MEMORANDUM

Senate

TO: All Members
House Health, Education and Social Services Committee

FROM: Senator Pat Rodev

DATE: February 5, 1988

RE: SB 79, "An Act relating to runaway and missing minors."

On Wednesday, February 10th, the House HESS Committee is scheduled to hear SB 79. As prime sponsor of SR 79, I am writing in advance to let you know of my satisfaction with the proposed House HESS committee substitute for this bill, and to request your swift action in moving this bill forward.

In its' current form, SB 79 will provide greater flexibility for law enforcement officers dealing with runaways, and allows for temporary detention in very limited cases. The House HESS Committee substitute has added new language requiring the Department of Health and Social Services to review, inspect and approve all private runaway and homeless youth programs.

The Department of Health and Social Services, parent's rights groups, and Covenant House have worked together to develop this bill, and all support its' passage.

I appreciate your consideration and encourage you to call if you have any questions.

POSITION PAPER

HOUSE CS FOR CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 79 (HESS)

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to runaway and missing minors."

NATURE AND SCOPE OF THE PROBLEM

The common perception that runaways are simply troublesome or disobedient youth who leave home for adventure is not supported by fact. Most runaways come from severely troubled homes. Others run from families in which parents lack skills in communication, conflict resolution, discipline, and other important parenting skills.

Studies both nationally and in Alaska indicate that youth run away from home in general because of:

- 1) family conflict;
- 2) physical or sexual abuse or neglect;
- 3) alcohol or drug abuse of a parent or the child;
- 4) school problems;
- 5) family instability or dysfunction.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children cites one study which found that 40% of runaways were physically abused in their homes and that 70% of female and 40% of male runaways were victims of sexual abuse. An estimated 20-30% of youth who are identified as runaways have actually been forced out of their homes.

There is no definitive data on the numbers of runaway youth in Alaska. The most thorough study to date focused only on the Anchorage area.¹ That study concluded that there are at least 1,200 known runaways in the Anchorage area and estimated that at least 3,600 youths run away or are forced from their homes in that area each year. Based on the Anchorage study, population distribution, and the distribution of runaways served by the Division of Family and Youth Services it can be estimated that there are probably 2,400 and possibly as many as 7,000 runaways in Alaska each year.

Most youth who leave home without parental permission for at least 24 hours do so only once or twice and most (80%) return home voluntarily within 2-7 days. Only a small percentage become chronic runaways. Chronic runaways and the 20-30% of "runaway" youth who are forced from their homes - the castaways or throwaways - are the youth who are at highest risk of being victimized or committing a crime.

EFFECTS OF HCSCSSB 79 (HESS)

Key provisions of this bill address several issues related to the problems of runaway and homeless youth and their families. These include:

Reporting

Section 1 would make the reporting of runaway and missing youth easier for parents by requiring police agencies to respond to telephonic as well as written requests to locate these youths. This could increase the usefulness of such reports to law enforcement agencies by making the reports more timely.

Placement of Runaways Taken into Custody

Section 1 makes changes in the placement options available when a runaway is taken into protective custody by a law enforcement agency. It maintains the ability of a youth to choose between returning home and other available placements. However, it requires that a parent consent to the return of a child to the home. This is intended to address parental concerns that they are now required to accept their child's return home and assume responsibility to care for the child even if they believe the child will be beyond their control when the law enforcement officer is no longer present. The Department does not support this provision viewing it as unnecessary, since parents can and do refuse to accept return of their children under present law, and as poor policy, potentially encouraging parents to shift parental responsibilities to the state. However, the Department would not oppose the bill solely because of this provision.

This Section also establishes two additional placement options to which police would be required to take a runaway child in protective custody. These are: 1) a "nearby location" agreed to by the child and parent, and 2) an approved runaway program. The first of these is intended to allow a child to be taken to a safe location (such as the home of a relative or family friend) when both the child and parent agree that the location is suitable and preferable to the child returning home. The second option would allow placement of a child in an approved runaway program defined in other sections of the bill. This allows the child another option beyond an office or contract agency of the Department.

Detention of Runaways

Section 2 would address the problem of protecting runaways who endanger themselves by allowing their temporary detention under certain limited circumstances. Runaways could be detained only by court order and only when: 1) a prior court order has been violated, 2) the youth's circumstances present a severe and imminent danger, and 3) no reasonable alternative to detention exists. Youth detained under these circumstances could be held in youth facilities only - detention in a jail or other secure facility holding adult prisoners would be prohibited. A runaway detained under the proposed AS 47.10.141(c) must be brought before a court within 48 hours to determine if the youth is in civil contempt of court.

It is the understanding of the Department that it is intended that these youth not be subject to an adjudication of delinquency for contempt of court. In any event, it would be the policy of the Department not to initiate delinquency proceedings on the basis of a contempt of court citation in the absence of another delinquent act.

Development of Innovative Programs for Runaways

The bill would promote the development of innovative programs for runaway and homeless youth in several ways. It would:

1. define a specific type of program for runaway and homeless youth including the general requirements and some specific responsibilities of such programs;
2. establish within the Department of Health and Social Services review, inspection, and approval authority over such programs;
3. exempt from licensure approved runaway programs of the statutorily defined type;
4. immunize officers and employees of these programs from liability for civil damages for admission and release actions but not from reckless or intentional misconduct;
5. authorize the Department to award grants for the establishment and operation of approved programs;

The runaway programs defined by the bill could provide needed alternative placements for runaway youth where these youth could be safely sheltered and receive medical and counseling services while reunification efforts are begun. The mechanism of supporting these services through grants to approved programs has proven effective with other preventive services and is supported by the Department.

DEPARTMENT POSITION

The Department supports this bill as an effective means of addressing many of the troubling problems of runaway youth.

The development of much needed shelter services for runaway and homeless youth would be encouraged by the bill and the utilization of shelter and attendant reunification services by these youth may be increased by its provisions. By allowing youth to reside in approved facilities for 45 days without the consent of custodians, the bill establishes a non-punitive approach for these programs which may be viewed by runaway youth as safer and more attractive than other options. Increased use of shelter and reunification services would also be encouraged by the provision establishing such facilities as a placement option for runaway youth taken into custody by police.

Importantly, the bill achieves a careful balance in its approach to the use of detention to protect runaways. The bill avoids the damaging and ineffective use of detention as a means of addressing the problems of most runaways by limiting the use of detention to those few chronic runaways whose behavior places them in clear danger. It also avoids the danger of over use of detention by requiring that detention occur only on order of the alternative exists. The bill provides a critical protection for these non-criminal youth by prohibiting their detention in adult jails avoiding the inherent dangers of mixing youths with adult prisoners.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

There is a need to have a solution for protecting minors other than to arrest and detain them. Society simply cannot allow runaway minors to seek shelter on the streets. These youngsters often commit criminal acts simply to survive, and they frequently become victims of crimes themselves.

This bill allows law enforcement to act in a preventative manner on behalf of the community and those reported minors who are avoiding legal custodial control, or are considered missing from their normal custodial situation, by requiring the minor to go to an appropriate housing facility and ultimately address the issues underlying the "running".

The Department supports this bill.

POSITION PAPER
CSEB 79 (HESS)

APR 21 1987

This bill mandates the efforts of law enforcement agencies in locating runaway minors. The revised subsection (c) now also mandates the detention of the minor if the minor is a runaway in violation of a valid court order under subsection (f) and is posing a clear and present danger to the minor's own welfare.

The revised subsection (c) is a great improvement over previous language requiring a thirty-day detention of a second-time runaway. However, the current bill could result in the detention of first-time runaways because a standard order would be issued pursuant to subsection (f) listing the consequences of violation. Thus, a finding of violation of a court order would be easily made if the minor left the placement. Many, if not most, cases would involve a finding of "clear and present danger" because most children would present a danger to themselves if not living in a safe environment.

If the primary purpose of the bill is to provide for the detention of chronic runaways, then language requiring a finding under subsection (c) that the child had exhibited previous runaway behavior would assure that detention would be used only for repeat runaways.

The Office of Public Advocacy would support CSSB 79 (HESS) if the statute expressly targeted the limited population of chronic runaways.

Re:CSSB79-Runaway Minors

Dear Representative Sund,

This letter is intended to advise you of my support for the provisions in CSSB79 which will enable the Department of Health & Social Services to facilitate the development of programs and services for runaway minors.

At the same time I am also concerned about Sec. 2 of the Bill and its potential for violation of the constitutional rights of minors adjudicated Child In Need of Aid under AS 47.10.080. At present, incarceration in McLaughlin Youth Center is not one of the dispositional alternatives possible for a Child In Need of Aid because the child has not broken the law and therefore cannot be deprived of her/his constitutional right to liberty. Yet, Sec.2 of CSSB 79 would appear to permit such an alternative if the child violates a court order which requires that he/she remain in the placement ordered by the Department of Health & Social Services. To provide for institutionalizing children adjudicated delinquent who violate a court order not to run away is already permitted under present statutes, but to do so for children who have not broken the law would be a mistake in my opinion. I realize that CSSB 79 intends that such an alternative would only be utilized in the most extreme cases where "no reasonable placement alternative" exists, but the constitutionality still seems questionable.

I believe that the House Judiciary Committee should consider amending CSSB79 to limit the provisions of Sec. 2 to only those minors who have been adjudicated delinquent or eliminate it altogether.

If the Committee decides to retain Sec. 2 it would also seem advisable that the statute delineate the possible consequences of a contempt of court finding so that minors can be made aware of actions that the court may take while at the same time providing guidance for the court in these situations.

Sec. 3 of the Bill also raises some concerns about situations where the minor might have had good reason to run from a Department arranged placement. Nor does it require that consideration be given to such possibility before the court holds the minor in contempt. I would urge the Committee to consider amending CSSB 79 to require such consideration and make it part of the court record in a contempt hearing.

I would very much appreciate notification regarding future hearings on CSSB 79 so that I could give testimony on these issues. The portions of the Bill which support the development of runaway shelters and other runaway services is badly needed in Alaska and should proceed to final passage as rapidly as possible.

Thank you for your consideration of my concerns regarding CSSB 79 and the issue of runaway minors.

Re: Runaway Legislation

Dear Jim:

As we discussed over the phone, I am enclosing, with some trepidation, some tentative language on protective custody of runaways. The basis for this language is, of course, Senate Bill No. 79, Section 2, but the enclosed proposal includes substantial modifications of the original version.

All of us in this field view secure detention of runaways with a jaundiced eye; it is almost never a treatment strategy of choice. Nevertheless we are all forced to concede that some runaways--an extremely tiny minority, but not an insignificant absolute number--are embarked on a course so clearly self-destructive that all other hopes for them pale beside the need simply to keep them alive. In rare instances, it is impossible to deny that protective custody of short duration and in carefully controlled conditions can be a crucial legal implement.

The enclosed language attempts to recognize the need for the existence of such a remedy and the need to make its use extremely unusual. Such balancing does not lend itself to utter simplicity of language, but I hope the redefined standard is a clear one. Certainly this is an issue which we are all likely to be still struggling over 20 years hence, but perhaps some imperfect but manageable compromise is possible in the interim.

Please don't construe this proposal as an official Covenant House document; I have had no time to allow it to be reviewed carefully by other senior staff here, and Fr. Ritter has not been available to review it either. Still it does suggest, I think, our general view that absolutes on both sides of the secure-detention issue are mistaken, and that our best bet is to allow some leeway for case-by-case consideration of endangered runaways under clear and stringent standards.

Protective Custody

Sec. 2. AS 47.10.141 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) A minor may be taken into protective custody by a peace officer and placed into temporary detention in a juvenile detention facility if there has been an order issued by a court upon a finding of probable cause that: (1) the minor is a runaway in violation of a valid court order issued under AS 47.10.142(f), (2) the minor's current situation poses a severe and imminent risk to the minor's health or safety, and (3) no reasonable placement alternative exists within the community. For the purposes of this subsection, a risk shall not be considered "severe and imminent" based solely on general conditions for runaway minors in the community, but must be assessed in view of the specific behavior and situation of the minor at issue. A minor detained under this subsection shall be brought before a court within 48 hours after the detention for a hearing to determine whether the minor is in civil contempt of court under AS 09.50.010(5). On no account may protective custody include placement of a minor in any jail or secure facility other than a licensed juvenile detention facility, nor may an order for such custody be enforced against a minor currently residing in a duly licensed runaway and homeless youth program.

Re: SB 79 (Hess) "An Act relating to runaway and missing minors"

Dear Representative Sund,

Having recently obtained a Work Draft of SB 79, I feel compelled to write and urge its passage based upon personal experience, as well as recommend related statute changes.

