9 (b) Citation of the general statutory authority under which a 10 regulation is adopted, as well as citation of specific statutory 11 sections being implemented, interpreted or made clear, shall follow 12 the text of each regulation submitted under (a) of this section. The 13 signature of the governor approving adoption of the regulation as 14 required by AS 44.62.065 must accompany the regulation.

15 * Sec. 2. AS 44.62 is amended by adding a new section to read:

16 Sec. 44.62.065. GOVERNOR'S SIGNATURE. A regulation or order of 17 repeal is not valid unless the governor has approved its adoption in 18 writing. The lieutenant governor may not accept a regulation or order 19 of repeal for filing under AS 44.62.040 unless it is accompanied by 20 the governor's approval of adoption. This section also applies to 21 regulations exempted from submission to the lieutenant governor under 22 AS 44.62.040(a). This section does not apply to emergency regulations
23 or to regulations of the Department of Fish and Game.

25 (a) The notice of proposed adoption, amendment, or repeal of a 26 regulation shall include

27 (1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of proceed-28 ings for adoption, amendment, or repeal of the regulation;

29 (2) reference to the authority under which the regulation

1 is proposed and a reference to the particular code section or other
2 provisions of law which are being implemented, interpreted, or made 3 specific;

4 (3) an informative summary of the proposed subject of 5 agency action and of the action's intended effect on persons subject
6 to the action; the summary must include a description of the substance
7 of each repealed regulation and a description of the intended effect
8 of the repeal;

9 (4) other matters prescribed by a statute applicable to the 10 specific agency or to the specific regulation or class of regulations;

11 (5) a summary of the fiscal information required to be 12 prepared under AS 44.62.195.

13 * Sec. 4. The amendments made to AS 44.62.040 by sec. 1 of this Act and 14 AS 44.62.065, enacted by sec. 2 of this Act, apply to regulations adopted 15 on or after the effective date of this Act. The amendments made to 16 AS 44.62.200 by sec. 3 of this Act apply to notices of proposed action pub-
17 lished on or after the effective date of this Act.

11 (4) the text of the certified copy of a regulation or order
12 of repeal is the text of the regulation or order of repeal as adopted.

13 * Sec. 5. AS 44.62.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

14 (c) A presumption described under (a) of this section is not 15 applicable if the legislature has adopted a special concurrent resolu-
16 tion determining that a regulation is not within the procedural or 17 substantive authority delegated to the agency and disapproving its en-18 forcement. The lieutenant governor shall include the resolution in 19 the permanent file of the certified copies of regulations and orders
20 of repeal under AS 44.62.080 and shall publish notice of the resolu-

Sectional Analysis of Proposed CS for HB 420

Sections 1 and 2 require that, under the Administrative Procedure Act, the governor approve a regulation before it becomes valid. The requirement extends to regulations that currently do not have to be submitted to the lieutenant governor under AS 44.62.040(a). That subsection exempts from filing with the lieutenant governor a regulation that

- (1) establishes or fixes rates, prices or tariffs;
- (2) relates to the use of public works, including streets and highways, under the jurisdiction of a state agency if the effect of the order is indicated to the public by means of signs or signals; or
- (3) is directed to a specifically named person or to a group of persons and does not apply generally throughout the state.

Specifically exempted from the requirement of the governor's approval are emergency regulations and regulations of the Department of Fish and Game.

Section 3 changes the requirement concerning notice of proposed action which an agency is required to give before adopting, amending, or repealing a regulation. The section requires the agency to summarize the effect of the proposed change. For a repealed regulation, the agency must describe the substance of the regulation and analyze the effect of the repeal.

Re: The "objection" process in rules review

Dear Dave:

I was very pleased to hear from you yesterday and I'm even more pleased to hear that your legislature is considering giving its regulations review committee objection power. I'm sorry that I have never had an opportunity to do a study to document the impact the objection process has in Iowa, but I can guarantee it ensures that government agencies carefully consider suggestions and criticisms offered by our rules committee. The best evidence of this is that the frequency of objections is decreasing. While the volume of rule-making is steadily growing, the ability of the committee and the various agencies to compromise their seems to be increasing. This is reflected by the a stabilization in the number of objections. In 1986 the committee imposed five objections, up from three objections in 1985. Rather than risk having an objection placed on a rule, agencies tend, if possible to be willing to modify a proposal if requested by the committee.

A total of 104 objections have been imposed since 1977, but the trend has clearly been toward a decline in their frequency, as indicated below:

1978.....24	1983.....03
1979.....13	1984.....04
1980.....06	1985.....03
1981.....08	1986.....05

On a percentage basis, approximately one percent of the filings put forth last year have an objection placed on them. In 1977 the percentage was almost ten percent.

The mechanics of the objection process are fairly simple. At any time the committee may selectively call up a rule for review and impose an objection. An objection is simply the committee's opinion that a rule is "arbitrary, capricious, unreasonable or beyond the authority delegated to the agency". This action must be taken at a formal committee meeting, upon a vote of four members of the six member committee. A document is prepared detailing the committee's findings. It is certified as being true and accurate by the committee chair and then filed in the office of the Code Editor. A copy is published in the Iowa Administrative Bulletin and Code.

The document must contain more than a simple reference to the specific statutory grounds for objection. The document must contain these grounds and a brief elaboration of reasons for this finding. It must be detailed enough to apprise the agency of the precise nature and scope of the objection. Schmitt v. Department of Social Services, 263 N.W.2d 739 (Iowa, 1978).

The objection does not impact the effective date of a rule or prevent the agency from enforcing it. An objection places a cloud on the validity of the rule. It reverses the burden of proof in a subsequent judicial action contesting the validity of the rule. The objection removes the "presumption of validity" that courts commonly accord an administrative rule. The agency then bears the burden of proving the validity of its rule. If the agency fails to meet this burden of proof, the agency must pay both the court costs and the attorney fees for the party attacking the rule (section 17A.4(4)"a").

An objection does not have an expiration date and will remain in effect as long as the rule itself. Procedural objections (limited to committee findings that the proper rule-making procedures were not followed) may expire two years after the effective date of a rule. ss17A.4(3) establishes a two year statute of limitations to challenge a rule on the grounds that the notice provisions of Chapter 17A were not followed.

I should note that objections are somewhat limited in their impact. They reverse the burden of proof only upon the grounds specified by the ARRC in the document. If a court overturns a rule on grounds not specified in the objection, attorney fees will not be awarded. Iowa-Illinois Gas & Elec. v. Iowa State Commerce Commission, 334 N.W.2d 748 (Iowa, 1983).

As a conclusion, I enclose an excerpt from State Administrative Rule Making, by Arthur Bonfield. He is a nationally recognized expert in Ad. law and a law professor at the University of Iowa. It provides more detail and commentary on the objection process than any other article I have seen. It is largely drawn from the Iowa provisions. If I can be of any additional help at all, please just give me a call.

Sincerely,

Joseph Royce

Re: Objection-191 IAC 19.60(2), relating to fees imposed for an interpretive opinion.

Dear Sir:

At its September 9 meeting the committee voted to object to the fifty dollar fee for interpretative opinions, appearing in 191 IAC 19.60(2). It was the opinion of the committee this charge is beyond the authority of the bureau. This provision appears as part of ARC 7871, in X IAB 5 (8-26-87).

Section 17A.9, Iowa Code, requires every agency to provide a method allowing the public to obtain the agency's formal opinion or interpretation on questions relating to the agency statutes, rules or policy. These statements are called declaratory rulings. They appear to be identical to the "interpretive opinion" established in the subrule. The statute makes no provision for the assessment of a fee nor has any agency attempted to impose one; to do so would run contrary to the purpose of section 17A.9. Declaratory rulings are essential to allow the public an opportunity to clarify questions and uncertainties about agency law or policy. They provide a service which is intended to encourage the public to request advice and interpretations from government agencies. A fee for this service would discourage its use and could lead to needless violations of law or policy through misinterpretation or misinformation. It is the opinion of the committee the "interpretive opinion" is a form of declaratory ruling and that section 17A.9, Iowa Code, precludes the imposition of a fee for this service.

INSURANCE DIVISION[191]

Adopted and Filed Emergency

Pursuant to the authority of 1987 Iowa Acts, House File 614, section 16, the Insurance Division of Iowa hereby emergency adopts and implements new rule 19.60(72GA, HF614).

The new rule is a temporary, transitional rule that will help the Securities Bureau control administrative delays in processing initial permit applications by allowing applicants to file at any time after September 1, 1987, rather than having them wait until January 1, 1988. To further facilitate implementation of 1987 Iowa Acts, House File 614, the proposed rule will authorize an initial report and allow the Securities Bureau to accept and require fees on a temporary basis, prior to the adoption of the permanent regulations also proposed on this date.

The Division of Insurance finds that pursuant to Iowa Code section 17A.4(2), public notice and participation are contrary to the public interest in that speedy implementation of this rule is necessary to assure timely and reasonable treatment of those seeking permits required by the Iowa Prearranged Funeral Contracts Act.

The Division of Insurance also finds, pursuant to Iowa Code section 17A.5(2)"b"(2), that the normal effective date of this rule should be waived and the rule be made effective on September 1, 1987, as it confers a benefit upon the public to assure timely and reasonable treatment of those seeking permits required by the Iowa Prearranged Funeral Contracts Act.

New rule 191-19.60(72GA, HF614) is adopted as follows:

191-19.60(72GA, HF614) Transitional rule.

19.60(1) The Iowa securities bureau may accept and process applications for establishment permits and sales permits filed pursuant to the Iowa prearranged funeral contracts Act at any time after September 1, 1987.

19.60(2) The Iowa securities bureau may accept and require the following fees at any time between September 1, 1987, and January 1, 1988:

- 1. Application packet $ 5.00
2. Certification $ 5.00
3. Duplicate permit fee $ 5.00
4. Establishment permit fee $ 30.00
5. Interpretative opinion $ 50.00
6. Filing fee (initial report) $ 200.00-500.00
7. Filing fee (seller's initial report) $ 25.00
8. Name change $ 10.00
9. Photocopies of records (per page) $ 0.50
10. Printout of permit holders $ 10.00
11. Sales permit fee $ 5.00

19.60(3) The Iowa securities bureau may accept and require the following forms and instructions, as a prerequisite for an establishment permit, on the form prescribed by the commissioner.

19.60(4) The Iowa securities bureau may accept and require the following forms at any time between September 1, 1987, and January 1, 1988:

a. Content. Copies of all necessary forms and instructions may be obtained from the Iowa Securities Bureau, Iowa State Office Building, Des Moines, Iowa 50319.

NOTE: Rule later dropped

INSURANCE DIVISION[191]

Adopted and Filed Emergency

Pursuant to the authority of 1987 Iowa Acts, House File 614, section 16, the Insurance Division of Iowa hereby emergency adopts and implements the rescission of rule 19.1(523A), "Forms," of Chapter 19 of the Iowa Administrative Code.

The rescission is necessary to conform to changes in the reporting requirements of the Iowa Prearranged Funeral Contracts Act. Prior to July 1, 1987, the reports were filed with the applicable County Recorder. After July 1, 1987, reports will be filed with the Securities Bureau of the Iowa Insurance Division.

The rescission of the rule and adoption of the rules proposed on this date and published herein under Notice of Intended Action as ARC 7875, will bring the Bureau's rules into compliance with the amendments contained in 1987 Iowa Acts, House File 614, which were effective July 1, 1987.

In compliance with Iowa Code section 17A.4(2), the Division of Insurance finds that public notice and participation are unnecessary and impracticable because the changes merely bring the chapter into compliance with the statutory amendments, which nullified the statutory basis and authority of the rescinded rule.

The Division also finds, pursuant to Iowa Code section 17A.5(2)"b"(2) that the normal effective date of this action, 35 days after publication, should be waived and the rescission should be made effective upon filing with the Administrative Rules Coordinator on August 7, 1987, as it confers a benefit on the public since the rescinded rule could be construed to be in conflict with the statute amendments. If the normal date is necessary to conform to the statute, and the notice period would delay adoption of new administrative regulations conforming to the amendments.

RCA 191-19.1(523A) is rescinded.

[Filed emergency 8/7/87, effective 8/7/87]
[Published 8/26/87]

EDITOR'S NOTE: For replacement pages for IAC, see IAC Supplement, 8/26/87.

After this rule was adopted, the Administrative Rules Review Committee of the General Assembly filed an objection on May 21, 1981, that the rule is unreasonable. The utilities applied for rehearing before the commission, but the application was denied on May 22, 1981. They next requested the commission to issue a statement of reasons for and against the rule, pursuant to section 17A.4(1)(b) of the Code. The commission issued the statement on July 15, 1981.

The utilities then sought judicial review of the rule, pursuant to section 17A.19 of the Code. Iowa Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition, Inc. (IC/LEC) intervened in the appeal.

On judicial review the utilities allege the rule exceeds the commission's statutory authority, is unreasonable, and violates constitutional clauses. The commission, on the other hand, contends that it has statutory authority under sections 476.1, .2, and .8 of the Code to promulgate mandatory utility financing.

The district court found the commission exceeded its statutory authority in promulgating the rule and therefore did not address the issues of unreasonableness and unconstitutionality. The commission and IC/LEC appealed to this court.

I. Scope of review. We first consider two preliminary issues.

[1] A. This court will make anew the determinations which the district court may make under section 17A.19 of the Code. Temple v. Vermeer Manufacturing Co., 285 N.W.2d 157, 159 (Iowa 1979). In reviewing agency rule making, we can properly consider both the record made before the agency and before the district court. Security Savings Bank v. Union, 283 N.W.2d 209, 211 (Iowa 1979); Community Action Research Group v. Iowa State Commerce Comm'n., 275 N.W.2d 217, 219 (1979).

[2] B. Any agency rule is presumed valid and it is the burden of the party challenging it to demonstrate that a "national agency" could not conclude the rule was within the agency's delegated authority. Millholin v. Viehies, 320 N.W.2d 552, 554 (1982); Iowa Auto Dealers Ass'n v. Iowa Department of Revenue, 301 N.W.2d 760, 762 (Iowa 1981); Wentworth Homes, Inc. v. Riedemann, 277 N.W.2d 911, 913 (Iowa 1979); Davenport Community School District v. Iowa Civil Rights Comm'n., 277 N.W.2d 907, 910 (Iowa 1979).

[3, 4] Once the Administrative Rules Review Committee objects to the contested rule, however, the burden shifts to the agency in a judicial review proceeding to prove the validity of the rule. Iowa Auto Dealers Ass'n 301 N.W.2d at 762; Iowa Code § 17A.4(1)(a) (1981). The committee objected that the rule was unreasonable. It did not object, however, with respect to the agency's delegated authority to promulgate such a rule. We find, therefore, that the district court correctly retained the burden on the utilities to prove promulgation of the rule was beyond the commission's statutory authority.

II. Agency's statutory authority. We pass then to the merits of the controversy.

[5, 6] A. To be valid, a rule adopted by an agency must be within the scope of powers delegated to it by statute. Haesemeyer v. Mosher, 305 N.W.2d 35, 37 (Iowa 1981); Temple v. Vermeer Manufacturing Co., 285 N.W.2d 157, 159 (Iowa 1979); Hiserote Homes, Inc. v. Riedemann, 277 N.W.2d 911, 913 (Iowa 1979); Davenport Community School Dist. v. Iowa Civil Rights Comm'n., 277 N.W.2d 907, 910 (Iowa 1979); Quaker Oats Co. v. Cedar Rapids Human Rights Comm'n., 268 N.W.2d 862, 868 (Iowa 1978). The ultimate determination of whether an agency could have rationally concluded it was acting within its delegated powers is for the court. Haesemeyer 308 N.W.2d at 37; *Iowa Department of Revenue v. B. The commission finds authority to promulgate mandatory utility financing in the recent amendments to sections 476.1 and .2 of the Code. Section 476.1 now provides in part:

The jurisdiction of the commission under this chapter shall include programs designed to promote the use of energy conservation strategies by rate or service-regulated gas and electric utilities.

Section 476.2 now provides in part:

The commission shall promulgate rules concerning the use of energy conservation strategies by rate or service regulated gas and electric utilities by July 1, 1981.

We note that the word "shall" include "must" as defined to promote the use of" and "shall promulgate rules concerning the use of" energy conservation strategies. (Iowa Code 1.1(4)) Section 41(6) of the Code provides that use of the word "shall" in a statute imposes a duty. Thus the commission's question is whether it

PROCEDURE FOR PROMULGATING REGULATIONS:

I. PUBLIC NOTICE

1. 30 days before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a regulation, notice shall be:

- a) published in the newspaper of general circulation,
- b) mailed to every person who has filed a request,
- c) mailed to the commissioner,
- d) mailed to interested persons (when appropriate in the judgement of the agency),
- e) furnished to the Department of Law with a copy of the proposed regulation,
- f) furnished to all incumbant legislators and the LAA
- g) furnished to the standing committee of each house have jurisdiction over the subject matter, together with a copy of the proposed regulation,
- h) furnished to the staff of the Administrative Regulation Review Committee.

2. Failure to mail notice does not invalidate an action taken by an agency.

4. Notice shall include:

- a) statement of time, place and nature of proceedings for adoption of regulation,
- b) reference to the authority under which the regulation is proposed,
- c) informative summary of the proposed subject of action,
- d) fiscal note if the regulation would require increased appropriations by the state.

5. On the date designated in the notice the agency shall give the opportunity to present statements in writing. (orally is optional to agency.)

6. An interested person may petition for adoption or repeal of a regulation. Agency has 30 days to deny petition in writing or schedule the matter for public hearing.

II. SUBMISSION TO THE DEPARTMENT OF LAW

1. Department of Law prepares a written statement of approval or disapproval after each regulation has been reviewed in order to determine:

- a) its legality,
- b) existence of statutory authority,
- c) its clarity,
- d) compliance with drafting manual.

III. SUBMISSION TO THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

1. Agency shall submit to the lieutenant governor for filing a certified original and one duplicate copy of every regulation adopted (with three exceptions).
2. Lieutenant governor may not accept a regulation which is not accompanied by written statement of Department of Law's approval.
3. Lieutenant governor shall supply a set of the AAC to each local government unit.
4. A regulation becomes effective on the 30th day after the date of its filing by the lieutenant governor.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES
OF THE MEDICAID RATE COMMISSION

Notice is given that the Medicaid Rate Commission, under authority vested by AS 47.07 and AS 47.07.073, proposes to amend regulations in Title 7 AAC 43 of the Alaska Administrative Code, dealing with establishment of a rate setting process for payment of services for Medical Assistance programs to facilities, to implement AS 47.07, as follows:

1. 7 AAC 43.675(f) is proposed to be amended to clarify Commission voting procedures.
2. 7 AAC 43.679(a) is proposed to be amended to reflect Accounting Manual changes.
3. 7 AAC 43.680(g) is proposed to be amended to clarify staff analysis mailing procedures.
4. 7 AAC 43.680(j) is proposed to be added to establish a procedure for corrected reports.
5. 7 AAC 43.686(d) is proposed to be amended to further define allowable costs included in determining a prospective rate.
6. 7 AAC 43.686(e) is proposed to be added to pay a return on equity to for profit facilities.
7. 7 AAC 43.691(a) and (b) are proposed to be amended to clarify language in the year end conformance review.
8. 7 AAC 43.691(c) is proposed to be repealed.
9. 7 AAC 43.697(j) is proposed to be amended to require electronic recording of Commission proceedings.
10. 7 AAC 43.709(27) is proposed to be amended to reflect changes in the Accounting and Reporting Manual.

Notice is also given that any person interested may present written statements or arguments to the proposed action by writing to the Medicaid Rate Commission, P O Box 240249,

Notice

Administrative Regulation Review Committee

Re: Consideration of committee's function and activities.

Since the A.L.I.V.E. decision by the Alaska Supreme Court, the legislature has tried to re-assert a legislative veto power over administration regulations through proposed constitutional amendments. The failure of these proposals lead me to believe that we should seek other ways to attain a proper and more determinative oversight role for the committee and the legislature as a whole. It is in this regard that I would appreciate your review of the attached material.

The report is a brief summary of what other states' laws and court decisions have done with legislative overview of administrative regulatory actions. It offers an instructive survey of how the separation of powers question is handled for contending jurisdictional interests across the nation. It also shows there is no preferred manner in which the legislative and executive entities exert contro<sup>l</sup> over rule making and regulatory powers delegated to the bureaucracy. Rather, there is a variety of approaches and corresponding court histories.

I present this report to you for discussion about what the committee should do to achieve a more productive and useful function. Should we seek selective veto powers? Expressly delegate the veto powers to the governor, Lt. governor or an independent committee? Seek agency burden of proof in a judicial setting? I hope you will give some consideration to these and the other examples in the report.

The special session offers a convenient time to share our thoughts on the committee's future goals, objectives, and activities.

BACKGROUND

A. HISTORY OF LEGISLATIVE VETO OF REGULATIONS IN ALASKA.

1975           Administrative Regulation Review Committee approved by legislature with power to review regulations and recommend annulment under AS 44.62.320.

1977           Legislature passed AS 46.03.758, authorizing DEC to prepare a schedule of penalties for oil spills -- several oil suppliers strongly opposed resulting regulation. The Regulation Review Committee's recommendation of annulment and the probable success of an anticipated annulling resolution by the legislature caused the Governor to exempt discharges of 5,000 barrels.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>See David S. Neslin. "Quis Custodiet Ipsos Custodes? (Who guards the guardians?): Gubernatorial and Legislative Review of Agency Rulemaking under the 1981 Model Act", 57 Washington Law Review 691 (1982). That article uses this instance to provide an example of the dangers of legislative veto mechanisms: ". . .[they are] susceptible to abuse by powerful legislators with 1978 Legislature added power of suspension to the Regulation Review Committee. Requires an affirmative vote by two-thirds of committee members to suspend effectiveness of interim regulations until 30 days after legislature reconvenes.

1980 The Alaska Supreme Court in State v. A.L.I.V.E. VOLUNTARY held that the ability of the legislature to annul regulations by concurrent resolution was unconstitutional.<sup>2</sup> (See Appendix 1 for a copy of the decision).

A.L.I.V.E., a political action committee for the Teamsters' Union, had sued the state, alleging that the Department of Revenue's denial of a parochial interests and by influential interest groups acting contrary to the public interest. Because of the informal nature of this process and the tendency of agencies to accede to committee requests, abuse will be difficult to detect or remedy. Legislative vetoes also facilitate over-involvement by the legislature in the daily administration of agency programs, and allow the committee . . . to narrow the scope of agency discretion. This subverts the more representative and formal statutory process, with its built-in checks and balances. Finally, by avoiding the governor's veto, legislative vetoes reduce the governor's authority and bargaining power with the legislature."

permit to conduct lotteries was wrongful, partly because the denial was based on a regulation which had been nullified by the legislature. The Court held that legislative annulment of a regulation by concurrent resolution violated Article II of Alaska's Constitution, which requires the governor to have the opportunity to veto any bill before it becomes law. ". . .the annulment provisions...permit the legislature to void administrative regulations which are in effect. Such regulations are laws in every meaningful sense, and annulling any one of them effects a change in the law."<sup>3</sup>

1980 Constitutional Amendment to allow legislature to annul regulations by concurrent resolution defeated by voters in general election.

1982 Legislature amended Regulation Review Committee powers to allow suspension of regulations with a committee resolution (rather than a committee report). Legislative intent stated that "It is the intent. . .that [suspension powers] be granted to . . .prevent the public suffering

B. OTHER LEGISLATIVE OVERSIGHT FUNCTIONS IN ALASKA.

Legislative Budget and Audit<sup>4</sup> -- A permanent interim committee of the legislature whose powers include the power to "review and approved proposed changes to agency authorized budgets as provided in the Executive Budget Act (AS 37.07)"<sup>5</sup> Under the Executive Budget Act, the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee can delay a revised program for 45 days, after which time the governor can commence with that activity.<sup>6</sup>

Legislative Council<sup>7</sup> -- A permanent interim committee and service agency of the legislature whose powers include the power to "execute a program for the oversight of the administration and construction of laws by state agencies and the courts through regulations, opinions & rulings."<sup>8</sup> The Legislative Council is also specifically authorized in the Constitution to "perform duties as provided by the legislature."<sup>9</sup> The Legislative Council is also required to annually examine regulations and court opinions to determine whether they properly implement legislative purposes or whether they indicate unclear statutes. The Council is required to submit an annual report to the legislature.<sup>10</sup>

Legislative Audit<sup>11</sup> -- A permanent staff agency responsible to the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee. Among other duties, Legislative Audit is required to perform performance post-audits of any agency at the request of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee.<sup>12</sup>

Code Revision Commission<sup>13</sup> -- A permanent commission of the legislature which is required to examine statutes to discover defects in law, review and consider proposed changes recommended by the American Law Institute, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, etc., and to submit reports and recommendations to the Legislative Council.

Ombudsman<sup>14</sup> -- An office created in the legislative branch which has jurisdiction to investigate the administrative acts of agencies.<sup>15</sup> The Ombudsman is required to report opinion and recommendations to the agency, and then to present the report to the governor, legislature, grand jury, and/or the public.

C. SEPARATION OF POWERS ISSUES.

Any attempt by a legislature to exert influence over the regulatory process raises a major constitutional issue: Does the attempt constitute a violation of the separation of powers doctrine? This issue is resolved by asking whether the legislature is trespassing on the

authority of the executive branch, and whether the attempt involves an improper delegation of legislative authority (i.e. a delegation of the power of the legislature as a whole to a legislative committee).

The Alaska Supreme Court has held that Alaska recognizes the separation of powers doctrine.<sup>16</sup> In Bradner, the legislature, by statute, attempted to require legislative confirmation of executive officers below the level of department head. In finding that action a violation of the separation of powers doctrine, the court found that the appointment of executive officers was an executive function and stated: "In our view, the separation of powers doctrine requires that the blending of governmental powers will not be inferred in the absence of an express constitutional provision." In Bradner, the Court first asked the threshold question of whether the appointment of executive officers is a legislative or executive function.

In A.L.I.V.E., the Alaska Supreme Court held that the legislature cannot exercise its legislative power without following the enactment provisions of the constitution.<sup>17</sup> (passage by requisite majority of each house; opportunity of governor to veto bill; three readings of a bill, on three separate days, etc.)

The central question in determining whether an action constitutes a violation of the separation of powers doctrine appears to be whether or not the act would be considered a "legislative" act, requiring the governor to have an opportunity of vetoing the act.

The A.L.I.V.E. opinion clearly states that the majority of the Court (Chief Justice Boochever and Justice Connor dissented) considers an annulment of a regulation an exercise of legislative power, and an invalid exercise unless the annulment is achieved through a bill which is subject to the governor's veto. However, the majority opinion does not clarify what other sort of legislative oversight in the regulatory process would be constitutionally valid.<sup>18</sup> In particular, the A.L.I.V.E.

<sup>18</sup>Although it does seem clear that the Court would have considered the delegation of annulment authority to an independent agency to be constitutionally valid. ". . .we may assume that the legislature has the power to establish an independent agency which would have the power to disapprove of agency regulations. Since the agency would be a part of the executive department, the article II constraints on legislative action would not govern its functions." Id at 777.

decision does not clarify the constitutionality of AS 24.20.225 (the authority of the Administrative Regulation Review Committee to suspend regulations), nor forms of limited legislative vetoes which have been valid in other states.

In some cases decided by other states subsequent to the A.L.I.V.E. decision, there has been some cautious acceptance of a selective legislative veto; a veto of either regulations or other executive branch actions by concurrent resolution, or in some cases by committee action.<sup>19</sup> In other cases, such as the two Kentucky decisions discussed below, there have been allusions to possible gaps in the usual inability of the legislature to veto executive actions.

SURVEY OF ALTERNATIVE APPROACHES IN OTHER STATES.

Following is a survey of approaches to the regulatory control or annulment in other states as well as a discussion of court opinions dealing with those approaches.

A. Action By Legislative Committee:

A.1. Veto budget decisions: Invalid in Kentucky.

The Kentucky Supreme Court has held that the power given to the Legislative Research Commission to veto executive decisions concerning the administration of the budget was considered executive in nature and not the subject of proper delegation by the General Assembly.<sup>20</sup> However, in that case, the court emphasized the fact that Kentucky's Constitution has an express separation of powers provision (which Alaska's Constitution does not). In addition, Kentucky's Legislative Research Commission was authorized to ". . .conduct while the General Assembly is not in session, any and all business of the legislative department of government, except for the passage of legislation, which could be conducted. . .if the General Assembly was in session." (A much broader statute that has been attempted in Alaska).

A.2. Disapprove regulations: Invalid in West Virginia, New Hampshire.

In West Virginia, the Court struck down an attempt by the legislature to allow a review committee to disapprove regulations holding that the legislature cannot disapprove or amend regulations unless by legislative enactment.<sup>21</sup> In New Hampshire, the Supreme Court issued an advisory opinion that a proposed statute which would allow committees of the legislature to disapprove rules was unconstitutional.<sup>22</sup>

A.3. Approval of Department of Administration regulations: Valid in Kansas.

In a challenge to the State Finance Council (which is made up of the governor and eight legislators and which has authority over the Department of Administration: fixing compensation, approving regulations, etc.), the Kansas Supreme Court held the council's authority constitutional, holding that a strict application of separation of powers doctrine was not appropriate in the modern context of complex state government operations.<sup>23</sup> (Case contained in Appendix 2). It might be noteworthy that the jurisdiction of the Kansas State Finance Council is limited to the Department of Administration, and that possible interference by the legislature with executive functions are also limited to that department.

A.4. Suspension of Regulations by Legislative Committee:

There is statutory authority for a legislative committee to suspend regulations in Alaska, Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, and South Dakota. <sup>24</sup>

In Alaska, AS 24.20.445 authorizes the Administrative Regulation Review Committee to suspend the "effectiveness of the adoption of or amendment to a regulation adopted after adjournment of the previous regular session of the legislature, until 30 days after the legislature reconvenes." The statute allows suspension with an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the committee members, and once a resolution to that effect is filed with the lieutenant governor. The committee has not attempted to suspend regulations to this time.

Since the procedure authorized in the Alaska statutes does not involve an actual annulment of a regulation without giving the governor the opportunity to veto, AS 24.20.445 skirts the major problem the Court pointed to in the A.L.I.V.E. case; the violation of Article II of the Constitution. Under A.L.I.V.E., annulment of a regulation is a "legislative" action, requiring passage by both bodies and the opportunity for the governor to veto. The question is whether the Court would also find a suspension of a regulation by the Regulation Review Committee a "legislative" action, having the effect of law. If the suspension was considered a "legislative" action then any action by the committee would be an unconstitutional violation of the separation of powers. On one side it could be said that suspension is not a legislative action; it does not have the force and effect of law since it is only temporary. On the other side it could be said that suspension is worse than annulment since it leaves agencies in regulatory limbo until the legislature convenes; and thus, in effect, suspension does have the force of law. From previous court decisions, it is not clear how the court would rule on this issue.

B. Annulment authority in independent agency.

B.1. Statutory authority in California.

California passed legislation authorizing an Office of Administrative Law (OAL) in 1980. The OAL is an independent agency which has power to disapprove rules subject to the governor's veto. "The OAL is the best financed and the most active reviewing body in the states. The legislature appropriated $1.4 million for the OAL's first-year operating budget and another $2.1 million to defer the compliance of state agencies. As of March, 1981, the OAL had a staff of 26, including seven attorneys. . . During its first year of operation, July 1980 to June 1981, the OAL disapproved 27% of all proposed rules."<sup>25</sup>

B.2. Mentioned as a constitutional alternative in the A.L.I.V.E. decision.

In A.L.I.V.E., the Court stated ". . .we may assume that the legislature has the power to establish an independent agency which would have the power to disapprove of agency regulations. Since the agency would be a part of the executive department, the article Ii constraints on legislative actions would not govern its functions."<sup>26</sup>

C. Selective veto by legislature as a whole (no veto power by governor):

C.1. Veto of sentencing guidelines adopted by Sentencing Commission: Narrowly upheld by Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

In a plurality opinion, the Pennsylvania Superior Court held that legislative veto of sentencing guidelines were constitutional.<sup>27</sup> (Case contained in Appendix 3). Four justices joined in an opinion which held that the General Assembly's rejection of the guidelines was not a violation of the separation of powers because it was not an "exercise of legislative power". That opinion stressed that the guidelines which were rejected were only proposed and not permanent (thus the effect of rejection did not have the force of law), and also that the "legislative power" was exercised when the enabling legislation was passed and gone to the governor -- since the governor had the opportunity to veto, there were no separation of powers problems.<sup>28</sup> (Four justices dissented, one justice concurred in part, and dissented in part).

C.2. Public Building Authority cannot build any project not specifically passed by General Assembly: Upheld in Virginia.

<sup>28</sup>The Alaska Supreme Court rejected a form of this argument in A.L.I.V.E. where the legislature was arguing that since the bill which authorized the legislature to annul regulation by resolution was approved by the governor, that freed the legislature ". . . of the constitutional restraints which would otherwise govern its actions. In other words, by virtue of one enactment approved by the governor, the legislature can free itself, in certain instances, of the constitutional constraints that would otherwise govern its actions." Of course, the Pennsylvania General Assembly's legislation which included a veto provision for sentencing guidelines is distinguishable from, and much more narrowly drawn than the Alaska Legislature's legislation which authorized a legislative veto for all regulations.

The Virginia Supreme Court held that the provision in the Public Building Authority Act that the Authority could not undertake any project not specifically included in a bill passed by the General Assembly was not a violation of the separation of powers.<sup>29</sup> (Case contained in Appendix 4). The Court cited the New Jersey case (Enourato) discussed below, and quoted an early Virginia case<sup>30</sup> (which in turn quoted Story's Const.): ". . .It is not meant to affirm that they [the three departments of government] must be kept wholly and entirely separate and distinct, and have no common link or dependence. . .The true meaning is that the whole power of one of these departments should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of either of the other departments.

C.3. Building authority must obtain legislative approval of projects over $100,000: Upheld in New Jersey.

C.4. Building authority must obtain approval of presiding officer of each house for every lease agreement with state agency: Upheld in New Jersey.<sup>31</sup>

In Enourato, the New Jersey Supreme Court held that legislative veto provisions in the New Jersey Building Authority Act were constitutional.<sup>32</sup> (Case contained in Appendix 5). Under the Act, the Authority must obtain a concurrent resolution of the legislature within 45 days of the submission of a project whose estimated cost exceeds $100,000 and also must have the approval of the presiding officer of each house of the legislature of every lease agreement between the Authority and a state agency. The court stressed the limited nature of the veto power, the fact that it is "only one part of the broader statutory scheme ensuring fiscal prudence", that it offers "little potential for interference with executive functions or alteration of the statute's purpose."

D. Sunset of regulations. Statutory authority in South Dakota.

South Dakota statute SDCL 1-26B terminates the authority of state agencies to promulgate regulations and voids existing regulations on a schedule. The statute also provides for interim legislative committees to review each agencies' regulations during the interim preceding the scheduled year for termination.

One possible version of sunseting regulations which was not used by any of the states surveyed might be to authorize regulatory powers to an agency for only a very short term -- for example until the next legislative session; in effect, only authorizing an agency to promulgate temporary regulations. During the next legislative session, the legislature would be in a position to either force the agency to issue regulations more in line with legislative intent or extend the authorization for the regulations for a longer period of time.

E. Veto of regulation by governor. Statutory authority in Iowa, Louisiana, Wyoming. Recommended by the Model State Administrative Procedure Act (1981).<sup>33</sup>

Under the Alaska Administrative Procedure Act, the Department of Law has the authority to disapprove a regulation after determining its: 1) legality, constitutionality and consistency with other regulations; 2) the existence of statutory authority [note this allows the Department of Law broad discretion of interpretation of statutory limits] and the correctness of the required citation of statutory authority following each section; 3) its clarity, simplicity of expression, and absence of possibility of misapplication; 4) compliance with the drafting manual for administrative regulations.<sup>34</sup>

F. Approval of regulation by governor. Statutory authority in Hawaii, Indiana, Nebraska, Wyoming.<sup>35</sup>

Under the Alaska Administrative Procedure Act, the Lieutenant Governor files regulations.<sup>36</sup> It should be

G. Shift burden of proof of regulations validity in a judicial review to the agency:

There is statutory authority to shift the burden of proving a regulation's validity to an agency in Iowa, Louisiana, Wyoming. This is also an option under the Model State Administrative Procedure Act (1981).<sup>38</sup>

The Model State Administrative Procedure Act (1981) has a provision whereby an agency has burden of proof of establishing the validity of a regulation upon judicial review when a review committee files an objection on the grounds of invalidity. This reverses the usual presumption of a rule's validity.<sup>39</sup>

<sup>39</sup>See Union Oil Co. v. State, Alaska, 574 P.2d 1266 (1978), where the court held that a regulation is accorded the presumption of validity and the challenger must demonstrate invalidity. Note also AS 44.62.300 which provides for a judicial declaration on validity of a regulation by an interested person when that person brings an action for declaratory relief in the superior court.

A procedural rule of the Iowa Department of Social Services was challenged on the basis that it violated the purpose and intent of the Administrative Procedure Act.<sup>40</sup> The Iowa legislature's administrative rules review committee had objected to the rule, but the department argued that the objection was ineffective because it did not notify the agency of the objection as required by statute (" . . . objection must contain essential findings and a brief elaboration of reasons.") The Court held that while the " . . . skimpy objection lodged in this instance and set out above only minimally passes muster", the burden of proving the regulation's validity passed to the agency. In this case, the Court held that the agency did not meet its burden of proving the rules validity.

H. Limit agency jurisdiction:

The following quote is from an article on alternatives to the legislative veto which are available to Congress. These would be an option for states as well. By utilizing any of the six possibilities listed below, a legislature would avoid separation of powers problems implicit in various forms of the legislative veto.

"A. . .major statutory technique for Congress to limit the impact or effect the overturn of existing or proposed rules to alter the jurisdiction of the issuing federal agency:

a. by granting exemptions to the rulemaking authority of the agency head;

b. by removing express areas from the regulatory authority of the agency head;

c. by establishing moratoriums on certain rulemaking;

d. by transferring jurisdiction from one agency to another or from the federal agency to state authorities;

e. by providing for waivers for regulated categories; and

f. by deregulating an area.

