Rep. John Harris

Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 208
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear President Green and Speaker Harris:

I'm pleased to present to you the enclosed Final Report & Recommendations of the Alaska Legislature's Citizen's Advisory Task Force on Civics Education Policy. As you know, the legislature established the task force last year to recommend ways to strengthen civic education for young people in our state, by reviewing content standards, curricula and professional development strategies. The task force was also charged with exploring ways to implement the recommendations of the Alaska Civic Learning Assessment [ACLA] Project, which were contained in the 2006 ACLA report, Advancing Civic Learning in Alaska's Schools. This report represents the culmination of several months of effort by task force members to identify practical, feasible and cost-effective steps for achieving these goals.

As a group of diverse educators, elected officials, civic leaders, students, and members of the legal community, task force members recognize that "(f)ailure to educate young people about the principles on which our government is founded poses a serious threat to the institutions they will inherit." Schools play a vital role in ensuring that this education takes place. However, schools carry a heavy burden already and cannot be expected to shoulder responsibility for civic learning alone. Notably, the task force does not recommend the adoption of mandatory curricula or testing for civics at this time. Instead, the consensus of the group is that greater coordination, creativity and support for civic learning at a statewide level has a better chance of fostering real improvement than more requirements placed on schools.

Accordingly, our recommendations envision a two-prong approach to fostering civic education. The first would address civics standards, curricula, professional development and other factors directly related to schools by creating and funding a Coordinator for Civic Learning in the Department of Education and Early Development. The second would address the broader government and community responsibility for advancing civic learning by creating and funding a Council on Civic Learning and staff Coordinator for Civic Learning in the Office of the Lieutenant Governor. By working together and strengthening the coordination and availability of civic learning opportunities statewide, the proposed coordinators and council would have a high-profile sustained impact that reaches beyond the classroom into our communities as a whole.

We have made copies of the Final Report & Recommendations for each legislator and plan to send them in the near future to our Juneau task force member, Carl Rose, who will make them available for distribution. Also, several task force members are available to come to Juneau to discuss the recommendations with interested legislators, and Mr. Rose is exploring these possibilities. Please feel free to contact Mr. Rose (crose@asb.org; 907-321-0182) if you have questions about distributing the reports or meeting with members of the task force.

On behalf of the task force, I would like to extend my sincere appreciation to the Alaska Legislature for giving us the opportunity to participate in such an important endeavor. We're especially grateful for the assistance and insight of the task force members appointed by the legislative leadership: Wasilla Mayor Dianne M. Keller; Alaska State Historian Joan (Jo) Antonson; Valdez City Council Member Dorothy M. Moore; and Director of UAF's Office of Public History, Dr. Terrence Cole. They have all made excellent contributions to the task force's work, and their enthusiasm for civic learning has inspired us all.

