ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This legislation will add the requirement of 'legal presence' in the US to obtain a driver's license or ID card. Also, international customers, lawfully in the US for a limited time will now have a expiration date of the DL/ID fixed to date of stay.

This legislation is a small part of Alaska compliance with a new federal mandate, the Real ID Act. The cost associated in FY 08 is to make major changes in our database (ALVIN) to accept these new expiration dates and other verification fields. However, other costs outside of this specific legislation may be requested in the future to ensure full compliance with the Act.

6 the motor vehicle operator's license provided for in AS 28.15.111, except that the card
7 shall be of a different color and shall state in bold type letters across the face of it that 8 it is for identification purposes only. Except as provided in (g) and (i) of this 9 section, an identification card expires on the person's birthday in the fifth year
10 following issuance of the card.

11 * Sec. 2. AS 18.65.310(g) is amended to read:

12 (g) If the person applying for the identification card provided for in (a) of this 13 section is 60 years of age or older, charge may not be made for issuance of the card.
14 Except as provided in (i) of this section, an identification card issued to a person

Sponsor Statement HB 3

HB 3 requires an applicant for an Alaska driver's license to have a legal presence in the United States and, by extension, a legal presence in the State of Alaska. HB 3 also has safeguards that will insure that Alaska license or identification card holders are who they say they are. We require our citizens to provide the documentation for a license or ID; we must also require the same of others.

HB 3 is not the Federal Real ID Act. In fact, I sponsored HB 40 in 2003, similar to my current HB 3 driver's license bill. That's two years before the federal Real ID Act became law. This bill can and should be judged on its own merits.

Yes, HB 3 will bring Alaska into compliance with certain provisions of the Real ID Act, allowing Alaskans to use their Alaska driver's license or ID to enter secure federal buildings or to board an airplane. Without HB 3 Alaskans may soon find themselves having to use a U.S. Passport to take a flight to visit relatives in the lower forty eight or conduct important business in any secure federal building. Those are the facts.

But even if there was no Real ID Act, this bill would still make sense to require a legal presence in order to get an Alaska driver's license. Why should someone have the right to drive a car down the street when they don't have the legal presence to walk down the street?

The Alaska Department of Motor Vehicles has the statutory mandate to determine if an applicant has the necessary documents to receive a license – and this bill simply adds verification that the applicant has a legal presence in the places where the driver's license is issued and that a persons' driving privileges ends when that persons legal presence ends.

I value my privacy, just like other Alaskans. I also value common sense and the sovereign right of the State of Alaska to decide who does and who does not qualify for an Alaska driver's license. Alaska is a sovereign state in sovereign nation, and we should act like one by passing HB 3.

Talking Points HB 3

The changes in AS as a result of HB 3 are summarized as follows:

US Citizens will not be affected – no changes in practice from existing procedures and regulations

International Customers (those persons in the US lawfully for a limited time period i.e. foreign exchange student) may be affected by having the expiration date of the DL/ID consistent with the length of lawful visit

Illegal aliens will be affected by this bill; any undocumented person, or person unlawfully in the US would be statutorily denied a DL/ID.

Here's the simple test for HB 3:

1. Do you believe that US citizens should be allowed a DL/ID?
2. Do you believe that a person lawfully allowed in the US (the International Customer) should be allowed a DL/ID?
3. If yes, should the expiration date of the DL/ID be consistent with the ending date of their lawful visit?
4. Should the DMV refuse to issue a DL/ID to an illegal alien?

If you've answered 'yes' to the above questions, you are in support of the AS changes in HB 3

What HB 3 does not require or accomplish:

1. a national database of your private information
2. a national ID card

What the federal Real ID Act will require in May 2008:

1. HB 3 specifically legal presence in the US
2. Standards for the DL/ID card (federal OMB is reviewing these rules now, no determination has been made yet as to how that will impact Alaska)
3. Retention of document (copy) establishing legal name and status
 - a. by hard copy or
 - b. by electronic copy
4. Cooperation with other states by sharing information

10 (i) Notwithstanding (h) of this section, the department may issue an 11 identification card to a person who presents in person valid, documentary evidence of 12 the person's legal status and presence in the United States. The identification card 13 authorized under this subsection is valid only during the period of the time of the 14 person's authorized stay in the United States and must clearly indicate that expiration

1 date. If the period of authorized stay is indefinite, the expiration date for the 2 identification card is one year from the date of issue. The identification card
3 authorized under this subsection may be renewed only upon presentation of valid,
4 documentary evidence that the status by which the person qualified for the temporary
5 identification card has been extended by the proper United States government
6 authority. The department may by regulation specify what is valid, documentary
7 evidence under this subsection except that the department may not specify that a
8 matricula consular card is valid, documentary evidence.

9 * Sec. 2. AS 28.15.031(b) is amended to read:

10 (b) The department may not issue an original or duplicate driver's license to,
11 nor renew or reinstate the driver's license of, a person

12 (1) whose license is suspended, [OR] revoked, or cancelled, or who is 13 disqualified from obtaining a license, except as otherwise provided in this chapter;

14 (2) who fails to appear in court for the adjudication of a certain
15 vehicle, driver, or traffic offense when the person's appearance is required by statute,
16 regulation, or court rule;

17 (3) who is an habitual user of alcohol or another drug to such a degree
18 that the person is incapable of safely driving a motor vehicle;

19 (4) when the department, based upon medical evidence, has 20 determined that, because of the person's physical or mental disability, the person is not 21 able to drive a motor vehicle safely;

22 (5) who is unable to understand official traffic control devices as 23 displayed in this state or who does not have a fair knowledge of traffic laws and 24 regulations, as demonstrated by an examination;

25 (6) who has knowingly made a false statement in the person's 26 application for a license or has committed fraud in connection with the person's 27 application for, or in obtaining or attempting to obtain, a license, or who has not 28 applied under oath on the form provided for the purpose of obtaining or attempting to 29 obtain a license or permit; [OR]

30 (7) who is required under AS 28.20 to furnish proof of financial 31 responsibility and who has not done so; or

1 (8) who has not presented to the department

2 (A) valid documentary evidence that the person is a citizen
3 of the United States, a national of the United States, a legal permanent 4 resident of the United States, or a conditional resident alien of the United 5 States; a person who is seeking a renewal of, duplicate of, or change of 6 legal name on a license is presumed to meet the requirements of this 7 subparagraph if the license has not expired or been cancelled, suspended,
8 or revoked and the person has not been disqualified from obtaining a 9 license; if the department has been notified by a local, state, or federal 10 government agency that the person seeking a renewal of, duplicate of, or 11 change of legal name on a license is not a citizen of the United States or is 12 not legally in the United States, then the presumption available in this 13 paragraph does not apply; the department may by regulation specify what 14 is valid, documentary evidence under this subparagraph except that the 15 department may not specify that a matricula consular card is valid, 16 documentary evidence; or

17 (B) in person valid, documentary evidence of the person's 18 legal status and presence in the United States; a license issued under this 19 subparagraph may be renewed only upon presentation of valid, 20 documentary evidence that the status by which the person qualified for 21 the license has been extended by the proper United States government
22 authority; a change of name for a license issued under this subparagraph 23 may be made only upon presentation of valid, documentary evidence that 24 the person's name has been changed with regard to the status by which 25 the person qualified for the license; a duplicate license for a license issued 26 under this subparagraph may be issued only upon presentation of valid,
27 documentary evidence that the person's status by which the person
28 qualified for the license remains valid and in effect; the department may 29 by regulation specify what is valid, documentary evidence under this 30 subsection except that the department may not specify that a matricula
31 consular card is valid, documentary evidence.

1 * Sec. 3. AS 28.15.101(a) is amended to read:

2 (a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter and in (d) of this section, a 3 driver's license expires on the licensee's birthday in the fifth year following issuance of 4 the license. A license may be renewed within one year of its expiration upon proper 5 application, payment of the required fee, and except when a license is renewed under 6 (c) of this section, successful completion of a test of the licensee's eyesight.

7 * Sec. 4. AS 28.15.101 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

8 (d) A driver's license issued under AS 28.15.031(b)(8)(B) is valid only during 9 the period of the time the person is authorized to stay in the United States and must 10 clearly indicate the expiration date. If the period of authorized stay is indefinite, the 11 expiration date of the license is one year from the date of issue.

12 * Sec. 5. This Act takes effect January 1, 2008.

[H 2471]

Approved

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia:

1. That § 46.2-328.1 of the Code of Virginia is amended and reenacted as follows:

§ 46.2-328.1. Licenses, permits and special identification cards to be issued only to United States citizens, legal permanent resident aliens, or holders of valid unexpired nonimmigrant visas; exceptions; renewal, duplication, or reissuance.

A. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, except as provided in subsection G of § 46.2-345, the Department shall not issue an original license, permit, or special identification card to any applicant who has not presented to the Department, with the application, valid documentary evidence that the applicant is either (i) a citizen of the United States, (ii) a legal permanent resident of the United States, or (iii) a conditional resident alien of the United States.

B. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection A and the provisions of §§ 46.2-330 and 46.2-345, an applicant who presents in person valid documentary evidence of (i) a valid, unexpired nonimmigrant visa or nonimmigrant visa status for entry into the United States, (ii) a pending or approved application for asylum in the United States, (iii) entry into the United States in refugee status, (iv) a pending or approved application for temporary protected status in the United States, (v) approved deferred action status, or (vi) a pending application for adjustment of status to legal permanent residence status or conditional resident status, may be issued a temporary license, permit, or special identification card. Such temporary license, permit, or special identification card shall be valid only during the period of time of the applicant's authorized stay in the United States or if there is no definite end to the period of authorized stay a period of one year. Any temporary license, permit, or special identification card issued pursuant to this subsection shall clearly indicate that it is temporary and shall state the date that it expires. Such a temporary license, permit or identification card may be renewed only upon presentation of valid documentary evidence that the status by which the applicant qualified for the temporary license, permit or special identification has been extended by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service or the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Homeland Security.