When in January of this year our sixteen year old daughter ran away, we quickly learned that her age was a liability to our finding and recovering her. Even when we learned of her whereabouts, the Juneau Police could not legally enter the premises and remove her, even though she was living with a nineteen year old man -- AN ADULT. Under Alaska's existing laws, she can pretty much do as she pleases, when, where and with whom, so long as she does not violate a criminal law! Because she knows this, our hands are tied in keeping her under control or imposing reasonable limits and curfews upon her.

While some are, not all runaway children are from abusive, alcoholic or drug addicted households -- nor are these children all drug/alcohol abusers. Some, like our daughter, are rebellious in their endeavor to grow up quickly, but lack restraint and common sense. She has admitted to experimenting with alcohol and drugs, but her main complaint is that we are "unfair" to impose a midnight weekend curfew on her. Consequently, if she doesn't wish to come home on time she has chosen not to return all night, encouraged to stay by her nineteen year old boyfriend.

I do not believe you can enact effective new runaway legislation which defines runaway minor as "a person under 18 years of age," without amending the statutory age of consent. These statutes are very closely related to the runaway minor problem, but exclude those over the age of 16 except in specific circumstances:

Section 11.51.130. Contributing the delinquency of a minor, if
"...being 19 years of age or older, the person
(5) aids, induces, causes, or encourages a child under 16 years of age to be absent from the custody of a parent, guardian, or custodian or to be repeatedly absent from school, without just cause."

Our daughter was aided and encouraged on the run for eleven days: four days by an adult woman; seven by a nineteen year old man -- neither saw fit to call and let us know of her whereabouts or welfare. And, she missed six days of school during this period, "without just cause," but this law, due to her age, precludes our doing anything about it.

If a minor is to be defined as a person under 18 years of age, this statute should be amended to read:

"...being 18 years of age or older, the person
(5) aids, induces, causes, or encourages a child under 18 years of age to be absent from the custody of a parent, guardian, or custodian..."

Sec.11.41.434, 11.41.436 -- Sexual abuse of a minor in the first and second degree, protect children under the age of 16, however, both state:

"...being 18 years of age or older, the offender engages in sexual penetration (contact) with a person who is under 18 years of age and who
(A) is entrusted to the offender's care by authority of law; or
(B) is the offender's son or daughter...;

I am appalled to see that the State feels a need to protect only those under 18 whom the State has "entrusted to the offender's care by authority of law...is the offender's son or daughter..." Why only protect children under the State's care, and not ones over 16 but under 18 unless they fit into these exclusive categories?

I believe these sections should be amended to read:

"...being 18 years of age or older, the offender engages in sexual penetration (contact) with a person who is under 18 years of age and not the wife/husband of the perpetrator."

This would eliminate the need for an "and who", protecting all minor children.

ALL CHILDREN deserve equal protection under the law. That we are not alone in this plight -- having a child whose age excludes her from protection under existing law, thereby depriving us of parental authority to restrict her activities and behavior -- makes it all the more deplorable!

As parents we should have the right to demand this protection for our children; we are legally responsible for them until they reach age 18. What we have now undermines the morality of the child and sanctity of family...Encourages rebellious behavior, and gives parents no legal recourse if their child falls under the influence of, or is sexually exploited by an adult.

If equal protection cannot be achieved under the law: I respectfully recommend that the State of Alaska automatically emancipate all minors at age sixteen. That the State assume responsibility as well as liability of these children who it has essentially emancipated by excluding them from equal protection.

Representative Sund, these children are our future: But many of them are running away without just cause, defying parental authority, becoming dope addicts, alcoholics, promiscuous, pregnant and more. These children need legal limits upon their activities until such a time as they are mature enough to make responsible decisions for themselves.

Until there are laws designed to prosecute those 18 years of age or older who "aide, encourage..." or sexually use minors under 18 years of age, the runaway minor problem will continue. Only fear of prosecution will preclude irresponsible adults from encouraging juveniles in rebellious pursuit and delinquent behavior.

WHERE THERE IS NO PENALTY, THERE IS NO DETERRENT!

Please consider this: Unless something is done soon, today's adolescents will be adults in the near future, aiding and encouraging runaways, contributing to the delinquency and moral decay of TOMORROW'S YOUNG -- immune from prosecution!

Sincerely,

Mrs. Betty J. Johnson

Delinquency, runaway behavior linked to abuse

By GLENN COLLINS
The News Staff Writer

NEW YORK — A study of adolescent runaways has provided new evidence that physical and sexual abuse are important contributors not only to chronic runaway behavior, but also to delinquency and emotional difficulties.

The study of 149 youths, between the ages of 12 and 20 found that running away was often a symptom of family distress. High levels of conflict and aggression were common in the families of repetitive runaways, as well as a lack of commitment and mutual support.

Frequently the families set impossibly high expectations for children without helping them to be competent or independent.

The research, financed by a grant from the United States Justice Department, were presented at a recent conference in Toronto. Among the findings are these:

- Seventy-three percent of the runaways had been physically beaten, and 43 percent of them cited physical abuse as an important reason for leaving home.

- Seventy-three percent of the girls and 38 percent of the boys reported having been sexually abused. "We believe that the females were more likely than males to have experienced physical and sexual abuse and to encounter subsequent emotional difficulties," said the study's principal investigator.

Dr. Ann W. Burgess, who is the van Ameringen Professor of Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing at the University of Pennsylvania's School of Nursing.

- Sexually abused runaways were more likely to report suicidal feelings and anxiety than those who had not been abused. They were also more likely to be afraid of being abandoned to feel as if they were going crazy.

- Homeless girls who had been sexually

Youth problems often signal family distress abused were more likely to have trouble in school, to be engaged in delinquent and criminal activity, to have participated in acts of violence and to have used alcohol and drugs.

- Runaway boys who had been sexually abused were more likely to be withdrawn, to report being depressed, to have difficulty forming and sustaining friendships. Both boys and girls, and they also reported more physical complaints, such as headaches and stomach aches.

"We need to change the way that people look at runaways," said Burgess, who will present the study's findings at the First Annual Symposium on Street Youth, a gathering of experts on homeless youngsters.

"People attach labels to them like 'wayward' or 'delinquent,'" she said. "But often the running away is simply a symptom of other problems that need attention."

She added: "We don't want to romanticize these kids -- they are no angels -- but they are often the victims of one sort of abuse or another."

The research was conducted as part of an ongoing study of child abuse and criminal behavior financed by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention of the Justice Department.

The randomly selected subjects were studied at Under 21, a crisis-intervention shelter in Toronto run by Covenant House, which also has shelters in New York City, Houston and Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Eighty-one percent of the mostly middle-class subjects were white, and all participants were promised anonymity.

Studies have estimated that from 9 to 12 percent of American children between the ages of 12 to 17 run away from home at least once. "Runaways are commonly perceived as 'Tom Sawyer types' who take off because they're lured by excitement or adventure," said the Rev. Mark-David Janus, a chaplain at the University of Connecticut who contributed to the research and served as consultant at Covenant House.

But chronic runaways "are more likely to have been abused and battered," he added. "Remember, Huck Finn left his father because he was beaten, and David Copperfield left home because of his cruel stepfather. This is closer to the truth we see."

Of the runaways, 46 percent came from "intact" families where two birth parents were present; 31 percent came from single-parent families where one birth parent was present, and 23 percent came from stepfamilies where one birth parent plus a stepparent was present.

The research suggested that financial stability was a more important factor in the abuse of runaways than the type of family structure. About 48 percent of the runaways had come from families that had experienced financial difficulty, and runaways from these homes were more likely to report physical or sexual abuse.

Although often "single-parent families are negatively stereotyped in our culture," Burgess said, there was no more abuse in single-parent families than in intact families when they had adequate income.

Often the runaways' families had been highly critical of the youths. Many were "heavily put down drastically," Burgess said, "and the kids internalized this and often had a very low self-concept."

The researchers found that many of the abused runaways displayed confusion about appropriate nurturing by adults. After running away, the youths were often vulnerable to pimps and others offering some degree of what the youngsters regarded as protection and affection.

Burgess' collaborators in the study, in addition to Janus, included Judith Wood, Dr. Arlene McCormack, Dr. Carol R. Hartman and Peter Gaccone.

The runaways were asked to complete drawings for the researchers. Some graphically illustrated anxiety or insecurity, as evidenced in broken or indecisive lines, according to Wood, one of the researchers and the director of the Therapeutic Arts Program at the Children's Hospital in Boston.

Other drawings suggested evidence of past sexual trauma or physical abuse. These runaways drew only partial pictures of human bodies or showed only the head, symbolizing the need to avoid confronting the abuse, the researchers said.

Burgess said the research called into question the way runaways are commonly treated by the criminal-justice system. Social and legal agencies often detain runaways with the goal of returning them to their families, "and that may simply set the stage for a repeat runaway episode," Burgess said.

"You can't assume that returning them to the home is a solution," she said, "yet at the same time our foster homes and group homes aren't free from abuse either." She said the evidence suggests that chronic runaways eventually become involved in the criminal-justice system as offenders, "and then they begin to prey on society."

She added: "We can't put our heads in the sand. It's looking more and more as if society pays a high price for failing to attend to the sexually abused child, if we consider the secondary effects such as substance abuse, suicide, delinquency and criminal behavior — plus what it does to them and their families."

Runaway youth: Another view

By Cecilia Kleinkauf

In spite of a number of recent reports and articles on runaway youth in Anchorage, the fact remains that the true extent of the problem is not known. Numerical totals in the thousands, often quoted to reflect the "epidemic" proportions of the problem have not, for the most part, been the result of valid scientific research. Nevertheless, most citizens, law enforcement and human service agency personnel would agree that runaway children exist as a population in need of attention.

The causes of runaway behavior are as individual as each family and each runaway youth, and research is only beginning to provide us with information which reflects patterns of running away in response to family problems, physical or sexual abuse or peer pressure.

"Blame" for the problem has been inaccurately and inappropriately placed by some onto the legislature and the courts — since the statutes which formerly criminalized status offenders (children who are runaways, truant from school or curfew violators) and those which dealt with other dependent and neglected children were revised in 1977. These revisions followed a review of Alaska's procedures, relevant research findings and federal law which was conducted by the 1975-76 Childrens Code Task Force — a group of citizens and professionals jointly appointed by the legislature and the governor to conduct such a review.

Many of the Task Force's recommendations were based upon the Federal Runaway and Homeless Youth Act — Title III of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act. This legislation has as its objective the diversion of non-violent, less serious offenders from an already overburdened juvenile justice system, the provision of services to meet the needs of youth during the runaway episode, reuniting the youth and family, encouraging the resolution of family problems, strengthening the family relationship and assisting the youth in deciding upon a future course of action.

Since Alaska complied with the Act's mandate for criminalization of status offenders in 1977, the state has continued to receive federal money. The $225,000 currently received is being utilized to develop methods to remove (or prevent) youth from being held in adult jails as often occurs in rural Alaska. This right to be held in custody separated from adults derives from children's constitutionally protected right to liberty. Like adults, however, children can be institutionalized if they break the law or are determined to be a danger to themselves or others under Alaska's mental health statutes.

The issue, therefore, is not a need for more restrictive laws but rather a need to provide services to youth and their families which will address family conflicts and also protect youth who are away from home from exploitation. Current Alaska Statutes (A.S. 47.10.141) require that law enforcement agencies "take into protective custody" minors "evading the minor's legal custodian" and either return the child home or take the child to the Alaska Division of Family and Youth Services. DFYS is then required to assess the situation and provide social services or foster home placement. The problems arise with the extreme lack of social work staff to provide ongoing support services or monitoring of the situation or in the fact that many children do not come into contact with law enforcement of DFYS.

A major area of need is the provision of a comprehensive range of services from preventive counseling and support, and parenting classes to emancipation services for older youth. The Runaway Youth Act, for instance, mandates a 24-hour seven-day-a-week youth shelter where children may go to escape situations on the street. Instead, Anchorage has only 22 shelter beds at Alaska Youth and Parent Foundation, 14 of which are contracted for by DFYS and eight of which require parental consent. Most parents of runaway youth list their major concern as the safety of their child, yet Anchorage does not seem able to mobilize to provide the same safety and shelter for homeless youth that it does for its other homeless street-people.

Runaway shelters in other states which provide safety from the streets are required to notify the child's family of the child's whereabouts as a way of easing a family's concerns and alleviating claims that such shelters encourage running or harbor runaways. Such notification would also be required in any Anchorage shelter as statutes already provide for mandatory parental notice.

