CSHB 38 (JUD) AM

CSHB 38 (JUD) AM amends Alaska's presumptive sentencing laws to provide that a defendant convicted of a third felony offense is subject to a mandatory term of imprisonment of at least 40 years but not more than 99 years. The first two convictions must be for a "most serious" felony, and the third conviction must be for a class A or unclassified felony. The prosecutor has the discretion to pursue or not pursue the 40-year to 99-year mandatory sentence.

A most serious felony is any unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11 or an attempt or conspiracy to commit, or criminal solicitation under AS 11.31.110 of, an unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11.

The Department of Law has estimated that prosecutors will seek the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence 15 times per year. Because of the potential sentence, these cases can be expected to approach first-degree murder cases in the amount of court time spent on the actual trial, as well as on evidentiary hearings, collateral attacks on previous convictions, and other pre- and post-trial motion work. This is estimated to average three weeks of trial time per case, plus one-half week of additional hearings. If the defendants were not subject to a 40-year to 99-year sentence, only three of these 15 cases would statistically be expected to go to trial.

In addition to the costs of the third felony case, the existence of the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence will encourage offenders charged with their first or second most serious felony to fight the charge more strenuously, because conviction would greatly increase the chance that the offender would be vulnerable to the mandatory sentence at a later time. In the years 1984 through 1990, an average of about 900 defendants each year were charged with a first or second most serious felony. Trial rates for defendants charged with those felonies currently range from eight to 20 percent, depending on the classification of the offense (class B, class A, or unclassified). If the trial rate increases by 50 percent, over 50 additional felony trials will be held each year. Such changes in the trial rate are not unprecedented. When the plea bargaining ban was imposed in 1975, the felony trial rate doubled during the first year and tripled during the second year. Because it is impossible to predict what increase will occur in the trial rate as a result of CSHB 38 (JUD) AM, this note does not reflect those costs. Should CSHB 38 (JUD) AM result in a significantly higher trial rate, the court system will need to return to the legislature for additional funding.

For similar reasons, it can be expected that the appeal rate and rate of applications for post-conviction relief will increase among the 900 defendants charged each year with a first or second most serious felony. Again, this note does not attempt to quantify those costs.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary.)

This bill does not directly affect the Division of Alaska State Troopers. Indirectly it has the potential of reducing the number of defendants who plea to a felony charge rather than go to trial. That could impact the division, by troopers having to spend more time in court and if that time were off-duty time it would impact the division's overtime budget.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The original of this bill (HB 38) would have mandated a 99 sentence for a conviction of an unclassified or Class A felony if the offender has been previously convicted of two or more separate "most serious" felonies. This committee substitute (CS HB 38 {JUD}) would mandate a minimum 40 year sentence under the same circumstances. It would allow a sentence reduction after the greater of one half the sentence or 30 years while the original would have allowed reduction after 49.5 years. This CS allows discretion to the prosecutor whether or not to seek sentencing under the new sub section (II).

This bill would create a substantially larger prison population as they they continue to serve beyond the current 12.5 year average sentence, No impact would accrue until after that time

Analysis of the Department's prison population and information from other justice agencies indicates fifteen cases defined in this bill would be subject to prosecutorial discretion annually.

February 5, 1996

Individuals convicted under current statutes who might be convicted under the enhanced "three strikes" structure of this bill serve an average of 12.5 years in prison. These are demonstrably our most serious, most feared offenders. It is reasonable to expect that the Department of Law will prosecute to the full extent of the law in each case. Under current procedures few, if any, sentences will be reduced below the mandatory forty years.

Correctional professionals and non-professionals may disagree about what additional risks this group will present to other inmates and correctional staff simply by virtue of the fact that they will spend most, if not all of their life in prison. There can be no dispute about the fact that a huge burden will begin to accumulate as these individuals pass the point where they would otherwise have been released from prison. That is, after about thirteen years.

Even if each offender served the minimum of 30 years the group would peak at 450 inmates before leveling off. This is a group larger than could be housed in any prison in the Alaska at this time. The DOC would have to begin planning one $80 million dollar prison in the near future just for the population increase resulting from this bill.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The amended Judiciary Committee Substitute for HB 38 changes the proposed (in the original bill) 99-year mandatory term of imprisonment for third-time "most serious felony" offenders to allow courts to sentence these offenders to a definite term of imprisonment of at least 40 years and not less than 99 years. Thus a court could sentence an offender to a set term anywhere within the range of 40 years and 99 years. As provided in both the original bill and the Judiciary Committee CS, a third-time most serious felony offender could apply for a modification or reduction of sentence after serving one-half of the definite term, except that the CS provides that an offender could not apply for modification or reduction until after serving the greater of one-half of the term, or 30 years. An offender would not be eligible for a good time deduction. Consequently, in determining the greater of one-half of the definite term serviced or 30 years, good time credit could not be considered. As a result, and under even the best of circumstances, the minimum time served by a third-time most serious felony offender would be 30 years

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION:

Most offenders would obviously serve terms of substantially greater length. Although the CS, by establishing a 40-to-99 year sentencing range, in lieu of a mandatory 99-year sentence, will result in some pleas, the majority of offenders will still present a toughened defense. We have therefore reduced our fiscal note costs by one of three positions to reflect this change, but we are continuing two positions to reflect the need to fully prosecute the majority of offenders who are expected to vigorously resist a definite term sentence. On average, only 6.5 percent of all criminal cases go to trial. The department conducted a review of cases resulting in sentences of 40 years or more, for the period beginning in 1988 and ending in 1993, and determined that 66 percent of these cases went to a jury trial. This information bolsters our belief that a large percentage of these cases involving 40-to-99 year sentences will go to trial.

STATE OF ALASKA
1996 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 38(JUD)am

INTRODUCTION

This proposal requires that certain repeat felony offenders receive prison terms that are the equivalent of life without parole. This is similar to proposals that have either been enacted or are being considered in other states. It is noteworthy that this punishment is harsher than that for 1st degree murder.

The actual expense is somewhat speculative, in that it is difficult to get a statistical "handle" on how many cases will be subject to "three strikes" punishment. For purposes of this fiscal analysis, the Public Defender Agency will rely on what are believed to be rather conservative estimates generated by the Alaska Judicial Council, which in turn were used by the Department of Law for its fiscal note.

Using those estimates, the Public Defender (PD) expects it will handle between 10 to 15 cases per year where the client will be facing a 99 year term, without parole release potential. Just as homicide cases are currently the most expensive, challenging and labor-intensive prosecutions to defend, these "three strikes" cases will be similarly treated because of the grave consequences attached to a conviction. Trials will be the rule, not the exception. Only the most experienced staff attorneys will be involved in these cases, adding to personal services costs. It is likely the litigation of these matters will involve significant investigation, extensive pre-trial motion work, and long and difficult trials. As a result the court system and prosecutor's office will be affected.

Research has shown that states with "three strikes" laws have found fewer cases are "plea bargained". (Plea bargaining was recently reinstated in Alaska). In those states where "three strikes" laws have been passed, defendants are less likely to plead to any "strike" felony because of the potential impact the strike could have on them if they reoffend. This translates into more trials, which means more prosecutors, Public Defenders, judges and court personnel to handle those cases. In Los Angeles, the district attorney eliminated entire sections of his office, including Environmental Crimes, Consumer Protection and the Major Fraud Unit, in order to free up enough attorneys to handle impact of the "three strikes" legislation. See "The Law that Brought the Criminal Justice System to its Knees", Los Angeles Times (March 27, 1994).

As part of its investigation and pre-trial workup, the defense will have to consider mounting what are called in the law "collateral attacks" of the prior convictions which trigger the "three strikes" penalty. Put another way, attorneys will necessarily explore the possibility of invalidating one or more of the prior convictions to avoid the 99-year penalty. This effort will involve considerable effort on the part of support staff, hence the request for paralegal assistants in this fiscal note. It will also necessitate contracting with attorneys in other states to collaterally attack out-of-state felony convictions which serve to trigger the 99-year penalty. For example, if a client has a felony conviction in Idaho or California, a determination will have to be made as to whether 1) the conviction qualifies as felony level conduct in Alaska, 2) the conviction was based on a knowing and voluntary plea, 3) the defendant was represented by competent counsel, 4) the conviction was susceptible to some set-aside or expungement procedure which wasn't exercised but could have been. This is only a partial list of issues which will arise in the context of out-of-state convictions, and which may require the assistance of lower 48 lawyers paid on contract. These lawyers will have to go into courts in their state and file post-conviction petitions moving to set aside convictions if a legal basis is found to support such a filing.

These collateral attacks, which the Department of Law acknowledges in its fiscal analysis will be part of the "three strikes" litigation landscape, is expensive and time consuming. It will also potentially involve some out-of-state travel on the part of investigators, paralegals and lawyers. It is for these reasons that additional contractual and travel funds are required.

FISCAL IMPACT

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
1996 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 38 (UD)am

In order to absorb the impact of these cases, the Public Defender will require additional resources. Like the Department of Law, this will mean more staff lawyers. Because the lawyers will need support for the collateral attacks aforementioned along with investigation and pre-trial preparation, paralegal assistants and a secretarial position are also required.

One attorney IV position will be placed in the Anchorage office and one in Fairbanks. Anchorage will also receive one paralegal assistant and a secretary. Fairbanks will add one paralegal position. These lawyers and support staff will also be responsible for responding to "three strikes" prosecutions arising in rural locations, either by handling the case, or by providing support for the rural PD offices where the cases are sited. (It should be noted that the attorney positions will also absorb any additional appellate work which will generate post-conviction as concerns these cases).