C. Any license or special identification card for which an application has been made for renewal, duplication or reissuance shall be presumed to have been issued in accordance with the provisions of subsection A, provided that, at the time the application is made, the license or special identification card has not expired, or been cancelled, suspended or revoked. The requirements of subsection A shall apply, however, to a renewal, duplication or reissuance if the Department is notified by a local, state or federal government agency that the individual seeking such renewal, duplication or reissuance is neither a citizen of the United States nor legally in the United States.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to an applicant for a special identification card whose year of birth is 1937 or earlier and who has previously held a Virginia-issued driver's license or special identification card, provided that such driver's license or special identification card has not been expired for more than five years.

Institute rates Alaska DMV as one of most lax in U.S. - LICENSES: State disputes claim that it deserves an "F" in verifying applicants' identities.

Alaska's Division of Motor Vehicles is among the nation's most lax when it comes to verifying the identities of driver's license applicants, according to a new study.

"The findings, frankly, are stunning," said Amitai Etzioni, director of the Institute for Communitarian Policy Studies at George Washington University, which examined the safeguards in place at motor vehicle offices in all 50 states.

The Institute, which promotes a balance between individual rights and social responsibility, looked into the subject because driver's licenses are widely used as the definitive ID, and the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorists got theirs through other lax states, namely Florida and Virginia, Etzioni said.

Those states have since shored up their systems, making states that haven't done so attractive destinations for future terrorists looking to acquire false identification from a valid source, Etzioni said.

"We know that the terrorists always discover where the weakest links are," he said.

Officials at the DMV and the state's Division of Homeland Security called the study's conclusions unfair, arguing that it did not take into account all of the identity-verification measures in place, only a select few that aren't.

The Institute established four steps it said states should take, at a minimum, to ensure effective screening for fraudulent applications and assigned a grade based on how many they used.

The steps were verifying Social Security numbers using an online database system; requiring proof that the applicant is legally in the United States and a resident in the state; linking license expiration dates to visa expiration dates for foreigners; and using biometric information, such as fingerprints or retinal scans, to verify identity.

Alaska is one of only four states that got an "F" for not taking any of those steps, Etzioni said. Wisconsin, Michigan and Oregon also flunked the institute's test.

DMV director Duane Bannock acknowledged that Alaska's system isn't perfect, but he argued that Alaska doesn't deserve a failing grade and the Institute's study only looked at part of the system.

Although Social Security cards are allowed as one form of acceptable identification, they are not required, and Bannock said it's easy to get a fake number that would check out on a database.

Applicants for an Alaska driver's license are required to present two pieces of identification, a "primary," that proves date of birth, and a "secondary" to prove identity. An applicant furnishing two primary forms of identification is not required to show a secondary form, Bannock said.

Acceptable primary identification documents include an original or certified birth certificate, a court order, another state's driver's license, a copy of a driver's record from another state, and a military ID card, Bannock said.

Social Security cards are on a list of about two dozen acceptable forms of secondary identification, which also includes health insurance cards, photographic employee identification cards and even income tax returns, Bannock said.

Workers who process driver's license applications across the state receive regular training in how to spot fake birth certificates, Social Security cards and other identifying documents, Bannock said.

Alaska's DMV has no immediate plans to put in place a Social Security number verification system, nor is it likely that applicants will be fingerprinted or retinal scanned any time soon, Bannock said.

However, he said the idea of making driver's licenses for foreigners expire when their travel or work visas expire is a good one, and he called the institute's criticism on that point fair.

"I would expect that's going to be changed here very soon," he said.

Meanwhile, state lawmakers next week are expected to resume debate on a bill that would require proof of citizenship or legal residency as a condition for getting an Alaska driver's license, which has been a hot-button in statehouses across the nation recently.

Alaska's bill, sponsored by Rep. Bob Lynn, R-Anchorage, has languished in Juneau since January 2003. Lynn said he hopes to get it passed out of the State Affairs Committee and onto the House floor before the Legislature adjourns the session in three weeks.

"I don't want Osama bin Laden or any of his friends to be able to get Alaska driver's licenses, and the way it is now, that in fact could happen," Lynn said.

An aide to State Affairs Committee Chairman Bruce Weyhrauch said he has put it on the hearings calendar for next week.

Tom Burgess, deputy director of the state's Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management, said the institute's grading system was flawed, and that the state doesn't deserve an "F."

"Things like this do cause us concern, and we'd like to see something done in all these different areas," Burgess said.

"But I don't know that there's a bunch of holes in the system, and I haven't seen any indications that we have a problem," Burgess said. "People have to look at more criteria before they start assigning grades to states. A more thorough analysis is appropriate here."

IT'S NOT

It's a De Facto National ID. We Should Make It Secure

by Amitai Etzioni

Every time a Transportation Security Administration, (TSA) agent closely examines my driver's license, I have a hard time not making one of those wisecracks that gets you into trouble. The reason? I know that driver's licenses as a means of identification are a joke. Fake ones can still be ordered on the Internet or purchased for about $60 in many cities, and real ones can be obtained fraudulently.

The joke becomes a lot less funny when one recalls that several of the 9/11 hijackers used phony documents to acquire driver's licenses, which they used to obtain credit cards, enroll in flight school and purchase airplane tickets. Yet little has been done since then to make driver's licenses more reliable, despite the fact that they are by far the most commonly used means of identification in the United States--not just for travel, but also for entering most public building and numerous private ones. As a result, the "no fly" and "selectee" watch lists (used by the TSA to identify passengers who pose threats to airline safety), as well as other security-related databases, are at least partially blinded.

I am hardly a smart-card expert (or even a dull-witted one). But as a sociologist and social philosopher, I have studied circumstances under which concern for the common good might trump the right to privacy--for instance, the question of whether convicted pedophiles should be required to notify the communities in which they settle of their predilections. As a result, the New York-based Markle Foundation, which focuses on technology policy, invited me to join a task force composed of privacy advocates and former officials from the Pentagon, National Security Administration and CIA to study national security and information technology. I chaired a subgroup on reliable identification.

Our deliberations opened with a bombshell. Robert J. Cramer of the General Accounting Office described a test in which GAO agents had been able to enter the United States using counterfeit driver's licenses without being stopped--25 out of 25 times in late 2002 and early 2003. They entered through sea ports from Canada, walked through border crossings from Mexico and arrived at airports from Jamaica. Shocked by these findings, our subgroup issued a report in 2003 with a long list of remedies. In March and April this year, Jared Bloom, my research assistant, and I queried officials in the 50 states and the District of Columbia about measures taken on these matters. The findings reveal how useless driver's licenses are as a means of identification.

It is still impossible for any state to find out whether a person applying for a driver's license has already been issued one by another state (unless the applicant has had a license revoked or suspended). Thus, anyone with a clean driver's record can get a handful of licenses and hand over the extras to terrorists or other criminals.

Sixteen states still do not check online to see if an applicant presents a valid Social Security number. Instead, they submit hard copies of social securities numbers for confirmation. While waiting for replies, several of these states let applicants, who can be very hard to locate later, walk away with possibly false temporary, or sometimes even permanent, licenses.

Each state follows its own procedures in deciding which so-called breeder documents, (those used to obtain other cards or forms of identification) will be used to determine applicants' identities.

Seventeen states do not require proof that applicants are legally in the United States.

Only nine states collect biometric information,

(facial features, iris patterns of fingerprints), which is the most reliable means of identification. (In Texas, for example, fingerprints are taken and put on file, but not on the licenses themselves).

Driver's licenses-like other state-issued ID-cards are relics of the past. They were never meant to be used for national security purposes, or even national identification purposes. Hence, a relatively low level of reliability sufficed for the original purpose of confirming that a person had passed a driving test, met the physical requirements and was old enough to operate a vehicle.

The rub is that since 9/11, these state-issued pieces of plastic have been used increasingly as de facto national security cards, because a driver's license issued by one state is honored by all others and because federal authorities, especially the TSA, treat them as the equivalents of national passports. However, the federal government has not taken over the issuance of these cards the way it controls the issuance of Social Security or green cards. It has not even required states to improve their own issuance practices. It has merely treated the licenses as though they were high-grade certificates.

Why has America been so slow to take remedial actions? It is not an accident, or a matter of plain neglect that the states largely act as if 9/11 did not happen. One reason is that because of a strong U.S. tradition of states' rights, the country is reluctant to move from an archaic state system to a 21st century form of government in which more tasks--especially those concerning national security--are federalized. And no state wants the folks in Washington, D.C. to tell it how to issue licenses. If the federal government did ask the states to meet standards suitable for what amounts to a domestic passport--needed to travel with the United States by air, by road and by rail, it would have to provide the states with the resources needed, otherwise it would be just another unfunded mandate.

Another major reason elected officials dare not touch ID cards is that backing for privacy with respect to this issue is particularly strong, with support spanning the ideological spectrum from conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly to the

Driver's License article

American Civil Liberties Union, (ACLU). In a 2002 letter to President Bush, a group of privacy advocates led by the ACLU and the Free Congress Foundation wrote, "The administration should not take any steps to implement such a system or fund any proposals that would result in a national ID, including the study or development of standardized state driver's licenses." And in a letter to the New York Times published on May 2, 2002, Schlafly and ACLU president, Nadine Strossen, stirred by one U.S. senator's proposal for standardizing driver's licenses as an effort to implement national ID cards wrote, "A national identity card would diminish privacy in America and do nothing to prevent further acts of terrorism on our soil."

