This case concerns the State's denial of public assistance to eligible women whose health is in danger. It does not concern State payment for elective abortions; nor [*906] does it concern philosophical questions about abortion which we, as a court of law, cannot aspire to answer. We join the California Supreme Court in clarifying that "this case does not turn on the morality or immorality of abortion, and most decidedly does not concern the personal views of the individual justices as to the wisdom of the legislation itself or the ethical considerations involved in a woman's individual decision whether or not to bear a child." n3 Indeed, as the California Supreme Court emphasized, "similar constitutional issues would arise if the Legislature . . . funded [Medicaid] abortions but refused to provide comparable medical care for poor women who choose childbirth." n4 The constitutional issue in this case therefore "does not involve a weighing of the value of abortion as against childbirth, but instead concerns the protection of either procreative choice from discriminatory governmental treatment." n5 As the California court recognized, the issue presented is "not whether [5] the state is generally obligated to subsidize the exercise of constitutional rights for those who cannot otherwise afford to do so." n6 Rather, the issue is whether the State, having enacted a benefits program, may discriminate between recipients in the manner attempted by the Department of Health and Social Services (DHSS) today. We hold that it may not. Once the State undertakes to fund medically necessary services for poor Alaskans, it may not selectively exclude from that program women who medically require abortions.

Although the State argues that courts may not enjoin unconstitutional use of the legislative appropriations power, this proposition is unsupported by case law from any jurisdiction. The legislature's spending power does not create license to disregard citizens' constitutional rights. In rejecting this part of the State's argument, we concur with every state and federal court [6] that has considered this issue.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Alaska provides medical services for poor Alaskans primarily through the Medicaid program. n7 Medicaid is a comprehensive health care program designed to provide medical assistance for all eligible poor per [*907] sons in the state. n8 But a DHSS regulation, 7 Alaska Administrative Code (AAC) 43.140, imposes a limit on the state's health care funding: It denies Medicaid assistance for medically necessary abortions unless a pregnant woman is at risk of dying or her pregnancy resulted from rape or incest. n9 Because DHSS offers no other funding source for abortions, 7 AAC 43.140 ensures that a woman who medically requires an abortion will receive no assistance from the state.

n7 See AS 47.07; see also 42 U.S.C. § 1396-1396v (1997).

A second program, Chronic and Acute Medical Assistance (CAMA) complements Medicaid by providing some medical care for Alaskans who are poor but ineligible for Medicaid. See AS 47.08.150. CAMA's predecessor, the General Relief Medical program (GRM), funded abortions for eligible women when the procedure was necessary to protect their health or when pregnancy resulted from sexual assault, sexual abuse of a minor, or incest. See 7 AAC 47.200(a)(4)(F) (2000); 7 AAC 47.290(8) (2000). In 1998, after nearly 30 years of government support for medically necessary abortions through GRM, the legislature stopped funding the program and enacted CAMA as a replacement. CAMA covers essentially the same services as GRM, except that it does not fund any abortions. Compare AS 47.08.150 with 7 AAC 47.200. [7] n8 See AS 47.07.010. Medicaid relies on joint state-federal funding, with the federal government paying a portion of the state's costs. See 42 U.S.C. § § 1396b(a), 1396d(b). The "Hyde Amendment" limits federal Medicaid contributions for abortions: Federal funding is available for abortions in cases of rape or incest or where the woman's life is in danger, but not for abortions necessary to protect a woman's health. See Pub. L. No. 106-554, § § 508-509, 114 Stat. 2763 (2000); Right to Choose v. Byrne, 91 N.J. 287, 450 A.2d 925, 928-29 (N.J. 1982) (discussing history of Hyde Amendment).

n9 7 AAC 43.140 (2000) provides in part:

(a) Payment for an abortion will, in the department's discretion, be covered under Medicaid if the physician services invoice is accompanied by certification that the

(1) life of the mother would be endangered if the pregnancy were carried to term; or

(2) pregnancy is the result of an act of rape or incest.

The range of women whose access to medical care is restricted [8] by the regulation is broad. According to medical evidence provided to the superior court, some women -- particularly those who suffer from pre-existing health problems -- face significant risks if they cannot obtain abortions. Women with diabetes risk kidney failure, blindness, and preeclampsia or eclampsia -- conditions characterized by simultaneous convulsions and comas -- when their disease is complicated by pregnancy. Women with renal disease may lose a kidney and face a lifetime of dialysis if they cannot obtain an abortion. And pregnancy in women with sickle cell anemia can accelerate the disease, leading to pneumonia, kidney infections, congestive heart failure, and pulmonary conditions such as embolus. Poor women who suffer from conditions such as epilepsy or bipolar disorder face a particularly brutal dilemma as a result of DHSS's regulation -- medication needed by the women to control their own seizures or other symptoms can be highly dangerous to a developing fetus. Without funding for medically necessary abortions, pregnant women with these conditions must choose either to seriously endanger their own health by forgoing medication, or to ensure their own safety but endanger [9] the developing fetus by continuing medication. Finally, without state funding, Medicaid-eligible women may reach an advanced stage of pregnancy before they can gather enough money for an abortion; resulting late-term abortions pose far greater health risks than earlier procedures.

In June 1998 the plaintiffs -- two medical doctors and Planned Parenthood of Alaska -- filed a complaint against DHSS. They sought to enjoin enforcement of 7 AAC 43.140 and also sought a judgment declaring that the State's denial of funding for medically necessary abortions violates Alaska's Constitution. Superior Court Judge Sen K. Tan granted summary judgment in favor of Planned Parenthood. Based on this court's holding that "reproductive rights are fundamental . . . [and] include the right to an abortion," n10 the superior court concluded that 7 AAC 43.140 impermissibly interferes with Medicaid-eligible women's constitutional rights to privacy. Because the State failed to articulate a compelling state interest for this interference, the superior court permanently enjoined DHSS from enforcing the regulation "so as to deny coverage for medically necessary abortions." The State now appeals. n11 [10]

n11 For part of the time that this appeal was pending, DHSS continued to withhold funding for medically necessary abortions, despite the superior court's injunction. On Planned Parenthood's motion, the superior court held a show cause hearing to determine whether the Department was in contempt of court. The court heard DHSS's claim that funding was unavailable, and determined, after a "struggle", not to hold the agency in contempt. However, the court issued a new injunction to reiterate the terms of the first injunction and explicitly direct that, while DHSS retained discretion over its use of resources, it should consider state Medicaid funds available to pay for medically necessary abortions. The parties on appeal presented records from these proceedings and additional related briefing.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Challenged Regulation Violates Equal Protection.

By providing health care to all poor Alaskans except women who need abortions, the challenged regulation violates the state constitutional guarantee of "equal rights, opportunities, [12] and protection under the law." n15 The State, having established a health care program for the poor, may not selectively deny necessary care to eligible women merely because the threat to their health arises from pregnancy. Because we decide this case on state constitutional equal protection grounds, we do not review the superior court's privacy-based ruling. We do note, however, that our analysis today closely parallels that applied by many of the fifteen courts that have rejected similar restrictions. n16 Although other courts' decisions have rested on a variety of state constitutional provisions, including equal protection, n17 constitutional equal-rights-for-women clauses, n18 due process, n19 and privacy, n20 the underlying logic has been the same in decision after decision: "When state government seeks to act for the common benefit, protection, and security of the people in providing medical care for the poor, it has an obligation to do so in a neutral manner so as not to infringe upon the constitutional rights of our citizens." n21 As the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court observed, the constitutional principle at issue is straightforward: [13] "It is elementary that 'when a State decides to alleviate some of the hardships of poverty by [*909] providing medical care, the manner in which it dispenses benefits is subject to constitutional limitations.'" n22 The State's spending discretion is limited by the constitution -- "while the State retains wide latitude to decide the manner in which it will allocate benefits, it may not use criteria which discriminatorily burden the exercise of a fundamental right." n23

Alaska's constitutional equal protection clause mandates "equal treatment of those similarly situated;" n24 it protects Alaskans' right to non-discriminatory treatment more robustly than does the federal equal protection clause. n25 In analyzing a challenged law under Alaska's equal protection provision, we first determine what level of scrutiny to apply, using Alaska's "sliding scale" standard. n26 The "weight [that] should be afforded the constitutional interest impaired by the challenged enactment" is "the most important variable in fixing the appropriate level of review." n27

Second, we examine the State's interests served by the challenged regulation. n28 If the burden placed on constitutional rights by the regulation is minimal, then the State need only show that its objectives were legitimate for the regulation to survive an equal protection challenge. n29 But if "the objective [16] degree to which the challenged legislation tends to deter [exercise of constitutional rights]" n30 is significant, the regulation cannot survive constitutional challenge unless it serves a compelling state interest. n31 Finally, if the State shows that its interests justify burdening the rights of citizens, for the regulation to survive constitutional challenge the State must demonstrate that the means it has chosen to advance those goals are well-fitted to the ends, and that its goals could not be accomplished by less restrictive means. n32

The regulation at issue in this case affects the exercise of a constitutional right, the right to reproductive freedom. n33 Therefore, the regulation is subject to the most searching judicial scrutiny, often called "strict scrutiny." n34 We have explained in the past that such scrutiny is appropriate where a challenged enactment affects "fundamental rights," including "the exercise of intimate personal choices." n35 This court has specified that the right to reproductive freedom "may be legally constrained only when the constraints are justified by a compelling state interest, and no less restrictive means could advance that interest." n36

Judicial scrutiny of state action is equally strict where the government, by selectively denying a benefit to those who exercise a constitutional right, effectively deters the exercise of that right. In Alaska Pacific Assurance Co. v. Brown, we held the State to a "very high" burden to justify a statute that reduced workers' compensation benefits paid to workers who exercised their constitutional right to leave the state. n37 We concluded that the challenged regulation did not meet this high standard and thus violated equal protection. n38 Like the regulation at issue today, [*910] the challenged statute in Alaska Pacific Assurance Co. did not forbid individual exercise of constitutional rights; rather, it limited the government benefits distributed to the class of individuals who exercised that right. n39 As we explained in that case, we look to the real-world effects of government action to determine the appropriate level of equal protection scrutiny: "The suspicion with which this court will [19] view infringements upon [constitutional rights] depends upon . . . the objective degree to which the challenged legislation tends to deter [the exercise of those rights]." n40

n38 See id. We have since applied more relaxed scrutiny where "the infringement on [the] right to travel is relatively small and would not be likely to deter a person from traveling." Church v. State, Dep't of Revenue, 973 P.2d 1125, 1131 (Alaska 1999). In this case the likelihood of deterring exercise of the right is very high: The State's own statistics and the findings of the superior court indicate that, under the challenged regulation, some women "will have no choice but to go forward with the pregnancy." We therefore follow Alaska Pacific Assurance Co. in applying strict scrutiny.

We reached a similar conclusion in Alaska Gay Coalition v. Sullivan, [20] holding that the Municipality of Anchorage could not constitutionally withhold a public benefit based on a potential recipient's beliefs and public expression. n41 The municipality had undertaken to publish a guidebook to public and private organizations in Anchorage, but excluded the Alaska Gay Coalition from the book. n42 We held that this exclusion violated the Coalition's constitutional rights to equal protection under the law. n43 We explained:

n41 578 P.2d 951, 960 (Alaska 1978).

n43 Id.

When the Municipality decided to publish a limited informational guide to public and private local resources, it did not thereby assume the obligation of providing space to every possible group. . . . Had the Municipality deleted groups at random or used criteria not related to the nature of the particular organizations, constitutional violations may not have resulted. In deleting the Alaska Gay Coalition . . . however, appellees denied that group [21] access to a public forum based solely on the nature of its beliefs. In so doing, they violated appellant's constitutional rights to . . . equal protection under the law.[n44]

n44 Id.

Similarly, in the instant case, the State's obligations do not depend on whether the State has undertaken to provide limitless health care services to all poor Alaskans. Rather, DHSS is constitutionally bound to apply neutral criteria in allocating health care benefits, even if considerations of expense, medical feasibility, or the necessity of particular services otherwise limit the health care it provides to poor Alaskans.

The State argues in this case that it does not provide all necessary medical care to indigent Alaskans. For support, it cites 7 AAC 43.385, a regulation that excludes from Medicaid coverage such services as medically unnecessary inpatient treatment, n45 beautifying cosmetic surgery, n46 and transplants of organs other than kidney, cornea, skin, and bone marrow. n47 This [22] regulation has not been challenged, and the issue has not been thoroughly briefed by the parties, but the restrictions appear to relate to medical necessity, cost, and feasibility -- all politically neutral criteria. Such spending limits are irrelevant to the constitutional issue raised by the State's denial of coverage for medically necessary abortions. As the United States Supreme Court noted in Shapiro v. Thompson:

We recognize that the State has a valid interest in preserving the fiscal integrity of its programs. It may legitimately attempt to limit its expenditures, whether for public assistance, public education, or any other program. But a State may not accomplish such a purpose by invidious distinctions between classes of its citizens.[n48]

Like Alaska Pacific Assurance Co., Alaska Gay Coalition establishes that under Alaska's equal protection provision the government [*911] may not allocate state benefits so as to deter citizens' exercise of constitutional rights.

In this case, it is undisputed that 7 AAC 43.140 deters women from obtaining abortions. The State itself stated that eliminating public assistance for medically necessary abortions would cause about thirty-five percent of women who would otherwise have obtained abortions to instead carry their pregnancies to term, despite the associated threat to their health. Under Alaska Pacific Assurance Co., such a restriction warrants the highest degree of judicial scrutiny.

In the seminal Shapiro v. Thompson decision, the United States Supreme Court also strictly scrutinized -- and ultimately held unconstitutional -- state programs that denied benefits to citizens based on their exercise of constitutional rights. n49 Shapiro invalidated state laws that denied welfare benefits to persons who had moved into the jurisdiction within the past year. n50 The Court found that "the prohibition of benefits . . . creates a classification which constitutes [24] an invidious discrimination denying [new residents] equal protection of the laws." n51 The Court held that states could not constitutionally tailor their benefits programs to deter immigration from other states: "If a law has no other purpose . . . than to chill the assertion of constitutional rights by penalizing those who choose to exercise them, then it [is] patently unconstitutional." n52

Ct. 1209 (1968)).* This precedent was not discussed in the U.S. Supreme Court's later decision, in Harris v. McRae, that the Hyde Amendment was permissible under the federal constitution. 448 U.S. 297, 100 S. Ct. 2671, 65 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1980). But in Valley Hospital, we explained that Alaska's broader constitutional protection at times mandates parting ways with federal precedent. See 948 P.2d at 969. In that case, we rejected the plurality opinion of Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 877-78, 120 L. Ed. 2d 674, 112 S. Ct. 2791 (1992), in order to declare that a woman's right to an abortion is fundamental. See Valley Hosp., 948 P.2d at 969. We now join the majority of state courts in concluding that the federal Supreme Court's decision in McRae provides inadequate protection under our state constitution.

Although Shapiro and Alaska Pacific Assurance Co. applied strict scrutiny to reject restrictions like the one at issue in this case, 7 AAC 43.140 would fail equal protection analysis under any standard. Under the regulation, the State grants needed health care to some Medicaid-eligible Alaskans, but denies it to others, based on criteria entirely unrelated to the Medicaid program's purpose of granting uniform and high quality medical care to all needy persons of this state. n53 Thus, even if 7 AAC 43.140 did not affect constitutional privacy rights and we applied our most deferential standard of review, the regulation still could not withstand equal protection challenge. Under Alaska's rational basis standard, n54 differential treatment of similarly situated people is permissible only if the distinction between the persons "rests upon some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation." n55 DHSS provides necessary medical care to all Medicaid-eligible Alaskans except women who medically require abortions. This differential treatment lacks a fair and substantial relation to the object of the Medicaid program, [26] and therefore violates equal protection. n56

n53 In the "Purpose" section of the Medicaid statute, the legislature "declares as a matter of public concern that the needy persons of this state receive uniform and high quality medical care, regardless of race, age, national origin, or economic standing." AS 47.07.010.

n54 See Sonneman v. Knight, 790 P.2d 702, 705 (Alaska 1990) (using term "rational basis" to describe lowest standard of review under Alaska's sliding scale).

n56 We note that the United States Supreme Court reached the opposite conclusion regarding the analogous federal regulation in Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 65 L. Ed. 2d 784, 100 S. Ct. 2671 (1980). However, as noted above, federal rational basis review is a less rigorous standard than Alaska's rational basis review. See Isakson, 550 P.2d at 362. We have explained that Alaska's broader constitutional protection at times mandates parting ways with federal precedent. See Valley Hospital, 948 P.2d at 969. The United States Supreme Court in Harris v. McRae did not consider the discriminatory allocation of government benefits cases, Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 22 L. Ed. 2d 600, 89 S. Ct. 1322 (1969) and United States Department of Agriculture v. Moreno, 413 U.S. 528, 37 L. Ed. 2d 782, 93 S. Ct. 2821 (1973), discussed in this opinion.

[*912] The United States Supreme Court reached a similar conclusion in Shapiro: although the Court invalidated states' differential treatment of similarly situated welfare recipients under strict scrutiny, it also noted that the differentiation would be deemed "irrational and unconstitutional" even under federal rational basis review. n57 In United States Department of Agriculture v. Moreno, the United States Supreme Court invalidated a similar restriction under rational basis scrutiny alone. n58 The Court found no rational basis for a statute denying food stamps to unrelated persons who shared a household; it therefore concluded that the statute violated equal protection. n59

n59 See id. The Court noted legislative history indicating congressional intent to exclude "so[-]called 'hippies' and 'hippie communes'" from the food stamp program. Id. at 534. But it concluded:

The challenged classification clearly cannot be sustained by reference to this congressional purpose. For if the constitutional conception of "equal protection of the laws" means anything, it must at the very least mean that a bare congressional desire to harm a politically unpopular group cannot constitute a legitimate government interest. As a result, [a] purpose to discriminate against hippies cannot, in and of itself and without reference to [some independent] considerations in the public interest, justify the [challenged] amendment.

Lower court decisions have applied this principle to states' allocation of health care benefits, and concluded that "classification [among recipients] must be based upon some difference between the classes which is pertinent to the purpose for which the legislation is designed." n60 A California court found that the state violated equal protection by paying for attendant services by spouses of elderly and blind aid recipients, but denying payment for the same services by the spouses of otherwise disabled aid recipients. n61 And New York's highest court held that equal protection was violated by a statute that "effectively provided . . . that the aged, disabled, and blind are entitled to less public assistance than other needy persons." n62

Draper, 70 Cal. App. 4th 886, 888-89 (Cal. App. 1999)* (analyzing same regulation as in County of Orange and finding no equal protection violation).

DHSS's differential treatment of Medicaid-eligible Alaskans violates equal protection under rational basis review as surely as it does under strict scrutiny. Under any standard of review, "the State may not jeopardize the health and privacy of poor women by excluding medically necessary abortions from a system providing all other medically necessary care for the indigent." n63 n63 Right to Choose v. Byrne, 91 N.J. 287, 450 A.2d 925, 937 (N.J. 1982).

Because 7 AAC 43.140 infringes on a constitutionally protected interest, the State bears a high burden to justify the regulation. n64 Unless the State asserts a compelling state interest, the statute will necessarily fail constitutional scrutiny. n65 The State has failed to demonstrate such an interest in this case. It primarily defends 7 AAC 43.140 on [*913] the grounds that "medical and public welfare interests . . . are served by the legislature's decision to fund childbirth." But the regulation does not relate to funding for [30] childbirth, and the State's decision to fund prenatal care and other pregnancy-related services has not been challenged. Indeed, a woman who carries her pregnancy to term and a woman who terminates her pregnancy exercise the same fundamental right to reproductive choice. Alaska's equal protection clause does not permit governmental discrimination against either woman; both must be granted access to state health care under the same terms as any similarly situated person. The State's undisputed interest in providing health care to women who carry pregnancies to term has no effect on the State's interest in providing medical care to Medicaid-eligible women who, for health reasons, require abortions.

Mat-Su Coalition for Choice, 948 P.2d 963, 971 (Alaska 1997)* ("Since the right is fundamental, it cannot be interfered with unless the interference is justified by a compelling state interest.").

The State also asserts an interest in minimizing health risks to mother and child, and submits that these interests are often closely aligned. But those interests are not aligned in precisely the situation contemplated by 7 AAC 43.140's Medicaid exclusion: when pregnancy threatens a woman's health. Under the U.S. Supreme Court's analysis in Roe v. Wade, the State's interest in the life and health of the mother is paramount at every stage of pregnancy. n66 And in Alaska, "the scope of the fundamental right to an abortion . . . is similar to that expressed in Roe v. Wade." n67 Thus, although the State has a legitimate interest in protecting a fetus, at no point does that interest outweigh the State's interest in the life and health of the pregnant woman. n68 n68 Accord Byrne, 450 A.2d at 935 (holding, based on Roe, that "at no point in pregnancy may [the state's interest in protection of potential life] outweigh the superior interest in the life and health of the mother").

Because the State has not asserted an interest sufficiently compelling to justify denying medically necessary care to women who need abortions, we need not consider the means-ends fit of the challenged regulation. We conclude that 7 AAC 43.140 violates equal protection under the Alaska Constitution.

B. The Separation of Powers Doctrine Cannot Shield Unconstitutional Legislation.

The State argues that by holding the Medicaid program to constitutional standards, the superior court effected an appropriation of funds in violation of the separation of powers between branches of government. We disagree. Under Alaska's constitutional structure of government, "the judicial branch . . . has the constitutionally mandated duty to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Alaska Constitution, including compliance by the legislature." n69 The superior court had not only the power but the duty to strike the challenged restriction and any underlying legislation if it found them to violate constitutional rights; the same duty mandates our decision today.

n69 Malone v. Meekins, 650 P.2d 351, 356 (Alaska 1982); see also Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177, 2 L. Ed. 60 (1803) ("It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is.").

The separation of powers doctrine and its complementary doctrine of checks and balances are implicit in the Alaska Constitution. n70 In light of the separation [*914] of powers doctrine, we have declined to intervene in political questions, which are uniquely within the province of the legislature. n71 But under the same doctrine, we "cannot defer to the legislature when infringement of a constitutional right results from legislative action"; legislative intent is not paramount when that intent conflicts with the constitution. n72 And the mere fact that the legislature's appropriations power underlies Medicaid funding cannot insulate the program from constitutional review. As the California Supreme Court observed in rejecting nearly identical restrictions on abortion funding, the State's claim would remove all constitutional restraints from legislative exercise of the spending power:

Dupere, 709 P.2d 493, 496 (Alaska 1985),* modified, 721 P.2d 638 (Alaska 1986) ("The separation of powers doctrine must be considered along with the complementary doctrine of checks and balances."); *Alaska State-Operated Sch. > The United States Supreme Court recently discussed the division of powers within the federal system of government. See United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 120 S. Ct. 1740, 146 L. Ed. 2d 658 (2000). It reiterated the duty of courts to limit acts of legislation when those acts conflict with rights guaranteed by the Constitution, explaining that the framers of the Constitution divided power among the three branches of government so that the Constitution's provisions would not be defined solely by the political branches nor the scope of legislative power limited only by public opinion and the legislature's self-restraint. It is thus a permanent and indispensable feature of our constitutional system that the . . . judiciary is supreme in the exposition of the law of the Constitution.

Legislative exercise of the appropriations power has not in the past, and may not now, bar courts from upholding citizens' constitutional rights. Indeed, constitutional legal rulings commonly affect state programs and funding. Many of the most heralded constitutional decisions [35] of the past century have, as a practical matter, effectively required state expenditures. In Green v. County School Board, the United States Supreme Court ordered effective desegregation of public schools; n74 in Gideon v. Wainwright, it required funding of counsel for indigent criminal defendants; n75 and in Shapiro v. Thompson, it required states to give newcomers to the jurisdiction equal welfare benefits. n76 In each of these cases, a judicial decision upholding constitutional rights required state expenditures to support those rights. As appellee doctors and Planned Parenthood point out, the funding implications and separation of powers issue in this case would be identical if the State relied on other suspect criteria, such as race, to deny Medicaid benefits. Following the State's argument, the exclusion of one ethnic group -- or inclusion only of other specified groups -- within legislative Medicaid appropriations would be immunized from constitutional review, merely because the legislature had exercised its spending power. We emphatically reject such a claim. Like the Supreme Court decisions listed above, today's holding is squarely within the [36] authority of the court, not in spite of, but because of, the judiciary's role within our divided system of government.

Our conclusion that the separation of powers doctrine supports today's decision is firmly supported by twenty-one other courts that have considered a state's exclusion of medically necessary abortions from state-funded health care programs. n77 The State has not identified a single state or federal case holding that the separation of powers precludes a court from ordering the state to provide equal funding for women whose health is endangered by pregnancy. n78 Courts that have explicitly considered separation of powers challenges to holdings like the one we reach today have dismissed the challenges in no uncertain [37] terms. The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, for example, wrote:

n78 A single justice in a concurring opinion stated that the judiciary may not, under the equal protection clause of Michigan's constitution, require legislative funding for medically necessary abortion. Doe v. Department of Soc. Servs., 439 Mich. 650, 487 N.W.2d 166, 182-83 (Mich. 1992) (Levin, J., concurring). To our knowledge, his is the sole dissenting voice on this issue.

We have never embraced the proposition that merely because a legislative action involves an exercise of the appropriations power, it is on that account immunized against judicial review. [We reject] the [*915] argument that either the doctrine of separation of powers or the political question doctrine requires that result. Without in any way attempting to invade the rightful province of the Legislature to conduct its own business, we have a duty, certainly since Marbury v. Madison, to adjudicate a claim that a [38] law and the actions undertaken pursuant to that law conflict with the requirements of the Constitution. "This," in the words of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, "is of the very essence of judicial duty."[n79]

App. 3d 852, 183 Cal. Rptr. 475, 478 (Cal. App. 1982)* ("When there is an unconstitutional restriction in an existing appropriation, it offends no constitutional principle to direct that the disputed payments be made from funds already appropriated for the same general purpose."); Clinic for Women, Inc. v. Humphreys, No. 49D12-9908-MI-1137, Slip Op. at 12 (Ind. Super., Oct. 18, 2000) ("If the challenged enactments violate the state Constitution, the Court can grant relief even if doing so means that state funds will be spent in a manner not explicitly approved by the Legislature. The Court has the power to shape appropriate remedies and the Legislature has a duty to appropriate funds to meet its constitutional obligations."); Low-Income Women v. Bost, 38 S.W.3d 689, 702 (Tex. App. 2000) ("The relief sought by Low-Income Women -- funding medically necessary abortions -- cannot be characterized as a new appropriation. They do not ask for a new appropriation of funds to the Medical Assistance Program. Rather, they seek declaratory and injunctive relief against unconstitutional restrictions placed on the use of funds already appropriated pursuant to a pre-existing law authorizing funds to be used for health care under the program.").

We agree with this articulation of the court's fundamental powers and duties.

A federal case, State of Georgia v. Heckler, also directly supports our conclusion. n80 In that case, the state of Georgia sought reimbursement from the federal Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) for money spent by the state to fund medically necessary abortions. Although the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit ultimately denied Georgia's claim, it emphatically rejected HHS's argument that because Congress had not appropriated money for medically necessary abortions, a district court could not compel HSS to pay the claims. n81 As the Eleventh Circuit court noted, the statute could preclude payment only if an interpreting court so determined. n82 "There is no doubt," the Heckler court concluded, "that if this Court decided that these payments were legally required, HHS would be authorized to make them." n83

n83 Id.

We agree with the Eleventh Circuit: It is legally indisputable that a trial court order requiring state compliance with constitutional standards does not violate the separation of powers doctrine.

V. CONCLUSION

The manner in which the State allocates public benefits is subject to constitutional limitation under Alaska's equal protection provision. The State, having undertaken to provide health care for poor Alaskans, must adhere to neutral criteria in distributing that care. It may not deny medically necessary services to eligible individuals based on criteria unrelated to the purposes of the public health care program. Moreover, the DHSS regulation in this case discriminatorily burdens the exercise of a constitutional right. Because we conclude that denial of Medicaid assistance to poor women who medically require abortions violates equal protection, we AFFIRM the decision of the superior court.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN COGHILL

House Bill 193 Legislative Ethics Amendments
Sponsor Statement

The Select Committee on Legislative Ethics requested some changes to the Legislative Ethics Statutes to address several issues discussed by the committee.

Two amendments requested by the committee address tickets to charity events and disclosure of gifts of tickets for charitable events that have a value of more than $250.00. They allow persons who are not lobbyists to give a gift of a ticket to a charitable event sanctioned by the Legislative Council to a legislator or legislative employee that has a value of more than $250.00. However, the recipient of the ticket must disclose to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics the value of the ticket that exceeds the $250.00 limit. The bill clarifies that lobbyists, immediate family members of lobbyists, or persons acting on behalf of a lobbyist may not exceed the $250 limit.

The committee also recommended two changes to the statutes that deal with the public members of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. First, public members would be paid a $150 a day stipend for attending meetings. Secondly, an alternate member of the committee selected to replace a regular member of the committee for some purpose would serve for the entire duration of the proceeding.

The bill clarifies that disclosures prohibited by state and federal law are not required by the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

The bill draws a bright line for legislators and legislative staff to follow for assisting constituents with problems they encounter with state agencies. Once an issue has been appealed to an administrative hearing officer, the legislator or legislative staffer may no longer make contacts with the agency, unless he or she is acting in a private capacity and reports any compensation for the representation to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

Finally this bill reopens the discussion of AS 24.60.030(a)(2), the use of public funds, facilities, etc for the private benefit of either the legislative, a legislative employee, or another person. The committee has recognized that many things a legislator or staff does for constituents, such as problems with child support or the permanent fund dividend, results in a monetary benefit for the constituent. Section 8 of this bill adds definitions for "constituent", "constituent service", "legislative purpose", "nonlegislative purpose", and "private benefit" to better clarify the law. While Representative Coghill disagrees with some of the definitions, he feels it is important to open the dialogue on the subject and fix the problem.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act increasing the amount of money certain lobbyists may spend on food and beverage for immediate consumption by a legislator, legislative employee, or a spouse or domestic partner of a legislator or legislative employee without disclosure to the Alaska Public Offices Commission; prohibiting public members of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics from disclosing information that is confidential under the Legislative Ethics Act; relating to representation by a legislator or legislative employee of another person in an administrative hearing; relating to prohibitions on the use of state resources under the Legislative Ethics Act; relating to charity events under the Legislative Ethics Act; requiring compensation of public members of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics; exempting certain information from disclosure requirements of the Legislative Ethics Act; relating to the selection of alternate members and the participation of members and alternate members in formal proceedings of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics and its subcommittees; and defining 'constituent,' 'constituent service,' 'legislative purpose,' 'nonlegislative purpose,' and 'private benefit' for the purposes of the Legislative Ethics Act."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 24.45.051(b) is amended to read:

(b) A lobbyist required to report to the commission under (a) of this section, who provides or pays for food or beverage for immediate consumption by a legislator or legislative employee or a spouse or domestic partner of a legislator or legislative employee shall report the date the food or beverage was provided or paid for and the recipient's name and relationship to the legislator or legislative employee, unless the food and beverage

(1) cost $50 [$15] or less; or

(2) are provided as part of an event that is open to all legislators or legislative employees.

 Sec. 2. AS 24.60.030(a) is amended to read:

(a) A legislator or legislative employee may not

(1) solicit, agree to accept, or accept a benefit other than official compensation for the performance of public duties; this paragraph may not be construed to prohibit lawful solicitation for and acceptance of campaign contributions, solicitation or acceptance of contributions for a charity event, as defined in AS 24.60.080(a)(2)(B), or the acceptance of a gift [LAWFUL GRATUITY] under AS 24.60.075 or 24.60.080 [AS 24.60.080];

(2) use public funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for a nonlegislative purpose, for involvement in or support of or opposition to partisan political activity, or for the private benefit of [EITHER] the legislator, legislative employee, or another person; this paragraph does not prohibit

(A) limited use of state property and resources for personal purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and either the cost or value related to the use is nominal or the legislator or legislative employee reimburses the state for the cost of the use;

(B) the use of a legislator's legislative mailing list for campaign purposes, or the use of mailing lists, computer data, or other information lawfully obtained from a government agency and available to the general public for nonlegislative purposes;

(C) the legislative council, notwithstanding AS 24.05.190, from designating a public facility for use by legislators and legislative employees for health or fitness purposes; when the council designates a facility to be used by legislators and legislative employees for health or fitness purposes, it shall adopt guidelines governing access to and use of the facility; the guidelines may establish times in which use of the facility is limited to specific groups;

(D) a legislator from using the legislator's private office in the capital city during a legislative session, and for the 10 days immediately before and the 10 days immediately after a legislative session, for nonlegislative purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and if there is no cost to the state for the use of the space and equipment, other than utility costs and minimal wear and tear, or the legislator promptly reimburses the state for the cost; an office is considered a legislator's private office under this subparagraph if it is the primary space in the capital city reserved for use by the legislator, whether or not it is shared with others;

(E) a legislator from use of legislative employees to prepare and send out seasonal greeting cards;

(F) a legislator from using state resources to transport computers or other office equipment owned by the legislator but primarily used for a state function;

(G) use by a legislator of photographs of that legislator;

(H) reasonable use of the Internet by a legislator or a legislative employee except if the use is for election campaign purposes;

(I) a legislator or legislative employee from soliciting, accepting, or receiving a gift on behalf of a recognized, nonpolitical charitable organization in a state facility;

(J) a legislator from sending any communication in the form of a newsletter to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(K) full participation in a charity event approved in advance by the Alaska Legislative Council;

(3) knowingly seek, accept, use, allocate, grant, or award public funds for a purpose other than that approved by law, or make a false statement in connection with a claim, request, or application for compensation, reimbursement, or travel allowances from public funds;

(4) require a legislative employee to perform services for the private benefit of the legislator or employee at any time, or allow a legislative employee to perform services for the private benefit of a legislator or employee on government time; it is not a violation of this paragraph if the services were performed in an unusual or infrequent situation and the person's services were reasonably necessary to permit the legislator or legislative employee to perform official duties;

(5) use or authorize the use of state funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for the purpose of political fund raising or campaigning; this paragraph does not prohibit

(A) limited use of state property and resources for personal purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and either the cost or value related to the use is nominal or the legislator or legislative employee reimburses the state for the cost of the use;

(B) the use of a legislator's legislative mailing list, or the use of mailing lists, computer data, or other information lawfully obtained from a government agency and available to the general public for nonlegislative purposes;

(C) storing or maintaining, consistent with (b) of this section, election campaign records in a legislator's office;

(D) a legislator from using the legislator's private office in the capital city during a legislative session, and for the 10 days immediately before and the 10 days immediately after a legislative session, for nonlegislative purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and if there is no cost to the state for the use of the space and equipment, other than utility costs and minimal wear and tear, or the legislator promptly reimburses the state for the cost; an office is considered a legislator's private office under this subparagraph if it is the primary space in the capital city reserved for use by the legislator, whether or not it is shared with others; or

 Sec. 3. AS 24.60.030(i) is amended to read:

(i) Except when representing another person for compensation subject to AS 24.60.100 and as a professional who is licensed in the state [FOR SUPPLYING INFORMATION REQUESTED BY THE HEARING OFFICER OR THE INDIVIDUAL, BOARD, OR COMMISSION WITH AUTHORITY TO MAKE THE FINAL DECISION IN THE CASE, OR WHEN RESPONDING TO CONTACTS INITIATED BY THE HEARING OFFICER OR THE INDIVIDUAL, BOARD, OR COMMISSION WITH AUTHORITY TO MAKE THE FINAL DECISION IN THE CASE], a legislator or legislative employee may not attempt to influence the outcome of an administrative hearing by directly or indirectly contacting or attempting to contact the hearing officer assigned to the hearing or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the matter [CASE] unless [THE]

(1) the contact is made in the presence of all parties to the hearing or the parties' representatives while the legislator or legislative employee is acting as a party or a witness in the matter or responding to a question asked of the legislator or legislative employee by the hearing officer, individual, board, or commission and the contact is made a part of the record; or

(2) the contact is inadvertent and ex parte and the fact and substance of the contact are [IS] promptly disclosed by the legislator or legislative employee to all parties to the hearing and [THE CONTACT IS] made a part of the record.

* Sec. 4. AS 24.60.060(a) is amended to read:

(a) A legislator, [OR] legislative employee, or public member of the committee may not knowingly make an unauthorized disclosure of information that is made confidential by law and that the person acquired in the course of official duties. A person who violates this section is subject to a proceeding under AS 24.60.170 and may be subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.860 or another law.

* Sec. 5. AS 24.60.080(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a legislator or legislative employee may not

(1) solicit, accept, or receive, directly or indirectly, a gift worth $250 or more, whether in the form of money, services, a loan, travel, entertainment, hospitality, promise, or other form, or gifts from the same person worth less than $250 that in a calendar year aggregate to $250 or more in value;

(2) solicit, accept, or receive a gift with any monetary value from a lobbyist, an immediate family member of a lobbyist, or a person acting on behalf of a lobbyist, except

(A) food or beverage for immediate consumption;

(B) a contribution to a charity event, [FROM ANY PERSON AT ANY TIME, AND] tickets to [FOR] a charity event, and [AT ANY TIME, EXCEPT THAT TICKETS TO OR] gifts received in connection with [AT] a charity event; however, tickets to a charity event and gifts received in connection with a charity event that are not included in the price of the ticket [UNDER THIS SUBPARAGRAPH] are subject to the calendar year limit on the value of gifts received by a legislator or legislative employee in (1) of this subsection; in this subparagraph, "charity event" means an event the proceeds of which go to a charitable organization with tax-free status under 26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3) and that the Alaska Legislative Council has approved in advance; the tickets may entitle the bearer to admission to the event, to entertainment, to food or beverages, or to other gifts or services in connection with [INVOLVED IN] the charity event;

(C) a gift that is unconnected with the recipient's legislative status and is from a member of the legislator's or legislative employee's immediate family;

(D) a gift delivered on the premises of a state facility and accepted on behalf of a recognized nonpolitical charitable organization; or

(E) a compassionate gift under AS 24.60.075.

 Sec. 6. AS 24.60.080(c) is amended to read:

(c) Notwithstanding (a)(1) of this section, it is not a violation of this section for a person who is a legislator or legislative employee to accept

(1) hospitality, other than hospitality described in (4) of this subsection,

(A) with incidental transportation at the residence of a person; however, a vacation home located outside the state is not considered a residence for the purposes of this subparagraph; or

(B) at a social event or meal;

(2) discounts that are available

(A) generally to the public or to a large class of persons to which the person belongs; or

(B) when on official state business, but only if receipt of the discount benefits the state;

(3) food or foodstuffs indigenous to the state that are shared generally as a cultural or social norm;

(4) travel and hospitality primarily for the purpose of obtaining information on matters of legislative concern;

(5) gifts from the immediate family of the person; in this paragraph, "immediate family" means

(A) the spouse of the person;

(B) the person's domestic partner;

(C) a child, including a stepchild and an adoptive child, of the person or of the person's domestic partner;

(D) a parent, sibling, grandparent, aunt, or uncle of the person;

(E) a parent, sibling, grandparent, aunt, or uncle of the person's spouse or the person's domestic partner; and

(F) a stepparent, stepsister, stepbrother, step-grandparent, step-aunt, or step-uncle of the person, the person's spouse, or the person's domestic partner;

(6) gifts that are not connected with the recipient's legislative status;

(7) a discount for all or part of a legislative session, including time immediately preceding or following the session, or other gift to welcome a legislator or legislative employee who is employed on the personal staff of a legislator or by a standing or special committee to the capital city or in recognition of the beginning of a legislative session if the gift or discount is available generally to all legislators and the personal staff of legislators and staff of standing and special committees; this paragraph does not apply to legislative employees who are employed by the Legislative Affairs Agency, the office of the chief clerk, the office of the senate secretary, the legislative budget and audit committee, the office of victims' rights, or the office of the ombudsman;

(8) a gift of legal services in a matter of legislative concern and a gift of other services related to the provision of legal services in a matter of legislative concern;

(9) a gift of transportation from a legislator or a legislative employee to a legislator or a legislative employee if the transportation takes place in the state on or in an aircraft, boat, motor vehicle, or other means of transport owned or under the control of the donor; this paragraph does not apply to travel described in (4) of this subsection or travel for political campaign purposes; or

(10) a contribution to a charity event from any person at any time, or a ticket to a charity event from a person who is not a lobbyist, an immediate family member of a lobbyist, or acting on behalf of a lobbyist; in this paragraph, "charity event" has the meaning given in (a)(2)(B) of this section.

(d) A legislator or legislative employee who accepts a gift under (c)(4) of this section that has a value of $250 or more or a ticket to a charity event under (c)(10) of this section that has a value of $250 or more shall disclose to the committee, within 30 days after receipt of the gift, the name and occupation of the donor and the approximate value of the gift. A legislator or legislative employee who accepts a gift under (c)(8) of this section that the recipient expects will have a value of $250 or more in the calendar year shall disclose to the committee, within 30 days after receipt of the gift, the name and occupation of the donor, a general description of the matter of legislative concern with respect to which the gift is made, and the approximate value of the gift. The committee shall maintain a public record of the disclosures it receives relating to gifts under (c)(4), (c)(8), (c)(10), and (i) of this section and shall forward the disclosures to the appropriate house for inclusion in the journal. The committee shall forward to the Alaska Public Offices Commission copies of the disclosures concerning gifts under (c)(4), (c)(8), (c)(10), and (i) of this section that it receives from legislators and legislative directors. A legislator or legislative employee who accepts a gift under (c)(6) of this section that has a value of $250 or more shall, within 30 days after receiving the gift, disclose to the committee the name and occupation of the donor and a description of the gift. The committee shall maintain disclosures relating to gifts under (c)(6) of this section as confidential records and may only use, or permit a committee employee or contractor to use, a disclosure under (c)(6) of this section in the investigation of a possible violation of this section or in a proceeding under AS 24.60.170. If the disclosure under (c)(6) of this section becomes part of the record of a proceeding under AS 24.60.170, the confidentiality provisions of that section apply to the disclosure.

 Sec. 8. AS 24.60.105 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(d) A person may submit a written request to refrain from making a disclosure that is required by this chapter if making the disclosure would violate the United States Constitution, the Constitution of the State of Alaska, or other state or federal law. The committee shall approve or deny the request, or require further justification from the person making the request. At the request of the committee or a person authorized to act on behalf of the committee, a person who seeks to refrain from making a disclosure under this subsection shall provide the committee with justification in writing, and the committee may review the written justification to determine whether it is sufficient.

* Sec. 9. AS 24.60.130(f) is amended to read:

(f) The committee may contract for professional services and may employ staff as it considers necessary. A committee employee, including a person who provides personal services under a contract with the committee, may not be a legislator, an elected or appointed official of a state or local governmental entity, an officer of a political party, a candidate for public office, or a registered lobbyist. The legislative council shall provide office space, equipment, and additional staff support for the committee. The committee shall submit a budget for each fiscal year to the finance committees of the legislature and shall annually submit an estimated budget to the governor for information purposes in preparation of the state operating budget. Public members of the committee shall receive [SERVE WITHOUT] compensation of $150 a day while attending committee meetings and [FOR THEIR SERVICES, BUT] are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized for boards and commissions under AS 39.20.180.

* Sec. 10. AS 24.60.130(n) is amended to read:

(n) A member who participates at the commencement of a proceeding under AS 24.60.170 shall participate for the duration of the proceeding unless disqualified or unable to continue participating for any reason; however, provision shall be made for service by alternate members on the committee or on a subcommittee, as follows:

(1) when [WHEN] appointing members of the legislature to serve on the committee, the speaker of the house or the president of the senate, as appropriate, shall appoint an alternate member for each regular member; an [. AN] alternate must have the same qualifications as the regular member for whom the alternate stands as alternate and is subject to confirmation as required for the regular member;

(2) when selecting public members to serve on the committee, the Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court shall also select one alternate public member; the alternate public member's selection is subject to ratification as required for selection of the regular public members;

(3) if, except as to a proceeding under AS 24.60.170, [. IF] a regular [LEGISLATIVE] member of the committee or a subcommittee is unable to participate in [ATTEND] a meeting, the chair of the committee or a subcommittee shall designate the regular member's alternate to participate [SERVE] in place of the regular member at the meeting, and the designated alternate, unless for any reason unable to participate, shall participate for the duration of that meeting; if [SERVE UNLESS UNABLE TO SERVE FOR ANY REASON. IF] a regular [LEGISLATIVE] member of the committee or a subcommittee is disqualified under (h) of this section from participating in [SERVING ON THE COMMITTEE OR THE SUBCOMMITTEE CONCERNING] a proceeding under AS 24.60.170 or if the regular member is unable to participate [ATTEND], the chair of the committee or a subcommittee shall designate the regular member's alternate to participate [SERVE] in place of the regular member for the duration of [IN] the proceeding unless the alternate is [ALSO] disqualified or is for any reason unable to participate; the [FROM SERVING. THE] designation shall be treated as confidential to the same extent that the identity of the subject of a complaint is required to be kept confidential.

 Sec. 11. AS 24.60.990(a) is amended by adding new paragraphs to read:

(17) "constituent" means a person to whom a legislator owes a duty of representation under the Constitution of the State of Alaska;

(18) "constituent service" means assistance, including representation other than legal representation and advice other than legal advice, that is provided by a legislator or a legislator's staff to a constituent;

(19) "legislative purpose" means legislative action or providing constituent service;

(20) "nonlegislative purpose" means a purpose other than a legislative purpose;

(21) "private benefit" means a benefit that is conferred on a person with a purpose that is mainly a nonlegislative purpose.

REGARDING: HB 193, LEGISLATIVE ETHICS

A conceptual amendment was drafted at the House Judiciary committee meeting on Friday, April 3, concerning confidentiality of information obtained by members of the Ethics Committee and staff. I'm not sure the language proposed accomplishes the intent of the committee.

RECOMMENDED LANGUAGE: A member of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics or staff to the committee may not make a disclosure of information related to a proceeding under AS 24.60.170 or an advisory opinion request under AS 24.60.160 unless allowed by statute.

EXPLANATION: What this statement does is prevent someone on the committee and staff from disclosing information related to a complaint proceeding and an advisory opinion request. The language recommended at the House Judiciary committee meeting only related to information obtained during a meeting. I believe all information related to these subjects should be confidential. Many times information is available and provided to committee members prior to an actual meeting.

QUESTION: AS 24.60.060(a) may already accomplish what members of House Judiciary were suggesting with the addition of language covering public member of the committee. Additionally, this statute provides consequences when confidentiality is violated.

AS 24.60.060(a) A legislator, [OR] legislative employee, or a public member of the committee may not knowingly make an unauthorized disclosure of information that is made confidential by law and that the person acquired in the course of official duties. A person who violates this section is subject to a proceeding under AS 24.60l.170 and may be subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.860 or another law.

EXPLANANTION: Both the complaint process and the advisory opinion process are determined confidential by statute.

MEMORANDUM March 26, 2009

SUBJECT: Legislative Ethics Act changes (CSHB 193(STA), Work Order No. 26-LS0656\T)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Chair of the House State Affairs Committee
Attn: Nancy Manly

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

At the March 25, 2009, meeting of the House State Affairs subcommittee that reviewed this bill, I expressed some concerns about the definitions in the bill and the subcommittee asked that I restate them in a memo to be transmitted with the bill when it leaves your committee.

In the course of drafting or reviewing advisory opinions I have observed that certain undefined terms are very difficult to interpret and apply. Among them are the terms "constituent" and "non-legislative purpose."

The definition of constituent in this bill, "a person to whom a legislator owes a duty of representation under the Constitution of the State of Alaska," leaves the meaning of the term subject to varying interpretation. Article XII, section 5 of the state constitution, requires all public officers to take an oath of office.[1] The language reads as follows: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Alaska, and that I will faithfully discharge my duties as . . . [a legislator] to the best of my ability." This suggests that a legislator has, in addition to the general duty of a public officer to support and defend the state and federal constitutions, additional duties specific to that office. However, those duties are not further described in the state constitution.

Other than the requirement that a constituent be a "person," the meaning of constituent is wide open to interpretation under the definition in this bill. Every person in Alaska, including corporations and non-citizens, has rights under the state constitution. A legislator may owe every person in the state a duty in the sense that the legislator has sworn to uphold the state and federal constitutions, but that does not necessarily mean that an individual legislator owes each person in the state a duty of representation. If the intent of the bill's definition of "constituent" is that a legislator's constituent is every person who is in or of Alaska, then it might be more accurate to say:

> "constituent" means a person who resides in the state, is registered to vote in the state, or is licensed by the state to do business, or a person who is an immediate family member of a person who resides in the state or is registered to vote in the state.

A definition of the term "legislative purpose" is necessary to the bill in order to support the bill's definition of "non-legislative purpose," a term that is prominent in AS 24.60.030(a)(2). However, the definition of "legislative purpose" provided in this bill is unclear because it describes action, not purpose.

" Sec. 8. AS 24.60.158 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 24.60.158. Informal advice. (a) The committee shall authorize and train at least one committee staff employee to respond to requests from legislators, legislative employees, or public members of the committee for advice about the legal requirements of this chapter, including advice as to whether the facts and circumstances of a particular case constitute a violation of ethical standards under this chapter. However, the advice provided by staff is not binding on the committee except as provided under (b) of this section.

(b) A person who is a legislator, legislative employee, or public member of the committee may request a written staff opinion as to whether the facts and circumstances of a particular case constitute a violation of ethical standards under this chapter, and committee staff shall respond to a request made under this subsection in a writing entitled "staff advisory opinion." If the person who requests the opinion provides with the request all information that the person reasonably believes is material to the request, and all information the staff requests, and if the information provided is accurate to the best of the person's understanding, then the person may rely on the written opinion without prejudice unless it is rescinded by the committee.

(c) The committee is bound by a staff advisory opinion under (b) of this section to the same extent it is bound by an advisory opinion under AS 24.60.160; however, a staff advisory opinion may be rescinded by a majority vote of the committee. An opinion under (b) of this section, whether or not it is rescinded, is subject to the redaction and confidentiality requirements of AS 24.60.160(b)."

AM #7: Amends AS 24.60.030(a)(1) as follows:

(a) A legislator or legislative employee may not

(1) solicit, agree to accept, or accept a benefit other than official compensation for the performance of public duties; this paragraph may not be construed to prohibit lawful solicitation for and acceptance of campaign contributions, solicitation or acceptance of contributions for a gift [GRATUITY] event, as defined in AS 24.60.080 (a)(2)(B), or the acceptance of a lawful gratuity under AS 24.60.075 and AS 24.60.080 ;

Moved by Representative Gruenberg by request of Dan Wayne
Passed without objection

In addition the committee instructed Dan Wayne to check Title 24.60 to see if the assumption that it was ethical to use a legislative newsletter email database for campaign purposes. If AS 24.60 does not allow that prepare an amendment that would correct the problem.

Representative Seaton also asked Dan Wayne to prepare a legal opinion about the definition of "constituent" and what legal interpretation of "duty of representation under the Constitution of the State of Alaska" is.

Representative Seaton allowed Representative Gara to discuss an amendment he was attempting to have drafted that would basically allow for a person who submitted in writing a request for a determination by the director of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics for an ethics issue to be exempt from a ethics violation if the committee met at a later date and found the action unethical if the person who receive the determination acted in good faith on the advice of the director. Representative Seaton said that was out of the scope of the purposes of the subcommittee and welcomed Representative Gara to present the issue to the full committee.

Representative Gara asked that someone from OCS be present on Friday to discuss the process used for a ten in state custody and how this legislation would affect the way they would a teen pregnancy when the teen is in state custody.

Time of Adjournment: 5:02 p.m.

Subcommittee of the House State Affairs Committee
House Bill No. 193 (STA)
March 25, 2009

Chair Seaton recognized Reps Gardner, Doogan, Gruenberg, Johnson, and Gara

Also present:
Rynnieva Moss, Legislative Aide to Rep John Coghill
Joyce Anderson, Director, Select Committee on Ethics
Dan Wayne, Legislative Legal

Rep Seaton stated that \S version is what has been adopted by the committee and there were questions on that. There was discussion on what version would be used as the changes were addressed, it was finally decided that the committee would use the \S version. Go to page 7 - on S version - Number 19 Legislative Purpose, the S version said legislative action or constituent service - changed to goal of legislative action or a constituent service is a substantial goal.

Rynnieva Moss recommended to only remove "a" and insert "constituent service."

Dan Wayne stated that the P version had a lot of problems because all the changes requested were not done; there just was not enough time. S version is just wrong as it does not contain changes in CS. Not sure if time is going to be very well spent. Nothing the subcommittee was expecting Rep Seaton - go back to S version and pull out financial in S version.

Committee agrees.

Rep Gruenberg - stated he would like to make the change as an amendment.
Amendment No. 1 - \S version. Page 8 lines 2, 3 and 4, eliminate the word [financial].

Rep Seaton -no objection. Adopted.

Rep Seaton - Page 7 \S version - No. 19 - legislative purpose the committee was concerned that what we have means a constituent service and so we are changing that to a goal of legislative action or providing constituent service.

Rep Gruenberg - suggested goal of "a legislative action" - may be more than one action remove [a] and at the end of the line remove [a] and insert the word providing.

Legislative Action - A goal of legislative action or providing constituent service.

Rep Gardner - in what sense is constituent service not legislative action?

Rep Gruenberg - legislative action is passing laws or budget issues and constituent service is broader term. Is there some definition some where of legislative action?

Rynnieva Moss read AS 24.60.990(a)(9) Legislative Action into the record. A constituent service could be assistance with a clerical error that does not result in legislative action - but sometimes it could result in legislative action because you find a flaw in the law and you introduce legislation to fix it.

Rep Seaton- problem was we have a series of definitions - you got into the goal or the want or desire of a constituent becomes the legislative purpose rather than the legislator providing the service.

Rep Gruenberg - Amendment No. 2 - strike [a] page 7 line 29 before legislative action and strike [a] after the word or and insert providing constituent service.
Legislative Purpose: Means a goal of legislative action or providing constituent service.

Dan Wayne - I think you might want to add before providing - a goal of [the action] - so it refers to the goal of legislative action or legislative service - to be clear.

Rynnieva - do we need the word goal? Would not a legislative purpose be a legislative action or a constituent purpose?

Dan Wayne - I made these up these definitions originally. A purpose is not a thing not a service. A service is not a purpose it has a purpose.

Rep Gruenberg - purpose and goal are very similar. Amendment to amendment to delete [a goal of]on line 29 as an amendment to the amendment.

Rep Seaton - Amendment No. 2 and amendment - reads "legislative purpose means a legislative action or providing constituent service."

Rep Gruenberg stated that as amended would read "legislative purpose means legislative action or providing constituent service."

Rep Doogan - if you are saying a legislative purpose is a legislative action, it makes no sense. Your purpose is to hit a home run your action is to swing the bad therefore your purpose is to swing the bat. You have a confusion of goals and meanings.

Rep Gruenberg - What do think we should say?

Rep Doogan - if you are talking about the purpose you are talking about the goal of the action not the action itself.

Rep Gruenberg withdrew his second amendment to the amendment.

Rynnieva stated that the definition of purpose out of Black's Law - objective, goal or end.

Rep Seaton - under legislative purpose we have to say something that this an attempt to work on legislative action or something like that in providing constituent service.

Rynnieva - purpose is used because it is used in the statute and she highlighted where it is. We want legislative purpose to include action; not only legislative purpose but also constituent service though it is not yet defined in statute - we want to do that in this bill. One defined and one not.

Rep Seaton - Dan do you think having the word goal there is legally explanatory enough or means working towards a legislative action.

Dan Wayne - I think that I had some other language to narrow it down, but this would mean constituent service is anything you would do for a constituent no matter what it is. So I said goal of legislative action is substantial - in order that it is substantial. Maybe use the word purpose.

Rep Doogan - attempting to define legislative purpose to have two parts, legislative action - already defined and constituent service - not defined in statute. So if what you want to say is legislative purpose is 2 things you legislative purpose and constituent action. Legislative purpose or goal are we trying to define. Are we saying the legislative purpose or goal we are tying to define: legislative purpose means having a goal of legislative action or providing constituent service.

Rynnieva - it is the end product. Legislative action or constituent service we have met a legislative purpose.

3:36:04 PM

Rep Gruenberg- sounds like what Mr. Doogan has said is a good idea, add to Amendment No. 2 - just add one word - between means and a also add word "having". Just what Rep Doogan suggested. Amendment to amendment.

No objection to Amendment to Amendment adopted

Amendment No. 2 - Legislative purpose having a goal of legislative action or constituent service.

Dan - we have to define it so we know what it is not. AS 24.60.030(a)(2) read into the record.

Rep Seaton - we are defining non-legislative purpose - Line 31 on page 7 we are defining non-legislative purpose.

Dan - if you say a person has to have a goal - "having" is not the right word.

Rep Johnson - goal in there is intent and if you talk about intention it would be difficult to define. We are defining legislative purpose and all the time is your goal and it may not be constituent related.

Rep Doogan - the definition - legislative action was read into the record again by Rynnieva.

Rep Seaton - legislative purpose means legislative action or providing constituent service. So what I would like to do is amendment 2 withdrawn.

Rep Gruenberg withdrew Amendment No. 2.

Rep Seaton - being Amendment No 3 Page 7, Line 29, delete [a goal of a] [a]removing the word and inserting the word "providing" at the end of the line.

Rep Seaton stated Legislative purpose means legislative action or providing constituent service; and asked if there were any objections.

No objection - Amendment No. 3 has passed.

Rep Gruenberg - Amendment No. 4 constituent - does not have to be natural can be any other form of person.

Rynnieva read the definition of person into the record.

3:42:47 PM

Rep Gardner - do we have a duty currently to represent a business trust.

Rep Gruenberg - as a legislator these things all relate to people and a business is one or more people and they set it up in a trust. A few years ago we had a bill setting up a children's trust. We have had things dealing with trusts.

Rep Seaton - if you have a business in your community or not is there a constitutional duty of representation to those entities.

Dan Wayne - constitutionally - no duty. Talks about how the legislature is set up in Art 2 - but does not spell out duties.

Rynnieva said there is a duty to the constituent. There are plenty of constitutional duties to a constituent.

Rep Gardner - duty to the people leave natural in there.

Rep Doogan - small business in my district, interest of various sorts the people who run those businesses may or may not be constituents in the sense that they vote for me or even live in my district, but they may still come to me and say I don't want this or I do want that - if we were to leave the term natural person in this document, could I talk to them, go to bat for them where it was appropriate - since their interest is not as my constituent but as the owner of a business in my district.

Rep Seaton - legislative purpose is providing constituent service, but if you were talking to ConocoPhillips, ey are not a atural person. business is not a natural person. It would not get constituent service. Not a natural person and therefore it would not be constituent service.

Rep Gardner - do we not also have obligations - every Alaskan is a constituent.

Rep Gruenberg original version limited constituent to your district. We discussed elimination of natural in full committee.

Rep Gardner - if that is the case, what is the reason to have to whom the legislator owes a duty of representation.

Dan - there is no duty of representation owed by the legislator.

Rynnieva - we believe when a legislator takes an oath he believes that he has a duty to protect the constitutional rights and that he does have a duty to protect those rights.

Dan - we are talking about a definition, there is an oath and I am not saying they don't have that responsibility but we are trying to define something - so maybe there does not need to be a definition.

Rep Seaton - if we take out natural. Who is the person that the legislator does not owe representation to that you would be working for or providing service too. Staffer in D.C. who is a resident in D.C. and not an Alaska resident anymore, and no permanent fund - could you provide constituent service to them.

Rynnieva - the answer would be if the person was being deprived of something that the person was eligible for under the constitution.

Rep Gruenberg - people in Alaska they qualify, if all the other people in the world are the second class if they are dealing with an Alaskan issue they should get our representation. I think this focuses on the people and the representation. Read this and mentioned it in committee I thought it was a creative phrase. I think this says we have a duty and right of representation as to that permissible under the constitution. Leave it at that. Keep it in. Someone that would not qualify StateWatch people in Virginia - concerned about Wrangell Islands

- does not have anything to do with Alaska, there is no duty to represent them.

3:51:24 PM

Rep Seaton - what if there is a trip to Darfur - anyway - lets request a leg legal opinion on parameters to forward on with the bill.

Rep Seaton - any objection.

Rep Gardner - remove natural then could we say a constituent it could include defenders of wildlife? Then we have a duty to represent?

Dan - might fit better to take out representation and leave duty. Maybe not a duty of representation to a particular person but certainly a duty. The duty to uphold the constitution.

Rynnieva stated that would be acceptable.

Rep Seaton stated that Amendment No. 4 - deals with removing natural line 24 - Page 7 - any objections?

No objection - adopted.

Rep Gruenberg moved for Amendment No. 5 - delete [representation] Page 7, line 25.

Rep Gruenberg - to Dan - since you will be doing the legal opinion - you might want to substitute a phrase for representation or leave it in - if you are talking about duty. "of representation" - a little uncomfortable to take it out until we have a legal opinion. If we just ask for a legal opinion on that phrase.

Dan - researched it and it would say what has already been stated. Constitution would not provide any information about what duty of representation is. You are limiting the duty but there is no place to find out where that limit is.

Rep Gruenberg - only a duty of public safety or education, and this should be looked at - as a major thing that is the core of the legislature.

Rynnieva - let that word remain - and let it be discussed in Judiciary. It also could be that duty could include representation because it results in legislative action or constituent service.

Rep Gara - when you try and define the people you represent in two constrained a manner you are going to leave someone out and then you have an ethics violation. The people you are allowed to represent (constituents) that you are allowed to represent. The definition should be broad. The constituent should be who you are allowed to represent. Otherwise there will be people outside the line that you want to help but can't because of the definition and who you included in the definition.

Dan Wayne - said that is not what he said. It is the constitution that does not list any duties of representation. It does not mean you don't have a duty, it just means it is not listed. How do I tell if someone's actions are permissible when I don't know the definition of constituent? Constituent service is a service you do for someone.

Rep Seaton we need to know who a constituent is and who it is not. So we know who you can give service to.

Rep Doogan - it means the citizen of Alaska. That is about as limited as it gets. I am not here for the exercise, someone else is going to define it someone else is going to and I am not too happy with how they have done so far and some definitions have to have applicability in the real world. We want the definition to be as encompassing as possible. Don't want narrow definitions of who we can help and how we can help them. It may not be perfect but a long step to the goal I want to go. Helping people deal with the government and not have ethics come after me.

Rep Seaton - you work for all Alaska, work for people of your district, but is your duty to represent the people that elect you or everyone or the people that elect you.

Rynnieva - Rep Coghill feels it should be a very broad definition - sideboards in subparagraph 21 makes it clear. They share a class it is not helping someone to get a contract with the state. That is not constituent service, that is a crime already. But someone that has a right to be represented by their legislator.

Rep Doogan - we took a look at the oath of office and it did not say anything about House District 25 - it says the state of Alaska. Not strictly limited to the confines of my district.

Dan went over what the oath of office is. Not trying to be argumentative. But people that are not citizens have rights under our constitution. Business, corporations, have rights - and should be represented.

Rep Gara - make it as broad as possible. We don't make duty under the constitution clear. Make it any person in the state. Person in statute means business or anything. Legislative purpose if the person is here or not, and then you can represent anyone in the state. You would only help a person out of state if it is a legislative purpose, so then you would help them anyway. You can help them for a legislative purpose and then the rest you help because they are citizens of the state.

Rep Seaton - lots of state residents not living in the state. In the state is a tricky one too.

Rep Gruenberg - too narrow - if we stay within the state. Favors the broadest definition possible. Dealing with people who are Alaskan or people who are concerned about Alaskan issues. Whether it be BP or defenders of wildlife. There is a nexis between them and the state of Alaska. It should not be unethical to look at that person's interests.

Rep Seaton - who are we trying to cut out, who do we want to say a legislator can't call a constituent.

Rep Gruenberg - people who are not Alaskan's or someone trying to get us to take an issue on something that does not in any manner pertain to Alaska. Mid-East war, as most issues don't have a lot to do with Alaska.

Rynnieva - defining constituents because - if you are helping someone who is not a constituent - then it is probably a crime already. The legislature feels that they are likely to be in trouble if they are helping someone when it is their duty to help Alaskans, but it might not be a constituent because there is not a definition of constituent.

Rep Seaton - helping someone that is not in Alaska, but it has a purpose within Alaska.

Rynnieva - but that would be a legislative issue so that would not be unethical.

4:12:33 PM

Rep Doogan - broadest possible interpretation inside Alaska, not outside of Alaska. Likes the language that was under the constitution. No representation for someone out of the state. Might be doing it for some other reason under duties under legislator but not under constituent service.

Rep Gruenberg - group a - wants to take trip to Alaska, please tell us how we get information and we should be able to do that. Going to withdraw my motion to delete "representation" from the bill.

Rep Seaton - we are asking for a legal opinion and if there is no duty of representation under the constitution - if there is or isn't. Because if there isn't then we have no constituents.

Dan it may be duty somewhere else. But the legislature has a state-wide constituency. It would never be my conclusion that you have no constituents.

Rep Seaton - for Joyce and the committee to have a definition when they are making decision. He asked Joyce Anderson - as far as serving for the Ethics Committee can a definition help make a decision.

Joyce - needs to see if there is a specific situation.

Rep Gruenberg - to Mr. Wayne - when you look at this - look in the broadest constitutional sense. We are looking at this really from the core of the constitutional perspective. What are we here to do.

Dan - to make legislation - the other things you do are tradition and there is no authority to do this.

Rep Gruenberg continued to discuss his concept of how the legislature serves and what it does.

Rynnieva stated she has wording that the Administrative Hearing Officer suggested for an amendment.

Rep Seaton - Amendment No. 6 - delete Page 1 line 12 through Page 2 line 16, insert new subsection i. and the rest of the page.

Rynnieva - when you are dealing with an administrative hearing unless you are a licensed officer, you are no longer involved in that constituent service. Page 1, Section 1. Line 11, runs through page 2 line 16 the rest of the amendment protects the legislator, or staff, if a constituent fails to reveal that the case is in an administrative hearing and the call is made to labor, the legislator or staff would be liable for a violation the way the statute presently reads.

Rep Gruenberg - typo on line 15, a couple of words left out - insert and if the before fact and substance of the contact [is]are. Make that a conceptual amendment and include it with the rest of Amendment No. 6.

No objections to Amendment No. 6.

Rep Seaton objected to Amendment No. 6, he thinks that it needs to be looked at further. It could be a CPA or licensed person in some function and then a legislator could go before a body and that is what we would be allowing and that is line 1 and 2. Policy call is - are we going to look at this and say is the affect on a Department Director who is sitting across from a legislator is okay in the public interest and we are going to balance that with an officer and the public perception is that the legislator is subservient to representing himself in a license.

Rynnieva - this a policy call and I am going to let you all make that policy decision. Yu have to make the call.

Rep Seaton - Amendment No. 1 to Amendment No. 6 - deletes line 1 and 2 and would not allow them to be a for hire representation.

Rep Gruenberg objected.

Rep Seaton - lawyers and CPA's - anybody can be hired to go in and represent one side of a party in an administrative decision.
4:33:57 PM
Is public purpose of not having a legislator or legislative employee less?

Rep Doogan - there is no public purpose having them sit across the table unless you think that their job shapes the opinion of the person sitting across from them. Question is whether in a situation as part time legislators is if we can dictate how a person can make a living. Historically shied away from this, people have to eat, they go out of here and do their jobs. It is not clear to me that legislators get extra spin or (b) even if they do, you can tell someone that if they run for office a person can't make a living from what they have been doing. Pretty close call. It will be debated every step of the way.

Rep Seaton - the debate means it is questionable. It has a public perception. City council or whomever, as a legislator people react differently. Is that perception a problem.

Rep Johnson how far is the step from I am a legislator and if I represent you how far I can go because of power. It has happened and it is the step we are trying to avoid. If I decided to do it, I could make a good living representing people.

Rep Doogan - in Rep Johnson's statement, he already broke the law by getting clients because of your position. But as a living representing people, or going out and representing people because of who you are is something that could interfere with our livelihood.

Rep Gruenberg recommended that we adopt the practice that we did in the subcommittee and give it back to the full committee with the note and comments that the full committee had to make a decision.

Rep Johnson wants it in and then the committee can take it out if it wants.

Rep Gruenberg - Ms Thurbon wanted people who were representing someone would be able to respond to contacts and supply information. That would mean only people that could do it were not legislators. By taking the first two lines out you may have trouble getting information. A legislator or legislative employee may not attempt to influence the content of a hearing and that does not have anything to do with representation.

Rep Seaton if it is left in only licensed people could give the information. But language is substituting for the language we are taking out.

Rep Gruenberg reviewed again over the information and the what was happening to the bill in this section - meant that a legislator could not even speak to the issue, if not representing them.

Rep Seaton - only talks to someone with a license that is doing it for compensation. Taking out line 1 and 2 and starts on line 7.

Joyce - looked at this statue prior and it does not prevent even with what you are removing, from speaking at an administrative hearing if you are called. Just can't be initiated by the representative.

Amendment 6
Rep Johnson -yes,
Rep Gruenberg - no,
Rep Seaton - yes,

Amendment passed.

Split decision

4:49:16 PM

Rep Seaton - Non-legislative purpose Sub B - this paragraph does not prohibit information a(2)(B) -

Rynnieva - involves legislators using voter registration lists for their office and those lists used by legislators for non-legislative purposes.

Rep Seaton - mailing lists and news lists we generate since those are not available to the general public we would not be able to use those for campaign purposes. Not intended. But since it is here I would like clarification on it. Non legislative purpose.

Dan - two ways to read it. General public or non legislative purposes. It is okay to use the list if available for non legislative purposes.

Rep Seaton - The list for our mail outs are not available to the general public and if we use it- it is only legal if we make the list available to the general public.

Dan - another exception 5(B) says that a limitation does not prevent the use for non legislative purposes.

Rep Seaton - operating under the assumption we could use the list when we campaign but that is not consistent with the law.

Rynnieva - have Dan make a determination and come up with an amendment for tomorrow.

Rep Gruenberg - Page 2 sub paragraph A-5-B - you may not use.....for use in and he read it into the record.

Rep Seaton unless the mailing list was available to the general public we could not use it for a non legislative purpose. Wants a clarification.

Joyce - ethics made an advisory opinion and said if you take your constituent data base and you use it for campaign purposes it was a diminimus use of state resources and so it could be used for non legislative use. She will provide it to the committee.

Dan - look at 24.60.030 (a)(1) lawful gratuity - should say gift - under - conforming change.

Rep Seaton - prepare a conforming change.

Amendment No. 7 - to 24.60.030 - a.1 - change gratuity to gift under 24.60.075 or 24.60.080.

Without objection passed Amendment No. 7.

Rep Gruenberg - noticed that Rep Gara did have an issue and will offer it.

Rep Gara - present a problem in ethics law that deserves attention. I still do not have language. Right now we have a problem with the law. Situation with honest legislator will go to ethics staff and they get advice, but the law says you can't rely on the advice, but you can have a complaint filed against you and if the advice was wrong you get an ethics violation. And if you get a hearing and the advice was wrong you get an ethics violation. Your opponent uses it against you. So your option is to take informal advice you can't rely on or require a full hearing, unreasonable, expensive and wrong, but there is no middle ground. But if you ask in writing and give all the info they want and you get an opinion you rely on and if this is an issue that is not that clear then hold a hearing but you are allowed to rely on the advice until the hearing is held. You have to get advice and rely on it. As for hearing it will take 60 days and you can't help constituents for 60 days. Proposal is to supply info to staff and if they decide a close issue, get a hearing, but you have some thing to have in the meantime. Right now the honest legislature can be held liable doing what they were told they could do.

Rep Seaton - a bit out of the bounds of what we were given as a subcommittee.

Rep Johnson said he would like to see this tomorrow and some examples. Deal with it tomorrow.

Rep Seaton - sounds like you are saying the ethics wants advice even though informal advice is given all the time.

Tomorrow come when the committee gets together. Get to ethics committee tonight.

Re: HB 193 LS 0656\E

A subcommittee has been formed to discuss a CS for HB 193. Rep. Seaton is the chair and Representatives Johnson and Gruenberg are the other two members.

Here is a summary of the proposed amendments and requested information:

Amendment recommended by Terry Thurbon, Chief Administrative Law Judge for the Office of Administrative Hearings:

Sec. 1.[1]

(i) Except when representing another person as a licensed professional in the State of Alaska in the case for compensation and subject to AS 24.60.100 [FOR SUPPLYING INFORMATION REQUESTED BY THE HEARING OFFICER OR THE INDIVIDUAL, BOARD, OR COMMISSION WITH AUTHORITY TO MAKE THE FINAL DECISION IN THE CASE, OR WHEN RESPONDING TO CONTACTS INITIATED BY THE HEARING OFFICER OR THE INDIVIDUAL, BOARD, OR COMMISSION WITH AUTHORITY TO MAKE THE FINAL DECISION IN THE CASE,] a legislator or legislative employee may not attempt to influence the outcome of an administrative hearing by directly or indirectly contacting or attempting to contact the hearing officer assigned to the hearing

[1] Representative Seaton has concerns this section allows a legislator or legislative aide to solicit clients for administrative hearings in this section. I explained we are trying to limit the involvement of legislators and staff with an administrative hearings. I don't know if the licensed professional will ease his concerns, so please review this and see if there is a way to make this clearer.

or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case unless the

(1) contact is made in the presence of all parties to the hearing or the parties' representatives while the legislator or legislative employee is acting as a party or witness and the contact is made a part of the record; or

(2) in the event of an inadvertent ex parte contact fact and substance of the contact is promptly disclosed by the legislator or legislative employee to all parties to the hearing and the contact is made a part of the record.

Sec. 8.

OK (17) "constituent" means a [NATURAL] person whom a legislator owes a duty of representation under the Constitution of the state of Alaska ok? (19) "legislative purpose" means a goal of a legislative action or [A] providing a constituent service.

good (21) "private benefit" means a [FINANCIAL] benefit to a person as a result of a legislative, administrative, or political action of which [FINANCIAL] benefit to that person in particular is a substantial goal and that is greater than the [FINANCIAL] benefit of the legislative, administrative, or political action to a substantial class of persons to which the person belongs by law, choice, legal entitlement, legal privilege, profession, occupation, industry, or region.

I am not asking for a CS at this time but would ask you be available for the subcommittee meeting tomorrow from 3 to 5 p.m. tomorrow. I believe it is being held in the Speaker's Chambers.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 93 makes changes to the Legislative Ethics Act. Sec. 6. of this legislation authorizes compensation for public members of the committee in the amount of $150 a day while attending committee meetings. Currently, public members do not receive compensation but are entitled to per diem and travel expenses.

There are five public members of the Select Committe on Legislative Ethics. For purposes of this fiscal note, it is estimated that the Committee will meet six times each year and that each meeting will last one day. This will result in a $4,500 increase in the annual budget for the Select Committees on Legislative Ethics.

Nancy,

From what I understand from the HSTA subcommittee meeting today the additional requests of legal outside of changes to the CS were:

1) A legal opinion explaining what "of representation" adds to AS 24.60.990(a)(17). Why is it in the section and what would be the change in interpretation if "of representation" was taken out?
2) A legal opinion discussing the prohibition of using mailing list for non legislative purposes, AS 24.60.030 (2)(B). Could this statute be interpreted to mean that legislators may not use a mailing or email list that they have collected as a legislator for a campaign purpose?

I also have 2 advisory opinions of my desk from Ethics, I trust that you got thoose as well and will provide them to the committee (2004-01 and 2005-01)

Re: Comments on Potential Amendment to CSHB 193

Dear Chair Ramras and Members of the House Judiciary Committee:

I have been asked to comment on an amendment to section 2 of CSHB 193 that may be offered in the House Judiciary committee meeting on April 3, 2009. Since I will not be available to testify that day due to a prior commitment, I am submitting my comments in writing.

Section 2 of CSHB 193 would amend current AS 24.60.030(i). Subsection (i) was added to the statute in 2004 as part of the legislation that created the Office of Administrative Hearings, the independent agency that hears administrative adjudications arising from decisions by many state agencies. As I understand the situation, both the sponsor and the first committee of referral proposed changes to subsection (i) meant to draw a clearer and brighter line regarding contacts between legislators or legislative employees and executive branch adjudicators about cases being adjudicated.

The original bill included an exception to the general prohibition against attempts to influence the outcome of cases for legislators and legislative employees representing case parties, but the committee substitute does not. The potential amendment I was asked to comment on would add such an exception so that legislators and legislative employees who are attorneys or other licensed professionals and want to represent case parties in administrative adjudications could do so without running afoul of the AS 24.60.030(i) contact-to-influence prohibition.

I express no opinion on whether the legislature, in furtherance of its policies on legislative ethics, should restrict its members and employees from practicing their professions before executive branch adjudicators. From the perspective of the state's chief administrative law judge, who is charged with "improv[ing] public access to the process of administrative adjudication[,]"[1] however, I support keeping the pool of capable professionals available to assist parties in administrative adjudications as large as possible. In many of the cases we hear, parties represent themselves and do so quite effectively. In others, having representation is very helpful, if not essential, to the parties trying to navigate the complexities of law. The larger the pool of potential representatives remains, the greater the likelihood is that a party seeking representation will be able to find someone to help at a cost the party can afford.

If the committee members have any questions about these comments, please do not hesitate to contact me through my staff at the above number. I will respond as quickly as possible.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM March 26, 2009

SUBJECT: Legislative Ethics Act changes (CSHB 193(STA), Work Order No. 26-LS0656\T)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Chair of the House State Affairs Committee
Attn: Nancy Manly

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

At the March 25, 2009, meeting of the House State Affairs subcommittee that reviewed this bill, I expressed some concerns about the definitions in the bill and the subcommittee asked that I restate them in a memo to be transmitted with the bill when it leaves your committee.

In the course of drafting or reviewing advisory opinions I have observed that certain undefined terms are very difficult to interpret and apply. Among them are the terms "constituent" and "non-legislative purpose."

The definition of constituent in this bill, "a person to whom a legislator owes a duty of representation under the Constitution of the State of Alaska," leaves the meaning of the term subject to varying interpretation. Article XII, section 5 of the state constitution, requires all public officers to take an oath of office.[1] The language reads as follows: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Alaska, and that I will faithfully discharge my duties as . . . [a legislator] to the best of my ability." This suggests that a legislator has, in addition to the general duty of a public officer to support and defend the state and federal constitutions, additional duties specific to that office. However, those duties are not further described in the state constitution.

Other than the requirement that a constituent be a "person," the meaning of constituent is wide open to interpretation under the definition in this bill. Every person in Alaska, including corporations and non-citizens, has rights under the state constitution. A legislator may owe every person in the state a duty in the sense that the legislator has sworn to uphold the state and federal constitutions, but that does not necessarily mean that an individual legislator owes each person in the state a duty of representation. If the intent of the bill's definition of "constituent" is that a legislator's constituent is every person who is in or of Alaska, then it might be more accurate to say:

> "constituent" means a person who resides in the state, is registered to vote in the state, or is licensed by the state to do business, or a person who is an immediate family member of a person who resides in the state or is registered to vote in the state.

A definition of the term "legislative purpose" is necessary to the bill in order to support the bill's definition of "non-legislative purpose," a term that is prominent in AS 24.60.030(a)(2). However, the definition of "legislative purpose" provided in this bill is unclear because it describes action, not purpose.

Statement of Facts

You have asked the following questions:

1. Can constituent information gathered by a candidate who is subsequently elected to office be used by the legislator during his or her term of office?

2. Can constituent information gathered by a legislator be used by the legislator in his or her campaign for re-election and, if so, are there any restrictions on maintaining the database using state resources?

You characterized the information referred to in the questions as:

A. Voter information obtained from the Division of Elections for a small fee.

B. Information obtained from public sources such as Permanent Fund recipients and corporation and business licenses databases which can be downloaded by anyone from public agency internet sites for free or for a small fee.

