property. They are i a terrible crises. Not something they have ever done before or do everyday. When a legislative committee comes in what are they afte and what to they want me to say. I think you have to recognize this fact. If this is true. If whatever they say is wha you want, you have a problem. I have made a recommendation that they had rights to this land. I would protect these rights Problem I am raising is not limited to Indians. We are representin people who have never been represented before. Especially in the big suits and the pressures are great. ------if you go in there now. I am not sure how these people will feel. These people are involved in the native land claims. They are not under pressure like this. I would like to ask one thing. ----nobody thinks that it is unusual that this committee would inquire into the attorney/client relationship. Nothing unusual?? Sending the DA to investigate between the villages and the attorneys. There is not a single member of the legislature or the AG's office that would suggest that the legislature should inquire into the delay by the TAPS------ advice given about the method of obtaining the rights of way. They don't think of talking to Humble Oil without seeing their attorney. (Cornelius) In that case-------TAPS at their own free will, while these attorneys ----------. ------bad for them. In this case how do you render services covering legal problems in the bush unless you go there? Stevens Village-------. When you go to Stevens Village --------. You should be --------. -------a need in going to see if you have a problem. ------if you went to every village.

What the (Price)/Action of the AG has been in the case. We had been consulted by a legislator about a problem which has been ------ citizens of the state. There was a question of whether or not there was adequate representation. Representative Young sent someone. (Mr. Cooper only listened to the villagers.) No suggestion of pay-offs are other details. He merely listened to their story. Then he put it down for them and they signed it.

Larry Braaten and Al Ketzler - They wanted a piece of the action. The thing that comes to mind here is that we don't understand that we ourselves hire attorneys. There isn't one person that knows how fill fill out an application and get money from Operation Mainstream. I am an official----you will have an opportunity to get some money. I think this is what is involved here. They talk to the people. They have put together a DNH Corporation and want to work together. We better cut out----------, This is that simple. What's the name of the game? Issue I am raising because I have been involved in this. -------taking jobs from natives. I worked near native villages. No natives were on the job. The only place where I say natives was on the Dewline and at Bettles. I did a survey ----I think that already TAPS has a very poor record. The state has been well aware of this. --------jobs for the pipeline. Having been a surveyor I was very much aware of this. If ----I am not sure-----every surveyor on that survey to Valdez was from some other state or not from the immediate area. I gave this ------to the other -------there were two people that were trained surveyors; several at Barrow; One at Glennallen; and 20-25 from the Fairbanks area. Not one of these people were hired. This is what is bothering a lot of us. --------Congressional office. Deals with internations unions. They will go outside and bring in labor. I think it is that the natives want to be a piece of the action.

Joe Nichols did not just visit Stevens Village. Sunday April 12 he went to Minto and went to Peter John and wanted to see all the papers on this case. It is not due to some letters to Don Young and in Stevens Village that is involved.

Is it customary for the AG to respond to a request for investigation from members of the legislature? ----adequately represented by their attorneys. I can't speak for the custom on this matter which is xxxxxxx of exceptional nature. It should be looked into. The affadavits speak for themselves. It is also xxx exceptional because TAPS is unwilling to settle. As long as this issue is open ----------. Unless the clients back out. That Judge in Washington gives the justice department-------. If at any time he believes that these villages are being unreasonable in their demands.

Wolf - Would you say that TAPS wasn't willing to settle?

Fink - DNH We need to know more about and then we will see where to go from there. We will go into DNH xxxxx tomorrow at 1:30.

Alaska Legal Services Corp. Denies Villagers' Charges

A spokesman for Alaska Legal Services Corp. has denied that the people of Stevens Village asked the organization to halt the injunction against the Trans Alaska Pipeline System (TAPS).

The denial came in response to a statement from Rep. Don Young, R-Ft. Yukon, to the state House of Representatives that the people of the village had signed affidavits swearing that they did not want the injunction and wanted the pipeline to go through.

John Hedland, director of litigation for Alaska Legal Services, said he hadn't seen a request to have the suit dropped, according to the Anchorage Daily News.

Young charged Friday that Alaska Legal Services has "maligned and misled the people of Stevens Village in the pipeline injunction suit.

The Associated Press reported that:

The corporation represented Stevens Village and several other villages in a suit seeking to prevent the 800-mile-long Trans Alaska Pipeline from crossing village property. Federal District Judge George L. Hart Jr. of Washington, D. C., issued a temporary injunction April 1 to keep the pipeline away from the village.

The $900 million pipeline, proposed to carry oil from Alaska's North Slope to the warm water port of Valdez, would have to cross some 20 miles of Stevens Village lands.

Young charged Friday that Stevens Village did not want an injunction against the pipeline and did not realize that that is what Alaska Legal Services was seeking. He said the villagers thought they simply were joining an action to force TAPS to provide better jobs for natives.

However, the Stevens Village suit is not the only one holding up the start of TAPS construction. On Monday, a U.S. District Judge in Washington granted another injunction to three conservation groups of-way permit for a road to the oil fields. This also holds up start of pipeline construction, and industry spokesmen said the move could delay oil flow for as much as a year.

A year ago, oil companies paid the state $900 million for North Slope oil leases in the greatest bidding competition in industry history. The pipeline to Valdez is to be built and owned by eight of the companies.

Young said Friday, "the people of Stevens Village did not want this injunction. They wanted jobs. What bothers me is when Legal Services in Alaska under the guise of helping the poor, takes advantage of their inability to know exactly what they're getting into."

Young produced an affidavit signed by Charles Evans, president of the Stevens Village Council, and the four other members of the council. It had been obtained by representatives of the state attorney general's office at Young's request, Young said.

In it, the council members said they opposed the injunction and that was not what we intended. We never told them they could represent us in that kind of a suit."

The affidavit continued, "we just thought they were asking us to join the effort to have natives hired by TAPS. They had us sign something. We read it but thought it was to help natives get hired."

In an accompanying statement the council members said, "We would like this case thrown out of court as soon as possible. We would like the pipeline to go through."

Young said, "I think the people of Stevens Village were honorable. I don't think they knew what they were getting into."

Young said he is requesting that a resolution be written asking the Department of Interior "to thoroughly scrutinize any further suit by the Alaska Legal Services Corporation."

Rep. Barry Jackson, D-Fairbanks, told the House, "I think allegations have been made on the legality of actions of the Alaska Legal Services Corporation. I would like the Judiciary Committee to investigate the allegations."

Jackson is committee chairman.

Rep. John Sackett, R-Galena, objected to Young's position. Sackett is a member of the board of DNH, an organization resenting 32 native villages interior Alaska, and which w ed with Alaska Legal Servi in the suit.

Sackett said, "We are holding up the pipeline in way, if the suit was dismis tomorrow, the pipeline could not go ahead."

He said DNH was created guarantee employment of tive people because "hist has shown that whenever n industry comes to the state people who were there origina remain unemployed."

He said that in seeking pi line right-of-way, TAPS h presented a letter of intent the villages saying it planned hire native labor.

Sackett continued, "Si then, the TAPS people have tri every method possible to out of their letter of intent..."

He added that he objected Young's comments that village people didn't kn what they were doing and t they were taken advantage

He said. "This displays a ternalistic attitude."

House Opens Probe Of Alaska Legal Services

JUNEAU (AP) — A House Judiciary subcommittee began an investigation Monday into charges that Alaska Legal Services Corp. misrepresented the people of Stevens Village in a pipeline injunction suit.

The hearing was prompted by accusations made in the House Friday by Rep. Donald Young, R-Fort Yukon.

The corporation represented Stevens Village and several other villages in a suit seeking to prevent the Trans Alaska Oil pipeline from crossing village property. On April 1, Federal District Judge George L. Hart Jr. of Washington, D.C., issued a temporary injunction to keep the pipeline away from the village.

Young charged Friday that Stevens Village did not want the injunction and did not realize that that was what Alaska Legal Services was seeking. He said the villagers thought they simply were joining an action to force TAPS to provide jobs for natives.

Young produced an affidavit signed by members of the Stevens Village Council in which they said they opposed the injunction.

However, in the House Monday, an affidavit by the council was produced granting the corporation the right to proceed with the suit.

Young told the subcommittee that when he first suspected the inhabitants of Stevens Village did not favor the suit, he wrote to Charles Evans, president of the council. He said Evans wrote back and said he'd like to have the suit thrown out of court.

Young continued "Then I went to the only lawyer I know that represents the people of the State of Alaska—the attorney general."

He asked the attorney general's office to obtain for him an affidavit from the council stating the council's wishes.

"It would behoove all of us to see what happened before this was brought to light by myself. Did the Alaska Legal Services really represent the people of Stevens Village or were they representing people who did not exist?" Young asked.

Subcommittee chairman Tom Fink, R-Anchorage, said, "Apparently we're going to get conflicting affidavits. How are we going to resolve this? Are these people changing their minds?

"These people didn't understand," Young replied. "It would behoove those who would represent them to present them with both sides of the information."

Testifying for the attorney general's office was Asst. Atty. Gen. Robert Price.

He said the affidavit Young presented Friday was obtained at the request of the attorney general's office by the district attorney from Fairbanks.

"He talked with the villagers to determine what happened, then put their own language into the document, which they signed," Price said.

Subcommittee member Eugene Miller, D-Fairbanks, asked Price if, before he sent someone in there, he knew the state was being sued.

Gov. Keith Miller and several other state officials have been named defendants in another pipeline suit brought by Stevens Village through Alaska

Price replied, "Yes, we had knowledge from the newspapers that a suit had been filed against the governor."

He added, however, that the state did not consider itself a defendant in a lawsuit because it had not been served with any papers.

Speaking for Alaska Legal Services was John Hedlund, the corporation's supervisor of litigation.

He said a document signed by the village council authorized Alaska Legal Services to take any action necessary to obtain desired concessions from TAPS.

Villagers to continue three suits

JUNEAU (Special)—Two attorneys for Alaska Legal Services Corp. arrived in Juneau today armed with a resolution adopted Saturday by Natives of Stevens Village saying they will continue three suits filed against the Trans Alaska Pipeline System and against federal and state officials.

The resolution states that "because of the injunction won in court, by the Native village of Stevens, many sources of pressures have been brought to bear to have the village drop the suit." The resolution was adopted unanimously by 18 members present at the meeting. The village has approximately 25 eligible voters.

John Hedland, director for litigation, and David Wolf, attorney for Legal Services, will testify at a meeting tonight of the House judiciary subcommittee formed to investigate charges made Friday that the people of Stevens Village were "misled" and may have been "stampeded" into filing suits against TAPS, Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel and a third suit filed against Gov. Keith H. Miller and two of his commissioners after he announced that the state was considering construction of the TAPS pipeline road.

The Honorable Speaker of the House
State of Alaska
State Capital
Juneau, Alaska

My dear Sir:

Enclosed are two drafts of model bills which our organization considers to be vitally necessary for effective law enforcement. One concerns electronic surveillance, the other the police authority of "stop and frisk".

Also enclosed are AELE position papers upon both subjects.

We are sending the enclosures to all state Governors, Attorneys General, Presidents of the Senate, and Speakers of the House, with the request that consideration be given to such legislation in their respective states.

To acquaint you with our organization, we are enclosing a copy of our recent newsletter in which you will find a history of AELE, its aims and objectives.

Respectfully submitted,

A MODEL STATE STATUTE ON ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

Prepared and Distributed by Americans for Effective Law Enforcement, Inc.

(A national, non-partisan, non-political, not-for-profit, tax exempt educational corporation, with headquarters at 33 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois 60602)

SECTION I

DEFINITIONS

As used in this statute

(a) "wire communication" means any communication made in whole or in part through the use of facilities for the transmission of communications by the aid of wire, cable, or other like connection between the point of origin and the point of reception furnished or operated by any person engaged as a common carrier in providing or operating such facilities for the transmission of intrastate, interstate, or foreign communications;

(b) "oral communication" means any oral communication uttered by a person exhibiting an expectation that such communication is not subject to interception under circumstances justifying such expectation;

(c) "intercept" means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical or other device;

(d) "person" means any official, employee, or agent of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof, and any individual, partnership, association, joint stock company, trust, or corporation;

(e) "investigative or law enforcement officer" means any officer of the State or political subdivision thereof, who is empowered by the law of this State to conduct investigations of or to make arrests for offenses enumerated in this statute, and any attorney authorized by law to prosecute or participate in the prosecution of such offenses;

(f) "contents" when used with respect to any wire or oral communication, includes any information concerning the identity of the parties to such communication or the existence, substance, purport, or meaning of that communication;

(g) "aggrieved person" means a person who was a party to any intercepted wire or oral communication or a person against whom the interception was directed;

(h) "state" means any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

SECTION II

APPLICATION FOR COURT ORDER TO INTERCEPT COMMUNICATIONS, BY ATTORNEY GENERAL OR PROSECUTING ATTORNEY [District Attorney, State's Attorney, etc.]

The Attorney General of this State or the Prosecuting Attorney (District Attorney, State's Attorney, etc.) of any county (district, parish, etc.) is hereby authorized to make application to a ( ) court judge in the county where the interception is to take place for an order authorizing or approving the interception of wire or oral communications, and such judge may grant in conformity with section IV of this statute an order authorizing, or approving the interception of wire or oral communications by investigative or law enforcement officers having responsibility for the investigation of the offense as to which the application is made, when such interception may provide or has provided evidence of the commission of the offense of murder, kidnapping, gambling, robbery, bribery, extortion, or dealing in narcotic drugs, marijuana or other dangerous drugs, [any other crime dangerous to life, limb, or property, and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year], or any conspiracy to commit any of the foregoing offenses.

SECTION III

AUTHORIZATION FOR DISCLOSURE AND USE OF INTERCEPTED WIRE OR ORAL COMMUNICATIONS

(a) Any investigative or law enforcement officer who, by any means authorized by this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom, may disclose such contents to another investigative or law enforcement officer to the extent that such disclosure is appropriate to the proper performance of the official duties of the officer making or receiving the disclosure.

(b) Any investigative or law enforcement officer, who by any means authorized by this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire or oral communication or evidence derived therefrom may use such contents to the extent such use is appropriate to the proper performance of his official duties.

(c) Any person who has received, by any means authorized by this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, or by a like statute of any other state, any information concerning a wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this statute may disclose the contents of that communication or such derivative evidence while giving testimony under oath or affirmation in any proceeding in any court or before any grand jury in this State, or in any court of the United States or of any state, or in any federal or state grand jury proceeding.

(d) No otherwise privileged wire or oral communication intercepted in accordance with, or in violation of, the provisions of this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, shall lose its privileged character.

(e) When an investigative or law enforcement officer, while engaged in intercepting wire or oral communications in the manner authorized, intercepts wire or oral communications relating to offenses other than those specified in the order of authorization or approval, the contents thereof, and evidence derived therefrom, may be disclosed or used as provided in subsections (a) and (b) of this section. Such contents and any evidence derived therefrom may be used under subsection (c) of this section when authorized or approved by a ( ) judge where such judge finds on subsequent application, made as soon as practicable, that the contents were otherwise intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this statute, or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code, as heretofore or hereafter amended, or by a like statute.

SECTION IV

PROCEDURE FOR INTERCEPTION OF WIRE OR ORAL COMMUNICATIONS

(a) Each application for an order authorizing or approving the interception of a wire or oral communication shall be made in writing upon oath or affirmation to a ( ) judge and shall state the applicant's authority to make such application. Each application shall include the following information:

(1) the identity of the investigative or law enforcement officer making the application, and the officer authorizing the application;

(2) a full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the applicant, to justify his belief that an order should be issued, including (a) details as to the particular offense that has been, is being, or is about to be committed, (b) a particular description of the nature and location of the facilities from which or the place where the communication is to be intercepted, (c) a particular description of the type of communications sought to be intercepted, (d) the identity of the person, if known, committing the offense and whose communications are to be intercepted;

(3) a full and complete statement as to whether or not other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous;

(4) a statement of the period of time for which the interception is required to be maintained. If the nature of the investigation is such that the authorization for interception should not automatically terminate when the described type of communication has been obtained, a particular description of facts establishing probable cause to believe that additional communications of the same type will occur thereafter;

(5) a full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual authorizing and making the application, made to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interceptions of, wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities or places specified in the application, and the action taken by the judge on each such application; and

(6) where the application is for the extension of an order, a statement setting forth the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain such results.

(b) The judge may require the applicant to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence under oath or affirmation in support of the application. Oral testimony shall be reduced to writing.

(c) Upon such application the judge may enter an ex parte order, as requested or as modified, authorizing or approving interception of wire or oral communications within the county in which the judge is sitting, if the judge determines on the basis of the facts submitted by the applicant that —

(1) there is probable cause for belief that an individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a particular offense enumerated in section II of this statute;

(2) there is probable cause for belief that particular communications concerning that offense will be obtained through such interception;

(3) normal investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous;

(b) Any investigative or law enforcement officer, who by any means authorized by this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire or oral communication or evidence derived therefrom may use such contents to the extent such use is appropriate to the proper performance of his official duties.

(c) Any person who has received, by any means authorized by this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, or by a like statute of any other state, any information concerning a wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this statute may disclose the contents of that communication or such derivative evidence while giving testimony under oath or affirmation in any proceeding in any court or before any grand jury in this State, or in any court of the United States or of any state, or in any federal or state grand jury proceeding.

(d) No otherwise privileged wire or oral communication intercepted in accordance with, or in violation of, the provisions of this statute or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code as heretofore or hereafter amended, shall lose its privileged character.

(e) When an investigative or law enforcement officer, while engaged in intercepting wire or oral communications in the manner authorized, intercepts wire or oral communications relating to offenses other than those specified in the order of authorization or approval, the contents thereof, and evidence derived therefrom, may be disclosed or used as provided in subsections (a) and (b) of this section. Such contents and any evidence derived therefrom may be used under subsection (c) of this section when authorized or approved by a ( ) judge where such judge finds on subsequent application, made as soon as practicable, that the contents were otherwise intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this statute, or Ch. 119, Title 18 of the United States code, as heretofore or hereafter amended, or by a like statute.

SECTION IV

PROCEDURE FOR INTERCEPTION OF WIRE OR ORAL COMMUNICATIONS

(a) Each application for an order authorizing or approving the interception of a wire or oral communication shall be made in writing upon oath or affirmation to a ( ) judge and shall state the applicant's authority to make such application. Each application shall include the following information:

(1) the identity of the investigative or law enforcement officer making the application, and the officer authorizing the application;

(2) a full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the applicant, to justify his belief that an order should be issued, including (a) details as to the particular offense that has been, is being, or is about to be committed, (b) a particular description of the nature and location of the facilities from which or the place where the communication is to be intercepted, (c) a particular description of the type of communications sought to be intercepted, (d) the identity of the person, if known, committing the offense and whose communications are to be intercepted;

(3) a full and complete statement as to whether or not other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous;

(4) a statement of the period of time for which the interception is required to be maintained. If the nature of the investigation is such that the authorization for interception should not automatically terminate when the described type of communication has been obtained, a particular description of facts establishing probable cause to believe that additional communications of the same type will occur thereafter;

(5) a full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual authorizing and making the application, made to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interceptions of, wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities or places specified in the application, and the action taken by the judge on each such application; and

(6) where the application is for the extension of an order, a statement setting forth the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain such results.

(b) The judge may require the applicant to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence under oath or affirmation in support of the application. Oral testimony shall be reduced to writing.

(c) Upon such application the judge may enter an ex parte order, as requested or as modified, authorizing or approving interception of wire or oral communications within the county in which the judge is sitting, if the judge determines on the basis of the facts submitted by the applicant that —

(1) there is probable cause for belief that an individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a particular offense enumerated in section II of this statute;

(2) there is probable cause for belief that particular communications concerning that offense will be obtained through such interception;

(3) normal investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous;

(b) the date of the entry and the period of authorized, approved or disapproved interception, or the denial of the application; and

(c) the fact that during the period wire or oral communications were or were not intercepted.

The judge, upon the filing of a motion, may in his discretion make available to such person or his counsel for inspection such portions of the intercepted communications, applications and orders as the judge determines to be in the interest of justice. On an ex parte showing of good cause to a ( ) judge the serving of the inventory required by this subsection may be postponed.

(i) The contents of any intercepted wire or oral communication or evidence derived therefrom shall not be received in evidence or otherwise disclosed in any trial, hearing, or other proceeding in any court of this State unless each party, not less than ten days before the trial, hearing, or proceeding, has been furnished with a copy of the court order, and accompanying application, under which the interception was authorized or approved. This ten-day period may be waived by the judge if he finds that it was not possible to furnish the party with the above information ten days before the trial, hearing, or proceeding and that the party will not be prejudiced by the delay in receiving such information.

(j) (1) Any aggrieved person in any trial, hearing, or proceeding in or before any court, department, officer, agency, regulatory body, or other authority of this State, or a political subdivision thereof, may move to suppress the contents of any intercepted wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom, on the grounds that —

(a) the communication was unlawfully intercepted;

(b) the order of authorization or approval under which it was intercepted is insufficient on its face; or

(c) the interception was not made in conformity with the order of authorization or approval.

Such motion shall be made before the trial, hearing, or proceeding unless there was no opportunity to make such motion or the person was not aware of the grounds of the motion. If the motion is granted, the contents of the intercepted wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom, shall be treated as having been obtained in violation of this statute. The judge, upon the filing of such motion by the aggrieved person, may in his discretion make available to the aggrieved person or his counsel for inspection such portions of the intercepted communication or evidence derived therefrom as the judge determines to be in the interest of justice.

(2) In addition to any other right to appeal the State shall have the right to appeal

(a) from an order granting a motion to suppress made under paragraph (1) of this subsection if the Attorney General or Prosecuting Attorney shall certify to the judge or other official granting such motion that the appeal is not taken for purposes of delay. Such appeal shall be taken within thirty days after the date the order of suppression was entered and shall be diligently prosecuted as in the case of other interlocutory appeals or under such rules as the Supreme Court [or Court of Appeals] may adopt;

(b) from an order denying an application for an order of authorization or approval, and such an appeal shall be ex parte and shall be in camera in preference to all other pending appeals in accordance with rules promulgated by the Supreme Court [or Court of Appeals].

SECTION V

REPORTS CONCERNING INTERCEPTED WIRE OR ORAL COMMUNICATIONS

In January of each year, the Attorney General of this State, and the Prosecuting Attorney of each county shall report to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts such information as is required to be filed by Title 18 U.S.C. Section 2519, as heretofore or hereafter amended. A duplicate copy of such reports shall be filed, at the same time, with the Administrative Office of the Courts of this State.

SECTION VI

SEVERABILITY

If any portion or subsection of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other sections or applications of the Act which can be given effect without the invalid section or application, and to this end the provisions of this Act are declared to be severable.

Note

This model statute is limited to provisions enabling prosecuting attorneys to obtain authorization or approval for electronic surveillance, and to provisions regulating the admission of evidence thereby obtained. Its coverage has been kept within the bounds of the June 19, 1968 federal electronic surveillance statute.

Criminal penalties for violations of this model state statute were omitted because (a) the federal statutory penalties probably pre-empt the states from enforcing their own; and (b) the draftsmen of this model state statute thought it advisable to leave to federal authorities the matter of violation of electronic surveillance prohibitions, in order to achieve uniformity of application and construction.

These various considerations also account for the fact that the model state statute is patterned very closely after the federal one.

ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

of

Americans for Effective Law Enforcement, Inc.

(A national, non-partisan, non-political, not-for-profit, tax exempt educational corporation, with headquarters at 33 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, 60602)

The spoken word is more important to criminals than it is to the rest of us. They value it far more than the written word, for a piece of writing carries the risk of tangible evidence of guilt.

Spoken words are also indispensable to the commission of certain crimes: extortion, solicitation of bribery, and syndicated gambling.

There are two basic ways in which evidence of a conversation may be obtained and used in court. The first is to have someone testify as to what he heard. The second is to record the conversation word for word.

Testimony by a witness as to what he heard is subject to all the frailities of human nature, from misunderstanding to forgetfulness. It is also subject to attack as a false accusation.

Of far greater dependability is an electronic recording of a conversation. Instead of the testimony of one witness against another as to what was said, a recording can supply the judge and jury with the conversation itself. Moreover, the recording not only furnishes an accurate account of what occurred; it may also be a source of subsequent identification of the speakers themselves, by means of "voice print" comparisons with the recorded voices of suspected persons.

Today's law enforcement officers need the legal authorization to record the conversations of criminals and others who are reasonably suspected of serious crimes, and particularly organized crime. Gambling, extortion, bribery and intimidation are all working tools in the arsenal of organized crime that can be successfully fought with electronic surveillance.

AELE does not advocate, and indeed it opposes, the indiscriminate or uncontrolled or unsupervised use of electronic surveillance by law enforcement officers or agencies. It is also unalterably opposed to any electronic surveillance by private individuals or corporations. The latter ought to be completely prohibited and violations severely punished, and law enforcement usage should be allowed only upon court approval and supervision. Moreover, any unauthorized electronic surveillance by law enforcement personnel should be punishable as a criminal offense.

Congress has granted electronic surveillance authority to federal law enforcement officers and agencies, but upon strict limitations, the primary one being prior court authorization. The state legislatures must do likewise with regard to state and local law enforcement needs and efforts.

In accordance with these principles, AELE has prepared and submitted to all of the state legislatures a model electronic surveillance bill. Such legislation is vitally needed for effective state and local law enforcement.

The AELE bill measures up, in our opinion, to the constitutional requirements delineated by the Supreme Court of the United States.

"STOP AND FRISK"

of
Americans for Effective Law Enforcement, Inc.

(A national, non-partisan, non-political, not-for-profit, tax exempt educational corporation, with headquarters at 33 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, 60602)

On June 10, 1968 the Supreme Court of the United States, in Terry v. Ohio (and two companion cases), declared that the police practice of "stop and frisk", when properly used, was constitutionally permissible. In other words, it does not constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. This is the conclusion Americans for Effective Law Enforcement had urged upon the Court in the amicus curiae ("friend of the court") brief which it had filed in that case.

Legislation in conformity with the Terry case decision is needed in all of the states in order to avoid the uncertainty of a case-by-case adjudication of the powers of the police and the rights of the citizens. Accordingly, AELE has prepared and is distributing to governors, attorneys general, and legislative leaders throughout the country a model "stop and frisk" bill for their consideration.

An appreciation of the need for "stop and frisk" legislation and a proper understanding of the nature of the practice requires answers to the following questions: What is a "stop and frisk"? How does it differ from an arrest and search? When may it be employed by the police? What is the risk of police abuse?

The Meaning of "Stop and Frisk"

The following hypothetical case discloses the meaning of "stop and frisk":

Two police officers are on a routine beat patrol at 3:00 A.M. in a residential neighborhood. It is dark and the streets are deserted. As the police car proceeds down an alley, the figure of a man is seen. He steps to the side, behind a telephone pole. The police car speeds up, and when the officers arrive at the scene they find a man dressed in dark non-descript clothing, standing next to a garage. For all the police know at that moment, he might be a householder who owns the garage—or he may be a recently paroled burglar; he may live next door—or he may live miles away; he may be able to give a good explanation for being there—or he may be prepared to tell a demonstrably false story.

In our hypothetical case three things are clear: (a) the actions of the man are suspicious; but (b) there is no probable cause to arrest him for the commission of a crime, and yet (c) the police ought to do something. The question is, what should they do? What can they do? Are they forced to choose between doing nothing, proceeding on their way, or falsely arresting the suspect for a "crime".

If the officers do nothing, a burglar, robber or rapist might be left in the alley to proceed with his plan unhindered. If the officers make an arrest, the arrestee may turn out to be an innocent resident of the neighborhood, who will thereafter have a police record. Moreover, even if developments subsequent to an actual arrest establish that the suspect was in fact plotting a crime, or had committed one unknown at the time of his arrest, a gun or other evidence obtained from him may be excluded from usage in court because of an arrest made without the constitutional requirement of "probable cause".

Because of these various difficulties, proper police investigative technique demands the employment of another procedure—a middle ground approach—one between police inaction and illegal action. What is needed is the employment of an authorized "stop and frisk" procedure. In this hypothetical case, for instance, the police officers would stop their car, alight from the vehicle and ask the suspect such questions as "Who are you?", "What are you doing in the alley?", "May we see some identification?". The officers must also have the right to frisk the suspicious person if they reasonably think that he may be armed with a dangerous weapon.

Necessarily, the right to ask the questions includes the power to temporarily detain the suspect, even against his will, for a brief time. Since a suspect could defeat the whole purpose of stop and frisk simply by walking away from the inquiring police, under "stop and frisk" authorization he will not be privileged to do so.

Since even a brief detention is a "seizure" of the person within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution, it must be "reasonable", that is, based upon some identifiable and objective standard of suspicion of criminal behavior. It cannot be based upon an officer's whim, caprice, prejudice or inarticulated "hunch".

Suppose that the suspect in our hypothetical case refuses to answer questions asked by the police. He cannot, after all, be compelled to do so, and he may take advantage of his Fifth Amendment right to say nothing. What then? Does this destroy the value of the "stop and frisk" power? The answer is a sure "no", because a quick investigation of the surrounding area may provide enough evidence to give the police probable cause to arrest him for a criminal offense. For example, suppose that in shining their flashlights on the door of the garage next to which the suspect was found the police find fresh "jimmy" marks. They would then have probable cause to arrest the suspect for attempted burglary. If, upon searching him after the arrest, they find a jimmy, or screwdriver that matches the marks on the door, another burglar may well be on his way to the penitentiary.

Even when the police are forced to release the suspect because of his refusal to answer questions or because no evidence of an attempted crime is found at the scene, the very act of temporary detention and questioning may deter, at least for that night, a potential criminal act of violence. That, in itself, would be a worthwhile result, since the duty of the police is not only to apprehend persons who have already committed criminal acts, but also to prevent crimes from occurring in the first place.

Moreover, in many instances a person stopped under circumstances such as the one involved in our hypothetical case will respond to the questions asked by the police; and his answers may supply the necessary information either to dispel the police suspicion or else escalate the suspicion into probable cause for an arrest.

"Stop and frisk" may be used in a number of fact situations: for instance, a teenage boy walking from car to car and apparently testing the windows or looking in for keys left in ignition locks; the person who furtively and repeatedly looks into the window of a business establishment about to close; the man who has been trailing two teenage girls for several blocks. The possibilities are numerous.

The Objections to "Stop and Frisk"

The charge has been made by some persons that "stop and frisk" is a tactic for the repression of minority groups; that it is a racist practice designed to keep the ghetto resident "in his place"; and that it is a tactic to show the teenage gang member, the addict, and the prostitute who "rules the turf" on the officer's patrol beat.

As with all other professions or occupations, there are some policemen who do not deserve the honor of a police badge and the privilege of carrying a gun—just as there are misfit doctors, unethical and incompetent lawyers, and corrupt public officials. On occasions some police, in all parts of the country, have used the power of their office to engage in various kinds of illegal and coercive practices. But that fact does not warrant the withholding of needed authorization to those police officers who do conform to proper standards, and who must have such authorization for the protection of the public and also for their own safety.

The Answer

The basic answer to the concern over possible police abuse of the power of "stop and frisk", as well as of all the other powers the police possess, is the development of better procedures for the selection of police applicants, so as to reject the psychological misfits, the ones whose past conduct evidences a lack of the required integrity, and those whose social values are incompatible with the role of protector of all members of our society.

Adequate compensation must be provided in order to attract applicants with the required qualifications, and to retain in office those who are selected.

Proper internal supervision will also be needed, along with meaningful sanctions for the police who misuse the powers of their office.

Commissioner of Public Safety Room 103
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Commissioner Personnett:

The House Judiciary Committee has considered the amended regulations submitted by you to the committee on March 6, 1969.

With the following changes, the regulations as proposed in this amended version meet with the approval of the committee.

The changes are as follows:

25.210: Do not abbreviate NCIC.

25.220: After "REQUIRED INFORMATION", add "(a)". Change the period after "follows" in the same sentence to a colon. Delete second sentence, and place it after (14) as subsection "(b)".

25.220 (9): Delete the word "your" in second line and use some other language.

25.220 (10): Do not abbreviate M.O.

25.220 (14): Change this subsection to subsection (15). Add new subsection (14) to read: "Ultimate disposition of each proceeding, such as dropping of charges, dismissing a case or finding of "not guilty'".

25.250 (b): Change "department shall" to "department will".

25.250 (c): Change "deems" to "considers".

25.250 (d): Change "shall" to "may". (this does not change a mandatory statement to a permissive one.)

25.260: Change reference to "section 210" to "section 220".

25.260: Before "officers of the United States", insert, "law enforcement."

25.260: After the last word, delete the period and add, "for the purpose of the detection of crime and the detection of criminals."

25.290 (6): Add the term "probation officers" and delete paragraph (12) entirely since it is a duplication.

25.290 (8): After the word, "investigators," add, "of the state or a local fire department."

The committee is concerned with preserving the intent of AS 09.25.120 (2) and AS 47.10.090, and requests that the provisions of these regulations be consistent with those statutes.

If any additional information is needed concerning these changes, please contact Arthur Peterson.

Sincerely,

Barry Jackson

REF: The Department of Public Safety's regulations requiring local departments to supply the Department with certain information.

Dear Mr. Cornelius:

I have reviewed at length the proposed regulations as proposed by Commissioner Mel Personett for Legislative Action requiring information from various Departments to set up a central records depository.

Speaking as Chief of Police of the City of Sitka and the President of Alaska Peace Officers Association, I wholeheartedly endorse this concept. Alaska law enforcement has long been hindered by the lack of a central depository for Records and Identification. It has, likewise, been hindered by various Departments of the State using various and sometimes, inadequate reporting proceedures. I, therefore, feel it is imperative that if we as a state are to progress toward professional police and to enable us to be adequately prepared to receive and utilize this Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Crime Information Center, we must take this step in the right direction.

My only concern is, as a municipal Chief of Police, the cost factor. In as much as if this were to become effective immediately it would catch various Departments, including Sitka, in the middle of a fiscal year without funds to meet demands for personnel and equipment that these regulations would require. However, it is my understanding that these regulations would become effective over a period of time, perhaps three years, and the cost of the reporting forms, if necessary, would be born by the State. With this understanding, I wholeheartedly endorse your proposed rules and regulations.

Very truly yours,

Paul Mullenix

Sir:

I have been informed by Don Berry that you have been appointed to study the Department of Public Safety regulations.

We have had some correspondence with Commissioner Personett on this matter. I am enclosing a copy of my letter to the Commissioner, and his answer to me.

As explained in our letter, we are not trying to "shoot down" his program. Since it does contain some objectionable items, we believe that these regulations should not be allowed to become law, at least until after the Chiefs Association meeting in June. The Association has not had an opportunity to act as a group. We believe that several of the regulations usurp the powers of Municipal Chiefs and in effect makes the Commissioner of Public Safety a commissioner of municipal departments.

We also believe that, since these regulations will affect our budgets, the League of Alaska Cities should have the opportunity to review them and make their recommendations before they become law.

We, therefore, respectfully request that these regulations not be allowed to become law during this session of the legislature.

Very truly yours,

Dear Chief Miller:

I have received your letter regarding criminal and identification records and the proposed regulations to implement the procedure. (Chapter 107, SLA 1968)

We are well aware of the budgetary problems that would be involved if an early compliance date were suggested. We are, however, bound by the language of the statute: ". . . regulations proposed by the department shall be submitted to the presiding officer of each house on the day the house convenes." Delay until June would, therefore, be impossible.

However, budgetary and implementing problems (both yours and ours) have been taken into consideration. These problems have been discussed at both previous Chiefs gatherings and in comments received on this and previous proposed regulations. For this reason, it is planned that implementation should be on a step by step basis with full implementation several years away.

As an example, we feel that we should furnish most, if not all, of the necessary forms, etc., and that a system of retrieval and dissemination of the information must be available. It would seem extremely doubtful if this would happen overnight.

Chief, I know that you as a professional peace officer agree on the need for a statewide centralized criminal justice information system. You can rest assured that this Department will do nothing to make it impossible for all agencies to take part. I would hope that not only at the June meeting, but continuously, we are able to discuss its progress and suggest changes to make it a more valuable tool.

Re: Your File #334

Dear Commissioner:

In your letter of November 12, 1968, you ask for comments concerning your proposed rules and regulations regarding Criminal and Identification records.

This program is of such magnitude that it would affect the budgets of, at least, the smaller departments. It would require the addition of personnel, additional copies of our present forms, and in some cases, new forms. Since most of us work on a calendar year budget and our budgets have already been presented, it would be impossible to add these items for 1969.

Also, I believe that proposed changes and additions of this magnitude should be presented to the Chiefs Association for their consideration before it is presented to the Legislature.

In view of the above, it is requested that you do not present this to the Legislature until after the next Chiefs meeting, which will be held in June.

I have talked to Chief Mullenix of Sitka and Chief Rhines of Kodiak. They both agree with the above approach and have authorized me to speak for them in this matter.

Yours very truly,

House Judiciary Committee
Sixth State Legislature

DATE : March 4, 1969

FROM: Commissioner Mel J. Personett
Department of Public Safety

SUBJECT: Requested Information
Our File #151 - 1969

The following is submitted in answer to the February 26 request of your committee.

#1. "Stop & Frisk" -- Law or regulation?

As previously stated, I feel that departmental regulation and policy should satisfactorily solve any problem that may arise.

In reviewing "Terry vs Ohio", U. S. Supreme Court, we find that permissive legislation is not necessary since Ohio had no such law.

Departmental regulations which we are drafting follow, to a great extent, the New York State law and the New York State Police regulations.

I would propose that these regulations be used for one year by this Department before a final choice of statute vs regulation is made.

Attached is the first draft of those departmental regulations.

#2. Retirement Plan for State Troopers.

Although at the present time most of the thinking seems to lean toward something comparable to the Anchorage Police Department plan, I personally feel that other state and city plans and fiscal problems should be researched thoroughly prior to any final decision. I would not suggest that legislation be introduced prior to this study.

#3. Priority Needs of Law Enforcement in Alaska (not limited to State Troopers).

A. Improved and expanded training capabilities.

B. Centralized information, and the ability to gather, store and retrieve it instantaneously. This includes, of course, communications.

C. Specialized or technical groups for certain types of investigations. This includes criminal evidence lab capabilities, either by contract, state-owned, or a combination of both.

D. Modern equipment.

CHAPTER 320

STOP & FRISK

Sec. 320.010 Introduction

A. Alaska laws do not include provisions authorizing the arrest of persons on the so-called "Open Charge" or "Suspicious Person" as is allowed in some other jurisdictions. Such laws were intended to provide the police with a means of holding a person, while at the same time conducting an investigative inquiry into the circumstances which reasonably brought that person under suspicion.

These laws, in their application, have generally been ruled unconstitutional; however, the courts have at the same time recognized the need for the police to inquire into a person's actions under certain circumstances, and the very practical need for the police to be able to protect themselves from bodily harm at the hands of the person stopped.

Toward this end, court decisions indicate that whenever possible the court will uphold the officer's right to approach, interrogate and conduct a street search of a suspicious person, and that such action does not conflict with the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure. (People vs Rivera, 14 NY 2d. 441; People vs McErlean, 38 Misc. 2d 634; People vs Russo, 38 Misc. 2d 957; People vs Peters, 18 NY 2d 238; United States vs Vita, 294 F. 2d 524; Rios vs United States, 364 US 253; People vs Marendi, 213 NY 600; People vs Entrialgo, 19 App. Div. 2d 509; Sup. Ct., Terry vs Ohio 6-10-68).

B. State Troopers will continue to stop and question a person, for a reasonable time, whom they observe in public under suspicious circumstances or who is acting in a manner which reasonably makes that person suspect.

They will also search that person for dangerous weapons, if the member reasonably suspects he is in danger of life or limb.

C. The limiting guidelines within which a member may conduct a "stop and frisk" are as follows:

1. The person is abroad in a public place; and

2. The member reasonably suspects the person:

   (a) Is committing; or
   (b) Has committed; or
   (c) Is about to commit a crime.

The member may demand the person's name, address, and proof of same, and an explanation of his actions, and, if he reasonably suspects he is in danger, he may conduct a search of that person within the following guidelines:

1. The member may take weapons or anything, the possession of which may constitute an offense, and keep them until he completes the questioning of the person, and then:

   (a) Return them if they were possessed lawfully; or
   (b) If not, he must arrest the person.

D. For purpose of interpretation of the various phrases and wording applicable to "stop and frisk", members shall be guided by the following:

2. "Reasonable" suspicion or suspect is less than would be required to constitute grounds for arrest. When facts and circumstances existing at the time make it not unreasonable for an alert member to suspect a person, he may stop the person and interrogate him in detail as to his actions. Such things as the hour, the neighborhood, the actions of the person, items he might be carrying which are out of place, actual resemblance to wanted person, clothing matching description of wanted suspect, etc.

3. "Reasonable" belief of danger to the member must be based upon facts and circumstances existing at the time which do not make the search unreasonable. Such things as the neighborhood, absence or presence of assistance, time of day, apparent character of the person, person's actions, crime for which person is suspect, etc. will be considered.

4. "Reasonable time" during which a person may be stopped and questioned should generally not extend beyond fifteen minutes without substantial justification for delay.

E. Members must keep in mind that a "stop and frisk" situation is not an "in custody" situation, and does not constitute an arrest. However, the person may be temporarily detained, even against his will, for a brief time, even though he need not answer questions. This can include returning to the near scene of the suspected crime or a survey of the surrounding area for evidence of the crime suspected.

In view of the fact that the "stop and frisk" does not constitute an arrest, members may not conduct a search of the person or his belongings merely for evidence of a crime, but by the same token, the "Miranda" warning is not required, even though the provisions of the fifth amendment do apply.

GRAND JURY SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT TO
THE SESSION COMMENCING MAY 18, 1970

Upon formal request and by virtue of information coming to the attention of this Grand Jury, an inquiry was made into the activities of the Alaska State Troopers. As a result of our investigation and the evidence presented to us, we find that the rumors concerning criminal activities of the State Troopers committed by either individuals or in concert, are vicious, irresponsible, and malicious attacks without merit or foundation of any kind. We have found in connection with this investigation that the case load of the investigators of our law enforcement agencies is appalling. That under the existing circumstances, the ratio of criminal acts to available law enforcement personnel is such as prohibits detection of the perpetrator, proper investigation, and punishment of offenders, encouraging criminal activities in the Third Judicial District of this State. Throughout the week we have heard many witnesses, and there were many people not heard who requested to be heard. Because of their number, a spokesman for the group was requested and did appear before the Grand Jury. Because of the nature of their request and the explanation of their spokesman as to the general content of their testimony, the Grand Jury determined that the subject thought to be related to the Grand Jury was outside the scope of its investigation.

The Grand Jury was honored by the appearances of the Honorable James M. Fitzgerald, Presiding Judge of the Superior Court, the Honorable Eben H. Lewis, the Honorable C. J. Occhipinti, the Honorable Ralph E. Moody, Judges of the Superior Court, and the Honorable Paul B. Jones, Presiding Judge of the District Court in and for the Third Judicial District, State of Alaska. We express our appreciation for their explanation concerning this Grand Jury's supplemental report of May 1, 1970. In connection therewith, the Grand Jury compliments those judges and the court system in this judicial district for the application of philosophical ideals applied to sentencing. We believe, however, that those concepts adopted by the court are many years ahead of the physical facilities now available to make such sentencing practice practical and functional. We note the extreme case load of the parole and probation officers is such as to make their efforts and assistance in the rehabilitation processes practically ineffectual. The physical detention facilities are extremely inadequate and therefore do not lend themselves to the separation of those persons convicted of crime in any manner which would allow any effective rehabilitation practices to be effected during confinement. It is with unanimous consent that we urge the courts to adopt a more stringent sentencing practice looking to the protection of the public and giving effect to the constitutional guarantee of our citizenry that they indeed be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects.

We would further recommend a more substantial bail be required on persons charged with the commission of crime and more particularly on those who have demonstrated, by prior offenses, their danger to persons and property in the community and their unwillingness to comply with the laws of the community. We appreciate the difficult problems in the administration of justice and readily recognize that sentencing and bail is a matter of which the minds of reasonable men regularly differ, and that those persons charged with the most serious responsibility of sentencing their fellow man to incarceration for a term of years is not and has not been a matter taken lightly by the judiciary of this judicial district. While we accord these judges our highest respect, we believe that the sentence and bail practice adopted by them should conform to the needs and demands of our community in these times. We have given serious consideration to the impediments to the administration of justice as well as administration of the courts by the statute allowing disqualification of judges. It is our belief that the preemption of judges, not being subject to question, is seriously abused. We conclude that the statute is invoked not for those purposes contemplated by the statute but rather to disqualify a judge whose sentencing practice differs from that believed to be in their clients best interest. We seriously urge the amendment of this statute to allow opposing counsel to challenge the good faith of the disqualification and require its use in conformance with the statutory purpose. The Grand Jury has found that the general public is not well informed as to the convictions of criminals or the punishment meted out by our courts for criminal acts. This, we believe, results in a lack of trust and loss of faith in law enforcement as well as the administration of justice. We strongly recommend that the news media adopt a reporting practice that will provide the public with a complete and accurate reflection of sentence and punishment by the court without selecting particular cases of interest. Such reporting practice will be an added contribution by the news media to public service which, we feel, will have a strong, deterrent effect on further crime.

Dear Mr. Edwards:

On May 6, 1970, you spoke with me about the propriety of our submission to the Judiciary Committee of a memorandum giving our views as to the legality of state construction of the TAPS road. This memo was submitted at the request of the Judiciary Committee and fully disclosed the fact that we represented persons with partisan views on the matter. You suggested that this was improper because of pending litigation involving the same issues. Mr. Price of your office also contacted Mr. Regan in the same vein. So as to clear up any possible misunderstanding, I would like to refer you to the appropriate provisions in the Code of Professional Responsibility and Canons of Judiciary Ethics of the American Bar Association, effective January 1, 1970.

DR 7-107 (G) and (4) of the Code provides as follows:

> (G) A lawyer or law firm associated with a civil action shall not during its investigation or litigation make or participate in making an extrajudicial statement, other than a quotation from or reference to public records, that a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication and that relates to . . .
> > (4) [h]is opinion as to the merits of the claims or defenses of a party, except as required by law or administrative rule.

DR 7-107 (I) provides as follows:

> (I) The foregoing provisions of DR 7-107 do not preclude a lawyer from replying to charges of misconduct publicly made against him or from participating in the proceedings of legislative, administrative, or other investigative bodies.

Under the circumstances, I think you will agree that our actions were not calculated to prejudice the impartiality of the pending litigation, and are plainly proper under ethical standards.

Re: Divorce Fees and Vital Statistics

Dear Pete:

Would you please give this letter to the proper Committee of your Association.

No doubt you, like other attorneys, have had to contend with Statute No. 18.50.280, which requires the plaintiff in a divorce case to furnish the court with a lot of confidential information on a blank form. Frankly, some of my clients feel they should not have to furnish this information because it is confidential and not absolutely necessary for the granting of a decree of divorce. I usually end up having to fill out the forms myself, and this takes a lot of time.

We still adhere to the $300.00 minimum for an uncontested divorce, which I feel is too low in view of having to furnish this additional paper work for the Bureau of Vital Statistics. I very frankly feel that we should not have to do free work for the Bureau of Vital Statistics and I think this is an imposition upon the lawyers as well as the clients.

I am, therefore, suggesting as an individual attorney that we increase our fees accordingly or that proper action be taken to repeal this law which I think imposes upon attorneys and may be very questionable from the standpoint of its constitutionality.

COPY

In other words, I question that there is any reasonable relationship between the exercising of this police power (if so it may be called) and the furnishing of this confidential information.

Very truly yours,

Johnston Jeffries

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 1

The reasons and need for this resolution are set out in the "whereas" clauses. The committee amendment would add the words "for a full day's service" in the last line. This amendment is to suggest that the court's rule dealing with jurors' fees be flexible enough to allow for various situations but without creating an undue administrative burden for the courts. The maximum fee would be $35 per day. Some factors to consider in determining a person's fee are the amount of time spent as a member of a panel or in reporting to the court and the fact that such service for any portion of a day may make it impossible for the person to pursue his regular livelihood that day.

FREE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

FCCS SCS CSHJR 11

The need for and the reasoning behind this resolution are set out at page 427 of the 1969 House Journal. In its amendment of Art. IV, Sec. 2 of the Alaska Constitution, the free conference committee substitute makes clear that a justice serving as chief justice may not succeed himself in that office although he may again serve as chief justice after one or more intervening terms. It is understood that when a "vacancy" occurs in the office of chief justice this is not a vacancy to be filled by the governor under Art. IV, Sec. 5, but simply a situation that requires the remaining justices to again select one of their number to serve as chief justice; the man selected begins a new three-year term and does not serve only the remaining portion of his predecessor's term. In this situation the governor will follow the normal procedure to appoint a new justice, leaving the selection of the chief justice to the members of the court.

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
House of Representatives
Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Chairman Jackson:

You have asked that I comment on House Joint Resolution No. 11 which proposes amendments to the Alaska Constitution making the office of Chairman of the Alaska Judicial Council elective among the members of the Council and rotating the office of chief justice among the justices annually.

In my opinion these amendments would not be in the public interest. The Alaska Court System is a unified court system patterned after that of New Jersey which was in turn created after the pattern developed by the American Bar Association to be the ideal court system for a state of the United States.

The main concept of the unified court system is that all of the courts of the state are tied together as an administrative unit under the supervision of the supreme court which is given rule-making power and headed by a permanent chief justice. The unified court system eliminates the traditional inefficient court pattern where each layer of courts from the justices of peace up through the district court judges, superior court judges, as well as the supreme court operates as an independent entity. In fact, each of the judges, being elected, is totally independent of any central administrative or budget control. The unified court system not only ties all of the courts together administratively, it places them under one budget and under one set of rules promulgated by the supreme court.

Before going further let me make it clear that objection is not based on a desire on my part to retain the office of Chief Justice or the chairmanship of the Alaska Judicial Council permanently. I will have reached retirement age by June of next year and it has for some time been my intention to retire at that time. This would be before the proposed constitutional amendment would have been voted on at the next general election in 1970, even if it were approved by this legislature.

My real concern is to see that the modern constitutional provisions that are a substantial part of the reason why the Alaska Court System has in a period of ten years become one of the most modern and advanced court systems in the United States are not destroyed.

First, consider the proposal that would remove the Chief Justice as permanent chairman of the Alaska Judicial Council and make the chairmanship elective among the members of the Council. The Council is composed of three members appointed by the Alaska Bar Association and three lay members appointed by the governor and approved by the legislature. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who by the constitution is also made the head administrator of the court system, is the permanent chairman.

If the chairmanship of the Council is made elective there seems to be little doubt but that in most years the chairmanship would go to a lawyer member of the Council. With a membership of three out of seven, including the chairmanship, the Council would be weighted and oriented to the Bar. The objection to this is that the Judicial Council was intended to be judicially oriented. This can be best accomplished by having a judge as chairman. In the event a lay member was elected he would be considerably handicapped in attempting to discharge the duties of that constitutional office in view of his unfamiliarity with the administrative problems of the Alaska Court System, not to mention the other intr cate problems connected with the evaluation of a court system d recommending studies and changes to improve its efficiency. .th only one judge on the Council it is not likely that he woul. see much service as the elected chairman.

The constitutionally stated purpose of the Judicial Council is to sponsor studies designed to lead to the improvement of the administration of justice by the courts. The reason the constitution makes the permanent head administrator of the court system the permanent chairman of the Judicial Council is because he is the person best suited because of his intimate knowledge of the court system to advise the Council as to the needs of the courts.

My experience as chairman of the Alaska Judicial Council for the past ten years convinces me that the balance in the membership of the Council is too delicate. It has been my observation that with respect to questions which affect the members of the Bar the three attorney members of the Council will generally vote as a block. This is understandable since the main sphere of their interest is the common welfare of the members of the association which appointed them. It has also been my observation that the three lay members are not committed to a point of view or school of thought and try to approach each problem with the objective intent of doing what is in the best public interest. The seventh member of the Council, the Chief Justice, under the theory of the constitutional article, is supposed to act as the swing vote. However, the fine balance of the Council is immediately upset if a lay member of the Council is absent from any given meeting, or, for that matter, if a law member is absent from any given meeting.

In my opinion the membership of the Alaska Judicial Council should be broadened along the lines of the membership of similar councils in other states. For example, the Judicial Council of California has 21 members. Fifteen are judges, four are lawyers and two are legislators. The Judicial Council of Washington has 17 members. Thirteen are judges and laymen and four are lawyers. The Judicial Conference of New York has 15 members, most of whom are judges. The Chief Justice is the permanent chairman in each state.

I think the Alaska Judicial Council should include three judges instead of one. Three legislators should be added and the lay membership increased to six. Since it is supposed to be a judicial council, there is every reason why, in addition to the Chief Justice, there should be a judicial member representing the superior and the district courts. In order to create and maintain a better understanding of the functions of the Council by the legislature, legislators should also serve on the Judicial Council as they do in most other states. I am proposing such expansion at this time.

The most important duty of the Alaska Judicial Council is the selection and nomination of candidates for judicial office to the governor. There is nothing technical about the selection of candidates for judicial office. The education and experience of every applicant is established by the known facts of his life. The applicant's integrity, character and reputation in the community, as well as his reputation as a practitioner, are matters that are well known to everyone in the community or can be determined with small effort. It is not necessary that the selection and nomination of judicial candidates be confined to a body which is entirely dominated by judges and lawyers.

The Missouri Plan of judicial selection has now been adopted by the states of New Jersey, Kansas, California, Iowa, Illinois, North Carolina, Colorado and Nebraska. Many other states are attempting to amend their constitutions to adopt this plan. Under the plan state bar associations have always, and understandably, been given representation on the nominating body. For example, in California thereare 4 lawyers of 21 members and in Washington 4 lawyers of 17 members. In no state has the Bar been given as many as 3 out of 7 seats, not to mention the chairmanship which is invariably retained in the Chief Justice. Alaska should make a change but it should be in a direction opposite from that proposed by House Joint Resolution No. 11.

With respect to rotating the office of Chief Justice, as has been mentioned, Alaska has adopted the unified plan for its court system. Under the present functioning of the judicial article the Alaska Judicial Council selects the nominees for the office of Chief Justice. Since he is to be the head administrator of the courts the Council is naturally charged with the responsibility of nominating only those candidates for judicial office who not only have judicial ability but also have administrative ability to the end that they could perform both important functions. Many candidates for judicial position on the Supreme Court with excellent qualifications to be a justice of that court are nevertheless not particularly qualified to be head administrator of the court system. In fact, many have no interest in any part of the function of the Supreme Court except the traditional duty of hearing and deciding cases and writing opinions expressing the views of the court.

To be concerned with the annual budget, with the problems connected with justifying the budget to the finance committees and the legislature, with the overall efficient administration of all the layers of the court system including keeping calendars current, requiring that all of the judges of the courts comply with all of the rules of administration in connection with their day to day operations is not a task that would appeal to every person who might otherwise be qualified to be a justice of the court. It was with this in mind that the American Bar Association recommended the concept of the permanent head administrator of the court system, who was to be the chief justice, who was to be a man selected for his dual abilities and on the basis that he desired to be the permanent head administrator of the court system.

The proposed constitutional amendment would make it mandatory that the office of Chief Justice be rotated among the five justices of the supreme court of Alaska annually. Under such a provision a justice of the court would have no choice but to become Chief Justice for a period of one year when his turn came under the rotation plan. He may be interested in performing the administrative duties of the Chief Justice or he may not be. Upon assuming the duties of that office under the rotation system he would be required to spend a major part of his time for his first year in office learning all the details of administration with which he had not been concerned prior thereto. He would always be administering a budget which he had no part in preparing. It would not be possible for the judge to carry his regular judicial duties as well as spend the time required in order to familiarize himself with his new administrative duties before his term of office as Chief Justice would have expired. The next Chief Justice would then assume office under the same circumstances and would again be administering a budget with which he had absolutely no part in the preparation. No Chief Justice under these circumstances would be in a position to obtain a good perspective of the administrative problems of the Alaska Court System in time to effect any needed improvement, not to mention the planning of any overall improvement program.

Under a rotation plan there would be no continuity of policy and more important, there would be no continuity of responsibility. There would undoubtedly be a tendency by some to put off the tough administrative decisions since the term of office is short. The Administrative Director of Courts cannot make the tough decisions which affect judges and highly classified employees. The authority of the office of Chief Justice as well as his affirmative backing is necessary. The Chief Justice is made the head administrator by the constitution, not the Administrative Director. If the budget is administered in a given year to a deficit, it is the Chief Justice who is responsible to the legislature, not the Administrative Director. Furthermore, administrative directors come and go. Alaska has had four since statehood. All have resigned to accept better positions. It requires a minimum of one year for a new Administrative Director to become familiar enough with the system to assume the full responsibility of the office in every area of its responsibility.

While, as has been mentioned, many of the justices of the Supreme Court may have no particular interest in assuming the administrative duties of Chief Justice, nevertheless it is not likely that any justice would decline to assume those duties in view of the honor and prestige the position can reflect.

It has been said that the practice of rotating the office of chief justice has been quite successful in the state of Washington and in other states. The fact is that the state of Washington does not have a unified court system. The supreme court of that state does not have supervisory control of all of the other courts of the state and does not have the constitutional rule-making power. That court does not budget for the entire court system and has no direct responsibility for example, for the efficient operation of the superior courts or the justice courts of that state. In short, the state of Washington does not have a unified court system although at least two members of that court have mentioned to me on occasion that it would be extremely desirable from their point of view if the state of Washington did have the unified court system.

The unified court system, with respect to administration has been adopted in whole or in part in the states of New Jersey, Kansas, California, Iowa, Illinois, North Carolina and New York. The office of chief justice is not rotated in any of these states. In fact, the office of chief justice is not rotated in 30 states. In 20 states the office is either elective by the voters, elective by the court, or rotated by court rule. In less than 5 states is rotation required by statute or constitution.

The chief justice is not, as is sometimes alleged, the administrative ruler of the court system. He can only act through rules of administration which are promulgated by the supreme court as a body.

It is my view that amending the Alaska Constitution to make the office of Chairman of the Judicial Council elective among the members of the Council and providing that the office of Chief Justice be rotated annually among the members of the Supreme Court would strike at the very heart of the concept upon which the unified court system is based.

Sincerely yours,

The Honorable Jalmar M. Kerttula
Speaker of the House
Alaska House of Representatives

Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Speaker Kerttula:

In a recent communication from me to the Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee expressing my views on the merits of pending House Joint Resolution No. 11, I pointed out in some detail, why, in my opinion, that resolution is not in the public interest. The resolution proposes that the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court be rotated annually among the justices of the Supreme Court; that the Chief Justice be removed as permanent chairman of the Alaska Judicial Council and that the chairman be elected annually by the members of the council.

Without repeating the detail contained in my letter to the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee as to why House Joint Resolution No. 11 should not be adopted, I will only reiterate that if the present proposed constitutional amendment is effected the chairmanship of the Alaska Judicial Council would, in most years, go to a law member of the Council. The objection to this is that the Judicial Council was intended to be judicially oriented. This can be best accomplished by having a judge as chairman. In the event a lay member was elected he would be considerably handicapped in attempting to discharge the duties of that constitutional office in view of his unfamiliarity with the administrative problems of the Alaska Court System, not to mention the other intricate problems connected with the evaluation of a court system and recommending studies and changes to improve its efficiency.

I have served as Chairman of the Alaska Judicial Council for approximately ten years. Based on this experience it is my opinion that the present membership of the Council is too finely balanced.

The constitution provides that the Council be composed of three attorney members appointed by the Alaska Bar Association; three non-attorney members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature. The seventh member is the Chief Justice.

It has been my observation that with respect to questions which affect the members of the Bar the three attorney members of the Council will generally vote as a block. This is understandable since the main sphere of their interest is the common welfare of the members of the association which appointed them. It has also been my observation that the three lay members are not committed to a point of view or school of thought and try to approach each problem with the objective intent of doing what is in the best public interest. The seventh member of the Council, the Chief Justice, under the theory of the constitutional article, is supposed to act as the swing vote. However, the fine balance of the Council is immediately upset if a lay member of the Council is absent from any given meeting, or, for that matter, if a law member is absent from any given meeting.

In my opinion the membership of the Alaska Judicial Council should be broadened along the lines of the membership of similar councils in other states. For example, the Judicial Council of California has 21 members. Fifteen are judges, four are lawyers and two are legislators. The Judicial Council of Washington has 17 members. Thirteen are judges and laymen and four are lawyers. The Judicial Conference of New York has 15 members, most of whom are judges. The Chief Justice is the permanent chairman in each state.

The most important duty of the Alaska Judicial Council is the selection and nomination of candidates for judicial office to the governor. There is nothing technical about the selection of candidates for judicial office. The education and experience of every applicant is established by the known facts of his life. The applicant's integrity, character and reputation in the community, as well as his reputation as a practitioner, are matters that are well known to everyone in the community or can be determined with small effort. It is not necessary that the selection and nomination of judicial candidates be confined to a body which is entirely dominated by judges and lawyers.

It is my recommendation therefore, that the membership of the Alaska Judicial Council be broadened and that instead of three non-attorney members there be six non-attorney members and that there be included in the membership three members of the legislature who are not lawyers or retired judges and that the judicial membership be increased from one to three. This would create a Council of 15 members which is more in line with the type membership which exists in other states.

It is recommended that the following resolution be approved by this session of the legislature:

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

Sec. 8 of Art. IV of the Constitution of the State of Alaska is amended to read:

Section 8. The judicial council shall consist of fifteen (SEVEN) members. Three attorney members shall be appointed for six-year terms by the governing body of the organized state bar. Six (THREE) non-attorney members shall be appointed for six-year terms by the governor subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. Three members of the legislature who are not lawyers or retired judges shall be selected for year terms by the legislature. One superior court judge and one district judge shall be appointed for six-year terms by the chief justice. Vacancies shall be filled for the unexpired term in like manner. The appointment of lay members shall be made with due consideration to area representation and without regard to political affiliation. The chief justice of the supreme court shall be ex-officio the fifteenth (SEVENTH) member and chairman of the judicial council. No member of the judicial council, except the chief justice, the superior court judge, the district judge, and the members of the legislature, may hold any other office or position of profit under the United States or the state. The judicial council shall act by concurrence of eight or more members and according to rules which it adopts.

It had been my intention to propose the above amendment to the next Constitutional Convention. However, since House Joint Resolution No. 11 has come before this session of the legislature I have decided to act before the next Constitutional Convention.

Therefore, in the utmost sincerity, and believing it to be in the best interests of the State of Alaska, I ask that this resolution be introduced and approved by this session of the legislature.

Sincerely yours,

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska

DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND GAME

TO: Honorable Eugene Miller
House of Representatives
State Capitol, Juneau

FILE NO:

DATE : April 5, 1969

FROM: Wallace H. Noerenberg WHN
Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Fisheries

SUBJECT: HJR ~~13~~ 15

In response to your request of yesterday for specific information on Continental Shelf problems, and Alaska's specific involvement, I regret that I have not had time to do a thorough research job. Documentation of the precise volume and value of all fisheries of the Alaskan Shelf areas has only recently been attempted.

I will briefly summarize the latest estimates of the key species which are found on Alaska's Coastal and Shelf areas: (Alaska has 65% or 550,000 square miles of the Nation's Shelf areas -- giving us a very special interest in obtaining exclusive use!)

1. Halibut. 1967 catch 58 million pounds; resource is presently thoroughly utilized by U. S., Canadian and Japanese fishermen; a drop in catch to less than 50 million pounds in 1968 reflects losses due to incidental catches by U. S. S. R., Japanese and South Korean trawlers on other fisheries.

2. Salmon. 263 million pounds caught in 1968; about 500 million pounds available if runs rehabilitated; presently all taken inside territorial waters by U. S. fishermen except for about 15 million pounds of Alaskan stocks intercepted by Japanese in Central and Northern Bering Sea and Aleutians. Massive movement of most of this resource into high seas zones, Shelf and beyond during ocean life means Alaska's principal fishery resource would be susceptible to destruction by foreign fleets if treaty arrangements failed.

3. Sablefish or black cod. Average present catch 1 million pounds per year in Alaska, Japanese presently catching many times this amount (12 thousand metric tons or 26 million pounds in 1968) off Alaska. This valuable resource estimated at 60 million pounds potential annual catch. Distributed all along Alaska's Shelf area and in places to great depths beyond.

4. Pacific Ocean perch. No Alaskan catch at present by Alaskans; 300 million pound catch by Japan in 1968; USSR catch not known; estimated annual yield of resource nearly 1 billion pounds if managed properly. Distributed at edge of Shelf from Ketchikan to tip of Aleutians.

5. Herring and other fish suitable for industrial use (meal production). Only a few million pounds of herring presently caught by Alaskans; annual production of all Alaskan areas might reach 1 billion pounds if fully utilized. Japan caught 23,000 metric tons in the Bering Sea alone in 1968. Other ground and flatfish, i.e., yellow fin sole, rock sole, turbot, flathead sole, are very abundant, especially in the Bering Sea. Estimated annual catch could reach 1.5 billion pounds; the codfish group adds another 500 million annual potential at least. Japan managed a catch of 1.4 billion pounds of Alaska pollock in the Bering Sea in 1968 -- mostly caught by fish sausage fleets just off the Shelf north of Unimak Island.

6. The various shellfish potentials are also impressive:

   a. King crab. 1966-68 U.S. catches have ranged from 80 to 167 million pounds; with Bering Sea stock added, sustained yield should be over 125 million pounds per year.

   b. Dungeness crab. 1966-68 U.S. catches in Alaska of 8-12.5 million pounds. New grounds off Peninsula are just being developed. Annual production may reach 25-30 million pounds.

   c. Tanner crab. About 3 million pounds taken in 1968 by Alaskans in first attempt. USSR and Japan caught over 30 million crab incidentally in eastern Bering Sea king crab tangle nets in 1968. Sustained yield for Alaska Shelfs estimated to be nearly 200 million pounds.

   d. Shrimp. Biggest potential of any shellfish -- e.g., about 400 million pounds annually. Present U.S. catch in Alaska 35-45 million pounds annually; Japan 29 million pounds in 1968; USSR probably more than Japan?

   e. Scallops. 1.8 million pounds of meats (equivalent of 20 million pounds of live scallops) landed in Alaska in 1968 -- was 15 percent of U.S. total production. Look for 10 million pounds in 1969 (fleet tripling, 1st full season). Potential yield not established but probably at least 15 million pounds of meats annually.

f) Clams. Health problems (potential poisoning) have temporarily stopped industry except for bait. Potential yield from several species is about 50 million pounds if means can be found to clear beaches (testing) for operations.

Gene, this hopefully gives you some examples to work with. The fisheries, if fully developed, would be worth many times the $219 million wholesale value of 1968. Extension of the contiguous fishing zone beyond 12 miles -- to at least the edge of the Continental Shelf -- would certainly assist U. S. development which at present is stymied not only by price and market problems (70% imports consumed by U. S. public) but by shear competition of foreign fleets for fishing space adjacent to our coasts. Many of the stocks mentioned -- i.e., Pacific Ocean perch, yellow fin flounder, Bering Sea halibut -- are in serious biological condition due to too much foreign fishing.

I also enclose copies of three Continental Shelf conventions developed in Geneva in 1958 and gradually being adopted by ratification by various nations.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 51

This resolution proposes to amend the Alaska Constitution so that no one can be deprived of his right to vote because he is unable to read or speak the English language. At the constitutional convention, the opinion which evidently prevailed was that "regardless of whether they are intelligent or informed, the very nature of the mechanics by which we set up our means of voting, which is by the written word, they must be able to read what that word is."

However, with today's transportation facilities and communications media, all Alaskans can be well informed as to the candidates, the issues, and the mechanics of voting, although the language may vary from one community to another. Communication need not be in English to be effective; justice decries such arrogance. And with today's understanding of the requirements of the United States Constitution, there is serious question as to the validity of our state provision which, on the basis of ability to read or speak English, deprives citizens of the right to vote even though that language is not the language of their community.

RE VOTING REQUIREMENT OF READING OR SPEAKING ENGLISH

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE ALASKA CONSTITUTION

Replace Article V, paragraph 1, sentence 3 which reads:

"He shall be able to read or speak the English language as prescribed by law, unless prevented by physical disability." with

"Any person who speaks a language which is spoken in common in the community in which he was born, raised or lives shall not be required to read or speak the English language as a requirement to vote in any national, state, or local election."

Replace A.S. 15.05.010(5) which requires a voter be able to speak or read English, with

"Any person who speaks a language which is spoken in common in the community in which he was born, raised or lives shall not be required to read or speak the English language in order to vote in any national, state or local election."

Repeal A.S. 15.15.200, Sents. 3 & 4 which reads:

"If an election judge is doubtful as to the ability of the person to speak the English language, a satisfactory showing is made with the person briefly conversing with the election judge by the use of simple English words. If an election judge is doubtful as to whether there is a physical disability preventing the speaking or reading of the English language, a satisfactory showing is made by a written statement by a licensed physician that a person is so disabled."

RE VOTING REQUIREMENT OF READING OR SPEAKING ENGLISH

In the alternative, change the constitution and statute to read

"No person born in the United States or its territories shall be required to read or speak English as a requirement to vote in any national, state or local election. ~~Other persons~~ (Those not born in U.S. territories) shall be able to speak the language which is spoken in common in the community in which they live."

The requirement that a voter be able to read or speak English is unconstitutional because it was intended as a means for determining who was an informed voter, but when applied to communities in which another language is spoken in common, it lacks any rational connection to that purpose and it causes these natives who satisfy that purpose to be discriminated against.

Requiring that all voters speak English goes beyond assuring that the voters are informed. It disqualifies natives that become informed through communication in another language.

The criteria for being informed is not whether you can speak English but whether you can speak the language that is commonly spoken around you.

The notion that information is only communicated in English is based on our own background of having everyone around us speak in English. We could communicate and thereby be informed, not because we could speak English but because we would speak the language everyone else was speaking. This helps to explain how a native could be informed even though he could not speak English. This is because he is in a different situation. For him to be informed, he must be able to communicate in the language which

February 13th, 1969

RE: VOTING REQUIREMENT OF READING OR SPEAKING ENGLISH

All criteria for measuring must relate to what they are measuring.

The rational between speaking English and being informed only applies to those people who cannot speak English and who are in English speaking communities. There is no reason for requiring a native speak English when he can become informed, and, thus, satisfy the purpose of the statute, by speaking the common native language of his community.

Without a rational connection between the requirement and the purpose, the requirement is invalid and unconstitutional if it denies someone his constitutional right.

The English requirement does not accomplish what it was intended to accomplish but does discriminate against informed voters, just the opposite of what was intended. The English requirement is an ineffective test of who is informed because information is not only communicated in English but in any language that is spoken in common in the community. Therefore the better test would be whether a voter can speak the language that is spoken where he lives.) The English requirement makes sense in a state where English is spoken in common throughout the state. But the rational connection between being informed and speaking English does not exist in a state like Alaska where there are whole communities in rural sections of the state which speak another language in common. This language is not only native to Alaska but is the language of the natives of this land.

RE VOTING REQUIREMENT OF READING OR SPEAKING ENGLISH

When a requirement does not fulfill the purpose for which it was intended, it is susceptible to being used for purposes for which it was not intended. Because the terms of the requirement are broad, they leave a broad area of discretion in the election officer, and a broad area for abuse of that discretion. The problem is it is difficult to measure who is qualified to vote in a state where people become informed through different native languages. Any attempt to say who is informed falls either on its face as being too restrictive or, if the terms are broad enough, it falls for granting the election official too much discretion.

The only voting requirement which would have a rational connection to its purpose would be that a voter understand a language. This would be too difficult to apply without multilingual election officers in every village. Therefore, no speaking or reading requirement is better than one which cannot be applied and leans itself to discriminatory application. Our experience with the English requirement is that it is used to discriminate against people the election officer doesn't like.

Cases have held that where too much discretion is placed in the election officer's hands, the law is unconstitutional.

Louisiana's requirement that a voter be able to understand and interpret the Constitution was declared unconstitutional in Louisiana v. United States, 380 U.S. 145, 13 L. Ed 709 (1965), because it bore no relationship to a reasonable voting requirement as it was administered and because it made the registrar the sole judge without setting standards for him to decide if a person was qualified to vote. The Court said the state constitution vest discretion in the registrars of voters to determine the qualifications of applicants for registration while imposing no definite and objective standards upon registrars of voters for the administration of the interpretation test. The Court found that Louisiana provides no effective method whereby arbitrary and capricious action by registrars of voters may be prevented or recressed. 380 U.S. 152-153.

Mississippi required the voter to demonstrate his ability to interpret and understand the state constitution. The court in United States v. Mississippi, 380 U.S. 128 (1965) held that a statute, fair on its face, vested uncontrolled discretion in the county registrars in selecting the provisions to be interpreted and was therefore unconstitutional.

The Court in Davis v. Schnell, 93 L. Ed 1093, (195_) held that a statute that required a voter to be able to understand and explain the Constitution was unconstitutional because it vested too great a discretion in the registrar. The Court said the statute became a device in which the registrar could discriminate.

Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966) held that the state must apply voting requirements in a non-discriminatory fashion. State of South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 US. 301 (1966) held that whenever a voting requirement which appears fair on its face is used in a discriminatory manner to disenfranchise potential voters, the particular use of the voting requirement can no longer be constitutionally tolerated.

With United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966) holding that discrimination by an individual as well as by a state is prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment, the two Katzenbach cases can be applied to discrimination by an individual.

The Katzenbach decisions did not have to resort to Constitutional law because the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 USC 1973b(e)(2)) covered the situations. However, the cases do show the Supreme Court is willing to consider discrimination in practice as well as discrimination on the face of a statute.

Besides cases that held literacy tests to be discriminatory in their application, Justices Douglas and Fortas have said that such English reading requirements are unconstitutional on their face. Cardona v. Power, 384 U.S. 672 (1966). The majority did not decide if such a requirement was a denial of equal protection, but remanded the case to the state court to decide. 384 U.S. 674.

The United States Constitution does not require a voter speak English. The only places literacy tests have been upheld are in states in which English is the only native language to that state. What may be a reasonable measurement of who a qualified voter is in one state may not be a reasonable measurement in another state.

Because the English speaking requirement does not measure what it was intended to measure, that is who is informed, it becomes an inadequate measurement of the use of the election officer's discretion. Without an adequate standard to check the election officer's decisions of who is qualified to vote, the officer is left with an opportunity to apply his own standards and discriminate against whomever he wishes.

These then are the two reasons the Alaska requirement that all voters be able to read or speak English is a denial of equal protection. It does not measure who is an informed voter, nor is it an adequate standard on which to measure the election officer's decisions on who is informed to vote.

Because no reason exists for the classification of English-speaking people in villages which communicate in another native language in common, the classification of English-speaking people is discriminatory.

Last November, pre-registration of voters became law. Now for the first time we have an alternative method for determining who is an informed voter. The informed voter will have to know about the pre-registration requirement. This is an added reason why we do not need a second safeguard, such as the English requirement, to determine who is an informed voter, especially when this English requirement has the harmful side effect of disenfranchising informed native Alaskans who were here before Alaska ever became a state.

Arguments for bi-cameralism:

The original reasons for dividing the legislature into two houses, basdd upon class or religion, has completely disappeared. For a time, one house represented the people, and the other represented geographical areas. With the "one man, one vote" decision of the Supreme Court, this reason has evaporated. Both houses now represent the same people.

It is sometimes argued that the two houses are a part of our system of "checks and balances". This is an incorrect application of the term. "Checks and balances" is properly used to apply to the three branches of the government, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. It does not apply within one branch. It is sometimes argued that x bi-cameralism protects against error by providing a double check on legislation. In actual practice, however, legislation often receives casual condideration in one house because "if there is anything wrong the other house will catch it." One conscientious, careful, deliberate consideration should be enough, as it is in our city councils and borough assemblies.

Arguments for Unicameralism:

The primary job of the legislature is to legislate. Obviously a one house system avoids unnecessary duplication of effort, reduces expenses, and promotes legislative efficiency.

A one house legislative system wquarely fixes responsibliiy, and avoids passing the buck. It enables the voters to accurately and fairly assess the conduct of the representatives, and to reward the good legislators and punish the bad.

In order to resolve differences between the two houses of a bi-cameral legislature, it has been necessary to devise the conference committee system. The conference committee is undemocratic and eases the work of the lobbyist. Of course with a one house legislature the conference committee disappears.

In this century the role of the state legislature with respect to the executive has been stedily diminished. The "strong executive" concept, and the calibre of work performed by the average state legislature, have combined to reduce many legislative bodies to the proverbial "rubberstamp" position. With a strong one house legislature, this trend may be reversed.

Details of the resolution:

CSHJR 63 would vest the legislative power of the state in a single house of 61 members, elected for four year terms, one half each two years.

To ensure deliberation, no final vote on a bill could be taken until the 6th dax legislative day after introduction, and after appearing on a public calendar for at least one day. 47 xxxxxx or more members could shorten the period of time.

With the passage of this resolution and its approval by the people in the general election of 1970, Alaska would be the first state to join Mebraska in a unicameral legislature. England, and eitht of the provinces of Canda, Finland, and the Phillipppine Islands, have had a single house legislature.

Report on H.J.R. 63:

This resolution seeks to amend the state constitution to abolish our bicameral system and establish a legislature consisting of a single house.

The bicameral legislature is a product of history and ingrained custom. The historical reason, distinction of class, has long since disappeared, leaving the 2nd house ~~hanging~~ perched on our political system like a wart on the nose of progress.

Historical Background:

Early legislative bodies were assemblies called by the monarch to ratify his orders, usually to collect more taxes. As these bodies became representative and assumed some genuine legislative functions, they gradually turned into groups representing various social interests. Thus an early four-part Parliament consisted of four houses, representing the clergy, nobility, cities, and people. England evolved the House of Commons and the House of Lords. Such was the historical background at the time of the American revolution.

Subject: Electoral Reform --
The Federal System Plan

Dear Mr. Speaker:

As you know, the subject of electoral reform has received a considerable amount of attention in the 91st Congress. The House has passed a direct election resolution, and Senator Bayh's S. J. Res.1, which would establish essentially the same system, is now before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

While it is difficult to deny the essential rightness of the one-man, one-vote concept embodied in the direct election plan, it has seemed to many in the Senate that this principle requires a more stable institutional framework than a nationwide direct election would provide.

We have therefore introduced a modified direct election formula. Our "Federal System Plan" would work, very briefly, as follows:

1. A President would be elected if he (1) won a plurality of the national vote and (2) won either pluralities in more than 50% of the States and D. C., or pluralities in states with 50% of the voters in the election.

2. If no candidate qualified, the election would go to an Electoral College where the states would be represented as they are today, and each candidate would automatically receive the Electoral votes of the States he won.

3. In the unlikely event that no candidate received a majority of the Electoral votes, the Electoral votes of states which went for third-party candidates would be divided between the two leading national candidates in proportion to their share of the popular votes in those states.

We see several advantages in the Federal System Plan:

.It would give far greater weight to the one-man, one-vote principle than does our present system.

.It would help legitimate presidents by compelling them to show widespread support throughout the country, rather than just winning big in a few areas.

.It would avoid the uncertainties and horsetrading of a runoff.

.It would discourage the formation of ideological splinter parties, and encourage continued compromise within a broadly-based two-party system.

We are enclosing a portion of the Congressional Record containing the text of our amendment and a more complete explanation of it.

Since the Judiciary Committee does not at this time plan to hold further hearings before it reports a bill to the floor, we would doubly appreciate having your comments on our proposal so that we may share them with our colleagues before this matter reaches the floor.

Sincerely,

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 91st CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 116 WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1970 No. 33

Senate

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 181—INTRODUCTION OF A JOINT PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION PROCESS REFORM

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, one of the most urgent challenges before the 91st Congress is to reform the presidential election process.

During the 1968 election, doubts that had accumulated over the years about the adequacy of the electoral college were transformed into very real fears—fears that a President might be elected who had not received a plurality of votes, fears of a deal for votes within the electoral college, fears of an election thrown into the House of Representatives.

Of all the legislative work before us now, none is of greater importance than finding a new and better electoral process which will measure up to the intent of our democratic Constitution and at the same time give new stability and durability to our governmental institutions.

Under the leadership of the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana, (Mr. BAYH), this Congress has responded to the demonstrated need and growing demand for electoral reform. On September 18, 1969, the House of Representatives took the historic step of approving a constitutional amendment to abolish the electoral college and replace it with the direct election of the President. Hearings have been held before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on that amendment and the Judiciary Committee will soon begin its own consideration of the best method of changing the presidential election process.

Of the four major alternatives that have been advanced in the Congress—the district plan, the proportional plan, the automatic electoral college plan, and the direct election plan—the latter has seemed to me to be preferable. It is the only option which respects the principle of popular sovereignty and adheres to the general proposition that the President of the people should be the choice of those people. Therefore I have cosponsored and supported Senate Joint Resolution 1—the direct-election plan introduced by Senator BAYH in this body and enacted in substance by the House of Representatives.

In recent months, however, a number of troubling problems have been raised about possible consequences of the proposed direct election plan—questions that I believe cannot be ignored.

First, under the direct election plan it would be possible that a candidate could be elected President who lacked a broad base of support throughout the country. For example, in a multiparty race, the victorious candidate could receive 40.1 percent of the popular vote without being the popular choice of the voters in any State. Or a candidate in a two-way race could lose the contest in most of the 50 States and the District of Columbia by a close margin and yet be elected President by piling up a substantial margin in only one or two States.

Would either of these results be any more acceptable to the American public than the election, under our present system, of a candidate who had won in the electoral college but had lost the popular vote? I doubt it. In my judgment, a President of the United States who hopes to govern effectively must be able to demonstrate not only that he has a plurality in the popular vote, but also that he has widespread support throughout the entire country.

Second, the runoff which is a necessary ingredient of the direct-election plan would, I believe, lead inevitably to the proliferation of political parties. These parties would not necessarily be national or even regional parties. They would probably be ideological parties formed around a particular issue or based on a "personality cult" centered on a particular individual. And if these parties were formed it does not require much imagination to foresee the kind of bargaining for endorsements, withdrawals and votes that could occur, both prior to a close election and between an election and a runoff.

Why should people not "vote their conscience" in a first election when the system will probably permit them a later opportunity to vote for a so-called compromise choice? Why should blacks, or farmers, or doctors, or conservationists, or feminists bother to compromise within the two-party context when their most direct route to influence would appear to be through running candidates who can toss presidential elections into a runoff situation?

I, for one, am concerned about these possibilities. In my judgment, the well-being of this country would suffer if its presidential elections were marked by a multitude of splinter parties, each appealing for votes on particular questions. Our political system would become factionalized, with numerous groups taking uncompromising stands and rejecting the realistic compromises which are so essential in a democratic society. At a time when the tendencies toward political fragmentation and ideological division are all too evident in this country, we must view with the gravest concern any change in our electoral processes that may aid and accelerate these tendencies.

Third, the direct-election plan raises awesome problems relating to vote recounts and the possibility that fraud committed in isolated precincts throughout the United States might taint an entire national election.

Let us remember that there are over 150,000 polling places in the United States. In 1960, the miscounting of a single vote in less than half of these polling places could have altered the entire election outcome. In 1968, a change of less than two votes in every polling place would have changed the outcome. Are we prepared to deal with an electoral system in which local decisions as to the counting of certain incorrectly marked ballots may be the crucial factor in determining whether a particular candidate has attained 39.9 percent of the popular vote or 40.1 percent of the popular vote? And are we ready to adopt a presidential election system in which the actual outcome may not be known for weeks or even months, even in the absence of a runoff?

Today, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), I wish to introduce an alternative proposal in the form of a new joint resolution.

Our proposal, which we call the "federal system plan," has been developed by a Washington attorney, Mr. Myron Curzan, in conjunction with my staff. It has been reviewed and approved by several constitutional law scholars who view it as a substantial improvement over the proposed direct-election plan.

The federal system plan embodies the essential rightness of the one-man, one-vote principle, but modifies the direct-election plan in an effort to eliminate some of its dangers.

It provides that the popular vote winner will be declared President so long as there is also a showing that his victory is based upon widespread national support.

It eliminates the need for a runoff, thereby removing the paralyzing effect which third parties may have under the present system and could have under the proposed direct election plan.

It insures that the results of a presidential election will be known as soon as the count is completed, with no period of uncertainty and no opportunity for the kind of horse-trading that is possible either under the present system or under the direct election plan.

The federal system plan would operate as follows:

First. A candidate who had won a plurality of the total popular vote would be declared President if he had also won either a plurality in States—including the District of Columbia—which contain more than 50 percent of all voters participating in the election, or a plurality in more than 50 percent of the States—including the District of Columbia. We call this second initial qualification the "50 percent rule."

Second. If the popular vote winner failed to satisfy one or the other of the 50 percent rule requirements, then the President would be selected on the basis of electoral votes. The presidential candidate with the most popular votes in a particular State would be automatically awarded the State's electoral vote, which would equal the number of Senators and Representatives to which that State is entitled in the Congress. The District of Columbia would be treated as if it had three congressional votes. A candidate with a majority of electoral votes would win.

Third. If no candidate received a majority of the electoral votes, the federal system plan would then eliminate all but the two national candidates with the most electoral votes and redistribute the electoral votes of the others. The electoral votes won by third party candidates would be awarded on a State-by-State basis to the two national candidates in proportion to their relative share of the popular vote in the respective States. The candidate receiving a majority of the electoral votes following this redistribution would be elected President.

In this proposal, we have attempted better to mesh two of the concepts upon which our governmental structure is based—the concepts of popular sovereignty and federalism.

In my judgment, this proposal adds an essential ingredient lacking in a simple nationwide popular victory—a legitimating factor. It provides the means for insuring that any popular vote winner will have the backing of the people of both large and small States and of States distributed throughout the country. No man would be able to attain the Presidency by merely winning an overwhelming popular vote in one or two States, or in a particular region. Rather, he would have to show that his support is sufficiently broad to give him a true mandate to be the Chief Executive of the entire Nation.

Aside from providing this legitimating factor, the federal system plan should have a number of other salutary effects:

It should, I believe, reinforce and strengthen the two-party system. For under its provisions, the objective of each of the major parties would not only be to win the national popular vote, but also to win in each State. In addition, the power of third parties to affect the outcome of an election, and hence their appeal to the electorate, would be substantially reduced.

The significance of swing States would be retained and minority groups within those States would continue to have power to affect the result of a presidential race within the two-party framework.

The federal system plan would permit recount and fraud problems to be contained and dealt with on the State level.

The possibility of qualifying by winning States with 50 percent of the votes would be a new and powerful incentive to get out the vote.

Mr. President, I am aware that the proposal I am introducing today on behalf of myself and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) comes late in the debate on electoral reform. I am also aware that it is a complex proposal and one that must be subjected to close scrutiny. I believe, however, that it is essential that it be given the most serious consideration. The step we are about to take in electoral reform is a momentous one, and it should not be taken without first examining all of the alternatives.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution embodying the federal system plan be printed in the RECORD at this point. I also ask unanimous consent that a detailed memorandum explaining both the federal system plan and the problems with which it is meant to deal be printed as a supplement to my remarks and the resolution. I send to the desk the joint resolution and ask that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the joint resolution and memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 181) proposing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for the direct popular election of the President and Vice President of the United States and for the determination of the result of such election introduced by Mr. EAGLETON, for himself and Mr. DOLE, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 181

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The people of the several States and the District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall vote directly for the President and Vice President. In such elections, each voter shall cast a single vote for two persons who shall have consented to the joining of their names on the ballot for the offices of President and Vice President. No persons shall consent to their name being joined with that of more than one other person.

"SEC. 2. The voters in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for the voters of Members of the Congress from that State, except that any State may adopt less restrictive residence requirements for voting for President and Vice President than for Members of Congress and Congress may adopt uniform residence and age requirements for voting in such elections. The Congress shall prescribe the qualifications for voters from the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. The persons joined as candidates for President and Vice President having the greatest number of votes in the election shall be declared elected President and Vice President if such persons have also obtained the greatest number of votes among the candidates running for President and Vice President in States containing more than 50 per centum of the total number of voters in such election or in more than 50 per centum of the States.

"If the pair of perrons joined as candidates for President and Vice President who received the greatest number of votes throughout the United States failed to obtain the greatest number of votes in States containing more than 50 per centum of the total number of voters in the election or in more than 50 per centum of the States, then the votes received by each pair of persons joined as candidates for President and Vice President shall be separated according to the States in which they were received and in each such State, the pair of persons joined as candidates for President and Vice President who received the greatest number of votes therein shall be automatically credited with a number of electoral votes which shall be equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which such State is entitled in the Congress, and if any pair of candidates for President and Vice President shall have received a majority of the electoral votes of all of the States they shall be declared elected President and Vice President.

"If no pair of candidates for President and Vice President shall have received a majority of these electoral votes, then all but the two pairs of such candidates receiving the greatest numbers of electoral votes of all of the States shall be eliminated, and the electoral votes which any of these eliminated pairs of candidates received in any State shall be credited to the two leading pairs of candidates in proportion to the numbers of people who voted for these two pairs of candidates in such State. In making this computation, fractional numbers less than one one-thousandth shall be disregarded. The pair of candidates receiving the greatest number of electoral votes after such crediting of electoral votes shall be declared elected President and Vice President.

"SEC. 4. The days for such elections shall be determined by Congress and shall be the same throughout the United States. The times, places, and manner of holding such elections and entitlement to inclusion on the ballot shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations. The times, places, and manner of holding such elections and entitlement to inclusion on the ballot shall be prescribed by the Congress for such elections in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 5. The Congress shall prescribe by law the time, place, and manner in which the results of such elections shall be ascertained and declared.

"SEC. 6. If, at the time fixed for declaring the results of such elections, the presidential candidate who would have been entitled to election as President shall have died, the vice-presidential candidate entitled to election as Vice President shall be declared elected President.

"The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death or withdrawal of any candidate or candidates for President and Vice President, for the case of the death of both the President-elect and Vice-President-elect, and for the case of a tie.

"SEC. 7. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 8. The District of Columbia shall be treated as a State for purposes of this Amendment.

"SEC. 9. This article shall take effect on the 1st day of May following its ratification."

ELECTORAL COLLEGE REFORM—A CASE FOR THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

As Congress considers reforming the electoral process through which this country selects its Presidents, both the simplicity and the apparent fairness of the "one man, one vote" principle constitute strong arguments in favor of a direct election system. Certainly, these considerations appealed to the House of Representatives when it adopted a resolution calling for the direct election of the President on September 18, 1969.

DIRECT ELECTION PITFALLS

There are, however, at least seven serious pitfalls in the direct election (winner must have at least 40% of the total votes cast) system which the House adopted and which is now before the Senate Judiciary Committee. These pitfalls are as follows:

1. A Presidential Candidate could be elected even though he failed to receive a plurality of the popular votes in most—or conceivably in any—of the states. In 1968, Hubert Humphrey was the popular choice of only 13 states plus the District of Columbia. Had he simply carried New York State by half the popular vote margin by which Lyndon Johnson carried it in 1964 and lost the seven states which he won by relatively close margins, he would have been elected President by approximately 250,000 votes. He would, however, have been the preferred choice of the voters of just six out of 50 states and the District of Columbia. In a federal system such as ours, it would certainly seem no more acceptable that a man should be President when he is the popular vote winner but the choice of only a handful of states than when he is the winner in the electoral college but the loser in the popular vote. A Chief Executive who hopes to govern effectively in the United States must be able to show that he is not simply the choice of the people, but rather that he is also the choice of the people of a number of states.

SPECIAL INTEREST PARTIES

2. An electoral system involving possible runoffs inevitably invites a proliferation of special interest, sectional, and charismatic figure parties.

Professor Maurice Duverger has written about the United States: "The absence of a second ballot . . . in the Presidential election constitutes in fact one of the historical reasons for the emergence and the maintenance of the two-party system." Under the proposed direct election system, many racial, ethnic, and interest groups would feel that they had lost all power in the election process since their ability to influence the outcome in key swing states with large blocs of electoral votes would no longer be relevant. Their only hope for regaining leverage under a direct election system would be through the creation of new Presidential parties. These parties would then solicit votes to promote their parochial causes—the National Gun Party, the National Dairy Farmers' Protective Party, the National Students' Party, the Black Welfare Rights Party—with considerable certainty that they would have an opportunity to trade off their votes in either a runoff election or immediately before the initial election when surveys indicated the closeness of the vote between the two major party candidates or the uncertainty that either of these candidates would obtain 40% of the popular vote. To quote Richard Scammon of the Elections Research Center:

"If you really want to stop proliferating candidates under any system you give people one vote. This is really why we have two parties operating in this country in November. You only get one shot at voting. Once you allow people a second shot under any conditions you give the opportunity, for example, for Mr. Wallace to in effect say to his electorate, 'Now, on the first ballot vote your convictions. Stand up for what you really believe in. You will get another chance on the second ballot if you have to. Besides, we might make second place.' . . . [The direct election with a runoff] is why in some parts of the South in primaries you get the first ballot loaded up with candidates, sometimes enormous numbers . . . because everybody knows, though, they are going to have a second shot at this." (Hearings on Electoral College Reform Before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. at 341.)

A multiplicity of Presidential parties taking ideological positions—often irresponsibly—could only produce the tragic effect of polarizing this country on a wide variety of issues, and leaving our polity without the underlying harmony which makes it governable.

Moreover, a direct election system built upon a 40% plurality requirement could lead to the creation of new parties centered on specific individuals, which in turn might have the effect of ensuring the election of comparatively unpopular candidates. For example, let us assume that in a direct election system, Party A were to select a candidate whose ideological position on a number of issues made it appear to many in Party B that Party A's candidate could never hope to win more than about 45% of the popular vote. Let us also assume that Party B were to contain two charismatic figures and that one of them, Mr. X, were certain that the other, Mr. Y, had the Party B nomination sewed up. What if Mr. X were then to calculate that it made sense for him to run as well since he was certain that he could:

Take 25% of the total popular vote which formerly was committed to Mr. Y,

Take 7% of the voters committed to the candidate from Party A, and thereby Deny both candidates the requisite 40% and ensure a runoff in which he would be the second candidate and the probable winner.

However, should Mr. X prove wrong in one calculation—that he can take 7% of the vote away from Party A's candidate—this nation might well find itself faced with the unfortunate prospect of living with one man's blunder. In short, it might awake to find that it had elected an unpopular and ideologically unacceptable President from Party A—a President who has been given his "mandate" under the direct election system with some 40.1% of the popular vote.

RECOUNTS

3. In close elections, like those of 1960 and 1968, the recount problem could be staggering, as would the temptation to commit fraud. Under a simple direct election system, it would not be possible or relevant—as it is today to isolate the states in which vote-count problems had arisen.

There are over 150,000 polling places in the United States. It should be remembered that under a direct election system, two miscounted votes in each polling place in the United States would have shifted the 1968 election from Richard Nixon to Hubert Humphrey. The miscount of only one vote in half of this country's polling places in 1960 could have changed the result in that Presidential election.

One need have little imagination to conjure up visions of elections in which the country anxiously awaits word of who its new President is to be while recounters puzzle over discarded or poorly marked ballots in rural and urban counties throughout the entire United States.

Finally, it must be added that recount problems will be further complicated in the proposed direct election system by questions which may arise if the issue is whether a particular candidate has received 40.001% of the popular vote or 39.999% of the popular vote.

COST

4. The cost of Presidential elections would soar once a number of parties had become involved and runoff elections had become part of the system. Each of our major parties is already sagging under the burden of financing Presidential campaigns. What new problems relating to campaign fund suppliers and their influence on substantive decisions will be raised if parties are forced to obtain double or triple the present sums to finance two-tiered Presidential races?

FEDERAL SYSTEM WEAKENED

5. A direct election system would drastically weaken the federal system. Candidates would ignore small and medium-sized two-party states and focus either on the most populous areas (comprised of a few fairly homogenous states) or on one-party states, where substantial popular margins could be obtained.

Under a direct election system, the objective of each candidate will be to concentrate on those States and regions where he can maximize his popular vote and minimize the popular vote of his opponents. Under the present electoral college system, it is crucial for a candidate to win in medium-sized and small two-party States. For today, a hard-fought victory in such States as Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, South Dakota, and Washington together is of greater value than a victory in California. Under a direct election system, this will no longer be the case. If a candidate can carry California or New York by a wide enough margin, he can offset losses in the four named, as well perhaps five or ten other, States.

Moreover, the medium-sized and smaller two-party States will also get shunted aside in a Presidential campaign in favor of one-party States. For why should a candidate strive to win a close election in a State with two million voters when he can realize a greater advantage by obtaining a huge margin in a one-party State with only one million voters? And—if one wishes to carry this logic further—why should a candidate even make a great effort in an extremely close race in one of the large States, when he knows that he can easily make up any differential in a small one-party State?

MINORITIES

6. A direct election system would curtail the power—which exists within a two-party electoral college context—of urban-oriented racial, ethnic and other minority groups, since these groups would have reduced ability to affect the outcome of a Presidential election. This reduction in power for various urban voting blocs would occur for the same reason as the reduction in the power of small, medium, or even large two-party states.

The best interests of this country do not lie in removing the power which these urban groups have in Presidential races. To ask them to rely on the Congress for that representation is unfair. Even with the gains which have resulted from reapportionment decisions, the Congress remains most responsive to rural and suburban constituencies.

The passage of a direct system might well ensure that all of these voting blocs—in an effort to be heard and to obtain influence in the selection of the President—would take the only logical step left open to them, namely, the creation of Presidential parties, which can barter votes for power in subsequent runoff election.

ADOPTION UNLIKELY

7. A direct election system stands little chance of being adopted by three-fourths of the states since small two-party states which come to understand the power they are relinquishing under a simple direct election system will reject it. Such a rejection will have the unfortunate effect of legitimating the present electoral college system, and will set back the cause of an electoral reform for many years.

The District Plan and the Proportional Plan, which have been suggested at various times in our history, do not offer any clear advantages over the present electoral college system. In fact, both of these plans provide even less assurance than does the present electoral college that the popular vote winner throughout the country will become President. Retention of the present electoral college system—but with an automatic electoral vote to avoid faithless electors and a revised contingency election system in which the President is selected by a vote of the individual members of Congress—has the built-in disadvantage that it provides no procedures to deal with the possibility of a divergence between the popular vote winner and the electoral college winner.

Is there a way to avoid the pitfalls involved in all of these electoral college reform proposals, while at the same time fashioning an electoral system which maintains basic adherence to the popular sovereignty principle of one man, one vote?

THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

The Federal System Plan, outlined below, may offer a viable alternative. This system—which builds upon the simple direct election formula as enacted by the House of Representatives and proposed in the Senate by Senator Bayh—would provide that any candidate who was the popular vote victor under circumstances which demonstrated that this victory was based upon support throughout the nation would be elected President. Moreover, it would provide a method for effectively eliminating the paralyzing effect which third parties may have under both the present electoral college and under the direct election system.

The Federal System Plan would work as follows:

1. A President would be elected if he (1) won a plurality of the national vote and (2) won either pluralities in more than 50% of the states and D.C., or pluralities in states with 50% of the voters in the election. The latter would be called the "50% rule."

2. If no candidate qualified, the election would go to an Electoral College where the states would be represented as they are today, and each candidate would automatically receive the electoral votes of the states he won. A candidate who won a majority of the electoral votes would be elected President.

3. In the unlikely event that no candidate received a majority of the electoral votes, the electoral votes of states which went for third-party candidates would be divided between the two leading national candidates in proportion to their share of the votes in those states.

THE "50 PERCENT RULE"

The "50% rule" is designed to reconcile the principle of federalism with the principle of popular sovereignty. It would award the Presidency to the national popular vote winner of he had been able to demonstrate that he had a broad base of support across the country. The "50% rule" would provide a better indication of whether a popular vote winner had the national support needed to govern this country effectively than would the 40% minimum popular vote formula contained in the present direct election proposal.

ELECTORAL VOTES

If no candidate qualified under the 50 percent rule and an election went to the Electoral College, the Presidential candidate with the most popular votes in a particular state would be automatically assigned that state's Congressional vote quota (hereinafter referred to as "electoral votes")—namely, the number of Senators and Representatives it is entitled to under the Constitution. The District of Columbia would have three electoral votes. If one candidate obtained a majority of the electoral votes assigned to all of the states, he shall be declared President.

The real key to eliminating third party fragmentation in a Presidential election system is to persuade the voter that he would be wasting his power to choose the next President if he voted for the candidate of a narrowly based party. The Federal System Plan achieves this result by providing that if the popular vote winner has not satisfied the "50% rule," then the President will be selected on the basis of the vote outcome broken down on a state-by-state basis.

REDISTRIBUTION OF ELECTORAL VOTES

If no candidate has an initial majority of the electoral votes—which might occur because of the presence of third party candidates—the Federal System Plan would then eliminate all but two leading candidates from consideration and redistribute the electoral votes won by any other candidates in particular states. Redistribution of the electoral votes won by "third party" candidates would be done proportionally, based on the relative number of popular votes obtained by the two leading national candidates in the particular state being redistributed.

In a redistribution situation, proportionalisation of electoral votes is fairer than the winner-take-all method which will be used when counting electoral votes initially.

It is expected that this redistribution technique will rarely be used since virtually all "third parties" which do not have a broad national base—such as the Bull Moose Party had in 1912—will be discouraged from entering candidates. People will not vote for such candidates when they realize that by doing so, they are throwing away their votes and leaving the choice of the President to other residents in their state who vote for the candidates of the two major parties.

BENEFITS OF PRESERVING THE FEDERAL ELEMENT

By melding the direct election plan—as enacted by the House of Representatives—with a concept that takes this nation's federal design into account, it is possible to reduce the difficulties which are inherent in a simple one man, one vote proposal.

Under this hybrid Presidential election system, the objective of each of the major parties will not only be to win in the national popular vote, but also to win in each state.

Candidates can be persuaded to pay attention to the needs of all states—including small ones.

The power of swing states and the minority groups who live in them can be retained and the prospect of flourishing splinter parties negated.

The problem of voter fraud can be localized, the complexities relating to vote recounts can be more easily avoided.

Finally, by building into the electoral process a factor which is dependent upon the total number of people voting in each state in that election, we would create (1) an incentive to encourage voting and (2) a mechanism which takes account of population shifts not reflected in the current electoral college system which is based upon a census that may be ten years old on the date of an election.

HYPOTHETICAL EXAMPLES OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS UNDER THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

1. Candidates A and B are the only two significant candidates running for the Presidency. Candidates A receives 50 million popular votes; candidate B receives 40.5 million popular votes. Candidate A has been the popular vote victor in 29 states (including the District of Columbia). Under the Federal System Plan, he would have satisfied the 50% rule and would be declared President.

2. Candidates A and B are the only two significant candidates running for the Presidency. Candidate A receives 50 million popular votes; candidates B receives 40.5 million popular votes. Candidate A has been the popular vote victor in only 22 states. However these states contained approximately 55% of the people voting in that election. Under the Federal System Plan candidate A would have satisfied the 50% rule and would be declared President.

3. Candidates A and B are the only two significant candidates running for the Presidency. Candidate A receives 50 million popular votes; candidates B receives 49.5 million popular votes. Candidates A is the victor in 28 states containing approximately 48% of the people voting in that election. Under the Federal System Plan candidate A would not have satisfied the 50% rule which would automatically make him President on the basis of his popular vote victory. The contingency plan would then come into effect and the popular votes won by candidates A and B would be translated into popular vote victories in each of the 50 States plus the District of Columbia. Under the hypothetical given it is quite probable that the 28 states won by candidate A would provide him with enough electoral votes to become President. On the other hand if candidate A had obtained a popular vote victory while being the popular vote choice in only 5 or 6 states, the electoral vote contingency plan would make candidate B the President since he would have demonstrated a much broader base of national support.

4. Candidates A, B, C, and D run for the Presidency. Candidate A obtains 40 million votes; candidate B obtains 39.5 million votes; candidate C obtains 10.8 million votes; and candidate D obtains 10 million popular votes. Candidate A has been the popular vote victor in 22 states containing 42% of the people voting in that election and possessing 240 electoral votes. Candidate B has been the victor in 18 states containing 40% of the people voting in the election and possessing 200 electoral votes. Candidates C and D have each been the victor in 8 states (for a total of 10) containing about 18% of the people voting in that election and possessing a total of 98 electoral votes.

Under the Federal System Plan, candidate A would not have satisfied the 50% rule which, with his popular vote victory, would have automatically entitled him to the Presidency. Under the contingency electoral vote system, neither candidate A nor candidate B would have a majority in the initial count. The Federal System Plan would therefore redistribute the electoral votes won by candidates C and D.

The redistribution would be done in proportion to the popular votes won by candidates A and B in the particular state whose electoral votes were being redistributed. If candidates A and B both had a national appeal, the redistribution would probably favor the candidate who was ahead under the initial electoral vote count. Thus in the above example, it would be quite probable that under the redistribution formula, candidate A would wind up with something like 288.5 electoral votes and candidate B would wind up with something like 249.5 electoral votes. Candidate A would then be declared President. (Note should be taken, however, that this last hypothetical is extremely implausible under the Federal System Plan. The presence of a redistribution formula in the Presidential election system will work to discourage regional or ideological parties from putting up candidates like the above candidates C and D since voters will probably not waste their ballots voting for them.)

HISTORICAL EXAMPLES

The Federal System Plan would not have changed the outcome of any past American election. It would however have averted some awkward contingencies which could easily have occurred. The following cases help illustrate the stabilising effect the Federal System Plan would have had in these situations, as well as some of the weaknesses of the direct election plan.

1888—HARRISON VERSUS CLEVELAND

Cleveland had a popular vote margin of 98,000, but Harrison was elected by an electoral vote of 233 to 168. Cleveland's popular majority came almost entirely from the "solid South."

Under a direct election system, Cleveland's overwhelming victory among Alabama's 176,000 voters would have offset the popular preference of 2.9 million voters in New York, Ohio and Illinois.

Under the Federal System Plan, despite his popular victory, would have failed to qualify under the 50% rule: he won only 18 out of 88 States, and won state with only about 30% of the voters. The election would have gone to the Electoral College where Harrison's broader geographical base of support would have made him President.

1916—WILSON-HUGHES

Wilson won by a popular majority of 580,000. He won in 31 states—mostly small ones—with 277 electoral votes, while Hughes' electoral vote total was 254. A change only of 1,904 votes would have given California's 13 electoral votes—and the election—to Hughes. Wilson would have lost, although his popular margin would still have been over half a million and he would still have been the preferred candidate in well over half the states.

Under the Federal System Plan, Wilson would easily have qualified with his popular plurality and with victories in over 50% of the states (although he did not win states with 50% of the voters). Wilson could have lost as many as six states, still had a popular plurality, and have been the victor under the Federal System Plan.

1948—TRUMAN-DEWEY-THURMOND

Truman won by over 2 million popular votes. The electoral count was Truman 303, Dewey 189, Thurmond 39.

A shift of 24,294 votes from Truman to Dewey in California, Illinois, and Ohio could have shifted 78 electoral votes, giving Dewey an electoral vote majority by one vote. Under the Federal System Plan, Truman would still have won with a popular plurality and victory in 28 states—over 50%.

If Dewey had won California and Illinois, but not Ohio, neither he nor Truman would have had an electoral majority, and under the present system the election would have been thrown into the House. Under the Federal System Plan, the election would not even have gone as far as the Electoral College, because Truman would still have won a popular plurality and over 50% of the states.

1960—KENNEDY-NIXON-BYRD

Under the present system, this election would have been thrown into the House if Kennedy, the popular vote winner, had lost three very close states: Illinois (margin: 8,000 votes, electoral votes: 27), South Carolina (margin: 9,600, electoral votes: 8), and Hawaii (margin: 115 votes, electoral votes: 3).

Under the Federal System Plan, Kennedy would have been elected without the risk of horsetrading and without delay because he would still (a) have been the popular vote winner, and he would still (b) have won states with a majority of the voters.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas for his presentation on the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the 1968 election did more to stimulate concern for our system of choosing the President than any other election in recent history. A very real possibility existed that Congress would determine the two highest officeholders in the land.

There is agreement among most Americans of all political and ideological persuasions that the present electoral system should be changed. Considerable study, effort and thought have gone into a number of proposals which have been presented to Congress. I withheld support of any of the several electoral reform proposals because, in my opinion, each appeared to contain a number of significant deficiencies. To change from one set of deficiencies to another would seem an exercise in futility, as well as perilous tinkering with our constitutional processes. I am especially pleased, therefore, to cosponsor the federal system plan—which I believe has considerable merit.

In essence, the federal system plan introduces the direct-election concept to presidential politics, while assuring continued, decisive importance of broad and widespread national support for candidates.

THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN COMPARED

The junior Senator from Missouri has described the federal system plan and its advantages over the direct-election plan and the present electoral college.

Briefly, I will compare the federal system plan with three other major electoral reform proposals.

THE DISTRICT PLAN

Under the district plan, popular vote results would tend to be reflected more accurately in electoral vote results than they are under the present system. The all-or-nothing system of assigning a State's electoral vote would be eliminated.

The major weakness of the district plan is its inherent tendency to encourage jerrymandering. The problems and temptations for political manipulation would surely not be diminished over present difficulties with congressional districts, and the situation could become even more involved.

Under the federal system plan, voting would take place on a statewide basis, free from the administrative complications of districting the results.

Also, the district plan could have a significant adverse effect on the establishment and maintenance of viable two-party State political systems. The stimulus for a minority party to turn out the vote would be severely diminished when it saw no chance to carry any district within a State. Under the federal system plan, however, a minority party would know its votes would not be frozen within the State but would have significance on a national scale.

THE PROPORTIONAL PLAN

The proportional plan would eliminate the unit rule for distribution of a State's electoral votes and would prevent an electoral victory for a minority popular vote-getter by tying the electoral vote directly to the popular vote.

The proportional plan would not strngthen the two-party system. Instead of discouraging the minority party, it would encourage formation of many minority parties tending to represent narrow and perhaps extreme viewpoints because minority parties would be assured electoral vote reflection of their strength. At the same time, it would discourage the major parties from attempting to broaden their appeal and assimilate diverse groups and factions. The federal system plan, on the other hand, by diminishing the potential impact of any third or multiparty development, would encourage a vigorous and broadened two-party system.

By entirely abolishing presidential electors and by permitting States to have separate ballots, the proportional plan would make a practical, as well as a theoretical, possibility of electing a President and Vice President from different parties. The federal system plan requires presidential and vice-presidential candidates to be paired, thus avoiding a split election, and it retains an electoral system as a backup procedure with a favorable influence on the two-party system.

THE AUTOMATIC ELECTORAL PLAN

The automatic electoral plan has the appeal of simplicity and close adherence to established practices, but it locks in the all-or-nothing rule which has evolved over the years, whereby each State's entire electoral vote is allocated to the winner of the popular vote. No real improvements are offered in the electoral influence of minority voters, possibilities for the election of narrow-basis Presidents or enhancement of State significance in the electoral process. The federal system plan, as the junior Senator from Missouri has pointed out, affords substantial advances in each of these important areas.

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

I think it might be well to anticipate some of the questions which may be raised concerning the federal system plan. I have discussed this proposal with some of my colleagues and others familiar with the different electoral reform proposals. A number of questions have been raised, and I am certain others would be in the event hearings were held.

Let me state briefly a few of them:

First. If the electoral machinery is used—as it would be under certain circumstances in the federal system plan—would the unit or bloc system of casting votes be continued, and would this within a State nullify votes cast for an unsuccessful candidate?

Second. The question has been raised that this plan would make possible the election of a President who may have fewer popular votes than the unsuccessful candidate.

Third. One area of concern is that the federal system plan would bring into effect two relatively untried and untested features embodied in the backup system, and an untried and untested feature in the division of electoral votes of minority candidates, whereas the runoff election has been tested and has worked successfully in various States.

Fourth. There is a general feeling that the plan is too complicated and subject to uncertainty and might be productive of unexpected results.

I believe that these questions can be answered satisfactorily and the changes could be made in the proposal being introduced today by the junior Senator from Missouri and myself. It is important, however, to look carefully at the advantages of this proposal:

First. It adheres in principle to the direct election plan, but eliminates the runoff feature of the direct election plan.

Second. It removes the possibility—like the direct election plan—of contingent elections by either House of Congress.

Third. It does minimize the election of the President and Vice President by the electoral vote process.

Fourth. This plan preserves as a backup procedure the electoral vote system, which some persons feel should be continued as a matter of tradition and because it is conducive to a two-party system.

Fifth. This plan does look to ultimate assertion of influence of the vote for minor candidates within the framework of the two-party system, rather than as support for independent or splinter parties.

OPERATION OF THE FEDERAL SYSTEM PLAN

The junior Senator from Missouri has ably described our proposal, but again, let me emphasize its relative simplicity—and its operation:

First. The popular vote winner would be declared elected if—

He has carried States which contain more than one-half of persons who voted in the election; or

He has carried more than one-half of the States.

Second. If neither of the above is satisfied, the winner would be decided by electoral vote.

Third. If there is no electoral winner, the electoral votes of minor candidates would be distributed among two front-runners by giving the electoral votes carried by minor candidates to the two front-runners in each particular State in proportion to their popular vote totals.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, interest in electoral reform is high and support for change is broad based. The federal system plan does strengthen the one-man, one-vote principle, and at the same time avoids the serious pitfalls in the direct election proposal. A summary of these pitfalls will be made a part of the record, but it should be emphasized that under the direct election plan, a presidential candidate could be elected even though he failed to receive a plurality of the popular votes in most—or conceivably in any—of the States. Those of us from small and middle-size States are naturally concerned about any system which would permit States with large populations to have a distinct advantage. We recognize that numbers are important and that the one-man, one-vote principle should be adhered to, but we also strongly feel that anyone elected to the Presidency of the United States should have broad-based support throughout the country. This important consideration is embodied within the federal system plan.

Let me add that all the electoral reform proposals submitted have certain advantages and certain disadvantages. The district and proportional plans do not assure that the popular vote winner would necessarily become President.

The issue of electoral reform is so vital that I would hope the Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments will consent to immediate hearings on the federal system plan proposal. In addition to introducing the federal system plan resolution today, the junior Senator from Missouri and I are contacting a number of experts in this field across the country, asking for their comments on this proposal.

Let me conclude by saying that any proposal approved by the House and the Senate must be ratified by 38 States. In my opinion, the federal system plan would be acceptable to large States because of the direct election features and to small States because it requires broad-based support by virtue of the "50-percent rule."

Again, I commend the junior Senator from Missouri for his leadership in this most important area and also acknowledge the efforts of Mr. Myron Curzan, a Washington attorney who has spent countless hours in the formulation of this proposal.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thank the Senator for his cogent summation of the issues involved and his able presentation of the Federal system plan.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. I would like to compliment my colleagues from Missouri and Kansas for adding to the debate which has been going on for some time over the importance of revising the present electoral college system. I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Missouri in his initial remarks as to my interest in this particular area.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments, as the Senator has pointed out, it has been the responsibility of the Senator from Indiana to delve into that particular matter. I think a great deal of heart can be taken from the interest expressed by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas.

First, it demonstrates that two of our distinguished colleagues are concerned about the need to do something about the present system.

Second, their proposal embodies as a fundamental principle the direct popular vote. I know that time has been allotted here this morning to others of our colleagues to speak on other subjects. So it is not my intention to continue this discussion at any great length.

I personally will do all I can to study this matter. As the Senator from Missouri knows and the Senator from Kansas knows, this matter has been debated at length. We have held three different sets of hearings. The matter is now before the full Judiciary Committee, and an agreement has already been arrived at to vote no later than April 24.

Whether it will be possible to hold hearings or not, I do not know, but I personally pledge that we will study in great detail any informaton that either of our distinguished colleagues brings to our attention.

The only matter of significant concern to me about the direct popular vote plan embodied in Senate Joint Resolution 1, of which I am the principal author, and which has some 46 cosponsors, is what happens in the case of a runoff. History has shown us that only once in almost 200 years has a President of the United States been elected when he had less than 40 percent of the votes, the figure which would require a runoff in our system. This was in 1860, when Abraham Lincoln was elected. At that time he had 39.76 percent of the votes, so he was just below the 40 percent figure, and he was not on the ballot in 10 States. Nevertheless, I think we have to examine this possibility.

Whether the shortcomings, as described by my two distinguished colleagues, of a runoff in the direct popular election in which no candidate gets 40 percent of the votes are greater than the shortcomings of any of the other plans. I am not yet willing to concede. But I am certainly willingly to study it, because I recognize it as one of the principal difficulties.

I have said from the beginning that I have not held out the direct popular vote plan as a panacea, without any problems at all, because as long as man devises a plan a few unscrupulous souls are going to try to take advantage of it, no matter what it is. What appeals to me about the Senate Joint Resolution 1 approach, which won a 339 to 70 vote in the House, is that it guarantees that the winner is going to have the most votes, and it will protect us at all stages of the process.

I want to thank both of my colleagues for their interest and for presenting these new ideas. We are willing to study them. I know they are both legislative craftsmen and recognize the need to search for the art of the possible. So in working together here in this body and trying to consult our colleagues in the other body, and the experts to which the Senator from Kansas alluded, I hope we can get the best possible plan, and that we will be able to make real progress. But we all know, from having gone through the constitutional amendment process before, that when we are looking for and need 67 colleagues to vote with us and ratification by three-fourths of the State legislatures, it is going to be impossible to get a plan that absolutely pleases everyone.

I know, from the record of our two distinguished colleagues, that they are going to do their very best to help us try to perfect the system and try to reconcile the system as best we can.

I salute them for adding to the debate on this matter.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Indiana for his kind remarks, and wish to say at this time that were it not for the efforts of the Senator from Indiana, we would not have the opportunity of considering this problem at all. It has been through his diligence and unswerving efforts over the past 5 years or more that at long last it appears that we will have a chance to have this issue before us. He is to be commended most highly for his efforts in this regard. I take his comments most seriously because he is truly an expert on this subject matter.

One brief comment on the Senator's remarks. He points out that in only one election, the first Lincoln election, did the winner receive less than 40 percent of the votes. Historically, that is true. But the winner has come precariously close to that 40-percent mark in other elections. It was true in the first Wilson election of 1912. The 1968 election of President Nixon was rather close to the 40-percent margin.

What concerns me very much about the direct election plan is that it will further encourage the proliferation of third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh parties. Past history on elections which came close to 40 percent may, therefore, not be a perfect guide insofar as the future conduct of national elections is concerned. If my worries are realized, and if we do see an endless number of political parties involved in elections under the direct system plan in 1976 or 1980, or 1984, it may well be that it would be uncommon in the future for any of the national candidates to achieve as much as 40 percent of the vote.

This may be a needless worry. In any event, it is what has caused me, among other things, serious concern about the direct election plan, of which I am one of the cosponsors, as I pointed out in my earlier remarks.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. Let me endorse the statement just made by the junior Senator from Missouri as to the great effort made by the Senator from Indiana. We all recognize the temper of the people and the need for some change; and hopefully the proposal offered this morning will shed some light—perhaps not—after it is carefully explored. I share the hope of the Senator from Indiana that it can be reviewed carefully, perhaps, with the Senator from Indiana, other committee and staff members.

We recognize that the time frame is narrow. We recognize the importance of moving as rapidly as possible with electoral reform. Hopefully, we can discuss the matter with the Senator from Indiana to determine if there may be a possibility of having brief hearings. But it is my hope and the hope of the junior Senator from Missouri to at least come forth with some principle embodying the efforts of the Senator from Indiana, that will alleviate some of the fears those in small and middle-sized States have, because the federal system plan, as we see it, without, of course, exploring all the possible pitfalls, does provide in principle for direct elections, and does also insure that the candidate elected would have broad-based support.

As far as I am concerned, this is its main strength. If it falls in some other area, we should know that, and will know it if we have hearings.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. I appreciate the comments of my friend from Kansas. The reason I think it is imperative that we look into this plan is that it is very easy to examine ideas that look good on the surface, and find out that they really do not work quite as well in practice. I say this without being at all critical of the plan submitted here today by our two distinguished colleagues, because I have not had a chance to study its implications fully. All I know is that in my 4- or 5-year study of this problem, I started out convinced that the direct popular vote would not work, and my main concern was the destruction by proliferation of parties of the two-party system.

By incorporating the 40-percent runoff provision, I felt we had sufficiently dealt with some of the nuisance splinter parties who get in just to achieve a bargaining position, and yet left the door open for a bona fide, valid third party. We have to recognize, for example, that the party of which our distinguished colleague from Kansas is a member started out as a minority party. Now they have the Presidency.

I do not think we want to say that from today on, for the next thousand years, we are going to preclude any splinter party from being able openly to capture the imagination of the American people.

But even when I became convinced that direct election was the best solution, as I just pointed out to my friend from Missouri——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed an additional 5 minutes, to continue and complete this exchange.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAYH. I shall hurry on. I just wanted to point out, as a sign of good faith, in talking to our distinguished friend from North Carolina, I thought perhaps he might be prevailed upon to join in the popular vote effort if we had the runoff provision with a joint session of the House and the Senate. I felt that perhaps we could thus maintain the system that our distinguished colleague from North Carolina is sincerely concerned about. But finally I came to the conclusion that the three criteria I mentioned before; namely, that the winner have the most votes, that everybody's vote count the same, and that everyobdy vote directly, were of overwhelming importance. That is why I came out in favor of Senate Joint Resolution 1.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I congratulate the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) for the work and the thinking that has gone into this plan that they are suggesting. I must say, however, that I am not yet persuaded that any plan for modifying or abolishing the electoral college is in the public interest; and I have yet to be convinced of that.

The comment of the Senator from Missouri that his plan might well stop the proliferation of parties was interesting. But I wonder if that is correct. I see in the plan of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas the possibility of more proliferation of parties, possibly, than under any other plan; and it would seem to me that if one candidate should literally sweep from 15 to 20 States of the Union, he would comply with the provisions of this proposal; namely, that he receive a plurality of the votes in the entire country and a plurality in States having 50 percent of the vote in the election, without getting votes in other States.

So it would seem to me that there is serious danger of a real minority President being chosen—not one who failed to receive a plurality of the vote, but one who failed to get a majority of the overall vote—and having a plurality far below the 40 percent provided in the direct plan.

I would suggest, however, that the Senators who proposed this plan stick by the plan, and if it is not agreed upon by the Senate and the House of Representatives, that they cast their votes against any modification of the electoral college. I believe that would be in the public interest.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thank my distinguished friend and colleague from Alabama. I think his remarks underscore all the more the necessity that this plan, as well as the other plans that have previously been submitted by other Senators, be given thorough and detailed examination by the Committee on the Judiciary.

As was pointed out by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) and in my remarks, we do not know at this time whether this is utopian, whether this is the answer, whether this is the panacea. We think it has much to commend it, and we want the experts who compromise the Committee on the Judiciary—and I note in the Chamber, among the members of that committee, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN)—to consider this plan among others.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from South Carolina is recognized for a period not to exceed 1 hour.

Direct elections: an invitation to national chaos

Last September, in a triumph of noble purpose over common sense, the House passed and has sent to the Senate a proposal to abolish the Federal System.

It is not called that, of course. Put forth as an amendment to the Constitution, the new scheme offers a supposedly better way of electing Presidents. Advanced with the delusive rhetoric of vox populi, vox Dei, it not only wipes out the obsolete Electoral College but abolishes the sovereign states as voting units. In the name of The People, it proposes that a giant plebiscite pour all 70,000,000 American votes into a single pool whose winner—whether by 5,000 or 5,000,000—is hailed as National Chief.

American elections are a naked transaction in power—a cruel, brawling yearlong adventure swept by profound passion and prejudice. Quite naturally, therefore, Constitution and tradition have tried to limit the sweep of passions, packaging the raw votes within each state, weighting each state's electoral vote proportionately to population, letting each make its own rules and police its own polls.

The new theory holds that an instantaneous direct cascade of votes offers citizens a more responsible choice of leadership—and it is only when one tests high-minded theory against reality that it becomes nightmare.

Since the essence of the proposal is a change in the way votes are counted, the first test must be a hard look at vote-counting as it actually operates. Over most of the United States votes are cast and counted honestly. No one anymore can steal an election that is not close to begin with, and in the past generation vote fraud has diminished dramatically.

Still, anyone who trusts the precise count in Gary, Ind.; Cook County, Ill.; Duval County, Texas; Suffolk County, Mass.; or in half a dozen border and Southern states is out of touch with political reality. Under the present electoral system, however, crooks in such areas are limited to toying with the electoral vote of one state only; and then only when margins are exceptionally tight. Even then, when the dial riggers, ballot stuffers, late counters and recounters are stimulated to play election-night poker with the results, their art is balanced by crooks of the other party playing the same game.

John F. Kennedy won in 1960 by the tissue-thin margin of 118,550—less than 1/5 of one percent of the national total—in an election stained with outright fraud in at least three states. No one challenged his victory, however, because the big national decision had been made by electoral votes of honest-count states, sealed off from contamination by fraud elsewhere—and because scandal could as well be charged to Republicans as to Democrats. But if, henceforth, all the raw votes from Hawaii to Maine are funneled into one vast pool, and popular results are as close as 1960 and 1968, the pressure to cheat or call recounts must penetrate everywhere—for any vote stolen anywhere in the Union pressures politicians thousands of miles away to balance or protest it. Twice in the past decade, the new proposal would have brought America to chaos.

▸ To enforce honest vote-counting in all the nation's 170,000 precincts, national policing becomes necessary. So, too, do uniform federal laws on voter qualifications. New laws, for example, will have to forbid any state from increasing its share of the total by enfranchising youngsters of 18 (as Kentucky and Georgia do now) while most others limit voting to those over 21. Residence requirements, too, must be made uniform in all states. The centralization required breaches all American tradition.

▸ Reality forces candidates today to plan campaigns on many levels, choosing groups and regions to which they must appeal, importantly educating themselves on local issues in states they seek to carry.

But if states are abolished as voting units, TV becomes absolutely dominant. Campaign strategy changes from delicately assembling a winning coalition of states and becomes a media effort to capture the largest share of the national "vote market." Instead of courting regional party leaders by compromise, candidates will rely on media masters. Issues will be shaped in national TV studios, and the heaviest swat will go to the candidate who raises the most money to buy the best time and most "creative" TV talent.

▸ The most ominous domestic reality today is race confrontation. Black votes count today because blacks vote chiefly in big-city states where they make the margin of difference. No candidate seeking New York's 43 electoral votes, Pennsylvania's 29, Illinois' 26 can avoid courting the black vote that may swing those states. If states are abolished as voting units, the chief political leverage of Negroes is also abolished. Whenever a race issue has been settled by plebiscite—from California's Proposition 14 (on Open Housing) in 1964 to New York's Police Review Board in 1966—the plebiscite vote has put the blacks down. Yet a paradox of the new rhetoric is that Southern conservatives, who have most to gain by the new proposal, oppose it, while Northern liberals, who have most to lose, support it because it is hallowed in the name of The People.

What is wrong in the old system is not state-by-state voting. What is wrong is the anachronistic Electoral College and the mischief anonymous "electors" can perpetrate in the wake of a close election. Even more dangerous is the provision that lets the House, if no candidate has an electoral majority, choose the President by the undemocratic unit rule—one state, one vote. These dangers can be eliminated simply by an amendment which abolishes the Electoral College but retains the electoral vote by each state and which, next, provides that in an election where there is no electoral majority, senators and congressmen, individually voting in joint session and hearing the voices of the people in their districts, will elect a President.

What is right about the old system is the sense of identity it gives Americans. As they march to the polls, Bay Staters should feel Massachusetts is speaking, Hoosiers should feel Indiana is speaking; blacks and other minorities should feel their votes count; so, too, should Southerners from Tidewater to the Gulf. The Federal System has worked superbly for almost two centuries. It can and should be speedily improved. But to reduce Americans to faceless digits on an enormous tote board, in a plebiscite swept by demagoguery, manipulated by TV, at the mercy of crooked counters—this is an absurdity for which goodwill and noble theory are no justification.

Mr. White has closely followed the campaigns of the last four Presidents. His most recent book is The Making of the President, 1968.

HB 9

REPORT TO JUDICIARY COMMITTE ON HOUSE BILL #9

The only change in present statute is that persons convicted of first degree murder are not eligible for bail.

A real problem has developed in Anchorage where recently convicted murderers have been released on bail. The press has made much to do about it. In at least one instance a convicted murderer out on bail was reconfined at the complaint of his wife for threats on her life.

Representative Miller states that the present Alaska Statute is identical to the federal statute. It can be claimed that the present bill may be unconstitutional or declared so in the future. That is, if an appeal is taken or if sentence has not been pronounced, the decision is not final.

Therefore confinement without bail of someone who still may be adjudged innocent or of someone who has yet not been sentenced to confinement may be unconstitutional even though he has been convicted of a crime.

Representative Miller has informed me that because of a federal statute requiring the death penalty for first degree murder convictions, this bill if enacted into law would not be unconstitutional.

Because of this looming constitutional question it is my recommendation that the committe have Art research the constitutional aspects.

Certainly we have a duty to protect the public from the presence of a convicted murderer and absent a constitutional prohibition, I recommend a "do pass."

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

HOUSE BILL NO. 12

This bill is designed to permit Alaskans to purchase firearms to the full extent permitted by P.L. 90-618. Specifically, the bill enables Alaskans to take advantage of the exception contained in Sec. 922(b) (3) (A) and purchase a rifle or shotgun in a "contiguous" state.

Are there any states "contiguous" to Alaska? An opinion of the Legislative Affairs Agency, dated January 9, 1969, indicates that "contiguous" may mean "near, though not in contact". Construed this way, the bill has meaning and may be useful to some Alaskans.

POUCH Y - STATE CAPITOL
JUNEAU, ALASKA 99801

January 9, 1969

Representative Jess Harris
1016 - 11th Avenue
Anchorage, Alaska 99501

Dear Representative Harris:

In preparing your bill for pre-file permitting Alaskans to buy guns in other states within the framework of the new Gun Control Bill of 1968 (draft copy attached), I have checked Public Law 90-618 closely and find that the exceptions for nonresidents under sec. 922(b)(B) and (C) do not prohibit an Alaskan from securing a firearm for the purposes set out. In sec. 922(B) a resident Alaskan in another state may "borrow or rent a firearm for temporary use for lawful sporting purposes," and sec. 922(C) does not preclude a resident Alaskan in another state from > "purchasing a rifle or shotgun when he is participating in any organized rifle or shotgun match or contest, or is engaged in hunting in a state other than his state of residence and whose rifle or shotgun has been lost or stolen or has become inoperative in such other state ... if such person presents to such dealer a sworn statement (i) that his rifle or shotgun was lost or stolen or became inoperative while participating in such a match or contest or while engaged in hunting, in such other state, and (ii) identifying the chief law enforcement officer of the locality in which such person resides, to whom such licensed dealer shall forward such statement by registered mail."

However, in (A) of sec. 922(b)(3) it states the exception that a resident of a "contiguous state" may purchase a rifle or shotgun in another state only where the purchaser's state of residence permits such sale or delivery by law.

The enclosed draft would take care of (A), leaving only the problem that there are no other states strictly "contiguous" to Alaska. Excluding the people of Alaska from coverage under sec. 922(b)(3)(A) would be subject to challenge on constitutional grounds as discriminatory. The courts, as a matter of construction, will always attempt to construe provisions as not conflicting if possible and in this case "contiguous" would probably be construed as including those states nearest to Alaska, i.e., Oregon, Washington, and possibly California. The generally accepted legal definition is as follows:

> CONTIGUOUS. In close proximity; near, though not in contact; neighboring; adjoining; near in succession; in actual close contact; touching; bounded or traversed by. Black, Law Dictionary (4th ed. 1951)

If contiguous were not construed in this manner, then the exception provided by sec. 922(b)(3)(A) would not apply, regardless of any law of this state authorizing it. In any case, the fact that a resident Alaskan is not prohibited from purchasing a rifle or shotgun under (B) and (C) may take care of the specific situation posed in your request.

If I have in any way misunderstood your request or the enclosed draft does not reflect your wishes, please let me know and advise whether or not this one is to be formally prefiled. I have enclosed a copy of the pertinent sections of Public Law 90-618 for your inspection.

Sincerely,

HB 14

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

REPORT ON HOUSE BILL NO. 14

This bill seeks to protect the public from being sent and billed for merchandise which was not ordered. It is intended to discourage certain promotional schemes by which an individual would receive some merchandise, usually through the mail, and find that although he never asked for it he is faced with the inconvenience and expense of returning the merchandise or being billed for it. The bill covers only those situations in which the unsolicited sending constitutes an offer of sale and does not cover either contractual arrangements for the periodic sending of merchandise or cases of mistaken delivery where there was no actual "offer".

The committee substitute differs from the original bill in that it removes some redundant language and relocates the section so that it is covered by the definition of "merchandise" in AS 45.45.110. That definition is broadened to cover this new section, and the circularity of the definitions in sec. 110 is removed.

HB 18

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 18

This bill is one product of the legislatively directed project to revise the Alaska Administrative Code and the Administrative Procedure Act. It clarifies the functions of the Department of Law with respect to administrative regulations, and established the concept of "regulations attorney." This person would work with the various administrative agencies, bringing to them a greater understanding of the nature of administrative regulations, preventing the Code from deteriorating after the revision project is completed, assisting in preparing regulations and relevant legislation, advising of the need for new regulations and amendment of old ones, and assuring constitutionality, legality and compliance with the Administrative Procedure Act and the drafting manual for administrative regulations. It is intended that this person be taken from these duties only when his work load permits or when the interests of the state definitely require it.

Some of the very serious problems relating to the present treatment of regulations are discussed at pp. 5 - 6 of the January 1968 study entitled, "Revision of the Alaska Administrative Code", prepared by the Legislative Affairs Agency. The primary cause of the problems is the fact that under the present system laymen, who may be excellent administrators or specialists in another field, are being required to analyze, interpret and apply complex legal matter without the requisite legal training. This is an illogical and inefficient system, leading to general frustration for administrators and users of the Code and to wasted money for the state.

To preserve uniformity of style, numbering, form, citation of authority, etc., the bill also requires adherence to the drafting manual for administrative regulations which Sec. 2(a), Ch. 70 SLA 1966 required the Legislative Affairs Agency to prepare.

Dear Barry:

The Legislative Council, as a result of my letter of January 6, 1969 (copy of which was forwarded to you on the 3rd of this month) pertaining to existing deficiencies in the Alaska Professional Corporation Act, drafted Senate Bill No. 45. This new bill faithfully follows the suggestions set forth in my January 6 letter, and in my opinion should be adopted as drafted.

One minor troublesome item is the introduction of House Bill No. 31 at the request of the Legislative Council. This bill addresses itself to A.S. 10.45.080. However, Senate Bill No. 45, in a more comprehensive amendment of the Alaska Professional Corporation Act, contains an amendment to the very same section. In my opinion, House Bill No. 31 should not be adopted, as Senate Bill No. 45 adequately and properly handles the situation.

Again, thank you for any courtesies extended to me and to all Alaskan professionals who are vitally interested in the effectiveness of the Alaska Professional Corporation Act.

Very truly yours,

Dear Bill:

It has come to our attention that you have a House Bill #51 by Tom Fink which is substantially similar to the Bill he introduced during the Fifth Legislature (H.B. #361).

Joe Peel of the Health Insurance Association of America asked me if I would advise you that the HIAA is opposed to this Bill. Also, I am enclosing a copy of some information that Robert Scott sent to the sponsor, Tom Fink, which states some of the objections to the Bill.

We will certainly appreciate any help you can give the industry.

Best regards,

A. L. Whetstone

ALASKA HOUSE BILL NO. 51

Sponsor: Tom Fink

Referred: House Commerce, Labor and Management, and Judiciary Committees

---

Purpose of Bill

This bill would require payment by the insurer of interest at the rate of 8% per annum on sums "determinable at the time of filing" and owed under life and health insurance policies starting from the day of filing of a "claimant's statement and death certificate" in the case of a life insurance death claim, and from the day of filing of a "claimant's statement and physician's statement" in the case of a disability claim; and on additional sums, on the day they become determinable. It further provides that a bona fide settlement offer equal to final settlement or judgment would stop the running of the interest penalty.

Objections

This bill is similar to House Bill No. 361 introduced by Mr. Fink during the Fifth Legislature. The bill is punitive in nature in that while it is apparently designed to penalize an insurer which vexatiously delays payment of its claims, it would penalize even reputable insurance companies if, through no fault of their own, a claim were not paid pursuant to the terms of the proposal.

Delays in claim settlements when they occur in the case of life and health insurance are due to a variety of bona fide reasons caused chiefly by the need to await information from sources over which the life insurance company has no control.

This bill would impose an excessive interest penalty which would commence upon receipt of specific items, i.e., a "claimant's statement" and a death certificate or physician's statement. There is no indication in this bill of what the expression "claimant's statement" means. It could be construed to be anything from a telephone call, letter, telegram, or postcard notifying the insurer of a claim, to filing the proof of loss forms and other documents necessary for perfecting the claim, all as required under the contract. Interest should not begin to run until the completed claim proofs and other required documents are received at the insurer's home office.

Even assuming that due proof of loss forms and a death certificate were filed under a death claim, the insurer might need a certificate of appointment delayed because of a controversy among the heirs or next of kin, or a tax waiver the issuance of which would not be within the insurer's control. There may be a discrepancy with regard to the insured's age, requiring additional proof from the claimant. Frequently, the contract also calls for the surrender of the policy, receipt of which may be delayed by the beneficiary. However, under the bill, if these additional documents are not received upon the filing of "claimant's statement" and "death certificate", the insurer would be unjustly penalized.

In the case of a life insurance policy with accidental death benefits, there may be suspicious circumstances involved, or a question as to whether the death was accidental. In such situations, the insurer should be permitted a reasonable amount of time to conduct a proper investigation without the threat of an interest penalty.

"Disability" insurance is defined in the insurance code (AS 21.12.050) as including all forms of health insurance. It would appear that where hospitalization coverage is provided, the insurer will need more than just a "claimant's statement and a physician's statement" to settle such a claim. The same is true with respect to medical coverage involving reimbursement for cost of drugs, etc.

Disability claims are generally of small amounts, and computing interest on a daily basis from the day of filing such statements would only amount to pennies. On the other hand, the computation of interest on such small amounts would create an administrative nightmare.

It should be noted that the bill would not apply to claims payable by fraternal benefit societies, nor to hospital and medical service corporations when reimbursement is required to be made to a subscriber. This is so because the bill does not specifically amend the chapters of the insurance code dealing with these organizations.

The life insurance business believes that the proper remedy in the case of any insurer which delays payment of claims without good cause is that its certificate of authority to do business in Alaska should be revoked. A provision requiring the Director of Insurance to take such action is already contained in the Insurance Code. See AS 21.09.150.

We urge that House Bill No. 51 not receive favorable consideration.

Respectfully submitted,

Robert M. Scott, Juneau
Legislative Agent

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 75

The Judiciary Committee is unable to obtain an opinion from the Attorney General's office as to the constitutionality of House Bill No. 75.

In order to permit action on this bill in this session the Committee puts the bill out with the recommendation on the merits of the bill, but without complete review of the legal aspects of the bill.

The Committee Substitute deletes the local government sharing provisions, which the sponsor intends to submit by a separate bill, and inserts a percentage alternative in order to offset any effects of inflation.

STATEMENT BEFORE THE HOUSE
JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

March 14, 1969

Mr. Chairman, Gentlemen:

I am H. M. Cole, Counsel for Atlantic Richfield Company.

On 3-3-69 T. F. Carlisle, Manager of the Tax Division of Atlantic Richfield's North American Producing Department stated, in testimony before the House Resources Committee that certain portions of HB 75 may raise the question of constitutionality. I have been asked to elaborate on that thesis and, therefore, shall confine my remarks to that issue.

There are a number of arguments which might be mentioned to indicate the possible unconstitutionality of the bill. These include:

(1) undue burden on interstate commerce;

(2) unreasonable classification and thus violating the due process principles in that the tax is based on an occurrence after the tax is imposed;

(3) the unconstitutional levying of a state export tax, and

(4) discriminatory taxation.

It is axiomatic that a tax must be equal and uniform, but the tax here is neither. The incidence of the tax is on severance, but the rate is on the location of use.

Article I, Section 8, Clause 3 of the United States Constitution provides, among other things, that

> The Congress shall have power -- to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states. . .

In 1940 the U.S. Supreme Court, in Best & Company, Inc. v. Maxwell[1] stated that "The Commerce Clause forbids discrimination whether forthright or ingenious" in holding a State statute unconstitutional which required out-of-state merchants to pay larger privilege taxes than local merchants.

Both Texas and Louisiana have passed gas gathering taxes, which are taxes on the occupation of gathering gas from a producer. In the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. v. Calvert[2] Case, a tax was imposed on the Pipeline for the exit of gas from Texas. The U.S. Supreme Court held that the gathering of natural gas, as defined in the Statute, was an inseparable part of interstate commerce and characterized the tax as a tax "on the exit of the gas from the state." The Court said that "the receiving of a commodity for transportation cannot be carved out of the transportation process itself." "It is now well settled," the Court continued, "that a tax imposed on a local activity related to interstate commerce is valid if, and only if, the local activity is not such an integral part of the interstate process, the flow of commerce, that it cannot realistically be separated from it." "The economic process is inherently unsusceptible of division into distinct local activity capable of forming the basis for the tax here imposed, on the one hand, and a separate movement in commerce, on the other." the Court continued. "If Texas may impose this. . .tax. . .then Michigan and other recipient states have at least equal rights to tax the. . .unloading. . .when it arrives for distribution. . .The net effect would be substantially to resurrect the Custom barriers which the Commerce Clause was designed to eliminate."

It seems to me that HB 75, if enacted, would undertake the same thing which the Supreme Court has said is unconstitutional.

Calvert v. Transcontinental Pipe Line Corporation[3], a 1960 Texas Supreme Court Case, citing the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. Case, stated that the tax was on the downstream purchaser of gas (an out-of-state entity) and, therefore, was not valid because it was a burden on interstate commerce.

The Texas Legislature tried again with their gas gathering tax and Calvert v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co.[4] was the involved case. The Texas Supreme Court voided the act and said that, "Irrespective of what the Act labels the tax and of what other declarations are found in the Act that seeks to attach the tax to the production and processing of natural gas, it is apparent, as the U.S. Supreme Court found in the Michigan-Wisconsin example, that the tax attaches to the gas after it has been produced and processed and has begun its journey in interstate commerce."

It seems to me that this language is singularly appropriate to the provisions of HB 75. "Where a tax is a burden on interstate commerce, it is not made valid by isolating and denominating some incident or element as 'local activity' and designating such incident as the focal point of the tax."

The Louisiana case to which reference has been made is Louisiana-Nevada Transit Co. v. Fontenat[5]. Twenty percent (20%) of the gas involved was for local use and eighty percent (80%) for interstate use. The Louisiana Court, citing the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. case, held that a tax imposed on a local activity is valid only if the local activity can realistically be separated from the interstate process, the flow of commerce.

A producer who chose to ship his oil in interstate commerce (either on his own motion or because the market in Alaska could not support more processing) prior to processing would incur a greater tax than the producer who does process his crude in Alaska. The incidence of the added tax would tend to encourage processing in Alaska to the exclusion of other states. Such would impede interstate commerce and it is this type of impediment upon the commerce of the nation that was struck down in Best v. Maxwell. An independent producer, without refining capabilities would under HB 75 pay a tax which would be determined by what the purchaser of his production chose to do with it. It is doubtful that a classification such as here proposed would meet the due process requirements of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

One other case which might be of interest to the Committee on this matter is Pennsylvania v. West Virginia[6]. This case is cited in the Michigan-Wisconsin case and involved an attempt by one state to prevent the export of gas into another state. By way of dictum the U.S. Supreme Court stated, "Even the States power to lay and collect taxes, extensive though it may be, cannot extend in such a way as to impede interstate commerce."