The privacy lobby disregards the fact that such cards are commonly used in many other democracies. I prefer to call them national security cards because, they differ from national ID cards in two profound ways. A person is required to carry a national ID card at all times and is to produce it on demand from police without any reason. (I have seen the police in Brussels block both ends of a street and ask everyone to identify themselves). In the U.S. system, people are not required to carry any form of identification unless they wish to enter a secure public area, such as some parts of airports or certain public buildings. Even when driving on public roads, Americans cannot be asked to present their licenses unless they have shown cause for police concern, for example by speeding or driving without a license plate.

Some privacy advocates push the most emotional buttons they can find. Lillie Coney, a senior policy analyst for the Electronic Privacy Information Center, argues that more reliable means of identification would make it easier for employers and government officials to discriminate against minorities. For instance, police might be more likely to demand to see the ID cards of foreign looking citizens. In effect, the opposite is the case; in places where an ID is required, such as airports, all are treated equally.

When there are no universal means of identification, however, those who look suspicious are queried which can lead to racial discrimination.

Many privacy advocates also argue that more reliable ID cards would, as the ACLU put it in 2002, "lull Americans into a dangerously false sense of security." This argument holds that if we rely too heavily on our improved means of identification for security, then we will take in person security less seriously. The same argument was made about seat belts that if people felt more secure they might drive like maniacs. If this absurd logic were followed, all effective safety measures should be abandoned. Most important, privacy advocates disregard the fact that the higher the level of reliability of the means of identification, the less that privacy will be violated. The reason is that if authorities cannot establish the most elementary aspects of a person's identity, such as a person's name, with some measure of reliability, then the only available alternative is to create a much more invasive profile from a

Opinion: Passport rules get more confusing

Flying? Cruising? You may (or may not) need a new ID after all

By Rob Lovitt

Travel writer

Updated: 1:46 p.m. HT Jan 5, 2007

If you're planning a Caribbean cruise or Mexican vacation this winter, you may be able to take one thing off your to-do list. Thanks to a last-minute change in impending federal regulations, you may not need to get a passport after all.

Then again, you might. According to the new regs, some travelers will, indeed, need a passport come January, while others won't for up to another two years. Stranger yet, whether you will or won't has less to do with where you're going than how you intend to get there.

Confused? Trust me, as a guy who just helped his 15-year-old daughter apply for her first passport, I know the feeling.

The story so far

Historically, U.S. citizens have only needed a birth certificate and driver's license to travel to Mexico and most Caribbean countries. But in April 2005, the federal government announced new, stricter requirements as part of its efforts to strengthen border security.

In a nutshell, the new rules stated that all travelers — including home-bound U.S. citizens — would need a passport to enter the U.S. from the aforementioned destinations, starting in January 2007. (Going away, it seems, isn't the issue; it's getting back in.)

Not surprisingly, the travel industry was none too pleased. There would be chaos, they claimed, as people scrambled to comply in time, or worse, canceled their trips due to the added expense. On October 4, their prayers were answered (well, some, anyway) when the president signed off on a partial deadline extension.

Barring additional changes, it breaks down like this: If you're planning on visiting Mexico or the Caribbean and traveling by air, you will need a passport to get back into the U.S. beginning January 23. If you're traveling by land or sea, however, you can go without until at least 2008. In other words, if you're cruising to Cozumel, bon voyage; if you're flying to Barbados without a passport, you may experience a few bumps on the flight back home.

Just do it

Personally, I think everybody who travels outside the country should have a passport. (Approximately 27 percent of Americans currently have one.) And, I'm sorry, but I don't buy the arguments about the cost or inconvenience.

Currently, a new U.S. passport costs $97 for adults, $82 for children 15 and younger (photos not included). Let's call it $100 even, which applied to, say, a three- or four-night cruise — the scenario the cruise industry likes to cite — is like tacking on a premium of 25 percent or more.

Clearly, that can be a hefty hunk of change, but it conveniently ignores one fact: Your passport is valid long after your sail-and-sign card no longer works at the bar. (For travelers 16 or over, they're good for 10 years; for those 15 and younger, five years.) Keep traveling and that "premium" eventually works out to about the price of a couple of piña coladas.

The inconvenience argument is even shakier since there are approximately 8,000 places in the country that accept passport applications, including many post offices, libraries, and city halls. Many are open after 5 p.m., some have Saturday hours, and if you fill out the forms beforehand, the whole process can take 10 minutes or less. (For forms and more information, go here.)

Finally, there are those who argue that the pending deadline will force people to pay even more ($60) for expedited service. Maybe so, but as a guy who has had his daughter's completed forms on his desk for three months, but only turned them in two weeks ago, blaming anybody else for my procrastination seems a bit like bellyaching.

Trouble in transit

Honestly, I have only one issue with the whole situation. The regulations that were set to go into effect in January applied across the board — everybody was expected to have a passport, whether they were traveling by airplane, cruise ship, or VW minivan.

The latest version takes a more piecemeal approach that's inconsistent, potentially inequitable, and likely to cause more, not less, confusion at the border this winter. We certainly don't need any more of that.

So, that's why I took my daughter down to city hall to get her passport a few weeks ago. She smiled for the camera, I wrote the checks (one for the passport, another for the photos), and the nice lady behind the counter took care of the rest. As it turned out, the regs changed a week later, so she may not need one after all.

Even so, I'm glad we did it. I'm glad to have one less thing to worry about if the regulations change again. And I'm glad my daughter will have a passport, whether she needs it now or not, because I know that someday she will.

A passport is more than just proper ID; it's a step toward becoming a true traveler.

Driver's License Integrity

Executive Summary

States have moved rapidly to address a variety of issues that were highlighted by the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001 related to driver's license issuance, administration and enforcement, and verifiability. (See Appendix A) Although not essential to or directly related to the atrocities committed on 9-11, discovering that many of the terrorists held driver's licenses - some fraudulently issued and some from states with lax issuance standards - has focused state leaders' attention on the many opportunities to improve driver's license integrity for a host of important public safety reasons. In 2000 alone, drivers with invalid licenses killed over 6,200 people and the total economic impact of invalid drivers in that one-year is estimated to have exceeded $25 billion. (National Highway Traffic Safety Administration) Enhancing issuance standards, driver's license document authenticity, and driver information verifiability will significantly improve the driver's license for its only required use - to prove state sanction to operate a motor vehicle - and for its many permissive uses that relate to proving identity. States are also increasingly cognizant of incidents of fraud and neglect that pervade many driver's license issuing authorities, an issue at the heart of comprehensive driver's license program reform.

Federal legislation to preempt states' control of their driver's license programs is currently being considered in Congress. This legislation is unnecessary because states are rising to the challenge of addressing this important issue, subject to significant legal challenge, and likely would create a huge unfunded mandate for states. Additionally, it would be considerably less effective than state action.

The purpose of this document is to define the issues that states must address in order to improve driver's license integrity and to propose a variety of options for state officials' consideration.

Background

Rhode Island passed the first driver's license law in 1908. Since then, every state and territory has established a host of statutory provisions and administrative regulations to govern the privilege of driving. Driver's licenses were created for the purpose of protecting public safety by recognizing those individuals who met the necessary standards to receive state sanction to operate a motor vehicle. Generally, those standards include age, knowledge of traffic laws, physical capability to drive, and practical driving competence. Today, although driver's licenses are also used for many permissive purposes tied to verifying identity - from obtaining a library card to cashing a check to boarding an aircraft - the principal purpose of a driver's license remains unchanged; the only required use of a driver's license is to prove state sanction to drive. And, except for the commercial driver's license (CDL), states retain control of the standards governing driver's license issuance and enforcement. All states have required drivers to be licensed since 1954.

Driver's licenses are issued by states under the Constitutional authority of the Tenth Amendment, which reads "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." The result is that individual states have adopted driving standards appropriate to their own residents and have vested the authority to issue driver's licenses in a variety of state agencies. While a majority of states leave it to their respective Departments of Motor Vehicles or Departments of Transportation, this authority in some states is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State or even the State Tax Commission. (See Appendix B)

A driver's license represents a tool that affords its holder vastly increased mobility to move within a state and among states. Therefore, states have collaborated to ensure the safety of the nation's roads. Two interstate compacts - contractual agreements among the states - govern states' administration of drivers. The Driver License Compact (DLC) and the Nonresident Violator Compact (NRVC) provide a means for state cooperation and information sharing. These compacts were developed by the states and are currently administered by the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators (AAMVA). The DLC, created in 1961, ensures that a driver's home state receives and processes information about traffic violations committed by that driver in another state. Forty-five states have adopted the DLC. The NRVC standardizes methods used by different jurisdictions to process traffic citations received by out of state residents. Forty-four states have adopted the NRVC since its development in 1972. These compacts, while limited in scope, illustrate the states' ability for cooperative action.

In 1986, under its authority to regulate interstate commerce, the federal government enacted the "Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act" (CMVSA). This act established national standards for the issuance of the CDL. Commercial drivers have required a CDL since 1992. According to the US Department of Transportation (USDOT), CDL's represent approximately 5% of the total number of driver's licenses issued in the United States. The USDOT reports that the United States has approximately 190 million licensed drivers.

Current Issues

A more effective structure for states to comprehensively enforce driving laws would significantly enhance public safety, as would individual state action. Such enhancements would include the following elements:

- Integrity of license issuance - Ensuring that the person receiving a license meets necessary driving competency standards and has a verifiable identity.
- Verifiability - Providing access to appropriate law enforcement officials to verify the authenticity of the license document, driving history, and identity of the license holder.

Integrity of License Issuance

All states verify the identity of a potential license holder before issuing a driver's license. The documents used to verify identity for this purpose are known as "foundation documents" because they provide the building blocks of personal information on which the license is issued. Foundation documents range from birth certificates, to utility bills, to passports, to other state's driver's licenses. The principal challenge related to foundation documents is states' ability to verify their authenticity and validity. States do not routinely verify, for instance, that the foundation documents with which they're presented are authentic (i.e. that the document is genuine) or valid (i.e. that the document is eligible to be used). For example, a deceased individual's birth certificate may be authentic, but it is invalid for use as a foundation document for a driver's license. Richard Varn, CIO of the State of Iowa provides a detailed discussion of this issue. In sum, Varn says that states must increase their ability to verify the authenticity and validity of foundation documents. He also provides the outline of an information infrastructure framework for doing so. Currently, few states actively verify foundation documents. Additionally, relying on an individual state employee's ability to recognize authentic documents is nearly impossible. Indeed, the Secret Service recently reported that the United States produces more than 16,000 different kinds of birth certificates.

