COMMENTARY

From Senate Journal Supp. No. 47, at 100-02 (June 12, 1978):

> Misconduct involving weapons in the first degree is the most serious weapons offense in the Code and is classified as a class C felony.
> Subsection (a)(1) prohibits felons from possessing firearms capable of being concealed on their person.
> Subsection (a)(2) expands existing law by covering the person who sells or transfers a firearm capable of being concealed on the person knowing that the transferee has been convicted of a felony. The transferor who acts with such knowledge is viewed as equally culpable and deserving of identical punishment as the transferee.
> Subsection (b) provides an affirmative defense to subsections (a)(1) and (2) that the felon has received a pardon, that the prior conviction has been set aside, or if a period of five years has elapsed from the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior felony and the date of the possession, sale or transfer of the firearm. "Unconditional discharge" is defined in AS 12.55.185(8) in a manner to insure that the five year period does not begin to run until the defendant has completed any probationary period or time on parole.
> Subsection (a)(3) is new to existing law and is patterned after the prohibitions found in the National Firearms Act, 26 U.S.C §§ 5801-5872. Key

March 29, 2010

For over a year, this nation has been locked in a battle over health care. Roughly 55% of the public, and the entirety of Congressional Republicans, opposed the passage of so-called "health reform" and would like to see the recently-passed health care legislation overturned.[1] Opponents of the health care initiative point to the bill's hidden costs, special exemptions for certain states, and the nineteen point gap between those who strongly support the plan and the larger group that strongly opposes it. Accordingly, I am proposing the Alaska Health Freedom Act. The bill is modeled after Idaho HB 391 (and a similar package of legislation in Virginia), which became the first statute enacted by a state legislature to directly challenge the provisions of federal health care "reform."

The Alaska Health Freedom Act would:

- Argue that the power to regulate or require a person's health care delivery choices is not found in the U.S. Constitution and is therefore reserved to the people and the States by the 9th and 10th Amendments, respectively

- Establish that every Alaskan "has the right and is free to choose or decline any mode of securing health care services."

- Require the Attorney General to actively protect the aforementioned right to choose a mode of health care services

- Bar public employees and officials from enforcing, imposing, implementing, or collecting any penalty for resisting government-run healthcare.

The four main tactics being employed among states that oppose the federal government's health care overreach are[2]:

- Legislative Discontent Model: under this plan, states would pass a resolution discouraging the federal government from implementing nationalized medicine; the recent passage of the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act makes mere statements of the Alaska Legislature's disapproval fairly moot.

- Constitutional Amendment Model: following this model, state legislatures would offer a constitutional amendment to the voters that would enshrine the right of individuals to make their own health care determinations in the state's constitution; the constitutional amendment model, pursued through Alaska HJR 35, has not garnered sufficient support in the legislature, particularly given the time-sensitive nature of this issue.

- Statutory Model: in the statutory model, states enact statutes through the regular legislative process that either establish the freedom to make one's own health care decisions as a right or discount the so-called "right of universal healthcare;" these bills also prohibit state officials and agencies from enforcing, collecting, or implementing fees imposed under the new federal health care plan and direct the state's Attorney General to actively defend the provisions of the bill in court

- Nullification Model: finally, states following the nullification model to oppose nationalized health care would enact legislation declaring the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act unconstitutional and null and void within the state's jurisdiction.

[2] "Health Care Freedom Act." Legislative Tracking. The Tenth Amendment Center. 29 Mar. 2010. <http://www.tenthamendmentcenter.com/nullification/health-care/>.

The problems with the legislative discontent model now that Congress has actually passed health care "reform" are readily apparent. In addition to the issues mentioned above, the constitutional amendment model is problematic because of the Supreme Court's general hesitation to hear conflicts between the federal and state constitutions (i.e. gay marriage in MA, CA). The nullification model is the most popular alternative, but seems inherently flawed. There is little-to-no chance the federal courts would rule that states can pass legislation with a simple majority and overturn duly enacted federal law. Unlike the nullification model, the statutory model challenges the constitutionality of the new federal health care statute without limiting our attorney general to a nullification argument. The Alaska Health Freedom Act does not presume to overturn federal legislation, but instead adopts a distinct public policy for Alaska under the reasoning that the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act misinterprets the Constitution. If universal health care is a "right," shouldn't the freedom to make one's own health care decisions be protected from government intrusion? Also, is there no limit on Congress' power under the Commerce and General Welfare clauses? If Congress can mandate the purchase of any private commodity it so chooses, then what control does an individual really have over their own "pursuit of happiness?"

I hope that this sponsor statement effectively communicates the urgency and practicality of the Alaska Health Freedom Act. Questions or concerns can be directed to my staffer, Thomas Reiker, at 465-3163 or Thomas.Reiker@legis.state.ak.us. I thank you for your time and respectfully request a hearing for HB 423.

2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 423(HSS)

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

CSHB 423 (HSS), entitled the "Alaska Health Freedom Act," provides that the state's policy, is "that a person has the right to and may choose or decline any mode of obtaining health care services without penalty or threat of penalty." The bill is apparently designed to counter the individual health insurance requirements of recently enacted federal legislation. The bill includes definitions of "mode of obtaining," "health care services," and "penalty."

The bill provides that this policy "does not apply to health care services provided or required by the state, a political subdivision of the state, or a court of the state" and that the policy "may not impair a contract right that provides health care services."

Thus the fiscal impact to Department of Law is indeterminate.

EXPLANATION OF CHANGES BETWEEN HB 423 VERSION R AND CSHB 423(HSS) VERSION E

The House Health and Social Services Committee asked several questions during HB 423's first hearing that required additional research. In meetings with the Departments of Law and Health and Social Services, more concerns were raised. We worked with both departments and members of the committee to address those concerns.

- Representative Cissna, in consultation with Legal Services, raised concerns about provisions in the original bill that compelled action by the Attorney General, given that he is an officer of the Executive Branch.

  We trust the Attorney General to actively, adequately defend Alaska law. Accordingly, Section 2 and Section 3 (d) of the original bill—which explicitly required the AG to defend HB 423—were deleted. This also required a title change, since the R version of HB 423 included language referencing the Attorney General in the title.

  In addition, "public officials, employees, and agents" are always expected to follow state law, so Section 3 (c) of the R version, which instructed them not to contradict the bill's provisions, was removed.

- Upon consulting Legal Services and the Department of Law, the HHSS Committee determined that the phrase "consistent with the right of liberty" was not in keeping with the language that is typically used in drafting bills.

  So, "consistent with the right of liberty" was removed from the HHSS CS.

- The House Health and Social Services Committee worried that the language in Section 3 of the original bill might allow people to demand government services, even if they do not qualify.

  As such, the language in Section 2, page 1, line 14 was changed from "is free to" to "may."

  The phrase "mode of securing health care services" was changed to "mode of obtaining health care services."

  Section 2 (b) (1) of the CS was added to protect existing state laws and policies.

- It was not the sponsor's intention to challenge current state laws relating to health care.

  The CS clarifies that Alaskans have the right to decline a mode of obtaining health care services "without penalty or threat of penalty" and defines penalty as specifically "a fine, tax, surcharge, fee, or other monetary charge."

  Other consequences, such as inability to enroll in public schools or involuntary commitment for mental illness, would still be allowed.

  The language of the CS also assures that current law—including requirements imposed on state employees, UAA students, and parents in certain custody battles—is not changed.

House Passes Historic Health Care Bill

Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi quoted the late Sen. Ted Kennedy after the House passed the health care bills late Sunday. "Passing health care is the great unfinished business of our country," she said. "That is, until today."

Capping a year of legislative activity and ending decades of Democratic frustration, the House on Sunday passed a bill that would extend health care coverage to more than 30 million Americans.

Quoting a letter from the late Sen. Ted Kennedy (D-MA) to President Obama, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said, "Passing health care is the great unfinished business of our country." She added, "That is, until today."

As the GOP promised, not a single Republican voted for either health care measure before the chamber. "This is truly a remarkable moment in the life of this nation. Some say we're making history. I say we're breaking history, breaking with our best traditions," said Mike Pence (R-IN), who chairs the House GOP Conference. "Only in Washington, D.C., can you spend a trillion dollars and say that you're saving the taxpayers money."

'A Victory For The American People'

Obama's Remarks On The Bill's Passage

With a vote count of 219 to 212, the House gave its approval to a measure initially passed by the Senate on Christmas Eve. Thirty-four Democrats joined 178 Republicans in voting no. That bill now goes to President Obama for signing.

The House also passed a so-called reconciliation measure on a 220 to 211 vote that makes significant changes to the main health care bill. Thirty-three Democrats voted against the bill, along with 178 Republicans. That measure heads to the Senate, which is expected to begin debate within days.

Obama watched the votes in the White House's Roosevelt Room with Vice President Joe Biden and about 40 staff aides. When the long sought 216th vote came in on the reconciliation bill — the magic number needed for passage — the room burst into applause and hugs. An exultant president exchanged a high-five with his chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel.

Senate action on the reconciliation bill will be marked by extensive parliamentary maneuvering. But Democrats are optimistic about their chances in that chamber.

And, for now, they are giddy about passing landmark legislation to provide insurance to 32 million Americans.

"We have come to a defining moment in our nation's history," said James Clyburn (D-SC), the House Democratic whip. "This is the civil rights act of the 21st century."

At their victory news conference following the vote, Democratic leaders gave a place of honor to John Dingell (D-MI), the House's longest-serving member. Dingell followed his father into a Detroit-area House seat in 1955 and like his father has introduced universal health legislation throughout his career.

Enlarge J. Scott Applewhite/AP

President Barack Obama, joined by Vice President Joe Biden, makes a statement to the nation Sunday night following the final vote in the House of Representatives for a comprehensive overhaul of the health care system.

"We finally did it," Dingell said. "This is an extraordinary bill. If you're looking at me, you're seeing a great big Polish smile."

Dingell was credited with keeping at his protege Rep. Bart Stupak (D-MI) at the negotiating table over the weekend to work out an agreement on abortion restrictions that secured the Democrats' legislative victory.

"Mr. Dingell had a piece of me yesterday for quite some time," Stupak told reporters Sunday.

A Fundamental Transformation

Democratic presidents — as well as occasional Republicans including Richard M. Nixon — have long sought to enact universal health care legislation. President Bill Clinton's failed effort in 1993-94 had taken the issue off the table for over a decade.

President Obama has received considerable criticism for having "over-learned" the lessons of Clinton's experience. In contrast to Clinton's strategy of crafting a highly-detailed proposal, Obama let Congress work its will.

That looked like it might have been a mistake as legislation bogged down at various points — especially when it appeared to have been nearly derailed by the special election of Republican Sen. Scott Brown of Massachusetts in January, costing Democrats their 60-vote, filibuster-proof majority in the Senate.

We have come to a defining moment in our nation's history. This is the civil rights act of the 21st century.

But Democrats have now successfully jumped through most of the procedural hoops. Passage of the bill represents the biggest change in domestic policy since the enactment of Medicare and Medicaid in 1965, says Sara Rosenbaum, who chairs the department of health policy at George Washington University.

- Rep. James Clyburn, D-SC

"We have now fundamentally transformed American society," she says. "We have gone from assuming many people will not have insurance to expecting that people will have insurance."

Highlights Of The Bill

The $940 billion bill seeks to extend health coverage to most Americans. Medicaid, the federal-state program that provides health insurance to the poor and disabled, will be expanded to cover all adults earning less than 133 percent of the federal poverty level.

Private health insurance will be made available to individuals and small companies through exchanges that will be run by the states. Individuals who do not buy insurance face fines, as do most employers who do not offer coverage to workers.

Bill sponsors predict that all but about 5 percent of non-elderly Americans will ultimately be covered. Half of those currently uninsured will receive coverage through the expansion of Medicaid and half through private insurance through the exchanges — often with subsidies that make up the bulk of the legislation's projected costs.

"There will be a broad public education effort, so that people understand what's in the legislation," says Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA, a consumer group that lobbied for the bill. "As a result, I think there's going to be growing and substantial support for the reform."

Nicholas Kamm/AFP/Getty Images

Rep. Bart Stupak (D-MI) says an agreement reached with President Obama on Sunday banning use of federal funds for abortions cleared the way for the Democrats to have enough votes to pass the House health care bill.

Savings In The Future

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the legislation will reduce the federal deficit by $143 billion over the next 10 years and by some $1.2 trillion over the following decade.

"It's the biggest deficit reduction we will be able to vote on in this Congress, and other Congresses as well," said Steny Hoyer (D-MD), the House majority leader.

Critics of the bill say such savings are a fiction, as they are dependent on future Congresses sticking to plans to impose major cuts in Medicare and unpopular new taxes on health plans. "We are creating a massive new entitlement," Rep. Lincoln Diaz-Balart (R-FL) said during floor debate Sunday.

Pledging To Repeal

Republicans who are unanimous in their opposition to the legislation will continue their efforts to stymie it in the Senate. They have also vowed to make the issue the centerpiece of their campaign to regain control of Congress come November.

"This debate is not about the uninsured, it is about socialized medicine," said Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA). Alluding to the ghosts of totalitarianism in the Soviet Union, he said, "With passage of this bill, they will haunt Americans for generations."

Two hundred Republican candidates and members of Congress have signed a pledge, promulgated by the Club for Growth, an anti-tax group, to repeal the legislation upon the party's return to power.

"If this bill passes, we will have an effort to repeal the bill," House GOP Leader John Boehner (R-OH), said on NBC's Meet the Press Sunday. "I'd have a bill on the floor the first thing out."

But even if Republicans do regain control of one or both chambers, they still would have to contend with Obama's potential veto of any major changes to the law, at least for two more years. And getting such changes to the president's desk might be just as problematic as passing the health bills in the first place.

"What are they going to be able to repeal without 60 votes?" says Robert L. Laszewski, president of Health Policy and Strategy Associates. "The 60-vote rule suddenly works to their disadvantage."

Constitutional Challenges

The legislation will face legal challenges as well. On Wednesday, Butch Otter (R-ID) became the first governor to sign a law requiring the state attorney general to sue the federal government if it forces individuals to buy health insurance – a central tenet of the legislation. Other states are likely to pass similar measures, including Arizona, where the question will be put directly to voters.

Challenges on states' rights grounds are not likely to succeed. But because of the novelty of the requirement that individuals buy insurance, other constitutional challenges are certain.

Two attorneys for the Congressional Research Service determined last summer that Congress is on shaky ground relying on its authority to regulate interstate commerce to create the so-called individual mandate.

"Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal," they wrote, "as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service."

PETITION DEMANDING ALASKA JOIN IN LEGAL ACTION TO REPEAL HEALTH CARE BILL

With the passage of the Health Care Reform Bill, America is teetering toward tyranny. A mandate requiring all individuals to purchase health insurance is an unprecedented form of federal action
A legal challenge by the States appears to be the only hope of protecting the American people from this unprecedented attack on our system of government.
At least fifteen states are instituting legal action to challenge the constitutionality of the health care reform bill. Alaska should take its place in this list of States and join in the legal fight.
By signing this petition you are demanding the Governor and Attorney General join in the legal action to repeal the Health Care Bill.

PETITION DEMANDING ALASKA JOIN IN LEGAL ACTION TO REPEAL HEALTH CARE BILL

With the passage of the Health Care Reform Bill, America is teetering toward tyranny. A mandate requiring all individuals to purchase health insurance is an unprecedented form of federal action
A legal challenge by the States appears to be the only hope of protecting the American people from this unprecedented attack on our system of government.
At least fifteen states are instituting legal action to challenge the constitutionality of the health care reform bill. Alaska should take its place in this list of States and join in the legal fight.
By signing this petition you are demanding the Governor and Attorney General join in the legal action to repeal the Health Care Bill.

PETITION DEMANDING ALASKA JOIN IN LEGAL ACTION TO REPEAL HEALTH CARE BILL

With the passage of the Health Care Reform Bill, America is teetering toward tyranny. A mandate requiring all individuals to purchase health insurance is an unprecedented form of federal action.
A legal challenge by the States appears to be the only hope of protecting the American people from this unprecedented attack on our system of government.
At least fifteen states are instituting legal action to challenge the constitutionality of the health care reform bill. Alaska should take its place in this list of States and join in the legal fight.
By signing this petition you are demanding the Governor and Attorney General join in the legal action to repeal the Health Care Bill.

PETITION DEMANDING ALASKA JOIN IN LEGAL ACTION TO REPEAL HEALTH CARE BILL

With the passage of the Health Care Reform Bill, America is teetering toward tyranny. A mandate requiring all individuals to purchase health insurance is an unprecedented form of federal action.
A legal challenge by the States appears to be the only hope of protecting the American people from this unprecedented attack on our system of government.
At least fifteen states are instituting legal action to challenge the constitutionality of the health care reform bill. Alaska should take its place in this list of States and join in the legal fight.
By signing this petition you are demanding the Governor and Attorney General join in the legal action to repeal the Health Care Bill.

JACKLEY, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, file this action against Defendants, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES (HHS); KATHLEEN SEBELIUS, in her official capacity as the Secretary of HHS; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY (Treasury); TIMOTHY F. GEITHNER, in his official capacity as the Secretary of the Treasury; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR (DOL); and HILDA L. SOLIS, in her official capacity as the Secretary of DOL, and state:

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. On March 23, 2010, a new universal healthcare regime, titled the "Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act," H.R. 3590 (the Act), was signed into law by the President. The Act, which exceeds 2,400 pages, is available at http://frwebgate.access.gpo.gov/cgi-bin/getdoc.cgi?dbname=111_cong_bills&docid=f:h3590pp.txt.pdf (accessed March 23, 2010).

2. The Act represents an unprecedented encroachment on the liberty of individuals living in the Plaintiffs' respective states, by mandating that all citizens and legal residents of the United States have qualifying healthcare coverage or pay a tax penalty. The Constitution nowhere authorizes the United States to mandate, either directly or under threat of penalty, that all citizens and legal residents have qualifying healthcare coverage. By imposing such a mandate, the Act exceeds the powers of the United States under Article I of the Constitution and violates the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution.

3. In addition, the tax penalty required under the Act, which must be paid by uninsured citizens and residents, constitutes an unlawful capitation or direct tax, in violation of Article I, sections 2 and 9 of the Constitution of the United States.

4. The Act also represents an unprecedented encroachment on the sovereignty of the states. For example, it requires that Florida vastly broaden its Medicaid eligibility standards to accommodate upwards of 50 percent more enrollees, many of whom must enroll or face a tax penalty under the Act, and imposes onerous new operating rules that Florida must follow. The Act requires Florida to spend billions of additional dollars, and shifts substantial administrative costs to Florida for, inter alia, hiring and training new employees, as well as requiring that new and existing employees devote a considerable portion of their time to implementing the Act. This onerous encroachment occurs at a time when Florida faces having to make severe budget cuts to offset shortfalls in its already-strained budget, which the state constitution requires to be balanced each fiscal year (unlike the federal budget), and at a time when Florida's Medicaid program already consumes more than a quarter of the State's financial outlays. Plaintiffs cannot effectively withdraw from participating in Medicaid, because Medicaid has, over the more than four decades of its existence, become customary and necessary for citizens throughout the United States, including the Plaintiffs' respective states; and because individual enrollment in Plaintiffs' respective Medicaid programs, which presently cover tens of millions of residents, can only be accomplished by their continued participation in Medicaid.

5. Further, the Act converts what had been a voluntary federal-state partnership into a compulsory top-down federal program in which the discretion of the Plaintiffs and their sister states is removed, in derogation of the core constitutional principle of federalism upon which this Nation was founded. In so doing, the Act exceeds the powers of the United States and violates the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution.

6. The Act contains several unfunded mandates that will cost state governments significantly.

7. For example, no Florida government entity or infrastructure exists to discharge sufficiently all of the responsibilities that will be necessary to implement the Act, to meet requirements related to increases in Medicaid enrollment under the Act, and to operate healthcare insurance exchanges required by the Act.

8. By making federal funds potentially available at the discretion of federal agencies, the Act acknowledges the immediate burden on Plaintiffs to invest and implement the Act, but provides no guarantee that they will receive such funds or that the Act's implementation costs will be met.

9. Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief against the Act's operation to preserve their respective sovereignty and solvency, and to protect the individual freedom, public health, and welfare of their citizens and residents.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

10. The Court has subject-matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 because this action arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

11. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(3) because no real property is involved, the district is situated in Florida, and the defendants are agencies of the United States or officers thereof acting in their official capacity.

PARTIES

12. The State of Florida is a sovereign state and protector of the individual freedom, public health, and welfare of its citizens and residents. Bill McCollum,

Attorney General of Florida, has been directly elected by the people of Florida to serve as their chief legal officer and exercises broad statutory and common law authority to protect the rights of the State of Florida and its people; Fla. Const. art. IV, § 4(b). The State, by and through the Attorney General, has standing to assert the unconstitutionality of the Act. He is authorized to appear in and attend all suits in which the state is interested. § 16.02(4) & (5), Fla. Stat.

13. The State of South Carolina, by and through Henry McMaster, Attorney General of South Carolina, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

14. The State of Nebraska, by and through Jon Bruning, Attorney General of Nebraska, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

15. The State of Texas, by and through Greg Abbott, Attorney General of Texas, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

16. The State of Utah, by and through Mark L. Shurtleff, Attorney General of Utah, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

17. The State of Alabama, by and through Troy King, Attorney General of Alabama, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

18. The State of Louisiana, by and through James D. "Buddy" Caldwell, Attorney General of Louisiana, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

19. The State of Michigan, by and through Michael A. Cox, Attorney General of Michigan, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

20. The State of Colorado, by and through John W. Suthers, Attorney General of Colorado, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

21. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by and through Thomas W. Corbett, Jr., Attorney General of Pennsylvania, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

22. The State of Washington, by and through Robert A. McKenna, Attorney General of Washington, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

23. The State of Idaho, by and through Lawrence G. Wasden, Attorney General of Idaho, is a sovereign state in the United States of America.

24. The State of South Dakota, by and through Marty J. Jackley, Attorney General of South Dakota, is a sovereign state in the United States of America

25. HHS is an agency of the United States, and is responsible for administration and enforcement of the Act, through its center for Medicare and Medicaid Services.

26. Kathleen Sebelius is Secretary of HHS, and is named as a party in her official capacity.

27. Treasury is an agency of the United States, and is responsible for administration and enforcement of the Act.

28. Timothy F. Geithner is Secretary of the Treasury, and is named as a party in his official capacity.

29. DOL is an agency of the United States, and is responsible for administration and enforcement of the Act.

30. Hilda L. Solis is Secretary of DOL, and is named as a party in her official capacity.

BACKGROUND

The Medicaid Program Prior to the Act

31. Medicaid was established by Title XIX of the Social Security Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396 et seq., as the nation's major healthcare initiative for low-income persons. Each participating state's Medicaid program has been funded jointly by the state and the federal government.

32. From the beginning of Medicaid until passage of the Act, the states were given considerable discretion to implement and operate their respective optional Medicaid programs in accordance with state-specific designs regarding eligibility, enrollment, and administration, so long as the programs met broad federal requirements.

33. The states were free to opt out of Medicaid and set up their own state health or welfare plans, or to provide no such benefits at all. States, including Plaintiffs, agreed to participate in Medicaid with the understanding that their continuing participation was voluntary, as a matter of both law and fact.

34. None of the Plaintiffs agreed to become a Medicaid partner of the federal government with an expectation that the terms of its participation would be altered significantly by the federal government so as to make it financially infeasible for that state either to remain in or to withdraw from the Medicaid program.

35. None of the Plaintiffs agreed to become a Medicaid partner of the federal government with an expectation that the federal government would increase significantly its control and reduce significantly that state's discretion with respect to the Medicaid program.

36. None of the Plaintiffs agreed to become a Medicaid partner of the federal government with an expectation that, after the Medicaid program became entrenched in the state, the federal government would alter the program's requirements to expand eligibility for enrollment beyond the state's ability to fund its participation.

37. None of the Plaintiffs agreed to become a Medicaid partner of the federal government with an expectation that the federal government would exploit its control over Medicaid terms and eligibility as part of a coercive scheme to force all citizens and residents to have healthcare coverage.

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act

38. The Act mandates that all United States citizens and legal residents have qualifying healthcare coverage. If a person fails to do so, the federal government will force that person to pay a penalty, the amount of which will be increased gradually through 2016, reaching $750 per year up to a maximum of three times that amount ($2,250) per family, or 2 percent of household income, whichever is greater. After 2016, the penalty will increase annually based on a cost-of-living adjustment. Exemptions to the tax penalty only apply for individuals with certain religious objections, American Indians, those persons without coverage for less than three months, undocumented immigrants, incarcerated individuals, or some individuals with financial hardships.

39. The Act greatly alters the federal-state relationship, to the detriment of the states, with respect to Medicaid programs specifically and healthcare coverage generally.

40. The Act requires states to expand massively their Medicaid programs and to create exchanges through which individuals can purchase healthcare insurance coverage. The federal government is to provide partial funding for the exchanges, but will cease doing so after 2015. Should a state not wish to participate in the exchanges, it can opt out only if it provides coverage for uninsured individuals with incomes between 133 percent and 200 percent of the federal poverty level, a higher income level than that which would be applied for participating states under the Act. The only other way for a state to avoid the Act's requirements is to drop out of the Medicaid program, leaving millions of persons uninsured.

41. Those states left with no practical alternative but to participate in the Act will have to expand their Medicaid coverage to include all individuals under age 65 with incomes up to 133 percent of the federal poverty level. The states' coverage burdens will increase significantly after 2016, both in actual dollars and in proportion to the contributions of the federal government.

42. The federal government will not provide necessary funding or resources to the states to administer the Act. Nevertheless, states will be required to provide oversight of the newly-created insurance markets, including, inter alia, instituting regulations, consumer protections, rate reviews, solvency and reserve fund requirements, and premium taxes. States also must enroll all of the newly-eligible Medicaid beneficiaries (many of whom will be subject to a penalty if they fail to enroll), coordinate enrollment with the new exchanges, and implement other specified changes. The Act further requires states to establish an office of health insurance consumer assistance or an ombudsman program to advocate for people in the new programs.

The Act's Impact on Florida's Medicaid Program, as an Example

43. The Act will have an impact on all Plaintiffs and in a manner similar to its impact on Florida, as described herein by way of example.

44. Florida is the Nation's fourth largest state in population. Based on United States Census Bureau statistics from 2008, Florida has 3,641,933 uninsured persons living in the state. Of those persons, 1,259,378 are below 133 percent of the federal poverty line, and therefore must be added to Florida's Medicaid rolls under the Act.

45. Even before passage of the Act, the Medicaid program imposed an overwhelming cost on Florida, consuming 26 percent of its annual budget. For fiscal year 2009-2010 alone, Florida will spend more than $18 billion on Medicaid, servicing more than 2.7 million persons. Florida's Medicaid contributions and burdens, from the implementation of its Medicaid program in 1970 to the present, have gradually increased to the point where it would be infeasible for Florida to cease its participation in Medicaid.

46. Although the federal government currently contributes 67.64 percent of every dollar Florida spends on Medicaid, that percentage is artificially and temporarily raised because of federal stimulus outlays. After this year, the percentage of Florida's Medicaid program expenses covered by the federal government will decline, and by 2011 will reach 55.45 percent, a level that is closer to the recent average. The federal government's contribution will not compensate for the dramatic increase to Florida's Medicaid rolls and the correspondingly soaring costs to be borne by Florida under the Act.

47. Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration (AHCA) estimates that at least 80 percent of persons who have some form of health insurance but fall below 133 percent of the federal poverty level will drop their current plans and enroll in Medicaid, because they are newly eligible under the Act. The federal government does not offer any funding for these persons, because they qualified for insurance other than Medicaid prior to passage of the Act. These persons represent a significant additional cost to Florida under the Act.

48. The Act also makes a large new class of persons eligible for Medicaid in Florida. Prior to passage of the Act, only certain specified low-income individuals and families qualified for Medicaid. Moreover, the qualifying income level set by Florida was much lower than the level of 133 percent of the federal poverty line set by the federal government under the Act. Now, Florida also must add to its Medicaid rolls all childless adults whose income falls below 133 percent of the federal poverty line.

49. Prior to passage of the Act, AHCA was Florida's designated state Medicaid agency tasked with developing and carrying out policies related to the Medicaid program. The Act will strip away much of AHCA's authority to set policies, transferring that authority to the federal government, which will dictate those policies to Florida. AHCA and the other Florida agencies will be rendered arms of the federal government, and AHCA employees will be conscripted and forced to administer what now is essentially a federal Medicaid program for which Florida must bear a substantial cost.

50. AHCA has prepared limited projections for the fiscal impact of the Act. The new additional costs to the state are as follows: $149,001,478 for 2014; $431,307,547 for 2015; $484,803,557 for 2016; $938,807,336 for 2017; $993,836,882 for 2018, and $1,048,866,307 for 2019. Beyond this time frame, the costs to Florida will continue to grow. These projections understate the Act's adverse impact on Florida. They do not include estimated costs to be borne by Florida to administer the Act or to prepare for the Act's implementation. Such costs will include hiring and training new staff, creating new information technology infrastructures, developing an adequate provider base, creating a scheme for accountability and quality assurance, and many other expenses.

51. The Act effectively requires that Florida immediately begin to devote funds and resources to implement the Act's sweeping reforms across multiple agencies of government. Such implementation burdens include, but are not limited to: enforcing the Act's immediately-effective terms, including new mandates regarding healthcare insurance coverage; determining gaps between current resources in state government and the Act's requirements; evaluating infrastructure to consider how new programs and substantial expansion of existing programs will be implemented (e.g., new agencies, offices, etc.); developing a strategic plan and coordinating common issues across state agencies; initiating legislative and regulatory processes, while at the same time monitoring and engaging the substantial federal regulatory processes to ensure that Florida's interests are protected; and developing a communications structure and plan to disseminate new information regarding changes brought about by the Act to the many affected persons and entities (legislators, state agencies, insurers, hospitals, doctors, community clinics, major employers, small businesses, advocacy groups, insurance brokers, legislators, the uninsured, and Floridians generally), and to achieve such dissemination in sufficient time for them to understand and adapt to the changes in accordance with federal timetables, without interruption or confusion in the provision of healthcare services.

52. In sum, while the Act infringes on Florida's constitutional status as a sovereign, entitled to cooperate with but not to be controlled by the federal government under the Medicaid program, the Act also will force Florida to cover more than one million additional persons and, in so doing, to spend billions of additional dollars, a price it simply cannot afford to pay.

53. At the same time, like the other Plaintiffs, Florida cannot avoid the Act's requirements by ending its longstanding participation in the Medicaid program, thereby leaving millions of current Medicaid recipients stranded without coverage. In effect, the Plaintiffs' participation under the Act cannot be avoided, despite its devastating effects.

CAUSES OF ACTION

COUNT ONE

UNCONSTITUTIONAL EXERCISE OF FEDERAL POWER AND VIOLATION OF THE TENTH AMENDMENT (Const. art. I & amend. X)

54. Plaintiffs reallege, adopt, and incorporate by reference paragraphs 1 through 53 above as though fully set forth herein.

55. Plaintiffs cannot afford the exorbitant and unfunded costs of participating under the Act, but have no choice other than to participate.

56. The Act exceeds Congress's powers under Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and cannot be upheld under the Commerce Clause, Const. art. I, §8; the Taxing and Spending Clause, id.; or any other provision of the Constitution.

57. By effectively co-opting the Plaintiffs' control over their budgetary processes and legislative agendas through compelling them to assume costs they cannot afford, and by requiring them to establish health insurance exchanges, the Act deprives them of their sovereignty and their right to a republican form of government, in violation of Article IV, section 4 of the Constitution of the United States.

58. The Act violates the Tenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and runs afoul of the Constitution's principle of federalism, by commandeering the Plaintiffs and their employees as agents of the federal government's regulatory scheme at the states' own cost.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court:

A. Declare the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to be in violation of Article I of and the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

B. Declare Defendants to have violated the Plaintiffs' rights as sovereigns and protectors of the freedom, public health, and welfare of their citizens and residents, as aforesaid;

C. Enjoin Defendants and any other agency or employee acting on behalf of the United States from enforcing the Act against the Plaintiffs, their citizens and residents, and any of their agencies or officials or employees, and to take such actions as are necessary and proper to remedy their violations deriving from any such actual or attempted enforcement; and

D. Award Plaintiffs their reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and grant such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

COUNT TWO

VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION OF UNAPPORTIONED CAPITATION OR DIRECT TAX (Const. art. I, §§ 2, 9)

59. Plaintiffs reallege, adopt, and incorporate by reference paragraphs 1 through 53 above as though fully set forth herein.

60. The tax penalty on uninsured persons under the Act constitutes a capitation and a direct tax that is not apportioned among the states according to census data, thereby injuring the sovereign interests of Plaintiffs.

61. Said tax penalty applies without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance, and is unrelated to any taxable event or activity. It is to be levied upon persons for their failure or refusal to do anything other than to exist and reside in the United States.

62. Said tax penalty violates article I, sections 2 and 9 of the Constitution of the United States. By its imposition of the penalty tax, and by the resulting coercion of many persons to enroll in Medicaid at a substantial cost to the Plaintiffs, the Act injures their interests as sovereigns vested with exclusive authority, except to the extent permitted to the federal government by the Constitution, to make all taxing decisions affecting their citizens and to confer a right upon persons in their states to make healthcare decisions without government interference. The tax penalty is unconstitutional on its face and cannot be applied constitutionally.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court:

A. Declare the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to be in violation of Article I, sections 2 and 9 of the Constitution of the United States;

B. Declare Defendants to have violated the Plaintiffs' rights as sovereigns and protectors of the freedom, public health, and welfare of their citizens and residents, as aforesaid;

C. Enjoin Defendants and any other agency or employee acting on behalf of the United States from enforcing the Act against the Plaintiffs, their citizens and residents, and any of their agencies or officials or employees, and to take such actions as are necessary and proper to remedy their violations deriving from any such actual or attempted enforcement; and

D. Award Plaintiffs their reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and grant such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

COUNT THREE

UNCONSTITUTIONAL MANDATE THAT ALL INDIVIDUALS HAVE HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE OR PAY TAX PENALTY
(Const. art. I & amend. X)

63. Plaintiffs reallege, adopt, and incorporate by reference paragraphs 1 through 53 above as though fully set forth herein.

64. The Act forces citizens and residents to have healthcare coverage or pay a tax penalty. In effect, the Act compels said persons to have healthcare coverage, whether or not they wish to do so, or be subject to sanction. The Act thus compels persons to perform an affirmative act or incur a penalty, simply on the basis that they exist and reside in the United States.

65. The Act is directed to a lack of or failure to engage in activity that is driven by the choices of individual Americans. Such inactivity by its nature cannot be deemed to be in commerce or to have any substantial effect on commerce, whether interstate or otherwise. As a result, the Act cannot be upheld under the Commerce Clause, Const. art. I, § 8. The Act infringes upon Plaintiffs' interests in protecting the freedom, public health, and welfare of their citizens and their state fiscs, by coercing many persons to enroll in Medicaid at a substantial cost to Plaintiffs; and denies Plaintiffs their sovereign ability to confer rights upon their citizens and residents to make healthcare decisions without government interference, including the decision not to participate in any healthcare insurance program or scheme, in violation of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

66. The tax penalty on uninsured persons under the Act unlawfully coerces persons to obtain healthcare coverage, thereby injuring the Plaintiffs' fiscs, because many persons will be compelled to enroll in Medicaid at a substantial cost to Plaintiffs. As a result, the Act cannot be upheld under the Taxing and Spending Clause, Const. art. I, § 8.

67. In so coercing citizens and residents to have healthcare coverage, the Act exceeds Congress's powers under Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and cannot be upheld under any provision of the Constitution.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court:

A. Declare the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to be in violation of Article I, section 8 of and the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

B. Declare Defendants to have violated the Plaintiffs' rights as sovereigns and protectors of the freedom, health, and welfare of their citizens and residents, as aforesaid;

C. Enjoin Defendants and any other agency or employee acting on behalf of the United States from enforcing the Act against the Plaintiffs, their citizens and residents, and any of their agencies or officials or employees, and to take such actions as are necessary and proper to remedy their violations deriving from any such actual or attempted enforcement; and

D. Award Plaintiffs their reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and grant such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

COUNT FOUR

DECLARATORY JUDGMENT

68. Plaintiffs reallege, adopt, and incorporate by reference paragraphs 1 through 53 above as though fully set forth herein.

69. There is an actual controversy of sufficient immediacy and concreteness relating to the legal rights and duties of the Plaintiffs and their legal relations with the Defendants to warrant relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201.

70. The harm to the Plaintiffs as a direct result of the Act is sufficiently real and imminent to warrant the issuance of a conclusive declaratory judgment clarifying the legal relations of the parties.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court:

A. Declare the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to be in violation of Article I of and the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

B. Declare Defendants to have violated the Plaintiffs' rights as sovereigns and protectors of the freedom, health, and welfare of their citizens and residents, as aforesaid;

C. Enjoin Defendants and any other agency or employee acting on behalf of the United States from enforcing the Act against the Plaintiffs, their citizens and residents, and any of their agencies or officials or employees, and to take such actions as are necessary and proper to remedy their violations deriving from any such actual or attempted enforcement; and

D. Award Plaintiffs their reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and grant such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

GOLDWATER

The Health Care Freedom Act:
Questions & Answers

by Clint Bolick, Litigation Director, Goldwater Institute

The Health Care Freedom Act will appear as a proposed constitutional amendment on Arizona's 2010 election ballot, and similar measures are under consideration in more than 30 other states. With the possibility that Congress will enact some sort of national health insurance legislation, questions are being raised about the scope of the Health Care Freedom Act and its effect should a federal bill become law. In the following pages, Clint Bolick, who helped to author the Health Care Freedom Act, answers frequently asked questions.

Q: What is the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: The Health Care Freedom Act is a proposed amendment to the Arizona Constitution that would preserve certain existing rights that individuals have regarding health care. It was initially proposed by two Arizona physicians, Dr. Eric Novack and Dr. Jeffrey Singer, with drafting assistance from the Goldwater Institute. The measure qualified as a voter initiative on the 2008 ballot, and despite a well-financed opposition campaign, it was defeated by less than one-half of 1 percent of the vote. Changes were made to address concerns raised by the opponents, and the Arizona Legislature voted to refer the revised version to the 2010 ballot.

The American Legislative Exchange Council adopted model legislation based on the Arizona measure, and activists and legislators in at least 35 additional states are pursuing constitutional amendments or statutes based on the Arizona model.

Q: What are the key provisions?

A: Although the precise language varies from state to state, the Health Care Freedom Act seeks to protect two essential rights. First, it protects a person's right to participate or not in any health care system, and prohibits the government from imposing fines or penalties on that person's decision. Second, it protects the right of individuals to purchase—and the right of doctors to provide—lawful medical services without government fine or penalty. The Health Care Freedom Act would place these essential rights in the state constitution (or, in some states, it would protect them by statute).

Q: What motivated the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: No one questions the need for serious health care reform. However, the proponents of the Health Care Freedom Act believe that regardless of how such reform is fashioned, either at the state or federal level, the essential rights protected by the Health Care Freedom Act should be preserved. Many advocates of a larger government role in regulating or providing health insurance support a mandate that would compel individuals to join a government-approved health insurance plan, whether or not they can afford it and whether or not the system best fits their needs. In some countries in which government plays a large role in providing health insurance, medical services are rationed and individuals are prevented or discouraged from obtaining otherwise lawful medical services. Supporters of the Health Care Freedom Act have a variety of perspectives on the form that health care reform should take. But they agree that no matter what legislation is passed, it should not take from Americans their precious right to control their own medical affairs.

Q: By what authority can states pass the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: It is well-established that the U.S. Constitution provides a baseline for the protection of individual rights, and that state constitutions may provide additional protections—and all of them do. For instance, some states provide greater protections of freedom of speech or due process rights. Because the Health Care Freedom Act offers greater protection than the federal constitution, states are allowed to enact it.

Q: Does it matter whether the Health Care Freedom Act is passed as a statute or as a constitutional amendment?

A: A state constitution is the organic law of the state, reflecting the most fundamental values shared by the citizens of the state. Moreover, a state constitutional amendment will ensure the state legislature can never infringe upon the protected rights. So a constitutional amendment is preferable, especially to protect against legislative tinkering. However, for purposes of a federalism defense against excessive federal legislation, it should not matter whether the people of the state have acted through their constitution or by statute.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act attempt to "nullify" federal health insurance legislation?

A: Absolutely not. If federal legislation is enacted, individuals would still have the option to participate in federal health insurance programs. This act simply protects a person's right not to participate.

Q: To the extent that the Health Care Freedom Act conflicts with provisions of federal legislation, isn't the state law automatically preempted by the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution?

A: No. In any clash between state and federal provisions, at least four federal constitutional provisions are relevant. The Supremacy Clause establishes the Constitution as the supreme law of the land and provides that federal laws prevail over conflicting state laws where Congress has the legitimate authority to enact the legislation and where it does not impermissibly tread upon state sovereignty. The federal government will have to demonstrate that its legislation legitimately is derived from congressional authority to regulate interstate commerce. It will also have to show the legislation does not violate the 10th Amendment, which reserves to the states all government power not expressly delegated to the national government; and the 11th Amendment, which protects states from being used as mere instrumentalities of the national government. This constitutional construct is known as federalism.

Q: Are certain provisions of proposed federal health care legislation vulnerable to constitutional challenge even without the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: Yes, in at least three ways. First, to the extent that the legislation purports to regulate transactions that do not directly affect interstate commerce, such as mandating insurance for individuals, Congress may lack authority to do so under the Commerce Clause. Several relatively recent decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court have invalidated federal legislation on this basis. In U.S. v. Lopez (1995), the Court struck down federal laws that restricted guns in school zones; and in U.S. v. Morrison, it struck down a federal statute involving violence against women. In both cases, the Court found the subject matter of the federal laws did not "substantially affect" interstate commerce, so Congress had no power to regulate it under the circumstances presented.

Second, to the extent the legislation interferes with the individual's right to choose health insurance providers, doctors, or lawful medical services, it may violate the right to medical self-determination recognized under the U.S. Constitution. As the Court declared in Griswold v. Connecticut (1965), "We have recognized that the special relationship between patient and physician will often be encompassed within the domain of private life protected by the Due Process Clause." Several of the early abortion cases involved what Justice William O. Douglas, concurring in Doe v. Bolton (1973), described as the "right to seek advice on one's health and the right to place reliance on the physician of one's choice." Whether or not one agrees with those abortion rulings, they establish a strong basis for challenging certain federal and state intrusions.

Third, several recent decisions have invalidated federal laws that "commandeer" state governments to do their bidding. In New York v. United States (1992), for instance, the Court struck down federal rules requiring states to take ownership of certain radioactive waste and to expose themselves to liability. Speaking for the Court, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor ruled that "no matter how powerful the federal interest involved, the Constitution simply does not give Congress the authority to require the States to regulate." Tellingly, she added "the Constitution protects us from our own best intentions: It divides power among sovereigns . . . precisely so that we may resist the temptation to concentrate power in one location as an expedient solution to the crisis of the day." To the extent that federal health insurance legislation forces states to implement its provisions, it could be subject to robust constitutional challenge.

Q: Could the Health Care Freedom Act provide additional protection against federal health insurance legislation that violates protected rights?

A: Yes. Although the federal government usually prevails in federalism clashes, the current U.S. Supreme Court is the most pro-federalism Court in decades. There are no cases precisely on point, but the Court under Chief Justice John Roberts has sided with the states in at least three major recent federalism clashes. In the case most closely on point, Gonzales v. Oregon (2006), the Court upheld the state's "right-to-die" law, which was enacted by Oregon voters, over the objections of the U.S. Attorney General, who argued that federal law pre-empted the state law. Applying "the structure and limitations of federalism," the Court observed that states have great latitude in regulating health and safety, including medical standards, which are primarily and historically a matter of local concern. Holding that the attorney general's reading of the federal statute would mark "a radical shift of authority from the States to the Federal Government to define general standards of medical practice in every locality," the Court interpreted the statute to allow Oregon to protect the rights of its citizens.

Horne v. Flores (2009) considered a measure adopted by Arizona voters to require English immersion as the state's educational policy for students for whom English is a second language. Lower federal courts had imposed an injunction based on a finding that Arizona was failing to comply with federal bilingual education requirements. The Supreme Court held that injunctions affecting "areas of core state responsibility, such as public education," should be lifted as quickly as circumstances warrant. It observed that "federalism concerns are heightened when . . . a federal court decree has the effect of dictating state or local budget priorities." The Court remanded the case to lower courts to reconsider the injunction.

In Northwest Austin Municipal Utility District No. 1 v. Holder (2009), the Court examined a challenge to section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, which places certain states and localities in a penalty box, requiring them to obtain "pre-clearance" by the U.S. Department of Justice for any changes that impact voting. The Court was sharply critical of the "federalism costs" imposed upon the covered jurisdictions. It avoided the constitutional question by applying the federal law in a way that allowed the utility district to "bail out" from pre-clearance requirements under section 5.

In each of these cases, the Court sided with states in federalism disputes with the federal government.

Q: Will the Health Care Freedom Act affect future state legislation regarding health insurance?

A: Yes. If it is passed as a constitutional amendment, it would prevent any future legislation that infringes upon the rights protected by the amendment.

Q: Won't this be really expensive for the states to defend in court?

A: The Goldwater Institute has offered to defend the constitutionality of the Health Care Freedom Act at no cost to any state. Because legal challenges would involve purely constitutional issues and would not require expensive trials, to the extent that states become involved in litigation, they should be able to do so within existing Attorney General litigation budgets. Moreover, depending on the details of national health insurance legislation, the cost of federal mandates is likely to far exceed the cost of litigation.

Q: Even if the states and individuals did not prevail in a challenge to intrusive federal health insurance legislation, would there be reasons to support the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: Yes. First, if these rights are given additional protection under state constitutions, they will create an absolute barrier to future state legislation that violates those rights. Moreover, efforts to enact the Health Care Freedom Act send a powerful message to our nation's capitol that people at the grassroots take these rights very seriously and intend to protect them.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act impair drug laws?

A: Absolutely not. It protects the right to purchase or provide "lawful" medical services. It does not limit the power of any government to determine what constitutes lawful medical services.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act affect the issue of abortion?

A: No. Again, to the extent that states may regulate abortion under applicable constitutional doctrine and state or federal law, this measure would not alter that power in any way. The Health Care Freedom Act does, however, prevent the government from forcing individuals into health care systems against their will, and matters of conscience may influence such individual decisions.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act affect Veterans' Administration programs, workers' compensation, Medicare, Medicaid, or state health-care systems?

A: Generally, no. The Health Care Freedom Act leaves intact any rules and regulations that were in place as of January 1, 2009. The only way such programs could be affected is if they are changed in the future in ways that violate the freedom of choice protected by the Health Care Freedom Act.

Q: Will this restrict the government from limiting the choice of providers or imposing other limits for the people who do opt-in to a government health care system?

A: No and yes, respectively. If a person voluntarily joins a government health care system, the government may set the terms and conditions, including choice of providers. However, the government cannot prevent a person from purchasing, or a health care professional from providing, lawful medical services outside that system.

Q: Is the Health Care Freedom Act supported financially by insurance companies?

A: No. Many insurance companies support an individual mandate (requiring individuals to buy health insurance or face government fines), which the Health Care Freedom Act would prohibit. An individual mandate guarantees a customer base to the insurance industry. It is present in some legislative proposals as a means to subsidize health insurance for others. If insurance companies play a role in the battle over the Health Care Freedom Act, we expect they will oppose it, possibly with significant resources.

Q: Are there other ways in which freedom advocates can use state constitutions to protect their liberties?

A: Absolutely. State constitutions are full of provisions unknown to the U.S. Constitution that are designed to protect individual liberty and limit the power of government, such as the line-item veto, anti-monopoly provisions, prohibitions against corporate subsidies ("gift clauses"), constraints against earmarks ("special law clauses"), and the like. Citizens and legislatures can amend their state constitutions to add additional protections; and taxpayers can enforce their state constitutional rights in state courts. State constitutions were intended to be the first line of defense in protecting the freedoms of the people. As the power of government grows at every level, we need to use whatever tools are available to us to safeguard our rights. For more on how state constitutions can protect liberty, see the recent Goldwater Institute report, "50 Bright Stars: An Assessment of Each State's Constitutional Commitment to Limited Government."

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

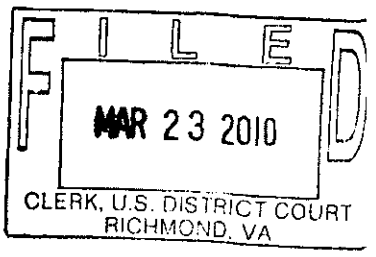
RICHMOND DIVISION



COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA EX REL. KENNETH T. CUCCINELLI, II, in his official capacity as Attorney General of Virginia, Plaintiff, v. KATHLEEN SEBELIUS, Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, in her official capacity, Defendant.	)	Civil Action No. 3:10CV188

COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Plaintiff states the following for its Complaint:

Introduction

1. Section 1501 of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act ("PPACA") contains an individual mandate which will require a majority of Virginians after December 31, 2013 to purchase health insurance for themselves and their dependants subject to a civil penalty.

2. At the 2010 Regular Session of the Virginia General Assembly, Virginia Code § 38.2-3430.1:1 was enacted with the assent of the Governor.

3. That statute provides:

> No resident of this Commonwealth, regardless of whether he has or is eligible for health insurance coverage under any policy or program provided by or through his employer, or a plan sponsored by the Commonwealth or the federal government, shall be required to obtain or maintain a policy of individual insurance coverage except as required by a court or the Department of Social Services where an individual is named a party in a judicial or administrative proceeding. No provision of this title shall render a resident of this Commonwealth liable for any penalty, assessment, fee, or fine as a result of his failure to procure or obtain health insurance coverage. This section shall not apply to individuals voluntarily applying for coverage under a state-administered program pursuant to Title XIX or Title XXI of the Social Security Act. This section shall not apply to students being required by an institution of higher education to obtain and maintain health insurance as a condition of enrollment. Nothing herein shall impair the rights of persons to privately contract for health insurance for family members or former family members.

4. Although the federal mandate does not take effect for several years, PPACA imposes immediate and continuing burdens on Virginia and its citizens. The collision between the state and federal schemes also creates an immediate, actual controversy involving antagonistic assertions of right.

5. The individual mandate is an essential element of the act without which it would not have been passed and without which the statutory scheme cannot function.

6. The Federal act contains no severability provision.

Parties

7. The Commonwealth of Virginia has an interest in asserting the validity of its anti-mandate enactment. The Virginia enactment is valid despite the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution because, as demonstrated below, the individual mandate and PPACA as a whole are unconstitutional.

8. Kathleen Sebelius in her official capacity is principally responsible for administering PPACA.

Jurisdiction and Venue

9. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and is authorized to enter Declaratory Judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2001 et seq.

10. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(2).

Facts

11. Congress in the past has used its taxing and spending powers to establish social welfare programs such as Social Security and Medicare.

12. Congress lacks the political will to fund comprehensive health care in this way because taxes above those already provided in PPACA would produce too much opposition.

13. The alternative, which was also a centerpiece of the failed Clinton administration health care proposal, is to fund universal health care in part by making healthy young adults and other rationally uninsured individuals cross-subsidize older and less healthy citizens.

14. The mandate also relates to disincentives created by PPACA under which it would make no economic sense for the uninsured to pay premiums before becoming ill unless compelled to do so by law.

15. Before passing the act, the Senate evinced doubt that it had the power to adopt the individual mandate under the Commerce Clause, Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution. As a consequence of these concerns, the Senate Finance Committee asked the Congressional Research Service to opine on the constitutionality of the individual mandate. The Service replied: "Whether such a requirement would be constitutional under the Commerce Clause is perhaps the most challenging question posed by such a proposal, as it is a novel issue whether Congress may use this Clause to require an individual to purchase a good or a service." Cong. Research Serv. Requiring Individuals to Obtain Health Insurance: A Constitutional Analysis 3 (2009).

16. In United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995), and United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000), the Supreme Court struck down attempts to regulate non-commercial activities based upon their predicted effects on interstate commerce because those attempts went beyond the outer limits of the Commerce Clause. Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1, 25 (2005) ("Despite congressional findings that such crimes had an adverse impact on interstate commerce, we held the statute [in Morrison] unconstitutional because, like the statute in Lopez, it did not regulate economic activity.").

Count One
Commerce Clause

17. The status of being a citizen or resident of the Commonwealth of Virginia is not a channel of interstate commerce; nor a person or thing in interstate commerce; nor is it an activity arising out of or connected with a commercial transaction. Instead, the status arises from an absence of commerce, not from some sort of economic endeavor, and is not even a non-economic activity affecting interstate commerce. It is entirely passive.

18. While the United States Supreme Court has not adopted a categorical rule against aggregating the effects of any non-economic activity in order to find Commerce Clause authority, thus far in our history, it has never been held that the Commerce Clause, even when aided by the Necessary and Proper Clause, can be used to require citizens to buy goods or services. To depart from that history to permit the national government to require the purchase of goods or services would deprive the Commerce Clause of any effective limits contrary to Lopez and Morrison and would create powers indistinguishable from a general police power in total derogation of our constitutional scheme of enumerated powers.

19. Regulation of non-economic activity under the Commerce Clause is possible only through the Necessary and Proper Clause. Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1, 39 (2005) (Scalia concurring in the judgment). The Necessary and Proper Clause confers supplemental authority only when the means adopted to accomplish an enumerated power are "'appropriate,'" are "'plainly adapted' to that end," and are "'consistent with the letter and spirit of the constitution.'" Id. (citing McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 421 (1819)). Requiring citizen-to-citizen subsidy or redistribution is contrary to the foundational assumptions of the constitutional compact.

20. As Justice Chase wrote, almost at the moment of the founding of the country, in the Supreme Court's first substantive opinion, Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386, 388 (1798):

> An ACT of the Legislature (for I cannot call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact, cannot be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority. The obligation of a law in governments established on express compact, and on republican principles, must be determined by the nature of the power, on which it was founded. A few instances will suffice to explain what I mean. A . . . law that takes property from A and gives it to B: It is against all reason and justice, for a people to entrust a Legislature with SUCH powers; and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it.

This analysis applies equally to citizen-to-citizen subsidy and subsidy of insurance companies by an individual mandate.

WHEREFORE, the Commonwealth of Virginia prays this Court to declare that § 1501 of PPACA is unconstitutional because the individual mandate exceeds the enumerated powers conferred upon Congress. Because the individual mandate is an essential, non-severable provision, the entire act is likewise invalid. As a consequence, this Court should also declare that § 38.2-3430.1:1 is a valid exercise of state power. The Commonwealth additionally prays the Court to grant such further and additional relief as the ends of justice may require including an injunction against the enforcement of § 1501 in particular and PPACA as a whole.

When Idaho Governor C.L. "Butch" Otter signed HO391 into law on 17 March 2010, the "national" news media circled the wagons and began another assault on State sovereignty. The bill required the Idaho attorney general to sue the federal government over insurance mandates in the event national healthcare legislation passed. The lead AP reporter on the story, John Miller, quoted constitutional "scholar" David Freeman Engstrom of Stanford Law School as stating that the Idaho law would be irrelevant because of the "supremacy clause" of the United States Constitution.

In his words, "That language is clear that federal law is supreme over state law, so it really doesn't matter what a state legislature says on this." Now that Barack Obama has signed healthcare legislation into law, almost a dozen States have filed suit against the federal government, with Idaho in the lead. Battle lines have been drawn. Unfortunately, the question of State sovereignty and the true meaning of the "supremacy clause" may be swallowed up in the ensuing debate.

Engstrom's opinion is held by a majority of constitutional law "scholars," but he is far from correct, and Idaho and the thirty seven other States considering similar legislation have a strong case based on the original intent of the powers of the federal government vis-à-vis the States.

The so-called "supremacy clause" of the Constitution, found in Article 6, states, "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding [emphasis added]."

The key, of course, is the italicized phrase. All laws made in pursuance of the Constitution, or those clearly enumerated in the document, were supreme, State laws notwithstanding. In other words, the federal government was supreme in all items clearly listed in the document.

A quick reading of the Constitution illustrates that national healthcare is not one of the enumerated powers of the federal government, so obviously Engstrom's blanket and simplistic statement is blatantly incorrect, but his distortion of the supremacy clause goes further.

The inclusion of such a clause in the Constitution was first debated at the Constitutional Convention on 31 May 1787. In Edmund Randolph's initial proposal, called the Virginia Plan, the "national" legislature had the ability to "legislate in all cases to which the separate states are incompetent..." and "to negative all laws passed by the several states contravening, in the opinion of the national legislature, the Articles of Union...." John Rutledge, Pierce Butler, and Charles Pinckney of South Carolina challenged the word "incompetent" and demanded that Randolph define the term. Butler thought that the delegates "were running into an extreme, in taking away the powers of the states..." through such language.

Randolph replied that he "disclaimed any intention to give indefinite powers to the national legislature, declaring that he was entirely opposed to such an inroad on the state jurisdictions, and that he did not think any considerations whatever could ever change his determination [emphasis added]." James Madison, the author of the Virginia Plan, was not as forthcoming as to his sentiment. Ultimately, Madison preferred a negative over State law and wished the national legislature to be supreme in call cases. But he was not in the majority.

The Convention again broached a federal negative on State law on 8 June 1787. Charles Pinckney, who presented a draft of a constitution shortly after Randolph offered the Virginia Plan, believed a national negative necessary to the security of the Union, and Madison, using imagery from the solar system and equating the sun to the national government, argued that without a national negative, the States "will continually fly out of their proper orbits, and destroy the order and harmony of the political system." Such symbolism made for a beautiful picture, but it belied reality.

To most of the assembled delegates, the national government was not the center of the political universe and the States retained their sovereignty. Hugh Williamson of North Carolina emphatically stated he "was against giving a power that might restrain the states from regulating their internal police."

Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts was against an unlimited negative, and Gunning Bedford of Delaware believed a national negative was simply intended "to strip the small states of their equal right of suffrage." He asked, "Will not these large states crush the small ones, whenever they stand in the way of their ambitious or interested views?"

When the negative power was put to a vote, seven States voted against it and three for it, with Delaware divided (and Virginia only in the affirmative by one vote). Roger Sherman of Connecticut summarized the sentiment of the majority when he stated he "thought the cases in which the negative ought to be exercised might be defined." Since the negative did not pass, such a definition was unnecessary.

Thus, the federal government was supreme only in its enumerated powers and it did not have a negative over State law. Supremacy had limits.

By the time the Constitution was debated in the several State ratifying conventions in 1787 and 1788, the "supremacy clause" galvanized opponents of the document. The Constitution, they said, would destroy the States and render them impotent in their internal affairs. The response from proponents of ratification illuminates the true intent of the clause. William Davie, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from North Carolina and proponent of the Constitution, responded to attacks levied on the "supremacy clause" by stating that:

> This Constitution, as to the powers therein granted, is constantly to be the supreme law of the land. Every power ceded by it must be executed without being counteracted by the laws or constitutions of the individual states. Gentlemen should distinguish that it is not the supreme law in the exercise of power not granted. It can be supreme only in cases consistent with the powers specially granted, and not in usurpations [emphasis added].

Davie wasn't alone in this opinion. Future Supreme Court justice James Iredell of North Carolina argued that, "This clause [the supremacy clause] is supposed to give too much power, when, in fact, it only provides for the execution of those powers which are already given in the foregoing articles....If Congress, under pretence of executing one power, should, in fact, usurp another, they will violate the Constitution [emphasis added]."

Furthermore, in a foreshadowing of nullification, Iredell argued that, "It appears to me merely a general clause, the amount of which is that, when they [Congress] pass an act, if it be in the execution of a power given by the Constitution, it shall be binding on the people, otherwise not [emphasis added]. Other ratifying conventions had similar debates, and proponents of the Constitution continually reassured wavering supporters that the Constitution would only be supreme within its delegated authority.

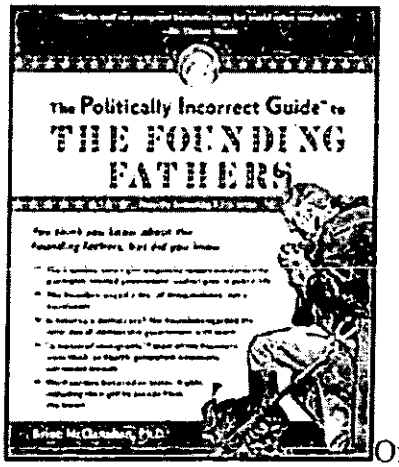
Most bought their assurances, though to staunch opponents, the Constitution still vested too much power in the central authority. The States would lose their sovereignty, they argued, and as a result, these men demanded an amendment to the Constitution that expressly maintained the sovereignty of the States and placed limits on federal power. Even several moderate supporters of the Constitution embraced this idea.

Ultimately, the three most powerful States in the Union, New York, Massachusetts, and Virginia, demanded that a bill of rights be immediately added to the Constitution; near the top of those recommended amendments on every list, a State sovereignty resolution. These ultimately became the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution, which reads, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Clearly the intent of this amendment was to mitigate any design the federal government had on enlarging its powers through the "supremacy clause." If the power was not enumerated in the Constitution and the States were not prohibited by the Constitution from exercising said power, then that power was reserved to the States.

Several other constitutional "scholars" have weighed in on the debate in the last week, and each has invoked the "supremacy clause" to defend their opposition to State action against healthcare. Duke Law Professor Neil Siegel went so far as to suggest that the States are not reading the Tenth Amendment correctly. In perhaps the most outlandish statement of the debate, he also said, "Any talk of nullification bothers me because it's talk of lawlessness."

I guess Mr. Siegel has failed to consider that Idaho bill HO391 was passed by a legitimate legislative body elected by the people of the State. That would make it lawful.



Of course, this debate ultimately boils down to loose interpretation verses strict construction. Thomas Jefferson had the best line on this issue. When asked to read between the lines to "find" implied powers, Jefferson responded that he had done that, and he "found only blank space."

The original intent of both the "supremacy clause" and the Tenth Amendment indicate that Idaho and the other States challenging Obamacare are justified and correct and that the legal profession is either in the tank for the federal government or has not read either the debates of the Constitutional Convention and/or the State ratifying debates. This should make people like Engstrom and Siegel, rather than legitimate State law directed at unconstitutional authority, irrelevant.

States Launch Legal Challenge to Health Care Law

State Legislatures to Challenge Health Care Law

In addition to constitutional challenges to the law, legislators in at least 36 states are attempting to limit, alter or oppose some of its provisions through state constitutional amendments or laws, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Many of the proposals seek to keep health insurance coverage optional for individuals and exempt employers from penalties if they don't offer coverage for workers.

Earlier this month, Virginia and Idaho became the first states to enact laws specifically stating that health insurance coverage is not required.

Still, many legal experts say these legislative efforts will ultimately be trumped by the so-called supremacy clause in the U.S. Constitution, which says federal laws "shall be the supreme law of the land."

"State law cannot nullify federal law," Timothy Stoltzfus Jost, a health law expert at Washington and Lee University School of Law, writes in the New England Journal of Medicine. "This principle is simply beyond debate, and state legislators, many of them lawyers, know that. The purpose of these laws, therefore, is not legal but rather political

Indiana joins 13 states to challenge health reform

13 other states raise constitutional questions about the new legislation

By Bill Ruthhart

Posted: March 30, 2010

Indiana became the 14th state Monday to challenge the constitutionality of the federal health-care legislation, but legal e xperts warned the lawsuit faces an uphill climb against previous court rulings.

After reviewing the sweeping health-care reforms, Indiana Attorney General Greg Zoeller announced he would join a lawsuit already filed jointly by 13 other attorneys general in a Florida federal court.

At the core of Zoeller's decision to join the suit is the charge that Congress does not have the power to force Americans to buy health insurance coverage or require them to pay a fine if they fail to do so.

"It's really critical that we have these questions asked and answered," he said, "so that the Supreme Court's final word as to whether the new reach of the federal government in this statute meets constitutional muster."

Zoeller also argued that the new reforms impinge on states' sovereignty by requiring states to set up health insurance exchanges for their residents to purchase coverage.

Democrats immediately accused Zoeller of playing politics. Of the 13 other attorneys general who have joined the lawsuit, 12 are Republicans.

"This is purely politics, nothing but," said Indiana Democratic Party Chairman Dan Parker. "The legal argument is weak, the political argument is weak. It's all based on false information, and the opponents of this couldn't stop it, so they're grasping at straws and this is the final straw to grasp."

Zoeller's announcement came after Gov. Mitch Daniels said Friday he had encouraged Zoeller to join the suit, even though Daniels said he was skeptical of its chances for success. The attorney general said Monday he made the decision based on the case's merits and independent from any political input.

"It's unfortunate that the entire subject matter has been politicized," Zoeller said, "but that was done in Washington before we ever joined (the lawsuit)."

Parker declared the suit a waste of taxpayer dollars.

Zoeller said he could not give an estimate of how much the lawsuit would cost but said he has no plans to hire outside counsel. He said the state's initial cost would be its undetermined share of a contract capped at $50,000 with a Washington, D.C., law firm hired to handle the case.

Indiana Republican Party Chairman Murray Clark said the lawsuit has merit.

"I think it's the right decision," he said. "Clearly, there's some constitutional questions that need to be asked and answered in light of one of the largest federal government overreaches we've seen in a long time."

The key question the lawsuit raises is whether the new law's requirement that all Americans carry health insurance coverage or be forced to pay a penalty should serve as a new test to the Constitution's commerce clause, which gives Congress the power to regulate business.

Over the past several decades -- starting in the 1930s -- constitutional law experts say, the courts and lawmakers have broadly interpreted that clause, giving Congress wide-ranging regulatory power.

Most legal scholars think those precedents would make it difficult for the Supreme Court, or any other, to rule that Congress does not have the power to add the new insurance regulations, said Carl Tobias, a constitutional law expert at the University of Richmond in Virginia.

Furthermore, he said, backers of the bill will defend the prospective fine for those who don't buy insurance under the taxing power that the Constitution gives Congress.

"The precedents all favor constitutionality," Tobias said. "There's nothing exactly the same as this challenge, but the relevant precedents, if you analogize from them, lead you to the conclusion that this challenge won't succeed."

But that's not to say the lawsuit isn't a worthy one, he said.

"I think it might have merit, but I just don't think it's going to win," Tobias said. "I think the best argument is about the individual mandates, but I think a fair number of constitutional scholars, and I agree, think that it's probably going to withstand the challenge."

Charles Rice, a constitutional law expert at the University of Notre Dame, said the case certainly is worth litigating.

"I think it's a legitimate thing to do. The outcome is not certain," Rice said. "It's really interesting, because it brings in precedents from a lot of the cases involving the Social Security Act and things like that, and it could provide the opportunity, if it gets to the Supreme Court, for the case to go either way."

Key to its outcome could be how the American public views the new law in the future, said Gerard Magliocca, a constitutional law professor at Indiana University School of Law-Indianapolis.

"This likely wouldn't be decided for two years, and a lot will depend on what people think of the health-care bill," Magliocca said. "If it's very unpopular, the courts are more likely to find a reason to declare it unconstitutional than if it turns out to be popular."

Parker, the state Democratic Party chairman, said Zoeller's decision would cost the attorney general in his next election in 2012, when he will have to explain why he fought against a bill that reformed the insurance industry to the benefit of so many Hoosiers. "Greg Zoeller is going to be on the wrong side of history on this one," Parker said.

Zoeller countered that almost everyone agrees the new law has raised fresh constitutional issues that the courts need to resolve.

"There aren't many people who say there isn't a new question here, because this is the first time the federal government has required people to purchase a commercial good, a commercial product," he said. "This is an insurance product that everyone, as a condition of being a citizen of the United States, will be required to purchase under the threat of penalty."

INDYSTAR.COM

In the end, Magliocca said, he gives the lawsuit a 25 percent chance of success.

"There is a plausible argument for saying this is unprecedented," he said. "It has a chance, but I think most everybody, most legal scholars, think it's unlikely this suit will succeed."

HEALTH CARE REFORM: WHO WINS AND WHO LOSES

While the health care bill is not as sweeping as many had once hoped (or others had feared), make no mistake: The new legislation will dramatically change the nation's health care system.

So who wins and who loses? "The people who gain the most are low-income people who do not get health insurance from an employer," says John Goodman, president, CEO and the Kellye Wright Fellow of the National Center for Policy Analysis. "Just about everybody else loses."

Groups that will especially bear the burden include:

- Generation Y: Most of the 19 million uninsured Americans between the ages of 18 and 34 will be forced to buy coverage -- coverage likely more expensive than they might have otherwise chosen.
- Anyone who earns more than $200,000: Workers earning more than $200,000 a year or couples with a combined income over $250,000 will pay an additional 0.9 percent in federal income tax to help fund Medicaid expansion starting in 2013, and will likely pay a new 3.8 percent Medicare tax on all investment income.
- Individuals with so-called Cadillac health insurance: A 40 percent tax will be levied on plans with premiums of $10,200 or more per person.

Goodman also notes that "as many as 8.5 million seniors could lose their Medicare Advantage coverage altogether" under government plans to reduce benefits offered under the program.

Advocates of the legislation argue that winners include anyone with a preexisting condition, recent college graduates who can now get coverage through their parents, small businesses who will have access to insurance pools and doctors who will get paid for seeing uninsured patients they were treating for free.

In addition, individuals aged 60 to 64 - the oldest age demographic not eligible for Medicare - will pay no more than three times the cost of the premium paid by a healthy 20-something. But as Goodman notes, "People who are 60 to 64 are going to pay lower premiums than they otherwise would because people who are 20 to 24 are going to pay higher premiums."

8 WAYS THAT HEALTH REFORM WILL AFFECT YOU

The health care legislation could "have an effect on almost every citizen," according to Kaiser Health News. So what should you expect?

Within six months after the bill is signed into law:

- Health insurers will no longer be allowed to impose lifetime caps on coverage.
- Parents who have insurance through their employers will be allowed to continue coverage for their unmarried dependents up to age 26.
- Health insurers will be required to cover certain preventive services like osteoporosis screening for women over 65, smoking cessation counseling and interventions, and screenings for diabetes and sexually transmitted diseases.
- And later this year, people with serious health conditions that have prevented them from obtaining coverage will be eligible to purchase a policy from a high-risk pool in a government-subsidized exchange at a cost similar to healthy individuals' premiums.

Individuals will also be required to obtain health insurance or face a fine. Government subsidies will be available on a sliding scale for people making up to $43,000 per year (or nearly $90,000 per year for a family of four), but those who don't qualify for government subsidies should expect to pay about $5,000 a year for a policy on the exchange, while families should expect to pay about $15,000, says John Goodman, president, CEO and Kellye Wright Fellow of the National Center for Policy Analysis.

The penalty starts in 2014 at $95 or up to 1 percent of income for individuals, whichever is greater, and rises to $695 by 2016 or 2.5 percent of income, whichever is greater. Families pay heftier fines - $2,085 or 2.5 percent of income by 2016

Other changes:

- Insurers won't be able to deny coverage based on preexisting conditions.
- Maternity support will be increased for women in the workplace.
- Additional, less expensive insurance options will be available when you lose or quit your job.

Increasing the number of insured individuals, however, will also mean longer waits to see a new doctor. In Massachusetts, for example, where health insurance is universal, Boston residents have to wait about twice as long to see a doctor as people in any other U.S. city, says Goodman.

20 WAYS OBAMACARE WILL TAKE AWAY OUR FREEDOMS

It is worthwhile to take a comprehensive look at the freedoms we will lose under ObamaCare, says blogger David Hogberg. Among them:

- You are young and don't want health insurance? You are starting up a small business and need to minimize expenses, and one way to do that is to forgo health insurance? Tough. You have to pay $750 annually for the "privilege." (Section 1501).
- You are young and healthy and want to pay for insurance that reflects that status? Tough. You'll have to pay for premiums that cover not only you, but also the guy who smokes three packs a day, drinks a gallon of whiskey and eats chicken fat off the floor. That's because insurance companies will no longer be able to underwrite on the basis of a person's health status. (Section 2701).
- You're a single guy without children? Tough, your policy must cover pediatric services. You're a woman who can't have children? Tough, your policy must cover maternity services. You're a teetotaler? Tough, your policy must cover substance abuse treatment. (Add your own violation of personal freedom here.) (Section 1302).
- You are an employer in the small-group insurance market and you'd like to offer policies with deductibles higher than $2,000 for individuals and $4,000 for families? Tough. (Section 1302 (c) (2) (A)).
- If you are a physician and you don't want the government looking over your shoulder? Tough. The Secretary of Health and Human Services is authorized to use your claims data to issue reports that measure the resources you use, provide information on the quality of care you provide, and compare the resources you use to those used by other physicians. Of course, this will all be just for informational purposes. It's not like the government will ever use it to intervene in your practice and patients' care. Of course not. (Section 3003 (i)).
- You will have to pay an additional 0.5 percent payroll tax on any dollar you make over $250,000 if you file a joint return and $200,000 if you file an individual return. What? You think you know how to spend the money you earned better than the government? Tough. (Section 9015). That amount will rise to a 3.8 percent tax in 2013 and will also apply to investment income, estates, and trusts. You think you know how to spend the money you earned better than the government? Like you need to ask. (Section 1402).

News Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE March 23, 2010

Lt. Governor Kinder Announces Action Against Federal Health Care Bill

JEFFERSON CITY – Lt. Governor Peter Kinder today spoke out against the recently signed federal health care bill and announced his intent to join officials from 13 other states in legal action against the legislation.

Below are the Lt. Governor's remarks, as prepared for delivery:

"Good afternoon.

"This morning, President Obama signed into law a federal healthcare mandate that was thrust upon us despite overwhelming opposition from Americans. Over the past few weeks, Missourians have made their voices loud and clear. But, with complete disregard for their constituents, Democrats in congress forced President Obama, Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid's legislation into law.

"This healthcare directive will pose a huge financial burden for our state. Tennessee's Governor, a democrat, even called this bill "the mother of all unfunded mandates." The true cost to Missouri taxpayers remains to be seen.

"On December 9, 2009, I wrote a letter urging Senator Claire McCaskill to oppose this government intervention in the private healthcare sector. On December 30, 2009, I asked Governor Nixon to join us in opposition to this healthcare bill. Once again, on January 20, 2010 during my State of the State response, I once again asked the governor to speak out against this infringement on the rights of Missourians. And on January 6, 2010, I asked Attorney General Koster to conduct a thorough legal review of this legislation to determine what provisions might violate the Constitution of the United State or the State of Missouri.

-MORE-

"Each one of those letters went unanswered.

"Today, Missourians should know that their voices have been heard.

"Today, I am here to announce that by my standing as a constitutional officer of the State of Missouri and by my statutory authority as Missouri's Official Senior Advocate, I intend to join with officials of 13 other states to challenge the legality of this federal healthcare bill and any unconstitutional provision in which may be contained.

"Our fight is two part: to protect the sovereignty of our states, and freedoms of our citizens. This law represents an unprecedented encroachment on the sovereignty of our state in the form of millions of dollars in unfunded mandates. Second, this bill infringes of the rights of private citizens. At no other time in the history of our nation has a mandate forced citizens to purchase a product or face penalties, even imprisonment, for not doing so.

"At a time when our state is dealing with vast budget deficits, we cannot afford to have the federal government throw this huge financial burden in our lap.

"Right now, Republicans and Democrats in the Missouri House and Senate are also working on a bipartisan measure to pass the Health Care Freedom Act, a joint resolution to be voted on by the people of Missouri to protect their ability to make their own health care decisions.

"Although many of their elected officials remain silent, Missourians should rest assured: their voices have been heard and our fight is just beginning.

"Thank you."

MEMORANDUM April 9, 2010

SUBJECT: Public policy allowing a person to choose mode of obtaining health care services, constitutional issues (CSHB 423(HSS))
(Work Order No. 26-LS1623\E)

TO: Representative Lindsey Holmes
Attn: Bill Edwards

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey
Legislative Counsel

You have asked for an opinion concerning the constitutional issues raised by CSHB 423(HSS).

The bill raises the issue of whether Congress has the power to regulate health insurance. If Congress does have that power, federal preemption under the supremacy clause of the U.S. Constitution, Art. VI, cl. 2, will be found only if there is clear evidence of a congressional intent to preempt state law or if the federal and state statutes cannot coexist. United States v. Rhode Island Insurers' Insolvency Fund, 80 F.3d 616, 619 (1st Cir. 1996).

Prior to 1944, lawyers and insurance professionals thought that the issuance of an insurance policy was not a transaction of commerce that would give the federal government jurisdiction over insurance transactions. However, in U.S. v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 88 L.Ed. 1440, 64 S.Ct. 1162 (1944) (superseded by statute), the U.S. Supreme Court dispelled this view and found that the federal Sherman Act (antitrust), which related only to activities in or affecting interstate commerce, applied to insurance transactions. The ruling meant that generally phrased federal statutes might also apply to the issuance of insurance policies, thereby interfering with the state regulation of insurance in unanticipated ways. Barnett Bank of Marion County v. Nelson, 517 U.S. 25, 40, 116 S.Ct. 1103, 134 L.Ed.2d 237 (1996).

In response to the holding in South-Eastern Underwriters, Congress enacted the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. 1011 - 1015, to "restore the supremacy of the States in the realm of insurance regulation." Id. The U.S. Supreme Court, however, noted that the McCarran-Ferguson Act does not apply when the conflicting federal statute "specifically relates to the business of insurance." (emphasis added) Further, the court stated that the McCarran-Ferguson Act > did not require avoiding federal pre-emption by future federal statutes that indicate through their "specific relat[ion]" to industry, and therefore, in all > likelihood, consciously intended to exert upon the insurance industry whatever pre-emptive force accompanied its law.

Id. See also, United States v. Rhode Island Insurers' Insolvency Fund, 80 F.3d 616 (1st Cir. 1996).

Based on these decisions, to the extent that the recently signed Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (P.L. 111-148) specifically regulates state insurance by requiring everyone to obtain health care insurance, the federal law would likely be found to preempt state law on the subject.

A similar conclusion follows an analysis under the Tenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution states:

> Powers reserved to states or people. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.

The Tenth Amendment protects the sovereignty of the states from intrusion of the federal government into matters of the states that are outside of the constitutional powers of the federal government and into matters that are expressly reserved to the states by the Constitution. Conversely, if a power is delegated to Congress by the Constitution, the Tenth Amendment does not protect the states from the exercise of that federal power. The federal Constitution gives Congress the power to control commerce. In light of the ruling in U.S. v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., supra, that the business of insurance is part of interstate commerce, it is reasonable to conclude that the power to regulate commerce and thus regulate insurance has been delegated to the United States Congress by the Constitution. Therefore, it seems unlikely that a court would hold that the Tenth Amendment would prevent the federal government from implementing a bill specifically regulating insurance.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

SPONSOR STATEMENT HJR 2

"Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska to avoid the use of personal pronouns and similar references that denote masculine or feminine gender in that document."

HJR-2 recognizes a significant moment in history for Alaskans, the celebration of our 50th anniversary of statehood and a celebration of our constitution.

Was it a perfect document? It has been called a model for others to follow. Is this a good time to offer changes? If so, what changes? Some say no changes should be made because of customs, culture, and religion. Our constitution refers to men but excludes references to women. Six of the fifty four signers of the original constitution were women and they did much of the work in formulating its content. There was one additional male who did not sign because he did not agree with the wording. Perhaps customs, culture, and tradition are the best reason we know to discriminate against even mentioning that women may be part of the history and culture of Alaska? Would the signers have preferred that the female gender not be mentioned or was it simply that no women occupied positions of authority and thus the female gender was omitted by accident rather than by design. If the signers were to meet today, in this building, in this very room, today at this meeting, would they still prefer to omit constitutional references to women?

Consider the following changes incorporated into our language.
When appropriate we refer to our chairman as madam chair.
We call our public safety heroes firefighters, not firemen, our policemen are referred to as police officers, and we fly with flight attendants, not stewardesses.

We have a female governor, twelve female legislators, several female commissioners, and many female judges not to mention our female chief justice Dana Fabe, all busy doing the work of the people yet in our state constitution, they are referred to as he and him.

The Constitution of the State of Alaska should be gender blind not gender specific.
By allowing the citizens to vote for these simple changes we join six other states that have amended their constitutions for this same reason.

This amendment does not alter the rights, powers, or privileges enumerated in the constitution. It merely replaces the masculine terms such as him or his with gender neutral terms. In place of such words as he, him, and himself we change the term to oneself, Governor, executive, justice or judge, voter, person's, auditor, and even accused.

It is time to recognize that women are active in our government by amending our constitution to reflect that they serve as an equal partner in our government affairs. Hawaii, our youngest state, and New York, one of our oldest, have already made the changes requested for Alaska.

The administration fully supports this effort.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

WBASNY URGES SUPPORT OF □GENDER-NEUTRAL□ CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON THE NOVEMBER 6 BALLOT

On March 10, 2001, the WBASNY Board voted to support legislation to place on the ballot a referendum to amend the New York Constitution to make it gender-neutral. The bill was sponsored by Assemblywoman Sandra Galef (Democrat) and by State Senator Patricia McGee (Republican). It passed both houses of the Legislature for the second consecutive year, as required, by unanimous vote, and the referendum will be on the ballot on November 6, 2001. WBASNY strongly supports passage of this proposed amendment to the New York State Constitution. If the amendment passes, New York will become the seventh state with a gender-neutral Constitution. Eight other states are considering similar amendments, and two other states have gender-neutral sections in their Constitutions.

At the request of Assemblywoman Galef and Victoria Lutz, Executive Director of the Pace Women□s Justice Center, Westchester Women□s Bar Association President Kathy N. Rosenthal and the Co-Chairs of the WWBA Legislative Committee (Jeanne M. Frey, Susan W. Kaufman and Loriann Vita) met with Assemblywoman Galef, Ms. Lutz and others to discuss how to inform voters that the referendum is to be on the ballot and is worthy of strong support. Assemblywoman Galef is seeking the active support of WBASNY and its chapters in this effort.

The proposal would change the approximately 170 references to males in the New York State Constitution either to add a female reference (i.e., □his□ becomes □his or hers□) or to use gender-neutral language (e.g., □fireman□ becomes □firefighter□). If the changes are approved, references in the New York Constitution to offices currently held by women (such as that of Lieutenant Governor, held by Mary O. Donohue; that of Chief Justice, held by Judith Kaye; and state legislative offices, 46 of which are currently held by women) would henceforth be described in gender-neutral terms.

WBASNY believes that there is great symbolic benefit to be gained by passage of the referendum. By including female references in the State Constitution, we eliminate the exclusionary symbolism of the document. We pay tribute to the substantial contributions of women such as Susan B. Anthony to the history of New York State. The change in the State Constitution would reflect the presence of women in both government and public life today, a reality that is far removed from the times in which the Constitution was written.

The possible objections to passage of the referendum are easily dismissed. Some argue that the amendment alters an historic document, ignoring the fact that there have been over 57 amendments to our state Constitution since 1938. Opponents of the proposal also criticize it as a waste of effort and tax dollars, but this is simply wrong. The ballot proposal will cost nothing. Furthermore, each year 5000 copies of the State Constitution are printed, and there would be no extra cost in time or money to include the gender-neutral changes, which are already on a computer file. The argument that the amendment is unnecessary because women have de facto equality in New York is misguided in two respects. First, the referendum is not an equal rights amendment. The amendment would not alter the rights, duties, powers or privileges enumerated in the Constitution. Second, the visible under-representation of women in political life is one indication of the continued resistance in some quarters to women□s complete equality, and the proposed amendment will help to create an atmosphere of inclusion.

It is important that WBASNY join other non-partisan professional women□s organizations to take an active role in publicizing and promoting passage of the amendment. Accordingly, WBASNY urges all members not only to look for the referendum on the ballot on November 6 and to vote in its favor, but also to write to your local newspaper editors and in other ways to communicate the importance of this matter to all voters and to other professional and women's groups statewide.

LAW & HUMAN RIGHTS

The 1999 constitution and the woman question (2)

By Joy Ngozi Ezeilo
Posted to the Web: Friday, March 10, 2006

We need to engender the language of the preamble and substitute the word 'we' with 'men' and 'women'. This will not only be gender specific but also accord with universal human rights norms that have unequivocally entrenched the principle of equality and non-Discrimination.

Chapter II on Fundamental Objectives and Directive Principles of State Policy deals with this important aspects of the Constitution outlining the political, economic, social, educational, foreign policy, environmental objectives of the Nigerian Nation. It contains also obligation of the mass media, directive on Nigerian culture, National ethics and duties of the citizen. According to section 13: It shall be the duty and responsibility of all organs of government and of all authorities and persons, exercising legislative, executive or judicial powers, to conform to, observe and apply the provisions of this Chapter of this constitution.

Section 14(1) states the fact that the Federal Republic of Nigeria shall be a state based on the principles of democracy and justice; and also recognize the fact that sovereignty belongs to the people, whereas section 14(3) entrenches what is now known as federal character.

A careful perusal of all the sections of this chapter reveals total gender blindness. Most of these provisions presented an ideal opportunity to be gender specific adopting men and women or genderless/gender neutral terms like "Everyone" "all persons" etc.

For example section 14(2) (b) which stipulates that "the security and welfare of the people shall be the primary purpose of government" should have used a gendered language that would read:

" the security and welfare of men and women shall be....

Further, the principle of federal character entrenched in the Nigerian Constitution is in effect an affirmative action provision and therefore ought to have extended its application based on gender. The most disappointing is the fact that the lofty ideals contained in this part are non-justiciable.

The Judicial Powers vested in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Section (c) shall not, except as to whether any law or any judicial decision is in conformity with the Fundamental Objectives and Directive Principles of State Policy set out in Chapter 11 of this Constitution".

The rights recognized under this Chapter of the constitution are basically socio-economic rights considered to be of paramount importance to women. Therefore, making these important provisions unenforceable has enormous implications for women's human rights.

The resource argument is the most advanced for making the ECOSOC rights non justiciable. I submit that these arguments no longer hold true. What it cost Nigeria to democratize (including all the aborted transitions) would have been enough to eradicate poverty in all its forms in Nigeria. Further, the indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of these rights - Civil and Political and Economic, Social and Cultural rights have now crystallized.

For example, right to education falls within civil and political as well as socio-economic rights. What lack of education means for women is early marriage, harmful traditional practices, lack of self-determination all leading to socio-economic underdevelopment of women and girls. The trend in most recent constitutions is to recognize these ESC rights and make them justiciable.

Further, there is need to expand the content of substantive rights in Chapter II to include pre-natal and post natal medical care for women, right to work, right to social security amongst others.

Citizenship

The 1999 Constitution has failed to solve the problems associated with citizenship in a democratic Nigeria. The 1999 constitution recognizes only one class of nationals namely citizens of Nigeria of whom there are three categories: (i) Citizens by birth: The following persons are citizens of Nigeria by birth: Every person born in Nigeria before the date of Independence, either of whose parents or any of whose grandparents belongs or belonged to a community indigenous to Nigeria:

Every person born in Nigeria after the date of Independence either of whose parents or any of whose grandparents is a citizen of Nigeria; and Every person born outside Nigeria either of whose parents is a citizen of Nigeria.

As Professor Nwabueze noted, citizenship by birth is used in the constitution not in its generally accepted sense of citizenship derived from the circumstances of birth in a country (jus soli) but rather in a special sense of citizenship acquired automatically at birth. Birth in Nigeria by itself alone confers no citizenship; unlike in the United States and elsewhere where anybody born in the country is a citizen whether or not the parents are themselves citizens. Therefore, descent from Nigeria parents carry greater importance than birth within a country.

A parent or grand-parent of a person is deemed to be a citizen of Nigeria if at the time of the birth of that person such parent or grandparent would have possessed that status by birth if he had been alive on Octoberl, 1960. (ii) Citizenship by registration:

This second category of citizenship is provided for under section 26 and subject to the provisions of section 28. According to the provision a person may be registered as a citizen of Nigeria, if the President is satisfied that - he is a person of good characterhe has shown a clear intention of his desire to be domiciled in Nigeria and he has taken the oath of allegiance prescribed in the seventh schedule to this constitution.Importantly, it is stated in sub section (2) that the provisions of this section shall apply to - any woman who is or has been married to a citizen of Nigeria; or every person of full age and capacity born outside Nigeria any of whose grandparents is a citizen of Nigeria. The provisions of section 26 (2)(a) clearly do not apply to husbands of female Nigerian citizens. This is blatant sex discrimination that cannot be justified in any democratic society like ours. It contradicts even the constitutional provision in section 42 which prohibits sex discrimination. This provision ought to be expunged from our constitution so that Nigerian men and women can confer full residency rights to their foreign spouses.

iii. The third category is citizenship by naturalization covered by Section 27 and made subject to section 28 on dual citizenship. This need not detain us except to say that the conditions precedents for grant of citizenship by naturalization are too stringent and need to be liberalized. The required compulsory period of residence need to be reduced from 15 years to 10 years. Additionally further reduction for a period not exceeding 5 years should be allowed for foreign spouses of female Nigerians. As naturalization is now the only option for them to becoming citizens of Nigeria

Furthermore, section 28 on dual citizenship should be amended so that persons who acquired Nigerian citizenship by birth should not be required to forfeit their original nationality. Since citizenship by naturalization is also conditional upon good behaviour and could be revoked by the President, it appears incongruous to ask the person on naturalization to forfeit its original citizenship.

The most obnoxious part of this constitution dealing with citizenship is Section 29 that made provisions concerning renunciation of citizenship. Section 29(4) stipulates that for purposes of denunciation full age" means the age of eighteen years and above"any woman who is married shall be deemed to be of full age. One wonders how this very obnoxious and discriminatory provision found its way into the new constitution. It is the first time such a provision appeared in a Nigerian Constitution.

It is highly retrogressive, incompatible with modern sociology and a legalization of child marriage with its attendant consequences. This provision should be expunged forthwith from the 1999 constitution.

Finally on citizenship, I would like to suggest that we should use gender specific words. Using prepositions 'he' or 'she' to ensure that its provisions apply equally to all without distinctions on grounds of sex or gender.

Again the issue of indigeneity - an identified problem especially for women must be clarified in the constitution. Specific provisions should be entrenched outlining conditions and circumstances when a person not originally from a particular state should become or be regarded as an indigene of the place. This could be based on grounds of residence and/or marriage. Also state citizenship/indigeneity could be based on cite of labour of individual - place of work. We should also address the issue of federal centralism, which disempowers the citizens and exacerbates the indigeneity problem. The constitution needs to explicitly define state of origin and empower women disadvantaged by indigeneity policies to be an indigene of two states simultaneously. That is their state of origin at birth and their husband's state in cases where wife's state is different from that of the husband.

Fundamental Rights
This part of the constitution also called bill of rights contain classical provisions on civil and political rights the so-called first generation of rights only. Sections 33 -44 deals with substantive rights namely: -

Right to life - s. 33
Right of dignity of human person - s.34
Right to personal liberty - s.35
Right of fair hearing - s. 36
Right to private and family life - s. 37
Right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion - s. 38
Right to freedom of expression and the press - s. 39
Right to peaceful assembly and association - s. 40
Right to freedom of movement - s. 41
Right to freedom from discrimination
Right to acquire and own immovable properly anywhere in Nigeria - s. 43
Payment of compensation in case of compulsory acquisition of property - s. 44

Section 45 deals with restriction and derogation from fundamental rights and freedoms, while section 46 made provisions for its enforcement and granting of financial or legal aid to indigent citizens whose rights recognized under this Chapter have been violated.

Section 42 of the 1999 constitution seems to be the most relevant provision through which women can fight against discrimination. Although, it is not a right that can be exercised on its own alone it must be linked to violation of other substantive rights recognized in the bill of rights.

Even though section 42 may prove very useful to women, it is still not adequate. Commenting on similar provision under the 1979 (section 39) constitution, I concluded that the provisions are inadequate as it preserves equal status for women and men only in relation to laws and as far as practices, customs or other actions are concerned, there is no protection from discrimination.

In fact, item 61 on the exclusive list reinforces that thought as it excludes the federal government from making laws relating to the formation, annulment and dissolution of marriages under Islamic law. Of course, this area poses the greatest challenge to realization of women's human rights. Nigeria should adopt the trend in modern constitutions of enacting an equal opportunity clause or provision that clearly embody the equality and non-discrimination principles. Mentioning specifically men and women and not just lumping 'sex' as one of the prohibited grounds for discrimination. The language of the constitution that is supposed to advocate for equality and non-discrimination is far from being gender sensitive. The word "he" was used and given the content of that right it is arguable whether "he" here could be said to mean "she".

There is a need to enlarge the content of Chapter IV, which unlike Chapter II is enforceable. Some of the provisions in the fundamental objectives and directive principles of state policy should be transferred to this Chapter. Economic and social rights including the right to work, free choice of employment, just and favourable remuneration and trade union rights; rights to rest and leisure, right to a standard of living adequate for health and well being including right to food and shelter should part of fundamental rights and freedoms contained in chapter IV. Sexual and Reproductive health rights of women should be specifically recognized. Also, right of women and girls to inherit and succeed to their husbands or fathers property should be recognized. The 1992 Ghana Constitution recognizes this right and other specific rights for women and children.

Furthermore, we need to expand the definition of those who can bring an action to enforce the fundamental rights provision. As it stands, it may be difficult based on the application of Locus standi for persons other than those directly affected to seek redress.

IMPLEMENTATION OF TREATIES
Section 12(1) provides for implementation of treaties ratified by Nigeria. In particular, the domestic enforcement of treaties entered into by Nigeria.
According to the section 12:

(1) No treaty between the Federation and any other country shall have the force of law except to the extent to which any such treaty has been enacted by the National Assembly.
(2) The National Assembly may make laws for the Federation or any part thereof with respect to matters not included in the Exclusive Legislative List for the purpose of implementing a treaty.
(3) A bill for an Act of the National Assembly passed pursuant to the provisions of this subsection (2) of this section shall not be presented to the president for assent, and shall not be enacted unless it is ratified by majority of all the Houses of Assembly in the Federation.

As I have argued elsewhere ratified human rights treaties will be of little importance to individual's subjects of rights thereon if not applied by national judges and administrators. Nigeria adheres to the common law legal system, which adopts a dualistic approach with regard to treaty interpretations and applications. Thus, an additional Act of Parliament is required to incorporate the treaty and make it a domestic law. The process outlined in section 12(3) for incorporation of treaties are rigorous and it may be extremely difficult to domesticate human rights treaties particularly dealing with contentious issues like women's rights and children's rights.

The provisions of 1979 Constitution are relatively easier and should be readopted.