CONCLUSION

It is the opinion of the Public Defender that this proposal will result in protracted and expensive litigation which will have a reverberating impact on the entire justice system. It is suggested that, given the strict presumptive sentencing structure already in place in Alaska, this proposal be given very close scrutiny.

CSHB 28 substantially revises the original "Three Strikes" proposals made last year and should significantly reduce the number of criminal defendants susceptible to the 99 year prison term. The changes allow prosecutorial discretion, modify the way prior felony convictions are viewed by the court, and require that the final charge be an A or Unclassified felony.

The Alaska Judicial Council, which provided the statistical analysis related to the original HB 334, has not provided additional statistics regarding the potential impact of the new bill on criminal justice agencies. However, the assumptions regarding the 1994 fiscal notes remain valid. While the numbers of cases will undoubtedly be reduced by the modifications contained in CSHB 38, there is no question that litigation surrounding "Three Strikes" cases will be lengthy and costly. Costs will be dictated by the high stakes of each case, the necessity for collateral attacks on prior convictions both in State and Federal courts, and the certainty that each of these cases will go to trial.

Because of the necessity of attacking underlying convictions and the treatment of each case as most serious because of the severity of the sanction, litigation will require the filing of numerous motions, not only on the current charge, but in each prior case which resulted in convictions. This will require the review of voluminous records associated with each of the prior felony cases and the initiation of new litigation in each case. If that prior conviction occurred in a different state, it would be necessary to retain out-of-state counsel to launch the collateral attacks upon these convictions. Further, expert testimony regarding the adequacy of prior counsel would probably need to be prepared in many of the cases.

While it is not possible to estimate the indirect impact of such legislation on client decision-making in first and second felony cases, there is little question that some clients will be influenced to go to trial rather than plead guilty when they know that this conviction will make them eligible for life in prison if they commit another felony. More trials mean higher costs for each criminal justice agency.

It should also be noted that these cases will give rise to many conflicts of interest which will necessitate withdrawal of the Public Defender Agency and the assignment of OPA to provide representation. These conflicts of interest will arise because the Public Defender will have provided representation in the earlier cases which resulted in convictions, and which would be subject to collateral attack during the litigation of each "Three Strikes" case.

Because OPA criminal lawyers are currently at maximum caseload capacity, and because of the loss of one such attorney in FY93, it will be necessary to add an additional experienced attorney to provide representation in these cases throughout the state.

Further, because at least one of these cases each year will require the appointment of conflict counsel, at an estimated cost of $60,000 per case, contractual costs will also be high.

Justification
The Anchorage Office of Public Advocacy presently has four attorney positions devoted to criminal defense. These attorneys are also handling several major cases outside of the Anchorage area as staff coverage and travel is more cost effective than contracting major cases to private attorneys in rural areas. Current caseloads indicate that these four attorneys cannot absorb the additional cases which would result from this legislation. It is necessary that an additional attorney be added to the Anchorage staff to cover the resultant increased caseload.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The original of this bill (HB 38) would have mandated a 99 sentence for a conviction of an unclassified or Class A felony if the offender has been previously convicted of two or more separate "most serious" felonies. This committee substitute (CS HB 38 (JUD)) would mandate a minimum 40 year sentence under the same circumstances. It would allow a sentence reduction after the greater of one half the sentence or 30 years while the original would have allowed reduction after 49.5 years. This CS allows discretion to the prosecutor whether or not to seek sentencing under the new sub section (l).

This bill would create a substantially larger prison population as they they continue to serve beyond the current 12.5 year average sentence, No impact would accrue until after that time

Individuals convicted under current statutes who might be convicted under the enhanced "three strikes" structure of this bill serve an average of 12.5 years in prison. These are demonstrably our most serious, most feared offenders. It is reasonable to expect that the Department of Law will prosecute to the full extent of the law in each case. Under current procedures few, if any, sentences will be reduced below the mandatory forty years.

Correctional professionals and non-professionals may disagree about what additional risks this group will present to other inmates and correctional staff simply by virtue of the fact that they will spend most, if not all of their life in prison. There can be no dispute about the fact that a huge burden will begin to accumulate as these individuals pass the point where they would otherwise have been released from prison. That is, after about thirteen years.

Even if each offender served the minimum of 30 years the group would peak at 450 inmates before leveling off. This is a group larger than could be housed in any prison in the Alaska at this time. The DOC would have to begin planning one $80 million dollar prison in the near future just for the population increase resulting from this bill.

Alaska Court System
Fiscal Analysis
CSHB 38 (JUD)

CSHB 38 (Jud) amends Alaska's presumptive sentencing laws to provide that a defendant convicted of a third felony offense is subject to a mandatory term of imprisonment of at least 40 years but not more than 99 years. The first two convictions must be for a "most serious" felony, and the third conviction must be for a class A or unclassified felony. The prosecutor has the discretion to pursue or not pursue the 40-year to 99-year mandatory sentence.

A most serious felony is any unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11 or an attempt or conspiracy to commit, or criminal solicitation under AS 11.31.110 of, an unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11.

The Department of Law has estimated that prosecutors will seek the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence 15 times per year. Because of the potential sentence, these cases can be expected to approach first-degree murder cases in the amount of court time spent on the actual trial, as well as on evidentiary hearings, collateral attacks on previous convictions, and other pre- and post-trial motion work. This is estimated to average three weeks of trial time per case, plus one-half week of additional hearings. If the defendants were not subject to a 40-year to 99-year sentence, only three of these 15 cases would statistically be expected to go to trial.

In addition to the costs of the third felony case, the existence of the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence will encourage offenders charged with their first or second most serious felony to fight the charge more strenuously, because conviction would greatly increase the chance that the offender would be vulnerable to the mandatory sentence at a later time. In the years 1984 through 1990, an average of about 100 defendants each year were charged with a first or second most serious felony. Trial rates for defendants charged with those felonies currently range from eight to 20 percent, depending on the classification of the offense (class B, class A, or unclassified). If the trial rate increases by 50 percent, over 50 additional felony trials will be held each year. Such changes in the trial rate are not unprecedented. When the plea bargaining ban was imposed in 1975, the felony trial rate doubled during the first year and tripled during the second year. Because it is impossible to predict what increase will occur in the trial rate as a result of CSHB 38 (Jud), this note does not reflect those costs. Should CSHB 38 (Jud) result in a significantly higher trial rate the court system will need to return to the legislature for additional funding.

For similar reasons, it can be expected that the appeal rate and rate of applications for post-conviction relief will increase among the 900 defendants charged each year with a first or second most serious felony. Again, this note does not attempt to quantify those costs.

The Judiciary Committee Substitute for HB 38 changes the proposed 99-year mandatory term of imprisonment for third-time "most serious felony" offenders to allow courts to sentence these offenders to a definite term of imprisonment of at least 40 years and not less than 99 years. Thus a court could sentence an offender to a set term anywhere within the range of 40 years and 99 years. As provided in both the original bill and the Judiciary Committee CS, a third-time most serious felony offenders could apply for a modification or reduction of sentence after serving one-half of the definite term, except that the CS provides that an offender could not apply for modification or reduction until after serving the greater of one-half of the term, or 30 years. An offender would not be eligible for a good time deduction. Consequently, in determining the greater of one-half of the definite term served or 30 years, good time credit could not be considered. As a result, and under even the best of circumstances, the minimum time served by a third-time most felony offender would be 30 years.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION:

Most offenders would obviously serve terms of substantially greater length. Although the CS, by establishing a 40-to-99 year sentencing range, in lieu of a mandatory 99-year sentence, will result in some pleas, the majority of offenders will still present a toughened defense. We have therefore reduced our fiscal note costs by one of three positions to reflect this change, but we are continuing two positions to reflect the need to fully prosecute the majority of offenders who are expected to vigorously resist a definite term sentence.

ANALYSIS:

INTRODUCTION

This proposal requires that certain repeat felony offenders receive prison terms that are the equivalent of life without parole. This is similar to proposals that have either been enacted or are being considered in other states. It is noteworthy that this punishment is harsher than that for first degree murder.

The actual expense is somewhat speculative, in that it is difficult to get a statistical "handle" on how many cases will be subject to "three strikes" punishment. For purposes of this fiscal analysis, the Public Defender Agency will rely on what are believed to be rather conservative estimates generated by the Alaska Judicial Council, which in turn were used by the Department of Law for its fiscal note.

Using those estimates, the Public Defender (PD) expects it will handle between 10 to 15 cases per year where the client will be facing a 99-year term, without parole release potential. Just as homicide cases are currently the most expensive, challenging and labor-intensive prosecutions to defend, these "three strikes" cases will be similarly treated because of the grave consequences attached to a conviction. Trials will be the rule, not the exception. Only the most experienced staff attorneys will be involved in these cases, adding to personal services costs. It is likely the litigation of these matters will involve significant investigation, extensive pre-trial motion work, and long and difficult trials. As a result, the court system and prosecutor's office will be affected.

Research has shown that states with three strikes laws have found fewer cases are "plea bargained." (Plea bargaining was recently reinstated in Alaska.) In those states where three strikes laws have been passed, defendants are less likely to plead to any "strike" felony because of the potential impact the strike could have on them if they reoffend. This translates into more trials, which means more prosecutors, Public Defenders, judges and court personnel to handle those cases. In Los Angeles, the district attorney eliminated entire sections of his office, including Environmental Crimes, Consumer Protection and the Major Fraud Unit, in order to free up enough attorneys to handle impact of the three strikes legislation. See "The Law that Brought the Criminal Justice System to its Knees," Los Angeles Times (March 27, 1994).