C. Information gathered about individual constituents during a legislator's term, including email addresses, phone and fax numbers, and issue information.

D. Similar constituent information as in C obtained during a candidate's campaign.

Discussion

In this document

- "constituent" means a natural person residing within a legislator's district;
- "information" means contact information including name and address as well as any other information and facts known about the contact such as issues and legislation the contact is interested in;
- "database" means an organized body of related information which is in a format read by computer database programs.

1. Can constituent information gathered by a candidate who is subsequently elected to office be used by the legislator during his or her term of office?

This question involves a legislator using, for legislative purposes, information gathered in the course of an election campaign, described in D above. This information was obtained using private resources. There is no prohibition in the ethics code on a legislator using private resources for legislative purposes, so a legislator may use for legislative purposes information gathered during non-legislative time without the use of legislative resources.

2. Can constituent information gathered by a legislator be used by the legislator in his or her campaign for re-election and, if so, are there any restrictions on maintaining the database using state resources?

It is assumed in this answer that "information gathered by a legislator" is information collected for the legislator, described in C above, with the help of legislative staff employed to handle constituent concerns using legislative equipment. This information is being gathered for the benefit of the legislator in performing public duties. As long as the purpose is to assist the legislator in performing current legislative duties, the building and maintenance of a database containing constituent information is permitted using legislative resources. As is the case with the files maintained by a legislator's office for legislative use, a database is considered to be the confidential property of the legislator.[1]

There is a general prohibition against using legislative resources for non-legislative purposes:

> (a) A legislator or legislative employee may not . . . (2) use public funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for a nonlegislative purpose, for involvement in or support of or opposition to partisan political activity, or for the private benefit of either the legislator, legislative employee, or another person;

AS 24.60.030(a)(2). However there is an exemption for a de minimis use:

> [AS 24.60.030(a)(2)] does not prohibit (A) limited use of state property and resources for personal purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and either the cost or value related to the use is nominal or the legislator or legislative employee reimburses the state for the cost of the use;

We find that it is considered to be a de minimis use of public assets under AS 24.60.030(a)(2)(A) for a legislator to make a copy of a database created or maintained in the legislator's own office for personal or campaign use.[2]

[1] When the legislator leaves office, the files and information belong to the legislator. A legislator's files, including information such as databases on a legislator's office computers are considered confidential.

[2] This opinion does not condone the unauthorized copying of copyright protected information.

In regard to voter information and other publicly available databases, the information described in A and B above, a legislator may obtain this information for legislative purposes. This information would probably be combined into the legislator's constituent database. As discussed above, a legislator can make a copy of the legislator's own database for personal or campaign purposes.

In the case of purchased databases, there may be copyright issues if a person copies a database rather than purchasing another license for separate use. If the legislator wants another copy of a commercial database, a separate license, if required, should be purchased with personal funds.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the committee finds that constituent information gathered by a candidate using private resources can be used by that person if subsequently elected to serve as a legislator, and that constituent information gathered by a legislator using legislative resources such as staff time and equipment for legislative purposes may be copied and used for personal or campaign use by a legislator as a de minimis use of public assets under AS 24.60.030(a)(2)(A).

ADVISORY OPINION 2005-01

Subject: Conflict of Interest – Legislative Contacts with Administrative Decision Maker

RE: AS 24.60.030(i) and legislative contacts with administrative decision makers

You are a legislator and therefore covered by the legislative ethics code. You have requested an advisory opinion concerning facts and circumstances that you have related. The committee relies on facts that you have described in answering your questions. You have waived your right to confidentiality under AS 24.60.160(b).

Statement of Facts

You have asked several specific questions in regard to AS 24.60.030(i).[1] This subsection makes it a violation of the legislative ethics code for a legislator or legislative employee to "attempt to influence the outcome of an administrative hearing by directly or indirectly

[1] This new subsection of AS 24.60.030, "Prohibitions related to conflicts of interest and unethical conduct," became effective July 1, 2005. The office of administrative hearings, created effective July 1, 2004, began hearing administrative proceedings that began on or after July 1, 2005. Sec. 92(a), ch. 163, SLA 2004. No previous advisory opinions have discussed AS 24.60.030(i).

This new subsection provides:

> (i) Except for supplying information requested by the hearing officer or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case, or when responding to contacts initiated by the hearing officer or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case, a legislator or legislative employee may not attempt to influence the outcome of an administrative hearing by directly or indirectly contacting or attempting to contact the hearing officer assigned to the hearing or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case unless the
> (1) contact is made in the presence of all parties to the hearing or the parties' representatives and the contact is made a part of the record; or contacting or attempting to contact" a decision maker in an administrative adjudication. Such communication is only permitted if the communication with the decision maker is made in the presence of all parties to the adjudication, and made a part of the record; or, if the fact and substance of the communication is promptly disclosed to all parties and made part of the record.
> (2) fact and substance of the contact is promptly disclosed by the legislator or legislative employee to all parties to the hearing and the contact is made a part of the record.

You ask how AS 24.60.030(i) will be applied in the following situations.

1. Can a legislator[2] contact a decision maker without trying to influence the outcome of the case by asking the decision maker:

   a. if certain documents had been filed;
   b. whether a file was complete; or
   c. if there was other information that could be provided.

2. Who has the duty to disclose a contact to all parties in an adjudication under AS 24.60.030(i)(2)? What if the legislator does not know the identity or contact information of other parties?

3. If a legislator decides to advocate on behalf of a constituent, does that legislator have a duty to disclose the fact and substance of the contact to all parties to the hearing and make the contact a part of the record? Shouldn't the agency have the burden of distributing the substance of the contact with a decision maker to all parties?

Discussion

The provisions of AS 24.60.030(i) will only apply to an administrative matter that has progressed to a hearing. A legislator or legislative staff member may contact any administrative department with questions regarding a matter that is not the subject of a pending administrative adjudication.[3]

The ethical standards which prohibit ex parte contacts by legislators and legislative employees recognize that impartial fact finders and decision makers are an essential part of the due process of law.[4] Administrative decision makers are required to be impartial

[2] All references in this opinion to a legislator also apply to legislative employees subject to AS 24.60.

[3] It may be difficult to determine from a constituent whether the matter of concern has reached the stage that this ethical prohibition applies so care should be taken to avoid contacting any person or entity that has the authority to make a final decision. It may be prudent for a legislator to make a call to the department administering a matter, to determine the appropriate person to contact for the information, in order to avoid inadvertently contacting a decision maker.

[4] Under the Alaska Constitution, a person may not "be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The Alaska Supreme Court has interpreted this provision as requiring an impartial fact finder. In re Robson, 575 P.2d 771 (Alaska 1978); K & L Distributors, Inc. v. Murkowski, 486 P.2d 351 (Alaska 1971). Questioning of a decision-maker while the case is pending impairs the impartiality of the judicial process. It may even invalidate the decision reached in the matter, causing the whole matter to be reheard. "To subject an administrator to a searching examination as to how and may not engage in ex parte communications.[5] An ex parte communication is a contact or communication (personal communications or some form of evidence) with the decision maker that takes place outside the presence of all parties to the proceeding.

1. Obtaining information on behalf of a constituent in regard to an administrative adjudication.

While a legislator or legislative staff member may contact an administrative department with questions regarding a matter, once that matter is assigned to a hearing officer or other decision maker there should be no direct contact with the decision maker.

Once a matter is in a hearing process, questions to the administrative unit should be limited to procedural matters and case information. The answers to those questions can most likely be answered by a person other than the decision maker. For example, if the office of administrative hearings has jurisdiction of the matter, that office will be able to provide information about the case file without impairing the impartial role of the hearing officer.[6] If the adjudication is not within the jurisdiction of the office of administrative and why he reached his decision in a case still pending before him, . . . sacrifices the appearance of impartiality - the sine qua non [essential condition] of American judicial justice . . . ." Pillsbury v. F.T.C., 354 F.2d 952, 963 (5th Cir Ct. of Appeals, 1966). "Legislative intervention which occurs during a pending decisional process of an agency endangers and may undermine the integrity of the ensuing decision, and it has been held that administrative decisions which are based in whole or in part on pressures emanating from the legislature may be invalid." 73 C.J.S. Sec. 31, Public Administrative Law and Procedure.

[5] For example see AS 44.62.630 in the Administrative Procedure Act, also see AS 44.64.050(b) regarding the standard of conduct for hearing officers in the office of administrative hearings.

[6] See AS 44.64.030 for the jurisdiction of the office of administrative hearings. Child support services and permanent fund dividend adjudications are under the jurisdiction of the office of administrative hearings.

AS 44.64.050 provides fundamental standards of conduct required of hearing officers. The chief administrative law judge is required to adopt regulations for a code of conduct.

> . . . The following fundamental canons of conduct shall be included in the code: in carrying out official duties, an administrative law judge or hearing officer shall
> (1) uphold the integrity and independence of the office;
> (2) avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety;
> (3) perform the duties of the office impartially and diligently;
> (4) conduct unofficial activities in ways that minimize the risk of conflict with the obligations of the office; and hearings, the agency holding the hearings will have procedures to insulate the decision makers from improper contacts. Legislators subject to AS 24.60 will be expected to make every effort to obtain basic procedural or case file information about a matter under administrative adjudication by means other than contacting the hearing officer. Also, in response to your questions, it would not be the proper function of any administrator in the adjudicatory process to give advice in response to your questions, but only to provide information about the case file, parties, scheduling or other routine procedural matters.[7]

> (5) refrain from inappropriate activity in seeking employment with another agency or employer or in seeking reappointment.

The proposed draft regulations at 2 AAC 64.030 provide:

> (b) The following guidelines apply to any determination on whether a hearing officer of administrative law judge has adhered to the canons [of hearing officer conduct]:
> (1) The requirement to uphold the integrity and independence of the office, and of the hearing function, dictates that a hearing officer or administrative law judge establish and personally observe high standards of conduct and avoid improper ex parte communications with private and agency parties on the subject of a hearing request; so that the integrity and independence of the office and hearing function will be preserved;
> (3) The requirement to perform the duties of the office or of the hearing function impartially and diligently dictates that a hearing officer or administrative law judge . . .
> (B) not initiate, permit, or consider improper ex parte communications, . . .

"improper ex parte communications" are defined at 2 AAC 64.990(13) as > a direct or indirect, oral or written communication between a decision maker and a party to a proceeding, or another person trying to influence the decision maker, which occurs outside the presence of the other parties, and without a notice and an opportunity to participate being given to the other parties.

[7] You have asked "can a legislator contact a decision maker to ask if there was other information that could be provided." This would require the decision maker or the administrator in charge of the case file to advise the legislator on how to conduct the case or influence the outcome. This would not be appropriate, as it impairs the impartiality of the hearing process.

In the rare instance that a communication with a hearing officer occurs the legislator must comply with AS 24.60.030(i)(2): the "fact and substance of the contact [must be] promptly disclosed by the legislator or legislative employee to all parties to the hearing and the contact [must be] made a part of the record." A failure by a legislator to properly make this disclosure may be held to be a violation of the legislative ethics code.

The committee is also concerned that ex parte contacts, by a legislator or legislative employee, with a decision maker creates an appearance of a violation of the ethics code. This is based on AS 24.60.010 which provides in pertinent part:

> The legislature finds that
> . . .
> (2) a fair and open government requires that legislators and legislative employees conduct the public's business in a manner that preserves the integrity of the legislative process and avoids conflicts of interest or even appearances of conflicts of interest;

2. Who has the duty to disclose a contact to all parties in an adjudication under AS 24.60.030(i)(2)? What if the legislator does not know the identity or contact information of other parties?

If contact with a decision maker does occur, a legislator or legislative employee must notify all parties and make the contact a part of the record. Complying with this requirement of disclosure to all parties is the responsibility of the legislator who initiated the ex parte contact, not the adjudicator hearing the matter. Information about the other parties to the matter can be obtained as discussed in the answer to the first question.

There is no obligation to contact all parties in regarding communications with administrative departments or personnel initiated by a legislator when a matter has not yet been assigned to a hearing officer.

3. If a legislator decides to advocate on behalf of a constituent, does that legislator have a duty to disclose the fact and substance of the contact to all parties to the hearing and make the contact a part of the record? Shouldn't the agency have the burden of distributing the substance of the contact with a decision maker to all parties?

As discussed above, a legislator may advocate and communicate on an administrative matter on behalf of a constituent. AS 24.60.030(i) only applies once an administrative matter is assigned to an administrative decision maker. In the event that a legislator makes an ex parte contact with a decision maker, the requirements of AS 24.60.030(i)(2) apply. The ethics statute clearly places the responsibility for compliance with (i)(2) on the legislator making the ex parte contact, not the adjudication agency or the administrative agency who is a party to the matter.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the committee finds that a legislator or legislative employee seeking information on an administrative matter that is assigned to a hearing officer, individual, board or commission should not attempt to contact the decision maker assigned to that matter.[8] Information about the procedural aspects of the matter may be sought from the office administering the hearing, but not the decision maker directly. If a legislator or legislative employee makes an ex parte communication and fails to comply with the requirements of AS 24.60.030(i)(2), it could be considered a violation of the legislative ethics code.

AS 24.60.030 does not apply to contacts in regard to administrative matters that have not been assigned to an administrative decision maker.

Effect of amendments. — The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, added paragraphs (3) and (4) in subsection (a).

The 2008 amendment, effective September 14, 2008, substituted "annual" for "semi-annual" in paragraph (a)(2).

Sec. 24.60.155. Legislative ethics course. A person who is a legislator, legislative employee, or public member of the committee shall complete a legislative ethics course administered by the committee under AS 24.60.150(a)(4) within 10 days of the first day of the first regular session of each legislature. However, a person who first takes office or begins employment after the 10th day of the first regular session of a legislature shall complete the course required by this section within 30 days after the person's first day of service and, thereafter, as required by this section. The committee may grant a person additional time to complete the course required by this section. (§ 39 ch 47 SLA 2007)

Effective dates. — Section 79, ch. 47, SLA 2007, makes this section effective July 10, 2007, in accordance with AS 01.10.070(c).

Editor's notes. — Under § 75(c), ch. 47, SLA 2007, the committee is required to offer only one type of ethics course in 2008.

Sec. 24.60.158. Informal advice. The committee shall authorize and train its staff to give oral advice and provide a written informal nonbinding advice letter to persons seeking guidance as to the spirit or legal requirements of this chapter, provided that the advice is given with the express stipulations that

(1) the opinions given are not necessarily those of the committee;

(2) although the advice is given in good faith, the person seeking the advice relies on it at the person's own risk; and

(3) the advice is not binding upon the committee. (§ 26 ch 127 SLA 1992)

Sec. 24.60.160. Advisory opinions. (a) On the request of the committee, the Alaska Public Offices Commission, a person to whom this chapter applies, or a person who has been newly elected to the legislature, the committee shall issue an advisory opinion within 60 days as to whether the facts and circumstances of a particular case constitute a violation of ethical standards. If it finds that it is advisable to do so, the committee may issue an opinion under this section on the request of a person who reasonably expects to become subject to this chapter within the next 45 days. The 60-day period for issuing an opinion may be extended by the committee if the person requesting the opinion consents.

(b) An opinion issued under this section is binding on the committee in any subsequent proceedings concerning the facts and circumstances of the particular case unless material facts were omitted or misstated in the request for the advisory opinion. An opinion issued under this section must be issued with sufficient deletions to prevent disclosing the identity of the person or persons involved. Advisory opinion discussions and deliberations are confidential, unless the requester and anyone else named in the request waives confidentiality. The committee's final vote on the advisory opinion is a public record. (§ 1 ch 36 SLA 1984; am § 12 ch 113 SLA 1986; am § 127 SLA 1992; am § 43 ch 74 SLA 1998; am § 40 ch 47 SLA 2007)

The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, inserted "the committee, the Alaska Public Offices Commission" and made stylistic changes in the first sentence of subsection (a), substituted the last sentences of subsection (b) for the last sentence provided for the confidentiality of advisory opi

Sec. 24.60.990. Definitions. (a) In this chapter,

(1) "administrative action" means conduct related to the development, drafting, consideration, enactment, defeat, application, or interpretation of a rule, regulation, policy, or other action in a regulatory proceeding or a proceeding involving a license, permit, franchise, or entitlement for use;

(2) "anything of value," "benefit," or "thing of value" includes all matters, whether tangible or intangible, that could reasonably be considered to be a material advantage, of material worth, use, or service to the person to whom it is conferred; the terms are intended to be interpreted broadly and encompass all matters that the recipient might find sufficiently desirable to do something in exchange for; "anything of value," "benefit," or "thing of value" does not include

(A) an item listed in AS 24.60.080(a)(2)(B) or (c);

(B) campaign contributions, pledges, political endorsements, support in a political campaign, or a promise of endorsement or support;

(C) contributions to a cause or organization, including a charity, made in response to a direct solicitation from a legislator or a person acting at the legislator's direction; or

(D) grants under AS 37.05.316 to named recipients;

(3) "committee" means the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics and includes, when appropriate, the senate or house subcommittee;

(4) "compensation" means remuneration for personal services rendered, including salary, fees, commissions, bonuses, and similar payments, but does not include reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by a person;

(5) "domestic partner" means a person who is cohabiting with another person in a relationship that is like a marriage but that is not a legal marriage;

(6) "immediate family" means

(A) the spouse or domestic partner of the person; or

(B) a parent, child, including a stepchild and an adoptive child, and sibling of a person if the parent, child, or sibling resides with the person, is financially dependent on the person, or shares a substantial financial interest with the person;

(7) "income" means an asset that a person has received or expects to receive, regardless of whether it is earned or unearned; inheritances and other gifts are not income;

(8) "knowingly" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(9) "legislative action" means conduct relating to the development, drafting, consideration, sponsorship, enactment or defeat, support or opposition to or of a law, amendment, resolution, report, nomination, or other matter affected by legislative action or inaction;

(10) "legislative director" means the director of the legislative finance division, the legislative auditor, the director of the legislative research agency, the ombudsman, the victims' advocate, the executive director of the Legislative Affairs Agency, and the directors of the divisions within the Legislative Affairs Agency;

(11) "legislative employee" means a person, other than a legislator, who is compensated by the legislative branch in return for regular or substantial personal services, regardless of the person's pay level or technical status as a full-time or part-time employee, independent contractor, or consultant; it includes public members and staff of the committee; it does not include individuals who perform functions that are incidental to legislative functions, including security, messenger, maintenance, and print shop employees, and other employees designated by the committee;

(12) "lobbyist" means a person who is required to register under AS 24.45.041 and is described under AS 24.45.171, but does not include a volunteer lobbyist described in AS 24.45.161(a)(1) or a representational lobbyist as defined under regulations of the Alaska Public Offices Commission;

(13) "political action" means conduct in which public officials, including legislators or legislative employees, use their official position or political contacts to exercise influence on state and local government employees or entities; it includes but is not limited to endorsing and pledging support or actively supporting a legislative matter, a nominee, or a candidate for public office;

(14) "registered lobbyist" means a person who is required to register under AS 24.45.041;

(15) "representation" means action taken on behalf of another, whether for compensation or not, including but not limited to telephone calls and meetings and appearances at proceedings or meetings;

(16) "state office" includes the office of governor, lieutenant governor, member of the legislature, or similar state office.

(b) A person has a substantial interest in legislative, administrative, or political action if the person (1) is not a natural person and will be directly and substantially affected financially by a legislative, administrative, or political action; (2) is a natural person and will be directly and substantially affected financially by a legislative, administrative, or Revisor's notes. — Paragraph (5) was enacted as paragraph (17) and renumbered in 2003, at which time former paragraph (15) was repealed and paragraphs (5) - (14) were renumbered as (6) - (15).

Effect of amendments. — The 1998 amendment, effective January 1, 1999, in subsection (a) rewrote paragraph (6) [formerly (5)] and added paragraph (16) and former paragraph (15).

The 2001 amendment, effective July 1, 2002, inserted "the victim's advocate," in paragraph (a)(10) [formerly (9)].

The first 2003 amendment, effective September 14, 2003, in subsection (a) substituted "domestic partner" for "spousal equivalent" in subparagraph (6)(A), repealed former paragraph (15), and added paragraph (5).

The second 2003 amendment, effective September 15, 2003, updated a section reference in paragraph (a)(12).

The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, substituted "AS 24.60.080(a)(2)(B) or (c)" for "AS 24.60.080(c)" in subparagraph (a)(2)(A); and substituted "an asset that a person has received or expects to receive, regardless of whether it is" for "assets that are received, regardless of whether they are" in paragraph (a)(7).

Sec. 24.60.995. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the Legislative Ethics Act. (§ 18 ch 12 SLA 2006)

Effective dates. — Section 43, ch. 12, SLA 2006 makes this section effective April 4, 2006.

Sec. 24.65.010. Office of victims' rights. There is created in the legislative branch of the state the office of victims' rights. The victims' advocate is the director of the office of victims' rights. (§ 19 ch 92 SLA 2001)

Sec. 24.65.020. Appointment of the victims' advocate. (a) A candidate for appointment as the victims' advocate shall be nominated by the victims' advocate selection committee composed of three members of the senate appointed by the president of the senate and three members of the house of representatives appointed by the speaker of the house. One member of a minority party caucus in each house shall be appointed to the selection committee.

(1) a former member of the legislature or to a person formerly employed by the legislative branch of government unless a provision of this chapter specifically states that it applies;

(2) a person elected to the legislature who at the time of election is not a member of the legislature.

(b) The provisions of this chapter specifically supersede the provisions of the common law relating to legislative conflict of interest that may apply to a member of the legislature or a legislative employee. This chapter does not supersede or repeal provisions of the criminal laws of the state. This chapter does not exempt a person from applicable provisions of another law unless the law is expressly superseded or incompatibly inconsistent with the specific provisions of this chapter. Sec. 24.60.030. Prohibitions related to conflicts of interest and unethical conduct. (a) A legislator or legislative employee may not

(1) solicit, agree to accept, or accept a benefit other than official compensation for the performance of public duties; this paragraph may not be construed to prohibit lawful solicitation for and acceptance of campaign contributions, solicitation or acceptance of contributions for a charity event, as defined in AS 24.60.080(a)(2)(B), or the acceptance of a lawful gratuity under AS 24.60.080;

(2) use public funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for a nonlegislative purpose, for involvement in or support of or opposition to partisan political activity, or for the private benefit of either the legislator, legislative employee, or another person; this paragraph does not prohibit

(A) limited use of state property and resources for personal purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and either the cost or value related to the use is nominal or the legislator or legislative employee reimburses the state for the cost of the use;

(B) the use of mailing lists, computer data, or other information lawfully obtained from a government agency and available to the general public for nonlegislative purposes;

(C) the legislative council, notwithstanding AS 24.05.190, from designating a public facility for use by legislators and legislative employees for health or fitness purposes; when the council designates a facility to be used by legislators and legislative employees for health or fitness purposes, it shall adopt guidelines governing access to and use of the facility; the guidelines may establish times in which use of the facility is limited to specific groups;

(D) a legislator from using the legislator's private office in the capital city during a legislative session, and for the 10 days immediately before and the 10 days immediately after a legislative session, for nonlegislative purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and if there is no cost to the state for the use of the space and equipment, other than utility costs and minimal wear and tear, or the legislator promptly reimburses the state for the cost; an office is considered a legislator's private office under this subparagraph if it is the primary space in the capital city reserved for use by the legislator, whether or not it is shared with others;

(E) a legislator from use of legislative employees to prepare and send out seasonal greeting cards;

(F) a legislator from using state resources to transport computers or other office equipment owned by the legislator but primarily used for a state function;

(G) use by a legislator of photographs of that legislator;

(H) reasonable use of the Internet by a legislator or a legislative employee except if the use is for election campaign purposes;

(I) a legislator or legislative employee from soliciting, accepting, or receiving a gift on behalf of a recognized, nonpolitical charitable organization in a state facility;

(J) a legislator from sending any communication in the form of a newsletter to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(K) full participation in a charity event approved in advance by the Alaska Legislative Council;

(3) knowingly seek, accept, use, allocate, grant, or award public funds for a purpose other than that approved by law, or make a false statement in connection with a claim, request, or application for compensation, reimbursement, or travel allowances from public funds;

(4) require a legislative employee to perform services for the private benefit of the legislator or employee at any time, or allow a legislative employee to perform services for the private benefit of a legislator or employee on government time; it is not a violation of this paragraph if the services were performed in an unusual or infrequent situation and the person's services were reasonably necessary to permit the legislator or legislative employee to perform official duties;

(5) use or authorize the use of state funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for the purpose of political fund raising or campaigning; this paragraph does not prohibit

(A) limited use of state property and resources for personal purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and either the cost or value related to the use is nominal or the legislator or legislative employee reimburses the state for the cost of the use;

(B) the use of mailing lists, computer data, or other information lawfully obtained from a government agency and available to the general public for nonlegislative purposes;

(C) storing or maintaining, consistent with (b) of this section, election campaign records in a legislator's office;

(D) a legislator from using the legislator's private office in the capital city during a legislative session, and for the 10 days immediately before and the 10 days immediately after a legislative session, for nonlegislative purposes if the use does not interfere with the performance of public duties and if there is no cost to the state for the use of the space and equipment, other than utility costs and minimal wear and tear, or the legislator promptly reimburses the state for the cost; an office is considered a legislator's private office under this subparagraph if it is the primary space in the capital city reserved for use by the legislator, whether or not it is shared with others; or

(b) A legislative employee may not on government time assist in political party or candidate activities, campaigning, or fund raising. A legislator may not require an employee to perform an act in violation of this subsection.

(c) Unless approved by the committee, during a campaign period for an election in which the legislator or legislative employee is a candidate, a legislator or legislative employee may not use or permit another to use state funds, other than funds to which the legislator is entitled under AS 24.10.110, to print or distribute a political mass mailing to individuals eligible to vote for the candidate. In this subsection,

(1) a "campaign period" is the period that

(A) begins 60 days before the date of an election to the board of an electric or telephone cooperative organized under AS 10.25, a municipal election, or a primary election, or that begins on the date of the governor's proclamation calling a special election; and

(B) ends the day after the cooperative election, municipal election, or general or special election;

(2) a mass mailing is considered to be political if it is from or about a legislator, legislative employee, or another person who is a candidate for election or reelection to the legislature or another federal, state, or municipal office or to the board of an electric or telephone cooperative.

(d) A legislator, legislative employee, or another person on behalf of the legislator or legislative employee, or a campaign committee of the legislator or legislative employee, may not distribute or post campaign literature, placards, posters, fund-raising notices, or other communications intended to influence the election of a candidate in an election in public areas in a facility ordinarily used to conduct state government business. This prohibition applies whether or not the election has been concluded. However, a legislator may post, in the legislator's private office, communications related to an election that has been concluded.

(e) A legislator may not directly, or by authorizing another to act on the legislator's behalf,

(1) agree to, threaten to, or state or imply that the legislator will take or withhold a legislative, administrative, or political action, including support or opposition to a bill, employment, nominations, and appointments, as a result of a person's decision to provide or not provide a political contribution, donate or not donate to a cause favored by the legislator, or provide or not provide a thing of value;

(2) state or imply that the legislator will perform or refrain from performing a lawful constituent service as a result of a person's decision to provide or not provide a political contribution, donate or not donate to a cause favored by the legislator, or provide or not provide a thing of value; or

(3) unless required by the Uniform Rules of the Alaska State Legislature, take or withhold official action or exert official influence that could substantially benefit or harm the financial interest of another person with whom the legislator is negotiating for employment.

(f) A legislative employee may not serve in a position that requires confirmation by the legislature. A legislator or legislative employee who serves on a board of an organization, including a governmental entity, shall disclose the board membership to the committee. A person required to make a disclosure under this subsection shall file the disclosure with the committee by the deadlines set out in AS 24.60.105 stating the name of each organization on whose board the person serves. The committee shall maintain a public record of the disclosure and forward the disclosure to the appropriate house for inclusion in the journal. This subsection does not require a legislator or legislative employee who is appointed to a board by the presiding officer to make a disclosure of the appointment to the committee if the appointment has been published in the appropriate legislative journal during the calendar year.

(g) Unless required by the Uniform Rules of the Alaska State Legislature, a legislator may not vote on a question if the legislator has an equity or ownership interest in a business, investment, real property, lease, or other enterprise if the interest is substantial and the effect on that interest of the action to be voted on is greater than the effect on a substantial class of persons to which the legislator belongs as a member of a profession, occupation, industry, or region.

(h) An employee who engages in political campaign activities other than incidental campaign activities during the employee's work day shall take leave for the period of campaigning. Political campaign activities while on government time are permissible if the activities are part of the normal legislative duties of the employee, including answering telephone calls and handling incoming correspondence.

(i) Except for supplying information requested by the hearing officer or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case, or when responding to contacts initiated by the hearing officer or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case, a legislator or legislative employee may not attempt to influence the outcome of an administrative hearing by directly or indirectly contacting or attempting to contact the hearing officer assigned to the hearing or the individual, board, or commission with authority to make the final decision in the case unless the

(1) contact is made in the presence of all parties to the hearing or the parties' representatives and the contact is made a part of the record; or

(2) fact and substance of the contact is promptly disclosed by the legislator or legislative employee to all parties to the hearing and the contact is made a part of the record. (§ 1 ch 36 SLA 1984; am § 27 ch 85 SLA 1988; am § 8 ch 167 SLA 1988; am § 3 ch 127 SLA 1992; am §§ 13 — 18 ch 74 SLA 1998; am § 8 ch 3 SLA 2002; am § 49 ch 163 SLA 2004; am § 2 ch 10 SLA 2006; am §§ 19 — 21 ch 47 SLA 2007)

Effect of amendments. — The 1998 amendment, effective January 1, 1999, in subsection (a), in paragraph (2) rewrote the introductory language, rewrote subparagraphs (A)-(C), added subparagraphs (D) and (E), and in paragraph (5) rewrote subparagraphs (A)-(C) and added subparagraphs (D) and (E); rewrote subsections (c), (d), and (g), added the last three sentences in subsection (f), and added subsection (h).

The 2002 amendment, effective April 16, 2002, in subsection (a) substituted "10 days" for "five days" in two places in subparagraphs (2)(E) and (5)(E); added subparagraphs (F)-(K) in paragraph (2); added subparagraph (F) in paragraph (5); and made stylistic changes.

The 2004 amendment, effective July 1, 2005, added subsection (i).

The 2006 amendment, effective March 31, 2006, in subsection (a), inserted "solicitation or acceptance of contributions for a charity event, as defined in AS 24.60.080(c)(10)" in paragraph (1) and "or legislative employee" in paragraph (2)(J), and added paragraph (2)(L), making corresponding stylistic changes.

The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, substituted "AS 24.60.080(a)(2)(B)" for "AS 24.60.080(c)(10)" in paragraph (a)(1), deleted former paragraphs (a)(1)(C) and (a)(5)(C), relating to telephone or facsimile use and redesignated the following subparagraphs accordingly, substituted "60 days" for "90 days" in paragraph (c)(1)(A), rewrote the second sentence of subsection (f), and substituted "person" for "legislator or legislative employee who is" in the third sentence of subsection (f).

NOTES TO DECISIONS

No duty to disclose. — Two former members of the Alaska legislature who were charged with honest services fraud under 18 USCS §§ 1341, 1343, and 1346 could exclude evidence of their failure to disclose a conflict of interest arising from their dealings with a corporation; neither this section nor AS 24.60.010 impose a duty to disclose, and state law controls. United States v. Kott, — F. Supp. 2d — (D. Alaska Sept. 4, 2007).

Legislature did not intend to imply a duty to disclose. — Alaska legislature clearly knows how to establish a duty to disclose and has done so in several instances. Its failure to include an explicit duty to disclose in subsection (e)(3) is significant; reading AS 24.60 as a whole, it would be inappropriate to imply a duty to disclose matters within the ambit of (e)(3). United States v. Kott, — F. Supp. 2d — (D. Alaska Sept. 4, 2007).

Sec. 24.60.031. Restrictions on fund raising. (a) A legislative employee may not

(1) on a day when either house of the legislature is in regular or special session, solicit or accept a contribution or a promise or pledge to make a contribution for a campaign for state or municipal office; however, a legislative employee may, except in the capital city or in the municipality in which the legislature is convened in special session if the legislature is convened in a municipality other than the capital city, solicit or accept a contribution, promise, or pledge for a campaign for state or municipal office that occurs during the 90 days immediately preceding the election for that office; or

(2) by providing other proof of intent as may be required by law or regulation, which may include proof that the person is not claiming residency outside the state or obtaining benefits under a claim of residency outside the state.

(c) A person who establishes residency in the state remains a resident during an absence from the state unless during the absence the person establishes or claims residency in another state, territory, or country, or performs other acts or is absent under circumstances that are inconsistent with the intent required under (a) of this section to remain a resident of this state. (§ 1 ch 67 SLA 1983)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Jurisdiction over divorce action. — This section does not affect the common-law rule that Alaska courts have jurisdiction over a divorce action when one of the parties is domiciled in Alaska, where "domicile" is defined as physical presence plus an intent to remain permanently. Perito v. Perito, 756 P.2d 895 (Alaska 1988).

Quoted in E.H. v. State, 23 P.3d 1186 (Alaska 2001).

Stated in State v. Andrade, 23 P.3d 58 (Alaska 2001).

Sec. 01.10.060. Definitions. (a) In the laws of the state, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "action" includes any matter or proceeding in a court, civil or criminal;

(2) "daytime" means the period between sunrise and sunset;

(3) "month" means a calendar month unless otherwise expressed;

(4) "municipality" means a political subdivision incorporated under the laws of the state that is a home rule or general law city, a home rule or general law borough, or a unified municipality;

(5) "nighttime" means the period between sunset and sunrise;

(6) "oath" includes affirmation or declaration;

(7) "peace officer" means

(A) an officer of the state troopers;

(B) a member of the police force of a municipality;

(C) a village public safety officer;

(D) a regional public safety officer;

(E) a United States marshal or deputy marshal; and

(F) an officer whose duty it is to enforce and preserve the public peace;

(8) "person" includes a corporation, company, partnership, firm, association, organization, business trust, or society, as well as a natural person;

(9) "personal property" includes money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt;

(10) "property" includes real and personal property;

(11) "real property" is coextensive with land, tenements, and hereditaments;

(12) "signature" or "subscription" includes the mark of a person who cannot write, with the name of that person written near the mark by a witness who writes the witness's own name near the name of the person who cannot write; but a signature or subscription by mark can be acknowledged or can serve as a signature or subscription to a sworn statement only when two witnesses so sign their own names to the sworn statement;

(13) "state" means the State of Alaska unless applied to the different parts of the United States and in the latter case it includes the District of Columbia and the territories;

(14) "writing" includes printing.

(b) In the laws of the state, "lewd conduct," "lewd touching," "immoral conduct," "indecent conduct," and similar terms do not include the act of a woman breast-feeding a child in a public or private location where the woman and child are otherwise authorized to be. Nothing in this subsection may be construed to authorize an act that is

Sec. 47.14.205. State Citizen Review Panel. (a) There is established within the department a Citizen Review Panel. The panel shall be composed of volunteer members who are broadly representative of the state, including members who have expertise in the prevention and treatment of child abuse and neglect.

(b) The panel shall meet not less than once every three months. Meetings may take place telephonically. (§ 38 ch 64 SLA 2005)

Sec. 47.14.210. Citizens' Foster Care Review Board. [Repealed, § 74 ch 35 SLA 2003.]

Sec. 47.14.215. Duties of the state panel. (a) The state panel shall evaluate the extent to which the department is effectively discharging its child protection responsibilities under

(1) the state plan submitted to the United States Department of Health and Human Services under 42 U.S.C. 5106a(b);

(2) child protection standards under federal and state laws; and

(3) any other criteria that the panel considers important to ensuring the protection of children, including the level and efficiency of coordination of foster care and adoption programs in the state and a review of child fatalities and near fatalities.

(b) In carrying out the responsibilities under (a) of this section, the state panel shall examine the policies, procedures, and practices of the department, and, where appropriate, evaluate specific cases of child abuse or neglect.

(c) The commissioner shall, by regulation, establish policies and procedures necessary to carrying out the duties of the state panel under this section. (§ 39 ch 64 SLA 2005)

Sec. 47.14.220. Citizens' Foster Care Review Board. [Repealed, § 74 ch 35 SLA 2003.]

Sec. 47.14.225. Cooperation with state panel. (a) The department shall provide the panel access to information on child abuse or neglect cases that is necessary for the panel to carry out its duties under AS 47.14.215.

(b) The department shall serve as staff to the state panel as requested by the panel members. (§ 40 ch 64 SLA 2005)

Sec. 47.14.230. Citizens' Foster Care Review Board. [Repealed, § 74 ch 35 SLA 2003.]

Sec. 47.14.235. Confidentiality. (a) A person attending a meeting of the state panel or a member or staff of the state panel may not make any disclosure related to information obtained during a review by the state panel unless authorized under AS 47.10.092 or 47.10.093.

(b) Meetings of the state panel are subject to AS 44.62.310 and 44.62.312. (§ 41 ch 64 SLA 2005)

Sec. 47.14.240. Citizens' Foster Care Review Board. [Repealed, § 74 ch 35 SLA 2003.]

Sec. 47.14.245. Public outreach. The state panel shall conduct public outreach and gather public comment on current department procedures and practices involving children and family services. (§ 42 ch 64 SLA 2005)

Sec. 47.14.250. Citizens' Foster Care Review Board. [Repealed, § 74 ch 35 SLA 2003.]

Sec. 47.14.255. Report. (a) The state panel shall prepare and make available to the governor, the legislature, and the public an annual report containing a summary of the activities of the panel conducted under AS 47.14.205 — 47.14.295 and recommendations for the improvement of child protection services in the state.

(2) the aggregate amount of disbursements or expenditures made or incurred during the period in support of or in connection with influencing legislative or administrative action by the lobbyist, or on behalf of the lobbyist by the lobbyist's employer in the following categories:

(A) food and beverages;

(B) living accommodations;

(C) travel;

(3) the date and nature of any gift exceeding $100 in value made to a public official and the full name and official position of that person;

(4) the name and official position of each public official, and the name of each member of the immediate family of any of these officials, with whom the lobbyist has engaged in an exchange of money, goods, services, or anything of more than $100 in value and the nature and date of each of these exchanges and the monetary values exchanged;

(5) the name and address of any business entity in which the lobbyist knows or has reason to know that a public official is a proprietor, partner, director, officer or manager, or has a controlling interest, and whom the lobbyist has engaged in an exchange of money, goods, services, or anything of value and the nature and date of each exchange and the monetary value exchanged if the total value of these exchanges is $100 or more in a calendar year; and

(6) a notice of termination if the lobbyist has ceased the lobbying activity that required registration under this chapter and if this report constitutes the final report of the lobbyist's activities.

(b) A lobbyist required to report to the commission under (a) of this section, who provides or pays for food or beverage for immediate consumption by a legislator or legislative employee or a spouse or domestic partner of a legislator or legislative employee shall report the date the food or beverage was provided or paid for and the recipient's name and relationship to the legislator or legislative employee, unless the food and beverage

(1) cost $15 or less; or

(2) are provided as part of an event that is open to all legislators or legislative employees. (§ 2 ch 167 SLA 1976; am § 23 ch 108 SLA 2003; am § 14 ch 47 SLA 2007)

Effect of amendments. — The 2003 amendment, effective September 14, 2003, added the third sentence in the introductory language.

The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, added subsection (b).

Sec. 24.45.060. [Repealed, § 1 ch 167 SLA 1976.]

Sec. 24.45.061. Reports by employers of lobbyists. (a) Within 15 days after employing, retaining, or contracting for the employment or retention of a lobbyist, the person who employs, retains, or who contracts for the services of a lobbyist shall file a statement with the commission authorizing or verifying that employment, retention, or contract for lobbying services.

(b) A person who employs, retains, or who contracts for the services of one or more lobbyists, whether independently or jointly with other persons, and who directly or indirectly makes payments to influence legislative or administrative action shall file a quarterly report containing

(1) the full name, complete business address and telephone number of the person making the report;

(2) information sufficient to identify the nature and interests of the person making the report;

building, the office of the lieutenant governor, the legislative reference library of the Legislative Affairs Agency, and the commission's central office.

(f) Each lobbyist shall renew the registration annually by filing a new registration statement together with a new authorization to act as a lobbyist before engaging in lobbying. The lobbyist also shall file any reports or statements the lobbyist has failed to file for a previous reporting period. The commission may not renew lobbying credentials until this provision is complied with.

(g) An application for registration as a lobbyist under (a) of this section or for renewal of a registration under (f) of this section is subject to a fee of $250. The commission may not accept an application for registration or renew a registration until the fee is paid. This subsection does not apply to a volunteer lobbyist under AS 24.45.161 or a representational lobbyist under regulations of the commission.

(h) Upon request of the commission, information required under this section shall be submitted electronically.

(i) A person may not register if the person has been previously convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude in violation of a law of this state or the law of another jurisdiction with elements similar to a felony involving moral turpitude in this state.

(j) In this section,

(1) "felony involving moral turpitude" has the meaning given in AS 15.60.010;

(2) "previously convicted" means the defendant entered a plea of guilty, no contest, or nolo contendere, or has been found guilty by a court or jury; "previously convicted" does not include a conviction that has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, or that has been reversed or vacated by a court. (§ 2 ch 167 SLA 1976; am § 39 ch 36 SLA 1990; am § 12 ch 74 SLA 1998; am § 9 ch 22 SLA 2001; am §§ 20 — 22 ch 108 SLA 2003; am § 10 ch 34 SLA 2007; am §§ 12, 13 ch 47 SLA 2007)

Effect of amendments. — The 1998 amendment, effective January 1, 1999, in subsection (b) added paragraph (7) and made minor stylistic changes.

The 2001 amendment, effective May 10, 2001, made a section reference substitution in paragraph (b)(7).

The 2003 amendment, effective September 14, 2003, substituted "domestic partner" for "spousal equivalent" in two places in paragraph (b)(7); substituted "$250" for "$100" in the first sentence in subsection (g); and added subsection (h).

The first 2007 amendment, effective January 1, 2008, substituted "15 days" for "45 days" near the beginning of the first sentence of subsection (e), and inserted a comma following "thereafter" near the beginning of the second sentence.

The second 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, deleted "legislator" following "the identification of a" at the end of paragraph (b)(7), added paragraphs (b)(8) and (b)(9), and added subsections (i) and (j).

SPONSOR STATEMENT
HB 194

"An Act relating to the operation of low-speed vehicles."

A demand exists in many rural Alaskan communities for short-range transportation that is both safe and convenient. Low speed vehicles (LSV's) provide an affordable alternative to standard passenger vehicles, and satisfy the growing demand for reduced-emission transportation. Significant advances have been made in LSV safety technology, such that these vehicles are now equipped with similar equipment and features to those of standard passenger vehicles. These technological developments, along with an increased awareness of vehicle emissions, have made LSV's a common fixture in rural Alaska communities.

In communities throughout Alaska, owners of LSV's are seeking access to more roads. Current law allows LSV's to operate on roads with posted speed limits of not more than 35 mph. This bill will give communities that have less than 25,000 people -and are not connected by road to Anchorage or Fairbanks- the authority to allow LSV's to travel on roads with posted speed limits of not more than 45 mph. Some of these communities, those with high traffic volume, may have safety concerns regarding LSV use; therefore this bill requires that a community pass an ordinance in order to expand LSV use on their roads.

The CS for HB 194 raises the maximum allowable population for any community to be eligible for this bill from not more than 25,000 people to not more than 35,000 people. The CS also clarifies that an LSV may make a crossing at an intersection with any highway so long as the approach highway and the highway the crossing is made to are authorized for LSV use.

By passing HB 194, certain Alaskan communities would be granted the option to increase LSV access where appropriate, thus promoting an affordable transportation solution that increases rural access and results in decreased vehicle emissions.

Good afternoon. My name is Megan Pasternak and I have been a low-speed electric vehicle owner and driver in Sitka for more than a year. Thank you to Rep. Wilson for sponsoring this bill, to her aides for their help and thank you to the Transportation Committee for having a hearing on HB 194.

Besides the at least 19 known such vehicles in Southeast, there are also two in Kodiak and possibly more throughout the state.

This bill is not just about cheap transportation. It is another much-needed step toward helping eliminate pollution and protecting the environment. It not only will help you but will help your communities, the State of Alaska, the United States, and the world.

This bill will help allow those who must transit 45-mph zones for work or other purposes and who have had reservations about owning a low-speed vehicle because of the 35-mph limitations to make the decision to join the group of citizens who are trying to make a difference in our carbon footprints.

As a low-speed vehicle driver I am very conscious of the traffic around me and do not impede others who want to go faster than my allowed 25 mph. I do this by waiting to enter a roadway until approaching traffic is far away and by pulling over to the side whenever possible to allow others to pass. I'm sure other low-speed vehicle drivers are just as conscientious.

Many of these vehicles are in use and have been in use in Europe for quite some time.

My understanding of one of many reasons why these vehicles are safe is that they are generally very lightweight. When involved in a crash, they tend to bounce away rather than take the impact full force.

This bill has great flexibility by allowing each municipality to make the decision to allow low-speed vehicles to travel in 45 mph zones based on local conditions.

Some have noted that electric vehicle owners will not be contributing to the building and upkeep of roads and highways because they will not be purchasing fuel and paying the taxes. I, for one, am more than willing to have an electric-vehicle tax or other added fee when registering or renewing license tabs. I'm sure my 1200-pound car does far less damage to the highways than the overloaded dump trucks traversing them.

As a side note, if legislators truly want to encourage electric or other alternative fuel-vehicle usage and make it safer for them in the higher speed zones, they should consider allowing low-speed vehicles to be modified to go 35 mph. My car has the capability but the modification was required to be removed in order to get registered and licensed in Alaska.

Please feel free to contact me with any questions you may have.

Thank you.

Electric Car In Sitka

[Print]

Written by Shannon Haugland, Sentinel Staff Writer
Tuesday, 26 February 2008

Walt and Megan Pasternak have a new rule at their house: the first one out the door gets the electric car.

The Sitka couple's ZENN 2.22LX arrived on the barge last Thursday, and so far they have logged 60 miles in it. Megan said that's enough to let her see its suitability for a town with less than 20 miles of highway.

"It's perfect for Sitka," she said.

The Pasternaks have two other vehicles -- a Toyota RAV4 and Ford Ranger pickup -- but their new Canadian-built ZENN has become their first choice for nearly all their driving.

They had been thinking about getting a high efficiency car for some time, and had been looking at a SmartCar, which gets 40 miles to the gallon of gas. But when they were in Seattle last November, Megan read a local magazine story about the ZENN.

ZENN stands for Zero Emissions No Noise.

They went to the Seattle dealer, M.C. Electric Vehicles, took a test drive in the battery-powered ZENN, and took to it immediately.

"It was almost a snap decision," Megan said. "But if you don't do it now, what are you waiting for? They will always come up with newer (technology) but why keep pumping crap into the air?"

The Pasternaks received a discount from the $20,000 list price for acting as "ambassadors," and answering questions from interested consumers. Megan said she and Walt learn something every day about the vehicle, often from others in Sitka who seem to have been following the product. Megan said they welcome calls from potential buyers.

"It's a learning process," she said. "I'm sitting here reading the book for the second time, because you don't know what they're talking about until you're in the car."

The ZENN gets 35 miles on a single battery charge. Top speed is 37 mph, with 35 a sustainable cruising speed. It takes four hours and five kilowatts of electricity to bring a fully depleted battery up to 80 percent charged. The draw on AC power tapers off as the battery approaches full charge.

The Pasternaks keep extension cords handy, and Megan said she is still getting into the habit of "opportunity charging" -- plugging in to the nearest available outlet when away from home. The car has electric windows, electric and manual locks and a functioning heating system but no air conditioning.

Megan said it isn't as quiet as she expected, but that's because a lack of insulation in the aluminum frame and the polycarbonite sides don't keep out road noise. The only glitch so far has been a short caused during the installation of an AM/FM stereo. But a quick bit of troubleshooting solved the problem.

The car weighs in at a featherweight 1,200 pounds, but Megan said she feels safe because she is a careful, defensive driver. She hasn't tried the ZENN on snow but the car has front-wheel drive, and can be equipped with snowtires.

Sitka Electric Utility Director Charlie Walls said he had heard about the Pasternaks' car and is interested to see how it performs in Sitka.

"At this point it's very much an emerging technology," he said. "We're watching that. It has some potential in the long run for Sitka. It's a pioneering technology. This time they have a chance of getting them established."

As the price of oil -- now at about $100 a barrel -- continues to go up, the interest in hybrids and electric cars will increase, Walls said. "The next thing to come is plug-in hybrids, then all electrical," he said. "What we're seeing is forerunners of what's to come."

Walls has made announcements in the last few weeks about the low water levels at the hydroelectric dams, and the need for such conservation measures as turning off home electric heaters when alternative heat is available.

Battery-powered cars will not be a significant draw on the electric system until there are a lot more of them in Sitka, he said.

The city is working on plans to raise the height of the Blue Lake Dam, which will increase the local hydro resources significantly, and Walls will be in a Sitka delegation heading to Washington, D.C., next month to get support for the $25 million project.

"In a few years from now, we could have the capacity to handle the addition of (electric cars)," he said. "We think it has some real potential, and it'll be real attractive to Sitkans five years from now."

There is at least one other all-electric vehicle in Sitka. The Coast Guard Air Station uses it to transport materials short distances on Japonski Island.

Megan said so far she gives the ZENN high marks, and hopes to spread the word about her car and its benefits to the environment with a new personalized license plate.

If its's not already taken, she wants it to read: "NO CO2."

OLR RESEARCH REPORT

LOW SPEED ELECTRIC VEHICLES

By: James J. Fazzalaro, Principal Analyst

You asked for information on the states that allow low speed electrically-powered motor vehicles to be registered and operated on public roads.

SUMMARY

Federal standards were first established for low speed motor vehicles in 1998. These standards define them and establish mandatory equipment requirements for them. We were able to identify 40 states that have granted statutory authority for low speed vehicles, referred to in some of the states as "neighborhood electric vehicles" to operate on certain types of roads. In all but Rhode Island, the authority extends to all roads of a certain type anywhere in the state. Rhode Island authorizes them only for operation on Prudence Island. As you know, Connecticut law does not authorize operation of low speed vehicles on public roads.

Every state that statutorily authorizes operation of low speed vehicles requires them to be registered. In the majority of cases, the statute has an explicit requirement for registration. However, in some states, the requirement is established indirectly in that these vehicles are defined as "motor vehicles" and the state's general registration law requires motor vehicles to be registered unless exempted. None of these states exempt low speed vehicles.

Most of the states limit the operation of low speed vehicles to roads for which the speed limit is set at not more than 35 miles per hour. Idaho, West Virginia, and Rhode Island limit them to roads with speed limits of 25 miles per hour or less. New Jersey authorizes them for roads up to 25 miles per hour, but allows state and local authorities to allow them for roads of up to 35 miles per hour if they choose. Maryland limits them to roads of 30 miles per hour or less. Kansas allows them to be operated on roads of up to 40 miles per hour and Montana allows them on roads of up to 45 miles per hour. Colorado only authorizes municipalities to determine where they may operate; the law does not set a speed limit maximum as the other states do.

Of the 40 states, 30 allow low speed vehicles to cross roads with higher speed limits. Most of the states that allow such crossings do so only at intersections. Maryland, Rhode Island, and Vermont limit this authority by designating the maximum speed of roads that may be crossed. Illinois, Maryland, and Vermont further limit the authority to cross to intersections that are "controlled", that is, governed by a traffic light or a four-way stop. New Jersey requires crossing at a signalized intersection, or at a non-signalized intersection if approved by a state, county, or local authority, when the road being crossed has more than two lanes, is divided, or has a speed limit over 35 miles per hour. California permits crossing a state highway at an uncontrolled intersection only if the state highway agency approves it.

The federal standard for low speed vehicles requires them to be capable of reaching at least 20 miles per hour and not more than 25 miles per hour. The majority of states we found adopt this as the standard in their definition of a low speed vehicle. However, several establish only a maximum speed of 25 miles per hour without specifying a minimum speed. These include Arizona, Colorado, Hawaii, Utah, and Vermont. Indiana and Montana specify a maximum speed of 35 miles per hour with no minimum speed. Washington defines two classes of vehicles—"medium speed vehicles" with a minimum speed of 30 miles per hour and a maximum of 35 miles per hour and "neighborhood electric vehicles" with a minimum speed 20 miles per hour and a maximum speed of 25 miles per hour.

Michigan, unlike any of the other states, specifically requires low speed vehicles to operate as far to the right side of the road as practicable.

The laws of all of the 40 states, except for Oregon and Colorado, make explicit reference to these low speed vehicles having to comply with the federal standards. Iowa, Michigan, Missouri, Texas, and West Virginia explicitly adopt the federal definition of a low speed vehicle by reference.

More than half of the states allow state, county, or local authorities to further restrict low speed vehicle operations, or even prohibit them entirely on some or all roads if it is the interest of public safety. In Wisconsin, low speed vehicles can only be operated if a municipality adopts a permissive ordinance. Illinois has a similar requirement that allows them only if a municipality has adopted a permissive ordinance. The Illinois law requires the municipality to consider the volume, speed, and character of traffic before approving an ordinance. Colorado has a permissive law, that is, low speed vehicles are only allowed to operate when a local authority has permitted it by ordinance or resolution.

Recently, the governor of Kentucky issued an executive order requiring the state motor vehicle agency to develop procedures for registering electrically-powered vehicles for use on public roads. The order covers vehicles capable of moving up to 50 miles per hour, so they probably should not be considered low speed vehicles in the same sense as the other states have authorized. Kentucky does not authorize low speed vehicles statutorily.

FEDERAL STANDARDS FOR LOW SPEED VEHICLES

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) first adopted regulatory standards for low speed vehicles in 1998. The NHTSA regulations define a low speed vehicle (LSV) as a motor vehicle that (1) has four wheels; (2) can attain a speed in one mile on a paved, level surface of at least 20 miles per hour and not more than 25 miles per hour; and (3) has a gross vehicle weight rating of less than 3,000 pounds (49 CFR Sec. 571.3). The regulations do not limit LSVs to being electrically-powered.

The regulations require all LSVs to be equipped with: (1) headlamps, tail lamps, and stop lamps; (2) front and rear turn signals; (3) red reflex reflectors on both sides and the rear; (4) an exterior mirror on the driver's side and either an exterior mirror on the passenger side or an internal mirror; (5) a parking brake; (6) a windshield that conforms to the federal standard for glazing materials; (7) a vehicle identification number that conforms to federal standards; and (8) a seat belt meeting federal standards at each designated seating position (49 CFR § 571.500).

Most of the states that allow the operation of low speed vehicles on some roads require them to meet these federal standards. Of the 40 states we identified with low speed vehicle laws, only Oregon's and Colorado's laws appear not to explicitly refer to compliance with the federal regulations.

STATES THAT AUTHORIZE OPERATION OF LOW SPEED ELECTRIC VEHICLES

Table 1 provides information for the 40 states we fund with laws allowing low speed vehicles to be operated on some roads. The states typically refer to them as low speed vehicles (LSV) or neighborhood electric vehicles (NEV). The laws in Montana and Washington refer to them as medium speed vehicles (MSV). The table identifies (1) the maximum speed limit for roads for which their operation is authorized; (2) whether they are allowed to cross roads with higher speed limits and any limitations that apply, (3) what characteristics define these vehicles under the state's law, (4) the minimum and maximum operating speeds for these vehicles, and (5) if there is authority to regulate them at the state or local level that goes beyond the general statutory authorization for them to operate.

ZENN - Vehicle in Sitka

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
(Redirected from Zenn)

ZENN (Zero Emission, No Noise) is a 2-seat battery electric vehicle currently in production and built by ZENN Motor Company designed to qualify as a Neighborhood Electric Vehicle. It has a range of up to 40 miles (64 km) and does not exceed 25 mph (40 km/h). On earlier production models, there was an option of a 'Discovery Pack' which increased the ZENN's range a few miles. It now comes standard.

The vehicle is based on the Microcar (brand) MC2,in production in France since the early 2000s, and produced under license from Microcar's parent company Beneteau Group. The Microcar MC2, and the short wheelbase MC1, are sold in Europe with diesel engines.

Electric power is stored in six 12V lead-acid gel batteries, which has a recharge cycle of 8 hours. Valve regulated (low maintenance) lead-acid wet cells are available at extra cost.

Also optional are a retractable fabric sunroof, air conditioning, audio entertainment center, and AC motor, stated to be better for hill climbing. The 2008 model has a standard AC motor.

On January 16, 2007 EEStor, Inc. announced plans to ship 15 kilowatt-hour Electrical Energy Storage Units (EESU) to ZENN Motor Company by end of 2007 for use in the ZENN electric vehicles. As of Nov. 2008, this has not happened. If it were to happen, it would make the ZENN the first production vehicle to use EESU. As of April 30 2007 ZENN Motor Company owned approximately 3.8% of the equity of capacitor developer EEstor, after an investment of $2.5M US.[1]

Licensing agreement with EEStor

EEStor was founded in 2001 by Richard D. Weir and Carl Nelson, former senior managers in disk-storage technology at IBM and Xerox. The Company maintains a low profile, but others in the automotive and CleanTech communities are calling their storage technology 'game changing'. Such a breakthrough has the potential to transform the energy sector and the automobile industry in particular.

The following is how the EESU is claimed to compare to other batteries used for electric cars[2]

	Ceramic EESU	NiMH	La(Gel)	Lithium-ion
Weight (kg/lbs)	135/300	780/1716	1660/3646	340/752

EV Charging time (full) - 100% charge	3-6 min	>3.0 hr	3-15 hr	>3.0 hr
Life Reduced with deep cycle use	none	very high	high	very high
Hazardous Materials	none	yes	yes	yes
Temperature vs. effect on energy storage	negligible	high	very high	high

ZMC entered into an agreement with EEStor dated August 24, 2004 (with subsequent amendments dated November 26, 2004, September 30 2005, August 8, 2006 and January 22, 2007) to acquire in perpetuity the worldwide exclusive rights to use EEStor's EESU in the following markets:

All-electric 4-wheeled personal transportation uses for vehicles with a curb weight up to 1,400 kilograms (3,100 lb), net of the battery weight, and For golf carts and similar-styled utility vehicles, and The aftermarket conversion of any internal combustion passenger vehicle to electric drive

The EEStor Technology Agreement also provides ZMC with non-exclusive, worldwide use to manufacture higher power and heavier vehicles.

About half of Zenn's IPO was used to invest in EEStor.

Skepticism from Experts about EEStor

Three technology experts hired by potential investors to investigate EEStor's technology have stated "it's not possible", "extremely unlikely that it's possible", "there's extreme skepticism", "there's nothing there", "it's ridiculous thinking", "it's beyond science fiction", and "I'm surprised that Kleiner has put money into it". [3] [4] [5]

City ZENN

The cityZENN is planned to be a fully certified, highway capable vehicle with a top speed of 125 kilometres per hour (78 mph) and a range of 400 kilometres (250 mi). Powered by EEStor, the cityZENN will be rechargeable in less than 5 minutes, feature operating costs 1/10th of a typical internal combustion engine vehicle and be 100% emission-free at the point of use. The Zero Emission, No Noise cityZENN will be designed to meet the transportation requirements of a large percentage of drivers worldwide. [6] It is due to be launched in Fall 2009. Also according to Ian Clifford a normal household outlet with 110 volt supply can fully charge the EESTor powered CityZENN in 4 hours for a 250 miles (400 km) range and a normal household outlet with 220 volt supply can fully charge the EESTor powered CityZENN in 2 hours for a 250 miles (400 km) range. A fast charge in about 5 minutes will be possible at special charge stations. CityZENN target price is around $25000 - $30000.[7]

Legalization in Canada

Although the company is headquartered in Toronto, and the car is manufactured in St- Jérôme, the vehicle was first introduced in the United States. Federal regulations set up by Transport Canada to approve low speed vehicles (LSVs) for public road use excluded the ZENN and other NEVs from Canadian roads. ZENN's battle with Transport Canada over LSV regulations has been periodically mentioned in Canadian news.[8]

The ZENN car met all the regulatory requirements in the United States; the same regulations adopted by Transport Canada in 2000. It took 2 years of political red tape before ZENN received its National Safety Mark from the Canadian Ministry of Transport. The safety mark was granted after a report by the CBC[9] caused public outcry against the governments lack of interest in environmentally friendly alternatives to fossil fuel vehicles.

Since August 16, 2000, British Columbia has allowed LSVs on its roads, but this exception to the federal law was designed mainly for large slow-moving farm equipment. Although the ZENN was technically legal in British Columbia, the cars would have needed to be equipped with warning signs and yellow flashing lights to distinguish themselves as slow-moving. ZENN Motor Company did not see these conditions as viable to establish a retailer market. After ZENN received its National Safety Mark, the province of British Columbia vowed to improve their support for electric vehicles, and granted the right to each municipality to make LSVs legal on their roads. As of November 2008, The City of Vancouver and the township of Oak Bay, a suburb near Victoria are the only municipalities to grant LSV use.

In Ontario, LSVs can be used on roadways within provincial or municipal parks and conservation areas (when driven by an authorized park employee) or on private property.

On June 17, 2008, Quebec announced a pilot project for the ZENN, which would allow residents of Quebec to drive a ZENN in Canada.[10] On October 4th, 2008 ZENN Motor Company opened up a retailer out of its production plant in St. Jérôme with a factory direct approach to sales. This marked the first time a ZENN or any other low-speed commercial vehicle could be sold in Canada.

Awards

In the Michelin Challenge Bibendum 2006, ZENN received the highest overall rank in the Urban Car category.

	Effective: February 24, 2009
Subject:	Supersedes: NEW	Dated:
LOW-SPEED VEHICLES (LSV)	Form No.: 812
Statute: AS 28.90.990 (14)	Regulation: AAC

Fees | Modifications | Plates

A low-speed vehicle (LSV) or neighborhood electric vehicle (NEV) is a passenger vehicle that meets the following criteria:

- Four wheels
- Maximum GVWR of 3,000 pounds (49 CFR 571.3)
- Manufactured to be capable of propelling itself
- Maximum speed of 25 miles an hour
- Has not been modified to have a maximum speed greater than 25 miles an hour (See "Modifications" section)

GENERAL INFORMATION

The operator of a low-speed vehicle is subject to all the traffic and other laws applicable to operators of passenger vehicles. A low-speed vehicle may not be operated on a highway that has a maximum speed of more than 35 miles an hour; however, a low-speed vehicle may cross a highway that has a maximum speed limit of more than 35 miles an hour if the crossing is made at the intersection with a highway that is authorized for low-speed vehicles.

APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS

- Application for Title & Registration (Form 812).
- MCO should state "Low-Speed Vehicle" or "Neighborhood Electric Vehicle"
- Issue month and year tabs as per normal registration procedures.

PLATE CONFIGURATION: LSV001 - LSV999

PLATE TYPE NUMBER: 8242000

When the plates are lost or damaged, charge a replacement plate fee per AS 28.10.441(3).

LSV license plates will only be stocked at the Anchorage Field Offices (Benson and Fairbanks Street locations). If you do not work at one of these locations:

- Issue a temporary permit (T-090).
- Contact your supervisor for a license plate number.
- Clear temporary with the plate number and take in the ORIGINAL documents.
- Issue registration and tabs.
- Advise your customer that the license plates will be mailed to them. They need to display the temporary until the plates are received. Place month and year tabs on the rear license plate.

MODIFICATIONS

When a low-speed vehicle has been modified to have a maximum speed greater than 25 miles an hour, it no longer meets the requirements of a low-speed vehicle, and cannot be registered as a low-speed vehicle. Once the vehicle has been modified, it may no longer meet Federal Highway Safety Standards to be eligible for passenger registration. The vehicle would not be eligible for registration in Alaska.

In order to be registered as a passenger vehicle, the MCO must state that the vehicle meets Federals Highway Safety Standards. If it does not, an inspection is required to assure that the vehicle has a compliance sticker stating that it meets Federal Highway Safety Standards.

Farm Vehicle Plates

To qualify and apply for farm plates, an applicant must make a statement in the affidavit section of the Title & Registration Application that they live on a ranch, farm or dairy, and derives their main source of income from a ranch, farm or dairy, and that the vehicle weighs under 16,000 lbs., unladen weight, and is used only for transporting ranch, farm, or dairy products to or from market or for the transportation of supplies, commodities, or equipment to be used on a ranch, farm or dairy.

If a vehicle weighs over 16,000 lbs., unladen weight, the vehicle must be registered as a commercial vehicle and does not qualify for farm plates.

If the vehicle meets the requirements for heavy vehicle use tax, they are not exempt from this requirement because of the farm plates.

The registration fee for a farm vehicle is $68.00 and is valid for two years, regardless of the body style or weight of the vehicle.

Concealed Handgun Birthday Permit
HB 201

June 2003 Alaska Governor Frank Murkowski signed into law the bill allowing citizens to carry firearms concealed without getting a permit. The bill had 33 co-sponsors, from both chambers, and passed on a veto-proof vote of 28 to 12 in the House and 12 to 8 in the Senate.

The permit is still available for those who would want to travel to other states that have reciprocity with Alaska. Since the permit is not necessary in Alaska some permit holders forget the renewal date.

This bill changes the expiration date of a concealed handgun permit from five years from the date of issue to the person's birthday. The first year is a transitional year where the permit will be issued for a minimum of 4 year and how ever many months it is until the person's birthday. All permits after that will be for 5 years.

This legislation amends AS 18.65.700(d) to make a concealed handgun permit expire on the person's birthday in the fifth year following issuance of the permit, rather than five years from the date the permit was issued.

Passage of this legislation will have no fiscal impact on the department.

Handguns

- Permit to carry handguns? No*

*According to the National Rifle Assc., "A permit to carry a concealed handgun is not necessary in Alaska, but permits are available to those who want to carry in states that recognize Alaska permits."

Carrying

Any person 21 years of age or older may carry a handgun concealed on their person provided that, when contacted by a police officer, informs the officer of that possession and allows the police officer to secure the handgun for the duration of that contact.
Any person 21 years of age or older may carry a handgun concealed on their person provided that, when contacted by a police officer, informs the officer of that possession and allows the police officer to secure the handgun for the duration of that contact.

A permit to carry a concealed handgun is available for those individuals who desire a means to carry a concealed handgun in states that honor Alaska's permit to carry.

A person can obtain a permit to carry a concealed handgun if the person:

- Is 21 years of age or older.
- Is eligible to own or possess a firearm under state and federal law.
- Has been a resident of the state for 90 days preceding application for permit.
- Has not been convicted of two or more class A misdemeanors within the preceding six years.
- Is not currently or has not within three years been ordered by a court to complete an alcohol treatment or substance abuse program.
- Has demonstrated competence with handguns.

Permits

The Department of Public Safety shall issue a permit to a person who applies in person at an office of the Alaska State Troopers and is not prohibited from possessing a handgun.

A completed application must be submitted under an oath. The applicant must provide two complete sets of fingerprints and two frontal view color photographs taken within 30 days prior to submitting application. An applicant must not suffer a physical infirmity that prevents the safe handling of a handgun.

A permit is valid for five years. Applications, permits, and renewals are not public records and can only be used for law enforcement purposes.

The Department shall either approve or reject an application within 30 days of receipt. A person shall apply in person for renewal of a permit to carry within 90 days before the expiration of the permit and shall present a complete renewal form under an oath. A permit to carry shall be immediately revoked if the permittee becomes disqualified to receive and hold a permit. A person whose permit is revoked may appeal to the commissioner. If the commissioner upholds the revocation, a person may seek judicial review. If the permit is revoked, such a person cannot apply for a permit until at least five years after it is revoked.

- A person carrying a concealed handgun may not carry it into any place prohibited by law.
- When entering the residence of another person, one must notify the resident that they are carrying a concealed handgun.
- A municipality may not restrict the carrying of a concealed handgun by permit.
- A permit holder from with a valid permit from other jurisdictions is considered an Alaska permit holder.

Alaska Concealed Handgun Permits

Special Fee Change Notice:

Effective October 1, 2007, the application fee for a new Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit will be reduced to $94.25. This reflects a reduction in the cost of conducting national criminal background checks. Fees for renewal and replacement applications will remain at $25.00; only the fee for new applications is affected by this change. Applications received by the Department of Public Safety after October 1, 2007 must be accompanied by the fee of $94.25.

Alaska Statute 11.61.220 allows anyone 21 or older, who may legally carry a firearm to also carry it concealed without having to obtain a special permit. The possession of a firearm at courthouses, school yards, bars and domestic violence shelters will continue to be prohibited. Alaskans may obtain a concealed carry permit if they want reciprocity with other states.

A person 21 or older may be charged with Misconduct involving Weapons in the 5th degree under AS 11.61.220 if s/he

- fails to immediately inform a peace officer that s/he is carrying a concealed handgun
- fails to allow the officer to secure the weapon or fails to secure the weapon at the direction of the peace officer, or
- carries the weapon concealed within another person's residence, unless s/he has first obtained the express permission of an adult residing there, whether or not the person has a concealed handgun permit.

Instructions

Things You'll Need:

- Application
- $94.25 fee
- One recent photograph
- One set fingerprints
- Certificate of handgun course

Step 1

You must be a resident of Alaska and lived in the state at least ninety days to obtain the permit.

A convicted felon cannot legally conceal a firearm in the State of Alaska

Alaska will honor all valid permits to carry a concealed handgun from other states.

Step 2

The application for the permit is fairly simple. You must be at least twenty one years old, submit a photo taken in the last thirty days, a complete set of finger prints taken by an approved agency, proof of completing the handgun course, a Alaska drivers license or ID, and the ninety four dollars and twenty five cent application fee.

Step 3

The handgun safety course in Alaska is twelve hours and it concentrates on Alaska laws, the legal systems, and where you can and cannot carry a firearm. It also covers a review of basic marksmanship skills, the function of the double action revolver and the semi-auto pistol, the handling and operations needed to fire the weapons, and a live fire qualification the following day.

Frequently Asked Questions

New Applications:

Q: What are the procedures to apply for an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit?

A: You must complete a handgun training course approved by the Department of Public Safety. Within one year after completion of the training course, submit your completed application in person to any State Trooper office. Your application must include:

The completed application
One photograph taken within 30 days of the date on the application,
One set of identifiable fingerprints taken by a Department-approved technician, Proof of successful completion of a handgun course, and
The $94.25 application fee.

Q: How much does it cost to get an Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: The application fee is $94.25.

Q: Can I get my money back if my application is not approved?

A: No. Application fees are non-refundable. Please make sure that you qualify before you turn in your application. See Alaska Statute 18.65.705 for a list of qualifications to obtain an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit.

Q: Can someone else bring in my new application for a Concealed Carry Permit?

A: No. The application for a new permit must be submitted in person to any Alaska State Trooper office. You will be asked to show a government issued photographic identity card (e.g., Alaska Driver's License or Alaska State Identification Card).

Q: For how long is my Alaska concealed handgun permit valid?

A: Permits are issued for 5 years.

General Qualification Questions:

Q: Are non-residents allowed to have an Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: No. Only Alaska residents may have an Alaska concealed handgun permit. You must establish residency in the State of Alaska and may apply for a permit after you have been here at least 90 days.

Q: If I am a legal resident alien, can I get an Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: Yes, provided you are a legal resident of Alaska and have lived in Alaska at least 90 days.

Q: If I am in the military and just transferred here, can I get an Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: If you intend to become an Alaska resident, you may qualify to apply for an Alaska concealed handgun permit after you have been here for 90 days.

Q: I have moved out of the state. Can I still renew my Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: No. Only Alaska residents may possess an Alaska concealed handgun permit.

Q: Does a conviction that has been 'set aside' count as a conviction as it applies to qualifications for an Alaska concealed handgun permit?

A: Yes. See 13 AAC 30.900(6) for the definition of conviction as it applies to the Alaska Concealed Handgun Program.

Q: I was convicted of a felony, but the conviction was later 'set aside'. Am I eligible to obtain an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit?

A: No. A convicted felon who has not had the conviction vacated by a court as a result of motion, appellate action, petition for writ of habeas corpus, or application for post-conviction relief under Rule 35.1 of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, cannot be issued an ACHP because they cannot legally conceal a firearm on the person except in two limited circumstances. See AS11.61.200 for these circumstances.

Permit renewal/lost/change of name or address:

Q: My permit is about to expire; what do I need to do to keep my permit valid?

A: Complete the Renewal of a Concealed Handgun Permit form (form # 12-299-84) and submit it to the ACHP office. You are not required to deliver it in person. You may apply to renew your concealed handgun permit by mail.

Renewal forms are available on-line on the ACHP Home Page. Mail your application to:

Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit Office

Anchorage, AK 99507

Renewal applications must be postmarked not more than 90 days before your concealed handgun permit expires. Include your renewal application, a recent photograph and the $25 non-refundable fee.

A permit submitted on or after the expiration is subject to an additional $25 late fee. The department will not accept a renewal for a permit submitted more than 60 days after the expiration date of the permit. (If more than 60 days have elapsed since your permit expired, you must submit an application for a new permit.)

Q: Do I have to return my old permit when I receive my renewal?

A: Yes. When you receive your renewed permit, return the old permit to the Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit Office at 5700 East Tudor Road, Anchorage, Alaska, 99507.

Q: What do I do if my permit is lost or stolen?

A: You must complete and submit an Application for Replacement of a Concealed Handgun Permit (Form 12-299-85). This form (which must include a new photograph) must be submitted in person at any Alaska State Trooper office. The replacement fee is $25.

Q: If I move, do I notify the Department of Public Safety?

A: You must notify the Department of a change of address within 30 days. Changes of Address forms (12-299-88) are available on line from the ACHP Home Page, or you may contact the Alaska Concealed Handgun Office at (907) 269-0392. This form may be mailed to:

5700 East Tudor Road

Anchorage, AK, 99507

There is no charge to change your address.

Q: Is my Alaska concealed handgun permit valid if I move out of Alaska?

A: Your permit is valid only as long as you are an Alaska resident. Return your permit to the Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit Office. We will place your permit in an inactive status. If you return to Alaska and re-establish your residency before your permit expires, your permit may be reactivated at that time.

Q: What do I do if my legal name changes?

A: Complete and submit an Application for Replacement (form 12-299-85) to any State Trooper office. You must provide an official court document or marriage license in support of this change, and pay the $25 fee.

Reciprocity:

Q: If I have an Alaska concealed handgun permit, can I carry my concealed handgun in another state?

A: Your Alaska concealed handgun permit does not allow you to carry a concealed handgun in another state, unless that state recognizes Alaska permits. It is important for permit holders to understand that when they are traveling in or through another state they are subject to the firearm laws of that state.

However, check the 'Reciprocity' link on the ACHP home page for a list of states that have indicated they will honor Alaska's permits. Note that this link is updated in the first quarter of every year. Some information may have changed. You should verify the requirements of the state to which you will be moving/traveling before you carry a concealed handgun in that state.

Q: Can I take firearms into Canada?

A: Contact the Canadian Firearms information Office at (800) 731-4000 for information about taking firearms into Canada.

Q: Will Alaska honor permits from other states?

A: Alaska will honor a valid permit to carry a concealed handgun from another state or subdivision of a state.

General Questions:

Q: Can I carry my handgun in the glove box of my vehicle?

A: Local ordinances vary from city to city in Alaska. Contact your city, borough, or municipal police department and ask them about their ordinances concerning firearms and concealed weapons.

Q: Will the state limit the number of handgun instructors or permit holders?

A: No.

Q: I am a retired peace officer. I retired several years ago when the concealed program provisions were not in effect. Can I be "grand-fathered" into the permit program and allowed to waive the certification training?

A: No. You must apply for a concealed handgun permit within one year of your retirement in order to qualify for the honorably retired peace officer provisions of the law.

Q: Do I have to notify the Permits and Licensing Unit when I purchase another handgun?

A: No. For additional information about purchasing and/or selling firearms, contact your local Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms office.

Reciprocity

Alaska Statute 18.65.748 states that a person holding a valid permit to carry a concealed handgun from another state or a political subdivision of another state is a permittee under AS 18.65.700 (b) for purposes of AS 18.65.750 - 18.65.765.

Alaska Statute 18.65.775 requires the Department of Public Safety to enter into reciprocity agreements with other states that have the legal authority to enter into such agreements so that Alaska Concealed Handgun permittees may carry concealed handguns in those other states.

Annually, the Department of Public Safety will review legislation in other states to determine if a reciprocity agreement is required or if an existing agreement is still valid. It is important for permit holders to understand that when they are traveling in or through another state they are subject to the firearm laws of that state. You should verify the requirements of the state to which you will be moving/traveling before you carry a concealed handgun in that state.

The State of Alaska

concerning Handgun License Reciprocity for Concealed Carry

WHEREAS, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has the authority to issue a License to Carry a Firearm pursuant to 18 Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated § 6109; and

WHEREAS, the State of Alaska has the authority to issue a Concealed Handgun License pursuant to AS 18.65.700; and

WHEREAS, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is authorized to recognize the validity of a nonresident concealed handgun license if the Pennsylvania Attorney General determines that a background check of each applicant for a license issued by the other state is conducted by state or local authorities, or agent thereof, before the license is issued to determine the applicants' eligibility to possess a firearm under the Federal Gun Control Act (18 U.S.C. § 922); and

WHEREAS, the Attorney General for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has made such affirmative determination with respect to the State of Alaska; and

WHEREAS, the State of Alaska is authorized, pursuant to AS 18.65.748, to recognize the validity of a permit to carry a concealed handgun issued by another state; and

WHEREAS, the Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is authorized, pursuant to 18 Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated § 6109(k), to enter into reciprocity agreements with other states providing for the mutual recognition of each state's license to carry a firearm; and

WHEREAS, the Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has determined that the State of Alaska meets the requirements for reciprocity with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

WHEREAS, Handgun License reciprocity between Alaska and Pennsylvania is thus supported by the laws of both states;

NOW, THEREFORE, the parties do hereby agree as follows:

RECEIVED
AK DEPT. OF PUBLIC SAFETY
OCT 19 2005
RI ANCHORAGE

1. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall give full faith and credit to a valid Concealed Handgun License issued by the State of Alaska; and

2. The State of Alaska shall consider holders of a valid Concealed Handgun License issued by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to be concealed handgun permittees in Alaska as required by Alaska Stat. § 18.65.748; and

3. Persons carrying a concealed firearm pursuant to this Memorandum of Agreement shall comply with all applicable concealed carry laws, rules and regulations of the respective states, including, but not limited to, age requirements and restrictions regarding the type of firearms that may be carried; and

4. The State of Alaska and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will inform each other of any changes to their respective weapons statutes that may affect the eligibility of the recognition granted by each state pursuant to this Memorandum of Agreement.

This Memorandum of Agreement becomes effective on the date of the final signature and shall continue in effect unless modified by mutual written consent, or terminated by either state upon thirty (30) days' written notice. This document is not intended to limit or restrict the statutory authority or jurisdiction of either state.

ALASKA CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT INFORMATION

AS 01.10.055. Residency.

(a) A person establishes residency in the state by being physically present in the state with the intent to remain in the state indefinitely and to make a home in the state.

(b) A person demonstrates the intent required under (a) of this section

(1) by maintaining a principal place of abode in the state for at least 30 days or for a longer period if a longer period is required by law or regulation; and

(2) by providing other proof of intent as may be required by law or regulation, which may include proof that the person is not claiming residency outside the state or obtaining benefits under a claim of residency outside the state.

(c) A person who establishes residency in the state remains a resident during an absence from the state unless during the absence the person establishes or claims residency in another state, territory or country, or performs other acts or is absent under circumstances that are inconsistent with the intent required under (a) of this section to remain a resident of this state. (§ 1 ch 67 SLA 1983).

Note: AS 18.65.705(3) requires that an applicant be a resident of the state and has been for the 90 days immediately preceding the application for the permit.