I purposely left out consideration of sections dealing with powers of the three arms of government: Executive, Legislative and Judiciary. Also Resource allocation and Federalism, not because they do not have implications for women's rights as over centralization of wealth at the center without any visible trickle down effect to women and children at the bottom of the ladder impacts on their socio-economic and legal rights. I have left them out primarily because almost all interest groups in Nigeria have over flogged the issue without a moments consideration of the gender implications of the constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria 1999 on women. The pertinent question is how can we as women hold ourselves bound by these laws that we have no voice and representation in the making?

CAUSES OF CONSTITUTIONAL EXCLUSION OF WOMEN IN NIGERIA

I want to go back to the question I raised earlier on: Why is the female gender excluded from the constitution and constitution making processes in Nigeria? Why was it impossible for us to get specific provisions for women in the constitution despite seemingly gender consciousness of Nigerian Society, work of women's rights organizations and numerical strength of women? What really went wrong?

Feminists, women's rights activists and groups have not before now participated actively in debates about a Nigerian Constitution. It is only now that we are organizing and demanding inclusion and representation in the constitution making. But as the Igbos' will say: "tabugbo" meaning that today is still early if we can begin to make the desired impact. Females who were involved in the nationalist movement were more concerned with survival of Nigerian nation than getting specific rights for women. Although, they would not have predicated that an independent Nigeria would abandon its women and adopt a very retrogressive approach to women's human rights.

The conceptualized dichotomy of public and private sphere distinctions also made it very difficult for women to feature in the political space where constitutions are debated and negotiated. The experiences of women that have made an incursion into the so-called men's space served to discourage others from making similar attempt.

Related to this is the fact that women are not in power or in decision-making positions where they can influence the political process and change the laws and policies. Women's political powerlessness means that they always have to beg, shout, fight and even cry to be included. Lack of concerted action by women's groups have also made it impossible for women to speak with one voice in lobbying and agitating for their rights particularly the right to participate in determination of issues concerning them.

Customs, culture, religion and tradition are constantly used to deny women equal status in law and practice. The same constitution that prohibits sex discrimination accords recognition to customs and tradition that discriminate against women by reason of their sex and gender. The 1999 constitution and other legal standards in Nigeria are heavily weighted against women.

RECOMMENDATIONS

From my discussion there are twelve critical issues of concern to women with regard to the 1999 constitution and Gender and Constitution Reform Network (GECORN) have articulated these as part of women's demand in the on- going constitutional review. The following recommendations outlined here focuses on those twelve critical issues:

1. THE LANGUAGE OF THE CONSTITUTION

The 1999 Constitution should be re-drafted so that the language becomes user and gender friendly. The word "he or him" should be replaced with he/she and him/her and replacing person with men and women or any person or everyone.

2. CITIZENSHIP

Section 26 (2) should be amended to confer citizenship by registration to a foreign spouse of a woman just like her male counterpart. This section should be abrogated. There is no justification for allowing an under aged woman to have a rights to revoke or renounce her citizenship if it is not expected of her male counterpart. The other implication of this is that this section could become a mischief in a country where child marriage is prevalent.

3. INDIGENESHIP
It is recommended that a Nigerian citizen that has resided in any state of the federation for a period of more than 5 years shall be entitled to all right and privileges of the state.
A Nigeria woman shall have a right to enjoy the indigeneship of both her place of origin and that of her husband.

4. DISCRIMINATION
Section 42(3), 1999 constitution is restrictive, nullifies and impairs women's rights and the rights of others and thus should be abrogated. The provision of Section 42(1) should be expanded to clearly enshrine the principle of gender equality and non- discrimination.

5. RIGHT TO DIGNITY OF WOMANHOOD

The scope of Section 34 1999 Constitution should be expanded to include protection against harmful cultural and traditional practices affecting the health and rights of women and girls and other protection from other gender based violence such as widowhood practices, female genital mutilation, forced marriage and others which have constituted a continuing threat to the lives of women in Nigeria.

6. POLITICAL RIGHTS

Political Parties structures must reflect gender balance and we therefore recommend that in line with the international commitments of the government that at least 30% affirmative measure for women in both elective and political appointive position must be guaranteed through constitutional provisions.

Independent candidacy must be encouraged to facilitate women's participation where first past the post test often place women at great disadvantage in seeking elective position.

7. REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH AND RIGHTS

Reproductive health rights has emerged as a development and Human right issue and thus should be clearly spelt out in the constitution of Nigeria to protect women and girls.

Free and qualitative ante natal and post natal care to reduce the high mortality rate and guarantee women right to safe motherhood.

Access to information and education relating to reproductive health and rights and encouraging proper understanding of maternity as a social function and the protection of motherhood and childhood.

8. ENFORCEABILITY OF SOCIO-ECONOMIC RIGHTS

Section 6 (6) (c) of the constitution should be amended to ensure accountability of government and its institutions to implementation of Chapter II of the constitution. To this end any amendment to the constitution must remove all restrictions and make it possible for all Nigerians to be able to enjoy these rights.
State Social Order: Section 19 (d) should be strengthened to include not only respect for international laws/conventions signed and agreed to, but also implementation and incorporation into National laws and adequate representation of women and men on equal basis at the international levels. The socio-economic rights enshrined in the constitution should be made enforceable.

Specific Social and Economic Rights such as right to education, health, work and adequate housing should be moved to Chapter IV containing the bill of rights

9. FEDERAL CHARACTER COMMISSION OR ESTABLISHMENT OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION?

We proposed that the Federal Character principle in Section 14 (3) be amended to include gender as one of indices for composition and conduct of affairs of government. This will ensure gender balance in political appointment as well as gender balance in composition of such body.

Establishment of Equal Opportunity Commission to replace the Federal Character Commission. The trend world wide is to have such body to monitor observance and implementation of policies and programmes to reflect gender equity and ensure social justice to all irrespective of sex, religion, ethnic group among other grounds for which discrimination is prohibited.

10. RIGHT TO INHERITANCE

It is recommended that there should be a provision guaranteeing the rights of widows and widowers to inheritance of properties jointly acquired in the absence of a will.
Female and male children should have explicitly stated rights to inheritance.

11. LAND USE ACT
The Land Use Act according to the yearnings of Nigerians should be repealed or at least amended to guarantee equal access to land and adequate compensation to men, women and the poor.

12. WOMEN WITH DISABILITIES
We recommend that the provision of Chapter IV of the constitution should specifically address the rights of people with disabilities especially the needs of women within that category.

CONCLUSION
That law is gender blind and of course gender bias is truly reflected in previous constitutions of Nigeria, in particular the 1999 constitution. These constitutions have shown virtually no recognition that sex or gender can be a significant dimension in defining the substantive contents of individual rights or that it can affect the choice of methods that must be adopted by states to ensure that all individuals within their jurisdiction enjoy these rights equally.

Maintenance of distinctions and categorization of rights in the 1999 constitution are major set back to women's rights in Nigeria. The most important rights -if we are to prioritize are made non-justiciable. Yet poverty and violence of all sorts are the most pervasive violations of women's rights.

Civilized sociology requires that in a democratic society where democratic values holds sway; we should recognize gender issues which has assumed same importance as ethnicity and religion and would therefore play a major role and impact whether negatively or positively on the democratization process.
However, the woman or gender questions if addressed will play an important role in peace and unity of this country. As a Nigerian woman for example, I have multiple identities - an Igbo, a woman, Christian and a southerner. But my gender identity is of more important consideration to me than my ethnic identity. The reason is that no ethnic group has been found to be most benevolent to women - according them rights and privileges deserved.

Therefore, that a woman (very gender sensitive) becomes president of Nigeria holds a better prospect for me as a woman and I think majority of women will support such candidature irrespective of whether she is - Hausa, Tiv, Ijaw, Yoruba, Efik, Urhobo, Ogoni, Igala or an Igbo woman. I see women not because we belong to the same gender as the only groups that can come together across party, ethnic, and religious divide because they are able to see a commonality of purpose that transcends their differences.
For sustainability of our nascent democracy, a peaceful Nigeria, we need to take into account gender matters. Modern constitutions of other African countries namely: - South Africa, Ghana, Uganda, Eritrea, Malawi to mention but a few have specific provisions on women and children. This simply recognized the fact that motherhood and childhood deserve special protection. The important fact is that colonialism, imperialism, debt crisis, food crisis, water crisis; environmental issues impact especially and differently on women and their children.

Nigeria is very much part of the globalized world and cannot afford to be going backward when sister countries are forward looking. Its constitution needs to reflect the international obligations it has undertaken, particularly, to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women. A consultative process to broaden and deepen the contributions of the Nigerian women to constitutional reform/making should be initiated and sustained by all those concerned with promotion and protection of women. The civil society organizations should take the lead in creating awareness, educating and mobilizing support for women's participation in constitution making, general governance and development initiatives taking place in the Country.

In conclusion, I wish to posit that the 1999 constitution should be amended to reflect the gender composition of Nigeria protecting women as full citizens with rights also applicable to their male counterparts. The review has presented an ideal opportunity to give visibility to women's concerns for both participation and adequate protection in proposed constitutional amendments. Nigerians should work towards giving themselves a new grundnorm with full participation of women and all stakeholders to make a constitution that will come into force before the next general election in 2007.

Gender democracy, evidenced by the balanced participation of women and men, is considered a cornerstone of democratic development. The empowerment and autonomy of women and the improvement of women's social, economic, and political status is essential for the achievement of both transparent and accountable government as well as sustainable constitutional democracy and development in all areas of life. Although Nigeria has finally transited from military rule to civil rule, it has to take steps to ensure participation of all stakeholders especially women who will in collaboration with men work towards a sustainable democracy fore grounded on constitutionalism.

Six State Constitutions Use Gender-Neutral Wording

Run Date: 12/09/01

By Darryl McGrath
WEnews correspondent

Six states adopted gender-neutral language in their constitutions; eight others are considering the change. Advocates say gender-neutral language is a subtle but important way to promote equality; critics call it empty, feel-good, demeaning to women.

Sandy Galef

ALBANY, N.Y. (WOMENSENEWS)--A recent New York state referendum that will change the state constitution wording to gender-neutral language is part of a growing awareness of the power of language and the role it plays in promoting equality.

Advocates of gender-neutral language say that it is a subtle and often overlooked aspect of equality, but so pervasive that it affects everyday thinking in the workplace, home and government. Critics say the push for gender-neutral language is an unnecessary and even frivolous effort that distracts attention and drains resources from more pressing issues.

Still, a heightened awareness of gender-neutral language is evident in universities, institutional training programs and everyday conversation.

"I can't think of a more important time for this issue than right now," said Judith Barlow, a professor of English and acting chair of the women's studies department at the State University of New York in Albany. "There are going to be great changes in Afghanistan, that for several years has barely acknowledged women." Using language that erases women by only mentioning men absolutely sends the wrong message, she added.

The change in the New York State Constitution takes place immediately and will appear as soon as new copies are printed, an annual process. In most cases, the words "he" and "him" will be replaced with "he or she" and "him or her," but other changes will also be made. All references to the governor as "he" will become "the governor" and references to a "fireman" in a section dealing with civil service employees will become "firefighter."

That change reflects the decades-long efforts by women's scholars and others to change usage from gender-specific terms to gender-neutral terms, or terms that don't denote marital status. Examples from the 1970s and 1980s include police officer instead of policeman; chair instead of chairman; flight attendant instead of stewardess; and Ms. as an alternative to Mrs. or Miss. Advocates say that other, more recent terms, such as "humankind" instead of "mankind" are gradually gaining acceptance into modern terminology.

Six States Have Changed Wording: Eight Considering Changes

New York follows the example of several other states that have either changed their state constitutions to gender-neutral language or are considering doing so. Some states are also considering applying gender-neutral requirements to the wording of new legislation and the revision of current law.

Or, in Rhode Island's case, returning to old language. A research project undertaken by the state's Commission on Women recently brought to light the 1663 charter to the Rhode Island colony granted by King Charles II of England. The document is noteworthy for using many gender-neutral phrases instead of the male-oriented phrases that would be expected, said Jane Anthony, chair of the commission. The most prominent example cited by Anthony: a phrase that states "no person within the said colony, at any time hereafter shall be any wise molested, punished, disquieted, or called in question."

"It seems somewhat ironic," Anthony said, "that you find your first official document had nonspecific language, which was quite unusual at that time, and then centuries later, you had people making a conscious choice not to use nonspecific gender language."

New York voters approved the change in the language of the state constitution in last month's general election. The campaign for the referendum unfolded with little public debate, and 56 percent of the voters approved the measure.

The change in New York started four years ago with a bill introduced by state Assembly member Sandy Galef, a Democrat from the town of Ossining, about an hour's drive north of New York City.

N.Y. Lawmaker: Language Change Shows Others Women Are Valued

"You could say it's symbolic, but I think words are very important," Galef said. "What we say, how we say it, sends a message. We changed the term 'stewardess' to 'flight attendant' and that changed the image. I think symbolically it's important for us to show other countries that we value women."

The bill eventually gained bipartisan support, unanimously passing both the Republican-controlled state Senate and the Democratic-controlled Assembly. With legislative support secured, the change was ready for the referendum. Since the constitution is reprinted annually and distributed by the Secretary of State's office, there will be no significant or special cost to taxpayers, Galef said.

She touched on Barlow's theme of international perceptions in describing why she pushed for gender-neutral language in the state constitution, which dates to 1777 and had 170 references to the male gender and no references to the female gender. Her staff's research revealed that six other states--California, Hawaii, Maine, Rhode Island, Vermont and Florida--have changed their constitutions to gender-neutral language, and eight are considering such a change: Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nevada, Nebraska, New Hampshire and Wyoming.

The Conservative Party of New York was one of the most vocal opponents of the referendum, issuing a written statement of opposition and speaking out through its leadership against the effort, specifically in New York and in society in general.

"We were opposed to it before Sept. 11, but Sept. 11 highlighted that with all the things that have to be done in the state of New York, here the legislature spent time on something that did absolutely nothing for anyone," said Michael Long, the Conservative Party state chair. "It's just another example of what I guess one could consider 'feel good' legislation. Male and female legislators could not pass a budget on time, yet they could this. Shame on them."

Conservatives: Women Losers When Language Obscures Femininity

Long said women will lose more than they gain by pressing for language that obscures their femininity, in a world where women are often treated poorly.

"I do believe women sometimes have to be treated a little special," he said. "They haven't always been treated correctly, but I hope they would always be treated special."

Those working to change the thinking about male-dominant language agree that it can be difficult for people of either gender to push for such changes.

Sherryl Kleinman, a sociology professor at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, has gained recognition for her campaign to eliminate the expression "you guys" from spoken language when the phrase describes a mixed-gender group. She knows she has an uphill battle when she hears a student in her gender class tell the group of 35 women and five men, "You guys, I have an announcement."

A year ago, Kleinman published a commentary entitled, "Good-bye 'You Guys'" in New York Newsday. In it, she mused about the origin of the expression and suggested that it came into common usage about the same time feminists started pushing for changes in official language.

In Popular Speech, 'You Guys' Refers to Both Women and Men

"So when did you 'you guys' sneak by and then sneak in?" Kleinman wrote. "I suspect it entered the scene around the time that official titles like 'chairman' were being challenged. You can push the provost to change freshman to first-year student or complain to publishers about their use of congressman in text books. But you can't go to court to make your friends stop using 'you guys.'"

Sherryl Kleinman

Kleinman and two former students have designed a card that publicizes the effort to eliminate "you guys" from spoken language, which can be handed out to explain the campaign "in a way that doesn't scold people," she wrote in her Newsday article.

The wallet-sized card has an illustration in the form of a mathematical equation, showing three women being added with one man and forming "you guys." The text sets up the illustration, reading in part, "Imagine someone walking up to a group of guys and saying, 'Hey, girls, how're ya doing?' We doubt they'd be amused! So isn't it weird that women are supposed to accept--even like--being called 'one of the guys'?"

Kleinman said the struggle for women to assert gender-neutral language can be likened to the efforts of African Americans to reject "Negro" and claim "black" in the 1960s, or the acceptance of "gay" in print and broadcast media instead of "homosexual."

"The struggle is harder when it comes to sexist language because, unlike blacks, for example, in relation to whites, most women seek intimate relationships with men, for emotional and economic reasons," Kleinman said. "This intimacy can be threatened when women make issues out of language habits that so many people take for granted."

Women, Men Pressured Not to Raise Issue of Gender-Neutral Language

Women's studies professor Barlow recalled a recent faculty meeting about the search for a new dean of the college of arts and sciences. A male department chair made repeated use of male gender terms, saying of the as-yet-unidentified candidate for the dean's post that "he should know how to do this," and "he should have this experience."

"It was very glaring; it was certainly noted by people around me," Barlow recalled. But no one spoke up, she added.

"I think men and women have different reasons for being silent in this situation," said Jackson Katz, a nationally known expert on the prevention of gender-based violence, who has lectured and conducted training sessions at universities and military bases domestically and abroad.

For many women, Katz said, "they don't want to be creating conflict; they want to be creating cohesion. I think a lot of women just shuffle papers uneasily but go on. But the silence comes at a cost. The cost is frustration and loss of self-respect."

Jackson Katz

For men who want to speak up but are reluctant to do so, "there are very few models of men doing that kind of thing in public, much less private," Katz said. "You're not a team player--'What are you, one of those sensitive New Age guys?'"

Katz sees a dangerous flip side to gender-specific language, when sexual violence or teen pregnancy are almost always described in terms of the female gender. Rape statistics are usually presented in terms of how many thousands of women a year are raped, but rarely in terms of how many thousands of men a year commit rape. Teen pregnancies are couched in terms of how many teens become pregnant each year, but rarely in terms of how many boys or men a year impregnate teen-agers.

Advocates of gender-neutral language say they have a long way to go before gaining full acceptance in the culture of the United States, but many are persisting in their efforts to educate people.

Matt Ezzell is the coordinator of community education at the Orange County Rape Crisis Center in Chapel Hill, N.C. He stresses the use of gender-neutral language in training sessions.

"The first time we say something about it in our training group, they're surprised, they don't want to discuss it," Ezzell said. He persists, because he went through a similar awakening a few years ago and knows that most people will be receptive to the change once they think about it.

"It was like a lightbulb," said Ezzell, who majored in women's studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, describing the time in college that he first heard someone else talk about language that constantly refers to the dominant male gender. "And it took me about a year to purge it from my language, that's how pervasive it was."

Darryl McGrath is a journalist in Albany, N.Y., who writes often on politics and child welfare issues.

MEMORANDUM March 23, 2009

SUBJECT: Draft CSHJR 2(JUD), combining HJR 2 (substitution of gender neutral material for personal pronouns in the state constitution) and HJR 13 (correcting obsolete references to the office of secretary of state) (Work Order No. 26-LS0065\E)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Jack Chenoweth
Assistant Revisor

I would be remiss if I did not caution you that combining HJR 13 and HJR 2 into a single vehicle for proposing constitutional changes is not without risk.

The Alaska Supreme Court has decided that each proposal for constitutional amendments must be confined to a single subject. Bess v. Ulmer, 985 P.2d 979 (Alaska 1999). Through fifty years of Statehood, the court has upheld very broad subjects in cases construing the single-subject requirement that applies to bills changing statutes; however, there have been no other cases, apart from Bess, that shed light on the scope of a single subject for the purposes of proposed constitutional amendments. While there is, in the view of some in this office, a reasonably good chance that the court, if confronted with a challenge questioning a constitutional amendment proposal that combines HJR 2 and HJR 13, would conclude that the proposal is encompassed in the single subject of technical, nonsubstantive amendments, there are some of us who believe otherwise.

For those of us who are skeptics, we view as potentially persuasive that the existing constitutional authority by which the legislature may "sidestep" the "single subject" rule for statutes and combine unrelated material into, for example, one revisor's bill is an exception that is expressed in terms of "revising" laws. The applicable constitutional provision, the single subject rule of article II, section 13, reads in relevant part:

> Form of Bills. Every bill shall be confined to one subject unless it is an appropriation bill or one codifying, revising, or rearranging existing laws. . . . .

Moreover, the constitution itself elsewhere draws a line between "amendment" and "revision". Under article XIII, section 1,[1] amendments, but not revisions, are properly a matter for the legislature, while revisions, under article XIII, section 4, are to be considered by a constitutional convention.[2]

If, in a challenge, the court should decide that "revising" in the context of statutory amendments (its article II, section 13 meaning that supports the revisor's bill and similar recodification efforts) carries the same connotation as "revise" in the context of constitutional change (under article XIII's provisions), then it could readily conclude that constitutional "revisions" -- multiple changes within the body of the document that are an exception to the single subject rule -- are properly the prerogative only of a constitutional convention and may not be adopted and presented as "amendments" by the legislature.

In summary, the safer course would be for HJR 2 and HJR 13 to be submitted to the people to consider as separate proposals.

[1] The text of the section reads:

> Amendments. Amendments to this constitution may be proposed by a two-thirds vote of each house of the legislature. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing each proposed amendment, and shall place them on the ballot for the next general election. If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor the amendment, it shall be adopted. Unless otherwise provided in the amendment, it becomes effective thirty days after the certification of the election returns by the lieutenant governor.

[2] The text of this section reads:

> Powers. Constitutional conventions shall have plenary power to amend or revise the constitution, subject only to ratification by the people. No call for a constitutional convention shall limit these powers of the convention.

SPONSOR STATEMENT: HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 3

While some Alaskans may consider gambling to be a harmless pastime, many underestimate the costs in dollars and human suffering associated with it. House Joint Resolution 3 would amend Alaska's Constitution to require an affirmative vote of the people before any form of gambling for profit may be authorized in Alaska.

Studies show that about 2.5 million Americans are pathological gamblers, and another 3 million are problem gamblers. These compulsive gamblers have high rates of suicide, depression, mania, alcohol and drug abuse, and arrest rates. According to the American Insurance Institute, gambling is the main cause of white collar crime, and is the third leading cause of individual bankruptcy in America.

Though the human suffering caused by compulsive gambling may be borne by a minority of the population, the overall economic and social costs are shared by all. Before expanding gambling in our state, it is imperative that the voice of Alaskans be heard. I respectfully ask for your support of HJR 3

Sectional Analysis: House Joint Resolution 3

Section # 1 Amends the Alaska Constitution requiring a vote of the people before any for profit gaming or gambling may be authorized in Alaska. The amendment does not prohibit or restrict nonprofit gaming currently permitted by law.

Section # 2 Require the proposed amendment to be placed before the voters at the next general election.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

MEMORANDUM February 12, 2009

SUBJECT: Effect of HJR 3 on Cruise Ship Gaming
(Work Order No. 26-LS0128\R)

TO: Representative Harry Crawford

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have asked if HJR 3 would have any effect on gaming currently conducted aboard cruise ships in Alaska. It is my opinion that HJR 3 would not have an effect on gaming currently conducted aboard cruise ships. Cruise ship gaming is conducted pursuant to federal law and not state law.[1] The federal law was enacted in response to public statements made in the early 1990's by the administration of former Governor Wally Hickel questioning the authority of cruise ships to conduct gambling activities while in Alaska waters and asserting that the state would no longer allow those activities to occur. The legislature considered a bill to allow cruise ships to conduct gambling activities in Alaska and allowed a temporary exception for cruise ships for one season.[2]

THE SALVATION ARMY

DOING THE MOST GOOD™

Office of the Divisional Commander

January 29, 2007

The Honorable Nancy Dahlstrom
The Honorable Harry Crawford
Alaska House of Representatives
State Capitol, Juneau, AK 99801-1182

RE: Proposed Gambling Constitutional Amendment

I recently learned of your intent to sponsor a constitutional amendment this legislative session to prohibit for-profit gambling in Alaska and wanted to express my appreciation for your leadership in addressing this important issue.

In other areas of the country where legalized gambling is welcomed, The Salvation Army has seen firsthand the impact and destruction caused in the lives of many who chase after the promise of riches and end up caught in the snare of addictive lifestyles. In Las Vegas, for instance, The Salvation Army recently expanded its Adult Rehabilitation Program for substance abusing adults to treat individuals with gambling addictions. In the short time the program has been open, they have documented that close to fifty percent of those who experience alcohol/drug addictions are also addicted to (or at significantly higher risk) for co-addictive behaviors, including gambling.

In Alaska, where we have some of the highest rates of substance abuse per capita in the nation, it is encouraging to know we have legislators like yourselves, ready to step forward and tackle these tough issues.

Thank you again, for your leadership. Know that I continue to pray God's blessing upon you as you serve the people of Alaska.

God bless you.

Sincerely,

Douglas Tollerud, Major
Divisional Commander
Alaska Division

Testimony for HJR3

Dear Representatives,

Thank you for taking the time to read my testimony today.

This letter is in regards to gambling and my family's experience.

My mother became addicted to gambling. She had always been against gambling before and had no addictions to anything but smoking. She worked for what she had, believed in God, raised us kids as best as she knew how.

What opened the door for her she shared with me was she became depressed because her mother passed away. She was also feeling rejected by people who were near and dear to her. My step dad took her to a casino to "lift her spirits" and get her mind off her troubles.

At first it was all for fun and in control. It took a few years to become addicted for her, but it happened none the less. Addiction to gambling is very real and this is why it's so dangerous to bring to Alaska.

Once she was addicted, she had to gamble and get the money anyway she could. I asked her, "what made it so addicting?"

She replied, "it was always bright and friendly, good food, free drinks, great service, driven to get back the money lost from the last gambling experience, and to basically get away from the world."

My mom and step dad exhausted the payday loan stores, wrote bad checks and eventually towards the end, stole from their job.

I was visiting my sister when we got the call from my mom. Her boss found out about the theft, my mom was terminated and evicted from where she was living. She was also facing possible jail time. Everyone including us who love my parents had to scramble to raise money to quickly pay her boss to keep her out of jail. We had to get her stuff and get her out that day from where she lived. It was horrible. Here my mom at 48 yrs. old was losing everything she had worked for because of a gambling addiction. That was just the beginning. They had to pay back the payday loan stores, the banks, the casinos and all the people that loaned them money. The total bill was $27,000. They couldn't find work so they had to settle for odd jobs and sometimes working in dangerous conditions or areas. They stayed at weekly motels and lived on McDonald's dollar meals. Every day was a complete struggle. Every minute of every day to rebuild their life. They finally filed bankruptcy, but they have to pay that back as well.

All this took place about 3 yrs. ago and they are still rebuilding from it all. The good news is that my mom is totally free from gambling addiction. She wanted me to write this to you because she didn't want anyone else to got through what she's been through.

During her gambling experiences she met many other people who also were addicted to gambling and so my mom shared with me some of the effects and tragedies of their lives. Here is a list of what she saw:

1. Children pay the highest price. Many times people divorce because of gambling or they leave for days at a time leaving the children to fend for themselves or with a caretaker who is not very responsible. The children are vulnerable to molesting, rape, abuse, poor eating habits, poor school grades or no attendance at all, kidnapping and sometimes even death. The parents simply aren't there to protect and take care of them.
2. Divorce is really common with gamblers. If a spouse becomes addicted, they may and many times do drain the savings account, and also sometimes bounce checks or they're late on paying bills, mortgage or rent. It's very stressful on marriage to say the least.

May. 9. 2007 4:48PM

3. My mom met people who were stealing to gamble occasionally. But what's really sad is when she met a small business owner who had to close up his business because of addicted gamblers who stole thousands from him.
4. Bankruptcy increases and that's hard on the public as a whole.

Final Statement

I have done my own research regarding gambling and it's a known fact that anyone who already has an addiction problem or has relatives with addictions is more likely to become addicted to gambling. In my love for Alaska I feel compelled to mention that Alaska has one of the highest drinking and drug addiction problems in the U.S. from what I've heard and read. Which, if this is true, means if gambling were introduced to Alaska, it could be devastating. If you also include long, dark, winters and the depression problems, I can't even imagine what would happen 10-20 yrs. down the road. If a casino were to open please consider the following:

May. 9. 2007 4:48PM

1. Increase funding to Child Protective Services programs and foster homes because the children will need you to help them.
2. Provide marriage counseling and addiction counseling programs for free to the public.

Again I thank you so much for your time. May God bless you with His wisdom.

Subject: Presbytery of Alaska on HJR 2 -- For Profit Gambling Amendment

I am sorry but due to other obligations I am unavaliable to attend the hearing on HJR 2 this afternoon.

However, on behalf of the Presbytery of Alaska I would note that we have always opposed increased gambling within Alaska, and would support any effort to ensure that such increases do not occur.

We particularly appreciate that this proposal, if approved by the legislature and adopted by the people, would permit the entire state to be a direct party to the decision making process of enhanced gambling.
We understand that some communities may believe that permitting gambling within their bounds may provide benefit to them, but we believe that even if that is the case, that doing this will provide greater costs, both financial and social to the state as a whole. It is only just and proper therefore to allow the whole state to have a voice in that decision.

I thank the Committee for their consideration of this matter, and thank the sponsors for bringing this bill forward.

Guy Warren Stated Clerk
Presbytery of Alaska

Facts about Gambling and Addiction

- Yes, it is addictive.

"Gambling is an addictive behavior, make no mistake about it . . . Gambling has all the properties of a psychoactive substance, and again, the reason is that it changes the neurochemistry of the brain." [1]

The National Gambling Impact Commission found that following a decade of expansion in the 1990's, the national lifetime compulsive gambling population had grown by at least 50%, to no less than 1.2% based on the most conservative of its source studies. [2] It also discovered a significant trend indicating addiction had doubled in many populations within 50 miles of casinos. [3]

Probable pathological gambling in Nevada in 2000 measured 3.5% and the prevalence of problem gambling added 2.9% for a total of 6.4%. Other cited states ranged from 2.1% in North Dakota in 2000 to 4.9% in Mississippi in 1996. [4]

The American Psychiatric Association notes the diversity of pathological gambling rates in its diagnostic manual. "Community studies estimate the lifetime prevalence of pathological gambling to range from 0.4% to 3.4% in adults, although prevalence rates in some areas (e.g., Puerto Rico, Australia) have been reported to be as high as 7%. Higher prevalence rates, ranging from 2.8% to 8% have been reported in adolescents and college students." [5] Those differences illustrate the effects of demographics, proximity and diversity of gambling opportunities.

- Proximity matters. So do culture, disadvantage and demographics.

Researchers at the National Opinion Research Center combined data from a national telephone survey with data from a casino patron survey and found that adults living within 50 miles of a casino had double the probability of pathological or problem gambling. [6]

Poverty, lower education level and other social and economic factors can effect gambling addiction, and they can be accelerated by the proximity of gambling outlets. "Neighborhood disadvantage shows . . . a strong positive effect on frequency of gambling and pathological or problem gambling. For every increase of one standard deviation in neighborhood disadvantage the odds of being a pathological or problem gambler increase by 69%. . . . A casino within 10 miles of home is associated with a 90% increase in the odds of being a pathological or problem gambler." [7]

In short, the presence of gambling opportunities is likely to double the prevalence of problem and pathological gamblers, and the addition of other contributing factors may increase the addiction rate exponentially.

For example, 93% of a group of Southeast Asian refugees in a Connecticut study had gambled in the previous two months, and more than half were said to be pathological gamblers. [8]

Clear across the nation, casinos find 60% to 70% of table game customers and 20% to 25%

Tide of gambling yields backwash of addiction

by Carl G. Bechtold

for the National Coalition Against Legalized Gambling
Rev. 08/21/04

The risk of gambling is not so much in losing ones money, but rather the danger of losing control of ones life. Like other substances and activities which become addictive, games of chance too often turn on their players and transform frivolity into a nightmare. Collectively, the pattern is predictable, as each tide of gambling expansion leaves a backwash of addiction, pulling under an ever-growing wave of Americans.

In ways and in individuals that few would suspect, gambling can and does become addictive. Gambling addiction is listed among the psychological disorders recognized by the American Psychiatric Association. In 1995, Howard J. Shaffer, PhD., of the Harvard Medical School Division on Addictions reported, "Gambling is an addictive behavior, make no mistake about it . . . Gambling has all the properties of a psychoactive substance, and again, the reason is that it changes the neurochemistry of the brain." [1]

Gambling causes excitement, often leading the participant to forget about outside problems and the stresses of everyday life. Electronic gambling devices in particular offer a seemingly non-competitive diversion from reality. Gambling establishments usually serve and often encourage the use of alcoholic beverages, which further loosens players' inhibitions. The games themselves are made to satisfy the demands of excitement; and the ensuing "loss of control" is part of the "enjoyable" experience of gambling.[2]

Gambling environments, specifically within casinos, are scientifically and socially designed to transport players beyond the realm of rational decisions. Presentations by one prominent international researcher concluded, ". . . strong emotional/physiological responses during a session of play is a natural human experience. The expectation that the player will be able to continue to make controlled, informed, rational decisions during such a session of continuous gambling is ill-founded."[3]

Even the best intentioned gamblers, the majority of whom say they set limits of how much they intend to lose, often find themselves "out of control." "When regular players are recruited in gaming venues (no other selection criteria) 43% "sometimes", "often" or "always" experience an irresistible urge to continue a session of play once they have started," the study concludes.

Though most gamblers are not "hooked," some begin to gamble well beyond reason or their financial ability. These players fit the classic definition of addiction, which is, "The compulsive use of a substance or activity resulting in physical, psychological, or social harm to the user; (and) the user continues in this pattern of behavior despite the harms that result."[4]

Much has been made of the "co-morbidity" of addictions, or the apparent tendency of victims to have multiple addictions or emotional and mental problems. The gambling industry has repeatedly attempted to dismiss gambling addiction as just another symptom of broader psychological problems among victims. That argument is specious and largely irrelevant, since harm would not befall victims if gambling were not available, in much the same way that lung cancer would occur far less if tobacco were not available. The fact is, gambling is addictive to a significant number of Americans, and that addiction afflicts an increasing number of victims as technology changes and the prevalence and proximity of gambling increase.

HISTORY provides some background for consideration of gambling addiction. The United States is in its third historic wave of gambling. The first two occurred in the Revolutionary and Civil War eras. Gambling was sanctioned and often sponsored by government to pay for war costs and civic improvements, and has historically intensified during times of economic stress. Both earlier eras ended when corruption and social costs persuaded the states to criminalize gambling.

In 1900, there was virtually no legalized gambling in the United States. After several decades of "abstinence," America first ventured back into gambling with its legalization in Nevada in 1931. Government first sponsored gambling in the modern era as New Hampshire initiated a state-run lottery in 1963. In 1976 New Jersey opened Atlantic City to gambling. In 1988, Congress passed the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, providing gambling financiers a means of using tribes to penetrate states where gambling had been illegal. As the 1990's began, the floodgates opened.

[4] http://www.hms.harvard.edu/doa/research_education.htm#institute

In 1994, Congress realized gambling was growing out of control and authorized the National Gambling Impact Study Commission (NGISC), which published its findings in 1999.

Among the commission's findings was a number which could be reasonably used as a "background" level for compulsive gambling. The commission cited reports of between 0.6 and 0.9% of Americans were present or "past year" compulsive gamblers.[5]

In 1976, when only Nevada and a few scattered pari-mutuel tracks offered legal gambling, a widely quoted study by the University of Michigan showed just 0.77% of Americans, were then or had been pathological gamblers in their lifetimes.[6]

The commission found that following a decade of expansion in the 1990's, the national lifetime compulsive gambling population had grown by at least 50%, to no less than 1.2% based on the most conservative of its source studies.[7] The gambling industry's own addiction study organization admits to a 1.1% current pathology level in the U.S. and Canada.[8]

The NGISC also discovered a significant trend indicating addiction had doubled in many populations within 50 miles of casinos.[9]

The commission unanimously recommended the nation "pause" the expansion of legalized gambling until the social and economic impacts could be better understood. Their findings were almost universally ignored.[10]

At this writing, there are gambling opportunities in all states except Utah and Hawaii with 443 commercial casinos operating in 11 states, plus racetrack casinos in six states.[11] Indian casinos comprise the fastest growing segment with 354 casinos in 28 states.[12] With government sanction and sponsorship of gambling, the vice has been gaining in prevalence and acceptability.[13]

Gaining, too, are the number of addicts and their associated social costs.

MATURE MARKETS provide a reasonable reference for what all of America could become if the trend were to continue. Australia has saturated its market with Electronic Gambling Machines, (EGM's) which they call "pokies," and parts of Canada have also had extensive experience with gambling. In the United States, Nevada and the cities of Las Vegas and Atlantic City provide some frame of reference.

Probable pathological gambling in Nevada in 2000 measured 3.5% and the prevalence of problem gambling added 2.9% for a total of 6.4%. Other cited states ranged from 2.1% in North Dakota in 2000 to 4.9% in Mississippi in 1996. [14]

The American Psychiatric Association notes the diversity of pathological gambling rates in its diagnostic manual. "Community studies estimate the lifetime prevalence of pathological gambling to range from 0.4% to 3.4% in adults, although prevalence rates in some areas (e.g., Puerto Rico, Australia) have been reported to be as high as 7%. Higher prevalence rates, ranging from 2.8% to 8% have been reported in adolescents and college students."[15] Those differences illustrate the effects of demographics, proximity and diversity of gambling opportunities.

Researchers at the National Opinion Research Center combined data from a national telephone survey with data from a casino patron survey and found that adults living within 50 miles of a casino had double the probability of pathological or problem gambling.[16]

Poverty, lower education level and other social and economic factors can affect gambling addiction, and they can be accelerated by the proximity of gambling outlets.

"Neighborhood disadvantage shows . . . a strong positive effect on frequency of gambling and pathological or problem gambling. For every increase of one standard deviation in neighborhood disadvantage the odds of being a pathological or problem gambler increase by 69%. . . . A casino within 10 miles of home is associated with a 90% increase in the odds of being a pathological or problem gambler."[17]

It is clear that establishing casinos in areas already troubled with alcohol and poverty will have a devastating effect on an already struggling population.

In short, the presence of gambling opportunities is likely to double the prevalence of problem and pathological gamblers, and the addition of other contributing factors may increase the addiction rate exponentially.

For example, 93% of a group of Southeast Asian refugees in a Connecticut study had gambled in the previous two months, and more than half were said to be pathological gamblers.[18] Clear across the nation, casinos find 60% to 70% of table game customers and 20% to 25% of their slot players are Asians, despite the fact they comprise only 9% of the population.[19]

TECHNOLOGY is also driving addiction rates as gambling venues compete to attract customers. The most "enjoyable" games may be the most addictive.

In recent years, casinos and lotteries have turned from table games and ticket sales to slot machines and Video Lottery Terminals (another form of EMG's). Space and labor-intensive table games used to comprise 60% of casino revenue, but slots have taken over, producing about 70% of gaming revenue.[20]

Women appear to be generally more attracted to machines than to table games and addiction rates among women are increasing accordingly. Gamblers who participate with electronic machines are becoming addicted much more quickly. One of the most recent studies show EGM gamblers arrive at the pathological level in 1.08 years vs. 3.58 years with more "conventional" forms of table and racetrack gambling. Thus, electronic gambling devices have been often labeled as the "crack cocaine" of the industry. [21]

The effects of gambling addiction on individuals and society have been repeatedly calculated and demonstrated.

The percentage of those afflicted should not be considered "small." Even at the minimalist "background" level of under one percent, gambling addiction, not including problem gamblers, would still be twice as prevalent as cancer among Americans. [22] In mature gambling markets, more than 5% of the population will develop some problem with gambling, a prevalence rate about five times that of schizophrenia and more than twice that of cocaine addiction. [23]

Gambling exploded in Canada during the 1990's as it did in the United States, but Canada has funded more extensive research. A massive study recently completed there shows problem and addicted gamblers comprise 2.8% of the entire Canadian Population over 15 years of age! Three fourths of Canadians gambled during the year, and 6% of those are considered "at risk" or "problem" gamblers!

The study also confirms an accelerated level of addictions for those using gambling machines, and affirms the devices have become the "crack cocaine" of gambling for Canadian citizens.

Problem gamblers in Nova Scotia comprise 16% of all those who play the machines on a regular basis, which translates to approximately 0.92% of all adults in the province. This group of gamblers contributes just over half of the net revenue for video lottery gambling and, at any given time, and will comprise almost half of all those sitting in front of video lottery terminals in Nova Scotia.[24]

Percentages from problem gamblers appear to vary with market saturation, technology, gambling genre and demographics.

Dr. Henry Lesieur, president of the Institute for Problem Gambling compiled existing surveys from seven states and provinces. His study concluded that 30.4 percent of gambling revenues in those markets came from problem and pathological gamblers.

Those surveys included data from lotteries, casinos, pari-mutuel wagering and sports betting.[25]

These and other studies[26] illustrate that problem and pathological gamblers will contribute 30 to 50% of gambling losses in a mature gambling market.

Particularly troubling are problem and addictive gambling rates among America's youth and military. A study of America's 11- to 18-year-olds showed a 4 to 7% prevalence rate of problem gambling behaviors.[27]

The Worldwide Survey of Substance Abuse and Health Behaviors Among Military Personnel[28] is a large-scale study that screened for gambling-related problems among America's military personnel. The survey reported that in 1992 and 1998, 7.1% and 8.1%, respectively, of all Department of Defense personnel had at least one gambling-related problem, and 2% exhibited behaviors suggestive of pathologic gambling.

HEALTH ISSUES associated with problem and compulsive gambling are serious and complex. A recent Canadian study found, "Half of all problem gamblers reported that their gambling caused difficulties in relationships with family or friends. Four in 10 obsessive gamblers (42%) reported a high level of stress in their life, compared with 23% of gamblers who reported no problems.

"About 18% of problem gamblers reported that they had contemplated suicide in the year prior to the survey, six times the proportion (3%) of non-problem gamblers.

"The insidiousness of excess gambling is revealed by the 27% of moderate-risk gamblers and 64% of problem gamblers who wanted to stop gambling in the year prior to the survey, but believed they could not. About 56% of problem gamblers had tried to quit, but could not.[29]

The Canadian study validates findings in the United States. Suicide, for example, is a link almost universally denied by the gambling industry, but a Nevada study of addicted gamblers revealed, "Between 20% and 30% of the respondents made actual suicide attempts (we could not assess how many were successful). No other addictive population has had as high a prevalence for attempts."[30]

The national publication of American family physicians said problem gambling victims may present "various gastrointestinal symptoms, low back pain, chest pain, impotence, headaches and vague illnesses. When patients are in the desperation phase of the addiction, they may present with symptoms of anxiety or depression. Pathologic gambling can have devastating effects on patients and their families, and may be the root of marital, family, sexual and financial problems. Some preliminary studies are starting to look at chemical markers for problem gambling, but the clinical use of such markers is limited. Studies have implicated the central noradrenergic system, the serotonin system and platelet monoamine oxidase activity in the pathophysiology of this condition."[31]

Gambling addiction appears to be very difficult to overcome. A study cited by the Harvard addiction scholars in their monthly publication noted, "Of the 80 participants followed for 12 months, 92% experienced relapse. Optimism about winning was the most frequently reported precipitant of relapse for both genders."[32]

In another review, the group reported, "Recent research reports that disordered gambling treatment providers experience patient drop-out rates between 40% and 80%"[33]

Financial and other stresses related to problem gambling take a toll on families. Government Accounting Office analyses prepared for the NGISC found 53.5% of pathological gamblers reported having been divorced, while only 18.2 percent of non-gamblers were divorced.[34]

INCREASING crime is a well-documented companion of legalized gambling. Crime predictably rises three to four years following the opening of a casino as problem and pathological gamblers begin to deplete their resources.[35] Gamblers who have "bottomed out" their own resources frequently begin borrowing money from family, friends and business relationships. This "borrowing" frequently takes the form of theft. Gamblers often feel they are only borrowing other people's money until they can win it back.

Crime may drop slightly in communities with new casinos for the first few months or years, but Atlantic City is typical of the longer view. Three years after the introduction of casinos, there was a tripling of total crimes. Per capita crime in Atlantic City jumped from 50th in the nation to first.[36] Comparing Crime rates for murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary and motor vehicle theft reveals Nevada is the most dangerous place to live in the United States.[37]

According to a 1990 Maryland Department of Health and Mental Hygiene survey, 62% of problem gamblers in treatment had committed illegal acts as a result of their gambling, 80% had committed civil offenses, and 23% were charged with criminal offenses. A similar study of nearly 400 members of Gamblers Anonymous showed that 57% admitted stealing to finance their gambling. On average they stole $135,000 each, for a total of more than $30 million.

The National Gambling Impact Study Commission's final report noted that among those who did not gamble, only 7% had ever been incarcerated. In contrast, more than three times this number, 21.4%, of individuals who had been pathological gamblers at any point during their lifetime had been incarcerated.[38] That's TRIPLE the incarceration rate of a non-gambling community.

Oregon corrections officials have determined gambling is a significant motivator in criminal activity among the state's women. To help rehabilitate female convicts, the state penal system is launching pilot addiction treatment programs. The correctional system there finds 20-30% of female convicts have histories of gambling problems.[39]

BANKRUPTCY is another significant devastation in the wake of gambling expansion. Again, this phenomenon trails a few years behind casino openings because it takes gamblers some time to deplete their resources. In the most recent nationwide survey of every county in the nation, Creighton University researchers found personal bankruptcies rates are 100% higher in counties with casinos than in counties without casinos.[40]

Hired by the banking industry to help understand America's increasing bankruptcy rates, SMR Research Corporation determined in the late 1990's that legalized gambling was not only the fastest growing cause, but also the third leading cause of individual bankruptcies in the United States. [41]

More recently, SMR sites Dr. Nancy Petry's research, "UConn Health Center found that about one-third of all people in Connecticut who seek treatment for problem gambling have already filed for bankruptcy or are in the process of filing. On average, problem gamblers spend more than $2,000 per month gambling. Some have legal problems stemming from credit card fraud or bounced checks. And their troubles spill over to their families. Each problem gambler may affect the lives of eight to 10 other people."[42]

[42] Petry

Besides losing everything they own, including homes, vehicles, retirement funds and children's' college education accounts, addictive gamblers are likely to mass significant debts leading into bankruptcy. Families who could have funded their own futures begin to stress social, medical and welfare programs in states where they reside.

These costs clearly encumber the greater society, including the members who do not gamble at all. Based on extensive studies of original research, social costs for problem and pathological gamblers average between $14,006 and $22,077 (depending whether one uses the lowest or highest estimated costs.) [43]

Thus, the costs for gambling addiction are born by the entire community, including the one-third of Americans who do not gamble at all.[44]

Though many Americans consider gambling to be acceptable behavior, it is unlikely that the general population understands the costs in either dollars or human suffering associated with the activity. Though the suffering may be born by a minority, the overall economic costs are shared by all.

For individuals and the society alike, when the hook is set, the fun of games is over.

Gambling and Crime Among Arrestees: Exploring the Link

This Research for Practice is based on a final report submitted to the National Institute of Justice, Pathological Gambling in Arrestee Populations (NCJ 196677) by Richard C. McCorkle. The final report is available electronically from the National Criminal Justice Reference Service Web site, at http://www.ncjrs.org/pdffiles1/nij/grants/196677.pdf

Findings and conclusions of the research reported here are those of the author and do not reflect the official position or policies of the U.S. Department of Justice.

ABOUT THIS REPORT

Is there a connection between problem gambling and crime? Do compulsive or pathological gamblers resort to criminal activity to pay their debts and finance their bets? To examine the link between problem gambling and crime, researchers interviewed arrestees in Las Vegas and Des Moines to probe their gambling behavior and its relationship to their crimes.

What did the researchers find?

Using the Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (ADAM) Program as a survey vehicle, researchers found significantly more problem gambling among arrestees than in the general population. The arrestees who were interviewed had high levels of criminal activity related to pathological gambling.

- The percentage of problem or pathological gamblers among the arrestees was three to five times higher than in the general population.
- Nearly one-third of arrestees identified as pathological gamblers admitted having committed robbery in the previous year. Approximately 13 percent had assaulted someone for money. Pathological gamblers were much more likely to have sold drugs than other arrestees.

Limitations of the study

The study was conducted among arrestees in only two U.S. cities—Las Vegas and Des Moines. Las Vegas likely has the highest level of residents and visitors who gamble of any major U.S. city. Des Moines was chosen to represent a midsize U.S. city that had more typical levels of gambling.

Who should read this study?

Corrections administrators, drug and gambling treatment providers, State-level government policymakers.

Gambling and Crime Among Arrestees: Exploring the Link

The spread of legalized gambling in the United States over the past 15 years has sparked considerable political controversy, public debate, and research (see "How Big Is Gambling?"). Many policymakers are concerned that widespread gambling, especially what social scientists call compulsive or pathological gambling, will lead to increased crime, drug and alcohol use, and other social or psychological problems. They worry that gambling and its consequences will destroy individual lives, wreck families, and weaken societal institutions. Another concern is that many compulsive or pathological gamblers will turn to drug sales or other crimes to finance their habit and pay their debts.

Unfortunately, what little we know about the social and psychological effects of gambling is derived from studies of treatment populations or the general public. To understand the relationship between gambling and crime, more needs to be known about the gambling habits of people who have been arrested and jailed or sentenced to prison. Their gambling and criminal problems may well be more chronic and severe than those of other subpopulations. And we know little about the nature and consequences of their gambling activities, or the extent to which their gambling is related to the crimes for which they have been jailed.

About the Author

Dr. Richard C. McCorkle is associate professor at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and chair of the criminal justice department. He was the director of the Las Vegas Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (ADAM) Program.

Exploring the connection

To better understand and deal with the relationship between gambling and criminal activity, researchers sought to answer several questions about the arrestee subpopulation:

- How many arrestees are compulsive or pathological gamblers and how many pathological gamblers are arrested for felony and misdemeanor offenses?
- Do compulsive or pathological gamblers fit any age, gender, marital status, or other profile?

- How does the criminal activity of compulsive or pathological gamblers compare with that of less serious gamblers or nongamblers?
- What proportion of crimes committed by compulsive or pathological gamblers is linked to their gambling activities?
- What proportion of compulsive or pathological gamblers uses alcohol, illegal drugs, or other substances to excess? How does that affect the nature and extent of their gambling, as well as their criminal activity?

This Research for Practice is based on a study that addressed those questions. Researchers interviewed arrestees in jail in two U.S. cities—Las Vegas, Nevada, and Des Moines, Iowa. They initially contacted 3,332 arrestees. Completed interviews and urine samples were provided by 2,307 (69 percent) of those contacted. Ninety percent of those who were interviewed and provided urine samples also answered questions that probed their gambling behavior and its relationship to their crimes. The interviews for this study were conducted between fall 1999 and winter 2001.

Las Vegas was chosen because it probably has more residents and visitors who gamble than any other major metropolitan area in the United States. If a relationship exists between gambling and crime and/or drug and alcohol use, it should be clearly recognizable in Las Vegas. Des Moines, on the other hand, represents a more typical midsize U.S. city. Both Las Vegas and Des Moines participate in the Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (ADAM) Program, which was operating in 35 U.S. cities when the research was conducted. ADAM collects data that allow researchers to develop national and local profiles of drug use among people who have been arrested and jailed for whatever reason.

Classifying gambling types

For the purpose of this study, the arrestees who were interviewed were divided into five types based on their answers to a series of questions designed to determine the nature and extent of their gambling: nongamblers and low-risk, at-risk, problem, and compulsive or pathological gamblers. Gamblers are classified by types based on a set of 10 criteria developed by the American Psychiatric Association (APA) and published in APA's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM–IV). These criteria are preoccupation (e.g., reliving past gambling experiences or planning future ventures), tolerance (needing to wager more money to generate the same "buzz"), lying, withdrawal (restless or irritable when attempting to cut down or stop gambling), escape, chasing (returning to get even for a previous day's losses), loss of control, illegal acts, risked relationships, and bailout (relying on others to provide money to relieve a desperate financial situation caused by gambling). Gamblers must meet at least five of these criteria to be classified as pathological.

The overwhelming majority of Americans fall into the nongambler or low-risk groups. Most either do not gamble at all or do not gamble seriously enough to have social, legal, or economic problems as a result of their gambling. In general, low-risk gamblers are those who meet few if any of APA's criteria. They tend to gamble for social or recreational purposes, usually betting such small amounts that they rarely suffer significant losses. Thus, they have little or no reason to turn to crime to finance their gambling.

Defining problem gambling. Compulsive or pathological gamblers, the subject of this study, are those who sooner or later suffer heavy losses (often $100 or more at a

How Big Is Gambling?

There is no doubt about gambling's reach today. What once appeared to be largely confined to casinos, the quiet off-track bookie, bingo halls, and the occasional Friday night poker game has become a national pastime. By 1993, more than half of all Americans reported having gambled in a casino at least once. By 1996, Americans were wagering $47.6 billion a year—more money than movies, sporting events, theme parks, cruise ships, and the recording business generated combined. By 1997, nearly 500 gambling sites were on the Internet.

The number of States with legalized gambling has mushroomed. In 1978, only two States—Nevada and New Jersey—had casinos. That number grew to 27 by 1998. Twenty-three States now have Indian-owned casinos on tribal reservations within their boundaries. Seven States now permit betting on riverboat casinos. Additionally, State-run lotteries operate in 37 States and the District of Columbia. In fact, only Hawaii and Utah have no form of legalized gambling. As States and localities seek solutions to burgeoning budget deficits, legalized gambling may become even more pervasive.

time), borrow or steal money or write bad checks to pay gambling debts, avoid or cannot pay their nongambling bills, and lie to their families, friends, and therapists about the extent of their gambling. Not only do they lie, but compulsive or pathological gamblers often rely on others to bail them out of their gambling debts. They have risked and sometimes lost friendships, marriages, jobs, and careers because of gambling. They may have tried to curtail or stop their gambling, but failed. Although the numbers have differed over the years as research methodologies and definitions have changed, the most recent studies show that about 2.5 million Americans are pathological gamblers. Another 3 million Americans are problem gamblers. The lifetime prevalence rate for pathological and problem gambling is estimated as 1.2 percent and 1.5 percent, respectively.

Challenging stereotypes. Compulsive gamblers are often perceived by the public as largely middle-class men whose gambling habits lead them to steal from their families, friends, and/or employers to finance their activities. They are seen as unfortunate individuals who commit such white-collar crimes as larceny, theft, embezzlement, and fraud when their gambling losses become too great to pay through their regular sources of income. Although many compulsive or pathological gamblers fit this image, surveys of the general population paint a somewhat different picture. In fact, general surveys show that pathological gamblers are most likely to be nonwhite males, who are young, less well educated, and unmarried.

Again, although many arrestees who are compulsive or pathological gamblers fit the two images described above, the study found some differences. Unlike the general population, women arrestees are as likely to have gambling problems as men. Marital status and educational attainment also seem to make little or no difference. Arrestees start gambling at a later age than pathological gamblers in the general population, especially men. Male pathological gamblers typically begin gambling as teenagers and then slowly, often over a decade or more, develop a serious gambling habit. Women who become compulsive or pathological gamblers generally begin gambling later than men, usually in their 20s. Once they become serious gamblers, however, women develop a dependency quickly, typically within 5 years. Both men and women arrestees who are compulsive or pathological gamblers tend to be from lower social and economic classes than those identified in general surveys, more often exhibit sociopathic traits, and frequently start as criminals and only later become gamblers.

Odds are there's a link

As noted earlier, compulsive or pathological gamblers represent only a small percentage of the general population. Yet those who meet APA's definition for pathological gambling accounted for slightly more than 1 in 10 arrestees surveyed in Las Vegas and about 1 in 25 in Des Moines. Together, 14.5 percent of arrestees in Las Vegas and 9.2 percent of those in Des Moines were either problem or pathological gamblers—three to five times the percentage in the general population.

Perhaps more telling, more than one-third of the compulsive or pathological gamblers arrested (34.6 percent in Las Vegas and 37.5 percent in Des Moines) had been arrested on at least one felony count. Surprisingly, though, pathological gamblers were no more likely to be arrested for property or other white-collar crimes (larceny, theft, embezzlement, and fraud) than nongamblers and low-risk and at-risk gamblers. Nor were they more likely to be arrested on drug charges, including selling illegal drugs. Rather, they were most likely to be arrested for such offenses as probation or parole violations, liquor law violations, trespassing, and other public order offenses.

Link to robbery, assault. Still, more than 30 percent of pathological gamblers who had been arrested in Las Vegas and Des Moines reported having committed a robbery within the past year, nearly double the percentage for low-risk gamblers. Nearly one-third admitted that they had committed the robbery to pay for gambling or to pay gambling debts. In addition, about 13 percent said they had assaulted someone to get money; one in four assaults reported by pathological gamblers was directly or indirectly related to gambling. By comparison, low-risk, at-risk, or problem gamblers reported committing gambling-related robberies infrequently.

Drug dealing. Although they were no more likely to have been arrested on drug charges, compulsive or pathological gamblers were significantly more likely to have sold drugs than arrestees who fit the other gambling types. More than one-third of pathological gamblers said they had sold drugs, compared to 19.2 percent of problem gamblers, 20.2 percent of at-risk gamblers, and 16.1 percent of low-risk gamblers. The differences in those numbers were even greater among gamblers who reported having sold drugs specifically to fund their gambling or pay gambling debts. One in five pathological gamblers who had been arrested admitted having sold drugs to finance their gambling, compared to 4 percent among problem gamblers and less than 2 percent among at-risk gamblers.

Using speed. Not surprisingly, a significant proportion of compulsive or pathological gamblers tested positive for one or more illegal drugs. Arrestees' urine samples were screened for hallucinogens such as marijuana, opiates such as heroin, cocaine, and methamphetamine ("speed"). Overall, 60 percent of arrestees interviewed in Las Vegas and 56 percent of those in Des Moines had at least one illegal drug in their urine samples. But pathological gamblers were no likelier to test positive for drugs than were other gambler types. Nor were there any significant differences in which drugs were found, with one exception. Pathological gamblers were more likely to test positive for methamphetamine, a drug taken as an "upper" to keep users alert and awake during hours- or even days-long gambling binges. Beyond drugs, nearly two-thirds of the pathological gamblers reported that they drank alcohol to the point of dependence. In fact, only 3.3 percent of all arrestees interviewed for this study who were pathological gamblers reported no drug or alcohol problems.

Again, not surprisingly, the study found a relationship between pathological gambling and crime and/or drug and alcohol use. More than 43 percent of those interviewed who acknowledged pathological gambling and substance use also said they had committed an assault during the previous year. Nearly 40 percent had committed more than one theft in the past year, four times the number of arrestees without either a gambling or a substance use problem. Approximately 38 percent of arrestees with both gambling and substance use problems reported having sold drugs, nearly eight times the number of those with no gambling or substance use problem.

Pathological gamblers reported that, on average, they committed their first crime around age 21, developed an alcohol problem by about 23 or 24, and began to have gambling problems in their mid- to late 20s. Gambling began after the onset of criminal and substance problems, not before. Nonpathological gamblers who said they had similar substance use problems and criminal activity reported a similar average age of onset for each of those problems. Men who were pathological gamblers were more likely to have committed a serious crime at an earlier age than women who were pathological gamblers. Also, only 13 percent of pathological gamblers who admitted having a gambling problem said they sought treatment. And only 10 percent said they attended Gamblers Anonymous or similar meetings.

Policy implications

A number of conclusions and policy recommendations can be drawn from the study findings. Arrestees who report that they are or can be defined by their responses to interviews or questionnaires as compulsive or pathological gamblers are drawn disproportionately from the social and economic fringes of society. As legalized gambling spreads to States and localities that do not now permit gambling or have it only on a small scale, these jurisdictions must prepare to deal with the social ills engendered by problem gambling.

Criminals and those who use alcohol and illegal drugs to excess appear to be at greater risk for becoming compulsive or pathological gamblers. Few are likely to receive or seek treatment for their addictions. Gambling, especially when accompanied by substance use, is a prime motivation for many but not all of their crimes.

States and localities may identify individuals with a gambling problem by using existing psychological tests (or abbreviated versions of such tests suitable to intake interviews) to screen arrestees. Today, however, few States or localities have screening programs in detention centers, jails, or prisons. Arrestees are often booked and released shortly thereafter. If at least some arrestees with a real or potential gambling problem can be identified, they can be offered treatment. Early treatment might help reduce the number who become repeat offenders.

States and localities also may want to develop treatment programs in detention centers, jails, and/or prisons. Such programs might include group therapy sessions similar to those offered by Gamblers Anonymous. Such sessions could be incorporated into existing programs for illegal drug or alcohol use. To reduce the chances of relapses once prisoners are released, States and localities may develop referral systems that offer former arrestees and inmates the names of agencies and programs that offer continued treatment and support.

Finally, being behind bars is likely to worsen the gambling habits of many compulsive or pathological gamblers. Although it is officially banned, gambling is difficult to control in prisons and jails. It is a diversion from the monotony of jail. As a result, jailed arrestees and prison inmates may accrue significant gambling debts behind bars that can only be paid off by committing further crimes after their release. Authorities could provide increased attention to gambling behaviors in detention centers, jails, and prisons.

of their slot players are Asians, despite the fact they comprise only 9% of the population. [9]

- Electronic Gambling Machines may be the most addictive.
  Gamblers who participate with electronic machines are becoming addicted much more quickly. One of the most recent studies show EGM gamblers arrive at the pathological level in 1.08 years vs. 3.58 years with more "conventional" forms of table and racetrack gambling. Thus, electronic gambling devices have been often labeled as the "crack cocaine" of the industry. [10]

- It is neither a small number nor a small problem
  The percentage of those afflicted by compulsive gambling should not be considered "small." Even at the minimalist "background" level of under one percent, gambling addiction, not including problem gamblers, would still be twice as prevalent as cancer among Americans. [11] In mature gambling markets, more than 5% of the population will develop some problem with gambling, a prevalence rate about five times that of schizophrenia and more than twice that of cocaine addiction. [12]

- Problem gamblers are biggest victims
  Problem and pathological gamblers comprise a sharply disproportionate share of gambling losses, contributing 30 to 50% of all gambling losses. They also often comprise HALF the gamblers participating at any given time.

  Problem gamblers in Nova Scotia comprise 16% of all those who play the machines on a regular basis, which translates to approximately 0.92% of all adults in the province. This group of gamblers contributes just over half of the net revenue for video lottery gambling and, at any given time, and will comprise almost half of all those sitting in front of video lottery terminals in Nova Scotia. [13]

  Dr. Henry Lesieur, president of the Institute for Problem Gambling compiled existing surveys from seven states and provinces. His study concluded that 30.4 percent of gambling revenues in those markets came from problem and pathological gamblers. Those surveys included data from lotteries, casinos, pari-mutuel wagering and sports betting. [14]

- Youth are more troubled and addicted than adults.
  The "acceptance" of gambling by government and the society's adults have led to a devastating increase in problem gambling among minors. Many studies have confirmed the problem, including study of America's 11- to 18-year-olds which showed a 4 to 7% prevalence rate of problem gambling behaviors. [15]

- America's military in danger.
  The Worldwide Survey of Substance Abuse and Health Behaviors Among Military Personnel [16] is a large-scale study that screened for gambling-related problems among America's military personnel. The survey reported that in 1992 and 1998, 7.1% and 8.1%, respectively, of all Department of Defense personnel had at least one gambling-related problem, and 2% exhibited behaviors suggestive of pathologic gambling.

- Gambling problems become health and family problems

A recent Canadian study found, "Half of all problem gamblers reported that their gambling caused difficulties in relationships with family or friends. Four in 10 obsessive gamblers (42%) reported a high level of stress in their life, compared with 23% of gamblers who reported no problems. [17]

Financial and other stresses related to problem gambling take a toll on families. Government Accounting Office analyses prepared for the NGISC found 53.5% of pathological gamblers reported having been divorced, while only 18.2 percent of non-gamblers were divorced. [18]

- Suicide rates dramatic among problem gamblers

"About 18% of problem gamblers reported that they had contemplated suicide in the year prior to the survey, six times the proportion (3%) of non-problem gamblers.

"The insidiousness of excess gambling is revealed by the 27% of moderate-risk gamblers and 64% of problem gamblers who wanted to stop gambling in the year prior to the survey, but believed they could not. About 56% of problem gamblers had tried to quit, but could not. The Canadian study validates findings in the United States. Suicide, for example, is a link almost universally denied by the gambling industry, but a Nevada study of addicted gamblers revealed, "Between 20% and 30% of the respondents made actual suicide attempts (we could not assess how many were successful). No other addictive population has had as high a prevalence for attempts." [19]

- Gambling addiction is extremely hard to overcome.

A typical study cited by the Harvard addiction scholars in their monthly publication noted, "Of the 80 participants followed for 12 months, 92% experienced relapse. Optimism about winning was the most frequently reported precipitant of relapse for both genders." [20]

In another review, the group reported, "Recent research reports that disordered gambling treatment providers experience patient drop-out rates between 40% and 80%" [21]

"An Act proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska limiting appropriations from certain mineral revenue, relating to the balanced budget account, and relating to an appropriation limit."

The largest contributor to our state's unrestricted revenue is also the most volatile component. 85-90 percent of unrestricted revenues for FY '07 through FY'10 will come from oil. Since 1988 Alaska North Slope crude oil production has declined by 64% - from over 2 million barrels per day to under 720 thousand barrels per day. During that same period of time the market price of oil has increased sixfold. We have gone from a significant deficit in FY '03, a $500 million draw on the CBR, to a significant surplus in FY '06 of over $1 billion, back to a projected deficit in FY '09. This makes rational budgeting nearly impossible. HJR 8 provides an appropriation smoothing and limiting mechanism applicable to the wildly fluctuating portion of the budget that is oil revenue.

In recognition of the difficulty in building and balancing our budget in a responsible manner when the price of oil fluctuates, HJR 8 forces the legislature to incorporate its oil revenues into the budget in any given fiscal year on a five-year rolling average, (4 years back and 1 year forward). This averaging would act as a "dampener" to prevent spending sprees when oil prices are high and crashes when oil prices are low.

HJR 8 also establishes a "Balanced Budget Account" in the State Treasury. Any oil and other mineral revenue received by the state in excess of the 5-year average amount referenced above would be deposited into the Balanced Budget Account. This account would not be subject to the Constitutional Budget Reserve sweep, but would be limited to a maximum amount that is equal to the oil and other mineral revenue appropriations for the current fiscal year, plus the immediate preceding fiscal year. Any excess amount would be transferred to the Constitutional Budget Reserve.

This resolution would also provide for transfer of funds from the Balanced Budget Account into appropriations during years when actual revenue from oil and other minerals falls below the 5-year average. In lean years, the legislature may with a majority vote transfer funds from the Balanced Budget Account necessary to fill the "gap" between the revenue available and the 5-year average. If the legislature requires appropriations above what the 5-year average permits, it may choose to live within its means or seek funds from other sources of revenue including the CBR.

HJR 8 could end the constant search by the legislature for rat holes in which to stash excess revenues so they can access those funds to balance the budget in the following years, without having to buy the ¾ vote to get funds from the Constitutional Budget Reserve. The resolution also avoids "sacred cows" by having no effect on the permanent fund corpus or the earnings of the Permanent Fund, the Amerada Hess Account or the Permanent Fund Dividend.

Questions & Answers for HJR 8 in House State Affairs Committee

Tuesday, April 7, 2009

Question: Where did the definition of "mineral revenue" come from on page 1, lines 8-10 of the resolution?

Answer: Article 9, Section 15 of the Alaska Constitution, which says: "At least twenty-five per cent of all mineral lease rentals, royalties, royalty sale proceeds, federal mineral revenue sharing payments and bonuses received by the State shall be placed in a permanent fund, etc..."

Mineral production refers to the State's production tax (ACES) on oil. Mineral Transportation refers to the State's tariff on transporting oil through the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System. This section would apply to a potential gasline as well.

Question: Has the Constitutional Budget Reserve been repaid?

Answer: According to the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report of the State of Alaska, the remaining indebtedness to the CBR is $150 million and change. In FY08 the legislature appropriated $3 billion from the general fund to the CBR. Additionally, at the end of FY08 over $2 billion was swept from a variety of GF sub-funds and accounts, and transferred to the CBR.

Question: Can we include fish receipts and tourism in the 5-year appropriation limit?

Answer: Yes we can, but the state receives minimal revenue from these sources when compared to mineral revenue. For example, total unrestricted income from Fish Taxes was $22.4 and $22.6 million in FY07 and FY08. If these receipts were included in HJR 8, they would represent ½ a percent of total revenue in FY07 and even less in FY08. The Fall 2008 Revenue Sources book includes other restricted revenue from fish receipts, but because they are restricted they should not be included in the HJR 8 model.

Total unrestricted income from tourism includes: $9 million from the Car Rental Tax, $12.3 million from the Cruise Corporate Income Tax, $3.5 million from the Tourism Corporate Income Tax, and $6.7 million from the Cruise Gaming Tax. Total unrestricted revenue from tourism in FY08 was $31.5 million. These funds represent a 1/3 of a percent of total revenue for FY08. The Fall 2008 Revenue Sources book includes other restricted revenue from tourism, but because they are restricted they should not be included in the HJR 8 model.

Question: Can we calculate a 3-year Average, deleting the high extreme and the low extreme?
Answer: Yes. (See Attached)

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE PRESS RELEASE

KELLY'S FISCAL PLAN CONST. AMEN. MOVES FROM COMMITTEE

HJR 8 will base State spending on 5-year oil revenue average

Tuesday, April 07, 2009, Juneau, Alaska – The House State Affairs Committee moved House Joint Resolution (HJR) 8 out of committee today. The resolution, sponsored by Rep. Mike Kelly, R-Fairbanks, would place before voters a constitutional amendment limiting State spending appropriations. The resolution bases State spending on a 5-year rolling average of oil revenue. According to the State Dept. of Revenue, 90% of the total unrestricted revenue in fiscal year 2009 is attributable to oil production.

"I appreciate the House State Affairs Committee's recognition that this resolution should be moved forward and the level of discussion regarding State spending should be dialed up," Kelly said. "We've gone from a significant deficit in FY '03 to a significant surplus in FY '06, and now back to a projected deficit in FY '10. State spending chases this oil price roller coaster, making rational budgeting extremely difficult and living within our means politically unachievable."

"This resolution looks to the future, through the past," said Rep. Craig Johnson, R-Anchorage, who co-sponsored the bill. "This is the first time I've ever heard a discussion of how we allocate our dollars in a finite world. Instead, the discussion has always been 'well, we'll just go get more from someplace else then.' This bill has brought more discussion on financial decisions than I have heard on any finance committee, sub-committee or anywhere else."

"This resolution takes money off the table in high revenue years and saves it for years when revenue is low," said House State Affairs Committee Chair Bob Lynn, R-Anchorage, who also co-sponsored the bill. "This is an appropriate discussion for the legislature to have in light of the doubling in State spending over the past 5 years. I support moving this bill along and encouraging my colleagues to consider how we allocate our resources."

HJR 8 now moves to the Judiciary Committee and Finance Committee.

Rep. Mike Kelly introduces state finance plan

Published Thursday, January 29, 2009

JUNEAU — Rep. Mike Kelly has introduced a plan to stabilize the state's finances by evening out the steep peaks and valleys of the "oil price roller coaster."

The Fairbanks Republican this week introduced House Joint Resolution 8, which, if approved by the Legislature, would ask voters to amend the Alaska constitution to require the state to base spending on a five-year average of oil and other minerals revenue.

That, Kelly said, would limit state spending and restore some financial stability.

"This government seems to have a ratchet, but it's only in the up direction," he said. "We have got to live within our means, and we've got to control the seemingly endless growth in state government."

He charged that state spending has doubled since 2005, when he entered the Legislature, and roughly tripled since 2000.

"If the people had to pay for that, they would be screaming bloody murder," he said.

About 90 percent of unrestricted state revenue in fiscal year 2009 came from oil production.

Kelly's plan calls for calculating state revenues on an average of the last four years and the current year and wouldn't affect the Permanent Fund. The proposal also would create a Balanced Budget Account, a short-term holding fund that could be drawn on to balance the budget at the end of each fiscal year. Any surpluses would flow into the Constitutional Budget Reserve.

The new, short-term account could help save money by eliminating steep spending in flush years and dramatic cuts in lean years, he said.

Lawmakers have to round up a three-fourths majority to tap into the CBR. That's generally done by promising money for special projects to legislators who will vote yes, Kelly said.

"If you want a billion, you're going to pay a lot more than that to get it out," he said.

His proposal would average revenues from all oil, natural gas and other mineral sources. At the same time, Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, has filed a resolution for a constitutional amendment that would establish an endowment fund with natural gas revenue. Kelly said he and Hawker will discuss how the two plans could dovetail.

Sen. Joe Thomas, D-Fairbanks, agreed the state needs a long-term fiscal plan, but he has some initial concerns about Kelly's proposal. He sits on the Senate Finance Committee.

He would like a look at scenarios of how a five-year average would have affected revenue and spending during the last several years.

An average could still pack some wallops when years with major movement, such as 2008 with $140 per barrel oil, factor in. He cautioned against the possibility of "economic whiplash."

And, Thomas noted, while a five-year average could smooth some ups and downs, less revenue could lead to cuts to some state services that are as essential in lean times as in boom years.

Kelly's resolution was referred to the House state affairs, judicial and finance committees.

If the resolution passes the Legislature, he doesn't expect too much trouble convincing voters to make the amendment.

"I think this is something that the public understands clearly the need for," he said. "It's about responsible budgeting."

Rep. Mike Kelly shows some common sense: His plan has no chance.

Posted on 29 January 2009

By Dan Fagan

Like it or not, here in Alaska we live in a boom or bust economy. Alaska is known for its extremes and our economy is no different. The fluctuation in the price of oil has never been more dramatic than it was in 2008. So what's a state to do when it comes to a budget?

Republican Rep. Mike Kelly of Fairbanks has an idea. House Joint Resolution 8 sponsored by Kelly is designed to even out the up and down nature of state revenue.

The measure calls for changing the Alaska constitution requiring our big spending legislators to base budgets on a five-year of oil and other mineral revenues. It would take into account the past fours years and the current year of state revenue when putting together a budget.

This plan would prevent what happened last year when the state was flush with cash and blew much of it including a massive giveaway of free cash. Rep. Kelly hopes the plan would limit state spending in boom years.

"This government seems to have a ratchet, but it's only in the up direction," Kelly told the Fairbanks News Minor. "We have got to live within our means, and we've got to control the seemingly endless growth in state government."

Kelly is on the right track. Something has to be done. In the past three years, state spending has doubled. There's no justification for that kind of irresponsible growth. Kelly says that type of growth is only possible because Alaskans, for the most part, don't directly have to pay for state government.

"If the people had to pay for that, they would be screaming bloody murder," Kelly said.

Nine out of every ten dollars the state collects comes from the oil industry.

Rep. Kelly's plan also creates a Balanced Budget Account. Lawmakers would draw on it to balance the budget at the end of each fiscal year. Any surplus would flow into the Constitutional Budget Reserve.

Kelly hopes the new, short-term account could help save money by eliminating steep spending in flush years and dramatic cuts in lean years, he said. The truth is we do spend like drunken sailors in boom years and yet during lean years we still spend too much. Kelly's plan would at least restrict legislators from going crazy when the price of oil is high.

Does Kelly's plan have a shot? Three quarters of legislators would have to be on board so it faces an uphill battle. Democrats typically oppose any legislation that would limit government spending. And the D's seem to have firm control in the Senate with the newly formed coalition.

FY 08 budget

The unsustainable FY 08 budget passed by the legislature after vetoes was $5.5 billion (unrestricted General Fund revenue), or $2.4 billion less than the 1982 constitutional spending limit.

Translation: The 1982 spending limit passed by voters is ineffective; or, we're doing a great job of controlling government growth.

Constitutional Budget Reserve Fund (CBRF)

In 1990, another attempt was made by voters to impose budget stability. Voters approved a Constitutional Amendment creating the Constitutional Budget Reserve Fund (CBRF).

CBRF

The CBRF was created to receive and protect excess revenues generated in high revenue years rather than leaving excess funds in the General Fund (where they could be easily spent). Taking money from the CBRF requires a supermajority ¾ vote, making it more difficult to tap and therefore arguably a spending controller.

Fiscal Responsibility

- Encourages a better budgeting system than "when you have it, spend it – when you don't, cut."
- Provides a simple but effective mechanism to help save budget surpluses and avoid deficits while encouraging government to live within its means.
- Eliminates need for complicated "rat holing" and "parking" of excess funds to avoid ¾ vote.

Why a Constitutional Amendment?

- The legislature can easily overpower, ignore or change statutory appropriation constraints.

- Let the people speak concerning this simple fiscal framework. It may be the only fiscal plan they will endorse at this time.

HJR 8 & POMV

"If the people of Alaska choose a Percent of Market Value approach to funding government using the Permanent Fund Earnings, HJR 8 would accommodate that approach."

- Excerpts from Bradners' Alaska Legislative Digest No. 29/07 Dec. 19, 2007:

- Fiscal policy is more than savings and sound bites; it requires long-haul skilled political crafting.

- Long term fiscal policy has been elusive in Alaska, especially since the beginning [of] the pipeline flow and the flow of easy money. The citizen taxpayer close scrutiny faltered and was replaced by all of us with our hands out. There are reasons why we have failed, and continue to do so.

- We play the budget game from the seat of our pants.

- Lawmakers are besieged with demands to spend, especially when there is the perception or the reality as is the current case, that there is money on the table. Fiscal restraint then becomes someone else's business, or the business of tomorrow, although tomorrow brings the same appetites.

- The same people who demand that they see a critical need in their community, or in relation to their institution or industry, will still say the Legislature "spends too much."

TITLE: "Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska to correct obsolete references to the office of secretary of state by substituting references to the office of lieutenant governor."

In 1970 Alaska voters approved amendments to the state constitution changing the name of "Secretary of State" to "Lieutenant Governor." At that time, however, the drafting attorneys did not catch all of the references to "Secretary of State". HJR13 corrects the two remaining references to "Secretary of State" in the state constitution. The proposed amendments, if approved by the legislature, would be placed before the voters in the next general election.

Sectional Analysis for HJR 13

Section 1. Amends Article II, sec. 5, Constitution of the State of Alaska

Adds: lieutenant governor
Removes: [SECRETARY OF STATE]

Section 2. Amends Article II, sec. 25 Constitution of the State of Alaska

Adds: lieutenant governor
Removes: [SECRETARY OF STATE]

These sections update by correcting the only two outdated references to "secretary of state" to "lieutenant governor" following the 1970 constitutional amendment that changed the name of that office.

Section 3. This section states that the constitutional amendments will be placed on the ballot at the next general election as required by Art. XIII, Sec. 1 of the Alaska Constitution. Two thirds of each House must approve the proposed amendments and a majority of the electorate voting must ratify it.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

States Pursue Title of Lieutenant Governor

The last states without lieutenant governors may soon jump on the bandwagon. Two states, Tennessee and Arizona, are pursuing in this legislation session the creation of the lieutenant governor position as a statewide elected office. Rhode Island lawmakers are considering expanding powers of the lieutenant governor. Only five states do not have lieutenant governors.

In each case, lieutenant governor supporters say the position allows for gubernatorial succession that's clear to voters, while protecting the continuity of government.

However, in Arizona, Oregon and Wyoming, states without the lieutenant governor position, the secretary of state is first in line for gubernatorial succession.

"People who are voting for secretary of state should note they are also electing the person next in line for governor," Arizona Sen. Chuck Gray told the Cronkite News Service.

An East Valley Tribune editorial agreed: "Arizonans always should keep in mind that the official who oversees the state election system suddenly could have power to veto legislation and control a large portion of state government, if the governor became unable to do the job."

Gubernatorial succession has happened five times in Arizona's 95-year history, most recently in 1997 when then-Secretary of State Jane Hull replaced Fife Symington. Voters may not realize that the secretary of state is next in line if the current governor dies or resigns since nearly all other states have a lieutenant governor, according to the East Valley Tribune editorial.

Four states place the senate president first in line to replace the governor, but Tennessee and West Virginia give the title lieutenant governor to this officer in recognition of the vital succession duty. Yet, Tennessee this year is considering creating an office of lieutenant governor, which would be elected statewide.

"An elected lieutenant governor is a companion piece to any sort of sensible line of succession," Gov. Phil Bredesen told The Tennessean. Only three officials are elected statewide in Tennessee, the governor and two U.S. senators.

New Hampshire and Maine are the other states where the senate president is first in line of succession and with no use of the lieutenant governor title. Voters in New Jersey approved creation of a statewide elected office of lieutenant governor in 2005; the first will be elected next year in 2009.

States Lengthen School Days

In an effort to raise achievement in schools, some states are looking to lengthen the school day. A handful of states and cities, along with many charter schools, are seeking to add more hours, days and weeks to their school calendar, according to The Washington Post.

Massachusetts is spending $13 million this year as part of a program to lengthen school days, according to Heidi Guarino, spokeswoman for the Massachusetts Department of Education. Ten schools made sch[illegible]'ays longer for the 2006-2007 school year and this school year, the number of schools increased to 19, Guarino said.

An additional 33 schools in 16 districts are in the pipeline and hope to convert to longer days in the future, according to The Boston Globe.

In most cases, the school days are expanded from six-hour days to eight- or nine-hour days.

The Commonwealth Readiness Project—the cornerstone of Gov. Deval Patrick's education priorities—issued an update in January 2008 that continued the recommendation of expanded teaching and learning time in Massachusettes.

"Expanded teaching and learning time, whether through full-day kindergarten, longer school days, summer learning programs or high-quality out-of-school or after-school programs, can provide increased opportunities that impact academic achievement, address out-of-school factors, such as health and nutrition and enhance support services including in-home resources and parenting skills," the report stated.

The Massachusetts report also said schools with longer days narrowed the achievement gap at a faster rate than the state and increased the number of students at or above the proficiency level by 10.8 percent compared to the state rate of only 3.5 percent.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, chairman of the U.S. Senate's Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, joined with Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino, to celebrate expanded school day programs in Massachusetts at the Clarence R. Edwards Middle School in Charlestown in January. The middle school implemented the state's expanded learning time initiative in 2006.

"It gives students the time not only to master the basics, but also to expand their horizons through art, music, physical education and other activities. It gives teachers additional time for collaboration and planning to improve instruction," Kennedy said in a press release.

New York tacked on minutes a day for schools in 28 different school systems, The Washington Post reports. New Mexico is also spending slightly more than $7 million to add 25 extra days at 29 schools where students need the most help, according to the Post.

Urging Congress to Reject H.R. 45, the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and record of Sale Act of 2009

House Joint Resolution 17 asks the United States Congress to oppose and defeat House Resolution 45, a measure that has been introduced in Congress that would significantly diminish Alaskans' right to keep and bear arms.

Among other things, HR 45 would require Americans to go through onerous federal licensure in order to possesses a firearm; it would make it a felony to transfer a firearm to someone who does not have a license; it would make it a felony to fail to timely report such a transfer or to fail to report the loss or theft of a firearm within 72 hours to the U.S. Attorney General; and, it requires the attorney general to establish and maintain a data base of firearm transfers.

It is very important that Congress receive a message from the Alaska Legislature as soon as possible that Second Amendment rights to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

A RESOLUTION

Urging the United States Congress to reject H.R. 45, the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution enunciates a citizen's right to keep and bear arms, stating that that right shall not be infringed; and

WHEREAS art. I, sec. 19, Constitution of the State of Alaska, provides that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed and further states that the individual right to keep and bear arms shall not be denied or infringed; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 has been introduced in the United States Congress to require licensure of firearm owners and extensive recordkeeping of transactions that result in the transfer of certain firearms, including handguns and semiautomatic rifles; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45, referred to as the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, would make it a federal felony to possess a firearm without a license; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would also make it a federal felony to transfer a firearm to another person who is not licensed; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 directs the Attorney General of the United States to establish and maintain a federal system documenting the sale and transfer of firearms; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would make it a federal felony to fail to report the loss or theft of a firearm to the attorney general within 72 hours; and

WHEREAS, under H.R. 45, a firearm owner could be charged with a federal felony based on the actions of a juvenile who might gain access to the firearm; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 directs the attorney general to establish and maintain a firearm injury information clearinghouse, to conduct studies of firearm-related deaths and injuries, and to collect and maintain production and sales data from licensed firearm manufactures; and

WHEREAS the provisions of H.R. 45 cumulatively constitute a gun registration system and an assault on the Second Amendment rights of United States citizens; and

WHEREAS the private ownership of firearms has always been a key component of our national defense and constitutes a constructive notice to our enemies that Americans are a free people and a people free to defend themselves; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would diminish this traditional component of our national defense; and

WHEREAS there are other methods of addressing the problem of gun violence and gun-related deaths, such as increased education on the proper handling and use of firearms, that would be more effective and less intrusive into the private lives of American citizens and would not diminish a constitutionally guaranteed right;

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature opposes the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, urges the United States Congress to reject H.R. 45, and further urges the members of the Alaska Congressional delegation to oppose and defeat H.R. 45; and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that members of the Alaska Congressional delegation are urged to support and expand federal funding of firearm education programs.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Joseph R. Biden, Jr., Vice-President of the United States and President of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Harry Reid, Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Mitch McConnell, Minority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable John Boehner, Minority Leader of the U.S. House of Representatives; and the Honorable Lisa Murkowski and the Honorable Mark Begich, U.S. Senators, and the

SUMMARY AS OF:
1/6/2009--Introduced.

Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009 - Amends the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act to prohibit a person from possessing a firearm unless that person has been issued a firearm license under this Act or a state system certified under this Act and such license has not been invalidated or revoked. Prescribes license application, issuance, and renewal requirements.

Prohibits transferring or receiving a qualifying firearm unless the recipient presents a valid firearms license, the license is verified, and the dealer records a tracking authorization number. Prescribes firearms transfer reporting and record keeping requirements. Directs the Attorney General to establish and maintain a federal record of sale system.

Prohibits: (1) transferring a firearm to any person other than a licensee, unless the transfer is processed through a licensed dealer in accordance with national instant criminal background check system requirements, with exceptions; (2) a licensed manufacturer or dealer from failing to comply with reporting and record keeping requirements of this Act; (3) failing to report the loss or theft of the firearm to the Attorney General within 72 hours; (4) failing to report to the Attorney General an address change within 60 days; or (5) keeping a loaded firearm, or an unloaded firearm and ammunition for the firearm, knowingly or recklessly disregarding the risk that a child is capable of gaining access, if a child uses the firearm and causes death or serious bodily injury.

Prescribes criminal penalties for violations of firearms provisions covered by this Act.

Directs the Attorney General to: (1) establish and maintain a firearm injury information clearinghouse; (2) conduct continuing studies and investigations of firearm-related deaths and injuries; and (3) collect and maintain current production and sales figures of each licensed manufacturer.

Authorizes the Attorney General to certify state firearm licensing or record of sale systems.

TITLE V--FIREARM INJURY INFORMATION AND RESEARCH

Sec. 501. Duties of the Attorney General.

TITLE VI--EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Sec. 601. Effect on State law.

Sec. 602. Certification of State firearm licensing systems and State firearm record of sale systems.

TITLE VII--RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

Sec. 701. Subordination to Arms Export Control Act.

TITLE VIII--INAPPLICABILITY

Sec. 801. Inapplicability to governmental authorities.

TITLE IX--EFFECTIVE DATE

Sec. 901. Effective date of amendments.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) Findings- Congress finds that--

(1) the manufacture, distribution, and importation of firearms is inherently commercial in nature;

(2) firearms regularly move in interstate commerce;

(3) to the extent that firearms trafficking is intrastate in nature, it arises out of and is substantially connected with a commercial transaction, which, when viewed in the aggregate, substantially affects interstate commerce;

(4) because the intrastate and interstate trafficking of firearms are so commingled, full regulation of interstate commerce requires the incidental regulation of intrastate commerce;

(5) gun violence in the United States is associated with the majority of homicides, over half the suicides, and two-thirds of non-fatal violent injuries; and

(6) on the afternoon of May 10, 2007, Blair Holt, a junior at Julian High School in Chicago, was killed on a public bus riding home from school when he used his body to shield a girl who was in the line of fire after a young man boarded the bus and started shooting.

(b) Sense of the Congress- It is the sense of the Congress that--

(1) firearms trafficking is prevalent and widespread in and among the States, and it is usually impossible to distinguish between intrastate trafficking and interstate trafficking; and

(2) it is in the national interest and within the role of the Federal Government to ensure that the regulation of firearms is uniform among the States, that law enforcement can quickly and effectively trace firearms used in crime, and that firearms owners know how to use and safely store their firearms.

(c) Purposes- The purposes of this Act and the amendments made by this Act are--

(1) to protect the public against the unreasonable risk of injury and death associated with the unrecorded sale or transfer of qualifying firearms to criminals and youth;

(2) to ensure that owners of qualifying firearms are knowledgeable in the safe use, handling, and storage of those firearms;

(3) to restrict the availability of qualifying firearms to criminals, youth, and other persons prohibited by Federal law from receiving firearms; and

(4) to facilitate the tracing of qualifying firearms used in crime by Federal and State law enforcement agencies.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

(a) In General- In this Act:

(1) FIREARM; LICENSED DEALER; LICENSED MANUFACTURER; STATE- The terms `firearm', `licensed dealer', `licensed manufacturer', and `State' have the meanings given those terms in section 921(a) of title 18, United States Code.

(2) QUALIFYING FIREARM- The term `qualifying firearm' has the meaning given the term in section 921(a) of title 18, United States Code, as amended by subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Amendment to Title 18, United States Code- Section 921(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(36) The term `qualifying firearm'--

`(A) means--

`(i) any handgun; or

`(ii) any semiautomatic firearm that can accept any detachable ammunition feeding device; and

`(B) does not include any antique.'.

TITLE I--LICENSING

SEC. 101. LICENSING REQUIREMENT.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(aa) Firearm Licensing Requirement-

`(1) IN GENERAL- It shall be unlawful for any person other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector to possess a qualifying firearm on or after the applicable date, unless that person has been issued a firearm license--

`(A) under title I of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, which license has not been invalidated or revoked under that title; or

`(B) pursuant to a State firearm licensing and record of sale system certified under section 602 of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, which license has not been invalidated or revoked under State law.

`(2) APPLICABLE DATE- In this subsection, the term `applicable date' means--

`(A) with respect to a qualifying firearm that is acquired by the person before the date of the enactment of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, 2 years after such date of enactment; and

`(B) with respect to a qualifying firearm that is acquired by the person on or after the date of the enactment of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, 1 year after such date of enactment.'.

SEC. 102. APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) In General- In order to be issued a firearm license under this title, an individual shall submit to the Attorney General (in accordance with the regulations promulgated under subsection (b)) an application, which shall include--

(1) a current, passport-sized photograph of the applicant that provides a clear, accurate likeness of the applicant;

(2) the name, address, and date and place of birth of the applicant;

(3) any other name that the applicant has ever used or by which the applicant has ever been known;

(4) a clear thumb print of the applicant, which shall be made when, and in the presence of the entity to whom, the application is submitted;

(5) with respect to each category of person prohibited by Federal law, or by the law of the State of residence of the applicant, from obtaining a firearm, a statement that the individual is not a person prohibited from obtaining a firearm;

(6) a certification by the applicant that the applicant will keep any firearm owned by the applicant safely stored and out of the possession of persons who have not attained 18 years of age;

(7) a certificate attesting to the completion at the time of application of a written firearms examination, which shall test the knowledge and ability of the applicant regarding--

(A) the safe storage of firearms, particularly in the vicinity of persons who have not attained 18 years of age;

(B) the safe handling of firearms;

(C) the use of firearms in the home and the risks associated with such use;

(D) the legal responsibilities of firearms owners, including Federal, State, and local laws relating to requirements for the possession and storage of firearms, and relating to reporting requirements with respect to firearms; and

(E) any other subjects, as the Attorney General determines to be appropriate;

(8) an authorization by the applicant to release to the Attorney General or an authorized representative of the Attorney General any mental health records pertaining to the applicant;

(9) the date on which the application was submitted; and

(10) the signature of the applicant.

(b) Regulations Governing Submission- The Attorney General shall promulgate regulations specifying procedures for the submission of applications to the Attorney General under this section, which regulations shall--

(1) provide for submission of the application through a licensed dealer or an office or agency of the Federal Government designated by the Attorney General;

(2) require the applicant to provide a valid identification document (as defined in section 1028(d)(2) of title 18, United States Code) of the applicant, containing a photograph of the applicant, to the licensed dealer or to the office or agency of the Federal Government, as applicable, at the time of submission of the application to that dealer, office, or agency; and

(3) require that a completed application be forwarded to the Attorney General not later than 48 hours after the application is submitted to the licensed dealer or office or agency of the Federal Government, as applicable.

(c) Fees-

(1) IN GENERAL- The Attorney General shall charge and collect from each applicant for a license under this title a fee in an amount determined in accordance with paragraph (2).

(2) FEE AMOUNT- The amount of the fee collected under this subsection shall be not less than the amount determined by the Attorney General to be necessary to ensure that the total amount of all fees collected under this subsection during a fiscal year is sufficient to cover the costs of carrying out this title during that fiscal year, except that such amount shall not exceed $25.

SEC. 103. ISSUANCE OF LICENSE.

(a) In General- The Attorney General shall issue a firearm license to an applicant who has submitted an application that meets the requirements of section 102 of this Act, if the Attorney General ascertains that the individual is not prohibited by subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, from receiving a firearm.

(b) Effect of Issuance to Prohibited Person- A firearm license issued under this section shall be null and void if issued to a person who is prohibited by subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, from receiving a firearm.

(c) Form of License- A firearm license issued under this section shall be in the form of a tamper-resistant card, and shall include--

(1) the photograph of the licensed individual submitted with the application;

(2) the address of the licensed individual;

(3) the date of birth of the licensed individual;

(4) a license number, unique to each licensed individual;

(5) the expiration date of the license, which shall be the date that is 5 years after the initial anniversary of the date of birth of the licensed individual following the date on which the license is issued (or in the case of a license renewal, following the date on which the license is renewed under section 104);

(6) the signature of the licensed individual provided on the application, or a facsimile of the application; and

(7) centered at the top of the license, capitalized, and in boldface type, the following:

`FIREARM LICENSE--NOT VALID FOR ANY OTHER PURPOSE'.

SEC. 104. RENEWAL OF LICENSE.

(a) Application for Renewal-

(1) IN GENERAL- In order to renew a firearm license issued under this title, not later than 30 days before the expiration date of the license, the licensed individual shall submit to the Attorney General (in accordance with the regulations promulgated under paragraph (3)), in a form approved by the Attorney General, an application for renewal of the license.

(2) CONTENTS- An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall include--

(A) a current, passport-sized photograph of the applicant that provides a clear, accurate likeness of the applicant;

(B) current proof of identity of the licensed individual; and

(C) the address of the licensed individual.

(3) REGULATIONS GOVERNING SUBMISSION- The Attorney General shall promulgate regulations specifying procedures for the submission of applications under this subsection.

(b) Issuance of Renewed License- Upon approval of an application submitted under subsection (a) of this section, the Attorney General shall issue a renewed license, which shall meet the requirements of section 103(c), except that the license shall include the current photograph and address of the licensed individual, as provided in the application submitted under this section, and the expiration date of the renewed license, as provided in section 103(c)(5).

