SPONSOR STATEMENT HJR 36 "Taiwan: World Health Assembly"

The World Health Organization (WHO) was created as a way to promote to the highest possible level the general health and wellbeing of all people in the world. This Resolution urges the U.S. Congress to endorse Taiwan's efforts to become an Observer at the World Health Assembly (WHA). This would allow Taiwan to have immediate firsthand information that they can use to promote the health of their people, as well as contribute to international health activities supported by WHO. With a population of 23 million, there is an appropriate need for Taiwan to be included as an Observer to these vital discussions.

SARS and the current strain of avian influenza originated in the East Asian region of the world and threatens the health of all people, regardless of political borders. The information that Taiwan could gather from the World Health Assembly could allow further information, identification, and prevention of more widespread outbreaks of these two potentially pandemic diseases. The strides and achievements that Taiwan has made in the fields of public health can be enhanced by their admission as an Observer to the World Health Organization.

I ask for your support of HJR 36 to encourage the World Health Assembly's acceptance of Taiwan as an Official Observer.

Director General, WHO

Avenue Appia 20

Dear Director General Lee:

We hope that this letter finds you and your staff well as you face a variety of global health concerns, including avian flu. The current prospect of an avian flu epidemic merits the full involvement of the entire international community. It also serves as another forceful reason for Taiwan's meaningful and effective participation in the activities of the World Health Organization.

The avian flu has struck China and Southeast Asian countries, including Thailand, Vietnam and Indonesia. Commerce between Taiwan and its neighboring countries puts it at risk for importing the virus from an infected area. Taiwan currently employs more than 300,000 foreign workers from Southeast Asia. In 2004, 1.5 million Taiwanese people visited Southeast Asian countries while a half million people from Southeast Asia visited Taiwan. Almost 4 million people from Taiwan visit China annually. Taiwan is also an important transit point for migratory birds, which are the main carriers of the avian flu virus. Approximately one million migratory birds annually pass through Taiwan or reside in Taiwan during the winter season.

Taiwan has thus far been free of the H5N1 strain of the avian flu virus, but is seriously at risk. A less virulent strain of avian flu, H7N3, was found in the droppings of migratory birds in Taiwan. Further, on October 14, 2005, a vessel from China was discovered with 1,037 smuggled pet birds on board. Among the 46 birds randomly selected for tests, 8 were found H5N1 positive. The consequences are unthinkable if the vessel had not been discovered in time.

Taiwan has taken measures to combat bird flu within its borders, but effective efforts will require the engagement of the entire region and the world. It is disturbing that Taiwan has not been given full access to the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network (GOARN), the Global Influenza Program (GIP), the Global Early Warning and Response System (GLEWS), and the Global Influenza Surveillance System (GISN).

Diseases know no borders. Taiwan cannot afford to be the missing link in this international battle against the avian flu. Even more importantly, the global community cannot afford to leave Taiwan out.

We in the US Congress have passed numerous resolutions supporting Taiwan's WHO participation, and the US government is on record in support of Taiwan's WHO observer status.

We sincerely hope that you will show the leadership necessary to advance this matter. And we will pay close attention to WHO actions in this regard.

Sincerely,

HENRY HYDE

JAN 27 2006

Dear Mr. Andrews:

Thank you for your letter of December 16, 2005 regarding Taiwan's participation in international efforts to combat avian influenza.

Consistent with our close but unofficial relations with Taiwan, the U.S. Government has made every effort to include Taiwan in the international battle against highly pathogenic avian influenza and a potential influenza pandemic. We have engaged with representatives from Taiwan in the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum – where Taiwan, as a member, has participated fully in a number of meetings on the subject – and have supported Taiwan's bid to obtain observer status in the World Health Assembly. With strong U.S. backing, Taiwan was able to send its CDC director, Steve Kuo, and other experts to represent Taiwan at WHO meetings on avian influenza in Geneva (November 7-9, 2005) and in Tokyo (January 12-13, 2006). Regrettably, China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs rebuffed our attempts to include Taiwan at this week's International Pledging Conference on Avian and Human Pandemic Influenza in Beijing, maintaining that only foreign states, multilateral organizations and NGOs would be invited.