As part of its investigation and pre-trial workup, the defense will have to consider mounting what are called in the law "collateral attacks" of the prior convictions which trigger the "three strikes" penalty. Put another way, attorneys will necessarily explore the possibility of invalidating one or more of the prior convictions to avoid the 99-year penalty. This effort will involve considerable effort on the part of support staff, hence the request for paralegal assistants in this fiscal note. It will also necessitate contracting with attorneys in other states to collaterally attack out-of-state felony convictions which serve to trigger the 99-year penalty. For example, if a client has a felony conviction in Idaho or California, a determination will have to be made as to whether 1) the conviction qualifies as felony level conduct in Alaska, 2) the conviction was based on a knowing and voluntary plea, 3) the defendant was represented by competent counsel, 4) the conviction was susceptible to some set-aside or expungement procedure which was not exercised but could have been. This is only a partial list of issues which will arise in the context of out-of-state convictions, and which may require the assistance of lower 48 lawyers paid on contract. These lawyers will have to go into courts in their state and file post-conviction petitions moving to set aside convictions if a legal basis is found to support such a filing.

These collateral attacks, which the Department of Law acknowledges in its fiscal analysis will be part of the "three strikes" litigation landscape, is expensive and time consuming. It will also potentially involve some out-of-state travel on the part of investigators, paralegals and lawyers. It is for these reasons that additional contractual and travel funds are required.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
1995 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 38

FISCAL IMPACT

In order to absorb the impact of these cases, the Public Defender will require additional resources. Like the Department of Law, this will mean more staff lawyers. Because the lawyers will need support for the collateral attacks aforementioned along with investigation and pre-trial preparation, paralegal assistants and a secretarial position are also required.

One attorney IV position will be placed in the Anchorage office and one in Fairbanks. Anchorage will also receive one paralegal assistant and a secretary. Fairbanks will add one paralegal position. These lawyers and support staff will also be responsible for responding to "three strikes" prosecutions arising in rural locations, either by handling the case, or by providing support for the rural PD offices where the cases are sited. (It should be noted that the attorney positions will also absorb any additional appellate work which will generate post-conviction as concerns these cases.)

CONCLUSION

It is the opinion of the Public Defender that this proposal will result in protracted, expensive litigation, which will have a reverberating impact on the entire justice system. It is suggested that, given the strict presumptive sentencing structure already in place in Alaska, this proposal be given very close scrutiny.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
1995 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

HB 38 substantially revises the original "Three Strikes" proposals made last year and should significantly reduce the number of criminal defendants susceptible to the 99 year prison term. The changes allow prosecutorial discretion, modify the way prior felony convictions are viewed by the court, and require that the final charge be an A or Unclassified felony.

The Alaska Judicial Council, which provided the statistical analysis related to the original HB 334, has not provided additional statistics regarding the potential impact of the new bill on criminal justice agencies. However, the assumptions regarding the 1994 fiscal notes remain valid. While the numbers of cases will undoubtedly be reduced by the modifications contained in HB 38, there is no question that litigation surrounding "Three Strikes" cases will be lengthy and costly. Costs will be dictated by the high stakes of each case, the necessity for collateral attacks on prior convictions both in State and Federal courts, and the certainty that each of these cases will go to trial.

Because of the necessity of attacking underlying convictions and the treatment of each case as most serious because of the severity of the sanction, litigation will require the filing of numerous motions, not only on the current charge, but in each prior case which resulted in convictions. This will require the review of voluminous records associated with each of the prior felony cases and the initiation of new litigation in each case. If that prior conviction occurred in a different state, it would be necessary to retain out-of-state counsel to launch the collateral attacks upon these convictions. Further, expert testimony regarding the adequacy of prior counsel would probably need to be prepared in many of the cases.

While it is not possible to estimate the indirect impact of such legislation on client decision-making in first and second felony cases, there is little question that some clients will be influenced to go to trial rather than plead guilty when they know that this conviction will make them eligible for life in prison if they commit another felony. More trials mean higher costs for each criminal justice agency.

It should also be noted that these cases will give rise to many conflicts of interest which will necessitate withdrawal of the Public Defender Agency and the assignment of OPA to provide representation. These conflicts of interest will arise because the Public Defender will have provided representation in the earlier cases which resulted in convictions, and which would be subject to collateral attack during the litigation of each "Three Strikes" case.

Because OPA criminal lawyers are currently at maximum caseload capacity, and because of the loss of one such attorney in FY 93, it will be necessary to add an additional experienced attorney to provide representation in these cases throughout the state.

Further, because at least one of these cases each year will require the appointment of conflict counsel at an estimated cost of $60,000 per case, contractual costs will also be high.

Justification The Anchorage Office of Public Advocacy presently has four attorney positions devoted to criminal defense. These attorneys are also handling several major cases outside of the Anchorage area as staff coverage and travel is more cost effective than contracting major cases to private attorneys in rural areas. Current caseloads indicate that these four attorneys cannot absorb the additional cases which would result from this legislation. It is necessary that an additional attorney be added to the Anchorage staff to cover the resultant increased caseload.

Re: CSHB 38am (Three Strikes)

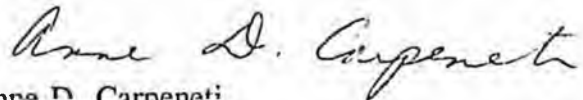

Dear Senators Halford and Frank:

I am writing concerning the testimony before the Senate Finance Committee regarding the three strikes legislation this morning. I stated that the Department of Law supported the bill but had reservations about the cost of implementing it. This is incorrect. The department neither supports nor opposes the bill. The department doesn't disagree that persons qualifying under the bill deserve the sentences authorized by the bill, and in fact, regularly argues for the imposition of lengthy sentences for those offenders. However, given the shrinking resources that our state is experiencing, we believe that the benefits of a mandatory "three strikes" legislation do not outweigh its significant fiscal costs.

Thank you for allowing me to correct this error.

Very truly yours,

RE: HB 38

During the Senate Finance hearing this morning on HB 38, a message regarding the bill was left on my voice mail. The name the gentleman gave sounds like "Beaver Bently." He said he was calling from Homer (235-7389) to advise that he has a problem with the legislation in that it appears to conflict with Article I, Section 9, Paragraph 3 of the U.S. Constitution which says that no bill of attainder or ex post facto law will be passed. He suggested that accumulation of past felonies per HB 38 would violate that provision. The caller asked that someone respond to his call to discuss the issue. When I inquired of Senator Halford's office regarding who would be the best individual to speak to the concern, I was directed to forward the foregoing comment and request to the sponsor of the bill. We thus leave this matter in your capable hands.

SPONSOR STATEMENT
CSHB 38 (JUD)

HB 38 provides a definite term of imprisonment of 40-99 years for a specific group of offenders who have two separate prior class A or unclassified felony convictions.

Under this proposed legislation, discretionary parole and good time sentence reduction are not available to offenders who are sentenced to a definite term of 40 to 99 yrs. However, HB 38 allows those sentenced to a definite term of 40 to 99 yrs to ask the court for a reduction in sentence after they have served the greater of one half of the definite term or; 30 years.

This proposed legislation gives prosecutors some discretion in the decision to pursue third strike sentencing. This will avoid unjust results in certain cases where the evidence may be weak. This provision will also allow the prosecutor some flexibility to proceed with the normal presumptive sentencing provisions when necessary.

There are a costs involved in keeping a person incarcerated for an extended period of time. However, this legislation is crafted to keep cost to a minimum. The threat of strong punishments can shape behavior and deter crime. Some persistent offenders may find they want to move to a state without a three strikes statute or they may decide the third strike is not worth the rest of their life, and change their behavior. Persistent offenders are taking up costly time in our judicial system by committing similar crimes again and again.

It is time to close the revolving door too many repeat offenders depend upon. This proposed legislation will help make our state a safer place. I urge your positive consideration of this legislation.

ALASKA CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION'S POSITION PAPER OPPOSING HB 38

The most important impetus for the national movement towards three strikes legislation is the public's present preoccupation with crime. Despite the perception that serious crime is on the rise, the facts are that the murder rate in the United States 60 years ago is just about what it is today. In addition, according to figures released by the FBI, there has been little or no growth in the overall crime rate during the last two decades. In short, violent crime is no more a problem today than it was ten, twenty, or even sixty years ago.

The likely root of the public's fear is increasing media attention to individual cases of violent crime, combined with the fact that certain segments of the population -- such as young, non-white males -- have a greater chance of becoming a homicide victim now than ever before and the fact that the homicide rate for children under 14 is at or near record highs for the post-World War II era and rates for preschoolers 4 and younger have risen to their highest levels in 40 years.

Finally, while the rate of violent crime among younger people has risen, the rate among offenders aged 35 and older has decreased dramatically. Ironically, it is such older felons -- not the younger and more violent first-timers -- that HB 38 is designed to target directly.

Three-Strikes is Too Costly for the State

There appears to be a national consensus of opinion that three-strikes laws will cost a tremendous amount of money to implement and maintain. There are at least three significant ways in which a three-strikes law would be expected to impact Alaska's pocketbook: 1) costs associated with increased prison populations; 2) increasing health care costs for prisoners as they reach old age or who contract a terminal or physically debilitating disease while serving life sentences; and 3) costs incurred by the judiciary, the district attorney's offices, the Public Defender Agency, and the Office of Public Advocacy as a result of increased numbers of cases going to trial and a greater reluctance of defendants to plea bargain to any felony charge.

Costs of Maintaining Geriatric or Medically Incapacitated Prison Populations

One inevitable effect of three-strikes laws will be to turn prisons into nursing homes. Longer sentences will mean that Alaska will have to be prepared to spend to match the rising annual cost for each prisoner as he or she gets older and requires more medical attention. Nationally, estimates are that costs of incarceration rise 3 to 5 times as prisoners reach ages of 55 to 65 years.