SEC. 105. REVOCATION OF LICENSE.

(a) In General- If an individual to whom a license has been issued under this title subsequently becomes a person who is prohibited by subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, from receiving a firearm--

(1) the license is revoked; and

(2) the individual shall promptly return the license to the Attorney General.

(b) Administrative Action- Upon receipt by the Attorney General of notice that an individual to whom a license has been issued under this title has become a person described in subsection (a), the Attorney General shall ensure that the individual promptly returns the license to the Attorney General.

TITLE II--RECORD OF SALE OR TRANSFER

SEC. 201. SALE OR TRANSFER REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFYING FIREARMS.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by section 101 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(bb) Unauthorized Sale or Transfer of a Qualifying Firearm- It shall be unlawful for any person to sell, deliver, or otherwise transfer a qualifying firearm to, or for, any person who is not a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, or to receive a qualifying firearm from a person who is not a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, unless, at the time and place of the transfer or receipt--

`(1) the transferee presents to a licensed dealer a valid firearm license issued to the transferee--

`(A) under title I of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009; or

`(B) pursuant to a State firearm licensing and record of sale system certified under section 602 of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009 established by the State in which the transfer or receipt occurs;

`(2) the licensed dealer contacts the Attorney General or the head of the State agency that administers the certified system described in paragraph (1)(B), as applicable, and receives notice that the transferee has been issued a firearm license described in paragraph (1) and that the license remains valid; and

`(3) the licensed dealer records on a document (which, in the case of a sale, shall be the sales receipt) a tracking authorization number provided by the Attorney General or the head of the State agency, as applicable, as evidence that the licensed dealer has verified the validity of the license.'.

SEC. 202. FIREARM RECORDS.

(a) Submission of Sale or Transfer Reports- Not later than 14 days after the date on which the transfer of qualifying firearm is processed by a licensed dealer under section 922(bb) of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 201 of this Act), the licensed dealer shall submit to the Attorney General (or, in the case of a licensed dealer located in a State that has a State firearm licensing and record of sale system certified under section 602 of this Act, to the head of the State agency that administers that system) a report of that transfer, which shall include information relating to--

(1) the manufacturer of the firearm;

(2) the model name or number of the firearm;

(3) the serial number of the firearm;

(4) the date on which the firearm was received by the transferee;

(5) the number of a valid firearm license issued to the transferee under title I of this Act; and

(6) the name and address of the individual who transferred the firearm to the transferee.

(b) Federal Record of Sale System- Not later than 9 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall establish and maintain a Federal record of sale system, which shall include the information included in each report submitted to the Attorney General under subsection (a).

(c) Elimination of Prohibition on Establishment of System of Registration- Section 926(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the second sentence.

TITLE III--ADDITIONAL PROHIBITIONS

SEC. 301. UNIVERSAL BACKGROUND CHECK REQUIREMENT.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by sections 101 and 201 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(cc) Universal Background Check Requirement-

`(1) REQUIREMENT- Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any person other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector to sell, deliver, or otherwise transfer a firearm to any person other than such a licensee, unless the transfer is processed through a licensed dealer in accordance with subsection (t).

`(2) EXCEPTION- Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the infrequent transfer of a firearm by gift, bequest, intestate succession or other means by an individual to a parent, child, grandparent, or grandchild of the individual, or to any loan of a firearm for any lawful purpose for not more than 30 days between persons who are personally known to each other.'.

SEC. 302. FAILURE TO MAINTAIN OR PERMIT INSPECTION OF RECORDS.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by sections 101, 201, and 301 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(dd) Failure To Maintain or Permit Inspection of Records- It shall be unlawful for a licensed manufacturer or a licensed dealer to fail to comply with section 202 of Blair Holt's Handgun Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, or to maintain such records or supply such information as the Attorney General may require in order to ascertain compliance with such Act and the regulations and orders issued under such Act.'.

SEC. 303. FAILURE TO REPORT LOSS OR THEFT OF FIREARM.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by sections 101, 201, 301, and 302 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(ee) Failure To Report Loss or Theft of Firearm- It shall be unlawful for any person who owns a qualifying firearm to fail to report the loss or theft of the firearm to the Attorney General within 72 hours after the loss or theft is discovered.'.

SEC. 304. FAILURE TO PROVIDE NOTICE OF CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by sections 101, 201, 301, 302, and 303 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(ff) Failure To Provide Notice of Change of Address- It shall be unlawful for any individual to whom a firearm license has been issued under title I of Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009 to fail to report to the Attorney General a change in the address of that individual within 60 days of that change of address.'.

SEC. 305. CHILD ACCESS PREVENTION.

Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by sections 101, 201, 301, 302, 303, and 304 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(gg) Child Access Prevention-

`(1) DEFINITION OF CHILD- In this subsection, the term `child' means an individual who has not attained the age of 18 years.

`(2) PROHIBITION AND PENALTIES- Except as provided in paragraph (3), it shall be unlawful for any person to keep a loaded firearm, or an unloaded firearm and ammunition for the firearm, any 1 of which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce, within any premises that is under the custody or control of that person, if--

`(A) that person--

`(i) knows, or recklessly disregards the risk, that a child is capable of gaining access to the firearm; and

`(ii) either--

`(I) knows, or recklessly disregards the risk, that a child will use the firearm to cause the death of, or serious bodily injury (as defined in section 1365 of this title) to, the child or any other person; or

`(II) knows, or reasonably should know, that possession of the firearm by a child is unlawful under Federal or State law; and

`(B) a child uses the firearm and the use of that firearm causes the death of, or serious bodily injury to, the child or any other person.

`(3) EXCEPTIONS- Paragraph (2) shall not apply if--

`(A) at the time the child obtained access, the firearm was secured with a secure gun storage or safety device;

`(B) the person is a peace officer, a member of the Armed Forces, or a member of the National Guard, and the child obtains the firearm during, or incidental to, the performance of the official duties of the person in that capacity;

`(C) the child uses the firearm in a lawful act of self-defense or defense of 1 or more other persons; or

`(D) the person has no reasonable expectation, based on objective facts and circumstances, that a child is likely to be present on the premises on which the firearm is kept.'.

TITLE IV--ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 401. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) Failure To Possess Firearm License; Failure To Comply With Qualifying Firearm Sale or Transfer Requirements; Failure To Maintain or Permit Inspection of Records- Section 924(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(8) Whoever knowingly violates subsection (aa), (bb), or (dd) of section 922 shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.'.

(b) Failure To Comply With Universal Background Checks; Failure To Timely Report Loss or Theft of a Qualifying Firearm; Failure To Provide Notice of Change of Address- Section 924(a)(5) of such title is amended by striking `(s) or (t)' and inserting `(t), (cc), (ee), or (ff)'.

(c) Child Access Prevention- Section 924(a) of such title, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following:

`(9) Whoever violates section 105(a)(2) of Blair Holt's Handgun Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, knowingly or having reason to believe that the person is prohibited by subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, from receiving a firearm, shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

`(10) Whoever violates section 922(gg) shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.'.

SEC. 402. REGULATIONS.

(a) In General- The Attorney General shall issue regulations governing the licensing of possessors of qualifying firearms and the recorded sale of qualifying firearms, consistent with this Act and the amendments made by this Act, as the Attorney General determines to be reasonably necessary to reduce or prevent deaths or injuries resulting from qualifying firearms, and to assist law enforcement in the apprehension of owners or users of qualifying firearms used in criminal activity.

(b) Maximum Interval Between Issuance of Proposed and Final Regulation- Not later than 120 days after the date on which the Attorney General issues a proposed regulation under subsection (a) with respect to a matter, the Attorney General shall issue a final regulation with respect to the matter.

SEC. 403. INSPECTIONS.

In order to ascertain compliance with this Act, the amendments made by this Act, and the regulations and orders issued under this Act, the Attorney General may, during regular business hours, enter any place in which firearms or firearm products are manufactured, stored, or held, for distribution in commerce, and inspect those areas where the products are so manufactured, stored, or held.

SEC. 404. ORDERS.

The Attorney General may issue an order prohibiting the sale or transfer of any firearm that the Attorney General finds has been transferred or distributed in violation of this Act, an amendment made by this Act, or a regulation issued under this Act.

SEC. 405. INJUNCTIVE ENFORCEMENT.

The Attorney General may bring an action to restrain any violation of this Act or an amendment made by this Act in the district court of the United States for any district in which the violation has occurred, or in which the defendant is found or transacts business.

TITLE V--FIREARM INJURY INFORMATION AND RESEARCH

SEC. 501. DUTIES OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

(a) In General- The Attorney General shall--

(1) establish and maintain a firearm injury information clearinghouse to collect, investigate, analyze, and disseminate data and information relating to the causes and prevention of death and injury associated with firearms;

(2) conduct continuing studies and investigations of firearm-related deaths and injuries; and

(3) collect and maintain current production and sales figures for each licensed manufacturer.

(b) Availability of Information- Periodically, but not less frequently than annually, the Attorney General shall report to the Congress and make available to the public a report on the activities of the Attorney General under subsection (a).

TITLE VI--EFFECT ON STATE LAW

SEC. 601. EFFECT ON STATE LAW.

(a) In General- This Act and the amendments made by this Act may not be construed to preempt any provision of the law of any State or political subdivision of that State, or prevent a State or political subdivision of that State from enacting any provision of law regulating or prohibiting conduct with respect to firearms, except to the extent that the provision of law is inconsistent with any provision of this Act or an amendment made by this Act, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

(b) Rule of Interpretation- A provision of State law is not inconsistent with this Act or an amendment made by this Act if the provision imposes a regulation or prohibition of greater scope or a penalty of greater severity than a corresponding prohibition or penalty imposed by this Act or an amendment made by this Act.

SEC. 602. CERTIFICATION OF STATE FIREARM LICENSING SYSTEMS AND STATE FIREARM RECORD OF SALE SYSTEMS.

Upon a written request of the chief executive officer of a State, the Attorney General may certify--

(1) a firearm licensing system established by a State, if State law requires the system to satisfy the requirements applicable to the Federal firearm licensing system established under title I; or

(2) a firearm record of sale system established by a State, if State law requires the head of the State agency that administers the system to submit to the Federal firearm record of sale system established under section 202(b) a copy of each report submitted to the head of the agency under section 202(a), within 7 days after receipt of the report.

TITLE VII--RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 701. SUBORDINATION TO ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT.

In the event of any conflict between any provision of this Act or an amendment made by this Act, and any provision of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2751), the provision of the Arms Export Control Act shall control.

TITLE VIII--INAPPLICABILITY

SEC. 801. INAPPLICABILITY TO GOVERNMENTAL AUTHORITIES.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall not apply to any department or agency of the United States, of a State, or of a political subdivision of a State, or to any official conduct of any officer or employee of such a department or agency.

TITLE IX--EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 901. EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

HJR 35 – HEALTHCARE FREEDOM ACT

"Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska prohibiting passage of laws that interfere with direct payments for health care services and the right to purchase health care insurance from a privately owned company, and that compel a person to participate in a health care system."

HJR 35 would give Alaskans the opportunity to vote on a Constitutional Amendment prohibiting the passage of laws that would force any person or employer to participate in a particular health care system or plan. Similar measures are under consideration in 35 states.

The Health Care Freedom Act seeks to protect two essential rights. First, it would protect a person's right to participate or not in any health care system, and it would prohibit the government from imposing fines or penalties because of that person's decision. Second, it would protect the right of an individual to purchase – and the right of doctors to provide – lawful medical services without government fines or penalties. HJR 35 would place these essential rights in the state constitution.

Few Alaskans question the need for effective health care reform to improve access, quality and affordability while ensuring that personal health care is patient-driven. Advocates of a larger government role in regulating and providing health insurance and care support forcing individuals to join a government-approved health insurance plan, whether or not they want it, can afford it, or it best meets their personal needs. But the overwhelming majority of Alaskans oppose this mandate.

If the federal government adopts nationalized health care and a significant block of states change their constitutions to protect their citizens, a legal clash may well be winnable for the states. This United States Supreme Court may just be in the mood to protect individual liberty and state sovereignty in such a private matter as personal health care.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: February 8, 2010

TO: Representative Kelly

FROM: Derek Miller

RE: Sectional Analysis for HJR 35 (26-LS1063\R)

A sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill. The bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1.
Proposes to amend Article 1, Section 15 of the State of Alaska Constitution by inserting (a) before the clause.

Section 2.
Proposes to amend Article 1, Section 15 of the State of Alaska Constitution by inserting a new section that would prohibit the passage of laws that prohibit a person or penalize a person for making direct payments to a health care provider for tendering health care services or prohibit or penalize the purchase of health care insurance from a privately owned health care insurance company. The section also prohibits the passage of laws that compel a person, employer, or health care provider to participate in a health care system or that penalizes a person, employer, or health care provider for declining to participate in a health care system. The section exempts a health care system that provides indemnity and medical benefits to injured workers.

Section 3.

Places the amendments proposed by this resolution before the voters of the state at the next general election in conformity with Article 13, Section 1 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska and the election laws of the state.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

ALASKA

January 19, 2010

The Honorable Mike Kelly
Room 513
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Representative Kelly

RE: HJR 35

On behalf of the National Federation of Independent Business/Alaska, I wish to express our support for House Joint Resolution 35. The National Federation of Independent Business/Alaska is the largest small-business advocacy group in our state.

HJR 35 provides for placing an amendment to Alaska's Constitution before voters during the next general election making explicit the individual right to health care free choice. The constitutional amendment would prohibit passage of laws that compel any person or employer to participate in a particular health care system. The proposed constitutional change will also permit the purchase of private insurance and allow Alaskans to pay their own health care provider directly.

NFIB/AK is critically concerned about the cost and access to health care for Alaskans. The current versions of health care reform that have passed the U.S. House and U.S. will not address those issues. The mandates they include clearly impose unreasonable burdens on Alaskans and Alaskan businesses. These mandates cannot address the needs of Alaskans.

This proposal will protect Alaskans from the unconstitutional federal mandates to purchase health insurance that may not meet their needs. It will protect small businesses from being taxed for not providing health insurance designed by the federal government that may not meet the needs of their employees.

Sincerely yours,

Dennis L. DeWitt
Alaska State Director

MEMORANDUM

DATE: February 15, 2010

TO: Representative Mike Kelly

FROM: Derek Miller

RE: Answers to Questions @ 2/9/10 HESS Hearing

1) Does HJR 35 prevent the State of Alaska from initiating a new tier to the state retirement system? How would this constitutional amendment impact future changes to the current State of Alaska retirement system?
This resolution does NOT prevent the State from initiating a new tier to the state retirement system. Changes can be made to the retirement system as long as those changes aren't a mandate on individuals or employers to purchase insurance. The state would also be prohibited from passing laws that penalize or fine individuals or employers from choosing not to purchase coverage.

2) Does this resolution prevent the federal government from making changes to Medicare, Tricare, Indian Health Services, etc...?
This resolution does NOT preclude the federal government from doing anything. Individuals would still have the option to participate in the federal health insurance program. This act simply protects a person's right not to participate.

3) How does this legislation address the problems the HESS committee has looked at? Example: Access, quality, affordability? Are there any fixes in the bill?
HJR 35 prevents a one-size-fits-all universal coverage system. Alaska legislators must work on a targeted set of policy solutions to cover the uninsured and there are reforms that will advance this goal, along with HJR 35.

4) Does this bind future legislatures from adopting the program the federal government comes up with?
Yes, if that program includes mandating individuals and employers to purchase insurance or penalizes individuals for choosing not to purchase insurance. Individuals however, would still have the option to participate in the program.

5) Does this amendment prevent the state from implementing a plan if it penalized employees and employers for not purchasing health insurance?
Yes.

Questions and Answers: ALEC's Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act

For more information, contact Christie Herrera, director of ALEC's Health and Human Services Task Force, at (202) 742-8505 or christie@alec.org.

Why does my state need the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act?
Efforts in our state capitol, and in Washington, are gaining steam to put complete control over your health care in the hands of government bureaucrats and appointed "experts." Government control means you will have less freedom to make the health care choices that are best for you and your family. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act will protect your health care freedom from these threats.

What does the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act do?
The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act will preserve and protect your right to make your own health care and health insurance choices. Specifically, it would protect your right to pay directly for medical care, and it would prohibit any individual or employer from being penalized for not purchasing government-defined health insurance.

Why should my state's constitution protect the right of patients to pay directly for medical care?
Single-payer systems, like in Canada, make it illegal for citizens to go outside of the government's health care plan and contract for their own medical services. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act would make this fundamental provision of Canadian-style, single-payer health care unconstitutional.

Patients should have the right to pay directly for medical services with their own money. When consumers control the dollars, they make the treatment decisions. When the government controls the dollars, they make treatment decisions based on what's best for the government, not what's best for the patient.

The consequences of government making medical decisions are often dire, and sometimes deadly. In New Zealand, breast cancer patients were blocked from accessing the lifesaving drug Herceptin because it cost too much. In Sweden the wait for heart surgery can be as long as 25 weeks. In Canada more than 800,000 patients are currently on waiting lists for medical procedures.

The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act will ensure that patients, not government bureaucrats, decide which doctor to see or what medical treatments to get.

More information about the consequences of single-payer health care can be found in:

Why should my state's constitution block penalties for individuals or employers who don't purchase health insurance?

It is important for people to have health insurance coverage, but a government requirement to purchase health insurance is ineffective, bureaucratic, and costly. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act would strike at heart of individual and employer mandates—implemented in Massachusetts, Hawaii, and elsewhere—that just don't work.

In Massachusetts—a state that imposed an individual mandate and an employer mandate in 2006—more than 1/3 of their uninsured still don't have coverage; health insurance is 40% more expensive than in the rest of the country; it's getting harder to see a doctor since before "reform" was enacted; and legislators expect a $2-$4 billion shortfall over the next decade.

The Massachusetts mandate didn't just affect the uninsured. The Massachusetts government actually told 20% of its already-insured citizens to buy more health insurance, because their existing coverage wasn't "good enough." When the government enforces a requirement for people to buy health insurance, they need to define what "insurance" is. The Cato Institute estimates that a federal individual mandate will force 100 million Americans to drop their existing plans and buy more expensive health insurance that is "good enough" for bureaucrats.

Employer mandates don't yield universal coverage and are harmful for consumers and workers. Hawaii has had a "pay or play" employer mandate for 35 years, and yet the number of uninsured has remained the same because employers shifted jobs to (exempt) part-time employees. And when the government forces businesses to buy health insurance for their workers, it really means higher taxes and fewer jobs. When businesses face cost increases, they'll pass on those costs in the form of increased prices, job cuts, or wage freezes.

An individual mandate would harm patients, and an employer mandate would threaten our fragile economy. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act would protect our citizens from these threats.

Does supporting the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act mean that I favor "free riders" who choose to not purchase health insurance and then show up in the emergency room?
Free riders do present a cost-shifting problem as uncompensated care costs are borne by the already-insured—although researchers estimate uncompensated care to be just 2-3% of overall health costs. The Massachusetts data reveal that at best, an individual mandate didn't affect ER visits at all—and at worst, an individual mandate actually increased ER usage by 17%.

The Massachusetts example shows that an individual mandate alone will not decrease ER usage. One Massachusetts survey reported that although the newly-insured had "insurance coverage" on paper, 90% of them did not have access to care from a non-ER provider. Other reports indicate that average wait times to get appointments with doctors in Boston ranged from 21 days for cardiologists to 70 days for obstetrician-gynecologists. And the Massachusetts Medical Society reports that the average wait to see a primary care doctor is 36 days.

Lawmakers cannot artificially create a growing demand for care without other policies (encouraging "minute clinics," enacting medical liability reform to encourage more doctors to practice, loosening scope of practice laws, etc.) to encourage healthcare supply. And those reforms can be achieved without a bureaucratic, ineffective, and costly requirement to purchase health coverage.

More information about the why an individual mandate won't solve the "free rider" problem can be found in:

Does the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act only benefit insurance companies?
The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act prohibits the forced purchase of private health insurance plans. This benefits patients, not insurance companies.

How will the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act affect Medicaid, SCHIP, or Medicare?
The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act will not in any way impact the funding of, or functioning of Medicaid, SCHIP, or Medicare. The language "This section does not affect laws or rules in effect as of January 1, 2009" clarifies this matter. Citizens will be free to participate in any safety net program (Medicaid, Medicare, SCHIP) to which they are entitled, as well as participate in any proposed programs (the public option or the national health insurance exchange) as they do today. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act simply ensures that citizens are not forced into these programs.

Does the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act enable my state to block any kind of federal health reform?
No. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act would not attempt to block implementation of any federal law as long as the federal law does not require an individual/employer mandate, or forbid patients from paying directly for medical services.

Congress is still debating health reform. Doesn't this solve a problem that doesn't yet exist?
Two hundred and twenty years ago, some founders questioned the need for the Bill of Rights to be included in the U.S. Constitution. Eventually, they realized that the Bill of Rights was essential in protecting the people from a powerful central government. Today, the First through Tenth Amendments preserve our freedoms—and the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act will protect our right to health care freedom in the same way.

But this is more than an issue of federal encroachment. Threats of single-payer health care, or of an individual/employer mandate, also exist at the state level. In 2009, 14 states introduced legislation to enact state-based, single-payer health care. Countless other states have proposed requirements for individuals or employers to purchase health coverage or else pay a fine to the state. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act would make these state-based assaults on patients' rights unconstitutional.

Does supporting the Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act mean that I am against health reform? Doesn't this tie our hands with future reforms?

No. The Freedom of Choice in Health Care Act simply states that the cornerstone of any future health care reform must be the preservation and protection of patients' rights.

GOLDWATER INSTITUTE
in defense of liberty

The Health Care Freedom Act:
Questions & Answers

by Clint Bolick, Litigation Director, Goldwater Institute

The Health Care Freedom Act will appear as a proposed constitutional amendment on Arizona's 2010 election ballot, and similar measures are under consideration in more than 30 other states. With the possibility that Congress will enact some sort of national health insurance legislation, questions are being raised about the scope of the Health Care Freedom Act and its effect should a federal bill become law. In the following pages, Clint Bolick, who helped to author the Health Care Freedom Act, answers frequently asked questions.

Q: What is the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: The Health Care Freedom Act is a proposed amendment to the Arizona Constitution that would preserve certain existing rights that individuals have regarding health care. It was initially proposed by two Arizona physicians, Dr. Eric Novack and Dr. Jeffrey Singer, with drafting assistance from the Goldwater Institute. The measure qualified as a voter initiative on the 2008 ballot, and despite a well-financed opposition campaign, it was defeated by less than one-half of 1 percent of the vote. Changes were made to address concerns raised by the opponents, and the Arizona Legislature voted to refer the revised version to the 2010 ballot.

The American Legislative Exchange Council adopted model legislation based on the Arizona measure, and activists and legislators in at least 35 additional states are pursuing constitutional amendments or statutes based on the Arizona model.

Q: What are the key provisions?

A: Although the precise language varies from state to state, the Health Care Freedom Act seeks to protect two essential rights. First, it protects a person's right to participate or not in any health care system, and prohibits the government from imposing fines or penalties on that person's decision. Second, it protects the right of individuals to purchase—and the right of doctors to provide—lawful medical services without government fine or penalty. The Health Care Freedom Act would place these essential rights in the state constitution (or, in some states, it would protect them by statute).

Q: What motivated the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: No one questions the need for serious health care reform. However, the proponents of the Health Care Freedom Act believe that regardless of how such reform is fashioned, either at the state or federal level, the essential rights protected by the Health Care Freedom Act should be preserved. Many advocates of a larger government role in regulating or providing health insurance support a mandate that would compel individuals to join a government-approved health insurance plan, whether or not they can afford it and whether or not the system best fits their needs. In some countries in which government plays a large role in providing health insurance, medical services are rationed and individuals are prevented or discouraged from obtaining otherwise lawful medical services. Supporters of the Health Care Freedom Act have a variety of perspectives on the form that health care reform should take. But they agree that no matter what legislation is passed, it should not take from Americans their precious right to control their own medical affairs.

Q: By what authority can states pass the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: It is well-established that the U.S. Constitution provides a baseline for the protection of individual rights, and that state constitutions may provide additional protections—and all of them do. For instance, some states provide greater protections of freedom of speech or due process rights. Because the Health Care Freedom Act offers greater protection than the federal constitution, states are allowed to enact it.

Q: Does it matter whether the Health Care Freedom Act is passed as a statute or as a constitutional amendment?

A: A state constitution is the organic law of the state, reflecting the most fundamental values shared by the citizens of the state. Moreover, a state constitutional amendment will ensure the state legislature can never infringe upon the protected rights. So a constitutional amendment is preferable, especially to protect against legislative tinkering. However, for purposes of a federalism defense against excessive federal legislation, it should not matter whether the people of the state have acted through their constitution or by statute.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act attempt to "nullify" federal health insurance legislation?

A: Absolutely not. If federal legislation is enacted, individuals would still have the option to participate in federal health insurance programs. This act simply protects a person's right not to participate.

Q: To the extent that the Health Care Freedom Act conflicts with provisions of federal legislation, isn't the state law automatically preempted by the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution?

A: No. In any clash between state and federal provisions, at least four federal constitutional provisions are relevant. The Supremacy Clause establishes the Constitution as the supreme law of the land and provides that federal laws prevail over conflicting state laws where Congress has the legitimate authority to enact the legislation and where it does not impermissibly tread upon state sovereignty. The federal government will have to demonstrate that its legislation legitimately is derived from congressional authority to regulate interstate commerce. It will also have to show the legislation does not violate the 10th Amendment, which reserves to the states all government power not expressly delegated to the national government; and the 11th Amendment, which protects states from being used as mere instrumentalities of the national government. This constitutional construct is known as federalism.

Q: Are certain provisions of proposed federal health care legislation vulnerable to constitutional challenge even without the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: Yes, in at least three ways. First, to the extent that the legislation purports to regulate transactions that do not directly affect interstate commerce, such as mandating insurance for individuals, Congress may lack authority to do so under the Commerce Clause. Several relatively recent decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court have invalidated federal legislation on this basis. In U.S. v. Lopez (1995), the Court struck down federal laws that restricted guns in school zones; and in U.S. v. Morrison, it struck down a federal statute involving violence against women. In both cases, the Court found the subject matter of the federal laws did not "substantially affect" interstate commerce, so Congress had no power to regulate it under the circumstances presented.

Second, to the extent the legislation interferes with the individual's right to choose health insurance providers, doctors, or lawful medical services, it may violate the right to medical self-determination recognized under the U.S. Constitution. As the Court declared in Griswold v. Connecticut (1965), "We have recognized that the special relationship between patient and physician will often be encompassed within the domain of private life protected by the Due Process Clause." Several of the early abortion cases involved what Justice William O. Douglas, concurring in Doe v. Bolton (1973), described as the "right to seek advice on one's health and the right to place reliance on the physician of one's choice." Whether or not one agrees with those abortion rulings, they establish a strong basis for challenging certain federal and state intrusions.

Third, several recent decisions have invalidated federal laws that "commandeer" state governments to do their bidding. In New York v. United States (1992), for instance, the Court struck down federal rules requiring states to take ownership of certain radioactive waste and to expose themselves to liability. Speaking for the Court, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor ruled that

"no matter how powerful the federal interest involved, the Constitution simply does not give Congress the authority to require the States to regulate." Tellingly, she added "the Constitution protects us from our own best intentions: It divides power among sovereigns . . . precisely so that we may resist the temptation to concentrate power in one location as an expedient solution to the crisis of the day." To the extent that federal health insurance legislation forces states to implement its provisions, it could be subject to robust constitutional challenge.

Q: Could the Health Care Freedom Act provide additional protection against federal health insurance legislation that violates protected rights?

A: Yes. Although the federal government usually prevails in federalism clashes, the current U.S. Supreme Court is the most pro-federalism Court in decades. There are no cases precisely on point, but the Court under Chief Justice John Roberts has sided with the states in at least three major recent federalism clashes. In the case most closely on point, Gonzales v. Oregon (2006), the Court upheld the state's "right-to-die" law, which was enacted by Oregon voters, over the objections of the U.S. Attorney General, who argued that federal law pre-empted the state law. Applying "the structure and limitations of federalism," the Court observed that states have great latitude in regulating health and safety, including medical standards, which are primarily and historically a matter of local concern. Holding that the attorney general's reading of the federal statute would mark "a radical shift of authority from the States to the Federal Government to define general standards of medical practice in every locality," the Court interpreted the statute to allow Oregon to protect the rights of its citizens.

Horne v. Flores (2009) considered a measure adopted by Arizona voters to require English immersion as the state's educational policy for students for whom English is a second language. Lower federal courts had imposed an injunction based on a finding that Arizona was failing to comply with federal bilingual education requirements. The Supreme Court held that injunctions affecting "areas of core state responsibility, such as public education," should be lifted as quickly as circumstances warrant. It observed that "federalism concerns are heightened when . . . a federal court decree has the effect of dictating state or local budget priorities." The Court remanded the case to lower courts to reconsider the injunction.

In Northwest Austin Municipal Utility District No. 1 v. Holder (2009), the Court examined a challenge to section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, which places certain states and localities in a penalty box, requiring them to obtain "pre-clearance" by the U.S. Department of Justice for any changes that impact voting. The Court was sharply critical of the "federalism costs" imposed upon the covered jurisdictions. It avoided the constitutional question by applying the federal law in a way that allowed the utility district to "bail out" from pre-clearance requirements under section 5.

In each of these cases, the Court sided with states in federalism disputes with the federal government.

Q: Will the Health Care Freedom Act affect future state legislation regarding health insurance?

A: Yes. If it is passed as a constitutional amendment, it would prevent any future legislation that infringes upon the rights protected by the amendment.

Q: Won't this be really expensive for the states to defend in court?

A: The Goldwater Institute has offered to defend the constitutionality of the Health Care Freedom Act at no cost to any state. Because legal challenges would involve purely constitutional issues and would not require expensive trials, to the extent that states become involved in litigation, they should be able to do so within existing Attorney General litigation budgets. Moreover, depending on the details of national health insurance legislation, the cost of federal mandates is likely to far exceed the cost of litigation.

Q: Even if the states and individuals did not prevail in a challenge to intrusive federal health insurance legislation, would there be reasons to support the Health Care Freedom Act?

A: Yes. First, if these rights are given additional protection under state constitutions, they will create an absolute barrier to future state legislation that violates those rights. Moreover, efforts to enact the Health Care Freedom Act send a powerful message to our nation's capitol that people at the grassroots take these rights very seriously and intend to protect them.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act impair drug laws?

A: Absolutely not. It protects the right to purchase or provide "lawful" medical services. It does not limit the power of any government to determine what constitutes lawful medical services.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act affect the issue of abortion?

A: No. Again, to the extent that states may regulate abortion under applicable constitutional doctrine and state or federal law, this measure would not alter that power in any way. The Health Care Freedom Act does, however, prevent the government from forcing individuals into health care systems against their will, and matters of conscience may influence such individual decisions.

Q: Does the Health Care Freedom Act affect Veterans' Administration programs, workers' compensation, Medicare, Medicaid, or state health-care systems?

A: Generally, no. The Health Care Freedom Act leaves intact any rules and regulations that were in place as of January 1, 2009. The only way such programs could be affected is if they are changed in the future in ways that violate the freedom of choice protected by the Health Care Freedom Act.

Q: Will this restrict the government from limiting the choice of providers or imposing other limits for the people who do opt-in to a government health care system?

A: No and yes, respectively. If a person voluntarily joins a government health care system, the government may set the terms and conditions, including choice of providers. However, the government cannot prevent a person from purchasing, or a health care professional from providing, lawful medical services outside that system.

Q: Is the Health Care Freedom Act supported financially by insurance companies?

A: No. Many insurance companies support an individual mandate (requiring individuals to buy health insurance or face government fines), which the Health Care Freedom Act would prohibit. An individual mandate guarantees a customer base to the insurance industry. It is present in some legislative proposals as a means to subsidize health insurance for others. If insurance companies play a role in the battle over the Health Care Freedom Act, we expect they will oppose it, possibly with significant resources.

Q: Are there other ways in which freedom advocates can use state constitutions to protect their liberties?

A: Absolutely. State constitutions are full of provisions unknown to the U.S. Constitution that are designed to protect individual liberty and limit the power of government, such as the line-item veto, anti-monopoly provisions, prohibitions against corporate subsidies ("gift clauses"), constraints against earmarks ("special law clauses"), and the like. Citizens and legislatures can amend their state constitutions to add additional protections; and taxpayers can enforce their state constitutional rights in state courts. State constitutions were intended to be the first line of defense in protecting the freedoms of the people. As the power of government grows at every level, we need to use whatever tools are available to us to safeguard our rights. For more on how state constitutions can protect liberty, see the recent Goldwater Institute report, "50 Bright Stars: An Assessment of Each State's Constitutional Commitment to Limited Government."

Dear Senator Reid, Senator McConnell, Speaker Pelosi, and Representative Boehner:

As governors, we believe the reform of the health care system can be very beneficial to our nation's economic future and the well-being of our citizens; however, the current health care bills are a lost opportunity to improve the lives of Americans, create a sustainable system of health care and help stabilize both our state and national economies.

Health care reform should be about fixing our broken Medicaid and Medicare systems; instead, the current health care bills entitle 15-20 million more people to Medicaid. While providing health care to low income individuals is important, the net result of this entitlement expansion will be a significant cost shift to those privately insured around the country. According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), the unfunded mandate to states and territories is $25 billion; although many states disagree with that figure. For example, Texas costs are estimated to be $21 billion over ten years.

The National Association of State Budget Directors (NASBO) has demonstrated states/territories are in no position to comply with the maintenance of effort provisions found in the bills or to accept any increased costs or additional administrative burdens to expand Medicaid. State general fund expenditures have dropped for the second year in a row. The December 2009 survey shows that the budget situation faced by states truly is unprecedented. Many states cannot afford their current share of the Medicaid program, and they will also have to face a funding cliff whenever the stimulus-enhanced FMAP dollars are exhausted. States have already been forced to cut vital services with 30 states cutting education, 29 states cutting Corrections, and 28 states already cutting Medicaid.

Current federal proposals would strip the states of our ability to negotiate Medicaid provider rates, and we believe that states and territories should be allowed to negotiate Medicaid provider rates as found in current law. The pending bills cause states and territories to lose money through the bills' treatment of the prescription drug rebate provisions. States and territories also should not be asked to forego a share of the savings from any new Medicaid rebates collected for the dual eligible population receiving prescription drugs through the Medicare Part D program.

These bills also impose a one-size-fits all federally-designed health insurance exchange and the insurance rating rules tie states' and territories' hands. Health insurance exchanges desired by any state should be state-based and state-designed to ensure maximum state flexibility to design and operate exchange mechanisms that facilitate the purchase of insurance. Utah should not be forced to replicate Massachusetts' exchange, and vice versa. In the same vein, the health insurance rating rules should account for the existing variation in state and territory statutes and the state and territory should retain the authority to provide oversight and adopt tighter rating bands if necessary.

In order to pay for the bills, the legislation cuts Medicare $571 billion in the House bill and $466.7 billion in the Senate bill. Also included are far-reaching massive tax increases which will impact American individuals and families at all income levels. From employer mandates and taxes on high-value insurance plans to taxes on both branded and generic drugs and medical devices, these bills are funded, and thereby the bills' costs are lowered, by taking more from taxpayers and reforming the health care system less. In particular, the Senate's $6.7 billion insurance premium tax will be passed directly to consumers and will impose new costs on Americans who already have coverage. The unfunded mandates to states likely will require many states to necessarily raise taxes, too.

Although CBO has scored the Senate bill at $842 billion and the House bill at $1.3 trillion both bills are full of budget gimmicks. The bills delay spending until the fourth year and exclude the costly "Doc Fix" which ignores the over $200 billion price tag associated with stopping the unavoidable cuts to physicians under the Medicare program.

Governors agree we should work to enhance the quality of health care while making it more affordable and efficient. Unfortunately, the opportunity to truly lower the cost of care has been lost in the rush to try to finish health reform. Both CBO and the Chief Actuary of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services have warned the current legislation will increase the overall costs of health care. The federal government and the states should refocus efforts to lowering the cost of care which will in turn increase coverage, but simply increasing the number of individuals on the public plans without a plan to improve the public programs for participants is irresponsible.

At this juncture, small businesses, seniors, states and territories, and taxpayers have anxiety about Congress' pending health care legislation and rightfully so-- one-sixth of our GDP is at stake. As Republican Governors, we believe in a system which eliminates red tape, empowers consumers to engage in making good health care decisions in the private market, and guarantees affordable coverage for patients with preexisting conditions. Missing from this important legislation is real medical liability reform and provisions which protect seniors' Medicare benefits and access to care. Several states have already implemented medical liability reform with good results; no real medical reform can be accomplished without tort reform. Instead, premiums are increased and small businesses are faced with onerous mandates rather than given the power to pool together and offer health care at lower prices, just as corporations and labor unions do.

Along with the majority of Americans and as leaders of 20 states and territories, we are disappointed with the lack of transparency. We urge you not to circumvent the normal committee process and to conduct an open, fully-bipartisan negotiation. It is time to slow down and pass meaningful health care reform, not hastily prepared partisan legislation which omits reform and saddles American taxpayers for generations to come.

Dear Senators Murkowski and Begich and Congressman Young,

As Congress contemplates final passage of the proposed health care reform legislation, I ask that you consider the concerns raised by my administration on behalf of Alaska's residents. As I have previously communicated to you, both publicly, and through my staff, the current federal proposal does little to address the main health care issues facing Alaskans – cost and access.

The current health care reform legislation before Congress is troubling on several levels. For the many Alaskans currently unable to afford insurance, the proposal, as outlined by Congress, will do nothing but mandate they purchase it, while increasing the insurance premiums. I am particularly concerned with the increase in costs by the pending legislation for Alaska's seniors, families, small businesses, and physicians. Beyond this burden, which is placed squarely on the shoulders of Alaskans, the legislation will put a significant strain on the State of Alaska's General Fund budget.

In addition to the enormous cost Alaskans would face, the proposal does little to address Alaska's health care workforce shortage; requiring individuals to purchase health insurance does not guarantee that people will have access to health care.

Beyond the practical concerns about the benefits of this legislation that I have raised, I am concerned about the constitutionality of forcing Americans to purchase health insurance. As you know, I have directed Alaska's Attorney General to conduct a review of the reform legislation, including this requirement.

So that you are fully aware of the State of Alaska's concerns, I am including two supplementary documents provided to you over the course of the health care reform debate. The first document updates a previously submitted policy review of the healthcare legislation passed by the Senate. The second document provides Alaska's perspective on the so-called "Nebraska Compromise" whereby the cost of Medicaid expansion in Nebraska will be indefinitely supported by the federal government. As you will note, this expansion will cost Alaskans $700 million over the first 20-year window of implementation while Nebraskans will not be responsible for paying anything.

Finally, I ask that you consider securing a 100-percent federal Medical Assistance Percentage for services rendered to Native Americans and Alaska Natives outside of Tribal facilities. Such a provision would be advantageous to Alaska and other states with large Native populations. Supporting documents outlining this request have previously been submitted to you.

Thank you for your serious consideration of my concerns regarding the proposed legislation. I look forward to continue to work with you to ensure that Alaskans are treated fairly, and that the health care needs of the citizens of this great state are adequately met.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

Policy Considerations

Insurance Market Reforms

Guaranteed issue and guaranteed renewal rules would be imposed on all individual and small group plans, and exclusions for preexisting conditions and annual or life time caps would be prohibited. Rating rules would limit variations in premiums to geographic area, tobacco use, age, and family composition.

Guaranteed issue and renewal, modified community rating rules, and preexisting exclusions could be very problematic and potentially drive the cost of insurance premiums up significantly unless there is sufficient participation in the individual and small group markets to spread the risk. It could be anticipated that some employers and low risk individuals may chose to face tax penalties rather than enroll in insurance plans, leading to adverse selection.

Any insurance market rating reforms must provide adequate time to transition to new federal minimum standards and preserve state regulatory authority to ensure consumer protections.

Health Insurance Exchange Sec 1311

By 2014 states would be required to establish, using federal grant funds, an insurance exchange for individual and small group markets. Large employers may participate beginning in 2017. Insurers operating in the state, or multistate plans operating under this proposal, would be required to participate in the exchange. The exchange would develop standardized enrollment forms and formats for comparing plans. Individuals could only receive tax credits if they purchase coverage through the exchange. Exchanges must be fiscally self sustaining beginning Jan. 2015.

A health insurance exchange could assist individuals and groups to comparison shop for insurance and potentially enhance competition in the insurance market. This proposal envisions exchanges as tools for aggregating the risk of individual and small group coverage resulting in premium reductions. Should an exchange be required by law, an Alaska-based and administered exchange, or a state option to join with other states in a multi-state exchange, would be preferred over a national model.

The administrative and regulatory challenges will be very complex particularly considering that the legislation is overly prescriptive of operational requirements. There also appears to be potential for confusion between the role and authority of the Secretary of HHS and state insurance regulatory responsibilities. Becoming fiscally self sustaining can be a significant issue in a state such as Alaska where there is a very limited pool of insurers and the Exchange fees, whether on the plans or individuals, adds additional cost to already high insurance premiums.

The language should be modified to ensure maximum state flexibility to design and operate exchange mechanisms that facilitate the purchase of insurance.

Individual and Employer Mandates

The bill would require individuals to purchase at minimum a basic plan (that would cover 65% of health care expenses) beginning 2013, and would impose a tax penalty (graduated based on income) on those who do not enroll. Employers with more than 50 employees would be required to pay a tax for each employee who receives a tax credit through a state exchange.

Individual Alaskans and Alaska's business community are likely to oppose such mandates, which essentially translate into a new tax on families and individuals who currently do not have health insurance. Also, because the state's workforce includes a high level of seasonal and part-time employees, mandates would be difficult to track and enforce.

Medicaid Expansion Sec 2001

Beginning Jan. 2014 the bill expands Medicaid coverage for all legal residents up to 133% FPL, including childless adults. Income disregards would be prohibited and eligibility would be determined based on adjusted gross income through the annual IRS income tax reporting. The bills impose maintenance of effort requirements on eligibility, which means that eligibility standards and categories of eligibility cannot be reduced or made more stringent. The proposals also mandate new eligibility groups and additional benefits, again creating an additional cost to the state.

While the bill proposes significant increases in FMAP rates (91% in the House bill and about 82% in the Senate bill) to cover increased program costs to states for the expansion, the full cost of expansion is not assumed by the federal government, and there is no guarantee the higher FMAP levels would be maintained. The State of Alaska opposes new unfunded federal mandates. Requiring additional matching state funds is not viable in the current economic recession, the expected states' budget shortfalls anticipated over the next several years, and the competing state General Funds needs for education, corrections, public safety, etc.

New programmatic mandates, as outlined in the bill, will further exasperate this concern.

It is important to note that state participation in Medicaid is voluntary, but if a state chooses to participate then all of the federal requirements must be met. It may be that a state or some states are facing such severe economic difficulty in 2016 when significant state costs begin that opting out of Medicaid participation may become the only viable option in order to maintain other state programs.

Additionally, a huge increase in administrative burden and costs would be assumed by states to manage the expansion without an enhanced FMAP. This burden will be compounded by the proposed new eligibility processes which are very different from the current process, resulting in significantly increased costs to states to implement the change, while maintaining the current eligibility process for other programs, such as food stamps and TANF. In particular, an enhanced FMAP is needed to accommodate costs of enrollment for the currently eligible but not enrolled population.

Any Medicaid expansion should not increase costs to the state or include new unfunded mandates. Congress should include a 100% federal share for expansion.

Medicaid Quality Subtitle I
Establishes Medicaid Quality Measurement Program. Prohibits payments for health care acquired conditions. Establishes a bundled payment demonstration project.

Non-payment for services related to health care acquired conditions should serve as an effective incentive for health care providers and facilities to reduce infection and medical error rates. A demonstration project that comprehensively tests payment bundling to determine viability and effectiveness of this methodology may be a first step toward payment reform. Development of a quality measurement program will support Alaska's vision of moving toward performance-based purchasing for Medicaid.

CHIP(DKC) Sec 2101
The House version ends CHIP in 2014 and children then obtain coverage through the Exchange or Medicaid. The Senate continues CHIP to 2019 and provides a 23% FMAP boost the last three years.

CHIP programs have been well supported throughout the states and considered quite successful in insuring children. It is likely Congress will have significant difficulty ending CHIP as a distinct program and merging it with Medicaid or Exchange coverage. Continuation as proposed by the Senate will save some GF the last three years, however it is unlikely Congress will end the program.

Should these provisions remain intact, the state requires maximum flexibility to transition children into Exchange plans.

Definition of Medical Assistance
Redefines "medical assistance" in the Medicaid program to include both the means of payment of part or all of the cost of medical care and the services and care themselves.

Based on past Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decisions, this proposed change would increase lawsuits against states. As a result, states will lose much of their ability to control programs and expenditures.

This new definition should be deleted.

Maternal and Child Health Sec 2951
Establishes new federal grant program or optional Medicaid service expansion for early childhood home visitation programs

Alaska (DHSS) would seriously consider developing this program if federal resources become available and operational control is minimized at the federal level. Research-based home visitation models have demonstrated good return on investment and positive outcomes for families, including improved maternal and newborn health, child development and early identification of problems, school readiness, juvenile delinquency and family self sufficiency.

Promoting Disease Prevention and Wellness Title II

Authorizes incentives for Medicare and Medicaid enrollees who complete healthy lifestyles programs. Creates new Medicaid state plan option for "health homes" providing care coordination/management and health promotion (among many other services) through integrated care teams for enrollees with multiple chronic conditions. Incentivizes states to cover preventive services and immunizations under Medicaid. Appropriates funding for Childhood Obesity Demonstration Project.

Improving health and wellness behaviors of Medicaid recipients is important for their long term health, though educating recipients and providers about the proposed incentives and also tracking recipient compliance might prove to be a challenge. Also, financial incentives alone for completing a healthy lifestyle program cannot be expected to automatically translate into improved behaviors, but should be accompanied by programs (such as the proposed Childhood Obesity Demonstration Project) that address the barriers individuals face to engaging in healthy behaviors.

Alaska could benefit from a Medicaid option that would provide a mechanism to reimburse for the services of integrated health care teams serving as the medical "health" home for Medicaid recipients with multiple chronic conditions.

Payment Reform Sec 2705

Establishes CMS Innovation Center to test new provider payment models, and pilot program to encourage improved coordination of care between hospitals, physicians, and post-acute providers through payment bundling.

Alaska's private medical sector is behind most states in development of integrated care systems, and there are no health maintenance organizations in our state. Encouraging service integration through new payment mechanisms could help improve the efficiency of Alaska's health care delivery system.

Workforce Title V

Provides 10% Medicare bonus for primary care providers and general surgeons practicing in HPSAs, redistributes unused graduate medical education training slots and encourages residencies in outpatient settings, and proposes a number of committees, studies and pilot projects related to health workforce development. The senate version appropriates significant funds for the National Health Service Corp and various other sections of this expansive provision, including loan repayment and retention funding.

The proposal does not go far enough in supporting the development of the health care workforce. Ensuring an adequate supply and distribution of health care workers is as essential (if not more so) to increasing access to health care as expanding access to health insurance. To support health workforce development, additional resources above and beyond the provisions in these bills need to be provided for training and for recruitment.

It does not appear that the significant reimbursement changes needed to encourage and support primary care practitioners are present in the legislation.

Title V – Fraud, Waste, and Abuse

Proposed strategies for reducing fraud, waste and abuse in Medicare and Medicaid include a new provider enrollment process, data sharing across federal programs, increased penalties, and requirement for providers to implement a compliance program.

Though fraud and abuse are significant concerns, these proposals, in addition to current requirements, will increase costs and increase procedural requirements imposed on providers. These proposals may serve as a deterrent to provider participation in Medicare and Medicaid, further decreasing access to care and services for Alaskan enrollees.

Congress has created fraud and abuse detection and compliance programs in addition to other such programs. It appears that there is minimal coordination or collaborative effort to determine what works and is cost effective. Federal auditors and contractors overlap and overlay with state and other federal fraud and abuse efforts. While this is all well intended, it appears to be duplicative and ineffective. Congress and the administration should examine all of the current programs and proposed programs to find cost effective methods to better combat fraud and abuse across all private and public programs.

Revenue Items

Proposal increases revenue to partially cover cost of service expansion through taxes on insurers, drug companies, medical device makers, laboratories, and high cost insurance plans.

The proposed new taxes on the health care sector is likely to increase costs to the consumers and government health care programs, potentially off-setting the income generated by these new fees.

"Cadillac Plan" taxation in the Senate version would affect AlaskaCare plan members, and raises questions about who or what entity would be liable for the tax, and if the State plans are considered "insurance companies." If the tax is levied on insurance companies, can the Federal Government tax the State? Are retiree health trusts similarly "insurance companies" subject to tax?

Community Living Assistance Services and Supports Sec 8001

Both bills propose a national voluntary long term care insurance financed by wage based premiums. The senate bill requires a long term actuarially sound benefit of at least $50/day.

This may be of some benefit to individuals permit them to remain in their own homes longer. However, a benefit of at least $50/day will not cover the significant cost of assisted living. It will only supplement other payers or perhaps briefly delay eligibility for public programs. To the degree that it delays eligibility for Medicaid or offsets Medicaid payments this will benefit states, but likely not to a significant extent.

Indian Health Care Reauthorization Act Sec 10221

Both bills have differing versions of reauthorization. This is important to Alaska as this act has not been reauthorized for many years and new provisions should strengthen the tribal health care organizations, which benefits the state.

For the first time federal law will recognize that tribal services are no longer linked to provision in a facility, but can be provided in the community. This clearly allows tribal organizations to expand into providing long term care services for their beneficiaries, which several in Alaska wish to do. This is important in securing 100% FMAP for these Medicaid services. (See discussion paper on tribal 100% FMAP). In addition there are programs to increase Indian health care workforce, new models of behavioral health delivery and disease prevention and youth suicide prevention, all items that could benefit Alaska.

Medicaid Pharmacy Changes Sec 2503

Beginning January 2010, both the House and Senate bills increase the federal Medicaid drug rebate minimum level for brand and generic products.

While these proposals will increase the federal rebate dollars, the net effect will be to decrease the state drug rebate collection. Currently Alaska and many other states collect supplemental drug rebates above the federally mandated amount. Increasing the federally mandated base rebate lessens or eliminates the supplemental rebate states have been collecting. In addition, the savings attributable to the new rebate bands accrue only to the federal government. These savings should be shared between the state and federal government as under current law.

Increase Funding for Federally Qualified Health Clinic Sec 5601

The House bill increases funding by $12 billion over 5 years and the Senate bill provides $33 billion over 6 years.

New funding can be used to expand current public capacity as well as build new capacity. This will be critical in creating access for Medicare, Medicaid and tribal beneficiaries as the other provisions in these bills do not significantly address workforce and private reimbursement issues.

Considering Alaskans' reliance on FQHCs, it is imperative that the state receive a large allocation.

Medicare Subtitle B

The bills phase in payment reductions to Medicare Advantage plans, develop quality measures and payment models, begins to reduce the 'doughnut hole' for Medicare pharmacy and other extensive changes.

The changes to Medicare Advantage plan reimbursement will likely have minimal impact upon Alaskans. It appears that the few plans operating in Alaska were recently pulled. Closing the "doughnut hole", while apparently phased in slowly, will eventually provide significant out of pocket cost savings for Medicare eligible Alaskans that have significant drug usage. Individual savings will be determined by the rate at which the "doughnut" hole is closed. This has yet to be resolved by the legislation.

These bills do not address the physician payment reductions that result from the Sustainable Growth Formula. Until resolved, it is likely to dampen provider willingness to serve Medicare eligible patients.

State as Employer Considerations

1. Excise tax on insurers for employer-sponsored health plans: a 40% tax on value above $8,000/individual and $21,000/family for 2013 and indexed on CPI beginning 2014. The threshold amounts will be increased for retirees and employees engaged in high risk professions by $750/individual and $2000/family.
    - Value is defined broadly as the aggregate value of all employer-sponsored health insurance coverage, including coverage in the form of reimbursement under a Health flexible spending/reimbursement arrangement, dental and vision coverage and other supplementary coverage. First, it is not clear that state governmental plans are included; clarification is necessary. Second, if the state is subject to this bill and provision, it would be taxed to some degree.

2. New fees on segments of health care sector including annual fee on health insurance sector.
    - Unclear whether state's self-insured healthcare programs would be included as insurance sector.

3. Plans report proportion of premium dollars spent on administrative expenses.
    - Self-insured plans use a per capita fund accumulation and are not-for-profit, unclear if this will affect the state.

4. Large employers prohibited from annual and lifetime limits.
    - State plans have annual limits for some coverage, lifetime unlimited for Actives, $2mm for Retirees.

5. Preventive care must be covered 100% or value based design.
    - Will require changes to state's plans. "Preventive Care" is ill-defined; costs unknown. "Value-based" also poorly defined, but may result in lower payments on behalf of members who do not follow protocols. Impact unknown.

6. Maximum out-of-pocket limit.
    - Will require changes to state's plans. Impact unknown.

7. Plan applicability uncertain – Retiree Plans.
    - Uncertain if applicable to retiree plans. Alaska is a rare pre-funder of retiree health obligations. Uncertain if SB125 contributions and/or investment returns will be considered in measuring excise tax triggers. Plan design changes may violate Alaska Constitution if perceived as "diminishment."

Health Care Reform Medicaid Cost Gap Analysis

Applying the "Nebraska Compromise" to Alaska

Health care reform, as passed in the Senate, contained the so-called "Nebraska Compromise." This provision states that new Medicaid spending in Nebraska would be funded at 100% by the federal government. The Alaska Medicaid Budget Group performed an analysis to determine the amount of funding that the state would receive for the newly eligible Medicaid population should Alaska benefit from a similar provision. Over the 20-year period from 2017 to 2036, the cost of covering this newly eligible Medicaid population will amount to over $700 million in state general funds. In this scenario, additional annual state general fund spending will increase from $17 million in 2017 to approximately $60 million in 2036.

These figures were determined by using the most recent 3-year average of uninsured adults; estimated population growth among adults; estimated health care inflation (3.4%); and an estimated increase in utilization of Medicaid services (2.1%/year).

Children at or below 133% of the Federal Poverty Level are currently eligible for Medicaid and are not included in the newly eligible group. In determining these figures, the Alaska Medicaid Budget Group assumed that only 75% of newly eligible non-Natives adults and 50% of newly eligible Native adults would enroll.

Care provided at Indian Health Service (IHS) facilities for current and newly eligible Alaska Native adults would be covered at a 100% Federal Medical Assistance Percentage (FMAP). The above calculation assumes that two-thirds of all care for newly enrolled Alaska Natives would be provided at IHS facilities and one-third of care would be provided at non-IHS facilities. Care provided at non-IHS facilities would be reimbursed at the FMAP set for the newly eligible non-Native population.

Finally, it is difficult to assume the final cost to the state per new Medicaid enrollee. In response, the Alaska Medicaid Budget Group assumed that new enrollee cost would amount to $3540 per person in 2009. This amount equates to the average costs for the Family Medicaid and Transitional Medicaid groups. Given the data currently available, this is the most reasonable cost estimate available; actual costs may be much higher.

Health Care Policy and Constitutional Rights:

The Health Care Freedom Amendment

Testimony Presented Before the Alaska House Judiciary Committee

March 11, 2010

by Dave Roland

Chairperson Ramras, Vice-Chairperson Dahlstrom, and members of the committee, I thank you for the opportunity to offer this testimony. My name is Dave Roland, and I am a policy analyst for the Show-Me Institute, a non-profit, non-partisan, Missouri-based think tank that supports free-market solutions to the state's social challenges. Prior to joining the Show-Me Institute, I spent several years in Washington, D.C., gaining expertise in constitutional law as a litigator with the Institute for Justice, a public-interest law firm that specializes in the protection of Americans' liberties. The ideas I will offer today are my own, and should not be taken as necessarily representative of the organizations with which I am affiliated.

Among the elements of the health care reform bill being considered by Congress is a requirement that almost every adult would either have to purchase a health insurance policy or face punitive fines to be collected by the Internal Revenue Service.[1] There has been widespread debate in legal circles about whether the courts would uphold such a requirement, but lawmakers in at least 33 states are trying to do what they can to insulate their citizens from such a requirement. In Alaska, members of this legislature are considering HJR 35, which very closely resembles the legislation known in other states as "Health Care Freedom" amendments. HJR 35, if passed by this legislature, would offer citizens the opportunity to modify the Alaska Constitution to formally recognize their right to decide for themselves whether they will participate in any private health care system. Under this amendment, the government would not be permitted to prevent citizens from offering or accepting direct payment for health care services, and neither could it substantially limit the purchase or sale of health insurance in private health care systems.[2]

[1] The proposed bill makes exceptions for members of religious groups whose beliefs forbid the acceptance of modern medical treatments.

[2] It appears from the current text of the Health Care Freedom Amendment that the Legislature would retain the ability to pass a comprehensive, tax-based, single-payer public health insurance system, so long as in doing so it did not either outlaw the sale or purchase of private insurance policies or restrict citizens' abilities to offer or accept direct payment for health care services.

My testimony today is not intended as an endorsement of any bill, but rather to explain the policies implicated by the state and federal bills just mentioned. I will particularly address the constitutional issues raised by one element of the federal health care reform bill, the way that courts would likely resolve those constitutional issues, and the likely impact of the Health Care Freedom Amendment on the courts' resolution.

Should Everyone Have Health Insurance?

The linchpin of the current federal health care reform bill is a requirement that almost every adult in the nation must obtain a health insurance policy that would meet certain requirements imposed by Congress. In addition to the fact that many Americans currently carry health insurance policies that would not fit the requirements Congress is considering, there are also many who have reasons for choosing to remain uninsured. A brief look at the basic mechanics of the health insurance industry will help illustrate why some people make these choices.

Insurance is gambling, both for the insurers and the insured. The insurer looks at your profile and makes a careful statistical determination of how much your health care is likely to cost them over a given period of time. They then charge you a premium that - if their calculations are correct - would allow them not only to cover your expenses, but also to pay their employees and to make a profit on top of that. Their risk lies in the possibility that you might incur costs greater than they expect and/or sooner rather than later. But the odds are heavily stacked in their favor. These companies are very good at making their guesses, and the large pool of resources that results from their customer base means that, just like a casino, they almost always come out ahead.

For the insured, there is also a gamble involved. If, in fact, the insurance companies are correct (as they usually are), the insured will end up paying far more for their health care than they would have if they had remained uninsured. This is the risk they assume in order to gain peace of mind that, should a catastrophic injury or illness occur sooner rather than later, they will be taken care of. But, financially speaking, the great majority of people would be better off putting 85% of what their insurance premium would have been into a savings account earmarked for health care expenses.[3] Then, whenever health care costs emerge, the money is ready to be used - and, importantly, it can be used for any procedure and any health care provider the insured prefers.[4]

So the health insurance trade off is, the insured sacrifices extra money and a significant range of choice as to providers and procedures for the assurance that they will have their expenses covered if they should need treatment sooner than they would otherwise be able to pay for it. It is not a necessity, and a large majority of people would ultimately be better off if they simply saved their money instead of giving it to insurance companies. That is why it very easily could make economic sense to forgo health insurance.

While some people may not carry health insurance because it is unaffordable, many Americans choose not to purchase health insurance. Some people's religions may not permit the use of modern medicine, while others may not believe it to be effective. Still others are simply confident enough in their propensity for health that they are willing to risk the costs of illness or injury in order to direct their money to concerns that they believe to be more pressing for themselves and their families. And there are some who, recognizing that most people pay far more to insurance companies than they are ever likely to need for their own treatment costs, would prefer to self-insure by creating their own health fund. For each of these people, a congressional directive to purchase a health insurance policy would mean giving up a huge amount of money — as well as a significant amount of autonomy and privacy — committing themselves to a contract for goods and services that they do not want, and in some cases may be prohibited from using.

The Federal Constitution

As we all remember from high school, congressional authority is limited to those powers explicitly granted by the Constitution.[5] In this case, the question would be whether the [3] Even the best of health insurance companies usually only apply about 85% of the premiums they receive on their clients' health care costs.

[4] Most health insurance companies place limits on the doctors from whom a policy holder can receive treatment as well as on the types of treatment that are covered.

[5] These eighteen powers are enumerated in Article I, section 8, of the U.S. Constitution: 1) To tax and spend for "the common defense and general welfare of the United States"; 2) To borrow money; 3) To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states; 4) To establish rules governing naturalization of citizens and bankruptcies; 5) To coin money and regulate its value; 6) To punish counterfeiting; 7) To establish a postal service

Constitution gives Congress the authority to punish citizens for refusing to purchase health insurance.

Those backing the bill suggest that this authority is part of part of Congress' power "to regulate commerce ... among the several states[.]"[6] It is true that since 1937 courts have generally interpreted this power very broadly,[7] resulting in a U.S. Supreme Court decision that a farmer named Filburn was bound by agricultural regulations regardless of whether he took his grain to market.[8] More recently, the Supreme Court also held that Angel Raich was subject to federal drug laws even though her medical marijuana was homegrown and neither bought nor sold.[9]

But courts have also recognized that congressional authority under the Commerce Clause is not infinite. In U.S. v. Lopez, the Supreme Court held that the Commerce Clause did not permit Congress to create a federal law banning possession of firearms in a school zone.[10] In U.S. v. Morrison, the court struck down a law that addressed the subject of gender-based violent crime.[11] The primary reason that the court struck down the laws in Lopez and Morrison was that the subjects Congress sought to regulate lacked a clear nexus with commerce among the states.

Even though much of the health insurance industry is handled within the bounds of individual states,[12] courts will likely find that health insurance as a whole is an issue with a sufficient connection to interstate commerce to permit congressional regulation. But if Congress passes a bill mandating that individuals must either buy health insurance or face financial and post roads; 8) To establish copyright laws; 9) To constitute a federal court system inferior to the Supreme Court; 10) To punish piracies on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations; 11) To declare war and make rules concerning captures on land and water; 12) to raise and support armies; 13) To provide a navy; 14) To make rules to govern the army and navy; 15) To provide for the use of militia to enforce laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; 16) To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; 17) To govern the District of Columbia; and 18) to make laws "necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers".

[6] U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8.

[7] Prior to 1937, the power of the federal government was regularly held in check by the Supreme Court. A number of factors, including President Franklin Roosevelt's threat to pack the court with his own appointments in order to ram through New Deal legislation, led to what has been termed a "constitutional revolution". For the past 73 years, the general rule has been for courts to presume that the Commerce Clause grants Congress nearly unlimited authority to regulate the behavior of citizens—particularly as pertains to their ability to obtain, keep, and use property.

sanctions, courts will still have to answer a very specific question: Does the power to regulate interstate commerce give Congress the authority to penalize citizens who do not wish to engage in commerce?

As Prof. Randy Barnett pointed out at a recent Heritage Foundation debate,[13] the Supreme Court has never faced such a question, so we cannot be certain of its answer. I tend to agree with Barnett that the Court's response will likely hinge on the solicitor general's ability to explain which aspects of citizens' lives (if any) would remain beyond the reach of congressional regulation if the Court permitted these mandates to be enforced. If the Solicitor General offers a reasonable response that acknowledges clear limits to the powers available under the Commerce Clause, the Court may sustain the individual health insurance mandate. If not, I believe that the majority of justices will strike the mandate as unconstitutional.

Some professors have argued that even without relying on the Commerce Clause, authority for the health insurance mandate could be found in Congress' power "to lay and collect taxes ... [to] provide for the ... general welfare of the United States",[14] or even in the Sixteenth Amendment's authorization of an income tax.[15] I disagree. While taxation power might permit the creation of a tax-based public health insurance system like Medicare that all workers pay into,[16] this is not what is anticipated in the insurance mandate under consideration; it is neither tax-based, nor part of a public health insurance system, nor would the alleged "tax" be collected from all workers. Furthermore, even if the fees for failing to purchase health insurance were classified as a tax authorized by Article I, section 8, Congress is specifically denied the authority to impose capitation taxes "unless in proportion to the census," a requirement that the current proposal does not seem to meet.[17]

[14] U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8.

[15] U.S. Const. Amendment XVI.

[16] This might be possible, though politically impractical. First, they could not apply such a tax against everyone. It would have to take the form of some kind of an income tax or else it would violate the constitutional prohibition on "capitation" or "direct" taxes. See Article I, section 9. So, in order to mirror the effect of the current proposal while relying on the taxing power, they'd have to jack up the income tax rates by 2% across the board, then offer a 2% tax credit for anyone who obtains a qualifying health insurance policy. That would likely pass muster, constitutionally, but it would almost guarantee an enormous political backlash because people hate having their taxes raised - even if many would have a relatively easy way to get out from under it. This approach, by the way, would also make it much harder to exempt people with religious reasons for not obtaining health insurance, which would be another major knock against such a plan.

[17] It might be argued that the penalties for failing to obtain health insurance could be considered an "income tax" of the sort that is exempted from the limitations of Article I, section 9. I think that such a penalty could not be

The next question courts would have to answer is whether the issue should be reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment.[18] This is shakier ground for a constitutional defense than one would really like to have. While the original intent of the Tenth Amendment was clearly to keep the federal government in its proper, limited sphere, the test of the amendment states that it applies only where courts have determined that a specific power has not been delegated to Congress. If a court has already located congressional authority in either the Commerce Clause or the taxing power, it is a near certainty that it will also determine that the Tenth is simply inapplicable as a barrier against the federal statute.

After considering the question of whether Congress generally has the authority to create an individual health insurance mandate, the question will then become whether such a mandate violates liberties preserved under the first nine amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The relevant provisions are contained in the First, Fifth, and Ninth Amendments.[19] The Supreme Court has previously recognized that the Constitution protects citizens' rights to associate with others of their choosing,[20] to enter into contracts, to make their own decisions regarding health care, and, of course, their right to privacy.[21] A violation of any one of these rights could be sufficient to invalidate the health insurance mandate.

Unfortunately, merely establishing an infringement of constitutional rights does not usually end the analysis. In fact, the Supreme Court has long permitted infringement of these kinds of liberty, as long as the government could advance an interest in doing so that a majority of the justices considered to be sufficiently important. In the case of the individual health insurance mandate, the government's interest is to make insurance premiums more affordable and, thus, to increase the number of people with access to health care. The courts will have to balance this interest against the liberty and privacy interests violated when citizens are forced to purchase coverage that they do not want and may have no intention of using. My opinion is that, particularly given the extremely high value that several current justices place on protecting the considered an "income tax" because it would be selectively applied and collected separately from the general income tax authorized in the Sixteenth Amendment.

[18] U.S. Const. Amendment X.

[19] While the U.S. Supreme Court has rarely discussed the Ninth Amendment as a substantive source of individual liberties, its text—"The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people"—suggests that it should be seen as such. See Justice Arthur Goldberg's concurring opinion in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

[21] U.S. Const. Amendments V and XIV (Due Process Clause).

privacy rights of individuals, it will be difficult for the Solicitor General to convince a majority that the potential for lower health insurance premiums (because, in fact, there is no guarantee that the plan will work in the way Congress intends) can justify forcing someone to disclose private information about themselves and their health care.

The Health Care Freedom Amendment

If everything I've discussed above fails to persuade the courts to strike down the individual health insurance mandate, then the arguments will come down to state constitutional protections. This is one reason (but only one reason) why Alaskans should take the Health Care Freedom Amendment seriously.

The Bill of Rights in the U.S. Constitution does not demarcate the outer limits of individual freedoms to which citizens are entitled. Rather, it merely establishes a baseline of liberty that cannot be violated by any level of government. The states, however, each have their own constitutions, and those documents can—and frequently do—provide an even higher level of protection for liberty than is afforded by the U.S. Constitution. Generally speaking, these additional protections are only applied against the actions of state and local governments, but if Congress tried to enforce a law that directly violated the terms of the Health Care Freedom Amendment (or some other freedom guaranteed under a state constitution), the courts would have to decide whether a state's guarantee of liberty to its citizens can protect them from actions of the federal government that would violate that liberty.

This is currently an open question. There are cases in which federal courts have noted that the application of a federal statute could result in a violation of certain freedoms secured under state constitutions. In several of these cases, the courts required the government to come up with a sort of alternative structure that would respect the state constitutions – but in each of those cases there were also usually indications from Congress that they wanted to avoid violating state constitutional freedoms. In the case of the individual health insurance mandate, it would seem clear that Congress is not concerned with respecting state constitutional protections. This would set up a battle under the U.S. Constitution's Supremacy Clause.

The Supremacy Clause, found in Article VI, reads as follows:

> "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any state to the Contrary notwithstanding."

Of course, the central question here will be just how the courts will apply this language. The answer may not be as simple as it seems. Despite the text's indication that state laws and constitutions are subject to federal laws and treaties, a look into history shows that several important Founders rejected the idea that Congress could always enforce laws deemed unconstitutional by the states. When in 1798 Congress passed the Alien and Sedition Laws, which made it a criminal offense to publicly criticize certain government officials, James Madison—widely known as the Father of the Constitution—and Thomas Jefferson—author of the Declaration of Independence and the sitting Vice-President—drafted the Kentucky and Virginia Resolutions, in which those states rejected the constitutionality of the acts.[22] The U.S. Supreme Court was not called upon to resolve the question of whether states could legitimately deny congressional authority in this way, but up until the Civil War different states repeatedly adopted similar measures.[23]

Without any directly applicable judicial precedent, some legal scholars have attempted to guess at how the justices might be inclined to resolve such a conflict between state constitutional liberties and federal laws. One of my colleagues, Clint Bolick, a co-founder of the Institute for Justice and the current leader of a constitutional litigation center at the Goldwater Institute in Arizona, has noted a recent judicial trend in which the Supreme Court has shied away from allowing federal laws to trump state constitutional requirements.[24] This might well signal that

[22] Madison later said that, in his opinion, these resolutions were primarily useful as tools through which the power of Congress could be called into question—though not necessarily nullified. He believed that similar resolutions would signal to other states the potential necessity of modifying the current system of government to eliminate further abuses.

[23] Indeed, South Carolina's attempted nullification of a tariff passed by Congress in 1832 nearly sparked secession and armed conflict.

[24] Instead, the Supreme Court has generally tried to avoid finding a direct conflict between federal laws and state constitutional provisions. For example, in Wheeler v. Barrera, 417 U.S. 402 (1974), Congress had passed Title I, which required public educational funds to be distributed to disadvantaged children regardless of the schools they attended. This conflicted with Missouri's constitutional prohibitions against public dollars being sent to religious schools. Rather than address this apparent conflict, the Supreme Court noted that the legislative history of Title I suggested that Congress was sensitive to the presence of such state constitutional provisions and that they did not intend to require violation of those provisions. To get around the problem, the Court decided that a separate public the justices are inclined to protect freedoms enshrined in state constitutions, but the only way we will be sure is if the U.S. Supreme Court is presented with a direct conflict. The Health Care Freedom Amendment, if adopted by the people of this state, could provide just such a conflict.

Summing Up

Should Congress ultimately pass a health care reform bill along the lines of the one currently being debated, I think it will take 2-3 years for a case evaluating the constitutionality of the individual health insurance mandate to reach the U.S. Supreme Court. The likely scenario is that a whole host of lawsuits will be filed in every federal circuit. The federal district courts are likely to deal with the issues quickly, render a decision, and kick the cases up to the circuit courts. Once the circuit courts have weighed in on the constitutional issues, the Supreme Court will choose the set of facts on which it will base its consideration of the law. Keep in mind that it doesn't have to take the first case to get resolved by a circuit court, although it only takes four justices agreeing in order to get a case in front of the Supreme Court.

When the issue gets in front of the Court, I believe that proponents of the mandate (in other words, the Solicitor General) will have to satisfactorily answer at least two vitally important questions if they are to win a majority: 1) If the Commerce Clause permits Congress to force individuals to purchase goods and services that they do not want, where is the limit of that power - if, indeed, a limit can be articulated?, and 2) Is Congress's interest in (potentially) lowering the cost of health insurance premiums sufficiently compelling as to justify forcing individual citizens against their will to associate with others and to divulge to them all sorts of private information about one's health?

I believe, based on the current composition of the Supreme Court, that the individual health insurance mandate would probably be found unconstitutional, either as a violation of the Commerce Clause or the individual right to privacy. I cannot see any of the four conservative-leaning justices (Roberts, Alito, Scalia, or Thomas) approving such a mandate as an exercise of the Commerce Clause, nor can I see any of the four liberal-leaning justices (Stevens, Ginsburg, Breyer, and Sotomayor) disapproving the mandate. The deciding factor, then, will be whether fund – which would not be part of the state treasury – would be established as the conduit for Title I funds to the assistance of needy children in religious schools.

Justice Kennedy will go for or against it, and I believe that will largely depend on how the Solicitor General articulates what limits might remain on congressional authority if the mandate is approved.

A more interesting question is how the justices might vote on the question of whether the right to privacy precludes the imposition of an individual health insurance mandate. Justices Thomas and Scalia have both rejected the notion that there is any such right to be found in the constitution, making it unlikely that they would rely on this right to strike down legislation as unconstitutional. On the other hand, several of the more liberal justices have previously written passionately about the importance of the right to privacy. It is possible that the privacy question might result in a majority of justices voting to strike down the mandate, but with Scalia and Thomas dissenting on this point.

Either way, it is my opinion that the Supreme Court is likely to find that an individual health insurance mandate violates the provisions of the U.S. Constitution. While the Supreme Court is thus unlikely to reach the question of whether the Health Care Freedom Amendment would be seen as an additional bulwark for liberty, the adoption of this amendment (and others like it in our sister states) would at a minimum offer the potential for a case that would test the boundaries of state sovereignty under our current constitutional system.

House Joint Resolution 38

"Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska relating to and increasing the number of members of the House of Representatives to 44 and the number of members of the Senate to 22."

" ....Each house district shall be formed of contiguous and compact territory containing as nearly as practicable a relatively integrated socio-economic area...." Alaska Constitution Article VI, Section 6, titled Legislative Apportionment.

HJR 38 will put a constitutional amendment before the voters in the 2010 general election that would increase the size of the legislature to 44 representatives and 22 senators. Upon voter approval, the measure would apply to the 2012 determination of new boundary's for the election district.

In the first 50 years of statehood, Alaska has not changed the 20 senator, 40 representative size of its legislative body, the smallest bicameral legislature in the nation. In this time span, the population of the state has more than tripled. Most significantly, the population increase is disproportionate, strongly favoring large urban areas over rural and small community areas. The task then of applying the proscriptions of Article VI, above, has correspondingly become more difficult and contentious. Except for the 1960 reapportionment, all subsequent reapportionments have faced successful legal challenges, requiring boundary adjustments and on several occasions, a court constructed plan.

Federal protections of the U.S. Voter Rights Act of 1965 for large minority concentrations further complicate Alaska's reapportionment process. Indeed, they can act to counter the Section 6 requirements. Rural election district distortions are evident in the current plan. There is a probability that the new population distribution of the 2010 census cannot reconcile Section 6 and the Voter Rights Act without increasing the size of the legislature.

Between 1960 and 2006, twenty nine states have changed the size of their legislative body. For the nine states with small populations similar to Alaska (509,000 to 1,429,000), the average size of their legislative bodies is 134 members.

Another measure of the effect of the state's growth and complexity on the work of the legislature is its budget responsibilities. Legislative expenditures for government programs and projects has risen from a figure of $104 million in FY 61 to somewhere in the neighborhood of $7 billion currently. This is an increase from $2700 per capita in 1961 nominal dollars to $10,000 per capita today.

For these reasons, putting a proposal to increase the size of the legislature before the voters is timely and merited.

CSHJR38(STA) proposes amending the Constitution of the State of Alaska by ballot proposition in the next general election which would increase the membership of the Alaska Senate by two Senators and the Alaska House of Representatives by four Representatives. If this resolution passes, the ballot proposition would be voted on in the November 2010 general election. If the ballot proposition passes, the Redistricting Board would create their redistricting plan using the new number of districts. For purposes of this fiscal note, it is assumed that the number of Legislators elected to office for the 28th Legislature would total 66. Please note the figure included for capital outlay is for the remodeling cost to accommodate the increased number of Legislators in the Capitol. The figure 1,500.0 is used for remodeling costs. Depending on which design was adopted, costs could vary. If a decision were made to create an addition to the Capitol or to construct a new building the figure would be much higher and would likely be included in a capital appropriation.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

FISCAL NOTE #2

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. CSHJR 38(STA)
2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

Personal Services - 6 Additional Legislators - 482.0
Assume for staff allocation 1/2 Legislators are in the majority and 1/2 are in minority.
17 full-time staff and 4 part-time staff to Legislators; LAA support staff include full time - 1 attorney; Session only - 2 LIO Officers,1 Enroller or Help Desk Technician - 1,422.0 Total increase in Personal Services - 1,904.0.

Travel - Cost to move 6 Legislators and families - 30.0; Costs to relocate an additional 17 full-time and 3 part-time staff to Legislators - 15.0; Cost of increased session per diem - 103.0; Icrease in Legislature's travel budget related to 6 new Legislators - 30.0; Total increase in Travel - 178.0.

Contractual - Allowance Accounts for 2 Senators at 10.0 and 4 Representatives at 8.0 = $52.0; Connectivity for computers, phones, faxes, and printers - 33.0. Increase in office space for either expanding existing Legislative Information Offices or establishing new offices - 175.0. Total increase in contractual - 260.0.

Supplies - Cost to equip two offices per Legislator and their staff, one office in the district and one office in the Capitol. Items include desktop computers, one laptop per office, printers , hardware, software, which will be shipped to and from the Capital City each year, and one set of furniture for a district office and one set for the Capitol. Furniture items include desks, chairs, phones, file cabinets, fax machines - Total cost to equip offices - 90.0.

Capital Outlay - Costs to remodel the existing chambers in the Capitol and reconfigure space in the Capitol Complex to accommodate new offices would likely, at a minimum, be at least 1,000.0. For purposes of this fiscal note 1,500.0 is used for remodeling costs. Depending on which design was adopted, costs could vary. The cost could be much higher if the Legislature decided to build an addition to the Capitol or construct a new building.

Two legislative redistrictings - one in 2012 and perhaps another in 2014

Alaska could go through two legislative reapportionments after the 2010 census. The first would be the result of our own state districting process. Inclusive within this process will be contentious litigation that always results. And in Alaska, it has not been infrequent that the Court has taken control and redrawn the plan by appointed court masters.

Now comes the test! Any Alaska plan, or even election laws must be pre-cleared by the U.S. Justice Department civil rights division to ensure it complies with the requirements of the federal U.S. Voters Rights Act of 1965, and subsequent revisions. Alaska is in a special category with nine others states (all in the Old South). There were a number of reasons why we earned inclusion, but one was an "English language" test for voting in our state constitution. This was never implemented, and subsequently repealed. Note: In fact, Alaska did not even implement voter registration until the election of 1968.

Nevertheless, getting tangled up with U.S. Justice preclearance on the state 2012 plan could cause delay preventing resolution and implementation prior to the 2012 elections. The result of delay would be some kind of interim plan for 2012, i.e. use of the existing plan, the state proposed plan, or temporary court imposed plan.

The problem been with us since before statehood, and is built into the small size of our House and Senate

Alaska's increasingly skewered districting map is a natural result of a very small but fixed number of our 20 member Senate and 40 member House (smallest in the nation). The size of the House and Senate is fixed. However, the state's population has grown much faster in the urban areas, along the railbelt, and in coastal cities like Juneau, than in the smaller communities scattered along the extensive Alaska coastline and in the vast rural Interior of the state. This means districts in urban centers become more numerous and compact, but rural districts become fewer and must become huge and ungainly to gather sufficient population for a district, taking in regions completely unrelated and separated from each other.

For example, Sen. Johnny Ellis, D-Anchorage, can walk his downtown Anchorage district North and South, East and West, in just a few hours. Sen. Al Kookesh, D-Angoon, must catch a plane to Juneau (or ferry), catch Alaska Airlines to Anchorage, and then fly to Aniak of the Lower Kuskokwim or Holy Cross on the Lower Yukon. This district is half the size of Alaska.

- Continued on next page

At statehood our first district plan for the House fit the "constitutional socio-economics criteria" almost perfectly. We wonder whether constitutional crafters of this first plan (done at the 1955 Constitutional Convention) knew that an increase in the House from 24 members to 40 members would fit the existing socio-political map so well, making most happy. Nevertheless, it did just that "political job. It kept everyone happy, and that may have been especially important during the time of Congressional review and creation of the Statehood Act (as well as our own Alaska local vote on statehood).

> Note: The constitutional committee charged with drafting the scheme was not without its bit of controversy and regional politics, i.e. Anchorage against everyone else, the latter reportedly wanting a plan, at least partially, radiating out from turban centers.
> So, to avoid the "others," meaning Anchorage delegates, reportedly Fairbanks Delegate George Cooper and Nenana/Yukon Delegate Jack Coghill, put together a little mid-night caucus in Delegate George Cooper's basement. Meanwhile, one of their faith kept the Anchorage delegation busy at the Fairbanks Second Avenue Mecca Bar.
> Note: As most states did at this time Alaska had a Senate based on regional geography.

This 1955 plan by "population count' was out-of-date by statehood, but another census was just around the corner. Further, everyone probably understood this, because the 1960 reapportionment plan had to do some serious revising, and yet produced little acrimony. It was the only plan that has escaped court review and litigation.

The point is that the first statehood districts fit the socio-economic map perfectly. However, from that day on every decennial redistricting forced the outlying and coastal districts into contortions, struggling to fit constitutional criteria and then the mandates of the ethnic criteria imposed by the 1965 U.S. Voters Right Act and subsequent revisions. Further, almost simultaneously the U.S. Supreme Court Tennessee case brought down the traditional regional Senates across the country. This was a political shock in itself

With a 20 member Senate and 40-member House, and a landmass that imposes huge barriers, we are now about out-of-gas in being able to meet the mandates of the U.S. Voters Rights Act. The issue is! Might the U.S. Justice Department question the size of our legislative bodies, and due to their small fixed size, our ability to provide ethnic representation required under the U.S. Voters Rights Act.

Southeast Conference

March 8, 2010

Dear Alaska Legislator;

As our state continues to grow and the population increasingly concentrates itself into relatively few urban areas, reapportionment will lead to even larger legislative majorities who call the Anchorage basin their home. Conversely, corresponding legislative districts will cover wider and wider swaths of sparsely populated areas having relatively little in common. Already senate districts C, S and T are each larger that most states in the Union. In order to assure that we continue to hear the voices from every corner of the state, not just the urban centers, we believe it is time to increase the size of the Alaska legislature.

Southeast Conference is a private membership organization that works to advance the collective interests of the people, communities, and businesses of Southeast Alaska. It is the Alaska Regional Development Organization (ARDOR), Federal Economic Development District (EDD), and USDA Resource Conservation and Development (RC&D) Council for the region. The Conference's Mission is to help develop strong economies, healthy communities, and a quality environment in Southeast Alaska. In keeping with that mission we feel it is of upmost importance we are all heard with an equal voice.

Southeast Conference respectfully asks for your support for HJR38 and SJR21.

Sincerely,

Shelly Wright

CS FOR HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 42( )

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): HOUSE TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE

A RESOLUTION

Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska creating a transportation infrastructure fund.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. Article IX, sec. 7, Constitution of the State of Alaska, is amended to read:

Section 7. Dedicated Funds. The proceeds of any state tax or license shall not be dedicated to any special purpose, except as provided in Sections 15 and 18 [SECTION 15] of this article or when required by the federal government for state participation in federal programs. This provision shall not prohibit the continuance of any dedication for special purposes existing on April 24, 1956 [UPON THE DATE OF RATIFICATION OF THIS SECTION BY THE PEOPLE OF ALASKA].

 Sec. 2. Article IX, Constitution of the State of Alaska, is amended by adding a new section to read:

Section 18. Transportation Infrastructure Fund. (a) The revenue received after July 1, 2011, from any state tax on fuel used for the propulsion of motor vehicles, aircraft, and watercraft, less refunds, credits, and collection costs as provided by law, and from a registration fee levied for a motor vehicle that is not a special registration fee provided by law shall be placed in a transportation infrastructure fund. The legislature may appropriate additional amounts to the fund. The fund shall be managed as an endowment. Each year, the legislature may appropriate a percentage of the average market value of the fund as established by law for capital projects for transportation and related facilities that are designated by law.

(b) The legislature shall provide by law for the management and investment of the fund balance. The income earned from the fund shall be deposited into the fund.

 Sec. 3. The amendments proposed by this resolution shall be placed before the voters of the state at the next general election in conformity with art. XIII, sec. 1, Constitution of the State of Alaska, and the election laws of the state.

AOPA
AIRCRAFT OWNERS AND PILOTS ASSOCIATION

Representative Peggy Wilson, Chair
House Transportation Committee
State Capitol, Room 406
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Wilson:

The Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) is a membership organization consisting of over 415,000 pilots and aircraft owners. Over 4,400 of our members reside in Alaska. AOPA is committed to the health and viability of aviation and airports in Alaska, and across the nation. Thank you for taking up the issue of creating a state funded transportation program for Alaska.

AOPA supports HJR 42, allowing the citizens to vote on an amendment to the Alaska Constitution to establish a transportation infrastructure endowment fund. The endowment is to be dedicated to funding projects that maintain and improve our public infrastructure, including airports, roads and marine facilities. We can speak to the tremendous needs within the airport system that benefits all the citizens of the state, and is absolutely essential for communities that are not on the road system, and rely solely on aviation for year-around access.

Thank you again for undertaking this legislation. I look forward to working with you and your committee on this initiative to address the needs of the state's transportation system.

Sincerely,

Tom George

I respectfully withdraw my objection to moving Representative Wilson's HJR 42 out of the House Judiciary Committee. Representative Wilson's office has coordinated with my staff to ensure that my concerns regarding the funding source for the proposed infrastructure fund were addressed. I have also concluded, upon further guidance from legal services, that there are no significant constitutional issues with HJR 42.

To: Representative Jay Ramras, Chair
House Judiciary Committee

From: Representative Peggy Wilson PW

Re: HJR 42 - Constitutional Amendment:Transportation Fund

I would like to request the House Judiciary Committee schedule a hearing on HJR42.

HJR 42 will put a constitutional amendment before voters to change the Alaska constitution to allow a dedicated fund for Capital Transportation Projects.

Alaska is geographically the largest state in the country, and the future of the economic and social well being of its citizens is critically dependent on a reliable transportation system. This change to the State Constitution, allowing a dedicated transportation fund, is needed to create and maintain a modern, reliable transportation system for Alaska.

Thank you for your consideration.

SPONSOR STATEMENT
House Joint Resolution 42

"Proposing amendments to the constitution of the State of Alaska creating a transportation infrastructure fund"

HJR 42 will put a constitutional amendment before voters to change the Alaska constitution to allow a dedicated fund for Capital Transportation Projects.

In FY10 87% of our transportation budget came from the federal government. The current federal reauthorization legislation has expired and is being extended month to month until new legislation can be passed. The new federal reauthorization bill is unfavorable for states with small populations by emphasizing mass transit and green transportation. It favors toll roads, bridges, and other transportation that are self-funding. Alaska's small population makes these self pay options prohibitive. There aren't enough cars on the road, people on the ferries or residents landing at our airports to generate the scale of economy that is needed.

The roads, bridges, airports, ferries and other transit systems that make up our state's transportation system are essential to mobility, commerce and economic development. These systems increase safety, enhance economic competitiveness, and lead to a better quality of life. To ensure Alaska has the infrastructure necessary to develop our resources as well as improve the living conditions for our citizens we must commit to funding transportation. Having an amount that is guaranteed from year to year will allow Alaska to manage current congestion, safety and maintenance projects as well as develop access to needed resources and energy.

Alaska is geographically the largest state in the country, and the future of the economic and social well being of its citizens is critically dependent on a reliable transportation system. This change to the State Constitution, allowing a dedicated transportation fund, is needed to create and maintain a modern, reliable transportation system for Alaska.

The passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2010 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58 is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

Executive Summary

The Alaska Municipal League (AML) commissioned Cambridge Systematics, Inc. to conduct an objective assessment of the current finance trends, challenges, and possible options to meet Alaska's transportation funding needs. This work involved a significant amount of analysis and produced multiple layers of findings that have been documented in this report, the Transportation Finance Study. Nevertheless, the work may be summarized into the following three categories of findings.

UNDER INVESTMENT IN THE STATE'S TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE

Almost every state and the Federal Government have been chronically under investing in their transportation infrastructure and Alaska is not an exception. Over the last several years, studies at the national and state levels have painted a dire picture of transportation funding over the long term: the average funding gap for the Federal shortfall is almost $60 billion annually through 2017 (10-year average) to maintain the current condition and performance of the nation's surface transportation system.

- Underinvestment in Alaska may have more severe consequences than for almost any other state because the Alaska's economy is highly dependent on resource extraction industries. These industries are highly transportation-intensive; their growth is the most likely offset to declining oil production and may be the State's best opportunity to diversity, but will require investment. In addition, the State's far-flung communities, harsher environment and less mature roadway network amplify the effects of under investment.
- In its 2030 Transportation Plan, the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities (ADOT&PF) estimated its annual highway and bridge needs at approximately $1.1 billion per year of which about $530 million is unfunded on state-owned facilities alone (excluding local roads and street needs), with Federal and state funding covering about half of the needs.
- In Alaska, routine highway maintenance remains underfunded and the backlog in life-cycle needs is over three times the level of spending in annual highway maintenance activities at the state level. Adding the AMHS unfunded needs, and Alaska's transportation funding gap increases to $720 million. These figures still do not include needs of transit, and locally funded roads, both in urban and rural areas of the State, or aviation. Furthermore, it does not include any transportation capacity needs to meet travel demand growth in the future.

- Alaska's transportation capital spending (from state and local revenue sources) as a percentage of the Gross State Product (GSP) for 2006 is the fourth lowest compared to other states. If Federal funding is included, the transportation spending as a percentage of GSP increases placing Alaska in the top 10 states, clearly indicating the State's reliance on Federal funding to meet its transportation needs.

CURRENT FEDERAL FUNDING AT RISK

Alaska has historically received on average roughly 75 percent of its total transportation funding needs from Federal sources. This dependence is quite likely to put Alaska in a very vulnerable position when the Federal transportation funding is reauthorized next year for the following reasons:

- Federal Highway Trust Fund went broke this past year and Congress provided only one year of stop-gap funding. Longer-term fixes, however, may include lower levels of funding, which would increase state competition for Federal allocations.
- The current negotiations over reauthorization are further reducing the difference between donor states (which have increased in the previous reauthorization from 90 percent of their contribution to 92 percent) and donee states, of which Alaska is one of the highest.
- Reauthorization funding policies appear to place far more emphasis on tolling or other user fees and metropolitan transit/transportation networks, rather than highway funding or legislative earmarking. Some proposals would push greater responsibility to states or cities for financing their transportation improvements.
- Federal support for Alaska's transportation needs is being challenged by other states because of the perception that Alaska's financial capacity is substantially better off than other states. The lower 48 and the Federal government see the Alaska Permanent Fund currently has almost $28 billion and Alaska is the only State that collects neither income taxes nor state sales taxes, and its 8 cents-per-gallon (cpg) gas tax is the lowest rate in the country.

OPTIONS FOR CLOSING THE GAP

In order for Alaska to close some of the gap in underinvestment and improve its competitive position for the next reauthorization of Federal transportation legislation, we propose some options for increasing state revenues with a mix of six sources that include increases to user fees such as the fuel tax and vehicle registrations fees, new sales tax on vehicles and the wider use of local sales taxes, reinstitution of the Local Service Roads and Trails (LSR&T) fund, and establishment of an Alaska Transportation Fund (ATF) or comparable fund.

Option One would generate roughly $151 million annually, or about 28 percent of the $535 million annual gap. It has the following six components:

- Increase fuel taxes from 8 cents per gallon (cpg) to 18 cpg (national average) and index the rate to inflation, generating about $38 million annually.
- Increase vehicle registration fees by 50 percent from $100 to $50 biannual fee, generating slightly less than $23 million annually.
- Impose a vehicle sales tax of 0.5 percent, yielding about $10 million annually
- Encourage local jurisdictions to impose a 0.5 percent sales tax, which if enacted throughout the State would earn about $30 million annually
- Capitalize the Alaska Transportation Fund (ATF) with $1 billion, which with a 8 percent return should earn about $50 million annually.

Option Two would generate roughly $291 million annually, or about 55 percent of the $535 million annual gap. It has the following six components:

- Increase fuel taxes from 8 to 28 cpg and index the rate to inflation, generating about $76 million annually.
- Double vehicle registration fees from $100 to $200 biannual fee, generating over $45 million annually.
- Impose a vehicle sales tax of 1.5 percent, yielding over $31 million annually
- Encourage local jurisdictions to impose a 1.5 percent sales tax, which would earn about $89 million annually
- Capitalize the Alaska Transportation Fund (ATF) with $1 billion, which with a 8 percent return should earn about $50 million annually.

Option Three also would generate $291 million annually (55 percent of the $535 million annual gap), but it would reduce the two sales taxes and instead reinstitutes the Local Service Roads and Trails (LSR&T) fund:

- Same increase in fuel taxes (8 cpg to 28 cpg and index the rate to inflation), generating about $76 million annually.
- Same doubling of vehicle registration fees from $100 to $200 biannual fee, generating over $45 million annually.
- Impose a state vehicle sales tax of 1.25 percent and a 1.25 percent local sales tax, which would earn over $26 million and $74 million annually, respectively
- Capitalize the Alaska Transportation Fund (ATF) with $1 billion, which with a 8 percent return should earn about $50 million annually.
- Assume the State reinstitutes the LSR&T program at about $20 million annually.

SWAMC RESOLUTION 09-02

A RESOLUTION OF THE SOUTHWEST ALASKA MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE URGING THE GOVERNOR AND THE ALASKA LEGISLATURE TO CAPITALIZE STABLE LONG-TERM TRANSPORTATION FUNDING FOR ALASKA

WHEREAS, Alaska's transportation system has fallen far behind the needs of Alaska for cost effective transportation which allows economic growth and the safe cost effective movement of people, goods, and services; and

WHEREAS, the Alaska Highway System, the Alaska Marine Highway System, Alaska Airports, Alaska ports and harbors, and Alaska's local roads all need several years of significant funding for infrastructure improvement, upgrade and expansion; and

WHEREAS, the general appropriation process has resulted in significant underfunding of transportation infrastructure; and

WHEREAS, the Federal Highway Trust Fund is experiencing significant shortfalls, further contributing to a decrease in transportation funding for Alaska; and

WHEREAS, the economic future of Alaska is highly dependent upon a quality, cost effective transportation system; and

WHEREAS, the development of Alaska transportation infrastructure is dependent upon a steady and reliable stream of revenue; and

WHEREAS, the development of an energy policy that works for Alaska requires a quality transportation system in order to be successful; and

WHEREAS, estimates of annual funding needs for transportation infrastructure improvements, upgrades, and expansions exceed $300 million per year; and

WHEREAS, the State of Alaska is in a position to proactively develop a long-term transportation financing program.