Many older youth and their families also need emancipation services as it becomes evident that family reunification is not possible. Rather than incarcerate such youth at high cost to the state as some suggest, legal emancipation accompanied by supportive group homes from which the youth can finish school or become employed and independent are much more productive and cost effective.

Public policy solutions to the runaway problem such as those which deprive youth of their constitutional rights or which seek to have the state punish the youth for the parent will not solve the problem. Instead, support for the services which families need in times of stress will produce a more individualized and positive result.

2 HOUSE CS FOR CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 79 (Judiciary)

3 IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

4 FIFTEENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

5 A BILL

6 For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to runaway and missing minors."

7 BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

8 * Section 1. AS 47.10.050(b) is amended to read:

9 (b) In a contempt hearing under AS 47.10.141(c) and in all
10 proceedings initiated under a petition for delinquency, a minor shall 11 have the right to be represented by counsel and if indigent have 12 counsel appointed by the court. The court shall appoint counsel in 13 such cases unless it makes a finding on the record that the minor has 14 made a voluntary, knowing, and intelligent waiver of the right to 15 counsel and a parent or guardian with whom the child resides or re-16 sided before the filing of the petition concurs with the waiver. In 17 cases in which it has been alleged that the minor has committed an act
18 which would be a felony if committed by an adult, waiver of counsel 19 shall not be accepted unless the court is satisfied that the minor has 20 consulted with an attorney before the waiver of counsel.

21 * Sec. 2. AS 47.10.141 is amended to read:

22 Sec. 47.10.141. RUNAWAY AND MISSING MINORS. (a) Upon receiving 23 a written, telephonic, or other request to locate a minor evading the 24 minor's legal custodian or to locate a minor otherwise missing, a law
25 enforcement agency shall make reasonable efforts to locate the minor 26 and shall immediately complete a missing person's report containing 27 information necessary for the identification of the minor. As soon as 28 practicable, but not later than 24 hours after completing the report,
29 the agency shall transmit the report for entry into the Alaska Public

1 Safety Information Network and the National Crime Information Center
2 computer system. As soon as practicable, but not later than 24 hours
3 after the agency learns that the minor has been located, it shall 4 request that the Department of Public Safety and the Federal Bureau of 5 Investigation remove the information from the computer systems.

6 (b) A peace officer shall take into protective custody a minor
7 described in (a) of this section if the minor is not otherwise subject
8 to arrest or detention. The peace officer shall honor the minor's
9 preference to [EITHER] (1) return the minor to the legal custodian;
10 the legal custodian consents to the return; (2) take the minor to 11 nearby location agreed to by the minor and the legal custodian; or ( 12 [(2)] take the minor to an office specified by the Department
13 Health and Social Services, a program for runaway minors licensed
14 the department under AS 47.10.310, or a facility or contract agency
15 the department. If an office specified by the department, a licens
16 program for runaway minors, or a facility or contract agency of t
17 department does not exist in the community, the officer shall take t
18 minor to another suitable location and promptly notify the departmen
19 A minor under protective custody may not be housed in a jail or 20 except as provided in (c) of this section, in a [OTHER] detent
21 facility. Immediately upon taking a minor into protective custody
22 the officer shall advise the minor orally and in writing of the rights
23 social services under AS 47.10.142(b), and, if known, the officer
24 shall advise the legal custodian that the minor has been taken into 25 protective custody.

26 * Sec. 3. AS 47.10.141 is amended by adding a new subsection to read

27 (c) A minor may be taken into protective custody by a peace
28 officer and placed into temporary detention in a juvenile detention 29 home if there has been an order issued by a court upon a finding

1 probable cause that (1) the minor is a runaway in wilful violation of 2 a valid court order issued under AS 47.10.080 or 47.10.142(f), (2) the 3 minor's current situation poses a severe and imminent risk to the 4 minor's health or safety, and (3) no reasonable placement alternative
5 exists within the community. For the purposes of this subsection, a 6 risk may not be considered severe and imminent solely because of the 7 general conditions for runaway minors in the community, but shall be 8 assessed in view of the specific behavior and situation of the minor.
9 A minor detained under this subsection shall be brought before a court
10 within 24 hours after the detention for a hearing to determine whether 11 the minor is in contempt of court under AS 09.50.010(5). Protective
12 custody may not include placement of a minor in a jail or secure
13 facility other than a juvenile detention home, nor may an order for 14 protective custody be enforced against a minor who is residing in a 15 licensed program for runaway minors, as defined in AS 47.10.390.

16 * Sec. 4. AS 47.10.142 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

17 (f) When a minor is committed to the department for temporary
18 placement under (e) of this section, the court order shall specify the 19 terms, conditions, and duration of placement. The court shall require 20 the minor to remain in the placement provided by the department and 21 shall clearly state in the order the consequences of violating the
22 order, including the possibility of detention under AS 47.10.141(c).

23 * Sec. 5. AS 47.10 is amended by adding new sections to read:

24 ARTICLE 5. PROGRAMS FOR RUNAWAY MINORS.

25 Sec. 47.10.300. POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE DEPARTMENT. The de-
26 partment shall

27 (1) review, inspect, and approve or disapprove for licens-
28 ing proposed or established programs for runaway minors to ensure the 29 health and safety of minors in the program;

1 (2) maintain a register of licensed programs for runaway
2 minors;

3 (3) award grants for the establishment or operation of 4 licensed programs for runaway minors;

5 (4) submit to the legislature and governor each January a
6 report on programs for runaway minors in the state;

7 (5) adopt regulations for the administration of AS 47.10.-
8 300 - 47.10.390, including regulations providing for the coordination
9 of services to be provided by licensed programs for runaway minors and 10 by the department.

11 Sec. 47.10.310. LICENSING OF PROGRAMS FOR RUNAWAY MINORS. (a)
12 A person may not operate a program for runaway minors in the state
13 without a license issued under this section. A person who violates 14 this subsection is guilty of a violation.

15 (b) The department may license a program for runaway minors
16 under AS 47.10.300 - 47.10.390 only if the program

17 (1) is operated by a corporation organized under AS 10.20
18 or a municipality; and

19 (2) meets the requirements of (c) of this section.

20 (c) A program for runaway minors shall

21 (1) explain to a minor who seeks assistance from the pro-
22 gram the legal rights and responsibilities of runaway minors and the 23 services and assistance provided for runaway minors by the program and 24 by the state or local municipality;

25 (2) attempt to determine why a minor in the program is a
26 runaway;

27 (3) provide or help arrange for the provision of services
28 necessary to promote the health and welfare of a minor in the program
29 and, if appropriate, members of the minor's family; services may

1 include, but are not limited to, the provision of food, shelter,
2 clothing, medical care, and individual or family counseling;

3 (4) promptly inform the department of a minor in the pro-
4 gram who claims to be the victim of child abuse or neglect, as defined
5 in AS 47.17.070, or whom an employee of the program has cause to 6 believe has been a victim of child abuse or neglect;

7 (5) be operated with the goal of reuniting runaway minors
8 with their families, except in cases in which reunification is clearly
9 contrary to the best interest of the minor; and

10 (6) maintain adequate staffing and accommodations to ensure
11 physical security and to provide crisis services to minors residing in 12 a facility operated by the program; residents under 18 years of age
13 shall be segregated from residents who are 18 years of age or older.

14 (d) A program for runaway minors may provide services for the 15 protection of the health and welfare of a person under 21 years of age
16 who is in need of the services and who is without a place of shelter
17 in which supervision and care of the person are available.

18 Sec. 47.10.320. RESIDENCE IN RUNAWAY MINOR PROGRAM FACILITIES.
19 A runaway minor may maintain residency for a period not exceeding 45
20 days at a facility operated as part of a licensed program for runaway
21 minors. The minor may maintain residency without the consent of the 22 person or agency having custody of the minor, except that if the court
23 has ordered the minor committed to the custody of the department,
24 written consent of the department is required. The residency may be
25 extended for an additional period of 45 days with the written consent
26 of the person or agency having custody of the minor. A minor may not 27 maintain residency beyond the 90th day following admission to a li-28 censed program for runaway minors without the written consent of the 29 person or agency having custody of the minor and the written consent

1 of the department.

2 Sec. 47.10.330. NOTICE TO MINOR'S LEGAL CUSTODIAN. (a) The
3 director of a program for runaway minors shall make a good faith
4 effort to notify a minor's legal custodian as soon as possible, but in 5 no event more than 48 hours after the minor is admitted to the pro-
6 gram, unless there are compelling circumstances that justify with-7 holding notice. The notice must describe the minor's physical and 8 emotional condition and the circumstances surrounding the minor's
9 admission to the program.

10 (b) The director of a program for runaway minors shall promptly
11 notify a minor's legal custodian if the minor is released from the 12 program into the custody of a person other than the legal custodian or 13 a person representing the legal custodian.

14 Sec. 47.10.340. CONFIDENTIALITY OF RECORDS. Records of a li-15 censed program for runaway minors that identify a minor who has been
16 admitted to or has sought assistance from the program are confidential
17 and are not subject to inspection or copying under AS 09.25.110 -
18 09.25.120, unless

19 (1) after being informed of the minor's right to privacy,
20 the minor consents in writing to the disclosure of the records;

21 (2) the records are relevant to an investigation or pro-
22 ceeding involving child abuse or neglect or a child in need of aid
23 petition; or

24 (3) disclosure of the records is necessary to protect the
25 life or health of the minor.

26 Sec. 47.10.350. IMMUNITY FROM LIABILITY. (a) The officers, 27 directors, and employees of a licensed program for runaway minors are 28 not liable for civil damages as a result of an act or omission in 29 admitting a minor to the program.

1 (b) This section does not preclude liability for civil damages
2 as a result of recklessness or intentional misconduct.

3 Sec. 47.10.360. MUNICIPAL POWERS. Authority to establish and
4 operate a licensed program for runaway minors is granted to munic-
5 ipalities that do not otherwise have that authority.

6 Sec. 47.10.390. DEFINITIONS. In AS 47.10.300 - 47.10.390

7 (1) "licensed program for runaway minors" means a residen-
8 tial or nonresidential program licensed by the department under
9 AS 47.10.310;

10 (2) "runaway minor" means a person under 18 years of age
11 who

12 (A) is habitually absent from home;

13 (B) refuses to accept available care;

14 (C) has no parent, guardian, custodian, or relative
15 able or willing to provide care; or

16 (D) has been physically abandoned by

17 (i) both parents;

18 (ii) the surviving parent; or

19 (iii) one parent if the other parent's rights and 20 responsibilities have been terminated under AS 25.23.180(c)
21 or AS 47.10.080 or voluntarily relinquished.

12

ment agency shall make reasonable efforts to locate the minor and 13

shall immediately complete a missing person's report containing information necessary for the identification of the minor. As soon as

14

2 the department. If an office specified by the department or a facili-
3 ty or contract agency of the department does not exist in the communi-
4 ty, the officer shall take the minor to another suitable location and 5 promptly notify the department. A minor under protective custody may 6 not be housed in a jail or, except as provided in (c) of this section,
7 in a [OTHER] detention facility. Immediately upon taking a minor int
8 protective custody the officer shall advise the minor orally and in 9 writing of the right to social services under AS 47.10.142(b), and, if 10 known, the officer shall advise the legal custodian that the minor has 11 been taken into protective custody.

* Sec. 2. AS 47.10.141 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) A minor may be taken into protective custody by a peace
officer and placed into temporary detention in a juvenile detention home if there has been an order issued by a court upon a finding of probable cause that (1) the minor is a runaway in violation of a valid court order issued under AS 47.10.142(f), (2) the minor's current situation poses a severe and imminent risk to the minor's health or safety, and (3) no reasonable placement alternative exists within the community. For the purposes of this subsection, a risk may not be considered severe and imminent solely because of the general conditions for runaway minors in the community, but shall be assessed in view of the specific behavior and situation of the minor. A minor detained under this subsection shall be brought before a court within 48 hours after the detention for a hearing to determine whether the minor is in civil contempt of court under AS 09.50.010(5). Protective custody may not include placement of a minor in a jail or secure facility other than a juvenile detention home, nor may an order for protective custody be enforced against a minor who is residing in an

2 * Sec. 3. AS 47.10.142 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

3 (f) When a minor is committed to the department for temporary
4 placement under (e) of this section, the court order shall specify the
5 terms, conditions, and duration of placement. The court shall require
6 the minor to remain in the placement provided by the department and
7 shall clearly state in the order the consequences of violating the
8 order, including the possibility of detention under AS 47.10.141(c).