Mr. Walker's brief contains several other cases which are additional examples of legislatures favoring local business by discriminating v. interstate business, so I shall not longer belabor the point. It seems clear to me that the extra tax proposed upon oil and gas exported from Alaska is an added burden on interstate commerce; that it is in fact discriminatory against oil and gas not processed within Alaska and therefore is subject to constitutional attack.

I have pointed out a number of reasons why I am of the opinion that HB 75 as written is unconstitutional. I would like to make it clear, however, that Atlantic Richfield is interested in the amount of the tax and not the technical aspects of the statute, but I would assume that the legislature would not want to enact legislation which appears on its face to be subject to attack.

STATEMENT PRESENTED TO HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
ALASKA SIXTH LEGISLATURE
BY HUMBLE OIL & REFINING COMPANY

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF HOUSE BILL NO. 75
AN ACT RELATING TO REVENUES FROM OIL AND GAS PROPERTIES

Facts

House Bill No. 75, an Act relating to revenues from oil and gas properties is now before you for your consideration. Last Wednesday you invited the oil industries' comments on the constitutionality of House Bill No. 75. Among other provisions House Bill No. 75 proposes that there would be one rate for those engaged in primary manufacturing and processing in the State of Alaska, and another rate for those shipping raw materials outside the State. Alaska presently imposes an oil and gas conservation tax at the rate of five mills per barrel of oil produced and for each 50,000 cubic feet of gas produced. Alaska also imposes an oil and gas production tax at the rate of three percent (3%) of value and the disaster severance tax of one percent (1%) of value.

Issue

The question in issue is whether the enactment of a split severance tax as proposed by House Bill No. 75 would be valid under both the Alaska Constitution and the United States Constitution.

Answer

It is concluded that the enactment of an occupation tax as proposed by House Bill No. 75 would patently violate the Commerce Clause, Article I, Section 8, Clause 3, of the United States Constitution. This being the case no effort was made to justify such an enactment under the Alaska Constitution.

Discussion

Article I, Section 8, Clause 3 of the United States Constitution provides:

> The Congress shall have power. . .To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states. . .

The primary considerations for determining the limits of a state's power to tax activities connected with interstate commerce have been aptly stated by the Supreme Court of Washington in Washington-Oregon Shippers Cooperative Association, Inc. v. Schumacher, et al., 367 P.2d 112 (1961). They are:

> . . .(1) Whether the tax places an extra burden on interstate commerce not borne by intrastate commerce, or erects barriers, placing out-of-state businesses at a disadvantage; the discrimination test. (2) Whether the interstate commerce involved is subject to the risk of repeated exactions of the same nature from other states; the multiple burden test.

Because the occupation taxed in a typical state production or severance tax is strictly a local activity and occurs but once, we need not concern ourselves with the second or multiple burden test. It appears obvious that the type of split severance tax proposed for Alaska fails to satisfy the first test, that of nondiscrimination against interstate commerce.

The United States Supreme Court has upon many occasions struck down state license and occupation taxes where they favored instate business by discriminating against interstate business. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U.S. 275 (1876), relating to discriminatory licensing of out-of-state producers or manufacturers of goods; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U.S. 446 (1886), involving discriminatory taxation of out-of-state liquor sales; Darnell v. Memphis, 208 U.S. 113 (1908), discrimination against out-of-state agricultural products; Hale v. Bimco Trading, Inc., 306 U.S. 375 (1939), involving discrimination against cement transported into the state from out of state; Mullaney v. Anderson, 342 U.S. 415 (1952), striking down an Alaska licensing tax on the grounds of discrimination against interstate commerce since the tax was levied at a higher rate upon nonresident fishermen than upon resident fishermen; Memphis Steam Laundry Cleaners Inc. v. Stone, 342 U.S. 389 (1952), involving a discriminatory license tax imposed at a higher rate on out-of-state peddlers than on instate peddlers.

In Best v. Maxwell, 311 U.S. 454 (1940) the Supreme Court held a state statute unconstitutional in violation of the Commerce Clause since the statute required out-of-state merchants to pay larger privilege taxes than instate merchants. In so holding, the court said:

> The Commerce Clause forbids discrimination whether forthright or ingenious. In each case it is our duty to determine whether the statute under attack will in its practical operation work discrimination against interstate commerce. The freedom of commerce which allows the merchants of each state a regional or national market for their goods is not to be fettered by legislation, the actual effect of which is to discriminate in favor of intrastate businesses, whatever may be the ostensible reach of the language.

Seeing that the key to constitutionality is nondiscrimination, the proposed split severance tax should be examined to determine if it would discriminate against interstate commerce. The extra burden of tax proposed upon oil and gas exported and not processed in Alaska clearly is an added burden on interstate commerce. A producer who chooses to ship his oil or gas in interstate commerce prior to refining or processing would incur a greater tax than would the producer who chose to refine or process his oil or gas in Alaska. Clearly the State of Alaska would benefit from such a tax as integrated producers would be encouraged to locate refineries and processing plants in Alaska at the exclusion of other states. This would clearly impede interstate commerce. This type of impediment upon the commerce of the nation was struck down in Best & Company, Inc. v. Maxwell, 311 U.S. 454 (1940), where the Supreme Court said:

> . . .Nonresidents wishing to display their wares must either establish themselves as regular North Carolina retail merchants at prohibitive expense, or else pay this $250 tax that bears no relation to actual or probable sales but must be paid in advance no matter how small the sales turn out to be. Interstate commerce can hardly survive in so hostile an atmosphere. A $250 investment in advance, required of out-of-state retailers but not of their real local competitors, can operate only to discourage and hinder the appearance of interstate commerce in the North Carolina retail market. Extra-state merchants would be compelled to turn over their North Carolina trade to regular local merchants selling by sample. North Carolina regular retail merchants would benefit, but to the same extent the commerce of the Nation would suffer discrimination.

As to a nonintegrated producer who must sell all of his oil and gas prior to refining or processing, such a tax would appear to violate the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution. The amount of his tax would be determined by what the purchaser of his production chose to do with it. It is doubtful that a classification such as proposed in the split severance tax would meet the tests of the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment.

February 7, 1969

Honorable Wendell P. Kay
Alaska House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Kay:

The undersigned are students of the Alaska Barber College, Anchorage, and other persons interested in your House Bill 84. We understand that this bill would require, in addition to the presently prescribed course of training at a barber college, eighteen months of apprenticeship.

We do not know whether you are aware that similiar legislation has been introduced in the Alaska Legislature over the past six years. On each occasion, such legislation has failed to be enacted. We believe that the rejection of similiar bills by past legislatures was based on good reason.

We are not maintaining that the apprenticeship requirements of your bill are totally without merit. We believe that someday they may be appropriate for Alaska. However, the statistics released by the National Association of Barber Schools, Inc., in its research report No. 6A, dated July 1, 1967, make it evident that the sophisticated plan proposed by your bill may be suitable for an Alaska of the future but would only bring hardship to the Alaska of the present. The average barber-population ratio for the United States is 1 barber per 632 persons. The highest population-barber ratio next to that of Alaska is West Virginia with 931 persons per barber. In Alaska we have an astonishing ratio of 2,663 persons for each barber, or approximately 4 times the national average. Under those facts alone, we believe that House Bill 84 would do a disservice to the people of Alaska by merely copying the code of other states without considering the needs and conditions of Alaska at the present time.

Please consider that there are only 80 barber-shops in all of Alaska. Of these at least 50 or 60 are one-chair shops. Such shops could not use, and do not want the services of an apprentice. An apprentice under your bill could not even relieve the owner by serving as a manager while the owner takes his vacation. We ask that you consider that this lack of a sufficient number of multi-chair barbershops will make it extremely difficult for an apprentice to find employment. Such difficulty will discourage the number of persons entering into the barbering field from the Alaska population.

HB 84 would lessen the number of barbers trained in Alaska and would strengthen a monopoly of those already in the field. Because of the present shortage of barbers, the curtailment of Alaskans entering barbering, which would result from HB 84, would lead to an influx into the State of barbers trained and practicing in other states. HB 84, in effect, would bring about discrimination against local hire.

It is submitted that Alaska has not only not reached the stage where HB 84 could serve any useful purpose but in fact such legislation is not needed. At present Alaska trained barbers are graduated from a barber college and proceed to take an examination for journeyman barber. They do not graduate from the college until they have complete 1500 hours of instruction which includes a minimum of 300 hours of theory including physiology of the scalp, hygene problems, etc. The balance is practical experience under the direct personal supervision of a journeyman barber. To complete this course on a full time basis requires 9 months, or 18 months on a part-time basis. There appears no good reason why this training should not be considered as an adequate program to prepare Alaskans for employment as journeymen in the field of barbering.

We request that you reconsider the advisability of HB 84 at this time and request that you withdraw your bill until further study can be given to the matter.

We appreciate your attention on our behalf. Because of the wide spread significance of HB 84 we are circulating this letter-petition to the other members of the House and Senate. If you or any other member of the Legislature have questions concerning our purpose, please contact us: "Committee Against Barber's Apprenticeship", 330 "L" Street, Anchorage, Alaska 99501.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 86

The purpose of this bill is to eliminate a current problem in the law relating to the seizure of items by fish and game enforcement officers. Under the present statute, a commercial fishing vessel and gear can be tied up at the time of arrest, to be held until the case is finally disposed of by a determination of guilt. The effect is to put the fisherman who insists upon his innocence out of business for days or weeks, often for the balance of the season. The only alternative would be to plead guilty, to "get it over with" and get back to fishing.

This bill requires the prompt release of the boat and gear upon the posting of a reasonable bond. The bond would require the boat to be available for process at the time of trial. The amount of bond would be set by the court.

HB 105

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Representative Barry Jackson
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature

DATE: April 13, 1970

FROM: Thelma Cutler
Director of Elections

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 105

As a result of the registration forms in the polling places during the 1968 general and primary elections as a voter convenience, we received more than 65,000 completed forms. Many of these were duplicates and had to be eliminated. The totals by districts plus registrations received by the end of 1969 before any concerted drives had been made:

District	1	3394	District	10	4035
"	2	1464	"	11	1853
"	3	2011	"	12	864
"	4	4044	"	13	1245
"	5	1131	"	14	2146
"	6	1720	"	15	2059
"	7	1751	"	16	9830
"	8	23,250	"	17	1358
			"	19	792

Since that time, we have accumulated approximately 12,000 new registrations as a result of our February registration drive and the continued efforts of our registrars. We have, of course, deleted those persons who have had a change of name and invited them to reregister. We have deleted those individuals who have indicated they are no longer residents of Alaska and we are deleting from the 1969 death certificates. We therefore estimate that over 75,000 registrations will be on the new list which will be duplicated and available for sale after May 1st. These lists will be alphabetized within precinct, show full mailing address and party preference if indicated. We will also have a machine count by precinct, district and state.

Additional registration drives in the nature of supermarket booths, special local promotions and additional area activities will be made. Registrars using a district list could secure registrations for all those yet unregistered and would be paid the 50¢ per new registration.

If the 18 year old referendum is approved at the primary election, registration may be made by those eligible and they will be allowed to vote in the general election.

Speediset ® Moore Business Forms, Inc.-s

The remote or bush areas of the state are close to 100% registered. We estimate now that the larger communities of the state are 90% registered. These communities, of course, have newspapers, radio and television and would benefit especially from another concentrated drive.

The provisions of HB 105 which would allow voter registration up to and including election day and subsequent voting by these late registrants via the "questioned ballot" method would result in a flood of envelopes for the absentee board to canvass.

The 14 day deadline for registration will require tremendous last minute efforts on our part to get registrations through the data processing centers and get printouts for election day. We will have to count, to some extent, on the registrar's records of these late registrations.

Almost 7,000 persons voted during the 1968 general election by absentee ballot. The absentee canvass boards checked the affidavit envelopes on the second day following the election; on the third day following the election, the counting board and the absentee board, began the task of tallying the vote. In the Anchorage area, the canvass board plus 14 four man counting boards spent approximately 12 hours on this count. Now, if you add to their chores questioned ballots, the counting could not possibly be completed during the 2nd and 3rd day. The absentee board then meets on the 8th day following the election to complete the count. Thus, you could well have 15 to 20% of the total vote of the state tied up in absentee and questioned ballots and a determination of winners would be delayed until after the 8th day following the election.

I think you will agree that many people tend to procrastinate and if you allow for registration on election day, it will be very easy to imagine the numbers of people who will delay registering until this day.

I do not think that you would be doing the qualified voters of this state a service by permitting such late registrations. The additional time consumed in the polling places in using the question ballot will result in long lines of voters at the polling place. The delay in making election figures available to the public and to the candidates will certainly create confusion and disatisfaction.

The efforts of the registrars, the political parties, the League of Women Voters, the labor groups and candidates' supporters should assure that every otherwise qualified voter is registered for the 1970 elections.

Thank you very much for listening to the representatives of the Kenai Peninsula Bar Association who have approached you regarding the urgent need of the Kenai Peninsula for a resident Superior Court Judge. Dear Representative Deveau:

Re: Authorization - Funding - Superior Court Judge Position to be resident Kenai-Kodiak Communities

We urgently request your full consideration and support of the establishment of judicial positions which will provide resident superior court judicial services in the Kenai-Kodiak communities.

As we understand the authorization and funding process for judicial positions, there has customarily been:

A request from the Alaska Bar Association.

A request from the Alaska Judicial Council.

It is our understanding that both of these pre-conditions have now been achieved to permit assignment of a Superior Court judge to be resident in the Kenai Peninsula Borough -- Kodiak Island Borough communities.

Earlier you should have received a resolution of the Alaska Bar Association passed at the May, 1969, convention at Nome, Alaska, requesting the establishment of new judicial positions. In November the Alaska Judicial Council met and recommended establishment of such positions.

To provide a summary of the social and economic reasons for such a program, I enclose a paper entitled "Plea for Equal Treatment." This is a general summary of the facts and reasoning in support of such legislative action as is required.

Please read "Plea for Equal Treatment" that you might be more familar with this subject.

Thank you for any consideration and support.

Yours truly,

Dear Representative Jackson:

Enclosed is an article entitled "Plea for Equal Treatment." While you should have received a copy of the enclosed article as an item of general information to the entire Alaska Legislature, it should be especially of interest to you in your capacity as a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Therefore, in the event that you might have overlooked this request, an additional copy is sent to you.

If I may be able to furnish any additional information, please call upon me to do so.

Thank you for any consideration you may be able to give to the authorization of a resident Superior Court Judge in the Kenai-Kodiak Borough communities.

Yours truly,

James E. Fisher

PLEA FOR EQUAL TREATMENT

BY: JAMES E. FISHER, President
Kenai Peninsula Bar Association

This is addressed to all interested Alaskans. It is a request for your help and knowledge in a matter of equal treatment.

This is a plea for equal treatment. Please do whatever possible to insure that your fellow Alaskans on the Kenai Peninsula and Kodiak Island have the same access to a resident Superior Court Judge as your neighbors in comparable hometowns.

A request for the assignment of a Superior Court Judge to be resident in the Kenai-Kodiak communities can only be justified on the service to residents. Such a request rings hollow if based on convenience to the legal profession. Alaskans should not rest until legal services are dispensed as equitably as possible. One of the watchwords of the law is that 'justice delayed is justice denied.". That situation is frequently faced by residents of the Kenai Peninsula and Kodiak Island communities because the Superior Court's services can be remote and therefore costly.

Roy Madsen, President of the Kodiak Bar Association has outlined the problem in a letter to State Representative Peter M. Deveau:

> "Further, Alaska statutes afford individuals certain provisional remedies such as attachment, civil arrest, injunction, temporary restraining order, executions after judgment and the like which when applied for from an outlying area such as Kodiak require approximately two weeks as they have to be prepared here, mailed to Anchorage, signed by the Judge, turned over to the Alaska State Troopers for service and then be returned for service. If we had a full time Superior Court here the two week period could be reduced and all of this could be accomplished in one day ; therefore it is my contention as it has been all along, that people that live as far away as we do from a full time Superior Court Judge are being deprived of these remedies."

In spite of the best intentions of a visiting judge it is not possible to have wide community knowledge. A resident Superior Court judge can provide more precise and comprehensive service resulting from knowledge of the community.

Until a resident Superior Court judge is stationed in the Kenai-Kodiak communities, it can be argued this important area does not receive equal protection of the law. In the same letter quoted above, Madsen outlined this example:

"The Alaska Statutes provide that trials for the foreclosu of a mechanic's lien are given priority over all other types of cases except criminal cases. Article I of the Constitution of the State of Alaska states that: "all persons are equal and entitled to equal rights and opportunities and protection under the law". A classical example of the inequality of the residents of this area (Kodiak) resulting from lack of a Superior Court being here, was a lawsuit for a foreclosure of a mechanic's lien in Kodiak. The case dragged on for months and years and fianlly in order to get it set down for trial at all the local attorney had to agree to a trial in Anchorage in order to accomodate the Court's calendar and the opposing attorney's schedule. The Court in Anchorage had to hear evidence on a matter which involved questions concerning materials, and worksmanship on a building situated in Kodiak without having the opportunity of viewing the building in question, and after some five days of trial, the case was recessed for a period of two months requiring the local attorney to return to Anchorage at a later date for continued hearing as well as the witnesses involved."

One critical inefficiency resulting from lack of resident Superior Court judicial service is the effect on other government agencies. On the Kenai Peninsula Borough as many as five of a detachment of seven Peninsula based Alaska State Troopers have been absent at one time in Anchorage attending grand jury proceedings. Under such conditions, for practical purposes, there was no police protection for the Central Peninsula.

When economic justifications are considered the number of Alaskans in the Kenai and Kodiak Boroughs should be remembered. The Kenai Peninsula Borough and Kodiak Island Borough comprise an estimated population of 25-35,000 persons who are served as an additional responsibility of the Superior Court judges at Anchorage. The residents in those communities live in an area which was providing in excess of 50 per cent of the State's resource derived revenue (until the oil lease sale on the North Slope). Such activity should have available equal governmental service.

For housing courts in both Kenai and Kodiak, courtrooms are in existance and could be utilized without excessive additional capital type expenditures.

Another practical consideration is the fact that a Superior Court Judge could handle District Court matters. At present there are no district judges assigned on the Kenai peninsula. An assigned Superior Court judge could achieve economy in operations by handling District Court matters -- and provide an interesting opportunity for experiment by the Alaska Court System.

Almost everybody would agree, eventually there should be resident Superior Court Judicial service in both the Kenai and Kodiak communities. However, such service should not be delayed so a newly assigned Superior Court judge would have an overwhelming or impossible burden commencing from the first day of service.

The need for a Superior Court judge for Kenai-Kodiak communites has been recognized in pending legislation before the Sixth Alaska State Legislature and such legislation could be acted upon with dispatch during the Second Session commencing in January, 1970.

The Alaska Bar Association urged efforts to securing new judges for both Kenai-Kodiak and Sitka. The Alaska Judicial Council has recommended staffing of judges which would provide resident judicial service to Kenai-Kodiak.

Please remember this request for help as stated in the title of this article "A Plea for Equal Treatment."

PRESENTATION TO ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE
OF REASONS FOR SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE ON KENAI PENINSULA

I. Partial list of economic and social reasons:

A. The Kenai Peninsula Borough presently has a population of 18,000 to 22,000 people (from school and other sources).

B. Over one-third (1/3) of the State's derived revenues for Alaska come from the Kenai Peninsula Borough.

C. It is the third largest borough in the State in population.

D. Enrollment in the Kenai Peninsula Community College is third in the State.

E. It is the site of the largest industrial development in the State -- development that focuses on extraction and on primary and secondary processing of resources before their shipment.

F. A Court facility is available for immediate use by the Judge (if a new municipal building-civic center is authorized in Kenai an additional Court room facility would be available).

G. In the immediate Kenai-Soldotna-North Kenai area an Alaska Trooper source has been quoted as saying that only one-third of the Troopers are available for the activity, criminal, etc, within their area of primary responsibility. A resident Superior Court Judge would more effectively utilize such forces.

H. The Kenai Peninsula Borough is second in assessed valuation in the State (Kenai Peninsula $308,604,543 as compared to $822,564,271 for the Greater Anchorage Area Borough).

II. Present situation:

A. In the area of heaviest pressure, Kenai-Soldotna-North Kenai area a magistrate has performed with a case load which at times has exceeded that, for purposes of comparison, the caseload of the Fairbanks based District Court. In spite of outstanding performance it is not fair to the Magistrate nor to the surrounding communities to depend entirely upon him for future services in the quantity required in the past.

B. Approximately once per month a Superior Court travels on circuit to Kenai. Recently the activities have required more and more time of a judge at Kenai. Such demands disrupt the on going program in the Greater Anchorage area (i.e. when the judge is gone criminal and trial calendars are apt to be chaotically disrupted by the judges absence which could ramify throughout the Third Judicial District).

III. An approximate statistical comparison of Superior Court judges available for areas of the state are as follows:

A. In the Anchorage area there is approximately one Superior Court Judge per 20,000 people.

B. In the Fairbanks area there is approximately one Superior Court Judge per 15,000 people.

C. In Southeast Alaska there is approximately one Superior Court Judge per 10,000 people.

Would cooperate
w/ Kodiak for a unit

D. In Nome, there is one Superior Court Judge for approximately 5,000 to 10,000 people.

E. The Kenai Peninsula is an area of 18,000-22,000 people which is presently unserved by a resident Superior Court Judge.

F. The above comparison is not intended as a request that judicial services should be diverted from any other area of the State. One can be sure that the communities where resident Superior Court Judges are stationed can easily and extensively justify why such service should be continued in their local areas -- or augmented.

G. Judges must rely on their experience and knowledge in order to most effectively serve. A judge should be immediately familiar with the area. In other words to insist on transient or circuit judges to decide measures relating entirely to the Kenai Peninsula is unfair both to the judge and to the parties coming before him because he is not completely familiar with the area in which he is on circuit at that time.

H. When any activities involving criminal hearings or proof required of Alaska State Troopers are called for, frequently fifty (50) percent or more of the entire staff of the local Trooper detachment can be in Anchorage leaving the Kenai Peninsula substantially unpoliced (such a time is when cases are being presented to the Grand Jury, when testimony is required in a particular case, etc.).

IV. Anticipated responses to questions:

A. Funding is a matter that would have to be accomplished from general state revenues. It should be accomplished to at least establish a parity of governmental service for the Kenai Peninsula with other areas of the state.

B. If it is necessary to justify your actions authorizing stationing of a Superior Court Judge on the Kenai Peninsula to your own local areas, this can be done on the basis that such services are essential if the entire state is to develope in an orderly fashion -- which benefits us all anywhere in the state.

The Honorable Terry Miller
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska

Again I would express my appreciation to you and your committee for permitting me to testify in regards to a Superior Court Judge when I was in Juneau on 17 February, 1969. Pursuant to the request of the committee, I am submitting a written summary of my testimony. I had hoped to contact the House Judiciary Committee and the Finance Committees of both houses. However, as delegation coordinator of the joint Kenai-Soldotna Legislative trip I found that time evaporated. Enclosed is a copy of the joint Kenai-Soldotna Legislative Program.

COPY

By copy of this letter, I am informing the House Judiciary Committee and the Finance Committee of both The House and The Senate of my testimony before your committee.

The joint Kenai-Soldotna Legislative Delegation was a landmark experience. It is the first time the two areas have worked together in such a project. We had a weather problem in that we had to overnite in Seattle which caused further delay in our schedule. There were twelve in our delegation and a copy of the joint program is attached.

The Kenai Peninsula is experiencing rapid growth. It is one of the most rapidly developing areas in the United States. We are experiencing similar problems that other frontier areas in the American development experienced. Rather than sit at home and complain, we have decided to come before the Legislature with our requests.

As you know, with rapid growth also come problems as well as opportunities. There are now somewhere between eighteen and twenty-two thousand people on the Peninsula. Over one-third of the State Revenues now come from the Kenai Peninsula area.

The Kenai Peninsula badly needs a resident Superior Court Judge. We appreciate what the Superior Court Personnel and the Court System have done with existing funds. However, it is just not adequate.

We are not asking for a District Judge. We ave a most competent Magistrate in Jess H. Nicholas, Jr. Further, the District Judge does not have sufficient jurisdiction to handle the cases on the Kenai Peninsula.

The case load from the Peninsula is very difficult to estimate. For example, it is my understanding that the probate matters still must be filed in Anchorage. Further, the felonies are still filed in Anchorage that arise in this area and all of the individuals who qualify for legal aid are generally taken care of through Anchorage filings. However, with a population of approximately 20,000 people, there is no problem in keeping a resident Superior Court Judge busy. For example, Ketchikan has about 10,000 people; Juneau has 12,000. I am sure that the Attorneys in Ketchikan and Juneau would be emphatic in insisting that their respective communities can keep a resident Judge busy. Nome does not have the population but in that vast area, a resident Judge is probably needed.

I would emphasize that we are not suggesting that Judicial Personnel be reduced anywhere in the State. On the contary, we believe that judicial facilities and personnel should be increased.

At the present time the Kenai Peninsula is the third largest population center center in Alaska. We are the only major population center without a resident Superior Court Judge.

The Court does come down once a month. However, this is just not adequate. When a Judge leaves Anchorage, the Anchorage Calendar is interrupted. Sometimes the Court schedules change or there is a weather problem. This generally means that our people and our witnesses sometimes wait an entire day and still do not receive the needed judicial services. The people from the Peninsula are often jerked up to Anchorage for hearings that could just as well have been heard locally. The last two times the Court has come to Kenai he has spent the better part of week in Kenai. The last time the Judge came, the criminal jury case had to be continued and the Judge had to return to Anchorage. This meant that the divorce matters, estate matters and other situations were not taken care of. Many of these problems involve marital disputes in which it would be imposing to ask a Judge to leave the busy Anchorage Calendar to come down to hear a restraining order, etc. However, these people need to be taken care of.

It would not be an expensive proposition to put a resident Judge on the Kenai Peninsula. The new Court Facility has chambers for a resident Judge. We would hope that the resident Judge would serve the entire Peninsula.

The question was asked whether or not the Peninsula would be willing to cooperate with Kodiak on a Superior Court Judge. As I explained, we have a very good relationship with Kodiak. If the only politically feasible mannner in which to obtain a resident Peninsula Judge is to provide that the Judge reside on the Peninsula and serve Kodiak on a weekly basis, we would have no objections. I would imagine that the day is rapidly approaching when there will have to be a resident Judge both on the Peninsula and in Kodiak. Likewise, I would repeat that we do not disapprove of increasing judicial personnel in other areas that need additional Judges. However, I want to impress again that these other areas are asking for additional Judges while the Kenai Peninsula does not even have one Judge at the present time.

In view of the population on the Kenai Peninsula and the amount of revenues pumped into the State (probably in excess of thirty million dollars), we would respectfully request a resident Superior Court Judge on the Peninsula.

The Kenai Peninsula Bar Association feels that the Superior Court Judge is the top priorty item. We are also supporting the increase in judicial compensation and the Public Defender bill.

I believe that there will be additional people to testify later on in the session from the Kenai Peninsula in regards to the needs for a resident Superior Court Judge.

Thank you.again for your courtesy.

Very truly yours,

James C. Hornaday

Dear Representative Jackson:

In accordance with your request we are sending you herewith the 1968 caseload statistics of the various superior court locations in the State of Alaska. We are also enclosing herewith the number of cases filed in superior court wherein the causes of action arose in the Kenai peninsula and on Kodiak island.

In 1968 there were 4,485 superior court cases filed in Anchorage. Of these, 591 were children's cases, being handled by the family court judge, and 442 were probate cases, being handled by the probate master. The remaining 3,452 cases were assigned to the five superior court judges who exercise general trial jurisdiction, making a total caseload per judge of 690 cases.

In Fairbanks the number of cases filed in 1968 was 1,176. Of these 197 cases were probate matters, being handled by the probate master. 147 cases were children's proceedings. The balance of 962 cases are divided between the two superior court judges, making a total caseload per judge of 481.

In Juneau 719 cases were filed in the superior court, of which 72 were children's proceedings, which are processed by the juvenile master. 110 cases were filed in probate. The balance of the caseload to be handled by the one judge of the superior court was 537 cases.

In Ketchikan 485 cases were filed in the superior court, of which 50 were probate, being handled by the probate master, and 119 children's proceedings which are currently being handled by a master. The balance to be handled by the superior court judge was 316 cases.

In Nome the superior court judge handles all of the civil, criminal, probate and children's proceedings. In 1968 the total cases filed in Nome was 324.

Of the superior court cases filed in Anchorage during 1968 we have conducted a case by case study to determine how many of those originated in Kenai and the Kenai peninsula and how many originated in Kodiak. The results are as follows:

Kenai peninsula civil and criminal	157
Total	214

Of the 214 civil, criminal and probate cases listed above, 126 originated in the City of Kenai area and 88 originated elsewhere on the Kenai peninsula.

Kodiak civil and criminal	133
Total	177

Presiding Superior Court Judge Ralph E. Moody confirms what Chief Justice Nesbett told your committee in Juneau, that superior court judges from Anchorage do service both the Kenai and Kodiak locations at least once each month and all litigants from those areas have an opportunity to be heard.

It should also be pointed out that many of the causes of action arising in the Kenai peninsula area involve attorneys of both sides who reside in Anchorage and for the purposes of motions and pleadings it is more convenient for them to be heard at Anchorage. In this respect the records indicate only 70 of the 214 Kenai cases were filed by Kenai attorneys. In Kodiak all but 58 cases were filed by Kodiak lawyers.

We trust that this statistical information complies with your request. If you need any further information please do not hesitate in requesting it.

Sincerely,

Robert H. Reynolds

As President of the Kenai Peninsula Bar Association I have been directed by the membership to travel to Juneau to work for legislation which would result in the stationing of a Superior Court Judge on the Kenai Peninsula.

If possible I would like to appear before your committee, or sub-committees to make a formal presentation of the request for a Superior Court Judge to be stationed on the Kenai Peninsula.

In the event a formal meeting is not possible, then I would hope to meet informally with individual members of the committee or with groups of members of your committees.

I hope to be in Juneau Tuesday and Wednesday, March 11th and 12th. Would such a date be reasonable? If it is possible to answer my inquiry regarding the date of appearance, for your convenience I would accept a collect telephone call or wire.

Dear Committee Members:

The Kenai Peninsula badly needs a resident Superior Court Judge. Existing personnel of the Superior Court and the Alaska Court System have been cooperative to the extent of the personnel and funds available.

However, the development has now reached a point where a resident Superior Court judge is a necessity. You might think we would request a District Judge. However, this would not help the situation as a District Judge does not have sufficient jurisdiction either in civil or criminal cases. Likewise, we feel that Magistrate Nicholas should continue to handle Magistrate matters.

As you know, over 1/3 of the operating revenues of the State of Alaska come from the Kenai Peninsula area. Likewise approximately 18,000 to 22,000 people now reside on the peninsula. It is the third largest population center in Alaska. Several areas that do not have the population nor the activity of the peninsula have resident Superior Court judges. I wish to emphasize that we do not desire a reduction of judicial services in any location in Alaska. Further, there are other areas that need additional judges. However, the peninsula is the only population center that does not have a resident judge.

The Superior Court does come down from Anchorage once each month. However, this is just not adequate for the present population density. Sometimes the court schedule is changed and our witnesses will sit all day waiting. Likewise, sometimes the weather prevents the arrival of the judge. This situation also complicates the court calendar in Anchorage. For example, the last two months, the court has spent the better part of a week in Kenai, which indicates that Anchorage is short a judge almost 25% of the time.

On numerous occasions a judge has been needed for restraining orders, criminal matters, etc. We do now have a deputy clerk for the Superior Court. However, I believe the probate matters from this area are still filed in Anchorage as well as many criminal cases arising out of peninsula activities.

I would advise that the recently completed court facility in Kenai has chambers for a Superior Court judge. It would be our hope that the court would serve the entire peninsula.

Your cooperation would be very much appreciated.

Thank you.

The Honorable Peter M. Deveau
State Representative
State Capitol Building
Pouch V
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Pete:

I am writing to commend you on H.B. 115 requesting a full-time Superior Court Judge to sit in Kodiak.

I want you to know that I fully support a full-time Superior Court Judge for the Kodiak-Aleutian-Bristol Bay Area and that the Kodiak Bar Association supports this legislation also because we strongly feel that the people of this and other areas such as the Alaska Peninsula and Bristol Bay are being effectively denied the equality guaranteed them by our Constitution under the present arrangement.

I have requested the Superior Court to schedule all preliminary motions and pre-trial conferences concerning Kodiak cases for hearing at Kodiak and that all cases originating in Kodiak be designated as Kodiak cases. However, none of this has been accomplished so it is necessary for the attorney for a litigant from Kodiak to travel to Anchorage for the purpose of appearing for preliminary motions and pre-trial conferences. In many civil actions this may require three or four trips to Anchorage before trial, each of which uses one whole day of the attorney's time and a portion only of this time is recoverable as costs (if the party is successful in securing a judgment and collecting on it) whereas if there were a Superior Court sitting in Kodiak, a matter such as this would take only a few minutes or at most an hour.

Further, the Alaska Statutes afford individuals certain provisional remedies such as attachment, civil arrest, injunction, temporary restraining orders, executions after judgment and the like which when applied for from an outlying area such as Kodiak require approximately two weeks as they have to be prepared here, mailed to Anchorage, signed by the Judge, turned over to the Alaska State Police for service and then be returned here for service. If we had a full time Superior Court here this two week period could be reduced and all of this could be accomplished in one day; therefore, it is my contention and has been all along that people who live as far away as we do from a full-time Superior Court Judge are being deprived of these remedies.

I feel that a Superior Court Judge here could handle all probate matters, estates, adoptions, uniform reciprocal enforcement of support act proceedings and any such matters now going through the Probate Master in Anchorage and in addition I feel that if we had a full-time Superior Court Judge here in Kodiak we could abolish the District Court position and merely have a Magistrate Court to handle small claims and the City cases and the Magistrate could act in the dual capacity of Magistrate and Clerk of the Superior Court. The attendant costs of the new Superior Court could be set off in part by the present salary of the District Court and in part by eliminating the travel expense now used by the present Superior Court Judges when traveling to and from Kodiak and their per diem during Court sessions; however, I do feel that provisions should be made for travel to Bristol Bay and the Alaska Peninsula.

The Alaska Statutes provide that trials for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien are to be given priority over all other types of cases except criminal cases. Article One, Section One of the Constitution of the State of Alaska states that:

> "All persons are equal and entitled to equal rights, opportunities and protection under the law."

A classic example of the inequality of residents in this area due to the lack of a Superior Court sitting here involves a lawsuit for a foreclosure of a mechanic's lien here in Kodiak. This case dragged on for months and years and finally in order to get it set down for trial at all the local attorney had to agree to a trial in Anchorage in order to accomodate the Court's calendar and the opposing attorney's schedule. The Court sitting in Anchorage had to hear evidence on a matter which involved questions concerning materials and workmanship on a building situated in Kodiak without having the opportunity to view the building in question and after some five (5) days of trial the case was recessed for a period of two months requiring the local attorney to return to Anchorage at a later date for continued hearing as well as the witnesses involved.

Under the present circumstances with no Superior Court situated here in Kodiak the people residing in this area and the Bristol Bay and Aleutian Chain area only have equal rights if they can afford to pay to pursue them; only have equal opportunities under the law if they can afford to pay to pursue them; and only have equal protection under the law if they can afford to pay for it.

In addition to the matters above mentioned we have the matter of inconvenience in attempting to prosecute for criminal offenses. If a felony is committed in Kodiak under the present arrangement and when an arrest is made the person is brought before the District Judge. If he is held to answer to the Superior Court he is transported to Anchorage until his matter goes before the grand jury. This requires a State Trooper to transport the prisoner to and from Kodiak and at the time the case is presented to the grand jury any witnesses from Kodiak must travel to Anchorage to testify. If the person desires to retain a Kodiak attorney, his attorney has to travel to Anchorage to consult with him. When it is set for trial in Kodiak the attorney has no opportunity to consult with the client prior to trial and therefore the Defendant is denied actually the usual conferences with his attorney prior to the trial of his case. The Judge and prosecuting attorney have to travel to Kodiak all at the expense of the State.

The case load of the present Superior Court Judges sitting in Anchorage is the heaviest in the State and when they are required to travel and sit in other areas this naturally puts them further behind.

Kodiak and the Aleutian Chain have always been politically, economically and ethnically separated from Anchorage and as such a separate community it is entitled to the stability and dignity that the creation of a full-time Superior Court sitting in Kodiak would bring.

If you should need any witnesses to testify on behalf of this Bill when it comes up for hearing I would be more than happy to travel to Juneau at my own expense and I am sure I could get some local businessmen who have had to pay the cost of having cases litigated in Anchorage to appear and testify in support of this Bill also.

With best personal regards, I am

Very truly yours,

ROY H. MADSEN

Juneau, Alaska 99801

Gentlemen:

Your committees, meeting jointly, are considering legislation that would establish a public defender system in Alaska.

Please be advised that the Juneau Camp of the Alaska Native Brotherhood (ANB) and the Alaska Native Sisterhood (ANS) strongly endorses this and urges favorable action by the joint committees. We elect not to enter into the specifics of such legislation as we feel confident that other proponents will discuss the technical and legal aspects of the bill with the joint committees.

While you may be assured that the Juneau Camp expresses its' own desires, you may be equally assured that we feel we speak in the best interests of the natives of Alaska.

Not only would this be desirable for all natives, but the impact of implementing such a system would be tremendous for all persons, irregardless of ethnicity. We therefore urge that this be enacted and due consideration be given to establishing an office in each judicial district of our state.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Representative Metcalf:

Re: H.B. 136

The Department of Labor supports H.B. 136.

This legislation would allow the Alaska Department of Labor to furnish information obtained in administering the unemployment insurance law to the Alaska Department of Revenue in order for the Department of Revenue to administer the Alaska Revenue Act. At present this information is furnished to the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. The Department of Labor and the Department of Revenue are charged with the responsibility of collecting taxes. In fulfilling this obligation, information is obtained by both departments. A free interchange of information between the departments for legitimate purposes would increase the efficiency and effectiveness of required tax collections within the State.

It is my understanding that the House Labor Management Committee changed the language of H.B. 136 to limit the Department of Revenue's use of information to tax purposes only. The Department is in accord with that change. The purpose of this interchange of information is only to more effectively administer the collection of taxes as required by law.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Bowdoin:

This letter will confirm the information given to Assistant Attorney General Vernon Snow during Mr. Johnson's recent visit to your agency concerning a proposed amendment to the Alaska Employment Security Act to permit the release of information to the State Department of Revenue to assist in the collection of other State taxes.

Although section 303(a)(1) of the Social Security Act prohibits public disclosure of information obtained from claimants and employers on an unrestricted basis, disclosure to another agency of the government is permitted provided that further disclosure by that agency will be made only to the extent necessary in the discharge of its official responsibility under the State law. If the proposed amendment to section 23.20.110 is adopted, your agency should have an agreement with the Department of Revenue that it would limit its disclosure to the discharge of its responsibility under the Alaska law.

The Department of Revenue should also be advised that since the furnishing of information to that Department is a use of unemployment compensation records for a purpose other than administration of the State unemployment compensation law, the administrative costs of furnishing such information must be paid out of general funds rather than funds granted under Title III of the Social Security Act.

HOUSE BILL NO. 136

House Bill No. 136, introduced at the request of the Governor, and supported by the Department of Labor and the Department of Revenue, will enable the Department of Labor to disclose information held by the Employment Security Division to the Department of Revenue to assist it in collection of state taxes. The bill would not conflict with Federal restrictions on the use of this information, which is already being furnished to the Internal Revenue Service for a limited tax purpose.

The Judiciary Committee amendment would limit the use of the information to tax purposes. The Department of Labor supports this change as in keeping with the intended puspose of H.B. 136.

This is to ask you as a representative of Interior Alaska to oppose passage of House Bill 164. We have had Daylight Savings Time for one year only, but I think most people found it desirable. I should like to add my voice to those who think it is important to all forms of youth activity, particularly baseball, that we have the extra hours of sunlight in early June and August that are provided by Daylight Savings Time. Scheduling youth baseball is indeed difficult without it.

I am sure you will hear from many people as to other advantages of Daylight Savings Time such as in the field of transportation, and I will agree with them that it is desirable from many viewpoints. I urge a continuance of Daylight Savings Time to facilitate youth athletics in the Fairbanks area.

HB179

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 179

This bill would establish qualifications and training for police officers in Alaska through the creation of a Police Standards Council. The bill follows the provisions of the Model Police Standards Council Act very closely.

When a person calls the police he has the right to hope that a well-trained, skilled and reliable man will answer the call. In some areas of Alaska today that hope may not be justified. Standards of police employment, and the actual practices of hiring, vary widely, and there is no uniform requirement of training.

The law enforcement officer is responsible for the protection of life and property and for the enforcement of laws and ordinances. He must know the law of arrest and of searches and seizures. He must be skilled in first aid and life-saving techniques. He should possess investigative ability, including good powers of observation, and the sense to interpret his findings and make an effective factual presentation, in order to command respect for law and order, he has to have general intelligence, emotional stability, good judgment, and the ability to handle complex situations under emergency conditions. We certainly expect him to possess good moral character and a high degree of physical fitness. In brief, he is expected to be a living example of all that is good within our society.

We require training and set standards for our physicians, attorneys, teachers, embalmers, beauticians, and barbers. It is time we did the same for our police.

Specifically, this bill creates a council containing representatives of the federal, state and local governments. The council will adopt regulations governing police training and certification, and will provide training programs. Presently employed officers may continue in employment. Some federal funds are available for the functions contemplated by this bill on a matching basis, and the bill provides for a sharing of funds by local governments to reimburse expenses invoked in police training programs.

There are 23 states having statewide police standards legislation, of which 7 are modeled on the prototype of the present bill.

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman House Judiciary Committee
Sixth State Legislature

DATE : March 20, 1969

FROM: Lieutenant G. O. Williams

SUBJECT: My Testimony Relative to SB 179

This memorandum is submitted to the committee pursuant to your request.

I will not address myself to the question of the funds which will be available for police officer training under the Omnibus Crime Bill. Mr. Rick Lauber of the Governor's Crime Commission will discuss this subject.

In my testimony, I stated that there were numerous federal grants which were becoming available for the training of law enforcement officers. Funds for police training under the Omnibus Crime Bill of 1967 may be wholly conditional to the passage of a Police Standards and Training Act.

Legislation of this type is essential to the coordination of grant applications for federal funding under a variety of programs. During 1968, the Department of Public Safety applied for and received federal funding for the following projects which had an important training component.

NEW CAREERS - $125,000 program funded by the U. S. Department of Labor which provided for a 14-week training program for police and correctional aides in the Division of Corrections and the Department of Public Safety. Invitations to participate in the program were extended to all municipalities.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION - $10,000 program funded by the State Department of Education which provided books, training materials and training equipment for the State Trooper Academy.

We are currently awaiting final approval of the following projects which have been funded under the Highway Safety Act.

BREATHALYZER TRAINING - A program which will provide the transportation, maintenance and training expenses for municipal and state police officers to qualify them in the supervision of breathalyzer testing programs.

M E M O R A N D U M

POLICE TRAFFIC SUPERVISION - A program which will provide the transportation, maintenance and training expenses for municipal police traffic supervisors to train them in the advanced techniques of traffic accident investigation and traffic enforcement.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL CARE - A program which will provide the transportation, maintenance and training expenses for 100 volunteer and professional firemen, policemen and other personnel engaged in the transportation of sick or injured persons. The training will encompass advanced first aid and emergency rescue procedures.

The Honorable Barry Jackson, Chairman

Dear Representative Jackson:

I have received your letter of March 17, 1969, concerning House Bill 179, which is presently before your Committee. The purpose of the Bill, establishing an Alaska Police Standards Council, was discussed with Chief Wellington and he has informed me that as a police administrator, he feels the Bill is necessary in order to upgrade the qualifications for individuals desiring to be employed as police officers within the State of Alaska.

At the present time, there are no minimum qualifications for the individual, or standards set for the training he should receive. As a result of this, some cities have no standards or training for their officers. Of course, as an elected official, I can see the danger in this. The citizens of that particular community are going to suffer as a direct result of unqualified, untrained officers handling the police functions in their area.

Here in Juneau, I think we are fortunate that our Police Department has set standards for recruitment and also has taken the initiative to provide training, which is acceptable, but far from being the ultimate answer.

I definitely feel that the cities should not relinquish any power to a State board, but after reviewing the proposed Bill, five of the nine member committee will be representatives of local government, and this should be the safeguard that the cities will need in order to insure that programs are not pressed upon them which they are financially unable to meet.

For years, different professions throughout the State have been regulated by State boards' rules and regulations, and I think it is important that some minimum standards be set for the recruitment and training of our police officers. Therefore, I am generally in favor of passage of House Bill 179.

Thank you very much for giving me the opportunity of making these comments to you.

Sincerely,

Subject: HB179

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 makes provision for federal assistance to states and units of local government for academic educational assistance. By grants and loans to law enforcement personnel, an effort is being made to upgrade the educational level of those presently engaged in law enforcement.

While the Governor's Planning Council on the Administration of Criminal Justice has not as yet submitted its Comprehensive Law Enforcement Plan, it appears that training in all areas of law enforcement will be a priority item. If the Council determines that funds should be allocated from the federal grant to units of local government to assist them in training police officers, up to 75 percent of the cost of the program may be paid under the federal grant. Either the unit of local government or the state could match the additional 25 percent.

While not specifically mentioned in the Act, I feel that the Justice Department would require that the state establish minimum curriculum requirements for the training of police officers. These standards could be arbitrarily fixed by the Governor's Planning Council on the Administration of Criminal Justice, but it would appear far better to have the curriculum established by representatives of units of local government with the assistance of state and federal agencies involved and concerned.

SUBJECT: Fiscal Note - HB 179
Our File 151 - 1969

In regard to your request for a fiscal note on HB 179, I find it almost impossible to submit a meaningful valid fiscal note on what is a voluntary program. This statement is of course in conflict with the statements of the "Anchorage Police Department Employees Association" in their correspondence with Rep. Harris. If nothing else, that correspondence verifies the need for minimum educational requirements for police officers. (See 18.65.180(b) regarding voluntary and incentive.)

The first year, however, would no doubt consist of planning meetings for formulation of the standards.

Travel and per diem would be the largest item, if not the only one. Estimate, $5,000.00.

Second, third and subsequent years would have too many variables (decisions of the council, number of persons trained, facilities and training methods used, etc.) for me personally to arrive at any meaningful figure.

Since this is not a Department of Public Safety Bill, and the administration or direction would be mainly in the hands of local government, I do not feel qualified to present the fiscal note requested.

RE: HB 179 & Act already passed regarding submission of reports by local police departments to a central State file

Dear Sir:

In regard to HB 179, the Anchorage Police Department Employee's Association (APDEA) is in accord with the professionalization of law enforcement in Alaska by setting uniform and acceptable standards of recruitment and training. However, we do not endorse or recommend HB 179.

The Governor of the State has the sole power to appoint the members of this council. There are no written safeguards to confirm the qualifications of the people on this council. There are also no provisions for allowing the proposed council members to be chosen from representative, evenly distributed geographic areas. Appointment to this council could be politically influenced. This political influence could be directed, through this council, to law enforcement agencies. Influence on law enforcement agencies should only be imposed by legitimate legislative action in the form of laws enacted by elected representatives of the people.

Other hazards of this bill are: Section 18.65.160(1) - For what reason or purpose would a Police Standards Council need police reports and information? Once this information has been released from confidential files it could be made public, thus increasing the right to discovery of defense attorneys and suspected criminals. The names of confidential sources who provide information on criminal activities could be made public. We strongly object and oppose this breach of confidence.

Section 18.65.170(b) - The wording of the second line of sentence one; shall fix other qualifications for the employment of police officers. We feel that this wording leaves too general a discretion to the council.

Section 18.65.170(c) - Pertaining to promotional examinations. Is it to be understood that the council will administer the examination and make the promotion without the voice of the agency in which the vacancy has occurred. This area also comes close to and possibly does give power to horizontal mobility. This would allow a Sergeant in Nome to transfer in rank to the Juneau Police Department. This, of course, would not be realistic.

Section 18.65.200 - We feel that the members of the council should elect their own chairman.

Section 18.65.240(b) - We are greatly concerned that there is a conflict of interests with this section in utilizing existing facilities and programs to avoid duplication. There are two facilities in the State that are well-qualified to meet the standards of police training; one being in Sitka maintained by State personnel, and the other administered by highly qualified instructors of the Anchorage City Police Department. Also, in Anchorage the University of Alaska offers a Police Science curriculum for police officers.

Now, if the political appointed members of this State Police Standards Council are enacted with the power to approve these training facilities and programs with the intent to avoid duplication in the interest of economy and efficiency, we wonder which of the two facilities would be allowed to remain in operation, the State sponsored program or the local municipal program? If the local municipal training program is abolished in favor of the State program in Sitka, would the council also move the Police Science program from the University of Alaska to Sheldon Jackson College? Under Section 18.65.160, paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5, the council is empowered to make this move.

We do not feel that this council should be endowed with absolute power as set forth in this bill. Nor do we believe that the members should be appointed without qualifications and exposed to influence of political dominations. California has a similar but more practical and non-political bill in which compliance thereto is be choice, with a monetary incentive to comply.

We do feel that a Police Standards Council would be beneficial to both State and Municipal law enforcement agencies, and that their function should be in an advisory manner to the State and Municipal agencies. We sincerely believe that more research should be made in this matter before presenting it to the Legislature.

Regarding the other records submission bill, we understand a hearing is to be held by S. Cornelius to establish regulations for this act. We were opposed to this originally and request consideration of the following: lack of State ability to finance an adequate system, the geographic unavailability of the file, the amount of unnecessary reports involved, and of utmost importance, the availability of the file to process servers who are in actuality private investigators.

The only method of operation of such a file that would produce timely, accurate feedback of information is an up-to-date teletype operated data process system designed after the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Crime Information Center (N.C.I.C) on a seven day a week, 24-hour a day basis. This, I am sure, would not be forthcoming from the State.

Dear Barry:

Concerning House Bill No. 179. This was supported by the League of Alaska Cities as a part of our blanket program implemented at the annual meeting of the League of Alaska Cities this past October. I have not followed the bill closely and will have to rely on your judgment regarding your statement that "This bill suggests that it would effectively limit the powers of cities to determine matters related to their own police force." If you feel strongly about this, I would suggest that you take whatever action you feel would be in the best interests of the Fairbanks community. Since the firm of Senator Merdes also acts as our City Attorney, and you have previous experience in this area, I will trust your good judgment in this matter.

Dear Barry:

This is in response to your inquiry on HB NO. 179 which would establish the Alaska Police Standards Council. As I wired you on March 24, 1969, the City of Anchorage opposes this bill. It would effectively invade the home rule powers of cities.

Section 18.65.160 would empower the Alaska Police Standards Council to promulgate regulations including the authority to require the submission of reports and information by police departments in the state. We have found from past experience that such agencies are unmindful of the costs involved in complying with such report requirements. The City is currently taking issue with the Department of Public Safety on regulations which require numerous reports.

This Council would also be empowered to establish minimum educational and training standards for police officers including those employed by cities. So-called "class specifications" which normally include educational training and experience are a part of a comprehensive pay plan. The City of Anchorage, and I am sure other cities, are not prepared to delegate this authority to an appointive state council. It could logically be asked, "if the state should establish standards for police officers, why not have the state establish standards for engineers, firemen, electricians, and any other class of employees of cities and boroughs?" We know that minimum standards also establish the level of pay that is justified. The agency with responsibility for the budget should have the ultimate responsibility for standards. The appropriate agency is the City Council and not the Police Standards Council as proposed in this bill.

I could comment on each of the powers that Section 18.65.160 confers upon this Council but I believe the above remarks make the point I wish to make-- that this is a local matter insofar as it relates to City police officers. The powers proposed for this Council also invades the duties of the State Director of Personnel and will erode the Merit System. You can be assured that if the Council as proposed in this bill is established, there will be demands for similar councils to be established to control engineers and other professions and to eventually remove these positions from local and state civil service or merit systems.

There is such a variance in the needs of the cities of the state that I think it would be next to impossible for the Council to establish meaningful standards on a state-wide basis since the standards in Klawock and Craig would not very well meet the standards in Anchorage or Fairbanks. We feel the City of Anchorage is capable of determining the standards for City police officers, needed training facilities, curriculum, and other matters relating to law enforcement for which it is capable of financing. We find it totally inconsistent for a state agency to establish standards when it does not have the responsibility for funding these standards.

We find it unacceptable to have administration officers or executive officers of cities sitting in a position to prescribe standards that their city councils may not be willing to establish or may be unable to finance.

We appreciate your bringing this matter to our attention and if we can be of further assistance please advise me.

Sincerely yours,

George

A MODEL POLICE STANDARDS COUNCIL ACT

By NORMAN C. KASSOFF
IACP Professional Standards
Division, Washington, D. C. 20036

◆ The technological advances of the twentieth century in the United States have been accompanied by a corresponding advancement in the living standards of its citizens that is unique in the community of nations. This industrial and economic growth has been paralleled by a universal desire to increase the educational level of our population. School building programs, whether for a new construction or the expansion of present facilities, are bringing the opportunity to learn to a very large segment of our population. This emphasis on education is reflected by the prediction that within the next five years some forty percent of the adult population will have obtained the equivalent of a junior college education.

It follows then that the citizen of an enlightened society is not only more aware of the dignity of man, but of the guarantees given to him under the constitution. This awakening has in turn brought about great changes in the attitudes and physical operations of law enforcement agencies all across this country. Never before in our history have the police been so closely observed, criticized, (whether rightly or wrongly), nor have they encountered court decisions that questioned certain police practices. As a result, the law enforcement officer has in some instances found himself incapable of readjustment because of the very nature of this social and legal upheaval.

His ability and the methods used to cope with these new challenges are directly related to the type and quality of training that the police officer has received. Often as not, as our courts have indicated, the American police officer is inadequately prepared to cope with the rapidly changing problems in the society, and it appears that his ability to function in this contemporary society is weakened.

What are the answers to this situation?

If the individual police agencies cannot or will not prepare the officer to meet this pressing challenge, then the individual states must be prepared to provide the leadership and to assist in any means possible to help law enforcement achieve a professional status. Every state is charged with the protection of the health and welfare of its citizens, and all states have, through their legitimate licensing authority, established standards of selection and training for services and professions that affect this important phase of our lives.

LICENSING AND ITS DEVELOPMENT

Licensing as a means to select the more qualified and assure their proper training and education is not a new concept. It can be traced back to the ancient Hebrews, who required their healers and physicians to be of a certain age and practice for a certain period of time under the supervision of an experienced physician before they could use their "art upon the people." The move to professionalize through licensing has been extended to many fields, but strangely enough, it has not been made applicable to a group which must make certain life or death decisions, decisions where a citizen's life, liberty and property may be arrested . . . the law enforcement officers (police) in the United States.

The development of professions in the United States, and indeed in the rest of the world, has been based upon (1) a careful selection of individuals to make certain they have the basic qualifications needed to perform, and (2) an established and tested body of knowledge that the practitioners must master and use in performing their tasks.

It was felt that certain requirements had to be established beforehand to guarantee satisfactory performance, not only during the training period but long after the individual became a member of the profession. The states had a vital interest in this area, for it was found they were the only ones who had the authority to enforce compliance with regard to any criteria laid down by the professional groups. Further, the citizens demanded and expected that the professional be an expert in his field, and so they assented by giving to their state representatives the authority through legislation to determine and regulate, on a statewide basis, whether individuals holding themselves out as members of a profession, were indeed qualified. As professions developed, the selection process readjusted to place a greater emphasis on basic educational qualifications in order to insure a greater degree of success in the training and learning phase by individuals. This, as we shall see, has varied greatly between occupations and professions, but the trend has been in one direction: toward higher basic educational qualifications.

The training of a professional person has, over a period of time, improved in quality and quantity. The factors affecting this were demands by the society for more improved services from the professions, the information explosion, and the great strides made in the areas of science and technology.

These facts have led to a generally accepted standard of what is a profession; and have set in

MODEL POLICE STANDARDS COUNCIL ACT

(Title should conform to state requirements. The following is a suggestion: "An Act establishing a Police Standards Council; providing certain educational and training requirements for members of police forces; and for related purposes.")

(Be it enacted, etc.)

Section 1. Findings and Policy

The legislature finds that the administration of criminal justice is of statewide concern, and that police work is important to the health, safety and welfare of the people of this State and is of such a nature as to require education and training of a professional character. It is in the public interest that such education and training be made available to persons who seek to become police officers, persons who are serving as such officers in a temporary or probationary capacity, and persons already in regular service.

Section 2. Police Officer Defined

As used in this Act:

"Police officer" means any full-time employee of a police department which is a part of or administered by the state or any political subdivision thereof and who is responsible for the prevention and detection of crime and the enforcement of the penal, traffic or highway laws of this State.

Section 3. Police Standards Council

(a) There is hereby established a Police Standards Council, hereinafter called "the Council," in the Executive Office of the Governor. The Council shall be composed of fifteen members, as follows: five chief administrative officers of local government police forces, at least three of whom shall be from forces maintained by incorporated municipalities; five officials or employees of local government who have general executive or legislative responsibilities with respect thereto so chosen as to represent county government and municipal government; [the head of the state police], one representative of higher education, two public members and the Attorney General.

(b) Except for the Attorney General and the [head of the state police] who shall serve during their continuance in those offices, members of the Council shall be appointed by the Governor for terms of four years; provided that no member shall serve beyond the time he holds the office or employment by reason of which he was initially eligible for appointment. Notwithstanding anything in this Section to the contrary, the terms of members initially appointed to the Council by the Governor upon its establishment shall be: three for one year, three for two years, three for three years, and three for four years. The Governor, at the time of appointment, shall designate which of the terms are respectively for one, two, three and four years. Any vacancy on the Council shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment, but for the unexpired term.

(c) The Governor annually shall designate the chairman of the Council, and the Council annually shall select its vice-chairman. The chairman and vice-chairman shall be designated and selected from among the members of the Council.

(d) Notwithstanding any provision of any statute, ordinance, local law, or charter provision to the contrary, membership on the Council shall not disqualify any member from holding any other public office or employment, or cause the forfeiture thereof.

(e) Members of the Council shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to receive reimbursement for any actual expenses incurred as a necessary incident to such service.

(f) The Council shall hold no less than four regular meetings a year. Subject to the requirements of this subsection, the chairman shall fix the times and places of meetings, either on his own motion or upon written request of any [five] members of the Council.

(g) The Council shall report annually to the Governor and legislature on its activities, and may make such other reports as it deems desirable.

Section 4. Powers

In addition to powers conferred upon the Council elsewhere in this Act, the Council shall have power to:

1. Promulgate rules and regulations for the administration of this Act including the authority to require the submission of reports and information by police departments within this State.

2. Establish minimum educational and training standards for admission to employment as a police officer: (a) in permanent positions, and (b) in temporary or probationary status.

3. Certify persons as being qualified under the provisions of this Act to be police officers.

4. Establish minimum curriculum requirements for preparatory, in-service and advanced courses and programs for schools operated by or for the state or any political subdivisions thereof for the specific purpose of training police recruits or police officers.

5. Consult and cooperate with counties, municipalities, agencies of this State, other governmental agencies, and with universities, colleges, junior colleges, and other institutions concerning the development of police training schools and programs or courses of instruction.

6. Approve institutions and facilities for school operation by or for the state or any political subdivision thereof for the specific purpose of training police officers and police recruits.

7. Make or encourage studies of any aspect of police administration.

8. Conduct and stimulate research by public and private agencies which shall be designed to improve police administration and law enforcement.

9. Make recommendations concerning any matter within its purview pursuant to this Act.

10. Employ a Director and such other personnel as may be necessary in the performance of its functions.

11. Make such evaluations as may be necessary to determine if governmental units are complying with the provisions of this Act.

12. Adopt and amend bylaws, consistent with law, for its internal management and control.

13. Enter into contracts or do such things as may be necessary and incidental to the administration of its authority pursuant to this Act.

Section 5. Required Standards

(a) Police officers already serving under permanent appointment on the effective date of this Act shall not be required to meet any requirement of subsections (b) and (c) of this Section as a condition of tenure or continued employment; nor shall failure of any such police officer to fulfill such requirements make him ineligible for any promotional examination for which he is otherwise eligible. The legislature finds, and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act, that such police officers have satisfied such requirements by their experience.

(b) At the earliest practicable time, the Council shall provide, by regulation, that no person shall be appointed as a police officer, except on a temporary or promotionary basis, unless such person has satisfactorily completed a preparatory program of police training at a school approved by the Council, and is the holder of a Bachelor's degree from an accredited institution. No police officer who lacks the education and training qualifications required by the Council may have his temporary or probationary employment extended beyond one year by renewal of appointment or otherwise.

(c) In addition to the requirements of subsections (b), (e) and (f) of this Section, the Council, by rules and regulations, shall fix other qualifications for the employment and promotion of police officers, including minimum age, education, physical and mental standards, citizenship, good moral character, experience, and such other matters as relate to the competence and reliability of persons to assume and discharge the responsibilities of police officers, and the Council shall prescribe the means for presenting evidence of fulfillment of these requirements.

(d) The Council shall issue a certificate evidencing satisfaction of the requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this Section to any applicant who presents such evidence as may be required by its rules and regulations of satisfactory completion of a program or course of instruction in another jurisdiction equivalent in content and quality to that required by the Council for approved police education and training programs in this State.

Section 6 Police Training Schools and Programs: Grants Under the Supervision of Council and the State

(a) The Council shall establish and maintain police training programs through such agencies and institutions as the Council may deem appropriate.

(b) The Council shall authorize the reimbursement to each political subdivision and to the State 50 percent of the salary and of the allowable tuition, living and travel expenses incurred by the officers in attendance at approved training programs, providing said political subdivisions or state agencies do in fact adhere to the selection and training standards established by the Council.

Section 7. Appropriations

(a) Except as otherwise specifically provided in this Section, the Council shall be supported only by appropriations made by the legislature.

(b) The Council may accept for any of its purposes and functions under this Act any and all donations, both real and personal, and grants of money motion the machinery of the states to guarantee that the high standards of selection and training developed by the professions would be safeguarded from incompetence and frauds.

This has been done through the process of licensing by the several states and is related to a method of control for the benefit of society. In our country this control is based upon the fact, as we have seen, that the several states owe an obligation to their citizens to protect their health, safety and morals from those who might adversely affect it. The states, through their various legislatures, therefore, have enacted laws to safeguard these inherent rights, and indeed have the responsibility to see to it that they are continually protected.

This is not new or unique; it is a sociological phenomena—as any population expands, living becomes more complex. Safeguards are needed not only to protect the society from outright criminal activity of individuals, but also from the less apparent unskilled and untrained individual, whose services can affect the people. This latter area permits the several states to regulate a large variety of activities and occupations. The legislative function, thus, is to secure to all persons the safeguarding of their rights, including the enjoyment of their personal property as well as the equal use and enjoyment of public property. Whatever affects the health, safety and morals of the people is subject to legislative action, and so licensing by legislative edict evolved as a means for this type of protection.

This is not an unreasonable restraint on individual liberty or the society, it is a process that, by building the safeguards, actually protects the individual and the society.

The states have acted, in many areas through the licensing of many enterprises and occupations, with one thought in mind: to improve the end result, whether it be a product or service, either personal or impersonal.

A license or certificate for an occupation is a means of providing the legal guidelines and requirements for those who wish to enter an occupation that affects the health and welfare of the entire from any governmental unit or public agency, or from any institution, person, firm or corporation, and may receive, utilize and dispose of the same. Any arrangements pursuant to this subsection shall be detailed in the annual report of the Council. Such report shall include the identity of the donor, the nature of the transaction, and the conditions, if any. Any monies received by the Council pursuant to this subsection shall be deposited in the [state treasury] to the account of the Council.

(c) The Council, by rules and regulations, shall provide for the administration of the grant program authorized by this Section. In promulgating such rules, the Council shall promote the most efficient and economical program for police training, including the maximum utilization of existing facilities and programs for the purpose of avoiding duplication.

(d) The Council may provide grants as a reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by the State or political subdivisions thereof for the provisions of training programs to officers from other jurisdictions within the state.

Section 8. Severability

The provisions of this Act shall be severable and if any phrase, clause, sentence or provision of this Act is declared to be contrary to the Constitution or laws of this State or of the United States or the applicability thereof to any government, agency, person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of this Act and the applicability thereof to any government, agency, person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

society. It establishes a high uniform standard for the licensee and enforces adherence to the prescribed standards; it further provides the public with the information that the state, within its legal prerogatives, has made certain the practitioner is what he says he is, a professional.

The result: public confidence.

But it was not always so, for we learn from our mistakes.

A license is a permit granted by the sovereign to a person, firm or corporation to pursue some occupation or to carry on some business, subject to regulation under police power. This has been due in part to the efforts of state or national professional organizations raising their own technical standards. This upgrading seems to center about educational qualifications; for example, there is a trend among the states for barbering to require a high school education.

As our population continues to expand, our knowledge should also continue to grow. The result of this complex growth will be a more complex economy and we will begin to see the development of specialization in many more fields of occupations and professions. As a result of this, the trend toward licensure will be subjected to more and more pressure from the public in order to improve the services offered.

The trend for licensing or control has gone far beyond those occupations normally associated with professional status, as evidenced by a recent survey conducted by the International Association of Chiefs of Police. This survey included barbers, beauticians, embalmers, as well as doctors, lawyers and teachers, and was most enlightening. First, all of these occupations had set standards of selection commensurate with their needs; and second, they all had established a body of knowledge which was needed by the practitioner to adequately perform this task. The trend is there, the need has become obvious, and in the interest of the public, the states have seen fit to regulate the several occupations that can and do affect our society.

At the cost of human life and suffering, it took the medical profession many years to have the state legislatures prohibit country store pharmacists and others from practicing medicine and calling themselves doctors without having graduated from accredited medical schools.

At the expense of many innocents going to jail, or heirs being involved in long drawn out litigation over the probating of a will, the public and the state realized the defense of a criminal case or a man's estate after his death were complex legal matters that required the special services of an individual who had received legal training and could demonstrate his learning.

It took several incidents of death to make the states realize that the handling and the preparation of a dead human body posed problems to health, sanitation and hygiene; that to deal effectively with these problems required an understanding of mortuary science, pathology, microbiology, chemistry and other related sciences. The result was the adoption by the states of a selection and training process for those seeking to become embalmers.

Besides some humorous results in haircutting, it took many serious scalp infections in heavily populated areas, for both the states and the barbers to realize that there was more to barbering than just cutting hair; there were questions of hygiene, sanitation, nerve functions in the hand and face, chemistry of the hair and chemical composition of various lotions put on the scalp, all of which affected the type of service given in a barber shop. Together they drew a code of licensing for those practicing barbering to protect the general public and to provide a more efficient service to it.

PRESENT STATUS OF LICENSING: SURVEY RESULTS

The occupational survey conducted by the IACP included such considerations as age, residency, training, and reciprocity. Three of these occupations, the physician, the teacher, and the attorney, were chosen because the police officer of today performs each of these skills to some degree at some time during the course of his employment.

As a "physician" he must know the fundamentals of first aid for the sick and the injured, and practice this skill under the most trying conditions. In many instances he must know the law as thoroughly as a practicing attorney, and without the benefit of a large law library close at hand. The remaining three occupations—barber, beautician and embalmer—listed in the appendices are not less important, and are generally not thought of as professions, but they do indicate the high degree of training needed to function and protect the society. It will be noted that they far exceed the requirements of law enforcement.

Physicians

The survey showed that in order to enter the medical profession the states generally require a maximum of a four-year Bachelor's degree or a minimum of three years of college; four years of training in a medical school recognized and approved by the American Medical Association; and an internship of from one to two years. He must also pass a written and/or oral examination administered to him by the state's medical association in accordance with state law. The median number of hours needed to complete these qualifications is 11,450.

Attorneys

In reference to the attorney, the survey shows that the majority of states require a maximum of a four-year Bachelor's degree(minimum number of states require two years of college), three years at an accredited law school recognized by the American Bar Association, and the passing of a Bar examination. A minority of states require an internship of from one to two years before being permitted to take the Bar examination in lieu of some years of law school. The median number of hours required to complete these qualifications is 9,540.

Teachers

In the majority of states, the teaching profession requires a Bachelor's degree as a minimum, depending upon the grade level and the type of job the teacher seeks. (As an example, some states require a Master's degree for their administrators or principals.) There is now a trend toward a requirement of a fifth year of preparation for teachers in the elementary and secondary schools. In any case, they must serve an internship that may vary from twelve to twenty-four months, depending upon the state. Some states even require the passing of the National Teachers Examination as a requirement for certification. The median time involved to complete these qualifications is 7,400 hours.

Embalmers

The embalming profession in a majority of the states requires a maximum of two years and a minimum of one year of college. The courses required during this period include mortuary science, anatomy and physiology; chemistry—organic and inorganic; pathology; microbiology; sanitation and hygiene; public health laws and regulations; and mortuary law and administration. The professional schooling also requires an internship, varying from twelve to twenty-four months. During this internship, the student must embalm a prescribed number of bodies under the supervision of a licensed practitioner. The median number of hours required to complete these qualifications is 5,580.

Barbers

The licensing of barbers in most jurisdictions, requires a professional schooling of from six to twelve months. Required courses include physiology, hygiene, elementary chemistry, sterilization, and anatomy, including facial bone structures and cranial nerve systems. There is a trend now among the states to require a high school diploma for barbers. An apprenticeship of from six to eighteen months is also required once the training course has been completed. The median number of hours required to meet these qualifications is 4,330.

Beauticians

Such courses as theoretical studies in sanitation and hygiene, anatomy of the head and face, safety measures, use of antiseptics, chemical composition of cosmetics, and the use of electrical appliances consistent with the practical and theoretical requirements as are applicable to cosmetology, are required. The beauticians' general training requirements are similar to those of the barbers; however, the median number of hours required to complete these qualifications is 1,800.

Other Requirements

In each of the previously mentioned occupations, the aspirant must be of good moral character, free from any physical or mental defects which might affect the performance of his work, and only after satisfactorily meeting all these requirements is he or she then permitted to receive a license to practice.

Reciprocity

The survey further showed that licensing is not a means of excluding persons from entering these occupations. With very few exceptions, reciprocity is usually granted to an applicant who has obtained training in another state when requirements are similar to those of the state where he seeks to practice. It is this factor that has also added to the professional status of these occupations. Their training is uniform throughout the United States and lends itself to a national discipline applicable to each state. Licensing does not seek to exclude the qualified and the talented. It does, however, discourage the lazy and incompetent.

Probation

The question of probation does not enter into these described occupations. The practitioners are not permitted to practice their arts or skills until they have fully complied with all of the statutory requirements which may include an oral, practical demonstration, and a written exam. Their internships are strictly controlled and observed to insure compliance. Internship is as much a part of their selection process as is their formalized education and training. The point is quite clear, aspirants to these occupations are not permitted to practice until their licensing boards are satisfied the individuals are qualified.

In law enforcement this is almost unknown. In over 31 per cent of the police agencies, the officer is on the street with little or no training of any type. The concept of probation permits an individual officer to practice his "skills" under a system that in effect is still testing him to determine if his training has been successful—his "guinea pigs" are the public he is supposed to serve. Obviously, it follows that some of America's law enforcement problems are created by the police themselves.

No other profession has "probation." Individuals practicing the occupations surveyed are "on probation" all through their careers. The citizen doesn't look in the phone book for a doctor or an attorney or sit in a barber's chair and hope the individual he is dealing with is qualified; he expects it. When he calls for police assistance he has the right to expect that the officer is as qualified as any other specialist.

To insure the citizen's expectation and to elevate the stature of law enforcement, the myth that an individual hired as a police officer who serves his "probationary period" without incident is qualified, must be examined in the light of what a police officer does today in our society.

LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

Certainly we cannot say that law enforcement is less important than the previously discussed occupations. In fact, it might be said to be even more important considering the drastic social changes that are occurring in the United States. The law enforcement officer is responsible for the protection of life and property and for the enforcement of laws and ordinances. Society expects, and in the future should demand, that he command respect for law and order; integral parts of such qualities are general intelligence and emotional stability, coupled with good judgement. He must maintain order in crowds under extremely difficult circumstances, often unnecessarily complicated by hysterically emotional climaxes. He must be firm, courteous, and still be able, technically, to resolve situations with respect to the rights of others. He must have the ability to analyze situations quickly and objectively, to determine the necessary and proper action to take within the legal structures surrounding his position, and to guarantee the rights of all individuals. He must possess investigative ability, including good powers of observation, coupled with the ability to interpret his findings, to make a factual presentation, to protect the rights of the accused or convicted. He is expected to be a fact-finder for the court. His attributes must, of course, include good moral character, together with a high degree of physical fitness and mental stability. In brief, he is expected to be a living example of all that is good within our society.

Law enforcement agencies, since early in this century, have been talking and are aware of the need to move toward a professional status. So far, this has been a largely uncoordinated, unsupported effort, insofar as the individual officer is concerned. It is true, of course, that there have been some steps taken toward professionalization in law enforcement, albeit slow and unsteady steps in light of the needs. Up to this point, there has been no concentrated effort toward uniform standards for the police either from a personnel, physical or training and operational standpoint. Too often the exigencies of filling a police position result in a waiver of many factors recognized as necessary. The police officer's qualifications place him in a dual status since he must have not only some qualifications of a technician but also some qualifications of a professional.

As a technician, a police officer must have precise knowledge concerning the collection and preservation of evidence, a highly developed ability encompassing scientific methods of processing a crime scene, including the ability to properly lift and preserve latent forms of evidence. He must be skilled in the operation of a motor vehicle, diving gear, and other modern instruments of law enforcement.

As a professional police officer, he must know the criminal codes and be able to readily apply them to situations without the benefit of time for legal research and reflection. He must have a knowledge of rules of evidence, what is admissible and non-admissible. He must have an unreasoning ability to make the right decisions under any given circumstance. He must, under the most extreme conditions, determine when a citizen's property can be searched. Law enforcement today is concerned not only with the prevention of crime and apprehension of criminals, but also with the sociological aspects of crime.

In the field of law enforcement, which has a direct relationship to the important police power doctrine of the states, our research has revealed a complete lack of standards for selection and training. First, licensing required for some occupations is almost unknown in American law enforcement. When we consider the expected capabilities of the American police officer of today, we suddenly realize that the minimum entrance requirements and selection standards in all too many cases are sub-standard. If one were to examine and reflect on the major internal problems of law enforcement across this country today and seek a solution to prevent them from recurring he would, of necessity, have to start with selection and training criteria.

The theory is false that establishing selection criteria has the philosophical approach of a "textbook." Would we consider hiring a person with a felony record or a person with a long history of mental illness? The answer would have to be negative, and yet are these not selective criteria? Would we hire a person who could not read or who had difficulty in learning or adjusting to new situations and place him out on the street to control society? Again, the only possible answer must be in the negative, but shockingly, it is in some instances being done. We are, then, in effect putting a uniform on a man, handing him a gun and a badge, and proclaiming to the community that he is a police officer.

Only four states have gone so far as to include in their minimum statewide standards for law enforcement the number of hours needed to become a police officer. These provide for only about 200 hours. However, required qualifications and training of law enforcement officers have not been up-graded to keep pace with the changing aspects of our society and law enforcement. The graph on page 12 illustrates this point.

By state law the hours of training needed to become a barber or beautician are almost ten times greater than hours of training needed to be a police officer, and yet the police officer's performance must be so exacting and correct that without it society could not function.

There are police officers across this country today with little or no training of any type, whose mental or physical capabilities have not been fully determined, whose mental stability has not been looked into, and who lack the ability to learn and absorb all of the new techniques that are applicable in our changing society. There must be some uniformity of standards. The "village" officer should not be any less important or less able to perform than the "large city" police officer.

In the area of law enforcement, the proposition that "the sovereign can do no wrong," has artificially protected to some degree the untrained and incompetent. Now, even this long established rule of law is undergoing change. There have been court decisions which state that the sovereign is not only responsible for whom it hires but how it trains them.

Statutory Status of Police Training

The survey was effectuated by contacting the Secretary of State for each of the various states and obtaining full copies of their police training laws, if any.

Types of Laws

Two categories of training legislation exist: voluntary and mandatory.

The voluntary type legislation gives to police agencies within the state an option of whether they have their personnel trained under the statewide standards prescribed by law, or whether they have them trained at all. Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and Washington have this type of legislation.

The mandatory type of law requires that all police officers within the given state must successfully conclude the prescribed training program before they can receive a permanent appointment with other departments. Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, and Ohio have this type of legislation.

Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming have no laws at all.

Types of Commissions

A great majority of the existing laws call for the creation of a training commission, in most cases, to "establish the standards needed" for officers entering training and to "prescribe the course content" of the programs and the length of time to be devoted to the program. The function of these important commissions varies greatly. While the great majority of the states have commissions, their makeup differs.

In California, the commission is chosen from a cross-section of educators, police and administrative heads of local government, as well as the attorney general of the state. They function in all matters pertaining to the state training program and are free to carry out all aspects of the law which include, among other things, the inspection of the various programs on a statewide basis.

In Rhode Island, there is no commission and the Superintendent of the State Police sets the requirements for their statewide training program. In Michigan, the eleven-man training council is composed of ten police representatives and "one member nominated by the Metropolitan Club."

In Mississippi, the Commissioner of the Public Safety Department is authorized to establish and maintain a law enforcement officer's training academy. He alone establishes the curricula and determines who will attend.

The effect of this wide diversity in the type and makeup for the various commissions does not permit the establishment of uniform standards in the important matter of selection. There should be absolutely no reason why selection standards should not be uniform throughout the United States. While it is argued that a small community cannot compete in the salary level that high selection standards would cause, there is no escape from the validity of equal salary for equal work; and no community today, large or small, can avoid the inevitable changes that are forecast for the future. The small city or community has the same, if not a greater, obligation to provide its citizens with good law enforcement as has the large community. If we wish to attract and keep capable and qualified people, we must be able to show to all concerned that law enforcement is interested, first, in raising the quality of its officers and then it must inevitably follow that salary increases for work performed will be forthcoming.

The Advisory Council on Education and Training of the IACP, which is made up of members from state, municipal and county police organizations, as well as educational and governmental institutions, has been at work for the last two and one-half years developing a Model Police Standards Council Act. The deliberations of this group have led to the development of a model, which breaks the chains that bind it to the obsolete philosophies that have plagued law enforcement. First, the proposed state council is made up of a cross-section of police officials representing the various levels of government, officials of local government who have had, prior to their present position, general executive or legislative responsibility, together with representatives of higher education, the attorney general and the head of the state police, plus three public members, to compose a well-balanced commission. The designation of the appointments of the commission is totally and specifically spelled out to encourage the commission to administer the law in a progressive manner.

Nationwide adoption of this Model Act is being recommended.

Standards of Selection

Only one state (California) has had its standards of selection built into its statewide training law. By minimum standards of selection, we are referring to the basic qualifications that an individual must have before he will be hired by the police agency. The California law provides for U.S. citizenship, a minimum age of twenty-one, a criminal record check of the applicant to determine if he has been convicted of a crime, fingerprinting, a good moral background determined by a thorough background investigation, education through the twelfth grade, physical fitness as shown by a medical examination, and an oral interview conducted by the hiring agency. While California has such minimum standards, they operate solely within a voluntary law; that is, the various police agencies within California do not have to conform to these requirements if they do not participate in the training programs. It is purely voluntary. If, however, the agency does participate in the program, the local government must pass an ordinance wherein it agrees that it will conform to the minimum standards. While these minimum standards are a step in the right direction, the shortcoming is quite obvious in that there is no total compliance with the law; and while it may be argued that there is a near total compliance in California, it should be pointed out that this is due only to (1) the unique educational system within the state, (2) the large tax base that supports the educational system in the state, and (3) the funds provided from the criminal courts. These three unique realities have enabled the California law to be such a success. It is doubtful whether this type of law would have succeeded as well had it been tried in some state other than California. Further, there is an implication, no matter how slight, that the financial success of the training operation rests upon the number of citizens arrested in California and convicted in its criminal court system. It is questionable to say the least, whether a state should use its police authority to finance any type of training program related directly to the state's welfare and use a source of income for which it was not intended.

However, a major point is still to be considered, and that is one of keeping within the guidelines of other professions, which do not give to doctors, lawyers, teachers, embalmers, barbers, or beauticians an option of participating in the required educational and training programs. The results of such an option would immediately become obvious and disastrous to the health and welfare of the public. It is apparent that one of the strong factors involving professional standards is that compliance on a statewide basis is mandatory.

The voluntary type of police training law appears to be political in nature because a voluntary, as opposed to a mandatory, law stands a better chance of passing through a state legislature. This compromise is a foolhardy one in that the complex requirements of law enforcement today are being subrogated to political compromise and arguments. A comparable situation existed in the United States in 1847, when a bitter argument arose between physicians and pharmacists as to what constituted the practice of medicine and who could practice it. Compromise obviously was not an answer where the public's health and safety were involved. The co. llary is the same when discussing minimum standards for law enforcement. The issue here is that political compromise should not be permitted to enter this very vital question. There is only one question to be answered here: Is the individual who is to become a protector of and guardian for our society, qualified to perform within the society?

The states having mandatory law, such as New Jersey and New York have not provided for minimum standards of selection, apparently for political reasons. The determination of standards is left to the training commissions and it is obvious that with no statutory guidelines to govern them, they may make their own standards of selection. Although this is not to import outright political manipulation, such manner and determination does not always provide for the uniformity requisite in a professional group and permits human elements to enter into the consideration. Unless the statutes already contain minimum standards o. selection, it must follow that there will be cases of poor selection. Poor selection eventually results in the admission of sub-standard individuals who are incapable of learning and absorbing not only the basics, but the complex changes of technology and the society. There is every reason to believe that many problems in the field of law enforcement today were brought about by poor selection; inevitably this created problems not only for the agency, but for the individual involved, as time went on. Today even a twelfth grade education will not suffice. Higher educational requirements are essential not only for today, but for the future. Without careful testing and selection beforehand, we can never be sure of the future progress of the individual law enforcement officer. Certainly education is one of these key factors. Section V of the IACP Model Police Standards Council Act has included the necessary requirements of a police officer as well as higher ranks included in it. A copy of that model accompanies this article. The model act further provides that personnel who are already members of a department who further their education beyond the high school level, be awarded certain benefits for any future promotional examinations that they might participate in. The act in no way prohibits police personnel who do not further their education from taking future promotional examinations. The act further provides that at a certain future date, this date to be left to the states, no person shall be employed as a police officer, except on a temporary or probationary basis, unless he has satisfactorily completed two years of higher education beyond the high school level. At another future date, no person shall be employed except on a temporary or probationary basis unless he has satisfactorily completed courses and holds a Bachelor's degree from an accredited institution. In both instances, the individuals must still satisfactorily complete a police training program approved by the council. This law is mandatory in nature in that it prohibits permanent employment beyond one year unless he has met these educational and training qualifications. Further, the act provides for the council to establish standards involving promotion of police personnel at all ranks, and the best method available to accomplish this objective is to prescribe by law and for a commission to carry it out. This portion of the model law was arrived at after great deliberation and careful study. As has been pointed out, the American public is receiving education above the high school level at a rate previously unknown in our history. The law enforcement officer in order to function in this society must equal if not exceed the general level of education and training. The various states have an obligation to their citizens to provide the best available. This model law supplies the basis from which great strides can be made toward establishing the professional status that is so greatly needed in American law enforcement. The educational requirements will not in and of themselves guarantee good law enforcement but they will eliminate many of the factors that have created bad law enforcement. The police officer of today, and most certainly of tomorrow, must be prepared to act professionally; and what is more important, the American public must look upon him as a professional. To achieve this, the educational requirements must be on a mandatory basis rather than on a voluntary basis, for the reasons already stated.

A review of the survey data indicates a new and guiding force is needed. A recent nationwide police training survey conducted by the International Association of Chiefs of Police has shown that some ninety per cent of over four thousand agencies responding were in favor of some type of statewide minimum standard law dealing with selection and training.

Course Content

The course content of the various police training programs varies greatly from state to state. In some instances the statutes limit the number of classes to be held in any given year or the length of time to be devoted to a program. Iowa has this type of statutory provision. In Illinois, the program is limited to a maximum amount of money that can be appropriated for each man attending the training program. The course content of many

The Dumb Cop

◆ It has been estimated that there are 50,000 openings in the field of law enforcement and that it is getting harder and harder to fill the positions. Recruitment of policemen is a national problem. To the question WHY, the commonest answer is money. But I am convinced that it goes far beyond money. If I were pushed for a one word answer, I would have to say "prestige." For the most part, policemen are looked down upon. The phrase "dumb-cop" is in common usage.

Several years ago I became interested in the education of police officers and decided to find out if the "cops" were dumb. There are about 450,000 law enforcement officers in the United States. About half of them never finished high school. About 12,000 departments do not require a high school diploma. Out of a total of 40,000 police units, only twenty require some college. Multnomah County, Oregon, is the only department in the United States that requires a college degree. Many officers in the Deep South are illiterate and unable to write even a traffic ticket. When I became interested in this problem, I discovered that out of 970 police officers in the city of New Orleans, only nine had college degrees and none of the degrees had anything to do with law enforcement. Incidentally, of the nine degrees, six were held by Negroes.

When we look at police training, the picture is darker. To earn a college degree a student must spend about 2,000 hours in the classroom. To become a beautician an applicant must "put in" 1,200 hours. To become a policeman all you need in most places is an appointment. The City of New Orleans has one of the longest training periods in the country, which is 520 hours. In the same city, the barbers require 2,000 hours plus an 18 month apprenticeship before an applicant can operate his own shop.

To further complicate this training or lack of training, very few agencies do any kind of testing. The City of New Orleans gives a civil service exam, a physical exam, a psychological exam and conducts a background investigation. This combination of tests rejects 91 out of every 100 applicants. When we remember that police work attracts "the lunatic fringe" it is appalling to know that the 91 rejects can apply to non-testing departments and be accepted.

...For the most part, we have better policemen than we deserve...

In New Orleans, a group of citizens became alarmed over the recruitment problem and decided to do something about it. They organized themselves into the Police Scholarship Foundation. Since so many citizens looked down upon the police, the group looked around for a method to create prestige. It was soon apparent that the policeman was the only non-professional in the field of criminal justice. The judge and attorney were professionals in the strictest sense of the word, while the policeman, whose testimony was often vital to the prosecution of a case, was an uneducated and poorly trained adjunct to the system of criminal justice. Therefore, the first step would be to professionalize the policeman and in our society this meant education.

Truly to professionalize the policeman, the education should be directly related to law enforcement. When we started to look for such programs at a college level, we were amazed that the closest university to New Orleans with such a curriculum was over 500 miles away at Tallahassee, Florida. We then approached the local universities and requested that a department of criminology be established. My Board of Directors gave the necessary permission as long as it was started in the Evening Division.

The Evening Division was under my jurisdiction but unfortunately I knew nothing about professional degrees in criminology. To prepare myself for this new responsibility, I visited the major schools of criminology in the United States and spoke with both police students and faculty members. The consensus of opinions was that the curriculum should be built around a core of social sciences. This really disillu-sioned me. I always thought of the police officer as a science oriented sleuth who used all of the new gadgets to apprehend the criminals. But as I got acquainted with policemen, I found that they spend only 10 per cent of their time in "sleuthing." The balance of their work is spent in preparing reports, interviewing innocent citizens, community relations, and in what can only be described as social work. Therefore, both the students and the faculty were emphatic that the curriculum should be related to such endeavors. Consequently, I organized the four-year degree around a Bachelor of Arts with a Major in Criminology. At this writing we have graduated 32 police officers who are members of the local police force. There are another 150 working toward graduation.

COLLEGE V. NON-COLLEGE COPS

It might be well to point out that the purpose of professional police education is not to turn out more efficient criminal catchers. Its purpose is to give the students additional tools with which to work. Nevertheless we have been told that the "college cops" go about their job in a different way. They are much more assured in their approach to the non-criminal. Their superintendent says that they seem to approach their job from a fresh viewpoint. Furthermore, the results of the educational program introduced by the Police Scholarship Foundation has made the Orleans and Jefferson Parishes (counties) police departments education minded. We no longer have to recruit police students. The Superintendent and the Sheriff do all of the urging.

In an attempt to find out if the college cop is a better policeman than the non-college cop, one department carried out a secret experiment. Two police districts with similar populations and problems were selected. Over a period of several months one was staffed with college graduates (any kind of college degree) and the other was manned with men with a high school level education. After six months the crime rate remained the same in each district. But the district with the higher level of education showed a higher rate of morale, fewer complaints, less time off, and a quicker response to calls. Since the bulk of a policeman's time is spent in dealing with honest citizens, I think these differences represent worthwhile dividends.

Once he got into college, the dumb cop proved to be anything but dumb. When our program started in 1963, individual faculty members, reflecting the attitudes of the community, asked that the dumb cops be kept out of their classes. As a result of this, I purposely scheduled no all-police classes. Even in the criminology classes, I always found enough non-police interested in the subject so that it was a mixed class. At the end of the first year, I tabulated the police grades. Sixty percent of their grades were A and B. While the police students comprise about 15 percent of the Evening Division student body, they received about 40 percent of the honors. In the last graduating class the police comprised 50 percent of the graduates but the highest scholastic averages for the total college program were earned by two policemen. Now the faculty complains if there are no policemen in the class.

From the instructors' standpoint, there is no more gratifying teaching assignment than working with police students. First of all, since police work is becoming more and more social work, the police students bring a lot of maturity and experience to the classroom. Problems of psychology, sociology, and political science are part of their normal workday. They can give dozens of examples of personal contact with persons and situations involved in deviant behavior, delinquency, marital problems, practical politics, sub-standard housing, and most of the other factors touched on in many of the social science courses. But over and above the maturity and experience that they add to the class, the police students are welcomed by most faculty members for their gratitude. The policeman is the first to admit his inadequacies and is most appreciative for the assistance given him. In spite of hardships, they have proven to be sincere, hardworking, conscientious students. They maintain this attitude in the face of obstacles that would make most other students drop-outs. The "college cop" must take a lot of kidding from his fellow officers. He must put up with jealousy from those who look upon his education as a threat to their own position. He must give up all thought of "moonlighting," a favorite extra income activity of most police officers. He must even give up overtime because it would interfere with his studies.

The policeman is the first to admit that he needs professional education. To get it, he is knocking on the doors of colleges all over the country. That is why the number of colleges offering degrees in criminology have more than tripled in the last five years. They now number about 200.

In my six years of close contact with many police officers, I have learned to respect them. For the most part we have better policemen than we deserve. Despite low salaries and lower prestige, we have a lot of good, honest, professional policemen. In New Orleans we have hundreds of officers who are dedicated to their job and who are professionals in every sense of the word. But it is just such men who are the first to admit that it is impossible today for a new recruit to duplicate the on-the job growth that was accomplished by the men who joined the department twenty years ago. Whereas we now have many good, efficient, professional officers who never attended high school, these same men could not duplicate their achievements were they to start over today with the same level of education. Today, the policeman's role is more that of a social worker than a criminal catcher. Just as the social workers realized that they could not continue their work and growth with just the untrained volunteer ladies who formerly assumed the tasks as a civic duty, so, too, the modern police administrator realizes that the whole recruitment effort must start at a much higher level than it did a quarter of a century ago. Not only must it start higher, it must rapidly go higher and, of course, be supplemented by in-service training. As an educator in the field of adult education, I know of no other segment of the adult population that is more deserving of help or more appreciative of whatever educational assistance is given. ☆

◆ Is the legal training now offered by the state colleges, junior colleges and police academies adequate? Attention will be directed to programs offered in California because of the author's assumption that California has programs which compare favorably with the best training available in the nation. Indications are that present efforts on all levels are quantitatively and qualitatively deficient.

A "MINUS" IN POLICE LEGAL EDUCATION ?

By ROBERT JAGIELLO

THE AUTHOR is Assistant Professor of Police Science, Sacramento State College, Sacramento, Calif. 95819. He holds the Juris Doctorate from Loyola University, Master of Laws from Yale University, and is presently pursuing a Master of Arts degree in Liberal Studies at Wesleyan University. He held a teaching fellowship at Loyola Law School and a Sterling fellowship at Yale Law School. He was awarded the Bancroft-Whitney award for highest honors for the entire law school curriculum.

The police role requires that officers make decisions on essentially legal issues. These issues can be divided for purposes of discussion into two large groupings: (1) issues of substantive criminal law and (2) issues related to criminal procedure. Whether, in a given case, the police have enough legally significant evidence to satisfy the elements of burglary is in part an example of the former as well as a matter of evidence, and whether there is probable cause to arrest is an example of the latter. These decisions often have to be made instantaneously and call for sophisticated legal judgment. The decision made in an instant may be the subject of attention by lawyers and court officials for weeks, months or years. The results of these decisions, even if they go no further than an arrest, might have a lasting impact on the life of the person who was the subject of the decisions.

This article will examine three institutions involved in police legal education (1) the police academies, (2) California junior colleges, and (3) California state colleges. It will limit its considerations to instruction in criminal law. No attempt is made to assess the value of courses in evidence or other legal areas.

The present training in criminal law received in police academies by new recruits is extremely limited. According to the standards established by the California Commission on Peace Officer's Standards and Training peace officers must receive sixteen hours of instruction in law. Twelve hours are devoted to a study of penal codes and four hours to the law of arrest. Some departments offer somewhat more substantial programs. For example, the Los Angeles Police Department - requires approximately 48 hours of instruction in penal codes and 8 hours in the law of arrest.

The junior colleges offer a program which is more extensive but still with substantial inherent deficiencies. The average curriculum contains two nuts-and-bolts courses in the area of criminal law. One is concerned with elements of common law crimes and crimes enumerated in the penal code. It may contain a brief discussion of some of the more basic criminal law concepts like mens rea, actus reus, insanity and limited capacity as a defense. The other course is usually called the administration of justice or criminal procedure and is designed to acquaint students with the nature of court systems, the criminal procedures employed from incident to final disposition and principles of constitutional law. Surface treatment of the topics discussed is common to both courses because of limitations in time and faculty resources. Training for six semester hours is not adequate preparation for an officer whose total working commitment is to the function of law enforcement. Staffing is also a problem, the teacher is not necessarily a law trained faculty member. Often he is a police officer, either active or retired, and has not had a substantial grounding in legal theory.

The state colleges with some exceptions have programs which closely parallel the junior college curriculum and suffer from the same inadequacies. Those which offer a more extensive course of instruction will have a course in arrest, search and seizure and advanced criminal law. Though the curriculum in these colleges approaches the needed level of training, the number of colleges which have the expanded program is small.

There are decided disadvantages in the limited legal training offered in the academies, junior colleges and most state colleges. The police officer does not act alone in the criminal legal process. He is part of a team engaged in enforcing the law. His work brings him into constant contact with prosecutors, judges and defense lawyers. If he is to have a meaningful understanding of what is expected of him, he must understand how they think. He must appreciate the underlying presuppositions they make about the law. His work only has effective relevance in a system which is administered and controlled by people who often entertain a different conception of the law than he does. What accounts for that difference is training. The police officer must receive the same type of training in criminal law that the other members of the law enforcement team receive, but his training must be more intense because he is expected to make under far more trying circumstances the same kinds of decisions they do.

If he does not have this kind of training, he cannot begin to understand the reasons which motivate the court in dismissing the case he has carefully investigated; there is a failure to appreciate why the prosecutor is unable to prosecute the case; he tends to rail against Supreme Court decisions without understanding the reasons which support the decision or what is to be expected of him in the future.

Another crucial reason why the present programs are deficient lies in the conception of law that is created in the minds of students in a nuts-and-bolts law course. The student whose training in criminal law consists primarily, if not solely, in a consideration of penal code elements of common law crimes and a smattering of information on the concepts of mens rea, criminal negligence, the defenses of infancy and insanity, is likely to be led into a serious misconception about the law. He will attribute to the law far greater certainty than actually exists. He will often see the law as a fixed body of rules which are applied with more or less uniform regularity against violators. His explanation for an arrest will often be in its totality: "he broke the law."

But the law is not a fixed body of rules, sitting off somewhere, simply waiting to be used as the basis for an arrest or conviction. The law is a very human enterprise. One can cite hundreds of principles of law if he has had sufficient training, but that does not mean that those principles compel a particular conclusion in a particular case. The particular case involves human beings. It is a one act drama, played only once. The principles of law are used as reference points in that drama, but it is the decision-makers—the judge, the prosecutor and in the first instance the police officer—who will decide what principles will be referred to and what those principles will be deemed to mean in this case. Underlying this choice of principles, and the content that will be assigned to those principles chosen, are value choices of the decision-maker. The proper study of law will recognize this reality and discuss the underlying values which actually enter into the decision-making process.

A familiar example to police officers is the case involving the first time youthful offender. Perhaps he has engaged in petty theft. Will a decision to arrest him be made? "The law" as a fixed body of rules would seem to compel the result that he be arrested, prosecuted and convicted. If all an officer knew about the law is the appropriate penal code section and the elements of common-law crimes, he would with utmost logic say "I am compelled to arrest him." But he does not say that. At times the officer will arrest and at other times he will not. What has happened in those cases where he has decided not to arrest? He has engaged in some kind of balancing. Perhaps he concluded that the advantages to be gained from prosecution were outweighed by advantages gained by consultation with the parents. Perhaps he decided it would be unwise under the circumstances to tie the boy to a criminal record. What is clear, however, is that the officer has a large measure of discretion in deciding what will be the law for a particular case in all but the most serious offenses. If he decides not to arrest he has for this case assumed the role of legislator (he has nullified the law), police officer, prosecutor and court (he has decided the case in the suspect's favor). The police officer truly is a law unto himself in such cases.

How much he is the maker and interpreter of the law becomes clearer as his action is judged under the vague and more amorphous laws which give wide ranging discretion to a police officer. Officers will readily admit that if they want to arrest a person with whom they are having a confrontation, they can generally find a law which will permit them to do so. After the arrest the process of rationalization takes place in an effort to qualify the arrest under appropriate penal code sections.

There are many examples of open-ended laws which give police wide discretion: loitering, failure to identify, drinking in public, disorderly conduct, obstructing an officer in the line of duty, failure to disperse and others. For the motorist there is the whole arsenal of vehicle code sections which can always be referred to as a justification for stopping a car. Police in California are permitted to stop and question a person to ascertain his identity if the surrounding circumstances indicate to a reasonable man that the public safety demands such identification. What conduct or circumstances can form the basis for the officer's conclusion that public safety demands such identification? If the area is a high crime rate area and the officer has determined the subject has acted strangely or made a furtive gesture, the citizen can be stopped and questioned.

The question in these cases is what is loitering, disorderly conduct, obstructing an officer, failure to disperse? What constitutes acting strangely, and what is a furtive gesture? The inquiry then becomes: who is to decide whether this conduct is disorderly, strange or furtive?

It can be said that the police officer originally defines what each of these things are. To the extent that he defines the content of these terms in particular cases, he is making law for that case. He decides that particular behavior constitutes disorderly conduct; that a given movement was a furtive gesture; that certain conduct was strange. He thereby decides that the sanctions of criminal law, at least to the extent of making an arrest, booking and requiring bail in some cases will be employed against this particular defendant.

Did the law compel the officer in his decision in this particular case? The answer is no. With equal justification, he could have found that the movement of the arm was not a furtive gesture; that the conduct was not strange, but rather that it was explainable under the circumstances; that the conduct, though boisterous, was not so offensive as to be regarded as disorderly.

In most cases, when acting under an amorphous statute, the police officer is the initial interpreter of the law. The law could either acquit or convict at this first level of confrontation between the officer and the suspect. The officer chooses to bring the suspect into the criminal process. The important question then becomes: Why did the officer decide to bring this defendant into the criminal process? It is submitted that his decision is largely one based on values other than the compulsion of law. For example the officer's discretion is framed by his self-conception of his role as an officer. Perhaps he sees himself as a person entitled to more respect than the average person because he is the law incarnate. An officer with this mental set is more likely to view an argumentative suspect as disorderly or strange. The officer might have a prejudice against minority groups. He is likely in such cases to be more willing to interpret certain conduct by a black youth as furtive than he would be if the suspect were in a "safe" part of town and similar in appearance to the officer's own social group. Hippies and Yippies run a far greater risk of being considered disorderly (particularly if they are in a place where their presence is unusual) than would their clean-shaven counterparts dressed in more traditional garb.

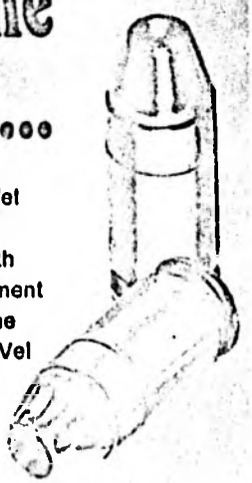
The principle that these cases demonstrate is crucial to an understanding of criminal law. The law often does not compel a result in a particular case. The principles of law which will be used as the touchstones for decision in the particular case will be chosen at the discretion of the police officer, prosecutor and judge. The choice they make will be determined by values independent of any appeal to "the law" as a justification. Once the decision to arrest is made, an appropriate section of the penal code will be chosen and the facts will then be interpreted to satisfy the requirements of that section. The same phenomena occurs as the defendant is moved along in the criminal process. The prosecutor possesses an enormous amount of discretion. Depending on his interpretation of the law and the facts, he can proceed with the case or dismiss it. He will, for example, exact the full measure of the law's sanctions against one defendant and allow another to cop a plea to a lesser charge. Again, the question why this occurs must be asked. To what extent has he acted as a judge or a legislator in this case?



The judge also has enormous discretion to define criminal behavior. By proper judicial management of the trial, a discreet acceptance or rejection of preferred items of evidence, by allowance or rejection of certain defenses, he can and often does cause an acquittal or conviction. His decision, if he were questioned, would be couched in legal justifications, but often the answer simply masks the enormous discretion he has and fails to disclose his real reasons for exercising it in a particular way. The question then becomes: Why did he choose to allow or reject this defense or evidence? The whole range of questions posed regarding police conduct would be appropriate here.

This analysis is not to be taken as a criticism of discretion in the criminal legal process. Rather, it is a frank recognition that law enforcement is a human undertaking, riddled with the usual human failings. But we must recognize and declare that the process is discretionary and address ourselves to the important question: How can we best train police officers in criminal law so that their judgments and decisions, though discretionary, will be informed and well conceived?

I must of necessity reject any solution which concentrates solely on the penal codes and sterile pronouncements on the elements of common law crimes. Instead, we need to examine the values which underlie the entire criminal process both in its substantive and procedural aspects. The scope of the inquiry into criminal law can best be indicated by a series of questions which, though perhaps unanswerable in an ultimate sense, provide a working framework for a critical examination of a system of criminal laws.

law? Are these desirable in themselves or as means to ends desirable but more remote?

2. What special aims or purposes should the criminal law try to achieve and what means are well adapted to serving them?

(a) To what extent should a law of crimes be designed to control individual and group thoughts, beliefs and actions and to warn persons and groups subject or subjected to the criminal process?

(b) To what extent should a law of crimes be designed to control official action by specifying who has what power under what circumstances?

3. What persons, situations and events, under what circumstances should be labeled "criminal?"

(a) What correlation should there be between the degree and extent of a disturbance and the designation of its source as criminal?

(b) Whatever the degree or extent of disturbance, should actual or potential danger and benefit to community values determine whether situations or events be designated "criminal?"

(c) To what extent should the consequences, both official and unofficial, be taken into account in designating persons, situations, or events "criminal?"

4. What consequences should be officially authorized to follow the designation "criminal?"

(a) What correlation should there be between the consequences authorized and the degree and extent of the disturbance?

(b) Whatever the degree or extent of disturbance, should actual or potential danger and benefit to community values determine the consequences officially authorized?

(c) To what extent should actual consequences be taken into account in deciding what official consequences should be authorized?

"To facilitate analysis and discussion of these general questions and to illustrate the variety of contexts in which each may arise, specific questions are posed. These specific questions are stated in traditionally descriptive terms but answers to each of them should be by WHY? WHAT OUGHT TO BE? and HOW WHAT OUGHT TO BE, if it varies from what is, CAN BE ACHIEVED?

"1. What is a criminal act? Is an act a requisite element of a crime?

2. What is a criminal state of mind (mens rea)? Is a criminal state of mind a requisite element of a crime?

3. What is a criminal result? Is a criminal result a requisite element of a crime?

4. What is a criminal relationship? Is a relationship between act, state of mind, and result a requisite element of a crime?

5. To what extent and degree are any of the foregoing elements taken into account in the decision to promulgate, invoke or administer custody, care, release or destruction of persons or property.

6. To what extent are culture, maturity, race, ancestry, family, associations, criminal and educational record, and mental, physical, political, economic, occupational, professional and religious statutes and needs taken into account in defining crime and determining consequences?

7. To what extent are such justifications and excuses and protecting self, others or property, provocation, entrapment, and official orders taken into account in defining crime and determining consequences?

8. How adequate are the procedures for obtaining and introducing data and how relevant are the data used and available to the decisions being made throughout the process by, for example, legislator, citizen, policeman, prosecutor, magistrate, bondsman, grand juror, investigator, defense counsel, judge, petit juror, diagnostician, correctional officer, parole or pardon board member?" [1]

These questions indicate the general tenor of the inquiry. It is to be a broad ranging examination of the fundamental assumptions of the criminal law process.

The direction is clear. The present emphasis on abstract rules and penal codes must be redirected. A far greater emphasis must be placed on underlying legal theory and assumptions, and the sociological realities of criminal law. Legally trained faculty members are absolutely essential. If at all possible the full range of academic resources should be brought into play. Ideally, sociologists, psychologists, social workers, corrections personnel, anthropologists, and economists would participate in the teaching process. Accepting the realization of the ideal as remote, the law trained faculty member must equip himself to deal with elementary considerations in these other disciplines. The materials used in the criminal law courses should be rich in non-legal literature.

Recognizing the direction that police training must take, Sacramento State College has substantially revised its criminal law offerings for police science majors. They will have a three-unit course equivalent to that offered at the junior colleges in the elements of common law crimes and penal codes. A course in constitutional law taken in the government department is also required. This will be followed by a six-unit course which will examine the fundamental assumptions of criminal law as discussed above. A six-unit course, titled the Criminal Legal Process, will also be required. The concepts which will be considered are: the nature of due process, role of the police in a democratic society, arrest, search and seizure, interrogation and confessions, wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping, preliminary examination, bail, role of the prosecutor, arraignment, plea bargaining, and right to counsel. Students will be exposed to an indepth discussion of the theory as well as the reality of the criminal legal process.

The role of the police in today's society requires some critical rethinking regarding their legal training. Their exposure on the academic level to criminal law and procedure should equal or exceed that of law students. Their position within the larger structure of law enforcement, their impressive discretionary powers and the spontaneity with which they have to make decisions all demand that they receive the finest legal training available. ☆

Liberal moderates properly react to this situation by demanding that the police act toward deviant behavior much as all other professionals do, that they have no more right to react aggressively toward provocative acts than psychiatrists faced by maniacal and dangerous patients, that no matter what extremists do, the police should not lose their self-control. Such a policy is easy to advocate; it is difficult to carry out.

Furthermore, it ignores the fact that most of the police are "working-class" professionals, not the products of postgraduate education. As James Q. Wilson points out, "This means they bring to the job some of the focal concerns of working-class men —a preoccupation with maintaining self-respect, proving one's masculinity, 'not taking any crap,' and not being 'taken in.' Having to rely on personal qualities rather than on formal routines . . . means that the officer's behavior will depend crucially on how much deference he is shown, on how manageable the situation seems to be, and on what the participants in it seem to 'deserve.' " If society wants police to behave like psychiatrists, then it must be willing to treat and train them like psychiatrists rather than like pariahs engaged in dirty work. At present, it treats their job like a semiskilled position which requires, at best, a few weeks' training. Norman Kassoff of the research staff of the International Association of Chiefs of Police has compared the legal minimum training requirements for various occupations in the different American states. Calculated in terms of hours, the median minimums are 11,000 for physicians, 5000 for embalmers, 4000 for barbers, 1200 for beauticians, and less than 200 for policemen. The vast majority of policemen begin carrying guns and enforcing the law with less than five weeks' training of any kind.

The new tensions have increased the old conflict between the police and the liberals. For it must be said that liberals are prejudiced against police, much as many white police are biased against Negroes. Most liberals are ready to assume that all charges of police brutality are true. They tend to refuse to give the police the benefit of any doubt. They rarely denounce the extreme black groups and left radicals for their confrontationist efforts. They do not face up to the need for tactics to deal with deliberate incitement to mob violence. If the liberal and intellectual communities are to have any impact on the police, if they are to play any role in reducing the growing political alienation of many police, they must show some recognition that the police force is also composed of human beings, seeking to earn a living. They must be willing to engage in a dialogue with the police concerning their problems.

HB195

STATEMENT ON HB 195

HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Submitted by

Don M. Berry, Executive Director
Alaska Municipal League

For the record my name is Don M. Berry, Executive Director of the Alaska Municipal League, an association representing 9 boroughs and 30 cities throughout the State. On behalf of the members of the League, I want to thank the Committee for this opportunity to express our opposition to HB 195.

Our opposition, of course, is to delete lines 16 and 17 on page 1 of the bill which states: "Payment of this fee is in lieu of all ad valorem taxes by local government units."

In the first place, there is no local government unit in Alaska which can stand this erosion of its tax base. The League has been gratified this year at the apparent willingness of the Legislature to try to assist political subdivisions with their financial problems. However, exemptions, such as that provided in HB 195, is certainly doing just the opposite.

It must be remembered that this property-exemption would be in addition to the millions of dollars of property owned by the federal and state governments, religious organizations, charitable institutions, etc. which are exempt under the Constitution.

More important than the revenue loss, though, is the deteriorating effect HB 195 would have on a municipality's tax base. Our bonding and financing capacity is controlled primarily by the value of the real property which can be used to support bond issues. We are sure that most of you are aware of the unfavorable market conditions now existing on municipal bonds. Provisions such as that contained in HB 195 would cause this condition to worsen insofar as Alaska local governments are concerned and would certainly make our bonds much less desirable to buyers.

Also, HB 195 does not specify whether all of the real property is exempt or just that used for banking purposes. What does the bill envision as far as that portion of the property used for office space rental, parking lots, commercial enterprises, etc. are concerned? Even religiously-owned property is exempt only to the extent that it is used for religious purposes. We question whether or not properties owned by banks should enjoy a greater tax privilege than that.

We have compiled and are submitting herewith certain figures as to the evaluation of real property owned by banks, trust companies and savings and loan associations throughout the State and the tax loss to boroughs which would result from the passage of HB 195. We wish to stress that these figures are only from the boroughs and do not take into consideration the loss which would also accrue to the cities. Nor do these figures take into consideration the taxable personal property owned by state banks.

Once again, we wish to thank the Committee for this opportunity to express our opposition to HB 195 and urge you not to act favorably on the bill as it now reads.

Respectfully submitted,

Don M. Berry

Kodiak Island	7.84	334,850	2,625.00
Greater Sitka	5.5	270,000	1,485.00
Greater Juneau	12.91	1,884,200	24,494.60
Fairbanks North Star	15	179,650	2,694.75
Kenai Peninsula	7	480,750	3,365.25

It is interesting to note that in the Fairbanks Borough only 1 bank owns its building. All the others are leased and therefore the exemption in HB 195 would be of no advantage to anyone in Fairbanks. The bill would result only in an increase in the license fee.

The Greater Anchorage Area Borough reported a "considerable amount of proposed construction" as did the Kodiak Island Borough.

Dr. Paul Haggland
Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee
Alaska Senate
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Dr. Haggland:

We have received copy of the comments of Mr. Don Hall ("Hall"), Executive Director of the Alaska Public Service Commission regarding CSHB 202 ("202"), dated December 18, 1969. We have discussed various considerations with him, and we believe he is willing to agree to the following changes which we are suggesting:

1. Section 171:
4th paragraph

Mr. Hall had asked to delete in lines 18, 19, 20 of 202 the requirement that:

> A commissioner who has not read or heard the entire record, including the argument, may not participate in making a decision of the commission.

Comment:

We suggest that the foregoing sentence be revised to read:

> A commissioner may not participate in making a decision of the Commission unless he certifies that he is familiar with the testimony and evidence adduced, and has read or heard the argument.

This revision would permit a commissioner to participate in a decision after reviewing the record as required above, even though he may have missed some or all of the proceedings. Without some such requirement it could be that the Hearing Officer (or staff) version alone could become the basis for a decision. Apparently this may already have happened in Alaska and may be responsible for some current objections to the use of a Hearing Officer.

2. Section 421(a):
Hall-page 15/16

Mr. Hall had asked authority to suspend tariff changes for an initial period of six months (last 2 lines, page 15) and a further period of three months (top of page 16).

Comment:

Nine months' suspension of tariff changes could be very harmful if a utility had urgent need of relief. We suggest that the six-month period be revised to three months (last 2 lines, page 15).

3. Section 421(b):

Mr. Hall had intended to recommend deletion of 421(b).

Comment:

421(b) should be deleted if 421(a) is instituted as proposed.

4. Section 421(c):

Mr. Hall had intended to recommend deletion of 421(c).

Comment:

421(c) should be deleted if 421(a) is instituted as proposed.

5. Section 421(d):

Mr. Hall agrees that to place monies into escrow is not of material help to a utility during a pending tariff change, and that the alternative of a bond might be of real benefit.

Comment:

(i) Add, at the end of 421(d):

"The utility may at its option substitute an acceptable bond in lieu of the escrow requirements hereof."

(ii) In our view (which is not Mr. Hall's past or present position) it would be most helpful to utilities, and no jeopardy to the public, to further amend the first sentence of 421(d) to read as follows: (adding the words as underlined)

"In the case of a proposed increased rate the utility may institute the new rate and the commission may by order require...."

(iii) 421(d) would become 421(b) after deleting 421(b) and 421(c).

6. Section 441(a) and (b):

Mr. Hall had asked that the word "fair" be deleted wherever it appears.

Comment:

Mr. Hall's position is that since a majority (32 out of 50) of states use depreciated original cost, Alaska should abandon the "fair" value to be considered in determining the rate base for its utilities.

It is our position that fair value has been found to be a necessary requirement for assuring successful utility regulation in 18 states, and that the decisions of the courts or commissions of 18 other states are ample precedent for use of the fair value concept in Alaska. Samples of such decisions are attached, with source references.

By retaining the word "fair" but by adopting Mr. Hall's proposed language for 441(b), a compromise position would be reached which would provide fair consideration to be given to economic factors other than original cost, while not requiring the actual determination of reproduction cost per CSHB 202.

Alaska is a "fair value" state under existing law, and this law has served as incentive to attract private capital for investment in utilities in Alaska. The consequences of over-turning this concept could be unfair to the utilities now operating in Alaska, and would surely discourage future private investment.

On this section we are not in agreement with Mr. Hall, but we believe he may be willing to accept the compromise we are suggesting above.

7. Section 501:

Line 9, delete "or their affiliated interests"
Line 10, delete "or its affiliated interests"

Comment:

In our view Mr. Hall's proposed language proposed as Section 511(c) provides adequate protection against "affiliated interests." If desired a new Section 511(d) could be added as follows, to amplify or strengthen Section 511(c):

> "The utility may at its discretion supply documentation to the commission to substantiate and justify its position with respect to its arrangements or agreements or practices with affiliated interests. In the event of the utility's failure so to do, the commission's findings as to the reasonableness of such arrangements or agreements or practices shall be based upon the commission's own evaluation thereof, subject to Section 42.05.551 hereof."

8. Section 701(2)(E)

Mr. Hall has advised that regulation of pipelines for "petroleum or petroleum products" (line 20 of 202) may be undertaken per a new bill with authority vested in the Department of Natural Resources. For this reason we would recommend:

Line 20, delete "petroleum or petroleum products"
Line 23, delete "for gas, petroleum or petroleum products as operating expenses"

Comment:

These deletions would remove commission jurisdiction from and responsibility for the transmission of crude oil (e.g. TAPS) and petroleum products, while leaving intact the commission's power to establish for gas transmission the "reasonable price to be allowed in determining the reasonableness of the regulated public utilities rates."

9. Section 701(6):

Mr. Hall has agreed that 701(6)(H) is a duplication of 701(6)(D) already included in CSHB 202, and should be deleted.

ANCHORAGE NATURAL GAS CORPORATION
P. O. BOX 6288
ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

Comment: Paragraphs (G), (I), and (J) also should be deleted, regardless of Mr. Hall's experience with such law in Oregon.

Paragraph (G) might effectively prevent a utility from attracting to its Board of Directors any person having a directorship or officership in any other business or profession, since such other business or profession would become an "affiliated interest" and could be subjected to unreasonable restraints, investigations, or harrassment.

Paragraphs (I) and (J) are likewise unreasonable, impractical, and intolerable, regardless of Mr. Hall's experience in Oregon. These paragraphs could serve as a basis to investigate or harrass almost anyone having contact with a utility or its management. There is no justification, stated or real, for such a far-ranging definition, other than the precedent in Oregon. These paragraphs should be deleted.

We have addressed our comments to those elements of CSHB 202 which we believe need attention for administrative reasons, and we are not commenting on regulation of municipalities, composition of the Commission, duplication of regulatory responsibility, etc. We hope that the legislature will favor a gradual and orderly evolution of the regulatory process in Alaska rather than immediate and major changes. We hope the decision will be to build upon the existing organization, rather than to reorganize the utility regulatory process which now exists in Alaska.

RATE CASES RELATED TO FAIR VALUE

ILLINOIS Commerce Commission v. Peoples Gas, Light & Coke Co. (1953) 99 PUR NS 361 The Commission, in determining present fair value for rate making, is required to consider current economic conditions, price levels, reproduction cost, and original cost as well as the cost of improvements and the probable earning capacity of the property under prescribed rates.

INDIANA Re Indiana Bell Teleph. Co. (1950) 85 PUR NS 129. The commission, in determining the fair value of utility property, must give consideration to all bases of valuation which may be presented and to the reasonable cost of bringing the property to its present state of efficiency.

MISSOURI Missouri ex rel. Dyer v. Missouri P.S.C. (1960) 37 PUR 3d 507. The commission did not act arbitrarily or unreasonably in fixing a rate base calculated upon the fair value of utility properties (an amount between net original cost and net reproduction cost).

TEXAS Re Houston Nat. Gas Corp. (1963) 52 PUR 3d 244. The commission, in fixing rates, must determine a reasonable balance between original cost less book depreciation and replacement cost new less an adjustment for present age and condition, and in doing so it must use its own judgment and discretion.

NEW MEXICO Re Moyston (Hobbs Gas Co.) (1963) 48 PUR 3d 459. A fair value rate base for a gas utility was computed on the basis of the average of original cost and reproduction cost.

ILLINOIS Re Northern Ill. Water Corp. (1959) 26 PUR 3d 497. The commission, in arriving at a fair value rate base, must use reasonable judgment in determining the weight to be given reproduction cost, original cost, depreciation, book cost, work in progress, materials and supplies and cash working capital.

ILLINOIS Re General Telephone Co. of Illinois (1959) 29 PUR 3d 369. Fair value is not original cost depreciated, nor is it reproduction cost depreciated, nor is it a matter of formulas, but it is rather a matter of reasonable judgment based upon the consideration of all relevant facts.

NORTH CAROLINA Re Piedmont Nt. Gas Co. (1961) 40 PUR 3d 62. Upon evidence of average net original cost of a gas company's properties of $17 million, net property value at the end of the period of $19,600,000, and trended original cost of $31,500,000, and considering that no evidence of reconstruction new cost or present-day values by visual appraisal was offered, the commission fixed a fair value rate base of $20,300,000.

NORTH CAROLINA Re Nantahala Power & Light Co. (1963) 51 PUR 3d 96. The commission, in establishing a fair value rate base, considered all the evidence offered relating thereto, including, but not limited to, trended cost, reproduction cost new, original cost, average net investment, allocated cost, actual investment, normal depreciated value, and accelerated depreciation value.

DELAWARE Re Wilmington Suburban Water Corp. (1962) 47 PUR 3d 175. In determining a fair value rate base, the commission must give weight to original cost depreciated and reproduction cost depreciated.

OHIO Re Cleveland Electric Illum. Co. (1963) 47 PUR 3d 44. A fair rate of return is a figure which must be determined under Ohio law on the reproduction cost new less depreciation rate base.

HB-202

April 15, 1969

Senator P.B. Hagglund
Chairman
Senate Commerce Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Senator Hagglund:

HB 202 as introduced provided in Sec. 42.05.421(b) that in determining fair value of public utility property for rate making purposes the Commission shall be guided primarily by the element of original cost less accrued depreciation. The committee substitute changed this in Sec. 42.05.441(b) to provide that the Commission shall be guided primarily by the average of original cost, less accrued depreciation, and reproduction cost, less physical depreciation. This change is not sound in principle and would create major difficulties in practice. The Alaska Public Service Commission has rejected the RCND approach for use in Alaska. For example in an order entered December 30, 1965 in P-65-2-1, entitled A.J. Rate Investigation the Commission said:

> "A comment is in order regarding "reproduction cost new depreciated" (sometimes called RCND) and "trended original cost" methods of arriving at fair value. Even though they may be used in some other jurisdictions, the Commission specifically rejects them for use in Alaska, except as t they may be used in connection with other techniques to establish the value of a substitute plant. After studying the matter, the Commission is convinced that to admit their use here would result in gross injustice to the ratepayer.
> For one thing, both the RCND and trended original cost methods ignore the higher operating expenses of older plants, even though operating expenses make up the "lion's share" of gross revenue requirements. Another argument against their use is that no one is going to build an old, out-of-date, obsolete plant and there is therefore no reliable way of knowing what it would cost."

The entire approach is not realistic. First it allows a utility to obtain a return on investment never made by the utility. It provides a reconstruction dollar value at today's price which in many cases is completely divorced from economic realism. It does not allow for economic or funtional obsolesence, allowing only for physical depreciation. Where major plant items are relatively new or have relatively short lives this factor is not greatly unresponsive to the cost of a substitute plant but, at least in the production of electricity major plant items of very long useful lives are involved. In such cases this approach injects a wholly unrealistic element into the valuation. For instance here in Juneau a large concrete dam built in 1914 or thereabout is a key element in supplying electrical energy to the Boroggh. Competeat engineers have testified in court and before the Public Service Commission that no one would build a dam in that manner today. The dam is adequate for its purpose and apparently has, with reasonably maintenance, an almost indefinate useful life. In a superior court case contesting the valuation of the A.J. Complex for tax purposes RCND was estimated at $1,934,600. The court held that the fair market value was original cost, depreciated, which amounted to $389,260. (A.J. Industries v Greater Juneau Borough, First Judicial District, Civ. No. 65-300). Adding these together and dividing by two, as the substitute provision requires gives a rate base value of $1,161,930,, Since the major components of these, especially the dam, deteriorate very slowly physically unless a sharp reversal of the economic trend toward increasing prices occurs, the rate base valuation will constantly increase even though with the pace of modern technology the functional obsolesence will become even greater.

This is not an isolated case, the same situation would occur in any system which combined major elements with long service lives and an even moderate rate of technologisal advancement. Placing such a premium on functional obsolesence seems to insure that modernization will come to Alaska only limping haltingly on unsure, uncertain feet.

The formula would double the problem of determination of value since the original cost study, with its attendant question would remain as controversial and as necessary as ever while the RCND study would be added.

This is certainly not an argument against the bill as a whole. We do however agree fully with the Commission's statement quoted above that to admit this technique would be to work a gross injustice on the rate-payer. For these reasons we strongly submit that it would serve the public interest best if the language in the original bill were substituted for the language of the committee substitute.

Dear Barry:

On Friday, February 21, 1969, the Anchorage City Council and the Fairbanks City Council met in joint session to consider the merits of Senate Bills #54 and #128 which would confer jurisdiction over certain municipal utilities to the Public Service Commission.

The enclosed Resolution was unanimously approved at the joint Council meeting. Your consideration in reviewing this joint resolution will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

JOINT RESOLUTION NO. A/F-2-69

A JOINT RESOLUTION OF THE CITY COUNCILS OF THE CITIES OF ANCHORAGE AND FAIRBANKS OPPOSING REGULATION BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF MUNICIPAL UTILITIES AND URGING LEGISLATION TO RESOLVE SERVICE AREA CONFLICTS.

WHEREAS, Senate Bills No.'s 54 and 128 have been introduced in the Senate to confer jurisdiction over certain municipal utilities to the Public Service Commission; and

WHEREAS, few states have granted such jurisdiction over municipal utilities, and most granting jurisdiction only do so in limited cases; and

WHEREAS, no studies, facts or findings have been advanced to show, or attempting to show, that municipal utility rates are unreasonable or that municipal utility services are inadequate to the extent that a public service commission could lawfully remedy such rates or services; and

WHEREAS, municipally owned and operated utilities have, in fact, and traditionally, furnished the lowest cost utility services feasible to its consumers; and

WHEREAS, the Public Service Commission itself has not requested the Legislature to grant the Commission any jurisdiction over municipally owned and operated utilities; and

WHEREAS, municipal utilities can best be regulated by city councils and their citizen boards on a local level and at a place accessible to consumers, and consumers have a forum at all meetings to voice their grievances and criticisms as to rates and services without compliance with complicated and costly Public Service Commission proceedings in Anchorage; and

WHEREAS, the Public Service Commission regulation over municipal utilities would be a costly and undue burden on municipal utilities and their consumers, particularly since S.B. 54 would create a gross business tax of 1/2 of 1% on municipal utilities; and

WHEREAS, the Public Service Commission regulation would undoubtedly lead to increased rates for consumers because the costs of such regulation must be passed on to the consumers; and

WHEREAS, proponents of Public Service Commission regulation contend that such regulation is necessary to enable consumers outside the corporate boundaries to have a forum for their complaints and to resolve service area conflicts between municipal electric utilities and R.E.A. electric cooperatives in a few cities in this State; and

WHEREAS, a long standing history of a lack of complaints to the city councils and citizen boards concerning municipal rates and services outside corporate limits does not appear to justify any contention that customers outside of the area have complaints not justified by sparse, scattered populations outside cities and economic feasibility; and

WHEREAS, the city councils and their citizen boards have not been shown to be unresponsive to complaints over rates and services; and

WHEREAS, the proposed legislation would not eliminate the duplication of facilities in service areas in that no standards are provided and no provision is made in any proposed legislation for payment to a utility for the loss of the facilities and service and utilities could serve within their duplicating grandfather areas; and

WHEREAS, the service area conflicts and problems may be resolved by legislation other than costly and ineffective public service commission regulation; and controlled by the elected officials responsible to the public, and assisted by citizen boards, should not be entrusted to a part-time public service commission and insufficient staff; and

WHEREAS, the Alaska Municipal League has opposed regulation of municipally owned and operated utilities by the Public Service Commission; and

WHEREAS, regulation of municipally owned and operated utilities is contrary to the principle in this State that local governments are best able to govern themselves and municipal utility regulation should remain with local government;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE CITY COUNCILS OF THE CITIES OF ANCHORAGE AND FAIRBANKS THAT:

1. The City Councils of the Cities of Anchorage and Fairbanks, strongly oppose the passage of Senate Bills No.'s 54 and 128, or any other legislation granting jurisdiction over municipally owned and operated utilities.

2. The City Councils urge that the Legislature study, develop, and enact, in consultation with cities and R.E.A. electric cooperatives, adequate legislation to resolve the alleged service area conflicts between municipal utilities and R.E.A. cooperatives by agreement or arbitration without resort to public service commission regulation.

3. Copies of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Keith Miller, Governor of the State of Alaska, and all members of the Alaska State Legislature.

4. This resolution shall become effective immediately upon passage.

Passed and approved by the City Councils of the cities of Anchorage and Fairbanks, Alaska, at a special joint council meeting, the 27 day of February, 1969.

DATE 3/4/69 SIGNATURE George Howard

NAME & TITLE George Sharrock, Commissioner of Commerce

FORM SA-18

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: B. L. McMurtrey
Deputy Commissioner
Department of Commerce

DATE : February 27, 1969

FROM: Don Hall
Executive Director
Public Service Commission

SUBJECT: HB 188 and HB 202

You asked for my comments in regard to HB 188 but made no similar request in regard to HB 202.

I have compared HB 188 and SB 54 and find that they are identical in every respect. I have also compared HB 202 with SB 128 and find that they too are identical in every respect with one exception; namely, that Sec. 42.05.691(b) of SB 128 has been omitted from HB 202. This deletion has the effect of broadening the Commission's authority.

I have already prepared detailed comments on SB 54 and SB 128, copies of which are in Mr. Sharrock's possession--and these comments, of course, apply also to their respective House companion bills.

You have the Commission's original budget in the amount of $347,800 as subsequently modified by the cost of upgrading certain positions and by adding $8,500 to cover the cost of regulating pipeline companies (principally the Alaska Pipeline Company). The cost of administering SB 54 would be somewhat greater than the cost of administering SB 128 because of the fact that SB 54 requires more extensive regulation of municipally owned and operated utilities. However, I believe that the aforementioned original budget as modified would be adequate to administer SB 54, at least during the first year.

Estimates have also been submitted regarding our budgetary requirements for the years ending June 30, 1970, 1971, and 1972. These estimates were specifically based upon administering SB 128 and consist of a three-year projection compiled in one document.

I believe the foregoing is an adequate response to your request for information in regard to the House and Senate bills mentioned above.

NOTE # II

200 Travel
We anticipate that our travel fund requirements, both outside and within the State, will remain fairly constant for the next three years. The moderate decrease projected for FY 1970-1971 is comprised of two items included in our present budget (ACS Sale Bid Proposal Evaluation conferences and transportation of new employees) which will no longer be needed. The moderate increase in FY 1971-1972 is anticipated because of increase in workload. Add increase of 2,000 for each Year covering additional 2 commissioners for a total of 5 .

NOTE # III

300 Contractual Services
The $28,500 increase in FY 1969-1970 projected requirements is made up of the following costs:

a) $20,000 to provide funds for hearing officers appointed pursuant to AS 42.05, Section 181 of SB 128
b) $8,500 to provide funds for consultants to investigate operations of existing oil transmission pipelines within the State

The $47,400 decrease in FY 1970-1971 was computed as follows:

a) $5,100 increase in overall contractual services account due to increase in workload and change in methods and procedures utilized in accomplishing program of utility regulation.
b) $52,500 total decrease possible because of anticipated finalization of ACS sale by July 1, 1970 ($35,000); completion of investigation of safety programs of natural gas utilities ($18,500); completion of investigation of oil transmission pipelines ($8,500); and an increase of $10,000 for hearing officer fees.

NOTE # IV

400 Commodities
Our requirements in this area have reached a fairly stable level. The increase in FY 1970-1971 is necessary because of additional personnel to handle the added workload. However, we then expect requirements in this account to level off at the amount shown.

NOTE V

500 Equipment
Continuing decrease in requirements in this area is a reflection of the adequacy of budget requests made and appropriations received in the past.

NOTE VI

900 Interagency Charges
Moderate increase is for additional travel funds for the attorney on full-time assignment from Department of Law.

Memorandum

Alaska Court System

TO: Representative Irwin L. Metcalf

DATE : March 17, 1969

FROM: Judge Thomas B. Stewart TBS

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 226

You asked for my very brief comment on H.B. No. 226. After further consideration, I think I should not comment specifically on its merits without making a full explanation, and it is not feasible to do this in the time available to me today.

In general I would not favor the bill in its present form, if only because of vagueness of the amendatory language. This is solely a personal view and should not be attributed to the Alaska Court System.

FORM SA-1B

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Representative Irwin L. Metcalf
Sixth State Legislature

DATE : March 17, 1969

FROM: Commissioner Mel J. Personett
Department of Public Safety

SUBJECT: HB 226
Our File #151 - 1969

As you have requested, the following are my comments on HB 226:

1. As the situation now stands, I would personally prefer that the entire section be repealed, and information be made available as it is with adults.

   The original idea and intent of juvenile proceedings was good -- informal hearing, rules of evidence relaxed, etc. -- with the entire thought being to help the child and straighten him out if necessary. In many cases it was possible to do so before the child actually went so far as to actually commit an offense.

   This is no longer possible since rules of evidence and constitutional guarantees as interpreted by the Supreme Court also apply to juveniles.

   Juvenile court, as it existed when this statute was necessary and desirable, is a thing of the past.

2. If AS 47.10.090 (a) and (b) were amended to be applicable only to minors 14 years of age or younger, the persons most in need of protection would still be covered.

   HB 226 would still protect the unlicensed or "license suspended" 17-year old drunken driver since it states, "holder of an operator's license".

1. The juvenile concept is based on a sacrifice of certain legal rights by a minor child in return for special measures of judicial processes designed to rehabilitate those young offenders while they are still "impressionable". Given the benefit of special counseling, separate facilities, and an informal, confidential atmosphere the system remains in balance. But when benefits are taken away, legal rights must be restored, or the system gets out of balance. Recently the U. S. Supreme Court has found that "rehabilitation" facilities in the various states were largely unsatisfactory, and accordingly restored a number of legal rights to the minor child. See In Re Gault.

2. The State of Alaska has subjected the minor child to adult court for certain violations of Title 28 dealing with motor vehicles. AS 47.10.010(b). This is quite proper, as full legal rights are then afforded. If the legislature deemed it in the public interest to except certain other crimes from juvenile jurisdiction under AS 47.10.010(b), there could be no objection.

3. HB 226, however seeks to leave jurisdiction alone, but alter the balance of the juvenile concept. It would accomplish this by removing the benefit of confidentiality of a juvenile proceeding without restoring any "legal rights". In effect, HB 226 is saying... "we're going to privately, confidentially, informally and without affording you your legal rights, adjudicate you a delinquent. We're thereby going to make you a 'child of the state' for dispositive purposes. And when we get through setting you up, we're going to tell the world about it if there was a motor vehicle involved in your misconduct." This would not be proper.

4. There is another objection to HB 226, in that the language it seeks to insert into AS 47.10.090(b) is quite vague. A motor vehicle may be "used in connection with the act" in an infinite variety of collateral ways. Under HB 226 it doesn't even have to be used by the minor child, so that if a licensed 16 year old hides marijuana in his dad's car, the case would seem to qualify for publication. This may not be the legislative intent.

Re: House Bill No. 258

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Reference is made to your letter to Commissioner Morrison dated January 15, 1970 asking for our current views relating to House Bill 258 which deals with the bond required to be filed by nonresidents.

It is our recommendation that Article 4 of AS 43.10 which consists of AS 43.10.160-200 be repealed and re-enacted to read as set forth on the attached proposed Committee Substitute Bill.

The advantages gained by the State from the existing statute (AS 43.10.160) are so small compared to the problems it presents and the hard feelings it engenders from legitimate businesses that the statute requiring the bond should be repealed. However, to assist the State in collecting taxes from nonresident firms, particularly those involved in the construction field it is requested that the State adopt two sections which are set forth in the accompanying draft of a committee substitute bill. The first section was passed by Congress for the Internal Revenue Service in 1966 to correct abuses in the construction industry. The second section is taken from AS 23.20.265 of the Labor Code. It has been most beneficial to the Employment Security Division in collecting its taxes.

Enclosed with the draft of the committee substitute bill is a copy of the Internal Revenue Code section and the Department of Labor section.

When your Committee considers this bill it is requested that I be given an opportunity to appear and clarify any questions that it may have.

Thank you for your interest and concern in this matter.

Very truly yours,

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act repealing the bond required to be filed with the Department of Revenue by nonresidents under AS 43.10.160 and providing other methods of protecting tax revenue; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. Article 4 of AS 43.10 consisting of AS 43.10.160-200 are repealed and re-enacted to read:

ARTICLE 4

LIABILITY OF CONTRACTORS AND THIRD PARTIES

FOR TAXES, LICENSES AND FEES

* Sec. 43.10.160. Liability of third parties paying or providing for wages. (a) If a lender, surety, or other person, who is not the employer, pays wages directly to an employee or group of employees, employed by one or more employers, or to an agent on behalf of the employee or employees, the lender, surety, or other person shall be liable in his own person and estate to the state of Alaska in a sum equal to the taxes (together with interest) required to be deducted and withheld from such wages by the employer.

(b) If a lender, surety, or other person supplies funds to or for the account of an employer for the specific purposes of paying wages of the employees of the employer, with actual notice or knowledge that the employer does not intend to or will not be able to make timely payment of the amounts of tax required by statute to be deducted and withheld by such employer from the wages, the lender, surety, or other person shall be liable in his own person and estate to the state of Alaska in a sum equal to the taxes (together with interest) which are not paid over to the state of Alaska by the employer with respect to the wages. However, the liability of the lender, surety, or other person shall be limited to an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount so supplied to or for the account of the employer for such purpose.

(c) Effect of payment. Any amounts paid to the state of Alaska pursuant to this section shall be credited against the liability of the employer.

* Sec. 43.10.170. Liability of contractor and principal for taxes. (a) No employing unit which contracts with or has under it a contractor or subcontractor who is an employer under the provisions of this section may make a payment to the contractor or subcontractor for a debt due until the contractor or subcontractor has paid or furnished a sufficient bond acceptable to the department for payment of taxes, licenses and fees, including penalty and interest, due or to become due for personal services which have been performed by individuals for the contractor arising during the course of the employment of the contractor or subcontractor by the employing unit.

(b) Failure to comply with this section makes the employing unit directly liable for the taxes, licenses and fees, including penalty and interest, and the department has the remedies of collection against the employing unit under this title as though the services in question were performed directly for the employing unit.

(c) "employer" means an employing unit which for some portion of a day within the calendar year has or had in employment one or more individuals.

(d) "employing unit" means an individual or type of organization, partnership, association, trust, estate, joint trust company, insurance company or domestic or foreign corporation, or the receiver, referee in bankruptcy, trustee, or successor of one of these, or the legal representative of a deceased person, which has one or more individuals performing service for it within the state.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Vernon L. Snow, Deputy Commissioner, Department of Revenue, has asked me to write you concerning our experience with AS 23.20.265 (liability of contractor and principal for contributions).

AS 23.20.265 was passed in 1955, and amended slightly in 1959.

Our Employment Security Division advises that the section has been a great aid in the collection of Employment Security contributions during the past 15 years. To their knowledge, there has never been a question of constitutionality raised about this section.

We recommend adoption of a section similar to AS 23.20.265 for the Department of Revenue to assist it in the collection of taxes.

Re: CSHB 258

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Committee Substitute for House Bill 258 repeals AS 43.10.160 - AS 43.10.200 which require a bond to be filed with the Department of Revenue by nonresident businesses to cover estimated taxes which will be incurred during the year. The bond is a condition precedent to doing business in the state. The Department of Revenue has never collected on one of these bonds.

AS 43.10.160 provides that if acquiring the bond would be a hardship on the business the Attorney General may waive the bond. This waiver provision has resulted in most businesses asking for a waiver. A business which is sound financially can seldom ever show a hardship and must obtain a bond by paying a premium which seldom goes to an Alaska business. A nonresident business which can show a hardship is often a business in a poor financial condition and is a business which should not receive a waiver. The result is a sound business is penalized and the unsound business has a way out.

The Department of Revenue recommends and concurs in section 1 of CSHB 258 which repeals the nonresident bond requirement.

Section 2 of Committee Substitute for House Bill 258 adds two new sections. The first (section 43.10.165) is adopted from the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It makes a lender, surety, or other person who pays the wages directly to an employee or a person who supplies funds to or for the account of an employer for the purposes of paying wages when he knows the employer does not intend or will not be able to make timely payment of the tax deducted from employees wages liable for the tax.

The second section (43.10.175) is adopted from AS 23.20.265 of the Labor Code. It provides that a contractor is liable for the taxes of his subcontractor.

The two new sections will assist the Department of Revenue in collecting taxes in the construction field which is probably our major collection problem area.

CSHB 258 will not cost the state any additional funds. It will result in savings in administering the bill and should help increase collections.

FORM SA-18

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: John Beard
Legislative Assistant
Office of the Governor

DATE : February 24, 1970

FROM: Vernon L. Snow
Deputy Commissioner
Department of Revenue

SUBJECT: CSHB 258 - Repeal of Nonresident Bond Requirement

Reference is made to my conversation with you on February 24, 1970. At that time I suggested that you talk with Representative Boardman and other legislators regarding the administration's position with respect to House Bill 258. I pointed out to you the Department of Revenue and the administration favors the adoption of the House Judiciary Committee's Substitute Bill for House Bill 258. A brief history of this act and our reasons for favoring the Committee Substitute Bill are set forth below.

The nonresident bond requirement (AS 43.10.160-200) was passed in 1955 apparently because many construction firms and fishery businesses were coming into the State and leaving without paying their taxes. Since that time several changes have occurred which require a change be made in our law. Among these are the following:

1. AS 43.75 requires fish processors to post a bond covering the fishery taxes. Thus the bond required by AS 43.10.160 is no longer needed for the fish processors tax.

2. Experience indicates that we have never collected on any bond which has been filed with the department.

3. A tremendous amount of time is required to administer the nonresident bond statute because nearly all businesses ask for a waiver. Not only does this entail searching our records to ascertain the current status of the business, but it also requires us to transmit this information to the Attorney General who in turn must examine it to see if a waiver should be granted. If one is granted then additional search is required. Correspondence is created by the "reams".

4. AS 43.10.160 provides that a waiver may be given to a business which can show that furnishing the bond is a hardship. A firm which is financially responsible such as a billion dollar corporation can seldom ever show that payment of a bond premium is a hardship. For example one large orporation paid out $21,000 for premium for a bond for one year. On the other hand a financially weak business which could show a hardship in posting a bond and obtain a waiver is the very company which may end up not paying the state taxes and should not be given a waiver. Accordingly, the good business is penalized and the poor business may obtain a waiver.

5. Few if any of the bond premiums paid for bonds posted with this department are paid to Alaska insurance firms. The nonresident firm generally gets its bond from a broker in the city where its home office is located.

During the 1969 session of the legislature the administration introduced H.B. 258 which would do away with the waiver provision and require that nonresident businesses post the bond, prepay the tax, or own sufficient real property in Alaska not to need to file a bond under the act. This change would eliminate most of the wasted expenditure of time in the Departments of Revenue and Law. It would also have eliminated any possibility of favoritism being claimed in granting waivers to some and refusing waivers to others.

House Bill 258 was referred to the House Congress Committee which approved the original bill with one or two minor changes. The bill then went to the House Judiciary Committee.

Hearings were held by the House Judiciary Committee in 1969 on House Bill 258. Because of the harshness of the bond requirement and the absurd results that could and did arise other approaches were sought. One committee substitute was proposed by a lobbyist, but that proposal would have been more onerous and burdensome to the Department of Revenue in administering the law than the present act. Finally near the end of the 1969 session the Judiciary Committee requested the Department of Revenue to provide it with additional recommendations at the commencement of the 1970 session.

After reviewing the entire nonresident bond provisions and the act's history the Department of Revenue concluded that difficulties in administering the present act far exceed the benefits received. Accordingly we recommended to you in our memorandum of January 21, 1970 that the entire nonresident bond provisions (AS 43.10.160-200) be repealed and two new sections be adopted in its place to assist the Department of Revenue in collecting taxes in the construction industry which constitutes the principal delinquent area where we have trouble.

The first new section is adopted from section 3505 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It provides that a lender, surety, or other person who supplies funds for the payment of wages for an employee is liable for the taxes withheld from the employee's wages if the lender has actual notice or knowledge that the employer does not intend to or will not be able to make timely payment of the taxes. This section was adopted by the United States Congress in 1966 to assist the Internal Revenue Service in dealing with its problem in the collection of taxes from contractors.

The second section which we recommended was patterned after AS 23.20.265 of the Alaska Labor Code. That section holds a prime contractor liable for the taxes of the subcontractor arising from personal services which have been performed on the contract.

After obtaining your approval, we communicated to Representative Barry Jackson our revised views. Committee hearings were held and the House Judiciary Committee adopted our new recommendations with slight wording changes to the second section we recommended be adopted.