-MORE-

NOW, THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Southwest Alaska Municipal Conference urges the Governor and the Alaska Legislature to establish a Transportation Trust Fund for Alaska or other suitable and sustainable funding mechanisms that generate at least $300 million annually to accomplish the following purposes:

- Generate investment earnings to develop transportation infrastructure in Alaska.
- Improve, upgrade and expand State of Alaska roads and highways.
- Improve, upgrade and expand the Alaska Marine Highway System.
- Improve, upgrade and expand the airports in Alaska.
- Improve and expand Alaska's ports and harbors.
- Provide regular funding to Alaska's communities to improve, upgrade and expand local roads built to local road standards.

AND, BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that not less than 15-percent of the total funding will be allocated to each of the five programs each year (roads and highways; Alaska Marine Highway System; airports; ports and harbors; public transit and local roads).

PASSED AND ADOPTED by a duly constituted quorum of the Southwest Alaska Municipal Conference Membership this Thirtieth day of January, 2009.

Surface Transportation Authorization

Briefing for the Alaska
House Transportation Committee
By the National Conference of State Legislatures
October 1, 2009

Presentation Overview

- Overview of SAFETEA-LU
- Current Congressional Activity
  - The New Authorization (House)
  - Where it stands
- What does it mean for Alaska
- State Revenue Issues

SAFETEA-LU – Funding Levels

- $286.4 billion over 6 years
  - $244 Billion 2005-2009
    - $189.5 Billion Highways
    - $ 45.3 Billion Public Transportation
    - $ 5.6 Billion Highway/Motor Carrier Safety
    - $ 3.6 Billion Exempt from Obligation Limits
      - Emergency relief
      - A specified amount of the Equity Bonus Program
      - Certain projects funded before 1998

SAFETEA-LU Innovative Financing

State Infrastructure Bank

- Expands the program to all 50 states, allows capitalization with federal funds
- Allows 2 or more states to establish a multi-state bank

Transportation Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act

- Lowers to $50M (from $100M) the minimum cost of eligible project
- Lowers to $15M the minimum cost for eligible ITS project

Private Activity Bonds

- Expanded bonding authority for private activity bonds

Provided States Increased Flexibility to Use Tolling (congestion management tool as well)

- Creates a number of pilot/demonstration programs.

SAFETEA-LU Traffic Safety

Created a new core Highway Safety Improvement Program

Contained a number of targeted grants and incentive programs

- Occupant protection
- Safety belt
- Impaired driving
- Child safety and booster seat use

Maintained existing driving sanctions

- Open Container
- .08 BAC
- Zero tolerance

- National minimum drinking age
- Repeat offender

SAFETEA-LU- Environment

Expanded environmental considerations in Metropolitan and Statewide Transportation Planning

- Consultation
- Mitigation

Congressional Activity: The New Authorization (Current House proposal: Oberstar)

$450 billion* over 6 years (plus an additional $50 billion for high speed rail)

- $337 billion – Highway construction, including at least $100 billion for Capital Asset Investment
- $12.6 billion in highway and motor carrier safety
- $87.6 billion from the Mass Transit Account (of the Highway Trust Fund)
- $12.2 billion form the General Fund for public transit investment

The $450 billion includes $50 billion for Metropolitan Mobility and Access and $25 billion for Projects of National Significance*

Challenge: There is no legislative text on how to pay for it. There are also a number of places in the bill where it states "to be supplied."

Congressional Activity: The New Authorization (Current House proposal)

Consolidates or terminates more than 75 programs

- Proposes 4 core highway categories
- Proposes 4 core transit categories

Establishes new initiatives to address congestion relief

- New discretionary program for direct funding to MPOs.

Large focus on Livability and Environment, Sustainability of Communities

- Creates an Office of Livability with FHWA

Congressional Activity: The New Authorization (Current House proposal)

Eliminates certain existing incentive/grant programs and replaces them with mandates/sanctions. Establishes other mandates/sanctions

- Primary seat belt laws
- Ignition interlock
- Revocation/suspension of license for individuals convicted to drug offenses

Eliminates tolling pilots, establishes new guidelines/requirements for tolling

Expands U.S DoT's role in PPPs

National Infrastructure Bank

- Proposal by the Administration and members of Congress
- Would target large capacity-building projects not adequately served by current funding mechanisms
- Independent government entity
- Would make loans, insure bonds, provide preconstruction phase assistance
- $60 billion in bonding authority over 10 years
- Revenue stream needed to repay debt
- Several bills in this Congress and previous sessions

Congressional Activity: Where we Stand

- The Senate and the Administration want an 18 month extension.
- House has passed a 3 month extension- challenge the Senate in conference
- Stay tuned!

What does it Mean for Alaska

- A lot of uncertainty at this point in time.
- Most likely less dedicated funding – SAFETEA-LU contained over $1 billion in highway and transit set asides.

Average Annual State Sources of Transportation Revenue by % Compared to Alaska %

- State motor fuels taxes—28% / 5%
- Federal funding—27% / 54%
- Motor vehicle/truck fees and taxes—16% / 5%
- Bonding, borrowing—12% /3.5%
- Tolls—5% / 3.2%
- State general fund—4% / 19.5%
- Misc. and other—6% /4.3%
- Local gov't contribution—2% / 5.7%

- NCSL Report, page 59

State Responses to Revenue Gap

1. More reliance on general sales tax and general fund.
2. Growing funding of transportation by local entities.
3. Greater efficiency and accountability in delivering transportation projects.
4. Greater borrowing
5. Increasing use of public private partnerships
6. Greater use of tolling as funding option
7. Program cuts
8. Study of alternatives

Rural Transportation Challenges

- Public transportation is important for the Transportation Disadvantaged--elderly, disabled, low-income, jobless. Better coordination of existing funding for human service transportation.
- Multi-modal approach needed to improve mobility and regional connectivity--better rail, air service issues (Essential Air Service).
- Traffic fatalities--60% of total occur in rural areas.

Conclusion: Additional Transportation Funding Needed

- Unmet needs--$225 billion needed nationwide annually for the next 50 years
- Poor infrastructure is a threat to safety, security, economic prosperity, international competitiveness and quality of life.
- Need to catch up on deferred maintenance, especially for bridges
- Hard Choices- Extensive documentation of need and recommended action completed in most states but little new legislation > such finding is arbitrary and without any reasonable basis in fact (DeArmond v. Alaska State Development Corporation, 376 P.2d 717, 1962).

The Alaska Supreme Court has yet to find a legislative determination of public purpose arbitrary and without any basis in fact. It has upheld the use of revenue bonds by a public corporation and general obligation bonds of a municipality for industrial development purposes (DeArmond; and Wright v. City of Palmer, 468 P.2d 326, 1970). It has upheld the use of revenue bonds by a public corporation to purchase home mortgages (Walker v. Alaska State Mortgage Association, 416 P.2d 245, 1966). It has upheld state grants to homeowners to pay off the mortgages of property lost in the 1964 earthquake (Suber v. Alaska State Bond Committee, 414 P.2d 546, 1966). In Suber the court said: "It is not essential that the entire community or any particular number of persons should benefit from remedial legislation in order that a public purpose be served. The purpose of the Program is no less public because its benefits may be limited by circumstances to a comparatively small part of the public." The court found no violation of this section by the Anchorage municipal telephone utility competing with private vendors of telephone equipment (Comtec, Incorporated v. Municipality of Anchorage, 710 P.2d 1004, 1985).

A complex issue related to the public purpose safeguard of this section of the constitution concerns the activities of incumbent elected public officials in their quest for reelection. A governor running for reelection, for example, is vulnerable to the allegation that official travel and public appearances are campaign-related and not bona fide public business. The courts in Alaska have not been confronted with such a suit, and court decisions elsewhere give little encouragement to those contemplating one.

Section 7. Dedicated Funds

> The proceeds of any state tax or license shall not be dedicated to any special purpose, except as provided in Section 15 of this article or when required by the federal government for state participation in federal programs. This provision shall not prohibit the continuance of any dedication for special purposes existing upon the date of ratification of this section by the people of Alaska.

Convention delegates prohibited the dedication, or "earmarking," of funds for specific purposes so that the legislature would not tie its own hands in providing for the public needs of the day. The commentary on this section by the constitutional convention committee that drafted it included this observation:

> Even those persons or interests who seek the dedication of revenues for their own projects will admit that the earmarking of taxes or fees for other interests is a fiscal evil. But if allocation is permitted for one interest the denial of it to another is > difficult, and the more special funds are set up the more difficult it becomes to deny other requests until the point is reached where neither the governor nor the legislature has any real control over the finances of the state.

The phrase "as provided in Section 15 of this article" in the second sentence was added by an amendment in 1976 to allow creation of the Alaska Permanent Fund (see Section 15). Two exceptions to the prohibition against earmarking were allowed by the convention delegates. One exception is a dedicated fund that was already in existence, such as the school fund of AS 43.50.140, which receives proceeds from the tobacco tax for use of school repair and construction. The other exception allows new earmarking when it is required by federal law to participate in a federal program. This is the case with the Fish and Game Fund of AS 16.05.100, to which sport hunting and fishing license fees are dedicated.

A statutory dedication of revenue may not seem too serious because future legislatures are not bound by it. But a statutory dedication is likely to be self-perpetuating. A governor's veto might block a future legislature's effort to repeal the dedication. The flow of money into and out of the fund may be "off-budget" and shielded from annual review by the finance committees. And the dedication fosters the development of a constituency that benefits from the dedication and resists changes to it.

How comprehensive did the convention delegates mean to be with this prohibition against dedicated funds when they adopted the phrase "proceeds of any state tax or license" in the first sentence? Did they mean all state revenue, or did they want to exclude from the prohibition against dedication those state revenues that are not derived from a tax or license? The question became important when Alaska began to receive substantial income from oil lease bonuses and royalties, which are not proceeds from a tax or license. An opinion of the attorney general of an early administration said that oil lease royalty income was outside the prohibition against earmarking in this section. A later opinion reversed this interpretation and held that the historical record of the convention made it clear that the delegates intended to bar the dedication of all state revenues, whether or not they derive strictly from a tax or license (1975 Opinion Attorney General No. 9, May 2). Consequently, a constitutional amendment was required to create the Alaska Permanent Fund.

The courts have not ruled on the matter, but it is generally understood that the authors of the constitution intended certain exceptions to the prohibition against dedicated revenues, such as pension contributions, proceeds from bond issues, revolving fund receipts and sinking fund receipts (1982 Informal Opinion Attorney General, November 30). Indeed, beyond these practical exceptions to the prohibition on the dedication of revenue, it must be noted that such dedications have a legitimate role in state financial management, despite the public policy problems that caused them to be prohibited in the Alaska Constitution. Dedication allows the benefits of a public program to be directly linked to those who pay for them. Revenues are dedicated in Alaska today in a manner that makes the practice constitutionally acceptable, namely that the pertinent statutes say that the legislature "may" appropriate the money for its designated purpose. It is understood that the legislature will do so, and failure to do so will abrogate a political agreement. An example of this practice is the fisheries enhancement tax levied under AS 43.76.010. This is a tax on salmon fishermen intended to support salmon hatcheries. The tax receipts are deposited to the general fund, and "the legislature may make appropriations to the Department of Community and Economic Development for the purpose of providing financing to qualified [regional aquaculture] associations" (AS 43.76.025).

Enterprise funds are also examples of de facto dedication of revenues, such as the Marine Highway System Fund, which directs receipts from the sale of tickets on the ferry system to the support of that system. The constitutionality of this fund was challenged in court and upheld because the language of its authorizing statutes is permissive and does not restrict the authority of the legislature to appropriate money from the fund (although parts of the act creating this fund that restricted the authority of the executive branch to request appropriations from the fund were found to violate the prohibition of this section; see Sonneman v. Hickel, 836 P.2d 936, 1992).

Section 8. State Debt

> No state debt shall be contracted unless authorized by law for capital improvements or unless authorized by law for housing loans for veterans, and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters of the State who vote on the question. The State may, as provided by law and without ratification, contract debt for the purpose of repelling invasion, suppressing insurrection, defending the State in war, meeting natural disasters, or redeeming indebtedness outstanding at the time this constitution becomes effective.

Limitations on the ability of states to incur debt are a common feature of fiscal articles of state constitutions. They are the consequence of well-publicized defaults by some of the older states on bonds issued for overly ambitious public works projects and of scandals arising from corrupt public construction and financing schemes. Some constitutional limitations restrict general debt to specific purposes (only road construction, for example); some limit the amount of debt that may be issued by establishing a ceiling on total allowable annual debt payments (usually expressed as maximum percentage of general fund revenue); some require a supermajority vote of the legislature to contract debt; and others require a referendum for the electorate to approve state indebtedness. The Territorial Organic Act of 1912 originally prohibited the territory of Alaska and its municipalities from acquiring any kind of debt without congressional approval, but this stricture was removed in 1935.

In 1982 a constitutional amendment was ratified that inserted "or unless authorized by law for housing loans for veterans." This allowed the state to incur tax-exempt general obligation debt for veterans' housing loans. The amendment was a response to a 1980 federal law that prevented states or public corporations such as the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation from selling housing bonds in the tax-exempt market, but allowed an exception for general obligation bonds for veterans' housing.

Alaska has become masters of spending someone else's money, particularly from the federal government's Highway Trust Fund.
Now the Highway Trust Fund is broke. Congress has had to pump dollars into the fund to fulfill last year's obligations and will again this year.

With Alaska having no state income tax, no state sales tax, the lowest fuel tax in the nation, a +/- $35 billion savings account and annual entitlement (PFD) to every citizen, we are going to have huge shortfalls in funding our transportation infrastructure.

The establishment of a constitutional dedicated fund for transportation is the smart thing to do.

Again, please support HJR42. We can't afford not to.

Alaska State Legislature

Representative Anna Fairclough – House District 17

House Resolution 7

"Requesting the United States Congress to permanently repeal the federal unified gift and estate tax."

House Resolution 7 urges Congress to permanently repeal the federal gift and estate tax. Two things I fundamentally believe in are fewer taxes and smaller government. This legislation takes a step toward both of those goals.

Many people believe that the Estate Tax, or Death Tax, has already been repealed in Alaska. This is not the case. Our Death Tax is linked to the Federal Estate Tax which was changed as a result of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001. This legislation phased in a number of tax reductions over a nine-year period. Among those reductions was the change from a state estate tax credit (which our tax is based upon) to a deduction for state estate taxes.

The change from a tax credit to a deduction was phased in over a period of time, gradually reducing the amount of money that the State of Alaska collected in Death Taxes.

Like the rest of the tax reductions included in the 2001 law, the estate tax provisions will sunset in 2010, unless Congress acts to extend them. Given the current climate in Washington, DC, this is unlikely.

This Resolution is Alaska's opportunity to declare that as a state, we are intrinsically against the death tax. Alaskans are hardworking people who deserve to leave behind whatever wealth they are able to accumulate. Families shouldn't be forced to pay taxes on the estates of Alaska's decedents.

I urge your support on the passage of this Resolution.

Fair and Simple Tax Act of 2009 (Introduced in House)

SEC. 3. REPEAL OF ESTATE AND GIFT TAXES.

(a) In General- Subtitle B is hereby repealed.

(b) Effective Date- The repeal made by subsection (a) shall apply to the estates of decedents dying, and gifts and generation-skipping transfers made, after December 31, 2008.

SEC. 4. ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX EXEMPTION AMOUNTS INDEXED FOR INFLATION.

(a) In General- Subsection (d) of section 55 (relating to exemption amount) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

`(4) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT-

`(A) IN GENERAL- In the case of any taxable year beginning in a calendar year after 2008, the dollar amounts contained in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) shall be increased by an amount equal to--

`(i) such dollar amount, multiplied by

`(ii) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined by substituting `calendar year 2006' for `calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

`(B) ROUNDING- Any increase determined under subparagraph (A) shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $100.'.

(b) Prior Increase Made Permanent- Paragraph (1) of section 55(d) is amended--

(1) by striking `$45,000 ($69,950 in the case of taxable years beginning in 2007)' and inserting `$69,950',

(2) by striking `$33,750 ($46,200 in the case of taxable years beginning in 2007)' and inserting `$46,200', and

(3) by striking `paragraph (1)(A)' and inserting `subparagraph (A)'.

(c) Effective Date- The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2008.

SEC. 5. MAXIMUM CORPORATE INCOME TAX RATE REDUCED TO 25 PERCENT.

(a) In General- Paragraph (1) of section 11(b) (relating to amount of tax on corporations) is amended to read as follows:

`(1) IN GENERAL- The amount of the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be the sum of--

`(A) 15 percent of so much of the taxable income as does not exceed $50,000, and

`(B) 25 percent of so much of the taxable income as exceeds $50,000.'.

(b) Personal Service Corporations- Paragraph (2) of section 11(b) is amended by striking `35 percent' and inserting `25 percent'.

(c) Conforming Amendments- Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 1445(e) are each amended by striking `35 percent' and inserting `25 percent'.

(d) Effective Date- The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2008; except that the amendments made by subsection (c) shall take effect on January 1, 2009.

SEC. 6. 15 PERCENT RATE ON DIVIDENDS AND CAPITAL GAINS OF INDIVIDUALS REDUCED TO 10 PERCENT.

(a) In General- Subparagraph (C) of section 1(h)(1) (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended by striking `15 percent' and inserting `10 percent'.

(b) Effective Date- The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2008.

SEC. 7. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

(a) In General- Part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to basis rules of general application) is amended by redesignating section 1023 as section 1024 and by inserting after section 1022 the following new section:

`(a) General Rule-

`(1) INDEXED BASIS SUBSTITUTED FOR ADJUSTED BASIS- Solely for purposes of determining gain or loss on the sale or other disposition by a taxpayer (other than a corporation) of an indexed asset which has been held for more than 3 years, the indexed basis of the asset shall be substituted for its adjusted basis.

`(2) EXCEPTION FOR DEPRECIATION, ETC- The deductions for depreciation, depletion, and amortization shall be determined without regard to the application of paragraph (1) to the taxpayer or any other person.

`(b) Indexed Asset-

`(1) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this section, the term `indexed asset' means--

`(A) common stock in a C corporation (other than a foreign corporation), and which is a capital asset or property used in the trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)).

`(2) STOCK IN CERTAIN FOREIGN CORPORATIONS INCLUDED- For purposes of this section--

`(A) IN GENERAL- The term `indexed asset' includes common stock in a foreign corporation which is regularly traded on an established securities market.

`(B) EXCEPTION- Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to--

`(i) stock in a passive foreign investment company (as defined in section 1296), and

`(ii) stock in a foreign corporation held by a United States person who meets the requirements of section 1248(a)(2).

`(C) TREATMENT OF AMERICAN DEPOSITORY RECEIPTS- An American depository receipt for common stock in a foreign corporation shall be treated as common stock in such corporation.

`(c) Indexed Basis- For purposes of this section--

`(1) IN GENERAL- The indexed basis for any asset is--

`(A) the adjusted basis of the asset, increased by

`(B) the applicable inflation adjustment.

`(2) APPLICABLE INFLATION ADJUSTMENT- The applicable inflation adjustment for any asset is an amount equal to--

`(A) the adjusted basis of the asset, multiplied by

`(B) the percentage (if any) by which--

`(i) the gross domestic product deflator for the last calendar quarter ending before the asset is disposed of, exceeds `(ii) the gross domestic product deflator for the last calendar quarter ending before the asset was acquired by the taxpayer (or, if later, the calendar quarter ending on December 31, 2007).

The percentage under subparagraph (B) shall be rounded to the nearest 1/10 of 1 percentage point.

`(3) GROSS DOMESTIC PRODUCT DEFLATOR- The gross domestic product deflator for any calendar quarter is the implicit price deflator for the gross domestic product for such quarter (as shown in the last revision thereof released by the Secretary of Commerce before the close of the following calendar quarter).

`(d) Suspension of Holding Period Where Diminished Risk of Loss; Treatment of Short Sales-

`(1) IN GENERAL- If the taxpayer (or a related person) enters into any transaction which substantially reduces the risk of loss from holding any asset, such asset shall not be treated as an indexed asset for the period of such reduced risk.

`(2) SHORT SALES-

`(A) IN GENERAL- In the case of a short sale of an indexed asset with a short sale period in excess of 3 years, for purposes of this title, the amount realized shall be an amount equal to the amount realized (determined without regard to this paragraph) increased by the applicable inflation adjustment. In applying subsection (c)(2) for purposes of the preceding sentence, the date on which the property is sold short shall be treated as the date of acquisition and the closing date for the sale shall be treated as the date of disposition.

`(B) SHORT SALE PERIOD- For purposes of subparagraph (A), the short sale period begins on the day that the property is sold and ends on the closing date for the sale.

`(e) Treatment of Regulated Investment Companies and Real Estate Investment Trusts-

`(1) ADJUSTMENTS AT ENTITY LEVEL-

`(A) IN GENERAL- Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the adjustment under subsection (a) shall be allowed to any qualified investment entity (including for purposes of determining the earnings and profits of such entity).

`(B) EXCEPTION FOR CORPORATE SHAREHOLDERS- Under regulations--

`(i) in the case of a distribution by a qualified investment entity (directly or indirectly) to a corporation--

`(I) the determination of whether such distribution is a dividend shall be made without regard to this section, and

`(II) the amount treated as gain by reason of the receipt of any capital gain dividend shall be increased by the percentage by which the entity's net capital gain for the taxable year (determined without regard to this section) exceeds the entity's net capital gain for such year determined with regard to this section, and

`(ii) there shall be other appropriate adjustments (including deemed distributions) so as to ensure that the benefits of this section are not allowed (directly or indirectly) to corporate shareholders of qualified investment entities.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, any amount includible in gross income under section 852(b)(3)(D) shall be treated as a capital gain dividend and an S corporation shall not be treated as a corporation.

`(C) EXCEPTION FOR QUALIFICATION PURPOSES- This section shall not apply for purposes of sections 851(b) and 856(c).

`(D) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN TAXES IMPOSED AT ENTITY LEVEL-

`(i) TAX ON FAILURE TO DISTRIBUTE ENTIRE GAIN- If any amount is subject to tax under section 852(b)(3)(A) for any taxable year, the amount on which tax is imposed under such section shall be increased by the percentage determined under subparagraph (B)(i)(II). A similar rule shall apply in the case of any amount subject to tax under paragraph (2) or (3) of section 857(b) to the extent attributable to the excess of the net capital gain over the deduction for dividends paid determined with reference to capital gain dividends only. The first sentence of this clause shall not apply to so much of the amount subject to tax under section 852(b)(3)(A) as is designated by the company under section 852(b)(3)(D).

`(ii) OTHER TAXES- This section shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of any tax imposed by paragraph (4), (5), or (6) of section 857(b).

`(2) ADJUSTMENTS TO INTERESTS HELD IN ENTITY-

`(A) REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES- Stock in a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851) shall be an indexed asset for any calendar quarter in the same ratio as--

`(i) the average of the fair market values of the indexed assets held by such company at the close of each month during such quarter, bears to

`(ii) the average of the fair market values of all assets held by such company at the close of each such month.

`(B) REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS- Stock in a real estate investment trust (within the meaning of section 856) shall be an indexed asset for any calendar quarter in the same ratio as--

`(i) the fair market value of the indexed assets held by such trust at the close of such quarter, bears to

`(ii) the fair market value of all assets held by such trust at the close of such quarter.

`(C) RATIO OF 80 PERCENT OR MORE- If the ratio for any calendar quarter determined under subparagraph (A) or (B) would (but for this subparagraph) be 80 percent or more, such ratio for such quarter shall be 100 percent.

`(D) RATIO OF 20 PERCENT OR LESS- If the ratio for any calendar quarter determined under subparagraph (A) or (B) would (but for this subparagraph) be 20 percent or less, such ratio for such quarter shall be zero.

`(E) LOOK-THRU OF PARTNERSHIPS- For purposes of this paragraph, a qualified investment entity which holds a partnership interest shall be treated (in lieu of holding a partnership interest) as holding its proportionate share of the assets held by the partnership.

`(3) TREATMENT OF RETURN OF CAPITAL DISTRIBUTIONS- Except as otherwise provided by the Secretary, a distribution with respect to stock in a qualified investment entity which is not a dividend and which results in a reduction in the adjusted basis of such stock shall be treated as allocable to stock acquired by the taxpayer in the order in which such stock was acquired.

`(4) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT ENTITY- For purposes of this subsection, the term `qualified investment entity' means--

`(A) a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851), and `(B) a real estate investment trust (within the meaning of section 856).

`(f) Other Pass-Thru Entities-

`(1) PARTNERSHIPS-

`(A) IN GENERAL- In the case of a partnership, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the partnership level shall be passed through to the partners.

`(B) SPECIAL RULE IN THE CASE OF SECTION 754 ELECTIONS- In the case of a transfer of an interest in a partnership with respect to which the election provided in section 754 is in effect--

`(i) the adjustment under section 743(b)(1) shall, with respect to the transferor partner, be treated as a sale of the partnership assets for purposes of applying this section, and

`(ii) with respect to the transferee partner, the partnership's holding period for purposes of this section in such assets shall be treated as beginning on the date of such adjustment.

`(2) S CORPORATIONS- In the case of an S corporation, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the corporate level shall be passed through to the shareholders. This section shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of any tax imposed by section 1374 or 1375.

`(3) COMMON TRUST FUNDS- In the case of a common trust fund, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the trust level shall be passed through to the participants.

`(4) INDEXING ADJUSTMENT DISREGARDED IN DETERMINING LOSS ON SALE OF INTEREST IN ENTITY- Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, for purposes of determining the amount of any loss on a sale or exchange of an interest in a partnership, S corporation, or common trust fund, the adjustment made under subsection (a) shall not be taken into account in determining the adjusted basis of such interest.

`(g) Dispositions Between Related Persons-

`(1) IN GENERAL- This section shall not apply to any sale or other disposition of property between related persons except to the extent that the basis of such property in the hands of the transferee is a substituted basis.

`(2) RELATED PERSONS DEFINED- For purposes of this section, the term `related persons' means--

`(A) persons bearing a relationship set forth in section 267(b), and `(B) persons treated as single employer under subsection (b) or (c) of section 414.

`(h) Transfers To Increase Indexing Adjustment- If any person transfers cash, debt, or any other property to another person and the principal purpose of such transfer is to secure or increase an adjustment under subsection (a), the Secretary may disallow part or all of such adjustment or increase.

`(i) Special Rules- For purposes of this section--

`(1) TREATMENT OF IMPROVEMENTS, ETC- If there is an addition to the adjusted basis of any tangible property or of any stock in a corporation during the taxable year by reason of an improvement to such property or a contribution to capital of such corporation--

`(A) such addition shall never be taken into account under subsection (c)(1)(A) if the aggregate amount thereof during the taxable year with respect to such property or stock is less than $1,000, and

`(B) such addition shall be treated as a separate asset acquired at the close of such taxable year if the aggregate amount thereof during the taxable year with respect to such property or stock is $1,000 or more.

A rule similar to the rule of the preceding sentence shall apply to any other portion of an asset to the extent that separate treatment of such portion is appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

`(2) ASSETS WHICH ARE NOT INDEXED ASSETS THROUGHOUT HOLDING PERIOD- The applicable inflation adjustment shall be appropriately reduced for periods during which the asset was not an indexed asset.

`(3) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS- A distribution with respect to stock in a corporation which is not a dividend shall be treated as a disposition.

`(4) SECTION CANNOT INCREASE ORDINARY LOSS- To the extent that (but for this paragraph) this section would create or increase a net ordinary loss to which section 1231(a)(2) applies or an ordinary loss to which any other provision of this title applies, such provision shall not apply. The taxpayer shall be treated as having a long-term capital loss in an amount equal to the amount of the ordinary loss to which the preceding sentence applies.

`(5) ACQUISITION DATE WHERE THERE HAS BEEN PRIOR APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION (A)(1) WITH RESPECT TO THE TAXPAYER- If there has been a prior application of subsection (a)(1) to an asset while such asset was held by the taxpayer, the date of acquisition of such asset by the taxpayer shall be treated as not earlier than the date of the most recent such prior application.

`(j) Regulations- The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.'.

(b) Clerical Amendment- The table of sections for part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 1023 and inserting after the item relating to section 1022 the following new items:

`Sec. 1023. Indexing of certain assets for purposes of determining gain or loss.

`Sec. 1024. Cross references.'.

(c) Effective Date- The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions after December 31, 2008, in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 8. RETIREMENT SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.

(a) In General- Subpart A of part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 (relating to pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus plans, etc.) is amended by inserting after section 408A the following new section:

`SEC. 408B. RETIREMENT SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.

`(a) General Rule- Except as provided in this section, a Retirement Savings Account shall be treated for purposes of this title in the same manner as an individual retirement plan.

`(b) Retirement Savings Account- For purposes of this title, the term `Retirement Savings Account' means an individual retirement plan (as defined in section 7701 (a)(37) which is designated at the time of establishment of the plan as a Retirement Savings Account).

Sponsor Statement

HR 7 Repeal Federal Estate Tax

"Urging the United States Congress to support, work to pass, and vote for the immediate and permanent repeal of the federal estate tax"

The Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 made significant changes to the U. S. Internal Revenue Code, including federal estate taxes.

As a result of this act, federal estate tax rates and exemption amounts have been gradually reduced between 2002 and 2009. In 2010, the federal estate tax is fully repealed.

EGTRRA is subject to a "sunset" provision, however, which results in an automatic reinstatement for the federal estate tax in 2011 unless Congress acts to permanently repeal the tax before then.

The federal estate tax, often referred to as a "death tax" has been described as one of the most inefficient taxes in America. It is very difficult for the government to administer and enforce and has resulted in creating a large estate-planning and avoidance industry.

This tax is an unfair burden placed upon America's small businesses and families during a time of grieving and pain. We should not penalize people for accumulating assets with income that has already been taxed and then expect their survivors to pay taxes on those assets once again through and estate taxes.

HR 7 urges the United States Congress to permanently repeal the federal estate tax.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: March 20, 2008 CONTACT: Rep. Ralph Samuels, (907) 465-2095

Resolution Urging Federal Estate Tax Repeal Headed to Congress

Juneau – The Alaska House of Representatives today passed House Resolution (HR) 7, urging the federal government to permanently repeal the federal estate tax. The resolution, sponsored by the House Rules Committee by request of the Joint Legislative Budget & Audit Committee, asks the U.S. Congress to permanently repeal the "death tax" before its scheduled reinstatement in 2011. Under the Economic Growth & Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 the estate tax rate gradually declined and the exemption amount increased from 2002 to 2009. In 2010, the tax is to be completely eliminated. However, in 2011, unless Congress has acted to make the repeal permanent, the tax will be reinstated at rates ranging from 41 percent to 60 percent on net assets of more than $1 million.

"It is grossly unfair to tax a person's income and assets after their death, especially after the government has been collecting taxes year after year on that same income and those same assets while they were alive," said Representative Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage, and the LB&A Chairman. "We in the House are urging the federal government to permanently repeal this death tax."

"This policy debate really highlights the difference in political philosophy on this issue," said Representative Craig Johnson, R-Anchorage. "Repealing the tax can and should lead to getting the money out of the hands of the government and into the economy where it can be of better use. If people invest the money, that's a good thing. That leads to jobs, people going to work, more investment, and keeps the money circulating."

The resolution states that "there is a fundamental problem of double taxation when a decedent's survivors are forced to pay an inheritance tax on assets acquired by the decedent with after-tax dollars... we need a tax system that encourages lifelong saving, investment, and business activity, and not one that can result in heirs liquidating or selling family businesses that are often asset rich but cash poor, thereby destroying those ongoing job-producing businesses simply to fund increased government consumption."

Copies of HR 7 will be prepared and submitted to President George W. Bush, Vice President Dick Cheney, U.S. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, Speaker of the U.S. House Nancy Pelosi, House Minority Leader John Boehner, the members of Alaska's congressional delegation and all other members of the 110th U.S. Congress.

House Resolve No.

Urging the United States Congress to support, work to pass, and vote for the immediate and permanent repeal of the federal estate tax.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

WHEREAS the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 temporarily phased out but did not permanently eliminate the federal estate tax; and

WHEREAS our form of government is premised on the right to enjoy the fruit of one's labor, to own one's own possessions, and to pass on one's bounty to one's heirs; and

WHEREAS, when a person works for a lifetime to build assets, saving and investing money, building a business, or buying and developing land, that person has a moral right to pass those assets on to the person's family without being penalized with inheritance taxes; and

WHEREAS there is a fundamental problem of double taxation when a decedent's survivors are forced to pay an inheritance tax on assets acquired by the decedent with after-tax dollars; and

WHEREAS we need a tax system that encourages lifelong saving, investment, and business activity, and not one that can result in heirs liquidating or selling family businesses that are often asset rich but cash poor, thereby destroying those ongoing job-producing businesses simply to fund increased government consumption; and

WHEREAS the persistent uncertainty created by sec. 901 of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001, which provides for the reinstatement of federal estate tax law for decedents dying after December 31, 2010, prevents families and small businesses from fully benefitting from the temporary repeal;

BE IT RESOLVED that the House of Representatives strongly urges the United States Congress to support, work to pass, and vote for the immediate and permanent repeal of the federal estate tax.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States; the Honorable Richard B. Cheney, Vice-President of the United States and President of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Harry Reid, Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Mitch McConnell, Minority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable John Boehner, Minority Leader of the U.S. House of Representatives; and the Honorable Ted Stevens and the Honorable Lisa Murkowski, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress; and all other members of the 110th United States Congress.

The estate tax is an inheritance tax. The current estate tax triggers should be increased, but eliminating the estate tax entirely would have a huge budgetary impact in outlying years and preclude other important tax relief.

Opponents claim the estate tax is actually a "death" tax and prevents families from passing on farms and businesses to their children. In actuality, the estate tax affects less than 2% of the population and has exceptions for farms and businesses. This bill would cost approximately $105 billion as it is phased in over the next 10 years. Beginning in 2011, when the estate tax is completely eliminated, this bill will cost $50 billion a year, or $500 billion between 2011-2020. Some of the wealthiest Americans, including Warren Buffet, have decried the elimination of the estate tax as a regressive effort and one that would negatively effect entrepreneurial spirit.

On July 14, the Senate approved H.R. 8, the Death Tax Elimination Act, by a vote of 59 to 39. NO is the pro-taxpayer vote. (Roll Call #197)

Estate Tax
AS 43.31

The Estate tax was phased out by federal law – it no longer applies to estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later.

Description
Alaska levies an estate tax on the transfer of an estate upon death.

Rate
The Alaska estate tax is the amount of state credit allowed on the estate's federal tax return.

Returns
State returns are required only for estates of decedents whose date of death was before January 1, 2005, and the estate has a federal filing requirement. Estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later are not required to file a report.

Estate returns and tax payments are due 15 months from the decedent's date of death.

The tax payment due date may be extended in one-year increments, not to exceed 5 years. Interest accrues on the amount of tax due during the extension period. The return filing due date may be extended for up to 15 years.

Exemptions
Estates under $1.5 million were generally exempt from paying estate taxes prior to 2005, taking into consideration the estate tax credit (formerly the unified credit) allowed under the Internal Revenue Code.

Disposition of Revenue
The division deposits all revenue derived from estate taxes into the General Fund.

History
1919 - The territorial legislature adopted a tax on inheritances and transfers of property from estates. Tax rates varied from 1 percent to 17.5 percent of the property's value.

1970 - The Alaska legislature enacted the current estate tax statutes. Estate tax statutes tie to the state credit allowed under Internal Revenue Code estate tax laws.

1991 - Interest on delinquent tax subject to compound interest under AS 43.05.225. Beginning FY 2003, the state estate tax will phase out as a consequence of changes in federal law.

2001 – The federal Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act enacted. As a consequence of the federal act, the state tax credit was phased out gradually over a four-year period. The state tax credit no longer applies to estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later. However, the division may continue to collect tax from estates for years prior to January 1, 2005, as a result of returns filed, audits, or other enforcement activities.

Estate Tax
AS 43.31

Description
Alaska levies an estate tax on the transfer of an estate upon death.

Rate
The Alaska estate tax is the amount of state credit allowed on the estate's federal tax return.

Returns
State returns are required only for estates of decedents whose date of death was before January 1, 2005, and the estate has a federal filing requirement. Estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later are not required to file a report.

Estate returns and tax payments are due 15 months from the decedent's date of death.

The tax payment due date may be extended in one-year increments, not to exceed 5 years. Interest accrues on the amount of tax due during the extension period. The return filing due date may be extended for up to 15 years.

Exemptions
Estates under $1.5 million were generally exempt from paying estate taxes prior to 2005, taking into consideration the estate tax credit (formerly the unified credit) allowed under the Internal Revenue Code.

Disposition of Revenue
The division deposits all revenue derived from estate taxes into the General Fund.

History
The estate tax dates back to 1919 when the territorial legislature adopted a tax on inheritances and transfers of property from estates. Tax rates varied from 1 percent to 17.5 percent of the property's value.

1970 - The Alaska legislature enacted the current estate tax statutes. Estate tax statutes tie to the state credit allowed under Internal Revenue Code estate tax laws.

1991 - Interest on delinquent tax subject to compound interest under AS 43.05.225. Beginning FY 2003, the state estate tax will phase out as a consequence of changes in federal law.

2001 – The federal Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act enacted. As a consequence of the federal act, the state tax credit was phased out gradually over a four-year period. The state tax credit no longer applies to estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later. However, the division may continue to collect tax from estates for years prior to January 1, 2005, as a result of returns filed, audits, or other enforcement activities.

ESTATE TAX
AS 43.31

Description
Alaska currently levies the estate tax on the transfer of an estate upon death.

Rate
The Alaska estate tax is the amount of state credit allowed on the estate's federal tax return.

Returns
Estates file returns and pay taxes within 15 months from the decedent's date of death.

The tax payment due date may be extended in one-year increments, not to exceed 5 years. Interest accrues on the amount of tax due during the extension period. The return filing due date may be extended for up to 15 years.

Generally state returns will be filed only for estates of decedents whose date of death was before January 1, 2005, and the estate has a federal filing requirement, or needs a tax clearance certificate for probate court. Estates of decedents whose date of death is January 1, 2005 or later do not need to file a report unless the estate needs a tax clearance certificate.

Exemptions
Estates under $1.5 million were generally exempt from paying estate taxes in 2005 taking into consideration the estate tax credit (formerly the unified credit) allowed under the Internal Revenue Code.

Disposition of Revenue
The Division deposits all revenue derived from estate taxes into the General Fund.

"An Act adding a second verse to the official Alaska state song."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 44.09.040 is amended to read:

Sec. 44.09.040. State song. The song "Alaska's Flag," with music composed by Elinor Dusenbury and words to the first verse by Marie Drake and words to the second verse by Carol Beery Davis, is the official song of the state. The words of the official song are as follows:

Alaska's Flag

Eight stars of gold on a field of blue -
Alaska's flag. May it mean to you
The blue of the sea, the evening sky,
The mountain lakes, and the flow'rs nearby;
The gold of the early sourdough's dreams,
The precious gold of the hills and streams;
The brilliant stars in the northern sky,
The "Bear" - the "Dipper" - and, shining high,

The great North Star with its steady light,
Over land and sea a beacon bright.
Alaska's flag - to Alaskans dear,
The simple flag of a last frontier.

A native lad chose our Dipper's stars
for Alaska's flag that there be no bars among our cultures. Be it known through years our natives' past has grown to share our treasures, hand in hand,
to keep Alaska our Great Land.
We love the northern midnight sky,

The great North Star with its steady light,
Over land and sea a beacon bright.
Alaska's flag - to Alaskans dear,
The simple flag of a last frontier.

A Native lad chose the Dipper's stars
For Alaska's flag that there be no bars
Among our culture. Let it be known
Through years the Native's past has grown
To share life's treasures, hand in hand,
To keep Alaska our Great-Land;
We love the northern midnight sky,
The mountains, lakes and streams nearby.
The great North Star with its steady light
Will guide all cultures, clear and bright,
With nature's flag to Alaskans dear,
The simple flag of the last frontier.

"Alaska's Flag"

Written by Marie Drake
Composed by Elinor Dusenbury

Adopted on February 23 1955.

Sheet Music | MIDI Tune | Realaudio Song

1st Verse of Alaska's Flag Song

Eight stars of gold on a field of blue,
Alaska's flag, may it mean to you,
The blue of the sea, the evening sky,
The mountain lakes and the flowers nearby,
The gold of the early sourdough's dreams,
The precious gold of the hills and streams,
The brilliant stars in the northern sky,
The "Bear," the "Dipper," and shining high,
The great North Star with its steady light,
O'er land and sea a beacon bright,
Alaska's flag to Alaskans dear,
The simple flag of a last frontier.

2nd Verse of Alaska's Flag Song -- Words by Carol Beery Davis

A Native lad chose the Dipper's stars
For Alaska's flag that there be no bars
Among our culture. Let it be known
Through years the Native's past has grown
To share life's treasures, hand in hand,
To keep Alaska our Great-Land;
We love the northern midnight sky,

Origin of Song:

The words to the song Alaska's Flag were written by Marie Drake, The Territorial Legislature adopted Alaska's Flag as Alaska's official song in 1955.

"Alaska's Flag" written by Marie Drake a long-time employee of the Alaska Department of Education, and set to music composed by Elinor Dusenbury, who husband was commander of Chilkoot Barracks at Haines from 1933 to 1936 was adopted as the official state song in 1955, and was gifted to the University of Alaska in April 1960. Carol Beery Davis wrote the second verse to "Alaska's Flag" and gifted the words (protected by copyright) to the University of Alaska Foundation in February 1987.

Carol Beery Davis, an Alaskan pioneer and poet laureate, as the maker of the second verse. While the official Alaska state song recognizes and describes Alaska's flag, the words of Davis in the second verse of "Alaska's Flag", "A Native lad chose the Dipper's stars, For Alaska's flag that there be no bars", provides recognition of Bennie Benson who designed Alaska's official flag in 1927. Benny Benson described his design of the flag:

"The blue field is for the Alaska Sky and the forget-me-not, an Alaskan flower. The North Star is for the future of Alaska, the most northerly in the union. The Dipper is for the Great Bear - symbolizing strength."

Marie Drake:

Marie Drake, author of the words to Alaska's Flag, the state song, was born Feburary 11, 1888. In 1907 she married James Drake in Van Wert, Ohio, where she was engaged in social work with the Y.W.C.A. and the Red Cross. They came to Alaska when her husband was assigned to work with the Bureau of Public Roads. In 1917, Lester Henderson was appointed first commissioner of education, and he hired Marie Drake as his secretary. She remained with the Department for 28 years, information contact the University Archivist at the Rasmuson Library, University of Alaska Fairbanks, Fairbanks, Alaska 99775-6808.

- Verse 2 by Carol Beery Davis. 1986.

retiring July 1, 1945.

Marie Drake assumed the post of assistant commissioner of education in 1934. She edited and wrote most of the material for the department's School Bulletin, that was circulated throughout the territorial school system. The poem that later provided the words for the official state song first appeared on the cover of the October 1935 School Bulletin. In recognition of her devotion to the young people of Alaska, Marie Drake received an honorary Doctor of Letters degree from the University of Alaska in 1958. She died March 5, 1963.

MEMORANDUM April 2, 2010

SUBJECT: Alaska's Flag song, copyright issues (HCS SB 43(JUD))
(Work Order No. 26-LS0259\S)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the committee substitute described above. I have one comment.

Mary Rutherford of the University of Alaska Foundation, the copyright holder for the music and both verses of the song, has stated that the copyright holder had no objection to the addition of the song's second verse in statute if there is no alteration to the copyrighted text and if all copies of the text are accompanied by the attribution "copyright University of Alaska Foundation, non-profit use permitted, all other rights reserved."

This committee substitute changes the text of the second verse to conform with the text of the second verse as Carol Beery Davis registered it with the U.S. Copyright office; registration number TXu-258-946. However, the committee substitute does not contain the attribution requested by the copyright holder. This may be interpreted to create a legal issue, as the second verse of the song "Alaska's Flag" will not, to my understanding, pass into the public domain until 2060.[1]

If you have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

[1] United States Copyright Law grants the copyright owner exclusive rights to their creative work for a specific period of time or term. For works published after 1977 the term is equal to the length of the life of the author/creator plus 70 years.[1] By law, the copyright owner is the only one who has the right to reproduce their work. If any other party wants to reproduce the material in any manner, permission must be obtained from the copyright owner. It is my understanding that Carol Beery Davis wrote the second verse in 1986 and died in 1990. Consequently, the second verse of the song "Alaska's Flag" will enter the public domain in 2060.

House Judiciary Committee
House of Representatives
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

I have been asked to provide some background information on the copyright of the Alaska State Song and the unofficial verse by Carol Beery Davis held by the University of Alaska Foundation. I am pleased to do so. This information has also been shared with the office of Senator Menard.

The University of Alaska Foundation holds in trust, for the benefit of the university and the public, the copyright to the music and first verse of the Alaska Flag Song. The music and first verse were authored and generously donated to the university by Elinor Dusenbury and Marie C. Drake, and are presently recognized as the Alaska State Song.

The Foundation similarly holds in trust the copyright to the second verse of the Alaska Flag Song. That verse was authored and generously donated to the university by Carol Beery Davis, and is presently being considered by the Legislature for recognition as a second verse of the Alaska State Song.

The University and Foundation have been honored to protect these works for public, non-profit use as the state song, and as trust properties for the benefit of the university. The Foundation is unaware of any effect on copyright ownership resulting from recognition of a work as the state song with the permission of the copyright holder, and likewise is unaware of any legal impediment to appending a verse to a work with the permission of the affected copyright holder. Thus the Foundation has no objection to recognition of the Carol Beery Davis verse as the second verse of the Alaska State Song, should the Legislature choose to do so.

In order to protect the copyrights, the Foundation asks that there be no alteration to the original texts, and that a notation appear on all copies of the state song produced for public use stating: copyright University of Alaska Foundation, non-profit use permitted, all other rights reserved." We believe this puts issues of copyright protection squarely in the hands of the University of Alaska Foundation, thereby freeing the State of Alaska from any legal obligation resulting from such issues. Said statement also makes clear the verses are not in the public domain, a very important aspect of copyright protection.

Please contact me if you have any questions or concerns. 907-786-1373 or david.woodley@alask.edu.

Senate Bill 43---2nd verse of the Alaska flag song

Written Comment

As a private citizen and a member of a historical society, Pioneer's of Alaska and a resident of Alaska for over half a century, I am supportive of the inclusion of the 2nd verse of the Alaska Flag Song. I am not speaking on behalf of any group.

The 2nd verse is presently gifted by Carol Beery Davis to the University of Alaska Foundation. This gift has the ability to promote the University of Alaska. The UA Foundation website quotes "The Board of Regents of the University of Alaska has recognized the University of Alaska Foundation as the entity of manage private gifts made to support all campuses of the University of Alaska system." This gift has the potential to bring recognition to the University system by placing the notation "copyright University of Alaska Foundation, non-profit use permitted, all other rights reserved".

It appears this gift is historically important or the University would not have accepted the gift. Furthermore, Ms. Davis also established the Poetry Society of Alaska which acclaimed her Poet Laureate 1967-69 according to the Alaska State Library.

Historically speaking, the second verse would not only promote the University of Alaska but it would recognize Benny Benson, the "lad" who designed the Alaska State Flag and recognize the contributions of the Alaska Native people.

Alaska State Legislature

Senate Bill 43 Sponsor Statement

Senate Bill 43 will add a second verse to the Alaska Flag Song, finally giving recognition to the history of the state flag and the contributions of the wonderful Native community.

Written by the late Carol Beery Davis, the second verse of Alaska's Flag Song adds 12 lines and pays tribute to not only the aforementioned subjects but, indirectly, to the young lad who designed the flag: Benny Benson. Benson, of course, came up with the eventual design of Alaska's flag, the Big Dipper and North Star against a dark blue background.

After Davis wrote the second verse she gifted the words to the University of Alaska Foundation in 1987. The foundation has graciously said they have no objection to the state recognizing the second verse officially in statute.

Already, Fran Ulmer, the chancellor of the University of Alaska, has endorsed Senate Bill 43. Ulmer, who introduced a similar bill when she was in the Legislature, summed up a major intent of my legislation: the first verse of the song did not recognize the contributions Alaska Native people have made to the state. The bill sailed through the House of Representatives, but stalled in the Senate.

The Senate had the chance to hear the Flag Song performed with both versus as we gaveled in on the first day of session this year. I think we can all agree the second verse not only added a special touch, but highlighted music teachers' desire to have a second verse to teach their choirs.

Please join me in supporting a long overdue addition of a second verse to Alaska's Flag Song.

Subject: FW: AK Flag Song

Mike,

To follow up on our phone conversation:

The University of Alaska Foundation holds in trust, for the benefit of the university and the public, the copyright to the music and first verse of the Alaska Flag Song. The music and first verse were authored and generously donated to the university by Elinor Dusenbury and Marie C. Drake, and are presently recognized as the Alaska State Song.

The Foundation similarly holds in trust the copyright to the second verse of the Alaska Flag Song. That verse was authored and generously donated to the university by Carol Beery Davis, and is presently being considered by the Legislature for recognition as a second verse of the Alaska State Song.

The University and Foundation have been honored to protect these works for public, non-profit use as the state song, and as trust properties for the benefit of the university. The Foundation is unaware of any effect on copyright ownership resulting from recognition of a work as the state song with the permission of the copyright holder, and likewise is unaware of any legal impediment to appending a verse to a work with the permission of the affected copyright holder. Thus the Foundation has no objection to recognition of the Carol Beery Davis verse as the second verse of the Alaska State Song, should the Legislature choose to do so.

In order to protect the copyrights, the Foundation asks that there be no alteration to the original texts, and that a notation appear on all copies of the state song produced for public use stating: "copyright University of Alaska Foundation, non-profit use permitted, all other rights reserved."

I hope this is helpful. Please let me know if I can be of any further assistance.

Subject: Alaska State Song

Dear Senator Menard,
I am delighted that you are proposing the second verse of the Alaska Flag song be adopted by the state as part of the official state song. I introduced that legislation many years ago; it passed the House but stalled in the Senate. I have long felt it important that both verses be sung on all occasions. Alaska Poet Laureate Carol Berry Davis wrote the second verse because she felt that the first verse did not recognize the contributions that Alaska Native people have made to our state. She asked me to introduce the bill, which I did and there were many people who supported it.

Years ago Carol Berry Davis gave the second verse to the University. I am not sure what rules might apply to the copyright. I am happy to have my staff look into this and help you with whatever contacts or permission is necessary in order to pursue this legislation.

Thank you so much for your work promoting the adoption of the second verse of the Alaska Flag song.

Best regards,
Fran Ulmer
Chancellor

Benny Benson chose the background color of the flag to represent both the blue sky and the forget-me-not. The Legislature later named the forget-me-not as the official State flower. This provides another symbolic link, one between the official State flag, the official song and the official flower.

Carol Beery Davis, a longtime Juneau resident and musician, wrote a second verse to the Alaska Flag song and gifted the words (protected by copyright) to the University of Alaska Foundation in February 1987. It has been unsuccessfully proposed as an addition to the official lyrics twice. The last time, in 2002, House Bill 285 sought to officially incorporate Davis' second verse into the Alaska state song. The bill passed the Alaska House, but it died in the Senate. Because of the copyright restrictions, it is not shown here. Instead, a link to it and more detailed information is provided at the bottom of the page

Sub: SB 43-Second Verse of Alaska's State Song

Dear Representative Herron;

Please pass on to the House Judiciary Committee that the Association of Village Council Presidents does not support the passing of SB 43 as it stands. Instead, we would rather support a competition open to the youth of Alaska for any new verses to the Alaska State Song. A competition open to youth would inspire all those to participate in creating an wonderful way to celebrate and honor the State of Alaska through song.

We support the goal of including Alaska Natives in the proposed new verse, but feel that the words in the verse itself may be constructed in a more appropriate manner. Therefore, please consider our recommendation for a competition.

Sincerely,

Myron P. Naneng Sr., President

Re: CSSB 48 (JUD) House Judiciary Hearing Request

CSSB 48 (JUD) amends AS 44.62.310(d) by adding a new section to exempt municipal boards, commissions, and other similar bodies from Alaska's Open Meetings Act when meeting solely to conduct administrative and managerial business. The legislation also clarifies an abnormality in state statute regarding the definition of a "meeting." Meeting requirements for advisory bodies are currently more stringent than those for policy setting bodies. CSSB 48 (JUD) places the same open meetings requirements on advisory bodies as are on government agencies authorized to establish public policy.

AS 44.62.310-312 prevents municipal government bodies from conducting administrative duties such as responding to unforeseen road conditions without first triggering the open meetings act. Unless a public meeting is first scheduled and held, board members may not discuss and act upon time sensitive issues. CSSB 48 (JUD) will grant service area boards and commissions the necessary legal authority to more efficiently implement their duties and responsibilities and respond quickly to unforeseen local events like heavy snowfall or flooding.

CSSB 48 (JUD) also resolves an unintended consequence caused by the definition of "meeting." Under the current language, meeting requirements for advisory bodies are more stringent than those for policy setting bodies. The committee substitute places the same open meetings requirements on advisory bodies as are on government agencies authorized to establish public policy.

I respectfully request you schedule CSSB 48 (JUD) for a House Judiciary Committee hearing on Wednesday, April 15, 2009.

Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 48 (JUD) Sectional Analysis

(8) "...meetings by municipal service area boards, committees, commissions, or other similar bodies when meeting solely to act on matters that are administrative or managerial in nature."

Explanation: CSSB 48 (JUD) expands SB 48's original road conditions exemption to now include administrative and managerial duties which fall within a municipality's purview.

(B) "...more than three members or a majority of the members, whichever is less, are present,..."

Explanation: AS 44.62.310(2) defines the constitution of an "open public meeting" between members of a governmental body. AS 44.62.310(2)(A) mandates that "...more than three members or a majority of the members, whichever is less..." constitutes a meeting for governmental bodies responsible for formulating and establishing public policy. However, AS 44.62.310(2)(B) does not require this same prerequisite for advisory-only bodies; the meeting needs only to be pre-arranged. Consequentially, meeting requirements for advisory bodies (e.g.: local service district) are more stringent than those for policy making bodies (e.g.: borough assembly). CSSB 48 (JUD) establishes a uniform public meetings requirement by placing the same open meetings requirements on advisory bodies as are on government agencies authorized to establish public policy.

Short Title: Meetings of Road Service Area Boards

Summary:

- CSSB 48 (JUD) expands SB 48's original exemption of road service areas from the Alaska's open meetings act (AS 44.62.310-312) to now include all municipal boards, committees, commissions, and other similar bodies meeting solely for the purpose to conduct administrative or managerial business.
- Establishes a uniform definition of "meeting" under AS 44.62.310(h)(2) for both policy setting and advisory government bodies.

Benefits:

- Grants municipal bodies the legal authority to efficiently carry out in a timely manner administrative duties such as responding quickly to unforeseen road conditions that may cause damage to a road system and subsequent danger.
- Preserves the spirit of an informed and involved citizenry when formulating local public policy. Municipal bodies will still be required to schedule and hold public meetings when discussing policy issues such as contract negotiations and local tax rates.

Background:

- Established under Article X Section 5 of the Alaska State Constitution and AS 29.35.450-490, municipal service areas districts provide essential road maintenance, fire protection, and park and recreation services. In keeping with America's federalist foundations, service districts promote local governance through residents joining together and taking responsibility for providing basic community services.
- AS 44.62.310-312 limits a road service area's ability to efficiently respond to road conditions caused by adverse weather. Unless a public meeting is first scheduled and held, board members cannot discuss and act upon time sensitive issues.
- Under AS 44.62.310(h)(2), meeting requirements for advisory bodies are more stringent than those for policy setting bodies. CSSB 48 (JUD) places the same open meetings requirements on advisory bodies as are on government agencies authorized to establish public policy.

SB 60: Uniform Probate Code; Trusts, Wills

Inevitably, every family in Alaska must deal with handling the affairs of a deceased family member's estate or trust. The Uniform Probate Code (UPC) is the legal model Alaska has relied upon to handle these matters since it was first adopted back in 1969.

The Uniform Probate Code (UPC) is a uniform act drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) governing inheritance and the decedents' estates in the USA. The primary purpose of the act is to streamline the probate process and to standardize and modernize the various state laws governing wills, trusts, and intestacy.

SB 60 updates and clarifies Alaska statutes relating to the UPC with the aim of improving the ease of administration of estates and trusts for Alaska residents. SB 60 provides the following amendments to the Uniform Probate Code:

- Allows the settlor of a trust to designate a representative who can represent or bind an incapacitated person in future proceedings relating to the trust administration.

- Establishes that an augmented estate does not include property transferred to an irrevocable trust if the settlor is a discretionary beneficiary of the trust and if the transfer was made more than 30 days before marriage, or with the consent of the decedent's spouse.

- Creates a procedure for the establishment of will and trust validity before death. Situations arise where there is a question concerning a person's capacity to execute a will or trust, or whether the document was executed as the result of undue influence, duress, fraud, or mistake. The new procedure will allow these issues to be brought before the court while the testator or settlor is alive and when evidence is fresh.

- Provides for venue of a probate proceeding if the decedent was not domiciled in Alaska but significant assets are located within the state.

The State of Alaska has directly received millions of dollars of insurance premium tax dollars and many jobs have been created in the trust, banking, insurance, and legal professions thanks to the business attracted by our competitive and contemporary trust laws.

SB 60 is one of three bills introduced (SB 60, SB 62, and SB 63) that aim to update and clarify Alaska trust laws to make Alaska a better place for investors and families – both Alaskan and from other states – to invest their money in the competitive arena of trust management.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

SB 60: Uniform Probate Code; Trusts, Wills

Section 1. Amends AS 13.06.120(2), which lists the situations when persons are bound by orders binding others in proceedings under the Uniform Probate Code. Allows a person designated by a trust instrument to represent and bind a born or unborn trust beneficiary. Allows the settlor to designate the person in the trust in various ways. Generally does not allow a designated person serving as a trustee to represent and bind the beneficiaries. Generally does not allow the designated person to represent and bind a beneficiary if the designated person is also a beneficiary.

Also provides that certain persons who represent other persons under AS 13.06.120(2)(A)-(F) are not liable for good faith acts and omissions to the beneficiaries whose interests are represented or to persons claiming through those beneficiaries.

Section 2. Amends AS 13.12.201(b)(9). Makes grammatical and conforming amendments to the definition of "transfer" for certain provisions of the Uniform Probate Code that relates to the elective share of a surviving spouse.

Section 3. Amends AS 13.12.205, which relates to a decedent's nonprobate transfers to other persons. Deletes an irrevocable transfer in trust with a transfer restriction from the property that is included in the augmented estate.

Section 4. Adds AS 13.12.205(b). Provides that the augmented estate does not include property transferred to an irrevocable trust with a transfer restriction if two conditions relating to the trust's settlor and the transfer's timing are met.

Section 5. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.206(3).

Section 6. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.207(b).

Section 7. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.209(b).

Section 8. Adds a new set of sections that provide for establishing the validity of wills and trusts before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.530. Allows certain persons to petition the court to determine the validity of a will before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.535. Allows certain persons to petition the court to determine the validity of a will before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.540. Establishes the venue for a petition to determine will or trust validity.

Sec. 13.12.545. Identifies what a petition for will validity must contain.

Sec. 13.12.550. Identifies what a petition for will validity must contain.

Sec. 13.12.555. Authorizes a court to declare a will or trust to be valid. Declares that the will has full legal effect and must be admitted to probate on request of the testator's death, unless modified or revoked after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.560. Makes the court's validity declaration binding on other persons.

Sec. 13.12.565. Directs the court to hold a hearing after a petition is filed. Requires the petitioner to notify the spouse, children, and heirs of the testator or settlor. For a will, also requires the petitioner to notify the testator, the personal representatives nominated in the will, and the devisees under the will. For a trust, also requires the petitioner to notify the settlor and parties in interest.

Sec. 13.12.570. Establishes the burden of proof for the petitions.

Sec. 13.12.575. Allows a testator to modify or revoke the will after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.580. Allows a trust to be modified, terminated, revoked, or reformed after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.585. Establishes which records related to a petition are public, which are available only to certain persons, and which are confidential. Allows the court to order confidential records to be made available to other persons when good cause is shown.

Sec. 131.12.590. Defines terms used in the new article.

Section 9. Amends AS 13.16.410. Allows personal representatives to consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

Section 10. Amends AS 13.36.109. Allows trustees to consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

Section 11. Indicates how certain provisions in the bill amends court rules.

Section 12. States that those sections that amend the court rules only take effect if the bill section 11 is approved by a two-thirds vote.

This bill provides conformity between Alaska's elective share and testamentary proof provisions in Alaska's Uniform Probate Code with those adopted in the 2009 amendments to the official Uniform Probate Code. It ensures that irrevocable trusts with transfer restrictions are excluded from the augmented estate. Finally, it allows petitioners to determine the validity of wills and trusts prior to the death of the settler and establishes the procedures to be followed in accomplishing this. No anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

HOUSE BILL NO. 144

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE RAMRAS

Introduced: 2/23/09
Referred: Labor and Commerce, Judiciary

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the Uniform Probate Code, including wills, trusts, nonprobate transfers, augmented estates, personal representatives, and trustees; and amending Rules 3 and 8, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 1, Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure, and Rule 37.5, Alaska Rules of Administration."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 13.06.120 is amended to read:

Sec. 13.06.120. Pleadings; when parties bound by orders; notice. In any proceedings involving trusts, nonprobate assets, or estates of decedents, minors, protected persons, or incapacitated persons brought under AS 13.06 - AS 13.36 or AS 13.38, including any judicially supervised settlements and any nonjudicial proceedings and settlements, the following apply:

(1) interests to be affected shall be described in pleadings that give reasonable information to owners by name or class, by reference to the instrument creating the interests, or in other appropriate manner;

(2) persons are bound by orders binding others in the following cases:

(A) orders binding the sole holder or all co-holders of a power of revocation or a general or nongeneral power of appointment, including one in the form of a power of amendment, bind other persons to the extent their interests (as objects, takers in default, or otherwise) are subject to the power;

(B) to the extent there is no conflict of interest between them or among persons represented, orders binding a conservator bind the person whose estate the conservator controls; orders binding a guardian bind the ward if no conservator of the estate has been appointed; orders binding a trustee bind beneficiaries of the trust in proceedings to probate a will establishing or adding to a trust, to review the acts or accounts of a prior fiduciary and in proceedings involving creditors or other third parties; orders binding a personal representative bind persons interested in the undistributed assets of a decedent's estate in actions or proceedings by or against the estate; and orders binding an agent having authority to act with respect to the particular questions or dispute bind the principal; if there is no conflict of interest and no conservator or guardian has been appointed, a parent may represent the minor child;

(C) an unborn person, a minor, an incapacitated person, or a person whose identity or location is unknown or not reasonably ascertainable who is not otherwise represented is bound by an order to the extent the interest is adequately represented by another party having a substantially identical interest in the proceeding;

(D) with regard to interests given upon the happening of a certain event to persons who comprise a certain class, orders binding the living persons who would constitute the class, if the event had happened immediately before the commencement of the proceeding, bind all members of the class;

(E) with regard to an interest given to a living person when the same interest or a share of the interest is to pass to the surviving spouse or to persons who are or might be the distributees, devisees, heirs, or issue of the living person upon the happening of a future event, orders binding the living person bind the surviving spouse, distributees, devisees, heirs, or issue of the living person;

(F) with regard to interests given to a person or a class of persons, or to both, upon the happening of a future event, if the same interest or a share of the interest is to pass to another person or class of persons, or to both, upon the happening of an additional future event, orders binding the living person or class of persons who would take the interest upon the happening of the first event bind the persons and classes of persons who might take on the happening of the additional future event;

(G) if a person is designated by a trust instrument to represent and bind a born or unborn beneficiary of the trust and receive a notice, information, accounting, or report for the beneficiary, then the beneficiary is bound by an order binding the designated person; in this subparagraph,

(i) the settlor may make the designation in the trust instrument, in a separate document, or by a trust protector authorized in the trust instrument to make the designation;

(ii) except as otherwise provided in this subparagraph, a person designated under (i) of this subparagraph may not represent and bind a beneficiary while the designated person is serving as trustee;

(iii) except as otherwise provided in this subparagraph, a person designated under (i) of this subparagraph may not represent and bind another beneficiary if the designated person also is a beneficiary, unless the designated person was named by the settlor, is the beneficiary's spouse, or is a grandparent or descendant of a grandparent of the beneficiary or the beneficiary's spouse; in this sub-subparagraph, "spouse" means the individual to whom the beneficiary is married and with whom the beneficiary is living, and a physical separation primarily for education, business, health, and similar reasons does not prevent the individual from being considered to be living with the beneficiary;

(3) a person representing another person under (2)(A) - (F) of this section and a person designated under (2)(G)(i) of this section are not liable to the beneficiary whose interests are represented, or to a person claiming through that beneficiary, for an action or omission to act made in good faith;

(4) notice is required as follows:

(A) notice as prescribed by AS 13.06.110 shall be given to every interested person or to one person who can bind an interested person as described in (2)(A), (B), or (D) - (G) [(D) - (F)] of this section; notice may be given both to a person and to another person who may bind the person;

(B) notice is given to unborn persons, a minor, an incapacitated person, or a person whose identity or location is unknown or not reasonably ascertainable, and persons who are not represented under 2(A), (B), or (D) - (G) [(2)(A) OR (B)] of this section, by giving notice to all known persons whose interests in the proceedings are substantially identical to those of the unborn persons, the minor, the incapacitated person, or the person whose identity or location is unknown or not reasonably ascertainable;

(5) [(4)] at any point in a proceeding, a court may appoint a guardian ad litem to represent the interest of an unborn person, a minor, an incapacitated person, or a person whose identity or address is unknown or not reasonably ascertainable, if the court determines that representation of the interest otherwise would be inadequate; if not precluded by conflict of interests, a guardian ad litem may be appointed to represent several persons or interests; the court shall set out its reasons for appointing a guardian ad litem as a part of the record of the proceeding.

 Sec. 2. AS 13.12.201(b)(9) is amended to read:

(9) "transfer," as it relates to a transfer by or of the decedent, includes

(A) an exercise or release of a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent;

(B) a lapse at death of a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent; and

(C) an exercise, release, or lapse of

(i) a general power of appointment that the decedent created in the decedent [SELF]; and

(ii) a power described in AS 13.12.205(a)(2)(B) [AS 13.12.205(2)(B)] that the decedent conferred on a nonadverse party.

 Sec. 3. AS 13.12.205 is amended to read:

Sec. 13.12.205. Decedent's nonprobate transfers to others. The value of the augmented estate includes the value of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, not included under AS 13.12.204, of any of the following types, in the amount provided respectively for each type of transfer:

(1) property owned or owned in substance by the decedent immediately before death that passed outside probate at the decedent's death; property included under this category consists of

(A) property over which the decedent alone, immediately before death, held a presently exercisable general power of appointment; the amount included is the value of the property subject to the power, to the extent the property passed at the decedent's death, by exercise, release, lapse, default, or otherwise, to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(B) the decedent's fractional interest in property held by the decedent in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship; the amount included is the value of the decedent's fractional interest, to the extent that the fractional interest passed by right of survivorship at the decedent's death to a surviving joint tenant other than the decedent's surviving spouse;

(C) the decedent's ownership interest in property or accounts held in pay on death, transfer on death, or co-ownership registration with the right of survivorship; the amount included is the value of the decedent's ownership interest, to the extent the decedent's ownership interest passed at the decedent's death to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(D) proceeds of insurance, including accidental death benefits, on the life of the decedent, if the decedent owned the insurance policy immediately before death or if and to the extent the decedent alone and immediately before death held a presently exercisable general power of appointment over the policy or its proceeds; the amount included is the value of the proceeds, to the extent the proceeds were payable at the decedent's death to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(2) property transferred in any of the following forms by the decedent during marriage:

(A) an irrevocable transfer [, INCLUDING AN IRREVOCABLE TRANSFER IN TRUST WITH A TRANSFER RESTRICTION UNDER AS 34.40.110(a),] in which the decedent retained the right to the possession or enjoyment of, or to the income from, the property, if and to the extent the decedent's right terminated at or continued beyond the decedent's death; the amount included is the value of the fraction of the property to which the decedent's right related, to the extent the fraction of the property passed outside probate to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(B) a transfer in which the decedent created a power over the income or property, exercisable by the decedent alone or in conjunction with another person, or exercisable by a nonadverse party, to or for the benefit of the decedent, the decedent's creditors, the decedent's estate, or creditors of the decedent's estate; the amount included with respect to a power over property is the value of the property subject to the power, and the amount included with respect to a power over income is the value of the property that produces or produced the income, to the extent the power in either case was exercisable at the decedent's death to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's surviving spouse or to the extent the property passed at the decedent's death, by exercise, release, lapse, default, or otherwise, to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; if the power is a power over both income and property and the preceding provision defining the amount included produces different amounts, the amount included is the greater amount; and

(3) property that passed during marriage and during the two-year period next preceding the decedent's death as a result of a transfer by the decedent if the transfer was of any of the following types:

(A) property that passed as a result of the termination of a right or interest in, or power over, property that would have been included in the augmented estate under (1)(A), (B), or (C) or (2) of this section, if the right, interest, or power had not terminated until the decedent's death; the amount included is the value of the property that would have been included under (1)(A), (B), or (C) or (2) of this section, if the property were valued at the time the right, interest, or power terminated, and is included only to the extent the property passed upon termination to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent or the decedent's estate, spouse, or surviving spouse; as used in this subparagraph, termination, with respect to a right or interest in property, occurs when the right or interest terminated by the terms of the governing instrument or the decedent transferred or relinquished the right or interest, and, with respect to a power over property, occurs when the power terminated by exercise, release, lapse, default, or otherwise, but, with respect to a power described in (1)(A) of this section, termination occurs when the power terminated by exercise or release, but not otherwise;

(B) a transfer of or relating to an insurance policy on the life of the decedent if the proceeds would have been included in the augmented estate under (1)(D) of this section had the transfer not occurred; the amount included is the value of the insurance proceeds to the extent the proceeds were payable at the decedent's death to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(C) a transfer of property, to the extent not otherwise included in the augmented estate, made to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's surviving spouse; the amount included is the value of the property transferred to a person to the extent that the aggregate transfers to that person in either of the two years exceeded $10,000.

* Sec. 4. AS 13.12.205 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) Notwithstanding the other provisions of this section, the augmented estate does not include property transferred to an irrevocable trust with a transfer restriction under AS 34.40.110(a) if

(1) the settlor is a discretionary beneficiary of the trust; and

(2) the transfer was made more than 30 days before the marriage, or the decedent's spouse consented to the transfer under AS 13.12.208(a)(2).

* Sec. 5. AS 13.12.206(3) is amended to read:

(3) all other property that would have been included in the augmented estate under AS 13.12.205(a)(1) or (2) [AS 13.12.205(1) OR (2)] had it passed to or for the benefit of a person other than the decedent's spouse, the decedent's surviving spouse, the decedent, or the decedent's creditors, estate, or estate creditors.

* Sec. 6. AS 13.12.207(b) is amended to read:

(b) Property included under this section is valued at the decedent's death, taking the fact that the decedent predeceased the spouse into account, but, for purposes of (a)(1)(A) and (B) of this section, the values of the spouse's fractional and ownership interests are determined immediately before the decedent's death if the decedent was then a joint tenant or a co-owner of the property or accounts. For purposes of (a)(2) of this section, proceeds of insurance that would have been included in the spouse's nonprobate transfers to others under AS 13.12.205(a)(1)(D) [AS 13.12.205(1)(D)] are not valued as if the spouse were deceased.

* Sec. 7. AS 13.12.209(b) is amended to read:

(b) If, after the application of (a) of this section, the elective share amount is not fully satisfied or the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective share amount, amounts included in the decedent's probate estate and in the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, other than amounts included under AS 13.12.205(a)(3)(A) or (C) [AS 13.12.205(3)(A) OR (C),] are applied first to satisfy the unsatisfied balance of the elective share amount or the supplemental elective share amount. The decedent's probate estate and that portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others shall be applied so that liability for the unsatisfied balance of the elective share amount or for the supplemental elective share amount is equitably apportioned among the recipients of the decedent's probate estate and of that portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others in proportion to the value of the recipients' interests in the decedent's probate estate and that portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others.

 Sec. 8. AS 13.12 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Article 5A. Establishment of Will and Trust Validity before Death.

Sec. 13.12.530. Establishment of will validity before death. A testator, a person who is nominated in a will to serve as a personal representative, or, with the testator's consent, an interested party may petition the court to determine before the testator's death that the will is a valid will subject only to subsequent revocation or modification.

Sec. 13.12.535. Establishment of trust validity before death. If at least one of the trustees of a trust is a qualified person, the settlor or a trustee of the trust may petition the court to determine before the settlor's death that the trust is valid and enforceable under its terms, subject only to a subsequent revocation or modification of the trust.

Sec. 13.12.540. Venue. (a) The venue for a petition under AS 13.12.530 is

(1) the judicial district of this state where the testator is domiciled; or

(2) if the person who executed the will is not domiciled in this state, any judicial district of this state.

(b) The venue for a petition under AS 13.12.535 is the judicial district where the trust is registered. The venue for proceedings involving a trust that is not registered in this state is

(1) any place in this state where the trust could have been properly registered; or

(2) the location established by the rules of court.

Sec. 13.12.545. Contents of petition for will validity. A petition under AS 13.12.530 must contain

(1) a statement that a copy of the will has been filed with the court;

(2) a statement that the will is in writing;

(3) a statement that the will was signed by the testator, or was signed in the testator's name by another person in the testator's conscious presence and at the testator's direction;

(4) in the case of a witnessed will, a statement that the will was signed by at least two individuals, each of whom signed within a reasonable time after witnessing the signing of the will or the testator's acknowledgment of the signature on the will;

(5) in the case of a holographic will, a statement that the signature and material portions of the will are in the testator's handwriting;

(6) a statement that the will was executed with testamentary intent;

(7) a statement that the testator had testamentary capacity;

(8) a statement that the testator was free from undue influence and duress and executed the will in the exercise of the testator's free will;

(9) a statement that the execution of the will was not the result of fraud or mistake;

(10) the names and addresses of the testator, the testator's spouse, the testator's children, the testator's heirs, the personal representatives nominated in the will, and the devisees under the will;

(11) if minors, the ages of the testator's children, the testator's heirs, and the devisees under the will, as far as known or ascertainable with reasonable diligence by the petitioner;

(12) a statement that the will has not been revoked or modified; and

(13) a statement that the testator is familiar with the contents of the will.

Sec. 13.12.550. Contents of petition for trust validity. A petition for trust validity under AS 12.16.535 must contain

(1) a statement that a copy of the trust has been filed with the court;

(2) a statement that the trust is in writing and was signed by the settlor;

(3) a statement that the trust was executed with the intent that it be enforceable in accordance with its terms;

(4) a statement that the settlor had the legal capacity to enter into and establish the trust;

(5) a statement that the settlor was free from undue influence and duress and executed the trust in the exercise of free will;

(6) a statement that execution of the trust was not the result of fraud or mistake;

(7) the names and addresses of the settlor, the settlor's spouse, the settlor's children, the settlor's heirs, and the parties in interest as defined in AS 13.36.390;

(8) the ages of the settlor's children, the settlor's heirs, and the parties in interest as defined in AS 13.36.390 who are minors so far as known or ascertainable with reasonable diligence by the petitioner;

(9) a statement that the trust has not been revoked or modified; and

(10) a statement that the settlor is familiar with the contents of the trust.

Sec. 13.12.555. Declaration by court. The court may declare a will or trust to be valid and make other findings of fact and conclusions of law that are appropriate under the circumstances. After the testator's death, unless the will is modified or revoked after the declaration, the will has full legal effect as the instrument of the disposition of the testator's estate and shall be admitted to probate upon request.

Sec. 13.12.560. Binding effect of declaration. A person, whether the person is known, unknown, born, or not born at the time of a proceeding under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.590, including a person who is represented by another person under AS 13.06.120, is bound by the declaration under AS 13.12.555 even if by the time of the testator's death the representing person has died or would no longer be able to represent the person represented in the proceeding under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.590.

Sec. 13.12.565. Hearing and notice. (a) After the petition under AS 13.12.530 or 13.12.535 is filed, the court shall fix a time and place for a hearing. The petitioner shall notify the spouse, the children, and the heirs of the testator or settlor in the manner established by AS 13.06.110.

(b) In addition to the notice required by (a) of this section, in proceedings involving a petition under AS 13.12.530, the petitioner shall notify the testator, the personal representatives nominated in the will, and the devisees under the will in the manner established by AS 13.06.110.

(c) In addition to the notice required by (a) of this section, in proceedings involving a petition under AS 13.12.535, the petitioner shall notify the settlor and the parties in interest in the manner established by AS 13.06.110. Notice may be given to other persons. In this subsection, "party in interest" has the meaning given in AS 13.36.390.

Sec. 13.12.570. Burden of proof. A petitioner under AS 13.12.530 or 13.12.535 has the burden of establishing prima facie proof of the execution of the will or trust. A person who opposes the petition has the burden of establishing the lack of testamentary intent, lack of capacity, undue influence, fraud, duress, mistake, or revocation. A party to the proceeding has the ultimate burden of persuasion as to the matters for which they have the initial burden of proof.

Sec. 13.12.575. Change to will after declaration. After a declaration of the validity of a will under AS 13.12.555, a testator may modify a will by a later will or codicil executed according to the laws of this state or another state, and the will may be revoked or modified under AS 13.12.507, 13.12.508, or another applicable law.

Sec. 13.12.580. Change to trust after declaration. After a declaration of validity under AS 13.12.555, a trust may be modified, terminated, revoked, or reformed under AS 13.36.340 - 13.36.365, or another applicable law.

Sec. 13.12.585. Confidentiality. (a) A notice of the filing of a petition under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.580, a summary of all formal proceedings under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.580, and a dispositional order or a modification or termination of a dispositional order relating to a proceeding under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.580 shall be available for public inspection. Except as provided in (b) and (c) of this section, all other information contained in the court records relating to a proceeding under AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.580 is confidential.

(b) The records that are confidential under (a) of this section may be made available to

(1) the petitioner and the petitioner's attorney;

(2) interested persons who have appeared in the proceedings, interested persons who have otherwise submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, and the attorneys, guardians, and conservators of the interested persons;

(3) the judge hearing or reviewing the matter; and

(4) a member of the clerical or administrative staff of the court if access is essential for authorized internal administrative purposes.

(c) For good cause shown, the court may order the records that are confidential under (a) of this section to be made available to a person who is not listed in (b) of this section.

Sec. 13.12.590. Definitions. In AS 13.12.530 - 13.12.590,

(1) "qualified person" has the meaning given in AS 13.36.390;

(2) "testator" means a person who executes a will as a testator;

(3) "trust" means a revocable or irrevocable trust.

 Sec. 9. AS 13.16.055(a) is amended to read:

(a) Venue for the first informal or formal testacy or appointment proceedings after a decedent's death is

(1) in the judicial district where the decedent was domiciled at the time of death; or

(2) if the decedent was not domiciled in this state, in any judicial district where

(A) property of the decedent was located at the time of death; or

(B) a fiduciary who is subject to the laws of this state and who comes into the control of property owned by the decedent at the time of death resides or has its principal place of business.

 Sec. 10. AS 13.16.410 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(28) consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

 Sec. 11. AS 13.36.109 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(29) to consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

 Sec. 12. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

INDIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENTS. (a) AS 13.16.055(a), as amended by sec. 9 of this Act, has the effect of amending Rule 3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by establishing a special venue rule for the first informal or formal testacy or appointment proceedings after a decedent's death when the decedent was not domiciled in this state.

(b) AS 13.16.540, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, has the effect of amending Rule 3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by establishing special venue rules for a petition under AS 13.12.530 or 13.12.535, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act.

(c) AS 13.12.545 and 13.12.550, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, have the effect of amending Rule 8, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by establishing special requirements for the contents of petitions under AS 13.12.530 and 13.12.535, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act.

(d) AS 13.12.550, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, has the effect of amending Rule 1, Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure, by establishing special hearing and notice requirements for a hearing to determine the validity of a will or a trust under AS 13.12.530 and 13.12.535, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act.

(e) AS 13.12.585, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, has the effect of amending Rule 37.5, Alaska Rules of Administration, by requiring that certain information contained in court records related to a petition under AS 13.12.530 or 13.12.535, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, be kept confidential and only released as indicated in AS 13.12.585.

 Sec. 13. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT. Section 9 of this Act and AS 13.12.540, 13.12.545, 13.12.550, and 13.12.585, enacted by sec. 8 of this Act, take effect only if sec. 12 of this Act receives the two-thirds majority vote of each house required by art. IV, sec. 15, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

CS for SENATE BILL NO. 63(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA
TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE—SECOND SESSION

This bill amends and improves Alaska's trust provisions which permit a settlor to form an irrevocable trust, be a discretionary beneficiary of the trust and, if the trust has a spendthrift clause, protect the trust assets from the settlor's creditors. Alaska was the first state to enact this type of trust law. Since enactment in 1997, numerous other states have enacted similar statutes. At present, twelve states allow this type of trust.

This bill improves Alaska's trust provisions so that Alaska's statute remains competitive with those of other states. As a result, both residents, and nonresidents of Alaska who choose to form this type of trust in Alaska, will benefit from these improved provisions.

The bill upgrades Alaska's statute by adopting the following provisions which have been adopted in other states:

- A creditor must establish by clear and convincing evidence that a transfer was made with an intent to defraud a creditor. (This standard has been adopted by nine of the other twelve states);
- Distributions can be made under the discretion of a trustee pursuant to a standard, as well as with absolute discretion;
- The settlor may be reimbursed for income taxes attributable to the trust;
- The settlor can retain the power to replace a trustee/advisor with a non-related, non-subordinate party.

MEMORANDUM March 23, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of CSSB 63( ), a bill relating to transfer restrictions on trust interests (Work Order No. 26-LS0317\P)

TO: Senator Lesil McGuire
Attn: Esther Cha

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Amends the subsection that establishes four situations when a creditor can satisfy a claim out of a beneficiary's interest in a trust when the trust contains a transfer restriction. In the first situation, this bill requires that the creditor establish the intent to defraud by clear and convincing evidence. In the second situation, which is based on the settlor's (the creator of the trust) right to revoke or terminate the trust, deletes a current exclusion from the meaning of "revoke or terminate" because the exclusion does not fit within the concept of revocation or termination.

Section 2. Adds a new provision to the section that allows a person who creates a trust (settlor) to restrict the transfer of a beneficiary's interest before payment to the beneficiary. States that the transfer restriction is allowed even if the settlor has any of the three listed rights: (1) to appoint a trustee, a trust protector, or an advisor for the trust; (2) to remove a trustee or trust protector and appoint certain replacements; or (3) remove an advisor and appoint a replacement.

Section 3. Adds a new provision to the section that allows a person who creates a trust (settlor) to prohibit the transfer of a beneficiary's interest before payment to the beneficiary (the beneficiary can be the settlor). States that the transfer restriction operates even if two situations exist: (1) the beneficiary has the right to receive a distribution made in a person's discretion; or (2) the settlor, under specific conditions, potentially will receive or actually receives income or principal to pay income taxes due on the income of the trust.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Summary of Changes
Between CS SB 63(JUD) and CS HB 146(JUD)

This document is an identification of the changes between W.O. 26-LS0317\C and 26-LS0633\R.

Section 1 deletes language involving discretionary distributions on page 2, lines 5-7 in CS HB 146 because it conflicts with the concept of that section which involves a settlor's right to revoke or terminate all or part of the trust. This discretionary language has been placed in subsection (n)(1) established in Section 3 of CS SB 63.

Section 1 also removes subsections (3)(E) and (3)(F) on page 3, lines 1-14 and makes conforming changes to page 2, line 8 in CS HB 146.

The language in (b)(3)(E) allowing a settlor to receive certain discretionary distributions made by a trustee conflicts with the concept of subsection (b)(3) regarding mandatory distributions of income or principal. Therefore, the discretionary language has been moved and established as a new subsection (n)(1) in Section 3 of CS SB 63.

Language in subsection (b)(3)(F) involves discretionary distributions for the payment of taxes again conflicting with the concepts in (b)(3) involving mandatory distributions of income or principal. This discretionary authority for the payment of taxes has been moved to new subsection (n)(2) in Section 3 of CS SB 63.

What is a Trust?

A Trust is a legal arrangement (basically a contract) where one person (called a trustee) holds property for the benefit of other persons (called beneficiaries). There are many different types of trusts.

The personal trust is the most common form of trust, created for non-business reasons for the benefit and protection of individuals. The trustee in a personal trust acts in accordance with the law and the instructions set forth in the governing instrument by the person who created the trust (called Grantor or Settlor). The primary responsibilities of the trustee are to manage and protect the assets in the trust for the best interest of the beneficiaries. The management and protection responsibilities include proper investment of assets, collection of income, maintenance of accurate books and records, filing of tax returns and other reports, and the payment of income and trust property to the beneficiaries in accordance with the terms of the trust.

Trusts are used throughout the United States to accomplish many different objectives such as;

- Protecting interest of minors
- Preserve assets for the family
- Accomplish the desires of the family
- Improve quality of life by allowing use of trust assets by beneficiaries
- Provide asset protection
- Reduce and in some cases eliminate gift, estate and income taxes

A self-settled trust is a trust where the grantor is also a beneficiary with other family members. This allows the assets in the trust to appreciate in value and the trust assets will not be in the Grantors taxable estate for federal estate tax purposes. The IRS has recently issued a private letter ruling acknowledging that these trusts can accomplish this objective.

From the information we have received from Alaska estate planning attorneys over ten thousand Alaskans have taken advantage of Alaska's favorable trust laws, non-residents of Alaska have also used Alaska's trust laws to accomplish their family financial goals.

SB 96

TITLE: "An Act relating to nonpayment of child support: relating to certain judicial and administrative orders for medical support of a child;."

SPONSOR STATEMENT (c)

SB 96 brings the state into compliance with the federal Uniform Interstate Family Services Act (UIFSA) that require states to have guidelines addressing how either or both parents will provide for a child's healthcare needs and to include an "Indian tribe" in the definition of state. Both amendments to Alaska's child support state plan are conforming amendments which will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions.

If a parent is ordered to pay for healthcare including cash medical support, the Child Support Services Division must enforce the ongoing medical support obligation as well as collect any cash medical support arrears. Including an "Indian tribe" in the definition of state does not expand or restrict tribal jurisdiction.

Failure to satisfy these mandated requirements jeopardizes 85 million dollars in federal funding for both Alaska's Child support program and Temporary Assistance To Needy Families (TANF).

AMENDMENT

LS04585/C SB 96 BY COGHILL

Insert new subsection:

(b) The proposed changes made in AS 25.25.101(19) under sec. 3 of this Act are conforming amendments that will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions. UIFSA does not determine the authority of an Indian tribe to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order. In Alaska, the scope of tribal authority to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order is an unsettled legal question. In adopting UIFSA conforming amendments, the legislature does not intend to grant or restrict tribal jurisdiction to enter, modify, or enforce child support orders, and the amendments are not intended, either directly or impliedly, to acknowledge, expand, or restrict tribal jurisdiction.

Amt #1 to Amt #1 passed

1. This bill adds an "Indian tribe" and "United States Virgin Islands" to the definition of state.

2. This bill adds to existing law the authority for a tribunal to order either or both parents to pay cash medical support, if warranted.

3. In addition, the bill directs Child Support Services Division (CSSD) to review child support orders for modification on a federally mandated three-year cycle.

4. The bill adds cash medical support to the definition of arrearage and the definition of support order thereby enabling CSSD to use its existing enforcement tools to collect a cash medical support obligation on behalf of the child.

5. Finally, the bill removes the language limiting who may request the correction of a clerical mistake in an administrative order or request the vacation of an administrative order based upon a default income.

SB 96 puts Alaska in compliance with the federal requirements which assure that Alaska's children receive the medical support to which they are entitled.

In addition, adoption of SB 96 assures 85 million in federal dollars to Alaska for the Child Support Enforcement and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) programs.

I appreciate your support of this important bill.

MEMORANDUM February 27, 2009

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary (CSSB 96( ); (Work Order No. 26-LS0485\E))

TO: Senator Betty Davis
Attn: Lynda Zaugg

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1. Adds reference to cash medical support to the crime of aiding the nonpayment of child support in the second degree.

Section 2. Adds the Virgin Islands and Indian Tribes to the definition of "state."

Section 3. Amends order of support provision to include both parents, medical support, and insurance.

Section 4. Adds medical support to provision authorizing the initiation of administrative action to establish a duty of support.

Section 5. Amends periodic reviews of support orders to require a three year cycle of review.

Section 6. Deletes motion requirement for correcting an administrative mistake in a support order.

Section 7. Deletes motion requirement for vacating a support order that is based on a default amount.

Section 8. Redefines "arrearage" for child support purposes.

Section 9. Amends the definition of "support order" to include cash medical support.

Section 10. Amends garnishment provision to include insurance and cash medical support.

Section 11. Amends the Alaska Native family assistance program to include obligations for cash medical support.

Section 12. Provides for an indirect court rule amendment to Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure for changes made in the bill.

Section 13. Makes bill changes applicable to child support actions filed on or after the bill's effective date.

Section 14. Authorizes the Department of Revenue to proceed to adopt regulations needed under the bill.

Section 15. Provides for a conditional effect for the court rule amendment in sec. 12 only for two-thirds majority vote.

Section 16. Makes sec. 14 effective immediately.

Section 17. Provides for a July 1, 2009, effective date for all other bill sections.

The Honorable Jay Ramras
Chair, Judiciary Committee
Alaska House of Representatives
Alaska State Capitol, Room 120
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Ramras;

There is only one difference between the Senate CS for SB 96 and the House CS for HB 192. On page 2 of both bills, Sec 1 included paragraph (a) of intent language but the Senate CS inadvertently left out paragraph (b) which is in CSHB 192 as follows:

"(b) The proposed changes made in AS 25.25.101(19) under sec. 3 of this Act are conforming amendments that will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions. UIFSA does not determine the authority of an Indian tribe to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order. In Alaska, the scope of tribal authority to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order is an unsettled legal question, due in part to the lack of Indian country in most of the state. In adopting UIFSA conforming amendments, the legislature does not intend to grant or restrict tribal jurisdiction to enter, modify, or enforce child support orders, and the amendments are not intended to either directly or impliedly, to acknowledge, expand, or restrict tribal jurisdiction."

The Department supports including this intent language in CSSB 96 if that bill is to pass (H)JUD and move to (H)FIN for further consideration

Thank you for working with us on this issue.

Legislative Testimony

Jessie M. Archibald
Staff Attorney, Tribal Child Support Unit
Central Council Tlingit & Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska
320 West Willoughby Ave., Suite 300
Juneau, Alaska 99801
HEARING: (H) JUD Apr 13 8:00 AM CAPITOL 120 TELECONFERENCE

My name is Jessie Archibald. I represent the Central Council Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska Tribal child support program. I would like to request that my written testimony be entered into the record. The purpose of my testimony is to explain the Tribe's objection to the Section 1. (b) language regarding the Definition of "State"; Legislative Intent, contained in CS for House Bill 192 (HHS), and respectfully request that section (b) language be deleted.

Reasons for Objections:

1. Section (b) language is not necessary because UIFSA has built in procedures for the non-registrant to raise objections about the issuing tribunal's subject matter jurisdiction, personal jurisdiction, and other matters that may make a specific order not entitled to recognition and enforcement in Alaska's tribunals.

2. The language specifically segregates out tribal child support orders for particular scrutiny, and carries a not-very-thinly-veiled implication that that scrutiny should be hostile, and even suggests that the legislature is pre-judging the validity of an objection based on a lack of Indian country, essentially endorsing the principal that a child support obligor should able to duck a child support obligation by objecting on that basis. The legislature should leave those issues to the individual litigants and the courts.

3. Child support is hard enough without the legislature of the State of Alaska putting into the statutes language that allows deadbeat parents to use legislative intent language to try to get out from under from having to pay support.

As an alternative, the Tribe would like to propose the following legislative intent language:

Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DEFINITION OF "STATE": LEGISLATIVE INTENT. (a) ....

(b) The legislature recognizes that child support enforcement programs are administered by Federal, State and Tribal entities that address the establishment of paternity and enforcement of support orders with the intent of promoting the general economic welfare and the best interest of dependent children. UIFSA provides a vehicle for the non-registrant to raise objections about the issuing tribunal's subject matter jurisdiction, personal jurisdiction, and other matters that may make a specific order not entitled to recognition and enforcement in Alaska's tribunals. The intent of the legislature is that tribal child support orders should be subject to the same types of objections, and to the same extent, as child support orders from tribunals of other jurisdictions. It is the intent of the legislature is to provide a procedural vehicle for Tribal child support orders for such orders to be registered in Alaska state tribunals in the same manner child support orders from other tribunals are registered. This legislation is not intended to prejudge the validity of any specific order or the validity of any objections to a specific order.

Short Description of Central Council Tribe's Child Support Program

1. Initially, federal funding was only provided to States that operate federally funded and approved child support programs.

2. More recently, with the adoption of the Final Rule on Child Support Enforcement Programs at 45 CFR 309, federally recognized Indian Tribes became eligible to receive federal funding to operate their own child support programs.

3. With the adoption of the Final Rule, the enforcement of child support has now become a Federal-State-Tribal partnership.

4. To receive federal funding for child support, the Tribe is required to adopt a plan that meets the requirements outlined in 45 CFR 309 which is the Final Rule on Child Support Enforcement Programs.

5. Central Council received federal funding and approval to operate a Tribal Child Support Program in March of 2007.

6. When Alaska initially was required to adopt UIFSA, it did not include the definition of "State" to include an Indian Tribe.

7. Now that Alaska Tribes are beginning to receive federal funding to operate child support programs, it is necessary for Alaska to amend the State UIFSA in order to come into compliance with the rest of the nation.

8. Alaska stands alone as the only state that has not adopted the federal uniform guidelines that define "state" to include an Indian Tribe, probably because when Alaska first adopted the federal version of UIFSA, it was not considered that Tribes would be receiving federal grants to operate child support programs.

9. The Tribal Child support program is located within the Tribe's Employment and Training Department. Our program is referred to as the "Tribal Child Support Unit."

10. The Tribe's goal is to ensure that Tlingit and Haida children receive the financial and emotional support of both their parents. The program strives to support and affirm the traditions of the Tribe and families. We believe that child support should be a reliable source of income for families. TCSU focuses its efforts on the needs of children, and in doing so, we empower parents to ensure their children's needs are met. Our program has a cooperative approach to establishing and enforcing support obligations.