In addition, "three-strikers" may also contract serious, debilitating or even terminal diseases which would eliminate them as a danger to society. Yet it appears, under present HB 38, that the earliest date that either the state or a person incarcerated under this legislation could even approach the courts for consideration of release would be 49 1/2 years after final sentencing. This will compel the state to care for these persons, often at great expense, through their death. The AkCLU would hope that humanity, alone, would dictate that the Legislature would consider amending this bill to provide for the release of "three-strikers" for medical reasons adjudged serious enough to remove them from consideration as a danger to society.

Three-Strikes Will Be Dangerous to the Public

There are several respects in which a three-strikes law is likely to prove counter-productive to its very purpose of protecting the public from violent crime. First, conservative and liberal commentators alike have expressed concern that criminals, faced with a third felony life sentence, will be more inclined to kill any victims or witnesses during commission of felony offenses. In fact, prosecutors and police officers in Washington State have observed, since the passage of the three-strikes law there, that criminals have been "showing a tendency to be more violent or desperate when officers try to arrest them."

Second, crowding of prisons with three-strikers may well lead to the forced early release of first and second offenders, who tend to be younger and statistically more likely to commit violent crimes again. This effect has already been documented in states where three-strikes laws have been implemented.

Finally, there will be fewer pleas to felony charges by defendants with nothing to gain and everything to lose. This could have two possible consequences. First, more defendants will go to trial and, because the state's evidence is usually weaker when it is willing to plea bargain, more defendants may well go free. Whereas a plea bargain might have put a defendant in prison on a reduced felony or misdemeanor charge when the state was unsure of its ability to prevail at trial, the defendant may end up walking free as a result of the three-strikes law. Second, prosecutors may go ahead and reduce serious felonies to misdemeanors in order to maintain manageable case loads, with obvious results. Neither of these possibilities is what the proponents of three-strikes laws, nor the sponsor of HB 38, had in mind.

Three-Strikes Will Be Ineffective

First, as you may already be aware, most third-offense defendants convicted of a murder in the first or second degrees or of kidnapping will be unaffected by a three-strikes law because they already are normally sentenced to life in prison under Alaska's presumptive sentencing statutes. Thus, under these circumstances the law is unnecessary.

Second, it is well-documented that most violent crimes are not premeditated, but are instead committed in the heat of passion or anger, or while the defendant is under the influence of alcohol or drugs. A three-strikes law will not act as a deterrent to any of these people. Finally, most criminals who commit premeditated violent crimes have no intention of being caught. They also have good reason to believe they won't be caught: there were 6.6 million violent crimes committed during 1992 in the United States, and only 742,130 violent crime arrests. This is further evidence that a three-strikes law will, as professed by many, have no effect on crime rates.

Discretion Will Be Taken From Judges, Given to Prosecutors

Three-strikes laws are mandatory minimums carried to an extreme. Under HB 38, Alaska judges would apparently have no discretion whatsoever to take into account anything about the three-strikes offender. The practical effect will be to place the discretionary decisions into the hands of prosecutors, who will decide with what to charge potential three-strikers. Instead of leaving to dispassionate judges the important decision about whether to imprison a person for life, that decision is handed completely over to the prosecution. The judge and the prosecutor become one and the same.

Three-Strikes Will Be Unjust and May Be Unconstitutional

Even more troubling are the potential racist effects of a three-strikes law that puts too much discretion in the hands of prosecutors. A habitual offender law in Florida, allowing severe sentences for criminals guilty of three previous felonies, was found to have had this problem during its first three years after enactment. In each of twenty statewide circuits, African-Americans were prosecuted under the law in greater proportion than whites who were similarly eligible. Statewide, prosecutors charged black defendants with three-strikes violations at three times the rate charged against white defendants also eligible for the charge. Faced with these facts, the criminal court judges in Palm Beach County voted unanimously to close down the habitual offender court altogether.

Given the present over-representation of the Alaska Native and African-American populations in Alaska's correctional institutions, the shift of discretion away from judges to prosecutors raises genuine concerns about the potential racist application of such a law.

Finally, serious constitutional questions exist about any law that imposes a mandatory life sentence. The Alaska Constitution contains a "cruel and unusual punishment" prohibition (Article I, section 12), which has been interpreted to make unconstitutional any "punishment so disproportionate to the offense committed as to be completely arbitrary and shocking to the sense of justice." Any three-strikes legislation is bound to be attacked on these grounds as it begins to be applied to specific cases.

Conclusion

LB 38 is not an effective, sound approach to the punishment of repeat offenders. As catchy as "Three-Strikes, You're Out," may sound to the ear, such a law is destined to be costly, ineffective, and unjust. As the American Civil Liberties Union's "briefing" on "10 Reasons to Oppose '3 Strikes, You're Out,'" states (copy attached):

Today, the United States has the dubious distinction of leading the industrialized world in per capita prison population, with more than one million men and women behind bars. The typical inmate in our prisons is minority, male, young, unemployed, and uneducated. This profile should tell us something important about the link between crime and lack of opportunity, between crime and lack of hope.

Only when we begin to deal with the conditions that cause so many of our young people to turn to crime and violence will we begin to realize a less crime ridden society.

For the above reasons, the Alaska Civil Liberties Union urges the House Judiciary Committee to defeat passage of House Bill 38.

A year later, '3 strikes' clogs jails, slows trials

By NANCY MCCARTHY
Staff Writer

One year after passage of California's "three strikes and you're out" law, many county jails are bulging, a trial backlog is growing, and 70 percent of the second or third strikes charged have been for nonviolent and nonserious offenses.

Although the effects of the tough law, designed to put the most hardened criminals behind bars for life, are just beginning to be felt, distinct trends have emerged:

• Thousands of offenders have been charged with either a second or a third strike.

• The number of plea bargains, which formerly accounted for resolution of 94 percent of felony cases nationwide, has plummeted.

• Most defendants are demanding jury trials, thus creating a backlog in

YOU'RE FULL.

COUNTY JAILS ARE BULGING, A TRIAL BACKLOG IS GROWING AND MOST SECOND AND THIRD STRIKES INVOLVE NONVIOLENT AND NONSERIOUS OFFENSES

the criminal courts and overcrowding county jails. Some offenders sentenced to county jail, therefore, are being released early.

• Because of the backlog, some district attorneys are prosecuting fewer misdemeanor cases. In addition, more courts are diverting resources from civil cases to criminal cases.

• Several counties have requested immediate budget increases for both prosecutor and public defender staffs to handle the increased workload.

• The intended effect of three strikes has been diluted in some cases when judges, juries and victims do not follow the letter of the law.

• Predictions of an explosion in the number of state prison inmates have not come true — yet.

• More than 100 appeals relating to three strikes are pending in California's appellate courts.

The three strikes law, says San Diego criminal defense attorney Elizabeth Semel, "is like using a sledgehammer on a fly."

Says Sandy Hatilla, chief deputy district attorney of Los Angeles, "It's like a dam building and it will burst at some point."

Fueled by voter rage over violent crime, the legislature approved three strikes legislation early last year and Gov. Wilson signed it into law March 7, 1994. In November, voters overwhelmingly approved Proposition 184, an essentially identical initiative.

Severe penalties

Both measures significantly increase prison sentences for felons with one or two prior violent or serious felony convictions. The mandatory prison sentence for third strike felons is 25 years to life in prison.

Secretary of State Bill Jones, who as an assemblyman last year authored AB 971, says he believes three strikes is working. "The goal of three strikes was to send the message that repeat offenders either headed to straighten out their lives and not commit any additional crimes or leave the state," he says. "That's precisely the message we're sending."

SPEAKER BROWN INTRODUCES MEASURE TO FREEZE BAR DUES AT $478

State Bar membership dues will remain frozen at $478 for the next two years under a fee bill introduced last month by Assembly Speaker Willie L. Brown Jr.

The two-year measure, if approved, means bar dues will not have increased since 1991 and will remain at the present level through 1997. It "will ensure that the State Bar continues to regulate attorneys and protect consumers in an effective and efficient manner," Brown said.

THE TWO-YEAR BILL KEEPS DUES AT THE SAME LEVEL THEY'VE BEEN SINCE THE LEGISLATURE INCREASED FEES IN 1991

A competing measure, which would slash dues by $100, has been introduced in the Senate by Quentin L. Kopp, D-San Francisco.

Brown's bill (AB 1435) would mean continuing austerity for the bar, which spends more than 70 percent of its budget on regulating and disciplining attorneys accused of misconduct. The bar has more than 145,000 members.

President Don Fischbach said the proposed law will permit the bar to continue the same level pute splicing, says the new law is working even better than he anticipated and like predictions of prison overcrowding and fiscal disaster have not proven true.

In addition, he attributes a 12 percent drop in the California murder rate over the last nine months, as well as a decline in the number of rapes and armed robberies, to three strikes.

Absorbing the brunt

The homicide drop, he says, means that "650 people are alive this year whose families don't have to grieve. That is significant. It's directly a result of three strikes because that's the only thing that changed this year."

Reynolds gets an argument from many law enforcement professionals as well as the state's nonpartisan legislative analyst, Lis Hill.

A report issued by Hill early this year found that California's counties have so far absorbed the brunt of three strikes' requirements and several of them, particularly large metropolitan counties, are reeling under the impact.

Because of the reduction in the number of plea bargains, the number of jury trials is expected to increase in some counties by well over 100 percent, her report found. Hill reported that Los Angeles prosecutors estimate the number of jury trials will increase 144 percent — from 2,410 in 1994 to 5,873 in 1995. Third strike cases will account for more than half of that increase.

Dramatic impact

San Diego County anticipates the number of jury trials will jump by almost 200 percent — from 200 to 385. And San Diego County expected a threefold increase — from 390 jury trials in 1992 to 1,300 last year.