TITLE 18. HEALTH, SAFETY, AND HOUSING
CHAPTER 65. POLICE PROTECTION
ARTICLE 10. PERMIT TO CARRY A CONCEALED HANDGUN

Sec. 18.65.700. Permit to carry a concealed handgun.

(a) The department shall issue a permit to carry a concealed handgun to a person who
(1) applies in person at an office of the Alaska State Troopers;
(2) qualifies under AS 18.65.705 ;
(3) submits a completed application on a form provided by the department, that provides the information required under AS 18.65.705 and 18.65.710; with each application form provided by the department, the department shall provide a copy of the state laws and regulations relating to concealed handguns, which must include a concise summary of where, when, and by whom a handgun can be carried under state and federal law;
(4) submits one complete set of fingerprints on a Federal Bureau of Investigation approved fingerprint card that is of sufficient quality so that the fingerprints may be processed; the fingerprints must be taken by a person, group, or agency approved by the department; the department shall maintain a list of persons, groups, or agencies approved to take fingerprints and shall provide the list to the public upon request; the fingerprints shall be used to obtain a report of criminal justice information under AS 12.62 and a national criminal history record check under AS 12.62.400 ;
(5) submits evidence of successful completion of a handgun course as provided in AS 18.65.715 ;
(6) provides one frontal view color photograph of the person taken within the preceding 30 days that includes the head and shoulders of the person and is of a size specified by the department;
(7) shows a valid Alaska driver's license or identification card at the time of application;
(8) does not suffer a physical infirmity that prevents the safe handling of a handgun; and
(9) pays the application fee required by AS 18.65.720 .

(b) The department shall either approve or reject an application for a permit to carry a concealed handgun under (a) of this section within 30 days of receipt of the application. If the department has not received necessary fingerprint eligibility information from another agency by the end of this 30-day period, and the applicant is otherwise eligible, the department shall issue a conditional permit to the applicant subject to immediate revocation under the procedure provided in AS 18.65.740(a) - (c) if the fingerprint information subsequently discloses that the applicant is ineligible for a permit. The department shall notify the applicant in writing of the reason for a rejection.

(c) A person whose application is rejected under this section may appeal the rejection decision to the commissioner. A person may seek judicial review of the decision of the commissioner under AS 44.62.560 - 44.62.570.

(d) A permit issued under (a) of this section is valid for five years from the date of issue.

(e) The department shall issue a permit to carry a concealed handgun to an honorably retired peace officer of this state who applies for a concealed handgun permit within one year of the officer's retirement and who satisfies the requirements of this subsection. To qualify for a permit under this subsection, an honorably retired peace officer must satisfy (a)(1) - (3) and (6) - (9) of this section and, unless the honorably retired peace officer has qualified with a handgun within five years of the officer's retirement, must also satisfy (a)(5) of this section. The department may not require an honorably retired peace officer applying under this subsection to comply with (a)(4) of this section to receive a permit. The department shall issue the permit without submitting information to or receiving permit eligibility information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The department may adopt regulations to define an "honorably retired peace officer" and the evidence that must be submitted to establish eligibility under this subsection.

Sec. 18.65.705. Qualifications to obtain a permit.

A person is qualified to receive and hold a permit to carry a concealed handgun if the person

(1) is 21 years of age or older;
(2) is eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state and under federal law;
(3) is a resident of the state and has been for the 90 days immediately preceding the application for a permit;
(4) has not been convicted of two or more class A misdemeanors of this state or similar laws of another jurisdiction within the six years immediately preceding the application;
(5) is not now in and has not in the three years immediately preceding the application been ordered by a court to complete an alcohol or substance abuse treatment program; and
(6) has successfully completed a handgun course as provided in AS 18.65.715.

Sec. 18.65.710. Application for permit to carry a concealed handgun.

(a) The application for a permit to carry a concealed handgun must contain the following information:

(1) the applicant's name, physical residence, mailing address, place and date of birth, physical description, including height, weight, race, hair color, and eye color, Alaska driver's license or identification card number, and the city and state of each place the applicant has resided in the five years immediately preceding the application;
(2) a statement that the applicant qualifies under AS 18.65.705 ;
(3) a statement that the applicant has been furnished with a copy of the state laws and regulations relating to concealed handguns, has read those sections, and understands them;
(4) a statement that the applicant desires a permit to carry a concealed handgun for a lawful purpose, which may include self-defense;
(5) a statement by the applicant that all statements, answers, and attachments to the application are true and complete;
(6) a conspicuous warning that an applicant who supplies a false statement, answer, or document in connection with the application that the applicant does not believe to be true may be prosecuted for unsworn falsification and, if found guilty, may be punished for violation of a class A misdemeanor, and that, in such cases, the permit shall be revoked and the applicant may be barred from any further application for a permit; and
(7) a statement that the applicant understands that a permit eligibility investigation will be conducted as a part of the application process, that this may involve computerized records searches, and that the applicant authorizes the investigation.

(b) An application under (a) of this section may not inquire of an applicant about, or require the submission of, information beyond that described in that subsection. As part of an application under (a) of this section, the department may not inquire of an applicant as to any firearms owned by the applicant.

Sec. 18.65.715. Demonstration of competence with handguns.

(a) An applicant for a permit to carry a concealed handgun shall provide a certificate of successful completion of a handgun course that is approved by the department. The handgun course must have been completed within the 12 months immediately preceding the application. The department shall approve a handgun course, including the personal protection course offered by the National Rifle Association, if the course tests the applicant's

(1) knowledge of Alaska law relating to firearms and the use of deadly force;
(2) familiarity with the basic concepts of the safe and responsible use of handguns;
(3) knowledge of self-defense principles; and
(4) physical competence with a handgun.

(c) The department may not require a certificate of competence submitted under this section to contain any specifically identifying information, including make, model, or serial number, of a handgun with which an applicant or permittee has demonstrated competence.

(d) The department shall maintain a list of approved courses and shall provide the list to the public upon request.

Sec. 18.65.720. Fees.

The department shall charge a nonrefundable fee for the processing of the application for and initial issuance of a permit, renewal of a permit, or replacement of a permit. The fees shall be set by regulation and must be based on the actual costs incurred by the department. However, the fee for the processing of an application and initial issuance of a permit may not exceed $99 and the fee for renewal of a permit or replacement of a permit may not exceed $30.

Sec. 18.65.725. Permit renewal.

(a) A permittee shall apply for renewal of a permit to carry a concealed handgun within 90 days before the expiration of the permit and shall present a complete renewal form provided by the department. The renewal form must include

(1) any change in the information originally submitted under AS 18.65.710;
(2) a statement that the person remains qualified to receive and hold a permit to carry a concealed handgun under AS 18.65.705 ;
(3) one frontal view photograph of the person taken within the preceding 30 days that includes the head and shoulders of the person and is of a size specified by the department;
(4) the renewal fee required under AS 18.65.720 ; and
(5) the warning listed in AS 18.65.710 (a)(6).

(b) [Repealed, Sec. 15 ch 94 SLA 2000].

(c) A renewal of a permit to carry a concealed handgun submitted on or after the expiration date is subject to a late fee of $25. The department may not accept a renewal for a permit that is submitted more than 60 days after the expiration date of the permit. Nothing in this subsection prohibits the holder of an expired permit from applying for a new permit.

(d) A renewal form under (a) of this section may not inquire of a permittee about, or require the submission of, information beyond that described in (a) of this section.

Sec. 18.65.730. Replacement of permit.

The department may replace a permit that the permittee certifies under oath has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, provided the permittee applies in person and

(1) provides one frontal view photograph of the permittee taken within the preceding 30 days that includes the head and shoulders and is of a size specified by the department;
(2) pays the replacement fee required under AS 18.65.720 .

Sec. 18.65.735. Suspension of permit.

(a) The department shall immediately suspend a permit to carry a concealed handgun if a permittee becomes ineligible to hold a permit under AS 18.65.705 .

(b) A person whose permit is suspended under this section shall immediately surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer. A peace officer receiving a permit under this section shall immediately forward the permit to the department.

(c) The department shall retain a permit suspended under this section until the permit is revoked or returned to the permittee.

Sec. 18.65.740. Revocation of permit; appeal.

(a) A permit to carry a concealed handgun shall be immediately revoked by the department when the permittee
(1) becomes disqualified to receive and hold a permit under AS 18.65.705;
(2) is convicted of two class A misdemeanors of this state or similar laws of another jurisdiction within a six-year period if at least one of the convictions occurs after the application;
(3) knowingly supplied a false or fraudulent answer, statement, or document, or made a material misstatement or omission, in connection with an application for a permit or renewal or replacement of a permit.

(b) A person whose permit is revoked under (a) of this section shall immediately surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer. A peace officer receiving a permit under this section shall immediately forward the permit to the department.

(c) A person whose permit is revoked under this section may appeal the revocation decision to the commissioner. A person may seek judicial review of the decision of the commissioner under AS 44.62.560 - 44.62.570.

(d) A person whose permit is revoked may not apply for a permit until at least five years after the revocation.

Sec. 18.65.745. No liability for issuance of permit or for training.

(a) The state, and its officers and employees, are not liable by virtue of having issued a permit to carry a concealed handgun for damage or harm caused by the permittee.
(b) A person who provides firearm training to a person who receives a permit under AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 is not liable for damage or harm caused by the permittee.

ALASKA ADMINISTRATIVE CODE
TITLE 13. PUBLIC SAFETY
PART 1. DIVISION OF ALASKA STATE TROOPERS
CHAPTER 30. CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT

13 AAC 30.010. Issuance of New Permits; Replacement of a Permit

(a) Repealed 5/8/2002.

(b) A permit issued under AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 authorizes the permittee to carry a concealed handgun as provided by AS 11 and AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790.

(c) The department will replace a permit if the permittee appears in person at an office of the Alaska State Troopers to certify under oath, on a form provided by the department, that the permit has been lost, stolen, or destroyed and to provide the items required by AS 18.65.730 . Replacement of a permit under this subsection does not change the expiration date of that permit.

(d) The department will issue a permit to carry a concealed handgun to an honorably retired peace officer of this state who complies with the requirements of AS 18.65.700 (e) and

(1) repealed 5/8/2002;

(2) repealed 5/8/2002;

(3) provides the department with proof of

(A) handgun training as specified in 13 AAC 30.090(a) ; or

(B) handgun qualification as specified in 13 AAC 30.090(d) .

13 AAC 30.020. PERMIT RENEWALS.

13 AAC 30.040. FEES.

(a) Before processing an application for a permit, certificate, or other service under this chapter, the department will collect a nonrefundable fee as follows:

(1) new permit application fee .....$40 plus the fees required for fingerprint processing under 13 AAC 68.900, if applicable;

(2) permit renewal.....$25;

(3) permit replacement.....$25;

(2) Repealed 5/8/2002

(3) New permit application fee for an honorably retired peace officer $40

(b) The department will conduct a periodic review of the cost of administering the program under this chapter and may adjust the fees set out in (a) of this section after compliance with AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedures Act).

13 AAC 30.050. PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS; APPEALS.

(a) Repealed 5/08/2002

(b) An application for a

(1) new permit

(A) from a person who is not applying as an honorably retired peace officer under AS 18.65.700(e) is complete when the requirements of AS 18.65.700(a) and this chapter have been met.

(B) from a person who is applying as an honorably retired peace officer under AS 18.65.700 (e) is complete when the requirements of AS 18.65.700 (e), 13 AAC 30.085, and 13 AAC 30.090 have been met;

(2) replacement permit is complete when the requirements of 18.65.730 and 13 AAC 30.032 have been met.

(3) permit renewal is complete when the requirements of AS 18.65.725 have been met.

(3) Repealed 5/08/2002

(5) handgun course certificate of approval is complete when the requirements of 13 AAC 30.070 have been met.

(c) The office that received the application will promptly send it to the department's permits and licensing unit..

(d) The department's permits and licensing unit will request permit eligibility information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or another agency, that is necessary to make a determination concerning the application.

(e) Review of an application for a permit, certificate, or other service under this chapter will be discontinued if

(1) a fee check is returned by a financial institution as being without sufficient funds or is otherwise uncollectible;

(2) discrepancies or omissions are present in the application, or in documents submitted with the application, or the application or accompanying documents have not been completed correctly;

(3) fingerprints accompanying the application are not sufficiently readable for manual or computer use, or the information required to be submitted on fingerprint forms has not been completed correctly;

(4) the department determines that the application or a document submitted in connection with the application contains a false statement that the applicant does not believe to be true; or

(5) the department determines that the applicant is not otherwise qualified or entitled to obtain the permit, certificate, or other service requested.

(f) If review of an application is discontinued under (e) of this section, the department will mail to the applicant the department's written reasons for the discontinuance. The department will resume reviewing the application if, within 90 days after the date of he department's written notice that review has been discontinued, the applicant provides supplementary information to the department that resolves the reason for the discontinuance; and necessary supplementary information is described in 13 AAC 30.130(a) if the discontinuance is related to the criteria under AS 18.65.700 (a)(8). The department will reject the application if that information is not provided to the department within 90 days after the date of the department's written notice to the applicant that review has been discontinued.

(g) If after review of an application, the application is denied, the department will mail to the applicant a notice of denial containing written reasons for the denial. A person whose application has been denied may appeal to the commissioner for reversal of the decision. The appeal must be received in writing within 30 days after the date of the notice of denial, and must set out the reasons for the appeal. The decision of the commissioner or the commissioner's designee will be in writing and will be made within 45 days after receipt of the appeal.

(h) A person whose application has been rejected or denied under this section

(1) may not apply again for a period of five years if the rejection or denial was for the reason set out in (e)(4) of this section and the false statement related to a material matter;

(2) Repealed 5/08/2002

(i) The department shall issue a permit that states that the permit holder is "not nics exempt" if the permit holder's fingerprints have been rejected by the Federal Bureau of Investigation as not sufficiently readable for manual or computer use.

13 AAC 30.060. SUSPENSION AND REVOCATION OF PERMITS; APPEALS.

(a) If the department suspends a permit under AS 18.65.735, the department immediately will mail or deliver a notice of the suspension to the permittee. The permittee is required by AS 18.65.735 to immediately surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer.

(b) A suspension of a permit under (a) of this section remains in effect until the permit is revoked or the permittee provides proof satisfactory to the department that the reason for the suspension has been rectified.

(c) If the department revokes a permit under AS 18.65.740, the department immediately will mail or deliver a notice of the revocation to the permittee. The permittee is required by AS 18.65.740 to surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer.

(d) For purposes of revocation under AS 18.65.740, the date of conviction is the date sentence was imposed or imposition of sentence was suspended under AS 12.55.085 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction.

(e) If a peace officer believes that a permit is subject to suspension or revocation under AS 18.65.735 or 18.65.740, the officer shall immediately notify the department's permits and licensing unit of the identity and location of the permittee and the grounds for suspension or revocation.

(f) A permittee who becomes subject to suspension or revocation under (a) or (c) of this section shall immediately notify the department and surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer.

(g) If, under 13 AAC 30.130(b), the department has reason to believe that a permittee suffers from a physical infirmity that may prevent the safe handling of a handgun, the department will mail or deliver to the permittee a notice that the department intends to revoke the permittee's permit because of the physical infirmity. After mailing or delivery of the notice, the following procedures apply:

(1) the permittee may submit to the department, within 30 days after the date of the notice, a written report by a physician, optometrist, or other competent medical authority, who can lawfully practice in this state, that, as determined from an examination within the six months before the date of the notice, the permittee does not suffer from the physical infirmity;

(2) if the permittee demonstrates to the department that circumstances beyond the permittee's control prevent the submission of the report within the 30 days, the department will extend the deadline for 15 days;

(3) if the necessary report is not received by the department by the deadline in (1) or (2) of this subsection, whichever is applicable, the permit is automatically revoked and the department will so notify the permittee;

(4) if the permittee submits a report by the deadline set in (1) or (2) of this subsection, but the department determines that the report does not substantiate that the permittee does not suffer from the physical infirmity, the department will mail or deliver to the permittee a notice that the permittee, within 30 days after the date of the notice under this paragraph, may submit another report to meet the requirements of (1) of this subsection;

(5) if a second report is necessary under (4) of this subsection but is not received by the department by the deadline set by that paragraph, the permit is automatically revoked and the department will so notify the permittee;

(6) if a permit is revoked under this subsection, the permittee, upon receipt of the revocation notice under (3) or (5) of this subsection, shall immediately surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer;

(7) if the department timely receives a report that meets the requirements of this subsection, the department will notify the permittee that the permit is not revoked;

(8) a permittee whose permit is revoked under this subsection may appeal the revocation under the procedures in (j) of this section.

(h) If, under 13 AAC 30.130(b), the department has reason to believe that a permittee is not able to safely or competently handle a handgun, the department will mail or deliver to the permittee a notice that the department intends to revoke the permittee's permit. After mailing or delivery of the notice, the following procedures apply:

(1) the permittee may submit to the department, within 30 days after the date of the notice, a certificate of completion from an approved handgun course verifying that the permittee has, no earlier than six months before the date of the notice, taken and successfully completed the part of the handgun course described in 13 AAC 30.070(a)(1)(A)(iv);

(2) if the permittee demonstrates to the department that circumstances beyond the permittee's control prevent the submission of the certificate of completion within the 30 days, the department will extend the deadline for 15 days;

(3) if the certificate of completion required by (1) of this subsection is not received by the department by the deadline in (1) or (2) of this subsection, whichever is applicable, the permit is automatically revoked and the department will so notify the permittee;

(4) if a permit is revoked under this subsection, the permittee, upon receipt of the revocation notice under (3) of this subsection, shall immediately surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer;

(5) if the department timely receives the certificate of completion required by (1) of this subsection, the department will notify the permittee that the permit is not revoked;

(6) a permittee whose permit is revoked under this subsection may appeal the revocation under the procedures in (j) of this section.

(i) A peace officer who receives a surrendered permit shall immediately

(1) notify the department's permits and licensing unit, identifying the permittee who surrendered the permit, and the date, time, and location the permit was surrendered; and

(2) send the surrendered permit to the department's permits and licensing unit.

(j) A person who has surrendered a permit because it has been revoked under this section may appeal to the commissioner for reversal of the revocation. The appeal must be received in writing within 30 days after the date of the notice of revocation, and must set out the reasons for the appeal. The decision of the commissioner or the commissioner's designee will be in writing and will be made within 45 calendar days after receipt of the appeal.

(k) A person whose permit is revoked

(1) under AS 85.65.740 (a)(1) or (3) may not apply for a new permit under 13 AAC 30.010 sooner than five years following the date of the notice of revocation;

(2) under AS 18.65.740 (a)(2) may not apply for a new permit under 13 AAC 30.010 until the person qualifies under AS 18.65.705 (4).

(l) A permit that is revoked under (g) or (h) of this section may be reinstated if the former permittee provides proof to the department that the reason for revocation has been rectified and complies with the requirements of 13 AAC 30.020 if the person applies for renewal no later than the 31st day after the original permit would have expired had it not been revoked. If the former permittee does not meet the deadline in this subsection for reinstatement of the permit, the former permittee may apply for a new permit under 13 AAC 30.010, and must provide proof to the department that the reason for revocation has been rectified.

13 AAC 30.070. APPROVAL OF HANDGUN COURSES.

(a) A person who or organization that wishes to provide a handgun course for the purposes of AS 18.65.715 shall apply to the department, on a form provided by the department, for approval of the course. After processing and review under 13 AAC 30.050, the department will approve the course and will issue a certificate of approval if

(1) the application contains sufficient curriculum and course information to show that

(A) the curriculum includes at least 12 hours of training in the use of handguns that instructs the student in

(i) knowledge of Alaska law relating to firearms and the use of deadly force, including instruction in statutes, administrative regulations, and case law,

(ii) the basic concepts of the safe and responsible use of handguns;

(iii) knowledge of self-defense principles; and

(iv) the physical handling, mechanics, carrying, transporting, storage, loading, and unloading of handguns, including a test of competence of a handgun.

(B) the instruction in the subjects listed in (A)(ii) - (A)(iv) of this paragraph will be provided by an instructor for whom information has been submitted to the department as provided in (3) of this subsection;

(C) the instruction in the subjects listed in (A)(i) of this paragraph will be provided by an attorney licensed to practice law in this state, or by a person with a valid certification as a police officer issued by the Alaska Police Standards Council;

(2) the application contains information sufficient to substantiate that the course will ensure that

(A) a student who has successfully completed instruction in the subjects listed in (1)(A) of this subsection will be provided with a certificate showing the course title, printed name and signature of the primary training instructor, the student's printed name, the student's Alaska driver's license or identification card number, the name of the organization conducting the instruction, the date of successful completion of the instruction, and a statement that the student has demonstrated physical competence with a handgun as required by AS 18.65.715 ; and

(B) upon request, the department will be

(i) allowed access to course facilities during times of instruction;

(ii) allowed access at reasonable times to all records related to the applicant's handgun course;

(iii) provided with documentation to confirm the attendance and completion records of a student who applies for a permit;

(iv) provided with other information needed to assess the course's qualification for purposes of AS 18.65.715;

(3) the application is accompanied by the following for each course instructor described in (1)(B) of this subsection:

(A) complete instructor information on a form provided by the department, signed by the instructor and the person signing the application under this section, and containing the information specified in (b) of this section;

(B) two sets of fingerprints, obtained as specified in 13 AAC 30.100(b) , and the fee required by 13 AAC 68.900, unless two sets of the instructor's fingerprints have been submitted to the department, for purposes of this chapter, within the 12 months preceding the date of the application; and

(C) Repealed 5/08/2002

(b) A completed instructor information form required by (a)(3) of this section must

(1) show that the subject instructor is eligible to possess a firearm under the laws of this state and under federal law;

(2) state the subject instructor's Alaska driver's license number or identification card number; and

(3) have attached to it a copy of a certificate of training showing that

(A) the subject instructor has successfully completed a handgun instructor's training course recognized by the department under (d) of this section as providing adequate handgun instructor training; and

(B) the subject instructor's signed statement that the subject instructor remains current with the standards of that handgun instructor's training course.

(c) The instructor information form provided by the department and referred to in (a) and (b) of this section will contain the statement that a person signing the form

(1) understands that an investigation may be conducted regarding the information given on the form, including a search of computer records; and

(2) the person authorizes the investigation.

(d) The department will recognize a handgun instructor's training course as providing adequate handgun instruction training if the course provides students with instruction in

(1) how to instruct in the topics set out in (a)(1)(A) of this section;

(2) preparing a curriculum and course outline for a handgun training course;

(3) organizing and conducting a handgun training course;

(4) use of visual aids and techniques in student skill development; and

(5) proper testing techniques.

(e) An application for a certificate of approval for a handgun course must be signed by a person designated as the chief operating officer of the course. In addition to the penalty provided in AS 18.65.710(a)(6), a false statement made in an application, on a form, or in other information provided to the department under this section for the purposes of this chapter and AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 is punishable under AS 11.56.210.

(f) A person who or organization that has been issued a certificate of approval under this section shall notify the department's permits and licensing unit in writing if the person or organization is no longer providing instruction on an annual basis.

(g) As used in this section, "instruction" or "instructs" includes testing in the subject matter of the curriculum.

13 AAC 30.080. REVOCATION OF HANDGUN COURSE CERTIFICATE OF APPROVAL.

(a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, the department will immediately revoke a handgun course certificate of approval issued under 13 AAC 30.070, and will mail to the certificate holder a notice of the revocation, if the

(1) department has reason to believe that the handgun course no longer meets the requirements of 13 AAC 30.070(a) for approval of a handgun course; or

(2) certificate holder submitted an application under 13 AAC 30.070, or a document in connection with the application, that contained a

(A) false statement that the applicant does not believe to be true; or

(B) material misstatement or omission.

(b) If the department obtains information about an instructor of an approved handgun course that would result in denial of the handgun course's application for a certificate of approval if the application was being considered by the department, the department will immediately notify the chief operating officer of the handgun course that, in order to retain the course's certificate of approval, the instructor may not be allowed to continue providing instruction for purposes of AS 18.65.715. The course of instruction being provided by that instructor at the time of notice under this subsection will not satisfy the requirements of AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 and 13 AAC 30.010 – 13 AAC 30.900. If the department determines that the instructor is continuing to provide instruction for purposes of AS 18.65.715, the department will immediately revoke the handgun course's certificate of approval and will mail to the certificate holder a notice of revocation.

(c) The holder of a certificate of approval that is revoked under this section may appeal the revocation to the commissioner. The appeal must be received in writing within 30 days after the date of the notice of revocation, and must set out the reasons for the appeal. The decision of the commissioner or the commissioner's designee will be in writing and will be made within 45 calendar days after receipt of the appeal.

(d) The holder of a certificate of approval that is revoked under this section shall immediately surrender the certificate by sending it to the department's permits and licensing unit.

(e) A certificate of approval that is revoked under this section may be reinstated if the person or organization operating the handgun course (1) provides proof to the department that the reason for the revocation has been rectified; and (2) resubmits an application for a certificate of approval that meets the requirements of 13 AAC 30.070. However, a certificate of approval that was revoked for the reason set out in (a)(2) of this section may not be reinstated sooner than one year following the date of the notice of revocation under this section.

13 AAC 30.085. ESTABLISHING ELIGIBILITY AS AN HONORABLY RETIRED PEACE OFFICER. In order to establish eligibility as an "honorably retired peace officer of this state" for the purposes of AS 18.65.700(e), the applicant must provide

(1) evidence satisfactory to the department to show

(A) employment as a peace officer with a law enforcement agency in this state

(i) for two or more years before terminating as a peace officer; and

(ii) within the one year before application for a permit under this chapter; and

(B) the person did not terminate employment as a peace officer in lieu of firing, suspension, or other involuntary separation or employee discipline; and

(2) Repealed 5/08/2002

13 AAC 30.090. PROOF OF HANDGUN TRAINING.

(a) Proof of handgun training for purposes of obtaining a new permit is established by providing to the department, at the time of the application, a copy of a certificate of successful completion of an approved handgun course; the certificate must contain the information required by 13 AAC 30.070(a)(2)(A) and must show that a course described in 13 AAC 30.070(a) has been completed within the 12 months immediately before submitting the application.

(b) Repealed 12/9/98.

(c) Repealed 12/9/98.

(d) An honorably retired peace officer making application under AS 18.65.700(e) desiring to satisfy the handgun qualification requirements for a permit by demonstrating that the applicant has qualified with a handgun within five years of the peace officer's termination of employment from the law enforcement agency must submit a notarized copy of the applicant's record of the handgun qualification and a copy of the law enforcement agency's handgun qualification policy along with the applicant's completed application. The record of handgun qualification must indicate that the applicant's score met or exceeded the minimum passing standard under the handgun qualification policy. For purposes of this subsection, "handgun qualification policy" means the standards by which a person qualified to carry a handgun as part of the person's official duties as a peace officer for the law enforcement agency.

13 AAC 30.100. PHOTOGRAPHS AND FINGERPRINTS.

(a) A photograph submitted under AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 and this chapter must be one frontal views that include the head and shoulders, must be taken within the 30 days before submission, and must be of a size, color, and condition that will allow the photographs to be processed in the department's identification production equipment. Applications and other forms provided by the department under this chapter will contain detailed specifications for photographs, necessary for processing.

(b) Fingerprints submitted under AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 and this chapter must be taken within the 90 days before submission on forms approved by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and in accordance with instructions on those forms. If the fingerprints submitted by an applicant are not sufficiently readable, the applicant must obtain another set at the applicant's expense. Fingerprints may be taken by (1) a law enforcement agency or state correctional facility; or (2) a person, not affiliated with a law enforcement agency or state correctional facility, who holds a current commission as a notary public in Alaska and who has received the department's written approval to take fingerprints. A list of persons or agencies approved to take fingerprints will be made available to the public.

(c) Repealed 5/08/2002.

13 AAC 30.110. NOTIFICATION OF PLACES WHERE CONCEALED HANDGUNS MAY NOT BE CARRIED.

(a) Repealed 5/08/2002

(b) Nothing in this chapter or AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 precludes a person from posting, to the extent allowed by law, a notice regarding the carrying of a concealed handgun.

13 AAC 30.120.FORM OF PERMITS. A permit will

(1) display a color photograph of the permittee;

(2) show the permittee's name, city and state of residence, date of birth, and physical description including height, weight, race, hair color, and eye color;

(3) show the expiration date of the permit; and

(4) repealed 5/8/2002.

13 AAC 30.130. QUALIFICATIONS REGARDING SAFE HANDLING OF A HANDGUN.

(a) The department, under 13 AAC 30.050, will discontinue review of an application for a permit, permit upgrade, or permit renewal, if the department has reason to believe that the applicant suffers from a physical infirmity that may prevent the safe handling of a handgun. The department will request from the applicant, as supplementary information under 13 AAC 30.050(f), a written report by a physician, optometrist, or other competent medical authority, who can lawfully practice in this state, that, the applicant does not currently suffer from a physical infirmity that prevents the safe handling of a handgun.

(b) The department will notify a permittee that it intends to revoke a permit under 13 AAC 30.060(g) or (h) if, after investigation of a report from a criminal justice agency, physician or other medical provider, or member of the general public relating to the handling of a handgun by, or the physical condition of, a permittee, the department has reason to believe that a permittee

(1) suffers from a physical infirmity that may prevent the safe handling of a handgun, the department will use the procedures set out in 13 AAC 30.060(g) to revoke the permit;

(2) is not able to safely or competently handle a handgun, the department will use the procedures set out in 13 AAC 30.060(h) to revoke the permit.

(c) The department will not investigate a report relating to the handling of a handgun by, or the physical condition of, a permittee unless the report

(1) is in writing;

(2) is signed; and

(3) provides specific information pertaining to the permittee's physical condition, or handling of a handgun.

13 AAC 30.140. APPLICATION FORMS.

(a) The department will provide application forms for persons to use in applying for a permit, certificate of approval, or other service under this chapter. An application form submitted under this chapter, and any document accompanying an application form, must be completed in ink.

(b) Along with an application form, the department will provide to an applicant for a permit

(1) a copy of the definitions of the following terms, as set out in 13 AAC 30.900:

(A) alcohol treatment program;

(B) convicted;

(C) felony;

(D) resident; and

(E) substance abuse treatment program.

(2) a concise summary of where, when, and by whom a handgun can be carried under state and federal law; and

(3) written notice that, for purposes of AS 18.65.705(4) and (5), the date of conviction is the date sentence was imposed or imposition of sentence was suspended under AS 12.55.085 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction.

13 AAC 30.150. RECIPROCITY.

ALASKA CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT INFORMATION

The department will post, on its official Internet website, the status of reciprocity with another state or a political subdivision of another state. The department will distribute a list of those jurisdictions with reciprocity to a person who makes a request.

ALASKA CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT INFORMATION

Selected Alaska Statutes regarding misconduct involving weapons.

Sec. 11.61.190. Misconduct involving weapons in the first degree.

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree if the person
(1) uses or attempts to use a firearm during the commission of an offense under AS 11.71.010 - 11.71.040; or
(2) discharges a firearm from a propelled vehicle while the vehicle is being operated and under circumstances manifesting substantial and unjustifiable risk of physical injury to a person or damage to property.

(b) Misconduct involving weapons in the first degree is a class A felony.

Sec. 11.61.195. Misconduct involving weapons in the second degree.

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the second degree if the person knowingly
(1) possesses a firearm during the commission of an offense under AS 11.71.010 - 11.71.040;
(2) violates AS 11.61.200 (a)(1) and is within the grounds of or on a parking lot immediately adjacent to
(A) a public or private preschool, elementary, junior high, or secondary school without the permission of the chief administrative officer of the school or district or the designee of the chief administrative officer; or
(B) an entity, other than a private residence, licensed as a child care facility under AS 47.32 or recognized by the federal government for the care of children; or
(3) discharges a firearm at or in the direction of
(A) a building with reckless disregard for a risk of physical injury to a person; or
(B) a dwelling.

(b) Misconduct involving weapons in the second degree is a class B felony.

Sec. 11.61.200. Misconduct involving weapons in the third degree.

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person
(1) knowingly possesses a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;
(2) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person to a person who has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;
(3) manufactures, possesses, transports, sells, or transfers a prohibited weapon;
(4) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm to another whose physical or mental condition is substantially impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into that other person's body;
(5) removes, covers, alters, or destroys the manufacturer's serial number on a firearm with intent to render the firearm untraceable;
(6) possesses a firearm on which the manufacturer's serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed, knowing that the serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed with the intent of rendering the firearm untraceable;
(7) violates AS 11.46.320 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a firearm when the person's physical or mental condition is impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into the person's body;
(8) violates AS 11.46.320 or 11.46.330 by entering or remaining unlawfully on premises or in a propelled vehicle in violation of a provision of an order issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 - 18.66.180 or issued under former AS 25.35.010 (b) or 25.35.020 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;
(9) communicates in person with another in violation of AS 11.56.740 and, during the communication, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;
(10) resides in a dwelling knowing that there is a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person or a prohibited weapon in the dwelling if the person has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory, unless the person has written authorization to live in a dwelling in which there is a concealable weapon described in this paragraph from a court of competent jurisdiction or from the head of the law enforcement agency of the community in which the dwelling is located;

(11) discharges a firearm from a propelled vehicle while the vehicle is being operated in circumstances other than described in AS 11.61.190(a)(2); or
(12) knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

(b) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution
(1) under (a)(1) of this section that
(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(1) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory;
(2) under (a)(2) or (10) of this section that
(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense and the date of the violation of (a)(2) or (10) of this section, and the prior conviction did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory.

(c) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(3) of this section that the manufacture, possession, transportation, sale, or transfer of the prohibited weapon was in accordance with registration under 26 U.S.C. 5801-5872 (National Firearms Act).

(d) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(11) of this section that the person was using a firearm while hunting, trapping, or fishing in a manner not prohibited by statute or regulation.

(e) The provisions of (a)(3) and (11) of this section do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.

(f) For purposes of (a)(12) of this section, a firearm on a person is concealed if it is covered or enclosed in any manner so that an observer cannot determine that it is a firearm without removing it from that which covers or encloses it or without opening, lifting, or removing that which covers or encloses it. A firearm on a person is not concealed if it is unloaded and is encased in a closed container designed for transporting firearms.

(g) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that
(1) either
(A) the defendant convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(12) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory; and
(2) at the time of possession, the defendant was
(A) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or

(B) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

(h) As used in this section,

(1) "prohibited weapon" means any

(A) explosive, incendiary, or noxious gas

(i) mine or device that is designed, made, or adapted for the purpose of inflicting serious physical injury or death;

(ii) rocket, other than an emergency flare, having a propellant charge of more than four ounces;

(iii) bomb; or

(iv) grenade;

(B) device designed, made, or adapted to muffle the report of a firearm;

(C) firearm that is capable of shooting more than one shot automatically, without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger; or

(D) rifle with a barrel length of less than 16 inches, shotgun with a barrel length of less than 18 inches, or firearm made from a rifle or shotgun which, as modified, has an overall length of less than 26 inches;

(2) "unconditional discharge" has the meaning ascribed to it in AS 12.55.185.

(i) Misconduct involving weapons in the third degree is a class C felony.

Sec. 11.61.210. Misconduct involving weapons in the fourth degree.

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the fourth degree if the person

(1) possesses on the person, or in the interior of a vehicle in which the person is present, a firearm when the person's physical or mental condition is impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or a controlled substance into the person's body in circumstances other than described in AS 11.61.200 (a)(7);

(2) discharges a firearm from, on, or across a highway;

(3) discharges a firearm with reckless disregard for a risk of damage to property or a risk of physical injury to a person under circumstances other than those described in AS 11.61.195 (a)(3)(A);

(4) manufactures, possesses, transports, sells, or transfers metal knuckles;

(5) manufactures, sells, or transfers a switchblade or a gravity knife;

(6) knowingly sells a firearm or a defensive weapon to a person under 18 years of age;

(7) other than a preschool, elementary, junior high, or secondary school student, knowingly possesses a deadly weapon or a defensive weapon, without the permission of the chief administrative officer of the school or district or the designee of the chief administrative officer, within the buildings of, on the grounds of, or on the school parking lot of a public or private preschool, elementary, junior high, or secondary school, on a school bus while being transported to or from school or a school-sponsored event, or while participating in a school-sponsored event, except that a person 21 years of age or older may possess

(A) a deadly weapon, other than a loaded firearm, in the trunk of a motor vehicle or encased in a closed container in a motor vehicle;

(B) a defensive weapon;

(C) an unloaded firearm if the person is traversing school premises in a rural area for the purpose of entering public or private land that is open to hunting and the school board with jurisdiction over the school premises has elected to have this exemption apply to the school premises; in this subparagraph, "rural" means a community with a population of 5,500 or less that is not connected by road or rail to Anchorage or Fairbanks or with a population of 1,500 or less that is connected by road or rail to Anchorage or Fairbanks; or

(8) being a preschool, elementary, junior high, or secondary school student, knowingly possesses a deadly weapon or a defensive weapon, within the buildings of, on the grounds of, or on the school parking lot of a public or private preschool, elementary, junior high, or secondary school, on a school bus while being transported to or from school or a school-sponsored event, or while participating in a school-sponsored event, except that a student may possess a deadly weapon, other than a firearm as defined under 18 U.S.C. 921, or a defensive weapon if the student has obtained the prior permission of the chief administrative officer of the school or district or the designee of the chief administrative officer for the possession.

(c) The provisions of (a)(7) of this section do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.

(d) Misconduct involving weapons in the fourth degree is a class A misdemeanor.

Sec. 11.61.215. Intoxication as applicable to possession of a firearm. [Repealed, Sec. 11 ch 59 SLA 1991]. Repealed or Renumbered

Sec. 11.61.220. Misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree.

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree if the person

(1) is 21 years of age or older and knowingly possesses a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocket knife or a defensive weapon,

(A) that is concealed on the person, and, when contacted by a peace officer, the person fails to

(i) immediately inform the peace officer of that possession; or

(ii) allow the peace officer to secure the deadly weapon, or fails to secure the weapon at the direction of the peace officer, during the duration of the contact;

(B) that is concealed on the person within the residence of another person unless the person has first obtained the express permission of an adult residing there to bring a concealed deadly weapon within the residence;

(2) knowingly possesses a loaded firearm on the person in any place where intoxicating liquor is sold for consumption on the premises;

(3) being an unemancipated minor under 16 years of age, possesses a firearm without the consent of a parent or guardian of the minor;

(4) knowingly possesses a firearm

(A) within the grounds of or on a parking lot immediately adjacent to an entity, other than a private residence, licensed as a child care facility under AS 47.32 or recognized by the federal government for the care of children, except that a person 21 years of age or older may possess an unloaded firearm in the trunk of a motor vehicle or encased in a closed container of a motor vehicle;

(B) within a

(i) courtroom or office of the Alaska Court System; or

(ii) courthouse that is occupied only by the Alaska Court System and other justice-related agencies; or

(C) within a domestic violence or sexual assault shelter that receives funding from the state;

(5) possesses or transports a switchblade or a gravity knife; or

(6) is less than 21 years of age and knowingly possesses a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocket knife or a defensive weapon, that is concealed on the person.

(b) In a prosecution under (a)(6) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that the defendant, at the time of possession, was

(1) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or

(2) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

(c) The provisions of (a)(2) and (4) of this section do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.

(d) In a prosecution under (a)(2) of this section, it is

(1) an affirmative defense that

(A) [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 62 SLA 2003].
(B) the loaded firearm was a concealed handgun as defined in AS 18.65.790; and
(C) the possession occurred at a place designated as a restaurant for the purposes of AS 04.16.049 and the defendant did not consume intoxicating liquor at the place;

(2) a defense that the defendant, at the time of possession, was on business premises
(A) owned by or leased by the defendant; or
(B) in the course of the defendant's employment for the owner or lessee of those premises.

(e) For purposes of this section, a deadly weapon on a person is concealed if it is covered or enclosed in any manner so that an observer cannot determine that it is a weapon without removing it from that which covers or encloses it or without opening, lifting, or removing that which covers or encloses it; a deadly weapon on a person is not concealed if it is an unloaded firearm encased in a closed container designed for transporting firearms.

(f) For purposes of (a)(2) and (e) of this section, a firearm is loaded if the
(1) firing chamber, magazine, clip, or cylinder of the firearm contains a cartridge; and
(2) chamber, magazine, clip, or cylinder is installed in or on the firearm.

(g) Misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree is a class B misdemeanor.

(h) The provisions of (a)(1) and (6) of this section do not apply to a
(1) peace officer of this state or a municipality of this state acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment;
(2) peace officer employed by another state or a political subdivision of another state who, at the time of the possession, is
(A) certified as a peace officer by the other state; and
(B) acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment; or
(3) police officer of this state or a police officer or chief administrative officer of a municipality of this state; in this paragraph, "police officer" and "chief administrative officer" have the meanings given in AS 18.65.290 .

(i) In a prosecution
(1) under (a)(4)(B) of this section, it is a defense that the defendant, at the time of possession, was authorized to possess the firearm under a rule of court;
(2) under (a)(4)(C) of this section, it is a defense that the defendant, at the time of possession, was authorized in writing by the administrator of the shelter to possess the firearm.

(j) In (a)(1) of this section, "contacted by a peace officer" means stopped, detained, questioned, or addressed in person by the peace officer for an official purpose.

GENERAL INFORMATION - Retain for your files

1. ALASKA CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT
   By submitting an application for a concealed handgun permit, you acknowledge you have read and understand the laws and regulations relating to carrying a concealed handgun (Alaska Statutes (AS 18.65.700 – AS 18.65.790) and Administrative Regulations (13 AAC 30.010 – 13 AAC 30.900).

2. ADDRESS, RESIDENCE, AND TELEPHONE INFORMATION
   The permit holder must be a resident of Alaska for the 90 days immediately preceding submittal of your application. You are required to list a residence address on the application and fingerprint card and may not use a post office box, mail drop, or lot and block number. Your residence address is your street number and name, apartment number, city, and zip code. In outlying areas, provide a brief description of your physical address, e.g., Village Road, fourth house on the left next to boat ramp.
   Reminder: AS 18.65.765(a)(1) states the holder of a permit shall notify the department of a change in the permit holder's address within 30 days.

   Telephone number - If there is a correctable problem on your application, we can save processing time if you list a daytime telephone number.

3. DEFINITION OF "CONVICTION"
   13 AAC 30.900(6) defines "conviction" as it applies to qualifications that must be met for an individual to possess a Concealed Handgun Permit. It states:
   "(6)"convicted" or "conviction" means that a person has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to, or has been found guilty by a court or jury of, a criminal offense, regardless of whether the judgment was after that set aside under AS 12.55.085 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, or was the subject of a pardon or other executive clemency, but does not include a judgment that has been reversed or vacated by a court as a result of motion, appellate action, petition for writ of habeas corpus, or application for post-conviction relief under Rule 35.1 of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction."

4. FEES
   Submit the $94.25 non-refundable application fee with your application. You may pay the fee with a personal check, cashier's check, or money order payable to State of Alaska.

5. TRAINING DOCUMENTATION
   Submit a copy of a certificate showing successful completion of a handgun course approved by the department and completed within the previous 12 months. The certificate will not be returned. A list of approved handgun courses is available from the Permits and Licensing Unit at the address listed on the cover page.

6. FINGERPRINTS
   Submit one set of fingerprints of acceptable technical quality. Fingerprints submitted must be rolled by a person or agency approved by the department, or by a law enforcement agency or state correctional facility at the discretion of the agency or facility. A list of fingerprint technicians or agencies approved by the department is available on the ACHP web-site. See the Concealed Handgun Permit Fingerprint Card Instructions in this packet for specific information.

7. PHOTOGRAPH
   Include one quality color photograph taken within the 30 days preceding the date you apply for your permit. See the Photograph Instructions and Specifications in this packet for size restrictions and specific information.

8. APPLICATION PROCESS
   You must apply in person for a concealed handgun permit (AS 18.65.700(a)(1)). Review your application, fingerprint card, and photograph before you submit them. Failure to submit a properly completed application and attachments will result in a delay in processing your application. Take your completed application, photograph, fingerprints, copy of training certificate, and the $94.25 fee to an office of the Alaska State Troopers, Fish and Wildlife Protection, or a municipal police department authorized to accept Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit applications.

   If you want the receipt information completed on your copy, make a copy of the application before you submit it and take the copy with you when you submit your application.

   Your application will be processed when the Permits and Licensing Unit in Anchorage receives your application, the $94.25 fee, photograph, and all required documents.

9. TERM OF NEW PERMIT
   New permits issued under 13 AAC 30.010 expire five years following issuance of the permit.

CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT FINGERPRINT CARD INSTRUCTIONS

Submit one standard 8"x 8" FBI APPLICANT FINGERPRINT CARD with your application. Fingerprints submitted must be taken by a person or agency approved by the department, or by a law enforcement agency or state correctional facility (at the discretion of the agency or facility). Fingerprint cards are available from department approved fingerprint technicians or agencies. A list of approved fingerprint technicians or agencies may be obtained from any office of the Alaska State Troopers. There may be a charge by fingerprint agencies or technicians for fingerprinting services.

- Complete the top of the fingerprint card before submitting the application.
- Do not sign the fingerprint card before your fingerprints are taken.
- Type or clearly print all required information on the fingerprint cards using BLACK INK (cards submitted using any other color of ink will be rejected).
- Wash and thoroughly dry your fingers before fingerprinting.
- Do not fill out the blocks titled:
  YOUR NO. OCA
  ARMED FORCES NO. MNU
  FBI NO. FBI
  REASON FINGERPRINTED (Completed by Permits and Licensing Unit personnel)
  MISCELLANEOUS NO. MNU (Completed by Permits and Licensing Unit personnel)
- Name block. The format is last name followed by a comma (,) first and middle name. Suffix denoting seniority, i.e., Jr., Sr., III, etc., follows the middle or first name.
- Employer and address block. Write the name and address of the fingerprint technician or agency taking the fingerprints.
- Aliases (AKA) block. List other names used that are different than the name entered in the NAME block, including maiden and previous married names of females.
- Citizenship block. Enter "US" if a citizen of the United States; otherwise, enter correct country or country abbreviation.
- DATE OF BIRTH DOB, PLACE OF BIRTH POB, SEX, RACE, HGT (height), WGT (weight), EYES, and HAIR blocks must be completed.
- Place of birth block. List the city and state, territorial possession, province (Canadian), or country of birth. Use the correct abbreviation for foreign countries or correctly spell the country name. Do not list a county as a place of birth.
- Race block. Use the following codes:
  A (Asian, Pacific Islander, Chinese, Japanese, Polynesian, Korean, Vietnamese, Philippino, Samoan)
  B (Black)
  I (American Indian, Alaska Native, Eskimo)
  W Do not use the letter "C" (White, Mexican, Latin, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central/South American, other Spanish cultures)
- Height block. Use feet and inches, not total inches. Example: 5'7" is entered 507. Do not use fractions of an inch.
- Eyes/Hair blocks – Choose only one color to describe color of eyes and hair using the appropriate three letter code from the following list:

EYE COLOR	CODE	HAIR COLOR	CODE
Black	BLK	Bald	BAL
Blue	BLU	Black	BLK
Brown	BRO	Blonde	BLN
Gray	GRY	Brown	BRO
Green	GRN	Gray	GRY
Hazel	HAZ	Red or Auburn	RED
Maroon	MAR	Sandy	SDY
Pink	PNK	White	WHI

  Use Bald (BAL) when a person has lost most of the hair on top of the person's head.
  Use Gray (GRY) when most of the person's hair is gray.
- Social Security No. block is for your social security number. You do not have to provide your social security number.

Do not fold or damage the fingerprint card. Fingerprint cards cannot be processed if they are folded, creased, or damaged. Fingerprint cards that are rejected may require resubmission, and may require a reexamination fee.

IMPORTANT NOTE: Failure to submit a fingerprint card as specified will delay processing

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

RENEWAL

of a

CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT

This packet contains:

- General information and instructions
- Application for renewal of a concealed handgun permit
- Photograph specifications and instructions

Direct inquiries to:

Department of Public Safety, Division of Statewide Services
Permits and Licensing Unit
5700 East Tudor Road, Anchorage, Alaska 99507
Telephone (907) 269-0392
http://www.dps.state.ak.us/PermitsLicensing/achp/

Special Notice:

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has informed the Department of Public Safety that effective June 1, 2006, they will no longer complete National Instant Check System (NICS) checks subsequent to the processing of fingerprint cards for the purposes of obtaining an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit (ACHP).

This means that Concealed Handgun Permits issued after June 1, 2006 will contain the notation "NOT NICS EXEMPT", and a permit holder will be required to undergo a NICS background check at the time of any firearm purchase.

Permits issued prior to June 1, 2006 and indicating "NICS EXEMPT" may still be used in lieu of the permit holder undergoing a NICS check at the time of a firearm purchase, for the life of the permit.

We have requested that the FBI reconsider this decision; should they do so, we will once again be able to issue "NICS EXEMPT" Alaska Concealed Handgun Permits.

The Department of Public Safety will not accept the submission of fingerprints for ACHP renewals after June 1, 2006. However, state law still requires a fingerprint based background check prior to the issuance of a new concealed handgun permit.

1. ALASKA CONCEALED HANDGUN PERMIT RENEWAL
   You may not apply to renew your concealed handgun permit sooner than 90 days before the expiration of your permit. By submitting a renewal application for your concealed handgun permit, you acknowledge you have read and understand the laws and regulations relating to carrying a concealed handgun (Alaska Statutes (AS 18.65.700 -- AS 18.65.790) and Alaska Administrative Regulations (13 AAC 30.010 -- 13 AAC 30.900)).

2. ADDRESS, RESIDENCE, AND TELEPHONE INFORMATION
   The permit holder must be a resident of Alaska. You are required to list a residence address on the application and may not use a post office box, mail drop, or lot and block number. Your residence address is your street number and name, apartment number, city, and zip code. In outlying areas, provide a brief description of your physical address, e.g., Village Road, fourth house on the left next to boat ramp. Reminder: AS 18.65.765(a)(1) states the holder of a permit shall notify the department of a change in the permit holder's address within 30 days.

   Telephone number - If there is a correctable problem on your application, we can save processing time if you list a daytime telephone number.

3. DEFINITION OF "CONVICTION"
   13 AAC 30.900(6) defines "conviction" as it applies to qualifications that must be met for an individual to possess a Concealed Handgun Permit. It states: "(6) "convicted" or "conviction" means that a person has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to, or has been found guilty by a court or jury of, a criminal offense, regardless of whether the judgment was after that set aside under AS 12.55.085 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, or was the subject of a pardon or other executive clemency, but does not include a judgment that has been reversed or vacated by a court as a result of motion, appellate action, petition for writ of habeas corpus, or application for post-conviction relief under Rule 35.1 of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction."

4. FEES
   Submit the $25 non-refundable renewal fee with your application. A permit submitted on or after the expiration date will be assessed a $25 late fee. You may pay the fee with a personal check, cashier's check, or money order payable to State of Alaska. DO NOT SEND CASH THROUGH THE MAIL.

5. PERMITS EXPIRED MORE THAN 60 DAYS
   The department will not accept a renewal for a permit submitted more than 60 days after the expiration date of the permit. Nothing prohibits the holder of an expired permit from applying for a new permit.

6. RE-CERTIFICATION TRAINING is not required to renew your concealed handgun permit.

7. FINGERPRINTS are not required to renew your concealed handgun permit.

8. PHOTOGRAPH
   Include one quality color photograph taken within the 30 days preceding the date you apply for renewal. See the Photograph Instructions and Specifications in this packet for specific information.

9. RENEWAL PROCESS - Review your application and photograph before you submit them. Failure to submit a properly completed application and attachments will result in a delay in processing your renewal.

   Apply to renew your concealed handgun permit by mail. You are not required to apply in person.
   (a) Mail application to the Permits and Licensing Unit, 5700 East Tudor Road, Anchorage, Alaska 99507, postmarked not more than 90 days before or 60 days after your concealed handgun permit expires (renewal applications postmarked on or after the permit expiration date are subject to a $25 late fee);
   (b) If you want to receive a copy of the receipt information, make a copy of the application and include it and a self addressed stamped envelope; and
   (c) Include your completed renewal application, photograph, $25 renewal fee, and $25 late fee (if applicable).

   You may apply in person only if you cannot mail your renewal application to the Permits and Licensing Unit.
   (a) If you want the receipt information completed on your copy, make a copy of the application before you submit it and take the copy with you; and
   (b) Take your completed renewal application, photograph, and fee(s) to an office of the Alaska State Troopers.

10. TERM OF RENEWAL PERMIT - Permits renewed under AS 18.65.725 are valid for five years.

PHOTOGRAPH INSTRUCTIONS AND SPECIFICATIONS

INSTRUCTIONS:

1. Take photograph within 30 days of the date of the application.
2. Print applicant's name, date photograph was taken, and Alaska Driver's License or Identification Card number on the back of the photograph.

My name is Joe Nava. I have taught thousands of people the AK State Concealed Carry Course.
I believe the change to an expiration date that coincides with a birthday is a step in the right direction.
The bill has my support. I cannot get to the public hearing.

Jeanne,
I support the bill changing the expiration date on the conceal carry to a person's birth date, like with our driver's licenses. Unfortunately, I am not available for the call in.

I also write extensively on the Constitution of the U.S particularly The 2nd amendment

In Regard to the Concealed weapon Regulations may I point out in AK you do not need a permit However A concealed Carry permit Requires one to take an instructional course with diploma and Shoot For Record

We Your Supplicants have done this But Because of excusable Neglect, inadvertancy, and not Knowing of The time limit on the permit, — we Lost our permits

We ask you To Allow former permit Holders to Re-establish our permit By application and perhaps a Resonable Renewal Fee — However we have already passed the educational Requirements and have Shot For Record. Thank you.

The Honorable Jay Ramras, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol, Room 120
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Representative Ramras:

I respectfully request a hearing by the House Judiciary Committee of House Bill 213, "An Act relating to contributions, interest, penalties, and payments under the Alaska Employment Security and providing for an effective date".

This legislation is very important as it puts the state in federal compliance with the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. Alaska law must comply with the FUTA as a condition of being certified for receiving administrative grants totaling approximately $20 million and for employers in the state to continue to receive their federal tax credit under 26 U.S. C. 3302. If Alaska was decertified, Alaska employers would lose approximately $111 million in annual federal tax credit.

Alaska is a part of a nationwide Unemployment Insurance (UI) system and our state has agreed to operate our program in conformity with the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA). AS 23.20.080 stipulates that Alaska will cooperate and comply with federal law (26 U.S.C. 3304) and regulations for the administration of the UI Program. In order to be in compliance with FUTA, we must now cover services performed by employees of tribal entities and must give federally recognized tribes the choice to become reimbursable employers for the payment of UI taxes.

Thank you for your consideration of this important matter. Please contact me or my Legislation Liaison, Paula Scavera at 465-2700 if you would like to discuss this further.

Sincerely,

Clark Bishop

Federal Unemployment Tax Act-Federally Recognized Tribes
HB 213
April 1, 2009

Section 1: Provides legislative findings and intent for Alaska's compliance with the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2001 (P.L. 106-544) and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

Section 2: Amends AS 23.20.277(b) to include federally recognized tribes in the way reimbursable employers are billed and how payments are made.

Section 3: Amends AS 23.20.277(e) to include federally recognized tribes in the provisions for determining liability as a reimbursing employer.

Section 4: Amends AS 23.20.277(f) to include federally recognized tribes in the provisions for determining when payments are due.

Section 5: Amends AS 23.20.277(g) to include federally recognized tribes in the provisions that prohibit reimbursing employers from making unemployment insurance deductions from employee wages.

Section 6: Amends AS 23.20.277(h) to improve the form and substance of the law. The term "organization" was changed to "employer".

Section 7: Amends AS 23.20.277(j) to include federally recognized tribes that elect the reimbursable method of payment in the bonding and security provisions provided under current law.

Section 8: Amends AS 23.20.277 (k) to provide the department with authority to terminate an employer's election to make payments in place of contributions if an employer is delinquent in making payments.

Section 9: Amends AS 23.20.277(l) to require that federally recognized tribes are liable for the full amount of regular benefits plus the full amount of extended benefits.

Section 10: Adds a new section AS 23.20.277(m) that prohibits the department from approving an election to be a reimbursable employer if, at the time of the election, the employer is delinquent in making payments.

Sections 11: Amends AS 23.20.278 to include federally recognized tribes in the way unemployment insurance benefits are financed.

Section 12: Amends AS 23.20.381(j) to include federally recognized tribes that operate an educational institution in the definition of an "educational service agency".

Section 13: Amends AS 23.20.520(10) to include federally recognized tribes in the definition of an "employing unit".

Section 14: Amends AS 23.20.520(14) to include institutions that are operated by a federally recognized tribe in the definition of an "institution of higher education".

Section 15: Adds new section AS 23.20.520(22) to provide a definition of "federally recognized tribe" that conforms with 25 U.S.C. 479a (Federally Recognized Tribe List Act of 1994) and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

Section 16: Amends AS 23.20.525(a)(14) to include services performed for federally recognized tribe in the definition of "employment".

Section 17: Amends AS 23.20.526(d)(3) to exclude services performed as part of an unemployment work-relief or work-training program assisted or financed by a federally recognized tribe . Adds a new section AS 23.20.526 (d)(10) to provide an exclusion for service performed by an individual in the exercise of duties as an officer of a federally recognized tribe.

Section 18: Permits the Revisor to change the title of AS 23.20.277.

Section 19: Provides an immediate effective date clause.

Dear Commissioner Bishop:

By letter dated February 12, 2008, Atkinson to Bishop, we advised you of the need for the State of Alaska to enact conforming legislation arising from the passage of the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2001. This legislation amended the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) to change the treatment of services performed for federally recognized "Indian tribes." We have enclosed a copy of this letter which provides a complete discussion of the issues and remedy.

On February 26, 2008, you wrote to inform us of your agency's desire to be in full compliance with Federal law and regulation, and that you would work diligently to resolve the issue. Now that Alaska's state legislature is in session, we are writing to advise this continues to be an issue and to encourage you to pursue conforming legislation.

As our earlier letter informed, failure to enact the necessary legislation could, after an opportunity for a hearing and appeal, result in the loss of the full FUTA credit (5.4%) for all employers in the state, as well as the loss of Federal UC administrative grants. Therefore it is extremely important to pass this conforming legislation as soon as possible.

Please inform us of your specific plans to obtain legislation to ensure that Alaska's law conforms to the requirements of Federal UC law. If you have any questions concerning this issue, please contact your Regional Office's UI legislation specialist, Pat O'Neal, at 415-625-7926 or oneal.pat@dol.gov.

Sincerely,

Richard C. Trigg

Dear Ms. Atkinson:

I am in receipt of your letter dated February 12, 2008 and would like to take this opportunity to thank you for bringing to my attention the matter regarding unemployment compensation services for Alaska's Native entities.

Alaska's legislative session is limited to 90 days, January 15 through April 13, 2008. Since the deadline for personal legislation for the current session has passed, the Department will be pursuing the required statutory changes during the 2009 legislative session.

I would like to point out that Alaska is currently meeting some of the federal requirements.

- Alaska has always required that services performed for tribal entities be covered for unemployment insurance purposes
- Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development currently reports tribal delinquencies to the Internal Revenue Service on a quarterly basis.
- Alaska has not paid any extended benefits since 2005, and will work to ensure tribal entities are billed 100 percent of any future extended benefits.

Alaska law currently does not give tribes the option of choosing the reimbursable method of payment as our law limits the option to specific non-profit and government entities. The Department suspects, as was the case in 2002, tribal entities currently reporting may actually pay less in contributions than would be billed for reimbursement. The economic incentives will likely argue powerfully for tribes to remain as taxable employers.

It is the State of Alaska's desire to be in full compliance with Federal law and regulation, and we will work diligently to resolve this issue. If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

David A. Stone for:

Mr. Click Bishop
Commissioner
Alaska Department of Labor & Workforce Development
P.O. Box 21149
Juneau, AK 99802-1149

Dear Commissioner Bishop:

I am writing to remind you of the need for Alaska to amend its state unemployment compensation (UC) law to provide that services for Alaska's Native entities are covered under your state law and that these entities are offered the reimbursement option. A more detailed description of the issue follows.

The Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2001 (CAA, Public Law 106-544) amended the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) to change the treatment of services performed for federally recognized "Indian tribes." For purposes of these amendments, "any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in or established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act . . . ." is included in the definition of "Indian Tribe." (See Section 3306(u), FUTA, as amended, which refers to the definition of "Indian tribe" in Section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act.)

For purposes of your state's UC laws, these amendments mean that:

- Services performed in the employ of Alaska Native entities are, with specified exceptions, required to be covered under state UC laws; and
- Alaska Native entities must be offered the opportunity to reimburse the state unemployment fund for UC attributable under state law to such services in lieu of making contributions.

I also note that, although no change was required to state law, these amendments also resulted in states no longer being eligible for the Federal share of extended benefit payments based on services performed in the employ of Alaskan Native entities.

A complete explanation of these Federal law amendments is found in Unemployment Insurance Program Letter No. 14-01, (69 Fed. Reg. 16965, March 31, 2004.) In brief, Section 3304(a)(6)(A), FUTA, requires, as a condition for employers in a state to receive credit against the Federal unemployment tax, that state law provide that UC be payable on the basis of certain services. These services are described in Section 3309(a)(1), FUTA, which in turn references Section 3306(c)(7), FUTA, which now includes services performed for federally recognized Indian tribes, including Alaska Native entities. Thus, UC must be payable based on these services.

Regarding reimbursements, Section 3304(a)(6)(B), FUTA, requires that state law provide for funding the benefit costs of UC based on these services through "payments (in lieu of contributions)," commonly called "reimbursements." As a result of the CAA amendments, Alaska Native entities must now be offered the reimbursement option. Please note that the reimbursement option may only be offered for services performed "in the employ of" an Alaskan Native entity. It does not apply to services performed for a private entity in native villages or for individuals or for private businesses owned by members of an Alaskan Native entity.

We had been holding these issues in abeyance as a result of Section 805 of Public Law 107-206 enacted in 2002. That section prohibited the Department from using appropriated funds to pursue the CAA amendments as they related to Alaska Native entities. Since that prohibition has expired, there is no longer a basis for holding this matter in abeyance. Failure to enact the necessary legislation could, after an opportunity for a hearing and appeal, result in the loss of the full FUTA credit (5.4%) for all employers in the state, as well as the loss of Federal UC administrative grants.

Please inform me of your plans to obtain legislation to ensure that Alaska's law conforms to the requirements of Federal UC law. Please provide a written response within thirty days of your receipt of this letter and provide a copy to your Regional Office. If you have any questions concerning this issue, please contact your Regional Office's legislative liaison, Pat O'Neal, at 415-625-7926 or oneal.pat@dol.gov.

Sincerely,

Cheryl Atkinson

TITLE 26 > Subtitle C > CHAPTER 23 > § 3309

§ 3309. State law coverage of services performed for nonprofit organizations or governmental entities

(a) State law requirements

For purposes of section 3304 (a) (6)—

(1) except as otherwise provided in subsections (b) and (c), the services to which this paragraph applies are—

(A) service excluded from the term "employment" solely by reason of paragraph (8) of section 3306 (c), and

(B) service excluded from the term "employment" solely by reason of paragraph (7) of section 3306 (c); and

(2) the State law shall provide that a governmental entity, including an Indian tribe, or any other organization (or group of governmental entities or other organizations) which, but for the requirements of this paragraph, would be liable for contributions with respect to service to which paragraph (1) applies may elect, for such minimum period and at such time as may be provided by State law, to pay (in lieu of such contributions) into the State unemployment fund amounts equal to the amounts of compensation attributable under the State law to such service. The State law may provide safeguards to ensure that governmental entities or other organizations so electing will make the payments required under such elections.

(b) Section not to apply to certain service

This section shall not apply to service performed—

(1) in the employ of

(A) a church or convention or association of churches,

(B) an organization which is operated primarily for religious purposes and which is operated, supervised, controlled, or principally supported by a church or convention or association of churches, or

(C) an elementary or secondary school which is operated primarily for religious purposes, which is described in section 501 (c)(3), and which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a);

(2) by a duly ordained, commissioned, or licensed minister of a church in the exercise of his ministry or by a member of a religious order in the exercise of duties required by such order;

(3) in the employ of a governmental entity referred to in paragraph (7) of section 3306 (c), if such service is performed by an individual in the exercise of his duties—

(A) as an elected official;

(B) as a member of a legislative body, or a member of the judiciary, of a State or political subdivision thereof, or of an Indian tribe;

(C) as a member of the State National Guard or Air National Guard;

(D) as an employee serving on a temporary basis in case of fire, storm, snow, earthquake, flood, or similar emergency;

(E) in a position which, under or pursuant to the State or tribal law, is designated as

(i) a major nontenured policymaking or advisory position, or

(ii) a policymaking or advisory position the performance of the duties of which ordinarily does not require more than 8 hours per week; or

(F) as an election official or election worker if the amount of remuneration received by the individual during the calendar year for services as an election official or election worker is less than $1,000;

(4) in a facility conducted for the purpose of carrying out a program of—

(A) rehabilitation for individuals whose earning capacity is impaired by age or physical or mental deficiency or injury, or

(B) providing remunerative work for individuals who because of their impaired physical or mental capacity cannot be readily absorbed in the competitive labor market, by an individual receiving such rehabilitation or remunerative work;

(5) as part of an unemployment work-relief or work-training program assisted or financed in whole or in part by any Federal agency or an agency of a State or political subdivision thereof or of an Indian tribe, by an individual receiving such work relief or work training; and

(6) by an inmate of a custodial or penal institution.

(c) Nonprofit organizations must employ 4 or more

This section shall not apply to service performed during any calendar year in the employ of any organization unless on each of some 20 days during such calendar year or the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, the total number of individuals who were employed by such organization in employment (determined without regard to section 3306 (c)(8) and by excluding service to which this section does not apply by reason of subsection (b)) for some portion of the day (whether or not at the same moment of time) was 4 or more.

(d) Election by Indian tribe

The State law shall provide that an Indian tribe may make contributions for employment as if the employment is within the meaning of section 3306 or make payments in lieu of contributions under this section, and shall provide that an Indian tribe may make separate elections for itself and each subdivision, subsidiary, or business enterprise wholly owned by such Indian tribe. State law may require a tribe to post a payment bond or take other reasonable measures to assure the making of payments in lieu of contributions under this section. Notwithstanding the requirements of section 3306 (a)(6), if, within 90 days of having received a notice of delinquency, a tribe fails to make contributions, payments in lieu of contributions, or payment of penalties or interest (at amounts or rates comparable to those applied to all other employers covered under the State law) assessed with respect to such failure, or if the tribe fails to post a required payment bond, then service for the tribe shall not be excepted from employment under section 3306 (c)(7) until any such failure is corrected. This subsection shall apply to an Indian tribe within the meaning of section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b (e)).

§ 3306. Definitions

(a) Employer

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) In general

The term "employer" means, with respect to any calendar year, any person who—

(A) during any calendar quarter in the calendar year or the preceding calendar year paid wages of $1,500 or more, or

(B) on each of some 20 days during the calendar year or during the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, employed at least one individual in employment for some portion of the day.

For purposes of this paragraph, there shall not be taken into account any wages paid to, or employment of, an employee performing domestic services referred to in paragraph (3).

(2) Agricultural labor

In the case of agricultural labor, the term "employer" means, with respect to any calendar year, any person who—

(A) during any calendar quarter in the calendar year or the preceding calendar year paid wages of $20,000 or more for agricultural labor, or

(B) on each of some 20 days during the calendar year or during the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, employed at least 10 individuals in employment in agricultural labor for some portion of the day.

(3) Domestic service

In the case of domestic service in a private home, local college club, or local chapter of a college fraternity or sorority, the term "employer" means, with respect to any calendar year, any person who during any calendar quarter in the calendar year or the preceding calendar year paid wages in cash of $1,000 or more for such service.

(4) Special rule

A person treated as an employer under paragraph (3) shall not be treated as an employer with respect to wages paid for any service other than domestic service referred to in paragraph (3) unless such person is treated as an employer under paragraph (1) or (2) with respect to such other service.

(b) Wages

For purposes of this chapter, the term "wages" means all remuneration for employment, including the cash value of all remuneration (including benefits) paid in any medium other than cash; except that such term shall not include—

(1) that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration (other than remuneration referred to in the succeeding paragraphs of this subsection) equal to $7,000 with respect to employment has been paid to an individual by an employer during any calendar year, is paid to such individual by such employer during such calendar year. If an employer (hereinafter referred to as successor employer) during any calendar year acquires substantially all the property used in a trade or business of another employer (hereinafter referred to as a predecessor), or used in a separate unit of a trade or business of a predecessor, and immediately after the acquisition employs in his trade or business an individual who immediately prior to the acquisition was employed in the trade or business of such predecessor, then, for the purpose of determining whether the successor employer has paid remuneration (other than remuneration referred to in the succeeding paragraphs of this subsection) with respect to employment equal to $7,000 to such individual during such calendar year, any remuneration (other than remuneration referred to in the succeeding paragraphs of this subsection) with respect to employment paid (or considered under this paragraph as having been paid) to such individual by such predecessor during such calendar year and prior to such acquisition shall be considered as having been paid by such successor employer;

(2) the amount of any payment (including any amount paid by an employer for insurance or annuities, or into a fund, to provide for any such payment) made to, or on behalf of, an employee or any of his dependents under a plan or system established by an employer which makes provision for his employees generally (or for his employees generally and their dependents) or for a class or classes of his employees (or for a class or classes of his employees and their dependents), on account of—

(A) sickness or accident disability (but, in the case of payments made to an employee or any of his dependents, this subparagraph shall exclude from the term "wages" only payments which are received under a workmen's compensation law), or

(B) medical or hospitalization expenses in connection with sickness or accident disability, or

(C) death;

[(3) Repealed. Pub. L. 98–21, title III, § 324(b)(3)(B), Apr. 20, 1983, 97 Stat. 124]

(4) any payment on account of sickness or accident disability, or medical or hospitalization expenses in connection with sickness or accident disability, made by an employer to, or on behalf of, an employee after the expiration of 6 calendar months following the last calendar month in which the employee worked for such employer;

(5) any payment made to, or on behalf of, an employee or his beneficiary—

(A) from or to a trust described in section 401 (a) which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a) at the time of such payment unless such payment is made to an employee of the trust as remuneration for services rendered as such employee and not as a beneficiary of the trust, or

(B) under or to an annuity plan which, at the time of such payment, is a plan described in section 403 (a),

(C) under a simplified employee pension (as defined in section 408 (k)(1)), other than any contributions described in section 408 (k)(6),

(D) under or to an annuity contract described in section 403 (b), other than a payment for the purchase of such contract which is made by reason of a salary reduction agreement (whether evidenced by a written instrument or otherwise),

(E) under or to an exempt governmental deferred compensation plan (as defined in section 3121 (v)(3)),

(F) to supplement pension benefits under a plan or trust described in any of the foregoing provisions of this paragraph to take into account some portion or all of the increase in the cost of living (as determined by the Secretary of Labor) since retirement but only if such supplemental payments are under a plan which is treated as a welfare plan under section 3(2)(B)(ii) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974; [1]

(G) under a cafeteria plan (within the meaning of section 125) if such payment would not be treated as wages without regard to such plan and it is reasonable to believe that (if section 125 applied for purposes of this section) section 125 would not treat any wages as constructively received, or

(H) under an arrangement to which section 408 (p) applies, other than any elective contributions under paragraph (2)(A)(i) thereof,[2]

(6) the payment by an employer (without deduction from the remuneration of the employee)—

(A) of the tax imposed upon an employee under section 3101, or

(B) of any payment required from an employee under a State unemployment compensation law, with respect to remuneration paid to an employee for domestic service in a private home of the employer or for agricultural labor;

(7) remuneration paid in any medium other than cash to an employee for service not in the course of the employer's trade or business;

[(8) Repealed. Pub. L. 98–21, title III, § 324(b)(3)(B), Apr. 20, 1983, 97 Stat. 124]

(9) remuneration paid to or on behalf of an employee if (and to the extent that) at the time of the payment of such remuneration it is reasonable to believe that a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 217 (determined without regard to section 274 (n));

(10) any payment or series of payments by an employer to an employee or any of his dependents which is paid—

(A) upon or after the termination of an employee's employment relationship because of

(i) death, or

(ii) retirement for disability, and

(B) under a plan established by the employer which makes provision for his employees generally or a class or classes of his employees (or for such employees or class or classes of employees and their dependents), other than any such payment or series of payments which would have been paid if the employee's employment relationship had not been so terminated;

(11) remuneration for agricultural labor paid in any medium other than cash;

(12) any contribution, payment, or service, provided by an employer which may be excluded from the gross income of an employee, his spouse, or his dependents, under the provisions of section 120 (relating to amounts received under qualified group legal services plans);

(13) any payment made, or benefit furnished, to or for the benefit of an employee if at the time of such payment or such furnishing it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be able to exclude such payment or benefit from income under section 127, 129, 134 (b)(4), or 134 (b)(5);

(14) the value of any meals or lodging furnished by or on behalf of the employer if at the time of such furnishing it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be able to exclude such items from income under section 119;

(15) any payment made by an employer to a survivor or the estate of a former employee after the calendar year in which such employee died;

(16) any benefit provided to or on behalf of an employee if at the time such benefit is provided it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be able to exclude such benefit from income under section 74 (c), 108 (f)(4), 117, or 132;

(17) any payment made to or for the benefit of an employee if at the time of such payment it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be able to exclude such payment from income under section 106 (b);

(18) any payment made to or for the benefit of an employee if at the time of such payment it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be able to exclude such payment from income under section 106 (d); or

(19) remuneration on account of—

(A) a transfer of a share of stock to any individual pursuant to an exercise of an incentive stock option (as defined in section 422 (b)) or under an employee stock purchase plan (as defined in section 423 (b)), or

(B) any disposition by the individual of such stock.

Except as otherwise provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary, any third party which makes a payment included in wages solely by reason of the parenthetical matter contained in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) shall be treated for purposes of this chapter and chapter 22 as the employer with respect to such wages. Nothing in the regulations prescribed for purposes of chapter 24 (relating to income tax withholding) which provides an exclusion from "wages" as used in such chapter shall be construed to require a similar exclusion from "wages" in the regulations prescribed for purposes of this chapter.

(c) Employment

For purposes of this chapter, the term "employment" means any service performed prior to 1955, which was employment for purposes of subchapter C of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 under the law applicable to the period in which such service was performed, and

(A) any service, of whatever nature, performed after 1954 by an employee for the person employing him, irrespective of the citizenship or residence of either,

(i) within the United States, or

(ii) on or in connection with an American vessel or American aircraft under a contract of service which is entered into within the United States or during the performance of which and while the employee is employed on the vessel or aircraft it touches at a port in the United States, if the employee is employed on and in connection with such vessel or aircraft when outside the United States, and

(B) any service, of whatever nature, performed after 1971 outside the United States (except in a contiguous country with which the United States has an agreement relating to unemployment compensation) by a citizen of the United States as an employee of an American employer (as defined in subsection (j)(3)), except—

(1) agricultural labor (as defined in subsection (k)) unless—

(A) such labor is performed for a person who—

(i) during any calendar quarter in the calendar year or the preceding calendar year paid remuneration in cash of $20,000 or more to individuals employed in agricultural labor (including labor performed by an alien referred to in subparagraph (B)), or

(ii) on each of some 20 days during the calendar year or the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, employed in agricultural labor (including labor performed by an alien referred to in subparagraph (B)) for some portion of the day (whether or not at the same moment of time) 10 or more individuals; and

(B) such labor is not agricultural labor performed by an individual who is an alien admitted to the United States to perform agricultural labor pursuant to sections 214(c) and 101(a)(15)(H) of the Immigration and Nationality Act;

(2) domestic service in a private home, local college club, or local chapter of a college fraternity or sorority unless performed for a person who paid cash remuneration of $1,000 or more to individuals employed in such domestic service in any calendar quarter in the calendar year or the preceding calendar year;

(3) service not in the course of the employer's trade or business performed in any calendar quarter by an employee, unless the cash remuneration paid for such service is $50 or more and such service is performed by an individual who is regularly employed by such employer to perform such service. For purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to be regularly employed by an employer during a calendar quarter only if—

(A) on each of some 24 days during such quarter such individual performs for such employer for some portion of the day service not in the course of the employer's trade or business, or

(B) such individual was regularly employed (as determined under subparagraph (A)) by such employer in the performance of such service during the preceding calendar quarter;

(4) service performed on or in connection with a vessel or aircraft not an American vessel or American aircraft, if the employee is employed on and in connection with such vessel or aircraft when outside the United States;

(5) service performed by an individual in the employ of his son, daughter, or spouse, and service performed by a child under the age of 21 in the employ of his father or mother;

(6) service performed in the employ of the United States Government or of an instrumentality of the United States which is—

(A) wholly or partially owned by the United States, or

(B) exempt from the tax imposed by section 3301 by virtue of any provision of law which specifically refers to such section (or the corresponding section of prior law) in granting such exemption;

(7) service performed in the employ of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or in the employ of an Indian tribe, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more States or political subdivisions or Indian tribes; and any service performed in the employ of any instrumentality of one or more States or political subdivisions to the extent that the instrumentality is, with respect to such service, immune under the Constitution of the United States from the tax imposed by section 3301;

(8) service performed in the employ of a religious, charitable, educational, or other organization described in section 501 (c)(3) which is exempt from income tax under section 501 (a);

(9) service performed by an individual as an employee or employee representative as defined in section 1 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act (45 U.S.C. 351);

(10)

(A) service performed in any calendar quarter in the employ of any organization exempt from income tax under section 501 (a) (other than an organization described in section 401 (a)) or under section 521, if the remuneration for such service is less than $50, or

(B) service performed in the employ of a school, college, or university, if such service is performed

(i) by a student who is enrolled and is regularly attending classes at such school, college, or university, or

(ii) by the spouse of such a student, if such spouse is advised, at the time such spouse commences to perform such service, that

(I) the employment of such spouse to perform such service is provided under a program to provide financial assistance to such student by such school, college, or university, and

(II) such employment will not be covered by any program of unemployment insurance, or

(C) service performed by an individual who is enrolled at a nonprofit or public educational institution which normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and normally has a regularly organized body of students in attendance at the place where its educational activities are carried on as a student in a full-time program, taken for credit at such institution, which combines academic instruction with work experience, if such service is an integral part of such program, and such institution has so certified to the employer, except that this subparagraph shall not apply to service performed in a program established for or on behalf of an employer or group of employers, or

(D) service performed in the employ of a hospital, if such service is performed by a patient of such hospital;

(11) service performed in the employ of a foreign government (including service as a consular or other officer or employee or a nondiplomatic representative);

(12) service performed in the employ of an instrumentality wholly owned by a foreign government—

(A) if the service is of a character similar to that performed in foreign countries by employees of the United States Government or of an instrumentality thereof; and

(B) if the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the foreign government, with respect to whose instrumentality exemption is claimed, grants an equivalent exemption with respect to similar service performed in the foreign country by employees of the United States Government and of instrumentalities thereof;

(13) service performed as a student nurse in the employ of a hospital or a nurses' training school by an individual who is enrolled and is regularly attending classes in a nurses' training school chartered or approved pursuant to State law; and service performed as an intern in the employ of a hospital by an individual who has completed a 4 years' course in a medical school chartered or approved pursuant to State law;

(14) service performed by an individual for a person as an insurance agent or as an insurance solicitor, if all such service performed by such individual for such person is performed for remuneration solely by way of commission;

(A) service performed by an individual under the age of 18 in the delivery or distribution of newspapers or shopping news, not including delivery or distribution to any point for subsequent delivery or distribution;

(B) service performed by an individual in, and at the time of, the sale of newspapers or magazines to ultimate consumers, under an arrangement under which the newspapers or magazines are to be sold by him at a fixed price, his compensation being based on the retention of the excess of such price over the amount at which the newspapers or magazines are charged to him, whether or not he is guaranteed a minimum amount of compensation for such service, or is entitled to be credited with the unsold newspapers or magazines turned back;

(16) service performed in the employ of an international organization;

(17) service performed by an individual in (or as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel while it is engaged in) the catching, taking, harvesting, cultivating, or farming of any kind of fish, shellfish, crustacea, sponges, seaweeds, or other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life (including service performed by any such individual as an ordinary incident to any such activity), except—

(A) service performed in connection with the catching or taking of salmon or halibut, for commercial purposes, and

(B) service performed on or in connection with a vessel of more than 10 net tons (determined in the manner provided for determining the register tonnage of merchant vessels under the laws of the United States);

(18) service described in section 3121 (b)(20);

(19) Service [3] which is performed by a nonresident alien individual for the period he is temporarily present in the United States as a nonimmigrant under subparagraph (F), (J), (M), or (Q) of section 101(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a)(15)(F), (J), (M), or (Q)), and which is performed to carry out the purpose specified in subparagraph (F), (J), (M), or (Q), as the case may be;

(20) service performed by a full time student (as defined in subsection (q)) in the employ of an organized camp—

(A) if such camp—

(i) did not operate for more than 7 months in the calendar year and did not operate for more than 7 months in the preceding calendar year, or

(ii) had average gross receipts for any 6 months in the preceding calendar year which were not more than 331/3 percent of its average gross receipts for the other 6 months in the preceding calendar year; and

(B) if such full time student performed services in the employ of such camp for less than 13 calendar weeks in such calendar year; or

(21) service performed by a person committed to a penal institution.