11. Here are some statements we want to hear our children shout out:

- I'm playing football this year, thanks Dad!
- I made the basketball team, thanks Mom!
- Thanks Dad, I'm getting good grades in school!
- I'm playing soccer this year...thank you Mom!
- I'm going to camp this summer, thank you Dad!
- Even though you're not with me, I know you care! Thanks Mom!

(C) determination of parentage; or

(D) the location of obligors or their assets;

(21) "support order" means a judgment, decree, or order, whether temporary, final, or subject to modification, for the benefit of a child, a spouse, or a former spouse, that provides for monetary support, health care, arrearages, or reimbursement, and may include related costs and fees, interest, income withholding, attorney fees, and other relief;

(22) "tribunal" means a court, administrative agency, or quasi-judicial entity authorized to establish, enforce, or modify support orders or to determine parentage. (§ 4 ch 57 SLA 1995; am §§ 48 — 50 ch 87 SLA 1997)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Application for child support by custodian. — See Saask v. Yandell, 702 P.2d 1327 (Alaska 1985) (decided under former law).

Arrearages. — Under Alaska law, arrearages were recoverable in actions under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. Bailey v. Haas, 655 P.2d 764 (Alaska 1982) (decided under former law).

There was no requirement that a request for arrearages had to be reduced to judgment by the petitioning state. Bailey v. Haas, 655 P.2d 764 (Alaska 1982) (decided under former law).

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Collateral estoppel. — Father affirmatively and explicitly waived his argument that the superior court did not give proper legal effect to the administrative decision concerning child support when he appeared and asked the superior court to proceed to decide support obligations for all years. McDonald v. Trihub, 173 P.3d 416 (Alaska 2007).

(1) the individual is personally served with a citation, summons, or notice within this state;

(2) the individual submits to the jurisdiction of this state by consent, by entering a general appearance, or by filing a responsive document having the effect of waiving any contest to personal jurisdiction;

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Jurisdiction found. — Contrary to the husband's contention in his challenge to the child support modification order, the trial court had personal jurisdiction over the husband pursuant to AS 25.25.201 after he moved to Missouri as the husband participated in support proceedings in Alaska for several years, he had lived in Alaska with one of the children, agreed to pay for the wife's expenses relating to her pregnancy with the parties' other child and his birth, and presumably conceived the children in Alaska. Teseniar v. Teseniar, 74 P.3d 910 (Alaska 2003).

Sec. 25.25.202. Procedure when exercising jurisdiction over nonresident. A tribunal of this state exercising personal jurisdiction over a nonresident under AS 25.25.201 may apply AS 25.25.316 to receive evidence from another state and AS 25.25.318 to obtain discovery through a tribunal of another state. In all other respects, AS 25.25.301 — 25.25.701 do not apply and the tribunal shall apply the procedural and substantive law of this state, including the rules on choice of law other than those established by this chapter. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.203. Initiating and responding tribunal of this state. Under this chapter, a tribunal of this state may serve as an initiating tribunal to forward proceedings to another state and as a responding tribunal for proceedings initiated in another state. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.204. Simultaneous proceedings in another state. (a) A tribunal of this state may exercise jurisdiction to establish a support order if the complaint or comparable pleading is filed after a complaint or comparable pleading is filed in another state only if

(1) the complaint or comparable pleading in this state is filed before the expiration of the time allowed in the other state for filing a responsive pleading challenging the exercise of jurisdiction by the other state;

(2) the contesting party timely challenges the exercise of jurisdiction in the other state; and

(3) if relevant, this state is the home state of the child.

(b) A tribunal of this state may not exercise jurisdiction to establish a support order if the complaint or comparable pleading is filed before a complaint or comparable pleading is filed in another state if

(1) the complaint or comparable pleading in the other state is filed before the expiration of the time allowed in this state for filing a responsive pleading challenging the exercise of jurisdiction by this state;

(2) the contesting party timely challenges the exercise of jurisdiction in this state; and

(3) if relevant, the other state is the home state of the child. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.205. Continuing, exclusive jurisdiction. (a) A tribunal of this state issuing a support order consistent with the law of this state has continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over a child support order

(1) as long as this state remains the residence of the obligor, the individual obligee, or the child for whose benefit the support order is issued; or

(2) until each individual party has filed written consent with the tribunal of this state for a tribunal of another state to modify the order and assume continuing, exclusive jurisdiction.

(b) A tribunal of this state issuing a child support order consistent with the law of this state may not exercise its continuing jurisdiction to modify the order if the order has been modified by a tribunal of another state under a law substantially similar to this chapter.

(c) If a child support order of this state is modified by a tribunal of another state under a law substantially similar to this chapter, a tribunal of this state loses its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction with regard to prospective enforcement of the order issued in this state and may only

(1) enforce the order that was modified as to amounts accruing before the modification;

(2) enforce nonmodifiable aspects of that order; and

(3) provide other appropriate relief for violations of that order that occurred before the effective date of the modification.

(d) A tribunal of this state shall recognize the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of a tribunal of another state that has issued a child support order under a law substantially similar to this chapter.

(e) A temporary support order issued ex parte or pending resolution of a jurisdictional conflict does not create continuing, exclusive jurisdiction in the issuing tribunal.

(f) A tribunal of this state issuing a support order consistent with the law of this state has continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over a spousal support order throughout the existence of the support obligation. A tribunal of this state may not modify a spousal support order issued by a tribunal of another state having continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over that order under the law of that state. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Order not entitled to full faith and credit. — A support order entered by a responding court pursuant to a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act petition, which did not specifically modify an order entered in the initiating state, had no effect on the validity of the earlier order and was not entitled to full faith and credit by courts of the initiating state. State, Dep't of Revenue ex rel. Valdez v. Valdez, 941 P.2d 144 (Alaska 1997) (decided under former law).

Order properly entered on waiver by parties of administrative decision. — Father affirmatively and explicitly waived his argument that the superior court did not give proper legal effect to the administrative decision concerning child support when he appeared and asked the superior court to proceed to decide support obligations for all years. McDonald v. Trihub, 173 P.3d 416 (Alaska 2007).

Interest on support arrearage. — Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, where the child resided in Alaska, the issuing state, Washington could not modify the original support order, and the Child Support Enforcement Division (now the Child Support Services Agency) was entitled to collect interest on father's support arrearage. State, Dep't of Revenue, Child Support Enforcement Div., ex rel. Walklace v. Delaney, 962 P.2d 187 (Alaska 1998).

Jurisdiction found. — Contrary to the husband's contention in his challenge to the child support modification order, the trial court had continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the support order pursuant to AS 25.25.205(a)(1)-(2) after he moved to Missouri as the wife and the children still resided in Alaska and the parties filed no written consent for Missouri to modify the order. Teseniar v. Teseniar, 74 P.3d 910 (Alaska 2003).

Sec. 25.25.206. Enforcement and modification of support order by tribunal having continuing jurisdiction. (a) A tribunal of this state may serve as an initiating tribunal to request a tribunal of another state to enforce or modify a support order issued in that state.

(b) A tribunal of this state having continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over a support order may act as a responding tribunal to enforce or modify the order. If a party subject to the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of the tribunal no longer resides in the issuing state, in subsequent proceedings the tribunal may apply AS 25.25.316 to receive evidence from another state and AS 25.25.318 to obtain discovery through a tribunal of another state.

Sec. 25.25.207. Recognition of controlling child support order. (a) If a proceeding is brought under this chapter and only one tribunal has issued a child support order, the order of that tribunal is controlling and shall be recognized.

(b) If a proceeding is brought under this chapter and two or more child support orders have been issued by tribunals of this state or another state with regard to the same obligor and child, a tribunal of this state shall apply the following rules in determining which order to recognize for purposes of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction:

(1) if only one of the tribunals would have continuing, exclusive jurisdiction under this chapter, the order of that tribunal is controlling and shall be recognized;

(2) if more than one of the tribunals would have continuing, exclusive jurisdiction under this chapter, an order issued by a tribunal in the current home state of the child shall be recognized, but, if an order has not been issued in the current home state of the child, the order most recently issued is controlling and shall be recognized;

(3) if none of the tribunals would have continuing, exclusive jurisdiction under this chapter, the tribunal of this state having jurisdiction over the parties shall issue a child support order, which is controlling and shall be recognized.

(c) If two or more child support orders have been issued for the same obligor and child and if the obligor or the individual obligee resides in this state, a party may request a tribunal of this state to determine which order controls and shall be recognized under (b) of this section. The request shall be accompanied by a certified copy of every support order in effect. Every party whose rights may be affected by a determination of the controlling order shall be given notice of the request for that determination.

(d) The tribunal that issued the order that shall be recognized as controlling under (a), (b), or (c) of this section is the tribunal that has continuing, exclusive jurisdiction in accordance with AS 25.25.205.

(e) A tribunal of this state that determines by order the identity of the controlling child support order under (b)(1) or (2) of this section, or that issues a new controlling child support order under (b)(3) of this section, shall include in that order the basis upon which the tribunal made its determination.

(f) Within 30 days after issuance of the order determining the identity of the controlling order, the party obtaining that order shall file a certified copy of that order with each tribunal that had issued or registered an earlier order of child support. Failure of the party obtaining the order to file a certified copy as required under this subsection subjects that party to appropriate sanctions by a tribunal in which the issue of failure to file arises, but that failure has no effect on the validity or enforceability of the controlling order. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 51 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.208. Multiple child support orders for two or more obligees. In responding to multiple registrations or complaints for enforcement of two or more child support orders in effect at the same time with regard to the same obligor and different individual obligees, when at least one of the orders was issued by a tribunal of another state, a tribunal of this state shall enforce those orders in the same manner as if the multiple orders had been issued by a tribunal of this state. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.209. Credit for payments. Amounts collected and credited for a particular period under a support order issued by a tribunal of another state shall be credited against the amounts accruing or accrued for the same period under a support order issued by the tribunal of this state. (§ 5 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.301. Proceedings under this chapter. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, AS 25.25.301 — 25.25.319 apply to all proceedings under this chapter.

(b) This chapter provides for the following proceedings:

(1) establishment of an order for child support or spousal support under AS 25.25.401;

(2) enforcement of a support order and income withholding order of another state without registration under AS 25.25.501 — 25.25.507;

(3) registration of an order for child support or spousal support of another state for enforcement under AS 25.25.601 — 25.25.614;

(4) modification of an order for child support or spousal support issued by a tribunal of this state under AS 25.25.203 — 25.25.206;

(5) registration of an order for child support of another state for modification under AS 25.25.601 — 25.25.614;

(6) determination of parentage under AS 25.25.701; and

(7) assertion of jurisdiction over nonresidents under AS 25.25.201 — 25.25.202.

(c) An individual or a support enforcement agency may commence a proceeding authorized under this chapter by filing a complaint or a comparable pleading in an initiating tribunal for forwarding to a responding tribunal or by filing a complaint or a comparable pleading directly in a tribunal of another state that has or can obtain personal jurisdiction over the respondent. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 52 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.302. Action by minor parent. A minor parent, or a guardian or other legal representative of a minor parent, may maintain a proceeding on behalf of or for the benefit of the minor's child. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.303. Application of law of this state. Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, a responding tribunal of this state shall

(1) apply the procedural and substantive law, including the rules on choice of law, generally applicable to similar proceedings originating in this state and may exercise all powers and provide all remedies available in those proceedings; and

(2) determine the duty of support and the amount payable under the law and support guidelines of this state. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Role of Child Support Enforcement Division (now Child Support Services Agency). — Where the state's Child Support Enforcement Division (now the Child Support Services Agency) acted as a responding tribunal, the court appropriately applied state law to modification of a child support order originally issued in another state. State v. Bromley, 987 P.2d 183 (Alaska 1999).

Construction with other provisions. — Because AS 25.25.604 defines when a state may diverge from local law, and because this section provides that local law applies except "as otherwise provided," the sections, when read together, imply that forum law applies in all circumstances not expressly identified by the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. State v. Bromley, 987 P.2d 183 (Alaska 1999).

(1) to the responding tribunal or appropriate support enforcement agency in the responding state; or

(2) if the identity of the responding tribunal is unknown, to the state information agency of the responding state with a request that they be forwarded to the appropriate tribunal and that receipt be acknowledged.

(b) If a responding state has not enacted a law or procedure substantially similar to this chapter, a tribunal of this state may issue a certificate or other documents and make findings required by the law of the responding state. If the responding state is a foreign jurisdiction, the tribunal may specify the amount of support sought and provide other documents necessary to satisfy the requirements of the responding state. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 53 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.305. Duties and powers of responding tribunal. (a) When a responding tribunal of this state receives a complaint or comparable pleading from an initiating tribunal or directly under AS 25.25.301(c), it shall cause the complaint or pleading to be filed and notify the petitioner where and when it was filed.

(b) A responding tribunal of this state, to the extent otherwise specifically authorized by law, may do one or more of the following:

(1) issue or enforce a support order, modify a child support order, or render a judgment to determine parentage;

(2) order an obligor to comply with a support order, specifying the amount and the manner of compliance;

(3) order income withholding;

(4) determine the amount of any arrearages, and specify a method of payment;

(5) enforce orders by civil or criminal contempt, or both;

(6) set aside property for satisfaction of the support order;

(7) place liens and order execution on the obligor's property;

(8) order an obligor to keep the tribunal informed of the obligor's current residential address, telephone number, employer, address of employment, and telephone number at the place of employment;

(9) issue a bench warrant for an obligor who has failed after proper notice to appear at a hearing ordered by the tribunal and enter the bench warrant in any local and state computer systems for criminal warrants;

(10) order the obligor to seek appropriate employment by specified methods;

(11) award reasonable attorney fees and other fees and costs; and

(12) grant any other available remedy.

(c) A responding tribunal of this state shall include in a support order issued under this chapter, or in the documents accompanying the order, the calculations on which the support order is based.

(d) A responding tribunal of this state may not condition the payment of a support order issued under this chapter upon compliance by a party with provisions for visitation.

(e) If a responding tribunal of this state issues an order under this chapter, the tribunal shall send a copy of the order to the petitioner and the respondent and to the initiating tribunal, if any. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am §§ 54, 55 ch 87 SLA 1997)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Arrearages. — Under Alaska law, arrearages were recoverable in actions under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. Bailey v. Haas, 655 P.2d 764 (Alaska 1982) (decided under former law).

There was no requirement that a request for arrearages must be reduced to judgment by the petitioning state. Bailey v. Haas, 655 P.2d 764 (Alaska 1982) (decided under former law).

The petition's failure to include a prayer for arrearages did not justify dismissal of the claim since the function of a pleading is to give notice of the type of claim asserted, the body of the petition stated that defendant had contributed nothing toward the support for his daughter, and, the motion for an order of support specifically requested arrearages; therefore, defendant had notice of the claim for arrearages at the very latest by the date when the motion was filed. Bailey v. Haas, 655 P.2d 764 (Alaska 1982) (decided under former law).

Enforcement of support obligation for nonvisitation. — In the appeal of an action to enforce an Oregon judgment for accrued and unpaid child support, a provision in the judgment requiring the father to pay the mother $25.00 for each weekend without visitation for child care expenses unless the mother requested no visitation was interpreted according to the rule of contract interpretation that conditions are disfavored. The payments were treated as an absolute obligation that was part of the child support obligation without conditions concerning geographical limitation, impracticality, lack of information about the mother's whereabouts, reimbursement for actual child care expenses or credit for nonweekend visitation. Logghe v. Jasmer, 686 P.2d 694 (Alaska 1984) (decided under former law).

Sec. 25.25.306. Inappropriate tribunal. If a complaint or comparable pleading is received by an inappropriate tribunal of this state, it shall forward the complaint or pleading, and accompanying documents, to an appropriate tribunal in this state or another state and notify the petitioner where and when the complaint or pleading was sent. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 56 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.307. Duties of child support services agency. (a) The child support services agency of this state, upon request, shall provide services to a petitioner in a proceeding under this chapter.

(b) In providing services under this chapter to the petitioner, the child support services agency shall, as appropriate,

(1) take all steps necessary to enable an appropriate tribunal in this state or another state to obtain jurisdiction over the respondent;

(2) request an appropriate tribunal to set a date, time, and place for a hearing;

(3) make a reasonable effort to obtain all relevant information, including information as to income and property of the parties;

(4) send written notice from an initiating, responding, or registering tribunal to the petitioner within two days of receipt, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays;

(5) send a copy of a written communication from the respondent or the respondent's attorney to the petitioner within two days of receipt, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays; and

(6) notify the petitioner if jurisdiction over the respondent cannot be obtained.

(c) This chapter does not create or negate a relationship of attorney and client or other fiduciary relationship between the child support services agency or the attorney for the agency and the individual being assisted by the agency. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 57 ch 87 SLA 1997)

(§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 58 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

Sec. 25.25.311. Pleadings and accompanying documents. (a) A petitioner seeking to establish or modify a support order or to determine parentage in a proceeding under this chapter shall verify the complaint or comparable pleading. Unless otherwise ordered under AS 25.25.312, or otherwise prohibited by law, the complaint or comparable pleading or accompanying documents must provide, so far as known, the name, residential address, and social security numbers of the obligor and the obligee, and the name, sex, residential address, social security number, and date of birth of each child for whom support is sought. The complaint or comparable pleading must be accompanied by a certified copy of any support order in effect. The complaint or comparable pleading may include other information that may assist in locating or identifying the respondent.

(b) The complaint or comparable pleading must specify the relief sought. The complaint or comparable pleading and accompanying documents must conform substantially with the requirements imposed by the forms mandated by federal law for use in cases filed by a support enforcement agency. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.312. Nondisclosure of information in exceptional circumstances. Upon a finding, which may be made ex parte, that the health, safety, or liberty of a party or child would be unreasonably put at risk by the disclosure of identifying information, or if an existing order so provides, a tribunal shall order that the address of the child or party or other identifying information not be disclosed in a pleading or other document filed in a proceeding under this chapter. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 59 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.313. Costs and fees. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including a rule of the Alaska Supreme Court, at the time a complaint or comparable pleading is filed under this chapter, a tribunal may not require the petitioner to pay a filing fee or other costs.

(b) If an obligee prevails, a responding tribunal may assess against an obligor filing fees, including fees that were waived under (a) of this section, reasonable attorney fees, other costs, necessary travel expenses, and other reasonable expenses incurred by the obligee and the obligee's witnesses. The tribunal may not assess fees, costs, or expenses against the obligee or the support enforcement agency of either the initiating or the responding state except as required by other law or court rule. Attorney fees may be taxed as costs, and may be ordered paid directly to the attorney, who may enforce the order in the attorney's own name. Payment of support owed to the obligee has priority over fees, costs, and expenses assessed under this subsection.

(c) The tribunal shall order the payment of costs and reasonable attorney fees, including filing fees that were waived under (a) of this section, by a party who requests a hearing under this chapter if it determines that the hearing was requested primarily for delay. In a proceeding under AS 25.25.601 — 25.25.612, a hearing is presumed to have been requested primarily for delay if a registered support order is confirmed or enforced without change; however, the party who requested the hearing may present evidence to rebut this presumption. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Cross references. — For effect of this section on Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure 79 and 82, see § 22, ch. 57, SLA 1995 in the Temporary and Special Acts.

Sec. 25.25.314. Limited immunity of petitioner. (a) Participation by a petitioner in a proceeding before a responding tribunal, whether in person, by private attorney, or through services provided by the support enforcement agency, does not confer personal jurisdiction over the petitioner in another proceeding.

(b) A petitioner is not amenable to service of civil process while physically present in this state to participate in a proceeding under this chapter.

(c) The immunity granted by this section does not extend to civil litigation based on acts unrelated to a proceeding under this chapter committed by a party while present in this state to participate in the proceeding. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.315. Nonparentage as defense. A party whose parentage of a child has been previously determined under law may not plead nonparentage as a defense to a proceeding under this chapter. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.316. Special rules of evidence and procedure. (a) The physical presence of the petitioner in a responding tribunal of this state is not required for the establishment, enforcement, or modification of a support order or the rendition of a judgment determining parentage.

(b) A verified complaint or comparable pleading, affidavit, document substantially complying with federally mandated forms, and a document incorporated by reference in any of them, not excluded under the hearsay rule if given in person, is admissible in evidence if given under oath by a party or witness residing in another state.

(c) A copy of the record of child support payments certified as a true copy of the original by the custodian of the record may be forwarded to a responding tribunal. The copy is evidence of facts asserted in it and is admissible to show whether payments were made.

(d) Copies of bills for testing for parentage, and for prenatal and postnatal health care of the mother and child, furnished to the adverse party at least 10 days before trial or other proceeding, are admissible in evidence to prove the amount of the charges billed and that the charges were reasonable, necessary, and customary.

(e) Documentary evidence transmitted from another state to a tribunal of this state by telephone, telecopier, or other means that do not provide an original writing may not be excluded from evidence on an objection based on the means of transmission.

(f) In a proceeding under this chapter, a tribunal of this state may permit a party or witness residing in another state to be deposed or to testify by telephone, audiovisual means, or other electronic means at a designated tribunal or other location in that state. A tribunal of this state shall cooperate with tribunals of other states in designating an appropriate location for the deposition or testimony.

(g) If a party called to testify at a civil hearing refuses to answer on the ground that the testimony may be self-incriminating, the trier of fact may draw an adverse inference from the refusal.

(h) A privilege against disclosure of communications between spouses does not apply in a proceeding under this chapter.

(i) The defense of immunity based on the relationship of husband and wife or parent and child does not apply in a proceeding under this chapter. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.319. Receipt and disbursement of payments. The child support services agency of this state shall disburse promptly any amounts received under a support order, as directed by the order. The agency shall furnish to a requesting party or tribunal of another state a certified statement by the custodian of the record of the amounts and dates of all payments received. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

Article 4. Establishment of Support Order.

Section
401. Complaint to establish support order

Sec. 25.25.401. Complaint to establish support order. (a) If a child support order entitled to recognition under this chapter has not been issued, a responding tribunal of this state may issue a child support order if
(1) the individual seeking the order resides in another state; or
(2) the support enforcement agency seeking the order is located in another state.
(b) The tribunal may issue a temporary child support order if
(1) the respondent has signed a verified statement acknowledging parentage;
(2) the respondent has been determined under law to be the parent; or
(3) there is other clear and convincing evidence that the respondent is the child's parent.
(c) If a spousal support order entitled to recognition under this chapter has not been issued, a responding superior court of this state may issue a spousal support order if
(1) the individual seeking the order resides in another state; or
(2) the support enforcement agency seeking the order is located in another state.
(d) If, after providing an obligor with notice and opportunity to be heard, an appropriate tribunal finds that the obligor owes a duty of support, the tribunal shall issue a support order directed to the obligor and may issue other orders under AS 25.25.305.
(e) Before issuing an order under (b) of this section, the child support services agency shall adopt regulations for issuing such an order. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in (e) of this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

Sec. 25.25.501. Employer's receipt of income withholding order of another state. An income withholding order issued in another state may be sent to the person or entity defined as the obligor's employer under AS 25.27 without first filing a complaint or comparable pleading or registering the order with a tribunal of this state. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 60 ch 87 SLA 1997)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Personal jurisdiction required for foreign judgment enforcement. — Although personal jurisdiction was not required to register a foreign support judgment under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act, such jurisdiction was required for enforcement of the foreign judgment. Lagerwey v. Lagerwey, 681 P.2d 309 (Alaska 1984).

Post-judgment dismissal of underlying paternity suit. — The effect of a post-judgment dismissal of the underlying California paternity suit on a final Alaska judgment was determined according to Alaska law. Rubalcava v. Hall, 674 P.2d 767 (Alaska 1983).

Arrears on a pendente lite child support order were due despite the dismissal of the underlying paternity suit. Rubalcava v. Hall, 674 P.2d 767 (Alaska 1983).

Waiver of objection to judgment. — Defendant waived any objection that he could have asserted to an arrears judgment by voluntarily dismissing his appeal from the judgment after the California superior court had dismissed the paternity action pursuant to which the original California pendente lite order had been issued. Rubalcava v. Hall, 674 P.2d 767 (Alaska 1983).

Sec. 25.25.502. Employer's compliance with income withholding order of another state. (a) Upon receipt of an order under AS 25.25.501, the obligor's employer shall immediately provide a copy of the order to the obligor.

(b) The employer shall treat an income withholding order issued in another state that appears regular on its face as if it were issued by a tribunal of this state.

(c) Except as provided by (d) of this section and AS 25.25.503, the employer shall withhold and distribute the funds as directed in the withholding order by complying with the terms of the order, as applicable, that specify

(1) the duration and the amount of periodic payments of current child support, stated as a sum certain;

(2) the person or agency designated to receive payments and the address to which the payments are to be forwarded;

(3) medical support, whether in the form of periodic cash payment, stated as a sum certain, or an order to the obligor to provide health insurance coverage for the child under a policy available through the obligor's employment;

(4) the amount of periodic payments of fees and costs for a support enforcement agency, the issuing tribunal, and the obligee's attorney, stated as sums certain; and

(5) the amount of periodic payments of arrearages and interest on arrearages, stated as sums certain.

(d) The employer shall comply with the law of the state of the obligor's principal place of employment for withholding from income with respect to

(1) the employer's fee for processing an income withholding order;

(2) the maximum amount permitted to be withheld from the obligor's income; and

(3) the time periods within which the employer must implement the withholding order and forward the child support payment. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 61 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.503. Compliance with multiple income withholding orders. If an obligor's employer receives multiple orders to withhold support from the earnings of the same obligor, the employer shall be considered to have satisfied the terms of the multiple orders if the employer complies with the law of the state of the obligor's principal place of employment to establish the priorities for withholding and allocating income withheld for multiple child support orders. (§ 62 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.504. Immunity from civil liability. An employer who complies with an income withholding order issued in another state in accordance with AS 25.25.501 — 25.25.505 is not subject to civil liability to an individual or agency with regard to the employer's withholding of child support from the obligor's income. (§ 62 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.505. Penalties for noncompliance. An employer who wilfully fails to comply with an income withholding order issued by another state and received for enforcement is subject to the same penalties that may be imposed for noncompliance with an order issued by a tribunal of this state. (§ 62 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.506. Contest by obligor. (a) An obligor may contest the validity or enforcement of an income withholding order issued in another state and received directly by an employer in this state in the same manner as if the order were issued by a tribunal of this state. The provisions of AS 25.25.604 apply to the contest.

(b) The obligor shall give notice of the contest to

(1) a support enforcement agency providing services to the obligee;

(2) each employer that has directly received an income withholding order; and

(3) if

(A) a person or an agency is designated to receive payments in the income withholding order, to that person or agency; or

(B) no person or agency is designated to receive payments in the income withholding order, to the obligee. (§ 62 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.507. Administrative enforcement of orders. (a) A party seeking to enforce a support order or an income withholding order, or both, issued by a tribunal of another state may send the documents required for registering the order to the child support services agency of this state.

(b) Upon receipt of the documents, the child support services agency, without initially seeking to register the order, shall consider and, if appropriate, use any administrative procedure authorized by the law of this state to enforce a support order or an income withholding order, or both. If the obligor does not contest administrative enforcement, the order need not be registered. If the obligor contests the validity or administrative enforcement of the order, the child support services agency shall register the order under this chapter. (§ 62 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

Sec. 25.25.602. Procedure to register order for enforcement. (a) A support order or income withholding order of another state may be registered in this state by sending the following documents and information to a tribunal of this state:

(1) a letter of transmittal to the tribunal requesting registration and enforcement;

(2) two copies, including one certified copy, of all orders to be registered, including any modification of an order;

(3) a sworn statement by the party seeking registration or a certified statement by the custodian of the records showing the amount of any arrearage;

(4) the name of the obligor and, if known,

(A) the obligor's address and social security number;

(B) the name and address of the obligor's employer and any other source of income of the obligor; and

(C) a description and the location of property in this state of the obligor not exempt from execution; and

(5) the name and address of the obligee and, if applicable, the agency or person to whom support payments are to be remitted.

(b) On receipt of a request for registration, the registering tribunal shall file the order as a foreign judgment, together with one copy of the documents and information, regardless of their form.

(c) A complaint or comparable pleading seeking a remedy that must be affirmatively sought under other law of this state may be filed at the same time as the request for registration or later. The pleading must specify the grounds for the remedy sought. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 63 ch 87 SLA 1997; am § 19 ch 132 SLA 1998)

(b) A registered order issued in another state is enforceable in the same manner and is subject to the same procedures as an order issued by a tribunal of this state.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in AS 25.25.601 — 25.25.612, a tribunal of this state shall recognize and enforce, but may not modify, a registered order if the issuing tribunal had jurisdiction. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Construction with other provisions. — Because this section defines when a state may diverge from local law, and because AS 25.25.303 provides that local law applies except "as otherwise provided," the sections, when read together, imply that forum law applies in all circumstances not expressly identified by the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. State v. Bromley, 987 P.2d 183 (Alaska 1999).

Interest on support arrearage. — Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, where the child resided in Alaska, the issuing state, Washington could not modify the original support order, and the Child Support Enforcement Division (now the Child Support Services Agency) was entitled to collect interest on father's support arrearage. State, Dep't of Revenue, Child Support Enforcement Div., ex rel. Walklace v. Delaney, 962 P.2d 187 (Alaska 1998).

Sec. 25.25.605. Notice of registration of order. (a) When a support order or income withholding order issued in another state is registered, the registering tribunal shall notify the nonregistering party. The notice must be accompanied by a copy of the registered order and the documents and relevant information accompanying the order.

(b) The notice must inform the nonregistering party

(1) that a registered order is enforceable as of the date of registration in the same manner as an order issued by a tribunal of this state;

(2) that a hearing to contest the validity or enforcement of the registered order must be requested within 20 days after notice;

(3) that failure to contest the validity or enforcement of the registered order in a timely manner will result in confirmation of the order and enforcement of the order and the alleged arrearages and precludes further contest of that order with respect to any matter that could have been asserted; and

(4) of the amount of alleged arrearages.

(c) Upon registration of an income withholding order for enforcement, the registering tribunal shall notify the obligor's employer under AS 25.27. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am §§ 64, 65 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.606. Procedure to contest validity or enforcement of registered order. (a) A nonregistering party seeking to contest the validity or enforcement of a registered order in this state shall request a hearing within 20 days after the notice of the registration. The nonregistering party may seek to vacate the registration, to assert a defense to an allegation of noncompliance with the registered order, or to contest the remedies being sought or the amount of alleged arrearages under AS 25.25.607.

(b) If the nonregistering party fails to contest the validity or enforcement of the registered order in a timely manner, the order is confirmed by operation of law.

(c) If a nonregistering party requests a hearing to contest the validity or enforcement of the registered order, the registering tribunal shall schedule the matter for hearing and give notice to the parties of the date, time, and place of the hearing. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am §§ 66, 67 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.607. Contest of registration or enforcement. (a) A party contesting the validity or enforcement of a registered order or seeking to vacate the registration has the burden of proving one or more of the following defenses:

(1) the issuing tribunal lacked personal jurisdiction over the contesting party;

(2) the order was obtained by fraud;

(3) the order has been vacated, suspended, or modified by a later order;

(4) the issuing tribunal has stayed the order pending appeal;

(5) there is a defense under the law of this state to the remedy sought;

(6) full or partial payment has been made; or

(7) the statute of limitation under AS 25.25.604 precludes enforcement of some or all of the arrearages.

(b) If a party presents evidence establishing a full or partial defense under (a) of this section, the tribunal may stay enforcement of the registered order, continue the proceeding to permit production of additional relevant evidence, and issue other appropriate orders. An uncontested portion of the registered order may be enforced by all remedies available under the law of this state.

(c) If the contesting party does not establish a defense under (a) of this section to the validity or enforcement of the order, the registering tribunal shall issue an order confirming the order. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Collateral estoppel held inapplicable. — While it was proper for an Arizona court to consider father's contention that he was improperly served, that court's determination that a father was not properly served with a 1993 Alaska child support order should not have had a preclusive effect so as to invalidate the Alaska order. Bartlett v. State ex rel. Bartlett, 125 P.3d 328 (Alaska 2005).

Sec. 25.25.608. Confirmed order. Confirmation of a registered order, whether by operation of law or after notice and hearing, precludes further contest of the order with respect to a matter that could have been asserted at the time of registration. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.609. Procedure to register child support order of another state for modification. If a party or the child support services agency seeks to modify, or to modify and enforce, a child support order issued in another state but not registered in this state, the party or agency shall register that order in this state in the same manner provided in AS 25.25.601 — 25.25.608. A complaint for modification may be filed at the same time as a request for registration, or later. The pleading must specify the grounds for modification. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 68 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Revisor's notes. — In 2004, "child support enforcement agency" was changed to "child support services agency" in this section in accordance with § 12(a), ch. 107, SLA 2004.

Sec. 25.25.610. Effect of registration for modification. A tribunal of this state may enforce a child support order of another state registered for purposes of modification in the same manner as if the order had been issued by a tribunal of this state, but the registered order may be modified only if the requirements of AS 25.25.611 have been met. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995)

Sec. 25.25.611. Modification of child support order of another state. (a) After a child support order issued in another state has been registered in this state, unless the provisions of AS 25.25.613 apply, the responding tribunal of this state may modify that order only if, after notice and an opportunity for hearing, it finds that

(1) the following requirements are met:

(A) the child, the individual obligee, and the obligor do not reside in the issuing state;

(B) a petitioner who is not a resident of this state seeks modification; and

(C) the respondent is subject to the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal of this state; or

(2) the child, or a party who is an individual, is subject to the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal and all of the parties who are individuals have filed a written consent in the issuing tribunal providing that a tribunal of this state may modify the support order and assume continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the order; however, if the issuing state is a foreign jurisdiction that has not enacted a law or procedure substantially similar to this chapter, the written consent of an individual residing in this state is not required for the tribunal to assume jurisdiction to modify the child support order.

(c) A tribunal of this state may not modify any aspect of a child support order that may not be modified under the law of the issuing state. If two or more tribunals have issued child support orders for the same obligor and child, the order that is controlling and must be recognized under the provisions of AS 25.25.207 establishes the nonmodifiable aspects of the support order.

(d) On issuance of an order modifying a child support order issued in another state, a tribunal of this state becomes the tribunal of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Construction. — The use of the term "requirements" in this section means that Alaska substantive law applies when the state assumes exclusive jurisdiction to modify a child support order. State v. Bromley, 987 P.2d 183 (Alaska 1999).

Assumption of jurisdiction. — Where parents and child no longer resided in the state in which a child support order had been issued, where the out-of-state mother sought modification through the state child support enforcement agency (now the child support services agency), and where the father was subject to that agency's personal jurisdiction, the Alaska court could modify the original order and assume continuing jurisdiction. State v. Bromley, 987 P.2d 183 (Alaska 1999).

Interest on support arrearage. — Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, where the child resided in Alaska, the issuing state, Washington could not modify the original support order, and the Child Support Enforcement Division (now the Child Support Services Agency) was entitled to collect interest on father's support arrearage. State, Dep't of Revenue, Child Support Enforcement Div., ex rel. Walklace v. Delaney, 962 P.2d 187 (Alaska 1998).

Jurisdiction found. — Contrary to the husband's contention in his challenge to the child support modification order, the trial court had continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the support order after the husband moved to Missouri as none of the exceptions in AS 25.25.202 applied, the issuing state was Alaska, the wife and the children lived in Alaska, and the parties filed no written consent for Missouri to modify the order. Teseniar v. Teseniar, 74 P.3d 910 (Alaska 2003).

Sec. 25.25.612. Recognition of order modified in another state. A tribunal of this state shall recognize a modification of its earlier child support order by a tribunal of another state that assumed jurisdiction under this chapter or a law or procedure substantially similar to this chapter and, upon request, except as otherwise provided in this chapter, shall

(1) enforce the order that was modified only as to amounts accruing before the modification;

(2) enforce only nonmodifiable aspects of that order;

(3) provide other appropriate relief only for violations of that order that occurred before the effective date of the modification; and

(4) recognize the modifying order of the other state, upon registration, for the purpose of enforcement. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 71 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.613. Jurisdiction to modify support order of another state when individual parties reside in this state. (a) If all of the individual parties reside in this state and the child does not reside in the issuing state, a tribunal of this state has jurisdiction to enforce and to modify the issuing state's child support order in a proceeding to register that order.

(b) A tribunal of this state exercising jurisdiction as provided in this section shall apply the provisions of AS 25.25.101 — 25.25.209 and 25.25.601 — 25.25.614 to the enforcement or modification proceeding. AS 25.25.301 — 25.25.507, 25.25.701, 25.25.801, and 25.25.802 do not apply, and the tribunal shall apply the procedural and substantive law of this state. (§ 72 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.614. Notice to issuing tribunal of modification. Within 30 days after issuance of a modified child support order, the party obtaining the modification shall file a certified copy of the order with the issuing tribunal that had continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the earlier order and with each tribunal in which the party knows that an earlier order has been registered. Failure of the party obtaining the order to file a certified copy as required subjects that party to appropriate sanctions by a tribunal in which the issue of failure to file arises, but that failure has no effect on the validity or enforceability of the modified order of the new tribunal of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction. (§ 72 ch 87 SLA 1997)

Sec. 25.25.701. Proceeding to determine parentage. (b) In a proceeding to determine parentage, a responding tribunal of this state shall apply the procedural and substantive law of this state and the rules of this state on choice of law. (§ 6 ch 57 SLA 1995; am § 73 ch 87 SLA 1997)

(c) If a proceeding for support has been initiated and the individual whose rendition is demanded prevails, the governor or the designee of the governor may decline to honor the demand. HB192 – Child Support Enforcement Amendments

House Bill 192 amends existing statute to conform to the new medical support regulations set by the federal government in July 2008. Three issues required by federal law are addressed in this piece of legislation.

Cash medical support orders are added to sections of the law that apply to child support orders, child support, and health insurance AND the requirement can be the responsibility of either parent or both parents. This makes both parents responsible for the health care needs of the children regardless of who has the custodial order.

Sec. 2. Adds cash medical support to the crime of aiding the nonpayment of child support in the second degree.

Sec. 4. Adds cash medical support to Order of Support administered by Child Support Services Agency.

Sec. 5. Adds cash medical support for either or both parents and adds cash medical support to required notice provisions.

Sec. 9. Adds cash medical support to the definition of "arrearages".

Sec. 10. Adds cash medial support to the definition of "support order.

Section 11. Adds cash medical support and insurance to garnishment provisions for medical support orders.

Sec. 12. Adds cash medical support to parents liable for medical support under the Alaska Native family grant assistance grants.

Section 3 of the bill redefines the word "state" to include "the United States Virgin Islands" and "an Indian tribe. This gives a tribunal the authority to order either or both parents to pay cash medical support.

Sections 5, 7 & 8 now require the Child Support Services Agency to review support orders not less than every three years and removes language limiting who may request a clerical mistake correction on an administrative order or vacating an administrative order based upon a default income. The practices of the agency already comply with the requirement but HB 192 replaces the word "periodic" with "a three-year cycle" as direction for future agency directors.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 192(HSS)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES COMMITTEE

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to nonpayment of child support; relating to certain judicial and administrative orders for medical support of a child; relating to periodic review and adjustment of child support orders; relating to relief from administrative child support orders; relating to child support arrearages; relating to medical support of a child and the Alaska Native family assistance program; amending Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DEFINITION OF "STATE"; LEGISLATIVE INTENT. (a) It is the intent of the legislature that in order to bring Alaska into conformity with the nationwide Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA), as approved by the American Bar Association on February 9, 1993, and as in effect on August 22, 1996, including any amendments officially adopted as of that date by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, it is necessary to amend AS 25.25.101 to include "an Indian tribe" and "the United States Virgin Islands" in the definition of "state."

(b) The proposed changes made in AS 25.25.101(19) under sec. 3 of this Act are conforming amendments that will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions. UIFSA does not determine the authority of an Indian tribe to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order. In Alaska, the scope of tribal authority to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order is an unsettled legal question, due in part to the lack of Indian country in most of the state. In adopting UIFSA conforming amendments, the legislature does not intend to grant or restrict tribal jurisdiction to enter, modify, or enforce child support orders, and the amendments are not intended, either directly or impliedly, to acknowledge, expand, or restrict tribal jurisdiction.

 Sec. 2. AS 11.51.122(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of aiding the nonpayment of child support in the second degree if the person knows that an obligor has a duty under an administrative or judicial order for periodic payment of child support, for cash medical support, or for the provision of health care coverage for a child under a medical support order or a cash medical support order, or both and

(1) being a person with a statutory duty to disclose information to a child support enforcement agency intentionally withholds the information when it is requested by a child support enforcement agency;

(2) being an employer of the obligor, intentionally withholds information about the residence or employment of the obligor, the eligibility of the obligor's children for coverage under the employer's health insurance plan, or the cost of the coverage of the children under the plan, when that information is requested by a child support enforcement agency or when the employer is required by state or federal law to report the information without a request by a child support enforcement agency; or

(3) intentionally participates in a commercial, business, employment, or other arrangement with the obligor, knowing at the time that the arrangement is made that it will allow the obligor to avoid paying all or some of the support when it is due or to avoid having a lien placed on assets for the payment of delinquent support; receipt of a substantial asset for less than fair market value from an obligor after the obligor's support order has been established constitutes a rebuttable presumption that the person receiving the asset knew that the transfer would allow the obligor to avoid paying all or some of the support or to avoid having a lien placed on the asset.

 Sec. 3. AS 25.25.101(19) is amended to read:

(19) "state" means a state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, or any territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; the term "state" includes an Indian tribe and a foreign jurisdiction that has enacted a law or established procedures for issuance and enforcement of support orders that are substantially similar to the procedures under this chapter or under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act or the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act;

 Sec. 4. AS 25.27.060(c) is amended to read:

(c) In a court or administrative proceeding where the support of a minor child is at issue, the court or agency, as applicable, may order either parent or both parents to pay the amount necessary for support, maintenance, nurture, and education of the child. Regardless of whether a support order for periodic payments is issued, the court or agency shall issue a medical support order, a cash medical support order, or both. The medical support order shall require health care insurance coverage for the child if health care insurance coverage is available to either parent or both parents for the child at a reasonable cost. The court or agency shall consider whether the child is eligible for services through the Indian Health Service or other insurance coverage before ordering either parent or both parents to provide health care coverage through insurance, cash medical support, or other means or a combination of insurance, cash medical support, or other means. The court or agency shall allocate equally the cost of health care insurance for the child between the parents unless there is good cause to allocate the costs unequally. If the obligor has the duty to make periodic payments for non-medical child support, the obligor's periodic payments shall be decreased by the amount of the other parent's portion of payments for health insurance ordered by the court or agency and actually paid by the obligor. If the obligor has a duty to make periodic payments for non-medical child support, the periodic payments shall be increased by the obligor's portion of payments for health insurance if the other parent is ordered to and actually does obtain and pay for insurance. The court or agency shall allocate equally between the parents the cost of reasonable health care expenses not covered by private insurance unless there is good cause to allocate the costs unequally. One parent shall reimburse the other parent for the first parent's share of the uncovered expenses paid by the parent within 30 days after receipt by the first parent of the bill for the health care, payment verification, and, if applicable, a health insurance statement indicating what portion of the cost is uncovered. The medical support order must meet the requirements of AS 25.27.063. Upon a showing of good cause, the court may order the parents required to pay support to give reasonable security for payments.

* Sec. 5. AS 25.27.160(c) is amended to read:

(c) If the agency is establishing only [A] medical support [ORDER], the notice and finding of financial responsibility must state

(1) that health care insurance shall be provided for the child to whom the duty of support is owed if health care insurance is available to the alleged obligor at a reasonable cost and that the alleged obligor and the other parent shall share equally the cost of the health care insurance and the costs of reasonable health care expenses not covered by insurance;

(2) the sum of periodic payments of cash medical support for which either parent or both parents are found to be responsible under this chapter;

(3) the name of the alleged obligee and the obligee's custodian;

(4) [(3)] that the alleged obligor may appear and show cause in a hearing held by the agency why the finding is incorrect, should not be finally ordered, and should be modified or rescinded, because

(A) no duty of support is owed;

(B) health care insurance for the child is not available to the alleged obligor at a reasonable cost;

(C) adequate health care is available to the child through the Indian Health Service or other insurance coverage; or

(D) there is good cause to allocate the costs of health insurance, cash medical support, or uninsured health care expenses unequally between the parents;

(5) [(4)] that, if the person served with the notice under this subsection does not request a hearing within 30 days, a copy of the medical support order will be sent to the person's employer under AS 25.27.063(b) without further notice or hearing for inclusion of the child in family health coverage if it is available through the person's employer.

 Sec. 6. AS 25.27.193 is amended to read:

Sec. 25.27.193. Periodic review or adjustment of support orders. As necessary to comply with 42 U.S.C. 666, the agency, by regulation, shall provide procedures and standards for the modification, through a three-year cycle of [PERIODIC] review or adjustment, of a support order. Regulations adopted under this section must include procedures for periodic notice of the right to request review, procedures for hearings, and standards for adjustments regarding future periodic support payments. A modification under this section may be made without a showing of a material change in circumstances.

 Sec. 7. AS 25.27.195(a) is amended to read:

(a) A clerical mistake in an administrative order issued by the agency or an error arising from an oversight or omission by the agency may be corrected by the agency at any time [ON THE MOTION OF AN OBLIGOR].

 Sec. 8. AS 25.27.195(b) is amended to read:

(b) The [UPON THE MOTION OF AN OBLIGOR, THE] agency may, at any time, vacate an administrative support order issued by the agency under AS 25.27.160 that was based on a default amount rather than on the obligor's actual ability to pay.

 Sec. 9. AS 25.27.900(2) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(2) "arrearage" means a debt that is past due and equal to at least one monthly obligation under the support order for one or more of the following:

(A) monetary support;

(B) cash medical support;

(C) payment of health care costs or maintenance of health insurance;

(D) reimbursement of related costs;

(E) payment of attorney fees and legal costs and other fees;

(F) penalty, interest, and other relief as required by a support order;

* Sec. 10. AS 25.27.900(12) is amended to read:

(12) "support order" means any judgment, decree, or order that is issued by a tribunal for the support and maintenance of a child or of a parent with whom the child is living; "support order" includes a judgment, decree, or order

(A) on behalf of a child who has reached the age of majority if the judgment, decree, or order was lawfully issued; and

(B) for any or all of the following:

(i) monetary support, including arrearages;

(ii) payment of health care costs or maintenance of health insurance;

(iii) payment of cash medical support;

(iv) [(iii)] reimbursement of related costs;

(v) [(iv)] payment of attorney fees and legal costs and other fees; or

(vi) [(v)] penalty, interest, and other relief as required by a tribunal;

* Sec. 11. AS 47.07.025(b) is amended to read:

(b) Through the child support services agency or on its own behalf, the department may garnish the wages, salary, or other employment income of a person who

(1) is required by a medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, under AS 25.27.060(c) to provide insurance or cash coverage of the costs of medical care to a child who is eligible for medical assistance under this chapter;

(2) has received payment from a third party for the costs of the services; and

(3) has not used the payments to reimburse, as appropriate, the other parent or custodian of the child, the provider of the services, or the department.

 Sec. 12. AS 47.27.200(o) is amended to read:

(o) The applicability of AS 25.27 in the case of a recipient under an Alaska Native family assistance program includes the following:

(1) an obligor is liable to the Alaska Native family assistance program in the amount of the family assistance provided by the program to a child to whom the obligor owes a duty of support except that, if a support order has been entered, the liability of the obligor for assistance provided by an Alaska Native family assistance program may not exceed the amount of support provided for in the support order, and, if a medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, [ORDER OF SUPPORT] has been entered, the liability of the obligor for assistance granted under AS 47.07 may not exceed the amount of support provided for in the medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, [ORDER OF SUPPORT]; the child support services agency shall send notice of accruing liability under this paragraph in the same manner as required under AS 25.27.120(c), and, if the agency fails to comply with the notice requirement of this paragraph, interest does not accrue on the liability to the Alaska Native family assistance program unless a support order or medical support order, or cash medical support order, as applicable, has been entered;

(2) the child support services agency may appear in an action authorized under AS 25.27.045 at the agency's own discretion if an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable to the Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection;

(3) an Alaska Native family assistance program to which the child support services agency erroneously disburses an overpayment of child support under an income withholding order is liable to the state for the amount disbursed, plus interest at the rate imposed under AS 25.27.062(l)(1);

(4) when the right to receive child support has been assigned to an Alaska Native family assistance program, an agreement under AS 25.27.065(a) that has not been adopted as an administrative order of the child support services agency is not effective during a period when the obligee is receiving assistance under an Alaska Native family assistance program;

(5) the child support services agency, on behalf of an Alaska Native family assistance program, shall take all necessary action permitted by law to enforce child support orders entered under AS 25.27, including petitioning the court for orders to aid in the enforcement of child support;

(6) if an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection, the state is subrogated to the rights of the obligee to take actions authorized under AS 25.27.130(a);

(7) notwithstanding AS 25.27.130(c), the recovery of an amount for which an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable that exceeds the total assistance granted under AS 47.07 and this chapter shall be paid to the obligee;

(8) except as provided in AS 25.27.130(f), if an obligee under AS 25.27 is not receiving assistance under AS 47.07 or this chapter at the time the state recovers money in an action under AS 25.27.130(d) or (1) of this subsection, the recovery of any amount for which the obligor is liable shall be distributed to the obligee for support payments, including medical support payments, that had become due and unpaid since the termination of assistance under AS 47.07 or this chapter under a support order in favor of the obligee;

(9) after payment to the obligee under (8) of this subsection, the state may retain an amount not to exceed the total unreimbursed assistance paid on behalf of the obligee under AS 47.07 or this chapter;

(10) if an alleged obligor is liable to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection, and a support order has not been entered, the child support services agency may, at its own discretion, undertake an action to establish paternity and a duty of support using the procedures prescribed in AS 25.27 and may enforce a duty of support using the procedures prescribed in AS 25.27; the agency may also institute administrative proceedings to determine the paternity of a child born out of wedlock upon application of an Alaska Native family assistance program; the agency may not recover costs of genetic tests required under this paragraph from a person who is a recipient of assistance under an Alaska Native family assistance program;

(11) when a hearing officer makes a determination under AS 25.27.170(d), the hearing officer shall, in addition to the factors described in AS 25.27.170(e), consider the amount of the alleged obligor's liability to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection;

(12) notwithstanding AS 25.27.255(a), the child support services agency may not pay to an obligee any money that has been assigned to an Alaska Native family assistance program.

 Sec. 13. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

INDIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. AS 25.27.060(c), amended by sec. 4 of this Act, has the effect of changing Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by changing standards for issuance of medical and other support orders by the court.

 Sec. 14. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies to actions filed on or after the effective date of this section and to motions filed on or after the effective date in proceedings filed before, on, or after the effective date of this section.

 Sec. 15. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

TRANSITION: REGULATIONS. The Department of Revenue may proceed to adopt regulations necessary to implement this Act. The regulations take effect under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act), but not before July 1, 2009.

 Sec. 16. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

NO CONDITIONAL EFFECT. Because Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, is a substantive rule, sec. 4 of this Act takes effect even if sec. 13 of this Act fails to receives a two-thirds majority vote of each house.

 Sec. 17. Section 15 of this Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

 Sec. 18. Except as provided in sec. 17 of this Act, this Act takes effect July 1, 2009.

HOUSE BILL NO. 192

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE COGHILL

Introduced: 3/18/09
Referred: Health and Social Services, Judiciary

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to nonpayment of child support; relating to certain judicial and administrative orders for medical support of a child; relating to periodic review and adjustment of child support orders; relating to relief from administrative child support orders; relating to child support arrearages; relating to medical support of a child and the Alaska Native family assistance program; amending Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.51.122(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of aiding the nonpayment of child support in the second degree if the person knows that an obligor has a duty under an administrative or judicial order for periodic payment of child support, for cash medical support, or for the provision of health care coverage for a child under a medical support order or a cash medical support order, or both and

(1) being a person with a statutory duty to disclose information to a child support enforcement agency intentionally withholds the information when it is requested by a child support enforcement agency;

(2) being an employer of the obligor, intentionally withholds information about the residence or employment of the obligor, the eligibility of the obligor's children for coverage under the employer's health insurance plan, or the cost of the coverage of the children under the plan, when that information is requested by a child support enforcement agency or when the employer is required by state or federal law to report the information without a request by a child support enforcement agency; or

(3) intentionally participates in a commercial, business, employment, or other arrangement with the obligor, knowing at the time that the arrangement is made that it will allow the obligor to avoid paying all or some of the support when it is due or to avoid having a lien placed on assets for the payment of delinquent support; receipt of a substantial asset for less than fair market value from an obligor after the obligor's support order has been established constitutes a rebuttable presumption that the person receiving the asset knew that the transfer would allow the obligor to avoid paying all or some of the support or to avoid having a lien placed on the asset.

 Sec. 2. AS 25.27.060(c) is amended to read:

(c) In a court or administrative proceeding where the support of a minor child is at issue, the court or agency, as applicable, may order either parent or both parents to pay the amount necessary for support, maintenance, nurture, and education of the child. Regardless of whether a support order for periodic payments is issued, the court or agency shall issue a medical support order, a cash medical support order, or both. The medical support order shall require health care insurance coverage for the child if health care insurance coverage is available to either parent or both parents for the child at a reasonable cost. The court or agency shall consider whether the child is eligible for services through the Indian Health Service or other insurance coverage before ordering either parent or both parents to provide health care coverage through insurance, cash medical support, or other means or a combination of insurance, cash medical support, or other means. The court or agency shall allocate equally the cost of health care insurance for the child between the parents unless there is good cause to allocate the costs unequally. If the obligor has the duty to make periodic payments for non-medical child support, the obligor's periodic payments shall be decreased by the amount of the other parent's portion of payments for health insurance ordered by the court or agency and actually paid by the obligor. If the obligor has a duty to make periodic payments for non-medical child support, the periodic payments shall be increased by the obligor's portion of payments for health insurance if the other parent is ordered to and actually does obtain and pay for insurance. The court or agency shall allocate equally between the parents the cost of reasonable health care expenses not covered by private insurance unless there is good cause to allocate the costs unequally. One parent shall reimburse the other parent for the first parent's share of the uncovered expenses paid by the parent within 30 days after receipt by the first parent of the bill for the health care, payment verification, and, if applicable, a health insurance statement indicating what portion of the cost is uncovered. The medical support order must meet the requirements of AS 25.27.063. Upon a showing of good cause, the court may order the parents required to pay support to give reasonable security for payments.

* Sec. 3. AS 25.27.160(c) is amended to read:

(c) If the agency is establishing only [A] medical support [ORDER], the notice and finding of financial responsibility must state

(1) that health care insurance shall be provided for the child to whom the duty of support is owed if health care insurance is available to the alleged obligor at a reasonable cost and that the alleged obligor and the other parent shall share equally the cost of the health care insurance and the costs of reasonable health care expenses not covered by insurance;

(2) the sum of periodic payments of cash medical support for which either parent or both parents are found to be responsible under this chapter;

(3) the name of the alleged obligee and the obligee's custodian;

(4) [(3)] that the alleged obligor may appear and show cause in a hearing held by the agency why the finding is incorrect, should not be finally ordered, and should be modified or rescinded, because

(A) no duty of support is owed;

(B) health care insurance for the child is not available to the alleged obligor at a reasonable cost;

(C) adequate health care is available to the child through the Indian Health Service or other insurance coverage; or

(D) there is good cause to allocate the costs of health insurance, cash medical support, or uninsured health care expenses unequally between the parents;

(5) [(4)] that, if the person served with the notice under this subsection does not request a hearing within 30 days, a copy of the medical support order will be sent to the person's employer under AS 25.27.063(b) without further notice or hearing for inclusion of the child in family health coverage if it is available through the person's employer.

* Sec. 4. AS 25.27.193 is amended to read:

Sec. 25.27.193. Periodic review or adjustment of support orders. As necessary to comply with 42 U.S.C. 666, the agency, by regulation, shall provide procedures and standards for the modification, through a three-year cycle of [PERIODIC] review or adjustment, of a support order. Regulations adopted under this section must include procedures for periodic notice of the right to request review, procedures for hearings, and standards for adjustments regarding future periodic support payments. A modification under this section may be made without a showing of a material change in circumstances.

* Sec. 5. AS 25.27.195(a) is amended to read:

(a) A clerical mistake in an administrative order issued by the agency or an error arising from an oversight or omission by the agency may be corrected by the agency at any time [ON THE MOTION OF AN OBLIGOR].

* Sec. 6. AS 25.27.195(b) is amended to read:

(b) The [UPON THE MOTION OF AN OBLIGOR, THE] agency may, at any time, vacate an administrative support order issued by the agency under AS 25.27.160 that was based on a default amount rather than on the obligor's actual ability to pay.

* Sec. 7. AS 25.27.900(2) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(2) "arrearage" means a debt that is past due and equal to at least one monthly obligation under the support order for one or more of the following:

(A) monetary support;

(B) cash medical support;

(C) payment of health care costs or maintenance of health insurance;

(D) reimbursement of related costs;

(E) payment of attorney fees and legal costs and other fees;

(F) penalty, interest, and other relief as required by a support order;

* Sec. 8. AS 25.27.900(12) is amended to read:

(12) "support order" means any judgment, decree, or order that is issued by a tribunal for the support and maintenance of a child or of a parent with whom the child is living; "support order" includes a judgment, decree, or order

(A) on behalf of a child who has reached the age of majority if the judgment, decree, or order was lawfully issued; and

(B) for any or all of the following:

(i) monetary support, including arrearages;

(ii) payment of health care costs or maintenance of health insurance;

(iii) payment of cash medical support;

(iv) [(iii)] reimbursement of related costs;

(v) [(iv)] payment of attorney fees and legal costs and other fees; or

(vi) [(v)] penalty, interest, and other relief as required by a tribunal;

* Sec. 9. AS 47.07.025(b) is amended to read:

(b) Through the child support services agency or on its own behalf, the department may garnish the wages, salary, or other employment income of a person who

(1) is required by a medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, under AS 25.27.060(c) to provide insurance or cash coverage of the costs of medical care to a child who is eligible for medical assistance under this chapter;

(2) has received payment from a third party for the costs of the services; and

(3) has not used the payments to reimburse, as appropriate, the other parent or custodian of the child, the provider of the services, or the department.

 Sec. 10. AS 47.27.200(o) is amended to read:

(o) The applicability of AS 25.27 in the case of a recipient under an Alaska Native family assistance program includes the following:

(1) an obligor is liable to the Alaska Native family assistance program in the amount of the family assistance provided by the program to a child to whom the obligor owes a duty of support except that, if a support order has been entered, the liability of the obligor for assistance provided by an Alaska Native family assistance program may not exceed the amount of support provided for in the support order, and, if a medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, [ORDER OF SUPPORT] has been entered, the liability of the obligor for assistance granted under AS 47.07 may not exceed the amount of support provided for in the medical support order, cash medical support order, or both, [ORDER OF SUPPORT]; the child support services agency shall send notice of accruing liability under this paragraph in the same manner as required under AS 25.27.120(c), and, if the agency fails to comply with the notice requirement of this paragraph, interest does not accrue on the liability to the Alaska Native family assistance program unless a support order or medical support order, or cash medical support order, as applicable, has been entered;

(2) the child support services agency may appear in an action authorized under AS 25.27.045 at the agency's own discretion if an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable to the Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection;

(3) an Alaska Native family assistance program to which the child support services agency erroneously disburses an overpayment of child support under an income withholding order is liable to the state for the amount disbursed, plus interest at the rate imposed under AS 25.27.062(l)(1);

(4) when the right to receive child support has been assigned to an Alaska Native family assistance program, an agreement under AS 25.27.065(a) that has not been adopted as an administrative order of the child support services agency is not effective during a period when the obligee is receiving assistance under an Alaska Native family assistance program;

(5) the child support services agency, on behalf of an Alaska Native family assistance program, shall take all necessary action permitted by law to enforce child support orders entered under AS 25.27, including petitioning the court for orders to aid in the enforcement of child support;

(6) if an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection, the state is subrogated to the rights of the obligee to take actions authorized under AS 25.27.130(a);

(7) notwithstanding AS 25.27.130(c), the recovery of an amount for which an obligor under AS 25.27 is liable that exceeds the total assistance granted under AS 47.07 and this chapter shall be paid to the obligee;

(8) except as provided in AS 25.27.130(f), if an obligee under AS 25.27 is not receiving assistance under AS 47.07 or this chapter at the time the state recovers money in an action under AS 25.27.130(d) or (1) of this subsection, the recovery of any amount for which the obligor is liable shall be distributed to the obligee for support payments, including medical support payments, that had become due and unpaid since the termination of assistance under AS 47.07 or this chapter under a support order in favor of the obligee;

(9) after payment to the obligee under (8) of this subsection, the state may retain an amount not to exceed the total unreimbursed assistance paid on behalf of the obligee under AS 47.07 or this chapter;

(10) if an alleged obligor is liable to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection, and a support order has not been entered, the child support services agency may, at its own discretion, undertake an action to establish paternity and a duty of support using the procedures prescribed in

AS 25.27 and may enforce a duty of support using the procedures prescribed in AS 25.27; the agency may also institute administrative proceedings to determine the paternity of a child born out of wedlock upon application of an Alaska Native family assistance program; the agency may not recover costs of genetic tests required under this paragraph from a person who is a recipient of assistance under an Alaska Native family assistance program;

(11) when a hearing officer makes a determination under AS 25.27.170(d), the hearing officer shall, in addition to the factors described in AS 25.27.170(e), consider the amount of the alleged obligor's liability to an Alaska Native family assistance program under (1) of this subsection;

(12) notwithstanding AS 25.27.255(a), the child support services agency may not pay to an obligee any money that has been assigned to an Alaska Native family assistance program.

* Sec. 11. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

INDIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. AS 25.27.060(c), amended by sec. 2 of this Act, has the effect of changing Rule 90.3, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by changing standards for issuance of medical and other support orders by the court.

* Sec. 12. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies to actions filed on or after the effective date of this section and to motions filed on or after the effective date in proceedings filed before, on, or after the effective date of this section.

* Sec. 13. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

TRANSITION: REGULATIONS. The Department of Revenue may proceed to adopt regulations necessary to implement this Act. The regulations take effect under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act), but not before July 1, 2009.

* Sec. 14. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT. Section 2 of this Act takes effect only if sec. 11 of this Act receives the two-thirds majority vote of each house required by art. IV, sec. 15, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

 Sec. 15. Section 13 of this Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

 Sec. 16. Except as provided in sec. 15 of this Act, this Act takes effect July 1, 2009.

Mr. John Mallonee, Director
Child Support Services Division
550 West 7th Avenue, Suite 310
Anchorage, AK 99501

Dear Mr. Mallonee:

This is in response to your request for clarification of the potential Federal consequences if a State fails to enact laws to meet the State plan requirements with section 466(f) of the Social Security Act (the Act). The Act mandates that on and after January 1, 1998, each State must have in effect the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA), as approved by the American Bar Association on February 9, 1993, and as in effect on August 22, 1996, including any amendments officially adopted as of such date by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform States Laws. Specifically, Alaska State's UIFSA does not include Indian tribes in the definition of 'State'.

In order for a State to receive Federal funding for the operation of its child support enforcement program, it must have an approved State IV-D plan which meets the requirements of section 454 of the Social Security Act (the Act). One of those requirements, specified at section 454(20)(A), is that the State must have in effect all of the laws required by section 466.

When a State fails to comply with any statutory requirement, its plan is subject to disapproval by the Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE). In accordance with sections 452(a)(3) and 455(a)(1)(A) of the Act, there would then be no authority to expend Federal funds under Title IV-D to operate the State's child support enforcement program.

Therefore, a determination that a State IV-D plan is disapproved may result in immediate suspension of all Federal payments for the State's child support enforcement program, and such payments will continue to be withheld until the State IV-D plan can be approved by OCSE. This suspension includes the Federal share of administrative expenditures as well as any performance based incentive payments to the State.

In addition, in order to be eligible for a block grant for Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF), section 402(a)(2) of the Act requires a State to certify that it will operate a child support enforcement program under the State plan approved under part D. Therefore, Alaska should be aware that TANF funds may also be at risk if the State does not enact conforming child support legislation.

In Federal Fiscal Year (FFY) 2008, the Federal share of Alaska's IV-D expenditures was $14,657,800 and the State's TANF award amount was $46,732,590. In addition, Alaska received $1,794,516 in child support incentives for FFY 2007 (the latest year with available data).

We trust this statement of requirements and penalties clarifies our position. We are attaching our Action Transmittal 97-05 issued April 28, 1997 which outlines our procedures for determining that a State IV-D Plan is disapproved. Due to the gravity of the consequences that may result, we urge you to take all necessary steps to have the required UIFSA legislation enacted and implemented as soon as possible.

If you have any questions, please contact John Cheng at (206) 615-2566.

Sincerely,

Linda Gillett

PROGRAM INSTRUCTION

ACTION TRANSMITTAL

OCSE-AT-97-05

April 28, 1997

TO:STATE AGENCIES ADMINISTERING CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PLANS APPROVED UNDER TITLE IV-D OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERESTED INDIVIDUALS

SUBJECT:Procedures for Determining That a State IV-D Plan is Disapproved

BACKGROUND:Title III of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA), P.L. 104-193, made a number of amendments to sections 454 and 466 of the Social Security Act (the Act), requiring States to either establish new, or modify existing, procedures effective either October 1, 1996, March 1, 1997 or October 1, 1997. For States which require legislation in order to conform their State IV-D plans to the revised statute, section 395(b)(2) of PRWORA provides a grace period until not later than the 1st day of the 1st calendar quarter beginning after the close of the 1st regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of enactment of PRWORA (August 22, 1996). In cases which require that the State constitution be amended, section 395(c) of PRWORA provides a grace period until one year after the effective date of the State constitutional amendment, but no later than five years after the date of enactment of PRWORA.

CSE is tracking the progress of each of the States in enacting the new State plan requirements and mandatory laws, and is noting the date when each State's 1997 legislative session ends in order to ascertain when these laws are required to be in effect and when the State must submit new or amended State plan material for approval by OCSE in order to operate a Child Support Enforcement program according to the requirements of title IV-D of the Act. If a State fails to submit the necessary State plan amendments, OCSE will have to determine that the State does not have an approvable State plan. A determination that a State IV-D plan is disapproved will result in immediate suspension of all Federal payments for the State=s child support enforcement program, and such payments will continue to be withheld until the State IV-D plan can be approved by OCSE.

STATUTORY

AUTHORITY:Section 455(a)(1)(A) of the Act specifies that funds appropriated under title IV-D shall be paid to States with approved State IV-D plans. There is no authority to expend Federal funds under title IV-D of the Act for the operation of a Child Support Enforcement program unless such State has an approved State IV-D plan.

Section 466 of the Act requires that all States, as a condition for approval of their State IV-D plan, must have in effect laws requiring the use of mandatory procedures to increase the effectiveness of their Child Support Enforcement programs. As a condition for State plan approval, section 454(20) of the Act provides that, to the extent required by section 466, States must have laws in effect and implement the procedures prescribed in or pursuant to such laws.

Section 454 of the Act sets the statutory requisites for the State IV-D plan. In addition, regulations at 45 CFR 301.10 define the State IV-D plan as a comprehensive statement submitted by the IV-D agency describing the nature and scope of its program. The State IV-D plan contains all the information necessary for the Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE) to determine whether the plan can be approved, as a basis for Federal financial participation in the State IV-D program.

Section 452(a)(3) of the Act requires that OCSE review and approve State plans for Child Support Enforcement programs under title IV-D of the Act. The authority to approve State plans is delegated to the Regional Office, but OCSE retains authority for determining that a State IV-D plan is not approvable.

As stated above, a determination that a State IV-D plan is disapproved will result in immediate suspension of all Federal payments for the State=s child support enforcement program, and such payments will continue to be withheld until the State IV-D plan can be approved by OCSE. If a State is dissatisfied with OCSE=s decision, reconsideration may be requested pursuant to 45 CFR 301.14. Withholding of Federal payments cannot be stayed pending reconsideration.

Section 402(a)(2) of the Act (as amended by PRWORA) provides that the chief executive officer of a State must certify that it will operate a child support enforcement program under an approved IV-D plan as a condition of eligibility for a TANF block grant under title IV-A of the Act. Therefore, States should be aware that TANF funds may also be at risk.

Although it is not required under Title IV-D of the Act, OCSE will give States an advance notice of "Intent to Disapprove" a previously approved State IV-D plan. The State will then be permitted the opportunity to waive reconsideration of the OCSE=s final decision and to exercise, prior to the State plan approval/disapproval decision, the right to a hearing under the procedures set forth a 45 CFR Part 213. If the State elects to pursue its hearing rights prior to issuance of OCSE's decision, no further administrative appeal will be allowed.

Instructions for State Plan Disapproval

I. Notice of Intent to Disapprove

OCSE will issue a Notice of Intent to Disapprove a State Plan to the State umbrella agency head when it has been determined that either of the following situations exist:

Pursuant to the requirements at 45 CFR 301.13(d) the State IV-D plan no longer meets the requirements for an approved State plan based on relevant Federal statutes and guidelines.

Pursuant to the requirements at 45 CFR 301.13(e) or (f) the State IV-D plan or amendment submitted for approval does not meet the requirements under title IV-D of the Act and regulations issued pursuant to the Act.

II. Notice Of Opportunity For Hearing

The Notice of Intent to Disapprove will provide opportunity for the State to request a hearing prior to the issuance of the final decision if the State waives its right to a reconsideration of OCSE's decision under 45 CFR 301.14. The State must request a hearing within 60 days of the date of the Notice of Intent to Disapprove. If the State does not request a hearing, OCSE shall proceed according to the procedures set forth under Determination to Withhold outlined below.

Upon request of the State for a hearing, OCSE will issue a Notice of Hearing which will state the time and place of the hearing, the issues which will be considered, and shall be published in the Federal Register. The hearing procedures contained in regulations at 45 CFR Part 213 shall apply to these proceedings.

III. Negotiations

As provided in regulations at 45 CFR 213.1(b) the hearing process does not preclude or limit negotiations between OCSE and the State, whether before, during or after the hearing to resolve the issues which are, or otherwise would be, considered at the hearing. Such negotiations and resolution of the issues are not part of the hearing, and are not governed by the hearing procedures, except as expressly provided for in such procedures.

IV. Determination to Withhold

If OCSE concludes that the State does not have an approved State IV-D plan under section I of these instructions, it will notify the State that further Federal payments under title IV-D of the Act will not be made to the State until a State IV-D plan is submitted and approved. Until a State IV-D plan is approved, no further Federal payments under title IV-D will be made to the State for any child support enforcement activities. Pursuant to 45 CFR 213.33, the effective date for the withholding of Federal funds shall not be earlier than the date of OCSE=s decision and shall not the later than the first day of the next calendar quarter following such decision.

V. Reconsideration

Any State which has not waived its right to reconsideration and is dissatisfied with OCSE=s decision that the State does not have an approvable State plan may request reconsideration of the decision pursuant to regulations at 45 CFR 301.14. Funding, however, will be suspended and may not be restored unless OCSE subsequently determines that the original decision to withhold Federal IV-D funding was incorrect.

Dear Representative Coghill;

A separate letter should be entered on the record to clarify a sentence in the March 16, 2009 letter to Senator Hollis French. This sentence has been used on correspondence to your office as well. The letter is posted on-line in Basis under "Documents" for SB96. The clarification letter should include the following:

"This letter clarifies that the proposed Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) amendment to SB 96 does not grant authority to Indian tribes either to issue or serve an income withholding order on an employer in the State of Alaska. UIFSA defines the employer's responsibility when the employer receives an income withholding order. Employers in the State of Alaska will be required to comply with income withholding orders issued by an Indian tribe as provided in AS 25.25.501-07."

The same sentence is also found in the March 20, 2009 letter to Representative Coghill.

Thank you for working with us on this issue.

The Honorable John Coghill

Dear Representative Coghill;

In consideration of a letter of intent for HB 192 Child Support / Cash Medical, I am offering the following language that would clarify the changes to AS 25 and conform to Uniform Code.

> It is the intent of the legislature that in order to bring Alaska into conformity with the nationwide Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) as approved by the American Bar Association on February 9, 1993, and as in effect on August 22, 1996 including any amendments officially adopted as of such date by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, it is necessary to amend AS 25.25.101 to include "an Indian tribe" and "the United States Virgin Islands" in the definition of "state."
> The proposed UIFSA amendments are conforming amendments which will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions. UIFSA does not determine the authority of an Indian tribe to enter, modify or enforce a child support order. In Alaska, the scope of tribal authority to enter, modify or enforce child support orders is an unsettled legal question, due in part to the lack of Indian country in most of the state. In adopting UIFSA conforming amendments, the legislature does not intend either to grant or restrict tribal jurisdiction, if any, which may exist to enter, modify, or enforce child support orders, and the amendments are not intended either directly or impliedly to acknowledge, expand or restrict tribal jurisdiction.

Thank you for working with us on this issue.

March 20, 2009

The Honorable John Coghill
Chair, House Rules Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 214
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Coghill;

The Department of Revenue, with support of the Governor asked you to introduce legislation regarding Child Support Services needs for legislative change to their statutes. Thank you for sponsoring this legislation and introducing HB 192 last week. This letter outlines the need for the legislation to pass during this legislative session both for content of the bill and fiscal impact to the citizens of the state.

The Alaska Child Support Services Division (CSSD) needs to amend state law on three issues.

1. The requirement for cash medical support
2. The three year review cycle
3. The change of the definition of state in UIFSA

The first two amendments are less controversial and only require that child support orders include a provision for obligors to pay cash medical assistance to the custodial parent to help with health costs when insurance is not provided for that child, and that the division performs regular reviews of its cases.

The third amendment could be considered more sensitive. The Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) contains a definition of "state." Under federal law, all states must adopt the uniform act's definition of "state" that includes "the United States Virgin Islands" and "an Indian tribe." For Alaska, the impact of adopting a definition that would include Indian tribes, means Indian tribes can issue and serve income-withholding orders on employers. The obligor would be entitled to contest the jurisdiction of the tribe to issue the order and the usual rights to contest the validity or enforcement of an order by an obligor would still apply. The change would also affect the process for state recognition of tribal orders. A tribal child support order would be registered in the Alaska state courts under the UIFSA procedures instead of a comity process. These changes are consistent with the purpose of UIFSA. The purpose of UIFSA is to unify state laws relating to child support orders, to provide efficient procedures for collecting child support in interstate cases, and to eliminate multiple support orders that were permitted under prior child support laws.

One question raised by the changes required by UIFSA is whether the tribal amendment would result in an expansion of tribal authority. The Department of Law has examined this question and came to the following conclusion:

> "UIFSA's underlying purpose is not to define jurisdiction. Nor does the state have the ability to define tribal jurisdiction. The overall purpose of UIFSA is simply to unify state laws relating to child support orders, to provide efficient procedures for collecting child support in interstate cases, and to eliminate multiple support orders that were permitted under prior child support laws. These purposes do not trigger broader jurisdictional concerns."

Intent language could be included in the introduced child support legislation (SB 96) to ease concerns of legislators who are not comfortable with issues related to Indian tribes. Or a letter of intent could be attached as a separate letter to the bill. I might suggest the following as an amendment:

LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND INTENT. (a) The legislature finds that

(1) failure to bring AS 25.25.101 into compliance with the federal Social Security Act Title IV-D could result in the loss of approximately $17,000,000 in administrative funding;

(2) of the 33 states that have federally recognized tribes, Alaska is the only state that has not yet passed conforming legislation; and

(3) to bring Alaska into conformity with UIFSA, the legislature finds that it is necessary to amend AS 25.25.101 to include "an Indian tribe" and "the United States Virgin Islands" in the definition of "state."

(b) It is the intent of the legislature that this Act not alter or expand in any way the governmental relationship between federally recognized tribes and the state.

A zero fiscal note accompanies the legislation because passage of the bill would result in no additional impact to the Department of Revenue, Child Support Services Division. The fiscal impact to non-passage of SB96, or another like bill, could be detrimental to 62,000 Alaska's children under age 19. If the state remains out of compliance after this legislative session, CSSD could lose nearly the entire operating budget required to operate the child support activities mandated by state and federal law and could jeopardize the entire TANF block grant received by the Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Public Assistance. (The division currently has a budget of $174,000 General Funds.)

$11,000,000	Federal receipts paid through Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for child support services.
$12,708,403	Each year CSSD collects funds from families who also receive state benefits through the State's TANF (Temporary Assistance for Needy Families) program. The collections received on behalf of the children receiving funding through TANF are retained by CSSD and used as match to obtain additional federal funding for child support, $6,070,137 state match, and $6,638,266 to be used as part of the total federal receipts to be paid to CSSD for its services. *FY08 totals

Insert new subsection:

(b) The proposed changes made in AS 25.25.101(19) under sec. 3 of this Act are conforming amendments that will result in procedural changes in Alaska for enforcement and modification of child support orders from other jurisdictions. ~~expand or restrict~~ ~~State of Alaska~~ UIFSA does not determine the authority of an Indian tribe to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order. In Alaska, the scope of tribal authority to enter, modify, or enforce a child support order is an unsettled legal question. In adopting UIFSA conforming amendments, the legislature does not intend to grant or restrict tribal jurisdiction to enter, modify, or enforce child support orders, and the amendments are not intended, either directly or impliedly, to acknowledge, expand, or restrict tribal jurisdiction.

Sponsor Statement
Senate Bill 110 Preservation of Evidence

The American system of justice is founded on balancing the twin protections of the rights of those harmed by crimes, and the rights of the accused. Criminal convictions are guided by evidence of innocence or guilt, and no one in the criminal justice system wants innocent people to be convicted of crimes they did not commit. The availability and use of physical evidence at trials and during appeals is a critical piece of a meaningful justice system.

Modern DNA technology, coupled with today's comprehensive information and communications technologies, has exponentially increased the power of preserved evidence. Preserved evidence can solve cold cases and prove or disprove claims of innocence in ways unimaginable just a few years ago. The problem is, however, that evidence collection and preservation policies have not always kept pace with these new technologies.

Senate Bill 110 begins to address this issue by requiring that biological evidence in murder and sexual assault cases is properly retained while cases are unsolved and during the period after conviction that an offender is imprisoned or required to register as a sex offender. The bill still provides for police departments to return or dispose of evidence too large to keep after portions of the material likely to contain biological evidence have been removed and preserved. The bill provides for a notice process in cases where evidence will be destroyed, and it establishes a temporary task force to look at other issues involved in this emerging field of technology and make recommendations on standards and practices in cataloging and handling evidence.

Recently in Denver, Colorado a young man who had been convicted of murder at the age of 15 and who served over a decade in prison was released and his conviction was vacated as a result of DNA evidence that proved his innocence. And in cases closer to home, DNA was used after 13 years to identify a suspect in the murder of Bonnie Craig, a UAA student. The preservation of evidence is a vital and effective way to ensure the criminal justice system meets its goal of protecting the innocent and convicting the guilty. Join me in supporting this important bill.

Re: HCSCSSB110(JUD) 26-LS0560\M

Jerry,

Today the HJUD Committee passed out SB110 with the following three conceptual amendments:

1. P. 14, Line 27. After evidence add "return of property to owners"

2. P.3, Line 27 "agency" delete "mails a certified delivery notice of" and insert "sends by certified mail with proof of delivery"

3. P. 7 Line 31 through Page 8 line 3 Delete all material and insert "the applicant did not admit or concede guilt under oath in an official proceeding for the offense that was the basis of the conviction or a lesser included offense except that the court in the interest of justice may waive this requirement; for the purposes of this purposes of this subparagraph, the entry of a guilty or nolo contendere plea is not an admission or concession of guilt"

Please make these amendments and let's go final.

Any questions give me a call.

Thx.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to post-conviction DNA testing, to the preservation of certain evidence, and to the DNA identification registration system; relating to post-conviction relief procedures; relating to representation by the public defender; amending Rule 35.1, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.36.020(a) is amended to read:

(a) A law enforcement agency may

(1) not return property in its custody to the owner or the agent of the owner, except as provided in AS 12.36.200, if

(A) the property is in custody in connection with a children's court proceeding, a criminal proceeding, or an official investigation of a crime; or

(B) the property in custody is subject to forfeiture under the laws of the

(i) state; or

(ii) United States, and the United States has commenced forfeiture proceedings against the property or has requested the transfer of the property for the commencement of forfeiture proceedings; and

(2) with the approval of the court, transfer the property to another state or federal law enforcement agency for forfeiture proceedings by that agency; the court having jurisdiction shall grant the approval under this paragraph if the property

(A) will be retained within the jurisdiction of the court by the agency to which the property is being transferred; or

(B) is

(i) not needed as evidence; or

(ii) needed as evidence, and the property is fungible or the property's evidentiary value can otherwise be preserved without retaining the property within the jurisdiction of the court.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.36.090 is amended to read:

Sec. 12.36.090. Definitions. In AS 12.36.010 - 12.36.090 [THIS CHAPTER],

(1) "final disposition of a case" means the time when all appeals have been exhausted or the time when all appeals that could have been taken has expired;

(2) "law enforcement agency" means a public agency that performs as one of its principal functions an activity relating to crime prevention, control, or reduction or relating to the enforcement of the criminal law; "law enforcement agency" does not include a court.

 Sec. 3. AS 12.36 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Article 2. Preservation of Evidence.

Sec. 12.36.200. Preservation of evidence. (a) Notwithstanding AS 12.36.010 - 12.36.090, the Department of Law, the Department of Public Safety, the Alaska Court System, or a municipal law enforcement agency shall preserve

(1) all evidence that is obtained in relation to an investigation or prosecution of a crime under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, 11.41.410, or 11.41.434 for the period of time that the crime remains unsolved or 50 years whichever ends first;

(2) biological evidence in an amount and manner that is sufficient to develop a DNA profile from any material contained in or included on the evidence that was obtained in relation to the prosecution of a person convicted of, or adjudicated a delinquent for, a crime under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, a person convicted of a crime after being indicted under AS 11.41.410 or 11.41.434 while the person remains a prisoner in the custody of the Department of Corrections or subject to registration as a sex offender, or a person adjudicated a delinquent for a crime after the filing of a petition alleging a violation of AS 11.41.410 or 11.41.434 while the person remains committed to a juvenile facility or subject to registration as a sex offender.

(b) Under (a) of this section, an agency is not required to preserve physical evidence of a crime that is of a size, bulk, quantity, or physical character that renders preservation impracticable. When preservation of evidence of a crime is impracticable, the agency shall, before returning or disposing of the evidence, remove and preserve portions of the material likely to contain relevant evidence related to the crime in a quantity sufficient to permit future DNA testing. In making decisions under this section, an agency shall follow written policies on evidence retention.

(c) Upon written request of a person convicted of a crime and a prisoner, adjudicated delinquent for a crime and committed, or subject to registration as a sex offender, an agency shall prepare or provide an inventory of biological evidence that has been preserved under (a)(2) of this section in connection with the person's criminal case.

(d) An agency required to preserve biological evidence under (a) of this section may destroy biological evidence before the expiration of the time period in (a)(2) of this section if

(1) the agency is not required to maintain the evidence under another provision of state or federal law;

(2) the agency mails a certified delivery of notice of intent to destroy evidence to

(A) each person who remains a prisoner or committed or subject to registration as a sex offender for the crime for which the evidence was preserved under (a)(2) of this section;

(B) the attorneys of record, if known, for each person listed in (A) of this paragraph;

(C) the Public Defender Agency;

(D) the district attorney responsible for prosecuting the crime; and

(3) no person who is notified under (2) of this subsection, within 120 days after receiving the notice,

(A) files a motion for testing of the evidence; or

(B) submits a written request for continued preservation of the evidence.

(e) Upon receipt of a request for continued preservation of biological evidence under (d)(3)(B) of this section, an agency may petition the court for permission to destroy the evidence. The court may grant the petition if the court finds that the request is without merit or that the evidence has no significant value for biological material.

(f) When an agency is required to produce biological evidence required to be preserved under this section and the agency is unable to locate the evidence, the chief evidence custodian of that agency shall submit an affidavit, executed under penalty of perjury, describing the evidence that could not be located and detailing the efforts taken to locate the evidence.

(g) If a court finds that evidence was destroyed in violation of the provisions of this section, the court may order remedies the court determines to be appropriate.

(h) A person may not bring a civil action for damages against the state or political subdivision of the state, their officers, agents, or employees, or a law enforcement agency, its officers, or employees for any unintentional failure to comply with the provisions of this section.

(i) In this section,

(1) "agency" means the Department of Law, the Department of Public Safety, the Alaska Court System, or a municipal law enforcement agency;

(2) "biological evidence" means

(A) the contents of a sexual assault forensic examination kit;

(B) semen, blood, hair, saliva, skin tissue, fingernail scrapings, bone, bodily fluids, or other identifiable human bodily material, collected as part of a criminal investigation;

(C) a slide, swab, or test tube containing material described in (B) of this paragraph; and

(D) swabs or cuttings from items that contain material described in (B) of this section;

(3) "DNA" means deoxyribonucleic acid;

(4) "prisoner" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

* Sec. 4. AS 12.72.010 is amended to read:

Sec. 12.72.010. Scope of post-conviction relief. A person who has been convicted of, or sentenced for, a crime may institute a proceeding for post-conviction relief if the person claims

(1) that the conviction or the sentence was in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the constitution or laws of this state;

(2) that the court was without jurisdiction to impose sentence;

(3) that a prior conviction has been set aside and the prior conviction was used as a statutorily required enhancement of the sentence imposed;

(4) that there exists evidence of material facts, not previously presented and heard by the court, that requires vacation of the conviction or sentence in the interest of justice; if the person seeks post-conviction DNA testing to support a claim under this paragraph, the person's exclusive method for obtaining that testing is an application under AS 12.73;

(5) that the person's sentence has expired, or the person's probation, parole, or conditional release has been unlawfully revoked, or the person is otherwise unlawfully held in custody or other restraint;

(6) that the conviction or sentence is otherwise subject to collateral attack upon any ground or alleged error previously available under the common law, statutory law, or other writ, motion, petition, proceeding, or remedy;

(7) that

(A) there has been a significant change in law, whether substantive or procedural, applied in the process leading to the person's conviction or sentence;

(B) the change in the law was not reasonably foreseeable by a judge or a competent attorney;

(C) it is appropriate to retroactively apply the change in law because the change requires observance of procedures without which the likelihood of an accurate conviction is seriously diminished; and

(D) the failure to retroactively apply the change in law would result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice, which is established by demonstrating that, had the changed law been in effect at the time of the applicant's trial, a reasonable trier of fact would have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the applicant;

(8) that, after the imposition of sentence, the applicant seeks to withdraw a plea of guilty or nolo contendere in order to correct manifest injustice under the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; or

(9) that the applicant was not afforded effective assistance of counsel at trial or on direct appeal.

 Sec. 5. AS 12.72.030 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) A person who files an application for post-conviction relief under this chapter or the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure may not pursue discovery related to the application unless the applicant first pleads a prima facie case for relief and the court finds that a prima facie case for relief has been established under this chapter or the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure.

 Sec. 6. AS 12 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 73. Post-Conviction DNA Testing Procedures.

Sec. 12.73.010. Application for post-conviction DNA testing. (a) A person convicted of a felony against a person under AS 11.41 who has not been unconditionally discharged may apply to the superior court for an order for DNA testing of evidence. The application must be filed in the court that entered the judgment of conviction, and a copy shall be served on the prosecuting authority responsible for obtaining the conviction.

(b) An application filed under (a) of this section must specifically identify the evidence sought to be tested and must include facts from which the court can make the findings required under AS 12.73.020. The application must also include

(1) an affidavit by the applicant that attests to the following:

(A) the applicant did not commit the offense for which the applicant was convicted or a lesser included offense;

(B) the applicant did not solicit another person to commit, or aid or abet another person in planning or committing, that offense or a lesser included offense; and

(C) the applicant did not admit or concede guilt under oath in an official proceeding for the offense that was the basis of the conviction or a lesser included offense except that the court in the interest of justice may waive this requirement; for the purposes of this subparagraph, the entry of a guilty or nolo contendere plea is not an admission or concession of guilt;

(2) an affidavit by the applicant or the applicant's attorney stating the results of each DNA test performed on the evidence in the prosecution that resulted in the applicant's conviction;

(3) an affidavit by the applicant or the applicant's attorney describing all previous efforts to obtain DNA testing and any previous application filed under AS 12.72 of this section.

(c) An attorney who represents an applicant under this section shall investigate and, if possible, confirm the accuracy of information provided by the applicant under (b)(2) and (3) of this section.

(d) If an applicant is indigent, filing fees must be paid under AS 09.19, and counsel shall be appointed under AS 18.85.100 to represent the applicant.

Sec. 12.73.020. Findings required for post-conviction DNA testing orders. The court shall order post-conviction DNA testing of specific evidence if

(1) the applicant was convicted of a felony under AS 11.41;

(2) the applicant and, if represented, the applicant's attorney, have submitted the affidavits required by AS 12.73.010(b);

(3) the applicant has not, in an official proceeding, admitted or conceded guilt for the crime that was the basis for the conviction unless the court in the interest of justice waives this requirement; for the purposes of this paragraph the entry of a guilty or nolo contendere plea is not an admission or concession of guilt;

(4) the evidence either

(A) was not subjected to DNA testing; or

(B) was previously subjected to DNA testing, and

(i) the applicant is requesting DNA testing using a method or technology that is substantially more probative than the previous DNA testing; or

(ii) the court determines that granting the application is in the best interest of justice;

(5) the evidence to be tested has been subject to a chain of custody and retained under conditions that ensure that the evidence has not been substituted, contaminated, or altered in any manner material to the proposed DNA testing;

(6) the proposed DNA testing is reasonable in scope, uses scientifically sound methods, and is consistent with accepted forensic practices;

(7) the applicant identifies a theory of defense that

(A) is not inconsistent with a defense presented at trial; and

(B) would establish the applicant's innocence;

(8) the applicant was convicted after a trial and the identity of the perpetrator was a disputed issue in the trial;

(9) the proposed DNA testing of the specific evidence may produce new material evidence that would

(A) support the theory of defense described in (7) of this section; and

(B) raise a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense;

(10) the applicant consents to provide a DNA sample for purposes of comparison and to entry of the results into the DNA identification registration system under AS 44.41.035 and into any other law enforcement database; and

(11) the application is timely as described in AS 12.73.040.

Sec. 12.73.030. Summary dismissal and response. (a) If an application under AS 12.73.010(a) does not set out the specific facts necessary for the court to make the findings required under AS 12.73.020 or does not comply with AS 12.73.010(b), the court shall deny the application without further proceedings.

(b) If an application filed under AS 12.73.010(a) is not denied under (a) of this section, the prosecuting authority shall file a response within 45 days after service of the application. The court shall conduct an evidentiary hearing to resolve any disputed facts.

Sec. 12.73.040. Timeliness. In determining whether an application is timely under AS 12.73.020(11), there is a presumption of

(1) timeliness if the application is filed before three years after the date of conviction; this presumption may be rebutted if the court finds that the application is based solely upon information used in a previously denied application; and

(2) untimeliness if the application is filed three years or more after conviction; this presumption may be rebutted if the court finds good cause for filing three years or more after conviction.

Sec. 12.73.050. Testing procedures. (a) If the court grants the application and DNA samples for comparison purposes are required, samples taken from the applicant or a prisoner must be collected at a law enforcement or correctional facility. If the DNA sample is being collected from a person other than the applicant or a prisoner, the sample must be taken by a law enforcement officer or other authorized person at a location that is convenient for the person from whom the sample is being collected and the person collecting the sample.

(b) The court may not order that a person other than the applicant provide a DNA sample for comparison purposes unless that person is first afforded notice and an opportunity to be heard by the court. The results of DNA testing of a sample provided by a person other than the applicant may not be made available to the DNA identification registration system under AS 44.41.035 or to any other law enforcement database unless specifically ordered by the court.

(c) DNA testing ordered under this section shall be performed at the state's expense and at a laboratory operated or approved by the Department of Public Safety.

If, after completion of the testing ordered under this section, an applicant requests additional testing, any additional testing ordered by the court at the applicant's request must be at the applicant's expense. If the court orders additional testing by another laboratory at the request of the applicant, the laboratory operated or approved by the Department of Public Safety shall preserve a portion of the evidence for later testing. A laboratory selected by the applicant to perform testing under this section must comply with the quality assurance standards for DNA adopted by the United States Department of Justice and be accredited by the American Society of Crime Laboratory Directors Laboratory Accreditation Board or the accepted as equivalent by the Department of Public Safety.

(d) Except as provided in (b) of this section, the results of testing ordered under this section shall be entered into the DNA identification registration system under AS 44.41.035 and into any other law enforcement database available to the Department of Public Safety.

Sec. 12.73.060. Post-conviction testing by stipulation. The provisions of this chapter do not prohibit an applicant and the prosecuting authority from agreeing to conduct post-conviction DNA testing without the person's filing an application under this chapter. The parties may also stipulate to the payment of costs for the DNA testing and other costs associated with the terms of the agreement.

Sec. 12.73.090. Definitions. In this chapter, unless the context requires otherwise,

(1) "DNA" means deoxyribonucleic acid;

(2) "innocence" or "innocent" means that the applicant was not a perpetrator of or an accomplice to the offense or lesser included offense for which the applicant was convicted;

(3) "prisoner" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901;

(4) "unconditionally discharged" means that a defendant is released from all disability arising under a sentence, including probation and parole.

 Sec. 7. AS 18.85.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(g) An indigent person is entitled to representation under (a) and (b) of this section for purposes of bringing an application for post-conviction DNA testing under

AS 12.73.

 Sec. 8. AS 44.41.035(b) is amended to read:

(b) The Department of Public Safety shall collect for inclusion into the DNA identification registration system a blood sample, oral sample, or both, from (1) a person convicted in this state of a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35 or a law or ordinance with elements similar to a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35, (2) a minor [16 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER,] adjudicated as a delinquent in this state for an act committed when the minor was 16 years of age or older, that would be a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35 if committed by an adult or for an act that would violate a law or ordinance with elements similar to a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35 if committed by an adult, (3) a voluntary donor, (4) an anonymous DNA donor for use in forensic validation, forensic protocol development, quality control, or population or statistical data bases, (5) a person required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper under AS 12.63, and (6) a person arrested for a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35, or a law or ordinance with elements similar to a crime against a person or a felony under AS 11 or AS 28.35. The department also may collect for inclusion into the DNA identification registration system a blood sample, oral sample, or tissue sample from crime scene evidence or from unidentified human remains. The DNA identification registration system consists of the blood, oral, or tissue samples drawn under this section, any DNA or other blood grouping tests done on those samples, and the identification data related to the samples or tests. Blood samples, oral samples, and tissue samples not subject to testing under this section, and test or identification data related to those samples, may not be entered into, or made a part of, the DNA identification registration system.