A second but related issue is the process by which a state ensures that the individual presenting valid foundation documents is indeed the individual to whom those documents belong. It is possible, in other words, for Jane to present Sally's birth certificate and get a valid driver's license in Sally's name. The birth certificate itself is an authentic document but it does not belong to the person presenting it. Varn suggests that the use of foundation documents alone to prove identity is inadequate.

Then, of course, there's fraud. Fraudulent issuance of driver's licenses comes in two forms - fraud that occurs without the cooperation of the licensing authority and fraud that occurs with it. It is clear that the current system provides an individual who chooses to produce fraudulent foundation documents with a significant opportunity to illegally hold a valid license or licenses. As will be discussed later, such documents provide the ability to assume the identity of another individual in order to affirmatively commit a host of criminal offenses or to avoid responsibility for previously committed acts. It is in states' interests to create a system that significantly hampers criminals' ability to misuse the driver's license system.

The most comprehensive system, however, is only as strong as its weakest link. In many states, the weak link has proven to be licensing authority employees. News stories about such incidents abound and as the driver's license system is improved and the driver's license becomes a more secure and valuable document, it is likely that employee fraud, if unaddressed, will increase.

On October 1, 2000, for instance, the "Orange County Register" reported that California Department of Motor Vehicle (DMV) employees were selling fraudulent driver's licenses for up to $4000 a piece and that 60 active cases of fraud existed. In New Jersey, rings of DMV employees selling licenses for thousands of dollars a piece were uncovered by law enforcement during a two-year investigation according to "The Star-Ledger." Additionally, at least one state's motor vehicle administrator has stated publicly that her state does not input all relevant driving citations into the appropriate database. It is likely that the known incidents of fraud (and neglect) are merely the "tip of the iceberg" of issues related to driver's license administration.

Verifiability

Although most driver's license holders may very well believe that a law enforcement official in one state can quickly and accurately verify driver history on a driver from another state, the reality is much different. Although systems exist for this purpose, it can take from 30 to 60 minutes or longer to access driver record information in another state. The result is a practical inability to verify license information and driver history in real time. It is possible, then, that an individual stopped for a traffic offense could produce a counterfeit license - in the name of an individual who does not even exist - and escape detection. Another scenario is that an individual could produce a license in his or her own name that the law enforcement official could not immediately learn had been revoked or suspended. This is a significant public safety issue, since according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) individuals with invalid driver's licenses caused approximately 11% of fatal accidents in 2000. The cost in human life - over 6,200 fatalities - injuries, property damage, and increased insurance premiums is enormous. In fact, based on available NHTSA data, the economic cost of these fatal accidents alone was over $6 billion. And, the economic impact of all accidents in 2000 caused by invalid drivers is estimated to have exceeded $25 billion.

In addition to the acknowledged law enforcement need to verify the authenticity and validity of the license document and have real-time access to driver history information, it is also clear that the document must belong to the person holding it. The concept of collecting and using uniquely individual personal identifiers to tie driver's license holders to their license is decades old. Most states require a picture and even physical description to appear on license documents. The issue, though, is whether states should incorporate additional kinds of uniquely individual personal identifiers (e.g. fingerprints, retinal scans, etc.) into their licensing process and license documents to strengthen the connection between the license holder and the document and to decrease fraudulent issuance and use. Additional measures to improve verifiability are certainly warranted.

Misconceptions Regarding Current Driver's License Issues

There are many compelling public safety reasons to improve driver's license programs in individual states and the system for sharing information among states. It is difficult to defend, for instance, issuing authentic licenses to imposters and failing to adequately share information about unsafe drivers. However, those interested in laying the foundation for a national identification system, make two obviously false arguments for system reform. It's important to understand these arguments in order to fully appreciate the implications of pending driver's license system reform currently before Congress - legislation that would "federalize" the driver's license.

First, it is factually accurate that many of the September 11th terrorists held driver's licenses. Several terrorists were issued licenses under false identities and others held licenses in their own names. While it is clear that no state licensing authority would ever intentionally issue a driver's license to a terrorist, it is impossible to conceive of a driver's license system that could screen out individuals intending to use the license in the commission of some future crime. Certainly, recent experience in the Midwest involving a college student planting explosives in mailboxes proves that. (It is interesting to note, too, that a driver's license in that case proved to have a much more direct relationship to the crimes committed than did the licenses held by the September 11th terrorists. It has even been suggested that "federalizing" the sale of box cutters, an admittedly absurd suggestion, would be a more relevant response to the September 11th attacks than "federalizing" the driver's license.)

It must also be understood that the federal government has sole responsibility for admitting, regulating, and monitoring foreign nationals in the country. With regard to foreign terrorists, the federal government must prevent these individuals from entering the country in the first place. With regard to foreign nationals it chooses to admit, the federal government must at least make information about these individuals available to states in real time so that visas and other documents can be verified. The federal government may even want to consider certifying certain foreign nationals as eligible to receive a driver's license. And, states may wish to re-evaluate whether issuing licenses to "non-status" immigrants is appropriate, despite important public safety reasons for doing so. Should the federal government attempt to shift responsibility for monitoring foreign nationals to the states, the costs and liability issues for the states are enormous. Regardless of the approach, the federal government must provide significant leadership and direction to states on these matters and must be held accountable when it fails to do so. The best driver's license system will not and cannot stop terrorism. The suggestion that it could hampers important reform efforts.

Second, the problem of "identity theft" in the United States is significant. Indeed, it is used as a principal argument for improving the verifiability of driver's licenses. The argument is this - There are over 500,000 cases of identity theft a year. The driver's license is the most widely used form of personal identification. Improving the current driver's license system and creating a better driver's license document can eliminate identity theft. (See Betty Serian's testimony to Congress, April 16, 2002.)

A close examination of this argument reveals its significant flaws. First, the term "identity theft," as used by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), is an umbrella designation for a variety of crimes that require the criminal misuse by one person of another person's personal information, even including the digital signature of a cell phone. The FTC's own statistics show that the vast majority of "identity theft" is actually credit fraud and bears little relation to the issuance of a driver's license. Indeed, although the FTC's Identity Theft Hotline telephone counselors do not specifically ask callers whether a fake driver's license was implicated in their case, callers are offered the opportunity to volunteer that information. Fake driver's licenses are reported in 2.7% of cases.

Second, the "over 500,000" figure is exaggerated by as much as 500 percent. The number comes from self-reporting by the three major credit-reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian, and TransUnion) to the General Accounting Office (GAO). Because these agencies became concerned that individuals were placing "fraud alerts" on their accounts prophylactically, whether they had actually been victims of credit fraud or not, the agencies changed their fraud alert procedures. Now, fraud alerts come in two forms. The first is a 30-day fraud alert, placed following an initial report of credit fraud. The second is a permanent fraud alert, placed upon request after the initial 30-day fraud alert expires. That change has reduced the estimated number of "identity theft" cases from over 500,000 to approximately 100,000 cases per year.

The result is that the best data available from the FTC suggests that the number of cases of identity theft per year, in which a falsified driver's license is implicated, is about 2,700, far fewer than the 500,000 plus cases suggested in recent Congressional testimony. It must also be noted that a breakdown of how those 2,700 licenses were issued does not exist. The vast majority of those could involve fraudulent issuance by licensing authority employees, for instance. This is important because it suggests that any reform of individual driver's license programs or the cooperative driver's license system must begin with a close examination of fraud in driver's license administration offices.

It is also important to note that those who advocate the use of the driver's license to stop the much larger and vaguely related problem of "identity theft" in its various forms admit that they want to expand the required use of a driver's licenses to non-driving purposes (e.g. the verification of identity for a host of other activities - banking, health care, etc.). This has enormous implications. Doing that would require tying public and private databases together. Such a system could certainly not be characterized as anything less than a "national identification system," with significant opportunities for misuse of information, violations of privacy, and license holder "tracking." Additionally, a large percentage (approximately 33%) of American citizens, residents, and visitors don't have driver's licenses because they don't drive. It is probable that such proposals would ultimately lead to the requirement that everyone be "licensed" in some form by the government whether they intend to drive or not. In other words, the driver's license would become an identity license.

The Scope of the Real Solution

By arguing that driver's licenses are more than they are and that any possible "fix" to the current driver's license system must address a range of unrelated collateral matters, advocates for an enhanced "identity security" system cloud the real issues and hamper an appropriate and effective solution. States should move to improve the integrity of issuance of driver's licenses and the verifiability of those licenses because doing so will address important public safety concerns related directly to the primary purpose of a license - state sanction to operate a motor vehicle - and will improve the license document for a host of other permissive uses. The scope of a real solution, then, must address the following elements:

1. Issuance Standards - States should consider adopting standards for issuing driver's licenses that include the use of verifiable (e.g. authentic and valid) foundation documents. Such standards will necessarily involve enhancement of the control and verifiability of foundation documents within states, among states, and between states and the federal government.
2. Driver Information - Collection, Sharing, and Exchange - States should consider enhancing their ability to share information about drivers with one another by consistently collecting and sharing driver information. This information should then be available to appropriate law enforcement officials in real time.
3. State Operation and Enforcement - States should consider examining their own driver's license authorities and should consider whether their lead law enforcement organization should take an enhanced role in administering the driver's license program. Although the integrity of current licensing authorities clearly varies from state to state, fraud in offices that issue licenses is a significant issue and cannot be ignored. An enhanced law enforcement role in licensing administration would likely greatly reduce fraud, ensure compliance with established standards, and promote government efficiency by tying the issuance of licenses to the enforcement of them. Additionally, states should consider additional penalties for criminal activity related to the improper issuance or manufacture of driver's licenses.
4. Tamper and Counterfeit-Proof Features - States should consider making the driver's license document more tamper resistant and difficult to counterfeit.
5. Accurate and Reliable Personal Identifiers - States should consider enhancing the type of uniquely individual personal identifiers they use to tie a driver to a driver's license document. This information should be verifiable in real time by appropriate law enforcement officials.
6. Verifiability - States should consider enhancing their communications and information infrastructure to allow real time access to driving history information, as well as the ability to verify the authenticity of the driver's license document.