9 * Sec. 4. AS 47.10 is amended by adding new sections to read:

10 ARTICLE 5. PROGRAMS FOR RUNAWAY MINORS.

11 Sec. 47.10.300. POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE DEPARTMENT. The de-
12 partment shall

13 (1) review, inspect, and approve or disapprove proposed or 14 established programs for runaway minors;

15 (2) maintain a register of approved programs for runaway
16 minors;

17 (3) award grants for the establishment or operation of 18 approved programs for runaway minors;

19 (4) submit to the legislature and governor each January a
20 report on programs for runaway minors in the state;

21 (5) adopt regulations for the administration of AS 47.10.-
22 300 - 47.10.390, including regulations providing for the coordination
23 of services to be provided by approved programs for runaway minors and 24 by the department.

25 Sec. 47.10.310. APPROVAL OF PROGRAMS FOR RUNAWAY MINORS. (a)
26 The department may approve a program for runaway minors under AS 47.-
27 10.300 - 47.10.390 only if the program

28 (1) is operated by a corporation organized under AS 10.20
29 or a municipality; and

1 (2) meets the requirements of (b) of this section.

2 (b) A program for runaway minors shall

3 (1) explain to a minor who seeks assistance from the pro-
4 gram the legal rights and responsibilities of runaway minors and the 5 services and assistance provided for runaway minors by the program and
6 by the state or local municipality;

7 (2) attempt to determine why a minor in the program is a
8 runaway;

9 (3) provide or help arrange for the provision of services
10 necessary to promote the health and welfare of a minor in the program
11 and, if appropriate, members of the minor's family; services may
12 include, but are not limited to, the provision of food, shelter,
13 clothing, medical care, and individual or family counseling;

14 (4) promptly inform the department of a minor in the pro-
15 gram who claims to be the victim of child abuse or neglect, as defined
16 in AS 47.17.070, or whom an employee of the program has cause to 17 believe has been a victim of child abuse or neglect;

18 (5) be operated with the goal of reuniting runaway minors
19 with their families, except in cases in which reunification is clearly 20 contrary to the health and welfare of the minor; and

21 (6) maintain adequate staffing and accommodations to ensure
22 physical security and to provide crisis services to minors residing in
23 a facility operated by the program; residents under 18 years of age
24 shall be segregated from residents who are 18 years of age or older.

25 (c) A program for runaway minors may provide services for the
26 protection of the health and welfare of a person under 21 years of age
27 who is in need of the services and who is without a place of shelter
28 in which supervision and care of the person are available.

29 Sec. 47.10.320. RESIDENCE IN RUNAWAY MINOR PROGRAM FACILITIES.

1 A runaway minor may maintain residency for a period not exceeding 45
2 days at a facility operated as part of an approved program for runaway
3 minors. The minor may maintain residency without the consent of the
4 person or agency having custody of the minor, except that if the court
5 has ordered the minor committed to the custody of the department,
6 written consent of the department is required. The residency may be
7 extended for an additional period of 45 days with the written consent
8 of the person or agency having custody of the minor. A minor may not 9 maintain residency beyond the 90th day following admission to an 10 approved program for runaway minors without the written consent of the 11 person or agency having custody of the minor and the written consent
12 of the department.

13 Sec. 47.10.330. NOTICE TO MINOR'S LEGAL CUSTODIAN. (a) The 14 director of an approved program for runaway minors shall make a good 15 faith effort to notify a minor's legal custodian within 72 hours after 16 the minor is admitted to the program, unless there are compelling
17 circumstances that justify withholding notice. The notice must de-18 scribe the minor's physical and emotional condition and the circum-
19 stances surrounding the minor's admission to the program.

20 (b) The director of an approved program for runaway minors shall 21 promptly notify a minor's legal custodian if the minor is released
22 from the program into the custody of a person other than the legal 23 custodian or a person representing the legal custodian.

24 Sec. 47.10.340. CONFIDENTIALITY OF RECORDS. Records of an 25 approved program for runaway minors that identify a minor who has been
26 admitted to or has sought assistance from the program are confidential
27 and are not subject to inspection or copying under AS 09.25.110 -
28 09.25.120, unless

29 (1) the minor consents in writing to the disclosure of the

1 records;

2 (2) the records are relevant to an investigation or pro-
3 ceeding involving child abuse or neglect or a child in need of aid
4 petition; or

5 (3) disclosure of the records is necessary to protect the
6 life or health of the minor.

7 Sec. 47.10.350. IMMUNITY FROM LIABILITY. (a) The officers,
8 directors, and employees of an approved program for runaway minors are 9 not liable for civil damages as a result of an act or omission in 10 admitting a minor to the program or releasing a minor from the program
11 into the custody of a person other than the minor's legal custodian.

12 (b) This section does not preclude liability for civil damages
13 as a result of recklessness or intentional misconduct.

14 Sec. 47.10.360. PROGRAMS EXEMPT FROM LICENSING. An approved
15 program for runaway minors is not subject to licensing or regulation 16 under AS 47.35.

17 Sec. 47.10.370. MUNICIPAL POWERS. Authority to establish and 18 operate an approved program for runaway minors is granted to munic-
19 ipalities that do not otherwise have that authority.

20 Sec. 47.10.390. DEFINITIONS. In AS 47.10.300 - 47.10.390

21 (1) "approved program for runaway minors" means a residen-22 tial or nonresidential program approved by the department under
23 AS 47.10.310;

24 (2) "runaway minor" means a person under 18 years of age
25 who

26 (A) is habitually absent from home;

27 (B) refuses to accept available care;

28 (C) has no parent, guardian, custodian, or relative
29 able or willing to provide care; or

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER

STEVE COWPER, GOVERNOR

P.O. BOX H

The Honorable John Sund
Alaska State Legislature
P.O. Box V
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Representative Sund:

John Hartle of your staff asked the department to explain why SB 79 was drafted to exclude runaway programs from licensure or regulation under AS 47.35. As you know, this provision of law grants the department the authority to license and supervise private residential care facilities and foster homes for children and dependent adults, and child care centers and homes for children.

This exclusion was to promote the innovative development of runaway programs. We do not believe it is desirable to require runaway programs to conform to regulations which were written to regulate facilities providing services which are fundamentally different than the services runaway facilities and programs will provide. Exempting licensure under AS 47.35 was an attempt by the department to affirmatively recognize this difference.

The DHSS does not intend that this exclusion from AS 47.35 means runaway programs are exempt from DHSS regulation. This legislation requires the DHSS to adopt regulations necessary to implement the bill. These regulations, as adopted by the DHSS, would impose strict but appropriate health and safety licensure standards upon runaway programs. The department intends that these licensing regulations will be just as stringent in protecting children in runaway programs as current regulations are in protecting children in other types of facilities. If this intent is not clear from the current version of the bill, the department would support changes suggested by the committee to clarify the department's regulatory responsibility toward runaway programs.

Should you have additional questions regarding this matter, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Myra M. Munson

THE INSTITUTE FOR YOUTH ADVOCACY

Statement on Senate Bill No. 79
Before the Judiciary Committee
Alaska House of Representatives

March 22, 1988

Gregory A. Loken
Executive Director

Statement on Senate Bill No. 79

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I am very grateful for this opportunity to appear before you on behalf of Covenant House and the Institute for Youth Advocacy. My name is Gregory Loken, and I am executive director of the Institute and senior staff attorney at Covenant House New York. It is an honor to be in Alaska for the first time, especially at a moment when you are considering legislation, Senate Bill No. 79, of the highest importance to vulnerable children and their families.

Covenant House is the largest private organization in North America serving homeless and runaway children. Founded officially in 1972 by Fr. Bruce Ritter, a Franciscan priest, Covenant House annually provides crisis and long-term help to over 20,000 children and teenagers in New York City, Houston, Toronto, Fort Lauderdale, New Orleans, Guatemala, Panama and Honduras. Separated at least temporarily, but often permanently, from their families, these children and adolescents are forced into a desperate struggle for survival on the street, pushed into petty crime, prostitution, panhandling, and despair. The crisis shelters of the agency operate on an "open-intake" basis: no child or teenager is ever turned away on the first visit, and only serious misconduct or refusal to make use of proffered services limits repeat visits.

It was with great pride, but with also the deepest sense of challenge, that Covenant House determined this past year to accept the invitation of public officials, religious leaders, and private citizens to open a program in Anchorage. Brenda Moscarella, the project director responsible for launching the program in collaboration with Catholic Social Services, is here today, ready to discuss with you, as interest and time permits, the specific nature of our Anchorage program and the background of need to which it is addressed. As a friend and colleague of Brenda's for many years, I can only imagine your state to be already happier and saner for her presence.

The Institute for Youth Advocacy, my own branch of Covenant House, was established in 1982 to fight for homeless and runaway children in professional, legislative, and judicial forums throughout the country. Particularly concerned about the exploitation of street kids in prostitution and pornography, the Institute played a key role in passage of the Federal Child Protection Act of 1984 and Child Abuse Victims Rights Act of 1986--both designed to launch a strong federal attack on the sexual exploitation of the young. Our battle to protect children on the street has involved, too, strong support for expansion of the federal network of runaway and homeless youth shelters under Title III of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974. Perhaps most crucially, though, we have attempted to bring attention to the crying need for careful, comprehensive state legislation addressing the plight of homeless and runaway children and the frequent desperation of their parents.

Senate Bill No. 79, before you today, seems to me a luminous example of such legislation, and I urge you to give it searching, and favorable, consideration. In three important ways it seems to me an exemplary bill that could easily serve as a model for the rest of the country. First, it appears to provide clear guidance to law enforcement officials in an area of their responsibility often left inexcusably murky in the past. Second, it contains a thoughtful, if necessarily imperfect, approach to the intractable problem of "secure detention" for runaways. Finally, it establishes a vitally important framework for development of runaway and homeless youth programs throughout Alaska--programs that will meet the crisis needs of kids while reunifying and strengthening families. While you can assess far better than I the bill's impact from a specifically local perspective, it seems to me a remarkably well-balanced answer to problems that have frustrated legislators in every state in the Union.

1. Procedures for Peace Officers. Law enforcement officers are routinely given an overwhelmingly enormous range of responsibility with only the sketchiest, and sometimes self-contradictory, guidance to carry it out. Thus the apprehension of juvenile "status offenders" is an extraordinarily time-consuming and often thankless task that is exacerbated in most states by the failure to give police officers any reasonable means of placing or handling the youths once they are in custody. Current Alaska law [AS 47.10.141(b)] already seems somewhat clearer than average in this last respect, providing for delivery of status offenders to their parents or to the Department of Health and Social Service. Yet Senate Bill No. 79 offers even more useful guidance, especially in situations where relations between parent and child are tense but not hopeless. Thus Section 1 of the bill would require that parental wishes be respected regarding a return home, and would allow for the often important alternative of placement in the home of a friend or relative that both parent and child can agree on. And in communities with approved programs for runaway and homeless children, peace officers would have yet another significant option currently not spelled out in law. As an attorney at Covenant House New York for the past eight years, I have the deepest admiration for the policemen and -women who struggle daily to help kids on the street, and I know my friends in the New York Police Department would welcome in their own work the clear and comprehensive language of this section.

2. Protective Custody. Probably the most wrenching issue for youth advocates over the past decade has been the extent to which secure detention should play a role in helping "status offenders". I have never been an admirer of detention of juveniles, and even less of the specific forms such detention has taken in the past--from the most outrageously abusive and corrupt "reform schools" to the most perilous adult jails. And at Covenant House we have consistently supported the goals of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act to remove juveniles from jail and otherwise reduce to an absolute minimum the number of children in secure detention for whatever cause.

Yet there are, in our experience, worse things than secure detention. It is worse for a 13- or 14-year-old girl to be selling herself on the street so that her pimp won't beat her or withhold her heroin. It is worse for an emotionally disturbed or mentally handicapped youth, whose parents have permanently exiled him from the house, to be forced to commit a crime before he can receive intensive help. Purity of concern for the rights of children and adolescents should not obscure the tragic fact that a few, a very few, are simply so out of control that some coercion is necessary if they are to have any real hope of survival, let alone happiness.

Section 2 of the Senate Bill No. 79 deserves your most careful review, both because of the long history of abusive detention of runaways in this country, and because it seems a reasonable, delicately balanced effort to allow secure detention only when strictly necessary, and only in licensed juvenile detention facilities. From New York it is impossible to assess whether the language perfectly suits the nature of your own institutions--particularly your judiciary--but it seems a careful attempt to address all the competing interests and concerns. And, again, it offers an opportunity for Alaska to shape national policy in this area, for I do believe it strikes a balance that has eluded legislators in many other states.