(d) Included and excluded service

For purposes of this chapter, if the services performed during one-half or more of any pay period by an employee for the person employing him constitute employment, all the services of such employee for such period shall be deemed to be employment; but if the services performed during more than one-half of any such pay period by an employee for the person employing him do not constitute employment, then none of the services of such employee for such period shall be deemed to be employment. As used in this subsection, the term "pay period" means a period (of not more than 31 consecutive days) for which a payment of remuneration is ordinarily made to the employee by the person employing him. This subsection shall not be applicable with respect to services performed in a pay period by an employee for the person employing him, where any of such service is excepted by subsection (c)(9).

(e) State agency

For purposes of this chapter, the term "State agency" means any State officer, board, or other authority, designated under a State law to administer the unemployment fund in such State.

(f) Unemployment fund

For purposes of this chapter, the term "unemployment fund" means a special fund, established under a State law and administered by a State agency, for the payment of compensation. Any sums standing to the account of the State agency in the Unemployment Trust Fund established by section 904 of the Social Security Act, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1104), shall be deemed to be a part of the unemployment fund of the State, and no sums paid out of the Unemployment Trust Fund to such State agency shall cease to be a part of the unemployment fund of the State until expended by such State agency. An unemployment fund shall be deemed to be maintained during a taxable year only if throughout such year, or such portion of the year as the unemployment fund was in existence, no part of the moneys of such fund was expended for any purpose other than the payment of compensation (exclusive of expenses of administration) and for refunds of sums erroneously paid into such fund and refunds paid in accordance with the provisions of section 3305 (b); except that—

(1) an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration;

(2) the amounts specified by section 903(c)(2) or 903(d)(4) of the Social Security Act may, subject to the conditions prescribed in such section, be used for expenses incurred by the State for administration of its unemployment compensation law and public employment offices,[4]

(3) nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit deducting any amount from unemployment compensation otherwise payable to an individual and using the amount so deducted to pay for health insurance, or the withholding of Federal, State, or local individual income tax, if the individual elected to have such deduction made and such deduction was made under a program approved by the Secretary of Labor;

(4) amounts may be deducted from unemployment benefits and used to repay overpayments as provided in section 303 (g) of the Social Security Act;

(5) [5] amounts may be withdrawn for the payment of short-time compensation under a plan approved by the Secretary of Labor; and

(5) [5] amounts may be withdrawn for the payment of allowances under a self-employment assistance program (as defined in subsection (t)).

(g) Contributions

For purposes of this chapter, the term "contributions" means payments required by a State law to be made into an unemployment fund by any person on account of having individuals in his employ, to the extent that such payments are made by him without being deducted or deductible from the remuneration of individuals in his employ.

(h) Compensation

For purposes of this chapter, the term "compensation" means cash benefits payable to individuals with respect to their unemployment.

(i) Employee

For purposes of this chapter, the term "employee" has the meaning assigned to such term by section 3121 (d), except that paragraph (4) and subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (3) shall not apply.

(j) State, United States, and American employer

For purposes of this chapter—

(1) State

The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

(2) United States

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes the States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

(3) American employer

The term "American employer" means a person who is—

(A) an individual who is a resident of the United States,

(B) a partnership, if two-thirds or more of the partners are residents of the United States,

(C) a trust, if all of the trustees are residents of the United States, or

(D) a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State.

An individual who is a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) shall be considered, for purposes of this section, as a citizen of the United States.

(k) Agricultural labor

For purposes of this chapter, the term "agricultural labor" has the meaning assigned to such term by subsection (g) of section 3121, except that for purposes of this chapter subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) of such subsection (g) shall be treated as reading:

"(B) in the employ of a group of operators of farms (or a cooperative organization of which such operators are members) in the performance of service described in subparagraph (A), but only if such operators produced more than one-half of the commodity with respect to which such service is performed;".

(m) American vessel and aircraft

For purposes of this chapter, the term "American vessel" means any vessel documented or numbered under the laws of the United States; and includes any vessel which is neither documented or numbered under the laws of the United States nor documented under the laws of any foreign country, if its crew is employed solely by one or more citizens or residents of the United States or corporations organized under the laws of the United States or of any State; and the term "American aircraft" means an aircraft registered under the laws of the United States.

(n) Vessels operated by general agents of United States

Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c)(6), service performed by officers and members of the crew of a vessel which would otherwise be included as employment under subsection (c) shall not be excluded by reason of the fact that it is performed on or in connection with an American vessel—

(1) owned by or bareboat chartered to the United States and

(2) whose business is conducted by a general agent of the Secretary of Commerce.

For purposes of this chapter, each such general agent shall be considered a legal entity in his capacity as such general agent, separate and distinct from his identity as a person employing individuals on his own account, and the officers and members of the crew of such an American vessel whose business is conducted by a general agent of the Secretary of Commerce shall be deemed to be performing services for such general agent rather than the United States. Each such general agent who in his capacity as such is an employer within the meaning of subsection (a) shall be subject to all the requirements imposed upon an employer under this chapter with respect to service which constitutes employment by reason of this subsection.

(o) Special rule in case of certain agricultural workers

(1) Crew leaders who are registered or provide specialized agricultural labor

For purposes of this chapter, any individual who is a member of a crew furnished by a crew leader to perform agricultural labor for any other person shall be treated as an employee of such crew leader—

(A) if—

(i) such crew leader holds a valid certificate of registration under the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act; or

(ii) substantially all the members of such crew operate or maintain tractors, mechanized harvesting or crop-dusting equipment, or any other mechanized equipment, which is provided by such crew leader; and

(B) if such individual is not an employee of such other person within the meaning of subsection (i).

(2) Other crew leaders

For purposes of this chapter, in the case of any individual who is furnished by a crew leader to perform agricultural labor for any other person and who is not treated as an employee of such crew leader under paragraph (1)—

(A) such other person and not the crew leader shall be treated as the employer of such individual; and

(B) such other person shall be treated as having paid cash remuneration to such individual in an amount equal to the amount of cash remuneration paid to such individual by the crew leader (either on his behalf or on behalf of such other person) for the agricultural labor performed for such other person.

(3) Crew leader

For purposes of this subsection, the term "crew leader" means an individual who—

(A) furnishes individuals to perform agricultural labor for any other person,

(B) pays (either on his behalf or on behalf of such other person) the individuals so furnished by him for the agricultural labor performed by them, and

(C) has not entered into a written agreement with such other person under which such individual is designated as an employee of such other person.

(p) Concurrent employment by two or more employers

For purposes of sections 3301, 3302, and 3306 (b)(1), if two or more related corporations concurrently employ the same individual and compensate such individual through a common paymaster which is one of such corporations, each such corporation shall be considered to have paid as remuneration to such individual only the amounts actually disbursed by it to such individual and shall not be considered to have paid as remuneration to such individual amounts actually disbursed to such individual by another of such corporations.

(q) Full time student

For purposes of subsection (c)(20), an individual shall be treated as a full time student for any period—

(1) during which the individual is enrolled as a full time student at an educational institution, or

(2) which is between academic years or terms if—this chapter.

(C) Nonqualified deferred compensation plan

For purposes of this paragraph, the term "nonqualified deferred compensation plan" means any plan or other arrangement for deferral of compensation other than a plan described in subsection (b)(5).

(s) Tips treated as wages

For purposes of this chapter, the term "wages" includes tips which are—

(1) received while performing services which constitute employment, and

(2) included in a written statement furnished to the employer pursuant to section 6053 (a).

(t) Self-employment assistance program

For the purposes of this chapter, the term "self-employment assistance program" means a program under which—

(1) individuals who meet the requirements described in paragraph (3) are eligible to receive an allowance in lieu of regular unemployment compensation under the State law for the purpose of assisting such individuals in establishing a business and becoming self-employed;

(2) the allowance payable to individuals pursuant to paragraph (1) is payable in the same amount, at the same interval, on the same terms, and subject to the same conditions, as regular unemployment compensation under the State law, except that—

(A) State requirements relating to availability for work, active search for work, and refusal to accept work are not applicable to such individuals;

(B) State requirements relating to disqualifying income are not applicable to income earned from self-employment by such individuals; and

(C) such individuals are considered to be unemployed for the purposes of Federal and State laws applicable to unemployment compensation, as long as such individuals meet the requirements applicable under this subsection;

(3) individuals may receive the allowance described in paragraph (1) if such individuals—

(A) are eligible to receive regular unemployment compensation under the State law, or would be eligible to receive such compensation except for the requirements described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2);

(B) are identified pursuant to a State worker profiling system as individuals likely to exhaust regular unemployment compensation; and

(C) are participating in self-employment assistance activities which—

(i) include entrepreneurial training, business counseling, and technical assistance; and

(ii) are approved by the State agency; and

(D) are actively engaged on a full-time basis in activities (which may include training) relating to the establishment of a business and becoming self-employed;

(4) the aggregate number of individuals receiving the allowance under the program does not at any time exceed 5 percent of the number of individuals receiving regular unemployment compensation under the State law at such time;

(5) the program does not result in any cost to the Unemployment Trust Fund (established by section 904(a) of the Social Security Act) in excess of the cost that would be incurred by such State and charged to such Fund if the State had not participated in such program; and

(6) the program meets such other requirements as the Secretary of Labor determines to be appropriate.

(u) Indian tribe

For purposes of this chapter, the term "Indian tribe" has the meaning given to such term by section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b (e)), and includes any subdivision, subsidiary, or business enterprise wholly owned by such an Indian tribe.

habitat for the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker and associated wildlife species of concern. Prescribed burning and timber thinning are used to ensure that quality pine habitat is maintained for red-cockaded woodpeckers, neotropical migratory songbirds, and other native wildlife. Hardwood stands provide excellent habitat for neotropical migratory songbirds, turkeys, squirrels, and other woodland wildlife. Open fields, maintained by burning and mowing, provide feeding and nesting areas for many species of birds and mammals. Numerous clear-flowing creeks and beaver ponds provide wetlands for waterfowl and other wildlife.

Indian Entities Recognized and Eligible To Receive Services From the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs

AGENCY: Bureau of Indian Affairs, Interior.

ACTION: Notice.

SUMMARY: This notice publishes the current list of 562 tribal entities recognized and eligible for funding and services from the Bureau of Indian Affairs by virtue of their status as Indian tribes. The list is updated from the notice published on March 22, 2007 (72 FR 13648).

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Daisy West, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Division of Tribal Government Services, Mail Stop 4513–MIB, 1849 C Street, NW., Washington, DC 20240. Telephone number: (202) 513–7641.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: This notice is published pursuant to Section 104 of the Act of November 2, 1994 (Pub. L. 103–454; 108 Stat. 4791, 4792), and in exercise of authority delegated to the Assistant Secretary—Indian Affairs under 25 U.S.C. 2 and 9 and 209 DM 8.

Published below is a list of federally acknowledged tribes in the contiguous 48 states and in Alaska.

One tribe became recognized since the last publication. The Mashpee Wampanoag Tribe was acknowledged under 25 CFR part 83. The final determination for Federal acknowledgment became effective on May 23, 2007. The list also contains several tribal name changes and corrections. To aid in identifying tribal name changes, the tribe's former name is included with the new tribal name. To aid in identifying corrections, the tribe's previously listed name is included with the tribal name. We will continue to list the tribe's former or previously listed name for several years before dropping the former or previously listed name from the list.

The listed entities are acknowledged to have the immunities and privileges available to other federally acknowledged Indian tribes by virtue of their government-to-government relationship with the United States as well as the responsibilities, powers, limitations, and obligations of such tribes. We have continued the practice of listing the Alaska Native entities separately solely for the purpose of facilitating identification of them and reference to them given the large number of complex Native names.

Dated: March 25, 2008.

Assistant Secretary—Indian Affairs.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to liens on vehicles and to towing, transporting, and storage of vehicles; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 28.10.391(a) is amended to read:

(a) The filing of the application and documents under AS 28.10.381 and the issuance of a new certificate of title are constructive notice of any liens or encumbrances against the vehicle described in the certificate to a creditor of the owner, or to a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer. However, a mortgage, conditional sale contract, or similar lien or encumbrance on the vehicle is subordinate to a lien under AS 28.10.502 and is subject to the procedure provided in that section. A [A] lien or encumbrance on a vehicle for labor, material, transportation, storage, or similar activity, other than a lien under AS 28.10.502, whether or not dependent on possession for its validity, is subordinate only to a mortgage, conditional sale contract, or similar lien or encumbrance on the vehicle properly filed on or before the time that the vehicle is subject to, or comes into possession of, the lien or encumbrance claimant for the labor, material, transportation, storage, or similar activity.

 Sec. 2. AS 28.10.502(b) is amended to read:

(b) A lien under this section is limited to towing ~~and~~ storage charges. Unless a vehicle has already been reclaimed by the owner, the person possessing the vehicle under this section shall notify the registered owner or primary lienholder, if any, of the towing, transporting, or storage of the vehicle, by certified letter, return receipt requested, mailed to the registered owner or primary lienholder, if any, within five working days after the initial towing, transporting, or storage of the vehicle. The letter shall be sent to the addresses of record of the registered owner and primary lienholder, if any, on file with the department or the corresponding office in another jurisdiction in which the title to the motor vehicle and the lien on it are recorded. Storage charges cease to be part of the lien after 60 days unless the registered owner or primary lienholder, if any, has been given actual notice of the possessory lien within that time or unless the [A] certified letter has been mailed within the time required in this subsection [THAT TIME TO THE OWNER AND PRIMARY LIENHOLDER, IF ANY, AT THEIR ADDRESSES OF RECORD WITH THE DEPARTMENT OR THE CORRESPONDING OFFICE IN ANOTHER JURISDICTION IN WHICH THE TITLE TO THE MOTOR VEHICLE AND THE LIEN ON IT ARE RECORDED].

 Sec. 3. This Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

HB 251 – PRIORITY OF TOWING LIENS

Towing companies provide necessary service to Alaskans through the removal of abandoned, junked, and wrecked vehicles from public thoroughfares and private property. Alaskan towing companies follow prescribed laws in providing these towing services and in most cases are acting under the authorization or direction of public safety officers. Alaskan towing companies should be paid for providing these services to the public, but in certain situations they are not. Providing a statutory mechanism so that these small towing businesses are first in line for payment for delivered services will reduce business risk to these companies. House Bill 251 changes the priority in which payments may be made to provide for a fairer business environment to towing companies.

House Bill 251 prioritizes a possessory lien for towing services lawfully provided in conformity with AS 28.10.502. This prioritization is necessary and gives first position to towing companies to recoup costs for impound and contractual vehicular towing and storage. Without House Bill 251's clarifying language, Alaska's towing service companies could be harmed by allowing other lien holders to take possession of a vehicle in impound without paying for towing and storage services already provided. A nonpayment situation would at a minimum shift costs to other Alaskans and unfairly increase their towing charges, or in extreme cases induce business hardships and cause business failure for towing companies.

House Bill 251 corrects a current situation whereby certain lien holders may receive impound services from towing companies without paying for all or part of the charges. This is unfair to Alaska's towing companies. Reducing unfair business risk to Alaska's small companies is in the best interest of the state.

Alaska Towing Association

The Voice of Alaskan Towing Pro

RE: Alaska Towing Association supports HB 251

Members of the towing industry in Alaska have begun to catch up with our counterparts in other states over the last decade, and many Alaskan towers are now on the leading edges of towing technology and practice. Towing in Alaska presents unique challenges, but our members meet those challenges, and towing entities both large and small provide daily professional support to our emergency services and law enforcement systems.

Unfortunately, the modernization of the towing industry across the state has increased costs for towing businesses almost exponentially in recent years as Alaskan towers have upgraded equipment to meet the demands of newer vehicles, improved response times, procedures and training to enhance public safety, and satisfied an ever-growing list of license and permit requirements from Federal, State and local municipalities.

These costs are of course passed on to consumers. Vehicle mishaps and subsequent towing frequently involves great financial liability for vehicle owners, their lenders, and/or their insurance companies. Alaska Statute AS 28.10.502 offers some measure of protection to towers, providing for a Towing and Storage Lien to be automatically placed on any vehicle lawfully towed and stored to ensure payment for the towers' services. This lien is most commonly applied to abandoned or wrecked vehicles removed from public or private property, or towed from public roadways at the request of law enforcement officials, and stored in secured lots at the expense of the towing company.

However, a court decision in the 3rd Judicial Court has determined that perfected liens supercede a tower's possessory lien based on AS 28.10.391, and this decision has effectively nullified the Towing & Storage Lien. Practically speaking, this means a tower may recover, tow, and store a vehicle at real cost to himself and his company, and then be denied payment, lose possession of the collateral, and have no real recourse for financial satisfaction for his loss. HB 251 will alleviate this discrepancy by prioritizing the Towing and Storage lien.

Most other states, if not all, have long resolved the issue between possessory liens and perfected liens on towed or stored vehicles in favor of prioritizing the tower's lien. The obvious fact of services rendered, and payment due for those services creates a reasonable and lawful expectation of payment. In no way does this financial obligation for services supercede the interest in collateral of a perfected lien, rather it merely prioritizes payment for services rendered.

Alaska's statutory disparity is unfortunate, and presumably unintended, but is a very real and expensive issue for Alaska Towing Association members. Towers respond to thousands of vehicle emergencies every year, and remove wrecked vehicles from Alaska's roadways every day. This kind of towing is an integral part of most small towing business models within Alaska. Each emergency tow can easily cost a tower several hundred dollars in labor, fuel, equipment, insurance and operating costs, depending on services rendered and length of time it must be secured and stored.

If the costs of these services cannot be reasonably recouped on even one vehicle simply because a perfected lien exists prior to the tow company's possessory lien, a financial hardship condition develops.

If towing companies continue to be effectively forced to provide their services for free, the current status quo for providing these services to law enforcement agencies at no cost to the agency may change, and State and local law enforcement jurisdictions may be placed into the position of hiring their own towing contractors or otherwise purchasing towing services.

Alaska has much work to do to improve and enhance the towing industry in our state. It has been largely unregulated and unmonitored for many years. Careful evaluation of the issues within the industry is necessary, and thoughtful legislation is required for the protection of both the public and the small businessmen and women within the industry.

The members of the Alaska Towing Association consider HB 251 one step in this direction. The small change to AS 28.10.502 presented in the bill will help protect industry providers from an effective theft of services. In turn, this will help ensure that the many small towing operators across the state remain in business, and ensure a competitive industry that continues to improve itself to meet the demands of the motoring public and Alaska's law enforcement agencies.

The Alaska Towing Association supports HB 251. If it is passed into law, towers can remain willing and available to respond to that next call from their local law enforcement dispatcher in the dead of night knowing they have the protection of the law to ensure they will be compensated for the service they provide.

Shawn Ross
President, Alaska Towing Association

Alaskan Credit Unions find a Loophole in the Law

Also of interest for those towers who perform impounds, either privately or for law enforcement--There have been multiple instances, both in Anchorage and Fairbanks, where a little known paragraph in the Alaska Statutes (AS 28.10.391) has been used to reclaim liened vehicles from impound without paying the impound fees accrued.

According to a court decision in the 3rd Judicial District, a perfected lien, such as that held by a bank on an auto loan, takes precedence over a towing and storage lien. As such, the bank can claim a vehicle from impound without satisfying the towing lien against the vehicle first.

According to Fairbank's City Attorney, Herb Kuss, the 4th Judicial District Courts wouldn't necessarily come to the same conclusion, and although somebody may have to challenge one of the banks in court, he indicates Fairbanks area towers shouldn't worry about it too much.

At least one Fairbanks tower disagrees, after dealing with the law firm representing Credit Union 1. And the renowned Michael McGovern Law Firm, who has been representing towing companies throughout the US for decades, disagrees as well. McGovern suggested Alaska towers might push for a change in the law to give towing companies priority over money lenders.

To that end, two local towers, Mark Davis of Interior Towing & Salvage, and Liz Griswold of Gabe's Towing, have opened discussions with their local representative to discuss changes to AS 28.10.502. Their suggestions center on the idea that lienholders should have a reasonable but limited amount of time to reclaim their property, and that they relinquish their possessory rights after that time limit has expired.

Re: Paul Arnette

Dear Ms. Griswold:

This law firm represents Credit Union 1. It is my understanding that Gabes Towing is in possession of a 2006 Harley Davidson motorcycle, VIN: 1HDIFCW106Y610090, license 5433RS, registered to Paul Arnette. My client holds a valid perfected lien on the vehicle, as shown by the enclosed copy of the title.

In understand that you have refused to release the vehicle to my client unless my client pays all towing charges and storage fees claimed by your company. I am writing to advise you that under Alaska law, my client, as lien holder on the vehicle, is not required to pay you towing and storage charges in order to take possession of the vehicle. This issue was addressed in a lawsuit Credit Union 1 filed against Aurora Towing in 2004. In the case, the court held that a towing and storage lien is subordinate to a perfected lien such as that held by the Credit Union in this case. A copy of the court's order is enclosed.

Although my client is not required to pay any towing and storage charges in order to take possession of the vehicle, it is nevertheless willing to pay a reasonable towing charge, and for five days of storage, at $25.00 per day. If this proposal is not acceptable to you, I will recommend to Credit Union 1 that it file a lawsuit against your company, making the same claims it made in its lawsuit against Aurora Towing.

I would encourage you to discuss this matter with your attorney, and have him or her contact me as soon as possible to discuss this matter. Also, please take notice that if you sell the vehicle over the objection of Credit Union 1, Credit Union 1 will hold you responsible for the full value of the vehicle.

Dear Mr. Hess:

This law firm represents Credit Union 1. It is my understanding that you are in possession of a 2002 Dodge Ram, VIN 1D7HU16252J161935 owned by Jessica Heath and Trish Kelly. My client holds a valid perfected lien on the vehicle, as shown by the enclosed copy of the title to the vehicle.

I understand that you have refused to release the vehicle to my client unless my client pays all towing charges and storage fees claimed by your company. I am writing to advise you that under Alaska law, my client, as lienholder on the vehicle, is not required to pay you towing and storage charges in order to take possession of the vehicle. This issue was addressed in a lawsuit Credit Union 1 filed against Aurora Towing in 2004. In this case, the Court held that a towing and storage lien is subordinate to a perfected lien such as that held by the credit union in this case. A copy of the order is enclosed.

Although my client is not required to pay any towing and storage charges in order to take possession of the vehicle, it is nevertheless willing to pay a reasonable towing charge, and for five days of storage, at $25 per day. If this proposal is not acceptable to you, I will recommend to Credit Union 1 that it file a lawsuit against your company, making the same claims it made in its lawsuit against Aurora Towing.

I would encourage you to discuss this matter with your attorney, and have him or her contact me as soon as possible to discuss this matter. Also, please take notice that if you sell the vehicle over the objection of Credit Union 1, Credit Union 1 will hold you responsible for the full value of the vehicle.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT FOR THE STATE OF ALASKA

THIRD JUDICIAL DISTRICT AT ANCHORAGE

CREDIT UNION 1, Plaintiff, v. AURORA TRANSPORTATION SERVICES, INC., d/b/a/ AURORA TOWING and ANTHONY NIXON, Defendants.	Case No. 3AN-04-3419CI Consolidated with Case No. 3AN-04-8295CI
CREDIT UNION 1, Plaintiff, v. RUSTY'S TOWING & RECOVERY, INC., Defendant.

ORDER RE: SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The summary judgment question is whether a lien on a motor vehicle arising from AS 28.10.0371 - 0391 has priority over a towing and storage lien arising from AS 28.10.502. The parties have moved for cross-motions for summary judgment.

The facts necessary to resolve the summary judgment motions are not in dispute. Mr. Nixon purchased a 1998 GMC Sonoma, and Credit Union 1 is the lienholder. Mr. Nixon was charged with various misdemeanors involving driving offences that resulted in the Municipality of Anchorage impounding his vehicle. The Municipality, through the Anchorage Police Department, directed Aurora Towing to tow and store the vehicle. There is a contract between the Municipality and Aurora for towing and storage services.

The contract between the Municipality and Aurora Towing provided that the registered owner of the vehicle is responsible for paying the towing fee and storage fee. Mr. Nixon failed to pay the towing and storage fee, and the total amount owed as of December 6, 2004 was over $1500.

The question before the court is the priority of the two lien interests. AS 28.10.391(a) provides that:

> The filing of the application and documents under AS 28.10.381 and the issuance of a new certificate of title are constructive notice of any liens or encumbrances against the vehicle described in the certificate to a creditor of the owner, or to a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer. However, a lien or encumbrance on a vehicle for labor, material, transportation, storage, or similar activity, whether or not dependent on possession for its validity, is subordinate only to a mortgage, conditional sale contract, or similar lien or encumbrance properly filed on or before the time that the vehicle is subject to, or comes into possession of, the lien or encumbrance claimant for the labor, material, transportation, storage, or similar activity.

The plain language of this statute states that a transportation and storage lien is subordinate to Credit Union 1's perfected security interest.

There is a separate statute that provides for possessory liens in AS 28.10.502(a), stating that a person "who tows, transports, or stores a motor vehicle, has a possessory lien on the vehicle." In addition AS 28.10.502(d) decides how money is to be distributed from the sale or auction of the vehicle. The money shall first be applied to the payment of costs and expenses of the sale and secondly to the lawful charges of the person having a lien on the motor vehicle under 28.10.502. Next the proceeds from the sale shall be distributed to the registered and legal owner or lienholder entitled to the remaining proceeds.

Although the two statutes appear to be in conflict, they are not, and can be harmonized by a reasonable interpretation of the statutory language. In Decker v. Aurora Motors Inc., 409 P.2d 603, 607 (Alaska 1966), the court found, based on very similar statutory language, that a mechanic's lien was subordinate to a prior recorded security interest.[1] In this case, this court concludes that the Aurora towing and storage lien is subordinate to the Credit Union 1 lien. The express language of AS 28.10.391(a) leads the court to this conclusion. AS 28.10.502(d) is not inconsistent, because it applies to unperfected lienholders. To adopt Aurora's proposed lien priorities would negate the language in AS 28.10.391(a) by placing Credit Union 1's perfected lien in a subordinate position to Aurora's unperfected lien. The language of 28.10.391(a) clearly states that a storage or mechanic's lien is subordinate to a previously perfected lien.

Therefore, Credit Union 1's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted and Aurora Towing's Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment is denied.

Sponsor Statement
HB 253 – Mechanic/Materialmen Liens

Under current law, contractors, material suppliers, and service people who have not been paid by property owner for labor or goods have 90 days from the date of completion of the work, or from the date the service ceases, to file a lien on the property to secure payment of that debt. See AS 34.35.068 (a).

House Bill 253 merely extends the time within which to file a lien to 120 days. This extra time will give contractors, material suppliers, and service people an additional 30 days to work with property owners to secure payment or to negotiate a reasonable payment plan between a creditor and debtor. The need for this bill was brought to Representative Ramras' attention by small business owners who suggested that it usually takes two billing cycles to discover that a property owner may not pay his or her debt, and another billing cycle to see if a payment plan or other compromise is working as planned.

All contractors and suppliers are entitled to payment for services and goods delivered, yet recording a lien on property is a severe remedy that encumbers a property owner's interest and that can be costly for the contractor or supplier to execute. HB 253 affords more time for the parties to negotiate before this remedy is employed.

Dear Jay,

I would like you to please consider extending the time lapse allowed for filing a "mechanic lien" for outstanding accounts carried by businesses in the service industry in Alaska.

Contractors and Service companies have very few options at their disposal when dealing with "theft of service "customers. This would be one more tool we could possible use to collect on delinquent accounts in this time of economic stress.

Re: House Bill #253-Extension of Mechanic's Lien

Dear Mr. Ramras,

I wish to convey my enthusiastic support for House Bill #253, the bill extending by 30 days the amount of time allowed to file a Mechanic's Lien on a customer that has not paid their mechanical repair bill.

As a small plumbing and heating service owner, we at Mountain High Plumbing and Heating, are often left unpaid due to the short window of time allowed to file a lien against the property owner. The situation can arise where; because of the timing of our service at the beginning of the month, versus our end-of-the-month billing, almost thirty days can expire before our customers see their statement. While our customers are normally required to pay at the time of servicing, often times multi-day jobs or absent owners prevent us from collecting at the time of service. Because we realize many people feel they have thirty days from receipt of their statement to actually pay, now we easily have a scenario in which the work was performed at the beginning of one month, the statement sent at the end of that month, and the homeowner not even considering paying us until the end of the next month: we are now 60 days out from completion of the service.

If for some reason, either due to forgetfulness, unexpected bills that month, or a myriad of other reasons the customers do not send us the payment, now it gets put back in their queue, to be paid with the rest of their bills at the end of the next month. We are now 90 days out from the original service and unable to protect ourselves from possible non-payment. It happens that fast. We hear on a daily basis from someone who either forgot to send in their payment with the rest of last month's bills, or had unexpected expenditures leaving no additional monies to pay our bill; asking if we could wait till the next month when they get paid again.

Because we are understanding and want to work with our customers, we will often acquiesce, because lets face it, who hasn't forgotten a bill at some time in the past? However, to do so puts us at great risk if in fact someone is using this as a ruse to avoid having their home or business liened. Sadly there are many people who have taken advantage of our generosity, knowing full well the laws governing this action. These people have literally accounted for tens of thousands of dollars in lost revenue by our company alone. All it takes is just one time of "forgiving" our customer, and we have put ourselves in peril of not being able to attach their property. We, as entrepreneurs and job providers, should not be penalized for our generosity and willingness to work with our customers. I feel an additional 30 days in which to assess whether someone is sincere in their desire to pay or whether they are trying to avoid having their property attached would be a huge benefit to all mechanical repair shops. I feel the extra thirty days would allow us the small amount of extra time needed to fully assess the honest property owners, who may just be struggling that month, from out and out shysters who are using the current law to their advantage.

Realizing that a lien has a significant impact on one's credit rating, we do not take this action lightly. That is why we are often hesitant to file one on a customer who is literally begging us to not lien them, assuring us they will pay next month. Again, it is the repair shops who are now assuming the risk by allowing their customers to "slide" for just one month.

Because of the impact a lien can have on a customer's credit rating, I actually see House Bill 253 as a win-win scenario for both the mechanical service providers and their customers. The extra thirty day window will allow those honest customers the additional time needed to make good on their debt and not have their credit rating tarnished by a lien. We, the mechanical repair shops, can now allow them the extra time to make good on their debt and not be put at risk by doing so.

I strongly encourage the passage of House Bill #253.

Representative Ramras:

This letter is to show support for extending the time to file a mechanics' lien from ninety days to one hundred twenty days. We use mechanics' liens quite often to force payment from customers that would probably not pay otherwise. We have found mechanic's lien very helpful in collecting when small claims and garnishments have been to no avail. We have been able to collect for work done when the property is sold.

We have found ninety days to file a bit restrictive. We often miss the deadline because most commercial customers take up to ninety days, sometime as long as one hundred twenty days to pay. By the time the terms are past, it is already too late to file a lien. We have also found out that with many contractors we subcontract for, we can not get paid until the contractor has finished the job. Most of the time, we have already finished the subcontract portion more than ninety days before the contractor has finished the job.

We support a filing deadline of one hundred twenty days for filing a mechanics' lien and we encourage your support on it as well.

Re: Mechanics Lien legislation

Mr. Ramas,

It has come to my attention that there will be a debate regarding legislation to extend the deadline to file a mechanics lien from 90 days to 120 days. As a mechanical contractor we have a vested interest in this legislation. I would ask you to review our point of view and take into consideration our comments during this debate.

This legislation would be beneficial to both our business and our customers in several respects.

1. Often times we are unable to meet the deadline due to billing delays and in these cases our accounts can and do become uncollectable.
2. In some cases we are forced to file a lien to protect our interest when a customer is unable to pay within 90 days. This increases the cost of doing business and reduces our job profitability as well as damages our customer's credit.
3. Filing a lien creates ill will between us and our customers, which in many instances is completely unnecessary.
4. Extending the deadline will allow us to extend credit to our customers, who in many cases need the extra time to pay their bills.

As a plumbing and heating company we often provide vital services to customers who are sometimes in financial situations that make it difficult for them to afford repairs on necessary items such as heat and running water. As a customer service oriented and community minded company we strive to do our best to assist those that need our services most. Being able to extend terms beyond 90 days would be greatly beneficial to both us and our customers. I sincerely hope that you will consider these issues when debating this legislation and seriously consider making the change for the benefit of all of those affected.

restricted from purchasing alcoholic beverages under AS 04.16.160.

 Sec. 3. AS 04.16.160(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as otherwise provided by law, a person who is 21 years of age or older may not purchase alcoholic beverages if the person has been ordered to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages under AS 12.55.015(a)(13) or as part of a sentence for conviction of a crime under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance or as a condition of probation or parole from a conviction under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance. The restriction on purchasing alcoholic beverages applies during the period that the person is required to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages under the sentence or condition of probation or parole.

 Sec. 4. AS 04.21.050(b) is amended to read:

(b) Except as provided in AS 04.16.160 and in (d) of this section, a valid driver's license or a valid state identification card is acceptable as proof of age or that the person is not restricted from purchasing alcoholic beverages when used for identification in the purchase of alcoholic beverages and for securing entry to and remaining on premises where alcoholic beverages are sold if the state license or identification card is made of or encased in plastic and contains a photograph of the licensee or card holder and a statement of age or date of birth. A licensee, agent, or employee may elect to not accept a passport, military identification card, or other identification as proof that the person is not restricted from purchasing alcoholic beverages and may require the person to furnish a valid driver's license or state identification card or otherwise furnish proof that the person is not a resident of this state.

 Sec. 5. AS 04.21.050 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(d) A state driver's license or an state identification card issued when a person was under 21 years of age, regardless of the person's current age, is not acceptable as proof of age under this title or proof that a person is not restricted from the purchase of alcoholic beverages under this title.

 Sec. 6. AS 12.55.015(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as limited by AS 12.55.125 - 12.55.175, the court, in imposing sentence on a defendant convicted of an offense, may singly or in combination

(1) impose a

(A) fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.035; or

(B) [REPEALED]

(2) order the defendant to be placed on probation under conditions specified by the court that may include provision for active supervision;

(3) impose a definite term of periodic imprisonment, but only if an employment obligation of the defendant preexisted sentencing and the defendant receives a composite sentence of not more than two years to serve;

(4) impose a definite term of continuous imprisonment;

(5) order the defendant to make restitution under AS 12.55.045;

(6) order the defendant to carry out a continuous or periodic program of community work under AS 12.55.055;

(7) suspend execution of all or a portion of the sentence imposed under AS 12.55.080;

(8) suspend imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085;

(9) order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety or a municipal law enforcement agency of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of an offense described in AS 11.41, AS 11.46, AS 11.56, or AS 11.61;

(10) order the defendant, while incarcerated, to participate in or comply with the treatment plan of a rehabilitation program that is related to the defendant's offense or to the defendant's rehabilitation if the program is made available to the defendant by the Department of Corrections;

(11) order the forfeiture to the state of a motor vehicle, weapon, electronic communication device, or money or other valuables, used in or obtained through an offense that was committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal street gang;

(12) order the defendant to have no contact, either directly or indirectly, with a victim or witness of the offense until the defendant is unconditionally discharged;

(13) order the defendant to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages for a period of time, including during the term of any sentence and as a condition of probation, suspended sentence, and suspended imposition of sentence, if

(A) the defendant was convicted of a felony and the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's conduct constituting the offense was substantially influenced by the consumption of alcoholic beverages; or

(B) the defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor and the defendant has been previously convicted of crimes two or more times and the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that, based on the defendant's history, there is reason to believe that imposing a requirement that the defendant refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages is necessary to protect the public; in this subparagraph, "previously convicted" has the meaning given in AS 28.35.030.

 Sec. 7. AS 12.55.015 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(k) Nothing in (a)(13) of this section limits or restricts the authority of a court to order a person to refrain from the consumption of alcohol as a condition of sentence or probation.

Re: HJUD CS for HB283 "An Act relating to the purchase and restrictions concerning alcoholic beverages."

Jerry,

Please draft me a HJUD CS for HB283 (26-LS1218\E with the following amendments:

1. Incorporate Amendment E.1;
2. Incorporate Amendment E.6
3. Delete Sec. 2 AS 04.16.047(b), leaving the civil damages award at $1,000.

We have scheduled the bill to come back up in HJUD next Monday.

Thank you.

Renumber the following bill sections accordingly.

Draft Letter of Intent:

It is the intent of the Alaska Legislature under section #2 of HB 283 amending AS 04.16.047(b) to increase the civil award from $1,000 to $2,000 to enable licensees to share half of the award with their employees and or agents . The award is to provide an incentive to those who sell alcohol to check ID's. This should aide in the effort to prevent people who are restricted from consuming alcohol from purchasing alcohol.

SPONSOR STATEMENT: HOUSE BILL HB 283

HB 283 amends the current law concerning people who are restricted from the purchase and consumption of alcoholic beverages. The bill adds people who commit crimes where alcohol contributed to commission of the crime.

The bill will allow a court to restrict people, who are convicted of a felony or a third misdemeanor, from consuming and purchasing alcohol. These persons will be required to have an alcohol restricted drivers license or ID. It also restricts a person from purchasing alcohol for someone who is restricted from consuming. The bill further prevents a person who has been restricted from consuming alcohol from misrepresenting themselves as being able to purchase and consume alcohol.

The bill raises the civil awards for alcohol licensees from $1000.00 to $2,000.00. This will create a greater incentive to the owners and employees of businesses from selling alcohol to people who are restricted from purchasing and consuming these products.

According to the Department of Corrections over 90% of the crimes that are committed in Alaska are either directly or indirectly related to the consumption of alcohol or drugs. This bill will help prevent the people that are committing these crimes from purchasing and consuming alcohol.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if nece

If passed and enforced, this bill would increase monitoring hours, urine analysis testing, and number of court appearances, which would have a significant impact on the workload of the Adult Probation Officers in the Alcohol Safety Action Program (ASAP). ASAP referrals could increase by 20% or more, requiring one additional Adult Probation Officer and one additional Criminal Justice Technician. The impact on the Therapeutic Court program would not be as significant, and could be accommodated with existing staff. The actual workload impact will depend greatly on the level of enforcement.

Currently, alcohol restrictions are a part of probation conditions for 75% of all ASAP misdemeanor clients and approximately 90% of the Therapeutic Court participants. Currently, a very small percentage of ASAP clients are charged with probation violations related to consuming alcohol while on probation.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

An aspect of the bill that could significantly increase workload is the "lifetime" ban option available to the court. However, the impact will not begin immediately and will not be fully-realized for decades. Currently, ASAP and the Therapeutic Court program cases are time-limited, with monitoring ending with probation.

Cost estimate detail:

1 FTE Criminal Justice Technician	$59.7
1 FTE Adult Probation Officer, ASAP	$75.3
Telecommunications	$1.0
Facility	$4.7
Equipment repair & maintenance	$0.6
Printing	$0.5
Employee training	$0.4
Department support costs	$2.1

Using data from the Alaska Justice Statistical Analysis Center, DMV estimates it will have to enter an alcohol restriction on 40,000 additional licenses each year.

PS Costs: A Motor Vehicle Service Representative (range 10) can enter approximately 100 restrictions per work day. Implementation of this bill will require 1.5 employees to enter restrictions.

Supply Costs: It cost approximately $2.50 in supplies to produce each card (40,000 x $2.50 = $60,000).

Revenues: DMV collects $50 for each alcohol restricted license (40,000 x $50.00 = $2,000,000)

Dear Representative Crawford:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing HB 283, an act relating to the purchasing of and restrictions concerning alcoholic beverages.

The APOA State Board of Directors recently reviewed this proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

We thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

John Lucking, Jr.
State President

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill allows the court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant convicted of an offense, to impose additional orders on the convicted defendant, such as order the defendant to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages for a period of time up to the lifetime of the defendant, including during the term of any sentence and as a condition of probation, suspended sentence, and suspended imposition of sentence. However, while this will impose additional orders, the impact on probation & parole and institutions could move forward the time a defendent ends up in an institution for violating this order, but more likely, will impact the electronic monitoring (EM) section. The impact on EM could result in increased numbers of defendents on EM, with an increase affecting the purchase of more EM collars and use of more Criminal Justice Technicians. DOC will track the impact of violating this additional order and the impact on EM and could potentially request additional funding based on actual impact.

EXPLANATION OF CHANGES

Changes between HB 287 and proposed CSHB 287 (26-LS1300\E):

- On page 2, lines 6 and 13 of HB 287, the word "explicitly" was removed.

- Under proposed AS 13.70.030(b)(2) (page 2, lines 14-20 of the proposed CS), the original bill allowed for a disclaimer by a "natural guardian" on behalf of a minor child. The proposed CS replaces the phrase "natural guardian" with "an individual having legal custody of a minor child" to conform to language typically used in Alaskan family law. An "individual having legal custody of a minor child" is defined on page 10, lines 25-27.

- Proposed AS 13.70.040(a)(3)(D) on page 3, line 29 through page 4, line 8, provides a default rule for the disposition of a disclaimed property interest. Under the original bill, the default rule was that the disclaimed interest would revert to the benefactor; under the proposed CS, however, the disclaimed interest would instead pass by representation to the descendants of the disclaimant. This change is made to conform to the national Uniform Act.

- Stylistic changes were made on page 7, lines 3, 7, and 28, and page 8, line 4.

- On page 9, line 1, the word "or" was added after "disclaimed;" to clarify that the provisions under subsection (c) are disjunctive.

- On page 9, line 2, "non-judicial foreclosure" was added.

- On page 10, lines 11-13, a section regarding uniformity of application and construction (proposed AS 13.70.150) was added to conform to the national Uniform Act.

- Under proposed AS 13.70.190(6) on page 11, line 6, "a limited liability partnership" was added to the definition of "person."

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 287( )

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES RAMRAS AND GRUENBERG

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the adoption of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, and to the disclaimer of property rights under the Uniform Probate Code."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 13 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 70. Disclaimer of Property Interests.

Sec. 13.70.010. Scope. This chapter applies to disclaimers of any interest in or power over property, whenever created.

Sec. 13.70.020. Supplemented by other law. (a) Unless displaced by a provision of this chapter, the principles of law and equity supplement this chapter.

(b) This chapter does not limit any right of a person to waive, release, disclaim, or renounce an interest in or power over property under a law other than this chapter.

Sec. 13.70.030. Power to disclaim; general requirements; when irrevocable. (a) A person may disclaim, in whole or part, conditionally or unconditionally, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment. A person may disclaim the interest or power even if its creator imposed a spendthrift provision or similar restriction on transfer or a restriction, prohibition, or limitation on the right to disclaim. A disclaimer shall be considered to be unconditional and not subject to modification or revocation unless the disclaimant provides otherwise in the disclaimer.

(b) With court approval, a fiduciary may disclaim, in whole or part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment. Without court approval, a fiduciary may not disclaim, in whole or in part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment, except that

(1) a fiduciary may disclaim, in whole or in part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment, if and to the extent that the instrument creating the fiduciary relationship grants the fiduciary the right to disclaim;

(2) in the absence of a court-appointed guardian, notwithstanding a provision in AS 13.26 to the contrary, an individual having legal custody of a minor child may disclaim on behalf of the minor child, in whole or in part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment, that the minor child is to receive solely as a result of another disclaimer, but only if the interest or power disclaimed by the individual having legal custody does not pass, as a result of the disclaimer, to or for the benefit of the individual having legal custody.

(c) To be effective, a disclaimer must be in writing, declare that the writing is a disclaimer, describe the interest or power disclaimed, be signed by the person making the disclaimer, and be delivered or filed in the manner provided in AS 13.70.100.

(d) A partial disclaimer may be expressed as a fraction, percentage, monetary amount, term of years, limitation of a power, or any other interest or estate in the property.

(e) A disclaimer becomes irrevocable when

(1) any conditions to which the disclaimant has made the disclaimer subject are satisfied; and

(2) the disclaimer is delivered or filed under AS 13.70.100, or becomes effective as provided in AS 13.70.040 - 13.70.090, whichever occurs later.

(f) A disclaimer made under this chapter is not a transfer, assignment, or release.

Sec. 13.70.040. Disclaimer of interest in property. (a) Except for a disclaimer governed by AS 13.70.050 - 13.70.065, the following rules apply to a disclaimer of an interest in property:

(1) the disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable, or, if the interest arose under the law of intestate succession, as of the time of the intestate's death;

(2) the disclaimed interest passes according to any provision in the instrument creating the interest providing for the disposition of the interest, should it be disclaimed, or of disclaimed interests in general;

(3) if the instrument does not contain a provision described in (2) of this subsection, the following rules apply:

(A) if the disclaimant is not an individual, the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant did not exist;

(B) if the disclaimant is an individual, except as otherwise provided in (C) and (D) of this paragraph, the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had died immediately before the interest was created, unless under the governing instrument or other applicable law the disclaimed interest is contingent on surviving to the time of distribution, in which case the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had died immediately before the time for distribution;

(C) if by law or under the instrument, the descendants of the disclaimant would share in the disclaimed interest by any method of representation had the disclaimant died before the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest passes only to the descendants of the disclaimant who survive the time of distribution;

(D) if the disclaimed interest would pass to the disclaimant's estate had the disclaimant died before the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest instead passes by representation to the descendants of the disclaimant who survive the time of distribution; if no descendant of the disclaimant survives the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest passes to those persons, including the state but excluding the disclaimant, and in the shares as would succeed to the transferor's intestate estate under the intestate succession law of the transferor's domicile had the transferor died at the time of distribution; however, if the transferor's surviving spouse is living but is remarried at the time of distribution, the transferor is considered to have died unmarried at the time of distribution;

(4) on the disclaimer of a preceding interest, a future interest held by a person other than the disclaimant takes effect as if the disclaimant had died or ceased to exist immediately before the time of distribution, but a future interest held by the disclaimant is not accelerated in possession or enjoyment as a result of the disclaimer.

(b) For the purposes of (a)(3) of this section, a disclaimed interest

(1) is created at

(A) the death of the benefactor; or

(B) an earlier time, if any, when the benefactor's transfer of the interest is a completed gift for federal gift tax purposes; and

(2) in a revocable trust is treated as if the interest had been created under a will.

(c) In this section,

(1) "benefactor" means the creator of the interest that is subject to a disclaimer;

(2) "future interest" means an interest that takes effect in possession or enjoyment, if at all, later than the time of its creation;

(3) "time of distribution" means the time when a disclaimed interest would have taken effect in possession or enjoyment.

Sec. 13.70.050. Disclaimer of rights of survivorship in jointly held property. (a) On the death of a holder of jointly held property, a surviving holder may disclaim, in whole or part, the greater of

(1) a fractional share of the property determined by dividing the number one by the number of joint holders alive immediately before the death of the holder to whose death the disclaimer relates; or

(2) all of the property except that part of the value of the entire interest attributable to the contribution furnished by the disclaimant.

(b) A disclaimer under (a) of this section takes effect as of the death of the holder of jointly held property to whose death the disclaimer relates.

(c) An interest in jointly held property disclaimed by a surviving holder of the property passes as if the disclaimant predeceased the holder to whose death the disclaimer relates.

Sec. 13.70.060. Disclaimer of interest in property held as a tenancy by the entirety. (a) The survivorship interest in property that is held as a tenancy by the entirety and to which the survivor succeeds by operation of law on the death of the cotenant may be disclaimed as provided in this chapter. For the purposes of this chapter only, the deceased tenant's interest in property held as a tenancy by the entirety is considered to be an undivided one-half interest.

(b) A disclaimer under (a) of this section takes effect as of the death of the deceased tenant to whose death the disclaimer relates.

(c) The survivorship interest in property held as a tenancy by the entirety and disclaimed by the surviving tenant passes as if the disclaimant had predeceased the tenant to whose death the disclaimer relates.

Sec. 13.70.065. Disclaimer of interest by trustee. If a trustee who has the power to disclaim under a court order or under the instrument creating the fiduciary relationship disclaims an interest in property that otherwise would have become trust property, the interest does not become trust property.

Sec. 13.70.070. Disclaimer of power of appointment or other power not held in fiduciary capacity. If a holder disclaims a power of appointment or other power not held in a fiduciary capacity, the following rules apply:

(1) if the holder has not exercised the power, the disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable;

(2) if the holder has exercised the power and the disclaimer is of a power other than a presently exercisable general power of appointment, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power;

(3) the instrument creating the power is construed as if the power expired when the disclaimer became effective.

Sec. 13.70.080. Disclaimer by appointee, object, or taker in default of exercise of power of appointment. (a) A disclaimer of an interest in property by an appointee of a power of appointment takes effect as of the time the instrument by which the holder exercises the power becomes irrevocable.

(b) A disclaimer of an interest in property by an object or taker in default of an exercise of a power of appointment takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable.

Sec. 13.70.090. Disclaimer of power held in fiduciary capacity. (a) If a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity that has not been exercised, the disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable.

(b) If a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity that has been exercised, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power.

(c) A disclaimer under this section is effective as to another fiduciary if the disclaimer so provides and the fiduciary disclaiming has the authority to bind the estate, trust, or other person for whom the fiduciary is acting.

Sec. 13.70.100. Delivery or filing. (a) Subject to (b) - (l) of this section, delivery of a disclaimer may be effected by personal delivery, first class mail, or any other method likely to result in its receipt. A disclaimer sent by first class mail is considered to have been delivered on the date it is postmarked. Delivery by personal delivery or any other method is effective on receipt by the person to whom the disclaimer is to be delivered under this section.

(b) In the case of an interest created under the law of intestate succession or an interest created by will, other than an interest in a testamentary trust,

(1) a disclaimer shall be delivered to the personal representative of the decedent's estate; or

(2) if a personal representative is not then serving, it shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to appoint the personal representative.

(c) In the case of an interest in a testamentary trust,

(1) a disclaimer shall be delivered to the trustee then serving, or if a trustee is not then serving, to the personal representative of the decedent's estate; or

(2) if no personal representative is then serving, a disclaimer shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust.

(d) In the case of an interest in an inter vivos trust,

(1) a disclaimer shall be delivered to the trustee then serving;

(2) if no trustee is then serving, a disclaimer shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust; or

(3) if the disclaimer is made before the time the instrument creating the trust becomes irrevocable, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the settlor of a revocable trust or the transferor of the interest, or the legal representative of the settlor or transferor.

(e) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation made before the time the designation becomes irrevocable, a disclaimer shall be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

(f) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation made after the time the designation becomes irrevocable, a disclaimer shall be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest.

(g) In the case of a disclaimer by a surviving holder of jointly held property, or by the surviving tenant of property held as a tenancy by the entirety, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the person to whom the disclaimed interest passes, or, if the person cannot reasonably be located by the disclaimant, the disclaimer shall be delivered as provided by (b) of this subsection.

(h) In the case of a disclaimer by an object or taker in default of exercise of a power of appointment at any time after the power was created,

(1) the disclaimer shall be delivered to the holder of the power or to the fiduciary acting under the instrument that created the power; or

(2) if no fiduciary is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having authority to appoint the fiduciary.

(i) In the case of a disclaimer by an appointee of a nonfiduciary power of appointment,

(1) the disclaimer shall be delivered to the holder, the personal representative of the holder's estate, or to the fiduciary under the instrument that created the power; or

(2) if no fiduciary is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having authority to appoint the fiduciary.

(j) In the case of a disclaimer by a fiduciary of a power over a trust or estate, the disclaimer shall be delivered as provided in (b) - (d) of this section, as if the power disclaimed were an interest in property.

(k) In the case of a disclaimer of a power by an agent, except a power exercisable by a fiduciary over a trust or estate, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the principal or the principal's representative.

(l) When a disclaimer of an interest in or relating to real property is recorded in the judicial district where the real property is located, there is a rebuttable presumption that the disclaimer has been delivered.

(m) In this section, "beneficiary designation" means an instrument, other than an instrument creating or amending a trust, naming the beneficiary of

(1) an annuity or insurance policy;

(2) an account with a designation for payment on death;

(3) a security registered in beneficiary form;

(4) a pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or other employment-related benefit plan; or

(5) any other nonprobate transfer at death.

Sec. 13.70.110. When disclaimer permitted, barred, or limited. (a) A disclaimer is permitted unless barred under (b) - (f) of this section. A disclaimer is permitted even though the disclaimant is insolvent.

(b) A disclaimer is barred by a written waiver of the right to disclaim.

(c) A disclaimer of an interest in property is barred if any of the following events occurs before the disclaimer becomes effective:

(1) the disclaimant accepts the interest sought to be disclaimed;

(2) the disclaimant voluntarily assigns, conveys, encumbers, pledges, or transfers the interest sought to be disclaimed or contracts to assign, convey, encumber, pledge, or transfer the interest sought to be disclaimed; or

(3) a judicial sale or a nonjudicial foreclosure sale of the interest sought to be disclaimed occurs.

(d) A disclaimer, in whole or part, of the future exercise of a power held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by its previous exercise.

(e) A disclaimer, in whole or part, of the future exercise of a power not held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by its previous exercise unless the power is exercisable in favor of the disclaimant.

(f) A disclaimer of an interest in or power over property under this chapter is barred and is not effective

(1) to the extent the disclaimant is in arrears in child support payments; or

(2) if the disclaimant is involved in a pending court or administrative proceeding to establish or modify the disclaimant's child support obligation or to establish whether the disclaimant is the biological father or mother of a child.

(g) A disclaimer of a power over property that is barred by this section is ineffective. A disclaimer of an interest in property that is barred by this section takes effect as a transfer of the interest disclaimed to the persons who would have taken the interest under this chapter had the disclaimer not been barred.

Sec. 13.70.120. Tax qualified disclaimer. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, if, as a result of a disclaimer or transfer, the disclaimed or transferred interest is treated under the provisions of 26 U.S.C. (Internal Revenue Code) as never having been transferred to the disclaimant, then the disclaimer or transfer is effective as a disclaimer under this chapter. In this section, "26 U.S.C. (Internal Revenue Code)" includes 26 U.S.C. as amended, any successor statute to 26 U.S.C. or 26 U.S.C. as amended, and regulations adopted under 26 U.S.C., 26 U.S.C. as amended, and any successor statute to 26 U.S.C. or 26 U.S.C. as amended.

(b) A tax-qualified disclaimer under 26 U.S.C. (Internal Revenue Code) is subject to the time limits under 26 U.S.C., as amended, even though time limits are not specified under this chapter.

Sec. 13.70.130. Recording of disclaimer. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered, the disclaimer may be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law. Failure to file, record, or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer.

Sec. 13.70.140. Application to existing relationships. Except as otherwise provided in AS 13.70.110, an interest in or power over property existing on the effective date of this chapter as to which the time for delivering or filing a disclaimer under law superseded by this chapter has not expired may be disclaimed after the effective date of this chapter.

Sec. 13.70.150. Uniformity of application and construction. In applying and construing this chapter, consideration must be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among states that enact it.

Sec. 13.70.190. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "disclaimant" means the person to whom a disclaimed interest or power would have passed had the disclaimer not been made;

(2) "disclaimed interest" means the interest that would have passed to the disclaimant had the disclaimer not been made;

(3) "disclaimer" means the refusal to accept an interest in or power over property and includes a renunciation;

(4) "fiduciary" means a personal representative, a trustee, an agent acting under a power of attorney, a guardian, an individual having legal custody of a minor child, or another person authorized to act as a fiduciary with respect to the property of another person;

(5) "individual having legal custody of a minor child" means an individual who, under the law of this state, has legal custody of a minor child as a matter of law or court decree;

(6) "jointly held property"

(A) means property held in the name of two or more persons under an arrangement in which all holders have concurrent interests and under which the last surviving holder is entitled to the whole of the property;

(B) does not include property held as a tenancy by the entirety;

(7) "person" means an individual, whether the individual is ascertained or unascertained, whether the individual is living or not living, and whatever the basis, including intestacy, for the individual's being entitled to an interest in property; a corporation; a business trust; an estate; a trust; a partnership; a limited liability company; a limited liability partnership; an association; a joint venture; a government; a governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality; a public corporation; or any other legal or commercial entity;

(7) "trust"

(A) means

(i) an express trust, charitable or noncharitable, with additions to the express trust, whenever and however created; and

(ii) a trust created under a statute, judgment, or decree that requires the trust to be administered in the manner of an express trust;

(B) does not include a constructive trust or a resulting trust.

Sec. 13.70.195. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act.

* Sec. 2. AS 13.12.801 is repealed.

SPONSOR STATEMENT
HB 287 – UNIFORM ACT: PROPERTY INTEREST DISCLAIMER

"An Act relating to the adoption of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, and to the disclaimer of property rights under the Uniform Probate Code."

HB 287 is a comprehensive collection of rules outlining the types of property interests eligible for disclaimer, the process by which property interests may be disclaimed, and the effect of a disclaimer on the interest itself.

The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act was promulgated in 1999 and has already been adopted in 16 other states. There do not appear to be any reported court cases construing this Act. There have been several law review articles discussing the pros and cons of the Uniform Act; Representative Gruenberg would be happy to provide copies of these articles to any interested parties.

MEMORANDUM January 28, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of HB 287 relating to the adoption of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act (Work Order No. 26-LS1300\R)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Gretchen Staft

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. This bill section creates a new chapter dealing with the disclaimer of property interests. This new chapter is based on the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act.

Sec. 13.70.010. States that AS 13.70 applies to the disclaimer of any interest in property. It does not matter when the disclaimer was created.

Sec. 13.70.020. States that, unless displaced by this chapter, the principles of law and equity apply. States that this chapter doesn't limit a person's right to waive, release, disclaim, or renounce an interest in or power over property under another law.

Sec. 13.70.030. States that a person may disclaim, in whole or part, conditionally or unconditionally, any interest in, or power over, property, including a power of appointment. Allows the disclaimer even if there is a spendthrift provision, a provision similar to a spendthrift provision, or a restriction, prohibition, or limitation on the right to disclaim. Provides that a disclaimer is unconditional and not subject to modification or revocation, unless the disclaimant expressly provides otherwise in the disclaimer.

Allows, if the fiduciary has court approval, a fiduciary to disclaim, in whole or part, any interest in or power over property. Indicates that, without court approval, a fiduciary may not disclaim, except under certain described circumstances, one of which involves natural guardians. Indicates how to determine who is the natural guardian.

Describes the formal requirements for a disclaimer. The disclaimer must be contained in a writing, declare that it is a disclaimer, describe the interest or power disclaimed, be signed by the person making the disclaimer, and delivered or filed as required by AS 13.70.100. Indicates how the portion of property disclaimed by a partial disclaimer may be described (e.g., fraction, percentage, amount, term of years, etc.).

Indicates when a disclaimer becomes irrevocable. States that a disclaimer is not a transfer, assignment, or release.

Sec. 13.70.040. Establishes, except for disclaimers governed by sec. 13.70.050 - 13.70.065 (relating to jointly held property, tenancies by the entirety, and trustee disclaimers), four rules that relate to when a disclaimer becomes effective and how a disclaimer passes.

A disclaimer takes effect when the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable, or at the intestate's death, if related to intestate succession. The disclaimed interest passes according to a provision in the instrument that created the interest. If there is no provision, the disclaimed interest passes under one of four listed alternatives. Establishes how certain future interests take effect when there is a disclaimer of a preceding interest; clarifies that the disclaimer does not accelerate the possession and enjoyment of a future interest held by the disclaimant.

Sec. 13.70.050. Establishes rules for disclaiming interests in jointly held property. Establishes what interest one surviving holder may disclaim on the death of another holder of jointly held property. Indicates when the disclaimer takes effect. States that the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant predeceased the deceased interest holder.

Sec. 13.70.060. Allows for a disclaimer of a survivorship interest in property held as a tenancy by the entirety. The deceased tenant's interest is considered to be an undivided one-half interest. Indicates when the disclaimer takes effect. States that the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant predeceased the deceased cotenant.

Sec. 13.70.065. Addresses the situation of a trustee who is allowed, by court order or the fiduciary instrument, to receive property into a trust. States that if the trustee disclaims an interest that would otherwise have become trust property, the interest does not become trust property.

Sec. 13.70.070. Establishes some general rules for disclaimers of a power of appointment or other power not held in a fiduciary capacity. These rules relate to when the disclaimer takes effect, and directs that the instrument creating the power be construed as if the power expired when the disclaimer became effective.

Sec. 13.70.080. Indicates when disclaimers by persons who may or do receive an interest in property through the exercise of a power of appointment take effect.

Sec. 13.70.090. Indicates when a disclaimer takes effect if a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity. Indicates the conditions when the disclaimer may be effective as to another fiduciary.

Sec. 13.70.100. Indicates how delivery of a disclaimer may be effected in general and in listed specific situations.

Sec. 13.70.110. Indicates that a disclaimer is permitted unless barred under this section. Permits a disclaimer even if the disclaimant is not solvent. States that a disclaimer is barred by a written waiver of the right to disclaim. States that a disclaimer is barred if certain listed events occur before the disclaimer occurs.

States that a disclaimer of the future exercise of a power held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by a previous exercise of the power. A disclaimer of the future exercise of a power not held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by the previous exercise of the power, unless the power is exercisable in favor of the disclaimant.

A disclaimer is barred and not effective to the extent that the disclaimant is in arrears in child support payments, or if the disclaimant is involved in a child support proceeding or in a proceeding to establish paternity of maternity. Indicates that a disclaimer that is barred by this section is ineffective. States that a barred disclaimer takes effect as a transfer of the interest to the persons who would have taken the interest under this chapter if the disclaimer had not been barred.

Sec. 13.70.120. Provides that a disclaimer or transfer is effective as a disclaimer under this chapter if, as a result of the disclaimer or transfer, the disclaimed or transferred interest is treated under federal tax law as never having been transferred to the disclaimant. Provides that a tax-qualified disclaimer under 26 U.S.C. (Internal Revenue Code) is subject to the time limits under 26 U.S.C., as amended, even though time limits are not specified under this chapter.

Sec. 13.70.130. Provides for a disclaimer to be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law if a transferring instrument (for the interest in or power over property) is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered. But a failure to do this does not affect the disclaimer's validity as between the disclaimant and the persons to whom the interest or power passes under the disclaimer.

Sec. 13.70.140. Generally provides that an existing interest or power may be disclaimed after the effective date of this chapter if the time for delivering or filing the disclaimer under law superseded by this chapter has not expired.

Sec. 13.70.190. Defines terms for the new chapter.

Sec. 13.70.195. Gives the chapter the short title of "Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act."

Section 2. Repeals AS 13.12.801, which is the current statute that deals with the disclaimer of property interests.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The bill allows beneficiaries of intestate, testamentary and nontestamentary (nonprobate) interests to execute a disclaimer of those interests. A disclaimer extinguishes the interest as if that interest had never been granted. The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act also makes it clearer that trustees and fiduciaries may use disclaimers and that powers of appointment may be disclaimed.

Re: House Bill 201—Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act

Dear Representative Gruenberg:

Thank you for your interest in sponsoring the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act. As you know, this act was initially introduced as House Bill 201 in the Twenty-Fifth Legislature by Representative LeDoux. Both Representative LeDoux and you asked our group to review the bill and provide our comments. Our group consists of an informal group of estate and trust attorneys who practice primarily in this area in Alaska. We have been working with the Legislature over the past 12 years to make recommendations that will improve Alaska's estate and trust statutes.

We have reviewed House Bill 201 and various articles which have been written suggesting certain changes to this uniform act. In addition, we have reviewed the recent changes to this uniform act enacted by the State of Florida. It should be noted that of the 12 states which have enacted this uniform act, ten states have enacted changes.

We have recommended the changes summarized below. These changes are contained in "CS For House Bill 201", designated "25-LS0615\N (Bannister) 3/17/08". These changes from the uniform act are as follows:

1. AS 13.70.030(a): Allows for conditional disclaimers;

2. AS 13.70.030(b): Requires court approval for a disclaimer by a fiduciary;

3. AS 13.70.030(b): Allows a parent to disclaim for a minor child if the child receives an interest because the parent has disclaimed;

4. AS 13.70.040(a)(3)(D): States that if the statute does not provide for an alternative disposition for an interest or power of appointment disclaimed during the benefactor's lifetime, the interest or power of appointment will revert to the benefactor;

5. AS 13.70.040(b)(1): Clarifies that a disclaimed interest is created at the death of the benefactor or such earlier time, if any, that the benefactor's transfer of the interest is a completed gift for federal gift tax purposes;

6. AS 13.70.040(b)(2): Treats disclaimers of interests in revocable trusts the same as disclaimers of interests in wills;

7. AS 13.70.060: Adds a provision covering disclaimers of property held as tenancy by the entirety;

8. AS 13.70.110(a): States the majority rule that a disclaimer is permitted even though the disclaimant is insolvent;

9. AS 13.70.110(f): States that a disclaimer of an interest or power over property is barred and not effective to the extent that the disclaimant is in arrears in child support payments.

10. AS 13.70.120(b): Adds a notice that the Internal Revenue Code provides time limits for qualified disclaimers;

11. AS 13.70.190: Adds definitions; and

12. AS 13.[ENTIRE STATUTE]: A number of drafting clarifications are added.

Enclosed with this letter is a copy of "CS For House Bill No. 201, 25-LS0615\N" and Legal Services' sectional summary, dated March 16, 2007. In our group's opinion, this bill is now ready for reintroduction and passage. It will make a solid improvement to Alaska's estate and trust statutes.

Thank you very much for your consideration of this legislation.

Sincerely,

David G. Shaftel

Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests

By William P. LaPiana

The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) approved the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act (UDPIA) on July 29, 1999. The new disclaimer act replaces three uniform acts promulgated in 1978 (the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, the Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act and the Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers under Nontestamentary Instruments Act) and will be incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) to replace current UPC § 2-801. UDPIA is the most comprehensive disclaimer statute ever written and is designed to allow every sort of disclaimer that is useful for tax planning purposes.

Nine Month Time Limit

UDPIA does not include a specific time limit for making any disclaimer and makes no reference to the nine month limit of Code § 2518. At the beginning of the drafting process, the NCCUSL drafting committee decided that the new act would reflect the basic concept underlying all disclaimers: no one can be forced to accept a gift. The only bar to a disclaimer, therefore, should be acceptance of the offer. This decision recognizes that, in almost all jurisdictions, disclaimers can be used for more than tax planning. A proper disclaimer will often keep the disclaimed property from the disclaimant's creditors. In short, the new act is a type of enabling act that prescribes all of the rules for refusing a proffered interest in or power over property and the effect of that refusal on the power or interest. UDPIA leaves the tax consequences of the refusal to tax law.

The drafting committee also believed that the decision not to include a specific time limit—to "decouple" the disclaimer statute from the time requirement for a "qualified disclaimer" under Code § 2518—would reduce confusion. The older uniform acts and almost all the current state statutes (many of which are based on those acts) were drafted in the wake of the passage of Code § 2518 in 1976. That gift tax provision replaced the "reasonable time" requirement of prior law with a requirement that a disclaimer must be made within nine months of the creation of the interest disclaimed, if the disclaimer is to be a "qualified disclaimer"—one that is not regarded as a transfer by the disclaimant.

The statutes that were written in response to Code § 2518 reflected the nine month time limit that Code section established. Under most of these statutes (including the 1978 uniform acts and UPC § 2-801), a disclaimer must be made within nine months of the creation of a present interest. For example, a disclaimer of an outright gift under a will must be made within nine months of the decedent's death, corresponding to the requirement of Code § 2518. A future interest, however, may be disclaimed within nine months of the time that the interest vests in possession or enjoyment. For example, a remainder contingent on surviving the holder of the life income interest must be disclaimed within nine months of the death of the life income beneficiary. The time limit for disclaimers of future interests does not correspond to Code § 2518, which generally requires that a qualified disclaimer of a future interest be made within nine months of the interest's creation, no matter how contingent it may be.

The nine month time limit of the existing statutes really is a trap. Although it superficially conforms to Code § 2518, its application to the disclaimer of future interests does not. The UDPIA drafting committee hoped that, by removing all mention of time limits, the statute itself would signal that different law sets the requirements for a tax qualified disclaimer.

Relates Back

UDPIA reads differently from current disclaimer statutes because it abandons the term "relates back." Courts have interpreted that term to mean that the disclaimer takes effect as a refusal at that time, thus preventing the disclaimant from transferring the interest. UDPIA adopts this interpretation. Rather than using the term "relates back," however, UDPIA makes disclaimers effective at the time when the offer of the gift is irrevocable. For example, a disclaimer of a gift under a will is "effective" when the will becomes irrevocable at the death of the testator. In addition,

HeinOnline -- 14 Prob. & Prop. 57 2000

§ 4(f) states that a disclaimer "is not a transfer, assignment, or release." Taken together, the time of effectiveness provisions and § 4(f) clearly state the meaning of a disclaimer as a refusal.

Disclaimer of Trustee Powers

UDPIA creates rules not only for the disclaimer of interests in property, but also for the disclaimer of powers over property. The act includes sections devoted to the disclaimer of powers not held in a fiduciary capacity (powers of appointment) (§ 9) and of powers held in a fiduciary capacity (§ 11). Trustees may have tax motives for surrendering powers. For example, a trust for the primary benefit of a surviving spouse will not qualify for the marital deduction if the trustee has the power to invade principal for others. If the trustee effectively disclaims the power, the trust might then qualify for the marital deduction under Code § 2056. Trustees have, in general, had difficulty disclaiming powers. The courts usually decide that the trustee must accept the trust as created or decline to be trustee. In contrast, UDPIA gives trustees the ability to make such disclaimers. Any disclaimer by a trustee must, of course, comport with the trustee's fiduciary duty.

Disclaimer of Property Added to Trust

Disclaimers of additions of property to a trust are also the subject of innovative provisions. UDPIA § 5 allows trustees to disclaim property that would otherwise be added to a trust. Such disclaimers have been hampered by the same reasoning that has held back potentially useful disclaimers of fiduciary powers. For example, a trustee might wish to disclaim an addition to a trust that would otherwise lead to the imposition of the generation-skipping transfer tax. Again, any disclaimer of a property interest by a trustee must comport with the trustee's fiduciary duty.

Disclaimer of Interest in Jointly Held Property

The most important new provision dealing with the disclaimer of interests in property is § 7, "Disclaimer of Interest in Jointly Held Property." Although existing statutes usually mention the possibility of disclaiming jointly held property, they do not provide details. Any disclaimer of joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety property is an anomalous concept in property law terms. At the death of one joint holder, nothing really "passes" to the survivor. The traditional common law view is that the survivor has been "freed of the participation" of the other joint tenant. Nevertheless, courts have interpreted the existing disclaimer statutes as contemplating the disclaimer of at least the "accretive portion" of the joint tenancy—that part of the property that the decedent would have received had the tenancy been severed unilaterally. See Dancy v. Comm'r, 872 F.2d 84 (4th Cir. 1989); McDonald v. Comm'r, 853 F.2d 1494 (8th Cir. 1988); Kennedy v. Comm'r, 804 F.2d 1332 (7th Cir. 1986); In re Estate of Lamoureux, 412 N.W.2d 628 (Iowa 1987). Holdings such as these, of course, give little help to tenants by the entirety who cannot make a unilateral severance. IRS rulings have generally, albeit reluctantly, followed these cases, allowing the disclaimer of the severable portion. A surviving tenant by the entirety, of course, could not make a qualified disclaimer under these rulings.

The IRS ended the controversy in late 1997 when it promulgated new final regulations under Code § 2518. Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(c)(4)(i) allows a surviving joint tenant or tenant by the entirety to disclaim that portion of the tenancy to which he or she succeeds on the death of the first joint tenant (when there are two joint tenants), whether or not the tenancy could have been unilaterally severed under local law and regardless of the proportion of consideration that the disclaimant furnished. The regulations also create a special rule for joint tenancies between spouses created after July 14, 1988, when the spouse of the donor is not a U.S. citizen. In that case, the donee spouse may disclaim any portion of the joint tenancy includable in the donor spouse's gross estate under Code § 2040, which creates a contribution rule. Thus, the surviving non-citizen spouse may disclaim all of the joint tenancy property if the deceased spouse provided all of the consideration for the tenancy's creation.

Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(c)(4)(ii) also recognizes the unique features of joint bank accounts. The regulations permit the disclaimer by a survivor of that part of the account that the decedent contributed, so long as the decedent could have regained that portion during life by unilateral action. The regulations bar the disclaimer of that part of the account attributable to the survivor's contribution and explicitly extend the rule governing joint bank accounts to brokerage and other investment accounts, such as mutual fund accounts, held in joint name.

Section 7 was drafted to allow every sort of qualified disclaimer of jointly held property possible under the Treasury Regulations. Section 2(5) defines jointly held property to include joint tenancies and tenancies by the entirety as well as all other sorts of joint arrangements by stating: "Jointly held property' means property held in the name of two or more persons under an arrangement in which all holders have concurrent interests and under which the last surviving holder is entitled to the whole of the property." A surviving holder of joint property may disclaim the greater of a fractional portion of the property, determined by dividing the number one by the number of joint holders immediately before the death of the holder giving rise to the opportunity to disclaim, and that portion of the jointly held property not attributable to the contribution of the disclaimant. A surviving spouse who contributed all the consideration for the purchase of the family home held in joint tenancy could disclaim one-half of the property. Had the surviving spouse contributed nothing, he or she could disclaim as much as all of the property, although a qualified disclaimer would be limited to one-half.

"The nine month time limit of the existing statutes really is a trap. Although it superficially conforms to Code § 2518, its application to the disclaimer of future interests does not."

The surviving holder of a joint account who contributed nothing to the account could disclaim the entire account. The disclaimer would be a qualified disclaimer under the regulations so long as the other requirements of Code § 2518 are met. The disclaimant is deemed to have predeceased the last of the other joint holders to die. In the case of spousal joint tenants, the decedent then would be the deemed survivor. The disclaimed portion would pass through his or her estate and could help the estate take advantage of the unified credit.

The provisions of UDPIA dealing with the disclaimer of interests in property, other than disclaimers by trustees, also differ from previous statutes. Section 6 governs all such disclaimers, whether the disclaimed interest was created by will, under intestacy law or by a nontestamentary instrument. The old uniform acts, UPC § 2-801, and almost all state statutes deal separately with disclaimers of testamentary and nontestamentary interests. The separation reflects the need to select a time at which the disclaimant is deemed to have died to determine how the disclaimed interest passes, absent a direction in the instrument. For testamentary interests, the time has always been the death of the decedent. For other interests, the time is usually when the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable.

Effective Time of Disclaimer

Under UDPIA, unless the instrument provides for the disposition of the disclaimed interest should it be disclaimed or for the disposition of disclaimed interests in general (§ 6(b)(2)), the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had died immediately before the time of distribution of the interest under § 6(b)(3)(A). Section 6(a)(1) defines time of distribution as "the time when a disclaimed interest would have taken effect in possession or enjoyment." "Possession" and "enjoyment" are, of course, terms of art from the law of future interests and describe the time at which it is certain to whom property belongs. The terms do not mean that the person actually has the property in hand. For example, the time of distribution of present interests created by will and of all interests arising under the law of intestate succession is the date of the decedent's death. At that moment, the heir or devisee is entitled to his or her devise or share. It is irrelevant that time will pass before the will is admitted to probate and that actual receipt of the gift may not occur until the administration of the estate is complete. The time of distribution of present interests created by nontestamentary instruments generally depends on when the instrument becomes irrevocable. Because the recipient of a present interest is entitled to the property as soon as the gift is made, the time of distribution occurs when the creator of the interest can no longer take it back.

The time of distribution of a future interest is the time when it comes into possession. Previous uniform acts and UPC § 2-801 provided that a disclaimant would be treated as predeceasing the creation of the future interest (for example, the death of the decedent if the interest was in a testamentary trust). That approach leads to an ambiguity. Assume that T's will creates a testamentary trust for A, who is to receive all of the income for life. At A's death, the trust is to be distributed to T's descendants by representation. A is survived by T's son S and daughter D. S has two living children and D has one child. S decides that he would prefer his share of the trust to pass to his children and disclaims. The disclaimer must be made within nine months of T's death if it is to be a qualified disclaimer for tax purposes. Under prior acts and UPC § 2-801, the interest passes as if S had predeceased T.

A problem can arise if S is survived by children born after T's death. It is possible to argue that, had S predeceased T, the afterborn child would not exist and that D and S's two children living at the time of T's death are entitled to all of the trust property. Under § 6(b)(3)(A), however, S is deemed to have died immediately before A's death, even though under § 6(b)(1) the disclaimer is effective as of T's death. There is no doubt, therefore, that S's children living at the time of distribution, whenever born, are entitled to the share of the trust property he would have received.

In the above example, it is clear that S's children should receive exactly what S would have received had he not disclaimed. Section 6(b)(3)(A) ensures that result by requiring that the disclaimed interest pass as if the disclaimant had died. This provision in turn ensures that a disclaimer cannot alter the representational scheme of a multigenerational gift or the intestacy statute. The classic example is the disclaimer by an older generation representative whose children outnumber those of her deceased sibling. For example, X dies intestate, survived by daughter D, her three children and the only child of predeceased son S. D disclaims. Were D deemed simply to have predeceased X, her children could argue that they were entitled to three-fourths of the estate because all the heirs are now in the same generation. Courts have rejected this interpretation of deemed death, taking the position that the disclaimer should only allow the passing of what the disclaimant would otherwise have taken. See, e.g., Welder v. Hitchcock, 617 S.W.2d 294 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981); Estate of Fiengo, 347 N.Y.S.2d 150 (Surr. Ct. 1973). UDPIA agrees with that position.

"The regulations permit the disclaimer by a survivor of that part of the account that the decedent contributed, so long as the decedent could have regained that portion during life by unilateral action."

Preventing the use of a disclaimer to alter the shares of an intestate estate or of a multigenerational gift by limiting the effect of the disclaimer to the disclaimed interest solves one problem but creates another. In the example in the previous paragraph, if the disclaimed interest passes as if D predeceased X, S's child could claim one-fourth of the interest because, once again, all of the heirs would be in the same generation. UDPIA prevents that result by adapting language from UPC § 2-801, providing that if the disclaimant's descendants would have shared in the disclaimed interest had the disclaimant predeceased (in this example with their cousin, S's child), then the interest passes only to the disclaimant's descendants.

The concept of the disclaimer as a deemed death follows the approach that existing statutes take. Just as under those statutes, the result of a disclaimer of an interest created under a will is seldom in doubt under § 6. Even if the will does not provide for the death of the disclaimant before the testator, the doctrine of lapse and anti-lapse statutes will give a clear answer. The law of lapse as it applies to non-testamentary instruments and the interests they create is far less certain. In the absence of comprehensive lapse provisions like UPC §§ 2-603, 2-706 and 2-707, general principles may dictate the exact result of the disclaimer of an interest created in an instrument other than a will. Unfortunately, the exact application of those general principles to any particular situation may not be obvious.