Such statutory instruments, occasionally used in tandem with direct overrides or congressional preemption of specific rules, may have a broader impact than the more focused revocation or preemption."<sup>41</sup>

I. Veto statute in budget bill.

<sup>41</sup>Frederick M. Kaiser, "Congressional Action to Overturn Agency Rules: Alternatives to the 'Legislative Veto'", Administrative Law Review 667, 674.

In a recent decision, the Kentucky Supreme Court held that the General Assembly had the authority to provide in a budget bill for the suspension or modification of the operation of a statute.<sup>42</sup> (Case included in Appendix 6). In Collins, the Court concluded that: "The budget, which provides the revenue for the Commonwealth and which determines how that revenue shall be spent, is fundamentally a legislative matter. . . In a word, the final action on the enactment or adoption of the budget is a legislative matter."<sup>43</sup> Thus, in Kentucky, there is an indication that the legislature may have more valid authority in annulling statutes and regulations dealing with budgetary matters without violating the separation of powers doctrine.

J. Constitutional considerations to various approaches to regulatory control or annulment in other states.

Alternatives A and C listed above -- variations of annulment or suspension of regulation by committee or a limited legislative veto not subject to the governor's veto -- are at risk to a successful constitutional challenge. The Alaska Supreme Court has not clarified what would be constitutionally invalid, other than annulment of a regulation. In other states, there are indications that some involvement by the legislature into the executive branch's actions might be acceptable -- particularly in the realm of the budget, and also if the involvement is limited.

Alternatives B and D - I appear to be least susceptible to a successful constitutional challenge, and thus the safest alternatives. The Alaska Supreme Court has stated in the A.L.I.V.E. decision that B -- an independent agency to annul regulations -- would be acceptable. D -- sunseting regulations -- would appear to be acceptable, since regulatory authority does not exist in agencies without authorization from the legislature to begin with. E and F -- approval or veto by the governor -- would appear to be acceptable, since the separation of powers doctrine requires that that the legislature cannot both make laws and administer them, and the Supreme Court has said that an agency within the executive branch would be acceptable. G -- shifting the burden of proof -- appears to be acceptable, since the legislature is not making the final decision of a regulation's validity, the court is. H -- limiting an agency's jurisdiction -- is certainly acceptable, since that is a function of the legislature. I -- annulling a statute or regulation in the budget bill -- would appear to be acceptable, since the governor is still given the opportunity to veto the annulment through the line item veto. However, this option would need to be analyzed further to ascertain any conflicts with Alaska's requirements for legislation -- the single subject rule, etc.

board, appears appropriate in view of all of the circumstances revealed in our review of the entire record. (Cf. *Davidson v. MOSK, Justice, dissenting.
I dissent.

A trivial incident in which the petitioner was zealously, and legally, serving the interests of his clients and no self-interest has been magnified out of all proportion. There was no commission or omission that merits discipline by the bar.

Petitioner represented three defendants charged with a narcotics offense. At arraignment on December 13 the district attorney declared he would not object to reduction of bail from the $50,000 each originally requested by the sheriff to $10,000. Nevertheless the municipal court commissioner set bail at $50,000.

The same day petitioner appeared in open court before a municipal court judge and again requested a reduction of bail to $10,000. The hearing was continued to December 16 and bail remained at $50,000 in the interim. After the hearing petitioner advised the district attorney and the sheriff's investigating officer that he would seek a reduction in the superior court, and both stated they would not oppose bail reduction to $10,000.

Immediately thereafter the petitioner contacted the superior court bail commissioner, David Ziskrout, and upon representation that bail had been set at $50,000 for each defendant but that neither the district attorney nor sheriff would oppose reduction to $10,000 for each, the commissioner so reduced the bail.

Two questions emerge: was an injustice committed, and was the commissioner deceived by this attorney. It seems crystal clear to me that both queries must be answered in the negative.

That reduction of bail to $10,000 was not improper under all the circumstances is confirmed not only by acquiescence of the prosecuting agencies, but by subsequent action of the municipal court. On December 16 the municipal court judge before whom the preliminary hearing was set reduced bail on each defendant to $7,500.

The superior court commissioner could not have been deceived for he was advised bail had been set at $50,000 and he was being asked for a reduction to $10,000. Since it was his duty to independently determine the appropriate bail, the conclusion—actually the mere deferment of action—of a judicial officer at a lower level should have been of no significance.

It would be reassuring if this were among the more serious charges to be leveled against a California attorney. But I strongly suspect there is more egregious malfeasance than this minutia among a few of our more irresponsible and unethical legal brethren that should occupy the time and attention of the State Bar and this court.

I would dismiss the proceeding.

BIRD, C. J., concurs.

NEWMAN, Justice, dissenting.

I agree with Justice Mosk. Especially does it seem unwise to exploit "the time and attention of the State Bar" when peccadillos occur in a setting where the judge or other adjudicator who is involved may easily dispose of the matter. Is it not appropriate, for instance, to proceed informally in the manner typically not when an alleged "contempt", even where admitted or proved, leads merely to private admonition?

With regard to "the time and attention of this court", here again we see exemplified the kind of State Bar case that in my view should be transferred pursuant to California Constitution, article VI, section 12. (Cf. conc. opn. in Bible v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1980) 26 Cal.3d 548, 556, 162 Cal Rptr 426, 606 P.2d 733.)

STATE of Alaska and Department of Revenue, Appellants,

v.

A.L.I.V.E. VOLUNTARY, Appellee.

No. 3670.

Supreme Court of Alaska.

Feb. 19, 1980.

Unincorporated association, which was political action committee for unions, brought suit based on allegation that Department of Revenue's denial of permit allowing association to operate lotteries was wrongful for certain reasons including fact that such denial was based on continuing enforcement of a regulation despite its nullification by legislature. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Peter J. Kalamarides, J., granted association partial summary judgment, and State and Department of Revenue appealed. The Supreme Court, Matthews, J., held that statute providing that legislature, by concurrent resolution adopted by vote of both houses, could annul a regulation of an agency or department violated state constitutional provisions defining the mechanics of legislation.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Boochever, C. J., dissented and filed opinion in which Connor, J., joined.

1. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  107(1)

Constitutional requirements that every bill be confined to one subject and that there be a descriptive title are intended to prevent inclusion of incongruous and unrelated matters in same bill and to guard against inadvertence, stealth and fraud in legislation. Const. art. 2, § 13.

2. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  15, 19

Purpose of state constitutional provision requiring three readings of a bill on three separate days, requiring that vote of each legislator on final passage of a bill be recorded and requiring that no bill pass without an affirmative vote of the majority of the membership of each house is to ensure deliberation prior to passage, to ensure that requisite majority of each house affirmatively votes to enact a bill into law and to provide a public record of the vote cast by each legislator. Const. art. 2, § 14.

3. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  26

Purpose of state constitutional provisions to effect that no bill shall become law unless governor has opportunity to veto it is to preserve integrity of executive branch of government, and thus maintain equilibrium of governmental powers, and to act as a check on hasty and ill-considered legislation. Const. art. 2, §§ 15, 17.

4. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  255

Purpose of state constitutional provision that laws are not to become effective, unless a two-thirds vote of membership of each house provides otherwise, until 90 days after they are enacted is to provide fair opportunity to those people affected by the legislation to learn of it. Const. art. 2, § 19.

5. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  22

Statute providing that legislature, by concurrent resolution adopted by vote of both houses, could annul a regulation of an agency or department violated state constitutional provisions defining the mechanics of legislation. Const. art. 2, §§ 1 et seq., 5, 13-15, art. 3, § 23; art. 10, § 12; AS 44.62.320(a).

6. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  22

When legislature wishes to act in an advisory capacity it may act by resolution, but if it wishes to take action having a binding effect on those outside the legislature, it may do so only by following the enactment procedure set forth in State Constitution. Const. art. 2, § 1 et seq.

7. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  22

Legislature has no implied general power to veto agency regulations by informal legislative actions. Const. art. 3, § 23; art. 10, § 12.

8. Administrative Law and Procedure —385

Power granted by state constitutional provisions to effect that, unless they are disapproved by legislature within 60 days, changes in the law by executive order shall become effective at a date thereafter to be designated by governor and that recommendations made by a state local boundary commission become effective 45 days after presentation to the legislature unless vetoed is not rule-making power, but, rather, power to change statutes, and, thus, expression of such power in Constitution does not carry any implication that general administrative rule making is meant to be forbidden. Const. art. 2, § 23; art. 10, § 12.

9. Constitutional Law —60

Though legislature can delegate power to make laws conditionally, the condition must be lawful and may not contain a grant of power to any branch of government to function in a manner prohibited by Constitution; fact that legislature can delegate legislative powers to others, who are not bound by constitutional provisions defining the mechanics of legislation, does not mean that legislature can delegate the same power to itself and, in the process, escape from such constitutional constraints under which it must operate. Const. art. 2, § 1 et seq.

10. Constitutional Law —58

Though power to void agency regulations can be exercised by either legislature or agency, if legislature exercises such power it must do so while acting as a legislature; it may not grant itself the power to act as an agency. Const. art. 2, §§ 1 et seq., 5; art. 3, § 26.

OPINION

MATTHEWS, Justice.

AS 44.62.320(a) provides:

The legislature, by a concurrent resolution adopted by a vote of both houses, may annul a regulation of an agency or department.

This statute encompasses a variant of what has come to be called the legislative veto.<sup>1</sup> The question in this case is whether this device violates article II of the Alaska Constitution. We hold that it does.

I

Chapter 15 of Title 5 of the Alaska Statutes authorizes games of chance and skill to be operated by permit holders. Only certain kinds of games, ("bingo, raffles and lotteries, ice classics, dog mushers' contests, fish derbies and contests of skill") are allowed,<sup>2</sup> only nonprofit organizations may be issued a permit,<sup>3</sup> and all revenues must be devoted to "the awarding of prizes to contestants or participants and to educational, civic, public, charitable, patriotic or religious uses."<sup>4</sup> The Commissioner of Revenue has been delegated the authority to adopt rules and regulations "necessary to carry out this chapter or protect the best interest of the public."<sup>5</sup>

From 1960 until 1976 one of the Commissioner's regulations prohibited lottery operators from giving prizes exceeding $15,000 in personal property or $30,000 in real property annually.<sup>6</sup> In November of 1976 the regulation was amended by increasing the annual personal property limit to $30,000 and the annual real property limit to $50,000 and by stating that personal property included cash and negotiable instruments.<sup>7</sup>

A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary is an unincorporated association which acts as the political action committee for the Teamster's Union Local No. 959, and affiliated unions. For three years it has operated fund raising lotteries under a permit issued by the Department of Revenue. It applied for a permit for 1977 and reported that during 1976 it had distributed $80,000 in cash prizes. The Department denied A.L.I.V.E. a permit for 1977 on the ground that its prize distribution in 1976 had exceeded the allowable limit.

A.L.I.V.E. then brought suit against the Department alleging that the denial of the permit was wrongful, claiming that under the first version of the regulation which was in effect for most of 1976 cash prizes were not included within the personal property limitation of $15,000. While the case was pending before the superior court, the legislature, acting under AS 44.62.320(a), annulled, by concurrent resolution, 15 AAC 05.410.<sup>8,9</sup>

As a result of the legislative annulment A.L.I.V.E. added another count to its complaint under which it claimed that the denial of its permit was wrongful because it was based on continuing enforcement of the regulation despite its nullification by the legislature. In response, the state claimed that the legislature could not constitutionally annul an administrative regulation by concurrent resolution and therefore the regulation had not been annulled. Both parties moved for summary judgment on this issue. The court granted partial summary judgment in favor of A.L.I.V.E., holding that the legislative annulment power was constitutional and that the regulation in question was void ab initio.<sup>9</sup>

WHEREAS 15 AAC 05.410(a), adopted by the Department of Revenue, restricts the value of prizes which may be awarded in a single year by a qualified organization in a raffle or lottery to $30,000 in personal property and $50,000 in real property; and

WHEREAS the prevention of high-stakes gambling sought by this regulation could be achieved more effectively through less restrictive means; specifically, the value of prizes awarded in individual raffles or lotteries could be limited or the prize limit could be related to the amount required to participate in the raffle or lottery; and

WHEREAS this regulation would frustrate the intent of AS 05.15.150 which specifies permissible uses for net proceeds of raffles and lotteries, by preventing qualified organizations from garnering net proceeds in sufficient amounts for uses specifically mentioned in AS 05.15.150, such as erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or lessening the burden on government.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE that administrative regulation 15 AAC 05.410(a) is annulled.

9. That is, since 1960. Legislative Resolve No. 79 purported to annul not merely the 1976 amendments to the regulation, but the regulation in its entirety. See note 8, supra.

5. AS 05.15.000(11).

6. The regulation was designated 15 AAC 05.410(a). It provided:

In holding, operating and conducting raffles or lotteries, no permittee shall raffle prizes of personal property in excess of the sum or value of $15,000.00 in any one calendar year and real property in excess of the sum or value of $30,000.00 in any one calendar year.

7. As amended the regulation reads:

(4) In holding, operating and conducting raffles or lotteries, a permittee may not raffle prizes of personal property, including cash or a negotiable instrument, the aggregate total of which is in excess of the sum or value of $30,000 in any one calendar year and real property in excess of the sum or value of $50,000 in any one calendar year.

8. Legislative Resolve No. 79, in full, states: Amending a regulation of the Department of Revenue pertaining to the value of prizes awarded in raffles and lotteries. BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

WHEREAS under AS 44.62.320 the legislature by concurrent resolution adopted by a vote of both houses may annul a regulation of an agency or department; and

II

The Alaska Constitution defines with specificity the mechanics of legislation.<sup>10</sup> Each provision has a purpose "designed to engender a responsible legislative process worthy of the public trust." Plumley v. Hale, 594 P.2d 497, 500 (Alaska 1979).

[1] Article II, section 13 requires that every bill be confined to one subject and that there be a descriptive title. These requirements are designed "to prevent the inclusion of incongruous and unrelated matters in the same bill in order to get support for it which the several subjects might not separately command, and to guard against inadvertence, stealth and fraud in legislation." Suber v. Alaska State Bond Committee, 414 P.2d 546, 557 (Alaska 1966). The same section also requires a specific form of enactment clause to avoid confusion as to when the legislature is speaking with the force and effect of law, as distinguished from the mere expression of its views and desires.<sup>11</sup>

[2] Article II, section 14 requires three readings of a bill, on three separate days in order "to ensure that the legislature knows what it is passing." North Slope Borough v. Sohio Petroleum Corp., 585 P.2d 534, 543 n. 11 (Alaska 1978), and to ensure an opportunity for the expression of public opinion and due deliberation.<sup>12</sup> Section 14 also requires that the vote of each legislator on final passage of a bill be recorded and that no bill may pass without an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of each house. These provisions are meant "to ensure deliberation prior to passage, to ensure that the requisite majority of each house affirmatively votes to enact a bill into law, and to provide a public record of the vote cast by each legislator." Plumley v. Hale, 594 P.2d 497, 500 (Alaska 1979).

[3,4] In addition to these formal safeguards there is the condition that no bill shall become law unless the governor has the opportunity to veto it.<sup>13</sup> This power is granted "to preserve the integrity of [the executive] branch of government and thus maintain an equilibrium of governmental powers . . . [and] to act as a check upon corrupt or hasty and ill-considered legislation." Thomas v. Rosen, 569 P.2d 793, 795 n. 5 (Alaska 1977) (citation omitted). Finally, there is the clause that laws do not become effective, unless a two-thirds vote of the membership of each house provides otherwise, until ninety days after they are enacted. Art. II, § 18. This is designed to provide a fair opportunity to those people affected by legislation to learn of the laws they must live by.<sup>14</sup> become law without an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of each house. The yeas and nays on final passage shall be entered in the journal.

[5,6] The question presented by this case is whether the legislature can exercise its legislative power without following these enactment provisions. In our view the answer must be in the negative, for otherwise they would serve no purpose. In Plumley v. Hale, 594 P.2d 497, 502 (Alaska 1979) we held that the requirements of Art. II § 14 are mandatory, not permissive.<sup>15</sup>

12. See 3 Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention 1751-54 (January 11, 1956).
13. Art. II, §§ 15, 16 and 17.
14. See 4 Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention 310 (January 25, 1956).
15. We also referred to the Art. II, §§ 14 and 15

The minutes of the proceedings of our constitutional convention indicate that the delegates were fully aware that only by following the enactment procedures could the legislature make law. Thus, Delegate Sundborg stated:

Now, a majority vote in each house of the legislature is not equivalent to passing a law, because it does not require the signature of the governor, and it does not require conformance with the provisions of this constitution and the provisions of such laws as will be passed under it with respect to the procedure in enacting a law. So, when we say in the second sentence, "The state may by law," we are saying that that law must be passed by the legislature in the manner that is required by the constitution and the statutes, and either signed by the governor or passed over his veto or become law without his signature in the manner provided in the constitution, which we felt was the real intention of the body rather than merely requiring that the legislature by a majority in each house and without adhering to any of those other restrictions and without any reference to the governor could contract debt on behalf of the state.

5 Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention at 3405 (January 25, 1956). Of course, when the legislature wishes to act in an advisory capacity it may act by resolution. However, when it means to take action having a binding effect on those outside the legislature it may do so only by following the enactment procedures. Other state courts have so held with virtual unanimity.<sup>16</sup>

Pet. Corp., 585 P.2d 534, 543 n. 11 (Alaska 1978), stating: "Our constitution imposes certain requirements of formality on legislative action . . . The legislature enacts laws by the passage of bills meeting the foregoing formalities. It may not enact a law or change one by committee report."

16. Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 454 (1950) is perhaps an exception. At issue there was a statute allowing certain tax proceeds to be pledged as security for bonds to pay for construction of

Thus in People ex rel. Berritt v. Commissioners of State Contracts, 120 Ill. 322, 11 N.E. 180 (1887) a joint resolution directed state officials to make a contract for the publication and distribution of certain municipal laws and provided an appropriation for that purpose. The Illinois Supreme Court held that the joint resolution was invalid because the enactment procedures prescribed by the Illinois Constitution had not been followed. Speaking of them, the court stated:

That these various provisions, giving the form and mode by which, through the concurrent action of the legislative and executive departments, valid and binding laws are enacted, are, in the highest sense, mandatory, cannot be doubted.

11 N.E. at 185. The court went on to note that nothing becomes law simply and solely because men who possess the legislative power will that it shall be, unless they express their determination to that effect in the mode pointed out by the instrument which invests them with the power, and under all the forms which that instrument has rendered essential. [Citation omitted].

Id.

In Mullan v. State, 114 Cal. 578, 46 P. 670 (1896) the California legislature had passed a resolution requiring compensation of a private individual. In rejecting the argument that the resolution had the effect of law the court stated:

A mere resolution is not a competent method of expressing the legislative will, where that expression is to such precede shall first be approved by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives." Id. 218 P.2d at 502. The court upheld the statute, holding that such a resolution was not legislative in character, but "related solely to the transaction of the business of the two houses." Id. 218 P.2d at 510. One proponent of the legislative veto has remarked that the reasoning of this case is "so unsatisfactory as to detract its value as a precedent." Schwartz, Legislative Control of Administrative Rules & Regulations, 30 N.Y.U. Rev. L. & Ethics 107 (1962).

have the force of law, and bind others than the members of the house or houses adopting it.

36 P. at 672.

Moran v. La Guardia, 270 N.Y. 450, 1 N.E.2d 961 (1936) involved statutory provisions reducing public employees' salaries during an economic emergency "until the legislature shall find their further operation unnecessary." The legislature first attempted to repeal this law by passing a bill, but it was vetoed by the Governor. The same result was then sought by the passage of a joint resolution. In an alternative holding the court held that the legislature could not constitutionally terminate the operation of the statute by resolution.<sup>17</sup>

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature is not effective to modify or repeal a statutory enactment. To repeal or modify a statute requires a legislative act of equal dignity and import. Nothing less than another statute will suffice. A concurrent resolution of the two Houses is not a statute. A concurrent resolution, unlike a statute, is binding only on the members and officers of the legislative body. It resembles a statute neither in its mode of passage nor in its consequences. The form of a bill is lacking, and readings are not required. It does not have to lie on the desks of members of the Legislature for three legislative days. But more important,

17. The other alternative holding was that the statute had not authorized termination by resolution.

18. To the same effect are Becker v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 269 Mich. 432, 257 N.W. 851 (1934); Cleveland Terminal & V.R. Co. v. State ex rel. Attorney General, 85 Ohio St. 251, 97 N.E. 967, 973 (1921) ["A joint resolution is not an act of legislation and it cannot be effective for any purpose for which an exercise of legislative power is necessary"]; Scudder v. Smith, 331 Pa. 165, 209 A. 601 (1938) ("The subject matter of this joint resolution is legislative in its nature. It is not a mere formal expression of legislative opinion [and is therefore invalid]"; State ex rel. Todd v. Yelle, 7 Wash.2d 413, 110 P.2d 162, 165 (1941) ("It is clear that a house resolution is not a law. A law must be enacted either by popular initiative or by the legislature, and, when by the legislature, must be by bill").

its adoption is complete without the concurrent action of the Governor, or, lacking this, passage by a two-thirds vote of each House of the Legislature over his veto. Thus a joint resolution may be adopted by a mere majority of the Legislature without action by the Governor or notice to the public, whereas the enactment of a statute requires action by three distinct bodies and at least three days' notice to the public. As has been well said: "In the exercise of this vast power [of the Legislature] according to the fundamental idea and constitution of parliament the concurrence of the three distinct bodies of which it is composed, each acting by itself and independent of the others, is necessary. No two of them acting together, much less alone, can make a law." [Citations omitted]<sup>18</sup>

1 N.E.2d at 962.

[7, 8] The express provision in the Alaska Constitution of two specific legislative veto mechanisms supports our view that no implied general power to veto agency regulations by informal legislative action exists. On the subject of the organization of the executive department the governor may propose changes in the law by executive order. Unless they are disapproved by the legislature within sixty days by "resolution concurred in by a majority of the members in joint session . . .," such changes shall "become effective at a date thereafter

Rowley v. City of Medford, 132 Or. 405, 255 P. 1111, 1114 (1930) ("The power of the Legislature to effectively legislate by resolution is confined within very narrow limits. It may provide for expenses incident to its sessions, such as employing clerks and stenographers and procuring supplies, and other matters incident to the carrying on of its own business, but it cannot go outside and legislate generally on matters involving property or other rights. As to such matters, its resolutions have only the effect of an expression of opinion and no more"); Hawks v. Bland, 156 Okl. 48, 9 P.2d 720, 721 (1932) ("[a] resolution is the mere expression of an opinion and not an enactment of law."); Newport News Fire Fighters Ass'n, Local 794 v. City of Newport News, 307 F. Supp. 1114, 1115 (E.D. Va. 1969) ("[T]he resolution expresses only the opinion of that legislative body").

to be designated by the governor."<sup>19</sup> On the subject of municipal boundary changes, the state local boundary commission may make recommendations. They become effective forty-five days after presentation to the legislature unless vetoed by a "resolution concurred in by a majority of the members of each house."<sup>20</sup>

There are several noteworthy aspects of these expressed powers. First, they are accompanied by specific time deadlines. Second, the deadlines are different, sixty days in one case and forty-five days in the other. One may question, if there is an implied legislative veto power in the constitution, whether it is accompanied by a time limit, and if so, what the limit is. Third, the expressed legislative vetoes annul proposed executive action, they do not change existing law. They therefore do not have the same potential for the disruption of public expectations and ongoing executive programs that the blanket veto in question has. Fourth, the legislative vote required for the exercise of each of the expressed vetoes is different. Re-organization orders may be blocked by a resolution of disapproval concurred in by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session,<sup>21</sup> while boundary change vetoes require disapproval by a resolution concurred in by a majority of the members of each

19. Art. III, § 23.

20. Art. X § 12. We do not agree with the dissent's characterization of the power granted in these two provisions as rule-making power, which we see as the power to interpret and implement statutes. Rather, the power contained in these provisions is the power to change statutes; therefore, the expression of these extraordinary powers in the constitution cannot be regarded as carrying an implication that general administrative rule making was meant to be forbidden.

21. Art. III, § 23.

22. Art. X, § 12.

23. Art. II, § 1.

24. The dissent suggests that our comment in Boehl v. Sabre Jet Room, Inc., 349 P.2d 585 (Alaska 1960), supports an affirmative answer to this question. We stated that "[t]he legislature has the power by resolution to annul any agency or department rule or regulation."

house.<sup>22</sup> Since the Senate has twenty members and the House has forty,<sup>23</sup> these differences can be quite important. The votes of thirty legislators are required to forestall a veto taken in joint session, while ten senators can prevent a veto if the vote is to be by a majority of the members of each house. Here, as with the differing time deadlines mentioned above, one may inquire as to which voting method the constitution would impose as part of an implied general legislative veto power. The answer, of course, is that the constitution contains no clue. In our view, the specificity with which the constitution deals with the legislative veto powers it does grant leads logically to the conclusion that no other veto power is implied.

III

We are aware of only three cases which have decided the question whether a legislative veto is constitutional.<sup>24</sup> They are Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d 1023, 214 Ct.Cl. 186 (1977), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 1009, 98 S.Ct. 718, 54 L.Ed.2d 751 (1978); Opinion of the Justices, 96 S.H. 517, 83 A.2d 733 (1950); and Reith v. South Carolina State Housing Authority, (C.L.C.P., 11th Jud. Dist., Aug. 28, 1975), rev'd on other grounds, 267 S.C. 1, 225 S.E.2d 847, 848 (1976).<sup>25</sup>

However, the constitutionality of annulment was not argued in that case, and our statement obviously was not a judgment on this issue.

25. The Amici would add Nibbach v. Wilson, 312 U.S. 1, 61 S.Ct. 422, 85 L.Ed. 479 (1940) to this list; however, the type of veto discussed there apparently entailed formal law enactment and, therefore, the case has no relevance to the question before us. See Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d at 1060 and n. 21. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 140 n. 176, 96 S.Ct. 612, 692 n. 176, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, 757 n. 176 (1976), the United States Supreme Court found it unnecessary to pass on the validity of a legislative veto, but Justice White in a concurring opinion indicated he thought it was constitutional. 424 U.S. at 284-85, 96 S.Ct. at 757-58, 46 L.Ed.2d at 838-39. Subsequently, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia avoided the same issue, Clark v. Valeo, 182 U.S.App.D.C. 21, 559 F.2d 642 (D.C. Cir. 1 (en banc) 2d Cir. mem. sub nom. Clark v. Kominar, 431 U.S. 950, 97 S.Ct. 2067, 53 L.Ed.2d 267 (1977)), but Circuit Judge

The New Hampshire case, Opinion of the Justices, 96 N.H. 517, 83 A.2d 738 (1959), involved the question whether a reorganization statute violated the state constitution. The statute provided that the reorganization plan proposed by the governor would become law if the two legislative houses did not disapprove it by concurrent resolution. The court concluded that the statute violated the enactment provisions of the New Hampshire Constitution.

The procedure which [the reorganization statute] provides is in distinct contrast to that contemplated by the Constitution. Consent is to be manifested by silence or adjournment, and disapproval by "concurrent resolution."

[T]he contemplated procedure violates the constitutional provisions requiring separate action by each house of the Legislature

[T]he act would dispense with the "passage" of any measure, as that word is commonly used, and with the requirement of presentation to the Governor. In a sense the act provides for a reversal of the democratic processes required by the Constitution, for under it the Governor would propose the legislative action, rather than approve or disapprove of action taken. 83 A.2d at 741.

In Reith v. South Carolina State Housing Authority, (Ct.C.P., 11th Jud. Dist., Aug. 28, 1975), rev'd on other grounds, 267 S.C. 1, 225 S.E.2d 847, 848 (1976), the South Carolina Court of Common Pleas considered, inter alia, the validity of a statutory provision stating that regulations promulgated by the Housing Authority shall be "null and void unless approved by a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly at its session following such promulgation." The court held that this provision violated the constitutional enactment requirements because "the General Assembly may not perform a legislative function by means of a concurrent resolution."<sup>28</sup> The court also concluded that the provision impermissibly infringed on the executive's power to administer and enforce the laws.<sup>27</sup> On appeal, neither ruling was challenged, but the state supreme court reversed on the grounds that the legislative veto provision was not severable and, therefore, the whole act was unconstitutional.<sup>28</sup> The appellate court accepted the lower court's ruling on the veto provision as the law of the case and did not pass on the issue.<sup>29</sup>

Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d 1028, 214 Ct.Cl. 186 (1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1009, 98 S.Ct. 718, 54 L.Ed.2d 751 (1977) involved a statute empowering the President to make recommendations for judicial salary increases and transmit them to Congress; the recommendations would become effective after thirty days unless disapproved by either House. It was claimed that this mechanism was unconstitutional because it contravened article I, section 1 of the United States Constitution, which vests the legislative power of the United States in a bi-cameral Congress, article I, section 7, which grants veto power to the President, and the principle of separation of powers. The Court of Claims, en banc, in a four-to-three decision, upheld the statute.

Atkins is not strong authority in this case, for the following reasons. First, the majority took pains to confine its opinion to the narrow issue before it, emphasizing that Congress' special role in the establishment of judicial salaries shaped its reasoning and conclusion. Id. at 1058-60, 1063, 1065, 1067. Moreover, the United States Constitution does not contain detailed directions for legislative action similar to those set forth in the Alaska Constitution, discussed supra, pp. 772, 773. Thus the Court of Claims was able to say, speaking of article I, section 1 of the United States Constitution: <sup>30</sup>

28. 225 S.E.2d at 848-49.

29. 225 S.E.2d at 848.

30. U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 provides

"[T]he clause does not itself, as a textual matter, mechanically direct the manner in which Congress must exercise the legislative power." Id. at 1062. Such a statement could not be made with reference to Article II of the Alaska Constitution. Further, the court stressed that no change in the law was accomplished by the one-house veto, because the President's recommendations never had the effect of law. Id. at 1063. The court implied that for one House to have the authority to make such a change would be unconstitutional: "Nor could one House do anything more than preserve existing law." Id. at 1064. In contrast, the annulment provisions of AS 44-6232(a) permit the legislature to void administrative regulations which are in effect. Such regulations are laws in every meaningful sense,<sup>31</sup> and annulling any one of them effects a change in the law.

IV

We turn now to a discussion of the major arguments of Appellee and the Amici.

The first is that since AS 44-6232(a) was passed by the first state legislature, several members of which had served in the Alaska Constitutional Convention, and was approved by Governor Egan, who had been chairman of the Convention, a stronger than usual presumption of constitutionality should be applied.<sup>32</sup> We need not pause to debate that point. Whatever the strength of the presumption might be, it will be overcome if the statute cannot be squared with a reasonable reading of the constitution. That, in our opinion, is the situation here.

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

31. 1 Mezines, Stem & Gruff, Administrative Law § 102[2] at 145 (1977); 2A Sutherland, Statutes and Statutory Construction § 49.05 at 240 (4th ed. Sands 1973), which states:

An administrative agency may be vested with the power to promulgate legislative interpretive rules which have the force and effect of law. Such powers must be limited by a standard, and, when exercised, the ensuing regulations, if within the standards, have the same efficacy as an original statute enacted by the legislature. [Footnote omitted]

[9] The Amici argue that since the legislature may delegate law-making power to an administrative agency, it follows that it may reserve to itself a part of the delegable power, and that a delegation can be made subject to a condition that the legislature may later change the terms of the delegation by informal action. The answer to this argument, in our opinion, is that while the legislature can delegate the power to make laws conditionally, the condition must be lawful and may not contain a grant of power to any branch of government to function in a manner prohibited by the constitution. The legislature is bound to act in accordance with the constraints provided in article II of the constitution. The fact that it can delegate legislative power to others who are not bound by article II does not mean that it can delegate the same power to itself and, in the process, escape from the constraints under which it must operate.<sup>33</sup>

[10] To illustrate this point we may assume that the legislature has the power to establish an independent agency which would have the power to disapprove of agency regulations. Since the agency would be a part of the executive department the article II constraints on legislative action would not govern its functions. Could the legislature instead convey to its own members the power to act as such an agency free from these constraints? The answer, we think, is clearly no for that would amount to dual officeholding, prohibited by article II, section 5,<sup>34</sup> and would

32. The same argument was unsuccessfully made in Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 4 nn. 4 & 5 (Alaska 1976).

33. "A delegation which disperses power is not necessarily constitutionally equivalent to one which concentrates power in the hands of the delegating agency." Watson, Congress Steps Out: A Look at Congressional Control of the Executive, 63 Cal.L.Rev. 983, 1067 n. 430 (1975).

34. Art. II, § 5 provides in relevant part: Disqualification. No legislator may hold any other office or position of profit under the United States or the State.

infringe on the executive appointment power set out in article III, section 26.<sup>35</sup> While the power to void agency regulations could be exercised by either the legislature, or by an agency, when the legislature exercises such power it must do so while acting as a legislature. It may not grant itself the power to act as an agency.

It might be supposed that if the legislature could condition the validity of a regulation upon the subsequent disapproval by both of its houses by concurrent resolution, it could condition the same upon disapproval by a committee,<sup>36</sup> or a single legislator. Using the theory, propounded by the Amici, that a veto is merely a condition there is no principled distinction between these cases. It is therefore worth observing that most authorities have rejected the validity of laws conferring either affirmative or negative legislative powers on individual legislators or legislative committees.

In State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Finance Committee, 168 Mont. 470, 543 P.2d 1317 (1975), at issue was a statute empowering an interim legislative committee to approve budget amendments. The statute was held invalid. The court pointed out that the power to approve budget amendments could be exercised by the entire legislature in making an appropriation, or by an executive agency acting on a proper delegation from the legislature, but the legislature could not delegate the power to so act to one of its subdivisions. Id. 543 P.2d

35. Art. III, § 26 provides:

Boards and Commissions. When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. They shall be citizens of the United States. The board or commission may appoint a principal executive officer when authorized by law, but the appointment shall be subject to the approval of the governor.

See, e.g., Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 118 43, 96 S.Ct. 612, 681, 693, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, 744, 54 holding that Federal Elections Commission members were necessarily "Officers of the United States" because, among other reasons, of their administrative rule-making power, and at 1321.<sup>37</sup> The same reasoning was employed in People v. Tremaine, 252 N.Y. 27, 168 N.E. 817 (1929), where the Court of Appeals struck down a statute granting certain legislative committee chairmen the power to disapprove of the allocation of lump sum appropriations to an executive agency. The court acknowledged that the legislature might itself legislate the allocation, or it could delegate the responsibility to an executive agency. It could not, however, delegate the responsibility to one, or more than one, of its members: "The Legislature might make the segregation itself, but it may not confer administrative powers upon its members without giving them, unconstitutionally, civil appointments to administrative offices. It might by general law confer the power of segregation or approval of segregation upon any one but its own members . . . but the Constitution . . . makes its own members ineligible to such an appointment." Id. 168 N.E. at 822. See also, Stockman v. Lehigh, 55 Colo. 24, 123 P. 220, 223 (1912); Bramlette v. Stringer, 186 S.C. 134, 195 S.E. 257, 264 (1934). Contra, Opinion of the Justices, 110 N.H. 359, 266 A.2d 823 (1970).

The Appellee also argues that legislative oversight of administrative regulations is desirable and that such oversight cannot take place effectively if it must follow the path of legislation prescribed by article II. There are two answers to this argument. First, and most important, the question of therefore could not be appointed by Congress. People v. Tremaine, 252 N.Y. 27, 168 N.E. 817 (1929) discussed infra, p. 778.

36. In fact, under AS 24.20.445(a), the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, a permanent joint committee of the legislature, is granted the power to suspend the operation of any regulation adopted after adjournment of the legislature until thirty days after the legislature reconvenes.

37. The people of Alaska recently rejected a constitutional amendment which, like the law struck down in Montana, was designed to vest the power to approve budget revisions in an interim legislative committee. See Alaska Const. art. II, § 11 (proposed amend. 1978 Supp.)

whether the legislature might perform a task more efficiently if it did not have to follow article II is essentially irrelevant. Since article II applies, the question of whether efficiency takes primacy over other goals must be taken to have been answered by our constitutional framers. Second, at least according to a recent case study, the legislative veto has been unimpressive in practice. See Bruff & Gellhorn, Congressional Control of Administrative Regulation: A Study of Legislative Vetoes, 90 Harv.L.Rev. 1369 (1977). That study concludes, essentially, that the legislative veto encourages secretive, poorly informed, and politically unaccountable legislative action. Id. at 1409-20. It is consequences such as these that the enactment provisions of our constitution are designed to guard against. See discussion, supra, pp. 772, 773.

Appellee also makes an argument based on the doctrine of separation of powers. Rule-making is essentially a legislative rather than executive function and so, the argument goes, broad latitude must be afforded the legislature to act as it sees fit in this, the core area of its duties. This argument is essentially inconsistent with the requirements prescribed in article II of the constitution which must be observed in the process of legislation. The legislature is not free to ignore these requirements. See, discussion supra, pp. 772, 773.

Appellee finds it significant that the Alaska Constitution contains no provision like that in section 7, clause 3 of article I of the United States Constitution<sup>38</sup> which authorizes the executive to veto legislative resolutions, and argues that executive involvement in the enactment of resolutions was not deemed necessary by the framers of the state constitution. This point, however, does not advance Appellee's case. Un-

38. This clause provides:

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States, and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be re-passed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, ac-der the United States Constitution joint resolutions are one means by which laws are enacted;<sup>39</sup> they are therefore naturally included among those legislative acts subject to Presidential veto. However, under the state constitution resolutions are not an alternative law enactment process, and therefore there is no need to make them subject to an executive veto.

The Appellee argues that since AS 44.62-320(a) was passed in accordance with all constitutional mandates and since the governor has the opportunity to veto the statute, constitutional requirements have been satisfied with respect to subsequent acts of the legislature taken pursuant to the statute. In other words, by virtue of one enactment approved by the governor, the legislature can free itself, in certain instances, of the constitutional constraints that would otherwise govern its actions. Such an enactment would impermissibly preserve legislative power possessed at one instant in time for future periods when the legislature might otherwise be incapable of acting because of the executive veto.<sup>40</sup> It would also do away with the formal safeguards of article II which are meant to accompany law-making. The requirements of the constitution may not be eliminated in this fashion.