3. Runaway and Homeless Youth Programs. The greatest virtue of Senate Bill No. 79, however, appears to lie in its effort to encourage a positive response to the plight of children on the street through establishment of state-approved and monitored runaway and homeless youth programs. Such programs exist in all fifty states, largely through funding under the federal Runaway and Homeless Youth Act, but nearly all of them operate without adequate state statutory authorization or state supervision. Section 4 of the bill before you would place Alaska alongside New York as the only states with a clear framework for operating these critically important programs.

That framework would include crucial protections for children and parents alike. Thus the Department of Health and Social Services would be given the authority to monitor and approve runaway and homeless youth programs to insure the quality of their services, and children who used the programs would be assured that their records there would be confidential. (Because of the stigma attached to even the briefest period on the street, and the fear runaways so often have of public humiliation on returning home, the assurance of confidentiality is an indispensable part of successful efforts to reach and help them.) Parents would be guaranteed rapid notification of their children's presence in such a program, and would know that the services provided there are aimed at "the goal of reuniting runaway minors with their families." Both parents and children would benefit from the full range of services authorized by the bill.

Runaway and homeless youth programs would benefit, too, of course, and Covenant House makes no secret of its strong interest in passage of this section of the bill. Because runaway services have developed only recently, it is as yet extremely unclear in the law how they fit into traditional common-law and statutory structures. It is by no means certain that any substantial help can be offered to a homeless or runaway child without incurring risk of legal liability and, in some states, even criminal prosecution. Parental consent to giving such assistance is frequently unavailable in precisely those cases where the need for assistance is most critical. Section 4, which closely resembles New York statutory provisions that have worked exceedingly well for over a decade, again strikes a balance between crisis intervention and the longer-term need for family reunification. It is of the greatest importance in encouraging community groups to open and operate runaway and homeless youth programs--by removing their worst fears of legal conflict and crushing insurance bills.

Covenant House is, of course, itself committed to establishing its Alaskan program whatever the legislative resolution of these important issues. The need in Anchorage simply too great to wait. But we applaud the efforts of the sponsors of Senate Bill No. 79 to produce legislation of real merit and sensitivity. Homeless and runaway children do not vote, and their voices are rarely heard. You and your fellow legislators have made an effort to listen, and for that we at Covenant House are deeply grateful.

Please know that we stand ready to offer any assistance in our power during your deliberations, and that we will strive our utmost to justify the faith and good wishes the people of Alaska have already so generously extended our own efforts on behalf of vulnerable kids. Those kids deserve faith, they deserve good will, and they deserve a chance to escape the street. Thank you for lending their needs your Committee's valuable time, and for your serious consideration of this worthy legislation.

THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

LARRY JAMES CARTER,

Appellant,

v.

CHRISTINE KAREN BRODRICK,

Appellee.

File No. A-1333

O P I N I O N

[No. 788 - March 4, 1988]

Appeal from the Superior Court of the State of Alaska, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Victor D. Carlson, Judge.

Appearances: Jacqueline Bressers, Assistant Public Defender, and Dana Fabe, Public Defender, Anchorage, for Appellant. David Mannheimer, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals, Anchorage, and Grace Berg Schaible, Attorney General, Juneau, for the State of Alaska, as amicus curiae.

Before: Bryner, Chief Judge, Coats and Singleton, Judges.

BRYNER, Chief Judge.

Larry James Carter was convicted of contempt following a non-jury trial before Superior Court Judge Victor D. Carlson. Judge Carlson sentenced Carter to a term of six months' imprisonment with three months suspended. The contempt charge arose from Carter's failure to comply with the court's child custody order. Pursuant to the direction of the superior court, the contempt was prosecuted by the attorney representing Carter's former wife -- the aggrieved party in the underlying civil case. Carter appeals, contending that the trial court erred in requiring him to testify and in applying the preponderance of the evidence standard to determine his guilt. Carter also contends that the trial court erred in directing that the case be prosecuted by the opposing party in the underlying civil case. We reverse.

Whether a contempt action is civil or criminal in nature depends upon the character and purpose of the proceeding. Johansen v. State, 491 P.2d 759, 763-65 (Alaska 1971). Civil contempt proceedings are by nature remedial; their goal is to coerce litigants to comply with the lawful orders of the court in order to remedy harm occasioned to other litigants by the noncompliance. Id.; Gwynn v. Gwynn, 530 P.2d 1311 (Alaska 1975). Persons incarcerated for civil contempt are not sentenced to definite terms of imprisonment. Rather, they "carry the keys of their prison in their own pockets." In re Nevitt, 117 F. 448, 461 (8th Cir. 1902). By agreeing to comply with the court's order, they may purge themselves of contempt and be released. Johansen, 491 P.2d at 766.

In contrast, criminal contempt proceedings seek to punish violations that have already occurred. Id. They are in essence punitive and not remedial. Gwynn, 530 P.2d at 1312-13; L.A.M. v. State, 547 P.2d 827, 831 (Alaska 1977). Because a criminal contempt proceeding seeks to punish past disobedience, future compliance will not purge the contempt. See Webber v. Webber, 706 P.2d 329 (Alaska App. 1985). Thus, a characteristic feature of a criminal contempt proceeding is that it is punishable by a definite term of imprisonment. Johansen, 491 P.2d at 764-66. "[C]riminal contempt [is] a crime in every fundamental respect because it 'is a violation of the law, a public wrong which is punishable by fine or imprisonment or both." State v. Browder, 486 P.2d 925, 934 (Alaska 1971) (quoting Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 201 (1968)).

A contempt that occurs outside the presence of the court is said to be indirect; one occurring in the court's presence is a direct contempt. See West v. District Court, 575 P.2d 797 (Alaska 1978). Under the Alaska Constitution, however, little distinction is drawn between direct and indirect criminal contempt. A person charged with either direct or indirect criminal contempt is entitled to the same procedural rights that exist in other classes of criminal prosecution. Browder, 486 P.2d at 939-40. See also Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. at 201. Every element of a criminal contempt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and the accused cannot be compelled to render testimony that might be self-incriminatory. Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 420 (1911); Continental Insurance Cos. v. Bayless & Roberts, Inc., 548 P.2d 398, 407 (Alaska 1976).

In the present case, there is little question that Carter was convicted of criminal contempt: the purpose of the proceedings below was to punish him for his past failure to comply with a visitation order, and, upon finding Carter guilty, the superior court imposed a definite term of imprisonment. Despite the criminal nature of the proceedings, the superior court applied the preponderance of the evidence standard in determining Carter's guilt. The court also required Carter to testify as the prosecution's chief witness, thereby depriving him of his right against self-incrimination. In so doing, the court relied on Johansen v. State, 491 P.2d 759 (Alaska 1971). Its reliance on Johansen was mistaken.

While Johansen was a contempt proceeding for nonpayment of child support, the case dealt exclusively with what has been traditionally regarded as civil contempt -- a contempt proceeding whose purpose was to coerce future payment rather than to punish for past failure to pay. 491 P.2d at 766. The court in Johansen noted some potential difficulties in treating civil contempt cases for failure to pay support as entirely noncriminal for procedural purposes. Accordingly, the court struck a balance, conferring some, but not all of the benefits of a formal criminal proceeding upon individuals charged with civil contempt in such cases. Id. at 766-67. The court in Johansen expressly recognized, however, that when a nonpayment of support case is prosecuted as a criminal contempt, "the defendant would have to be afforded full procedural safeguards." Id. at 766 n.27.

Because the present case was prosecuted as a criminal contempt, we conclude that the superior court erred in depriving Carter of his right against self-incrimination and in applying the preponderance of the evidence standard to his case. We further conclude that these errors require reversal of Carter's conviction. See Delaware v. VanArsdell, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 1431, 1437 (1986).

Carter has also argued that the trial court erred in permitting the contempt action to be prosecuted by the attorney who represented his former wife. Carter relies on the United States Supreme Court's recent ruling in Young v. United States ex rel. Vuitton Et Fils S.A., ___ U.S. ___, 107 S.Ct. 2124 (1987).

In Rollins v. State of Alaska ex rel. Municipality of Anchorage, ___ P.2d ___, Op. No. 789 (Alaska App., January 13, 1988), this court, in light of Young, expressed concern about the wisdom of routinely appointing, as prosecutor in a criminal contempt action, counsel for the aggrieved party in the underlying civil litigation. We nevertheless declined to apply Young to the circumstances in Rollins, because the party appointed to prosecute that case was not a private party, but, rather, was the Municipality of Anchorage, a governmental body that was duly authorized to and, in fact, regularly did perform the functions of a public prosecutor.

This case, in contrast, presents a far more difficult issue, because it involves a prosecution by a private party. However, Carter did not object below to the superior court's order appointing his former wife's counsel to prosecute the case, and the superior court did not have the opportunity to consider its appointment in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Young. Because Carter's conviction must be reversed on other grounds, we believe it preferable to allow the superior court an opportunity to consider in the first instance the conflict issue raised by Young. In the event of a retrial, the superior court should give due consideration to Young and Rollins in resolving the question of appointing a prosecutor for this case.

The conviction is REVERSED.

The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, James K. Singleton, J., entered order declaring minor a delinquent child for her willful failure to comply with certain court orders made after prior adjudication that she was child in need of supervision, and she appealed. The Supreme Court, Erwin, J., held that evidence supported conclusion that minor, who was chronic runaway, would not be distinguishable in sophistication or exposure to criminal activity from average child in population at state youth center, and thus, placement of such minor in state youth center was not precluded; that superior court had authority to enforce order entered against child in need of supervision, which order provided that child was not to remain away from children's home in which she had been placed without permission of appropriate adult authorities of the home; and that failure of minor to abide by court orders regarding her supervision constituted willful criminal contempt of court's authority, and she was, therefore, properly declared delinquent and subject to those sanctions available for correction of delinquent minor's behavior.

Affirmed.

Boochever, J., concurred and filed opinion in which Rabinowitz, C. J., joined.

Rabinowitz, C. J., concurred and filed opinion.

1. Contempt 20

Before party may be held in criminal or civil contempt for failure to abide by court order, certain elements must be established: existence of valid order directing alleged contemnor to do or refrain from doing something and court's jurisdiction to enter that order; contemnor's notice of order within sufficient time to comply with it; and in most cases, contemnor's ability to comply with order; and contemnor's willful failure to comply with order.

2. Contempt 2

Distinction between criminal and civil contempt is generally phrased in terms of whether character and purpose of contempt is "remedial" or "punitive."

3. Contempt 3, 4

Where contempt power is invoked to punish alleged contemnor for "past, willful, flouting of the court's authority," contempt is criminal, but where contempt proceeding is instituted to "coerce future conduct," contempt is civil. AS 09.50.010(5), 09.50.050.

4. Contempt 3

Contempt order issued against minor for minor's willful failure to comply with certain court orders made after adjudication that minor was child in need of supervision constituted criminal contempt. AS 09.50.010(5).

5. Infants 16.5

Proceedings against children alleged to be in need of supervision are in substance and effect custody disputes where contestants are parent and child, and parent appeals to court to vindicate and enforce his custody rights in child against that child.

6. Adoption 7.2(1)

Parent 9

Parent and Child 2(1), 4, 5(1), 8

The following are "parental rights" protected to varying degrees by constitution: physical possession of child, which, in case of custodial parent, includes day-to-day care and companionship of child; right to discipline child, which includes right to inculcate in child parent's moral and ethical standards; right to control and manage minor child's earnings; right to control and manage minor child's property; right to be supported by adult child; right to have child bear parent's name; and right to prevent adoption of child without parents' consent.

See publication Words and Phrases for other judicial constructions and definitions.

7. Adoption ⇨7.2(1)

Names ⇨9

Parent and Child ⇨2(17)

Of the so-called residual parental rights, those that remain after custody is placed in another include right to consent to adoption and to withhold consent to prevent adoption, right to visitation and right to have child bear parents' name.

8. Parent and Child ⇨2(1)

Like all legal rights, parent's right to custody of his child is not absolute and may be lost through divorce, by conduct depriving child of necessities of life, by abandonment, by child's emancipation, or, subject to constitutional limitations, where welfare of child requires limitation or termination of parental rights. AS 09.55.205, 25.20.010, 47.10.010(a)(4, 5), 47.10.080(c), 47.10.290(3).