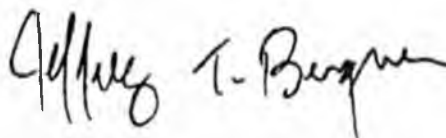

Regarding the International Partnership on Avian and Pandemic Influenza (IPAPI), the Department of State determined that the Partnership could most effectively meet U.S. objectives by ensuring the participation of countries most affected by avian influenza, including the People's Republic of China. However, the United States ensures that Taiwan is fully briefed on all Partnership activities, and we cooperate with Taiwan to identify other areas in which Taiwan can bring its considerable public health resources to bear in the fight against pandemic influenza.

The Honorable
Robert E. Andrews,
House of Representatives.

The U.S. Government will continue to support Taiwan's participation in key international meetings dedicated to fighting avian influenza and to engage with Taiwanese officials through bilateral meetings and workshops. Events such as a meeting between senior staff members of HHS and Steve Kuo to discuss continuing U.S.-Taiwan cooperation on influenza research, as well as a workshop currently under discussion on poultry farming and veterinary aspects of avian influenza to be sponsored jointly by USDA/APHIS and Taiwan's quarantine authorities, attest to the ongoing nature of our commitment.

We share your resolve to ensure that Taiwan is included in the international effort to halt the spread of highly pathogenic avian influenza. Please do not hesitate to contact us if we can be of further assistance in this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM

Date: April 28th, 2006

To: Senator Dyson, Chair House HES

From: Representative Peggy Wilson

Re: HJR 36 "TAIWAN: WORLD HEALTH ASSEMBLY"

This is a request to have HJR 36 "TAIWAN: WORLD HEALTH ASSEMBLY" brought up for a hearing before the Senate HES Committee at your earliest convenience.

HJR 36 "TAIWAN: WORLD HEALTH ASSEMBLY" would urge the U.S. Congress to pass a resolution that would endorse a request by the Republic of China to be granted Observer status at the World Health Assembly Annual Conference in May 2006 in Geneva, Switzerland. Taiwan, in consideration of their close proximity to the recent occurrences of SARS and Avian Influenza, should be allowed to observe and gather vital information that is released at this important conference.

I have attached a packet for HJR 36. Thank you for your consideration.

Taiwan: Senate Bill on Observer Status at the World Health Organization

Question: What is the State Department's view on the Senate's adoption of HR 2739, a bill to authorize the Department to initiate a plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the May 13-17 World Health Assembly?

Answer: The Department supports the overall goal of Taiwan's participation in the work of the World Health Organization (WHO) and has long worked closely with Taiwan authorities to advance that objective. We have urged the World Health Organization and its members to find appropriate ways for Taiwan to participate. We will continue to do so.

U.S. policy is to support Taiwan's membership in international organizations where statehood is not an issue. In those organizations in which it cannot be a member, we support finding ways for Taiwan's voice to be heard.

The World Health Organization is the United Nations organization for health. Taiwan has been excluded from this organization for over three decades, during which, the problems of globally orientated disease have become increasingly serious.

A recent amendment to the WHO constitution stresses on the point of universal application. If all humans are to be considered, Taiwan must be included in the World Health Organization.

Good health is a fundamental right of all humans and the basis of developing a high quality of life. Taiwan has a population of over 23 million, greater than over three quarters of current WHO member states. This population requires access to the latest disease outbreak information and other assistance provided to WHO member states. In return, Taiwan has much to offer the international community.

Diseases do not recognize borders, nor can they differentiate between WHO member states and non-WHO members.

Editorial: Grant Taiwan WHO observer status

Wednesday, Mar 15, 2006, Page 8

Last week, the World Health Organization's (WHO) official Web site, which includes Taiwan as part of China, mistakenly showed Taiwan as being affected by bird flu. After protests from Taiwan's Ministry of Foreign Affairs and members of the US Congress, the WHO on Monday distinguished between Taiwan and China, and excluded Taiwan from the infected area on its map.

That the WHO corrected the mistake immediately, pushing aside political considerations, testifies to the organization's professional attitude, and deserves praise. But the incident is yet another warning to Taiwan and the international community. To avoid similar incidents in the future, Taiwan should work to gain the right to attend the World Health Assembly (WHA) in May. The WHO should stop procrastinating and allow Taiwan observer status.

If the WHO had not made the prompt corrections, Taiwan would have been listed as a bird flu-infected area, dealing a serious blow to the tourism, trade and animal foods industries -- despite the fact that not one instance of bird flu has been discovered here. It would also have damaged Taiwan's international image and intensified pressure on the nation's health authorities and the psychological pressure on the general public. This highlights the difference in interests between the two sides of the Taiwan Strait.