REVERSED AND REMANDED with directions to enter partial summary judgment in favor of the state as to the effect of the concurrent resolution and for further proceedings.

rent resolution is constitutional. In my opinion, the majority reasoning is fallacious in equating regulations with laws passed by the legislature. The litany of constitutional requirements outlined in the majority opinion is indeed mandated for the passage of a bill into law. The constitution, however, makes none of those requirements applicable to regulations. In fact, the constitution is silent as to the practice of delegating authority by the legislature to the executive or administrative agencies for promulgation of regulations.<sup>1</sup> Regulations may be promulgated without having each regulation confined to one subject, a descriptive title, a specific form of enactment clause, three readings on three separate days, the vote of each member adopting the regulation recorded, a majority vote of each house of the legislature, a public record of the vote cast, being subject to veto by the governor, a 90-day waiting period before becoming effective.<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, the majority does not question the authority of the legislature to delegate the power to promulgate regulations without these safeguards. It seems to me that if the legislature, in authorizing regulations, cannot condition that authority with a reasonable provision for oversight because the annulment of a regulation is equated with repeal of a statute, then the regulation itself must be considered invalid as not having been passed with the requirements necessary for enacting a bill into law.

This issue was considered by this court shortly after statehood in Boehl v. Sabre Jet Room, Inc., 349 P.2d 585, 588 (Alaska 1960), where we stated:

The legislative power of the state "is vested in a legislature." It is argued that because of this constitutional provision the power may not be delegated.

But such a strict theory of separation of powers ignores realities and the practical necessities of government. The United States Supreme Court has said that delegation by Congress has long been recognized as necessary in order that the exertion of legislative power does not become a futility, and that necessity fixes a point beyond which it is unreasonable and impracticable to compel the legislature to prescribe detailed rules. [Footnotes omitted.]

One of the bases specified in Boehl for upholding this power of the legislature to delegate regulatory authority was the identical right to annul regulations which the majority now finds to be unconstitutional. In Boehl we stated:

It also is not essential, in order to sustain the grant of authority, that the legislature circumscribe administrative discretion by express standards of action in order that the opportunity for capricious exercise of power will not exist. There is slight danger of that. The exercise of the board's powers is hedged about by substantial safeguards. Before the board may act it must conduct a public hearing and afford any interested person the opportunity to be heard, and it must then "consider all relevant matter presented to it." There is ample opportunity for judicial review; for "any interested person may obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of any regulation . . . .". Finally, there is legislative supervision. The legislature, which meets annually, may revise the statute and thus restrict the bounds of administrative action; it has the power by resolution to annul any agency or department rule or regulation; and the Legislative Council, an interim legislative committee charged with the duty of making recommendations to the legislature, must annually review all agency regulations to determine if the legislative intent is being correctly followed.

349 P.2d at 590 (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted)

2. AS 44.62.180 does specify that, with certain exceptions, regulations become effective on the 30th day after filing by the lieutenant governor.

1. The constitution does authorize "[r]egulatory, quasi-judicial and temporary agencies" to be established by law. Art. III, § 22. There are no constitutional requirements for promulgation of regulations.

Cite as, Alaska, 606 P.2d 780

In my opinion, the majority misstates the question presented as being whether the legislature can exercise its legislative power without the usual constitutional safeguards. The real question is whether, having exercised its legislative power, subject to all those safeguards, it may condition the delegation of regulatory power to an executive agency upon a provision for legislative oversight. I agree with our statement in Boehl that the legislature has that power.

II

The advent of the industrial revolution vastly increased and complicated the tasks of legislatures. Due to limits of time and specialized expertise, legislatures have found it impossible to prescribe laws adequately covering the tremendously varied and intricate forms of social relationships arising out of the proliferation of business, manufacturing, trade, transportation, communication and commercial enterprises.<sup>3</sup> Of necessity, legislative authority had to be delegated to administrative agencies. Nevertheless, both in England and in the United States, efforts were initiated to maintain some controls over broad delegations of authority.<sup>4</sup>

England has long utilized the laying system, whereby an administrative order or regulation must be laid before Parliament for a specified period of time before becoming effective.

Parliamentary control over administrative rules and regulations . . . is asserted principally through provisions in enabling statutes that rules made under them shall be laid before Parliament. This is customarily combined with a provision in the statute, either that the rule shall not be operative until it is approved by resolution, either of both Houses or of the House of Commons alone . . . or that, if within forty days a resolution is passed by either House for annulling the rule, the rule is to be void . . . .<sup>5</sup>

In the United States, the issue of whether a legislature can reserve to itself the power to disapprove administrative regulations has been brewing for more than forty years.<sup>6</sup> The early stages of the dispute involved the Reorganization Acts of the 1930's and 1940's which provided that executive reorganization plans became effective sixty days after transmission to Congress, unless within that period Congress disapproved by resolution.<sup>7</sup> Federal acts incorporating similar provisions have proliferated in recent years.<sup>8</sup> Yet no federal court has squarely evaluated the validity of provisions reserving to Congress the power to disapprove administrative regulations.<sup>9</sup>

the United States. Our court, however, has favorably discussed the legislative veto in Boehl.

The holding in Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d 1024, 214 Cl.Ct. 186 (1977) (en banc) (per curiam), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1009, 98 S.Ct. 718, 54 L.Ed.2d 751 (1978), supports the position taken in this dissent. Atkins upheld a statute allowing either House of Congress to veto judicial salary increases recommended by a presidential commission.

In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976), the majority of the United States Supreme Court did not reach the issue of whether regulations promulgated by the Federal Election Commission would become effective within thirty days of filing if either House of Congress did not disapprove them. In his concurrence, Justice White did approve the oversight provision, stating:

I am also of the view that the otherwise valid regulatory power of a properly created independent agency is not rendered constitutionally infirm, as violative of the President's veto power, by a statutory provision subjecting agency regulations to disapproval by either House of Congress. For a bill to become law it must pass both Houses and be signed by the President or be passed over his veto. Also, "Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary" is likewise subject to the veto power. Under § 109(e) the FEC's regulations are subject to disapproval; but for a regulation to become effective, neither House need approve it, pass it, or take any action at all with respect to it. The regulation becomes effective by non-action. This no more invades the President's powers than does a regulation not required to be laid before Congress. Congressional influence over the substantive content of agency regulation may be enhanced, but I would not view the power of either House to disapprove as equivalent to legislation or to an order, resolution or vote requiring the concurrence of both Houses.

The majority cites Reith v. South Carolina State Housing Authority, (Ct. C.P., 11th Jud. Dist., Aug. 23, 1975), rev'd on other grounds, 267 S.C. 1, 225 S.E.2d 847, 848 (1976), but appropriately concedes that the Supreme Court of South Carolina did not reach the issue with which we are concerned.

Also cited is the New Hampshire case, Opinion of the Justices, 96 N.H. 517, 83 A.2d 738 (1950), an advisory opinion on whether a reorganization statute violated the state constitution. The statute provided that the reorganization plan proposed by the governor would become law if the two legislative houses did not disapprove it by concurrent resolution. The court concluded that the statute violated the state constitution. Id. 83 A.2d at 741. Three of the five justices felt the procedure violated the principle of bicameralism because each house "has undertaken in advance to surrender to the other its constitutional authority to veto or refuse assent to action taken or approved by the other." Id. 83 A.2d at 741-42.

It is also significant that twenty years later the New Hampshire Supreme Court examined a statute requiring certain salary increases to be approved by a legislative committee prior to submission to the governor for final approval. Opinion of the Justices, 110 N.H. 359, 266 A.2d 823 (1970). The court, without analysis of its earlier opinion, found no violation of separation of powers, reasoning that since the legislature could delegate its power to fix salaries, it could impose conditions upon the exercise of such delegated authority. Id. 266 A.2d at 826. In conclusion, it seems to me that what case authority exists is more supportive than not of the concept of legislative annulment.

IV

The legislature's participation in the promulgation of regulations is within the core area of legislative power, formulation of policy. Accordingly, the legislature's power to select the means of participation should be generously construed.<sup>10</sup>

The delegation of rule-making authority to executive agencies does not alter the basic legislative nature of the function. Conditioning that delegation on the right of the legislature to review and annul regulations does not infringe on the power of the executive, where, as here, the annulling action is taken at the first session of the legislature following promulgation of the regulation.<sup>11</sup>

I believe that a statute can validly condition the delegated power to enact regulations by requiring that the regulations be subject to annulment by resolution, just as it could limit the effective date of the new regulations or the length of time during which they would be in force. I find no material difference between AS 44.62.320 and other statutes, upheld by the United States Supreme Court, that condition the exercise of rule-making authority by approval of private citizens.<sup>12</sup> If private citizens can exercise such power, then certainly the legislature should be able to exercise the same power.

V

As the majority correctly notes, there are two provisions in our constitution which deal specifically with the legislative veto. These are article III, section 23, concerning executive reorganization, which provides that the legislature may veto a reorganization plan by a resolution "in joint session,"<sup>13</sup> and article X, section 12, concerning local boundaries, which provides that the legislature may veto by resolution local boundary changes proposed by an executive branch commission.<sup>14</sup>

The majority concludes that these two express provisions creating a legislative veto by resolution exclude the possibility of an implied legislative veto. They state:

In our view, the specificity with which the constitution deals with the legislative

10. We have held that when the legislature exercises power with reference to an essentially executive function those powers should be construed narrowly. Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 7 (Alaska 1976). Conversely, when, as here, a basically legislative function is involved, the powers of the legislature should be construed broadly.

11. A long-term scrutiny of executive action taken pursuant to regulations leading to delayed annulment might involve legislative infringement on the executive power to enforce laws. We are not confronted with such a question and need not pass on it because the regulation here in question was annulled at the first legislative session following its promulgation. We are similarly not confronted with an annulment by a single legislator, a committee of the legislature, or by one house.

12. United States v. Rock Royal Co-Operative, Inc., 307 U.S. 513, 574 78, 59 S.Ct. 993, 1013, 15, 83 L.Ed. 1446, 1170 72 (1939) (upholding federal statute delegating to Secretary of Agriculture authority to issue marketing orders for specified commodities, if approval of producers was secured); Currin v. Wallace, 306 U.S. 1, 15-18, 59 S.Ct. 379, 387 388, 83 L.Ed. 441, 451-52 (1939) (upholding statute authorizing Secretary of Agriculture to regulate marketing of tobacco if two-thirds of growers in a market requested, by referendum, such action).

13. The full text of article III, section 23, provides:

The governor may make changes in the organization of the executive branch or in the assignment of functions among its units which he considers necessary for efficient administration. Where these changes require the force of law, they shall be set forth in executive orders. The legislature shall have sixty days of a regular session, or a full session if of shorter duration, to disapprove these executive orders. Unless disapproved by resolution concurred in by a majority of the members in joint session, these orders become effective at a date thereafter to be designated by the governor.

14. Article X, section 12, provides:

A local boundary commission or board shall be established by law in the executive branch of the state government. The commission or board may consider any proposed local government boundary change. It may present proposed changes to the legislature during the first ten days of any regular session. The change shall become effective forty-five days after presentation or at the end of the session, whichever is earlier, unless disapproved by a resolution concurred in by a majority of the members of each house. The commission or board, subject to law, may establish procedures whereby boundaries may be adjusted by local action.

veto power, if does grant leads logically to the conclusion that no other veto power is implied.

Adopting the majority's logic, however, it might be said with equal force that the delegation of any rule-making powers to the executive by the legislature would also be unconstitutional. It might be argued that where the constitutional drafters intended to create rule-making power in the executive branch they created it expressly, with specificity, as they did in these two provisions, and that other rule-making powers created by statute cannot be implied.

In my view, the expression of some powers in these provisions does not lead to the conclusion that the constitution forbids either an expansion of rule-making powers in the executive or a denial of the legislative veto. The Alaska Constitution is silent on the question of administrative regulations. It does not say what powers may be delegated, how rules may be promulgated, or whether the legislature may retain a veto power by resolution. Presumably, these were questions that the constitutional drafters thought could best be resolved by the legislature.

There is an aspect of these two provisions, however, that is worthy of some notice. It seems significant that in the only two instances where the constitution does make a specific grant of rule-making power directly to the executive, it does so with a power reserved in the legislature to veto the rule by resolution. There seems to be little logic to a position that maintains that the constitutional drafters would have sanctioned the use of the resolution here, yet demanded the higher enactment standard when the legislature delegated power on its own.

Finally, the majority argues that where a veto power by resolution exists, it must also specify time limits, the method of voting and so forth. This argument is unconvincing. Having allocated a specific rule-making power to the executive branch, it was appropriate for the constitutional drafters to define in the constitution a specific legislative check to that power. This would seem to be a virtual necessity, because any statute that the legislature might pass to circumscribe these executive powers otherwise would in all likelihood be unconstitutional. But where the legislature delegates rule-making power by statute, the constitutional drafters might well presume that the legislature could also design an appropriate system of checks and balances by statute law, as they have done here in AS 46.02.320(a).

VI

It is also of significance that the Administrative Procedure Act, chapter 143, SLA 1959, containing an annulment provision, was passed shortly after the drafting of the constitution at the first session of the Alaska State Legislature. Many of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were among the members of the legislature.<sup>15</sup> In fact, two of the more active delegates, Hellenenthal and Taylor, introduced House Bill 13 which was enacted as chapter 143, SLA 1959.<sup>16</sup> The bill was passed by a House vote of 37 to 1,<sup>17</sup> and by a unanimous Senate vote.<sup>18</sup>

At that time, the governor of Alaska was William A. Egan, who had presided as President over the Constitutional Convention. In signing House Bill 13 into law, Governor Egan delivered the following message to the legislature:

I am signing into law HOUSE BILL NO. 13, the administrative procedures bill. I wish to call attention to the Attorney General's statement that Section 1, Article VI of Chapter 1 thereof may be unconstitutional in its seeking to impose new duties on local governing bodies.

17. 1959 House Journal 427.

18. 1959 Senate Journal 708.

Cite as, Alaska, 606 P.2d 783

Because of the bill's separability clause, however, I do not consider this flaw of such seriousness that the bill should not be signed and utilized.<sup>19</sup>

Although the governor says fit to point out a possible constitutional problem with article VI because it required local governing bodies to hold public hearings, no question was raised about the legislature's power to annul regulations by joint resolution.<sup>20</sup>

What was said by the United States Supreme Court about legislation passed by Congress shortly after the enactment of the United States Constitution is appropos here:

What, then, are the elements that enter into our decision of this case? We have first a construction of the Constitution made by a Congress which was to provide by legislation for the organization of the government in accord with the Constitution which had just then been adopted, and in which there were, as Representatives and Senators, a considerable number of those who had been members of the convention that framed the Constitution and presented it for ratification. It was the Congress that launched the government. It was the Congress that rounded out the Constitution itself by the proposing of the first ten amendments, which had in effect been promised to the people as a consideration for the ratification. It was the Congress in which Mr. Madison, one of the first in the framing of the Constitution, led also in the organization of the government under it. It was a Congress whose constitutional decisions have always been regarded as they should be regarded as of the greatest weight in the interpretation of that fundamental instrument. . . . This court has repeatedly laid down the principle that a contemporaneous legislative exposition of the Constitution, when the founders of our government and framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs acquiesced in for a long term of years, fixes the construction to be given its provisions.

Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 174-75, 47 S.Ct. 21, 45, 71 L.Ed. 160, 189-90 (1926) (citation omitted).

Finally, I note that the policy of authorizing legislative annulment of regulations is becoming increasingly widespread in Alaska, in other states, and in the federal government.<sup>21</sup> Such a practice, affording a

For a review of laws from other states relating to annulment of regulations, see Jackson, Legislative Review of Administrative Rules and Regulations 1 (July 1977) (papers prepared for Southern Legislative Conference). A chart at the end of Professor Jackson's paper indicates that the following states allow regulations to be annulled by means of resolution: Alaska, Connecticut, Idaho, Michigan, Montana, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Vermont. A New York report gives slightly different figures, stating that fourteen of the twenty-two states with legislative review mechanisms have procedures which can "cause an agency rule to be promulgated, approved, amended, modified, or annulled." Task Force on Critical Problems, Senate Research Service, New York State Legislature, Administrative Rules. . . . What is the Legislature's Role? 7 (June 1976). Appellant states that eight states allow nonstatutory legislative annulment—six by concurrent resolution, two by one-House vetoes.

The states which do not allow annulment of the regulation generally provide that a legislative committee may review regulations to determine if they are consistent with legislative intent, hold hearings on questionable regulations, notify the executive of its doubts, and 20. See ch. 143 (ch. 1, art. VII, § 1), SLA 1959.

21. Numerous other statutes enacted in recent legislative sessions in Alaska provide for some specific legislative review function. See AS 46.03.755(c) (regulations relating to oil spills), AS 46.40.080 (regulations relating to coal and zinc management), AS 38.50.140 (regulations pertaining to land exchanges), AS 39.23.080(c) (regulations relating to salary increases), AS 30.06.055(a) (oil and gas dispositions). Some regulations annulled by resolution are the following: regulations relating to nursing home administrators, annulled by Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 94 in 1976; motor vehicle inspection regulations, annulled by Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 62 (HCS CS5CR), in 1976; the prize limit regulation, annulled by Legislative Resolve No. 79 (House Concurrent Resolution No. 60) in 1977; school loan regulations, annulled by Legislative Resolve No. 87 (Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 32) in 1977; and certain regulations adopted by the Department of Community and Regional Affairs, annulled by Legislative Resolve No. 95 (Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 12) in 1977.

practical means of supervision of the broad delegation of legislative powers required by the complexities of modern society, should not be hastily voided.

I conclude that the legislature's annulment of the cash prize regulation, pursuant to AS 44.62.320(a), does not violate the principle of separation of powers, does not provide a means by which the legislature can enact laws without passage of a bill, and does not unconstitutionally encroach on the power of the executive.

Francis S. L. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner, Department of Health and Social Services, and State of Alaska, Appellee.

No. 4155.

Supreme Court of Alaska.

Feb. 21, 1980.

Nonprofit corporation owning or operating residential child care facilities brought suit challenging ruling of Department of Administration that Department of Health and Social Services was not required to reimburse corporation for amounts by which actual cost increases in providing child care had exceeded predicted increases. The State of Alaska Superior Court, Third Judicial District, J. Justin Ripley, J., affirmed the ruling below, and corporation appealed. The Supreme Court, Connor, J., held that: (1) under statute providing that Department of Health and Social Services pay private, nonprofit corporation for child care services for children who have become wards of the state for expenses related Affirmed.

1. Statutes  $\Rightarrow$  223.2(1)

Two statutes enacted at same time and dealing with same subject matter are in pari materia and should be construed so as to be consistent with one another and in such manner as to give maximum effect to each.

OPINION

CONNOR, Justice.

This case presents issues of statutory interpretation.

Appellant Alaska Children's Services, Inc. (hereinafter ACS) is a private, non-profit corporation<sup>1</sup> that owns or operates residential child care facilities in Anchorage and

1. ACS's letterhead indicates that it was founded jointly by the American Baptist, American Lutheran, and the United Methodist Churches.

2. The full text of AS 47.40.010 provides

Purchase of Services. (a) When the department [DHSS] purchases services for persons for whom the state has assumed responsibility under the laws of the state, the department shall

(1) adopt regulations establishing the levels of care to be provided.

(2) determine the rates of payment for the full cost of services required.

(3) pay all expenses related directly to the full cost of services at the levels of care required.

(4) make the placement of persons in accordance with the levels of care provided for in the regulations.

(b) Services of jails and other penal institutions may not be included in services purchased by the state in this chapter.

3. AS 47.40.040 reads in full:

Determination of full cost of services. (a) In this chapter, "full cost" of services shall be determined by the per person, per day cost in Unalaska. Since 1971, ACS has provided full-time child care services for children who have become wards of the state by "agreement" with the Department of Health and Social Services (hereinafter DHSS). There has been no written contract between these parties. Rather, a working relationship developed that purported to follow statutory and administrative guidelines for state placement and support of these children.

The controversy that has arisen concerns the amount the state must pay ACS for its child care services. The focus is upon two related statutes. The first, AS 47.40.010(a)(3),<sup>2</sup> states that when the DHSS purchases services for persons for whom the state has assumed responsibility, it shall "pay all expenses related directly to the full cost of services at the levels of care required." The second statute, AS 47.40.040(a),<sup>3</sup> provides that the "full cost" of services shall be determined by the per person, per day cost<sup>4</sup> in the preceding fiscal year plus a proportionate share of anticipated cost of living and staff salary increment increases" for the upcoming fiscal year.

DHSS has been paying ACS in accordance with this second statute; that is, pay-the preceding fiscal year plus a proportionate share of anticipated cost of living and staff salary increment increases for the fiscal year for which the full cost of services, determined to be necessary by the department, is being determined. Child care costs for foster homes shall be computed in the same manner as for child care and nursing home institutions except that no salary costs may be considered.

(b) Full cost of services does not include the following:

(1) expenses, including salaries and fees, incurred in raising funds;

(2) funds expended for construction, major equipment and other capital expenditures.

(3) depreciation and replacement costs of, and costs of additions to, major property and equipment.

(4) religious training and education; and

(5) services provided which are substandard to, or exceed, the requirements of the department.

4. The per person, per day cost in each institution is referred to as the "unit cost."

plea of not guilty, and explained the posture of the case. Defendant complains of a reference, in the instruction, to Marlowe King which reads:

"Marlowe King is charged as a codefendant in the Information filed by the State, but the Court for legal reasons has granted him a separate trial; and only Eugene Steward is being tried at this time."

Marlowe King was charged as a codefendant in the information. It was necessary to explain his position in order to give the jury understanding of the case and the issues to be tried. We see nothing prejudicial in the instruction.

[28] Instruction No. 7 defined sexual intercourse in connection with the rape charge. It is a verbatim statement of PIK [Criminal] § 57.02 and conforms with K.S.A. 21-3501(1). It is a correct statement of the law. (State v. Ragland, 173 Kan. 265, 246 P.2d 276.)

[29] Instruction No. 17 is in the form of a so-called "Deadlock Jury" instruction. While not verbatim it closely follows PIK [Civil] § 10.20, which we approved in State v. Scruggs, 206 Kan. 423, 479 P.2d 856, when given before the jury commenced deliberations. We find no reversible error in the giving of the instruction. However, we believe the better practice in criminal cases is to give PIK [Criminal] § 68.12 along with other instructions before the case is submitted.

We find no reversible error shown by any contentions made concerning the court's instructions.

[30-32] Finally, defendant claims the trial court abused its discretion in applying the Habitual Criminal Act (K.S.A. 21-4504), in imposing sentence. Defendant says that in light of the previous sentences imposed on defendant in case number 2066-CR (which apparently was the case involving the unrelated crimes for which defendant was arrested) the imposition of enhanced consecutive sentences for convictions in the instant case constituted cruel and unusual punishment and an abuse of discretion. The sentences imposed were severe, but the crimes committed were heinous and cold-blooded. Defendant makes no point that the sentences exceeded permissible limits under 21-4504 and the statutory sentences for each crime. In State v. Peltay, 216 Kan. 555, 532 P.2d 1289, we held:

"When a sentence is fixed by the trial court within permissible limits of the applicable statutes the sentence is not erroneous. In the absence of special circumstances showing an abuse of judicial discretion it cannot be determined on appeal that such a sentence is excessive or so disproportionate to the offense as to constitute cruel and unusual punishment." (Syl. ¶ 4.)

The sentences imposed are not so disproportionate to the heinous offenses committed as to constitute cruel and unusual punishment.

Defendant's industrious counsel has briefed thirteen points of error which we have carefully examined, but find no error shown which warrants a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

STATE of Kansas ex rel. Curt T. SCHNEIDER, Attorney General, Appellant,

v.

Robert F. BENNETT, Governor of the State of Kansas, et al., Appellees.

No. 48212.

Supreme Court of Kansas.

March 6, 1970.

Action in quo warranto was brought by State on relation of Attorney General to oust members of state finance council from exercising various powers and responsibilities placed in them by statute. The Shawnee District Court, Division No. 2, Michael A. Barbara, J., entered judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Prager, J., held that statutory powers vested in state finance council were not unconstitutional as violative of separation of powers doctrine insofar as they involved expenditures from state emergency fund and issuance of certificates of indebtedness, but that powers vested in council amounted to an usurpation of executive powers by legislative department in violation of separation doctrine insofar as they involved supervision and control over operations of State Department of Administration and insofar as they involved authority to approve expenditures from special revenue funds in excess of fixed statutory limits, that quo warranto was available to oust legislative members of council from exercising powers and duties held to be unconstitutional, that acts of council from time of its creation until time of opinion were those of de facto officers binding between all persons dealing with council as a public body, and that duties of council involving supervision of Department of Administration and its various divisions were to devolve upon and be exercised by governor until such time as legislature adopted a new legislative plan or scheme.

Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

1. Constitutional Law § 50

A strict application of separation of powers doctrine is inappropriate today in a complex state government where administrative agencies exercise many types of power, including legislative, executive, and judicial powers often blended together in same administrative agency.

2. Constitutional Law § 50

Sufficient flexibility to experiment and to seek new methods of improving governmental efficiency must be maintained in political system but, at same time, one cannot lose sight of ever-existing danger of unchecked power and concentration of power in hands of a single person or a group which separation of powers doctrine was designed to prevent.

3. Constitutional Law § 58

Separation of powers doctrine does not in all cases prevent individual members of legislature from serving on administrative boards or commissions created by legislative enactments.

4. Constitutional Law § 58

Individual members of legislature may serve on administrative boards or commissions where such service falls in realm of cooperation on part of legislature and there is no attempt to usurp functions of executive department of government.

5. Constitutional Law § 58

Separation of powers doctrine prohibits individual members of legislature from serving on administrative boards or commissions where such service results in usurpation of powers of another department by individual legislators.

6. Constitutional Law § 50

When a statute is challenged under constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, court must search for a usurpation by one department of powers of other department on specific facts and circumstances presented.

7. Constitutional Law § 53

A usurpation of powers under separation doctrine exists where there is a significant interference by one department with operations of other department.

8. Constitutional Law § 59

In determining whether a usurpation of powers exists under separation doctrine, a court should consider essential nature of power being exercised, degree of control by one department over another, objective sought to be attained by legislature, and practical result of blending of powers as shown by actual experience over a period of time.

9. Constitutional Law § 50

Statutory powers vested in state finance council, insofar as they involve su-supervision and control over operations of State Department of Administration and its divisions, amounts to an unconstitutional usurpation of executive powers by legislative department in violation of separation doctrine. K.S.A. 75-3701 to 75-3775.

10. Constitutional Law $\S$ 58

Statutory powers vested in state finance council, insofar as they involve expenditures from state emergency fund, do not amount to an unconstitutional usurpation of executive powers by legislative department in violation of separation doctrine. K.S.A. 75-3713, 75-3713a.

11. Constitutional Law $\S$ 58

Statutory powers vested in state finance council, insofar as they involve authority of council to order issuance of certificates of indebtedness, do not amount to an unconstitutional usurpation of executive powers by legislative department in violation of separation doctrine. K.S.A. 75-3725a.

12. Constitutional Law $\S$ 62(13)

Statutory powers vested in state finance council, insofar as they involve authority of council to approve expenditures from special revenue funds in excess of fixed statutory limits, amount to an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power without adequate standards or guidelines. K.S.A. 75-3701 to 75-3775.

13. Constitutional Law $\S$ 62(1, 2)

The legislature may delegate to an administrative body some of legislature's functions where the policy is fixed and standards are definitely established which determine the manner and circumstances of the exercise of such power.

14. Constitutional Law $\S$ 62(2)

Great leeway should be allowed legislature in setting forth guidelines or standards for the exercise of legislative power by an administrative body; the use of general rather than minute standards is permissible.

15. Constitutional Law $\S$ 62(13)

Statutory powers vested in state finance council are usurpative of separation of powers doctrine insofar as there are no adequate legislative standards or guidelines to govern council in exercise of its authority to increase fixed positions of employment authorized for state agencies, to approve receipt and expenditure of federal or other funds not authorized by specific statutes, or to authorize state board of revenue to amend or change its list of fees and service activities and to expend money derived therefrom. K.S.A. 75-3701 to 75-3775.

16. Quo Warranto $\S$ 13

Quo warranto was available to oust state legislative members of state finance council from exercising their powers and duties in respect to supervision and control over operations of Department of Administration and its various divisions insofar as such powers and duties constituted a usurpation of executive powers by legislative department in violation of separation doctrine. K.S.A. 75-3701 to 75-3775.

17. States $\S$ 49

Acts of state finance council, from time of its creation until filing of opinion determining that certain powers and duties of council constituted an usurpation of executive powers in violation of separation doctrine, were those of de facto officers binding between all persons dealing with council as a public body composed of public officers.

18. States $\S$ 43

Duties of state finance council that involved supervision of Department of Administration and its various divisions were to devolve upon and be exercised by governor as head of executive department of state until such time as legislature adopted a new legislative plan or scheme for council that did not usurp executive powers. K.S.A. 75-3701 to 75-3775.

Syllabus by the Court

1. The separation of powers doctrine does not in all cases prevent individual members of the legislature from serving on administrative boards or commissions created by legislative enactments. Individual members of the legislature may serve on administrative boards or commissions where such service falls in the realm of cooperation on the part of the legislature and there is no attempt to usurp functions of the executive department of the government.

2. The separation of powers doctrine prohibits individual members of the legislature from serving on administrative boards or commissions where such service results in the usurpation of powers of another department by the individual legislators.

3. When a statute is challenged under the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, the court must search for a usurpation by one department of the powers of another department on the specific facts and circumstances presented.

4. A usurpation of power exists where there is a significant interference by one department with operations of another department.

5. In determining whether or not a usurpation of powers exists a court should consider (1) the essential nature of the power being exercised, (2) the degree of control by one department over another; (3) the objective sought to be attained by the legislature; and (4) the practical result of the blending of powers as shown by actual experience over a period of time.

6. Statutory powers vested in the state finance council with respect to expenditures from the state emergency fund (K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3713 and 75-3713a) and its authority to order the issuance of certificates of indebtedness (K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3725a) are not unconstitutional as a violation of the separation of powers doctrine.

7. Statutory powers vested in the state finance council as considered and set forth in the opinion which involve supervision and control over the operations of the state department of administration and its divisions are held to be an unconstitutional usurpation of executive powers by the legislative department in violation of the separation of powers doctrine.

8. Statutory powers vested in the state finance council as considered and set forth in the opinion which involve the authority to approve expenditures from special revenue funds in excess of fixed statutory limits are held to be an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power without adequate standards or guidelines.

John R. Martin, First Asst. Atty. Gen., argued the cause, and Curt T. Schneider, Atty. Gen., was with him on the brief for appellant.

Charles N. Henson, Edson, Lewis, Porter & Hayes, Topeka, argued the cause, and was on the brief for appellees.

Robert A. Goldsnow, Kansas Legislative Council, Topeka, was on the brief amicus curiae for the Kansas Senate, Kansas House of Representatives, and Kansas Legislative Coordinating Council.

PRAGER, Justice.

This is an action in quo warranto brought by the state of Kansas on the relation of the attorney general as plaintiff seeking to oust members of the state finance council from the exercise of various powers and responsibilities placed in them by statute. Judgment was entered by the district court in favor of the defendants, appellees denying the relief sought by the plaintiff. Because of a change in the personnel of the state finance council an order has been entered by this court substituting new parties defendant for certain original parties. Sen. Ross O. Doyen, president of the Kansas senate, has been substituted for Richard D. Rogers who no longer holds that position. Sen. Wm. Winter has been substituted for Sen. Ross O. Doyen, who was formerly chairman of the senate ways and means committee. Rep. John F. Hayes, as majority floor leader of the Kansas house of representatives, has been substituted for Donn J. Everett, who formerly held that position. Rep. John Carlin, as minority floor leader of the House of representatives, has been substituted for Richard C. "Pete" Loux. The remaining original defendants are Robert F. Bennett, governor of Kansas; Rep. Duane S. "Pete" McGill, speaker of the Kansas house of representatives; Sen. Joseph C. Harder, majority floor leader of the Kansas senate; Sen. Jack Steinger, minority floor leader of the Kansas senate; and Rep. Wendell Lady, chairman of the house of representatives ways and means committee. All legislator defendants are members of the state finance council by virtue of their legislative positions.

The questions presented in this case are entirely questions of law. The case must be determined on the basis of statutes creating the state finance council and prescribing the duties and powers thereof. It is the position of the attorney general that the exercise of certain statutory duties and powers of the state finance council by the legislative members of that body violates the constitutional doctrine of the separation of powers and that the exercise of certain other statutory duties constitutes an unlawful delegation of legislative powers.

Cases involving alleged violations of the separation of powers doctrine have been before this court on many occasions. The separation of powers doctrine was most recently discussed in Leck v. Theis, 217 Kan. 781, 53 P.2d 504. Leck involved the question of whether K.S.A. 22-3707, providing for senatorial approval or rejection of gubernatorial appointments to the Kansas Adult Authority, is constitutional. Although Leck did not involve an attempt by the state legislature to have its own members serve on an administrative board, Leck is important because it discusses in some detail the separation of powers doctrine and some of the general principles pertaining thereto. Like the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of Kansas contains no express provision requiring the separation of powers, but all decisions of this court have taken as granted the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers between the three departments of the state government—legislative, executive and judicial. The separation of powers doctrine was designed to avoid a dangerous concentration of power and to allow the respective powers to be assigned to the department most fitted to exercise them. (Van Sickle v. Shandson, 212 Kan. 426, 446, 511 P.2d 223.) In Van Sickle, Mr. Chief Justice Faizer set forth an excellent history on the separation of powers doctrine which does not need further elaboration here.

Throughout the judicial history of the state two basic approaches have been taken toward the doctrine. Some courts have applied the separation of powers doctrine strictly, refusing to tolerate the notion of one department performing any function traditionally assigned to a different department. A good example of this approach is that of Mr. Justice Smith in the majority opinion in State v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 271, 64 P. 1068, decided in 1900. There Mr. Justice Smith declares that the Constitution of Kansas has created three distinct and separate departments of government and that the functions of the three departments should be kept as distinct and separate as possible, except so far as the action of one is made to constitute a restraint upon the action of the other to keep them within proper bounds and to prevent hasty and improvident action. At times a strict view has been applied without a qualification to the point that if any department of government acts in any way beyond the bounds of its designated power such action is without jurisdiction, unconstitutional and void.

Although the theoretical separation of powers of government was strictly enforced in our early history without qualification, the more recent cases have modified the doctrine and applied a more practical approach. In Leck it is pointed out that despite the excellent theoretical framework which various cases have constructed, this court has held the separation of powers of government has never existed in pure form except in political theory. This view was taken in 1900 by Mr. Chief Justice Doster in his dissenting opinion in State v. Johnson, supra, where he states as follows:

" . . . I wish to say that in the practical affairs of government there is not and cannot be any such thing as a clearly defined and complete separation of such powers. There is not and cannot be any such thing as a legislature which wills and ordains, and nothing else; a judiciary that interprets and decides, and nothing else, and an executive that enforces, and nothing else. The metaphysical distinction between the spheres of will, judgment and action cannot be applied in the domain of political science. In the practical affairs of government the distinction between legislator, judge and executioner is speculative and doctrinal, rather than actual, and the lines of demarcation between them vague and fanciful, rather than real. There are points at which the functions of the one assimilate so closely to the others as to be impossible of detection and separation. The most that can be done is to recognize the theoretical classification made and preserve in general outline the distinction drawn. Modern political science has, however, generally discarded this theory (the distribution of governmental powers), both because it is incapable of accurate statement, and because it seems to be impossible to apply it with beneficial results in the formation of any concrete political organization." (p. 237, 60 P. p. 1079.)

[1,2] In our judgment a strict application of the separation of powers doctrine is inappropriate today in a complex state government where administrative agencies exercise many types of power including legislative, executive, and judicial powers often blended together in the same administrative agency. The courts today have come to recognize that the political philosophers who developed the theory of separation of powers did not have any concept of the complexities of government as it exists today. Under our system of government the absolute independence of the departments and the complete separation of powers is impracticable. We must maintain in our political system sufficient flexibility to experiment and to seek new methods of improving governmental efficiency. At the same time we must not lose sight of the ever-existing danger of unchecked power and the concentration of power in the hands of a single person or group which the separation of powers doctrine was designed to prevent.

[3-6] The cases in this jurisdiction concerned with the separation of powers have involved various departments of our state government. In re Sims, Petitioner, 54 Kan. 1, 37 P. 135, involved an unconstitutional combination of executive and judicial power where a statute sought to confer on county attorneys the power to commit witnesses for contempt. State v. Johnson, supra, held invalid a combination of legislative, judicial, and executive functions in a court of visitation. Sartin v. Duell, 87 Kan. 485, 125 P. 47, held to be valid a statute providing for the appointment of county auditors by the district judges, a claimed improper delegation of executive power to the judicial branch. The issue presented in the case now before us involves a claimed unconstitutional delegation of executive powers to the legislative branch. It is necessary to consider the Kansas separation of powers cases involving the legislative and executive departments of government and the general principles of law which have been developed therefrom. We note in particular the following general principles:

(1) A statute is presumed to be constitutional. All doubts must be resolved in favor of its validity, and before a statute may be stricken down, it must clearly appear the statute violates the constitution. (Leck v. Theis, supra, ¶ 2.)

(2) The legislature may by statute provide for the appointment of members of boards or commissions created by the legislature. (State ex rel. Fatzler v. Kansas Turnpike Authority, 176 Kan. 683, 273 P.2d 198; Marks v. Frantz, 179 Kan. 638, 649, 298 P.2d 316; Leek v. Theis, supra, ¶ 4.)

(3) There is no express provision of the Kansas Constitution which in terms prohibits the legislature from providing for the appointment of certain of its members to administrative boards or commissions or which prohibits their serving on such boards or commissions. (State ex rel. Fatzler v. Kansas Turnpike Authority, supra; State ex rel. Anderson v. Fadely, 180 Kan. 652, 692, 308 P.2d 537.)

(4) The separation of powers doctrine does not in all cases prevent individual members of the legislature from serving on administrative boards or commissions created by legislative enactments. Individual members of the legislature may serve on administrative boards or commissions where such service falls in the realm of cooperation on the part of the legislature and there is no attempt to usurp functions of the executive department of the government. (State ex rel. Fatzler v. Kansas Turnpike Authority, supra; State ex rel. Anderson v. Fadely, supra, concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Schroeder, at page 697, 308 P.2d 537.)

(6) When a statute is challenged under the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, the court must search for a usurpation by one department of the powers of another department on the specific facts and circumstances presented. (Leek v. Theis, supra, ¶ 10, 217 Kan. at page 805, 539 P.2d 304; State ex rel. Anderson v. Fadely, supra.)