Disclaimers by Corporations and Partnerships

Section 6(b)(3)(B) provides a rule for the passing of property interests disclaimed by persons other than individuals. Because § 8 applies to disclaimers by trustees of property that would otherwise pass to the trust, this paragraph principally applies to disclaimers by corporations, partnerships and the other entities listed in the definition of "person" in § 2(b). A charity, for example, might wish to disclaim property if acceptance of the property would be incompatible with its purposes.

Acceleration of Future Interests

Section 6(b)(4) continues the approach taken in prior uniform acts and UPC § 2-801 that provides for the acceleration of future interests on the making of a disclaimer. For example, Father's will creates a testamentary trust to pay income to his son S for his life, and on his death to pay the remainder to S's descendants then living, by representation. If S disclaims his life income interest in the trust, the remainder will immediately become possessory in S's descendants determined as of Father's death, just as if S really had not survived. It is immaterial that the actual situation at S's death might be different, with different descendants entitled to the remainder.

Disclaimers of Powers of Appointments

Section 9 deals with disclaimers by holders of powers of appointment and § 10 with disclaimers by appointees, permissible appointees and takers in default. A properly disclaimed power ceases to exist as of the time the disclaimer becomes effective, which in turn depends on what sort of power is involved and whether or not it has been exercised. If a holder disclaims a power before exercising it, the disclaimer takes effect at the time that the instrument creating the power became irrevocable and the disclaimer destroys the power. If the holder has exercised the power, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power. The power ceases to exist from that time forward, unless the power is a presently exercisable general power of appointment. Once exercised, such a power cannot be disclaimed. This is the only provision in UDPIA that makes a specific act sufficient to bar a subsequent disclaimer.

Section 10 makes a disclaimer by an appointee take effect as of the time that the instrument by which the holder exercises the power becomes irrevocable. Disclaimers by objects and takers in default take effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable. The effect of the disclaimer is the same as that of any disclaimer of an interest of property under § 6. The disclaimed interest will pass according to the explicit provisions of the instrument exercising or creating the power or under the default rule of

§ 6(b)(3)(A), which deems the disclaimant to have predeceased the time of distribution.

Delivery

The delivery provisions of § 12 are designed to ensure that the disclaimer reaches the person or entity having the responsibility to distribute the disclaimed interest. UDPIA does not require filing the disclaimer with a court unless there is no person or entity to whom delivery can be made. For example, a disclaimer of an interest in a decedent's estate must be filed with the court having the authority to appoint the personal representative only if no personal representative is serving at the time.

Bars to Disclaimers

Section 13 of UDPIA is captioned "When Disclaimer Barred or Limited." Like existing statutes, this section recognizes that a waiver of the right to disclaim, as well as an assignment, conveyance, encumbrance, pledge, transfer or judicial sale of the interest sought to be disclaimed, will bar a disclaimer. In addition, the past exercise of a general power of appointment bars a disclaimer of the power. The section also includes three novel provisions. First, subsection (e) states that other law can bar or limit a disclaimer. This provision recognizes situations such as the cases holding that disclaimers are transfers in the context of Medicaid qualification or issues in dealing with federal tax liens. (The Supreme Court has granted certiorari in Drye v. U.S., 119 S. Ct. 1453 (1999), to resolve the tax lien question.) Second, subsection (f) provides that a disclaimer barred by § 13 takes effect as a transfer of the interest disclaimed to those who would have taken the interest had the disclaimer not been barred. This provision eliminates the ambiguity that would otherwise be caused by an ineffective refusal to accept property. Third, subsection (g) provides that any disclaimer that meets the requirements for a qualified disclaimer under Code § 2518 is a valid disclaimer under UDPIA.

Conclusion

UDPIA recognizes that disclaimers have a wide variety of uses. The act provides rules for all of those potential uses, while leaving policy questions on the effect of a proper refusal of property or rejection of a power to other law.

Keeping Current PROBATE

Keeping Current—Probate offers a look at selected recent cases, rulings and regulations, literature and legislation. The editors of Probate & Property welcome suggestions and contributions from readers.

CASES

• TAX APPORTIONMENT: Will provision prevails over statutory apportionment. The decedent's will directed that all death taxes be paid from the residue and defined death taxes to include all estate, inheritance and succession taxes "which are assessed by reason of my death." In Peterson v. Mayse, 993 S.W.2d 217 (Tex. Ct. App. 1999), the court held that the apportionment clause overrode the statutory apportionment rule.

• EQUITABLE ADOPTION: Proof must be by clear and convincing evidence. In Williams v. Estate of Pender, 738 So. 2d 453 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1999), the court required clear and convincing evidence of each of the five elements of equitable adoption: 1) agreement to adopt, 2) performance by the natural parents by surrender of custody, 3) performance by child by living in the home of the foster parents, 4) partial performance by the foster parents by taking the child into their home and treating the child as their own and 5) intestacy of the foster parents. For a similar holding, see Welch v. Wilson, 516 S.E.2d 35 (W. Va. 1999).

• REPUBLICATION BY CODICIL: Post-marriage codicil republishes premarital will. A testator executed his will and married his wife later that day. He subsequently adopted his wife's child. After the adoption the testator executed two codicils. His wife alleged that the will was revoked by a state statute providing that a subsequent marriage and birth or adoption of a child revokes a premarital will. The court in In re Estate of Wells, 983 P.2d 279 (Kan. Ct. App. 1999), held the will effective because it was republished by codicil after the marriage and adoption.

• ATTORNEY'S FEES: Executor's undue influence precludes payment from estate. A will was denied probate because the executor exercised undue influence over the decedent. That executor moved for payment of his lawyer's fees from the estate, but the court denied the fee application. In re Estate of Herbert, 979 P.2d 1133 (Haw. 1999).

• DOMICILE: Decedent's intent outweighs physical location of property. The decedent's estate was administered in Massachusetts. An after-death survey of the decedent's property revealed that 11% of the property, including his house, was actually located in Connecticut. The court in Bernier v. DuPont, 715 N.E.2d 442 (Mass. App. Ct. 1999), held that the decedent intended to reside in Massachusetts and Massachusetts courts had jurisdiction based on the decedent's domicile.

• PRETERMITTED CHILD: Nonmarital child entitled to forced share. A decedent's will was executed before the birth of his child. Although the child's mother was married to someone else at the time of the child's birth, the court held that the child qualified as a pretermitted child because there was clear and convincing evidence of paternity overcoming the presumption that the mother's husband was the child's father In re Matter of Wilkins, 691 N.Y.S.2d 878 (N.Y. Surr. Ct. 1999).

RULINGS AND REGULATIONS

• GST TAX: Failure to allocate exemption on Schedule R excused under substantial compliance doctrine. PLR 199937026.

• INCOME TAX BASIS: Beneficiary not estopped from claiming a stepped up basis greater than the fair market value of the asset shown on the estate tax return. TAM 199933001.

• MARITAL DEDUCTION: Savings clause in deceased spouse's will sufficient to support interpretation limiting distribution to surviving spouse consistent with marital deduction rules. TAM 199932001.

• POWER OF APPOINTMENT: Trustee's power to amend a trust determined not to be a general power because the trustee had no beneficial interest in the trust and the grantor's intent was to benefit the trustee's children. FSA 199830026.

• VALUATION: Special valuation rules of Code § 2701 may apply to formation of a partnership. TAM 199933002.

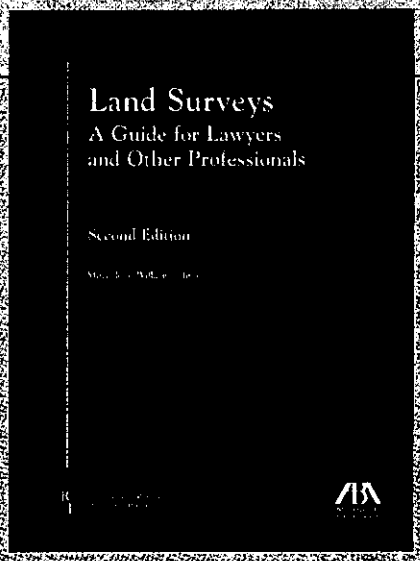
A COMPLETE AND READY REFERENCE TO LAND SURVEYS

Revised and expanded!

"Land Surveys is a welcome addition to the legal and surveying professions. One of only a few such publications, it discusses aspects of the real estate transfer from the perspective of both the lawyer and the professional surveyor. With a thorough reading, these two professions will better understand the role, duty, responsibility and scope of services each provides."

Dr. Richard L. Elgin, LS, PE
President, Elgin Surveying & Engineering, Rolla MO



A practical and necessary guide

This expanded new edition of Land Surveys: A Guide for Lawyers and Other Professionals provides a broad overview of this essential though often misunderstood aspect of real estate closings. The author, Mitchell G. Williams, is an accomplished real estate lawyer who is also a licensed land surveyor. He has assembled and edited articles from noted experts in the fields of commercial real estate law, title insurance, surveying, civil engineering, and real estate lending.

What you need to know about land surveys

This collection of articles, each written by experts in the field, will supply you with the kinds of questions a lawyer should ask and the procedures to be followed when the transaction involves a land survey. Among other issues, these essays point out the various issues that a land survey can disclose, including aspects of the property that are not covered by title insurance. And the need for correct and current information from a current land survey becomes increasingly important as so many loans are securitized.

Among the areas covered in this book:

- What is a land survey
- A comprehensive survey checklist
- Minimum standards and beyond
- The relationship between surveys and title insurance
- The surveyor's responsibility and liability
- Key issues involving surveys and insurance of difficult areas
- Technological change

This book is a must-have not only for real estate lawyers, but for bankers and other professionals whose work involves the transfer, sale or securitization of property. Order your copy today.

The Christian Science Monitor

Ban upheld on offering child porn

The Supreme Court allows a 2003 law dealing with 'virtual' child porn that some thought was too broad.

By Warren Richey Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor posted May 20, 2008 at 12:00 am EDT

Washington —
The US Supreme Court has upheld an effort by Congress to make it illegal to offer or promote child pornography – even when the photographs being offered or promoted don't really exist or involve real children.

In a 7-to-2 decision announced on Monday, the high court said the law was a constitutional effort by Congress to protect innocent children from a thriving form of abuse.

The majority justices upheld the law even though it restricted certain kinds of speech that critics said must be protected by the First Amendment.

Instead, the high court said Congress had struck the correct balance in passing the anti-child-pornography law.

"We hold that offers to provide or requests to obtain child pornography are categorically excluded from the First Amendment," writes Justice Antonin Scalia for the majority.

The PROTECT Act of 2003 is an attempt to shut down a flourishing trade in child pornography over the Internet. It seeks to do it not only by barring the exchange of pictures depicting children in sexually explicit poses, but also by outlawing any attempt to convince another person that offered pictures are of real child pornography involving real children.

In effect, the law makes it illegal to try to dupe other would-be consumers of child pornography into thinking that they are about to receive actual child pornography. The activity is illegal even if the photographs do not involve actual child pornography. In addition, such pandering is illegal even if the photographs don't exist.

The majority justices said the statute was not too broad or too vague to pass constitutional muster.

The law "punishes speech seeking to conclude illegal transactions," Justice Scalia said in a statement from the bench. "Such speech does not get First Amendment protection."

He adds, in the opinion: "Offers to give or receive what it is unlawful to possess have no social value and thus, like obscenity, enjoy no First Amendment protection."

His opinion was joined by Chief Justice John Roberts and Justices John Paul Stevens, Anthony Kennedy, Clarence Thomas, Stephen Breyer, and Samuel Alito.

Justices David Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg dissented. Justice Souter writes that prior Supreme Court rulings established that only pornographic photographs of actual children may be prohibited and that virtual child pornography retains First Amendment protections.

Justices Souter and Ginsburg said the 2003 PROTECT Act violates free-speech protections by allowing a new pandering prohibition aimed at suppressing otherwise protected speech. In other words, if virtual child pornography is protected by the First Amendment, how could an attempt to pander virtual child pornography be illegal?

"Just six years ago the court struck down a statute outlawing particular material merely represented to be child pornography, but not necessarily depicting actual children," Souter writes. "The court is going against the grain of pervasive First Amendment doctrine that tolerates speech restriction not on mere general tendencies of expression, or the private understandings of speakers or listeners, but only after a critical assessment of practical consequences."

The decision comes in the case of Michael Williams of Key Largo, Fla. Mr. Williams was arrested in May 2004 after an encounter with an undercover agent in an adult chat room on the Internet.

He logged into the chat room and posted a message that he had "good" photographs of his 2-year-old daughter that he wished to swap for similar photos. An undercover federal agent responded and engaged Williams in a private Web chat. The agent identified himself as a 30-year-old mother with a 10-year-old daughter.

Williams and the undercover agent swapped photos. The children depicted in the photos were clothed and were not engaged in sexually explicit activities.

According to court documents, Williams tried to get the undercover agent to provide a more sexually explicit photograph. When it did not arrive, Williams posted a warning message in the chat room that the undercover agent was a cop. The undercover agent responded in a chat room message accusing Williams of being a cop.

In response to the accusation that he was an undercover cop, Williams posted a hyperlink to seven sexually explicit photographs of children ages 5 to 15.

Four days later, federal agents executed a search warrant for Williams's trailer in Key Largo. They discovered 22 computer images of children engaged in various forms of sexual activity. They also discovered that Williams lived alone and did not have a 2-year-old daughter.

Williams was charged with possession of child pornography. But federal prosecutors also charged him with violating the federal child-pornography pandering law for his Internet encounter with the undercover agent.

Williams agreed to plead guilty to both charges, but he reserved the right to appeal the pandering conviction. His lawyers said he shouldn't be held criminally liable for false claims made in an adult chat room.

The 11th US Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta agreed with Williams and reversed the pandering conviction.

In overturning the appeals court, the high court said, "The Eleventh Circuit believed it a constitutional difficulty that no child pornography need exist to trigger the statute. In its view, the fact that the statute could punish a 'braggart, exaggerator, or outright liar' rendered it unconstitutional."

The decision continues: "That seems to us a strange constitutional calculus."

Scalia said the 11 Circuit's reading of the law would forbid the government from punishing fraudulent offers to provide illegal products. "We see no logic in that position; if anything, such statements are doubly excluded from the First Amendment," he writes.

Responding to Souter's dissent, Scalia says the high court's holding does not overrule a 2002 decision in a case called Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition.

In that case, the court ruled that Congress could not ban virtual child pornography in an attempt to stamp out actual child pornography. "According to the dissent, Congress has made an end-run around the First Amendment's protection of virtual child pornography by prohibiting proposals to transact in such images rather than prohibiting the images themselves," Scalia writes.

He says an offer to provide or a request to receive virtual child pornography is not prohibited by the PROTECT Act and continues to have First Amendment protection. "A crime is committed only when the speaker believes or intends the listener to believe that the subject of the proposed transaction depicts real children," Scalia writes.

Souter and Ginsburg say the statute must be based on more than mere belief by a speaker or the speaker's desire to foster a belief in another.

"First Amendment freedoms are most in danger when the government seeks to control thought or to justify its laws for that impermissible end," Souter writes, quoting from the court's 2002 Free Speech Coalition decision. "The right to think is the beginning of freedom, and speech must be protected from the government because speech is the beginning of thought."

In contrast, the majority said Congress struck the correct balance in the statute. "Child pornography harms and debases the most defenseless of our citizens," Scalia writes. "Both the state and federal governments have sought to suppress it for many years, only to find it proliferating through the new medium of the Internet."

He adds, "This court held unconstitutional Congress's previous attempt to meet this new threat, and Congress responded with a carefully crafted attempt to eliminate the First Amendment problems we identified. As far as the provision at issue in this case is concerned, that effort was successful."

In other action, the high court upheld a Kentucky program that provided tax exemptions for Kentucky-based municipal bonds.

Voting 7 to 2, the justices ruled that a state may decline to charge taxes on interest earned on its own bonds while taxing residents for interest earned on bonds from other states. Forty-two states offer some form of tax exemption for their bonds, while taxing out-of-state bonds.

In another case, the high court upheld a portion of the conviction of the so-called Millennium Bomber who was allegedly plotting to blow up Los Angeles International Airport. He was arrested attempting to drive into the United States from Canada. Officials found explosives in his car.

The Supreme Court ruled 8 to 1 that Ahmed Ressam was properly charged and convicted under a law prohibiting carrying explosives while committing a felony.

In Mr. Ressam's case, the underlying felony was making false statements on his US Customs form while attempting to enter the US by car in December 1999. At issue was whether the underlying felony must involve committing a crime linked to the explosives, not simply possessing the explosives while committing a felony.

A federal appeals court had thrown out a single count of Ressam's nine-count conviction.

On Monday, the Supreme Court reversed that decision. The ruling will make it easier for federal prosecutors to return lengthy prison sentences against suspected terrorists caught in possession of explosives. Oral argument was presented in the case by Attorney General Michael Mukasey, who is now batting 1.000 as an advocate before Supreme Court.

Re: House Bill 298 - relating to sexual assault and domestic violence

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to respectfully request that you schedule House Bill 298 for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. HB 298 is one of several bills that the Governor has introduced to confront and help reduce the alarming and discouraging rate of sex offenses and crimes involving domestic violence in our state.

The bill makes important changes to several criminal laws. For example, it clarifies that accessing child pornography with the intent to view it is a crime. A recent court decision found that our statute requires more than viewing child pornography on a computer to be a crime under the current statute. The bill also requires a person to register as a sex offender in our state if required to do so in another state. Alaska should not be a friendly destination to persons hoping to avoid sex offender registration by moving to our state.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each provision of the bill.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

HOUSE BILL 298
SEXUAL ASSAULT AND DOMESTIC VIOLENCE
Sectional Analysis

Sections 1 and 2 correct an error made in 2007 when the legislature enacted AS 11.56.759, that adopted a class A misdemeanor if a sex offender violates specific conditions of probation or parole. One of the requirements of the crime is that the person have served the entire period of incarceration imposed for the crime. This is effective for probationers, but not for parolees, because a person is never on parole if he or she has served the entire period of incarceration. A member of the Parole Board brought this issue to our attention, because the statute has caused problems for the board in dealing with parolees. These sections remove parolees from the statute.

Section 3 rewrites AS 11.56.840, failure to register as a sex offender in the second degree. Although the proposal is similar to current law, it removes the requirement that the state prove a culpable mental state for the conduct of not registering or otherwise filing the required notices and information. The state would still be required to prove that the person knew he or she was required to register and failed to do so. The section also adopts an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances outside the control of the person prevented him or her from registering, and that the person contacted the Department of Public Safety immediately upon being able to do so.

Section 4 would raise a form of harassment in the second degree (that is, with intent to harass or annoy another person, the person subjects the other person to offensive physical contact) to harassment in first degree if the offensive physical contact is by the offender touching the other person's genitals, anus, or female breast. Harassment in the first degree is a class A misdemeanor; the second degree offense is a class B misdemeanor. There have been prosecutions recently involving offensive touchings that occurred so quickly that the court concluded that the victim did not have time to convey lack of consent to the offender. The court reduced these charges from sexual assault to harassment in the second degree. This conduct is more serious that a class B misdemeanor; the bill would raise it to a class A misdemeanor.

Sections 5, 6, and 7 address a problem with Alaska law prohibiting possession of child pornography that was raised by a recent decision of the Alaska Court of Appeals, Worden v. State, 213 P.3d 144 (Alaska App. 2009). Worden held that our current statute does not prohibit a person from viewing child pornography on a computer; rather, the statute requires that the person must also save it on the computer to be considered to possess it. In response to this decision, the bill adopts the federal approach. It prohibits possession of child pornography, and it also prohibits a person from knowingly accessing child pornography on a computer with the intent to view it.

The bill also proposes an affirmative defense that is similar to federal law. The affirmative defense would address a situation where a person finds child pornography on their computer, and did not obtain it themselves. The defense requires that there are three or less depictions, and the person, without showing the material to another person except law enforcement, destroys the depictions or contacts law enforcement and turns it over to them.

Sections 8, 9, and 10 amend the crime that prohibits the electronic distribution of indecent material to minors by expanding the offense to prohibit any distribution of indecent material to minors.

Section 11 adds the crimes of human trafficking in the first and second degrees, distribution of child pornography, possession of child pornography, and distribution of indecent materials to minors to the crimes that are not eligible for a suspended imposition of sentence.

Section 11 also includes an amendment that removes "substantially" when describing a crime in another jurisdiction that may be a predicate conviction that would disallow the use of a suspended imposition of sentence for other offenses. This conforms with other statutes that require that a predicate offense in another jurisdiction be only similar to an offense in Alaska. Examples include AS 12.55.145(a) (presumptive sentencing), AS 11.41.320(a)(5) (third degree assault), and AS 11.41.110(a)(5) (murder in the second degree).

Section 12 adds to the conditions of probation that may be imposed on a person convicted of a sex offense. It gives the court discretion to order the person to submit e-mail addresses and other networking addresses to his or her probation officer, who would be required to give this information to the Troopers and to the local law enforcement agency. If the person was convicted of sexual abuse of a minor or an offense related to child pornography, it gives the court discretion to prohibit the person from using an Internet site, communicating with children under 16 years of age, or possessing or using a computer.

Section 13 amends the aggravating factor at sentencing that allows the court to increase a sentence above the sentencing range if the defendant knew that the victim was particularly vulnerable. It does this by adding the consumption of alcohol or drugs as factors that might make a victim particularly vulnerable.

Section 14 adds two new aggravating factors to the sentencing law. First, it allows the court to increase a sentence above the sentencing range for a crime against a person (AS 11.41) committed against a person that the defendant was dating or with whom the defendant has engaged in a sexual relationship. Second, it allows the court to increase the sentence if the defendant is convicted of sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree under AS 11.41.436(a)(2) (a person 16 years of age or older having sexual contact with a child under 13 years old), if the defendant is 18 years old or older.

Section 15 adds a new provision to sex offender registration law that requires a person present in Alaska, who is convicted of an offense out of state that requires registration in that jurisdiction, to register in Alaska. This requirement would apply even if Alaska does not have a criminal provision similar to the crime in the other state that requires registration there.

Section 16 amends Rule 16(b)(1)(A) by prohibiting the copying of child pornography as part of the discovery process in a criminal prosecution. It would allow defense counsel, the defendant, and defense experts to examine the material, but it must be kept in the custody and control of a law enforcement agency or the prosecuting authority. Federal law has a similar provision. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3509(m).

Sections 17 and 18 include the applicability and effective date provisions.

This proposed legislation would require a person who is required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in another jurisdiction to register in Alaska even if there is no substantive law in Alaska that is similar to the offense the person was convicted of.

For sex offender registration purposes, "jurisdiction" is defined at 13 AAC 09.900(a)(5) and includes the 50 states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and federally-recognized Indian tribes that have elected to function as a registration jurisdiction. Each jurisdiction has its own distinct laws pertaining to the registration of sex offenders, including which offenses require registration and the length of time an offender is required to register. ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

For the department's Records & Identification unit to continue to accomplish a core service of providing public access to current information regarding sex offenders in Alaska, the determination that a person must register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in Alaska because of their requirement to register in another jurisdiction must be made timely and must be based on information that has been validated.

Considerable research and analysis of the criminal history background of persons with sex offense convictions outside of Alaska would be required to determine whether the offense of conviction is a registerable offense under the current laws of that jurisdiction and whether or not the person is subject to that jurisdiction's registration requirements. Coordination with the jurisdiction's sex offender central registry would need to occur to obtain source documents and other relevant information on the person.

Additionally, the department would need to continually monitor the status of registration laws and legal cases affecting sex offender registration in all jurisdictions to ensure a person required to register in Alaska under proposed AS 12.63.100(6)(D) continued to be subject to the registration requirements of the jurisdiction that their offense was committed in.

The department anticipates that these additional efforts will require one new full-time Criminal Justice Planner position. This position would be responsible to review and evaluate offender records with out-of-state sex offense convictions to determine the requirement to register under proposed AS 12.63.100(6)(D), to coordinate with other jurisdictions' sex offender central registry offices, and to monitor sex offender registration laws in other jurisdictions and any changes for possible impact to currently registered offenders.

This bill will have the effect of increasing the number of prisoners the Department of Corrections (DOC) will have to house beginning in Fiscal Year 2012. These approximate costs are based on the average number of new convictions or remands per year and the average estimated sentences associated with each change in the draft legislation. DOC will track the impact and could potentially request additional funding based on actual impacts.

BILL NO. HB 298

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

This bill specifically adds a number of new crimes, expands existing crimes, and enhances sentences for existing crimes:

- Sections 1 and 2 remove parolees from the statute. This change should have little to no fiscal impact.

- Section 3 changes the elements for failure to register as a Sex Offender or child kidnapper in the second degree. It is estimated this will generate 3 new convictions per year carrying an average 2 month sentence.

- Section 4 raises a form of harassment in the second degree to harassment in the first degree if the offensive physical contact is by the offender touching the other person's genitals, anus, or female breast. The change from a Class B misdemeanor to a Class A misdemeanor is estimated to generate 18 convictions per year that carry an average 30 day sentence.

- Sections 5, 6, and 7 address a problem with current Alaska law prohibiting possession of child pornography. This amendment prohibits possession of child pornography, and also prohibits a person from knowingly accessing child pornography on a computer with the intent to view. We anticipate a relatively low number of new convictions and a possible increase in remands. Convictions would generate an estimated average 4 year sentence. The actual impact will be closely tracked by DOC.

- Section 8, 9, and 10 changes the elements of distribution of indecent material to minors to include any distribution in addition to electronic distribution. Because most of these cases are by computer, the impact on DOC is small and is included in Sections 5-6-7.

- Section 11 prohibits the suspension of sentences for human trafficking and possession of child pornography. DOC will track the actual impact.

- Section 12 adds discretionary probation conditions for Sex Offenders providing available electronic mail addresses and prohibiting internet use, communication with children, and possession or use of a computer. DOC believes this will have minimal impact above the number of remands that occur each year for such violations, however, we will track any impact this change to the bill may have.

- Section 13 adds as a sentencing aggravator adding the incapacity of a victim by alcohol or drugs. Due to a lack of data, the DOC is unable to assess an impact. The impact will be closely tracked.

- Section 14 adds two sentencing aggravators in a sex offense: first, to increase a sentence for a crime against a person committed against a person that the defendant was dating or with whom the defendant has engaged a sexual relationship; second, the sentence is increased if the defendant is 18 or over and is convicted of sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree under AS 11.41.436(a). Due to a lack of data, the DOC is unable to assess an impact. The impact will be closely tracked.

- Section 15 expands the definition of sex offense for sex offender registration to include sex offenses committed in other states where a person must register as a Sex Offender or child kidnapper. There are too many factors involved to determine a fiscal impact. DOC will track the actual impact.

- Section 16 amends criminal discovery restriction regarding child pornography. This represents no fiscal impact for DOC.

This bill adopts a class A misdemeanor for offensive touching that does not arise to sexual assault in the first, second or third degree. The bill adopts a class C felony for a person who knowingly accesses child pornography on a computer. The bill extends the prohibition of distributing indecent material to a minor to all forms of distribution. The bill provides that a person convicted of human trafficking or possession or distribution of child pornography may not be given a suspended imposition of sentence, and imposes certain restrictions on defendants.

FISCAL NOTE #2

STATE OF ALASKA
2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 298

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

The bill will create a new misdemeanor crime of harassment for touching another person without consent. Additionally, the bill will eliminate the mens rea element associated with circumstances under which someone fails to register as a sex offender.

This bill will also change the procedures for defense access to evidence in child pornography cases. Under the proposed change to Criminal Rule 16, the evidence that forms the basis of such charges must remain in the custody and control of a law enforcement agency and the prosecuting attorney, and no copies can be made. This could result in additional costs associated with the logistics of reviewing and evaluating evidence.

The agency does not predict a significant fiscal impact as a result of the proposed statute. Accordingly, the agency submits a zero fiscal note.

BILL NO. HB 298

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

The bill will create a new misdemeanor crime of harassment for touching another person's genitals, anus or female breast, directly or through clothing. Additionally, the bill will eliminate the mens rea element associated with circumstances under which someone fails to register as a sex offender. These changes could increase prosecutions and litigation associated with failure to register as a sex offender and child pornography cases.

This bill will also change the procedures for defense access to evidence in child pornography cases. Under the proposed change to Criminal Rule 16, the evidence that forms the basis of such charges must remain in the custody and control of a law enforcement agency and the prosecuting attorney, and no copies can be made. This could result in additional costs associated with the logistics of the defense reviewing and testing evidence. For example, in a child pornography case any experts hired to review evidence would have to be paid for time involved with traveling and reviewing evidence where it is being held by the prosecutor or police agency, and facilities will have to be made available for evidence review and testing.

The agency does not predict a significant fiscal impact as a result of the proposed statute. Accordingly, the agency submits a zero fiscal note.

Governor Sean Parnell

Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Governor Parnell,

On behalf of the Network's 18 member programs that provide services to victims and survivors of domestic and sexual violence, we thank you for bringing forth HB 298. HB 298 will provide for more offender accountability and will send a clear message that sexual assaults against Alaskans will not be tolerated.

This bill will close many loopholes that currently exist in Alaska law and no longer provide offenders with an escape mechanism from prosecution. For example, by making it a crime to knowingly access child pornography with the intent to view it, the cyber crimes investigators will now have the ability to bring charges against perpetrators that previously could avoid the law simply by not downloading these images or "possessing" them.

Finally, we know from our work that most sexual assaults occur between people that know each other or are engaged in a relationship. Our statutes currently proscribe harsh penalties for violating familial trust relationships and other caretaker relationships, but not for intimate partner violence, which is equally betraying. Allowing judges to enhance sentencing penalties through an aggravating factor when perpetrators betray the trust in these relationships and sexually assault their intimate partners will send a clear message that when you betray any trust relationship you will be held accountable.

The Network thanks you Governor in bringing forth this legislation which is a first step in reducing the rates of sexual assault in Alaska.

Sincerely

Peggy Brown, Executive Director

Re: House Bill 298
Constitutional Issues

Chair Ramras:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding House Bill 298. The ACLU of Alaska represents thousands of Alaskans who are concerned with constitutional rights and civil liberties protected under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. From that perspective, we have several concerns with the proposed legislation.

Section 16 Proposed Amendments to Rule 16 of the Rules of Criminal Procedure

Section Sixteen of the Bill proposes changes to the rules of criminal procedure that violate the state and federal constitutional rights to a fair trial and to effective representation, and would result in lengthy and costly litigation. The Section proposes that, where evidence in a criminal trial constitutes child pornography, the evidence should be revealed to defendants, defense attorneys, and defense experts only at a state facility, such as a police station or District Attorney's office. While protecting the privacy of the victims of child pornography production is an important interest, the proposed changes to the Rules of Criminal Procedure unnecessarily restrict the rights of the accused.

In some cases relating to child pornography, the use of a technological expert is invaluable. Defendants are entitled to establish that the images at issues are not child pornography, were planted on the drive by another party, do not represent real children, or were altered in some way. The computer source files would require review at length by an expert witness. Being required to work at a local police department or District Attorney's office would make the work of these experts essentially impossible. Moreover, the analysis of hard drives and other media would likely require unique analysis programs which would require examining the images on the expert's own computers. The proposed rule amendment would effectively deprive defendants of the effective use of expert testimony, which would be a key defense resource in these cases.

Even where the use of an expert is unnecessary, the defense attorney may need to review the files at length, to determine if some of the images in fact represent adults, for instance, or whether some of them are duplicate images. Many of these cases involve hundreds or thousands of images. Requiring defense attorneys to do their work at times and places convenient to the state is unnecessarily restrictive.

A case from Washington State perfectly illustrates why the proposed rule would result in lengthy and expensive litigation which would ultimately result in the overturning of the statute. In State v. Boyd, the prosecution in a child pornography case sought and obtained a protective order from the court which only permitted the defense to view the evidence at a state facility. 158 P.3d 54 (Wash. 2007). The Supreme Court of Washington ruled that the Rules of Evidence, the Fifth Amendment right to a fair trial, and the Sixth Amendment right to effective representation by counsel all required that the protective order be struck down and the defendant be granted a new trial, because the defendant could not be adequately represented nor fairly tried under the order.

The important privacy of needs of victims can be protected without the measures laid out in Section 16. For example, the Boyd court upheld an order requiring the defense to keep "mirror image" hard drives of evidence under lock and key, to use firewall software on any computer viewing images that was connected to the internet, making the attorney personally and professionally responsible for any unauthorized release of the images, and allowing state experts to verify the complete eradication of the images after the conclusion of the case.

The power of a court to issue a protective order in a particular case already exists and needs no augmentation by the legislature. An order issued after consideration of the unique facts of an individual case is far more likely to survive appellate review than a blanket rule set down by the legislature.

Section 16 of H.B. 298 violates the state and federal constitutional rights to a fair trial and to effective representation. We recommend the Bill be revised so that the courts would be permitted to manage the disclosure of evidence on a case-by-case basis, rather than by instituting a blanket rule that would invite litigation.

Section 15 Requirement for Registration of Sex Offenders from Other Jurisdictions

Section 15 proposes to expand the list of those required to register as sex offenders to include anyone required to register in another jurisdiction. The ACLU of Alaska has numerous objections to this amendment.

The Alaska Supreme Court ruled in Doe v. State that those convicted of sex offenses in Alaska before the enactment of the sex offender registry statutes in 1994 could not be required to register, as the statute would otherwise violate the ex post facto provision of the State Constitution. 189 P.3d 999 (Alaska 2008). In many other jurisdictions, the state courts have not declared their state sex offender statutes to offend their own ex post facto rules. The Alaska ex post facto provision may prohibit mandatory registration for those convicted of offenses in another state prior to 1994. A final determination would need to be made by the Alaska Supreme Court, likely after lengthy litigation, and potentially overturning many convictions.

The proposed amendment in Section 15 also usurps the State's own policy making decisions. In Alaska, for instance, the legislature has set the age of consent at sixteen. This amendment would nullify the legislature's judgment and require someone convicted of having sex with a 17-year-old in another state to report to the Department of Public Safety and face incarceration should he fail to report on time. Should he end up incarcerated, the people of the state of Alaska will be paying $44,000 a year to incarcerate someone as a consequence for committing an underlying act which would not even be a crime in Alaska.

The current state of the law in Alaska is that anyone convicted under appropriate Alaska statutes or similar statutes in another state, such as rape, sexual assault, etc., must register in Alaska. Section 15 would therefore expand the registry not to the most culpable and the most dangerous, but to those convicted of designated sex offenses that lie outside the most dangerous sex offenses: particularly, those convicted of having sex with 16 or 17 year olds; those convicted of prostitution offenses; and those convicted of some other minor offenses, like indecent exposure. These offenders are not particularly more likely to commit the rapes and molestations that the registry is designed to protect Alaskans from.

Generally, registries have been ineffective in preventing crime. A Rutgers University study showed that the New Jersey sex offender registry had "no demonstrable effect in reducing sexual re-offenses." The study also showed the enactment of the law had no effect on the number of victims of sex offenses, no effect on how long those convicted of sex offenses remained arrest-free, and no effect on the type of sex offenses committed. The legislature should look for proven, effective methods of preventing sex offenses. The proposed expansion of the sex offender registry in HB 298 is not a means to do this.

Section Three – Eliminating the Mental State Requirement of the Failure to Register Statute

Subsection (b) of Section Three of the Bill eliminates any mental state requirement, or mens rea, for the offense of failure to register, which means that a person who accidentally or in good faith neglects to complete the registration requirement every three months could still be found guilty of the offense. Subsection (c) creates an affirmative defense that registration became impossible because of an unforeseen circumstance and that the individual orally registered with the Department of Public Safety as soon as possible.

Generally, the criminal law requires "not only the doing of some act by the person to be held liable, but also the existence of a guilty mind during the commission of the act." Speidel v. State, 460 P.2d 77, 80 (Alaska 1969). The Alaska courts have held that, for major felonies, a mental state requirement is mandatory, while some minor offenses, such as hunting or public health related offenses, may be strict liability offenses without a mental state requirement. Speidel, 460 P.2d 77 (holding that the statute declaring the failure to return a car to be a crime, regardless of mental state, violated due process); see also State v. Guest, 583 P.2d 836 (Alaska 1978); State v. Fremgen, 914 P.2d 1244 (Alaska 1996).

In some cases, the courts have avoided declaring a statute unconstitutional by creating a mental state requirement where a statute has no provision for mental state but no language stating that no mental state requirement exists. Kimoktoak v. State, 584 P.2d 25 (Alaska 1978); Alex v. State, 484 P.2d 677 (Alaska 1971). With an explicit statement that no mental state is required in Section Three, the courts will not be able to avoid the constitutional conflict and may rule the statute unconstitutional.

Of note, as well, are the unique conditions here in Alaska. Many registered sex offenders live off the road system and in remote villages in which mail service gets interrupted, travel and telecommunications are irregular, and weather could keep an offender from being able to comply. Placing the burden on the defendant to prove his innocence reverses our legal tradition and the traditional balance of powers between the defense and the prosecution. The elimination of the mental state requirement and the substitution of a restrictive affirmative defense makes Section Three subject to attack under the Alaska constitution.

Conclusion

We hope that the Judiciary Committee will note these constitutional infirmities in Sections Three, Fifteen, and Sixteen of House Bill 298 and consider amending them or eliminating them from the Bill to avoid these concerns.

While the ACLU of Alaska takes very seriously the need to address the epidemic of sexual assault in Alaska, these sections are not well-crafted to vindicate the state's purposes. The sections we have identified present substantial Constitutional problems and will likely entangle the state in litigation, should H.B. 298 pass as currently written.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share our concerns. And please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information.

Memorandum in Opposition to Alaska House Bill 298

The members of Media Coalition believe that both House Bill 298 and existing Alaska statute 11.61.128(a) violates the First Amendment rights of producers and retailers and their customers. The trade associations and other organizations who comprise Media Coalition have many members throughout the country including Alaska: book and magazine publishers, booksellers and librarians as well as manufacturers and retailers of recordings, films, videos and video games and their consumers.

AS 11.61.128(a) bars the distribution by a computer of any "indecent material" by an adult to anyone under 16 years old or someone the adult believes is under 16 years old. "Indecent material" is defined to include any depiction of actual or simulated sexual penetration, lewd touching or exhibition of the genitals, anus, or female breast, masturbation, sexual masochism or sadism. H.B. 298 would expand the existing law would broaden it to apply to any type of distribution rather than merely by computer.

Speech is protected unless the Supreme Court tells us otherwise. As the Court said in Free Speech Coalition v. Ashcroft, "As a general principle, the First Amendment bars the government from dictating what we see or read or speak or hear. The freedom of speech has its limits; it does not embrace certain categories of speech, including defamation, incitement, obscenity and pornography produced with children." 535 U.S.234, 241 (2002). Unless speech falls into one of these limited categories or is otherwise tied to an illegal act such as luring or enticing a minor, there is no basis for the government to bar access to make such material illegal.

The restriction on "indecent materials" in the present law and in this bill, without a connection to an otherwise illegal act such as luring or enticing a minor, is almost certainly unconstitutionally overbroad. While minors do not enjoy the protection of the First Amendment to the same extent as adults, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that "minors are entitled to a significant measure of First Amendment protection, and only in relatively narrow and well-defined circumstances may government bar public dissemination of protected material to them." Erznoznick v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 212-13 (1975). Governments may restrict minors' access to some sexually explicit speech but it is a narrow range of material determined by a specific test. Merely containing sexual content is not enough to make a book, movie, magazine or sound recording illegal. In the case of Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968), the U.S. Supreme Court established a three-part test for determining whether material is "harmful to minors" and may therefore be banned for sale to minors. The material deemed illegal for minors by AS 11.61.128(a) and H.B. 298 does not include any of the three prong test from Ginsberg and would criminalize a far broader range of material than is allowed under the First Amendment. A recent law enacted in Illinois barred the sale of video games with sexual content but without the third prong of the Ginsberg test. The law was permanently enjoined by the U.S. District Court and the ruling was heartily affirmed by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. ESA v. Blagojevich, 469 F.3d 642 (7th Cir. 2006) aff'g 404 F. Supp. 2d 1051 (N.D. Ill. 2005).

The existing law's application of these restrictions to Internet communication is almost certainly unconstitutional even if it was limited to material that could be restricted as "harmful to minors" under the three-prong test in Ginsberg. This treats material on the Internet as if there were no difference between a computer transmission and a book or magazine. But cyberspace is not like a bookstore. There is no way to know whether the person receiving the "harmful" material is a minor or an adult. As a result, the effect of banning the computer dissemination of material "harmful to minors" is to force a provider, whether a publisher or an on-line carrier, to deny access to both minors and adults, depriving adults of their First Amendment rights. The U.S. Supreme Court has already declared unconstitutional two federal laws that restrict the availability of matter inappropriate for minors on the Internet. Reno v. ACLU, 117 S.Ct. 2329 (1997); Ashcroft v. ACLU, 534 F.2d 181 (3d Cir 2008), cert. den. 129 Sup. Ct. 1032 (2009). Similar state laws banning sexual speech for minors on the Internet have been ruled unconstitutional. See, PSINet v. Chapman, 63 F.3d 227 (4th Cir. 2004); ABFFE v. Dean, 342 F.3d 96 (2nd Cir 2003); Cyberspace Communications, Inc. v. Engler, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000); ACLU v. Johnson, 194 F.3d 1149 (10th Cir. 1999); Southeast Booksellers v. McMasters 282 F. Supp 2d 1180 (D.S.C. 2003); American Libraries Ass'n v. Pataki 969 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. 1997); ACLU v. Goddard, Civ No. 00-0505 TUC AM (D. Ariz. 2002). The only exceptions to these decisions have been laws that were limited to speech illegal for minors that were intended to be communicated to a person the speaker has specific, rather than general, knowledge is a minor. However, such laws might still be unconstitutional as a violation of the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution. In addition to First Amendment deficiencies, the courts have also ruled that these state laws violate the Commerce Clause, which reserves to Congress the regulation of interstate commerce and prevents a state from imposing laws extraterritorially.

Passage of this bill could prove costly. If a court declares it unconstitutional, there is a good possibility that the state will be ordered to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys' fees. In the successful challenge to the Illinois legislation, the state agreed to pay to the plaintiffs more than $500,000.

If you would like to discuss further our position on this bill, please contact David Horowitz at 212-587-4025 #11 or at horowitz@mediacoalition.org.

Again, we ask you to please protect the First Amendment rights of all the people of Alaska and reconsider the existing law and this legislation.

Strategic Plan to End the Epidemic of Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence

PURPOSE

Within a decade, end the epidemic of sexual assault and domestic violence and make Alaska the national leader in fighting these scourges

STRATEGIC OBJECTIVES

1. Break the cycle of abuse using a comprehensive public education and prevention campaign to promote a culture of respect that does not tolerate violence against women and children.

2. Deter, segregate, and treat sex offenders so they pose no risk of harm to women and children.

3. Establish a law enforcement presence in every community that desires one to improve public safety.

4. Increase victim service so more have a safe place to go and the services they need to heal.

5. Coordinate and streamline efforts among all stakeholders to more effectively combat violence against women and children.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

- A culture of responsibility – the answers and resources cannot come from government alone
- Community ownership over solutions
- Partnership between NGOs and state, local, federal, and tribal organizations
- Culturally tailored programs
- Youth leadership in developing and executing programs
- Support only programs with proven effectiveness
- Use metrics to measure success

SUPPORTING GOALS

- Heighten public awareness of the problem
- Make violence against women and children culturally unacceptable
- Evaluate, develop, and implement prevention programs and continue to support programs with proven effectiveness
- Enact legislation that will enhance public safety
- Increase the proportion of incidents reported and suspects arrested, prosecuted, and punished
- Lower recidivism levels
- Make law enforcement more responsive through training
- Ensure shelter beds or safe houses are available to every woman and child in need
- Link victims to medical care, legal services, and opportunities to establish independence from abusive relationships

CRIME STATISTICS

IMPLEMENTATION

I. BREAK THE CYCLE OF ABUSE USING A COMPREHENSIVE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION CAMPAIGN TO PROMOTE A CULTURE OF RESPECT THAT DOES NOT TOLERATE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN AND CHILDREN

A. Statewide Education Efforts

Rationale: All members of society must consider violence against women and children unacceptable, and all must believe it is something that can be stopped. Schools, media, and high-profile public engagements can be used to transmit the message that sexual assault and domestic violence are intolerable in our society and that every individual and group must identify its role in combating these problems.

1. Develop, coordinate, and broadcast public service announcements. For example, the Governor, DPS, LAW, and CDVSA have coordinated with the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault to launch the "Real Alaskan Men Choose Respect Campaign."

2. Cabinet members engage in public outreach to raise awareness and change attitudes about sexual assault and domestic violence. For example, the Governor held a major press event to highlight the epidemic. The Attorney General has discussed the epidemic in speeches and has been interviewed by reporters and talk show hosts. Commissioner Masters frequently speaks throughout the state about the Governor's initiative and the epidemic.

3. Develop partnerships with Native organizations to work together on prevention solutions. An excellent example is CDVSA's Tribal and State forums, which seek to devise programs and strategies to break the cycle of violence.

B. Locally-Targeted Education Efforts

Rationale: There is a growing realization that to reduce violence against women and children we need to prevent violence before it occurs rather than intervening after lives are shattered. To do this we must develop a prevention strategy seeking to bring about change in individuals, relationships, communities, and society. Cultural change is most effective from the ground up and requires a coordinated effort among local communities, nonprofits, and government.

1. Work with tribal, non-profit and religious organizations to raise awareness of the problem, especially among youth, and stigmatize violence against women and children. Under the legislature's guidance, CDVSA is in the process of developing and implementing a plan to "promote education and programs to prevent future incidents of domestic violence and sexual assault." And, as discussed in more detail below, the Governor's budget requests the creation of a DV/SA coordinator. Part of the coordinator's portfolio will be to take a leading role in these outreach efforts.

2. Cultivate youth leaders through schools and community groups and incorporate youth leaders in developing primary prevention strategies. For example, CDVSA partners with the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault on developing prevention programs for schools and youth.

II. DETER, SEGREGATE, AND TREAT OFFENDERS SO THEY POSE NO RISK OF HARM TO WOMEN AND CHILDREN

A. Enact Legislative Changes To Protect Alaskans

Rationale: Alaska needs tough laws in the nation to send a message that violence against women and children will not be tolerated and to ensure that offenders no longer pose a risk to others, either because they are behind bars or because they have been rehabilitated. Although the Alaska legislature has already enacted stringent laws, more can be done to punish offenders and protect victims.

1. Toughen penalties for crimes of sexual assault by making it an aggravating factor if the defendant sexually assaulted the victim while knowing the person was vulnerable due to use of alcohol or drugs. More specifically, the Governor has sponsored SB 222 and HB 298 to make it an aggravating factor if the defendant was convicted of any crime and the defendant knew that the victim was vulnerable due to use of alcohol or drugs.

2. Expand laws to protect children from online sexual predators. The Governor has sponsored SB 222 and HB 298, which prohibit suspended imposition of sentences for people convicted of human trafficking, possession or distribution of child pornography, and distribution of indecent materials to minors; these bills make it against the law not just to possess child pornography but also to access it on a computer with the intention of viewing it; and they empower courts to prohibit sex offenders, in cases involving children, from using a computer or communicating with children under 16 years old.

3. Enhance protection and processing of DNA and other forensic evidence to ensure the actual perpetrator is held accountable. To help accomplish this goal, the Governor has sponsored HB 317 and SB 241 would adopt standards for evidence retention and post-conviction DNA testing. The Senate Judiciary Committee Report found that proper examination of DNR evidence is critical to sexual assault prosecutions and that the backlog in getting the evidence processed is causing significant delays in prosecuting cases.

4. Close loopholes that allow convicted sex offenders from other states to escape registering in Alaska (if they are registered as sex offenders in other states, they must register here, even if the sex crime they were convicted of does not have an exact equivalent in Alaska). SB 222 and HB 298 accomplish this goal.

5. Modify the bail statutes to protect the victims of the crime and the general public. The Governor will soon introduce a Bail Bill that seeks to accomplish this goal. Under this bill, a person charged with serious crimes, like a sexual assault felony or a defendant charged with domestic violence who has been convicted of domestic violence within the five preceding years, would have burden of proof to establish that his or her release would not be dangerous to the victim or the public, and would assure the person's appearance in certain cases. Currently, the State has the burden to make this showing.

B. Improve Prosecution

Rationale: Bringing offenders to justice deters future violent acts and sends a strong message that violence against women and children is unacceptable. While most prosecutions result in guilty pleas or convictions, increasing the rates at which incidents are reported and referred for prosecution will help us hold more offenders accountable. Creating a law enforcement presence in every community will also deter violence, increase reporting rates, and improve evidence collection necessary for more and more successful prosecutions.

1. The Governor's budget requests $75 million for a new crime lab to help us process the evidence needed to win convictions in sexual assault cases and $92.8K for a forensic scientist at the crime lab

2. Department of Law has issued specific SA/DV prosecution policies and guidelines for sexual assault and domestic violence cases

3. Prosecutors are being trained in tough plea negotiations and the Governor's budget seeks an additional $75K for additional training.

4. The Department of Law has hired a cybercrimes prosecutor to prosecute child pornography.

5. DPS has reorganized its Computer and Financial Crimes Unit so that investigators can focus solely on computer crimes against children.

6. The Governor's budget requests $2.3 million in General Funds to make permanent 17 prosecutor and victim-witness paralegal positions at the Department of Law, which were previously funded on an interim basis through federal grants.

7. The Governor's budget requests $656,000 in General Funds to make permanent DPS's cold case unit, which had been funded by federal grant money.

8. To ensure forensic evidence is gathered the Governor's budget requests $12.3K for 350 pediatric sexual assault kits and $150K for SART exams. The Senate Judiciary Committee report found that when victims receive a medical forensic exam, it more than doubled the likelihood that the case was accepted for prosecution.

C. Reduce Recidivism Rates

Rationale: The majority of batterers return to their families, and the cycle of violence continues unbroken. It is in the state's interest to reduce recidivism. Otherwise, victims will continue to be harmed and offenders will continue to be arrested and imprisoned at the state's expense. Programs to reduce recidivism will help heal families and save the state money in the long run.

1. DOC is working collaboratively with DPS's VPSO program to provide effective supervision for probationers and parolees in rural communities.

2. The Criminal Justice Working Group is reviewing ways to improve DOC's prisoner re-entry programs, including after-care programs for substance abuse treatment, halfway house beds, mental health clinicians in correctional facilities, re-entry case workers, and coordination among stakeholders.

3. The Criminal Justice Working Group is reviewing reforms to the probation system to reduce recidivism rates by imposing swift punishments for probation violations. According to the Senate Judiciary Committee Report, nationally 45% of prisoners serving time for rape or sexual assault committed their crime while on probation or parole.

III. Establish a Law Enforcement Presence in Every Community that Desires One

A. Add 150 More VPSO Positions Over the Next Ten Years

Establishing a law enforcement presence in every village that desires one will prevent offenses from happening and facilitate investigation and prosecution for the offenses that do occur. UAA Justice Center studies show that in villages where a VPSO was available, rates of serious assault declined 40% and a case was over three times more likely to be prosecuted. But increasing the number of VPSO positions alone will not suffice. Local communities must collaborate by identifying qualified candidates, providing VPSO facilities, and supporting VPSOs' efforts.

1. The Governor's budget requests adding 15 VPSOs per year (at cost of $1.26 million annually) for 10 years so that every community of a certain size that desires a VPSO shall have one if the community puts forward a qualified individual. The Governor's budget also requests a merit increases (at a cost of $129.9K) for VPSOs and an increase in the VPSO COLA (at a cost of $93.9K). The Senate Judiciary Committee Report also recommends that the State hire more VPSOs because the Committee found that it will likely increase prosecution and conviction and because law enforcement presence has been shown to lower the rates of serious assault.

2. To secure housing for VPSOs, the Governor's budget requests $1 million for VPSO housing grants and loans in AHFC programs.

B. Hire Additional Investigators for Sexual Assault Investigations

Rationale: Maintaining VPSOs in rural communities will increase safety and ensure incidents of violence are investigated promptly. However, in many cases additional resources will be required to investigate, collect evidence, and prepare cases for referral to prosecutors. By hiring troopers specifically trained to investigate sexual assault and domestic violence incidents, we will maximize the number of incidents that result in convictions, ultimately deterring future offenders.

1. The Governor's budget requests three additional Trooper DV/SA investigators at a cost of $500K.

2. Use AARA (JAG stimulus) to hire 8 DV/SA investigators. Three of the investigators will be hired by municipal governments to work AST multijurisdictional task forces.

IV. Ensure Victims Have a Safe Place to Go and the Services They Need to Heal

A. Increase Availability of Civil Legal Services for Victims

Rationale: A study conducted by economists found that increased provision of legal services for victims of domestic violence contributes to the decline of domestic violence rates. Civil legal services offer victims help with practical matters – like protective orders, custody disputes, and child support – that give victims options and increase their safety over the long term.

1. The Governor's budget requests an additional CINA attorney (at a cost of $200K) to remove children from violent homes.

2. Strengthen domestic violence pro bono representation by increasing number and skill of volunteer attorneys and expand number of victim advocates. To accomplish this goal, LAW has held over a dozen meetings with legal service providers, victim advocates, and the court system to find ways to increase legal representation for victims. LAW will continue to work closely with all stakeholders to make sure victims seeking protective orders are represented.

3. Obtain commitments from leading Alaska law firms to devote a certain number of hours every month to pro bono legal work on behalf of victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. The Attorney General has begun an outreach effort to the legal community to meet this goal.

B. Increase Shelter Capacity to Meet Needs of Battered Women

Rationale: The ability to leave a dangerous situation and have a safe place to stay will reduce the number of violent incidents. Further, counseling services provided by shelters inform victims of their rights and options to escape abusive relationships. Increasing facilities and training staff will enhance shelters' ability to provide these crucial functions.

1. Provide an additional $381,000 to increase the capacity of shelters – increasing the number of beds, training, and services available to victims, so that they can escape abusive situations.

V. COORDINATE AND STREAMLINE EFFORTS AMONG STAKEHOLDERS

A. Create a Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault Coordinator To Establish Partnership Among Agencies and Federal, Tribal, and Non-Profit Stakeholders on Efforts To Combat DV/SA

Rationale: Efforts to address the problems of domestic violence and sexual assault exist, but more can be done to coordinate between government agencies, tribes, NGOs, and other stakeholders to improve and streamline these efforts. A coordinator would be the necessary link between these stakeholders, would identify and cultivate new resources, and would keep sustained focus on the issue.

1. The Governor's budget requests $200K to create a new coordinator position that will oversee this comprehensive plan to end the epidemic of DV/SA. More specifically, the coordinator will establish partnership and form work groups with NGOs, tribal entities, and federal agencies to maximize effectiveness and minimize duplication in efforts to combat domestic violence and sexual assault.

2. The coordinator will consult with stakeholders to develop and implement additional programs to carry out the Governor's initiative.

3. The coordinator will improve the state's existing programs and efforts as they relate to domestic violence and sexual assault, including prosecution, corrections, provision of services to victims, and education.

4. The coordinator will work with CDVSA, DPS, and the UAA Justice Center (or other research organizations) in establishing studies and research necessary for baseline data to measure success and fully understand the extent of victimization in Alaska. This action is consistent with the Senate Judiciary Committee's recommendation set out in its recent Report and Recommendations.

Addendum: Budget

The budget pieces of the plan at this point in time include all the efforts that were in the base budget for FY 10, i.e., funding for DPS, LAW, CDVSA, sex offender treatment in DOC and in DHSS for juveniles, etc. PLUS new increments of:

- $200k Child Protection Attorney in Kenai
- $2.2 million Prosecutors and staff who work primarily on sexual assault and domestic violence cases. Making these positions permanent and funding them with state dollars. We cannot afford to lose these resources.
- $200k SA / DV Coordinator
- $656.5k Cold case unit – Critical unit to solving homicides, many of which involve domestic violence and sexual assault. We cannot afford to lose these resources.
- $150k Sexual assault exam costs
- $75k SA / DV Prevention training
- $500k 3 SA / DV investigators at DPS
- $381.9k Shelters
- $651.4k Replace reduced PFD felon funds for CDVSA
- $12.3k 350 pediatric sexual assault kits
- $92.8k Forensic scientist at the crime lab
- $129.9k Merit increases for VPSO positions
- $93.9k VPSO COLA
- $1.261.5 15 new VPSO's
- $75 million Crime Lab
- $1.0 million VPSO housing loans and grants
- $86k New and improved crime lab equipment

Addendum: Recent Actions Taken To End the DV/SA Epidemic

- CDVSA has devised a strategic plan to develop prevention programs
- The Network, in collaboration with the State, has launched a PSA campaign
- To devise metrics that will measure the initiatives outcomes, cabinet members have met with the United Way and the Mental Health Trust; LAW is working on forming a committee to monitor the initiatives impact on DV and SA rates
- DPS has received ARRA funding for five investigators in ABI and three municipal investigators for multi-jurisdictional task force and is in the process of hiring
- LAW has hired a new cybercrime prosecutor
- DPS has reorganized its Computer and Financial Crimes Unit so that investigators can focus solely on computer crimes against children
- The Criminal Justice Working Group is reviewing ways to reduce recidivism through improved prisoner re-entry services and by imposing swift and consistent penalties for probation violations
- The Attorney General has discussed the DV/SA epidemic at speeches, has conducted several radio interviews, and has been interviewed by editorial boards and reporters
- CDVSA has acquired $290K in the FY10 budget for research and studies; the Governor's requested budget seeks $290K for CDVSA's operating budget to continue funding for research and studies
- The Attorney General and Commissioner Masters have met with DOJ officials to raise awareness and secure funding for programs

Addendum: Proposed Legislation

I. Changes In Crimes and Sentences Involving Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence

- This bill would make 5 important changes to our current laws:

1. Prohibit suspended imposition of sentences for people convicted of human trafficking, possession or distribution of child pornography, and distribution of indecent materials to minors.

2. Make it against the law not just to possess child pornography but also to access it on a computer with the intention of viewing it.

3. Courts could prohibit sex offenders, in cases involving children, from using a computer or communicating with children under 16 years old.

4. Sentences for sex offenses could be increased through new "aggravating factors," including the defendant's knowledge that the victim had consumed drugs or alcohol, or a previous dating relationship with the victim.

5. Anyone required to register as a sex offender in another state would have to register in Alaska.

II. A Revision of Bail Laws

- A comprehensive review of our bail statutes has not occurred since the 1960s; reorganization and updating of this law is overdue.

- Although the substantive provisions are generally similar to current law, there are some differences.

- Under this bill, a person charged with serious crimes, like a sexual assault felony or a defendant charged with domestic violence who has been convicted of domestic violence within the five preceding years, would have burden of proof to establish that his or her release would not be dangerous to the victim or the public, and would assure the person's appearance in certain cases.

- Currently, the State has the burden to make this showing

- The bill also provides that once convicted of sex-related felonies, perpetrators could not be released pending sentencing or an appeal.

III. Specific Procedures for Post-Conviction DNA Testing

- This bill is prompted by the State's victory in the Osborne case.
- The bill adopts new requirements for preservation of evidence and biological material in certain cases by all law enforcement agencies in the state.
- It also adopts a procedure for a person convicted of a felony against a person to apply for post-conviction DNA testing.
- More specifically, the bill requires municipal police departments, courts and state agencies to retain DNA evidence for post-conviction testing and cold case prosecution.

IV. The Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory in Anchorage

- The state would issue $75 million in certificates of participation for the lab in order to effectively conduct examinations of evidence and expedite the processing of a large backlog of evidence in criminal cases. Using certificates of participation spreads the cost out over time so that both this generation of Alaskans and the next will help pay for this important facility and reap its benefits.
- Over 50% of submitted cases to the Crime Lab are DV/SA related
- The new lab will DPS to bring in cutting edge technologies and DNA techniques

EDITORIAL: Shameful epidemic
Gov. Parnell issues challenge to legislators and all Alaskans

Anchorage Daily News

Gov. Sean Parnell is right: Alaska's rate of rape and domestic violence is an epidemic that demands stronger action across multiple fronts. He's offering legislators and all Alaskans a comprehensive way of attacking this scourge. Legislators and the rest of us should all take him up on his challenge to join the fight. The governor recognizes that it will take more than just the usual promise to "get tough" on offenders by hitting them with stiffer sentences. If you are throwing a perpetrator in jail, it's too late for the victim. Gov. Parnell wants to do more to prevent this kind of violence and protect those who are at risk.

For starters, he wants to change the social attitudes that feed this epidemic. As a society, we need to say, no, it's not OK to lose control and abuse a spouse or child. No, domestic violence is not merely a private matter for families to deal with.

Just as MADD made drunk driving socially unacceptable, our society needs to make clear we won't tolerate abuse of women and children. The "Choose Respect" ad campaign is a promising way to start changing these backward attitudes.

Gov. Parnell also wants to make sure those who are at risk can get shelter and legal protection when they need it. One innovative idea in his plan is to recruit lawyers who will offer free advice on how to get and enforce restraining orders, deal with the criminal justice system and find other help in the community. More village public safety officers in the Bush will help, too. As Gov. Parnell realizes, villages without any on-site law enforcement are places where rape and domestic violence can flourish. With more VPSOs, victims are more likely to report crimes and offenders are more likely to be convicted.

The most expensive item on the governor's list is the new state crime lab, which is already designed and ready to go. The current tiny, outdated lab limits the state's ability to process evidence, especially DNA evidence that can help solve sex crimes. Whether paid for in cash or with bonds, the new lab is a sound investment in a safer Alaska.

Lower profile parts of the governor's plan will help as well. He wants to fix legal technicalities that allow some out-of-state sex offenders to avoid registering when they move here. He will make sure there are no plea bargains that let sex offenders avoid registering. He wants to hire one person whose job it is to ask, every day, what state government should be doing to help stop rape and domestic violence.

One area that probably needs more attention in the governor's plan is the role alcohol plays in rape and domestic violence, among both victims and perpetrators. In many cases, the most basic way victims can protect themselves is by not getting drunk. Offenders are often drunk as well, and the alcohol releases their inhibitions, so stronger efforts to end alcohol abuse will pay dividends in crime prevention.

Gov. Parnell's plan won't be cheap, but to his credit, the fiscally conservative governor is willing to put the necessary money behind it. No amount of government programs can turn Alaska into a peaceful paradise where these shameful crimes magically vanish. But we simply should not tolerate the fact that Alaska leads the nation in rape and domestic violence. If Gov. Parnell's initiative can bring Alaska's rates for these crimes down to the national average, that would be real progress.

BOTTOM LINE: Gov. Parnell has a good plan to fight this scourge in Alaska.

services and the person damages the financial reputation of the other person. "Financial reputation" is defined to mean a person's ability to obtain a loan, open a credit or financial institution account, obtain property or services on credit, or creditworthiness in a credit report. Phillips was charged and convicted of a number of theft and related offenses including criminal impersonation of Sturm and Roberts. Sturm testified that his credit report had a number of bad marks on it due to Phillips' passing of forged bad checks on Sturm's account. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that this was sufficient to show damage to financial reputation. Roberts, though, testified that he did not know if Phillips' actions in forging and negotiating bad checks on his account (those checks had been turned over to collection agencies) had any effect on his credit report and that he had continued to bank without problem, had not attempted to take out any loans and did not know if his credit or ability to obtain credit had been adversely affected. The court found that without any evidence of damage to Roberts' financial reputation that Phillips' conviction for criminal impersonation of Roberts had to be reversed.

Phillips v. State, 211 P.3d 1148 (Alaska App. 2009).

Legislative review is recommended to determine if the definition of "financial reputation" should be amended or if damage should be presumed when certain negative effects, such as referrals to collection agencies, are suffered by the victim.

AS 11.61.127

MERE VIEWING OF CHILD PORNOGRAPHY ON THE INTERNET DOES NOT AMOUNT TO POSSESSION OF CHILD PORNOGRAPHY.

Worden was convicted of possession of child pornography when child pornography images were found in his browser cache. No evidence was introduced that Worden made any attempt to store the images or otherwise knew that his browser stored the images in a cache or that Worden's intent was anything other than to simply view the images on a computer screen while he was at a website. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that AS 11.61.127 proscribes the possession of child pornography and than the mere viewing of child pornography on a computer did not amount to possession.

Worden v. State, 213 P.3d 144 (Alaska App. 2009).

Legislative review is recommended if the legislature desires to proscribe the viewing of child pornography without a person actually undertaking any effort to possess it.

AS 11.71.060

CHALLENGE TO RECRIMINALIZATION OF SMALL AMOUNTS OF MARIJUANA NOT RIPE FOR DECISION.

"In June 2006 the Alaska Legislature amended AS 11.71.060(a) to prohibit the possession of less than one ounce of marijuana. The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska and two anonymous individuals . . . sued for declaratory and injunctive relief. They argued that section .060 as amended conflicts with the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution, as interpreted in Ravin v. State [537 P.2d 494 (Alaska 1975)], to the extent that it criminalizes possession of small amounts of marijuana in the home by adults for personal use." The trial court found that the amended AS 11.71.060 was unconstitutional under Ravin and the state appealed. The Alaska Supreme Court ruled that the issue was not ripe for adjudication as "it does not arise from an actual prosecution brought under the amended statute." A decision on the consitutionality of AS 11.71.060 and whether Ravin precludes the state from proscribing the use of small amounts of marijuana by an adult in their own home must arise from an actual criminal prosecution.

State v. American Civil Liberties Union, 204 P.3d 364 (Alaska 2009).

The viability of AS 11.71.060 as applied to the possession of marijuana by an adult in their own home remains in question as Ravin v. State is still the law of Alaska until overruled or reinterpreted by the Alaska Supreme Court. Under this decision, any review must wait until someone is prosecuted for a violation of AS 11.71.060 and that person challenges that prosecution on privacy grounds.

House Bill 307 Sponsor Statement
"An Act relating to sexual assault protective orders."

AS 18.65.850 authorizes the courts to grant protective orders in cases of stalking and sexual assault. This statute has been amended twice in recent sessions. In 2001, HB 1 extended protections to victims of stalking by persons other than their domestic partner. In 2006, SB 54 added sexual assault to the statute. While the clear intent of SB 54 was to exactly duplicate the effects of HB 1, namely, to grant jurisdiction to magistrate and district court judges to issue these orders, SB 54 did not explicitly amend AS 22.15.100 to achieve this.

Consequently, certain magistrate and district court judges have read the statute to mean that they do not have jurisdiction to issue protective orders in cases of sexual assault. This mirrors the situation prior to HB 1, in which claimants brought petitions that clearly required a protective order, but judges were unable to offer assistance.

This bill would amend AS 22.15.100 to explicitly grant magistrate and district court judges jurisdiction to grant protective orders in cases of sexual assault, in addition to stalking. This change is especially important given that many rural communities in Alaska only have access to magistrate or district courts.

Please join me in repairing this small gap in the statute and ensuring that all victims of sexual assault in our state are able to gain protection from their attackers.

Hi Gayle,

I am writing to both introduce myself and ask you guys a question. I am a new staffer for Rep. Holmes this session.

Sen. Dyson sponsored legislation in 2006 relating to protective orders, namely amending AS18.65.850 to include sexual assault as well as stalking as cause for granting a protective order.

It has come to our attention that there are some magistrate / district court judges who are reading AS 20.15.100 to mean that they have jurisdiction to grant protective orders for stalking but NOT for sexual assault. Our understanding is that this has resulted in women in rural communities having to go to a superior court judge, which is obviously quite difficult in a lot of places. We have filed a bill to amend AS 20.15.100 to explicitly roll sexual assault protective orders into magistrate / district court jurisdiction. It looks like this was just a minor oversight in the 2006 bill, but I wanted to give you guys a heads up and see if you could confirm that the intent of SB 54 was in fact to grant district courts the ability to grant these orders.

Thanks,

Bill Edwards

Hello Bill,

Welcome to the Legislature. You and I are both in the "freshman" legislative aide category. It is going to be a great experience. To the point of your inquiry – Yes, the intent of the 2006 bill was to grant district courts the jurisdiction to issue stalking and sexual assault protective orders. Thanks for taking the initiative on amending AS 20.15.100 to make this clear.

Best regards,

Chuck

Excerpts from minutes on SB 54, 2005/2006.

Sen. Dyson Feb 17, 2005:

SENATOR FRED DYSON, prime sponsor, explained that under current law a victim may get a restraining order for domestic violence and stalking, but it doesn't mention restraining orders if you've been a victim of sexual assault. SB 54 adds sexual assault to the list that a judge or magistrate may draw from to grant a restraining order. Although some judges do grant restraining orders to victims of sexual assault it's not clear in statute and some have refused to do so. SB 54 would make it clear to judges that they have that authority.

He noted that in drafting the bill, Legislative Legal elected to replicate the language from the domestic violence restraining orders. According to the Department of Law, it would have been better to have replicated the language in existing statutes related to stalking. Because of that opinion, he asked the committee to hold the bill to provide time to draft a committee substitute (CS).

SERGEANT DAVE PARKER, special victims unit supervisor, Anchorage Police Department, said SB 54 would help the police protect victims of sexual assault. The problem has been that judges don't have clear direction. He described a case in which a neighbor raped a woman. When a detective took the victim to get a protective order the judge wouldn't issue the order because he said rape isn't a consensual sexual act.

SERGEANT PARKER emphasized no victim should be re-victimized with unwanted contact with the perpetrator and SB 54 will give sexual assault victims the same legal protection that domestic violence and stalking victims have now.

Dear Representative Holmes:

On behalf the Network's 18 member programs that provide services to victims and survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault, we thank you for sponsoring HB 307.

HB 307 will repair a gap created when protections were added for victims of sexual assault. As you know, in 2006, SB 54 added protective orders to the tools available to protect sexual assault victims. Unfortunately, by mere oversight, AS 20.15.100 was not amended to specifically grant jurisdiction to district court judges and magistrates to issue these orders.

We know from anecdotal information that in many rural Alaska communities, this has led to victims of sexual assault not receiving the full protections available to them because district court judges and magistrates in these communities do not feel that they have the jurisdiction to issue these orders. Further, the lack of protective orders in these situations often leaves victims of these crimes vulnerable to coercion by perpetrators. This gap filling bill will provide protections to victims of sexual assault, which was the intent of the legislature in passing SB 54 in 2006.

Sincerely,

Peggy Brown, Executive Director

Sponsor Statement

House Bill 314

"An Act relating to fees and charges for medical treatment or services, the crime of unsworn falsification, investigations, and penalties as they relate to workers' compensation; and providing for an effective date."

At the time of passage in 2005 of the revisions to the workers' compensation system, it was contemplated that the interested stakeholders, including the Workers' Compensation Legislative Task Force and the Medical Services Review Committee, would propose legislation acceptable to the various stakeholders before August 1, 2007. This proposal was to replace the repealed Usual, Customary and Reasonable (UCR) methodology for setting maximum fees for medical treatment and services under the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act. A replacement was not proposed and the repeal would have resulted in fees for medical treatment and services in workers' compensation matters going uncapped until such time as the law was changed to remedy the situation.

There have been two previous extensions to the workers' compensation schedule of fees for medical treatment and services in place since 2004 with adjustments made based on the Medical Component of the Consumer Price Index. The existing extension will expire on December 31, 2010. HB 314 proposes a full fee schedule again be established which would include the procedure codes that have been developed since the 2004 schedule was adopted as well as category II codes. The fee schedule would be constructed on the same basis as prior schedules using usual, customary and reasonable fees.

The bill also clarifies that false application for benefits under the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act is a crime of unsworn falsification in the first degree and is a Class C felony.

I urge your support of this bill.

Sectional Analysis
House Bill 314

"An Act relating to fees and charges for medical treatment or services, the crime of unsworn falsification, investigations, and penalties as they relate to workers' compensation; and providing for an effective date."

This is a summary only. Note that this sectional analysis should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Amends AS 11.56.205(a) to add the application for benefit under AS 23.20 (the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act) to the crime of unsworn falsification in the first degree which is a class C felony

Section 2. Amends AS 23.30.097(a) to provide that after December 31, 2010, the fee may not exceed the usual, customary and reasonable charges in a fee schedule adopted by the board and must include the most recent Current Procedural terminology codes for both category I and category II medical treatment or other services.

Section 3. Amends AS 23.30.250(a) to clarify that a crime that is a violation of the chapter is prosecuted under AS 11 (Criminal Law) and that the violation may result in civil liability with an award of three times the amount of compensatory damages

Section 4. Amends AS 23.30.280(a) to change the specific statute citation of AS 23.30.250 to "this chapter" following the amendment above of that section.

Section 5. Amends AS 23.30.280(b) to delete reference to AS 23.30.250(a) to broaden the reporting of fraudulent acts to the employer.

Section 6. Repeals AS 23.30.250(c) since this provision has been included in AS 23.30.250(a) above.

Section 7. Provides for an immediate effective date under AS 01.10.070(c)

This bill amends the existing statutes to provide that a person commits the crime of unsworn falsification in the first degree if the person submits a false written or recorded statement that the person does not believe to be true in an application for worker compensation benefits. This bill provides that the fee or other charge for medical treatment or service under the Workers' Compensation Act provided on or after December 31, 2010 may not exceed fees established by the board and include recent category I and category II codes published by the American Medical Association. The department does not anticipate any significant fiscal impact.

Dear Representative Olson:

On behalf of the National Federation of Independent Business/Alaska, I wish to respectfully share our support for House bill 314 concerning the workers compensation program. The National Federation of Independent Business is the largest small-business advocacy group in Alaska.

HB 314 establishes a fee schedule for the Workers Compensation Program. We believe that this is a prudent first step toward reforming the program to reduce costs and improve the program.

As you know, the workers compensation premiums in Alaska are the highest in the nation. If we expect the program to continue to provide benefits without bankrupting employers, we must move to reduce the program costs and thus the premiums.

NFIB/AK members very much appreciate your willingness to begin addressing this critical problem.

Sincerely yours,

Dennis L. DeWitt
Alaska State Director

RE: HB 314 – Workers Compensation

Dear Representative Olson:

The Alaska State Medical Association (ASMA) represents physicians statewide and is primarily concerned with the health of all Alaskans.

ASMA's members are comprised of primarily, independently practicing physicians who practice in all types of subspecialties. Some of whom treat a substantial number of patients injured on the job and many other who treat few to no injured members. Those physicians who treat the few still have a keen interest in the Workers Compensation system in their capacity as employers. Indeed, those physicians with large numbers of injured workers in their practices have a keen interest as both care giver and as an employer.

ASMA will limit its comments to Sec. 2 of HB 314 and opposes the adoption of that section as currently written. Below, is a short description of ASMA's concerns about the current language and attached is draft language which will help to alleviate those concerns.

Since 2005 a "band aid" approach has been utilized to adjust the usual, customary, and reasonable fee schedule for physician payment. The fees have been frozen at the schedule in place on 12/1/2004, or increased by the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index. The latest was a percentage change in the CPI between 2008 and 2004 applied to that same fee schedule for dates of service stating 4/1/2009 and going through 12/30/2010. Now comes HB 314 which includes Sec. 2 which establishes the physician payment methodology for dates of service beginning 12/31/2010 and on into the future.

ASMA believes the language in Sec. 2 is not as clear as it could be and that the Legislature has the opportunity to make the payment methodology more efficacious and to make the policy decisions that are in your purview. Below is an outline for the changes that ASMA recommends and attached is draft language that would accommodate those changes.

1. define the appropriate fee as the lowest of:
   a. the physician's actual charge or fee for the service or treatment;

b. the charge or fee for the service or treatment when provided to the general public;
c. the charge or fee for the service or treatment for all fees or charges submitted for the associated Category I Current Procedural Terminology code at the 90th percentile; or
d. the charge or fee for the treatment or service negotiated by the provider and the employer under AS 23.30.097(c);

Note: This eliminates the terms "usual, customary, and reasonable" fee as no definition exists anyway in AS23.30 or in 8AAC45.082(i). Also, the 90th percentile is currently found in 8AAC45.082(i)(3).

2. direct the Board to either develop or designate a source (and adopt it by promulgating a regulation) for a database of current fees or charges for each Category I Current Procedural Terminology code that:
   a. includes the charges or fees submitted by Alaska physicians;
   b. includes the most recent 12 months of submitted charges but would allow for either older data to be included in order to have a statistically credible amount of data, or to allow submitted charges to be included from outside of Alaska in order to have a statistically credible amount of data. However, those charges from outside of Alaska need to be adjusted for the cost differential by a ratio of the CPI in Alaska versus where the fees came from; and

   Note: It is assumed that the database is continually updated as Alaska submitted charges or fees are added. Therefore, no direction for an annual update, per se, is necessary. However, a review of the statistical credibility of the data probably needs to be reviewed annually and adjusted accordingly. It is recommended that setting of the percentile be a policy call made by the Legislature.

3. direct that the Board, should it determine that it wishes to change its designated source for the database, that it needs to accomplish though the promulgation of a regulation.

ASMA will not provide comments regarding the establishment of the percentile (currently the 90th percentile) other than in general terms. To provide a specific recommendation, ASMA would have to have collected fee or charge data from its member physicians. It is generally, prohibited from doing so by federal anti-trust law. ASMA expects that individual physicians will provide you comments related to that policy decision. However, ASMA recommends that the Legislature makes this policy call as it is an extremely important one. If the percentile is set too low, physicians could limit their practice as far as caring for injured workers in Alaska. This has happened regarding access to care for injured federal workers under the Federal Workers Compensation system and for Medicare beneficiaries.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide testimony on HB 314. ASMA and I stand ready to assist you in addressing this most important issue.

Sincerely,

Brion Beerle

Draft Language
HB 314 Sec. 2.

* Sec. 2. AS23.30.097(a) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(a) All fees and other charges for medical treatment or service are subject to regulation by the board consistent with this section. A fee or other charge for medical treatment or service provided on or after December 31, 2010 may not exceed the lowest of the actual fee or charge submitted for a medical treatment or service, the fee or charge for the medical treatment or service when provided to the general public, or the fee or charge for the medical treatment or service at the 90th percentile for fees or charges submitted from the community in which care rendered for the associated Category I Current Procedural Terminology Code as published by the American Medical Association; but not, in any event, to exceed a fee or charge for the medical service or treatment negotiated by the provider and the employer under (c) of this section. The board must either develop or designate a source for a database that contains the submitted fees associated with each Category I Current Procedural Terminology code published by the American Medical Association and adopt that by regulation. The database must contain:

(1) data for each community in Alaska, but may, if statistically credible amounts of data do not exist for a community, include data from other communities in an amount sufficient to provide statistically credible data. However, the data from each community used must be adjusted by an appropriate factor that reflects the difference in the cost of rendering care in those other communities. Likewise, if statistically credible data does not exist for any Category I Current Procedural Terminology Code in Alaska, data from outside of Alaska may be included in an amount necessary to provide for statistically credible data but an adjustment must be made to that data for the difference in the Consumer Price Index for all Urban Consumers as compiled by the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics for the area outside Alaska to that of Anchorage;

(2) the database for each ensuing calendar year must include those submitted fees or charges for each Category I Current Procedural Terminology Code for the most recent, previous twelve month period, and for an amount of additional months necessary to produce statistically credible data should twelve months of data not provide an amount of statistically credible data; and

(3) Category II Current Procedural Terminology Codes published by the American Medical Association must be incorporated into the database and captured for each Category I Current Procedural Terminology Code for which fees or charges are submitted for a medical treatment or service.

February 2, 2010

Dear Chairman Olson:

The physicians at Alaska Spine Institute have concerns regarding HB 314 - "An Act relating to fees and charges for medical treatment or services, the crime of unsworn falsification, investigations, and penalties as they relate to workers' compensation; and providing for an effective date."