Although the House Judiciary Committee has changed the title to House Bill 258, the Committee Substitute does represent the Department of Revenue's position on this subject. It is recommended that you notify Representative Boardman and other legislators that Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 258 be adopted.

Committee Substitute for House Bill No. 258 repeals AS 43.10.160-AS 43.10.200 which require a bond to be filed with the Department of Revenue by nonresident businesses to cover estimated taxes which will be incurred during the year. The bond is a condition precedent to doing business in the state. The Department of Revenue has never collected on one of these bonds.

AS 43.10.160 provides that if acquiring the bond would be a hardship on the business the Attorney General may waive the bond. This waiver provision has resulted in most businesses asking for a waiver. A nonresident business which can show a hardship is often a business in poor financial condition and is a business which should not receive a waiver. The result is that sound business is penalized and unsound business has a way out.

The Department of Revenue recommends and concurs in Section 1 of CSHB-258 which repeals the nonresident bond requirement.

Section 2 of CSHB-258 adds two new sections. The first (section 43.10.165) is adopted from the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It makes a lender, surety, or other person who pays the wages directly to an employee or a person who supplies funds to or for the account of an employer for the purposes of paying wages when he knows the employer does not intend or will not be able to make timely payment of the tax deducted from employees wages liable for the tax.

The second section (43.10.175) is adopted from AS 23.-20.265 of the Labor Code. It provides that a contractor is liable for the taxes of his subcontractor.

The two new sections will assist the Department of Revenue in collecting taxes in the construction field which is probably the major collection problem area.

According to the Department of Revenue, which supports the committee substitute, CSHB-258 will not cost the state any additional funds. It will result in savings in administration and should help increase collections.

HB 264

Ketchikan League of Women Voters
President Mrs. Jeff Collins
P. O. Box 1133
January 26, 1970

The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman: House Judiciary Committee
House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Last spring the Ketchikan League of Women Voters studied the problem of the dual city council-borough seats. After studying the problem we came to the conclusion that this was not a desirable arrangement. Our group felt that the two seats should be separate, and each should be voted upon by the city voters. Since this can be accomplished only at the state level, we are urging support for House Bill 264, which provides for assemblymen representing a first class city to be elected by the city voters rather than being appointed by and from city councils.

Our reasons for supporting legislation to make the city council and borough assembly seats separate positions are:

1. Voters inside the city limits would like to have a direct vote as to who would represent them on the borough assembly.

2. The duties of a city councilman and a borough assemblyman are too time consuming for one man to adequately do both jobs.

3. Since over 80% of our borough budget is ear-marked for schools, the voters would like to select someone to fill the assembly seat who has an interest in working with the schools.

4. A man running for city councilman does not find out until after he takes office whether he will also be appointed to the borough assembly.

Re: HB 265 - Leasing of Public Buildings

Dear Representative Jackson:

I would have only two comments in regard to the above bill which would permit cities and boroughs to acquire and construct public building and facilities for cities and boroughs. It would probably be advisable for the State to be mentioned as a party in that all three forms of government may in many instances be able to use one public building. The second comment would be to permit an option to purchase the building after a specified period of time. Without such a provision, a long term rental proposition may prove to be more attractive to government planning if public ownership of the building would be a possibility. I have not explored the result of what would happen to the tax problems, and these questions would have to be answered upon further analysis.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on Committee Substitute for House Bill 280.

The Department of Labor has questioned whether or not it should properly have the responsibility for involvement in this area.

It is now our understanding that the Inland Boatmen's Union, at whose behest this bill was originally introduced, no longer feels there is urgent need for such legislation by the State of Alaska; as it is now anticipated that Federal regulations will be extended to this area of maritime safety.

Since Committee Substitute for House Bill 280 provides that vessels subject to similar regulation by an agency or department of the United States would be exempt from the provisions of the bill, it appears that this legislation is not needed at this time.

Hon. Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Jackson:

House Bill 281 has been recommended by the Alaska Judicial Council and its Statewide Committee composed of judges, lawyers, legislators and prominent citizens from all areas of the state.

Appellate courts of the states of the United States and the federal courts have held that they do not have the inherent authority to review and modify a lawful criminal sentence, ~~imposed by a trial judge on the ground that the sentence was excessive or too lenient. The decisions of~~ these courts are based in large part on the fact that during the growth of the common law the prerogative of prescribing punishment for the violation of criminal ordinances was in ~~the crown and later in the legislative bodies.~~ The majority of the courts have held that where a sentence imposed by a trial judge is within the limits prescribed by statute and otherwise legal, an appellate court cannot review the discretion of the trial judge exercised in determining the sentence, even though it may appear in retrospect to have been too severe or too lenient.

The concept that the discretion of the trial judge exercised in imposing a particular sentence should not be questioned on appeal is now being challenged in more and more jurisdictions. In approximately eleven states of the United States constitutional or statutory provision for the appellate review of criminal sentences is now provided. The Congress of the United States has held hearings for the past three years on proposed federal legislation which would provide for the appellate review of sentences in the federal courts. ~~It is predicted by~~ Senator Hruska, ~~that~~ the pending legislation will be enacted into law during the 1969 session of Congress. For the past ten years the states of Massachusetts and Connecticut have provided by statute for the appellate review of criminal sentences and only recently the state of Maryland has adopted the techniques employed in those two states.

The general advantages of appellate review of sentences are considered to be:

1. Prison unrest generated by long-term prisoners can be alleviated to a large extent by providing for review of sentences which are claimed to be excessive on the ground that the trial judge "railroaded" the offender.

2. Where sentences are appealed by the offenders the appellate review panel can adjust the sentence upward as well as downward if in its opinion the original sentence was too lenient or too severe, resulting in a more just treatment of the defendant and the state.

3. Since every other aspect of a criminal trial prior to conviction is subject to appellate review there is, in this enlightened day, no reason in logic or justice why a sentence imposed by the trial judge after conviction should not likewise be reviewed.

Enactment of ~~the above legislation~~ H.B. 281 would provide the jurisdiction and substantive guidelines required to provide for appellate review of sentences in Alaska. The supreme court of Alaska would promulgate detailed rules of procedure providing for the preparation and forwarding of the record, hearing procedures, etc. In general, these rules

It is expected that would be identical with those proposed to implement the federal legislation. Upon the institution of an appeal the clerk of court would forward to the appellate court the probation officer's report, the district attorney's recommendation, the defendant's statement, the written statement of the judge explaining in detail why the sentence was imposed and any other written material which was before the trial judge at the time he imposed the sentence. The record would also include a transcript of the proceedings held in court at the time the sentence was imposed. No other record would be forwarded and the appeal would be determined by the court on the record unless in its discretion it ordered the production of the defendant before the court. Such production would be required in any case where the court considered increasing the sentence. The additional expense to the state which would result from providing appellate review ~~as above contemplated~~ would be negligible. According to Chief Justice Burdick,

Experience in Massachusetts and Connecticut has indicated that the fact that a sentence may be modified by the appellate body upward as well as downward has restricted the appeals taken by defendants to those cases where the defendant sincerely believes that his sentence was excessive. The statistics of those states also reveal that less than 20 percent of sentences imposed are appealed. During the past calendar year a total of 113 sentences of one year or more were imposed by the superior courts of the state. These statistics indicate that approximately 20 appeals from superior court sentences might be expected annually. Since many of the criminal appeals already being taken would be able to incorporate as an additional point an appeal for claimed excessiveness of the sentence imposed, it is not expected that the total number of separate appeals from the sentence alone would exceed 15 in a given year. Under the same reasoning it is not expected that the number of appeals from the district or magistrate's courts to the superior court would exceed a total of 35 in a given year in the entire court system.

The ~~legislation should be made~~ effective six months from the date of enactment in order to give the courts time to formulate rules of procedure. The act ~~should be made~~ applicable only to sentences imposed after its effective date, as has been provided in the federal legislation.

Sincerely yours,

Buell A. Nesbett

Re: HB 281 - Appellate Review of Criminal Sentences

Dear Chairman Jackson:

In our recent conversation I was under the impression that we had agreed that the captioned bill should be amended to provide that the superior court would have the power to modify a sentence upward as well as downward. I notice that the bill has come out of Judiciary without this amendment, perhaps by oversight.

The amendment would have two desirable effects, I believe:

(1) It would discourage appeals of every sentence on the "gamble" that a "break" might be received.

(2) It would be more likely to pass the Senate where some senators view the act as one to obtain more lenient sentences.

The change could be effected by interlining the words "upward or" between the words "from" and "downward" in line 18 of page 2 of House Bill 281.

I urge this amendment.

Sincerely yours,

The Honorable Jalmar M. Kerttula
Speaker of the House
Alaska House of Representatives
Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Speaker Kerttula:

House Concurrent Resolution No. 47 of the 1968 session asked the Alaska Court System to review its sentencing techniques and suggested that it hold a sentencing seminar for its judges. Efforts were made to appraise sentencing techniques and methods and a sentencing seminar was held at the annual judicial conference in Ketchikan in May of 1968. Other sentencing seminars are planned.

In addition, the Alaska Judicial Council voted in 1968 to sponsor a study of the need for a procedure to provide for the appellate review of sentences in Alaska. In the course of its study it further undertook to review and report to the Alaska legislature on the pending proposed revised criminal code and the sentencing aspects of this proposed code. To provide a broad base for its studies the Judicial Council created a statewide blue ribbon committee composed of approximately 60 legislators, judges, lawyers and leading lay leaders in Alaska. Considerable background study material was collected and distributed to all members of the committee. Nationally recognized experts on the subject from Connecticut, New York and California were brought to Alaska to assist the statewide committee in its studies and discussions at its first meeting held in Sitka on December 12, 1968. As a result of the two-day Sitka conference on sentencing the statewide committee voted to establish subcommittees to further study the main interests of the statewide committee as evidenced at the Sitka conference.

Accordingly subcommittees on Appellate Review of Sentences, Probation and Parole in the Courts, and Sentencing Aspects of the Proposed Revised Alaska Criminal Code were created. These committees studied the aspects of sentencing assigned to them and reported to the Statewide Committee at its meeting held in Juneau on February 19, 1969.

The Statewide Committee adopted the subcommittee report on Appellate Review of Sentences and recommended it to the Alaska Judicial Council for further recommendation to the Alaska Legislature. At its meeting on February 20, 1969 the Alaska Judicial Council adopted the report and recommendations of the subcommittee and voted to recommend the passage of legislation which would provide authority for the appellate review of sentences by Alaska's courts.

Appellate courts of the states of the United States and the federal courts have held that they do not have the inherent authority to review and modify a lawful criminal sentence imposed by a trial judge on the ground that the sentence was excessive or too lenient. The decisions of these courts are based in large part on the fact that during the growth of the common law the prerogative of prescribing punishment for the violation of criminal ordinances was in the crown and later in the legislative bodies. The majority of the courts have held that where a sentence imposed by a trial judge is within the limits prescribed by statute and otherwise legal, an appellate court cannot review the discretion of the trial judge exercised in determining the sentence, even though it may appear in retrospect to have been too severe or too lenient.

The concept that the discretion of the trial judge exercised in imposing a particular sentence should not be questioned on appeal is now being challenged in more and more jurisdictions. In approximately eleven states of the United States constitutional or statutory provision for the appellate review of criminal sentences is now provided. The Congress of the United States has held hearings for the past three years on proposed federal legislation which would provide for the appellate review of sentences in the federal courts. It is predicted by Senator Hruska that the pending legislation will be enacted into law during the 1969 session of Congress. For the past ten years the states of Massachusetts and Connecticut have provided by statute for the appellate review of criminal sentences and only recently the state of Maryland has adopted the techniques employed in those two states.

The general advantages of appellate review of sentences are considered to be:

1. Prison unrest generated by long-term prisoners can be alleviated to a large extent by providing for review of sentences which are claimed to be excessive on the ground that the trial judge "railroaded" the offender.

2. Where sentences are appealed by the offenders the appellate review panel can adjust the sentence upward as well as downward if in its opinion the original sentence was too lenient or too severe, resulting in a more just treatment of the defendant and the state.

3. Since every other aspect of a criminal trial prior to conviction is subject to appellate review there is, in this enlightened day, no reason in logic or justice why a sentence imposed by the trial judge after conviction should not likewise be reviewed.

The Alaska Judicial Council, assisted by its statewide committee, has considered all aspects of the problem and has concluded that the administration of criminal justice would be improved if the courts of Alaska were granted jurisdiction to review and modify criminal sentences imposed by the trial judges. The Council was considerably impressed by the simplicity of the procedure proposed for federal appellate review of sentences and its suggested method of providing such review in Alaska is based primarily on proposed federal legislation.

The Alaska Judicial Council therefore respectfully requests that this legislature grant jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Alaska to sit in appellate judgement on criminal sentences imposed by the Superior Courts of Alaska by enacting the following:

Amend AS 22.05.010 to add the following two sentences:

The supreme court has jurisdiction to hear appeals of sentences of imprisonment lawfully imposed by the superior courts upon the ground that the sentence or sentences are excessive or too lenient and in the exercise of this jurisdiction may modify the sentence as provided under law and under the constitution of this state. For the purpose of considering appeals of sentences upon the above grounds the supreme court may sit in divisions.

DISCUSSION: Enactment of the above would give the Supreme Court of Alaska the jurisdiction to hear appeals of criminal sentences which it has held in a recent decision that it does not now have. The last portion of the first sentence which reads "may modify the sentence as provided under law and under the constitution of this state" was worded in that manner rather than to state, as was originally proposed, that the court "may modify the sentence upward or downward." The reason being that where the defendant appeals he can be held to have waived his constitutional right not to be twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense in the event the sentence should be modified upward. However, where the state has appealed on the ground that the sentence is too lenient, but the defendant has not also appealed, the court would not be justified in holding that the defendant had waived his right against double jeopardy and would be prevented from increasing the sentence by reason of that fact. The above wording was finally adopted which provides for modifying the sentence upward or downward where the defendant himself has appealed but prevents the court from modifying the sentence upward if the defendant has not appealed but the state has appealed.

Add as separate sections to Chapter 25, Title 12 of Alaska Statutes the following:

Sentence Appeal.

(a) Any sentence or sentences of imprisonment lawfully imposed by the superior court for a term or for aggregate terms exceeding one year may be appealed to the supreme court by the defendant upon the ground that the sentence or sentences are excessive. By a sentence appeal under this section the defendant waives any right to plead that by any revision of the sentence resulting from such appeal he has been twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense.

(b) Any sentence of imprisonment lawfully imposed by the superior court may be appealed to the supreme court by the state upon the ground that the sentence is too lenient provided, however, that when a sentence has not also been appealed by the defendant, the court is not authorized to increase the sentence but may express its approval or disapproval and its reasons therefore in a written opinion.

(c) A sentence appeal under this section does not confer or enlarge any right to bail pending appeal. Where a defendant in the prosecution of a regular appeal urges excessiveness of the sentence as an additional ground for appeal, the defendant's right to bail pending appeal shall be governed by the statutes and rules of court.

DISCUSSION: It is believed that the above proposed sections are self-explanatory. Subsection (b) takes care of the situation mentioned in the above discussion with respect to appeals by the state. The advantage of enacting this subsection would be to permit the state to draw to the attention of the appellate courts sentences which were considered to be too lenient. The appellate court would review such sentences and express its approval or disapproval in a written opinion. Whether the appellate court affirmed the sentence on the ground that it was not too lenient or whether it merely expressed disapproval of the sentence on the ground that it was too lenient, the written opinions of the court would in time provide guidelines for the other courts of Alaska to use in their determination of the appropriate sentence. As the case law of Alaska built up over the years considerable guidelines would be supplied to the lower courts which would be binding upon those courts within the limits of the exercise of their judicial discretion. It is believed that this would be a tremendous advantage because at the present time there are no binding guidelines for the courts of Alaska to employ in determining the appropriate sentence. Subsection (c) would prevent indiscriminate appeal being taken on the ground that the sentence was excessive in order to obtain release pending appeal. It was not intended to prevent release of the defendant on bail pending appeal where the excessiveness of the sentence was only one of several grounds of appeal in the usual appeal. In those situations the defendant should have the right to release on bail pending appeal provided he can convince the court that he qualified for bail pending appeal under the statutes and rules of court now in effect.

In subdivision (a) of AS 22.10.020, interline the following sentence as a next to last sentence:

An appeal to the superior court may be taken on the ground that a sentence of imprisonment of 180 days or more was excessive and the superior court in the exercise of this jurisdiction has the power to modify the sentence appealed from downward.

DISCUSSION: This would provide an appeal for the defendant only from the magistrate's and district courts to the superior court. The Council felt that the appellate review procedure should be extended to the lower courts, for it is in those courts, particularly the courts presided over by lay judges, that abuses of discretion too often occur. The appeal would be heard by a single superior court judge on the record created by the defendant's written statement, the sentencing judge's written statement of reasons, and the district attorney's or the enforcement officer's written statement. The hearing procedure would be fairly summary and expeditious, but it would provide for a mature review by a more experienced judge and would undoubtedly prevent occasional injustices.

Enactment of the above legislation would provide the jurisdiction and substantive guidelines required to provide for appellate review of sentences in Alaska. The Supreme Court of Alaska would promulgate detailed rules of procedure providing for the preparation and forwarding of the record, hearing procedures, etc. In general these rules would be identical with those proposed to implement the federal legislation. Upon the institution of an appeal the clerk of court would forward to the appellate court the probation officer's report, the district attorney's recommendation, the defendant's statement, the written statement of the judge explaining in detail why the sentence was imposed and any other written material which was before the trial judge at the time he imposed the sentence. The record would also include a transcript of the proceedings held in court at the time the sentence was imposed. No other record would be forwarded and the appeal would be determined by the court on the record unless in its discretion it ordered the production of the defendant before the court. Such production would be required in any case where the court considered increasing the sentence. The additional expense to the state which would result from providing appellate review as above contemplated would be negligible.

Experience in Massachusetts and Connecticut has indicated that the fact that a sentence may be modified by the appellate body upward as well as downward has restricted the appeals taken by defendants to those cases where the defendant sincerely believes that his sentence was excessive. The statistics of those states also reveal that less than 20% of sentences imposed are appealed. During the past calendar year a total of 113 sentences of one year or more were imposed by the superior courts of the state. These statistics indicate that approximately 20 appeals from superior court sentences might be expected annually. Since many of the criminal appeals already being taken would be able to incorporate as an additional point an appeal for claimed excessiveness of the sentence imposed, it is not expected that the total number of separate appeals from the sentence alone would exceed 15 in a given year. Under the same reasoning it is not expected that the number of appeals from the district or magistrate's courts to the superior court would exceed a total of 35 in a given year in the entire court system.

The legislation should be made effective six months from the date of enactment in order to give the courts time to formulate rules of procedure. The act should be made applicable only to sentences imposed after its effective date, as has been provided in the federal legislation.

Sincerely,

Buell A. Nesbett

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 281

This bill draws on the concepts for appellate review of criminal sentences contained in proposed federal legislation. Such legislation is expected to be enacted into law during the 1969 session.

The majority of the courts have held that where a sentence imposed by a trial judge is within the limits prescribed by statute and otherwise legal, an appellate court cannot review the discretion of the trial judge exercised in determining the sentence, even though it may appear in retrospect to have been too severe or too lenient.

Enactment of House Bill No. 281 would provide the jurisdiction and substantive guidelines required to provide for appellate review of sentences in Alaska. The supreme court of Alaska would promulgate detailed rules of procedure providing for the preparation and forwarding of the record, hearing procedures, etc. In general, it is expected that these rules would be identical with those proposed to implement the federal legislation. Upon the institution of an appeal the clerk of court would forward to the appellate court the probation officer's report, the district attorney's recommendation, the defendant's statement, the written statement of the judge explaining in detail why the sentence was imposed and any other written material which was before the trial judge at the time he imposed the sentence. The record would also include a transcript of the proceedings held in court at the time the sentence was imposed. No other record would be forwarded and the appeal would be determined by the court on the record unless in its discretion it ordered the production of the defendant before the court. Such production would be required in any case where the court considered increasing the sentence. According to Judge Nesbitt, the additional expense to the state which would result from providing appellate review would be negligible.

The effective date is six months from the date of enactment in order to give the courts time to formulate rules or procedure. The act is applicable only to sentences imposed after its effective date, as has been provided in the federal legislation.

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 309, An Act relating to motor vehicle financial security and providing an effective date of January 1, 1970

Attached is a copy of a memorandum from P. A. Wall, Director, Administrative Services Division, Department of Revenue to Mr. George A. Morrison, Commissioner of Revenue concerning House Bill 309, An Act relating to motor vehicle financial security and providing for an effective date of January 1, 1970.

Mr. Wall is extremely familiar with the operation of the Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Revenue and prepared his report after conferring with Paul D. Goodrich, Director of the Motor Vehicle Division in Anchorage.

A detailed fiscal note is included. Mr. Goodrich in a wire to Mr. Wall advised "that the bill has intermingled functions and responsibilities of two departments, Public Safety and Revenue Motor Vehicle Division in the administration of the Act and delegated those responsibilities and functions to Public Safety".

Mr. Wall would be most happy to discuss any or all of the information contained in the attached memorandum concerning House Bill no. 309. He may be reached at the Department of Revenue by calling 6-5265.

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: G. A. Morrison, Commissioner of Revenue

DATE : April 4, 1969

FROM: P. . . Wall, Director
Administrative Services Division

SUBJECT: House Bill 309 "An act relating to Motor Vehicle Financial Security."

This bill requires an operator of a motor vehicle to show proof of financial security as a pre requisite to operation of a motor vehicle in the state.

EFFECT UPON THE TREASURY:

Section 28.18.040 - requires that an abstract of the operating records of a person to whom the chapter applies that contains a lists of accidents, the conviction record for violation of motor vehicle laws and a record of vehicle registered in the operators name be furnished for a fee of one dollar. It is our experience that in other states having a liked law that insurance companies and the courts do request abstracts upon the renewal of each insurance policy and in conjunction with each court case. The minimum number of abstracts is estimated at 150,000 for effect upon the treasury of an increase of $150,000.

ADMINISTRATION:

A very detailed fiscal note is attached as prepared by Mr. Goodrich. We believe that the bill lays the burden of information retrieval upon the Department of Revenue, and that the Department of Public Safety will be required to furnish the Department of Revenue with drivers record and violation data to which the Department of Revenue would add a record of the motor vehicle operated by the individual and, for which the Department of Revenue would collect with the one dollar abstract fee.

The annual cost of this bill is estimated at $218,076. This estimat does not include the cost to the Department of Public Safety for establishing files of drivers licenses and violations in promptly retrievable form. It does not include the additional cost of Motor Vehicle Department for establishing files on approximately 8,000 vehicles now operated by military personnel, and who are not presently required to license their vehicles in Alaska.

We also note that probable correction on page 17 line 27 where the new included Alaska Statutes Reference of AS 28.22.050 should probably be AS 28.18.050.

COMMENTS:

The Department of Revenue presently charges one dollar for a search for the title and registration files. This one dollar would be preempted by the new charge of one dollar in section 28.18.040 of the bill.

When we compare the cost of the program which is over $200,000.00 for the Department of Revenue annually, it is recommended that the charge for each abstract be raised to $10.00 to cover the cost of the assembling and certifing each request.

ATTACHMENT:

This report very briefly describes the factors, personal services, forms and other costs that will be necessary in the Administration of the Bill.

Requires the Department to furnish a certified abstract of accidents and a record of vehicles registered in that persons name. The fee per abstract is $1.00.

Comment: The cost will be substantially in excess of $1.00. It requires this department $1.00 per item to research Title and Registration files. The abstract specified would be very extensive. Recommended fee - $10.00.

This section requires that the owner of any vehicle submit proof of financial security.

(A) Requires Certificate of Insurance with each registration.

(B) Requires Financial Security Deposit.

(C) Requires statement of security at renewal.

Forms: Financial Statement
Insurance Certificate
Yearly Statement

Personal Services:

At initial registration, each document submitted will be examined for accuracy and compliance. There will be a document generated at every initial registration and at every transfer of registration for each year during re-registration for every vehicle.

Section 8

There will be a continuous flow of insurance documents into the system as insurance is renewed, terminated or cancelled, or when a person adds to or deletes from a specific policy or when other conditions of the policy changes.

28.18.070

The department will receive, account for, deposit and control financial security deposits.

Personal Services:

Accounting Services, Files and Records

28.18.070
Section 3

This section will require some type of evidence such as a Title Search to determine that there are no unsatisfied judgements against the depositor. The department would be required to examine and verify whatever documents are submitted.

28.18.090 & 100

Requires that a Bond be filed with the Department. This Act specifies that the Department must maintain a record of actions and damages pending or judgements outstanding or unsatisfied, etc.

Files and Personal Services:

Actions pending, Liabilities outstanding or unsatisfied, drivers involved in accidents.

Forms: Affidavit of Non-existence of these facts.

28.19.110

Files: Self Insurer
Forms: Certificate of Self-Insurance

(b) Forms & Files:
Financial Statement by Self Insurer

(c) Substantial clerical services required to process files and initiate correspondence.

28.18.120

Sets out action to be taken when evidence is received that security is no longer in effect. Revocation of registration occurs; clerical services will be required for the purpose of initiating correspondence and maintaining files. Very prosably, services of a Field Representative will be required in many instances to take physical possession of license plates and Driver's license.

28.18.130

Specifies action to be taken on any transfer of Motor Vehicles. It would required an examination of all Titles registered to any specific individual or firm. It would require very substantial clerical services.

28.18.190

Concerns the removal of vehicles from the United States or Canada and would require the maintenance of still another file and records. Clerical services would be required for the purpose of initiating correspondence and maintaining the files on the specific vehicles.

28.18.210

This section defines the Liability policy that must exist on each initial registration. It is required that a Certificate of Insurance be submitted and that this insurance meet certain standards and specifications. It would be necessary, on each initial registration to examine both the owner and the vehicle to make certain of the following facts:

1. That the insurance is of the amount and type specified.
2. That all persons driving any one vehicle registered to any given individual are included in the policy.
3. That none of the individuals driving any of the vehicles had violated the Motor Vehicle Operator's Code.

This procedure will be similar to our Title examining function except more extensive. A substantial number of clerical personnel will be required as Policy Examiners.

28.18.230

Forms: Certificate of Insurance.
There will be one for every initial registration, one for every transfer and one for every change in policy on each individual vehicle. There will be an affidavit certificate on each individual vehicle for every re-registration period.

The procedures required to administer this act, insofar as the Motor Vehicle Division is concerned, will be essentially the same as our Title Examining function. Certificates of insurance replacing Lien documents but examined for similar purposes.

There would be exceptions (additional procedures) to the Title Examining parallel, however. For example:

1. There will be a yearly statement to be filed on each active Title (vehicle currently registered) which must be recorded and filed.

2. There will be statements or affidavits generated in each instance where the condition of a policy changes.

3. There will be terminations and cancellations throughout the year.

4. There will be reports of suits pending, liabilities unpaid and judgements issued, to be recorded and appropriate action taken.

Personal Services

File Clerks

1. Each initial registration generates one document (certificate of insurance) 120,000 estimated for 1970.

2. Each re-registration generates one document (Affidavit of Insurance) 161,000 estimated for 1970.

3. Each change in condition of insurance either generates new document or moves the files.

4. A separate "Financial Statement" is generated by each self insurer.

5. Files will move in each instance of revocation by virtue of a. Cancellation of Insurance Policy

b. Revocation of Operators permit
c. Failure to maintain financial responsibility.
d. Suit is pending or judgment given

4	Clerks I	@ $5,880	$23,520
1	Clerk III Sup.	@ $6,600	6,600

There will be an area of work concerned with violations or non-compliance with the Act. The processing of folio where a suit is pending or judgement has been given. The control of vehicles moved from the U.S.A. and other requirements of the act. Work will be extensive and exacting and will require the services of higher grade clerical personnel. There will be very extensive correspondence and reports.

2	Clerk Typist IV	@ $7,200	$14,400

The prime end function of this program will be the production of reports and information for use by the Courts and which must be in suitable form. All must be extremely accurate and generally suitable for admission as evidence. In conjunction, there will be a wide assortment of documents generated by various court actions which will require some action by the department.

There must be an area of supervision and guidance, then, within this section staffed by a person reasonably skilled in legal areas. Probably an attorney will be required but possible a secretary (Legal) with exceptional training and experience might suffice.

1	Administrative Assistant	$10,320
1	Secretary II	6,808

The Accounting sections will be required to process a number of Revenue Documents roughly equal to those presently processed under the Motor Vehicle Act, since there will be a Revenue bearing document, generated at each registration and re-registration. In addition, the Accounting section will receive, hold and control disbursements against security deposits. There will be a substantial number of miscellaneous fees generated. Accounting requirements for the Administration of the Act will, in fact, parallel the present Motor Vehicle Accounting system. Since the present system is effective in processing bulk quantities of paper.

We cannot consider the matter of correlating Driver's Licensing information to vehicle licensing, having insufficient data. It appears that the only feasible manner would be by either incorporating the two functions into one operating entity or by combining the records by making provision for a very extensive and fairly sophisticated computerized system.

A Realistic Look at Auto Insurance Costs

Today's policyholder spends less of his income for basic coverages than he did 20 years ago.

AS EVERY CAR OWNER KNOWS, it takes more dollars to pay for auto insurance today than it did, say, 20 years ago. The same is true of most other products and services.

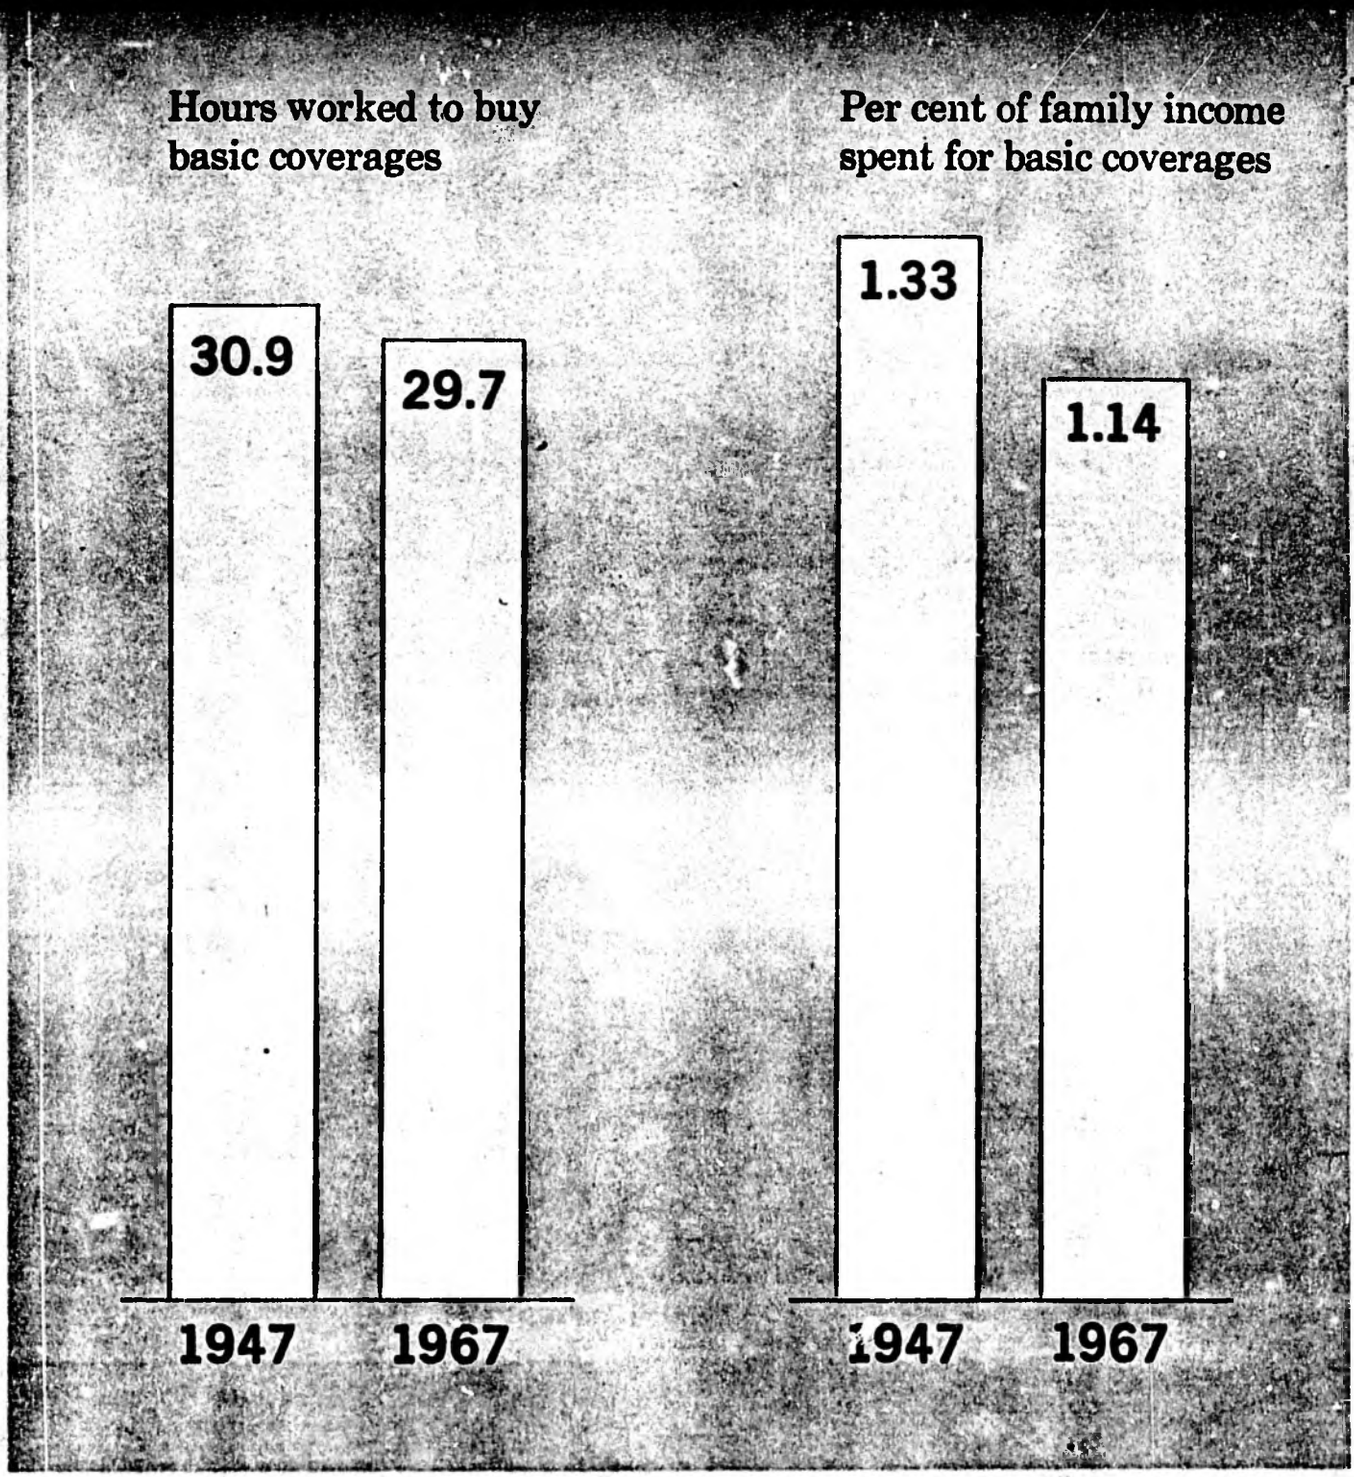
But in terms of consumer purchasing power, basic auto liability insurance is a better value than it was in 1947. The typical policyholder is able to pay for his coverages with fewer hours of work, and with a smaller percentage of his family income, than were required to pay for the same coverages 20 years ago.

For example, the typical U.S. factory production worker had to put in 30.9 hours of work to earn the annual premium for $10,000/$20,000/$5,000 auto liability coverages in 1947, when wages averaged $1.23 an hour and the average cost of insurance was $38.03 a year.

In 1967, the typical production worker put in only 29.7 hours of work to pay for the same coverage. The average insurance premium for these basic coverages had risen to $84.03, up 121 per cent in the 20-year period. But average hourly wages had risen to $2.83, up 130.1 per cent, in the same period.

The improvement is even greater when the comparison is based on median family income, perhaps the best single yardstick of consumer affluence. In 1947, when median family income was $2,854, the typical American family spent 1.33 per cent of its annual income to buy basic auto liability coverages with limits of $10,000 per person, and $20,000 per accident, for bodily injuries, plus $5,000 for property damage.

By 1967, when median family income was $7,400, the portion of annual income spent for basic auto insurance coverages had dropped to 1.14 per cent.



All of these comparisons are based on country-wide averages for private passenger vehicles and Class 1-A drivers. This means the policyholder is an adult who has no under-25 drivers in the family and who does not use his car for business or commuting. About 38 per cent of auto policyholders fit into this rating category. The premium paid by this group is the "base rate" from which all other rates are computed. Another 38 per cent is comprised of adults who drive to work 10 miles or less. They pay the base rate in nonurban areas and about 10 per cent more than the base rate if they live in urban areas.

All other rating categories account for the remaining 24 per cent of policyholders. This group includes young drivers who pay varying surcharges depending on their age, sex and marital status. It also includes low-risk groups such as farmers, who pay about 30 per cent less than Class 1-A rates. In other words, relatively few drivers pay the high rates frequently cited in articles deploring the rising cost of auto insurance.

No doubt these facts run counter to the general impression many persons have about what's happening to the cost of auto insurance. This is especially true of those who look solely at the total bill they pay, without considering what they are receiving for the expenditure.

For example, many families purchase more coverages today than they did 20 years ago. Instead of buying $10,000 auto liability limits, they buy policies with limits of $50,000 or higher to protect their improved financial standing. Higher limits also are purchased to provide better protection to persons who may be injured by the policyholder's negligence, and in recognition of the fact that claims and lawsuits run higher today.

In addition, car owners now buy more optional

coverages to pay for collisions, theft, damage done by vandalism and storms, medical expenses, towing charges, and injuries caused by uninsured motorists.

A third major reason why many families spend more for auto insurance today is the trend toward ownership of two or more cars. Even though policyholders receive a special discount when they insure two or more vehicles under the same policy, the total bill naturally is higher than when the family owned a single vehicle. The increase is greatest when the second car is purchased for use by a young driver, since young drivers as a group cause substantially more accidents and insurance losses than their more experienced and more cautious elders.

In short, people who judge the cost of auto insurance solely by the number of dollars they pay are not always using a valid yardstick. Most families today are much more adequately insured than they were 20 years ago, and are receiving good value for their insurance expenditures. ⊙

It should be noted that the above percentages apply only to persons involved in accidents reportable under present law.

It has been proven by research that the more "responsible" driver has fewer accidents than his counterpart who is classed as "irresponsible" by society. In other words, the uninsured rate taken from accident reports will be much higher than would appear if an entire cross section of drivers was studied.

Re: H. B. No. 309 - Compulsory Vehicle Insurance

Dear Mr. Jackson:

House Bill No. 309 is being reported out of the House Commerce Committee and goes to your committee next.

At a hearing on this bill before the Commerce Committee, Mr. F. O. Eastaugh, the Director of Insurance and I opposed the bill. I represented American Mutual Insurance Alliance, the Director was requested to testify and Mr. Eastaugh represented American Insurance Assocation.

This is a very important bill and although the Alliance is not opposed to the concept of compulsory insurance, because of the experience of other states in its administration, together with the effect it will have on insurance rates and the difficulties of enforcement in Alaska we cannot recommend this bill to the State of Alaska. I have a considerable amount of information regarding this type of statute and would appreciate being given the opportunity of appearing. Please notify me when your committee will consider the bill. I also suggest that you request the Director of Insurance to be present.

Yours very truly,

Re: House Bill No. 336
Comparative Negligence

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As legislative agent for American Mutual Insurance Alliance I wish to state the position of the Alliance on House Bill No. 336. I will be attending a hearing on House Bill No. 202 (the Public Utility bill) and I may not be able to get away to attend your hearing on House Bill No. 336. Therefore, I would like to have this letter read to the Judiciary Committee.

The Alliance neither opposes or supports the substitution of comparative negligence for the contributory negligence doctrine. However, if the comparative negligence doctrine is adopted, then we want to see it done in the most complete and practical manner. Enclosed is a copy of a Model Comparative Negligence Bill which we believe is the most practical and acceptable of the comparative negligence statutes now being used. The provisions of HB 336 are all contained in Section 1 of the Model Bill except for some change in language to make the paragraph more positive in some respects. It also eliminates some unnecessary wording and makes it very clear that no recovery shall be allowed against a person whose negligence is less than that of the person seeking recovery. To state it another way - the negligence of the plaintiff must be less than that of the defendant. Section 1 of the Model Bill also provides for the same principles to apply where a counterclaim is made by a defendant, whereas HB 336 does not specifically mention counterclaims although they probably come within the purview of HB 336.

We are particularly anxious to have the provisions of the Model Bill with respect to special verdicts. It also provides that the court will compute the amount of the judgment. In other words, the special verdicts would determine the amount of the damages and the percentage of negligence of each party and then, the Judge would compute the damages and enter judgment accordingly.

Section 3 of the Model Bill is necessary with respect to joinder of defendants.

Section 4 of the Model Bill limits the actions to those arising out of ownership, maintenance or use of motor vehicles and limits the effect of the Act to causes of action arising prior to the effective date.

We particularly wish to call yourattention to the fact that HB 336 states that contributory negligence "may" not bar recovery. The word "may" should be changed to the word "shall".

The Wisconsin statute is almost identical to HB 336 but contains no reference to the jury or the court without a jury determining the damages as such reference is unnecessary and we think it is advisable that the damages awarded be computed by the Judge after the jury determines the proportion of negligence attributed to each on a comparative basis and the total amount to be awarded.

Yours very truly,

N. C. Banfield

MODEL COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE BILL

An Act to amend the Code of Civil Procedure to adopt a comparative negligence law and to provide for special interrogatories and joinder of parties defendant in automobile tort cases.

Section 1. Comparative negligence. Contributory negligence shall not bar recovery in an action by any person or his legal representative to recover damages for negligence resulting in death or in injury to person or property, if such negligence is less than the negligence of the person against whom recovery is sought, but any damages allowed shall be diminished to the amount represented by the percentage by which the negligence of each of the defendants exceeds that of the person seeking recovery, provided that no recovery shall be allowed against any defendant whose negligence is less than that of the person seeking recovery. In the event of a counterclaim by a defendant this section shall apply to the same extent as if the defendant were the party initially seeking recovery.

Section 2. Special Verdicts. The court may, and when requested by either party, before the introduction of any testimony in his behalf, shall direct the jury to find a special verdict. Such verdict shall be prepared by the court in the form of written questions, relating only to material issues of fact and admitting a direct answer, to which the jury shall make answer in writing. The court may also direct the jury, if they render a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact.

The court shall make the computation as to the amount of judgment. The jury shall not be informed as to the effect of its findings.

Section 3. Joinder of Defendants. Any party to the action may join as additional defendants any person against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, or whom it is necessary to make a party defendant for the complete determination of settlement of any question in the controversy. Judgment may be given according to the party's respective liabilities.

Section 4. This Act shall apply only to actions arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of motor vehicles. This Act shall not be construed to extend or apply to causes of action arising prior to the effective date of this Act.

Section 5. This Act shall take effect _____.

Comparative Negligence: Wisconsin's Answer

by C. R. Heft and C. J. Heft

Wisconsin uses the doctrine of comparative negligence, under which the defendant, if he is guilty of the greater negligence, pays the plaintiff an award which is diminished by a percentage equivalent to the percentage of the plaintiff's negligence. "No-fault" compensation schemes have been suggested as an alternative to automobile accident tort suits, but why experiment with an untried scheme that dispenses with the adversary system when the Wisconsin doctrine is successfully meeting the test of time?

TODAY THE DOCTRINE of contributory negligence is under severe criticism, the critics contending that many victims of accidents are either not compensated at all or are not adequately compensated. With regard to automobile accident reparations, the well-publicized no-fault compensation schemes have been put forth as an alternative. For example, Professors Robert E. Keeton and Jeffrey O'Connell have proposed a basic protection plan for traffic victims under which every injured person would be compensated for out-of-pocket losses up to $10,000.[1]

Wisconsin law provides for payment to the plaintiff whenever the defendant is guilty of the greater negligence. Since charitable, governmental, husband-wife, host-guest and parent-child immunities have been eliminated in Wisconsin, more plaintiffs recover, but because the percentage of causal negligence attributed to the plaintiff reduces the award in that amount, they recover less. Wisconsin, then, has put an end to the problems of contributory negligence. And the collateral problems of delays in payment, cost of delivering insurance benefits, elusive insurance coverages and even congestion in the courts do not exist. Why? Because the state's philosophy that a person is, and should be, responsible for injury to another to the extent he caused that injury is honest, fair, just and easy to understand and apply.

The historical origin of contributory negligence in itself explains the doctrine's inadequacy—its inability to meet current social and economic demands and to adapt to change and growth. The doctrine arose during the horseriding days of the seventeenth century. The classic case is Butterfield v. Forrester, 103 Eng. Rep. 926 (K.B. 1809), in which a horseman was thrown because of an obstruction which it was held he should have seen and avoided. In other words, society was satisfied with the theory that the greater duty was that of the individual to avoid injury to himself. Such being the case, it was further reasoned that a person who was himself at fault was not justified in seeking recovery from others.

What has happened to this reasoning today? On a world-wide basis the doctrine of comparative negligence generally is accepted and is more widespread than that of contributory negligence. The research of Chief Justice E. Harold Hallows of the Wisconsin Supreme Court discloses evidence of comparative negligence in the 1794 Prussian Code, in the 1804 Code of Napoleon, in the 1811 Austrian Civil Code, in 1867 in Portugal, in 1881 in Switzerland and in 1896 in Germany. And despite the fact that English admiralty law goes back to the seventeenth century and contributory negligence days, damages in ship collision cases were divided equally. The Brussels Maritime Convention in 1909 adopted pure comparative negligence in the admiralty cases, and this rule is applied by all the major nations in the world. Other countries which have adopted the apportionment rule are China, Japan, Russia, Persia, Poland, the Philippine Islands and Canadian provinces. Even England, the country that originated the doctrine of contributory negligence, abolished it by the English Reform Act of 1945.

Logically, what happens when contributory negligence stubbornly persists and many injured persons are deprived of a remedy? Thirty states have adopted railway employer's liability acts, workmen's compensation acts or similar laws liberalizing certain areas of recovery beyond contributory negligence. The Federal Employers' Liability Act and the Merchant Marine Act are examples of the substitution of comparative negligence for contributory negligence. Seven states have adopted the apportionment doctrine.

Wisconsin torts law has evolved toward a pure form of comparative negligence over the years and has opened the state's forums to many injured persons who had no legal remedy or even a theoretical cause of action before. Wisconsin has abolished implied assumption of risk and gross negligence, and these areas are included as ordinary negligence in the comparison or apportionment. It has abolished religious, charitable, governmental and parent-child immunities. A host owes his guest the duty of ordinary care, and the state does not impute negligence to the guest. The basic philosophy is that tortfeasors ought to be liable to the extent they have injured or damaged others. The wrongdoer should pay for the damages caused by his wrong. Wisconsin believes that the adversary system is the surest method of determining the truth and that the system should not be so limited by rules of law that justice cannot be done. On the other hand, a plaintiff who is himself a tortfeasor should not profit from his own wrong.

How Does Apportionment Work?

Section 895.045 of Wisconsin Statutes, "Contributory Negligence; When Bars Recovery", provides:

> Contributory negligence shall not bar recovery in an action by any person or his legal representative to recover damages for negligence resulting in death, or in injury to person or property, if such negligence was not as great as the negligence of the person against whom recovery is sought, but any damages allowed shall be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering.

Originally, the jury was instructed to diminish the damages in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the recovering party. In 1949, however, the statute was amended so that now the jury finds the facts, finds the percentage of negligence attributable to each party, compares the negligence and finds the damages sustained by the plaintiff without regard to the comparison. Then the court does the mathematics and applies the percentages of negligence to the amount specified in the damage question, reduces the recovery and orders judgment.

A few examples will suffice to illustrate how comparative negligence is applied. Assume that in each example the total damage suffered by the plaintiff is $10,000 and the causal negligence of each party is the percentage set forth.

Example 1: Plaintiff—40 per cent. Defendant—60 per cent. Plaintiff recovers $6,000. His damages of $10,000 are reduced by 40 per cent or the amount of his causal negligence.

Example 2: Plaintiff—60 per cent. Defendant—40 per cent. No recovery by the plaintiff.

Example 3: Plaintiff—50 per cent. Defendant—50 per cent. No recovery. The Wisconsin law is stated in terms of greater negligence, so equal negligence does not permit recovery.

Assume damages are $10,000 and the plaintiff guest sues both defendant drivers of the vehicles that were in the accident. The percentage of causal negligence are as stated.

Example 4: Plaintiff—40 per cent. Defendant driver A—10 per cent. Defendant driver B—50 per cent. As between the plaintiff (40 per cent) and defendant A (10 per cent), the plaintiff collects nothing from defendant. A. As between the plaintiff (40 per cent) and defendant B (50 per cent), the plaintiff recovers $6,000. A joint tortfeasor is liable for the entire amount of the plaintiff's recovery. The plaintiff's negligence is not compared to that of all defendants as a whole, but only to that of each defendant individually.

Example 5: Assume the plaintiff and defendant A and defendant B are all equally negligent. No recovery.

Example 6: Assume the plaintiff is 10 per cent negligent, defendant A 50 per cent negligent and defendant B 40 per cent negligent. Plaintiff recovers $9,000 or 10 per cent less than the total damages of $10,000. As between the defendants, defendant A contributes $5,000 and defendant B $4,000 for a total of $9,000. The plaintiff can recover the total amount from either tortfeasor, and as between the tortfeasors there is contribution in the percentages and amounts just stated.[2]

The comparative negligence concept tends to prompt an accurate investigation in order to determine the percentages of fault for apportionment. This preparation results in a greater number of settlements. The adjacent table illustrates suggested prorations in typical automobile accident cases. The unusual case is treated on its own merits. The first hypothetical case is the rear-end collision. In this table the defendant is deemed negligent in the greater degree, and the negligence of the plaintiff is the lesser percentage which represents the percentage used in diminishing plaintiff's recovery.

Special Verdict Procedure

The special verdict is a statutory procedure, § 270.27 Wis. Stat., and is a necessary corollary to comparative negligence. An example follows:

Contribution — or Spreading the Burden

Contribution is an important part of comparative negligence. Wisconsin has always had common law contribution. As between tortfeasors common law contribution meant that all tortfeasors contributed equally. "The pot should not call the kettle black."

In Wisconsin, the anomaly was that we had a comparative negligence statute, and we had common law contribution. When the plaintiff guest sued drivers A and B, and driver A was found 95 per cent negligent and driver B 5 per cent negligent, it was illogical to say that drivers A and B should share the award to the plaintiff on a fifty-fifty basis.

This very case finally came to the Wisconsin Supreme Court. It was a left-turn case. The plaintiff, Mrs. Bielski, was a guest passenger in her husband's car. Two cars were approaching each other. When the Bielski car was seventy to eighty feet from the intersection, the defendant, Schulze, made a left turn across the pathway of the Bielski vehicle. The jury found the left turning vehicle 95 per cent negligent and the Bielski vehicle 5 per cent negligent. The total award was $25,000. Under the rule then existing, contribution required the Bielski carrier to pay $12,500, although its assured was only 5 per cent negligent. The case went to the supreme court. Chief Justice Hallows wrote the opinion.

The court pointed out that Wisconsin was unique in possessing devices of procedure and practice which made a new rule realistically just. The use of the special verdict, the joining of automobile insurance carriers, the pleadings permitting contribution, the fixing of a percentage of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, constituted a procedure in which it was possible to do equity and natural justice.

So Chief Justice Hallows held in that opinion that henceforth contribution would be determined in proportion to the percentages of causal negligence attributed to each in the comparison question. Consequently Bielski, driver A, who was 5 per cent negligent, would pay 5 per cent of the jury award, and in addition thereto, he would pay only 5 per cent of the contribution as between the drivers themselves. In other words, Bielski's automobile liability carrier paid 5 per cent of $25,000 or $1,250 and not 50 per cent of $25,000, $12,500, as under old common law contribution. Of course, Schulze, driver B, would pay 95 per cent of the award to the plaintiff and 95 per cent of the total sum due in contribution as between the drivers.

This decision, Bielski v. Schulze, 16 Wis. 2d 1, 102 N.W. 2d 393 (1960), is one of the greatest decisions in Wisconsin jurisprudence. It recognizes the need for change and accomplishes it.

Damages—the New Rule

As a part of the Wisconsin concept, a very practical trial technique was evolved in Powers v. Allstate Insurance Company, 10 Wis. 2d 78, 102 N.W. 2d 393 (1960). Prior to the Powers case, it had been customary in cases of excessive awards to fix the lowest amount that an unprejudiced jury, properly instructed, might award for damages and then to grant the plaintiff the opportunity of accepting that amount or having a new trial. But there was an alternative.

First of all, the right to the trial by jury had to be preserved because it is a constitutional right, and it existed prior to the time of the adoption of the Wisconsin Constitution in 1848. The power of courts to set aside excessive verdicts and to grant new trials was firmly established even before the adoption of the United States Constitution.

In the Powers case the court adopted a rule which again illustrates the justice of Wisconsin's comparative negligence doctrine. The new rule is that when an excessive verdict is not due to perversity or prejudice and is not the result of error occurring during the course of trial, the plaintiff should be granted the option of remitting the excess over and above such sum as the court determines as the reasonable amount of plaintiff's damages or of having a new trial on the issue of damages. In the Powers case, the award of $5,000 for permanent injury was deemed excessive in light of the evidence and that sum was reduced to $3,000.

In Spleas v. Milwaukee Transport Company, 21 Wis. 2d 635, 124 N.W. 2d 593 (1963), this technique was again applied. An award of $15,000 to a 64-year-old maintenance man who suffered a back injury was deemed excessive, and a fair appraisal of the nature and seriousness of the injuries permitted an award of $10,000, which was deemed reasonable and which included pain and suffering.

Space does not permit further elaboration as to the results of the application of this doctrine, but some awards have been increased and some excessive awards have been diminished. However, the real point is that Wisconsin's treatment of excessive awards permits greater supervision over the awards of juries. There is, of course, the right to grant a new trial in the event of prejudice or error, but Wisconsin does not indulge in permitting the creation of an excessive jury award by flamboyant means and then permitting the award to stick. Justice requires supervision over jury verdicts. The judicial system permits the jury to find the facts, but within the guidelines pronounced by law, and when those guidelines are exceeded, court supervision is required.

Many who practice in the contributory negligence states contend that juries practice comparative negligence by awarding a negligent plaintiff less in damages. This is contrary to the theory of contributory negligence. Is it not better for a jury to find the percentages of causal negligence attributable to each party and make that finding known? Is it not better for a jury to find the total damages and make that amount known? Is it fair to ask a jury to be so sophisticated and learned that the jurors will wink at the court's instructions on contributory negligence, make a comparison regardless of the instructions and reduce the plaintiff's award accordingly? Is it even honest?

Why not have the jury find the percentages of causal negligence and find the damages? Then the court, knowing the percentages, can reduce the award by those percentages, and one knows the correct result is reached. Is this not the better procedure?

The Wisconsin plan was born in 1931 and has grown from infancy to manhood. This experience is available for study and adoption. Why should any state experiment with "no-fault" administrative schemes which have not been tried or tested? Why should we depart from our well-grounded concept of the adversary system in the open courtroom? Departure could even be dangerous—the beginning of the end of certain cherished rights.

Summary of the Wisconsin Plan

Wisconsin has, and we recommend, the following:

(1) The Wisconsin comparative negligence doctrine that permits recovery against one who is guilty of the greater negligence;

(2) The elimination of assumption of risk;

(3) The elimination of gross negligence;

(4) The elimination of governmental immunity;

(5) The elimination of charitable immunity;

(6) The elimination of parental immunity;

(7) The concept that a host owes the guest a duty of ordinary care;

(8) A financial responsibility law which keeps off the highways those who cannot pay for the economic loss they cause;

(9) An application of the special verdict technique which leaves the jury to find the facts and the court to do the mathematics and render judgment.

We further recommend Wisconsin's practices with regard to contribution, covenants not to sue, releases and court supervision over verdicts.

The authors of this article have a combined experience of approximately fifty years practicing under both contributory negligence and comparative negligence. The above conclusions are tempered with that experience. We believe the comparative negligence concept superior both prior to and during litigation. Investigation and preparation must be prompt and skillful in the search not only for liability, but also for the apportionment of the negligence causing the occurrence. The injured party can never complain that he is without a forum, even if the tortfeasor be the government, a hospital, a husband, a parent or a host. The climate is one of openness and is conducive to settlements. If litigation must be, the trial procedure is conducive to a just result without prejudice, guesswork, confusion or mystery.

We have often said the Wisconsin plan permits one to say what he believes and to believe in what he says.

Mr. Wendell P. Kay

Dear Wendell:

You have asked our comments on pending legislation which will affect the parties involved in personal injury litigation. The uniform contribution among tort feasors act would, in my opinion, clarify existing law. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court are in line with the provisions of this act and I believe it is fair to all parties involved in a tort claim.

You have also asked our comments on the comparative negligence statute which is presently before the Judiciary Committee. Unfortunately, the relatively short notice makes it impossible for any of us to be present to testify. I hope you will make the following comments known to the committee.

First, let us point out that the comparative negligence statute should accomplish two major goals. It would eliminate the often unjust and harsh result of an injured person being denied any compensation because he was slightly negligent as compared to the greater negligence of the act of tort feasor. All of the commentators agree that the rule of contributory negligence is a harsh rule which grew up during the industrial revolution to protect capital short industry from having to pay for the injuries inflicted upon its victims. The rule of contributory negligence as an absolute bar to recovery has no place in today's society where the potential tort feasor can easily protect himself.

Perhaps more important, many cases would not go to Court and once in Court would be settled if the adjustor and the defense attorney knew that contributory negligence would not be an absolute defense but would merely reduce the damages. In a majority of cases the hardest issue to evaluate is whether the slight negligence of the claimant should or will result in no liability for the potential defendant. I predict that if we were to adopt a rule of comparative negligence such as Wisconsin, we would be taking a step to eliminate or at least reduce Court congestion.

A rule of comparative negligence would apply to all claims arising out of negligence. It would not deny any person compensation for injuries but would merely reduce compensation by the amount of their contributory negligence. Comparative negligence is the rule followed in Admiralty and in an increasing number of States.

Although contributory negligence as an absolute bar was a doctrine developed by the Courts, the Courts have shown a great reluctance to abolish the rule and adopt comparative negligence. Therefore, it would seem appropriate for the Legislature to enact this legislation.

I have read quite a few articles on the subject in law journals and law school publications and I don't recall ever reading any article critical of comparative negligence. Most of the commentators find contributory negligence an historical anachronism which should be abolished. In terms of a just result and in terms of financial benefit to the community and the Court system, I think we could predict a slow but sure return.

The adoption of a comparative negligence statute would be a small step in law reform. It would not be a disruptive step since the students of the subject point out that juries in fact often follow the rule of comparative negligence in reaching their result. But we should seek to eliminate a situation where jurors feel compelled to disregard the law. We should certainly eliminate the situation where a drunk driver going through a red light can escape liability because the person going through the green light didn't look to the left or right.

I hope you receive favorable testimony on this bill. I really can't foresee any reasonable opposition although some insurance companies may claim it will cost insurers money. I believe an increase in any claims paid would be more than offset by the reduction in verdicts and also by greater rate of settlement, hence reduced legal and adjusting fees. I am in the process of gathering material on the subject, meanwhile.

I hope you can use this letter as my statement on the matter.

Very truly yours,

William H. Fuld

Judiciary Committee Report

on

House Bill No. 316

In the present law, in the United States and in Idaho, a suit for the recovery of damages resulting from an injury is completely barred if the injured party, but in any degree negligent himself. Exceptions are developed principally in which the party defendant (the injury was seriously negligent, and the injured party was slightly negligent. Under such circumstances, the injured person would recover both.

While [illegible] a number of states are making [illegible] a more reasonable rule which would permit recovery by the injured person, but would diminish his recovery in proportion to the degree of negligence attributable to him. This is known as the doctrine of "comparative negligence" and has now been adopted by seven states. The comparative negligence rule, we feel, provides a greater degree of justice than is now afforded by the contributory negligence doctrine.

Comparative Negligence: Wisconsin's Answer

by C. R. Heft and C. J. Heft

Wisconsin uses the doctrine of comparative negligence, under which the defendant, if he is guilty of the greater negligence, pays the plaintiff an award which is diminished by a percentage equivalent to the percentage of the plaintiff's negligence. "No-fault" compensation schemes have been suggested as an alternative to automobile accident tort suits, but why experiment with an untried scheme that dispenses with the adversary system when the Wisconsin doctrine is successfully meeting the test of time?

TODAY THE DOCTRINE of contributory negligence is under severe criticism, the critics contending that many victims of accidents are either not compensated at all or are not adequately compensated. With regard to automobile accident reparations, the well-publicized no-fault compensation schemes have been put forth as an alternative. For example, Professors Robert E. Keeton and Jeffrey O'Connell have proposed a basic protection plan for traffic victims under which every injured person would be compensated for out-of-pocket losses up to $10,000.[1]

Wisconsin law provides for payment to the plaintiff whenever the defendant is guilty of the greater negligence. Since charitable, governmental, husband-wife, host-guest and parent-child immunities have been eliminated in Wisconsin, more plaintiffs recover, but because the percentage of causal negligence attributed to the plaintiff reduces the award in that amount, they recover less. Wisconsin, then, has put an end to the problems of contributory negligence. And the collateral problems of delays in payment, cost of delivering insurance benefits, elusive insurance coverages and even congestion in the courts do not exist. Why? Because the state's philosophy that a person is, and should be, responsible for injury to another to the extent he caused that injury is honest, fair, just and easy to understand and apply.

The historical origin of contributory negligence in itself explains the doctrine's inadequacy—its inability to meet current social and economic demands and to adapt to change and growth. The doctrine arose during the horseriding days of the seventeenth century. The classic case is Butterfield v. Forrester, 103 Eng. Rep. 926 (K.B. 1809), in which a horseman was thrown because of an obstruction which it was held he should have seen and avoided. In other words, society was satisfied with the theory that the greater duty was that of the individual to avoid injury to himself. Such being the case, it was further reasoned that a person who was himself at fault was not justified in seeking recovery from others.

What has happened to this reasoning today? On a world-wide basis the doctrine of comparative negligence generally is accepted and is more widespread than that of contributory negligence. The research of Chief Justice E. Harold Hallows of the Wisconsin Supreme Court discloses evidence of comparative negligence in the 1794 Prussian Code, in the 1804 Code of Napoleon, in the 1811 Austrian Civil Code, in 1867 in Portugal, in 1881 in Switzerland and in 1896 in Germany. And despite the fact that English admiralty law goes back to the seventeenth century and contributory negligence days, damages in ship collision cases were divided equally. The Brussels Maritime Convention in 1909 adopted pure comparative negligence in the admiralty cases, and this rule is applied by all the major nations in the world. Other countries which have adopted the apportionment rule are China, Japan, Russia, Persia, Poland, the Philippine Islands and Canadian provinces. Even England, the country that originated the doctrine of contributory negligence, abolished it by the English Reform Act of 1945.

Logically, what happens when contributory negligence stubbornly persists and many injured persons are deprived of a remedy? Thirty states have adopted railway employer's liability acts, workmen's compensation acts or similar laws liberalizing certain areas of recovery beyond contributory negligence. The Federal Employers' Liability Act and the Merchant Marine Act are examples of the substitution of comparative negligence for contributory negligence. Seven states have adopted the apportionment doctrine.

Wisconsin torts law has evolved toward a pure form of comparative negligence over the years and has opened the state's forums to many injured persons who had no legal remedy or even a theoretical cause of action before. Wisconsin has abolished implied assumption of risk and gross negligence, and these areas are included as ordinary negligence in the comparison or apportionment. It has abolished religious, charitable, governmental and parent-child immunities. A host owes his guest the duty of ordinary care, and the state does not impute negligence to the guest. The basic philosophy is that tortfeasors ought to be liable to the extent they have injured or damaged others. The wrongdoer should pay for the damages caused by his wrong. Wisconsin believes that the adversary system is the surest method of determining the truth and that the system should not be so limited by rules of law that justice cannot be done. On the other hand, a plaintiff who is himself a tortfeasor should not profit from his own wrong.

How Does Apportionment Work?

Section 895.045 of Wisconsin Statutes, "Contributory Negligence; When Bars Recovery", provides:

> Contributory negligence shall not bar recovery in an action by any person or his legal representative to recover damages for negligence resulting in death, or in injury to person or property, if such negligence was not as great as the negligence of the person against whom recovery is sought, but any damages allowed shall be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering.

Originally, the jury was instructed to diminish the damages in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the recovering party. In 1949, however, the statute was amended so that now the jury finds the facts, finds the percentage of negligence attributable to each party, compares the negligence and finds the damages sustained by the plaintiff without regard to the comparison. Then the court does the mathematics and applies the percentages of negligence to the amount specified in the damage question, reduces the recovery and orders judgment.

A few examples will suffice to illustrate how comparative negligence is applied. Assume that in each example the total damage suffered by the plaintiff is $10,000 and the causal negligence of each party is the percentage set forth.

Example 1: Plaintiff—40 per cent. Defendant—60 per cent. Plaintiff recovers $6,000. His damages of $10,000 are reduced by 40 per cent or the amount of his causal negligence.

Example 2: Plaintiff—60 per cent. Defendant—40 per cent. No recovery by the plaintiff.

Example 3: Plaintiff—50 per cent. Defendant—50 per cent. No recovery. The Wisconsin law is stated in terms of greater negligence, so equal negligence does not permit recovery.

Assume damages are $10,000 and the plaintiff guest sues both defendant drivers of the vehicles that were in the accident. The percentage of causal negligence are as stated.

Example 4: Plaintiff—40 per cent. Defendant driver A—10 per cent. Defendant driver B—50 per cent. As between the plaintiff (40 per cent) and defendant A (10 per cent), the plaintiff collects nothing from defendant. A. As between the plaintiff (40 per cent) and defendant B (50 per cent), the plaintiff recovers $6,000. A joint tortfeasor is liable for the entire amount of the plaintiff's recovery. The plaintiff's negligence is not compared to that of all defendants as a whole, but only to that of each defendant individually.

Example 5: Assume the plaintiff and defendant A and defendant B are all equally negligent. No recovery.

Example 6: Assume the plaintiff is 10 per cent negligent, defendant A 50 per cent negligent and defendant B 40 per cent negligent. Plaintiff recovers $9,000 or 10 per cent less than the total damages of $10,000. As between the defendants, defendant A contributes $5,000 and defendant B $4,000 for a total of $9,000. The plaintiff can recover the total amount from either tortfeasor, and as between the tortfeasors there is contribution in the percentages and amounts just stated.[2]

The comparative negligence concept tends to prompt an accurate investigation in order to determine the percentages of fault for apportionment. This preparation results in a greater number of settlements. The adjacent table illustrates suggested prorations in typical automobile accident cases. The unusual case is treated on its own merits. The first hypothetical case is the rear-end collision. In this table the defendant is deemed negligent in the greater degree, and the negligence of the plaintiff is the lesser percentage which represents the percentage used in diminishing plaintiff's recovery.

Special Verdict Procedure

The special verdict is a statutory procedure, § 270.27 Wis. Stat., and is a necessary corollary to comparative negligence. An example follows:

Question No. 1: Immediately prior to the accident, was the defendant negligent in any of the following respects:

(a) As to speed?
Answer: _____

(b) As to lookout?
Answer: _____

Question No. 2: If you have answered any subdivision of Question No. 1 "yes", then answer the corresponding subdivision of this question:

Was such negligence a cause of the collision in any of the following respects:

(a) As to speed?
Answer: _____

(b) As to lookout?
Answer: _____

Contribution — or Spreading the Burden

Contribution is an important part of comparative negligence. Wisconsin has always had common law contribution. As between tortfeasors common law contribution meant that all tortfeasors contributed equally. "The pot should not call the kettle black."

In Wisconsin, the anomaly was that we had a comparative negligence statute, and we had common law contribution. When the plaintiff guest sued drivers A and B, and driver A was found 95 per cent negligent and driver B 5 per cent negligent, it was illogical to say that drivers A and B should share the award to the plaintiff on a fifty-fifty basis.

This very case finally came to the Wisconsin Supreme Court. It was a left-turn case. The plaintiff, Mrs. Bielski, was a guest passenger in her husband's car. Two cars were approaching each other. When the Bielski car was seventy to eighty feet from the intersection, the defendant, Schulze, made a left turn across the pathway of the Bielski vehicle. The jury found the left turning vehicle 95 per cent negligent and the Bielski vehicle 5 per cent negligent. The total award was $25,000. Under the rule then existing, contribution required the Bielski carrier to pay $12,500, although its assured was only 5 per cent negligent. The case went to the supreme court. Chief Justice Hallows wrote the opinion.

The court pointed out that Wisconsin was unique in possessing devices of procedure and practice which made a new rule realistically just. The use of the special verdict, the joining of automobile insurance carriers, the pleadings permitting contribution, the fixing of a percentage of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, constituted a procedure in which it was possible to do equity and natural justice.

So Chief Justice Hallows held in that opinion that henceforth contribution would be determined in proportion to the percentages of causal negligence attributed to each in the comparison question. Consequently Bielski, driver A, who was 5 per cent negligent, would pay 5 per cent of the jury award, and in addition thereto, he would pay only 5 per cent of the contribution as between the drivers themselves. In other words, Bielski's automobile liability carrier paid 5 per cent of $25,000 or $1,250 and not 50 per cent of $25,000, $12,500, as under old common law contribution. Of course, Schulze, driver B, would pay 95 per cent of the award to the plaintiff and 95 per cent of the total sum due in contribution as between the drivers.

This decision, Bielski v. Schulze, 16 Wis. 2d 1, 102 N.W. 2d 393 (1960), is one of the greatest decisions in Wisconsin jurisprudence. It recognizes the need for change and accomplishes it.

Damages—the New Rule

As a part of the Wisconsin concept, a very practical trial technique was evolved in Powers v. Allstate Insurance Company, 10 Wis. 2d 78, 102 N.W. 2d 393 (1960). Prior to the Powers case, it had been customary in cases of excessive awards to fix the lowest amount that an unprejudiced jury, properly instructed, might award for damages and then to grant the plaintiff the opportunity of accepting that amount or having a new trial. But there was an alternative.

First of all, the right to the trial by jury had to be preserved because it is a constitutional right, and it existed prior to the time of the adoption of the Wisconsin Constitution in 1848. The power of courts to set aside excessive verdicts and to grant new trials was firmly established even before the adoption of the United States Constitution.

In the Powers case the court adopted a rule which again illustrates the justice of Wisconsin's comparative negligence doctrine. The new rule is that when an excessive verdict is not due to perversity or prejudice and is not the result of error occurring during the course of trial, the plaintiff should be granted the option of remitting the excess over and above such sum as the court determines as the reasonable amount of plaintiff's damages or of having a new trial on the issue of damages. In the Powers case, the award of $5,000 for permanent injury was deemed excessive in light of the evidence and that sum was reduced to $3,000.

In Spleas v. Milwaukee Transport Company, 21 Wis. 2d 635, 124 N.W. 2d 593 (1963), this technique was again applied. An award of $15,000 to a 64-year-old maintenance man who suffered a back injury was deemed excessive, and a fair appraisal of the nature and seriousness of the injuries permitted an award of $10,000, which was deemed reasonable and which included pain and suffering.

Space does not permit further elaboration as to the results of the application of this doctrine, but some awards have been increased and some excessive awards have been diminished. However, the real point is that Wisconsin's treatment of excessive awards permits greater supervision over the awards of juries. There is, of course, the right to grant a new trial in the event of prejudice or error, but Wisconsin does not indulge in permitting the creation of an excessive jury award by flamboyant means and then permitting the award to stick. Justice requires supervision over jury verdicts. The judicial system permits the jury to find the facts, but within the guidelines pronounced by law, and when those guidelines are exceeded, court supervision is required.

Many who practice in the contributory negligence states contend that juries practice comparative negligence by awarding a negligent plaintiff less in damages. This is contrary to the theory of contributory negligence. Is it not better for a jury to find the percentages of causal negligence attributable to each party and make that finding known? Is it not better for a jury to find the total damages and make that amount known? Is it fair to ask a jury to be so sophisticated and learned that the jurors will wink at the court's instructions on contributory negligence, make a comparison regardless of the instructions and reduce the plaintiff's award accordingly? Is it even honest?

Why not have the jury find the percentages of causal negligence and find the damages? Then the court, knowing the percentages, can reduce the award by those percentages, and one knows the correct result is reached. Is this not the better procedure?

The Wisconsin plan was born in 1931 and has grown from infancy to manhood. This experience is available for study and adoption. Why should any state experiment with "no-fault" administrative schemes which have not been tried or tested? Why should we depart from our well-grounded concept of the adversary system in the open courtroom? Departure could even be dangerous—the beginning of the end of certain cherished rights.

Summary of the Wisconsin Plan

Wisconsin has, and we recommend, the following:

(1) The Wisconsin comparative negligence doctrine that permits recovery against one who is guilty of the greater negligence;

(2) The elimination of assumption of risk;

(3) The elimination of gross negligence;

(4) The elimination of governmental immunity;

(5) The elimination of charitable immunity;

(6) The elimination of parental immunity;

(7) The concept that a host owes the guest a duty of ordinary care;

(8) A financial responsibility law which keeps off the highways those who cannot pay for the economic loss they cause;

(9) An application of the special verdict technique which leaves the jury to find the facts and the court to do the mathematics and render judgment.

We further recommend Wisconsin's practices with regard to contribution, covenants not to sue, releases and court supervision over verdicts.

The authors of this article have a combined experience of approximately fifty years practicing under both contributory negligence and comparative negligence. The above conclusions are tempered with that experience. We believe the comparative negligence concept superior both prior to and during litigation. Investigation and preparation must be prompt and skillful in the search not only for liability, but also for the apportionment of the negligence causing the occurrence. The injured party can never complain that he is without a forum, even if the tortfeasor be the government, a hospital, a husband, a parent or a host. The climate is one of openness and is conducive to settlements. If litigation must be, the trial procedure is conducive to a just result without prejudice, guesswork, confusion or mystery.

We have often said the Wisconsin plan permits one to say what he believes and to believe in what he says.

Mr. Wendell P. Kay

Dear Wendell:

You have asked our comments on pending legislation which will affect the parties involved in personal injury litigation. The uniform contribution among tort feasors act would, in my opinion, clarify existing law. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court are in line with the provisions of this act and I believe it is fair to all parties involved in a tort claim.

You have also asked our comments on the comparative negligence statute which is presently before the Judiciary Committee. Unfortunately, the relatively short notice makes it impossible for any of us to be present to testify. I hope you will make the following comments known to the committee.

First, let us point out that the comparative negligence statute should accomplish two major goals. It would eliminate the often unjust and harsh result of an injured person being denied any compensation because he was slightly negligent as compared to the greater negligence of the act of tort feasor. All of the commentators agree that the rule of contributory negligence is a harsh rule which grew up during the industrial revolution to protect capital short industry from having to pay for the injuries inflicted upon its victims. The rule of contributory negligence as an absolute bar to recovery has no place in today's society where the potential tort feasor can easily protect himself.

Perhaps more important, many cases would not go to Court and once in Court would be settled if the adjustor and the defense attorney knew that contributory negligence would not be an absolute defense but would merely reduce the damages. In a majority of cases the hardest issue to evaluate is whether the slight negligence of the claimant should or will result in no liability for the potential defendant. I predict that if we were to adopt a rule of comparative negligence such as Wisconsin, we would be taking a step to eliminate or at least reduce Court congestion.

A rule of comparative negligence would apply to all claims arising out of negligence. It would not deny any person compensation for injuries but would merely reduce compensation by the amount of their contributory negligence. Comparative negligence is the rule followed in Admiralty and in an increasing number of States.

Although contributory negligence as an absolute bar was a doctrine developed by the Courts, the Courts have shown a great reluctance to abolish the rule and adopt comparative negligence. Therefore, it would seem appropriate for the Legislature to enact this legislation.

I have read quite a few articles on the subject in law journals and law school publications and I don't recall ever reading any article critical of comparative negligence. Most of the commentators find contributory negligence an historical anachronism which should be abolished. In terms of a just result and in terms of financial benefit to the community and the Court system, I think we could predict a slow but sure return.

The adoption of a comparative negligence statute would be a small step in law reform. It would not be a disruptive step since the students of the subject point out that juries in fact often follow the rule of comparative negligence in reaching their result. But we should seek to eliminate a situation where jurors feel compelled to disregard the law. We should certainly eliminate the situation where a drunk driver going through a red light can escape liability because the person going through the green light didn't look to the left or right.

I hope you receive favorable testimony on this bill. I really can't foresee any reasonable opposition although some insurance companies may claim it will cost insurers money. I believe an increase in any claims paid would be more than offset by the reduction in verdicts and also by greater rate of settlement, hence reduced legal and adjusting fees. I am in the process of gathering material on the subject, meanwhile.

I hope you can use this letter as my statement on the matter.

Very truly yours,

William H. Fuld

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Walter L. Kubley
Commissioner
Department of Commerce

DATE : 6 April 70

SUBJECT: Comments on CSHB 338

FROM: Don Hall
Executive Director
Public Service Commission

I can see some real problems if CSHB 338 is passed in its present form. I, therefore, strongly urge that you make a copy of this memorandum available to Mr. Barry Jackson, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Read what I have to say on the subject and see if you don't agree with me.

Under present laws and regulations the utilities have many restrictions placed on them regarding construction along, over and under State Highways. The present regulations, however, do allow the utilities to negotiate with the State Department of Highways; and to date no impasses have been encountered.

Should CSHB 338 be enacted into law the utility companies would be completely without representation.

There is no question that the State Department of Highways has a very difficult task in attempting to serve the public and provide the best roads possible; however, the utilities also have a public commitment.

I do not feel it would be in the public's interest to pass CSHB 338. The added savings in time and monies to the State Department of Highways would certainly be outweighed by an added cost to the utility companies which, in turn, would have to be borne by the consumers.

I would strongly urge a committee of Highway and Utility people be formed, who could jointly prepare a more acceptable bill and a bill which would protect the interest of the general public, the State Department of Highways and the Utilities.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

on

AS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 733

This bill seeks to alleviate problems the Department of Highways is having in dealing with highway encroachments, including those of public utilities and private individuals and including situations involving new construction as well as maintenance and use of existing highways. Presently there is no statute covering encroachments other than those of a utility or other than those involved in new construction. By defining "encroachment" and providing for notice of removal after accomplishment, and summary removal, the bill gives the department the authority to order the removal or relocation of an encroachment and, if the owner does not comply with the order or if the encroachment obstructs traffic, to remove the encroachment itself.

Both the original bill and the committee substitute provide for the reimbursement of the department when it has to remove the encroachment after the owner has failed to comply with the order. The reimbursement consists of the expenses of removal, costs incurred because of the noncompliance, and the cost of a court action. Both bills also provide for a penalty of $10 for each day of noncompliance after service of the notice. These encroachment and reimbursement provisions do not affect the right of a property owner to receive just compensation for land that is taken in an exercise of the right of eminent domain.

The committee substitute adds a provision (based on California Streets and Highways Code, sec. 670(b)) allowing for the issuance of revocable, written permits for encroachments. This authority would normally be used where the encroachment does not interfere with the construction, maintenance, or use of the highway, and it must be in accordance with regulations of the department. This bill also changes the 15-day notice provision in the original bill to a 30-day provision. In addition, the committee substitute deletes the department's enforcement-action provision and the criminal penalty provisions in the original bill because they are unnecessary in light of the civil penalty and the removal authority and reimbursement of the department. However, purposeful obstruction of traffic is prohibited by AS 28.35.160, with a criminal penalty specified in AS 28.35.190 and 28.35.230. Proposed AS 19.25.250 and 19.25.270 in this bill are derived from California Streets and Highways Code, secs. 731 and 732, respectively.

SUBJECT: Encroachment Legislation

Enclosed is a copy of our proposed form of encroachment legislation along with a copy of a memo to me from Donna Spragg.

We consider some of the important aspects of our revised proposed legislation to be that it provides for the authorization of encroachments by agreement or permit. We also did not see any purpose in having provision for an action to abate where we provide for summary removal.

Also, it is our thought that with the summary removal aspects of the proposed legislation, there is no real purpose served by including a misdemeanor provision.

SUBJECT: Encroachment Legislation

As you suggested, the original House Bill No. 338 is patterned after the California statutes governing encroachments on highways.

However, a California Statute (Streets and Highways Code Section 670(b)) allows for the issuance of written permits authorizing the permittee to "place, change or remove an encroachment". The Alaska legislation as originally introduced does not include any such section providing for permits.

The California statute (Streets and Highways Code Sections 670, 724) provides that the maintenance of an unauthorized encroachment is a misdemeanor. The Alaska legislation as originally introduced also called for a misdemeanor penalty.

The California Statute (Streets and Highways Code Section 721) also called for summary removal when an encroachment was not removed before the expiration of 5 days from the service of notice. The California section also calls for summary removal when an encroachment obstructs or prevents the use of the highway by the public. The original Alaska legislation (see proposed Sec. 19.25.220) has similar provisions.

The California Statute (Streets and Highways Code Section 722) provides that the department may remove an encroachment upon the failure of the owner to comply with a notice or demand of the department. A similar section is found in proposed Sec. 19.25.230 of House Bill No. 338.

California Streets and Highway Code Section 723 also allows an action for abatement when an owner disputes or denies the existence of an encroachment or refuses to remove or permit the removal of the encroachment. (See House Bill 338, Sec. 19.25.240 for a similar section.)

No cases were found in the Annotated California Code construing the above statutes.

Attached is another proposed committee substitute for House Bill No. 338. This bill modifies the current proposed legislation:

1. By providing for permits for the construction and maintenance of encroachments. Apparently the drafter of the original House Bill 338 considered that the statute covering utility encroachment was sufficient authorization for encroachment permits. However, I believe our draft clarifies the question of permits and ties in with the regulations which may be found in Title 17 of the Alaska Administrative Code Section 201.

2. By eliminating the provision making maintenance of an unauthorized encroachment a misdemeanor. This provision seems superfluous.

3. By eliminating the authority of the department to summarily remove an encroachment which is not removed after notice. This provision also seems superfluous since the department has this authority under the attached revised section 19.25.250, entitled "Removal After Noncompliance: Removal Expense".

4. By eliminating the section calling for abatement of an encroachment as a nuisance. Here again, this section seems superfluous since the department already has the power to remove an encroachment as noted above.

I know that you will want to consider the sections of the proposed bill in relation to the original bill. I will be pleased to discuss this matter with you at your convenience.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to the protection and use of state highways and roads; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

"Section 1. AS 19.25.020(a) is amended to read:

(a) If, incident to the construction of a highway project on a federal-aid primary or secondary system, or the interstate system including its extensions in an urban area, the department determines and orders that a utility facility located in, over, along, or under a road right-of-way must be changed, relocated, or removed, the utility owning or in charge of the facility shall change, relocate or remove it within a reasonable time set by the department. If the utility does not change, relocate or remove a utility facility within the time set by the department, the facility specified in the order shall be considered an unauthorized encroachment subject to the provisions of secs. 220 - 250 of this chapter [AS SOON AS POSSIBLE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ORDER].

"Sec. 2. AS 19.05.130 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(13) "encroachment" includes a tower, pole, pole line, pipe, pipeline, driveway, private road, fence, billboard, stand or building, or structure or object of any kind or character not particularly mentioned in this section, which is placed in, under or over a portion of the highway.

*Sec. 3. AS 19.25 is amended by adding new sections to read:

ARTICLE 4. ENCROACHMENTS IN HIGHWAYS.

Sec. 19.25.200. ENCROACHMENT PERMITS. An encroachment may be constructed, placed, changed or maintained across or along a highway only in accordance with regulations prescribed by the department. No encroachment may be constructed, maintained, or changed until it is authorized by a written permit issued by the department.

Sec. 10.25.210. RELOCATION OR REMOVAL OF ENCROACHMENT. If, incident to the construction or maintenance of a state highway, the department determines and orders that a encroachment previously authorized by written permit must be changed, relocated, or removed, the owner of the encroachment shall change, relocate or remove it within a reasonable time set by the department. If the owner does not change, relocate or remove an encroachment within the time set by the department, the encroachment shall be considered an unauthorized encroachment subject to the provisions of Secs. 220 - 250 of this chapter.

Sec. 19.25.220. REMOVAL OF ENCROACHMENTS. If an unauthorized encroachment exists in, under or over a state highway, the department may require the removal of the encroachment in the manner provided in secs. 220 - 250 of this chapter.

Sec. 19.25.230. NOTICE OF REMOVAL. Except as otherwise provided in secs. 200 210 and 240 of this chapter, notice shall be given to the owner, occupant or person in possession of the encroachment, or to any other person causing or permitting the encroachment to exist, by serving upon such person a notice containing a demand for the immediate removal of the encroachment. The notice shall describe the encroachment complained of with reasonable certainty as to its character and location. In lieu of service upon the person, service of the notice may be made by registered mail and by posting, for a period of 10 days, a copy of the notice on the encroachment described in the notice.

Sec. 19.25.240. SUMMARY REMOVAL. The department may immediately remove from a state highway an encroachment which obstructs or prevents the use of the highway by the public.

Sec. 19.25.250. REMOVAL AFTER NONCOMPLIANCE. REMOVAL EXPENSE. The department may remove an encroachment upon the failure of the owner to comply with a notice or demand of the department under the provisions of secs. 20, 210 and 230 of this chapter, and shall have an action to recover the expenses of removal, costs incurred by the state for a claim filed with the department by a highway construction contractor for costs due to delay because an encroachment was not changed, removed, or relocated in accordance with the order of the department, costs and expenses of suit and the sum of $10 for each day the encroachment remains after the expiration of 10 days from the date of service of the notice or demand.

*Sec. 4. This Act takes effect on the day after its passage and approval or on the day it becomes law without approval.

SUBJECT: SCSCSHB 339 am (putative fathers)

The Senate Judiciary Committee's substitute returned to the original form of HB 339 -- a simple repealer of AS 11.35.110, the section that prohibits the mother of a deserted or abandoned illegitimate child from verifying a complaint against a putative father in a criminal, nonsupport action. The House Judiciary Committee's substitute, offered April 25, 1969, amended rather than repealed AS 11.35.110; the amendment specifically allowed the mother to verify the complaint.

I believe the legal effect of both approaches is the same. AS 11.35.100, which is not touched in either version of the bill, states, "Sections 10 - 90 of this chapter apply to an illegitimate child and its putative father." Section 50 of that chapter designates who may make a complaint; it says, "by the deserted wife, or on her behalf, or on behalf of the minor child, by anyone having personal cognizance of the facts...." The mother of an "illegitimate" child would not be a "deserted wife", but she surely would be someone "having personal cognizance of the facts". If she can make the complaint she can "verify" it. Thus the mother of an "illegitimate" child could verify the complaint against the putative father were it not for the prohibition in AS 11.35.110. After repealing that prohibition there would seem to be no reason why she could not verify the complaint. Perhaps the House Judiciary Committee, in proposing its substitute, thought that the intent would be more clearly expressed by specifically including the mother; however, I think that is already done by sec. 100; I don't remember the committee discussion, and there is no explanatory committee report.

In a floor amendment offered by Terry Miller, the Senate changed the bill title to simply refer to the section number being repealed. Both as a matter of law and of determining legislative intent, I don't think this changes the effect of the bill.

February 26, 1970

Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Alaska State House of Representatives
Pouch V State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Jackson:

The Nancy Lake Recreation Area, containing over 21,000 acres with approximately 100 lakes, was formed by the session laws of 1966. Four years later, with no access open to the public, the Parks and Recreation Department is requesting an additional 2,000 acres including Rainbow Lake.

There is one subdivision of 55 lots already on this lake, with cabins and improvements on about half of these lots. There are 20 cabins and homes already built and the other four property owners plan to subdivide their property on Rainbow Lake. The Department of Fish and Game advises that it is not feasible to restock this lake and the trout are already fewer in number and smaller, due to increasing fishing pressure. The shallow areas in this lake restrict the potential of boating activity. The shoreline is over 95 per cent privately owned, therefore it can not be used for hiking or riding trails. This lake is too small to serve the future plans of the private property owners and the Parks and Recreation Department. The conjested condition would result in pollution and loss of property value to the private property owners as well as a loss of tax revenue to the Matanuska Susitna Borough.

The Parks and Recreation Department has not held any local public hearings regarding their request for additional acreage, and they have not submitted any practical long range use plan for the Rainbow Lake Area.

House Bill 344, which is in legislative process, would straighten out the northern boundary of the Nancy Lake Recreation Area. Approximately 700 Alaskan voters have signed a petition supporting HB 344, to this date. The Matanuska Susitna Borough has passed a resolution supporting HB 344. Representative Kerttula informed me the Parks and Recreation Department had assured him they would not take Rainbow Lake into the recreation area. Disregarding all the opposition, the Parks and Recreation Department continues to insist on encroaching on private property owners and the borough tax base.

February 26, 1969

If Rainbow Lake is included in the recreation area what would prevent the Parks and Recreation Department from taking in Long Lake, Shirley Lake, Crystal Lake and othersthat are already subdivided and rapidly developing. The people are watching, very closely, to see if the Legislators and the Governor are supporting the people or if one department is dominating the Governor, the Legislature, and the people.

I would appreciate your reply at your earliest convenience. Please inform me as to your stand regarding HB 344.

Sincerely,

R. C. Tuer

BOROUGH ASSEMBLY

February 23, 1970

Honorable Jalmar Kerttula
Speaker, House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Several residents and property owners in the Nancy Lake/ Rainbow Lake area have appeared before the Planning and Zoning Commission and before the Borough Assembly requesting support of HB 344. Upon recommendation of the Planning and Zoning Commission, the Assembly has adopted a resolution urging passage of this bill which suggests altering Nancy Lake Recreation Area boundaries.

Mr. Vroman indicated that, in the future, the Borough may feel that Borough lands could be exchanged with the State, if the State still wishes to acquire additional lands for golf course and park entrance as indicated by the State Parks and Recreation Department. However, at the present time, the Borough wishes to retain the areas proposed for the two above uses.

For your information, we are enclosing a copy of the Resolution adopted by the Assembly and request that HB 344 be given favorable consideration in the House.

Thank you for your assistance to residents of this area.

Yours respectfully,

Evelyn Thompson

ASSEMBLY

Resolution Serial No. 70-5

A RESOLUTION OF THE ASSEMBLY OF THE MATANUSKA-SUSITNA BOROUGH URGING THE CURRENT LEGISLATURE, STATE OF ALASKA, ADOPT HB 344 CHANGING THE NORTH BOUNDARY OF NANCY LAKE RECREATION AREA.

WHEREAS, the established Nancy Lake recreation area is proposed for development by the State of Alaska, and

WHEREAS, residents and property owners in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough; and particularly in the Nancy Lake area, feel that the north boundary of the park should extend as described in HB 344, and

WHEREAS, residents and property owners have appeared before the Planning and Zoning Commission, and the Borough Assembly, and the Planning and Zoning Commission has recommended to the Borough Assembly that it urge the passage of HB 344,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the Assembly of the Matanuska-Susitna Borough urge the current legislature, State of Alaska, adopt HB 344 changing the north boundary of Nancy Lake recreation area, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that copies of this resolution be forwarded to local legislators and appropriate committees of the Legislature.

PASSED AND APPROVED by the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Assembly this 18 day of February, 1970.

Honorable Jalmar Kerttula

Dear Representative Kerttula:

You assured me the Parks and Recreation Dept. agreed not to push into the Rainbow Lake Area. As you can see by the enclosed maps they are now trying to include Rainbow Lake in the Nancy Lake Recreation Area.

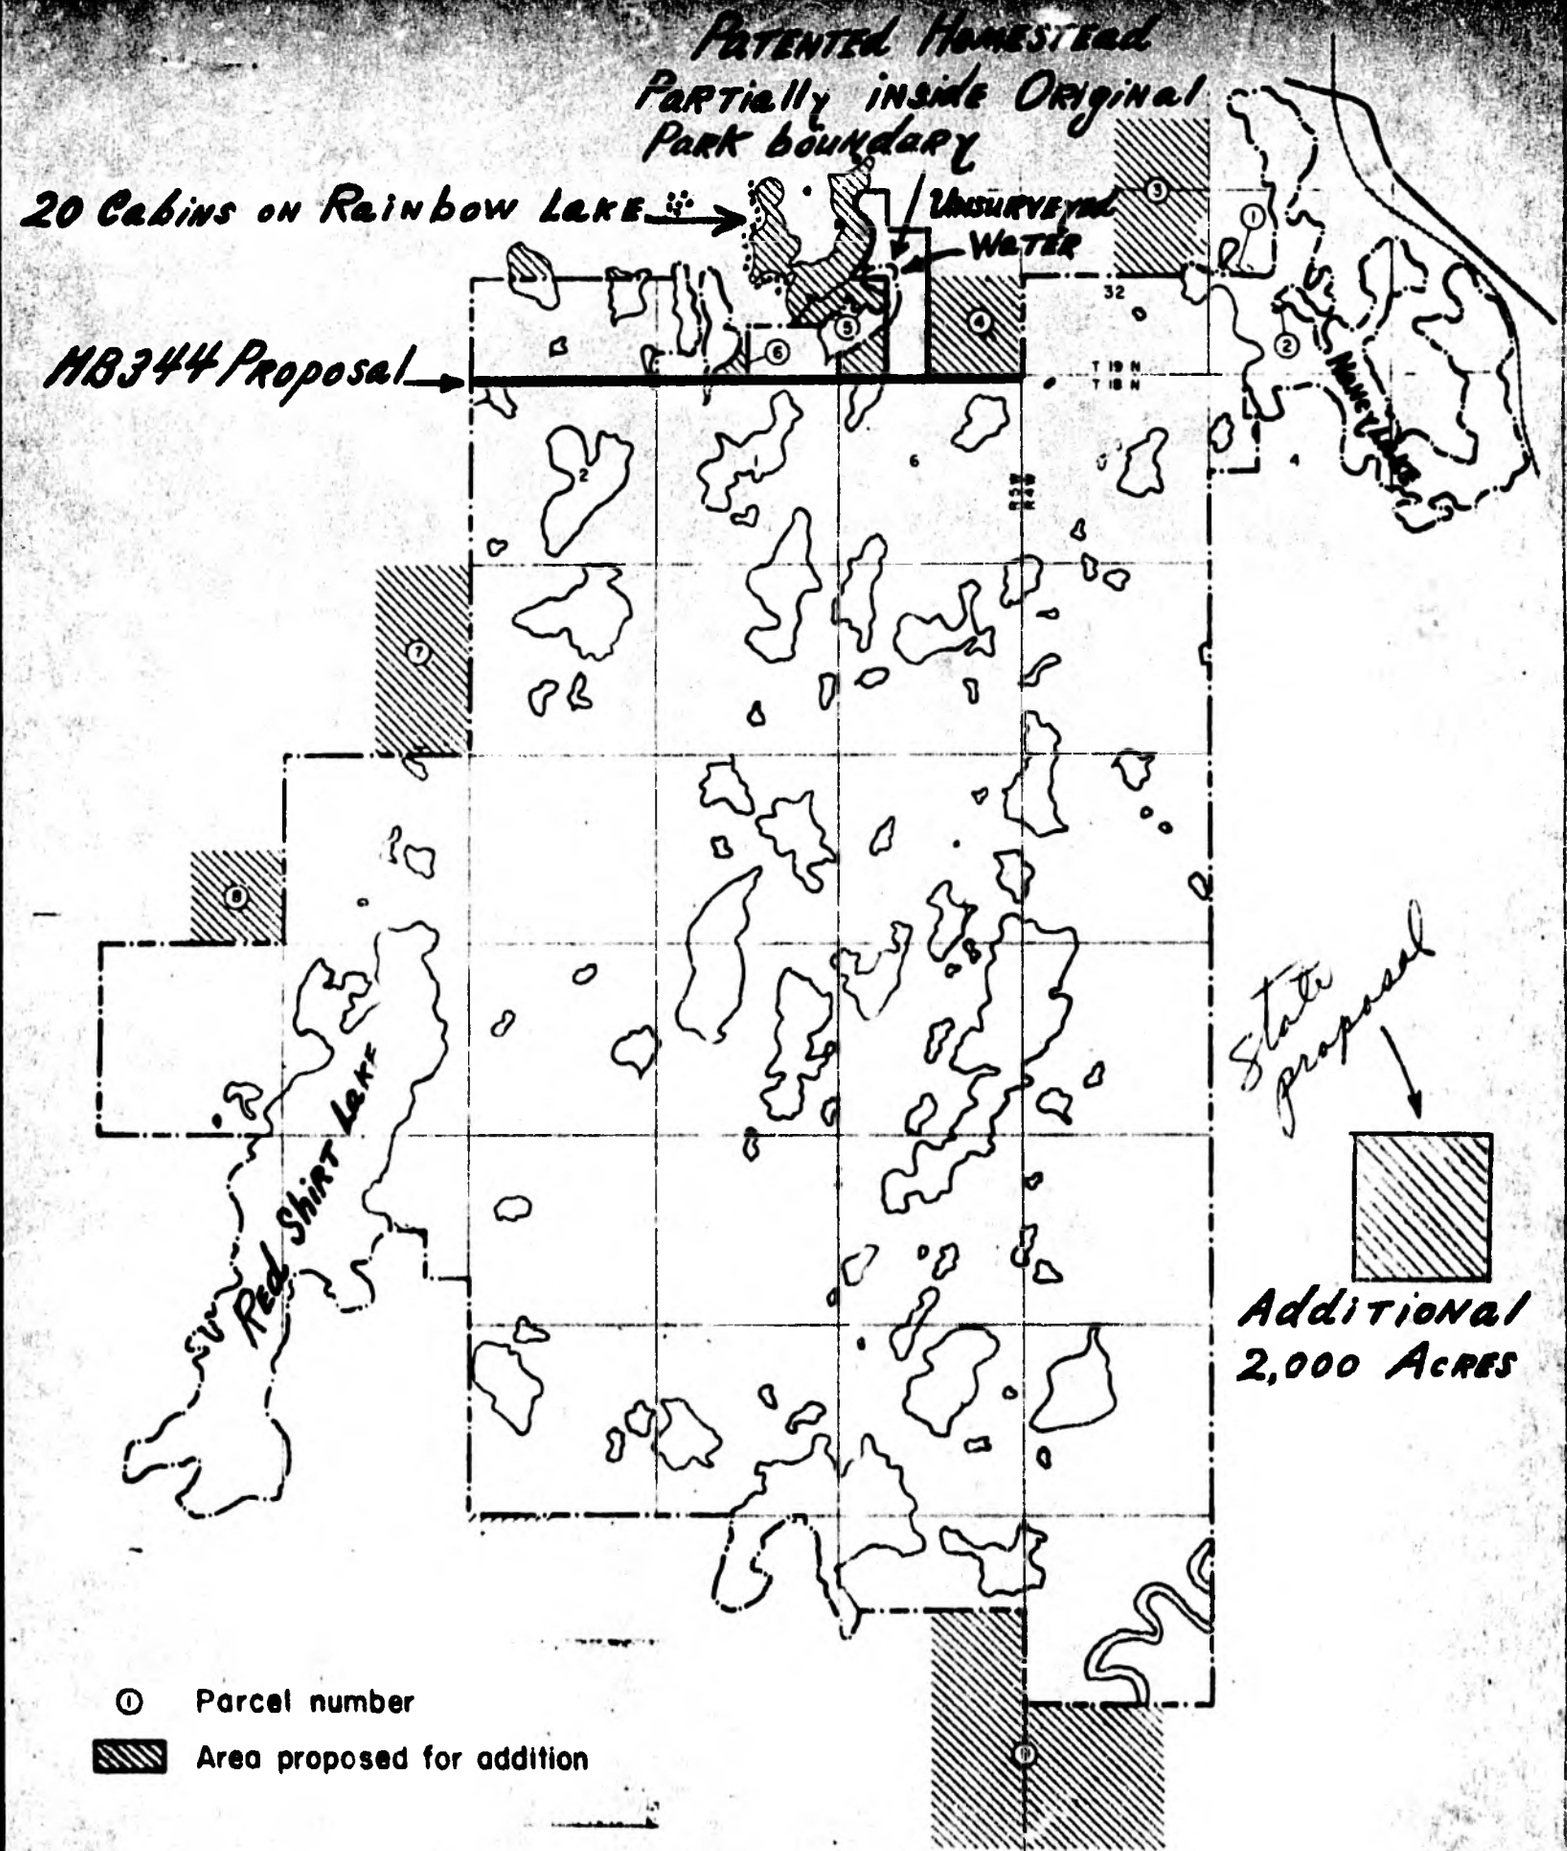
Mr. Ted Smith now agrees the canoe trail planned to connect the park with Rainbow Lake, Long Lake and Willow Creek is not feasible. The shoreline of this lake is already over 95 per cent privately owned, therefore it can not be used for riding and hiking trails as Mr. Smith recommended. The shallow areas restrict the potential boating activity on the lake. The trout are getting smaller and fewer in number and the Fish and Game Department advises that it is not feasible to restock the lake.

This lake is too small to serve the future plans of the private property owners and the recreation area too. I firmly believe that Rainbow Lake would add very little value to the recreation area but it does have a future potential of providing a large number of permanent home sites and improving the tax base of the Matanuska Susitna Borough. At present this borough has one of the poorest tax bases in the state. If the Parks and Recreation Department expands north of the township line into the area that is already rapidly developing through private interests it will seriously harm the future tax base of this borough.

In regard to the recreation department loosing federal funds based on the original size of the park the areas south and west of the present boundary could be extended in some areas with no conflict of interest. I seriously doubt that the Federal Government would increase the funding for the additional 2,000acres requested, due to the tight money in Washington and the improved financial situation in Alaska.

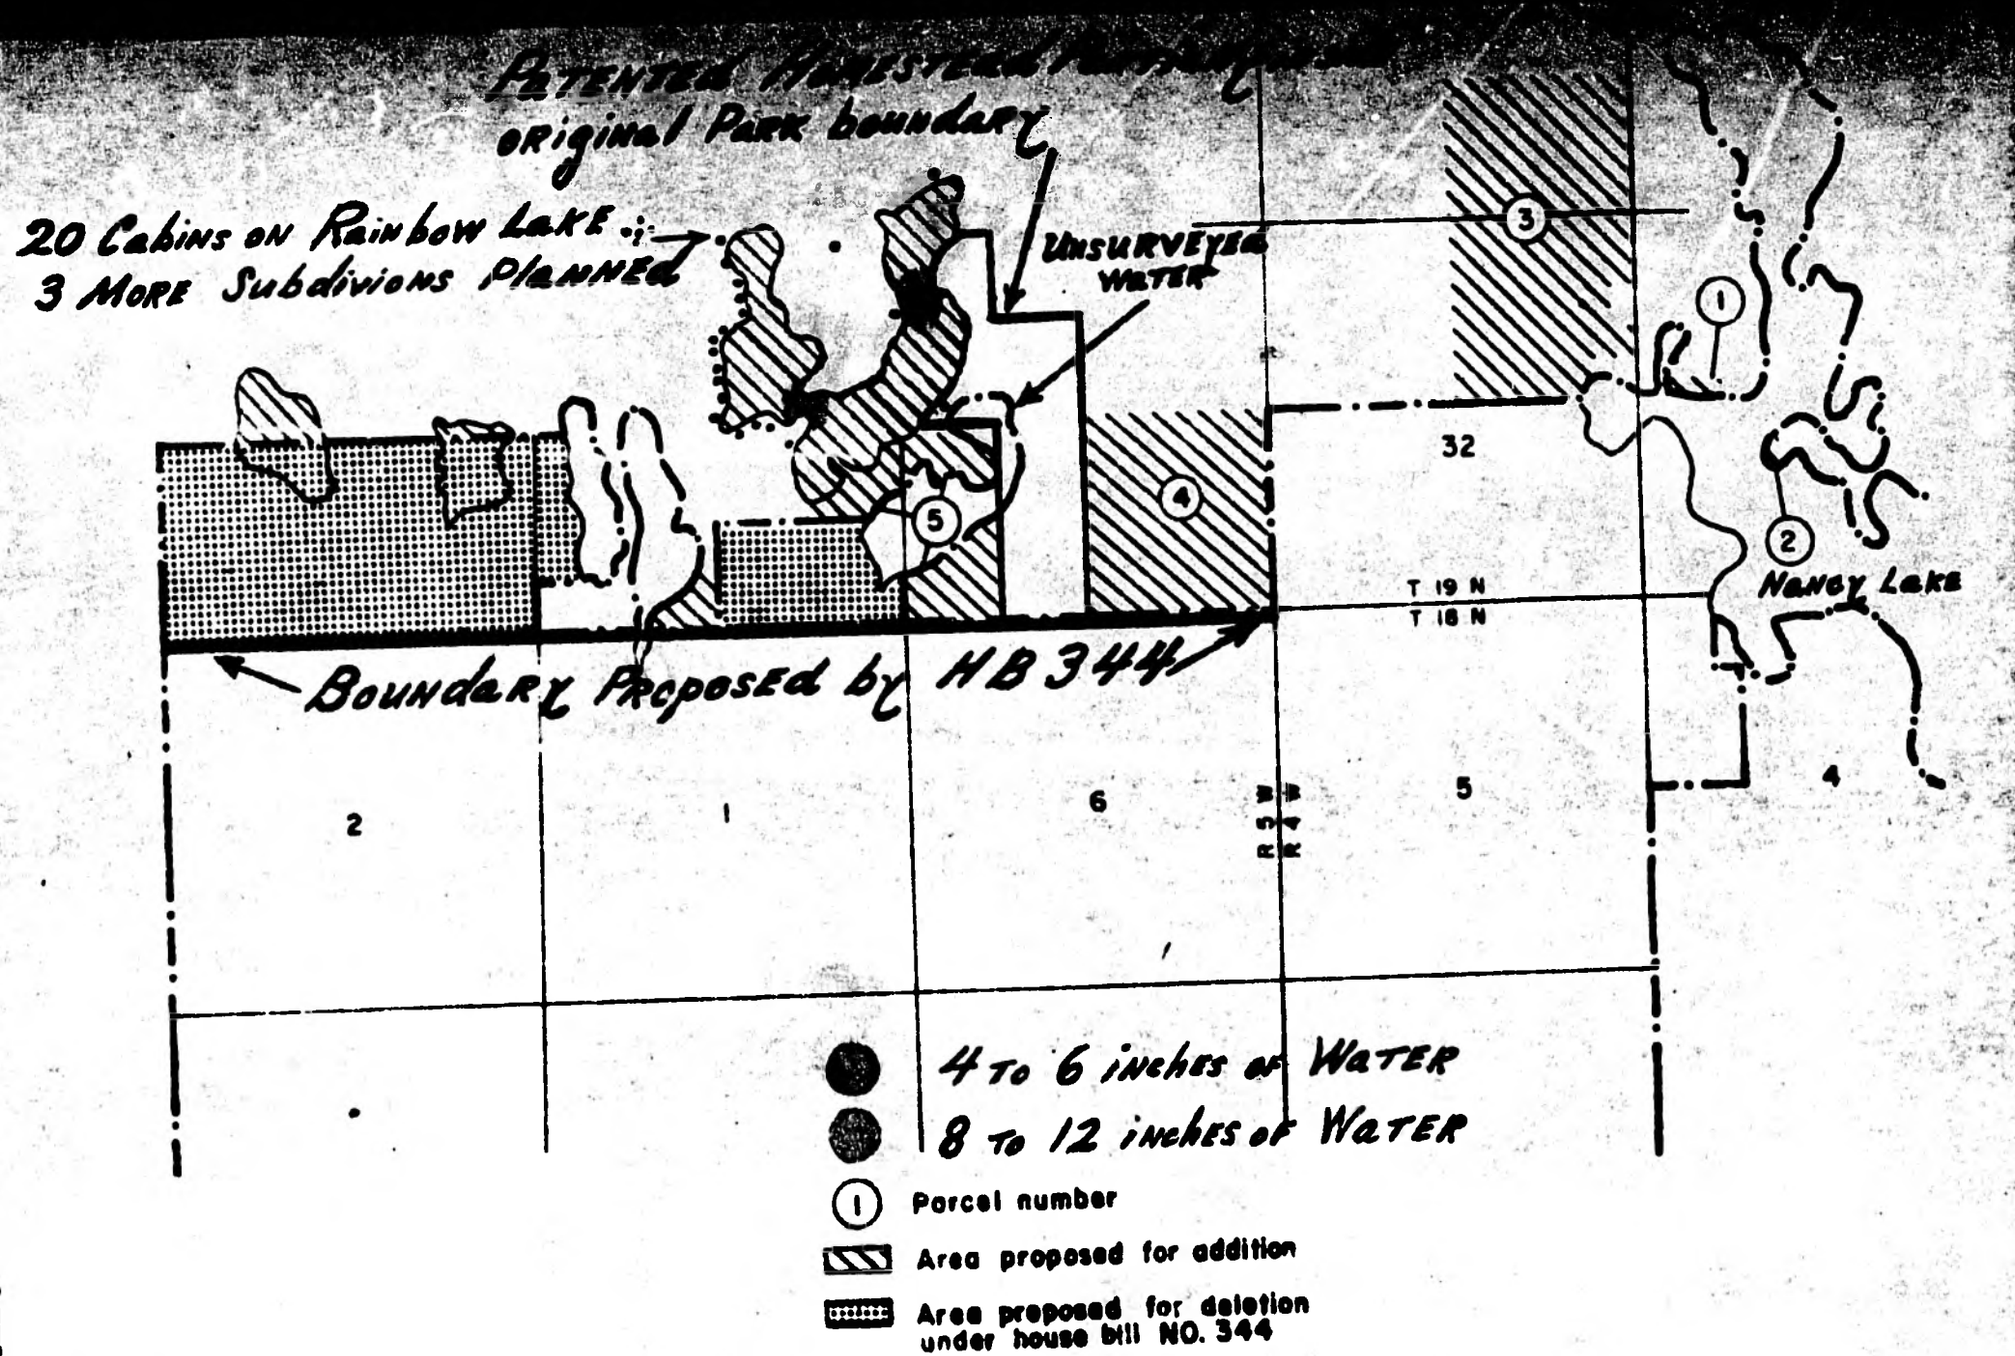
The present boundary of the Nancy Lake Recreation Area is very irregular, encouraging trespassing and is a fire hazard to private property. The addition proposed by the State of Alaska would be even more irregular and difficult to enforce.

The present park boundary does infringe and include some of our private property, therefore legally it must be changed.



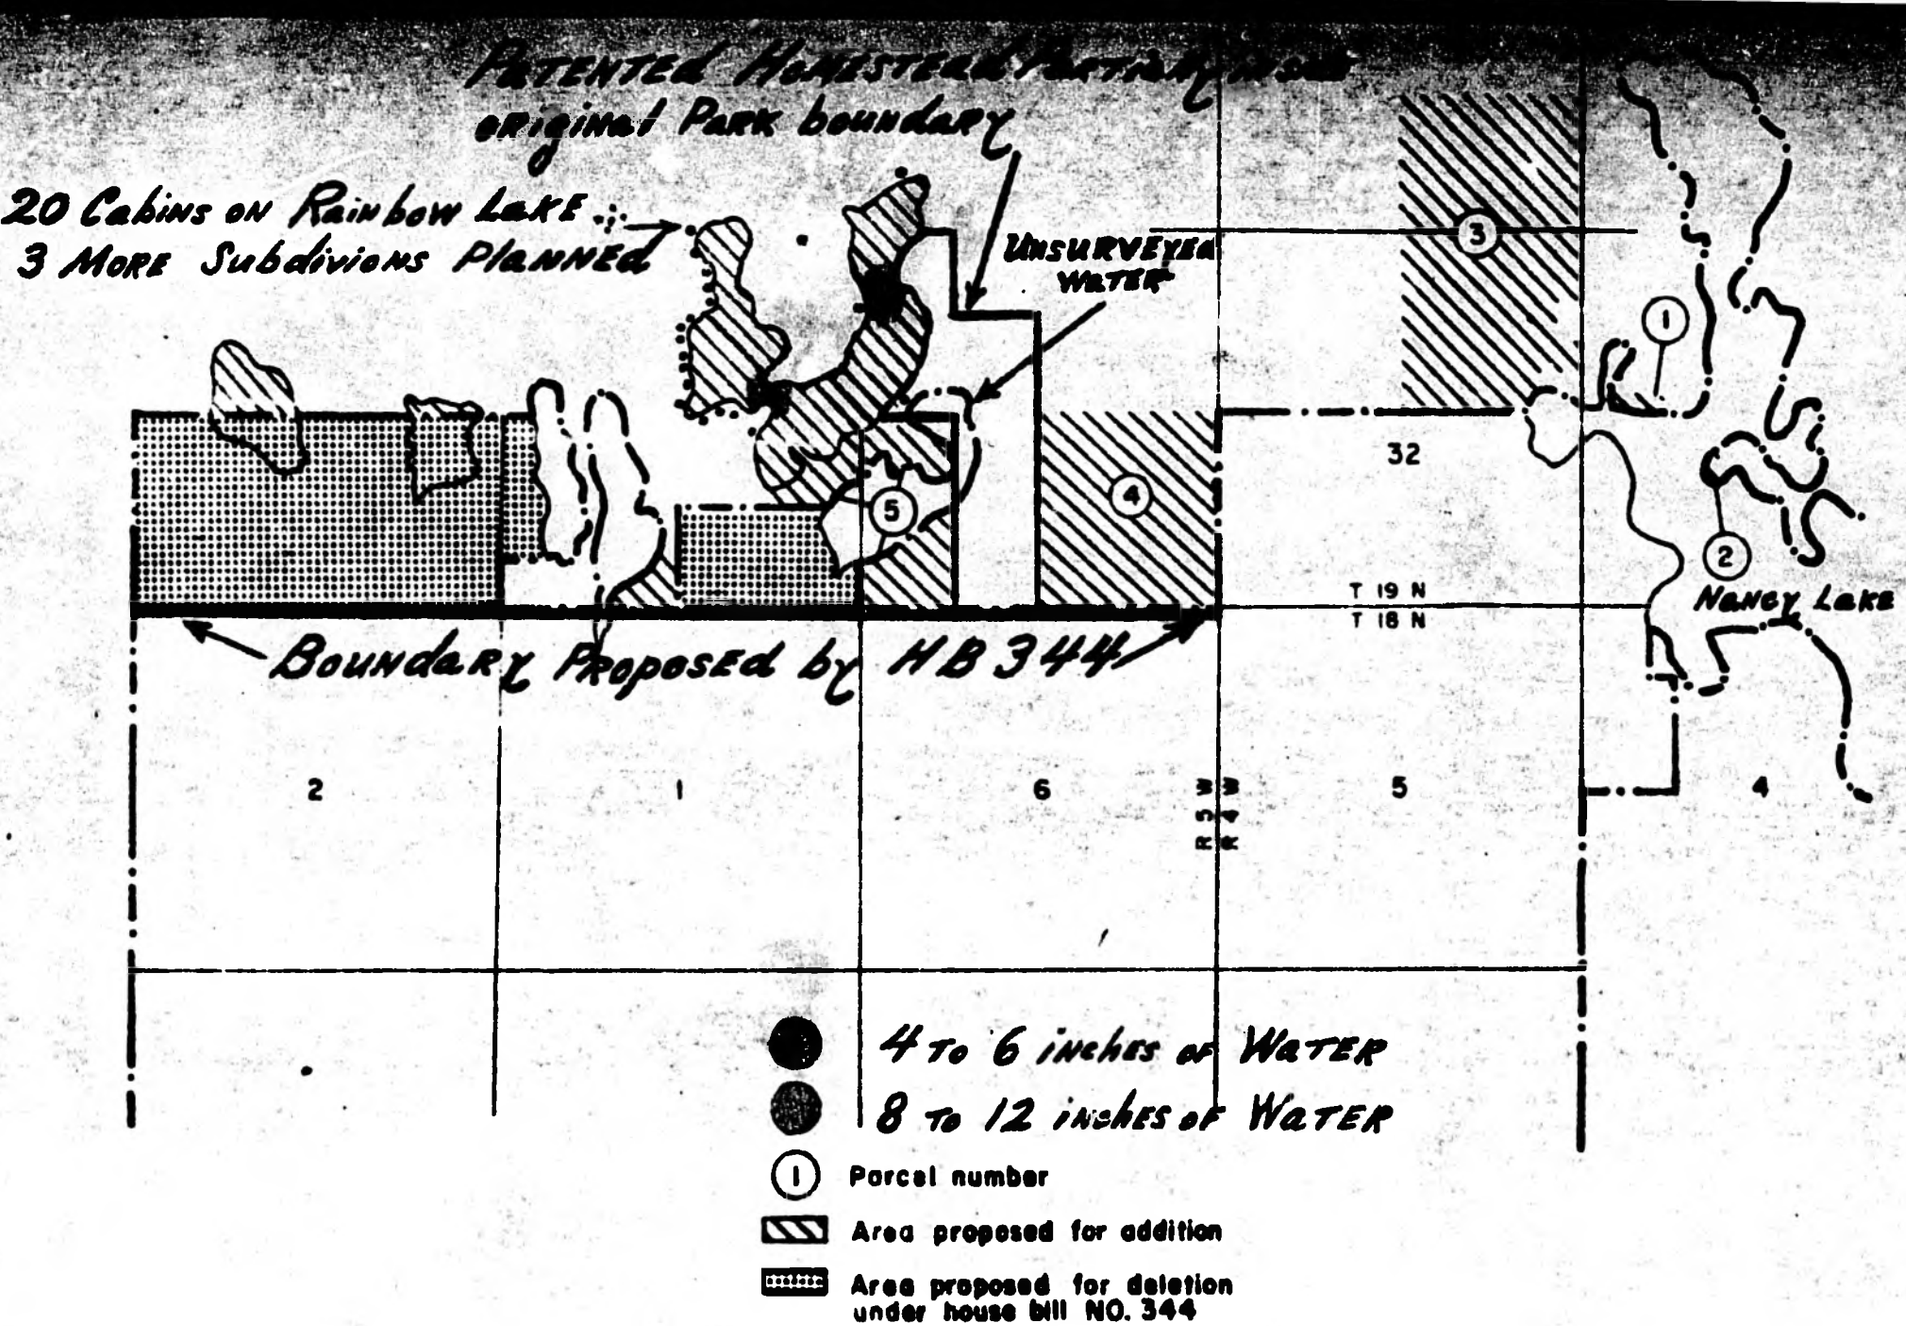
If Rainbow Lake were included in the park it would be a serious mistake because this would constitute a stalemate. The lake would be of very little value to the recreation area or the private property owners, due to overcrowded conditions, which eventually causes pollution and poor resale value.

Recreation areas are a necessity and an asset to the area, if properly planned. If not they can be detrimental to the future development of the area.



Again I request that you give House Bill 344 serious consideration and your full support.

Sincerely,



R. C. Tuer

Honorable Selmar Kerttula
Alaska State Representative

State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Kerttula:

Enclosed you will find a copy of the letter that I wrote August 11, 1967, to Mr. Roscoe Bell who was the Director, Division of Lands, at that time. As of this date no action has been taken to correct the errors in the Nancy Lake Recreation Area boundaries as passed by the Alaska State Legislature, Sessions Laws 1966, Chapter #61.

Enclosed you will find a copy of the original plat map of May 2[illegible], 1917, and a B.L.M. aerial photogrammatric map U.S. Department of Interior, Geological Survey 1958. You will notice in Section 31 T. 19N, R 4W, there is quite a discrepency between these two maps. Mr. Homer R. Robinson, former Alaska Director of the B.L.M., informed me the original plat map shall stand as sutmitted if it is accepted by the B.L.M. Surveyor General.

Our homestead Patent #1234958 issued January 31, 1964, inc[illegible] one (1) and two (2) which is one-half (1/2) mile of the east shore of Rainbow Lake and the southeast one-fourth (1/4) of the NW¼, and the east ½ of the SW¼ in Section 31, T. 19N, R4W, Seward Meridian. This is the property inside the penned line that is drawn on the enclosed aerial photo[illegible].

The B.L.M. claims there is 1[illegible]1.88 acres of land in this original homestead; therefore, I had to pay the B.L.M. for the 1.88 acres over 160 acres. Rainbow Lake is surveyed, only a small part of Lake #1 is surveyed, and Lakes #2, 3 & 4 are completely unsurveyed.

You will notice in the Sessions Laws of 196[illegible], Chapter #[illegible], the Nancy Lake Recreation Area boundary meanders completely around Lakes #1 (1) and two (2). Not only is Lake #2 over 90% private Property; in addition the original plat which according to B.L.M. law is the official plat map, this lake is not a body of water but actually terra firma. Because the Nancy Lake Recreation Area cannot legally meander a lake that is classified as terra firma under an original homestead patent, and additional reasons that I mentioned in my letter to Mr. Bell, I believe this boundary should be corrected.

This situation will prevent improvement or subdividing of private property and in turn, will have an adverse effect on the Matanuska Valley Borough. The situation will naturally become more complicated in the future when the property value increases.

I have discussed this matter many times with Mr. Smith, who is in charge of Parks and Recreation, Anchorage office. These discussions with Mr. Smith started approximately three years ago when the Nancy Lake Recreation Area was in the planning stage. He agreed there are a number of errors in the Nancy Lake Recreation Area boundaries that should be corrected. To my knowledge, the Alaska Division of Lands has taken no action whatsoever to correct these errors, although the Department is well aware of these errors.

I am definitely in favor of long range recreation planning and The Nancy Lake Recreation Area as a whole, if the planning is done properly. I am also aware of the fact that the boundary in question was created by the State Legislature in 1966. I, therefore, request that a bill be submitted to amend the north boundary of the Nancy Lake Recreation Area to extend due west on the township line between townships 18 and 19 where the present boundary intercepts this same township line. This boundary would be much easier to define, maintain and patrol as well as resolving a legal aspect that could become quite complicated. I firmly believe this boundary amendment would serve the best interests of all parties concerned, including the State of Alaska.

Sincerely,

R. C. Tuer

plat shall be recorded in books to be kept for that purpose; and a copy thereof shall be kept open at the public survey office for public information, and other copies shall be sent to the places of the sale and to the Bureau of Land Management. (R. S. sec. 2395; Mar. 3, 1925, 43 Stat. 1144; 43 U. S. C. sec. 751).

Boundaries and contents of public lands, how ascertained.

The boundaries and contents of the several sections, half sections, and quarter sections of the public lands shall be ascertained in conformity with the following principles:

First. All the corners marked in the surveys returned by the Director shall be established as the proper corners of sections, or subdivisions of sections, which they were intended to designate, and the corners of half and quarter sections, not marked on the surveys, shall be placed as nearly as possible equidistant from two corners which stand on the same line.

Second. The boundary lines, actually run and marked in the surveys returned by the Director, shall be established as the proper boundary lines of the sections or subdivisions for which they were intended, and the length of such lines as returned shall be held and considered as the true length thereof. And the boundary lines which have not been actually run and marked shall be ascertained by running straight lines from the established corners to the opposite corresponding corners; but in those portions of the fractional townships, where no such opposite corresponding corners have been or can be fixed, the boundary lines shall be ascertained by running from the established corners due north and south or east and west lines, as the case may be, to the water course, Indian boundary line or other external boundary of such fractional township.

Third. Each section or subdivision of section, the contents whereof have been returned by the Director, shall be held and considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in such return; and the half sections and quarter sections, the contents whereof shall not have been thus returned, shall be held and considered as containing the one-half or the one-fourth part, respectively, of the returned contents of the section of which they may make part. (R. S. sec. 2396; Mar. 3, 1925, 43 Stat. 1144; 43 U. S. C. sec. 752).

Lines of division of half-quarter sections, how run.

In every case of the division of a quarter section the line for the division thereof shall run north and south, and the corners and contents of half-quarter sections which may thereafter be sold shall be ascertained in the manner and on the principles directed and prescribed by the section preceding, and fractional sections containing one hundred and sixty acres or upwards shall in like manner, as nearly as practicable, be subdivided into half-quarter sections, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and in every case of a division of a half-quarter section, the line for the division thereof shall run east and west, and the corners and contents of quarter-quarter sections, which may thereafter be sold, shall be ascertained, as nearly as may be, in the manner and on the principles directed and prescribed by the section preceding; and fractional sections containing fewer or more than one hundred and sixty acres shall in like manner, as nearly as may be practicable, be subdivided into quarter-quarter sections, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior (R. S. sec. 2397; 43 U. S. C. sec. 753).

Rivers and streams.

All navigable rivers, within the territory occupied by the public lands, shall remain and be deemed public highways; and, in all cases where the opposite banks of any stream not navigable belong to different persons, the stream and the bed thereof shall be common to both. (R. S. sec. 2476; 43 U. S. C. sec. 931).

344 [redacted]
Anchorage, [redacted] 99501

Dear Mr. Bell:

The present north boundary of the Nancy Lake Recreation Area is very irregular in as much as it does not follow the section lines or half section lines in general as the east, west and south boundary lines do at present. This irregular north boundary could make it quite expensive and difficult to define, patrol and enforce this boundary.

The boundary of the recreation area, as approved by the legislature meanders the unnamed lake in the southeast quarter of Section 36 and the southwest quarter of Section 31. Only part of this lake is surveyed according to the original plat map of 1917, therefore part of the lake is considered [redacted], on which I hold patent. At the time I filed for patent I requested a resurvey, but received no cooperation from either the Bureau of Land Management or the Alaska State Division of Lands.

The question is how can the State of Alaska patrol or enforce a boundary that meanders a lake that is only partially surveyed when part of that lake is private terra firma? Who would be responsible for trespassing damages or fire damages to private property if the State of Alaska insists on such an irregular and poorly defined boundary.

The Nancy Lake Recreation Area would include approximately 27 lakes, comprising approximately 5000 acres of water area excluding this unnamed lake in question. This lake contains no fish and could not be poisoned for restocking, and I firmly believe that it would be more of a detriment than an asset to the recreation area.

[redacted] a good logical suggestion based on a point to point line to define the [redacted] mile exclusive fisheries zone. This same principle should be applied to the Nancy Lake Recreation Area boundary. There is at present, according to your office, a number of errors in the boundary of the recreation are as passed by the legislature. I request that your office request the legislature to include in the corrections a straight line north boundary, using the south section lines of Section 31; Township 19North; Range 4 West; and the south section lines of Sections 36 and 35 as the north boundary of the recreation area. According to the master development plan submitted by Huddleston and Associates of Denver, this would not conflict in any manner with the development of the Nancy Lake Recreation Area.

I would appreciate a letter from your office regarding this matter at your earliest convenience. I would also like to know if the boundaries of the [redacted] to be fenced, or how does your office intend to define and mark [redacted]

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 346

This bill, proposing a statutory change comparable to the constitutional change proposed in HJR 51, would become law if the constitutional amendment proposed in that resolution is approved by the voters. Upon the effective date of both measures, no one would be disenfranchised for reasons of inability to read or speak English.

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman

HB 360

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska

DATE : April 8, 1969

FROM: R. D. Stevenson
Chief, Excise Tax Section
Department of Revenue
Alaska Office Building
Juneau, Alaska

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 360, An Act relating to coin-operated devices and providing for an effective date

Reference is made to the attached copy of Schedule of Revenue, Five Year Projection and Cash Flow for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1970 and a copy of a memorandum covering coin-operated device receipts issued during the calendar year 1968. This information was transmitted to the Department of Administration for inclusion in the document entitled "State of Alaska - Revenue Sources - 1968-1974" and is shown on pages 26-27 and 52, copies of which are attached.

Chapter 135, SLA 1966 provided for a phase-out of class 2 coin-operated devices (so-called pinball machines) on June 30, 1969. Revenue estimates were necessarily prepared based on this premise.

House Bill No. 360 provides for an extension until June 30, 1972 (from June 30, 1969) for the phase-out of class 2 coin-operated devices. During the calendar year 1968 there were 297 receipts issued for class 2 coin-operated devices with fees (excluding penalty and interest) collected in amount of $34,626.00.

EFFECT ON TREASURY:

1. If the bill were passed, refunds in amount of $17,300 shown on the attached Cash Flow for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1970 would not be made in July of 1969 as would be the case if the bill were not passed for the reason that if the phase-out date of June 30, 1969 is not changed, taxpayers who were issued full year 1969 licenses for class 2 devices would be entitled to refund for one half of the fee paid.

2. Revenue estimates for the fiscal years ending on June 30, 1970; June 30, 1971 and June 30, 1972 would be revised upwards as follows:

Fiscal Year Ending	Original Estimate	Revised Estimate	Gain in Revenue
June 30, 1970	$ 31,000.00	$ 82,900.00	$ 51,900.00
June 30, 1971	48,000.00	82,600.00	34,600.00
June 30, 1972	48,000.00	65,300.00	17,300.00
Totals	$127,000.00	$230,800.00	$103,800.00

Shared revenue to boroughs and cities of first, second and third class pursuant to the provisions of AS 43.35.050 would increase during the three fiscal years involved if the bill were passed. The statute provides that 50 per cent of the gross revenue from this source, excluding distributors fees and penalties and less the amount expended by the state in collection shall be refunded to such political subdivisions.

Basis for Estimates: No Class 3 coin-operated device licenses have been issued during FY 1966-67 or 1967-68 as the operation of so-called slot machines in states that do not have legalized gambling is illegal according to Federal statutes. Chapter 135, SLA 1966 provides for a phase-out of Class 2 coin-operated devices (so-called pinball machines) on June 30, 1969. It is anticipated that in the period December 1968 through February of 1969 that $34,600 will be received for full year 1969 calendar year licenses for Class 2 coin-operated devices. Providing that the phase-out date of June 30, 1969 is not changed, taxpayers who were issued full year 1969 licenses for Class 2 devices would be entitled to refund for one-half of the fee paid, or $17,300 in July of 1969, or in the beginning of the fiscal year 1969-70. Receipts from Class 1 devices are estimated at $47,300 for FY 1970. For Fiscal Years 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974 revenues are restricted to receipts from Class 1 coin-operated devices. Gross revenues before refunding to political subdivisions for the four preceding fiscal years are as follows:

AS 43.35.010-090 as amended by Ch. 135, SLA 1966.

Basis for Estimate:
No class 3 coin-operated device licenses have been issued during FY 1966-67 or 1967-68 as the operation of so-called slot machines in states that do not have legalized gambling is illegal according to Federal status. Chapter 135, SLA 1966 provides for a phase-out of class 2 coin-operated devices (so-called pinball machines) on June 30 1969.

Revenue Code

It is anticipated that in the period December 1968 through February 1969 that $34,600 will be received for full year 1969 calendar year licenses for Class 2 coin-operated devices. Providing that the phase-out date of June 30, 1969 is not changed, taxpayers who were issued full year 1969 licenses for Class 2 devices would be entitled to refund for one-half of the fee paid, or $17,300 in July of 1969, or in the beginning of the fiscal year 1969-70. Receipts from Class 1 devices are estimated at $47,300 for FY 1970. For fiscal years 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974 revenues are restricted to receipts from Class 1 coin-operated devices.

STATE OF ALASKA
THE LEGISLATURE
LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

JUNEAU
ALASKA 99801

MEMORANDUM

February 13, 1969

Mr. Jackson:

Your request for a bill to anticipate the expiration of some pinball machine law was not very specific. A bill distinguishing between machines used for gambling and those which are not is attached, along with the relevant explanatory pages from this office's January 1966 Legislative Oversight report. You will note that this bill does not prevent that automatic expiration.

Sec. 1, Ch. 135 SLA 1966 amended AS 43.35.090(2), the definition of "coin-operated device class 2", by inserting the words "but free plays shall not be construed as a thing of value". As you know, AS 43 is the taxation title, and AS 43.35 taxes coin-operated devices and punchboards but does not legalize gambling (see AS 43.35.070 and 43.35.140). I believe the intent of Ch. 135 SLA 1966 was to counter the effect of State v. Pinball Machines, Alaska, 404 P 2d 923 (1965), which held that free plays constituted a thing of value, which in turn made the use of any pinball machines that awarded free plays "gambling", the result of which was to justify the seizure and destruction of the machines under AS 11.45.040. The attached pages analyze that court opinion.

Sec. 3, Ch. 135 SLA 1966 stated, "This Act shall not remain in existence beyond June 30, 1969." The result of this expiration will be to leave AS 43.35.090(2) as it was before the 1966 amendment. Since that amendment does not seem to me to have been the best way to counter the effect of State v. Pinball Machines, I doubt that much will be lost by allowing the expiration to go into effect, if your attached bill passes. If you disagree, we could easily add a section to the bill, repealing Sec. 3, Ch. 135 SLA 1966. (Or is it possible that you would only want to repeal that expiration clause?)

of the Code can begin without delay. In other words, instead of being authorized to merely create a plan of revision, as provided in HB 256, it is recommended that the Legislative Council be given authority to begin work immediately with each department and agency on a revision of its regulations. It is also recommended that the Council be assigned the responsibility of rewriting the instructions on drafting techniques and prescribing a uniform system of indexing, numbering and arrangement of text to be used in lieu of those instructions and requirements now contained in Title 1 of the Administrative Code. Each of these tasks it is believed can be performed by the Council within its present staff structure.

Under the staff's proposed additions to HB 256, the interim powers and responsibilities vested in the Legislative Council would terminate when the revision of the Code is accomplished. At that time the Council would then submit to the Legislature the method it recommends for the future promulgation, publication, and distribution of administrative regulations.

A bill to effectuate the recommended proposal is contained in Appendix 7.

III. REVIEW OF STATE SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

This part of the report contains analyses of four recent state supreme court opinions and the Council's recommendations based on these analyses.

A. STATE v. PINBALL MACHINES [Sup. Ct. Op. No. 298 - August 19, 1965]

1. Fact Situation. Various pinball machines in the cities of Anchorage and Fairbanks were seized as gambling implements under the authority of AS 11.45.040. Essentially, the machines featured a coin insertion to activate the machine, the shooting of balls by a player, the dropping of balls into holes, the lighting of numbers on a bingo-type card, the varying of odds by a mechanism within the machine and the winning of free games by chance. No pay-off in money or things of monetary value was found to have been made to winning players. Winners only acquired the right to continue playing the game without paying additional money until the number of free games won were used up.

2. Statutes Involved. The only statute involved in these cases that is pertinent to the legislative problem to be discussed is AS 11.45.040 which states:

> The commissioner of public safety, a member of the division of state police, or a police or peace officer designated by the commissioner shall seize and destroy a gambling implement.

3. Superior Court Decisions. The superior court at Fairbanks held that a pinball machine is a gambling implement per se, while the superior court at Anchorage held that it is not.

4. Supreme Court Decision. The Supreme Court agreed with the superior court in Fairbanks and held that pinball machines are gambling implements which are subject to seizure and destruction under the law. According to the court, the essential elements of gambling are price, chance and prize, and whenever some tangible thing is "used or mainly designed or suited for gambling" it is a gambling implement. In applying these criteria to pinball machines the court noted that since a person must insert money into a pinball machine to activate it, the element of price is present and because the number of free games one may win is uncertain, the element of chance is also present. Moreover, a prize was won, even though the free games accumulated had no real monetary value, because, said the court:

> It is not the essence of gambling that the element of prize have a monetary value. If that which one seeks to attain, regardless of whether it has value in money, may be attained by chance after the payment of a price, then one is gambling.

5. Legislative Problem. This case indicates that there is a need for the legislature to either define what it considers to be a "gambling implement" or to at least make clear its position regarding pinball machines as gambling implements.

Under the court's present criteria almost any game which a person pays to play or see can fall into the catagory of gambling because of the presence of price, chance and prize. In fact, a literal application of the definition adopted in this case would require the conclusion that even bubble gum machines, which have little trinkets interspersed among the gum, are gambling instruments when used by someone who inserts his penny with the hope of attaining one of the trinkets.

Therefore, the Legislative Council recommends that legislative action be taken to narrow the court's definition of a "gambling implement" which has been established in this case.

Research indicates that there are certain mechanical features in a pinball machine used for gambling purposes, in the more conventional sense of "gambling", which are unnecessary if a machine is used only for amusement. The features peculiar to pinball machines actually used for making pay-offs are:

1 - A capability of awarding as many as 1,000 free games. Bona fide amusement devices never award more free games than can, within reason, be actually played off -- 25 at the maximum and more usually 10 or 5;

2 - A button connected to the free-game circuit which allows free games to be "knocked off" or "run off" without being played;

3 - A device to record the number of free games "knocked off." This is a crucial and expensive feature of gambling machines that is totally useless on a machine used only for amusement. To understand the significance of this feature, it is important to note that typically the pinball machine is not owned by the location owner, but by an operator who owns a number of machines which he may move about from location to location. The operator gets his machines, usually on credit, from a distributor who has purchased them from the manufacturer. The recording of "knocked off" games makes possible an accounting between the operator and the location owner; the location owner is given a cash credit for the number of free games he, in turn, paid off to the player - usually a cash pay-off.

4 - A provision for mulitple coin insertion for increasing the odds on winning free games. If the machine were being played purely for "amusement," the insertion of more coins to play one game would not be necessary since it adds nothing to the skill required in playing the game; and to be adjusted manually or automatically to raise or lower the frequency of winning free games. One such device is known as a "reflex unit." It operates constantly to adjust the odds--unbeknownst to the player--to protect the "house." After a series of pay-offs the unit begins to disconnect circuits in the odds-fixing mechanism to reduce the chance of increasing the odds with each coin; after a period of slow play the unit reverses and reopens circuits to make it progressively easier to win a greater number of games again.

Since the mechanical makeup of pinball machines used for gambling purposes can be distinguished from those used solely for amusement it is believed that the latter should be excluded from the provisions of AS 11.45.040 unless actually used in the making of pay-offs. Defining "gambling implement" in this way appears to be more in keeping with the legislative intent of AS 11.45.040 than use of the broader definition now sanctioned by the court. A bill to effectuate the recommended proposal is contained in Appendix 5.

B. WADE v. DWORKIN [Sup. Ct. Op. No. 306 - November 4, 1965]

1. Fact Situation. The Secretary of State denied an application for a recount of votes for the House of Representatives' race of November, 1964, in the sixteenth election district on the ground that the application was not received within the time set by law for filing such applications.

The state canvass of the election in question was completed and certified to the Secretary of State on November 19, 1964. The application, which had been signed by ten qualified voters of the sixteenth election district (one of whom was the appellee, Lazer Dworkin), was mailed on November 23, 1964, (four days after the canvass) and received by the Secretary of State on November 25th, which was six days after certification of the state canvass (one of those six days being an intervening Sunday).

2. Statutes Involved. This case involved the following statutes:

(a) AS 15.20.430, which states in part

A defeated candidate or 10 qualified voters who believe there has been a mistake made by an election official or by the canvassing board in counting the votes in an

Dear Mr. Jackson,

Enclosed is a letter that I have submitted to the Anchorage Times. I hope that after you have read same that you will find it worthwhile to show to your nine member committee, I sincerely appreciate your stand in this matter.

I know that myself along with the rest of the people of Alaska who are for good clean government will applaud what ever you do to defeat this pinball bill #360.

LET'S TILT HB. #360

Dear Editor,

I have just read with appalling disgust the article in the Times dated April 10, entitled "PINBALL MEASURE QUIETLY DROPPED INTO HOUSE HOPPER." 1. This is an attempt to force the extension of an illegal business on the residents of Alaska. 2. This illegal bill was drawn up by and with the full knowledge of ONE and maybe more of the lawmakers of the State of Alaska. 3. It defies the wishes of the majority of the residents of Alaska as statewide gambling was defeated at the poles a few years ago by a large margin. 4. It defies the Alaska Supreme Court which said that pinball machines were illegal and could not be licensed in the Sate of Alaska. 5. It breaks the pinballs boys' agreement that if the law makers would just give them an extension to get their money out of their investment THEY, THE PINBALL CROWD would be happy. This was done by the 1966 legislature. This extension will expire June 30, 1969, WE HOPE.

How can the law makers of Alaska justify even considering such an illegal bill in the first place, when they have already gone out into left field in allowing an illegal business to operate for 3 years. The one or more who are responsible for this bill should be made public and an explanation demanded how as LAW MAKERS they are able to produce illegal bills such as HB #360. The 1969 legislature can only erase this blight that was forced upon them by the introduction of this bill by once and for all "TILTING HB #360." I say a vote of thanks to the Anchorage Times for bringing this piece of GARBAGE out into the open.

STATE OF ALASKA

KEITH H. MILLER, GOVERNOR

DEPARTMENT OF LAW

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL / POUCH K, STATE CAPITOL — JUNEAU 99801

April 14, 1969

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Alaska State Representative
House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Mr. Jackson:

House Bill 360, now before the Legislature, will extend the expiration date of 135 SLA 1966. In light of this, you have asked for an opinion on the effect that 135 SLA 1966 has upon the legality of operating pinball machines in the State of Alaska.

135 SLA 1966 amended AS 43.35.090(2) by inserting the words "but free plays shall not be construed as a thing of value." Sections 2 and 3 of the Act provide:

> It is the intention of the legislature that this bill shall in no way be considered an attempt or intent to liberalize or to exempt the state from the limitations imposed by 15 U.S.C. secs. 1171-1178.
> This Act shall not remain in existence beyond June 30, 1969.

The legislative intent for enacting SB 282 (135 SLA 1966) is found in the "Report of House Judiciary Committee on Senate Bill No. 282, 1966 House Journal 870, where the majority of the committee stated:

> The proponents of this bill feel that the statement in the bill that free plays shall not be construed as a thing of value will indicate a legislative intent that pinball machines are not gambling implements by eliminating the 'prize' which is one of the three essential elements of gambling.
> This may or may not be so. (Emphasis added)

It must be noted from the above text of the majority committee report, that whether or not the proponents desired goal would be accomplished was in some doubt.

The above cited committee report fully recognised the problem in amending the taxation statutes to attempt to define a phrase in a criminal statute.

Thus, the determinative issue to be resolved in deciding whether or not the proponents of SB 282 accomplished their goals, is whether or not a taxation statute (AS 43.35) and specifically a definitional section in that statute, defining "coin-operated device class 2" will be considered by a court when attempting to define a phrase used in a criminal statute, specifically the phrase "gambling implements" as used in AS 11.45.040.

AS 43.34.010 in part provides:

> A person who maintains for use or permits the use on premises under his control of a coin-operated . . . class 2 . . . shall first pay a tax as follows: . . . (2) $120 a year for each coin-operated device class 2. . . . (Emphasis added)

For a definition of "coin-operated device class 2" it is necessary to look to AS 43.35.090, the section in question, which in part states:

> In this chapter
> (2) "coin-operated device class 2" means a pinball machine, including a bingo type coin-operated device, horse race machine or other apparatus or device which operates by means of insertion of a coin, token, or similar object and which, by embodying the elements of chance or skill, awards free plays and which contains a device for releasing free plays and a meter for registering or recording the plays so released, but free plays shall not be construed as a thing of value, or with a provision for multiple coin insertion for increasing the odds; class 2 does not include > bona fide vending machines in which gaming or amusement features are not incorporated; (Emphasis added)

It could be argued that by stating "in this chapter" the above definitional section would not be used to define any terms outside of AS 43.35, but only used to define "coin-operated device class 2" as that phrase is used in AS 43.35.010. It should also be noted that AS 43.34.090 (2) is a definition of a "coin-operated device class 2" and not a definition of a "gambling implement."