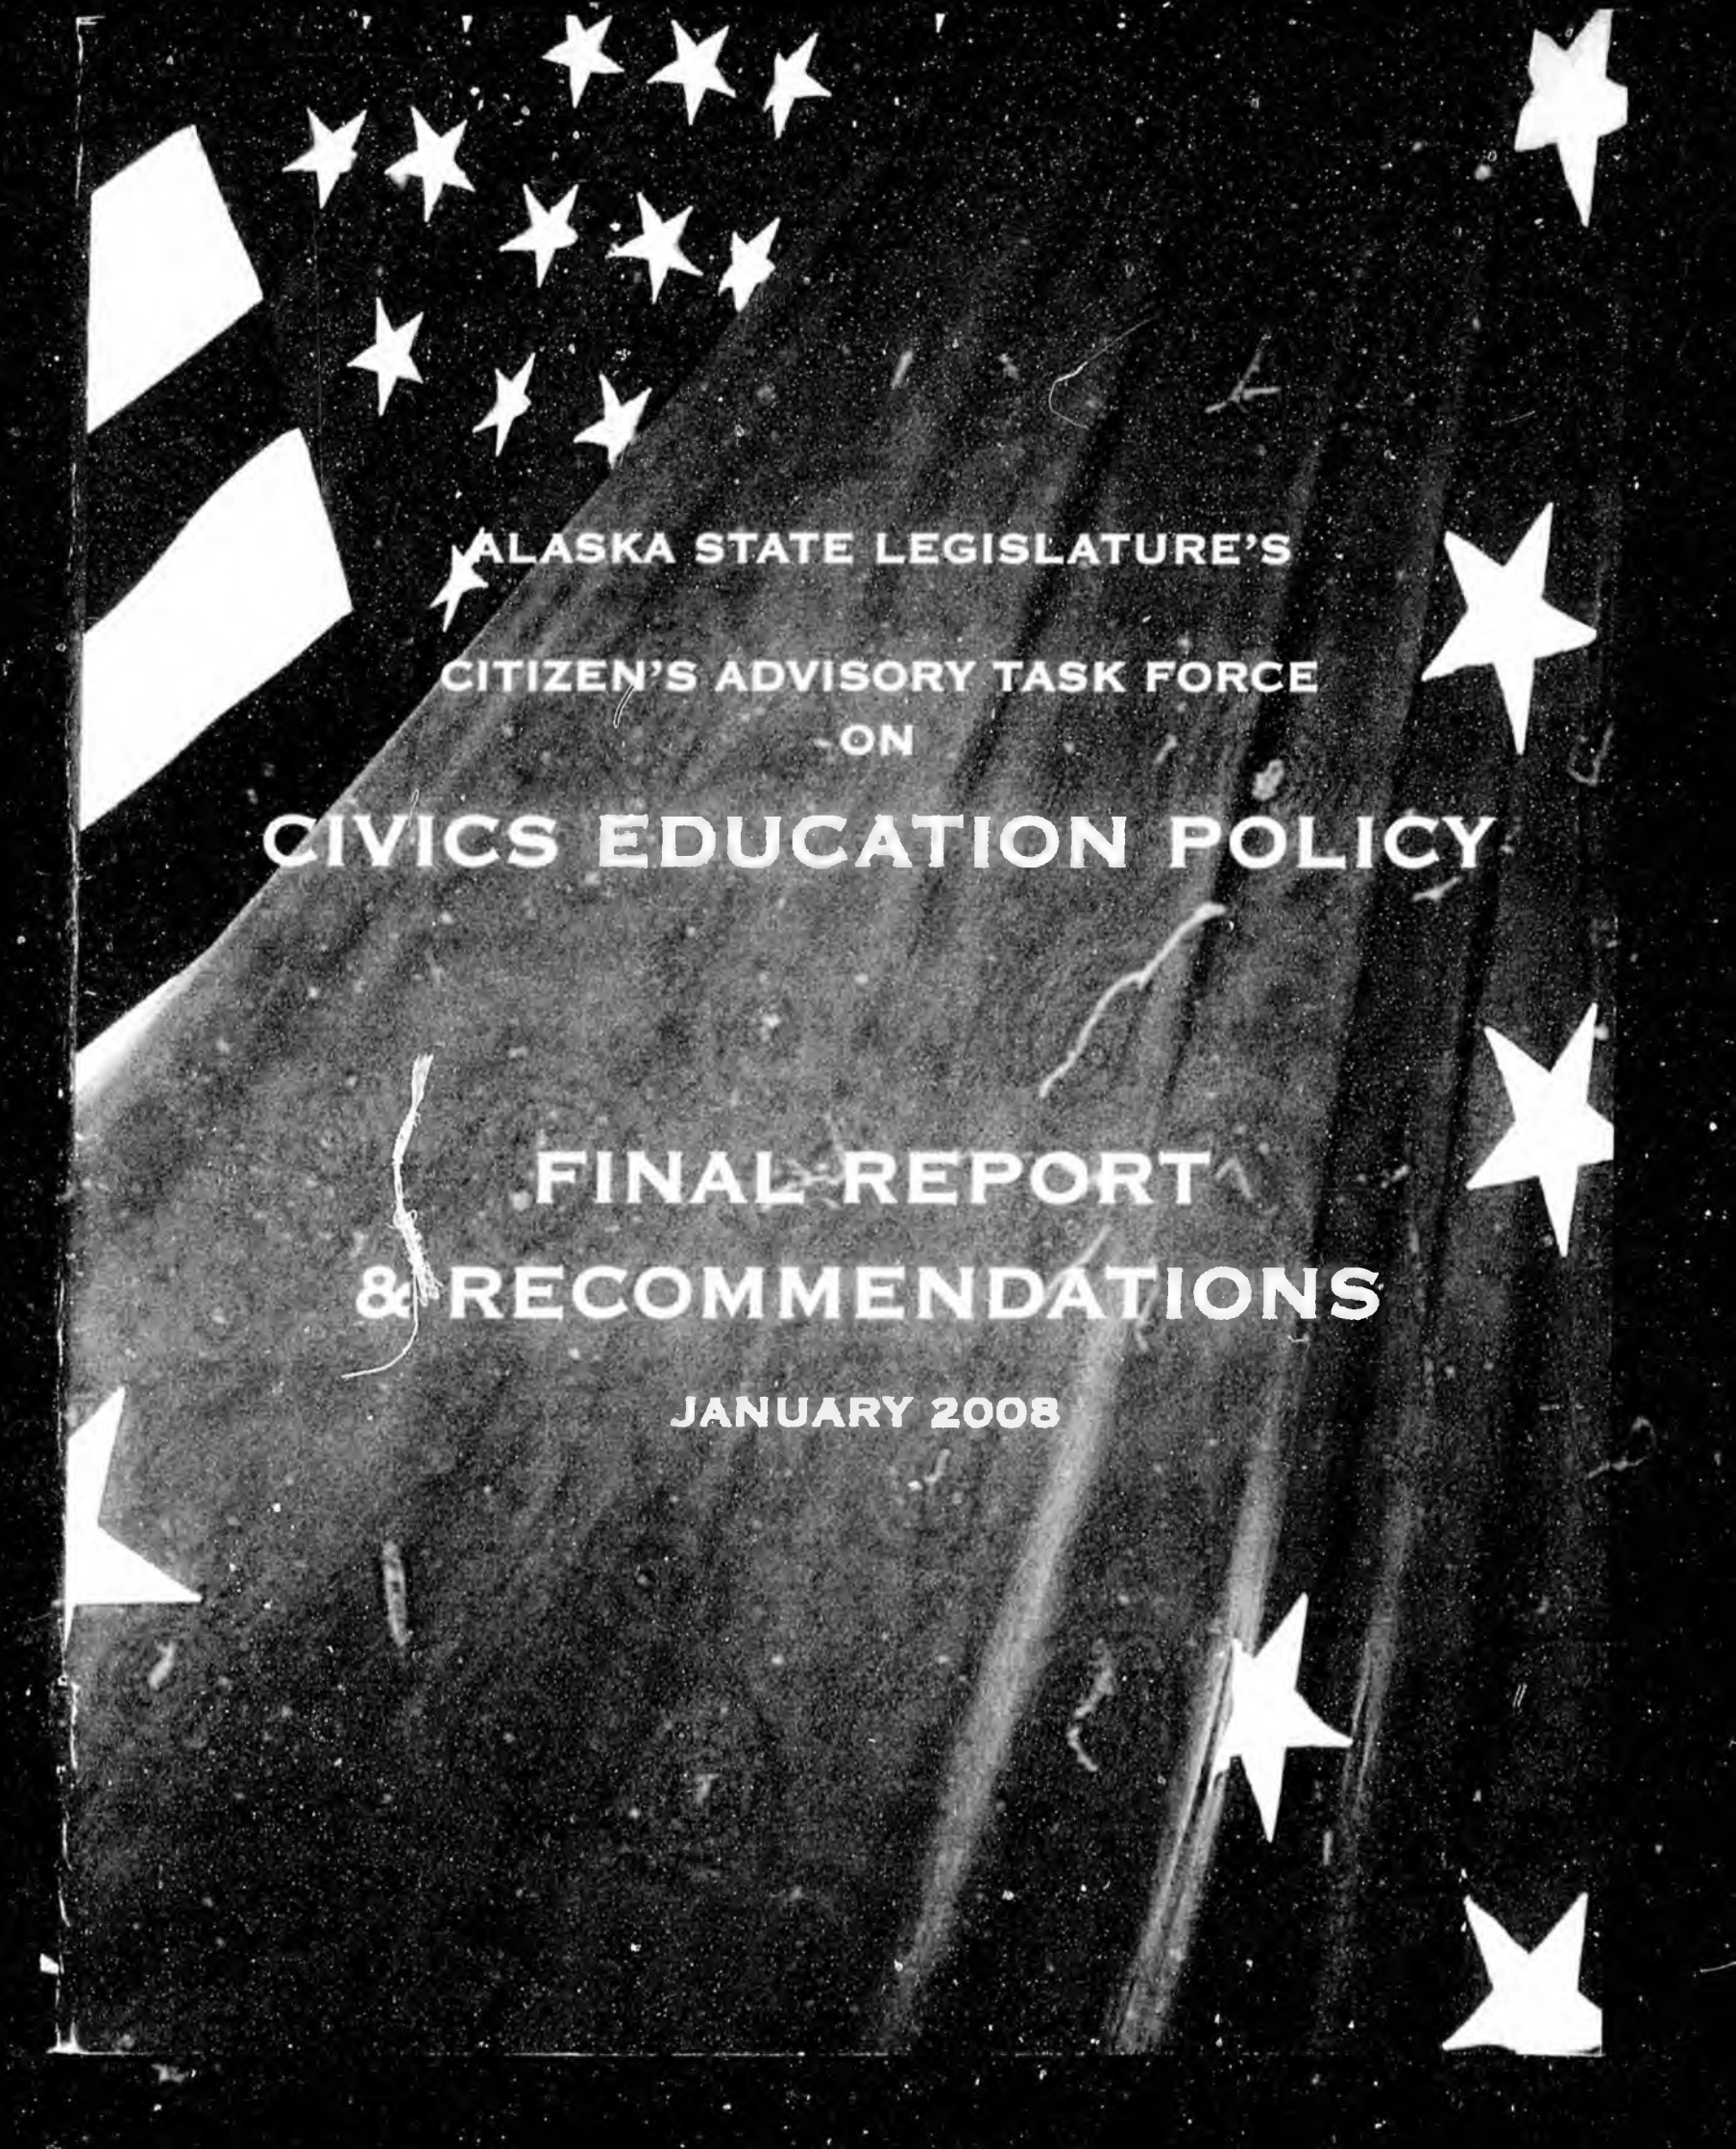

In closing, I would like to share the quote from Thomas Jefferson that we feature in the report: "The qualifications for self-government are not innate. They are the results of habit and long training." Our country's founders knew that for their great experiment in democracy to succeed, education would be key. Together, we can provide the education Alaska's young people need to develop the habit of good citizenship.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Sincerely,

INTRODUCTION

Failure to educate young people about the principles on which our government is founded poses a serious threat to the democratic institutions they will inherit. Teaching students about democracy and their rights and responsibilities as citizens in a country governed "by the people and for the people" has always been a fundamental purpose of America's public schools. Yet the ability of schools to ensure that students graduate with the civic knowledge and competency to become engaged members of society has diminished in recent years as attention has focused on other important subject areas like reading and math. Accordingly, efforts have been underway in recent years on national, state and local levels to strengthen and expand civic learning in our schools.