First, we are concerned with the new language in Section 2, page2, lines 14-21/ Subsection AS23.30.097 (a) (1) (D). The new subsection reads:

provided on or after December 31, 2010, not to exceed the fees or other charges as specified in a usual, customary, and referenced in regulation; the fee schedule must include the most recent Current Procedural Terminology codes for both category I and category II medical treatment or other services published by the American Medical Association; not withstanding AS 44.62.010 - 44.62.290, the board shall update the schedule annually by order;

This revised language provides "the board" with an undefined and unlimited scope of authority to make changes and establish policy with respect to the medical fee schedule.

There are no specifications re: the personnel who constitute board members or their special areas of interest. Those medical providers and practices who will be most impacted by the decisions of the "board" may not be adequately represented in this body.

In addition, there are no listed frequencies as to how often the fee schedule can be or is required to be changed or updated. Further, there is no information as to how "board" representatives are selected or replaced should this be needed.

There are no provisions for making appeals to the "board's" determinations about fee schedule decisions as the language provided gives them compete authority to make these determinations. The "board" could in one year utilize the usual, reasonable and customary fees for this area using Ingenix but could then elect to use another standard for setting the fee schedule in another year such as a Medicare based fee schedule.

This would severely limit most medical practices in their ability to forecast financial risks associated with adding new equipment and new procedures and limit their ability to provide Alaska's injured workers the most current treatment technologies allowing them to remain in the state for care v/s traveling to other locations outside of Alaska.

Although we understand the need to address the fee schedule due to rising insurance costs to employers, significant changes in the medical fee schedule that include unilateral control by the "board" may limit access to local physicians in the same fashion that Medicare, Medicaid and Federal Workers' Compensation have impacted access. There are few medical providers willing to accept a new patient with Federal Workers' Compensation as the payer and these patients must travel outside Alaska for even simple procedures such as carpal tunnel release.

Second, Alaska Spine Institute has no objections to the update of the CPT (current procedural terminology) codes as this is long overdue. The code list has not been updated for many years and many new codes have been added or new procedures have been assigned codes from the AMA (American Medical Association) that are not reflected on the Alaska Workers' Compensation Fee Schedule.

However, there is no provision outlining which of these codes, both existing ones and additionally added ones, will be considered covered and reimbursable by the States' workers' compensation carriers. Will this then fall under the "board's" scope of authority to make these decisions?

Finally, the MSRC (Medical Services Review Committee) was formed under Gov. Murkowski's administration and was tasked with taking on this complex issue to provide their recommendations to the administration.

The MSRC worked for many months to review the issues and review several options to help create their report to the administration. Many of them volunteered time during the work week and on their own time as well to review an extensive reference manual that was created for them and to perform independent research on what other states were doing with regard to Worker's Compensation. It is unfortunate that none of the committee's recommendations are included in HB 314.

We appreciate your attention to, and consideration of, the concerns we have raised regarding this measure.

Respectfully,

Michel L. Gevaert, MD

Honorable Kurt Olson,

Dear Representative Olson,

I am an orthopedic Surgeon in Anchorage and have been the President of the advisory board for Alaska Surgical Center for eight years. My practice consists of approximately 30-40% W/C patients. I have reviewed Dr Brion Beerle' letter to you, regarding HB 314, representing the Alaska State Medical Association. As a representative of 34 partners in the Alaska Surgical Center, I feel that the letter from Dr Beerle well represents most surgeons and physicians in our community that care for W/C patients. Please recognize that those of us that care for W/C patients expend a significant amount of extra time and energy to care for W/C patients especially regarding the excessive paperwork requirements that follow these patients. Reduction in reimbursement will only jeopardize patient's access to care. Please review the ASMA recommendations and consider them seriously.

Sincerely and respectfully,

RE: House Bill 314 Amendments

Dear Chairman Olson,

It has come to my attention that there is to be a hearing this afternoon on House Bill 314. As a physical therapist in Alaska I am very concerned about the proposed addition of subsection (D) to Sec.2 AS23.30.097 (a) (1) as it is currently written in House Bill 314. My concern is specifically with the wording found on page 2, lines 14-17, where Workman's Compensation fees are, "not to exceed the fees or other charges as specified in a usual, customary, and reasonable fee schedule established by the board and adopted by reference in regulation".

The consequences of House Bill 314 would be a detrimental to Alaska's workers injured on the job and the health care professionals providing them with care. House Bill 314 would grant a great deal of power to this Board with the sovereignty to set fees without any basis other than "usual, customary, and reasonable". This wording is far too vague for such an important issue. It lacks an explanation of basis for fees, composition of board members, frequency of change for fees, or the process to appeal the fees determined by the board. At the very least, this board should have to recognize an established standard for fees, such as those from the United States Department of Labor. Failure to do so will drastically affect the care of injured workers and the providers that care for them.

Please do not allow House Bill 314 to be added into Alaska's Statutes. It has no place

Sincerely,

Paul Carlson, PT

»8« »AAC« »45.082«. Medical treatment

(a) The employer's obligation to furnish medical treatment under AS 23.30.095 extends only to medical and dental services furnished by providers, unless otherwise ordered by the board after a hearing or consented to by the employer. The board will not order the employer to pay expenses incurred by an employee without the approval required by this subsection.

(b) In this section "provider" means any person or facility as defined in AS 47.08.140 and licensed under AS 08 to furnish medical or dental services, and includes an out-of-state person or facility that meets the requirements of this section and is otherwise qualified to be licensed under AS 08.

(c) Physicians may be changed as follows:

(1) An employee injured before July 1, 1988, may change treating physicians at any time without board approval by notifying the employer and the board of the change. Notice must be given in writing within 14 days after the change of treating physicians. If, after a hearing, the board finds that the employee's repeated changes were frivolous or unreasonable, the board will, in its discretion, refuse to order payment by the employer.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, an employee injured on or after July 1, 1988, designates an attending physician by getting treatment, advice, an opinion, or any type of service from a physician for the injury. If an employee gets service from a physician at a clinic, all the physicians in the same clinic who provide service to the employee are considered the employee's attending physician. An employee does not designate a physician as an attending physician if the employee gets service

(A) at a hospital or an emergency care facility;

(B) from a physician

(i) whose name was given to the employee by the employer and the employee does not designate that physician as the attending physician;

(ii) whom the employer directed the employee to see and the employee does not designate that physician as the attending physician; or

(iii) whose appointment was set, scheduled, or arranged by the employer, and the employee does not designate that physician as the attending physician.

(3) For an employee injured on or after July 1, 1988, an employer's choice of physician is made by having a physician or panel of physicians selected by the employer give an oral or written opinion and advice after examining the employee, the employee's medical records, or an oral or written summary of the employee's medical records. To constitute a panel, for purposes of this paragraph, the panel must complete its examination, but not necessarily the report, within five days after the first physician sees the employee. If more than five days pass between the time the first and last physicians see the employee, the physicians do not constitute a panel, but rather a change of physicians.

(4) Regardless of an employee's date of injury, the following is not a change of an attending physician:

(A) the employee moves a distance of 50 miles or more from the attending physician and the employee does not get services from the attending physician after moving; the first physician providing services to the employee after the employee moves is a substitution of physicians and not a change of attending physicians;

(B) the attending physician dies, moves the physician's practice 50 miles or more from the employee, or refuses to provide services to the employee; the first physician providing services to the employer thereafter is a substitution of physicians and not a change of attending physicians;

(C) the employer suggests, directs, or schedules an appointment with a physician other than the attending physician, the other physician provides services to the employee, and the employee does not designate in writing that physician as the attending physician;

(D) the employee requests in writing that the employer consent to a change of attending physicians, the employer does not give written consent or denial to the employee within 14 days after receiving the request, and thereafter the employee gets services from another physician.

(d) Medical bills for an employee's treatment are due and payable within 30 days after the date the employer received the medical provider's bill and a completed report on form 07-6102. Unless the employer controverts the prescription charges or transportation expenses, an employer shall reimburse an employee's prescription charges or transportation expenses for medical treatment within 30 days after the employer received the medical provider's completed report on form 07-6102 and an itemization of the prescription numbers or an itemization of the dates of travel, destination, and transportation expenses for each date of travel. If the employer controverts

(1) a medical bill or if the medical bill is not paid in full as billed, the employer shall notify the employee and medical provider in writing the reasons for not paying all or a part of the bill or the reason for delay in payment within 30 days after receipt of the bill and completed report on form 07-6102;

(2) a prescription or transportation expense reimbursement request in full, the employer shall notify the employee in writing the reason for not paying all or a part of the request or the reason for delay within the time allowed in this section in which to make payment; if the employer makes a partial payment, the employer shall also itemize in writing the prescription or transportation expense requests not paid.

(e) A written treatment plan under AS 23.30.095 is required for payment of services provided on an outpatient basis for an injury that occurs on or after July 1, 1988. A written treatment plan is not required before providing services while the employee is hospitalized.

(f) If an injury occurs on or after July 1, 1988, and requires continuing and multiple treatments of a similar nature, the standards for payment for frequency of outpatient treatment for the injury will be as follows. Except as provided in (h) of this section, payment for a course of treatment for the injury may not exceed more than three treatments per week for the first month, two treatments per week for the second and third months, one treatment per week for the fourth and fifth months, and one treatment per month for the sixth through twelfth months. Upon request, and in accordance with AS 23.30.095 (c), the board will, in its discretion, approve payment for more frequent treatments.

(g) The board will, in its discretion, require the employer to pay for treatments that exceed the frequency standards in (f) of this section only if the board finds that

(1) the written treatment plan was given to the employer and employee within 14 days after treatments began;

(2) the treatments improved or are likely to improve the employee's conditions; and

(3) a preponderance of the medical evidence supports a conclusion that the board's frequency standards are unreasonable considering the nature of the employee's injury.

(h) An employee or employer may choose to pay for a course of treatments that exceeds the frequency standards in (f) of this section even though payment is not required by the board or by AS 23.30.095 .

(i) Fees for medical treatment are determined as follows:

(1) The fee may not exceed the physician's actual fee or the usual, customary, and reasonable fee as determined under this subsection, whichever is lower.

(2) The board will publish annually a bulletin for the "Workers' Compensation Manual," published by the department which gives the name and address of the organization whose schedule of providers' charge data must be used in determining the usual, customary, and reasonable fee for medical treatment or services for injuries that occur on or after July 1, 1988. The manual, and the organization's name and address are available upon request from the division.

(3) The usual, customary, and reasonable fee must be determined based on the 90th percentile of the range of charges for similar services reported to the organization described in (2) of this subsection. The organization charge data must be used as follows:

(A) The organization's annual publication of the schedule of usual, customary, and reasonable fees in effect at the time the employee received the treatment must be used. However, if the organization publishes the schedule semi-annually, then the semi-annual publication for the period in which the employee received treatment must be used.

(B) If the community in which services were rendered is not included in the organization's data, or if the type of treatment the employee received is not included in the organization's data for the community in which services were rendered, the usual and customary fee must be based on the data reported for the community nearest to the community in which the services were rendered to the employee.

(C) If the type of treatment or service the employee received is not included in the organization's data and the employer has evidence that the fee exceeds the usual, customary, and reasonable fee charged in the community for the treatment or services rendered, the employer shall pay the physician based on the employer's evidence. In accordance with AS 23.30.110 and 8 AAC 45.070, the physician may request a hearing for a board determination of the usual, customary, and reasonable fee in the community for the treatment or service, and the board will determine and award the usual, customary, and reasonable fee.

Re: House Bill 316 – relating to evidence retention and post-conviction DNA testing

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to respectfully request that you schedule House Bill 316 for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. HB 316 is one of several bills that the Governor has introduced to confront and help reduce crime in our state, and to provide for evidence retention and post-conviction DNA testing.

The bill adopts standards for law enforcement agencies to retain evidence. This is important for later testing of the evidence for both cold case prosecution and for people who claim they were wrongfully convicted. The bill adopts standards for post-conviction DNA testing. The bill also makes drafting and other minor changes to the DNA identification system.

Attached is a sectional analysis that explains the bill in detail.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

HOUSE BILL 316
EVIDENCE RETENTION AND POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING
Sectional Analysis

Sections 1 and 2 are conforming amendments to clarify that the evidence retention provisions in the bill take precedence over the provisions of AS 12.36.010 – 12.36.090 that address disposition of evidence in various circumstances, including disposal of unclaimed property.

Section 3 proposes a new statute in AS 12.36, Preservation of Evidence, that would require municipal police departments, the Department of Public Safety, the Department of Law, and the Alaska Court System to preserve both physical evidence and biological evidence for the periods described below. The highlights include:

- The retention requirements apply to an investigation and prosecution of homicide (murder, manslaughter, and criminally negligent homicide), sexual assault in the first degree, and sexual abuse in the first degree.

  Because this is a new (and unfunded) duty imposed on municipal agencies in addition to state agencies, the bill was drafted to apply to a limited number of offenses; the offenses are the most likely to include evidence with DNA as part of the investigation and prosecution.

- Requires evidence (not including biological material) to be retained until the expiration of the prosecution, including the time for completing an appeal (including time for applying for review to the United States Supreme Court) or the litigation of any post-conviction relief application.

  The bill allows agencies to preserve samples of evidence if the item itself is impractical or hazardous to preserve. It recognizes that municipal police agencies will have varying storage capacity; that is, a rural agency will have a smaller storage ability that a larger municipality. The bill requires each agency to adopt written policies addressing removal and preservation of samples.

- Requires biological material to be retained by an agency until the defendant is unconditionally discharged for the crime (including any period of probation or parole), or until the period for retention of physical evidence have expired, whichever is longer.

  Biological material is defined to include the contents of a sexual assault examination kit, all human bodily material collected in the investigation, slides, swabs, or test tubes containing human bodily material, and swabs or cuttings from other evidence that contain human bodily material.

- The bill adopts a procedure for an agency, after notice to the parties and their attorneys, to dispose of or return evidence or biological material if no party objects to the disposal or return of the evidence or biological material. If there is an objection, it allows the agency to request the court to allow the disposal or return of evidence or biological material.

- The remedy for an agency's failure to preserve evidence and biological material is left to the court. However, a court may not reverse or otherwise vacate a conviction based solely on a violation of the new law.

- The bill prohibits a person from bringing a civil action against an agency for a good faith failure to abide by the new requirements.

Section 4 requires that a person who seeks post-conviction DNA testing to support a claim of innocence bring the application for testing under AS 12.73, proposed in the bill.

Section 5 clarifies practice in the area of post-conviction relief by putting in statute the common law rule that requires an applicant to plead a prima facie case for post-conviction relief, and the court make a finding that a prima facie case has been pled before the state responds. Then the parties may pursue discovery on the matter. State v. Jones, 759 P.2d 558, 565-566.

Section 6 adopts procedures for post-conviction DNA testing. These include the following:

- Sec. 12.73.010 sets out the information that must be included in an application for post-conviction DNA testing. The applicant must file

    - An affidavit by the applicant that states

        - that the applicant did not commit the crime for which he was convicted or any lesser included offense;

        - that the applicant did not solicit another person to commit, or aid or abet another person in planning or committing, the offense or any lesser included offense;

        - that the applicant did not admit or concede guilt for the offense in any official proceeding;

- An affidavit by the applicant or the applicant's lawyer stating the results of each DNA test already performed on evidence in the prosecution of the defendant;

- An affidavit by the applicant or the applicant's lawyer describing previous efforts to obtain DNA testing;

- An affidavit by the applicants trial lawyer stating the reason the DNA testing was not requested at the trial level, or a affidavit stating the efforts taken to obtain this affidavit.

- Sec. 12.73.020 provides the standards for when a court may order post-conviction DNA testing. These include:

  - The applicant was convicted of a felony against a person (AS 11.41);

  - Completion of the affidavits required by AS 12.73.010 have been submitted;

  - The applicant has not admitted or conceded guilt in an official proceeding;

  - The evidence was obtained as part of an investigation of the crime;

  - Either

    - The evidence has not been tested or the right to test the evidence was not waived for tactical reasons; or

    - The evidence has been previously tested, the applicant is requesting a more probative test, and the applicant did not waive for tactical reasons a similarly probative test;

  - The evidence has been retained under conditions that ensure that it has not changed in a way that would undermine the accuracy of the test;

  - The applicant proposes a defense theory not inconsistent with the defense at trial, and that would establish innocence;

  - If the defendant was convicted at trial, the identity of the perpetrator was an issue;

  - There is a reasonable probability that the testing requested will produce new evidence that would support the new defense theory and could conclusively establish innocence;

- The applicant consents to give a DNA sample and to have that sample entered into the DNA identification registration system; and

- The application is timely.

- Sec. 12.73.030 allows for summary dismissal by the court if the application does not include the information required. If the application is not summarily dismissed the prosecuting authority has 45 days to file a response.

- Sec. 12.73.040 adopts presumptions regarding timeliness. There is a presumption that filed an application within three years after conviction is timely. There is a presumption that an application filed later is untimely; this may be rebutted by a finding that the applicant was incompetent or for any other good reason.

- Sec. 12.73.050 adopts procedures for collecting DNA samples. It also provides that the testing must be performed at a laboratory operated by the state or approved by the state. The cost of testing will be paid for by the state; if the applicant requests additional testing, the applicant must pay for it, and it must be performed at an accredited laboratory or one approved by the Department of Public Safety.

- Sec. 12.73.060 clarifies that the prosecution and an applicant may stipulate to DNA testing without following the procedures in the bill.

- Sec. 12.73.070 includes definitions for the new chapter.

Section 7 provides that an indigent applicant is entitled to representation by the Public Defender Agency in bringing an application for post-conviction DNA testing.

Sections 8 – 12 make clarifying amendments to the DNA identification registration system statutes. The bill clarifies that a minor must be 16 years of age or older at the time of offense for the minor's DNA to be entered into the database. It also requires that the Department of Public Safety remove a DNA sample entered into the database if the individual was found not guilty for the offense that was the basis of the DNA entry. The bill also makes several draft changes to improve the readability of the law.

Section 13 provides that a DNA sample from the registration system may be used in a criminal investigation if it was mistakenly in the system, if the error was made in good faith. Section 13 also clarifies that if a sample does not include sufficient material to obtain an accurate identification, another sample may be taken.

Sections 14 and 15 note the effect the bill has on Rule 35.1, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Section 16 creates a task force to consider and recommend standards for preservation of evidence. The task force would consist of the attorney general, the commissioner of public safety, a chief of police from a community not on the state's road system, a chief of police from a municipal department, the state medical examiner, representatives from the crime laboratory and the court system, and the victims' advocate.

The task force's work would be to recommend standards for collection, storage, organization, cataloging, and retrieval of evidence; identify sources of financial help for implementing the standards; recommend minimum qualification and training of persons responsible for storing evidence. After completing its work, the task force will report its recommendations to the legislature.

Sections 17 – 19 include applicability and effective date provisions.

Analysis of HB 316

Here is the initial analysis of HB 316 and the concerns with the bill. Citations are to the pages in the printed bill and to the section or subsection within which the language appears. Their order reflects the order in which the sections appears in the bill, and not a measure of the degree of concern with the contents.

p.2 "Sec. 12.36.200(a)(1)" this section sets deadlines for destruction of evidence rather then allow the Task Force which is established at the end of the bill to study the issue and make recommendations---When SB110 was drafted one of the reasons for establishing the Task Force was to allow for informed creation of destruction deadlines.

This section also seems to allow for destruction of evidence if a challenge to the conviction is filed in federal district court. The section defining "direct review" mentions only judgment on appeal, petition for hearing and review by the United States Supreme Court.

p.3 (d) at bottom of page. See also p.11, last line. This section calls for the person who requests evidence that has been preserved to pay for its retrieval. There is not one single statute passed by any other state or the federal government that even imagines such a requirement. An irony in including this section is that it follows a section which requires the agency holding the evidence to produce an inventory of the evidence. It must be presumed that the agency will actually confirm they have each of the items on the inventory before providing it. After physically confirming they have each piece of evidence they then get to turn around and charge for going back again and collecting it. Seems a reasonable solution would be to put it in a convenient place at the time of preparing the inventory.---The concern is that an individual will be precluded from obtaining the evidence due to an inability to pay this tax on their right to DNA testing. The section is particularly offensive since evidence does not belong to one side or the other, but rather to the people, and charging a person claiming innocence to collect the evidence passes a different message.

p.7 "Sec 5 AS 12.72.030" This section requires that an individual plead a prima facie case for relief and a court must find that a prima facie case for relief exists before any discovery related to the application can be pursued. This section hobbles claims for relief since discovery is often necessary to obtain facts which will establish a prima facie claim for relief. This requirement is materially more restrictive then the current procedure which only requires an individual plead material facts to go forward. This section will often create a catch 22 making claims for relief impossible.

p. 8 (C) at the top and (3) at the bottom. This makes post-conviction testing unavailable to anyone who admits or concedes guilt in any official proceeding or whose statement of guilt was the basis for the conviction. This section flat out denies the real world fact that 25% of the known DNA exonerations involved an innocent individual who admitted or pled guilty to the crime. This category of wrongfully convicted are largely represented by the most vulnerable in society; young people, people with mental disabilities, those most susceptible to suggestion. Rather then protecting the vulnerable this section takes advantage of them. A section such as this is a clear demonstration that form is more important than justice in this bill.

p.8(4), in the middle of the page, allows a tactical mistake by a lawyer that results in an innocent individual being convicted be a bar to a later action proving that person's innocence. An innocent person in prison means the perpetrator is still at large and means the people of the state of Alaska are paying to house an innocent person. This system allows an innocent person who was convicted by their attorney's mistake no recourse to obtain testing of exculpatory evidence.

p.9, (5) at the top of the page, prohibits an individual from seeking testing if evidence was not subjected to DNA testing at the trial level or a more probative method of DNA testing was not used, and the applicant waived the testing or the applicants lawyer did not test for tactical reasons. This section again denies the reality of the real world that bad lawyering is one of the most common causes of wrongful convictions. Since we are talking claims of actual innocence, it would be improper to deny an individual the opportunity to test scientific evidence to establish innocence because a trial lawyer made a bad decision, or couldn't afford a test. This problem is compounded by allowing the trial lawyer to cover their mistake by requiring an affidavit from the lawyer explaining their actions on p. 8. In our system of justice, innocence should not be able to be waived.

p.9, (10) calls for the court to guess at the outcome of the requested testing based on its view of other evidence. Other states and the federal government, when dealing with this part of the process, provide a standard that, assuming a result favorable to the petitioner, there would be a reasonable probability that the petitioner would not have been convicted. The later standard does not require a judge to try and guess what result the requested DNA testing would produce, but rather whether a favorable result would be significant in the outcome of the case.

p.10, "Sec. 12.73.040 Timeliness" This section basically puts a three year statute of limitations on innocence. It is significant to know that few if any of the people who have been exonerated by DNA evidence in the U.S. to date would have been released from custody or from death row under such a time requirement. This section would make post-conviction DNA testing claims in Alaska more difficult to bring then under the current process where no specific time periods are set. Establishing that an incarcerated individual is actually innocent of the crime for which they have been convicted should not be limited by arbitrary time requirements.

p. 15 "Task Force" This section establishes a task force to recommend standards and protocols regarding evidence preservation issues. Unlike a similar section in SB110, this version excludes any representative from the criminal defense bar, like the public defender or office of public advocacy, or any member from the innocence community, like from the innocence project, Or any member from the legislature. The task force established by this section is not interested in obtaining a wide range of information to produce a balanced report to provide the best information from which to make decisions, but rather to produce a document that merely puts forward a position of one part of the legal community.

This legislation is also noticeably incomplete as it does not deal at all with what procedure should be followed after testing is completed. For instance, this bill does not provide a process for what happens when testing apparently excludes the petitioner as the source of the DNA.

INNOCENCE PROJECT

WRITTEN TESTIMONY OF REBECCA BROWN
POLICY ADVOCATE, INNOCENCE PROJECT
BEFORE THE ALASKA HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITEE
RE: HB 316 – AN ACT RELATING TO POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING
FEBRUARY 5, 2010

Thank you for the opportunity to speak before you today and submit written comments for your consideration of HB 316, which seeks to create statutory access to post-conviction DNA testing.

The Innocence Project assists persons in proving their innocence through post-conviction DNA testing. To date there have been 250 men and women exonerated by post-conviction DNA testing nationwide, one exonerated just yesterday. The emergence of forensic DNA technology changed the fabric of the criminal justice system. Whereas prior to the advent of forensic DNA there were few clear ways to assess prisoners' claims of wrongful conviction, DNA testing of crime scene evidence can provide the criminal justice system with significant and enduring proof of innocence or guilt, from the initial stages of an investigation to years after a conviction. With the ability to transcend fallible human judgment, DNA testing – and particularly post-conviction DNA exonerations – have proven the potential for error that exists in our criminal justice system, and that our appeals processes are not sufficient for identifying those errors.

Our policy agenda is a pro-law enforcement agenda, win-win reforms that protect the innocent and help identify the guilty. It is precisely because of the dual nature of our work – both the efforts to exonerate the innocent and the constructive efforts to strengthen the capacity of the criminal justice system to make more accurate guilt/innocence determinations – that we may be able to provide a somewhat unique and hopefully helpful perspective on the complicated issue you are addressing today.

Having worked in this field for thirty years, the co-founders of our organization often remark that perhaps the most significant lesson they have learned is that in matters of crime and justice humility is important because even the most experienced among us are often wrong. They have reviewed hundreds of cases. In most, they have pored over reams of court transcripts, scrutinized piles of police reports, dissected crime lab analyses, sifted through evidence and property logs, and studied scores of witness statements, and have strongly suspected some men's guilt, only later to discover they were wrong. No less often, someone they strongly suspect is innocent turns out to be guilty. Indeed, because every one of us is human and all of us are actors in a fact-finding mission, if just one of us makes an error, jumps to a conclusion, or acts on a false assumption, an innocent man can be condemned to a guilty man's fate.

Congress recognized DNA's potential for justice, and it was bi-partisan support that led to passage of the Innocence Protection Act contained in the Justice for All Act of 2004. Then-President George W. Bush noted in his 2005 State of the Union address: "In America we must make doubly sure no person is held to account for a crime he or she did not commit. So we are dramatically expanding the use of DNA evidence to prevent wrongful conviction."

The preservation of biological evidence and access to post-conviction DNA testing – fundamental elements of the IPA's innocence protections – are as important today as ever. The Innocence Project continues to unearth cases where post-conviction DNA testing proves the innocence of those convicted in both the relatively recent and distant past.

Unfortunately, when forensic DNA testing was first made available, it provided little help to the truly innocent who were facing charges like rape or murder, or who had been previously convicted. For these men and women, hope existed only later, with the potential of the performance of DNA testing on the crime scene evidence connected to their cases. For many, if not most of them, such testing represented a last chance to prove their innocence, as they had already exhausted all available state remedies, as well as federal habeas corpus relief. Yet without the benefit of state statutes providing access to post-conviction DNA testing, they faced daunting, if not unattainable, paths to such testing.

The scales of justice began to tilt when states started to pass laws allowing convicted persons access to post-conviction DNA testing. These laws not only allowed DNA testing to be performed on genetic material that was never tested at trial; it also allowed more modern, sophisticated technology to be utilized on previously tested evidence that had yielded inexact or unreliable conclusions.

Over time, newer DNA technologies have emerged, enabling us to create perpetrator DNA profiles from physical evidence that was previously useless. The amount of evidence items that are being successfully tested now, but could never have been tested successfully only a few years ago, is enormous. As DNA testing methods continue to emerge, they reveal new information about even those crimes committed in the distant past. Post-conviction DNA testing statutes have begun to contemplate these technological advances and many now include provisions that permit additional testing in cases where previous testing using older testing methods could not produce conclusive results.

The passage of post-conviction DNA testing statutes also explicitly exempted DNA testing motions and related proceedings from the procedural bars that govern other forms of post-conviction relief. Before the emergence of this discrete statutory avenue that allowed petitioners to seek post-conviction DNA testing, the innocent were forced to rely upon processes that put the burden on the petitioner to effectively solve the crime and prove that the DNA evidence promises to implicate another individual. In states without post-conviction DNA testing laws, many efforts to achieve testing were stymied, egregiously delayed or flatly denied.

Consider the following case of justice denied in the absence of a post-conviction DNA testing law. In March of 1989, New Jerseyan Larry Peterson was convicted of the sexual assault and murder of a woman in Burlington County. Although three men originally indicated to police that they were with Mr. Peterson at the time the murder took place, they later changed their accounts during interrogations and told law enforcement that Mr. Peterson confessed to them that he had indeed committed the crime. One forensic scientist testified at trial that her hair comparison analysis tied Mr. Peterson to the murder and another analyst with the New Jersey State Police testified that there was seminal fluid on the victim's jeans and sperm on her underwear. No seminal fluid or sperm was found in her rape kit. All tests on these items of evidence were inconclusive at the time of trial.

Mr. Peterson testified in his own defense at trial. Alibi witnesses supported his whereabouts during the time of the crime. Work records also showed that he did not work on the day that the victim was found – the day he supposedly confessed to the crime on his way to work. The jury convicted Mr.

Peterson of felony murder and aggravated sexual assault in March 1989. He was sentenced to life plus twenty years in prison.

Although there was no post-conviction DNA testing law in New Jersey, Mr. Peterson first sought access to DNA testing in 1994 under the state's existing post-conviction review process. When the court finally heard his motion in 1998, it denied his petition. In 2000, the Appellate Division affirmed the denial of his petition for post-conviction relief ruling that there was overwhelming evidence of guilt in his case. In March of 2001, the Supreme Court denied his Petition for Certification.

Mr. Peterson was without hope until New Jersey passed a statute granting access to post-conviction DNA testing. The law was made effective on July 7, 2002. On July 8, 2002, Larry Peterson became the first New Jerseyan to file a petition for post-conviction DNA testing under the new law and ultimately testing was granted, after an appeal of an initial denial.

In February of 2005, the Serological Research Institute (SERI) reported the results of testing: Mr. Peterson was excluded as a contributor of any and all of the biological evidence. Although the New Jersey State Police Laboratory had reported that there was no semen in the victim's rape kit, SERI identified sperm on her oral, vaginal, and anal swabs. Two different male profiles were found. One of the males was one of the victim's consensual partners, and his profile was also found on her underwear, jeans, and rape kit. The other unknown male was found on all of the swabs in her rape kit. Based on this evidence, Mr. Peterson's conviction was vacated in July 2005. On May 26, 2006, the prosecution decided to drop all charges against Mr. Peterson. Without the passage of New Jersey's post-conviction DNA testing law, Mr. Peterson would have perished in prison.

Today, 47 states have post-conviction DNA testing laws, which vary in substance and scope. In some states with laws, the "right" to DNA testing remains illusory for many categories of potentially innocent defendants. That said, the proposal under consideration in HB 316 more affirmatively denies post-conviction testing than any other statute we have ever seen.

We offer this perspective based on our breadth of experience litigating claims of innocence all across the nation. We have worked closely with legislatures around the country to establish meaningful post-conviction DNA access, most recently in South Carolina, Mississippi and Nevada, which chose last year to expand its statute to additional categories of deserving applicants. We have learned that seemingly innocuous provisions can spell a dead end for justice for many deserving applicants and wish to spare Alaska such a fate. While there are many provisions that create barriers to meaningful access to post-conviction DNA testing in this proposal, in the interest of time, I will focus on the most problematic areas.

Timeliness

Perhaps the most restrictive provision in this proposal can be found in Section 12.73.040, which effectively puts a three year statute of limitations from the time of conviction on filing a post-conviction claim of innocence. As I mentioned earlier, nearly every single individual who was able to prove innocence through post-conviction DNA testing had already exhausted all available state remedies, as well as federal habeas corpus relief before seeking testing. Not one of these individuals would be eligible for testing under the framework contemplated in this proposal. There is not one law in the nation that includes such a restrictive timeliness provision. Indeed, 35 of 47 statutes possess no time limitation on the filing of a post-conviction DNA testing petition whatsoever. Perhaps more concerning, the inclusion of such a provision in a post-conviction testing law would make claims more difficult to bring than under the current post-conviction review process.

Barring Testing to Individuals Whose Attorneys Did Not Previously Seek Testing
Traditionally, a defendant seeking post-conviction DNA testing might be able to accomplish such testing under the post-conviction relief process. Unfortunately, though, that framework has proven illusory, given the fact that not a single Alaskan has achieved post-conviction DNA testing to date. If properly structured, a post-conviction DNA testing framework would correct this and allow an Alaskan access to testing under such a framework. Unfortunately, however, the framework proposed also effectively blocks access to post-conviction DNA testing.

A provision inserted into the existing post-conviction review law, located in Section 12.72.010(4), indicates that if an individual seeks post-conviction DNA testing to support his claim of innocence, the person's "exclusive method for obtaining that testing is an application under the post-conviction DNA testing statute," yet Section 12.73.020(5)(A), a provision in the proposed, new post-conviction DNA testing framework, bars an individual from seeking post-conviction DNA testing if the evidence "was not subjected to DNA testing, and the applicant did not waive, or the applicant's lawyer did not forego for tactical reasons, the right to request DNA testing." This provision is made worse by the requirement, in Section 12.73.010(4), which requires an affidavit by the applicant's lawyer stipulating to the reasons DNA testing was not sought before or during trial.

These sections effectively bar innocent individuals who were victimized by poor representation, a common cause of wrongful conviction, from post-conviction DNA testing. Put simply, this proposal requires an individual seeking DNA testing to abandon the post-conviction relief process for the purposes of accessing post-conviction DNA testing in favor of the newly created avenue for post-conviction DNA testing. Once the defendant seeks DNA testing under the post-conviction DNA testing framework, however, which is his "exclusive method for obtaining that testing," he is at the mercy of his trial attorney to disclose potential incompetence in order to be granted that post-conviction DNA testing. Therefore, he must rely upon his trial attorney, the same trial attorney who ineffectively represented him, to admit to his negligence or indolence to obtain access to post-conviction DNA testing under the post-conviction DNA testing framework.

It is improper to deny an individual the opportunity to test scientific evidence to establish innocence because a trial lawyer failed to explore DNA testing, made a poor decision, or could not afford a test. It is difficult to conceive that the same trial attorney who made a poor decision would be willing provide an affidavit to this effect. Put simply, these provisions deny the most vulnerable – those who were represented poorly or ineffectively – the ability of proving innocence through DNA testing.

Barring Individuals Who Admitted Guilt
There are three areas of the proposal that would foreclose the possibility of post-conviction DNA testing to an individual who admitted or conceded guilt to the crime for which he was convicted. Section 12.73.010(b)(1)(C); 12.73.020(3); and 12.73.020(9). While it is counterintuitive to most, the innocent, with great regularity, plead guilty, falsely confess and otherwise provide admissions to crimes they did not commit.

Researchers who study this phenomenon have determined that the following factors contribute to or cause such admissions or false confessions:

- Real or perceived intimidation of the suspect by law enforcement
- Use of force by law enforcement during the interrogation, or perceived threat of force
- Compromised reasoning ability of the suspect, due to exhaustion, stress, hunger, substance use, and, in some cases, mental limitations, or limited education
- Devious interrogation techniques, such as untrue statements about the presence of incriminating evidence
- Fear, on the part of the suspect, that failure to confess will yield a harsher punishment

Some populations, including youth and individuals with mental limitations, are particularly vulnerable, but we have uncovered many cases that involve individuals who do not fall into these "at risk" categories. Nearly 25% of the nation's wrongful convictions proven through DNA testing reveal involved an admission or confession. The proposal currently under consideration would have barred all of these people from seeking testing.

Requiring Courts to Anticipate the Outcome of Testing
Section 12.73.020(10) requires the court to assess whether there is a reasonable probability, in light of all available evidence, including even evidence that was not introduced at trial, that the requested DNA testing would demonstrate innocence. In essence, this provision would allow the courts to guess the outcome of testing rather than to just accomplish that requested testing. We have learned in the course of our work, that only DNA can provide definitive answers about guilt or innocence. Time and again, we have uncovered cases which contain multiple elements seemingly pointing to the defendant's guilt only to learn through DNA testing that the defendant is, in fact, innocent. As I described earlier, at our office, we have reviewed cases where we were fairly confident in a defendant's guilt only to learn later of his innocence and vice versa. Therefore, it is simply irresponsible to place such a burden on the court, and it certainly sets the stage for irreparable mistakes that any one of us, placed in that same position, would make.

Requiring the Petitioner to Pay for the Retrieval of Evidence
Section 12.36.200(d) of the proposal requires the defendant seeking biological evidence connected to his case to pay for its retrieval. There is no other state in the country that places this burden on the defendant. In light of all of the other barriers to meaningful post-conviction DNA testing contained in this proposal, this additional burden – particularly for an indigent defendant – could effectively bar deserving individuals from seeking testing.

We believe the Governor put forward this proposal in the hopes of helping the truly innocent who are languishing behind bars in the state of Alaska. Unfortunately there are many provisions in this bill that would prevent access to post-conviction DNA testing from being meaningful. In essence, their hopes of demonstrating their innocence will be forever prohibited. Our office would appreciate the opportunity to offer our perspective to the Alaskan legislature with the goal of crafting a statute that provides meaningful access to testing in the way we believe Alaskans want.

Thank you for the opportunity to share these views with you. I hope you will contact me if there is any additional information that I can provide on the subject.

ALASKA INNOCENCE PROJECT

WRITTEN TESTIMONY IN SUPPORT OF ORAL TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM B. OBERLY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
ALASKA INNOCENCE PROJECT
BEFORE THE ALASKA HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
HB 316 – AN ACT RELATING TO POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING
JANUARY 5, 2010

Thank you to the House Judiciary Committee for giving me the opportunity to give oral testimony and to submit this written document in support of those comments on HB 316.

Access to post-conviction DNA testing is among the most important issues for the Alaska Innocence Project. We thank Governor Parnell for recognizing the importance of this issue by proposing a bill dealing with this subject. However, the Alaska Innocence Project cannot support HB 316 as it is currently written. The effect of HB 316 as currently written is to drastically limit access to DNA testing in Alaska. A number of modifications will need to be made before this bill is in line with the current approach to DNA testing accepted in the rest of the country.

In this letter I will try and describe the specific areas of HB 316 which serve to deny DNA testing to individuals with innocence claims in the state of Alaska. I will discuss the sections of the bill in the order of significance and impact on innocence claims. If these sections are removed from the bill, HB 316 will then provide a procedure for wrongfully convicted Alaskans to obtain post-conviction DNA testing to establish their innocence.

The first area of concern is the prohibitions on testing contained in this bill. The combined effect of these prohibitions is to deny virtually every person currently in prison who would seek DNA testing. This approach flies directly in the face of current thinking, which was described by Senator Patrick Leahy when he sponsored the federal Innocence Protection Act. "The criminal justice system should err on the side of permitting testing, in light of the low cost of DNA testing and the high cost of keeping the wrong person locked up."

The most serious prohibition on testing in HB 316 is contained on page 10, lines 11 through 23 of the bill in Sec. 12.73.040, entitled Timeliness. This section establishes a presumption of untimeliness if an application for post-conviction testing is not filed within three years. This restriction will prohibit most, if not all, innocent individuals who are currently incarcerated from obtaining the testing necessary to establish their innocence. This section would make post-conviction DNA testing claims in Alaska much more limited then under the current process of post-conviction claims based on newly discovered evidence. Time limitations ignore the fact that without proper preservation standards and requirements, as well as state of the art identification methods, exculpatory DNA evidence may only be located after years have elapsed. It should be remembered that, unlike other forms of evidence, DNA evidence is not less reliable as time goes by, one of the main reasons for limiting the time within which to bring new evidence motions based on other evidence. Establishing that an incarcerated individual is actually innocent of the crime for which they have been convicted should not be limited by arbitrary time limits.

Page 9 section (5) at lines 2 through13. This section prohibits an individual from seeking testing if evidence was not subjected to DNA testing at the trial level or a more probative method of DNA testing was not used, and the applicant waived the testing or the applicant's lawyer did not test for tactical reasons. This section denies the reality of the real world that bad lawyering is one of the most common causes of wrongful convictions. Since we are dealing with claims of actual innocence, it would be improper to deny an individual the opportunity to perform the most accurate tests on evidence to establish innocence because a trial lawyer made a bad decision, or couldn't afford a test. The problem is compounded in this bill by allowing the trial lawyer to cover the bad decision by requiring an affidavit from the trial lawyer explaining their actions. It is presumed under this bill that if a lawyer chooses to spend the limited resources available in a defense case on other then DNA testing, this decision will preclude post-conviction testing to establish that an individual is innocent. In our system of justice, innocence should not be able to be waived.

Page 8 subsection (C) at lines 5 through 7 and section (3) at lines 29 through 30. These sections make post-conviction DNA testing unavailable to anyone who admits or concedes guilt in any official proceeding or whose statement of guilt was the basis of the conviction. This section, again, denies hard facts we have learned from the 249 DNA exonerations nationwide, that 25% of those exonerations have involved an innocent individual who admitted their guilt or pled guilty to the crime. This category of wrongfully convicted individuals is largely represented by the most vulnerable in society; young people, people with mental disabilities, those most susceptible to suggestion. Rather then protecting the vulnerable in our society, this bill aims to take advantage of them. Form is clearly more important then justice when a law takes advantage of our most vulnerable citizens.

Page 9 section (10) at lines 24 through 29. This section of the bill calls for the court considering a post-conviction DNA testing request to guess at the outcome of the requested testing based on the court's view of other evidence. Other states and the federal government, when establishing a standard for the court to apply to the requested evidence, reasonably assume a favorable result of the testing for the petitioner, and then have the court decide if that would establish a reasonable probability that the petitioner would not have been convicted. This long established standard does not require a judge to try and guess what the result of the requested DNA testing might be. Rather, it reasonably asks a court to decide whether a favorable test result would be significant in the outcome of the case.

Page 3 section (d), lines 29 through 31. Also page 11, lines 17 through 18. This term of the bill calls for the person requesting evidence be tested pay for its retrieval. This is a concept totally unique to the Alaska post-conviction DNA testing process. Not one statute passed by any other state or the federal government imagines such a requirement. An irony in including this section where it is in the bill is that it follows a section which requires an agency holding preserved evidence to produce an inventory of that evidence. It must be presumed that the agency will actually confirm they have each of the items on the inventory before providing it. Under this bill, after physically confirming they have each piece of evidence, the holding agency will then get to turn around and charge for going back again and collecting it. A more reasonable approach would envision the agency putting the evidence in a convenient place at the time of preparing the inventory, thus performing their work more efficiently, while doing away with the need to charge to collect evidence. A serious impact of this section will be that some individuals will be precluded from obtaining the evidence due to an inability to pay this tax on their right to DNA testing. The section is particularly offensive since evidence does not belong to one side or the other, but rather to the people. Charging a person claiming innocence to collect the evidence is inconsistent with this concept.

Page 15 section (a) at lines 16 through 24. This section establishes a task force to recommend standards and protocols regarding evidence preservation issues. Unlike a similar section in SB110, this version excludes any representative from the criminal defense bar, like the public defender or office of public advocacy, or any member from the innocence community, like from the innocence project, or any member from the legislature. The task force established by this section would not receive a wide range of information in order to produce the most balanced report based on the best information. The task force created by this bill will be limited to information from one part of the criminal justice community and will thus produce a report that is less then complete and so will be that much less effective.

Page 2 lines 25 through 31 through page 3 lines 1 through 6. This section sets deadlines for destruction of evidence obtained during the investigation of a case rather then allows the Task Force which is established at the end of the bill to study the issue and make recommendations. SB110 also established a task force with a wide ranging mandate to study evidence preservation issues, including the issue of proper retention. Reasonably, one of the issues that task force was to report back on was destruction deadlines. HB316 also establishes a task force but, without any study, also creates time limits for destruction. This does not seem to be making the best use of the task force created.

As an example of why more study might be necessary, this section also seems to allow for destruction of evidence if a challenge to the conviction is filed in federal district court. The section defining "direct review" mentions only judgment on appeal, petition for hearing and review by the United States Supreme Court. A task force studying this issue and making recommendations would most likely recommend evidence be retained during the pendency of a habeas action filed in federal district court.

The concerns listed above set out serious shortfalls in the contents of HB 316. If these sections are allowed to remain in the bill, unchanged, not only would post-conviction DNA testing be more difficult for the wrongfully convicted in Alaska to obtain then it currently is, it would be more difficult then anywhere else in the country. I urge the committee to correct these problems by removing the language of HB 316 set out above before the bill is passed out of committee. If the sections I have identified are removed from HB 316, the bill will then actually provide innocent individuals with a procedure to obtain post-conviction DNA testing of potentially exculpatory evidence. Alaska will have a bill that works.

Thank you for allowing me to address this very important legislation. If the committee has any questions on any matters arising from HB 316 which I might help answer, please don't hesitate to contact me.

This proposed legislation would require post-conviction DNA testing for those who meet the legal requirements, allow for the preservation of certain evidence for possible future forensic testing, and requests amendments to the DNA identification registration system statute, 44.41.035, all of which would directly affect the State Crime Laboratory. The bill also contains proposals that would not affect the Crime Lab.

The State Crime Lab has hired and trained three new Forensic Technicians in the past year. With this addition in personnel the Evidence Section has been able to implement new procedures that have significantly reduced evidence turnaround time. Intensive inventory and focus on the creation of valuable space has brought that Section (cont.)

forward in anticipation of a possible increase in evidence retention and submissions for analysis due to proposed legislation. These actions are believed to be sufficient to handle the increase in submissions should this proposed legislation become law and is believed to be able to carry the laboratory forward approximately 2-4 years before fiscal impact would become likely.

Because it is not understood just how much of an increase in evidence submissions for analysis and for retention the laboratory will ultimately see, it may be that a revised fiscal note will become necessary in the future; however, at this time the Department does not foresee a fiscal impact beyond its current needs.

The Section (s) revision to 44.41.035 speaks to the authority of the Department of Public Safety to obtain a subsequent DNA sample should the original sample not provide a profile adequate for database entry. Although the frequency of samples failing to provide sufficient information is relatively small, this is a critical concern and this addition to the statute would provide resolution. Because the number of subsequent sample requests is determined to be low, the laboratory does not anticipate fiscal impact resulting from passage of this amendment.

STATE OF ALASKA
2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 316

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

This bill creates procedures for obtaining post-conviction DNA testing, for preserving physical evidence, for destroying physical evidence, and creates a task force on standards for preservation of evidence.

It is expected that the Agency will receive new post-conviction appointments. The Innocence Project has recieved approximately 130 requests for assistance from convicted defendants asserting claims of innocence over the past 4 years. Additionally, the bill requires all petitioners whose convictions were entered before a certain date to file a petition by July 1, 2013. This is expected to increase the number of applications within the first three years of the bill.

The new appointments could increase costs due to attorney review and paralegal resources that must be applied to process the cases. It is difficult to predict how many cases or the level of review that will be required, but the Agency does not predict a significnat increase and therefore submits a zero fiscal note.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill would create a procedure for DNA testing in post-conviction cases where a defendant was convicted of a crime under AS 11.41. The bill also creates a procedure for preserving and destroying physical evidence as well as a task force for standards for preservation of evidence. Because OPA handles all of the conflicts of interest from the Public Defender Agency, including any claims by clients that they received ineffective assistance of counsel from their PDA trial attorney, the agency receives a substantial portion of the post-conviction relief assignments. It is possible that cases filed under this new procedure could increase the attorney and support staff workload. Additionally, the agency must rely upon private contractors to handle a portion of these cases when the agency staff has a conflict of interest. The agency does not predict a significant fiscal impact as a resut of this statute and therefore submits a zero fiscal note.

Texas to discard millions of babies' blood samples

WASHINGTON -- A critical safety net for babies -- that heel prick of blood taken from every newborn -- is facing an ethics attack.

After those blood spots are tested for devastating diseases, some states store them for years.

Scientists consider the leftover samples a treasure, both to improve newborn screening and to study bigger questions, such as which environmental toxins can harm a fetus' developing heart.

Seldom are parents asked to consent to such research, raising privacy concerns that are shaking up one of public health's most successful programs.

Texas is poised to throw away blood samples from more than 5 million babies to settle a lawsuit from parents angry at what they call secret DNA warehousing.

Advisers to the U.S. government hope to have national recommendations by spring on how to assure that all babies still get their newborn tests while allowing parents more say in what happens next.

Newborn screening began in the 1960s, and today every baby is supposed to be tested for at least 29 rare genetic diseases.

Texas -- which will soon discard blood spots stored since 2002 rather than tracking down families for consent -- now seeks parental permission to store leftovers.

It has requests to destroy about 13,772 children's blood spots out of about 400,000 births since May, health department spokeswoman Carrie Williams says.

Comparison of State Post Conviction DNA Laws

STATE	Who Can Apply For Testing?	Who Pays?	Preservation Required?	Fiscal Analysis of Preservation
Arizona	Convicted felons may request testing at any time	State, but court can order the petitioner to pay	Required during the pendency of the proceeding. allows court to order the state keep a sample for re-testing and requires that blood samples be preserved for 35 years	N/A
California	Incarcerated felons	State, but court can order the petitioner if able to pay	For time that offender remains incarcerated; entity has discretion to determine how to retain evidence; preservation portion of law is automatically repealed on 1/1/03	Quoted from fiscal note: "Potentially significant reimbursable local costs for evidence storage. Sheriff's offices and police departments differ in how long they store evidence, but most do not store evidence after appeals have been exhausted. By mandating storage, this bill creates annual costs that could be in the range of $1 million. For example, if Los Angeles City and County each have to purchase refrigeration units for biological evidence and rent additional storage facilities, the annual cost could exceed $200,000. Extrapolating statewide, the cost could reach $1 million since individual departments maintain their own facilities."

Maryland	Certain felons incarcerated on or after effective date	Petitioner pays unless results are favorable to petitioner	In most cases, three years after imposition of sentence	Quoted from fiscal note: "It is expected that for most or all jurisdictions, the bill would require additional storage space, including refrigeration facilities for evidence such as DNA and blood samples. HOUSE BILL NO. 319

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES HAWKER, Chenault, Johnson, Dahlstrom

Introduced: 1/29/10
Referred: Judiciary, Finance

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to firearms."

Amdt #1 Passed

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 18.65.725 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(e) The department shall ~~provide a~~ mail the permittee ~~with~~ a notice of expiration by first class mail at least 90 days before expiration of the permit.

(f) Notwithstanding AS 18.65.705(3), a permittee does not become ineligible to hold a permit, and need not return or surrender a permit, when ceasing to be a resident of the state, and the department may not require a permittee to return or surrender a permit because a permittee ceases to be a resident of the state. However, a permittee may not renew a permit if the permittee is not a resident of the state at the time of renewal.

 Sec. 2. AS 18.65.760(a) is amended to read:

(a) The holder of a permit issued under AS 18.65.700 - 18.65.790 may not

(1) alter the permit;

(2) allow another person to use the permit;

(3) possess or display a suspended or revoked permit; or

(4) represent or display an expired permit as if the permit were valid, unless the holder has submitted a complete, timely renewal form under AS 18.65.725 and the renewal process has been delayed due to circumstances not under the control of the applicant; this paragraph does not require a holder to return or surrender a permit upon its expiration, nor may the department require a holder to return or surrender a permit upon its expiration.

 Sec. 3. AS 18.65 is amended by adding a new section to article 11 to read:

Sec. 18.65.810. Execution of federal firearms forms. (a) The chief administrative officer of a municipal police department for a person who resides in the municipality and the head of the Alaska state troopers for a person who resides in the state but does not reside in a municipality with a police department shall execute within 30 days federal firearms forms required to be submitted by the person as a transferee of a firearm if the person is qualified under state law to possess the firearm.

(b) In this section, "chief administrative officer" has the meaning given in AS 18.65.290.

House Bill 319
Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to firearms."

In Alaska, anyone who is 21 years of age or older and legally allowed to own a firearm is allowed to carry it concealed without a permit. However, there are still people who obtain Alaska Concealed Handgun Permits (ACHP) for other reasons, including reciprocity with other states. In the past few years, a few glitches in the permit system have come to light.

House Bill 319 makes the following changes to the statutes regarding an ACHP permit:

- Clarifies that a permit does not have to be surrendered when it expires or when a permit holder moves out of the state;
- clarifies that an expired permit can be displayed, as long as the permit holder is not claiming that it is a valid permit; and
- requires the Department of Public Safety to mail a notice to the permit holder at least 90 days prior to the expiration of a permit.

HB 319 also requires the chief law enforcement officer (CLEO) in Alaska jurisdictions to complete, in a timely manner, the required certification on an application to the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (BATFE) for approval to transfer a firearm registered under the National Firearms Act (NFA) of 1934 to a person who is qualified under state law to possess the firearm.

The CLEO certification is a mandatory step in the BATFE transfer process and unjustified delays in processing or refusal to cooperate compromise Second Amendment rights.

House Bill 319 makes commonsense changes to our ACHP statutes and ensures that NFA firearms transfers are not inappropriately obstructed.

HB 319
Sectional Analysis
Prepared by Representative Mike Hawker's Office

Section 1: Adds two new sections to AS 18.65.725 (Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit renewal):

(e) Requires the department to send, via first class mail to the permittee, a notice that their permit is expiring. The notice must be sent at least 90 days prior to the permit expiration, which is the beginning of the renewal period.

(f) Clarifies that a person does not become ineligible to hold a permit and does not need to surrender the permit if he or she ceases to be a resident of the state. Alaska residency is still a requirement to obtain or renew a permit.

Section 2: Clarifies that a person can display an expired permit, but cannot represent it as valid, and that an expired permit does not need to be surrendered to the department.

Section 3: Requires the local law enforcement certification section of a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives firearm transfer application to be completed by the appropriate law enforcement officer within 30 days of submission by a person who is legally qualified to own the firearm.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill amends the statute relating to hand gun permits requiring Department of Public Safety to mail a notice to a permittee at least 90 days before expiration of the permit. The bill clarifies that a permittee is not required to return or surrender a permit upon expiration and a permittee may not represent an expired permit as valid unless the holder has submitted a timely renewal form. A permittee may not renew a permit if the permittee is not a resident of the state at time of renewal. This bill provides that the chief law enforcement officer in Alaska jurisdictions to execute within 30 days federal firearms forms required for the transfer of a firearm.

Enactment of the bill is not anticipated to fiscally impact the Department of Law.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This proposed legislation will require the Department of Public Safety (DPS) to provide written notice of expiration via first class mail to concealed handgun permit holders at least 90 days before the expiration of their permit.

A permit is not required to carry a concealed handgun in Alaska but DPS makes them available to citizens of Alaska. Because the permit is not required in Alaska, some permit holders forget to renew their permits before the expiration date resulting in higher fees for the permit holder.

A concealed handgun permit is valid for five years from the date of issue. Prior to 10/07/2009, the permit renewal date was based on the date the permit was originally issued. (cont.)

BILL NO. HB 319

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

During the 2009 legislative session, HB 201 was passed which provides that permits issued/renewed on or after 10/07/2009 shall expire on the permittee's birthdate in the fifth year following issuance/renewal. HB 201 was a direct effort to assist permit holders with remembering to renew their concealed handgun permit by synchronizing their permit expiration date with their birthdate. The legislation proposed under Section 1 of HB 319 furthers this effort.

Records for concealed handgun permit holders are maintained in the concealed handgun permit (CHP) database which sends information to the Alaska Public Safety Information Network (APSIN). Programming changes to both the CHP database and APSIN will be required to systematically identify those permits exipiring within 90 days and to automatically generate, print, and save notices of expiration and to update the CHP database to display the date the letter was generated. Automating the notification process will ensure all permit holders receive timely notice of expiration of their permit as this legislation proposes.

The one-time programming changes for both systems are estimated to take 370 hours of programming at $100/hr, plus the cost of one software license at $899.

Based on an average of 1,535 renewal notices per year, the cost of supplies (paper, envelopes, and postage) is estimated to be $900 per year.

Background Information
Prepared by Representative Mike Hawker's Office

Section 3 of House Bill 319 requires the local law enforcement certification section of a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (BATFE) firearm transfer application to be completed by the appropriate law enforcement officer within 30 days of submission by a person who is legally qualified to own the firearm. Attached is a copy of the BATFE firearm transfer application, also known as a "Form 4." Section 17 (highlighted on page 2 of the attached form) is the local law enforcement certification section that would have to be completed.

Important Information for Currently Registered Firearms

If this registration document evidences the current registration of the firearm described on it, please note the following information.

Estate Procedures: For procedures regarding the transfer of firearms in an estate resulting from the death of the registrant identified in item 2a, the executor should contact the NFA Branch, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, Washington, DC 20226.

Change of Address: Unless currently licensed under the Gun Control Act, the registrant shall notify the NFA Branch, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, Washington, DC 20226, in writing, of any change to the address in Item 2a.

Change of Description: The registrant shall notify the NFA Branch, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, Washington, DC 20226, in writing, of any change to the description of the firearm in Item 4.

Interstate Movement: If the firearm identified in item 4 is a machinegun, short-barreled rifle, short-barreled shotgun, or destructive device, the registrant may be required by 18 U.S.C. § 922(a)(4) to obtain permission from ATF prior to any transportation in interstate or foreign commerce.

Restrictions on Possession: Any restriction (see approval block on face of form) on the possession of the firearm identified in item 4 continues with the further transfer of the firearm.

Persons Prohibited from Possessing Firearms: If the registrant becomes prohibited by 18 U.S.C. § 922 from possessing a firearm, the registrant shall notify the NFA Branch, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, Washington, DC 20226, in writing, immediately upon becoming prohibited for guidance on the disposal of the firearm.

Proof of Registration: This approved application is the registrant's proof of registration and it shall be made available to any ATF officer upon request.

Instructions

1. Definitions

   a. National Firearms Act (NFA). Title 26, United States Code, Chapter 53. The implementing regulations are found in Title 27, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 479.

   b. Gun Control Act (GCA). Title 18, United States Code, Chapter 44. The implementing regulations are found in Title 27, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 478.

   c. Firearm. The term "firearm" means: (1) a shotgun having a barrel or barrels of less than 18 inches in length; (2) a weapon made from a shotgun if such weapon as modified has an overall length of less than 26 inches or a barrel or barrels of less than 18 inches in length; (3) a rifle having a barrel or barrels of less than 16 inches in length; (4) a weapon made from a rifle if such weapon as modified has an overall length of less than 26 inches or a barrel or barrels of less than 16 inches in length; (5) any other weapon as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 5845(e); (6) a machinegun; (7) a muffler or silencer for any firearm whether or not such firearm is included within this definition; and (8) a destructive device.

   d. Person. The term "person" means a partnership, company, association, trust, estate, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

   e. Employer Identification Number (EIN). Required of taxpayer filing special (occupational) tax returns under 27 CFR § 479.35.

   f. SPECIAL (OCCUPATIONAL) TAX. Required by the NFA to be paid by a Federal firearms licensee engaged in the business of manufacturing (Class 2), importing (Class 1), or dealing (Class 3) in NFA firearms.

   g. Federal Firearms License. A license issued under the provisions of the GCA to manufacture, import or deal in firearms.

   h. ATF Officer. An officer or employee of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) authorized to perform any function relating to the administration of the NFA.

   i. Transfer. Selling, assigning, pledging, leasing, loaning, giving away, or otherwise disposing of a firearm.

   j. Transferor. The registered owner of a firearm who is applying to transfer it.

   k. Transferee. The person acquiring the firearm.

   l. Misdemeanor Crime of Domestic Violence. A crime that is a misdemeanor under Federal or State law and has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon, committed by a current or former spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, by a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, by a person who is co-habiting with or has cohabited with the victim as a spouse, parent, or guardian. The term includes all misdemeanors that involve the use or attempted use of physical force (e.g., simple assault, assault and battery), if the offense is committed by one of the defined parties. The person is NOT considered to have been convicted of such crime unless the person was represented by a lawyer or gave up the right to a lawyer, and, if the person was entitled to a jury trial, was tried by a jury or gave up the right to a jury trial.

2. Preparation of Application

   a. Authority. As provided by 26 U.S.C. §§ 5811 and 5812, any person seeking to transfer a firearm tax paid must complete, in duplicate, an application on this form for each firearm. The transferor must furnish all the information called for on this application form.

   b. Federal Firearms Licensees. If the transferor or transferee is licensed under the GCA, the name, trade name (if any), and address shall be identified on the ATF Form 4 as they appear on the license. If item 6 is completed, the entity identified must be the same as the entity identified in item 5. For example, if item 5 identified a sole proprietor, item 6 cannot identify a corporation. This also applies for the completion of items 7 and 8.

   c. Transferee Qualifications. If the transferee is an individual and not licensed under the GCA, the questions in items 13 and 14 must be answered.

   d. Transferee Certification. Item 15 must be completed by the transferee if:

      (1) the firearm to be transferred is a machinegun, short-barreled rifle, short-barreled shotgun, or destructive device;
      (2) the transferor is licensed under the GCA to deal in such device or firearm; and
      (3) the transferee is not licensed under the GCA to deal in such device or firearm.

   e. Law Enforcement Certification. Item 17 must be completed for an individual transferee, unless the transferee is licensed as a manufacturer, importer, or dealer under the GCA and is a special (occupational) taxpayer under the NFA at the time of the submission of the application for transfer. The chief law enforcement officer is considered to be the Chief of Police for the transferee's city or town of residence; the Sheriff for the transferee's county of residence; the Head of the State Police for the transferee's State of residence; a State or local district attorney or prosecutor having jurisdiction in the transferee's area of residence; or another person whose certification is acceptable to the Director, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. If someone has specific delegated authority to sign on behalf of the Chief of Police, Sheriff, etc., this fact must be noted by printing the Chief's, Sheriff's, or other authorized official's name and title, followed by the word "by" and the full signature and title of the delegated person. The certificate must be dated no more than one year prior to the date of receipt of the application.

   f. Photographs and Fingerprints. An individual transferee, except if licensed as a manufacturer, importer, or dealer under the GCA, must (1) attach to Item 16, a 2 inch x 2 inch photograph of the frontal view of the transferee taken within 6 months prior to the date of the application and (2) attach two properly completed FBI Forms FD-258 (Fingerprint Card with blue lines) to the application. The fingerprints must be clear for accurate classification and taken by someone properly equipped to take them.

   g. Signatures. All signatures required on ATF Form 4 must be original in ink on both copies.

   h. Remittance. A check or money order, made payable to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, in the amount for the appropriate rate of tax (see instruction 2i) must be submitted with the ATF Form 4. Do not send cash.

   i. Rate of Tax. The tax on the transfer of any NFA firearm is $200.00, except that the tax is $5.00 on the transfer of a firearm classified as "any other weapon."

   j. Photocopies, Computer Generated Versions, or Downloaded Version from ATF Website. The ATF Form 4 may be photocopied, computer-generated (as long as it is in the same format and contains all required information), or downloaded from the ATF website (www.atf.gov). Please note the instructions on the website.

   k. Estates. If the firearm is being transferred from an estate, item 3a shall reflect: the executor's name, title (executor (or executrix, administrator, administratrix) of the estate of (name)), and the executor's address. Item 3c shall reflect the address of the decedent and the date of death. (see the ATF Internet website at www.atf.gov for additional information about transfers from estates.)

   l. Submission. All requested informtion must be entered in blue or black ink and must be legible. Send both copies of the ATF Form 4 and attachments to the address located in the upper right hand corner on the face side of the ATF Form 4. The return of the application or sending it to any other address will only delay the processing.

   m. State or Local Permit. If a State or local permit or license is required for the transferee prior to acquisition of the firearm, a copy of the permit must be included with the application.

3. Approval of Application. Upon approval of an application, the NFA Branch will affix the appropriate NFA transfer tax stamp, cancel it, and return the approved copy with the stamp affixed to the transferor for delivery with the firearm to the transferee. Since the approval of the application effectuates registration of the firearm to the transferee, the physical transfer of the firearm must be completed immediately; however, the transferor must not transfer the firearm until the application has been approved and received. If the physical transfer of the firearm cannot be completed immediately, the transferor must contact the NFA Branch with the specifics.

4. Withdrawal of Application. The transferor may withdraw an application prior to approval subsequent to a written request. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the taxpaid.

5. Cancellation of Approved Application. The transferor may cancel an approved application only if the physical transfer of the firearm has not been completed. The transferor must return the approved application with the tax stamp affixed with a written request for cancellation, citing the need and that the physical transfer of the firearm did not take place. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the tax paid.

6. Disapproval of Application. If the application is disapproved, the NFA Branch will note the reason for disapproval on the application and return one copy of the ATF Form 4 to the transferor. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the tax paid.

7. Reasons for Disapproval. 26 U.S.C. § 5812 provides that applications shall be denied if the transfer, receipt, or possession of the firearm would place the transferee in violation of law.

   a. State or Local Law. If State or local law prohibits the receipt or possession of the firearm being transferred, the application will be disapproved.

   b. Persons Prohibited from Receiving a Firearm. The application will be disapproved if the transferee is a person prohibited from receiving a firearm by 18 U.S.C. § 922(g), which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person—

      (1) who has been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year;
      (2) who is a fugitive from justice;
      (3) who is an unlawful user of or addicted to any controlled substance;
      (4) who has been adjudicated as a mental defective or who has been committed to a mental institution;
      (5) who, being an alien, is illegally or unlawfully in the United States or except as provided in 18 U.S.C. 922(y)(2), has been admitted to the United States under a non-immigrant visa (as that term is defined in 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(26));
      (6) who has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions;
      (7) who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship;
      (8) who is subject to a court order that—

         (A) was issued after a hearing of which such person received actual notice, and at which such person had an opportunity to participate;
         (B) restrains such person from harassing, stalking, or threatening an intimate partner of such person or child of such intimate partner or person, or engaging in other conduct that would place an intimate partner in reasonable fear of bodily injury to the partner or child; and
         (C) (I) includes a finding that such person represents a credible threat to the physical safety of such intimate partner or child; or (II) by its terms explicitly prohibits the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against such intimate partner or child that would reasonably be expected to cause bodily injury, or

      (9) who has been convicted in any court of a crime of domestic violence; to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

8. Status Inquiries and Questions. Information relating to the NFA and other firearms laws is available at the ATF Internet website at www.atf.gov. Any inquiry relating to the status of an application to transfer an NFA firearm or about procedures in general should be directed to the NFA Branch at (202) 927-8330. Please be aware that any dissemination by ATF of information relating to the application to register an NFA firearm must conform with the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. § 6103. The opportunity provided in item 8 to authorize ATF to disclose information is intended to enable ATF to respond to inquiries by the transferee regarding the application. The failure to complete item 8 will be considered a declination of authorization to release the information.

9. Penalties. Any person who violates or fails to comply with any of the requirements of the NFA shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both. Any firearm involved in a violation of the NFA shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture. It is unlawful for any person to make or cause the making of a false entry on any application or record required by the NFA knowing such entry to be false.

10. Compliance with the Gun Control Act. All provisions of the GCA must also be complied with, including the recordkeeping requirements for licensees and the retention of ATF Form 4473 (5300.9) by licensees for dispositions to non-licensees.

Privacy Act Information

The following information is provided pursuant to Section 3 of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C. § 552(e)(3)):

1. Authority. Solicitation of this information is made pursuant to the National Firearms Act (26 U.S.C. § 5812). Disclosure of this information by the applicant is mandatory for transfer of an NFA firearm, unless the transfer is otherwise exempt from tax.

2. Purpose. To insure payment of the tax imposed by 26 U.S.C. § 5811; to insure that the transfer would not be in violation of law; and to effect registration of the firearm.

3. Routine Uses. The information will be used by ATF to make the determinations set forth in paragraph 2. In addition, to effect registration of the firearm, information as to the identification of the firearm, date of registration, and the identification and address of person entitled to possess the firearm will be entered into the National Firearms Registration and Transfer Record. No information obtained from an application, registration, or records required to be submitted by a natural person in order to comply with any provision of the National Firearms Act or regulations issued thereunder, shall, except in connection with prosecution or other action for furnishing false information, be used, directly or indirectly, as evidence against that person in any criminal proceeding with respect to a violation of law occurring prior to or concurrently with the filing of the application. The information from this application may only be disclosed to Federal authorities for purposes of prosecution for violation of the National Firearms Act.

4. Effects of not Supplying Information Requested. Failure to supply complete information will delay processing and may cause denial of the application.

Paperwork Reduction Act Notice

This information request is in accordance with the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. The information your provide is used in applying to transfer serviceable firearms taxpaid to persons other than special taxpayers qualified to deal in NFA firearms or government entities. Data is used to identify transferor, transferee, and firearm, and to ensure legality for transfer under Federal, State and local laws. The furnishing of this information is mandatory. (26 U.S.C. § 5812)

The estimated average burden associated with this collection of information is 4 hour(s) per respondent or recordkeeper, depending on individual circum-stances. Comments concerning the accuracy of this burden estimate and suggestions for reducing this burden should be addressed to Reports Management Officer, Document Services Branch, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, Washington, DC 20226.

An agency may not conduct or sponsor, and a person is not required to respond to, a collection of information unless it displays a currently valid OMB control number.

The Honorable Jay Ramras
Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Representative Ramras:

The Alaska Supreme Court respectfully requests that the House Judiciary Committee schedule a hearing on HB 323, which creates a new superior court judge position in Anchorage. The judge will handle civil cases.

An additional judge is needed because Anchorage superior court judges are the busiest in the state and a combination of more time being devoted to Child in Need of Aid cases and an ever-increasing number of unrepresented litigants has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Adding one new judge will not solve this problem (more judges will likely be needed in the very near future), but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage the workload.

A fiscal note and sponsor statement are attached. Thank you for considering this request.

Sincerely,

Doug Wooliver
Administrative Attorney
Alaska Court System

Sponsor Statement
HB 323

The Alaska Supreme Court is asking for a new superior court judge in Anchorage. The judge would be assigned to civil cases.

An additional judge is needed because Anchorage superior court judges have the highest caseloads in the state and a combination of devoting more time to Child in Need of Aid (CINA) cases and an ever-increasing number of unrepresented litigants has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Although judges' workloads are increasing, some of the additional work is the result of the court system doing a better job meeting the needs of those who come before it. This is particularly true with CINA cases.

Prior CINA practice was to have standing masters preside over all phases of a case with the exception of contested hearings. If a hearing was contested it would be assigned to an available superior court judge who would resolve the contested issue and then return the case to the standing master. Although that practice saved superior court time, it led to other problems.

The new practice begins the same as the old; a CINA case starts with a master until there is a contested issue. However, once that occurs, the case is permanently assigned to a superior court judge; it does not return to the master. Having a judge permanently assigned to the case is a better model in a number of ways, one of which is that it eliminates shuffling the family back and forth between a standing master and any number of superior court judges.

In addition to CINA cases, another prime driver behind the current workload is the prevalence of unrepresented litigants in domestic relations cases. Although we do not have historical statistics that track these cases, Alaska judges, like judges from across the country, have seen a significant increase over the past several years. What we know from current data is that when first filed about 37% of the cases have attorneys for both parties, 25% have an attorney for only one party and in 37% of the cases neither party has an attorney. The percentage of litigants appearing without counsel increases as the cases progress and increases significantly once litigants are filing motions after the initial decree is entered. Most of these post-judgment motions relate to child custody disputes.

Judges cite a list of time-consuming challenges that arise when counsel is absent from one side or both sides. Frequent motion practice, arguments unrelated to the relevant legal issues, delays stemming from the failure to submit needed information and judicial time spent calculating child support awards are some of those challenges. However, even though these litigants take more time, their cases are as important as those where the parties have lawyers and the judiciary is committed to ensuring that they too can meaningfully access the court.

Adding one new judge will not significantly reduce the workload of the Anchorage superior court (more judges will likely be needed in the very near future), but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage that workload. Thank you for considering this request.

Ordinarily, the Alaska Judicial Council incurs costs when a new judgeship is created. This new judgeship will coincide with another judicial vacancy on the Anchorage Superior Court. The Council intends to coordinate the solicitation and screening of applicants for these two positions. As a result, the increased cost to the Council is negligible.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill makes changes and additions to the statutes applicable to bail in criminal cases , reduces the proof requirements to obtain convictions for failure to appear, expands the circumstances under which a material witness may be detained, and increases the maximum amount of time between arrest and initial appearance before a judicial officer from twenty-four to forty-eight hours.

STATE OF ALASKA — BILL NO. HB 324

2010 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

Among the changes to the bail statutes, the bill includes a list of mandatory conditions of release for all defendants and a list of additional conditions of release that the court may impose. Under this legislation, a defendant will not be given a second bail review until the Court System provides information regarding a defendant's previous criminal charges and history of compliance with release. The bill will also codify a rebuttable presumption against release in certain categories of pretrial cases. Additionally, it will exclude certain categories of people from becoming third party custodians.

The agency does not predict a significant fiscal impact as a result of the proposed statute. Accordingly, the agency submits a zero fiscal note.

BILL NO. HB 324

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

This bill revises the procedures and standards of the bail statutes, moves the substantive crime of failure to appear from Title 12 to Title 11, and eliminates the culpable mental state for failure to appear.

The bill creates a rebuttable presumption that may be overcome by a preponderance of evidence that no release condition or combination of release conditions would reasonably assure the appearance of a person or the safety of others for certain higher level offenses. The bill also imposes stricter standards on who may act as a third-party custodian. It also provides that a person found guilty of a sexual felony, or of a class B or C felony with a prior felony conviction, may not be released pending sentence or appeal.

The bill changes current law on the time limit for bringing an arrestee before a judicial officer from 24 hours to 48 hours; changes the law that prohibits a court from allowing a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence from returning to the residence of the victim adopting standards for court to apply in deciding whether it is appropriate to allow the person to return to the home of the victim.

The agency does not predict a significant fiscal impact as a result of the proposed statute. Accordingly, the agency submits a zero fiscal note.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

This legislation relates to the crime of failure to appear, arrest for violating certain conditions of release, release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal, material witnesses, temporary release, petition to revoke probation, first appearances, and domestive violence protective orders.

DOC projects there will be a shift of burden from the sentenced facilities to the State and Community Jails that house the unsentenced population during the adjudication process. While the total impact of the mandays of incarceration may not be significant when calculating time served for those convicted, there will be a significant increased number of mandays in the small jails. It is difficult for DOC to quantify the impact due to the multiple variables under this scenario, e.g. transportation costs from rural areas, medical costs based on need, plea bargains, dismissed cases, etc.

The bill is a revision of out-of-date bail statutes. For persons who present a higher flight risk or greater danger to the community the bill requires that the offender must establish that they may be released with conditions that will reasonably assure their appearance and the safety of the community. It will change from 24 to 48 hours the deadline for bringing a person before a judicial officer after arrest. This should result in better charging decisions, more coherent bail arguments, and ultimately fewer bail hearings. It will also reduce the number of bail hearings on holidays and weekends. The fiscal impact will be positive but there is no way of quantifying this.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This legislation would revise Alaska's bail law in the following ways: Changes the burden of proof in a bail hearing for persons considered a flight risk or a danger to others, moves the crime of failure to appear to Title 11 and changes the culpable mental state, for serious crimes adopts a presumption that no release condition(s) would assure the appearance of the person or safety of others, imposes a stricter standard on who may be a third party custodian, changes the deadline for bringing a person before a judicial officer from 24 to 48 hours, allows for a material witness to be arrested, changes domestic violence law to comply with current case law.

Passage of this legislation will not significantly change the daily operations of the department. This legislation will have no fiscal impact on the department.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 324 makes several changes to the bail statutes. At least two of the changes will have a direct fiscal impact on the court system. The first requires court clerks to produce a criminal history report on each defendant who is seeking a second or subsequent bail review hearing. The second change impacting the court system is a provision that subjects certain defendants to a rebuttable presumption that no bail conditions will be sufficient to reasonably assure the presence of the defendant or the safety of the victim. A similar provision requires a showing by the defendant that he or she may be released on bail following a petition to revoke probation.

BILL NO. HB 324

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

Criminal History Reports

Section 3 of the bill includes a provision that requires a judge to have received from a court clerk a report from court records that describes any previous criminal charges against the person and the person's history of compliance with conditions of release. Because there are many thousands of such hearings and because this is work not currently required of court clerks, this provision will have a fiscal impact on the court system. This note reflects the costs associated with the clerk time necessary to complete this task.

This note further assumes that the criminal history report contemplated by the bill is one that can be run on records the court has in its computer system, though the current version of the bill is not limited to computer records. Should the bill not be amended to clarify this point, this fiscal note will be substantially higher as many defendants have many hundreds or even thousands of pages of criminal history records that would have to be searched by hand.

Rebuttable Presumption

Section 4 establishes a rebuttable presumption that no condition or combination of bail conditions will reasonably assure the presence of the defendant or the safety of the victim for those defendants charged with certain specified offenses and those with specified criminal histories. A similar provision in section 12 of the bill states that a person appearing in court on a petition to revoke probation also has no right to be released unless the person can establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the proposed release conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons and the community.

It is difficult to determine how many cases this rebuttable presumption will impact. There is significant overlap between the various categories of those subject to the presumptions. For example, a person subject to the presumption because the person was charged with a felony within five years of being unconditionally released from another felony conviction, would also be subjected to the presumption if he or she was subject to a petition to revoke probation. Because many offenders subject to this presumption are likely to also be subject to a petition to revoke probation, and in order to avoid double counting, this note only counts those who are subject to a petition to revoke probation. That means that it will apply to roughly 18,000 cases a year.

The next difficult estimate to make is the number of bail hearings that will actually be impacted by the change in the law. Not all bail hearings are currently contested and, presumably, not all will be contested under the new provisions.

This note conservatively estimates that 85% of those 18,000 cases subject to the presumption will continue to be resolved in the same amount of time as under current practice. These will be the cases where there is up-front agreement between the prosecution and the defense as to the appropriate bail conditions. This note estimates that in about 10% of the cases (1,800) the hearings will last an additional 15 minutes. This is similar to the extra time currently needed when a bail provision is contested. Finally, this note assumes that 5% of the cases (900) subject to the presumption will result in evidentiary hearings where the defendant must put on evidence and witnesses in an attempt to overcome the presumption. These hearings are each estimated to last three hours.

This fiscal note reflects the judicial and clerical resources necessary for the additional time spent on bail issues.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 324(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the crime of failure to appear; relating to arrest for violating certain conditions of release; relating to release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal; relating to material witnesses; relating to temporary release; relating to release on a petition to revoke probation; relating to the first appearance before a judicial officer after arrest; relating to service of process for domestic violence protective orders; making conforming amendments; amending Rules 5 and 41, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 206 and 603, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing; in this paragraph, the person's act of not appearing is conduct that does not require a culpable mental state.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security for any appearance of the person that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458].

 Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours' written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; the defendant shall notify the surety; and

(3) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the requested review.

(e) Before a person may be released under this chapter, the person must sign and file a release agreement with the clerk of the court. The release agreement must describe the terms and conditions of the person's release and include the person's promise to abide by the terms and conditions.

(f) A judicial officer may solicit comments by the victim or a parent or guardian of a minor victim who is present at the bail review hearing and wishes to comment. The judicial officer shall consider those comments and any response by the person before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

(g) The judicial officer shall issue written or oral findings that explain the reasons the officer imposed the particular conditions of release or modifications or additions to conditions previously imposed. The judicial officer shall inform the person that a law enforcement officer may arrest the person without a warrant for violation of the court's order establishing conditions of release.

(h) Information offered or introduced at a bail hearing to determine conditions of release need not conform to the rules governing the admissibility of evidence.

* Sec. 4. AS 12.30 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 12.30.011. Release before trial. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, a judicial officer shall order a person charged with an offense to be released on the person's personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, on the condition that the person

(1) obey all court orders and all federal, state, and local laws;

(2) appear in court when ordered;

(3) if represented, maintain contact with the person's lawyer; and

(4) notify the person's lawyer, who shall notify the prosecuting authority and the court, not more than 24 hours after the person changes residence.

