House Bill 132

Crimes Against Elderly

"An Act relating to sentencing for certain crimes committed against the elderly; and providing for an effective date."

The population of older citizens in Alaska is growing rapidly, as are the crimes that affect them. The physical, emotional, and financial impact of crimes against the person, and theft and related crimes, on the elderly can be devastating. House Bill 132 would increase the penalty one level for certain crimes against a person and for theft and related crimes, if the perpetrator acted with reckless disregard that the victim was an older citizen.

The provisions of HB 132:

- Increase the penalties for crimes against the elderly one level. For example, assault in the fourth degree, a class A misdemeanor, would be a class C felony if the assault was committed to a person 65 years of age or older.

I ask for your consideration and support of HB 132 to better protect the older citizens of our state.

This bill would enhance penalties for persons convicted of committing certain crimes against the person, or a theft or related financial crime, against a person 65 years of age or older. The bill raises the level of these offenses if the defendant was reckless in regard to the victim being 65 years of age or older. The Department of Law does not anticipate a fiscal impact from passage of this legislation.

This bill adds a new penalty section for crimes committed against the elderly. The new section outlines an increase in criminal classifications (B misdemeanor is a class A misdemeanor, etc.) which apply to a number of specific Title 11 offenses listed in the bill when the victim was 65 years of age or older at the time of the crime.

No fiscal impact on the Department of Public Safety is anticipated.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The legislation raises criminal penalties for crimes committed in violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.46 when the victim was 65 years of age or older at the time of the crime. There is no statewide data readily available to indicate the number of victims in Alaska who were 65 years of age or older at the time the crime was committed in the offense categories covered by the legislation. It is presumed that because the legislation does increase the penalties for crimes committed in violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.46, the passage of the legislation will have some fiscal impact on the department, but due to the lack of available statistical information, the department is unable to determine whether the impact will be significant or insignificant. Therefore, the fiscal impact to the Department of Corrections is indeterminate.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill seeks to enhance penalties for numerous crimes against a person 65 years or older. From the 2002 census, it indicates people over 65 comprise 6% of Alaska's population. There are more than 25 crimes listed for enhancement if a victim is 65 or older. The Agency was appointed in over 6600 (6% of 6606 = 396 crimes against elderly) of these crimes in 2004, with over 73% (4851) of them involving misdemeanor crimes that would become felonies. Felonies are much more costly to defend than misdemeanors. American Bar Association national standards provide that an attorney should not handle more than 400 misdemeanor cases a year, or 150 felonies a year. This shift from misdemeanor to felony will increase the Agency workload by one full-time position, factoring in support staff. The additional operating costs to address this increased workload are based on a full-time attorney and support staff in Bethel, where the highest number of these cases exist.

 House Bill 132 increases the penalties for certain crimes if the victim is a person 65 years of age or older. Although the bill raises the offense levels for many crimes against the elderly, the ones likely to impact the court system are those that will raise an offense from a class A misdemeanor to a class C felony. Felony crimes are more resource intensive for the court system because there are grand jury costs, they have a higher trial rate than misdemeanors and, because defendants are subject to supervised probation by the Department of Corrections, they are more likely to be back before the court for petitions to revoke probation. According to the Public Defender Agency, they were appointed in 4851 misdemeanor cases in 2004 that would be felonies under HB 132 in those cases where the victim was 65 years old or older. The Public Defender also notes that census data shows that roughly 6% of Alaska's population is 65 years of age or older. Assuming that crime victims are represented proportionally across age categories, the Public Defender numbers suggest that roughly 291 (6% of 4851) crimes against the elderly would rise from misdemeanors to felonies under this bill. Because the Public Defender Agency represents slightly over 60% of felony defendants, the number of new felony offenses filed in the court system is likely to be roughly 450 cases a year.

However, notwithstanding the fact that those 65 years of age or older represent 6% of the state's population, it is not clear what percentage of crime victims actually fall into that category. Because of that uncertainty and because of proof problems associated with the defendant having to act with reckless disregard for the age of the victim, this note will conservatively assume that the passage of HB 132 will result in 200 (rather than 450) new felony cases filed with the court each year. Because roughly 4% of felony cases go to trial, this note reflects the trial costs associated with 8 new felony trials a year. This note does not reflect the additional grand jury time that will be required for these new felonies nor does it include extra costs associated with petitions to revoke probation.

Sectional Analysis of HB 132 (Crimes Against Seniors)

(Prepared by the Department of Law, March 1, 2005)

HB 132 would increase the penalties for certain offenses committed against persons 65 or older.

Sec. 1: Intent and findings. Section 1 sets out the intent and findings.

Sec. 2: Increase in penalty for certain crimes against seniors. Section 2 adds a new section to the chapter that provides that for certain listed crimes, the seriousness of the offense is raised one level if the offender committed the offense with reckless disregard that the victim was a person 65 years of age or older. For example, assault in the fourth degree, normally a class A misdemeanor, would be a class C felony if the offender acted with reckless disregard that the victim was 65 years of age or older.

Sec. 3: Applicability. Section 3 makes the changes set out in sec. 2 applicable to offenses committed on or after July 1, 2005.

Sec. 4: Effective date. Section 4 sets out an effective date of July 1, 2005.

RE: HB 132 (Stoltze)--Support

Dear Chair McGuire:

On behalf of the AARP members in Alaska, we ask that you and your colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee support HB 132, authored by Representative Bill Stoltze and co-sponsored by you.

The intent of HB 132 is to increase the penalties for some crimes committed against a victim over 65 years of age. This includes crimes like burglary as well as fraud and identity theft. Crime can have more severe consequences for older people than for younger persons, including injuries that may need medical attention. Although violent crime receives the most media attention, fraud and identity theft are becoming increasingly more serious and more prevalent and older people are often the targets. The loss of even modest amounts of money may be devastating to a retired victim living on a low, fixed income.

Older people experience the lowest rates of violent crime among all age groups. However, the fear of crime adversely affects the behavior of many older people, and national surveys show that older people protect themselves by leaving their homes less often than younger persons. According to AARP's research, one-third of people age 50 and older avoid going out at night because they are concerned about crime.

We believe HB 132 may have some impact to deter those who prey on older victims, whether through violent crime, property crime, or fraud and identify theft. Any lessening of crime among older persons will help restore their freedom and help prevent them from becoming prisoners in their own homes.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me or Patrick Luby (907-762-3314), AARP Alaska Advocacy Director.

Thank you for your consideration.

Dear Representative Stoltze:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing House Bill 132, relating to crimes against the elderly.

The APOA Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

This bill increases the penalties for certain crimes committed against the elderly. The number of elderly is on the rise in Alaska and with that the number of elderly victims is increasing. This legislation acknowledges the growing crime against the elderly, and the serious effects the elderly suffer as a result of those crimes.

Thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at (907) 277-0515 if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

Angella Long

Crime can have more severe consequences for older people than for younger persons, including injuries that may need medical attention.