Although China claims that Taiwan is part of its territory, border restrictions between the countries remain in place, and the exchange of people, air traffic and goods between the two sides is more strictly controlled than between other countries. The disease prevention measures on each side of the Taiwan Strait are separate, and there are also clear differences in the quality of these measures. Political issues should not be confused with public health issues.

With the whole world under the threat of bird flu, excluding Taiwan from the international network to prevent the spread of infectious diseases may well make it the weak link in the disease prevention chain. This violates the Taiwanese people's fundamental right to medical information. It also weakens the international health network. With Taiwan located so close to China, an area affected by bird flu, the WHO should bolster disease prevention measures by allowing Taiwan to participate in technical discussions. This would prevent a repeat of the SARS crisis, during which Taiwan stood alone.

The WHO's international contagious disease report and response mechanism still excludes Taiwan. Although we can obtain the information via a third party such as the US, direct access to such information from the WHO would be more efficient and reduce the time lag, helping Taiwan to fulfill its responsibility to put in place preventive measures.

Last year, Taiwan strongly supported the addition of the words "universal application" to the International Health Regulations. Last year China also signed a memorandum of understanding with the WHO agreeing to the principle that preventive measures against epidemics have no national boundaries. It also agreed to Taiwan's participation in an avian flu conference in Tokyo. Nevertheless, it barred Taiwan from a similar conference held in Beijing. A country that shows such enmity to Taiwan should not be allowed to become its guardian.

The WHO's basic function is to guarantee global health, and it should operate on the basis of professionalism and international cooperation. Its considerations should exclude political questions such as national sovereignty and focus on health matters. It should therefore grant Taiwan observer status.

Latest WHO Bid Gets Support In Washington

Several members of both the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate recently tabled bills that would authorize the secretary of state to propose a resolution on the floor of the forthcoming World Health Assembly (WHA) in support of Taiwan's latest bid to participate in that conference as an observer.

On Feb. 10, Co-chair of the Congressional Taiwan Caucus (CTC) Rep. Sherrod Brown led three other members of the pro-Taiwan group—Reps. Steve Chabot, Robert Wexler and Dana Rohrabacher—in introducing H.R. 3793, a bill concerning Taiwan's participation in the World Health Organization (WHO).

Established in April 2002, the CTC explores ways of strengthening U.S.-Taiwan relations in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act. The group presently consists of 126 members from the House of Representatives.

"The secretary of state is authorized to initiate a United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the annual week-long summit of the World Health Assembly in May 2004 in Geneva, Switzerland; to instruct the United States delegation to Geneva to implement that plan; and to introduce a resolution in support of observer status for Taiwan at the summit of the World Health Assembly," reads the bill, which was referred to the Committee on International Relations.

It was the first time that a bill was introduced to authorize such a resolution at the WHA. The previous bills, tabled annually since 1999, merely urged the secretary of state to develop a strategy to help Taiwan secure observer status at the health summit, and U.S. representatives generally accomplished this by speaking in favor of the island nation on the sidelines of the assembly.

"Good health is important to every citizen of the world," the bill reads, adding that access to the highest standards of medical information and services, and participation in international health-related events, is important for the enhancement of public health.

Taiwan is denied entry into the world health body largely due to obstruction from China. This is despite the increasing risk of cross-border infection by severe epidemics, as evidenced by last year's outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), which started in China and spread throughout the world, causing 73 deaths in Taiwan alone. This year the island nation is being threatened by the outbreak of avian flu now ravaging much of Asia.

"The SARS and avian influenza outbreaks illustrate that disease knows no boundaries and emphasize the importance of allowing all people access to the WHO," the bill reads. "As the pace of globalization quickens and the spread of infectious disease accelerates, it is critical that all people, including the people of Taiwan, be given the opportunity to participate in international health organizations such as the WHO." The bill referred to Taiwan's achievements in the field of health as "substantial." Those mentioned in the statement included one of the highest life expectancy levels in Asia, the eradication of cholera and smallpox, and becoming the continent's first country to wipe out polio and provide children with hepatitis B vaccinations.

The bill also cited Taiwan's contribution to the world community as one reason the island democracy and its people deserve "appropriate and meaningful participation in the WHO." For example, Taiwan sent two rescue teams consisting of 90 members specializing in firefighting, medicine and civil engineering to El Salvador after a devastating earthquake hit the Central American country in January 2001.