 Sec. 9. AS 44.41.035(g) is amended to read:

(g) A person or minor from whom a sample has been collected under this section

(1) may inspect and obtain a copy of the identification data regarding the person or minor contained within the DNA identification registration system; and

(2) may request the Department of Public Safety to destroy the material in the system regarding the person or minor under the provisions described in (i) of this section.

 Sec. 10. AS 44.41.035(i) is amended to read:

(i) The Department of Public Safety shall [, UPON RECEIPT OF A COURT ORDER,] destroy the material in the system relating to a person or minor on the written request of the person or minor, if the request is accompanied by a certified copy of a court order making the written findings required by this subsection. The court shall issue an [THE] order under this subsection if the person's or minor's DNA was included in the system under

(1) (b)(1) or (2) of this section, and the court order establishes [DETERMINES] that

(A) the conviction or adjudication that subjected the person to having a sample taken under this section was [IS] reversed; and

(B) the person

(i) was [IS] not retried, readjudicated, or convicted or adjudicated for another crime that requires having a sample taken under this section; or

(ii) after retrial, was [IS] acquitted of the crime or, after readjudication for the crime, was [IS] not found to be a delinquent, and was [IS] not convicted or adjudicated for another crime that requires a sample under this section;

(2) (b)(6) of this section, and the court order establishes [DETERMINES] that

(A) the person arrested was released without being charged; [OR]

(B) the criminal complaint, indictment, presentment, or information for the offense for which the person was arrested was dismissed, and a criminal complaint, indictment, presentment, or information for an offense requiring submission of a DNA sample was [IS] not refiled; or

(C) the person was found by the trier of fact to be not guilty of the offense for which the person was arrested and was not convicted of another offense requiring submission of a DNA sample under (b)(1) or (2) of this section.

 Sec. 11. AS 44.41.035(k) is amended to read:

(k) The provisions of this section apply to a person or a minor from another state that this state has accepted under any interstate corrections or probation agreement or compact, regardless of whether the person or minor is confined or released, if the person was convicted of or the minor was adjudicated for an offense that is similar to an offense described in (b) of this section.

 Sec. 12. AS 44.41.035(o) is amended to read:

(o) A person or minor may not bring a civil action against the state or a municipality, or their employees or agents, for actions arising out of DNA collection in conformity with this section.

 Sec. 13. AS 44.41.035 is amended by adding subsections to read:

(r) A DNA sample collected or placed in the DNA identification registration system that was taken or retained in good faith may be used as provided by law in a criminal investigation. Evidence obtained from a match from a data collection system may be used in a criminal prosecution or juvenile adjudication if the DNA sample was taken or retained in good faith, even if the DNA sample is later removed from the DNA identification registration system.

(s) If a sample collected under (b) of this section does not contain sufficient material necessary to obtain an accurate DNA identification authorized under this section, the Department of Public Safety or other agency authorized by the Department of Public Safety may collect another sample.

 Sec. 14. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

INDIRECT COURT RULE CHANGE. AS 12.73, added by sec. 6 of this Act, has the effect of amending Rule 35.1, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, relating to post-conviction relief procedure.

 Sec. 15. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

TASK FORCE ON STANDARDS AND TRAINING OF EVIDENCE

TECHNICIANS. (a) The Task Force on Standards and Training of Evidence Technicians is created in the Department of Law. The task force consists of the following persons appointed by the governor:

(1) the attorney general;

(2) the public defender;

(3) the director of the office of public advocacy;

(4) a chief of a municipal police department not on the state's interconnected road system;

(5) the commissioner of public safety;

(6) a chief of a municipal police department;

(7) a representative of the Alaska Innocence Project;

(8) a representative of the Alaska Native Justice Center; and

(9) a representative of the state crime lab.

(b) There shall be three ex officio members of the task force as follows:

(1) a member of the House Judiciary Committee selected by the speaker of the house of representatives;

(2) a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee selected by the president of the senate; and

(3) the victims' advocate.

(c) Persons appointed under (a) of this section or identified under (b) of this section may select a designee from the same agency or organization to act on the person's behalf as a member of the task force.

(d) Not later than December 31, 2012, the task force shall

(1) devise standards regarding the proper collection, retention, and cataloging of evidence, for ongoing investigations and prosecutions;

(2) recommend practices, protocols, models, and resources for the cataloging and accessibility of preserved evidence.

 Sec. 16. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. (a) AS 12.36.200, enacted by sec. 3 of this Act, applies to all evidence in the possession of an agency, as defined in AS 12.36.200(i), on or after January 1, 2011, for evidence collected before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(b) AS 12.73, enacted by sec. 6 of this Act, applies to offenses committed before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person whose conviction was entered before July 1, 2010, has until July 1, 2020, to file a claim under AS 12.73, enacted by sec. 6 of this Act, or a later date if the court finds good cause for a later filing.

 Sec. 17. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT. AS 12.73, added by sec. 6 of this Act, takes effect only if sec. 14 of this Act receives the two-thirds majority vote of each house required by art. IV, sec. 15, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

 Sec. 18. Section 15 of this Act is repealed January 1, 2013.

Re: HJUD CS for SB110 (26-LS0560\C) and HB316(26-GH2812\R) HB316

Jerry, As discussed, here are the last three amendments for SB110:

P. 1, L 10 SB 110 after "unsolved" insert an outward time limit of 50 (sorry, I told you 30 before) years, whichever comes first.

HB316

P. 8, L. 7 after "guilt" insert "under oath"
P.8, L. 9 after "offense" insert something to the effect "except that the court in the interest of justice can waive this requirement"

P. 8, L. 17-21 Delete all material

We are good to go w/ the CS!

Re: HJUD CS for SB110 (26-LS0560\C) and HB316(26-GH2812)

Jerry, As discussed, we are going to do a CS for SB110, blending SB110 and HB316. The new bill will be SB110. However, that being said, it is easier to use HB316 as the working document.

Section 3, Delete Article 2 _ PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE and insert - Article 2. PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE from SB110, with two small changes:

P. 1, L 10 after "unsolved" insert an outward time limit of 50 years, whichever comes first. P.1, L.30

P. 6, After L. 3, Add a representative of the Alaska Native Justice Center to the task force. P.14. Line 2

Next changes are to HB316.

P.9, L. 5-6 remove all materials – (4) Findings - evidence sometimes obtained in part Removed ~~P. 9, L. 23 after "(9)" insert "if"~~ – would be "if"

P. 9, L25 – 27 Delete all material
Insert

Cost for testing
Cost for retrieval.

Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

(10) The proposed DNA testing of the specific evidence may produce new material evidence that would;

(A) support the theory of defense referenced in paragraph (8); and

(B) raise a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense.

We need to drop all assignment of costs references for retrieval of evidence.

P. 16, L 25 Delete "2013" and insert "2020"

Issues still in the works:

P.8, L. 7-10 and P.9, L. 1-4 – Admission of guilt in an official proceeding

P. 8, L 11-13 - Affidavit of Attorney

SB110 Preservation of Evidence
Sectional Analysis

Section 1.

Section 1 creates new provisions in the criminal code for the preservation of evidence that require state agencies and municipal law enforcement agencies to preserve all evidence that relate to unsolved cases of murder and 1st degree sexual assault and 1st degree sexual abuse of a minor.

The section further requires that biological evidence in these crimes be retained while a person remains a prisoner in the custody of the Department of Corrections or subject to registration as a sex offender.

The section then provides that evidence that is impracticable due to size or other characteristics to retain may be destroyed after removal and preservation of portions likely to contain relevant evidence, and that evidence can be destroyed before the expiration of the time period by following a notice procedure outlined in the bill.

The section provides for the court to order remedies if evidence is destroyed in violation of this section, and protects agencies from civil immunity for unintentional failure to comply with the provisions of the section.

Finally, section one provides definitions of terms.

Sections 2, 3 and 4, make amendments to the disposal of DNA for persons who are not guilty of offences for which they were arrested.

Section 5 establishes a task force to address standards and practices for the proper collection and preservation of preserved evidence.

Section 6 establishes the applicability of section 1.

Section 7 provides a repeal of the task force established in Section 5.

This bill amends AS 12.36.010 by adding a new section which requires the preservation of evidence in crimes listed under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130. This legislation will result in additional evidence being stored for a longer period of time. It is expected that the requirements of this bill will be manageable and have no fiscal impact on the department.

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. CSSB 110(FIN)
2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

CSSB110(JUD) would establish requirements for the preservation or retention of certain types of evidentiary material. Since Law only maintains temporary custody and returns such material to the investigating agency there will be no fiscal impact on Law from this portion of the bill.

The bill also adopts a procedure for a person whose DNA is collected at the time the person is arrested for a felony offense but who is later acquitted of the charge to request that his or her DNA be removed from the system. It also provides that DNA included in the DNA identification registration system in good faith, even if it is later removed, may be used a provided by law in a criminal investigation.

Section 5 of the bill establishes a "Task Force on Standards and Training of Evidence Technicians" under the Department of Law and directs the Task Force to complete its work by 12/31/2011. In contemplating the creation and assignment of the Task Force to Law it is clear there will be a period of considerable staff work involved (for which Law is not seeking additional monetary support). In addition, the potential also exists for some significant out-of-pocket costs. With eleven members on the task force including the Attorney General, the Chief Justice, and members of the Legislature it seems reasonable to conclude some face-to-face meetings would be necessary. Law will minimize such costs by carrying out the extensive and detailed interagency staff work largely (if not entirely) via teleconference, videoconference, etc. Presuming all participating agencies would assume their own costs, Law would anticipate incurring travel and other associated Task Force related expenses not to exceed $5,000.00 in FY11.

TITLE 18 - CRIMES AND CRIMINAL PROCEDURE
PART II - CRIMINAL PROCEDURE
CHAPTER 228A - POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING

§ 3600. DNA testing

(a) In General.— Upon a written motion by an individual under a sentence of imprisonment or death pursuant to a conviction for a Federal offense (referred to in this section as the "applicant"), the court that entered the judgment of conviction shall order DNA testing of specific evidence if the court finds that all of the following apply:

(1) The applicant asserts, under penalty of perjury, that the applicant is actually innocent of—

(A) the Federal offense for which the applicant is under a sentence of imprisonment or death; or

(B) another Federal or State offense, if—

(i) evidence of such offense was admitted during a Federal death sentencing hearing and exoneration of such offense would entitle the applicant to a reduced sentence or new sentencing hearing; and

(ii) in the case of a State offense—

(I) the applicant demonstrates that there is no adequate remedy under State law to permit DNA testing of the specified evidence relating to the State offense; and

(II) to the extent available, the applicant has exhausted all remedies available under State law for requesting DNA testing of specified evidence relating to the State offense.

(2) The specific evidence to be tested was secured in relation to the investigation or prosecution of the Federal or State offense referenced in the applicant's assertion under paragraph (1).

(3) The specific evidence to be tested—

(A) was not previously subjected to DNA testing and the applicant did not—

(i) knowingly and voluntarily waive the right to request DNA testing of that evidence in a court proceeding after the date of enactment of the Innocence Protection Act of 2004; or

(ii) knowingly fail to request DNA testing of that evidence in a prior motion for postconviction DNA testing; or

(B) was previously subjected to DNA testing and the applicant is requesting DNA testing using a new method or technology that is substantially more probative than the prior DNA testing.

(4) The specific evidence to be tested is in the possession of the Government and has been subject to a chain of custody and retained under conditions sufficient to ensure that such evidence has not been substituted, contaminated, tampered with, replaced, or altered in any respect material to the proposed DNA testing.

(5) The proposed DNA testing is reasonable in scope, uses scientifically sound methods, and is consistent with accepted forensic practices.

(6) The applicant identifies a theory of defense that—

(A) is not inconsistent with an affirmative defense presented at trial; and

(B) would establish the actual innocence of the applicant of the Federal or State offense referenced in the applicant's assertion under paragraph (1).

(7) If the applicant was convicted following a trial, the identity of the perpetrator was at issue in the trial.

Add (8)

(8) The proposed DNA testing of the specific evidence may produce new material evidence that would—

(A) support the theory of defense referenced in paragraph (6); and

(B) raise a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense.

(9) The applicant certifies that the applicant will provide a DNA sample for purposes of comparison.

(10) The motion is made in a timely fashion, subject to the following conditions:

(A) There shall be a rebuttable presumption of timeliness if the motion is made within 60 months of enactment of the Justice For All Act of 2004 or within 36 months of conviction, whichever comes later. Such presumption may be rebutted upon a showing—

(i) that the applicant's motion for a DNA test is based solely upon information used in a previously denied motion; or

(ii) of clear and convincing evidence that the applicant's filing is done solely to cause delay or harass.

(B) There shall be a rebuttable presumption against timeliness for any motion not satisfying subparagraph (A) above. Such presumption may be rebutted upon the court's finding—

(i) that the applicant was or is incompetent and such incompetence substantially contributed to the delay in the applicant's motion for a DNA test;

(ii) the evidence to be tested is newly discovered DNA evidence;

(iii) that the applicant's motion is not based solely upon the applicant's own assertion of innocence and, after considering all relevant facts and circumstances surrounding the motion, a denial would result in a manifest injustice; or

(iv) upon good cause shown.

(C) For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) the term "incompetence" has the meaning as defined in section 4241 of title 18, United States Code;

(ii) the term "manifest" means that which is unmistakable, clear, plain, or indisputable and requires that the opposite conclusion be clearly evident.

(b) Notice to the Government; Preservation Order; Appointment of Counsel.—

(1) Notice.— Upon the receipt of a motion filed under subsection (a), the court shall—

(A) notify the Government; and

(B) allow the Government a reasonable time period to respond to the motion.

(2) Preservation order.— To the extent necessary to carry out proceedings under this section, the court shall direct the Government to preserve the specific evidence relating to a motion under subsection (a).

(3) Appointment of counsel.— The court may appoint counsel for an indigent applicant under this section in the same manner as in a proceeding under section 3006A (a)(2)(B).

(c) Testing Procedures.—

(1) In general.— The court shall direct that any DNA testing ordered under this section be carried out by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(2) Exception.— Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the court may order DNA testing by another qualified laboratory if the court makes all necessary orders to ensure the integrity of the specific evidence and the reliability of the testing process and test results.

(3) Costs.— The costs of any DNA testing ordered under this section shall be paid—

(A) by the applicant; or

(B) in the case of an applicant who is indigent, by the Government.

(d) Time Limitation in Capital Cases.— In any case in which the applicant is sentenced to death—

(1) any DNA testing ordered under this section shall be completed not later than 60 days after the date on which the Government responds to the motion filed under subsection (a); and

(2) not later than 120 days after the date on which the DNA testing ordered under this section is completed, the court shall order any post-testing procedures under subsection (f) or (g), as appropriate.

(e) Reporting of Test Results.—

(1) In general.— The results of any DNA testing ordered under this section shall be simultaneously disclosed to the court, the applicant, and the Government.

(2) NDIS.— The Government shall submit any test results relating to the DNA of the applicant to the National DNA Index System (referred to in this subsection as "NDIS").

(3) Retention of dna sample.—

(A) Entry into ndis.— If the DNA test results obtained under this section are inconclusive or show that the applicant was the source of the DNA evidence, the DNA sample of the applicant may be retained in NDIS.

(B) Match with other offense.— If the DNA test results obtained under this section exclude the applicant as the source of the DNA evidence, and a comparison of the DNA sample of the applicant results in a match between the DNA sample of the applicant and another offense, the Attorney General shall notify the appropriate agency and preserve the DNA sample of the applicant.

(C) No match.— If the DNA test results obtained under this section exclude the applicant as the source of the DNA evidence, and a comparison of the DNA sample of the applicant does not result in a match between the DNA sample of the applicant and another offense, the Attorney General shall destroy the DNA sample of the applicant and ensure that such information is not retained in NDIS if there is no other legal authority to retain the DNA sample of the applicant in NDIS.

(f) Post-Testing Procedures; Inconclusive and Inculpatory Results.—

(1) Inconclusive results.— If DNA test results obtained under this section are inconclusive, the court may order further testing, if appropriate, or may deny the applicant relief.

(2) Inculpatory results.— If DNA test results obtained under this section show that the applicant was the source of the DNA evidence, the court shall—

(A) deny the applicant relief; and

(B) on motion of the Government—

(i) make a determination whether the applicant's assertion of actual innocence was false, and, if the court makes such a finding, the court may hold the applicant in contempt;

(ii) assess against the applicant the cost of any DNA testing carried out under this section;

(iii) forward the finding to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, who, upon receipt of such a finding, may deny, wholly or in part, the good conduct credit authorized under section 3632 on the basis of that finding;

(iv) if the applicant is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Parole Commission, forward the finding to the Commission so that the Commission may deny parole on the basis of that finding; and

(v) if the DNA test results relate to a State offense, forward the finding to any appropriate State official.

(3) Sentence.— In any prosecution of an applicant under chapter 79 for false assertions or other conduct in proceedings under this section, the court, upon conviction of the applicant, shall sentence the applicant to a term of imprisonment of not less than 3 years, which shall run consecutively to any other term of imprisonment the applicant is serving.

(g) Post-Testing Procedures; Motion for New Trial or Resentencing.—

(1) In general.— Notwithstanding any law that would bar a motion under this paragraph as untimely, if DNA test results obtained under this section exclude the applicant as the source of the DNA evidence, the applicant may file a motion for a new trial or resentencing, as appropriate. The court shall establish a reasonable schedule for the applicant to file such a motion and for the Government to respond to the motion.

(2) Standard for granting motion for new trial or resentencing.— The court shall grant the motion of the applicant for a new trial or resentencing, as appropriate, if the DNA test results, when considered with all other evidence in the case (regardless of whether such evidence was introduced at trial), establish by compelling evidence that a new trial would result in an acquittal of—

(A) in the case of a motion for a new trial, the Federal offense for which the applicant is under a sentence of imprisonment or death; and

(B) in the case of a motion for resentencing, another Federal or State offense, if evidence of such offense was admitted during a Federal death sentencing hearing and exoneration of such offense would entitle the applicant to a reduced sentence or a new sentencing proceeding.

(h) Other Laws Unaffected.—

(1) Post-conviction relief.— Nothing in this section shall affect the circumstances under which a person may obtain DNA testing or post-conviction relief under any other law.

(2) Habeas corpus.— Nothing in this section shall provide a basis for relief in any Federal habeas corpus proceeding.

(3) Not a motion under section 2255.— A motion under this section shall not be considered to be a motion under section 2255 for purposes of determining whether the motion or any other motion is a second or successive motion under section 2255.

COMPARISON OF FEDERAL INNOCENCE PROTECTION ACT TO SB 241, SEC. 6

If the evidence to be tested was not previously subjected to DNA testing, the IPA requires that the applicant did not knowingly or voluntarily waive the right to request testing after the enactment date of the IPA or knowingly fail to request DNA testing of that evidence in a prior motion for postconviction DNA testing. § 3600(a)(3)(A).	If the evidence to be tested was not previously subjected to DNA testing, HB 241 would require that the applicant did not waive or that his lawyer did not forgo for tactical reasons the right to request DNA testing. AS 12.73.020(5)(A).
If the evidence was previously subjected to DNA testing, the IPA requires that the testing currently sought be based on a new technology that is substantially more probative than the prior DNA testing. § 3600(a)(3)(B).	If the evidence was previously subjected to DNA testing, HB 241 would require that the testing currently sought be based on a method or technology that is substantially more probative than the prior DNA testing and that the applicant did not waive or that his lawyer did not forgo for tactical reasons the right to request DNA testing whose probative value was similar to the method to be used in the requested testing. AS 12.73.020(5)(B).
The IPA requires that the evidence to be tested must be in the government's possession, has been subject to a chain of custody, and retained under conditions that ensure the integrity of the evidence. § 3600(a)(4).	HB 241 would impose the same requirements of chain of custody and retention. AS 12.73.020(6). (HB 241 does not expressly require that the evidence be in the government's possession, but that requirement is implied by AS 12.73.020(4), which requires that the evidence to be tested must have been obtained as part of the investigation or prosecution of an offense.)
The IPA requires that the proposed testing be reasonable in scope and involves scientifically sound methods consistent with forensic practices. § 3600(a)(5).	HB 241 has an identical requirement. AS 12.73.020(7).

Innocence Protection Act – 18 U.S.C. § 3600	HB 241, sec. 6 – AS 12.73
The IPA requires the applicant to identify a theory of defense that is not inconsistent with an affirmative defense presented at trial and that would establish the applicant's actual innocence of the offense for which he seeks exoneration. § 3600(a)(6).	HB 241 has an identical requirement. AS 12.73.020(8).
If the applicant was convicted after a trial, the IPA requires that the identity of the perpetrator must have been an issue at the applicant's trial. § 3600(a)(7).	HB 241 would require that the identity of the perpetrator must have been a disputed issue at the applicant's trial. AS 12.73.020(9).
The IPA requires that the requested DNA testing of the evidence "may produce new material evidence" that would support the theory of defense identified by the applicant and would "raise a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense." § 3600(a)(8).	HB 241 would require that the requested DNA testing of the evidence "will produce new material evidence" that would support the theory of defense identified by the applicant and "could conclusively establish that the applicant is innocent." AS 12.73.020(10).
The IPA requires that the applicant consent to provide a DNA sample for comparison purposes. § 3600(a)(9). The IPA also requires that any results of testing relating to the applicant's DNA be submitted to the National DNA Index System (NDIS). § 3600(e)(2).	HB 241 would impose a similar requirement. HB 241 would require the defendant to consent to entering the results into the DNA identification registration system (AS 44.41.035) and any other law enforcement database. AS 12.73.020(11).

Innocence Protection Act – 18 U.S.C. § 3600	HB 241, sec. 6 – AS 12.73
The IPA requires that the request for testing be timely. § 3600(a)(10). Timeliness is determined by two rebuttable presumptions:	HB 241 would require that the request for testing be timely. AS 12.73.020(12). Timeliness would be determined by two rebuttable presumptions:
(1) a motion made within the later of 5 years after enactment of the IPA or 3 years after conviction is presumed to be timely; this presumption may be rebutted by showing (a) the motion is based solely on information used in a previously denied motion or (b) by clear and convincing evidence that the motion is solely for the purpose of delay or harassment;	(1) an application filed within 3 years after the date of conviction would be presumed to be timely; this presumption may be rebutted by showing that the application is based solely on information used in a previously denied application;
(2) a motion filed after the above deadlines is presumed to be untimely; this presumption may be rebutted by showing (a) that the applicant is incompetent and that incompetence substantially contributed to the delay in filing, (b) the evidence to be tested is newly discovered evidence, (c) the motion is not based solely on the applicant's own assertion of innocence and, based on all relevant facts and circumstances surrounding the motion, denial of the motion would be manifestly unjust, or (d) "upon good cause shown." § 3600(a)(10).	(2) an application filed after the above deadline would be presumed to be untimely; this presumption may be rebutted by showing (a) that the applicant is incompetent and that incompetence substantially contributed to the delay in filing, or (b) "other good cause" for the delay. AS 12.73.040.
When an applicant files a motion under the IPA, the court must notify the government, direct the government to preserve the specific evidence referred to in the motion, and may appoint a lawyer for the applicant. § 3600(b).	HB 241 would require an applicant to serve the application on "the prosecuting authority responsible for obtaining the conviction." AS 12.73.010(a).

Innocence Protection Act – 18 U.S.C. § 3600	HB 241, sec. 6 – AS 12.73
The IPA requires that any DNA testing ordered by carried out by the FBI, but the court may allow testing by another qualified laboratory so long as integrity of the evidence and reliability of the testing is ensured. The cost of testing shall be borne by the applicant, but if the applicant is indigent, the government will bear the cost. § 3600(c).	HB 241 would require that testing by performed at a laboratory operated or approved by the Department of Public Safety and at the state's expense. A court could order additional testing at the applicant's request, but that would be at the applicant's expense. In addition, the laboratory selected by the applicant would have to satisfy national quality-assurance standards. The applicant would also have to pay any reasonable costs for retrieving the evidence from storage before testing. AS 12.73.050(c).
Under the IPA, if the results of the new DNA testing are inconclusive or show that the applicant was the source of the evidence, then the applicant's sample may be retained in the NDIS. § 3600(e)(3)(A). If the results of the new DNA testing exclude the applicant as the source, but the applicant's DNA matches evidence of another offense, then the Attorney General must notify the appropriate agency and preserve the applicant's sample. § 3600(e)(3)(B). If the results of the new DNA testing exclude the applicant as the source and there exists no match with evidence of another offense, then the applicant's sample shall be destroyed and no information may be retained in the NDIS absent some other basis for retention. § 3600(e)(3)(C).	HB 241 would require that results of any testing of the applicant's DNA be entered in the DNA identification registration system under AS 44.41.035. While HB 241 makes no provision for destruction of samples or retention of information, AS 44.41.035(i) authorizes a court to order destruction of DNA material included in the system.

Innocence Protection Act – 18 U.S.C. § 3600 HB 241, sec. 6 – AS 12.73

Notwithstanding any other limitations that may exist, the IPA authorizes an applicant to file a motion for new trial if the new DNA testing excluded the applicant as the source of the evidence. § 3600(g)(1). The court must grant the motion if the DNA test results, "when considered with all other evidence in the case (regardless of whether such evidence was introduced at trial), establish by compelling evidence that a new trial would result in an acquittal of the offense for which the applicant is imprisoned. § 3600(g)(2)(A).

HB 241 does not address what would happen if new DNA testing were to exclude the applicant as the source of the evidence. However, a favorable test result would form the basis for an application for postconviction relief based on the existence of new, material facts "that requires vacation of the conviction . . . in the interest of justice," AS 12.72.010(4).

Section 6 of SB 241 includes provisions that find no analogue in the IPA. Both the IPA and section 6 authorize postconviction DNA testing only when a court makes the specific findings set forth in the statutes. See § 3600(a); AS 12.73.020. Those findings implicitly establish the factual allegations an applicant must make in the motion under the IPA or the application under section 6. Section 6 goes a step further and requires an applicant to submit affidavits from (1) the applicant, attesting that he did not admit or concede guilt in any official proceeding for the offense that was the basis of the conviction or any lesser included offense, AS 12.73.010(b)(1)(C) (CSHB 316 (Jud) amended this provision by defining admission or concession of guilt to exclude the entry of a guilty or no contest plea); (2) the applicant or his lawyer, describing (a) the results of any DNA testing performed on evidence used in the prosecution and conviction of the applicant and (b) all previous efforts to obtain DNA testing and any previous application filed under AS 12.72 or AS 12.73, AS 12.73.010(b)(2), (3); and (3) the lawyer who represented the applicant in the criminal trial resulting in conviction, describing why DNA testing was not sought before or during the trial, AS 12.73.010(b)(4).

Prison inmate charged in Bonnie Craig killing

DNA Database connects man held Outside to 1994 slaying of Anchorage teen.

By MEGAN HOLLAND
Anchorage Daily News
(05/01/07 05:39:00)

A grand jury has charged a former Anchorage man with murder in the slaying of Bonnie Craig, an 18-year-old college student who was raped and savagely beaten before she toppled over a cliff into a creek in 1994.

Kenneth Dion, now 37 and in prison in New Hampshire for a series of armed robberies, has also been charged with rape in one of the most highly publicized and emotional slayings in Anchorage in recent decades.

DNA evidence that prosecutors say links Dion to the slaying was central to the solution, according to cold-case investigators.

"It's a major step in a case that was of significance to Anchorage and a burden to the family for years," prosecutor Pat Gullufsen said.

Dion was on probation on an Anchorage robbery conviction and had been out of prison for only a few months when Bonnie was killed.

"Just to know he's already in jail and there's no way he can hurt anyone else is a relief," said Bonnie's mother, Karen Foster, reached Monday morning. She said she had been told in January that charges could be coming in the slaying of her daughter, who had been a high school wrestler and had taught swimming to junior high kids.

Troopers were able to match semen found on Bonnie with Dion through a national computer database of DNA profiles. Dion was never known to troopers and wasn't a suspect in the case until the DNA match came back in November.

"There is no doubt about this one," trooper cold-case investigator Jim Stogsdill said of the match. "There's no confusion."

Dion likely did not know Bonnie, Stogsdill said, but apparently picked her up as she walked to a bus stop on Lake Otis Parkway on the way to an early-morning class on Sept. 28, 1994, at the University of Alaska Anchorage. Her body was found that afternoon by a hiker at McHugh Creek.

FORT RICHARDSON

Dion, originally from New Hampshire, came to Alaska as a soldier and was stationed at Fort Richardson, then stayed for a couple of years after he left the military. He did not have a job at the time of Bonnie's slaying and was in and out of jail on robbery and assault charges. He was 25 years old when Bonnie was killed.

He was in jail in Alaska at the end of July 1994, two months before Bonnie's death. And he returned to jail on a probation violation about two months after the slaying.

Troopers say Bonnie was beaten and raped before she fell off a cliff near the Seward Highway. Her body was found floating in McHugh Creek near Mile 112.

Troopers have said she died of a head injury and hypothermia.

As to how Bonnie got to McHugh Creek, 10 miles from her home, or where she was raped, or whether she was struck in the head by her killer or she injured her head in the fall off the 30-foot cliff, "we can only surmise," Stogsdill said.

The hunt for her killer mesmerized Anchorage. Family and friends posted photocopies of the doe-eyed teenager who graduated from Service High School, asking for anyone with information about her killer to call troopers. She was not the kind of young woman to get in trouble. She lived with her parents and played the violin. She didn't drink.

Clues, though, were few and far between. And as the years passed, the crime remained unsolved and a reminder to young women walking alone that a brutal rapist had not been found.

As authorities kept looking, technology advanced to better match DNA, and more people were put into a national database.

DNA from Bonnie's case was put in the national database in 2000. New Hampshire authorities entered Dion's information in November 2006. Immediately, when workers with the Alaska state crime lab were conducting their weekly routine check of the database on Nov. 9, they had a hit.

Tammy Gregory, who was married to Dion at the time Bonnie was killed, broke down crying when reached Monday afternoon in Kenai. She said Dion was in and out of jail, on drugs, and generally abusive during those years. She hasn't seen or spoken to him in a decade. She doesn't want to remember that time in her life.

But still, she said, "I would never have thought he was capable of that. I would never have thought I was associated with someone like that."

NEW HAMPSHIRE RECORD

Dion, who left Alaska around 1996, made it back to New Hampshire, where he committed a series of robberies beginning in May 2002, according to authorities there and in Alaska. One robbery was of a pharmacy. He didn't have a weapon but, using his finger, pretended to, said Tom Velardi, deputy county attorney for Strafford County, N.H.

Dion ordered the pharmacy workers to give him OxyContin, a prescription painkiller similar to heroin that has become a popular street drug. "He had very serious addiction to it," Velardi said.

After the initial DNA match in November, authorities collected new DNA from Dion, which was taken back to Anchorage and matched again, Stogsdill said.

The grand jury in Anchorage indicted Dion on one count of first-degree murder, two counts of second-degree murder and one count of first-degree sexual assault. The two counts of second-degree murder are because it could have been a situation in which Dion didn't intend to kill Bonnie, Stogsdill said.

According to the New Hampshire Department of Corrections, Dion was sentenced to 15 years in prison in February 2003 for five robberies that occurred from spring 2002 until he was incarcerated. Dion was living in Rochester, N.H., before he went to prison. According to the department's Web site, he is eligible for parole in August 2008.

Alaska troopers and New Hampshire authorities interviewed Dion recently, but Stogsdill said he revealed little information.

"This is a long-overdue resolution to the Bonnie Craig case," Stogsdill said.

Bonnie's mother said the news of the charges is a relief, but it also opens old wounds and memories of what happened to her little girl. She said she doesn't want a trial to deepen those wounds. She hopes Dion will admit to the crime and make a deal with prosecutors. That would be easier, she said.

Alaska authorities will try to have him extradited here to face the new charges, Gullufsen said. And, if he is convicted, he will likely finish out his sentence in New Hampshire, then transfer to an Alaska prison.

Masters released from jail

By Howard Pankratz
The Denver Post
Posted: 01/22/2008 01:02:20 PM MST

Tim Masters leaves the Larimer County courtroom where he was released after serving nearly a decade of a life term in prison for the murder of Peggy Hettrick in 1987. (THE DENVER POST | CRAIG F. WALKER)

FORT COLLINS — Special prosecutors today said that DNA testing of murder victim Peggy Hettrick's clothing revealed the partial profiles of three men but that the profiles excluded Tim Masters as the source of the DNA.

Minutes after the prosecutors handed their findings to Judge Joe Weatherby, Weatherby vacated the judgment of conviction and sentence against Masters, who was immediately released from custody on a $200,000 personal recognizance bond.

Masters' next court date is Feb. 5, after the Larimer County district attorney assesses the status of the case.

A short time after Masters' release, longtime Colorado defense attorney David Wymore — who led the effort to free Masters for a crime Masters maintained he didn't commit — praised former employees of the Colorado Bureau of Investigation, the FBI and Fort Collins Police Department for their help in freeing Masters.

Man gets four years in rape of woman in Fairbanks

By Chris Freiberg

Published Tuesday, March 10, 2009

FAIRBANKS — Late in the summer of 2000, a woman who describes herself as a proud Inupiaq Eskimo was getting a ride home from a cab driver on the Steese Highway. The driver, afraid she was going to vomit in the back of the cab, made her get out of car a few blocks from her home and walk the rest of the way.

As she approached the Steese Highway bridge over the Chena River, a man attacked her, knocking her unconscious. When she awoke a few minutes later, she was in a nearby wooded area and he was on top of her, raping her. He took her shirt and covered her face with her jacket so she couldn't see him. He tried to take her jacket too, and she had to beg to get it back so she could have something to cover herself for the walk home.

After a few minutes, the attack was over. The man — or as she called him Monday, "the thing under the bridge" — left the area. She went home and reported the crime, afraid that she could run into her unknown assailant again at anytime.

"From that day on, living in this town, at anytime, I could possibly run into my rapist," she said in court Monday, holding back tears. The News-Miner does not usually identify the victims of sexual assaults.

For more than half a decade, she waited for Fairbanks police to identify her attacker. After collecting DNA evidence from an unrelated case in 2007, they found a match. Her attacker was identified as John F. Roberts, a 26-year-old who has been in and out of jail on a variety of petty charges since he was 14 years old. Prosecutors described his juvenile record as "horrific" and said he had zero chance of rehabilitation.

On Monday, after striking a plea agreement with prosecutors, he was sentenced to serve four years in prison for raping the woman on that late August night in 2000. He also will be on probation for five years and will have to register as a sex offender. The sentence would have been more severe, but sexual assault carried a lesser penalty in 2000 than it does today.

Roberts went to trial last year on the sexual assault charges, but a mistrial was declared after three days because of mishandled evidence.

"After the mistrial, I was advised to accept the plea agreement, which I am unhappy with to the say the least," the woman said. "I did it because I have to save my sanity."

"Too soon, a rapist will be walking the streets where you have the right to be safe with your children, your mothers, your aunts, your grandmothers," she added.

Superior Court Judge Randy Olsen empathized with the woman, agreeing that the laws do not provide for adequate punishment in a case like this.

"In other cultures or in earlier times, there would be castration or (he would be) drawn and quartered, and even then people wouldn't be satisfied," he said.

Roberts showed no emotion as the woman, her husband and her best friend each took the stand and told the court how their lives had been affected by the rape nearly nine years ago. Roberts' attorney offered no defense, only wishes that Roberts will turn his life around while behind bars.

Roberts apologized to the woman and her husband and said that he's realized he has done little with his life. He said he has found religion in jail and hopes to do something to improve his circumstances when he's released.

"Nothing I can say to you can change what I did, and for that, I'm sorry," he said.

MEMORANDUM April 7, 2010

SUBJECT: Differences between CSSB 284(FIN) and CSHB 409(STA)
(Work Order Nos. 26-LS1448\P and 26-LS1495\S)

TO: [redacted]

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TGB
Legislative Counsel

As a preliminary matter, please note that each bill is, itself, the best statement of its contents. This memorandum provides only an outline[1] of the substantive differences between CSSB 284(FIN) (26-LS1448\P) and CSHB 409(STA) (26-LS1495\S). This memorandum does not identify constitutional, legal, or drafting issues raised by the provisions of either bill.

15.13.030
The House bill requires the Alaska Public Offices Commission ("APOC") to make information contained in an independent expenditure report filed under AS 15.13.040(e) available to the public within 24 hours after the report has been filed with the commission. The Senate bill does not contain this requirement.

15.13.040(d)
The Senate bill contains language clarifying that every person making an independent expenditure shall make a full report of expenditures made and contributions received. The House bill is without this language.

AS 15.13.040(e)
The House bill requires an independent expenditure report filed by a person that is not an individual under AS 15.13.040(e) to be certified as correct by the treasurer or fiscal officer of the person. The House bill requires that the independent expenditure report include the nationality of each officer and director of the person (making the expenditure) and the nationality of each officer and director of a contributor (of over $100 in the aggregate in a year) to the person (making the expenditure). The Senate bill is without these requirements.

[1] The boldfaced heading for each of the differences described in this memorandum is the bill section in which an identified difference between the bills exists. If a heading section number or subsection letter appears in "quotes," the section or subsection is not an existing section or subsection amended by the bill, but a new section or subsection proposed to be added by the bill or bills.

15.13.040("q")
The Senate bill contains definitions for "director" and "officer" for the purposes of AS 15.13.040(e). The House bill does not define these terms.

"15.13.052"
The Senate bill requires persons making independent expenditures in state elections to establish a political activities account, from which all funds used by the person to make independent expenditures must be drawn. No such requirement is present in the House bill.

"15.13.068"
The Senate bill contains a more complete definition of "foreign national" than that of the House bill. The Senate bill provides that the Act's provision prohibiting a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election operates only to the extent (1) that federal law prohibits a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election and (2) permitted by federal law. The House bill provides only that the provision applies to the extent permitted by federal law.

AS 15.13.084
The House bill prohibits all anonymous expenditures.

AS 15.13.090 (and added subsections)
Both the House and Senate bills amend AS 15.13.090 to require a larger quantity of information be disclaimed in communications. The requirements of each bill are different. The House bill requires a person other than a candidate, an individual, or a political party to (1) identify the person's principal officer and the officer's title, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, (3) provide the person's principal place of business, and (4) identify the name and city and state of residence or principal place of business, as applicable, of each of the person's three largest contributors, if any, during the 12-month period before the date of the communication.

The Senate bill requires all persons to identify the person's place of business, if applicable, and requires a person other than an individual or candidate to (1) identify the person's principal officer and the officer's title, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, and (3) identify the name and city and state of residence or principal place of business, as applicable, of each of the person's five largest contributors, if any, during the 12-month period before the date of the communication.

The House bill additionally provides that "[a] person other than a candidate, individual, or political party may not make a communication . . . unless the person's principal officer has certified to the commission in writing that the officer has reviewed the communication, and, based on the officer's knowledge, the communication is not defamatory and does not contain any defamatory statements." This provision is absent from the Senate bill.

The Senate bill contains different requirements for communication transmitted through radio or other audio media or in the audio component of another communication than what the House bill permits. The Senate bill does not require that the audio component of a communication include the address or principal of business of the person paying for the communication or of the person's largest contributors. The House bill requires this information. However, the House bill permits a person, other than an individual, paying for a communication to be named in the audio component of the communication using the person's common name.

The House bill contains a requirement that communications from a person in which a foreign government holds more than a 10 percent ownership stake identify the foreign government as a partial owner of the person. The Senate bill does not contain such a requirement.

AS 15.13.110("g")
The House bill requires independent expenditure reports to be filed with APOC within 24 hours after the expenditure has been made. The Senate bill requires that independent expenditure reports be filed within 10 days, except independent expenditures that exceed $250 and that are made within nine days of an election must be reported within 24 hours.

15.56.014(a)
The Senate bill amends AS 15.56.014 to provide that any person, not just a "candidate, group, or individual," who knowingly prints or publishes a communication intended to influence the outcome of an election without the words "paid for by" has committed campaign misconduct in the second degree (this change could be described as a conforming change). This section is not present in the House bill.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to post-conviction DNA testing, to the preservation of certain evidence, and to the DNA identification registration system; relating to post-conviction relief procedures; relating to representation by the public defender; amending Rule 35.1, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.36.020(a) is amended to read:

(a) A law enforcement agency may

(1) not return property in its custody to the owner or the agent of the owner, except as provided in AS 12.36.200, if

(A) the property is in custody in connection with a children's court proceeding, a criminal proceeding, or an official investigation of a crime; or

(B) the property in custody is subject to forfeiture under the laws of the

(i) state; or

(ii) United States, and the United States has commenced forfeiture proceedings against the property or has requested the transfer of the property for the commencement of forfeiture proceedings; and

(2) with the approval of the court, transfer the property to another state or federal law enforcement agency for forfeiture proceedings by that agency; the court having jurisdiction shall grant the approval under this paragraph if the property

(A) will be retained within the jurisdiction of the court by the agency to which the property is being transferred; or

(B) is

(i) not needed as evidence; or

(ii) needed as evidence, and the property is fungible or the property's evidentiary value can otherwise be preserved without retaining the property within the jurisdiction of the court.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.36.090 is amended to read:

Sec. 12.36.090. Definitions. In AS 12.36.010 - 12.36.090 [THIS CHAPTER],

(1) "final disposition of a case" means the time when all appeals have been exhausted or the time when all appeals that could have been taken has expired;

(2) "law enforcement agency" means a public agency that performs as one of its principal functions an activity relating to crime prevention, control, or reduction or relating to the enforcement of the criminal law; "law enforcement agency" does not include a court.

 Sec. 3. AS 12.36 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Article 2. Preservation of Evidence.

Sec. 12.36.200. Preservation of evidence. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section and notwithstanding AS 12.36.010 - 12.36.090, an agency shall preserve

(1) evidence that is obtained in relation to an investigation and relevant to the prosecution of a crime under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, 11.41.410, or 11.41.434 for the following periods:

(A) 18 months after the entry of a judgment of conviction of the crime;

(B) if the conviction for the crime is appealed, one year after the judgment becomes final by the conclusion of direct review; or

(C) if a timely application for post-conviction relief is filed within the periods stated in (A) and (B) of this paragraph, the date that a judgment dismissing or denying the application for post-conviction review becomes final;

(2) biological material, contained in or found on evidence, relevant to an investigation and prosecution of a person convicted of a felony under AS 11.41, until the person is unconditionally discharged for the crime, until the person is no longer required to register as a sex offender, or until the periods of time provided in (1) of this subsection have expired, whichever is longest; biological material must be preserved in an amount and manner that is sufficient to develop a DNA profile under technology available at the time that the biological material is preserved.

(b) An agency is not required under (a) of this section to preserve physical evidence that is of a size, bulk, quantity, or physical character that makes preservation impractical or hazardous. If preservation of evidence is impractical or hazardous, the agency shall, before returning or disposing of the evidence, remove and preserve portions of the evidence likely to contain relevant evidence related to the crime in an amount and manner sufficient to retain its evidentiary value and, if appropriate, to permit DNA testing under technology available at the time that the biological material is preserved. An agency shall develop written policies concerning the removal and preservation of samples of evidence for retention under this section. The development of written policies as described in this subsection is not subject to the adoption of regulation provisions of AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act).

(c) On the written request of a person convicted of a crime described in (a) of this section, an agency shall provide an inventory of the evidence that has been preserved under (a)(1) of this section and of the biological material that has been preserved under (a)(2) of this section in connection with the person's conviction.

(d) The person who requests evidence that has been preserved under this section shall pay reasonable costs incurred in the retrieval of the evidence from storage unless the person does not have the ability to pay the costs.

Representative Jay Ramras, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Building, Rm 118
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Ramras,

Thank you for hearing SB 148 "An act relating to limitation of state liability on certain federal highway programs" in House Judiciary on Wednesday, April 15, 2009. As time is of the essence for tribes to use stimulus funds and get projects ready for our short construction season. This bill will lessen inter-governmental disputes or disagreements about liability concerns and will enable the tribes and state to focus on transportation projects.

Thank you again for hearing this bill.

Sincerely,

Albert Kookesh

Sponsor Statement

SB 148

SB 148 will resolve the issue of liability to the state or employees of the state when partnering with federally recognized tribes under the Indian Reservations Roads Program. With the decline in state and federal highway funds it's imperative we collaborate and work together. This bill will assist the partnering process, and ultimately benefit all Alaskans by leading to long-term improvements in the state's overall transportation infrastructure.

To take advantage of all available federal transportation dollars on state highways, Alaska DOT&PF and Indian Tribes may enter a series of inter-governmental agreements outlining respective obligations. The process of drafting such inter-governmental agreements can be time consuming and costly. Negotiations will often center on liability concerns, and sometimes months may elapse while trying to resolve the issues. This bill will lessen inter-governmental disputes or disagreements about liability concerns and will enable the tribe and the state to focus instead on the core transportation project(s).

Tribes have both the legal authority and financial capacity to assist with the improvements to the state transportation infrastructure. Congress made significant transportation dollars available under the Indian Reservation Roads (IRR) program. These IRR funds were made available upon the passage of the Safe, Accountable, Flexible, Efficient Transportation Equity Act: A legacy for users (SAFETEA-LU), Pub.L.No. 109-59 (2005). In FY 2008 the Alaska share of IRR funds is over $45 million and the recent stimulus package supplemented those funds by approximately $40 million.

This bill has the benefit of advancing state-tribal relations, advancing the state-tribal interest in improving state transportation infrastructure (including access to Alaska native villages) and minimizing nuisance litigation which can cost the state significant moneys to defend and settle.

This bill has the support of DOT& PF and I would appreciate your prompt and favorable action on this measure.

The Honorable Albert Kookesh
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 11
Juneau AK 99801-1182

Dear Senator Kookesh:

Thank you for sponsoring SB 148. This important piece of legislation will facilitate the partnering between Alaska's tribe and the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities (DOT&PF).

One of the most confusing issues during negotiations is liability. Eliminating or limiting the need to discuss liability issues during agreement negotiations means, time and energy will focus on the core transportation issues and ultimately the construction of transportation infrastructure that will benefit communities.

Sincerely,

Leo von Scheben, P.E., L.S., M.B.A.

Re: Letter of Support for SB -148

Dear Senator Kookesh,

I am writing this letter on behalf of the Ruby Tribal Council and all its Tribal Members to fully support SB -148 a bill you sponsored and introduced during the Senate Transportation Committee hearing this past week. This bill will complete the circle of federal funds that comes to Alaska to build and maintain Alaska's entire public infrastructure, especially in rural Alaska where the absence of funding for infrastructure improvements is felt the most.

This bill, SB – 148 will be a first step in bridging Tribal and State funding strategies for years to come when it concerns public community streets, highways, bridges, trails, and ferry systems.

Thank you for all the work you do for the State of Alaska, and our tribal communities.

Sincerely,

Patrick McCarty, 1st Chief

Yes, they worked everything out. At Hollis' request, Doug Johnson with the trial lawyers met with Peter Putzier and they also consulted with Kay Maasen Gowens from Sachse Miller and Munson -- all the lawyers representing he various points of view were happy with the end product. No problems at all! It's a good bill.

Hi Cindy:

House Transportation is hearing SB 148 on Tuesday - we met with DOT this week and they assured us that any concerns your office had had were taken care of and that the Plaintiff's Bar was okay with the current language. Can you verify that for me? Or are there any lingering problems that you think we should be looking at?

Thanks Cindy - have a great weekend!

Indian Reservation Road (IRR) Program Within Alaska
Synopsis by Alaska DOT&PF
February, 2009

Overview

IRR program established in federal law in 1982. Though initially managed primarily by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, this has evolved to a joint management structure between tribal governments and two federal agencies (BIA and FHWA). Participation by Alaska tribes in this program was limited prior to 2005 by two factors: First, the BIA held most decision and performance authority, and second, the funding allocated to Alaska was relatively small, resulting in very little road work being accomplished.

Under SAFETEA-LU (2005 surface transportation authorization) the statutory foundation for the program changed significantly. First, the amount of nationwide funding increased each year (starting at $300 Million per year in 2005 and rising to $450 Million per year in 2009). Second, each tribe was allotted funding annually based on a formula established through regulations. The formula is complex, but apart from population, the most important variable to each tribe is the number of road miles in their tribe's inventory.

Road Inventory and Funding

This identification of road miles takes place between each tribe and BIA and can include roads owned by other entities (such as Alaska DOT&PF, USFS and local governments). Since 2005 there has been a very active effort by tribes in Alaska to add as many road miles as possible to their individual inventories. While there was at one point (in 2007) a legal complication between the tribes and the State of Alaska over the inventory process (because BIA was requiring that road owners such as the state must "consent" to their roads being added to an inventory), this has been favorably resolved and the state is no longer involved in the inventory process.

The inventory process for Alaska tribes is different than most other tribes, which have reservations and thus clear boundaries. The tribal inventory of reservation-based tribes was largely based on the roads within their reservation boundary. In Alaska, with only one reservation-based tribe, essentially all but one of Alaska's 228 or so tribes must rely on road miles in and around each tribe's geographic location. Because some tribes are located in areas with a substantial number of roads, their tribal inventories are large. Other Alaska tribes, in areas with limited road mileage, have much smaller inventories and thus garner far less funding each year under the federal formula.

Another factor is the national split of funds between tribes. As Alaska's tribes have increased their inventory of IRR road miles since 2005, this has led to a smaller share of funding to other tribes in the United States. In response, these tribes have sought to expand their own inventory of miles, by expanding to include roads that lead to the reservation but are not within the reservation. Since Alaska, taken as a whole, has relatively few miles of total road in the state, this effort by non-Alaska tribes is likely to shift the balance of miles under IRR inventory back to these other non-Alaskan tribes as their inventories expand.

There are also some other categories of funding that are allocated on a discretionary (competitive) basis, such as $14 million per year for bridge projects across all tribes in the U.S.

Examples of IRR Funding to Alaska Tribes

In 2008 Alaska tribes received about $40 Million in funding based on the Relative Need" formula used by BIA. This formula uses several factors, including population, amount of vehicle travel, the total number of road miles and a "cost to construct factor" (which is designed to normalize funds across different construction cost circumstances). This is somewhat less than an average of $175,000 per Alaska tribe per year. However, the distribution of funds varies widely from this average. Some tribes garner nearly $2 million per year, while others earn less than $5,000. In general, the tribes in Southeast Alaska do the best under the formula, in part because of their population, and also because there are relatively high number of road miles in this region due to USFS logging road construction. (See attached table from BIA)

Use of IRR Funding by Tribes

The rules governing the use of IRR funding gives substantial latitude to each tribe as to how they use their funds. Some examples of what they can perform with their funding includes:

- Maintenance: 25% of each year's funding is eligible for routine road and bridge maintenance
- Match to other federal: IRR road funds can be used to match other federal funds, including FHWA highway funds and/or Denali Commission funds
- Design and Construction: IRR funds can be used for the tasks required to plan and engineer roads, as well as the actual construction. Construction can occur under force-account rules, unlike most other federal fund sources, which require competitive bids.
- Projects types include:
    - Transportation facility planning, research, engineering, construction and reconstruction
    - Tourism enhancement and recreational development
    - Vehicular parking area improvements and additions
    - Interpretive signage installation
    - Scenic easement and scenic or historic site acquisition
    - Pedestrian and bicycle on-and-off road system improvements, including modification of public walkways to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA)
    - Construction and reconstruction of roadside rest areas, including sanitary and water facilities
    - Provision of transit facilities and services within public lands, national parks and Indian reservations
    - Other appropriate facilities such as visitor centers

In order to use their funds, each tribe must prepare a Transportation Improvement Program or TIP (much like the state STIP) which identifies the project scope, cost and location of each project and activity to be funded.

Successful Examples of DOT&PF-Tribal Cooperation

Several groups of tribes within Alaska have established mutual organizations to better manage the program and take advantage of a pooled approach. For example, twenty tribes in the Bering Strait area operate a transportation organization called the Kawerak Transportation Program, which has professional road engineers, planners and accountants to internally identify and manage projects. By pooling their IRR funds and taking turns at project construction within their several communities, they are able to accomplish one or more projects each year, in order to improve employment opportunities and the road system in their communities. Several of these multi-tribe transportation organizations, sometimes called compacts, have been established in the state.

There have also been examples of tribes wishing to help fund work on state roads. For example, in Petersburg, the Petersburg Indian Association has helped to fund two state projects, including intending to perform the work on one project the tribe funded. This work is planned to be accomplished in cooperation with Alaska DOT&PF. Other examples of state-tribal partnerships include:

- Cordova: Native Village of Cordova (Eyak) is performing highway work on the state-owned Copper River Highway and intends to perform bridge work in the future.
- Sitka: Sitka Tribe of Alaska is operating a community-wide transit system and has received state managed transit funds.
- Mat-Su Borough: Chickaloon Native Village is evaluating the possibility of a transit system that might run from Glenallen to Anchorage on a daily or several times per week basis. This latter project received a transit grant from the Federal Transit Administration. DOT&PF transit planners have assisted the planning for this effort.
- Gambell: A federal highway earmark for road work in Gambell is being performed by Kawerak, under a transfer of funds from Alaska DOT&PF.

Impact of Stimulus Funds to Alaska Tribes

The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act contains $310 M nationally for funding to tribes for stimulus purposes. This is about 75% increase to regular 2009 funding to all tribes, including Alaska tribes or about $35 Million. The law's language requires that priority be given to projects that can be completed in 2 years or less, and after one year, BIA may be redistribute funds among the tribes. The allocation of IRR stimulus funds, and any redistribution of funds, is determined by the two federal agencies involved: BIA and FHWA.

Role of DOT&PF in the IRR Program

DOT&PF has been active in working with tribes in order to better achieve transportation improvements for all Alaskans. We have recently agreed to participate in a task force between the state and tribes to find workable solutions, including standard legal formats, in order to accelerate projects. That work is underway this year. We have also entered into several agreements, or otherwise assisted tribes in their use of IRR funds. Perhaps one key factor, as we prepare the next STIP, is that for the first time tribes can bring both matching funds, and maintenance funds to the table. Both factors will permit tribes' nominated projects to score higher, and thus improve the chances of garnering funds.

HOUSE CS FOR CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 194(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): SENATOR MEYER

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to penalties and civil damages for certain alcohol violations relating to minors and persons under 21 years of age."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 04.16.049(e) is amended to read:

(e) A licensee may bring a civil action against a person who violates this section if the violation occurs on the premises of that licensee. If judgment is entered in favor of the licensee, the court shall award civil damages in the amount of $1,500 [$1,000] and award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney fees allowed under the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure.

 Sec. 2. AS 04.16.065(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person who has attained 18 years of age, or an emancipated minor, who violates AS 04.16.060 is, in addition to any criminal penalty provided by law, liable in a civil action to the licensee for a penalty of $1,500 [$1,000] plus costs and reasonable attorney fees.

 Sec. 3. AS 04.16.180 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(e) In addition to other penalties provided in this chapter, the court may require a person convicted of an offense under this chapter who was less than 21 years of age at the time the person committed the offense to pay for and enroll in a juvenile alcohol safety action program if one is available.

 Sec. 4. AS 04.21.080 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(18) "juvenile alcohol safety action program" means

(A) a juvenile alcohol safety action program developed and implemented or approved by the Department of Health and Social Services under AS 47.37;

(B) any other alcohol education or treatment program approved by the Department of Health and Social Services under AS 47.37 if a program described in (A) of this paragraph is not available in the community in which the person resides; or

(C) a program or counseling approved by the court if a program or treatment described in (A) of this paragraph is not available in the community where the person resides.

 Sec. 5. AS 28.15.183(g) is amended to read:

(g) Except as provided under (h) of this section, the department may not issue a new license or reissue a license to a person whose driver's license, permit, or privilege to drive has been revoked under this section unless the person, if required to participate in a juvenile alcohol safety action program, as defined in AS 04.21.080 [AS 04.16.050], has successfully completed any education or treatment recommended.

 Sec. 6. AS 28.15.211(g) is amended to read:

(g) Except as provided under AS 28.15.183(h), the department may not issue a new license or reissue a license to a person whose driver's license has been revoked under AS 04.16.050, AS 28.15.183, or 28.15.185 unless the person, if required to participate in a juvenile alcohol safety action program, has successfully completed any education or treatment recommended. In this subsection, "juvenile alcohol safety action program" has the meaning given in AS 04.21.080 [AS 04.16.050].

 Sec. 7. AS 04.16.050(l)(2) is repealed.

SPONSOR STATEMENT FOR CSSB 194

"An Act relating to penalties and civil damages for certain alcohol violations."

CSSB 194 increases civil damages from $1,000 to $1,500 for three alcohol violations.

1) Minors who knowingly enter or remain in premises licensed to sell alcohol.

2) People who purchase or deliver alcohol to persons under the age of 21.

3) Persons with restrictions on purchasing alcohol who knowingly enter or remain on premises licensed to sell alcohol.

Additionally, CSSB 194 may also require a person who is under 21 years of age and convicted of the aforementioned offenses to pay for and enroll in a juvenile alcohol safety action program or similar education or treatment program if one is available.

Underage drinking is a problem in Alaska. According to the State of Alaska's Plan to Reduce & Prevent Underage Drinking (October 2009), 11 percent of all treatment admissions for alcohol abuse in the state were youth aged 12-20. There are currently 2,133 alcohol restricted licenses issued in the state.

An increase in civil damages would reinforce the message to youth that underage drinking will not be tolerated. The increased civil penalty would also be a financial deterrent for those who purchase alcohol for minors as well as adults holding a restricted license who are tempted to purchase alcohol.

Passing CSSB 194 will encourage licensees to continue their enforcement of underage and restricted license drinking laws. This bill will also serve as a deterrent to underage and restricted consumers of alcohol.

RE: Explanation of changes to SB 194

SB 194 underwent two substantive changes in the Senate since introduction

Senate State Affairs Committee added three new sections to the original bill.

Over the 2009 interim, Anchorage CHARR had expressed the need to mandate some kind of alcohol education course for the minors licensees were bringing civil actions against. After consulting with Legislative Legal, it was determined that because a civil action is between two independent parties, a court couldn't really mandate an alcohol education course. As a result, a compromise was made by making the sentencing of a Juvenile Alcohol Safety Action program or similar program, optional at the discretion of the civil court.

The second substantive change to the bill was in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The first change was a housekeeping issue, which corrected two cross references to AS 04.16.050 to AS 04.16.050(1)(2). The second change increased the civil damages from $1,000 to $1,500 on persons with restrictions on purchasing alcohol who knowingly enter or remain on premises licensed to sell alcohol.

(Work Order No. 26-LS0895\P)

TO: Senator Kevin Meyer

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have asked me to explain the impact of secs. 6 and 7 of the CS(JUD). Sections 6 and 7 do not have any substantive impact but merely fix cross-references to the definition of "juvenile alcohol safety action program," which is being moved from AS 04.16.050 (see repeal in sec. 8) to AS 04.21.080 (see sec. 5). The definition is being moved so that a judge may require a minor to participate in such a program for any alcohol violation of AS 04.

MEMORANDUM October 20, 2009

SUBJECT: Requiring Alcohol Education and Assessment for Minors in Civil Actions Brought by Licensees (Work Order No. 26-LS0895\R)

TO: Senator Kevin Meyer
Attn: Christine Marasigan

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have requested that mandatory alcohol education be required for persons subject to civil suits by licensees under AS 04.16.049(e) and 04.16.065(a). These civil suits are brought by licensees against persons under the age of 21 who attempt to use fake ids or otherwise access premises or purchase alcohol when they are underage. These civil suits are lawsuits between two private parties and do not involve the state or other prosecuting authority and criminal and other penalties may not be imposed. Imposition of criminal sanctions including attendance at alcohol education[1] is inappropriate and unavailable to civil litigants. I do not see how one civil litigant can be authorized to impose a potential criminal sanction on the other civil litigant.

What I did do is provide that a court may require a person under the age of 21 to participate in a juvenile alcohol action safety program whenever the person is convicted of an offense under AS 04.16. Currently we only require this for minor in possession under AS 04.16.050. While this does not directly satisfy your request it does allow alcohol education programs to be required of minors when they are prosecuted and convicted of offenses under AS 04.16.049 and 04.16.065 and other offenses under AS 04.16.

[1] I assume by this you mean a juvenile alcohol safety action program as is currently required for minor in possession convictions under AS 04.16.050.

STATE OF ALASKA
Plan to Reduce & Prevent Underage Drinking
October 2009, pages 5-7 (28 pages total) http://www.hss.state.ak.us/DBH/prevention/docs/2009_underagedrinkplan.pdf

Executive Summary

Childhood and underage drinking has been shown to be a causal factor in homicide, suicide, traumatic injury, traffic fatalities, drowning, burns, violent and property crime, high risk sex, fetal alcohol syndrome, alcohol poisoning and the need for treatment for alcohol abuse and dependence.[i] The research shows that early onset alcohol use is strongly associated with adult alcohol dependence.[iii] While there are no significant differences between national and Alaskan trends for heavy drinking[a], the prevalence of binge drinking[b] among Alaska's adults is consistently higher than the national average.[c iv]

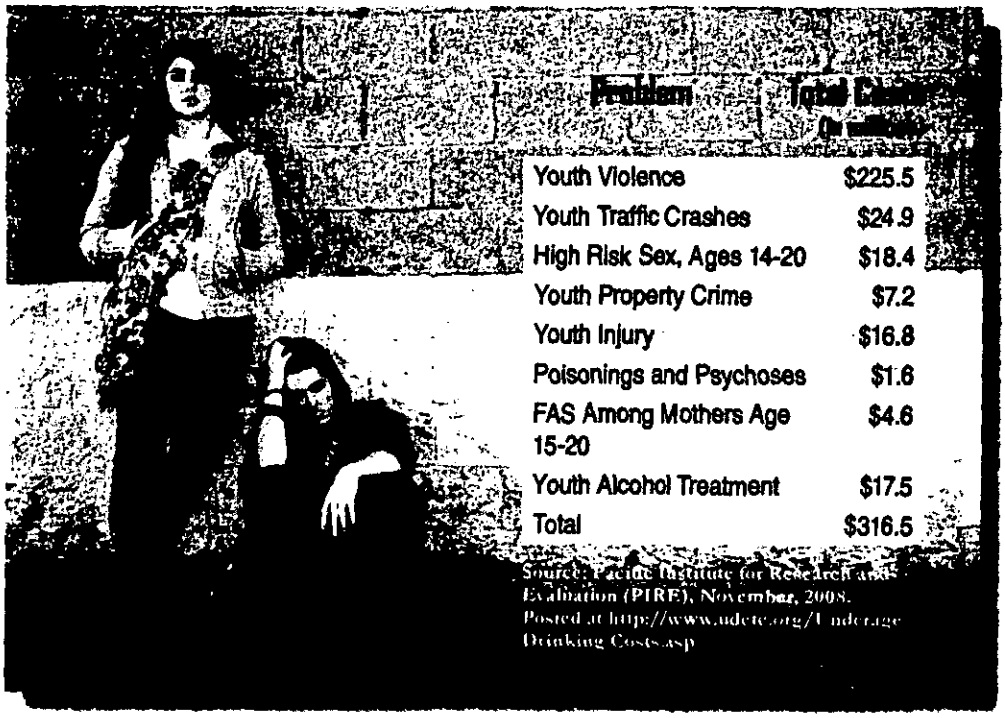
Further, excessive alcohol use by youth causes damage to the developing brain.[v] There exists a perception that adolescents can easily recover from drinking because their bodies are more resilient; however, the opposite is true. According to the American Medical Association, alcohol can seriously damage long and short term growth processes of the brain during adolescence. Frontal lobe development and the refinement of pathways and connections continue until the age of 16, and a high rate of energy is used as the brain matures until the age of 23. Damage from alcohol prior to age 23 can be long-term and irreversible. Furthermore, even moderate drinking impairs learning and memory in youth.[vi]

A myriad of catastrophic health, social and economic problems resultant from underage drinking has impacted Alaska's youth. In 2000, the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Juvenile Justice sponsored an assessment of underage drinking in Alaska. Investigators examined statewide efforts and data and conducted more detailed inquiries by interviewing 203 key informants from 17 rural and urban sample communities. The consequences of underage drinking in Alaska are reflected in an increase in the number of alcohol-related accidents among youth requiring hospitalization of 66.3 percent between 1991 and 1998. Over this period, Alaska averaged 30 suicide attempts annually among youth where alcohol was a factor.[vii]

The cost of underage drinking to the citizens of Alaska was $317 million in 2005, inclusive of medical care, work loss, and pain and suffering.[viii] This is equivalent to $3,944 per year for each youth in the State. Based on these figures, per capita, Alaska is second among the fifty states for the cost of underage drinking.

As demonstrated in the table below, the largest costs to the State of Alaska can be attributed to youth violence and traffic crashes by underage youth under the influence of alcohol. Furthermore, a multitude of other problems contribute significantly to the overall cost. For example, among teen mothers, fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS) costs Alaska $4.6 million. Young people who begin drinking before age 15 are four times more likely to develop alcohol dependence and are two and a half times more likely to become abusers of alcohol than those who begin drinking at age 21.[ix] In 2003, 366 youth 12-20 years old were admitted for alcohol treatment in Alaska, accounting for 11 percent of all treatment admissions for alcohol abuse in the State.[x]

Costs of Underage Drinking by Problem, Alaska 2005



Problem	Total Cost (in millions)
Youth Violence	$225.5
Youth Traffic Crashes	$24.9
High Risk Sex, Ages 14-20	$18.4
Youth Property Crime	$7.2
Youth Injury	$16.8
Poisonings and Psychoses	$1.6
FAS Among Mothers Age 15-20	$4.6
Youth Alcohol Treatment	$17.5
Total	$316.5

The Alaska Departments of Education and Early Development and Health and Social Services conduct a biannual statewide student survey on health behavior. Alaska uses the Alaska Youth Risk Behavior Survey (YRBS), based upon the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) epidemiological surveillance system.[xi] This survey was established to monitor the prevalence of behaviors that not only influence adolescent health, but also put youth at risk for the most significant health and social problems. Participating school districts may receive a full report of their local data, which can be the centerpiece of their own local needs assessments, adding other data such as the Alaska School Boards' School Climate and Connectedness survey and local law enforcement data.

[b] Defined as 5 or more drinks on one occasion.
[c] Thirty-nine percent higher for women and 14 percent higher for men.

Executive Summary

In 2007, 43 high schools were scientifically selected to be included in the survey. Thirty-eight (88 percent) schools participated and 1,318 (68 percent) students (from a total of 1, 952 selected) completed the survey resulting in an overall response rate of 60 percent (P. Owen, personal communication, October 27, 2008).

According to self-reports by Alaskan students in grades 9-12:[xiii]

- 74% had at least one drink of alcohol on one or more days during their life.
- 20% had their first drink of alcohol, other than a few sips, before age 13.
- 40% had at least one drink of alcohol on one or more occasion in the past 30 days.
- 26% had five or more drinks of alcohol in a row (i.e. binge drinking) in the past 30 days.

The 2007 YRBS also shows that 10 percent of Alaska youth self-reported drinking and driving within the past 30 days. According to the Alaska Highway Safety Office 2006 Annual Report, a third of alcohol impaired drivers and 47 percent of speeding drivers were under the age of 26.[xiii] Additionally, in 2006 there were 102 traffic accidents with alcohol impaired youth drivers ages 11-20.[xiv]

The state-wide YRBS demonstrates that underage drinking is widespread in Alaska, but it does not include all age appropriate youth. There are more youth at risk than are represented. Alaska state law requires that students have active consent[d] from parents to participate in school surveys, which excludes students who do not return a signed permission slip. In addition, alternative high school students were excluded from the state-wide YRBS report and students who have dropped out of school were not represented. Studies have shown that alternative high school students are at significantly higher risk for engaging in risky behaviors[xv] and substance use is correlated with school dropout.[xvi] As such, the risk behaviors of youth are likely underrepresented with the Alaska state-wide YRBS.

However, in 2007, with support from community partners, the Anchorage School District was able to administer the YRBS in alternative schools.[xvii] While they were not able to obtain the 60 percent response rate needed to generalize the findings to all alternative high school students,[e] the findings are important to consider as we plan prevention measures. The table below compares the responses from the Anchorage traditional high schools that were included with the state-wide YRBS and those Anchorage students who participated in the alternative school YRBS.[f]

Comparison of Traditional vs Alternative High Schools in Anchorage 2007

	Traditional High Schools	Alternative High Schools	McLaughlin High School
Percentage of students who had their first drink of alcohol other than a few sips before age 13	20.6%	30.8%	41.3%
Percentage of students who had at least one drink of alcohol on one or more of the past 30 days	40.8%	54%	76.4%
Percentage of students who had 5 or more drinks of alcohol in a row within a couple hours on one or more of the past 30 days	26.2%	37.3%	63.8%

Executive Summary

The alternative high schools participating in the 2007 Anchorage Youth Risk Behavior Survey included the following:

- McLaughlin Secondary School serves students who have been incarcerated at the McLaughlin Youth Center, a state detention center for juveniles.
- AVAIL (Anchorage Vocational Academic Institute of Learning) is an alternative high school program devoted to students who have dropped out of traditional schools.
- Benson/Search is an alternative school serving the educational needs of students who have been deemed "at risk."
- COHO (Creating Optimal High School Opportunities) offers students in the Chugiak and Eagle River area an alternative to the traditional high school classroom.
- Continuation Program is a self-directed alternative education program for students who are expelled, on a long-term suspension, or are in need of a transitional education placement.
- Crossroads is the Anchorage School District's school for pregnant and parenting teens.
- SAVE is an accredited comprehensive alternative high school that provides the opportunity for credit recovery, and is designed to meet the requirements for high school graduation.

These findings both highlight the need for further evaluation of alternative school students' risk behaviors in an effort to better plan prevention measures for these students and illustrate the strong likelihood that current reports of underage drinking in Alaska are under representative of the actual trend.

Despite the toll that underage drinking brings to bear on all citizens of Alaska — be it physical, mental, social, or economic — social norms remain static leaving the overall impression that underage drinking in Alaska "isn't a problem". Alaska has made great strides in the prevention of underage tobacco use and the parallels between the two drugs, alcohol and tobacco, are remarkable. That being said, enforcement efforts within the Departments of Health and Social Services and Public Safety have been coordinated for both tobacco and alcohol. As a result, an interesting pattern has emerged, which clearly demonstrates exactly where social attitudes lie. For example, in FY 2007, 9.2 percent of all retailers investigated sold tobacco to underage buyers whereas 22 percent of all retailers investigated sold alcohol to underage buyers.

Holding youth solely responsible for underage drinking is unreasonable. As the national report concluded, "Youth drink within the context of a society in which alcohol use is normative behavior and images about alcohol are pervasive." Efforts to reduce and prevent underage drinking, therefore, need to focus on a variety of environmental strategies that engage adults, youth, and the society at large. Alaska's plan employs a variety of strategies, including, but not limited to: public awareness; alcohol advertising; education; limiting access; collaboration; governmental assistance; and research and evaluation.

The problem of underage drinking in Alaska is significant but not insurmountable. It will, however, require determination and commitment to a long-term effort on the part of our citizens, state and community leaders to get involved and to take the action necessary to make a difference.

The national and Alaska-specific information and recommendations contained herein provide a blueprint for a range of science-based state and community actions that are necessary in order to successfully reduce underage drinking in Alaska. These recommendations are based on the IOM/NAS Report: Reducing Underage Drinking: A Collective Responsibility. Each recommendation is categorized as national (N), state (S), or local (L). The national recommendations are numbered based on the location within the IOM/NAS report. The numbering of the state and local recommendations is specific to this plan.

[d] Parents must sign a permission slip (versus passive consent in which the parent can exclude the student from participating with a written request).

[e] There were 230 respondents from Anchorage alternative schools and 75 respondents from McLaughlin High School.

[f] The Anchorage alternative school YRBS is only representative of those students who participated in the survey as the response rate was not high enough to generalize it to all alternative school students.

Juvenile Alcohol Safety Action Program (ASAP)

In cooperation with other state or local agencies, a juvenile alcohol safety action program provides substance abuse screening, referral, and monitoring of persons under 18 years of age who have been referred to it by the court, Division of Juvenile Justice, and/or Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV). The typical cases that are ordered to juvenile ASAP are minor consuming, minor in possessions and tobacco violations.

The benefits of screening, referral and monitoring include:

- Increased accountability of offenders;
- Reduced recidivism resulting from successful completion of required education or treatment;
- Significant reductions in the amount of resources spent by prosecutors, law enforcement officers, judges, attorneys and corrections officers enforcing court-ordered conditions; and
- Increased safety for victims and the larger community because offenders are more likely to be receiving treatment, making court appearances, and complying with other probation conditions.

On July 1, 2001, the juvenile ASAP program was formally established in 4 communities throughout the state: Fairbanks, Juneau, Kotzebue and Ketchikan through the passage of HB 179 - Underage Drinking and Drug Offenses. Since the passage of the legislation, the program has expanded into several other communities in the state - Anchorage, Kodiak, Kenai and Mat-Su.

A list of the current juvenile ASAP locations and FY '06 case totals for are below.

Dear Senator Meyer,

I am writing to you regarding Senate Bill 194, an act relating to civil damages for certain alcohol violations.

As you may know, one of Alaska CHARR's top legislative priorities is fighting underage drinking. We appreciate your efforts to increase the civil penalty for underage persons attempting to purchase alcohol to $1,500.00. We believe this will encourage licensees to pursue the civil liability penalty making the penalty a stronger deterrent and sending a stronger message to underage persons that their criminal actions will not be taken lightly.

Alaska CHARR fully supports SB194, and would like to thank you for helping the hospitality industry send a stronger message to kids that attempting to buy alcohol is a serious offense.

Please let me know if I can be of additional assistance.

Re: SB 194

Dear Senator Meyer:

Underage drinking in Alaska has long been a concern in our communities and for this reason we support legislation to increase penalties for underage drinking through the civil penalties process.

As responsible owners and operators, we do not want to contribute to the problem of underage drinking. When a licensee is caught serving or selling alcoholic beverages to a minor the consequences and penalties are severe. We believe the minor should be held primarily responsible for his/her actions; the current $1,000 civil penalty is not enough. There should be steps for offenses to include increasing the $1,000 to $1,500, required or mandatory education and prevention and delaying access to the driver license at the age of 21.

In 2006, the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) with funding from the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) report highlights the current status of underage drinking throughout rural and urban Alaska from a youth's perspective. The problem of underage drinking is statewide and impacts families, communities, social, health, medical, justice, law enforcement, education and economic bodies.

Anchorage CHARR assists members by processing civil penalty cases against minors on behalf of the licensee and providing information about minor civil penalty law. We compile information from our member about the civil case against the minor, prepare all required legal documents and coordinate third party notification for court appearance.

Currently our office has processed 42 minor cases with 15 pending court filing.

We urge you to please consider supporting SB 194.

Sincerely,

Silvia Villamides,

Dear Senator Olson:

In response to a question from Representative Meyer's Office on Wednesday, January 27th, regarding Juvenile alcohol safety action programs, please see our response below:

- I would like to know how much the Juvenile alcohol safety action program developed by DHSS under AS 47.37 costs and how active they are throughout the state. Just need a quick, one sentence answer.

In FY09 the Division of Behavioral Health (DBH) awarded a total of $534,527 to 11 Juvenile alcohol safety action programs (JSAPs) in the following communities: Mat-Su, Homer, Kotzebue, Fairbanks, Juneau, Kenai, Kodiak, Ketchikan, Dillingham, Seward, and Anchorage. An additional $200,000 was available in FY09 for programs to use to assist juveniles with service access. Total JSAP client new cases for FY09 were 1,917. During FY09 a total of 1,290 cases were completed and closed (this number includes cases that were opened in FY08 and closed in FY09).

In FY10, an additional $87,607 was awarded to two new JSAPs; Bethel ($46,000) and Nome ($41,607), and an additional $30,000 was available in juvenile treatment dollars. The JSAPs are very successful, with juveniles entering these programs completing their assigned service of alcohol and drug information school (using the Prime for Life Curriculum) or substance use treatment services in a timely manner, with few repeat clients.

If you have additional questions regarding this issue, please contact me at 465-1630.

Sincerely,

Alison Elgee

Dear Representative Jay Ramras,

I am writing today about SB 194. I am the Director for Communities Mobilizing for Change on Alcohol (CMCA). Our program's goal is to reduce access of alcohol to minors. We are a grassroots coalition made up of community members. Our member range in age from 12 – 65. SB 194 was discussed at our coalition meeting in February and it was agreed upon by the younger members that we should support this bill as it will send a strong and clear message to youth who attempt to purchase alcohol as minors. Reduction of access of alcohol to minors will decrease the cost Alaska spends on alcohol related incidents.

There is also a whole new generation of minors who need to get the message that we do not tolerate underage drinking and if they get caught, their parents will be notified, and it will cost them money. Our hope is that this will help stop underage people from attempting to buy alcohol.

Thank-you for your time in reviewing our support of SB 194.

Sincerely,

Charlie Daniels

Jerry,

Today the House Judiciary Committee moved the above-referenced bill from committee with one conceptual amendment as follows:

P.4, L. 29 after "device" insert 'for an alcohol related offense"

P.6, L. 7 after "device" insert for an alcohol related offense"

Please make the attached changes and go final on the bill.

SENATE DISTRICT O

SPONSOR STATEMENT FOR SB 239

"An Act relating to ignition interlock devices, to refusal to submit to a chemical test, and to driving while under the influence."

SB 239 would clarify the sentencing statutes regarding the use of ignition interlock device (IID).

Effective in 2009, legislation was passed mandating an IID as part of the sentencing for driving while under the influence of an alcoholic beverage, inhalant, or controlled substance.

In 2009, there were 3,513 court orders requiring IID, 193 limited licenses for an IID were issued, and over 1,245 IIDs were installed in vehicles. There have been some reports of the IID being suspended in sentencing and of people with more violations having less time with an IID.

SB 239 would seek to remedy these loopholes by 1) requiring a period of time an IID to be installed stair stepped with each offense and 2) listing an IID as a condition of sentencing that cannot be suspended.

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures January 2010 Legisbrief, research shows that installation of an IID reduces can reduce recidivism up to 90 percent.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to ignition interlock devices, to refusal to submit to a chemical test, and to driving while under the influence."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.76.140(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of avoidance of ignition interlock device if the person knowingly

(1) circumvents or tampers with an ignition interlock device in a manner intended to allow a person on probation under AS 12.55.102, with a condition of sentence under AS 12.55.102 or another section, or who has an ignition interlock limited license to avoid using the device;

(2) rents a motor vehicle to a person and with criminal negligence disregards the fact that the person is on probation under AS 12.55.102, has a condition of sentence under AS 12.55.102 or another section, or has an ignition interlock limited license, unless the vehicle is equipped with an ignition interlock device described in AS 12.55.102; or

(3) loans a motor vehicle to a person and knowingly disregards the fact that the person is on probation under AS 12.55.102, has a condition of sentence under AS 12.55.102 or another section, or has an ignition interlock limited license, unless the vehicle is equipped with an ignition interlock device described in AS 12.55.102.

 Sec. 2. AS 28.15.291(b) is amended to read:

(b) Upon conviction under (a) of this section, the court

(1) shall impose a minimum sentence of imprisonment

(A) if the person has not been previously convicted, of not less than 10 days with 10 days suspended, including a mandatory condition of probation that the defendant complete not less than 80 hours of community work service;

(B) if the person has been previously convicted, of not less than 10 days;

(C) if the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license was revoked under circumstances described in AS 28.15.181(c)(1), [OR] if the person was driving in violation of a limited license issued under AS 28.15.201(d) following that revocation, or if the person was driving in violation of an ignition interlock device requirement following that revocation, of not less than 20 days with 10 days suspended, and a fine of not less than $500, including a mandatory condition of probation that the defendant complete not less than 80 hours of community work service;

(D) if the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license was revoked under circumstances described in AS 28.15.181(c)(2), (3), or (4), [OR] if the person was driving in violation of a limited license issued under AS 28.15.201(d) following that revocation, or if the person was driving in violation of an ignition interlock device requirement following that revocation, of not less than 30 days and a fine of not less than $1,000;

(2) may impose additional conditions of probation;

(3) may not

(A) suspend execution of sentence or grant probation except on condition that the person serve a minimum term of imprisonment and perform required community work service as provided in (1) of this subsection;

(B) suspend imposition of sentence;

(4) shall revoke the person's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license, and the person may not be issued a new license or a limited license nor may the privilege to drive or obtain a license be restored for an additional period of not less than 90 days after the date that the person would have been entitled to restoration of driving privileges; and

(5) may order that the motor vehicle that was used in commission of the offense be forfeited under AS 28.35.036.

 Sec. 3. AS 28.35.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) Except as provided under (n) of this section, driving while under the influence of an alcoholic beverage, inhalant, or controlled substance is a class A misdemeanor. Upon conviction,

(1) the court shall impose a minimum sentence of imprisonment of

(A) not less than 72 consecutive hours, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of six [12] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $1,500 if the person has not been previously convicted;

(B) not less than 20 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 12 [24] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $3,000 if the person has been previously convicted once;

(C) not less than 60 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 18 [36] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $4,000 if the person has been previously convicted twice and is not subject to punishment under (n) of this section;

(D) not less than 120 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 24 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $5,000 if the person has been previously convicted three times and is not subject to punishment under (n) of this section;

(E) not less than 240 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 30 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $6,000 if the person has been previously convicted four times and is not subject to punishment under (n) of this section;

(F) not less than 360 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege, including any limited privilege, to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 36 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $7,000 if the person has been previously convicted more than four times and is not subject to punishment under (n) of this section;

(2) the court may not

(A) suspend execution of sentence or grant probation except on condition that the person

(i) serve the minimum imprisonment under (1) of this subsection; [AND]

(ii) pay the minimum fine required under (1) of this subsection;

(B) suspend imposition of sentence; or

(C) suspend the requirement for an ignition interlock device;

(3) the court shall revoke the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license under AS 28.15.181, and may order that the motor vehicle, aircraft, or watercraft that was used in commission of the offense be forfeited under AS 28.35.036; and

(4) the court may order that the person, while incarcerated or as a condition of probation or parole, take a drug or combination of drugs intended to prevent the consumption of an alcoholic beverage; a condition of probation or parole imposed under this paragraph is in addition to any other condition authorized under another provision of law.

 Sec. 4. AS 28.35.030(g) is amended to read:

(g) Notwithstanding (b) of this section, [IF THE COURT IMPOSES PROBATION UNDER AS 12.55.102] the court may reduce the fine required to be imposed under (b) of this section by the cost of the ignition interlock device.

 Sec. 5. AS 28.35.030(n) is amended to read:

(n) A person is guilty of a class C felony if the person is convicted under (a) of this section and either has been previously convicted two or more times since January 1, 1996, and within the 10 years preceding the date of the present offense, or punishment under this subsection or under AS 28.35.032(p) was previously imposed within the last 10 years. For purposes of determining minimum sentences based on previous convictions, the provisions of (u)(4) of this section apply. Upon conviction, the court

(1) shall impose a fine of not less than $10,000, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 60 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a minimum sentence of imprisonment of not less than

(A) 120 days if the person has been previously convicted twice;

(B) 240 days if the person has been previously convicted three times;

(C) 360 days if the person has been previously convicted four or more times;

(2) may not

(A) suspend execution of sentence or grant probation except on condition that the person

(i) serve the minimum imprisonment under (1) of this subsection; [AND]

(ii) pay the minimum fine required under (1) of this subsection; [OR]

(B) suspend imposition of sentence; or

(C) suspend the requirement for an ignition interlock device;

(3) shall permanently revoke the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license subject to restoration of the license under (o) of this section;

(4) may order that the person, while incarcerated or as a condition of probation or parole, take a drug or combination of drugs, intended to prevent the consumption of an alcoholic beverage; a condition of probation or parole imposed under this paragraph is in addition to any other condition authorized under another provision of law;

(5) shall order forfeiture under AS 28.35.036 of the vehicle, watercraft, or aircraft used in the commission of the offense, subject to remission under AS 28.35.037; and

(6) shall order the department to revoke the registration for any vehicle registered by the department in the name of the person convicted under this subsection; if a person convicted under this subsection is a registered co-owner of a vehicle or is registered as a co-owner under a business name, the department shall reissue the vehicle registration and omit the name of the person convicted under this subsection.

 Sec. 6. AS 28.35.030(t) is amended to read:

(t) Notwithstanding (b) or [,] (n) [, OR (r)] of this section, the court shall waive the requirement of the use of an ignition interlock device when a person operates a motor vehicle in a community included on the list published by the department under AS 28.22.011(b).

 Sec. 7. AS 28.35.032(g) is amended to read:

(g) Upon conviction under this section,

(1) the court shall impose a minimum sentence of imprisonment of

(A) not less than 72 consecutive hours, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of six [12] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $1,500 if the person has not been previously convicted;

(B) not less than 20 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 12 [24] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $3,000 if the person has been previously convicted once;

(C) not less than 60 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 18 [36] months [DURING THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $4,000 if the person has been previously convicted twice and is not subject to punishment under (p) of this section;

(D) not less than 120 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 24 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $5,000 if the person has been previously convicted three times and is not subject to punishment under (p) of this section;

(E) not less than 240 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 30 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $6,000 if the person has been previously convicted four times and is not subject to punishment under (p) of this section;

(F) not less than 360 days, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 36 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a fine of not less than $7,000 if the person has been previously convicted more than four times and is not subject to punishment under (p) of this section;

(2) the court may not

(A) suspend execution of the sentence required by (1) of this subsection or grant probation, except on condition that the person

(i) serve the minimum imprisonment under (1) of this subsection; [AND]

(ii) pay the minimum fine required under (1) of this subsection; [OR]

(B) suspend imposition of sentence; or

(C) suspend the requirement for an ignition interlock device;

(3) the court shall revoke the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license under AS 28.15.181, and may order that the motor vehicle, aircraft, or watercraft that was used in commission of the offense be forfeited under AS 28.35.036;

(4) the court may order that the person, while incarcerated or as a condition of probation or parole, take a drug or combination of drugs intended to prevent the consumption of an alcoholic beverage; a condition of probation or parole imposed under this paragraph is in addition to any other condition authorized under another provision of law; and

(5) the sentence imposed by the court under this subsection shall run consecutively with any other sentence of imprisonment imposed on the person.

* Sec. 8. AS 28.35.032(k) is amended to read:

(k) Notwithstanding (g) of this section, [IF THE COURT IMPOSES PROBATION UNDER AS 12.55.102] the court may reduce the fine required to be imposed under (g) of this section by the cost of the ignition interlock device.

* Sec. 9. AS 28.35.032(p) is amended to read:

(p) A person is guilty of a class C felony if the person is convicted under this section and either has been previously convicted two or more times since January 1, 1996, and within the 10 years preceding the date of the present offense, or punishment under this subsection or under AS 28.35.030(n) was previously imposed within the last 10 years. For purposes of determining minimum sentences based on previous convictions, the provisions of AS 28.35.030(u)(4) apply. Upon conviction,

(1) the court shall impose a fine of not less than $10,000, require the person to use an ignition interlock device after the person regains the privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a minimum of 60 months [THROUGHOUT THE PERIOD OF PROBATION], and impose a minimum sentence of imprisonment of not less than

(A) 120 days if the person has been previously convicted twice;

(B) 240 days if the person has been previously convicted three times;

(C) 360 days if the person has been previously convicted four or more times;

(2) the court may not

(A) suspend execution of the sentence required by (1) of this subsection or grant probation, except on condition that the person

(i) serve the minimum imprisonment under (1) of this subsection; [AND]

(ii) pay the minimum fine required under (1) of this subsection; [OR]

(B) suspend imposition of sentence; or

(C) suspend the requirements for an ignition interlock device;

(3) the court shall permanently revoke the person's driver's license, privilege to drive, or privilege to obtain a license subject to restoration under (q) of this section;

(4) the court may order that the person, while incarcerated or as a condition of probation or parole, take a drug, or combination of drugs, intended to prevent consumption of an alcoholic beverage; a condition of probation or parole imposed under this paragraph is in addition to any other condition authorized under another provision of law;

(5) the sentence imposed by the court under this subsection shall run consecutively with any other sentence of imprisonment imposed on the person;

(6) the court shall order forfeiture under AS 28.35.036, of the motor vehicle, aircraft, or watercraft used in the commission of the offense, subject to remission under AS 28.35.037; and

(7) the court shall order the department to revoke the registration for any vehicle registered by the department in the name of the person convicted under this subsection; if a person convicted under this subsection is a registered co-owner of a vehicle, the department shall reissue the vehicle registration and omit the name of the person convicted under this subsection.

 Sec. 10. AS 33.05.020(c) is amended to read:

(c) The commissioner shall by regulation

(1) establish standards for calibration, certification, maintenance, and monitoring of ignition interlock devices required as a condition of probation or as part of a sentence under AS 12.55.102 or another statute; and

(2) establish a fee to be paid by the manufacturer for the cost of certifying an ignition interlock device.

 Sec. 11. AS 33.05.020(e) is amended to read:

(e) The commissioner shall notify the manufacturer of the ignition interlock device when the device is certified. The commissioner may not certify an ignition interlock device unless the device prominently displays a label warning that a person circumventing or tampering with the device violates [IN VIOLATION OF] AS 11.76.140 and may be imprisoned [UP TO 30 DAYS] and fined [UP TO $500].

 Sec. 12. AS 12.55.102(e)(2) and AS 28.35.030(r) are repealed.

MEMORANDUM March 12, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary - CSSB 239( ), "S" Version
(Work Order No. 26-LS1210\S)

TO: Senator Kevin Meyer
Attn: Christine Marasigan

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, please note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill -- the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 amends AS 11.76.140(a) to provide criminal liability in relation to ignition interlock devices regardless of whether the requirement to use the ignition interlock devices arises under AS 12.55.102 or another statute.

Section 2 amends AS 28.35.030(b), misdemeanor drunk driving, to provide that the requirement for an ignition interlock device for drunk drivers applies regardless of whether the offender receives probation; starts at a minimum of six months for a first offender and increases by six months for each offense (this is a minimum period for use of an interlock the court may impose a greater period); and provides that the ignition interlock requirement may not be suspended by the court.

Section 3 amends AS 28.35.030(g) to conform to sec. 2, as ignition interlock is no longer tied to probation.

Section 4 amends AS 28.35.030(n), the felony drunk driving statute, in a manner similar to sec. 2, by no longer tying imposition of ignition interlock to probation. In addition, this section requires the use of an ignition interlock device for a minimum of five years for anyone convicted of felony drunk driving and provides that the ignition interlock requirement may not be suspended.

Section 5 makes a technical change to correspond to the repeal of AS 28.35.030(r) in sec. 9 of the bill.

Section 6 amends AS 28.35.032(g), misdemeanor refusal to submit to a chemical test, by making the same changes that are made in sec. 2 of the bill for misdemeanor drunk driving.

Section 7 amends AS 28.35.032(k) to conform to sec. 6, as ignition interlock is no longer tied to probation.

Section 8 amends AS 28.35.032, felony refusal to consent, by making the same changes that are made in sec. 4, felony drunk driving.

Section 9 repeals AS 12.55.102(e)(2) and AS 28.35.030(r).

LEGISBRIEF

BRIEFING PAPERS ON THE IMPORTANT ISSUES OF THE DAY

JANUARY 2010 VOL. 18, NO. 3

Ignition Interlock Devices: Starting Your Engine Sober

By Anne Teigen

Ignition interlocks can help decrease the number of drunken drivers.

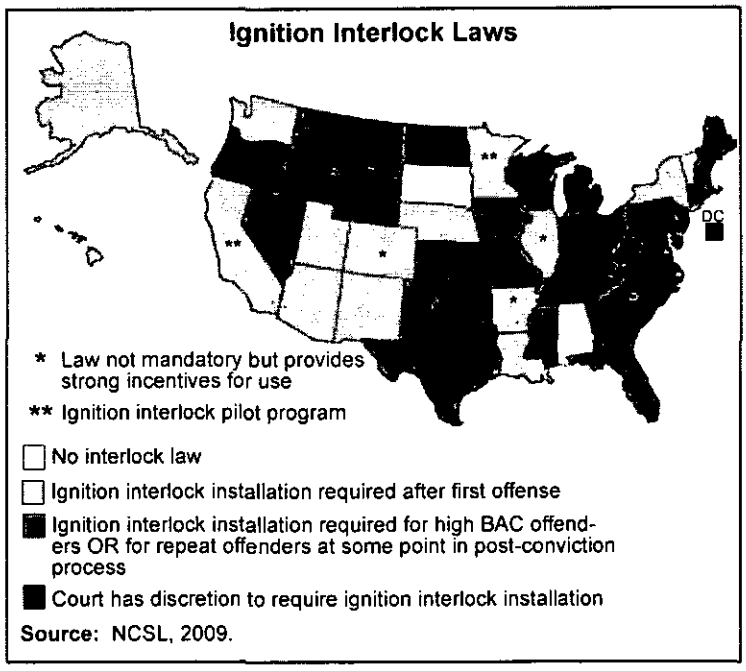
Alcohol-impaired driving fatalities still account for 32 percent of all U.S. traffic deaths. An estimated 11,700 people were killed in alcohol-impaired crashes in 2008, an approximate average of one fatality every 45 minutes. Impaired driving remains a significant public safety issue, and legislators are considering such tools as ignition interlock technology to decrease the number of drunken drivers.

Devices are more accurate and less susceptible to tampering.

Ignition interlock devices are installed in motor vehicles to prevent them from being started if alcohol is detected on the driver's breath. Most devices require periodic retesting while the car is running to ensure that the driver is not drinking once the car is started. Technological advances have made ignition interlock devices smaller, more accurate and less susceptible to tampering. Many courts include the use of devices when sentencing DUI offenders. During sentencing, an offender whose driver's license has been suspended or revoked may be granted limited driving privileges if an ignition interlock device is installed. About 146,000 ignition interlock devices currently are in use in the United States.

State ignition interlock laws vary.

State Action State ignition interlock laws vary greatly. Currently, 47 states and the District of Columbia have some type of law. Twenty-five states require installation of an interlock device after some repeat offenders or high BAC offenders are convicted. In some states, the license revocation period may be shortened if an interlock device is installed. Eight states and the District of Columbia allow judicial discretion in sentencing offenders. Alabama, South Dakota and Vermont have no ignition interlock law.



In 2005, New Mexico became the first state to require ignition interlock devices for all convicted drunken drivers, including first-time offenders. As of December 2009, Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Louisiana, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, Utah and Washington had passed legislation to require ignition interlock devices for all convicted drunken driving offenders. New York's law takes effect in August 2010, and Hawaii's law is effective in January 2011.

New laws in nine states require devices for all DUI offenders.