State Driven Solutions

The acknowledged issues with the current driver's license system provide states with a significant opportunity to drastically increase public safety and reduce the associated costs of unsafe drivers. Although some argue that the federal government must preempt the states' authority in this area and mandate national driver's license standards, such an approach is unnecessary and substantially less effective than states acting independently and in concert with one another. State approaches have included and can include:

- Establishing a "State Clearinghouse for Best Practices" to promote effective regulatory and legislative changes in states that mirrors the on-going efforts of CSG, The National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), and The National Governor's Association (NGA) on a wide array of issues. Information would be posted electronically and made available through annual or semi-annual written reports. The clearinghouse would document legislative enactments, regulatory changes, executive orders, interim committee reports and judicial decisions and provide links to related articles, publications and reports. Additionally, Clearinghouse staff could provide necessary technical support to states.
- Drafting model legislation related to the issuance and verification processes. Model legislation would be collaboratively drafted by CSG, NCSL, and NGA or by an organization experienced with the production of model legislation. Recently, CSG, NCSL, and NGA drafted model legislation to streamline sales and use tax collection. Model legislation would identify issues that have surfaced in all or most states regarding driver's license issuance and verification and create a marker for individual states to target for making changes and modifications.
- Developing uniform minimum standards that could be adopted by states for issuance and verification of driver's licenses through a joint CSG, NCSL, and NGA effort. States would have flexibility to go beyond the minimum standards and, therefore, continue to test additional ways of enhancing the integrity of the overall system. Intergovernmental agreements to ensure compliance could also be adopted.

- A new "Interstate Compact on Driver's License Integrity" could be developed. Modeled on CSG's recent experience with the development and adoption of the Compact on Adult Offender Supervision, a new compact would replace the existing compacts, which were never designed as comprehensive and are inadequately administered. As a contract among states, the new compact would provide a mutually agreeable and enforceable framework for cooperative state action. Key advantages and elements of a new interstate compact, could include:
 - Speed of Enactment - The compact can be developed and implemented by states in as few as 30 months, consistent with CSG's experience with the adult offender compact. Compact development involves a consensus approach in which all states will have the opportunity to participate.
 - Fifty State and Full Territorial Adoption - The compact's language can encourage all states to adopt it in order to provide protection from unsafe drivers for their own residents and lower associated insurance and other costs. For instance, the language of the compact can preclude the sharing of driver information with non-compacting states. Additionally, compacting states could refuse to honor the driver's licenses from non-compacting states.
 - Administration and Enforcement - The compact can establish an Interstate Commission to oversee its administration and enforcement. This Commission could be granted authority to make and enforce rules in a far more effective and dynamic way than can the federal government, which can only establish static requirements. Enforcement provisions could include a range of mechanisms from alternative dispute resolution to fines and costs assessment, suspension and termination of membership in the compact, and judicial enforcement. The Commission would also oversee the development of an integrated information sharing system that preserves state control of driver information.
 - Cost - Development and enactment of the compact could likely be undertaken for approximately 1% of the funding authorized in recently introduced legislation to federalize the driver's license. Long-term costs would be addressed in the compact itself. This cost analysis is consistent with CSG's experience with the adult offender compact.
 - Standards - States could mutually agree to much more rigorous standards than have been proposed in federal legislation.

States welcome the opportunity to engage the federal government in appropriate partnerships to ensure prompt enactment of these proposed solutions.

The "Federalized" Driver's License

Three pieces of federal legislation that would "federalize" the driver's license are currently under review by Congress.

Driver's License Modernization Act of 2002 (DLMA)

This act, introduced by Rep. Jim Moran and Rep. Tom Davis of Virginia, requires that within five years states will implement driver's license programs with the following requirements:

- Driver's licenses will become smart cards with computer chips that store a variety of information.
- Biometric data to match the license with its owner will be collected.
- States' participation in national databases will be required.
- Tamper-resistant security features will be incorporated into all license documents.
- States will adopt and implement procedures for accurately documenting the identity and residence of an individual before issuing a driver's license.

This legislation directs the Secretary of Transportation to establish necessary standards within six months of its adoption in consultation with the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators (AAMVA), the General Services Administration, and the National Institute of Standards and Technology. The bill also authorizes the federal government to appropriate $315 million for grants to states to help offset initial costs of this new system. The specific language of the bill should be of interest to state leaders, however. It repeatedly directs the Secretary of Transportation to set standards but doesn't require federal funding to pay for new federally imposed requirements.

Driver's License Integrity Act of 2002 (DLIA)

Similar to the DLMA, this legislation drafted by Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois would require:

- Minimum uniform standards for issuance and administration of state-issued driver's licenses.
- Interstate sharing of driving information for verification with enhanced privacy protection within five years of enactment.
- Enhanced ability for verification and authentication of the driver's license.
- Prevention of abuse and enhanced penalties for internal fraud.
- Similar state funding allocation.

DLIA requires the Secretary of Transportation to develop the minimum set of verification and identification requirements and supervise state implementation.

HR 4043

This legislation, introduced by Rep. Jeff Flake of Arizona, would bar Federal agencies from accepting a State-issued driver's license for any identification-related purpose unless the State requires licenses issued to nonimmigrant aliens to expire upon the expiration of the aliens' nonimmigrant visa.

Advocates for "federalizing" the driver's license argue that the state run driver's license system is broken and cannot be fixed without federal intervention and oversight. It has been argued that the national scope of the problem, the need to act quickly, and the associated remedial costs require a federally mandated solution. However, there are a number of significant weaknesses inherent in this approach. They include:

- Federal legislation that deals with non-commercial driver's licenses would be subject to years of legal challenges on constitutional grounds and might be struck down.
- The federal government took six years to implement the CDL license after passing the enacting legislation; six years to address a pool of licenses that is 1/20th the size of non-commercial driver's licenses. And, in May 2002, Daniel Hartman, who manages the division at the US Department of Transportation that oversees the CDL process, stated the most significant problem that system faces - 16 years after its enactment - is fraud in the licensing authority offices that administer the system.
- "Federalizing" the driver's license would require a host of additional federal administrative and legislative action beyond the initial legislation in order to effectively administer and enforce the federal directives.
- The "federalized" driver's license is "the on-ramp to the national ID highway" because it logically requires the federal government to assert control of the driving and personal data collected by states. This data could then be used for a host of non-driving related purposes without state consent.
- The "federalized" driver's license that includes so-called "smart technology," as required by the DLMA, opens the driver's license document - without state consent - to a host of other required uses. It creates a document that could hold personal identifying information as well as credit and other information. Currently, the technology does not exist to make such a document tamper-proof. The difficulty of disclaiming use of a fraudulently produced version by the legitimate holder would be much greater as well.
- Federal legislation requires the setting of standards without requiring the availability of funding to pay associated costs. These costs could extend far beyond the technology required to implement the federal approach and would likely include increased administrative costs for states and an increased burden to enforce violations of federal law.
- Federal legislation, particularly the DLMA, entrenches the role of motor vehicle administrators as the issuers of driver's licenses at the state level. The federal government should not preclude states from reviewing whether their leading law enforcement organization should take an enhanced role in administering driver's license issuance in order to reduce fraud and promote government efficiency.

Conclusion

States have moved expeditiously, both independently and in concert, to address the issues with the current driver's license system. Although much work remains, state leaders increasingly understand the appropriate universe of issues that must be addressed and the urgency of action. State leaders welcome the cooperative efforts of the federal government through appropriate national organizations, but resist "federalizing" the driver's license. CSG and NCSL, in concert with other national organizations, remain committed to working closely together, and through their members - every elected and appointed state official in the nation - to improve the integrity of the state issued driver's license.

APPENDIX A

Examples of State Action to Improve Driver's License Integrity

Many states are enhancing their driver's license issuance process. Florida may make it a felony for anyone to sell or manufacture a counterfeit driver's license. It may also require non-citizens to show extra identification before being given a new or renewed license. In New Jersey, citizens may have to produce official copies of birth or marriage certificates to get new IDs. More state activities are described below:

Delaware

Governor Minner's package of homeland security legislation includes S.B. 287 - Driver's License Security - Expands the requirements for persons applying for a driver's license in Delaware. Most significantly, it would require an applicant to provide proof that the applicant is legally in the United States. Sponsored by Sen. Henry and Rep. Smith.

Florida

In October, Florida Gov. Jeb Bush ordered tighter controls on issuing driver's licenses to foreigners after the disclosure that three of the Sept. 11 hijackers had overstayed their visas yet had current Florida driver's licenses or state ID cards. Bush ordered that the licenses of foreign drivers expire at the same time as their permits to be in the country. He also directed that motor vehicle officials keep copies of any foreign documents used by license applicants.

Iowa

Iowa's government is building a clearinghouse that state agencies could use to block the issuance of false driver's licenses and other personal identification documents. The Identity-Security Clearinghouse would electronically tie a resident's birth certificate to the issuance of a Social Security number and only one ID document, such as a driver's license. Safeguarding personal identities could reduce identity theft and fraud.