The issue at hand was well settled by the Alaska Supreme Court in State v. Pinball Machines, 404 P.2d 923 (1965). The Court held

> . . . it is too well settled for argument that a business expressly condemned and made unlawful by statute is not made lawful by the fact that a tax is imposed with respect to the operation of such business. (p. 927)

In other words, a business that is unlawful (operation of a gambling implement) is not made lawful because of a tax imposed on the maintenance for use of the gambling implement.

The Court then held:

> AS 43.34.090(2) which contains the definition of a class 2 coin-operated device, is nothing more than that--a definition of that which must exist before the tax becomes applicable. Such a definition of a term cannot logically be construed as a legislative statement on the uses and purposes to which a pinball machine may be put.
> As part of the same statute which defines a class 2 coin-operated device, AS 43.35.070 states that:
> > This chapter does not legalize gambling or the possession of a gambling device.
> . . . .
> The above quoted statutory provision makes it clear that the use or possession of a > pinball machine is not made lawful by the mere fact that such a machine is defined by law for tax purposes. (Emphasis added) (Supra, p. 928)

AS 43.35.070 referred to in the Court's opinion makes it clear that whatever is provided or stated in the future or past in AS 43.35, it is not meant to legalize gambling or possession of gambling devices. It could be argued, therefore, that regardless of the legislative intent in an amendment to AS 43.35.090(2), AS 43.34.070 restricts the use of that section and any of its amendments to the definition of a "coin-operated device class 2" as used in AS 43.34.010.

In view of the reasoning expounded by Alaska's Supreme Court in the above cited case, it is the opinion of this office that 135 SLA 1966 probably did not legalize "free play" pinball machines, even though a few arguments could be made to the effect that it did.

Judiciary Committee Report

on

House Bill 363

This bill modifies the procedural requirements for execution upon the assets of a judgment debtor, where no attorney has appeared or where judgment was obtained by default. In such cases many people, particularly the indigent or unlearned, are completely unaware that state and federal law exempt a basic minimum of property from execution to satisfy a judgment. Existing law, however, also permits execution without any notification to the judgment debtor of those rights.

This defeats the established policy of this State, which is intended to enable judgment debtors to retain minimal income and property for their support. A more effective procedure is needed to insure the use of existing exemption rights by indigents and those unaware of their rights.

First, the bill prohibits property from being sold or otherwise disposed of pursuant to a writ of execution for a period of 15 days. This waiting period will not unduly burden the judgment creditor in that assets capable of movement or seizure will be protected by the Court.

Second, it provides for a prompt hearing on exemptions claimed, if possible within three days after the judgment debtor has received notice.

Third, the debtor in such cases must receive a notice specifying the property seized or to be sold, which notice must be filed in Court with proof of service. The notice must contain an explanation, capable of being understood by a layman, of the various exemptions which exist and a form on which the claimed exemptions may be asserted.

The bill provides that the Alaska Supreme Court prescribe the proper forms to be used. Attached to this Report are sample forms, noted with approval by the Committee, and it is urged that such forms be adopted by the Court to the extent consistent with existing style and form of pleadings and other papers prescribed by the Court.

No. _____

A Writ of Execution has been issued against you. The following property claimed to be your property has been seized:

A copy of the Writ of Execution is attached to this notice.

Final sale or disposition of this property will be sought fifteen (15) days after you receive this notice.

Certain of your property may be exempt from execution under Alaska or Federal law. These exemptions are explained below. If the execution is directed against exempt property, you may prevent loss of this property by following these steps within fifteen (15) days:

1. Fill out the attached "Assertion of Exemption" form, indicating which of the property stated in the Writ of Execution you claim as exempt, and sign the form.

2. Mail or deliver the form to the clerk of the Court _____, room _____,

_____, Alaska.

3. Mail or deliver copies of the form to the plaintiff or his attorney. (See above).

4. Mail or deliver a copy of the form to any person having possession of any property you claim as exempt. For instance, your employer, if you claim that your wages are exempt.

If these steps are followed within fifteen (15) days of the date you received this notice, the property you claim as exempt will not be disposed of. You will then be notified that a hearing will be held to determine whether the property is exempt.

Explanation of Exemptions:

The form is used only to claim an exemption as to property stated in the Writ of Execution.

If the property stated in the writ of execution includes any of the following items, fill out the forms and deliver or mail copies as explained above.

The first item on the form, A.1., should be checked and filled in if the writ of execution states that your wages, or other money owed to you, is to be attached. A single person may keep $200 after taxes, in any thirty (30) day period, the head of household may keep $350 after taxes. Therefore, add all the money you have earned, even if you haven't been paid, from all sources in the last thirty (30) days.

Items A.2., A.3., A.4. and A.5. refer to exemptions of other personal property. If the writ of execution specifies any of these items, check the appropriate places on the form.

Item B. is for exemption of money paid to you as child support under a court order. If the writ of execution is against any money you have recieved for child support, under a court order, whether you have the money or it is in a bank, this item should be checked.

Item D. is your homestead exemption. If the writ of exeuction states that the place where you live, and which you or a member of your family owns, is to be attached, this item should be checked.

Item E. should be checked if the writ of execution is directed to any money you have received as unemployment benefits in Alaska. This may only be used if the money has been kept separate from your other money.

Item F. should be checked if the writ of execution is directed to money you have received as an award for Workmen's Compensation in Alaska, even if you have put it in the bank.

Item G. includes various exemptions you are allowed under Federal law. If the writ of execution states that any money is to be attached and you got the money from a Federal pension, soldier's bonus, railroad retirement or soldier's savings, this item should be checked.

HB 373

STATE OF ALASKA

KEITH H. MILLER, GOVERNOR

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER / POUCH S—JUNEAU 99801

April 20, 1970

The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Re: CSHB 373 - An Act Relating to Political Campaigns

Dear Representative Jackson:

Pursuant to a request by Commissioner Tom Downes, Department of Administration, I am setting forth below a fiscal note concerning the cost to the state treasury of CSHB 373.

We are unable to ascertain exactly the cost on the state treasury of CSHB 373. However, it is our opinion that it could cost the state $3,193,000 during the fiscal year 1970-71, and the cost could be much larger. The figure of $3,193,000 is arrived at by multiplying the estimated 127,720 returns by $25.

We wish to point out the following problems raised by section 4 of CSHB 373 beginning on line 21 of page 9 of the bill.

1. The bill provides that contributions to political candidates will be credited against one's taxes. They would not be an itemized deduction. A person who receives a credit against the tax for taxes withheld from wages results in dollars taken from the state treasury. Since the bill does not provide that the credit is limited by the amount of tax one might owe, we assume that the person will be entitled to a refund of $25 regardless of whether there is any tax due. For example, a person may have income of $10,000 but exemptions and credits totaling $11,000. Accordingly he would have no tax liability even though taxes might have been withheld. However, section 4 of CSHB 373 provides that he will have a credit if he makes a political contribution. Accordingly, the taxpayer would look for a refund of the $25 along with any tax that might have been withheld to which he might be entitled to have refunded.

2. AS 43.20.030(e) provides in part as follows:

> "When a refund is allowed to a taxpayer, it shall be paid out of the general fund by a warrant issued under a voucher approved by the department."

It is one thing to refund an overpayment of tax and another thing to make a payment out of the state treasury of $25 per person which is not a refund of tax. The latter payment would appear to be a payment which must be appropriated by the legislature and such expenditures would have to be for a public purpose. Is a candidate's expenditures a public purpose?

3. The estimated cost to the state of $3,193,000 is based upon the estimated number of returns that will be filed for the calendar year 1970. Over half of these returns are joint returns. Section 4 of CSHB 373 does not indicate whether only one spouse could take a credit. We assume that both spouses would be entitled to take the credit. If so the cost to the treasury would be $4,789,500 if all taxpayers having a return took a credit of $25 each for contributions made.

4. There is some question from section 4 of CSHB 373 whether the person filing a return is limited to a credit of only $25 regardless of the amount contributed and the number of candidates to whom contributions were made. This should be made clear. (For instance a taxpayer could make $25 contribution to each of 50 candidates. Is he limited to a credit of $25 or is he entitled to a credit of $1,500?)

5. Although the intent of the drafters of CSHB 373 may have been to provide a taxpayer with a credit for contributions made, we wish to point out that the bill provides a method whereby a large contributor can contribute to several candidates and at the expense of the state treasury rather than his own. This could be done by a person loaning funds to many of his friends to contribute to candidates. The friends could claim a refund through the credit and pay him back part or all of the amounts advanced when the refunds are recieved.

If section 4 of CSHB 373 is to remain in the bill it is suggested that it be revised to make clear the following factors.

a. The total amount of credit which may be received by a taxpayer.

b. Whether a taxpayer is entitled to a refund of the credit even though he owes the state no taxes for the year. That is would the funds come out of the state treasury.

c. Whether taxpayers filing joint returns are limited to the same credit as a single taxpayer or married taxpayers filing separate returns receive or whether they are entitled to twice that amount.

d. It is suggested that section 4 of CSHB 373 be set up as a separate section or a subsection of AS 43.20.180 rather than be mixed with the withholding of taxes from wages as it now is.

If you have any questions please advise.

Very truly yours,

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska

TO: Robert W. Ward
Secretary of State

DATE : March 4, 1970

FROM: Thelma Cutler
Director of Elections

SUBJECT: Voter Pamphlet

Yesterday you requested that I develop some information and cost estimates on the preparation of a voter pamphlet as outlined in CSHB 373. The following figures are very rough estimates, made with the help of Jack Cucker, Miner Publishing Company and Bill James of the Southeast Alaska Empire:

The Empire has given us a figure of $50,000.00 per 100M copies including stitching and turning based on approximately 70 pages (7" x 10-1/2"). Additional costs would be postage on a bulk mailing approximately $4,000.00. Machine time and materials for labels, $1,000.00 and rental of a label application machine (if at all available), $500.00.

Possible return to the state on cost per page assuming all candidates pick the minimum of one page would be $4,400.00.

The following outlines the minimum quantity per district necessary plus combines districts so that five variations of the pamphlet could be mailed statewide:

District	Pamphlet	Quantity
1	1	5,000
2		2,500
3		3,000
4		6,000
5		1,750
6	2	2,250
7		2,750
9		1,200
10		4,750
11		2,500
12		1,100
8	3	35,000

District	Pamphlet	Quantity
13	4	1,500
14		2,500
15		2,500
17		2,000
18		2,250
19		1,250
16	5	15,000

Estimates of pages to be included in the pamphlet:

Amount	Candidates
6	3 each political parties
4	2 measures
16	Bonding
1	Table of contents and index
2	Governor
2	Secretary of State
2	U. S. Senators
2	U. S. Representatives
4-6	State Senator
10-14	Representative
2	Cover
10	Pages of measures text and voter information (election district map and absentee voting information and request form).

CS for HOUSE BILL NO. 373

This bill represents an effort to reduce and equalize the cost of conducting a campaign for the legislature in Alaska. A subsidiary aim is to reduce the influence of special interest groups.

The first area of the bill limits the amount a candidate can spend for media advertising and limits the amount of a contribution from any one person to less than $500.

The next portion of the bill provides for the publication, at State expense, of a Candidate Pamphlet, in which each candidate for office is allocated a page to tell his story. Each voter would receive a copy of the pamphlet at no cost, and this should substantially eliminate the necessity for the publication of brochures, position papers, and similar material. The bill also provides for the publication of a voter pamphlet, which may be combined with the candidate pamphlet, giving the pros and cons on each initiative, referendum, or other issue to be voted on at the particular election.

Finally, the bill provides that each state income tax payer may take a tax credit for any amount up to $25 contributed to candidates for office in Alaska. The intention here is to encourage widespread small contributions to political campaigns, rather than leaving the candidate dependent upon a few "fat cats". Various provisions of the bill have been modeled on similar provisions of federal law, or the laws of other states.

Barry,

The CS for HB 373 is attached. On the first page, I made that first section applicable to special elections, too. (They would only be held for a senate vacancy; see AS 15.40.380.) On the last page, sec. 4 does not apply to judicial office; I seem to recall that this was the committee's wish, but I'm not sure why (other than the fact that the judges don't usually "campaign" for themselves).

Dear Mr. Jackson,

Since drinking alcohol, and voting, and being pharmacist, or a State Trooper are such different activities, they have very different implications and requirements of preparation, and judgment.

It therefore does not seem logical to assume that 19 is the best age to choose for all these. Reference is made particularly to State Troopers being 19. It would seem very unlikely that they would have sufficient experience by that time to back up the good judgment and finesse expected as prerequisite of a Trooper.

I would appreciate your forwarding copy of proposed bill if available.

Thanking you, I am

The final draft of the Jud. CS for HB 406 is attached, as is a committee report and sectional analysis. A review of the "Law and Age" study shows the following points not covered in the bill:

District judges and magistrates (21) -- AS 22.15.160;

Alaska Employment Security Act -- def. of "employment" (21) -- AS 23.20.525(c)(10);

Real Estate Commission (26) -- AS 08.88.041;

Fraternal benefit society benefits (21) -- AS 21.84.210.

You may or may not wish to include amendment of these provisions in the bill.

3/10/70

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 406

This bill emanates from the December 1966 report prepared by the Legislative Affairs Agency, entitled "The Law and Age in Alaska". In suggesting a review and revision of many of the laws relating to age, the author of that report states: "Special attention should be given to the areas where a distinction is made between a minor and an adult. One glaring oversight recurs in those laws which simply overlook the fact that in Alaska the age of majority is age 19 (AS 25.20.010) and that the state constitution (Art. V, Sec. 1) establishes age 19 as the voting age. AS 25.20.010 is derived from Sec. 20-1-1, ACLA 1949, as amended in 1959. Prior to 1959 the legal age was age 21. Consequently, the pre-1959 legislation which has not been revised to reflect the new standard is inconsistent with it. Moreover, some of the post-1959 legislation appears to be based on the erroneous assumption that age 21 was still the determining age."

The bill attempts to remove the legal uncertainties and inconsistencies leading to anomalies such as the following one mentioned by the author of that report: "In Alaska, a 20-year old borough assemblyman or city councilman who may incorporate a cooperative, devise by will, convey land, and donate his eyes to a hospital, must have the written consent of his parents to get married." The bill attempts to accomplish this clarification by making all specifications of age which appear to be based on the adult/minor distinction a consistent 19, and by deleting age specifications considered to be unnecessary. The age requirements for the governor (Alaska Constitution, Art. III, Sec. 2), the secretary of state (Ak. Const., Art. III, Sec. 7), legislators (Ak. Const., Art. II, Sec. 2; AS 24.05.030), and district judges and magistrates (AS 22.15.160) are not changed by the bill. The differences between the committee substitute proposed by the Judiciary Committee and the one proposed by the Health, Welfare and Education Committee are set out below.

Sectional analysis.

Sections 1 and 2 deal with the citizen consent required for the issuance of a liquor license. Since 19-year olds may vote and sign petitions for initiative and referendum, etc., it is appropriate that they be permitted to register their opinion as to the issuance of a liquor license.

Section 3 provides for persons 19 and 20 years old to share in the responsibility of jury duty.

Section 4 allows persons 19 and 20 years old to incorporate business corporations. They are presently allowed to incorporate cooperatives (see AS 10.15.335).

Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8 lower the age requirement for, respectively, special police officers who meet other requirements, insurance brokers and agents, insurance adjusters, and persons authorized to serve subpoenas.

Section 9 allows men who have reached the age of majority to get married without their parents' consent. The Judiciary Committee substitute provides equal treatment for women on this point, by raising the age from 18 to 19.

Sections 10 and 11 make the poll tax provisions in the chapters dealing, respectively, with first and second class cities apply to persons 19 and 20 years old as well as older persons.

Sections 12 - 17 correct provisions relating to the handling of minors by the court and the Department of Health and Welfare. These provisions presently contain phrases such as "the day the minor becomes 21", which are ambiguous. Under existing law a person is no longer a "minor" when he reaches 19 years of age, and the statutes being amended in these sections could be simply overlooking that fact; however, the statutes could mean that supervision over the person who was a minor when originally dealt with by the court may continue for two years after he reaches his adulthood. The bill removes this ambiguity by specifying age 19 and providing for an additional year of supervision when approved by the court for persons who have not responded to treatment during their minority. Section 12 of the Judiciary Committee substitute corrects a typographical error which occurred in the earlier substitute: on page 3, line 14, the "19" should be underlined. In Section 17, a reference to "a child in need of supervision" has been included to take into account the provisions of FCCSSB 76, which was adopted by the Senate on February 26, 1970 and by the House on March 6, 1970.

Sections 18 - 24 deal with the sale of alcoholic beverages by and to persons 19 and 20 years old, thus bringing these statutes in line with the duties and responsibilities imposed upon and assumed by persons of that age. The Judiciary Committee substitute changes sections 20 and 24 to make them conform to CSHB 586, which passed the House on March 5, 1970, as well as to other amendments in this CSHB 406.

Section 25 repeals minimum occupational age requirements which are unnecessary, as follows: law (AS 08.08.130(2)), basic sciences (AS 08.16.140(1)), chiropractic (AS 08.20.120(1)), dentistry (AS 08.36.110(1)), physical therapy (AS 08.84.030(1)), real estate brokers and associate brokers (AS 08.88.211(a)(3)), and veterinary medicine (AS 08.98.170(2)). The Judiciary Committee substitute adds a repealer of three subsections (AS 21.42.080(b), (c) and (d)) dealing with insurance contracts; these three subsections refer to "a minor of the age of 19 years or more": since there are no minors over age 19, these three subsections should not have been enacted (as they were, in the 1966 revision of AS 21).

Thank you for your letter of March 4 regarding HB-398 (administrative adjudication hearings).

Upon consideration of that letter, the House Judiciary Committee has decided to defer action on HB-398 and is asking the Legislative Affairs Agency to correspond with you and the Department of Law in the preparation of a somewhat more comprehensive revision of the adjudication provisions of the APA.

The staff work on this will have to be done between legislative sessions. Presumably, a new bill could be ready for introduction next session.

Honorable Barry W. Jackson, Chairman

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Thank you for your letter of February 25, 1970, concerning House Bill No. 398 "An Act relating to administrative adjudication hearings under the Administrative Procedure Act". As of the time of this writing, neither the Administrative Law Committee of the Alaska Bar Association or a member of it has prepared to take on the task of research and preparation of the bill as suggested by your letter. You indicate that neither the members of the Judiciary Committee nor the committee's staff counsel would have the time to research and prepare such a bill. The problem of time is just as much a pressing one for the members of the Alaska Bar Association who must attend to their law practice. Our Administrative Law Committee has expressed a willingness to cooperate with the Lesiglature, or any of its committees, or the Legislative Affairs Agency, but not to undertake the task of actually drafting the legislation. Our committee met on various occasions in 1969 and submitted reports which were forwarded to the Bar Association and to the Legislature and, again on January 24, 1970, relative to House Bill 398. Every member present had read HB 398 and over a half hour of discussion was taken up at the outset of that meeting before it was finally decided simply to set HB 398 aside and make positive recommendations for action.

AS 44.62.360 provides for verification whereas this outmoded and cumbersome tool has been discarded in nearly all of our court practice. Counsel is guided by the cannons of ethics concerning the filing of any pleadings on behalf of a client, and there ought to be no requirement for having the client come into the office for the purpose of signing a verification. The accusation may be filed by a third party, but under (3), may be by a public officer acting in his official capacity or by an employee of the agency. The memorandum of March 17, 1969, states that the bill proposes distinction based upon who initiates the proceedings, but AS 44.62.360(3) still provides for a public officer or an employee of the agency making an accusation. That is not too different from the statement of issues provided by AS 44.62.370 inasmuchas an agency cannot act except through a public officer or an employee.

HB 398 provides for a hearing requested by the applicant under AS 44.62.375. That hearing appears to be in the nature of an appeal from a denial or a determination, revocation, suspension, limitation or condition. The procedure apparently ignores proceedings such as those held before the Public Service Commission or the Alaska Transportation Commission where notice to interested parties and hearing precede action by the agency.

The accusation prosecuted by a third party is remindful of private prosecution in a criminal matter when the District Attorney's Office refuses or is unable to act. The difference appears to be that when a third party feels that action ought to be taken against an applicant or the holder of some authority or right, the expense and responsibility of prosecuting the action seems to be placed upon the third party rather than upon the agency charged with enforcement. It seems that once an agency has been made aware of violations or irregularities, perhaps under sworn statement, it should then be incumbent upon the agency to initiate either investigation or prosecution, otherwise, the prosecution and enforcement become the job and responsibility of the public and not of the agency charged with it.

The service of process provided by AS 44.62.380(c) is vague and dangerous for the protection of the rights of persons affected in that it provides that the accusation and all accompanying information may be sent to the respondent by any means selected by the agency.

When summary action is contemplated under AS 44.62.385 it ought to be in the nature of a Temporary Restraining Order accompanied with an Order to Show Cause why the action should not be continued in effect, as provided by the rules of Civil Procedure for Temporary Restraining Orders.

AS 44.62.390(a) should make it possible for the agency to grant additional time for good cause shown.

The above are not in any way exhaustive comments on the contents of HB 398, but are merely some of the comments raised in the Administrative Law Committee meeting which led to the conclusion that passage of HB 398 would result in an unsatisfactory patch-up job. Instead, it was the committee's unanimous feeling that a comprehensive revamping of the statute must be undertaken.

I regret that the press of business does not permit me to expend the time for a more detailed analysis and commentary of HB 398 at this time.

Dear Mr. Rose:

Your January 29 letter to Stanley Cornelius, with the accompanying report of the January 24, 1970 meeting of the Administrative Law Committee of the Alaska Bar Association, has been distributed to the members of the House Judiciary Committee. The report indicates that your committee considered House Bill No. 398, "An Act relating to administrative adjudication hearings under the Administrative Procedure Act," as not being sufficient revamping of the APA.

While your point is well taken, House Bill 398 deals with a problem that seems to be especially acute. This Bill proposes technical changes that appear to be one reasonable solution to the confusion surrounding and the inadequacy of the APA provisions for "accusations" and "statements of issues". We invite your analytical and critical remarks concerning the various provisions of this Bill.

With regard to the comprehensive revamping you suggest, we have noted the 23 points mentioned in your report and we would suggest that your Administrative Law Committee prepare a bill embodying your suggestions, submitting it to me or to the Legislative Affairs Agency. Neither the members of the Judiciary Committee, nor the committee's staff counsel would have time to research and prepare such a bill during the legislative session. That is the sort of project that is best accomplished between sessions. As you know, certain members of the staff of the Legislative Affairs Agency have been working on a long-term project revising the Alaska Administrative Code and the Administrative Procedure Act; I know that they would welcome your comments and suggestions regarding any aspect of that project. Hopefully, an appropriate bill can be introduced in the First Session of the Seventh State Legislature.

We appreciate the assistance of you and your committee. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

Enclosure

REPORT OF THE CHAIRMAN OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE LAW COMMITTEE

The Administrative Law Committee met regularly on call at the Harbor House on Saturday, January 24, 1970, at 10:00 a.m. The meeting was adjourned at 12:50 p.m. Present were the following: Nissel A. Rose, Chairman, Robert A. Hahn Jr., Andrew E. Hoge and Herbert A. Ross. Mr. Pree had previously advised that he would be unable to attend.

The committee members had been previously furnished by correspondence with the January 2 letter from Thomas M. Wardell, copy of the December 24, 1969 letter from Arthur H. Peterson to Thomas M. Wardell, copy of the March 17, 1969 memorandum from Arthur H. Peterson and Joel F. Bennett to the Legislative Council, and House Bill 398 "An Act Relating to Administrative Adjudication Hearings Under the Administrative Procedure Act."

The committee members were all of the impression or belief that House Bill 398 amounted basically to patching up the existing Administrative Procedures Act instead of revamping it. After a number of analytical, critical remarks concerning various provisions and aspects of House Bill 398, the committee preferred to recommend action along the lines discussed in our previous meetings and reports of 1969 and in the resolution adopted by the Alaska Bar Association Convention at Nome in 1969. The following are recommendations of the committee for items to be included in a revised APA to be adopted in the future:

1. All agencies should be brought under provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act as revised, inasmuch as possible without exception. In this respect, procedures should be established to provide for the various types of administrative matters coming before the panoply of agencies. The present and past tendency of exempting more and more agencies from the applicability of the APA creates a multiplicity of procedures, a lack of uniformity of policies and defeats the original purpose of adopting an APA.

2. All adversary hearings should be presided over by a hearing officer duly qualified as an attorney admitted to practice in Alaska, even when a matter is to be considered by agency head or heads in the first instance, unless the agency member, or one of them, qualifies in all respects as a hearing officer, that is to say an attorney admitted to practice in Alaska, with expertise in the particular administrative field involved.

3. Hearing officers should be removed physically and jurisdictionally from the agencies at whose hearings they will preside. This feature is similar to the California Plan. For administrative purposes, the hearing officers could be housed under an administrative procedures division of the Department of Revenue since that agency does not hold administrative hearings.

4. Agency staff (as opposed to agency heads such as commissioners) should be made a party to all adversary hearings, participating therein to the extent deemed necessary by the staff. When so participating, the staff would be represented by counsel.

5. Staff counsel who has advised the staff relative to a pending matter or participated therein in any manner must not advise the agency or participate in agency deliberations concerning such matters. When the agency requires legal advise, such should be provided by other counsel appointed for the purpose.

6. Jurisdiction and authority of hearing officers should be clearly delineated, particularly authority to issue subpoenae and subpoenae duces tecum, and means to enforce his lawful orders.

7. A hearing officer should be required to render proposed decisions within a stated limited time such as 90 days from the time a matter is ripe for decision, failure to comply being enforceable by mandatory injunctive proceedings in court.

8. Hearing officers'/proposed decisions should become agency actions if not opposed or appealed by a party or changed by the agency, sua sponte, within 30 days from the date of promulgation.

9. For good cause shown, either on application by a party, or because the agency considers it necessary, an agency may consider a matter directly in the first instance, the hearing thereon to be presided over by a hearing officer or qualified member of the agency as provided above.

10. No ex-parte communications should be allowed concerning any pending adversary matter with either the hearing officer or with any agency member without prior notice to the other parties.

11. Throughout these recommendations, the term "agency member" refers to a person such as the head of an agency or a commissioner, in other words, any person who is required to participate in the final decision making.

12. Final administrative determination of any pending adversary matter must be rendered by an agency not later than 6 months from the time when the matter is ripe for decision making; failure to comply being cause for suspension of pay of the agency members concerned.

13. For those agencies which may be required to issue emergency permits, such should be issuable for not more than 10 days, and renewable for not more than an additional 10 days, for a maximum of 20 days. Such emergency permits should be issued only to meet actual emergencies such as fires, disasters, or the like, emergency permits being distinguished from temporary authority.

14. Temporary authority (such as permit, license, certificate of public convenience and necessity, or any other means of obtaining a right) may be granted without hearing in the first instance, provided that public notice, including notice to interested parties, be provided within 10 days from the date of such application and that opportunity for hearing, even on short notice if necessary, be provided.

15. Hearing officers and agencies should have a choice of a number of means to enforce their orders such as the following:

Imposition of

A. Civil sanctions up to $100.00.
B. Consider adversely against the party concerned evidentiary matter which has been ordered produced but has not been so produced.
C. Dismissal of the party's case.
D. Enforcement of orders through mandatory injunctive proceedings and contempt in court.

16. Grant agencies and hearing officers the power to assess costs in limited instances. An example of such an instance is as follows: Applicant appeared at hearing but is not adequately prepared and seeks continuance of the matter so as to make a better presentation. Other parties are present and ready to go. The grant of applicant's request for continuance could be made subject to his payment of costs to the other parties for the wasted appearance. Such could include witness fees, travel costs for witnesses, and the like. It would then be up to the party seeking the continuance to decide between dismissal on the one hand and continuance with payment of costs on the other hand.

17. All proceedings should be recorded magnetically or through any other means adequate for the purpose, so that a transcript can be made therefrom. Transcripts should be provided at the request of any party, the requesting party to pay for the costs of the original to be provided to the agency and of his own copy. Other parties may obtain copies at their cost.

18. Interlocutory appeal or review from any hearing officer action may be had by any party on application within 10 days from such action. Such matters should receive priority, with agency action thereon to be on the record only and without oral argument and agency determination being made not later than 20 days from the date of the action appealed from, unless additional time is granted by the agency, total time elapsed not to exceed 30 days in any event. Failure to so appeal or seek review should not prevent the raising of the issue before the agency upon conclusion of the case before the hearing officer.

19. Rules of administrative procedure, to include administrative rules of evidence such as the uniform rules or the model code, should be adopted to be applicable to all agencies. Additional implementing procedures may be promulgated by an agency where necessary in the manner provided for the adoption of rules by the APA.

20. Liberal discovery should be allowed.

21. A form of modified procedure should be allowed whereby direct testimony would be provided in writing, distributed to the parties and filed in the record, subject to cross examination at the time of the hearing. This procedure could shorten hearing time considerably.

22. An agency may proceed to a hearing on an Order of Investigation in a manner consistant with these rules and in a manner consistent with this chapter. As with the rules of civil procedure, rules and procedures provided hereunder may be relaxed or dispensed with by a hearing officer or agency where it shall be manifest that a strict adherence to them will work injustice.

In addition to the foregoing, the committee considered the advisability of less formal proceedings in the initial consideration of rates and tariffs handled through a duly qualified rate specialist rather than a hearing officer. No conclusions were reached on this subject, but further recommendations will be made at a future time.

Respectfully submitted,

Nissel A. Rose

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

March 17, 1969

M E M O R A N D U M

TO: The Legislative Council

FROM: Arthur H. Peterson, Revisor of Statutes
and
Joel F. Bennett, Legislative Counsel

SUBJECT: An Act relating to administrative adjudication hearings under the Administrative Procedure Act. — HB 398

Section 3 is the heart of this bill. It provides clearly for an administrative hearing when requested by an applicant whose application for a right, etc., is denied, or whose existing right, etc., is revoked or suspended. Sections 1 and 2 are the basic companion provisions, and most of the other changes proposed by the bill merely conform the rest of the APA to the new provisions in sections 1 - 3.

Presently the sections of the APA relating to the initiation of hearings are awkward and confusing. There is a distinction between an "accusation" (AS 44.62.360) and a "statement of issues" (AS - 44.62.370) on the basis that the former deals with revoking, suspending, limiting or conditioning a right, etc., while the latter deals with granting, issuing or renewing a right, etc. This distinction is not realistic (in addition to being confusing) because an "accusation" is as appropriate to issuance as it is to revocation, and a "statement of issues" is as appropriate to revocation as it is to issuance. So the bill proposes a distinction based upon who initiates the proceeding (with a third party filing an accusation, and an agency serving a statement of issues) rather than upon the results of the agency action.

In addition, the existing AS 44.62.370(c) allows for a hearing to be requested by the person applying for a right, etc., but does so only in a backhanded manner which is further confused by referring to him as the "respondent". This term and the statement of issues may be appropriate in some cases but are not in others. The bill clarifies this Section 5 proposes a new provision to protect a person while he is pursuing his administrative and judicial remedies. Section 7 is partly clean-up and partly a change giving a person the opportunity to file an answer to a new charge against him. The first part of section 9 seeks to broaden the APA administrative adjudication notice provision in order to more appropriately handle the variety of proceedings required to be conducted in accordance with the APA.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 414

The present penalty for simple assault and battery is a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than six months or both. Recognizing that in the lawful performance of their duties peace officers subject themselves, on behalf of the public, to greater dangers than other citizens, and thus need the protection of a somewhat greater statutory deterrent, this bill increases the penalty for assault and battery on a peace officer to a maximum fine of $1,000 (with a minimum of $100) or maximum imprisonment of one year or both fine and imprisonment. This modification of the penalty for the lesser included offense of simple assault and battery applies, however, only when the officer is acting in the line of duty and gives evidence that he is a peace officer; the bill states that a badge, identification card or uniform is sufficient evidence to identify a peace officer for the purpose of this statute.

HB-430

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Honorable Barry Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

THRU: Mel J. Personett, Commissioner
Department of Public Safety

DATE : January 21, 1970

FROM: Captain R. L. Burton RLB
Commander, Southeast Region
Alaska State Troopers

SUBJECT: Legislation
House Bill 430
Our File - 150

I have been asked to comment on House Bill 430 which would transfer the responsibility for Search and Rescue to the Department of Public Safety from the District Court System.

From a practical standpoint, I feel this is the only way to proceed.

This is more necessarily a police function due to the investigation required to determine the circumstances surrounding a disappearance and the deaths which often occur in cases of this type. Inquiry by the courts should be done as a judiciary proceeding based upon the investigation by the police. The way it is presently done requires the courts to participate in a non-judicial function and they have to take action in a matter that should be a responsibility of the executive branch.

This I feel creates a conflict of executive and judicial functions, i.e., when a case results into an inquiry by the use of a coroner's jury.

From an investigative standpoint, this present system quite often creates obstacles. As an example, a disappearance is reported to a magistrate in one of the outlying villages and the magistrate orders a local group of volunteers to conduct the search. This group may search for several days and in the end find either that there is no trace of the victim or recover the body.

At this time, it has happened that the police are required to start an investigation which has at best left a cold set of facts, or the police are never notified except when we read about the case in the newspaper.

This has happened particularly with the Coast Guard who have conducted searches, canceled the search, did not notify the police, and did not file a copy of their investigation with the court. There are actual cases of people who are missing and presumed dead of whom the court nor vital statistics have any record. What this does to the relatives and estates left by the deceased is certainly something that should not occur in today's society.

I feel that Section 120 should be amended to require that all persons and agencies should be required to report the need for a search and the findings of their search efforts to the Commissioner even though this agency does not actively participate in the search. Note

The State Troopers do not have the equipment or manpower to physically conduct every search nor do I feel is this the intent of the law. However, I do feel that we should receive this information from agencies such as the Coast Guard. I feel that although their searches often take place in large open areas of water that this is still in the State of Alaska and the people are our citizens and we have a responsibility to take care of these matters and at least see that some record is made of a person's disappearance.

Presently we are attempting to operate along these guidelines but due to the rotation of personnel in the Coast Guard verbal agreements with one commander are quickly forgotten when he leaves.

We are presently responsible for payment of rescue funds to civilian groups but have very little control of the money expended or the equipment purchased.

I would also like to see a section added to the Bill which would give the Commissioner power to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to carry out the functions required in search and rescue (i.e. all non-expendable property purchased during a rescue mission would become the property of the state, property is to be inventoried and warehoused for use on future searches, etc.).

The rules and regulations should be under the Alaska Administrative Code and have the effect of law with appropriate penalty provisions.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 430

This bill simply transfers the responsibility for relief and rescue operations from the district court to the Department of Public Safety. (Section 5 makes an additional, minor change in order to conform to this basic change.) It is believed that the existing statute unnecessarily imposes a non-judicial burden on the court, and that conflicts between administrative and judicial functions would be removed by this transfer of responsibility. The present system also poses problems for the police when a person's disappearance and death necessitate an investigation. Moreover, the Department of Public Safety has the staff and facilities to conduct these operations, which the court does not.

The Judiciary Committee amendment gives the department authority to promulgate regulations reasonably necessary to handle the relief and rescue responsibility, and declares that the violation of one of these regulations is a misdemeanor. It is anticipated that these regulations will be somewhat broader in scope than the ones promulgated under AS 18.60.130 for the guidance of the commissioner's designee in authorizing rescue parties and their expenses.

Dear Representative Jackson:

When District Judge Bruce Monroe was in Anchorage last week he indicated to Chief Justice Nesbett that he had been requested to testify before the House Judiciary Committee concerning various proposals affecting the district courts, among which was that of increasing the civil jurisdiction of these courts from $3,000 to $10,000. The Chief Justice has requested that I state his position on the latter.

I enclose herewith a copy of a letter from Chief Justice Nesbett to Senator Ted Stevens, who was House Majority Leader last session. The various statistics and other comments made at that time are just as appropriate today.

In the closing paragraph of the Chief Justice's letter he pointed out that the present program of improving the caliber of our district judges has not been fulfilled. This is also true today, as the Judicial Council and the Governor were unable to secure sufficient qualified applicants to fill all of the vacant positions on January 1, the date when such would have otherwise been possible.

It should be pointed out that the caseloads of the presently constituted district courts are misleading as a gauge of the amount of work they do. In addition to cases filed in their courts, they serve as coroners and public administrators. They are also charged with the responsibility of supervising or actually performing the duties of recorder of public records. They are further charged with maintaining and supervising vital statistics for the state of Alaska, and most of them from time to time hear Superior Court cases of all types in the capacities of special and standing masters of the Superior Court. The aforesaid administrative and judicial functions are not readily apparent in the statistical reports.

On the other hand, the case records of the Superior Court reflect almost all of the volume of work they perform. As the Chief Justice pointed out, it would therefore seem that if the object of raising the jurisdictional limits of the district courts was for the purpose of relieving the Superior Courts, it would be well to consider whether it is not a better policy to allot the more important jurisdictions to the more capable and experienced judges, and to increase the number of Superior Court judges where appropriate and where the caseload statistically demonstrates the need.

Dear Representative Stevens:

This is a follow-up on our telephone conversation concerning HB 229 which would increase the jurisdiction of district judges from $3,000 to $10,000.

In order to determine the impact this legislation would have on district court calendars, a detailed analysis of the prayers of all complaints filed in the superior court in Anchorage for the months of January, June and November of 1967 was made. These figures were then related to the total filings in that court for 1967 to obtain approximately representative figures for that year.

The final figures obtained indicate that if HB 229 were enacted it would result in an annual increase in the case load of the district court at Anchorage of 448 cases. If the cases involving less than $3,000 which are annually filed in the superior court, even though they might have been filed in the district court instead, are added, the above figure would be increased by 136 cases to 584 cases.

As of December 1, 1967 the total of the cases pending in the district court in Anchorage was 1490. The total of pending cases on January 31, 1967 was 1536. While it is obvious that the total of pending cases has been reduced by 46 over the period of a year, what is not obvious is the increased calendaring and trial effort made in that court throughout the year in order to cope with the backlog and keep the rate of disposition even with the rate of filing. Adding an additional 558 more important and difficult cases to the present backlog of the district court would appear to aggravate rather than alleviate the overall court calendaring problem for it would increase the number of pending cases per judge in the district court to approximately 500 per judge (there are only 4 available judges since 1 judge spends full time in city court) and at the same time decrease the number of pending cases per judge in the superior court to approximately 450. It is believed that approximately the same ratio would hold for Fairbanks.

Also to be considered is the fact that the superior courts of Ketchikan, Juneau and Nome are not in need of additional judicial assistance. The district courts in those cities are already far busier than the superior courts since they handle all minor cases for the city, borough and the state as well as arraignments, coroner duties, recording, etc. etc.

Another factor to be considered is the fact that, by and large our district court judges, outside of Anchorage and Fairbanks, are not suited because of a lack of either education or experience, or both, to handle the more important and complicated civil cases. For example, three of our district judges have had no formal legal training (Nome, Juneau and Bethel), four, including those just mentioned, are not members of the Alaska Bar. Many others are still very inexperienced (Ketchikan, Juneau, Sitka and Kodiak).

I strongly urge that HB 229 not be given serious consideration, at least until the present program of improving the calibre of our district judges has been fulfilled. Even then it would be well to consider whether it is not a better policy to allot the more important jurisdictions to the more capable and experienced judges and increase the number of superior court judges where appropriate.

RE: House Bill No. 432, An Act Relating to Jurisdictional Amount in the District Court ($7,500)

Dear Representative Jackson:

Pursuant to your request of Thursday, January 29, 1970, I am hereby outlining the Alaska Judicial Council's position on the above numbered House bill.

At the morning meeting of the Judicial Council on January 29, 1970, the Alaska Judicial Council passed the following motion:

> The Alaska Judicial Council hereby endorses, in principle, the proposition of raising the monetary jurisdiction of the District Court in Alaska from $3,000 to $7,500, as provided in House Bill No. 432 now pending in the Legislature of the State of Alaska; provided, that such jurisdiction should be concurrent with that of the Superior Court.

It was brought to the Council's attention that there was support in some quarters for exclusive jurisdiction of amounts up to $7,500 in the District Court. If an exclusive jurisdictional feature were incorporated into the law, such would tend to diminish the flexibility necessary for the Alaska Court System because of the remote Court locations.

The Council considered that, with the necessary addition of Superior Court Judges now being considered by the Legislature, some such Judges might be located in areas not served by resident District Court Judges. In such situations, it is believed in the public interest that the Superior Court Judges might entertain cases involving less than $7,500.

Furthermore, it was the Council's opinion that the Superior Court should have the authority to transfer such cases between the Courts, either up or down, whenever such might appear expeditious and in the interest of the administration of justice.

Re: HB 432

Dear Ed:

The action proposed in HB 432 seems to be a substantial step in a positive direction. Whether the jurisdictional amount should be $7,500.00 or $10,000.00 (thus letting the normal whiplash auto injury case be tried in the district court), is a policy best left to the Bar Association and the Legislature.

Because of the tremendous number of cases that bounce from the district court to superior court and back again, sometimes five or six times, it occurs to me that the wording in section 22.15.030 could be cleared up quite a bit. Assuming for the moment a $7,500.00 jurisdictional limit, might I suggest that section 22.15.030, except for subsections 5 and 7, and section 22.15.050 be eliminated and substitute in their place wording to the following effect:

> "(1) All proceedings at law or in equity where the amount in controvery or value of any specific item sought to be recovered does not exceed $7,500.00. In a forcible detainer case the total sum alleged to be due as rental and damages shall be deemed to be the amount in controversy."

I would hope that a proposal such as this would greatly simplify our jurisdictional problems. In any event, I forward same in case it is of any use.

Many thanks for taking the time to consider my thoughts.

Re: Inheritance Tax -

Dear Representative Jackson:

Pursuant to your request I am setting forth below a few of the problems involved in the existing Alaska State Inheritance Tax Act.

The existing inheritance and transfer tax statute (AS 43.30) was passed in 1919 and has had very little change since that date. At the time it was passed there were very few inheritance or estate taxes on the books of governments in the United States. This probably accounts for some of the vagueness and indefiniteness of the act. The act's vagueness makes the tax inequitable in its application and a nightmare to both the Department of Revenue and to attorneys and accountants who try to understand it.

The Act as it has been administered in past years has been applied prinicpally to property probated in court. However, the literal reading of the statute would apply to almost all types of transfers. Applying it to probate proceedings while allowing revocable trusts, insurance and joint tenancy property to escape the tax causes gross inequities. Attempts to apply it to other types of transfers causes an endless number of administrative problems and can result in harsh results since the state exemption is only a maximum of $10,000 as compared to a $60,000 or larger exclusion under the Federal estate tax law.

At the present time there is a case pending in the Superior Court in Anchorage which if decided adversely to the State would result in exclusion from the inheritance tax base of real property sold under contracts of sale. The effect of this would be to reduce the small amount of tax presently collected.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1969 only the sum of $106,633.11 was collected from the inheritance and transfer tax.

The Department of Revenue has been under strong pressure from attorneys and accountants to change our law or set out more definite guidelines. Because of the indefiniteness of the law we do not feel that it is practicable to attempt to lay out any significant regulations which will bring stability in the area.

The existing law should either be completely repealed as was recommended in House Bill 442 or an entire new Act should be adopted.

If a new act is passed in lieu of the present law, it is recommended that the approach used by the State of Florida be used. The State of Florida has adopted the Federal estate tax concept with the amount of tax being equal to the Federal estate tax credit. If this act were adopted the State would have received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969 approximately $6,969. This would have resulted in a decrease of State revenues of approximately $100,000.

If the Florida approach is adopted practictioners would then file with the Department of Revenue a copy of the Federal estate tax return and pay to the estate the amount of the estate tax credit allowed under the Federal return.

By way of summary it is imperative that the present Inheritance and Transfer Tax chapter be repealed and a new Act adopted.

Re: House Bill 442

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Enclosed herewith is a copy of a letter from Lewis J. Conrad, District Director, Internal Revenue Service dated February 4, 1970. It states that in 1968 and 1969 the Federal estate taxes in Alaska were $291,000 and $284,000, respectively. By the records of the Anchorage District Office the returns filed run from 10 to 20 per year.

Using the 1968 collections of $291,000 in Federal estate tax and an average of 15 returns per year the average size of the taxable estate is $95,500 with an average tax of approximately $19,400.

The allowable estate tax credit for taxes paid to a state having an inheritance or estate tax on a taxable estate of $95,500 is $488. Multiplying that figure by 15 returns equals $7,320. This figure approximates the figure of $6,969 computed by our inheritance tax section from actual returns filed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969.

Based on the attached Federal estate tax schedule a taxable estate of $1,040,000 would result in a Federal estate tax credit of $38,800. (It should be noted that this is based upon a taxable estate of $1,040,000 and any marital deductions or other deductions would have been taken).

Re: CSHB 442 - Inheritance Tax

Dear Representative Jackson:

It is understood that some consideration is being given to deleting Section 2 (page 22, lines 3-9) of CSHB 442. Our views and reasons why that section is needed are set forth below.

It is important in repealing a law imposing an inheritance tax or estate tax that it is clear what the effective date is and how the estates of persons already deceased are to be taxed. For example, decedents A and B may both die on January 1, 1965. A's estate is probated and an inheritance tax of $10,000 is paid to the state in 1965. The probate of B's estate was not started for several years and it is not yet closed and the inheritance tax has not been paid. Under CSHB 442 the Federal estate tax credit (the new tax) might be $1,000. Is B's estate to benefit $9,000 because of tardiness in probating and paying the estate tax? Using the date of death rather than diligence or tardiness in closing the estate is generally considered the fairest method.

Section 2 on page 22 of CSHB 442 also removes a second related question by removing any doubt whether the new act applies to estates of decedents who died before the effective date of the new act, but have not paid the inheritance tax. Are those estates completely exempt from tax? Since the point of incidence of an estate tax is the time of death, a strong argument could be made that since the old act is repealed it does apply and that the new act applies only to cases where the person dies after its effective date. Unless section 2 is included that group of cases may escape taxation completely.

The legislature may have definite reasons for using a particular effective date and may exclude certain periods from the tax. Whatever is decided in this regard it is suggested that the legislature's desire be made clear in order that the State and the taxpayer know what the law is.

Very truly yours,

Vernon L. Snow

HB 478

STATE OF ALASKA

KEITH H. MILLER, GOVERNOR

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER / POUCH M—JUNEAU 99801

March 16, 1970

The Honorable Jalmar M. Kerttula
Speaker
House of Representatives

Dear Mr. Speaker:

House Bill 478, "an Act relating to mining leases", we believe is a good bill and should be strongly supported by those people interested in the State of Alaska. As the law now stands we have practically no means of preventing a mining leasee from setting on lease property forever without making a serious attempt to develop it. House Bill 478 would therefore serve to stimulate development on mining leases which is what we need to cure a rather sick industry in the State.

As background material, our present regulations require payment of $100 per year or equivalent development work for a mining leasehold as an annual rental. A mining lease is of a maximum of 40 acres. Therefore a minimum rental or work is $2.50 per acre. Work credits can be applied on one leasehold against a group of contiguous leases, therefore for a very small and yearly investment considerable acreage can be retained. If the period of a lease is for a ten year period, a leaseholder, if a lease were of any significance to him, would plan his exploration activity to bring it into production prior to his termination. We feel the new wording in the law would adequately protect a leasee from unreasonable termination of the lease once it was in production.

Under the present law one operator, for a minimum investment of $1.00 per acre, can corner the market on off-shore mining leases and thus cut down the competition to a point where there would be no development unless he considered it of a benefit to himself.

Representative Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Prior to discussing the Department't support for House Bill 478 entitled "An Act relating to mining leasing", I would like to clarify for the benefit of the Committee several terms which may come up during the discussion of this bill. Section 38.05.205 concerns itself with the leasing of State lands on which locatable minerals are found. Locatable minerals in contrast to leasable minerals are primarily the metallic ores. Leasable minerals as spelled out in Title 38 are coal, phosphates, oil shale, sodium, sulphur, potassium and oil and gas.

Mining claims in contrast to a mining lease permits the rights to deposit of minerals on State land by discovery location and filing on State lands which, on January 3, 1959, were subject to location under the Mining Laws of the United States. A mining claim may be converted to a mining lease at any time the claimant desires by simply making an application to the Department for a mining lease. Mining leases on State lands for locatable minerals are similar to mining claims in that prior discovery, location, and filing initiates a prior right to the mineral deposits.

In contrast to claims and leases, mining permits are at the present time issued only on submerged lands of the State on the basis of the first qualified applicant. Such a permit gives the applicant the exclusive right to prospect for deposits of minerals on the tide and submerged lands of the State. Permits on submerged land may be converted to a noncompetitive mining lease following discovery.

The Department favors the amendment to Section 38.05.205 because we believe it will encourage development on State mining leases. As the statutes now read, we have practically no means of preventing a mining lessee from holding lease property forever without making a serious attempt to develop it. However, the Department does feel that ten years may be too short a time for the development of a mining lease because of the many intangible factors involved in producing these natural resources. In our opinion, a period of twenty years for mining leases on locatable minerals would be much more feasible.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

After doing additional research, I do not feel that HB-478 is worthy of your time and attention. The amount of acreage affected by the mining leasing law under the present statutes or under HB-478 is so minor that it presents no problem under the present law.

The State has selected very little land in the higher elevations where minerals normally occur and, therefore, these areas have not been classified for surface use. The mineral leasing law only affects those lands which have been classified for a surface use such as agriculture, forestry, public recreation, etc. The great majority of the State lands in the locatable mineral areas can be staked as claims and the rights, therefore, are protected without patent or lease. Only after the claim was brought into the advanced stages of production would it be feasible to go to the leasing system.

FISCAL ANALYSIS The proposed facility is envisioned as containing approximately 45,000 square feet of floor area. Such a facility should provide adequate housing for approximately 125 prisoners.

The personnel services required to staff such a facility would be based on the need to have 4.8 staff for each security post within the facility. A security post is defined as that post which requires staffing on 7 day a week 24 hour a day basis. This would require a minimum of 15 Correctional Officer I male and 7 Correctional Officer I female. These persons would be supervised by 5 Correctional Officer II's acting as shift supervisors. The administration segment of the institution would require a Superintendent and an Assistant Superintendent. The housekeeping functions would be supervised by a Cook and a Maintenance Mechanic III. A Secretary would provide necessary clerical support within the institution. Program would be handled by a Probation Officer II and an Education Specialist. Such a compliment would provide a facility similar to the regional facilities now operated by the State in Fairbanks and Juneau.

The remaining figures presented in the budget are extracted from known operating cost of the facility as envisioned and represent an approximate 10% increase over operating costs of the similar type facility in the Fairbanks area. No note is made as to the possiblity of debt retirement connected with the capitalization of such a facility. Past experience indicates $250,000 per year would be a realistic figure for debt retirement of a $3,000,000 plant.

Re: House Bill No. 485

Dear Representative Jackson:

House Bill No. 485 is an act creating an Alaska Commission on Judicial, Legislative and Executive Remuneration. Proposed AS 44.19.895 states that among the duties of the commission are determining the appropriate salary levels for Legislators; Justices and Judges of all courts; and the Governor, Secretary of State, Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners of the principal administrative departments, and Directors of the major divisions of these departments. The question arises if the commission should not be empowered to determine the appropriate salary level for the Public Defender.

The Public Defender Agency is within the office of the Governor, however it is not a principal department nor is the Public Defender a director of a major division of a principal department. Your consideration of including the Public Defender as one of the state officials whose salary is determined by the commission is requested.

March 5, 1969

Hon. Chaney Croft, Member

State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Croft:

Your letter of March 1, 1969 was received, and in it you referred to a proposed budget for public defender legislation which I prepared at the request of Senator Terry Miller, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Before answering your specific questions, I must explain that the budget which I prepared for Senator Miller was a very rough estimate, prepared in haste due to immediately pending committee hearings. Since that time I have done a more detailed analysis of the various cost factors of the bill and can more adequately answer your questions and those of the respective judiciary and finance committees.

In my original program for personnel, which was not completely arbitrary, I estimated that nine attorneys would be required. They were to be located as follows: 2 in Juneau, 1 in Ketchikan, 3 in Anchorage, 2 in Fairbanks and one, the Chief Public Defender, not located in the submitted draft.

This was based upon the number of court appointed attorneys in the various locations during the calendar year 1968. They were as follows:

Anchorage District and Superior	184 appointments
Juneau District and Superior	74 appointments
Fairbanks District and Superior	83 appointments
Nome District and Superior	19 appointments
Ketchikan District and Superior	39 appointments

The above represents a total of 418 appointments of counsel for indigent defendants. It is estimated that this will increase with the caseload at an average of 22% per annum, and should cover only those types of cases in which court now appoints counsel. By that we mean that the court appoints counsel normally in felony cases both for preliminary hearings and trials. Occasionally the court will appoint counsel in serious misdemeanor cases but this constitutes less than 5% of the total appointments.

In answer to your question as to whether the recovery factor of the bill would be important, we can only say that our experience in recovery has been almost nonexistent. The National Legal Aid and Defenders Program has also reported that this feature in public defender acts has been most ineffective.

As I intend to send a copy of this letter to both Senator Miller and Representative Barry Jackson, I might as well further clarify my estimate of rental of facilities for these agencies, inasmuch as I apparently overestimated this cost figure by a substantial amount.

Assuming that the Chief Public Defender's Office will require 700 square feet and that a maximum rental should be no more than 55¢ per square foot, his space should come to $4,600.00 rather than the $8,500.00 estimated. Assuming that the Anchorage office will need 1,000 square feet at 55¢ per square foot, this figure will come to $6,600.00 as opposed to the $16,000.00 estimate. Assuming that the Juneau office will require 750 square feet at 45¢ per square foot this facility should cost $4,000.00 as opposed to the $9,000.00 estimate. Assuming that the Ketchikan office will require 350 square feet at 45¢ per square foot, this item would be approximately $2,000.00 as opposed to the estimated $6,000.00. If the Fairbanks facility were to require 750 square feet at 55¢ per square foot, this cost would be approximately $5,000.00 as opposed to the $10,000.00 estimate. If it is necessary to have a facility at Nome then it should be figured roughly at the same cost rate as Ketchikan. It would, therefore, seem that I had overestimated the rental items in the proposed budget by some $22,500.00. I would point out however, that if the office were expanded to provide representation to indigent misdemeanor defendants, then for every additional attorney and secretary there would be required an additional 250 square feet.

The aforesaid items are my own opinions gathered from my own somewhat limited research. However, I would not believe that they are very far off.

It is hoped that these additional figures will be of some benefit to you and the appropriate committees studying the public defender bills.

Sincerely,

Robert H. Reynolds

Re: Public Defender Agency,
Supplemental appropriation.

Dear Representative Jackson:

This letter is the report your committee requested January 22, 1970, concerning the bills for compensation of court appointed attorneys which are obligations of the agency pursuant to AS 18.85.130. The agency has requested a supplemental appropriation of $46,100, $15,000 of which is designated to pay court appointed counsel. The agency submitted its request for a supplemental appropriation on November 5, 1969.

On the enclosure is the list of outstanding bills, amounts, and to the best of my ability a listing of the dates the bills were received.

From the $260,000 appropriation to the agency in the 1969-70 budget the following amounts for court appointed counsel have been paid: $10,931.94 for appointments before July 1, 1969 and $9,466.02 for appointments after July 1, 1969, for a total of $20,397.96.

To date bills have been received but not paid in the amount of $10,268.90 for appointments before July 1, 1969, and in the amount of $5,744.50 for appointments after July 1, 1969 for a total amount owed of $16,013.40.

The total of the bills which had been received but not paid when the request for a supplemental appropriation was submitted was $3,343.93.

There are bills which have not been submitted, and it is impossible to estimate the exact amount which is outstanding.

If there is additional information which you or the members of your committee request, I shall try to furnish it promptly.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

CS HOUSE BILL NO. 485

This bill establishes a nine-man commission whose members are appointed by the executive, legislative, and judicial bodies to review and recommend the salaries for the top officials in each of the three branches of government. The bill calls for the nine-man commission to be appointed within thirty days of the enactment of this bill and that said commission is to report to the Governor by November 10. The Governor may then make changes in the recommendation but the final recommendation shall be made public twenty days after receipt of the commission's report. The salary recommendations of the commission become law unless the House and Senate by a concurrent resolution turn down the commission's report within the first thirty days of the session.

This bill sets up a commission similar to and largely modeled upon the federal commission on federal pay scales.

In addition to this report, the commission shall make a report to the Governor and the Legislature as to its recommendations for pension and retirement programs for legislative, executive, and judicial officers. The pension and retirement recommendations are only advisory and would require action on the part of the Legislature and Governor to become law.

As required by the U. S. Supreme Court's decision in Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 US 618, 89 S Ct 1322, 22 L ed 2d 600 (1969), this bill deletes in five welfare provisions the requirement that the recipient must have resided in the state for a period of time before applying for assistance. The bill inserts in its place a requirement that the applicant intend to continue residing in the state.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 494

This bill seeks to fill a gap in the existing law. There is presently a section dealing with simple assault and battery, and a section dealing with assault with a dangerous weapon, but no provision for the type of assault committed with extreme force but without what would usually be considered a dangerous weapon, such as shoes on a person's feet.

The original bill added the word "instrument" in the assault-with-a-dangerous-weapon section, and put the aggravated-assault provision in that section. The committee substitute leaves the word "instrument" in that section, deletes some language (distinguishing between jails and penitentiaries) which is inappropriate in the Alaska Statutes, leaves in that section the provision for a maximum penalty of 10 years imprisonment, deletes the minimum sentence, and proposes a new and separate section dealing with aggravated assault. The new section makes aggravated assault a felony, and, following traditional legal concepts, provides for a maximum penalty somewhat less than that for the more serious offense of assault with a dangerous weapon -- five years. Simple assault will still be a misdemeanor.

The committee substitute provides that if any death, accidental or otherwise, occurs while perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any of the crimes enumerated in Section B of the bill, any person involved in the perpetration of or in the attempt to perpetrate the crime will be guilty of first degree murder.

The original bill is more restrictive in that the death must have been caused by the person charged with first degree murder.

Representative Genie Chance

Dear Genie:

Enclosed is a bill and letter which are self-explanatory. What is our country coming to when people who have a conflict of interest, which is so obvious in this case, have the temerity to introduce laws of this sort? I really think it's scandalous. I think Mr. Borer, if anything, should be recalled. No wonder, the young people are creating havoc in our country today. They want a new deal and an honest deal. I know and trust that you will take this matter and consider it in a fair and judicious manner and see that this bill should not even get of the ground, let alon be even considered. Several hundred business people in this city alone, have already contracted for this credit card. Not only do they carry Bankamericard, but American Express, Standard Oil, Texaco and many others. You name them, everyone has credit cards. Who is this brilliant Statesman of the twentieth century introducing such an irresponsible bill? No wonder our country is in ferment and in some respects in rebellion, when people of Mr. Borer's character can introduce such obvious conflict of interest bills. By the tone of this letter, you can see I am really angered and in some ways saddend, that this man is permitted to legislate.

I hope that you will pass this around to several good thinking people who are fair minded as well.

Best regards and keep up the good work.

P.S. By the way, I am disappointed that the abortion bill did not pass. At least they should have left it up to the judgement of the people. No wonder Mr. Begich did not get elected to the Congress. Remind me not to vote for him in the future and or support him. I did not realize until now, who Mr. Begich really was (very little).

TO: All Alaska BankAmericard Merchant Members

FROM: E. O. Hansen

I am sending you a copy of House Bill # 497, introduced by Representative Richard Borer, of Cordova. Representative Borer is the Chairman of the Board and President of the First Bank of Cordova. Regrettably, the First Bank of Cordova is not on the BankAmericard plan, although they had certainly been invited to join. In any event, particular note should be made of the discriminatory bill, which, if passed, would be detrimental to every retailer in Alaska wanting to offer a charge account plan to his customers. The bill just recently left the committee after deleting the word "bank" as a facility advancing funds or discounting against merchant's accumulated receivables. This bill, while it is probably designed to reduce the competitive pressures by those offering strong charge account programs for the benefit of their own retailing establishments or member merchants, would put credit out of your business reach. Credit has become an inseparable part of our merchandising economy–the consumer needs it now more than ever, considering the credit crunch. For the number of benefactors of this special interest bill, probably fewer institutions then you can count on the fingers of one hand, they want to reduce, through such a proposal, the level of the economy down to their own low competitive level; they have struck out at any kind of credit or credit facility available to the Alaska consumer public through its local merchants.

I showed the unamended bill to several bankers and local retailers, after having received my copy. Their immediate and unanimous reaction was "ridiculous", "discriminatory", and even "ludicrous". Regardless of whatever you choose to term it, it actually got out of one committee with a "do pass", with one minor amendment designed to affect every credit grantor, be it a retailer, a national or local card plan, a bank accepting a pledge of your receivables. But most adversly effected will be the retailer, the Alaska retailer, and the Alaska consumer, both in serious need of credit. Every kind of credit has its price, be it called a discount, interest rate, a service charge, or a fee. Those rates are changed by the local, national, and world wide competitive forces of supply and demand. If the available rate is legislated against, the supply simply diminishes.

We urge that you contact your legislators in Juneau and emphasize that this bill and bills of its type are not in the interests of Alaska business or the consumer public.

HB 533

STATE OF ALASKA
THE LEGISLATURE
LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

POUCH Y - STATE CAPITOL
JUNEAU, ALASKA 99801

February 26, 1970

M E M O R A N D U M

TO: House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Hayden Kaden, Legislative Counsel HK

SUBJECT: Constitutionality of HB 533

It is my opinion, based on a very limited amount of research, that there are possible constitutional problems which could be raised in regard to this bill. The issue here is whether the effect of this bill is to place qualifications on the holding of legislative office in addition to those qualifications provided for under Art.II of the Alaska Constitution.

"The holding of public office is a privilege which is extended upon such conditions as the people in their sovereign capacity may decide. Ordinarily, holding public office is not an inalienable right guaranteed by the United States or Alaska Constitutions. However, the state legislature may not change the qualifications for a public office where the state constitution has not specifically provided that the legislature has the power to change or add to the qualifications. In such cases eligibility for these offices is a constitutional right." (1963 Opinions of the Attorney General No. 6.) There is no authority in the Alaska Constitution for the legislature to change the qualifications for holding legislative office.

The cases researched seem to give effect to the legal maxim: "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." (The mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another thing.)

Although I came across no cases directly in point with the statutory provisions in HB 533, there is one case which dealt with a similar statutory provision. In Burroughs et al. v. Lyles, 181 SW 2d 570, the court determined that a statute providing that no person elected or appointed to an executive or administrative public office for a term of more than two years may be eligible for nomination or election to another office the term of which begins before the expiration of the term of the original office unless he first resigns was void as imposing an additional test of eligibility than is prescribed by the constitution.

The Burroughs case like all of those researched deals with the qualifications to hold office. "Qualification" seems to mean the same as and is used interchangeably with "eligibility". The implication being that all that is spoken to is the seeking of office and not the qualification or eligibility to continue to hold office. However, it is doubtful that this implication is one which would distinguish the situation under HB 533 from that under Burroughs.

Art. II, sec. 2 of the Alaska Constitution sets out the qualifications for a legislator: "A member of the legislature shall be a qualified voter who has been a resident of Alaska for at least three years and of the district from which elected for at least one year, immediately preceding his filing for office. A senator shall be at least twenty-five years of age and a representative at least twenty-one years of age." Sec. 5 of the same article sets out disqualifications for legislative office: "No legislator may hold any other office or position of profit under the United States or the State. During the term for which elected and for one year thereafter, no legislator may be nominated, elected, or appointed to any other office or position of profit which has been created, or the salary or emoluments of which have been increased, while he was a member. This section shall not prevent any person from seeking or holding the office of governor, secretary of state, or member of Congress. This section shall not apply to employment by or election to a constitutional convention."

Because the Constitution has set out the qualifications and disqualifications of legislators and has not provided for legislative change or addition to these qualifications and disqualifications, none may be made by the legislature. The issue then revolves around whether providing for the automatic resignation of a legislator who files for statewide office is an additional qualification or disqualification. Because I found no cases directly in point, I could not resolve this issue satisfactorily. It is my personal opinion that this is an additional qualification, i.e., in order to serve a complete term a legislator may not be a statewide candidate; or it is an additional disqualification, i.e., a legislator is disqualified from continuing to hold office by filing for statewide office.

Under the present operation of the constitution, no legislator may hold any other office or position of profit under the United States or State. Therefore if elected to a statewide office, a legislator must resign his legislative seat. Sec. 5, art. II provides further that sec. 5 does not prevent any person from seeking or holding a statewide office. The implication is that a legislator may seek statewide office while holding his legislative office without having to resign if he loses the statewide election.

Another approach to a resolution of the issue is to determine the intent of the Constitutional Convention in drafting sec. 5, art. II of the Alaska Constitution. The original language for sec. 5, relevant to the issue at hand, as proposed by the Legislative Branch Committee was as follows: "No legislator or other elective or appointive officer of this state shall file or run for election to any other state office until his services have been terminated, but a member of one house of the legislature may be nominated and elected to the other house."

(Part 6, Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings, Committee Proposal No. 5, p. 2.) This language clearly provides that a legislator must resign before he can run for any other state office. On the floor of the convention, the sentence was further amended to add "or the Congress of the United States" after the word "office". The discussion on the floor on the section showed clearly that the intent of the body was to prohibit a legislator from retaining his seat while running for statewide office. (pp. 1581 - 1587, Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings)

Unfortunately, the language quoted above, which would have disposed of the issue at hand, was left out of the final draft of the Constitution. We are left to conjecture as to the reason for this. I could find no discussion on the deletion of the wording. This could mean several things, including the following: (1) an oversight occurred on the part of the convention; (2) the language was removed by the style and drafting committee because it was felt that the language as it presently reads does the same thing as the original proposed language; or (3) it was intentionally deleted because the convention had second thoughts on the whole matter and decided to allow legislators to run for statewide office while holding their legislative seats. I believe that (2) could not have been what happened since no reasonable reading of sec. 5 could be held to prohibit a legislator from running for statewide office and retaining his seat.

Therefore, in regard to the constitutional issues raised in this memorandum, I have been unable to resolve them satisfactorily either way. Without more extensive research, I feel unable to either conjecture or speculate on a satisfactory disposition of the constitutional issues raised by HB 533.

Re: H.B. 571 - Requiring jury instruction in district court

Dear Barry:

The purpose of H.B. 571 is excellent; you've known my opinion about instructing juries for a long time.

But the rules referred to have not been the "Magistrate Rules" since about 1967, they are the "District Court Rules", despite the failure of the Michie Company to show the change except spottily. See, for instance, Rule 7 of the District Court Rules regarding sentence appeals, and Order No. 101 of the Supreme Court promulgating Rule 7. "District Court" should be substituted for"Magistrate" throughout the bill.

I believe that magistrates should not be empowered to instruct. The magistrates need have no education or training for their jobs, and at best, three or four of them could instruct adequately. The rest would do incredibly bad jobs. If the defendant consents to trial before a magistrate, the magistrate may try the case, with a jury. (AS 22.15.120)

I would like to hear recordings of how the consents are obtained. One hears about the magistrate who places the defendant under oath, questions him about the charge, then enters a plea based on those answers. One hears about the magistrate who clears the courtroom of the defendant's friends before taking up the case against him--and other stories, probably not fabrications.

What I am actually proposing, I suppose, is the repeal of sub-section 6 of AS 22.15.120. I think that all misdemeanors other than local ordinance violations should be tried by a traveling district judge, and the Rules of Administration provide for just that.

HOUSE BILL NO. 582

This bill is primarily a response to the Alaska Supreme Court's decision in Speidel v. Alaska, 460 P 2d 77 (1969), which held a portion of AS 28.35.026(b) unconstitutional. In dealing with the failure to return a rented motor vehicle, the bill changes the definition of "wilfully neglects" to require the element of conscious action, and makes one who wilfully neglects to return a vehicle guilty of a misdemeanor, while retaining the felony provisions for a person who fails to return the vehicle and "secretes, converts, sells or attempts to sell" it.

Barry:

Your CS for HB 587 is attached. It adds a section providing for boroughs setting closing hours for licensed premises. It does not, however, include in sec. 3 (AS 04.10.300) the exception of third class boroughs. The request to put that in appears to be based on the assumption that third class boroughs do not have authority to approve liquor licenses inasmuch as this might be considered a non-areawide power. However, AS 04.10.270 (as amended last year) authorizes organized boroughs to approve liquor licenses. Presumably this is an authorization irrespective of the non-areawide limitations on second as well as third class borough powers under AS 07.15. I discussed this with Greg who says he raised the point last year; however, the bill, as enacted, remained silent on the relationship between AS 04 and AS 07. (Perhaps AS 04.10.270 should be amended to clear this up.) At any rate, if a third class borough does have the authority to approve liquor licenses there would seem to be no reason why its residents should not have the right to protest the issuance under AS 04.10.300. And if a third class borough does not have that authority there would seem to be no need to mention its residents in AS 04.10.300.

Representative Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee

Juneau, Alaska

Dear Representative Jackson:

When I appeared before the Judiciary Committee earlier this week concerning House Bill 610, you requested that I report to you any developments at the University in relation to personnel management that might be pertinent. I asked Mr. Max Hullinger, Vice President for Finance and Comptroller, under whose direction the Central Personnel Office has been established, to check into what is being undertaken on campus, and what has been established since the adoption of the Cresap, McCormick and Paget report on management, copies of which were made available to the Legislature in the Spring of 1968.

His report indicates that considerable progress has been made with further arrangements of improvement in process. Mr. Hullinger has just come to us after serving ten years at Purdue University in the capacity of Comptroller, and since he has an excellent background in personnel management matters, including fringe benefits, I am looking forward to giving him an opportunity to study the University of Alaska situation in depth, and to suggest modifications, in the next several months.

I am confident that the University's present personnel management program is a good one for our particular situation, and that it certainly can be and will be improved.

Sincerely yours,

William R. Wood

encl.

Recognizing the need to improve the personnel policies and practices of the University, the Board of Regents contracted with the management consulting firm of Cresap, McCormick and Paget to evaluate its programs.

The report dated January, 1968, indicated the following:

1.) There was no personnel office for the nonacademic employees.

2.) Limited recruiting services were available and most operating departments on campus hired their own personnel.

3.) Vacation and sick leave policies were inconsistent and varied between classification of staff and period of appointment.

4.) The University contributed $5.50 per month for each employee towards the premium on the health and accident insurance. There was no life insurance program.

5.) Secretarial, technical and clerical positions were classified under similar State of Alaska job classification and were compensated accordingly. Manual craftsmen and NARL were compensated under a separate classification scheme. However, there were few written job descriptions, and minimal effort to relate job classifications to the requirements and responsibilities of the individual job.

The University of Alaska's unique environment makes unusual demands on personnel and has a direct effect on the personnel turnover rate. The high wage level in Alaska, particularly in Fairbanks, requires that the University make a particular effort to achieve the maximum productivity from its personnel. The following significant improvements have been either implemented or recommended:

1.) A Director of Personnel Services and a personnel office was established and assigned responsibility for the development and implementation of a complete program of personnel administration for the University and fulfill the following functions:

A. Develop and maintain a manual of uniform personnel policies and procedures.

B. Conduct a program of job evaluation to classify positions according to their duties and responsibilities.

C. Develop and present a nonacademic employee compensation plan and conduct periodic compensation surveys for use in revising the plan.

D. Conduct a central recruiting service for all vacancies in accordance with approved employment standards and job specifications.

E. Establish and maintain central personnel records.

F. Counsel employees concerning personnel policies, practices and programs.

2.) The Board of Regents at its meeting May 15-17, 1969, recommended "that the Assembly and the administration initiate a study in depth of the present program of 'fringe' benefits and submit a report for desirable additions and modifications for the Board's consideration. Whatever such benefits may be, they should be related to the salary program. Attention should be given to technician and classified grades, as well as to professional ranks."

3.) A new and improved employee health insurance was developed and implemented with an increase in the University contribution from $5.50 to $10.00 per month per enrolled employee.

4.) A life insurance program was implemented with the University contributing 50 cents per month per enrolled employee. In their October, 1969, meeting the Board of Regents increased this contribution to $1.00. This amount purchases $2500 of insurance with the option of the employee purchasing up to the highest thousand of his annual salary. The combination of the two cannot exceed $20,000.

5.) Uniform treatment of all employers both professional and classified in respect to staff benefit.

6.) Establishment of a grievance committee for the physical plant.

7.) The Policies and Curriculum Committee of the University Assembly, chaired by Dr. K. B. Mather, has submitted their report entitled "Goal and Planning at the University of Alaska" which recommends general improvements in the various policies and procedures relative to personnel programs.

8.) The Fringe Benefits Subcommittee of the University Assembly is in the process of conducting a poll of all employees to determine their fringe benefit preferences. Results of this study will provide the committee with sufficient information to develop a fringe benefit proposal for consideration by the assembly, after which it will be forwarded for consideration and approval by the Board of Regents.

9.) The University Assembly considered and passed a recommendation to increase the period of time that an employee has to use his accrued annual leave once the maximum has been accumulated.

In addition, the Vice President for Finance and Comptroller, recently employed, has been delegated the responsibility to recommend improvements in the staff benefit and personnel procedures for the University. In the process of being implemented are:

1.) An affirmative action plan for the equal employment opportunity program.

2.) Formalized procedures for termination of and handling grievances of University classified personnel.

Another program being developed is a Classified Personnel Advisory Committee composed of employees from the non-professional staff, chaired by the Vice President for Finance and Comptroller and with the Coordinator of Personnel acting as Secretary. The Vice President for Finance and Comptroller will represent this group in the Assembly.

A University is a center of learning, new ideas and concepts. It strives for equal opportunity for all employees. To single out one group of employees of the University and place them under a different system of selection, promotion, training and compensation outside the control of the corporate administration would greatly reduce their flexibility, authority and operational capacity.

We have been improving our personnel policies and other than offering more days of vacation, a shorter work week and higher pay, have for the most part developed an adequate personnel program for classified employees that is equal to that being provided to similarly classified state employees and, more important, one that is compatible to the program which is being provided to other staffs of the University.

UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA

Volume 1 -- DISCUSSION

University of Alaska

March, 1970

Dr. Bruce Gordon
Vice Chairman, University Assembly
University of Alaska
College, Alaska 99701

Dear Dr. Gordon:

Attached herewith is the report of the University Policies and Curriculum Committee entitled 'Goals and Planning at the University of Alaska'.

The report is in two parts, Volumes I and II. Volume I, the background discussion, has not been read or approved by other members of the committee, although several members contributed the material for substantial portions of it. In another sense, however, it represents a much more comprehensive view than any one committee could contribute, having drawn from a wide range of campus opinion as well as much that has been written about universities and their problems. Volume I does not call for any action by the Assembly. To make it part of the documentary record of the Assembly would be appropriate, however. (I will also place on record the file of all substantial comments received from members of the staff in response to the two 'working papers' of the committee which were distributed during 1969. Some of these comprise significant 'minority reports' on one aspect or another.)

Volume II lists the specific recommendations drafted by the committee as a whole. We commend these to you and trust that they will be brought before the Assembly for action in the near future.

On behalf of the committee(s), may I remark that the assignment has been an informative and challenging experience for all concerned. Needless to say, the present document is a progress report rather than making any pretensions to finality; many issues have been left unexplored and time will, of course, evolve a multitude of new issues and problems. An academic institution without problems would be dull indeed! Next year's committee will find plenty of work.

With my personal thanks to you for the inestimable worth of your encouragement throughout,

Sincerely,

K B. Mather

Keith B. Mather, Chairman
Policies and Curriculum Committee

15 Matters Relating to Non-Professional Staff

The non-professional staff tend to be the forgotten people of the campus--and the semi-professionals tend to be semi-forgotten. Yet without them the campus would be chaos. To be without one's secretary for a day is hardly to be compared with dispensing with two professors! If the senior technician is home sick the equipment is probably sick too. When the drain stops up the whole place is uninhabitable until the plumber arrives. The non-professional employees of the University of Alaska are not only an essential part of the community (besides the administration, faculty and students), they are also far more numerous than the administration and faculty combined and they constitute a large percentage of the annual salary budget. Figures for the University are as follows:*

Professionals	446	(34%)
Semi-professionals	83	(6%)
Non-professionals	393	(30%)
Part-time & hourly	395	(30%)
Total	1,317	(100%)

The faculty and administration thus account for about a third of the University employment. In terms of budget, the combined semi-professional and non-professional segment comprises about 40 percent of the total annual payroll ($12.2 million).*

Although non-professional employees are not represented on the Assembly--and rightly so; its Constitution provides "official representation for all professional members of the staff, students, and alumni"--some consideration of policy affecting them is permissible because (again quoting the Constitution) the Assembly is concerned with "matters which affect the general welfare of the University," and the non-professional staff certainly does. (They probably affect it much more than the alumni do, although the latter are represented on the Assembly.) At present, non-professional employees have neither spokesman nor representation in any way in the University system.

* Figures supplied by the Comptroller's Office (A. B. Frol) as of September, 1969. Exact numbers will fluctuate somewhat month by month, especially in the (non-contract) non-professional and part-time categories. No attempt has been made to reduce the part-time to equivalent full time. The intent is merely to display the numbers of persons having involvement with the University as employees.

Beyond sensing the need for more attention to this area and suggesting a few pointers to future action, the Policies and Curriculum Committee has not considered itself competent to explore the issues in depth. A more specialized committee might well look into it, either on behalf of the Assembly or the administration--or jointly. The following points, set forth in note form, have come to mind:

(i) Non-professional employees might fare better and treatment in various sections of the campus might be more equitable if some sort of representative body existed. Essentially, they need a spokesman and a channel through which to voice their opinions.

(ii) Conditions of hire need to be more clearly defined in many areas of campus employment. Job descriptions would be helpful. (This and related aspects are referred to in the Cresap, McCormick and Paget report.)

(iii) Overtime work receives different treatment in different administrative units. To some extent this involves the source of funds, e.g. grants and contracts must contain specific clauses to the effect before overtime can be paid. A special problem involves field work and travel, when a man may be 'on the job', at least in principle, continuously.

(iv) The difference in treatment of professionals and non-professionals working side by side on the same job can cause friction. The non-professional is eligible for overtime payment or compensatory time, but the professional is not.

(v) University regulations on compensatory time are unrealistic. The requirement that a person take compensatory time during the following week is absurd; intensive programs may last several weeks (or even months) and the person cannot be spared.

(vi) In general, salary scales of non-professional employees need to follow closely the scales of non-university employees of similar skills, e.g. the State classified scale for local trades and crafts. These employees are generally among the lower-paid persons on the campus and are most vulnerable to the impact of a rising cost of living. However, across-the-board adoption of the State scale can be disadvantageous to the most skilled University employees, for which the State scale fails to make provision. Highly specialized technicians (e.g. logic circuitry) are most affected by this.

Just what HB 610 attempts to do.

(vii) The University could apply the semi-professional contract more widely than it now does.* The employment security of the most senior non-professionals is, in fact, comparable with that of the faculty,

---

* It is understood that an ad hoc committee has been established by the president to clarify the terms of semi-professional ('notice of appointment') contracts--such matters as eligibility criteria, salary scales, fringe benefits, etc.

and a contract would give them recognition and added status--and avoid the restrictive (and often inapplicable) State pay scale. This would also avoid overtime and compensatory time problems.

(viii) Some administrative units adopt a liberal policy towards allowing its employees (professional and non-professional) a limited amount of time off to attend classes, without loss of pay. The policy should be revised and standardized--in the direction of liberalism. That an employee sees fit to advance his education is in the interests of the University, and it can also amount to a significant fringe benefit.

(ix) The retirement program in effect for non-professionals is less advantageous than the Teachers' Retirement System for professionals (e.g. a surviving spouse does not benefit).

(x) Non-professionals have no equivalent of tenure. Should there be a non-academic freedom to match academic freedom? And does 'due process' extend to the non-professional ranks? Admittedly the cases are different, but the point warrants a little thought.

(xi) For the senior, tried and trusty servants of the University, should some sort of equivalent of the sabbatical leave scheme be contemplated? There are many walks of non-professional life for which a year or so of 'self renewal' would be beneficial to the individual and the institution. As a start, for example, sabbaticals might be extended to the semi-professional staff.

(xii) Medical costs can be extremely burdensome, and severest upon the lower-paid non-professionals. All full-time employees are, of course, eligible to participate in the University's Group Insurance Plan, but this has limitations. The eyes and the teeth are not generally treated as part of the anatomy, so dental and optometric expenses are excluded. However, some bidders on the University's plan have been willing to include dental and optometric care at a rate which adds about 80% to the monthly premiums of employees. This was one of the options rejected by employees recently, probably because of the increased premium. Yet one wonders how much the teeth and eyes are neglected among families in consequence. The problem again points to salary scales as root cause.

(xiii) As the University develops 'fringe benefit' schemes for the faculty (see Section 3.37), the non-professional staff should not be neglected. Free tuition for the children would be one of the most helpful and sympathetic gestures. We have a 'concern for all' (Gardner again), and the children of non-professionals are as important as any others.

3.37 The Outer Fringe

Grouped together here are a number of items which, conceptually, are peripheral to other issues raised in Section 3--hence the title.*

* Borrowed from the book 'The Outer Fringe: Faculty Benefits Other Than Annuities and Insurance', by M. H. Ingraham with the collaboration of F. P. King (The University of Wisconsin Press, Madison, 1966).

The items are on the fringe of matters within the province of this committee and are under study by other committees of the University Assembly. They are included in the report only because, as practicalities all too often do, they will help determine the capacity of the University to translate any plan into action:

(i) Faculty housing: A basic premise of this report is that quality counts--quality in everything that the University undertakes. Quality in action requires quality in people. Therefore the University, in competition with all other U.S. institutions of higher learning, must attract and retain a faculty of high talent. Faculty recruitment in the Fairbanks area has traditionally been hindered by Fairbanks itself, as a town, especially the availability of adequate housing. The Fairbanks community has failed in the recent past, as in the more distant past, to provide the housing in quality and quantity that befits the faculty. Therefore it is reasonable to assume that the community is unlikely to provide housing in the future. It follows that the University can legitimately and ethically make a goal of solving its own housing problem. The University has a choice between attempting a solution via on-campus or off-campus housing. The faculty prefers on-campus housing, and has long preferred it, with excellent reasons. (The decision by the University, some years ago, to forswear further on-campus housing entirely flouted faculty opinion and was regrettable, if not reprehensible. But the policy seems now to be reversing again.) The University should seek ways to provide additional on-campus housing in a quantity consistent with the present demand and the projected growth in faculty numbers. In addition, every effort should be made to find ways to provide low-interest loans to members of the faculty who wish to build their own homes, either off or on the campus. If the administration, which is now actively concerned with the matter, is able to solve this primary problem of housing, in which the issues are relatively clear, the way may be open to resolve some of the more complex dilemmas raised in this report. No recommendations are called for in the present report--the needs are too obvious and compelling--but specific suggestions as to the best courses of actions would be appreciated.

(ii) A faculty club: This may seem a minor (even frivolous) requirement of the University to follow 'faculty housing', which has aroused such intense feeling. Yet the club would serve a purpose which a mature institution will recognize. The case for a faculty club is stated succinctly in the opening paragraph of Chapter 9 of the book by Ingraham and King* concerning faculty benefits in general:

"Where there is a well-developed faculty club it is generally believed to make a real contribution to the recruitment and retention of the faculty. Yet its use should not be judged chiefly on this basis. Social and intellectual contacts within the faculty help to unify the institution, give its faculty members broader intellectual viewpoints, emphasize the college as against a too great absorption in the department, and lead to those informal discussions of academic policy from which wisdom is derived to a much greater extent than from formal faculty meetings."

The compelling reason for a faculty club at the University of Alaska is the lack of intellectual contact between the staffs in the various departments and institutes. Though often treated as a 'fringe benefit', this is an inadequate conception of its role. The most valuable purpose it can serve is as a meeting place; it is important in a university, more so, perhaps, than in any other organization, that the disciples of the disciplines rub shoulders, learn what each is doing, share each other's problems, expose half-baked ideas to the critical scrutiny of other minds, and occasionally evolve new ideas. There are, of course, many other conveniences of having a faculty club on campus--it might be residential (a boon to visitors); it may, if the regulations so provide, become a meeting place for faculty wives (anything which makes wives happier in Alaska is not to be discounted); it can serve as a place for committee meetings, etc., banquets and dinners can be held there (i.e. functions of one kind or another which are the trappings of academe). But these lesser reasons should not confuse the primary intent--that engineers mix with psychologists, historians with chemists, geologists with linguists, and administrators with those administered to.

3.38 Continuing Self-Evaluation

The process of formulating goals and objectives is too demanding of time and concentrated effort to be repeated frequently by the University. On the other hand, self-questioning and innovation and a willingness to adapt to the changing order of things (student needs, new approaches to teaching, new fields of study opening up, research trends in older fields, shifting societal interests and pressures, etc.) are the animating flame of self-renewal. The University must find a way to mould into its very structure the potential for change, criticism, dissent, free-thinking radicalism--the potential for the constant quest, yet knowing there is no Holy Grail.

Numerous issues have been raised in the present report, some leading to positive recommendations, others merely indicating the need for continuing study, and many others again have merely been hinted at in passing. Ongoing studies by the new Policies and Curriculum Committee of the Assembly will have plenty of subject material, for the University of Alaska, and all our universities, live in stirring times. Often decisions are very difficult--the imponderables of the scale of values--but all too often they have to be made. Yet even when one draws back--procastinates perhaps--in the face of seemingly overwhelming complexity, something revitalizing has been gained by the very process of self-scrutiny. For an institution, like a person, it is often the experience of travelling, rather than of arriving, which is the stimulus. The University must always keep facing the issues.

University Assembly, University of Alaska

GOALS AND PLANNING

AT THE

UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA

Volume 2 -- RECOMMENDATIONS

University of Alaska

March, 1970

Recommendation 44 -- Non-professional staff

RECOGNIZING THAT ITS NON-PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES ARE ESSENTIAL TO EFFECTIVE DAY-TO-DAY FUNCTIONING, THE UNIVERSITY SHOULD ACTIVELY SEEK WAYS TO IMPROVE THEIR WORKING CONDITIONS. AMONG OTHER APPROACHES, THE UNIVERSITY SHOULD EXPLORE THE EXTENSION OF SEMI-PROFESSIONAL CONTRACTS TO A WIDER RANGE OF THE MOST SENIOR EMPLOYEES.

Comments:

(1) Non-professional employees tend to be overlooked as part of the campus community. Numerically they amount to 60 percent of the total employees of the University (including part-time and hourly personnel); in terms of the budget, they account for nearly 40 percent of the total annual payroll (statistics as of September, 1969). The technical, clerical, secretarial and other non-professional members of the staff are essential, in the sense that the University cannot function effectively without them.

(2) When considering the lot of professional employees, the University should not forget its non-professionals. Matters such as terms of hire, overtime payment, compensatory time, salary scales, time off to attend classes, the retirement program, 'due process', the possibility of sabbaticals, the equivalent of tenure, group health insurance, and free education for their children are important elements in the well-being of the non-professional staff. Some kind of representative body, and a spokesman, might assist their cause.

(3) The latter part of the recommendation suggests that the semi-professional contract ('Notice of Appointment') be extended to more of the most senior non-professional staff, with the implication that their employment is secure.

Further Testimony on HB 610
Before House Judiciary 5/5/70
by: Julie H. Isaac

I do have some additional points I would like to present relative to the effect of HB 610 which I did not cover last week:

1. RECIPROCITY BETWEEN UNIVERSITY AND OTHER STATE AGENCIES. A person leaving University employment and going to work for another State agency would not be able to transfer his accumulated sick of annual leave without this legislation---and the same holds true for those joining the University from other state agencies.

I understand an attempt is being made to bring City and Borough employees under such a reciprocal arrangement with State agencies so they will not lose their leave. When I came to work for the University, I left approximately 70 days' accumulated leave with the School District. If this type of reciprocity is being considered by our governments on the local level, surely it is all the more reason why we should have it between the University and State agencies — the same government level.

2. EXPANSION OF AVAILABLE MANPOWER POOL. This legislation would expand the available manpower pool for both the University and the State. It will also give the Legisla[illegible]e some opportunity to insure that the employees' rights are safe-guard[illegible] by bringing us back into a system that is regulated by the Legislature.

3. COMPETITION WOULD BE LESSENED. By having two systems, such as we now have, it puts the University and other State agencies in competition, rather than having them comparable. Now they are competing rather than working from the same man-power resource.

4. ENDORSEMENT BY ASEA: I will quote the following excerpts from a lett a letter to Bill Ray from Ernie Lahn, Executive Secretary, ASEA, dtd. March 17: ".... an excellent move and improve the University of Alaska personnel program substantially. The University has attempted for several years now to develop some sort of merit system for its employees and to the best of my knowledge they have not been able to come up with a comprehensive program of this magnitude.....By bringing the State personnel plan into the University, we would be adopting a "known quantity" rather than allowing the University to develop an unknown and unmeasured program.....I have had many co contacts with employees of the University who have voiced the need for a comprehensive personnel program, preferably one that would have its basis in law.... As you are aware, the Division of Personnel opened an area office in Anchorage last year that has proven to be of substantial assistance to both employees and management of State government. It has been especially effective in recruitment of new state employees for the Anchorage area. In past months the Division has considered a similar operation for Fairbanks and one of the major drawbacks has been the smaller number of state employees in Fairbanks as compared with Anchorage."

I checked this out with Pat Hunt, Director of Division of Personnel, and it is true that they are contemplating hiring a personnel officer an analyst for Fairbanks, and he felt that if this legislation passes, it would be mandatory. He felt cooperative working arrangements could be made with the University with regard to testing, etc. To carry out the enforcement portion of the Personnel Act, as it would effect the University, from Juneau, he felt would be burdensome and most difficult, but with an area office and adequate personnel, he didn't foresee any unsurmountable problems. He terminated our conversation by saying, "the State agencies have Ph.D.'s, too."

5. MATHER REPORT - FRINGE BENEFIT POLL. Last week I called your attention to the Mather report and the statement that "At present, non-professional employees (60% or 788 of total U. employees) have neither spokesman nor representation in any way in the University system." A week ago, we received at our Station for distribution to all professional personnel a four-page analysis of SB 455, pertaining to Change in Teachers' Retirement Contribution. I haven't seen any such study made relative to HB 610 and how it would effect University employees. (This is Mr. Wilson's copy----Heaven only knows who or which of the Mr. Wilsons this is---he is not an employee at the Douglas Station. Maybe this is one of the reasons why we don't have a personnel system.)

We also received last week a poll regarding a proposed fringe benefit package....I will read some excerpts from it, but totally lacking is any reference to HB 610. ..... I cry discrimination now---can you imagine what the hue and cry would be were some of these to be put in effect.

6. Lastly, may I call your attention to SECTION 6, ARTICLE XII of our STATE CONSTITUTION: "The legislature shall establish a system under which the merit principle will govern the employment of persons by the state." No matter how you slice it, the University of Alaska is a STATE UNIVERSITY, and is operated by STATE EMPLOYEES.

As I said last week, I feel quite alone in this effort, but I think you have heard enough by now to know what is morally right, legal and just---and I ask your support in giving the non-professional employees of the University equity with other State employees.

Thank you again.

Re: HOUSE BILL No. 610

Judiciary
House ~~Finance~~ Committee
~~3-12-70~~ 4-29-70 -- Julie Isaac

My name is Julie Isaac. I reside at 410 "D" Street in Douglas, Alaska. I appear before you at my own request and represent no one but myself----~~X~~ although I am a drop-out alumna of the University of Alaska, an employee of the Douglas Station, Institute of Marine Science, and a member of the local Community College Advisory Board.

The effect of House Bill 610 is to place a large number of University employees, especially those in clerical, secretarial, maintenance and general operating personnel on the same basis as other comparable State employees.

I think this is important for the following reasons: FIRST AND FOREMOST, I DO NOT BELIEVE IN DISCRIMINATION---between State and University employees or in any groups. ~~[illegible]~~ The State employees work a 7½-hour work day and get eleven holidays a year. This past year, they received two extra---when President Eisenhower died and the Astronauts' Moon Walk. University employees work an 8-hour day and receive only 6 holidays. We did get the "moon-walk" holiday, but we were unable to observe the day of mourning set aside for Gen. Eisenhower.

I feel there is gross discrimination in this area alone. Other agencies of our State, such as the Legislative Affairs, State Courts System, Department of Law, etc., are also in the exempt service ~~and do not come under the State Personnel Act,~~ but it does not mean that they do not observe the same work day and holidays as those State Employees who are not exempt. ~~Just how often do you see in your papers items about the backlog of cases facing our courts today---you'd think they would be putting in the extra thirty minutes a day or foregoing some of the holidays.~~

Not

I certainly am not aware of any great backlog of work that requires University employees to put in the longer hours or fewer holidays. Incidentally, we were notified on Christmas Eve ~~this year~~ that we would have the day off on Friday after the 25th , as well as the ~~[illegible]~~ Friday following New Year's.

Needless to say, we took them without question-----but who wants a "hand-out" when they could have been designated as "legal holidays" at the beginning of the fiscal year. I don't want Dr. Wood or the administration "giving" me something that I feel has been earned.

I won't belabor this point further, but there are other areas in which discrimination also exists for example, the amount of accumulated annual leave---State employees, 60; University---30; Sick leave for State---unlimited; University---90 days. As to salary increases---whatever the percentage was for last year's increase, University employees received a 6% increase, I believe----because supposedly the U. of A. budget was not adjusted to accommodate the same increase as for State employees.

I am aware of Dr. Wood's opposition to the bill---I had about an hour and a half session with him and the Board of Regents following their session with you. We talked of many things. While I am reluctant to say anything that would appear to discredit him, I will only say that no one is more disappointed than I at his unwillingness to accept or lend support to a measure that is designed to help the University.

As I pointed out to him and the Regents, this Bill does more than equalize hours and holidays----it makes the University competitive with private industry and government in attracting and holding capable, qualified and competent employees. It would bring the employees under the merit system, they would be hired from a personnel roster and know exactly what their duties and responsibilities are----they would also have a sense of job security. Those of us who are considered non-professional or non-contractual can be fired at will. I know of no appeals board where I would take a grievance.

Dr. Wood stated that every employee has a job description-----someone may have lead him to believe this, but we have none at the Douglas Marine Station.

Under the State Merit System or Personnel Act, there would be an accurate accounting of leave records----signed by a supervisor, instead of leaving it to the integrity of the employee, who may or may not report his time off for annual or sick leave, where it is merely written in a book without any official authorization----but subsequently reported to the University on the monthly timesheets ----- or bi-weekly timesheets. Incidentally, since the first of the year, those of us in the lower echelons are paid twice monthly without any apparent reason whatever. We were perfectly content with our monthly salaries and were geared to managing our finances on a monthly basis. When then was brought up in my talk with the Regents, Dr. Wood said all employees had been polled and the majority wished to be paid every two weeks. Maybe this was just another break-down in communications, as we WERE NOT POLLED. We merely received an announcement, telling us how it was going to be----and about three months later, it happened.

To my knowledge, the University does not have a Personnel Manual or Personnel Rules, as such. I may be mistaken. We have a large collection of memos, directives, etc., but nothing in a concise form that spells out the general rules and regulations pertaining to personnel or the University.

Now I would like to address myself to a letter received from Chmn. William Hensley, House Health, Welfare & Education Committee, dated Feb. 26: ..... "It is my understanding that the U. of A., particularly Dr. Wood, is very much in opposition to the measure. He indicates that there are such wide-ranging activities of the University that it is almost impossible to deal with the non-academic people under the classified system. He indicated that people up on Ice Island and very remote stations and the scattered activities of the University, would make it difficult to live on if the legislation is enacted."....

First, I'll talk about the wide-ranging activities and the classified system. What Dr. Wood probably hasn't had pointed out to him that by lifting the University employees out of the exempt service, does not mean that he or his administration cannot draw a line somewhere (the same as all the State Departments do for Assistant Directors and above) and put the higher-ranking employees in the exempt or partially exempt service. This can be done by University regulations. They would follow a uniform salary schedule, observe same holidays and workdays as other employees, but would serve at the pleasure of the appointing authority.

Granted, the University does have wide-ranging activities, but hardly as wide as the Dept. of Public Works for example. The University does have the Research Ship operations-----which under the Personnel Act would make the operations comparable to the State Ferry System. Then there is our Marine Station here at Douglas, or you might also include in this category, the experimental station at Palmer, or the fur farm at Petersburg. I know of no students that come in for special consideration that would necessitate adhering to the academic calendar established at College. There have been two summer institutes at the Douglas Marine Station and during such time, schedules could still be worked out to accommodate the teaching staff and administrative staff.

Remoteness is not a factor. Dr. Wood speaks as though the University situation is unique. Why doesn't he talk to the Fish and Game personnel who have people, scientific and otherwise, scattered all over the State; or the State Department of Education, which operates schools in some pretty remote areas of this great land. While their teaching staff is bound to a contract, to teach so many days a year, it doesn't mean that the maintenance or clerical personnel [redacted] take their holidays [redacted] while the teacher is on duty. The holidays are worked out at the convenience of the school admin. They might pick up their holidays during the long Christmas vacation, spring holidays or at the end of the school year.

Gentlemen, what disturbs me about this proposed legislation is the knowledge that Dr. Wood and the Regents have the power ---almost--- to correct the same ills through University regulations---yet they have not been moved to do so, although ~~from fair~~ they are working on it.

In response to a claim I submitted for overtime on the Friday worked following Thanksgiving, pointing out that Sec. 14.50.020. Definition of Public Schools for Purposes of Statehood Act defines the University as a "public school" and the school holidays included Thanksgiving and the day immediately following, I received a memorandum from the Executive Officer of the Institute of Marine Science, which reads in part: "The University Assembly has before it a request to modify the existing fringe benefit~~x~~ package. I am Chairman of the Committee to write the new proposal and such a proposal will certainly cover such things as more paid holidays, more annual leave, more sick leave, etc." Later, I asked a visiting scientist from College what progress was being made---with a shrug of his shoulders, he said: "Oh that wasn't a serious committee."

Well, I am indeed serious. I want to see ~~my~~ our State University grow and prosper , but I also want to see it operating on a business like basis with competent, dedicated ~~my~~ State Employees.

Thank you.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 623

This committee substitute provides that an attorney who meets the personal requirements of our reciprocity statute but whose home state does not reciprocate in admitting Alaska attorneys may be admitted to practice law here if he passes a one-day attorney examination given by the Alaska Bar. It is understood that this attorney examination will differ from the regular bar examination in that its primary function will be to test the out-of-state attorney's familiarity with Alaska law. The original bill would have abolished reciprocity and required this examination of all out-of-state attorneys.

Fairbanks, Alaska

Dear Barry:

A few years ago the State of Alaska enacted legislation allowing professional practices to incorporate under certain conditions. One of these conditions was that no corporation could practice more than one profession. The Attorney General at that time ruled that architecture and engineering were two seperate professions and therefore a firm practicing architecture and engineering could not incorporate. As you are aware, many firms throughout the United States practice architecture and engineering jointly. As a matter of fact, all three of the leading firms in Fairbanks practice both professions.

You are also undoubtedly aware that licencing of architects and engineers is handled by a single State board. Since the two professions are so closely allied, and since it is very common for firms tp practice them jointly, I feel that it would be wise to amend the Alaska law to allow for this. I sure would appreciate hearing from you in this regard. If you have any questions that I can answer, please let me know.

Yours truly,

PHILLEO ENGINEERING AND

Dear Barry,

It is my understanding that a bill has been introduced which is now in your committee concerning the incorporation of two or more professions. I am particularly interested in seeing the present law revised to permit the incorporation of architects and engineers. It is essential that these two professions be permitted to practice under a single corporation inasmuch as each profession compliments and supplements the other in the planning and design of buildings, structures and facilities. It is recognized throughout the lower 48 states that architecture and engineering are professions which do and must work together in planning and design. The majority of the firms throughout the United States are architectural/engineering offices and utilize consulting engineering offices for civil, structural, mechanical, electrical, acoustical and other engineering services.

Obviously, all professionals practicing in a corporation must be licensed to practice in their respective profession and this would not be changed where both architects and engineers are officers and stockholders of the corporation.

I sincerely believe that corporate practice of combined architects and engineers would in no way adversely affect the public nor change any of the accepted standards and practices that exist where complete architectural and engineering services are utilized.

I would permit those architects and engineers that are now practicing as a partnership or association, as well as those who may desire to do so, to incorporate and participate in the same benefits as other professions that are corporations.

Sincerely,

Lee S. Linck

HB 626

JUSTIFICATION FOR AN AMENDMENT TO THE PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION ACT WHICH WOULD CLARIFY THE RIGHT OF OTHERWISE QUALIFIED PROFESSIONALS TO FORM BUSINESS CORPORATIONS

The Professional Corporation Act (AS 10.45) was adopted in 1968 to clarify the right of professional persons of all kinds to form corporations for the conduct of their profession. The U.S. Internal Revenue Service had for years disputed the right of certain professions, particularly attorneys, to reap the tax benefits of marketing their services through the corporate form. The professional corporation act was adopted to provide specific state authorization for professional corporate practice.

In point of fact, the availability of corporate organization to professions and the attitude of the Internal Revenue Service varied widely from one profession to another even before 1968. In particular the architect and engineering profession had made wide use of the more convenient form of business incorporation without objection.

When the State adopted the professional corporation act, designed primarly for lawyers, it used too broad a brush, leaving the unfortunate inference that the "professional" corporation was the only form available to all classes of regulated professionals, ignoring the wide variations in practice and ethical custom among them.

By leaving the business corporation open to professionals where not prohibited by the ethics of the profession or by board regulation, this amendment cures this accidental defect in the 1968 act.

Dear Barry:

This is just a brief letter on the general subject of professional corporations and the provisions therefor as they relate to our firm.

A couple of days ago I was talking to Ed Philleo and he told me that he had just heard that the legislature was getting ready to do some overhauling of the regulations on professional corporations.

I am wondering whether or not this is the case and, if it is, whether or not it might be possible to explore the possibility of an appropriate modification which would permit architectural engineering firms to incorporate professionally. As we have discussed before, there is a fairly close relationship in this type of business between the architectural and the engineering professions. In fact within the scope of professional regulations and state law, a civil engineer can design a building and many of the things which the civil engineer does are legally performable by an architect. In practice the two professions in a firm such as ours work very closely together.

Accordingly the state regulations appear to be unreasonable. One of the mechanical and electrical consulting firms in Anchorage is a professional corporation and while the three partners are all engineers, they are divided between the disciplines of mechanical and electrical engineering. These are two entirely different disciplines with different educational background and requirements, different licensing examinations and different professional applications. Electrical engineers do not perform mechanical engineering and mechanical engineers do not perform electrical engineering. Yet because they are both called engineers, they can form a professional corporation.

Well, Barry, I hope you are enjoying the battle down in Juneau. If there is any overhauling under way, as I have heard, on the professional corporation act I would appreciate any available information on what is happening.

With best regards,

Dear Mr. Jackson:

We have been asked by Mr. Loren H. Lounsbury of Hewitt V. Lounsbury & Associates to review and comment on HB-626 and SB-477.

Our only reservation in the proposed amendment would be who has the responsibility in determining, and in what manner it is to be determined that each person actually performing the service must be licensed by the appropriate regulatory board.

It is our opinion that certain professional groups, when not contrary to their ethics, may now corporate under AS 10.05. However, the proposed amendments in HB-626 and SB-477 would clarify the Professional Corporations Act in this regard. Filing as a business corporation would allow other than licensed professional persons to become stockholders, directors or incorporators.

Sincerely,

John K. Robertson

Subject: House Bill No. 626
Senate Bill No. 477

Dear Sir:

It is my understanding that you are a member of the Commerce Committee and are presently studying the subject proposed legislation, and I would like to present a few comments regarding its passage.

I am now, and have been for the preceding three years, a member of the Alaska Board of Architects/Engineers and Examiners. During that time I have been extremely active in the business of administering the present Architects and Engineers Registration Act. I should state at this time that the law as it now exists is, in my personal opinion, grossly inadequate in providing the proper protection to the public that is warranted with the recent tremendous impact of the oil industry on our state. Many violations are occurring every day and the Board is virtually powerless to do anything about it. I am, therefore, extremely interested in corrections to the present act, or better yet, an entirely new act that will have some teeth in it and truly protect the public health, welfare and safety of the people of the state.

This preceding year, prior to the convening of the legislature, various architectural and engineering societies throughout the state were holding numerous meetings, hurriedly attempting to prepare recommendations for a new and more adequate engineering and architectural law. At our latest meeting it was pointed out that because of the extremely heavy load that would be on the legislature this session, and particularly with the impact of the oil industry leasing, we would have very little, if any, success in passage of such an act. We, therefore, felt it would be better to finalize on a new registration act that would be thoroughly thought out and presented for the next year's legislature.

It is my personal opinion, and that of many of my colleagues, that the present proposed change in this legislature would do a tremendous amount of harm and no good. Our present problem is that while certain penalties are listed for violation of the present law there are no teeth in the act, in that we must work through the Attorney General and have had absolutely no luck to date in controlling violations through this channel. The present proposal to permit corporate practice would really throw the thing wide open to an overwhelming number of transients who couldn't care less about the public welfare, health and safety in the State of Alaska, but are thinking only of making a bundle and clearing out - avoiding any penalties for the obvious and deliberate violations. I am not referring to ethical firms whose expertise is invited. I personally have no feelings one way or the other regarding corporate practice of engineers as long as adequate safeguards are provided. I believe that this is essential, and I also feel quite strongly that the new change in the act as worded is absolutely useless. Along this line, I would like to point out that our sister state, Washington, has in her Corporation Act for engineers a quite detailed procedure to provide adequate safeguards. I am taking the liberty of enclosing a copy of this for your perusal.

I am strongly recommending that, for this legislature at least, the subject of Corporate Practice in Engineering and Architecture not be permitted, and that at the next legislature an adequate and all-encompassing new act be presented that will be of real benefit to the State of Alaska.

Very truly yours,

Paul B. Crews

The board, for reasons it deems sufficient, may reissue a certificate of registration to any person whose certificate has been revoked, provided three or more member of the board vote in favor of such issuance. A new certificate of registration to replace any certificate revoked, lost, destroyed, or mutilated may be issued by the director of licenses, subject to the rules of the board, and a charge of one dollar shall be made for such issuance.

Any person who shall feel aggrieved by any action of the board in denying or revoking his certificate of registration may appeal therefrom to the superior court of the county in which such person resides, and after full hearing, said court shall make such decree sustaining or revoking the action of the board, as it may deem just and proper. [1947 c 283 § 14; Rem. Supp. 1947 § 8306-31. Prior: 1935 § 11; RRS § 8306-11.]

18.43.120 Violations and penalties. Any person who shall practice, or offer to practice, engineering or land surveying in this state without being registered in accordance with the provisions of the chapter, or any person presenting or attempting to use as his own the certificate of registration or the seal of another, or any person who shall give any false or forged evidence of any kind to the board or to any member thereof in obtaining a certificate of registration, or any person who shall falsely impersonate any other registrant, or any person who shall attempt to use the expired or revoked certificate of registration, or any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this chapter shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

It shall be the duty of all officers of the state or any political subdivision thereof, to enforce the provisions of this chapter. The attorney general shall act as legal adviser of the board, and render such legal assistance as may be necessary in carrying out the provisions of this chapter. [1947 c 283 § 15; Rem. Supp. 1947 § 8306-32. Prior: 1935 c 167 § 14; RRS § 8306-14.]

18.43.130 Excepted services—Fees. This chapter shall not be construed to prevent or affect:

(1) The practice of any other legally recognized profession or trade; or

(2) The practice of a person not a resident and having no established place of business in this state, practicing or offering to practice herein the profession of engineering or land surveying, when such practice does not exceed in the aggregate more than thirty days in any calendar year: Provided, Such person is legally qualified by registration to practice the said profession in his own state or country in which the requirements and qualifications for obtaining a certificate of registration are not lower than those specified in this chapter; or

(3) The practice of a person not a resident and having no established place of business in this state, or who has recently become a resident thereof, practicing or offering to practice herein for more than thirty days in any calendar year the profession of engineering or land surveying, if he shall have filed with the board an application for a certificate of registration and shall have paid the fee required by his chapter: Provided, That such person is legally qualified by registration to practice engineering or land surveying in his own state or country in which the requirements and qualifications of obtaining a certificate of registration are not lower than those specified in this chapter. Such practice shall continue only for such time as the board requires for the consideration of the application for registration; or

(4) The work of an employee or a subordinate of a person holding a certificate of registration under this chapter, or an employee of a person practicing lawfully under the provisions of this section: Provided, Such work does not include final design or decisions and is done under the direct responsibility, checking and supervision of a person holding a certificate of registration under this chapter or a person practicing lawfully under the provisions of this section; or

(5) The work of a person rendering engineering or land surveying services to a corporation, as an employee of such corporation, when such services are rendered in carrying on the general business of the corporation and such general business does not consist, either wholly or in part, of the rendering of engineering services to the general public: Provided, That such corporation employs at least one person holding a certificate of registration under this chapter or practicing lawfully under the provisions of this chapter; or

(6) The practice of officers or employees of the government of the United States while engaged within the state in the practice of the profession of engineering or land surveying for said government; or

(7) Nonresident engineers employed for the purpose of making engineering examinations; or

(8) The practice of engineering in this state by a corporation or joint stock association: Provided, That

(a) Such corporation shall file with the board an application for certificate of authorization upon a form to be prescribed by the board and containing information required to enable the board to determine whether such corporation is qualified in accordance with the provisions of this chapter to practice engineering in this state;

(b) Such corporation shall file with the board a certified copy of a resolution of the board of directors of the corporation which shall designate a person holding a certificate of registration under this chapter as responsible for the practice of engineering by said corporation in this state and shall provide that full authority to make all final engineering decisions on behalf of said corporation with respect to work performed by the corporation in this state shall be granted and delegated by the board of directors to the person so designated in said resolution: Provided, That the filing of such resolution shall not relieve the corporation of any responsibility or liability imposed upon it by law or by contract;

(c) Such corporation shall file with the board a designation in writing setting forth the name or names of a person or persons holding certificates of registration under this chapter who shall be in responsible charge of each project and each major branch of the engineering activities in which the corporation shall specialize in this state. In the event there shall be a change in the person or persons in responsible charge of any project or major branch of the engineering activities, such changes shall be designated in writing and filed with the board within thirty days after the effective date of such changes;

(d) Upon the filing with the board of the application for certificate for authorization, certified copy of resolution, affidavit and designation of persons specified in subparagraphs (a), (b), and (c), of this section the board shall issue to such corporation a certificate of authorization to practice engineering in this state upon a determination by the board (1) that:

(i) The by-laws of the corporation contain provisions that all engineering decisions pertaining to any project or engineering activities in this state shall be made by the specified engineer in responsible charge, or other responsible engineers under his direction or supervision;

(ii) The application for certificate of authorization states the type, or types, of engineering practiced, or to be practiced by such corporation;

(iii) A current certified financial statement accurately reflecting the financial condition of the corporation has been filed with the board and is available for public inspection;

(iv) The applicant corporation has the ability to provide through qualified engineering personnel, professional services or creative work requiring engineering experience, and that with respect to the engineering services which the corporation undertakes or offers to undertake such personnel have the ability to apply special knowledge of the mathematical, physical, and engineering sciences to such professional services or creative work as consultation, investigation, evaluation, planning, design and supervision of construction for the purpose of assuring compliance with specifications and design, in connection with any public or private utilities, structures, buildings, machines, equipment, processes, works or projects.

(v) The application for certificate of authorization states the professional records of the designated person or persons who shall be in responsible charge of each project and each major branch of engineering activities in which the corporation shall specialize;

(vi) The application for certificate of authorization states the experience of the corporation, if any, in furnishing engineering services during the preceding five year period and states the experience of the corporation, if any, in the furnishing of all feasibility and advisory studies made within the state of Washington;

(vii) The applicant corporation meets such other requirements related to professional competence in the furnishing of engineering services as may be established and promulgated by the board in furtherance of the objectives and provisions of this chapter; and

(2) upon a determination by the board based upon an evaluation of the foregoing findings and information that the applicant corporation is possessed of the ability and competence to furnish engineering services in the public interest.

The board may in the exercise of its discretion refuse to issue or may suspend and/or revoke a certificate of authorization to a corporation where the board shall find that any of the officers, directors, incorporators, or the stockholders holding a majority of stock of such corporation has committed misconduct or malpractice as defined in RCW 18.43.105 or has been found personally responsible for misconduct or malpractice under the provisions of subsections (f) and (g) hereof.

The certificate of authorization shall specify the major branches of engineering of which the corporation has designated a person or persons in responsible charge as provided in subsection (8) (c) of this section.

(e) In the event a corporation, organized solely by a group of engineers, each holding a certificate of registration under this chapter, applies for a certificate of authorization, the board may, in its discretion, grant a certificate of authorization, the board may, in its discretion, grant a certificate of authorization to such corporation based on a review of the professional records of such incorporators, in lieu of the required qualifications set forth in this subsection. In the event the ownership of such corporation shall be altered, the corporation shall apply for a revised certificate of authorization, based upon the professional records of the owners; if exclusively engineers or, otherwise, under the qualifications required by subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) hereof.

(f) Any corporation authorized to practice engineering under this chapter, together with its directors and officers for their own individual acts, are responsible to the same degree as an individual registered engineer, and must conduct its business without misconduct or malpractice in the practice of engineering as defined in this chapter.

(g) Any corporation which has been duly certified under the provisions of this chapter and has engaged in the practice of engineering shall have its certificate of authorization either suspended or revoked by the board if, after a proper hearing, the board shall find that the corporation has committed misconduct or malpractice as defined in RCW 18.43.105. In such case any individual engineer holding a certificate or registration under this chapter, involved in such malpractice or misconduct, shall have his certificate of registration suspended or revoked also.

(h) All plans, specifications, designs and reports when issued in connection with work performed by a corporation under its certificate of authorization shall be prepared by or under the responsible charge of and shall be signed by and shall be stamped with the official seal of a person holding a certificate of registration under this chapter.

For each certificate of authorization issued under the provisions of subsection (8) of this section there shall be paid an initial fee of five dollars and an annual renewal fee of one hundred dollars.

(9) The practice of engineering and/or land surveying in this state by partnership: Provided, That

(a) A majority of the members of the partnership are engineers or architects or land surveyors duly certified by the state of Washington or by a state, territory, possession, district or foreign country meeting the reciprocal provisions of RCW 18.43.100: Provided, That at least one of the members is a professional engineer or land surveyor holding a certificate issued by the director of licenses under the provisions of RCW 18.43.070; and

(b) Except where all members of the partnership are professional engineers or land surveyors or a combination of professional engineers and land surveyors or where all members of the partnership are either professional engineers or land surveyors in combination with an architect or architects all of which are holding certificates of qualification therefor issued under the laws of the state of Washington, the partnership shall file with the board an instrument executed by a partner on behalf of the partnership designating the persons responsible for the practice of engineering by the partnership in this state and in all other respects such person so designated and such partnership shall meet the same qualifications and shall be subject to the same requirements and the same penalties as those pertaining to corporations and to the responsible persons designated by corporations as provided in subsection (8) of this section.

For each certificate of authorization issued under the provisions of this subsection (9) of this section there shall be paid an initial fee of one hundred dollars and an annual renewal fee of twenty-five dollars.

18.43.140 Injunctive relief, proof—Board's immunity from liability—Prosecutions. The board is authorized to apply for relief by injunction without bond, to restrain a person from the commission of any act which is prohibited by this chapter. In such proceedings, it shall not be necessary to allege or prove either that an adequate remedy at law does not exist, or that substantial or irreparable damage would result from the continued violation thereof. The members of the board shall not be personally liable for their action in any such proceeding or in any other proceeding instituted by the board under the provisions of this chapter. The board in any proper case shall cause prosecution to be instituted in any county or counties where any violation of this chapter occurs, and shall aid in the prosecution of the violator. [1959 c 297 § 3.]

18.43.150 Disposition of fees. All fees collected under the provisions of RCW 18.43.050, 18.43.080 and 18.43.130 shall be divided and twenty percent paid into the State general fund and eighty percent paid into the professional engineers' account of the State general fund, which account is hereby established to be used to carry out purposes and provisions of RCW 18.43.050, 18.43.060, 18.43.080, 18.43.100, 18.43.110, 18.43.120, 18.43.130, 18.43.140 and all other duties required for operation and enforcement of this chapter. [1965 1st ex.s. c 126 § 3.]

18.43.900 Short title. This chapter shall be known and may be cited as the "Professional Engineers' Registration Act." [1947 c 283 § 19.]

18.43.910 Severability—1947 Act. If any section of this chapter shall be declared unconstitutional or invalid, such adjudication shall not invalidate any other provision or provisions thereof. [1947 c 283 § 17.]

18.43.920 Severability—1959 Act. If any section of this act or part thereof shall be declared unconstitutional or invalid, such adjudication shall not invalidate any other provision or provisions thereof. [1959 c 297 § 8.]

18.43.930 Severability—1961 Act. If any section of this act or part thereof shall be adjudged unconstitutional or invalid, such adjudication shall not invalidate any other provision or provisions thereof. [1961 c 142 § 6.]

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 626
Senate Bill No. 477

Dear Representative Jackson:

The conversion of professional corporations t business corporations will---in Alaska as elsewhere---result in the loss of control of professional activities by the professional practitioners, should the corporations become controlled by stock, or at the board of director level, or at the officer level, by non-professionals.

Therefore, please, for the good of the tate, the public welfare and safety (under which the professior are regulated and the practitioners registered), and the integrity of the professions, VOTE NO on this legislation or any similar legislation---which will or could allow a "corporati rather than an "individual" to "practice a profession."

The foregoing, while a personal opinion, is the result of twelve years review of the laws pertaining to engineering, and active participation as a partner in an engineering partnership, and as a principal in a business corporation supplying services to engineers.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Subject: House Bill 626

I strongly urge and request your support of the subject bill.

The modern full-service engineering organization is a well integrated team consisting of many professionals and others of varied training. A single design team faced with the complex problems of today's society may require not only engineers, but planners, economists, attorneys and many others.

Present Alaska law prohibits stock ownership by these latter people in a corporation providing engineering services. This destroys a powerful key incentive to those members of the team who are not engineers. House Bill 626 will correct this inequity while continuing to guarantee the overall supervision and participation in any given project of the registered practicing engineer.

Thank you for your consideration.

Dear Barrie and Terry:

It has been reported to me several times in the last couple of years that it is difficult to obtain insurance for corporations in Alaska indemnifying Officers and Directors against lawsuits, the costs of lawsuits, judgments and penalties for acts performed by Officers and Directors of the corporation, or for acts performed by an Officer or Director or a principal person of one corporation who, at the request of that corporation, is also serving on the Board or as an Officer of another corporation.

This condition also makes it difficult for corporations such as banks to get members of their boards of directors to serve on boards of directors of other corporations. This is just one example -- there are many.

This problem has been recognized in other states which have amended their statutes. One of the most recent is the Delaware amendment which has been adopted into the Delaware corporation law. I enclose a brief explanation of the Delaware amendments and copies of the Delaware amendments as now incorporated in the Delaware statute.

If you should see fit to introduce such amendatory legislation, and I am requesting that one of you do introduce it either as your personal Bill or as a committee Bill if your committee agrees with you; the sections of the Delaware statute would replace Sub-section (15) of 10.05.009 Alaska Statutes.

Very truly yours,

Paul F. Robison

STATUTORY PROVISIONS FOR INDEMNIFICATION OF OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS

It is apparent that if corporate directors or officers are forced to bear litigation costs despite the propriety of their acts on behalf of the corporation, qualified and responsible persons will refuse to serve in such capacity. This is especially true in the case of directors who do not have controlling interest in the corporation and who frequently serve without compensation. Even directors who are compensated generally are not paid enough to enable them to be self-insurers against the risk of becoming involved in a suit. Therefore, it is in the interest of the corporation to provide indemnification for loyal directors and officers. Besides protecting the directors and officers personally, the promise of indemnification encourages them to seek to vindicate the corporation and its management in the eyes of the investing public. It is probable that the indemnification of corporate directors also has the effect of reducing shareholders' strike suits. Thus, it is in the interest of the public to provide indemnification for loyal directors and officers.

Realizing the above-mentioned benefits derived from the existence of proper indemnification of directors and officers, the State of Delaware recently amended its corporation laws. The present provision is well written both from the viewpoint of the public and from the viewpoint of the corporation. The statute is intended to encourage active business participation by directors and officers and, at the same time, to protect the shareholders of the corporation and the public in general.

Delaware Corporation Law Section 145

Sub-section a grants the corporation the power to indemnify directors and officers who are threatened to be made a party to any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding. The director or officer must be threatened to be made a party by reason of the fact that he is or was a director or officer of the corporation or was serving at the request of the corporation as a director or officer of another business entity. Indemnification includes any expenses, judgments, fines or amounts paid in settlement which the director or officer actually and reasonably incurs in such action, suit or proceeding. The director or officer must show that he acted in good faith and in a manner he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation. With respect to any criminal action or proceeding, the director or officer must show that he had no reasonable cause to believe that his conduct was unlawful. The termination of any proceeding or any pleas entered by the directors or officers shall not create a presumption that the director or officer did not act in good faith, in a manner which he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation or in a manner which would have reasonably caused him to believe that his conduct was unlawful.

Sub-section b grants the corporation the power to indemnify a director or officer threatened to be made a party to any threatened, pending or completed action or suit by or in the right of the corporation to procure a judgment in the corporation's favor. This section deals with derivative suits. The threat to be made a party must be caused by the fact that the director or officer is or was a director or officer or is or was serving at the request of the corporation as a director or officer of another business entity. A director or officer may be indemnified against expenses actually and reasonably incurred by him in connection with the defense or settlement of such action or suit. The director or officer must show that he acted in good faith and in a manner he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation. The corporation may not indemnify the director or officer for expenses incurred in any claim, issue or matter in which the director or officer is adjudged to be liable for negligence or misconduct in the performance of his duty to the corporation, unless a court of equity deems that the director or officer is fairly and reasonably entitled to indemnity.

Sub-section c states that to the extent that the director or officer has been successful in the defense of any action, suit, proceeding, claim, issue, or matter referred to in sub-section a or b, the director or officer must be indemnified against the expenses actually and reasonably incurred by him in connection therewith.

Sub-section d states that indemnification by the corporation is authorized only upon an affirmative determination that the director or officer is entitled to such indemnification because he has met the applicable standards of conduct set forth in Sub-sections a or b. Determination may be made (1) by the Board of Directors by a majority vote of a quorum of disinterested directors, or (2) by independent legal counsel in a written opinion, or (3) by the stockholders.

Under Sub-section e the director or officer may obtain expenses incurred in defending a civil or criminal action, suit or proceeding in advance of the final disposition of said action, suit or proceeding. The advance payment may be obtained if authorized by the Board of Directors in the specific case, upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the director or officer to repay such amount unless it is ultimately determined that the director or officer is entitled to be indemnified by the corporation.

Sub-section f states that the indemnification provided by Section 145 is not exclusive of other rights to which the directors and officers may be entitled under any bylaw, agreement, vote of stockholders or disinterested directors or otherwise. Additional indemnification may be granted to the director or officer for actions taken in the director's or officer's official capacity and for actions taken in another capacity while holding such office. Indemnification provided by Section 145 shall continue as to a person though he has ceased to be a director or officer and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors and administrators of such person.

Sub-section g allows the corporation to purchase and maintain insurance on behalf of any person serving in the capacity of director or officer against liability asserted against him and incurred by him in such capacity, or arising out of his status as such.

§ 145. Indemnification of officers, directors, employees and agents; insurance

(a) A corporation shall have power to indemnify any person who was or is a party or is threatened to be made a party to any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative (other than an action by or in the right of the corporation) by reason of the fact that he is or was a director, officer, employee or agent of the corporation, or is or was serving at the request of the corporation as a director, officer, employee or agent of another corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust or other enterprise, against expenses (including attorneys' fees), judgments, fines and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred by him in connection with such action, suit or proceeding if he acted in good faith and in a manner he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation, and, with respect to any criminal action or proceeding, had no reasonable cause to believe his conduct was unlawful. The termination of any action, suit or proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, conviction, or upon a plea of nolo contendere or its equivalent, shall not, of itself, create a presumption that the person did not act in good faith and in a manner which he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation, and, with respect to any criminal action or proceeding, had reasonable cause to believe that his conduct was unlawful.

(b) A corporation shall have power to indemnify any person who was or is a party or is threatened to be made a party to any threatened, pending or completed action or suit by or in the right of the corporation to procure a judgment in its favor by reason of the fact that he is or was a director, officer, employee or agent of the corporation, or is or was serving at the request of the corporation as a director, officer, employee or agent of another corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust or other enterprise against expenses (including attorneys' fees) actually and reasonably incurred by him in connection with the defense or settlement of such action or suit if he acted in good faith and in a manner he reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation and except that no indemnification shall be made in respect of any claim, issue or matter as to which such person shall have been adjudged to be liable for negligence or misconduct in the performance of his duty to the corporation unless and only to the extent that the Court of Chancery or the court in which such action or suit was brought shall determine upon application that, despite the adjudication of liability but in view of all the circumstances of the case, such person is fairly and reasonably entitled to indemnity for such expenses which the Court of Chancery or such other court shall deem proper.

(c) To the extent that a director, officer, employee or agent of a corporation has been successful on the merits or otherwise in defense of any action, suit or proceeding referred to in subsections (a) and (b), or in defense of any claim, issue or matter therein, he shall be indemnified against expenses (including attorneys' fees) actually and reasonably incurred by him in connection therewith.

(d) Any indemnification under subsections (a) and (b) (unless ordered by a court) shall be made by the corporation only as authorized in the specific case upon a determination that indemnification of the director, officer, employee or agent is proper in the circumstances because he has met the applicable standard of conduct set forth in subsections (a) and (b). Such determination shall be made (1) by the board of directors by a majority vote of a quorum consisting of directors who were not parties to such action, suit or proceeding, or (2) if such a quorum is not obtainable, or, even if obtainable a quorum of disinterested directors so directs, by independent legal counsel in a written opinion, or (3) by the stockholders.

(e) Expenses incurred in defending a civil or criminal action, suit or proceeding may be paid by the corporation in advance of the final disposition of such action, suit or proceeding as authorized by the board of directors in the specific case upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the director, officer, employee or agent to repay such amount unless it shall ultimately be determined that he is entitled to be indemnified by the corporation as authorized in this section.

(f) The indemnification provided by this section shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights to which those seeking indemnification may be entitled under any by-law, agreement, vote of stockholders or disinterested directors or otherwise, both as to action in his official capacity and as to action in another

State of Alaska
DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

TO: The Honorable Barry W. Jackson (Chairman)
The Honorable Tom Fink (Vice Chairman)
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska House of Representatives
Alaska State Legislature

DATE : March 31, 1970

FROM: Willis F. Kirkpatrick
Securities Examiner
Division of Banking, Securities,
Small Loans & Corporations
Department of Commerce

SUBJECT: HB-638

House Bill 638 - "An Act relating to the transfer or pledge of securities within a central depository system under the Uniform Commercial Code; and providing for an effective date."

The Act will enable Alaskan corporations that have their shares listed on national exchanges, to be eligible to have shares deposited in a central depository of the clearing corporation.

Exchange firms who are clearing members deposit securities with Central Certificate Service - CCS - and thereby create a balance in each stock eligible for the system, much as you do when you deposit money in your checking account at your bank.

All shares in the system are fungible. Share certificates are registered in the name of a common nominee - Cede & Co. - and held unendorsed by Stock Clearing Corporation or a custodian bank. Following a sale and upon instructions to deliver, the balance in the account of the selling broker is changed electronically to reflect the transaction. A corresponding change is simultaneously made in the account of the buying firm, and ownership is thus transferred by electronic bookkeeping entry while the certificate representing the shares transferred remains immobilized in the vault.

Banks are eligible for membership, and through their participation in CCS much can be done to simplify the troublesome COD deliveries required in institutional transactions. In time this program will be expanded to include more and more banks.

Section 1. AS 45.05.614 is amended to read

(d) the clearing corporation; and

(e) the custodian bank are self-explanatory.

Section 2. AS 45.05.664 is repealed and re-enacted to read

(a)(5) entries on the book of the clearing corporation can constitute delivery or ownership.

(b) the purchaser of a security may be noted as the rightful owner but that ownership may be a portion of a larger fungible bulk.

(c) the broker and the customer is entitled to "good delivery" and free from adverse claim. The purchaser is further protected to receive delivery from the broker. The transaction is between the customer and the broker and the customer is entitled to good delivery.

Section 3. AS 45.05 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Section 45.05.667. (a) The electronic bookkeeping entries of the clearing corporation constitute delivery between members when the security is

(1) in custody of the clearing corporation and subject to the corporations instructions

(2) is in bearer form (negotiable)

(3) is shown on the account of a transferor or pledgor on the books of the corporation

(b) transfers and pledges from one member to another are on a net basis and need not reference to name of registered owner or certificate numbers.

(c) the electronic entries are the same as "delivery" and is binding as to the pledgee or a secured party

(d) pledges or account transfers do not constitute a registration of shares by the company's registrar

(e) the clearing corporation is liable for the errors they make and also liable as to the results of the errors.

HOUSE BILL NO. 638

This bill proposes language recommended by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in its 1962 official text of the Uniform Commercial Code. Alaska's version of the U.C.C. is based on the 1958 official text.

The heart of this bill is Section 3, which adds a new AS section, the purpose of which is, according to the "official comments" accompanying the 1962 edition, to expressly authorize "a newly developing and commercially useful method of transferring or pledging securities on the organized securities markets, particularly among brokers and banks ....." This method allows for registration of share certificates in the name of a common nominee and then holding of them unendorsed by a stock clearing corporation or a custodian bank. As explained in part by Willis F. Kirkpatrick, Securities Examiner in the Alaska Department of Commerce, "Following a sale and upon instructions to deliver, the balance in the account of the selling broker is changed electronically to reflect the transaction. A corresponding change is simultaneously made in the account of the buying firm, and ownership is thus transferred by electronic bookkeeping entry while the certificate representing the shares transferred remains immobilized in the vault." (March 31, 1970, memorandum to the House Judiciary Committee.)

Section 1 of the bill adds definitions of two essential terms in Section 3. Section 2 of the bill, adding AS 45.05.664(a)(5) and 45.05.664(c) and rewriting 45.05.664 (b), takes the new method into account when specifying when"delivery" occurs in securities transactions.

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska

DATE : April 9, 1970

FROM: John K. Robertson, Director
Division of Banking, Securities,
Small Loans & Corporations

SUBJECT: H.B. 643
Amendments to the Alaska Banking Code

The following are brief summaries of each section of H.B. 643:

Sec. 1. AS.06.05.005 is amended by deleting certain language as it was originally adopted from the model banking code. This section is known as the "wild-card" statute and its purpose is to ensure a competitive balance between state and national banks. However, as it now stands, it is not as useful as it might be since it requires that any banking powers authorized by the department to maintain the competitive balance must be acted upon by the legislature by the close of the next session. It is suggested that time limit represented in "until the close of the next regular session of the legislature" be deleted. Of the six states having this type of statute, three have no time limit.

Sec. 2. AS.06.05.015 is amended by adding a new subsection defining bad debts. As we broaden the powers of state chartered banks, we must also concern ourselves with asset quality. Most other state banking codes, as well as the national banking law, contain statutory bad debt provisions.

Sec. 3. AS.06.05.025 is amended to clearly authorize the employment of an examination team and conduct whatever examinations are required in the discretion of the commissioner, including followup examinations for mergers or branch banks.

Sec. 4. AS.06.05.035 is amended to enable the department to charge and collect adequate examination and investigation fees.

Under the existing examination statutes (Sections .025 through .035), every examination or investigation performed results in a substantial loss to the department. Due to the increased examination responsibilities, and activities of the department, as well as the increasing number of new bank and branch applications, we feel that it is businesslike and appropriate to collect sufficient fees to offset the costs incurred.

Sec. 5. A new section covering leasehold and development loans is proposed. This section would permit banks to make loans, within certain limits, secured by first lien leaseholds. A leasehold loan is a type of real estate loan in which the borrower (lessee) is the holder, or owner of a leasehold estate, which is of sufficient qualility to warrant a lender accepting it as security for a loan. In other words, the borrower holds a long term lease, which together with the improvements provide security to the lender. Leasehold loans normally apply to hotels, office buildings, warehouses, service stations, apartment houses, and other similar commercial development. This method of lending is now being used extensively throughout the nation and should be made available to our state chartered banks.

Sec. 6. AS.06.05.207 is rewritten to allow a bank to make second mortgage real estate loans. This will permit our banks to serve customers who have a substantial equity in real property and avoid a rewrite of the first mortgage loan. Due to the loan/value ratios and amortization rates established, we believe that the concept is sound and also believe that it will provide a definite advantage over national banks.

This section is rather lengthy due to rearranging existing language for clarification, however, nothing was deleted or added except the provision covering second mortgages.

Sec. 7. A new section is proposed, allowing state chartered banks to make loans secured by forest tracts. We believe this is particularly important to banks and their customers located in areas where there is a significant and economically marketable timber resource. National banks may make such loans and the more modern state banking codes contain such a provision.

Sec. 8. A new section permitting banks to invest in a bank service corporation is proposed. A bank service corporation normally provides computerized bookkeeping and record keeping services to other banks, businesses, and the public. Such an investment is subject to examination and regulations by the department. Bank service corporations are quite common throughout the nation.

Sec. 9. The new section proposed would permit banks to acquire and lease at the request of the customer, both real and personal property. This enables the bank to offer broader services to its customers, relieving them of capital investment and providing tax advantages. The bank's investment in real and personal property under lease arrangements combined with other investments under Sec.230 is limited to an amount not to exceed the shareholder's equity. National banks may engage in leasing and the more modern state banking codes contain such a provision.

Sec. 10. It is proposed that AS.06.05.235 be rewritten to provide clarification and a broader definition for domestic bank holding companies. The definition (AS.06.05.540(9)) as it now reads, is very confusing and limits corporate ownership of bank stock to the controlling interest in one bank. We believe this is too restrictive and should be changed.

The proposed new section would require a company to register as a domestic bank holding company, if it owns 10% or more of an Alaska bank or banks. The term "company" includes a corporation, business trust, partnership, association, or other similar organizations. The language used in the proposed new section is sufficiently broad to recognize a registered bank holding company (Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, controlling two or more banks), provided there is compliance with the domestic qualifications under this section. We believe this type of organization is desirable if not vital to the smaller banks in this state for purposes of remaining competitive with the larger banks.

Sec. 11. This is a proposed new section covering various banking prac including issuing letters of credit, trade acceptances, banker's acceptances, and the sale of data processing services.

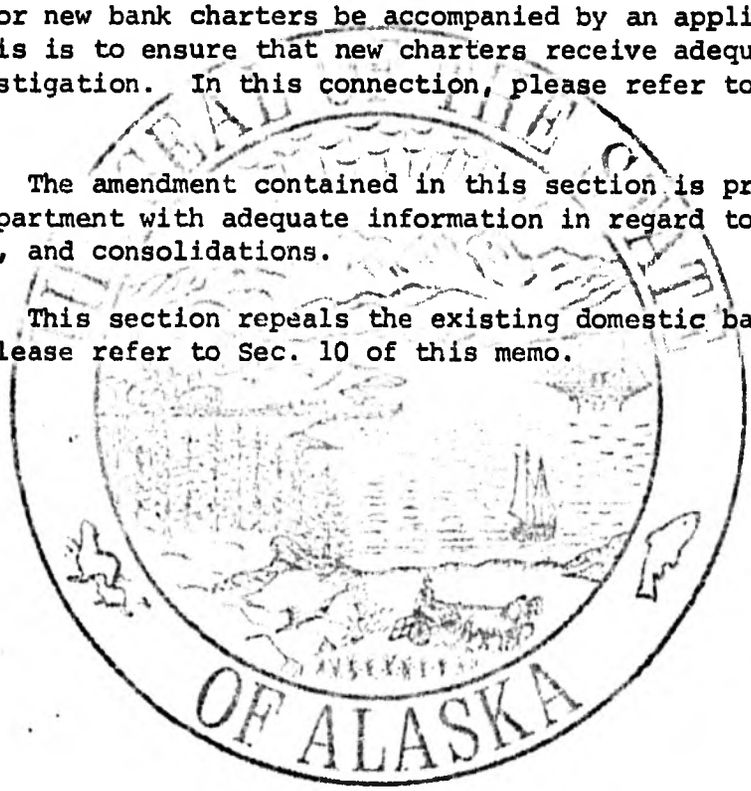
Due to the increasing involvement of Alaska in foreign trade and frequency of large commercial transactions between banks and their customers in this state, our own state banks should have such authorized capability.



Authorizing the sale of data processing services should not be confused with the proposed bank service corporation legislation. This section permits the bank to offer the same services, but does not involve an investment in a separate corporate subsidiary.

Sec. 12. AS.06.05.345(a) is amended to reduce the par value of the capital stock from $10 to $1. We believe reducing the par value to $1 will allow a broader distribution of the capital stock, thus encouraging wider ownership of Alaska financial institutions.

Sec. 13. It is proposed that AS.06.05.365 be amended to provide that applications for new bank charters be accompanied by an application fee of $1,000. This is to ensure that new charters receive adequate feasibility study and investigation. In this connection, please refer to Sec. 3 and Sec. 4 of this memo.

Sec. 14. The amendment contained in this section is proposed in order to provide the department with adequate information in regard to bank conversions, mergers, and consolidations.

Sec. 15. This section repeals the existing domestic bank holding company definition. Please refer to Sec. 10 of this memo.

FISCAL ANALYSIS

As the Sec. 44.58.110 (d), HB 667 would disallow payments for compensation for injuries or death resulting from incidences or offenses occurring prior to July 1, 1970, we assume that no obligations would be incurred until that date. The expenses of the Violent Crimes Compensation Board plus two (2) employees, an administrator and secretary are estimated at approximately $52,700 for FY 1971 as detailed on the attached budget forms, $54,300 for FY 1972 and $58,400 for FY 1973.

No statistics are available which would indicate the probable amount of claims which might be awarded under the provisions of BY 667 during FY 1971 and in subsequent years. Therefore, for planning purposes only we have included under Grants and Claims (code 700) $22,300 for FY 1971, $150,000 for FY 1972 and $220,000 for Fy 1973. These amounts could be either inadequate or excessive depending on events and circumstances over which we would have no control.

CS for HOUSE BILL NO. 667

This bill establishes a system of compensating victims of bodily crimes for their out-of-pocket expenses incurred as a result of the crime. One of the most fundamental functions of a government is the protection of its citizens; therefore, when the various statutory deterrents, law enforcement activities and conditions of the society fail to provide this protection, it is only reasonable that the government compensate the victims of that failure. Under present law, when the person who commits the crime is not financially responsible, the innocent victim who suffers the personal injury is left to his own resources. This obviously works an especial hardship on the poor and the elderly.

The bill is limited to personal injuries and to out-of-pocket expenses in order to avoid the likelihood of collusion. The total amount payable is limited, and the bill specifies additional limitations on and factors to be considered in awarding compensation. Information presented in an August 1969 report of the Arkansas Legislative Council indicates a rather low cost for such a system. In California, with a population of approximately 19,163,000, the 1967-68 fiscal year budget for the system was $22,411; in the 1968-69 fiscal year the budget was $105,374; and the proposed budget for the 1969-70 fiscal year was $127,000. The costs rise as more people become aware of the availability of compensation for their injuries. According to the Arkansas report, as of early 1969, at least five states had enacted victim compensation systems such as this one, and at least six others and Congress (for the District of Columbia) were considering similar legislation. In the preparation of this bill, the relevant provisions in the law of Hawaii, California, Massachusetts, and Maryland were reviewed.

S U M M A R I E S

Massachusetts

The compensation system in Massachusetts is similar in substance to that contemplated in Alaska. On the whole, however, it is shorter and provides fewer guidelines. The main difference is that the judiciary has been given the authority to hear and determine cases. Jurisdiction is vested in the district courts, rather than a separate administrative agency. Some key additions that are not found in Alaska's proposed act are as follows: it specifies a minimum loss for a claim - the individual must have suffered an out-or-pocket (medical) loss of at least $100 or lost two continuous weeks of earnings or support. Massachusetts compensates for an injury attributable to an effort by the victim to aid another victim (not specified in Alaska). The Massachusetts system was conceived of as compensating, irrespective of need, wishing to disconnect itself as much as possible with that brand of welfare legislation. For purposes of comparison the monetary limit of a claim is $10,000 and a claim must be filed within one year after the occurrence of the crime upon which it is based.

California

This system, functioning by means of an administrative board, compensates for injury or death resulting from an attempt to rescue another from drowning or other catastrophe, as well as for injury that is the result of criminal activities. Damage to property is specified as a valid claim for compensation. The program has been criticized for its strong welfare orientation, requiring in all regard that the victim be in need of compensation, and it is broader than just compensating victims of crime. Most critics feel that compensation should not be a handout; that rather it is restitution and a program should not legitimately exclude thousands of people from its protection on purely a class basis. Under California's statute, the monetary limit of a claim is $5,000.

Hawaii

Hawaii's provisions closely approximate those proposed in Alaska, suggesting a close following of the system outlined in Suggested State Legislation, 1967. The Hawaii body is a three-member administrative commission within the Department of Social Services. Hawaii, unlike the other states, provides for a set daily compensation for commission members, at the rate of $50 per day for "each day's actual attendance to his duties," as well as traveling and subsistence expenses. A maximum of $6,600 a year is allowed. (A set yearly salary is provided for under the Maryland system, but the amount is unspecified, to be provided for in the annual budget.) Attorney fees, paid out of the compensation, may be made up to 15% of the award (as in most of the other systems), but Hawaii provides that this is only if a claim exceeds $1,000. However, in no case shall attorney fees exceed the award of compensation. The Hawaii statute sets out an express appeal provision, but limits appeal to cases where it is asserted that the order or decision was in excess of the commission's authority or jurisdiction. Under Alaska's statute, orders and decisions of the board are final, without exception. Hawaii provides that the attorney general is the legal advisor to the commission and its statute includes a survival and abatement provision. Hawaii's limit for compensation is $10,000 and the claim must be made within one and one-half years after the date of injury, death, or property damage.

Hawaii - (continued)

Maryland

Maryland's system (three member administrative board) is generally the same in substance as that proposed in Alaska, but the administrative proceedure is more detailed. Claims are initially assigned to one member who investigates and makes a decision. A hearing may be ordered. A claimant may, within 30 days after receiving the report from the single member, make application for consideration by the full board. The action of the full board in affirming or modifying the decision is final. 30 days after receiving a copy of the report, attorney general, in his own judgment may commence judicial review. Judicial review may not be initiated by any other person. Maryland provides for an emergency award up to $500 prior to taking action on the claim, in cases where an award is probable and undue hardship will result to a claimant if immediate payment is not made. Final awards must be specifically reduced by (1) emergency awards; (2) sums from or on behalf of the person committing the crime; (3) payments from any other public or private source, including Workemen's Compensation Commission awards. The Maryland system includes a provision making a false claim a misdemeanor.

Re: H.B. 702 - Regulating collection activities of collection agencies and loan companies

Gentlemen:

As a member of the Governor's Collection Agency Board and as a owner of one of the biggest collection agencies in Alaska I can see no need for additional legislation to regulate our agencies as is indicated in H.B. 702. We have in Alaska a model collection agency act that was passed two years ago which already covers many of the proposals in 702.

I question why collection agencies are grouped with finance companies. There is a wide divurgance in the collection procedures of a collection agency and those of a finance company. Alaska Court records will reflect judgments against finance companies for damages based on their collection tactics yet I do not know of any cases against collection agencies. The Better Business Bureau Division of the Anchorage Chamber of Commerce reports they have had a minimum number of complaints on collectors as compared to other service agencies.