[7, 8] The problem, of course, is to determine whether or not a usurpation of powers has taken place. That term has not heretofore been clearly defined. It has been suggested that to have a usurpation one department of the government must be subjected directly or indirectly to the coercive influence of the other. (State ex rel. Anderson v. Fadely, supra, 180 Kan. at page 696, 308 P.2d 537; Leek v. Theis, supra, 217 Kan. at page 807, 539 P.2d 304.) It seems to us that to have a usurpation of powers there must be a significant interference by one department with the operations of another department. In determining whether or not an unconstitutional usurpation of powers exists, there are a number of factors properly to be considered. First is the essential nature of the power being exercised. Is the power exclusively executive or legislative or is it a blend of the two? A second factor is the degree of control by the legislative department in the exercise of the power. Is there a coercive influence or a mere cooperative venture? A third consideration of importance is the nature of the objective sought to be attained by the legislature. Is the intent of the legislature to cooperate with the executive by furnishing some special expertise of one or more of its members or is the objective of the legislature obviously one of establishing its superiority over the executive department in an area essentially executive in nature? A fourth consideration could be the practical result of the blending of powers as shown by actual experience over a period of time where such evidence is available. We do not wish to imply that these are the only factors which should be considered but it seems to us that they have special significance in determining whether a usurpation of powers has been demonstrated.

We turn now to the problem of determining whether there has been a usurpation by the legislative department of powers and functions of the executive department as a result of the creation of the state finance council and the exercise of its powers and duties. To determine this issue we must carefully examine exactly what the state finance council is and what it does.

The attention of this court was first directed to the finance council in 1937 in Fadely. The sole issue involved in that case was the constitutionality of G.S.1935 Supp. 75-3711(4) which authorized the state finance council to allocate to and authorize expenditures from the state emergency fund as provided for in G.S.1935 Supp. 75-3712 and 75-3713. No other duties or functions of the state finance council were challenged or considered by the court. In the majority opinion Mr. Justice (now Chief Justice) Forzer discussed the history of the preceding acts leading up to the creation of the finance council. It would be helpful to review briefly that history in this opinion. In 1943 the legislature established a state war emergency fund to be administered by a state war emergency fund board consisting of six members—the governor, lieutenant governor, state auditor, speaker of the house, and chairman of the ways and means committee of the senate and of the house of representatives. (Ch. 297, L. 1943.) The statute was a product of the emergency created by World War II. Section 3 provided that while the United States was engaged in hostilities with any foreign nation and no longer, such board, by unanimous vote of all of its members, was authorized and empowered to make allocations to and authorize expenditures by various state agencies from the state war emergency fund for two purposes: (1) preservation of the public health and pro- tection of persons and property from extraordinary conditions arising out of the war and which were not foreseen at the time appropriations were made by the regular session of 1943; (2) repair or temporarily replace buildings or equipment owned by the state and destroyed or damaged by sabotage, fire, wind, tornado or act of God if such building or equipment was absolutely necessary to the continued functions of the particular state agency using the same. The council could act only by unanimous vote of all of its members. Following the end of World War II the legislature in 1947 created in lieu of the state war emergency fund a state emergency fund. A state emergency fund board was created to make allocations to and authorize expenditures from the state emergency fund. What had originally been designed as a fund to take care of emergencies arising in war time had now become a permanent part of the Kansas governmental scheme.

At its 1953 regular session the legislature repealed all laws relating to the state emergency fund and the state emergency fund board and created the state department of administration consisting of a budget division, an accounts and reports division, a purchasing division, a personnel division, and the state finance council. (L. 1953, Ch. 375; G.S.1955 Supp. 75-3701 to 75-3904.) Thus Kansas became one of the states which sought to effect administrative reorganization through a department of administration. This plan assumed that the governor would be able to control and coordinate the numerous state agencies by the junctions supervision, auditing, and inspection of a central department. By controlling budget estimates and by continuous management audits, pre-audits of financial transactions, centralized purchasing, and the recruitment, supervision, and direction of civil service personnel, the governor through his appointed director of administration, would presumably be able to direct the whole operation of the executive department of the state government.

The state finance council was created as a legislatively oriented council to approve the rules and regulations of the department of administration and thereby to check the power of the governor to coordinate the activities of state agencies.

The basic provisions of the 1953 act remain in effect today and may be found in K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3701 through 75-3775. In 1957 when Fadelly was decided the council consisted of six members—(1) the governor, who was designated as chairman, (2) the lieutenant governor, (3) the president pro tem of the senate, (4) the speaker of the house of representatives, (5) the chairman of the senate committee on ways and means, and (6) the chairman of the house committee on ways and means. The general powers and duties of the state finance council were provided for in G.S. 1955 Supp. 75-3711, which is quite similar to our present statute, K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3711. Suffice it to say the finance council was granted broad powers to exercise control over the operations of the department of administration. In 1972 important changes were made in the department of administration. (L.1972, Ch. 332.) The state finance council was continued in existence and was declared "attached to the department of administration" (75-3708a). Its membership consisted of the same six members which it had under the 1953 act. Except in cases where other conditions and limitations were prescribed by statute, the chairman and four or more other members of the state finance council were declared to constitute a quorum and a majority vote of all members of the state finance council governed. (75-3711.) The two exceptions to the majority vote provision involved actions taken by the council with respect to the state emergency fund (75-3713) and actions authorizing the state board of treasury examiners to issue certificates of indebtedness (75-3725a), both of which required the unanimous vote of all members of the finance council. In 1974, K.S.A. 75-3708 was amended to enlarge the state finance council to its present nine members—the governor and the eight members who constitute the leadership of the Kansas legislature. Today the governor has one vote and the legislative members have eight votes.

In the petition filed in this case by the attorney general reference is made to numerous statutes involving the powers and duties of the state finance council. K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3711 provides that, in general, but not by way of limitation, the state finance council shall:

(1) Hear and determine appeals by any state agency from final decisions or final actions of the secretary of administration or the director of [computer services].

(2) Approve, modify and approve or reject proposed rules and regulations submitted by the secretary of administration as provided in K.S.A. 75-3706 amended.

(3) Make allocations to, and approve expenditures by a state agency, from any appropriations in the state finance council for that purpose, of funds for unanticipated and unbudgeted needs, under conditions and limitations prescribed by the legislature.

(4) Exercise powers and perform functions specified for the state finance council by the Kansas civil service act or by other laws.

A number of other statutes specifically vest the state finance council with additional powers and duties. The state finance council is vested by law with the authority to fix or approve the compensation to be paid to a large number of officers and employees of the executive department of government. The state finance council is required to fix the annual salaries of the adjutant general (18-203), the executive secretary of the state board of hearing aids (65-2678), and the employees of the biocentennial commission (73-1301). The record refers to 71 state officers and employees whose annual salary or compensation must be approved by the state finance council.

The state finance council exercises control and authority over the state department of administration as a whole. The council must approve any and all rules and regulations with respect to the manner of performance of any power or duty of the department and the execution of any business of the department and its relations to and business with other state agencies. (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3706.) The finance council may hear and determine appeals by any state agency from final decisions or final actions of the secretary of administration or the director of computer services. (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3711(1)) All regulations promulgated by the director of the division of accounts and reports pertaining to old-age and survivors insurance for public employees are made subject to approval of the state finance council (75-3749). The finance council must approve all rules and regulations adopted by the director of architectural services pertaining to uniform standards for mobile homes and recreational vehicles. (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-1220[e].) Under K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-4330 the state finance council must approve memorandum agreements resulting from labor negotiations involving state employees as a condition precedent to the effectiveness of such agreements.

The state finance council exercises extensive power and authority over the administration of the Kansas civil service act and the division of personnel. The council must approve all rules and regulations prepared by the director of the division of personnel for carrying out the provisions of the Kansas civil service act (75-3716). Assignment to classes of all positions in the classified exempt service of the Kansas civil service act and the assignment of classes to salary ranges are made a duty of the director of personnel but such assignments cannot become effective until approved by the council (75-2918). The director of personnel is required to prepare a pay plan which shall include a schedule of salary and wage ranges and steps, which must be approved by the finance council (75-2938[3]). The finance council must approve regulations adopted by the secretary of administration relating to the hearing of appeals by the state civil service commission. The council must approve all regulations pertaining to the furnishing of housing, food, and other maintenance to state employees (75-2961a). It is clear that these statutes vest in the state finance council the power to control operations of the division of personnel.

The state finance council exercises extensive power and authority over the functions and responsibilities of the division of the budget. K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3714a establishes as a part of the department of administration, a division of the budget whose administrative head is the director of the budget. The secretary of administration is empowered to adopt an allocation system on the advice of the budget director when it appears that for any fiscal year the resources of the general fund or any special revenue fund are insufficient to cover appropriations for that year. Agencies affected by decisions of the secretary of administration regarding the allotment system may ask for a review of such decision by the state finance council whose decision controls (75-3722). In addition the finance council may grant authority to any state agency to transfer a part of any item appropriated to such agency to any other item of its appropriation. (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3726a.)

Other miscellaneous powers of the state finance council are worthy of mention. The secretary of corrections is directed to provide employment opportunities, work experiences, and educational or vocational training for all inmates capable of benefiting therefrom, and is authorized to grant each inmate as a reward for such employment an amount which shall be set by the state finance council but not less than 25 cents. (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-5211.) The finance council exercises control over the director of architectural services in that in the event of disagreement between the director of architectural services and the administrative head of any state agency relating to plans, specifications, and contracts involving the construction or repair of public buildings, the secretary of administration is required to submit such dispute to the state finance council and its decision shall be final. (K.S.A. 75-3741; K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-1202b.) The finance council also has authority to establish limitations on the allowance of moving expenses made to new professional employees by any state agency. (K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3219.)

As indicated above two functions of the state finance council require the unanimous approval of all nine members of the council. K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3725a provides in substance that whenever it shall appear that the estimated resources for any fiscal year in the state general fund are sufficient to meet in full the estimated expenditures for that fiscal year, but the estimated resources in the state general fund in any month or months of such fiscal year are insufficient to meet in full the estimated expenditures for such month or months, the finance council may by unanimous vote order the state board of treasury examiners to issue a written certificate of indebtedness subject to redemption from the state general fund within 60 days. K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3713 authorize the state finance council by unanimous vote of all its members to make allocations to and authorize expenditures by state agencies from the state emergency fund in the event of extraordinary emergency conditions specifically set forth in the statute. In addition by unanimous vote of all its members the finance council is authorized to make loans or grants of funds in the state emergency fund to political subdivisions where public buildings or equipment are damaged or destroyed. (K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3713a.)

Finally the state finance council is given extensive power and authority over the transfer and expenditure of public moneys. Under various appropriation acts enacted in 1975 it is provided that upon written application to the governor and approval by the state finance council expenditures from special revenue funds may exceed the amounts specified in these acts. Cited as examples by the attorney general are Laws of 1975, Ch. 8, § 51; Ch. 9, § 10; Ch. 10, § 14; Ch. 13, § 10; Ch. 14, § 12; Ch. 15, § 49; Ch. 18, § 54; Ch. 20, § 9; Ch. 21, § 5; Ch. 22, § 5; Ch. 23, § 15; Ch. 24, § 11; Ch. 25, § 7; Ch. 26, § 27; and Ch. 27, § 14. Furthermore, in the appropriation of moneys to state agencies unencumbered balances are commonly reappropriated from the state general fund with the proviso that expenditures therefrom may not exceed specified amounts except upon approval of the finance council. (L. 1975, Ch. 9, § 5(a).) Some appropriation acts also provide that the number of full-time and regular part-time positions which may be paid from appropriations for specific agencies are fixed by law subject to approval of the state finance council to exceed the specified limitations. See for example Laws 1975, Ch. 10, § 13. The state board of regents is authorized with the approval of the state finance council to amend lists of restricted fees and service activities, receipts from which are appropriated by law. (Ch. 14, § 3(b).) K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3711a provides that any state agency not otherwise specifically authorized by law may, with the approval of the state finance council receive grants of money and funds appropriated under any federal act or from any other source. The statute provides that such a state agency may with the approval of the state finance council, contract with and receive, and/or spend or transfer moneys from other state or federal agencies. This statute has no application to funds specifically authorized to be received and expended by any statute.

[9] All of the powers and duties of the finance council which are set forth above are challenged in this action by the attorney general either as a usurpation of executive powers by the legislature or on the basis that they constitute a delegation of legislative powers to the state finance council without sufficient legislative standards or guidelines. It is obviously a difficult task to classify these powers as executive or legislative and to determine which powers may constitutionally be exercised by the state finance council and which may not. We have concluded that the statutory powers and duties granted to the state finance council to supervise the operations of the department of administration and its various divisions are purely an exercise of executive power. In particular we hold the following duties or powers to be essentially executive or administrative in nature:

(1) The power to fix or approve the compensation paid to state officers and employees;

(2) Certain powers under the civil service act, such as the adoption of rules and regulations for carrying out the act, approval of assignment of positions in the civil service to classes, and the assignment of classes to salary ranges, approval of the pay plan containing a schedule of salary and wage ranges and steps, approval of terms upon which state agencies may furnish housing, food service and other employee maintenance to state officers and employees in the civil service, and the determination of the cost and value of such benefits;

(3) The determination of appeals by state agencies from actions by the secretary of administration in the allotment of the general fund or special revenue funds when insufficient to cover appropriations from such funds;

(4) Determination of the amount, not less than 25 cents, to be credited by the secretary of corrections to inmates for employment;

(5) Resolution of disputes between the director of architectural services and the head of a state agency over construction of buildings, major repairs, or improvements authorized by the legislature for the state agency;

(6) Setting of limitations on payment of moving expenses of state employees;

(7) Approval of rules and regulations governing operations of the department of administration and each of its divisions;

(8) Determination of appeals by state agencies from decisions of the secretary of administration or director of computer services;

(9) Approval of rules and regulations to carry out the uniform standard code for mobile homes and recreational vehicles;

(10) Approval of the transfer by a state agency of a part of an appropriated item to any other item of its appropriation.

All of these powers concern the day-to-day operations of the department of administration and its various divisions. The vesting of such powers in the state finance council in our judgment clearly grants to a legislatively oriented body control over the operation of an executive agency and constitutes a usurpation of executive power by the legislative department. All of the powers and functions set forth above are controlled by a majority vote of the nine-member finance council, only one of whom, the governor, is a member of the executive department. It is true that only the governor, as chairman, has the authority to call meetings of the finance council and that the governor has the power to set the agenda for any meeting. The trouble is that the governor has no real choice except to call a meeting of the state finance council since the department of administration cannot really function, unless its rules and regulations are approved and made effective and unless intradepartmental disputes can be finally determined. The legislature has by these statutes placed the state finance council, a body controlled by legislators, at the apex of the administrative structure of the state department of administration in a position where it exerts, both directly and indirectly, a coercive influence on that executive department. We, therefore, hold that all of the executive powers specifically set forth above may not constitutionally be performed by the state finance council with its present membership. Admittedly the legislature could have enacted statutes dealing with the subject matter delegated to the finance council. But it failed to do so. It chose to enact a law in general terms and conferred the power to execute it upon an administrative board in the executive department. Having done so the legislature could not constitutionally vest the power to execute the law in a body controlled by individual legislators. In so doing it violated the doctrine of the separation of powers.

[10] The powers exercised by the state finance council with respect to expenditures from the state emergency fund (K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3713; 75-3713a) we uphold as a cooperative effort between the executive department and the legislative department of the state. The powers granted there may be exercised only for the limited purposes specifically set forth in the statute. They are concerned with extraordinary conditions involving the public health or the protection of persons and property and were granted to insure prompt state action in the event of a major disaster. The powers of the finance council in relation to the state emergency fund were fully considered and upheld in State v. Fabely, supra. In view of the fact that such powers can be exercised only by the unanimous vote of the finance council we cannot say that the exercise of such powers by the council constitutes a usurpation of executive power.

[11] We have also concluded that the power of the state finance council by unanimous vote to order the state board of treasury examiners to issue a certificate of indebtedness under the limitations speci-cally set forth in K.S.A.1975 Supp. 75-3725a may constitutionally be exercised by the finance council. The legislature has established clear guidelines for the exercise of this power. Because the exercise of this power involves the creation of a debt of the state, we view this power as so closely related to the exercise of legislative power that in our judgment such power can be upheld under the circumstances. Since the action of the finance council must be unanimous, it cannot act without the approval of the governor. We, therefore, hold that the exercise of such power by the state finance council does not constitute a usurpation of executive power by the legislative department. We wish to emphasize that this power is upheld as not being in violation of the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers. We have not considered its validity with respect to any other constitutional provision.

[12] There remains for our consideration the constitutionality of the powers and authority vested by statute in the state finance council over the transfer and expenditure of public moneys. As pointed out heretofore the legislature in 1975 enacted a number of appropriation acts which delegated to the finance council broad powers to authorize expenditures from special revenue funds which exceed the limits of expenditures authorized by statute. Under each of these acts appropriations are made to various executive agencies from the state general fund and expenditure limitations are specifically established for each agency. The appropriation act then contains a provision usually in the following language:

"Upon written application of the governor and approval of the state finance council, expenditures from special funds may exceed the amount specified in this act where such excesses are the result of circumstances which could not reasonably have been foreseen when the legislature was in session."

We have concluded that the attorney general is correct in his position that such statutory enactments confer upon the state finance council the power to amend the provisions of appropriation acts and to authorize expenditures by the executive department in excess of limitations specifically fixed by the legislature with no adequate standards or guidelines to control the finance council in the exercise of its discretion.

[13, 14] We agree with all parties that the appropriation of money and the setting of limitations on expenditures by state executive agencies constitutes an exercise of legislative power. We further agree that the legislature may delegate to an administrative body some of the legislature's functions where the policy is fixed and standards are definitely established which determine the manner and circumstances of the exercise of such power. (Board of Salanta v. Grant County Planning Board, 195 Kan. 640, 468 P.2d 655.) Great leeway should be allowed the legislature in setting forth guidelines or standards and the use of general rather than minute standards is permissible. We recently spoke to this question in State ex rel. Dir. v. State Board of Education, 215 Kan. 551, 527 P.2d 952 where we stated:

"Our cases clearly recognize that the legislature may delegate a legislative function when constitutional authority for the delegation is present and the statutory delegation is circumscribed by sufficient legislative guidelines to cover the nature and extent of the legislative function intended to be delegated. . . ." (p. 554, 527 P.2d p. 955.)

Under the statutes now before us the only standard or limitation on the power of the state finance council to approve expenditures from special revenue funds in excess of fixed statutory limits is "where such excesses are the result of circumstances which could not reasonably have been foreseen when the legislature was in session." In our judgment this vague standard is insufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement that the legislature may not delegate legislative power unless adequate standards are established which determine the manner and exercise of such power. There are no standards which limit the finance council as to the amount or the subject matter of the expenditures which it may authorize. The power to approve such expenditures may well involve millions of dollars of state money. We note for example that the annual report of the Division of Accounts and Reports of the Department of Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977, shows a total balance in the special revenue funds in excess of $114,000,000.

[15] We have likewise concluded that there are no adequate legislative standards or guidelines to govern the finance council in the exercise of its authority to increase the fixed positions of employees authorized for state agencies, or to approve the receipt and expenditure of federal or other funds not authorized by specific statutes, or to authorize the state board of regents to amend or change its list of fees and service activities and to expend the moneys derived therefrom.

Under the powers granted by these appropriation acts the finance council is in practical effect set up as a little legislature with the power to appropriate and authorize the expenditures of state moneys. In our judgment this unrestricted grant of power to the state finance council constitutes a delegation of legislative power without adequate standards or guidelines. Such a delegation of legislative power is unconstitutional.

[16-18] From what has been said it is evident that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the legislative members of the state finance council from the exercise of all of their powers and duties concerning the supervision of the operations of the department of administration and its various divisions which we have held constitute a usurpation of executive power by the legislative department in violation of the separation of powers doctrine. The validity of the actions of the state finance council since its creation in 1953 may be questioned. It is the judgment of the court that from the time of its creation in 1953 until the filing of this opinion the acts of the state finance council were those of de facto officers binding between all persons dealing with the finance council as a public body composed of public officers. (State ex rel. Anderson v. State Office Building Commission, 185 Kan. 563, 345 P.2d 674.) It is further the judgment of this court that upon the filing of this opinion the duties of the state finance council involving the supervision of the department of administration and its various divisions shall devolve upon and be exercised by the governor as the head of the executive department of this state until such time as the legislature shall by statute adopt a new legislative plan or scheme.

We further hold that the state finance council as presently constituted may continue to exercise its powers and duties to authorize the issuance of certificates of indebtedness under the provisions of K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3725a and to make allocations to and authorize expenditures by state agencies from the state emergency fund as provided for in K.S.A. 1975 Supp. 75-3714 and 75-3713a.

Finally, we hold that upon the filing of this opinion the power and authority of the state finance council over the transfer and expenditures of public moneys which have been considered and declared to be invalid and unconstitutional in this opinion may no longer be exercised under existing statutes.

The judgment of the district court is reversed in part and affirmed in part in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

No. 47868.

Supreme Court of Kansas

March 6, 1976

Plaintiff brought wrongful death action against defendants, the owner and the operator of a sand and gravel pit, and the owner filed a cross petition against the operator for indemnity. After the cross petition for indemnity was dismissed and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, the Supreme Court, 204 Kan. 392, 462 P.2d 763, affirmed the wrongful death judgments against the defendant and reversed and remanded the dismissal of the owner's cross claim for indemnity against the operator. The Sedgwick District Court, Robert T. Stephan, J., after initially entering judgment for the owner and against the operator, vacated such judgment upon motion for revision of judgment, and entered judgment in favor of the operator, finding that the owner was not entitled to indemnity, and the owner appealed. The Supreme Court, Kaul, J., held that previous decision of Supreme Court remanding case to the trial court for determination with respect to indemnity issue was not res judicata on such issue and that indemnification of the owner was provided by indemnity provision in contract under which owner retained only a royalty interest in sand and gravel removed from his land, but was not allowed to carry on any independent operations on the premises, and under which the operator agreed to conduct operations in a proper and careful manner and to comply with all laws and regulations of any municipal or governmental body which could affect operations on the premises.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Appeal and Error  $\ominus$ 1097(1)

When a second appeal is brought to the Supreme Court in the same case, the first decision is the settled law of the case on all questions involved and settled in the first appeal and reconsideration will not be given to such questions.

2. Appeal and Error  $\ominus$ 1194(1)

When the Supreme Court, upon appeal, merely reverses a district court in connection with its ruling on a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment, and no judgment is directed, the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court is the same, for purposes of further proceedings in the district court, as if the district court had made the correct ruling in the first instance, except that the district court has no authority to change or modify the ruling made by the Supreme Court.

3. Appeal and Error  $\ominus$ 1194(1)

Prior decision of Supreme Court in same case in previous appeal, in which case was remanded for consideration of whether owner of land was entitled to indemnity from operator of sand and gravel pit located on owner's land, was not res judicata with respect to such issue where the Supreme Court did not direct judgment on the indemnity issue and decided to remand case on unrelated point.

4. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 8.1(1)

Generally, a contract of indemnity will not be construed to indemnify the indemnitee against losses resulting from his own negligent acts unless such intention is expressed in clear and unequivocal terms, or unless no other means can be ascribed thereto.

5. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 6

The contract of indemnity is construed in accordance with the general rules for the construction of contracts.

6. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 6

The cardinal rule in construing a contract of indemnity is to ascertain the intention of the parties and to give effect to that intention if it can be done consistently with legal principles.

7. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 8.1(1)

While the intent to indemnify against the results of an indemnitee's negligence must be clear to enforce an indemnity agreement, it is not necessary that an indemnity agreement contain specific or express language covering, in so many words, an owner's negligence if the intention to afford protection clearly appears in the contract, the surrounding circumstances, and the purposes and objects of the parties.

8. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 8.1(1)

Where the indemnitor has possession and control of the work or premises and the owner does not maintain independent operations on the premises, a contract of indemnity is generally construed to cover passive negligence of the owner.

9. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 8.1(2)

Inclusion of provision in indemnity agreement requiring that operator of sand and gravel pit carrying liability insurance naming owner of the premises as the insured supported conclusion that operator and owner intended indemnification of the owner for loss occasioned by failure of the owner to comply with city ordinance requiring fence around sand and gravel pit.

10. Indemnity  $\ominus$ 8.1(2)

Indemnification agreement between owner of land and operator of sand and gravel pit on land which was contained in lease contract giving operator exclusive right to enter and occupy land and giving owner only a royalty interest in sand and gravel removed and which expressly re-case is strong, and the defendant is subject to impeachment by other means, a prosecutor might elect not to use an arguably inadmissible prior conviction.

Because an accused's decision whether to testify seldom turns on the resolution of one factor," New Jersey v. Portash, 449 U.S. 430, 467, 99 S.Ct. 1253, 1301, 59 L.Ed.2d 501 (1979) (BLACKMUN, J. dissenting), a reviewing court cannot assume that the adverse ruling motivated a defendant's decision not to testify. (Footnotes omitted).

After setting forth these and other observations, the Luce court held that to preserve the issue of improper impeachment by prior convictions, a defendant must testify.

To accept this requirement for preservation of a Bigham issue, as the Commonwealth would have us do, would require us to ignore years of contrary case law in Pennsylvania. The appellate courts of Pennsylvania have consistently been able to give meaningful review to Bigham claims in the absence of testimony by defendants. In fact, the two keystone cases which helped to develop Pennsylvania's law as to the use of prior convictions for impeachment purposes, Commonwealth v. Bigham, 452 Pa. 554, 307 A.2d 255 (1973) and Roots, supra, both involved trials in which the respective appellants had not testified. Since Bigham, supra, the appellate courts of this Commonwealth have continued to provide meaningful review in the absence of testimony by defendants. See, e.g., Commonwealth v. Bunch, 329 Pa.Super. 101, 477 A.2d 1372 (1984); Commonwealth v. Williams, 273 Pa.Super. 359, 417 A.2d 704 (1980); Commonwealth v. Campbell, 244 Pa.Super. 595, 369 A.2d 1299 (1976).

[3] Finally, our courts do not agree with Chief Justice Burger's observation in Luce, supra, that a defendant's decision to testify seldom turns on the trial court's

2. We recognize that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court is free to diverge from past case law and adopt the rationale and holding in Luce. How-

ruling on the use of prior conviction evidence. To the contrary, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court noted in Roots, supra at 393 A.2d at 354, that "knowledge that [a defendant's] past convictions will be revealed to the jury, if he testifies, may well foreclose his only opportunity to present his version of the occurrence." Therefore, we expressly reject the Commonwealth's assertion that a Bigham issue is waived where an appellant does not testify at trial.

At the conclusion of the Commonwealth's case, the trial court excused the jury and held a Bigham hearing to determine whether any of appellant's past convictions could be introduced for impeachment purposes, if appellant decided to testify. The record of the Bigham hearing conducted by the trial court in the instant case indicates that the Roots factors were properly considered and that the Commonwealth met its burden of proof. The two prior convictions were for robbery and they necessarily reflected upon appellant's veracity. The convictions sought to be introduced were not stale, having occurred within five years of trial. Most important is the fact that the prosecution's case rested solely on the testimony of the victim and various police officers. There was no conclusive physical evidence.

[4] Therefore, if appellant had testified the Commonwealth would have had to attempt to impeach the testimony. In this case, the prosecution had no other means available to impeach appellant's testimony. Therefore, we find no abuse of discretion by the trial court in its ruling that it would allow evidence of appellant's two prior convictions for robbery to be used for impeachment purposes. Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of sentence.

Judgment of sentence affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania

v.

Douglas KUPHAL, Appellant.

Superior Court of Pennsylvania.

Argued Dec. 13, 1984.

Filed Nov. 15, 1985.

Defendant was convicted in the Court of Common Pleas, Bucks County, Criminal Nos. 1494/1982, 732/1983, and 1514/1983. Melton, J., of robbery, theft, receiving stolen property, assault, terroristic threats, criminal mischief, and driving under the influence, and he appealed. The Superior Court, Nos. 02202, 02503, and 02504 Philadelphia 1983. Wickersham, J., held that by providing the General Assembly, by concurrent resolution, may reject sentencing guidelines adopted by Sentencing Commission, statute did not violate provisions of State Constitution that legislative power of the Commonwealth may be exercised only with concurrence of both houses and after presentation to the governor.

Affirmed.

Spaeth, President Judge, filed a dissenting opinion joined by Olszewski, Montemuro, and Tamilia, JJ.

Beck, J., filed concurring opinion.

PER CURIAM:

Three appeals are before the court. The principal issue is whether the legislative veto provided by 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(b) is constitutional. On Appeal Nos. 2803 and 2804 Philadelphia 1983, Judge WICKERSHAM, joined by Judges CAVANAUGH, ROWLEY, and JOHNSON, would hold that the legislative veto is not unconstitutional and would affirm. President Judge SPAETH, joined by Judges OLSZEWSKI, MONTEMURO and TAMILIA, would hold that the legislative veto is unconstitutional and would vacate the judgments of sentence. Judge BECK would hold that the legislative veto is unconstitutional but would further hold that the provision providing for the veto is severable; she therefore joins the judges who would affirm. The judgments of sentence on Appeal No. 2803 and 2804 Philadelphia 1983 are therefore affirmed. Appeal No. 2802 Philadelphia 1983 presents only the issue of whether the trial court in imposing sentence abused its discretion. On that appeal, all of the judges agree that the judgment of sentence should be, and it therefore is, affirmed. The several opinions follow.

WICKERSHAM, Judge:

On June 20, 1983 appellant Douglas Kuphal entered guilty pleas in the Court of Common Pleas of Bucks County to three separate informations, charging him with robbery, theft, receiving stolen property, assault, terroristic threats, criminal mischief, and driving under the influence. Following a presentence investigation, appellant was sentenced to concurrent terms of state imprisonment of twelve (12) to thirty-six (36) months and six (6) to twelve (12) months. These sentences were to run consecutively from a county sentence appellant was serving at the time. Following the denial of his motion for reconsideration of sentence, appellant filed these timely appeals.

On appeal, appellant questions the validity of Pennsylvania's sentencing guidelines, 204 Pa.Code § 303.1 et seq. As in its companion cases,<sup>1</sup> the principal issue in this case is whether section 3 of the Act of November 26, 1978, P.L. 1316, No. 319, 18 Pa.C.S. § 1321(b); transferred by Act of October 5, 1980, P.L. 693, No. 142, to 42 Pa.C.S. §§ 2151-2155, 9721 is unconstitutional. Section 3 of the Act provides for the creation of the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing and the adoption of sentencing guidelines by the Commission. Appellant argues that section 3 is unconstitutional and that, therefore, the sentencing guidelines under which he was sentenced, are invalid. We disagree.

The above Act provides that the Sentencing Commission should adopt sentencing guidelines and then publish them in the Pennsylvania Bulletin. After the Commission adopts and publishes the guidelines, "[t]he General Assembly may by concurrent resolution reject [the guidelines] in their entirety . . . within 90 days of their publication." If not so rejected, the guidelines become effective 180 days after publication.

In January 1981, the Commission adopted and published proposed guidelines; these were rejected, however, by a concurrent resolution. In January 1982, the Commission presented a new set of guidelines to the General Assembly. The Senate expressly approved the new guidelines; the House, however, took no action on them within the 90 day period specified by the Act. In May 1982, the Sentencing Commission announced that the General Assembly had "adopted" the revised guidelines. They became effective July 22, 1982.

President Judge Spaeth's dissenting opinion notes that the Pennsylvania Constitution provides that the legislative power of the Commonwealth, which is vested in both Houses of the General Assembly, may be exercised only with the concurrence of both Houses and after presentment to the Governor. Pa. Const. art. II, § 1; art. III, §§ 1, 4, 5, and 9; art. IV, § 15. The Act under consideration provides that the General Assembly, by concurrent resolution, may reject the sentencing guidelines adopted by the Sentencing Commission. President Judge Spaeth argues that such a rejection is an exercise of legislative power and can only be made after presentment to the Governor and that since the Act does not provide for presentment to the Governor, it is unconstitutional.

[1, 2] We do not believe that the General Assembly's rejection of the guidelines was an "exercise of legislative power." An "exercise of legislative power" is an act that is legislative in purpose and effect. President Judge Spaeth says that the rejection is legislative in effect because it changed the procedure which sentencing judges would follow. We disagree. Since the guidelines were not in effect at the time of the rejection, the rejection did not change the procedure sentencing judges would follow, but merely maintained the status quo. Thus, we do not see how this can be considered an exercise of legislative power.

We believe that the "legislative power" with respect to the sentencing guidelines was exercised not when the General Assembly rejected the first set of guidelines, but when it passed the Act which created this procedure for adopting the guidelines. The Act itself was passed by both Houses and signed by the Governor. This was the "presentment" required by our Constitution. The rejection of the guidelines was not an "exercise of legislative power" such that it also required presentment to the Governor; hence the sentencing guidelines are not invalid on that ground. We hold that section 3 of the Act is constitutional. Finding no merit to the other constitutional challenges presented by appellant, we, therefore, affirm the judgments of sentence.<sup>2</sup>

Judgments of sentence affirmed.

BECK, J., files a concurring opinion.

SPAETH, President Judge, files a dissenting opinion joined by OLSZEWSKI, MONTENURO and TAMMIA, JJ.

BECK, Judge, concurring:

I agree with Judge Wickersham that the sentencing guidelines are constitutional but I reach that determination through a different analysis.

2. Appellant's statement of questions involved were:

- Do the sentencing guidelines, 204 Pa.Code § 303.1, result from an invalid delegation of legislative authority by the general assembly in violation of article II, § 1 of the Pennsylvania constitution?
- Are the sentencing guidelines, 204 Pa.Code § 303.1, null and void because they were

If the legislative veto provision, 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(b), of the sentencing guidelines legislation were non-severable, I should support Judge Spaeth's view that the process by which the guidelines came into being is unconstitutional. See Pa. Const. art. III, § 9. But inasmuch as I find that subsections 218(c) and 218(d) of the Act of October 5, 1980 ("Act of 1980"), P.L. 693, make the legislative veto provision severable, I uphold the constitutionality of the sentencing guidelines adopted pursuant to the Act of 1980.

"The public policy of this Commonwealth favors severability" of statutory provisions. Department of Education v. First School, 471 Pa. 471, 478, 370 A.2d 702, 705 (1977). Hence, a statutory provision is presumed severable unless the provision is so interrelated with the statute as a whole that the legislature clearly would not have intended to enact the remainder of the statute without the provision in question, Heller v. Frankston, 504 Pa. 528, 475 A.2d 1291 (1984); 1 Pa.C.S. § 1923, or the wording of the statute specifically rebuts the presumption of severability. See First School.

The language of the severability clause in the Act of 1980 supports the conclusion that the legislative veto provision is severable. In analyzing the severability clause in the Act of 1980, I consider two basic principles of statutory construction: (1) the legislature is presumed to change the wording of a statute in order to signal a change in legislative intent and (2) the legislature is presumed not to intend any provision of a statute as surplusage but rather is presumed to intend that every word in a statute have effect. Masland v. Buchman, 473 Pa. 280, 374 A.2d 517 (1977); Crusco, not enacted by a bill by the general assembly in violation of article III, § 1 of the Pennsylvania constitution?

C. Are all sentences imposed in Pennsylvania necessarily the product of the sentencing guidelines?

Brief for Appellant at 3.

Insurance Company of North America, 292 Pa.Super. 293, 437 A.2d 52 (1981).

The Act of 1980 does not adopt the severability language of its predecessor act, the Act of November 26, 1978 ("Act of 1978"), P.L. 1316, which clearly proclaimed that the legislative veto was non-severable. The legislative veto provision of the Act of 1978 appears in section 3 of that act. The severability clause (section 7) in the Act of 1978 states that "[t]he provisions of section 3 [which includes the legislative veto] are not severable and if any provision thereof ... is held invalid, the remainder of section 3 and section 6 shall be invalid."<sup>1</sup>

The legislative veto provision of section 3 of the Act of 1978 is now contained in subsection 218(a) of the Act of 1980.<sup>2</sup> Subsection 218(d) of the Act of 1980 specifically repeals the severability clause (section 7) of the Act of 1978. The Act of 1980 severability clause appears in subsection 218(e) which declares that "[t]he provisions of subsection (a), 42 Pa.C.S. § 9781 (relating to appellate review of sentence), and section 6 of the act of November 26, 1978 ... are not severable and if any provision thereof ... is held invalid, the remainder of subsection (a), 42 Pa.C.S. § 9781 and such section 6 shall be invalid."<sup>3</sup>

While the plain meaning of the words in the Act of 1978 severability clause evidences that the legislative veto provision in that act was non-severable, the question remains whether the language in the Act of 1980 precludes severability of the Act of 1980 legislative veto provision.

The severability clause in the Act of 1980 provides that subsection (a), 42 Pa.C.S.

§ 9781 and section 6 of the Act of 1978 are non-severable from the remainder of the Act of 1980. Guided by the tenets of statutory construction, I interpret the phrase "subsection (a), 42 Pa.C.S. § 9781" to mean subsection (a) of 42 Pa.C.S. § 9781 rather than subsection (a) of section 218 of the Act of 1980.

If the legislature had intended "subsection (a)" to refer to section 218 of the Act of 1980, the legislature could have unequivocally indicated so by inserting the words "of this section" immediately after the reference to subsection (a). This is precisely the technique utilized by the legislature in subsection 218(e) of the Act of 1980 where in a sentence referring, inter alia, to Title 42 (42 Pa.C.S.) and the Act of 1980, the legislature employed the phrase "subsection (e) of this section" to show that subsection (e) related to section 218 of the Act of 1980 and not to Title 42.

Given the repealer provision and the severability clause language in the Act of 1980, I am convinced that nothing in the Act of 1980 forecloses the severability of the legislative veto provision from the rest of the Act of 1980.

Agreeing with Judge Spaeth that the legislative veto provision is unconstitutional I should strike that single provision of the Act of 1980. However, inasmuch as the Act of 1980 legislative veto provision was not exercised in conjunction with the sentencing guidelines adopted pursuant to the Act of 1980 and is, by my analysis, severable, I should uphold the constitutionality of the remaining provisions of the Act of 1980. Subsection 218(a) of the Act of 1980 contains the following topics: Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing, composition of commission, powers and duties, adoption of sentencing guidelines and publication of sentencing guidelines. The legislative veto provision appears under the heading "publication of sentencing guidelines" subsection 401(a) of the Act of 1980 covers appellate review of sentence.