In addition to donating US$200,000 in aid to the Salvadoran government, Taipei also pledged US$1 million to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria in December 2002 in response to an appeal from the United Nations and the United States for resources to curb the spread of HIV/AIDS, the bill said.

Two days after the introduction of the bill in the House of Representatives, Sen. George Allen, co-chair of the Senate Taiwan Caucus, led 10 senators in introducing a similar bill numbered S. 2092 in the Senate. "It would be tantamount to medical malpractice to continue to exclude Taiwan from participation in the assessment, treatment and cure of SARS and other dangerous diseases in the world," opined Allen.

The government of Taiwan began pushing for participation in the WHO as an observer in 1997 with a view to safeguarding the health and well-being of its people, despite China's efforts to block this. However, most countries that do business with the communist giant have adopted a "one China" policy, which makes Taiwan's continued efforts to obtain observer status extremely difficult in the absence of worldwide backing.

To sidestep the thorny "one China" problem and thus avoid the sovereignty dispute with China, Taiwan started two years ago promoting the idea of joining the world body as a "health entity." According to Deputy Foreign Minister Michael Kau, who devised the strategy, there are already precedents for non-state entities becoming WHA observers. Palestine and the Order of Malta, for example, are considered "quasi-state entities," while the International Committee of the Red Cross and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies enjoy observer status as "nongovernmental organizations." Although Taiwan's efforts have thus far been in vain, its never-say-die spirit has gradually evoked some response. In recent years, a few governments and international medical bodies, including the European Parliament and Japan, have voiced their support.

On May 11, 2001, U.S. President George W. Bush stated in a letter to Sen. Lisa Murkowski that the United States "should find opportunities for Taiwan's voice to be heard in international organizations in order to make a contribution, even if membership is not possible," adding that his administration has "focused on finding concrete ways for Taiwan to benefit and contribute to the WHO." The Commission of the World Medical Association (WMA) passed a resolution in October 2001 calling on the WHO to grant Taiwan observer status. Likewise, the E.U. Parliament passed a similar resolution the following March, urging the commission and member states to support Taiwan's bid for WHA participation. The E.U. resolution reads, in part, "Taiwan's experience in dealing successfully with important health issues at home can be of benefit not only regionally but also globally." "America's work for a healthy world cuts across political lines. That is why my government supports Taiwan's efforts to gain observership status at the World Health Assembly," indicated Tommy Thompson, secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, in a speech at the WMA in May 2002. "We know this is a controversial issue, but we do not shrink from taking a public stance on it. The people of Taiwan deserve the same level of public health as citizens of every nation on Earth, and we support them in their efforts to achieve it," he said.

The U.S. health secretary also voiced support of Taiwan at an official WHA meeting last May. "The need for effective public health exists among all peoples. That's why the United States has strongly supported Taiwan's inclusion in efforts against SARS and beyond," said Thompson in a speech at the assembly's second plenary session. "If we are truly serious about stopping this disease in its tracks, then we cannot ignore millions of people who are at risk. One lesson of SARS is that public health knows no borders—and no politics."

Urging the United States Congress to support the granting of official Observer Status to the Republic of China at the World Health Assembly Annual Conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, in May 2003, and to support negotiation of a free trade agreement with the Republic of China.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS the United States, including the State of Alaska, and the Republic of China, in Taiwan, have long been valued and close partners in trade and cultural exchanges; and

WHEREAS the Republic of China is the eighth largest trading partner of the United States and is a significant trading partner of the State of Alaska; and

WHEREAS the Republic of China is showing signs of significant potential for increasing trade with the United States and the State of Alaska as the world economy continues to recover from recession; and

WHEREAS free trade among the peoples of the world is of vital importance to the United States, including the citizens of Alaska, and to the Republic of China; and

WHEREAS the importance of free trade is strongly acknowledged in Alaska; the Municipality of Anchorage and the City of Taipei having signed a Partner Cities Agreement to encourage trade and cultural exchange; and

WHEREAS the United States and the Republic of China have, for decades, been willing signers of mutual defense treaties; and

WHEREAS the health of the peoples of the world is of vital importance to the United States, including the citizens of Alaska, and to the Republic of China; and

WHEREAS the people of the United States and the Republic of China have generously contributed to programs that benefit the health of the peoples of the world; and

WHEREAS it would be mutually beneficial to the people of the United States, including Alaska, and the people of the Republic of China to both assist and realize a continuation of international efforts the goal of which is to expand and further develop health-related knowledge; and