Alaska is experiencing a great influx of transients at this time which will ultimately put a maximum burden on our various welfare agencies. If you take away the credit grantors final remedy of collection by curtailing our activities you will be creating a haven for the nations deadbeats as I know of no other state that restricts the collector such as is proposed in 702.

For the betterment of Alaska I feel this Bill should not pass and request to be heard at a Committee Hearing on this matter.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

I an very concerned about House Bill 702 as it could very probably put me and several other collection agencys out of business. We are already regulated by federal and state laws and most of us are under the American Collectors code of Ethics.. If I could stay in business at all it would mean higher collectiong fees which in turn would evidiently mean the Doctors would have to raise their fees to conpensate for the loss.

I am very much against this Bill and sincerly hope that you will consider my concern and future, which depends on if this bill passes or not.

Thank you.

Re: House Bill 702

Dear Barry:

On behalf of the Alaska Collector's Association of which I am Sect. and Treasurer we urge it's defeat. Benefits from passage we do not see. The people in Alaska engaged in collection activity are all bonded, finger printed and yes, even mugged. The integrity of no other "profession" (if I may so call it) has been attacked as has collections. The owners and employees of these agencies are law abiding citizens, property owners and voters in the State of Alaska. Believe at this time we have enough legislation governing collections.

It is our firm belief that we have the most qualified men down in Juneau IF only they would concentrate and apply their knowledge to vital issues. The future of Alaska is in the hands of the men in Juneau, certainly this vast knowledge combined will work toward the most important items, thus benefiting all Alaskans.

Hope to see you during convention, with kindest regards,

Mary Barnes

Dear Chairman Jackson:

As a new Owner of this Collection Agency, but a three and one half year manager of O'Neill Investigations, after Mel Personett came to Juneau, I would like to urge you to VETO the above bill. As anyone can see, it would hamstring an agency and for all practical purposes put one out of business. With the write-offs to business being what they are now for unpaid bills, we cannot afford to further restrict RESPONSIBLE agencies.

I am highly in favor of being very restrictive as to whom is granted a license to operate a Collection agency, however. I wish to go on record as being in favor of a higher Collection agency bond than is now required, and further, to not license anyone as owner or operator of a Collection agency in Alaska who personally has a past record of not paying their own bills, and this would have to be established by a Credit report.

I have been a resident of Alaska since January, 1963, have three children in school here, the ldest, Linda, who graduates from Dimond this year with a straight A average. My wife is a GS 6-8 with the FAA, and 13 years Government service.

Dear Sir: Re: House Bill 702

I would like to voice opposition to the above named bill, relating to Collection activities.

As manager of a collection service for the members of the Alaska State Medical Association, I find the bill to be very stringent and restrictive for the Creditor and Agency and allows more leniency for the debtor !! There would be such detailed paper work involved as to cause additional charges and personnel , in order to process claims.

Please, see what you can do to influence the vetoing of this bill.

Thank you.

Dear Sir:

HB # 702 restricting collection agency activities has come to my attention and I feel that it is very unfair and discriminatory to my business. The reasons I am opposed are:

1. The State of Alaska has just passed a collection agency law (which the Alaska Collectors helped work out with our representatives) setting up bonding requirements and qualifications for collectors. There has been a board appointed to handle any complaints against collection agencies.

2. My business is already regulated, not only by the State of Alaska, but also by the Code of Ethics of the National American Collectors Assn and my membership in the Associated Credit Bureaus of America. There are strict requirements that I had to meet as manager of a Credit Bureau before I could be admitted to membership in the Associated Credit Bureaus. I have been a member since 1962 and have had no complaints filed against me.

3. This law is discriminatory against collection agencies. Lawyers and credit managers of local business houses also do a great deal of collecting in our state. What restrictions have been set up against their collection methods?

4. We do serve a need in our area by returning money to the economy. Last year our agency returned $ 85,535.72 to our community that had been written off in bad debts. I pay a four person payroll, city, state, borough and federal taxes.

5. I conduct an ethical and honest business and I feel that HB # 702 could possibly increase my costs and certainly my worries so that I could not continue to operate.

Your consideration of this matter will be appreciated and I would like to have the opportunity to appear before your committee. Please advise when this will be possible.

re: HB - 703 -
Alaska Small Loan Act

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Enclosed is a copy of HB-703 which has been referred to your committee.

I represent Household Finance Corporation which is interested in this type of legislation and if this bill is considered by your committee, I would like to have notice of the time of the meeting and be allowed to present the views of my client.

This bill states that if a small loan company has an outstanding loan which is in default, it cannot make a new loan for a larger amount.

The branch managers of Household Finance Corporation are instructed that they are not to make a larger loan than the balance of the prior loan then in default, unless they will be doing some service which will permit the borrower to repay a larger loan.

A typical illustration is where a borrower has missed a payment and comes into the office to explain that an emergency has arisen which has taken his available cash, such as a member of his family being in the hospital and he has to use his money to give money to the hospital in order to release his wife or child. Very often they need more money and are capable of repaying a large loan. Under such circumstances, Household permits a larger loan to be made because the company then rescues the customer from an unfortunate situation he could not avoid and it permits him to continue making regular payments to the company.

In my own personal dealings with my regular bank, I have often borrowed more money than I owed at the time I originally took out the loan and I think people dealing with small loan companies should be allowed the same privilege.

We know of no logical reason for such a restriction and we believe this bill, if enacted, would do a disservice to many people who have good credit, make their payments regularly but find themselves in a position where they have to have an additional amount of credit.

I intend to be in Anchorage all of next week and will not be available then to appear before your committee.

Yours very truly,

N. C. Banfield

HB 740

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

TO: The Honorable Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State House of Representatives

DATE : April 7, 1970

FROM: Sigvald J. Strandberg
Acting Director
Local Affairs Agency

SUBJECT: House Bill No. 740

Mrs. Mason, Secretary to your committee, recently advised the agency of your interest in the agency's analysis of House Bill No. 740. It is my understanding that this bill has been moved out of your committee with a majority signing "No Recommendation."

House Bill No. 740 amends AS 40.15.190(2) to allow a limited amount of land subdivision to be accomplished without subjection to the control of a local government platting authority. This proposed amendment would enable a land owner to divide a piece of property into four or fewer parcels, each of which is required to be five or more acres in size, without the approval of the platting authority The bill provides that such parcels must be amenable to aliquot parts description.

Apparently the primary purpose of House Bill No. 740 is to relax local subdivision control in order to permit property owners of a municipality to perform a limited amount of subdivision without having to comply with that municipality's subdivision regulations. In addition, exemption from compliance with local subdivision regulations to the extent afforded in House Bill No. 740 would afford the land owner with the opportunity to avoid engineering and surveying expenses through the use of aliquot parts method of property description.

It is the opinion of the agency, after having reviewed House Bill No. 740 and a similar measure in the Senate (Senate Bill No. 164), that the current definition of subdivision as expressed in AS 40.15.190(2) should be retained in the statutes. Control of subdivision by city and borough platting authorities is an extremely important tool in regulating the land usages and general patterns of community development. Exemption from compliance from local subdivision ordinances, even to the extent proposed in House Bill No. 740, introduces a potential for disorderly patterns of land use and attendent future problems in the location of roads and public utilities. Even though House Bill No. 740 provides that the land which is to be divided into four or fewer tracts must have access to a public highway or street, this is not adequate assurance that such land division will harmonize with established land use patterns. Aliquot parts division tends to minimize rights-of-way difficulties as does restriction of the size of the divided parcels to units of five acres or more. However, the salient objections would still exist: establishment of land use patterns not in concert with the overall principles set forth in a Comprehensive Community Development Plan, loss of control of population densities, future difficulties in integrating road networks and utility extensions and future engineering problems with respect to varying topographies.

In light of the above potential difficulties, it is our opinion that local planning, platting, and zoning authorities should continue to have the same subdivision authority as they now are accorded under the definition of subdivision contained in AS 40.15.190.

I am attaching the comments of the Greater Anchorage Area Borough Planning and Zoning Commission relative to their opposition to House Bill No. 740.

SUBJ: Opposition to House Bill 740

HB 740 purports to change the definition of "subdivision".

Since subdivision control is a legal and proper device for fostering better community development, it becomes an important facet in comprehensive community planning. The orderly and planned growth of undeveloped areas within a municipality is best promoted through statutes regulating land subdivision. It would appear that the developer of a subdivision is to some extent an architect of the future growth of a municipality. The developer establishes a land use pattern that will endure for years through the creation and installation of new streets, utilities, parks and other open spaces, and through the changes that his development occasions in the pattern of population density. Such development may necessarily and properly be guided by an exercise of police power.[1]

From the standpoint of actual subdivision practice, enactment of the proposed legislation would mean that literally thousands of acres could be subdivided without reference to the Platting Board. The benefits to the individual buyer in a properly platted subdivision are clear; guarantee of access via a dedicated street, proper provision of utility easements, clear, legal, recorded and surveyable description of his land, careful planning of lot sizes, road grades and drainage, detailed knowledge of available public facilities and many others. The great advantage to the general public in having equitable, logical and strictly enforced subdivision regulations is not always so clear, but when one considers the real shortage of available land for urban expansion, the over-riding necessity of land subdivision regulations can be readily seen.

Planning is for the people; and the priorities for schools, roads, water and sewer services, police and fire protection, libraries and cultural facilities, parks and recreation and open spaces can best be determined in accordance with a basic land use plan. The meaningful development of such a plan, and the implementation thereof is dependent, to a large degree, on the ability to regulate and guide the subdivision of land.

[1] Yokley: The Law of Subdivisions, the Michie Company, 1963.

It is not felt necessary at this time, to research and document the many factors of a planning program that could become virtually meangless if this act were to pass. We think, however, that the dangers of changing the very meaning of subdivision and excluding tracts of 5 acres or more, and aliquot parts divisions, should be abundantly clear to all those who have, as their prime goal, the protection of the public interest.

The Greater Anchorage Area Borough Planning Commission last year adopted a resolution in firm opposition to the passage of a similar bill (SB 164), and enclose herewith a resolution opposed to the passage of HB 740. The Planning Association of Alaska has also expressed opposition to this bill, as has the City of Anchorage Public Works Department. If this bill is going to be substantively discussed by the Committees, we would be most appreciative of an opportunity to testify, and to submit resolutions from a large number of concerned agencies.

WHEREAS, the Greater Anchorage Area Borough, and other rapidly developing areas throughout the State of Alaska would be grievously damaged if the responsibility and duty of providing public protection through duly enacted subdivision regulations was to be removed from public review.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the Greater Anchorage Area Borough Planning and Zoning Commission, sitting as the Greater Anchorage Area Platting Board, that this body go on record as being inalterably opposed to the passage of House Bill No. 740, currently before the Sixth Legislature, Second Session, in the Legislature of the State of Alaska.

Dear Representative Jackson:

It has come to my attention that HB 740 (Land Subdivision) may come to a floor vote.

Presently, the pertinent statute (AS 40.15.190 (2)) requires a subdivision of land to be approved by a platting board before it can become legal. This requirement of subdivision approval is the most basic and important tool available to land planners. It insures that land is developed in an orderly manner. The control of these divisions of land is as old as written records. The Egyptians and Greeks both maintained systems for the division of land.

To gut Title 40 by passing HB 740 would be to retreat almost beyond the dawn of recorded history. The social and economic cost to the community and to present and future generations which would be incurred by the passage of HB 740 are almost incalculable. HB 740 would allow land to be subdivided into as many as four lots with no more control than that all lots have access to a public highway. This ignores whether or not all lots have practical access to the public highway (there could very well be a cliff at the point of access), it takes no account of land lying behind the subdivided acreage which could be left without access if no dedicated road was required, the bill makes no provision for utility easements, no survey would be required so that a future buyer would know where his land actually was, dedication could not be required for the needed widening of existing public highways, the lots created could be of any shape, i.e., 100 feet wide and 1,000 feet long. The above are only a few items that occur to me as I write this.

I spent three years as a land planner and my law practice now is primarily concerned with real estate. For the public welfare, I ask you to please vote against HB 740.

Very truly yours,

George A. Dickson

Dear Mr. Eby: FIRST NOTICE

Under the provisions of Title 8 of the Borough Code of the Matanuska-Susitna Borough and the provisions of state law, the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Planning Commission is the duly constituted platting authority with jurisdiction over all lands in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough.

A copy of Ordinance number 65-4 which spells out the powers and duties of the Platting Board and the penalties against property owners who do not comply with the law concerning subdivision plats will be furnished you upon request.

Information has been received that you, or someone acting for you, as the case may be, may have sold or entered into a contract to sell land in a subdivision created by you before a plat of the subdivision has been prepared, approved and recorded as required by law. If such is the case, you are in violation of state law and the purpose of this letter is to call the matter to your attention. If, after reading the statute quoted hereinbelow you find that you are in violation, you are requested to get in touch with the undersigned promptly with the object of filing your plat, or request to waive the platting regulations, without undue delay and securing the required approval of the Platting Authority before recording it. Failure to comply with the law after notice will subject anyone in violation ultimately to prosecution under the strict terms of the law.

The penal statute referred to above is to be found in Alaska Statutes, Section 40.15.130, and reads as follows:

> "PENALTIES. A.S. 40.15.130. (a) The owner or agent of land located within a subdivision who transfers, sells, or agrees, or enters into a contract to sell land in the subdivision before a plat of the subdivision has been prepared, approved, and recorded in compliance with this chapter and the subdivision regulations adopted under this chapter, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction is punishable by a fine of not more than $500 for each lot or parcel transferred or sold or agreed or included in a contract to be sold. The platting authority may enjoin a transfer or sales or agreement to sell, and may recover the penalty by appropriate legal action.

(b) No person may file or record a plat of subdivision in any public office unless the plat bears the approval of the platting authority. Any person who files or records a plat in violation of this requirement upon conviction is punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both."

If there is any question as to whether you are in violation of the above quoted ordinance it is advised that you notify the Borough Office, Planning and Zoning Department, as soon as possible.

Yours truly,

Verlyn J. Smith

SUBJ: Opposition to House Bill 740

HB 740 purports to change the definition of "subdivision".

Since subdivision control is a legal and proper device for fostering better community development, it becomes an important facet in comprehensive community planning. The orderly and planned growth of undeveloped areas within a municipality is best promoted through statutes regulating land subdivision. It would appear that the developer of a subdivision is to some extent an architect of the future growth of a municipality. The developer establishes a land use pattern that will endure for years through the creation and installation of new streets, utilities, parks and other open spaces, and through the changes that his development occasions in the pattern of population density. Such development may necessarily and properly be guided by an exercise of police power.[1]

From the standpoint of actual subdivision practice, enactment of the proposed legislation would mean that literally thousands of acres could be subdivided without reference to the Platting Board. The benefits to the individual buyer in a properly platted subdivision are clear; guarantee of access via a dedicated street, proper provision of utility easements, clear, legal, recorded and surveyable description of his land, careful planning of lot sizes, road grades and drainage, detailed knowledge of available public facilities and many others. The great advantage to the general public in having equitable, logical and strictly enforced subdivision regulations is not always so clear, but when one considers the real shortage of available land for urban expansion, the over-riding necessity of land subdivision regulations can be readily seen.

Planning is for the people; and the priorities for schools, roads, water and sewer services, police and fire protection, libraries and cultural facilities, parks and recreation and open spaces can best be determined in accordance with a basic land use plan. The meaningful development of such a plan, and the implementation thereof is dependent, to a large degree, on the ability to regulate and guide the subdivision of land.

[1] Yokley: The Law of Subdivisions, the Michie Company, 1963.

It is not felt necessary at this time, to research and document the many factors of a planning program that could become virtually meangless if this act were to pass. We think, however, that the dangers of changing the very meaning of subdivision and excluding tracts of 5 acres or more, and aliquot parts divisions, should be abundantly clear to all those who have, as their prime goal, the protection of the public interest.

The Greater Anchorage Area Borough Planning Commission last year adopted a resolution in firm opposition to the passage of a similar bill (SB 164), and enclose herewith a resolution opposed to the passage of HB 740. The Planning Association of Alaska has also expressed opposition to this bill, as has the City of Anchorage Public Works Department. If this bill is going to be substantively discussed by the Committees, we would be most appreciative of an opportunity to testify, and to submit resolutions from a large number of concerned agencies.

Dick Regan and I will appear before your Committee to seek Committee support for three bills we are advocating.

(a) A bill to prohibit harrassment and abusive practices by collection agencies.

(b) A bill to abolish the remedy of common law distraint.

(c) A bill to provide certain tenant remedies to assure habitable rental housing.

I am enclosing a copy of each proposed bill, together with an explanation of its provisions.

Should you have any questions, I am available at 6-6145, and can meet with you at any time.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

In response to your request for further information regarding our proposed legislation concerning the right of a tenant to use rent payments for the repair of leased dwellings I have prepared a revised version that reflects some of the concerns of the Committee.

We have not been able to satisfy your request for case histories since our inability to offer any satisfactory legal approach to these problems inhibits the number of clients that seek us out and ask for help in this area. We do know that there is a serious lack of adequate and safe housing for indigent people in both urban and rural settings, but have no experience in attempting to use rent payments for the repair of defects.

The revised bill would tie the existence of housing defects to a local housing or building code or ordinance, as determined by the local official responsible for enforcement of that code.

A section-by-section analysis and a copy of the revision is attached. I am most interested in exploring with you the prospects for legislation of this type, and am available at 6-6145 at any time.

Very truly yours,

Philip B. Byrne

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS OF

REVISED

SAFE HOUSING BILL

Section 34.05.050.

(a) Provides for termination of a residential lease after one week's notice where there is a violation of the local housing code (hereafter, "code violation").

No notice is required where the code violation is a danger to health or safety of the occupants.

Inapplicable where the code violation was caused by an occupant.

(b) Code violations are to be determined only by the local code enforcement official (Hereafter, "official").

If the official does not make the inspection within 10 days, or where there is no official, then the tenant may terminate if the code violation is a threat to the health or safety of the occupants.

(c) Code violations caused wilfully or negligently by the landlord subject him to an action for damages.

Section 34.05.060.

(a) Provides for the use of up to two weeks' rent to repair code violations where the violation has been determined by the local official, and where the tenant has given the landlord two weeks' notice. The tenant must also give the landlord copies of the receipts for the work done.

(b) Provides for the use of up to four weeks' rent, where, in addition to the determination of a code violation by the local official, the tenant submits a written estimate four weeks before having the work done and supplies receipts to the landlord.

(c) Where there is no official, or the official does not inspect within 10 days after a request, then the tenant may proceed according to the other requirements of this section if the code violation renders the dwelling unsafe, unsanitary, untenantable, or poses an imminent threat to the health or safety of any occupant.

Section 34.05.070.

Prohibits retaliatory evictions of tenants using the provisions of this Act.

Section 34.05.050. Tenant's Remedy of Termination at Any Time.

(a) If there exists any violation of any local statute, code, regulation, or ordinance governing the maintenance, construction, use or appearance of the swelling unit and the property of which it is a part, the tenant may notify the landlord in writing of the fact; and, if the landlord does not remedy the violation whithin one week, the tenant may terminate the rental agreement. Such notice need not be given when the condition or violation involved renders a dwelling unit uninhabitable or poses an imminent threat to the health or safety of any occupant. The tenant may not terminate for a violation or condition caused by the want of due care of the tenant, a member of his family, or other person on the premises with his consent.

(b) Such violations shall be determined by the official charged with enforcement of or inspections under the local statute, code, regulation, or ordinance referred to under subsection (a) above. If such official or his duly authorized agent does not inspect or examine the condition alleged in writing by the tenant to be a violation within ten days after receipt of notification in writing, or if there is no such official the tenant may proceed as required in subsection (a) where the condition or violation involved renders the dwelling unit unsafe, unsanitary, untenantable, or poses an imminent threat to the health or safety of any occupant.

(c) If the condition or violation under this section was caused willfully or negligently by the landlord, the tenant may recover any damages sustained as a result of the condition or violation including, but not limited to, reasonable expenditures necessary to obtain adequate substitute housing.

Section 34.05.060. Tenant's Remedy of Repair.

(a) If the landlord of an apartment or single family dwelling fails to repair remedy violations of any local statute, code, regulation, or ordinance governing the maintenance, construction, use or appearance of the dwelling unit and the property of which it is a part within two weeks after being notified by the tenant of such violation, the tenant may further notify the landlord of his intention to correct the violation at the landlord's expense and immediately do or have done the necessary work in a workmanlike manner. The tenant may deduct from his rent a reasonable sum, not exceeding two weeks' rent for his expenditures by a submitting to the landlord copies of his receipts covering at least the sum deducted.

(b) If the tenant submits a written estimate by a qualified workman at least four weeks before having the work done, and substitutes workmen and materials as the landlord may reasonably request in writing, the tenant may deduct from his rent a reasonable sum not exceeding one month's rent by submitting to the landlord copies of his receipts covering at least the sum deducted.

(c) Where there exists no official or agent charged with enforcement or inspections under such statute, code, regulation or ordinance, or where such or agent does not inspect or examine the condition alleged in writing by the tenant to be a violation within ten days after receipt of notification in writing, the tenant may proceed under this section where the condition or violation involved renders the dwelling unit unsafe, unsanitary, untenantable, or poses an imminent threat to the health or safety of any occupant.

Section 34.05.070. Retaliatory Eviction Prohibited.

(a) In order to insure that dwelling units conform to applicable law in regard to habitability, health, safety, and fitness for use, it is the declared policy of this state to encourage tenants to enforce such applicable law in regard to the dwelling they inhabit.

(b) Any eviction, attempted eviction, increase in rent, or change in conditions or requirements to the detriment or a tenant or tenants, which is caused by, related to, or proximate to any such efforts of a tenant or tenants to correct violations of any applicable local statute, code, regulation or ordinance governing the maintenance,construction, use or appearance of the dwelling unit and the property of which it is a part, is in violation of public policy and is hereby prohibited.

Dear Sir:

The committee has briefly reviewed the proposed bill of tenant rights. The committee sees serious difficulty in applying this bill in the rural areas of the state and the committee is aware that many, if not most, cities have housing codes covering these problems. There may, however, be a need for legislation and the committee would therefore appreciate a memorandum on your experience in this area, including case histories. We would appreciate having this information by February 13, 1970. Further delay beyond this date will make it difficult to enact appropriate legislation in this session.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I appreciate this opportunity to submit further information on our proposal for legislation abolishing common law distraint.

I have researched the laws in selected states, but the sampling was limited to about nine or ten states. The best overall comment on the state of existing law follows:

> "The courts of this country have never looked with favor upon this form of self-help because of the opportunity afforded for injustice and oppression, and also because it discriminates in favor of one particular class of creditors. For this reason, in a number of states the remedy of distress was held not to be a part of the common law of that jurisdiction. (Cites cases from Alabama, Colorado, Missouri, Montana, North Carolina, Oklahoma). In other states it has been abolished by statute. (Cites 2 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, § 325, n. 20 (1912). In those states where it still exists, it has to a large extent been modified by statute. The general tendency of the statutes is to take away the self-help feature that existed at common law and to vest control over the proceedings in a public official. . . . Furthermore, the list of exempt chattels has been extended in many states to include specific chattels of the tenant himself, which at common law were not exempt. II American Law of Property, A. James Casner, § 9.47 (1952). See also 32 Am. Jur., Landlord and Tenant, § 613.

The State of Washington has provided for a statutory landlord's lien, but with a specific exemption as to the property of a tenant in residential dwellings. Wash. Rev. Code § 60.72.010.

The State of Oregon provides a statutory landlord's lien upon all personal property, except wearing apparel, but retains the self-help feature of the common law remedy. Ore. Rev. Stat. §§ 87.535-87.551.

I was unable to find a statutory landlord's lien in either New York or California, but Am. Jur. and A.L.P. indicate the common law remedy has been abolished by court decision. Interesting enough, California law provides, in a stature dating back several decades, a much broader statute permitting use of rent payments for the repair of dwellings. Calif. Civil Code § 1942.

Other states provide as follows:

Minnesota -- Complete abolition of distraint, with no statutory replacement. Minn. Stat. § 504.01.

Colorado --- Statutory lien, but inapplicable to a rented house. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 86-1-1.

Illinois --- Statutory distraint provided, but inapplicable to any property exempt from execution. Ill. Rev. Stat. Tit. 80, s 16-35.

Arizona ---- Statutory lien on all tenants property which is not exempt, but permits seizure of all property. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 33-362.

Alabama ---- Statutory lien broader than common law remedy, primarily for sharecropper of situations. Ala. Code Ann. tit. 31, §§ 29-34.

The Committee has, at this point two choices if it is unwilling to abolish distraint completely. It can provide for a statutory lien, with appropriate judicial enforcement procedures to remove the self-help feature -- or it can provide for abolition of distraint only as to property exempt from execution.

The objective of our clients is attained by either approach, but I would prefer for reasons of legislative economy to follow the latter approach.

Therefore, I have drafted a new proposal which provides that landlords, in the use of common law distraint, may not take or seize exempt property. That bill is attached.

I am available at any time to meet with you or the Committee to discuss this measure, and reiterate my hope that you will see fit to introduce it as a Judiciary Committee bill.

Respectfully submitted,

Philip B. Byrne
Deputy Director, Alaska Legal Services Corp.

Enclosure

Proposed Amendment to A.S. § 34.05.010

Subsection "c" of A.S. 34.05.010 shall hereafter be subsection "d."

A new subsection "c" is added to A.S. 34.05.010 which reads:

"(c) In the use or exercise of the common law remedy for distress of rent, no landlord or lessor of residential property or dwellings may seize, sequester, attach, or keep a tenant from the use or possession of any property exempt from execution or attachment under state or federal law."

COMMENTS OF
ALASKA LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION
IN SUPPORT OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO A.S. 34.05.010

The common law right of the landlord for distress of rent is an ancient doctrine conferring an extra-judicial remedy upon the landlord. Many states and common law countries have recognized this doctrine as giving the landlord the power to hold his tenant's personal belongings as security for unpaid rent. This ancient self-help remedy is now the subject of regulation in many states, and has been abolished in some. The abolition of the common law right for distress of rent has been strongly recommended due to the gross inequities created by its exercise. See Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code, Tentative Draft Sections 3-403(b) (American Bar Foundation, 1969).

The proposed amendment would abolish this extra-judicial remedy with respect to residential dwellings only. It is in this area that the abuses are most blatant and oppressive. Although the common law doctrine gives the landlord the right to retain his tenant's personal belongings, it does not give the landlord the right to seize the personal belongings or to sell them. Most frequently, a seizure is accomplished by an eviction. The landlord will commonly put a padlock on the door of the house or apartment and refuse to release the tenant's food, clothing, and furniture until the tenant pays the overdue rent. This activity on the part of the landlord would place the burden on the tenant to go into court to recover his personal belongings. Thus, the person least likely to be familiar with judicial process is forced to initiate the action that would be necessary to determine justice. The Alaska Statutes provide that all or most of an individual's food, clothing, and home furnishings are exempt from levy of attachment or exeuction. A.S. 9.35.080. Thus, in most instances, the landlord is seizing property to which he has absolutely no right. Furthermore, such an action constitutes an eviction which is not sanctioned by the Alaska Statutes. A.S. 9.45.060-160 and A.S. 9.45.690 provide remedies for the landlord and do not sanction summary evictions.

The proposed amendment in no way limits the landlord's remedies at law. The action of forceable entry and detainer is still available for the purposes of eviction and reduction of accrued rent to judgment. The landlord retains his right at law to attach non-exempt assets.

The Alaska Legal Services Corporation Board of Directors has endorsed this proposal.

HOUSE JOURNAL

Judiciary Committee Report

on

HOUSE BILL NO. 751

This bill seeks to make financing easier for electric and telephone cooperatives. The limited funds available for loans from the federal Rural Electrification Administration require the electric cooperatives to seek supplemental financing in order to provide facilities to meet consumer demands for service. The National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, formed by the electric cooperatives to help solve this problem, is still not adequate to meet the needs of Alaska where present growth is so rapid and demands for electric power so great. It is essential that the cooperatives be able to seek conventional financing when alternate sources are inadequate. The first section of the bill removes the language restricting the board of directors from mortgaging the cooperative's property to secure the cooperative's indebtedness to entities other than the United States and its agencies without the authorization of the members of the cooperative.

The second section of the bill would allow a cooperative to mortgage or encumber "all or a substantial portion of its property" without having the "affirmative vote of not less than a majority" of all of its members. It is believed that the inertia and apathy of most members of cooperatives make it extremely difficult if not impossible to get a majority of the members to respond to a mail vote let alone attend a meeting, especially when considering the number of people involved (over 18,000 are members of the Chugach Electric Association, Inc., for example). Thus, under present law, the flexibility of the board of directors to secure needed funds is severely and unnecessarily restricted. Electric cooperatives with REA loans and mortgages will have to get REA approval of subsequent loans and mortgages, and all electric cooperatives with an annual gross income over $25,000 are by definition "public utilities" and subject to regulation by the Alaska Public Service Commission; it is believed that these safeguards against unwise borrowing and indiscriminate pledging of credit are adequate to protect the interests of members of the cooperative.

Re: House Bill 751

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is written in explanation and support of the subject bill, which was introduced by the House Rules Committee at my request on behalf of the Alaska Rural Electric Cooperative Association. The latter organization is composed of the eleven non-profit electric cooperative membership corporations which are organized and operate subject to the Electric and Telephone Cooperative Act, as amended, AS 10.25. I am the registered legislative counsel and legislative agent, pursuant to AS 24.45.010, of the Alaska Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

The several electric cooperatives in Alaska were organized to participate in the rural electrification programs sponsored by the Federal Government pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as amended. (7 U.S.C.A. §§ 901, et seq.) These programs, administered by the Rural Electrification Administration, commonly known as "REA," consist essentially of loans on favorable terms to finance the purchase and installation of electric generation, transmission, and distribution facilities, and related facilities, in order to furnish central station electric utility service. During the period since 1936, over 1,000 such cooperatives have been organized throughout the several states and their combined facilities serve several million consumers on a non-profit basis. The cooperatives, no less than investor-owned utilities, have been hard pressed to meet the ever increasing demands for electric power and energy. Unfortunately, the appropriations to REA have been static for some years and the applications for loans far exceed the funds available to REA to meet these critical needs. The electric cooperatives must seek supplemental financing.

In recognition of this need for supplementing financing, the electric cooperatives, acting through their National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, established the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation (known as "CFC") in which the electric cooperatives may hold membership. This corporation will sell its securities in public offerings and has the full support of REA. By subscribing to the corporation's Capital Term Certificates according to a financing formula, the subscribing member is eligible for loans to meet at least a portion of its supplemental financing requirements. For some cooperatives operating in areas of relatively static economic growth and access to adequate power supplies, this supplemental financing may suffice. In Alaska, however, where the need is so very great for additional facilities, and where, in communities dependent upon the electric cooperatives for this vital service, growth is rapid and demand for electric power and energy even greater, it is essential that the cooperatives be likewise able to seek conventional financing when alternate sources are inadequate.

Under the present statute (AS 10.25.390 and 10.25.400), the board of directors of an electric cooperative may execute and deliver a mortgage or other encumbrance on the cooperative's property to secure its indebtedness to REA, but a similar mortgage or encumbrance on a "substantial portion of its property" to secure indebtedness to other than the "United States of America or an agency or instrumentality of it" requires the authorization of an affirmative vote of not less than a majority of all the members of the cooperative. Frankly, the inertia that one encounters in such matters - even apathy - would make it extremely difficult (impossible?) to obtain the approval of a majority of the members of the cooperative, particularly of those cooperatives having a large membership or a substantial membership distributed over a wide area. To quote the most recent statistics immediately available to me - those from the April, 1969, issue of the Northwest Public Power Bulletin, Golden Valley Electric Association, Inc. had 5,422 consumers, Homer Electric Association, Inc. had 3,168, Kodiak Electric Association, Inc. had 1,945 consumers, Matanuska Electric Association, Inc. had 3,610 consumers, and Chugach Electric Association, Inc. had 21,073 consumers. Since I know that Chugach now has 24,000 consumers, i.e. meters in service, serving over 18,000 members, I must assume (1) that the statistics quoted above are probably substantially below current numbers, and (2) that the number of members is probably not much lower than the number of meters served. (I believe that Chugach and Golden Valley have a larger percentage of members being served at multiple locations than the other cooperatives because of the nature of their service areas.) A very special case is the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, Inc., which was organized to furnish central station electric utility service in the villages of Alaska. Its consumer-members are distributed over wide areas of Alaska; there will be even wider distribution as additional villages are added to the program. In any case, I think you will readily understand that the necessity for having the authorization of a majority of the members - or even having to convene the membership for such purpose - poses a peculiarly difficult problem - if not an insurmountable one - for the cooperative requiring financing from a source other than the Federal government. (I do not see authority of AS 10.25.120 to vote by mail a solution for reasons already mentioned above. There isn't a meeting facility in Anchorage which could house a majority of Chugach's membership for a meeting, assuming that one had the charm to induce their attendance.)

I know of no good reason for not amending the statute to permit the cooperative's board of directors to contract debt and to execute and deliver such instruments as may be required to secure the payment of such debt, particularly when each such transaction will require the approval of REA in the form of a release of its mortgage interest in the property to be encumbered, inasmuch as the several cooperatives' loan agreements with REA provide that the latter's security interest attaches immediately to after-acquired property upon acquisition - and AS 10.25.420 gives clear effect to such contractual provision.

On occasion, it has been suggested that the similarities - public or quasi-public ownership, for example - between the municipally owned utility and the cooperatively owned utility justify treating the encumbrancing of the latter's property the same as the former's, that is, that since municipal utility revenue bonds must be authorized by a vote of the electorate, indebtedness of cooperatives should similarly require the authorization of their members. But the justification for comparable requirements fails for several reasons, among which one need only cite the fact that the cooperatives are in fact private business corporations and, with respect to their right to effective management authority, entitled to the same consideration as the business corporation organized for profit. Of course, the theory is that municipal revenue bonds are secured only by the revenue of the facility for which authorized, but in effect these bonds are a pledge of the credit of the municipality - and that credit is secured by the property located within the municipal boundaries. Members of the cooperative and their property, on the other hand, are specifically relieved of liability for the debts of the cooperative. (AS 10.25.410) And no municipality is required to obtain a majority of its qualified voters to authorize the issuance of bonds, revenue or otherwise. The regulatory effect of requiring REA approval, and the fact that each of the electric cooperatives is a public utility by definition and subject to regulation by the Alaska Public Service Commission, are further restrictions on unwise borrowing and indiscriminate pledging of cooperative credit.

The Electric and Telephone Cooperative Act (AS 10.25) is substantially a melding of what is contained in two so-called model acts for REA-financed cooperatives offering electric and telephone services, respectively. There was a time when the cooperatives may have needed the statutory requirement of the majority vote of the members in such matters to protect them from the efforts of investor-owned to acquire their facilities and customers via whatever route was available, including the acquisition, by assignment or otherwise, of security rights of a cooperative's creditors in and to its properties. If such threat was ever real elsewhere, it poses no danger in Alaska.

For the foregoing reasons, I urge the Committee's favorable action on House Bill 751 and early attention on the floor of the House, where I hope that I will likewise have your generous and effective support. If circumstances here permit, I will be in Juneau for your Committee meeting on March 18.

What I have said above concerning electric cooperatives applies in general to Alaska's one telephone cooperative, the Matanuska Telephone Association, Inc., except that the prospects of the Congress creating a supplemental financing agency for the telephone cooperatives similar to the Federal Land Bank are promising. Competitive and other considerations in the electric utility industry defeated similar arrangements for the electric cooperatives. However, the Matanuska Telephone Association, Inc. will likewise benefit from a more flexible and realistic statute controlling its management. In these days of limited capital sources and high interest rates - in the face of ever-growing demands for additional investment, we cannot afford to maintain artificial barriers between these vital public services and their access to investment capital. Considering the needs of Alaska, I think that you will agree that our efforts should be directed toward attracting investment rather than discouraging it.

Thank you kindly for your consideration.

Sincerely,

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 756

In creating a division of recruitment and retention within the Department of Military Affairs, this bill seeks to establish a system of assisting members of the Alaska National Guard in gaining employment for which their training while in military service has qualified them. A pilot program in the field of smokejumping and firefighting has proved the need for the people and the success of such a system. Since most members of the Alaska National Guard live in the more remote areas of the state where there is a high rate of unemployment, this system would provide employment for many people and a regular, meaningful activity for the National Guard.

HB 756

ALASKA NATIONAL GUARD RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION PROGRAM

HB 756 - Division of Recruitment and Retention: This bill is a part of a comprehensive program of the Alaska National Guard Officers Association to follow through with the Recruitment and Retention program. One of the basic concepts is that many of our rural Guardsmen can receive military training which will assist them in gaining employment which fits their background. We need a full-time staff putting these men next to the job opportunities which we know from a pilot program do exist.

This pilot program was to capture approximately 100 smokejumping and fire-fighting aid jobs which are of the semipermanent nature with BLM. The wages would be from $6,000 to $9,000. A permanent division is necessary to expand upon this program and add to the same, as well as to ensure that the other portions of our Recruitment and Retention programs are enacted administratively.

ALASKA NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS ASSOCIATION
ESTIMATED COST OF RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION PROGRAM

INCREASES IN FEDERAL RECEIPTS

Part Timers - Increases:
10% increase in actual number of personnel
Basic pay x $1,370,000			$ 137,000
10% increase in longevity because of longer term guardsmen			137,000
	Total		$ 274,000
Multiplier Effect of 1	Total	$548,000
Multiplier Effect of 2	Total		$ 852,000

Job Program: Just using the possibility of gaining the semi-permanent smokejumper and firefighting aid jobs heretofore going to lower 48 State personnel:

100 jobs with average wage of $6,000	$600,000
Multiplier Effect of 1	600,000	$1,200,000
Total in these two areas alone		$2,052,000

Summary of Cost of Bills Not Through Administration	Peak Cost
Education Program	$ 10,000
Re-enlistment Program	30,000
Retirement Program	60,000
Uniform Allowance & Initial Allowance & Maintenance	130,000
Total Estimated	$ 230,000
Administration Bills - Recruitment & Retirement Program	30,000
Total Direct Cost	$ 260,000

DISTRIBUTION OF ADDITIONAL FEDERAL DOLLARS

	Rural	Urban
Part Timers - Increases:
10% increase in number of personnel & longevity
50% of authorized strength 2,500 to 2,600	$ 426,000	$ 426,000
Job Program using only 100 BLM jobs plus multiplier effect of 1	1,200,000
Total	$1,626,000	$ 426,000

Not added are the additional Scout villages which can be programmed into the seasonal firefighting. In addition, providing to the Scouts the BLM firefighting training program would result in a step increase in pay.

Not included are other Federal agency jobs that are not now utilizing villagers for seasonal, semi-permanent and permanent jobs, much of which goes to lower 48 people. These jobs can be captured with the full time staff of the Recruitment and Retention Branch.

DISTRIBUTION OF ADDITIONAL STATE DOLLARS

	Rural	Urban *
Education Program	$ 2,000	$ 8,000
Re-Enlistment Program	18,000	12,000
Retirement Program	36,000	24,000

COMMENTS ON HOUSE BILL 756

The largest number of National Guardsmen live in remote areas outside of normal communications relating to employment. Also many recruitment bulletins require a minimum of high school education for any employment consideration.

Many guardsmen lack education but have skill in mechanics, electronics and other less technical positions and are still unemployed simply because they are not aware of vacancies.

The National Guard has several capabilitiesthat can be used to assist these guardsmen in obtaining employment such as, personnel records showing abilities of each individual, a radio network to 63 villages for reporting when employees are needed, and the Air Guard (100% federally funded) to provide transportation to employment areas.

This bill would place a full time in the office of the Adjutant General to evaluate the potential of unemployed guardsmen and match them with state and federal recruitment bulletins then notify the guardsmen that such vacancies exist and provide transportation.

A pilot program in firefighting shows that we could expect a minimum of 100 guardsmen to obtain employment thereby reducing the cost of welfare in villages but mainly giving prestige and dignity to the members affected.

Recruitment and Retention Activities
January 1970 - June 30, 1970
Preliminary Steps Prior to Launching Expanded Program

ACTIONS NEEDED WHILE SCOUTS IN CAMP:

Six month's or semi-permanent BLM jobs, smokejumpers, firefighting aids.

1. Coordinate with Len Nelson to complete coverage of smokejumpers for those that may be qualified for jobs in 1970.

2. Prepare Federal application forms on others who may be qualified for the 1971 season in rough. Explain the program to the EM or officers concerned. Do not fill in the type of position. This form may also be used for other applications or other positions.

3. Fill out applications for State employment.

4. Prepare seasonal firefighting callup plan. Start dialogue with firefighting personnel of BLM (Messrs. Richardson and Tank) concerning getting all Scout villages on the seasonal callup on a priority basis.

a. Utilize officer in 38th Detachment now working in BLM communications.

b. Determine transportation capacity of Air Guard and Army Guard to assist BLM.

c. Arrange that when a Scout village is picked up that not only the Scouts but unemployed civilians in that village can be employed. Pay to start when they depart on Army or Air Guard planes. Procedure for signing people up in the villages for BLM should be worked out.

d. Orientation program for all village NCOs and members concerning the seasonal callup plan. Determine whether or not firefighting training course is being extended to these village Scouts -- make sure they get the course.

STATEWIDE GUARD -- RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION

1. Send an order down to all Unit Commanders for an inventory by name of unemployed Guardsmen. Get State and Federal application forms on same completed in order to evaluate possibilities for employment.

2. Get on Division of Personnel's mailing list for bulletins for openings.

3. Obtain information on all seasonal jobs from State Departments.

4. Work with hiring personnel of the various State Departments.

5. Get on list for Civil Service Bulletins.

6. Coordinate with hiring personnel of the military bases throughout State.

7. Get information on seasonal jobs, field jobs (Example: BLM cadastral eng.)

8. FAA. Isolated assignment type of work. Determine how we can input our Scouts or Guardsmen into the FAA program. Note that much of the work should fall into the Air Guard type of qualifications. A list of FAA stations, turnover information and qualifications helpful.

MEMORANDUM

To: Representative Mildred Banfield

From: Rev. Dr. Walter A. Soboleff W.A.S.

Subject: Alaska National Guard Recruitment, Retention and Retirement Program

Figuratively speaking, for an orderly development of this State to be brought about, an awareness of its many facets must be expressed by those with concern and foresight. Where there develops an awareness of the need for natural conservation and economic use of resources, we are obliged to survey and recommend measures reflecting the best interests of our State's greatest resource, its people.

Not since the development of air travel in Alaska has there been an impact so profound as the coming of the Alaska National Guard to approximately seventy communities throughout Alaska. Under capable leadership, the influence upon these areas continues to have a lasting value in terms of health, recreation, morale, and adult education. In the past, under professional guidance and adequate funding, qualified youth have varied opportunities to attend military schools and return home for positions of leadership in the community.

But, the Alaska National Guard has not reached its greatest potential for development of human resources. It is not at present satisfactorily involving the lower income segment of our society since many of these people cannot afford to engage in activities which fail to provide adequate pay for services and expenses involved. The youth that the National Guard can help most are not joining. This is true in both rural and urban Alaska. For those who do enlist to meet their mandatory military obligations, the pay and other benefits are such that further sacrifice of time on the part of the individual and his family is necessary. Consequently, re-enlistments are few. This is a waste of human resources.

The Alaska National Guard Officers' Association's Recruitment, Retention and Retirement Program is designed to boost the morale, pay and benefits and provide recognition to this citizen soldier who also provides a standby public safety and emergency force for the State.

I have participated in the inventory of the enlisted men's opinions and recommendations for building a more effective Alaska National Guard. These bills before you are reflections of what these men feel are necessary to keep them in the Guard and attract others. Thus the organization will accrue the greater gains of education and training of the individuals who re-enlist.

I urge you to favorably consider and vote for the following bills which make up the comprehensive program:

House Bills

83	Qualifications of Assistant Adjutant Generals (In Senate)
649	Appropriation for the Recruitment, Retention and Retirement Program
753	State Pay - Emergencies
754	Retirement and Death Benefits
755	Educational Assistance - Alaska Guardsmen
756	Recruitment and Retention Division, Department of Military Affairs
757	Re-enlistment Bonus
758	Uniform and Maintenance Allowances

Senate Bills

380	Retirement and Death Benefits
472	Military Leave State Employees
514	Suspension of Civil Liabilities
515	National Guard Registration Plates
516	Free Ferry Trip - Space Available Basis
517	National Guard Preference State Hire
518	National Guardsmen Qualifying for Veterans Loan Program
519	Alaska National Guardsmen Qualifying for Veterans Public Loan Preference

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

HOUSE BILL NO. 762

This bill allows for the establishment of the position of coroner/public administrator in each judicial district. With the approval of the supreme court, the presiding judge of the superior court in a district may appoint the public administrator. The primary duty of this person will be to administer the estates of deceased persons when administration is required by law and when no other person entitled to administer a particular deceased person's estate has been issued letters testamentary or letters of administration within 30 days after the death. He will also perform the duties of coroner set out in AS 22.15.110.

Presently the law requires district judges to perform these non-judicial duties, and a great amount of time is spent on them. This bill will free these judges for their appropriate judicial functions. The bill is strongly supported by the Alaska Supreme Court and the Alaska Judicial Council.

Mr. Thomas Schulz, President

Dear Mr. Schulz:

I am enclosing herewith the Fifth Report, namely the report for 1967-68, of the Alaska Judicial Council.

I also am enclosing suggested language prepared by the Council and submitted to the legislature which would provide for appellate review of sentences.

Also enclosed is a copy of a bill prepared by the Legislative Affairs Agency, although not yet introduced, relating to the duties of coroner and conservator of decedent's effects. For quite some time the Council considered the desirability of transferring the functions of the district and deputy magistrates when investigating the death of a deceased person, and inventorying and conserving the assets of a decedent's estate, out of the jurisdiction of the district judges to the Department of Public Safety. Within the Department of Public Safety would be created the office with a position of coroner to perform these duties. I alone among the Council members dissented to this proposed legislation, not on the grounds that I was opposed to the transfer of functions but on the grounds that I felt that there should be some safeguards built into the statutes protecting the rights and privacies of individuals.

Under the proposed legislation the Commissioner of Public Safety names the coroners in each judicial district and, in addition, has the authority to designate a state trooper or any other personnel of his department as deputy coroner. In my opinion the sleeper in the bill as proposed is Section 6, which without restriction would authorize a policeman to take custody and control and preserve the property and the estate of deceased persons until a legal custodian is appointed. Under the way the proposed bill is worded a policeman being appointed deputy coroner could search the premises of the deceased under the guise of inventorying, taking custody and control, and preserving the deceased's property. This means, for example, that if a child in the City of Juneau or the City of Anchorage, or any other populated area, died in a hospital surrounded by his parents, brothers, sisters, aunts and uncles, etc., the police would still have the authority to enter the family home and search the home for the purpose of taking custody and control of the deceased child's estate. The same would apply to the death of a spouse living in Alaska but dying in the south forty-eight. The Alaska dwelling of the deceased person could be searched by the police, notwithstanding the fact that it was occupied by the family of the deceased.

While I can understand the rationale behind the proposition that someone has to conserve and preserve the estates of decedents who die out in unpopulated areas such as a trapper in his cabin, fifty miles from nowhere, or in a village or small community having no administrative or law enforcement agency, I don't believe that such reasoning applies to populated areas.

I submit the foregoing for consideration of the Juneau Bar Association. While the proposed bill has not yet been introduced, I anticipate that it will be introduced this session.

Very truly yours,

F. M. Doogan, Member
Alaska Judicial Council

Re: H.B. No. 767 - Destruction of Records of Motor Vehicle Violations

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As a representative of American Mutual Insurance Alliance I am concerned with House Bill No. 767 which states that all records held by state and local officials disclosing a violation of Sections 28.15.170 and 28.15.280 shall be destroyed three years after the violation.

This legislation is poorly drafted because the Sections referred to cannot be violated by a motor vehicle driver. These sections confer authority on the Department to cancel or suspend licenses if the license was improperly obtained or a court orders such suspension or cancellation. The only persons who can violate these sections are the employees of the Department who are required to administer them.

I do not think any serious harm would be done if the records of the Department of Revenue which are more than three years old are the only records which are to be destroyed but I cannot imagine the legislature requiring that either the records of the courts or the records of the Department of Public Safety or any municipality be destroyed. The records of the Department of Public Safety are particularly valuable in connection with police investigations.

I do not know who requested the bill to be introduced or what reasons there are for introducing it but I suspect the author wants to make it impossible for the courts and other public officials to be influenced by driving violations more than three years old. I do not think this is advisable. If a person gets drunk and is convicted of manslaughter as a result of drunken driving, I do not think the records should be destroyed after a period of three years and the same is true of any other criminal violation. My principal concern is with respect to the proper rating of insured drivers. Generally speaking, companies want to consider records for a period of at least five years and sometimes longer in order that they can rate each person justly for premium purposes.

I am sending a carbon copy of this letter to the Alliance which will constitute a request for its opinion and policy in this matter, and I will write to you again as soon as I receive an answer. In the meantime I would like to be informed in advance of the time of any consideration of this bill and be permitted to appear in opposition to it.

Yours very truly,

Re: House Bill No. 767

Dear Chairman Jackson:

Thank you for your notice that the House Judiciary Committee will hear representations regarding the subject bill this afternoon at its regular 4:00 P. M. meeting. I am writing this memo on the subject as suggested and submit it in lieu of an appearance because of a conflicting meeting at that time.

The bill itself would result in the destruction of motor vehicle violation records kept in the Department of Public Safety under the provisions of Article 2, Chapter 15, Title 28, Alaska Statutes, after three years.

It is my understanding that Alaska by virtue of certain interstate compacts reciprocates with other states with respect to driving records of individuals who seek to be licensed to operate motor vehicles. Such records would have a bearing on insurance matters such as rating drivers according to experience. More important is their relation to criminal violations, or the absence of criminal violations, associated with motor vehicle operation. With the prospect of many new residents in Alaska, I suggest the importance of our State officials being advised of their previous driving records.

Insofar as insurance matters are concerned, there have very infrequently been reports of unfair rating of insurance applicants because of a stale violation of perhaps 3 to 5 years past and perhaps even 10 years. Such sanctions are not favored by the American Insurance Association and do not have its approval.

From time to time insurers and insurance associations have encouraged and entered into such group efforts as safe driver plans and have encouraged and paid for analyses of driver accidents in the attempt to obtain meaningful statistics with respect to the more important general subject of better highway safety in the interests of the motoring public. The results of the California study show that the driver with a previous history of moving violations is more apt to be involved in a subsequent accident than the driver with a clear record. This bill would in effect destroy "good records" as well as bad ones.

Aside from the value of these records from an insurance standpoint I suggest that there is a greater public interest in the existence and maintenance of such records from the possible connection of criminal violations involved with motor vehicle violations. The importance of a record of a vehicle failing to stop at a stopsign is not essentially important by itself, but the fact that the driver may have been under the influence of drugs or under the influence of liquor at that time is a matter of legitimate public concern.

I have talked with judges involved in sentencing, and think it fair that they have the whole record before them, so the first offender may be treated more leniently than the habitual offdener.

In view of the above considerations, I am authorized to state the opposition of the American Insurance Association to the enactment of the subject bill.

Very truly yours,

FORM SA-18

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: Representative Irwin L. Metcalf
House of Representatives

File
Xerox 10 copies

DATE : March 16, 1970

FROM: Commissioner Mel J. Personett
Department of Public Safety

SUBJECT: HB 767

In addition to the obvious mistaken section references contained in this bill as outlined in my earlier memorandum, I submit the following comments concerning the possible intent of this bill.

If the bill is intended to prevent cancellation of insurance or higher premiums based upon an insurance company's request for a driver's record, you should be aware of the present procedure.

We currently disregard any conviction of OMVI, reckless driving, negligent driving or other serious violations which occurred five years or more prior to the request. All other driving convictions are disregarded if they occurred three years or more prior to the request.

Also, if the intent is based upon use by the insurance company, I question the need to "destroy" the records since they do have a great deal of bearing on the individual's demonstrated driving habits and under AS 28.15.220(b)(3) and (4) may be considered by the courts when imposing license restrictions at the time of conviction.

One must also consider what will occur when you have a situation wherein a person is convicted for a third offense of OMVI or reckless driving and his license is revoked for three years. He would be starting out with a clear record at the end of his revocation and would be able to be convicted several more times before any serious remedial action could be taken.

It would also be possible for a person to be convicted many, many times for OMVI and never show any past convictions, depending upon the time lapse between offenses.

I seriously question whether this bill will provide any great benefit to the vast majority of citizens, but it will unquestionably be quite beneficial to that 9% to 10% of drivers who cause the greatest concern for the traffic safety of the majority of drivers.

HOUSE JOURNAL

Judiciary Committee Report

on

CS for HOUSE BILL NO. 776

Taking into account the fact that Alaskan courts have interpreted the prohibition of AS 11.15.060 against criminal abortions as not applying to the artificial interruption of a pregnancy before the quickening of the fetus, this bill prohibits all abortions by persons other than physicians licensed in this state and it treats abortions by these licensed physicians as a matter of the practice of medicine.

The committee substitute adds a section to the physician's licensure chapter and makes clear that this is a matter of medical practice. This new section sets out certain requirements: the physician must be licensed; the woman's consent must be knowledgeable; she must be a domiciliary of the state or physically present in the state for at least 60 days immediately before the abortion, as evidenced by her affidavit; the abortion must be performed in a facility which conforms to acceptable standards of organized medicine and hospitals; and, if the woman is an unmarried minor, the consent of her parent or guardian or the Department of Health and Welfare is required. The inclusion of guardian and the department is intended to cover those cases in which the department or a guardian has legal custody of the minor, or in which the parents are dead or have abandoned her, or in which she is an emancipated minor.

The committee notes with approval and attaches to this report a memorandum by Legislative Counsel Hayden Kaden, dealing with current abortion law in Alaska and other states.

Dear Representative Hensley:

Enclosed you will find a possible substitute bill I suggest to replace measures for abortion law reform presently before committees of both houses of the Legislature. This is a possible compromise measure which incorporates many of the safeguards indicated as desirable during a recent hearing by the Senate Judiciarry Sub-Committe in Anchorage, while minimizing unnecessary interference with the practice of medicine.

I also enclose a copy of a statement recently drafted for possible publication, for whatever value you and your committee might obtain therefrom.

These enclosures represent my personal convictions and are not issued on behalf of the Alaska State Medical Association.

Respectfully yours,

John A. Pennington, MD

February 16, 1970

Dear Editor:

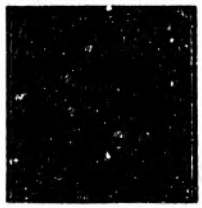
This letter is addressed to the abortions law reform question. The recent Senate Judiciary Sub-Committee hearing was educational for me, for it indicated several areas of legitimate concern by both lay public and other physicians. The following are my personal views as a physician who encounters this problem in my own practice; I do not speak here as a representative of the Alaska State Medical Association, although I believe our opinions are frequently parallel.

These considerations seem relevent to me:

1. Abortion presently is commonplace in our society. Few knowledgable proponents of reform expect a liberalized statute to entirely eliminate illicit abortion with its burden of venality, guilt, morbidity, and death. Elimination of any of this scourge, however, would at least be a step forward.
2. A woman has the constitutionally protected rights of person and private conscience to determine whether to continue a pregnancy. This doctrine, like it or not, has been affirmed by judicial decisions. In the near future most present state abortion laws, including Alaska's, will probably be struck down by the courts for unjustified limitation of these rights. Still to be defined in Alaska by legislative act and/or judicial decree are those areas where personal liberty and the legitimate interests of the state intersect. The state indisputably has the duty to suppress illicit abortion with its attendant hazards to both Society and the individual woman; ethical physicians urge this regulation. The state also might properly and wisely require that abortion be performed only in an adequate hospital by a qualified practitioner of medicine after appropriate consultation and appropriate delay to allow reconsideration by the woman. Individuals may differ on the stringency of these safeguards, but their differences are open to compromise.
3. Abortion is repugnant to most physicians; we are dedicated to the preservation of meaningful life. The need for artificial termination of a pregnancy usually results from failure to either prevent or protect that pregnancy. There are definate medical indications for therapeutic abortion--diseases of mother or fetus--which could not be anticipated prior to conception, but these are uncommon. More frequently, abortion is thought to be the only remaining solution for unwanted pregnancies arising from potentially avoidable defects in society, the mother-to-be, or the fetus. To prevent a need for this solution, physicians actively support family planning programs, adolescent sex education, marital counselling, suppression of sex crime, child aid measures, eradication of intrauterine deseases, facilities for unwed mothers, and supportive care for women with undesired pregnancies who might be so aided as to eschew abortions. Unfortunately, until such measures are more generally available and effective, "...abortion is often the best (though an unhappy) solution."
4. In my opinion legal abortion whould be unacceptable for the primary purpose of population control, urgent though that may be. Abortion is successfully promoted for this purpose in some countries, but the concept is alien to most Americans. I am unacquainted with any Alaskan physicians who would abort a woman on a casual repetitive basis as a consequence of her repeated unconcern with avoidance of conception or for the sole purpose of limiting population. We do not seek a situation where legal abortion is available "by demand".

5. Whether abortion is or is not morally acceptable is entirely subjective depending on one's ethical and religious beliefs. The crux of this argument is the stage in fetal development at which the conceptus is considered a human being with the soul, inherent rights, and protections thereof. This time has been variously held to be from the instant of conception onward to parturition when the fetus assumes independent existence as an infant, with various points in between. Obviously this basically is a theological, not medical, question; consequently, consensus will never be achieved. All shades of personal belief can exist on this question without clear-cut adverse effect to the public welfare so long as mutual toleration prevails. By recognizing the existence of non-illicit abortion and formulating reasonable regulations for its safe practice, the state takes no more of a partisan moral position than it does regarding the use of alcohol, for example, by licensing the sale of liquor. I believe it inappropriate and unconstitutional for the state to impose by law an essentially religious doctrine in an area where there is no consensus of belief, no clearly overriding public interest, and where private conscience should prevail. Scrupulous non-interference by the state offers the only ultimate protection to all that cherished, though conflicting, religious and ethical doctrines will remain inviolable for each to follow as his faith and conscience dictates.

The battle is joined; this issue will not just fade away. Those minorities holding opposing extreme positions have clearly and vociferously stated their respective cases, and they are irreconcilable. Hopefully, a large, if "silent" majority of our electorate exists which may promote measures not simply to legalize appropriately regulated abortion, but also measures to minimize the necessity for resort to abortion as a solution. I would urge such people to communicate with our state legislators---they need your views and support now as never before.



Sincerely,

John A. Pennington, MD

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to abortion."
BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:
"Section 1. AS11.15.060 is repealed and re-enacted to read:
Sec. 11.15.060. ABORTION. (a) A person, not a physician, who provides to a woman, or procures a woman to take, a drug, medicine, or substance, or uses any instrument or other means whatever upon a woman with intent to induce an abortion of a woman is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years. For purposes of this section it shall not be necessary to prove that the woman was in fact pregnant, nor that an artificial interruption of pregnancy occurred.
(b) The artificial interruption of pregnancy by a qualified and licensed practitioner of medicine is a matter of the practice of medicine and not prohibited by criminal law if the pregnant woman has been consulted and consents, if the abortion is performed in a licensed hospital which conforms to standards of hospital accreditation approved by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, if at least two other licensed and qualified physicians consult with the woman and concur with the decision to abort, and if, in a non-emergency case, a period of at least 72 hours will transpire between the time of the request for the operation and the time of the operation.
(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed as requiring a pregnant woman to consent to abortion, a hospital to permit an abortion on its premises, or a physician to perform or consult on the performance of an abortion.

Dear Representative Jackson:

As you know, the Alaska State Medical Association is still hopeful for enactment of a liberal abortion law or repeal of the present statute.

H. B. 776 would be satisfactory but we recommend deletion of the wording "after consultation with her husband if married". This phrase would drive certain women to criminal abortionists. For example, the illicitly pregnant wife of a military man overseas, or for that matter the adulterously pregnant wife of a man not overseas, only added marital discord might be produced if the husband has to be consulted. In any event, the phrase is out of order because a woman is not required to consult her husband about other surgery, such as hysterectomy or appendectomy (though fortunately she usually does). A woman should have sole right as to decision about abortion if the doctor concurs that it is the best solution to her problem.

You may be interested in the editorial support for liberalized abortion laws by the Wall Street Journal.

Thank you for your continued attention to this matter.

REVIEW and OUTLOOK

Repealing Abortion Laws

A growing number of Americans are coming to the conclusion that the best reform of abortion laws is outright repeal, and the state of Hawaii has already acted on that promise.

It is a rather remarkable turnaround. Only a couple of years ago no one would think that anything so "radical" as a repeal proposal would have any chance at all. Yet today several states have liberalized their laws and one house of the New York State legisture this week approved what would amount to Hawaii-like repeal.

The changing attitude is not, in our opinion, just one more manifestation of the new permissiveness of the times. On the contrary, it attests to a greater awareness of the anguish suffered by the victims of the harsh laws that remain on the books.

The objections to repealing abortion laws have by no means, of course, been completely stilled.

Abortion is anathema to certain religions, and while they have every right in their views, they have no right to impose their views on the society at large. Legalizing abortion obviously does not require Roman Catholics or anyone else to practice it; they are as free as ever to shun it and indeed to denounce it.

Some contend that legal abortion would aggravate the sexual latitude of the age. We doubt it. Presumably no one wants an abortion if there is a better choice, and as it is the number of illegal abortions is appallingly high. Taking abortion out of the legal realm altogether might therefore not mean any significant increase in the total number of the operations.

Then there is the objection on the ground of moral philosophy: That abortion is the taking of human life. One answer to it is that no consensus, let alone proof, exists among medical practitioners or moralists. The fact is that many doctors would long since have been performing abortions had it been legal to do so.

For our layman's part, we find it particularly hard to accept that the embryo (first three months of pregnancy) is a human being in any real sense; we incline to the thesis that it is still part of the mother, manifestly incapable of independent existence.

Against these objections, the arguments for repeal seem far more persuasive.

First is that it is simply humanitarian. We have mentioned the suffering of the victims. It involves the degradation, humiliation and mental strain imposed by unwanted pregnancy and the effort to remedy it. A civilized society should not have such draconian laws, although it certainly can and should require that abortions be performed by licensed physicians under sanitary conditions.

Probably legalizing abortion would not be a significant population-control measure in this country (it has been highly effective in Japan). However, it fits in with the new concern—even apprehension—that unless population is controlled, the nation will in the not too distant future be so inundated that decent living conditions will be impossible.

In addition, the question of how many children should be up to the discretion of the woman or the husband and wife as the case may be. Generally speaking they have that right now—they do not have to have any children if they do not want to—and the right, it seems to us, should include the possibility of terminating an unwanted pregnancy.

To put it another way, this is an area where government has no necessary or appropriate function. These severe laws go back to a time and a mentality in which the State assumed it should closely regulate people's private lives; the statutes are, or are analogous to, sumptuary laws. We do not think they accord well with the concept of individual liberty.

Needless to say, there are still other areas where the State's intrusion is questionable. As a broad criterion in such matters, we believe that where the situation is truly private—that is, where the conduct of the individual or couple or family does not impinge on society or hurt anyone—government should refrain from intervention.

For whatever it is worth, it seems to us that abortion, unhappy though it be at best, belongs in that category.

Re: Proposed bill to amend work release program

Dear Representative Jackson:

This letter is to set forth the distinctions between the Department of Health and Welfare's suggested amendments to the work furlough program and the amendments I have suggested. The department would not permit persons who have been convicted of a violent crime or who have a history of violent or assaultive behavior to be eligible for work release until one-third of their sentence is served.

From observation many convictions involving violent crimes relate directly to the consumption of alcohol. A person with a history of assaultive behavior relating to the use of alcohol profits greatly from the work release program, he can begin to develop good work habits without the interference of alcohol. Further, the alcohol related offender in many instances has a family and the work release program permits him to contribute to the support of his family and himself.

A further problem faced by the correctional system and the state is providing a secure institutional setting with its great costs for persons who, when not under the influence of alcohol, are capable of living in an unguarded manner. Presently, the jail in Anchorage may be filled to over capacity with prisoners, many of whom could be living as successfully in a half-way house enviroment, where the only contact with the prison would be daily or less frequent meetings with the institutional probation officer. The proposed rehabilitation furlough bill would authorize the Commissioner of Health and Welfare to permit prisoners to reside outside of the prison, e.g., in the Salvation Army dormitory or other non-state contracted institutions.

The department's proposed amendments do not grant as much authority to the Commissioner of Health and Welfare to develop programs for the rehabilitation of prisoners as the suggested amendments of the undersigned. A large measure of flexibility to provide individualized programs appears to be needed. The department only goes part way in seeking this flexibility.

Re: Proposed amendment to AS 33.30.250,
Rehabilitation Furlough

Dear Representative Jackson:

This letter relates to the memorandum from Charles G. Adams, Jr., Director, Division of Corrections, dated February 17, 1970 proposing amendments to the work furlough program. Attached is a proposed bill to accomplish the amendments requested by Mr. Adams and, in addition, to make the furlough program a better tool to aid the prisoner's rehabilitation.

From the undersigned's experience it is apparent many of the prisoners in state correctional institutions are involved with alcohol related offenses. In certain instances these alcohol related offenses are violent crimes, e.g., cutting with intent to wound, assault with a dangerous weapon, assault and battery, the law presently prohibits work furlough for these prisoners. It is the alcohol related offender who profits greatly from work releases.

A further problem faced by the correctional system and the state is providing a secure institutional setting with its great costs for persons who, when not under the influence of alcohol, are capable of living in an unguarded manner. Presently, the jail in Anchorage may be filled to over capacity with prisoners, many of whom could be living as successfully in a half-way house enviroment, where the only contact with the prison would be daily or less frequent meetings with the institutional probation officer. The proposed rehabilitation furlough bill would authorize the Commissioner of Health and Welfare to permit prisoners to reside outside of the prison, e.g., in the Salvation Army dormitory or other non-state contracted institution.

In summary, the proposed bill is submitted as a step in the direction of giving the Commissioner of Health and Welfare the latitude he needs to implement the provision of Section 12, Article 1, Constitution of Alaska:

> "Penal administration shall be based on the principle of reformation and upon the need for protecting the public."

If you or the members of your committee have questions concerning the proposed-bill, I am prepared to furnish additional information.

BILL NO.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to rehabilitation furloughs."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 33.30.250 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 33.30.250. REHABILITATION FURLOUGH. (a) When a person is awaiting trial or is convicted of a crime and is sentenced to a prison facility, or is imprisoned in the prison facility for nonpayment of a fine, for contempt, or as a condition of probation for a criminal offense, the commissioner may, if he concludes that the person is a fit subject for a rehabilitation furlough direct that the person be allowed to continue in his regular employment, may authorize the person to secure employment for himself, participate in educational, training, medical, psychiatric, or other rehabilitation programs approved by the commissioner.

(b) If the commissioner directs that the prisoner be permitted to continue in his regular employment, the commissioner shall arrange for a continuation of the employment so far as possible without interruption. If the prisoner does not have regular employment, and the commissioner has authorized the prisoner to secure employment for himself, the prisoner may do so, and the commissioner may assist him in doing so. Any employment secured must be suitable for the prisoner. The employment must be in accordance with the prevailing working conditions and wages in the area. No employment may be permitted where there is a labor dispute in the establishment in which the prisoner is, or is to be, employed.

(c) Whenever the prisoner is not involved in the rehabilitation program, he shall be confined in the jail unless the commissioner directs otherwise.

(d) The earnings of the prisoner shall be collected by the commissioner and the prisoner's employer shall transmit the wages to the commissioner at the commissioner's request. Earnings levied upon under a writ of attachment or execution or in other lawful manner may not be transmitted to the commissioner. If the commissioner has requested transmittal of earnings before the levy, the request shall have priority for those earnings due and payable at that time. When an employer transmits the earnings to the commissioner, he has no liability to the prisoner for the earnings. From the earnings, the commissioner shall pay the prisoner's board and personal expenses, both inside and outside the prison facility, and shall deduct so much of the costs of administration of this section as is allocable to the prisoner, and, in an amount determined by the commissioner, shall pay the support of the prisoner's dependents, if any. If sufficient funds are available after making the foregoing payments, the commissioner may, with the consent of the prisoner, pay, in whole or in part, the pre-existing debts of the prisoner. Any balance shall be retained by the commissioner and paid to the prisoner at the time of his discharge.

(e) If the prisoner violates the conditions established for his conduct, custody, or employment, the commissioner may order the balance of the prisoner's sentence to be spent in actual confinement.

(f) The wilful failure of a prisoner to return to the place of confinement not later than the expiration of any period during which he is authorized to be away from the place of confinement under this section, is an escape from the place of confinement and is punishable under the laws relating to escape.

(g) A rehabilitation furlough for employment may not be authorized for a prisoner identified with large-scale, organized criminal activity.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Mr. Carlson has suggested that the supreme court, in the exercise of its rule-making power, permit appeals from sentences imposed by magistrates which exceed thirty days. I think this might have to be done by legislative act. See AS 22.15.240(b) [SLA 1969 ch. 117].

Re: House Bill No. 784 relating to magistrates' jurisdiction over misdemeanor cases

Dear Representative Jackson:

Your committee has submitted the subject bill which would remove from the jurisdiction of magistrates the power to be the judge in trials of misdemeanors alleging violations of state law. The bill does not affect the jurisdiction of magistrates to sentence upon a plea of guilty to a misdemeanor in violation of state law or to be the judge in trials of misdemeanors alleging violations of municipal ordinances.

An alternative to the subject bill is suggested, a resolution urging the Supreme Court to permit appeals from sentences imposed by magistrates which exceed 30 days. Presently, Supreme Court Order No. 101, which amended Rule 7, Alaska District Court Criminal Rules, permits appeals from sentences of 180 days or more.

Further, the appropriation of funds to supplement the training of magistrates and other court personnel would help to eliminate mistakes which may now be occurring.

re: House Bill No. 784

Dear Representative Jackson:

You have asked for my comments on House Bill No. 784 which would take away from magistrates jurisdiction over misdemeanor cases, except those involving violations of ordinances of political subdivisions.

There are 54 magistrate locations in Alaska. House Bill No. 605, which would assign magistrates to each city of the fourth class, would increase the number of magistrates by 50 - for a total of 104. There are about 16 district judges. All misdemeanor cases, except those involving violations of ordinances of political subdivisions, would have to be handled by the district judges if House Bill No. 784 becomes law. This would create great delays in disposing of misdemeanor cases in remote areas, and would also result in considerable increased costs in travel.

I do not understand the basic reason for this piece of legislation. A defendant must waive jurisdiction of the district court in order to be tried by the magistrate.

This seems to be ample protection of his rights. If there is concern about protection of the public interest, which might arise by reason of a magistrate being too lenient, then recourse can be had to the presiding judge of the superior court who has the authority to terminate a magistrate's employment and appoint a new one.

I think it is unwise to enact such legislation without a complete and thorough study of the impact it will have on the administration of justice outside the major populated areas of Alaska. Certainly it would result in delays and in increased costs and administrative burdens. Whether this would be justified by the need to limit a magistrate's jurisdiction, I do not know.

You wondered whether some kind of a certification procedure could be set up, whereby the presiding judge of a district court could certify certain misdemeanor cases for trial by the magistrate. I do not know on what basis such decisions would be made, whether based on the kind of case involved or the quality of the magistrate. I am certain, however, that this would result in a considerable increase in administrative work and delays in disposing of cases.

We are trying our best to improve the quality of the magistrate courts. This year marks the second year of a concerted effort by the court system to bring comprehensive training programs to all of the magistrates in Alaska. During the period April 6 to 10, 1970, every magistrate will be in Anchorage for a seminar designed to better equip them to handle matters currently within their jurisdiction. We have noted from last year's seminar, that this type of training has had a good effect, in producing better decisions, procedures and records. We are hopeful and expect that there will be continued improvement.

SUBJECT: Qualifications of magistrates

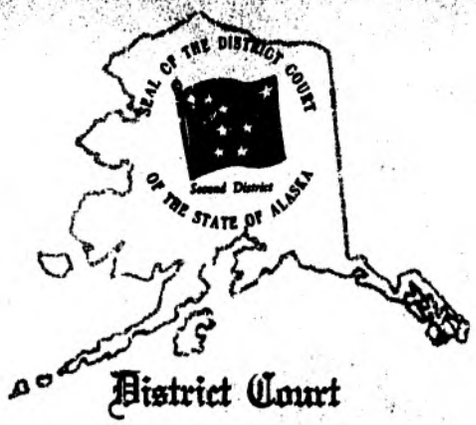
You requested information on this subject. In AS 22.15.160, "Qualifications of district judges and magistrates", subsection (b) provides:

> "(b) A magistrate shall be a citizen of the United States and of the state, at least 21 years of age, and a resident of the state for at least six months immediately preceding his appointment. The supreme court may prescribe additional qualifications."

In AS 22.15.170, "Selection of district judges and magistrates", subsection (c) provides:

> "(c) The presiding judge of the superior court in each judicial district shall appoint the magistrates for the district court for the judicial district. Each magistrate serves at the pleasure of the presiding judge of the superior court in the judicial district for which appointed."

Rule 36(b), Rules of Administration, provides:



> "(b) Magistrates. To be eligible for appointment as a magistrate, a person must meet the qualifications prescribed in AS 22.15.160."

Today I talked with Judge Thomas Stewart, the Presiding Superior Court Judge of the First Judicial District, about the appointment of magistrates. He said that, so far as he knows, the judicial council has not recommended and the supreme court has neither proposed nor adopted qualifications for magistrates beyond those specified in the statute. He stated that he follows a very rigid screening process which involves soliciting applications in the community, personally interviewing applicants (for example, before the relatively recent appointment in Yakutat he interviewed at least seven persons in addition to the one finally appointed), and personally going to the community to interview leaders of the community to learn more about the applicants. Factors he considers are age, experience, education, residence in the community, and standing in the community. The judge expressed his willingness to discuss with the committee these procedures and the qualifications of magistrates.

SUBJECT: HB 786 (notice requirements for regulation-adopting under the APA)

Two objectives must be borne in mind when dealing with a notice requirement for administrative regulations: (1) the need to give the public actual notice of agency action; and (2) the need to allow some administrative flexibility. The present language in AS 44.62.200 would seem to do this, but in light of certain judicial interpretations and the reaction to certain attorney general opinions perhaps some clarification would be helpful. (It should be noted that Judge Occhipinti's September 19, 1969 order in Botner v. Reetz, No. 69-697D, is not in the least bit helpful without reading the memoranda of counsel in that case. He simply says "In reviewing the memoranda of counsel, the Court finds that notice as given after 1961 did not comply with the statutory requirements of setting forth 'either the express terms or an informative summary of the proposed action'." No reasoning is given in the order.)

There are various possible approaches:

(1) HB 786 suggests one aimed at action of the Department of Fish and Game. However, it poses some problems: first, the reference to "(a) of this section" and to "times, dates, numbers and similar items" is slightly confusing because (a)(1) refers to the time, place, etc., for the regulation-adopting proceedings; secondly, "similar items" is extremely vague; thirdly, the list of certain matters that may vary from the notice raises a strong implication that no others may do so, which is not desirable because this part of the APA applies to all state agencies (with limited exceptions); fourthly, the possibility of variation is wide open, the restriction to the same "subject matter" not being an adequate guide to the agency in giving proper public notice (e.g., is the subject matter "fishing regulations", or "fishing regulations on season dates", or "fishing regulations on season dates for Southeastern Alaska", or "fishing regulations on season dates for Southeastern Alaska, District 14"?).

(2) Somewhat similar to HB 786, a new section or subsection could be added expressly allowing variation from the notice; e.g., add (b) to AS 44.62.200 to read something like "A regulation which is adopted, amended or repealed may vary in content from the terms or summary specified in (a)(3) of this section if the subject matter of the regulation remains the same and the original notice was written so as to assure that members of the public are reasonably knowledgeable of the proposed agency action in order for them to determine whether their interests will be affected by it and whether there is cause for them to make their opinions on the matter known to the agency."

(3) It has been suggested that approach no. (2), above, be modified by omitting the last part, so that it would read: "A regulation which is adopted, amended or repealed may vary in content from the terms or summary specified in (a)(3) of this section if the subject matter of regulation remains the same." As indicated in approach no. (1), above, this would require a determination of what the "subject matter" is in each case, without giving any further guidance to the agency or protection to the public.

(4) The "informative summary" could be explained; e.g., amend AS 44.-62.200(3) to read: "either the express terms or an informative, subject-matter summary of the proposed action, which summary shall be written so as to assure that members of the public are reasonably knowledgeable of the proposed action in order for them to determine whether their interests will be affected by it and whether there is cause for them to make their opinions on the matter known to the agency;".

(5) Since the Department of Fish and Game and the problems regarding its regulations are somewhat unique, a special provision dealing with variation in its regulations could be added. However, correspondence with the Alaska Bar Association's Administrative Law Committee indicates that this approach would not be favored since the members of that committee are interested in bringing all state agencies under the APA, presumably with uniform notice requirements, etc.

(6) Perhaps an explanatory intent clause, added to any of the above approaches, would be helpful.

The committee may wish to consider whether the language in approaches no. (2) and (4), above, could be used to invalidate a regulation on the ground that an individual who belatedly discovers that his interests were affected by an agency regulation was not given sufficient information to make his decision before the regulation was adopted. If such an interpretation does not seem likely or reasonable, it is suggested that (2) and (4) are the best approaches of those listed above. Suggestions for different language are invited.

It should be noted that almost any language, short of a provision that omits a notice requirement altogether or one that requires the notice to contain the regulation verbatim, will necessitate an administrative decision as to what is "an informative summary" or what is the "subject matter" or what is a "minor" variation or what is "reasonable notice", etc. It should also be noted that the Department of Fish and Game's "double meeting" problem seems to be a matter of policy rather than of law. The department uses the first meeting as an information gathering session. It is not apparent how even the original HB 786 deals with that matter.

WORK DRAFT COPY

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 786

The original HB 786 was directed at solving certain problems the Board of Fish and Game has been having in its regulation-adopting procedures. The main problem has been the interpretation of "informative summary" in AS 44.62.200(3); notice of proposed regulations is required to contain either the express terms or an informative summary of them. Apparently as a result of certain opinions and advice from the Office of the Attorney General and certain rulings of the superior court in the Third Judicial District, the board feels that a regulation it adopts may not vary at all from the notice given for that regulation, especially when dealing with such things as the bag limits on game animals and the starting times and dates for fishing seasons; it also seems to feel that two meetings are required for the adoption of regulations, the first one being an information-gathering session.

The Judiciary Committee believes that the intent of the existing law does not require this, but that since such administrative difficulty has arisen there should be some clarification of the law. Two objectives must be borne in mind when dealing with a notice requirement for administrative regulations: (1) the need to give the public reasonable notice of agency action; and (2) the need to allow some administrative flexibility. The committee substitute attempts to meet these objectives, providing some guidance for the agencies and protection for the public. It removes two items of uncertainty in the original bill, and removes the possibility of a negative inference arising from the listing of specific matters ("times, dates, numbers and similar items") that may vary from the notice; the committee substitute applies to all types of regulations.

The committee recognizes the difficulty in maintaining the balance between generality and specificity in writing notices which give members of the public sufficient information to decide whether their interests could be affected by the agency action and thus whether to make their opinions known to the agency. It would appear that almost any statutory language, short of a provision that omits a notice requirement altogether or one that requires the notice to contain the regulation verbatim, will necessitate an administrative decision on an issue such as the content of "reasonable notice".

Barry:

You will find attached a new proposed CS for HB 786. This resulted from the discussion between Av Gross, Tom Wardell and Keith Goltz, yesterday, and it looks o.k. to me. The only difference between this one and the one I prepared a week or so ago is that it deletes the reference to "express terms", which they believe has led the court to require that the "informative summary" be something approaching the express terms.

There is also attached a new committee report, based on my earlier one, but including two examples written by Av Gross and a new paragraph on the board's two-meeting procedure (written by me, and concurred in, I believe, by the attorney general's office). Keith Goltz suggests deleting the reference to the attorney general's office in the first paragraph (but I think the reference is accurate and should be left in, as further evidence of the nature of the problem the committee was dealing with in preparing the committee substitute).

HOUSE JOURNAL

Judiciary Committee Report

on

CS for HOUSE BILL NO. 786

The original HB-786 was directed at solving certain problems the Board of Fish and Game has been having in its regulation-adopting procedures. The main problem has been the interpretation of "informative summary" in AS 44.62.200(3); notice of proposed regulations is required to contain either the express terms or an informative summary of them. As a result of certain rulings of the superior court in the Third Judicial District, and, apparently, certain opinions and advice from the Department of Law, under the present language of the statute, the board feels that its notice of proposed regulations must be very detailed and specific and that a regulation it adopts may not vary at all from the notice given for that regulation, especially when dealing with such things as the bag limits on game animals and the starting times and dates for fishing seasons.

The Judiciary Committee believes that such a restrictive approach is not desirable, and since this administrative difficulty has arisen there should be some clarification of the law. Two objectives must be borne in mind when dealing with a notice requirement for administrative regulations: (1) the need to give the public reasonable notice of agency action; and (2) the need to allow some administrative flexibility. The committee substitute attempts to meet these objectives, providing some guidance for the agencies and protection for the public.

By way of example, the committee believes that notice by an agency that it is going to consider regulations setting a limit on bear in a particular area of the state should be sufficient to support agency action setting any limit, or no limits, in that area. Similarly, notice that the agency will consider a regulation opening the fishing season on a particular date is sufficient notice to support any date, since the subject matter of the regulation (opening the season) remains the same. The committee substitute is directed toward clarification of any confusion that may exist on this point. Moreover, the CS removes two items of uncertainty in the original bill, and removes the possibility of a negative inference arising from the listing of specific matters ("times, dates, numbers, and similar items") that may vary from the notice; the committee substitute applies to all types of regulations.

The committee recognizes the difficulty in maintaining the balance between generality and specificity in writing notices which give members of the public sufficient information to decide whether their interests could be affected by the agency action and thus whether to make their opinions known to the agency. It would appear that almost any statutory language, short of a provision that omits a notice requirement altogether or one that requires the notice to contain the regulation verbatim, will necessitate an administrative decision on an issue such as the content of "reasonable notice."

The committee notes that the Board of Fish and Game seems to feel that two meetings are required for the adoption of its regulations, the first one being an information-gathering session. This does not appear to be required by law, but is, rather, a matter of policy of the board. Neither the original bill nor the committee substitute deals with this matter, except to the extent that the board should be able to write a notice that would be adequate to permit information-gathering and regulation-adopting at a single meeting. It is the committee's intent that this matter of the number of meetings be left to the discretion of the board. It would appear that the board could adopt meeting procedures, consistent with the law, which would facilitate achieving the objectives stated above.

RE: House Bill No. 801

Dear Willie:

The provisions of House Bill No. 801 have caused some discussion within the University and among the Regents. In particular, we are concerned, not in the aim expressed, but the method of implementing it.

I think we are all in agreement that higher education can be helped and strengthened by the State contracting with private institutions for educational or other services. But I think the sole authority for such contracting, on behalf of the State, should rest in the Board of Regents, and not with the Commissioner of Education. The Regents are now charged with post-secondary education throughout the State and the fragmentation of that responsibility would I think be violative of the constitutional scheme, and it most certainly would lay a basis for problems to develop.

This is not to say that the Regents are the only ones who have any "smarts" regarding post-secondary education. But the scheme is presently to centralize the effort in that area and I believe fragmenting it could only cause duplication, waste, and lead to controversy. And the present set up has shown it is workable and it does not lead necessarily to centralization of effort.

As example, we have recently met with the Board of Education for the State, and we continually coordinate with local boards of education regarding the community college programs throughout the State. This partnership of effort, which finds central direction through the Regents, is working exceedingly well. It would certainly be a mistake to set up separate boards for each community college, for example.

Similarly, we are now engaged in a very progressive and rewarding effort with Alaska Methodist University to provide a consortium of universities in the Anchorage area. To be successful, we will have to make substantial contractual arrangements with AMU for joint use of facilities, sharing of faculty, movement of students between programs and the like. I look for this effort to be equally as or more successful than the joint effort regarding community colleges. Again, however, it would cause nothing but problems if the right to make such contracts was decentralized from the Regents in any way.

You know of the recent efforts between the Regents and Commissioner Hartman and the State Board of Education regarding the programming and management of funds for vocational education through the Commissioner's office and to the community colleges. With such splendid cooperation in this and other areas, there seems no reason to me why similar cooperative efforts could not be continued in the contracting with private institutions. That is if the Commissioner had such a program, it should be no problem to get contracts as needed through the Regents of the University. In doing so, the essential centralization of planning and coordination would be maintained.

I would hope, therefore, that your Committee would not favor enacting House Bill 801. I think no legislation is required, as the Regents already have such authority to enter into such contractual arrangements.

Very truly yours,

Brian J. Brundin, Regent

Chairman, House Judiciary Committee

Dear Mr. Jackson:

I was shocked to hear from you this morning that the House Judiciary Committee has indicated an unwillingness to consider H.B. 803, relating to the jurisdiction of superior courts.

My dismay is best seen in the light of some past history. Since March 31, 1970, when this bill was first introduced by the Committee, I have been scheduled to appear at least seven times to testify in support of the bill. On several of those occasions I waited for the duration of the committee session, only to be told that there would be no time for consideration of the bill, even though other public witnesses had been heard. On two occasions I extended my stay in Juneau to find that at the eleventh hour that the meeting had been postponed, or that H.B. 803 would not be taken up.

The House Judiciary Committee has been as generous as any other legislative committee in considering bills we have proposed on behalf of indigent clients in Alaska. You have always evidenced an open mind to those proposals, and for that the Committee is to be commended.

It is not too late for action on H.B. 803. The Senate has already passed a substantially similar bill, S.B. 297, and would, I am certain, be willing to concur in a House version which closely parallel it. The Senate bill passed last year, in April, by a vote of 19-1.

Although this legislation does not provide new substantive rights, it is extremely important in terms of the procedures by which violations of the state anti-discrimination statutes can be corrected and enforced. It would provide that individuals complaining of violations be permitted to file an action in state superior court.

The State Human Rights Commission has specifically endorsed this legislation on two separate occasions, December 10, 1969, and March 6, 1970.

HB 803

I urge the Committee to take this bill up at the earliest possible date. Unfortunately I will not be able to remain in Juneau for the remainder of the legislative session. However, should the Committee reconsider, Dick Regan of our Juneau office is available to appear before you at any time on this bill.

Respectfully,

Philip B. Byrne

HB-803

Comments Of
Alaska Legal Services Corporation
In Support of S.B. 297

This proposal was originally drafted by Alaska Legal Services attorneys and jointly introduced by Senators Josephson, Begich, Miller, Brad Phillips, and Rader. (S.B. 297) It passed the Senate April 7, 1969, with one dissenting vote, and has been referred to the State Affairs and Judiciary Committees of the House.

The State Commission for Human Rights exercises jurisdiction over all violations of existing State anti-discrimination laws. Specifically, its jurisdiction relates to discrimination in employment, whether by an employer, labor organization or employment agency; places of public accomodation; housing; financial practices; and state operations. (A.S. 18.80.210-255). Primary enforcement responsibility is vested in the State Commission for Human Rights. (A.S. 18.80.010 et seq.) The Commission, upon the receipt of a complaint from an aggrieved individual or upon its own motion (A.S. 18.80.100) may initiate informal proceedings to achieve conciliation (A.S. 18.80.110) and, if appropriate, issue a cease and desist order against the action and individual or firm as to whose action the hearing was conducted. (A.S. 18.80.120-130). In such proceedings the Commission, and not the complainant, would exercise control of the presentation. The complainant or the respondent may seek judicial review of the Commission's action (A.S. 18.80.135(a)). Enforcement of the cease and desist order may be judicially obtained, but only at the instance of the Commission (A.S. 18.80.135(b)). In addition to the above, enforcement may be had through criminal prosecution of a person who engages in action prohibited by the substantive provisions of the anti-discrimination laws. (A.S. 18.80.270).

As provisions are now written, it is unclear whether an individual is required to resort to the Commission for Human Rights for relief from discriminatory conduct, or if he is free to seek redress directly through the courts. A second problem is that the terms of the present act do not indicate that relief may be sought as a member of a class, or that the Commission may act against a pattern of discrimination within an industry, labor union, etc., rather than merely dealing with individual instances of discrimination.

The proposed addition specifically states that the Superior Courts of Alaska shall have jurisdiction over causes of action arising under the Alaska discrimination laws, including any collateral issues which are a part of the discriminatory conduct complained of. This would include a pattern of discrimination which might otherwise not be cured if the issues were limited to specific discriminatory acts. For example, an individual who instituted an action against a company to redress racial discrimination would be able to maintain a class action and obtain relief as to all members of his class, including those who work in a different department.

It further provides for notification to the Commission whenever such a suit is filed, and that the Commission may either intervene in the suit as a party, or inform the Court that it is already acting on the discriminatory act giving rise to the lawsuit. In case of the latter, the court will defer action on the suit until the Commission has determined the issues before it. A limitation of forty-five days in this case is included to ensure the prompt settlement of these issues. The act empowers the Court to enter a preliminary injunction pending Commission action.

If the plaintiff's lawsuit is deferred to Commission action, the plaintiff is given the status of an "aggrieved" party in the event of an adverse decision so as to authorize his participation in or prosecution of an appeal from the Commission's order.

These amendments will serve three basic functions:

(1) an individual will be free to pursue his own remedies rather than rely upon Commission action in cases where the Commission is unable to give his problem prompt attention;

(2) class actions directed at patterns or practices will be permitted, rather than requiring enforcement to focus on individual or isolated acts; and

(3) the Commission's enforcement powers will be strengthened by the power to intervene in broad scale attacks upon discrimination.

We believe these amendments to be doubly important because of the limited staff and budget with which the Commission is currently required to operate.

This proposal was unanimously endorsed by the Board of Directors of Alaska Legal Services Corporation with the stipulation that a provision be added setting a nominal damage figure at $250. This could be accomplished by adding a sentence at the end of Section 18.80.340 as follows:

> Upon a judgment for the plaintiff in a case brought under this chapter, the court shall award nominal damages of $250.00 unless actual damages exceeding that amount have been established.

The Honorable Lester Bronson

Re: HB 809 and SB 565 - An Act Relating to Personal Property Protection Motor Vehicle Insurance

Dear Representative Bronson:

Reference is made to House Bill 809 which is now pending before your committee.

The Department of Revenue opposes HB 809 as it presently reads for several reasons. A brief summary of some of these reasons follows:

1. Line 23 on page 26 of HB 809 defines department as being the Department of Public Safety. While that department administers the drivers license statutes, the Department of Revenue administers the Motor Vehicle Registration statutes. As such the Department of Revenue would be deeply involved in handling registration of vehicles and insurance under the act. It is not believed that the bill as presently worded distinguishes this sufficiently in the administration of the act.

2. Line 8 of page 27 modifies AS 28.10.050(a) by adding a new paragraph (6) which requires the Department of Revenue obtain from each application for registration proof that the security required by the bill has been obtained. Line 10 on page 27 of the bill amends AS 28.10.100 by stating that the Department of Revenue shall refuse to register the vehicle if the security is not in effect on the vehicle. The present registration procedure does not require any supporting documentation such as this required for financial responsibility. The necessity of handling and to some degree auditing these insurance policies as a prerequisite to licensing would virtually double the cost of administration, and in the instance of the mail-out renewal program would prove even more costly as the Department of Revenue would have to write the taxpayer and request insurance proof whenever it was not received with the mailed-in application. (Because certain sized forms are used at present in filing and insurance policies are generally not printed on that size paper, the bill would require a virtual duplication of files in the Motor Vehicle Division. This will greatly increase the costs of administration.)

Since few insurance policies cover the calendar year and the 5-month grace period we will have many insurance policies expiring and being renewed. Shifts of policies from one company to another and cancellation will increase the cost of labor and material considerably.

3. Because insurance policies vary in their wording and their coverage it would appear necessary to design a standard insurance policy which everyone must follow. To do this the Attorney General's office would be given the power under the statute to design such a policy. Otherwise it would be virtually impossible for our present staff and licensing agents, who are untrained in the interpretation of insurance policies, to ascertain whether a vehicle is properly insured at the time of registration.

4. Lines 6 through 8 on page 26 of HB 809 provide that if a person fails to make payment within 30 days because of an injury or damage shall be grounds for suspension or revocation of the motor vehicle registration and operators license. Revocation of the motor vehicle registration should theoretically be revoked in the Division of Motor Vehicles, but locating the registered owner, cancelling his registration certificate and obtaining the plates back is a far more difficult thing to accomplish. The person and/or vehicle may be out of the state or their whereabouts may not be known.

It is requested that the Department of Revenue be given the opportunity to appear before your committee anc clarify these and other factors involved in the administration of HB 809.

Honorable Barry Jackson

Juneau, Alaska

Dear Representative Jackson:

This note accompanies a draft of HB 856 which takes into consideration the amendments proposed by you and members of your committee. They are as follows.

(1) In subsection (a) it will be noted that amendment has been made which would allow the ABC Board to require accommodations greater than 10 rooms for issuance or transfer of a license if in its discretion it felt that 10 rooms would not be a sufficient facility. This provision has the advantage of keeping the size requirements low enough to encourage smaller facilities while providing certain control over possible abuse under the section.

(2) Members of the committee expressed concern that tourist accommodations might be constructed but not used under a sec. 260 license, thus effectively circumventing the quota requirements. It was also noted that a facility should not have the tourist accommodations open on a part year basis but keep the dispensary open all year. Subsection (b) represents a relatively straight forward approach to these problems by requiring the tourist accommodations to be open and suitable for occupation whenever the bar is open. AS 04.10.320(b) (Duration of Licenses) provides for a one-half year license for seasonal operations which would be available to facilities desiring it.

(3) Subsection (c) makes sec. 270 applicable where a license would operate within an organized borough or city and would require assembly or council approval for issuance. This, of course, gives the localities affected some control over what "extra" licenses might be issued within their boundaries.

I hope these amendments meet with your approval.

DRAFT OF HOUSE BILL NO. 856

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to alcoholic beverage licensing to encourage tourist trade."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 04.10.260 is amended to read:

Sec. 04.10.260. LICENSING TO ENCOURAGE TOURIST TRADE. (a) The board may, in its discretion, approve the issuance or transfer of a license [INTO AN AREA OUTSIDE AN INCORPORATED MUNICIPALITY] without regard to the quota provisions [of secs. 210 - 290] of this chapter where it appears that the issuance or transfer will encourage the construction or improvement of a hotel, motel, resort or similar business related to the tourist trade having a minimum accomodation of 10 rooms. However, the board may in its discretion require a minimum accomodation of more than 10 rooms as a requirement for a license issuance or transfer under this section.

(b) The accommodations required in (a) shall be available and suitable for commercial occupation at all times during which alcoholic beverages are dispensed in accordance with a license under this section.

(c) An application for the issuance or transfer of a license under (a) of this section is subject to the provisions of sec. 270 of this chapter if the license applied for would be issued within an incorporated municipality.

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Capital Building

DATE : April 28, 1970

FROM: John K. Robertson, Director
Division of Banking, Securities,
Small Loans & Corporations
Department of Commerce

SUBJECT: Summary of Trust Company Bill

In less than a year, the Department has chartered one trust company and is currently considering two other applications. In addition, several application forms have been furnished to interested persons. Prior to this period, the Trust Act (AS 06.25) had never been used. We believe, in some instances at least, the sudden interest in the Act is due largely to the general banking privileges provided under Sec. 06.25.100, low capital requirements and the absence of supervisory and regulatory provisions.

As mentioned, the Department is now considering the "applications" of two trust companies. These "applications" consist of Articles of Incorporation filed under Title 10, List of Stockholders, Affidavit showing $25,000 in paid capital, Directors Oaths and the receipts showing a deposit of securities with the Department of Revenue. According to the statutes, after the trust company has furnished this information, the Department "shall" issue a Certificate authorizing the trust company to engage in business. In other words, in reality, there is no application or "consideration" of the application by the Department. Therefore, the purpose of the proposed trust company bill is to protect the public by preventing weak and unqualified entries into the state's financial system as well as establishing a legal framework within which the Department may provide continuing regulation and supervision.

The following is a brief explanation of the bill by section:

Sec. 1. Beginning capital requirements are increased from $25,000 to $100,000 and the par value is reduced from $100 to $1 per share. This would bring minimum capital requirements into conformance with those established for commercial banks (tends to eliminate weak applicants). Reducing the par value to $1 will allow broader distribution of the capital stock.

Sec. 2. Under the existing statute, a trust company may engage in the general banking business without having demonstrated its ability to do so. The amendments contained in this section would result in a qualification procedure for trust companies, essentially the same as for commercial banks. In other words, standards, i.e., public need and convenience, economic justification, and management capability would be applied. Membership in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation would be required of all trust companies engaging in the general banking business. Deposit insurance would not be required of trust companies involved solely in the trust business since the FDIC does not insure a trust company unless it receives deposits not connected with its trust accounts.

Sec. 3. Sec. 06.25.085 is a new section applying certain provisions of the banking code (AS 06.05) to the regulation, operation, and supervision of trust companies. Specifically, those provisions are:

Article I - Banking Code

Powers of the Department over State Banks Examination by the Department
Bank Reports to the Department

Article II - Banking Code

Handling Deposit Accounts
Reserves against Deposits
Legal Limits and other Limitations on Loans
Liability of Directors
Authorized Investments
Limitation on Borrowing
Investment in Banking Premises and Equipment

Article III - Banking Code

Issue of Capital Notes and Debentures
Application and Approval for Change of Location
Limitation on Payment of Dividends and Restoration of Surplus Approval of Conversion, Merger, or Consolidations Prohibited Practices
Department May Seek Injunction

The Trust Company Act is completely void of these operating and supervisory criteria. Such guide lines are essential to trust company management as well as the Department.

Sec. 4. Sec. 06.25.105 is new and provides branching privileges to those trust companies qualifying for deposit insurance.

Sec. 5. AS 06.25.230 is amended, providing that a trust company which is a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is not required to maintain the 20% capital reserve. However, it should be noted, that insured trust companies are required to maintain deposit reserves as required under Sec. 200 of the Banking Code.

Sec. 6. AS 06.25.250, covering deposit reserves is repealed as being superfluous since insured trust companies are required to maintain deposit reserves under Sec. 200 of the Banking Code and non-insured trust companies are required to maintain capital reserves under AS 06.25.230.

Sec. 7. Sec. 06.25.255 is new and provides that the Department may restrict or prohibit a trust company from offering a service which it is not qualified to offer.

Sec. 8. Sec. 06.25.315 is new and establishes standards for regulation and supervision of trust companies similar to those set out in the Banking Code.

Re: Juror's List - AS 09.20.050

Dear Representative Jackson:

Pursuant to your verbal request that the Departments of Revenue, Fish and Game, and Administration present you with their views respecting possible legislation to clarify problems that have arisen in the administration of Chapter 67 SLA 1969 (AS 09.20.050), I have contacted those other departments. It is our and their recommendation that the legislature consider taking the following action to solve the problems involved in administering Chapter 67 SLA 1969.

1. Since the voters list is made up according to precinct and the precincts have geographical limits within court districts, use of the voters list alone would solve most of the problems. We suggest you consider repealing Chapter 67 SLA 1969 and re-enactment of the prior statute as the simplest course.

2. If the list of voters is not broad enough, we recommend use of the voters registration list since it would increase the number of names available for jurors. Chapter 67 SLA 1969 could be amended to refer only to that list.

3. We question the apparent court system's interpretation of Chapter 67 that a single composite list with no duplications in names is to be furnished. The difficulty in furnishing such a list is finding a common denominator. Voters do not give their social security numbers and that number is not always present in the case of fishing licenses or income tax returns. Unless a common number can be assigned to an individual the only way that a single list could be prepared without duplication of names is to list persons by the sound of their names. Since individuals use their names and initials differently on different documents and many people have the same name or initials duplication occurs.

It is also difficult to present to the courts a list of names which will not contain duplication because of addresses. For example, voters may list their home address whereas the same person may use his mailing address on his income tax return or fishing license.

If Chapter 67 SLA 1969 is to be implemented, three separate lists will be submitted.

4. It is recommended that Chapter 67 be amended to require that the list of residents filing income tax returns and residents purchasing hunting and fishing licenses cover the even numbered years and be submitted by July 1 of the following odd numbered year. The voters list comes from general elections which fall in even numbered years. This would permit the court system and the departments involved to handle the problem of setting up jury lists only once every two years rather than once every year and would reduce the expense of preparing such lists.

If Chapter 67 is to remain in its basic format it is recommended that the statute be amended to provide that the list of persons purchasing resident fishing or hunting licenses cover those purchasing licenses during the previous year. At present it is not clear whether the statute speaks of the current year or the previous year. The Department of Fish and Game advises that the list it is currently preparing is of persons purchasing resident fishing licenses during 1970. A list for 1969 is not prepared. Administratively it would be more practical to furnish the list for the prior year rather than to furnish periodic lists during the year covering new licenses sold during the current year.

5. If Chapter 67 remains, it is recommended that it be amended to read that the income tax return list includes those persons filing returns having an Alaska address with no reference to residency. If this change is not made it is suggested that the term "resident" be defined for the purpose of determining whose income tax returns should be included because the definition of "resident" varies.

AS 09.20.010 states the qualifications of a juror to include that of being a resident of the state. No definition of resident is found in that chapter. However, AS 09.20.050 does refer to voters. AS 15.05.010(3) states that in order to vote the person must have been a resident of the state for at least one year before the election.

AS 16.05.940(14) of the fish and game statute gives an expanded definition of a resident. It reads:

> "(14) "resident" means a person who for 12 consecutive months has maintained a permanent place of abode in the state and who has continually maintained his voting residence in the state; and in the case of a partnership, association, joint stock company, trust, or corporation, "resident" means one that has its main office or headquarters in the state; however, a member of the military service who has been stationed in the state for the preceding 12 consecutive months is a resident for the purposes of this chapter, and the dependent of a resident member of the military service, who has been living in the state for the preceding year is a resident for the purposes of this chapter, and a person who is an alien but who for three years has maintained a permanent place of abode in the state is a resident for the purposes of this chapter;"

Although the income tax chapter (AS 43.20.010) refers to residents and nonresidents, those terms are not defined in the act. The California definition of a resident for income tax purposes is the general rule followed by most states. It reads as follows:

> "Section 17014. "Resident" includes:
> (a) Every individual who is in this State for other than a temporary or transitory purpose.
> (b) Every individual domiciled in this State who is outside the State for a temporary or transitory purpose.
> Any individual who is a resident of this State continues to be a resident even though temporarily absent from the State."

Some persons file resident tax returns who are sometimes temporarily out of the State and have non-Alaska mailing addresses. Others may file resident returns after they have left the State, covering periods in which they were residents in the State. Chapter 67 SLA 1969 would require the Department of Revenue to include all of those individuals on the list furnished to the court system.

Many persons move into the State during the year and make Alaska their permanent residence. When they file their income tax returns they are considered residents for that part of the year they are in Alaska (part time residents.) Their returns list Alaska addresses. Was it the intent of the legislature that the returns filed by part year residents be included in the list furnished to the court if (1) the return shows an Alaska address, or (2) the person claims to be a part year resident with or without an Alaska address?

Not all income tax returns are filed by April 15 following the year of the taxable period. If a complete list is to be furnished by the Department of Revenue the time for this to be submitted should probably be the close of the year following the tax year.

6. The Supreme Court in Green v. State of Alaska File No. 1177 states on page 19 and 20 of its Opinion as follows:

> "In the Third Judicial District selection of juries under the 1969 law will not have to be made before April 30, 1971. But in the First Judicial District, where the last list of jurors was prepared under the original act in January, 1969, the new law will have to be followed by January, 1971. We refer to this matter of implementing the 1969 law in order to advise the executive and legislative branches of our government that if the necessary lists cannot be obtained prior to January, 1971 at the latest, properly constituted juries cannot be selected, with resulting judicial chaos and a severe impairment of the administration of justice."

Since the final date for filing income tax returns is April 15 and in many instances extensions are granted, it will not be possible for the Department of Revenue to furnish a 1970 income tax list to the Third Judicial District by April 30, 1971. The earliest date covering most 1970 returns would be July 1, 1971. It is also questionable whether a list of holders of 1970 fishing and hunting licenses for the year 1970 can be furnished by January, 1971 to the First Judicial District. The Supreme Court did not specify when lists will be required for the Second and Fourth Districts.

If Chapter 67 is not repealed and the previous section re-enacted, it is recommended that the aforesaid changes be made to the act and the date to provide the first lists not be set before July 1, 1971.

Very truly yours,

HOUSE BILL NO. 860

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to the preparation of jury lists."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 09.20.050 is amended to read:

Sec. 09.20.050. JURY LIST. (a) At such times as the presiding judge of the superior court in each judicial district may designate, but not later than September 1 of each odd-numbered year [LESS THAN ONCE EVERY TWO YEARS], the clerk of the superior court in each judicial district shall prepare a list of the names of residents of the district who are qualified by law for jury service. The list shall contain the names of all persons who purchased a resident hunting or fishing license during the preceding year, all persons [RESIDENTS] who filed a state income tax return for the preceding year which showed an Alaskan address, and all persons who have registered to vote in this state [AS WELL AS THOSE PERSONS WHO VOTED IN THE PRECEDING GENERAL ELECTION]. If the superior court is located in different cities in the same judicial district, the clerk of the court located in each city shall prepare, at the times designated by the judge but no later than September 1 of each odd-numbered year [AT LEAST EVERY TWO YEARS], a list of names of persons qualified for jury service [. THE LIST SHALL CONTAIN THE NAMES OF ALL PERSONS WHO PURCHASED A RESIDENT HUNTING OR FISHING LICENSE, ALL RESIDENTS WHO FILED A STATE INCOME TAX RETURN FOR THE PRECEDING YEAR, AS WELL AS THOSE PERSONS WHO VOTED IN THE PRECEDING GENERAL ELECTION] and who are residents of that portion of the judicial district designated by the presiding judge.

(b) The jury list shall be based on the list of persons [, PREPARED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE OR THE DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND GAME,] who purchased a resident hunting or fishing license during the preceding year, as prepared by the Department of Fish and Game, the list of persons who filed a resident state income tax return for the preceding year, as prepared by the Department of Revenue, and the [VOTING] list of registered voters, as prepared by the secretary of state. The departments and the secretary of state shall prepare their respective lists by judicial district, and shall submit them to the presiding judge of the superior court in each district no later than July 1 of each odd-numbered year [FROM THE PRECEDING GENERAL ELECTION. A QUESTIONNAIRE FOR PROSPECTIVE JURORS MAY BE ADOPTED AND SUBMITTED TO THEM BY THE ADMINISTRATIVE DIRECTOR OF COURTS].

(c) A copy of the jury list shall be transmitted only to each district judge and each superior court judge within the judicial district and shall be used to summon jurors residing within the immediate area of the court and for no other purpose.

(d) A questionnaire for prospective jurors may be adopted and submitted to them by the administrative director of the court system.

* Sec. 2. Jury lists in existence on the effective date of this Act may be used until September 1, 1971; however, these should be corrected and supplemented before September 1, 1971 to the extent reasonably possible in accordance with this Act, as determined by the presiding judge of the superior court in each judicial district.

Subject: SCR-27 - Hitchhiking

Dear Commissioner Personett:

After our meeting with you on Thursday, March 5, regarding SCR-27, it was the desire of the committee to relay our expression on this resolution. The committee wishes to see the Department of Public Safety reinstate the old regulation on hitchhiking. Based on your commitment to try and accomplish this, the committee has placed SCR-27 in a "Hold" status.

Sincerely,

Barry W. Jackson

DATE : March 24, 1970

FROM: Commissioner Mel J. Personett
Department of Public Safety

SUBJECT: Progress Report - SCR 27

We are currently reviewing all of 13 AAC in view of both SCR 27 and miscellaneous comments from the public and the legal profession.

We anticipate public notice and hearings within the next month or so.

As stated before, the hitchhiking section will be revised to read as previous to the 1969 revision.

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

M E M O R A N D U M

TO : Rep. Mildred Banfield, Chairman
Subcommittee on Dept. of Public Safety Regulations
House Judiciary Committee

FROM : Arthur H. Peterson, Revisor of Statutes

SUBJECT: Recently proposed changes in regulations of the Department of Public Safety

One of the main legislative concerns about the public safety regulations has been the new (as of December 31, 1969) hitchhiking regulation. This regulation, currently in effect, reads as follows:

> "13 AAC 02.180. PEDESTRIAN SOLICITING RIDE OR BUSINESS. A person may not stand on or along a highway for the purpose of soliciting a ride, employment, business or a contribution from the occupant of a vehicle."

Since this is such a broad, flat prohibition of hitchhiking, it was suggested by the House Judiciary Committee that if any regulation on this matter is necessary the pre-December 31, 1969 provision should be re-adopted. That provision reads as follows:

> "104.67 PEDESTRIANS SOLICITING RIDES OR BUSINESS. No person shall stand in a roadway in a manner that will distract a driver's attention for the purpose of soliciting a ride, employment or business from the occupant of any vehicle."

The proposed amendment would have 13 AAC 02.180 read as follows:

> "13 AAC 02.180. PEDESTRIAN SOLICITING RIDE OR BUSINESS. A person may not stand on or along a roadway in a manner that will distract a driver's attention for the purpose of soliciting a ride, employment, business or a contribution from the occupant of a vehicle."

This amendment changes "highway" to "roadway", adds "in a manner that will distract a driver's attention" and retains

"or a contribution" which is in the current regulation. And it retains the words "or along", referring to the roadway. "Highway" is a broader term than "roadway" (see 13 AAC 10.115 and 13 AAC 10.280), with the latter meaning just the main traveled portion of a highway; so this part of the amendment is a step in the direction the legislature desired; however, this will have no effect because the words "or along" are retained, thus defeating the legislative intent. The "in a manner . . ." language was taken from the pre-December 31, 1969 provision, and would be helpful if it were not for the "or along". Why the "or a contribution" was put in the current regulation and retained in the proposed one I don't know.

The effect of the regulation, with the proposed amendments, would be to continue the prohibition on hitchhiking (because if you are standing "along" a roadway hitchhiking, your purpose is to attract [or "distract"?] a driver's attention to your need for a ride). It also prohibits such things as hailing a bus, setting up a roadside vegetable or lemonade stand, and soliciting contributions for the blind. It is my opinion, and I believe this was concurred in by Commissioner Personett in his testimony before the House Judiciary Committee (at least with regard to hitchhiking), that there is no need for such broad prohibitions in Alaska. The Department of Public Safety's determination to impose such prohibitions, in the face of the Senate's passage of SCR 27 and the House Judiciary Committee's recommendations on the matter, appears unjustifiable.

It might also be noted that the history note at the end of the proposed 13 AAC 02.180 identifies the amendments as being at the request of the legislature. This does not conform to the Drafting Manual for Administrative Regulations (to which adherence is required by AS 44.62.060(a)), and I don't know why this was done. It should, of course, be deleted before the regulation is printed for distribution in the Alaska Administrative Register.

Another main concern of the committee was the problem involving buses stopping on the highway, prohibited by 13 AAC 02.-340(a). The proposed amendments add an exemption in sec. 340(b) for school bus drivers loading or unloading school children, and add a new subsection establishing a presumption that it was the registered owner who left a vehicle stopped, parked or standing in violation of a statute or traffic regulation. It does not appear that any of the proposed amendments deals with the problem of buses other than school buses stopping on the highway, and the committee's intent in this regard does not appear to have been implemented.

Another matter that has been called to my attention is the group of regulations relating to motorcycles. It has been suggested that some of these regulations were adopted for the purpose of harrassing motorcycle operators rather than meeting the legitimate needs of the public welfare and safety. For example, 13 AAC 04.280(a)(2) and 295 require motorcycles and motor scooters to be equipped with a windshield which rises at least 15 inches above the handlebars (unless the operator is wearing goggles or a face shield); when this is read in conjunction with 13 AAC 04.290, which prohibits handlebars from being more than 15 inches above the seat, we find that the top of the windshield of a motorcycle with handlebars on the same level as the seat would have to be 15 inches above the seat whereas the top of the windshield of a motorcycle with handlebars 15 inches above the seat would have to be 30 inches above the seat. It is not apparent how this promotes the public welfare or safety. Moreover, some of the requirements alone pose problems; goggles limit vision, as do helmets (13 AAC 04.280(a)(3)) which also muffle sound; a helmet requirement affects only the wearer and not the public, and thus is a criminal restriction serving no public interest; I have been told that, even with regard to the helmet wearer, safety experts do not agree that he is safer with one on, and some courts have held such a requirement invalid. (I have not researched the matter, but please see the attached Law Week notes which offer cases on both sides of the issue.) It seems likely that the safety experts would disagree about the 15-inch handlebar height requirement too. Also, 13 AAC 04.280(a)(1) requires motorcycles and motor scooters to have two rear-view mirrors whereas other vehicles (except for buses and certain large vehicles) need only have one (see 13 AAC 04.220). It is up to the legislature to decide whether regulations of such questionable necessity and even questionable validity should be allowed to stand; AS 44.62.320 provides for legislative annulment of administrative regulations.

cute these defendants for an aggravated offense under 49 U.S.C. § 322 (c), which adds the element of using any false or fictitious document or other fraudulent device to evade or defeat the Act or its regulations. The defendant contends that in order to show a violation of this aggravated provision, the government must prove fraudulent intent within the context of the common law elements of criminal fraud. However, it is the opinion of this court that Congress, in imposing an aggravated fine for the use of false documents in connection with infractions of I.C.C. rules and regulations, did not intend to create a statutory equivalent of common law fraud. Rather, as a malum prohibitum offense, proof is required to show that the defendants used false documents knowingly and willfully as part of a course of conduct which sought to evade or defeat an I.C.C. regulation. Proof of specific intent to defraud the I.C.C. is not prerequisite to a finding of guilt. A construction of the Act requiring proof of fraudulent intent, or other common law elements of the crime of fraud, 'would result in limitations neither expressed in the statute nor justified in the light of the purpose' of the Act. See United States v. Luxon, 166 F.Supp. 25, 29 (E.D.Ky. 1958), for a similar construction of a statute penalizing the making of a false statement, knowing it to be false, to the Commodity Credit Corporation, for the purpose of influencing action or obtaining money and therefore defeating the statutory purposes of 15 U.S.C. § 714. That provision was held not to evoke the common law elements of fraud. For these reasons, this court concludes that a specific intent to defraud the I.C.C. is not a required element of a 49 U.S.C § 322 (c) offense."

The contention that because freight bills are not required documents for contract carriers under ICC regulations there was no evasion of the regulations by the false bills is invalid. Section 322(c) proscribes any false or fictitious documents used to evade or defeat any ICC regulation. The failure of ICC audits of Indiana Trucking's books and records in 1957 and 1964 to uncover these irregularities has no bearing on this prosecution. There is no evidence that during those periods the practice of using East Chicago, Indiana, as point of origin on freight bills was being followed, and the audits were concerned with accounting rather than operational irregularities. Even if employees of the ICC had such knowledge and the defendants were misled by nonaction on the part of the ICC, neither principles of estoppel nor any other equitable consideration entitles the defendants to immunity from statutory and regulatory proscriptions. A prior ICC proceeding which considered the conduct complained of in this prosecution is not binding in its finding of a "lack of subterfuge." That proceeding was a denial of Indiana Trucking's application for an extension of authority to cover the unauthorized transportation involved in this prosecution, and did not direct itself to the question of knowing and willful use of false documents to defeat or evade ICC regulation.

Motor Vehicles

STATE REGULATIONS—

Illinois requirement that motorcyclists and passengers wear protective head gear unconstitutionally exceeds state's police powers since object of requirement is to protect persons riding motorcycles rather than public safety.

[Text] "If the evil sought to be remedied by the statute affects public health, safety, morals or welfare, a means reasonably directed toward the achievement of those ends will be held to be a proper exercise of the police power. • • •

"However, the legislature may not, of course, under the guise of protecting the public interest, interfere with private rights." People v. City of Chicago, 413 Ill. 83, 91.

Statutes similar to the one in question have been tested in other jurisdictions. In Rhode Island (State ex rel. Colvin v. Lombardi, 241 A.2d 625), the court held that the legislation was justified in order to assure that flying stones or other windblown objects would not strike the operator and cause a momentary loss of control of the vehicle which could then endanger other traffic."

There have been similar decisions in Massachusetts, North Dakota and Connecticut.

[Text] "In Michigan, (American Motorcycle Ass'n v. Davids, 11 Mich. App. 351, 158 N.W.2d 72) the court held a statute requiring a "crash helmet" for both operator and passenger to be unconstitutional. Likewise in Louisiana, (Everhardt v. City of New Orleans, 208 So. 2d 423) the court struck down a statute calling for operators and passengers to wear "safety helmets."

Our statute requires both the operator and each passenger on a motorcycle to wear protective headgear. In the case of a passenger it is clear that the "protective headgear" serves no function of safeguarding the motoring public. The helmet would presumably prevent cranial injuries, or lessen their severity, for the wearer; but its effect on other motorists is most obscure.

The appellant, however, was operating the motorcycle when arrested. In order to determine the purpose and function of the statute in regard to an operator, the entire statutory plan must be considered. • • •

"The Illinois statute contains two requirements: "protective headgear" and a transparent shield or goggles.

"When we consider both of these sections together, the legislative intent becomes clear. The manifest function of the headgear requirement in issue is to safeguard the person wearing it—whether it is the operator or a passenger—from head injuries. Such a laudable purpose, however, cannot justify the regulation of what is essentially a matter of personal safety.—Kluczynski, J.

—Ill SupCt; Illinois v. Fries, 5/23/69.

Municipal Corporations

TORTS—

Victims of police and mob action in Chicago riots have no statutory or common law remedies against city or county.

One plaintiff was allegedly shot by police suppressing mob action and another was injured when a car was set upon by a mob. More than two hundred actions are now pending against the city and the county based on the statutes involved here.

[Text] "In 1967 the General Assembly enacted statutes which expressly repealed section 1-4-8 of the Illinois Municipal Code and section 25-3 of the Criminal Code which are the two statutes upon which liability in these cases is predicated. Both of the repealing acts were approved by the Governor. (Laws of 1967, Vol. 2, pp. 3286, 2365.)"

However, the same sessions later enacted a bill amending the repealed section. This amending act was part of a package of 174 bills designed to make formal, technical changes in certain sections for the sake of consistency in publication. We do not think that the legislature intended, by a bill purporting to make no change of substance, to re-enact the repealed section. The legislative purpose of repeal is unmistakable.

The plaintiff nevertheless argued that the repeals can not apply retroactively to bar their actions. This state's Statutory Construction Act provides that no new law shall be construed to repeal a former law, "expressly repealed" or not, under which any right has accrued before the effective date of a new law.

Motor Vehicles

STATE REGULATION—

North Dakota requirement that motorcyclist wear crash helmet does not unconstitutionally deprive him of personal freedom.

A motorcyclist who was charged with the offense of failing to wear a crash helmet while riding a motorcycle has asserted that the statute requiring the wearing of a crash helmet deprives him of his personal freedom and his rights guaranteed by the Due Process Clauses of both federal and state Constitutions.

Michigan, [American Motorcycle Assn. v. Davids, II Mich. App. 351, 36 LW 2707] and Louisiana have found similar statutes to involve an invalid exercise of the police power of the state based on a test whether there is a "real and substantial relationship between the exercise of those powers • • • and the public health, safety, morals, or the general welfare." This is the proper test, but as in Commonwealth v. Howie 238 N.E.2d 373, 36 LW 2770, and Colvin v. Lombardi, 241 A.2d 625, 36 LW 2732, we reach the opposite result. The safety factor of objects striking the operator of a motorcycle in such a manner as to momentarily cause him to lose control and to menace other vehicles on the highway makes the relationship between the police power and the public safety self-evident. Moreover, we are not convinced that the legislature may not take reasonable measures to prevent persons from becoming public charges in hospital as a result of their disregard of obvious safety precautions.—Erickstad, J.

Teigen, Ch.J., and Knudson, J., dissent.

Negligence

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—

Oklahoma's requirement that auto seat belts be installed does not render injured passenger's failure to use belts contributory negligence.

[Text] "Exhaustive research by counsel, and independent research and investigation by the court, has disclosed no Oklahoma decision on the problem. • • •

"For the reasons advanced in Robinson v. Bono, 285 F.Supp. 423 (D.C. Or. 1968), Miller v. Miller, 160 S.E. 2d 65 (N.C. 1968) and Brown v. Kendrick, 192 So.2d 49 (Fla. App. 1966), I conclude Oklahoma would not allow such failure to be presented either as evidence of contributory negligence, or in mitigation of damages. Such conclusion finds some support in Oklahoma's definition of proximate cause set forth in Cheatham v. Van Dalsen, 350 P.2d 593 (1960) • • •.

"[T]here must be at least some indication that the plaintiff was under a duty to use a seat belt to provide for his own safety, and that failure to use it was a cause of plaintiff's injury, before the Court is required to submit the issue to the jury. The holding here is that, as a matter of law, there is no such duty, nor could such failure be a proximate cause of injury, and submission to the jury of the issue is not required."—Arnow, J.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS—

North Carolina Supreme Court's prospective abolition of charitable hospital immunity does not preclude holding hospital liable, to extent of its insurance, for negligence predating abolition.

The complaint alleges that on June 6, 1964, a paying patient of the defendant James Walker Memorial Hospital was frightened when a rat ran across her feet and caused her to fall into a bathtub. Her action to recover for the resulting injuries is based on the hospital's negligence in allowing rats on its premises, and the Orkin Exterminating Company's negligence in failing to rid the premises of rats as required by its contract with the hospital. The district court granted the defendant's motions for summary judgment.

This cause of action arose before the Supreme Court of North Carolina overruled its long-standing doctrine of immunity for charitable hospitals in Rabon v. Rowan Memorial Hospital, Inc., 269 N.C. 1, 152 S.E.2d 485, 35 LW 2485 (1967), limiting the decision's applicability to causes of action arising after January 20, 1967. The question is whether this action is barred by the charitable immunity doctrine or whether it may be prosecuted to the extent that the hospital's trust funds are protected by insurance. Insurance was not involved in Rabon, and no North Carolina court has been presented with the question subsequent to that case.

It is not to be supposed that the North Carolina courts have failed to take into account the underlying philosophy of Rabon, which is to compensate those injured by the negligence of employees of charitable hospitals while at the same time safeguarding these institutions from the dissipation of trust funds. The court refused full retroactive application of the new rule only after expressing concern over the danger to the trust funds of inadequately insured hospitals. Surely this is a clear implication that the new rule of liability for employee's negligence should be operative where this hazard is not present. Nebraska and Illinois, which the Rabon court said it followed, make the immunity unavailable to the extent of insurance protection in causes of action arising prior to abolition of the immunity. Where the hospital has insured itself against the risk, the only possible beneficiary from preserving the immunity would not be the charitable hospital but the paid insurer.

The lack of privity between the plaintiff and Orkin is no defense. It is clear that the hospital was under a legal duty to exercise reasonable care in regard to the safety of its patients, and that Orkin, under its contract, had undertaken to perform a certain aspect of this duty in the hospital's behalf.—Sobeloff, J.

—CA 4; Hill v. James Walker Memorial Hospital, 3/11/69.

CONFLICT OF LAWS—

Indiana's Guest Statute is inapplicable to Missouri action by Missouri passenger against estate of Missouri driver for Indiana collision during their vacation trip.

The driver, her husband, and the passenger, all Missouri residents, were returning from a trip to New York City when the accident occurred on the Indiana turnpike. Missouri does not have a guest statute, but Indiana does. We remand to permit the passenger to submit her case against the driver's estate to the jury on the theory that the relationship between the parties was governed by Missouri law and that the Indiana Guest Statute was not applicable.

The passenger recognizes that Missouri has been following a so-called lex loci delicti rule in the choice of law to be applied. Under this rule, the court applies the law of the place where the tort was committed in everything except procedure, which is governed by the law of the forum. But the passenger claims that Missouri is the state which has the dominant interest in a host-guest relationship between Missouri residents arising from the operation of a Missouri automobile on a trip which began and which ended in Missouri.

The lex loci rule has the advantage of certainty and ease of application. The only exceptions have been where the forum court concluded that the law of the place of the wrong was against the established public policy of the forum state. There has also been an occasional tendency in difficult cases to construe a matter as procedural rather than substantive and on that basis reference to § 84.01, allow the class of sub-subcontractors to be entitled to a mechanics' lien. • • •

"However, we must construe the Mechanics' Lien Act according to general equitable principles so as to best protect the interest of those enhancing realty, since it is that class for whose benefit the mechanics' lien exists. • • •

"[R]evisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act, § 84, Fla.Stat. F.S.A. (1061), omitted the term, "sub-subcontractor", or any reference to another provision containing such term, from the section defining those entitled to the mechanics' lien. However, the underlying reason for the subsequent revisions was not to change the scope of person entitled to the statutory protection; rather, the revisions were enacted to remedy procedural defects which had led to "hidden liens" being placed against an owner by persons not in privity, without notice to the owner.

"Moreover, the definition section[s] of all the foregoing statutes have continued to include 'sub-subcontractor' in their terminologies."—Henry, J.

STATE REGULATION—

Wisconsin's ban on unusual handlebars and requirement that motorcyclists wear safety devices does not unconstitutionally interfere with cyclist's "right to be left alone."

[Text] "To the cycling enthusiast the freedom to drive or ride his cycle, hatless or helmetless, is meaningful. • • • Resistance to wearing a prescribed safety helmet is an understandable human reaction. Perhaps almost all of us have a secret admiration for the pint-sized guard on a major football team who, years ago, went out on the gridiron, sans helmet, to face giant-sized opponents. • • •

"It has been suggested that this leaves to the courts '• • • essentially a balancing test between the rights infringed and the benefits to the general welfare with the balance strongly weighed in favor of the general welfare at the start.'

"We are uneasy with this balancing and weighing concept of the judicial role in testing the constitutionality of a police power statute. • • • There is too much of a temptation to a putting of a judicial thumb on the scales with judges substituting their own evaluation of alternatives for that of the legislature. We would hold that, once within the area of proper exercise of police power, it is for the legislature to determine what regulations, restraints or prohibitions are reasonably required to protect the public safety and only the abrogation of a basic and substantial individual liberty would justify judicial intervention to set aside the legislative enactments. • • •

"Over and above the interest the state has in protecting other users of the highways from the danger of involvement in an accident, we further hold that other users of the highway have a definite and legitimate interest in seriousness of the consequences of accidents as well as in the frequency of such mishaps. • • •

"[Although] we do not reach the question of whether it is invariably and inescapably fatal to a public safety statute that it seeks only to protect persons against the consequences of their own actions • • • it is enough to observe that the concept that it is my neck and I have a right to risk it when and where I please has had some limitations placed upon its application." • • •

"There is in the law no sanction for self-destruction, and certainly there is no right on the part of anyone to use public highways for risking or courting or seeking such self-destruction. Protection of the safety of all users of the highway even against the consequences of their own actions is a legitimate use of the police powers of the state. • • •

"[The right of the individual to be left alone by government was] capsulized by a great jurist, Louis Dennitz Brandeis, in these words.

" 'The makers of the Constitution sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions and their sensations. They conferred as against the government, the right to be left alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man.'

"However, Justice Brandeis hardly intended that such right to be left alone would include the right to camp on a cloverleaf or do one's thing on an expressway. There is no place where any such right to be let alone would be less assertable than on a modern highway."—Hansen, J.

ADVERTISING—

Optometrist's circulars to labor unionists promising optical services at volume discounts are not permissible information on "medical service plan," but health service advertising forbidden by California Business and Professions Code.

An optometrist started an optical service for members of the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor AFL-CIO and their families in which a specific price schedule for eye examination, glasses and contact lenses was adopted. The plan which the optometrist called Union Vision Service charged prices lower than the California Vision Service, a nonprofit corporation which also provided optometric service to unions. Under the schedule glasses would cost $21 per pair less than the average cost in Los Angeles County. He then distributed literature to the union members highlighting the large savings to users of the service and stating that some eye examinations would even be free. He also advertised in a union newspaper. As a result, he obtained access to 515,000 union members and within 18 months attracted 71,000 patients.

The Board of Optometry charged the optometrist with violating the Business and Professions Code. The California Corporation Code does permit the formation of nonprofit corporations for the purpose of defraying or assuming the cost of professional services of licensees of the healing arts, but what is involved here is the method of operation of U.V.S.

Section 651 of the Code makes it unlawful for an optometrist to represent that his service is being rendered at a discount or "is otherwise less than the average fee or price then regularly charged under like conditions by persons so licensed or by other persons for such commodities or services." The optometrist argues that because his operation was like no other he could not be found to have made his offer at prices lower than those "regularly charged under like conditions." "It would be a perversion of the intent of Section 651 to permit advertising under the banner of 'equal treatment for less money' simply because the advertiser can show that in some fashion quite immaterial to the patient, the conditions which permit him to render less expensive service are unlike those of his fellow practitioners with whom he compares himself."

Section 651.3 of the Code prohibits a physician from advertising in any manner which refers to the cost of the price to be paid to him or for any commodities sold by him or for any services performed by him except when it involves "the furnishing of information regarding benefits available and charges therefor, under the coverage of any hospital or medical service of insurance plan." The optometrist claims that he was merely furnishing information concerning benefits and charges under the coverage of a medical service plan. 'Neither this section as a whole nor the proviso has ever been construed. No statutory or judicial def-involved there, they are not analogous to the exclusion of Negroes from an all white union by a system of nepotism."—Dyer, J.

Landlord and Tenant

EVICTION—

Pennsylvania Rent Withholding Act does not immunize from eviction tenants who failed to pay rent into escrow fund.

The Motion to quash the writ of eviction is refused.—Montgomery, J.

Concurrence. The Act provides that the right of the landlord to collect rent shall be suspended for a 6-month period after certification by the appropriate authority that the dwelling is unfit for human habitation. During this suspension period, the rent withheld shall be deposited by the tenant in an escrow account for repairs required to make the building habitable.

The Act specifically does not affect any of the terms of the landlord and tenant relationship save that the tenant need not pay rent to the landlord if he pays it into an escrow account. The duty of the tenant to pay his rent on a timely basis is undisturbed by the statute. Accordingly, the final sentence of the Act which reads "No tenant shall be evicted for any reason whatsoever while the rent is deposited in escrow" must be read to mean that during the 6-month period the tenant is protected against eviction under the Act only if he pays his rent into the escrow account in a timely manner specified by the lease arrangement.

Tenants who seek the protection of the Act in avoiding eviction must have consistently paid their rent into the escrow fund in a timely manner.

[Text] "This case leaves unresolved some of the very difficult questions raised by the statute. For example, it is unclear from the face of the statute:

"1) whether a landlord of a building certified as unfit for human habitation may refuse to renew the lease arrangement of a tenant who has paid his rent in a timely fashion.

"2) under what conditions and authority may moneys deposited in an escrow account pursuant to the statute be used to effect repairs of the dwelling premises.

"3) may escrow payments be made indefinitely until the dwelling is sufficiently repaired with periodic six months disbursements of the accumulated rents to the contributing tenants to the escrow account.

"These questions as well as others bound to arise are best settled by future legislative amendment, although in the absence of such action, it will be the duty of the courts to frame a solution based upon their interpretation of the statute as written. C.f. Note, Rent Withholding in Pennsylvania, 30 Pitt. L. Rev. 148 (1968)."—Hoffman, J.

Motor Vehicles

PARKING LOTS—

Operator of self-service Illinois parking lot is not bailee liable to patron whose car was stolen.

In recent years a new type of self-service parking lot has developed particularly at the larger airports, such as the one from which the car here was stolen. A motorist gains admission to the lot through an entrance gate where he takes a machine-dispensed ticket from an automatic dispenser. The motorist parks in an individual parking place of his choice. There is nothing to prevent his moving the car about within the parking lot. He retains the keys and upon his return drives to an exit gate where he sees the attendant for the first time and pays the parking fee.

This is a case of first impression in this court although there is a great variety of holdings in the area of the liability of operators of parking lot facilities. They usually resolve themselves into two categories, the first where the owner parks his car in a place designated by an attendant or chosen by himself retains the keys and does not actually deliver the car to the lot owner. This constitutes a lease of space. In the second classification a bailment is created where the keys are left in the parked vehicle and tickets are issued identifying the car for redelivery. Precise categorization is not easy. However, in this case it is apparent that no bail or bailee relationship has been established. There was no agreement, either express or by implication, that may be gathered from the circumstances surrounding this transaction. To establish it, there must not only be a delivery of possession but there must also be an acceptance, either actual or constructive, which did not exist here. True, temporary possession in the sense that the motorist leaves the vehicle on the lot may be said to have been given up, but the actual control is retained by taking the keys. There is no acceptance of the vehicle by the lot owner.—House, J.

STATE REGULATION—

Connecticut's requirement that motorcyclist use crash helmet is not interference with individual's constitutionally-created "zone of privacy."

The gravamen of the argument is the statute is unconstitutional in that it has no relation to public health, welfare and safety, but merely to the health, welfare and safety of the individual.

The cyclist contends that the Fourteenth Amendment, taken in conjunction with the Third, Fourth and Fifth Amendments creates what has been called a "zone of privacy," and that by virtue of the Ninth Amendment, government power is limited by many unenumerated rights of the people. One of the unenumerated rights protected by the "zone of privacy" is the right of an individual to conduct his or her own affairs as he or she chooses as long as such action does not injure or offend other members of society. However, we are of the opinion that the purpose sought to be achieved by requiring protective headgear is a proper subject for legislation. The legislature may enact laws prohibiting that which is harmful to the welfare of the public as long as they are reasonable, even though they may interfere with the liberty of the individual. Whatever infringement of rights incidental to the valid exercise of police power is not unreasonable when the sole object of the legislation is to promote public welfare.

There is also a weakness in the contention that the state has no power to punish an act which harmed no one but the actor. We are of the opinion that the statute prevents a danger that is antisocial—the inherent danger of injury to others in the operation of a motorcycle.

The operation of a motor vehicle including a motorcycle is a privilege which may be denied, and not a right. The legislature may require the operator to waive certain rights and privileges for the protection of other motorists legally upon the highway.—Wise, J.

Mel J. Personett, Commissioner
Department of Public Safety
Pouch "N"
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Commissioner Personett:

After hearing testimony on both sides of the matter, and after reviewing the material you submitted, the House Judiciary Committee requests that the department hold hearings and consider revision or repeal of the following regulations pertaining to motorcycles. 13 AAC 04.280, 285(b), 290, 295, and 300.

While not taking a position on the constitutionality of any of these regulations, the committee is aware that there is a split of judicial opinion and that in some states the helmet requirement has been held invalid as an invasion of the right to privacy. Moreover, during the recent hearings held on these regulations by this committee, no evidence was presented which conclusively established that these requirements promoted either individual safety or the public safety. To the contrary, although examples were given of situations in which a helmet or face shield might be helpful, other examples were given of when they would be a definite hazard; also, windshields and mirrors on "trail bikes" appear to be hazards rather than safety features. There was testimony that a mirror on a motorcycle was of little utility because of vibration; and you agreed that the requirement of two mirrors in 13 AAC 04.280(a) (1) is unnecessary.

The regulation on the height of "handlebars or grips" (13 AAC 04.290) is ambiguous as well as being subject to criticism as an undue restriction on design variation. If there is a certainty that a design variation will result in motorcycles with a steering arrangement that poses a clear threat to the public safety, a regulation something like the following would be more appropriate: "No person may operate a motorcycle or motor scooter on which the handlegrips are at a height which does not reasonably allow for safe control of the vehicle." When the present language is read in conjunction with the regulation on windshields (13 AAC 04.295) some ludicrous results can occur.

With regard to 13 AAC 04.300, the committee believes it is a good idea, and a proper action for the benefit of the public, to specify standards for the construction of protective headgear, goggles, etc. When a person decides that he wants to wear a helmet, for example, he should be able to rely on the safety of those offered for sale or rent. Since this section refers to the requirement that these items be worn at all times and in all circumstances, this section should be re-written. Also, the reference to sec. 280(a) (3) in 13 AAC 04.285(a) should be deleted.

The committee notes that the federal safety standard on motorcycles (1) does not require a windshield, face shield or goggles—just "eye protection"; (2) does not specify handlebar height or windshield height; and (3) does not require two mirrors.

The committee is concerned about the fact that these regulations, of at least questionable validity, of questionable benefit to the safety of the public and even to the individual, may be selectively enforced to provide a means of harassing a particular segment of the population. We do not believe that this is sound state policy. We expect that the revised regulations will be clearly valid and protective of the public safety, and that to the extent they are designed to protect the individual, due consideration has been given to the right to privacy and the policy which underlies that constitutional right.

Yours truly,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman
Judiciary Committee

TO : Rep. Mildred Banfield, Chairman
Subcommittee on Dept. of Public Safety Regulations
House Judiciary Committee

FROM : Arthur H. Peterson, Revisor of Statutes

SUBJECT: Recently proposed changes in regulations of the Department of Public Safety (addendum to April 24, 1970 memorandum)

This is a summary of the proposed changes accompanying the department's April 20 notice. My April 24 memorandum to you discusses Items (1), (2) and (3) (regarding hitchhiking, school buses, and a presumption as to certain violations, respectively).

Item (4), by inserting "may not be . . . state highway but" in the first line, prohibits operating a snow vehicle on the roadway, which is only an implication under the present language; it also changes "six feet" to "three feet", so that the vehicle may be operated three feet or more from the edge of the roadway.

Item (5) repeals the prohibition on persons under 14 from operating snow vehicles. AS 05.30 deals with snow vehicles.

Item (6) deletes "or have in his possession an open or unsealed receptacle containing an" which presently appears after the word "drink". Item (7) repeals a provision dealing with "open or unsealed receptacle".

Item (8) deletes the references to 13 AAC 04.155, which is repealed in Item (9). That section presently allows snow removal vehicles of the Department of Highways to use blue flashing lights.

Item (10) adds the words "or certified". That addition is legally unnecessary in light of AS 01.10.060(11), but perhaps it is helpful as a clarification in this regulation.

IN THE SENATE BY MILLER

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 27

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

Annulling a regulation adopted by the Department of Public Safety.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS under AS 44.62.320, the Legislature, by a concurrent resolution adopted by a vote of both houses, may annul a regulation of an agency or department;

BE IT RESOLVED that by this Resolution the Alaska Legislature annuls the Department of Public Safety Regulation relating to a "pedestrian soliciting ride or business," 13 AAC 02.180.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES
IN THE
REGULATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

Notice is hereby given that the Department of Public Safety, under authority vested by AS 18.60.175, proposes to amend regulations in Title 13 of the Alaska Administrative Code as follows:

Title 13, Chapter 20 Article 1. Rescue and Relief of Lost Persons, is amended in its entirety.

The regulations deal with the following topics:

(a) Declaration of intent (of the regulations)
(b) Expenditure limitations (for rescue and relief parties)
(c) Approval of expenditures (what is required for approval)
(d) Commissioner's designee (to authorize search)
(e) Property purchased (becomes state property)
(f) Report of search (requires written report of search operation)
(g) Definitions (used in regulations)

Since it is not practical to print the entire regulations in this notice, interested persons may inspect them at a regional headquarters office of the State Troopers at Anchorage, Fairbanks, or Juneau or obtain a reasonable number of copies by a written request addressed to the Department of Public Safety, Pouch N, Juneau, Alaska.

Notice is also given that any person interested may present oral or written statements or arguments relevant to the action proposed at hearings to be held at Room 423, Capitol Building, Juneau, Alaska; 830 Water Street, Ketchikan, Alaska; 702 East 30th Avenue, Anchorage, Alaska; 1616 Cushman Street, Fairbanks, Alaska; and Alaska State Trooper Office, Nome, Alaska, at 9:00 a.m. on June 1, 1970.

The Department of Public Safety, upon its own motion or at the instance of an interested person, may at the hearing or after it adopt the above proposals substantially as above set out without further notice.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES
IN THE
REGULATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

Notice is hereby given that the Department of Public Safety, under authority vested by AS 28.05.030 and AS 28.20.020 proposes to amend and repeal certain regulations in Title 13 of the Alaska Administrative Code as follows:

(1) 13 AAC 02.180 is amended to read:

13 AAC 02.180. PEDESTRIAN SOLICITING RIDE OR BUSINESS. A person may not stand on or along a roadway in a manner that will distract a driver's attention for the purpose of soliciting a ride, employment, business or a contribution from the occupant of a vehicle. (Eff. before 7/28/59; am 12/15/61, reg. 3; am 8/10/66, reg. 22; am 12/31/69, reg. 31; at Leg. request, am. / / reg.)

Authority: AS 28.05.030

(2) 13 AAC 02.340 (b) is amended to read:

(b) This section does not apply to the driver of a school bus stopped to load or unload a school child or to the driver of a vehicle which is disabled while on a highway in a manner and to an extent that it is impossible to avoid stopping and temporarily leaving the disabled vehicle in that position; provided, if the vehicle is left unattended, the operator shall leave a notice in or on the vehicle which is visible to a person outside the vehicle or leave the hood of the vehicle in a raised position either of which indicates the vehicle is temporarily disabled. This section does not allow a vehicle to be left unattended in or on a bridge, causeway or tunnel or in a hazardous position on a roadway.

(3) 13 AAC 02.340 is amended by adding a new subsection to read

(c) A vehicle that is stopped, parked or standing in violation of a statute or traffic regulation is considered to have been stopped, parked or left standing by the registered owner of the vehicle, unless at the time of the violation a police officer observes the vehicle being stopped, parked or left standing by a driver who is not the registered owner, in which case any action by the officer shall be directed to that driver. (Eff. before 7/28/59; am 12/15/61, reg. 3; am 8/10/66, reg. 22; am 12/31/69, reg. 31; am / / , reg.)

Authority: AS 28.05.030

Highway Safety Program Standards

U. S. Department of Transportation ● Federal Highway Administration ● National Highway Safety Bureau

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARDS

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 1 PERIODIC MOTOR VEHICLE INSPECTION

Each State shall have a program for periodic inspection of all registered vehicles or other experimental, pilot, or demonstration program approved by the Secretary, to reduce the number of vehicles with existing or potential conditions which cause or contribute to accidents or increase the severity of accidents which do occur, and shall require the owner to correct such conditions.

I. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

A. Every vehicle registered in the State is inspected either at the time of initial registration and at least annually thereafter, or at such other time as may be designated under an experimental, pilot, or demonstration program approved by the Secretary.

B. The inspection is performed by competent personnel specifically trained to perform their duties and certified by the State.

C. The inspection covers systems, sub-systems, and components having substantial relation to safe vehicle performance.

D. The inspection procedures equal or exceed criteria issued or endorsed by the National Highway Safety Bureau.

E. Each inspection station maintains records in a form specified by the State, which include at least the following information:

1. class of vehicle
2. date of inspection
3. make of vehicle
4. model year
5. vehicle identification number
6. defects by category
7. identification of inspector
8. mileage or odometer reading

F. The State publishes summaries of records of all inspection stations at least annually, including tabulations by make and model of vehicle.

II. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 2 MOTOR VEHICLE REGISTRATION

Each State shall have a motor vehicle registration program, which shall provide for rapid identification of each vehicle and its owner; and shall make available pertinent data for accident research and safety program development.

I. The program shall be such that every vehicle operated on public highways is registered and the following information is readily available for each vehicle:

A. Make
B. Model year
C. Identification number (rather than motor number)
D. Type of body
E. License plate number
F. Name of current owner
G. Current address of owner
H. Registered gross laden weight of every commercial vehicle

II. Each program shall have a records system that provides at least the following services:

A. Rapid entry of new data into the records or data system.

B. Controls to eliminate unnecessary or unreasonable delay in obtaining data.

C. Rapid audio or visual response upon receipt at the records station of any priority request for status of vehicle possession authorization.