The impact on both prosecutors and defense attorneys has been dramatic, but nowhere more so than in Los Angeles.

According to Battista, by the end of 1994, her office charged 1,624 third strike cases, 4,136 second strikes, and 7,379 first strikes.

Already short-staffed, the office was given an additional $4.1 million by the Board of Supervisors to handle the added work. "But even a slight increase in our workload is devastating," says Battista.

The Los Angeles public defender's office, which is representing the bulk of the defendants, received an additional $3 million from the supervisors and has hired 36 new attorneys, six investigators, seven paralegals and six secretaries.

More than three-fourths of his office's third strike cases are still pending, says Public Defender Michael Judge, and nearly as many second strike cases are pending — a total of 3,700 at the end of December.

In addition to a higher number of trials, Judge says the trials take longer. A first trial is held on the issue of guilt on the current offense. If a conviction results, a second trial is held on the issue of prior. In third strike cases, each side has 20 peremptory challenges available instead of the usual 10.

of public protection and other services. "This is a year of transition," Flashbach said. "We are evaluating various programs and looking for ways to be more cost-effective. But we will continue to provide our full range of services without any increase in fees."

Flashbach noted that the bar is attempting to implement recommended changes in its discipline system this year and also is awaiting the final report of the "future" commission, which is expected to offer numerous suggestions for change as well.

Last year, the bar undertook a comprehensive review of its operations which resulted in a 3 percent reduction, amounting to about $2.5 million, in the general fund. Attorneys who have one to three years of experience pay $410 annually, and new attorneys pay $379 in dues. Those with more than three years of practice pay the full $575.

In another dues-related development, the California Supreme Court agreed last month to review a suit challenging the bar's authority to force members to submit to binding arbitration complaints about how their dues money is used.

In October, the 3rd District Court of Appeal held that the arbitration hearing did not preclude subsequent lawsuits by fee objectors.

The case (Brotherhood v. State Bar of California) was originally brought to challenge the way the bar implemented the Keller decision with the Hudson deduction, which permits members to deduct a portion of their dues for so-called "non-chargeable" bar activities. (See story on Page 18 for an update on the Brotherhood suit.)

In other legislative action, Sen. Nicholas Petrini, D-Oakland, introduced SB 596, a bill to restrict State Bar activities.

The measure would delete the bar's authority to accredit law schools in California and would limit its activities to admission and discipline only.

Existing law requires candidates for admission to the bar to have graduated from a law school accredited by the bar's examining committee or to have otherwise studied law.

PRELIMINARY IMPACTS OF THE RESPONSES TO THE "THREE STRIKES" LAW

IMPACTS

- Thousands of cases being prosecuted
- Lower guilty pleas by defendants
- Significant increase in jury trials
- Increase in persons awaiting trial in county jails
- Low immediate impact on state prison population than expected

RESPONSES

- Backlogs push less serious cases out of courts
- Early release of sentenced offenders from county jails
- Increase in jail security
- Arguments for expansion of some correctional/justice agencies
- Behavioral responses from some judges, juries and victims

he adds. "Now we have a petty theft getting a full-fledged jury trial." More than 10 percent of the second and third strike cases in his office are petty theft, he noted.

Indeed, critics of three strikes emphasize that the vast majority of felons sent to prison under the new law are not convicted of serious or violent crimes.

THIS IS . . . FINANCIALLY ASININE. IF YOU REALLY WANT TO TARGET VIOLENT REPEAT OFFENDERS, THERE'S A MUCH MORE RESPONSIBLE WAY TO DO IT.

The legislative analyst found that during the first eight months following implementation of three strikes, 70 percent of those charged with a second or third strike involved nonviolent or nonserious offenses.

Of those convicted of a second strike, only 17 percent were for a violent or serious crime, and of the 63 convicted of a third strike, about 20 committed a violent or violent offense. Eleven third strike convictions were for drug possession.

"This is irresponsible and financially asinine," says Elizabeth Bonal. "If you really want to target violent repeat offenders, there's a much more responsible way to do it."

County jails

One of the most immediate impacts of the new law affects the county jails. Orange and Santa Clara counties estimate that they will need an additional 300 and 137 beds respectively to accommodate three strike defendants during pre-trial detention.

Defendants awaiting trial in Los Angeles represent two-thirds of the inmates in the county jail, says public defender Judge, and the overcrowding is forcing the early release of convicted inmates. Before three strikes, inmates doing time in the county jail served an average of two-thirds of their sentences, Judge says. They now serve 40 percent of their sentences.

Because of the slow pace of trials, the impact of three strikes on the state prison system has yet to be felt. Nonetheless, said analyst Hill, three strikes "will have a major impact on the state's prison population. In order to just maintain existing levels of overcrowding, they (the California Department of Corrections) will need at least 18 new prisons by 1999" at an estimated cost of about $4.5 billion.

CDC has established a goal of sufficient prison capacity to house inmates at an average overcrowding level of 120 to 130 percent of design capacity. That means that by mid-1999, the state would have to build 18 prisons at a cost of about $9.3 billion. Hill said that goal is impossible to achieve.

Mike Reynolds believes the federal crime bill designed specifically to help pay the cost of prison construction will effectively solve the prison construction problem. California would receive as much as $7 billion in federal funds to build new prisons, he says.

The longterm impact of three strikes, Reynolds believes, will be a real reduction in crime for two reasons. Criminals incarcerated for long periods on a second strike will be released from prison at an age when recidivism declines, he says.

"We've looked them up for the lesser amount of time at the least cost to the state of California during their most criminally productive years," he says. "Thus we have saved the state tremendous costs in the long term."

Second, Reynolds said the possibility of a third strike serves as a real deterrent. "A good number will either leave the state or get their life together," he says. "The last option they'll choose is to return to prison. That will make for a dramatically safer state."

Some say Reynolds' arguments amount to "a myth that the supply of defendants is finite."

Certainly, budgetary concerns are very real. A RAND Corporation study which estimated that full implementation of three strikes will reduce serious felonies committed by adults by between 22 and 34 percent said that reduction will cost an extra $4.5 billion to $6.3 billion per year in current dollars. Full implementation would cost every taxpayer an additional $300 a year, the study said, or will require deep cuts in other programs.

No money for trial court judges has been added to the state budget since 1987.

And there are questions of fairness and legal discretion. Defense attorneys believe their clients are receiving unduly harsh sentences. Some judges believe their judicial discretion is impeded by three strikes. Some district attorneys believe their prosecutorial discretion is seriously limited.

"What we struggle with daily is how to appropriately use our discretion," says Sandy Battista. "We're trying to give some discretion to our head agencies to look at cases and ask if it is the furtherance of justice to strike a prior" in some cases it is."

3 strikes: How one county does it

San Mateo district attorney worries about fiscal impact but has not seen gridlock experienced by other counties

By JAMES P. FOX

In February 1994, I wrote an article for the California Bar Journal setting forth concerns I had about the then proposed "Three Strikes and You're Out" legislation and pending initiatives. Since one year has elapsed, a review of implementation and policies is appropriate.

Although I expressed concerns regarding the necessity and wisdom of the law as drafted, my obligation as a district attorney is to prosecute violations of the law. I am still very concerned regarding the ultimate fiscal impact of the law. I have not let that concern inhibit my adherence to the law.

No plea bargains

We have not engaged in any form of plea bargain and three of the defendants who had the benefit of our discretion have exercised their right to trial. The other 17 defendants pleaded guilty and have been sentenced to prison.

In four cases we charged and then struck all of the priors. All four defendants entered guilty pleas and received local time with drug treatment. We have dismissed four cases based on insufficient evidence.

The courts in San Mateo County have not experienced the gridlock which I read about in other counties as a result of the new law. I accepted as true the statements made during the legislative process by the author of the bill and the proponent of the initiative that prosecutors retained discretion to resolve cases in which we believe an injustice would occur with full implementation of the law.

Level of consistency

In order to guarantee some level of consistency, the decision regarding all two strike cases is made by the assistant district attorney in charge of municipal court and general felony prosecution in consultation with the deputy in charge of the municipal court branch. All three strike cases are evaluated by the same assistant in consultation with the chief deputy. It is my opinion that the system leads to a fair and uniform approach to these cases.

We consider a number of factors in evaluating three strike cases. If the new offense is neither a serious nor violent charge, we look at the

Scores of appeals winding their way through courts

Scores of appeals of the "three strikes" law are winding their way through California's appellate courts, which have so far decided two challenges.

Deputy attorney general David Rose says between one and two dozen cases are pending in northern California, and Sandy Pittillo, chief assistant district attorney of Los Angeles, says her office had 10 cases pending in its appellate division as of Feb. 4.

The Court of Appeal has issued two rulings. On Jan. 13, the 4th District reversed a San Diego Superior Court judge who struck two prior felony convictions of a convicted drug dealer and sentenced him to six years in prison instead of 25 years to life.

(A proposal in the legislature, authored by Assemblyman Richard Ralney, R-Fullerton Grove, would qualify the appellate ruling.)

In February, the 1st District rejected an equal protection challenge to a part of the law that reduces the number of credits repeat offenders receive for good behavior in prison.

The court ruled that the law does not improperly give fewer credits to convicted thieves than to nonviolent murderers.

Rose said about a dozen appeals are based on the issue of whether a prior strike for a serious felony can result in both a five-year enhancement and a doubling or tripling of a sentence.

Another challenge argues that strikes incurred before the statute was enacted should not count, and a third concerns a dispute over whether "websters," offenses which can be charged as either a felony or a misdemeanor, can be reduced by the trial court after they have been charged.