WHEREAS today there is a strong need for the rapid and complete international dissemination of health-medical information and research results in view of the recent outbreak of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), considered to be a worldwide health threat;

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature encourages the United States Congress to authorize the United States to endorse the request by the Republic of China to be granted Observer Status at the World Health Assembly Annual Conference in May 2003 at Geneva, Switzerland; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the United States Congress to encourage the administration of President George W. Bush to negotiate a free trade agreement with the Republic of China.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Chen Shui-bian, President of the Republic of China; the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States; the Honorable Colin Powell, United States Secretary of State; the Honorable Tommy Thompson, United States Secretary of Health and Human Services; the World Health Assembly; the World Health Organization; Jack K. C. Chiang, Director General, Taipei Economic and Cultural Office, 2001 Sixth Avenue, Suite 2410, Seattle, WA 98121; and to the Honorable Ted Stevens and the Honorable Lisa Murkowski, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don

Even with the official restrictions that Taiwan continues to maintain on investment and trade with mainland China, Taiwan businesses are increasingly invested across the strait, although the exact figures remain unclear. Taiwan-China trade has also increased dramatically over the past decade, so that China (along with Hong Kong) now has surpassed the United States as Taiwan's most important trading partner. According to one report, statistics show Taiwan's total bilateral trade with the PRC rose to $61.64 billion in 2004 — a 33.1% increase over 2003.¹⁰

This increasing economic interconnectedness with the PRC has put special pressure on Taiwan's DPP government to further accommodate the Taiwan business community by easing restrictions on direct travel and investment to the PRC. But such accommodations are worrisome to the DPP's pro-independence political base in Taiwan, who believe that further economic ties to the mainland will erode Taiwan's autonomy and lead to a "hollowing out" of Taiwan's industrial base.¹¹ Thus, each Taiwan decision on economic links with the PRC represents an uneasy political compromise.

Taiwan's World Trade Organization (WTO) Accession. After a 12-year application process, Taiwan joined the WTO on January 1, 2002, as "the Separate Customs Territory of Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu" or, less formally, "Chinese Taipei." In keeping with the PRC's wishes, Taiwan was not admitted to the organization until after the PRC's accession on December 12, 2001, following a 15-year application process. As a result of its WTO membership, Taiwan will have to reduce tariffs and open a number of market sectors to foreign investment, thus setting the stage for new opportunities for U.S. businesses. In addition, mutual membership in the WTO is likely to have a significant impact on PRC-Taiwan economic and trade relations. To be in compliance with their WTO obligations, both Beijing and Taipei will have to reduce long-standing bilateral trade restrictions, setting the stage for direct trade links between the two governments.

Avian Flu, SARS, and WHO Observer Status

Taiwan has not escaped the outbreak of new viruses that have swept Asia since 2002. By late May 2003, Taiwan had reported 585 probable cases of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, or SARS — which first surfaced in southern China in November 2002 — placing it behind China and Hong Kong for the greatest number of cases. Taiwan also has been affected by avian flu outbreaks since 2004, although apparently with a less virulent strain than that ravaging bird populations and causing some human fatalities throughout other parts of Asia.

Because Taiwan is not a member of WHO (the World Health Organization), the avian flu outbreaks had broader political ramifications for Taiwan's international position and for China-Taiwan relations. The PRC objects strenuously to any WHO representation by Taiwan, claiming that as Taiwan is part of China, it can access WHO's services through the

¹⁰ According to the Foreign Board of Trade, cited by Agence-France Presse in Taiwan News online, March 3, 2005, [<http://www.etaiwannews.com>]. See also CRS Report RL31749, Foreign Direct Investment in China, by Dick Nanto and Radha Sinha.

¹¹ For instance, there are reportedly 300,000 Taiwan citizens now living and working in Shanghai.

PRC government. Even as the SARS crisis was underway, PRC leaders continued vigorously to block any international effort to give Taiwan unofficial "observer" status in the WHO,¹² although PRC authorities did consent to a WHO team visit to Taiwan to investigate early in May 2003. Taiwan authorities, in a view supported by many Members of the U.S. Congress, have used the SARS and avian flu crises to press their argument that the rapid spread and consequences of emerging communicable diseases demonstrate why WHO observer status is essential for Taiwan. But Taiwan again failed to gain observer status when 33 countries objected to considering the issue on May 16, 2005, at the annual meeting of the World Health Assembly (WHA), WHO's decision-making body.