D. Data available for statistical compilation as needed by authorized sources.

E. Identification and ownership of vehicle sought for enforcement or other operation needs.

III. This program shall be periodically evaluated by the State, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 3 MOTORCYCLE SAFETY

For the purposes of this standard a motorcycle is defined as any motor-driven vehicle having a seat or saddle for the use of the rider and designed to travel on not more than three wheels in contact with the ground, but excluding tractors and vehicles on which the operator and passengers ride within an enclosed cab.

Each State shall have a motorcycle safety program to insure that only persons physically and mentally qualified will be licensed to operate a motorcycle; that protective safety equipment for drivers and passengers will be worn; and that the motorcycle meets standards for safety equipment.

I. The program shall provide as a minimum that:

A. Each person who operates a motorcycle:

1. Passes an examination or reexamination designed especially for motorcycle operation.

2. Holds a license issued specifically for motorcycle use or a regular license endorsed for each purpose.

B. Each motorcycle operator wears an approved safety helmet and eye protection when he is operating his vehicle on streets and highways.

C. Each motorcycle passenger wears an approved safety helmet, and is provided with a seat and footrest.

D. Each motorcycle is equipped with a rear-view mirror.

E. Each motorcycle is inspected at the time it is initially registered and at least annually thereafter, or in accordance with the State's inspection requirements.*

II. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State for its effectiveness in terms of reductions in accidents and their end results, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

*See Periodic Motor Vehicle Inspection Standard

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 4 DRIVER EDUCATION

Each State, in cooperation with its political subdivisions, shall have a driver education and training program. This program shall provide at least that:

I. There is a driver education program available to all youths of licensing age which:

A. Is taught by instructors certified by the State as qualified for these purposes.

B. Provides each student with practice driving and instruction in at least the following:

1. Basic and advanced driving techniques including techniques for handling emergencies.

2. Rules of the road, and other State laws and local motor vehicle laws and ordinances.

3. Critical vehicle systems and sub-systems requiring preventive maintenance.

4. The vehicle, highway and community features:

a. that aid the driver in avoiding crashes,

b. that protect him and his passengers in crashes,

c. that maximize the salvage of the injured.

5. Signs, signals, and highway markings, and highway design features which require understanding for safe operation of motor vehicles.

6. Differences in characteristics of urban and rural driving including safe use of modern expressways.

7. Pedestrian safety.

C. Encourages students participating in the program to enroll in first aid training.

II. There is a State research and development program including adequate research, development and procurement of practice driving facilities, simulators and other similar teaching aids for both school and other driver training use.

III. There is a program for adult driver training and retraining.

IV. Commercial driving schools are licensed and commercial driving instructors are certified in accordance with specific criteria adopted by the State.

V. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 5 DRIVER LICENSING

Each State shall have a driver licensing program: (a) to insure that only persons physically and mentally qualified will be licensed to operate a vehicle on the highways of the State, and (b) to prevent needlessly removing the opportunity of the citizen to drive. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

I. Each driver holds only one license, which identifies the type(s) of vehicle(s) he is authorized to drive.*

II. Each driver submits acceptable proof of date and place of birth in applying for his original license.

III. Each driver:

A. Passes an initial examination demonstrating his:

1. Ability to operate the class(es) of vehicle(s) for which he is licensed.

2. Ability to read and comprehend traffic signs and symbols.

3. Knowledge of laws relating to traffic (rules of the road) safe driving procedures, vehicle and highway safety features, emergency situations that arise in the operation of an automobile, and other driver responsibilities.

4. Visual acuity, which must meet or exceed State standards.

B. Is reexamined at an interval not to exceed four years, for at least visual acuity and knowledge of rules of the road.

IV. A record on each driver is maintained which includes positive identification, current address, and driving history. In addition, the record system shall provide the following services:

A. Rapid entry of new data into the system.

B. Controls to eliminate unnecessary or unreasonable delay in obtaining data which is required for the system.

C. Rapid audio or visual response upon receipt at the records station of any priority request for status of driver license validity.

D. Ready availability of data for statistical compilation as needed by authorized sources.

E. Ready identification of drivers sought for enforcement or other operational needs.

V. Each license is issued for a specific term, and must be renewed to remain valid. At time of issuance or renewal each driver's record must be checked.

VI. There is a driver improvement program to identify problem drivers for record review and other appropriate actions designed to reduce the frequency of their involvement in traffic accidents or violations.

VII. There is:

A. A system providing for medical evaluation of persons whom the driver licensing agency has reason to believe have mental or physical conditions which might impair their driving ability.

B. A procedure which will keep the driver license agency informed of all licensed drivers who are currently applying for or receiving any type of tax, welfare or other benefits or exemptions for the blind or nearly blind.

C. A medical advisory board or equivalent allied health professional unit composed of qualified personnel to advise the driver license agency on medical criteria and vision standards.

VIII. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary. The evaluation shall attempt to ascertain the extent to which driving without a license occurs.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 6 CODES AND LAWS

Each State shall develop and implement a program to achieve uniformity of traffic codes and laws throughout the State. The program shall provide at least that:

I. There is a plan to achieve uniform rules of the road in all of its jurisdictions.

*See Motorcycle Safety Standard

II. There is a plan to make the State's unified rules of the road consistent with similar unified plans of other States. Toward this end, each State shall undertake and maintain continuing comparisons of all State and local laws, statutes and ordinances with the comparable provisions of the Rules of the Road section of the Uniform Vehicle Code.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 7 TRAFFIC COURTS

Each State in cooperation with its political subdivisions shall have a program to assure that all traffic courts in it complement and support local and statewide traffic safety objectives. The program shall provide at least that:

I. All convictions for moving traffic violations shall be reported to the State traffic records system.

II. Program Recommendations

A. All individuals charged with moving hazardous traffic violations are required to appear in court.

B. Traffic courts are financially independent of any fee system, fines, costs, or other revenue such as posting or forfeiture of bail or other collateral resulting from processing violations of motor vehicle laws.

C. Operating procedures, assignment of judges, staff and quarters insure reasonable availability of court services for alleged traffic offenders.

D. There is a uniform accounting system regarding traffic violation notices, collection of fines, fees and costs.

E. There are uniform rules governing court procedures in traffic cases.

F. There are current manuals and guides for administration, court procedures, and accounting.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 8 ALCOHOL IN RELATION TO HIGHWAY SAFETY

Each State, in cooperation with its political subdivisions, shall develop and implement a program to achieve a reduction in those traffic accidents arising in whole or in part from persons driving under the influence of alcohol. The program shall provide at least that:

I. There is a specification by the State of the following with respect to alcohol related offenses:

A. Chemical test procedures for determining blood-alcohol concentrations.

B. (1) The blood-alcohol concentrations, not higher than .10 percent by weight, which define the terms "intoxicated" or "under the influence of alcohol," and

(2) A provision making it either unlawful, or presumptive evidence of illegality, if the blood-alcohol concentration of a driver equals or exceeds the limit so established.

II. Any person placed under arrest for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated or under the influence of alcohol is deemed to have given his consent to a chemical test of his blood, breath, or urine for the purpose of determining the alcohol content of his blood.

III. To the extent practicable, there are quantitative tests for alcohol:

A. On the bodies of all drivers and adult pedestrians who die within four hours of a traffic accident.

B. On all surviving drivers in accidents fatal to others.

IV. There are appropriate procedures established by the State for specifying:

A. The qualifications of personnel who administer chemical tests used to determine blood, breath, and other body alcohol concentrations.

B. The methods and related details of specimen selection, collection, handling, and analysis.

C. The reporting and tabulation of the results.

V. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 9 IDENTIFICATION AND SURVEILLANCE OF ACCIDENT LOCATIONS

Each State, in cooperation with county and other local governments, shall have a program for identifying accident locations and for maintining surveillance of those locations having high accident rates or losses.

I. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

A. There is a procedure for accurate identification of accident locations on all roads and streets.

1. To identify accident experience and losses on any specific sections of the road and street system.

2. To produce an inventory of:

a. High accident locations.

b. Locations where accidents are increasing sharply.

c. Design and operating features with which high accident frequencies or severities are associated.

3. To take appropriate measures for reducing accidents.

4. To evaluate the effectiveness of safety improvements on any specific section of the road and street system.

B. There is a systematically organized program:

1. To maintain continuing surveillance of the roadway network for potentially high accident locations.

2. To develop methods for their correction.

II. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 10 TRAFFIC RECORDS

Each State, in cooperation with its political subdivisions, shall maintain a traffic records system. The statewide system (which may consist of compatible sub-systems) shall include data for the entire State. Information regarding drivers, vehicles, accidents, and highways shall be compatible for purposes of analysis and correlation. Systems maintained by local governments shall be compatible with, and capable of furnishing data to the State system. The State system shall be capable of providing summaries, tabulations and special analyses to local governments on request.

The record system shall include: (a) certain basic minimum data and (b) procedures for statistical analyses of these data.

The program shall provide as a minimum that:

I. Information on vehicles and system capabilities includes (conforms to Motor Vehicle Registration Standard):

A. Make

B. Model year

C. Identification number (rather than motor number)

D. Type of body

E. License plate number

F. Name of current owner

G. Current address of owner

H. Registered gross laden weight of every commercial vehicle

I. Rapid entry of new data into the records or data system

J. Controls to eliminate unnecessary or unreasonable delay in obtaining data

K. Rapid audio or visual response upon receipt at the records station of any priority request for status of vehicle possession authorization

L. Data available for statistical compilation as needed by authorized sources

M. Identification and ownership of vehicles sought for enforcement or other operational needs

II. Information on drivers and system capabilities includes (conforms to Driver Licensing Standard):

A. Positive identification

B. Current address

C. Driving history

D. Rapid entry of new data into the system

E. Controls to eliminate unnecessary or unreasonable delay in obtaining data which is required for the system

F. Rapid audio or visual response upon receipt at the records station of any priority request for status of driver license validity

G. Ready availability of data for statistical compilation as needed by authorized sources

H. Ready identification of drivers sought for enforcement or other operational needs

III. Information on types of accidents includes:

A. Identification of location in space and time

B. Identification of drivers and vehicles involved

C. Type of accident

D. Description of injury and property damage.

E. Description of environmental conditions

F. Causes and contributing factors, including the absence of or failure to use available safety equipment.

IV. There are methods to develop summary listings, cross tabulations, trend analyses and other statistical treatments of all appropriate combinations and aggregations of data items in the basic minimum data record of drivers and accident and accident experience by specified groups.

V. All traffic records relating to accidents collected hereunder shall be open to the public in a manner which does not identify individuals.

VI. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 11 EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES

Each State, in cooperation with its local political subdivisions, shall have a program to insure that persons involved in highway accidents receive prompt emergency medical care under the range of emergency conditions encountered. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

I. There are training, licensing, and related requirements (as appropriate) for ambulance and rescue vehicle operators, attendants, drivers, and dispatchers.

II. There are requirements for types and numbers of emergency vehicles including supplies and equipment to be carried.

III. There are requirements for the operation and coordination of ambulances and other emergency care systems.

IV. There are first aid training programs and refresher courses for emergency service personnel, and the general public is encouraged to take first aid courses.

V. There are criteria for the use of two-way communications.

VI. There are procedures for summoning and dispatching aid.

VII. There is an up-to-date, comprehensive plan for emergency medical services, including:

A. Facilities and equipment

B. Definition of areas of responsibility

C. Agreements for mutual support

D. Communications systems

VIII. This program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 12 HIGHWAY DESIGN, CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE

Every State in cooperation with county and local governments shall have a program of highway design, construction, and maintenance to improve highway safety. Standards applicable to specific programs are those issued or endorsed by the Federal Highway Administrator.

I. The program shall provide, as a minimum that:

A. There are design standards relating to safety features such as sight distance, horizontal and vertical curvature, spacing of decision points, width of lanes, etc., for all new construction or reconstruction, at least on expressways, major streets and highways, and through streets and highways.

B. Street systems are designed to provide a safe traffic environment for pedestrians and motorists when subdivisions and residential areas are developed or redeveloped.

C. Roadway lighting is provided or upgraded on a priority basis at the following locations:

1. Expressways and other major arteries in urbanized areas.

2. Junctions of major highways in rural areas.

3. Locations or sections of streets and highways having high ratios of night-to-day motor vehicle and/or pedestrian accidents.

4. Tunnels and long underpasses.

D. There are standards for pavement design and construction with specific provisions for high skid resistance qualities.

E. There is a program for resurfacing or other surface treatment with emphasis on correction of locations or sections of streets and highways with low skid resistance and high or potentially high accident rates susceptible to reduction by providing improved surfaces.

F. There is guidance, warning and regulation of traffic approaching and traveling over construction or repair sites and detours.

G. There is a systematic identification and tabulation of all rail-highway grade crossings and a program for the elimination of hazards and dangerous crossings.

H. Roadways and the roadsides are maintained consistent with the design standards which are followed in construction, to provide safe and efficient movement of traffic.

I. Hazards within the highway right-of-way are identified and corrected.

J. There are highway design and construction features wherever possible for accident prevention and survivability including at least the following:

1. Roadsides clear of obstacles, with clear distance being determined on the basis of traffic volumes, prevailing speeds, and the nature of development along the street or highway.

2. Supports for traffic control devices and lighting that are designed to yield or break away under impact wherever appropriate.

3. Protective devices that afford maximum protection to the occupants of vehicles wherever fixed objects cannot reasonably be removed or designed to yield.

4. Bridge railings and parapets which are designed to minimize severity of impact, to retain the vehicle, to redirect the vehicle so that it will move parallel to the roadway, and to minimize danger to traffic below.

5. Guardrails, and other design features which protect people from out-of-control vehicles at locations of special hazard such as playgrounds, schoolyards and commercial areas.

K. There is a post-crash program which includes at least the following:

1. Signs at freeway interchanges directing motorists to hospitals having emergency care capabilities.

2. Maintenance personnel trained in procedures for summoning aid, protecting others from hazards at accident sites, and removing debris.

3. Provisions for access and egress for emergency vehicles to freeway sections where this would significantly reduce travel time without reducing the safety benefits of access control.

II. This program shall be periodically evaluated by the State for its effectiveness in terms of reductions in accidents and their end results, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 13 TRAFFIC CONTROL DEVICES

Each State, in cooperation with its county and local governments, shall have a program relating to the use of traffic control devices (signs, markings, signals, etc.) and other traffic engineering measures to reduce traffic accidents.

I. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

A. There is a method:

1. To identify needs and deficiencies of traffic control devices.

2. To assist in developing current and projected programs for maintaining, upgrading, and installing traffic control devices.

B. Existing traffic control devices on all streets and highways are upgraded to conform with standards issued or endorsed by the Federal Highway Administrator.

C. New traffic control devices are installed on all streets and highways, based on engineering studies to determine where devices are needed for safety. Such devices conform with standards issued or endorsed by the Federal Highway Administrator.

D. There are programs for preventive maintenance, repair, and daytime and nighttime inspection of all traffic control devices.

38-520 O - 69 - 19

E. Fixed or variable speed zones are established, at least on expressways, major streets and highways, and through streets and highways, based on engineering and traffic investigations.

II. This program shall be periodically evaluated by the State and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 14 PEDESTRIAN SAFETY

Every State in cooperation with its political subdivisions shall develop and implement a program to insure the safety of pedestrians of all ages. The program shall provide, as a minimum, that:

I. There is a continuing statewide inventory of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents, identifying specifically:

A. The locations and times of all such accidents.

B. The age of all of the pedestrians injured or killed.

C. Where feasible, to determine whether the exterior features of the vehicle produced or aggravated an injury.

D. The color and shade of clothing worn by pedestrians when injured or killed, and the visibility conditions which prevailed at the time.

E. The extent to which alcohol is present in the blood of fatally injured pedestrians 16 years of age and older.

F. Where possible, to determine, the extent to which pedestrians involved in accidents have physical or mental disabilities.

II. There are established statewide operational procedures for improving the protection of pedestrians through reduction of potential conflicts with vehicles:

A. By application of traffic engineering practices including pedestrian signals, signs, markings, parking regulations and other pedestrian and vehicle traffic control devices.

B. By land-use planning in new and redevelopment areas for safe pedestrian movement.

C. By provision of pedestrian bridges, barriers, sidewalks and other means of physically separating pedestrian and vehicle pathways.

D. By provision of environmental illumination at high pedestrian volume and/or potentially hazardous pedestrian crossings.

III. There is established a statewide program for familiarizing drivers with the pedestrian problem and with ways to avoid pedestrian collisions.

A. The program content shall include emphasis on:

(1) Behavior characteristics of the three types of pedestrians most commonly involved in accidents with vehicles: (i) children; (ii) persons under the influence of alcohol; (iii) the elderly

(2) Accident avoidance techniques that take into account the hazardous conditions, and behavior characteristics displayed by each of the three high risk pedestrian groups listed in subparagraph (1).

B. Emphasis on this program content shall be included in:

(1) all driver education and training courses

(2) driver improvement courses

(3) driver license examinations

IV. There are statewide programs for training and educating all members of the public as to safe pedestrian behavior on or near streets and highways.

A. For children, youths and adults enrolled in schools, beginning at the earliest possible age.

B. For the general population via the public media.

V. There is a statewide program for the protection of children walking to and from school, entering and leaving school buses, and in neighborhood play.

VI. There is a statewide program for establishment and enforcement of traffic regulations designed to achieve orderly pedestrian and vehicle movement and to reduce vehicle-pedestrian conflicts.

VII. This program shall be periodically evaluated by the States, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 15 POLICE TRAFFIC SERVICES

Every State in cooperation with its political subdivisions shall have a program to insure efficient and effective police services utilizing traffic patrols: to enforce traffic laws; to prevent accidents; to aid the injured; to document the particulars of individual accidents; to supervise accident cleanup and to restore safe and orderly traffic movement.

I. The program shall provide as a minimum that there are:

A. Uniform training procedures in all aspects for police supervision of vehicular and pedestrian traffic related to highway safety, including use of appropriate instructional materials and techniques for recruit, advanced, in-service and special course training.

B. Periodic in-service training courses for uniformed and other police department employees assigned to traffic duties dealing with:

(1) administration and management of police, vehicular and pedestrian traffic services.

(2) analysis, interpretation and use of traffic records data.

(3) insurance of prompt reliable post-accident response, including skilled aid to the injured.

(4) accomplishing post-accident responsibilities.

C. Procedures for the selective assignment of trained police personnel to supervise vehicular and pedestrian traffic duties including enforcement patrols in hazardous or congested areas based on time and location of:

(1) traffic volume.

(2) accident experience.

(3) traffic violation frequency.

(4) emergency and service needs.

D. Procedures for investigating, recording and reporting accidents pertaining to:

(1) the human, vehicular, and highway causative factors in individual accidents.

(2) the human, vehicular, and highway causative factors of injuries and deaths, including failure to use safety belts.

(3) the efficiency of the post-accident response.

E. Procedures for recognizing and reporting, to the appropriate agencies, hazardous highway defects and conditions, including:

(1) condition of drivers.

(2) operational condition of motor vehicles.

(3) defective signs, signals, controls, construction and maintenance deficiencies.

a. Data listed in (3) above shall be readily available to the public.

F. Appropriate agreements by the State and its political subdivisions regarding primary responsibility and authority for police traffic supervision, and cooperative responsibilities where concurrent jurisdictional boundaries and problems exist, and appropriate participation of each law enforcement agency in the comprehensive highway safety program of the State and its political subdivisions.

II. The programs shall be periodically evaluated by the State, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

III. Nothing in this standard shall preclude the use of personnel other than police officers in carrying out the minimum requirements in accordance with laws and policies established by State and/or local governments.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM STANDARD 16 DEBRIS HAZARD CONTROL AND CLEANUP

Each State in cooperation with its political subdivisions shall have a program which provides for rapid, orderly, and safe removal from the roadway of wreckage, spillage, and debris resulting from motor vehicle accidents, and for otherwise reducing the likelihood of secondary and chain-reaction collisions, and conditions hazardous to the public health and safety.

I. The program shall provide as a minimum that:

A. Operational procedures are established and implemented for:

(1) enabling rescue and salvage equipment personnel to get to the scene of accidents rapidly and to operate effectively on arrival:

a. on heavily traveled freeways and other limited access roads;

b. in other types of locations where wreckage or spillage of hazardous materials on or adjacent to highways endangers the public health and safety;

(2) extricating trapped persons from wreckage with reasonable care—both to avoid injury or aggravating existing injuries;

(3) warning approaching drivers and detouring them with reasonable care past hazardous wreckage or spillage;

(4) safe handling of spillage or potential spillage of materials that are:

a. radioactive
b. flammable
c. poisonous
d. explosive
e. otherwise hazardous.

(5) removing wreckage or spillage from roadways or otherwise causing the resumption of safe, orderly traffic flow.

B. Adequate numbers of rescue and salvage personnel are properly trained and retrained in the latest accident cleanup techniques.

C. A communications system is provided, adequately equipped and manned, to provide coordinated effort in incident detection, and the notification, dispatch, and response of appropriate services.

II. The program shall be periodically evaluated by the State, and the National Highway Safety Bureau shall be provided with an evaluation summary.

3 per centum of the funds apportioned ays for any fiscal year shall be allocated to that State out of funds appropriated under authority of this subsection, which shall be used for landscape and roadside development within the highway right-of-way and for acquisition of interests in and improvement of strips of land necessary for the restoration, preservation, and enhancement of scenic beauty adjacent to such highways, including acquisition and development of publicly owned and controlled rest and recreation areas and sanitary and other facilities within or adjacent to the highway right-of-way reasonably necessary to accommodate the traveling public, without being matched by the State. The Secretary may authorize exceptions from this requirement, upon application of a State and upon a showing that such amount is in excess of the needs of the State for these purposes. Any funds not used as required by this subsection shall lapse.

There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1966, not to exceed $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970. The provisions of chapter 1 of this title relating to the obligation, period of availability, and expenditure of Federal-aid primary highway funds shall apply to the funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection after June 30, 1967.

As amended Pub.L. 89-574, § 8(b), Sept. 13, 1966, 80 Stat. 768; Pub.L. 90-495, § 6(f), Aug. 23, 1968, 82 Stat. 818.

1968 Amendment. Subsec. (b). Pub.L. 90-495 added provisions authorizing an appropriation of not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970.

1966 Amendment. Subsec. (b). Pub.L. 89-574 substituted provisions making applicable to the funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection after June 30, 1967, the provisions of chapter 1 of this title relating to the obligation, period of availability, and expenditure of Federal-aid primary highway funds for provisions prohibiting the use of any part of the Highway Trust Fund in carrying out this subsection.

Effective Date of 1968 Amendment. Amendment by Pub.L. 90-495 effective Aug. 23, 1968, see section 37 of Pub.L. 90-495, set out as a note under section 302 of this title.

this title relating generally to highways and highway and traffic safety were transferred to and vested in the Secretary of Transportation by Pub.L. 89-670, Oct. 15, 1966, 80 Stat. 931, which created the Department of Transportation. See section 1655(a) (1), (d) of Title 49, Transportation

National Highway Safety Agency; Creation; Appointment of Director; Duties of Director. Section 201 of Pub.L. 89-564, as amended by Pub.L. 89-670, § 8 (b), Oct. 15, 1966, 80 Stat. 943; Pub.L. 90-35, § 10(b), Sept. 11, 1967, 81 Stat. 224, provided that: "The Secretary shall carry out the provisions of the Highway Safety Act of 1966 (including chapter 4 of title 23 of the United States Code) [enacting this chapter, amending sections 105 and 307 of this title, repealing sections 135 and 313 of this title and enacting material set out as notes under this section and sections 303, 307, 402 and 403 of this title] through a National Highway Safety Bureau (hereinafter referred to as the 'Bureau'), which he shall establish in the Department of Commerce [Transportation]. The Bureau shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director shall be a citizen of the United States, and shall be appointed with due regard for his fitness to discharge efficiently the powers and the duties delegated to him. The Director shall have no pecuniary interest in or own any stock in or bonds of any enterprise involved in (1) manufacturing motor vehicles or motor vehicle equipment, or (2) constructing highways, nor shall he engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. The Director shall perform such duties as are delegated to him by the Secretary. On highway matters the Director shall consult with the Director of Public Roads. The President is authorized to carry out the provisions of the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 [section 1381 et seq. of Title 15, Commerce and Trade] through the Bureau and Director authorized by this section."

Annual Report to Congress on Administration of Highway Safety Act of 1966. Section 202 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that:

"(a) The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the President for transmittal to the Congress on March 1 of each year a comprehensive report on the administration of the Highway Safety Act of 1966 (including chapter 4 of title 23 of the United States Code) [which enacted this chapter, amended sections 105 and 307 of this title, repealed sections 135 and 313 of this title, and enacted material set out as notes under this section and sections 303, 307, 402, and 403 of this title] for the preceding calendar year. Such report should include but not be restricted to (1) a thorough statistical compilation of the accidents and injuries occurring in such year; (2) a list of all safety standards issued or in effect in such year; (3) the scope of observance of applicable Federal standards; (4) a statement of enforcement actions including judicial decisions, settlements, or pending litigation during the year; (5) a summary of all current research grants and contracts together with a description of the problems to be considered by such grants and contracts; (6) an analysis and evaluation of completed research activities and technological progress achieved during such year together with the relevant policy recommendations flowing therefrom; (7) the effectiveness of State highway safety programs (including local highway safety programs) and (8) the extent to which technical information was being disseminated to the scientific community and consumer-oriented material was made available to the motoring public.

"(b) The annual report shall also contain such recommendations for additional legislation as the Secretary deems necessary to promote cooperation among the several States in the improvement of highway safety and to strengthen the national highway safety program."

Submission to Congress by January 10, 1968, of Detailed Estimates of Cost of Carrying Out Highway Safety Act of 1966. Section 207 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that: "In order to provide the basis for evaluating the continuing programs authorized by this Act [which enacted this chapter, amended sections 105 and 307 of this title, repealed sections 135 and 313 of this title, and enacted material set out as notes under this section and sections 303, 307, 402, and 403 of this title], and to furnish the Congress with the information necessary for authorization of appropriations for fiscal years beginning after June 30, 1969, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Governors or the appropriate State highway safety agencies, shall make a detailed estimate of the cost of carrying out the provisions of this Act. The Secretary shall submit such detailed estimate and recommendations for Federal, State, and local matching funds to the Congress not later than January 10, 1968."

Short Title. Section 208 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that: "This Act [which enacted this chapter, amended sections 105 and 307 of this title, repealed sections 135 and 313 of this title, and enacted material set out as notes under this section and sections 303, 307, 402, and 403 of this title] may be cited as the 'Highway Safety Act of 1966'."

§ 402. Highway safety programs

(a) Each State shall have a highway safety program approved by the Secretary, designed to reduce traffic accidents and deaths, injuries, and property damage resulting therefrom. Such programs shall be in accordance with uniform standards promulgated by the Secretary. Such uniform standards shall be expressed in terms of performance criteria. Such uniform standards shall be promulgated by the Secretary so as to improve driver performance (including, but not limited to, driver education, driver testing to determine proficiency to operate motor vehicles, driver examinations (both physical and mental) and driver licensing) and to improve pedestrian performance. In addition such uniform standards shall include, but not be limited to, provisions for an effective record system of accidents (including injuries and deaths resulting therefrom), accident investigations to determine the probable causes of accidents, injuries, and deaths, vehicle registration, operation, and inspection, highway design and maintenance (including lighting, markings, and surface treatment), traffic control, vehicle codes and laws, surveillance of traffic for detection and correction of high or potentially high accident locations, and emergency services. Such standards as are applicable to State highway safety programs shall, to the extent determined appropriate by the Secretary, be applicable to federally administered areas where a Federal department or agency controls the highways or supervises traffic operations. The Secretary shall be authorized to amend or waive standards on a temporary basis for the purpose of evaluating new or different highway safety programs instituted on an experimental, pilot, or demonstration basis by one or more States, where the Secretary finds that the public interest would be served by such amendment or waiver.

(b) (1) The Secretary shall not approve any State highway safety program under this section which does not—

(A) provide that the Governor of the State shall be responsible for the administration of the program.

(B) authorize political subdivisions of such State to carry out local highway safety programs within their jurisdictions as a part of the State highway safety program if such local highway safety programs are approved by the Governor and are in accordance with the uniform standards of the Secretary promulgated under this section.

(C) provide that at least 40 per centum of all Federal funds apportioned under this section to such State for any fiscal year will be expended by the political subdivisions of such State in carrying out local highway safety programs authorized in accordance with subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

(D) provide that the aggregate expenditure of funds of the State and political subdivisions thereof, exclusive of Federal funds, for highway safety programs will be maintained at a level which does not fall below the average level of such expenditures for its last two full fiscal years preceding the date of enactment of this section.

(E) provide for comprehensive driver training programs, including (1) the initiation of a State program for driver education in the school systems or for a significant expansion and improvement of such a program already in existence, to be administered by appropriate school officials under the supervision of the Governor as set forth in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph; (2) the training of qualified school instructors and their certification; (3) appropriate regulation of other driver training schools, including licensing of the schools and certification of their instructors; (4) adult driver training programs, and programs for the retraining of selected drivers; and (5) adequate research, development and procurement of practice driving facilities, simulators, and other similar teaching aids for both school and other driver training use.

(2) The Secretary is authorized to waive the requirement of subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, in whole or in part, for a fiscal year for any State whenever he determines that there is an insufficient number of local highway safety programs to justify the expenditure in such State of such percentage of Federal funds during such fiscal year.

(c) Funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section shall be used to aid the States to conduct the highway safety programs approved in accordance with subsection (a), shall be subject to a deduction not to exceed 5 per centum for the necessary costs of administering the provisions of this section, and the remainder shall be apportioned among the several States. For the fiscal years ending June 30, 1967, June 30, 1968, and June 30, 1969, such funds shall be apportioned 75 per centum on the basis of population and 25 per centum as the Secretary in his administrative discretion may deem appropriate and thereafter such funds shall be apportioned as Congress, by law enacted hereafter, shall provide. On or before January 1, 1969, the Secretary shall report to Congress his recommendations with respect to a nondiscretionary formula for apportionment of funds authorized to carry out this section for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, and fiscal years thereafter. After December 31, 1969, the Secretary shall not apportion any funds under this subsection to any State which is not implementing a highway safety program approved by the Secretary in accordance with this section. Federal aid highway funds apportioned on or after January 1, 1970, to any State which is not implementing a highway safety program approved by the Secretary in accordance with this section shall be reduced by amounts equal to 10 per centum of the amounts which would otherwise be apportioned to such State under section 104 of this title, until such time as such State is implementing an approved highway safety program. Whenever he determines it to be in the public interest, the Secretary may suspend, for such periods as he deems necessary, the application of the preceding sentence to a State. Any amount which is withheld from apportionment to any State under this section shall be reapportioned to the other States in accordance with the applicable provisions of law.

(d) All provisions of chapter 1 of this title that are applicable to Federal-aid primary highway funds other than provisions relating to the apportionment formula and provisions limiting the expenditure of such funds to the Federal-aid systems, shall apply to the highway safety funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, except as determined by the Secretary to be inconsistent with this section. In applying such provisions of chapter 1 in carrying out this section the term "State highway department" as used in such provisions shall mean the Governor of a State for the purposes of this section.

(e) Uniform standards promulgated by the Secretary to carry out this section shall be developed in cooperation with the States, their political subdivisions, appropriate Federal departments and agencies, and such other public and private organizations as the Secretary deems appropriate.

(f) The Secretary may make arrangements with other Federal departments and agencies for assistance in the preparation of uniform standards for the highway safety programs contemplated by subsection (a) and in the administration of such programs. Such departments and agencies are directed to cooperate in such preparation and administration, on a reimbursable basis.

(g) Nothing in this section authorizes the appropriation or expenditure of funds for (1) highway construction, maintenance, or design (other than design of safety features of highways to be incorporated into standards) or (2) any purpose for which funds are authorized by section 403 of this title. Added Pub.L. 89–564, Title I, § 101, Sept. 9, 1966, 80 Stat. 731, and amended Pub.L. 90–495, § 13, Aug. 23, 1968, 82 Stat. 822.

1968 Amendment. Subsec. (c). Pub.L. 90-495 substituted "December 31, 1969" for "December 31, 1968" as the last day on which the Secretary may apportion funds to States which are not implementing highway safety programs approved by the Secretary and substituted "January 1, 1970" for "January 1, 1969" as the date after which funds apportioned to States not having approved safety programs shall be reduced until a safety program is implemented.

Effective Date of 1968 Amendment. Amendment by Pub.L. 90-495 effective Aug. 23, 1968, see section 37 of Pub.L. 90-495, set out as a note under section 502 of this title.

Transfer of Functions. All functions, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Commerce and other officers and offices of the Department of Commerce under this title and under specific related laws and parts of laws set out in the notes in this title relating generally to highways and highway and traffic safety were transferred to and vested in the Secretary of Transportation by Pub.L. 89-670, Oct. 15, 1966, 80 Stat. 931, which created the Department of Transportation. See section 1655(a) (1), (6) of Title 49, Transportation.

Authorization of Appropriations. Section 104 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that: "For the purpose of carrying out section 402 of title 23, United States Code [this section], there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $67,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967; $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1968; and $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969."

Report to Congress by July 1, 1967, on Initial Standards. Section 203 of Pub. L. 89-564 provided that: "The Secretary of Commerce shall report to Congress, not later than July 1, 1967, all standards to be initially applied in carrying out section 402 of title 23 of the United States Code [this section]."

Study of Relationship Between Consumption of Alcohol and Highway Safety; Report to Congress On or Before July 1, 1967. Section 201 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that: "The Secretary of Commerce shall make a thorough and complete study of the relationship between the consumption of alcohol and its effect upon highway safety and drivers of motor vehicles, in consultation with such other government and private agencies as may be necessary. Such study shall cover review and evaluation of State and local laws and enforcement methods and procedures relating to driving under the influence of alcohol, State and local programs for the treatment of alcoholism, and such other aspects of this overall problem as may be useful. The results of this study shall be reported to the Congress by the Secretary on or before July 1, 1967, and shall include recommendations for legislation if warranted."

National Highway Safety Bureau. Provisions of section to be carried out by National Highway Safety Bureau in the Department of Transportation headed by a Director, see section 201 of Pub. L. 89-564, set out as a note under section 401 of this title.

Legislative History. For legislative history and purpose of Pub.L. 89-564, see 1966 U.S.Code Cong. and Adm.News, p. 2741. See, also, Pub.L. 90-495, 1968 U.S. Code Cong. and Adm.News, p. 3182.

§ 403. Highway safety research and development

The Secretary is authorized to use funds appropriated to carry out this section to carry out safety research which he is authorized to conduct by subsection (a) of section 307 of this title. In addition, the Secretary may use the funds appropriated to carry out this section, either independently or in cooperation with other Federal departments or agencies, for (1) grants to State or local agencies, institutions, and individuals for training or education of highway safety personnel, (2) research fellowships in highway safety, (3) development of improved accident investigation procedures, (4) emergency service plans, (5) demonstration projects, and (6) related activities which are deemed by the Secretary to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. Added Pub.L. 89–564, Title I, § 101, Sept. 9, 1966, 80 Stat. 733.

Transfer of Functions. All functions, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Commerce and other officers and offices of the Department of Commerce under this title and under specific related laws and parts of laws set out in the notes in this title relating generally to highways and highway and traffic safety were transferred to and vested in the Secretary of Transportation by Pub.L. 89-670, Oct. 15, 1966, 80 Stat. 931, which created the Department of Transportation. See section 1655(a) (1), (6) of Title 49, Transportation.

Authorization of Additional Appropriations. Authorization of appropriation of additional sum of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967, $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1968, and $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969, for the purpose of carrying out this section and section 307(a) of this title, see section 105 of Pub.L. 89-564, set out as a note under section 307 of this title.

Form and Use of Reports of Highway Traffic Accidents or Research Projects in Court; Availability to Public. Section 106 of Pub.L. 89-564 provided that: "All facts contained in any report of any Federal department or agency or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, relating to any highway traffic accident or the investigation thereof conducted pursuant to chapter 4 of title 23 of the United States Code [this chapter] shall be available for use in any civil, criminal, or other judicial proceeding arising out of such accident, and any such officer, employee, or agent may be required to testify in such proceedings as to the facts developed in such investigation. Any such report shall be made available to the public in a manner which does not identify individuals. All completed reports on research projects, demonstration projects, and other related activities conducted under sections 307 and 403 of title 23, United States Code [this section and section 307 of this title], shall be made available to the public in a manner which does not identify individuals."

National Highway Safety Bureau. Provisions of section to be carried out by National Highway Safety Bureau in the Department of Transportation headed by a Director, see section 201 of Pub.L. 89-564, set out as a note under section 401 of this title.

§ 404. National Highway Safety Advisory Committee

(a) (1) There is established in the Department of Transportation a National Highway Safety Advisory Committee, composed of the Secretary or an officer of the Department appointed by him, who shall be Chairman, the Federal Highway Administrator, and thirty-five members appointed by the President, no more than four of whom shall be Federal officers or employees. The appointed members, having due regard for the purposes of this chapter, shall be selected from among representatives of various State and local governments, including State legislatures, of public and private interests contributing to, affected by, or concerned with highway safety, including the national organizations of passenger car, bus, and truck owners, and of other public and private agencies, organizations, or groups demonstrating an active interest in highway safety, as well as research scientists and other individuals who are expert in this field.

(2) (A) Each member appointed by the President shall hold office for a term of three years, except that (i) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (ii) the terms of office of members first taking office after the date of enactment of this section shall expire as follows: Twelve at the end of one year after the date such committee members are appointed by the President, twelve at the end of two years after the date such committee members are appointed by the President, and eleven at the end of three years after the date such committee members are appointed, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, and (iii) the term of any member shall be extended until the date on which the successor's appointment is effective. None of the members appointed by the President who has served a three-year term, other than Federal officers or employees, shall be eligible for reappointment within one year following the end of his preceding term.

(B) Members of the Committee who are not officers or employees of the United States shall, while attending meetings or conferences of such Committee or otherwise engaged in the business of such Committee, be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding $100 per diem, including traveltime, and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized in section 5 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946 (5 U.S.C. 73b–2) for persons in the Government service employed intermittently. Payments under this section shall not render members of the Committee employees or officials of the United States for any purpose.

(b) The National Highway Safety Advisory Committee shall advise, consult with, and make recommendations to, the Secretary on matters relating to the activities and functions of the Department in the field of highway safety. The Committee is authorized (1) to review research projects or programs submitted to or recommended by it in the field of highway safety and recommend to the Secretary, for prosecution under this title, any such projects which it believes show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge with respect to the cause and prevention of highway accidents; and (2) to review, prior to issuance, standards proposed to be issued by order of the Secretary under the provisions of section 402(a) of this title and to make recommendations thereon. Such recommendations shall be published in connection with the Secretary's determination or order.

(c) The National Highway Safety Advisory Committee shall meet from time to time as the Secretary shall direct, but at least once each year.

(d) The Secretary shall provide to the National Highway Safety Committee from among the personnel and facilities of the Department of Commerce such staff and facilities as are necessary to carry out the functions of such Committee.

Added Pub.L. 89–564, Title I, § 101, Sept. 9, 1966, 80 Stat. 733, amended Pub.L. 90–150, Nov. 24, 1967, 81 Stat. 507.

1967 Amendment. Subsec. (a) (1). Pub.L. 90–150, § 1(1), substituted "Department of Transportation" for "Department of Commerce", increased number of Committee appointees from twenty-nine to thirty-five, and provided for selection of members from representatives of national organizations of passenger car, bus, and truck owners.

Subsec. (a) (2) (A). Pub.L. 90–150, § 1(2), substituted provisions for expiration of term of office of initial appointees one, two, and three years after date of appointment for twelve, eleven, and eleven members, respectively, for former provisions for such expiration one, two, and three years following enactment date of Sept. 9, 1966, for ten, ten, and nine members, respectively, and prohibited reappointment within one year after end of preceding term of member serving a three-year term of office.

Transfer of Functions. All functions, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Commerce and other officers and offices of the Department of Commerce under this title and under specific related laws and parts of laws set out in the notes in this title relating generally to highways and highway and traffic safety were transferred to and vested in the Secretary of Transportation by Pub.L. 89–670, Oct. 15, 1966, 80 Stat. 931, which created the Department of Transportation. CHAPTER 5.—HIGHWAY RELOCATION ASSISTANCE

Sec.
501. Declaration of policy.
502. Assurances of adequate relocation assistance program.
503. Administration of relocation assistance program.
504. Federal reimbursement.
505. Relocation payments.
506. Replacement housing.
507. Expenses incidental to transfer of property.
508. Relocation services.
509. Relocation assistance programs on Federal highway projects.
510. Authority of Secretary.
511. Definitions.

§ 501. Declaration of policy

Congress hereby declares that the prompt and equitable relocation and reestablishment of persons, businesses, farmers, and nonprofit organizations displaced as a result of the Federal highway programs and the construction of Federal-aid highways is necessary to insure that a few individuals do not suffer disproportionate injuries as a result of programs designed for the benefit of the public as a whole. Therefore, Congress determines that relocation payments and advisory assistance should be provided to all persons so displaced in accordance with the provisions of this title.

Added Pub.L. 90–495, § 30, Aug. 23, 1968, 82 Stat. 830.

Effective Date. Section effective Aug. 23, 1968, see section 37 of Pub.L. 90–495, set out as a note under section 502 of this title.

Short Title. Section 1 of Pub.L. 90–495 provided that: "This Act [enacting this chapter and sections 135, 139, 140, and 141 of this title, amending sections 101, 101 note, 103, 101, 108, 112, 113, 115, 116, 120, 125, 128, 129, 131, 135, 136, 138, 205, 310, and 402 of this title, section 630 of Title 15, Commerce and Trade, and section 1653 of Title 49, Transportation, repealing section 133 of this title, and enacting provision set out as notes under this section and sections 101, 101, 108, 125, 131, 502, and 510 of this title] may be cited as the 'Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1968'."

Eminent Domain. Section 32 of Pub.L. 90–495 provided that: "Nothing contained in chapter 5 of title 23, United States Code [this chapter], shall be construed as creating in any condemnation proceedings brought under the power of eminent domain, any element of damages not in existence on the date of enactment of such chapter 5 [Aug. 23, 1968]."

Legislative History. For legislative history and purpose of Pub.L. 90–495, see 1968 U.S.Code Cong. and Adm.News, p. 3182.

§ 502. Assurances of adequate relocation assistance program

The Secretary shall not approve any project under section 106 or section 117 of this title which will cause the displacement of any person, business, or farm operation unless he receives satisfactory assurances from the State highway department that—

(1) fair and reasonable relocation and other payments shall be afforded to displaced persons in accordance with sections 505, 506, and 507 of this title;

(2) relocation assistance programs offering the services described in section 508 of this title shall be afforded to displaced persons; and

(3) within a reasonable period of time prior to displacement there will be available, to the extent that can reasonably be accomplished, in areas not generally less desirable in regard to public utilities and public and commercial facilities and at rents or prices within the financial means of the families and individuals displaced, decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings, as defined by the Secretary, equal in number to the number of and available to such displaced families

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether a State requirement that any person riding upon or operating a motorcycle on the streets or highways of the State shall wear upon his head a protective head device of a type approved by the State is unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment.

BACKGROUND

Twenty-three U.S.C. § 402(a) (P. L. 89-564, the Highway Safety Act of 1966) requires each State to have a highway safety program approved by the Secretary of Transportation and in accordance with uniform standards promulgated by him.

Highway Safety Program Standard 4.4.3 released by the Secretary on June 26, 1967, and entitled Motorcycle Safety, (23 C.F.R. Part 204) requires each State to have a motorcycle safety program providing as a minimum, inter alia, that when a motorcycle is being operated on streets and highways, each motorcycle operator and passenger shall wear an approved safety helmet. Latest available information [1/] indicates that as of September 1, 1969, 41 states had enacted motorcycle protective headgear statutes ("headgear legislation" hereafter) of this type providing criminal penalties upon violation. Additionally an unknown number of cities may have enacted similar municipal ordinances.

As of January 1, 1970, there have been decisions in response to 43 known separate court challenges of State and municipal headgear legislation. In 31 instances legislation has been upheld, and in 12 it has been declared unconstitutional. [2/] Headgear legislation has been upheld by 11 State Supreme Courts (Vermont, Missouri, Florida, Washington, Oregon, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Louisiana, North Dakota, and Wisconsin), 12 appellate courts (three in New York, two in New Jersey, and one each in Hawaii, Pennsylvania, Texas, Maryland, Ohio, Washington, and Connecticut), and 8 trial courts (two each in Pennsylvania, Kansas and New York, one each in South Dakota and Minnesota). Headgear legislation has been declared unconstitutional by 1 State Supreme Court (Illinois), 3 appellate courts (one each in Idaho, Arizona and Michigan), and 8 trial courts (two in New York, and one each in Ohio, Florida, Missouri, Kentucky, Colorado, and Michigan).

1/ Insurance Institute of Highway Safety, Legislative Review 1970, p. 20.

2/ This figure is computed on the basis of the last known decision in each case. Such decision, of course, may represent an appellate reversal, or be subject to reversal on appeal.

Additionally, it is the opinion of the Attorney General of Oklahoma that the State's headgear legislation is unconstitutional and the opinion of the Attorney General of New Mexico that a proposed city ordinance would be invalid if applied to citizens over 18 years of age.

The Supreme Court has never agreed to review one of these cases on the merits. However, in June 1969 the Court in Bisenius v. Karns dismissed an appeal (89 S. Ct. 2033 (1969)) attacking the constitutionality of the Wisconsin statute "for want of a substantial federal question". Such a disposition means that the Court viewed the decision below, upholding constitutionality, to be correct.

I

THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT VIEWS A STATE SUPREME COURT DECISION UPHOLDING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF HEADGEAR LEGISLATION TO BE CORRECT

During its 1968-69 term, the United States Supreme Court denied two petitions for certiorari in cases upholding headgear legislation 1/ and dismissed an appeal in a third case "for want of a substantial federal question", Bisenius v. Karns, 165 N.W. 2d 377 (S. Ct. Wisc. 1969), appeal dismissed, 89 S. Ct. 2033 (1969). The appellant had attacked Wisconsin's headgear legislation (§ 347.485(1)(a) Stats.) as a restriction upon individual liberty and as exceeding the police power of the state, alleging that both violated the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Supreme Court's dismissal of appeal "for want of substantial federal question" means that the Court views the decision below to be correct, and that no substantial question on the merits was raised. 2/

The issues raised in Bisenius are essentially the same as those raised in other suits challenging the constitutionality of headgear legislation.

II

THE PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF A STATUTE IS ESPECIALLY APPOSITE WHEN A STATE STATUTE IMPLEMENTS THE EXPRESS COMMAND OF THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

There is a "long established presumption in favor of the constitutionality of a statute", Brandeis J., Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288 at 354, (1936). This presumption has been recognized by the Supreme Court since the earliest days of the United States. Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 399, (1798). In the words of Mr. Chief Justice Waite: "Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt." Sinking-Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700, 718, (1879). Accord: Marshall C.J., Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 625 (1818); Washington, J., Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 270 (1827).

This presumption applies to an Act of a State legislature as well as an Act of Congress, and "all reasonable doubts will be resolved in favor of the lawful exercise of their powers by the representatives of the people." State of North Carolina v. Anderson, 164 S.E. 2d 48 (1968) upholding that State's helmet legislation. The presumption extends to a city ordinance as well. Everhardt v. City of New Orleans 217 So. 2d 400 (S. Ct. La. 1968), reversing 208 2d 423 (La. App. 1968) cert. denied 89 S. Ct. 1775 (1969).

The presumption of constitutionality seems especially apposite when a State enacts legislation as a complement to an Act of Congress. The Highway Safety Act of 1966 (P. L. 89-564) was enacted "To provide for a coordinated national highway safety program through financial assistance to the States to accelerate highway traffic safety programs . . . ." It requires that "Each State shall have a highway safety program . . . designed to reduce traffic accidents and deaths . . . ." These programs "shall be in accordance with uniform standards promulgated by the Secretary." 23 U.S.C. § 402 a)

Pursuant to the authority granted him by the Act the Secretary released Highway Safety Program Standard 4.4.3 (23 C.F.R. Part 204, Highway Safety Program Standard No. 3) title "Motorcycle Safety." The purpose of the Standard was

> "To assure that motorcycles, motorcycle operators, and their passengers meet standards which contribute to safe operation and protection against injuries."

The background of the Standard shows the imperative need for such a Standard:

> "Deaths and injuries from motorcycle accidents doubled between 1963 and 1965. This fact is particularly alarming when it is understood that most of those killed and injured were young people under the age of 25. Motorcycle registrations have jumped from 574,080 in 1960 to 1,914,700 in 1966. By 1970 the annual increase is expected to reach 1 million per year. Motorcycle safety takes on grave dimensions in view of the fact that since 1960 the rate of motorcycle fatalities has increased at about the same rate as the number of motorcycles."

The Standard requires that "Each State shall have a motorcycle safety program to insure . . . that protective safety equipment for driver and passengers will be worn," specifically, "as a minimum," that

> "B. Each motorcycle operator wears an approved safety helmet and eye protection when he is operating his vehicle on streets and highways.
> "C. Each motorcycle passenger wears an approved safety helmet . . . ."

This, then, is the Federal Standard that the State legislation was enacted to implement at the express command of the Congress.

III

THE POLICE POWER OF A STATE INCLUDES THE POWER TO REQUIRE A MOTORCYCLIST TO WEAR PROTECTIVE HEADGEAR.

Headgear legislation stems from the police power of a State. The police power includes the power to enact laws within constitutional limits to promote the public safety and health, but from its nature it is incapable of exact definition. See e.g. Berman v. Parker 348 U.S. 26 (1954). It is one of the least limitable of governmental powers, and a proper exercise thereof may involve limitation of the use and enjoyment of private property without violation of the due process clause of the Constitution. See e.g. Queenside Hills Realty Co. v. Saxl, 328 U.S. 80 (1945).

The public streets, roads, and highways of a State are the property of all the people of a State, and a State has plenary power over the regulation of the use of such for the safety and best interests of the public. The Supreme Court has recognized and given sanction to the State exercise of its police power over use of the public way for more than 40 years:

> "Motor vehicles are dangerous machines, and, even when skillfully and carefully operated, their use is attended by serious dangers to persons and property. In the public interest the state may make and enforce regulations reasonably calculated to promote care on the part of all . . . who use its highways."
> Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, at 356 (1927).

Protection of a motorcyclist and his passenger while on the public roads then is within the legitimate concern of the State and not an area reserved to the individual. Legislation requiring the use of protective headgear by both cyclist and passenger is reasonably related to the end envisioned of reducing deaths and injuries to cyclists and passengers upon the public roads. Therefore State headgear legislation is a valid exercise of the police power by a State. See Massachusetts v. Howie, 238 N.E. 2d 373 (S. Jud. Ct. Mass., 1968); 89 S. Ct. 485 cert. denied 1968); State v. Edwards, Case No. 582370, Mun. Ct. Hennepin Cty. Minn. (1968).

IV

A STATE STATUTE REQUIRING A MOTORCYCLIST AND PASSENGER TO WEAR PROTECTIVE HEADGEAR DOES NOT VIOLATE THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

A. EVEN IF THE PRIMARY OBJECT OF HEADGEAR LEGISLATION IS TO PROTECT AN INDIVIDUAL FROM HIMSELF, SUFFICIENT PUBLIC INTEREST EXISTS TO JUSTIFY THIS STATUTE AND THERE IS NO VIOLATION OF THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE.

If headgear legislation bears no relationship to the general welfare but has the sole effect of requiring an individual to protect himself from himself, it will establish a restriction upon personal liberty such as to constitute a denial of due process.

But such legislation is based upon sufficient public interest to constitute a valid exercise of the State police power.

The unprotected motorist presents a potential traffic hazard to the public at large. Unlike the operator of an enclosed motor vehicle a cyclist without a helmet is unprotected against falling objects such as tree branches. He is also unprotected against flying stones or gravel from the wheels of other moving vehicles. If struck in the head an unprotected cyclist could be so affected as to lose control of the vehicle and be the cause of death or injury to himself and other users of the highway. Everhardt v. City of New Orleans, supra; State ex rel. Colvin v. Lombardi, 241 A. 2d 625 (S. Ct. R. I. 1968).

Further, once a cyclist, passenger, or other person is injured because of the action of an unprotected cyclist, there is a tangible effect upon the public. There is an effect upon insurance rates, public hospital services, income tax revenues because of lost manhours of employment, public services to the disabled, and national defense since many motorcyclists are young men.

Severe injuries may result in an individual becoming a public charge; his death may call into force the State's welfare responsibility for his widow and children. State v. Lombardi, supra; People v. Newhouse, 287 N.Y.S. 2d 713 (1968).

The interdependence of the acts of an individual and the interest of the State has long been recognized. "The whole is no greater than the sum of all the parts, and when the individual health, safety, and welfare are sacrificed or neglected, the State must suffer." New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188 at 206-07 (1916). Accordingly States have legislated in many situations where there is a demonstrable risk to an individual which can be substantially reduced by requiring himto take certain protective measures. State laws prohibiting self-maiming and attempted self-destruction are well known. Additionally many States require safety devices to be worn by window cleaners, eye protection for welders, hard hats for those involved in demolition work, life preservers to be worn while water skiing, and nets protecting aerial performers from the effects of accidental falls. Headgear legislation belongs to this class of legislation.

B. HEADGEAR LEGISLATION DOES NOT VIOLATE THE EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE SINCE THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN MOTORCYCLES AND OTHER VEHICLES IS BASED UPON SUBSTANTIAL DIFFERENCES AND THEREFORE REASONABLE IN LIGHT OF ITS PURPOSE.

Headgear legislation restricts the liberty of only one class of users of the public highway: motorcyclists and their passengers. There is no similar restriction upon the liberty of operators and passengers of other motor vehicles.

But headgear legislation does not violate the equal protection clause because the distinction between motorcycles and other vehicles such as bicycles and automobiles is based upon substantial differences and is reasonable in light of its purpose:

> "The power-driver cycle is a unique machine. It is capable of moderate to high speeds by motor vehicle standards, with the hazards inherent in speeds at which the vehicle is driven. A bicycle is limited in its speed by the nature of the power which propels it. An automobile differs from a motorcycle in providing a shell surrounding the motorists. Both bicycles and automobiles can be dangerous to the riders, but the hazards of speed on the one hand and lack of an enclosure on the other hand do distinguish the motorcycle from both the bicycle and the automobile and make the hazard of operation distinguishable from both the bicycle and the automobile. Just because both the bicyclist and the motorist are subjected to hazards of head and face injuries does not mean that in order to make Sec. 347.485 valid it must apply to bicyclists and motorists. The degrees of hazards differ and therein lies the distinction. A classification is not unreasonable because it does not affect everyone who has any exposure to an evil." Bisenius v. Karns, Case No. 124423(Cty. Ct. Wisc. 1968).

C. HEADGEAR LEGISLATION DOES NOT VIOLATE THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE SINCE IT IS CLEAR AND DEFINITE ENOUGH TO GIVE UNEQUIVOCAL WARNING OF THE RULE TO BE OBEYED.

Even though headgear legislation may require the wearing of a helmet of a type approved by a designated State official, such a statute is sufficiently definite, clear, and positive to give unequivocal warning to citizens of the rule which is to be obeyed.

A statute does not have to specify precise helmet performance requirements in order to be clear and definite, since the use and nature of protective helmets in industry, athletics, and the military service is known generally to the public. People v. Schmidt, 54 Misc. 2d 702, 283 NYS 2d 290 (1967). It is sufficient that the regulations, or proposed regulations of the designated State official "indicates that the requirements will be definite and certain with standards based upon tests to be made of the various headgear." Bisenius v. Karns, Case No. 124423 (Cty. Ct. Wisc. 1968).

D. HEADGEAR LEGISLATION DOES NOT VIOLATE THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE SINCE IT LAWFULLY DELEGATES POLICE POWER TO AN ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICIAL.

The established rule is that the legislature may delegate to a subordinate body the discretionary power to execute and administer a law, provided a reasonably clear standard is formulated to govern the exercise of discretion by the subordinate body. The test is the completeness of the statute so that no part of the legislative function is left to the judgment of a delegate. People v. Carmichael, 288 NYS 2d 931 (1968) rev. 279 NYS 2d 272 (1967). Even though a standard by its nature is a general one it is valid if it is capable of reasonable application under the circumstances. Headgear legislation constitutes a lawful delegation of the police power since it describes the job to be done, who must do it, and the scope of his authority. Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U.S. 502, 575 (1944).

Numerous examples of legislative delegation of powers pertaining to vehicle and traffic standards can be found in State laws. In New York, for example, the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles may make rules and regulations prescribing standards of brake efficiency, brake linings, hydraulic brake fluid, commercial vehicle lighting, emergency equipment, school bus equipment, splash guards, safety belts and shoulder harnesses, and traffic hazard warning devices. 3/

3/ Subject to sec. 103(d) of P.L. 89-563 (The National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966).

MOTORCYCLE PROTECTIVE HEADGEAR STATUTES

A typical statute requiring use of protective headgear by motorcycle operators and/or passengers might read:

> No person shall ride upon or operate a motorcycle on the streets or highways of this State (city) without wearing upon his head a protective head device (crash helmet, safety headgear, protective helmet) of a type approved by the Director of Public Safety (Commissioner, City Council Department of Health).[1]

The following 40 States have enacted statutes of this type:

Alabama	Kentucky	North Dakota
Arizona	Louisiana	Ohio
Arkansas	Maine	Oklahoma
Colorado	Maryland	Oregon
Connecticut	Massachusetts	Pennsylvania
Delaware	Minnesota	Rhode Island
Florida	Missouri	South Carolina
Georgia	Nebraska	South Dakota

[1] The legislature of Michigan, in response to a decision of the Court of Appeals on April 30, 1968, holding its protective headgear statute unconstitutional, enacted a new statute on June 12, 1968, which reads:

> A motorcycle and a motor driven cycle shall be equipped with, and carry when it is being operated, a number of crash helmets equal to the number of drivers and passengers carried during operation. Helmets shall be approved by the department of State police. The department shall promulgate rules for the implementation of this section in accordance with the provisions of [here follows a lengthy citation]

Hawaii	New Hampshire	Tennessee
Idaho	New Jersey	Texas Utah
Illinois	New Mexico (under 18)	Vermont
Indiana	New York	Washington
Kansas	North Carolina	Wisconsin

The factual situations in the cases are virtually identical: the operator of a motorcycle was apprehended while operating a motorcycle upon the public streets without wearing on his head a protective head device as required by law.

Virginia Highway Safety

ery is $200. At least 20 percent of all stolen vehicle crashes result in injury to one or more persons.

TESTING Two identical cars were in an experimental run from Germany into Italy, a distance of 1,000 miles. One driver was to make the best time he possibly could within reasonable bounds of safety. The other was told to take it safe and easy. The first finished only 21 minutes ahead of the other with a driving time of 20 hours and 12 minutes. The experiment was repeated over an 800 mile course and this time the difference was again 21 minutes. The fast driver used 10 more gallons of gas.

ALCOHOL In Wisconsin, a person who refuses a test under the State's implied consent law and is convicted gets an extra two days in jail and six more months of license suspension.

In Leeds, England, it was found that motorists were heating the second blood sample, which goes to the accused, and then claiming they were being deprived of evidence, since the blood could not be tested, through no fault of theirs.

In October, 1967, Britain's strict drunk driving laws, which included a roadside preliminary breath test, went into effect. The Ministry of Transport reports 22,000 less deaths and serious injuries than in a similar period. In both years, about 70 percent of the reductions were achieved between 10 p.m. and 4 a.m. when drinking and driving are most likely to be at their worst.

Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory has been experimenting with a device which measures an individual's alcohol level by the unsteadiness of his eyes as he attempts to fix his gaze on a target. It can spot a level as low as .02 percent. The device makes a pictoral record of what happens to each of the testee's eyes when he attempts to look in a shadowbox at a target light. Not a difficult operation for a sober person, it requires control of the eye muscles through the brain and a drinking person loses this control.

A recent Wisconsin survey revealed that among 16 pedestrians 16 years of age and over killed in traffic, 73 percent had been drinking and 40 percent had levels of .15 or higher. Of 422 drivers tested, 65 percent had been drinking and 37 had alcohol levels of .15 or above.

In New York State, a drinking driver left the road on a curve. His car did not overturn but plowed a 200-foot path through weeds and bushes. Moments later, a second and following drinking driver, seeing the first driver's taillights ahead, thought the newly plowed path was the highway and followed it until he crashed into the rear of the first car.

MOTORCYCLES Of our 50 states and the eight Canadian provinces protective headgear is required in 47 jurisdictions, eye protection in 33, rear view mirrors in 48 and special licenses in 40. With the passage of the necessary law this year, Virginia will meet all these standards when the law becomes effective on June 26. The Colorado Supreme Court has just ruled cyclists can be made to wear helmets and goggles.

with a lamp on the front which shall emit a white light visible from a distance of at least 500 feet to the front and with a red reflector on the rear of a type approved by the department which shall be visible from all distances from 100 feet to 600 feet to the rear when directly in front of lawful lower beams of head lamps on a motor vehicle. A lamp emitting a red light visible from a distance of 500 feet to the rear may be used in addition to the red reflector. (REVISED, 1968.)

(b) No person shall operate a bicycle unless it is equipped with a bell or other device capable of giving a signal audible for a distance of at least 100 feet, except that a bicycle shall not be equipped with nor shall any person use upon a bicycle any siren or whistle.

(c) Every bicycle shall be equipped with a brake which will enable the operator to make the braked wheels skid on dry, level, clean pavement.

ARTICLE XIII—SPECIAL RULES FOR MOTORCYCLES (NEW, 1968.)

§ 11-1301—Traffic laws apply to persons operating motorcycles

Every person operating a motorcycle shall be granted all of the rights and shall be subject to all of the duties applicable to the driver of any other vehicle under this act, except as to special regulations in this article and except as to those provisions of this act which by their nature can have no application.

§ 11-1302—Riding on motorcycles

(a) A person operating a motorcycle shall ride only upon the permanent and regular seat attached thereto, and such operator shall not carry any other person nor shall any other person ride on a motorcycle unless such motorcycle is designed to carry more than one person, in which event a passenger may ride upon the permanent and regular seat if designed for two persons, or upon another seat firmly attached to the motorcycle at the rear or side of the operator. (FORMERLY § 11-1103; REVISED, 1968.)

(b) A person shall ride upon a motorcycle only while sitting astride the seat, facing forward, with one leg on each side of the motorcycle.

(c) No person shall operate a motorcycle while carrying any package, bundle, or other article which prevents him from keeping both hands on the handlebars.

(d) No operator shall carry any person, nor shall any person ride, in a position that will interfere with the operation or control of the motorcycle or the view of the operator.

§ 11-1303—Operating motorcycles on roadways laned for traffic

(a) All motorcycles are entitled to full use of a lane and no motor vehicle shall be driven in such a manner as to deprive any motorcycle of the full use of a lane. This subsection shall not apply to motorcycles operated two abreast in a single lane.

(b) The operator of a motorcycle shall not overtake and pass in the same lane occupied by the vehicle being overtaken.

(c) No person shall operate a motorcycle between lanes of traffic or between adjacent lines or rows of vehicles.

(d) Motorcycles shall not be operated more than two abreast in a single lane.

(e) Subsections (b) and (c) shall not apply to police officers in the performance of their official duties.

§ 11-1304—Clinging to other vehicles

No person riding upon a motorcycle shall attach himself or the motorcycle to any other vehicle (or streetcar) on a roadway.

§ 11-1305—Footrests and handlebars

(a) Any motorcycle carrying a passenger, other than in a sidecar or enclosed cab, shall be equipped with footrests for such passenger.

(b) No person shall operate any motorcycle with handlebars more than 15 inches in height above that portion of the seat occupied by the operator.

§ 11-1306—Equipment for motorcycle riders

(a) No person shall operate or ride upon a motorcycle unless wearing protective headwear which complies with standards established by the commissioner.

(b) No person shall operate any motorcycle unless wearing an eye-protective device of a type approved by the commissioner, except when the motorcycle is equipped with a windscreen.

(c) This section shall not apply to persons riding within an enclosed cab.

(d) The commissioner is hereby authorized to approve or disapprove protective headgear and eye-protective devices required herein, and to issue and enforce regulations establishing standards and specifications for the approval thereof. The commissioner shall publish lists of all protective headgear and eye-protective devices by name and type which have been approved by him.

ARTICLE XIV—STREETCARS [1]

(REPOSITIONED, 1968; FORMERLY ARTICLE XIII.)

§ 11-1401—Traffic laws apply to operators of streetcars

Every operator of a streetcar upon any roadway shall be granted all of the rights and shall be subject to all of the duties applicable to the driver of a vehicle by this chapter and chapter 10, except regulations and provisions which by their nature can have no application. (NEW, 1968.)

§ 11-1402—Passing streetcar on left

(a) The driver of a vehicle shall not overtake and pass upon the left nor drive upon the left side of any streetcar proceeding in the same direction, whether such streetcar is actually in motion or temporarily at rest, except:

1. When so directed by a police officer;
2. When upon a one-way street; or
3. When upon a street where the tracks are so located as to prevent compliance with this section.

(b) The driver of any vehicle when permitted to overtake and pass upon the left of a streetcar which has stopped for the purpose of receiving or discharging any passenger shall reduce speed and may proceed only upon exercising due caution for pedestrians and shall accord pedestrians the right of way when required by other sections of this chapter.

[1] This article should be omitted in states where no streetcars are in operation.

§ 11-1403—Passing streetcar on right

The driver of a vehicle overtaking upon the right any streetcar stopped or about to stop for the purpose of receiving or discharging any passenger shall stop such vehicle at least five feet to the rear of the nearest running board or door of such streetcar and thereupon remain standing until all passengers have boarded such car or upon alighting have reached a place of safety, except that where a safety zone has been established, a vehicle need not be brought to a stop before passing any such streetcar but may proceed past such car at a speed not greater than is reasonable and proper and with due caution for the safety of pedestrians.

§ 11-1404—Driving on streetcar tracks

(a) The driver of any vehicle proceeding upon any streetcar track in front of a streetcar upon a street shall remove such vehicle from the track as soon as practical after signal from the operator of said streetcar.

(b) When a streetcar has lawfully entered and is crossing an intersection, no driver of a vehicle shall drive upon or across the car tracks within the intersection in front of the streetcar when there is hazard of a collision.

(c) The driver of a vehicle upon overtaking and passing a streetcar shall not turn in front of such streetcar so as to interfere with or impede its movement.

MOTOR VEHICLE LAW REVIEW

In this issue of the Bulletin, Joseph P. Hennessee, Director of AAMVA's Division of Legal Services, reports on a Colorado helmet law decision and gives a summary of a memorandum from the National Highway Safety Bureau which reviews existing helmet law decisions in the various jurisdictions.

Colorado Helmet Law Upheld

The latest in a series of motorcyle helmet cases is The People of the State of Colorado v. Joseph Ball, et al, not yet reported, which was handed down by the Colorado Supreme Court on January 26, 1970.

The facts show that defendants in error (who were plaintiffs in the trial court and are hereafter referred to as such) began a class action seeking a declaratory judgment concerning the constitutionality of the Colorado Motorcycle Helmet Law (CRS 1963, 13-S-159) enacted by the 1968 General Assembly, and seeking relief against its enforcement.

The pertinent part of the Colorado statute provides "No person shall operate any motorcycle or motor-driven cycle on a public highway in this state unless such person and any passenger therein is wearing securely fastened on his head a protective helmet designed to deflect blows, resist penetration, and spread the force of the impact, . . ."

At trial the plaintiffs presented no evidence whatsoever. The State offered in evidence documents containing statistics dealing with results of operation of motorcycles by drivers wearing helmets as compared to those with drivers not wearing helmets. No other evidence appears in the record.

At the conclusion of the trial the Court ruled that the legislative interest was to prevent motorcyclists from sustaining serious head injuries, and that the legislation was designed to protect only that certain class of persons who ride motorcycles. For this reason the trial judge ruled that the helmet statute did not relate to the health and welfare of the citizens of Colorado in general, and was, therefore, an unconstitutional exercise of the police power of the state, and enjoined the State from enforcing the "helmet" requirement. The court upheld as constitutional that portion of the statute requiring operators and passengers of motorcycles to wear a face shield, goggles, or safety glasses.

Upon appeal the Supreme Court reversed the trial court and held that the helmet requirement was constitutional.

In reaching this conclusion the Supreme Court pointed out there is a presumption that every statute is valid and constitutional, and that the burden of clearly demonstrating the unconstitutionality of a statute is upon the party asserting its invalidity. Second, in order for a statute to be within the police power of the state, the provisions of the statute must be reasonably related to the public health, safety and welfare. Whether or not the relationship is reasonable is a judicial question.

Plaintiffs argued that where a statute deprives a certain class of persons of their individual constitutional freedoms, there must be a more substantial relationship between the restrictive provisions and the public health, safety, and welfare than that provided by the test of reasonableness.

The Supreme Court did not agree. While it noted that it had characterized an individual's right to use of the public highways as an adjunct of the constitutional right to acquire, possess and protect property, it has clearly held that such a right may be limited by the proper exercise of the police power based on a reasonable relationship to the public health, safety and welfare.

In deciding that the helmet law bore no reasonable relationship to the public health, safety and welfare, the trial judge, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, failed to apply the above principles of constitutional law correctly to the facts of the case.

The trial judge concluded that the purpose of the helmet law was to prevent motorcyclists from sustaining head injuries, and that such purpose was not within the state's police power. "To say that statutes which protect the individual from serious bodily harm or death are per se unconstitutional as not bearing a reasonable relationship to the public health, safety and welfare is to apply a most shallow doctrine of the police power of the state. Such a concept would require us to hold unconstitutional hunter safety laws, laws requiring life jackets . . . laws requiring workers in certain occupations to wear protective devices, a result which we are not prepared to adopt in the name of the 'right to be left alone'."

The Court stated that the safety of other highway users might be affected by failure of motorcyclists to protect themselves against, for example, stones picked up and thrown by tires, and noted that the hypothesis that an accident might occur because of failure to wear protective helmets had been upheld as reasonable by the ruling courts in Louisiana, Massachusetts, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin. While only the Supreme Court of Illinois has held to the contrary.

Everhardt v. New Orleans, 253 La. 285, 217 So.2d 400; Commonwealth v. Howie, 354 Mass. 769, 238 N.E. 2d 373, Cert. denied 393 U.S. 999, 895 Ct. 485, 21 L.Ed. 2d 464; State v. Anderson, 275 N.C. 168, 166 S.E. 2d 49; State v. Odegaard, 165 N.W. 2d 677 (N.D.); State v. Fetterly, —Ore.—, 456 P. 2d 966; State v. Lombardi, —R.I.—, 241 A. 2d 625; Ex parte Smith, —Tex.— 441 S.W. 2d 544; State v. Leitenen, —Wash.—, 459 P. 2d 789; Bisenius v. Karns, 42 Wis. 2d 42, 165 N.W. 2d 377 (dismissed on appeal by U.S. Supreme Court "for want of a substantial federal question in 89 S.Ct. 2033 (1969)"); Contra, People v. Fries, 42 Ill. 2d 446, 250 N.E. 2d 149.

In an assignment of cross error, plaintiffs alleged that the helmet requirement constituted an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce.

In demolishing this argument the Court noted that 41 states now have helmet laws. In addition, it noted, the Federal Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Statute, 15 U.S.C.A. Sec. 1381 et seq., which was passed under the commerce power for the purpose of reducing traffic accidents, deaths and injuries, is an indication that state statutes designed to reduce the death toll on the public highways are not contrary to any federal policy or interstate commerce.

Headgear Legislation Memorandum

The National Highway Safety Bureau has circulated a memorandum to the Governors of the various states in regard to whether a State requirement that any person riding upon or operating a motorcycle on the streets or highways of the State shall wear upon his head a protective device of a type approved by the State is unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment.

This memorandum is available from the National Highway Safety Bureau.

It relates that as of January 1, 1970, there have been at least 43 separate decisions in regard to headgear requirements. In 31 instances, legislation has been upheld. In 12 instances it has been held unconstitutional.

Headgear legislation has been upheld by 11 State Supreme Courts (Vermont, Missouri, Florida, Washington, Oregon, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Louisiana, North Dakota and Wisconsin); 12 Appellate Courts (three in New York, two in New Jersey, and one each in Hawaii, Pennsylvania, Texas, Maryland, Ohio, Washington and Connecticut); and of Trial Courts (two each in Pennsylvania, Kansas and New York, and one each in South Dakota and Minnesota).

Headgear legislation has been declared to be unconstitutional by one State Supreme Court (Illinois), three Appellate Courts (one each in Idaho, Arizona and Michigan), and 8 trial courts (two in New York and one each in Ohio, Florida, Missouri, Kentucky, Colorado and Michigan).

Additionally, as this memorandum reports, the Attorney General of Oklahoma has issued an opinion that the Oklahoma law is unconstitutional. The Attorney General of New Mexico has ruled that a proposed city ordinance would be invalid if applied to citizens over 18 years of age.

The United States has never agreed to review one of these cases on the merits. In June, 1969, the Court in Bisenius v. Karns dismissed an appeal (89 S.Ct. 2033 (1969)) attacking the constitutionality of the Wisconsin statute "for want of a substantial federal question." During the 1968-69 term the Court denied certiorari in Everhardt v. City of New Orleans, 217 So. 2d 400 (S. Ct. La. 1968), Cert. denied 89 S. Ct. 1775 (1969); and Massachusetts v. Howie, 283 N.E. 2d 373 (S. Jud. Ct. Mass. 1968) Cert. denied 89 S. Ct. 485 (1968).

In an Appendix to the memorandum there is a listing and citation of motorcycle protective headgear legislation opinions known as of January 1, 1970. This Appendix also lists the known opinions of the States Attorneys General.

For further information it cites the following four Law Review Notes and Articles: (1) Constitutional Law—Validity of Safety Helmet Requirements, 71 W. Va. L. Rev. 191 (1969); (2) Constitutional Law—Police Power—Motorcycle Crash Helmet Laws' Relation to Public Welfare, 1969 Wisc. L. Rev. 320 (1969); (3) Constitutionality of Mandatory Motorcycle Helmet Legislation, 73 Dick. L. Rev. 100 (1968); and (4) Constitutional Law—Due Process—State Requiring Motorcyclist to Wear Crash Helmet Is Unconstitutional, (American Motorcycle Ass'n. v. Davids), 82 Harv. L. Rev. 649.

This memorandum is a "must" for each motor vehicle department attorney. While we cannot furnish each of you with a copy of this memorandum, it is available as previously mentioned, from the National Highway Safety Bureau. Copies are already in the hands of each State Safety Coordinator, each State Attorney General, and each Regional Highway Representative. The complete listing of cases with citations is available from this office.

Arthur P. Flynn Elected First Chairman Of AAMVA Industry Advisory Committee

Arthur P. Flynn was elected the first permanent Chairman of the AAMVA Industry Advisory Committee at a meeting held in Washington, D. C. March 4th.

Flynn, National Sales Manager for State Government Markets for 3-M Company, succeeds J. Olan Cooper. Cooper, Manager of the State Relations Department of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, had served as temporary Chairman of the group since it was formed in late 1969.

The Industry Advisory Committee was created by former AAMVA President Douglas W. Toms shortly before he resigned from the Association's chief executive post to become Director of the National Highway Safety Bureau. It was formed to facilitate relationships between the member jurisdictions of AAMVA and those businesses and commercial enterprises with which they engage in regular business activity.

Cooper, who had been serving as an alternate for Russell MacCleery, Administrative Vice President of AMA, has been designated as a regular member by AAMVA President Will Bachofner. Also, President Bachofner recently announced the appointment of Leonard Schuttig, Eastern Sales Manager for the Stardust Hotel in Las Vegas, as an Advisory Committee member.

Toms Lists Priorities

of a program to cope with the alcohol/driving problem; and, (3) development of a proto-type safety car.

Toms said that as the result of a recent visit to the Detroit factories of the auto manufacturers he was truly impressed by the sophistication in "air bags" research to date. He predicted that "air bags" probably will become fully operational between 1973 and 1975. Also, he said he felt that "air bags" can be easily and economically "retrofit" to used vehicles.

The "alcholic" not the social drinker poses the major problem in the area of drinking and driving. The NHSB Director conceded that the approach cannot be puritanical—such as prohibition—because the motoring public will not buy it. Toms said he and Secretary Volpe have appealed to the Govenors to help. At the winter meeting of the National Governor's Conference, held in Washington in early March, Secretary told the state's chief executives that to support a hard-nosed and effective alcohol program would not be politically adverse.

Bids are now out to build two proto-type safety cars. Toms said NHSB is hoping for virgorous competition in bidding to build the car. One bid probably will be awarded to a major auto manufacturer and one will be let outside the industry—possibly in the aero-space industry.

Eventually 16 proto-types will be built. These, according to Toms, are a necessity to prove research theories. I want to make certain that something has been proved before I put my name on it, he stated.

Toms said that because of current research by the auto manufacturers that air pollution by the internal combustion engine will be no problem by 1980.

The 16 Highway Safety Program Standards are carefully being examined and suggestions have been made for updating. In addition to the re-vamping, the ones concerned with highway building: Identification and Surveillance of Accident Locations; Highway Design, Construction and Maintenance; Traffic Control Devices; and Debris Hazard Control and Clean-up likely will be placed under the Bureau of Public Roads, if the recommendations are approved by Secretary Volpe.

1969 Hwy Safety Legislation

MONTANA reduced to 48 hours the time when a vehicle may be left parked or standing upon the right-of-way of a public highway before it may be taken into custody as an abandoned vehicle. (H 370, Ch 169)

A NEW YORK law provides new provisions governing the removal and disposal of abandoned vehicles. (S 5636, Ch 829)

An enactment in TENNESSEE requires the owner of a vehicle who disposes of it as wreckage or salvage, to deliver the certificate of title to the commissioner of revenue within 72 hours, along with the manufacturer's serial plate if the vehicle was manufactured less than five years prior to the current model year. (S 827, Ch 267)

VERMONT requires the removal of junkyards by July 1, 1970, if they are visible from the main traveled way along Interstate and primary highways and cannot be effectively screened. The same law provides procedures for the disposition of junk motor vehicles. (H 69, Ch 24) Another VERMONT enactment established comprehensive provisions for the governing of junkyards and the disposal of junk motor vehicles. The State Highway Board was empowered to carry out the new law and was authorized to enter into agreements with the U. S. Secretary of Transportation to arrange for Federal cost participation. (S 81, Act 98)

A WASHINGTON law established procedures for the disposition of stolen and abandoned vehicles. A provision of the new enactment gives the director of the Motor Vehicle Department the responsibility for the ultimate disposition of abandoned vehicles and automobile hulks. (H 769, Ch 42)

Scenic Highways and Service Facilities

An enactment in FLORIDA designated the everglades parkway as an official scenic highway of the State. The new law prohibits certain advertising signs within 500 feet of either side of the right-of-way and provides procedures for removal of nonconforming signs. (H 68, Ch 371)

HAWAII requested the Department of Transportation, the Department of Planning and Economic Development and the Department of Land and Natural Resources to take whatever steps may be necessary and feasible to establish a State system of scenic drives and trails. (SCR 7) Another request to the Department of Transportation requires the holding of public hearings before granting permission to public utilities to construct utility facilities along State or Federal-aid highways. (HR 2.9)

MAINE created a Scenic Highway Board empowered to develop and adopt procedures, rules and regulations for the designation and development of a system of scenic highways and the preservation of scenic value in the highway corridor. (H 837, Ch 453)

The MICHIGAN Legislature memorialized Congress to pass necessary legislation to provide funds for a national system of scenic highways. (SCR 22)

The commissioner of highways in MINNESOTA was authorized to negotiate contracts to provide maintenance services for interstate and trunk highway rest stops and tourist information centers. (S 691, Ch 157)

NEW YORK authorized the commissioner of transportation to construct and maintain or permit the construction and/or maintenance of information centers at safety rest areas. (S 3405, Ch 503)

A House Joint Memorial in WASHINGTON requested Congress to appropriate special financing for fiscal year 1970 for the development of needed recreation facilities, visitor service facilities and scenic highways for North Cascades National Forests. (HJM 17)

UNIFORM LAWS AND MOTOR VEHICLE REGULATION

HIGHWAY SAFETY AND UNIFORM LAWS PROGRESS

Again this year substantial progress was made by the States toward compliance with the Federal Highway Safety Act of 1966 and the standards for State programs promulgated by the Department of Transportation.

Periodic Vehicle Inspection

No State enacted new laws requiring periodic inspection of motor vehicles this year. For other laws relating to periodic inspection, please see page 27 under Equipment Requirements.

Motorcycle Helmets

Legislation to require motorcycle operators and passengers to wear safety helmets has been enacted in five States this year: GEORGIA (H 409, Ch 541), MICHIGAN (H 3114), NEW MEXICO (H 349), OKLAHOMA (H 1258) and RHODE ISLAND (H 2017). The OKLAHOMA law modified previous requirements to provide that persons under age 21 must wear safety helmets and eliminates the requirement that a safety helmet be worn by all persons operating or riding on a motorcycle. A law requiring that motorcyclists wear helmets has been repealed in ILLINOIS. (S 311) Such laws have been rule unconstitutional in lower courts in IDAHO and KENTUCKY and by the Supreme Court in ILLINOIS.

Motorcycle Driver Licenses

MINNESOTA law now provides that no two-wheeled (motorcycle) endorsement shall be issued unless the person applying has been in possession of a valid two-wheeled vehicle instruction permit for at least 30 days; and after September 1, 1970, applicants under 18 years of age must present evidence of having successfully completed a two-wheeled vehicle driver's safety course. (H 485, Ch 1123)

Special licensing for motorcycle drivers was made mandatory this year in MONTANA. (S 135, Ch 28)

Eye Protection—Motorcycles

Protection for the eyes, either by use of a windshield or some type of glasses or goggles, is required by legislation passed in four States: GEORGIA (H 409, Ch 541), MINNESOTA (H 485, Ch 1123), RHODE ISLAND (H 2017) and UTAH (S 76, Ch 69).

Passenger Footrests—Motorcycles

Foot supports for passengers are required by legislation approved in GEORGIA (H 409, Ch 541), NEW HAMPSHIRE (H 34), NEW MEXICO (H 253, H 295, H 296 and H 349, Ch 266), SOUTH CAROLINA (S 182) and UTAH (S 76, Ch 69).

Rear View Mirrors—Motorcycles

Six States passed legislation this year to require motorcycles to be equipped with at least one rear view mirror: MAINE (H 155, Ch 58), MINNESOTA (H 485, Ch 1123) NEW HAMPSHIRE (H 34), RHODE ISLAND (H 2017), SOUTH CAROLINA (S 182) and WASHINGTON (S 305, Ch 42). WASHINGTON previously required two mirrors, but now requires only that one must be mounted on the left side of the handlebar.

Implied Consent Laws

Implied consent legislation enacted in 13 States this year brings the total number of States which have enacted such legislation to 45. The only jurisdictions which do not have such legislation are ILLINOIS, MISSISSIPPI, MONTANA, WISCONSIN, WYOMING and the DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. The States which enacted such legislation this year are: ALABAMA (S 70), ALASKA (S 23, Ch 83), ARIZONA (S 28, Ch 41), ARKANSAS (H 131, Act 106), DELAWARE (H 86), INDIANA (H 1165, Ch 64), MAINE (H 1030, Ch 439), MARYLAND (H 852, Ch 158), NEVADA (H 268, Ch 341), NEW MEXICO (S 63, Ch 30), SOUTH CAROLINA (S 24, Ch 471), TENNESSEE (S 159, Ch 292) and TEXAS (S 74). The MARYLAND law requires that an applicant for a driver license express his consent to a chemical test to determine blood alcohol concentration or he is not to be issued a license.

The presumed level of intoxication has been set at 0.10 per cent by weight of alcohol in the blood by ALABAMA (S 70), ALASKA (S 23, Ch 83), ARKANSAS (H 89, Act 17), CALIFORNIA (H 105), COLORADO (S 89), DELAWARE (H 92), IDAHO (S 1042), IOWA (H 207), NEBRASKA (LB 1997) and SOUTH CAROLINA (S 24, Ch 471). COLORADO enacted legislation which presumes impairment of driving ability at blood-alcohol concentrations by weight of alcohol from 0.05 per cent to 0.10 per cent. (S 89) MARYLAND (H 851, Ch 157) has provided presumed levels of impairment at blood-alcohol concentrations of 0.10 per cent to 0.15 per cent.

A police officer is required to advise a person suspected of driving while intoxicated that he has a choice of tests which he may take under CALIFORNIA law. (S 1065)

A CONNECTICUT enactment provides for the inclusion of private roads in the enforcement provisions relating to drunk driving. (S 374)

IDAHO permits a blood sample to be drawn from all pedestrains and motor vehicle operators who have died as a result of a vehicle accident. (S 1303, Ch 253)

MINNESOTA corrected certain language in its implied consent law pertaining to the revocation of a person's driver license upon refusal to submit to a test to determine blood alcohol concentration. (H 96)

A law requiring a coroner's report on the alcoholic content of the blood of a person who died as a result of a motor vehicle accident on public highways has been enacted by NEW MEXICO. (S 74, Ch 36)

A NEW YORK enactment provides that a police officer may require a person who has been involved in a motor vehicle accident to take a breathalyzer test and then a chemical test, if the breathalyzer test shows that the individual has consumed alcohol. (S 747, Ch 1027)

NORTH CAROLINA reworded its implied consent law and has included a penalty provision. (H 5)

NORTH DAKOTA permits the taking of blood from an unconscious person to determine blood alcohol content. (H 225)

The Dean of the University of Oklahoma Medical School or his designate shall be the chairman of the board of chemical tests for alcohol according to a law passed this year in OKLAHOMA. (S 307)

OREGON enacted legislation which authorizes the application of the implied consent law to arrests made pursuant to municipal ordinances. (S 341, Ch 579)

Driver Education

An ALABAMA enactment provides that high school students shall receive credit for driver education courses beginning in the school year 1969-70. The law also makes driver education compulsory for students who enter the tenth grade in the school year 1972-73. (S 79)

ARKANSAS transferred responsibility for certain equipment used in driver education programs from the State Police Department to the State Department of Education. (S 186, Act 184)

tests is to be revoked according to an act passed in CALIFORNIA this year. (S 1135)

GEORGIA amended the schedule of points assessed for certain traffic violations. (H 603, Ch 615)

IDAHO defined an habitual violator of traffic laws as an individual who accumulates a total of 18 points in 24 months or 24 points in 36 months. The license of such an individual is to be suspended. (S 1263)

ILLINOIS provided certain exceptions to its law requiring the suspension of a driver license after conviction for three traffic violations within a 12-month period. (S 334)

The Drinking Driver

Legislation extending laws which prohibit driving while under the influence of alcohol or while under the influence of narcotic drugs has been enacted in CALIFORNIA (H 200), INDIANA (S 215), MONTANA (H 58), NEVADA (H 233), NEW HAMPSHIRE (H 163), NEW JERSEY (H 358) and OREGON (S 464).

Other legislation enacted in CALIFORNIA authorizes a peace officer to arrest, without a warrant, anyone involved in a traffic accident whom the officer suspects was driving while intoxicated or while under the influence of any drug. (S 176, Ch 956)

The courts of MINNESOTA are permitted to stay the sentence of individuals convicted of drunken driving upon medical recommendation and on the condition that the convicted person submit to medical treatment. (H 162, Ch 741)

Motorcycle Operators

ILLINOIS enacted legislation which requires a motorcycle operator to use his headlight at all times of operation. (S 10)

MAINE provides that if a motorcycle headlamp does not provide an adequate beam such motorcycle shall be restricted to daylight operation. (H 155, Ch 58)

Legislation dealing with handlebar height was approved in five states: IOWA (H 319), MICHIGAN (H 2513), NEW MEXICO (H 253, H 295, H 296 and H 349, Ch 266), SOUTH CAROLINA (S 182) and UTAH (S 76, Ch 69). The UTAH law provides that handlebars shall be no higher than shoulder height while the other States stipulate a maximum height of 15 inches above the seat.

Laws governing the operation of motorcycles have been enacted in IOWA (H 319), NEBRASKA (LB 895), SOUTH CAROLINA (S 182), and UTAH (S 76, Ch 69). Generally these laws prohibit driving more than two abreast and require motorcyclists to drive within a lane and not abreast of another motor vehicle. The NEBRASKA law prohibits having more than two persons on a motorcycle.

Legislation providing operating restrictions for holders of learner permits has been enacted by MICHIGAN (H 2513), MINNESOTA (H 485, Ch 1123) and NEW MEXICO (H 253, H 295, H 296 and H 349 (Ch 266). The MICHIGAN law provides that as of January 1, 1970, motorcyclists must be 18 to obtain a motorcycle endorsement unless they have completed a driver training course. The MINNESOTA law provides for instruction permits for operators of two-wheel vehicles and requires that those under 18 complete a course in two-wheel vehicle driver training. NEW MEXICO law prescribes restricted licenses for those 13 years old for the operation of motor driven cycles of less than five horsepower and prohibits holders of motorcycle instruction permits from carrying passengers.

NEVADA enacted regulations governing the sale of motor driven cycles to 14 and 15 years old. (H 264, Ch 399)

Other Driver Licensing Legislation

ALABAMA has enacted legislation which permits the deposit of a driver license as security for certain traffic violations. (H 57)

A CALIFORNIA resolution provides for a Department of Motor Vehicles study on the feasibility of limiting examinations for the renewal of a driver license to a vision test only. (HCR 67)

In CONNECTICUT Spanish speaking applicants for a driver license may now take the written examination in Spanish but they must have sufficient command of English to interpret traffic control signals. (H 5519)

A person whose license has been revoked in DELAWARE because of an unpaid judgment against him may, after ten years and under certain circumstances, be issued another license. (H 53)

Nonresident migrant farm workers need not have a State driver license according to an amendment to FLORIDA's licensing requirements. (S 652)

IDAHO amended its regulations governing the revocation and suspension of driver licenses and provides that a person must have at least 20/40 vision in one eye with or without glasses according to the Snellen system, in order to be licensed to drive. (S 1263)

KANSAS enacted legislation which amends its driver license requirements and provides for a four-year driver license. (H 1143)

MAINE law requires that driver licenses be issued for a duration of two years and that first licenses shall be provisional licenses. (H 617) Another law requires eye examinations for individuals over age 65 upon renewal of their driver licenses. (S 282)

WE CAN OWN THE WORLD!

What's a government but silly putty? It can be pushed any direction and spreads out where there's no resistance. Bike power advocates in Illinois proved that it can be done: here's their 3-step formula for helmet law repeal.

BY FRANK CONNER

• Government is like Silly Putty: push against it hard enough at one point, and it will recede from that point, flabbing out someplace else where there is less resistance. A blueprint for the successful, lawful combat of motorcyclists against government can be drawn from the activities of Illinois riders to repeal the Mandatory Helmet law.

KEVIN CALLAHAN

Illinois riders were less than enchanted with the helmet ruling. Several groups had been formed to work against restrictive legislation, and had done much valuable spadework to stir up the riders, so the climate was right for revolution, but nobody had been successful at focusing rider-discontent against the forces of government in Illinois. Then eight riders casually decided to get together to see what they could do to get the helmet law overturned. They called themselves the "Committee on Legislation," and they decided that if they wanted to succeed, they should run their campaign like a business. First they needed a product: organized enraged motorcyclists. Then they needed to get their product to the market, which was the Illinois Legislature. Finally, they needed a good sales-feature for their product. Since legislators need to get reelected periodically, the votes of the riders made the best-possible selling-feature.

How good was their product? Well, there were 110,000 registered motorcycles in Illinois, which meant that about 250,000 people (including friends, wives, or parents) were predisposed to like motorcycles and could possibly be enlisted into the fight. Potentially, the committee had a very strong product; even a tiny fraction of 250,000 votes is something that most state politicians regard with great care. How to get the product to the market? The committee didn't have enough money to contact all 110,000 riders in the state, so they decided to work through groups.

The eight members of the committee listed the various groups whose names and addresses were readily available. The committee then wrote to those groups and asked for the names of any groups or dealers who weren't as yet on the list. In such manner, the committee collected the names of about 600 dealers, AMA-affiliated clubs, outlaw clubs, dealer-associations, etc. Now the committee had enough contacts to reach a large percentage of the riders in Illinois.

As a next step, the committee put together a map of the state, showing each of the political districts, and listing the names and addresses of the three state representatives and the one state senator from each district. Thus, any rider receiving a copy of the map would know whom to write.

The committee sent quantities of these maps to each of the 600 groups, along with a request to distribute the maps to the riders in that area. Along with the map went a letter asking the rider to write to each of the three representatives and the senator from his district, requesting repeal of the helmet law. The letter to the riders suggested some reasons why the law was unsatisfactory, but the committee felt that the campaign would be successful only if the riders wrote their own letters, stating their own beliefs. In addition, the committee got as many of the 600 groups as possible to send two members each to visit all of the legislators from their respective districts. This would give the legislators an unmistakable indication as to the amount of voting power that Illinois riders could swing.

Having gotten this far, the Committee on Legislation found that they had all sorts of access to news media. At first, they began to make use of the media, but then they decided that they should leave it strictly alone, because they would be hurting—not helping—their enterprise by attracting the attention of the public to their cause. The general public either doesn't care about motorcycling, or is opposed to it; the committee decided to let sleeping dogs lie.

As the next step, the committee needed to get somebody in the legislature to introduce a bill to repeal the helmet law. Who better than the man who had originated the helmet law? That particular legislator happened to live in the same town as one of the eight committee members, so the committee went to work there right away, getting the local motorcycling groups to begin visiting and writing to that legislator to inform him of their displeasure (Continued on page 62) with his law. He saw the light of day and introduced a new bill to repeal his helmet law.

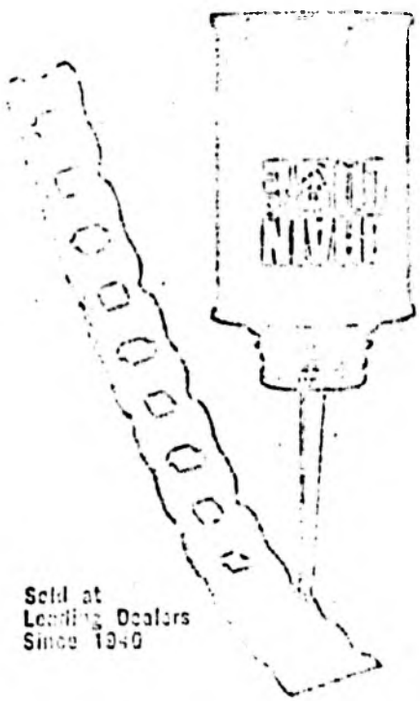
The committee than sent to each state legislator a rational list of reasons why the helmet law was unsatisfactory. The committee said, in effect: "We don't have our hands out for anything; all we want is not to be discriminated against. Repeal of the helmet law will have no adverse effect upon the state. We feel so strongly about this issue that if you disregard us, you will not like what happens at the next election."

Then the letters from riders began to pour in. Some of the riders who wrote to their legislators made no attempt to mince words in expressing their dissatisfaction with the helmet law. The committee was not at all unhappy with that state of affairs; it gave the legislators a much better understanding of the riders' and voters' unhappiness. Then began the personal confrontations between riders and legislators. The committee felt that the outlaw groups were particularly effective in getting their message across. The legislators were amazed and appalled; they hadn't even been aware of the existence of motorcyclists before, except as scapegoats who could be put down with impunity. Now the scapegoats were threatening to bite them. Taking a leaf from the SDS handbook, various motorcycle groups were murmuring about putting 50,000 motorcyclists into Springfield during the summer if the helmet law were not repealed. It was not--apparently--an empty threat.

The repeal bill went first to the Illinois Senate. Forty-three voted "aye;" 11 voted "nay." In the House of Representatives, only eight of approximately 160 legislators voted against the bill.

The repeal bill was ready to be signed into law. Then, the state judiciary found in favor of Donald Freeze, who had brought suit previously to test the constitutionality of the helmet law, and the offending law was declared unconstitutional in Illinois.

However, courts in other states have upheld the helmet law, and some valuable lessons can be learned from the activities of the Committee on Legislation. Politicians respect organized voting-power (lots of loud voices). Reed Ehrlich, one of the eight members of the committee, has this to say about getting the repeal bill into and through the legislature: "It was so easy to do. It can be done anywhere else just as easily. All you have to do is organize carefully at the beginning. If we--the riders--are ever threatened seriously with restrictive national legislation, all we have to do is organize nationally the way the Illinois riders did regionally. We can own the United States."



That would be a change. ②

"When asked what he would take to allow himself receive a blow on the head, he said, 'A helmet.'"

—Diogenes Laertius

The burgeoning use of motorcycles in the United States[1] has given rise to a great problem of safety. The fatality rate among motorcyclists is substantially higher than the rate for the drivers of all other motor vehicles, with head injuries the most frequent cause of death.[2] In response to this situation, the legislatures of at least thirty-four states have passed special laws regarding motorcycle safety; of these states, thirty have regulations that require the wearing of helmets.[3] These helmet regulations have given rise to a great deal of controversy, and the constitutionality of such statutes has been challenged on the ground that they unduly restrict the individual cyclist's freedom without benefiting the community.

A recent Michigan case, American Motorcycle Association v. Davids,[4] confronted the issue directly. In a proceeding instituted by the Association, the Michigan court of appeals held unconstitutional a statute which required a person operating or riding on a motorcycle to wear a crash helmet of a type approved by the department of state police.[5] The decision was based primarily on a finding that the statute was intended only for the protection of the individual motorcyclist—not for the safety and well-being of the general public

Among the states which have laws requiring helmets are: Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas. These helmet requirements appear to have been effective, for despite increased motorcycle use, motorcycle deaths in 1967 in the thirty states that had such requirements increased as much as 50% (in New York), while California, which leads the nation in motorcycle registrations but has no protective helmet law, saw a 9% increase in motorcycle fatalities.

—and that it thus went beyond the permissible scope of the state's police power.

The Michigan decision is representative of the initial reaction by various courts to such statutes. In early 1967, two New York cases held that the New York law requiring the wearing of helmets[6] was unconstitutional. In People v. Smallwood,[7] a local level trial court held that such a statute takes from the individual his right to exercise his judgment in the use of personal adornment, a right which, according to the court, cannot be waived. In People v. Carmichael,[8] another local court defined the police power of the state as the power to regulate the conduct of one person so that his actions do not unreasonably restrict the rights of or endanger others. Concluding that a helmetless driver or rider would not endanger the safety of others, the court found in the New York statute an attempt to enlarge the state's police power beyond federal constitutional bounds. In Everhardt v. City of New Orleans[9] the Louisiana court of appeals held unconstitutional a city ordinance requiring helmets to be worn by all motorcyclists; this court found that the requirement was a denial of due process and equal protection.

The majority trend, however, has been to hold helmet statutes constitutional. The New York courts appear to have changed their view, and three recent local court cases—People v. Bielmeyer,[10] People v. Schmidt,[11] and People v. Newhouse[12]—have held that the state has the right to regulate how riders and passengers of vehicles susceptible to special dangers should protect themselves on public property. In February of 1968, an intermediate appellate court in New York reversed the Carmichael decision, holding that the helmet requirement is valid because it furthers the state's interest in maintaining a strong and viable citizenry by keeping the cyclists safe.[13] In State ex rel. Colvin v. Lombardi,[14] the Supreme Court of Rhode Island denied defendant cyclist's motion to dismiss on the grounds of unconstitutionality of the helmet statute and found that the law bears a reasonable relationship to highway safety and thus does not constitute an improper exercise of police power. In the most recent reported decision, Commonwealth v. Howie,[15] the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts followed Lombardi and upheld the validity of a helmet statute.

It is settled constitutional doctrine that a state's police power can be properly exercised only when there is a reasonable relationship to the public health, safety, morals, or welfare.[16] Accordingly, in 1905 the United States Supreme Court upheld a law requiring all people to be vaccinated because the law was related not only to the health of the individual, but also to the protection of the public against the spread of disease.[17] Conversely, if the courts can find no relationship between the statute in question and the public health, safety, morals, or welfare, the statute is unconstitutional.[18] Thus, the Supreme Court has held invalid a statute requiring every parent or guardian of a child between the ages of eight and sixteen to send that child to a public school in the district where he resided since it did not promote the health, safety, peace, morals, education, or general welfare of the people and therefore was an unreasonable interference with the liberty of parents and guardians in raising their children.[19] The basis for this and similar decisions is the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment: if there is no benefit flowing to the public from the enforcement of a statute which restricts individual freedom, there is a denial of liberty without due process of law.[20]

16. E.g., West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937); Van Oster v. Kansas, 272 U.S. 465 (1926); Pacific Gas Co. v. Police Ct., 251 U.S. 22 (1919).

It can be argued that the statute prohibiting a cyclist from riding helmetless is similar to statutes in many states which make it a crime to attempt suicide. These suicide statutes protect an individual from himself, generally without affecting the public welfare in any way except by maintaining a viable citizenry. The suicide situation, however, can be distinguished, for the shocking nature of the act and the long tradition of its criminality make it different from the new and indirect helmet regulations. To prohibit people from killing themselves directly is one thing, but to prohibit them from risking their lives indirectly is quite another.

17. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905). Similarly, before the passage of the eighteenth amendment, the Court found that a state prohibition on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors did not deprive the citizen of his constitutional freedom because the law protected the public against the harmful conduct of one whose behavior toward others is affected by the use of alcohol. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623 (1887).

The Michigan court of appeals offered another basis, purportedly independent of the due process argument, for holding the helmet statute unconstitutional: the maxim of John Stuart Mill that "the individual is not accountable to society for his actions, insofar as these concern the interests of no person but himself." J. MILL, UTILITARIANISM, LIBERTY AND REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT 201 (A. Lindsay ed. 1950). The Michigan court cited four decisions which it claimed were based upon this philosophy. These citations include Smallwood and the first Carmichael decision, neither of which mentioned the maxim and both of which suggested its content as only one of a number of arguments on which the respective courts based their decisions. See text accompanying notes 7 & 8

Such a conclusion rests on a su[b]stantive interpretation of the fourteenth amendment's due process c[l]ause that the rights protected by that clause from interference by t[h]e states include rights not specifically enumerated in the first eigh[t] amendments. It is uncertain, however, due to the many conflicti[n]g opinions in Griswold v. Connecticut,[21] whether the Supreme C[our]t still follows such an interpretation so far as the fourteenth a[me]ndment is concerned.[22] Nevertheless, according to one scholar, Gri[swold] is supra. The Michigan court also cited an opinion by [the] attorney general of New Mexico which did not mention the maxim, though it [did] employ Mill's philosophy. See N. MEX. OP. ATTY. GEN. No. 66-15, at 19 (1966). T[he] question immediately arises whether Mill's maxim is, in fact, incorporated in [the] federal Constitution. The Supreme Court has considered the due process clause [to] limit the state to restrain an individual's actions only to further the common w[el]fare and, conversely, to guarantee a citizen the right to act as he pleases so long [as] actions do not adversely affect others. E.g., Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 [U.S.] 233 (1936); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925); Meyer v. Nebraska, [262] 390 (1923). Cf. Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 P. 429 (1905). But see Loc[hner] v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 74 (1905) (dissent of Justice Holmes). In this view, the [due] process limitation on police power is simply an embodiment of Mill's premise. [Thus] this maxim is only to state the reasonable-relationship test in the converse; thus [the] maxim was not really an independent ground for the court's decision.

21. 381 U.S. 479 (1965). See note 18 supra. Ano[ther] for holding the helmet laws unconstitutional, unrelated to the due proce[ss] was advanced by the Louisiana court in Everhardt when it concluded that [the] ordinance in question denied equal protection of the laws to motorcyclists by i[mpos]ing undue and unnecessary restrictions upon one limited class of the motoring pub[lic]. 243 S.2d at 426. The Constitution, however, requires only that the classification [be] reasonable and be based upon substantial differences having a reasonable relation[ship] both to the objects or persons dealt with and to the public purpose sought to be achieved by the legislation involved. E.g., Walters v. City of St. Louis, 347 U.S. 231 [(1954)]; Old Dearborn Distrib. Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corp., 299 U.S. 183 (1936); [Int]ernational Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U.S. 199 (1914). Even assuming that the ordi[nance] has no relation to the safety of others, the classification itself would nonetheless [be] reasonable because the distinctions between cyclists and other motorists are clear [and] substantial, and because it is those very differences that suggest the need for s[pecial] legislation to protect the former which would be unreasonable if imposed on [all]. Whether the purpose of the helmet restriction relates to the public or the individ[ual] and is valid or invalid, that purpose relates directly to the unique situation of a [motor]cyclist, and thus the regulation is not an unreasonable classification violative [of] the equal protection clause.

22. It is interesting to note that the Michigan court [also] relied in part on Justice Goldberg's concurring opinion in Griswold—an [opinion] which invoked the ninth amendment in support of the fundamental right[s] [at] issue. The ninth amendment, said Justice Goldberg, is an acknowledgement that [liberty] is not restricted to the freedoms enumerated in the Bill of Rights, but that [there] are inherent rights which exist independently of the explicit wording of the [first] eight amendments. As applied to the states through the fourteenth amendment, [the] ninth amendment shows that it was the intent of the original authors of the Bill [of] Rights that fundamental personal rights cannot be violated by the state merely [because] they were not enumerated in the first eight amendments. 381 U.S. at 488-[89]. Since the effect of Justice Goldberg's ninth-amendment argument is additional support for the fundamental-rights theory rather than a substitute for it, the Michigan court's reliance upon it adds nothing new to the basic analysis of the problem. See P. Kauper, Penumbras, Peripheries, Emanations, Things Fundamental, and Things Forgotten: The Griswold Case, 64 MICH. L. REV. 235, 254 (1965).

> a reaffirmation by a majority of the Court of the fundamental [or substantive] rights theory—both in the sense that only fundamental rights derived from the Bill of Rights are incorporated into the fourteenth amendment and in the sense that the due process clause is a source of rights apart from the specifics of the Bill of Rights.[23]

Thus, assuming that this interpretation is correct, the fundamental question is whether the helmet statutes bear a reasonable relationship to the public welfare.

The courts which have declared helmet statutes invalid have been unable to find a sufficient relationship between the helmet requirement and the welfare of the community at large. As indicated earlier, the Michigan court saw the statute in question only as a protection of the cyclist from severe head injuries; the court felt that any other interpretation was "a strained effort to justify what is admittedly wholesome legislation."[24] The Louisiana court declared that "[t]he only function of the helmet requirement we are able to discern is to minimize the extent of injury to the individual cyclist involved in an accident, and not to contribute to the safety of the motoring public at large."[25] On the other hand, those courts which have upheld the helmet laws advance various arguments to support the necessary relationship to the public welfare. The justification recently offered by the New York courts was the state's interest in a viable citizenry. According to this argument, the state can prevent its citizens from pursuing a course of conduct that could cause their dependents or themselves to become public charges.[26] Moreover, it is argued that "[i]t is to the interest of the state to have > is not inconsistent with cases that have reduced economic liberty to a minimum of judicial protection. Freedom of the legislature to determine economic policy in the public interest is much greater than its freedom to determine social policy by means that intrude on personal liberty and essentially private conduct. In the case of restrictions on economic liberty, a simple rationality test applies, but when the legislature impinges upon fundamental non-economic liberties of an essentially personal character, as in Griswold, a more exacting judicial test is applied.

The Court apparently sees a hierarchy of values protected by the Constitution and recognizes that the degree of judicial scrutiny and protection varies in direct proportion to the importance of the right. Thus, assuming that the majority does follow the substantive interpretation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment, the right infringed in any given case would have to be important enough to be ranked as "fundamental" in order to be protected by that clause against state regulation. The right abridged by the helmet laws is the freedom to wear whatever one chooses so long as that action affects no one but the individual himself; whether that right is fundamental enough to be a substantive due process right has of course never been discussed by the Supreme Court. See note 40 infra.

strong, robust, healthy citizens capable of bearing arms, of self-support, and of adding to the resources of the country,"[27] and that, as long as the means are reasonable, the legislature can protect individuals from themselves to further that interest. Thus, the helmet regulations promote the public welfare not only by tending to prevent cyclists from becoming wards of the state because of disabling head injuries, but also by tending to keep members of the community healthy and productive.[28]

The Michigan court specifically rejected the "public charges" argument, stating that it could lead to unlimited paternalism.[29] Once it can be said that protecting an individual from himself bears a reasonable relationship to public welfare, the argument runs, there is nothing to prevent the state from requiring all motorists to wear crash helmets, from forbidding smoking, or from requiring everyone to go to bed at 10:00 p.m. Such laws would be conducive to healthier citizens and thus to a "viable citizenry."[30] It is significant that the courts which upheld the helmet statutes on the basis of the public interest in a viable citizenry cited no authority to support their argument. Surely the Michigan court was correct in stating that the "public charges" argument proves too much, since such reasoning would give the legislature the power to regulate almost every aspect of individual conduct in a society "so complex that there are very few things that cannot be said to affect some other person or the public treasury."[31] The limitations on the police power would disappear if the states were permitted to regulate individual conduct on the basis of the attenuated "public charge" rationale.

27. 288 N.Y.S.2d at 935.

28. It was argued by the state in the Michigan case that the helmet statute could also be justified under the doctrine of parens patriae, the specific relationship of the state to youth. This is the power of the state that justifies laws such as those making it illegal for minors to smoke. The Michigan court correctly rejected this contention because the application of the helmet statute was not limited to youth. 158 N.W.2d at 75.

29. 158 N.W.2d at 75. It is consistent with Michigan's view of the general welfare that suicide is not a statutory crime in Michigan.

30. 158 N.W.2d at 76. People v. Carmichael, 53 Misc. 2d 584, 588-89, 279 N.Y.S.2d 272, 277 (1967). A possible answer to this objection is that even if the courts would otherwise uphold such regulation of individual conduct in the interest of viable citizenry, they will not do so because of a reasonableness test which applies in cases of this sort. This test balances the state's interest against the individual's. A helmet requirement is found to be reasonable because it is only a slight infringement on the individual's freedom as he travels on a public highway, but an extreme law—for example, a requirement that a cyclist wear a suit of armor, a prohibition of smoking, or a requirement that people to go to bed at 10:00 p.m.—would be unreasonable, and therefore unconstitutional, because it would infringe too greatly on personal liberty.

The reasonableness test, however, is unsatisfactory because the fact that a court can use it to limit grossly infringing regulations does not make up for the inability of that test to deal with infringements which are "reasonable" because relatively moderate, but nonetheless repugnant to ordinary concepts of personal liberty.

31. People v. Carmichael, 53 Misc. 2d 584, 589, 279 N.Y.S.2d 272, 277.

A second justification offered to demonstrate a reasonable relationship between helmet laws and the public welfare is that the crash helmet may prevent certain types of accidents—specifically situations in which the cyclist could be propelled off the road or into the opposing lane, causing damage to other vehicles or property, or injuries to other motorists or pedestrians. For example, loose stones kicked up by passing vehicles, or other flying objects—against which the driver of an automobile has some protection—could strike the helmetless motorcyclist in the head, causing him to lose control of his vehicle.[32] One answer to this argument was given by the Michigan court:

> If the purpose [of the helmet regulations] truly were to deflect flying objects, rather than to reduce cranial injuries, a windshield requirement imposed on the manufacturer would bear a [more] reasonable relationship to the objective and not vary from the norm of safety legislation customarily imposed on the manufacturer for the protection of the public rather than upon the individual.[33]

But the court's answer is specious because it is not the function of the judiciary to decide whether the means adopted by the legislature are the best means possible to attain the end sought.[34] Except when the regulations chosen are in themselves unconstitutional, courts should defer to the legislative selection of methods. Thus, even if a windshield regulation would provide more effective protection for public safety, the helmet requirement is still constitutional as long as it tends in some degree to protect public safety. But while the legislature need not choose the best means to an end, it is clear that it cannot choose a method that violates the fundamental liberties of an individual if the end can be achieved without infringement of those liberties.[35] The Supreme Court stated this directly in

32. People v. Bielmeyer, 54 Misc. 2d 466, 469, 282 N.Y.S.2d 797, 800 (1967):
> Cyclists generally keep to the right of the road where stones and gravel are found which could be propelled by the delicately balanced wheels into the head of the cyclist or passenger, causing distraction and loss of control.
> Far more than with an automobile or a truck the very nature of a motorcycle requires that a rider be able to control his vehicle at every second . . . . [This] means that the rider must always wear the recommended clothing and equipment for his protection as well as the protection of others.

33. 158 N.W.2d at 75.

34. McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U.S. 539, 547 (1909):
> The legislature being familiar with local conditions is primarily the judge of the necessity of such enactments. The mere fact that the court may differ with the legislature in its views of public policy or that judges may hold views inconsistent with the propriety of legislation in question affords no ground for judicial interference . . . .

See also Old Dearborn Distrib. Co. v. Seagram-Distillers Corp., 299 U.S. 183 (1936); Standard Oil Co. v. City of Marysville, 279 U.S. 582 (1929); St. Louis Southwestern Ry. v. Board of Directors of Miller Levee Dist. No. 2, 207 F. 338 (8th Cir. 1913).

35. This principle is supported by the general rule, stated in People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288, 41 N.W. 275 (1889), that the state can impose restraints on the individual only to that extent which is required or necessary for the protection of public health, safety, or welfare. This seems to imply that if a statutory restriction is not Schneider v. State,[36] in which it invalidated an ordinance which banned all distribution of handbills on public streets. Although the ordinance's purpose—to keep the streets clean and neat—was legitimate, it was insufficient to justify an abridgement of the individual's right of free speech. There were other reasonable methods available to prevent littering which did not interfere with personal freedom—for example, punishment of those who actually throw papers on the streets. Similarly, in both Shelton v. Tucker[37] and Dean Milk Co. v. City of Madison,[38] the Supreme Court held laws which limited personal freedom unconstitutional because there were adequate non-infringing means to achieve the same end.[39] Thus, it might be argued that if the end which justifies the helmet requirement is the protection of the public from cyclists careening out of control because of a blow on the head by a flying object, that requirement should be invalid because a regulation on the manufacturer to install a windshield would accomplish the same goal without any infringement of personal liberty.

This argument, however, raises several problems. Unlike the rights that were restricted in Schneider and similar cases, the right to wear what one wishes on a public street, allegedly infringed by the helmet laws, is not a strong or well-established one.[40] Furthermore, the effectiveness of the noninfringing alternative here is uncertain—it is not clear that a windshield will do the same job as necessary or essential—that is, if there is another method to the same end that does not infringe on individual liberty—the restriction is invalid.

39. The Court in Shelton held unconstitutional an Arkansas statute requiring every teacher, as a condition of employment, to file an annual affidavit listing every organization to which he had belonged or regularly contributed within the preceding five years.

> There can be no doubt of the right of a state to investigate the competency of those whom it hires to teach in its schools . . . . [but] even though the governmental purpose be legitimate and substantial, that purpose cannot be pursued by means that broadly stifle fundamental personal liberties when the end can be more narrowly achieved.

364 U.S. at 485, 488. In Dean Milk Company, an ordinance forbidding the sale of milk in a city under a "pasteurized" label unless the milk had been pasteurized and bottled at an approved plant within five miles of the city was declared unconstitutional. The Court made it clear that "even in the exercise of its unquestioned power to protect the health and safety of its people, [a municipality may not erect an economic barrier against competition] if reasonable nondiscriminatory alternatives, adequate to conserve legitimate local interest, are available." 390 U.S. at 354.

40. The rights abridged in Schneider, Shelton, and Dean Milk Co. were the right of free speech, the right of free association, and the guarantee of equal protection of the laws, respectively. All of these are liberties deeply rooted in the traditions of the United States, guaranteed from the beginnings of its history, and upheld time and time again by its courts. Although there are isolated cases in which courts have held that an individual has the right to choose his own attire [People v. O'Gorman, 274 N.Y. 284, 8 N.E.2d 862 (1937)], that right has certainly been recognized much less frequently.

a helmet in protecting the cyclist's head. Thus, it is difficult to see how the existence of an alternative and less restrictive method would by itself in these circumstances render the helmet requirement unconstitutional. The ultimate question then is not whether there is an alternative noninfringing method to the end. Rather, since the opposing courts agree that some form of reasonable-relationship test is proper,[41] the determinative question should be simply whether flying objects do, in fact, constitute such a danger to helmetless motorcyclists that those cyclists could adversely affect the safety of the general public.

The evidence which has arisen in response to this question is Delphic. The New York, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts courts, asserting that the danger is real, support their conclusion with such general statements as "one hears or reads about instances where cyclists have been hit with hard-shelled beetles or bees and have lost control of their bikes, causing damage and injuries to others."[42] Accepting these statements, it might seem that the helmet regulations can be justified by the protection they afford to the general public even though their original purpose was the protection of individual cyclists.[43] But the courts which have claimed that the danger of flying objects is genuine cite no cases or studies and offer no specific evidence to support their conclusion.[44] Moreover, the legislatures which have enacted helmet statutes make no mention of any studies or reports which show that flying objects present such a danger to cyclists as to cause accidents. A New York legislative memorandum did cite an extensive study showing that most motorcycle fatalities could have been avoided by wearing the proper helmet,[45] but neither the memorandum nor the study said anything

41. The courts do not differ in their determination of the proper test to apply here, but differ rather in their view of the intent and effect of the helmet statute. Whereas the Michigan and Louisiana courts saw the law as affecting only individual safety, the New York, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts courts saw a reasonable relationship between it and the safety of others. Thus, all the courts agree that an individual is master of his fate so long as his actions concern only himself, but disagree as to whether the action of a cyclist in not wearing a helmet could directly affect the welfare of others.

42. People v. Bielmeyer, 54 Misc. 2d 466, 469, 282 N.Y.S.2d 797, 800 (1967). See also note 32 supra; State ex rel. Colvin v. Lombardi, 241 A.2d, 625, 627 (R.I. 1968).

It is also interesting that in a telephone interview, the Ann Arbor, Michigan, police stated that it is very likely that flying objects could cause a motorcyclist to lose control of his machine. However, they were unable to cite specific statistics or to recall any concrete instances in which a flying object had actually been the cause of a motorcycle accident.

43. See note 45 infra.

44. This is, of course, not conclusive proof that such dangers do not exist. It may indicate only that there have been no studies or reports on this subject: and, indeed, exhaustive research has revealed no such studies.

45. See N.Y. Session Laws 2961 (McKinney 1966) (citing the results of that study): The number of accidents involving motorcycles is increasing rapidly. In fact, motorcycle accidents increased by 105% in 1965 as compared to 1964. . . . Fatalities about protecting people other than the cyclist himself. Indeed, although there is substantial evidence that helmets have prevented individual cyclists from being injured in accidents,[46] none could be found to show that the use of helmets had ever prevented the occurrence of an accident, or even to show that accidents had been caused by flying objects hitting a helmetless rider in the head. It is an unsatisfactory resolution of the fundamental issue merely to take judicial notice of what "one hears or reads about"[47] when there is as yet no evidence to support that contention and when several courts have disputed evidence of the "fact" which is being judicially noticed.

It is unclear whether the state must come forward with any evidence of a reasonable relationship between a police power regulation and the public welfare in order to resist a challenge to the law's constitutionality. It may be that the challenger is required to prove that there is in fact no reasonable relationship to public welfare. Support for this approach to the burden-of-proof problem raised in these cases might be found in the presumption of constitutionality that attaches to all legislative enactments.[48] In O'Gorman & Young, Inc. v. Hartford Fire Insurance Co., the Supreme Court stated:

> As underlying questions of fact may condition the constitutionality of legislation of this character, the presumption of constitutionality must prevail in the absence of some factual foundation of record for overthrowing the statute . . . . The action of the legislature . . . indicates that such evils did exist [for which this statutory provision was an appropriate remedy].[49] increased by 63.6% and personal injury accidents by 100%. A summary of the Department statistics indicates that 89.2% of the motorcycle accidents result in injury or death and that almost all fatalities occurring as a result of such accidents involved head injuries. Most of these fatalities could have been avoided, or the severity lessened, by the use of a proper helmet.

The helmet requirement, continues the memorandum, "should go far in protecting the drivers and passengers on motorcycles." Id. (emphasis added).

49. 282 U.S. 251, 257-58 (1931). In Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241 (1964) and Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294 (1964), the Court held that Title II of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prevention racial discrimination in public accomodations was a valid exercise of congressional power under the commerce clause as long as Congress had a rational basis for finding that racial discrimination by those establishments affected interstate commerce. By analogy, it can be argued in the helmet cases that, since the legislature has passed the law, it has determined that there is a reasonable relationship between it and the public welfare and that that determination cannot be overturned in the absence of a showing by complainant that no such reasonable relationship exists.

However, the Heart of Atlanta and McClung cases are inapposite here because they dealt with the congressional power over commerce—a broad, enumerated power of Congress—rather than with the police power. Moreover, in those cases there were congressional hearings about the effect of the prohibited activity upon interstate commerce: "[T]he record of [the Act's] passage through each house," says the Court in

If the law is that the state has no burden to offer any evidence to support its contention the Michigan court's decision in Davids would appear to be correct since the defendant did not disprove that a reasonable relationship existed between the regulation and the public welfare.[50] However, such an interpretation of the law relating to the burden of proof requires the challenger, in effect, to offer evidence that there is no evidence of a reasonable relationship.[51] How is one to prove lack of evidence other than by merely stating that fact and challenging the opposition to offer some evidence to controvert? To require the challenger to prove a negative fact seems unreasonable. It appears more sensible—at least in cases where the challenger asserts in his pleadings that there is no evidence to demonstrate a reasonable relationship between the statute and the public welfare—to place the initial burden of going forward with the evidence upon the state. Once the state has offered any substantial evidence to support the statute,[52] the burden would immediately shift to the challenger and it would be up to him to disprove that evidence. The meaning here of "substantial evidence" is the one advanced by the Supreme Court as the standard for judicial review of administrative action:

> Evidence which is substantial, that is, affording a substantial basis of fact from which the fact in issue can be reasonably inferred . . . . It must be enough to justify, if the trial were to a jury, a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion sought to be drawn from it is one of fact for the jury.[53]

Heart of Atlanta, "is replete with evidence of the burdens that discrimination by race or color places upon interstate commerce." 379 U.S. at 252. See also Katzenbach v. McClung, supra, at 301: "for the evidence presented at the hearings fully indicated the nature and effect of the burden on commerce which Congress meant to alleviate." But in the helmet situation there is no evidence that the legislatures ever gave any thought to the effect of their statutes on the safety of others. Indeed, there is evidence to the contrary; see note 51 supra.

50. The Michigan court's opinion is devoid of any reference to evidence which tended to demonstrate conclusively and conclusively that helmets did not prevent accidents or that flying objects did not cause them.

51. Statistics are seldom compiled on events that do not happen or accidents that do not occur. It would be far easier for the state to offer evidence that such accidents caused by flying objects do, in fact, occur.

52. To allow the state to meet its burden of going forward with the evidence by offering merely a "scintilla" of evidence to support a reasonable relationship does not solve the problem. For example, the state could present one isolated incident in which a flying object striking a helmetless cyclist had caused an accident, and the challenger would still have the burden of proving that that incident was the only one of its kind. Thus, requiring the state to offer some substantial evidence would appear to be a better proposal.

53. NLRB v. Columbian Enameling and Stamping Co., 306 U.S. 292, 300 (1939). According to the Court in Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474 (1951), this definition continues as the authoritative guide to the meaning of "substantial evidence."

Under the substantial evidence test, a statute cannot be struck down unless the

This proposal is generally consistent with the presumption of constitutionality since the ultimate burden of proof will usually remain upon the challenger. Under the proposal suggested in this Note, which would put the initial burden of going forward with the evidence upon the state, the Michigan court would appear to have decided correctly since the state failed to offer any evidence to support a reasonable relationship between the helmet statute and the public welfare.[54] court has a firm conviction that it is unreasonable. Thus, such a test would result in upholding more state regulations than if the state judged the statutes on a "clearly erroneous" basis. The Supreme Court has stated that "a finding [or a statute] is 'clearly erroneous' when, although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948) (emphasis added). A firm-conviction-of-mistake test is closer to a substitution of judicial for legislative judgment than is a firm-conviction-of-unreasonableness test, which is necessary to upset a finding or a statute under the substantial-evidence test; consequently it is more difficult to invalidate a statute under the substantial-evidence test than under the clearly-erroneous test. When applied to helmet laws which are challenged as unreasonable, the proposal suggested in the text would require the state to come forward with enough evidence to meet the substantial-evidence test and thus to overcome the contention of unreasonableness. But as long as the statute is not unreasonable, that is, as long as there is enough evidence in its favor to justify a refusal to "direct a verdict" against it, then the challenger still has the burden of going forward even if the claim of a reasonable relationship is seen by the court as "clearly erroneous."

54. None of the courts which have dealt with the issue has gone to the basic factual and evidentiary question regarding the actual existence of a reasonable relationship or to the even more fundamental question concerning who has the initial burden of offering evidence. Instead, the courts have become involved in a balancing process between the interests of the individual and those of the state. To the courts striking down the helmet laws, the state's interest is too remote to be given weight. To the courts upholding the laws, however, the individual cyclist's interest is small, for wearing a helmet would hardly seem to be an oppressive burden, while the interest of the state in public highways and highway safety is great enough to justify regulation of even the most attenuated threat. People v. Bielmeyer, 54 Misc. 2d 466, 468-69, 282 N.Y.S.2d 797, 800 (1967) ("It has long been recognized that the power to regulate and control the use of public roads and highways is primarily the exclusive prerogative of the states."). Furthermore the right to wear what one wishes on a public street may not be considered fundamental enough to be protected by the fourteenth amendment even under the substantive-rights interpretation of the due process clause. See notes 23 and 40 supra. Thus, because helmet laws are merely a minor abridgement of individual liberty and because the right on which they impinge has not been definitely recognized as a fundamental one, these courts have been willing to grope to find a relationship between the regulations in question and the public welfare. Despite Benjamin Franklin's admonitions against those who would put safety over freedom, these courts seem willing to resolve all doubts in favor of the state without demanding any concrete evidence that unhelmeted cyclists are likely to harm others or even considering the burden of proof question at the crux of this entire controversy.

Yet the argument for constitutionality, if convincing at all, would appear to be persuasive only in regard to the operator of the cycle. The relationship between the requirement that a passenger on a cycle wear a helmet and the safety of others appears to be more attenuated. That requirement is supported in the case authority only by a statement in Bielmeyer that "passengers are just as susceptible to injuries as operators and a head injury to a passenger could sufficiently distract a driver to create a danger to other users of the highway." 54 Misc. 2d at 469-70, 282 N.Y.S.2d at 801. While such an event is conceivable, to view it as likely requires great imagination,

The ramifications of the [illegible]met cases are for the mo[illegible] part yet unknown. In Michigan, one i[illegible]ediate effect of the Davids decision was the passage of a new statu[illegible]y the Michigan legislature.[55] This statute requires that all moto[illegible]les carry, when in operation, a number of crash helmets equal [illegible]he number of persons riding on the bike. Such a regulation is e[illegible]ore unlikely to promote public safety than the previous requi[illegible] since merely having a helmet on the motorcycle in no way pr[illegible]e cyclist from being distracted or hurt. It is difficult to see wi[illegible]urpose this requirement serves other than encouraging the cyclis[illegible] wear a helmet; it is very awkward for him to carry it.[56] The [illegible] law appears to be merely an attempt to circumvent the court's [illegible]ling. Since the Supreme Court has indicated that indirect mea[illegible] to achieve unconstitutional ends are just as objectionable as the [illegible]direct form of regulation,[57] the new Michigan statute should al[illegible] declared unconstitutional.

The Michigan decision in t[illegible]stant case may have an effect on the somewhat analogous probl[illegible]connected with seat belt regulations. The Michigan courts, if [illegible]follow Davids, could not uphold a legislative requirement that [illegible]otorists wear safety belts.[58] Such a regulation would bear even [illegible]elation to the safety and welfare of others than the helmet laws [illegible] for it is inconceivable that the failure to wear a seat belt coul[illegible]e an accident,[60] or even pose the threat of one.

since the passenger is shielded by the o[illegible] from most flying objects and since he is not in control of the cycle. If there[illegible] evidence to show that flying objects striking the operator actually cause a[illegible] it is unlikely that there is any to support an even more remote possibili[illegible] for a court searching for reasons to justify the law, such a highly unlikely [illegible]t as that used in Bielmeyer should probably be outweighed by the passenger[illegible] to individual freedom.

55. MICH. STAT. ANN. § 9.2358(d) (196[illegible]

56. The statute was evidently passed [illegible] feeling that the new regulation was similar to the ones requiring seat belts t[illegible]alled in cars and, as such, should be allowed. However, the seat belt requiremen[illegible] imposed upon the manufacturer and do not regulate individual conduct; in [illegible], the individual cyclist must buy and carry a helmet.

57. See Louisiana v. United States, 3[illegible]15 (1965).

58. It is significant that at the prese[illegible]no state has such a law on the books.

59. Even the New York courts, wh[illegible]e allowed a reasonable regulation of individual safety in the interest of a pr[illegible]e community, would probably find such a law unreasonable on the grounds that [illegible] great an infringement upon personal freedom. See note 30 supra. According [illegible]urt in Miller v. Miller, 160 S.E.2d 65, 69 (N.C. 1968), the scant use which the [illegible] reasonably prudent motorist makes of seat belts indicates that such a regula[illegible]d be too great an infringement. On the other hand, even where there is no [illegible]nent, most motorcyclists wear helmets in the interests of personal safety. Thus, [illegible] laws might be reasonable where seat belt laws would not.

60. Yet some states require seat belts [illegible]ration of a car manufactured after a certain year. See CAL. VEHICLE CODE § [illegible]pp. 1967); GA. CODE ANN. § 68-1801 (Supp. 1966); MASS. ANN. LAWS ch. 90, § [illegible]; MICH. REV. STAT. § 9.2410(2) (Supp. 1965); NEB. REV. STAT. §§ 39-7, 123.05 (Su[illegible]7); N.J. REV. STAT. § 39:3-76.2 (Supp. 1967); N.Y. VEH. & TRAF. LAW § 383(a) ([illegible]inney Supp. 1966); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 20-135.2 (1965); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. [illegible]. [illegible]2-418 (Supp. 1967); ORE. REV. STAT.

The effect of the helmet decisions on the law in general may be substantial. On the one hand, if a helmet statute is held constitutional, inroads could be made upon personal liberty; the legislature might rely on similar strained and unproved relationships to the general welfare in order to justify regulations impinging upon other areas of individual conduct.[61] On the other hand, to hold such a statute unconstitutional may require the judiciary to interfere unreasonably with the legislature's conception of public welfare. In light of these considerations, courts dealing with challenges to such regulations in the future should pay closer attention to the difficult factual questions underlying the reasonable relationship test; they must also attempt to answer the basic questions surrounding the burden of proof and the burden of going forward with the evidence in these cases.

§ 483.482 (1966); R.I. GEN. LAWS ANN. § 31-23-39 (Supp. 1966). In the case of such a regulation, but as in the helmet situation, the burden of installation is on the individual owner and he himself is regulated for his own protection. Thus, Michigan courts would probably not uphold such a law, for the requirement that the individual have belts in his car bears less relation to public welfare than a requirement of wearing them, and much less relation than a helmet requirement. This is analogous to the present Michigan law that helmets be carried on cycles—a law which cannot be reconciled with the Davids decision, unless by the argument that the owner is thereby making seat belts available to anyone who should drive or ride in his car and is thus protecting people other than himself.

The federal standards issued by the Secretary of Commerce are different, for under them the burden is on the manufacturer, not the owner, to install safty belts. National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Act of 1966, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1391-425 (Supp. II, 1967), and Initial Fed. Motor Vehicle Safety Standards, 23 Fed. Reg. 2408, tit. 23, ch. II, part 255 (1967).

Congress has declared the scope of the federal standards. See National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Act of 1966, 15 U.S.C. § 1391(1) (Supp. II 1967):

> Motor vehicle safety means the performance of motor vehicles or motor vehicle equipment in such a manner that the public is protected against unreasonable risk of accidents or injuries occurring as a result of the design, construction or performance of motor vehicles.

The standards, therefore, regulate the manufacturer in order to protect the public from unnecessary risks, and they do not directly restrict the individual owner's freedom. Thus, the federal seat belt standard would seem to meet no constitutional difficulties.

Some argue that a duty of due care to wear the belts can be derived from the federal seat belt regulations. The argument runs that statutes requiring mere installation of seat belts impliedly require their use, and that any ruling to the contrary undermines any possible value inhering in legislation. There is a notable absence of legislative history supporting this contention. See Note, Seat Belt Legislation and Judicial Reaction, 42 ST. JOHN'S L. REV. 371 (1968). As to the argument that the regulations are meaningless unless construed to require use, an equally likely construction is that they are designed to encourage use. In this connection, see Note, Seat Belt Negligence in Automobile Accidents, 1967 WIS. L. REV. 288 (1967).

Dear Chairman Jackson:

Senate Bill No. 3 providing for the peremptory disqualification of district judges probably needs to be amended in at least two respects.

District judges also conduct sessions of municipal court in the main cities of Alaska. AS 22.20.022 should be amended to make it plain that there could be no challenge of a district judge while conducting a session of municipal court. Otherwise the procedure would be entirely unworkable.

(c) of the statute should be amended to require that the challenge of a district judge be made almost immediately after the matter has become a case. The five day period would completely stall the machinery in the district courts with respect to the minor criminal actions where a complaint is filed one day and often times tried the next day. All such cases, of course, should not be automatically stalled for five days in order to allow for a challenge. In that type case the challenge should be filed immediately after the defendant has notice that an action is pending in areas such as Ketchikan, Sitka and Nome where there is only one judge to try the case and it would have to be known which judge the case would come before. In other areas such as Juneau, Fairbanks and Anchorage the challenge would have to be filed immediately after the case had been assigned to a judge without the five day provision.

Sincerely yours,

Buell A. Nesbett

Dear Chairman Jackson:

Senate Bill No. 3 providing for the peremptory disqualification of district judges is now in your committee.

Pursuant to our discussion of this morning, please be advised that it is my opinion that if this bill is enacted into law any additional expense to the Alaska Court System can be absorbed within the framework of the court system's budget as approved by the House Finance Committee. This is based on the assumption that there will not be a wholesale abuse of the peremptory challenge provision, and the occasional challenge in areas such as Nome and Ketchikan can be taken care of by the resident superior court judge.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Barry:

Re: Alaska Professional Corporation Act
A.S. 10.45

On January 6, 1969 I drafted a letter to the Legislative Council with copies to various interested persons. From the newspapers I see that one or more bills pertinent to the Alaska Professional Corporation Act have been introduced in this session. However, none of such bills have reached my desk as yet.

The enclosed xerox copy outlines some of the problems practitioners are having or will have regarding this Act, and I respectfully request you review the suggested statutory changes attached to my letter. I hope the Legislative Council has seen fit to incorporate some or all of my suggestions in the bill or bills sponsored by the Council.

Thank you for any courtesy extended to me and to all of those Alaskan professionals who are vitally interested in the effectiveness of the Alaskan Professional Corporation Act.

Very truly yours,

Stanley H. Reitman

SHR/mm

Enclosure

COMMENTARY AND SUGGESTED STATUTORY CHANGES

(1) Centralization of Management

Statute might emphasize the centralization of management concept by adding this language to AS 10.45.070:

> "Management of a professional corporation shall be vested in the Board of Directors which shall have the continuing exclusive authority to make the management decisions necessary to the conduct of the profession for which the professional corporation is formed. The officers of the corporation, who shall be elected by the Board of Directors, shall have such power and authority to represent the Board as the Board may from time to time expressly or impliedly grant to such officers. A shareholder shall not have any power to bind the corporation within the scope of the corporation's activities merely by virtue of his being a shareholder.

(2) Transferability of Shares

Existing AS 10.45.080 requires the prospective sale or transfer of shares be approved by a majority of the other shareholders. Why make the rule mandatory - let the shareholders concensually impose such restrictions if they desire. By doing so we eliminate an unnecessary statutory impediment to "free transferability". In all cases the professional shareholders should prudently provide for this possibility in their buy-sell agreement. I therefore would amend this section to read:

> "Transfer of Shares.
> "A shareholder of a professional corporation may sell or transfer his shares in such professional corporation only to another individual duly licensed to render the same professional service as that for which the professional corporation was formed. The articles of incorporation may provide specifically for restraints on the alienation of shares and may require the purchase, redemption or retirement of shares by the professional corporation at a price and in a manner set out in the articles. The articles may, alternatively or in addition, authorize the corporation's Board of Directors or its shareholders to adopt by-laws restraining the alienation of shares and providing for their purchase, redemption or retirement by the corporation."

(3) Corporate Name

Almost all professional corporation or association statutes enacted by other jurisdictions require the professional organization to employ an identifying word or words in its name to indicate it is operating under a corporate or association format. Moreover, it is my personal belief, unsupported by anything other than instinct, that it will be far easier to confront the IRS if the corporate name indicates business is being conducted in the corporate name. Accordingly, it is vital to strike the last sentence of AS 10.45.120:

> "It is permissible for the corporation to render professional services and to exercise its authorized powers under the corporate name without the word 'Corporation' or 'Incorporated' or their abbreviations, or the words, 'a professional corporation' included in the name."

(4) Liability.

The existing liability sections 140, 150, 160 and 170 evidence an undue sensitivity to any suggestion or attempt to evade personal liability to clients and other third parties. Particularly bad, and not found in any other state statute, is section 170, which makes shareholders responsible for all corporate debts (including non-professional). This must be eliminated. The specific provision imposing joint and several liability for professional services I presume is intended to build in the partnership concept that a partner is jointly and severally liable for the torts of his partner. At the minimum, AS 10.45.170 must be eliminated. Suggested substitutional language for sections 140, 150, 160 and 170, adapted from the Georgia Professional Association Act, might prudently read:

"This Act does not modify any law applicable to the relationship between a person furnishing professional service and a person receiving such service, including liability arising out of such professional service, and including the confidential relationship between the person rendering the professional service and the person receiving such professional service, if any, and all confidential relationships previously enjoyed under the laws of this State or hereinafter enacted shall remain inviolate. Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Section, the shareholders of any professional corporation organized pursuant to the provisions of this Act shall not be individually liable for the debts of, or claims against, the professional corporation unless such shareholder has personally participated in the transaction for which the debt or claim is made or out of which it arises."

(5) Continuity of Life.

Akin to my comments on centralization of management under (1) above, a positive legislative expression regarding continuity of life will be useful. Accordingly, this new added language is suggested:

"Unless the Articles of Incorporation expressly provide otherwise, a professional corporation shall continue as a separate entity independent of its shareholders, for all purposes for such period of time as provided in the Articles, or until dissolved by a vote of two-thirds of the members, and shall continue notwithstanding the death, insanity, incompetency, conviction for felony, resignation, withdrawal, transfer of ownership of shares, retirement, or expulsion of any one or more of the shareholders, the transfer of shares to any new shareholder or shareholders, or the happening of any other event, which under the law of this State and under like circumstances, would work a dissolution of a partnership, it being the aim and intention of this Section that such professional corporation shall have continuity of life independent of the life or status of its shareholders. No shareholder of a professional corporation shall have the power to dissolve the corporation by his independent act of any kind."

(6) Disposal of Shares of Deceased Shareholder.

A problem may arise upon the death of sole owner of a professional corporation. The legatees or distributees more than likely will not be licensed to engage in the profession for which the corporation was formed. Additionally, disposition or transfer to a licensed person or persons may neither be feasible nor attainable. To prevent any undue loss because of a forced liquidation (keep in mind, the corporation may have significant holdings of real estate, equipment and other passive investments), an alternative should be given the family to switch over to a business corporation and in the process keep the corporate entity going. Accordingly, the following language might be added at the end of AS 10.45.220:

> "If there is only one shareholder and the shares held by such deceased shareholder are not disposed of within six months after death, the legal representative, legatees or distributees of such deceased shareholder shall either (a) liquidate the professional corporation, or (b) amend its articles of incorporation so that the professional corporation may continue in existence as a business corporation under the Alaska Business Corporation Act."

Memorandum

Alaska Court System

TO: Chief Justice Buell A. Nesbett

SB 76 am

DATE : May 28, 1968

FROM: Harold J. Butcher, Judge

SUBJECT: Proposed Rule Changes

Dr. Rehbock and I discussed rule changes affecting children's cases in the Superior Court yesterday afternoon and I think considerable progress was made in the several rules we discussed in detail with the hope that other rule changes may also be made after I furnish him with a memorandum on other rules which I feel should be changed for more orderly procedure and easier handling of children's matters. Nevertheless, I would like to propose a fundamental change in Rule 12 and the change contemplated will require major consideration on your part as to whether the change contemplated can, in fact, be accomplished by rule. This memorandum is intended to open the door to the subject and I will hope for a conference with you at an early date to discuss the matter further.

Section 47.10.080 reads as follows:

> (a) The court, at the conclusion of the hearing, shall find and enter a judgment that the minor is or is not a delinquent or dependent minor.
> (b) If the Court finds the child a delinquent he must (1) order the child committed to the Department of Health and Welfare for an indeterminate period of time * * * or (2) order the child placed on probation * * *.
> (c) If the court finds that the minor is dependent, it shall (1) order the minor committed to the department for an indeterminate period of time not to exceed the date the minor becomes 21 years of age; (2) order the minor released to his parents, guardian, or some other suitable person; if the court releases the minor, it shall direct the department to supervise the care and treatment given to the minor; the department's supervision may not extend past the date the minor becomes 21 years of age; or * * *". (Emphasis added)

I call your attention to the 1967 report of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice as quoted in an article entitled "Children's Court-Gateway or Last Resort", published in Case and Comment for November-December, 1967, Vol. 72, Issue No. 6.

"The formal Juvenile Court system and its pronouncement of delinquency should be used only as a last resort."

The article from which the above quotation was made goes on to say:

"Delinquency invented as a soft substitute for the word 'crime' is now a cruel term itself."

As I read Section 47.10.080 the court must, at the conclusion of the adjudicative hearing declare the child either a delinquent or a dependent and has no other choice unless the decision itself is postponed. In many other states, among which is Colorado, the Legislature has provided an additional category covering children in trouble representing a status in which custody can be taken of a child and treatment administered and I quote from the Colorado Children's Code as follows:

"(17) (a) (i) 'Delinquent child' means any child ten years of age or older who, regardless of where the violation occurred, has violated:

(ii) Any federal or state law, * * *

(iii) Any municipal ordinance, * * *

(18) (a) "'Child in need of supervision' means any child:
(b) Who is an habitual truant from school;
(c) Who has run away from home or is otherwise beyond the control of his parent, guardian, or other legal custodian; or
(d) Whose behavior or condition is such as to endanger his own or others' welfare." (Emphasis added)

The Colorado Code goes on to define dependent children but we are not concerned with that definition at this time.

Thus, it will be seen that Colorado, by statute, has devised a means of avoiding the application of the harsher term of "delinquency" in all those cases except where there has been a specific violation of law. In the category of a "child in need of supervision" the custody of the child is procured without declaring him a delinquent. The common identification of this second category in Colorado and other places where the same category is in use is CHINS (Children in need of supervision). In Hawaii, Illinois and other states where a similar category exists persons (persons in need of supervision) are referred to as PINS.

In the most recent issue of the Family Law Quarterly in an article on the Gault decision by Norman Doresen and Daniel A. Rezneck, the attorneys for Gault before the Supreme Court, the following comment appears.