SOME CASES RESULTED IN MUCH LONGER PRISON SENTENCES FOR VERY DANGEROUS INDIVIDUALS. I AM NOT SURE SOCIETY FEELS ANY SAFER.

offense is a robber (punishable either as a misdemeanor or felony), two defendants with identical records for three strike purposes could be punished very differently. Misdemeanor punishment is a maximum of eight months in the county jail while felony punishment is a minimum of 20 years in prison.

Shifting resources

I also remain concerned about the shifting of state resources to the prison system at the expense of other valuable services, such as higher education. In view of proposed tax decreases at the state level there are massive increases in prison expenses, the only alternative is an equal reduction in resources currently devoted to other services.

While implementation of the three strikes law has not been devastating to the justice system in San Mateo County as it has in other counties, we have seen some impact. There have been some cases which resulted in much longer prison sentences for very dangerous individuals. I am not sure society feels any safer.

The experts interpret the effect of the tough law

By RANDY McARTHUR
Staff Writer

A study by the RAND Corporation last fall undertook to answer key questions raised by passage of the three strikes law: How much will crime be reduced? How much will it cost and where will the money come from? What are the alternatives? The findings, in a nutshell:

Both the benefits and the costs of the new law will be substantial.

Alternatives can be devised that would achieve most or all of the benefits at less cost. California's budget is so constrained that it is unlikely that the new law will be fully implemented. The study found that if implemented as written, three strikes will reduce serious felonies committed by adults in California between 32 and 34 percent. (Juveniles, who account for about one-sixth of all arrests for violent crimes, are not affected by the law.) About one-third of the felonies eliminated will be violent crimes such as murder, rape and assault causing great body injury. The others will be less violent or nonviolent, but still serious.

RAND estimated the cost of this crime reduction at between $4.8 billion and $6.8 billion per year and concluded that prison costs will overwhelm any savings to police and courts.

It suggested alternatives such as extended sentences for a violent felony only, elimination of the third strike provision and a guaranteed full-term sentence. For each alternative, the cost would drop more than the effectiveness. For example, applying the law's penalties only to violent felons would save half its strike cost but reduce two-thirds of its effectiveness. The guaranteed full-term alternative would be just as effective as the new law, but at a substantially lower cost, the study found. It would increase sentences for all serious offenders, even first timers, and pay for it by not imprisoning many minor felons.

Funding three strikes as it now stands will not be easy, RAND concluded. Minimum spending on education is locked in to the state constitution and is expected to increase from 36 percent of the general fund now to 47 percent in 2003. Health and welfare costs will continue to escalate. Three strikes will double the Department of Corrections' state of the general fund. These factors place tremendous pressure on other state programs, ranging from higher education to fighting forest fires.

"Clearly, something's got to give," the study concluded. "It may be the three strikes law itself. Criminal justice officials may simply not have the money to fully implement it. If that turns out to be the case, the new law will have had little effect on violent crime then eliminated here. How much less is impossible to predict."

qualifying priors. If the defendant was just released from prison and has re-offended, even by committing a nonviolent offense, we would prosecute as a third strike. If, however, there has been a substantial period of time between the last prior and the new offense, we would not pursue the case as a three strike case. If the new offense is either serious or violent, we will prosecute the case without striking priors.

I remain concerned about the possible disparate treatment cases might receive based on the broad range of possibilities. If a new

A legislative analyst's report about California's prison population offered a similarly grim prediction about the cost of three strikes. A projected increase in the number of inmates over the next five years of 84,000 — from 123,000 to 211,000 — the report noted, "equals the increase that the state prison system incurred over the past 10 years."

This means that unless more prisons are built, overcrowding will increase in the next five years, reaching 226 percent in mid-1999 — nearly three inmates for each space designed to house one. To hold overcrowding at 120 to 130 percent of design capacity, a CDC goal, the state would have to build 38 prisons at a cost of about $9.6 billion, a goal that "cannot be achieved," the analyst said.

Just to maintain the current 152 percent overcrowding level, the state needs to build about 15 prisons, costing some $4.4 billion.

Currently, less than $10 million is available from past prison bond measures for appropriation by the legislature. However, the report estimated that the federal crime bill should provide about $1.2 billion in prison construction grants.

"With the enactment of the three strikes legislation, the state is expected to incur unprecedented growth in its prison population," the analyst concludes. "... The state's costs for expanding and operating its prison system will require an increasing share of the state's budget."

MEMORANDUM

March 22, 1995

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary CSHB 38(JUD) (Work Order No. 9-LS0187C)

TO: Representative Con Bunde
Attn: Pattie Swenson

FROM: Jerry Luckhaupt JEL
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill, please be advised that a sectional summary is not an authoritative statement of a bill and what it does - the bill is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill provides findings and intent.

Section 2 of the bill amends AS 12.55.025(e) by clarifying that definite terms for certain three time felony offenders, added by sec. 7 of the bill, do not affect the court's ability to impose consecutive sentences.

Section 3 of the bill amends AS 12.55.125(c) by providing a conforming change to make it clear that the presumptive sentences provided in that subsection only apply if the defendant is not subject to sentencing as a third most serious felony offender under Sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 4 of the bill amends AS 12.55.125(f) to provide consistency with language being added in sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 5 of the bill amends AS 12.55.125(i) by providing a conforming change to make it clear that the presumptive sentences provided in that subsection only apply if the defendant is not subject to sentencing as a third most serious felony offender under Sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 6 of the bill amends AS 12.55.125(j) to provide that a person sentenced to a definite term under sec. 7 of the bill may apply to the court for a sentence reduction after serving one half of the sentence or 30 years, whichever is greater.

Section 7 of the bill amends AS 12.55.125 by providing a new subsection (l) that requires a court to sentence a defendant convicted of an unclassified or class A felony to a definite term of imprisonment, of not less than 40 years and not more than 99 years, when the defendant has been previously convicted of at least two most serious felonies and the prosecutor has filed notice to seek the definite sentence. This section also provides that the definite term may not be suspended or reduced.

Section 8 of the bill amends AS 12.55.145(a) to explain how a conviction can qualify as a prior most serious felony conviction for purposes of sentencing under sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 9 of the bill amends AS 12.55.145(c) to provide the procedure by which a defendant may challenge the use of a conviction as a prior most serious felony conviction at sentencing under sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 10 of the bill amends AS 12.55.145(d) relating to the burden of proof of showing that a conviction is a prior most serious felony conviction for purposes of sentencing under sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 11 of the bill amends AS 12.55.145 by adding a new subsection (f) that explains when a prior conviction has occurred for use at sentencing under AS 12.55.145.

Section 12 of the bill amends AS 12.55.155(c)(20) by providing a conforming change to the change made in sec. 8 of the bill.

Section 13 of the bill amends AS 12.55.185 by adding a new paragraph (14) that provides a definition of what is a "most serious felony."

Section 14 of the bill amends AS 33.16.090(b) to provide that a person receiving a definite term under AS 12.55.125(l) is not eligible for discretionary parole during the entire term.

Section 15 of the bill amends AS 33.20.010(a) to provide that a person receiving a mandatory term under AS 12.55.125(a)(after the effective date of this bill) or a definite term under AS 12.55.125(l) may not earn good time deductions from the term.

Section 16 of the bill amends AS 33.30.101 by adding a new subsection (c) that provides that furlough regulations may not allow for the granting of a furlough to any inmate serving a definite term under AS 12.55.125(l) except in certain limited instances.

Section 17 of the bill amends AS 33.30.161(b) by adding a new paragraph (5) that provides that an inmate serving a definite term under AS 12.55.125(l) may not serve the inmate's sentence in a correctional restitution center.

Section 18 of the bill provides an applicability section.

Section 19 of the bill provides notice that the change made in sec. 6 of the bill has the effect of modifying Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 35 which thereby necessitates a two-thirds vote.

¹ Where the number of cases in a particular crime category is small (n<25), percentages are not necessarily representative of the population and should not be used to make statements about murderers or rapists in general. The information should be used only as a rough estimate of what characteristics the actual population might have.

Western District of Washington¹, called on the LECC Advisory Board² to form a Triggerlock Task Force. This Task Force will meet on a regular basis to develop and implement strategies to "lock the triggers" of violent criminals - permanently. These criminals, especially repeat offenders, have demonstrated that only incarceration keeps them from committing new crimes. Recent FBI statistics reflect that violent crime was up 10 percent in 1991. Further studies show that 6 percent of the criminal population is committing 70 percent of the crime. One of the most effective ways to combat the armed criminal is to target these individuals and vigorously investigate, prosecute and imprison them. The Triggerlock Task Force will actively pursue drug traffickers and violent offenders, such as murderers, rapists, gang leaders -- virtually anyone who uses a gun in the commission of a crime is a potential target.

¹The Western District of Washington is comprised of the 19 counties West of the crest of the Cascades - Clallam, Clark, Cowlitz, Grays Harbor, Island, Jefferson, King, Kitsap, Lewis, Mason, Pacific, Pierce, San Juan, Skagit, Skamania, Snohomish, Thurston, Wahkiakum and Whatcom Counties.