Kansas

Legislation that would help protect Kansans' financial privacy won preliminary approval in the Senate. The bill would require that a person's thumbprint appear on a driver's license or state identification card, along with a photograph. To obtain a driver's license or identification card, a person would have to show proof of age or identity or both. After July 1, 2003, a thumbprint would be required. The legislation also would require an applicant to submit a Social Security number to be checked by the Division of Motor Vehicles. In addition, $1 would be added to the fee for obtaining a license. That would raise about $750,000 annually, which would cover the cost of validating the new data.

Kentucky

Foreigners applying for Kentucky driver's licenses must now wait up to 30 days to learn if they are eligible, under one of many changes adopted by the state Transportation Cabinet to ferret out illegal applicants. The state also has begun requiring foreign applicants to present photo identification and to prove they are residents of Kentucky by submitting lease agreements, utility bills or similar documents.

Minnesota

An amendment making non-citizens' drivers licenses a different color from citizens' licenses passed 14-10. Immigrants' representatives say making the licenses look different would subject immigrants to harassment and discrimination. Non-citizens' licenses would also expire at the same time as their visas.

Nebraska

A recent change in the Nebraska Department of Motor Vehicles computer system matches information supplied by Nebraskans with information supplied by the Social Security system.

Additional restrictions in Nebraska include having at least two forms of U.S.-based proof of identification including: birth certificate, a license from out of state that is not mutilated or altered and the signature match, a valid U.S. passport, a valid military identification card, marriage license or divorce decree, a foreign passport, foreign-based birth certificate, parole papers, naturalization papers, certificate of citizenship papers or legal offenders or inmate card.

New Mexico

Governor Gary Johnson signed House Bill 135, allowing the Taxation and Revenue Department to enact a regulation allowing the department to accept alternative documents for the issuance of a driver's license. Prior to the signing of this bill New Mexico State Law in Chapter 66-5-9B required the Motor Vehicle Division (MVD) to obtain the Social Security Number (SSN) as part of the application for a driver's license. The division receives requests a weekly basis from legal resident aliens who are not eligible for a SSN. Many of those interested in driving privileges are the dependants of contract employees at our national labs, military installations and other high tech industry. Other requests come from international students studying in New Mexico. MVD will accept alternative identification documentation including passports, visas issued by the United States as well as other cards issued by the United States immigration and naturalization service.

West Virginia

West Virginia is on the cutting edge of a national effort to impose tighter restrictions on getting a driver's license. West Virginia is the only state in the nation that uses computer images of applicants' faces to make sure they are who they say they are. And the state is moving toward an even more advanced version of the technology. Facial imaging technology measures the bone structure of applicants' faces. It can then match one face against another. When an applicant gets his or her picture taken, the Department of Motor Vehicles computer compares his or her face against the photo already in the database that is connected to the applicant's name. That system can catch a person who is pretending to be someone else. The system, which had been in place since 1997, has caught 8,000 to 10,000 potential imposters.

Driver's License Summary of State Action

Following the attacks on September 11th, most states have undertaken efforts to bolster security in the driver's licensing process. Issues such as license design changes, biometric information, increased penalties for fraud, limited replacement licenses, improved training for Department of Motor Vehicle staff members, and other safeguards are all being considered or have been acted on. Below is a summary of actions taken by states.

Expiration of Visa/DL Expiration

Several states have enacted legislation that ties expiration of an individual's driver's license to the expiration of the immigration visa. Arizona, Florida, Kentucky, Minnesota and Ohio have all passed similar legislation. Additionally, Rhode Island and Michigan have passed legislation that requires driver's license applicants to submit proof that they are in the United States legally.

Increased Identification Requirements

A majority of states have altered the requirements necessary to obtain a drivers license. Previously, in some states, an applicant needed only one form of identification (in some instances, a picture identification was not required). However, following September 11th, restrictions have been implemented rendering obtaining a drivers license more stringent, but also, safer. Delaware, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, Nebraska, to name a few have all mandated increased requirements in the driver's license application process.

Technological Changes/Physical Changes to Drivers License

A few states have increased the technological aspects of their motorists' driver's licenses. These changes include biometric identifiers like thumbprints, facial structure, voice or the structure of the eye's retina to establish and verify--Georgia and West Virginia currently use this technology. California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Texas, and West Virginia currently collect fingerprints in the driver's licensing process, although only Georgia uses them to verify identity when issuing replacement licenses. Additionally, other states have mandated the implementation of a central database containing information on license holders. Kansas has passed legislation requiring a person's thumbprint appear on the driver's license. Nebraska, in 2003, will introduce a digital license containing personal information on a magnetic barcode. Connecticut will, effective July 1, 2002, issue a new driver's license containing: 1) A 2-D Bar Code with encrypted information, 2) "One-to-one" biometric facial recognition capability, and 3) Six state-of-the-art "overt" and "covert" security features. Minnesota has passed legislation that makes noncitizen's driver's license a different color from a citizen's license.

Federal Support Against ID Fraud

The federal government has also worked to aid states in the fight against ID fraud. With the passage of the USA Patriot Act, states are prohibited from issuing or renewing the license of anyone seeking to transport hazardous materials unless the U.S. Department of Transportation has cleared the individual seeking the license of any security concerns. Additionally, the Department of Justice must also perform a background investigation into the individual prior to issuance or renewal of a license.

Interstate Compacts

Interstate compacts are the most powerful, durable, and adaptive tools for ensuring cooperative action among the states. As one of the oldest mechanisms for states to work together, their use predates the founding of the nation. Unlike federally imposed mandates that often dictate unfunded and rigid requirements, interstate compacts provide a state-developed structure for collaborative and dynamic action, while building consensus among the states. The very nature of an interstate compact makes it the ideal tool to meet the demand for cooperative state action to develop and enforce stringent standards, while providing an adaptive structure - through an interstate commission or governing authority - that can evolve to meet new and increased demands over time. Today, there are over 200 interstate compacts that have been identified by CSG.

Interstate compacts are adopted by individual states when enabling legislation is enacted. They are subject to the substantive principles of contract law and are protected by the constitutional prohibition against laws that impair the obligations of contracts (US Constitution, Article 1, Section 10). Once enacted, compacts may not be unilaterally renounced by a member state, except as provided by the terms of the compacts themselves. Compacts often contain their own enforcement mechanisms and courts can compel compliance with their terms. These elements make compacts the most effective means of ensuring interstate cooperation.

General Purposes

- Establish a formal, legal relationship among states to address common problems or promote a common agenda.
- Create independent, multi-state governmental authorities (e.g., commissions) that can address issues more effectively than a state agency acting independently, or when no state has the authority to act unilaterally.
- Establish uniform guidelines, standards, or procedures for agencies in the compact's member states.
- Create economies of scale to reduce administrative and other costs.
- Respond to national priorities in consultation or in partnership with the federal government.
- Retain state sovereignty in matters traditionally reserved for the states.
- Settle interstate disputes.

Examples of Interstate Compacts

Recent examples of interstate compacts illustrate the effectiveness of compacts in solving and addressing critical multi-state issues.

Emergency Management Assistance Compact

The Emergency Management Assistance Compact (EMAC), is a mutual aid agreement and partnership between states that exists because all states share a common enemy: the constant threat of disaster.

- EMAC allows states to assist one another during emergencies. EMAC offers a quick and easy way for states to send personnel and equipment to help disaster relief efforts in other states. There are times when state and local resources are overwhelmed and federal assistance is inadequate or unavailable. Out-of-state aid through EMAC helps fill these gaps.
- EMAC establishes a firm legal foundation. Requests for EMAC assistance are legally binding, contractual arrangements that make states that ask for help responsible for reimbursing all out-of-state costs and liable for out-of-state personnel. States are assured that sending aid will not be a financial or legal burden for them.
- EMAC provides fast and flexible assistance. EMAC allows states to ask for whatever assistance they need for any emergency, from earthquakes to acts of terrorism. EMAC's simple procedures also mean states can dispense with bureaucratic wrangling.

Since being approved by Congress in 1996 as Public Law 104-321, 46 states and two territories have enacted EMAC, and other states are in the process. EMAC played a critical role during the September 11, 2001 attacks by providing assistance to those states in need.

Interstate Compact on Adult Offender Supervision

The Council of State Governments, in collaboration with the National Institute of Corrections, has supervised the development and is currently overseeing the introduction and enactment of the Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision. At issue is one of the most significant public safety issues in the nation - the management, monitoring and supervision of adult parolee and probationers in states other than where they were sentenced. The current Interstate Compact, having been in place for more than 60 years, no longer supports an evolving criminal justice system. The new compact will ensure that states can effectively manage adult parolees and probationers who travel to, or are supervised in, states other than where they were sentenced.

Primary changes to the Original Interstate Compact (1937) include:

- The establishment of an independent compact operating authority to administer ongoing compact activity.
- Gubernatorial appointments from all member states on a national governing commission that meets annually to elect national commission members, who serve as the compact's governing body.
- Rule-making authority and provision for significant sanctions to support essential compact operations.
- A mandatory funding mechanism sufficient to support essential compact operations (staffing, data collection, training/education, etc.)

- Compelling collection of standardized information.

The new compact was enacted by 36 states in just 30 months and has been introduced in many others. Following the adoption by the 35th state (Pennsylvania on June 19, 2002), the compact became fully operational. It is likely to be a full 50 state compact by 2004.

roxanne risner has left a new comment on your post "THE FISHERMAN AND THE WEALTHY BUSINESSMAN":

I just wanted to tell you how much I respect you for taking on the problem of illegal aliens having drivers licenses in this country! It's about time a politician did something in favor of hardworking honest Americans. These people are living off of our tax dollars, getting free education, housing, medical care and they drive without valid drivers licenses or insurance! Most Americans, on the other hand, are being taxed to death and barely making it! It's so sad what is happening to this country, and even sadder that more politicians aren't trying to fix the problem!