Three states address interlocks for first-time offenders with certain qualifications. Colorado's ignition interlock law is not mandatory for first-time offenders. The law provides strong incentives to use ignition interlocks by allowing first-time offenders' license suspension to be reduced from nine months to one month if an interlock is installed. Illinois requires first-time offenders to have interlocks installed unless an offender chooses in writing not to do so. Arkansas allows discretion to issue an ignition interlock license to a first-time offender.

In 2009, two states authorized ignition interlock pilot programs.

In 2009, 32 states considered some sort of ignition interlock legislation, and two passed pilot programs. Minnesota's program—available to all DUI offenders—is administered by the Minnesota Department of Public Safety, Driver and Vehicle Services. The program allows first-time and repeat DUI offenders to regain driving privileges if they participate in the pilot program. First-time offenders must use an ignition interlock device for one year, after a 15-day license suspension. Second- or third-time offenders must use the device for a year and six months after a 30-day license suspension. The pilot project began July 1, 2009, and will end June 30, 2011. The commissioner must submit a final report to the Legislature by Sept. 30, 2011, evaluating the pilot project, including information on participation rates, and recommending whether to continue an ignition interlock program. California's pilot program requires interlocks for all DUI offenders in four counties. The DMV must report to the Legislature on the pilot program's effectiveness in reducing the number of first-time DUI violations and repeat offenses.

Virginia modified its ignition interlock law in 2009, making it a Class 1 misdemeanor for anyone required to have an interlock installed to operate a vehicle without the device. Convicted drivers also are subject to license revocation. Many other states are revising their laws to provide penalties for offenders who violate ignition interlock laws.

Effects of state laws. Research shows that installation of these devices reduces recidivism by between 50 percent and 90 percent. A Maryland study of repeat offenders showed that interlock program participation reduced the risk of committing an alcohol traffic violation within the first year by 65 percent. A 2002 Illinois study found offenders who used ignition interlock devices were 20 percent less likely to be re-arrested for a DUI during the first year, compared to offenders who did not install the device. The installation rate of ignition interlocks is key in determining a law's effectiveness. Approximately 1.4 million drunken driving offenders are arrested and convicted each year, yet only 10 percent of convicted DWI drivers ordered to install an interlock device on their vehicle have done so.

Federal Action In preparing to reauthorize the surface transportation program (SAFETEA-LU), Congress is considering provisions that would require states to enact and enforce ignition interlock laws. In the provisions under debate, states would have to enact mandatory ignition interlock laws for all those convicted of driving while intoxicated and require the device to be installed for at least six months for the first offense. States would lose a percentage of highway maintenance funds for failing to pass such laws. The bill was introduced in December 2009.

Dear Senator Meyer:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing Senate Bill 239, an act relating to ignition interlock devices, to refusal to submit to a chemical test, and to driving while under the influence.

The APOA State Board of Directors recently reviewed this proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

We thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

John Lucking, Jr.
State President

Thanks all!

This is a fantastic analysis. I have spoken with Christine in Senator Meyer's office about your concerns and she very much appreciates your approach to resolving them. It is her feeling that the bill may be facing some hurdles in the Senate and to achieve expedited passage she'd prefer to see amendments go in on the House side. For your information, the bill has been referred to Senate Finance; however, it has yet to be scheduled (that's not unusual as the committee is still working on the capital budget and other issues that have been identified as "key"). Upon passage through Finance, it will go to the Senate Floor and then onto the House. I believe we have any ally with Rep. Mike Hawker as he was working on a similar bill earlier in the session.

I'll continue to monitor progress and will notify you as it occurs. Again, I appreciate the team effort.

Stacy - here are the comments on the CS for SB 239 (version P). Big thanks to Seneca and Jennifer in Prosecution for looking this over and providing the comments on short notice, with a few minor edits of my own. These comments, in order to get them to Juneau ASAP, are not known to or endorsed\opposed by the Mayor. We are generally supportive of the fixes as they relate to mandatory requirements for use of IID, but note the following for consideration.

Issue:

The bill ties the IID to regaining the privilege to drive. This is problematic because doing so creates an incentive for people to NOT get their license and it also basically allows them to drive without an IID without incurring any greater penalty than a regular Driving While License Revoked (DWLR) person.

Suggestions: either change the IID language or change the DWLR statute

1) Not just tying the IID to when they 'regain the privilege to drive' but requiring it whenever they drive, or a hybrid of both

WHY: A lot of DUI offenders won't ever regain their privilege to drive (either because they don't comply with ASAP or because they don't get the IID) and then when they drive (without the IID) they are simply DWLR without committing any greater crime for not having the IID. They are simply DWLR in the same way the guy who didn't pay child support is (although child support guy is less of a public safety concern)

The way this draft is written and under the current penalty scheme a person who gets their IID and gets their OL (after their 90 day revocation) and gets caught driving their friend's car without an IID would have a mandatory 30 days of jail and $1000 fine and 80 hours of community work service, but the guy who never bothered to the get the IID and never bothered to get the OL gets caught driving without an IID and he only gets mandatory 80 hours work service. This doesn't make sense, is inequitable and actually provides an incentive NOT to get the IID or your OL.

If you simply require it whenever they drive up until they get their OL back and then for an additional 6-12 months after reinstating their OL. (Dennis's comment: this latter part - 6-12 months- may be cost prohibitive for many offenders) It would be a step toward achieving the goal. However, if we leave this draft as is, then we suggest changing the penalty scheme for DWLR:

OR

2) Change the DWLR statute

In order for the IID measure to be effective and have the teeth it needs to accomplish the goal, it must work in conjunction with other laws and penalty schemes, like the DWLR.

As we understand it there are currently two subsections (but numerous different ways) to be DWLR:

. A) Driving when your OL is suspended, revoked or cancelled This encompasses three basic scenarios:

a. driving during an active court-ordered (DUI, Reckless etc) revocation
b. driving during an administrative revocation
c. driving after a period of revocation but the person never got their OL reinstated

B) Driving in violation of a limitation. This encompasses two main scenarios

a. Getting your OL back during the 90 period, but for work purposes only, and driving for a purpose other than work
b. Getting your OL back, having the IID requirement, and driving a vehicle that does not have an IID.

The penalties vary depending on why your OL was revoked, when you were driving and whether there was a limitation. The main difference is that in 1 the person does not have a valid OL, they never bothered, or they aren't eligible. In 2 they got it, they jumped through hall the hoops but drive a vehicle without the IID, or outside work purposes etc. but we slap their hands much harder than the people who just thumbed their noses at the system. This should be fixed in order to make the IID scheme work.

3) Also, current law does not have an exception from the interlock device for

.000 DUIs (no alcohol). Is there a policy objective met in requiring an IID on someone who hasn't exhibited an alcohol problem in connection with their driving? Perhaps they were using prescription drugs or illegal drugs, in which cases the IID serves no purpose.

SPONSOR STATEMENT

SB 244 – GOVERNOR'S DUTY STATION

SB 244 will clarify state law regarding the governor's duty station and travel allowance. Currently in statute, there are no provisions that require the governor to reside in the capital city and occupy the governor's mansion during his or her term of office. The bill specifies that the governor's duty station, defined as the location where the governor spends the major portion of time assigned to fulfill the duties of office, is considered to be Juneau.

The proposed law does not prohibit the governor from maintaining a personal residence in another part of the state, but if he chooses to reside there and not in the governor's mansion, he will not be entitled to a travel allowance when away from the capital.

SB 244 establishing Juneau as the governor's duty station, and prohibiting the payment of a lodging allowance when a governor stays in their personal residence at another location, has no fiscal impact on the Office of the Governor. Travel allowances paid to a governor are based on allowable payments set out in the Administration Manual. The Administration Manual provides for payment of "actual lodging expenses", and a miscellaneous meal and expense allowance. As there are no lodging costs when staying in a personal residence, there is no lodging allowance paid.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

SB 244

"An Act providing that, during the governor's term of office, the duty station of the governor is Juneau, and prohibiting payment of certain travel allowances for use of the governor's personal residence."

Sec. 1 Amends AS 39.20.060 by removing the exemption in state law enjoyed by the governor and lt. governor with respect to the calculation and payment of travel allowances.

Sec. 2 Adds a new subsection to AS 39.20.060 declaring Juneau to be the governor's designated duty station and makes conforming amendments to the calculation and payment of travel allowances that apply to the governor.

Sec. 3 Satisfies AS 39.20.070 which requires modifications to AS 39.20.050 or AS 39.20.060 be done so expressly.

AAM 60.010 Introduction to Travel (07-05)

The travel policies of the State of Alaska are adopted by the Commissioner of the Department of Administration in accordance with AS 39.20.160. State agencies and travelers are required to comply with these policies whenever traveling on state business. Department heads may approve policy exceptions on a trip-by-trip basis for subordinate personnel within their departments based on documented circumstances or unique business requirements. Policy exceptions for department heads must be approved by the Commissioner of the Department of Administration.

The purpose of the travel policies is to provide approval to travel on state business, and to provide reimbursement for actual and necessary expenses incurred by travelers while traveling on state business. The policies apply uniformly to all travelers unless otherwise provided for by a collective bargaining agreement. When there is a conflict between these policies and a collective bargaining agreement, the relevant provisions of the collective bargaining agreement supersede.

The travel policies of the state are generally intended to be in compliance with current IRS regulations as an accountable plan. See AAM 320 for tax implications related to state travel reimbursement policies.

AAM 60.020 Travel Definitions (01-10)

Commercial Lodging Facility

A commercial lodging facility is a licensed entity that is in the business of selling lodging to the general public and includes hotels, inns, motels, apartments, and campgrounds.

Department Travel Administrator

Travel administrators are department personnel responsible for maintaining the travel profiles for their department. They may or may not also be the department's travel coordinator.

Department Travel Coordinator

Employee designated within a department to oversee the travel function. Department travel coordinators assist and train travel planners, monitor travel operations, and make recommendations on statewide travel policy.

Duty Station

The duty station of a traveler includes the city, town, or village within 50 miles of where the traveler spends the major portion of their working time, or the place to which the traveler returns to duty on completion of special assignments. On a case-by-case basis, commissioners may identify a radius or commuting area that is broader than 50 miles within which per diem will not be allowed for travel within one calendar day.

Emergency

An emergency is defined as an unforeseen set of circumstances that calls for immediate action. Emergencies include those that are the result of business-related occurrences, as well as personal situations. Personal emergencies generally do not affect travel status, except in the following cases:

- Traveler suffers a serious health condition (as defined by AS 39.20.550(5) while in travel status
- Death of an immediate family member [as defined by 2 AAC 08.999 (c)] occurs while traveler is in travel status
- Other situations deemed by department management as severe enough to affect travel status

E-Travel

Managed travel program for the State of Alaska Executive Branch.

E-Travel Management Team (ETMT)

The ETMT is comprised of the State Travel Manager and Assistant, as well as others from the Division of Finance that support this program.

E-Travel Office

The E-Travel Office is a section within the Division of Finance that manages the travel function for the Executive Branch. Staffed by the State Travel Manager and Assistant, this office serves as the liaison between state agencies and the contracted travel agency.

E-Travel Online

The online booking tool for travel arrangements, provided by the contracted travel agency and powered by RESX.

Lodging Allowance

Lodging allowance is the portion of per diem that covers lodging, generally the actual cost of the traveler's hotel room unless otherwise stated in individual bargaining unit agreements.

M&IE

Meals and incidental expense allowance. The portion of per diem that reimburses travelers for the cost of meals and incidental expenses including discretionary tips, laundry expenses, and other personal costs of travel.

Note: Any incidental expenses charged to a State credit card will be deducted from M&IE paid to the traveler.

MCAAK Credits

Cash equivalent credit received for purchases of MCAAK airfares from the contract travel agency. These credits are no longer accrued, but remaining balances may be used as a form of payment for airfare.

Non-Commercial Lodging Facility

A non-commercial lodging facility may include, but is not limited to, a public facility in a rural setting such as a community building or school, motor home, or private home.

Per Diem

Per diem allowance is a daily payment instead of reimbursement for actual expenses for lodging, meals, and incidental expenses. It is separate from transportation expenses and other miscellaneous expenses.

Residence

The residence of a traveler is the location, or within 50 miles thereof, where the traveler maintains the primary dwelling.

If a traveler maintains multiple residences, the commissioner of the department shall designate the residence that bears the most logical relationship to the traveler's duty station as the traveler's primary residence. Factors to be considered in determining the primary residence include: the time ordinarily spent performing duties at each location; the degree of business activity at each location; the relative amount of state wages earned at each location. Agencies may also contact the Division of Finance for assistance.

Tourist Class

The least costly class of accommodations on a regularly scheduled airplane, ship, or train.

Travel Planners

Individuals within each department that support travelers by making travel arrangements, explaining policies, ensuring travel is approved prior to purchase, and ensuring reimbursement occurs timely after travel is complete.

Traveler

Throughout these policies, traveler usually means a state official or a person employed by a state agency. At times, an agency may require board or commission members, volunteers, wards of the state, or other nonemployees to travel on state business. The agency must generally apply the same travel policies for nonemployees, except when travel reimbursement terms under a professional service contract differ as discussed in AAM 60.200.

Travel Expenses

- Transportation expenses consist of commercial carrier fares, vehicle mileage allowances, taxi fares, bus fares, and other essential transportation expenses while on official state business.
- The per diem consists of two parts, meals and incidental expenses, and lodging.
- Other expenses consist of charges for business telephone calls, internet, parking fees, emergency purchases of supplies, and other charges necessary to conduct official business.

Travel Status

Travelers shall be considered in travel status from the time an authorized trip begins until it ends. An "authorized trip" is a trip approved in accordance with administrative manual guidelines and where a traveler travels outside the boundaries of the duty station. An authorized trip begins when a traveler is leaving the duty station and:

- A traveler leaves the normal work location during normal work hours; or
- A traveler leaves the residence outside normal work hours.

An authorized trip ends when:

- A traveler returns to the normal work location during normal work hours; or

- A traveler returns to the residence if the trip ends outside normal work hours; or
- A traveler accepts voluntary denied boarding compensation. Refer to AAM 60.080 Interruption or Deviation of Travel for Traveler Convenience.

Refer to:

http://dop.state.ak.us/docpool/pdf/sop/Ch08TravelasTimeWorked/traveltimeworkSOPrev1.pdf for policies on compensation for travel as time worked.

Travel status is either short-term or long-term and per diem allowances vary according to status. The determination of short-term or long-term is based upon the duration and type of lodging facility provided to the employee. See AAM 60.240 for further guidance. A brief return of the employee to their duty station for business or personal convenience does not disrupt the long-term status of the trip.

A traveler is not in travel status for local travel or day trips. The following are some examples of travelers who would not be considered in travel status under the local travel or day trip provision:

- A state trooper while on patrol in his/her assigned territory.
- A safety inspector whose normal duties include driving from his/her normal duty station to a construction site for purposes of conducting an inspection.
- A health inspector whose normal duties include driving from his/her normal duty station to various communities to inspect facilities.

A mileage reimbursement form may be used to reimburse transportation costs when the criteria for travel status are not met.

AAM 60.030 E-Travel (01-10)

The Department of Administration has established E-Travel as the managed travel program serving the State of Alaska Executive Branch, including employees, members of boards and commissions, inmates, witnesses, and other individuals that travel on official State business.

E-Travel is comprised of:

- Travel policies contained in AAM 60
- E-Travel Online, which is the online booking tool RESX configured for State of Alaska travel policies
- Travel management contractor

- Other contracts with vendors in the travel industry including airlines, hotels, and rental car agencies
- E-Travel Management Team (ETMT)
- Travel coordinators, travel administrators, and travel planners within each department
- Employees and others traveling on official State business

Travel Management Contract

The State's travel management contract contains performance measures that affect the fees charged by the contractor. Measurements are performed quarterly and the fees are adjusted +/- 20% from a base amount.

Service standards for performance under the contract are available on the Division of Finance travel web site.

All contracted travel personnel are required to sign and adhere to a confidentiality agreement. The confidentiality agreement prohibits contracted personnel from discussing state travel arrangements with anyone that does not have a valid State of Alaska-related business need to know. The agreement includes a liquidated damage clause for breach of confidentiality.

Traveler Profile

An electronic traveler profile is required for booking travel. The state information in these profiles is maintained by department travel administrators. Optional information such as mileage number or seat preference may be entered by the traveler. Traveler profile instructions are available on the Division of Finance travel web site.

Department Travel Policies

Within the confines of this section, agencies may establish more specific travel policies.

Travel Purchase Process

Travel may be purchased using the E-Travel Online booking tool or by calling the contracted travel agency.

Travel planners should confirm the details of the itinerary before purchasing. After purchase, the agency is responsible for the carrier's change fee and any additional service fees to cancel and reissue the ticket. The traveler is personally responsible for the change fee when the change is for personal convenience.

Travel purchases must include the name of the approving official authorizing the purchase.

Fare Increases

Fares may increase before purchase. The state agency pays the increased fare unless it is due to a contractor delay, in which case the contractor will absorb the fare increase.

24-Hour Hold

A reservation should only be placed on a 24-hour hold when it is certain it will be purchased within that time frame. If the held reservations can not be purchased within 24 hours, the reservation must be cancelled.

Multiple or duplicate 24-hour held reservations are not allowed and run the risk of the ticketed reservation being cancelled by the airlines as a duplicate or debit memos from the airlines that are the responsibility of the state agency.

Refunds

Departments may request a refund for a refundable ticket at any time by replying to the final itinerary asking the contractor to refund the ticket. Any unused refundable ticket will be refunded 60 days after the return date on the ticket by the contractor and the state agency will be notified.

AAM 60.040 Travel Approvals (10-09)

All travel shall be approved in advance. The request for approval shall be in writing and must document essentials of the travel including purpose, destination, dates and times, a total not-to-exceed amount, any related leave requests, and whether an advance is authorized. The approval required depends on the location of the travel:

Travel within Alaska

Prior approval is required within the department and shall at a minimum have the approval of the traveler's immediate supervisor or designee.

Travel to the Contiguous United States, Hawaii, British Columbia, and Yukon Territory

Prior approval is required by the department and by the department's commissioner or designee.

Travel Outside the United States

Prior approval is required by the department, the department's commissioner and the Governor's Office.

Travel Completion Approvals

Following completion of travel, all travel related expenses and any deviation from the originally approved travel arrangements must be documented in the travel authorization. If the total cost of travel exceeds the amount approved in advance by more than 10%, the same level of approval must re-approve the travel, before the traveler reimbursement is approved by the appropriate agency authority.

General Travel Approval Policies

- All state travel shall be work-related and essential for state business.
- Agencies may document pre-approval for certain types of travel that does not fit the specific trip-by-trip approval process.
- Personal travel plans of the traveler shall not influence the approval of state-funded travel. Refer to AAM 60.080 Interruption or Deviation of Travel for Traveler Convenience.
- Travel status should be confined to the minimum amount of time required to conduct the business of the state. As a general rule, a traveler may travel the day prior if the only available flights depart prior to 7:00 a.m. and a traveler may stay an extra night if the only available flights make scheduled home arrival occur after 10:00 p.m. Supervisors may approve exceptions to these travel times when circumstances justify.
- When the required travel period exceeds 15 consecutive days, division directors may authorize employees to return home on days off at state expense. Such trips shall not curtail productive work time, and shall be limited to no more than one per month. Authorized costs for such trips are limited to the amount of avoided per diem.
- Whenever a traveler and the state opt to share the cost of business travel, the agreement will be documented in advance, including the duration of state business within the travel period. For bargaining unit members, such agreements require the concurrence of the union and must be authorized by the Division of Labor Relations.

AAM 60.050 Travel Purchase Policies (01-10)

Alaska Statute 39.20.140(b) requires that the state pay no more than "the lowest tourist class fare for the most direct route" unless specific exemptions are met:

- tourist class accommodation is not available;
- waiting for tourist class accommodation would cause a delay harmful to the state; or
- the Department of Administration finds that travel by tourist class accommodation is not in the best interest of the state, and authorizes other accommodation.

First or business class is allowed if it is offered to the traveler on a complimentary basis because of frequent flyer status and upgraded by the airline involved.

The statutes require purchasing the best fare for the most direct route that meets the state's business needs. This requirement also applies to contractors traveling on behalf of the state, regardless of whether the state is paying the travel expenses directly or reimbursing the contractor. The best fare does not require the purchase of nonrefundable tickets; agencies should make this business decision based on the nature of the travel.

Travelers and approvers are required to document reasons for declining savings where the lowest available airfare is not purchased. Variances from State of Alaska travel policy may be reported to the departments for analysis.

Electronic ticketing is the method preferred by the state. Paper tickets will be issued only when necessary.

Travel planners must confirm the name on the traveler's government-issued ID card before an airline ticket is issued using a generic profile. The airline ticket must be issued in the name on the driver's license or government-issued ID card.

Alaska Airlines EasyBiz miles will be tracked by the travel management contractor for each agency. State agencies will direct the contractor on use of EasyBiz miles that will ensure maximum value upon redemption.

All air and ferry travel must be ticketed using E-Travel except as noted in the service standards.

Travelers are generally required to use State of Alaska contracted / preferred travel providers. The Department of Administration, Division of General Services has negotiated travel contracts as listed in the Contract Award Manual. Use of these providers ensures travelers receive the best fares, rates, and insurance coverage. Exceptions to required use of contracted / preferred providers are limited to:

- Contracted / preferred provider is not available.
- Contracted / preferred provider does not meet a specific business need (requires pre-trip department approval).
- Space or scheduled flights are not available from the contracted / preferred provider to accomplish the purpose of the travel.
- Use of the available contract / preferred provider service would require the traveler to incur unnecessary costs which would increase the total cost of the trip.
- A traveler is inconvenienced more than three hours by using the contracted / preferred airline provider.

State contract airfares are not available for travel by consultants and contractors, even if their travel is reimbursed by the state.

If an airline lowers a fare and a state-purchased ticket is reissued to a lower fare, the difference in fare belongs to the state. Airlines sometimes issue a nonrefundable electronic discount code credit (e-certificate) in lieu of refunding the form of payment used to purchase the original ticket. This e-certificate belongs to the state. State travelers are not allowed to use these e-certificates for personal travel, even if deposited in their personal account by the airline. The e-certificate number must be given to the traveler's department to be used for future state travel.

Excess costs, circuitous routes, delays, or luxury accommodations unnecessary or unjustified in the performance of official state business travel are not acceptable. The traveler will not be reimbursed for any additional costs that result from unauthorized travel arrangements.

AAM 60.060 Payment Methods for Transportation and Expenses (01-10)

The State of Alaska uses two primary methods to purchase transportation for individuals traveling on official state business:

1. One Card Alaska Corporate Credit Card (Card) – Agencies shall issue corporate credit cards to employees who travel. Employees with Cards are required to use them for purchases when the state pays actual costs, as in the case of transportation and actual lodging expenses. These purchases are expenditures from the state to vendors and are generally tax-exempt under local Alaska tax ordinances when purchased with the Card or other means of direct payment by the state.

2. Central Travel System (CTS) Accounts - The State of Alaska has established CTSs, which are used to purchase airfares and pay for rental cars for travelers without Cards. CTSs are ghost accounts for which plastic cards are not issued.

There may be occasions when neither the Card nor the CTS can be used to purchase transportation. In these cases, it should be purchased using EDI or a state warrant.

Additional charges, such as taxes, resulting from purchasing with the traveler's personal resources are the responsibility of the traveler unless none of these payment methods were available to the traveler.

Mileage and MCAAK Credit

Agencies no longer accrue mileage or MCAAK credits for airfare purchases. Agencies accrued MCAAK credits from the contracted travel agency when purchasing MCAAK fares, for which no mileage was available from the airline. Accumulated mileage and MCAAK credits are tracked for the purchasing department, and may be used in lieu of money to purchase airfare.

Mileage may be used to reduce travel costs with Alaska Airlines. Miles are worth slightly less than $0.02 each, which should be a standard for deciding whether to use miles to purchase tickets. For example, 25,000 miles should be considered when the value of the ticket purchased is at least $500.

MCAAK credits can be used to pay for any airline tickets purchased using E-Travel.

Both mileage and MCAAK credits remain available to the purchasing agency for one year after they are earned. At that point, they revert to a statewide pool for use by agencies that have used their mileage and MCAAK credits.

Alaska Marine Highway

Transportation on state ferries may be authorized when in the best interest of the state. All ferry transportation will be paid by the employee using their Card, or by the department through use of the CTS or an interdepartmental billing. Staterooms may be paid in advance utilizing the Card only if the appropriate authorization has been obtained in advance. Meals are to be paid directly by the traveler. The traveler may be eligible for reimbursement of lodging expenses and/or M&IE in accordance with AAM 60.240 and AAM 60.250.

Lodging

Hotel charges paid directly by the state are generally exempt from local taxes within Alaska. Frequent travelers should use their Card to pay for lodging. When the Card is not available, departments may choose to use direct billing as the method of payment. When taxes are charged on direct payments, state agencies should contact the vendor for refunds as appropriate and reflect this action on the travel authorization.

This policy does not apply to lodging purchased by employees who are reimbursed a per diem allowance for lodging per the terms of their labor contract. This lodging is a purchase of the employee, not a direct state purchase, and is therefore subject to hotel and sales tax under local ordinances.

Meals and Incidental Expenses

For meals and other out-of-pocket expenses, the traveler receives a meals and incidental expense allowance as described in AAM 60.250. These actual costs are purchases of the traveler, and are therefore taxable transactions under local tax ordinances. The Card should not be used for such purchases to avoid improper tax exemption. Personal expenses for meals, phone calls, and entertainment should not be commingled with purchases for lodging expenses on the state Card.

AAM 60.070 Travel Advances (10-09)

An advance of the estimated per diem allowance may be made to a traveler before the traveler enters travel status. Departments may choose to pay travel advances using EDI, or through use of the Card at an ATM.

All travel advances require employee notification that any monies owed the State of Alaska by the traveler may be deducted from the employee's paycheck. The Travel Advance Authorization form, available on the Division of Finance web site, needs to be signed only once by a traveler for recovering all subsequent advances through payroll deductions. These forms should be kept on file by travel planners.

A traveler shall not receive an additional travel advance until the previous travel advance and trip has been reconciled and closed out.

Agencies may make exceptions to policies in this section when circumstances justify.

AAM 60.080 Interruption or Deviation of Travel for Traveler Convenience (01-10)

Any interruption or deviation from the most direct and efficient means of travel for traveler convenience requires prior approval at the agency level by the appropriate supervisor or designee. Any additional time or expense resulting from an interruption or deviation for traveler convenience shall be borne solely by the traveler. See AAM 60.140 for clarification on travel involving privately owned vehicles.

When a traveler interrupts business travel for personal reasons, the following apply:

1. Per diem, travel allowances, and reimbursements may not exceed such charges as would have been incurred if traveling by the most direct and efficient means.

2. Per diem, travel allowances, and reimbursements stop the hour a traveler interrupts business travel for personal reasons and resumes the hour the traveler returns to duty or resumes route of travel required by state business. For example, a traveler (Anchorage duty station) is traveling on state business (in Seattle) and the business is concluded at noon on Wednesday. For personal reasons the traveler will not return to the duty station until the following Monday. In this example, the traveler's entitlement to per diem, mileage, and other travel expenses reimbursements end at noon on Wednesday and would start two hours before flight time from Seattle to return to the duty station, subject to the limitations in 1 above.

3. Any additional time away from the traveler's duty station that may be required for such indirect travel will be charged to annual leave, personal leave, or leave without pay. In the example 2 above, the employee's leave status would begin at noon when business travel was interrupted for personal reasons. Leave in conjunction with business travel must be documented in prior approval and copies of leave slips shall be submitted upon completion of the trip.

4. Per diem is allowed when a traveler is granted leave due to illness. However, the per diem allowance shall not be authorized for a period of illness exceeding three calendar days in any one period of absence. Per diem is not authorized if the traveler is hospitalized or otherwise has no actual and necessary business expenses requiring reimbursement.

5. Rental cars obtained for official state business must be returned.

6. State exemption for hotel taxes does not extend to lodging.

7. Personal travel segments cannot be purchased at state contracted rates.

8. A traveler on official state business requesting approved personal air travel deviation for an alternate routing, personal discount coupons to purchase companion travel, or travel that increases airfare, will make their own travel arrangements. These arrangements will be purchased by the traveler using a personal form of payment instead of a state form of payment. A state-authorized fare quote must be obtained for a price comparison to determine traveler reimbursement. Once travel is completed the traveler must present a copy of the ticket receipt or itinerary showing payment and the state-authorized fare quote to obtain reimbursement. The fare quote may be obtained and saved in E-Travel Online with the research option (no fee), or by calling the contracted travel agency (fee applies). After travel is complete, the state will reimburse the lesser amount of either the ticket or the state-authorized fare quote obtained prior to travel. If the only deviation is an extension of dates on either end of the state-authorized dates, departments may opt to pay for the combined airfare when purchased if the personal portion can be recovered from the traveler's reimbursement after travel is complete.

9. Agencies must ensure that employees combining business and personal travel are well-informed and cautioned that airfares may result in a liability to the employee, should the reason for the business travel be cancelled. Employees leaving on vacation in conjunction with the business event will become responsible for all costs should the business event be cancelled. Employees opting not to travel if the business event is cancelled will be responsible for the cost of travel that the state cannot recover that was attributable to the personal portion of the airfare. The employee may be reimbursed, at the department's option, for the business portion of unused tickets. The business portion of unused tickets paid to employees must be monitored by the department as state assets until they are used or expire. Employees leaving the department prior to the expiration of such a ticket are required to return the state payment for any business portion that is still available for use by the employee.

10. Voluntary denied boarding compensation where the traveler voluntarily vacates his/her seat and takes a later flight may be retained by a traveler (viewed as an insignificant personal travel credit under ethics rules). A traveler cannot volunteer for denied boarding on an outbound flight unless the traveler has previously approved personal travel for the beginning of the travel period. Nor may a traveler volunteer for denied boarding if it may cause a delay in return to work. By accepting a voluntary bump on the return portion, the traveler puts himself on personal travel rather than state business. Travel status ends, no further per diem is allowed, and all state insurance coverage ceases for the duration of the trip. The traveler is responsible for any additional travel expenses caused by the voluntary action.

AAM 60.090 Unused Transportation and Accommodations (01-10)

When travelers' plans change, travelers shall release air, car, and hotel reservations within the required time limits. Travelers may contact vendors directly or contact the travel management contractor to cancel reservations. The state shall not reimburse travelers for charges incurred as a result of failure to release reservations.

Travelers shall submit any unused portion of air or ferry tickets with the travel authorization to their travel planner. Travel planners may forward unused tickets to the travel management contractor to process refunds or the department may retain them for reissuing later.

AAM 60.100 Airline Delays, Rescheduling, and Overheading (01-07)

When an airline assumes the cost of a traveler's lodging and/or meals due to airline delays or overheading, the traveler shall be paid a per diem allowance up to the originally scheduled arrival time. When the airline does not assume the cost of a traveler's lodging and/or meals, the traveler shall be paid the per diem allowance that applies for the actual trip.

Involuntary denied boarding compensation is payable to the state, not to the individual employee. If a traveler is performing official travel and a carrier denies a confirmed reserved seat on a plane, the traveler must submit to the department any payment received for liquidated damages. The traveler must ensure the carrier shows the "State of Alaska" as payee on the compensation. Any such compensation must be submitted with the travel authorization.

AAM 60.110 Excess Baggage (04-05)

The state will only pay for excess personal and state baggage necessary to carry out official state business. Such baggage shall be transported by the most economical method (checked as excess baggage, shipped via airfreight, etc.).

AAM 60.120 Rental Cars (01-10)

When necessary, the rental of a car may be authorized for travelers in travel status. The estimated cost for the rental car must be included in the prior approval process required under AAM 60.040 Travel Approvals. The cost and intended use of the car must be considered in determining the size and type of car to rent. The State of Alaska supports a mid-size or less car rental. Rental of a car larger than mid-size may be allowed when several travelers are traveling together or circumstances require the use of a larger car. Such situations must also be documented on the completed travel authorization.

- All car rentals must be reserved using E-Travel.
- Travelers cannot upgrade their rental cars at the airport.
- Travelers are responsible for refueling rental cars prior to returning them to the rental car companies. If the rental car company refuels the vehicle, a justifiable business purpose must be provided for incurring the additional cost.

All insurance offered by car rental companies must be declined by state travelers. By most state laws, auto liability insurance (covering third party damage or injury claims) is provided by the car-rental company as owner of the vehicle. Excess auto liability coverage is provided through Risk Management for authorized business travel.

Collision or Physical Damage Waiver for any damage to the rental car (collision, comprehensive coverage, and related loss of use claims) is often offered by the car-rental company at the counter at the time of hire and should be refused by the State of Alaska employee on business travel status. Risk Management will respond and resolve any physical damage claims to rental cars while used on state business related travel.

Rental cars may be driven on state business only, and Risk Management self-insurance coverage applies only where the car is used on state business. State business includes usual travel related activity (restaurants, hotels, etc.), but does not extend to any personal deviations for individual traveler convenience. Refer to AAM 60.080 Interruption or Deviation of Travel for Traveler Convenience.

If there is damage to any rental car:

- Travelers are cautioned to never accept responsibility or admit liability.
- If the lessor requests information or payment, advise the lessor to contact the Department of Administration, Division of Risk Management.
- If there is personal injury or an accident, telephone the Division of Risk Management as soon as possible.

See AAM 60.350 for use of rental cars connected with an employee move.

AAM 60.130 Airport Shuttle, Courtesy Van, and Taxi Service (01-07)

When a traveler in travel status requires transportation either to or from an airport or ferry terminal, an airport shuttle, courtesy van, taxi or limousine service is allowed. When departing on state travel, if a traveler uses a privately owned vehicle for transportation to or from an airport or ferry terminal, the amount of reimbursement for mileage, parking, and other costs is limited to the equivalent cost of a taxi.

AAM 60.140 Privately Owned Vehicles (04-09)

A traveler may use a privately owned vehicle, such as auto, snowmobile, motorcycle, or boat when it is in the best interest of the state. The approving official shall be responsible for substantiating that use of a privately owned vehicle is in the state's best interest. The traveler shall receive a mileage reimbursement equal to the established rates published on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/resource/POV_Rate_Table.pdf.

When a traveler uses a privately owned vehicle, the amount of reimbursement shall be limited to what the lowest available commercial alternative would have cost. Per diem, actual hotel expenses and meal allowances, or other travel reimbursements shall not exceed the amounts that would have been incurred had the traveler used common carrier transportation. Only mileage incurred while engaged in official state business is reimbursable.

Mileage incurred for commuting between an employee's residence and normal work location is not reimbursable. Mileage incurred for commuting to/from a temporary worksite is reimbursable to the extent that it exceeds the distance from the employee's residence to the normal work location.

Any additional regularly scheduled work time away from the duty station required as a result of using a privately owned vehicle for personal convenience will be charged to annual leave, personal leave, or leave without pay.

When two or more state travelers are traveling in the same direction, and it is possible to share a privately owned vehicle or airplane, the state will reimburse the total mileage only once (AS 39.20.130).

AAM 60.150 Privately Owned Aircraft (10-07)

When a state employee, who is a qualified pilot, rents an aircraft or uses a privately owned aircraft for state business, the following items must be filed with the Department of Administration or the agency administrative officer before using the aircraft:

- A copy of a valid pilot's license.
- A copy of current medical certification.

- Proof of aircraft liability insurance with limits not less than $1,000,000 combined single limit for bodily injury and property damage per occurrence/annual aggregate.

It is the responsibility of each agency to ensure these documents are on file before authorizing, or reimbursing a traveler for the use of a privately owned aircraft. No passengers are permitted to accompany a pilot except other state employees who are also traveling on state business to the same destination.

For state travelers who do not have the required $1,000,000 aircraft liability insurance coverage, the Division of Risk Management has an insurance policy to provide the required coverage for travelers who meet certain minimum pilot qualifications. This coverage is a separate aircraft liability policy for $1,000,000 combined single limit liability, for bodily injury and property and may be purchased on a per-flight basis with individual coupons. In the event the aircraft owner has liability insurance, the state policy applies as excess insurance over any other valid and collectible policies.

To obtain individual trip coupons for this per-flight, aircraft liability insurance, contact Risk Management at:

Division of Risk Management
Department of Administration
P.O. Box 110218
Juneau, AK 99811-0218
Phone (907) 465-2180
Fax (907) 465-3690

The cost is $30 per aircraft per round trip flight. The first order for coupons must be accompanied by a copy of the Pilot Qualification Certification (note minimum flight hour requirements on this form), a copy of the pilot's license, and current medical certification. The coupons may be purchased by the traveler pilot or through a request to transfer the funds via an interdepartmental billing (Journal Entry).

The original completed coupon shall be attached to the travel authorization. A copy of the coupon must be returned to Risk Management to comply with insurance policy requirements.

The reimbursement rate for privately owned aircraft is the lesser of the state-published rate on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/resource/POV_Rate_Table.pdf or the common carrier rate to the same destination. Bargaining unit agreements may supersede this rate.

AAM 60.160 Charters and Group Transportation (01-10)

When it is necessary to hire a boat, aircraft, or other special conveyance, an explanation stating the facts constituting the necessity must be included with the travel authorization. When two or more travelers travel as a group or with a group, the names and business relationship of each member of the group shall be included with the travel authorization of each traveler.

All charters must be handled in compliance with the policies and provisions of AS 36.30, purchasing regulations 2 AAC 12, and the agency's delegation of purchasing authority. E-Travel may be used for chartering transportation.

AAM 60.170 Alternatives to Travel (04-05)

Agencies are to develop and implement alternatives to travel, as well as less expensive means of travel. These methods should include, but are not limited to:

- Teleconferencing and video conferencing.
- Video recordings and published reports.
- Reduced frequency of regularly scheduled out of town meetings.
- Restrictions on the number of staff traveling to the same destination.
- Coordinating between agencies for joint travel arrangements when more than one agency is involved.

If an agency determines that a seminar, workshop, or training program is essential to staff development for five or more employees, the agency will investigate the option of bringing the trainer on-site instead of authorizing employees to travel to an off-site location. The agency will document the comparative cost of an on-site session and retain such documentation on file with the agency's travel records. The agency must also explore the practicality of fulfilling the desired staff development goals through use of video teleconferencing or web-based conferencing where these options may be more cost-effective.

AAM 60.180 Boards and Commissions (01-07)

Except for those board and commission members specifically covered in statute, each state board and commission member is entitled to the same reimbursement for lodging and M&IE allowances as provided to state officials and employees in this section of the administrative manual.

When the meeting or other business takes place in the vicinity of the member's residences (see definition at AAM 60.020), members are not in travel status and are not entitled to reimbursement or a per diem for lodging. However, the commissioner of the department with oversight authority of the board may authorize reimbursement of such lodging expenses when deemed necessary and in the best interests of the state. For example, it might be authorized if the travel home would present a hardship due to the age and health of the board member. When such payments are authorized, approval must be noted on the travel authorization.

A board or commission member, who is not a state employee, attending a board or commission meeting is entitled to a prorated M&IE if meals are not provided. To be eligible for each meal period allowance requires the member to be in attendance for at least three consecutive hours within that meal period as defined in AAM 60.250. See AAM 320 for when this allowance may be taxable to board and commission members.

State employees serving as board or commission members as part of their official duties are not entitled to an M&IE allowance or reimbursement for lodging expenses when the board or commission meeting is in the vicinity of their residence and/or duty station. (AS 39.20.180, AS 39.20.185)

AAM 60.190 Health and Safety of Travelers (01-10)

The health and safety of travelers is a top priority in the conduct of state travel related activities. It is advantageous to the state for agencies to establish and alter travel plans and itineraries with consideration of hazardous weather and other situations that could threaten the health and safety of state personnel. When this occurs, travelers should note the reason for any additional expense on the travel authorization.

Travelers with Physical and Medical Conditions

The impact of the medical conditions of travelers on state travel should be considered on a case-by-case basis. For travelers weighing over 300 pounds, the state can pay for two seats in coach class or one first class ticket, whichever costs less. Similar accommodations can be made for travelers weighing less than 300 pounds if the airline requires the purchase of a second seat.

Compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) is mandatory. Each department has the authority to provide reasonable accommodations during state travel for travelers with disabilities. Decisions regarding specific situations not addressed by policy shall be made and documented by the department, conferring with the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations as necessary.

All state personnel are to be afforded equal opportunity to perform travel for official state business even if the travel costs for disabled travelers will exceed what would normally be most economical to the state. For example:

- When a traveler uses a wheelchair and it is necessary to pay more for an airline ticket so the traveler can fly on a larger airplane that can accommodate the wheelchair.
- When a traveler has hearing or vision impairments and there is a cost of providing auxiliary aids and services to enable the traveler to successfully accomplish the purpose of the travel.

All special needs of travelers should be documented in their travel profile.

The extra travel costs required to comply with the ADA shall be documented and reviewed by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. ADA supporting documentation should remain confidential with no details on the travel authorization beyond a statement added indicating the agency file location.

AAM 60.200 Travel Related to Contracts (10-08)

Agencies are encouraged to require the policies of AAM 60 in the terms of their professional service contracts which include travel. When the state reimburses a contractor for travel under these policies, the travel account codes in AKSAS may be used because the travel reimbursements are excludable under the rules governing IRS accountable plans.

When contract terms for travel reimbursement differ from the policies of AAM 60, or the contractor does not account to the state for travel costs, the services account codes must be used to ensure that travel reimbursements are reported as taxable income to the contractor.

AAM 60.210 Completion of the Travel Authorization (01-10)

Each agency will prepare their employees' travel authorizations, and bill other agencies via adjusting journal entry when appropriate. Exceptions to this policy may be agreed to between agencies.

All travel expenses incurred by State of Alaska employees will be reimbursed based upon bargaining unit contracts, Alaska Statutes, and this section of the Alaska Administrative Manual. Lack of adherence to State of Alaska travel policies may result in non-reimbursement.

Within five business days after travel is complete, the traveler, or someone acting for the traveler, is required to complete a travel authorization in a form approved by the Department of Administration. The travel authorization summarizes the trip details, including actual costs, and calculates reimbursement due. Required receipts and evidence of pre-approval must be included.

If the traveler is due an additional amount, final payment shall be made within ten business days of the receipt of a properly completed travel authorization. However, if the final amount to be reimbursed is $.49 or less, no reimbursement will be processed. If the final amount to be reimbursed is $.50 or more, the amount to be paid will be rounded up to $1.00.

Reimbursements to the traveler will be deposited directly into the traveler's bank account unless the traveler chooses non-electronic payment. Any monies owed the State of Alaska by the traveler may be deducted from employee paychecks. When money is owed the State of Alaska and no payroll deduction is done, a personal check or money order must accompany the travel authorization.

If, in an emergency situation, it is necessary for an employee to book travel outside of the E-Travel Office, written documentation will be necessary to explain the circumstances in the travel authorization. This documentation is required for reimbursement.

AAM 60.220 Travel Expenses – Required Receipts and Documentation (07-09)

The following shall be attached to the travel authorization when submitted for final payment:

- A copy of the final itinerary
- Itemized commercial lodging facility receipts (short-term per diem)
- Receipts for expenses exceeding $25
- ATM receipt for any cash advances on state credit cards
- A copy of the rental car agreement
- Leave slips, if the trip includes leave

Though receipts for expenses of $25 or less are not required, total reimbursement for which receipts are not available shall not exceed a cumulative total of $30 per trip.

Receipts are strongly encouraged. All expenses claimed are subject to review. Reimbursement of unsupported expenses may be disallowed. Fraudulent claims may be subject to disciplinary action.

The following travel-related expenses are not reimbursable:

- Lost or stolen articles
- Alcoholic beverages
- Damage to personal cars, clothing, or other items
- Services to gain entry to a locked car
- Movies charged to hotel bills
- All expenses related to the personal negligence of the traveler, such as fines, parking tickets and traffic citations
- Entertainment expenses
- Tips and gratuities
- Towing charges
- Expenses for children, spouses, and companions while in travel status
- Personal phone calls or faxes

The above list is not all-inclusive.

AAM 60.230 Third Party Reimbursements (01-07)

Occasionally a third party (outside entity) may agree to pay all or a part of a traveler's travel expenses. In such cases, the travel authorization will indicate the third party's involvement in the trip. The traveler is only entitled to reimbursement for travel expenses, per diem or other expense allowances, etc., in accordance with state policies and is to be paid by the state agency for which they are traveling and/or employed. Travelers may not accept honorariums as long as they are traveling for and representing the state.

The third party should be instructed to reimburse the state directly for the travel expenses to reduce potential tax consequences to the traveler. When this is not possible, any third party reimbursement made directly to the traveler for travel expenses, per diem, and/or meal allowances shall be turned over to the traveler's state agency for deposit into the state treasury.

Payments by a third party for state agency travel expenses must be recorded appropriately in the state accounting system. If the travel is material to the agency's travel budget and is part of the agency's regular duties or is connected with carrying out the purpose of the agency, the costs must be recorded as an expenditure with an offset recorded as a revenue. If the state incurs the expenditure and is reimbursed by the third party, the reimbursement is to be recorded as revenue.

However, if the travel is not directly related to the state agency's program, is not a recurring event, or is immaterial to the agency's travel budget, this transaction does not need to be recorded as an expenditure and a revenue of the state agency. If the state incurs the expenditure and is reimbursed by the third party, the reimbursement may be recorded as an abatement. If the third party pays directly for state expenses, such as purchasing the airline ticket for the state traveler, these expenses do not need to be recorded. However, any receipts obtained by the traveler showing the cost of the airline ticket or lodging must be attached to the travel authorization.

Any time a third party is paying for a state traveler's travel expenses, the state agency must avoid the appearance of or the fact of any conflict of interest. The agency should also ensure the transaction does not violate the code of ethics and if there is any question, the Department of Law should be consulted on the matter.

AAM 60.240 Lodging Types and Rates (04-07)

Travelers are permitted actual costs or an allowance for lodging and an allowance for meal and incidental expenses (M&IE). Refer to AAM 60.250 for policies on M&IE. The combined costs for lodging and M&IE are referred to as the per diem allowance. Where applicable, travel provisions of collective bargaining agreements supercede AAM per diem allowance policies and rates.

A traveler is not entitled to a lodging allowance when provided lodging by the state or a third party with whom the state is conducting business. Travelers are not entitled to a lodging allowance when staying in their own residence(s).

The term of a stay (short- or long-term), type of lodging facility, and location of overnight lodging determine applicable lodging types and rates. Agencies should take into consideration the length of stay in one location in determining the type of lodging accommodations.

For current lodging rates, refer to the State of Alaska Per Diem Rates published on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/index.jsp#trav_acct.

In- and Out-of-State, Short-Term Lodging (Actuals or Allowance)

Travelers on short-term travel status in or outside of Alaska are eligible for reimbursement of actual lodging expenses. Actual costs for short-term lodging are authorized for moderately priced commercial lodging. Each agency must ensure that lodging costs are reasonable and necessary and that government or other discount rates are used. Travelers must submit original itemized commercial lodging receipts with their travel authorizations.

Actual lodging expenses that exceed $300 room rate per night must be approved in advance by the director of the Division of Finance, or, the commissioner of the Department of Administration may delegate this approval to department commissioners. All requests shall include justification that clearly demonstrates the lodging is a government rate and cannot be acquired for less than $300 per night. Quotes from at least three moderately priced hotels in the same vicinity should be included with the justification.

Travelers on short-term travel status in Alaska are eligible for a daily noncommercial allowance when the travelers are required to stay in a community or location where commercial lodging facilities and state- or vendor-provided facilities are not available.

In-State, Long-Term Lodging (Allowance)

Agencies should provide in-state long-term lodging accommodations when the assignment is expected to be longer than 30 days at any one location.

- The long-term commercial lodging allowance rate is authorized when a traveler stays in commercial lodging facilities.
- The long-term noncommercial lodging allowance rate is authorized when a traveler is required to stay in a community or location where commercial lodging facilities and state- or vendor-provided facilities are not available.

These rates apply beginning the first day of travel status. Brief interruptions for business or personal convenience do not change the status from long-term.

Out-of-State, Long-Term Lodging (55% of Federal Lodging Allowance)

The long-term lodging rate outside Alaska is 55 percent of the federal lodging allowance. A link to the federal per diem rates is located on the Division of Finance web site at:
http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/index.jsp#trav_acct.

Required Approvals for Short- and Long-Term Travel Assignments

The short-term lodging allowance rate may not be used after a traveler's 30th consecutive day in one location unless a continuation has been approved in advance by the director of the Division of Finance, Department of Administration.

When travel status is expected to extend beyond six consecutive months in one location, the traveler's agency must receive advanced approvals for the assignment and for use of the long-term lodging rate from the department's administrative services division and the director of the Division of Finance. The approvals are requested on the Long-Term Travel Assignment form. Refer to the form for specific information required for the approvals. Page 2 of this form is used to request continued travel status that extends beyond a year and requires the requestor(s) to justify why it is in the state's best interest to pay per diem rather than move the traveler to the project location. This form is published on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/resource/longterm.pdf.

See AAM 320 for a summary of tax implications related to state travel reimbursement policies.

AAM 60.250 Meals and Incidental Expense Allowances (01-10)

Meal and incidental expense (M&IE) allowances and prorated M&IE allowances are provided to the state traveler to cover the cost of meals and incidental expenses such as discretionary tips, laundry expenses, etc. Where applicable, M&IE provisions of collective bargaining agreements supercede AAM M&IE allowance policies and rates.

There are two types of M&IE allowances, short-term and long-term/noncommercial. The appropriate M&IE allowance rate for a day is the rate established for the community in which the traveler is required to obtain overnight lodging. On the day of return, a traveler is entitled to the M&IE allowance rate applicable for the preceding day. When travel involves crossing the International Date Line, the M&IE allowance shall be calculated based on the total number of hours in flight.

For current M&IE allowances, refer to the State of Alaska Per Diem Rates published on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/index.jsp#trav_acct.

In-state M&IE rates are reviewed annually and adjusted as appropriate.

A link to the federal per diem rates is located on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/index.jsp#trav_acct.

Short-Term M&IE (Allowance)

Travelers on short-term travel status in Alaska are eligible for a daily M&IE allowance.

Travelers on short-term travel status outside of Alaska, including travel to Hawaii and foreign destinations, are eligible for the federal M&IE rate for the location.

A traveler is eligible for the short-term M&IE allowance rate in two circumstances: when a traveler in short-term travel status is expected to incur expenses from dining at commercial establishments; and when a traveler in long-term travel status will incur expenses from dining at commercial establishments because the traveler is required to stay in a lodging facility that does not provide cooking facilities to its guests.

Long-Term/Noncommercial M&IE (Allowance)

Travelers on long-term travel status in Alaska are eligible for a daily M&IE allowance.

Travelers on long-term travel status outside of Alaska, including travel to Hawaii and foreign destinations, are eligible for 55% of the federal M&IE rate for the location.

A traveler is eligible for a long-term/noncommercial M&IE allowance in two circumstances: when a traveler in long-term travel status, is expected to prepare meals; and when a traveler is in short-term travel status in a location where there are no commercial dining establishments.

M&IE Rules for Specific Situations

Whenever a traveler is in travel status and is entitled to reimbursement for lodging under both the short-term and long-term/noncommercial per diem rules, the traveler is entitled to only the M&IE allowance that applies to the location where the traveler is staying.

If a traveler maintains a dwelling at their destination and it is available to them, they will be entitled to only an M&IE allowance for normal workdays. An M&IE allowance for other than normal workdays is not allowed.

If a traveler is temporarily returned to the traveler's duty station while on a long-term assignment and is continuing to receive a long-term lodging per diem, the traveler is not entitled to any M&IE allowance while at the duty station.

Prorated M&IE Allowances

The normal meal periods are published on the Division of Finance web site at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/resource/rates.pdf, and a table of the prorated short- and long-term M&IE rates for Alaska and out-of-state travel are published at: http://fin.admin.state.ak.us/dof/travel/resource/M&IE_AK_&_CONUS_Rates.pdf.

A traveler must be in travel status at least three consecutive hours during a meal period to be entitled to the M&IE for that meal.

On the days of departure and return, the traveler receives a prorated M&IE based upon scheduled flight (or other common carrier) departure and actual return times as follows:

Departure Time	Before 9:01 AM	Before 2:01 PM	Before 11:01 PM
M&IE	Full day	Lunch & Dinner	Dinner
Return Time	12:00 PM (Noon)	Before 5:00 PM	After 4:59 PM
M&IE	Breakfast	Breakfast & Lunch	Full day

This table factors in a two-hour check-in period for departures and one hour for luggage retrieval upon arrival. In circumstances where the traveler is required by the carrier to report to the terminal more than two hours prior to departure (such as for international flights), the traveler is to note in the travel authorization the additional time required by the airline and the traveler's actual check in time. In the above table, this additional time (beyond two hours) is added to the departure time to determine the allowable prorated M&IE. For example, if required check in time is three hours before flight time, "Before 9:01 AM" departure time would be adjusted to "Before 10:01 AM."

When travelers drive to a destination, on the days of departure and return, the travelers are entitled to prorate M&IE when they are in travel status at least three consecutive hours during a normal meal period.

Travel Status Less Than 24 Hours, More Than 12 Hours

Travelers who are in travel status less than 24 hours but more than 12 hours and who return to their residence and/or duty station rather than obtaining overnight lodging at their travel destination, may be entitled to an M&IE allowance. For air travel, the M&IE allowance is calculated using the departure and return times presented in the prorated M&IE table above. If the scheduled flight (or other common carrier) departure is before 9:00 a.m., the travelers are entitled to the breakfast M&IE. Travelers may be entitled to the M&IE for lunch and dinner if they are in travel status for at least three consecutive hours during these meal periods.

A traveler, who travels by means other than common carrier, must be in travel status at least three consecutive hours during a meal period to be entitled to the M&IE for that meal.

Travelers who are normally scheduled to work more than ten hours per day must be in travel status at least two hours more than their regular scheduled workday to be eligible for the M&IE allowance. See AAM 320 for details on taxability of such an allowance.

Meals Provided to Travelers

Occasionally, a traveler is provided a meal while at a conference, training, seminar, etc., or as part of a lodging package such as at bed and breakfast inns (where the state is paying for actual lodging costs). When a traveler is provided a meal in these or similar circumstances, the traveler is not eligible for the related M&IE allowance unless sufficient justification is provided by the traveler and approved to obtain the M&IE allowance.

AAM 60.260 Contracting for Subsistence (07-05)

The state may enter into agreements with restaurants, hotels, and lodging houses to furnish subsistence to a traveler or groups of travelers when in the best interest of the state (AS 36.30). A contract for subsistence must comply with appropriate procurement regulations. Such agreements require the vendor to provide itemized invoices for services.

MEMORANDUM March 11, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary of the 2010 Revisor's Bill
(CSSB 265(JUD); Work Order No. 26-LS1220\P)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Assistant Revisor

This is a sectional summary of the 2010 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the Legislative Affairs Agency, working in cooperation with the Revisor of Statutes

> . . . shall make recommendations to the legislative council concerning deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions in and the need for reorganization or revision of the statutes, and, at the direction of the legislative council, shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state. . . .

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Sections that delete, repeal, or update obsolete provisions: 12, 21, 22

Sections that correct errors or oversights: 1, 4, 5, 10, 11, 16, 17, 27

Sections that improve the form or substance of the law: 2, 3, 6 - 9, 13 - 15, 18 - 20, 23 - 26, 28

Bill section 1. Amends the definition of "public aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(15). This definition was originally adopted in sec. 1, ch. 123, SLA 1949, prior to statehood. In the session laws, the definition read:

> "Public Aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service with reference to the United States, and the Territorial Government.

However, in the first revised statutes published in 1962, the definition, then AS 02.15.270(12), read as it does now:

> (15) "public aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service of the United States and the state government;

The changes in the definition, necessitated by the transition to statehood, presumably occurred in the course of the bulk formal revision of the statutes, adopted as the law of Alaska in 1963. See AS 01.05.006.

In its original form, the definition referred to both the government of the United States and the territorial government. The "with reference to" phrasing would have included an aircraft used in the service of either governmental entity. The wording of the revised version retains the "and" used in the original, but does not include the "with reference to" phrasing, suggesting that a particular aircraft would need to be used in both federal and state governmental service to fall within the definition. This seems inconsistent with the original definition, which appeared to be disjunctive. Also, the disjunctive form is more consistent with the definition of "civil aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(8), which reads

> (8) "civil aircraft" means any aircraft other than a public aircraft;

Together, it seems clear that these definitions were intended to cover all aircraft. To include an aircraft used only in the service of the state government and not the federal government in the definition of "civil aircraft" would require a strained reading of that definition. For these reasons, the conjunction "and" is replaced with "or" in this section.

Bill section 2. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 06.55.407(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 3. This section amends a reference to unsworn falsification in AS 06.60.580 to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree.

From the revision of the criminal code in 1978 until 2006, the crime of unsworn falsification, a class A misdemeanor, was codified at AS 11.56.210. In 2006, the legislature enacted AS 11.56.205, making unsworn falsification on a permanent fund dividend application a class C felony. Unsworn falsification in other contexts, still punishable under AS 11.56.210, became unsworn falsification in the second degree. In the 2006 bill, most statutory references to "unsworn falsification" were amended to read "unsworn falsification in the second degree."

AS 06.60.580 was enacted in 2007 with a reference to "unsworn falsification" that did not specify degree. Because the section relates to claims from the originator surety fund, AS 11.56.205 has no relevance here. The amendment adds the words "in the second degree" to correct an oversight.

Bill section 4. This section deletes the phrase "the supervision required by AS 08.04.023" in AS 08.04.450. This phrase is a non sequitur because AS 08.04.023 does not contain any supervision requirement; it is extraneous and without legal effect. Inclusion of the phrase was a drafting error made by the legal services division.

Bill section 5. Changes "planning" to "planing" in AS 08.32.110(a). Although an Internet search reveals references to both "root planning" and "root planing," it appears that "root planing" is the more common usage for the therapy for periodontal disease performed by dental hygienists, and the word "planing" does some more accurately descriptive of the procedure, which involves smoothing the surface of a tooth's root. Also, the term "root planing" is used by the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services[1] and the American Dental Association.[2]

Bill section 6. Amends the definition of "limited liability partnership" in AS 08.48.341(10), the definition for statutes relating to the professional registration of architects, engineers, and land surveyors.

In 2000, the legislature passed an act adding limited liability companies and limited liability partnerships to the organizations that may practice architecture, engineering, and surveying. It included a new section defining the term "limited liability partnership" with reference to AS 32.05.415 and 32.05.990. That Act, ch. 38, SLA 2000, took effect August 9, 2000. During the same session, the legislature also passed an act repealing AS 32.05, the Uniform Partnership Act, and replacing it with a new version of that Act. The new provisions in that Act, ch. 115, SLA 2000, took effect January 1, 2001. The repeal of AS 32.05 took effect January 1, 2004.

Chapter 115, the Act enacting the new Uniform Partnership Act, did not make conforming changes to AS 08, as amended by chapter 38. As a result, since the repeal of AS 32.05 in 2004, the definition in AS 08.48.341(10) has pointed to two statutes that no longer exist. The changes made in this section direct the reader to the definitions in the new Uniform Partnership Act, which, under sec. 10, ch. 115, SLA 2000, has applied to all limited liability partnerships since January 1, 2004.

Bill section 7. Inserts the word "has" at the beginning of AS 08.65.140(d)(14) to improve the readability of the paragraph, and for consistency with the remainder of the subsection.

Bill section 8. Amends AS 12.55.035(c) by deleting "greater" (the comparative form of the adjective) and inserting "greatest" (the superlative form). This change is suggested because the comparative is generally used for comparing two things and the superlative is used for comparing three or more things. Since the rest of the sentence asks the reader to choose among three options, the superlative form is preferable here.

Bill section 9. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 12.65.140(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 10. Amends AS 13.26.344(j) to add a missing part of the verb. This change makes the provision parallel to other subsections of AS 13.26.344.

Bill section 11. Changes a reference to a federal regulation in AS 13.27.030, part of the Uniform Adult Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act enacted in 2008. The statute now refers to "protected health information as defined in 45 CFR 164.504." However, that section of the CFR does not include a definition of the term "protected health information." The term is defined for purposes of 45 CFR 164.504 and the rest of subchapter C, subtitle A, title 45 in 45 CFR 160.103.

Alaska's statute used the reference included in the model act. Through the attorney general's office, we have received confirmation from the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws that the cite in section 105 of the model act was erroneous, and that the correct cite is 45 CFR 160.103. This corrects the error.

Bill section 12. Amends AS 14.43.930(e)(2) to reflect the current name of the Northwest Association of Accredited Schools, which was formerly the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges. The Association changed its name in 2004.

Bill section 13. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 17.37.010(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 14. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 18.65.087(e) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 15. Codifies at AS 26.23.240 a short title for AS 26.23.010 - 26.23.240 and 26.23.900 -- the "Alaska Disaster Act." This term has frequently been used by the Attorney General as a shorthand reference to AS 26.23 (see Op. Atty Gen. file nos. 883-03-0070 (June 2, 2003), 663-93-0425 (July 8, 1993), and 663-92-0494 (January 13, 1993) for example). The term was employed by the Alaska Supreme Court in City of Seward v. Afognak Logging, 31 P.3d 780, 785 (Alaska 2001).

The phrase "Alaska Disaster Act" was used as a chapter heading when AS 26.23 was originally enacted, in sec. 3, ch. 104, SLA 1977. In 1990, two sections were added to the chapter: AS 26.23.300, creating a disaster relief fund, and AS 26.23.400, creating a fuel emergency fund. Each of these was created as a new article, and the definitions section, formerly AS 26.23.230, was renumbered as AS 26.23.900. In 2002, the Emergency Management Assistance Compact was enacted (AS 26.23.135 - AS 26.23.136), replacing the former Interstate Civil Defense and Disaster Compact, which was repealed. "Alaska Disaster Act" has been retained as the article title for Article 1 of AS 26.23.

In codifying the short title, the question arises whether it should apply only to the sections enacted in 1977, or to the 1990 additions as well. The drafting manual advises that a short title "should be used only with a bill that contains a cohesive body of proposed law dealing comprehensively with a particular subject." Manual at 23. For the sake of consistency with the existing article heading and usage by the Alaska Supreme Court and the Attorney General, the revisor's bill applies the short title only to Article 1 of AS 26.23 and the definitions section, AS 26.23.900, which was part of the original material designated as the Alaska Disaster Act in the 1977 legislation.

Bill section 16. Amends AS 29.65.050(b) to conform the usage to the term defined in AS 29.65.130(10) -- "vacant, unappropriated, unreserved land." Since the subsection in which the phrase "land that was vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved" was adopted in the same 1985 revision of the municipal code as the definition in AS 29.65.130(10), it is assumed that the inconsistency is a drafting error or oversight.

Bill section 17. Amends AS 29.65.060(a). Currently, the statute reads "vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved land as defined in this chapter" (emphasis added). The "or" is deleted to conform the usage with the phrase that is actually defined in the chapter.

Bill section 18. Amends AS 34.45.320(b) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications.

AS 34.45.280(b) specifies that reports of abandoned personal property are to be made on a form which gives notice that statements on the form are made under penalty of unsworn falsification. Since this section relates to reports of unclaimed property rather than permanent fund dividend applications, unsworn falsification in the second degree under AS 11.56.210 is clearly the applicable statute. This section predates the 2006 changes to the law of unsworn falsification, and it is not clear why the reference was not changed in the 2006 bill. Although the general reference may suffice -- "under penalty of unsworn falsification" is not wrong, it is merely imprecise -- a reference that includes "in the second degree" is more accurate here. For further explanation, see the discussion in bill sec. 3, above.

Bill section 19. Amends AS 34.45.380(a) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications. See bill sec. 18, above; the only difference is that AS 34.45.380(a) relates to abandoned property claim forms (rather than report forms).

Bill section 20. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 40.25.220 to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 21. Amends AS 41.21.506(b)(2) to remove an exception added in sec. 2, ch. 61, SLA 2009 relating to AS 16.40.260 and 16.40.270 on the date that those two sections are repealed. The repeal will take effect January 1, 2011, under sec. 8, ch. 70, SLA 2004 as amended by sec. 3, ch. 61, SLA 2009, unless that section is further amended.

Bill section 22. Corrects a reference to the United States Code in AS 42.40.430. In 2002, 40 U.S.C. 471 was renumbered as 40 U.S.C. 401 in a general revision of federal laws relating to public property. According to the statement of purpose for the revision Act, P.L. 107-217, sec 5(b)(1), "[t]his Act makes no substantive change in existing law and may not be construed as making a substantive change in existing law."

Bill section 23. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.455(d) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 24. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.475(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 25. Adds a short title at AS 44.62.319 for AS 44.62.310 - 44.62.312, which is commonly referred to as "the open meetings act." See for example Abood v. League of Women Voters, 743 P.2d 833 (Alaska 1987), Hickel v. Southeast Conference, 846 P.2d 38 (Alaska 1992), Griswold v. City of Homer, 55 P.3d 64 (Alaska 2002), and 1995 Op. (Inf.) Atty Gen. Alas. 317, file no. 663-95-0524 (August 21, 1995).

Bill section 26. In AS 46.14.500(c), changes a parenthetical reference to the Clean Air Act to make the form similar to that used for other United States Code citations cited in the Alaska Statutes.

Bill section 27. Moves the phrase "the facility may" in AS 47.30.695 from the introductory text into the text of paragraph (1). This is necessary because the phrase "the facility may" cannot be applied to paragraph (2), since paragraphs (1) and (2) are disjunctive ("or" is the conjunction), and (2) has a different verb phrase ("the treating physician may").

Bill section 28. Instructs the revisor to conform references to the Open Meetings Act to reflect the short title codified in sec. 25 of the bill.

Bill section 29. Makes the effective date for sec. 21 of the Act conditional; this section should only take effect if the sections referred to are actually repealed.

Bill section 30. Provides an effective date for sec. 21, if sec. 21 takes effect under sec. 29.

Bill section 31. Provides an effective date for the remaining sections of the bill.

MEMORANDUM March 16, 2010

SUBJECT: Amendment reversing change made in 2009 revisor's bill (CSSB 265(JUD), Work Order No. 26-LS1220\P, Am. P.1)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Assistant Revisor

Enclosed is an amendment to the 2010 revisors' bill.

This amendment would reverse a change made in last year's revisor's bill. That bill changed the phrase "newsboys' services" in AS 23.20.526(a)(2) to "services performed by an individual under 18 years of age."[1] The change was made to avoid the use of a gender specific term. However, we have been informed by Mr. John McKay (an Anchorage attorney) that this change has been interpreted by the Department of Labor and Workforce Development as having a substantive effect. Apparently the term "newsboys" has been interpreted to include individuals both over and under age 18. To correct this situation, the enclosed amendment would change AS 23.20.526(a)(2) back to the way it was, using the phrase "newsboys' services." The change would be retroactive.

"* Sec. 15. AS 23.20.526(a) is amended to read:

(a) In this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires, "employment" does not include

(1) domestic service in a private home, except as provided in AS 23.20.525(a)(13);

(2) newsboys' services [SERVICE PERFORMED BY AN INDIVIDUAL UNDER 18 YEARS OF AGE] in selling or distributing newspapers on the street or from house to house;

(3) service not in the course of the employing unit's trade or business performed in a calendar quarter by an individual, unless the cash remuneration paid for the service is $50 or more and the service is performed by an individual who is regularly employed by the employing unit to perform the service; an individual is here considered to be regularly employed to perform service not in the course of an employing unit's trade or business during a calendar quarter only if the individual performs the service for some portion of the day on each of 24 days during the quarter or during the preceding calendar quarter;

(4) service performed by an individual in the employ of the individual's

(A) son, daughter, or spouse;

(B) parent or legal guardian if the individual was under the age of 21 years and a full-time student during eight of the last 12 months and intends to resume full-time student status within the next four months; and

(C) mother or father if the service is performed by a child under the age of 18;

(5) service with respect to which unemployment insurance is payable under an unemployment insurance program established by an Act of Congress;

(6) service performed in the employ of a foreign government including service as a consular or other officer or employee or a nondiplomatic representative;

(7) service performed in the employ of an instrumentality wholly owned by a foreign government if

(A) the service is of a character similar to that performed in foreign countries by employees of the United States government or its instrumentalities; and

(B) the department finds that the United States Secretary of State has certified to the United States Secretary of the Treasury that the foreign government, with respect to whose instrumentality exemption is claimed, grants an equivalent exemption with respect to similar service performed in the foreign country by employees of the United States government and its instrumentalities;

(8) service performed by an insurance agent, insurance solicitor, real estate broker, real estate salesperson, or securities salesperson to the extent the person is compensated by commission, unless the service is required to be covered under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, as amended;

(9) notwithstanding AS 23.20.525(a)(9), service performed by an officer or member of the crew of an American vessel on or in connection with the vessel, if the operating office, from which the operations of the vessel operating on navigable waters inside or inside and outside the United States are ordinarily and regularly supervised, managed, directed, and controlled, is outside this state;

(10) service performed on or in connection with a vessel not an American vessel by an individual if the individual performed service on and in connection with the vessel when outside the United States;

(11) service performed in the employ of the United States government or an instrumentality of the United States exempt under the Constitution of the United States from the contributions imposed by this chapter, except that to the extent that the Congress of the United States permits states to require an instrumentality of the United States to make payments into an unemployment fund under a state employment security law, all of the provisions of this chapter apply to the instrumentalities, and to service performed for the instrumentalities in the same manner, to the same extent, and on the same terms as to all other employers, employing units, individuals, and service; however, if this state is not certified for any year by the United States Secretary of Labor under 26 U.S.C. 3304(c) (Federal Unemployment Tax Act, Internal Revenue Code), the payments required of the instrumentalities with respect to the year shall be refunded by the department from the fund in the same manner and within the same period as is provided in AS 23.20.225 with respect to contributions erroneously collected;

(12) service performed in the employ of another state, or political subdivision of another state, or an instrumentality of another state or political subdivision that is wholly owned by another state or its political subdivision, or a service performed in the employ of an instrumentality of another state or its political subdivisions to the extent that the instrumentality is, with respect to the service, exempt under the Constitution of the United States from the tax imposed by 26 U.S.C. 3301 (Federal Unemployment Tax Act, Internal Revenue Code);

(13) service performed in the employ of an international organization;

(14) service covered by an election approved by the agency charged with the administration of any other state or federal employment security law, in accordance with an arrangement under AS 23.20.090(a) during the effective period of the election;

(15) service performed by an individual in agricultural labor, except as provided in AS 23.20.525(a)(14); the term "agricultural labor" means remunerated service

(A) on a farm, in the employ of any person in connection with cultivating the soil, or in connection with raising or harvesting any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including the raising, shearing, feeding, caring for, training, and management of livestock, bees, poultry, and fur-bearing animals and wildlife;

(B) in the employ of the owner or tenant or other operator of a farm, in connection with the operation, management, conservation, improvement, or maintenance of the farm and its tools and equipment, or in salvaging timber or clearing land of brush and other debris left by a hurricane, if the major part of the service is performed on a farm;

(C) in connection with the production or harvesting of any commodity defined as an agricultural commodity in 12 U.S.C. 1141j (Sec. 15(g), Agricultural Marketing Act), as amended, or in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways, not owned or operated for profit, used exclusively for supplying and storing water for farming purposes;

(D) in the employ of the operator of a farm in handling, planting, drying, packing, packaging, processing, freezing, grading, storing, or delivering to storage or to market or to a carrier for transportation to market, in its unmanufactured state, any agricultural or horticultural commodity; but only if the operator produced more than one-half of the commodity with respect to which the service is performed except as stated in (b) of this section;

(E) in the employ of a group of operators of farms, or a cooperative organization of which the operators are members, in the performance of service described in (D) of this paragraph, but only if the operators produced more than one-half of the commodity with respect to which the service is performed;

(F) on a farm operated for profit if the service is not in the course of the employer's trade or business;

(16) service performed as a student nurse in the employ of a hospital or a nurses' training school by an individual who is enrolled and is regularly attending classes in a nurses' training school chartered or approved in accordance with the laws of this state, and service performed as an intern in the employ of a hospital by an individual who has completed a four-year course in a medical school chartered or approved in accordance with the laws of this state, unless the service is required to be covered under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act;

(17) service performed by an individual on a boat engaged in catching fish or other forms of aquatic animal life under an arrangement with the owner or operator of that boat under which

(A) that individual does not receive any cash remuneration except as provided in (B) of this paragraph;

(B) that individual receives a share of the boat's, or the boats' in the case of a fishing operation involving more than one boat, catch of fish or other forms of aquatic animal life or a share of the proceeds from the sale of that catch; and

(C) the amount of that individual's share depends on the amount of the boat's, or the boats' in the case of a fishing operation involving more than one boat, catch of fish or other forms of aquatic animal life; but only if the operating crew of that boat, or each boat from which the individual receives a share in the case of a fishing operation involving more than one boat, is normally made up of fewer than 10 individuals;

(18) service performed as a prospective or impaneled juror in a court;

(19) service performed for a corporation by an employee of the corporation if

(A) the corporation is incorporated under AS 10.06;

(B) the corporation is not a government corporation; and

(C) the employee is an executive officer of the corporation;

(20) service performed by an individual who drives a taxicab whose compensation and written contractual arrangements are as described in AS 23.10.055(a)(13);

(21) service of an individual who

(A) directly sells or solicits the sale of consumer products, for resale or otherwise, personally to a prospective consumer in the home or otherwise than in a permanent retail establishment; a sale or solicitation by telephone, mail, other telecommunications method, or other nonpersonal method does not satisfy the requirement of this subparagraph;

(B) is compensated solely by

(i) commissions on sales or other remuneration directly related to sales or sales performance; or

(ii) a profit represented by the difference between the wholesale cost of the product to the seller and the final sale price to the consumer; and

(C) performs under a written contract with the person for whom the service is performed that provides, notwithstanding AS 23.20.395(a), that the individual is not an employee for purposes of this chapter or for federal or state tax purposes;

(22) temporary services related to emergency oil spill training and response activities by an individual described in (17) of this subsection; in this paragraph, "temporary" means a period of less than seven continuous days."

MEMORANDUM April 10, 2010

SUBJECT: Equal protection concern
(Amendment 26-LS1448\P.20 for CSSB 284(FIN))

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard 743
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the amendment referenced above. I have one comment.

This amendment requires a person, making an independent expenditure supporting or opposing a candidate or ballot proposition or question in a state election, to disclose to the Alaska Public Offices Commission the names and addresses of all contributors who have made contributions to the person for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election, and for contributors who contribute in excess of $50 in the aggregate during a calendar year, the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the contributor. This is the same disclosure standard as that required of candidates in state elections under AS 15.13.040(a).

Under AS 15.13.040(b), a group making expenditures in coordination with a candidate's campaign is only required to report the date and amount of each contribution, name, address, principal occupation, and the employer of the group's contributors of in excess of $100 in the aggregate during a calendar year.

Establishing a less stringent disclosure regime for groups making expenditures than for persons making independent expenditures may give rise to a legal challenge based on equal protection grounds. "The common question in addressing equal protection cases is whether two groups of people who are treated differently are similarly situated and thus entitled to equal treatment."[1] In order for a classification to be valid under the state's equal protection test, it must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must bear a fair and substantial relation to a legitimate governmental objective. Wilson v. Municipality of Anchorage, 669 P.2d 569, 572 (Alaska 1983). Alaska evaluates equal protection claims using a sliding scale.[2] There are several steps involved. First, the court determines the importance of the interest impaired by the challenged statute. Then the court looks at the purposes served by the statute. Finally, the court looks at how well the statutory means fits the purpose.

If a court were to conclude that a group making expenditures in a state election and a person making independent expenditures were similarly situated, i.e. entities attempting to influence a state election through expenditures, a court would examine the purpose served by the two different disclosure standards. In State v. Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 978 P.2d 597 (1999), the Alaska Supreme Court observed that existing campaign finance jurisprudence was based on the threat of corruption. Id. at 606 - 607. Independent expenditures, by definition, do not give rise to the same threats of quid pro quo corruption. The Supreme Court has recently concluded that "independent expenditures, including those made by corporations, do not give rise to corruption or the appearance of corruption." Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___, Slip op. at 42 (January, 2010).

When a group makes expenditures in coordination with a candidate's campaign, the potential for quid pro quo corruption, or its appearance, is present, yet under this amendment, that group would have to reveal less about its contributors of under $100 in the aggregate during a year than would a person making independent expenditures to influence the outcome of the same election. The court could conclude that this presents an equal protection issue. If there are reasons to require greater disclosure of contributor information from persons making independent expenditures than from groups making contributions and expenditures, these should be articulated in testimony in support of the disclosure standard proposed by the amendment.

If you have any questions, do not hesitate to contact me.

Insert a new subsection to read:

"(e) Contributors required to be identified under (a)(2)(C) of this section must be listed in order of the amount of their contributions. If more than three of the largest contributors to a person paying for a communication contribute equal amounts, the person may select which of the contributors of equal amounts to identify under (a)(2)(C) of this section. In no case shall a person be required to identify more than three contributors under (a)(2)(C) of this section."

TO: Representative Jay Ramras

This note accompanies the amendment described above.

Please note this amendment to CSSB 284(FIN) is drafted to address what may happen if more than a person's three largest contributors contribute equal amounts in the 12-month period before the date of a communication. This is consistent with the committee's adoption of amendment P.9 earlier today. Amendment P.9 requires that a person, other than an individual or candidate, identify only the person's three largest contributors (instead of five as required by CSSB 284(FIN)).

If you have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sponsor Statement: Senate Bill 284 Campaign Expenditures

In the wake of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling, Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, the Senate Judiciary Committee has worked to determine the changes to Alaska's elections laws that will be needed. Corporations and labor unions have been banned from participating in Alaska's elections prior to this ruling. This means many of Alaska's laws regarding disclosure and disclaimers simply do not apply to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures to support or oppose specific candidates in elections.

Testimony from Legislative Legal Services attorneys and from the Alaska Department of Law indicated that changes would be needed to Alaska's campaign laws, and this bill was subsequently drafted to address the concerns raised by the attorneys and by committee members.

Senate Bill 284 amends state election laws to clarify that corporations and labor unions are covered by all applicable reporting requirements. It expands communication identification requirements to ensure accurate reporting of top contributors, to require the approval of the content by the principal officer of the corporation or union, and to require statements in each communication that its content has not been authorized or approved by the candidate. It also speeds reporting requirements for communications expenditures in the last nine days of the election so that expenditures over $250 must be reported within 24 hours.

Recent opinion surveys show broad disapproval by Americans across party lines for the decision reached by the U.S. Supreme Court. In order to retain Alaskans' trust in our system it is vital that legislation be passed this year to ensure that corporations and labor unions spending money to influence elections are at least required to disclose it in a timely fashion. I urge you to support Senate Bill 284.

MEMORANDUM April 2, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of CSSB 284(FIN)
(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\P)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLB
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.[1]

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1. Amends language relating to the applicability of AS 15.13 (state election campaigns) to clarify that the chapter applies to all contributions, expenditures, and communications made for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election covered by the chapter.

Section 2. Amends language relating to the duties of the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) to clarify that the commission will assist all persons to comply with the requirements of AS 15.13.

Section 3. Amends AS 15.13.040(d) to clarify that every person making an independent expenditure must make a full report of expenditures and contributions received to the commission unless the person is exempted from reporting by another provision of the chapter.

Section 4. Adds new requirements to the expenditure report required under AS 15.13.040(d) and specifies that the report must be filed in accordance with AS 15.13.110(g).

[1] Please note that only sec. 10 of the bill is modified from the version of the bill passed out by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Section 5. Amends language in AS 15.13.040(h) to clarify that the reporting requirements of AS 15.13.040(d) do not apply to an expenditure made by certain individuals acting independently of any other person.

Section 6. Amends AS 15.13.040(p) to clarify that a person who is required to disclose contributions received by that person in an expenditure report under AS 15.13.040(d) must report the true source of the contributions as the "contributor."

Section 7. Defines "director" and "officer" for the purposes of AS 15.13.040(e), as that subsection is amended by the bill.

Section 8. Requires each person other than an individual, candidate, or nongroup entity with an annual operating budget of $250 or less, to establish an account from which all funds, used by the person to make independent expenditures, must be drawn. Requires the person to (1) make records relating to the account available to APOC and (2) preserve all records relating to the account for a period of six years.

Section 9. Amends AS 15.13.067 to clarify who may make an expenditure that is not an independent expenditure, in a state election for public office.

Section 10. Prohibits a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure or an express or implied promise to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election. Provides that the prohibition will be enforced only to the extent that federal law prohibits a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure, and only to the extent permitted by federal law.

Section 11. Provides that no person, other an individual exempt from reporting under AS 15.13.040(h), may make an expenditure unless the source of the expenditure has been disclosed.

Section 12. Amends language in AS 15.13.084 to clarify that a person may not make an expenditure anonymously unless it is made (1) for certain communications, (2) in connection with a ballot proposition as that term is defined by AS 15.13.065(c), and (3) by an individual acting independently of any other person.

Section 13. Expands the communication identification requirements of AS 15.13.090 to apply to communications made by all persons, and additionally requires a person other than a candidate, individual, or a political party to (1) identify the person's principal officer, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, (3) provide the address of the person's principal place of business, and (4) identify the person's five largest contributors.

Section 14. Provides how the communication identification requirements of AS 15.13.090(a), as amended by the bill, must be met in print, video, and audio components of a communication.

Section 15. Requires expenditure reports filed under AS 15.13.040(e) to be filed within 10 days of the expenditure being made, except for an expenditure that exceeds $250 and that is made within nine days of an election must be reported to APOC within 24 hours of the expenditure being made.

Section 16. Amends the language of AS 15.13.111(a) to require all persons who are required to report under AS 15.13 to preserve certain records for a period of six years.

Section 17. Removes language from AS 15.13.135 that permitted only individuals, groups, or nongroup entities to make independent expenditures in support or in opposition to a candidate for public office. Adds language requiring all persons making certain independent expenditures to comply with AS 15.13.090.

Section 18. Amends language in AS 15.56.014(a) to clarify that any person who knowingly prints, publishes, or leases a communication without the "paid for language" required by AS 15.13.090 has committed campaign misconduct in the second degree, a class B misdemeanor.

Section 19. Repeals AS 15.13.140(a), a provision that provided that AS 15.13 should not be interpreted to prohibit a person from making independent expenditures in support or in opposition to a ballot proposition or question. As the chapter now reads, there is no ambiguity as to whether the chapter prohibits persons from making independent expenditures relating to a ballot proposition or question.

Section 20. Gives the Act an immediate effective date.

This bill would impact the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) through changes to regulations and changes to the electronic filing program, currently in development. As the bill requires more reporting, it will require additional staff time in assisting the filers; preparing manuals, performing training; and tracking and auditing reports. Changes to regulations will require an amendment to an existing contract estimated at $25.0 and $25.0 is included to analyze programming changes and capital funds necessary or the electronic filing program to accomodate the new reports. This increment includes 1 FT employee (range 16, Paralegal II) with computer and furniture.

MEMORANDUM April 7, 2010

SUBJECT: Differences between CSSB 284(FIN) and CSHB 409(STA)
(Work Order Nos. 26-LS1448\P and 26-LS1495\S)

TO: [redacted]

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TGB
Legislative Counsel

As a preliminary matter, please note that each bill is, itself, the best statement of its contents. This memorandum provides only an outline[1] of the substantive differences between CSSB 284(FIN) (26-LS1448\P) and CSHB 409(STA) (26-LS1495\S). This memorandum does not identify constitutional, legal, or drafting issues raised by the provisions of either bill.

15.13.030
The House bill requires the Alaska Public Offices Commission ("APOC") to make information contained in an independent expenditure report filed under AS 15.13.040(e) available to the public within 24 hours after the report has been filed with the commission. The Senate bill does not contain this requirement.

15.13.040(d)
The Senate bill contains language clarifying that every person making an independent expenditure shall make a full report of expenditures made and contributions received. The House bill is without this language.

AS 15.13.040(e)
The House bill requires an independent expenditure report filed by a person that is not an individual under AS 15.13.040(e) to be certified as correct by the treasurer or fiscal officer of the person. The House bill requires that the independent expenditure report include the nationality of each officer and director of the person (making the expenditure) and the nationality of each officer and director of a contributor (of over $100 in the aggregate in a year) to the person (making the expenditure). The Senate bill is without these requirements.

[1] The boldfaced heading for each of the differences described in this memorandum is the bill section in which an identified difference between the bills exists. If a heading section number or subsection letter appears in "quotes," the section or subsection is not an existing section or subsection amended by the bill, but a new section or subsection proposed to be added by the bill or bills.

15.13.040("q")
The Senate bill contains definitions for "director" and "officer" for the purposes of AS 15.13.040(e). The House bill does not define these terms.

"15.13.052"
The Senate bill requires persons making independent expenditures in state elections to establish a political activities account, from which all funds used by the person to make independent expenditures must be drawn. No such requirement is present in the House bill.

"15.13.068"
The Senate bill contains a more complete definition of "foreign national" than that of the House bill. The Senate bill provides that the Act's provision prohibiting a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election operates only to the extent (1) that federal law prohibits a foreign national from making a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election and (2) permitted by federal law. The House bill provides only that the provision applies to the extent permitted by federal law.

AS 15.13.084
The House bill prohibits all anonymous expenditures.

AS 15.13.090 (and added subsections)
Both the House and Senate bills amend AS 15.13.090 to require a larger quantity of information be disclaimed in communications. The requirements of each bill are different. The House bill requires a person other than a candidate, an individual, or a political party to (1) identify the person's principal officer and the officer's title, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, (3) provide the person's principal place of business, and (4) identify the name and city and state of residence or principal place of business, as applicable, of each of the person's three largest contributors, if any, during the 12-month period before the date of the communication.

The Senate bill requires all persons to identify the person's place of business, if applicable, and requires a person other than an individual or candidate to (1) identify the person's principal officer and the officer's title, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, and (3) identify the name and city and state of residence or principal place of business, as applicable, of each of the person's five largest contributors, if any, during the 12-month period before the date of the communication.

The House bill additionally provides that "[a] person other than a candidate, individual, or political party may not make a communication . . . unless the person's principal officer has certified to the commission in writing that the officer has reviewed the communication, and, based on the officer's knowledge, the communication is not defamatory and does not contain any defamatory statements." This provision is absent from the Senate bill.

The Senate bill contains different requirements for communication transmitted through radio or other audio media or in the audio component of another communication than what the House bill permits. The Senate bill does not require that the audio component of a communication include the address or principal of business of the person paying for the communication or of the person's largest contributors. The House bill requires this information. However, the House bill permits a person, other than an individual, paying for a communication to be named in the audio component of the communication using the person's common name.

The House bill contains a requirement that communications from a person in which a foreign government holds more than a 10 percent ownership stake identify the foreign government as a partial owner of the person. The Senate bill does not contain such a requirement.

AS 15.13.110("g")
The House bill requires independent expenditure reports to be filed with APOC within 24 hours after the expenditure has been made. The Senate bill requires that independent expenditure reports be filed within 10 days, except independent expenditures that exceed $250 and that are made within nine days of an election must be reported within 24 hours.

15.56.014(a)
The Senate bill amends AS 15.56.014 to provide that any person, not just a "candidate, group, or individual," who knowingly prints or publishes a communication intended to influence the outcome of an election without the words "paid for by" has committed campaign misconduct in the second degree (this change could be described as a conforming change). This section is not present in the House bill.

MEMORANDUM March 17, 2010

SUBJECT: Committee questions of March 15, 2010 (CSSB 284(JUD))
(Work order No. 26-LS1448\E)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

As part of a legislative response to the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010), you requested a legal opinion as to whether the state could prohibit independent expenditures made in connection with a state election, by (1) foreign nationals, (2) American subsidiaries of foreign nationals, (3) domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, and (4) domestic corporations or entities not domiciled in Alaska.

Any statute prohibiting a person from making an independent expenditure in connection with a state election is likely to be challenged on First Amendment grounds. A state prohibition against independent expenditures made by foreign nationals, who are already prohibited from making contributions or expenditures in connection with federal, state, or local elections under federal law, raises federal preemption issues. Prohibiting independent expenditures by domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, and domestic corporations or entities not domiciled in Alaska raise additional constitutional issues.

First Amendment

The First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States protects freedom of speech and freedom of association.[1] Independent expenditures made in connection with state elections are protected speech under the First Amendment. See Randall v. Sorrell, 548 U.S. 230 (2006), and Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976).

[1] Note that the freedom of speech provision in article I, section 5 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska is more protective of speech than the United States Constitution's First Amendment. Mickens v. City of Kodiak, 640 P.2d 818, 820 (Alaska 1982); Messerli v. State, 626 P.2d 81, 83 (Alaska 1980).

An attempt to prohibit independent expenditures by any class or category of persons is likely to encounter constitutional problems associated with First Amendment protections of the rights of association and expression.

> The concept that government may restrict the speech of some elements of our society in order to enhance the relative voice of others is wholly foreign to the First Amendment, which was designed "to secure the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources," and "to assure unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people."

Buckley, 424 U.S. at 48 - 49 (quoting New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 266, 269 (1964) (citations omitted)). In State v. Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 978 P.2d 597 (1999), the Alaska Supreme Court observed that existing campaign finance jurisprudence was based on the threat of corruption. Id. at 606 - 607. The Supreme Court has recently concluded that "independent expenditures, including those made by corporations, do not give rise to corruption or the appearance of corruption." Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___, Slip op. at 42 (January 21, 2010).

Given that independent expenditures have not been found to present a risk of corruption or the appearance of corruption, a state effort to prohibit independent expenditures from any source may face significant First Amendment hurdles.

The state's interest in prohibiting independent expenditures made by nonresidents or persons domiciled outside the state

I am not aware of any applicable judicial decision holding that protecting state residents from nonresident domination or enhancing voter participation is a compelling state interest. See Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 978 P.2d at 615. Instructive, however, is VanNatta v. Keisling, 151 F.3d 1215 (9th Cir. 1998), in which the Ninth Circuit invalidated a geographically based restriction on political contributions enacted by initiative in Oregon. The court found:

> Measure 6 bans all out-of-district donations, regardless of size or any other factor that would tend to indicate corruption. Appellants are unable to point to any evidence which demonstrates that all out-of-district contributions lead to the sort of corruption discussed in Buckley. . . . Measure 6 is not closely drawn to advance the goal of preventing corruption and under this analysis fails to pass muster under the First Amendment.

Id. at 1221. The proponents of the initiated law in VanNatta also offered an alternate justification for the measure, apart from the corruption rationale. They argued that the measure protected the state's interest in the integrity of republican government by, in the court's words, "assuring that representatives are truly selected by their own constituents." Id. However, the court rejected this justification, observing that "[t]he right to a republican form of government has never been recognized as a sufficiently important state interest." Id., citing Whitmore v. Federal Election Comm'n, 68 F.3d 1212 (9th Cir.1995) (rejecting the same argument as a justification for a ban on out-of-state contributions in Alaska). A state law prohibiting independent expenditures made by persons who are citizens of, or who are domiciled in, other states would be similarly evaluated by a court, and absent some evidence showing the corrupting influence of non-resident expenditures, would be struck down by a court.

Privileges and immunities

Prohibiting independent expenditures from non-residents would also be subject to challenge under the privileges and immunities clause. The federal privileges and immunities clause restricts the state's ability to interfere with the fundamental rights of non-residents. See Robison v. Francis, 713 P.2d 259, 263 (Alaska 1986). The Alaska Supreme Court has summarized the effect of the privileges and immunities clause as follows:

> Article IV, section 2 prohibits discrimination against nonresidents "where there is no substantial reason for the discrimination beyond the mere fact that they are citizens of other states." No "substantial reason" will be found absent some showing that nonresidents are "a peculiar source of the evil" which the state's action is meant to remedy. In addition, the discrimination worked upon nonresidents must "bear a substantial relationship to the particular 'evil' they are said to present." Only if the challenged discriminatory action surmounts both of these hurdles will it survive privileges and immunities clause scrutiny.

Noll v. Alaska Bar Association, 649 P.2d 241, 244 (Alaska 1982) (quoting Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 396 (1948), and Hicklin v. Orbeck, 437 L.Ed.2d 397, 404 (1978); citations omitted). So, in addition to having to provide a "compelling justification" for the measure to satisfy the First Amendment, you would also need to show a "substantial reason" why a prohibition against independent expenditures should apply only to non-residents in order to withstand a privileges and immunities clause challenge.

Equal protection

If the state were to prohibit domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, or domestic corporations or other organizations not domiciled in the state from making independent expenditures in connection with a state election, the prohibition would likely also face an equal protection challenge. "The common question in addressing equal protection cases is whether two groups of people who are treated differently are similarly situated and thus entitled to equal treatment."[2] In order for a classification to be valid under the state's equal protection test, it must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must bear a fair and substantial relation to a legitimate governmental objective. Wilson v. Municipality of Anchorage, 669 P.2d 569, 572 (Alaska 1983). Alaska evaluates equal protection claims using a sliding scale.[3] There are several steps involved. First, the court determines the importance of the interest impaired by the challenged statute. Then the court looks at the purposes served by the statute. Finally, the court looks at how well the statutory means fits the purpose.

Because federal law prohibits foreign nations from making contributions or expenditures, directly or indirectly, in connection with a state election, it is not clear to me what state purpose any of these possible prohibitions would serve. Consequently, I do not know how a court would evaluate the state's interest in prohibiting domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, or domestic corporations or other organizations not domiciled in the state from exercising their First Amendment right recognized in Citizens United to make independent expenditures.

Preemption

In Citizens United, the Supreme Court neither considered nor overruled the existing federal law that prohibits a "foreign national" from making a direct or indirect expenditure in connection with a federal, state, or local election. The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) prohibits any foreign national from contributing, donating, or spending funds in connection with any federal, state, or local election in the United States, either directly or indirectly.[4] Because 2 U.S.C. § 441e already clearly prohibits foreign nationals from making campaign contributions, expenditures, and independent expenditures in federal, state, and local elections, a state effort to legislate in this area may face a preemption challenge.

The Supremacy Clause, Art. VI, cl. 2 of the Constitution of the United States, provides:

> This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

[4] See 2 U.S.C. § 441e, 22 U.S.C. § 611(b), and 11 C.F.R. 110.4.