3. The subject matter of 42 Pa.C.S. § 9751 (relating to appellate review of sentence) is covered by subsection 401(a) of the Act of 1980.

1980<sup>4</sup> and the sentencing guidelines adopted in conformity therewith.

SPAETH, President Judge:

The issue on this appeal and its companion cases<sup>1</sup> is the constitutionality of Section 3 of the Act of November 26, 1978, P.L. 1316, No. 319,<sup>2</sup> providing for the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing and the adoption of sentencing guidelines. I should hold that Section 3 of the Act is unconstitutional, from which it follows that the sentencing guidelines, 201 Pa.Code § 303.1 et seq., are invalid. Since in sentencing appellant, the trial court considered the guidelines, the judgments of sentence should be vacated and the case remanded for resentencing. I should further hold, however, that this decision is prospective only and therefore does not apply to cases in which the sentencing guidelines were considered by the sentencing judge but not

4. The enabling legislation for the establishment of the sentencing commission authorized to provide sentencing guidelines was passed in accordance with the constitutional requirement of bicameral approval and presentment to the governor.

1. The companion cases are: Commonwealth v. Mowar, 03076 Philadelphia 1983; Commonwealth v. Bates, 02941 Philadelphia 1983; and Commonwealth v. Sessions, 01959 Philadelphia 1983. In this case, there are three appeals from judgments of sentence. Appeal from judgment of sentence No. 2302 Philadelphia 1983 raises only the question of whether the trial court abused its discretion in sentencing appellant to six to twelve months incarceration. Upon review of the record, I find no abuse of discretion and therefore I should not disturb this sentence. Appeals No. 2303 Philadelphia 1983 and No. 2304 Philadelphia 1983 both raise the constitutionality of the sentencing guidelines.

2. This Act amended various sections of Title 18 (Crime and Offenses): § 1 amended 18 Pa.C.S. § 1321(b) (general standards for sentencing); § 2 repealed Subchapter G of Chapter 13 of Title 18, § 1 amended Chapter 13 and added Subchapter G, 18 Pa.C.S. § 1341-1386 (providing for the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing); § 4 amended 18 Pa.C.S. § 4104 (tampering with records or identification); § 5 established interim guidelines for certain repeat offenses, see note 7, infra; § 6 appropriated money for the Pennsylvania Commission on challenged by the defendant as unconstitutional.

The Sentencing Code<sup>3</sup> provides that the sentencing judge has discretion to choose from among five sentencing alternatives. 42 Pa.C.S. § 9721 (providing for a sentence of total confinement, partial confinement, probation, fine, or determination of guilt without further penalty). The Code sets general standards by which this discretion is to be exercised, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9721(b), states the principles specific to each alternative, 42 Pa.C.S. §§ 9722-9726, and identifies the factors that weigh in favor of probation, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9722.<sup>4</sup>

By Act of November 26, 1978, the General Assembly provided that the sentencing judge must also consider "sentencing guidelines," to be adopted by the Pennsylv-

nia Sentencing Code. Section 7 provided that the provisions of § 3 were inseverable, and § 8 specified the effective date of the Act and included a sunset provision. The provisions of the Act relating to sentencing were repealed and transferred to Title 42 by the Act of Oct. 5, 1980, P.L. 693, No. 142, §§ 218(a), 401(a). (Act of July 10, 1980, P.L. 513, No. 106, § 3, amended 11th 1873, which became the Act of Oct. 5, 1980.) Section 3 of the Act of 1978, which is being challenged on this appeal, was transferred by § 218(a) and § 401(a) of the Act of 1980 and now is codified at 42 Pa.C.S. §§ 2151-2155, 9781. For convenience, unless otherwise noted, when I refer to the Act of 1978, I am referring to § 3 relating to the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing as repealed, transferred, and amended.

4. In the case of certain offenses, the sentence is not discretionary but mandatory: murder in the second degree, 18 Pa.C.S. § 1102(b) (life imprisonment); certain offenses committed with a firearm, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9712 (minimum must be at least five years confinement); certain offenses committed on public transportation, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9713 (same); certain second and subsequent offenses, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9714 (same); and murder in the third degree when the offender has a prior conviction for murder or voluntary manslaughter, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9715 (life imprisonment).

vania Commission on Sentencing.<sup>3</sup> The Act further provided that until guidelines adopted by the Commission become effective, the judge was to "consider as a guideline in imposing sentence" that certain repeat offenders should "be sentenced to a minimum term of not less than four years imprisonment."<sup>4</sup>

This legislation was the result of widespread interest in the sentencing commission concept. In 1978, the Uniform Law Commissioners' Model Sentencing and Corrections Act proposed a sentencing commission to develop sentencing guidelines, which would be effective following notice and comment rulemaking procedures and filing in the appropriate state office. § 4-110 et seq. Senate Bill No. 1437, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. (1978), which was the subject of considerable debate, also proposed a sentencing commission to develop sentencing guidelines. And just prior to passage of the Act of 1978, Minnesota had created a

Pursuant to this section, there is established an interim guideline for the minimum sentencing of certain repeat offenders.

(a) Until sentencing guidelines adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing and relating to the offenses set out in this subsection become effective pursuant to 18 Pa.C.S. § 1385 (relating to publication of guidelines for sentencing) (repealed; see, now, 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155), when any person is convicted in any court of this Commonwealth of murder of the third degree, voluntary manslaughter, rape, involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, robbery, aggravated assault as defined in 18 Pa.C.S. § 2702(a)(1) (relating to aggravated assault) involving the use of a firearm, arson or kidnapping, or of attempt to commit any of these crimes, and when that person has been previously convicted in this Commonwealth, or any other state or the District of Columbia, or any Federal court, of any of the offenses set forth in this section or their equivalent, sentencing commission to establish guidelines for that state.<sup>5</sup> Since 1978, the sentencing commission concept has gained acceptance in other states and in the Congress<sup>6</sup>, and in 1979, the American Bar Association recommended the use of a commission for setting minimum sentences. Standards Relating to Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures, Standard 18-4.3(c)(ii) (1979).

Under the Act of 1978, the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing is specifically authorized to

- (1) Establish general policies and promulgate such rules and regulations for the commission as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this subchapter and Chapter 97 (relating to sentencing);
- (2) Utilize, with their consent, the services, equipment, personnel, information and facilities of Federal, State, local and private agencies and instrumentalities with or without reimbursement therefor the sentencing court shall consider as a guideline in imposing sentence that such person be sentenced to a minimum term of not less than four years imprisonment.

(j) This section shall expire and be deemed null and void upon the effective date of sentencing guidelines adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing relating to the offenses set out in subsection (a).

See Judicial Administration Felony Sentencing Guidelines, 120 Wis.2d 198, 353 N.W.2d 793 (1984) (holding that the Supreme Court did not have authority to create sentencing guidelines).

(3) Enter into and perform such contracts, leases, cooperative agreements and other transactions as may be necessary in the conduct of the functions of the commission, with any public agency or with any person, firm, association, corporation, educational institution or non-profit organization.

(4) Request such information, data and reports from any officer or agency of the Commonwealth government as the commission may from time to time require and as may be produced consistent with other law.

(5) Arrange with the head of any government unit for the performance by the government unit of any function of the commission, with or without reimbursement.

(6) Issue invitations requesting the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence that relates directly to a matter with respect to which the commission or any member thereof is empowered to make a determination under this subchapter.

(7) Establish a research and development program within the commission for the purpose of:

(i) Serving as a clearinghouse and information center for the collection, preparation and dissemination of information on Commonwealth sentencing practices.

(ii) Assisting and serving in a consulting capacity to State courts, departments and agencies in the development, maintenance and coordination of sound sentencing practices.

(8) Collect systematically the data obtained from studies, research and the empirical experience of public and private agencies concerning the sentencing processes.

9. In addition, the Commission is required to report annually to the General Assembly, the Administrative Office of Pennsylvania Courts, and the Governor, 42 Pa.C.S. § 2153(b), and is granted "such other powers . . . as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subchap-

42 Pa.C.S. § 2153(a).<sup>9</sup>

The Act further provides that the guidelines adopted by the Commission shall:

(1) Specify the range of sentences applicable to crimes of a given degree of gravity.

(2) Specify a range of sentences of increased severity for defendants previously convicted of a felony or felonies or convicted of a crime involving the use of a deadly weapon.

(3) Prescribe variations from the range of sentences applicable on account of aggravating or mitigating circumstances. 42 Pa.C.S. § 2154

Finally, the Act provides the procedure by which the guidelines may become effective. Before adopting any guidelines, the Commission must publish proposed guidelines in the Pennsylvania Bulletin, and hold public hearings, at which specified persons and representatives of specified organizations may testify. 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(a)(1). The Commission must then publish the guidelines, as adopted after such hearings, in the Pennsylvania Bulletin. 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(a)(2). The guidelines must be adopted and published within 21 months of the Commission's first meeting. 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(a)(3).<sup>10</sup> However, when the guide-

The Commission on Sentencing began its work in April 1979, and published its proposed guidelines in October 1980. See 10 Pa. Admin. Bull. 4181-90 (Oct. 25, 1980). After hearings, the guidelines were revised, and in January 1981 they were adopted by the Commission and published. See 11 Pa. Admin. Bull. 463-76 (Jan. 24, 1981). However, in April 1981 the General Assembly by concurrent resolution rejected the guidelines. H. Res. 24 (adopted by House, Apr. 1, 1981; adopted by Senate, Apr. 8, 1981). The resolution "urge[d] and direct[ed]" the Commission to "revise and resubmit" the guidelines within six months.<sup>13</sup> Id. In this regard, the resolution

In October 1981, as instructed by the concurrent resolution, the Commission proposed new guidelines, see 11 Pa. Admin. Bull. 3597-3605 (Oct. 17, 1981), and in January 1982, after hearing and publication, guidelines were again presented to the General Assembly. See 12 Pa. Admin. Bull. 491-50 (Jan. 23, 1982). The Senate expressly approved the new guidelines, S. Res. 227 (adopted by Senate, Apr. 29, 1982), but the House took no action on them within the 90-day period specified in the Act of 1978. 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(c). In May 1982 the Commission announced that the General Assembly had "adopted" the guidelines, and, in anticipation of their effective date, scheduled training sessions for trial court judges. Before one may consider appellant's arguments that the sentencing guidelines are unconstitutional, it is necessary to consider the issue of appellant's standing.

Appellant has no standing to argue that in adopting and promulgating the guidelines as effective, the Sentencing Commission infringed upon the authority of either the General Assembly or the Governor. Cf. United States v. City of Yonkers, 592 F.Supp. 579 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (no standing to raise rights of Congress in case involving statute providing for one-house veto); United States v. Sutton, 585 F.Supp. 1478 (N.D. Okla. 1984) (no standing where veto not exercised, for no showing of injury). To have standing, a defendant must be "affected by the particular feature alleged to be in conflict with the constitution." Commonwealth v. Judge, 287 Pa. Super. 148, 353, 429 A.2d 1143, 1146 (1981). See also Commonwealth v. Haldeman, 288 Pa. 81, 135 A. 651 (1927). Here, appellant has been affected by the allegedly unconstitutional guidelines. Having committed crimes after the purported effective date of the guidelines, July 22, 1982, appellant was sentenced by a judge who in arriving at the sentence, considered the guidelines,<sup>14</sup> as the Act of 1978 required the judge to do. If the judge should not have considered the guidelines, because they are invalid as adopted pursuant to an unconstitutional Act, then appellant has been injured, and he is entitled to be resentenced without reference to the guidelines. In Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2761, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983), it was argued that the appellant lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of a provision in a statute authorizing one House of Congress to veto the decision of the Executive Branch to allow him, a deportable alien, to remain in the United States. The argument was that "Chadha [the appellant] lacks standing because a consequence of his prevailing will advance the interests of the Executive Branch in a separation of powers dispute with Congress, rather than simply Chadha's private interests." Id. at 945, 103 S.Ct. at 2776. Rejecting this argument, the Court held:

13. At the beginning of the sentencing hearing, the sentencing judge specifically noted the recommended guideline ranges for burglary and robbery, see N.T. 10-11 F3, 1-3, and there can be no question that the judge considered the guidelines in the determination of sentence. See slip op. of it. et. al. As required under 204 Pa. Code § 303.1(h), the sentencing guidelines forms were included in the records of both appeals. No. 2803 Philadelphia 1981 and No. 2804 Philadelphia 1983.

Chadha has demonstrated "injury in fact and a substantial likelihood that the judicial relief requested will prevent or redress the claimed injury. . . ." (citation omitted). If the veto provision violates the Constitution, . . . the deportation order against Chadha will be cancelled. Chadha therefore has standing.

This reasoning is equally persuasive here. Indeed, if appellant does not have standing to challenge his sentence as imposed on consideration of invalid guidelines, it is difficult to conceive who would have standing.

In explaining my conclusion, noted at the beginning of this opinion, that Section 1 of the Act of 1978 is unconstitutional, I shall not discuss all of the arguments that have been made to us,<sup>15</sup> for I should find one argument dispositive. This argument may be summarized as follows: The Pennsylvania Constitution provides that the legislative power of the Commonwealth is vested in both Houses of the General Assembly, and may be exercised only with the concurrence of both Houses and after presentation to the Governor. Pa. Const. art. II, § 1; art. III, §§ 1, 4, 5 and 9; art. IV, § 15. The Act of 1978 provides that the General Assembly may reject sentencing guidelines adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing, 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(b), and since a decision to reject sentencing guidelines is an exercise of legislative power, it must be made with the concurrence of both Houses and after presentation to the Governor. However, the Act of 1978 provides for only the concurrence of both Houses. Id. Since this provision is expressly declared to be not severable, Act of Nov. 26, 1978, P.L. 1316, No. 319, § 7,<sup>15</sup> the entire provision of the Act providing for the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing and the adoption of sentencing guidelines must be declared unconstitutional.

14. These arguments include arguments presented by amici, Defender Association of Philadelphia, Public Defender Association of Pennsylvania, and the Pennsylvania District Attorneys Association. Although Pa.R.A.P. 520(a) requires that the Attorney General be notified when the constitutionality of a statute is challenged, and here no such notice appears to have been given, cases in which the Commonwealth is a party are excluded from this requirement. See Commonwealth v. Bitt, Henbaugh, 306 Pa. Super. 409, 452 A.2d 769 (1982).

The Constitution of 1776, Pennsylvania's first constitution, provided for a unicameral legislature and plural executive.<sup>16</sup> No provision for an executive veto was included. To provide a method of checking legislative action, the Constitution required the following:

To the end that laws before they are enacted may be more maturely con-

15. This provision was repealed and added, as modified, by the Act of Oct. 5, 1980, P.L. 691, No. 1-2, § 216(c) (added, as modified) and (d) (repealed).

16. Pa. Const. § 2 (1776) provided that "[t]he supreme legislative power shall be vested in a house of representatives of the freemen of the Commonwealth, or state of Pennsylvania." Pa. Const. § 3 (1776) provided that "[t]he supreme executive power shall be vested in a president and council."

17. The legislature apparently violated both the public notice provision and the "laying over" provision. See A Report of the Committee of the Council of Censors 12-13 (1784). See also Council of Censors, January 19, 1784, in the Proceedings Relative to Calling the Convention

sidered, and the inconvenience of hasty determinations as much as possible prevented, all bills of public nature shall be printed for the consideration of the people, before they are read in general assembly the last time for debate and amendment, and, except on occasions of sudden necessity, shall not be passed into laws until the next session of assembly, and for the more perfect satisfaction of the public, the reasons and motives for making such laws shall be fully and clearly expressed in the preambles Pa. Const. § 15 (1776).

This governmental structure had its critics from the beginning. See generally R.L. Brunhouse, The Counter-Revolution in Pennsylvania 1776-1790 (1942); E. Douglass, Rebels and Democrats (1935); Ryerson, Republican Theory and Partisan Reality in Revolutionary Pennsylvania, in Sovereign States in an Age of Uncertainty (H. Hoffman and P.J. Albert eds. 1981). Critics challenged the effectiveness of the checks on legislative action,<sup>17</sup> but it was not until 1789 that a convention to reconsider the 1776 Constitution was convened. See generally, Ryerson, supra.

The convention resulted in Pennsylvania's second Constitution, the Constitution of 1790. This Constitution, modeled after the Federal Constitution adopted the preceding year,<sup>18</sup> established our present form of government, creating a bicameral legislature<sup>19</sup> and an executive with veto power of 1776 and 1790, at 69-75 (1925). R.L. Brunhouse, The Counter-Revolution in Pennsylvania 1776-1790 (1942); E. Douglass, Rebels and Democrats 269 (1935); A. Nevins, The American States During and After the Revolution 1775-1789, at 152 (1924).

18. Compare the wording of the bicameral and presentment provisions of the U.S. Constitution, art. I, §§ 1, 7, with the wording of the equivalent provisions of the 1790 Pennsylvania Constitution, art. I, §§ 1, 22, 23.

19. Pa. Const. art. I, § 1 (1790) provided: "The legislative power of this Commonwealth shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

er.<sup>20</sup> In Commonwealth v. Sutley, 474 Pa. 256, 378 A.2d 780 (1977), the Supreme Court explained our form of government by saying:

In Pennsylvania we embraced the concept of tripartite government with three equal, separate and autonomous branches in an effort to prevent governmental power from becoming concentrated into a single body. It was believed that each branch would act as a check on the other and by this diffusion of power prevent tyranny where the rights of the individual citizen would be ignored.

It will be recalled that the Act of 1978 provides that sentencing guidelines adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing may be rejected by concurrent resolution of both Houses, without presentation to the Governor, 42 Pa.C.S. § 2155(b), and that here in fact both Houses did by concurrent resolution reject the guidelines adopted by the Commission, with the result that new guidelines were adopted by the Commission. The question must therefore be decided: Was the decision by both Houses to reject the sentencing guidelines an

This provision was not altered in subsequent constitutions: Pa. Const. art. I, § 1 (1838); Pa. Const. art. II, § 1 (1873).

20. Pa. Const. art. I, § 23 (1790) provided: "Every bill, which shall have passed both houses, shall be presented to the governor. If he approve, he shall sign it, but if he shall not approve, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their journals, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections, to the other house, by which likewise it shall be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall be a law. But in such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the journals of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, it exercise of legislative power? For if it was, the Constitution requires presentment, from which it follows that unless it can be severed, the Act's provision that there need not be presentment renders the Act unconstitutional.

Although there is a strong presumption of constitutionality, see Commonwealth v. Robinson, 437 Pa. 49, 428 A.2d 361 (1981), appeal dismissed, 457 U.S. 1101, 72 S.Ct. 2898, 73 L.Ed.2d 1310 (1982), nevertheless, I have no doubt that in rejecting the sentencing guidelines, the two Houses engaged in an exercise of legislative power. It is within "[t]he exclusive power [of the General Assembly] to determine the penological system of the Commonwealth. It alone can prescribe the punishments to be meted out for crime." Commonwealth ex rel. Banks v. Cain, 345 Pa. 581, 587, 28 A.2d 897, 900 (1942). See also Commonwealth v. Sutley, supra; Commonwealth v. Glover, 397 Pa. 541, 156 A.2d 114 (1959). Of course, as to any given offender the determination of the precise punishment is decided by the sentencing judge, that is to say, is exclusively within the judicial power. However, the sentencing judge must exercise this judicial power within the limits prescribed by the General Assembly. Two different sorts of limits may be pre-shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall be a law, unless sent back within three days after their next meeting. This provision was not substantially altered in subsequent constitutions: Pa. Const. art. I, § 23 (1838); Pa. Const. art. IV, § 18 (1873).

Pa. Const. art. I, § 23 (1790) provided: "Every order, resolution or vote, to which the concurrence of both Houses may be necessary (except on the question of adjournment) shall be presented to the governor, and, before it shall take effect, be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of both houses according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill."

This provision was not altered in subsequent constitutions: Pa. Const. art. I, § 24 (1838); Pa. Const. art. III, § 28 (1873), renumbered in 1967, art. III, § 9.

scribed, the first going to the nature and duration of the sentence that may be imposed, the second, to the procedure that the judge must follow in deciding upon the nature and duration of the sentence. While the Crimes Code prescribes the duration of the possible sentence for a given offense, the Sentencing Code prescribes the nature of the sentence that within this limit may be imposed (total confinement; partial confinement; probation; fine; and determination of guilt without further penalty). The Sentencing Code also prescribes the procedure that the judge must follow in deciding upon the nature and duration of the sentence. For example, the judge must consider whether factors identified in the Code as favoring probation are present, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9722; he must order a presentence investigation report, or state of record why he has not, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9731, suspended insofar as inconsistent with Pa. R.Crim.P., Chapter 14; and he must state of record the reasons for his sentence, 42 Pa.C.S. § 9721(b). When the General Assembly by the Act of 1978 provided for sentencing guidelines, it changed the procedure that the sentencing judge had to follow. Specifically, it provided that [t]he court shall also consider any guidelines for sentencing adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing and taking effect pursuant to section 1385 [now 2155 of Title 42] (relating to publication of guidelines for sentencing)....

21. In his opinion Judge WICKERSHAM suggests that "since the guidelines were not in effect at the time of the rejection, the rejection did not change the procedure sentencing judges would follow, but merely maintained the status quo." At 1207 (emphasis in original). The difficulty with this suggestion, however, is that if the concurrent veto was not an exercise of legislative power, what was it? As Professor Goldsmith lay out this point, in his article, INS v. CHADHA and the Nondelegation Doctrine: A Speculation, 35 Syracuse L. Rev. 749 (1983): "If an exercise of the veto was not a 'legislative' act, then perhaps the House had no business exercising it at all." Id. at 751. Also in this regard I note the Supreme Court's affirmation of Consumers Union of U.S., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 691 F.2d 575 (D.C.Cir.1982) (en banc), aff'd sub nom. United States Senate v.

In every case where the court imposes a sentence outside the sentencing guidelines adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing pursuant to section 1384 [now 2154 of Title 42] (relating to adoption of guidelines for sentencing) and made effective pursuant to section 1385 [now 2155 of Title 42], the court shall provide a contemporaneous written statement of the reason or reasons for the deviation from the guidelines. Failure to comply shall be grounds for vacating the sentence and resentencing the defendant.

When by concurrent resolution of both Houses the General Assembly rejected the sentencing guidelines that the Commission had adopted, it again changed the procedure that the sentencing judge had to follow. Without the concurrent resolution the judge would have had to follow the guidelines adopted by the Commission. The concurrent resolution, however, rejected those guidelines as too lenient, thereby prescribing that the sentencing judge was not to consider them, but instead was to consider other guidelines, to be adopted later. This action was as much an exercise of legislative power as was the enactment of the Act of 1978 itself, or the enactment of the Crimes Code, or of the Sentencing Code.<sup>21</sup> The conclusion is therefore that conclude that the provision of the Act of 1978, that such legislative power could be exercised only by the concurrent resolution of both Houses, without presentation to the Governor, is unconstitutional.<sup>22</sup>

Federal Trade Commission; United States House of Representatives v. Federal Trade Commission, 463 U.S. 1216, 103 S.Ct. 3556, 77 L.Ed.2d 1402 (1983). There, the Court of Appeals held that a concurrent veto resolution, which prevented a commission's proposed rule from taking effect, violated procedures established by the Constitution for the exercise of legislative powers. See also Consumer Energy Council of America v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 671 F.2d 425 (D.C.Cir.1982), aff'd sub nom. Power Inst. of America v. Consumer Energy Council of America, 463 U.S. 1216, 103 S.Ct. 3556, 77 L.Ed.2d 1402 (1983) (affirmance of decision holding unconstitutional one-house veto of Commission's proposed rule). Allen v. Governor, 578 F.Supp. 951 (D.D.C.1983) (one-house veto of proposed administrative regulations unconstitutional).

This conclusion is not only confirmed as correct but is required by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, supra. In Chadha, the Court held unconstitutional § 244(c)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, which provided that a resolution by either House would invalidate a decision by the Attorney General to suspend deportation of an alien. The Court reviewed the constitutional prescriptions for bicameralism and presentment to the President, art. I, §§ 1, 7, and concluded that the Framers of the Federal Constitution had decided "that the legislative power . . . [would] be exercised in accord with a single, finely wrought and exhaustively considered, procedure." 462 U.S. at 951, 103 S.Ct. at 2784. It was clear to the Court that the one-House veto was "essentially legislative in purpose and effect . . . (because it) alter[ed] the legal rights, duties and relations of persons, including the Attorney General, Executive Branch officials and Chadha, all outside the legislative branch." Id. at 952, 103 S.Ct. at 2784. In this regard, the Court pointed out that neither House had argued that in the absence of the veto provision, it could have ordered the Attorney General to deport an alien whose deportation had been suspended. The Court summarily rejected "the suggestion that the one-House veto provision . . . either removes or mollifies the bicameralism and presentment requirements" that legislative action must satisfy, observing that "[t]he explicit prescription for legislative action contained in Art. I cannot be amended by legislation." Id. at 957 n. 22, 103 S.Ct. at 2787 n. 22. Since the one-House veto failed to satisfy the constitutional requirements of bicameralism and presentment, the Court held that the provision authorizing it was unconstitutional.

This reasoning is controlling. While Chadha concerned a one-House veto instead of, as here, a two-House veto, that fact is immaterial. See Consumers Union of U.S., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 691 F.2d 575 (D.C.Cir.1982) (en banc), aff'd sub nom. United States Senate v. Federal Trade Commission; United States House of Representatives v. Federal Trade Commission, 463 U.S. 1216, 103 S.Ct. 3556, 77 L.Ed.2d 1402 (1983) (two-House veto unconstitutional). It is equally immaterial that Chadha arose under the United States Constitution instead of the Pennsylvania Constitution. See discussion, subsection a, supra. See also Legislative Research Commission by Prather v. Brown, 664 S.W.2d 907 (Ky.1984) (interpreting Kentucky Constitution); Burstein v. Moral, 438 So.2d 574 (Fla.1983) (interpreting home rule charter); Planned Parenthood Association v. Kansas House of Representatives, 236 Kan. 45, 657 P.2d 622 (1983), which held provisions permitting the legislature to adopt, modify or revoke administrative rules by concurrent resolution without presentation to the governor unconstitutional under the Kansas Constitution. This conclusion was supported by federal and state decisions, 236 Kan. at 61, 657 P.2d at 636, including Chadha, State v. A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary, 606 P.2d 769 (Ala.1980), *Mulvaney v. 22. This case does not raise the issue of the constitutionality of a statute requiring that before they become effective an agency's proposed guidelines must be enacted into law. Cf. 1983 N.Y.Laws 711; Wash.Rev.Code § 9.93A.070(1). Nor does it raise the issue of the constitutionality of a statute requiring an agency to report proposed guidelines to the legislature for their consideration and providing for their effective date at the end of a certain period of time in the absence of an act to the contrary. Cf. Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Act of Oct. 12, 1984, Publ.L. 98-473, Title II, §§ 212, 235, 98 Stat. 2017, Minn.Stat. Ann. § 244.09(12).

The remaining question is whether the unconstitutional concurrent resolution provision of Section 3 of the Act of 1978 may be severed from the other provisions of the section, so that these other provisions may remain in effect.

Under Pennsylvania rules of statutory construction, separate provisions of a statute are presumed severable.<sup>23</sup> However, this presumption is not available, for the Act of 1978 contained an express inseverability clause.

Section 7. The provisions of section 3 [relating to the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing] are not severable and if any provisions thereof or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of section 3 and section 6 [appropriating funds to the Commission] shall be invalid.

Although reworded in 1980, the legislature again provided that the Act was inseverable:

(c) The provisions of subsection (a) [relating to the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing], 42 Pa.C.S. § 9761 (relating to appellate review of sentence), and section 6 [relating to appropriations to the Commission] of the act of November 26, 1978 (P.L. 1316, No. 319), entitled "An

23. The Statutory Construction Act of 1972 provides

The provisions of every statute shall be severable. If any provision of any statute or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the statute, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby, unless the court finds that the valid provisions of the statute are so essentially and inseparably connected with, and so depend upon, the void provision or application, that it cannot be presumed the General Assembly would have enacted the remaining valid provisions without the void one; or un-act amending Title 18 (Crimes and Offenses) of the Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes, further providing for sentencing and providing for alteration of identification marks on personal property," are not severable and if any provision thereof or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of subsection (a), 42 Pa.C.S. § 9781 and such section 6 shall be invalid.

(d) Subchapter G of Chapter 13 (relating to Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing) of Title 18, and sections 7 and 8(a) and (b) [of the 1978 Act] ... are repealed.

These changes were made as part of the JARA Continuation Act of 1980, which transferred sections of Title 18, relating to the Commission, to Title 42. Id., § 218(a).

Although this explicit expression of inseverability is by itself sufficient to overcome the presumption of severability, I have also examined the legislative record for evidence of intent. It discloses that indeed the legislature would not have created the Commission and authorized it to adopt guidelines without at the same time reserving the power by concurrent resolution to reject those guidelines. Thus, Representative Scirica, sponsor of the bill, noted that "[b]efore the guidelines become effective, they have to be submitted in their entirety to both Houses of the General Assembly, and we have 90 days to look less the court finds that the remaining valid provisions, standing alone, are incomplete and are incapable of being executed in accordance with the legislative intent.

1 Pa.C.S. § 1925.

24. An earlier version of the bill, Printer's No. 2164, contained only the following clause:

The provisions of 18 Pa.C.S. § 1386 (relating to appellate review of sentence) are not severable and if any provision thereof or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the section shall be invalid.

them over and to decide whether or not to veto them." Pa House Leg. J., Sept. 21, 1978, at 3131. In 1981, during the debate on the concurrent resolution rejecting the guidelines adopted by the Commission, Representative Reber pointed out that when the guideline enactment went into effect allowing you the right to review this, it had to be for a purpose, and I submit it was just this particular purpose that we do want to look at these, if in fact they come back too lenient.

Pa. House Leg. J., Apr. 1, 1981, at 564.

See also Pa. House Leg. J., Apr. 1, 1981, at 566 (remarks of Rep. Hagarty). And in 1982, while debating the Senate resolution that approved the new guidelines Senator Gekas stated:

We will always have that ability [to reject the guidelines] because the Commission on Sentencing will continue to monitor and report to us and we as a Body will be on top of these guidelines and the sentencing procedures and the whole gamut of the judicial system having to do with sentencing from top to bottom.

Pa. Senate Leg. J., Apr. 20, 1982, at 2160.

(I note in passing that one legislator correctly described the two-House veto as an "end run" around the constitutional requirements applicable to the exercise of legislative power:

I cannot sit down without being critical of the way this whole issue comes before us. It is really being done by an end run and I think the proponents of this very involved sentencing guideline device realize it would have a hard time getting

25. The legislatively-set interim guidelines, see note c. supra, apparently would not be applicable in this case.

26. The question of retroactivity is not strictly before this court. However, given the potential impact of a decision holding the guidelines unconstitutional, I nevertheless address that issue. Compare Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S.Ct. 2858, 73 L.Ed.2d 598 (1982), where the Supreme Court addressed, without explanation, the retroactivity of its decision affirming a District Court holding that Congressional delegation of jurisdiction to bankruptcy judges under the through the Legislature on its own merits.

Pa. Senate Leg. J., Apr. 20, 1982, at 2164 (remarks of Sen. Snyder).

Since the legislature thus made plain its intention that the provisions of Section 3 of the Act of 1978 should be "essentially and inseparably connected," 1 Pa.C.S. § 1925, note 23, supra, the conclusion that the concurrent veto resolution provision of the Section is unconstitutional renders the entire Section unconstitutional. The judgment of sentence should therefore be vacated and the case remanded for resentencing under the Sentencing Code.<sup>25</sup>

-5-

I should not apply this decision retroactively,<sup>26</sup> for I have reviewed the various factors used to resolve the issue of retroactivity, and have concluded that sentences imposed since the effective date of the 1982 guidelines need not be vacated. See Linkletter v. Walker, 391 U.S. 618, 85 S.Ct. 1731, 14 L.Ed.2d 601 (1968); Commonwealth v. Cain, 471 Pa. 140, 369 A.2d 1234 (1977) (aff'd by an equally divided court) (EAGEN, J., Opinion in Support of Affirmance, joined by JONES, C.J., and POMEROY, J.); Commonwealth v. Goffrey, 434 Pa. 532, 254 A.2d 923 (1969); Commonwealth v. Parrott, 287 Pa.Super. 83, 429 A.2d 731 (1981).

A decision that the two-House veto resolution is unconstitutional was not foreshadowed in previous decisions. Indeed, this court has interpreted various aspects of the sentencing guidelines without intimating Bankruptcy Act of 1978 violates Art. III of the Constitution.

Although I should conclude that a decision holding the guidelines unconstitutional should not be applied retroactively, appellants who have raised and properly preserved the issue posed by this appeal—that the guidelines are unconstitutional for lack of presentment of the concurrent resolution—should receive the benefits of such a decision. Cf. Shaw v. Louisiana, — U.S. —, 105 S.Ct. 1065, 84 L.Ed.2d 38 (1985); United States v. Johnson, 457 U.S. 517, 102 S.Ct. 2579, 73 L.Ed.2d 202 (1982).

that fundamental constitutional problems existed in the Act of 1978. See, e.g., Commonwealth v. Rainy, 338 Pa.Super. 360, 458 A.2d 34 (1985); Commonwealth v. Rivera, 338 Pa.Super. 199, 457 A.2d 923 (1985); Commonwealth v. Smith, 333 Pa.Super. 179, 451 A.2d 1365 (1984); Commonwealth v. Royer, 329 Pa.Super. 60, 476 A.2d 453 (1984). The parties have pointed out only two other instances in Pennsylvania law that might pose the same constitutional issue raised in this case,<sup>27</sup> and in these instances, the issue apparently has not been raised. Moreover, until Chadha, there was no indication from the United States Supreme Court that Congress' incorporation of legislative review mechanisms violated the Constitution. See Exxon Corp. v. U.S. Department of Energy, 744 F.2d 98 (Em.Ct.App.), cert. denied sub nom. Energy Reserves Group, Inc. v. Department of Energy, — U.S. —, 105 S.Ct. 576, 83 L.Ed.2d 515 (1984) (Chadha not retroactive in part because Chadha posed issue of first impression not clearly foreshadowed by earlier cases).

In addition, retroactive application of a holding to the effective date of the 1982 guidelines, July 22, 1982, would not further the purpose of the holding, i.e., to preclude continued violation of the presentment provision by the legislature enacting review mechanisms not requiring executive consideration. See Exxon Corp. v. U.S. Department of Energy, supra. It is obvious that my conclusion that Section 3 of the Act of 1978 is unconstitutional does not affect the truth-finding process, which has been a significant fact in determining retroactivity, see Commonwealth v. Cain, supra, 471 Pa. at 162, 164, 166, 369 A.2d at 1245-47 (1977) (EAGEN, J., Opinion in Support of Affirmance, joined by JONES, C.J., and POMEROY, J.), and it does not follow that because a sentence was imposed upon consideration of the guidelines, the sentence was unfair.

Finally, to apply a decision of unconstitutionality retroactively would disrupt the already over-burdened criminal justice system. Cf. Commonwealth v. Cain, supra at 163, 369 A.2d at 1245-46 (EAGEN, J., Opinion in Support of Affirmance, joined by JONES, C.J., and POMEROY, J.). According to the Pennsylvania Commission on Sentencing, 29,908 sentences, on 20,529 separate forms, were reported during 1983, as having been imposed for offenses occurring on or after the effective date of the guidelines. Sentencing in Pennsylvania in June 1984. Cf. Exxon Corp. v. U.S. Department of Energy, supra at 114. These figures suggest the magnitude of the problem if a decision of unconstitutionality were applied retroactively: it would create havoc. Cf. Commonwealth v. Godfrey, supra, 434 Pa. at 536-37, 251 A.2d at 925; Commonwealth v. Oliver, 251 Pa.Super. 17, 22-23, 379 A.2d 309, 312 (1977); Commonwealth v. Lockhart, 227 Pa.Super. 507-08, 322 A.2d 707, 709 (1974).

For each of these reasons, I should hold that the decision that Act of 1978 is unconstitutional should be applied prospectively only.

The judgment of sentence in No. 2502 Philadelphia 1983 should be affirmed.

The judgments of sentence in No. 2603 Philadelphia 1983 and No. 2604 Philadelphia 1983 judgment of sentence should be vacated and the case should be remanded for resentencing in accordance with this opinion.

v.

William G. BOYLE, Appellant.

Superior Court of Pennsylvania

Argued April 9, 1985.

Filed Nov. 22, 1985.

Restaurant owner who was charged with failing to file sales tax returns and make sales tax payments filed pretrial motion challenging jurisdiction of trial court. The Court of Common Pleas of Crawford County, Criminal No. 1984-571, Thomas, J., denied motion and restaurant owner brought interlocutory appeal. The Superior Court, No. 00369 Pittsburgh 1985, Cirillo, J., held that county wherein restaurant was located could not be situs of crime where it contained no branch office for filing of return or payment of taxes, and county court thus had no jurisdiction.

Reversed and remanded.

Before WIEAND, CIRILLO and JOHN-SON, JJ.

CIRILLO, Judge.

Appellant William G. Boyle, an attorney, is owner and sole stockholder of Meadville Foods, Inc., doing business as Palace Fine Foods Restaurant in Crawford County. His residence and law practice is in Allegheny County. The Crawford County restaurant was run by a manager who, in turn, forwarded all paperwork, including sales tax information, to appellant in Allegheny County. Upon receipt of the sales tax data, appellant would prepare the necessary returns himself and would mail or hand deliver the monies due to the Pennsylvania Department of Revenue in Harrisburg (Dauphin County) or the branch office in Pittsburgh (Allegheny County). No returns were allegedly filed or taxes paid for the period between August, 1982 and October, 1983. Appellant was charged in Crawford County with failing to file sales tax returns and make sales tax payments to the Commonwealth in violation of the Tax Reform Code of 1971, 72 Pa.C.S.A. § 7268(b). He subsequently filed a pre-trial motion challenging the jurisdiction of the Crawford County Court of Common Pleas. The motion was denied and an interlocutory appeal was permitted to allow this Court to make the jurisdictional determination.