Policy Trends in the George W. Bush Administration

When it first assumed office, the Bush Administration articulated policies in Asia that were more supportive of Taiwan and less solicitous of engagement with China than those of previous U.S. Administrations. More recently, however, Administration officials are seen to be placing caveats on U.S. support for Taiwan while at the same time fielding a more cordial policy toward the PRC.

Initial Tilt Toward Taiwan. Many observers concluded in 2001 that the newly elected George W. Bush had abandoned the long-standing U.S. policy of "strategic ambiguity" in favor of "strategic clarity" that placed a clearer emphasis on Taiwan's interests and showed less concern for PRC views. In addition to approving a major arms sales package for Taiwan, in an ABC television interview on April 25, 2001, President Bush responded to a question about what Washington would do if Taiwan were attacked by saying that the United States would do "whatever it took to help Taiwan defend herself." Since Section 3 of the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA) addresses only arms sales and not the use of American military forces in the island's defense, the President's answer caused considerable controversy over whether the United States had changed its policy toward Taiwan's security or was preparing to change its position on Taiwan independence. Although State Department and White House officials, including President Bush, later insisted that the President's statement was consistent with U.S. commitments in the TRA and that there had been no change in U.S. policy, subsequent statements and actions by Bush Administration officials in the following months continued to appear more supportive of Taiwan than those of previous U.S. Administrations.

The Bush Administration's support for Taiwan was in keeping with growing sentiment in Congress in the late 1990s that the TRA was outdated and that Taiwan's self-defense capabilities had eroded while the PRC had grown militarily more capable and more hostile to its smaller neighbor. These conclusions were supported by a congressionally mandated annual report, first issued by the Pentagon in February 1999, assessing the military balance in the Taiwan Strait. The 1999 report concluded that in light of improvements in offensive military capabilities, by the year 2005 China will have acquired the ability "to attack Taiwan

Because of PRC opposition, WHO member countries elected not to place the matter of Taiwan's participation on the meeting's agenda.

The Participation of Taiwan as an Observer in the WHO

Source: Ministry of Foreign Affairs, ROC
March 2001

We are seeking your support for a proposal to this year's World Health Assembly (WHA) to invite the Republic of China (Taiwan) to participate in the WHA as an observer.

As a founding member of the WHO, the ROC (Taiwan) had participated for 24 years as a full member in WHO's programs and activities, and made great contributions to the fulfillment of the organization's objectives. In 1972, in the wake of the admission of the People's Republic of China (PRC) to the UN, the ROC on Taiwan was forced to depart from the WHO.

Since 1972, Taiwan's health officials and medical professionals have been unable to take part in any WHO forums and workshops on the latest technologies in the diagnosis, monitoring, and control of diseases. Taiwan's health authorities have also been denied the right to maintain contact and coordination with the WHO, even in emergencies involving the containment and cure of existing or newly emerging infectious diseases.

Taiwan is one of the largest traders in the world. Enormous quantities of goods are dispatched in and out of the island on a daily basis. Located at the juncture of important maritime routes between Northeast and Southeast Asia, Taiwan is also a main source of tourists, with 7.32 million outbound travelers and 2.62 million inbound visitors last year. Up to the end of last December, 326,515 migrant workers from Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, and Vietnam were in Taiwan. Taiwan's absence from the WHO system has become a missing link in the global framework of health and medical care.

The international community has already supported Taiwan's participation in the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC), and has agreed in principle to Taiwan's admission into the WTO. On its part, the WHO has been able to accommodate different political realities by granting observer status to the Holy See, Palestine, the Sovereign Military Order of Malta and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Both UN resolution 2758 and WHA resolution 25.1 were products of the 1970s, which dealt with the question of China's representation in the UN system. Granting observer status to Taiwan in the WHO is not an issue of China's representation and will not challenge the present status of the PRC in international organizations. It would demonstrate that the WHO is willing to listen to the voice of 23 million people on Taiwan.

With Taiwan's successful experience in eradicating many infectious diseases and its financial and human resources, both the government and people are actively engaged in various activities in the fields of foreign medical assistance and humanitarian relief. Taiwan is willing and able to contribute to the WHO.

Taiwan is entitled to full membership of the WHO. However, it has chosen to seek observer status. Gaps in political, social and economic systems between Taiwan and the PRC remain wide. To grant Taiwan observer status is a modus vivendi that can allow the WHO to include Taiwan in the global health system while not jeopardizing the peace process between Taiwan and the PRC.