The national Campaign for the Civic Mission of Schools (CCMS) started in 2004 to develop strategies to elevate civic learning as an educational priority and identify and disseminate best practices in civic education. With financial support from CCMS, the Alaska Civic Learning Assessment (ACLA) Project was undertaken from 2004-2006 to identify the current status of civic education and level of civic knowledge in our state. In November 2006, the ACLA Project issued its final report, Advancing Civic Learning in Alaska's Schools, with ten recommendations for improvement. In response to the report, the Alaska Legislature passed in May 2007 a resolution establishing the Citizen's Advisory Task Force on Civics Education Policy. The Task Force was charged with evaluating Alaska's civics standards, identifying curricula, proposing professional development strategies, and exploring ways to implement the ACLA Project recommendations.

The Task Force met three times during fall 2007 to brainstorm ideas, articulate specific recommendations, and write this report. We have endeavored to make recommendations that are practical, feasible, and cost-effective. We are confident that, if implemented, they will help ensure that Alaska's students receive the civic knowledge, skills, and learning experiences they need to become active and engaged citizens. As United States Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor (Ret.) has said, "a healthy democracy depends on the participation of citizens, and that participation is learned behavior; it doesn't just happen." Across our state, we must help our young people learn to meet the challenge of citizenship. We are grateful to the Legislature for recognizing its responsibility for civic learning and engagement by appointing the Task Force to explore these issues. We are privileged to have the opportunity to examine what such learning must entail, and to offer these recommendations for renewing and strengthening Alaska's commitment to civics education.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Schools hold primary responsibility for civics education, but advancing civic learning cannot and should not fall exclusively on schools. Without coordinated guidance, assistance and support for civics education from outside the educational community—by government agencies, elected officials, courts, businesses, civic organizations, community leaders, youth organizations, juvenile justice officials, libraries, public safety officials and others—young people will not receive the stimulating learning experiences that can make a critical difference between whether they are inspired to be good citizens or instead become disillusioned and disengaged.

RECOMMENDATION I: STATEWIDE COORDINATION OF CIVIC LEARNING

- Establish and fund statewide coordination of civic learning and engagement that involves the educational community, the community at large, and all branches and levels of government.

