FISCAL NOTE

BILL NO. SB114

STATE OF ALASKA
1997 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

ANALYSIS: (continued)

SB 114 requires employers to obtain written authorization from employees annually before they may withhold wages for political contributions. Employers must keep authorization forms and documents reflecting dates and amounts of contributions on file for three years. In addition, the bill prohibits giving in the name of another and discrimination against an officer or employee for failure to contribute or otherwise support or oppose a political candidate, group or issue.

The Commission estimates that this bill will result in three additional complaints each election year; two additional complaints in non-election years. Because of the complex nature of the evidence required to establish "giving in the name of another" or employment discrimination and because the new campaign finance law requires that complaints be resolved in 180 days, the Commission would need to secure additional investigative support on a contractual basis. In the complaints described, the Commission also estimates that allegations would require that the Commission retain a hearing officer to hold an administrative hearing to resolve factual disputes.

The Commission has not had to deal with employment discrimination in the past. If authority over discrimination complaints was assigned to a more appropriate regulatory agency with expertise in employment discrimination, the associated cost of complaint resolution would be reduced.

In summary, the fiscal note reflects contractual funds to handle additional complaints--including additional investigative support; retention of a hearing officer; deposition costs; and other investigative costs. Additional costs associated with complaint resolution include supply costs for paper, folders and file cabinets. Remaining contractual, supply and travel costs reflect development and distribution of forms; promulgation of regulations in the first year; and education of employers with payroll deduction plans. Specific costs include paper, internal copying costs, advertising notice, and postage charges. Educational efforts would be accomplished through mailings and trainings in Anchorage and Fairbanks. Travel to Fairbanks would occur in the first year of implementation of the bill, then each succeeding election year.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

SB 114 prohibits an employer or labor organization from increasing the salary of an officer or employee, or giving a emolument, with the intent that all or part of the increase or emolument be given as a political contribution ("giving in the name of another.") The bill also prohibits discrimination against an officer or employee for failure to contribute or otherwise support a political candidate, group or issue. SB 114 further prohibits an employer from withholding wages for a political contribution without an annual written authorization from the employee.

Evidence in "giving in the name of another" cases are more time intensive and factually and legally complex than other Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) type cases. To do these cases, the Department of Law would need to commit more discovery, investigative, and research time. Employment discrimination cases would also be a new type of case for the commission and the Department of Law, as the APOC does not currently have this authority. They are also more factually complex. In addition, new regulations and criteria would need to be developed.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION:

The Department of Law has based its fiscal note costs on the assumption that there would be three additional cases each election year, and two additional complaints in non-election year (one "giving in the name of another" case and one discrimination case). In addition, in the first year, regulations development would occur. The department estimates that approximately 125 hours of attorney time would be required for the election year projected caseload, plus $1,125 for direct case travel and deposition costs. In non-election years, approximately 75 hours would be needed, plus $975 in direct case travel and contractual. In addition, in FY 98 approximately 35 hours of attorney time would be required for promulgation of the new regulations.

If the employment discrimination cases could be handled by another regulatory agency with experience in these types of cases, the Department of Law's cost projections could likely decrease.

The cost estimates are based on the department's FY 97 standard attorney cost schedule ($87/hour) and include clerical support, communications, space, supplies, data processing, and other normal overhead expenses. Direct case costs are included separately.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary.) Since some portion of all union dues deducted from employees in the state's 12 bargaining agreements covering 10,500 employees may be used for political purposes, union dues authorizations would have to be renewed in writing annually. This will generate a tremendous amount of paper and bureaucratic processing. To handle this extra work will require approximately 175 hours of a personnel assistant, and 200 hours of an administrative clerk annually for online data entry and filing.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)
AS 23.40.220 addresses a public employee's written authorization for deductions for dues, fees, and other employee benefits. Section 2 of SB 114 would amend AS 23.40.220 as follows: "If all or part of a deduction under this section will be used to make a political contribution, the written authorization must comply with AS 15.13.160." It is not anticipated that the proposed amendment to AS 23.40.220 would have a fiscal impact on the operation of the Alaska Labor Relations Agency (ALRA). Since July 1, 1990, approximately eight unfair labor practice charges relating to dues deductions have been filed with ALRA, one of which concerned use of dues for political contribution purposes. Though the proposed amendment to AS 23.40.220 could increase the number of unfair labor practice charges filed, a significant increase is not anticipated. Additional staff would not be needed.