9. Infants ⇨13

State has legitimate interest in protecting children from venereal disease, from exposure to use of dangerous and illicit drugs, from attempted rape, and from physical injury.

10. Infants ⇨16.1

Purpose of statute creating classification of child in need of supervision is reintegration of child into her family and resumption of parental custody, including parental control. AS 47.10.010(a)(2), 47.10.290.

11. Infants ⇨16.8

Evidence in delinquency hearings supported conclusion that minor, who was chronic runaway, would not be distinguishable in sophistication or exposure to criminal activity from average child in population at state youth center, and thus, placement of such minor in state youth center was not precluded.

12. Infants ⇨16.4

Whether child is characterized as delinquent child, child in need of supervision, dependent child, or merely child whose custody is disputed in domestic relations proceeding, court has authority, upon extending all procedural safeguards, to make orders affecting her custody. Const. art. 4, § 1.

13. Contempt ⇨33

While court may have limitations on its power to act, there are only due process limitations on its authority to compel enforcement of its orders.

14. Infants ⇨16.12

Superior court had authority to enforce order entered against child in need of supervision, which order provided that child was not to remain away from children's home in which he had been placed without permission of appropriate adult authorities of the home.

15. Infants ⇨16.2

Failure of minor to abide by court orders regarding her supervision, following adjudication that such minor was child in need of supervision, constituted willful criminal contempt of court's authority, and she was, therefore, properly declared delinquent and subject to those sanctions available for correction of delinquent minor's behavior. OPINION

ERWIN, Justice.

L.A.M. seeks review of the superior court's order dated July 26, 1973, declaring her a delinquent¹ child for violation of AS 09.50.010,² i.e., willful failure to comply with certain court orders made after a prior adjudication that she was a child in need of supervision.³

In order to understand L.A.M.'s arguments and place her situation in context, it will be necessary to set out her history at some length.

L.A.M. was born in Canada in 1958 and was adopted by the M's shortly thereafter. The M's soon were divorced and Mrs. M. moved with L.A.M. to Alaska. In 1971 Mrs. M. married Mr. C. and retired from work, intending to spend more time with L.A.M. Difficulties arose almost immediately with L.A.M. neglecting to return home after staying with friends.

L.A.M. began a consistent pattern of running away in the Spring and Summer of 1972. During this period two petitions were filed seeking to have her declared a child in need of supervision, but in both cases the petitions were dismissed on stipulation and the matter handled informally.⁴ On November 2, 1972, a new petition was filed. At the hearing L.A.M. admitted the allegations of the petition and was declared a child in need of supervision. She was ordered detained at the McLaughlin Youth Center pending adjudication.

On December 12, 1972, the disposition hearing was continued and L.A.M. was released to her parents. One week later the court was informed that she had run away. A pick-up order was issued and the minor was brought back to court on December 27, 1972, at which time she was detained pending disposition. The disposition hearing was finally held on January 11, 1973. Upon listening to testimony, the Master for the Family Court filed his recommendation that the minor be "released to her parents." A superior court judge adopted the finding and executed a release.

On March 19, 1973, L.A.M. was brought back to court by an intake officer who informed the court that she had "been a runaway almost constantly since the time the court released her." The intake officer then filed a petition with the court alleging that the minor was a "child in need of supervision" by virtue of having been truant from school in violation of AS 47.10.010(a)(3) and AS 14.30.010 (truancy).⁵ At the hearing the court was informed that Mrs. C. had obtained a child psychiatrist who had met with the child and her mother, and together they had worked out some program of counseling. The parties agreed that L.A.M. would be placed in a foster home during a period of counseling and the judge accepted a stipulation to that effect. Having previously explained to L.A.M. that if she violated a court order she could be held in contempt of court and incarcerated, the judge informed the child that she was not to leave the foster home without contacting her psychiatrist, her social worker, or her mother. She agreed. The minor was released from McLaughlin on March 31, 1973, and placed in a foster home. She ran away on April 2, without notification, and was not apprehended until May 4.

A hearing was held on May 14, 1973, at which time L.A.M. was charged with contempt of court by the intake officer. Because of the uncertainty in this area, the trial court appointed the public defender to represent her. On May 17, 1973, the hearing resumed. The state argued that a child in need of supervision could not thereby be held in contempt of court and incarcerated, but that a child guilty of "criminal contempt" could on that basis be adjudicated a "delinquent child" and thereafter institutionalized. The State, therefore, moved to dismiss the petitions, alleging contempt of court and substituting a petition of alleged delinquency. The court denied the motion but permitted the State to file an amended petition alleging as a separate count an act of delinquency predicated upon "criminal contempt."

A petition alleging delinquency was filed on May 23, 1973, at which time a hearing was held. In responding to the petition L.A.M. denied the allegations and requested a trial. Pending trial, she was placed at the Alaska Children's Services receiving home. A written order was entered on June 8, 1973, specifically setting out the conditions under which L.A.M. would reside at the receiving home pending her adjudication hearing. Specifically, it provided that "[T]he child is not to remain away from the Anchorage Children's Christian Home overnight without the permission of the appropriate adult authorities of the home."

On July 26, 1973, an intake officer filed a petition for revocation of conditions of release pending L.A.M.'s adjudication hearing. In part, the petition stated that she had left the receiving home without permission on July 3, 1973, and remained away until July 24, 1973. A detention hearing was held on July 26th, and at the hearing L.A.M., through her counsel, admitted the allegations of the petition of alleged delinquency based on violation of a court order filed on May 23, 1973. L.A.M.'s counsel made it clear that the minor was only admitting the facts and reserving the right to litigate the legal consequences of those facts.

The court then proceeded to a consideration of the petition for revocation of conditions of release pending adjudication hearing filed on July 26, 1973. Upon admitting the allegations of this petition as well L.A.M. requested through her attorney that a disposition hearing be scheduled within thirty days.

5. AS 14.30.010 provides in relevant part: When attendance compulsory. (a) Every child between seven and 16 years of age shall attend school at the public school in the district in which the child resides during each school term. Every parent, guardian or other person having the responsibility for or control of a child between seven and 16 years of age shall insure that the child is not absent from attendance.

At the disposition hearing held on August 28, 1973, and on August 31, 1973, two experts testified on behalf of the minor and two testified on behalf of the State. The expert testimony pointed up the substantial differences of opinion both as to principle and policy that exists regarding runaways and their treatment. After considering all of the evidence, the court accepted the recommendation of the Division of Corrections and ordered the minor institutionalized, but deferred execution of the order for a period of sixty days to give L. A.M. one more opportunity to establish that she could be rehabilitated within the community. During the deferred period L.A.M. was assigned to Sheila Lankford of the Division of Corrections Probation Department.

On November 2, 1973, the superior court, on the request of Ms. Lankford, vacated the deferred order of institutionalization and placed the child on regular probation, having been advised that L.A.M. was functioning effectively within the community while living at home. On November 5, 1973, the minor ran away but returned of her own accord on November 7. Two days later she ran away again and remained away until December 5, 1973, when she was apprehended by the police. On December 6, 1973, Ms. Lankford petitioned to revoke the minor's probation. At the hearing on this matter held on December 18, the superior court granted the petition to revoke probation but reinstated it on new conditions in light of a request by Ms. Lankford that the minor not be institutionalized. It was agreed that the child would reside in the Alaska Children's Services Receiving Home.

On March 18, 1974, Ms. Lankford filed a further petition seeking revocation of probation. In it she alleged that on February 20, 1974, the minor ran away from the receiving home and remained away until March 16, 1974, when she was apprehended by the police. At the hearing on the petition, held on March 22, 1974, the court found the minor had violated the conditions of her probation and had run away from the receiving home. The court considered the minor's objections presented by her attorney and, after considering the evidence and the argument of the parties, directed that the minor be institutionalized.

L.A.M. seeks to have her adjudication of delinquency set aside on two grounds. She contends that both as a matter of statutory interpretation and constitutional law, a child in need of supervision may not be prosecuted for criminal contempt; or, in the alternative, if such a prosecution is allowable, such prosecution cannot result in incarceration. Upon discussing the nature of contempt in this case, each of these grounds will be dealt with in order.

[1] Before a party may be held in criminal or civil contempt for failure to abide by a court order, certain elements must be established: (1) the existence of a valid order directing the alleged contemnor to do or refrain from doing something and the court's jurisdiction to enter that order; (2) the contemnor's notice of the order within sufficient time to comply with it; and in most cases, (3) the contemnor's ability to comply with the order; and (4) the contemnor's willful failure to comply with the order.

[2] The distinction between criminal and civil contempt is generally phrased in terms of whether the character and purpose of the contempt is "remedial" or "punitive."

[3] In *Johansen v. State*⁶ we used a balancing test in determining that the failure to pay child support was criminal rather than civil contempt. We did so because incarceration was imposed for a fixed period under AS 09.50.020⁷ to punish a completed act rather than to coerce future conduct pursuant to AS 09.50.050.⁸ Specifically, the court held that where the contempt power was invoked to punish the alleged contemnor for "past, willful, flouting of the court's authority" pursuant to AS 09.50.010(5) (cf. AS 09.50.020), contempt was criminal, but where the contempt proceeding was instituted to "coerce future conduct" pursuant to AS 09.50.050, the contempt is civil.

7. See n. 2, supra.

[4] Applying that distinction here, the contempt order issued by the court would obviously be classified as "criminal." Were L.A.M. an adult, her failure to abide by court orders would be characterized as a "crime" under AS 09.50.010(5). Hence, L.A.M. could properly be declared a delinquent under AS 47.10.010(a)(1) after a proceeding in the Children's Court.

L.A.M. grounds her constitutional argument in Breese v. Smith,⁹ where this court ruled that the right to liberty set out in Art. I, Sec. 1, of the Alaska State Constitution¹⁰ guarantees every Alaskan regardless of age ". . . total personal immunity from governmental control: the right to be let alone . . .," which L.A.M. contends the supreme court qualified only to the extent that it ". . .

must yield when [it] intrudes upon the freedom of others. . . ." Therefore, she continues, a citizen's right to liberty as enunciated in Breese, supra, (bolstered by the more recently enacted "right to privacy")¹¹ cannot be infringed by preventing her from doing anything that does not injure a specific definable victim. Consequently, L.A.M. concludes since her conduct, i.e. running away from home and foster home placement, did not injure anyone (except perhaps herself, which she contends has not been proved), it necessarily follows that it cannot constitutionally be interfered with by the State because there is no compelling state interest to justify such an interference.

L.A.M. assumes that the only interest to be protected by legislation in this area is that of the children. This is simply not the case. The parents' interest as well as the State's must be considered.¹²

[5-7] Proceedings against children alleged to be in need of supervision are in substance and effect custody disputes where the contestants are parent and child, and the parent appeals to the court to vindicate and enforce his custody rights in the child against that child.¹³ Viewed in

11. Alaska Constitution, Art. I, § 22, provides:

12. The U. S. Supreme Court has on a number of occasions held that a parent's "right" to the custody and control of his child was constitutionally protected. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 25 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972); *Stanley v. this light, the statutes creating the status "child in need of supervision" provide a judicial remedy and discourage resort to self-help and the attendant risk of violence.¹⁴

[8] Thus, before L.A.M. can sustain her case that the child in need of supervision procedure, including the invocation of the court's contempt power to enforce orders made pursuant to it, is an unconstitutional invasion of her liberty and privacy, she must first establish that her mother has no legally enforceable right to her custody and the State thus has no right to enforce such an order. We note at the outset, however, that there is more to the parent-child relationship than simple custody. It is love and trust and a responsibility toward each other which cannot be defined legally. It is impossible to discuss severing this relationship without considering the heartache and anguish of the parents who must ultimately live with themselves and the decision after the child reaches adulthood. Further, the consideration of such an issue must accept the limitations of the State to be a parent; good intentions are not adequate substitutes for the day-to-day relationship which we have come to accept as necessary to the growth of children into responsible adults. True, like all legal rights, a parent's right to the custody of his child is not absolute and may be lost through divorce,¹⁵ by conduct depriving the child of the necessities of life,¹⁶ by abandonment,¹⁷ by the child's emancipation,¹⁸ or, subject to constitutional limitations, where the welfare of the child requires a limitation or termination of parental rights.¹⁹ been listed as "parental rights" protected to varying degrees by the Constitution:

(1) Physical possession of the child which, in the case of a custodial parent includes the day-to-day care and companionship of the child. In the case of a non-custodial parent, possession is tantamount to the right to visitation.

(2) The right to discipline the child, which includes the right to inculcate in the child the parent's moral and ethical standards.