RECOMMENDATION II: EDUCATION STANDARDS

- Review and amend the Alaska Content Standards for Government and Citizenship [Content Standards] to more strongly emphasize:
 - ✓ Civic participation skills and competency outcomes for students;
 - ✓ Content knowledge and intellectual skills related to identification, analysis, and critique of social problems and issues;
 - ✓ Content knowledge and potential experiential learning opportunities related to state and local/municipal governments; and
 - ✓ Global and international issues.
- Develop "Grade Level Expectations" for the amended Content Standards.

RECOMMENDATION III: CURRICULUM

- Identify and/or develop national, state and local civics curriculum for all grade levels that satisfy the quality criteria for educational programming for democracy. Incorporate the six promising practices for civic education. Make the curriculum readily available to teachers.

RECOMMENDATION IV: PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

- Provide districts with coordinated technical assistance and funding for comprehensive professional development opportunities for teachers and administrators that are aligned with the provisions outlined in the No Child Left Behind [NCLB] Act and best practices in civic learning.

EDUCATING FOR CITIZENSHIP

IS A JOINT RESPONSIBILITY OF SCHOOLS, COMMUNITIES &
GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS

SCHOOLS PROVIDE KNOWLEDGE & OPPORTUNITIES TO EXERCISE DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLES;

COMMUNITIES PROVIDE SUPPORT FOR CIVIC LEARNING PROGRAMS;

GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS PROVIDE HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE IN DEMOCRATIC PROCESSES.

RECOMMENDATION I:
STATEWIDE COORDINATION OF CIVIC LEARNING

ESTABLISH AND FUND STATEWIDE COORDINATION OF CIVIC LEARNING AND ENGAGEMENT THAT INVOLVES THE EDUCATIONAL COMMUNITY, THE COMMUNITY AT LARGE, AND ALL BRANCHES AND LEVELS OF GOVERNMENT.

One of the recommendations of the Alaska Civic Learning Assessment Project is to "establish a sustainable statewide coordinating entity for civic learning and engagement." Recognizing the vital need for more statewide leadership and support for civics education, the ACLA Project report states:

Although several nationally affiliated civic learning programs and activities exist in Alaska, their availability to Alaskan students and teachers is not consistent or widespread. Organizers are often volunteers, and resources are limited. Coordination between groups is difficult, time-consuming and done on an ad hoc basis. Additionally, there is no current entity that monitors civics standards, develops curriculum, or ensures evaluation and accountability.

In our view, the best way to achieve effective statewide coordination is to ensure that active and enduring voices for civics are in place in both the state agency primarily responsible for education and the state office primarily responsible for citizen engagement in democracy. Accordingly, we recommend:

- The Legislature create and fund a Coordinator of Civic Learning in the Department of Education and Early Development [DEED] to provide leadership and direction in the areas of need that are traditionally served by schools, such as standards, curriculum, assessment, and professional development; and
- The Legislature create and fund the Alaska Council on Civic Learning and a Coordinator of Civic Learning in the Lt. Governor's Office [LGO], to provide the leadership and coordinating link between the many institutions and organizations outside the educational community that are committed to fostering better understanding of our system of government.

Under our recommendations, DEED and the LGO would work cooperatively but would serve different roles and act as liaisons for their respective constituencies. Our specific recommendations are described below and illustrated in the accompanying chart.

In the Department of Education & Early Development:

- Coordinator of Civic Learning. Seek a new legislative appropriation to fund a new full-time staff position and associated program responsibilities in the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development. The new position and associated program responsibilities would be dedicated to advancing civic learning by:

- Overseeing review and implementation of civics standards, curricula, incentive-based assessment methods, and professional development strategies for teachers and districts statewide; and
- Acting as liaison between teachers, schools, districts, school boards, national education groups and the government and community groups that share responsibility for advancing civic learning.