²The LECC Advisory Board is comprised of representatives from throughout Western Washington. City Agencies: Patrick Fitzsimons, Chief, Seattle Police Department; Rod Frederiksen, Chief, Vancouver Police Department; Don Pierce, Chief, Bellingham Police Department. County Agencies: C. Dan Clem, Kitsap County Prosecutor; Norm Maleng, King County Prosecutor, H. Steward Menefee, Grays Harbor County Prosecutor; Jim Scharf, Snohomish County Sheriff. State Agencies: Ken Eikenberry, Washington State Attorney General; George Tellevik, Chief, Washington State Patrol. Federal Agencies: William D. Gore, Special Agent-in-Charge, Federal Bureau of Investigation; Dixon McClary, Special Agent-in-Charge, Environmental Protection Agency; Ray McKinnon, Special Agent-in-Charge, Drug Enforcement Administration; Chris Nelson, Special Agent-in-Charge, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; Noreen Skagen, United States Marshal; Steve Carlisle, LECC Manager. Canadian Agency: John Sebastian, Chief Superintendent, Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

There are times when state laws do not provide appropriate sanctions against gun-using offenders. Federal prosecutions emanating from state violations can be of enormous help. Project Triggerlock has a simple, effective design - federal firearms laws carry tough penalties. They will now be fully employed against gun-using violators not only of federal laws, but of certain state and local laws as well. Absent evidentiary problems, there will be no plea bargains.

Since career criminals and violent offenders are normally encountered while committing street crime, their cases are usually investigated and prosecuted at the state and county levels. Project Triggerlock is not intended to compete with or supplant the traditional local response to violent criminals and career criminals. Rather, it is intended to assist state and local authorities in this area of enforcement by providing a method to refer those violent offenders who use or possess a firearm and are such a menace to their communities that a lengthy, mandatory prison term is the only appropriate response.

STRATEGY

The Triggerlock Task Force for the Western District of Washington will focus on three goals:

❖ In California, the Federal Court has dictated the number of changes of clothes which must be provided inmates each week.

It is unlikely that this understanding of the Eighth Amendment (which forbids "cruel and unusual punishment") is within the intent of the U.S. Constitution. The extraordinary burdens placed by Federal Courts on state corrections authorities have contributed to an escalation in prison costs. From 1960 to 1990, per-inmate operating costs (current expenditures) nearly doubled (inflation adjusted.)

Immense savings in direct costs to the public, as well as a significant reduction in crime with its consequent savings in both financial cost and human suffering, could be realized simply by putting and keeping more convicted offenders in prison. This is not an impossible task.

If the cost per inmate had remained within the inflation rate since 1960, nearly an additional $5.5 billion would have been available in 1990 alone for additional corrections capacity, tax reductions, or other public services. Some states achieved this level of cost control and better; the operating cost per inmate actually decreased in New Hampshire, Delaware and Oregon.

When prisoners are provided better institutional living conditions than they have available outside of prison, one of the primary purposes of punishment is undercut. "The infliction of disutility...is one of the objectives of criminal punishment; only if the only objective of punishment were incapacitation could it be argued that living conditions should be as comfortable in prison as outside."³

³ Davenport v. DeRobenis, 844 F.2d 1310, 1313 (7th Cir. 1988) (Posner, J.).

HIGHLIGHTS

In 1960:

- ❖ There was a total of 3,384,200 million crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The chance of being a victim of a crime was 1 in 53.
- ❖ There was a total of 288,460 million violent crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The chance of being a victim of a violent crime was 1 in 622.
- ❖ While crimes were escalating throughout the 1960s, the actual prison population was on the decline; the aggregate national prison population fell from 190,000 in 1960 to 174,000 in 1972.

By 1980:

- ❖ There were 13,408,300 million crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The crime rate had risen over 215 percent above its 1960 level.
- ❖ The chance of being a victim of crime was 1 in 17.
- ❖ There were 1,344,520 million violent crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The violent crime rate had risen over 270 percent. The chance of being a victim of a violent crime was 1 in 168.
- ❖ From 1960 to 1980, the states that had the largest increases in imprisonment rates had the smallest increases in crime rates; while the states that had the sharpest decline in their incarceration rates had the largest increases in crime rates. The trend continued from 1980 to 1992.
- ❖ While the trends in each state are consistent, great differences exist among the states as to the degree of change. Between 1960 and 1980 the crime rate in California increased more than 125 percent, while in New Hampshire the crime rate increased over 579 percent.

By 1992:

- ❖ Crime rates had increased but had been curbed. There was a total of 14,438,200 million crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The crime rate was 200 percent above its 1960 level.
- ❖ The chance of being a victim of a crime was 1 in 18.
- ❖ Violent crime had soared to 371 percent above its 1960 level.
- ❖ There were 1,932,246 million violent crimes reported to law enforcement authorities.
- ❖ The chance of being a victim of a violent crime was 1 in 132.
- ❖ Since 1987, the percentage of juvenile arrests for violent crimes has increased more than 50 percent.
- ❖ In 1991, people under the age of 21 were responsible for more than one-third of all murders in the country.
- ❖ Today, a woman faces four times the chance of being raped than in 1960. In 1960 a woman's chance of being raped was 1 in 10,400; in 1980 it was 1 in 2,717.
- ❖ In the ten states with the highest increases in incarceration rates between 1980 and 1992, crime rates were substantially reduced. Even so, in all ten states their crime rates are more than double their 1960 levels. The states are: New Hampshire, New Jersey, California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Arizona, Rhode Island, Idaho, Alaska, and Delaware.
- ❖ Approximately, one-third of all violent crimes are committed by an offender who is on probation, parole or pretrial release. This year more than 1,200 violent crimes will be committed every day by convicted felons on probation or parole; almost 700 more will be committed by a defendant on pretrial release.
- ❖ In 1990, the average prison sentence for all felony offenses which resulted in a prison sentence was 6 years, months. However, the actual time served in prison for that sentence was 2 years, 1 month, only one-third of the sentence imposed.
- ❖ In 1990, the average prison sentence for violent offenses which resulted in a prison sentence was 9 years, 11 months; the time served was 3 years, 9 months, or 38 percent of the sentence imposed.
- ❖ From 1960 to 1991 the correctional expenditure per adult inmate increased by nearly double.

'Revolving door' syndrome feeds cycle of violence

By Sam Vincent Meddis
USA TODAY

In Washington, D.C., a teenager facing charges of deadly assault goes joy-riding while free on $1,000 bond. He fatally shoots a woman in another car because he feels like "bustin' somebody."

In Hugo, Okla., a 39-year-old with a record of assault and property crimes buys an assault weapon and kills two people, wounds three others, then kills himself.

Many blame the easy access to guns for such carnage. But similarly under fire is a justice system that, to critics, seems to do little more than recycle criminals to the streets.

That outrage has sparked calls for a crackdown on repeat criminals nationwide: Washington state voters approved stiffer sentencing last year, and California voters consider an initiative this fall.

About 30 states are weighing similar measures, most of which provide long sentences without early parole for many repeat offenders.

"People have just had it — they don't want to live with the fear anymore," says Paul McNulty of the First Freedom Coalition, a group that advocates stiff crime penalties.

Looking at the numbers, repeat crime seems to be becoming the nationwide norm:

▶ About 60% of prison inmates have been behind bars before, according to a U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics study; 44% were on probation or pa-

'3 strikes, you're out' likely in California

If what could spark a new wave of citizen action nationwide, California voters are expected to approve a crackdown on career criminals in a November 1994 ballot measure.

The measure, known as "Three Strikes and You're Out," would double sentences for criminals convicted of second serious felonies — and require a minimum of 25 years to life for a third offense.

Thirty other states are considering similar measures to toughen sentences for repeat offenders.

Gov. Pete Wilson supports the concept, and supporters appear to have easily topped the 385,000 signatures needed to place it on the 1994 ballot.

The initiative has been pushed by Fresno photographer Mike Reynolds, whose 18-year-old daughter was killed by a parolee in June.

role when re-arrested.

▶ A mere 108,000 criminals in one federal study had a staggering 1.9 million arrests between them.

Recent U.S. and Pennsylvania studies found about 6% of criminals commit nearly 70% of violent crimes.

Targeting those criminals sounds simple. The reality is tougher.

WASHINGTON — Americans are almost five times more likely to be the victim of a violent crime in the 1990s than in 1960, the nation's state legislators reported Wednesday.

But "getting tough works," they said. States that increased their incarceration rates the most tended to reduce their violent crime rates the most, the lawmakers'

"Report Card on Crime and Punishment" showed.

"The message here is unequivocal. Leniency is associated with higher crime rates; getting tough brings crime rates down," said Samuel Brunelli, executive director of the American Legislative Exchange Council, the nation's largest bipartisan association of state legislators.

The group released a study analyzing FBI crime statistics between 1960 and 1992 that shows how America has become a dramatically more dangerous place to live during the past three decades. In 1960, an American's chances of being a victim of a violent crime were 1 in 322. By 1992, the odds were 1 in 132.

"When the odds of being a victim of a violent crime increase five times over 32 years, there is an obvious problem with America's criminal justice system," said Brunelli.

"Today, criminals' rights are protected over victims," he said. "The result is our schools, streets, neighborhoods and homes are unsafe, and crime is clearly the leading cause of America's decaying social fabric."

The report indicated that violent crime could be reduced by keeping known criminals off the streets.

HB 38

Dear Representative Bunde,

Victims for Justice strongly supports "3 Strikes, You're Out". The "revolving door" system costs the state an enormous amount of money in law enforcement and legal fees each year, with no count of cost to the victims. It is time to stop this nonsense!

According to a study done by the Justice Department; of all crimes committed in this nation, only 15-20% of the criminals are apprehended and only 2-3% go to prison. Furthermore, 75-80% of all criminals who are released from prison reoffend within 36 months for the same offense!

Justice Charles L. Weltner sums it up well saying: "Right now a person who has been through the system and is contemplating a crime probably vies things as follows: 1. If I do it I won't get caught 2. If I get caught I won't get prosecuted, 3. If I get prosecuted I won't get convicted, 4. If I get convicted I won't go to prison, 5. If I go to prison I won't be there for very long". Given the statistics above, this assessment is real.