The government on Taiwan is the highest and sole legitimate authority over all health matters in Taiwan. As a democratically elected government, it has a duty and responsibility to insure that the people of Taiwan are represented in an international body which establishes and oversees international framework for the control of disease and the promotion of health for all.

We appreciate your support for the proposal at this year's WHA to grant observer status to Taiwan.

To address the participation of Taiwan in the World Health Organization.
(Engrossed as Agreed to or Passed by Senate)

S 2092 ES

108th CONGRESS

2d Session

S . 2092

AN ACT

To address the participation of Taiwan in the World Health Organization.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONCERNING THE PARTICIPATION OF TAIWAN IN THE WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION.

(a) Findings- Congress makes the following findings:

- (1) Good health is important to every citizen of the world and access to the highest standards of health information and services is necessary to improve the public health.
- (2) Direct and unobstructed participation in international health cooperation forums and programs is beneficial for all parts of the world, especially today with the great potential for the cross-border spread of various infectious diseases such as the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), tuberculosis, and malaria.

(3) Taiwan's population of 23,500,000 people is greater than that of 3/4 of the member states already in the World Health Organization (WHO).

(4) Taiwan's achievements in the field of health are substantial, including--

(A) attaining--

(i) 1 of the highest life expectancy levels in Asia; and

(ii) maternal and infant mortality rates comparable to those of western countries;

(B) eradicating such infectious diseases as cholera, smallpox, the plague, and polio; and

(C) providing children with hepatitis B vaccinations.

(5) The United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and its counterpart agencies in Taiwan have enjoyed close collaboration on a wide range of public health issues.

(6) In recent years Taiwan has expressed a willingness to assist financially and technically in international aid and health activities supported by the WHO.

(7) On January 14, 2001, an earthquake, registering between 7.6 and 7.9 on the Richter scale, struck El Salvador. In response, the Taiwanese Government sent 2 rescue teams, consisting of 90 individuals specializing in firefighting, medicine, and civil engineering. The Taiwanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs also donated $200,000 in relief aid to the Salvadoran Government.

(8) The World Health Assembly has allowed observers to participate in the activities of the organization, including the Palestine Liberation Organization in 1974, the Order of Malta, and the Holy See in the early 1950's .

(9) The United States, in the 1994 Taiwan Policy Review, declared its intention to support Taiwan's participation in appropriate international organizations.

(10) Public Law 106-137 required the Secretary of State to submit a report to Congress on efforts by the executive branch to support Taiwan's participation in international organizations, in particular the WHO.

(11) In light of all benefits that Taiwan's participation in the WHO can bring to the state of health not only in Taiwan, but also regionally and globally, Taiwan and its 23,500,000 people should have appropriate and meaningful participation in the WHO.

(12) On May 11, 2001, President Bush stated in a letter to Senator Murkowski that the United States should find opportunities for Taiwan's voice to be heard in international organizations in order to make a contribution, even if membership is not possible', further stating that the administration 'has focused on finding concrete ways for Taiwan to benefit and contribute to the WHO'.

(13) In his speech made in the World Medical Association on May 14, 2002, Secretary of Health and Human Services Tommy Thompson announced 'America's work for a healthy world cuts across political lines. That is why my government supports Taiwan's efforts to gain observership status at the World Health Assembly. We know this is a controversial issue, but we do not shrink from taking a public stance on it. The people of Taiwan deserve the same level of public health as citizens of every nation on earth, and we support them in their efforts to achieve it'.

(14) The Government of the Republic of China on Taiwan, in response to an appeal from the United Nations and the United States for resources to control the spread of HIV/AIDS, donated $1,000,000 to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria in December 2002.

(15) In 2003, the outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) caused 84 deaths in Taiwan.

(16) Avian influenza, commonly known as bird flu, has reemerged in Asia, with strains of the influenza reported by the People's Republic of China, Cambodia, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan, South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand, Vietnam, and Laos.

(17) The SARS and avian influenza outbreaks illustrate that disease knows no boundaries and emphasize the importance of allowing all people access to the WHO.

(18) As the pace of globalization quickens and the spread of infectious disease accelerates, it is crucial that all people, including the people of Taiwan, be given the opportunity to participate in international health organizations such as the WHO.

(19) The Secretary of Health and Human Services acknowledged during the 2003 World Health Assembly meeting that '[t]he need for effective public health exists among all peoples'.