(3) The right to control and manage a minor child's earnings.

(4) The right to control and manage a minor child's property.

(5) The right to be supported by an adult child.

(6) The right to have the child bear the parent's name.

(7) The right to prevent an adoption of the child without the parents' consent.

Of these so called residual parental rights, those that remain after custody is placed in another include the right to consent to an adoption and to withhold consent to prevent an adoption, the right to visitation and the right to have the child bear the parents' name. See the discussion in Burt, Forcing Protection on Children and Their Parents, 69 Michigan 1259 (1971); Dobson, The Juvenile Court and Parental Rights, 4 Family Law Quarterly 393 (1970); Young, The Problem of Neglect: The Legal Aspects, 43 Journal of Family Law 29 (1964); Note, Child Neglect: Due Process for the Parent, 70 Col.L.Rev. 465 (1970).

14. By withdrawing court assistance (and police assistance) from embattled parents, the state is not inducing compromise but may encourage violence, since parents have the right under Alaska law to physically control their children. See AS 11.15.110(1) as interpreted in State v. England, 220 Or. 395, 349 P.2d 608 (1960), and compare the civil liability of parents for disciplining their children which is discussed in Hebel v. Hebel, 435 P.2d 8, 14-15 (Alaska 1967).

15. AS 00.55.205 gives a court in a divorce action the right to provide for the custody of the children.

16. See AS 47.10.010(a)(5) which, when read in conjunction with AS 47.10.080(c) and AS 47.10.290(3), permits the state to take custody of a child who "lacks proper parental care by reason of the faults, habit or neglect of his parent, guardian or custodian."

17. See AS 47.10.010(u)(4), which authorizes the state to take custody of a child who has been abandoned.

18. A child is emancipated as a matter of law when he or she reaches the age of majority which in Alaska is 19 years of age; AS 25.20.010. See R.L.R. v. State, 487 P.2d 27 (Alaska 1971).

19. Turner v. Pannick, 540 P.2d 1051, (Op. No. 1189, 1975); In the Matter of the Adoption of K. S., 543 P.2d 1191, (Op.No.1219, 1975).

L.A.M. was given an opportunity to show any of the foregoing as a defense to a finding that she was a "child in need of supervision" or, subsequent thereto, to a finding that she had committed criminal contempt of court and was therefore delinquent by violating orders regarding her placement; but she failed to do so.

Runaway children of L.A.M.'s age are generally incapable of providing for or protecting themselves. As a result, police spend a substantial amount of time protecting these youths from those who would prey upon them, as well as protecting the community from those who are ultimately driven to criminal activity to provide themselves with the necessities of life.

Various other social agencies also expend considerable efforts attempting to protect and shelter runaways in an effort to provide both an alternative to criminal activities and counseling in lieu of that they received from their parents. Without question these children's matters are of broad public interest and concern. They go to all aspects of the physical and mental well being of such children.²⁰

The family, school, social agency and police resources allocated to aid the runaway are enormous. In this case, the child had continuing aid and support of (1) her mother and step-father, (2) a private psychiatrist hired by her mother, (3) counseling with social workers in Division of Family and Children's Services, (4) probation officers in Division of Corrections, (5) school counselors, (6) psychologists and psychiatrists from Langdon Clinic, (7) Alaska Youth Advocates, (8) group home counselors, (9) her court-appointed attorney, and (10) the court. To assert that the State has no interest in this child is to deny that the function of government is to protect its citizens. All of this presupposes the heartache and anguish of the parents, who in the first instance have been unable to deal with this problem but who must also live with the solution.

This court has previously found that there is sufficient State interest to justify restrictive measures on much less substantial grounds.²¹ Further, this court has noted that distinct government interests with reference to children may justify legislation that could not properly be applied to adults.²²

[9] The State has a legitimate interest in protecting children from venereal disease, from exposure to the use of dangerous and illicit drugs, from attempted rape, and from physical injury, all of which occurred in this case. Doubtless the State will never be entirely successful in its efforts. It does, however, have the right and obligation to try to protect its young people from such conditions.²³ The test set out by this court in Ravin v. State,²⁴ is whether the means chosen by the State are closely and substantially related to an appropriate government interest. Clearly they are here.

[10] While it may be argued that the necessary "supervision" contemplated by the statute is simply the furnishing of food, clothing, shelter and schooling in lieu of that which would otherwise have been provided by a parent, this argument begs the question, for the purpose of the supervision or treatment contemplated by the creation of the child in need of supervision and its predecessor non-criminal delinquency was reintegration of the child into her family and resumption of parental custody including parental control (cf. AS 47.10-

280). Thus, the State's efforts regarding the child are not directed solely at providing an alternate living situation (as they are in a true case of dependency) but at putting the child back in her own home. The reestablishment of her mother's custody and supervision over her and any foster placement is merely a means to that end, not an end in itself. Thus, by rejecting these efforts L.A.M. defeats, or at least slows, this reintegration process and thereby prejudices her mother's right to her custody and control, subjecting herself to the more severe sanction contemplated by AS 09.50.020.

We note that L.A.M.'s primary argument in this case is that as a child in need of supervision whose conduct from the inception of the case to the present has not changed, she may not be placed in a closed setting, i. e. one where the doors may be locked. However, the cases upon which L.A.M. relies proceed to a different point, namely that the child should not be placed in a state training school. In Colorado, California, Illinois and New York,²⁵ children in need of supervision can at the first instance be placed in juvenile halls or youth centers, i.e. places with locked doors, but cannot be placed at the state training school, i.e. maximum security institutions. The McLaughlin Youth Center in Anchorage is more the equivalent of a juvenile hall than it is a state training school. It should be noted that Alaska has contracts with Colorado and California to place Alaska delinquents who are too sophisticated for McLaughlin in the state institutions in those states. Thus L.A.M. is not to be placed at either the California or Colorado training schools; she is threatened with placement at the McLaughlin Youth Center.

[11] Substantial evidence was introduced during the many hearings of this case regarding the population at the McLaughlin Youth Center. Based upon that evidence, it is clear that the kind of children who are extremely aggressive, and extremely hardened in delinquency, are not treated at McLaughlin Youth Center but are sent outside for placement at schools in Colorado and California under contract with the State of Alaska. While the population at McLaughlin is made up at the present time exclusively of "delinquents," the evidence introduced at trial convinces us that while delinquency in some form is a prerequisite to gaining admission to McLaughlin, it is not the real reason that the child is at McLaughlin. The overwhelming majority of delinquents with strong family ties are treated in the community. Those delinquents who end up at McLaughlin are by and large there for the same reason that L.A.M. may be there, namely an unwillingness to remain at home or a home substitute and heed parental or a custodian's regulations. Based upon the evidence, it appears that L.A.M. and other chronic runaways would not be distinguishable in sophistication, exposure to criminal activity, etc., from the average child in the population at McLaughlin and that therefore the reasoning of the cases cited by L.A.M. should not apply to Alaska.

[12-14] Whether we characterize L.A.M. as a delinquent child, a child in need of supervision, a dependent child, or merely a child whose custody is disputed in a domestic relations proceeding, the court has authority, upon extending all procedural safeguards, to make orders affecting her custody. It is argued, however, that this is a situation where the court has no power to enforce its order, and thus the court must release L.A.M. This view is contrary to the inherent power of the court to enforce its orders or decrees.²⁶ While the court may have limitations on its power to act, there are only due process limitations on its authority to compel enforcement of its orders. Hence, we reject the argument that the superior court lacked the authority to enforce specific orders against L.A.M. in this case.

The judicial power of the State is vested in a supreme court, a superior court, and the courts established by the legislature. See also Ex Parte Robinson, 86 U.S. (19

[15] The lower court determined that L.A.M. would not abide by any orders it entered regarding her supervision under AS 47.10.080(j). This behavior constitutes willful criminal contempt of the court's authority; were she an adult, her actions would be characterized as a "crime" under Alaska statutes. She was, therefore, properly declared a delinquent and subject to those sanctions available for the correction of a delinquent minor's behavior. Certainly, conciliation should precede coercion; and if coercion is necessary, mild sanctions should first be tried before more severe sanctions are imposed. However, where mild sanctions fail, the court's orders must be enforced and severe sanctions should be imposed if necessary. In the instant case, all available sanctions, save institutionalization, were tried and found unsuccessful. Thus, the lower court determined that it

27. The trial judge was a model of patience and fairness in this extremely difficult case. Further, we are indebted to him for his scholarly memorandum opinion which aided in the preparation of this opinion.

1. The state's power to act in support of the welfare of children is exemplified by such statutory enactments as compulsory education (AS 14.30.010 et seq.); financial assistance for dependent children (AS 47.25.310 et seq.); protective laws as to the employment of children (AS 23.10.325 et seq.); minimum age of consent for marriage (AS 25.05.171); prohibition of the use of alcohol and tobacco by minors and of the sale of either substance to minors (AS 04.15.050 et seq. and AS 11.60.080); punishment for statutory rape (AS 11.15.120); contributing to the delinquency of a minor (AS 11.40.130); and for lewd or lascivious acts toward children (AS 11.15.134).

had no choice but to order L.A.M. institutionalized.

In affirming this decision, we note that the trial judge was most innovative in fashioning a necessary remedy for a situation not covered by statute.²⁷ The very nature of the problem, however, calls for legislative overhaul of the statutes in this area, for the trial court's remedy is not easily modified to cover other situations where there is no statutory guidance.

BOOCHEVER, Justice, with whom RABINOWITZ, Chief Justice, joins, concurring.

I concur in the court's opinion based on the last three paragraphs thereof. I would not reach the other issues discussed in the opinion. Protection of parental rights to care, custody and supervision do not seem to me to be an appropriate rationale for placing a child in an institution. In my opinion, the court's efforts were devoted primarily to furthering the welfare of the child, a subject in which the state does have an interest.¹ There was ample testimony to indicate that L.A.M.'s conduct was harmful to her.²

tributing to the delinquency of a minor (AS 11.40.130); and for lewd or lascivious acts toward children (AS 11.15.134).

In Anderson v. State, 394 P.2d 669, 671 (Alaska 1963), this court stated that the purpose of the statute punishing acts which contribute to the delinquency of a minor is "to protect all children under the age of 18". In Hanby v. State, 479 P.2d 486, 498 (Alaska 1970), the court held that the state can enact statutes to protect the juveniles—to prevent as well as punish delinquency. In Hanby, the court found that material which was not so obscene as to be proscribed for the general population could be forbidden to minors. Children who were judged to be in a harmful environment were removed from their home in In re P. N., 533 P.2d 13 (Alaska 1975). The court determines child custody in divorce proceedings according to the welfare and best interest of the child. Horton v. Horton, 519 P.2d 1131, 1132 (Alaska 1974); Nichols v. Nichols, 516 P.2d 732, 734 (Alaska 1973); Carle v. Carle, 503 P.2d 1050, 1052 (Alaska 1972).

2. While a runaway, L.A.M. was truant from school; was illegally the victim of a

On the basis of the record, I do not believe that we can conclude that police spend countless hours protecting the community from anti-social conduct of runaway children. Recent studies indicate that status offenders (such as runaways) are not a source of general harm to others as contrasted with children who have committed offenses which, if perpetrated by adults, would be crimes.³ I concur in the opinion since I believe that the state has an interest in the welfare of children justifying the entry of appropriate orders. In cases involving status offenders, only after all else fails, should placement in a closed setting be justified. But under the facts of this case, the trial judge had no alternative.

RABINOWITZ, Justice (concurring).

Although I am in agreement with the court's disposition of this appeal, I think it appropriate to answer appellant's contention that our prior decisions precluded the superior court from institutionalizing L.A.M. This contention is grounded upon In re E.M.D., 490 P.2d 658 (Alaska 1971), where we rejected the argument that under Alaska's statutes a minor who has been adjudicated a child in need of supervision may be institutionalized by the state. Upon analysis of the relevant statutes, we concluded that ". . . the legislature has authorized institutionalization only rape as reported in a call to the police; contracted gonorrhoea; suffered an injured jaw and broken teeth from a fall, which injuries had not received medical attention.

3. Clarke, Stevens II, "Some Implications for North Carolina of Recent Research in Juvenile Delinquency," Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, January 1975.

1. In re E.M.D., 490 P.2d 658, 659 (Alaska 1971). In E.M.D., after finding the minor to be a child in need of supervision, the trial court committed E.M.D. to the custody of the Department of Health and Welfare and when the child is found to be a delinquent minor."¹ Thus, if the superior court in the case at bar had institutionalized L.A.M. because she had been adjudicated a child in need of supervision, such action would have been erroneous under E.M.D.