Criminals today are more violent than even a decade ago, and the cost to society is greater than the cost of keeping an offender incarcerated. Court costs are easily calculated but the cost to the victim is impossible to calculate. Victims never receive proper compensation or even proper justice through the system. With Alaska's modified matrix system DOC is releasing more serious offenders earlier, which will lead to more victimization. It is time to stop this madness! Please pass this important legislation! Build the necessary prisons, not resorts, but prisons and keep the repeat offenders in!

The prison system is told not heed the victims' pleas and public safety has been disregarded when releasing criminals. DOC claims to save money with early release into halfway houses, however the prior tracking system fails in this maze. Strikes Legislation will eliminate the errors of early release of repeat and dangerous offenders, which will ultimately save us millions in law enforcement, judicial, insurance, and victim costs.

Thank you for sponsoring this important bill!
Sincerely,

Sharon Nahofney

Fiscal Analysis
CSHB 38 (Jud)

CSHB 38 (Jud) amends Alaska's presumptive sentencing laws to provide that a defendant convicted of a third felony offense is subject to a mandatory term of imprisonment of at least 40 years but not more than 99 years. The first two convictions must be for a "most serious" felony, and the third conviction must be for a class A or unclassified felony. The prosecutor has the discretion to pursue or not pursue the 40-year to 99-year mandatory sentence.

A most serious felony is any unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11 or an attempt or conspiracy to commit, or criminal solicitation under AS 11.31.110 of, an unclassified or class A felony prescribed under AS 11.

The Department of Law has estimated that prosecutors will seek the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence 15 times per year. Because of the potential sentence, these cases can be expected to approach first-degree murder cases in the amount of court time spent on the actual trial, as well as on evidentiary hearings, collateral attacks on previous convictions, and other pre- and post-trial motion work. This is estimated to average three weeks of trial time per case, plus one-half week of additional hearings. If the defendants were not subject to a 40-year to 99-year sentence, only three of these 15 cases would statistically be expected to go to trial.

In addition to the costs of the third felony case, the existence of the mandatory 40-year to 99-year sentence will encourage offenders charged with their first or second most serious felony to fight the charge more strenuously, because conviction would greatly increase the chance that the offender would be vulnerable to the mandatory sentence at a later time. In the years 1984 through 1990, an average of about 900 defendants each year were charged with a first or second most serious felony. Trial rates for defendants charged with those felonies currently range from eight to 20 percent, depending on the classification of the offense (class B, class A, or unclassified). If the trial rate increases by 50 percent, over 50 additional felony trials will be held each year. Such changes in the trial rate are not unprecedented. When the plea bargaining bar was imposed in 1975, the felony trial rate doubled during the first year and tripled during the second year. Because it is impossible to predict what increase will occur in the trial rate as a result of CSHB 38 (Jud), this note does not reflect those costs. Should CSHB 38 (Jud) result in a significantly higher trial rate, the court system will need to return to the legislature for additional funding.

For similar reasons, it can be expected that the appeal rate and rate of applications for post-conviction relief will increase among the 900 defendants charged each year with a first or second most serious felony. Again, this note does not attempt to quantify those costs.

Man guilty of attempt to kidnap, molest girls

By LIN GALE
Staff Writer

A Superior Court jury on Monday convicted 42-year-old Larry Clark of trying to kidnap and molest two young girls near Denali Elementary School in September.

Clark had been arrested five times previously on rape, attempted rape, and other sex crime charges in Washington and Alaska, according to court records, but each time the counts were either dismissed or reduced to misdemeanors.

In the trial last week, the prosecution brought in several of Clark's alleged past rape victims to show the jury that Clark is a sexual predator who intended to lure the sisters, ages 11 and 12, into his truck to molest them.

One of the women testified that Clark raped her in the cab of his truck and tortured her by jamming money up her vagina so far it had to be removed with forceps.

In the most recent case, Clark came upon the girls about 8 p.m. Sept. 14 as they were walking along Lathrop Street. The children ran to their nearby home, and Clark chased after them, according to police. The girls told their father, Bob Galloway, what had happened, and he grabbed a rifle and sped after Clark in a vehicle.

At one point, Galloway confronted Clark by an apartment building on Stewart Street, pointed the gun at him, and ordered him to freeze until police arrived. Instead, Clark sped off again and collided with a taxicab at the intersection of Sixth Avenue and Cowles Street.

"I think we got somebody who don't need to be on the streets of Fairbanks off the streets of Fairbanks," Galloway said after the guilty verdicts were announced.

Clark contended that one of the girls had flagged him down, then ran, so he followed them to see what they wanted.

The jury convicted Clark of two counts of attempted kidnapping, two counts of attempted sexual abuse of a minor, first-degree assault, failure to remain and render assistance, and drunken driving. The assault charge was for injuries to the cab driver. The jury acquitted Clark of third degree and fourth-degree assault.

Clark faces up to 81 years in jail. Sentencing was set for May 24 before Superior Court Judge Ralph Beistline. He is being held at Fairbanks Correctional Center or $100,000 bail.

Screwy Alaska justice coddles killers

By PAUL JENKINS

What if you killed a cab driver during an armed robbery planned by you and members of your gang? What if the sentencing judge acknowledged in open court that you're a worst-case offender, a liar, a drug and booze addict and a "clear threat to the public"? How many years would you be in the joint before you were eligible for a parole hearing? Thirty? Fifty? Sixty-five?

Would you believe 10? That's how many years Darrell S. Whitaker will have waited before he gets his first chance to talk his way out of prison.

Whitaker was a 17-year-old kid in August 1993 — and only 22 days out of the McLaughlin Youth Center — when he murdered 46-year-old Richard Sandsness, an Alaska Cab driver. The kid shot him in the head.

The case points to some troubling aspects of our justice system. Whitaker pleaded guilty to second-degree murder under our felony murder statutes — statutes badly in need of refinement and fine tuning, by the way. Superior Court Judge Karen Hunt rightly handed him 99 years, the maximum.

Jenkins

In doing so, she relied heavily on psychiatric reports about Whitaker that were written when he was even younger. The Court of Appeals had allowed consideration of such reports, but the Alaska Supreme Court — in a case it decided just after Whitaker got the max — reversed the appellate court. A resentencing was scheduled.

Whitaker's defense lawyer argued for a 20- to 30-year prison term, saying there was no plan to kill during the robbery; that the kid fired the .357-Magnum revolver — stolen from his father — only after Sandsness sprayed him in the face with pepper gas. And, golly, yer honor, he didn't mean to do it; the victim kinda caused the whole thing, the defense seemed to say. Besides, the kid has taken responsibility for the crime. And, hey, he still has unresolved issues from his mother's death in a car crash when he was 9.

During the resentencing, Hunt noted Whitaker's troubled past, his increasingly bizarre, violent and manipulative behavior. She also noted that officials at McLaughlin in August 1992 reported he would be a danger to the community if released — but that he was turned loose 11 months later.

And the most chilling part? Our state appeals court, Hunt said, repeatedly has held that intentional murders in the second-degree warrant 20- to 30-years prison terms; unintentional murders rate even fewer years. Mind you, murderers are eligible for a parole hearing after serving only a third of their sentence.

Hunt said during the resentencing hearing that she could not give Whitaker 99 years. Instead, she gave him 50 — with 20 suspended. Without consideration of the juvenile reports, Sandsness's murder was sadly not extraordinary; not glitzy enough for a maximum sentence. And ordinary, run of the mill, second-degree murders call for a 20- to 30-year term in Alaska. Period.

Hunt did what she could, but she had few choices. She gave him the max the higher court would allow, and tacked on the 20-year suspended sentence as a hammer to smack the kid with if he gets out and screws up.

The fact that she had to be creative to protect society from Whitaker shows something's a little out of whack. If the justice system is aiming to deter criminals, it ain't working. If the idea is to rehabilitate or reform, it ain't working. If the idea is to curtail violence on our streets, it clearly ain't working.

Instead of curbing violence, our courts seem content to categorize crimes and criminals based on minutiae. Murder? What kind? Was alcohol involved?

Drugs? Did the murderer use a gun or knife or 2X4? Did he or she think about it or just lash out? How many times was the victim shot, or stabbed, or run over? What about extenuating circumstances? Mitigation? And on and on and on.

Along the way we've lost track of the notion that murder necessarily means a human life has ended. A human life; a person with family and friends and hopes and dreams and all the rest.

Whitaker ended such a life. But — in a system where court-ordered sentences have little, if any, relation to actual time served in prison — he could be among us again in about eight years because our higher courts are busily counting angels on the heads of pins. Some judges seem to believe there are good murders, average murders and bad murders, each with a different sentencing value. They apparently believe that people do not get equally dead when killed.

It's clear that some jurists at the highest levels of our liberal courts — political appointees barely answerable to the people they offer up as victims — have abandoned common sense to establish and maintain sentencing parity. If there were anything resembling true justice, Whitaker, and others like him who have murdered a human being — no matter the circumstances — would die of old age in prison.

But that's not the way it is. We have a system out of touch with the changing reality on our streets, a reality that last year propelled Anchorage toward another record year for killings.

More and more people don't care a whit about rehabilitation or reformation or second chances. They don't care what the assailant used as a weapon or whether it was a spur of the moment thing or planned. They don't care whether a murderer takes responsibility, attends counseling or finds Jesus. And they don't care about unresolved issues. They want simple justice for victims and their families. They believe that if you end a life, you should end yours in prison. The message our justice system should be sending is: Don't kill under any circumstance.

But some of our judges here are sending a different message: Human life in Alaska is not nearly as important as sentencing parity and picking legal nits.

Too bad so many killers, including kids, have caught on. Too bad for Richard Sandsness and the ever-growing list of victims.

Paul Jenkins is an editor of The Anchorage Times.
