The serious nature and problems with juvenile crime are pervasive in modern society. House Bill 104 is a first step toward informing communities and teachers of the severity of the problem and to identify the perpetrators.

This legislation allows the arresting entity to release the identity of a juvenile if the offense they are charged with would have been a felony when committed by an adult. The information release could also include the date and place of the offense and a description of the nature of the offense.

When juveniles know that their identity will be revealed to their friends, teachers and neighbors when they commit a serious crime, it should act as a deterrent. This is a small effort to help reverse a growing trend. It may help a juvenile decide what type of life they want to live and should lead them to make the correct choice.