Thank you again

Line of Questioning

In order to be able to deal with the sponsor's intent to discuss legal presence, it is necessary to understand if the bill, as written, complies with REAL ID.

I think it is important to make clear whether this is the last time the legislature gets to weigh in on REAL ID or by passing the legislation we are approving the state's participation in the REAL ID program. If the answer is that this is the last time we get to see substantive legislation, then I will be offering an amendment to have a delayed effective date of the bill until the REAL ID regulations and program are made effective for Alaska driver's licenses and id's.

Review of the draft federal regulations (which I have handed out) indicate that each individual applying for a REAL ID license must provide all of the documentation required of US citizens and non-citizens (See Section 37.11 of the draft regs). However, as I read Section 4 of the bill and the sectional analysis, it appears to indicate that people are grandfathered in. Mr. Bannock, don't the federal regulations require each person wanting to obtain a REAL ID compliant license to come to the DMV with all of the evidence of their legal status and have that information scanned into the DMV data base to obtain their first REAL ID compliant license?

Moving on to the specific language in the bill concerning legal presence, here are the constitutional issues that should be answered in considering this legislation:

1. In Section 4, it appears that persons with Alaska driver's licenses are exempt from the information requirements. A person who comes to Alaska with a valid out of state license will need to provide this information. Isn't this a violation of the privileges and immunities clause of the constitution and a restraint on the right to travel?
2. For children who are applying for a license for the first time and for people who are getting licenses back, say from revocation, will have to prove their US citizenship, place of address, etc. Aren't these people being denied their equal protection rights?
3. Children who had state issued id's are required to provide the information when getting a license. Are these people being denied equal protection?
4. For people who have not had an id because they are not readily available, especially in rural Alaska or have had a tribal identification card, are these people being denied equal protection?

I am not sure that I would go here?

5. Is it permissible to deny the right to travel for undocumented aliens?

I believe that it is important to have these questions answered before the bill proceeds out of this committee.

Amendment C.2 – If the bill complies with REAL ID, then before it goes into effect, the State should get at least $12 million to implement it and the AG should enter a lawsuit to challenge the provisions.

Amendment C.3 – Provisions concerning having to come back continually to DMV to renew one's license for people with unlimited stays in the United States should be on hold until they have to be implemented to comply with REAL ID.

Two states lead revolt against Real ID

By Eric Kelderman, Stateline.org Staff Writer

Updated 3:50 p.m. EDT, Wednesday

Montana and Washington state defied the U.S. government this week, enacting the first state laws to reject the 2005 federal Real ID Act and ratcheting up pressure on Congress to amend or repeal national standards for driver's licenses.

Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer (D) signed legislation Tuesday (April 17) that bans the state's Motor Vehicle Division from enforcing the national rules, which set uniform security features for driver's licenses and require states to verify the identity of all driver's license applicants.

Washington Gov. Christine Gregoire (D) signed a bill Wednesday (April 18) barring that state from complying unless the federal government comes up with an extra $250 million to cover the state's expenses. The law also gives Washington's attorney general the right to challenge Real ID in court.

Montana's Schweitzer complained that the Real ID law is another way for the federal government to stomp on residents' personal privacy. "Montanans don't want the federal agents listening to their phone conversations, rifling through their papers, checking on what books they read and monitoring where they go and when. We think they ought to mind their own business," he said in a written statement.

Gregoire in a statement said the Real ID Act "is another unfunded mandate from the federal government and, even worse, it doesn't protect the privacy of the citizens of Washington."

In all, 30 states have passed or are considering proposals condemning the license standards. State lawmakers have railed at the costs and deadlines imposed on states, at federal intrusion into what had been a state responsibility and the specter of a national ID card. But the Montana and Washington actions stand out as the first statutes to bar state agencies from participating in Real ID, which passed Congress without floor debate, attached to a 2005 bill funding the war in Iraq and international aid after the Asian tsunami.

Legislatures in Idaho and Maine have passed nonbinding measures protesting the 2005 act. Arkansas lawmakers have approved one resolution calling for Congress to repeal the act and another that asks for civil-liberty protections and full funding to meet the estimated $14 billion cost to states. None of those measures carries the weight of law or required a governor's signature.

Bills condemning Real ID have been approved by one chamber in another 13 legislatures and have been introduced in 12 more.

"When a state like Montana tells the federal government to take a hike, it brings down the whole house of cards. If there was ever any question that Congress would be forced to revisit this misguided law, there is no more," Barry Steinhardt of the American Civil Liberties Union said in a statement.

States have held out hope that the new Democratic majority in Congress will pay more attention to their concerns than the Republicans did. U.S. Sens. Daniel Akaka (D) of Hawaii and John Sununu (R) of New Hampshire have revived a 2006 bill to repeal Real ID. U.S. Rep. Tom Allen (D) of Maine also has submitted a bill rejecting the act.

Real ID requires that all new and existing driver's license applicants present and states verify: a form of photo identification, a document showing date of birth, proof of a Social Security number and a document with the name and address of the applicant.

All state-issued driver's licenses must include an individual's name, address, date of birth, gender, signature, driver's license number, a digital photograph and several features to prevent counterfeiting.

Driver's license bureaus would feed information into databases to verify applicants' identity, leading critics to worry about invasions of privacy and identity theft.

Cost also is a primary concern. State officials decry the act as a giant unfunded mandate. Congress has appropriated just $40 million for states to begin verifying and reissuing an estimated 245 million driver's licenses and identification cards.

U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff in March said states could use 20 percent of their federal homeland security grants to help meet costs. But those amounts are just a fraction of the total $14.6 billion that the department estimates the law will cost states. In addition, the law will impose $7.9 billion in costs on individuals and $617 million on the federal government, according to homeland security figures.

Time is another problem, say states. The initial deadline to begin issuing compliant licenses is May 11, 2008, although states can apply for an extension until Dec. 31, 2009. That won't help, state officials counter, because all existing licenses still have to be reissued by 2013, so states that delay actually have a smaller window to meet the law.

Montana state Rep. Brady Wiseman (D), a sponsor of his state's legislation, said his colleagues were most concerned about privacy issues and Real ID's requirement to digitally store personal information and make that information available to other states. "We just didn't see the benefit here from going through all that rigmarole," said Wiseman, whose bill passed the Republican-controlled state House and Democratic-controlled Senate with unanimous support.

The American Civil Liberties Union and the libertarian Cato Institute both oppose Real ID on the grounds that it will violate civil liberties.

"The states reserve the right to choose not to comply with Real ID," said Russ Knocke, a spokesman for the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. But he noted that citizens in states without compliant licenses will not be able to use their licenses to board commercial flights or enter federal buildings.

Documents in paragraph (g) of this section are required as described in that paragraph.

REAL ID costs - charge drivers more

By michael kilcullen on Apr 19, 2007 12:49:46 AM

I read your article about REAL ID and its costs, and that MT and WA are revolting against the requirements and the costs of it. (<http://www.stateline.org/live/details/story?contentId=199732>)

The costs can easily be covered by simply raising the price for a person to obtain a drivers' license. It is not a right to drive, it is a privilege, and one that costs. It is particularly not a right to drive cheaply, even though everyone seems to think that cheap licenses, cheap gas, and free roads are their entitlement.

States that charge $20, or even less, for a multiyear license are already providing a subsidy to drivers. Drivers should be paying at minimum the costs that they incur.

If we want to reduce congestion, reduce accidents, reduce fuel consumption, and increase the use of other modes of transport such as bus, train, plane, bike, and so on, then additional price hikes on the cost of licenses would be one avenue to pursue.

At a minimum, there should be a price hike for drivers to cover the costs of the new license, and it should not be considered an unfunded mandate. It can be funded, just not by me, a disabled non-driver.

persons or in support of their other official duties. As directed by appropriate officials of these Federal, State, or local agencies, States should take sufficient steps to safeguard the identities of such persons. Driver's licenses and identification cards issued in support of Federal, State, or local criminal justice agencies or programs that require special licensing or identification to safeguard persons or in support of their other official duties shall not be distinguishable from other REAL ID licenses or identification cards issued by the State.

(a) The State must subject each person applying for a REAL ID driver's license or identification card to a mandatory facial image capture, whether or not such person is issued a REAL ID driver's license or identification card. Photographs of individuals who were not issued a REAL ID driver's license or identification card must be kept for 1 year, unless the DMV did not issue the driver's license or identification card because of suspected fraud, in which case the record should be maintained for ten years and reflect that a driver's license or identification card was not issued for that reason.

(b) Declaration. Each applicant must sign a declaration under penalty of perjury that the information presented is true and correct, and the State must retain this declaration with copies of the applicant's source documents pursuant to § 37.31. An applicant must sign a new declaration when presenting new information to the DMV.

(c) Identity. (1) To establish the individual's identity, the individual must present at least one of the following documents containing a photograph or non-photo identity document including full name and date of birth:

(i) A valid unexpired United States passport.

(ii) Certified copy of a birth certificate issued by a U.S. State or local office of Public Health, Vital Records, Vital Statistics or equivalent office.

(iii) Consular Report of Birth Abroad issued by DOS, Form FS-240, DS-1350 or FS-545.

(iv) An unexpired Permanent Resident Card issued by DHS, Form I-551.

(v) An unexpired employment authorization document (EAD) issued by DHS, Form I-766 or Form I-688B.

(vi) Unexpired foreign passport with a valid unexpired U.S. visa affixed.

(vii) Certificate of Naturalization issued by DHS, Form N-550 or Form N-570.

(viii) Certificate of Citizenship, Form N-560 or Form N-561.

(ix) REAL ID driver's license or identification card issued in compliance with the standards established by this Part.

(2) If the individual's name has changed through adoption, marriage, divorce, or court order, the individual must present an original or certified copy of the documents showing a legal name change, before the name is changed on the driver's license or identification card. These documents must come from a U.S. or State-level Court or government agency.