The sole issue raised in this appeal is whether Crawford County Court of Common Pleas has proper subject matter jurisdiction in this criminal action. We hold it does not and therefore reverse the denial of the pre-trial motion.

The filing of tax returns is governed by 72 Pa.C.S.A. Sections 7219 and 7221 which direct filing to be made at the main office or at any branch office of the Department of Revenue. The importance of knowing where filing was to occur, becomes significant where, as here, we must establish the locus of the alleged criminal conduct. When the locus of the criminal act is discovered, jurisdiction is proper in that district. Pa.R.Crim.P. 21 provides: "All criminal proceedings shall be brought before the March of 1980. The court noted that Jenkins was charged with a crime, was committed to a State hospital for observation under § 19.2-169 with a warrant pending against him, was found incompetent to stand trial, and was committed to the same hospital for care, treatment, and maintenance. He ruled that under such circumstances Jenkins was an "inmate" of either the jail or the hospital and, "as such," there was "no difference" in the period of observation under § 19.2-169, for which the State did not charge, and in the period of hospitalization under Title 37.1, a mere "technical change in commitment," for which a charge was made. We disagree.<sup>2</sup>

We are of opinion that the applicable statutes provide in plain terms that a person is liable for the expenses of his care, treatment, and maintenance when confined to a State hospital pursuant to Title 37.1, even though he previously had been confined to the facility pursuant to Code § 19.2-169 as a person charged with crime.

In addition to the provisions already noted, supra, § 19.2-169 also provided that if a defendant, upon observation, is found mentally incompetent to stand trial

"or requires hospitalization for the treatment of his mental disease or defect, an appropriate court shall commit the accused pursuant to the provisions of § 37.1-67 of the Code of Virginia and, thereafter, the accused shall be subject to the provisions of Title 37.1 with respect to treatment, care, transfer, discharge, and all other applicable sections." (Emphasis added.)

Jenkins was committed twice under that provision pursuant to civil commitment orders entered under Code § 37.1-67.1 et seq., the successors to § 37.1-67. Consequently, having been so committed, Jenkins was

2. On appeal, Jenkins contends the Commonwealth failed to prove certain facts essential to sustain a recovery against him. Such an argument was not made in the trial court and will not be noted for the first time on appeal. Rule 5.21. Also, Jenkins mounts a broadside constitutional attack on the entire statutory scheme under which he was hospitalized. We are unable properly to consider these constitutional

"subject to the provisions of Title 37.1" by virtue of the specific language of § 19.2-169.

Included within Title 37.1 is Code § 37.1-105 which provided, in part:

"Any person who has been or who may be admitted to any State hospital . . . shall be liable for the expenses of his care, treatment and maintenance in such hospital . . ." (Emphasis added.)<sup>3</sup>

The foregoing language, considered with the specific provisions of § 19.2-169, clearly fixes liability upon Jenkins for the two periods of hospitalization in question.

The trial court based its decision on the conclusion that Jenkins was an "inmate" at all times during his stay in the State mental hospital. But the Attorney General points out "that there is no significant difference between the handling [by the hospital authorities] of patients incapable of standing trial and other involuntarily committed patients." He says the only apparent difference was set forth in § 19.2-169:

"[A]t least ten days prior to the unconditional release or discharge of such individual charged with a crime, the facility director shall notify the appropriate court or judge thereof, the appropriate attorney for the Commonwealth and the attorney for the accused of such intended release or discharge."

Thus, as the Attorney General notes, the hospital director could have authorized the patient's unconditional release, provided he notified the appropriate criminal justice authorities. Upon such notice, the clerk of court was required to issue a praecipe to an officer of the court directing him forthwith to bring the person from the hospital facility and commit him to jail or the custody from which he was removed. Code § 19.2-171<sup>4</sup> arguments because they are based, in part, on assumptions of fact which are not supported by the meager oral stipulation in the trial court.

3. In 1982, § 37.1-105 was rewritten. Acts 1982, ch. 50.

4. Code § 19.2-171 was also repealed in 1982. Acts 1982, ch. 63.

Thus, when an accused is civilly committed under Title 37.1, he is not under the direct control of the criminal authorities during his incompetency. Moreover, Code § 37.1-110 defines one involuntarily admitted to a State hospital according to the provisions of Title 37.1 as a "patient." In short, as a practical matter as well as by statutory definition, Jenkins was a patient, not an inmate, during the periods in question.

Consequently, the Commonwealth was obligated to proceed against Jenkins according to the mandate of Code § 37.1-110, which provided, in part:

"Upon the failure of any patient . . . to make payment of [his expenses], and whenever it appears from investigation that such patient, . . . has sufficient estate, or there is evidence of ability to pay such expenses, the Department shall petition [the appropriate court] for an order to compel payment of such expenses by persons liable therefor . . ."

For these reasons, the judgment below will be reversed and the case will be remanded for a new trial limited solely to the issue of the amount due by Jenkins to the Commonwealth for reimbursement of expenses.

Reversed and remanded.

Provision in Public Building Authority Act that Authority could not undertake any project not specifically included in bill passed by majority of General Assembly did not unconstitutionally contravene separation of state legislative and executive powers. THOMPSON, Justice.

The Attorney General, by filing a petition for a writ of mandamus, invokes our original jurisdiction pursuant to Code § 8-01-653,<sup>1</sup> seeking adjudication as to the constitutionality of certain provisions of the "Virginia Public Building Authority Act of nineteen hundred eighty-one" (the Act). Acts 1981, c. 569, Code §§ 21-234.10 to 234.19.

On June 25, 1982, the Comptroller of Virginia (Comptroller) notified the Attorney General of doubts respecting the constitutionality, proper construction, and interpretation of the Act and raised certain questions for consideration by this court. The questions are:

1. Do the provisions of the Act empower the Virginia Public Building Authority (Authority) to undertake financial obligations to construct, improve, furnish, maintain, acquire, and operate public buildings for sale, lease, or conveyance to the Commonwealth which would violate the provisions of Article X, § 9 of the Constitution concerning the creation of debt to which the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is pledged or committed?

2. Does the provision of the Act that the Authority shall not undertake any project or projects which are not specifically included and authorized to be undertaken in a bill or resolution passed by a majority of those

1. Under Code § 8-01-653, the Comptroller may, in those situations where he entertains doubt respecting the constitutionality, proper construction, or interpretation of an act of the General Assembly which directs payment of money out of the state treasury, withhold payment under the act until there has been a final adjudication made by this court. The Attorney General is empowered to file a petition for a writ of mandamus, directing the Comptroller to elect to each house of the General Assembly violate the principle stated in Article I, § 5, and Article III, § 1, of the Constitution that the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Commonwealth shall be separate and distinct?

The essential facts are not in dispute and, as outlined in the petition for a writ of mandamus and accompanying brief, are:

The Authority was established as "a body corporate and politic, constituting a public corporation and governmental instrumentality" for the purpose of "constructing, maintaining, and operating public buildings for the use of the State." The membership of the Authority includes the State Treasurer, the State Comptroller, and five additional members appointed by the Governor. Code §§ 21-234.12, 234.13.

The Authority is authorized to undertake only those projects specifically authorized in a bill or resolution passed by a majority of those elected to each house of the General Assembly. It has the power to (i) acquire, purchase, hold and use real and personal property; (ii) lease as lessor to the Commonwealth (and any of its political subdivisions or agencies), subject to the approval of the Governor, any project constructed by or any property at any time acquired by the Authority; and (iii) acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise, and to construct, improve, furnish, maintain, repair, and operate projects. The Authority is also empowered to fix and collect rates, rentals, and other charges for use of its facilities or projects. Code § 21-234.13.

In furtherance of its purposes, the Authority may borrow money and issue notes, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness and may secure such obligations by the pledge of its revenues, rentals, and receipts pay the moneys as provided in the act. This court is then required to:

Consider and determine all questions raised by the Attorney General's petition pertaining to the constitutionality or interpretation of any such act, even though some of such questions may not be necessary to the decision of the question of the duty of such Comptroller to make payment of the moneys appropriated or directed to be paid

The sum of all its obligations may not at any one time exceed $150,000,000. Id.

Code § 21-234.14 states, in part, that: The principal of and interest on such bonds shall be payable solely from the funds provided in this article for such payment. Any bonds of the Authority issued pursuant to this Article shall not constitute a debt of the Commonwealth, or any political subdivision thereof other than the Authority, and shall so state on their face.

Rents, fees, and other charges for use of the Authority facilities are required to be fixed and adjusted so that the revenues, together with all available funds, will be sufficient to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the Authority's projects, to pay the principal of and interest on its bonds, and to create reserves for such purposes. Revenues received by the Authority may be pledged and assigned to secure its obligations, but the Authority may not convey or mortgage any project or any part thereof as security for its bonds.

The Authority was organized on December 7, 1981. On January 11, 1982, the governing board (Board) unanimously adopted a resolution (the "January resolution") authorizing the acquisition and/or construction of three public office buildings and the lease thereof to the Commonwealth, and issuance of revenue bonds. The Board further authorized its chairman to take such action as may be necessary to obtain the requisite approvals from the General Assembly and the Governor. On June 17, 1982, the Board adopted a resolution (the "June Resolution") which ratified and reaffirmed the January Resolution and approved an outline of financing and plan of lease for the proposed projects.

Specifically, the January Resolution provides for the issuance of approximately $75,000,000 Public Office Building Revenue Bonds to (i) acquire the James Monroe Building (Phases I and II) (the "James Monroe Project") and the Department of Motor Vehicles Building (the "DMV Project"), both now leased to the Commonwealth by the Virginia Supplemental Retirement System (VSRS), and (ii) construct a building for the Commonwealth's Department of Computer Services (the "Computer Services Project"). Each of these projects is located in the City of Richmond. The bonds will be secured by an assignment of all the Authority's rights to rental payments, rates, and fees charged for the use of or for the services and facilities associated with each project. The January Resolution, expressly states that the bonds will be limited obligations payable solely from the revenues pledged for such purposes and that they will not constitute a debt of the Commonwealth or any political subdivision thereof other than the Authority.

James Monroe and DMV Projects. In consideration of the Authority paying to the Commonwealth an amount sufficient to pay the total investment of the VSRS in these projects, the Commonwealth will sell to the Authority for a nominal price the real property and improvements constituting the two projects. As to the James Monroe Project, the Authority will lease it to the Department of General Services for a period of 20 years, with rental payments sufficient to pay annual debt service on the bonds issued to finance its acquisition and to fund adequate reserves and administrative expenses. The DMV Project will be leased to the DMV for a period of two years, subject to automatic renewal for consecutive two-year terms over a twenty-year period.

The Department of General Services is required to request an annual appropriation from the General Assembly in the amount of the succeeding biennial rent payment to provide for the use, occupancy, and maintenance of such project. The two leases provide that upon the termination of the lease in 2002 A.D., fee simple title in the projects remains in the Authority. Both leases also contain clauses providing for early termination should funds for rental payments ever become unavailable.

If the Authority acquires these two existing buildings, the rental cost to the Commonwealth, based on the anticipated tax-exempt borrowing by the Authority at 11% per year, will be approximately $7,919,539 per year, compared with the present cost for the James Monroe and DMV Projects of approximately $9,585,210 per year, for an estimated annual savings for both projects of $1,665,371.

Computer Services Project. For a nominal price, the Authority will acquire real property from the Commonwealth and construct thereon a building to be used by the Department of Computer Services. The lease has a one-year term, with subsequent automatic yearly renewals for a period of 20 years, provided the requisite annual rental payments are always made. These rental payments will be sufficient to amortize the bonds of the Authority issued to acquire and construct the project, to pay for the cost of repairs and operations, and to fund adequate reserves and administrative expenses.

The Authority will enter into a 20-year agency agreement with the Department of General Services to maintain the project, subject to cancellation in the event the underlying lease is not renewed. As with the leases in the James Monroe and DMV Projects, fee simple title in the project remains with the Authority upon the termination of the lease in 2002 A.D. Unlike the other leases, however, there is no clause in the Computer Services Project lease requiring the Department of Computer Services to make an annual request to the General Assembly for appropriations.

1. Are Revenue Bonds, Issued by the Authority, Debts of the Commonwealth in Violation of Article X, § 9, of the Constitution of Virginia?

[1] We hold that they are not. At the outset, we point out that the enabling legislation provides in part that "[a]ny bonds of the Authority issued pursuant to this Article shall not constitute a debt of the Commonwealth, or any political subdivision thereof other than the Authority, and shall so state on their face." (Emphasis added.) Acts 1981, c. 569, Code § 21-204.15. Also, the resolutions of the Authority are to the same effect:

The Bonds will be limited obligations of the Authority payable solely from the revenues pledged thereto pursuant to the Indenture and shall not constitute a debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia or any political subdivision thereof other than the Authority.

In Almond v. Gilmer, 188 Va. 822, 51 S.E.2d 272 (1949), our first case recognizing the Special Fund Doctrine, we approved the issuance of revenue bonds by the State Highway Commission for the acquisition, construction, operation, and maintenance of certain highways, ferries, and bridges. The bonds were payable exclusively from a special fund composed of the revenues derived from the various projects.

We again considered the Special Fund Doctrine in Harrison v. Day, 202 Va. 967, 121 S.E.2d 615 (1961). There, the Virginia State Ports Authority contracted with a railway company to purchase certain of its properties for the purpose of providing new port facilities. As in Almond, this project was underwritten by the issuance of revenue bonds, which, in turn, were payable solely from the revenues derived from the newly constructed port facilities. Once again, both the Act and the bonds expressly negated any obligation by the Commonwealth or any political subdivision thereof to pledge its faith, credit, or taxing power for the payment of the bonds.

In contrast to Almond, however, the Ports Authority, in its contract with the railway, agreed to "urgently request" the General Assembly to make annual appropriations during the term of the lease for the purpose of participating in the cost of the project to the extent of 50% of the loan interest. In his brief, the Comptroller argued that this equated to a "moral obligation" on the part of the Commonwealth to make the appropriations, in violation of the constitutional restrictions on state debt. Referring to the argument rejected in Almond v. Gilmer, supra, this court held that there was no constitutionally prohibited debt even though the "expectation" of these continued appropriations was an essential ingredient in the negotiations between the Ports Authority and the railway. This did not in any way contractually obligate the state to make these appropriations. For the sake of emphasis, we repeat here the quotation in Harrison v. Day, 202 Va. at 976, 121 S.E.2d at 621, from Almond v. Gilmer, 188 Va. at 811, 51 S.E.2d at 279:

It is true that the Commission and the State of Virginia may stand by as benevolent protectors of this enterprise of their creation. The one may allocate any funds not otherwise allocated or prohibited, to aid in its acquisition, maintenance and operation, and the other may make such appropriations toward those ends as it may desire. Yet neither is required to assume such philanthropic role.

Recently, in Miller v. Watts, 215 Va. 636, 841, 214 S.E.2d 165, 169 (1975) we summarized the doctrine as follows:

[N]o constitutionally prohibited indebtedness is created when bonds issued to finance a particular State capital project are to be paid solely from a special fund derived from the revenues of that project; when the legislature is not obligated to appropriate funds for payment of the indebtedness; and, when the indebtedness is not secured by the general faith, credit, and taxing power of the State. [Citations omitted.]

In connection with the constitutional changes, we also said "[The [Special Fund]

2. In this context it is illuminating to consider the comment concerning § 9(d) contained in The Constitution of Virginia, Report of the Commission on Constitutional Revision 119 (Jan. 1, 1979), which states:

Added for the sake of clarity and completeness, this subsection serves to emphasize that the provisions of section 9 operate only when the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is pledged or committed to the payment of an obligation. If an obligation in no way involves the Commonwealth's full faith and credit, then under the proposed section, as is the case at present, the constitutional debt limitations are not relevant. Equally instructive are the relevant passages from A. Howard, Comments on the Constitution of Virginia 1126 (1971), where Professor Howard stated:

9(d) Obligations to which section 9 is not applicable. Section 9(d) was suggested by the Doctrine remains intact and its use is authorized by § 9(d) of the present Constitution." Id. at 841, 214 S.E.2d at 169.

Against this background, the present Constitution of Virginia deals definitively with the subject of state debt:

Article X, § 9 State Debt.

No debt shall be contracted by or in behalf of the Commonwealth except as provided herein.

The revisers obviously had in mind the anticipated growth of capital projects as the Constitution enumerates in § 9(a), (b), and (c) methods by which certain projects can be financed. The Constitution further provides in § 9(d):<sup>2</sup>

(d) Obligations to which section not applicable.

The restrictions of this section shall not apply to any obligation incurred by the Commonwealth or any institution, agency, or authority thereof if the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is not pledged or committed to the payment of such obligation.

Thus, in the language of the document itself, we have one criterion for determining the existence of unconstitutional debt: Is the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth pledged or committed? If not, no unconstitutional debt is created.

The Comptroller argues that the Special Fund Doctrine is not applicable where the

the Commission on Constitutional Revision for the sake of clarity and completeness and was accepted by the General Assembly without change. Section 9(a), 9(b), and 9(c) are all concerned with debt to which the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is pledged. However, since the first sentence of section 9 states that no debt shall be contracted by or on behalf of the Commonwealth except as permitted by the Constitution itself, section 9(d) is necessary in order to make it clear that borrowing by the Commonwealth or by institutions, agencies, or authorities is in no way inhibited by section 9 so long as the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is not pledged. It is therefore up to the Assembly or other competent authority to decide how much borrowing shall take place, for what purposes, and upon what conditions, when the State's full faith and credit is not involved.

fund consists entirely of money appropriated by the legislature. We are aware of no such limitation upon . . . Doctrine. The Comptroller's argument is answered by our holding in Harrison v. Day, supra. The overriding consideration, therefore, is whether the legislative body is obligated to appropriate the funds, not the source or composition of the special fund.

The Comptroller assails the issuance of these revenue bonds as a transparent attempt to evade the constitutional debt limitations. On the basis of our previous decisions, we reject this contention.

II. Separation of Powers.

[2] Code § 2.1-234.3 of the Act provides in part: "The Authority shall not undertake any project or projects which are not specifically included in a bill or resolution passed by a majority of those elected to each house of the General Assembly, authorizing such project or projects."

The Comptroller reasons that this puts the legislative branch of government in the position of deciding which projects shall be undertaken and to that extent is an encroachment upon the domain of the executive branch of the government, forbidden under Article I, § 5, and Article III, § 1, of the Virginia Constitution. He cites Infants v. Virginia Hous. Dev. Auth., 221 Va. 659, 674, 272 S.E.2d 649, 657-58 (1980), where the Virginia Housing Development Act required the Governor to make certain budget information and recommendations available to the General Assembly. We dismissed the constitutional attack, holding that the Governor should include the budget item involved as an agency request rather than a recommendation, and alluded to "the common link" existing between the legislative and executive branches of government. 221 Va. at 674, 272 S.E.2d at 658.

The present position of the Comptroller is equally untenable. In the early part of this century, when a separation-of-powers argument was made against the establishment of the State Corporation Commission, in Winchester & Strasburg RR. Co. v. Commonwealth, 196 Va. 261, 270, 35 S.E. 892, 891 (1906), the court quoted Story's Comm. (5th Ed.) 293, 295:

"When we speak . . . of a separation of the three great departments of government, and maintain that that separation is indispensable to public liberty, we are to understand this maxim in a limited sense. It is not meant to affirm that they must be kept wholly and entirely separate and distinct, and have no common link or dependence, the one upon the other, in the slightest degree. The true meaning is that the whole power of one of these departments should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of either of the other departments; and that such exercise of the whole would subvert the principles of a free constitution . . . Indeed there is not a single constitution of any state in the union which does not practically embrace some acknowledgment of the maxim and at the same time some admission of powers constituting an exception to it."

A similar situation recently arose in New Jersey, except that the legislature there had a power of veto over the projects rather than the right of prior approval. In Emerato v. New Jersey Bldg. Auth., 182 N.J.Super. 58, 74, 440 A.2d 42, 50 (1981), aff'd, 90 N.J. 396, 448 A.2d 449 (1982), the court said:

In the circumstances it is entirely reasonable for the Legislature to have reserved to itself oversight over major projects. Surely the Legislature would be more likely to make the appropriation to fund the rent for a project if it had approved the project and if its presiding officer had approved the leases. Accordingly we view the provision for legislative oversight not as an encroachment on the executive but rather as an adjunct to the Legislature's undisputed power to provide for appropriation of money. The oversight provisions should thus be regarded as an entirely appropriate application of an inherently legislative function. Thus the constitutional requirement for separation of powers has not been infringed.

Where the legislative branch will be called upon to fund the project, in its discretion, we see no affront to executive powers by adding that condition precedent to the statute.

We therefore hold that the revenue bonds proposed to be issued by the Virginia Public Building Authority, as heretofore described, are not state debts in violation of Article X, § 9 of the Virginia Constitution because the full faith and credit of the Commonwealth is not pledged or committed to pay said bonds. We further hold that Code § 2.1-234.3, requiring prior authorization by the General Assembly of any project undertaken by the Authority, does not contravene the separation of powers as required by Article I, § 5, and Article III, § 1, of the Virginia Constitution.

Record No. 811750.

Supreme Court of Virginia

Dec 3, 1982.

Children of patient at sanatorium filed petition for restoration of patient's competency and discharge of his committee. The Circuit Court, Henrico County, Robert M. Wallace, J., ruled against petitioners, and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Thompson, J., held that: (1) ample evidence supported trial court's finding that patient had not regained competency; (2) patient's due process rights were not infringed when he was excluded from the courtroom during the testimony of physicians and sanatorium employees; and (3) it was error for the trial court to allow witness physician to participate in the trial by counsel but such error was not prejudicial.

Affirmed.

1. Mental Health — 170

Ample evidence supported trial court's finding that patient at sanatorium, who had been discharged as an involuntary patient, had not regained competency. Code 1950, § 37.1-134.1.

2. Mental Health — 171

Trial court's determination that patient at sanatorium had not regained competency did not require the same findings of fact as an initial adjudication of legal incompetency. Code 1950, §§ 37.1-128.01, 37.1-128.04, 27.1-134.1.

3. Habeas Corpus — 89

Isues raised by petition for habeas corpus were moot, in view of fact that patient at sanatorium was a voluntary patient who could leave the sanatorium without giving 48 hours notice. Code 1950, §§ 37.1-67.2, 37.1-98, 37.1-99.

Edward G. Modell, Washington, D.C. (Horn & Nash, Washington, D.C., on brief), for appellant.

Beyond oversight through legislative committees, there is some additional room for legislative input into the execution of laws. Certain types of legislative participation create only a minimal danger of the aggregation of power in the legislative branch which the separation of powers seeks to prevent. This is particularly true where the Executive has extensive control pursuant to a statutory delegation of authority and the Legislature has only limited power to reject discrete projects rather than entire schemes of regulation.

In Brown v. Heymann, 62 N.J. 1, 297 A.2d 572 (1972), this Court upheld the constitutionality of the Executive Reorganization Act, which authorized the Governor to prepare an executive reorganization plan and present it to both houses of the Legislature. The statute provided that the plan would take effect unless both houses passed a concurrent resolution within 60 days disapproving the plan. The Court noted the plaintiffs' Presentment Clause claim but did not discuss it, focusing instead on the claim that by delegating too much legislative authority the act unconstitutionally increased the power of the executive branch. The Governor did not challenge the Legislature's veto power.

The Federal executive has also generally supported executive reorganization plans that take effect unless the Legislature votes a resolution of disapproval. See Consumer Energy, 673 F.2d at 458-59; 43 Op. Att'y Gen. 2 (Jan. 31, 1977) (Attorney General Bell) ("the procedures provided in the reorganization statute are constitutionally valid").<sup>4</sup> But see 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 56

4. Similarly, in Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d 1028 (1977), cert. den. 434 U.S. 1009, 58 S.Ct. 718, 54 L.Ed.2d 751 (1977), the Court of Claims upheld a legislative veto provision in the Federal Salary Act of 1967, 2 U.S.C. §§ 351 to 361, pursuant to which the President's recommendations for judicial pay increases become effective unless vetoed by either house of Congress. The court noted that by disapproving the President's recommendations Congress "is certainly not making new law," id. at 1063, and by approving the salary changes they "become effective, just as if a majority in each House had concurred in them and the President approved them (which of course can be assumed in light of his role initiating them)," id. at 1064.

(1933, (Attorney General Mitchell)) ("power to disapprove administrative acts, raises a grave question as to the validity of the entire provision in the Executive reorganization [statute]").

"[G]overnmental powers must be shared and exercised by the branches on a complementary basis if the ultimate governmental objective is to be achieved." Knight, 86 N.J. at 389, 431 A.2d 833. In some of these areas the legislative veto might serve an important function consistent with the separation of powers. However, we cannot allow the Legislature to create oversight mechanisms that will circumvent the constitutional procedures for making laws and interfere unduly with the Executive's constitutional responsibility to enforce them.

Our holding here does not foreclose all legislative veto provisions. Where legislative action is necessary to further a statutory scheme requiring cooperation between the two branches, and such action offers no substantial potential to interfere with exclusive executive functions or alter the statute's purposes, legislative veto power can pass constitutional muster.

The remarkably broad veto power in L. 1981, c. 27, offers almost unlimited potential for law making without the constitutionally required participation of the Governor and for undue interference with the executive branch. For these reasons, we hold that the Act violates the separation of powers and the Presentment Clause.

The Legislative Oversight Act is unconstitutional. It violates the separation of

The Court of Claims in Atkins further noted that the "matter of salaries [is] traditionally within the peculiar province of the legislative branch, not impinging upon presidential functions or veto rights." Id. at 1063. Atkins thus suggests that control over the appropriations process is another area in which additional legislative oversight is appropriate and may sometimes proceed without the participation of the Governor.

powers by giving the Legislature excessive power to impede the Executive in its constitutional mandate to faithfully execute the law. Further, the Act permits the Legislature to effectively amend or repeal existing laws without the participation of the Governor. Foreclosing the Governor from the law-making process offends the separation of powers and the Presentment Clause. This is an exercise of legislative power that the Constitution forbids.

Argued March 22, 1982.

Decided July 22, 1982.

Plaintiff, a New Jersey resident and taxpayer who leased land to the State, brought action challenging the constitutionality of provisions of the New Jersey Building Authority Act giving Legislature a power to veto building projects and lease agreements proposed by the Authority. The Superior Court, Law Division, Mercer County, dismissed the complaint, and plaintiff appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Division, 182 N.J. Super. 58, 440 A.2d 42, affirmed and further appeal was taken. The Supreme Court, Pashman, J., held that: (1) legislative veto provisions in New Jersey Building Authority Act, which limited veto power to approval or rejection of proposed building projects and leases that require continuing budget appropriations by the Legislature and which were limited in scope and did not empower Legislature to revoke at will portions of coherent regulatory schemes, fell within proper scope of legislative oversight of executive action and did not violate separation of powers provision or presentment clause of State Constitution, and (2) since New Jersey Building Authority Act did not authorize creation of any debts by state, debt limitations clause of the State Constitution did not apply to Authority's debts on any obligations of the state on its lease agreements with the Authority.

Affirmed.

PASHMAN, J.

Plaintiff is a New Jersey resident and taxpayer who leases land to the State. He challenges the constitutionality of provisions of the New Jersey Building Authority Act, L. 1981, c. 120, N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.1 to 32, which give the Legislature the power to veto building projects and lease agreements proposed by the New Jersey Building Authority. He alleges that the legislative veto violates the Presentment Clause, Art. V, § 1, ¶ 14, and the separation of powers provision, Art. III, ¶ 1, of the New Jersey Constitution. Plaintiff further alleges that the Act violates the State Con-stitution's debt limitations clause, Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 3. For the reasons stated below, we reject plaintiff's claims and uphold the constitutionality of the challenged provisions.

The Legislature established the New Jersey Building Authority ("Authority") to build and operate office facilities for state agencies. L. 1981, c. 120, N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.1 to 32. The Act authorizes the Authority to issue bonds and notes in an amount not to exceed $250,000,000 to be used to build those facilities. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.14(a). The bonds and notes are entirely the debt of the Authority, not the State. They must state on their face that they shall not create any indebtedness, liability or obligation of the State or any political subdivision. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.14(f).

All actions taken by the Authority must receive the Governor's approval. No action taken at any Authority meeting has any legal effect if the Governor vetoes the action within 10 days of the meeting. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(i).

The Act also contains two provisions that allow the Legislature to veto Authority actions. First, to commence any project whose estimated cost exceeds $100,000, the Authority must obtain a concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature within 45 days of the submission of the project to the Legislature for approval. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.6, 78.8(b). Second, every lease agreement between the Authority and a state agency must be approved by the presiding officer of each house of the Legislature. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.9.

On November 24, 1981, plaintiff filed suit in the Superior Court, Law Division, alleging that the Act was unconstitutional. He claimed an interest in the matter as a New Jersey taxpayer and landowner who leased a building and property to the State for use by the Department of Environmental Protection. The Authority had proposed and the Legislature had approved building projects that might eliminate the State's need for plaintiff's facility.

The suit was filed one day before the Authority was scheduled to execute a contract for the sale of $155,000,000 in bonds. Over plaintiff's objection, the trial court granted respondents' request to schedule a show cause hearing for that same day. At the hearing respondents orally moved to dismiss the complaint. The trial court rejected plaintiff's constitutional claims and granted the motion.

The following day, November 25, 1981, respondents applied to the Appellate Division for an order reducing the time within which plaintiff could appeal the order of dismissal. The Appellate Division granted the motion requiring plaintiff to appeal by November 30, 1981 and submit briefs by December 4, 1981. Plaintiff appealed the dismissal of his complaint and filed a brief in the allotted time. On December 14, 1981 the Appellate Division heard oral argument and affirmed the dismissal. A written opinion followed. 182 N.J. Supr. J. 58 (1981).

Plaintiff filed a notice of appeal with this Court on December 30, 1981, and moved for an interim restraint against the Authority's sale of bonds. The Authority cross-moved for summary affirmance. The Court denied both motions and accelerated the appeal by order dated January 19, 1982.

Constitutionality of the Legislative Veto Provisions of the New Jersey Building Authority Act

In General Assembly v. Byrne, 90 N.J. 376, 448 A.2d 438 (1982), decided today, the Court holds that the Legislative Oversight Act, L. 1981, c. 27, is unconstitutional. By empowering the Legislature to revoke virtually all proposed executive agency rules, the Act intruded excessively upon the Executive's law enforcement authority in violation of the separation of powers. The Act also allowed the legislative branch to effectively amend and repeal existing laws without the participation of the Governor. This violated the separation of powers, N.J. Const. (1947), Art. III, ¶ 1, and the Presentment Clause requirement that "[e]very bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the Governor" for approval or veto. N.J. Const. (1947), Art. V, § 1, ¶ 14.

[1] However, the Court in General Assembly made clear that the separation of powers leaves room for some legislative oversight and participation in executive action. Not every legislative input into law enforcement impermissibly interferes with the Executive's law enforcement power. Likewise, not every action by the Legislature constitutes law making that requires a majority vote of both houses and presentment to the Governor.

Where legislative action is necessary to further a statutory scheme requiring cooperation between the two branches, and such action offers no substantial potential to interfere with exclusive executive functions or alter the statute's purpose, legislative veto power can pass constitutional muster. (General Assembly (at 395, 448 A.2d 439))

[2] The Court finds that the legislative veto provisions in the New Jersey Building Authority Act, L. 1981, c. 120, N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.1 to 32, fall within the proper scope of legislative oversight of executive action. The Act's veto power is limited to approval or rejection of proposed building projects and leases that require continuing budget appropriations by the Legislature. Legislative oversight therefore plays a necessary role in ensuring continuing legislative support for these projects.

At the same time, the veto provisions in the Act are limited in scope and do not empower the Legislature to "revoke at will portions of coherent regulatory schemes," General Assembly, 90 N.J. at 378, 448 A.2d 439. The veto therefore cannot substantially disrupt exclusive executive branch functions. Indeed, the Governor has full control over Authority decision making. Further, even repeated use of the veto has little potential to alter the underlying legislative policy of providing capital facilities to meet internal governmental needs. Nor can it subvert the Governor's role in enforcing the law. The oversight provisions in L. 1981, c. 120, therefore violate neither the

A. The veto provisions' role in furthering the statutory scheme.

The New Jersey Building Authority Act created the Authority and authorized it to issue bonds and notes in an amount up to $250,000,000 to provide facilities for state agencies. Those who purchase these bonds and notes become creditors of the Authority alone and not the State. They have no remedy against the State government because the statute provides that the notes and bonds issued by the Authority are entirely its own obligation. The notes must state on their face that neither the State nor any political subdivision thereof is obligated to pay the principal or interest and that neither the faith and credit nor the taxing power of the State or any political subdivision thereof is pledged to the payment of the principal of or the interest on the bonds or notes. [N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.14(f)]

The Authority's creditors depend on the solvency of the Authority for repayment of the money they have lent. To repay the borrowed money, the Authority in turn depends upon rental payments from the state agencies that lease the Authority's facilities. In fact, the rental fees are calculated to satisfy the Authority's obligations on its bonds and notes. When it issues those bonds and notes, however, the Authority has no enforceable promise that the state agencies will pay the Authority the rent moneys necessary to reimburse its creditors. The statute provides that the payment of any and all rentals or other amounts required to be paid by the [agencies] thereunder, shall be subject to and dependent upon appropriations being made from time to time by the Legislature for that purpose. [N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.22]

The Authority's lenders thus depend upon the good faith of the Legislature in appropriating sufficient money each year to pay the rental fees that are used to repay them. The Legislature's refusal to appropriate the necessary money would not only bankrupt the Authority and force it to default on its obligations, but would also cripple the State's ability subsequently to borrow money for any purpose. The legislators who passed the Building Authority Act therefore sought to minimize the possibility that any future Legislature would refuse to make such appropriations.

One legislative veto provision in the Act gives either house of the Legislature the power to veto any Authority project estimated to cost over $100,000. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.8(b). The other provision enables the presiding officer of either house to veto any lease agreement. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.9. These vetoes advance the crucial purpose of obtaining continued legislative support in two related ways. First, the Act makes certain that every Authority project receives a legislative imprimatur by allowing the Legislature to reject any proposed project at its inception. It follows that if the Legislature does not veto a particular project and thereby approves it, this action will constitute a strong, if not compelling, basis for the Legislature to continue to appropriate sufficient money to support the project.

Second, the legislative veto mechanism can foster close cooperation between the Legislature and the Executive in this area of mutual concern. It can induce the Authority to exercise care in selecting its projects. The veto powers are vested not only in the Legislature but in the Governor as well. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(i). They thus serve to ensure that the Authority acts prudently. Moreover, veto power is only one part of a broader statutory scheme ensuring fiscal prudence. For example, before the Legislature even has a chance to review a proposed building project, the Governor can veto the proposal at its inception. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(i). Similarly, the Authority itself faces extensive requirements before commencing any project estimated to cost over $100,000. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.6. This includes the preparation of a detailed plan describing the project's estimated costs and the anticipated appropriations necessary for all lease agreements. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.6(a). As a further assurance of fiscal prudence, the Act mandates that the Authority's board of directors include the State Treasurer, the State Comptroller and the chairman of the State Commission on Capital Budgeting and Planning. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(b).

The Legislature has the power to fund or not to fund executive agencies and the projects undertaken by those agencies. Each year the Legislature must decide which executive activities it will fund. Legislative oversight has been regarded as particularly important in some situations where legislation authorizes an executive agency to undertake projects that require continued budget appropriations. Cf. Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d 1023, 1023 (Ct. Cl. 1977) (upholding legislative veto power over presidential recommendations for judicial pay increases under the Federal Salary Act of 1967, 2 U.S.C. §§ 351 to 361). The legislative veto provisions in L. 1981, c. 120, enable the Legislature to make those decisions about Authority projects at the most auspicious time possible—before the Authority begins the project. The Legislature's veto power in L. 1981, c. 120, helps ensure that the Authority will undertake financially sound projects in the way the Legislature envisioned when it passed the Building Authority Act.

We disagree with the dissent's contention that the argument for the narrow legislative veto in this case would apply equally to all executive programs requiring legislative appropriations. Post at 451-452. Unlike most funding situations, the approval of a building project and lease agreement locks the Legislature, for all practical purposes, into making continued appropriations. By contrast, in most cases a future legislature can discontinue appropriations if it believes the project funded is no longer necessary. Moreover, the Oversight Act's veto provisions withstand constitutional scrutiny only because they are both necessary to effectuate the statutory scheme and, as discussed below, they offer little potential for interference with executive functions or alteration of the statute's pur-

In sum, the Act's legislative veto provisions serve a necessary role in effectuating a scheme of cooperation between the Legislature and the Executive to obtain capital facilities for state agencies. They serve to assure that these projects will be soundly planned and will operate efficiently with the Legislature's continued fiscal support. Our next task is to consider whether the Act constitutes an undue legislative interference with executive functions or improper legislative policy making without the Governor's participation.

B. The legislative veto's limited effects on the separation of powers.

The legislative veto provisions in L. 1981, c. 120, serve a necessary legislative oversight purpose in ensuring that the projects approved by the Authority will receive continued legislative support. At the same time, the veto offers little of the potential for improper uses that led the Court to strike down the extremely broad veto provision in General Assembly v. Byrne, supra.

Three significant factors distinguish the veto provisions in the Building Authority Act from those in the Legislative Oversight Act that the Court struck down in General Assembly. First, the Governor's full control over the selection of Building Authority projects makes it impossible for the Legislature to usurp executive authority in ways that were possible under the Legislative Oversight Act. Pursuant to N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(i), the Governor has 15 days to veto any Authority decision. The Legislature has absolutely no control over Authority projects unless the Governor first approves them.

A legislative veto in a particular statute may not offend the constitutional allocation of governmental powers if the statute gives the Executive extensive authority in the policy-making process. In Brown v. Heymann, 62 N.J. 1, 297 A.2d 572 (1972), this Court upheld the Executive Reorganization Act, which authorized the Governor to prepare an executive reorganization plan and present it to both houses of the Legislature. The Court found no constitutional infirmity in the Legislature's power to pass a concurrent resolution within 60 days disapproving the plan.<sup>1</sup> See also Atkins v. United States, supra.