> "This aspect of juvenile court law (avoidance of the declaration of delinquent) is in flux, however. There is discernible a legislative trend to treat 'truants' 'incorrigibles' differently from those juveniles who commit law violations: to adjudicate the former as 'persons in need of supervision' (known as 'PINS') and to reserve the label 'delinquency' for the latter. An effort is made thereby to eliminate the stigma of a delinquency adjudication from these juveniles.
> Removal of both the stigma of delinquency and the threat of commitment might well justify a difference in procedural treatment between 'PINS' and juveniles accused of law violations. It cannot be assumed that the application of particular procedural rights in juvenile courts by the Supreme Court in cases involving alleged law violations which are adult crimes will necessarily carry over in all respects to all categories of juveniles over whom the juvenile court exercises jurisidion. As we shall discuss below, Gault need not be interpreted as imposing procedural inflexibility on differing categories of juvenile court adjudication, any more than it does on the pre-judicial and dispositional phases of the process."

It should be remembered at this stage the Gault decision is applicable according to its sweep in cases where a child has committed an act which, if committed by an adult, would be a crime and Gault may not necessarily be applicable in delinquency cases where the act of the child would not be a crime if committed by an adult.

It is my opinion that regardless of the strictness of the Alaska Statute in its requirements for an adjudication of either delinquency or dependency and particularly in view of the fact that the Supreme Court has the power to make rules which have the force and effect of law, that we could, by rule, establish the separate catagory of "Children in Need of Supervision" (CHINS) or Persons in Need of Supervision (PINS) and it is my further opinion that in this catagory about 75% of the misconduct of children in this area, at least, would probably fall. Subsequently, and at the next session of the Legislature, we can urge the Legislature to adopt this middle ground in declarations involving children. Meanwhile, with a tool such as a change in Rule 12 might provide, much good could be accomplished in the handling of children before the court.

My object, therefore, is to induce the Supreme Court to make the rule change at once anticipating that the Legislature could be induced to change the statute at the next session providing, of course, you agree with me on this subject.

I should very much like to discuss the matter with you personally at your first opportunity and to further urge upon you then that we incorporate in Rule 12 which at the present time requires either a declaration of delinquency or dependency in the event the allegations of the petition are proved, the additional provisions referred to above.

FROM: Thomas J. Moore
Commissioner
Department of Labor

SUBJECT: CS for SB 79

With respect to Committee Substitute for Senate Bill No. 79, relating to oil and gas lease provisions requiring reports of labor conditions, the Department regards this as a desirable piece of legislation.

Part of the regulations which the Department contemplates issuing under this bill is residency of an employee, based on one year's residence in the State. It would give us the opportunity to review the hiring practices of individual companies and, where they were not responsive to resident hiring, call the matter to their attention.

SUBJECT: CS for SB #85
"An Act relating to the compilation of Jury Lists"

Administrative Problems:

The list of persons, to be prepared by the Department of Revenue, who either purchased a resident hunting or fishing license should be corrected to read "prepared by the Department of Fish and Game". The Department of Revenue is responsible solely for the accounting for monies received from the sale of licenses; the copies of licenses are processed and filed by the Department of Fish and Game. Mr. Fred Walstad of the Fish and Game Protection Division advises that his department hopefully has 98% of the previous year's hunting and fishing license copies filed and available for this use by February 15 of the current year.

The list of individuals who have filed income tax returns for the previous year which result in a refund can be provided by the Department of Revenue, from information compiled by Data Processing division. We must point out, however, that the income tax returns for the previous year are not due until April 15 of the current year. The incomplete list, consisting of 80% of the individuals who have previous year income tax returns could be provided by the Department of Revenue on approximately August 15 of the current year.

The remaining 20% of the prior year income tax filings would not be available for a listing until near December 31. This is due to fiscal year filings, extensions of time in which to file, etc.

We wish also to point out that there is a group of Alaska residents who may legally qualify for jury duty but whose income is insufficient to require an income tax filing.

Your HCS for CSSB 93 (ombudsman) is attached. The main changes are on pages 1 and 2. The way the last part of the "Term of Office" section now reads, a subsequent appointee will serve a minimum of two years and a maximum of five years before he will be up for approval or rejection. (If his minimum were set at three years his maximum would be six years before being up for his first approval or rejection.) That five years may seem a bit long, but the provision incorporates the two elements the committee wanted -- a two-year minimum and a non-gubernatorial election. In addition, on page 6, line 24 of CSSB 93 I changed "shall not" to read "may not", and on page 7, line 14 I deleted "of 1970".

SUBJECT: S. B. 98 am

Commissioner
Department of Highways
Juneau

Pursuant to your request we suggest the following amendments to the referenced bill.

Page 2, Line 21
Add or activities conducted thereon;

OK

Strike out completely and substitute the following:

(3) Signs, displays, and devises in all zoned and unzoned, commercial and industrial areas. The Department will regulate the size, spacing, and lighting of signs within these areas that are not covered by (1) and (2) of this Section.

No billboards allowed!

Add
*Sec. 6. A.S. 19.25.100 is repealed.

OK

The above amendments and additions will define the limitations on advertising signs and bring us into conformity with Public Law 89-285, the Highway Beautification Act of 1965. Section 19.25.100 should be repealed because the Federal Highway Administration will not allow this type of sign along the Federal-aid Highway system. We have installed signs along the system indicating the availability of services of the various roadhouses, lodges, etc. These signs were approved by the Federal Highway Administration.

Department control and regulations within the zoned and unzoned commercial and industrial areas only applies to those signs, displays or devises that do not advertise the sale or lease of the property on which they are located or activities conducted thereon. The regulations are aimed at the large commercial billboard type structures which fortunately have not been introduced into Alaska for the most part.

Junkyard Control
Change "shall to "may".

Our reason for requesting this change is two-fold. Number one, the Federal government has not appropriated a significant amount of funds for either control of outdoor advertising or junkyards. As an example the existing appropriation is $1000 for advertising control and $831 for junkyard control. If the removal is mandatory, we would be forced into spending unauthorized State funds.

OK

Second, we are of the opinion that it would be in the best interest of the State to expand the junkyard control legislation to also include the secondary highway system and suggest that Chapter 27, Title 19, be amended to accomplish this. Sections requiring amendment would be as follows: Section 19.27.020, Section 19.27.030 and Section 19.27.110.

The addition of the secondary highway system in the legislation would require an inventory of existing signs and junkyards along the secondary system and the future expenditures of State funds for their control. However, we believe the program would be well worthwhile.

SB 98

FROM: Robert L. Beardsley
Commissioner
Department of Highways

As further backup to Senate Bill #98 the State of Alaska has requested, in the Engineering and Construction Budget, State funds to match the Highway Beautification Program Act of 1965 as follows:

Year	Program	Total	Funds Federal	State
1967	Apportionment-Control Outdoor Advertising (Est.)	$ 102,480	$ 72,360	$ 30,120
1967	" Control Junkyards (Est.)	42,000	30,000	12,000
1967	" Landscape & Scenic Design (Est.)	1,299,743	1,207,743	92,000
1968	" Beautification Prog.(Est.)	1,487,500	1,350,000	137,500
1969	" " " "	1,487,500	1,350,000	137,500
1970	" " " "	1,985,252	1,800,000	185,252
1971	" " " "	1,985,252	1,800,000	185,252
	Total Funds Appropriated by State of Alaska for Beautification	$8,385,727	$7,610,103	$ 775,624

Federal funds apportioned to the State of Alaska are as follows:

	Total	Federal	Expended
1966 Apportionment
Outdoor Advertising	$ 36,180	$ 56,180	$ 7,500
Junkyard	15,000	15,000	--
1967 Apportionment
Outdoor Advertising	$180,899	$180,899	$ --
Junkyard	75,000	75,000	--
1970 Apportionment
Outdoor Advertising	$ 1,000	$ 1,000	$ --
Junkyard	1,662	1,662	Reduced 50%

The 1966 and 1967 apportionments were not expedned because State enabling legislation was not passed until 1968 (Chapter 233 SLA 1968). For all practical purposes the Beautification Program is non-existent at the present time. State matching funds are available. The writer will approach the administration requesting approval to spend 100% State funds to institute the outdoor advertising and junkyard program until Federal funds are avilable.

Public Law 89-285
89th Congress, S. 2084
October 22, 1965

An Act

79 STAT. 1028

To provide for scenic development and road beautification of the Federal-aid highway systems.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, Highway Beautification Act of 1965.

TITLE I

SEC. 101. Section 131 of title 23, United States Code, is revised to read as follows: 72 Stat. 904.

"§ 131. Control of outdoor advertising

"(a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that the erection and maintenance of outdoor advertising signs, displays, and devices in areas adjacent to the Interstate System and the primary system should be controlled in order to protect the public investment in such highways, to promote the safety and recreational value of public travel, and to preserve natural beauty.

"(b) Federal-aid highway funds apportioned on or after January 1, 1968, to any State which the Secretary determines has not made provision for effective control of the erection and maintenance along the Interstate System and the primary system of outdoor advertising signs, displays, and devices which are within six hundred and sixty feet of the nearest edge of the right-of-way and visible from the main traveled way of the system, shall be reduced by amounts equal to 10 per centum of the amounts which would otherwise be apportioned to such State under section 104 of this title, until such time as such State shall provide for such effective control. Any amount which is withheld from apportionment to any State hereunder shall be reapportioned to the other States. Whenever he determines it to be in the public interest, the Secretary may suspend, for such periods as he deems necessary, the application of this subsection to a State. 72 Stat. 889.

"(c) Effective control means that after January 1, 1968, such signs, displays, and devices shall, pursuant to this section, be limited to (1) directional and other official signs and notices, which signs and notices shall include, but not be limited to, signs and notices pertaining to natural wonders, scenic and historical attractions, which are required or authorized by law, which shall conform to national standards hereby authorized to be promulgated by the Secretary hereunder, which standards shall contain provisions concerning the lighting, size, number, and spacing of signs, and such other requirements as may be appropriate to implement this section, (2) signs, displays, and devices advertising the sale or lease of property upon which they are located, and (3) signs, displays, and devices advertising activities conducted on the property on which they are located.

"(d) In order to promote the reasonable, orderly and effective display of outdoor advertising while remaining consistent with the purposes of this section, signs, displays, and devices whose size, lighting and spacing, consistent with customary use is to be determined by agreement between the several States and the Secretary, may be erected and maintained within six hundred and sixty feet of the nearest edge of the right-of-way within areas adjacent to the Interstate and primary systems which are zoned industrial or commercial under authority of State law, or in unzoned commercial or industrial areas as may be determined by agreement between the several States and the Secretary. The States shall have full authority under their own zoning laws to zone areas for commercial or industrial purposes, and the actions of the States in this regard will be accepted for the purposes of this Act. Nothing in this subsection shall apply to signs, displays, and devices referred to in clauses (2) and (3) of subsection (c) of this section.

"(e) Any sign, display, or device lawfully in existence along the Interstate System or the Federal-aid primary system on September 1, 1965, which does not conform to this section shall not be required to be removed until July 1, 1970. Any other sign, display, or device lawfully erected which does not conform to this section shall not be required to be removed until the end of the fifth year after it becomes nonconforming.

"(f) The Secretary shall, in consultation with the States, provide within the rights-of-way for areas at appropriate distances from interchanges on the Interstate System, on which signs, displays, and devices giving specific information in the interest of the traveling public may be erected and maintained. Such signs shall conform to national standards to be promulgated by the Secretary.

"(g) Just compensation shall be paid upon the removal of the following outdoor advertising signs, displays, and devices—

"(1) those lawfully in existence on the date of enactment of this subsection,

"(2) those lawfully on any highway made a part of the interstate or primary system on or after the date of enactment of this subsection and before January 1, 1968, and

"(3) those lawfully erected on or after January 1, 1968.

The Federal share of such compensation shall be 75 per centum. Such compensation shall be paid for the following:

"(A) The taking from the owner of such sign, display, or device of all right, title, leasehold, and interest in such sign, display, or device; and

"(B) The taking from the owner of the real property on which the sign, display, or device is located, of the right to erect and maintain such signs, displays, and devices thereon.

"(h) All public lands or reservations of the United States which are adjacent to any portion of the Interstate System and the primary system shall be controlled in accordance with the provisions of this section and the national standards promulgated by the Secretary.

Information centers.

"(i) In order to provide information in the specific interest of the traveling public, the State highway departments are authorized to maintain maps and to permit informational directories and advertising pamphlets to be made available at safety rest areas. Subject to the approval of the Secretary, a State may also establish information centers at safety rest areas for the purpose of informing the public of places of interest within the State and providing such other information as a State may consider desirable.

Bonus payments.

"(j) Any State highway department which has, under this section as in effect on June 30, 1965, entered into an agreement with the Secretary to control the erection and maintenance of outdoor advertising signs, displays, and devices in areas adjacent to the Interstate System shall be entitled to receive the bonus payments as set forth in such agreement, but no such State highway department shall be entitled to such payments unless the State maintains the control required by such agreement or the control required by this section, whichever control is stricter. Such payments shall be paid only from appropriations made to carry out this section. The provisions of this subsection shall not be construed to exempt any State from controlling outdoor advertising as otherwise provided in this section.

"(k) Nothing in this section shall prohibit a State from establishing standards imposing stricter limitations with respect to signs, displays, and devices on the Federal-aid highway system than those established under this section.

"(l) Not less than sixty days before making a final determination to withhold funds from a State under subsection (b) of this section, or to do so under subsection (b) of section 136, or with respect to failing to agree as to the size, lighting, and spacing of signs, displays, and devices or as to unzoned commercial or industrial areas in which signs, displays, and devices may be erected and maintained under subsection (d) of this section, or with respect to failure to approve under subsection (g) of section 136, the Secretary shall give written notice to the State of his proposed determination and a statement of the reasons therefor, and during such period shall give the State an opportunity for a hearing on such determination. Following such hearing the Secretary shall issue a written order setting forth his final determination and shall furnish a copy of such order to the State. Within forty-five days of receipt of such order, the State may appeal such order to any United States district court for such State, and upon the filing of such appeal such order shall be stayed until final judgment has been entered on such appeal. Summons may be served at any place in the United States. The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the determination of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the State is located and to the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in title 28, United States Code, section 1254. If any part of an apportionment to a State is withheld by the Secretary under subsection (b) of this section or subsection (b) of section 136, the amount so withheld shall not be reapportioned to the other States as long as a suit brought by such State under this subsection is pending. Such amount shall remain available for apportionment in accordance with the final judgment and this subsection. Funds withheld from apportionment and subsequently apportioned or reapportioned under this section shall be available for expenditure for three full fiscal years after the date of such apportionment or reapportionment as the case may be.

Notice of final determination.

62 Stat. 928.

"(m) There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1966, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967. No part of the Highway Trust Fund shall be available to carry out this section."

Appropriation.

SEC. 102. The table of sections of chapter 1 of title 23 of the United States Code is amended by striking out

"181. Areas adjacent to the Interstate System."

and inserting in lieu thereof

"181. Control of outdoor advertising."

TITLE II

SEC. 201. Chapter 1 of title 23, United States Code, is amended to add at the end thereof the following new section:

23 USC 101 et seq.

"§ 136. Control of junkyards

"(a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that the establishment and use and maintenance of junkyards in areas adjacent to the Interstate System and the primary system should be controlled in order to protect the public investment in such highways, to promote the safety and recreational value of public travel, and to preserve natural beauty.

"(b) Federal-aid highway funds apportioned on or after January 1, 1968, to any State which the Secretary determines has not made provision for effective control of the establishment and maintenance along the Interstate System and the primary system of outdoor junkyards, which are within one thousand feet of the nearest edge of the right-of-way and visible from the main traveled way of the system, shall be reduced by amounts equal to 10 per centum of the amounts which would otherwise be apportioned to such State under section 104 of this title, until such time as such State shall provide for such effective control. Any amount which is withheld from apportionment to any State hereunder shall be reapportioned to the other States. Whenever he determines it to be in the public interest, the Secretary may suspend, for such periods as he deems necessary, the application of this subsection to a State.

Apportioned funds, withholding.

Reapportionment of withheld funds.

"(c) Effective control means that by January 1, 1968, such junkyards shall be screened by natural objects, plantings, fences, or other appropriate means so as not to be visible from the main traveled way of the system, or shall be removed from sight.

Definitions.

"(d) The term 'junk' shall mean old or scrap copper, brass, rope, rags, batteries, paper, trash, rubber debris, waste, or junked, dismantled, or wrecked automobiles, or parts thereof, iron, steel, and other old or scrap ferrous or nonferrous material.

"(e) The term 'automobile graveyard' shall mean any establishment or place of business which is maintained, used, or operated for storing, keeping, buying, or selling wrecked, scrapped, ruined, or dismantled motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts.

"(f) The term 'junkyard' shall mean an establishment or place of business which is maintained, operated, or used for storing, keeping, buying, or selling junk, or for the maintenance or operation of an automobile graveyard, and the term shall include garbage dumps and sanitary fills.

"(g) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, junkyards, auto graveyards, and scrap metal processing facilities may be operated within areas adjacent to the Interstate System and the primary system which are within one thousand feet of the nearest edge of the right-of-way and which are zoned industrial under authority of State law, or which are not zoned under authority of State law, but are used for industrial activities, as determined by the several States subject to approval by the Secretary.

"(h) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, any junkyard in existence on the date of enactment of this section which does not conform to the requirements of this section and which the Secretary finds as a practical matter cannot be screened, shall not be required to be removed until July 1, 1970.

Landscaping and screening costs.

"(i) The Federal share of landscaping and screening costs under this section shall be 75 per centum.

Junkyards. Costs of relocation, etc.

"(j) Just compensation shall be paid the owner for the relocation, removal, or disposal of the following junkyards—

"(1) those lawfully in existence on the date of enactment of this subsection,

"(2) those lawfully along any highway made a part of the interstate or primary system on or after the enactment of this subsection and before January 1, 1968, and

"(3) those lawfully established on or after January 1, 1968.

The Federal share of such compensation shall be 75 per centum.

"(k) All public lands or reservations of the United States which are adjacent to any portion of the interstate and primary systems shall be effectively controlled in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(l) Nothing in this section shall prohibit a State from establishing standards imposing stricter limitations with respect to outdoor junk-yards on the Federal-aid highway systems than those established under this section.

"(m) There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1966, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967. No part of the Highway Trust Fund shall be available to carry out this section." Appropriation.

SEC. 202. The table of sections of chapter 1, title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 72 Stat. 917.

"130. Control of junkyards."

TITLE III

SEC. 301. (a) Section 319 of title 23, United States Code, is revised to read as follows:

"§ 319. Landscaping and scenic enhancement

"(a) The Secretary may approve as a part of the construction of Federal-aid highways the costs of landscape and roadside development, including acquisition and development of publicly owned and controlled rest and recreation areas and sanitary and other facilities reasonably necessary to accommodate the traveling public.

"(b) An amount equivalent to 3 per centum of the funds apportioned to a State for Federal-aid highways for any fiscal year shall be allocated to that State out of funds appropriated under authority of this subsection, which shall be used for landscape and roadside development within the highway right-of-way and for acquisition of interests in and improvement of strips of land necessary for the restoration, preservation, and enhancement of scenic beauty adjacent to such highways, including acquisition and development of publicly owned and controlled rest and recreation areas and sanitary and other facilities within or adjacent to the highway right-of-way reasonably necessary to accommodate the traveling public, without being matched by the State. The Secretary may authorize exceptions from this requirement, upon application of a State and upon a showing that such amount is in excess of the needs of the State for these purposes. Any funds not used as required by this subsection shall lapse. There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1966, and not to exceed $120,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967. No part of the Highway Trust Fund shall be available to carry out this subsection." Appropriation.

(b) The table of sections of chapter 3 of title 23 of the United States Code is amended by striking out

"319. Landscaping."

and inserting in lieu thereof

"319. Landscaping and scenic enhancement."

SEC. 302. In order to provide the basis for evaluating the continuing programs authorized by this Act, and to furnish the Congress with the information necessary for authorization of appropriations for fiscal years beginning after June 30, 1967, the Secretary, in cooperation with the State highway departments, shall make a detailed estimate of the cost of carrying out the provisions of this Act, and a comprehensive study of the economic impact of such programs on affected individuals and commercial and industrial enterprises, the effectiveness of such programs and the public and private benefits realized thereby, and alternate or improved methods of accomplishing the objectives of this Estimate and study.

79 STAT. 1033

SEC. 303. (a) Before the promulgation of standards, criteria, and rules and regulations, necessary to carry out sections 131 and 136 of title 23 of the United States Code, the Secretary of Commerce shall hold public hearings in each State for the purpose of gathering all relevant information on which to base such standards, criteria, and rules and regulations.

Report to Congress.

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall report to Congress, not later than January 10, 1967, all standards, criteria, and rules and regulations to be applied in carrying out sections 131 and 136 of title 23 of the United States Code.

Appropriation.

SEC. 304. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000 to enable the Secretary of Commerce to carry out his functions under section 135 of title 23 of the United States Code relating to highway safety programs.

SEC. 305. Nothing in this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to authorize the use of eminent domain to acquire any dwelling (including related buildings).

TITLE IV

SEC. 401. Nothing in this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to authorize private property to be taken or the reasonable and existing use restricted by such taking without just compensation as provided in this Act.

Appropriation.

SEC. 402. In addition to any other amounts authorized by this Act and the amendments made by this Act, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Secretary of Commerce not to exceed $5,000,000 for administrative expenses in carrying out this Act (including amendments made by this Act).

ALASKA COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

8 Craig Avenue West
Fairbanks, Alaska
April 8, 1969

Dear Barry,

The February workshop in Juneau of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women was m st informative. Ours is a research and recommendation co mmission. Independently, we research policies and practices in our own areas that fall within the responsibilities provided by Senate Bill 249, which established our Commission.

For your interest, enclosed are the Agenda and the Minutes for the Juneau workshop. Unfortunately, the minutes do not include our Friday afternoon and evening business sessions or the Sunday morning concluding business session.

During these sessions, the Commission unanimously voted support for Senate Bill 133, to add "Sex" to the "Unlawful Employment Practices", a part of the Civil Rights Bill. We request your support for Senate Bill 133. There is a similar bill, House Bill No. 33, introduced by Rep. Chance since our meeting.

Also, the Commission is in full support of the bill presented by the Department of Labor dealing with discrimination against women under the Employment Security Act. We respectfully request your support for this bill presented by Commissioner Moore who failed to provide us the number.

Enclosed also, is our long awaited report to the Governor and the Legislature for 1968. Recommendations were forwarded to the governor in February and an interim report will be presented in May.

Any suggestions you might have to make the work of our commission more effective would be welcome.

Sincerely,

Pat

Mrs. A. H. Fleetwood

ALASKA COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

The Alaska Commission on the Status of Women met in the Conference Room of the Governor's Office on Saturday, February 8, 1969, at 9:30 a.m. The following members were present:

Mrs. Gertrude Reeser, Chairman
Mrs. John Cushing, Vice-Chairman
Mrs. Marjorie Fitzpatrick
Mrs. A. H. Fleetwood
Mrs. Isabel McLean
Mrs. LaDemma Zuback

Mrs. Reeser, President, opened the meeting, stating that similar meetings were being held in 53 other communities, including the other 49 states, Washington, D.C., the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico. The purpose of the program is to bring women into full partnership with men, put women in policy-making positions, and bring about full utilization of women in family, home, community, state and nation in order to extend opportunities to all people to develop to their full potential. These opportunities can help to make our State a better place.

Mrs. Reeser introduced Representative Mildred Banfield, who complimented the Commission on their previous report which had been well received in the Legislature. She offered any help that the Legislature might be able to give the Commission in their efforts. It was her feeling that the Commission could help in placing women in a position where they could best render service to the community, the family, and to themselves.

Mrs. Wanda Cooksey, Consultant, Guidance and Counseling, Alaska Department of Education, was then introduced. She reviewed what was presently being done in the State in public schools in guidance services. About 10-12 districts this year have approved guidance programs. The State Department of Education files with the federal government a state plan for receiving NDEA money which helps to support these guidance and counseling programs. Among the responsibilities of these programs is educational opportunities--helping students to decide for themselves what they want, what their programs should be, and what opportunities are suitable for them. Usually this counseling is on a one-to-one relationship; however, in recent years there has been more work done in the area of group counseling. Trained personnel are essential, and some training is being undertaken now. Counseling takes a great deal of time, but other demands on counselors for other guidance services limits the amount of time available for individual counseling. Mrs. Cooksey also works in the area of adult education. This field has grown rapidly in the past few years. It provides that persons who have not graduated from high school may take tests which will allow them to obtain a high school diploma. These tests are usually handled through community colleges or through the Department of Education. Communities are establishing their own testing offices. The program also offers brush-up courses. She stated that this material would soon be available in a brochure for the purpose of public information.

Another area is adult basic education, offered in ten communities now. This is a federally financed group of programs offering educational programs for adults who have not achieved the 8th grade level. The demand is considerable and both of these programs are helping people to obtain employment. No minimum amount of formal educaton is required for these programs, and after completing these satisfactorily, persons are eligible for college entrance. Wrangell is the only community which has a program directed at the lower grades, and they are in the second year of a pilot project. Fairbanks has a person working with the parents of disadvantaged children. In the villages, the teacher is the only person who can help in this area, and her time is very limited.

Mrs. Reeser introduced Dr. Donald Freedman, Alaska Division of Health. Mr. Freedman was concerned about expanded services for women as wives, mothers, and young women, particularly in the areas of population and of providing services where they are needed. The greatest problem has been with staffing and budget to provide services.

The population growth, in which the population of the world now doubles in 37 years, causes higher death rates, disease, and other related problems. Contrary to past years, the present birth rate exceeds the death rate and more people are living to the reproductive age, bringing a variety of problems. In the State of Alaska people who should be getting health and other services are not receiving them. Mothers in remote areas spend a great deal of time caring for these health problems, and education would be a great assistance to them.

The State has recorded a figure of 586 known abortions during the past year. Pregnant individuals handle this problem in many ways--by leaving the country, illegal abortions, suicide--and many result in permant damage, both physical and psychological, to the mother. These girls often feel they have to have an abortion because they can't get the help they need in this country.

In Alaska the birth rates in some sections are higher than in other sections of the population. Also, the death rate among infants is higher in these areas. In a family of from 6 to 12 children a very real problem exists in bringing these children up in a healthy manner, and often leads to other problems such as alcohol, sex, drugs, etc. Often the cause goes back 20-30 years in the family attitudes. In families of over 3 children, there are increases in complications of many problems for both the mother and the child--mental retardation, premature births, infant deaths, etc. We know the groups that have the greatest needs, but we are unable to do much about it because it takes personnel, budget, and program. Studies have been carried on in some low income areas to see if these people would accept family planning advice. Almost 100% continued to come back for this assistance; and in one year there was a drop of 32% in the births and a drop of 40% in illegitimate births. Presently there is only one family planning clinic in Alaska. There are also programs now to see what can be done to help support the doctor with other paramedical personnel and other aids in pediatrics and other areas.

Dr. Freedman stated three warnings: 1) Women carrying unwanted children to term have a high incidence of disabling psychiatric problems than those having abortions, regardless of the circumstances of conception. The created psychiatric problems are passed on to the children; 2) The unwanted children have a greater number of emotional and social handicaps which affect their attitudes, behavior, and learning as they grow up; 3) Almost all women having abortions under decent conditions have very few emotional sequelae after their abortions. Many have no problems whatsoever.

Dr. Freedman then stated points on services which would be particularly helpful in thinking of expanded needs: 1) Expanded assistance in fertility control, family planning clinics and services of all kinds wherever needed; 2) Development of family planning specialists; 3) Better prenatal care for all mothers; 4) Better mental and health care for children and their whole families; 5) Abortion legislation.

Mrs. Reeser then introduced Mr. Richard Folta, Juneau attorney, who spoke on Alaska's laws relating to the family situation. He stated that generally Alaska was above other states in providing justice to women through its laws. Property rights are provided women whereby they may own property, sue, be sued, and made liable for their own torts and crimes. One area where fair treatment is not afforded women is in the area of domicile, or intent to reside. The domicile of the wife is that of the husband. Alaska has modified this so that a woman may set up a domicile for voting purposes, divorce purposes, and other purposes, if she lives here a year. In Alaska a wife may sue her husband for negligence in case of injury. A child may also sue its parents for a negligent injury. Alaska law does not recognize common law marriages.

Alaska does not legally recognize maternity leave, which concerns Mr. Folta as it discriminates against the working wife. He felt the Commission might look into this. A high percentage of women work in Alaska, very often from necessity.

Alaska is very liberal in its divorce laws, and provides nine grounds for divorce. Most divorces are granted on the grounds of incompatability. However, it is the children who are injured the most often, and no one represents their interests. The applied theory of "fault" in divorce is wrong, and perhaps the Commission could look into this and eventually advocate some change.

In the area of adoption the Alaska statutes are very fair. The consent of the father is not required, making adoption somewhat easier than in other states which do require this consent.

There is some bias against high school girls who are pregnant. Often they are not allowed to continue in school, and this could be another area the Commission could consider. The abortion laws in Alaska need to be reviewed and a more realistic law adopted. During questioning it was felt that a change in the abortion laws will be a difficult thing to bring about. Several states do have fairly ideal abortion laws, and some exploration would be advisable. It was also mentioned that Alaska is a common law property state, which gives no consideration to the housewife who stays at home and works in the home.

Dr. Freedman indicated that studies show the best way to handle abortion is as a medical problem, the decision resting with the physician and patient, and not regulated by a set of laws. He felt that very few additional persons would be needed to staff an adequate family planning program. Needed most were funds and someone to administer them. These funds would go to the local communities which would set up their own clinics using their own practicing nurses and physicians during regular hours with the aid of adult educational material sent out through the schools. Some thought has been given to providing materials, supplies, and drugs in the rural villages through some lay resident.

Mrs. Cooksey stated that in the case of pregnant girls attending school, some have kept on, though some have not been able to do so for physical reasons. There is really no out-of-school programs for these girls except in several larger cities in the State.

The next speaker introduced by Mrs. Reeser was Charlotte Thompkins, past extension service agent of the University of Alaska Home Extension Service. She stated that the Extension Service was well equipped to help in the villages, but so short-handed because of a lack of funds for extension agents that help was not being provided to its fullest potential. It was felt that at least six agents should be provided for just Southeastern Alaska. At present there are only five for the entire State of Alaska. Anchorage is engaged in a project with approximately 20 aids--lay people--being trained to go out and work with people considered to be poverty stricken. They are using some federal and some state funding, emphasizing nutrition as their main objective. In most cases these agents have been able to make only one visit a year to outlying areas, but at least two visits are recommended. It often takes time to become accepted in these villages, and in order to be of real help one must be able to go back. Some of the specific areas of need and interest are: homemaking, cleaning, repairing, reupholstering, knitting instructions. It was felt that if more of these people were aware of what was available, there would be more requests for them and more effort to fill the requests. The possibility of cooperation with VISTA was discussed.

The meeting was adjourned at 12:00 for lunch to be held in the Iris Room of the Baranof Hotel. Guest speaker for the luncheon was Shari Gross, President of the State League of Women Voters of Alaska. Mrs. Gross spoke on the history of the League in the United States and the process by which the League accomplishes its aim of a more informed voting public.

The meeting was reconvened in the Conference Room of the Capitol Building at 2:15 p.m.

First speaker of the afternoon session was Mr. Thomas Moore, Commissioner of Labor, State Department of Labor. Mr. Moore quoted some Alaska employment figures, including the total work force of 94,000, up 35,000 from 1960. Female employment is presently 35,250. One of the major problems in Alaska, which has the highest unemployment rate in the United States, is the training of people to meaningfully participate in the development industries. The first such training program, financed by the federal government, was the Manpower Training Program started in 1962, financed under the Area Redevelopment Act. This program is directed toward heads of households, unemployed, or underemployed, and low educational levels. Since 1962 approximately 2,500 trainees have completed or are completing scheduled training under 226 courses in 50 different occupations. These courses include basic education courses as well as a great variety of skills training. Among trainees, 51% are educationally deficient, 9% are physically, emotionally or mentally handicapped, 38% were women, and 42% were members of minority groups.

The Department of Education, Vocational Division, is responsible for curriculum through the training. The Department of Labor is responsible for the selection of training occupations, based on cooperation with industry and business, so that the trainees will have jobs available. The Department pays an allowance, transportation, and often room and board for the training period.

He also discussed the Work Incentive Program for persons receiving aid to dependent children. This provides referrals and day care centers for these persons. At present there are 232 people enrolled in these programs, and 14 have been placed in jobs. About 97% of the enrollees in the program are women. With the discovery of oil in Alaska, an attempt is being made to train persons to hold jobs in this industry wherever possible.

Under the Employment Security Act there are certain types of disqualifications which apply only to women. Such provisions provide that if a woman leaves her job to be with her husband, to be married, or because of pregnancy, her disqualification is permanent until she earns $120.00. Under the general provisions of the Act, anyone seeking work and available for work is qualified for benefits. This discriminates against working women.

Mr. Moore was questioned concerning efforts of the Department to actively recruit female trainees for various positions, such as electricians. He indicated no intentional direction of recruitment was made, but that they had to be practical. Women were being recruited mainly for the clerical jobs. In training for advancement, there is a program called New Careers for persons who do not have specific educational or training requirements for a job. He stated that generally women's pay scales were slightly below men's, probably on the theory that the man is the basic family wage earner.

Other requirements relating to women such as the 25-pound maximum lifting requirement are primarily safety regulations. Mr. Moore felt that the disqualifications concerning moving, marriage, and pregnancy should be the same for all employees, and that they were presently discriminatory. An amendment has recently been offered to delete these so that women would be eligible for benefits as soon as they were available for employment.

Mrs. Reeser introduced Mr. Khris Lethin, Director of Planning and Research, Office of the Governor. Mr. Lethin discussed the operations of the Planning and Research program and the various titles under the Act. The first was planning, then the Vista program, and the State Technical Assistance Office funded by OEO programs. He then described the OEO Act. Title I provides for the Job Corps operation, of which Alaska has none. Title II - Work and Training for Youth and Adults - covers a number of programs such as Neighborhood Youth Corps, in-school and out-of-school programs, New Careers, and Operation Mainstream. Federal funds for these come from OEO to the Department of Labor. Community Action may be operated by the State, locally, or through non-profit corporations (Green Amendment). These programs are provided by OEO under Community Action Programs on these different levels.

The Work Incentive Program is under the Department of Labor. Under Title VIII, VISTA is operated by the State Division of Planning and Research. Many of these programs are directed toward the rural areas, and ground work is done in the villages prior to placing the program. Due to a problem in hiring by the National Office of OEO, they have had to ask that recruits are more adult and have some specialty so that they can do some specific projects in the villages.

One Commission member discussed briefly the Hope Center, a vocational rehabilitation center which has been trying to operate but needs more referrals from the State in order to keep going. There is indication that many people need this help, but are not being referred.

Mention was made of the Foster Grandparents Program, and a possible application of it in Alaska.

Mrs. Marie Darlin spoke briefly, stating that the Governor's Committee on Helping Services will be preparing a list of all community service agencies which should be available sometime during the summer. She also spoke of a commission on children and youth for the State of Alaska. The main concern, as felt by the State PTA, is that of establishing such a commission. Most states already have such commissions, and the Division of Welfare has been attempting to establish one which would be concerned with the education and welfare of children. Such a commission would provide a wider area from which to gather all the needs of the children and provide for these needs. Support was asked if legislation is introduced to set up such a commission. She also repeate the need for libraries in the outlying areas of the nothern areas of the State.

Representative Ernie Haugen was introduced. He discussed the Governor's State of the State and Budget Messages, which indicated two main objectives of the administration--economic development, and human resource requiremens of the State. Items in the budget and in department budgets total about $110 million out of $144 million for the human resource requirements of the State. Some legislators are spending a considerable amount of time working on legislation for the low income groups--aid to dependent children, etc. On many federally aided programs the federal participation is gradually diminished until the State is required to take over, thereby causing budget problems within the States. Many of these are in areas of real human need and are difficult to cut back.

Several bills have been introduced on consumer protection. He suggested that persons interested be sure to study the bills carefully for their end results. Several other bills raise the welfare benefits in several categories--aid to dependent mothers, etc. Some of these are covered in the Governor's budget. Another bill raises employment benefits to $5.00 on each end of the benefit schedule. The real need for unemployment insurance is in the low income levels--seasonal workers and others--whose earnings are low. In the seafood processing industry many women are the head of the family, and their earnings are seasonal; and although they qualify, they don't come within the scope of the program at the present time.

A bill to introduce the word "sex" in the Human Rights Bill has been introduced.

Mrs. Elladean Bittner discussed the need for day care centers and whether federal funds were being used to their fullest extent.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:50 p.m.

from 1968 report of
Alaska Commission on the Status of Women

The Alaska Commission members in Washington, D. C. have been invited to attend the Annual Meeting of the National Consumers League on June 19, 1968. The theme of this meeting is "Urban and Rural Poverty--Unfinished Business". Due to mutual concern of this problem the members are planning to attend.

The next Alaska Commission meeting is scheduled for August 9, and 10th, 1968 in Anchorage.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Alaska Commission on the Status of Women Commission recommends:

1. Formation of sub-committees in cities, towns and villages to co-ordinate with the Commission.

   a. Volunteer workers program
   b. Library or mobile book units for rural areas
   c. Leadership training
   d. Adoption program for native students
   e. Catalog of service organizations
   f. Catalog of qualified women for policy making positions

2. Day Care Program

   a. Grandmother program
   b. Neighborhood sitter's cooperative

3. Counseling and Guidance

   a. Work experience training
   b. Awareness of Existing programs

4. Discrimination on basis of sex

(1) Formation of sub-committee to assist the Commission on the Status of Women.

Because the commission consists of only eleven members and the area to be covered and the charges of duties is large it was believed that various service organizations could help materially with much of the necessary research and contacts. Each commission member in the larger cities has been asked to make up a sub-committee which could reach out for information in the nearby rural areas and determine the best way to assist them in their local problems.

As of May 31, 1968, Anchorage has had the best response to this plan and has had several meetings of a remarkably well represented group of service organizations with much volunteer assistance. Sitka has the nucleous of such a group and shortly should have their first meeting, stressing not only what can be done or needs doing in the city itself, but in the outlying villages.

Nome had had for many years a coordinating committee and it is hoped that they will work with the commission.

(a) Volunteer workers are needed in every segment of the State to act as sitters, medical aids, kitchen aides, to organize various youth and adult programs and work collecting books and needed teaching supplies. A rooster of available volunteer workers would be a help.

(b) From a survey made of a number of villages and expecially replies from a questionnaire sent to Vista workers, there is a crying need for books. Libraries and schools with surplus or duplicate books should be contacted and alerted to this need. In some areas mobile libraries should be considered. Book drives in the larger communities could be conducted and the books sent to those villages expressing such a need.

(c) Leadership training is woefully lacking in the smaller communities and the sub-committees will be charged with finding potential leaders and obtain help from them to establish worthwhile education, health and organization activities in the villages. This can be done by cooperating with existing agencies.

(d) A suggestion was made that an "adoption" program be implemented for native students. It was found especially true in the Fairbanks and Anchorage areas that often native students try to attend college but become discouraged due to a feeling of segregation. It is believed that if these native students could have sponsors who would make them feel welcome and wanted in a community they would have a better attitude. There is a need for them to have someone they can go to for advice on dress, manners, etc. as well as for emotional outlet.

(e) An attempt is being made to compile a working catalog of all the service organizations in the State to use as a working basis and contact for the sub-committees of the Commission. Several quite complete lists have been made and help has been received from several organizations.

(f) A catalog of policy making positions in the State which women should be able to fill is being considered. Required is a list of Alaskan women capable of filling such posts. Service organizations have been contacted about this project but as yet no concrete results have been forth coming.

2. Day Care Programs are evidently of major concern in all areas. From questionnaires sent out to outlying areas, practically everyone expressed a need for some sort of child day care program.

(a) One suggestion was implementing the old time concept of the "Grandmother" program. This would organize the older women in a community on an availability basis and free the younger women to work in canneries or other jobs.

(b) The Neighborhood Sitter's Cooperative has worked well in a number of areas and could be organized in many cities.

Counseling and Guidance are needed greatly in all areas, not only for youths but adults. Here again we feel the sub-committees could act competently in creating awareness of these community programs.

(a) Work experience training has had success in some localities and it is recommended that this program be enlarged and made available to many more.

(b) There needs to be more awareness of existing training programs. Especially from the Alaska Department of Labor we learned of a number of existing programs. It is suggested that comprehensive lists of the programs be compiled and more widely brought to the attention of the populous.

(c) Home extension courses and community colleges are offering a variety of subjects which are not being actively sought by the public. These should be more widely publicized and the public encouraged to take advantage of them through such mediums as "Campus Days" where the facilities are opened to the public and adequate explanations given of the subjects offered.

Discrimination on Basis of Sex:

The Civil Rights Bill passed by the Alaska Legislature reads; "Section 18.80.220 - Unlawful Employment Practices, It is unlawful for

(1) an employer to refuse employment to a person, or to bar him from employment, or to discriminate against him in compensation or in a term, condition, or privilege of employment because of race, religion, color or national origin, or because of his age when the reasonable demands of the position do not require age distinction;"

This Commission strongly recommends the word "sex" be added following the words "race, religion, color" and preceeding "or national origin" in (1), (2), and (3) of Section 18.80.220.

We have been advised that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in a staff opinion, that Alaska's law limits its ban on sex discrimination to the requirement of equal pay for equal work for male and female employees. Because this law limits itself to discrimination, the E.E.O.C. will not defer complaints of discrimination because of sex, received by it, to the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights. Such an amendment would give the State Commission the legislative ability to handle its own complaints, as it does in the other areas under its jurisdication.

SB 145

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 145

The original SB 145 mainly provided for the biennial (rather than annual) renewal of the license of an electrical contractor firm, consistent with the provisions for other occupations and professions covered by the centralized licensing chapter, AS 08.01. It also provided for reinstatement of a lapsed license and made clear that the grounds for suspending and revoking a license would also serve for refusing to grant a license.

The committee substitute adds a requirement that all electrical contractor licenses, not just those issued to firms, be renewed, and applies the same biennial and reinstatement language to them.

The Honorable Barry Jackson

Re: Senate Bill 160 - Multistate Tax Compact Act

Dear Mr. Jackson:

On March 26, 1970 Senate Bill 160, which has passed the Senate, was referred to the House Judiciary Committee. I am writing to you to urge its immediate consideration and passage. Following is a general description of the Multistate Tax Compact, its purpose, what it hopes to do and reasons why it is to the definite advantage of Alaska to adopt the Compact.

1. The Multistate Tax Compact was first contemplated at a National Association of Tax Administrators (N.A.T.A.) meeting in Chicago in January, 1966 where the idea was unanimously approved.

The purpose of the Compact was to provide an alternative to Federal regulation of taxation of businesses conducting business in two or more states. Big multistate business firms (principally those affiliated with the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Association of Wholesalers) have and currently are bringing much pressure on the United States Congress to regulate the entire multistate tax field.

Congress has had and currently has before it several bills which would regulate the entire multistate tax area. Most notable of these are the Willis Bill (90th Congress) and the Rodino Bill (H.R. 7906 - 91st Congress) which is identical to the Willis Bill. These bills strongly favor the large multistate companies at the expense of the states.

The Rodino Bill has passed the U. S. House of Representatives in Congress and is pending before the U. S. Senate Finance Committee. The U. S. Senate Finance Committee also has before it Senate Bill 2804 which has the backing of many Senators and would provide the Multistate Tax Compact approach to work out taxation problems in lieu of the Federal government doing this.

2. The Multistate Tax Compact is made up of 19 full member states and 12 states who are associate members. The full member states are:

Kansas	Nevada	Hawaii
Washington	Oregon	Colorado
Texas	Missouri	Wyoming
New Mexico	Nebraska	Utah
Illinois	Arkansas	Montana
Florida	Idaho	North Dakota
		Michigan

Associate members, including Alaska do not vote but are allowed to participate to a limited degree. It is expected that the associate members who do not adopt the Multistate Tax Compact within a reasonable time will be dropped.

3. The Multistate Tax Commission's headquarters was in Kansas City, Missouri but is now in Denver, Colorado. It operates with an Executive Director and a small staff. The Commission is composed of one representative member from each full member state and meets three times a year. Subcommittees may meet oftener.

4. The Multistate Tax Compact was set up to deal with all types of multistate taxation. At this time it is most active in the fields of income tax, sales and use tax, and property taxes. Regulations standardizing procedures are being drafted and some have already been distributed to member states. In particular I refer to such items as consolidated income tax returns, standard accounting procedures in the construction industry, and sales and use taxes.

5. The Multistate Tax Commission is the only organization which has testified in Congress against passage of S. 2044 which would greatly restrict the withholding of income taxes from the wages of transportation workers. This is an area which vitally concerns Alaska since we have been accused of causing problems to transportation workers by our action in bringing the case of Alaska v. Petronia, 418 P 2d 755 (Wash. 1966), cert. den. 389 U.S. 7 (1967) in which the state's position was upheld.

6. The Multistate Tax Commission has also arranged with several member states to conduct joint audits of multistate firms to avoid duplication of audits by those states. The Commission has also met with railroad companies to work out standard rules for the assessment of real estate.

7. If the states do not act and Congress passes the Rodino Bill, Alaska will suffer in the following ways:

a) Using the two factor apportionment formula (payroll and property) of the Rodino bill rather than the three factor formula (sales, payroll and property followed by Alaska and the Multistate Compact, the State of Alaska would have received $6,200 less in corporation taxes than it did in 1968, the latest year for which figures are available. If the Rodino bill were changed to cover all businesse rather than only those businesses having a net income of less than $1,000,000 as that bill presently reads, Alaska would have lost $167,056 in corporation income taxes in 1968.

b) The Rodino bill would exclude from Alaska state income tax the income of multistate businesses which do not have an office in Alaska but who have salesmen which come into the state or otherwise conduct businesses in Alaska. In 1968 Alaska would have lost $18,581 in corporation income tax because of such a restriction.

c) The Rodino bill would prohibit Alaska from imposing its gross receipts tax (AS 43.70) on multistate businesses which do not have a business location in Alaska. This would reduce Alaska's business license tax collections. The Multistate Compact contains no such restrictions.

d) The Rodino bill would limit the jurisdictional standards on our state and local governments and jeopardize collection of any Alaska or local government sales and use tax. We could not require an out-of-state retailer to collect the use tax if it has a representative, agent, salesman, canvasser or solicitor in this state. This would give the nonresident business an advantage over local business and make more difficult the collection of a use tax by local governments.

I suppose that what everything boils down to, really, is simply this: there is clearly so much pressure on the United States Congress from big multistate business firms that Federal legislation giving them some relief from state taxation will be passed unless the states offer a proper alternative. In other words the "Federal solution" to the alleged version of complying with the tax laws of many states is to exempt multistate operators from state taxing jurisdiction. Because of the revenue losses which must inevitably follow from this sort of "solution" the states committed to the Compact idea believe that the problems of non-uniformity and multiple returns should be worked on (i.e., simplified or made more uniform) through their voluntary, collective efforts. Only in this way will the legitimate complaints be solved while at the same time preserving the fiscal integrity and political independence of the states in our Federal system.

The Multistate Tax Commission budget is apportioned to members on a basis of 10% in equal shares and 90% on the basis of tax revenue. It was originally estimated that Alaska's share would be about $1,900 for the current year. However, subsequent information received indicates that it would be approximately $1,650. Compared to the tax loss that the state can incur, this cost is very low.

It is recommended that Senate Bill 160 be passed. Permission is requested to appear before your committee to answer any questions that it may have.

Very truly yours,

Vernon L. Snow

WHY ALASKA SHOULD BE A MEMBER OF THE MULTISTATE TAX COMMISSION

One of the major reasons why each state should join the Multistate Tax Commission is that the Multistate Tax Commission provides the only viable alternative to federal invasion of the field of state and local taxation of multistate business. The thrust of such a federal invasion of the field is now a very real one in the form of H.R. 7906, which has passed the House and is soon to be considered in the Senate Finance Committee. Our hope lies in convincing the Senate that the business complaints which gave rise to the Bills in question are no longer justified, that some of the problems have been solved, and that solutions are being developed for the others through cooperative efforts among the states.

The Multistate Tax Commission stands as the only vehicle available for such efforts. We have already received many compliments for having codified a sales and use tax jurisdiction standard...the first time that it has been done.

The Multistate Tax Commission has been pursuing experiments in joint auditing for income tax purposes. Joint audits should eventually prove to be of immense value not only to the states but to business as well. To the states they will offer the benefits of periodic audits of all businesses. To business they will offer the assurance of decreasing interference with business operations by state auditors since one audit will suffice for many, and eventually all, states.

The Multistate Tax Commission is also seeking to foster increasing uniformity in the manner in which all states approach taxation of multistate business. This does not mean uniformity in tax rates. It means optional uniformity in the means by which is determined the tax base to which each state applies its tax rate. We use the word "optional" because the Multistate Tax Compact provides only that the three-factor formula is available for use with respect to a taxpayer if the taxpayer chooses to use it. This does not preclude the state from using a formula more favorable to taxpayers if the state so chooses.

A major complaint of the business world to Congress has been that the same income of a multistate business is often taxed in two or more states. The Multistate Tax Commission approach offers a guarantee against such results; and it does so without restricting the states' option to choose alternatives so long as those alternatives do not produce such double taxation.

By comparison, H.R. 7906 (to which we have referred in the first paragraph of this memorandum) would answer business' complaints about non-uniformity in a way which would provide no uniformity whatsoever. Rather, it would simply exempt from taxation a large share of the income of certain preferred multistate businesses. It is apparent that this exemption approach is unfair to the states whose markets are being exploited by these multistate businesses free of tax consequences; and that it is equally unfair to in-state businesses with which said multistate businesses compete.

On the other hand, many multistate business complaints have been valid. The Multistate Tax Commission seeks solutions to problems in this field for the benefit of both business and the states. We know that we can be successful if states such as yours will support us.

How much would it cost Alaska to support the Multistate Tax Commission as a regular member? Your state's share of our budget would decrease as membership increased. The following example illustrates how the computation of your state's share would be made under the provisions of Paragraph 4(b) of Article VI of the Multistate Tax Compact:

> The Commission's approximate budget for 1970-71 is $160,000.00. One tenth of the budget is divided equally among all member states. We currently have 19 members. The next member will be the twentieth. One-twentieth of $16,000.00 (one-tenth of $160,000.00) would be $800 for 1970-71. The balance of each state's share is determined by the ratio of that state's revenues from certain types of taxes compared to the revenues of all members of those types of taxes. The taxes in question are the sales, use, income, capital stock and gross receipts taxes. The total of such taxes collected by our current members for the period July 1, 1967 through June 30, 1968, was approximately $5,567,324,150. According to your Revenue Department's figures Alaska collected $33,688,684 from the above mentioned taxes for that period, which amount is approximately .6% of $5,601,012,834 ($5,567,324,150 plus $33,688,684). Accordingly, your state's share of the remaining nine-tenths of the budget would be approximately $864 for 1970-71. .6% of $144,000 ($160,000 less 10%) would be $864.

To summarize:

	1970-71
	$ 800.00
	864.00
	$ 1,664.00

The above figures are based upon the assumption that Alaska would be the twentieth state. We emphasize that increased membership decreases the per-state percentage share of expenses. Also, appropriate adjustments will be made with respect to time lapsed in the current budget period for those states becoming members between payment due dates.

The increased budget for 1970-71 ($144,000 in 1969-70) reflects our expectation of rendering substantially increasing services to the member states. There is no desire on our part to spend money unnecessarily. We are well within our budget for the current year.

Ultimately, of course, the viability of the Multistate Tax Commission will depend upon the willingness of all states to become Regular Members. This will determine the long-range value of the Multistate Tax Commission as an instrument of state government in the field of state and local taxation of multistate businesses.

We are occasionally asked whether the Multistate Tax Commission will not be just another supergovernmental agency with all of the objectionable features which a federal agency would have in this field. The answer is negative. The various tax administrators of the member states operate the Multistate Tax Commission through the Executive Committee elected from among themselves. The Executive Director, who has many years of experience in state revenue administration, is responsible to these state tax administrators. A federal agency would not be responsible to any state tax administrator or group thereof.

The following may help to emphasize the advantages which the Multistate Tax Commission offers to all states as an alternative to the type of federal legislation with which H.R. 7906 threatens them:

1) The Multistate Tax Commission cannot and never will tell a state what tax or what rate of tax it may apply to a business. A federal agency ultimately would do so.

2) The Multistate Tax Commission is a means of protecting each state's current tax base. The threatened federal legislation would immediately diminish that tax base.

3) The Multistate Tax Commission will make it possible for each state to benefit from a larger number of audits at decreased cost. The threatened federal legislation offers no help whatsoever in this field. A federal agency would eliminate the need for any state tax collection activities at all, which would ultimately result in the elimination of the states as sovereign entities.

4) The Multistate Tax Commission will ultimately ensure that each business carries its fair share of the governmental burdens of the states in which it does business. The threatened federal legislation would ensure that many businesses would in fact be exempt from any obligation whatsoever to many states whose markets they exploit.

5) The Multistate Tax Commission will protect each multistate business against the multitude of audits to which it is subjected today. This will be true because many states (ultimately, we hope, all states) will participate in one complete audit performed under the auspices of the Multistate Tax Commission.

6) The Multistate Tax Commission has available to it the expertise of the tax experts who participate in its activities, including several prominent consultants and the Revenue Administrators of all member states. The threatened federal legislation is the product of mainly non-state-oriented people who have been overly impressed by certain non-state-oriented aspects of multistate tax problems but have paid far too little attention to the state-oriented aspects of those problems and who have ignored the great strides which the states have been making in curing the causes of the original 1961-62 complaints to Congress.

7) The Multistate Tax Commission offers business a vehicle by which to communicate its problems to tax administrators as a group and also a vehicle via which those problems can in many cases be solved.

8) The Multistate Tax Commission is run by the state tax administrators of its member states operating co-operatively. The threatened federal legislation would jeopardize each state tax administrator's operation of his own revenue department.

9) A. The Multistate Tax Commission offers:

a) unity of purpose for both the states and business;
b) uniformity of approach;
c) the distribution of its benefits to its members and to the business world.

B. The threatened federal legislation offers:

a) unity of purpose on behalf of certain favored businesses only, thereby affording those businesses a discriminatory approach which limits the benefits to those particular businesses. This defeats the interests of all other businesses as well as the interests of the states.

b) no uniformity whatsoever; it really offers less uniformity than exists now.

c) virtually no benefits to either the states or the business world as a whole, the exception being the benefits which it confers on the certain favored multistate businesses.

The Multistate Tax Commission needs the support of Alaska as a member. We hope that this memorandum has served to convince you of the importance of your state becoming a regular member.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE FOR SENATE BILL NO. 191

The proposed amendments to A. S. 9.35.080 would repeal sub-paragraph (1) of that section and replace it with a new sub-paragraphl. The changes proposed would not make major substantive changes but would clarify ambiguities in the present section.

Section 9.35.080(1) is intended to provide an exemption from execution upon a man's income of $350.00 per month if he is the head of a family and $200.00 per month if he is a single man.

A number of problems arise under the seciton. First, all of the earnings of a married woman are exempt. To change this, the judiciary committee amendment would change the exemption to $350.00 per month for the head of a family and $200.00 otherwise. Second, the present language specifies that the total amount of the exemption shall apply to income "which is due him or received by him from any source at any time within thirty days immediately preceeding the levy." While it is clear that the statute is intended to insure receipt by the judgment debtor of the appropriate exemption amount each month, this language does not specify whether the excess over the exemption which may be attached is to be computed with respect to amounts actually paid during the past thirty days, and appears to authorize both accrued income and paid income to be added together to determine the excess liable to attachment. The proposed amendment would gear the thirty day period contained in the exemption statute to an accrual basis, and would subject only those funds actually earned or otherwise accrued during the previous thirty day period to execution, regardless of when those funds are payable.

The third change would specify that the $350.00 and $200.00 monthly exemption amounts relate to net rather than gross income and direct that the amount be computed after deductions and payments required by law or court order, such as social security and child support payments. Frequent problems arise because the present section fails to specify net or gross income, but the practice of many courts has been to treat the exemption as relating to net income.

The fourth change exempts the judgment debtor from the requirement of filing a formal affidavit to avail himself of the exemption. The formal affidavit requirement which requires notarization frequently constitutes an unnecessary burden.

The judiciary committee amendment would change this to $350.00 per month if he is the head of a family and $200.00 per month if he is not the head of a family. A number of problems arise under the section. The second change would specify that the $350.00 and $200.00 monthly exemption amounts relate to net rather than gross income and direct that the amount be computed after deductions for federal and state tax withholding, social security, school tax, disaster tax, and unemployment insurance. Frequent problems arise because the present section fails to specify net or gross income, but the practice of many courts has been to treat the exemption as relating to net income.

The third change exempts the judgment debtor from the requirement of filing a formal affidavit to avail himself of the exemption. Amendments to other statutes proposed specify procedures to be followed in claiming exemptions. The formal affidavit requirement which requires notarization frequently constitutes an unnecessary burden, particularly in rural areas where notaries are not readily available.

Re: Senate Bill No. 218

Dear Barry:

Apparently sooner or later this bill will pass through your committee. It is the one which sets forth the language for re-election of a judge, as for example, "shall Charlie Brown be retained as judge of the Superior Court for six years?" Now that I am somehow intimately involved in this sort of election the humor with which I viewed this approach has diminished. I would like to suggest that we eliminate the confusion which occurred with respect to Justice Rabinowitz and Judge Taylor last time around in the same manner as other states have solved this. Namely, the wording should be "shall Charlie Brown be retained as judge of the Superior Court for the term prescribed by law?" This eliminates the public thinking that they are voting on the length of term.

I hope this suggestion is not misguided, but it does seem somewhat essential to avoid the confusion. Thanks for all you are doing for me, Fairbanks, and Alaska.

Sincerely,

Re: SSSB 245

Dear Representative Cornelius:

AS 09.35.200 provides for contribution among judgment debtors.

S 245 by a one line amendment proposed that the above section be extended to cover joint tortfeasors, probably because of the Spaeth case, 16 Alaska 199, which held that this section did not apply to joint tortfeasors where no apportionment is made or may be made. This case also restated the common law rule that contribution may not be enforced by the tortfeasor who pays the judgment against one or more joint tortfeasors.

I felt that S 245 was an imperfect solution and would leave many important questions unsettled.

As a result the uniform act was introduced as the present sponsor's substitute. It was revised by the National Conference in 1955 and has been enacted in fourt states, Massachusetts, North Carolina, North Dakota and Tennessee.

I see nothing in the act as proposed that would adversely affect plaintiffs, who indeed would be aided through the use of the contribution doctrine through the settlement process as well as after judgment.

Under our present law it is my opinion that the settlement by one tortfeasor with the claimant would not result in the release from liability of other joint tortfeasors, and it is my further opinion that subsection (d) would not change our present law in that respect.

In short I believe that the bill before the House Judiciary Committee comprehensively treats the subject of contribution amount joint tortfeasors on an equitable basis and I urge its enactment.

Very truly yours,

SPONSOR SUBSTITUTE FOR SENATE BILL NO. 245

This bill proposes the adoption of the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, prepared by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1955. The national conference's prefatory note to this Act states in part:

> "This uniform act establishes the right of a person liable for damages for an unintentional wrong to compel others, who are liable with him for the same damages, to share in discharging the common liability.
> "Under the existing law an injured person may select whom he wishes to sue from among those jointly liable to him for an injury. He need not sue all. He may settle out of court or he may sue all and collect the full amount of the judgment from one. Under the prevailing law rule there is no recourse by one who voluntarily pays or who is forced to pay the common liability, against the others who are equally liable to the injured party but who have escaped payment.
> "This act would distribute the burden of responsibility equitably among those who are jointly liable and thus avoid the injustice often resulting under the common law."

The judiciary committee amendment would require each tortfeasor's share of the liability to be based on his relative degree of fault. After a review of the official comments accompanying the uniform act and of the relevant pages of the transcript of the meeting of the national conference's committee which wrote this Act, the Judiciary Committee is unconvinced of the need to prohibit the degrees of fault from being considered (as is done in the original version).

Dear Barry:

Sometime back I wrote you regarding the possibility of introducing a Bill permitting contribution among joint tortfeasors. It is my understanding that Senator Haggland is considering introducing the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act. I hope you will support the Bill when it is introduced. The basic idea of the legislation is that if two persons are found to be liable for injuries or damage to a third person, and one of the two has to pay more than his share of damages, he has a right to recover proportionately from his joint tortfeasor.

It also tends to prevent collusion between one Defendant and the Plaintiff in a tort action in return for a promise by the Plaintiff to only collect from the uncooperative Defendant. This can be very deceptive to a jury which does not realize that the Plaintiff and one of the Defendants are working together.

The Uniform Bill also contains many provisions which insure that the rights of the Plaintiff, the injured person, are not prejudiced in any way by the Bill.

Yours very truly,

Howard Staley

CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 269

This bill seeks to clarify the law regarding the simplified distribution of small estates. By inserting the words "in Alaska", it becomes clear that in determining what statutory procedure to follow as to a decedent's estate, only the value of the estate within Alaska is to be considered. Thus, it is unnecessary to have an ancillary probate proceeding in Alaska when a person with an estate under $2,000 in Alaska dies with a larger estate elsewhere. The original bill applied this language only to real property; the committee substitute adds personal property.

TO: HONORABLE BARRY JACKSON, CHAIRMAN, HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE MEMBERS, HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

FROM: EDWARD R. SANDERS, MANAGING DIRECTOR, ALASKA CARRIERS ASSOCIATION

CSSB 271 has probably been given closer and more searching attention than most other bills before the legislature. The work being done on it by your committee at this time is an example. This attention has caused very material improvements and changes to be made in the bill as originally submitted by the Governor.

Recent consultation with additional people, including some attorneys practicing transportation law and other groups heavily affected by surface transportation activity, has convinced my Association's governing body that this bill is now in excellent condition for passage - except for the following changes, which should definitely be incorporated. Making these changes in a Judiciary Committee substitute would probably be the most expeditious way of handling them. The suggested changes are as follows:

Line 11, Page 1, change "AS08.18" to "Section 420(12)

Line 16, Page 1, strike the underlined matter and remove the brackets from "The"

Line 20, Page 1, after "and" strike the remainder of that line and insert "every exempt carrier except as provided in Section 20(4) to wit"

Line 22, Page 4, strike all language and insert "carrier, private carrier and exempt carrier as described in Section 20(4) including those operating motor vehicles"

Line 27, Page 4, add after "carriers" the words "and exempt carriers as described in Section 20(4)"

(12) "Construction contractor" means a contractor licensed by the State of Alaska to and actively engaged in the work of constructing, repairing or removing any kind of private or public facility or structure and does not include "contract carriers" authorized to transport commodities in bulk in dump type equipment unless such "contract carrier" is also actively engaged in the work of constructing, repairing or removing private or public facilities or structures as a licensed contractor.

I would like to express our strongest opposition to any change being made in Section 3 of the bill. This identical method of handling is in use throughout the other states and is used by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It has proven to be an efficient and equitable method of properly evaluating whether or not a specific additional operating authority should be granted. Ill advised changes in this provision could well weaken the trucking industry in this state to the point of destruction. You are urged to make no change in Section 3.

The Committee has our deep and sincere appreciation for the searching and objective work it has done and is doing on this most important legislation.

Thank you.

CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 271

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to the regulation of motor freight carriers."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 42.10.020 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(4) vehicles operated by a construction contractor while performing such a business as defined in Section 420(12) ~~AS 08.18~~ except that weight fees in an amount as provided by sec. 240 of this chapter shall be paid for each vehicle designed to be operated on a public highway.

* Sec. 2. AS 42.10.090 is amended to read:

Sec. 42.10.090. REGULATION OF PRIVATE AND EXEMPT CARRIERS. ~~Except as provided in sec. 20(4) of this chapter, the~~ [THE] commission shall

(1) supervise and regulate every private carrier and exempt carrier as to its safety of operation;

(2) require every private carrier and every exempt carrier ~~exempt carrier to file~~ except as provided in Section 20(4) to file information required by the commission to carry out this chapter, and supervise and regulate each private carrier in all other matters affecting its relationship with shipping and the general public.

* Sec. 3. AS 42.10.130(c) is repealed and re-enacted to read:

(c) Except as provided in (a) and (b) of this section a permit shall be issued to any qualified applicant, authorizing the whole or a part of the operations covered by the application, if the proposed service is or will be required by the present or future public convenience or necessity; otherwise the application shall be denied.

public convenience and necessity require the service to be resumed, it may order the carrier to reinstate the operation.

* Sec. 7. AS 42.10.230 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 42.10.230. MODIFICATION, SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION OF PERMITS Upon complaint or upon its own initiative the commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, may amend, modify, suspend, or revoke a permit, in whole or in part. Good cause for amendment, modification, suspension or revocation of a permit includes but is not limited to any of the following:

(1) as the public convenience and necessity may require;

(2) misrepresentation of a material fact in obtaining the permit;

(3) unauthorized discontinuance or abandonment of all or part of the carrier's operation;

(4) failure to comply with the provisions of this chapter, the rules, regulations or orders of the commission, the motor vehicle laws of the state or the laws or regulations of the United States;

(5) failure to comply with a term, condition, or limitation of the permit.

* Sec. 8. AS 42.10.240 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 42.10.240. WEIGHT FEES. (a) Every common carrier, contract carrier, private carrier and exempt carrier as described in Section 20(4) ~~carrier and private carrier including those operating motor vehicles~~ including those operating motor vehicles not otherwise registered or licensed in the state, and every person that rents or leases motor vehicles to common, contract or private carriers, shall pay the following weight fees each year for each motor vehicle owned or operated by it on the public highways of the state:

(1) motor vehicles of private carriers, and exempt carriers as described in Section 20(4) except those of persons who rent, lease or otherwise provide a motor vehicle for use of motor carriers, weighing over 4,000 pounds..... $25 carrier or contract carrier or by a construction contractor as defined in AS 08.18 to another construction contractor as so defined, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commission;

* Sec. 18. AS 42.10.420(6) is amended to read:

(6) "motor vehicle" means a truck, trailer, semi-trailer, tractor, wrecker, tow car, hearse, ambulance or other self-propelled or motor-driven vehicle used upon any public highway of this state for the purpose of transporting property;

* Sec. 19. AS 42.10.420 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(10) "rate" includes every rate, toll, fare, rental charge, or other form of compensation demanded, observed, charged or collected by a carrier for its services;

(11) "property" means all commodities, articles and cargo, of whatever nature or value, including but not limited to refuse, garbage, trash and other waste or nonwaste material.

* Sec. 20. AS 42.10.300, 42.10.360, 42.10.390 and 42.10.410 are repealed.

(12) "construction contractor" means a contractor licensed by the State of Alaska to and actively engaged in the ~~work~~ business of constructing, repairing or removing any kind of private or public facility or structure and does not include "contract carriers" authorized to transport commodities in bulk in dump type equipment unless such "contract carrier" is also actively engaged in the ~~work~~ business of constructing, repairing or removing private or public facilities or structures as a licensed contractor.

RE: Changes made under CSSB 271

CSSB 271 updates the Motor Freight Carrier Act to reflect changes made necessary by changes in conditions that have occurred since its passage and last amendment AND corrects deficiencies in the original act that have been discovered through application of its provisions throughout recent years.

The bill also contains changes in the original bill made necessary by mutual need of the Associated General Contractors and the Alaska Carriers Association members. All of which are either beneficial to the general public and/or do not affect them but are conducive to a more efficient and responsive surface transportation industry in Alaska.

Specifically, the individual sections accomplish the following:

Section 1 - Liberalizes the conditions under which construction contractors may perform needed services for themselves with equipment operated by themselves.

Section 2 - Simply makes the section AS 42.10.090 tie in with Section 1.

Section 3 - Establishes for the first time a "public convenience and necessity" provision that guarantees that the Commission will authorize such additional service to the public as it needs from time to time, but prevents them from issuing unneeded operating authorities that would undermine the operational stability of existing carriers.

Section 4 - Makes all filing fees the same since the work effort on such matters is of comparable nature and cost. Some fees are now $25 and would be raised to $50.

Section 5 - Establishes simplified and explicit rules governing the transfer of permits. Provides clearly that permits may be transferred if certain required conditions exist, whereas presently there is no certainty that they may be transferred and this injects instability and lack of incentive to carriers to build better facilities and do other things that would increase their ability to better serve the public. Also, it provides that incorporated carriers must transfer operating authorities in the same manner and under the same conditions as sole proprietorships and partnerships. It further gives to the Commission increased authority to eliminate dormant operating authorities so that the level of service to sparsely populated areas will meet the needs of those areas. It provides that all claims for loss or damage and all COD money collected will be remitted to the proper parties before transfer will be permitted.

Section 6 - Establishes for the first time a requirement that no common carrier may discontinue or abandon service in areas where operations do not produce a profit unless a showing of fact convinces the Commission that the public interest will be served by such action. It establishes working rules to accomplish proper results in such instances.

Section 7 - Goes further into the matter of adjusting the scope of a carrier's operations so as to cause such scope to coincide with the need of the public for common carrier service. This section implements and assists Section 6.

Section 8 - Establishes increased weight fees to be paid by for-hire carriers and establishes a lower weight fee on private carriers so that such monies will be sufficient to defray the cost of augmenting the staff of the Commission to the point where it will be efficiently operational. It is not now so efficient and the public benefit and stability of the industry urgently requires it. It is anticipated that these increased weight fee taxes will result in considerably more than $100,000.00 more revenue per year being collected to support the operation of the Commission. Recent acquisitions of additional equipment will produce still additional new revenue.

During the First Legislature the air and surface transportation industry agreed to pay these taxes in order to fund the budgets of the Commission even though most states take those monies from their general fund. It is felt that some portion of the budget needs should be borne by the general fund even in view of this special tax because the general public desperately needs an effective ongoing regulatory commission of this nature.

For example, the Commission needs and the regulated industries urge that the following minimal increased staffing be provided the Commission:

(a) At least two (2) hearing officers;

(b) An Executive Director;

(c) A branch office in Fairbanks and in Juneau to more effectively carry out the purposes of this Act.

(d) A second attorney experienced in trying cases;

(e) Support staff.

Section 9 - Establishes the legal ability of the Commission to determine just and reasonable classifications of property (they now only have this authority as to classification of carriers).

Section 10 - Establishes needed clarification as to contract carrier (dump truck) rates being minimum rates.

Section 11 - Establishes procedures under which the Commission may suspend rates, charges, or other provisions it feels may not be justified or in the public interest while it conducts the necessary investigation to determine the facts in the matter. It states the maximum period of suspensions and places the burden of proof of lawfulness and reasonableness on the carrier making the suspended changes.

Section 12 - Provides more clearly that new changes in carriers' tariffs must be placed on public file for at least 30 days unless a proper showing can be made to the Commission justifying a shorter filing period.

Section 13 - Provides that a carrier must abide by the effective provisions of its tariffs and that it is unlawful to charge or collect more or less than the stated tariff charges. This ensures equal treatment to every member of the public.

Section 14 - Provides that all contract carriers shall observe similar rules and conditions placed on common carriers and dump truck carriers by Section 13 hereof.

Section 15 - Gives to the Commission the authority to fix rates at a level it finds to be reasonably compensatory. This section further provides procedures to be followed in arriving at a needed action of this type.

Section 16 - Establishes the right of the Commission to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to carry out the intent of the Act and provides that all acts of the Commission are subject to judicial review. It provides, for the first time, that a violation is a misdemeanor which, upon conviction, is subject to a fine of up to $500.00 plus the costs of prosecution.

This section further provides, for the first time, a civil penalties provision that is to be administered by the Commission itself, with determination of guilt, amount of penalty and the levying thereof by the Commission. It provides that the attorney general will bring action in the courts to collect such penalties as are not promptly paid by the guilty party.

Necessary provisions as to cumulative effect and joinder of action are provided.

Section 17 - Provides liberalized vehicle leasing provisions for the use of construction contractors in leasing vehicles between themselves and further carries out the intent of Section 1 hereof.

Section 18 - Makes a necessary revision to the definition of a "motor vehicle," "rate," and "property" in order to bring needed clarification to the Act so as to enable the Commission to act in clearly defined areas as compared to the vague areas now existing and which cause unnecessarily lengthy and expensive litigation without in fact resulting in clear-cut legal decisions.

In general, I wish to certify that the trucking industry and the Associated General Contractors take the following position regarding this bill:

1. It urges its passage without further change because:

2. The increased taxes are needed to offset needed Commission staff increases;

3. The hearing officer and executive director are needed for effective functioning of the Commission;

4. It is imperative - urgently imperative - that branch offices of the Commission be established in Fairbanks and Juneau due to geographic, population, and existing transportation needs;

5. The technical and legal clarifications and changes are positively needed to permit the Commission to finally commence doing effective regulatory work required under this statute (AS 42.10).

RE: CSSB 271

This bill, in the form reported out by the House Judiciary Committee, represents almost two years of intensive effort to overhaul the Motor Freight Carrier Act, AS 42.10, in order that it can more efficiently serve the needs of the people of Alaska. The Act was a good act initially, but not perfect; and many conditions have changed during the recent years of rapid growth of population and economic development. These factors have made some existing provisions outmoded and inadequate and have necessitated the inclusion of additional provisions designed to cover the new methods of shipping, changed traffic flows and different needs of the shipping public and the trucking industry -- both private and for-hire.

Many legislative committees, carrier groups and the Associated General Contractors have worked on this proposed legislation; and all parties are now satisfied that it will answer known problems and will materially increase the ability of the Transportation Commission to do more effectively the work they were intended to do when the legislature first enacted AS 42.10.

Among other things, this bill adds a public convenience and necessity provision for the first time which specifically provides that additional operating authorities will be granted whenever it can be shown that the public convenience and necessity requires it.

The bill clarifies and simplifies the relationship of trucks operated by construction contractors and removes some restrictive provisions that have been objectionable to them.

Under this bill private carriers will pay a $25.00 per year weight fee tax, and the for-hire carriers will pay increased weight fees, increased in amount from 37½ per cent to 50 per cent according to the weight of the vehicle. These increases are agreed to by industry in order to pay for additional staffing of the Commission and branch offices in Fairbanks and Juneau.

The bill establishes clear and greatly improved conditions controlling the transfer of permits from one party to another.

Many other vitally important changes are proposed. For explanation, see attached.

Very sincerely,

Edward R. Sanders

RE: Changes made under CSSB 271

CSSB 271 updates the Motor Freight Carrier Act to reflect changes made necessary by changes in conditions that have occurred since its passage and last amendment AND corrects deficiencies in the original act that have been discovered through application of its provisions throughout recent years.

The bill also contains changes in the original bill made necessary by mutual need of the Associated General Contractors and the Alaska Carriers Association members. All of which are either beneficial to the general public and/or do not affect them but are conducive to a more efficient and responsive surface transportation industry in Alaska.

Specifically, the individual sections accomplish the following:

Section 1 - Liberalizes the conditions under which construction contractors may perform needed services for themselves with equipment operated by themselves.

Section 2 - Simply makes the section AS 42.10.090 tie in with Section 1.

Section 3 - Establishes for the first time a "public convenience and necessity" provision that guarantees that the Commission will authorize such additional service to the public as it needs from time to time, but prevents them from issuing unneeded operating authorities that would undermine the operational stability of existing carriers.

Section 4 - Makes all filing fees the same since the work effort on such matters is of comparable nature and cost. Some fees are now $25 and would be raised to $50.

Section 5 - Establishes simplified and explicit rules governing the transfer of permits. Provides clearly that permits may be transferred if certain required conditions exist, whereas presently there is no certainty that they may be transferred and this injects instability and lack of incentive to carriers to build better facilities and do other things that would increase their ability to better serve the public. Also, it provides that incorporated carriers must transfer operating authorities in the same manner and under the same conditions as sole proprietorships and partnerships. It further gives to the Commission increased authority to eliminate dormant operating authorities so that the level of service to sparsely populated areas will meet the needs of those areas. It provides that all claims for loss or damage and all COD money collected will be remitted to the proper parties before transfer will be permitted.

Section 6 - Establishes for the first time a requirement that no common carrier may discontinue or abandon service in areas where operations do not produce a profit unless a showing of fact convinces the Commission that the public interest will be served by such action. It establishes working rules to accomplish proper results in such instances.

Section 7 - Goes further into the matter of adjusting the scope of a carrier's operations so as to cause such scope to coincide with the need of the public for common carrier service. This section implements and assists Section 6.

Section 8 - Establishes increased weight fees to be paid by for-hire carriers and establishes a lower weight fee on private carriers so that such monies will be sufficient to defray the cost of augmenting the staff of the Commission to the point where it will be efficiently operational. It is not now so efficient and the public benefit and stability of the industry urgently requires it. It is anticipated that these increased weight fee taxes will result in considerably more than $100,000.00 more revenue per year being collected to support the operation of the Commission. Recent acquisitions of additional equipment will produce still additional new revenue.

During the First Legislature the air and surface transportation industry agreed to pay these taxes in order to fund the budgets of the Commission even though most states take those monies from their general fund. It is felt that some portion of the budget needs should be borne by the general fund even in view of this special tax because the general public desperately needs an effective ongoing regulatory commission of this nature.

For example, the Commission needs and the regulated industries urge that the following minimal increased staffing be provided the Commission:

(a) At least two (2) hearing officers;

(b) An Executive Director;

(c) A branch office in Fairbanks and in Juneau to more effectively carry out the purposes of this Act.

(d) A second attorney experienced in trying cases;

(e) Support staff.

Section 9 - Establishes the legal ability of the Commission to determine just and reasonable classifications of property (they now only have this authority as to classification of carriers).

Section 10 - Establishes needed clarification as to contract carrier (dump truck) rates being minimum rates.

Section 11 - Establishes procedures under which the Commission may suspend rates, charges, or other provisions it feels may not be justified or in the public interest while it conducts the necessary investigation to determine the facts in the matter. It states the maximum period of suspensions and places the burden of proof of lawfulness and reasonableness on the carrier making the suspended changes.

Section 12 - Provides more clearly that new changes in carriers' tariffs must be placed on public file for at least 30 days unless a proper showing can be made to the Commission justifying a shorter filing period.

Section 13 - Provides that a carrier must abide by the effective provisions of its tariffs and that it is unlawful to charge or collect more or less than the stated tariff charges. This ensures equal treatment to every member of the public.

Section 14 - Provides that all contract carriers shall observe similar rules and conditions placed on common carriers and dump truck carriers by Section 13 hereof.

Section 15 - Gives to the Commission the authority to fix rates at a level it finds to be reasonably compensatory. This section further provides procedures to be followed in arriving at a needed action of this type.

Section 16 - Establishes the right of the Commission to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to carry out the intent of the Act and provides that all acts of the Commission are subject to judicial review. It provides, for the first time, that a violation is a misdemeanor which, upon conviction, is subject to a fine of up to $500.00 plus the costs of prosecution.

This section further provides, for the first time, a civil penalties provision that is to be administered by the Commission itself, with determination of guilt, amount of penalty and the levying thereof by the Commission. It provides that the attorney general will bring action in the courts to collect such penalties as are not promptly paid by the guilty party.

Necessary provisions as to cumulative effect and joinder of action are provided.

Section 17 - Provides liberalized vehicle leasing provisions for the use of construction contractors in leasing vehicles between themselves and further carries out the intent of Section 1 hereof.

Section 18 - Makes a necessary revision to the definition of a "motor vehicle," "rate," and "property" and "construction contractor" in order to bring needed clarification to the Act so as to enable the Commission to act in clearly defined areas as compared to the vague areas now existing and which cause unnecessarily lengthy and expensive litigation without in fact resulting in clear-cut legal decisions.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

750 MACKAY BUILDING
338 DENALI STREET—ANCHORAGE 99501

April 13, 1970

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Chairman Jackson:

I regret that I am unable to appear before the House Judiciary Committee to give further testimony on CSSB 271. We still have a number of things to be accomplished in completing the preparation of our Direct Exhibits for the CAB ALASKA SERVICE INVESTIGATION. I want you to know, however, that I certainly appreciate the invitation to discuss this Bill with your Committee.

Perhaps it will suffice this time if I offer my comments in writing on Section 3 of the Bill which Section, I understand, is the subject of a proposed amendment.

In essence, Section 3 would require that an applicant for new operating authority must show to the satisfaction of the Commission that the public convenience and necessity require such new authority. This provision is roughly the same as that presently in the Air Commerce Act of 1960 (AS 02.05.080(a)(2)), and in the Bus ACT (Sec. 42.15.061(b)). This is also the standard type of provision found in nearly every other State and Federal Statute providing for certification in transportation and utilities.

I know of no regulatory act in the United States which places the burden of proof in certification on the regulatory agency. To do so in this instance would place an unworkable burden on the Alaska Transportation Commission.

It is my understanding that there is a proposal to make such an amendment to Section 3 of the Bill. If my understanding of the amendment is correct it would, in effect, automatically grant an operating permit to every applicant unless the Commission were able to prove that the public convenience and necessity would not support another operating authority. This approach would completely subvert the primary objectives of transportation regulation. Apparently there is a misconception as to what those objectives are.

It is my guess that the proposed amendment is offered with the idea that transportation regulation is analogous to the regulation of a profession such as licensing Doctors, Optometrists, et cetera. The two types of licensing however are not analogous. The basic purpose for licensing Doctors, Optometrists, et cetera, is for the protection of the health and welfare of the public who must use those services. However, with the regulation of transportation, the basic objective is to establish an adequate, strong, and economically healthy transportation industry which is available to serve the public needs at all times (winter as well as summer) and at a reasonable price.

It was proven over half a century ago that unrestricted entry into the field of transportation is the best possible way to create a complete monoply with resultant high prices and poor service to the public.

If the public convenience and necessity does require a new operator for adequate service, this factor is not too difficult for the applicant to prove. However, if the Statute in effect gives the applicant the right to have a permit, unless the Commission can prove that the public convenience and necessity does not require it, it would mean that the Commission would have to show that every single demand by every single shipper and every single consignee for motor freight service was being reasonably and expeditiously handled by existing carriers. The Commission could not do this even if it had 10 times the staff and 10 times the budget that it now has. The end result would be unrestricted entry by every applicant for whatever authority he may choose to apply.

I apologize for the haste in which these comments were prepared. I hope that they answer some of the questions concerning Sec. 3 of the Bill.

Again I wish to express the appreciation of the Commission for the opportunity to communicate with your Committee on this Bill.

Sincerely yours,

George Benesch

HCS for CS for SENATE BILL NO. 271

This bill, originally introduced at the request of the governor, proposes several changes in the Alaska Motor Freight Carrier Act which Ralph Sanders, lobbyist for the Alaska Carriers Association, states are all "either beneficial to the general public and/or do not affect them but are conducive to a more efficient and responsive surface transportation industry in Alaska." The Judiciary Committee amendments are intended to make clear that motor vehicles operated by a construction contractor are exempt from regulation by the Alaska Transportation Commission and that the contractor may rent out his motor vehicles when he is not actually "working" on a construction job, but is still actively engaged in the construction business. It is also the understanding of the committee that dump trucks which are used to haul their owner's material either for his own purposes or under a sales contract are exempt from ATC regulation.

SB 297

Comments Of Alaska Legal Services Corporation
In Support of S.B. 297

This proposal was originally drafted by Alaska Legal Services attorneys and jointly introduced by Senators Josephson, Begich, Miller, Brad Phillips, and Rader. (S.B. 297) It passed the Senate April 7, 1969, with one dissenting vote, and has been referred to the State Affairs and Judiciary Committees of the House.

The State Commission for Human Rights exercises jurisdiction over all violations of existing State anti-discrimination laws. Specifically, its jurisdiction relates to discrimination in employment, whether by an employer, labor organization or employment agency; places of public accomodation; housing; financial practices; and state operations. (A.S. 18.80.210-255). Primary enforcement responsibility is vested in the State Commission for Human Rights. (A.S. 18.80.010 et seq.) The Commission, upon the receipt of a complaint from an aggrieved individual or upon its own motion (A.S. 18.80.100) may initiate informal proceedings to achieve conciliation (A.S. 18.80.110) and, if appropriate, issue a cease and desist order against the action and individual or firm as to whose action the hearing was conducted. (A.S. 18.80.120-130). In such proceedings the Commission, and not the complainant, would exercise control of the presentation. The complainant or the respondent may seek judicial review of the Commission's action (A.S. 18.80.135(a)). Enforcement of the cease and desist order may be judicially obtained, but only at the instance of the Commission (A.S. 18.80.135(b)). In addition to the above, enforcement may be had through criminal prosecution of a person who engages in action prohibited by the substantive provisions of the anti-discrimination laws. (A.S. 18.80.270).

As provisions are now written, it is unclear whether an individual is required to resort to the Commission for Human Rights for relief from discriminatory conduct, or if he is free to seek redress directly through the courts. A second problem is that the terms of the present act do not indicate that relief may be sought as a member of a class, or that the Commission may act against a pattern of discrimination within an industry, labor union, etc., rather than merely dealing with individual instances of discrimination.

The proposed addition specifically states that the Superior Courts of Alaska shall have jurisdiction over causes of action arising under the Alaska discrimination laws, including any collateral issues which are a part of the discriminatory conduct complained of. This would include a pattern of discrimination which might otherwise not be cured if the issues were limited to specific discriminatory acts. For example, an individual who instituted an action against a company to redress racial discrimination would be able to maintain a class action and obtain relief as to all members of his class, including those who work in a different department.

It further provides for notification to the Commission whenever such a suit is filed, and that the Commission may either intervene in the suit as a party, or inform the Court that it is already acting on the discriminatory act giving rise to the lawsuit. In case of the latter, the court will defer action on the suit until the Commission has determined the issues before it. A limitation of forty-five days in this case is included to ensure the prompt settlement of these issues. The act empowers the Court to enter a preliminary injunction pending Commission action.

If the plaintiff's lawsuit is deferred to Commission action, the plaintiff is given the status of an "aggrieved" party in the event of an adverse decision so as to authorize his participation in or prosecution of an appeal from the Commission's order.

These amendments will serve three basic functions:

(1) an individual will be free to pursue his own remedies rather than rely upon Commission action in cases where the Commission is unable to give his problem prompt attention;

(2) class actions directed at patterns or practices will be permitted, rather than requiring enforcement to focus on individual or isolated acts; and

(3) the Commission's enforcement powers will be strengthened by the power to intervene in broad scale attacks upon discrimination.

We believe these amendments to be doubly important because of the limited staff and budget with which the Commission is currently required to operate.

This proposal was unanimously endorsed by the Board of Directors of Alaska Legal Services Corporation with the stipulation that a provision be added setting a nominal damage figure at $250. This could be accomplished by adding a sentence at the end of Section 18.80.340 as follows:

> Upon a judgment for the plaintiff in a case brought under this chapter, the court shall award nominal damages of $250.00 unless actual damages exceeding that amount have been established.

House Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 311

The bill limits the basis upon which an insurance company may cancel an automobile insurance contract. The limitation applies between the sixty-first day and the end of the twelve-month policy period. An insurance company would be allowed to cancel within the first sixty days for any reason at all.

Between the sixtieth day and the end of the twelve months, the insurance company could cancel only for non-payment of premium or for suspension of a driver's license.

The limitation of cancellation of an insurance policy under this bill does not apply to renewal of an auto insurance policy unless the renewal comes within the twelve-month period of original issuance. If the insurance company does not wish to renew beyond the twelfth month, it has the obligation of giving notice of its intention not to renew.

The bill further provides that background and character information given on an insured has limited protection from libel; i.e., that a libel action could not be successful unless the source intentionally gave false information or was grossly negligent in determining the veracity of the information.

OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATIVE DIRECTOR
941 4TH AVENUE, ROOM 309
ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

February 13, 1970

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Alaska House of Representatives
Pouch V, State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Jackson:

On January 29, 1970, I accompanied the Alaska Judicial Council on its appearance before the joint meeting of the Senate and House Judiciary and Finance Committees. The meeting was not too well attended, and while most of the programs were well received, the meeting was marked by criticisms and obvious misunderstandings by some of the membership. Since that time, I have come to the conclusion that the most important points of that program may well be in jeopardy.

We would all agree that the Alaska Court System is not perfect, and should never be immune from criticism. However, I do feel that most of the criticism of the Judges made during the presentation for increased salaries was not only unjustified, but irrelevant. I say this, not in defense of our Judges. If we do have Judges who do not measure up, they will no doubt come before the Judicial Qualifications Commission. This Commission has not been in existence long enough to make its impact felt. However, every indication is that it stands ready, willing and able to do its job.

The point I wish to stress in this letter is as follows:

Currently there are four vacancies among the tenure judge positions of the District Court which badly need filling.

In November the Judicial Council failed to receive enough applications to nominate a single one to the Governor.

In the Superior Court there must be added four additional Judges if we are to avoid a chaotic condition resulting from the tremendous increase in the caseload. In this respect, it now takes over two years to get a personal injury case to trial in Anchorage, despite all of the streamlining of the process which we have been able to do.

In addition, the Chief Justice has heretofore indicated his intent to retire sometime this year.

It therefore appears that during this calendar year there may be nine new Judges added to the Courts. It is in this vein that I feel the question of salary increases is critical.

During the joint meeting on January 29, certain members of the Committees pointed out some of the low salaries of Judges in states such as Texas. Regardless of the accuracy of the figures presented, they wholly missed the point. The relevant point is: "What are good Alaska lawyers, who would make good Judges in Alaska, making?" I do not have to ask this question of you, as you know the answer. I do feel that we need your assistance in convincing the non-lawyer members of the Legislature of the urgent necessity of a general and substantial salary increase for all levels of the Court in this session.

If there was ever a time, since Statehood, that a single legislative session had a greater opportunity to improve the caliber of Judges in Alaska Courts, it is this session, at this time. I cannot conceive of a time in the future when more new Judges will or should be going on the bench.

Not to act will no doubt result in lesser qualified applicants for these positions, which, if not provided, could well create a "log jam" from which it would take years to clear.

Both the Judicial Council and the Alaska Court System unanimously support the idea of a salary commission. It will, no doubt, eliminate what has been an annual fight for money. However, the idea of a salary commission is to keep salaries at a fair and just level, in keeping with the times and the change in the economy. It is ill suited as an instrumentality to bring about adequate salaries from the present low level. In my opinion, it is the responsibility of the Legislature to start this commission out with adequate salaries, leaving only future adjustments to the commission.

I have written this letter to you and other lawyer members of the Legislature in an attempt to convey to you what I feel to be a critical issue -- one which always seems to "lose its way" in committee meetings.

Your help in this matter would be sincerely appreciated, and I sincerely believe that the State of Alaska will profit from any progress in this area.

Sincerely,

FOURTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT
604 BARNETTE STREET, ROOM 313
99701

January 16, 1970

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson, Chairman, and Members of the House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Jackson:

Enclosed for your information is a copy of a story which appeared in the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner on January 13, 1970, concerning district court judges' salaries. Your committee is to be commended for having called for the bill so early in the session, but the proposed $24,000 salary for district court judges is not adequate, and someone's suggested "compromise" at $22,000 will not produce any more qualified applicants for the vacant district judgeships than the present $19,000 did.

This will be a rather long letter. I suspect that few legislators have enough contact with the district court to know why there is great disenchantment among the district judges, and inability of the court system to obtain applicants for vacancies. Salaries are only one of many reasons.

The district court at this moment is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl. There are sixteen positions on the court. Four are vacant, four are held by persons unable to pass the state bar examination (but having "grandfather rights"), and eight are held by lawyers of varying ability and experience.

There are two schools of thought on inferior courts: one, that justice of the peace courts, staffed by persons having no legal training or experience but hopefully possessed of good common sense, are adequate; the other, that the inferior court must really be a court, staffed by professionally competent and experienced people.

I thought that Alaska had chosen to establish a real court, not a justice of the peace system. Professional qualifications were established, the state's careful selection process was made applicable, the judges were given tenure, and for a time salaries seemed to be moving toward respectability. Promises were made that other steps would be taken to lend prestige to the office.

But in the two years I have held office, the purchasing power of my salary has declined despite a dollar increase of $1,500 (from $17,500 to $19,000). A superior court law clerk, wet behind the ears but admitted to the Alaska bar, earns $22 more in his first six months than a district court judge who has held office since the court was established. The gap increases as the law clerk goes through the steps and ranges of the state employees' pay schedule. A young man, not even admitted to the Alaska bar has started work as a district attorney at $21,000 a year in Fairbanks. He too will receive regular step and range increases. The salaries of the young attorneys who are public defenders are somewhat higher than those of the assistant district attorneys. All of this public employment for attorneys is compensated on the statutory schedule which makes allowance for the higher cost of living in the northern part of the State, and provides for regular increases. Even at these salaries there is a constant turnover in the district attorney's office. The man having the greatest seniority in the Fairbanks office has been here six or seven months and is not yet admitted to the Bar, although he soon will be. District court judges receive lower pay, have no periodic increases in their salaries, and cost of living differentials are ignored.

Twenty-one states pay their inferior court judges more dollars than Alaska does; ten additional states pay more in purchasing power, computed at the Anchorage, nct Fairbanks, cost of living index. Their retirement programs are comparable to Alaska's.

Assorted non-judicial functions are dumped on us, largely because they were dumped on the old U. S. Commissioner, ex-officio justice of the peace, and what-have-you. We are coroners, recorders, and warehousemen of the effects of the dead (you should see our collection of lynx pelts, old rusty guns, and useless clothing). I thought Alaska long since recognized that its Territorial judiciary was grossly unsatisfactory, but many of the evils of the U. S. Commissioner persist.

District court judges do not receive transportation or per diem to attend state bar meetings, but all other Alaska judges do. We have no libraries, our clerical staffs are limited for the tremendous volume of paper work that must be done (compare the number of cases disposed of by the district court with those disposed of in the superior court, and remember that a judgment must be typed and signed in each case). Our equipment is limited- -I mean typewriters, dictating equipment, and other basic office tools. We have no secretaries. The judges have no telephone lines, and those in the clerks' office are overloaded. Our clerks' quarters are arranged as inefficiently as is conceivalbe- -the architect had no notion of what a district court does. Our jury room is loaded with old closed files in disintegrating file cabinets, and we have no other place to put them. Our state clerks transfer to other state offices, where they are given pay ranges one, two, or three grades higher than we are permitted to give them.

We are nominally part of an integrated court system, but some of our clerks are directly employed by the City of Fairbanks, and owe their loyalty not to the court system, or the State, but the City. There is inter-office jealousy and resentment about differences in salaries, leave policies, insurance and the like between "city" and "state" clerks. These girls, with spearate employers, work in the same room, doing identical work.

We are forbidden, as no other Alaska judge is, to engage in any profit making venture of any sort. (Compare 22.10.180, AS to 22.15.219, AS.) At the same time, we are commanded by Supreme Court Rule, and authorized by statute to act as U. S. Commissioners. One judge here receives fees for this work, and the State subsidizes the federal government through free use of State court facilities, clerks, and the time of the judges who, although not Commissioners themselves, cover for those who are. (See 22.10.180 AS, and Rule 42, Rules of Administration. This was a sensible transition measure, but transition days are over.)

Probate and juvenile jurisdiction have been taken away from us. Forcible entry and detainer jurisdiction has been reduced to cases in which the value of the property is $3,000 or less (there is no such rental property in Alaska). We have no greater dollar jurisdiction than the non-professional U. S. Commissioner had.

District court is in session every day of the year. In Fairbanks, this means that for each judge every third weekend is lost. We must stay close to the telephone all weekend for search warrants and this is true 24 hours of every third week, when each judge is "on duty". There should be some compensating attractions in the position, but there are none.

The result of all this is that the professionally qualified district court judges are bitterly dissatisfied. The lack of applicants for the four empty seats shows that the Bar shares our feeling. There must be changes- -either a very substantial improvement in the status of the court, or a retreat to the old, nationally discredited justice of the peace system. While there have always been some good J. P.s, there has always been a heavy preponderance of terrible ones.

If we are to resort to J.P. "justice", it is my belief that the J.P. criminal jurisdiction should be limited to cases where only a fine can be imposed, and the civil jurisdiction should be held to the present $500 small claims limit. More serious criminal and civil cases should be filed in the superior court, which already has jurisdiction, and the superior court would have, of course, to be substantially enlarged. The people of this state are entitled to a competent judiciary on all levels, and there is no question now of the State's ability to provide it. The Legislature must decide which route to take. Until now, it has not quite made up its mind.

The question immediately before you is that of salaries. Remember that the American Bar Association recommends that the salaries of the district and superior courts be identical, recognizing that the nature of the work of the two is quite different but the legal skills and general ability of the judges of both court levels must be equal if a state is to have a good judiciary.

The Alaska Judicial Council has recommended district court salaries of $29,000 or $30,000. The Alaska Bar Association has approved the recommendation.

Two professionally qualified district court judges quit last year. One professionally qualified acting judge quit. More resignations will occur unless salaries are very substantially increased and other frustrating and insulting aspects of the position changed. No superior court judge has resigned. No supreme court justice has resigned for reasons such as those outlined in this letter. There has never been a scarcity of applicants for either superior court or supreme court positions. District court positions are now going begging, and the same was true in the fall of 1968, when the judges went through selection process of the Judicial Council and gubernatorial appointment. It is time for the Legislature to be seriously concerned about the district courts.

This letter seems unreasonably long, but I believe a recital of some of the specifics will help you understand, as nothing else can, why it is imperative that salaries be very substantially increased.

Yours very truly,

Mary Alice Miller

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT

ON

CS SENATE BILL NO. 336

This bill would increase the maximum salary payable to a judge of the district court from $19,000 to $24,000.

The committee feels that immediate action is necessary to bring the district court more in line with the salaries now paid to judges of the supreme and superior courts. The district court, in view of the qualifications required and the extensive duties, is drastically underpaid. Great difficulty ensues in obtaining qualified applicants for the court; there are now four vacancies which have existed for a long time. As it is now, the court is unattractive, as a young lawyer can do better financially in the district attorney's office, office of public defender, in private practice, or in municipal legal work.

Twenty-one states now pay their inferior court judges more than Alaska; ten additional states pay more in terms of dollar purchasing power. The American Bar Association recommends that the salaries of district and superior courts be identical, recognizing that considerable legal skill and general ability is required at the inferior court level where the public most often meets the law. Both the Alaska Judicial Council and the Alaska Bar Association have recommended district court salaries of $29,000.

HCSCS for SENATE BILL NO. 352 am

This bill, based on legislation developed in large part by the Federal Trade Commission, is designed to meet the increasing need in Alaska for the protection of consumers as well as honest businessmen from the depredations of those persons employing unfair or deceptive trade practices. Similar legislation has been recently enacted in many states and is being considered in many more because of the recognition that mass advertising, distribution, merchandising, and other modern business techniques have rendered the present law, where it exists at all, ineffective to afford any real protection to the consumers. In addition to these modern developments, which make fraud so much easier to perpetrate, the consuming public itself has changed radically since the common law principles were developed that are at the base of the substantive law of the marketplace today. This bill recognizes that, in addition to providing a remedy for individual damage, that consumers, to some extent, must be protected as a group against injury by fraud, since it is often extremely impractical from a financial standpoint for most injured consumers to protect themselves as individuals.

Thirteen specific types of deceptive trade practices are enumerated. In addition, the attorney general is granted the power to promulgate regulations to further define and specify their scope. Together these features provide an extensive range of protection to the consumer while clearly defining for the businessman, who must operate under them, what conduct is or is not prohibited. Thus, the bill avoids much of the vagueness that has plagued earlier attempts at trade regulation. In addition to the enumerated prohibitions, the bill would make certain consumer paper nonnegotiable within the meaning of the Uniform Commercial Code. The purpose of this provision is to correct the present injustice of permitting the transferee of consumer paper to cut off the defenses of the consumer when the paper is taken from the original seller. This section corrects the abuses of the holder-in-due-course doctrine by requiring the financial institutions who are in the practice of purchasing such paper to examine more closely the persons who are seeking to negotiate the paper.

One of the outstanding features of the bill is the inclusion of a range of remedies, both public and private, civil and criminal, which lend the essential flexibility of enforcement to the bill which is required where violations may range from very minor transgressions to large scale, calculated swindles. The attorney general is established as the primary enforcement officer and is granted investigatory and subpoena powers, limited by certain procedural protections, to deal quickly and effectively with fraudulent practitioners. These powers were included by the committee in this version of the bill because of the feeling of some members that the additional investigatory power would be essential in cases where fly-by-night operations were involved and that in other cases a thorough preliminary investigation would lead to fewer actual litigations. Provision is made for the enforcement officer to seek an injunction against unlawful practices, the violation of which could incur a civil penalty, and to accept an assurance of voluntary compliance with respect to any unlawful practice; he is empowered in a proper case to bring a criminal action with fines up to $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year. The bill also provides for a civil action on behalf of the state with a civil penalty of $5,000.

In addition to the public remedies, the bill provides for private remedies as well. Private remedies have the advantage not only of providing additional discovery of unfair trade practices since they are often more visible to the consumer than to an enforcement agent, but they also seek to reimburse the parties actually damaged rather than merely putting an end to the practice. The most controversial issue in the area of private remedies was the inclusion of the class action. It was felt by witnesses and some committee members that provision for the class action would tend to subject legitimate businessmen to undue harassment from unscrupulous plaintiffs and their attorneys who could use the threat of a class action as a club for a favorable settlement of an unjust claim. Others considered that the inclusion of the class action was necessary to the effective operation of any consumer protection law and noted its near unanimous acceptance by other state statutes and proposed drafts of similar legislation. A compromise was reached in which the class action was included in the bill, but in order for the action to be filed it must first be investigated and approved by the attorney general. It was felt that by placing a public official between the filing of an action and the alleged act, many or all of the actions lacking in merit would be weeded out.

Two features which have been found very successful in other state laws of this nature have been included here: a provision for treble damages and a $200 minimum recovery in individual actions. These features recognize that the average transaction involving a consumer fraud are generally so small as to prevent all but the most outraged consumer who can afford the expense of a law suit, from bringing an action. These provisions, though originally applicable to all private actions, were amended to be unavailable in the class action. The provision for treble damages is one of long standing in consumer matters and operates to deter fraudulent practices, encourage injured parties to come forward and bring suit, and to reasonably compensate those individuals for their trouble in bringing the suit. The $200 minimum recovery has the same effect. The bill was amended, however, to limit a treble damage recovery only to cases where the plaintiff could prove willful violation of the prohibitions, thus putting the plaintiff on a standard of proof similar to a criminal action. Provision is also made for the award of reasonable attorney fees to a successful plaintiff.

It is felt that adoption of this bill will provide Alaska with a consumer protection law which can adequately deal with the many and complex problems involved in a rapidly expanding economy and insure the preservation of business decency in the state and equity for our consumer citizens of whatever economic status.

FREE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE REPORT
ON
FCCS 2d HCS CSSB 352

The need for and the application of this bill are discussed in the House Judiciary Committee report in House Journal Supplement No. 10 (March 31, 1970). The major differences between 2d HCS CSSB 352 am H and the Free Conference Committee substitute are that the following sections, as designated in 2d HCS CSSB 352 am H, are deleted:

AS 45.50.471(b) -- evidence of unlawful act as prima facie evidence of intent to injure competitors;

AS 45.50.501. POWER OF ATTORNEY GENERAL. -- investigatory power;

AS 45.50.511. SUBPOENAS; HEARING. -- attorney general;

AS 45.50.521. REMEDIES. -- failure to cooperate with attorney general investigation;

AS 45.50.531(b) -- temporary restraining orders without bond;

AS 45.50.571. POWERS OF RECEIVER;

AS 45.50.591. LIABILITY FOR ACTIONS OF EMPLOYEE;

AS 45.50.621. FORFEITURE OF CORPORATE FRANCHISE.

In addition, the second sentence of AS 45.50.561, ADDITIONAL PUBLIC RELIEF, (as designated in 2d HCS CSSB 352 am H) was deleted, and its first sentence was made (b) of AS 45.50.501 (as designated in the FCCS). The following sections (as designated in the FCCS) were changed as indicated:

AS 45.50.491. REGULATIONS. -- instead of the attorney general, the commissioner of commerce is given regulation-adopting authority;

AS 45.50.501. RESTRAINING PROHIBITED ACTS. -- In (a) the venue is broadened for bringing actions to enjoin prohibited acts;

AS 45.50.511. ASSURANCES OF VOLUNTARY COMPLIANCE. -- the number of proper judicial districts where such an assurance is to be filed is increased;

AS 45.50.531. PRIVATE AND CLASS ACTIONS. -- in (a) a provision is added allowing the jury to decide the award of treble damages; in (b) a provision is added requiring the plaintiff in a class action to post bond; in (f) the time limitation in which an action is to be commenced is amended by adding a "reasonably should have discovered" clause;

AS 45.50.551(c) -- the criminal penalty of imprisonment is deleted, leaving only a fine.

It is the understanding of the committee that the phrase "installment sale" in AS 45.50.471(13) in the bill refers to installment sales contracts and transactions as defined in AS 45.10.220(9) + (10), respectively.

SUBJECT: HCSCSSB 352 (consumer protection)

In preparing this committee substitute, H.B. 446 (the governor's consumer protection bill) was used as the basic bill. In addition to correcting citations throughout, and making minor style changes (e.g., page 1, line 9), the following changes were made:

(1) Sections 501 - 521 (investigatory powers of the attorney general) and 551 (confidentiality of information) were taken from HB 444 (the Legislative Council's consumer protection bill);

(2) Section 581(f) adds a time limitation provision applicable only to the private and class actions; such a limitation doesn't seem appropriate to the injunction section (531), or to the civil penalties relating to injunctions (section 611(a) and (b)), and the criminal action (under section 611(c)) would seem to be adequately covered by AS 12.10.010 and 12.10.020(a); a careful reading of this time limitation is suggested;

(3) Section 481(a)(13), 481(b) and 481(c) are relatively minor but possibly helpful provisions taken from HB 444;

(4) Section 591 (liability for actions of employee) was taken from CSSB 352 am; perhaps it should be limited to civil liability.

The committee may also wish to consider the following matters:

(A) In section 471(a)(5), "seconds" as defined in section 631(4) doesn't seem to fit; "seconds" can be "original" or "new";

(B) In section 631(5) "trade" and "commerce" are defined; however, I believe that the only place that "trade" is used is on page 1, line 11 and page 3, line 7, and it's used in a way that probably doesn't require a definition; I don't find "commerce" used anywhere in the bill; in addition, the meaning of the last clause of that definition is unclear;

(C) Existing AS 45.75.220 and AS 45.80 deal, respectively, with misleading packaging and the deceptive advertising and sale of civil defense aids; amendment or repeal of these provisions may be appropriate;

(D) It may or may not be appropriate to include the following provisions which appear in HB 444: proposed AS 45.-90.020(a)(3) (exemption of actions or appeals pending on the effective date of this Act); proposed AS 45.90.-020(b) (exemption of certain trademarks, etc.);

(E) It may be appropriate to include proposed AS 45.50.530(b) and (c) (regarding the effect of violating an injunction or voluntary assurance) which appear in SB 352;

(F) In the phrase "methods, acts or practices" which appears many places in the bill, "methods" probably should be deleted because it doesn't add anything to the phrase and in many other places in the bill, including the basic AS 45.50.471, the phrase does not include it;

(G) On page 5, line 22 1/2, after the "of" the following should be inserted: "secs. 471 - 631 of".

The Honorable Barry W. Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Jackson:

This is in response to the request of the Vice-Chairman of your committee, Mr. Fink, for clarification of certain issues raised with regard to the sections of HB 446 and CSSB 352 which would have the effect of suspending the holder-in-due-course doctrine, now provided for in the Uniform Commercial Code, where consumer paper is sought to be negotiated.

Section 45.50.550 of proposed House Bill 446 makes any instrument entered into between a retail buyer and seller a non-negotiable instrument within the meaning of the UCC (AS 45.05). Paragraph (b) provides that an assignee of the seller is subject to all claims and defenses of the buyer and the buyer may not agree to limit his rights.

This section is intended to modify AS 45.05.726 which provides:

> Subject to a statute or decision which establishes a different rule for buyers of consumer goods, an agreement by a buyer that he will not assert against an assignee a claim or defense which he may have against the seller is enforceable by an assignee who takes his assignment for value, in good faith, and without notice of a claim or defense, except as to defenses of a type which may be asserted against a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument under §§ 246 - 402 of this chapter. A buyer who as part of one transaction signs both a negotiable instrument and a security agreement makes such an agreement.

Under the current practice, when a negotiable instrument and a security agreement are executed by a retail buyer, under the provisions of AS 45.05.726, the buyer by executing the negotiable instrument agrees not to assert any defenses against an assignee of the paper except defenses which could be asserted against a holder in due course. In effect, the assignee becomes a holder in due course and the buyer may not assert against the assignee defenses which he would have available in an action by the seller. Proposed AS 45.50.550 removes the holder in due course protection of the assignee thus allowing the buyer to assert any defenses against an assignee which he could assert against the seller of the merchandise.

Under trade practices an assignee among others could consist of finance companies, small loan companies and state and national banks. There is no statutory conflict under state law which proposed AS 45.50.550 would affect as to any of the various types of assignees. Nor is there any statutory conflict under Federal Law, which would adversely affect national banks in the event proposed House Bill 446 was adopted.

National banks are authorized to purchase installment consumer paper. 12 U.S.C.A. § 84 sets forth the limits of liability of any person to a national bank. Paragraph 13 provides that as to full recourse negotiable or non-negotiable installment consumer paper the bank is subject to a limitation of 25% of its capital and surplus. However, this section goes on to provide if the bank certifies it has evaluated the responsibility of the purchaser of merchandise and is relying primarily on him for payment the 25% limitation is transferred from the seller of the paper to the maker.

For example, if a bank were purchasing negotiable or non-negotiable recourse consumer paper from an automobile dealer it would be limited in the amount that it could purchase to 25% of its capital and surplus. However, if the bank evaluates the responsibility of the buyer of the automobile and certifies that it is relying primarily upon him for payment that paper is not considered in the 25% limitation applicable to the dealer.

The section refers to both negotiable and non-negotiable consumer paper. The provision for certification is not limited to negotiable paper but also includes non-negotiable paper. Therefore, a statute which made all such paper non-negotiable would not change the authorization or the practice which national banks have been following.

It does, of course, because it removes a bank from the protection of a holder in due course, requires it to be a little more circumspect in purchasing paper because of the requirement of evaluating the responsibility of the buyer and certifying that the bank is relying primarily on him for payment. Or in the words of the comptroller of national banks: "What is required essentially is the responsible exercise of prudent banking judgment supported by a reasonably adequate record." (Comptroller's Manual for National Banks, May 1968, Sec. 1620(e).

Several states including California and Massachusetts have adopted legislation such as HB 446 without any noticeable effect on banks. Congress in 1959 when considering 12 U.S.C.A. § 84(13) acknowledged the necessity of including non-negotiable paper in paragraph (13) because various state laws had been enacted limiting the negotiability of consumer paper. Thus it was stated in Senate Report (No. 731) on the amendment:

> Furthermore, there has been a trend in recent years for the various States to protect consumers by adopting retail installment sales acts which specify the form which obligations covering consumer installment purchases shall take. The form prescribed is almost always nonnegotiable, and in at least some of these States the law prevents the seller of goods from taking a negotiable note in addition to the form of obligation prescribed by statute. In these States banks engaged in this type of financing must take nonnegotiable paper. (U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, Vol. 2, 86 Congress, First Session, page 2305.)

For the foregoing reasons, it is the opinion of this office that enactment of the sections on non-negotiability of consumer paper will not have any noticeable effect upon legitimate and good faith commercial transactions. On the other hand, passage of the measure will accomplish a substantial benefit to Alaska's consumers as was explained in our previous memorandum, (See letter to Hon. Tom Fink, Feb. 9, 1970 pp. 3-6) by requiring the purchasers of consumer paper to be more selective in choosing businesses from whom they purchase paper and in policing the activities of the businesses with whom they do choose to deal.

It may be appropriate here to discuss one further point concerning the various approaches to the provision in question. The language of the provisions in HB 446 and CSSB 352 are quite similar to the draft developed by the Committee on State Legislation. (See Suggested State Legislation 1970, The Council of State Governments.) In drafting the provisions both alternatives of the UCCC (SB 211) on the subject were considered but found to be less acceptable than the language of the present bills. SB 211 chose alternative "A" of the UCCC which provides that the rights of the consumer can only be asserted as a matter of defense to or set-off against a claim by the holder of the paper. Under that provision then the consumer has no rights unless the holder sues the consumer. In the commentary on the language here it was stated:

> This would allow continuation of threats to, and impairment of, a consumer's credit rating which result from harassing collection tactics sometimes used without any actual litigation being undertaken against the consumer. (p. 5 of Reprint)

Thus it is felt that though the effect of either approach is aimed at the same problem the legislation under consideration here is superior to that of the UCCC.

I hope these remarks have been of help to you in your study of this provision.

Dear Mr. Jackson:

On March 7, 1970 I was honored to attend a session of your committee in which the various consumer fraud bills were being considered.

At the time of that meeting I indicated that this office had been accumulating a large volume of material dealing with consumer matters and laws on both the state and federal level. You asked if I would forward some of that material to you for your perusal.

In response to that request I am enclosing a small sampling of the material in our files. Much of the material would not be particularly useful to your committee in its study of these bills, but I would be delighted to forward all such files if you wish.

I hope this information will be helpful to you.

February 17, 1970

The Honorable Tom Fink
Alaska House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Fink:

On February 9, 1970 you were sent a letter in which the three consumer fraud bills now pending before the legislature were compared in some detail. Since that time one of the bills, SB 352, has been altered in several important points and this letter is to insure that you understand that the previous letter from this office was concerned with the original bill and not the substitute CSSB 352.

Though the substitute bill incorporates some of the features of the governor's bill (HB 446) it now appears to bear more relation to the Legislative Council proposal (HB 444) than to the former bill. Like HB 446, the substantial investigatory powers of the Attorney General are deleted. However, CSSB 352 goes even further in that it also has removed the power of the Attorney General to make regulations. The importance of this feature was expressed in our previous letter and its absence in a final law would be detrimental to the enforcement branch and the legitimate businessman as well.

The signal change in the substitute bill is the removal of any criminal sanctions from the bill which places it in the same category with HB 444 and leaves the governor's proposal the only bill providing for criminal actions. It is felt that the effectiveness of a consumer fraud law not containing provisions for criminal proceedings would be drastically reduced and would be far out of line with other state provisions and practices. In addition to removal of criminal penalties, it must be noted that the substitute reduces the civil sanctions and no longer provides for punitive damages. In short the substituted bill has had its teeth almost entirely drawn.

CSSB 352, you will note, has added the sections with which your subcommittee was most interested, dealing with consumer paper. This addition, identical to the governor's bill, seems to be a recognition of the importance of taking consumer paper out of the holder-in-due-course doctrine presently provided by the UCC.

Thank you for your patience in this matter. I hope that these supplemental comments will be of help to you.

The Honorable Tom Fink, Chairman
Subcommittee on Consumer Fraud
House Commerce Committee
Sixth State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Fink:

This is in response to your request for a comparison of HB 444, the proposed consumer fraud bill of the Legislative Council, and HB 446, the Governor's bill on the same subject.

For your information, also included in the analysis is SB 352, the only other comprehensive consumer fraud bill now pending before the legislature, and which was introduced by Senator Terry Miller.

For convenience, the bills have been broken down into several particular areas so that the parallel features of the bills may be scrutinized separately.

I. Prohibited Acts.

(HB 446, pages 1 and 2 to line 22, page 6, lines 7-26)
(HB 444, pages 1, 2 and 3 to line 19)
(SB 352, pages 1 and 2 to line 28)

All of the bills in question are quite similar in their coverage of consumer fraud down to the ninth and tenth subsections, though there are a few minor changes. Subsection (1) of HB 446 contains language which was felt to be more specific than the term "pass off" used in the other bills, though all the subsections (1) contain language which specifically outlaws the age-old fraud of passing off consumer goods. Subsection (3) of the Governor's bill is essentially a combination of subsections (2) and (3) of the other two bills. [Note: The "of" in line 21 is a typographical error and should have been "or". This subsection must be amended accordingly in order to make sense.] Subsections 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 of HB 446 are all included in HB 444 and SB 352. The latter two bills contain a subsection (11) which is not included in the Governor's bill. This section sets out a specific fraud which, though not covered specifically in HB 446 would be actionable under its subsections (11) and (12).

Subsections (11) and (12) of HB 446 are not included in either of the other bills nor are there similar provisions in the other proposals. Subsection (11) requires that one be damaged by the fraud but does not require intent while subsection (12) states that the deception would be actionable "whether or not" damage has occurred but requires intent. Combined with the power to make regulations (see below) these sections are potentially very valuable and would enable the enforcement official (the Attorney General in all bills) to reach all forms of practice which are unfair or deceptive to consumers. As such, it is felt these subsections provide more complete and comprehensive protection to the public against all of the various trade practices which unfairly injure or are calculated to injure consumers.

An important difference between the prohibitions in the Governor's bill and those in the other bills is the lack, in most sections, of an intent, or knowledge requirement to constitute a violation. It would appear that a few of the prohibitive acts in the other two bills do not require the element of intent either. For an instance, subsection (4) of both HB 444 and SB 352 does not refer to intent or knowledge. Likewise, subsection (12) of both bills appears not to require the element of scienter. The position that the element of intent not be required to constitute a violation in the Governor's bill is similar to that taken by several states (for instance Texas) and recognizes the essential nature of the activity sought to be prohibited as a fact accomplished, i.e. that someone has been damaged. This is especially true in any civil action where intent or knowledge has no part in such litigation for the salient point here is whether or not a person has been damaged. It is the position of this office, therefore, that the element of intent should not be included in the prohibited acts but if it is so included in the final bill intent should not be required in any civil action and that in a criminal action there should be an evidentiary presumption, rebuttable by the defendant, that the act was done with intent.

HB 444 contains several subsections which are not in either the Governor's bill or the Senate bill. To-wit, subsections (13), (14) and (15) are unique to the council proposal. In inverse order, (15) would appear to be covered at least by (6) of the same section, (6) of SB 352 and (5), (11) and (12) of the Governor's bill. Likewise, the prohibition against 'bait and switch' advertising in (14) of HB 444 would probably be covered by (9) of the same section, (9) of the Senate bill and (8), (11) and (12) of the Governor's bill. This section includes the advantage of clear, specific prohibitions but may prove to contain loopholes or allow their creation by the imaginative and ever alert mind of the swindler. Subsection (13) of HB 444 again sets out a specific prohibition which is not included in either of the other bills. It is not precisely clear on the face of the subsection as to what transactions it might cover but may prove to be a useful addition to the prohibited acts section.

Both HB 444 and SB 352 contain identical subsections (b) and (c) which are not included in HB 446. It is not apparent what the specific purpose of subsection (b) is. It is probable that this subsection is aimed at giving an evidentiary advantage where there has been consumer fraud, to one either prosecuting or seeking damages in an anti-trust action, as it refers to injuring competition and competitors. Since, at the time the bill was drafted Alaska had no anti-trust provisions or proposed bills, it was not included in HB 446. However, the intent of the subsection may have been to aid in litigation begun under the several federal anti-trust laws, and may have value as such in the final bill. Subsection (c) was not considered necessary in HB 446 in light of AS 01.10.010 which makes the common law applicable in Alaska where it is not contrary to the State or Federal Constitutions.

A major provision which appears in the Governor's bill, but which does not appear in either of the other proposed bills, is the section on the non-negotiability of certain consumer paper found on page 6, line 7 of HB 446. A similar provision is still pending before the legislature in HB 362, though the technical statutory approach is somewhat different because that bill actually amends the Uniform Commercial Code. The Uniform Commercial Code presently permits a waiver of defense clauses in commercial transactions and the execution of a negotiable instrument is made equivalent thereto, but, in effect, cedes to each state the power to set its own policies with respect to their use. Thus, in AS 45.05.726(a) the code permits the waiver of defenses "Subject to a statute or decision. . . . " The section of HB 446 presently under discussion would constitute the statute to which this section would refer. This section is intended to reach only paper which is described as negotiable for the purposes of AS 45.05.726(a) for it is this section that automatically forces a waiver of defenses agreement on a buyer signing a negotiable instrument. Thus, it is clear that many types of paper transactions in the consumer market would not be covered by this provision.

Present Alaskan law works a genuine hardship and great injustice on consumers in the state when it permits the transferee of consumer paper to cut off the consumer's defenses. When one buys goods it is his reasonable expectation that if the vendor does not live up to his end of the bargain, he, the consumer, may refuse to pay. In actual fact, however, he very often finds that the note has been assigned away to a third party with whom he has not dealt and of whom he may have never heard, and he is left only with a cause of action against the seller which, assuming the presence and solvency of the seller, means an expensive and time consuming law suit.

There is a considerable and increasing use of the holder of the due-course-doctrine in Alaska for fraudulent purposes. Very often a group moves in, makes a fantastic offer to consumers which is never intended to be fulfilled, takes a note for the products or services, negotiates it, and skips the jurisdiction before anyone even realizes they have been taken. As a practical matter, the consumer has no recourse, least of all against the holder of his note to whom he is legally liable. Very often it is impossible for law enforcement officers to stop the dishonest or sharp dealer before the damage is done. However, an essential part of any such scheme is the sale of the paper taken. If the institutions who close their eyes to the people with whom they are dealing realize that it is they, not the consumer, who will be left holding the bag, the incidence of consumer fraud of this nature will decrease markedly.

It may be noted that the Uniform Consumer Credit Code (U3C) also takes a dim view of negotiable consumer paper, and offers the legislature another alternative in accomplishing the objective sought in the present section, as the U3C has been introduced as SB 211. One of the stated aims of the U3C in deciding what credit or practices to prohibit or limit, was to insure that there were very real and corresponding benefits to the consumer because of the recognition that restrictions on rights of creditors could lead to higher credit costs and interest rates (see N. Butler, Summary of the Uniform Consumer Credit Code 3, 1968). One of the very first practices outlawed by the U3C was the use of negotiable promissory notes and consumer sales (see 4.850 UCC4, in SB 211, page 46, line 29). The code also contains two alternative proposales as to the question of defenses and their waiver by the buyer as to an assignee of a consumer contract.

Obviously, the thrust of all these proposals is to curtail the abuse of the holder-in-due-course doctrine presently provided under the UCC, as noted above. The purpose of this doctrine is, of course, to insure, as far as it can, the free flow of commercial paper and to encourage investment. The supposition of the typical holder-in-due-course incident is that there are two innocent parties: the obligor who has been wronged by the obligee, and the assignee who took the note from the obligee without notice of the defense. The law, by favoring the holder of the note, seeks to keep the paper moving and relieve the anxieties of prospective transferors. However, the code, as noted, recognizes the difference between consumer paper and other loans, though it allows the local law to determine what the consequences of the distinction, if any, shall be. (It is interesting to note that the UCC originally sought to deny third party freedom from defenses in the case of consumer goods [Uniform Commercial Code § 9-2061 (1952 version)] which version was originally adopted in Pennsylvania.)

One question to be asked and answered, therefore, is whether the holder in due-course-doctrine, as applied to consumer paper, is really having this classic effect on the money market. It is submitted that it does not. Consumer paper passes from dealer to financer as readily in states that subject the assignee to defenses as in states that do not. The possibility of consumer defenses is merely one of several risks taken by the assignee and the price he pays for the paper and the recourse or reserve arrangement he makes with the dealer are considered at the time the paper is negotiated. Consumer paper is not typically sold between financial institutions (saving perhaps some bulk transfers in which the second assignee is probably indifferent to the defenses of individual consumers) but if bought directly from the dealers, and it is here that the crux of the situation may be seen most clearly.

Without question the financial institution who is in the consistent practice of buying paper from particular dealers is in the best position to police his retail activities; presently, however, he has no reason to do so. By making the financial institution subject to the defenses of buyers, however, the effect will be to make those institutions put pressure on retailers to improve shoddy or dishonest dealings and force them to examine more carefully the paper sought to be sold by fly-by-night businesses. Moreover, what is the social or economic policy of allowing a financial institution to deal with a disreputable dealer and then stand free of liability while the consumer bears the loss?

There is the possibility that the increased protection afforded by requiring buyers of paper to be a bit more selective in their purchases and by making them subject to the defenses of consumer notes will result in some increased credit costs. However, the small increase, if any, is justified by the amount of lost consumer dollars in personal financial difficulties that may be avoided by this legislation. Moreover, there are aspects of this section which may actually decrease the cost of credit which cannot be ignored; notably the reduction in personal bankruptcies and increased percentages of collections from satisfied customers.

II. Exemptions and Exceptions.

All three bills contain common exceptions and exemptions in subsections (1) and (2), HB 446 and SB 352 being almost identical. These two exceptions are almost always provided in the similar state laws regarding consumer fraud and are considered necessary to protect the parties concerned. It must be noted that HB 444 does not repeal, as do the other two bills, the present sections on false or misleading advertising which contain a provision (AS 45.50.490(b)) similar to all the subsections (2). The retention of this exception in HB 444 presumably is to insure that it will apply to both the civil actions it provides and the criminal actions in the present law.

HB 444 also contains a third exception dealing with a pending action and appeals, and a fourth dealing with trademarks and tradenames used prior to the effective date of the statute.

III. Investigatory, Regulatory, and Subpoena Powers of the Attorney General.

(HB 446, page 3, lines 6 and 7)

One of the most marked differences between the Governor's bill and the other bills is the inclusion in the latter of very broad powers of investigation centering in the office of the Attorney General. Most of the states enacting this type of legislation have included these powers and they have apparently proven to be a useful enforcement aid primarily in states where court calendars are very crowded and immediate judicial action is difficult or impossible to obtain. It was felt, at the time 446 was drafted, that these extraordinary powers were not necessary to the enforcement of the act for several reasons. At this time, court calendars are not generally so overcrowded in Alaska as to make it difficult to hear motions for restraining orders or injunctions nor are the offices of the Attorney General so far distant from the court rooms that it would be impossible or inconvenient to act quickly in the necessary case. In addition, the relative isolation of the state combined with the relatively small population tends to discourage the fly-by-night or fast moving operator for whom most of these extraordinary powers are required from using Alaskans as his 'dupes'.

It must be noted that the powers granted by these two bills are both exceptional and substantial. The Attorney General, if these provisions are understood correctly, may upon his belief that some deceptive practice is or has taken place, (1) make the person in question file a detailed report in writing and under oath, (2) examine and cross-examine the person, (3) examine the property, records, books, and documents, (4) make copies of any of the above. The only investigation over which a court has any authority apparently is where the Attorney General wants to impound a sample of the property. In addition to these powers the Attorney General may issue subpoenas on his own power. These powers are reinforced by remedies against those refusing to cooperate in the investigation.

Should the legislature decide to include these powers in the final bill, the following general comments are offered for your consideration. SB 352 has identical powers to HB 444. However, it does not contain the safeguards against their abuse as does the latter bill (see HB 444, page 7, lines 5 to line 28). HB 444 recognizes the constitutional problems of self-incrimination which would be inherent in using material directly or indirectly uncovered as a result of an investigation conducted with these powers in any criminal action. (Though it must be noted that HB 444 provides for no criminal sanction.) The powers would, of course, be invaluable in opening up a violator to civil damages or injunction but their aid in convicting a person of a crime is doubtful. This distinction should be made where the broad investigatory powers are provided.

Likewise, HB 444 recognizes the possible abuse of the powers in question by requiring discovered material to be kept confidential. This protection will prevent persons from being pilloried in newspapers, stigmatized, or otherwise attacked unless the Attorney General, in his investigation has found evidence substantial enough to justify litigation. In this line of thought, some consideration might be given to the protection of trade secrets, secret trade information, or other privileged matter. Some states (Massachusetts notably) require that the demand for information shall not contain any requirements which would be unreasonable or improper if contained in a subpoena duces tecum issued by a court. Further court control could be obtained by providing for a motion by the person of whom the information is requested to extend the period of time or even satisfy the demand for good cause. In addition, some consideration should be given to the time and place that such information could be demanded (regular business hours, regular place of business, etc.).

It should be noted here that all three bills allow for regulatory power in the office of the Attorney General. This provision will enable the Attorney General to pinpoint specific schemes and rackets by regulation so that there can be no mistake as to what acts are prohibited. It is an important and useful tool in insuring that comprehensive and effective protection is afforded the public in consumer matters and the provision which will allow in the long run greater fairness to the business man by outlining prescribed conduct with precision.

IV. Restraining Orders, Injunctions, Voluntary Compliance.

Any law seeking to regulate such a sensitive area as consumer fraud requires that a broad spectrum of ways to deal with violators, whose activities may range from borderline to flagrant, be available to the authority charged with enforcement. Though the development of a body of effective regulations as to what specific acts are prohibited will go a long way toward putting the business man on notice as to what activity is prohibited, the use of assurances of discontinuance or voluntary compliances are particularly useful in cases where an honest business man unwittingly may have used a practice that could be considered deceptive. As a practical matter, long standing usages by businesses or industry which would be illegal under a new law may continue unnoticed and such cases should not necessarily be brought into court though something beyond a specific warning may be needed. Also, the use of this device will aid the enforcement officers and courts by giving an alternative to actual litigation for every use of deception. The provisions for voluntary compliance in HB 444 and SB 352 are substantially the same except that the latter adds a subsection (c) (page 6, line 8) which would seek to make a violation of the assurance prima facie (rebuttable) evidence of the violation of the law in civil actions by the Attorney General. This provision attempts to overcome the shortcoming of the voluntary assurance that if it is violated the Attorney General must proceed as if it had never been made.

The Governor's bill does not include it, as do the other bills, the provision for the voluntary payment by the alleged violator of investigative costs or damages on a stipulation to the assurance. This section does not appear to add a great deal to the bill because unless such an agreement were specifically prohibited by statute it could always be entered into regardless of its mention in the consumer fraud bill. Moreover, the Governor's bill does contain substantial provisions for private recourse, and in no way would prohibit this payment which is stated to be voluntary.

The power of the Attorney General to seek injunctions, whether permanent or temporary is common to all three bills and is a valuable and traditional tool of enforcement and one which we believe is essential to effective enforcement of a deceptive trade practice act.

V. Penalties.

(HB 446, page 6, line 27 to page 7, line 20)

SB 352 and the Governor's bill both provide for criminal sanctions for a violation of the act. HB 444 in marked contrast does not provide for any criminal sanctions. It is submitted that criminal sanctions are often the only way to deal with the purveyors of consumer fraud and that any bill without them would be of little help in actually curbing the incidents of consumer fraud in Alaska. A bill providing only civil penalties seems to assume that the victims of fraud are intelligent middle class individuals who are all aware of their rights, are familiar with and at ease in the courts, and are willing to bring actions to enforce their rights. Many times the persons hardest hit by these frauds are the poor, the illiterate, the feeble, the old, immigrants, the unaware, the unintelligent, and others who need to be protected from the unscrupulous. We are rarely concerned in these laws with the brilliant confidence artist who executes a multi-million dollar stock swindle against the financial wizards of Wall Street; we are talking here about individuals who take advantage of people who are already disadvantaged and prey upon the weakest members of our society. This is criminal activity and should be treated as such.

It is the apparent theory of HB 444 that the present criminal law is sufficient to protect the general public. The only additional public protection afforded by this proposal is the ability of the Attorney General to seek an injunction, which, if broken, could result in a civil penalty of up to $10,000. In other words, the purveyor of fraud has nothing to lose by engaging in fraudulent acts. Even if the Attorney General identifies him, seeks and obtains an injunction, (or assurance of discontinuance) the defrauder has lost nothing. He is free then to find another racket in which to engage so long as the court's order is not violated. The only fear under HB 444 would be from civil suits of those who are aware of the fraud, can prove damage, and are willing to prosecute their cases. However, as noted below, these civil claimants are given no evidentiary advantage and no specific provision for punitive or treble damages. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine a defrauder entering into an assurance of discontinuance with the Attorney General if the most than can be done is to get an injunction against him. The lack of criminal sanctions negates the use of this manpower saving tool. In short, the bill contains no real deterrent to fraudulent practices and next to no way to punish those who do engage in fraud. HB 444, despite its extensive and carefully drawn provisions prohibiting acts, providing for investigations, etc., will, in fact, change very little the present law which is inadequate to deal with the mounting incidence of consumer fraud in Alaska.

In comparing HB 446 and SB 352, it is notable that upper limit of the fine in the latter is $1,000, while in the former it is $10,000. Both provide for one year imprisonment. It is submitted that the fine will be used much more extensively by the courts than the jail sentence and that a $1,000 fine is an insufficient deterrent to the crimes set out in these bills. Consumer fraud is big business and $1,000 to many of these organizations would be a mere slap on the wrist, and easily written off as a 'business expense'. In addition the civil penalty limit for violation of a court order in SB 352 is only $10,000 as compared with $25,000 in the Governor's bill. Obviously these upper limits are not aimed at small operators but at the large, nation-wide organizations who may be well heeled and may retain 'house counsel' or other advantages.

All of the bills provide for private civil actions but again HB 444 is considerably less helpful than the other two bills. It provides only for actual damages where, in the proper case, the other bills would allow punitive damages (SB 352) or treble damages (HB 446). It does not specifically provide for class actions; nor does it give the evidentiary edge (prima facie) to private litigants where there has been a permanent injunction or final judgment as does the Governor's bill in subsection (e) of 45.50.540 (page 6, line 2). This point is not a minor one for in consumer fraud cases the main difficulty in getting a judgment is the investigation and accumulation of evidence which can be prohibitively expensive. Neither HB 444 or SB 352 provide for this feature. The deletion of this evidentiary advantage is particularly damaging to HB 444 which relies only on the Attorney General's ability to get an injunction and the possibility of private civil recovery for sanctions.

Allowing for private civil actions in a consumer fraud law is extremely helpful to the enforcement agent because it has the effect of making the law 'self-enforcing' to a degree, and especially with regard to the smaller or occasional claims. As a general rule, every such case which is brought by a private party means one less that must be prosecuted by the state. The enforcement officer is thus freer to investigate the professional or organized operations which are of important public concern and which may be prevented before they begin. In addition, it must be noted that the civil action gives the injured party a chance to recover his damages.

In our opinion the Governor's bill and, to the extent applicable, SB 352 are more sensitive than HB 444 to the need for a wide range of alternatives for enforcement. It includes higher limits for violation of orders or injunctions; it provides for a civil action by the state and class actions by injured groups; it provides for revocation of a corporate franchise as a proper case; it provides for a receivership where the court deems such extreme action necessary; and it recognizes the ability of private actions to aid in enforcement.

In HB 444 "person" seems unnecessary in light of AS 01.10.060(7).

I hope these observations have been of help to you in your study of this important legislation. If you have questions concerning it, please do not hesitate to contact this office.

TO: STATE ASSOCIATION EXECUTIVES

FTC URGES STATES TO ENACT "UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES AND CONSUMER PROTECTION LAW"

The Federal Trade Commission has renewed its recommendation originally made in 1966 that the states enact laws to protect the public from deceptive and unfair trade practices. The recommended legislation which is similar to language contained in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, would enable the Attorney General or some other designated state official to investigate and obtain court injunctions with respect to unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in trade or commerce.

This year's draft, contains a provision authorizing the court to decree restitution of money or property to anyone who suffers damage from unlawful acts or practices, to appoint a receiver or revoke a license or certificate for doing business. Provision is also made for injured parties to initiate suits for the recovery of their own damages as well as losses sustained by others who have been similarly damaged and for payment of attorney fees and court costs. FTC chairman, Paul Rand Dixon, in discussing the current proposal, stated that ordinarily the amount involved in the consumer transaction is not sufficient to warrant bringing private suit, with result that thousands of consumers suffer small losses without any remedy being available. Under the new proposal, minimum relief of $200 is authorized and the court may, in its discretion, award up to three times the actual damage.

Another new section added to the model law this year, is designed to eliminate the holder-in-due-course doctrine for consumer installment transactions. The section provides that a consumer's promisory note or other evidence of debt is different from ordinary commercial paper and if it is transfered to a finance company or other third party, the consumer may assert all the defences against the note holder that he would have asserted against the original seller or lessor of the goods or services. The Commission feels that eliminating the holder-in-due-course doctrine for consumer installment transactions will help to eliminate consumer deception and the hardships which consumers suffer as a result of high pressure selling methods.

The Council of State Governments has endorsed the draft recommended by the Commission with three changes:

1- in the prefatory explanation regarding the limitation of the holder-in-due-course doctrine, the Council added a footnote reminding state legislatures to consider this change in conjunction with the Uniform Consumer Credit Code;
2- in the civil damage section, the Council changed treble damages to punitive damages; and
3- the Council deleted the section which would have provided criminal penalties. This was done on the motion of a member who expressed the view that their inclusion would unduly complicate and delay investigation under the law, and that state criminal fraud laws are already more or less adequate, the great need being for a law which provides civil procedure and remedies.

Suggested Legislation

(Title should conform to state requirements. The following are some suggestions: "An Act to prohibit unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce"; "Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law"; or "Buyer Protection Act".)

(Be it enacted, etc.)

Section 1. Definitions.

As used in this Act,

(a) "Person" means natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entity.

(b) "Trade" and "commerce" mean the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and shall include any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this State.

(c) "Documentary material" means the original or a copy of any book, record, report, memorandum, paper, communication, tabulation, map, chart, photograph, mechanical transcription, or other tangible document or recording, wherever situate.

(d) "Examination" of documentary material shall include the inspection, study, or copying of any such material, and the taking of testimony under oath or acknowledgment in respect of any such documentary material or copy thereof.

Section 2. Unlawful acts or practices.

Alternative Form No. 1:

Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared unlawful.

Alternative Form No. 2:

False, misleading, or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared unlawful.

Alternative Form No. 3:

The following unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared to be unlawful:

(1) passing off goods or services as those of another;
(2) causing likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding as to the source, sponsorship, approval, or certification of goods or services;
(3) causing likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding as to affiliation, connection, or association with, or certification by, another;
(4) using deceptive representations or designations of geographic origin in connection with goods or services;
(5) representing that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities that they do not have or that a person has a sponsorship, approval, status, affiliation, or connection that he does not have;
(6) representing that goods are original or new if they are deteriorated, altered, reconditioned, reclaimed, used, or secondhand;
(7) representing that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another;
(8) disparaging the goods, services, or business of another by false or misleading representation of fact;
(9) advertising goods or services with intent not to sell them as advertised:
(10) advertising goods or services with intent not to supply reasonably expectable public demand, unless the advertisement discloses a limitation of quantity;
(11) making false or misleading statements of fact concerning the reasons for, existence of, or amounts of price reductions;
(12) engaging in any other conduct which similarly creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding; or
(13) engaging in any act or practice which is unfair or deceptive to the consumer.

Section 3. Interpretation.

(a) It is the intent of the legislature that in construing Section 2 of this Act due consideration and great weight shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts relating to Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(a)(1)), as from time to time amended; and

(b) The attorney general may make rules and regulations interpreting the provisions of Section 2 of this Act. Such rules and regulations shall not be inconsistent with the rules, regulations and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts in interpreting the provisions of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C., 45(a)(1)), as from time to time amended.

Section 4. Exemptions.

Nothing in this Act shall apply to:

(a) Actions or transactions permitted under laws administered by the state public service commission or other regulatory body or officer acting under statutory authority of this State or the United States (or the state fair trade law).

(b) Acts done by the publisher, owner, agent, or employee of a newspaper, periodical or radio or television station in the publication or dissemination of an advertisement, when the owner, agent or employee did not have knowledge of the false, misleading or deceptive character of the advertisement, did not prepare the advertisement, and did not have a direct financial interest in the sale or distribution of the advertised product or service.

Section 5. Restraining prohibited acts.

Whenever the attorney general has reason to believe that any person is using, has used, or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by Section 2 of this Act to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest, he may bring an action in the name of the State against such person to restrain by temporary or permanent injunction the use of such method, act or practice, upon the giving of appropriate notice to that person. The notice must state generally the relief sought and be served in accordance with Section 13 of this Act and at least three (3) days before the hearing of the action. The action may be brought in the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) in which such person resides or has his principal place of business, or, with consent of the parties, may be brought in the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) in which the State Capitol is located. The said courts are authorized to issue temporary or permanent injunctions to restrain and prevent violations of this Act, and such injunctions shall be issued without bond.

Section 6. Additional public relief.

The court may make such additional orders or judgments as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any moneys or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of any practice in this Act declared to be unlawful, including the appointment of a receiver or the revocation of a license or certificate authorizing that person to engage in business in this state, or both.

Section 7. Powers of receiver.

When a receiver is appointed by the court pursuant to this Act, he shall have the power to sue for, collect, receive and take into his possession all the goods and chattels, rights and credits, moneys and effects, lands and tenements, books, records, documents, papers, choses in action, bills, notes and property of every description, derived by means of any practice declared to be illegal and prohibited by this Act, including property with which such property has been mingled if it cannot be identified in kind because of such commingling, and to sell, convey, and assign the same and hold and dispose of the proceeds thereof under the direction of the court. Any person who has suffered damages as a result of the use of employment of any unlawful practices and submits proof to the satisfaction of the court that he has in fact been damaged, may participate with general creditors in the distribution of the assets to the extent he has sustained out-of-pocket losses. In the case of a partnership or business entity, the receiver shall settle the estate and distribute the assets under the direction of the court. The court shall have jurisdiction of all questions arising in such proceedings and may make such orders and judgments therein as may be required.

Section 8. Private and class actions.

(a) Any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by another person of a method, act or practice declared unlawful by Section 2 of this Act, may bring an action under rules of civil procedure in the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) in which the seller or lessor resides or has his principal place of business or is doing business, to recover actual damages or $200 whichever is greater. The court may, in its discretion, award up to three times the actual damages sustained and may provide such equitable relief as it deems necessary or proper.

(b) Persons entitled to bring an action under subsection (a) of this Section may, if the unlawful method, act or practice has caused similar injury to numerous other persons similarly situated and if they adequately represent such similarly situated persons, bring an action on behalf of themselves and other similarly injured and situated persons to recover damages as provided for in subsection (a) of this Section. In any action brought under this Section, the court may in its discretion order, in addition to damages, injunctive or other equitable relief.

(c) Upon commencement of any action brought under subsection (a) of this Section the clerk of court shall mail a copy of the complaint or other initial pleading to the attorney general and, upon entry of any judgment or decree in the action, shall mail a copy of such judgment or decree to the attorney general.

(d) In any action brought by a person under this Section, the court may award, in addition to the relief provided in this Section, reasonable attorney's fees and costs.

(e) Any permanent injunction, judgment or order of the court made under Section five of this Act shall be prima facie evidence in an action brought under Section eight of this Act that the respondent used or employed a method, act or practice declared unlawful by Section two of this Act.

Section 9. Non-negotiability of consumer paper.

(a) If any contract for sale or lease of consumer goods or services on credit entered into between a retail seller and a retail buyer requires or involves the execution of a promissory note or instrument or other evidence of indebtedness of the buyer, such note, instrument or evidence of indebtedness shall have printed on the face thereof the words "consumer paper," and such note, instrument or evidence of indebtedness with the words "consumer paper" printed thereon shall not be a negotiable instrument within the meaning of the Uniform Commercial Code -- Commercial Paper.

(b) Notwithstanding the absence of such notice on a note, instrument or evidence of indebtedness arising out of a consumer credit sale or consumer lease as described in this Section, an assignee of the rights of the seller or lessor is subject to all claims and defenses of the buyer or lessee against the seller or lessor arising out of the sale or lease. Any agreement to the contrary shall be of no force or effect in limiting the rights of a consumer under this Section. The assignee's liability under this Section may not exceed the amount owing to the assignee at the time the claim or defense is asserted against the assignee. Failure to imprint the words "consumer paper" on such note, instrument or evidence of indebtedness shall subject the seller or other responsible person to appropriate civil and criminal sanctions as provided in this Act.

Section 10. Assurances of voluntary compliance.

In the administration of this Act, the attorney general may accept an assurance of voluntary compliance with respect to any method, act or practice deemed to be violative of the Act from any person who has engaged or was about to engage in such method, act or practice. Any such assurance shall be in writing and be filed with and subject to the approval of (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) in which the alleged violator resides or has his principal place of business, or the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) in which the State Capitol is located. Such assurance of voluntary compliance shall not be considered an admission of violation for any purpose. Matters thus closed may at any time be reopened by the attorney general for further proceedings in the public interest, pursuant to Section 5.