(b) Plan- The Secretary of State is authorized to--

(1) initiate a United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the annual week-long summit of the World Health Assembly each year in Geneva, Switzerland;

(2) instruct the United States delegation to the World Health Assembly in Geneva to implement that plan; and

(3) introduce a resolution in support of observer status for Taiwan at the summit of the World Health Assembly.

(c) Report Concerning Observer Status for Taiwan at the Summit of the World Health Assembly- Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and not later than April 1 of each year thereafter, the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Congress, in unclassified form, describing the United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the annual week-long summit of the World Health Assembly (WHA) held by the World Health Organization (WHO) in May of each year in Geneva, Switzerland. Each report shall include the following:

(1) An account of the efforts the Secretary of State has made, following the last meeting of the World Health Assembly, to encourage WHO member states to promote Taiwan's bid to obtain observer status.

(2) The steps the Secretary of State will take to endorse and obtain observer status at the next annual meeting of the World Health Assembly in Geneva, Switzerland.

Passed the Senate May 6, 2004.

Attest:

Secretary.

1ST SESSION

H. R. 428

AN ACT

Concerning the participation of Taiwan in the World Health Organization.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

1 SECTION 1. CONCERNING THE PARTICIPATION OF TAIWAN
2 IN THE WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION
3 (WHO).

4 (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following
5 findings:

6 (1) Good health is a basic right for every citizen
7 of the world and access to the highest standards of 8 health information and services is necessary to help
9 guarantee this right.

10 (2) Direct and unobstructed participation in 11 international health cooperation forums and pro-
12 grams is therefore crucial for all parts of the world,
13 especially with today's greater potential for the 14 cross-border spread of various infectious diseases
15 such as AIDS.

16 (3) Taiwan's population of 23,500,000 people is 17 larger than that of $\frac{3}{4}$ of the member states already 18 in the World Health Organization (WHO).

19 (4) Taiwan's achievements in the field of health
20 are substantial, including one of the highest life ex-
21 pectancy levels in Asia, maternal and infant mor-
22 tality rates comparable to those of western countries,
23 the eradication of such infectious diseases as chol-
24 era, smallpox, and the plague, and the first to be rid 25 of polio and to provide children with free hepatitis
26 B vaccinations.

1 (5) The United States Centers for Disease Con-
2 trol and its Taiwan counterpart agencies have en-
3 joyed close collaboration on a wide range of public
4 health issues.

5 (6) In recent years Taiwan has expressed a will-
6 ingness to assist financially and technically in inter-
7 national aid and health activities supported by the 8 WHO.

9 (7) On January 14, 2001, an earthquake, reg-
10 istering between 7.6 and 7.9 on the Richter scale,
11 struck El Salvador. In response, the Taiwanese gov-
12 ernment sent 2 rescue teams, consisting of 90 indi-
13 viduals specializing in firefighting, medicine, and 14 civil engineering. The Taiwanese Ministry of Foreign 15 Affairs also donated $200,000 in relief aid to the 16 Salvadoran Government.

17 (8) The World Health Assembly has allowed ob-
18 servers to participate in the activities of the organi-
19 zation, including the Palestine Liberation Organiza-
20 tion in 1974, the Order of Malta, and the Holy See
21 in the early 1950's.

22 (9) The United States, in the 1994 Taiwan Pol-
23 icy Review, declared its intention to support Tai-
24 wan's participation in appropriate international or-
25 ganizations.

1 (10) Public Law 106-137 required the Sec-
2 retary of State to submit a report to the Congress
3 on efforts by the executive branch to support Tai-
4 wan's participation in international organizations, in 5 particular the WHO.

6 (11) In light of all the benefits that Taiwan's
7 participation in the WHO can bring to the state of 8 health not only in Taiwan, but also regionally and 9 globally, Taiwan and its 23,500,000 people should 10 have appropriate and meaningful participation in the 11 WHO.

12 (b) PLAN.—The Secretary of State shall initiate a
13 United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status
14 for Taiwan at the annual week-long summit of the World
15 Health Assembly in May 2001 in Geneva, Switzerland,
16 and shall instruct the United States delegation to Geneva
17 to implement that plan.

18 (c) REPORT.—Not later than 14 days after the date
19 of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall

- 1 submit a written report to the Congress in unclassified
- 2 form containing the plan required under subsection (b).

Passed the House of Representatives April 24, 2001.