(b) If a judicial officer determines that the release under (a) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community, the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance and protect the victim, other persons, and the community. In addition to conditions under (a) of this section, the judicial officer may, singly or in combination,

(1) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited into the registry of the court, in a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(2) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash;

(3) require the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited in the registry of the court;

(4) place restrictions on the person's travel, association, or residence;

(5) order the person to refrain from possessing a deadly weapon on the person or in the person's vehicle or residence;

(6) require the person to maintain employment, or if unemployed, actively seek employment;

(7) require the person to notify the person's lawyer and the prosecuting authority within two business days after any change in employment;

(8) require the person to avoid all contact with a victim, a potential witness, or a codefendant;

(9) require the person to refrain from the consumption and possession of alcoholic beverages;

(10) require the person to refrain from the use of a controlled substance as defined by AS 11.71, unless prescribed by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(11) require the person to be physically inside the person's residence, or in the residence of the person's third-party custodian, at time periods set by the court;

(12) require the person to keep regular contact with a law enforcement officer or agency;

(13) order the person to refrain from entering or remaining in premises licensed under AS 04;

(14) place the person in the custody of an individual who agrees to serve as a third-party custodian of the person as provided in AS 12.30.021;

(15) if the person is under the treatment of a licensed health care provider, order the person to follow the provider's treatment recommendations;

(16) order the person to take medication that has been prescribed for the person by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(17) order the person to comply with any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person and to assure the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(c) In determining the conditions of release under this chapter, the court shall consider the following:

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;

(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(3) the nature and extent of the person's family ties and relationships;

(4) the person's employment status and history;

(5) the length and character of the person's past and present residence;

(6) the person's record of convictions;

(7) the person's record of appearance at court proceedings;

(8) assets available to the person to meet monetary conditions of release;

(9) the person's reputation, character, and mental condition;

(10) the effect of the offense on the victim, any threats made to the victim, and the danger that the person poses to the victim;

(11) any other facts that are relevant to the person's appearance or the person's danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(d) In making a finding regarding the release of a person under this chapter,

(1) except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the burden of proof is on the prosecuting authority that a person charged with an offense should be detained or released with conditions described in (b) of this section or AS 12.30.016;

(2) there is a rebuttable presumption that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community, if the person is

(A) charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony;

(B) charged with a felony, was previously convicted of a felony in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, and less than five years have elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the immediately preceding offense and the commission of the present offense;

(C) charged with an offense committed while the person was on release under this chapter for a charge or conviction of another offense;

(D) charged with a crime involving domestic violence, and has been convicted in the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction;

(E) arrested in connection with an accusation that the person committed a felony outside the state or is a fugitive from justice from another jurisdiction, and the court is considering release under AS 12.70.

Sec. 12.30.016. Release before trial in certain cases. (a) A judicial officer may impose, in addition to those required or authorized under AS 12.30.011, conditions of release for offenses described in this section, if necessary to reasonably assure the person's appearance or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community.

(b) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 04.11.010, 04.11.499, AS 28.35.030, or 28.35.032, a judicial officer may order the person

(1) to refrain from

(A) consuming alcohol beverages; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, alcoholic beverages;

(2) to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of alcoholic beverages by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the conditions of the person's release by possessing alcoholic beverages;

(3) to submit to a breath test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(4) to provide a sample for a urinalysis or blood test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(5) to take a drug or combination of drugs intended to prevent substance abuse;

(6) to follow any treatment plan imposed by the court under AS 28.35.028.

(c) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 11.71 or AS 11.73, a judicial officer may order the person

(1) to refrain from

(A) consuming a controlled substance; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia;

(2) to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the terms of the person's release by possessing controlled substances or drug paraphernalia;

(3) to enroll in a random drug testing program, at the person's expense, to detect the presence of a controlled substance, with testing to occur not less than once a week, and with the results being submitted to the court and the prosecuting authority;

(4) to refrain from entering or remaining in a place where a controlled substance is being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed;

(5) to refrain from being physically present, within a two-block area of, or within a designated area near, the location where the alleged offense occurred or at other designated places, unless the person actually resides within that area; or

(6) to refrain from the use or possession of an inhalant.

(d) In a prosecution charging misconduct involving a controlled substance under AS 11.71.020(a)(2) for the manufacture of methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, if the person has been previously convicted in this or another jurisdiction of a crime involving the manufacturing, delivering, or possessing methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, a judicial officer shall require the posting of a minimum of $250,000 cash bond before the person may be released. The judicial officer may reduce this requirement if the person proves to the satisfaction of the officer that the person's only role in the offense was as an aider or abettor and that the person did not stand to benefit financially from the manufacturing.

(e) In a prosecution charging the crime of stalking that is not a crime involving domestic violence, a judicial officer may order the person to

(1) follow the provisions of any protective order to which the person is respondent;

(2) refrain from contacting in any manner, including by telephone or electronic communication, the victim;

(3) engage in counseling; if available in the community, the judicial officer shall require that counseling ordered include counseling about alternatives to aggressive behavior.

(f) In a prosecution charging a crime under AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458, a judicial officer

(1) may order the person to have no contact with the victim except as specifically allowed by the court;

(2) may order the person to reside in a place where the person is not likely to come into contact with the victim of the offense;

(3) may order the person to have no contact with any person under 18 years of age except in the normal course of business in a public place;

(4) shall assure that the victim and the parent or guardian of a minor victim have been notified by a law enforcement agency or the prosecuting authority of a hearing where release is being considered, or that a reasonable effort at notification has been made; and

(5) shall solicit comments from the victim or a parent or guardian of the minor victim who is present and wishes to comment, and consider those comments before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

* Sec. 5. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.021. Third-party custodians. (a) In addition to other conditions imposed under AS 12.30.011 or 12.30.016, a judicial officer may appoint a third-party custodian if the officer finds that the appointment will, singly or in combination with other conditions, reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A judicial officer may appoint an individual as a third-party custodian if the proposed custodian

(1) provides information to the judicial officer about the proposed custodian's residence, occupation, ties to the community, and relationship with the person, and provides any other information requested by the judicial officer;

(2) is physically able to perform the duties of custodian of the person;

(3) either personally or by telephone, appears in court with the person and acknowledges to the judicial officer orally and in writing that the proposed custodian

(A) understands the duties of custodian and agrees to perform them; the proposed custodian must specifically agree to immediately report in accordance with the terms of the order if the person released has violated a condition of release; and

(B) understands that failure to perform those duties may result in the custodian being held criminally liable under AS 09.50.010 or AS 11.56.758.

(c) A judicial officer may not appoint a person as a third-party custodian if

(1) the proposed custodian is acting as a third-party custodian for another person;

(2) criminal charges are pending in this state or another jurisdiction against the proposed custodian;

(3) the proposed custodian is on probation in this state or another jurisdiction for an offense;

(4) the proposed custodian may be called as a witness in the prosecution of the person;

(5) the proposed custodian resides out of state; however a nonresident may serve as a custodian if the nonresident resides in the state while serving as custodian.

 Sec. 6. AS 12.30.027(a) is amended to read:

(a) Before ordering release before or after trial, or pending appeal, of a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving domestic violence, the judicial officer [COURT] shall consider the safety of the [ALLEGED] victim or other household member. To protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC] and to reasonably assure the person's appearance, the judicial officer shall impose conditions required under AS 12.30.011, and [COURT] may impose [BAIL AND] any of the conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020], any of the provisions of AS 18.66.100(c)(1) - (7) and (11), and any other condition necessary to protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC], and to ensure the appearance of the person in court, including ordering the person to refrain from the consumption of alcohol.

 Sec. 7. AS 12.30.027(b) is amended to read:

(b) A judicial officer [COURT] may not order or permit a person released under (a) of this section to return to the residence of the [ALLEGED] victim or the residence of a petitioner who has a protective order directed to the person and issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 - 18.66.180 unless

(1) 20 days have elapsed following the date the person was arrested;

(2) the victim or petitioner consents to the person's return to the residence;

(3) the person does not have a prior conviction for an offense under AS 11.41 that is a crime involving domestic violence; and

(4) the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the return to the residence does not pose a danger to the victim or petitioner.

 Sec. 8. AS 12.30.030 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.030. Appeal from conditions of release. (a) If a person remains in custody after a review provided for in AS 12.30.006(c) or (d), an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court imposing the conditions. The appellate court shall affirm the order unless it finds that the lower court abused its discretion.

(b) If the appellate court finds that the lower court abused its discretion, the appellate court may modify the order, remand the matter for further proceedings, or remand the matter directing entry of the appropriate order, including release under AS 12.30.011(a). The appeal shall be determined promptly.

 Sec. 9. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.031. Temporary release. (a) A person either before trial or after conviction who is detained under this chapter may be released temporarily if

(1) the person is being held in connection with a misdemeanor or class B or C felony;

(2) the release is requested because of the

(A) death of an immediate family member of the person;

(B) birth of the person's child if the defendant executes an affidavit of paternity before the release;

(C) person's need for a mental health or substance abuse assessment that the court finds cannot be accommodated in the facility or telephonically; or

(D) person's need for a medical or dental examination required for acceptance into a residential treatment facility; and

(3) the court solicits information from the Department of Corrections regarding the defendant's conduct while incarcerated and considers that information when making a decision under this subsection.

(b) If a court orders temporary release of a person under (a) of this section, the court shall order the person to appear in court during normal business hours at the end of the period of temporary release and before the person is returned to a correctional facility.

 Sec. 10. AS 12.30.040 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.040. Release before sentence; release after conviction. (a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who has been convicted of an offense and is awaiting sentence or who has filed an appeal may be released under the provisions of this chapter if the person establishes, by clear and convincing evidence, that the person can be released under conditions that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A person may not be released under (a) of this section if the person has been convicted of an offense that is

(1) an unclassified or class A felony;

(2) a sexual felony;

(3) a class B felony if the person has been convicted within the previous 10 years of a felony committed in this state or a similar offense committed in another jurisdiction; or

(4) a felony in violation of AS 11.41, and the person has been found guilty but mentally ill.

(c) A person who has been convicted of an offense and who has filed an application for post-conviction relief may not be released under this section until the court enters an order vacating all convictions against the person. A person who has prevailed in an application for post-conviction relief may seek release before trial in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

 Sec. 11. AS 12.30.050 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.050. Release of material witnesses. (a) If the prosecution or defense establishes by affidavit or other evidence that the testimony of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and that it may be impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpoena, a judicial officer may order the arrest of the person and consider the release or detention of the person under the provisions of AS 12.30.011.

(b) A material witness may not be detained because of inability to comply with any condition of release if the testimony of the witness can adequately be secured by deposition, unless further detention is necessary to prevent a failure of justice.

(c) Release of a material witness under (a) of this section may be delayed for a reasonable period of time for the deposition of the witness to be taken.

 Sec. 12. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.055. Persons appearing on petition to revoke. A person who is in custody in connection with a petition to revoke probation does not have a right to be released under this chapter. A judicial officer may, however, release the person under the provisions of this chapter, if the person establishes by a preponderance of evidence that the proposed release conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

 Sec. 13. AS 12.30.075(a) is amended to read:

(a) Cash or other security posted by a person [DEFENDANT] under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020] that would otherwise be forfeited shall be held by the court in trust for the benefit of the victim if, within 30 days after an order of the court establishing a failure to appear or a violation of conditions of release, the prosecuting authority gives notice that restitution may be requested as part of the sentence if the person [DEFENDANT] is convicted.

 Sec. 14. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.078. Conviction occurrence. In this chapter, a conviction occurs at the time the person is found guilty, either by plea or verdict, of the offense.

 Sec. 15. AS 12.30.080 is amended by adding new paragraphs to read:

(3) "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(4) "knowingly" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(5) "peace officer" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(6) "sexual felony" has the meaning given in AS 12.55.185;

(7) "stalking" means a violation of AS 11.41.260 or 11.41.270.

 Sec. 16. AS 12.55.155(c)(12) is amended to read:

(12) the defendant was on release under AS 12.30 [AS 12.30.020 OR 12.30.040] for another felony charge or conviction or for a misdemeanor charge or conviction having assault as a necessary element;

 Sec. 17. AS 12.80.060(g)(2) is amended to read:

(2) "offense" means conduct subjecting a person to arrest as an adult offender, or as a juvenile charged as an adult,

(A) due to a violation of a federal or state criminal law, or municipal criminal ordinance;

(B) under AS 12.25.180;

(C) under AS 11.56.730 [AS 12.30.060]; or

(D) under AS 12.70.

 Sec. 18. AS 18.65.530(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in (b) or (c) of this section, a peace officer, with or without a warrant, shall arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer, within the previous 12 hours,

(1) committed domestic violence, except an offense under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor;

(2) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740;

(3) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) or

(f) or 12.30.027 [AS 12.30.025, 12.30.027, OR 12.30.029].

 Sec. 19. AS 18.66.160(a) is amended to read:

(a) Unless, on the record in court, the person has already been provided a copy of the court's order, process [PROCESS] issued under this chapter shall be promptly served and executed. If process is to be served upon a person believed to be present or residing in a municipality, as defined in AS 29.71.800, or in an unincorporated community, process shall be served by a peace officer of that municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction within the area of service. If a peace officer of the municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction is not available, a superior court, district court, or magistrate may designate any other peace officer to serve and execute process. A state peace officer shall serve process in any area that is not within the jurisdiction of a peace officer of a municipality or unincorporated community. A peace officer shall use every reasonable means to serve process issued under this chapter.

 Sec. 20. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(1), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Appearance Before the Judge or Magistrate.

(1) Except when the person arrested is issued a citation for a misdemeanor or a violation and immediately thereafter released, the arrested person shall be taken before the nearest available judge or magistrate without unnecessary delay. This appearance may be accomplished by the use of telephonic or television equipment pursuant to Criminal Rules 38.1 and 38.2. Necessary [UNNECESSARY] delay within the meaning of this paragraph (a) is defined as a period not to exceed forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours after arrest, including Sundays and holidays.

 Sec. 21. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(2), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(2) If

(i) The judge or magistrate commits the arrested person to jail for a purpose other than to serve a sentence, and

(ii) The jail is situated in a different community from the place where the judge or magistrate committed the arrested person to jail, and

(iii) The arrested person is not represented by counsel, and

(iv) The arrested person has not previously had a bail review, and

(v) The arrested person has no date, time and place established for his or her next court appearance, then the arrested person shall be taken before a judge or magistrate in the community where the jail is located within forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours of the person's detention in that jail

(aa) in order for bail to be reviewed, and

(bb) in order to determine if the person is represented by counsel, and

(cc) in order for [THE] counsel to be appointed, if appropriate.

 Sec. 22. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(a), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Admission to Bail. The defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to be admitted to bail pursuant to AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.080 [AS 12.30.010 -12.30.080].

 Sec. 23. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(b), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Types of Bonds. The court may require:

(1) the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified, under the criteria set forth in AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.010(a)];

(2) the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash [or other security], of a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(3) the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash; or

(4) the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court of cash [or other security].

 Sec. 24. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(c) Separate Bonds.

(1) If a performance bond is required, it must be enforced separately from any appearance or bail bond. Appearance in court may not be a condition of a performance bond.

(2) The court may not change or add to a bond requirement that was ordered in a previous proceeding unless the surety has been notified and agrees to the change or addition.

 Sec. 25. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 206(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Release Pending Appeal. When an appeal on the merits is pending, an appeal under AS 12.30.030 [AS 12.30.030(b)] from an order refusing bail pending appeal or imposing conditions of release pending appeal shall be in the form of a motion filed in the merit appeal. The motion must be filed with the clerk of the appellate courts within 30 days after the date of the notice of the order from which review is sought. Date of notice is defined in Civil Rule 58.1(c) and Criminal Rule 32.3(c). The motion shall comply with Rule 503, and shall contain specific factual information relevant to AS 12.30.011(c) [AS 12.30.020(c)], including but not limited to the following:

(1) The full name of the appellant; the trial court case number; the offenses of which the appellant was convicted, if applicable; the date of sentencing; and the complete terms of the sentence;

(2) That application for release pending appeal has been made to the trial court, the reasons given by the trial court for denying the application in whole or in part, and facts and reasons demonstrating why the action of the trial court on the application was erroneous or an abuse of discretion;

(3) A concise statement of the question or questions to be raised on the appeal with a showing that the question or questions were raised in the trial court;

(4) Family: marital status; length of marriage; children, and their ages; other relatives in the area of residence;

(5) Employment and financial circumstances: name of employer at time of arrest and during pre-trial release; type of work; how long so employed; and offer or promise of employment if released pending appeal; assets of the appellant or of relatives or friends relevant to the ability to post money bail;

(6) Health: history of mental illness, alcoholism, or addiction to drugs, if any;

(7) Residence: length of residence in the city or town in which the appellant resided at the time of arrest;

(8) Criminal history: criminal convictions within ten years prior to the present arrest; if the appellant has ever forfeited bail, or had release, probation, or parole revoked, the date, the name and location of the court, and a brief description of the circumstances; whether the present offense was committed while the appellant was on bail or other release or on probation or parole; any other criminal charges pending against the appellant at the time [OF] the motion is filed.

 Sec. 26. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Criminal Appeals. If a sentence of imprisonment is imposed, the court may admit the defendant to bail and stay the sentence as provided by law and by these rules [ADMISSION TO BAIL WILL BE ALLOWED AND THE SENTENCE

STAYED], pending appeal. A sentence to pay a fine or a fine and costs may be stayed, if an appeal is taken, by the district judge or magistrate or by the superior court upon such terms as the court deems proper. During appeal the court may require the defendant to deposit the whole or any part of the fine and costs in the registry of the superior court, or to give bond for the payment thereof, or to submit to an examination of assets, and it may make an appropriate order to restrain the defendant from dissipating his or her assets. An order placing the defendant on probation will be stayed if an appeal is taken.

 Sec. 27. AS 12.30.010, 12.30.020, 12.30.023, 12.30.025, 12.30.027(g), 12.30.029, and 12.30.060 are repealed.

 Sec. 28. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. (a) AS 11.56.730, enacted in sec. 1 of this Act, applies to acts committed on or after the effective date of this Act.

(b) The amendments to AS 12.25.030(b) made by sec. 2 of this Act apply to arrests for violation of conditions of release occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

Re: House Bill 324 – Bail Reform

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to respectfully request that you schedule House Bill 324 for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. HB 324 is one of several bills that the Governor has introduced to confront and help reduce the alarming and discouraging rate of sex offenses and crimes involving domestic violence in our state. This bill specifically relates to bail including bail in sex and domestic violence offenses.

This bill makes several important changes in Alaska's law relating to bail. In 1966 the Alaska Legislature enacted the Alaska Bail Act modeled after SB 1357, 89 Congress First Session. There have been only piecemeal revisions to this nearly 50 year old law. In 1984, the Federal government revised their bail statutes. This bill requires a person charged with a serious sex offense to prove that release conditions before trial will protect the victim and the public. It adopts standards for persons who may be appointed as third party custodians for the person released on bail. The bail prohibits a person found guilty of a serious sex offense from being released before sentencing or during an appeal of a conviction. It protects victims of domestic violence by setting standards that the court must find before allowing a perpetrator of domestic violence to return to the victims' residence. Additionally, it allows more time between a defendant's arrest and first appearance in court so that the police can investigate more fully, so that the prosecutor can make informed charging decision, present of better information and bail arguments in court and more time to contact the victim so he or she can appear at the bail hearing.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each provision of the bill.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

RELEASE BEFORE TRIAL AND AFTER CONVICTION
Sectional Analysis of Proposed Legislation

- Section 1 of the bill moves the crime of failure to appear at a court appearance from Title 12 to Title 11. The proposed law is similar to current law with one exception -- it provides that if a person knows that he or she is required to appear, the prosecution does not have to prove an additional culpable mental state regarding the conduct of not appearing. It also provides an affirmative defense that the defendant, due to unforeseeable circumstances outside his or her control, was prevented from appearing at the hearing, and that the defendant notified the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

  The penalties are the same as under current law, except that the bill adopts a violation for failure to appear in connection with a violation.

- Section 2 includes a conforming amendment to AS 12.25.030(b). It also changes the standard for a law enforcement officer to make an arrest without a warrant in certain cases from "reasonable cause" to "probable cause". The standard in AS 12.25.030(b) would then be the same as in subsection AS 12.25.030(a). Reasonable cause and probable cause are similar.

  Section 2 also allows a law enforcement officer to arrest a person for violation of conditions of release if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has violated conditions in connection with release under AS 12.30. Law enforcement supports this change because it avoids, for example, an officer having to get an arrest warrant for a person if the person's custodian reports that the person has violated his or her release conditions.

- Section 3 adopts a new section that describes release procedures for a person charged with a crime. Although the procedures are similar to those provided under various sections of existing law, there are a few differences, which include:

  - Before the third and subsequent bail hearings, current law and the bill require that certain prerequisites are met – such as seven days elapsing between bail hearings unless certain other factors are present. Current law requires 48 hours notice to the prosecuting authority, and the bill requires the same notice, but it also requires 48 hours notice to any surety involved so that the surety has an opportunity to attend the hearing.

  - The bill specifically requires the person being released to sign a release agreement that describes the terms of the release and includes the person's promise to abide by the terms.

- The bill eliminates a provision in current law that allows a judicial officer to change, add to, or eliminate conditions of release at any time. The law already provides a process for asking the court to change conditions, and allowing a change at any time, without following the required procedures, has the potential of being unfair to the defendant, the prosecuting authority, or to the victim.

- Section 4 rewrites the law addressing release before trial of a person charged with a crime. Proposed AS 12.30.011 adopts standards and conditions for release in general, and AS 12.30.016 adopts standards and conditions for release for specific crimes.

  - Proposed AS 12.30.011 first adopts conditions that must he imposed on all persons released pending trial. They are very general – including a requirement that the person obey all laws, appear in court when ordered, and keep in contact with the person's attorney.

    1. Subsection (b) provides conditions that a court may impose on a person charged with a crime if, in the court's discretion the condition will reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community. Many of these conditions are in current law. Others are included in federal bail law. Several were suggested by a retired judge who is doing contract work for the court system. There is also a general authorization for additional reasonable conditions.

    2. Subsection (c) describes the various circumstances that the court should consider in deciding what conditions are reasonable to impose on the person. These are similar to current law.

    3. Subsection (d) provides the evidentiary burdens that a court must apply in making a decision about the release of a person. Generally, the burden of proof is on the prosecuting authority to establish that particular conditions are reasonable to assure the defendant's appearance and the safety of the victim and others. However, the bill proposes a rebuttable presumption, that may be overcome by a preponderance of evidence, that no condition or combination of conditions will assure the defendant's appearance or the safety of the victim or others if (1) the defendant is charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony; (2) the person is charged with a felony, has a previous conviction for felony, and less that five years have elapsed since his or her unconditional release for the prior conviction; (3) the offense was committed while the defendant was on release for another offense; or (4) the charge is for a crime involving domestic violence, and the defendant has been convicted within the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence.

- Proposed AS 12.30.016 adopts conditions that may be imposed in particular cases. These conditions are in addition to the general conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011(a) and (b). Most of these additional conditions are found in current law.

  1. Subsection (b) provides additional conditions that may be imposed on persons charged with Title 04 violations such as selling alcohol without a license or bootlegging, and with drunk driving and refusal to submit to a breath test. These conditions include, for example, a judicial officer ordering a person to submit to a breath test when requested to do so by a law enforcement officer.

  2. Subsection (c) provides additional conditions that may be imposed on a person charged with violation of the drug laws, and include, for example, prohibiting the person from entering or remaining in a place where a controlled substance is being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed.

  3. Subsection (d) is a provision that was enacted in 2006, that adopts a mandatory requirement of $250,000 cash bond for a person charged with manufacturing methamphetamine, unless the defendant proves to the court that his or her role was only as an aider or abettor and that the defendant did not stand to gain financially from the offense.

  4. Subsection (e) adopts specific conditions for a person charged with stalking that is not a crime involving domestic violence. The conditions are similar to those in current law.

  5. Subsection (f) adopts specific conditions that a court may impose on a person charged with a sex offense. The conditions are similar to current law, except that it adds a condition that the court may order the defendant to have no contact with person under 18 years of age, except for contact made during the normal course of business in a public place. It requires the court, as does current law, to assure that the victims has been notified of the hearing or reasonable efforts to do so have been made, and to consider the victim's comments in making a release decision.

- Section 5 adopts standards for the appointment of a third-party custodian for a person released before trial. It requires a court to obtain information about the proposed custodian including the person's ties to the community and his or her relationship with the defendant. It also sets minimum standards for custodians such as requiring the person to be physically able to perform the duties of custodian, and requires the person to agree to report immediately if the defendant has violated conditions. The bill also prohibits a person from acting as third-party custodian under certain circumstances, such as if the person may be called as a witness in the case, or the person has recent charges or a conviction for violating the law.

- Section 6 amends the statute addressing the general release conditions of a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence by conforming it to the language used in the newly adopted sections of the bill. It does not include a substantive change.

- Section 7 amends the law that prohibits a court from allowing a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence from returning to the residence of the victim or to the residence of a person who has a protective order directed at the defendant. This prohibition was found to violate equal protection of the law in Williams v. State, 151 P.3d 460 (Alaska App. 2006). This section is in response to Williams, and would overturn it to the extent that it would prohibit a person from returning to the residence of the victim unless certain conditions were met. These include requiring that 20 days have elapsed since the arrest, the victim or petitioner consents to the return, the defendant does not have a prior conviction for a domestic violence crime against a person, and the defendant establish by clear and convincing evidence that the return to the residence does not pose a danger to the victim or petitioner.

- Section 8 rewrites the provision addressing appeal from conditions of release. Current law and the bill provide specific procedures for requesting the court to change conditions of release. The bill does not reenact the provision in current law that allows the court from hearing at any time a motion to amend the release order. Rather, the bill requires the person to follow the procedures adopted for asking the court to amend conditions.

  The appeal procedure from the trial court's bail decision is similar in the bill to current law. The standard for review is the same as current law – the appellate court shall affirm the lower court unless it finds that the lower court abused its discretion. The bill allows the appellate court to modify the order, remand the case for further proceedings, or to direct the entry of an appropriate release order. This is also similar to current law.

- Section 9 adds a new section addressing the temporary release of a person for an emergency such as the death of a family member. It is similar to current law under AS 12.30.010(a).

- Section 10 addresses the release of persons who have been found guilty but not yet sentenced or whose conviction is being appealed. It allows release under the general provisions of AS 12.30, but it requires the person seeking release to establish by clear and convincing evidence that the release sought will reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

  Under current law certain defendants may not be released after being found guilty, including a person convicted of an unclassified or class A felony. The current statute also prohibits release of persons convicted of class B or C felonies if they have a previous conviction for certain serious felonies. This later category was found by the court of appeals to violate the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of law. Bourdon v. State, 28 P. 3d 319 (Alaska App. 2001). The bill would prohibit release of a person found guilty of all sexual felonies, and a person found guilty of a class B or C felony who has been convicted of a felony in the prior 10 years. It avoids the problem in Bourdon by applying the prohibition to all persons convicted of class B or C felonies who have a prior conviction of a felony in the previous 10 years.

- Section 11 makes clarifying changes to the law for the retention or release of a material witness who is not expected to respond to a subpoena to appear. The bill does not change the substance of current law to a great degree. It does, however, specify that the court may order a material witness who is not expected to respond to a subpoena to be arrested and released under the bail law. As does current law, it allows a material witness to be detained for enough time to take a deposition and then released, unless justice requires the person be personally present at trial.

- Section 12 specifies that a person who is in custody in connection with a petition to revoke probation does not have a right to release under AS 12.30. This is the same as current law. Burt v. State, 823 P.2d 14 (Alaska App. 1991). However, a probationer may request release under AS 12.30. The bill provides that the probationer must establish by clear and convincing evidence that conditions on his or her release will reasonably assure the appearance of the probationer and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

- Section 13 is a conforming amendment to current law.

- Section 14 provides that for purposes of the bail statutes, a conviction occurs at the time a person is found guilty, either by verdict of by plea.

- Section 15 adds definitions to in the bill.

- Sections 16 – 18 are conforming amendments.

- Section 19 provides that service of domestic violence protective orders on respondents need not by made by law enforcement officers if the respondent has already been served with the protective order on the record in court.

- Sections 20 and 21 amend Rule 5, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure. Current law requires a person who has been arrested to be brought before a judicial officer within 24 hours of being arrested. The bill changes this from 24 hours to 48 hours. Although the preferred procedure is to have persons arrested be brought as soon as possible before a judicial officer, the change in the deadline will give prosecutors and the police more time to gather information to provide the court in making a release decision, and allow more time to locate and inform the victim of the right to be present at release procedures.

- Sections 22 and 23 are conforming amendments.

- Section 24 amends Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, by providing that a court may not change or add to a bond requirement without the agreement of the surety.

- Section 25 is a conforming amendment.

- Section 26 amends Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, to clarify that release of a person whose conviction is being appealed may be allowed as provided by the provisions of AS 12.30.

- Sections 27 – 29 include the repealers, the applicability sections, and the effective date provision.

Formatted: Font: 13 pt

An Act relating to the crime of failure to appear; relating to arrest for violating certain conditions of release; relating to release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal; relating to material witnesses; relating to temporary release; relating to release on a petition to revoke probation; relating to the first appearance before a judicial officer after arrest; relating to service of process for domestic violence protective orders; making conforming amendments; amending Rules 5 and 41, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 206 and 603, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

* Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.080;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing; in this paragraph, the person's act of not appearing is conduct that does not require a culpable mental state.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

Deleted: or judicial officer

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security for the appearance of the person that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

CHANGES MADE TO HB324 BY DOL

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding;

Deleted: ;

Deleted: (3) violation if the person fails to appear in connection with a charge of a violation.

* Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458].

 Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(3) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; the defendant must notify the surety; and

(4) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the requested review.

(e) Before a person may be released under this chapter, the person must sign and file a release agreement with the clerk of the court. The release agreement must describe the terms and conditions of the person's release and include the person's promise to abide by the terms and conditions.

(f) A judicial officer may solicit comments by the victim or a parent or guardian of a minor victim, who is present at the bail review hearing and wishes to comment. The judicial officer shall consider those comments and any response by the person before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

(g) The judicial officer shall issue written or oral findings that explain the reasons the officer imposed the particular conditions of release or modifications or additions to conditions previously imposed. The judicial officer shall inform the person that a law enforcement officer may arrest the person without a warrant for violation of the court's order establishing conditions of release.

(h) Information offered or introduced at a bail hearing to determine conditions of release need not conform to the rules governing the admissibility of evidence.

 Sec. 4. AS 12.30 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 12.30.011. Release before trial. (a) Except as otherwise provided in Deleted: (2) the court obtains a report from the clerk of court that describes any previous criminal charges against the person and the person's history of compliance with conditions of release that are in the records of the court;

this chapter, a judicial officer shall order a person charged with an offense to be released on the person's personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, on the condition that the person

(1) obey all court orders and all federal, state, and local laws;

(2) appear in court when ordered;

(3) if represented, maintain contact with the person's lawyer; and

(4) notify the person's lawyer, who shall notify the prosecuting authority and the court, no more than 24 hours after the person changes residence.

Deleted: and

(b) If a judicial officer determines that the release under (a) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community, the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance and protect the victim, other persons, and the community. In addition to conditions under (a) of this section, the judicial officer may, singly or in combination,

(1) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited into the registry of the court, in a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(2) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash;

(3) require the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited in the registry of the court;

(4) place restrictions on the person's travel, association, or residence;

(5) order the person to refrain from possessing a deadly weapon on the person or in the person's vehicle or residence;

(6) require the person to maintain employment, or if unemployed, actively seek employment;

(7) require the person to notify the person's lawyer and the prosecuting authority within two business days of any change in employment;

(8) require the person to avoid all contact with a victim, a potential witness, or a codefendant;

(9) require the person to refrain from the consumption and possession of alcoholic beverages;

(10) require the person to refrain from the use of a controlled substance as defined by AS 11.71, unless prescribed by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(11) require the person to be physically inside the person's residence, or in the residence of the person's third-party custodian, at time periods set by the court;

(12) require the person to keep regular contact with a law enforcement officer or agency;

Deleted: an office of the Alaska State Troopers or with a village public safety

(13) order the person to refrain from entering or remaining in premises licensed under AS 04;

(14) place the person in the custody of an individual who agrees to serve as a third-party custodian of the person as provided in AS 12.30.021;

(15) if the person is under the treatment of a licensed health care provider, order the person to follow the provider's treatment recommendations;

(16) order the person to take medication that has been prescribed for the person by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(17) order the person to comply with any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person and to assure the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(c) In determining the conditions of release under this chapter, the court shall consider the following:

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;

(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(3) the nature and extent of the person's family ties and relationships;

(4) the person's employment status and history;

(5) the length and character of the person's past and present residence;

(6) the person's record of convictions;

(7) the person's record of appearance at court proceedings;

(8) assets available to the person to meet monetary conditions of release;

(9) the person's reputation, character, and mental condition;

(10) the effect of the offense on the victim, any threats made to the victim, and the danger that the person poses to the victim;

(11) any other facts that are relevant to the person's appearance or the person's danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(d) In making a finding regarding the release of a person under this chapter,

(1) except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the burden of proof is on the prosecuting authority that a person charged with an offense should be detained or released with conditions described in (b) of this section or AS 12.30.016;

(2) there is a rebuttable presumption that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community, if the person is

(A) charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony;

(B) charged with a felony, was previously convicted of a felony in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, and less than five years have elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the immediately preceding offense and the commission of the present offense;

Deleted: or detention

Deleted: , that may be overcome by a preponderance of evidence,

(C) charged with an offense committed while the person was on release under this chapter for a charge or conviction of another offense;

(D) charged with a crime involving domestic violence, and has been convicted in the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction;

(E) arrested in connection with an accusation that the person committed a felony outside the state or is a fugitive from justice from another jurisdiction, and the court is considering release under AS 12.70.

Sec. 12.30.016. Release before trial in certain cases. (a) A judicial officer may impose, in addition to those required or authorized under AS 12.30.011, conditions of release for offenses described in this section, if necessary to reasonably assure the person's appearance or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community.

(b) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 04.11.010, 04.11.499, AS 28.35.030, or 28.35.032, a judicial officer may

(1) order the person to refrain from

(A) consuming alcohol beverages; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, alcoholic beverages;

(2) order the person to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of alcoholic beverages by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the conditions of the person's release by possessing alcoholic beverages;

(3) order the person to submit to a breath test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(4) order the person to provide a sample for a urinalysis or blood test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(5) order the person to take a drug or combination of drugs intended to prevent substance abuse;

(6) order the person to follow any treatment plan imposed by the court under AS 28.35.028.

(c) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 11.71 or AS 11.73, a judicial officer may

(1) order the person to refrain from

(A) consuming a controlled substance; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia;

(2) order the person to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the terms of the person's release by possessing controlled substances or drug paraphernalia;

(3) order the person to enroll in a random drug testing program, at the person's expense, to detect the presence of a controlled substance, with testing to occur not less than once a week, and with the results being submitted to the court and the prosecuting authority;

(4) order the person to refrain from entering or remaining in a place where a controlled substance is being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed;

(5) order the person to refrain from being physically present, within a two-block area of, or within a designated area near, the location where the alleged offense occurred or at other designated places, unless the person actually resides within that area; or

(6) order the person to refrain from the use or possession of an inhalant.

(d) In a prosecution charging misconduct involving a controlled substance under AS 11.71.020(a)(2) for the manufacture of methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, if the person has been previously convicted in this or another jurisdiction of a crime involving the manufacturing, delivering, or possessing methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, a judicial officer shall require the posting of a minimum of $250,000 cash bond before the person may be released. The judicial officer may reduce this requirement if the person proves to the satisfaction of the officer that the person's only role in the offense was as an aider or abettor and that the person did not stand to benefit financially from the manufacturing.

(e) In a prosecution charging the crime of stalking that is not a crime involving domestic violence, a judicial officer may order the person to

(1) follow the provisions of any protective order to which the person is respondent;

(2) refrain from contacting in any manner, including by telephone or electronic communication, the victim;

Deleted: mail

Formatted: Font: 13 pt

(3) engage in counseling; if available in the community, the judicial officer shall require that counseling ordered include counseling about alternatives to aggressive behavior.

(f) In a prosecution charging a crime under AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458, a judicial officer

(1) may order the person to have no contact with the victim except as specifically allowed by the court;

(2) may order the person to reside in a place where the person is not likely to come into contact with the victim of the offense;

(3) may order the person to have no contact with any person under 18 years of age except in the normal course of business in a public place;

(4) shall assure that the victim and a minor victim's parent or guardian have been notified by a law enforcement agency or the prosecuting authority of a hearing where release is being considered, or that a reasonable effort at notification has been made; and

(5) shall solicit comments from the victim, or a parent or guardian of the minor victim, who is present and wishes to comment, and consider those comments before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

* Sec. 5. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.021. Third-party custodians. (a) In addition to other conditions imposed under AS 12.30.011 or 12.30.016, a judicial officer may appoint a third-party custodian if the officer finds that the appointment will, singly or in combination with other conditions, reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A judicial officer may appoint an individual as a third-party custodian if the proposed custodian

(1) provides information to the judicial officer about the proposed custodian's residence, occupation, ties to the community, and relationship with the person, and provides any other information requested by the judicial officer;

(2) is physically able to perform the duties of custodian of the person;

(3) either personally or by telephone appears in court with the person and acknowledges to the judicial officer orally and in writing that the proposed custodian

Deleted: personally

(A) understands the duties of custodian and agrees to perform them; the proposed custodian must specifically agree to immediately report in accordance with the terms of the order if the person released has violated a condition of release; and

(B) understands that failure to perform those duties may result in the custodian being held criminally liable under AS 09.50.010 or AS 11.56.758.

(c) A judicial officer may not appoint a person as a third-party custodian if

Deleted: one or more of the following apply

(1) the proposed custodian is acting as a third-party custodian for another person;

(3) criminal charges are pending in this state or another jurisdiction against the proposed custodian;

(4) the proposed custodian is on probation in this state or another jurisdiction for an offense;

(5) the proposed custodian may be called as a witness in the prosecution of the person;

(6) the proposed custodian resides out of state; however, a non-resident may serve as a custodian if the non-resident resides in the state while serving as custodian.

Deleted: (2) the proposed custodian has been convicted of a class A misdemeanor in the previous five years or a felony in the previous 10 years in this state or another jurisdiction;

Deleted: .

* Sec. 6. AS 12.30.027(a) is amended to read:

(a) Before ordering release before or after trial, or pending appeal, of a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving domestic violence, the judicial officer [COURT] shall consider the safety of the [ALLEGED] victim or other household member. To protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC] and to reasonably assure the person's appearance, the judicial officer shall impose conditions required under AS 12.30.011, and [COURT] may impose [BAIL AND] any of the conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020], any of the provisions of AS 18.66.100(c)(1) - (7) and (11), and any other condition necessary to protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC], and to ensure the appearance of the person in court, including ordering the person to refrain from the consumption of alcohol.

* Sec. 7. AS 12.30.027(b) is amended to read:

(b) A judicial officer [COURT] may not order or permit a person released under (a) of this section to return to the residence of the [ALLEGED] victim or the residence of a petitioner who has a protective order directed to the person and issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 - 18.66.180 unless

(1) 20 days have elapsed following the date the person was arrested;

(2) the victim or petitioner consents to the person's return to the residence;

(3) the person does not have a prior conviction for an offense under AS 11.41 that is a crime involving domestic violence; and

(4) the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the return to the residence does not pose a danger to the victim or petitioner.

* Sec. 8. AS 12.30.030 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.030. Appeal from conditions of release. (a) If a person remains in custody after a review provided for in AS 12.30.006(c) or (d), an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court imposing the conditions. The appellate court shall affirm the order unless it finds that the lower court abused its discretion.

(b) If the appellate court finds that the lower court abused its discretion, the appellate court may modify the order, remand the matter for further proceedings, or remand the matter directing entry of the appropriate order, including release under AS 12.30.011(a). The appeal shall be determined promptly.

* Sec. 9. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.031. Temporary release. (a) A person either before trial or after conviction who is detained under this chapter may be released temporarily if

(1) the person is being held in connection with a misdemeanor or class B or C felony;

(2) the release is requested because of the

(A) death of an immediate family member of the person;

(B) birth of the person's child if the defendant executes an affidavit of paternity before the release;

(C) person's need for a mental health or substance abuse assessment that the court finds cannot be accommodated in the facility or telephonically; or

(D) person's need for a medical or dental examination required for acceptance into a residential treatment facility; and

(3) the court solicits information from the Department of Corrections regarding the defendant's conduct while incarcerated and considers that information when making a decision under this subsection.

(b) If a court orders temporary release of a person under (a) of this section, the court shall order the person to appear in court during normal business hours at the end of the period of temporary release and before the person is returned to a correctional facility.

* Sec. 10. AS 12.30.040 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.040. Release before sentence; release after conviction. (a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who has been convicted of an offense and is awaiting sentence or who has filed an appeal may be released under the provisions of this chapter if the person establishes, by clear and convincing evidence, that the person can be released under conditions that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A person may not be released under (a) of this section if the person has been convicted of an offense that is

(1) an unclassified or class A felony;

(2) a sexual felony;

(3) a class B felony if the person has been convicted within the previous 10 years of a felony committed in this state or a similar offense committed in another jurisdiction; or

Deleted: or C

(4) a felony in violation of AS 11.41, and the person has been found guilty but mentally ill.

(c) A person who has been convicted of an offense and who has filed an application for post-conviction relief may not be released under this section until the court enters an order vacating all convictions against the person. A person who has prevailed in an application for post-conviction relief may seek release before trial in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

 Sec. 11. AS 12.30.050 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.050. Release of material witnesses. (a) If the prosecution or defense establishes by affidavit or other evidence that the testimony of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and that it may be impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpoena, a judicial officer may order the arrest of the person and consider the release or detention of the person under the provisions of AS 12.30.011.

(b) A material witness may not be detained because of inability to comply with any condition of release if the testimony of the witness can adequately be secured by deposition, unless further detention is necessary to prevent a failure of justice.

(c) Release of a material witness under (a) of this section may be delayed for a reasonable period of time for the deposition of the witness to be taken.

 Sec. 12. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.055. Persons appearing on petition to revoke. A person who is in custody in connection with a petition to revoke probation does not have a right to be released under this chapter. A judicial officer may, however, release the person under the provisions of this chapter, if the person establishes by a preponderance of evidence that the proposed release conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

 Sec. 13. AS 12.30.075(a) is amended to read:

(a) Cash or other security posted by a person [DEFENDANT] under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020] that would otherwise be forfeited shall be held by the court in trust for the benefit of the victim if, within 30 days after an order of the court establishing a failure to appear or a violation of conditions of release, the prosecuting authority gives notice that restitution may be requested as part of the sentence if the person [DEFENDANT] is convicted.

* Sec. 14. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.078. Conviction occurrence. In this chapter, a conviction occurs at the time the person is found guilty, either by plea or verdict, of the offense.

* Sec. 15. AS 12.30.080 is amended by adding new paragraphs to read:

(3) "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(4) "knowingly" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(5) "peace officer" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(6) "sexual felony" has the meaning given in AS 12.55.185;

(7) "stalking" means a violation of AS 11.41.260 or 11.41.270.

* Sec. 16. AS 12.55.155(c)(12) is amended to read:

(12) the defendant was on release under AS 12.30 [AS 12.30.020 OR 12.30.040] for another felony charge or conviction or for a misdemeanor charge or conviction having assault as a necessary element;

* Sec. 17. AS 12.80.060(g)(2) is amended to read:

(2) "offense" means conduct subjecting a person to arrest as an adult offender, or as a juvenile charged as an adult,

(A) due to a violation of a federal or state criminal law, or municipal criminal ordinance;

(B) under AS 12.25.180;

(C) under AS 11.56.730 [AS 12.30.060]; or

(D) under AS 12.70.

* Sec. 18. AS 18.65.530(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in (b) or (c) of this section, a peace officer, with or without a warrant, shall arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer, within the previous 12 hours,

(1) committed domestic violence, except an offense under AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor;

(2) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740;

(3) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) or (f) or 12.30.027 [AS 12.30.025, 12.30.027, OR 12.30.029].

 Sec. 19. AS 18.66.160(a) is amended to read:

(a) Unless, on the record in court, the person has already been provided a copy of the court's order, process [PROCESS] issued under this chapter shall be promptly served and executed. If process is to be served upon a person believed to be present or residing in a municipality, as defined in AS 29.71.800, or in an unincorporated community, process shall be served by a peace officer of that municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction within the area of service. If a peace officer of the municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction is not available, a superior court, district court, or magistrate may designate any other peace officer to serve and execute process. A state peace officer shall serve process in any area that is not within the jurisdiction of a peace officer of a municipality or unincorporated community. A peace officer shall use every reasonable means to serve process issued under this chapter.

 Sec. 20. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(1), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Appearance Before the Judge or Magistrate.

(1) Except when the person arrested is issued a citation for a misdemeanor or a violation and immediately thereafter released, the arrested person shall be taken before the nearest available judge or magistrate without unnecessary delay. This appearance may be accomplished by the use of telephonic or television equipment pursuant to Criminal Rules 38.1 and 38.2. Necessary delay within the meaning of this paragraph (a) is defined as a period not to exceed forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours after arrest, including Sundays and holidays.

Deleted: Unnecessary

 Sec. 21. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(2), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(2) If

(i) The judge or magistrate commits the arrested person to jail for a purpose other than to serve a sentence, and

(ii) The jail is situated in a different community from the place where the judge or magistrate committed the arrested person to jail, and

(iii) The arrested person is not represented by counsel, and

(iv) The arrested person has not previously had a bail review, and

(v) The arrested person has no date, time and place established for his or her next court appearance, then the arrested person shall be taken before a judge or magistrate in the community where the jail is located within forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours of the person's detention in that jail

(aa) in order for bail to be reviewed, and

(bb) in order to determine if the person is represented by counsel, and

(cc) in order for [THE] counsel to be appointed, if appropriate.

 Sec. 22. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(a), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Admission to Bail. The defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to be admitted to bail pursuant to AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.080 [AS 12.30.010 - 12.30.080].

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(b), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Types of Bonds. The court may require:

(1) the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified, under the criteria set forth in AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.010(a)];

(2) the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash [OR OTHER SECURITY], of a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(3) the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash; or

(4) the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court of cash [OR OTHER SECURITY].

 Sec. 24. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(c) Separate Bonds.

(1) If a performance bond is required, it must be enforced separately from any appearance or bail bond. Appearance in court may not be a condition of a performance bond.

(2) The court may not change or add to a bond requirement that was ordered in a previous proceeding unless the surety has been notified and agrees to the change or addition.

* Sec. 25. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 206(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Release Pending Appeal. When an appeal on the merits is pending, an appeal under AS 12.30.030 [AS 12.30.030(b)] from an order refusing bail pending appeal or imposing conditions of release pending appeal shall be in the form of a motion filed in the merit appeal. The motion must be filed with the clerk of the appellate courts within 30 days after the date of the notice of the order from which review is sought. Date of notice is defined in Civil Rule 58.1(c) and Criminal Rule 32.3(c). The motion shall comply with Rule 503, and shall contain specific factual information relevant to AS 12.30.011(c) [AS 12.30.020(c)], including but not limited to the following:

(1) The full name of the appellant; the trial court case number; the offenses of which the appellant was convicted, if applicable; the date of sentencing; and the complete terms of the sentence;

(2) That application for release pending appeal has been made to the trial court, the reasons given by the trial court for denying the application in whole or in part, and facts and reasons demonstrating why the action of the trial court on the application was erroneous or an abuse of discretion;

(3) A concise statement of the question or questions to be raised on the appeal with a showing that the question or questions were raised in the trial court;

(4) Family: marital status; length of marriage; children, and their ages; other relatives in the area of residence;

(5) Employment and financial circumstances: name of employer at time of arrest and during pre-trial release; type of work; how long so employed; and offer or promise of employment if released pending appeal; assets of the appellant or of relatives or friends relevant to the ability to post money bail;

(6) Health: history of mental illness, alcoholism, or addiction to drugs, if any;

(7) Residence: length of residence in the city or town in which the appellant resided at the time of arrest;

(8) Criminal-history: criminal convictions within ten years prior to the present arrest; if the appellant has ever forfeited bail, or had release, probation, or parole revoked, the date, the name and location of the court, and a brief description of the circumstances; whether the present offense was committed while the appellant was on bail or other release or on probation or parole; any other criminal charges pending against the appellant at the time [OF] the motion is filed.

* Sec. 26. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Criminal Appeals. If a sentence of imprisonment is imposed, the court may admit the defendant to bail and stay the sentence as provided by law and by these rules [ADMISSION TO BAIL WILL BE ALLOWED AND THE SENTENCE STAYED], pending appeal. A sentence to pay a fine or a fine and costs may be stayed, if an appeal is taken, by the district judge or magistrate or by the superior court upon such terms as the court deems proper. During appeal the court may require the defendant to deposit the whole or any part of the fine and costs in the registry of the superior court, or to give bond for the payment thereof, or to submit to an examination of assets, and it may make an appropriate order to restrain the defendant from dissipating his or her assets. An order placing the defendant on probation will be stayed if an appeal is taken.

* Sec. 27. AS 12.30.010, 12.30.020, 12.30.023, 12.30.025, 12.30.027(g), 12.30.029, and 12.30.060 are repealed.

* Sec. 28. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. (a) AS 11.56.730, enacted in sec. 1 of this Act, applies to acts committed on or after the effective date of this Act.

(b) The amendments to AS 12.25.030(b), enacted in sec. 2 of this Act, apply to arrests for violation of conditions of release occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(c) AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.021, enacted in secs. 3 - 5 of this Act; AS 12.30.030, repealed and reenacted in sec. 8 of this Act; AS 12.30.031, enacted in sec. 9 of this Act; AS 12.30.040, repealed and reenacted in sec. 10 of this Act; AS 12.30.055, enacted in sec. 12 of this Act; and AS 12.30.078, enacted in sec. 14 of this Act; apply to bail proceedings occurring on and after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(d) AS 12.30.050, repealed and reenacted in sec. 11 of this Act, applies to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(e) The amendments to AS 12.30.027(a) and (b), enacted in secs. 6 and 7 of this Act; and to AS 12.30.075 and 12.30.080, enacted in secs. 13 and 15 of this Act; apply to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(f) The amendments to Rule 5, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in secs. 20 and 21 of this Act, apply to offenses occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(g) The amendment to Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in sec. 24 of this Act, applies to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(h) The amendment to Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in sec. 26 of this Act, applies to convictions occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

Re: House Bill 324 – Bail Reform

Dear Chairman Ramras:

In 1966 the Alaska Legislature enacted a revision of Alaska's bail statutes. 20 SLA 1966. From time to time there have been amendments to these statutes but no comprehensive review has occurred. On December 30, 1994, the Declaration of Rights to the Alaska Constitution was amended adding section 24 – Rights of Crime Victims. This constitutional provision (along with other rights granted to victims) deals directly with bail. The pertinent language of the constitution reads:

> Crime victims . . . shall have the following rights . . . the right to be reasonably protected from the accused through the imposition of appropriate bail or conditions of release by the court; the right to obtain information about and be present of all criminal or juvenile proceeding where the accused has a right to be present; the right to be allowed to be heard . . . at any proceeding where the accused's release from custody is considered.

HB 324 is a look at the statute as a whole and an implementation of the 1994 constitutional amendment. The draft copy of the bill which is attached to this letter highlights the parts of the bill that directly affect victims of domestic violence and victims of sexual assault and sexual abuse. The color coding highlights the provisions of the bill that specifically relates to sexual assault and domestic violence, along with setting out provisions which are helpful to all victims including these violent crimes.

Yellow highlights the provisions of the bill that directly affect cases charging sexual assault, sexual abuse, or domestic violence;

Pink highlights provisions of the bill that, while they apply to all prosecutions, would be very helpful to victims of sexual assault, sexual abuse, or domestic violence;

When this bill was being heard in the other body, there was testifying regarding section 20, which expands the time for an initial bail hearing from 24 to 48 hours. The testimony was that if this change were made, Alaska would be the only state to have more than a 24 hours time to set bail. I am attaching a chart of each of the 50 states. As you can see Alaska is one of only 3 states that uses 24 hours including weekends and holidays.

Sincerely,

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)
6 states - 24 hours, calculated excluding weekends and holidays (AZ, CT, DE, ID, MA, NH)

1 state - 36 hours, calculated excluding day of arrest, Sundays and holidays (MN)

7 states- 48 hours, including weekends and holidays (AL, AR, GA, HI, MS, NE, TX)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Sunday, holiday, and days when court not in session (CA)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (ME)
1 state - 48 hours if 1st appearance is combined w/prob. cause hearing (court decision) (WI)

2 states - 72 hours, including weekends and holidays (NJ, WY)
1 state - 72 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (LA)
1 state - 72 hours is "without delay", if probable cause w/in 48 hours (court decision) (TN)
21 states - "without unnecessary delay" (CO, IL, IA, KS, KY, MI, MT, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, OH, OK, OR, PA, RI, SD, UT, VT, WV)

2 states - "forthwith" (SC, VA)

1 state - "promptly" (repealed a 24- hour rule in 1995) (IN)

1 state - person must be released if not "charged" within 20 hours, but no provision for first appearance (MO)

Illinois	without unnecessary delay	I.L.C.S. § 109-1	See, People v. Willis, 831 N.E.2d, 531, 538 (Ill., 2005) Ill Court cites McLaughlin as requiring 48 hours, but delay is only one factor to be examined in deciding whether confession is voluntary. Court has not otherwise defined "unnecessary delay".

Indiana	" promptly" 24 hr. rule repealed, 1995 Ct. decision implies that more than 48 hours can pass before initial appearance before magistrate	Ind. Code § 35-33-7-1	See, State v. Larson, 776 N.W.2d, 254, 258 (Ind. 2009) – probable cause must be determined with 48 hours, but can be based on hearsay and written testimony. "Arrested person has no right to be physically present at probable cause hearing." BILL NO.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

Introduced:
Referred:

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the crime of failure to appear; relating to arrest for violating certain conditions of release; relating to release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal; relating to material witnesses; relating to temporary release; relating to release on a petition to revoke probation; relating to the first appearance before a judicial officer after arrest; relating to service of process for domestic violence protective orders; making conforming amendments; amending Rules 5 and 41, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 206 and 603, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.080;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing; in this paragraph, the person's act of not appearing is conduct that does not require a culpable mental state.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court or judicial officer orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding;

(3) violation if the person fails to appear in connection with a charge of a violation.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458].

* Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the court obtains a report from the clerk of court that describes any previous criminal charges against the person and the person's history of compliance with conditions of release;

(3) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; and

(4) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the requested review.

(e) Before a person may be released under this chapter, the person must sign and file a release agreement with the clerk of the court. The release agreement must describe the terms and conditions of the person's release and include the person's promise to abide by the terms and conditions.

(f) A judicial officer may solicit comments by the victim or a parent or guardian of a minor victim, who is present at the bail review hearing and wishes to comment. The judicial officer shall consider those comments before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

(g) The judicial officer shall issue written or oral findings that explain the reasons the officer imposed the particular conditions of release. The judicial officer shall inform the person that a law enforcement officer may arrest the person without a warrant for violation of the court's order establishing conditions of release.

(h) Information offered or introduced at a bail review hearing before a judicial officer to determine conditions of release need not conform to the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in a court of law.

* Sec. 4. AS 12.30 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 12.30.011. Release before trial. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, a judicial officer shall order a person charged with an offense to be released on the person's personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, on the condition that the person

(1) obey all court orders and all federal, state, and local laws;

(2) appear in court when ordered;

(3) if represented, maintain contact with the person's lawyer; and

(4) notify the person's lawyer and the prosecuting authority no more than 24 hours after the person changes residence.

(b) If a judicial officer determines that the release under (a) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community, the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance and protect the victim, other persons, and the community. In addition to conditions under (a) of this section, the judicial officer may, singly or in combination,

(1) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited into the registry of the court, in a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(2) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash;

(3) require the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited in the registry of the court;

(4) place restrictions on the person's travel, association, or residence;

(5) order the person to refrain from possessing a deadly weapon on the person or in the person's vehicle or residence;

(6) require the person to maintain employment, or if unemployed, actively seek employment;

(7) require the person to notify the prosecuting authority and the person's attorney within two business days of any change in employment;

(8) require the person to avoid all contact with a victim, a potential witness, or a codefendant;

(9) require the person to refrain from the consumption and possession of alcoholic beverages;

(10) require the person to refrain from the use of a controlled substance as defined by AS 11.71, unless prescribed by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(11) require the person to be physically inside the person's residence, or in the residence of the person's third-party custodian, at time periods set by the court;

(12) require the person to keep regular contact with an office of the Alaska State Troopers or with a village public safety officer;

(13) order the person to refrain from entering or remaining in premises licensed under AS 04;

(14) place the person in the custody of an individual who agrees to serve as a third-party custodian of the person as provided in AS 12.30.021;

(15) if the person is under the treatment of a licensed health care provider, order the person to follow the provider's treatment recommendations;

(16) order the person to take medication that has been prescribed for the person by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(17) order the person to comply with any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person and to assure the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(c) In determining the conditions of release under this chapter, the court shall consider the following:

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;

(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(3) the nature and extent of the person's family ties and relationships;

(4) the person's employment status and history;

(5) the length and character of the person's past and present residence;

(6) the person's record of convictions;

(7) the person's record of appearance at court proceedings;

(8) assets available to the person to meet monetary conditions of release;

(9) the person's reputation, character, and mental condition;

(10) the effect of the offense on the victim, any threats made to the victim, and the danger that the person poses to the victim;

(11) any other facts that are relevant to the person's appearance or the person's danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(d) In making a finding regarding the release or detention of a person under this chapter,

(1) except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the burden of proof is on the prosecuting authority that a person charged with an offense should be detained or released with conditions described in (b) of this section or AS 12.30.016;

(2) there is a rebuttable presumption, that may be overcome by a preponderance of evidence, that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community, if the person is charged with

(A) an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony;

(B) a felony, was previously convicted of a felony in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, and less than five years have elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the immediately preceding offense and the commission of the present offense;

(C) an offense committed while the person was on release under this chapter for a charge or conviction of another offense;

(D) a crime involving domestic violence, and has been convicted in the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction.

Sec. 12.30.016. Release before trial in certain cases. (a) A judicial officer may impose, in addition to those required or authorized under AS 12.30.011, conditions of release for offenses described in this section, if reasonably necessary to assure the person's appearance or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community.

(b) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 04.11.010, 04.11.499, AS 28.35.030, or 28.35.032, a judicial officer may

(1) order the person to refrain from

(A) consuming alcohol beverages; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, alcoholic beverages;

(2) order the person to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of alcoholic beverages by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the conditions of the person's release by possessing alcoholic beverages;

(3) order the person to submit to a breath test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(4) order the person to provide a sample for a urinalysis or blood test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(5) order the person to take a drug or combination of drugs intended to prevent substance abuse;

(6) order the person to follow any treatment plan imposed by the court under AS 28.35.028.

(c) In a prosecution charging a violation of AS 11.71 or AS 11.73, a judicial officer may

(1) order the person to refrain from

(A) consuming a controlled substance; or

(B) possessing on the person, in the person's residence, or in any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia;

(2) order the person to submit to a search without a warrant of the person, the person's personal property, the person's residence, or any vehicle or other property over which the person has control, for the presence of a controlled substance or drug paraphernalia by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the person is violating the terms of the person's release by possessing controlled substances or drug paraphernalia;

(3) order the person to enroll in a random drug testing program, at the person's expense, to detect the presence of a controlled substance, with testing to occur not less than once a week, and with the results being submitted to the court and the prosecuting authority;

(4) order the person to refrain from entering or remaining in a place where a controlled substance is being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed;

(5) order the person to refrain from being physically present, within a two-block area of, or within a designated area near, the location where the alleged offense occurred or at other designated places, unless the person actually resides within that area; or

(6) order the person to refrain from the use or possession of an inhalant.

(d) In a prosecution charging misconduct involving a controlled substance under AS 11.71.020(a)(2) for the manufacture of methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, if the person has been previously convicted in this or another jurisdiction of a crime involving the manufacturing, delivering, or possessing methamphetamine, or its salts, isomers, or salts of isomers, a judicial officer shall require the posting of a minimum of $250,000 cash bond before the person may be released. The judicial officer may reduce this requirement if the person proves to the satisfaction of the officer that the person's only role in the offense was as an aider or abettor and that the person did not stand to benefit financially from the manufacturing.

(e) In a prosecution charging the crime of stalking that is not a crime involving domestic violence, a judicial officer may order the person to

(1) follow the provisions of any protective order to which the person is respondent;

(2) refrain from contacting in any manner, including by telephone or electronic mail, the victim;

(3) engage in counseling; if available in the community, the judicial officer shall require that counseling ordered include counseling about alternatives to aggressive behavior.

(f) In a prosecution charging a crime under AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458, a judicial officer

(1) may order the person to have no contact with the victim except as specifically allowed by the court;

(2) may order the person to reside in a place where the person is not likely to come into contact with the victim of the offense;

(3) may order the person to have no contact with any person under 18 years of age except in the normal course of business in a public place;

(4) shall assure that the victim and a minor victim's parent or guardian have been notified by a law enforcement agency or the prosecuting authority of a hearing where release is being considered, or that a reasonable effort at notification has been made; and

(5) shall solicit comments from the victim, or a parent or guardian of the minor victim, who is present and wishes to comment, and consider those comments before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

 Sec. 5. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.021. Third-party custodians. (a) In addition to other conditions imposed under AS 12.30.011 or 12.30.016, a judicial officer may appoint a third-party custodian if the officer finds that the appointment will, singly or in combination with other conditions, reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A judicial officer may appoint an individual as a third-party custodian if the proposed custodian

(1) provides information to the judicial officer about the proposed custodian's residence, occupation, ties to the community, and relationship with the person, and provides any other information requested by the judicial officer;

(2) is physically able to perform the duties of custodian of the person;

(3) appears in court with the person and acknowledges to the judicial officer personally and in writing that the proposed custodian

(A) understands the duties of custodian and agrees to perform them; the proposed custodian must specifically agree to immediately report in accordance with the terms of the order if the person released has violated a condition of release; and

(B) understands that failure to perform those duties may result in the custodian being held criminally liable under AS 09.50.010 or AS 11.56.758.

(c) A judicial officer may not appoint a person as a third-party custodian if one or more of the following apply:

(1) the proposed custodian is acting as a third-party custodian for another person;

(2) the proposed custodian has been convicted of a class A misdemeanor in the previous five years or a felony in the previous 10 years in this state or another jurisdiction;

(3) criminal charges are pending in this state or another jurisdiction against the proposed custodian;

(4) the proposed custodian is on probation in this state or another jurisdiction for an offense;

(5) the proposed custodian may be called as a witness in the prosecution of the person;

(6) the proposed custodian resides out of state.

 Sec. 6. AS 12.30.027(a) is amended to read:

(a) Before ordering release before or after trial, or pending appeal, of a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving domestic violence, the judicial officer [COURT] shall consider the safety of the [ALLEGED] victim or other household member. To protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC] and to reasonably assure the person's appearance, the judicial officer shall impose conditions required under AS 12.30.011, and [COURT] may impose [BAIL AND] any of the conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020], any of the provisions of AS 18.66.100(c)(1) - (7) and (11), and any other condition necessary to protect the [ALLEGED] victim, household member, other persons, and the community [PUBLIC], and to ensure the appearance of the person in court, including ordering the person to refrain from the consumption of alcohol.

 Sec. 7. AS 12.30.027(b) is amended to read:

(b) A judicial officer [COURT] may not order or permit a person released under (a) of this section to return to the residence of the [ALLEGED] victim or the residence of a petitioner who has a protective order directed to the person and issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 - 18.66.180 unless

(1) 20 days have elapsed following the date the person was arrested;

(2) the victim or petitioner consents to the person's return to the residence;

(3) the person does not have a prior conviction for an offense under AS 11.41 that is a crime involving domestic violence; and

(4) the person establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the return to the residence does not pose a danger to the victim or petitioner.

 Sec. 8. AS 12.30.030 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.030. Appeal from conditions of release. (a) A person who remains in custody after a review provided for in AS 12.30.006(c) or (d) may appeal the order to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court imposing the conditions. The appellate court shall affirm the order unless it finds that the lower court abused its discretion.

(b) If the appellate court finds that the lower court abused its discretion, the appellate court may modify the order, remand the matter for further proceedings, or remand the matter directing entry of the appropriate order, including release under AS 12.30.011(a). The appeal shall be determined promptly.

 Sec. 9. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.031. Temporary release. (a) A person either before trial or after conviction who is detained under this chapter may be released temporarily if

(1) the person is being held in connection with a misdemeanor or class B or C felony;

(2) the release is requested because of the

(A) death of an immediate family member of the person;

(B) birth of the person's child if the defendant executes an affidavit of paternity before the release;

(C) person's need for a mental health or substance abuse assessment that the court finds cannot be accommodated in the facility or telephonically; or

(D) person's need for a medical or dental examination required for acceptance into a residential treatment facility; and

(3) the court solicits information from the Department of Corrections regarding the defendant's conduct while incarcerated and considers that information when making a decision under this subsection.

(b) If a court orders temporary release of a person under (a) of this section, the court shall order the person to appear in court during normal business hours at the end of the period of temporary release and before the person is returned to a correctional facility.

* Sec. 10. AS 12.30.040 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.040. Release before sentence; release after conviction. (a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who has been convicted of an offense and is awaiting sentence or who has filed an appeal may be released under the provisions of this chapter if the person establishes, by clear and convincing evidence, that the person can be released under conditions that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

(b) A person may not be released under (a) of this section if the person has been convicted of an offense that is

(1) an unclassified or class A felony;

(2) a sexual felony; or

(3) a class B or C felony if the person has been convicted within the previous 10 years of a felony committed in this state or a similar offense committed in another jurisdiction.

(c) A person who has been convicted of an offense and who has filed an application for post-conviction relief may not be released under this section until the court enters an order vacating all convictions against the person. A person who has prevailed in an application for post-conviction relief may seek release before trial in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

 Sec. 11. AS 12.30.050 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 12.30.050. Release of material witnesses. (a) If the prosecution or defense establishes by affidavit or other evidence that the testimony of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and that it may be impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpoena, a judicial officer may order the arrest of the person and consider the release or detention of the person under the provisions of AS 12.30.011.

(b) A material witness may not be detained because of inability to comply with any condition of release if the testimony of the witness can adequately be secured by deposition, unless further detention is necessary to prevent a failure of justice.

(c) Release of a material witness under (a) of this section may be delayed for a reasonable period of time for the deposition of the witness to be taken.

 Sec. 12. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.055. Persons appearing on petition to revoke. A person who is in custody in connection with a petition to revoke probation does not have a right to be released under this chapter. A judicial officer may, however, release the person under the provisions of this chapter, if the person establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the proposed release conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

 Sec. 13. AS 12.30.075(a) is amended to read:

(a) Cash or other security posted by a person [DEFENDANT] under AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.020] that would otherwise be forfeited shall be held by the court in trust for the benefit of the victim if, within 30 days after an order of the court establishing a failure to appear or a violation of conditions of release, the prosecuting authority gives notice that restitution may be requested as part of the sentence if the person [DEFENDANT] is convicted.

* Sec. 14. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.078. Conviction occurrence. In this chapter, a conviction occurs at the time the person is found guilty, either by plea or verdict, of the offense.

* Sec. 15. AS 12.30.080 is amended by adding new paragraphs to read:

(3) "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(4) "knowingly" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(5) "peace officer" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(6) "sexual felony" has the meaning given in AS 12.55.185;

(7) "stalking" means a violation of AS 11.41.260 or 11.41.270.

* Sec. 16. AS 12.55.155(c)(12) is amended to read:

(12) the defendant was on release under AS 12.30 [AS 12.30.020 OR 12.30.040] for another felony charge or conviction or for a misdemeanor charge or conviction having assault as a necessary element;

* Sec. 17. AS 12.80.060(g)(2) is amended to read:

(2) "offense" means conduct subjecting a person to arrest as an adult offender, or as a juvenile charged as an adult,

(A) due to a violation of a federal or state criminal law, or municipal criminal ordinance;

(B) under AS 12.25.180;

(C) under AS 11.56.730 [AS 12.30.060]; or

(D) under AS 12.70.

* Sec. 18. AS 18.65.530(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in (b) or (c) of this section, a peace officer, with or without a warrant, shall arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer, within the previous 12 hours,

(1) committed domestic violence, except an offense under

AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.130, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor;

(2) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740;

(3) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) or (f) or 12.30.027 [AS 12.30.025, 12.30.027, OR 12.30.029].

 Sec. 19. AS 18.66.160(a) is amended to read:

(a) Unless, on the record in court, the person has already been provided a copy of the court's order, process [PROCESS] issued under this chapter shall be promptly served and executed. If process is to be served upon a person believed to be present or residing in a municipality, as defined in AS 29.71.800, or in an unincorporated community, process shall be served by a peace officer of that municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction within the area of service. If a peace officer of the municipality or unincorporated community who has jurisdiction is not available, a superior court, district court, or magistrate may designate any other peace officer to serve and execute process. A state peace officer shall serve process in any area that is not within the jurisdiction of a peace officer of a municipality or unincorporated community. A peace officer shall use every reasonable means to serve process issued under this chapter.

 Sec. 20. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(1), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Appearance Before the Judge or Magistrate.

(1) Except when the person arrested is issued a citation for a misdemeanor or a violation and immediately thereafter released, the arrested person shall be taken before the nearest available judge or magistrate without unnecessary delay. This appearance may be accomplished by the use of telephonic or television equipment pursuant to Criminal Rules 38.1 and 38.2. Unnecessary delay within the meaning of this paragraph (a) is defined as a period not to exceed forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours after arrest, including Sundays and holidays.

 Sec. 21. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 5(a)(2), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(2) If

(i) The judge or magistrate commits the arrested person to jail for a purpose other than to serve a sentence, and

(ii) The jail is situated in a different community from the place where the judge or magistrate committed the arrested person to jail, and

(iii) The arrested person is not represented by counsel, and

(iv) The arrested person has not previously had a bail review, and

(v) The arrested person has no date, time and place established for his or her next court appearance, then the arrested person shall be taken before a judge or magistrate in the community where the jail is located within forty-eight [TWENTY-FOUR] hours of the person's detention in that jail

(aa) in order for bail to be reviewed, and

(bb) in order to determine if the person is represented by counsel, and

(cc) in order for [THE] counsel to be appointed, if appropriate.

 Sec. 22. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(a), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(a) Admission to Bail. The defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to be admitted to bail pursuant to AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.080 [AS 12.30.010 -12.30.080].

 Sec. 23. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(b), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Types of Bonds. The court may require:

(1) the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified, under the criteria set forth in AS 12.30.011 [AS 12.30.010(a)];

(2) the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash [OR OTHER SECURITY], of a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(3) the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash; or

(4) the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court of cash [OR OTHER SECURITY].

* Sec. 24. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(c) Separate Bonds.

(1) If a performance bond is required, it must be enforced separately from any appearance or bail bond. Appearance in court may not be a condition of a performance bond.

(2) The court may not change or add to a bond requirement that was ordered in a previous proceeding unless the surety agrees to the change or addition.

* Sec. 25. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 206(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Release Pending Appeal. When an appeal on the merits is pending, an appeal under AS 12.30.030 [AS 12.30.030(b)] from an order refusing bail pending appeal or imposing conditions of release pending appeal shall be in the form of a motion filed in the merit appeal. The motion must be filed with the clerk of the appellate courts within 30 days after the date of the notice of the order from which review is sought. Date of notice is defined in Civil Rule 58.1(c) and Criminal Rule 32.3(c). The motion shall comply with Rule 503, and shall contain specific factual information relevant to AS 12.30.011(c) [AS 12.30.020(c)], including but not limited to the following:

(1) The full name of the appellant; the trial court case number; the offenses of which the appellant was convicted, if applicable; the date of sentencing; and the complete terms of the sentence;

(2) That application for release pending appeal has been made to the trial court, the reasons given by the trial court for denying the application in whole or in part, and facts and reasons demonstrating why the action of the trial court on the application was erroneous or an abuse of discretion;

(3) A concise statement of the question or questions to be raised on the appeal with a showing that the question or questions were raised in the trial court;

(4) Family: marital status; length of marriage; children, and their ages; other relatives in the area of residence;

(5) Employment and financial circumstances: name of employer at time of arrest and during pre-trial release; type of work; how long so employed; and offer or promise of employment if released pending appeal; assets of the appellant or of relatives or friends relevant to the ability to post money bail;

(6) Health: history of mental illness, alcoholism, or addiction to drugs, if any;

(7) Residence: length of residence in the city or town in which the appellant resided at the time of arrest;

(8) Criminal history: criminal convictions within ten years prior to the present arrest; if the appellant has ever forfeited bail, or had release, probation, or parole revoked, the date, the name and location of the court, and a brief description of the circumstances; whether the present offense was committed while the appellant was on bail or other release or on probation or parole; any other criminal charges pending against the appellant at the time [OF] the motion is filed.

 Sec. 26. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, is amended to read:

(b) Criminal Appeals. If a sentence of imprisonment is imposed, the court may admit the defendant to bail and stay the sentence as provided by law and by these rules [ADMISSION TO BAIL WILL BE ALLOWED AND THE SENTENCE STAYED], pending appeal. A sentence to pay a fine or a fine and costs may be stayed, if an appeal is taken, by the district judge or magistrate or by the superior court upon such terms as the court deems proper. During appeal the court may require the defendant to deposit the whole or any part of the fine and costs in the registry of the superior court, or to give bond for the payment thereof, or to submit to an examination of assets, and it may make an appropriate order to restrain the defendant from dissipating his or her assets. An order placing the defendant on probation will be stayed if an appeal is taken.

 Sec. 27. AS 12.30.010, 12.30.020, 12.30.023, 12.30.025, 12.30.027(g), 12.30.029, and 12.30.060 are repealed.

 Sec. 28. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. (a) AS 11.56.730, enacted in sec. 1 of this Act, applies to acts committed on or after the effective date of this Act.

(b) The amendments to AS 12.25.030(b), enacted in sec. 2 of this Act, apply to arrests for violation of conditions of release occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(c) AS 12.30.006 - 12.30.021, enacted in secs. 3 - 5 of this Act; AS 12.30.030, repealed and reenacted in sec. 8 of this Act; AS 12.30.031, enacted in sec. 9 of this Act; AS 12.30.040, repealed and reenacted in sec. 10 of this Act; AS 12.30.055, enacted in sec. 12 of this Act; and AS 12.30.078, enacted in sec. 14 of this Act; apply to bail proceedings occurring on and after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(d) AS 12.30.050, repealed and reenacted in sec. 11 of this Act, applies to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(e) The amendments to AS 12.30.027(a) and (b), enacted in secs. 6 and 7 of this Act; and to AS 12.30.075 and 12.30.080, enacted in secs. 13 and 15 of this Act; apply to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act for offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

(f) The amendments to Rule 5, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in secs. 20 and 21 of this Act, apply to offenses occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(g) The amendment to Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in sec. 24 of this Act, applies to bail proceedings occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

(h) The amendment to Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, enacted in sec. 26 of this Act, applies to convictions occurring on or after the effective date of this Act.

Re: House Bill 324
Constitutional Issues

Chair Ramras:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding House Bill 324. The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. From that perspective, we have several concerns with the proposed legislation.

Section 4 Unconstitutional Restrictions on Pre-Trial Release

Section Four of the Bill proposes a new section AS 12.30.011 with a myriad of constitutional infirmities.

The Alaska Constitution states that "an accused is entitled . . . to be released on bail, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great." Alaska Const., Art. I, Sec. 11. Subsection (d) of Section 4 of the Bill, however, proposes that for a wide group of defendants the court should presume, subject to rebuttal by the defendant, that no amount of bail and no conditions of release will ensure the appearance of the defendant and protect the victim and the public. The language used for the presumption, that "no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure" public safety or the defendant's appearance, is a phrase used to describe the basis by which a judge can deny bail entirely to a defendant. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3142(e)(1); Pa. Const. Art. 1, § 14.

While the proposed new statutory language does not specifically state that those who cannot be safely released shall be held without bail, the language leaves no clear alternative. Thus it proposes to impermissibly negate the dictates of the Alaska Constitution and to deny bail entirely to many defendants, while imposing on them the burden to refute the denial of bail. The categories of defendants to whom this denial would apply includes those arrested for class A or unclassified felonies, any sexual felony, anyone previously convicted of a felony except if the complete term (including any parole or probation term) had terminated more than five years ago, anyone also under charge in another case, anyone arrested for a domestic violence charge who had previously been convicted of a domestic violence charge within the last five years, or anyone arrested "in connection with" an allegation of commission of an offense outside the state or being a fugitive from justice in another state.

The Alaska Supreme Court has clearly and unequivocally held that the outright denial of bail violates the Alaska Constitution. Martin v. State, 517 P.2d 1389 (Alaska 1974) (holding that the refusal of bail to a person arrested on a charge of forgery who had three outstanding cases of forgery against him violated both Alaska statutes and Article I, Section 11 of the Alaska Constitution). In fact, the Martin court discussed a very similar argument by the Department of Law in these terms:

> "The State urges that these amendments [to the bail statutes] permit the detention of defendants without bail when the judicial officer determines that the defendant 'will pose a danger to other persons and the community.' . . . The legislature could not, of course, infringe upon the constitutional right of bail. . . . [A] legislative enactment expressly permitting the detention of persons without right to bail would be unconstitutional unless a constitutional amendment were adopted." Martin, 517 P.2d at 1396-97 (emphasis added).

Should the plain language of Article I, Section 11 be insufficient to inform the State that pretrial bail is a right not subject revocation by the legislature or the courts, the history of the enactment of the bail clauses to the Alaska Constitution should make clear that any and all defendants should receive a bail hearing. Victor Fischer, delegate to the Constitutional Convention, commented during the convention that the phrase "when the proof is evident and the presumption great" had been enacted in Alaska, as in other states, to show that even defendants in capital offenses should generally be eligible for bail: "The actual determination of when a person is released on bail, if charged with a capital offense, is still up to the judge." 2 Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention 1344-45 (Jan. 6, 1956) cited in State v. Wassillie, 606 P.2d 1279, 1282 (Alaska 1980).

If the Constitutional Convention drafted Article I, Section 11 with the intent that even those charged with capital cases should receive a bail hearing, then the Governor's bill that defendants charged with felonies should be presumed not to be eligible for bail must surely violate the terms of the bail clauses of the Alaska Constitution. The proposed amendments in Section 4 of H.B. 324 do not pass constitutional review, as they contradict both the language of Article I, Section 11, which vests all defendants except those in capital cases with the right to bail, and the Supreme Court's analysis in Martin.

Even were a finding that "no condition or combination of conditions" support release somehow constitutional, the burden-shifting provision of the statute is inappropriate in the context of a bail hearing conducted within hours of arrest. These hearings may be conducted in the absence of counsel; even where the defendant obtains counsel within a few hours of arrest, defense counsel will not likely be capable of carrying the burden to show that the defendant is not a danger and not likely to fail to appear. See Stack v. Boyle, 342 U.S. 1, 11 (1951) (stating that an initial bail hearing "must be done in haste – the defendant may be taken by surprise, counsel has just been engaged, or for other reasons the bail is fixed without that full inquiry and consideration which the matter deserves," Jackson, J., concurring). Bearing that burden would require witnesses and documentation on the defense side, resources likely impossible for even a privately retained counsel.

The ACLU of Alaska requests that this Committee delete or appropriately revise these clearly unconstitutional provisions in HB 324.

Section 4 Improper Proposed Expansion of Court Authority

The primary purpose of bail is to ensure the appearance of the accused. A judge may consider public safety or the safety of individuals in setting conditions for release. However, beyond specific findings relating to an individual defendant and specific reasons for concern that he may fail to appear or endanger others, a judge does not have more interest in supervising an arrestee, who is presumed innocent, than he does over a member of the general public. U.S. v. Scott, 450 F.3d 863, 874 (9th Cir. 2006).