The Alaska Supreme Court has noted that "[u]nder the Supremacy Clause of the federal constitution, state laws that interfere with federal laws are invalid." Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1161, n. 12 (Alaska 2009), quoting State v. Dupier, 118 P.3d 1039, 1049 (Alaska 2005). The court recently summarized federal preemption law as follows:

> There is a presumption against federal preemption of state law, and preemption doctrine "enjoin[s] seeking out conflicts between state and federal regulation where none clearly exists." Additionally, "[w]here co-ordinate state and federal efforts exist within a complementary administrative framework, and in the pursuit of common purposes," . . . "the case for federal pre-emption becomes a less persuasive one." But where state law comes into conflict with federal law, the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution dictates that state law must always yield.
> There are three major types of federal preemption of state law: "express," "field," and "conflict" preemption. Express preemption occurs when Congress explicitly declares an intent to preempt state law in a particular area. . . .
> Field preemption is the term used when the federal law governing a particular area is so comprehensive and so complete that Congress is said to have completely occupied a field, leaving no room for state law. We "will not infer an intent to occupy the field where Congress has left some room for state involvement." . . .
> Conflict preemption occurs when a state law and a federal law are in conflict, either because compliance with both state and federal law is impossible or because the state law "stands as an obstacle to accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." . . .

Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1160 - 1161 (Alaska 2009) (citations and footnotes omitted).

The state clearly does not have authority to regulate contributions and expenditures in campaigns for federal office; that has been expressly preempted by federal law. 2 U.S.C. § 453 (specifying that the provisions of the federal election campaigns act "supersede and preempt any provision of state law with respect to election to federal office"); 11 C.F.R. 108.7(b)(3) (federal law "supersedes state law concerning the . . . [l]imitation on contributions and expenditures regarding Federal candidates and political committees.").

Whether the state may prohibit independent expenditures from foreign nationals in campaigns for state office is less clear. I am not aware of any federal statute or regulation which expressly preempts state regulation of foreign expenditures in campaigns for state office. However, field preemption may come into play here. To the extent a court found that the federal law governing contributions and expenditures by foreign nationals is so comprehensive and complete as to "occupy the field," it could invalidate state law attempting to cover the same ground. To the extent that the state and federal laws conflict, conflict preemption is also a possibility.

MEMORANDUM

STATE OF ALASKA
DEPARTMENT OF LAW

TO: Mike Nizich
Chief of Staff
Office of the Governor

DATE: February 19, 2010

FROM: Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

SUBJECT: Analysis of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission and its Impact on Alaska Campaign Finance Laws

The following is our response to your request for an analysis of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission 558 U.S. ___, --- S.Ct. ---- (2010) and how that decision impacts Alaska's campaign finance laws. The ruling affects the balance between a government's interest in ensuring transparent and fair elections and the First Amendment rights of organizations, such as corporations and labor unions, to engage in political speech. In this memorandum we will describe the holding of the case as well as its direct and indirect effects on Alaska law.

I. Summary

Our analysis addresses two main points. First, under Citizens United, Alaska may not prohibit political speech by corporations and labor unions altogether.[1] As a result, our laws prohibiting independent expenditures by corporations and labor unions in a candidate election are likely unconstitutional.

Second, Alaska's laws regarding contributions to candidates, coordinated expenditures, disclaimers, and disclosures are not directly affected by Citizens United. Alaska's laws continue to regulate corporate and labor union political speech through disclaimer and disclosure requirements. However, some disclaimer and disclosure laws that provide specific standards for reporting and identification of expenditures do not currently apply to corporations and labor unions.

II. Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission

On January 21, 2010, the United States Supreme Court issued its opinion in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission.[2] The Court's main holding was that "the Government may regulate corporate political speech through disclaimer and disclosure requirements, but it may not suppress that speech altogether."[3] The particular federal law reviewed by the Court, part of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002,[4] prohibited corporations and unions from using their general treasury funds to make independent expenditures for speech that is an electioneering communication or for speech that expressly advocates the election or defeat of a candidate.[5] The Court held that this prohibition on corporate and labor union speech violated the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Because the First Amendment applies to states as well as the federal government, the ruling not only strikes down the federal requirement, it also calls into question similar provisions enacted by the State of Alaska.[6]

The Court further ruled that the disclosure and disclaimer laws under the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act are justified to provide the electorate with information about the sources of election-related spending and that disclosure assists citizens in making informed choices in the marketplace of political ideas.[7]

Under federal law, televised electioneering communications funded by anyone other than a candidate must include a disclaimer describing the entity responsible for the content of the ad. The required statement must be made in a clearly spoken manner and displayed on the screen in a clearly readable manner for at least four seconds. It must state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee and it must display the name and address of the person or group that funded the advertisement. Id. (citing 2 U.S.C. § 441d(a)(2)).

III. The Direct and Indirect Impacts of Citizens United on Alaska Laws

A. Overview

Alaska campaign finance laws regulate a majority of state elections, the ballot proposition process, lobbying, and the judicial retention process.[8] These laws regulate the conduct of candidates, political parties, individuals, lobbyists, corporations, labor unions, groups, and other entities. Both state and federal campaign finance laws make several important distinctions with respect to the application of such laws. For instance, Alaska campaign finance laws distinguish "contributions" from "expenditures." A contribution is basically a purchase, payment, or deposit rendered directly to a candidate or political party.[9] An expenditure is defined broadly to include several activities which are not direct contributions to candidates. Expenditures include direct payments for services but also include various communications.[10] An "independent expenditure" is a type of expenditure but is more limited in that it is made without any coordination with a candidate.[11]

Another important distinction is between disclosures and disclaimers. Certain campaign finance laws mandate public reporting of expenditures made. In campaign finance jurisprudence, these laws are referred to as disclosure laws. When a campaign finance law requires an identification to be placed on a communication, courts and campaign finance law commentators broadly refer to this as a disclaimer law. The Alaska Public Offices Commission enforces the legality of contributions and expenditures and also ensures that individuals and entities are properly disclosing and disclaiming their conduct as it relates to an election.[12]

[10] An expenditure is defined, in relevant part, as "a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of...influencing...[the outcome of an election]." Expenditures also include "express communications" and "electioneering communications." AS 15.13.400(6).

[11] An independent expenditure "means an expenditure that is made without the direct or indirect consultation or cooperation with, or at the suggestion or the request of, or with the prior consent of, a candidate, a candidate's campaign treasurer or deputy campaign treasurer, or another person acting as a principal or agent of the candidate." Citizens United directly implicates one key aspect of Alaska's campaign finance laws: Alaska's prohibition on independent expenditures by corporations or labor unions in candidate elections.[13] The decision does not directly call into question the constitutionality of any other contribution, expenditure, disclaimer or disclosure law. For example, Alaska's prohibition on direct contributions to candidates by corporations and labor unions is unaffected.[14] Candidates and their agents are still prohibited from accepting contributions from corporations and labor unions.[15] A corporation or labor union still may not directly or indirectly consult or cooperate with candidates or their agents when making an expenditure.[16] Individuals are still limited to contributing $500 per year to a candidate, and $5,000 per year to a political party,[17] and corporations and labor unions must continue to follow disclosure laws whenever applicable.[18] The current statutes and regulations that require that an independent expenditure in a candidate election be reported within 10 days will be applicable to a corporation or labor union that makes such an expenditure.[19] There must be some identification of corporations or labor

[14] See AS 15.13.065(a); AS 15.13.074(a).

[15] AS 15.13.072(a)(1).

[16] AS 15.13.400(10). 2 AAC 50.270 provides guidance as to what constitutes an independent expenditure. Where an expenditure is based on information provided by the candidate or an agent of a group or nongroup entity, it is not an independent expenditure. An expenditure is not an independent expenditure if it is made based on data from a candidate's, group's, or nongroup entity's pollster or campaign consultant or any other person who receives compensation or reimbursement from the campaign. Solicitations to a candidate, group, or nongroup entity, or an expenditure made to finance distribution of campaign material provided by the candidate or his agents are not independent expenditures.

[17] AS 15.13.070(b)(1)-(2).

[18] See AS 15.13.400(14); AS 01.10.060. Because the relevant statutes define "person" to include a corporation or labor union, statutes and regulations that cover a "person" apply to any corporation or union making an independent expenditure in a candidate election.

[19] AS 15.13.040(d) states that "every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group making an expenditure shall make a full report of expenditures, upon a form prescribed by the commission, unless exempt from reporting." AS 15.13.040(e) states that "the report required under (d) must contain the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report, and an itemized list of expenditures. The report shall be filed with the commission no later than 10 days after the expenditure is made." The reporting requirement of AS 15.13.040(d) and (e) applies to all "persons" unions making an independent expenditure as they are subject to the requirement that such independent expenditures may not be made anonymously.[20]

B. Alaska's Prohibition on Expenditures – AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a)

Citizens United likely invalidates AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a) in their current form. Under AS 15.13.067, expenditures in candidate elections may only be made by candidates, individuals, groups, and nongroup entities. Under AS 15.13.135(a), "independent expenditures" in candidate elections may only be made by individuals, groups and nongroup entities. Because labor unions and corporations do not fall within the definitions of individual, group, or non-group entity,[21] AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a) prohibit corporations and labor unions from making any expenditures in candidate elections. Alaska law defines expenditure broadly to include activities which are political speech.[22] After Citizens United, these specific prohibitions will not likely pass constitutional muster.

who make an expenditure. A person is defined to include corporations and unions. AS 15.13.400(14); AS 01.10.060.

Alaska regulations likewise require reporting of all independent expenditures. 2 AAC 50.270(c) provides that "a person making an independent expenditure must disclose the following on an independent expenditure report under AS 15.13.040 (d) and (e): (1) the date of the expenditure; (2) the amount of the expenditure; (3) the check number, if the expenditure is paid by check; (4) the name and address of the payee; (5) a description of items or services purchased; (6) identification of the candidate or ballot proposition the expenditure was intended to influence; (7) a statement as to whether the expenditure was intended to support or oppose the candidate or ballot proposition."

[20] AS 15.13.084 states that "a person may not make an expenditure anonymously," unless the expenditure is made by an individual acting independently and the expenditure is made for a billboard or sign, or printed material other than an advertisement in a newspaper or other periodical.

[21] AS 15.13.400(8), (11), (13).

[22] Specifically, Alaska law prohibits corporations and labor unions from making express communications, electioneering communications, and any payment made to influence the outcome of a candidate election. AS 15.13.400(6)(A)(i);(C); see also AS 15.13.400(5), (7). Other parts of the expenditure definition do not implicate political speech. For example, expenditures include purchases made for the purpose of a political party or direct payment of personal services rendered to a candidate or political party. See, e.g., AS 15.13.400(6)(A)(ii)-(iii).

Accordingly, we recommend that these two statutes be amended to conform to the holding of Citizens United in order to clarify the extent to which corporations and labor unions may make independent expenditures.

C. Disclosure of Expenditures – AS 15.13.040(d) and (e)

The Supreme Court in Citizens United specifically upheld laws requiring the disclosure of independent expenditures. The Court found that the disclosure laws assisted the electorate in making informed choices in the marketplace of political ideas.[23] Accordingly, Citizens United does not suggest that Alaska's disclosure laws are in any way unconstitutional. Alaska Statute 15.13.040(d) and (e) is a disclosure law that broadly applies to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in a candidate election. It provides that any person making any expenditure must report the expenditure within 10 days. Because corporations and unions are deemed to be "persons" under Alaska law, this requirement applies to them as well.[24] Thus, the requirement to disclose is written broadly enough to require disclosure of expenditures made by corporations and labor unions.

D. Disclaimers For Communications – AS 15.13.084; AS 15.13.090; and AS 15.13.135(b)(2)

Citizens United upheld federal disclaimer laws.[25] Thus, the decision does not suggest that Alaska's disclaimer laws suffer from any constitutional infirmity. Alaska Statute 15.13.090 is a disclaimer law requiring certain communications to be identified by the words "paid for by" followed by the name of the candidate, group or nongroup entity paying for the communication. Alaska Statute 15.13.135(b)(2) is a disclaimer law which requires that certain independent expenditures contain a disclaimer that they are not authorized or paid for by a candidate. However, because corporations and labor unions were not permitted to make any expenditures in a candidate election, these specific statutes were not written to apply to them, and only refer to individuals, groups, and nongroup entities.

Corporations and labor unions are nevertheless subject to AS 15.13.084 which prohibits independent expenditures in a candidate election from being made [24] See supra note 18. Cf 2 AAC 50.270(c) (reporting of independent expenditures applies to "persons," and thus to corporations and labor unions). anonymously; thus some identification is required.[26] This prohibition is very general and it is unclear how a corporation or labor union must identify itself when making the expenditure. This may create uncertainty among corporations and labor unions about how to proceed with speech protected under Citizens United. Therefore, consideration should be given to amending AS 15.13.084 to clarify how corporations or labor unions must identify themselves when exercising their right to make independent expenditures in an election. As discussed above, it would be constitutional to extend the requirements of AS 15.13.090 and AS 15.13.135(b)(2) to corporations and labor unions.

E. Other Reporting and Disclosure Issues – AS 15.13.110 and AS 15.13.086(2)

As stated above, Citizens United did not invalidate disclosure or disclaimer laws,[27] and Alaska statutes currently require all persons making independent expenditures to report those expenditures to The Alaska Public Offices Commission within 10 days.[28] However, policy makers should consider whether other forms of disclosure for corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in candidate elections are appropriate. For example, under AS 15.13.110, groups, nongroup entities, and candidates must file reports for election-related activity 30 days before an election, seven days before an election, and at year's end. The reporting requirements under AS 15.13.110 do not apply to "persons" and thus corporations and labor unions, like individuals, are exempt. Because corporations and labor unions were not allowed to make independent expenditures when this statutory scheme was created, we do not believe the drafters had corporations and unions in mind when this requirement was imposed only on candidates, groups and nongroup entities.

In addition to reporting expenditures, AS 15.13.110 requires groups,[29] nongroup entities,[30] and candidates[31] to include information regarding the source of all contributions in these reports. Under current Alaska law, corporations and labor unions would be required to report only their expenditures.[32] But as there is currently no Alaska law that requires a corporation or labor union to report the source of funds used to make expenditures, corporations and labor unions could receive funds for the purpose of making an independent expenditure in a candidate election. This situation was not contemplated at the time these reporting statutes were enacted due to the prohibition on expenditures by corporations or labor unions in candidate elections.

Additionally, while candidate contributions exceeding $250 made within nine days of the election must be reported to The Alaska Public Offices Commission within 24 hours of receipt by the candidate,[33] under current law, an independent expenditure made within 10 days of a candidate election does not have to be reported until after the election.[34] The latter timeline now likely applies to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in candidate elections after Citizens United.

F. Independent Expenditures by Foreign Corporations

Federal law currently prohibits expenditures made by foreign nationals and foreign corporations in state elections.[35] Citizens United did not invalidate this law, nor did it decide whether the federal government has a compelling interest in preventing foreign individuals or associations from influencing our nation's political process.[36] Alaska law does not have a corresponding prohibition on expenditures made by foreign nationals or foreign corporations in our elections.[37]

IV. Conclusion

Citizens United has had both direct and indirect impacts on Alaska campaign financing laws. We recommend that those laws directly impacted by the ruling, the prohibition on expenditures by corporations and labor unions, be amended to provide more clarity to Alaskans. We also identify, for your consideration, other areas of law regulating expenditures that were indirectly impacted by this decision.

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska
Department of Law

TO: Chris Ellingson, APOC

DATE: May 29, 2008

SUBJECT: Wilkson's letter re raffle and lotteries.

FROM: Thomas A. Dosik
Assistant Attorney General

TEL. NO.: 269-5156

ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGED INFORMATION

I. BACKGROUND

Mr. Jim Wilkson, an attorney representing an unnamed client,[1] wrote to the Brooke Miles, Executive Director of the Alaska Public Offices Commission, claiming that certain APOC regulations prevented his client from complying with Department of Revenue regulations regarding the use of raffles and lotteries to raise money for political candidates and causes. Mr. Wilkson's client wants to use a raffle or lottery to raise money for its affiliated political action committee. He claims that such a raffle or lottery is specifically allowed under the gaming laws, but prohibited by the campaign finance regulations.

As Mr. Wilkson sees it, the gaming laws allow organizations with gaming permits to dedicate the proceeds from raffles and lotteries to political candidates and causes. However, the campaign finance regulations bar those same organizations from transferring raffle and lottery proceeds to political candidates and causes. Mr. Wilkson cites APOC's interpretation of the word "contribute" in 2 AAC 50.250 as the problem here. Because, he claims, his client is prohibited by AS 15.13.074(f) from making a "contribution" to a political cause, the client is unable to hold a raffle as envisioned by the gaming statutes and regulations.

[1] The head of the Department of Revenue's gaming unit suspects that the Alaska Cabaret, Hotel, Restaurant and Retailers Association is the unnamed client. He refused to grant a gaming permit to a PAC they formed, and issued one to CHARR instead.

15 AAC 160.810(f): "a permittee that dedicates or otherwise transfers net proceeds to another organization must take steps to ensure that the net proceeds are spent in accordance with AS 05.15.150.

C. Prior Advisory Opinions and AG Opinions.

AO97-19-CD (June 3, 1997): APOC determined that the Fairbanks Central Labor Council may not conduct a raffle on behalf of PAC or group, because campaign disclosure laws prohibit unions from making political contributions.

December 2, 1982 Attorney General Opinion No.14 (1982 WL 43795): This opinion addressed three issues: 1) Whether an organization can conduct a raffle on behalf of a political campaign, and transfer more than $1000 to that campaign; 2) Whether there was a limit on the amount of raffle proceeds which could be donated to the campaigns of Libertarian Party candidates, considering the fact that the Libertarian Party was not considered a "political party" under then AS 15.60.010(20) until after the election; and 3) Can a raffle permit be issued to a political organization not in existence for at least five years before it applies for the permit.

The short answers to these questions were that a raffle permit could not be loaned, nor could raffle proceeds in excess of $1000 be given to another campaign. Because the Libertarians were not a recognized political party under AS 15.60.010(2) as it read at the time, there was a limit of $1000 that could be donated to the campaigns of the various Libertarian candidates.

The opinion noted that although there may be grounds for challenging the five year limit as an unconstitutional discrimination against new entrants into the political arena, the statute clearly precluded less than five year old organizations from receiving raffle permits.

1997 Alaska Op. Atty. Gen. 77 (March 16, 1997) 1997 WL 556998: The Department of Revenue had interpreted AS 05.15.150 to mean that political entities could receive permits to conduct any game allowed under AS 05.15 other than raffles or lotteries, but their use of the monies raised through activities other than raffles or lotteries was limited. For example a political entity could get a pull tab permit as long as the proceeds were donated to some other cause. APOC had come to the opposite conclusion, and read the statute to require a denial of a permit—other than for a raffle or lottery—to a political entity. The opinion concluded that the Department of Revenue's interpretation was not unreasonable. The opinion did not address the conflict between APOC and the Department of Revenue.

D. Additional Information:

According to Dan Branch, the AAG who represents the Department of Revenue in matters related to charitable gaming, the Department of Revenue will deny a gaming permit application submitted by a PACs, even if the PAC meets the longevity and number of members requirements. The Department takes the position that PACs are not political organizations for purposes of AS 05.15.690 because PACS are not organized under or affiliated with one of the recognized political parties.

III. ANALYSIS

There does appear to be some tension between the gaming statutes and the campaign finance statutes with regard to the use of raffles and lotteries as fundraisers for political purposes. On the one hand, the gaming statutes allow raffles and lotteries as fundraisers for political candidates, parties and groups. On the other, the campaign finance statutes prohibit nearly every organization which could obtain a gaming permit from making a contribution to a political candidate, party or group. However, because there are certain organizations, namely political parties, that may obtain a gaming permit, and may also make contributions to political candidates and causes, the most plausible reading of the statutes is that raffle and lottery provision was meant only to apply to them. Mr. Wilkson's client simply is not in the limited pool of organizations that may hold a raffle and contribute the proceeds to a political cause, and his focus on the regulation is misplaced.

The Department of Revenue may grant a gaming permit to a "qualified organization." AS 05.15.100(a). The authority to conduct a game under AS 05.15 is contingent upon the dedication of the net proceeds to "political, educational, civic, public, charitable, patriotic or religious uses in the state." AS 05.15.150(a). These "political, educational, etc. uses" do not include the payment of any portion of the net proceeds of any charitable game, except a raffle or lottery[2] to a political candidate, party or group.[3] AS 05.15.150(a). The fact that the statute has a specific prohibition on gaming proceeds going to political purposes, and a specific exception for raffle and lottery proceeds from that prohibition, clearly indicates that the legislature did intend that raffles and lotteries could be used to raise funds for political purposes.

However, AS 15.13.074(f), prohibits a "corporation, company, partnership, firm, association, entity recognized as tax-exempt under 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3)(Internal Revenue Code), organization, business trust or surety, labor union, or publicly funded entity that does not satisfy the definition of group or nongroup entity" from making a contribution to any candidate, group or nongroup entity. This statute encompasses most of the entities who may be allowed to receive gaming permits under AS 05.15.100(a), including, presumably, Mr. Wilkson's client. Mr. Wilkson argues that it is APOC's definition of contribution in 2 AAC 50.250 to include a "transfer" that causes the conflict here, and that the regulations should be amended to allow a non-profit to dedicate raffle and lottery proceeds to its affiliated PAC.

Mr. Wilkson is incorrect. APOC's regulation is entirely valid, and moreover, the simple fact that his client is prohibited from making a contribution to a political cause, does not mean that there is a problem here. The most plausible reading of the statutes is that the legislature intended it to apply only to a small subset of organizations which may obtain a gaming permit, and which may also make contributions to political causes—namely political parties.

A. APOC's Regulation is Valid.

Mr. Wilkson cites APOC's interpretation of "contribution" in 2 AAC 50.250(a)(2) as the cause of the problem vexing his client. Specifically, he claims that the inclusion of the word "transfer" in the regulation, but not in the statute, makes the regulation too broad. He is incorrect. The statutory definition of "contribution", AS 15.13.400(4) is quite broad, and includes any "deposit or gift of money." It is difficult to imagine how a transfer of money would not also be a "deposit."

AS 05.15.100(a).

[3] AS 05.15.150(a) details the specific uses which are not prohibited for raffle and lottery proceeds. For ease of reference in this memorandum, the uses allowed under AS 05.15.150(a)(3)(A)-(C) will be referred to as "political purposes."

2 AAC 50.250 is perfectly valid and in accordance with the law. The Alaska Supreme Court has given the following guidelines for determining the validity of an agency regulation:

> There is a three part analysis which courts apply to the validity of regulations: first whether the legislature delegated the rule making authority to the agency; second whether the regulation is consistent with and reasonably necessary to implement the authorizing statute and whether it is reasonable and not arbitrary, and third court considers whether the regulation conflicts with any other state statute or constitutional provisions.

O'Callaghan v. Rue, 966 P.2d 88 (Alaska 2000).[4] Under this standard, there is nothing improper about 2 AAC 50.250. Under AS 15.13.030(9) APOC has the express authority to adopt regulations necessary to implement the campaign finance statutes. The regulation is consistent with the authorizing statutes, it does not overturn or change the statutory definition of a contribution. The regulation only clarifies and refines the statutory definition, filling in gaps left unaddressed by the legislature.[5] Nor does the regulation appear, on its face, to be unreasonable or arbitrary (and there is no allegation here that is arbitrary).

Slightly more problematic is the third part of the test: Whether the regulation conflicts with any other state statute or constitutional provision. As Mr. Wilkson points out, most organizations that are allowed to obtain a charitable gaming permit are prohibited from making a "contribution" to a political cause. However, the tension between the gaming statutes and the campaign finance statutes is inherent in the statutes

[4] This O'Callaghan analysis is based primarily on AS 44.62.030, which states:

> If, by express or implied terms of a statute, a state agency has authority to adopt regulations to implement, interpret, make specific or otherwise carry out the provisions of the statute, a regulation adopted is not valid or effective unless consistent with the statute and reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of the statute.

[5] One might quibble over the regulation's necessity, but the courts don't seem to take the "reasonably necessary" part of the test all that seriously:

> If we find the proper nexus between the challenged regulation and the statutory purpose (i.e., the regulation is consistent with the statutory purpose), we do not generally require a separate showing of reasonable necessity. Strictly applied, inquiry into whether a regulation is necessary as a means to a legislative end would mire this court in questions of public policy and the advisability of possible alternatives. Such a searching inquiry is beyond our authority and expertise. It is a rare case where a regulation, although not inconsistent with the purpose of the statute, is wholly superfluous to the achievement of that purpose.

State, Department of Revenue, Permanent Fund Dividend Division v. Cosio, 858 P.2d 621, 624 n. 1 (Alaska 1993) themselves, it is not the result of APOC's definition of contribution. Mr. Wilkson claims the addition of the word "transfer" in the administrative definition impermissibly contradicts the gaming statutes. Mr. Wilkson also suggests that APOC "exempt from its administrative definition of 'contribution' moneys generated by a raffle or lottery, deposited into a non-profit corporation permittee's gaming account, and then dedicated to the non-profit corporation's affiliated political action committee."

However, it is not the regulation that prevents a non-profit from dedicating raffle and lottery proceeds to its affiliated PAC, it is the statutory definition of "contribution" itself. AS 15.13.400(4) gives a broad meaning to "contribution," and defines a contribution to include a "a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money...." It is difficult to comprehend how the transfer of funds from a non-profit to a political action committee would not be either a payment, deposit, or gift of money from one entity to another. The inclusion of the word "transfer" by APOC does not materially broaden the definition of contribution in this case.

B. The Statutes are not in Conflict.

As stated above, the potential conflict is inherent in the gaming and campaign finance statutes, not in APOC's definition of contribution. When confronted with two such potentially conflicting statutes the courts will interpret them "with a view toward reconciling conflict and producing a harmonious whole." Allen v. Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, 143 P.3d 664 (Alaska 2006) quoting Progressive Insurance Co. v. Simmons, 953 P.2d 510, 516 (Alaska 1998). And, generally, "if two statutes conflict, then the later in time controls over the earlier, and the specific controls over the general." Id. At every step, however, the legislative intent is the key. Id. The Alaska Supreme Court has also stated that:

> When construing statutory provisions for the presence or absence of conflict, we do not mechanically adhere to their literal meaning in disregard of legislative intent. Instead of the "plain meaning" rule, Alaska follows a sliding scale approach best summed up as, "the plainer the meaning of the language of the statute, the more convincing any contrary legislative history must be." This approach calls for application of the rules of statutory construction and inquiry into legislative history, even when statutory language appears clear in the abstract.

Progressive Insurance Co. v. Simmons, 953 P.2d 510, 516 (Alaska 1998)(internal citations omitted).

Unfortunately the legislative history of the gaming statutes and campaign finance statutes is not particularly helpful in clarifying this situation. Nothing in the legislative history shines any light on the legislative intent behind the particular provisions at issue here. The rule that statute later in time controls the earlier is similarly unenlightening. The amendment to AS 05.15.150(a) that provided for raffles and lotteries was part of the same bill (§ 11 ch 48 SLA 1996) that enacted 15.13.074(f) which prohibited contributions from corporations, non-profits, unions and other organizations. And, the maxim that the specific controls over the general does not provide any guidance, as both statutes seem quite specific in their dictates.

However, just because Mr. Wilkson's client is unable to dedicate raffle or lottery proceeds to political causes, this does not mean that the statutes are necessarily in conflict. The most plausible reading of the statutes is that legislature intended that only political parties and their formal affiliates could hold a raffle or lottery and use the proceeds as described in 05.15.150(a)(3)(A)-(C). A political party is the only type of organization that meets the requirements for a "qualified organization" under the gaming statutes, and also retains the ability to make contributions to political causes under the campaign finance statutes.

AS 05.15.690(38) defines a "qualified organization" to include a "political organization." AS 05.15.690(36) defines a political organization as "an organization or club organized under or formally affiliated with a political party as defined in AS 15.60.010."[6] So, under the gaming statutes, a political party and its affiliates may obtain a permit to run a raffle or lottery. Turning to the campaign finance statutes, a political party is not one of the organizations prohibited from making a contribution to a candidate, group or nongroup entity under AS 15.13.074(f). Moreover, the campaign statutes specifically allow political parties to make contributions in certain amounts to candidates for state and local offices. AS 15.13.070.

This reading of the statutes also makes the most sense when viewed in the light of the general purposes behind the campaign finance laws. Mr. Wilkson's suggestion that the regulations be amended to allow a non-profit to contribute raffle and lottery proceeds to an affiliated PAC would create a massive loophole in the campaign finance laws. There would be nothing to prevent an organization from holding a raffle to benefit a particular candidate, with tickets priced at $10,000 and two dollar stuffed toy as the prize. However, the amount a political party may contribute to a campaign is limited under AS 15.13.070. A raffle or lottery may give a political party a new and different fundraising

[6] AS 15.60.010 defines a political party as:
[A]n organized group of voters that represents a political program and
(A) that nominated a candidate for governor who received at least three percent of the total votes cast for governor at the preceding general election or has registered voters in the state equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes case for governor at the preceding general election;
(B) if the office of governor was not on the ballot at the preceding general election but the office of United States senator was on that ballot, that nominated a candidate for United States senator who received at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States senator at that general election or has registered votes in the state equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States senator at that general election; or
(C) if neither the office of governor nor the office of United States senator was on the ballot at the preceding general election, that nominated a candidate for United States representative who received at least three percent of the total votes case for United States representative at that general election or has registered voters in the stat equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States representative at that general election.

tool, but it will not affect the total amount that may be contributed to various political causes.

Therefore, I recommend that the APOC maintain its current position, as expressed in the June 3, 1997 advisory opinion.

Number: AO97-19-CD

Requested by: John S. Brown, President

On Behalf of: Fairbanks Central Labor Council

Prepared by: Jenifer Kohout, Assistant Director

Date issued: June 3, 1997

Subject: Use of Gaming Permits

On November 6, 1997, the Alaska Public Offices Commission approved the following advisory opinion by a vote of 5-0.

This is in response to your August 22, 1997 letter requesting an advisory opinion regarding whether the Fairbanks Central Labor Council ("the Council") may allow a political action group to use the Council's gaming permit to conduct a raffle.

Summary

The Council may not conduct a raffle on behalf of a group formed for the purpose of political action. The campaign disclosure law prohibits unions from making political contributions.

The Law

AS 15.13.074(f) A corporation, company, partnership, firm, association, organization, business trust or surety, labor union, or publicly funded entity that does not satisfy the definition of group in AS 15.13.4000 may not make a contribution to a candidate or group.

2 AAC 50.313. Definition of a "Contribution." (a) In 2 AAC 50.310 - 2 AAC 50.405, except as otherwise provided in this section, "contribution" includes a payment, gift, subscription, loan, advance, transfer deposit of money, services, or anything of value made by a person or group for the purpose of influencing an election for state or municipal office or influencing the passage or defeat of a ballot proposition or question; and includes a personal contribution as described in 2 AAC 50.316.

In this section "anything of value" includes facilities, equipment, polling information, supplies, advertising services, membership lists, mailing lists, any item of real or personal property, and personal services of any kind, the cost or consideration for which is paid by a person other than the candidate or group for whom the services are rendered.

Facts

You indicate that the Council has possessed a State of Alaska Gaming Permit for some years. A group formed for the purpose of political action has recently requested the use of the Council's gaming permit to conduct a raffle. The proceeds of the raffle would be donated to political candidates.

When we spoke on the phone, you indicated that the Council's gaming permit allows the Council to run raffles for other nonprofit organizations. In the past, the Council has allowed other organizations to use the Council's permit. The organization using the permit orders the raffle tickets, picks them up and distributes them. As the permit holder, the Council handles the money for the actual raffle. After raffle costs are paid, you send a check for the remaining raffle proceeds to the organization using the permit. You state that as the "member in charge" you personally do the accounting. You also add that your services to the Council are volunteer.

The Manager of the Gaming Unit in the Department of Revenue, further clarified to staff that gaming permit holders may not transfer use of their gaming permits to another organization. Instead, an organization who holds a permit may conduct a raffle on behalf of a nonprofit organization. The permit holder accounts for all proceeds and then donates the money to the nonprofit organization.

Analysis

Under the campaign disclosure law, unions are now prohibited from making political contributions. This prohibition applies to the donation of money derived from the use of a union's gaming permit.

According to the head of the Gaming Unit in the Division of Income and Excise of the Department of Revenue, an organization who holds a gaming permit may not transfer its permit to another organization. Instead, a permit holder may conduct a raffle in the name of another organization and then donate the proceeds to that organization.

This arrangement is consistent with the mechanics you had described. Although the political action group you reference would buy and distribute the raffle tickets, the Council would collect all the money, pay the raffle costs, then issue a check to the political action committee for the raffle proceeds. This arrangement results in a contribution from the Council to the political action group. As a result, it is prohibited.

Conclusion

The Council may not use its gaming permit to conduct a raffle on behalf of a group formed for the purpose of political action.

Sec. ⏩15.13.010⏪. Applicability.

(a) This chapter applies

(1) in every election for governor, lieutenant governor, a member of the state legislature, a delegate to a constitutional convention, or judge seeking judicial retention;

(2) to every candidate for election to a municipal office in a municipality with a population of more than 1,000 inhabitants according to the latest United States census figures or estimates of population certified as correct for administrative purposes by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development unless the municipality has exempted itself from the provisions of this chapter; a municipality may exempt its elected municipal officers from the requirements of this chapter if a majority of the voters voting on the question at a regular election, as defined by AS 29.71.800 (20), or a special municipality-wide election called for that purpose, votes to exempt its elected municipal officers from the requirements of this chapter; the question of exemption from the requirements of this chapter may be submitted by the governing body by ordinance or by initiative election.

(b) Except as otherwise provided, this chapter applies to contributions, expenditures and communications made by a candidate, group, nongroup entity, municipality or individual for the purpose of influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question as well as those made to influence the nomination or election of a candidate.

(c) This chapter does not prohibit a municipality from regulating by ordinance election campaign contributions and expenditures in municipal elections, or from regulating those campaign contributions and expenditures more strictly than provided in this chapter.

(d) This chapter does not limit the authority of a person to make contributions to influence the outcome of a voter proposition submitted to the public for a vote at a municipal election. In this subsection, in addition to its meaning under AS 15.13.065 (c), "proposition" means a municipal reclassification, proposal to adopt or amend a home rule charter, a unification proposal, a boundary change proposal, or the approval of an ordinance when approval by public vote is a requirement for the ordinance.

Sec. 15.13.030. Duties of the commission.

The commission shall

(1) develop and provide all forms for the reports and statements required to be made under this chapter, AS 24.45, and AS 39.50;

(2) prepare and publish a manual setting out uniform methods of bookkeeping and reporting for use by persons required to make reports and statements under this chapter and otherwise assist candidates, groups, and individuals in complying with the requirements of this chapter;

(3) receive and hold open for public inspection reports and statements required to be made under this chapter and, upon request, furnish copies at cost to interested persons;

(4) compile and maintain a current list of all filed reports and statements;

(5) prepare a summary of each report filed under AS 15.13.110 and make copies of this summary available to interested persons at their actual cost;

(6) notify, by registered or certified mail, all persons who are delinquent in filing reports and statements required to be made under this chapter;

(7) examine, investigate, and compare all reports, statements, and actions required by this chapter, AS 24.45, and AS 39.50;

(8) prepare and publish a biennial report concerning the activities of the commission, the effectiveness of this chapter, its enforcement by the attorney general's office, and recommendations and proposals for change; the commission shall notify the legislature that the report is available;

(9) adopt regulations necessary to implement and clarify the provisions of AS 24.45, AS 39.50, and this chapter, subject to the provisions of AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act); and

(10) consider a written request for an advisory opinion concerning the application of this chapter, AS 24.45, AS 24.60.200 - 24.60.260, or AS 39.50.

Sec. 15.13.040. Contributions, expenditures, and supplying of services to be reported.

(a) Except as provided in (g) and (l) of this section, each candidate shall make a full report, upon a form prescribed by the commission,

(1) listing

(A) the date and amount of all expenditures made by the candidate;

(B) the total amount of all contributions, including all funds contributed by the candidate;

(C) the name, address, date, and amount contributed by each contributor; and

(D) for contributions in excess of $50 in the aggregate during a calendar year, the principal occupation and employer of the contributor; and

(2) filed in accordance with AS 15.13.110 and certified correct by the candidate or campaign treasurer.

(b) Each group shall make a full report upon a form prescribed by the commission, listing

(1) the name and address of each officer and director;

(2) the aggregate amount of all contributions made to it; and, for all contributions in excess of $100 in the aggregate a year, the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the contributor, and the date and amount contributed by each contributor; for purposes of this paragraph, "contributor" means the true source of the funds, property, or services being contributed; and

(3) the date and amount of all contributions made by it and all expenditures made, incurred, or authorized by it.

(c) The report required under (b) of this section shall be filed in accordance with AS 15.13.110 and shall be certified as correct by the group's treasurer.

(d) Every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group making an expenditure shall make a full report of expenditures, upon a form prescribed by the commission, unless exempt from reporting.

(e) The report required under (d) of this section must contain the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report, and an itemized list of expenditures. The report shall be filed with the commission no later than 10 days after the expenditure is made.

(f) During each year in which an election occurs, all businesses, persons, or groups that furnish any of the following services, facilities, or supplies to a candidate or group shall maintain a record of each transaction: newspapers, radio, television, advertising, advertising agency services, accounting, billboards, printing, secretarial, public opinion polls, or research and professional campaign consultation or management, media production or preparation, or computer services. Records of provision of services, facilities, or supplies shall be available for inspection by the commission.

(g) The provisions of (a) and (l) of this section do not apply to a delegate to a constitutional convention, a judge seeking judicial retention, or a candidate for election to a municipal office under AS ⏩15.13.010 ⏪, if that delegate, judge, or candidate

(1) indicates, on a form prescribed by the commission, an intent not to raise and not to expend more than $5,000 in seeking election to office, including both the primary and general elections;

(2) accepts contributions totaling not more than $5,000 in seeking election to office, including both the primary and general elections; and

(3) makes expenditures totaling not more than $5,000 in seeking election to office, including both the primary and general elections.

(h) The provisions of (d) of this section do not apply to one or more expenditures made by an individual acting independently of any group or nongroup entity and independently of any other individual if the expenditures

(1) cumulatively do not exceed $500 during a calendar year; and

(2) are made only for billboards, signs, or printed material concerning a ballot proposition as that term is defined by AS 15.13.065(c).

(i) The permission of the owner of real or personal property to post political signs, including bumper stickers, or to use space for an event or to store campaign-related materials is not considered to be a contribution to a candidate under this chapter unless the owner customarily charges a fee or receives payment for that activity. The fact that the owner customarily charges a fee or receives payment for posting signs that are not political signs is not determinative of whether the owner customarily does so for political signs.

(j) Except as provided in (l) of this section, each nongroup entity shall make a full report in accordance with AS 15.13.110 upon a form prescribed by the commission and certified by the nongroup entity's treasurer, listing

(1) the name and address of each officer and director of the nongroup entity;

(2) the aggregate amount of all contributions made to the nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election;

(3) for all contributions described in (2) of this subsection, the name, address, date, and amount contributed by each contributor and, for all contributions described in (2) of this subsection in excess of $250 in the aggregate during a calendar year, the principal occupation and employer of the contributor; and

(4) the date and amount of all contributions made by the nongroup entity, and, except as provided for certain independent expenditures in AS 15.13.135 (a), all expenditures made, incurred, or authorized by the nongroup entity, for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election; a nongroup entity shall report contributions made to a different nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election and expenditures made on behalf of a different nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election as soon as the total contributions and expenditures to that nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election reach $500 in a year and for all subsequent contributions and expenditures to that nongroup entity in a year whenever the total contributions and expenditures to that nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election that have not been reported under this paragraph reach $500.

(k) Every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group contributing a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of a proposition shall report the contribution or contributions on a form prescribed by the commission not later than 30 days after the contribution that requires the contributor to report under this subsection is made. The report must include the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report and the amount of the contribution, as well as the total amount of contributions made to that group by that individual, person, nongroup entity, or group during the calendar year.

(l) Notwithstanding (a), (b), and (j) of this section, for any fund-raising activity in which contributions are in amounts or values that do not exceed $50 a person, the candidate, group, or nongroup entity shall report contributions and expenditures and supplying of services under this subsection as follows:

(1) a report under this subsection must

(A) describe the fund-raising activity;

(B) include the number of persons making contributions and the total proceeds from the activity;

(C) report all contributions made for the fund-raising activity that do not exceed $50 a person in amount or value; if a contribution for the fund-raising activity exceeds $50, the contribution shall be reported under (a), (b), and (j) of this section;

(2) for purposes of this subsection,

(A) "contribution" means a cash donation, a purchase such as the purchase of a ticket, the purchase of goods or services offered for sale at a fund-raising activity, or a donation of goods or services for the fund-raising activity;

(B) "fund-raising activity" means an activity, event, or sale of goods undertaken by a candidate, group, or nongroup entity in which contributions are $50 a person or less in amount or value.

(m) Information required under this chapter shall be submitted to the commission electronically, except that the following information may be submitted in clear and legible black typeface or hand-printed in dark ink on paper in a format approved by the commission or on forms provided by the commission:

(1) information submitted by

(A) a candidate for election to a borough or city office of mayor, membership on a borough assembly, city council, or school board, or any state office, who meets the requirements of (g)(1) - (3) of this section; or

(B) a candidate for municipal office for a municipality with a population of less than 15,000; in this subparagraph, "municipal office" means the office of an elected borough or city

(i) mayor; or

(ii) assembly, council, or school board member;

(2) any information if the commission determines that circumstances warrant an exception to the electronic submission requirement.

(n) The commission shall print the forms to be provided under this chapter so that the front and back of each page have the same orientation when the page is rotated on the vertical axis of the page.

(o) Information required by this chapter that is submitted to the commission on paper and not electronically shall be electronically scanned and published on the Internet by the commission, in a format accessible to the general public, within two working days after the commission receives the information.

(p) For purposes of (b) and (j) of this section, "contributor" means the true source of the funds, property, or services being contributed.

Sec. 15.13.067. Who may make expenditures.

Only the following may make an expenditure in an election for candidates for elective office:

(1) the candidate;

(2) an individual;

(3) a group that has registered under AS 15.13.050 ; and

(4) a nongroup entity that has registered under AS 15.13.050 .

Sec. 15.13.082. Limitations on expenditures.

(a) A candidate or group may not make an expenditure in cash that exceeds $100 unless the candidate, or the campaign treasurer or deputy campaign treasurer, obtains a written receipt from the person to whom the expenditure is made.

(b) A candidate, group, or nongroup entity may not make an expenditure unless the source of the expenditure has been disclosed as required by this chapter.

(c) If a candidate receives a contribution in the form of cash, check, money order, or other negotiable instrument and is subject to being reported to the commission under this chapter, the candidate may neither expend the contribution nor, in the case of a negotiable instrument, convert it to cash unless the candidate, campaign treasurer, or deputy campaign treasurer first records the following information for disclosure to the commission:

(1) the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the contributor; and

(2) the date and amount of the contribution.

Sec. 15.13.084. Prohibited expenditures.

A person may not make an expenditure

(1) anonymously, unless the expenditure is

(A) paid for by an individual acting independently of any group or nongroup entity and independently of any other individual;

(B) made to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition as that term is defined by AS 15.13.065 (c); and

(C) made for

(i) a billboard or sign; or

(ii) printed material, other than an advertisement made in a newspaper or other periodical;

(2) using a fictitious name or using the name of another.

Sec. 15.13.086. Authorized makers of expenditures.

An expenditure

(1) authorized by or in behalf of a candidate may be made only by

(A) the candidate; or

(B) the candidate's campaign treasurer or a deputy campaign treasurer;

(2) authorized by AS 15.13.067 (3) by or in behalf of a group may be made only by the group's campaign treasurer.

Sec. 15.13.090. Identification of communication.

(a) All communications shall be clearly identified by the words "paid for by" followed by the name and address of the candidate, group, nongroup entity, or individual paying for the communication. In addition, candidates and groups may identify the name of their campaign chairperson.

(b) The provisions of (a) of this section do not apply when the communication

(1) is paid for by an individual acting independently of any group or nongroup entity and independently of any other individual;

(2) is made to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition as that term is defined by AS 15.13.065 (c); and

(3) is made for

(A) a billboard or sign; or

(B) printed material other than an advertisement made in a newspaper or other periodical.

Sec. 15.13.110. Filing of reports.

(a) Each candidate, group, and nongroup entity shall make a full report in accordance with AS 15.13.040 for the period ending three days before the due date of the report and beginning on the last day covered by the most recent previous report. If the report is a first report, it must cover the period from the beginning of the campaign to the date three days before the due date of the report. If the report is a report due February 15, it must cover the period beginning on the last day covered by the most recent previous report or on the day that the campaign started, whichever is later, and ending on February 1 of that year. The report shall be filed

(1) 30 days before the election; however, this report is not required if the deadline for filing a nominating petition or declaration of candidacy is within 30 days of the election;

(2) one week before the election;

(3) 105 days after a special election; and

(4) February 15 for expenditures made and contributions received that were not reported previously, including, if applicable, all amounts expended from a public office expense term account established under AS 15.13.116(a)(8) and all amounts expended from a municipal office account under AS 15.13.116 (a)(9), or when expenditures were not made or contributions were not received during the previous year.

(b) Each contribution that exceeds $250 and that is made within nine days of the election shall be reported to the commission by date, amount, and contributor within 24 hours of receipt by the candidate, group, campaign treasurer, or deputy campaign treasurer. Each contribution to a nongroup entity for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election that exceeds $250 and that is made within nine days of the election shall be reported to the commission by date, amount, and contributor within 24 hours of receipt by the nongroup entity.

(c) All reports required by this chapter shall be filed with the commission's central office and shall be kept open to public inspection. Within 30 days after each election, the commission shall prepare a summary of each report which shall be made available to the public at cost upon request. Each summary shall use uniform categories of reporting.

(d) [Repealed, Sec. 35 ch 126 SLA 1994].

(e) A group formed to sponsor an initiative, a referendum or a recall shall report 30 days after its first filing with the lieutenant governor. Thereafter each group shall report within 10 days after the end of each calendar quarter on the contributions received and expenditures made during the preceding calendar quarter until reports are due under (a) of this section.

(f) During the year in which the election is scheduled, each of the following shall file the campaign disclosure reports in the manner and at the times required by this section:

(1) a person who, under the regulations adopted by the commission to implement AS 15.13.100, indicates an intention to become a candidate for elective state executive or legislative office;

(2) a person who has filed a nominating petition under AS 15.25.140 - 15.25.200 to become a candidate at the general election for elective state executive or legislative office;

(3) a person who campaigns as a write-in candidate for elective state executive or legislative office at the general election; and

(4) a group or nongroup entity that receives contributions or makes expenditures on behalf of or in opposition to a person described in (1) - (3) of this subsection, except as provided for certain independent expenditures by nongroup entities in AS 15.13.135 (a).

Sec. 15.13.111. Preservation of records.

(a) Each candidate, group, nongroup entity, or person required to report under this chapter shall preserve all records necessary to substantiate information required to be reported under this chapter for a period of six years from the date of the election for which the information was required to be reported, unless the records have been submitted to the commission under (c) of this section.

(b) Information preserved under (a) of this section must be made available for inspection by the commission.

(c) A candidate for state elected office who was not elected or a person who has left state elected office may submit the records required to be preserved under (a) of this section to the commission electronically. Records submitted under this subsection shall be preserved by the commission for a period of six years from the date of the election for which the information was required to be reported.

Sec. 15.13.135. Independent expenditures for or against candidates.

(a) Only an individual, group, or nongroup entity may make an independent expenditure supporting or opposing a candidate for election to public office. An independent expenditure supporting or opposing a candidate for election to public office, except an independent expenditure made by a nongroup entity with an annual operating budget of $250 or less, shall be reported in accordance with AS 15.13.040 and 15.13.100 - 15.13.110 and other requirements of this chapter.

(b) An individual, group, or nongroup entity who makes independent expenditures for a mass mailing, for distribution of campaign literature of any sort, for a television, radio, newspaper, or magazine advertisement, or any other communication that supports or opposes a candidate for election to public office

(1) shall comply with AS 15.13.090 ; and

(2) shall place the following statement in the mailing, literature, advertisement, or other communication so that it is readily and easily discernible:

This NOTICE TO VOTERS is required by Alaska law. (I/we) certify that this (mailing/literature/advertisement) is not authorized, paid for, or approved by the candidate.

Sec. 15.13.140. Independent expenditures for or against ballot proposition or question.

(a) This chapter does not prohibit a person from making independent expenditures in support of or in opposition to a ballot proposition or question.

(b) An independent expenditure for or against a ballot proposition or question

(1) shall be reported in accordance with AS 15.13.040 and 15.13.100 - 15.13.110 and other requirements of this chapter; and

(2) may not be made if the expenditure is prohibited by AS 15.13.145 .

Sec.15.13.400. Definitions

In this chapter,

(1) "candidate"

(A) means an individual who files for election to the state legislature, for governor, for lieutenant governor, for municipal office, for retention in judicial office, or for constitutional convention delegate, or who campaigns as a write-in candidate for any of these offices; and

(B) when used in a provision of this chapter that limits or prohibits the donation, solicitation, or acceptance of campaign contributions, or limits or prohibits an expenditure, includes

(i) a candidate's campaign treasurer and a deputy campaign treasurer;

(ii) a member of the candidate's immediate family;

(iii) a person acting as agent for the candidate;

(iv) the candidate's campaign committee; and

(v) a group that makes expenditures or receives contributions with the authorization or consent, express or implied, or under the control, direct or indirect, of the candidate;

(2) "commission" means the Alaska Public Offices Commission;

(3) "communication" means an announcement or advertisement disseminated through print or broadcast media, including radio, television, cable, and satellite, the Internet, or through a mass mailing, excluding those placed by an individual or nongroup entity and costing $500 or less and those that do not directly or indirectly identify a candidate or proposition, as that term is defined in AS 15.13.065(c);

(4) "contribution"

(A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made and that is made for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of a candidate, and in AS ⏩15.13.010⏪ (b) for the purpose of influencing a ballot proposition or question, including the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that are rendered to the candidate or political party;

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party;

(5) "electioneering communication" means a communication that

(A) directly or indirectly identifies a candidate;

(B) addresses an issue of national, state, or local political importance and attributes a position on that issue to the candidate identified; and

(C) occurs within the 30 days preceding a general or municipal election;

(6) "expenditure"

(A) means a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate or of any individual who files for nomination at a later date and becomes a candidate;

(ii) use by a political party;

(iii) the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party of compensation for the personal services of another person that are rendered to a candidate or political party; or

(iv) influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question;

(B) does not include a candidate's filing fee or the cost of preparing reports and statements required by this chapter;

(C) includes an express communication and an electioneering communication, but does not include an issues communication;

(7) "express communication" means a communication that, when read as a whole and with limited reference to outside events, is susceptible of no other reasonable interpretation but as an exhortation to vote for or against a specific candidate;

(8) "group" means

(A) every state and regional executive committee of a political party; and

(B) any combination of two or more individuals acting jointly who organize for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of one or more elections and who take action the major purpose of which is to influence the outcome of an election; a group that makes expenditures or receives contributions with the authorization or consent, express or implied, or under the control, direct or indirect, of a candidate shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate; a group whose major purpose is to further the nomination, election, or candidacy of only one individual, or intends to expend more than 50 percent of its money on a single candidate, shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate and its actions done with the candidate's knowledge and consent unless, within 10 days from the date the candidate learns of the existence of the group the candidate files with the commission, on a form provided by the commission, an affidavit that the group is operating without the candidate's control; a group organized for more than one year preceding an election and endorsing candidates for more than one office or more than one political party is presumed not to be controlled by a candidate; however, a group that contributes more than 50 percent of its money to or on behalf of one candidate shall be considered to support only one candidate for purposes of AS 15.13.070 , whether or not control of the group has been disclaimed by the candidate;

(9) "immediate family" means the spouse, parents, children, including a stepchild and an adoptive child, and siblings of an individual;

(10) "independent expenditure" means an expenditure that is made without the direct or indirect consultation or cooperation with, or at the suggestion or the request of, or with the prior consent of, a candidate, a candidate's campaign treasurer or deputy campaign treasurer, or another person acting as a principal or agent of the candidate;

(11) "individual" means a natural person;

(12) "issues communication" means a communication that

(A) directly or indirectly identifies a candidate; and

(B) addresses an issue of national, state, or local political importance and does not support or oppose a candidate for election to public office.

(13) "nongroup entity" means a person, other than an individual, that takes action the major purpose of which is to influence the outcome of an election, and that

(A) cannot participate in business activities;

(B) does not have shareholders who have a claim on corporate earnings; and

(C) is independent from the influence of business corporations.

(14) "person" has the meaning given in AS 01.10.060 , and includes a labor union, nongroup entity, and a group;

(15) "political party" means any group that is a political party under AS 15.60.010 and any subordinate unit of that group if, consistent with the rules or bylaws of the political party, the unit conducts or supports campaign operations in a municipality, neighborhood, house district, or precinct;

(16) "publicly funded entity" means a person, other than an individual, that receives half or more of the money on which it operates during a calendar year from government, including a public corporation.

Chapter 15.15. ELECTIONS AND BALLOTS

April 9, 2010

Dear Chairman Ramras and Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

I am writing to share concerns my organization, the Center for Competitive Politics (CCP), has regarding Senate Bill 284, a bill that seriously restricts Alaskans' right to free speech.

CCP is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization focused on promoting and protecting the First Amendment political rights of speech, assembly, and petition. It was founded in 2005 by Bradley A. Smith, a former member and chairman of the Federal Election Commission.

This bill restricts the right to free speech by requiring extensive disclaimer statements on political advertisements. Such requirements infringe on the amount of time a candidate or political committee can spend conveying their message, effectively establishing limits on the amount of speech that can take place.

The Supreme Court held in Buckley v. Valeo that independent expenditures are a protected form of speech and have significant protections from burdensome government regulation.[1] Passage of this bill would likely set the stage for an unsuccessful and costly legal battle for the state of Alaska.

In Buckley, the Supreme Court struck down limits on independent expenditures. The Court issued a per curium decision, stating:

> While the independent expenditure ceiling thus fails to serve any substantial governmental interest in stemming [424 U.S. 1, 48] the reality or appearance of corruption in the electoral process, it heavily burdens core First Amendment expression. For the First Amendment right to ""speak one's mind . . . on all public institutions"" includes the right to engage in ""vigorous advocacy' no less than `abstract discussion.""[2]

The Court recently reaffirmed in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission that raising barriers to speech constitutes a violation of the First Amendment, and mandating the content of a speaker's advertisement in the way proposed in the bill would certainly impose such a burden.[3]

[2] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) quoting New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S., at 269 , quoting Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252, 270 (1941), and NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S., at 429.
[3] Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. 50 (2010).

Moreover, the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service published a recent report that warned disclaimers could be proposed that would be too onerous to survive legal challenge:

> If a disclaimer requirement was so burdensome that it impeded the ability of a corporation to speak–for example, a requirement that a disclaimer compromise an unreasonable amount of time–a court might conclude that it is a violation of a corporation's free speech rights under Citizens United.[4]

SB 284 also conflicts with the Supreme Court's jurisprudence on disclosure. While disclosure requirements were upheld in the recent Citizens United decision, the measures proposed here go further than what was addressed by requiring a disclaimer to include the names of the top five donors to a group running political ads. The top five donors, however, did not necessarily aid in furthering that ad, and for that reason there is no reason to disclose their identities.

To punish members of a group by compelling their disclosure is to offend the rights of association and speech engendered in the First Amendment. In NAACP v. Alabama, the Court recognized that compelled disclosure laws that effectively make these rights mutually exclusive are constitutionally invalid.

The Supreme Court ruled in Buckley that the regulation of political speech and association is justifiable only when its purpose is to "provide the electorate with information...to aid the voters in evaluating those who seek federal office" and to "deter actual corruption and [its] appearance...by exposing large contributions and expenditures to the light of publicity."[5]

SB 284 fails to satisfy any of these interests by requiring superfluous information in disclaimers that serve no useful purpose and will ultimately diminish the amount of political speech rather than enlighten the average citizen. I hope you find this information valuable as you consider SB 284. Should you have any further questions regarding this bill or other campaign finance proposals, please do not hesitate to contact me at (703) 894-6822 or by email at lrenz@campaignfreedom.org.

The Honorable Jay Ramras, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska Capitol, Room 118
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

RE: SB 284 (Senate Judiciary Committee)--Support

Dear Chair Ramras:

On behalf of the members of AARP in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee to support SB 284, sponsored by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

AARP believes transparency is critical to government integrity and civic engagement. Openness is a fundamental feature of democracies and governmental operations, including elections, should operate in public view.

The ability of government to respond to the concerns of citizens, promote the public interest, and retain public confidence in its fairness, competence, and relevance is dependent in large measure on adhering to policies that promote and sustain integrity.

Unfortunately, trust in government is extremely low. Whether true or not, government officials and processes are often viewed as more responsive to the concerns of moneyed special interests than those of the general public.

SB 284 will not solve the entire credibility problem. However, SB 284 will get us closer to restoring confidence in government and transparency in elections and campaigns.

SB 284 will help ensure clarity and honesty in election advertising, including requiring meaningful descriptions of who has paid for an ad.

AARP requests an "AYE" vote on SB 284.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Thank you for your consideration.

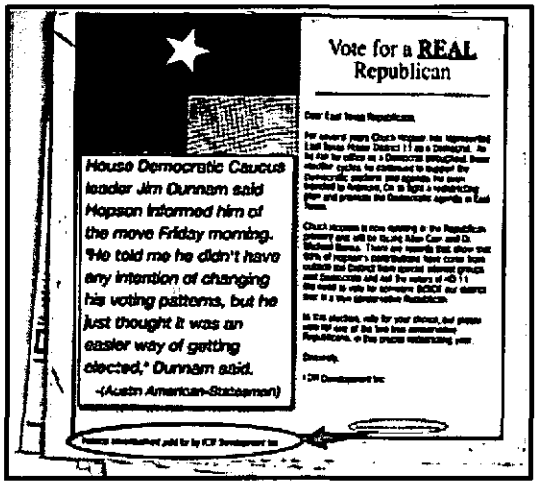
THE TEXAS TRIBUNE

The First Corporate Ad

by Ross Ramsey
March 22, 2010



The KDR Development Inc. advertisement that ran in the Panola Watchman

The first political ads bought by a corporation in Texas appeared in East Texas newspapers just weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court effectively ended the state's ban on that kind of spending.

The ads appear to mark the first instance of a corporation directly playing in a Texas election since the nation's highest court lifted a century-old ban on political spending by corporations and labor unions. That January ruling — in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission — doesn't affect contributions to candidates, which remain restricted. But it does mean corporations and unions can spend money as they wish on politics and run all the ads they want, so long as they don't coordinate their efforts, messages and plans with the campaigns they're promoting or with other third-party groups that have similar political interests.

The ads in the Jacksonville Daily Progress, the Tyler Morning Telegram and the Panola Watchman took issue with the Republican bona fides of state Rep. Chuck Hopson of Jacksonville, a Democratic incumbent who jumped to the GOP in November and ran in a three-way race in the Republican primary this month. He got 61 percent of the vote, easily besting Michael Banks and Allan Cain.

The newspaper ads ran in Jacksonville and Tyler on the Sunday before the election and a week earlier in Panola, and they urged voters to choose anyone but Hopson. They were paid for by KDR Development Inc., a real estate company whose president, Republican Larry Durrett, lost to Hopson in 2006, when Hopson was still a Democrat. Durrett is also the president of Southern Multifoods, a Jacksonville-based company with dozens of franchised Taco Bell, KFC, Pizza Hut, A&W and Long John Silvers restaurants. The two companies are closely related, sharing addresses, officers and directors.

"I think we're on solid legal ground," Durrett said in an interview. "We checked it out every way from Sunday."

At least one paper — the Longview News-Journal — had reservations. "The disclaimer wasn't complete, and then we saw that it was a corporate ad," said Alan Todd, the paper's advertising director. "When we questioned it, [the buyer] pulled the ad."

Durrett wanted to run ads against Hopson and had been reading and hearing about the Supreme Court ruling on corporate politicking. He checked with a lawyer in Tyler, who sent him to a specialist in Austin, did "a significant amount of discussion about this," and then went to the papers with the ads. "My businesses do better under conservative people and not under people who aren't," he said. "There are an awful lot of folks on the Republican side of the House who aren't all that conservative, and that's an irritant." He felt the other two candidates were more conservative than Hopson.

He used corporate money for a simple reason. "You take the money out of the pocket that's got some money in there," he said.

Durrett doesn't consider Hopson's win a complete loss for his side: "If you continue to point out that people aren't as conservative as you are, it moves them to the right."

The ad has a quote on one side, and the copy on the other is standard fare for a House race, written in the form of a letter.

The quote, from the Austin American-Statesman: "House Democratic Caucus leader Jim Dunnam said Hopson informed him of the move Friday morning. 'He told me he didn't have any intention of changing his voting patterns, but he just thought it was an easier way of getting elected,' Dunnam said."

The letter:

> Dear East Texas Republicans,
> For several years Chuck Hopson has represented East Texas House District 11 as a Democrat. As he ran for office as a Democrat throughout these election cycles, he continued to support the Democratic platform and agenda. He even traveled to Ardmore, OK to fight a redistricting plan and promote the Democratic agenda in East Texas.
> Chuck Hopson is now running in the Republican primary and will be facing Allan Cain and Dr. Michael Banks. There are records that show that 90% of Hopson's contributions have come from outside the District from special interest groups and Democrats and not the voters of HD 11. We need to vote for someone INSIDE our district that is a true conservative Republican.
> In this election, vote for your choice, but please vote for one of the two true conservative Republicans, in this crucial redistricting year.
> Sincerely,
> KDR Development Inc

Before the Supreme Court ruling, that would have been an illegal ad in Texas, purely based on the corporate funding. So long as KDR didn't work with the campaigns or with anyone else on the copy, it now appears to be the sort of direct corporate expenditure the Supremes are protecting.

"It raised some issues with us, and I asked some people in the organization to look at it," said Amy Miller, publisher of the Daily Progress. In the end, the paper decided to accept the ad: "It's a pre-paid political ad, and I didn't see anything wrong with it."

The ad does bear some similarities to printed mailers sent by others. Cain, for instance, used that same quote from Dunnam in a mailer that also carried the "Hopson is not conservative" theme. Former state Sen. Drew Nixon, R-Carthage, paid for ads in the race, too, using that Dunnam quote again and a chart very similar to that used in Cain's flyer. Signed by three of the four GOP county chairs in the district, it was more direct in its hit on the party-switcher: "Make no mistake, Chuck Hopson is a Democrat."

But as long as the corporation wasn't in league with anyone else, they appear to be the first example of what might be possible under the court's ruling. The Texas Ethics Commission, which regulates these things, is still working on a full opinion of this new world of campaign finance. The agency posted its first impression online right after the court issued its ruling:

> "... We believe the Texas Legislature intended laws under our jurisdiction to prohibit political expenditures by corporations to the full extent allowed by the Constitution, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court. In light of the recently issued United States Supreme Court ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, it is our position that corporations are allowed to make all types of direct campaign expenditures ... It is also our position that corporations are still prohibited from making political contributions unless specifically allowed..."

TEC now has a draft opinion in circulation — not yet voted out by its board — that goes further: "For the reasons stated in Citizens United, we cannot ... prohibit a corporation or labor organization from making a direct campaign expenditure or ... prohibit an individual or other association from making a direct campaign expenditure."

They can still block corporations and labor organizations from making contributions to candidates, but they can't do anything if those outfits want to spend money for or against the candidates without the candidates' knowledge.

To: All Alaska State Senators

From: Frank Bettine, In-House Counsel

I urge you to vote against SB284 unless it is modified substantially. SB284 needs to be completely rewritten. The Supreme Court in Citizens United v. FEC made it clear that it did not want corporations subject to the same reporting requirements as a PAC otherwise it would have simply held that corporations could speak through a PAC. Yet, the legislation as written imposed more reporting requirements on a corporation than it does a PAC. A PAC is a creature of the APOC. A corporation is not. It comes into existence without any approval of the APOC.

Sec. 4. AS 15.13.040(e):

Paragraphs (3) – delete in its entirety. A corporation should not be required to submit this information. Who or what the corporation opposes or supports will be evident in its advocacy ads.

Paragraphs (4) – delete in its entirety. This information is available online at State of Alaska, Corporations division.

Paragraphs (5) – This paragraph is an insult to every Alaskan. Alaskan should not be required to give up their right to privacy for making a small donation to support a candidate or ballot initiative. The right of an individual to participate in the political process is a fundamental right. We zealously guard our right to cast a ballot in secret for the candidate or ballot initiative of our choice. Alaska Constitution provides a heightened right to privacy. Why should an individual be required to give up that right for contributing a mere $100, which is less than the cost of filling up your favorite pickup truck with gas. This number must be much greater than $100, something more like a $1000.

Also this paragraph must be modified to allow an individual to contribute to multiple candidates or initiatives without invoking the reporting requirements. For example, if a corporation is running ads to support two candidates an individual should be able to contribute up to $1000 per candidate before triggering reporting requirements. Otherwise a corporation would be treated differently than a PAC. For example if a PAC existed for each candidate, an individual could contribute to both PACs up to the amount that triggered reporting requirements, without having to report the contributions.

Also this limit must be per race. For example if I contribute $1000 to candidate X in the primary election, I should be allowed to contribute another $1000 to candidate X in the general election without triggering reporting requirements.

Sec. 13. AS 15.13.090 – working on an amendment

Paragraph (2)(a)&(b) – delete in its entirety. This paragraph imposes more requirements on a corporation than on a PAC. PACs are not required to report this information and in fact are not even required to report the name of the campaign person.

Paragraph (2)(c) – delete any requirement that this information be provided on ads and instead require that the corporations, PAC, etc. maintain a website that provides this information and only require that the website address be given. The same for any other sections of the legislation that require this information to be included. Otherwise just the mandatory disclosure/disclosure requirement on an ad placed on the radio by CPG might look like this:

AD . . .

This advertisement is paid for by Conservative Patriots Group, Inc. (address), (city) and approved by its President (name); Contributors Mr. M (address) (city), Mr. N (address) (city), Mr. O (address) (city), Mr. P (address) (city), Mr. Q (address) (city). This NOTICE TO VOTERS is required by Alaska law. I certify that this advertisement is not authorized, paid for, or approved by the candidate.

This is a bit much for a disclosure/disclosure statement, considering most radio/tv ads run 30 to 60 seconds.

I suggest the disclaimer be reduced to the following:

AD . . .

Sponsor Statement
Senate Bill 303
Workers' Compensation and Contractors

From statehood and for decades afterward, Alaska's workers' compensation statutes promoted safety in the workplace by providing for actions by injured employees against those on the jobsite, other than their own employer, whose fault caused the employee's injury.

Most Alaskans are shocked, then, to learn that the exclusive liability provisions of AS 23.30.055, established in 2004, protect a project owner or general contractor from any liability when a subcontractor's employee is injured or killed, even when the project owner or general contractor acts with criminal negligence, when that criminal negligence is defined, in part, as, "the risk must be of such a nature and degree that the failure to perceive it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the situation."

Senate Bill 303 seeks to return to the previous system which allowed for accountability and responsibility for wrongful conduct.

A fundamental principle when speaking to the concept of personal responsibility is: If you break it, you pay for it. This fundamental principle is thought of as a guiding standard and it is advanced as a family value worthy of passing from parent to child. We expect that if others do something wrong to us that the wrongdoer will be responsible and, correspondingly, if we do something wrong to another that we will be responsible.

In the common application of this fundamental principle to driving a vehicle, we expect that if we fail to stop for a red light and hurt someone that we will be responsible and that if someone else runs a red light that they will be responsible to us for the harm caused to a son, daughter, family member, or other loved one.

Just like responsible operators of motor vehicles know that they must follow the rules of the road (e.g., stopping for red lights), employers know that they must generally comply with state and federal codes, regulations, and laws relating to workplace safety, and are also subject to additional common law or statutory duties and responsibilities. Likewise, project owners, contractors and other entities have legal duties and responsibilities relating to the safety of workers.

Alaska has a system whereby the fault is apportioned so there can never be the worry that anyone will ever be responsible for more than their just share of the fault. However, where the project owner and/or contractor is at fault, but is nevertheless indemnified by the employer or granted immunity through legislation, the employer is left bearing the burden of the conduct of the project owner and/or contractor, and the project owner and/or contractor is not required to take any personal responsibility for its own actions.

Workers compensation has always been a system under which harm is only partially compensated. For example, if an unmarried worker without children is killed, the compensation benefits are modest funeral expenses only.

A common argument against the system prior to 2004 relates to the objection to "double dipping." However, prior to 2004, the monies recovered by the injured employee reimbursed the employer's compensation carrier for the benefits paid to the injured employee under the workers' compensation system; therefore, eliminating any notion of "double dipping."

I urge your support of this legislation.

MEMORANDUM March 25, 2010

SUBJECT: Workers' compensation; exclusive liability for project owners and contractors (SB 303, Work Order No. 26-LS1089\R)

TO: Senator Joe Paskvan
Chair of the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee
Attn: Jeff Stepp

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum is in response to your request for a memo that provides short answers to the questions posed in the memorandum to your office dated March 23, 2010, and an additional question related to whether the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 apply when the actions of an owner or contractor constitute criminal negligence.[1]

1. May an owner or general contractor assert the exclusive remedy of the Alaska Workers Compensation Act, based on the last sentence of AS 23.30.055, to avoid liability for an injury to an employee of a subcontractor that occurs during employment?

The short answer is yes, based on the analysis in my prior memorandum.

2. Are the "intentional injury" and "illegally employed minor" exceptions the only recognized exception to the workers' compensation exclusive remedy statute?

The short answer is yes.[2]

3. Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect a project owner or general contractor from liability for the injuries to a subcontractor's employee if the owner or general contractor acts with criminal negligence?[3]

---

[1] My conclusions are based on existing law, not addressing the changes to AS 23.30.055 proposed in SB 303.

[2] My research of the Alaska case law did not reveal an additional exception to AS 23.30.055.

[3] The material provided describes criminal negligence as follows: "the risk must be of such a nature and degree that the failure to perceive it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the situation."

The short answer is yes.[4]

4. Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect an employer who intentionally injures an employee, or who violates child labor law?

The short answer is no, based on the analysis in my previous memo.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

[4] I am unable to locate caselaw, an administrative opinion, or an attorney general opinion in Alaska that addressed criminally negligent conduct in the context of a workers compensation claim. Absent intentional conduct, it is unlikely that a court would find criminally negligent conduct on the part of an employer to be the kind of conduct that should be outside of the operation of workers' compensation statutes. MEMORANDUM March 23, 2010

SUBJECT: Questions regarding workers' compensation exclusive remedy provisions (SB 303, Work Order No. 26-LS1089\R)

TO: Senator Joe Paskvan
Chair of the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee
Attn: Jeff Stepp

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum responds to your questions concerning the exclusive liability provisions of the existing Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.

May an owner or a general contractor assert the exclusive remedy provisions of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act to avoid liability for an injury to an employee of a subcontractor that occurs during employment?[1]

AS 23.30.055 sets out the exclusive liability provisions in the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act; the section reads:

> Sec. 23.30.055. Exclusiveness of liability.
> The liability of an employer prescribed in AS 23.30.045 is exclusive and in place of all other liability of the employer and any fellow employee to the employee, the employee's legal representative, husband or wife, parents, dependents, next of kin, and anyone otherwise entitled to recover damages from the employer or fellow employee at law or in admiralty on account of the injury or death. The liability of the employer is exclusive even if the employee's claim is barred under AS 23.30.022. However, if an employer fails to secure payment of compensation as required by this chapter, an injured employee or the employee's legal representative in case death results from the injury may elect to claim compensation under this chapter, or to maintain an action against the employer at law or in admiralty for damages on account of the injury or death. In that action, the defendant may not plead as a defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, or that the employee assumed the risk of the employment, or that the injury was due to the contributory negligence > of the employee. In this section, "employer" includes, in addition to the meaning given in AS 23.30.395, a person who, under AS 23.30.045(a), is liable for or potentially liable for securing payment of compensation.

Under AS 23.30.055, an employer's liability to secure workers' compensation under AS 23.30.045[2] is the exclusive liability of an employer for an injury to the employee. The last sentence of AS 23.30.055 adds to the definition of an "employer" a person who is potentially liable for securing workers' compensation payment. Under AS 23.30.045(a), a subcontractor, a contractor, or a project owner are each potentially liable for securing workers' compensation payments; therefore, any of them may assert the exclusive liability provisions of AS 23.30.055 as a defense.

Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect an employer who intentionally injures an employee or who violates child labor laws?

The Alaska Supreme Court has recognized an intentional injury exception to the exclusive remedy provisions in AS 23.30.055. The Alaska Supreme court has > held that [the] exclusive remedy provision does not apply where an employee commits an intentional tort against a fellow worker. We found that the "socially beneficial purpose of the work[ers'] compensation law

---

[2] AS 23.30.045 provides:

> Sec. 23.30.045. Employer's liability for compensation.
> (a) An employer is liable for and shall secure the payment to employees of the compensation payable under AS 23.30.041, 23.30.050, 23.30.095, 23.30.145, and 23.30.180 - 23.30.215. If the employer is a subcontractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees, the contractor is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the subcontractor. If the employer is a contractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees or the employees of a subcontractor, the project owner is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the contractor and employees of a subcontractor, as applicable.

> (f) In this section,
> (1) "contractor" means a person who undertakes by contract performance of certain work for another but does not include a vendor whose primary business is the sale or leasing of tools, equipment, other goods, or property;
> (2) "project owner" means a person who, in the course of the person's business, engages the services of a contractor and who enjoys the beneficial use of the work;

> would not be furthered by allowing a person who commits an intentional tort to use the compensation law as a shield against liability." We have permitted recovery for intentional torts "on the theory that the harm is not accidental and therefore not covered by the act."

Fenner v. Municipality of Anchorage, 53 P.3d 573, 575 (Alaska 2002) (internal cites omitted). The exception is limited to those cases where an employer has a specific intent to injure an employee. Id. at 577. See also Williams v. Mammoth of Alaska, 890 P.2d 581 (Alaska 1995) (exclusive remedy bars employee's common law tort claim against partner where partner's negligence arises within partnership business); Elliott v. Brown, 569 P.2d 1323 (Alaska 1977) (where employer hit and shoved employees, actions were intentional enough to take case outside workers' compensation system); Van Bien v. ERA Helicopters, Inc., 779 P.2d 315 (Alaska 1979) (aviation firm dispatching pilots without adequate sleep was gross negligence or wilful and knowing violation of FAA regulations, but not the type of intentional tort actionable outside of the workers' compensation system).

With regard to your question concerning the application of child labor laws to the exclusive liability provisions of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act, if an employer violates child labor laws, AS 23.30.055 does not bar a common law action for damages brought against an employer by a person who was employed in violation of child labor laws at the time of the injury. Whitney-Fidalgo Seafoods, Inc. v. Beukers, 554 P.2d 250 (Alaska 1976).

In the Beukers case, the Alaska Supreme Court found that the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act does not specifically address the question which remedies are available to illegally employed minors injured in the course of their employment. Id. at 252. However, the court held, as a matter of public policy, that > where an employer has knowingly entered into an illegal contract of employment with a child, in express violation of a statute, the employer will not be permitted to insist that a child is an "employee" within the terms of the workmen's compensation act, so that the child can no longer assert its common law rights against the employer.

Id. at 253.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Re: Senate Bill 303

Dear Senator Paskvan:

First let me thank you for your efforts in trying to correct an unfair provision in the worker's compensation law, passed during the corrupt reign of Bill Allen, which provides immunity to project owners or general contractors from fairly compensating a worker injured by the direct negligence of a project owner or general contractor.

My name is Pat Thompson, age 52, and I am an example of how this law you are trying to change can destroy a working man's life.

I worked in the oil fields in Alaska my entire adult life and was proud to do so and was treated well.

On October 4 of 2006 I worked for PEAK Oilfield Services. On that day I was assigned a fire truck to help clean a Vac truck at the Beluga waste disposal facility which is owned and operated by Conoco Phillips. During the cleaning, I suffered a devastating electrical shock when I touched the Vac truck. These trucks are supposed to be grounded to protect against static electricity. Conoco failed to provide any kind of ground. If the ground had been provided, I would have used it.

I now live with a brain injury. My partner, Tory Sandoz, has helped me compose this letter as I am unable to do this on my own. I am unable to provide a living for myself due to inability to organize, recall recent information, and physically move about for more than an hour or two without rest. I must take medicine to manage depression, nerve pain, stabilize mood. My relationships are suffering as they are weary of my constant pain. I feel like I am an 80 year old man.

As you know, the worker's comp system is pretty bad. I paid over $20,000 from my life savings to get a proper diagnosis and treatment from specialists in Chicago. The work comp matter grinds on with no help in sight. I have no income and must tap into my very rapidly dwindling retirement account.

God bless you and the other compassionate legislators for trying to undo this horrible legislative mistake.

Very truly yours,

Patrick A. Thompson

To Whom It May Concern:

Please be advised that the Alaska Independent Agents and Brokers do not support SB 303 as the supreme court decision on Joseph Schiel Vs: Union Oil (November 20, 2009) upheld the very same opinion that the 2004 Legislative fix moved to correct. That is to say that the ability of an uninsured employee of a subcontractor to sue the general and the owner that had existed was not legitimate and current law serves the purpose it was intended to accomplish.

SB 303 wants to allow the opportunity to file claims against general contractors under third party action. This bill will repeal the exclusive remedy protection for building owner and general contractor that is provided by statute through workers compensation.

This is a similar bill that we opposed in 2008 SB 147.

Re: Senate Bill 303

Dear Senator Paskvan:

This letter is to express concerns that the Alaska Timber Insurance Exchange has about Senate Bill 303.

Senate Bill 303 would weaken the exclusive remedy provision in the Alaska workers' compensation statutes. The exclusive remedy provisions currently in place prevent, in most instances, an employee of a subcontractor or a contractor from bringing a third party action against either a project owner or contractor that their employer is working for.

An entity that qualifies as a project owner under the Alaska workers' compensation statutes is considered an employer for exclusive remedy purposes for the employees of either a contractor or subcontractor working for them. This also applies to a contractor in relation to a subcontractor.

Senate Bill 303 would take away these exclusive remedy protections from project owners or contractors even if they were liable for the workers' compensation benefits of an injured employee of a contractor or subcontractor. Currently, a project owner or contractor can become liable for the workers' compensation benefits of a contractor or subcontractor's employees if the contractor or subcontractor does not have workers' compensation insurance.

Prior to the passage of Senate Bill 323 in 2004, project owners and contractors were not treated as employers for exclusive remedy purposes, i.e. an injured employee of a contractor or subcontractor could bring a third party action against a project owner that hired the contractor and subcontractor. Likewise, an injured employee of a subcontractor could bring a third party action against the contractor that hired their employer.

The Alaska Timber Insurance Exchange feels that the existing workers' compensation laws in Alaska provide fair benefits for injured workers without exposing employers, contractors or project owners to excessive liabilities. The proposed changes contained in Senate Bill 303 would add uncertainty and possible expense for those entities that hire contractors or subcontractors to do work for them.

Sincerely,

Martin R. Pihl

Senate Bill 323 Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to a project's liability for worker's compensation and the exclusiveness of liability for worker's compensation."

Senate Bill 323 revises the Worker's Compensation Act as it applies to contractors and subcontractors. The two principal modifications are as follows:

1. Responsibility for payment of workers' compensation is extended up the chain of contracts to include project owners; and,
2. Injured parties in receipt of benefits under the Worker's Compensation Act would be barred from "double dipping" via a tort liability claim.

Under AS 23.30.045(a), an injured employee only has recourse for workers' compensation benefits against his immediate employer and if the employer is a subcontractor, against the contractor who retained the subcontractor. The proposed legislation allows recourse for the payment of compensation benefits against project owners, as well as contractors and subcontractors.

This extension of the rights of injured employees is sensible inasmuch as the project owner is the beneficial user of the work performed by the injured employee. It should be noted that a project owner does not include individuals who have engaged the services of contractors to build or renovate a residential home.

Finally, the proposed legislation extends the exclusivity protection set forth in AS 23.30.055 to all parties in the contracting chain relating to a project. This includes the employer of the injured employee, and those parties, which are upstream in the chain of contracts from the employer of the injured employee.

In other words, if an injured employee works for a subcontractor, then the subcontractor, the contractor and the project owner would be free of tort liability so long as the injured employee receives the benefits set forth in the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.

Senate Bill 323 will encourage all parties participating in a project to identify and enforce strict safety standards for the benefit of all workers rather than deflecting responsibility through the use of indemnity agreements as is common practice currently. At the same time, it ensures that injured workers will receive all benefits available under the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.

RE: SB 303

Chair Paskvan and Members of the Senate Labor & Commerce Committee,

The Alaska State Chamber in accordance with our legislative position opposes Senate Bill 303 regarding exclusive liability. This position was adopted at the annual legislative fly-in this past fall. This position supports the change regarding exclusive liability made by the legislature in 2004. For your review, please find attached our legislative position on the issue.

Current law obligates the immediate employer and other project participants to pay an injured employee's workers' compensation benefits regardless of fault. In the unfortunate circumstance of an injury, a worker has clear understanding about remedies being provided under the workers' compensation system. Prior to 2004, many subcontractors employed by a larger company (project owner) or employer, were not required to carry worker's compensation insurance. Under current law, which passed in 2004, all employees including subcontractors now carry worker's compensation insurance. This requirement now insures all workers working on the job regardless of who may be their direct employer. Correspondingly, workers' compensation benefits-the employers associated with the project-is the exclusive remedy for potentially liability

Prior to 2004, project owners, contractors and their subs were expending tremendous resources in segregating project and safety programs to defend against potential tort liability. Alaska courts have adopted of what is referred to as the retained control doctrine. Prior to the 2004 reform, parties other than an employee's immediate employer were liable in tort for any injury to an employee of an independent contractor if the party retains any amount of control over the work, including the right to review the contractor's safety practices. See for example, Moloso v. State, 644 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1982). In essence, injured employees used the retained control doctrine to support tort claims against the project owners and other parties that had done nothing more than try to enforce reasonable safety practices during the performance of a contractor's work.

In practice, project owners and contractors attempted to avoid tort liability by limiting their involvement with each other's safety programs and work performance. In other words, prior to 2004 the law actually discouraged project owners and other project participants from implementing and enforcing coordinated safe work practices.

Under current law, project participants can take an integrated approach to completion of a project and can integrate safety programs. That is, project owners, contractors and subcontractors work closely together to ensure that project specifications and safety standards are met and that all work is completed in a successful and safe manner.

Second, the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act is intended to provide injured workers with reasonable compensation for their work related injuries without regard to fault or the cause of the injury. Some may claim that without the risk of exposure to tort damages, the project owners and other project participants have had little incentive to implement and enforce safe work practices. As previously stated, the new law has allowed for increased safety awareness and coordinated safety programs interconnecting subcontractors and project owners together. The Alaska State Chamber of Commerce has been steadfast advocates of reducing workers' compensation (wc) expenses particularly wc insurance; however, continued improvement on insurance rates mean continued improvement on workplace safety.

The tort system is not the only available means to punish companies that violate safety practices. The Department of Labor, the Oil and Gas Commission and other State agencies have authority to fine companies that violate State safety standards. Those agencies also have the authority to shut down projects that pose a safety hazard to employees. When project owners, their contractors and subcontractors work in an integrated manner, all companies involved in the contracting chain are subject to the fines and other remedies of state agencies. This is a much more efficient, credible and cost effective means of policing job safety.

At this time and in accordance with our legislative position adopted this past fall, we cannot support SB 303.

To Whom It May Concern:

Please be advised that the Alaska Independent Agents and Brokers do not support SB 303 as the supreme court decision on Joseph Schiel Vs: Union Oil (November 20, 2009) upheld the very same opinion that the 2004 Legislative fix moved to correct. That is to say that the ability of an uninsured employee of a subcontractor to sue the general and the owner that had existed was not legitimate and current law serves the purpose it was intended to accomplish.

SB 303 wants to allow the opportunity to file claims against general contractors under third party action. This bill will repeal the exclusive remedy protection for building owner and general contractor.

This is a similar bill that we opposed in 2008 SB 147.

RE: SB 303

Chair Ramras and Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

The Alaska State Chamber in accordance with our legislative position opposes Senate Bill 303 regarding exclusive liability. This position was adopted at the annual legislative fly-in this past fall. This position supports the change regarding exclusive liability made by the legislature in 2004. For your review, please find attached our legislative position on the issue.

Workers' compensation inequity against general contractors fixed

By Robert J. Dickson

The Alaska Supreme Court has recently approved the Legislature's 2004 fix of an inequality toward general contractors under the workers' compensation statutes. By way of background, the basic premise of the workers' compensation statutes is that in place of a worker's right to sue his employer for negligently caused injuries to the employee, the employee is given a statutory right to payment for medical care and a partial replacement of lost earned wages in all cases, not just those where the employer is negligent.

Thus, while the worker is deprived of his ability to recover big damages when the employer is negligent, in place of that right, he is given a reduced recovery in all cases regardless of whether the employer was negligent. At the same time, part of the quid pro quo, is the statute immunizes the employer from any and all tort claims by the injured employee and his family and representatives. The employer and its insurance carrier are liable for workers' compensation benefits, but not for tort damages.

All workers' compensation statutes provided that in the case of a general construction contractor with subcontractors, the general contractor were responsible for all benefits required by the workers' compensation law to the subcontractor's injured employees if the subcontractor failed to provide workers' compensation insurance for the sub's employees. Consequently, when a sub went without workers' compensation insurance and its employee was injured, the injured employee could recover workers' compensation benefits from the general contractor. While the statutes required the general contractor to carry workers' compensation both for its employees and potentially for uninsured subcontractors' employees, the statutes, including Alaska's, was silent on whether the general contractor was also immunized from tort liability to the sub's employees in the same way as an employer with workers' compensation insurance was immune.

In 1981, the Alaska Supreme Court ruled that even though a general contractor would have to pay workers' compensation benefits if the sub failed to do so, the general contractor was NOT immunized from tort liability. Consequently the injured subcontractor's employee had the ability to obtain workers' compensation benefits from the general contractor if there was no negligence involved, or sue the general contractor in tort if the general was allegedly negligent. Thus the general contractor had the worst of both sides of the original concept – liability for workers' compensation benefits of employees not its own, as well as exposure to tort liability to those same workers.

Prior to 2004, any company working on a project site, other than the subcontractor whose employee was injured, was fully exposed to a claim by the subcontractor's employee for tort negligence. This meant even though the general contractor was potentially liable for the sub's employees if the sub had been uninsured, the general was also always a potential target for a liability suit when a subcontractor's employee was injured. The project owner was also a prime target for such liability suits.

But all owner-general contractor contracts provided that the contractor would indemnify the project owner for any claims against the owner by the general's or sub's employees. The subcontracts also provided same protection for the general with respect to the sub's employees. As a result, a subcontractor who provided workers' compensation insurance would have to pay (through its insurer) workers' compensation benefits to an injured employee; and then when the employee sued the general contractor, the sub would also have to pay whatever tort recoveries or settlements were recovered against the general.

The same mechanism operated between general contractors and project owners. Consequently, through contracts working together with the statutes, responsible general contractors or subcontractors often paid twice. That result was in addition to responsible general contractors being faced with exposure to both workers' compensation benefits to an uninsured subcontractor's employees and exposure to tort liability to the same workers.

But in 2004, the Alaska Legislature moved to correct that inequity; the ability of a subcontractor's injured employee to sue the general contractor and the project owner was eliminated. The Legislature expanded the potential liability for workers' compensation benefits to not only the general contractor but also to the project owner. The Legislature provided that if a general contractor failed to obtain worker's compensation insurance for its employees or the employees of a subcontractor, the project owner was liable for workers' compensation benefits for the general's employees and even for the subcontractor's employees if the subcontractor was uninsured. At the same time, however, the Legislature also immunized the project owner from tort liability. Further, the Legislature corrected the gap created back in 1981 by also immunizing the general contractor from tort liability to uninsured subcontractor's employees.

In the case recently decided, an employee of a general contractor operating a drill platform for one of the oil companies was injured on the platform. The general contractor had provided workers' compensation insurance and thus the platform owner was not going to be liable for any workers' compensation benefits to the employee. Predictably, the employee sued the project owner any way, claiming the 2004 statute unconstitutionally deprived him of valid causes of action. In a November 2009 decision, the Alaska Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the new legislative scheme.

The case represents one of those situations where the Alaska Supreme Court accepted the public policy judgment of the Alaska State Legislature.

To Whom It May Concern:

My brother, Derek Sather, tragically died on March 20, 2008 while working on a construction project in Skagway, Alaska. He was crushed by the weight of a front loader that rolled backward down a steep road, pinning his body to the front of a cement truck. The front loader was not operated by his employer, but rather the general contractor.

Derek was deeply loved and relied upon by his extended family, including his mother, two brothers, sister, nieces and nephews, and fiancé. Derek cannot be replaced. The current state of Alaska Law would limit benefits available to my family in the amount of $5,000 for funeral expenses. This is unacceptable and unjust.

General contractors who negligently cause harm to workers in Alaska should not be immune from liability. They need to be held accountable for their acts, which will create a safer work place for all individuals working in Alaska. It will also provide for reasonable compensation for families who have suffered greatly from these negligent acts.

Yours truly,

Jared Sather

HOUSE JUDICIARY TESTIMONY on SB 303
April 16, 2010

Chairman Ramras, members of the House Judiciary Committee, I'm Paul Laird, general manager & testifying on behalf of the Alaska Support Industry Alliance against Senate Bill 303.

Our 500 member organizations provide more than 40,000 Alaskan jobs as contractors and suppliers to the Alaska's oil, gas & mining industries. Many would be directly & adversely affected by SB 303, which would subject them to increased costs & risks. They would face the double jeopardy of workers' comp liability and liability lawsuits - a boon to trial lawyers, a bane to business.

Reforms adopted in 2004 have worked. All employees now carry workers' compensation insurance and are eligible for benefits regardless of fault. Project owners, contractors and subcontractors now coordinate safety programs, resulting in better safety performance.

Alaska's oil & gas industry has lost 1,500 jobs in the past year. Investment is down, oil & gas contractors are losing business, and margins are squeezed on what business remains. SB 303 would be one more threat to their futures.

We strongly oppose Senate Bill 303. Thank you.

Sec. 23.30.045. Employer's liability for compensation. (a) An employer is liable for and shall secure the payment to employees of the compensation payable under AS 23.30.041, 23.30.050, 23.30.095, 23.30.145, and 23.30.180 — 23.30.215. If the employer is a subcontractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees, the contractor is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the subcontractor. If the employer is a contractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees or the employees of a subcontractor, the project owner is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the contractor and employees of a subcontractor, as applicable.

(b) Compensation is payable irrespective of fault as a cause for the injury.

(c) For a person eligible for vocational rehabilitation service under this chapter or AS 23.15.080 who is placed with an employer for service at the request of the rehabilitation administrator or division of vocational rehabilitation to provide on the job training, work readiness, work therapy experience, or work sampling, the liability set out in (a) of this section applies to the state rather than to the employer. However, an employer may elect to assume the liabilities in (a) of this section.

(d) A contract may not be awarded by the state or a home rule or other political subdivision of the state unless the person to whom the contract is to be awarded has submitted to the contracting agency proof, furnished by the insurance carrier, of current coverage by workers' compensation insurance from an insurance company or association authorized to transact the business of workers' compensation insurance in this state or proof, furnished by the board, of a current certificate of self-insurance from the board. The person to whom the contract is awarded shall keep the workers' compensation insurance policy in effect during the life of the contract with the state or political subdivision. If the state or the political subdivision of the state fails to obtain proof of coverage or self-insurance or to protect itself under (e) of this section, and an employee of the contractor is injured during the term of the contract, the state or the political subdivision is liable for workers' compensation to the employee if the employee is unable to recover from the employer because of the employer's lack of financial assets. The state or the political subdivision is not liable, however, to the employee for workers' compensation if the employee can recover from the employer under (a) and (b) of this section.

(e) When a contracting agency of the state or a political subdivision receives notice that the workers' compensation insurance policy of an employer to whom the agency has awarded a contract has been cancelled due to nonpayment of a premium, without being replaced by a comparable policy, the agency may either terminate the contract with the employer or continue the premium payments on behalf of the employer in order to keep the policy in force during the life of the agency's contract. If the agency chooses to keep the policy in force, it may deduct its payments from the contract price or bring an action against the employer to recover the amount of the payments. When the contracting agency receives notice that the board has revoked a certificate of self-insurance held by a person to whom a contract has been awarded, the agency may terminate the contract. This subsection does not limit the causes of action or remedies that the state or political subdivision may have against the employer.

(f) In this section,

(1) "contractor" means a person who undertakes by contract performance of certain work for another but does not include a vendor whose primary business is the sale or leasing of tools, equipment, other goods, or property;

(2) "project owner" means a person who, in the course of the person's business, engages the services of a contractor and who enjoys the beneficial use of the work;

(3) "subcontractor" means a person to whom a contractor sublets all or part of the initial undertaking. (§ 3 ch 193 SLA 1959; am § 1 ch 46 SLA 1967; am § 3 ch 166 SLA 1972; am §§ 4, 5 ch 93 SLA 1982; am §§ 1 — 3 ch 80 SLA 2004)

ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE

SENATOR JOE THOMAS

SJR 10 - Urging the United States Congress to adopt S. 371, the Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act of 2009

Sponsor Statement

The right to keep and bear arms is one of the rights most cherished by Alaskans. Our history and culture is tightly bound to our outdoor and sporting heritage. Residents of Alaska and Vermont enjoy some of the greatest freedoms in the country with regards to concealed carry. Senate Joint Resolution 10 supports federal legislation that recognizes and protects our unique situation.

The Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act was introduced by U.S. Senators David Vitter (LA) and John Thune (SD). A House companion bill, H.R. 197, has been introduced by Representatives Cliff Stearns' (R-Fla.) and Rick Boucher (D-Va.) The bill would allow those American citizens who are licensed or otherwise authorized by their state government to carry a concealed firearm to lawfully carry concealed firearms in other states, in accordance with local laws. Provisions in the law ensure that residents of states like Alaska and Vermont, which have unique concealed carry laws, are not prohibited from enjoying the same rights as those residents from states with more common "conceal and carry" laws.

This piece of federal legislation respects state laws by requiring carriers of concealed firearms to follow all applicable state statutes governing concealed firearms. Currently, many states offer reciprocity agreements to other states with similar concealed carry laws. However, these agreements can change or lapse. For instance, North Dakota recently phased out the training requirement from the concealed carry-licensing process. This resulted in the lapse of several reciprocity agreements between North Dakota and other states. Such shifting agreements can make it difficult for a bearer of a concealed firearm to keep track of which states offer reciprocity.

Federal passage of the Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act would establish a nationwide reciprocity agreement, and place the duty to comply with local and state concealed carry laws squarely on the shoulders of the citizen. Individuals must follow the laws of the host state, including laws concerning specific locations where firearms may not be carried. Additionally, any individual prohibited by federal law from carrying a firearm will continue to be prohibited under the bill.