Second, because the Legislature's veto power is limited to the rejection of discreet projects and leases, it has limited potential to interfere with executive action. One significant constitutional defect in the Legislative Oversight Act was its potential for "allowing the Legislature to control agency rulemaking." 90 N.J. at 385, 448 A.2d 443. Executive agencies are charged with designing coherent plans to implement existing statutes. Where the Legislature has the power to veto any portion of a coherent scheme of regulation, it can undermine performance of that duty by nullify[ing] virtually every existing and future scheme of regulation or any portion of it. . . . Moreover, the Legislature need not explain its reasons for any veto decision. Its action therefore leaves the agency with no guidance on how to enforce the law. [90 N.J. at 386-387, 448 A.2d 443-444]

By contrast, the veto provision here cannot cause any such disruption. The Legislature cannot veto any arbitrary portion of a proposed Authority project. It must either veto the entire project or let the project proceed. Any "disruption" of Building Authority action in this context is actually part of the legislative scheme and can be considered necessary to further the statutory purpose of ensuring that the Legislature will support the building projects selected.

Moreover, the Legislature cannot coerce the Authority into proposing projects solely on the Legislature's own terms, since the Governor has veto power over every agency decision. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.4(i). The Legislature can forestall Authority action

1. The dissent seeks to distinguish Atkins on the ground that the Legislature there had to affirmatively wield its veto power to block executive action, while here the executive action takes effect only if the Legislature votes to approve ly repeatedly vetoing proposed projects, but it cannot engage in the types of intrusion and disruption that occur when the Legislature has total and arbitrary control.

Third, even repeated use of the veto would not be likely to alter the legislative intent in ways that require presentment to the Governor under the Presentment Clause. N.J. Const. (1947), Art. V, § 1, ¶ 11. In enacting the Building Authority Act, the Legislature clearly did not want the Authority to undertake any project unless it met with both legislative and gubernatorial approval. Exercise of the veto provisions is not inconsistent with the regulatory framework the Legislature has erected to assume tight controls over the selection of Authority building projects and leases.

We recognize that future legislators may veto a particular project that the legislators who passed the Act might have thought desirable. But this type of judgment is fundamentally different from a subsequent legislative nullification of a policy that a former Legislature enacted into law. General Assembly, 90 N.J. at 389, 448 A.2d 445. This crucial difference is illustrated in Consumer Energy Council of America, et al. v. Fed. Energy Reg'y Comm'n, 673 F.2d 425 (D.C.Cir.1982). The potential to interfere with exclusive executive responsibilities or to effectively alter the policy of existing laws without presentment to the Governor, which rendered the Legislative Veto Act in General Assembly unconstitutional, is negligible under the limited veto power in the Building Authority Act.

The above arguments notwithstanding, the legislative veto provisions in the Building Authority Act have some limited potential to interfere with executive functions and allow policy judgments without the participation of the Governor. Although the Legislature clearly intended tight controls over the Authority's selection of building projects, repeated legislative vetoes conceivably would prevent the Authority from commencing any projects at all. This legislative action would effectively repeal the Act without the constitutionally required presentment to the Governor. However, the mere remote possibility of never-ending legislative vetoes is insufficient to invalidate a veto provision that serves an important governmental purpose.

1. We see no relevant distinction for purposes of constitutional analysis since in either instance the Legislature has identical power to impede executive functions.

More troubling is the fact that either house of the Legislature can veto proposed projects. This allocation of power tends to contravene the principle of bicameralism that "[i]n republican government, the legislative authority necessarily predominates [and therefore] . . . [the remedy . . . is to divide the legislature into different branches." The Federalist No. 51 at 338 (R. Luce ed. 1976) (Hamilton or Madison). A one-house veto frustrates "[t]he overriding objective of bicameralism . . . to constrain the exercise of . . . legislative power by making sure that the Legislature can act only where representatives of two different constituencies are in agreement." Consumer Energy, 673 F.2d at 464 (footnote omitted).

The one-person veto provision in N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.9, which allows either presiding officer to veto a proposed lease agreement, exacerbates this problem of concentrating legislative control. In Opinion of the Justices, 431 A.2d 783 (N.H.1981), the Supreme Court of New Hampshire invalidated provisions giving legislative veto power to standing committees and the presiding officers of both houses of the Legislature. The court held that although the "legislative veto is not per se unconstitutional . . . wholesale shifting of legislative power to such small groups in either house cannot fairly be said to represent the 'legislative will.'" 431 A.2d at 788. Cf. Atkins v. United States, 556 F.2d at 1064 (upholding the veto provisions under the Federal Salary Act, but stating that "[i]t is not as if the 'veto' is imposed by one committee of Congress or one member").

A concentration of authority in one house of the Legislature or in one legislator threatens the separation of powers and the principle of bicameralism unless that power is narrowly circumscribed. As we have stated, not every legislative action requires the approval of both houses and presentment to the Governor. The more limited the grant of power, the more concentrated it can be without violating the Presentment Clause or the separation of powers. Here, the delegated authority is narrowly limited. No single house or single legislator is empowered to approve new legislation. No danger of precipitate legislative action is posed. To the contrary, the veto provisions of the Act provide additional checks against Building Authority projects which may in the future prove unwise or unduly costly. The presiding officers have power to disapprove the lease agreements only for building projects that the Legislature has already approved. These lease agreements involve no policy determinations whatsoever; they merely establish rental rates sufficient to allow the Building Authority to repay its bondholders. Thus, the Act's veto provisions, despite their failure to conform with the principle of bicameralism, do not offend the Constitution.

III

The Debt Limitation Clause

[3] We also reject plaintiff's argument that the New Jersey Building Authority Act, L. 1981, c. 120, N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.1 to 32, violates the debt limitations clause of the State Constitution. N.J. Const. (1947), Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 3.

Plaintiff claims that the debts of the Authority resulting from its issuance of notes and bonds are debts of the State, and therefore the procedures in Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 3 must be followed. The Court rejected this argument in Clayton v. Kerwick, 52 N.J. 138, 214 A.2d 281 (1968). In that case, as here, the Legislature created an independent authority empowered to borrow money and issue bonds that were not the liabilities of the State or any political subdivision. In Clayton, the New Jersey Educational Facilities Authority built school facilities with the borrowed money and leased them to

to repay the Authority's creditors. The Court held that the Authority's debts were not debts of the State, despite "[t]he fact that the rentals were admittedly geared to satisfy the bonded indebtedness and enable the State ultimately to become the owner of the buildings," 52 N.J. at 153, 244 A.2d 798.

Similarly, in Holster v. Bd. of Trustees of Passaic County College, 59 N.J. 60, 279 A.2d 798 (1971), the Court upheld the County College Bond Act, under which a county issued bonds whose repayment was expressly subject to appropriations being made by the Legislature. The Court stated:

Although there is doubtless a strong likelihood that payment of the bonds will in fact be met by legislative appropriations, we find nothing in the statute compelling the State to make such payments as a matter of law. Hence, both issuing counties and purchasing bondholders are on notice that the faith and credit of the State will not be pledged in respect of bonds issued pursuant to this enactment, but that payment on the part of the State will be dependent upon appropriations provided from time to time. [59 N.J. at 66-67, 279 A.2d 798]

No relevant distinction exists between the financing schemes upheld in those cases and that in the New Jersey Building Authority Act. The Authority's bonds and notes are not a debt or liability of the State. They state on their face that the State does not pledge its faith and credit to their payment. N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.14(f). Although the Act not only contemplates that the State will make the necessary appropriations but also seeks to ensure this result, supra at 402-403, the State is under no legal obligation to do so. The Authority's creditors have notice that their only remedy lies against the Authority.

Nor does the liability of the State on its lease agreements with the Authority create any debt of the State. Both the statute and the lease make clear that all rent payments from the State are subject to legislative appropriations. Moreover, the State may incur liability for future rentals without violating the debt limitations clause. See Bulman v. McCrane, 64 N.J. 105, 117-18, 312 A.2d 857 (1973). Plaintiff does not contend otherwise.

Since the Building Authority Act does not authorize the creation of any debts by the State, the debt limitations clause, N.J. Const. (1947), Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 3, does not apply to the Authority's debts or any obligations of the State on its lease agreements with the Authority. We have already disapproved the contrary result reached by a sharply divided Court in McCutcheon v. State Building Authority, 13 N.J. 46, 97 A.2d 663 (1953), and now expressly overrule that case.

IV

For the above reasons, the New Jersey Building Authority Act, L. 1981, c. 120, does not violate the separation of powers, Art. III, ¶ 1, the Presentment Clause, Art. V, § 1, ¶ 14, or the debt limitations clause, Art. VIII, § 2, ¶ 3, of the New Jersey Constitution. The New Jersey Building Authority can issue bonds and notes and negotiate lease agreements with state agencies under the procedures set forth in the Act. The judgment of the Appellate Division is affirmed.

SCHREIBER, J., dissenting and concurring.

When tested by the principles decided today in General Assembly v. Byrne, 90 N.J. 376, 448 A.2d 438 (1982), the New Jersey Building Authority Act, N.J.S.A. 52:18A-78.1, et seq., includes a classic example of a violation of the state constitutional requirement of separation of powers by enabling the Legislature to control an executive agency's essential functions. The Legislature has refined this intrusion by vesting each of its components, the Senate and Assembly, as well as their individual leaders, with the power to thwart the agency's ability to execute the law. It has thereby violated the constitutional structure of bicameralism. Lastly, the Act implicitly violates the Presentment Clause of the Constitution, which requires submission to the governor for his approval or disapproval before a law can become effective.

Whether a power is executive, legislative or judicial is not always clear. In some situations the subject may be deemed to have the characteristic of more than one type of power. For example, some rules of evidence are distinctly procedural in nature and may be promulgated by the judiciary. Others have a much more substantive gloss and may be more appropriately enacted by the Legislature. See Evidence Act of 1960, L. 1960, c. 52. When that occurs, a sharing of power may be appropriate. See Knight v. Margate, 86 N.J. 374, 388-89, 431 A.2d 823 (1981). In other situations it may be fitting for one branch of government to exercise a power traditionally belonging to another. Thus, in executing and administering a law, the executive branch of government may legislate by adopting rules and may adjudicate by resolving adversarial interests. A third category is illustrated by one branch being called upon to perform an act incidental to a function belonging to another branch of government. Thus, the Chief Justice has been given the power to designate certain public trustees of the Prudential Insurance Company although execution of the insurance laws is an executive prerogative.

However, an outer limit of all these intrusions is that none may undermine the independence and integrity of a branch of government or that branch's ability to exercise the constitutional check with which it has been endowed. See Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 292-93, 47 S.Ct. 21, 84-85, 71 L.Ed. 160, 242 (1926) (Brandeis, J., dissenting). Examination of the problem before us should be made with these underlying principles in mind.

The New Jersey Building Authority (Authority) resembles numerous other agencies charged with carrying out their respective laws. The Authority, a corporate body, has been placed within the Department of the Treasury. It has 12 directors, including the State Treasurer, Comptroller of the Treasury, and Chairman of the Commission on Capital Budgeting and Planning, three being members ex officio. The Governor appoints the remaining nine directors, two of whom are to be recommended by the President of the Senate and two by the Speaker of the General Assembly. The directors have four-year terms, except that those recommended by the legislative leaders may serve only during the two-year legislative term in which they are appointed. Any action taken by the Authority requires at least seven affirmative votes. All such action must be reflected in the minutes of the meeting and are subject to a gubernatorial veto.

The Authority's general powers are typical of regulatory agencies. It may adopt by-laws and an official seal, sue and be sued, and enter into contracts necessary or incidental to the performance of its duties. Its reason for existence is to provide office space for state agencies. To accomplish this the Authority is authorized to raise the necessary capital funds by issuing bonds and notes, the aggregate principal amount not to exceed $250,000,000 at any time. The State has no direct obligation to pay this debt, although the state agencies have an obligation to pay the rents under the leases that they enter into with the Authority and which rents are to be pledged to secure the bonds and notes.

The Authority is authorized to construct and improve office buildings necessary or convenient for the operation of any state agency. It must decide if a project is feasible. The Governor, however, can veto any project. If he does not and the costs are $100,000 or less, the Authority may proceed. However, if the costs are greater, the report proposing the project must be submitted to the Legislature. The Authority cannot proceed unless both the Senate and Assembly adopt resolutions of approval. Even if the Legislature has sanctioned the proposal, the President and the Speaker of the General Assembly must approve each lease made by a state agency with the Authority.

Separation of Powers

concern of the Founding Fathers that the Legislature might arrogate unto itself undue power. This concern and a desire to facilitate the administration of government by having the executive, rather than the Legislature, handle the details involved in administering and executing the laws are the primary reasons for the separation of powers implicit in the Federal Constitution and expressly set forth in the State Constitution in Art. III, par. 1.

A violation of the constitutional separation of powers precept occurs when, as stated in General Assembly, there is "unwarranted legislative interference with the executive branch and excessive legislative law-making power" so that the Legislature "can gravely impair the functions of the agencies charged with enforcing," administering and executing the statutes. General Assembly v. Byrne, 90 N.J. at 285, 448 A.2d 443. Legislative interference can violate the goals of a statute. This is particularly so when the legislative veto overrides a central or essential component of the executive authority. Moreover, "[t]he Legislature cannot [lawfully] pass an act that allows it to violate the Constitution." Id. at 391, 448 A.2d at 446. Professor Bickel expressed a similar thought in his testimony before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Committee of the Judiciary:

[T]he constitutional separation of powers is not ordained for the convenience of the separate branches of the Government, as they may from time to time conceive it, but is intended to insure observance of certain principles which the framers believed would conduce to effective and responsible Government consistent with the liberties of the people. Hence neither the Congress nor the President may choose to suspend these principles when convenient. [Congressional Hearings, September 15, 1967, at 247] standards under which it is to approve a project to house another state agency or to determine the project's financial feasibility. Yet, the Legislature has retained control over the heart of the Authority's reason for being. It is the Authority, subject to the Chief Executive's approval, that determines whether a project is feasible and should be effectuated. But still the project cannot move forward without the approval of each house of the Legislature. What could constitute greater legislative control over an executive department of government!

The majority contends that legislative approval of a project will constitute "a strong, if not compelling, basis for the Legislature to continue to appropriate sufficient money" throughout all future years, to pay the rent required under the leases. Ante at 452. It argues that the approval of a project and lease agreement "locks the Legislature, for all practical purposes, into making continued appropriations." Ante at 453. It is one thing to appropriate dollars annually and quite another to bind one's self ahead of time to make appropriations. Obviously, the Legislature that approves a project in 1982 does not control future Legislatures. This is particularly evident when Legislatures must appropriate funds each year to enable tenants to pay their rents throughout lease terms as long as 35 years. Legislatures are not bound as courts are by precedent; yet even the judiciary is not "locked in." See, e.g., Schaal v. Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Ass'n, 72 N.J. 237, 370 A.2d 449 (1977), overruled in State v. Celmer, 80 N.J. 405, 418, 404 A.2d 1 (1979).

More importantly whether the Legislature exercises the discretion to finance or not to finance governmental operations cannot justify a legislative intrusion into the executive power. Stating the proposition demonstrates its inherent weakness. Legislative control over appropriation purse strings does not warrant violation of the constitutional separation of powers. Otherwise the Legislature could through this mechanism direct the operations of all executive functions. Neither the Legislature's surrender of its appropriation authority, which is questionable to say the least, nor its exercise of that authority entitles the Legislature to assume a power in contravention of the Constitution. The contention that the Legislature's appropriation power entitles it to share in the executive function of formulating and planning housing projects entrusted to the Authority is not sound.

Bicameralism and Legislative Delegation of Power

The Constitution vests the legislative power in a Senate and General Assembly. N.J. Const. (1947), Art. IV, § 1, par. 1. The 1966 Constitutional Convention rejected a move to change to a unicameral legislature because of the constraint that bicameralism imposes upon the exercise of legislative power. Our constitutional provision is modeled after the federal scheme, both serving the same purposes. It is pertinent, therefore, to note Judge Wilkey's comments in Consumer Energy Council of America v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 673 F.2d 425, 464 (D.C.Cir.1982):

The overriding objective of bicameralism, then, is to constrain the exercise of the federal legislative power by making sure that the Legislature can act only where representatives of two different constituencies are in agreement.

See also The Federalist, No. 51 (J. Madison).

We have seen that either house of the Legislature can amend the Building Authority Act by vetoing projects approved by the executive branch of the government. Thus, one body may determine whether a duly enacted statute should be administered, this in defiance of the constitutional mandate that both the Senate and General Assembly must approve every bill. See N.J. Const. (1947), Art. V, § 1, par. 14(a).

As the Senate may not delegate its legislative power to the General Assembly, so, too, neither the Senate nor the General Assembly may delegate its legislative authority to a smaller body. It is obvious that the Senate could not delegate to a committee of its members the right to pass a bill. This can be done only by a majority of its members. Therefore, neither the Senate nor the General Assembly has the authority to delegate to its respective presiding officers the authority to approve each lease to be entered into between a state agency and the Authority. No standards or guidelines bind these legislative officers. Either could negate a proposed lease and doom to failure a project approved by the Authority, the Governor, and even the Legislature.

Springer v. Philippine Islands, 277 U.S. 189, 48 S.Ct. 480, 72 L.Ed. 845 (1928), has long been the leading opinion in this area of the law. There the Supreme Court struck down a statute vesting authority in the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Philippine Islands to vote government-owned stock in the Philippine National Bank, observing:

Legislative power, as distinguished from executive power, is the authority to make laws, but not to enforce them or appoint the agents charged with the duty of such enforcement. The latter are executive functions. It is unnecessary to enlarge further upon the general subject, since it has so recently received the full consideration of this court. Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 47 S.Ct. 21, 71 L.Ed. 160.

Not having the power of appointment, unless expressly granted or incidental to its powers, the legislature cannot engraft executive duties upon a legislative office, since that would be to usurp the power of appointment by indirection; though the case might be different if the additional duties were devolved upon an appointee of the executive. [Id. at 202, 48 S.Ct. at 482, 72 L.Ed. at 849]

Neither house of the Legislature may create effective legislation alone. Nor may it delegate essential executive or legislative duties to the Senate President or Speaker of the Assembly. The New Jersey Building Authority Act contravenes these principles.

III

Presentment Clause

Another important constitutional check on the legislative power is found in the Presentment Clause. N.J. Const. (1947), Art. V, § 1, par. 14(a). Every bill passed by both houses must be presented to the Governor. If he approves, it becomes law. If not, the Legislature may reconsider the matter and then, if two-thirds of each house votes for passage, the bill becomes law. The Presentment Clause serves two purposes. It protects the executive from an overreaching legislative power that could effectively thwart the executive in performing his constitutional charge of executing the laws. See The Federalist, No. 73 (A. Hamilton). The second purpose is to prevent hasty or imprudent legislation. It has also served as a means of expressing the policy of the chief executive, the only official elected statewide.

The legislative action under the Building Authority Act is essentially legislative in nature.<sup>1</sup> Even if it is contended that when the Legislature disapproves a project, it acts as an administrative agency, much as that agency itself acts when it declines to approve a project, that would violate the separation of powers. When the Legislature approves a project, its action is more akin to acting in a legislative capacity. It need follow no standards or criteria, other than constitutional ones. However, both approval and disapproval by the Legislature involve the Senate and General Assembly in a legislative review mechanism. This mechanism can be utilized only in accordance with the constitutional scheme. That scheme requires conformance with the Presentment Clause. There is no other way in which the Legislature may act legislatively. See In re N.Y. Susquehanna &

1. One commentator has stated "since the Constitution plainly requires presidential participation in the exercise of legislative power, a power must be classified as non-legislative to justify its exercise by Congress or one of its branches in a way other than that prescribed." R. W. Gixanne, "The Control of Federal Administration by Congressional Resolutions and Committees," 66 Harv. L. Rev. 569, 593 (1953).

Western R.R. Co., 25 N.J. 343, 136 A.2d 408 (1957) (concurrent resolution may express opinion, but lacks operative effect of legislation).

It is no answer to say that the Governor had previously approved the project and therefore the Presentment Clause has not been violated. Otherwise, the Legislature could always seek proposals from the Governor and thereafter adopt them without presentment to the Governor. No one would seriously claim that such an adoption would constitute duly enacted legislation. The Constitution contemplates the Governor will act after the Legislature has completed its deliberations, not before. Legislative hearings might disclose facts or reasons that impel the executive to change his position. Sanction of a plan having prior gubernatorial approval and elimination of the presentment of the act after passage by the Legislature reverses the constitutional scheme of the legislative check and power placed in the executive—and without any valid reason. Cf. Justice Mountain's comment in Vreeland v. Byrne, 72 N.J. 292, 304-05, 370 A.2d 825 (1977), in which he advocates literal compliance with constitutional provisions governing details of governmental administration. Neither the Governor nor the Legislature may choose to suspend constitutional procedures.

IV

Some recent judicial opinions that have carefully considered these problems of presentment, separation of powers and bicameralism have declared legislative attempts to circumvent these provisions invalid. See Consumer Energy Council of America v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 673 F.2d 423 (D.C. Cir. 1982);<sup>2</sup> Chalthe

2. Judge Wilkey's opinion contains a comprehensive discussion of the Presentment Clause, bicameralism, and separation of powers. 673 F.2d at 461-75. He held that the provision authorizing either house of Congress to disapprove a regulation of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, 15 U.S.C. §§ 3301-3342, was unconstitutional for several reasons. Congress could not create a device enabling it

The only recent decision of this Court which relates to this subject is Brown v. Heymann, 62 N.J. 1, 297 A.2d 572 (1972). However, that decision did not discuss the problems presented in this case. The issue in Brown was whether the Executive Reorganization Act of 1969 "so enhance[d] the executive power as to threaten the security against aggregated power which the separation-of-powers doctrine was designed to provide." Id. at 10, 297 A.2d 572. The Court answered that proposition in the negative. The statute authorized the Governor to prepare a reorganization plan of executive departments and to submit each plan to the Legislature. If the Legislature did not pass a concurrent resolution opposing the plan, it would become effective. See N.J. S.A. 52:14C-7(c). It was observed that the Legislature could express only disapproval. No affirmative legislative action was needed to have the plan become law. This is to be differentiated from the Building Authority Act under which the Legislature must act affirmatively before the project is effective and presiding officers of each house must approve leases that are essential to the realization of a project.

I sympathize with what the Legislature is seeking to accomplish in reviewing actions of administrative agencies. However, it is not without recourse. The Legislature to control agency rulemaking, the Presentment Clause was evaded because the President had had no opportunity to exercise his right of veto, the constitutional requirement of bicameralism was violated because one house could affect the validity of the regulation, congressional expansion of its role to one of shared administration of the law contravened separation of powers, and the entire scheme adversely affected the constitutional system of checks and balances.

The majority, in considering this opinion, has isolated one point in Judge Wilkey's discussion could, of course, express its views during rulemaking hearings under the Administrative Procedure Act. It has also been suggested that the Legislature could require that rules would not become effective for a period of thirty days so that the Legislature could, if it so desired, pass a statute within that time nullifying or modifying proposed regulations. See Watson, "Congress Steps Out: A Look at Congressional Control of the Executive," 63 Calif. L. Rev. 983, 1000-61 (1975). It has also been proposed that the Legislature's direction should perhaps be to do more reviewing of what the administrative agencies are doing and then rewriting the laws in light of their administration, rather than reshaping and redirecting the administration of its laws. I am certain there are many other legislative oversight mechanisms that will fulfill the Legislature's desire that the laws be interpreted in accordance with its intent.

Though I believe those sections of the Building Authority Act relating to legislative concurrence in the Authority's projects and approval of the leases by the presiding officers of each legislative house are invalid, I am of the opinion that the balance of the statute may stand. Paragraph 31 of the Act evidences a broad legislative intent to that effect:

If any clause, sentence, paragraph, section or part of this act shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, the judgment shall not affect, impair or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, section or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which the judgment shall have been rendered.

as crucial, that is, that the subject matter involved a "basic policy judgment." The opinion is not so circumscribed. However, even that standard does not differentiate this case. Here the Authority is making basic policy decisions with respect to where a state governmental body should be located, the adequacy of the facilities, and the costs involved. Though these policy decisions are different from whether incremental pricing should apply to boiler fuel, both the Authority and FERC have been entrusted with basic policy decisions within their respective substantive spheres.

I agree with the majority that the debt limitation clause, Art. VIII, § 2, par. 3, has not been violated, although this is a close question because of the State's obligations under the leases.

I join in the judgment that the sale of the bonds in the principal amount of $135,000,000 under the New Jersey Building Authority Act, as modified, would not violate the New Jersey Constitution.

v.

HORSEMEN'S BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
Defendant-Respondent.

Supreme Court of New Jersey.

Argued March 9, 1982.

Decided July 27, 1982.

Owners of thoroughbred racehorses brought action challenging, as unconstitutional special law, statutory designation of regional division of national nonprofit horsemen's organization to receive percentage of purse money from thoroughbred horseracing in state. The Superior Court, Chancery Division, concluded that special law provisions of New Jersey Constitution had not been violated. Direct certification was granted, and the Supreme Court, Pollock, J., held that: (1) interest of horseowners in winnings of their horses was sufficient "additional private interest" to accord them standing; (2) participation of Attorney General as amicus curiae adequately protected interests of state; (3) statutory distinction, because of national organization's rules, in allocating benefits between members and nonmembers of organization bore no rational relationship to any legitimate public purpose; (4) to free statute from constitutional defects, organization's rules would be required to yield to legislative purpose of aiding racing personnel; and (5) regional division's statutory advantage, as recipient of funds, was not tantamount to unconstitutional "exclusive privilege."

Modified and affirmed.

STEPHENS, Chief Justice.

The basic issue we address is to what extent, if any, the General Assembly of the Commonwealth may, in adopting a budget bill and acting on the financial condition of the Commonwealth provide therein for the reduction, termination and transfer of appropriations, and for all practical purposes, provide as a result thereof, that the effect of certain existing statutes be temporarily modified.

BACKGROUND

At its regular session in 1984, the General Assembly passed a biennial budget bill.

This document appropriated the revenue for the Commonwealth and determined that revenue would be expended for the operation, maintenance and support of the three branches of state government and the myriad of ancillary state agencies and programs.<sup>1</sup> This document, included a reduction in appropriations for various salary increases and transfers of funds from trust and agency accounts to the General Fund to cover central administrative expenses.

In addition, at the same session the General Assembly passed corollary legislation<sup>2</sup> which conferred upon the General Assembly the authority to provide, in a budget bill, for the suspension or modification of the operation of an existing statute if the General Assembly found that such action is required by the financial condition of state government.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The appellant, Attorney General of the Commonwealth, on June 6, 1984 filed a petition for declaratory judgment in the Eastern Circuit Court challenging the constitutional validity of those legislative acts.<sup>3</sup> Basically, the petition claimed that the legislative enactments violated the provisions of Section 51 of the Kentucky Constitution, both as to the germaneness of the titles of the acts and as to the failure to follow the procedural requirement of Section 51 for the enactment and publication of amendments to existing law. A temporary restraining order was entered by the trial judge which prevented various officials in the Executive branch of government from transferring funds from certain designated trust and agency funds<sup>4</sup> and other special accounts to the general operating fund of the Commonwealth. Following normal briefing and arguments, the trial court entered its findings of fact, conclusions of law and declaratory judgment. A notice of appeal was timely filed by the Attorney General and upon appropriate motion, and for obvious reasons, we transferred the appeal directly to this Court.

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Stephens was sued in his official capacity. He resigned the position of Secretary of the Finance and Administration Cabinet, and the Attorney General of Kentucky has appointed Gordon C. Stephens to that office.

DECISION OF THE TRIAL COURT

In rejecting the contentions of the Attorney General in the main, the trial court declared that the General Assembly has, under Ky. Const. Secs. 15 and 51, the authority to "suspend existing laws in a budget bill if the provision is germane to the broad subject of appropriations." It further declared that the procedural requirements of Ky. Const. Sec. 51 were not applicable to the challenged statutes because they only effected a "suspension" of existing statutes and were not an "express or implied repeal" of existing statutes.

The trial court also upheld the General Assembly's authority to suspend previously authorized salaries, trust and agency funds.<sup>5</sup> It declared certain transfers of funds invalid because they accomplished more than "the mere suspension of existing statutory provisions" and because they were not "germane" to appropriations within the aegis of Kentucky Constitution Section 51.<sup>6</sup> The former ruling is before us on appeal, the latter is not.

6. Specifically the trial court approved the transfer of funds in the following areas: Board of Elections; Kentucky Development Finance Authority; University of Kentucky; Banking and Securities; Fish and Wildlife Resources; Road Fund; Capital Construction of Road Fund; Education and Humanities; Local Jail Support (medical contracts).

7. Those declared invalid were: Unified prosecutorial system, only insofar as it provides that a county or a circuit will receive funds proportional to the state's total criminal case load; Auditor of Public Accounts, only insofar as it imposes additional duties on the Auditor; Corrections, only, insofar as it creates a scheme for

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES

The appellant urges us to reverse the trial court because of what he maintains is an erroneous and "cryptic analysis" by the trial court of Sections 51 and 15 of the Kentucky Constitution. In essence, appellant argues that the titles to the two acts in question do not pass Section 51's constitutional requirement that the content of the act be germane to the title thereof. The Attorney General also urges us to declare as error the ruling that the procedural requirement of Section 51 does not apply to a "suspension" of existing statutes. Further, appellant argues the trial court erroneously concluded that Section 15 of the Kentucky Constitution permitted the statutory suspension and modification contained in HB 474. Finally, it is argued that the trial court erroneously applied the "germaneness" test of Section 51 to the various provisions of the acts in question.

THE CHALLENGED STATUTES

SB 294 provides as follows:

"(1) Nothing in a budget bill adopted by the general assembly shall be construed to effect a repeal or amendment in the Kentucky Revised Statutes, and if any repeal or amendment appears to be effected in any of the Kentucky Revised Statutes, it shall be disregarded, shall be null and void, and the law as it existed prior to the effective date of the budget bill shall be given full force and effect.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section the general assembly may provide in a budget bill for the suspension or modification of the operation of a statute if the general assembly finds that the financial condition of state government requires such suspension or modification. Such suspension or modification shall not extend beyond the duration of the budget bill." (emphasis added).

investigating and reporting on community and private corporate availability of correctional services; Department of Social Services, only insofar as it exempts certain personnel from

It is clear from the plain language of the statute that in Section (1) the General Assembly deprives itself of the legal authority to repeal or amend, through the device of a budget bill, any other existing law appearing in the Kentucky Revised Statutes. However, in Section (2), the General Assembly gives itself the power to suspend or modify the operation of any statute, but only if the financial condition of state government so requires. The duration of such suspension is limited to the duration of the budget.

The General Assembly has, by this statute, drawn a line between its power in the budget bill to suspend or modify existing statutes, as opposed to repealing or amending existing statutes. It cannot repeal or amend, but it can suspend or modify existing statutes through the provisions of a budget bill.

Armed with this legislation, the General Assembly, in its biennial budget bill for the years 1984-1986, exercised this authority by drafting items relating to the reduction of increases in state officials' salaries, items providing for the transfer of monies from agencies and special funds to the states' general fund and items qualifying funds for resource recovery road projects, school books, and local jail support.

It is our role to determine if SB 294 may constitutionally permit the General Assembly to suspend or modify the operation of existing statutes; if the answer is in the affirmative, to further determine if both SB 294 and the budget bill comply with the requirements of the title section of Kentucky Constitution Section 51. If the answer to the second inquiry is in the affirmative we must, finally, examine each contested "modification or suspension" contained in the budget bill to determine if such actually constitutes a repeal or amendment, or if each is only a modification or suspension within the purview of SB 294(2) and of the re-enactment and pub-

DOES THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY HAVE THE POWER IN THE BUDGET BILL TO SUSPEND OR MODIFY EXISTING STATUTORY LAW?

(1) As stated, SB 294, while denying the power of the General Assembly to repeal or amend existing statutory law through the device of a budget bill, did not authorize that legislative body to provide in a budget bill for the suspension or modification of the operation of a statute. No matter how one slices it, the General Assembly is permitted through the reduction or elimination of an appropriation to effectively eliminate the efficacy of existing statutes, subject only to the finding of a financial emergency and further subject to the time limitation of the budgetary period.

We believe that this statutory scheme is clearly within the constitutional powers of the General Assembly.

It is clear that the power of the dollar—the raising and expenditure of the money necessary to operate state government—is one which is within the authority of the legislative branch of government. The Constitution of the Commonwealth so states and we have so stated. Kentucky Constitution Section 230, is as follows:

"No money shall be drawn from the State Treasury, except in pursuance of appropriations made by law."

The purpose of this section is to prevent the expenditure of the state's money without the consent of the General Assembly. Ferguson v. Oates, Ky., 314 S.W.2d 518 (1958). As we said in Legislative Research Commission v. Brown, Ky., 664 S.W.2d 907 (1984),

"The budget, which provides the revenue for the Commonwealth and which determines how that revenue shall be spent, is fundamentally a legislative matter.... Ky. Const. Sec. 49-50 empowers the General Assembly to contract debts; and Ky. Const. Sec. 53 empowers the General Assembly to provide for investigations into the accounts of the Treasurer and Auditor of Public Accounts.

... In a word, the final action on the enactment or adoption of the budget is a legislative matter. It is, of course, the duty of the Governor to carry out and to implement the budget which is passed by the General Assembly. Ky. Const. Sec. 81." Id. at 925. (emphasis added).

In Brown, we approved a legislatively mandated budget reduction plan applicable to all three branches of state government, the operation of which was triggered when a state revenue shortfall occurred.

Also in Brown we declared invalid a statutory provision that required the budget be submitted as a resolution, as opposed to the mandate of Kentucky Constitution Section 83 that it be presented as a bill. Significant to the issue in the case sub judice, we declared

"When the budget is enacted as a bill, the provisions thereof could repeal existing statutes. But if the budget document is introduced in the form of a resolution, it can not have the effect of repealing any existing statutes." Id. at p. 927. (emphasis added).

We thus twice stated that a budget bill could be used to repeal existing statutes.

Our statement there should not come as any surprise when one considers our previous decisions. In Mattingly v. Kirtley, 285 Ky. 795, 149 S.W.2d 521 (1941), a statute enacted in 1920 established a State Board of Athletic Control and authorized a $5,000.00 appropriation for the Board's operating expenses. That amount was not changed by a repeal of or an amendment to the statute. In the 1940 Budget Act, the appropriation to the Board was increased to $6,500.00. A suit was then filed seeking a determination of which amount was proper. The Court of Appeals gave effect to the "last word" of the General Assembly as expressed by the 1940 increased appropriation and permitted an amendment of the 1920 bill by the 1940 Budget Act. Id. at 523. Mattingly stands for the proposition that—at the very least—the General Assembly may appropriate funds in a Budget bill in amounts that are different from those in previously enacted statutes. Interestingly enough, in that case the court did not attach any conditions such as emergency, etc., to the amendment permitted. In Commonwealth ex rel. Meredith, Attorney General v. Johnson, 292 Ky. 288, 166 S.W.2d 409, 414 (1942) the questioned budget bill permitted the Governor the "widest discretion" to expend and to transfer money from one fund to another, upon the finding by him that an emergency existed for which public money should be spent. The court said:

"To hold that the state government could not take the precaution of anticipating such miscellaneous items [as an emergency] would be to retard the progress and operation of public affairs." Id.

In Johnson, the court declared that a budget bill could allow not only the transfer of funds from special accounts but also that selfsame bill would properly authorize the unappropriated and unbudgeted expenditure of funds, if an emergency (or other miscellaneous items) were found.

If it is proper for the General Assembly to delegate to the Governor the power, in a budget bill, to transfer funds and to spend them for unbudgeted items, why is it not, a fortiori, proper for the General Assembly, in the limited circumstances of an emergency financial situation of state government, to transfer funds and to suspend and modify the operation of a statute? We think the question answers itself.

The United States Supreme Court agrees. In United States v. Will, 449 U.S. 200, 101 S.Ct. 471, 66 L.Ed.2d 392 (1980), our highest court specifically held that the United States Congress could modify statutory law in an appropriation bill. In an unanimous opinion, the Court quoting United States v. Dickerson, 310 U.S. 554, 555, 50 S.Ct. 1034, 1035, P' L.Ed. 1356 (1940) said:

"[W]hen Congress desires to suspend or repeal a statute in force, [t]here can be no doubt that ... it could accomplish its purpose by an amendment to an appropriation bill ..."Id. at 222, 101 S.Ct. at 484.

At this point, it is necessary to remember that the questioned statute SB 294—by its own terms—denied the General Assembly the power to repeal or amend an existing law. It permitted only suspension or modification.

It may well be argued, that if the General Assembly has the constitutional power to repeal or amend existing statutes in a budget bill, it should have the power to suspend or modify such statutes in that selfsame budget bill. This conclusion is supported by logic, and it is also supported by law.

Kentucky Constitution Section 15, is as follows:

"Laws to be suspended only by General Assembly. No power to suspend laws shall be exercised unless by the General Assembly or its authority."

There have been a minimal number of cases interpreting this section. In Lovelace v. Commonwealth, 285 Ky. 326, 147 S.W.2d 1029 (1941), a statute authorizing a court to probate the sentence of a person convicted of a crime was held to be a constitutionally valid "suspension" of the criminal statute. We said:

"The legislature makes the laws that declare what are criminal offenses and define the processes by which these laws are enforced. Having the power to make, it has the power to modify and provide for abatement or suspension. Id. at 1034.

"[T]he power in the legislature to authorize the courts to suspend those laws is in the logically implied affirmation contained in Section 15 of the Constitution of Kentucky...."Id. (emphasis added).

It is beyond cavil that the General Assembly can suspend the operation of statutes. Moreover, under Lovelace, the General Assembly delegated that authority to the Courts. See also, Gering v. Brown

Hotel Corporation, Ky., 396 S.W.2d 332 (1965).

Because of the General Assembly's exclusive authority with respect to public funds and the budget, we have no problem in deciding that Ky. Const. Sec. 15 applies to statutes which can be affected by the budget bill of the Commonwealth. The General Assembly is mandated to operate the financial offices of the Commonwealth on a balanced budget. If revenues become inadequate, the General Assembly must be empowered to use adequate devices to balance the budget. Provisions in the budget document which effectively suspend and modify existing statutes which carry financial implication certainly are consistent with those duties and responsibilities.