Section 11. Investigation.

(a) When it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in, is engaging in, or is about to engage in any act or practice declared to be unlawful by this Act, or when he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in, is engaging in or is about to engage in, any act or practice declared to be unlawful by this Act, he may execute in writing and cause to be served upon any person who is believed to have information, documentary material or physical evidence relevant to the alleged or suspected violation, an investigative demand requiring such person to furnish, under oath or otherwise, a report in writing setting forth the relevant facts and circumstances of which he has knowledge, or to appear and testify or to produce relevant documentary material or physical evidence for examination, at such reasonable time and place as may be stated in the investigative demand, concerning the advertisement, sale or offering for sale of any goods or services or the conduct of any trade or commerce that is the subject matter of the investigation.

(b) At any time before the return date specified in an investigative demand, or within twenty days after the demand has been served, whichever period is shorter, a petition to extend the return date, or to modify or set aside the demand, stating good cause, may be filed in the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) where the person served with the demand resides or has his principal place of business or in the (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) where the State Capitol is located.

Section 12. Subpoenas, hearings, rules and regulations.

To accomplish the objectives and to carry out the duties prescribed by this Act, the attorney general, in addition to other powers conferred upon him by this Act, may issue subpoenas to any person, administer an oath or affirmation to any person, conduct hearings in aid of any investigation or inquiry, prescribe such forms and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary, which rules and regulations shall have the force of law; provided that none of the powers conferred by this Act shall be used for the purpose of compelling any natural person to furnish testimony or evidence which might tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; and provided further that information obtained pursuant to the powers conferred by this Act shall not be made public or disclosed by the attorney general or his employees beyond the extent necessary for law enforcement purposes in the public interest.

Section 13. Service of notice, demand or subpoena.

Service of any notice, demand or subpoena under this Act shall be made personally within this State, but if such cannot be obtained, substituted service therefor may be made in the following manner:

(a) Personal service thereof without this State; or

(b) The mailing thereof by registered or certified mail to the last known place of business, residence or abode within or without this State of such person for whom the same is intended; or

(c) As to any person other than a natural person, in the manner provided in the (rules of civil procedure) as if a (complaint or other pleading which institutes a civil proceeding) had been filed; or

(d) Such service as a (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) may direct in lieu of personal service within this State.

Section 14. Enforcement of investigative demands.

If any person fails or refuses to file any statement or report, or obey any subpoena or investigative demand issued by the attorney general, the attorney general may, after notice, apply to a (trial court of general jurisdiction of the county or judicial district) and, after hearing thereon, request an order:

(a) Granting injunctive relief to restrain the person from engaging in the advertising or sale of any merchandise or the conduct of any trade or commerce that is involved in the alleged or suspected violation;

(b) Vacating, annulling, or suspending the corporate charter of a corporation created by or under the laws of this State or revoking or suspending the certificate of authority to do business in this State of a foreign corporation or revoking or suspending any other licenses, permits or certificates issued pursuant to law to such person which are used to further the allegedly unlawful practice; and

(c) Granting such other relief as may be required, until the person files the statement or report, or obeys the subpoena or investigative demand.

Any disobedience of any final order entered under this Section by any court shall be punished as a contempt thereof.

Section 15. Civil and criminal penalties.

(a) Any person who violates the terms of an injunction issued under Section 5 of this Act shall forfeit and pay to the State a civil penalty of not more than twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00) per violation. For the purposes of this Section, the (trial court of general jurisdiction of a county or judicial district) issuing an injunction shall retain jurisdiction, and the cause shall be continued, and in such cases the attorney general acting in the name of the State may petition for recovery of civil penalties.

(b) In any action brought under Section 5 of this Act, if the court finds that a person is willfully using or has willfully used a method, act or practice declared unlawful by Section 2 of this Act, the attorney general, upon petition to the court, may recover, on behalf of the State, a civil penalty of not exceeding two thousand dollars ($2,000.00) per violation.

(c) Any person who engages in a fraudulent course of conduct declared unlawful by Section 2 of this Act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; provided that nothing in this subsection shall limit any other provision of this Act.

(d) For purposes of this Section, a willful violation occurs when the party committing the violation knew or should have known that his conduct was a violation of Section 2 of this Act.

Section 16. Forfeiture of corporate franchise.

Upon petition by the attorney general, the (trial court of general jurisdiction of a county or judicial district) may, in its discretion, order the dissolution or suspension or forfeiture of franchise of any corporation which violates the terms of any injunction issued under Section 5 of this Act.

Section 17. Duties of County and City attorneys.

It shall be the duty of the County and City attorneys to lend to the attorney general such assistance as the attorney general may request in the commencement and prosecution of actions pursuant to this Act, or, the County or City attorney with prior approval of the attorney general may institute and prosecute actions hereunder in the same manner as provided for the attorney general; provided that if an action is prosecuted by a County or City attorney alone, he shall make a full report thereon to the attorney general, including the final disposition of the matter.

Section 18. Severability.

If any provision of this Act is declared unconstitutional, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the constitutionality of the remainder of the Act and the applicability thereof to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Section 19. Effective date.

(Insert effective date.)

PROPOSALS FOR STIMULATING COMPETITION AS AN AID TO LOW-INCOME CONSUMERS IN THE INNER CITIES

Studies conducted by the Federal Trade Commission indicate that low-income consumers in the inner cities pay more for food, furniture, clothing and other necessaries, due in large part to lack of competition among retailers in those areas.[1/] The Commission is convinced that to break the cycle of poverty and despair in these areas, one important corrective action needed is the restoration of competition which would give these consumers opportunity to purchase quality goods at fair prices.

Competition in the low-income market areas of the inner cities can and must be revived by encouraging new entry of business firms and by improving the efficiency of firms now there.

The Federal Trade Commission accordingly recommends that the appropriate agencies of Federal, State and local government take action designed to stimulate competition in low-income areas of the inner cities. The following specific proposals are made:

(1) That subsidies, low-cost loans, insurance guarantees or tax incentives be granted to firms entering the low-income market, including special incentives for the local resident who wishes to start a business in the low-income market;

(2) That existing management and clerical training programs for residents of low-income areas be expanded and new ones established;

(3) That educational programs for low-income market retailers be established to enable them to run their businesses more economically and efficiently and to pass the savings on to consumers;

(4) That improved and expanded educational programs be designed to stimulate the low-income consumer to comparison shop, to seek reasonable credit terms, and generally to allocate his scant resources more wisely, and to look for assistance instead of remaining silent when he is bilked;

(5) That the feasibility of federally financed (or private) insurance programs to protect from undue losses retailers extending low-cost credit to residents of low-income areas be investigated.

The Commission believes that immediate and dramatic steps like these are necessary if vigor is to be restored to the low-income market and if low-income consumers are to be assured the same benefits of competition that their affluent neighbors take for granted.

SEPA.. E STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER MACINTYRE

Subject: Council of State Governments -- Federal Trade Commission's Suggestions for State Legislation Regarding Holder-in-Due-Course Doctrine.

It is my view that the Commission, before making a recommendation on this particular subject, should await its analysis, review, and consideration of the record of its National Consumer Protection Hearing.

Therefore, I am reserving my judgment and decision on this subject until the consideration of it is completed as I have indicated and the Commission makes a report on its Consumer Protection Hearing.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Section 45.50.501 - POWERS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

(a) The attorney general may make rules and regulations interpreting the provisions of Section 45.50.481 of this act. Such rules and regulations shall not be inconsistent with the rules, regulations and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts in interpreting the provisions of Section 5 (a) (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C., 45 (a) (1)), as from time to time amended.

(b) It is the intent of the legislature that in construing Section 45.50.481 of this act due consideration and great weight shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts relating to Section 5(a) (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45 (a) (1)), as from time to time amended; and

(c) In any action instituted under this act it shall be an absolute defense to show that the challenged practices are subject to, and comply with statutes administered by the Federal Trade Commission, or any rules, regulations or decisions interpreting the substantive law of such statutes.

Alaska Retail Association

Section 45.50.550 - PRIVATE AND CLASS ACTIONS

When any person in any action brought by the attorney general under section 45.50.520 of this title, has been enjoined from committing any act or practice, whether after final adjudication or by consent decree; any person claiming to have been adversely affected by the act or practice giving rise to such injunction may bring suit and recover actual damages, and the costs of suit, including reasonable attorneys' fees, and when appropriate additional damages, restitution, reformation, rescission and other equitable relief.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO CSSB 90

Section 45.50.471. DECEPTIVE TRADE PRACTICES DEFINED.

(a) A person engages in a deceptive trade practice when in the course of business, vocation or occupation, he knowingly:

(1) falsely passes off property or a service as that of another;

(2) makes a false representation as to the source, sponsorship, approval or certification of property or services;

(3) makes a false representation as to his affiliation, connection or association with, or certification by another;

(4) uses deceptive representations or designations of geographic origin in connection with property or services;

(5) makes a false representation as to the characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, alterations or quantities of property or services, or a false representation as to the sponsorship, approval, status, affiliation or connection of a person with the property or services;

(6) represents that a property is original or new if it is not;

(7) represents that a property or service is of a particular standard, quality or grade, or that a property is of a particular style or model, if he knows or should know that it is of another;

(8) disparages the property, services or business of another by false or misleading representation of fact;

(9) advertises property or services with intent not to sell the property or services as advertised;

(10) advertises property or services with the intent not to supply reasonably expectable public demand, unless the advertisement discloses a limitation of quantity;

(11) advertises under the guise of obtaining sales personnel when in fact the primary purpose is to first sell property or services to the sales personnel applicant; or

(12) makes false or misleading statements of fact concerning the price of property or services, or the reasons for, existence of, or amounts of price reductions.

(b) The deceptive trade practices set out in this section are in addition to and do not limit the types of unfair trade practices actionable at common law or under the laws of this state.

Sec. 45.50.491. EXCEPTIONS TO THE PROHIBITED TRADE PRACTICES.

The provisions of secs. 471 - 580 of this chapter do not apply to

(1) actions or transactions permitted under laws administered by a regulatory body or officer acting under the laws of this state or the United States; or

(2) acts by any person in the publication or dissemination of an advertisement, supplied by another when the person has no knowledge of the false, misleading, or deceptive character of the advertisement.

Sec. 45.50.550 LIABILITY FOR ACTIONS OF EMPLOYEE.

The provisions of this chapter apply to a person whose employees engage in deceptive trade practices in the course of and scope of employment with said person under sec. 431 of this chapter.

New section - fit in toward the end of the bill

Sec. _____. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. No action may be brought under this act more than one year after discovery of the unlawful conduct which is the subject of the suit.

Certain sections should be renumbered to conform to changes in section numbers.

STATEMENT OF RANDOLF H. AIRES BEFORE
ALASKA HOUSE COMMERCE COMMITTEE
CONCFRNING S.B. 352 AND RELATED BILLS

I am Randolf H. Aires, an attorney in the Pacific Coast Legal Department of Sears, Roebuck and Co. I appreciate the opportunity to appear before your Committee, both on behalf of my company and on behalf of the Alaska Retail Association, to express the retailing industry's concerns with all three consumer protection bills before your Committee and with CSSB 352 in particular.

The retail industry, which acts as the purchasing agent for the consumer, believes that the interests of its customers are paramount. The words "consumer protection" are magic words these days, and we believe that the honest and legitimate merchants in your communities have a lot to gain from good consumer legislation. Thus we support and will continue to support good and reasonable consumer legislation.

You know, we are all consumers, and I am still young enough to remember painfully how I was taken advantage of as a young newly married person, before going to law school, by a door-to-door salesman with a glib line and plenty of high pressure. The misrepresentations he made really hit me the morning after we signed the contract, and I wish that a law such as your door-to-door solicitation bill being considered here tonight would have been available to me then, so that I could have rescinded that sale.

Your proposed door-to-door solicitation law is just one of twenty significant consumer protection features contained in the Uniform Consumer Credit Code, presently before the Alaska Legislature. We support the UCCC and we hope that it will be studied seriously some time later in the year.

Now, in these three consumer protection acts before you, we're dealing with deceptive trade practices. The twelve enumerated practices in CSSB 352 are practices which we feel should be dealt with in proper legislation.

We believe that a customer who feels he has been defrauded, and who cannot obtain satisfaction through the normal complaint procedure is entitled to a remedy. President Nixon's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs, Mrs. Virginia Knauer, who has received so much publicity recently, has pointed out that the remedy should be "convenient, expeditious, and effective."

We submit that the consumer class action provision contained in CSSB 352 and H.B. 446 would not provide that type of remedy to the consumer. We believe that indiscriminate class action legislation will create more evils than it will remedy.

Class actions do not result in a speedy and efficient determination of claims. Ask any attorney who has been involved with one. On the contrary, notice requirements, unwieldly pre-trial procedures required when there are numerous litigants, protracted trials, difficult damages determinations, and a heavy burden of management which is placed on the courts, all lead to excessively long and complex proceedings benefitting only the lawyers. I know that you are attempting to deal with the problem of overburdened courts in Alaska this year.

Up to now, courts all over the country have been reluctant to permit traditional class actions, under the existing restrictive rules of civil procedure and court rules allowing class actions, because these actions are likely to benefit practically nobody other than the lawyers who bring them and because they often create lawsuits without merit where none would have previously existed.

Now we have this new approach which has appeared on the scene - the proposed statutory consumer class action. It first came on the scene last year in the Federal Congress with people such as Senator Tidings championing it. This year we are seeing it at the state legislative level. To my knowledge no state has passed a consumer class action law so far this session.

What are the dangers as we see them with the consumer class action? It is relatively simple for an enterprising attorney (there are many) to marshall an expansive list of plaintiffs through the class action notice provision. You can develop hundreds and thousands of unknown clients just like that. The potential of high legal fees will cause many attorneys to bring unwarranted class actions relating to technical violations of law and against innocent businessmen. The class action might be brought against a businessman who would be willing to resolve, on an informal basis, a valid claim of a consumer. But when maybe only one out of the hundreds or thousands who might be in the so called "class" has a valid claim and the others don't, how could you possibly settle with the lawyer representing the amorphous class?

Add to this the fact that in your bills before you, each so called "injured person" will recover at least two hundred dollars. There is no certainty concerning this provision, but there is the possible interpretation that the two hundred dollar minimum for each person applies to the consumer class action as well as to the private individual action. If this is true, even the people with valid claims may be damaged only in the amount of several dollars, and yet each person in the class would be asking for two hundred dollars or more, whether they have a valid claim or not. It doesn't take much imagination to see the potential for severe harassment against the legitimate retailer under these conditions.

In class actions such as these, the lawyer becomes less counsel and more the participating litigant and real party in interest, because the financial interest of the attorney for the class may be far more substantial than the interest of any member of the class.

We believe that consumer class actions could impose great economic consequences for the defendant. A class action, even if completely unwarranted, necessitates substantial time and expense in the preparation of a defense. This type of harassment could drive some completely honest small businessmen right out of business.

The astuve lawyer will obviously search for defendants who can be subjected to large damage recoveries rather than the judgment proof "fly-by-night" operators who prey upon the unsophisticated. Thats the tradgedy of this whole misguided concept of consumer class actions in bills such as are before you.

Here are some examples of technical violations which could be used against a legitimate enterprise in a consumer class action: an unintentional omission of an address in a guaranty form; a mistake in using the term "regular price" when an article was actually "originally" rather than "regularly" offered at such price; the designation of a product as "imported" but with the omission of the specific country of origin, even though such country produces goods of desirability to the consumers; the advertising of a television picture tube as "23 inch" without referring to it as a "diagonal measurement."

There has been no demonstrated need for a consumer class action statute, especially here in Alaska, as distinguished from other forms of remedies presently available. Before jumping into this type of legislation, we believe that experimentation and pilot programs involving other methods could be pursued.

Section 45.50.511 of CSSB 352, which gives the Attorney General basic powers, provides that the court may make any order or judgment necessary to restore to the individual money or property acquired because of a deceptive trade practice. So the court would be equipped to take care of the individual without the necessity of the individual bringing his own lawsuit.

Furthermore, small claims courts are available in Alaska for amounts up to $500.00 in damages, where the individual can go into court without the expense and need of an attorney.

The Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General's office should be available to a consumer who has been defrauded. There is increased emphasis being placed in this direction. In the State of Washington, there are presently three or four attorneys in the Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's office, doing their thing for the consumers, and they are quite active. We have no objection to this kind of strick enforcement at the governmental level.

The whole point of all of this is that much more study should be made of this whole area of how to give the consumer a fast and judicious remedy to take care of his small grievances, and it would be quite unwise, in our judgment, to pass this kind of legislation at this time.

We respectfully submit that if the Alaska Legislature is prepared and determined, however, to deal with this complex subject at this time, the best approach is that being followed by the Nixon Administration at the Federal level. That approach, put into effect at the state level, would involve your Attorney General and his staff, who would effectively prosecute violators of these deceptive trade practices, and if successful, the individual could bring his lawsuit based on the violation and get all the relief necessary from the court. We have given you a suggested amendment to this effect. This approach, we submit, would prevent the harassment from unwarranted private and class actions, and at the same time give the consumer who has a valid grievance his day in court.

Another proposed amendment which we have given to you deals with the rule making powers of the Attorney General under such a law as CSSB 352. Our concern in this area is that we don't feel that merchants should be subject to separate and possibly conflicting interpretations and rulings on what constitutes a deceptive trade practice and on any related matters. Deceptive trade practices listed in your bills, particularly in CSSB 352, are keyed into the Federal Trade Commission Act dealing with deceptive trade practices. We propose that it should be made clear that it is the intent of the Alaska Legislature that the construction of your act will depend in large part upon the interpretation of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts who have operated in this area for many years.

Further, we think it should be an absolute defense to an action brought under this act if it can be shown conclusively that the conduct complained of was authorized by the Federal Trade Commission or any rules, regulations or decisions interpreting the Federal Trade Commission Act. This is only fair.

We suggest that four other amendments be considered for Seven of the twelve defined deceptive trade practices have a requirement for intent or knowledge on the part of the person or company perpetrating the practice. It is difficult to know why this distinction has been made. We feel that all twelve defined practices should have this knowledge or intent requirement. The requirement is particularly necessary because some of those definitions are so broad and open to interpretation.

We suggest that the exception provided in Section 45.50.491 (2) should be extended to any person who merely uses some advertising matter which is supplied to him by his supplier, and not just to the newspaper, radio and television people.

We feel that it is only reasonable that a statute of limitations be placed in this bill or any other bill of this nature, granting a one year statute of limitations after the discovery of the unlawful conduct involved.

We recommend that Section 45.50.550 of CSSB 352, dealing with the liability for actions of employees, be clarified to state that the deceptive trade practice perpetrated by the employee would have to arise in the course of and in the scope of his employment with the employer. Otherwise, broadly read, this could apply to something the employee did when he wasn't working for his employer, such as on a moonlighting situation, or it could apply to something which the employee did without any authority, or in connection with some type of activity not in the scope of his assigned duties.

With the adoption of the amendments which we have recommended and given to you, we could support CSSB 352. If H.B. 444 and H.B. 446 are considered by the House, our comments concerning CSSB 352 will apply with equal force to those bills. Further, we would want some other minor modifications to H.B. 444, and we feel that H.B. 446 would have to be drastically changed before we could support it. In particular, I refer to the sections in H.B. 446 dealing with the Attorney General's regulations, the powers of receivership, the forfeiture of the corporate franchise, and the civil and criminal penalties provided therein.

Since you are also considering tonight H.B. 411 and S.B. 188, I would like to state that we are in favor of both of these consumer bills.

Thank you. I will be glad to try to answer any questions you may have.

Barry:

Your HCS for SB 239 is attached. I made the two changes we discussed earlier this morning. In addition, I put the whole thing in a separate chapter in Title 11, ~~X~~ and I deleted "or organization" from the phrase "person or organization" several places because that is taken care of in the definition of "person" in AS 01.10.060(7).

I don't know why a minimum ~~x~~ imprisonment is specified in proposed AS 11.22.050(a), 070(b), 080(b),090(b) and 100(a). It isn't necessary in order to make the crime a felony, the effect of specifying the minimum can be avoided by suspending part of the sentence, and the statement of it implies a legislative intent to limit judicial discretion in sentencing.

Also, it looks to me like the list in proposed AS 11.22.080(a) should read "stolen, forged, expired or revoked", especially since there is a reference to secs. 10 -- 60.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SENATOR PHILLIPS INTRODUCES CONSUMER PROTECTION BILL TO DISCOURAGE FRAUDULENT USE OF CREDIT CARDS

JUNEAU, ALASKA -- A credit card crime act designed to protect credit card holders in Alaska from fraud will be introduced in the current session of the legislature by Senator Vance Phillips (R) of (hometown). The proposed legislation is needed and timely, Senator Phillips said, because the growing use of credit cards in today's economy is rapidly making obsolete the existing outdated state laws by which fraudulent users are punished for their crimes.

Laws similar to that proposed for Alaska by Senator Phillips have been adopted, in recent months, by California, Florida, Virginia, New Jersey, North Carolina and Mississippi, and are being introduced in current legislative sessions in many other states, among them New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Indiana, Georgia, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Arizona, New Hampshire, New Mexico, and Washington.

They are based on a model credit card act drafted over a year ago by a team of researchers at Columbia University Law School, on a grant from American Express Company. The Columbia Law research team examined the statutes of all 50 states with respect to their punishment of credit card crimes and found them, for the most part, inadequate and out of date.

(more)

According to Senator Phillips, the current credit card popularity is a post-World War II phenomenon of huge dimensions, involving a tremendous number of transactions in credit buying by consumers for goods and services from airlines, banks, oil companies, restaurants, hotels and motels, department stores, and many other businesses. A credit card is, in effect, sort of a continuing "letter of credit", the Senator pointed out. Since these convenient little cards potentially can represent vast amounts of consumer buying power, it is imperative that those who own them are protected. Under antiquated laws presently on the books in most states, Senator Phillips said, the theft or other fraudulent possession or use of a credit card is punishable only as a misdemeanor, implying nothing more than the intrinsic value of the plastic rectangle -- in other words, a penny or two. This, he said, is tantamount to a $1,000 bill being worth only the paper it's printed on.

In citing the tremendous rise in credit card buying in the U.S., and thus to underscore his growing concern for adequate legislation to protect the many legitimate cardholders in this state, Senator Phillips cited these facts:

1. There are currently over 200 million credit cards issued in the U.S. annually, and the figure increases by approximately 25% each year.

2. Credit card losses are estimated currently at about $50 million per year, and this is pure guesswork. Many authorities, however, view this figure as far below $50 million [illegible], perhaps by as much as double the amount.

3. Losses are sustained by gasoline companies, retail establishments, banks, airlines, auto rentals, and major national "travel and entertainment" credit card companies (American Express, Diners Club, etc.) and their customers.

4. The principal perpetrators of frauds, according to police authorities, are (a) individual criminals, (b) organized crime. In the case of individual fraud, credit cards are usually stolen or picked up when lost and then used illegally for direct purchases.

5. Over the past few years, organized crime appears to have moved into the credit racket generally in a major way. Cards are stolen (sometimes even on order) by criminals in jobs where they serve the public, and sold quickly to syndicate outlets for relatively large ($50 - $250) amounts of money. The crime organisation then transfers the cards to its "agents", who use them to purchase expensive airline tickets and other merchandise and services for fast re-sale to third parties.

6. Many major cities and their law enforcement agencies have entered into cooperative agreements on credit card fraud investigation and apprehension. Local police and District Attorneys' offices work closely with credit card companies' investigation and security departments, such as the American Express security force headed by Milton Lipson, a former Secret Service agent ho directs the work of 300 investigators and staff personnel around the world.

7. Department stores, which generally absorb credit (or charge) card losses, are also heavily hit. Here prosecution is particularly difficult, since a high percentage of these credit card frauds are actually committed by relatives of the card holder. Some department stores will pay a reward -- to persons other than their own personnel -- for the return of stolen credit cards. For instance, one big New York store pays $25 apiece for its returned stolen cards -- no questions asked.

8. What the credit card theif can expect from American Express, they claim, is swift prosecution. The company makes it a policy to carry all cases through to the courts. One cannot get out of an indictment involving

8. (continued)

American Express credit cards simply by paying off the amount of the fraud. However, both companies do offer rewards to service establishments who pick up lost or stolen credit cards from illegal users. American Express, for example, offers anywhere from $25 to $100 for cards returned by retail establishments, and can go even higher when a conviction results. This practice helps to take such cards out of circulation, and generally sharpens the awareness of establishments to credit card fraud attempts.

9. American Express and Diners Club emphasize that their security forces are in existence solely for the protection of their customers. Neither company's security force plays any part in checking or investigating the credit of valid card holders or applicants.

10. Corrective measures recommended by most issuers of credit cards are: a) Improved laws to tighten the loopholes in current statutes and interstate regulations; b) Faster communications between businessmen, credit card companies and law enforcement agencies; c) Better credit card care by card holders.

11. The Senator's proposed legislation will help improve the state's laws; the credit card industry is at work on faster intercommunication; and to ensure better care by cardholders, he recommends the fo'lowing procedures:

a. Keep them on your person -- don't leave them lying around, any more than you'd be careless about cash.

b. Check frequently to make sure you have all your cards in your possession. If one is missing, report its loss immediately to the issuer -- first by phone or wire, then by letter.

c. Keep a record of all numbers and issuers of cards, in order to hasten and simplify reporting a loss.

d. Screen your cards. Decide which ones are valuable enough to serve most of your needs. Destroy those that you really don't need or could lead to trouble for you if lost or stolen.

e. Destroy outdated or unwanted cards by cutting them in half.

f. Always make sure your card is returned after you've made a purchase with it.

Dear Senator Phillips,

Re: State Credit Card Crime Act - Alaska

Mr. Jack Fones has asked me to review the draft of the Bill which you sent to him.

The draft provides general proscriptions of the variety of credit card abuses that have been the center of massive criminal activities for many years. I think that the enactment of such legislation would greatly benefit the citizens of Alaska. I see from the draft you have omitted the Presumptions which are an important aspect of the Model Act. I would like to suggest that the Presumptions be added to the following Sections:

Add to Section 11.20.710. "A person who has in his possession or under his control credit cards issued in the names of two or more other persons is presumed to have violated this section".

Add to Section 11.20.770. "A person who possesses two or more credit cards which are so signed is presumed to have violated this section".

Add a new section which would define the importance of these Presumptions which would read: "When this Act establishes a Presumption with respect to any fact which s an element of a crime, it has the following consequences:

1. When there is sufficient evidence of the facts which give rise to the Presumption to go to the jury, the issue of the existence of the presumed fact must be submitted to the jury, unless the court is satisfied that the evidence as a whole clearly negatives the presumed fact; and

2. When the issue of the existence of the presumed fact is submitted to the jury, the court shall charge that while the presumed fact must, on all the evidence, be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the law declares that the jury may regard the facts giving rise to the Presumption as sufficient evidence of the presumed fact".

If there is anything that we at American Express Company or any of the others in the credit card industry can do to be of assistance to you in the promotion of this legislation, please feel free to contact me.

Yours very truly,

Rita Berkowitz

STATE CREDIT CARD CRIME ACT

SECTION 1. Definitions

(a) Cardholder. "Cardholder" means the person or organization named on the face of a credit card to whom or for whose benefit the credit card is issued by an issuer.

(b) Credit Card. "Credit card" means any instrument or device, whether known as a credit card, credit plate, or by any other name, issued with or without fee by an issuer for the use of the cardholder in obtaining money, goods, services or anything else of value on credit.

(c) Expired credit card. "Expired credit card" means a credit card which is no longer valid because the term shown on it has elapsed.

(d) Issuer. "Issuer" means the business organization or financial institution which issues a credit card or its duly authorized agent.

(e) Receives. "Receives" or "receiving" means acquiring possession or control or accepting as security for a loan.

(f) Revoked credit card. "Revoked credit card" means a credit card which is no longer valid because permission to use it has been suspended or terminated by the issuer.

SECTION 2. False statement as to financial condition or identity.

A person who makes or causes to be made, either directly or indirectly, any false statement in writing, knowing it to be false and with intent that it be relied on, respecting his identity or that of any other person, firm or corporation, or his financial condition or that of any other person, firm or corporation, for the purpose of procuring the issuance of a credit card, violates this section and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act.

SECTION 3. Theft of credit card by taking or retaining possession; theft of credit card lost, mislaid or delivered by mistake; purchase or sale of credit card; obtaining control of credit card as security for debt; dealing in credit cards of another; forgery of credit card; signing credit card of another.

(a) Theft by taking or retaining possession of card taken. A person who takes a credit card from the person, possession, custody or control of another without the cardholder's consent or who, with knowledge that it has been so taken, receives the credit card with intent to use it or to sell it, or to transfer it to a person other than the issuer or the cardholder is guilty of credit card theft and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act. Taking a credit card without consent includes obtaining it by conduct defined or known as statutory larceny, common law larceny by trespassory taking, common law larceny by trick, embezzlement, or obtaining property by false pretense, false promise or extortion.

A person who has in his possession or under his control credit cards issued in the names of two or more other persons is presumed to have violated this subsection.

(b) Theft of credit card lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. A person who receives a credit card that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the identity or address of the cardholder, and who retains possession with intent to use it or to sell it or to transfer it to a person other than the issuer or the cardholder is guilty of credit card theft and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act.

(c) Purchase or sale of credit card of another. A person other than the issuer who sells a credit card or a person who buys a credit card from a person other than the issuer violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act.

(d) Obtaining control of credit card as security for debt. A person who, with intent to defraud the issuer, a person or organization providing money, goods, services or anything else of value, or any other person, obtains control over a credit card as security for debt violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act.

(e) Dealing in credit cards of another.

A person, other than the issuer, who during any twelve-month period, receives credit cards issued in the names of two or more persons which he has reason to know were taken or retained under circumstances which constitute credit card theft or a violation of section 2 of this act or subsection (c) or (d) of this section violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act.

(f) Forgery of credit card. A person who, with intent to defraud a purported issuer, a person or organization providing money, goods, services or anything else of value, or any other person, falsely makes or falsely embosses a purported credit card or utters such a credit card is guilty of credit card forgery and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act. A person other than the purported issuer who possesses two or more credit cards which are falsely made or falsely embossed is presumed to have violated this subsection. A person "falsely makes" a credit card when he makes or draws, in whole or in part, a device or instrument which purports to be the credit card of a named issuer but which is not such a credit card because the issuer did not authorize the making or drawing, or alters a credit card which was validly issued. A person "falsely embosses" a credit card when, without the authorization of the named issuer, he completes a credit card by adding any of the matter, other than the signature of the cardholder, which an issuer requires to appear on the credit card before it can be used by a cardholder.

(g) Signing credit card of another.

A person other than the cardholder or a person authorized by him who, with intent to defraud the issuer, or a person or organization providing money, goods, services or anything else of value, or any other person, signs a credit card, violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act. A person who possesses two or more credit cards which are so signed is presumed to have violated this subsection.

SECTION 4. Fraudulent use of or representation of authority to use illegally obtained or illegally possessed credit card, forged credit card or revoked, expired or fictitious credit card.

A person, who, with intent to defraud the issuer, a person or organization providing money, goods, services or anything else of value, or any other person, (i) uses for the purpose of obtaining money, goods, services or anything else of value a credit card obtained or retained in violation of section 3 of this act or a credit card which he knows is forged, expired or revoked, or (ii) obtains money, goods, services or anything else of value by representing without the consent of the cardholder that he is the holder of a specified card or by representing that he is the holder of a card and such card has not in fact been issued, violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act, if the value of all money, goods, services and other things of value obtained in violation of this subsection does not exceed $500 in any six-month period; and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act, if such value does exceed $500 in any six-month period. Knowledge of revocation shall be presumed to have been received by a cardholder four days after it has been mailed to him at the address set forth on the credit card or at his last known address by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, and, if, the address is more than five hundred miles from the place of mailing, by air mail. If the address is located outside the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Canal Zone and Canada, notice shall be presumed to have been received ten days after mailing by registered or certified mail.

SECTION 5. Fraud by person authorized to provide goods or services.

(a) Illegally obtained or illegally possessed credit card; forged, revoked or expired credit card. A person who is authorized by an issuer to furnish money, goods, services or anything else of value upon presentation of a credit card by the cardholder, or any agent or employees of such person, who, with intent to defraud the issuer or the cardholder, furnishes money, goods, services or anything else of value upon presentation of a credit card obtained or retained in violation of section 3 of this act or a credit card which he knows is forged, expired or revoked violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act, if the value of all money, goods, services and other things of value furnished in violation of this subsection does not exceed $500 in any six-month period; and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act if such value does exceed $500 in any six-month period.

(b) Misrepresentation to issuer. A person who is authorized by an issuer to furnish money, goods, services or anything else of value upon presentation of a credit card by the cardholder, or any agent or employee of such person, who, with intent to defraud the issuer or the cardholder, fails to furnish money, goods, services or anything else of value which he represents in writing to the issuer that he has furnished violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act, if the difference between the value of all money, goods, services and anything else of value actually furnished and the value represented to the issuer to have been furnished does not exceed $500 in any six-month period; and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act if such difference does exceed $500 in any six-month period.

SECTION 6. Possession of machinery, plates or other contrivance or inomplete credit cards.

A person other than the cardholder possessing two or more incomplete credit cards, with intent to complete them without the consent of the issuer or a person possessing, with knowledge of its character, machinery, plates or any other contrivance designed to reproduce instruments purporting to be the credit cards of an issuer who has not consented to the preparation of such credit cards, violates this subsection and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (b) of section 10 of this act. A credit card is "incomplete" if part of the matter other than the signature of the cardholder, which an issuer requires to appear on the credit card, before it can be used by a cardholder, has not yet been stamped, embossed, imprinted or written on it.

SECTION 7. Receipt of money, goods, services or anything else of value obtained in violation of section 4.

A person who receives money, goods, services or anything else of value obtained in violation of section 4 of this act, knowing or believing that it was so obtained violates this section and is subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a) of section 10 of this act. A person who obtains at a discount price a ticket issued by an airline, railroad, steamship or other transportation company which was acquired in violation of section 4 of this act without reasonable inquiry to ascertain that the person from whom it was obtained had a legal right to possess it shall be presumed to know that such ticket was acquired under circumstances constituting a violation of section 4 of this act.

SECTION 8. Defenses not available.

In any prosecution for violation of this act, the state is not required to establish and it is no defense:

(i) that a person other than the defendant who violated this act has not been convicted, apprehended or identified; or

(ii) that some of the acts constituting the crime did not occur in this state or were not a crime or elements of a crime where they did occur.

SECTION 9. Presumptions.

When this act establishes a presumption with respect to any fact which is an element of a crime, it has the following consequences:

(i) when there is sufficient evidence of the facts which give rise to the presumption to go to the jury, the issue of the existence of the presumed fact must be submitted to the jury, unless the court is satisfied that the evidence as a whole clearly negatives the presumed fact; and

(ii) when the issue of the existence of the presumed fact is submitted to the jury, the court shall charge that while the presumed fact must, on all the evidence, be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the law declares that the jury may regard the facts giving rise to the presumption as sufficient evidence of the presumed fact.

SECTION 10. Penalties.

(a) One Year or $1000. A person who is subject to the penalties of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(b) Three years or $3000. A person who is subject to the penalties of this subsection shall be fined not more than $3,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

SECTION 11. Act not exclusive.

This act shall not be construed to preclude the applicability of any other provision of the criminal law of this state which presently applies or may in the future apply to any transaction which violates this act, unless such provision is inconsistent with the terms of this act.

SECTION 12. Severability.

If any provision of this act or its application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of the act which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this act are declared to be severable.

Notes to State Credit Card Crime Act

The notes which follow are descriptive of the proposed State Credit Card Crime Act. Extensive citations of the statutes and cases applicable to credit cards which were considered in drafting this act are set out in the accompanying memorandum on "Credit Card Frauds: The General Criminal Law", the "Tabular Analysis of American Criminal Law Statutes Specifically Covering Credit Cards," texts of the American credit card statutes, the summaries of reported state and federal criminal cases on credit cards and case abstracts.

SECTION 1. Definitions

(a) Cardholder. The cardholer is defined as the person or organization named on the credit card. It includes individual members or agents of a business organization who receive credit cards in their own names at the request of their company. A credit card issued to a named person at the request of his company is intended to be included as one issued at the request of the "cardholder" since the application for the card is made at his expressor implied "request." See subdivision (b) of this section.

(b) Credit Card.* The credit card is defined in the broadest way to include cards and tokens issued by the supplier of goods or services (often referred to as a two-party device) and cards and tokens issued by an issuer which does not itself supply the goods and services (often referred to as a three-party device). Examples of the former category are department store charge plates and credit cards issued by an airline; food or services are supplied by the issuer which bills the cardholder directly. Examples of the latter category include cards issued by American Express and Diners Club; the credit card is issued by one agency and is used by the cardholder to make purchases of goods and services at retail establishments listed in the issuer's directory or displaying its insignia; the seller of the goods sends vouchers signed by the cardholder to the issuer; the issuer reimburses the seller and bills the cardholder.

* As originally prepared the Act defined a credit card as one "issued at the request of the cardholder". Defined thusly, the Act would have been inapplicable to crimes committed through use of a credit card which had been issued without obtaining an application from the cardholder.

On further consideration it was decided to delete this requirement. The person who fraudulently uses a credit card does not know how that card was issued and is guilty of a crime in any event. He should not fortuitiously receive immunity from prosecution by virtue of the fact that the card he used was issued without application.

Should a legislature decide that credit cards should not be issued without an application, it should specifically legislate on this subject rather than create an inconsistency in the criminal law.

(c) Expired credit card. A cardholder should not be penalized for using an expired card unless he has actual knowledge of its expiration. The simplest and safest way to remind him is to place on the face of the credit card either the terms during which it will be effective (for example, 1966-67) or the specific date of expiration. Either will suffice. Credit cards which do not have a term shown on their face cannot be "expired" under this act, although they may be expired under other provisions of criminal or civil law. See section 11, supra, on lack of exclusivity of this act. A credit card without a term on its face can, under this act, be terminated by revocation, pursuant to subdivision (f), or by destruction.

(d) Issuer. This term covers both the two-party and three-party categories described in the notes to subdivision (b) of this section as well as authorized agents.

(e) Receives. This definition was designed to preclude judicial application of restrictive common law distinctions among the terms "acquisition of title," "possession," "custody" and "control" in defining the various kinds of credit card fraud which are the target of subsections (a), (d) and (e) of section 3. Such a broad approach is consistent with that of the Model Penal Code which states "that the essential idea sought to be expressed is acquisition of control whether in the sense of physical dominion or of legal power to dispose." American Law Institute, Model Penal Code, Tentative Draft No. 2, 94-95 (1954).

(f) Revoked credit card. Under this definition, a credit card can be revoked without notice, but its subsequent use does not in itself violate this act unless the user knew of the revocation. Where notice of revocation has been sent to the cardholder in the manner prescribed in section 4, he will, after the stated period, be presumed to know about the revocation. The effect of presumptions under this act is set forth in section 9, infra.

SECTION 2. False statement as to financial condition or identity.

Section 2 in substance duplicates criminal provisions adopted by a number of states. See, e.g., Ore. Rev. Stat. § 165.615. It is applicable without regard to whether or not the card has actually been issued. Perhaps its most significant aspect is the intentional omission from its coverage of a person who allegedly makes a false statement with respect to his "intent to pay." A substantial majority of the states have refused to hold that a false statement concerning future action (which is sometimes called a false promise) constitutes a fraudulent misrepresentation. Some ten jurisdictions, including California, have adopted the view that a present intention not to perform a promised future action should be punished as a misrepresentation of a material fact, namely the promisor's state of mind.

It cannot be denied that a misrepresentation of intent is a misrepresentation of a fact, state of mind. Nevertheless, for the purposes of this proposed credit card statute, such a misrepresentation is not made criminal. This restriction avoids the danger of a factfinder's improperly imputing a fraudulent state of mind to a person on the basis of his subsequent use of the card. The factfinder's inevitable temptation is to apply some kind of reasonable man standard. So, if the defendant has run up vast bills immediately after obtaining a credit card, he could be found guilty of defrauding the issuee. But in fact he may have simply been dazzled by his sudden ability to participate fully without ready cash in the affluent society. It is doubtful that a man should be subjected to criminal penalties because euphoria overcomes prudence. In any event, this is the kind of normal commercial risk which an issuer can guard against fairly effectively by careful credit checks. Section 2 is directed at the person who seeks to frustrate the issuer's effort to assure that the card is being placed in sober, safe hands.

Adoption of this proposed credit card statute would not affect the applicability to credit card matters of general statutes covering misrepresentations of present intention in the states which follow the minority rule. See section 11, infra, on lack of exclusivity of this act.

SECTION 3. Theft of credit card by taking or retaining possession; theft of credit card lost, mislaid or delivered by mistake; purchase or sale of credit card; obtaining control of credit card as security for debt; dealing in credit cards of another; forgery of credit card; signing credit card of another.

(a) Theft by taking or retaining possession of card taken. This subsection is directed against a wide range of unlawful activities which fall within a variety of traditional criminal law categories. The object is to avoid the many technical distinctions among various types of larcenous activity that have evolved over the centuries and have more than once provided lacunae through which the criminal is able to slip after apprehension. More specifically, it eliminates all distinctions based on the location of legal title or the identity of the party deprived of possession or control. It should also be noted that larcenous intent - which is commonly an element of crimes against property - need not be proved for credit card theft. In the case of a taker, the prosecution only must prove the taking without consent; in the case of the receiver from the taker, the prosecution must establish receipt with knowledge of the unlawful taking and intent to use, sell or transfer the card.

Any state having a broad definition of larceny may substitute its inclusive term for the listing of common law crimes in this subsection. See, e.g., American Law Institute, Model Penal Code, Proposed Official Draft (1962), section 223.1; New York Penal Law, section 155.00 (effective September 1, 1967).

In terms of culpability, there seems no material difference between the following cases all of which fall within this subsection:

(i) X, a cardholder, gives his card to Y, a girl friend for her personal use. Y then sells the card to Z and tells X that her pocketbook was snatched. In most, if not all, jurisdictions, Y would be guilty of embezzlement; she is guilty under subsection (a). Z would in some states be a receiver of "stolen property." But in others, property obtained by embezzlement is not deemed "stolen". Z is guilty under subsection (a). Both Y and Z are also guilty under subsection (c).

(ii) Y picks the cardholder's pocket or burglarizes the cardholder's premises and obtains his credit card. This simple theft is covered by subsection (a).

(iii) If Y, a pickpocket or burglar who took the credit card from the cardholder's possession, transfers it to Z and Z knows it was acquired illegally, Z is guilty of credit card theft under subsection (a) if he had any intent to use the card. Since it is clear from the face of the card that X has no right to transfer it, Z's unexplained possession of a stolen credit card probably would permit the case to go to the jury on the issue of knowledge; some independent evidence of intent to use, sell or transfer would be required and it might be supplied by prior or subsequent criminal activities in connection with credit cards.

If Y or Z has in his possession credit cards issued in the names of two or more other persons, then the case will go to the jury even if the defendant has some explanation, unless a reasonable man would have to accept the explanation as precluding culpability. The effect of presumptions under this act is set forth in section 9, infra.

(b) Theft of credit card lost, mislaid or delivered by mistake.

In its purpose and reach, this subsection is modeled upon the equivalent provision, section 223.5, of the Model Penal Code. American Law Institute, Model Penal Code, Proposed Official Draft (1962). The draftsmen's comments with respect to that section are apposite here:

1. Assumption of Control Required.

Theft penalties are not imposed on persons who merely learn of the whereabouts of lost property but do not assume some control over it. If it is desirable to provide criminal sanctions to compel people to communicate helpful information to the owners of lost property, this should be done by separate legislation not carrying the moral imputation of theft and presumably with lower sanctions. Mere handling of a lost article for purposes of examination would not be an assumption of control within this section. The likelihood of restoration to the owner will often be increased rather than diminished by non-interference of casual finders.

2. Omission as Essence of the Crime.

Even though a finder may take possession with intent to keep the property from the owner, he is not liable to conviction under this section if within a reasonable time he acts to restore the property to the owner. Thus essentially finders are punished for failure to act rather than for an initial misappropriation.

Common law theory of larceny as an infringement of another's possession required a determination of the actor's state of mind at the moment of finding, for an honest state of mind at that point would preclude the felony conviction . . . .The realistic objective in this area is not to prevent the initial appropriation but to compel subsequent acts to restore to the owner. Therefore the section permits conviction even where the original taking was honest in the sense that the finder then intended to restore, but subsequently changed his mind; and it bars conviction where the finder acts with reasonable promptness to restore the property, even though he may have entertained a fraudulent purpose at some time during his possession.

3. Negligent Failure to Restore Not Theft.

Statutes dealing with theft by finders commonly refer to failure to take measures to restore where there is reasonable means of identifying or locating the owner, without expressly requiring the actor to be aware of the reasonably available information or means...Section 206.5 [section 223.5 of Proposed Official Draft (1962)] is limited to purposeful omission to take steps to restore. No one should be punished as a thief merely because he stupidly or carelessly failed to follow a course of action which would have been apparent to another. American Law Institute, Model Penal Code, Tentative Draft No. 2, pp. 83-84 (1954).

The Model Penal Code has adopted a slightly harsher test than this proposed credit card statute in that it imposes liability for "failure to take reasonable measures to restore" as well as for intent to use. Because of proof problems, in practice the distinction is likely to be of limited significance.

(c) Purchase or sale of credit card of another.

This subdivision covers transfer of a credit card for consideration of any kind. Only wholly gratuitous transfers are exempted. There can be no lawful objective in buying a credit card from a person other than the issuer or in selling it. If the cardholder sells it, he does so with knowledge not merely that he is violating a contractual agreement, but that he is subjecting the issuer and an unpredictable number of merchants to potential liabilities which they have expressly sought to avoid by the issuer's evaluating the cardholder's credit prior to issuance of his credit card. Moreover, the person purchasing the card must either fear that he would be unable to obtain a card from the issuer or may intend to use the card in such a way that it would be awkward or dangerous for the issuer to know his true identity.

In this latter regard, subsection (c) is a complement of section 2. It would be anomalous to penalize a man for seeking to trick the issuer directly but to offer no deterrent to the man who, fearing that he will be unable to deceive the issuer, obtains a card by purchase from a party other than the issuer. In such a case, it is not unlikely that the card was obtained originally at the instance of the purchaser and that the card-holder was intended to serve merely as a conduit.

This subdivision section covers the return of a credit card to the issuer or cardholder in exchange for some consideration but does not apply to a reward given to a person who, for example, finds a card and returns it without demanding consideration.

(d) Obtaining control of credit card as security for debt. The characteristic person to whose activities this subsection applies is the unscrupulous factor or "loan shark" who, with fraudulent intent, forces a cardholder in serious financial straits to acquire goods with the card or to transfer the card to him. Compare the definition of extortion in subsection (a) which is broad enough to be interpreted to cover this subsection. See also the broad definition of "receives" in subsection (e) of section 1.

The problem is explicitly covered to give notice that this dangerous activity is criminal. A typical fact pattern is one in which the creditor permits the cardholder to retain possession of the credit card but compels him to purchase large quantities of goods for which he will not be able to pay the issuer and then either to turn the goods over to the creditor or to convert them into cash which the creditor then takes as partial or complete payment of the debt.

(e) Dealing in credit cards of another.

The fraudulent use of credit cards threatens to become a big and well organized business. Pickpockets and other thieves are encouraged to steal credit cards by the knowledge that they can be disposed of for ready cash, thus avoiding the risk, attendant on any attempted use, of apprehension by an observant merchant. The dealer is a particular threat to the efficacy of this important commercial device not merely because he encourages theft, but also because he is an expert in the use and disposal of credit cards and goods and services illegally obtained by means of their use. He will often be familiar with the uses which offer the least danger of apprehension and the maximum opportunity to secure valuable goods and services. Moreover, he will often be part of a highly developed organization which is capable of moving the card quickly from place to place to permit full exploitation before word of its loss has reached all merchants, and which also has facilities for disposing of goods so obtained.

In most states, statutes penalizing receiving or dealing in stolen goods require the prosecution to establish the dealer's actual knowledge that the goods were obtained by means of a larcenous taking. This does not seem inappropriate where there is a legitimate market in the goods; but there cannot be such a market for credit cards. Therefore this act merely requires the jury to find that the defendant had reason to know that the credit cards in his possession were taken or retained in violation of section 2 or by means of credit card theft. Again, because of the intrinsic illegitimacy of any traffic in credit cards, this subsection does not require the state to prove that the dealer or receiver intended to use or sell the credit cards over which he has obtained control.

For the reasons indicated above, the dealer is more dangerous to society (and, being a "business man", more susceptible to deterrence) than the man who picks pockets or snatches purses. Hence, even if a dealer also participates in the original taking, he should be subject to the more severe penalties of subsection (b) of section 10. See the notes to section 8, defenses not available, infra, for a discussion of culpability of a dealer defendant who is also a thief.

(f) Forgery of credit card.

Credit card forgery is normally an act of a professional criminal. An effective forgery requires careful preparation and some considerable skill. It is a substantial threat to commercial confidence. Hence the forger is a serious obstacle to the exchange of goods and services. But forgery can be profitable, so there must be ample deterrence.

A forger may produce a completely false credit card or he may alter a card that was actually issued. Both cases are covered by this subsection. Many issuers manufacture cards which are complete except for a few items which depend on the identity of the cardholder and the date of the card's issuance to him. Matter such as the name and address of the cardholder and the date of expiration will subsequently be embossed on the card after an application has been accepted and just prior to issuance. A fraudulent embossment consists of placing such matter on the face of cards without the consent of the issuer. Normally the cards will have been stolen from the issuer or its manufacturer where the issuer does not manufacture the cards itself.

It is possible that a man in possession of one falsely made or issued card could have found it or otherwise acquired it innocently. But it is extremely unlikely that a man in possession of two or more such cards is unconnected with their creation. Thus it seems highly reasonable to apply a presumption in such a case. The effect of presumptions under this act is set forth in section 9, infra.

Subsection (g). Signing credit card of another.

A principal means of obstructing the fraudulent use of a card is to provide space on the card for the signature of the cardholder and to require such signature as a pre-condition to its use. Some cardholders carelessly neglect to sign their cards. Other cards may, for one reason or another, never reach the cardholder. A person finding or otherwise coming into possession of an unsigned card is likely to recognize that for a time it will not be difficult to impersonate the real cardholder if he signs the cardholder's name in his own handwriting. Persons who sign with the intent to use the card to obtain goods and services are manifestly preparing to defraud either the issuer or the merchant from whom they propose to obtain goods and services; they should be subjected to criminal penalties. But in many instances they will not be professional criminals, but, rather, fairly ordinary men overcome by sudden temptation. Therefore, they are subject to the lesser penalties of subsection (a) of section 10.

SECTION 4. Fraudulent use of or represenation of authority to use illegally obtained or illegally possessed credit card, forged credit card or revoked, expired or fictitious credit card.

The section is designed to penalize use of cards obtained in violation of prior sections of the act. It also penalizes the practice of charging goods and services to the credit card of another by calling the party dispensing such goods and services and impersonating the legitimate holder.

Some false pretenses statutes appear to require that the fraudulent misrepresentations have been made to the party who will bear the ultimate loss as a consequence of the misrepresentation. A person, unlawfully using a credit card which is not issued by the merchant but by a third party (the "three-party" credit cards described in the notes to subdivision (b) of section 1), may thus evade criminal liability. This act rejects that distinction which seems to have evolved at a time when the three-party arrangement was not envisaged.

Statutes designed to protect the integrity of telephone credit cards are widespread. See, e.g., Hawaii Rev. Laws §309 B-1 (supp. 1965). Section 4 is designed to cover the case of a caller giving the telephone operator someone else's telephone credit card number or name or telephone number in order to have a call placed without paying for it.

Throughout this statute an attempt has been made to penalize more heavily the professional criminal. Here and in section 5 this distinction is expressed in terms of the quantity of goods and services obtained within a six-month period. It is, without doubt, a very rough rule of thumb; but it is consistent with the traditional manner of distinguishing the petty from the serious crime. Adequate discretion is granted the sentencing judge to meet the particular punishment needs of any defendant, see section 10, infra.

A presumption with respect to receipt of notice of revocation can be found in a number of existing credit card statutes. See, e.g., Idaho Code Ann. § 18-3117. The time periods specified, which must elapse before the presumption becomes effective, are at least as generous as those found in existing statutes. See, e.g., Ind. Ann. Stat. § 10-2132. The presumption itself rests on two related considerations: first, in the vast majority of cases, registered or certified letters are accepted and signed for by the person to whom they are addressed or someone in immediate contact with him; second, if the case prosecuted is one of those few exceptional instances where the card-holder received no notice, the cardholder is in a far better position to explain why he did not receive notice. For instance, if he shows that he had moved to a new address before the letter is presumed to have arrived or that he was traveling at the time of presumptive arrival, he would rebut the presumption.

It should be noted that the cardholder is not guilty under section 4 of illegally using a credit card which has been revoked if he had no intent to defraud. The definition of a presumption in section 9 would permit the court to dismiss the case if it were satisfied that a reasonable man would have to have a reasonable doubt that the defendant was aware of the revocation or that, if he were aware, that he had any intent to defraud. A verdict on these issues could never be directed in favor of the state. The effect of a presumption under this act as set forth in section 9, infra.

SECTION 5. Fraud by person authorized to provide goods or services.

Few, if any, credit card statutes manifest recognition that persons authorized by an issuer to provide goods and services on the strength of the issuer's card properly presented by a cardholder sometimes play a role in credit card frauds. Subsection (a) focuses on collusive arrangements between the merchant and a party using a credit card in violation of the provisions of section 4. Subsection (b) deals with a variety of recorded situations. Perhaps the most common one is the sales voucher which is altered or added to after the cardholder has signed. It is not unusual for the cardholder to sign before the voucher is completely filled in. This is particularly true of the tip, because some cardholders will pay the tip in cash. After a cardholder has signed, a waiter may simply fill in the blank in a manner he deems appropriately generous.

Another problem may arise in the case of the merchant who is on the edge of bankruptcy. In order to raise cash quickly, he may attempt to sell each article in the store several times. To do so he may obtain the assistance of one or two friends with credit cards. They will sign a sales slip but will not receive the stipulated goods or services. Then they will report that their card was lost or stolen. The goods will meanwhile be sold to another party. In this manner their value is effectively doubled or tripled. Another dangerous scheme is to imprint several sales slips with the card of an unsuspecting cardholder. After he leaves, the merchant may fill in the slips and forge the cardholder's signature. It is sought to distinguish, by means of different penalties, between the petty abuse and sustained unlawful activity. See the discussion of grading of penalties in the notes to section 4.

SECTION 6. Possession of machinery, plates or other contrivance or incomplete credit cards.

Section 6 permits the indictment of forgers who are caught before they are able to consummate their plans for manufacture and distribution. Since forgery includes the unauthorized completion of cards that were manufactured by the issuer, a necessary step in certain conspiracies to forge is the acquisition of incomplete cards. Since, as one would expect, incomplete cards are very carefully safeguarded by issuers, possession of two or more of such cards by one other than an agent of the issuer is a natural basis for grave suspicion and gives rise to a presumption. The effect of a presumption under this act is set forth in section 9, infra.

SECTION 7. Receipt of money, goods, services or anything else of value obtained in violation of section 4.

Section 7 is the natural complement of section 4.

A well-organized conspiracy for the fraudulent use of a credit card will normally have as its objective the conversion of large quantities of valuable goods into cash. Such a plan requires a receiver who is prepared to avoid asking awkward questions as consideration for an unusually attractive price.

Probably the most massive conspiracy involving credit cards is directed towards the procurement and sale of transportation services. The following is a typical case. A credit card is stolen in a Los Angeles hotel room and turned over to a dealer. His agent immediately takes the card to the airport and procures thousands of dollars worth of tickets from different airlines. Card and tickets may then be flown to New York where another spate of ticket buying occurs. Although tickets purchased with credit cards cannot be exchanged for cash, they can be exchanged for tickets to other destinations. In New York and certain other cities it is known in some quarters that discount tickets can be obtained by dialing a given number. Sale is normally effected unobtrusively in a bar or other public place. It appears that in many states a person acquiring such tickets under these circumstances has no obligation to inquire as to their source and the basis for the very great discount offered. The circumstances are sufficiently suspicious to justify an obligation of reasonable inquiry.

SECTION 8. Defenses not available.

Persons accused of being receivers or dealers in stolen property, and persons accused of other activities illegal under this act, have sometimes raised one of the contentions which are listed in sub-paragraph (i) as invalid defenses. The state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the credit card was obtained under circumstances which constitute a violation of this act to prosecute a receiver of the card under section (a) of section 3 or a dealer under subsection (e) of section 3. To require, in addition, that the state have apprehended, identified, or convicted the thief or embezzler before it can prosecute the dealer would be absurd. It would be equivalent to holding that because one member of a conspiracy has escaped--for example, by fleeing the jurisdiction--it would be unsporting to try his confederates.

A defendant could not claim he was not guilty under one provision of this act because he was also guilty under another. For example, a dealer could not successfully demonstrate that he was not guilty of violating subdivision (e) of section 3 because he participated in the original taking from the cardholder in violation of subdivision (a) of section 3. The act has been drafted with the intention of avoiding such an interpretation. See notes to subsection (e) of section 3, supra.

Application of this act to credit cards obtained under circumstances which constitute a violation of this act but not the criminal law of the jurisdiction in which the taking occurred is important principally because of the growing international movement of credit cards and the concomitant growth of international criminal conspiracies sensitive to the opportunities it presents for fast profits. This situation as covered by sub-paragraph (ii).

The issue is particularly important in a case where a violation of section 4, for fraudulent case, depends upon proof of a violation of section 3, for credit card theft. The businessman or tourist may have his pocket picked in Cairo, Bangkok, Istanbul or a host of other exotic places. A card so obtained is very unlikely to find its way back to the United States except through professional criminal channels. It would be virtually impossible to establish what the law of say Saudi Arabia is with respect to credit cards. Even if the taking of a credit card actually violated the foreign law, the difficulty of proving that law to the satisfaction of the factfinder may be insuperable. Some courts might indulge in the assumption that the law of the foreign jurisdiction is the same as the law of the forum, but it does not seem appropriate for ciminal liability to flow from what will often be a mere fiction. It seems far preferable to face the problem directly.

SECTION 9. Presumptions.

The definition of a presumption and its effect follows subdivision (5) of section 1.12 of the Model Penal Code. American Law Institute, Model Penal Code, Proposed Official Draft (1962).

SECTION 10. Penalties.

The penalties provided are comparable to the penalties recommended in the Model Penal Code for grand and petty larceny. They do, however, give the court a wider range of discretion than does the Code. Section 10 does not, for example, distinguish between first and second offenders. However, such a distinction may be read into the act in any state where it is included in the criminal code. In any event, it seems reasonable to assume that the courts will recognize this and other sentencing distinctions which have evolved over the years by statute and judicial decision as guides to the allocation of punishment in particular cases.

SECTION 11. Act not exclusive.

At the present time there is a split of authority as to the exclusivity of credit card statutes in cases where they are silent on the question. There is no good reason why such an act should be held exclusive either with respect to substantive crimes or penalties. If a state should decide that the taking of any property, in a defined way, as by robbery committed with a gun, is pecularily reprehensible or dangerous to society, it should not be prevented from imposing a more severe penalty where the thing taken is a credit card because of the existence of a specific credit card statute.

It is not altogether clear just what exclusivity would mean. At its most absurd, it would prevent the application of the general criminal law to any transaction involving credit cards. Thus a form of larcenous taking which by inadvertence had not been covered by the credit card statute might seem immune to penal sanction. Such a result would, of course, be intolerable. The statute should only be found to preempt the field in cases where the general criminal law is in direct conflict. An example would be a rule that a false representation must be made to the party who will suffer loss if it is to be indictable. With respect to credit cards, that approach has, of course, been supplanted.

This act assumes the applicability of the usual state statutory and case law general concepts dealing with such matters as conspiracy, attempts and principals. In a state such as Wyoming which does not have a general attempts statute, but deals with attempts in the definitions of each crime, appropriate changes in this act can be made to cover the particular state lacunae.

SECTION 12. Severability.

This is the usual severability clause used in acts drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

Judiciary Committee Report

HCS for SENATE BILL NO. 364

This bill establishes a system of compensating victims of bodily crimes for their out-of-pocket expenses incurred as a result of the crime. One of the most fundamental functions of a government is the protection of its citizens; therefore, when the various statutory deterrents, law enforcement activities and conditions of the society fail to provide this protection, it is only reasonable that the government compensate the victims of that failure. Under present law, when the person who commits the crime is not financially responsible, the innocent victim who suffers the personal injury is left to his own resources. This obviously works an especial hardship on the poor and the elderly.

The bill is limited to personal injuries and to out-of-pocket expenses in order to avoid the likelihood of collusion. The total amount payable is limited, and the bill specifies additional limitations on and factors to be considered in awarding compensation. Information presented in an August 1969 report of the Arkansas Legislative Council indicates a rather low cost for such a system. In California, with a population of approximately 19,163,000, the 1967-68 fiscal year budget for the system was $22,411; in the 1968-69 fiscal year the budget was $105,374; and the proposed budget for the 1969-70 fiscal year was $127,000. The costs rise as more people become aware of the availability of compensation for their injuries. According to the Arkansas report, as of early 1969, at least five states had enacted victim compensation systems such as this one, and at least six others and Congress (for the District of Columbia) were considering similar legislation. In the preparation of this bill, the relevant provisions in the law of Hawaii, California, Massachusetts, and Maryland were reviewed.

ALASKA NATIONAL BANK of Fairbanks
NORTHWARD BUILDING "The Friendly Bank" FAIRBANKS, ALASKA - 99701

April 20, 1970

To the Honorable Representatives Anderson,
Bradner, Holm, Jackson, Miller, Orbeck and Young
Alaska State House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Gentlemen:

Senate Bill No. 403 "An Act Providing for the Collection and Deposit of State Money and the Collateralization of Deposits of State Funds; and Providing for an Effective Date" contains sections which would be extremely detrimental to the State of Alaska and to the banking institutions located within the State.

Section 1 (e) which states in part "the following, while not in default, if issued, made or created after January 1, 1970, constitute eligible collateral" is not only an untenable restriction but one that could be dangerous to the State and the banking institutions operating therein. We recommend that the State outline the types of collateral acceptable and establish a percentage of deposits to be covered thereby but completely eliminate any reference to date of origin of collateral meeting those requirements. Alaska National Bank, for example, holds $5,385,000 of State deposits against which are pledged $5,686,000 of U. S. Direct and Agency Obligations, State and Municipal Bonds, and FHA mortgages. Senate Bill 403 if passed would make ineligible every penny of the collateral which we currently have pledged and would require substitution as State Time Certificates mature starting May 26, 1970.

Included in Alaska National Bank's collateral are $345,000 of State and Municipal bonds issued by the State of Alaska or by municipalities within the State of Alaska. Some of these were purchased, as for example Nome Bonds, at the request of the State. Is our State Administration now saying that Alaskan bonds are not acceptable quality. "Outside" investors would take a dim view of this attitude. Orderly and healthy expansion of Alaska's financial institutions is essential if the State is to continue to properly expand. No doubt most of the Alaskan banks are in the same position as Alaska National and to render all of Alaskan bank's collateral ineligible as State Time C.D.'s mature and are removed would create a catastrophic situation. We are in sympathy with the aims of the Administration to put to work for Alaskans deposits given to Alaskan banks but this is not the way to do it and in fact defeats the purpose as it could result in a withdrawal of State funds from Alaskan banks, not an increase. Dropping the collateral requirements to 35 per cent is the best approach to putting State money to work for Alaskans. The amount of collateral to be pledged should be based upon the dollar value of State deposits in each bank not on the total deposits held by each bank. Until the State allows banks to use 65 per cent of the State Time Certificate deposits without requiring back-up collateral the people of Alaska will not see the true benefit from those deposits. Every dollar of State deposits which a bank is required to tie up in collateral is in effect a sterile deposit as far as benefiting the people of Alaska.

We, therefore, recommend complete removal of any reference to issue date of acceptable collateral, and a reduction in percentage of collateral required to 35 per cent of State deposits.

William J. Green
Vice President and Comptroller

SB 444

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska
DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES

TO: The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman
House Judiciary Committee

DATE : May 20, 1970

FROM: Thomas E. Kelly
Commissioner

SUBJECT: SB 444

Pursuant to your request of May 19, the following list enumerates violations of park regulations that we have experienced and which are not enforceable under present statutes, thereby making passage of the captioned bill of utmost importance.

(1) TRAFFIC VIOLATIONS - Excessive speed, reckless driving and other moving vehicle violations.

(2) DURATION OF STAY - Camping in State wayside and recreation areas for periods in excess of the two week limitation. This deprives visiting tourists and Alaskan citizens of the opportunity to find room for camping in our parks. It is a particular problem in view of the influx of migrant, jobless workers and hippies who seek parks as their haven.

(3) ILLEGAL USE -

(a) Camping and day use facilities which are not designed for overnight stay. These include picnic areas which are not set up for pitching tents or parking camp trailers.

(b) Erection of shacks and lean-tos which constitutes environmental intrusion.

(c) Misuse including sites for rallies. Regulations provide for permits to be issued under specific conditions for big gatherings. Abuse of this privilege in the absence of enforcement laws increases deterioration in our parks.

(d) Driving off of gravel paths and walkways or around barricades which we set up for safety purposes.

(e) Violations of water safety including driving power boats through swimming areas.

(4) RESIDENTIAL GARBAGE - Accumulation of refuse and garbage in the parks as a result of nearby residents using trash barrels for their garbage disposal. The barrels and trash cans are placed in the parks for individuals using the park facilities. We do not have the means to provide residents garbage pickup and it is particularly onerous to have a dump site surrounding filled trash barrels.

The above list summarizes some of the problems we are continually faced with in park administration and maintenance. It is our desire and goal to provide the finest in park facilities for Alaskan residents and tourists. We believe that adoption of the captioned bill in the law will go a long way in achieving this goal.

The Legislature has recently adopted a similar law (Chapter 95 SLA 1970) to protect historic sites which I feel is analogous to the protection sought by this bill.

The Honorable Irwin Metcalf

Dear Representative Metcalf:

In response to your request regarding Senate Bill 446, this Department urges the passage of this bill as we feel the historic and scientific sites of interest in Alaska are valued by the public and measures should be taken to protect them from damage and abuse. The increase in fine from $500 to $1,000 is in order as this will more closely cover the cost of any damage to the sites and possibly prevent some future damage.

If any further information is required please advise as the enactment of this bill is needed.

Sincerely,

Barry,

Your CS for SB 475 is attached. However, at the point where you suggested changing "consider" to read "give due consideration to", I left "consider" in. First of all, the drafting manual (at p. 19) states "Use finite verbs instead of corresponding noun-or-adjective forms denoting action as: 'consider' instead of 'give consideration to'; 'know' instead of 'have knowledge of'." Secondly, the word "due", as an adjective, is quite inadequate. It is either used for its legalistic sound (in which case it should be dropped) or it is used as a more-or-less synonym for such words as "serious", "formal", "appropriate", "weighty", "lengthy", "proper", etc., (in which case the more accurate word should be used). It seems to me that the phrase "give due consideration to", in the instant situation, places no greater requirement on the court than the simple, direct word "consider".

Regarding sec. 4 in this final version, cf. AS 47.10.020(a), which allows for informal adjustment or disposal.

Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Sirs:

SB 475

I feel so strongly about the "Christian Science Bill" that I am prompted to write you all as my Representatives from the 16th District.

Please consider this bill most carefully. To permit its passage, with the rider which states that a court could order medical care for a child whose parents refused because of religious convictions, would be a staggering blow to our religious freedom- a freedom that our forefather's emigrated here to achieve. It is contrary to the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is contrary to the spirit of freedom under which our country has developed and prospered for so many years.

Both religion and medicine have been free to try and gain; they have been free to try and lose. Because of the popularity of one system is the other automatically to be judged wrong because it is in a minority? Are we to prevent a minority from the full and free expression of their faith? Our country founded upon a spirit of fairness, how can this spirit survive when one's freedom of religion has been restricted?

Why not let time be the judge? Is the State of Alaska going to start judging a person's religion? It would seem that way by the court in effect saying, "you as parents because of your religious convictions, which the State finds archaic, superstitious and totally ineffectual, are not mentally capable of caring for your child in a manner which the State regards as proper, therefore we are issuing a court order that the child be placed under medical care." In effect, the State is setting up a religion that all must follow.

Is medicine such an exact science that all men should now be forced to practice it? If medicine is such a science why are not all who go to a hospital healed? How many of those in graves today are there as the result of a mistake, a wrong diagnoses, or a wrongly prescribed cure? We continually hear about the successes of medicine, seldom its failures. It is the opposite with a healing religion- we hear about the failures, seldom the successes.

Human progress cannot have reached the point where the Alaska Legislature can now say,"Medicine and surgery are the only reliable remedial agents. Therefore, we will see that all citizens follow its dictates and practices, even if it conflicts with one's deepest religious convictions."

I sincerely urge you to consider your vote on this bill and in the spirit of freedom for trial and error, of freedom for the progress and improvement that our founding fathers guaranteed us in the Constitution vote against the restrictive rider to the bill.

Sincerely yours,

HCS for SENATE BILL NO. 481

This bill is similar to Sec. 2015.5 of the California Code of Civil Procedure. It allows a person to "certify under penalty of perjury" certain documents required or authorized to be made upon oath, thus eliminating the need to have the document signed by a notary or other person empowered to administer oaths. The House Committee Substitute follows the California version more closely than the original bill, making clearer which documents are covered and which are not. The Senate amendment to the original bill restricts this certification to situations in which no notary or other authorized official is available, and this provision is retained in the House Committee Substitute; the bill, either with or without that amendment, would be of particular benefit to the outlying areas of the State.

re: SB 497 Am.
Relating to Conveyances of Real Property

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The Juneau Bar Association has considered the above mentioned bill and has endorsed it. The members find there are many deeds of record made to married couples who intended or expected that the property would go to the survivor of them in case of death of one of them, whereas in fact it will not happen because they failed to specify that they took the property as tenants by the entirety. We do not believe this bill will have retrospective effect as to such deeds because we have a statute stating that no bill has retroactive effect unless it so states. Moreover, there have been many deeds purposely made to man and wife without the specification of tenants by the entirety because they wanted it that way for various reasons, the most common of which is to get a stepped-up tax basis by administration of the half interest of the deceased. We therefore object to any amendment making the bill retroactive.

As for future conveyances we approve the bill as we believe it will be better to make these poorly drafted conveyances create a tenancy by the entirety; and to state otherwise when the intention is otherwise.

The Juneau Bar has asked me to convey this information to you.

The Honorable Barry Jackson
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Last Friday, SB 507, pertaining to powers of a 4th class city, was given a special referral to your Committee. Basically, this was done as a courtesy to the League in order that we could have the opportunity to clarify a couple of problems which we think the bill poses.

The League is 100% in favor of what the bill is trying to do insofar as 4th class cities are concerned. However, we recommend that the title of SB 507 be changed to read: "An Act relating to the powers of general law cities including but not limited to 4th class cities within 3rd class and unorganized boroughs". It is our opinion that the bill as presently titled is in direct conflict with the areawide platting concept of Title 7.

In addition, we are respectfully submitting a further proposed amendment to SB 507. This amendment has been endorsed by both the city and borough members of the League as a means of eliminating one area of conflict which has occurred in the past under the planning and zoning statute in Title 7.

We certainly wish to thank you for your courteous consideration of this matter and if we can be of further help, please call on us at any time.

Sincerely,

ALASKA MUNICIPAL LEAGUE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO

SENATE BILL 507

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to vacation of public ways."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

*Section 1. AS 07.15.340 is amended by adding a new section to read:

(d) No street, alley, or public thoroughfare may be vacated under the borough planning, platting and zoning authority in its entirety or in part unless vacation is approved by resolution of the governing body of the city or organized borough, or both, in which the public way is located, except that vacation of a street, alley or public thoroughfare located entirely within a city shall require approval of the city governing body only.

*Sec. 2. AS 40.15.160 is amended to read:

Sec. 40.15.160. HEARING AND DETERMINATION. At the hearing, the platting authority shall inquire into and determine the merits of the relief prayed for and make such order as justice and the public welfare require. Vacations ordered by the platting authority shall not be effective unless approved by the local governing body having jurisdiction as provided in AS 07.15.340(d).

Dear Greg:

SB-507 has been referred to the House Judiciary Committee and I am researching this bill.

Enclosed is a copy of a letter and a proposed amendment of the Alaska Municipal League. Would you please review this material and the bill and be prepared to review it with me at an early date? I see a number of problems with the bill.

With respect to vacating streets, a fourth class city should also have the power to close streets and use them for other public purposes, otherwise vacation may simply cause the property to pass to the adjoining property owners.

In the area of bonding, it is difficult to see how a fourth class city could issue general obligation bonds since the power to levy a property tax seems to be, by definition, a part of the concept of government obligation bonding.

As city attorney of Fort Yukon, I wrote Local Affairs Agency on the bonding problem, laying out a number of problems. That letter may also be of assistance to you in reviewing this bill.

Sincerely,

Barry W. Jackson, Chairman

SUBJECT: Abortion

AS 11.15.060 provides Alaska's abortion law in these terms: "A person who administers to a woman pregnant with a child any medicine, drug, or substance whatever, or who uses an instrument or other means, with intent to destroy the child, unless the action is necessary to preserve the life of the mother, is, if the death of the child or mother is thereby produced, guilty of manslaughter, and is punishable accordingly."

This statute was adopted by the Congress for the Territory of Alaska in the 1880's. It was taken from the Oregon Criminal Code and, but for minor wording changes, is identical to the present Oregon law, (ORS 163.060). The Oregon Supreme Court interpreted the term "death of the child" in the case of State v. Atwood, 102 P. 295 (1909). The court stated:

> "The term 'in case of death of such child,' which constitutes the consummation of the crime equally with the death of the mother, would seem to mean the death of the foetus, either before or after quickening."

The court also stated that an interpretation of the term "pregnant with child" was not necessary to its decision. However, according to the revisor's notes on the Oregon statute, the court in Atwood and in State v. Ausplund , 167 P. 1019 (1917), said that the term "pregnant with child" designates the fetus throughout the period of gestation.

The courts of the states are not in harmony concerning the interpretation of "pregnant with child" (Accord, 1 Am. Jur. 2d, sec. 6, p. 191.) Some have held with the Oregon court and others, including the Alaskan courts, have held that the fetus must be "quick" in order to be a child.

Thomas Aquinas, in the 13th Century, defined the soul as the first principle of life in those things that live, and life is signalized by two actions: knowledge and movement. Hence the rule of the common law framed by Bracton, a 13th Century jurist, that life does not commence at a certain number of days after conception, but at the moment of "quickening". Therefore Bracton said that killing the fetus after "quickening" was murder, before "quickening", no crime. Previous to 1803, abortion appears to have been largely regarded as a Church offense and was in actuality punishable only by religious penalties, at least in England. ("The Legal and Moral Status of Therapeutic Abortion", by Alan F. Guttmacher, M.D., from Progress in Gynecology, Vol. IV.)

The first English abortion statute, the law of 1803, removed the legal requirement that to be a crime abortion must be performed after "quickening." It made a distinction, however, between the "unquickened" and "quickened" fetus. Abortion was a felony in every instance, but punishable by death only after "quickening". (Guttmacher)

The first state in the United States dealing directly with abortion was Connecticut, which in 1821 passed a statute punishing any attempt to abort a fetus by poison after "quickening." In 1860, the law was extended to all pregnancies irrespective of "quickening" and for the first time an exception was made for acts necessary to preserve the life of the mother. (Guttmacher)

Quoting from retired Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark in the Loyola University Law Review (Vol. II, No. 1, 1969) in answering the question of whether abortion is murder, he says, based on legal precedent, "To say that life is present at conception is to give recognition to the potential rather than the actual..." "No prosecutor has ever returned a murder indictment charging the taking of the life of a fetus. This would not be the case if the fetus constituted human life."

While it is not known what interpretation of the term "pregnant with child" would be adopted by the Alaska Supreme Court if that issue were presented, an instruction was rendered in State v. Boswell, 61-109, Superior Court, 4th Jud. Dist. (1961) to the following effect:

> "'Pregnant with child' as used in our law means an unborn child so far developed as to be quick, that is, so far developed as to be capable of independent moving or stirring in the mother's womb to a degree perceivable by the mother. The law does not require that the mother in fact identified the movement or stirring; quickening is attained when movement, however slight, could be made to said degree by the foetus independent of any other force."

In another case, in 1958, an indictment for abortion against a doctor in Anchorage was dismissed because the foetus existed for only one month when it was aborted by the doctor and therefore the woman was not pregnant with "child".

The Alaska Attorney General's office has stated in an informal opinion that "since 'quickening' normally does not take place until approximately the fourth month of pregnancy, this interpretation emasculates the abortion law of this state. It is forseeable that this instruction (that given in Boswell) will continue to be given, and, while the Department of Law would advocate a contrary position, the state could not appeal the issue to the Supreme Court and a binding interpretation may never be made." (Letter to John Sackett, April 25, 1969).

In regard to the possible constitutional problems with Alaska's abortion law, assuming its applicability to all abortions, there have been several recent cases of importance bearing on the constitutional issues. Two decisions are of particular importance.

In State v. Belous, 458 P. 2d 194 (1969), the California Supreme Court held, under a statute similar to Alaska's, that the phrase, "unless the same is necessary to preserve her life," is unconstitutionally vague. The court said that the requirement of a reasonable degree of certainty in legislation, especially in the criminal law, is a well established element of the guarantee of due process of law. No one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes. All are entitled to be informed as to what the state commands or forbids.... a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, violates the first essential of due process of law.

The problem caused by the vagueness of the statute is accentuated because under the statute the doctor is, in effect, delegated the duty to determine whether a pregnant woman has the right to an abortion and the physician acts at his peril if he determines that the woman is entitled to an abortion. Rather than being impartial, the physician has a direct, personal, substantial, pecuniary interest in reaching the conclusion that the woman should not have an abortion. The delegation of decision-making power to a directly involved individual violates the 14th Amendment. The statute assumes to confer legislative authority upon those who are directly interested in the operation of the regulatory rule. The inevitable effect of such delegation may be to deprive a woman of an abortion when under any definition of the relevant section of the penal code, she would be entitled to such an operation, because the state, in delegating the power to decide when an abortion is necessary, has skewed the penalties in one direction: no criminal penalties are imposed when the doctor refuses to perform a necessary operation, even if the woman should in fact die because the operation was not performed.

The U. S. District Court in the District of Columbia, in U.S. v. Vuitch, 305 F. Supp. 1032 (1969), struck down the D.C. abortion statute. The court said that the statute making the inducing of an abortion a felony, unless done to preserve the mother's life or health, is invalid for failure to give that certainty which due process of law considers essential in criminal statutes and for impinging to an appreciable degree on significant constitutional rights of individuals. The statute does not prohibit all abortions. An abortion is permitted where done as necessary for the preservation of the mother's life or health and under the direction of a competent licensed practitioner of medicine.

The word "health" is not defined and in fact remains so vague in its interpretation and the practice under the act that there is no indication whether it includes varying degrees of mental as well as physical health. The jury's nonacceptance or acceptance of an individual doctor's interpretation of the ambivalent and uncertain word "health" should not determine whether he stands convicted of a felony, facing imprisonment. There is no clear standard to guide either the doctor, the jury or the court. No body of medical knowledge delineates what degree of mental or physical health or combination of the two is required to make an abortion conducted by a competent physician legal or illegal under the code.

Two other cases are of interest in light of the constitutional issues, both of which were relied upon by the Attorney General's office, in an informal opinion to Terry Miller and to Lowell Thomas, Jr., to conclude concerning Alaska's law that, "there are adequate legal arguments and decisions supporting the constitutionality of Alaska's current abortion law", and the Attorney General "would not be hesitant to carry out our statutory duty of defending its constitutionality if the issue should ever be raised in court."

A careful reading of both of these opinions cited by the Attorney General does little to dispel the notions of unconstitutionality raised by Belous and Vuitch, regardless of the Attorney General's opinion. In State v. Elliott, 383 P.2d 382 (Ore. 1963), the Supreme Court of Oregon reversed for a new trial the conviction of an abortionist. Reversal was on the basis of an erroneous jury instruction and that portion of the decision is not cogent to this discussion. The Attorney General's office relied for its above stated conclusions on a one sentence statement by the court that, "the defendant's arguments are so lacking in merit that we decline to consider them, except to state that, construing the acts together, they do not violate any requirements or provisions of either the state or federal constitutions." On what specific grounds the defendant argued the constitutional issues is not clear. He merely contended that because the Manslaughter by Abortion Act and the Medical Practice Act have been construed in pari materia when a physician is involved, the Abortion Act as applied to him, violates the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution and Article I, Sec. 20, Article IV, Sec. 23(2) of the Oregon Constitution. It is presumed that he relied on an equal protection argument because one of the Oregon Constitutional sections deals with equality of privileges and immunities of citizens and the other prohibits the legislature from passing local or special acts for the punishment of crimes. Neither of these arguments were at issue in Belous or Vuitch and the abortionist raised none of the vagueness or privacy questions which were raised in those cases. Another distinction here is that Elliott was not a physician, as was the case in Belous and Vuitch, and thus could not take advantage of the Medical Practice Act exceptions to abortion prosecution, i.e., to preserve the health of the mother.

The other case relied on by the Attorney General's office was State v. Moretti, 244 A.2d 499 (N.J. 1968). The Supreme Court of New Jersey upheld the conviction of two defendants, neither of whom were physicians, for conspiracy to commit abortion. Once again, the relevancy of this case to a disposition of the constitutional issues raised by Alaska's abortion law, is highly in doubt. The New Jersey abortion statute reads as follows:

> "Any person who, maliciously or without lawful justification, with intent to cause or procure the miscarriage of a pregnant woman, administers or prescribes or advises or directs her to take or swallow any poison, drug, medicine or noxious thing, or uses any instrument or means whatever, is guilty of a high misdemeanor."

The defendants claimed that the law was so vague and indefinite that it suffers a constitutional infirmity. This is based on the language, "without lawful justification," which, it is argued, is so indefinite a concept that no one could tell when an abortion would be justified. The court said that a construction of the phrase which confined the meaning to the preservation of the mother's life would avoid any constitutional attack based on vagueness. The court then briefly discussed the fact that this construction had been upheld in previous New Jersey cases and it discussed several dissenting opinions as well. In so doing, the court said, regarding Chief Justice Weintraub, who dissented here also, that only he "expressed doubts as to the constitutionality of the statute, but his discussion related solely to the statute's application to eugenic abortions." The court then said that "the concern for a re-examination of the values represented by the law of criminal abortion is reflected in the recent creation by the legislature of a commission to re-evaluate the abortion statute. However, in the circumstances of the case before us, the ascertainment of the perimeter of lawful justification is not presented and we need not concern ourselves with the questions...." Thus the court stated that it would not even reach the broader constitutional issues presented by the phrase "lawful justification."

However, the court did say that the only inquiry in this case was "whether the defendants had sufficient warning that their conduct was criminal". "(A) defendant whose conduct was such that he clearly could tell that it was prohibited will not be heard to say that the statute is overly broad and that another, in some hypothetical case, could be misled." (emphasis mine.) If, therefore, the statute gave sufficient warning to these defendants that the abortion they contemplated was not lawfully justifiable and thus was criminal, the statute is constitutional as applied to them." (emphasis mine) "That in some other case where the facts require it, we might be called upon to determine the specific limits of the statutory exception for abortions performed with lawful justification -- or to deal with a constitutional challenge made by a defendant claiming he was not adequately warned of the criminality of his conduct -- is of no aid to these defendants if their conduct was such as clearly fell within the prohibition of the statute."

The court then concludes that the defendants could not fail to be aware that the abortion would violate the statute. The defendants also offered no argument of lawful justification before the lower appellate court. In this court the defendants contended that they believed the abortion lawfully justified because it was to terminate an allegedly unwanted pregnancy. The court stated that if this was a lawful ground the statute was rendered meaningless because any abortion would be justified. It further stated that if there were any doubt that the defendants knew their actions were unlawful, it would be dissipated by their surreptitious actions revealed by the record.

Thus the court begs the larger constitutional issues because they are not presented for determination and because they can uphold the defendants' convictions and uphold the validity of the statute on narrower grounds. This is hardly good precedent for upholding the constitutionality of the New Jersey abortion law, much less Alaska's, under a broad-based constitutional attack in the proper circumstances (such as those in Belous and Vuitch), and the court so much as admits it.

Logic and good precedent, I believe, are on the side of any person, especially a physician, who would attack Alaska's law on void for vagueness and even right to privacy grounds.

SB-527

March 2, 1970

The Honorable Terry Miller, Chairman
Senate Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska
and
The Honorable Lowell Thomas, Jr., Chairman
Senate Health, Education and Welfare Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Senators:

In response to your request of February 24, 1970, our office has reviewed the case law pertaining to the constitutionality of abortion laws similar in language to that contained in AS 11.15.060. While there are two recent decisions which held the phrase "necessary to preserve the life" of the mother unconstitutionally vague, for the reasons noted below we do not believe it is possible to assert with any reasonable degree of certainty that Alaska's Supreme Court would concur with those decisions.

The two cases referred to are People v. Belous, 80 Cal. Rptr. 354 (1969), and United States v. Vuitch, 305 F. Supp. 1032 (1969). Each of these cases interpreted an abortion statute that for our purposes is identical to Alaska's which reads as follows:

> A person who administers to a woman pregnant with a child any medicine, drug, or substance whatever, or uses an instrument or other means, with intent to destroy the child, unless the action is necessary to preserve the life of the mother, is, if the death of a child or mother is thereby produced, guilty of manslaughter, and is punishable accordingly. (Emphasis added)

Each court determined that the phrase "necessary to preserve" is unconstitutionally vague.

Misc. 100

Belous, decided by the California Supreme Court, was a four to three opinion and Vuitch, a Washington, D. C. case, was a memorandum opinion written by one judge.

As one of the dissenting opinions in Belous pointed out, the phrase "necessary to preserve" is or has been in the abortion statutes of many states for over a century and was even employed at common law, and implicit in the countless decisions that have dealt with such language is the view that the phrase is not unconstitutionally vague. Belous at 367 (Burke J. dissenting).

In State v. Elliott, 383 P.2d 382, 384-5 (Ore. 1963), the Supreme Court of Oregon held that Oregon's abortion law, which contains the same "necessary to preserve" standard as Alaska's abortion law, does not violate the United States or Oregon constitutions. Although "vagueness" is not discussed as such, this Oregon court found the defendant's arguments relating to due process "so lacking in merit, that we decline to consider them, except to state that [the abortion law of Oregon] does not violate any requirements or provisions of either the state or federal constitutions." Id. at 384. Furthermore, a recent New Jersey opinion specifically stated that the statutory standard in abortion statutes of "necessary to preserve the mother's life" is not unconstitutionally vague. State v. Moretti, 244 A.2d 499, 504 (N.J.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 952, 89 S. Ct. 376 (1968).

In this regard it is interesting to note that the majority in Belous was not able to cite any authority for its conclusion that the term "necessary to preserve [the woman's] life" is impermissibly vague. Belous at 370. The judge in Vuitch was able to cite only Belous. Vuitch at 1034. It should also be noted that neither of these two decisions are binding on Alaskan Courts. The United States Supreme Court has recently denied review of the Belous decision, 38 U.S.L.W. 3313, just as it had refused the year before to hear the New Jersey abortion law case of State v. Moretti, supra. Such action allows each state to decide for itself the constitutional issue in question.

In summary, this office believes there are adequate legal arguments and decisions supporting the constitutionality of Alaska's current abortion law. Thus, we would not be hesitant to carry out our statutory duty of defending its constitutionality if the issue should ever be raised in court.

Sincerely,

G. Kent Edwards
Attorney General

RE: License of one Burger

This memorandum deals with certain questions raised by members of the Board of Chiropractic Examiners concerning their powers and duties in issuing licenses to practice chiropractic in Alaska. Letters from all members of the board reveal the following facts and lie at the basis of the opinion stated herein.

FACTS:

One Burger and one Kary applied for licenses to practice chiropractic in the State of Alaska. Said applicants both attended Western States College; said Burger graduated from the school while said Kary apprently completed his work at another school and did graduate work only at the school and postgraduated. All members of the board approved said Kary's license which is not in issue here, but one member of the board refused to sign said Burger's license because she felt that Western States College does not fall within the ambit of AS 08.20.120(4) as an "accredited" school or college of chiropractic.

Western States College is located in Oregon and is licensed in that state to award chiropractic degrees. Likewise, it is licensed to train individuals for certain laboratories and issue lab and x-ray certificates to such individuals. The institution is approved by the Veterans Administration for veterans training in the profession; likewise, the Oregon Rehabilitation and Immigration authorities approve the institution to train foreign students. Dr. V. E. Marsh, President of the Alaska Association of Chiropractic Physicians and past president of the Board of Examiners states that the Board has approved Western States for all of the 15 years he has practiced in Alaska.

The objecting Board member is reluctant to issue the license because Western State does not appear on a list of "accredited" schools prepared by either of two accrediting agencies, to wit: the American Chiropractic Association or the International Chiropractic Association. It is stated that these two agencies evaluate chiropractic colleges and institutions on separate lists which do not overlap. It appears that the American Chiropractic Association at one time granted a provisional accreditation which was later rescinded. Since that time neither agency has granted accreditation.

QUESTION:

From the facts stated above may the Board lawfully issue a license to practice chiropractic in the State of Alaska to one Burger?

OPINION:

> "AS 08.20.090. QUORUM OF THE BOARD. A majority of the board constitutes a quorum for the transaction of business."
> "AS 08.20.120. QUALIFICATIONS OF APPLICANTS. Each applicant shall
> * * *
> (4) be a graduate of a legally chartered accredited school or college of chiropractic, approved by the board, which requires for graduation a residence course of instruction of not less than four years of nine months each; . . ."

It is unquestioned that the legislature has the power to regulate the practice of chiropractic because of its importance to the health, welfare, and safety of the citizens of Alaska. Neither is it questioned that the legislature may delegate this power of regulation to a board of administrators and/or examiners as long as the power it grants does not exceed its own. Conversely the board so created may not overstep the powers granted it by the legislature and it is precisely this point that is here drawn into question.

The boundaries of administrative discretion which the board may exercise in the prosecution of its business and duties are drawn by the language of the statute. In determining what latitude the legislature granted the board in determining who could qualify for a license one must turn to AS 08.20.120, since qualifications are more clearly defined than others. For instance with respect to AS 08.20.120(1) the legislature has left the board little discretionary power; each applicant must be at least 21 years of age. Should the board issue a license to someone 18 years of age, it would constitute a clear breach of discretion.

However, AS 08.20.120(4) is not as definite as (1) and leaves the board much more discretionary power. This is not because the legislature could not be more definite in determining what constitutes an accredited school. In our Integrated Bar Act, for instance, one of the qualifications of an applicant is that he must have graduated from a school "approved by the American Bar Association." AS 08.08.130(4). The legislature, we must assume, may have provided if it so wished that the applicant have graduated from a school accredited by the American Chiropractic Association or the International Chiropractic Association or any other evaluating agency or body. The fact is that it did not. The only specific requirement the legislature requires other than that it be a "legally chartered accredited school or college of chiropractic, approved by the board," is that its requirements for graduation include a residence course of instruction of not less than four years of nine months each.

Therefore, in the lack of more positive language we must assume that the board is granted some discretion in determining what a "legally chartered accredited school or college of chiropractic" might be. It would seem that the words "approved by the board," set off by commas after the descriptive phrase does not grant ultimate, unfettered, positive power of determining accreditation to the board but rather is an additional requirement to be met after the accreditation has been established. It appears from the facts presented that Western States College of Chiropractic is legally chartered by the State of Oregon, which leaves only the word "accredited" to be given meaning.

It seems that "accredited" means something more than merely licensing or chartering, for those words were both available to the legislature when it enacted the section. Moreover, under this section the school in question must be both chartered and accredited; giving separate meaning to each work, "accredited" must mean something beyond "chartered." Licensing grants permission whereas accreding usually connotes achievement of high standards and the resulting recognition.

As previously noted herein, the legislature could have chosen to dictate that some national agency set the standards of accreditation, or they could have insisted that in order to be accredited, a school must appear on some national list. This they did not do. We do not feel that the legislature intended accreditation or the power to accredit to lie exclusively with any particular body. A more reasonable position is that "accredited" means some recognition beyond mere chartering, by any entity. "Accredited" means authoritatively approved. Certainly, a national evaluating agency could be an authority and the board would be correct in considering its approval. However, the Veterans Administration or the Oregon Rehabilitating and Immigration authorities may also be considered accrediting entities, and their approval could qualify as an act of accrediting.

The final requirement after chartering and accrediting is for the board itself to approve of the school. If the board wishes to agree with the accreditation given by another entity it will grant its approval. Here it would appear that a majority of the board does recognize Western States not only as being chartered, but sufficiently accredited as well, and has approved the institution as meeting the standards necessary for licensing a chiropractor in the State of Alaska.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATORS REPORT ON CHIROPRACTIC EDUCATION.

In December 1967, a committee of legislators from the State of Michigan visited Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, as a part of an inspection tour which included Palmer College of Chiropractic at Davenport, Iowa, and the Spears Chiropractic Hospital at Denver, Colorado.

The purpose of the investigation was to learn first hand about the education of the chiropractic physician, and the practice of chiropractic, so that this information could be given directly to the Michigan legislature. At LACC, the committee inspected the plant, sat in conference with the administration and the faculty, and conducted interviews at random on the campus.

A copy of their findings, with permission to publish was sought by Dr. George Haynes, Administrative Dean of the LACC.

The following report was submitted, and is published as received from the legislative committee, in full text and with no editing.

Ed.

SUB-COMMITTEE REPORT
Chiropractic Study Tour
December 3-9, 1967

The following is the report of Sub-Committee No. 3 of the State Affairs Committee for the period December 3 through December 8, 1967, in the study of Chiropractic Laws and Practices. The Sub-Committee consisted of: Representatives DeForest Strang, Chairman, Federic J. Marshall, Vincent J. Petitpren, and Thomas J. Anderson.

The study consisted of a review of chiropractic instruction, at selected colleges, as to duration, entering qualification, curriculum, and graduation requirements, and of a chiropractic hospital, with emphasis on type and efficacy of care. The study resulted from the confusion of testimony during committee hearings on Senate Bill 227 and hearing testimony, as well as floor debate during a prior session regarding 1966 House Bill 3381. An apparent conflict in the chiropractic profession was demonstrated in testimony, and an antipathy as well as a non-tolerance toward chiropractic generally was exhibited by members of the medical profession appearing before the committee.

The sub-committee was received cordially at three study locations, the Palmer College of Chiropractic in Davenport, Iowa, the Spears Chiropractic Hospital in Denver, Colorado, and the Los Angeles Chiropractic College in Glendale, California. Full assistance was given the committee in display of facilities and response to interrogation, and no objection was passed at any time to the use of the tape recorder during interviews of staff and faculty personnel.

The committee determined that chiropractic is divided by a schism of two conflicting philosophies, which apparently contribute to non-acceptance by other professions.

The basic chiropractic philosphy, that originated in about 1895, holds that bodily health is controllable solely by proper nutritional balance, good physical habits, and the correct alignment of the several vertebra of the spine and the correct relationship of the vertebra to the central spinal cord and ancillary nervous system. There is heavy reliance on the use of X-ray for examining the patient's spinal system. The majority of the practitioners of this philosophy, numbering about 12% of the profession, are graduates of the Palmer College in Davenport. It is the committee's understanding that two or three other small chiropractic colleges in the United States also teach on the Palmer philosophy, based almost entirely on the spinal manipulation and suggestion to the patient of good habits and diet supplementation.

In this method, little work is done on human structural members other than the spine itself, and there is only limited attempt at diagnosis and use of the diagnostic tools used by the medical physician. This segment of the profession opposed House Bill 3381 in 1966. The committee was advised that it was felt the bill tended to authorize the unwarranted expansion of the chiropractor into the diagnostic and medical fields and could contribute to ultimate discrediting of the profession by medical authorities, with possible future punitive legislation. Members of this group are affiliated with the International Chiropractic Association.

The major portion of the members of the profession (about 88%) are graduates of more liberal colleges of chiropractic, of which the Los Angeles College of Chiropractic is an example, and are affiliated with the American Chiropractic Association. This group (ACA) professes a belief in the need for diagnostic appraisal of the patient's general and specific condition, full use of diagnostic tools, such as those used by the physician, and in manipulation of body extremities and joints other than the spine in addition to the correct alignment of vertebra and diet and health control acknowledged by the adherents to the more conservative ICA methods of practice. Approximately seven chiropractic colleges are instructing in this philosophy.

The Palmer College at Davenport is a full four-year institution providing full education in the basic sciences and approximately two years of classroom and clinical training in manipulative therapy directed at the spine. Special attention is paid to the study of the nerves and nervous system and its relationship to the spinal column. At Palmer, it is taught that most bodily malfunctions and disorders, and some diseases, can be corrected by chiropractic adjustments to correct spinal "subluxations" or vertebral misalignments which might cause interfering pressure on portions of the central nervous system affecting all parts of the body. The faculty stated it is their firm belief and teaching that proper nutritional and dietary control, and regular health habits, combined with correct functioning and alignment of the spinal column members, would assure optimum health in an individual and prevent bodily disorders.

Only minimal effort is made to instruct in recognition of bacterially or virally borne diseases. One year premedical training is preferred for entrance at Palmer, although a ninety-day pre-prep course in general sciences is given to entrants not having this qualification. The committee was advised that effective January, 1969, a two-year premed course would be requisite to admittance.

The Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, affiliated with ACA, is also a full four-year institution, requiring one year pre-medical instruction for admission. As at Palmer, full instruction is given in the basic sciences, and in the chiropractic manipulative technique. In addition, much attention is paid to diagnostic analysis of human ailments, and to the use of normal medical diagnostic devices and to various therapeutic treatments. Unlike Palmer, where nerve study and dissections are performed on animal carcasses (by reason of a limiting Iowa statute), at Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, human cadavers are used for laboratory study. The committee noted that the cirriculum at the Los Angeles institution included a broader treatment of the generally accepted medical theories than at Palmer, where the efficacy of spinal chiropractic was held paramount over all other medical treatments. It appeared that the Los Angeles College (and ostensibly other college affiliated with ACA) treated chiropractic as an important branch of the medical sciences, to be ancillary to other phases of the treatment of human disorders, and at Palmer (and ostensibly other ICA affiliated colleges) that simple spinal chiropractic manipulation was treated as the primary and most effective treatment of ailments, with the medical practices of other branches of the sciences of lesser importance. This philosophical difference is the apparent chief cause of the schism in the profession of chiropractic.

Both institutions are seemingly adequately equipped in both staff and facilities to perform their function. The professional staff of both institutions appears competent as to background, based on the citations contained in the catalogues, and auxiliary personnel such as technicians, laboratory instructors and administrative aides, although not interviewed, were cited as competent. Facilities in both institutions include modern classrooms, laboratories, practice rooms, public clinical, limited medical library, and modern instructing devices and equipment.

There is one recognized chiropractic hospital, that being Spears Chiropractic Hospital at Denver, Colorado licensed by the State of Colorado. The hospital is affiliated with ACA and was founded in the 1940's by Dr. Leo Spears, now deceased, and currently operated by Drs. Daniel C. and Howard M. Spears, and has survived a long series of legal battles for existance under Colorado law. Approximately 130,000 patients have been treated since founding, many reportedly with startling success after the failure of other professions and hospitals to effect relief or cures. The committee viewed the hospital and was impressed with the seeming efficiency and effectiveness of the treatments given. Diagnosis is made of the condition of the entire body, and on the use of various traction and non-medical therapeutic devices for orthopedic and muscular adjustments. No medicines are administered at the hospital, nor is any surgery performed, except ocassionally by invited outside medical physicians in emergency situations. All staff members are chiropractic personnel and there is strong reliance on the chirporactic adjustment as corrective and preventative therapy.

The facilities of the hospital include a pediatrics ward, which was reported to have had remarkable effectiveness in certain crippling disablements, and a number of muscle building and therapy devices for assistance in recovery of atrophied members and limbs. The hospital maintains a regular schedule of advertising publications, mailed to the profession, and to the public. The circulars include citations and testimonials of successful treatments at the hospital and general advertising for the chirporactic treatment.

In summary, the committee found that members of the chiropractic profession are well trained in professional techniques and basic sciences and knowledge as to human anatomy. It is believed that both philoosophies (ICA and ACA) represent the ability of members of the profession to perform an important adjunctive service in the treatment of human disorders. The committee feels, however, that there is an excessive reliance in the ICA or Palmer concept on the efficacy of the spinal manipulation to correct and maintain bodily health. On the other hand, the ACA adherents would seem to move markedly close to the practice of medicine in its diagnostic and therapeutic actions on the human body.

NEW CRITERIA AND ANALYSIS THEREOF

ACCREDITATION

From two conferences (June 9 and July 14) with the Staff of the Accreditation and Institutional Eligibility Unit of the U.S. Office of Education (John R. Proffitt and Ronald Pugsley) and from two documents provided by them (Exhibit A - "List of Nationally Recognized Accrediting Agencies and Associations" and Exhibit B - "Examples of Documentation of the Criteria for Nationally Recognized Accrediting Bodies") some basic concepts become very clear:

1. Specialized agencies designed to accredit professional institutions are not carbon copies of regional agencies designed to accredit college programs in the arts and sciences. (Exhibit A - Page 1, last two paragraphs)

2. An accrediting agency designed to accredit instutitions preparing students for careers in a profession cannot divorce itself from that profession and operate in isolation. (Exhibit A - Page 1, paragraph 3, item 1; Exhibit B - Page 1, item 1, line 5; Page 2, item 4, (2); Page 4, item 11, lines 10 and 11)

3. The institutions must be centrally and significantly represented in the processes of accreditation. (Exhibit A - Page 1, paragraph 3, item 1)

4. The current trend is for representation from the general public. (Exhibit A - Page 1, next to last paragraph, line 4)

5. In the case of professions that require legal licensure or certification, representation from licensing bodies is desirable. (Exhibit A - Page 4, criterion 11; Exhibit B - Page 4, item 11, lines 6 and 7)

6. "It is unlikely that more than one association or agency will qualify for recognition." (Exhibit A - Page 4, next to last paragraph)

7. Only high standards of qualities are acceptable.

   a. Admissions standards

   b. Faculty qualifications

   c. Faculty-student ratio

   d. Facilities

   e. Financial stability

   (Quality was a major, if not the major, item stressed by the U.S. Office of Education staff in our two conferences.)

With these facts in mind, it appears logical to conclude that an accrediting agency composed of representatives of the institutions, the profession, the licensing bodies and the public would be acceptable provided there was only one agency extant, provided the minimum standards were high enough and sufficiently clear, and provided performance of the agency is qualitatively in line with the performance of similar national accrediting agencies.

SUGGESTED QUESTIONS TO DR. HAMMOND AND OTHERS

1. Do you feel it is not being discriminatory to choose applicants only from one association?

2. What chance would there be for Board members to be chosen for membership of the Alaska Chiropractic Society?

3. What about doctors who might wish to serve on the Chiropractic Board but don't agree to belong to any organization?

4. Are there two national accrediting agencies?

   a. Do they make constant evaluations of the respective colleges?

   b. What is the purpose of these national accrediting agencies?

   c. When they decide to accredit or discredit a college, is this for the purpose of forcing those colleges to improve their image so that chiropractic colleges raise their standards to that of medical schools, etc.?

5. What college are you a graduate from, Dr. Hammond?

6. Does the International Chiropractors Association fully accredit Western States College?

   a. Does the American Chiropractor's Accrediting Agency fully accredit your college?

   b. Is it accredited at all by either of these agencies?

   c. Does Washington state allow graduates from your college to apply for a licensure in that state at the present time?

   d. Do you feel Alaska should allow these graduates to come here when Washington state feels they should be kept out?

e. Do you feel you are better qualified to judge the merits of the many chiropractic colleges than the national accrediting agencies?

f. Are any of the present board members from colleges fully accredited by either of the national accrediting organizations?

g. How many members of the Alaska Chiropractors Association are graduates from the unaccredited college you are from?

h. How many members of the Alaska Chiropractors Association are graduates from fully accredited chiropractic colleges?

i. How many paid up members are there in the Alaska Chiropractors Association?

j. Are the four members of the Alaska Chiropractic Society and the student members at the Palmer College of Chiropractic from a fully accredited college, accredited by either national organization?

k. If graduates from unaccredited colleges can become licensed, what assurance do you have that that college will ever raise their standards sufficiently to become fully accredited?

l. Would you object to having the chiropractic board chosen by the Governor, as in the past?

(1) Would you object to the board being composed of one member of the Alaska Chiropractors Association, one member of the Alaska Chiropractors Society, and one lay member chosen by the Governor?

(2) Do you object to having the board composed of members who are from colleges fully accredited?

QUESTIONS YOU MAY ASK ME

1. What do you think would happen to your profession if the Alaska Chiropractors Association were to decide who could become board members?

2. What do you think would happen to your profession if the Alaska Chiropractic Society were to decide who could become board members?

3. Would you object to a lay member on the board?

4. Are there other states with more than one association?

5. What happens on those boards?

6. Do you feel that colleges should be fully accredited?

7. Are the two national accrediting associations doing what they set out to do?

8. Are the accrediting standards of each national organization equal?

9. Do you have any evidence showing Western States College is not fully accredited?

10. Do you have any information indicating that Dr. Hammond has ever felt that the Chiropractic board should accept the national accredited agency as the arbiter in the matter of college accreditation?

11. Have you recently received an appointment to serve as a coordinator of legislative affairs on the national level?

12. Would your work on a national level have to do with problems such as these we are talking about today?

Mr. Jackson, Chairman, and Members of the House Judicairy Committee.

For the record, my name is Roscoe Bell, Land and Legislative Consultant for BP Alaska.

It is my great personal pleasure to speak to you today, and as a representative of British Petroleum Alaska to recommend for your favorable consideration House Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 536.

BP, along with a number of other major international oil companies, has for the past several years sponsored the Clean Seas Program which has been responsible for international agreements and for the substantial decrease in ballast dumping on the high seas and territorial waters. But we all know that much more must be done. Alaska is rightfully concerned about the problems now and in the future relating the dumping of oily ballast.

This legislation is a step with which we agree in principle, although we cannot state with certainty that it will not be challenged in court. We firmly believe that oil spills are a joint responsibility of the shipping industry and the government. As major world oil shippers, the majors included in the Clean Seas Program have accepted their responsibility by developing new handling techniques for completely eliminating the dumping of oily ballast and by installing ballast cleaning facilities at major loading terminals.

However, there still remains the area 50 miles out at sea where ballast dumping is approved under international agreement. We do not believe that dumping of oily ballast should be legal anywhere on the seas, and most certainly not not anywhere in the seas around Alaska.

Unfortunately, there are independent charter tankers which are not under the complete control of the shippers; although here, too, control is attempted through the terms of the long-term charter contracts as well as the spot charters.

We believe that international agreements should be strengthened. We commend the U.S. Government Water Quality Control Administration for their interest in eliminating, or reducing, the dumping of oily ballast, and we certainly commend the State of Alaska for considering this proposed legislation.

We have examined the legis lation and find that it is consistent with the federal legislation. This is a point in its favor. As you all know, in connection with management and operation of tankers, one of the principal problems is having rules that are consistent, that are generally understood, and that do not vary from port to port, and that can be easily made part of the terms of the charters and can be understood by the captains and other personnel of the ships. Many of the problems that have been experienced have been human errors or human carelessness. This bill is another step in trying to control this kind of action. By cooperation of the oil companies, the shipping industry, the officials responsible for administration of this law and the federal laws, we will be able to protect Alaska's marine environment and resources.

We also commend the Legislature for the Senate Joint Resolution 95 and hope that the State will press for the international conference between the U.S. and Canada to see if a special zone cannot be set up under international law surrounding these countries where the dumping of oily ballast is completely prohibited.

I thank you for your time and the opportunity to talk with you on this very important subject. By its passage, this bill will further demonstrate Alaska's concern with the environment.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Washington, D.C. 20520

May 12, 1970

Mr. Joseph McGill
Chairman, Natural Resources Committee
House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Mr. Jared Carter of my office has brought to my attention your telegram to him of May 2, 1970 asking the Department's views from the standpoint of foreign relations on legislation pending in your Committee. We have reviewed the draft bill and have the following comments:

Alaska's enactment of this legislation would create foreign relations difficulties for the United States by conditioning a ship's access to Alaskan ports upon that ship's adherence to standards in areas of the high seas beyond the jurisdiction of Alaska. The effect of the bill would be to impose conditions upon commercial maritime activities on the high seas. As explained in the attached press release, which was issued after the Canadian Government introduced into its Parliament bills on the limits of the territorial sea and fisheries and pollution control jurisdiction, the United States has long sought international solutions, rather than unilateral approaches, to problems involving the high seas. Specifically, we are seeking a new international means for controlling pollution on the high seas. Our efforts to obtain such international solutions would be greatly complicated if we ourselves attempt to solve these admittedly important problems on a unilateral basis. The problem is compounded by our federal system and the prospect of the several states imposing their own (possibly inconsistent) standards and regulations. For these reasons, the Department would be opposed to enactment of the bill set forth in your cable.

I hope these views are of assistance to you in your Committee's deliberations on this bill. If we can be of any further assistance, please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

John R. Stevenson

CAUTION - FUTURE RELEASE

FOR RELEASE AT 1:00 P.M., E.S.T., WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1970. NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM, OR USED IN ANY WAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT OF CANADA'S BILLS ON LIMITS OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA, FISHERIES AND POLLUTION

Last week the Canadian Government introduced in the House of Commons two bills dealing with pollution in the Arctic, fisheries and the limits of the territorial sea. The enactment and implementation of these measures would affect the exercise by the United States and other countries of the right to freedom of the seas in large areas of the high seas and would adversely affect our efforts to reach international agreement on the use of the seas.

The bills seek to establish pollution zones in Arctic waters up to 100 miles from every point of Canadian coastal territory above the 60th parallel. Within these zones, Canada would assert the right to control all shipping, to prescribe standards of vessel construction, navigation and operation, and to prohibit, if Canada deemed it necessary, the free passage of vessels in those waters. Additionally, the legislation seeks to authorize the establishment of exclusive Canadian fisheries in areas of the high seas beyond 12 miles, such as the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy, and of a 12-mile territorial sea off Canada's coasts.

International law provides no basis for these proposed unilateral extensions of jurisdictions on the high seas, and the United States can neither accept nor acquiesce in the assertion of such jurisdiction.

We are concerned that this action by Canada if not opposed by us, would be taken as precedent in other parts of the world for other unilateral infringements of the freedom of the seas. If Canada had the right to claim and exercise exclusive pollution and resources jurisdiction on the high seas, other countries could assert the right to exercise jurisdiction for other purposes, some reasonable and some not, but all equally invalid according to international law. Merchant shipping would be severely restricted, and naval mobility would be seriously jeopardized. The potential for serious international dispute and conflict is obvious.

The United States has long sought international solutions rather than national approaches to problems involving the high seas. We are working for appropriate action within the United Nations framework looking toward the conclusion of a new international treaty dealing with the limit of the territorial sea, freedom of transit through and over international straits and defining preferential fishing rights for coastal states on the high seas.

We are also seeking new international means for controlling pollution on the high seas. Last fall 47 countries, including the United States and Canada, participated in the preparation of two international conventions establishing the right of a coastal state to take certain limited anti-pollution measures against vessels on the high seas, and also imposing strict liability upon the owners of vessels responsible for pollution.

These

These conventions which the United States has recently signed were concluded under U.N. auspices at Brussels. Other international approaches to control of pollution are underway at NATO and the U.N. Moreover, the United States is acutely aware of the peculiar ecological nature of the Arctic region, and the potential dangers of oil pollution in that area. The Arctic is a region important to all nations in its unique environment, its increasing significance as a world trade route and as a source of natural resources. We believe the Arctic beyond national jurisdiction should be subject to internationally agreed rules protecting its assets, both living and non-living, and have noted with pleasure the Canadian Prime Minister's public statement that Canada would be prepared to enter into multilateral efforts to develop agreed rules of environmental protection. To this end, we intend shortly to ask other interested states to join in an international conference designed to establish rules for the Arctic beyond national jurisdiction by international agreement. We would be pleased if Canada were to join us in organizing such a conference.

We regret that the Canadian Government, while not excluding these cooperative international approaches to our mutual problems involving the oceans, now proposes to take unilateral action to assert its own jurisdiction and establish its own rules pending the conclusion of international agreements satisfactory to it. For the reasons indicated earlier the United States can not accept these unilateral jurisdictional assertions and we have urged the Canadian Government to defer making them effective while cooperating in efforts promptly to reach internationally agreed solutions.

If, however, the Canadian Government is unwilling to await international agreement, we have urged that in the interest of avoiding a continuing dispute and undermining our efforts to achieve international agreement, that we submit our differences regarding pollution and exclusive fisheries jurisdiction beyond 12 miles to the International Court of Justice, the forum where disputes of this nature should rightfully be settled. Canada's action last week excluded such disputes from its acceptance of the International Court's compulsory jurisdiction. However, such action only prevents Canada from being forced into the Court. It does not preclude Canada voluntarily joining with us in submitting these disputes to the Court or an appropriate chamber of the Court.

With respect to the 12 mile limit on the territorial sea, we have publicly indicated our willingness to accept such limit, but only as part of an agreed international treaty also providing for freedom of passage through and over international straits.

The history of U.S.-Canadian relations is unique in world affairs for its closeness and cooperation. We are confident that, in this spirit, our two countries will continue to resolve our differences amicably and with mutual understanding.

Barry,

Your HCS for SB 538 (school lands) is attached. It incorporates the H&E amendment and Mr. Bell's amendment regarding equivalent values. In his amendment (the fourth sentence of the section), the second to last word could read "lower" instead of "higher". He also recommends deleting "privately owned lands" from the second sentence, because it allows for a negotiated sale instead of bidding, and it puts the administrator of the provision in a difficult spot. Since the committee didn't seem to reach an agreement on this point, I left the words in; they can easily be deleted.

RE: Senate Bill 539

Dear Senator Miller:

We have reviewed the provisions of Senate Bill 539 and are somewhat at a loss to provide an accurate fiscal note for same. This is due, in part, to the rather indefinite requirement for marriage counseling, and further, to the fact that it would take more time than we have available to predict the number and cost of forms to be devised, printed and distributed to the Masters provided by the act.

As far as marriage counseling is concerned, to be available, we would have to have at least three more marriage counselors, one in Fairbanks, one in Juneau, and an additional marriage counselor in Anchorage. Each of these marriage counselors would require a secretary. Furthermore, to make their services available, the counselors would necessarily be required to ride circuit in the "Bush", and there is no way we can accurately anticipate the need for them to travel.

It is my own opinion, without regard to the ultimate merits of the bill, that the matter needs further study to determine its true costs and other ramifications.

I enclose herewith a copy of a memorandum, evaluating this bill, which I directed to be prepared by my Legal Assistant, Dr. Ernest Rehbock. I share his conclusions for the most part.

Sincerely,

FROM: EZR

SUBJECT: Some Comments on Senate Bill 539 to Provide for Alternate Procedure in Actions for Divorce

You directed my attention to a senate bill introduced March 17, 1970, and purportedly favorably voted upon by the Committee on Health, Welfare and Education. The popular name for this bill seems to be the "quickie divorce action."

Under this statute provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure relating to divorce would be amended by adding new sections.

It appears that a non-adversary action for divorce would be established under AS 09.55.231 of this bill. Residence and domicile requirements under existing law are to be maintained.

Under proposed AS 09.55.232 family court masters may be appointed to carry out these provisions. I did not discover any provisions which provide special expertise in this master and must read the bill to authorize the appointment of a standing master or of a district judge or of any magistrate of the court of Alaska to conduct divorce hearings under this statute. The superior court judge is, however, authorized to conduct these hearings if he so elects.

AS 09.55.233 provides for the services of a family court marriage counselor to the extent available for a voluntary meeting. I should add at the present time only one such counselor has been budgeted for the entire state of Alaska.

AS 09.55.234 would make the procedure applicable to a divorce over which the court has jurisdiction where custody of minor children has been settled by agreement, and property issues are limited to support and alimony questions and property is limited to such items as dwelling, trade business, personal effects and similar items.

The action as herein provided shall be commenced under 09.55.235 by filing a fee and by filing documents.

It seems to be of some importance to take note of the documents which must be filed:

1. Statement under oath by both spouses that there is incompatibility of temperament.

2. Statement by both spouses under oath containing the necessary personal data and description of property owned.

3. An agreement signed under oath by both spouses expressing the desire to terminate the marriage, expressing their wishes as to custody of children, as to alimony and as to property award.

AS 09.55.236 would regulate the scope of hearing. The hearing officer may be the family court master or the superior court judge where applicable. The hearing is concerned with the question of children custody and the fairness of the agreement as to custody and as to support money provisions, as well as property division.

AS 09.55.237 would authorize entry of decree based on findings of fact and conclusions of law unless certain appropriate objections are being made or the superior court determines the unfairness or inadequacy of the settlement.

The following comments seem appropriate:

The social policy upon which the bill is grounded is apparently that a marriage which no longer represents a meaningful social and personal relationship should be terminated if so desired by both spouses without unnecessary litigation.

It is undoubtedly correct that both under statute and court decisions Alaska is committed to incompatibility of temperament as a ground for divorce absolute regardless of the question of who is at fault for the destruction of a meaningful relationship. In jurisdictions where divorce on objective grounds is known, it has always been recognized that there must be a deep disruption of the marital relationship and that on trifle grounds the court would not grant divorce. See material listed in Gobron v. Gobron, 2 Alaska Law Journal, p. 5 (1964), which defines the conflict in personalities as one so deep as to be irreconcilable and to render it impossible for the parties to continue a normal marital relationship with each other.

The nature of this definition would seem to indicate that a judicial determination of the existence of this ground for divorce is necessary.

It is the policy of the state of Alaska that in all civil actions of some significance parties should be represented by counsel. Special provisions were made for the creation of the Alaska Legal Services Corporation for the express purpose that indigents may not be deprived of the benefit of advice of counsel.

The use of masters is encouraged under the Alaska rules and while masters are widely used under appropriate court orders for family matters, the use of masters has always been thoughtfully limited to fields of special expertise and has never been conceived as a matter which can be handled by random disposition or by voluntary submission of litigants to such a master.

In Alaska as in most jurisdictions, the drafting of legal documents pertaining to division of property, alimony and child support is considered practice of law. Litigants would not be forbidden to draft these papers themselves but any advice they may have to obtain with regard to such a settlement is legal advice and must, therefore, be forthcoming from attorneys authorized to practice law in Alaska.

In the matter of child custody and property division advice of counsel is so much more important because child custody can readily involve difficult jurisdictional questions and questions of determination of domicile and property division questions may involve technicalities of the law of real and personal property which may entirely escape the attention of the spouses or of a layman social advisor. Most of the masters which would be available to the Alaska court system to hear the so-called quickie divorce proceedings and to approve the documents submitted to them are laymen in the field of law. It must be remembered that magistrates and district judges have no jurisdiction in property actions and in equity actions and, therefore, may entirely lack the expertise necessary to make recommendations in a legal matter which concerns both property law and equity.

The fact that the superior court judge may if he so deems appropriate hear the matter himself or reverse the recommendations seems small consolation. Realistic consideration of Alaska geographic distances and of the heavy calendar with which a limited number of superior court judges have to contend will be a formidable obstacle to a meaningful review of the merits of the application and the details of the settlement in many instances.

Although the statement as to voluntariness of the action is made under oath, many litigants may not be fully aware of the nature of the action and its effect upon their children and their property possessions. Without mandatory advice of counsel such divorce action may be brought improvidently and in a manner inconsistent with the cultural and ethnic aspirations and ways of the spouses or dispositions may be made which could result in unfairness as to one of the parties.

It is my conviction that in this form at least, the bill defeats rather than implements the social policies of the state which are:

(1) Upon serious incompatability, divorce be granted.

(2) Advice of counsel shall be available.

(3) Utmost care should be taken that provisions of alimony and property divisions are in the best interests of the spouses and their minor children.

With regard to the last mentioned items, we should bear in mind that the state has a particular interest in the welfare of children. The order for custody and the provisions for child support must be so designed that the best interests of the child are protected. Neither parent is entitled to child custody as of right. AS 09.55.205. The important viewpoint of paramount consideration of the welfare of the child has been judicially expressed in numerous decisions. Bass v. Bass, 437 P.2d 324 (Alaska 1968); Ransier v. Ransier, 414 P.2d 956 (Alaska 1966). To say the least, it is unclear under the bill how the somewhat cavalier manner of submitting a statement of the parents to a master (in most cases a magistrate) can be a sufficient basis for this critical determination. In order to comport with the interest of the state, the custody and alimony disposition should in all cases have the judicial attention of the superior court judge on the basis of all relevant facts. Under the proposed bill, collusion through carelessness or ignorance may frustrate the child's interests.

I failed to mention that the question of jurisdiction over (a) the spouses (b) the custody of the children possibly out of the state and (c) alimony and support obligations, are difficult ones in divorce actions which may have multi-state aspects. It seems awkward to assume that any magistrate should be able to render such a decision without any opportunity afforded to counsel to present his views to a learned judge.

STATE OF ALASKA

KEITH H. MILLER, GOVERNOR

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

750 MACKAY BUILDING
338 DENALI STREET—ANCHORAGE 99501

May 9, 1970

The Honorable Barry Jackson, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Building
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Re: Senate Bill 543 am "An Act relating to the Alaska Transportation Commission...." which provides for removal of commissioners and the employment of hearing officers.

Dear Chairman Jackson:

The following comments are offered by the Alaska Transportation Commission to explain why such legislation is needed.

Sec. 1. Amendment to As 42.07.021(d) Removal of Commissioners

Although generally classified as an administrative body within the framework of the administrative branch of government, the Alaska Transportation Commission functions in fact, as an arm of all three branches of government. It interprets and administers the statutes intended by the legislature to provide the tools for development of a dependable, adequate and sound transportation industry and network to serve the public needs. The legislature prescribes the enabling statutory tools. However, the commission itself must develop within that statutory framework the policy, expertise and judgment which will bring about the legislature's intended result. In this task the commission must look entirely to the guidance of the legislature as expressed by statute rather than the guidance of the executive branch of the state government. Until the commission has developed a substantial body of expertise, procedure, precedence and law to fall back upon, the degree of success of the commission hinges primarily on its ability to do its job with the organization and funds provided by the legislature and the integrity, judgment, and knowledge of the appointed commissioners.

It must be recognized that the expertise essential to good regulation of the transportation industry is not acquired in a day no matter what the previous background of the commissioners may be. It is also true that optimum policies, procedures, regulations and laws are a matter of evolution and precedence.

As with the judiciary, it is necessary that a substantial degree of continuity of procedure, policy and decisions be established. Otherwise the transportation industry will be without guidelines and benefit of precedence. It is an essential ingredient of good regulation that the regulated industry and the public have confidence in the regulatory agency and some assurance of a steady direction of that agency.

All of this boils down to the factor that "commissioner" of the ATC should not be a position in which the appointee serves at the pleasure of the governor. We know of no federal or other state regulatory agency with similar regulatory responsibilities which is required to conduct its regulatory affairs and shape a transportation policy in the interest of the public under such a tenuous arrangement. The subject bill would remedy this situation by providing for removal for cause.

The commissioners should be given this assurance that they will be able to initiate and carry out long range policies, procedures and programs which will be of benefit to the public and the industry. The challenge of the objectives is the only real inducement to this job of commissioner. Neither the work load nor the pay scale are such as to attract highly qualified people to this position; and if there is no reasonable prospect of an assurance of tenure there is little inducement for well qualified people to either take the job or to remain in it.

Sec. 2. Amendment to AS 42.07.101 Hearing Officers

The commission is a quasi judicial body. It must determine in the context of the public interest the relative rights and obligations of parties who come before it. Its hearings for this purpose are governed by and conducted in substantially the same manner as a civil proceeding in a court of law. A commission decision in a contested case is analogous to a court's judgment and is appealable to a court in the same manner as a judgment.

The overriding consideration of the commission is the public interest.

Commission proceedings differ from court civil proceedings in at least one very obvious and material way. The court proceeding is typically an adversary one. The parties present opposing cases t the court and the court then decides as between the parties, which one should receive the relief sought.

The typical proceeding before the commission, however, is essentially one of fact finding. Since it is the public interest that is of primary concern in most such proceedings.

the relative relationship of opposing parties is not the predominant issue. The overriding public interest consideration necessitates the development of an adequate record upon which the commission can base a reasoned decision. And where the parties have not developed an accurate or adequate record at a hearing it is essential that the commission (through the participation of its staff as a party in the hearing) help develop the facts.

Under the present organizational setup of this commission, the three commissioners have the duties of all of the administration of the agency including the investigation and enforcement activities from which many of its formal actions begin. Further, the commissioners must hear all of the cases, render all opinions and then issue the final orders of the commission. This, in substance, requires that they be enforcement agents, jury, prosecutor, and judge for every proceeding coming before the commission.

This coagulation of all functions of the commission under the direct day to day supervision of the commissioners effectively precludes the commissioners from adequately performing what is perhaps the most important responsibility assigned to them by the legislature. In the policy statements of the various transportation Acts the legislature outlines its objectives. AS 02.05.010, for example, provides:

> "The purpose and policy of this chapter is to
> (1) recognize and preserve the inherent advantage of air commerce;
> (2) foster sound economic conditions in air commerce and among air carriers in the public interest;
> (3) promote adequate, economical and efficient service by air carriers, and reasonable charges therefor, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, and unfair or destructive competitive practices;

(4) provide for the competition necessary to assure the sound development of an air transportation system properly adapted to and adequate to meet the needs of the commerce of this state;
(5) improve the relations between and coordinate transportation by and regulation of air carriers;
(6) provide for the administration and enforcement of this chapter to avoid conflict with the regulation of air carriers by the federal government;"

The legislature wisely recognizes these elements as essential ingredients to adequate, viable, healthy, integrated transportation networks capable of satisfactorily meeting the transportation needs of the state. Transportation is the state's most basic and vital industry.

But the legislature's objectives are not attainable by simple mechanical processes.

How to accomplish these objectives initially and in the future under rapidly changing conditions is the fundamental and most important responsibility the legislature has assigned to the Transportation Commission. Unfortunately, as matters now stand this Commission has little time available to meet this responsibility. Or if it takes the time, as it frequently must (See for example the attached Exhibits A, B and C relating to CAB and ATC air service investigations, jurisdiction, policies, procedures, etc.) then hearings, decisions and other such matters become further backlogged.

This is not to say the commissioners should not have the overall responsibility for the performance and functioning of the commission staff. It is simply that there should be a much greater delegable capability, not only in the routine staff functions but in the hearing process itself. The ICC has delegated responsibility for the conduct of hearings to hearing officers since about 1906; the FTC since about 1914. Today, as Professor Kenneth Davis, one of the leading scholars on administrative law, points out, among all the federal administrative agencies, only in the Tax Court (which is an administrative agency) does the agency head actually hear and receive the evidence, conduct the hearings, personally study the record, and thereafter render his personal decisions. Says Davis:

> "Theoretically this system (of the Tax Court) could be used for handling the business for all agencies now using examiners. Why not?
> "The answer is that such a system would be grossly uneconomical. The evidence-taking process is slow and cumbersome. The job of presiding unually does not call for skills of top personnel. . . . The special skills and understanding of the agency heads should be reserved for issues of policy and overall supervision, and for troublesome problems of fact finding..... The tendency of nearly all adjudicating agencies (is) to move away from personal decisions toward institutional decisions (i.e. a decision made by an organization and not by an individual or solely by agency heads).....
> "Able administrators in many agencies acting independently of one another, have experimented and have searched for the most effective means of deciding hosts of difficult cases, and they have almost uniformly concluded that deciding officers should have the assistance both of reviewing staffs and of agency specialists."
> Davis, supra, §11.10 pp. 83, 84 and 87. Emphasis added.

It is physically impossible for the commissioners either collectively or acting individually to adequately direct the day to day operations of the staff, concurrently hold hearings and render decisions on what are frequently very complex issues and questions of fact and law, keep abreast of the ever changing transportation needs of the state and shape the policy and procedures mandated by the legislature.

As a matter of fact it is impossible for the commissioners to conduct all hearings required by the statute and decide all such cases within a reasonable time. New applications for operating authority or transfer, etc., are now coming in at an average rate of about 20 to 25 per month. Most of these are required by law to be noticed and virtually all are protested. This is true even of applications for transfer of authority. This means that since early 1969 nearly all applications have had to go to hearing; and a rapidly increasing number of these hearings are lengthy and complex. Three hearings within the past 9 months each lasted for two weeks. The transcript for the most recent of these was over 2200 pages and nearly 100 Exhibits were received in evidence. (2200 pages of transcript require about 300 hours to transcribe and type.)

Where the formal hearing of a year ago averaged about 1 to 1 1/2 days in duration, the average now is from four to five days. This, coupled with at least a 50 percent increase in applications means that hearing time requirements have magnified approximately 500 percent since a little over one year ago.

Exhibit D shows a breakdown of present hearing workload. The number of hearings yet to be held would be substantially greater but for the fact that all applications have not been noticed yet or time for protest has not yet run. As shown in Exhibit C all applications for scheduled air carrier authority are being deferred for action pending further progress in the CAB ALASKA SERVICE INVESTIGATION.

The Commission wishes to thank you and your Committee for this opportunity to testify in behalf of SB 543.

Sincerely,

Dennis L. Marvin, Commissioner

George L. Benesch, Commissioner

Jake Johnson, Commissioner

HOUSE JOURNAL

Judiciary Committee Report

on

House CS for SENATE BILL NO. 543

This bill strengthens the Alaska Transportation Commission by (1) providing that commissioners may be removed only for cause, which is necessary to attract and retain professionally qualified persons; (2) allowing for the appointment of hearing officers in appropriate cases, which is necessary to cope with the overwhelming increase in caseload and complexity of cases, increases making it physically impossible under present law for the commissioners to keep up with current applications let alone reduce the backlog; and (3) clarifying the effect of an ATC permit for collection and disposal of garbage in an area which is annexed by a local government, which is necessary in order to avoid the inequity of a local government being able to drive a garbage hauler out of business by extending its boundaries to include all or part of the area served by him and then furnishing its own municipal garbage service under AS 29.10.156.

With regard to this third point, the committee believes that the local government should not be able to nullify, without compensation, a permit granted by the ATC and that a rate structure approved by the ATC should not be undermined by action of a local government in providing garbage service at a reduced rate. In basing fair market value on the economic loss to the permit holder, when the local government exercises the power of eminent domain to acquire the operating authority from the permit holder, the effect on the remaining portion of his business, if any, is to be considered.

It is the understanding of the committee that under changes in AS 42.10, enacted in CH. 107 SLA. 1970 (HCS CSSB 271 am H), garbage-hauling services are subject to regulation by the ATC.

BEFORE THE

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ALASKA SERVICE INVESTIGATION DOCKET 20826

PETITION BY ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION FOR JOINT BOARD PROCEEDING

COMES NOW the ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION (ATC) and petitions the Civil Aeronautics Board to implement the provisions of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 USC 1324) which authorize the C.A.B. to hold joint hearings and otherwise perform such acts, to issue such orders and to make such procedure as necessary to carry out the provisions of the Act relating to cooperation with State regulatory agencies; and in keeping with the objectives of such provisions, the ATC petitions the C.A.B. to reconstitute the Alaska Service Investigation as a Joint Board proceeding to be conducted and decided jointly by the C.A.B. and the ATC.

In support of its petition, the ATC respectfully states as follows:

I

The ATC is the duly constituted regulatory agency of the State of Alaska as provided by law (Chapter AS 42.07); and as such, is the agency responsible for the regulation of intrastate air commerce under the Alaska Air Commerce Act, Chapter AS 02.05.

II

The ATC is presently a party intervenor in the Alaska Service Investigation and as such is limited to participation on the evidence-producing level and to making recommendations to the C.A.B. without first having benefit of a complete record.

III

Approximately 95 percent of all scheduled intrastate air service in Alaska is provided by air carriers regulated exclusively by the C.A.B.; and between approximately 75 and 95 percent of all traffic moving between points in Alaska is intrastate rather than interstate movement and subject to regulation by the State.

IV

The ATC has conducted informal public hearings throughout Alaska in connection with the Alaska Service Investigation. It has done this as a response to numerous requests of the public for such hearings and by virtue of the commendable understanding of the Board's Hearing Examiner in the Alaska Service Investigation who granted an extension of time to the Commission for this purpose. (All parties concurred in an extension of time substantially as requested by this Commission.) As a result of such hearings, and the Commission's additional investigations and familiarity with the intrastate air commerce needs of Alaska, the Commission has submitted, as a direct exhibit, a Position Paper directed primarily to the matters of CAB-ATC jurisdiction, regulatory objectives, and essentiality of substantially closer cooperation between the C.A.B. and this Commission. The summary of this Position Paper is attached to this petition and by reference made a part of this petition in support thereof.

V

It is essential that the jurisdictional questions be squarely faced and the utmost in cooperative effort be pursued by both the C.A.B and the ATC. This Commission currently has in its files a substantial number of applications for intrastate scheduled authority. The Commission has deferred consideration of all such applications (upon which hearings have not been held in the past six months) pending the outcome of this Alaska Service Investigation. Even where hearings had been held previous to this policy decision, the granting of authority where warranted by the public convenience and necessity has been limited to a one-year period.

It is presently intended by the Commission to systematically review the scheduled service requirements of limited geographical areas in a series of State regional service investigations and to provide for certificated service as needed in the many areas of the State.

If the C.A.B. and the ATC failed to integrate their efforts in these matters which so vitally affect the public interest, effective regulation would be very substantially frustrated.

The ATC recognizes that these matters and this petition should have been submitted to the C.A.B. at a much earlier stage in the Alaska Service Investigation proceeding (ideally at its inception or at least prior to the prehearing conference).

Unfortunately, this was not possible. The Commission was completely reorganized by repeal and reenactment of the Alaska Transportation Commission Act in May 1969 (Chapter 104, SLA 1969).

The policy developed herein is that of the new three-man Commission which Commission was not complete until January 1970. (Only one of the present three Commissioners was appointed to office prior to the prehearing conference in September 1969.)

It is the Commission's belief, however, that the Alaska Service Investigation proceeding can still be restructured as a Joint Board proceeding even at this less timely stage particularly since no new issues will be added to delay the present proceeding schedule.

WHEREFORE, the Alaska Transportation Commission respectfully requests the Civil Aeronautics Board to reconsider the unilateral nature of the Alaska Service Investigation and to more appropriately in the overall interest of the public, reconstitute it as a Joint Board proceeding by the C.A.B. and the ATC.

Respectfully submitted,

POSITION PAPER

OF

ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

STATE OF ALASKA

The official position of the Alaska Transportation Commission (ATC) in this proceeding, the ALASKA SERVICE INVESTIGATION, can be summarized as follows:

1. That this investigation of primarily-intra-Alaska service should have been initiated by the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) as a joint board proceeding (as provided for in 49 USC 1324) thereby combining the regulatory efforts of both the CAB and this Commission in this matter. However, having failed to initiate it as a joint proceeding, the investigation should, nevertheless, be concluded in that vein with a joint decision.

2. That the Alaska Transportation Commission is a state regulatory agency with responsibilities on the state level similar to the responsibilities of the CAB on the federal level; that the limited role of "party" relegated to the Commission, notwithstanding its major function as a decision making body, is highly inappropriate in this proceeding; that this Commission cannot and should not develop recommendations as to specific route authorities, realignments, competitive service, subsidies, mail service, etc., without first having before it all evidence, briefs, etc., of all parties; that further, this Commission cannot and should not make any such specific recommendations without close coordination of its policies and conclusions with the policies and conclusions of the CAB; and that this review and close coordination can only be accomplished at the decisional level of this proceeding.

3. That the standards of performance and adequacy of service being provided by CAB certificated carriers in Alaska bear directly and forcibly upon the issues in this proceeding; that the importance of these questions pervades the entire spectrum of issues; and that fact-finding, public hearings as provided for in CAB regulations [302.14 and 399.61(c)], are an essential ingredient of this proceeding if an informed decision on the issues is to evolve.

4. That the CAB is completely out of touch with the real operational conduct of its carriers in this State; that that conduct as measured in terms of service, effort, concern, public interest and operational integrity is deplorable; and that these conditions must weigh heavily in the CAB's determination of its future course of action in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

5. That the recent mergers and purchases of CAB-regulated carriers engaged in Alaska air transportation appear to have led to a substantial deterioration of intrastate service to virtually all communities and areas except those major cities where competition exists in fact.

6. That a formal and thorough investigation into matters of rate levels, rate discrimination, other discriminatory practices, accounting practices relating to separation of scheduled air transportation activities from other activities, efficiency, claims and refund practices and other matters of similar nature of Wien Consolidated Airlines and Alaska Airlines should be initiated by the CAB on its own motion as a logical outgrowth of this Service Investigation.

7. That approximately 95 percent of the scheduled intrastate air service in Alaska is being provided directly or indirectly by carriers certificated by the CAB over routes authorized thereto by the CAB and thus far regulated exclusively by the CAB. This situation has outlived its justification and has become a substantial burden on the public of Alaska.

8. That the exercise of regulatory authority by the State of Alaska should be substantially extended (preferably in cooperation with the CAB) over intrastate routes and over all carriers serving such routes. Over those routes where it remains essential or otherwise desirable for the CAB to exercise primary jurisdiction, the machinery should be established for joint regulation by the CAB and the ATC, or in the alternative, regulation by the CAB upon consultation with the ATC.

9. That the practice whereby CAB-certificated carriers subcontract the scheduled performance of segments of their routes to local state-regulated carriers is not in the public interest. It is the position of this Commission that such subcontracts are unlawful and constitute a usurpation by the CAB carrier of the regulatory jurisdiction of this Commission.

10. That the contractual arrangements for the intrastate transportation of mail are outdated, inadequate and inappropriate. This matter needs a complete review toward the end of providing better service and adequate compensation to the carrier actually performing that service.

11. That matters relating to subsidy needs of, and payments to, carriers engaged in intrastate air service (including mail service) and the use to which such subsidies are put in competitive practices are of major concern to this Commission as well as to the CAB. A realistic and imaginative review should be made of the basis and need for subsidy and the qualifications for and the formulas under which subsidies should be paid.

12. That all carriers which serve Alaska and are regulated by the CAB, including those providing on-line interstate gateway service, should be required by the CAB to file concurrently with the ATC copies of all applications for routes, exemptions, tariff changes, transfers, and all other such documents which relate to Alaskan air commerce and which are filed with the CAB. It is essential that the State of Alaska be adequately and fully apprised of those matters affecting air commerce to and within the State.

13. That there is a serious need for closer cooperation and consultation between the CAB and the ATC. This Commission recognizes that the actions taken by each agency can, and frequently do, have a significant effect on those carriers regulated by the counterpart agency. The expertise, long experience and competent staff of the CAB could be of great benefit to this Commission. Similarly, this Commission could materially assist the CAB with its need for local information, surveillance and general local contact.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The foregoing summary delineates those matters upon which the Commission takes a position at this time. The body of this Position Paper elaborates on the points raised in the summary. It provides in greater specificity some of the more important reasons for stressing those points, and it develops in greater depth some rather compelling considerations involving jurisdiction and cooperation between the CAB and the ATC.

Submitted also are a number of exhibits in three separate series groups. The "100" series is composed of ATC requested or prepared exhibits presented primarily in an informational context. The "200" series contains published economic studies relating to the economy of individual communities or areas. The "300" series consists of statements, etc., pertaining primarily to sufficiency and standard of service.

So as not to unnecessarily burden this proceeding with repetitious evidence pertaining to sufficiency and standard of service, the Commission determined to present rather extensively the views of a single community as representative of prevailing views throughout the State. This approach presupposes, of course, that a substantial identity of view exists among people throughout the State as to compatibility of evidence. Indeed, after an extensive survey, the Commission found that such an identity or view does exist to a substantial degree.

The rather extensive written expressions received from the Bethel area (Exhibits ATC-300-312) are accordingly submitted as representative of views not only throughout the Wien Consolidated route system, but (to a slightly lesser degree) throughout Alaska Airlines' system as well. 1/

These expressions from Bethel form a major part of the ATC-300 series; the remainder of that series consists of a few typical written expressions from various other communities throughout the State. The Common elements in all these expressions will easily be noted.

1/ Views of the people of Anchorage and Fairbanks and their immediate environs were not surveyed and have not been considered in arriving at these conclusions.

The official position of this Commission is expressed in this Paper and comparison of that position with the community expressions in the ATC-300 series will indicate substantial identity of view. In fact, this Paper will refer hereafter to some of those exhibits as supporting basis for various aspects of the Commission's position. The Commission does not necessarily concur in all of the community and individual views expressed in the ATC-200 and 300 series of exhibits.

THE ALASKA TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION, REGULATORY ARM OF THE STATE

The Alaska Transportation Commission was created as a separate and distinct State regulatory agency in 1966 (Chapter 139 SLA 1966, establishing Chapter AS 42.07). Prior to that time, the Alaska Air Commerce Act of 1960 was administered by the Alaska Public Service Commission. The ATC was substantially reorganized by Chapter 104 SLA 1969 in which a three-man Commission was provided in place of the previous two-man Commission.

The Commission is responsible for the administration and enforcement of the Alaska Air Commerce Act of 1960. As a general proposition, that Act provides for the regulation of air commerce within the State of Alaska in the public interest.

Three general classifications of air carrier are established by the State Air Commerce Act. They are the scheduled carrier, air taxi carrier, and the contract carrier. The Alaska law provides that for a carrier to engage in intrastate air commerce within the State, it must first be certificated by the Alaska Transportation Commission within one of these three general classifications.

In addition to certification, the Commission also regulates in varying degrees (depending upon the classification) the routes, rates, tariffs, safety of operations of aircraft, base of operations, etc., of intrastate air carriers.

The Commission also has the authority to grant exemptions to the certification requirements under specified conditions and for a limited period of time. In all cases, applications for new or revised authority must meet public convenience and necessity tests.

MORE THAN 75 PERCENT OF TOTAL PASSENGER TRAFFIC CARRIED BY CAB CARRIERS BETWEEN ALASKAN POINTS IS INTRASTATE -- THE SUBJECT OF STATE REGULATION

A review of the informational responses of Alaska Airlines and Wien Consolidated Airlines discloses that the vast majority of passengers carried between Alaskan points by CAB carriers is actually moving in intrastate commerce only.

Wien's Exhibit (WC-IR-201) containing O & D information for the month of October, 1969, shows that slightly over 90 percent of all of Wien's passenger load (including on-line and inter-line traffic) was intrastate only. And, if the number of interstate passengers who did not move intrastate beyond the points of entry into Alaska (other than between Juneau and Fairbanks) is subtracted, it can be seen that approximately 96 percent of the passenger movement over Wien's intrastate interior system was in no way involved in interstate commerce.

Similar information is not so easily developed for Alaska Airlines. However, a close examination of the Southeast Alaska network of Alaska Airlines reveals that at least as to that part of its system, the vast majority of the passenger movement between Southeast Alaska communities is strictly intrastate.

With some exceptions, Alaska Airlines did not disclose October, 1969, O & D information for most of its Southeast Alaska bush route system. However, from the information that was provided as well as other information available to this Commission including special O & D information requested by this Commission of Southeast Alaska air taxi subcontractors and other operators, it appears that over 90 percent of the scheduled inter-community passenger movement in Southeast Alaska in October, 1969, was intrastate.