In the Office of the Lt. Governor:

- Alaska Council on Civic Learning. Establish the Alaska Civic Learning Council within the Office of the Lieutenant Governor, to meet at least twice annually, dedicated to advancing civic learning by:
 - Administering a "Schools of Civic Distinction" awards program, which recognizes all schools statewide that demonstrate best practices in civic education under criteria to be developed by the council. The awards should be given annually on a regional basis.
 - Advocating for innovative and effective civic learning and engagement opportunities for people of all ages in communities statewide; and
 - Developing and implementing outreach and awareness campaigns on the importance of civic learning and engagement.
- Coordinator of Civic Learning. Seek a new legislative appropriation to fund a new staff position and associated program responsibilities in the Office of the Lt. Governor to:
 - Serve as staff to the proposed Alaska Council on Civic Learning;
 - Work closely with the proposed DEED Coordinator of Civic Learning to improve civic learning;
 - Act as liaison between educators, community organizations, civic leaders, and government representatives in the development and implementation of civic learning programs and activities; and
 - Develop and implement an ongoing statewide outreach plan to promote civic learning in communities across the state.

In the Legislature:

- Alaska Legislature's Citizen's Advisory Task Force on Civics Education Policy. Until such time as the statewide coordination of civic learning is in place as recommended, the legislature should continue the Task Force and support its work. Without an organized voice to advocate for civic learning and help implement the recommendations in this report, the improvements we hope to gain are unlikely to occur.

RECOMMENDATION II:
EDUCATION STANDARDS

REVIEW AND AMEND THE ALASKA CONTENT STANDARDS FOR GOVERNMENT AND CITIZENSHIP [CONTENT STANDARDS] TO MORE STRONGLY EMPHASIZE:

- Civic participation skills and competencies expected as outcomes for students;
- Content knowledge and intellectual skills related to identification, analysis, and critique of social problems and issues;
- Content knowledge and potential experiential learning opportunities related to state and local/municipal governments; and
- Global and international issues.

DEVELOP "GRADE LEVEL EXPECTATIONS" FOR THE AMENDED CONTENT STANDARDS.

Effective content standards in government and citizenship should guide teachers, schools, districts, parents and the community regarding the civic content knowledge, civic intellectual and participatory skills, and civic dispositions that should be the framework for a high quality curriculum. Effective standards should also clearly delineate the expected learning outcomes for students. The Task Force concluded that, as written, the standards do not provide the framework necessary to guide local curriculum decision-making.

In carrying out the charge to review the Content Standards, the Task Force sought guidance from two sources: (1) the recommendations from the national Campaign for the Civic Mission of Schools (CCMS); and (2) the recommendations from the Alaska Civic Learning Assessment (ACLA) Project. Together, these sources provided a rubric to evaluate the efficacy of the current standards in light of both state and national concerns regarding civic education.

The CCMS campaign has identified criteria for high quality practices in civic education and the civic competencies that students should acquire. Developed through a dialogue among politicians, educators, civic leaders, and business leaders, these criteria and competencies represent a national consensus regarding expectations for civic learning. The Task Force analyzed the Alaska standards to gauge the degree of alignment with this perspective.¹ The results identified significant gaps in the standards as currently written. Of particular concern is the minimal attention given to:

- the content and intellectual skills needed to identify and pose solutions to social problems; and

- the civic participation skills and civic dispositions necessary for young people to be fully and positively engaged in civic life; and
- attention to global/international issues.

The Task Force further reviewed current Content Standards to examine the extent to which they addressed three of the ACLA Project recommendations: (1) start civic learning early in the curriculum and include it systematically at all grade levels; (2) ensure equitable civic learning opportunities and experiences for all students; and (3) ensure that Alaska-specific civic knowledge is prominent in the curriculum. The Task Force concluded that current standards do not ensure that attention to civics is consistent across all grade levels, equally available to all students, or sufficiently inclusive of Alaska-specific content.

To address both the CCMS and ACLA Project concerns, the Task Force recommends the development of "grade-level expectations" to help districts create a cohesive and integrated K-12 approach to civic learning and ensure equitable learning opportunities for all students. "Grade-level expectations" currently exist for other content standards and have been important guides for districts in meeting learning outcomes. In addition, the Task Force recommends that more emphasis be given to content knowledge and experience related to Alaska's local and municipal governments, and local and regional civic leaders, since these are the most accessible to students and teachers and arguably have the greatest impact on their daily lives. Further, although global and international issues and events are addressed in the current standards, Task Force members strongly believe that these areas should receive enhanced attention given their significant impact. These gaps in content can be addressed as part of the recommended revision of the standards and the development of grade level expectations.

The Task Force believes updated Content Standards with grade-level expectations would more fully support Alaska schools in carrying out their civic mission of preparing youth for their participation in a democratic society. Accordingly, we recommend:

The legislature provide funding to the Department of Education and Early Development (DEED) to revise the Government and Citizenship Content Standards and develop grade-level expectations. Further, we recommend that reviews and revisions be made on a periodic basis.