We have reiterated the proposition that the General Assembly may constitutionally repeal or amend existing statutes by the terms of a budget bill, so long as said bill complies with Ky. Const. Sec. 51. We have emphasized the obvious, viz., that the General Assembly may also suspend or modify existing statutes in a budget bill. Since, under paragraph (1) of SB 294, the General Assembly denied itself the power to repeal or amend and further said in paragraph (2) thereof it granted (or recognized) in itself the power to suspend or modify existing statutes, we must, perforce, examine the questioned provisions of the budget bill and determine whether they are only suspensions or modifications, and therefore, proper under the General Assembly's self-imposed limitation. Prior to that, however, we must address appellant's argument that both challenged acts violate Section 51 of the Kentucky Constitution.

(1) THE TITLES OF SB 294 AND HB 474 COMPORT WITH THE MANDATE OF KENTUCKY CONSTITUTION, SECTION 51?

Kentucky Constitution Section 51 is as follows:

"No law enacted by the General Assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title, and no law shall be revised, amended, or the provisions thereof extended or conferred by reference to its title only, but so much thereof as is revised, amended, extended or conferred, shall be re-enacted and published at length".

There are two proscriptions contained in this oft-litigated section. One directs that an act of the General Assembly shall only relate to one subject and requires that the subject shall be expressed in the title of the act. The other directs that no existing law shall be revised, amended, or its provisions conferred or extended by referring to its title only, but rather when such action is intended, the law is required to be re-enacted at length. Appellant attacks HB 474 and SB 294 with respect to the first proscription of Section 51 and HB 474 with respect to the second.

(A) DO THE TITLES TO SB 294 AND HB 474 PROPERLY DESCRIBE THE SUBJECT OF THOSE ACTS.

Ky. Const. Sec. 51 has always been liberally construed, with all doubts being resolved in favor of the validity of the legislative action. The purpose of the section is said to be to prevent the enactment of "surreptitious" legislation. Bowman v. Hamlett, 159 Ky. 184, 166 S.W. 1005 (1914); Dawson v. Commonwealth Department of Transportation, Ky., 622 S.W.2d 212 (1981). The framers of the Constitution intended to prevent surprise and fraud upon the members of the General Assembly and other interested parties, thus preventing the practice of "log rolling". Commonwealth ex rel. Meredith v. Johnson, 292 Ky. 288, 166 S.W.2d 409, 411 (1942).

[2] The title need only furnish general notification of the general subject in the act. If the title furnishes a "clue" to the act's contents, it passes constitutional muster. Talbot v. Laffoon, 257 Ky. 773, 79 S.W.2d 244 (1935).

"Section 51 of our Constitution ... was to prevent the evil that had grown up of legislating in one act upon as many disinct and wholly disconnected subjects as the legislative body saw fit, without any indication in the title of the act as to what its contents might be. . . . [Prior to its adoption] [it was then competent for the Legislature to legislate upon a multiplicity of unrelated subjects which were neither remotely germane to, or in any wise connected with, the one or ones named in the title . . . ] [to circumvent such deceptive practices resulting in deceitful, selfish, and other baleful consequences, the provision was inserted in the Constitution.] Id. at 246 (emphasis added).

[3] Do the challenged titles provide the reader a clue as to the contents of the act? Do the acts perpetrate a fraud? Did the General Assembly in providing a title to the acts and placing it in juxtaposition with the content of the acts effect something deceitful, selfish or baleful? We think not.

The challenged SB 294 title is as follows: "AN ACT relating to the relationship of the budget bill to the Kentucky Revised Statutes, and declaring an emergency."

The challenged two paragraphs of SB 294 limit the General Assembly's right to repeal or amend in a budget bill but permit the suspension or modification of such existing statutes, but only in the event that the financial conditions of the state mandate emergency action. The substance of the act thus permits suspension or modification of Kentucky Revised Statutes by a budget bill. The act expresses the relationship of a budget bill to all existing statutory law—which is primarily what the title says it does. The "germaneness" argument here is little short of specious.

[4] The title of HB 474, the biennial budget bill, is as follows:

"AN ACT relating to appropriations for the operation, maintenance, support, and functioning of the government of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and its various officers, cabinets, departments, boards, commissions, institutions, subdivisions, agencies, and other state supported activities."

The various contested provisions of HB 474, provide for the transfer of funds from various trust and agency accounts to the general fund of the Commonwealth, and also provide for the reduction of raises made in various officers' salaries. The title to the act refers to "appropriation" for the operation, etc., of state government. Certainly, the title does not tell the reader that—in the voluminous act—the General Assembly has authorized the reduction of salary increases and the transfer of trust and agency funds. However, under the case law cited above all that is necessary is that the act give a "clue" as to its contents and that the act be not deceitful, selfish or result in "baleful" consequences.

HB 474 is a budget—a biennial budget—directing the expenditure of literally billions of dollars to be used in the operation of state government. The provisions that of that suspend or modify the expenditure of monies in the event of a financial problem are clearly appropriations, in the broad sense. Appropriation of the people's money is the exclusive responsibility of the General Assembly, including the power to suspend or modify such appropriation under emergency financial circumstances. Moreover, such modification or suspension is obviously part of the whole framework of the budget, and no one could possibly be deceived by the inclusion of such provisions. The fact that the title tells the reader that the act is an appropriation for the funding of state government clearly alerts one to the fact that the act deals with "appropriations" including possible changes. No person could claim to have been misled by the title of HB 474 as to the content of the act sets a course of action when the financial condition of the Commonwealth deteriorates. We believe that the title of HB 474 clearly complies with Ky. Const. Sec. 51.

(B) DO THE CHALLENGED PORTIONS OF HB 474 COMPORT WITH THE PROVISION OF KENTUCKY CONSTITUTION, SECTION 51 THAT REQUIRES AMENDMENT OF STATUTES TO BE DONE AT LENGTH?

[5] This second part of Section 51 is nearly so often litigated as the first part of this section. The purpose of this section is perhaps best explained by one of the reasons:

"The members of the General Assembly did not know what they were voting for half the time, and this section . . . provides when an act is amended . . . shall be set out in full, so every man will understand what it is when voting on it, and the people will know what change has been made when they see it." Spalding, Chairman of the Legislative Committee, Volume 3, p. 3792, Debates of the Constitutional Convention.

As the court said, in Board of Penitentiary Commissioners v. Spencer, 159 Ky. 202, 206 S.W. 1017 (1914).

"When any person, lawyer or layman, takes up an act of the Legislature, to read and understand what changes have been made in an old law, he ought to read before him in the act that he is reading the whole of the law as it appears when amended or revised by the act." Id. at 1024

The part of Section 51 may be described as the re-enactment and publication requirement of that section. As stated, its application is limited by its own wording to amendment, revision, extension or conferring of existing statutes. Its purpose is to prevent deceitful practices and to provide full and easily accessible information to legislators and to the public when the General Assembly is so effecting existing law.

If a challenged statutory enactment falls within the proscribed activities, as opposed to merely being suspensory in nature, it is violative of this second part of Section 51. If it is, however, merely a suspension or modification, it is not violative thereof. The same restriction appears in SB 294(2), which the General Assembly restricted to the same limitation of Ky. Const. Sec. 51.

They are as follows: KRS 15.755 (Commonwealth Attorney); KRS 15.765 (County Attorney); KRS 184.355 (State Employees); KRS 184.400 (Circuit Clerks); KRS 61.480 (Executive Officers—Governor, Lieutenant Gov-

We now proceed to examine the challenged statutory provisions that are before us on this appeal to determine if they repeal or amend existing statutes or if they merely suspend or modify existing statutes and are therefore valid.

DO THE CHALLENGED STATUTES CONSTITUTE A REPEAL OR AMENDMENT TO EXISTING STATUTES SO AS TO BE VIOLATIVE OF SECTION 1 OF SB 291?

I. STATE OFFICERS' SALARIES

[6] HB 474, the budget document, in Part VII thereof provides in essence that if the financial condition of the state deteriorates certain salary increases of specific state officers were to be reduced.<sup>3</sup> The bill then provided for annual increases which are less than are provided for in the particular cited statutes. Such reduction is temporary only, expiring at the end of the biennium. The trial court upheld this action saying that the General Assembly " . . . has the authority to suspend previously authorized salaries in a budget bill, a subject clearly germane to appropriations." We agree.

In Mattingly, we upheld a budget appropriation that "repealed" prior statutory authorization for the Athletic Board of Control. See also, State ex rel. McLeod v. Mills, 256 S.C. 21, 180 S.E.2d 638 (1971). As we view this statute, the General Assembly has—as a premise for its action—cited the shaky financial condition of the Commonwealth. It has exercised its discretion—nay, it has performed its constitutional obligation—that of operating the Commonwealth within a balanced budget, by reducing expenditures in areas which it felt were proper. It has exercised proper legislative discretion and judgment. It has not repealed or amended the existing salary statutes, it has simply temporarily suspended them, as it clearly has the power to do. LKC v. Brown, supra, SB 294(2).

ernor, Attorney General, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Commissioner of Agriculture, Secretary of State, Auditor of Public Accounts, Clerk of Supreme Court; and KRS 64.485 (Justices and Judges of the Court of Justice).

2. TRUST AND AGENCY FUND TRANSFERS

[7] Under a traditional statutory scheme, the General Assembly has created what are called "trust and agency funds." Basically, when any affected agency, board, commission, or other entity of state government receives fees, rental, sales, bond proceeds, gifts, or other income, those monies are specifically appropriated by the General Assembly to those units of government. Budget, Part II, Trust and Agency Funds; KRS 45.273.

In the present budget bill, and based on the same premise of the financial condition of the state, the General Assembly provided for the "suspension" of enumerated statutes to "provide for the transfer of certain agency and special funds to the general fund." Budget Memorandum, at i.<sup>9</sup> Not only does the budget document provide for the transfer but they are also authorized by statute. KRS 48.315.<sup>10</sup>

In each of the challenged transfers of funds, the enabling act created a reduction in the funds available to the affected agency. The trial court upheld the validity of these transfers, declaring that the General Assembly has the authority under Section 15 of the Kentucky Constitution and under KRS 48.315 "to suspend, for the duration of the biennium, sections of the Kentucky Revised Statute that pertain to trust and agency funds." We agree in part.

We repeat ourselves when we say that the General Assembly has, constitutionally speaking, the power in a budget bill to repeal or amend in the manner in which public funds are used. Ky. Const. Sec. 51, the "title" section, has not been violated by the matters clearly relating to appropriations. What we decide is simply that the transfers of funds which are merely temporary, determinable suspensions of the operation of the statutes relating to appropriations of public funds are within the legislative authority as set out in SB 294 and Ky. Const. Sec. 51, the amendment section.

However, the transfers of funds which relate to appropriations of private contributions cannot be termed suspensions or modifications of the operation of the statute. Because the General Assembly has no authority to transfer private funds to the general fund, the transfer of money from agencies in which public funds and private employee contributions are commingled and cannot be differentiated, is unconstitutional. Diversions from the Kentucky Em-

9. In the interest of brevity, we will not discuss these at length. Suffice it to say that the Attorney General complains of the following items—Kentucky Development Finance Authority, required lapsing of $100,000 each fiscal year to the General Fund; University of Kentucky, transfer of $500,000 from the Tobacco Research Trust Fund to the General Fund; Department of Banking and Securities, transfer of $1,000,000 to the General Fund; Fish and Wildlife Resources, lapsing $1,128,000 in 1984-1985 and $1,150,000 in 1985-86; and a general transfer of various amounts to the General Fund. See Budget Document, Item 19, 35, 49, 63. For anyone who desires to read the 47 specific authorized transfers, see Budget Bill, Item VIII.

10. KRS 48.315 is as follows: "(1) The general assembly may provide in a budget bill for the transfer to the general fund for the purpose of the general fund all or part of the agency funds, special funds, or other funds established under the provisions of KRS 15.430, 16.565, 21.347, 21.540, 21.560, 42.500, 47.010; 48.010(g); 56-

100; 61.470; 61.580, 64.345; 64.350; 161.420; 161.430, 164A.110; 164A.020, 164A.800; 164A.810; 216A.110; 230.218; 230.398, 230.400; 230.770; 235.330; 248.540; 248.550; 278.100; 278.150, 287.485; 304.35-030, 311.450; 311-610, 312.019, 313.350; 314.161; 315.195; 316-210, 317.530; 317A.080, 319.131; 320.360; 321-320; 322.290, 322.330, 322.420, 323.080, 323-190, 323.210, 323A.060; 323A.190, 323A.210; 324.286; 324.410; 325.250, 326.120, 327.000; 330.050, 334.160; 334A.120, 335.140, 342.122, 342.480, etc.

(2) The transfer of moneys from the agency funds, special funds, or other funds to the general fund provided for in subsection (1) of this section shall be for the period of time specified in the budget bill.

(3) Any provisions of any statute in conflict with the provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of this section are hereby suspended or modified. Such suspension or modification shall not extend beyond the duration of the budget bill. (Enact. Acts 1984, ch. 410 § 6, effective July 14, 1984.)" ployees Retirement System, County Employees Retirement System, State Police Retirement System, and Teachers' Retirement System fall within this category, as do Workers' Compensation and Workers' Claims Special Fund. The employee contributions and the insurance company assessments constitute private, mandatory donations." To the extent that private funds were transferred, we reverse.

3. TRANSPORTATION PROVISIONS

[8] The budget bill directs that the Secretary of the Transportation Cabinet shall expend fund resources to meet lease requirements to the Kentucky Turnpike Authority. It further provides that in the event such resources are insufficient to meet payments, the shortage shall be met by transferring coal severance tax receipts to cover the obligation". Budget Document, Part IV, Road Fund, Item I.

The bill also provides that the capital construction and equipment purchase contingency fund may be used to advance funds to projects authorized to be financed by bonds and may further be used to finance feasibility studies for future projects. Budget, Part V, Capital Construction, L, Transportation.

The Attorney General argues that the first provision is in conflict with KRS 143.090 and that the second provision is in conflict with KRS 45.770. The trial court disagreed and found no inconsistency between the provisions and existing statutory law. We agree with the result, but not the reasoning of the trial court.

It is clear that the first provision which creates, albeit temporarily and for the same reason as all of the challenged provisions of the budget bill, funds from the purpose set out in KRS 143.090<sup>11</sup> does conflict with

Kentucky Employees Retirement System (KRS 61.540), County Employees Retirement System (KRS 78.650), State Police Retirement System (KRS 16.563), Teachers' Retirement System (KRS 161.420), Workers' Compensation that statute. As we have said previously, the "conflict" is authorized by SB 294.

The same reasoning applies to the second contested provision in this section. In addition, this action of the General Assembly was authorized by a 1984 statute. KRS 45.760(12) is as follows:

"(12) The general assembly may provide in a budget bill for the capital construction and equipment purchase contingency fund to be used to advance funds to projects authorized to be financed by bonds, and to finance feasibility studies for projects which may be contemplated for future funding."

The General Assembly thereby specifically authorized by another statute, the action which it took in the budget document. We find no inconsistency, even if such were relevant to our decision.

4. FUNDING FOR TEXTBOOKS

[9] The General Assembly, also through the budget bill, permitted local school districts to rent textbooks and further imposed a minimum six year period on the use of textbooks selected by the Textbook Commission. Budget, Part I, General Fund, D, Education and Humanities, Item 29(c), 1b. It is argued that this section of the budget conflicted with KRS 156.400 and KRS 156.435(4). The trial court disagreed. We agree with the trial court.

In this section of the budget bill—as in all the questioned sections—the General Assembly was basing its action on the financial condition of the state and its various entities. It was acting on the authority granted in SB 294. In this instance, local boards of education can now—at their option—rent textbooks to students. All books shall now be used for six years. Both of these objects are economy moves. They allow local school boards to make appropriate individual decisions as to whether textbooks shall be loaned or rented to students. Whether one agrees with this infringement on the traditional use of "free" textbooks, one cannot challenge the General Assembly's right to make such a policy decision. The same logic applies to extending the use of books for a period of six years.<sup>13</sup>

tion (KRS 342.480), and Workers' Claims Special Fund (KRS 342.122).

We believe therefore that not only is the action of the General Assembly in the budget bill valid as a suspension or modification of existing statutes, we also believe that, there is, in effect, no real conflict.

5. FUNDS FOR MEDICAL CONTRACTS

[10] The budget bill provided $900,000 fund for medical service contracts for county jails. It also provided a condition, that that fund be maintained in an individual account specifically for medical contracts, and furthermore that a county must be "certified" before it received its share of the funding. In order to be so certified, the county must attest that it has investigated and obtained the "most feasible medical contract or contracts possible." The contract(s) is subject to approval by the Corrections Cabinet. Budget, Part I, General Fund, C. Corrections, Item 37d, Local Jail Support.

It is claimed by appellant that such provision is in conflict with KRS 441.045.<sup>14</sup> It is argued that the budget bill contains "substantive law" and that such a requirement is not an appropriation. The trial court disagreed and so do we.

It is an altogether too familiar litany that the premise of this provision is to react to the financial crunch of the state and that such directive is only temporary. It is also too familiar to say that this attempt of the General Assembly to regulate even temporarily, the procurement by medical services contracts—in an economical manner—clearly a subject of an appropriation. The General Assembly is saying to counties in effect, "we will give you $900,000 in aid but you don't qualify unless the contract you obtain is the most economical and feasible one." It cannot be seriously argued that this is not appropriation and therefore germane.

13. Although the statute permits the Superintendent of Instruction to authorize the use of textbooks for more or less than six years (KRS 156-400), the statute specifically allows the General Assembly to make its own period in a budget bill. KRS 156-440.

There is no need to "wrap up" this opinion with a lengthy summary. The General Assembly has the basic constitutional power and responsibility to tax and to spend the public's money. This power, as we have seen in prior decisions, is exclusive to the General Assembly and includes the power to use a budget bill to repeal, amend, modify and suspend existing statutes. Such power must be exercised within all constitutional proscriptions, including those of Section 51. The General Assembly, in the questioned statute heretofore described and relying on its own specific statutory authority, did precisely that.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

STEPHENS, C.J., and GANT, LEHSON, STEPHENSON, WHITE and WINTIE, SHEIMER, JJ., concur.

VANCE, J., dissents, and files a dissenting opinion.

VANCE, Justice, dissenting.

Section 51 of the Kentucky Constitution provides:

"No law enacted by the General Assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title; and no law shall be revised, amended, or the provisions thereof extended or conferred by reference to its title only, or so much thereof as is revised, amended, extended or conferred, shall be re-enacted and published at length."

14. KRS 441.045 sets out the procedure by which counties are to obtain money from the state for medical contracts. Nothing is said therein about the certification procedure.

This section contains two important restrictions that relate to the transaction of the business of the General Assembly in an orderly and intelligent fashion. The provisions relating to title and the provisions relating to republication in full of amended statutes preserve the significant purpose of preventing confusion in the minds of legislators as to the effect of proposed legislation.

The court some time ago, expressed the purpose of this amendment. In Talbot v. Commonwealth, 217 Ky. 773, 79 S.W.2d 244 (1935), we said:

"Section 51 of our Constitution, and like provisions in Constitutions of other states of comparatively modern origin, were the purpose of the people in incorporating it as a part of their fundamental law was to prevent the evil that had grown up of legislating in one act upon wholly distinct and wholly disconnected subjects as the legislative body saw fit, and any indication in the title of the act as to what its contents might be, in the adoption of such a provision, or in an act might clearly indicate that it related to a specifically named subject or to a number of named subjects within the body of it containing provisions for a wholly distinct and unrelated subject or subjects than what was mentioned in the title. It was then considered for the Legislature to legislate upon a multiplicity of unrelated subjects which were neither remotely germane to, nor in any wise connected with, the one or two named in the title, and which, as we have said, is yet true with reference to the present legislation. To circumvent the restrictive practices resulting in defective, selfish, and other baleful consequences, the provision was inserted in the Constitution requiring, inter alia, that the title shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title."

In Board of Penitentiary Com'rs v. Spruicer, 159 Ky. 255, 166 S.W. 1016 (1914), this court considered the requirements of Section 51 of the constitution and its purposes as it regards the republication of amended statutes. After discussing some of the practices attempted before the adoption of Section 51 of the present constitution, we said:

"It can readily be seen that, under this practice, no person, by reading an act the provisions of which had been extended or conferred in the manner indicated, could obtain any idea of the meaning or effect of it, without reading it in connection with the old law the provisions of which had been carried into the new law, by reference to the title of the old law; nor could any person, by reading an old law that had been revised or amended, by adding to it certain words or taking from it certain words, understand the meaning and effect of the old law without reading it in connection with the new one that amended or revised it in this manner. And it was largely to prevent this deceptive and misleading manner of legislating, which afforded so many opportunities for fraud, as well as to make the laws more convenient and accessible, that this section was adopted. As aptly said on this subject by Mr. Spalding, the chairman of the legislative committee, in

Board of Education v. Mescher, 310 Ky. 220, 229 S.W.2d 1016 (1949), we said:

"The purpose of the provision have been stated many times. Among them is the important purpose to prevent surprise or fraud, and the enactment of vicious legislation under an innocent and misleading title. Therefore, the title must give fair and reasonable notice of the nature and provisions of the Act so that a member of the legislature or any other interested person reading the title may obtain a general notice or knowledge of the contents of the Act or what it proposes to do. The title must be a true although not a detailed index of the contents. If it is restrictive, then the Act must not exceed the specification or include what is not reasonably and properly connected with or germane to it."

Id. at 229 S.W.2d 1019.

In Board of Penitentiary Com'rs v. Spruicer, 159 Ky. 255, 166 S.W. 1016 (1914), this court considered the requirements of Section 51 of the constitution and its purposes as it regards the republication of amended statutes. After discussing some of the practices attempted before the adoption of Section 51 of the present constitution, we said:

"It can readily be seen that, under this practice, no person, by reading an act the provisions of which had been extended or conferred in the manner indicated, could obtain any idea of the meaning or effect of it, without reading it in connection with the old law the provisions of which had been carried into the new law, by reference to the title of the old law; nor could any person, by reading an old law that had been revised or amended, by adding to it certain words or taking from it certain words, understand the meaning and effect of the old law without reading it in connection with the new one that amended or revised it in this manner. And it was largely to prevent this deceptive and misleading manner of legislating, which afforded so many opportunities for fraud, as well as to make the laws more convenient and accessible, that this section was adopted. As aptly said on this subject by Mr. Spalding, the chairman of the legislative committee, in volume 3, p. 3792, of the Debates of the Constitutional Convention. The members of the General Assembly did not know what they were voting for half the time, and this section in the report provides when an act is amended it shall not be amended in that way, but that the act, as amended, shall be set out in full, so every man will understand what it is when voting on it, and the people will know what change has been made when they see it."

"This was the whole purpose of this provision in the Constitution, and that it is a wise provision is not open to doubt. When any person, lawyer or layman, takes up an act of the Legislature, to read and understand what changes have been made in an old law, he ought to have before him in the act that he is reading the whole of the law as it appears when amended or revised by the new act, and so the convenient and the proper way to revise or amend an old law, by either adding to it or taking from it, or extending its provisions, is to set forth in the new act the law as it will read when revised amended or extended."

In Board of Penitentiary Com'rs v. Spencer, supra, the court also established guidelines concerning the republication of amended statutes as follows:

"(a) That it is not necessary, when the body of the new act repeals, or has the effect of repealing, all or part of an existing act, to republish or set forth the parts repealed, although the title of the repealing act may purport to be an amendment to the existing act.

"(b) That when it is proposed to revise or amend one or more sections of the Kentucky Statutes, or an act, the body of the new act should contain the section or sections as they will read when revised or amended, if it is proposed to re-enact or leave in force any part of the section or sections that are amended or revised. If, however, it is intended to repeal one or more sections, then it is not necessary to set forth in the body of the act the section or sections repealed.

"(c) That when the act does not purport to be an amendment to an existing law, but a new act, it is not necessary to set out or republish any part of any old law that may be changed or repealed by the new law.

"(d) When the new act purports to amend an existing act by extending, revising, or amending it, and no particular section or part of it is specified, then the body of the new act must set forth the whole of the existing act as it will appear when extended, revised, or amended, but, if only a section or several sections of an act are extended, revised, or amended, it is only necessary to specify and republish the section or sections that are extended, revised, or amended.

"(e) That, when it is desired to confer or carry into a new law provisions of an old law, then so much of the old law as is thus conferred or carried into the new law must be published at length."

It seems to me that the purposes which impelled the framers of the constitution to place the limitations imposed upon the General Assembly by Section 51 of the constitution were inherently sound and ought not to be eroded to the vanishing point by judicial interpretation.

Let us examine the legislation in question. Senate Bill 294 is entitled "AN ACT relating to the relationship of the latter bill to the Kentucky Revised Statutes declaring an emergency." This innocuous title would scarcely inform an unsuspecting legislator that it is really an act providing for the amendment, repeal, suspension or modification of existing statutes through various provisions to be included in a separate budget bill. In my view, the title of the bill is misleading.

Even worse is the text. Section 6 of Senate Bill 294 provides:

SECTION 6. A NEW SECTION OF KRS CHAPTER 48 IS CREATED TO READ AS FOLLOWS:

"(1) The general assembly may provide in a budget bill for the transfer of

of the general fund for the purpose of the general fund all or part of the agency special funds, or other funds established under the provisions of KRS 154.50, 163.65; 21.347; 21.540; 21.560; 42.500; 47.010; 48.010(g); 56.100; 61.100; 61.580; 61.345; 61.350; 61.355; 78.200; 95A.220; 136.392; 138.510; 150.150; 154.150; 161.420; 161.430; 164A.110; 164A.020; 164A.600; 164A.810; 218A.100; 230.218; 230.308; 230.400; 230.700; 245.330; 248.540; 248.550; 278.100; 278.130; 287.485; 301.35-030; 311.000; 311.610; 312.019; 313.350; 314.161; 315.105; 316.210; 317.530; 317A.050; 319.100; 320.500; 321.320; 322.290; 322.200; 323.120; 323.050; 323.190; 323.210; 323A.020; 323A.190; 323A.210; 324.286; 324.410; 325.250; 326.120; 327.030; 330.050; 341.160; 334A.120; 335.140; 342.100; 342.450, etc.

"(2) The transfer of monies from the agency funds, special funds, or other funds to the general fund provided for in subsection (1) of this section shall be for the period of time specified in the budget bill."

"(3) Any provisions of any statute in conflict with the provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of this section are hereby suspended or modified. Such suspension or modification shall not extend beyond the duration of the budget bill."

Section 7 of Senate Bill 294 provides:

SECTION 7. A NEW SECTION OF KRS CHAPTER 48 IS CREATED TO READ AS FOLLOWS:

"To the extent that the provisions of a budget bill are in conflict with any provisions of KRS Chapters 12, 42, 56, 152, 177, or 311, the provisions of those chapters are hereby suspended or modified. Such suspension or modification shall not extend beyond the duration of the budget bill."

No member of the General Assembly could possibly have any idea by reading the language of Senate Bill 294 what agency funds were created by the 70 enumerated statutes and could not possibly know what funds were subject to transfer upon the passage of Senate Bill 294. The inclusion of "etc." at the end of the string of enumerated statute numbers would seem to make even more uncertain what transfers were to be authorized. Such uncertainty with regard to the effect of legislation is precisely the evil that Section 51 of our constitution was designed to prevent.

An entirely separate bill, House Bill 474, the budget bill, enacted into law the transfers authorized by Senate Bill 294. House Bill 474 was entitled "AN ACT relating to appropriations for the operation, maintenance, support, and functioning of the government of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and its various officers, cabinets, departments, boards, commissions, institutions, subdivisions, agencies, and other state supported activities."

With respect to the transfers of funds, it provided for a transfer from the agency and special funds to the general fund certain enumerated dollar amounts from certain enumerated agencies. In most cases, the agency from which funds were transferred was designated by an existing K.R.S. number which identified the agency and which designated the fees and monies which were appropriated to the agency by the existing statute, and the purposes and the manner in which those fees and funds were to be used.

No legislator could tell from a reading of House Bill 474 the purposes for which the transferred funds were required to be used by the existing statute. In a session limited to 60 days each biennium, in which hundreds of bills are introduced, it is not realistic to expect that an individual legislator could research each of the statutes enumerated in House Bill 474 to determine for himself the advisability of transferring funds away from that particular agency. In one instance, House Bill 474 purports to transfer $3,980,000.00 from the "Insurance Association" to the general fund, but no reference is made to the statute which created the association or to the purpose and manner in which its funds are to be used.

Of necessity, the individual legislators would find it impossible to determine the full import of House Bill 474 from a reading of its express language, and could not, therefore, know the full import of their action in either voting for or against the bill. It is just such uncertainties that Section 51 of our constitution was designed to prevent.

Furthermore, under only the loosest interpretation does the transfer to the general fund of funds appropriated to an agency by an existing statute have anything to do with the subject of appropriation. These transfers do not appropriate money. They rescind appropriations under existing statutes by transferring money which was previously made available to an agency by a statute which still exists on the statute books of this state. In doing so, the existing statutes, in my opinion, were amended by the budget bill and were therefore required by Section 51 of the constitution to be republished as amended.

The majority opinion states that these were not amendments, but only suspensions or modifications of the existing statutes. The General Assembly, in Senate Bill 294, divested itself of the power to repeal or amend an existing statute by a budget bill, but granted unto itself the power to suspend or modify existing statutes.

It seems to me beyond question that repeal and amendment of statutes relate to permanent actions of the General Assembly, whereas a suspension of a statute for the duration of the biennium of the budget bill is in effect a temporary repeal. A modification of a statute, limited to the biennium of the budget bill is a temporary amendment.

If an amendment is not valid unless republished as amended, it follows that a temporary amendment must also be published in full.

The transfer of various agency funds to the general fund conflicts in many instances with the express purpose and manner in which existing law requires those funds to be used, and the transfer in the budget bill does not suspend the existing statute. The existing statute is left intact, except to the extent that a portion of the funds for the use of the agency has been siphoned off for a different purpose. This does not suspend the existing statute but modifies it temporarily. Because a modification is in effect an amendment, albeit temporary, the full text of the existing law as modified is required to be published.

I do not doubt that the General Assembly has the power to control appropriations and expenditures, nor that it has the power to repeal or to amend statutes which appropriate money and provide the manner in which it shall be used.

It can, as an example, abolish the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources Commission by repeal of the statute which created it. It has the power to direct that money derived from licenses issued by the commission be used for a different purpose than that provided by K.R.S. 150.150, but it must be done by amending K.R.S. 150.150 and republishing it in full as amended.

K.R.S. 150.150 provides:

"(1) Except as provided in this chapter, all moneys derived from the sale of licenses or from any other source connected with the administration of this chapter shall be promptly paid over to the state treasurer, who shall deposit such moneys in a special fund, known as the game and fish fund. The game and fish fund shall be used to carry out the purposes of this chapter and any law or regulation for the protection of wild animals, birds or fish, and for no other purpose.

"(2) All funds received under K.R.S. 150.110, 150.510 and 150.520 shall be used by the department for the purpose of enforcing those sections and for the protection and propagation of muskrat beds. Any surplus remaining in the fund at the close of each calendar year shall be turned into the general fund of a department. (1954d-10, 1954d-6d, amend. Acts 1942, ch. 68, § 15; 1952, ch. 200, § 22; 1968, ch. 38, § 6; 1978, ch. 384, § 33, effective June 17, 1978.)"

This statute provides that the game and fish fund be used for purposes specified in the statute and for no other purpose. The budget bill purports to transfer $225,000.00 of the funds of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources Commission to the general fund with no limitation on the manner of spending. The budget bill does not repeal K.R.S. 150.150 because, except for the funds transferred, the statute will continue to be operative. The budget bill does, however, amend K.R.S. 150.150 because it takes away funds which were designated for a specific purpose and diverts them to another purpose. Because K.R.S. 150.150 was amended, but its text was not republished or amended as required by the constitution, Section 51, a legislator would not know the effect that the budget bill would have upon the operation of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources Commission. The same thing is true of all other cases where the transfer of funds from commissions and agencies by the budget bill contravenes the express provisions of existing statutes.

I remain convinced that the intent and purpose of Section 51 of the constitution is sound and that erosion of its effectiveness by judicial interpretation will in the long run lead to unfortunate consequences.

Recent years teach us the danger of eroding the constitution. Sections 49 and 50 of our constitution prohibit the creation of public debt in excess of $500,000 except upon the vote of a bonded indebtedness by the people, accompanied by the enactment of a tax for the specific purpose of liquidating the principal and interest on the indebtedness. Notwithstanding this salutary economic principle, the state has issued millions of dollars of revenue bonds without a vote of the people and without enactment of a specific tax to retire the bonds. The bonds have been upheld by the courts upon the theory that they are to be retired from revenues derived from projects financed by the bonds and that such bonds do not constitute an indebtedness of the state. Many of the projects financed by these bonds produce no revenue at all apart from money taken from current state revenues. Revenue bonds are used to finance road construction projects, and the transportation department then leases the roads, and the lease payments are used to retire the principal and interest on the bonds.

Although not technically an indebtedness of the state, these bonds have created an obligation which must, as a practical matter, be satisfied out of current revenues because a default would ruin the credit of the state. The expenditure of current funds to pay for the leases necessary to retire interest and principal on revenue bonds is substantially responsible for a current critical shortage of funds available to the transportation department for other purposes.

One purpose of Sections 49 and 50 of our constitution is to prevent a current administration from obligating the tax revenues of a future administration. What has happened is that Sections 49 and 50 of the constitution have been circumvented, and as a practical matter, past administrations have been permitted to obligate the tax revenues of the present and of future administrations. We now begin to feel the consequences. I mention this as an example because it is easy to become impatient with restrictions imposed by our constitution. Section 51 serves a sound and prudent purpose, and in my view, it is important that we interpret it to prevent the very abuses it was designed to prohibit.

I would hold all of the contested sections of Senate Bill 294 and House Bill 474 unconstitutional to the extent they violate Section 51 of the Kentucky Constitution in the manner expressed in this dissent.

Re: HB 420 (and SB 384) -- adoption of regulations and presumption of validity of regulations

Dear Representative Ulmer,

A copy of my February 8, 1988 letter to Senator Jay Kerttula, chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, regarding this bill, is attached. As I mentioned there, this bill (identical bills in the house and senate) presents some interesting issues.

At the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing, February 9, 1988, Dave Gray, assistant to Senator Hensley and the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, mentioned that there were two basic parts to the bill: provisions dealing with the executive branch itself and provisions for the legislature. Although the comments in my letter to Senator Kerttula are not organized along those lines, I have offered a section-by-section commentary instead.

The gist of my comments is that the bill raises significant constitutional and practical problems, and it would enact legislation on points that could adequately be covered by a letter or phone call to the regulations attorney in the Department of Law. HB 420 (and its Senate counterpart) evidences a general frustration with the details of government -- in this instance, administrative regulations -- and with the tension built into the three-branch system of American government. If we can identify the precise problem sought to be solved by this bill, and if you should wish it, I would be happy to work with you and your committee in drafting any necessary legislation. However, as I mentioned in my letter to Senator Kerttula, there is no adequate, constitutional shortcut. Although litigating some of these issues would be fun for us lawyers, I would rather avoid the costly litigation that some statutory proposals invite.

You have indicated that it might be helpful if I were to attend your committee's hearing on this bill, scheduled for tomorrow. Thank you for this opportunity to comment.

Yours truly,

CONTINUATION OF FISCAL NOTE ANALYSIS

For Bill/Resolution No. HB 420

Section 1 of this bill amends AS 44.62.040(b) to include the Governor's signature on regulations. "The signature of the governor approving adoption of the regulation as required by AS 44.62.065 must accompany the regulation."

While the addition of the signing of regulations to the Governor's duties will not have any specific fiscal impact on the Office of the Governor, it is likely that such a requirement will result in some delays in the approval process due to scheduling conflicts.

Section 3 of this bill adds a new section to AS 44.62. "Sec. 44.62.065. GOVERNOR'S SIGNATURE. A regulation or order of repeal is not valid unless the governor has approved its adoption in writing."

While the additional responsibilities of review and approval of regulations will add to the workload of the Office of the Governor, it is not anticipated that the additional activities will require funding for new staff or result in other operational costs beyond what can be met within the current budget. As with Section 1, the addition of this final review to existing procedures will increase the time required for approval of regulations.

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS AGENCY

MEMORANDUM

February 19, 1988

SUBJECT: Sectional analysis of SB 384 & HB 420
(Adoption of regulations)

TO: Senator Willie Hensley, Chairman
Administrative Regulation Review Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional analysis of SB 384 and HB 420 (Adoption of regulations and presumption of validity of regulations).

Sections 1 and 3 require that, under the Administrative Procedure Act, the governor approve a regulation before it becomes valid. The requirement extends to regulations that do not have to be submitted to the lieutenant governor under AS 44.62.040(a). That subsection exempts from filing a regulation that

- (1) establishes or fixes rates, prices or tariffs;
- (2) relates to the use of public works, including streets and highways, under the jurisdiction of a state agency if the effect of the order is indicated to the public by means of signs or signals; or
- (3) is directed to a specifically named person or to a group of persons and does not apply generally throughout the state.

Under sec. 7 of the bill, regulations that were adopted before the effective date of the Act would remain valid without the governor's signature.

Senator Willie Hensley
Pate 2
February 19, 1988

Section 2 requires that the drafting manual for administrative regulations contain instructions and examples for summaries of proposed actions.

Sections 4 and 5 address the presumption of validity of regulations. Under AS 44.62.100(c), added by sec. 5, the legislature can, by special concurrent resolution, remove the presumption of validity of a regulation if the legislature finds that the regulation is not within the procedural or substantive authority delegated to the agency. This section raises constitutional issues.

The section permits the legislature to change the legal standard under which a hearing or case will be decided by resolution. The Alaska Supreme Court held, in State v. A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary, 606 P.2d 769 (Alaska 1980), that the legislature may not use resolutions to affect the rights of others. The court stated, at 773 that

Of course, when the legislature wishes to act in an advisory capacity it may act by resolution. However, when it means to take action having a binding effect on those outside the legislature it may do so only by following the enactment procedures.

Section 5 permits the legislature to take a binding action by resolution and therefore probably violates the provisions of the state constitution that set out requirements for enactment of bills, Article II, sections 13 - 17.

Section 6 changes the requirement concerning notice of proposed action which an agency is required to give before adopting, amending, or repealing a regulation. The section requires the agency to summarize the effect of the proposed change. For a repealed regulation, the agency must describe the substance of the regulation and analyze the effect of the repeal. Under section 7, the new requirement applies to notices of proposed actions published on or after the effective date of the Act.

Section 7 addresses the application of sections 1 and 3 and of section 6, as discussed above.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.