(d) Date of birth. To establish the person's date of birth, the individual must present at least one document included in paragraph (c) of this section.

(e) Social security number. The individual must provide documentation establishing an SSN, or the person's ineligibility for an SSN.

(1) To establish an SSN, an applicant must present his or her social security account number card, a W-2 form, a SSA-1099 form, a non-SSA 1099 form, or a pay stub with the applicant's name and SSN on it; the SSN must be verified pursuant to § 37.13 of this subpart.

(2) To establish ineligibility for an SSN, an alien must present evidence that he or she is currently in a non-work authorized nonimmigrant status.

(f) Documents demonstrating address of principal residence. To document the address of principal residence, a person must present at least two documents of the State's choice that include the individual's name and principal residence.

(1) Documents used to demonstrate address of principal residence that are issued monthly (such as bank statements or utility bills) must not be more than three months old at the time of application.

(2) Documents used to demonstrate address of principal residence that are issued annually (such as property tax records) must be for the most current yearly period at the time of application.

(3) Except as provided in § 37.17(f)(1), (f)(2) and (f)(3) of this Part, a street address must be required.

(g) Evidence of lawful status in the United States. A DMV may issue a REAL ID driver's license or identification card only to a person who has presented satisfactory evidence of lawful status. The documentation listed under subsection (c) is also evidence of lawful status, except that if the applicant presents an identity document listed under paragraphs (c)(v) or (c)(vi) of this section, the documentation is to be considered provisional evidence pending verification of immigration status through SAVE. If the applicant presents an identity document listed under paragraph (c)(ix), he or she must also present another document listed in subsection (c) as evidence of lawful presence in the United States.

(h) State DMVs may choose to establish a written exceptions process in order to provide REAL ID driver's licenses and identification cards to persons who, for reasons beyond their control, are unable to present all necessary documents and must rely on alternate documents to establish identity. An exceptions process may not be used to demonstrate lawful status. Each State establishing an exceptions process must have that process approved by DHS for the verification of documents in this section, and document each time the process is used, both on the applicant's record in the DMV's database and in the DMV's files.

(1) The applicant's records must visibly indicate when an alternate document is accepted and how applicable information from the document was verified.

(2) The record must include a full explanation of the reason for the exception and alternative documents accepted whenever a driver's license or identification card is issued using exceptions processing.

(3) The State shall retain copies of the alternate documents accepted pursuant to this section and provide these upon request to DHS for audit.

(4) The State shall provide DHS with quarterly reports analyzing the use of the exceptions process and any trends that indicate potential vulnerabilities.

§ 37.13 Document verification requirements.

States must adopt procedures satisfying the requirements of paragraph (a) of this section to verify with the issuing agency the issuance, validity, and completeness of a document presented to demonstrate a person's eligibility for a REAL ID driver's license or identification card before issuance of the driver's license or identification card.

(a) States must use the following procedures to verify the documents required under this section:

(1) A certified copy of a birth certificate must be verified through the Electronic Verification of Vital Events System, or an alternative approved by DHS. In the event of a non-match, the DMV may not issue a driver's license or identification card to an applicant, and must refer the individual to their birth state's vital statistics office for resolution.

(2) A U.S. passport or Consular report of birth abroad must be verified through existing Department of State systems.

(3) A lawful permanent resident card (Form I-551) or other DHS-issued document demonstrating permanent residency, an EAD (Form I-766 or Form I-688B), Certificate of Citizenship, Certificate of Naturalization, or other documentation issued by DHS demonstrating lawful status, must be verified through the Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements (SAVE) system operated by DHS, or an alternate verification system approved by DHS. In the event of a non-match to SAVE, the DMV may not issue a driver's license or identification card to an applicant, and must refer the individual to the local USCIS office for resolution.

(4) REAL ID driver's licenses and identification cards must be verified with the State of issuance.

(5) Social security account numbers must be verified by the Social Security Administration's (SSA) electronic database. In the event of a non-match with SSA, a DMV must not issue a driver's license or identification card to an applicant until the information verifies with SSA's database.

(6) Documents demonstrating address of principal residence must be verified by the State in accordance with a system of document verification acceptable to DHS, to ensure that a document produced establishes an individual's address of principal residence.

§ 37.15 Physical security features for the driver's license or identification card.

(a) General. States must include document security features on REAL ID driver's licenses and identification cards designed to deter forgery and counterfeiting and promote an adequate level of confidence in the authentication of genuine documents and the detection of fraudulent ones in accordance with this section.

(1) These features must not be reproducible using commonly used or available technologies.

(2) The proposed card solution must contain a well designed, balanced set of features that when effectively combined provide multiple layers of security. States must describe these document security features in their security plans pursuant to § 37.41.

(b) Integrated security features. REAL ID driver's licenses and identification cards must contain at least three levels of integrated security features that provide the maximum resistance to persons' efforts to--

(1) Counterfeiting, simulating, or reproducing a genuine document;

(2) Altering, deleting, modifying, masking, or tampering with data concerning the original or lawful card holder;

VIRGINIA ACTS OF ASSEMBLY – CHAPTER

An Act to amend and reenact § 46.2-328.1 of the Code of Virginia, relating to special identification cards.

[H 2471]

Approved

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia:

1. That § 46.2-328.1 of the Code of Virginia is amended and reenacted as follows:

§ 46.2-328.1. Licenses, permits and special identification cards to be issued only to United States citizens, legal permanent resident aliens, or holders of valid unexpired nonimmigrant visas; exceptions; renewal, duplication, or reissuance.

A. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, except as provided in subsection G of § 46.2-345, the Department shall not issue an original license, permit, or special identification card to any applicant who has not presented to the Department, with the application, valid documentary evidence that the applicant is either (i) a citizen of the United States, (ii) a legal permanent resident of the United States, or (iii) a conditional resident alien of the United States.

B. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection A and the provisions of §§ 46.2-330 and 46.2-345, an applicant who presents in person valid documentary evidence of (i) a valid, unexpired nonimmigrant visa or nonimmigrant visa status for entry into the United States, (ii) a pending or approved application for asylum in the United States, (iii) entry into the United States in refugee status, (iv) a pending or approved application for temporary protected status in the United States, (v) approved deferred action status, or (vi) a pending application for adjustment of status to legal permanent residence status or conditional resident status, may be issued a temporary license, permit, or special identification card. Such temporary license, permit, or special identification card shall be valid only during the period of time of the applicant's authorized stay in the United States or if there is no definite end to the period of authorized stay a period of one year. Any temporary license, permit, or special identification card issued pursuant to this subsection shall clearly indicate that it is temporary and shall state the date that it expires. Such a temporary license, permit or identification card may be renewed only upon presentation of valid documentary evidence that the status by which the applicant qualified for the temporary license, permit or special identification has been extended by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service or the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Homeland Security.

C. Any license or special identification card for which an application has been made for renewal, duplication or reissuance shall be presumed to have been issued in accordance with the provisions of subsection A, provided that, at the time the application is made, the license or special identification card has not expired, or been cancelled, suspended or revoked. The requirements of subsection A shall apply, however, to a renewal, duplication or reissuance if the Department is notified by a local, state or federal government agency that the individual seeking such renewal, duplication or reissuance is neither a citizen of the United States nor legally in the United States.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to an applicant for a special identification card whose year of birth is 1937 or earlier and who has previously held a Virginia-issued driver's license or special identification card, provided that such driver's license or special identification card has not been expired for more than five years.

Good morning, Mr. Chairman and representatives. My name is Matthew Kerr and I am representing myself. I have thirteen years of professional database systems design experience. Thank you very much for listening to my testimony today.

I oppose House Bill 3, part of our state's implementation of the national Real ID Act. Duane Bannock has testified for the past two years that the DMV will implement this bill by scanning and retaining electronic copies of the personal identity documents of every applicant for a driver's license or identification card in this state. This would result in our DMV having more documentation about each of us than the U.S. passport office currently retains.

As a database programmer and as an Alaskan, I believe this is invasive, a grave security risk, a loss of privacy, and an increase in the size of our government without any corresponding benefit. This bill does nothing to prevent illegal immigration, and is more likely to promote it instead. This is a bad idea.

My security concerns are well-founded. In 2005 alone, three states reported successful data thefts of personal information from their DMVs. One laptop found by police in an Oregon methamphetamine house contained DMV records on a half-million people. If this trend continues, there is a 60% chance that our state would be compromised sometime in the next ten years.

I have worked on IT contracts for the State of Alaska. If I was a dishonest person, I could have walked out of the department I worked in with sensitive information on thousands of Alaskans. There are many people in positions like mine.

A DVD filled with authentic images of our birth certificates, passports, and social security cards would sell for a pretty good sum in Tijuana. All it would take is a single employee with a chip on his or her shoulder. There's nothing that makes Alaska somehow more immune to this than Oregon, Georgia, Nevada, or North Carolina.

The supporters of this bill claim that it is only about illegal immigrants. I also oppose illegal immigration, but this bill does nothing against it. Foreign licenses are valid in Alaska, regardless of the holder's legal presence. This bill doesn't remove any privileges or benefits from illegal aliens, except perhaps the ability to obtain reasonably-priced car insurance. It's also redundant: we already don't give licenses to illegal aliens. On the other hand, HB 3 adds significant security risk, privacy loss, red tape, and bureaucracy to our state government. The DMV doesn't need special legislation and a new document tracking system to make a phone call about a suspected illegal immigrant applying for a license.

In regards to this bill, Rep. Lynn wrote online that he "values [his] privacy, just like other Alaskans." I am very happy to hear that! I hope Rep. Lynn would therefore support amendments to restrict the DMV's identity document collection to only non-U.S. citizens and residents. If this bill is only about length of legal presence, then why does the DMV need to keep copies of my papers too? My citizenship isn't going to expire.