RECOMMENDATION III: CURRICULUM

IDENTIFY AND/OR DEVELOP NATIONAL, STATE AND LOCAL CIVICS CURRICULUM FOR ALL GRADE LEVELS MODELED ON THE QUALITY CRITERIA FOR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMING FOR DEMOCRACY² AND THE SIX PROMISING PRACTICES FOR CIVIC EDUCATION.³ MAKE CIVICS CURRICULUM READILY AVAILABLE TO TEACHERS.

The Alaska Civic Learning Assessment Project report made five recommendations related to curriculum, including:

- Starting civics early in the curriculum;
- Following the six best practices for civic learning;
- Connecting civics with reading and math;
- Ensuring equitable civic learning experiences for all students; and
- Ensuring that Alaska-specific civic knowledge and experience is prominently presented.

We agree that civic learning should be infused throughout the curriculum, at all grade levels and in all subjects. Further, civic learning should be available to all students at all levels of achievement to ensure that civic principles are accessible, familiar and a natural part of everyone's life. Finally, civic learning should include state and local content and experiential opportunities that are relevant and engaging, and should be based on best practices.

In our view, effective curriculum for citizenship education is grounded in the principle that civics is not just content to be learned in the classroom, but also participation, engagement, and a way of thinking about one's place in society. Promising practices for civic education allow students to achieve knowledge and apply it through student governance, involvement in extracurricular activities that foster civic engagement, and participation in simulations of civic activities such as voting, court trials, and legislative deliberation. Accordingly, successful civics curriculum and programs cannot be the sole responsibility of government teachers, but must encompass whole schools and whole communities.

Achieving an integrated curriculum is aided by a number of helpful resources available already. These include curriculum developed by national programs such as the National Council for State Legislatures, the Center for Civic Education, the Constitutional Rights Foundation, the American Bar Association's Public Education Division, Kids Voting USA and Street Law, Inc. There also are significant state and local resources that can be tapped to strengthen existing programs and develop new ones.

The Legislature can be a role model for local and state governments by expanding programs that already provide for the direct engagement of students in the legislative process, and by promoting new approaches. For example, the Legislature's Page and Internship programs, and participation in Close Up and the National Council of State Legislatures' Back to School program, are excellent ways to engage young people in government. New ideas, such as student advisory legislatures, can also be explored. Every governmental body in Alaska—whether national, state or local—should be encouraged to adopt comparable initiatives that connect students to the institutions that affect their lives.

There are many proven strategies that can be incorporated into a comprehensive civic learning plan for K-12 education and recommended to school districts statewide. With adequate funding and support from the Legislature, a new Coordinator of Civic Learning (see Recommendation I) in DEED will be well-positioned to coordinate development of such a plan. The challenge to improvement will be finding creative ways to integrate civic learning into course schedules that are already tight. School districts in Alaska set their own curriculum requirements, and teachers and schools already have time constraints on the school day. Accordingly, we do not recommend a mandatory civics course or curriculum. Instead, we recommend an incentives-based approach that:

- Makes excellent civics curriculum and a comprehensive K-12 civics learning plan available to districts and schools, and provides technical support for their use;
- Recognizes and rewards districts and schools that adopt the curriculum, learning plan and voluntary mechanisms for assessment; and
- Grants awards to "Schools of Civic Distinction" for their success in ensuring quality civic learning school-wide.

The "Schools of Civic Distinction" awards provide not only deserved accolades for schools and districts that embrace best practices for civics learning for all students; they also provide a valuable tool for gauging the effectiveness of the statewide effort to revitalize civic learning. If schools and districts respond to the incentives envisioned with enthusiasm and success, we will know that statewide coordination, clearer standards, more engaging curriculum, and improved professional development are making a difference. Because improved civic learning can lead to improved student performance in other subject areas, DEED should also consider conducting a comparative analysis between student achievement in districts and schools that demonstrate a commitment to civic learning and districts and schools that do not give it high priority.

RECOMMENDATION IV: PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVIDE DISTRICTS WITH COORDINATED TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND FUNDING FOR COMPREHENSIVE PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR TEACHERS AND ADMINISTRATORS THAT ARE ALIGNED WITH THE PROVISIONS OUTLINED IN THE NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND [NCLB] ACT AND BEST PRACTICES IN CIVIC LEARNING.