But here L.A.M.'s status was not merely that of a child in need of supervision; the scope of her future conduct had been limited by the superior court's order. By virtue of this order L.A.M. was, as the state argues, essentially on probation.² The majority notes that the superior court found that L.A.M. had violated the conditions of her probation by running away. The majority then observes that Were L.A.M. an adult, her failure to abide by court orders would be characterized as a 'crime' under AS 09.50.010(5). Hence, L.A.M. could properly be declared a delinquent under AS 47.10.010(i) after a proceeding in the Children's Court.

I thus conclude that what essentially transpired below was that the trial court found a violation of the conditions of probation which it imposed pursuant to its determination that L.A.M. was a child in need of supervision, and ordered L.A.M. incarcerated.³ In my view, E.M.D. did not prohibit the superior court from ordering the institutionalization of L.A.M. in the circumstances of this case.

directed the Department to place her in a correctional or detention facility.

2. AS 47.10.050(j) provides in part:

If the court finds the minor is a child in need of supervision it shall make any of the following orders of disposition for his supervision, care and rehabilitation:

(2) order the minor placed on probation under those conditions and limitations that the court may prescribe.

Re: House CS for CS for Senate Bill 79

Dear Legislators,

We are writing on behalf of the Fairbanks Child Sexual Abuse Task Force, a coalition of agencies, organizations and associations involved in prevention and treatment of child sexual abuse. The CSATF wants to express its views on the current version of Senate Bill 79.

The bill as it is currently worded is a great improvement over the original version, but it creates several problems which we wish to bring to your attention.

First and foremost, this bill leaves unaddressed what we regard as the most crying need in this area, that of more funding for treatment programs for runaways. Without a substantial commitment on the part of the state to fill that need, the bill is more of a placebo than a solution.

Second: the bill leaves unclear what is to happen after the court holds its 48-hour hearing under the new AS 47.10.141. It is a little confusing in referring to "civil contempt of court under AS 09.50.010(5)" in that the Supreme Court has regarded that statutory subdivision as providing for criminal contempt rather than civil contempt, L.A.M. v. State, 547 P.2d 827, 832 (Alaska 1976), while AS 09.50.050 is the civil contempt section. It is also confusing in that the only remedy generally available for violations of AS 09.50.010(5) is a fine, under AS 09.50.020. Also, our group had questions about whether the protections of the Indian Child Welfare Act would apply to these hearings.

Third: it is unclear whether new AS 47.10.142(f), providing that the court commitment order is to specify the terms, conditions and duration of placement, is intended to overrule prior case law interpreting the existing statute to mean that the Division, not the court, is to make specific placement decisions. See B.A.M. v. State, 528 P.2d 437 (Alaska 1974).

Fourth: the bill makes no provision for an attorney for the child being taken into detention under a court order. It would appear that the child is facing a loss of liberty and accordingly should be entitled to an appointed attorney as a matter of due process. It is possible that an attorney has been already appointed in the pre-existing child-in-need case that is a prerequisite under the new statute; but it is more likely that the child has had a Guardian ad Litem appointed, not an attorney. These roles are substantially different, and a GAL would not fulfill the constitutional requirement that a child facing the potential deprivation of liberty under the new statute be given the right to counsel, including appointed counsel if necessary.

There are a couple of miscellaneous points we would like to bring to your attention: regarding the language on page 4, lines 21-22 providing that the program is to maintain adequate staffing and accommodations to ensure physical security and provide crisis services, it should be made clear that this refers to security in the sense of sufficient staff to keep the residents secure from danger, not sufficient staff to keep the residents securely held as in a detention facility. Also, our group felt that the language on page 4, line 20 should be changed from "contrary to the health and welfare of the minor" to "contrary to the best interests of the minor".

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Theresa Tanoury

The Alaska Chapter of National Association of Social Workers (NASW) supports SB 79 in its present version. We support the provision of detaining runaway minors in a secure home or facility, if needed. We believe that at the time of detainment, the minor will have legal advocacy to protect his/her rights.

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

MEMORANDUM

November 18, 1987

SUBJECT: Sectional analysis of HCS CSSB 79 (HESS)

TO: Representative Johnny Ellis
Co-Chair, House HESS Committee

FROM: Edward H. Hein E.H.
Legislative Counsel

Section 1 is the same as section 1 of CSSB 79 (Judiciary) am, with one exception. The HESS Committee version amends AS 47.10.141(b) by allowing a runaway minor who is picked up by police to choose to be taken to a private program for runaways that is approved by the Department of Health and Social Services, rather than to be taken home or to a place designated by the minor's legal custodian or to an office, facility, or contract agency of the department. Secs. 2 and 3 of that version of the bill have been deleted.

Sec. 2 is all new material based in part on the New York Runaway and Homeless Youth Act. This section creates a new Article 5 in AS 47.10 that provides for review, inspection, and approval by the Department of Health and Social Services of private nonprofit residential and nonresidential programs for runaway minors and homeless youth.

Sec. 47.10.300 sets out the duties and powers of the department with respect to these runaway programs. These include approving or disapproving the programs, maintaining a register of approved programs, awarding grants to approved programs, submitting an annual report on runaways to the legislature and the governor, and adopting regulations.

Sec. 47.10.310 sets out the requirements for a program to be approved by the department. A program must be operated by an Alaskan nonprofit corporation; explain to a runaway his or her legal rights and responsibilities as a runaway and explain the services and assistance available from the program, the state, and the local municipality; try to determine why the minor is a runaway; provide or help obtain various services for runaway minors and, if appropriate, their families; inform the department if child abuse or neglect of the minor is claimed or reasonably suspected; operate with the goal of reuniting the runaway minor and family, unless that is contrary to the minor's health and welfare; and provide physical security and emergency services for residents of the program, and separate minors under 16 from those 16 and older.

Sec. 47.10.320 establishes limits on the duration of a runaway's residency in a program. The limits are 30 days without consent of the legal custodian, 60 days with consent, beyond 60 days with approval of department and the legal custodian's consent.

Sec. 47.10.330 requires the program director to notify a minor's legal custodian within 72 hours after the minor is admitted to the program, unless there are compelling circumstances justifying withholding notice. The legal custodian is also entitled to notice when the minor is released from the program if he or she is released into the custody of someone other than the custodian or the custodian's representative.

Sec. 47.10.340 provides for confidentiality of records that identify particular runaway minors who have been in the program or sought assistance from it. Exceptions are provided for instances in which the minor consents to disclosure of the records, when the records are relevant to an investigation or proceeding involving child abuse or neglect or a child in need of aid petition, and when disclosure is necessary to protect the life or health of the minor.

Sec. 47.10.350 provides complete immunity from civil and criminal liability for officers, directors, and employees of runaway programs with regard to admitting a person to a program or releasing a person from a program into the custody of someone other than the legal custodian or representative.

Sec. 47.10.360 exempts the runaway programs from licensing and regulation under AS 47.35, which is the chapter that provides for departmental licensing of foster homes, boarding homes, and other private institutions for the regular care of children and dependent adults.

Representative Ellis

November 18, 1987

Sec. 47.10.390 defines "approved program for runaway minors" as a residential or nonresidential program approved by the department under AS 47.10.310, and defines "runaway minor" as a person under 18 who is evading the person's legal custodian (the traditional concept of a runaway minor) or as a person under 21 who is in need of services for the protection of health and welfare and who is without a place of shelter in which supervision and care of the person is available (based on New York State's concept of "homeless youth").

Fiscal Analysis: HCS for CSSB 79

This bill will require court hearings before a minor can be placed in a juvenile detention facility as well as hearings to determine if a minor is in civil contempt. Based on an approximate hearing time of 30 minutes each and on a population of 180 per year (as estimated in DHSS' position paper), this bill will increase court time by 90 hours. Because this impact does not warrant the addition of a permanent master, the court system intends to contract state-wide for special master's services based on an average of $100 per hour.

CONTINUATION of FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS

For Bill/Resolution No. ¹¹⁵CS SB 79

This bill will authorize peace officers to place runaway minors into juvenile detention facilities if they are in violation of a court Child in Need of Aid placement order. This law differs drastically from the current law which does not permit runaways to be "incarcerated" in a detention facility. Once the runaway has been placed to juvenile detention, he or she has a right to a hearing within 48 hours. Each runaway will have the right to an attorney at this hearing which will amount to a criminal contempt proceeding for violation of the court order. In fact, criminal contempt requires a jury trial prior to use of incarceration as a penalty and thus some of these juvenile runaways will qualify for jury trial. Despite the statute's characterization of this proceeding as a "civil" contempt proceeding, it is more akin to criminal contempt due to the fact that the runaway will not "hold the keys of his release in his own pocket," the identifying factor for civil contempt.

In Anchorage alone, it is estimated that there are as many as twelve hundred runaway minors. Even if only some percentage of these minors will qualify for juvenile detention under this bill, each case will involve numerous court hearings and the possibility of trial, as noted above. Based on the expectation that these cases will be concentrated in Anchorage and Fairbanks, the Public Defender Agency is requesting an Attorney III and a Legal Secretary I for Anchorage and an Attorney III for Fairbanks for a total of 189.9.

Position Title Associate Attorney II		No. of Positions 2	Range/Step 19/A	Barg. Unit X
Time Status PFT	Staff Months 24	Location EBA-Anchorage		Election District 8
Justification
The Anchorage OPA office presently has 2 associate attorney positions which handle GAL appointments and 2 attorney positions who handle a combined caseload of GAL appointments and other civil litigation matters. Because of the anticipated increase in GAL appointments to runaways under this legislation, OPA estimates that at least 2 additional associate attorneys would be needed to handle the increased workload.

CONTINUATION of FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS

For Bill/Resolution No. SB 79

In an average year, approximately 500 runaways in Anchorage, and an additional 500 runaways statewide are handled by the Division of Family and Youth Services. In addition, statewide averages indicate that approximately 900 runaways are taken into emergency custody annually. Approximately 2/3 of emergency runaways are female and 1/3 are male.

Preliminary analysis also indicates that approximately 180 (or 20%) of the runaway population placed in temporary custody by the Division of Family and Youth Services subsequently run from their temporary placement location. Of this 180, 90 generally occur in Anchorage (60 female, 30 male), and the other 90 occur statewide (again, 60 female and 30 male). Assuming all 180 runaways are eventually taken into emergency custody by police and detained for an average of 10 days, the following scenario can be constructed:

1. McLaughlin Youth Center (MYC) - 600 detention days for girls; 300 detention days for boys.
2. Fairbanks Youth Facility (FYF) - 100 detention days (includes both girls and boys).
3. Juneau Youth Facility - 45 detention days (includes both girls and boys).

ANALYSIS

Given these estimates, additional detention beds would be required as follows:

McLaughlin -

female: $60 \times 10 \text{ days} = 600 \text{ person days} - 365 = 1.6 \text{ average daily population}$

male: $30 \times 10 \text{ days} = 300 \text{ person days} - 365 = .82 \text{ average daily population}$

Fairbanks Youth Facility -

$11 \text{ runaways total} \times 10 \text{ days} = 110 \text{ person days} - 365 = .30 \text{ average daily population}$

Other (Juneau Youth Facility, Nome, Bethel) -

one bed each to accommodate anticipated increase in average daily population.

CAPITAL COSTS - Given the above, a total increase of 7 new detention beds will be required. Average cost of construction per bed is $100,000 in Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau, and $130,000 per bed in Nome and Bethel. Total CIP cost - $760,000.

OPERATING COSTS - The Division of Family and Youth Services would realize an increased demand on PFT staff to accommodate the increase in client population. Minimal impact would be an increase in one shift and would translate into four additional Youth Counselor I positions, and one additional Youth Counselor III position. Total position costs is reflected in the personal services line item ($230.6).

Related travel, contractual, and commodities are prorated on a percentage basis of total increase in staff.

CONTINUATION of FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS

For Bill/Resolution No. CSSB 79

An attorney will need to consult with, and represent in court, the Department of Health and Social Services in its efforts to obtain detention and civil contempt orders. The bill is also likely to result in the need for additional consultation and representation as the department will be required to assume custody of minors whose parents, based on the statutory right conferred upon them in section 1 of the bill, do not consent to the return of a minor to the home.

It is not possible to predict the level of additional activity that this will generate, but there will be some. The Department of Law is facing severe budget reductions in the coming fiscal year. To the extent that this bill results in a substantial body of new legal work, it will be necessary to seek a supplemental appropriation beginning in FY 88.