As public institutions, schools are uniquely situated to prepare the next generation of Americans, and Alaskans, for active citizenship. The Task Force clearly identified the need for high quality, sustained, and relevant professional development for teachers, paraprofessionals, principals, and district administrators if schools are to provide effective and meaningful civic education for Alaska's youth.

The Task Force observed that responsibility for rigorous and effective civic learning has too long rested almost exclusively on social studies teachers, even though ensuring civic learning outcomes for students is a collective responsibility of teachers, principals, and district administrators. In our view, quality professional development regarding best practices in civic learning must be designed to support each of these groups of education professionals as they seek to fulfill their respective responsibilities.

The Task Force concluded that the "Six Promising Practices for Civic Learning"³ provide a framework around which to establish a high quality professional development program for Alaska. Further, we observed that these best practices are aligned with the provisions of the NCLB Act.⁴ We recommend that these proven criteria be used to guide the development and implementation of Alaska's district and state level professional development programs in civic education.

As a state, we must actively support professional opportunities for teachers, principals, and district administrators to understand how to teach towards the standards and assess the performance of their schools. There are numerous national, state, and local entities that could offer valuable learning opportunities for both adults and students, yet they remain underutilized due to a lack of statewide coordination. The Task Force believes that coordinated technical assistance and fiscal support is needed to implement a systematic and sustained professional development program. Accordingly, we recommend:

The legislature provide annual program funding to DEED to provide districts with technical assistance and fiscal support for designing and delivering high quality professional development for civic learning.

⁴ Appendix D

CONCLUSION

Civics education is ultimately the most important goal of our public school system, but it is also our collective responsibility as citizens. Schools cannot do it alone. Across the country, states have recognized that more needs to be done to ensure effective civic learning for all students.⁴ In order to improve the quality of civic education in Alaska, our communities and all branches of government must make a philosophical commitment to contribute. We recommend that the Legislature set an example by also making a financial commitment.

Rather than a required course in civics education or required testing of civics content—which would be costly unfunded mandates—we recommend:

- Funding two Coordinators of Civic Learning in state government, one in the Department of Education and Early Development to work with schools and teachers, and another in the Office of the Lieutenant Governor to work with community organizations and all levels of government through a newly established Alaska Council on Civic Learning.

This two-tiered approach not only will provide educators with the resources to integrate civics education throughout the curriculum, but also will promote collaboration among community groups and state and local agencies best suited to give students practical instruction on the critical importance of civic engagement.

We also recommend:

- Revisiting and strengthening current Alaska Content Standards for Government and Citizenship;
- Developing a comprehensive K-12 Civic Learning Curriculum Plan based on recognized quality criteria and best practices, and offering it to schools and districts statewide with associated incentives and awards; and
- Providing schools and districts with technical assistance and fiscal support to ensure professional development opportunities aligned with No Child Left Behind Act recommendations and best practices in civic learning.

The financial commitment entailed in adopting these recommendations is modest compared to the value of an aware and engaged citizenry. Our democracy will soon rest in the care of today's youth, and we cannot take their preparedness for granted. The next generation of citizens needs leadership and support to carry forward the values, principles and commitments that have guided our country for over 200 years. There can be no wiser investment.

APPENDIX C:
Six Promising Practices for Civic Education
From The Civic Mission of Schools Report

1. Provide instruction in government, history, law, and democracy. Formal instruction in U.S. government, history, and democracy increases civic knowledge. However, schools should avoid teaching only rote facts about dry procedures, which is unlikely to benefit students and may actually alienate them from politics.
2. Incorporate discussion of current local, national, and international issues and events into the classroom, particularly those that young people view as important to their lives. Conversations, however, should be carefully moderated so that students feel welcome to speak from a variety of perspectives. Teachers need support in broaching controversial issues in classrooms since they may risk criticism or sanctions if they do so.
3. Have students apply what they learn through performing community service that is linked to the formal curriculum and classroom instruction.
4. Offer extracurricular activities that provide opportunities for young people to get involved in their schools or communities, and ensure that everyone has the opportunity to participate.
5. Encourage student participation in school governance. A long tradition of research suggests that giving students more opportunities to participate in the management of their own classrooms and schools builds their civic skills and attitudes.
6. Encourage students' participation in simulations of democratic processes and procedures. Recent evidence indicates that simulations of voting, trials, legislative deliberation, and diplomacy in schools can lead to heightened political knowledge and interest. The data are not conclusive, but these approaches show promise and should be considered when developing programs and curriculum.