Thus, certain provision in Section Four, subsection (b) of H.B. 324 violate the constitutional protections regarding granting of bail. Subsection (b)(6) permitting a judge to "require the person to maintain employment, or if unemployed, actively seek employment" has no bearing on either the likelihood of the individual to appear in court nor on any danger posed to the victim or the public. Pretrial supervision is not a period of "pre-probation" when the State may broadly supervise an accused. The State's legitimate interests are limited to ensuring public safety and ensuring the appearance of the accused. These kinds of provisions infringe on the right of the defendant to be considered an innocent person. Excessive bail conditions, unjustified by traditional state interests, resemble probationary supervision and thus constitute unconstitutional punishment prior to adjudication.

While other provisions in subsection (b) could have conceivable use in specific individual cases, the long list of bail conditions set forth essentially invites judges to overuse them. Prohibitions on the use of alcohol and entry to licensed premises, for instance, are currently imposed excessively and frequently without the individualized inquiry required in Scott. Overuse of alcohol-related restrictions for Alaska Native defendants has been a basis of criticism for ethnic disparities in the criminal justice system. Instead of minimizing these existing disparities, H.B. 324 would institutionalize them.

Another area of particular concern in the enumerated bail conditions are two provisions relating to health care, subsections (b)(15) and (b)(16) which purport to permit a judge to require a defendant to adhere to courses of psychiatric and medical treatment and to compel a defendant to take prescription medications. The right to bodily privacy is an integral part of the right to privacy under the Alaska Constitution. Allowing the criminal justice system to shortcut the elaborate existing framework by which a person may be committed to psychiatric care would present serious constitutional problems. For instance, in a commitment proceeding, the individual has a right to notice of what treatment specifically has been proposed and then may line up appropriate experts to contest the treatment plan. Under this statute, the defendant has no notice of such a request, no opportunity to bring appropriate experts to court, and thus no way to contest whether the proposed plan of treatment is proper or not. The bill also invites an infringement of the right to privacy in one's medical information and records, since a judge must naturally inquire into the current medical and psychiatric treatment of the accused in order to ensure that the orders are carried out. In order to make sense, the provisions relating to medical care presuppose exposure of the accused's sensitive medical information in open court.

Again, given these important constitutional interests, the ACLU recommends the Committee delete or revise Section 4, subsection (b) of HB 324.

Section One's Proposed Addition of AS Sec. 11.56.730
Offends the Due Process Clause of the Alaska Constitution

Section One of H.B. 324 proposes creation of the offense of "failure to appear," and requires the state to show no mental state other than the knowledge that one should have been in court. Thus, a person could be convicted of a serious felony for inadvertently or accidentally failing to appear.

Generally, the criminal law requires "not only the doing of some act by the person to be held liable, but also the existence of a guilty mind during the commission of the act." Speidel v. State, 460 P.2d 77, 80 (Alaska 1969) (emphasis added). The Alaska courts have held that, for major felonies, a mental state requirement is mandatory, while some minor offenses, such as hunting or public health related offenses may be strict liability offenses without a mental state requirement. Speidel, 460 P.2d 77 (holding that the statute declaring the failure to return a car to be a crime, regardless of mental state, violated due process); see also State v. Guest, 583 P.2d 836 (Alaska 1978); State v. Fremgen, 914 P.2d 1244 (Alaska 1996). In some cases, the courts have avoided declaring a statute unconstitutional by creating a mental state requirement where a statute has no provision for mental state. Kimoktoak v. State, 584 P.2d 25 (Alaska 1978); Alex v. State, 484

P.2d 677 (Alaska 1971). However, given the explicit statement that no mental state is required in Section One, the courts would not be able to avoid the constitutional conflict and must rule the statute unconstitutional.

On a policy basis, the Committee should consider the impact of H.B. 324 on the prison population of the state. The ACLU of Alaska's recent review of the prison system showed that over the past seven years the population of prisoners in custody for most types of crimes (e.g., property offenses, offenses against the person, sex offenses) has remained largely stable. The expansion of the prison population from 2002 to 2008 was due almost exclusively to the tripling of the number of prisoners incarcerated for two types of offenses: for violations of probation and parole and for public order and administration offenses. Public order and administration offenses include victimless offenses relating to criminal justice administration, and the largest group of these offenders consists of those serving time for failure to appear in court. The state can hardly argue in the face of a tripling of the number of offenders incarcerated on those types of offenses that the judiciary has been too lenient on those who fail to appear. Passing this bill will ensure an even greater expansion in the Alaska prison population as a result of more prosecutions and more convictions for failures to appear.

The Committee should also take note that the equivalent federal rule, as well as many state rules, requires a showing that the defendant "deliberately" or "willfully" missed court. Hutchison v. State, 27 P.3d 774, 777-79 (Alaska App. 2001) (noting that the federal bail statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3150, as well as Connecticut, California, and Illinois statutes, require a showing of "willful" failure to appear). Given that the federal court system and several large state court systems do not find themselves facing large numbers of non-appearing defendants, even when only "willful" failures to appear are prosecuted, the current, stricter Alaska standard of "knowing" failure to appear should adequately ensure appearance of defendants.

The Committee should also consider the potential negative effects of this policy on judicial efficiency. As the law stands now, a defendant who misses court through neglect or confusion has a strong interest in appearing in court immediately upon realizing the mistake to have his bench warrant lifted, since that response will tend to show an innocent mental state and a sincere desire to participate in the court process. Under the proposed bill, a defendant who misses court through neglect or confusion will face the same penalty for turning himself in the next day as if he disappears for the next six months. Creating a stiffer penalty and eliminating any meaningful defense will encourage those who do miss court to absent themselves from court indefinitely. No policy or penalty is ever going to prevent neglect, mistake, and confusion. A flexible, and in some cases forgiving, policy will serve judicial efficiency best.

Problematic Extension of Time for Bail Hearing

Section Three proposes to extend the window of detention prior to a bail hearing to 48 hours. Under current Alaska law, a defendant must be brought before a judicial officer within 24 hours.

Under Gerstein v. Pugh, a probable cause hearing must be held without unreasonable delay. 420 U.S. 103 (1975).

After a standard of 24 hours was adopted by most states and most circuits, a narrowly divided US Supreme Court stated that the initial appearance must be made only within 48 hours. Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44 (1991). However, Riverside does not bind the states in their interpretation of their own constitutions. In one accounting of state responses to Gerstein, most states had concluded that 24 hours was the appropriate term under the case, and only seven states explicitly permitted more than 24 hours prior to an initial hearing. Jenkins v. Chief Justice of Dist. Court Dept., 619 N.E.2d 324, 333-34 (Mass. 1993).

Since Alaska has guaranteed a 24-hour window for initial appearances for 18 years since the Riverside decision, the state courts may be hard pressed to see why a 48-hour window would not likely permit "unreasonable delay." The Alaska courts have not yet had a chance to rule on the dimensions of the "speedy trial" provision of Article I, section 11 as it relates to initial appearances, since Rule 5 has long guaranteed a 24-hour window of appearance. The Supreme Court could very well decide that the state constitutional provisions relating to speedy trial and due process require a 24-hour window prior to initial appearance, just as the Massachusetts Supreme Court did in Jenkins.

Given that the currently existing rules of criminal procedure already provide an exception for defendants arrested far from urban centers and allow the prosecution to request a delay to gather more information where necessary for a bail hearing, the state's success over the last 18 years in providing a hearing within 24 hours strongly suggests that a delay of more than 24 hours would represent unnecessary delay, making the statute unconstitutional.

Unconstitutional Imposition of Warrantless Search

Section Four's proposed addition of A.S. Sec. 12.30.016 seeks to allow unconstitutional warrantless searches. Subsections (b)(2), (c)(2). Compared to probationers and parolees, the rights of pretrial defendants against unreasonable search and seizure are strong.

While comparatively little case law exists in Alaska courts, a recent Ninth Circuit case strongly endorsed the rights of pretrial defendants against warrantless searches. In United States v. Scott, the defendant had been arrested on drug charges and his release was conditioned on his "consent" to suspicionless search of his home and random drug tests. 450 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2006). After a positive urine test for methamphetamine, officers searched his home and found a shotgun. Id. at 866. The Ninth Circuit held that his consent was not valid, as he would have been placed in custody if he had declined. Id. at 870. Most importantly, the court said: "if a defendant is to be released subject to bail conditions that will help protect the community from the risk of crimes he might commit while on bail, the conditions must be justified by a showing that defendant poses a heightened risk of misbehaving while on bail. The government cannot, as it is trying to do in this case, short-circuit the process by claiming that the arrest itself is sufficient to establish that the conditions are required." Id. at 874.

Creating a blanket rule that a court may impose bail conditions that violate rights against unreasonable search without requiring any kind of individualized finding would violate the rule enunciated in Scott. A provision that states that such conditions may only be imposed after a written finding of the reasons particular to the individual defendant as to why such bail conditions are necessary may render this section constitutional.

Overly Broad Imposition of Third Party Custodians

Section 5 of the Bill unconstitutionally proposes to limit a pre-trial defendant's liberty. A pretrial defendant enjoys a right to be considered innocent; he also enjoys a default right to his liberty. Stack v. Boyle, 342 U.S. 1. ("This traditional right to freedom before conviction permits the unhampered preparation of a defense, and serves to prevent the infliction of punishment prior to conviction. Unless this right to bail before trial is preserved, the presumption of innocence, secured only after centuries of struggle, would lose its meaning."). No showing of proof, no adversarial proceeding is required for the filing of a complaint. As such, the court should require a showing from the prosecution to impose a condition of bail on the accused. Yet the third-party custodian provision imposes no restraint on the court's authority.

Contrast, for instance, the language from Section 5, "a judicial officer may appoint a third-party custodian if the officer finds that the appointment will, singly or in combination with other conditions, reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community" to the language from Section 4, "the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance." The term "least restrictive," or any sense that a bail condition should be "necessary" rather than simply the court's preference, is missing from Section 5.

Arguably, the imposition of a third party custodian requirement would enhance the likelihood of any defendant's appearance in court. However, the courts are not free to impose any quantity of bail they like or to impose any conditions that seem like a good idea. Such conditions may be imposed only when found to be necessary.

The Committee should note that in a recent Alaska Judicial Council survey on the criminal justice system, excessive and arbitrary use of the third-party custodian requirement was one of the most frequent complaints. The original purpose of the third-party requirement – to ensure that impoverished defendants incapable of making cash bail could be released in a manner that assured community safety and court appearance – has been almost totally lost. A third-party custodian is now often imposed as a matter of course, rather than after specific findings, and in addition to, not in lieu of, cash bail. To prevent more abuse, a court should be required to make specific, written findings as to why a third-party custodian is necessary.

Conclusion

We hope that the Judiciary Committee will note these are just some of the constitutional infirmities in House Bill 324.

While the ACLU of Alaska supports appropriate revisions to the criminal justice system to address the special circumstances of our State, and its evolving needs, this Bill is not well-crafted to vindicate the state's purposes.

The sections we have identified present substantial Constitutional problems and will likely entangle the state in lengthy and costly litigation, should H.B. 324 pass as currently written.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share our concerns. And please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information.

Re: House Bill 324 – Bail Reform

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing first to thank you for the thoughtful and thorough hearings that you held for HB 298 (sexual assault and abuse) and HB 316 (evidence retention and post-conviction DNA testing). I am also writing to ask again that you consider scheduling House Bill 324, the bail reform bill, for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee. I hope you will not think we are too demanding, but there are good reasons to hear the bail bill: in addition to protection of the public and other victims, victims of sexual assault and sexual abuse will greatly benefit from the passage of the bill. Although bail reform is not directly targeted at sexual assault or sexual abuse in the state, the bill would provide additional protection to victims of these crimes.

The Problems with current law:

Our bail laws date back to 1966. It is clear that when the legislature adopted these statutes, times were not as difficult as present. For example, unless a person has been convicted of an unclassified felony or a class A felony, our bail laws allow a person found guilty of any other crime, either by plea or by verdict, to be released pending imposition of sentence or during an appeal. The following scenarios are only a few of many examples of the danger that can result from the application of the current law.

> Larry Berryhill, IJU-07-992CR, was convicted of two counts of Sexual Abuse of a Minor in the Second Degree for having sexual contact with a young boy who worked for him at his lodge in Gustavus. After being found guilty, and over the state's objection, the court released him on an unsecured signature bond, in lieu of posting bail, in the amount of $25,000. Mr. Berryhill did not appear for his sentencing. Alaska State Troopers and law enforcement agents from other states

(Mr. Berryhill had committed similar crimes in other states) found that Mr. Berryhill had fled to Argentina, and was vacationing in New Zealand and Europe when he should have appeared in court for his sentencing. Mr. Berryhill died before the Troopers were able to arrest him. He did not spend a single day in jail for his sexual abuse of that young boy.

Michael Williams, 3AN-10-166CR, has been convicted of a felony five times, two of the felonies were federal armed bank robbery convictions from the late 1980s. In January, 2008, he was charged with the Robbery in the First Degree for a home invasion robbery with multiple victims. The state proceeded with the prosecution under the three strikes law – with a 99 year sentence possible if convicted. This potential sentence is higher than most people convicted of homicide would receive. Over the state's objection, bail was set at $5,000 cash appearance bond and a third party custodian was appointed. The state requested several times that his bail be increased, but were unsuccessful. Mr. Williams skipped out soon after release, and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. He has not been found.

James Spencer, 3AN-09-2113CR, was charged with Robbery in the First Degree after confronting a Carr's employee with a handgun. Over the state's objection, his bail was set at $1,000 cash performance bond, and $5,000 cash or corporate appearance bond. Last week, Mr. Spenser was arrested and charged with a new Robbery in the First Degree for an armed robbery at the Burger King (3AN010-2471CR).

Jack Lee Espinoza, Jr., 3AN-10-2113CR, was charged with two counts of Robbery in the First Degree. He had been convicted of more than 10 crimes in the past, several of them were felonies. Over the state's objection, Mr. Espinoza had been released on bail of $2,500 cash or corporate appearance bond and ankle monitoring. Within 48 hours of his release, Mr. Espinoza had cut off his ankle monitor, and with another person committed another armed robbery at a trailer in Anchorage. The victim was shot, allegedly by the other person, during the robbery.

How HB 324 will help avoid these problems

Section 10 of HB 324 (page 13, beginning at line 26) provides that a person found guilty of a sexual felony may not be released pending imposition of sentence or appeal. The legislature has raised the maximum term of imprisonment for a person convicted of a sexual felony to 99 years; with that maximum term the danger of flight is high. Additionally, the danger of sex offenders victimizing others is significant. Mr. Berryhill would not have been released after being found guilty of sexual abuse under HB 324.

HB 324 is similar to federal law in part because it would adopt a presumption, that is rebuttable, that no combination of conditions or monetary bail would ensure the safety of the public and the appearance of the defendant in cases where the person is either charged with an unclassified or a class A felony (similar to current law), or the defendant is a higher risk of flight or danger to the public (new in HB 324). The bill provides that other persons with higher risk include the following:

- persons charged with a felony who have a prior felony conviction and less that five years have elapsed since unconditional release for the prior felony;
- persons charged with a crime committed while the person was on release for another charge or conviction;
- persons charged with a domestic violence crime if the person has a conviction for a domestic violence crime within the previous five years;
- persons arrested in connection with a felony charge or conviction out of state and the person is fugitive from the other jurisdiction.

The individuals described in the scenarios above (except for Mr. Berryhill), would have burden of going forward under HB 324 with suggestion for release conditions. For example, Mr. Williams would have to present information and suggestions for conditions of release that would satisfy a judicial officer that he would not be a danger to the public and he would not be a flight risk. Mr. Williams still has the constitutional right to have bail set for him.

Additionally, HB 324 would adopt standards for third party custodians so that, for example, a person charged with crimes, on probation, or with recent convictions could not act as a third party custodian. HB 324 would require a judicial officer to do basic screening of a person before appointing the person as a custodian. Defendants have taken advantage of third party custodians in the past. There have been advertisements on Craig's list for third party custodians (see attached).

Misconceptions about HB 324

We have heard several comments about HB 324 that are simply not accurate. For example, the bill changes the deadline for the first appearance before a court of a person arrested from 24 to 48 hours. This change has been described as contrary to the practice of a majority of other states. As can be seen by the attached memorandum and chart, Alaska is one of only three states who require a first appearance within 24 hours. The remaining states have later deadlines. There are many good reasons to change this deadline. It would give all parties a chance to gather information for better informed bail hearings. Even more important is that victims in Alaska have a constitutional right to appear at arraignments and bail hearings. Often we are unable to notify them of a hearing that must be held within 24 hours of arrest; other times the victim is still in the hospital at this time. The change to a 48 hour deadline will help the system make the victim's right to be present much more meaningful.

We also have heard people say that HB 324 would prohibit certain people from being released on bail. This is not correct. Defendants have a constitutional right to have bail set for their release. HB 324 simply changes certain procedures for the courts to follow in setting bail. In doing so, it would protect the public and discourage bail jumping much better than does current law.

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)

Subject: Court Statiscs for Bail Bill

Hello all. Our tech people have gone through our CourtView courts (all courts except those in the first district; first district cases are not included in these numbers) and come up with numbers for the various categories of offenses that will be subject to the rebuttable presumption of no bail. Now I have to figure out how to make sense of all of it. We have broken down the numbers by category, but because there will be a lot of overlap (for example a person counted in the category for any of the particular offense categories may also be counted in the category of persons subject to a petition to revoke probation), we can't just add up the categories and come to a number. Once I go through all of this I will let you know how I plan to assess the impact. Please let me know if you have any questions or comments about these data. Doug

These data are arranged by statute reference in sections 4 and 12 of the bill.

AS 12.30.011(d)(2)(A): See attached. Note that there is a difference between the number of offenses and the number of cases. I think that we need to look at the number of cases because one person may be charged with more than one offense that would trigger the presumption. I think that once the presumption is triggered, the presumption attaches and other offenses don't need to be counted.

AS 12.30.011(d)(2)(B): There were 4,134 defendants charged with a felony (other than a felony from the bill's list of specific offenses) during FY09.
Of those, 1,403 had been convicted of a felony in the prior 10 years. (7/1/1998 or later) This was our measure of those who commit a felony within five years of the date of their unconditional discharge. We can't directly track by unconditional discharge date, but we can track by conviction date. This search assumed that each felony defendant served 5 years probation and thus five years following their unconditional discharge would be ten years from the date of their conviction. Some of the periods of probation will be longer than 5 years and some less, but this was the average we settled on. This number does not include those with an out-of-state conviction

AS 12.30.011(d)(2)(C): We don't have a way to track those who commit an offense while on bail from an earlier charge.

AS 12.30.011(d)(2)(D): There were 3148 defendants charged with a DV related crime during FY09. Of those, 919 were previously convicted of a DV related crime in the prior 5 years.

AS 12.30.011(d)(2)(E): In CourtView locations during FY09 there were 96 cases where the defendant was charge with the following: AS12.70.120: Arrest Prior To Requisition (Fugitive from Justice)

AS 12.30.055 (in section 12 of the bill): See attached.

The Honorable Jay Ramras
Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Representative Ramras:

During the House Judiciary Committee meeting on Monday, March 22nd Representative Gruenberg asked that I respond to two questions. His first question was whether a judge has the authority to appoint a guardian for a minor crime victim. The question arose in connection with a discussion of the right of a crime victim, or the parent or guardian of a minor victim, to comment during a defendant's bail hearing. The specific language is found on page 10, lines 24 and 25 of the bill. The answer to Representative Gruenberg's question is yes.

Although a minor will necessarily have either a parent or guardian, in those cases where the court must appoint a guardian for purposes of this statute (such as some cases when the defendant is the child's parent) AS 12.45.046(a) (attached) gives the court the authority to appoint a guardian ad litem for a minor under the age of 16 who is a victim of or a witness to a crime against a person.

Representative Gruenberg's second question was whether the repeal and reenactment of AS 12.30.030 (Appeal from conditions of release) (attached) under section 8 of the bill adds a new duty for the court with its provision that the "appeal shall be determined promptly." The answer to this question is no. This language is found in the existing statute and has been a requirement for many years.

I hope that this answers the questions. Please let me know if you would like any additional information.

Sincerely,

Doug Wooliver
Administrative Attorney

9676 AS § 12.45.046

WEST'S ALASKA STATUTES ANNOTATED
TITLE 12. CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE
CHAPTER 45. TRIAL, EVIDENCE, COMPROMISE
ARTICLE 2. DISCOVERY, TESTIMONY, AND EVIDENCE

Current through the 2009 First Regular Session and First Special Session of the 26th Legislature

§ 12.45.046. Testimony of children in criminal proceedings

(a) In a criminal proceeding under AS 11.41 involving the prosecution of an offense committed against a child under the age of 16, or witnessed by a child under the age of 16, the court

(1) may appoint a guardian ad litem for the child;
(2) on its own motion or on the motion of the party presenting the witness or the guardian ad litem of the child, may order that the testimony of the child be taken by closed circuit television or through one-way mirrors if the court determines that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate.

(b) In making a determination under (a)(2) of this section, the court shall consider factors it considers relevant, including

(1) the child's chronological age;
(2) the child's level of development;
(3) the child's general physical health;
(4) any physical, emotional, or psychological injury experienced by the child; and
(5) the mental or emotional strain that will be caused by requiring the child to testify under normal courtroom procedures.

(c) If the court determines under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may order that the testimony of the child be taken in a room other than the courtroom and be televised by closed circuit equipment in the courtroom to be viewed by the defendant, the court, and the finder of fact in the proceeding. If the court authorizes use of closed circuit televised testimony under this subsection,

(1) each of the following may be in the room with the child when the child testifies:
(A) the prosecuting attorney;
(B) the attorney for the defendant; and
9677 (C) operators of the closed circuit television equipment;
(2) the court may, in addition to persons specified in (1) of this subsection, admit a person whose presence, in the opinion of the court, contributes to the well-being of the child.

(d) When a child is to testify under (c) of this section, only the court and counsel may question the child. The persons operating the equipment shall do so in as unobtrusive a manner as possible. If the defendant requests, the court shall excuse the defendant from the courtroom, shall permit the defendant to attend in another location, and shall afford the defendant a means of viewing the child's testimony and of communicating with the defendant's attorney throughout the proceedings. defendant or the defendant's attorney, the court shall permit a recess to allow them to confer. The court shall provide a means of communicating with the attorneys during the questioning of the child. Objections made by the attorneys to questions of a child witness may be resolved in the courtroom if the court finds it necessary.

(e) If the court determines under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may authorize the use of one-way mirrors in conjunction with the taking of the child's testimony. The attorneys may pose questions to the child and have visual contact with the child during questioning, but the mirrors shall be placed to provide a physical shield so that the child does not have visual contact with the defendant and jurors.

(f) If the court does not find under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures will result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may, after taking into consideration the factors specified in (b) of this section, supervise the spatial arrangements of the courtroom and the location, movement, and deportment of all persons in attendance so as to safeguard the child from emotional harm or stress. In addition to other procedures it finds appropriate, the court may

(1) allow the child to testify while sitting on the floor or on an appropriately sized chair;
(2) schedule the procedure in a room that provides adequate privacy, freedom from distractions, informality, and comfort appropriate to the child's developmental age; and 9678 (3) order a recess when the energy, comfort, or attention span of the child warrants.

WEST'S ALASKA STATUTES ANNOTATED
TITLE 12. CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE
CHAPTER 30. BAIL

Current through the 2009 First Regular Session and First Special Session of the 26th Legislature

§ 12.30.030. Appeal from conditions of release

(a) A person who remains in custody after a review provided for in AS 12.30.020(f) or (j) may move the court having original jurisdiction over the offense to amend the order. The motion shall be determined promptly.

(b) When a court denies a motion under (a) of this section or conditions of release have been imposed by the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court denying the motion or imposing the conditions subject to the applicable court rules. The order of the lower court shall be affirmed unless it is found that the lower court abused its discretion. If it is held that the lower court did abuse its discretion, the appellate court may modify, vacate, set aside, reverse, remand the action for further proceeding, or remand the action directing entry of the appropriate order, which may include ordering the person to be released under AS 12.30.020(a). The appeal shall be determined promptly.

Sec. 12.30.020. Release before trial. (a) A person charged with an offense shall, at that person's first appearance before a judicial officer, be ordered released pending trial on the person's personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the judicial officer unless the offense is an unclassified felony or class A felony or unless the officer determines that the release of the person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will pose a danger to the alleged victim, other persons, or the community. If the offense with which a person is charged is a felony, on motion of the prosecuting attorney, the judicial officer may allow the prosecuting attorney up to 48 hours to demonstrate that release of the person on the person's personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the alleged victim, other persons, or the community.

(b) If a judicial officer determines under (a) of this section that the release of a person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person, or will pose a danger to the alleged victim, other persons, or the community, the judicial officer may

(1) place the person in the custody of a designated person or organization agreeing as a custodian to supervise the person; the court shall, personally and in writing, inform the custodian about the duties required of a custodian, and that failure to report immediately in accordance with the terms of the order that the person released has violated a condition of release may result in the custodian's being held criminally liable under AS 11.56.758;

(2) place restrictions on the travel, association, or place of abode of the person during the period of release;

(3) [Repealed, § 8 ch 57 SLA 2006.]

(4) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash or other security, a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond; the deposit to be returned upon the performance of the condition of release;

(5) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash;

(6) require the execution of a performance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash or other security; the performance bond must be imposed and enforced separately from any appearance bond, and the deposit to be returned upon the performance of the condition of release; or

(7) impose any other condition considered reasonably necessary to assure the defendant's appearance as required and the safety of the alleged victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) In determining the conditions of release under (b) of this section, the judicial officer shall take into account

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, including the effect of the offense upon the alleged victim;

(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(3) the person's family ties;

(4) the person's employment;

(5) the person's financial resources;

(6) the person's character and mental condition;

(7) the length of the person's residence in the community;

(8) the person's record of convictions;

(9) the person's record of appearance at court proceedings;

(10) the flight of the accused to avoid prosecution or the person's failure to appear at court proceedings; and

(11) threats the person has made, and the danger the person poses, to the alleged victim.

(d) A judicial officer authorizing the release of a person under this section shall issue an order containing a statement of the conditions imposed.

(e) The judicial officer shall inform the person of the penalties that may be imposed for a violation of the conditions of release and advise the person that a warrant for the person's arrest will be issued immediately upon a violation or that the person may be arrested without a warrant for a violation of conditions of release as set out in AS 12.25.030(b).

(f) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any other judicial officer in the district may review the conditions. If the conditions are not amended and the person remains in custody, the judicial officer shall set out in writing the reasons for requiring the conditions imposed.

(g) A judicial officer who orders the release of a person on a condition specified in (b) of this section may at any time amend the order to impose additional or different conditions of release, or to release the person under (a) of this section.

(h) Information offered or introduced at a hearing before a judicial officer to determine the conditions of release need not conform to the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in a court of law.

(i) The court shall issue written or oral findings to demonstrate why conditions provided under (b)(1) of this section needed to be imposed.

(j) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (f) of this section, a subsequent review of conditions may be held at the request of the person. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or a defendant has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the defendant is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the prosecuting authority has at least 48 hours' notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; and

(3) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the review requested under this subsection. (Sec. 3.04 ch 34 SLA 1962; am § 1 ch 20 SLA 1966; am §§ 1, 2 ch 112 SLA 1967; am §§ 1, 2 ch 39 SLA 1974; am § 16 ch 143 SLA 1982; am § 4 ch 115 SLA 1994; am §§ 10 — 12 ch 63 SLA 1997; am § 4 ch 124 SLA 2000; am §§ 18, 19 ch 124 SLA 2004; am § 1 ch 65 SLA 2005; am § 8 ch 57 SLA 2006; am § 19 ch 24 SLA 2007)

Sec. 12.30.023. Release before trial in cases involving controlled substances or alcohol. (a) In determining the conditions of release under AS 12.30.020 in cases involving a violation of AS 04.11.010, 04.11.499, AS 11.71, or AS 11.73, the court shall consider the conditions specified in AS 12.30.020 and the following conditions and impose one or more conditions it considers reasonably necessary to protect the public safety and security, including ordering the defendant

(1) to obey all laws;

(2) to submit to a search of the defendant's person, personal property, residence, vehicle, or any vehicle over which the defendant has control, for the presence of alcoholic beverages or illegal drugs and drug paraphernalia by a peace officer who has reasonable suspicion that the defendant is violating the terms of the defendant's bail release by possessing alcoholic beverages or illegal drugs and drug paraphernalia;

(3) in

(A) controlled substances offenses, to enroll in a random drug testing program, at the defendant's expense, to detect the presence of an illegal drug, with testing to occur not less than once a week, and with the results being submitted to the court and the district attorney's office;

(B) alcoholic beverage offenses, to submit to a breath test when requested by a law enforcement officer;

(4) to not have on the defendant's person, in the defendant's residence, or in any vehicle over which the defendant has control, any alcoholic beverages, controlled substances, or related paraphernalia;

(5) to not use, manufacture, possess, handle, purchase, give, or administer any controlled substance or alcoholic beverage;

(6) to not associate with persons involved in using, manufacturing, growing, or distributing controlled substances or alcoholic beverages;

(7) to not enter or remain in places where controlled substances or alcoholic beverages are being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed;

(8) to not be physically present, within a two-block area of, or within a designated area near, the location at which the offense occurred or at other designated locations, unless the defendant actually resides within that area;

(9) to not use or possess a paging device, cellular phone, or other portable communicative device on the defendant's person, in any vehicle over which the defendant has control, or in the defendant's residence;

(10) to be physically inside the defendant's residence, or in the residence of the defendant's third-party custodian, between time periods set by the court, except as otherwise required by employment, education, counseling, or treatment and as specifically authorized by the court;

(11) to not

(A) have a firearm in the defendant's possession, or control, in any vehicle over which the defendant has control, or in the defendant's residence;

(B) possess a knife, other than an ordinary pocket knife, on the defendant's person;

(12) to engage in any conduct or to refrain from any conduct that the court considers reasonably necessary to protect the public.

(b) In addition to conditions the court may impose under (a) of this section and notwithstanding other provisions in this chapter, if the defendant is charged with manufacturing methamphetamine under AS 11.71.020(a)(2), unless the defendant proves to the satisfaction of the court that the defendant's only role in the offense was as an aider or abettor and that the defendant did not stand to benefit financially from the manufacturing, the court shall require the posting of a minimum of $250,000 cash bond if the defendant has previously been convicted in this or another jurisdiction of manufacturing, delivering, or possessing methamphetamine. (§ 1 ch 37 SLA 1996; am § 13 ch 53 SLA 2006)

Sec. 12.30.025. Release before trial in cases involving stalking. (a) In determining the conditions of release under AS 12.30.020 in cases involving stalking but not domestic violence, the court shall consider the conditions specified in AS 12.30.020 and the following conditions and impose one or more conditions it considers reasonably necessary to protect the alleged victim of the stalking, including ordering the defendant

(1) not to subject the victim to further stalking;

(2) not to contact the victim other than through counsel;

(3) to engage in counseling; if the court directs the defendant to engage in personal counseling, the court shall provide in the order that the counseling must propose alternatives to aggression if that type of counseling is available;

(4) to refrain from the consumption of alcohol or the use of drugs.

(b) As used in this section,

(1) "domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(2) "stalking" means a violation of AS 11.41.260 or 11.41.270. (§ 35 ch 102 SLA 1980; am § 12 ch 61 SLA 1982; am § 4 ch 64 SLA 1991; am § 6 ch 40 SLA 1993; am § 2 ch 37 SLA 1996; am § 10 ch 64 SLA 1996)

Sec. 12.30.027. Release in domestic violence cases. (a) Before ordering release before or after trial, or pending appeal, of a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving domestic violence, the court shall consider the safety of the alleged victim or other household member. To protect the alleged victim, household member, and the public and to reasonably assure the person's appearance, the court may impose bail and any of the conditions authorized under AS 12.30.020, any of the provisions of AS 18.66.100(c)(1) — (7) and (11), and any other condition necessary to protect the alleged victim, household member, and the public, and to ensure the appearance of the person in court, including ordering the person to refrain from the consumption of alcohol.

(b) A court may not order or permit a person released under (a) of this section to return to the residence of the alleged victim or the residence of a petitioner who has a protective order directed to the person and issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 — 18.66.180.

(c) If the court imposes conditions of release under (a) of this section, it shall

(1) issue a written order specifying the conditions of release;

(2) provide a copy of the order to the person arrested or charged; and

(3) immediately distribute a copy of the order to the law enforcement agency that arrested the person.

(d) When a person is released from custody under (a) of this section,

(1) from a correctional facility, the correctional facility shall notify the prosecuting authority and the prosecuting authority shall make reasonable efforts to immediately notify the alleged victim of the release, and to furnish the alleged victim with a copy of the order setting any conditions of release;

(2) from other than a correctional facility, the arresting authority shall make reasonable efforts to immediately notify the alleged victim of the release, and to furnish the alleged victim with a copy of the order setting any conditions of release.

(e) A person arrested for a crime involving domestic violence may not be released from custody until the person has appeared in person before a judicial officer or telephonically for arraignment.

(f) A person may not bring a civil action for damages for a failure to comply with the provisions of this section.

(g) In this section, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990. (§ 11 ch 64 SLA 1996)

Sec. 12.30.029. Release in sexual abuse and sexual assault cases. (a) Before ordering release before trial of a person charged with a crime under AS 11.41.410 — 11.41.438 or 11.41.450 — 11.41.458, the court shall consider the safety of the alleged victim. The court may impose bail and any of the conditions authorized under AS 12.30.020 and any other condition necessary to protect the alleged victim and the public and to assure the appearance of the person in court.

(b) The court may impose any of the following conditions on a person charged with an offense under AS 11.41.410 — 11.41.438 or 11.41.450 — 11.41.458

(1) that the person have no contact with the alleged victim except as specifically allowed by the court;

(2) that the person reside in a place where the person is not likely to come into contact with the alleged victim of the offense; and

(3) if the person is on medication, that the person take the medication as prescribed.

(c) Before a judicial officer releases a person charged with an offense under AS 11.41.410 — 11.41.438 or 11.41.450 — 11.41.458, the court shall

(1) assure that the alleged victim, or the alleged victim's parent or guardian if the alleged victim is under 18 years of age, has been notified by a law enforcement agency or the prosecuting attorney of the hearing where the release is being considered, or a reasonable effort at notification has been made;

(2) solicit comments from the victim or the victim's parent or guardian who is present and wishes to comment and consider those comments before making a decision to release the person. (§ 1 ch 95 SLA 2000)

Sec. 12.30.030. Appeal from conditions of release. (a) A person who remains in custody after a review provided for in AS 12.30.020(f) or (j) may move the court having original jurisdiction over the offense to amend the order. The motion shall be determined promptly.

(b) When a court denies a motion under (a) of this section or conditions of release have been imposed by the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court denying the motion or imposing the conditions subject to the applicable court rules. The order of the lower court shall be affirmed unless it is found that the lower court abused its discretion. If it is held that the lower court did abuse its discretion, the appellate court may modify, vacate, set aside, reverse, remand

REPRESENTATIVE KYLE JOHANSEN MAJORITY LEADER

SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB 327 – Relating to controlled substances and the sale of products containing dextromethorphan

HB 327 updates and strengthens the state's anti-drug laws. Specifically, this legislation does three things: it adds salvia divinorum to the list of schedule IIA drugs, moves buprenorphine from schedule VA up to Schedule IIIA, and limits the purchase of products that contain dextromethorphan (DXM) to Alaskans over the age of 18.

Salvia divinorum is a powerful hallucinogenic similar to mescaline and peyote. It is a perennial herb found in the mountainous regions of Mexico where it has a history of use as a vision inducing substance by the local Mazatec Indians. It is banned in several countries and an ever-growing number of states.

Buprenorphine is a synthetic opiate used in a similar manner to methadone as a treatment to opiate dependency. And, like methadone, it's abused as a recreational drug and leads to dependence.

DXM is a common ingredient in over-the-counter cough suppressants. DXM is safe when taken in the recommended doses. However, when it is taken in large doses it has an intoxicating affect. Over-the-counter products that contain DXM often also contain other ingredients such as acetaminophen and chlorpheniramine. Large doses of acetaminophen can cause liver damage and large doses of chlorpheniramine can cause increased heart rate and seizures.

All three proposed changes in statute would make these drugs either harder for our children and loved ones to obtain or increase the penalties for their use, creating deterrents that will strengthen our drug laws.

I urge your support.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 327 adds salvia divinorum to Schedule IIA of Alaska's drug schedules; raises buprenorphine from Schedule VA to Schedule IIIA. And HB 327 provides that a person may not sell a product with dextromethorphan (a type of cough medicine) to a person under 18 years of age unless the person has a prescription for the medicine. A person who recklessly violates this prohibition could be charged with a class B misdemeanor. Therefore, the fiscal impact to the Department of Law is indeterminate.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 327 "An Act relating to the scheduling and rescheduling of certain substances as controlled substances and to the sale of products containing dextromethorphan" proposes the addition of Salvia divinorum and Salvinorin A (Divinorin A) as a Schedule IIIA controlled substance and may have a significant impact to the Controlled Substance and Evidence Sections of the Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory.

To what extent these additions will impact the laboratory cannot be determined at this time.

HB 327 adds salvia divinorum to Schedule IIA of Alaska's drug schedules; raises buprenorphine from Schedule VA to Schedule IIIA. And HB 327 provides that a person may not sell a product with dextromethorphan (a type of cough medicine) to a person under 18 years of age unless the person has a prescription for the medicine. A person who recklessly violates this prohibition could be charged with a class B misdemeanor. Therefore, the fiscal impact to the Department of Law is indeterminate.

Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

The New DAWN Report: Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

- HTML format
- PDF format (233 KB)

Highlights:

- Dextromethorphan (DXM) is approved by the Food and Drug Administration and is a cough suppressant found in many over-the-counter cough and cold remedies. Dextromethorphan is generally safe when taken in recommended doses but in large amounts can cause dangerous side effects.
- According to SAMHSA's Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) for 2004, an estimated 12,584 emergency department visits (0.7% of all drug related emergency department visits) involved pharmaceuticals containing dextromethorphan.
- The rate of emergency department visits resulting from nonmedical use of dextromethorphan for those aged 12 to 20 was 7.1 visits per 100,000 population compared with 2.6 visits or fewer per 100,000 for other age groups.
- Emergency department patients aged 12 to 20 accounted for almost half (48%) of all the emergency department visits resulting from nonmedical use of dextromethorphan.
- The rates of DAWN emergency department visits resulting from any type of use of dextromethorphan among those aged 12 to 20 was 10.3 per 100,000 population compared with 4.3 visits per 100,000 for the population overall.
- Alcohol was implicated in about a third (36%) of the DAWN emergency department visits involving nonmedical use of dextromethorphan for those aged 18 to 20 and in 13% of visits for those aged 12 to 17.

Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

In Brief

According to the Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) for 2004:

- An estimated 16,858 emergency department (ED) visits involved pharmaceuticals containing dextromethorphan (DXM). This was just under 1 percent of all drug-related ED visits.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 12 to 20 was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population, compared with 2.5 visits or fewer per 100,000 for other age groups.
- ED patients aged 12 to 20 accounted for about half (51%) of the ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM, compared with 33 percent of DXM-related ED visits overall.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from any type of use of DXM among those aged 12 to 20 was 14.7 per 100,000 population, compared with 5.7 visits per 100,000 for the population overall.
- Alcohol was implicated in 41 percent of ED visits involving nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 18 to 20 and in 13 percent of visits for those aged 12 to 17.

Dextromethorphan (DXM) is a cough suppressant approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) that is found in many over-the-counter cough and cold remedies.[1] It is generally safe when taken at recommended doses. When taken in large amounts, though, DXM can produce hallucinations and a "high" similar to psychotropic drugs, such as phencyclidine (PCP). Dangerous side effects may include blurred vision, loss of physical coordination, abdominal pain, and rapid heartbeat. Side effects may be worsened if the ingested product also contains other pharmaceutical ingredients— such as acetaminophen, pseudoephedrine, antihistamines, or expectorants, which are commonly found in cough and cold medicines—or alcohol.[2]

In recent years DXM has become available, primarily over the Internet, in bulk powdered form, and concern has grown over the nonmedical use of DXM by teenagers. In May 2005, the FDA issued a warning about the dangers of DXM abuse involving over-the-counter products and DXM obtained from illicit sources.[3]

The Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) collects data from a national sample of short-term, general, non-Federal hospitals[4] and publishes estimates of emergency department (ED) visits involving illicit drugs and nonmedical use of pharmaceuticals. This issue of The DAWN Report examines the characteristics of ED visits that involve DXM and products containing DXM.

The DAWN Report is published periodically by the Office of Applied Studies (OAS), Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA). This issue was written by Judy K. Ball, Ph.D., M.P.A., and David Skellan (SAMHSA/OAS). All material in this report is in the public domain and may be reproduced or copied without permission from SAMHSA. Citation of the source is appreciated.

Included are findings on the age of ED patients who used DXM and the reason for their visit to the ED. Also provided are the rates of DXM-related ED visits per 100,000 population for different age groups and the frequency with which DXM products are found in combination with alcohol. The ED visits considered here exclude the small number of patients who go to the ED to obtain admission to the hospital's detoxification or substance abuse treatment unit.

Overview

During 2004, there were about 106 million ED visits to short-term, general, non-Federal hospitals in the United States.[5] Of those, DAWN estimates that just over 2.5 million were drug related, with just under a half million involving nonmedical use of pharmaceuticals. Nearly 17,000, or just under 1 percent, of all drug-related ED visits in 2004 involved DXM or products containing DXM.

Reasons for ED visits

Nonmedical use of DXM products accounted for 5,962 (35%) of the estimated 16,858 DXM-related ED visits in 2004, and about half (51%) of these nonmedical visits involved patients aged 12 to 20 (Table 1).[6] The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM products was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population for those aged 12 to 20, while the rate for other age groups was 2.5 or less (Table 1 and Figure 1).

Medical use of DXM included ED visits attributed to adverse reactions that occured when DXM products were used as prescribed (or according to directions for over-the-counter products). About 31 percent of all DXM-related ED visits in 2004 were a result of adverse reactions. Children aged 0 to 11 are the most likely to experience adverse reactions to DXM. Their rate of ED visits was higher than that for any other age group (3.9 per 100,000 population), and they constitute 36 percent of all ED visits involving adverse reactions to DXM.

About 16 percent of DXM-related ED visits involve accidental ingestion. As with adverse reactions, children aged 0 to 11 are also the most likely to accidentally ingest DXM or DXM-containing products. The rate of ED visits for accidental ingestion of DXM is 5.2 visits per 100,000 population, and over 95 percent of ED visits for accidental ingestion of DXM involve children in this age range.

Suicide attempts involving DXM products accounted for 17 percent of DXM-related ED visits. Patients aged 12 to 20 are more likely than patients in other age groups to use DXM products in a suicide attempt. This group has a rate of 4.3 DXM-related ED visits per 100,000 population, compared with rates of 0.0 for those aged 0 to 11 and less than 1.0 for those aged 21 or older.

Alcohol involvement

Alcohol was involved in about 13 percent of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM products for those aged 12 to 17 and in 41 percent of such visits for those aged 18 to 20 (Figure 2). Patients aged 35 to 54 had the highest involvement of alcohol (61%). For the youngest (aged 0 to 11) and oldest (aged 55 or older) patients, alcohol involvement was lower (0% and 2%, respectively).

Alcohol is also an ingredient in some cough medications. Some common products (e.g., NyQuil®) contain a mixture of DXM and up to 10 percent alcohol. In these cases, alcohol may play a role in the ED visit without being specifically documented in the ED medical record. Therefore, these findings may understate the involvement of alcohol and its contribution to the side effects leading to ED visits.

The DAWN Report — Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

In Brief

According to the Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) for 2004:

- An estimated 16,858 emergency department (ED) visits involved pharmaceuticals containing dextromethorphan (DXM). This was just under 1 percent of all drug-related ED visits.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 12 to 20 was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population, compared with 2.5 visits or fewer per 100,000 for other age groups.

The Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) is a public health surveillance system that monitors drug-related morbidity and mortality. DAWN uses a probability sample of hospitals to produce estimates of drug-related emergency department (ED) visits for the United States and selected metropolitan areas annually. DAWN also produces annual profiles of drug-related deaths reviewed by medical examiners or coroners in selected metropolitan areas and States.

Any ED visit or death related to recent drug use is included in DAWN. All types of drugs—licit and illicit—are covered. Alcohol is included for adults when it occurs with another drug. Alcohol is always included for minors. DAWN's method of classifying drugs was derived from the Multum Lexicon, Copyright © 2008, Multum Information Services, Inc. The Multum Licensing Agreement can be found in DAWN annual publications and at http://www.multum.com/license.htm.

DAWN is one of three major surveys conducted by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's Office of Applied Studies (SAMHSA/OAS). For information on other OAS surveys, go to http://www.oas.samhsa.gov. SAMHSA has contracts with Westat (Rockville, MD) and RTI International (Research Triangle Park, NC) to operate the DAWN system and produce publications.

Memorandum
TO: Representative Kyle Johansen
FROM: Daniel Lesh, Legislative Analyst DDL
RE: Regulation of Over-The-Counter Medications Containing Dextromethorphan
LRS Report 10.073

You asked about state regulations limiting the sale of commonly-abused over-the-counter medications containing the chemical dextromethorphan. Specifically, you wanted to know if any such limitations have been proposed in Alaska, or in other states. You also wanted to know of any over-the-counter medical products that the state of Alaska does not allow to be sold to minors or does not allow to be sold in large quantities.

As you may know, dextromethorphan is a drug included in many common cough medications, including cough syrups and cough pills. Individuals sometime abuse these medications by consuming many times the recommended dose, with dissociative, psychedelic effects. Dextromethorphan abuse has numerous negative side effects, but is not generally considered addictive or lethal. The most serious side effects, which can include death, are caused by consuming medications with other active ingredients besides dextromethorphan, such as acetaminophen, according to information we reviewed.

Alaska

It appears that no limitations on the sale of products containing dextromethorphan have been proposed in Alaska. No bills or resolutions introduced between 1983 and 2009—years for which electronic records are available—mention the word dextromethorphan. In addition, J. Kate Burkhart, executive director, Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, Department of Health and Social Services, is not familiar with any such proposals, nor is she aware of any chronic misuse of these types of products in Alaska.[1]

According to Ms. Burkhart, the only over-the-counter medications with limitations on their sale in Alaska are those containing pseudoephedrine, ephedrine, and phenylpropanolamine—three drugs that are commonly used in the manufacture of methamphetamine.[2] These limitations are the result of federal and state law. The relevant federal law, the Combat Methamphetamine Epidemic Act of 2005, requires that retail establishments limit access to products containing these drugs; verify purchaser identity; keep a log of all purchases of products containing these drugs; and enforce daily and 30-day limits on the sale of these products to any one individual, among other requirements. A state law (AS 17.30.090) passed shortly after the Combat Methamphetamine Epidemic Act of 2005 mirrors and references that federal law. No other over-the-counter medical products in Alaska are limited in their sale by volume or by age of purchaser, according to Ms. Burkhart.

[1] Ms. Burkhart can be reached at (907) 465-8920. Rather than dextromethorphan, Ms. Burkhart highlighted oxycontin abuse as one of the major concerns facing the Alaska drug abuse prevention community.

[2] An example of an over-the-counter product containing pseudoephedrine is Sudafed.

Other States

It appears that no state regulates the sale of over-the-counter medications containing dextromethorphan, though proposals to do so have been introduced in a number of states. Similarly, proposals have been introduced in Congress, but never passed. However, one state (Illinois; 720 ILCS 570/218) does regulate the sale of pure, unfinished dextromethorphan.[3] Please see Table 1 for a list of relevant state and federal legislation located via lexis.com and thomas.gov searches.

It is important to note that many major pharmacies have voluntarily installed restrictions of the type you asked about. We were unable to locate a comprehensive list of which stores in which locations have imposed which restrictions. However, a list posted on a website that appears targeted at drug users provides a description of how easy it is to buy dextromethorphan-containing medications in 23 states.[4] The list suggests that in 19 of those states, "some stores" or "large chain stores" do not allow sales of dextromethorphan-containing medications to those less than 18 years of age.[5] The list also names three states (Arkansas, Colorado, and Iowa) where no stores are allowed to sell dextromethorphan to those under 18; however, a search of those states' statutes and regulations did not reveal any such laws.

[3] Unfinished dextromethorphan is already illegal to distribute under general FDA laws regarding packaging and labeling requirements, but state and federal laws have been introduced—and passed in Illinois—to clarify that distribution of unfinished dextromethorphan is illegal.

[4] This list was found on a website called Vaults of Erowid, located at http://www.erowid.org/chemicals/dxm/dxm_law.shtml.

[5] Names of stores listed as requiring purchasers to be at least 18 years of age include Wal-Mart, Dillons, Target, Walgreens, Meijers, and Rite-Aid.

INTELLIGENCE BULLETIN

DXM (Dextromethorphan)

Product No. 2004-L0424-029 OCTOBER 2004
U. S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The abuse of DXM (dextromethorphan)—a common ingredient contained in over-the-counter cough and cold medicines—is an increasing concern for law enforcement officers in the United States. Adolescents are the primary abusers of the drug, most likely because it is inexpensive and relatively easy to obtain. Additionally, because DXM is a common ingredient in many cough and cold medicines, many adolescents do not perceive any risk in abusing the drug. Compounding the problem is that few parents know about the potential for abuse of the drug.

Background

DXM is a synthetically produced substance that is chemically related to codeine, though it is not an opiate. DXM is an ingredient in more than 140 over-the-counter cough and cold remedies and since the 1950s has gradually replaced codeine as the most widely used cough suppressant in the United States. It is available in capsule, liquid, liquid gelatin capsule, lozenge, and tablet forms. It also is available in powdered form on the Internet—typically for sale to laboratories conducting research on DXM.

When ingested at recommended dosage levels, DXM generally is a safe and highly effective cough suppressant; however, when ingested in larger amounts, DXM produces negative physiological effects. Reports of DXM abuse have resulted in monitoring by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), and DXM could be added to the Controlled Substances Act if warranted. In 2003 legislation was introduced in Texas and North Dakota to prohibit the sale of DXM to minors. The proposed legislation did not pass in either state. A similar bill introduced in California this year was also defeated.

Slang terms for DXM include DM, robo, rojo, and velvet. Slang terms for DXM intoxication include robo tripping, skittling, and dexing.

Abuse

Most DXM abusers ingest the drug orally, although some snort the pure powdered form of the drug. Abusers ingest various amounts of DXM depending on their body weight and the effect or plateau that they are attempting to achieve (see text box on page 2). Some abusers ingest 250 to 1,500 milligrams in a single dosage, far more than the recommended therapeutic dose of 10 to 20 milligrams every 4 hours or 30 milligrams every 6 to 8 hours.

Over-the-counter products that contain DXM often contain other ingredients such as acetaminophen, chlorpheniramine, and guaifenesin. Large dosages of acetaminophen can cause liver damage; large dosages of chlorpheniramine can cause increased heart rate, lack of coordination, seizures, and coma; and large dosages of guaifenesin can cause vomiting. Some first-time users may not abuse DXM repeatedly if they experience negative side effects—such as vomiting—commonly associated with the other ingredients contained in over-the-counter DXM medications. Nonetheless, some DXM abusers "robo shake," a practice whereby they drink a large amount of cough syrup containing DXM and then force themselves to vomit so as to absorb enough DXM through the stomach lining to achieve the desired effect while expelling the other ingredients. Some more experienced abusers use a chemical procedure to extract the DXM from the other ingredients contained in cough syrups to avoid such side effects. (This procedure cannot be used on DXM products sold in nonliquid form.)

Recommended dosages of DXM generally are safe but can cause nausea, gastrointestinal disturbances, slight drowsiness, and dizziness. Acute dosages (between 250 and 1,500 milligrams) can cause blurred vision, body itching, rash, sweating, fever, hypertension, shallow respiration, diarrhea, toxic psychosis, coma, and an increase in heart rate, blood pressure, and body temperature. Some abusers become violent after ingesting the drug. Little is known about the long-term effects of DXM abuse; however, anecdotal reporting and limited clinical research suggest that extensive and prolonged abuse may cause learning and memory impairment. While studies indicate that DXM is not addictive, some former DXM abusers report experiencing cravings for the drug.

DXM Plateaus

Abusers describe the DXM experience as occurring on four different plateaus. Abusers ingest increasing amounts of DXM (based on their weight) to reach each succeeding plateau. Abusers report the following effects occurring in each plateau:

First Plateau: Mild inebriation.

Second Plateau: An effect similar to alcohol intoxication and, occasionally, mild hallucinations. The abuser's speech can become slurred, and short-term memory may be temporarily impaired.

Third Plateau: An altered state of consciousness. The abuser's senses, particularly vision, can become impaired.

Fourth Plateau: Mind and body dissociation or an "out-of-body" experience. The abuser can lose some or all contact with his or her senses. The effects at this plateau are comparable to the effects caused by ketamine or PCP (phencyclidine).

Deaths caused by DXM overdoses are rare as most abusers ingest DXM products that contain other ingredients that cause vomiting, which expels the DXM from their bodies. Most DXM-related deaths are caused by ingesting the drug in combination with other drugs. DXM-related deaths also occur from impairment of the senses, which can lead to accidents. In 2003, a 14-year-old boy in Colorado who abused DXM died when he was hit by two cars as he attempted to cross a highway. State law enforcement investigators suspect that the drug affected the boy's depth perception and caused him to misjudge the distance and speed of the oncoming vehicles.

DXM abuse levels are difficult to determine. Commonly used drug toxicology screens and field tests do not accurately detect the presence of DXM. Therefore, more thorough laboratory testing must be performed. DEA recommends the gas chromatography/mass spectrometer (GC/MS) test, as other laboratory tests may produce false positives. National surveys conducted to estimate rates of drug abuse do not include questions regarding DXM. However, the American Association of Poison Control Centers reports that the total number of calls to centers nationwide involving DXM abuse or misuse have increased since 2000 (see Table 1). Calls involving abuse or misuse of DXM by teenagers increased approximately 100 percent from 2000 (1,623) through 2003 (3,271). Calls involving abuse by other age groups increased 21 percent from 2000 through 2002, before decreasing slightly in 2003.

2002	2,881	1,139

Availability

DXM abusers can obtain the drug at almost any pharmacy or supermarket. Most seek out products that have a high concentration of the drug. One of the most frequently abused products containing DXM is Coricidin® HBP Cough & Cold, which contains 30 milligrams of DXM per tablet. Abusers often refer to Coricidin® HBP Cough & Cold as triple C because of the three Cs imprinted on the red tablets. Other slang terms include skittles, dex, candy, and red devils. Another frequently abused product containing DXM is Robitussin® DM, a syrup that contains 2 milligrams of DXM per milliliter.

Concerns about shoplifting and abuse of products containing DXM have resulted in some stores instituting new policies and procedures regarding access and sales of such products. Specifically, some stores place such products where consumers must ask for them, and some have limited the number of packages that can be sold to each customer.

DXM frequently is available at raves and other venues where youths congregate. At such events, DXM occasionally is sold as another drug or in combination with other drugs. For example, DXM sometimes is sold in tablet form by drug dealers who claim that the tablet contains MDMA (3,4-methylenedioxymethamphetamine, also known as ecstasy). When DXM is used in combination with MDMA, the combination can increase the risk of life-threatening hyperthermia. Drug dealers also have distributed DXM to abusers who thought they were purchasing heroin or ketamine.

Pure powdered DXM—typically intended for sale to laboratories conducting research on the drug—is available from some Internet web sites. DXM purchased from such sites contains no other ingredients, which substantially increases the risk of overdose. Two powdered DXM-related deaths occurred in Illinois—one in September 2003 and the other in February 2004. One incident was ruled a suicide; the other was an accidental overdose.

Outlook

DXM abuse among adolescents most likely will increase as the drug is relatively easy to obtain and inexpensive. Moreover, adolescents perceive the risk in abusing the drug as low. Stemming DXM abuse will require increased public awareness of the drug's potential for abuse, increased awareness of the inherent risks associated with abusing DXM, and increased diligence of parents, educators, health care providers, law enforcement personnel, and retailers who market products containing DXM.

Gov. Doyle signs bill outlawing hallucinogenic drug salvia divinorum

Gov. Jim Doyle signed a bill Thursday outlawing salvia divinorum, a hallucinogenic herb.
The bill was originally authored by former state Rep. Sheldon Wasserman in 2007 when he learned of salvia's potential to induce intense hallucinations when used recreationally.

"You can find out quickly, this has the potential for danger," Wasserman said.

The legislation regulating salvia has since been re-introduced and passed in the Senate last month. Wasserman worked with Rep. David Cullen, D-Milwaukee, who was previously co-author of the bill and is now the primary author, to see the bill become a law.

"We worked together on this thing to really make this happen," Wasserman said.

Danny Marchewka / The Daily Cardinal

Local shops like Amsterdam on Gilman St. will no longer be able to sell salvia divinorum after the recent legislation outlawed the substance.

The legislation prohibits manufacturing, distributing or delivering the active chemical ingredient and instates a maximum fine of $10,000 for violators. Wasserman said the legislation is directed more toward the distributor and less toward the user.

Business owners currently selling salvia maintain a different belief about the drug. The owner of Amsterdam, the store located at 447 W. Gilman Street, says the shop has not had any problems in the ten years it has been selling salvia.

She said salvia is marketed as incense and works to facilitate a deep state of meditation. It was meant to be burned like regular incense and she said she has no knowledge of its misusage.

"If people are smoking it, we don't know about it because we are not selling it as that," she said.

She also said her most loyal customers are age 40 and above and kids are not as interested in it.

Wasserman disagreed.

"[Salvia's] main use was to get high," he said. "There was never any thought that it was anything but a recreational drug."

SALVIA DIVINORUM AND SALVINORIN A

November 2008
DEA/OD/ODE

Introduction:

Salvia divinorum is a perennial herb in the mint family native to certain areas of the Sierra Mazateca region of Oaxaca, Mexico. The plant, which can grow to over three feet in height, has large green leaves, hollow square stems and white flowers with purple calyces, can also be grown successfully outside of this region. Salvia divinorum has been used by the Mazatec Indians for its ritual divination and healing. The active constituent of Salvia divinorum has been identified as salvinorin A. Currently, neither Salvia divinorum nor any of its constituents, including salvinorin A, are controlled under the federal Controlled Substances Act (CSA).

Licit Uses:

Neither Salvia divinorum nor its active constituent salvinorin A has an approved medical use in the U.S.

Chemistry and Pharmacology:

Salvinorin A, also called Divinorin A, is believed to be the ingredient responsible for the hallucinogenic effects of Salvia divinorum. Chemically, it is a neoclerodane diterpene found primarily in the leaves, and to a lesser extent in the stems. Although several other substances have been isolated from the plant, none have been shown to be psychoactive.

In the U.S., plant material is typically either chewed or smoked. When chewed, the leaf mass and juice are maintained within the cheek area with absorption occurring across the lining of the oral mucosa (buccal). Effects first appear within 5 to 10 minutes. Dried leaves, as well as extract-enhanced leaves purported to be enriched with salvinorin A, are also smoked. Smoking pure salvinorin A, at a dose of 200-500 micrograms, results in effects within 30 seconds and lasts about 30 minutes.

A limited number of studies have reported the effects of using either plant material or salvinorin A. Psychic effects include perceptions of bright lights, vivid colors and shapes, as well as body movements and body or object distortions. Other effects include dysphoria, uncontrolled laughter, a sense of loss of body, overlapping realities, and hallucinations (seeing objects that are not present). Adverse physical effects may include incoordination, dizziness, and slurred speech.

Scientific studies show that salvinorin A is a potent and selective kappa opioid receptor agonist. Other drugs that act at the kappa opioid receptor also produce hallucinogenic effects and dysphoria similar to that produced by salvinorin A. Salvinorin A does not activate the serotonin 2A receptor, which mediates the effects of other schedule I hallucinogens.

Illicit Uses:

Salvinorin A and Salvia divinorum products are abused for their ability to evoke hallucinogenic effects, which, in general, are similar to those of other scheduled hallucinogenic substances.

User Population:

According to a National Survey on Drug Use and Health Report published by SAMHSA in February 2008, it is estimated that 1.8 million persons aged 12 or older used Salvia divinorum in their lifetime, a approximately 750,000 did so in the past year. Use was more common among young adults (18 to 25 years old) as opposed to older adults (>26 years of age). Young adults were 3 times more likely than youths aged 12 to 17 to have used Salvia divinorum in the past year. Use is more common in males than females.

Illicit Distribution:

Salvia divinorum is grown domestically and imported from Mexico and Central and South America. The Internet is used for the promotion and distribution of Salvia divinorum. It is sold as seeds, plant cuttings, whole plants, fresh and dried leaves, extract-enhanced leaves of various strengths (e.g., 5x, 10x, 20x, 30x), and liquid extracts purported to contain salvinorin A. These products are also sold at local shops (e.g., head shops and tobacco shops).

Control Status:

Salvia divinorum and salvinorin A are not currently controlled under the CSA. However, a number of states have placed controls on Salvia divinorum and/or salvinorin A. As of November 2008, thirteen states have enacted legislation placing regulatory controls on Salvia divinorum and/or salvinorin A. Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Kansas, Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota, Oklahoma, and Virginia have placed Salvia divinorum and/or salvinorin A into schedule I of state law. California, Louisiana, Maine and Tennessee enacted other forms of legislation restricting the distribution of the plant. States in which legislative bills proposing regulatory controls died are Alabama, Alaska, Hawaii, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oregon, South Carolina, and Utah. Legislative bills proposing regulatory controls are pending in Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas and Wisconsin.

Salvinorin A and/or Salvia divinorum have been placed under regulatory controls in Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Italy, Japan, Spain, and Sweden.

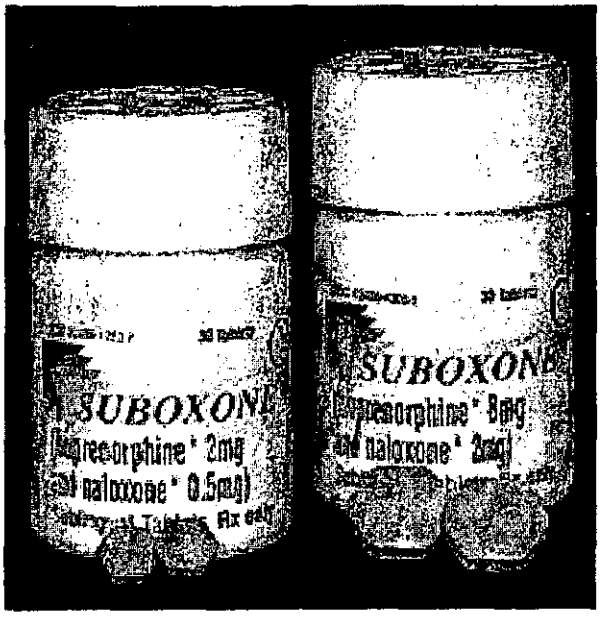
Buprenorphine: Potential for Abuse

Product No. 2004-L0424-013 SEPTEMBER 2004

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE



NDIC

Within the past 2 years buprenorphine—a Schedule III drug—has been made available for use in opiate addiction therapy. Two formulations of the drug are used in such therapy. Subutex, which is pure buprenorphine, is designed to be used in the initial stages of addiction treatment. Suboxone, which contains an antiabuse component, is designed to be used in the maintenance stage of treatment. Both block the effects of opiates while reducing opiate cravings and easing withdrawal symptoms. Buprenorphine is the only opiate addiction therapy drug that can be prescribed in a physician's office; others must be dispensed in a clinic. This method of distribution is advantageous to many opiate addiction therapy patients because it is more convenient and less stigmatizing than clinic-based therapy, which typically involves methadone. Like methadone, however, buprenorphine is susceptible to abuse. Despite safety measures in place to guard against diversion of the drug, illegal distribution and abuse of buprenorphine have been reported in the United States, primarily in the Northeast region.

Background

Currently, the drug most commonly used in opiate addiction therapy in the United States is methadone, a Schedule II synthetic opiate. Methadone helps addicted individuals to stop abusing opiates by reducing opiate cravings and symptoms of withdrawal; however, there are several disadvantages to methadone-based opiate addiction therapy. Methadone can be prescribed only in licensed methadone treatment clinics, and patients must deal with the stigma attached to making daily trips to a methadone clinic. Also, these clinics commonly are located in or near urban centers, so patients in rural areas must drive long distances each day to obtain methadone. Finally, methadone abuse is increasing throughout the Northeast region, where abuse of heroin and other opiates is common, and increasingly is a factor in overdose deaths.

In a move away from clinic-based therapy, the Drug Addiction Treatment Act of 2000 (DATA) passed by Congress in 2000 allows physicians who receive specialized training to treat opiate addiction in their offices with Schedule III, IV, and V medications approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) specifically to treat opiate addiction. However, at the time DATA 2000 was passed, no medications had yet been approved by FDA for that purpose.

ARCHIVED

On October 8, 2002, FDA approved buprenorphine in two formulations, Subutex and Suboxone, for use in opiate addiction therapy. Subutex (buprenorphine hydrochloride) is used in the initial stages of therapy while Suboxone (buprenorphine hydrochloride and naloxone hydrochloride) is used in the maintenance stage. Today, only these two formulations of buprenorphine meet DATA 2000 specifications; therefore, buprenorphine is the only drug that can be prescribed in a physician's office to treat opiate addiction. (A third, Buprenex, is marketed as a pain relief medication that cannot be used to treat opiate addiction.) While most commonly used to treat addiction to heroin, buprenorphine can be used to treat addiction to any type of opiate, including oxycodones such as OxyContin and Percocet.

Safeguards were put in place before buprenorphine was made available to the public because of widespread pharmaceutical diversion and increased prescription drug abuse in the nation. In fact, Suboxone was designed specifically to meet FDA requirements for a more diversion-proof drug for use in opiate addiction therapy and is available only in the United States. The naloxone contained in Suboxone guards against abuse—if an abuser crushes and injects or snorts the Suboxone tablet, the naloxone in it precipitates withdrawal symptoms. Naloxone (Narcan) reverses the effects of opiates. Further, in 2002 the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) reassessed the potential for abuse of, diversion of, and addiction to buprenorphine and rescheduled it from a Schedule V drug to a Schedule III drug, thus increasing the penalties for illegally obtaining, possessing, or abusing buprenorphine.

To further safeguard buprenorphine from diversion, physicians prescribing the drug in either of the formulations approved for treating opiate addiction must become certified by attending a special training course and submitting their qualifications to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA). Physicians also must agree to refer patients for drug addiction counseling. After registering with SAMHSA, physicians receive a special identification number from DEA that appears on all buprenorphine prescriptions they administer. The DEA-issued identification number assigned to each certified physician aids law enforcement and antidiversion officials in tracking any diversion of the drugs.

Physicians prescribing buprenorphine therapy must maintain a log of all patients using Subutex and Suboxone and record the medication that has been prescribed to them. The medical records of these patients are subject to periodic DEA and FDA review. FDA also has stipulated that the manufacturer of Subutex and Suboxone, Reckitt Benckiser Pharmaceuticals, must investigate any reports of diversion.

More than 1,700 physicians or group practices in the United States—over 700 located in the Northeast—are certified to prescribe buprenorphine. Physicians currently are prohibited from prescribing Subutex and Suboxone to more than 30 patients at any given time. The 30-patient limit also applies to group practices. For example, a group practice of three certified physicians may prescribe Subutex and Suboxone to only 30 patients, not 90. However, Congress is considering the Drug Addiction Treatment Expansion Act of 2003. This legislation, if passed, will amend DATA 2000 by lifting the 30-patient limit imposed on group practices and allowing each physician in a group practice to prescribe buprenorphine to 30 patients.

Effects

Buprenorphine is a derivative of thebaine, an extract of opium. The drug is an opioid (synthetic opiate) partial agonist and thus can produce the euphoria, analgesia, and sedation associated with opiates; however, while it stimulates the same brain receptors as full opiate agonists such as heroin and morphine, buprenorphine produces a lesser degree of sedation and respiratory depression than those drugs and causes no significant impairment of cognitive or motor skills. Like methadone, buprenorphine reduces cravings for heroin and other opiates and reduces withdrawal symptoms, thus helping addicted individuals to stop abusing opiates. Also like methadone, buprenorphine blocks the effects of heroin by binding to the same opiate receptors as heroin; consequently, opiate addicts who use buprenorphine are not able to get a high from heroin.

2510

Buprenorphine also has a "ceiling effect" whereby increased doses of the drug do not produce increased effects after a certain point, or ceiling. In fact, high doses of the drug can actually precipitate withdrawal symptoms in opiate addicted individuals. Because of this ceiling effect, buprenorphine is less susceptible to abuse than other opiates; however, because high doses of the drug can cause withdrawal symptoms, buprenorphine is not as effective as methadone in treating severely opiate-addicted individuals who require larger doses of opiates in order to maintain treatment therapy. SAMHSA advises that the best candidates for buprenorphine therapy are those patients receiving 30 milligrams or less of methadone. Buprenorphine is estimated to be effective for approximately one-half to two-thirds of the opiate abuser population.

A New Form of Buprenorphine Administration

A new, extended-release formulation of buprenorphine, called a depot formulation, currently is being developed. This depot formulation is an injectable solution that contains tiny biodegradable capsules of buprenorphine. As the capsules disintegrate, they slowly release the drug over several weeks. This new formulation of buprenorphine is designed for administration in a physician's office once every 4 to 6 weeks and could further safeguard against diversion by eliminating the need for patients to possess buprenorphine in tablet form.

Advantages

The use of Subutex and Suboxone in opiate addiction therapy is likely to become more common because of several advantages. Buprenorphine can be prescribed by a local doctor and obtained from a local pharmacy, providing patients with convenient access to treatment. Further, if DATA 2003 is passed, the number of patients that can be treated by group practices will increase. Because patients can visit their local doctors, buprenorphine therapy is far more discreet, making it preferable for many patients who must deal with the stigma attached to making daily trips to a methadone clinic. This treatment option also is more convenient than methadone therapy for many abusers who would otherwise have to drive long distances each day to obtain methadone. Further, buprenorphine therapy can provide treatment in rural areas with inadequate access to treatment and in areas where methadone clinics have reached full capacity.

While it is possible to overdose on buprenorphine, it is safer than methadone because of its ceiling effect and decreased degree of respiratory depression. Also, because of the various safeguards in place, buprenorphine is more difficult to divert than methadone. The abuse of methadone poses a growing threat as evidenced by increasing mortality rates associated with it, whether diverted or legally prescribed. (See text box.)

Methadone Overdose Deaths

The abuse of methadone has contributed to an increase in overdose deaths, particularly in the Northeast region. For example, medical examiner data indicate that methadone is increasingly involved in overdose deaths in Maine. The number of overdose deaths in Maine where methadone was listed as the cause of death fluctuated, but increased overall from 4 in 1997 to 14 in 2001. In the first 6 months of 2002, methadone was listed as the cause of death in 18 deaths. Furthermore, methadone appeared as a factor in 33 percent of all accidental overdose deaths in Maine from 1997 through 2003, one of the two highest percentages of all drugs during that period.

Diversion

Buprenorphine is a synthetic opiate and produces the euphoric effects sought by opiate abusers; therefore, it is susceptible to abuse in both of the forms approved for treating opiate addiction. Subutex, the form that does not contain naloxone, is more vulnerable to abuse because it can be crushed and injected or snorted without causing withdrawal symptoms in the abuser. The FDA recommends that physicians limit the use of Subutex to supervised administration sessions; however, physicians are not required to do so, creating opportunities for Subutex diversion. Subutex has been prescribed legally for years in some foreign countries, where its diversion for illicit use is common. There are lucrative black markets for diverted Subutex in Germany, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom. In France, India, and Scotland, where buprenorphine is far more common in opiate addiction therapy than methadone, many individuals are addicted to Subutex. Suboxone is not available in these countries.

Suboxone also can be diverted and abused; however, it is more likely to be abused by individuals who are addicted to low doses of opiates since it can precipitate withdrawal symptoms in high doses. The naloxone in Suboxone guards against abuse by causing withdrawal symptoms in abusers who crush and either inject or snort the drug; however, law enforcement and pharmacist reporting indicates that Suboxone is being abused successfully when snorted.

Using buprenorphine and heroin in combination does not produce increased effects, but if buprenorphine and methadone are abused together, the effects of both drugs are enhanced. Consequently, diverted buprenorphine may be attractive to patients currently using methadone for opiate addiction therapy.

Despite controls designed to make buprenorphine diversion-proof, there have been reports of buprenorphine diversion throughout the United States, primarily in the Northeast region.

- Chittenden County, Vermont. A pharmacist in this area reports that Suboxone is being diverted and sold for $25 per 8-milligram tablet. Abusers are grinding the tablets and snorting them.
- Washington County, Maine. The Washington County Sheriff's Office reports that buprenorphine is being diverted in that area and sold for $50 per tablet. The size of the tablet is unknown, and it is unclear whether Subutex or Suboxone tablets are being diverted in this case.
- Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania Department of Health reports that diverted Subutex and Suboxone are being illegally distributed on the street. Specific locations have not been identified.

Outlook

It is unlikely that buprenorphine will render methadone therapy obsolete because it is not as effective in patients who require large doses of opiates in maintenance therapy. However, buprenorphine can provide opiate addiction therapy to individuals addicted to lower doses of opiates, to those in rural areas with inadequate access to treatment, and to those in areas where methadone clinics have reached full capacity. With more physicians obtaining certification to prescribe buprenorphine every day, this form of therapy has the potential to become as common as methadone therapy.

Because of its ceiling effect and ability to precipitate withdrawal symptoms if taken in high doses, buprenorphine is more susceptible to abuse by individuals who are addicted to low doses of opiates or individuals in the early stages of opiate addiction. The drug also can be abused in combination with methadone, making buprenorphine diversion more problematic in areas where heroin abuse and methadone therapy are common, such as the Northeast region. As buprenorphine therapy becomes more widespread, the potential for increased diversion of Subutex and Suboxone should be closely monitored.

General Order No. 1 bans intoxicating substances

by Airman 1st Class Christopher Gross
3rd Wing Public Affairs

3/5/2010 - ELMENDORF AIR FORCE BASE, Alaska -- The use of any intoxicating substances other than alcohol, caffeine, tobacco or lawfully-used prescription medications has been banned here and throughout bases in the Pacific.

This ban is the result of reports of PACAF Airmen being involved with the use of Salvia and the intoxicant "spice," there have also been reports of inhaling household chemicals and other chemical inhalants along with abusing over-the-counter medications.

"The abuse of these products by military members contradicts the nature of our profession of arms, threatens our military readiness and diminishes our ability to conduct the mission entrusted to us," said Gen. Gary North, PACAF commander.

The General Order No. 1 prohibits the following actions:

· Possessing, distributing, inhaling, smoking, chewing, consuming or introducing into the body in any manner Salvia Divinorum, Salvinorin A or the intoxicant "spice" in any form.

· Inhaling household chemicals and other chemical inhalants for the purpose of becoming intoxicated, high, altering mood or function, or achieving a psychoactive effect.

· Abusing over-the-counter non-prescription medications for the purpose of becoming intoxicated, high, altering mood or function, or achieving a psychoactive effect.
This order applies to all members either assigned or attached to PACAF and also includes tenant units located on PACAF bases.

"Our Wing's four priorities are to generate, deploy and employ combat mission ready air power; maintain Elmendorf as a combat ready warfighting platform, provide world-class support to our fellow Arctic Warriors and their families; and develop professional Airmen," said Col. Thomas Bergeson, 3rd Wing commander. "Not only is it illegal to get "high" on drugs, chemicals or inhalants, that kind of behavior threatens all four of these vital missions and is incompatible with our ability to Fly, Fight and Win!"

Failure to obey these orders is a violation of Article 92 under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and may result in criminal, administrative or other disciplinary action.

CHPA Comments on House Bill 327

Members of the Alaska House Judiciary Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on House Bill 327 on behalf of the Consumer Healthcare Products Association (CHPA). CHPA is the 129 year-old trade association representing the nation's leading over-the-counter medicine (OTC) and nutritional supplement manufacturers. H.B. 327 prohibits the sale of a product containing dextromethorphan to an individual younger than 18, unless the individual has a prescription. It also requires the seller to either clearly mark the products as for sale only to persons 18 years of age or older or by prescription, or place the products behind the counter. While CHPA applauds the purpose of this legislation and supports the age-18 sales restrictions, CHPA strongly opposes language that limits consumer access to dextromethorphan products or requires special labeling.

Dextromethorphan (DXM) is a safe and effective ingredient found in over 100 OTC cough and cold products. First approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in the 1950's, it is a highly effective, non-narcotic cough suppressant that works by raising the coughing threshold in the brain; it has no pain relieving properties and is not addictive. While dextromethorphan is used safely by millions of Americans each year to relieve coughs due to the common cold or flu, we know that some young people are intentionally abusing products containing dextromethorphan in an effort to get high.

The nonprescription medicine industry takes very seriously the intentional abuse of cough medicine and has been engaged in educational efforts to curb abuse for a number of years. CHPA has teamed with the Community Anti-Drug Coalitions of America (CADCA), the Partnership for a Drug-Free America (PDFA), D.A.R.E. America, and WebMD to raise awareness among parents and in communities about the dangers of OTC cough medicine abuse. In 2009, these efforts were combined into one comprehensive web site: StopMedicineAbuse.org. This web site provides access to all the industry's initiatives and interactive programs to engage parents and community leaders in the fight against teen cough medicine abuse. Highlights of our campaign including the following:

Consumer Healthcare Products Association
900 19th Street, NW, Suite 700
Washington, DC 20006
T 202.429.9260 F 202.223.6835
www.chpa-info.org

- CHPA, in conjunction with PDFA, launched the Rx and OTC Medicine Abuse Education Campaign in May 2006. This multi-year communications campaign helps parents and families understand and prevent cough medicine abuse among teenagers and young adults.
- Since 2005, CHPA and CADCA have conducted nearly 20 town hall meetings nationwide to help alert communities to the issue of teen medicine abuse.
- In 2009, CHPA launched a collaborative destination on cough medicine abuse with WebMD. The site provides parents with information about abuse and its risks, and also gives parents practical tips to recognize the signs of abuse and methods to keep teens drug-free.
- CHPA has partnered with D.A.R.E., Abbott Labs, and PhRMA to produce lessons for 5th, 7th, and 9th graders, as well as a community program.
- In May 2007, CHPA launched "Five Moms: Stopping Cough Medicine Abuse," an online grassroots campaign to help parents fight teen medicine abuse. The Five Moms' goal is to get the word out to as many parents as possible that cough medicine abuse is happening in their homes, and that the Internet is a driving force. In 2009, the Five Moms Campaign became part of CHPA's overall Stop Medicine Abuse initiatives. Through the web site, parents can sign up for the electronic newsletter, view the "viral video," or use the "tell-a-friend" tool to spread the word about this teen substance abuse behavior.

Our campaign's reach extends to communities in Alaska. CADCA has coalitions in Anchorage, Kenai, Juneau, Yakutat, and Valdez, and D.A.R.E. has trained officers in our joint Rx/OTC abuse lessons in Fort Richardson, Cordova, Kodiak, Barrow, Soldotna, Fort Greely, Kenai, Nenana, Pilot Station, North Pole, and Anchorage. With CADCA, CHPA has produced a comprehensive, informational online video that allows interested community members to host their own town halls or hold multiple town halls. CHPA and its partners will continue these efforts to raise awareness and are interested in expanding programming into additional regions of the state.

CHPA also supports an age-18 restriction on sales of dextromethorphan-containing medicines. We believe this approach supplants the need to place these products behind the counter. Moving these products behind the counter would greatly reduce the consumer's ability to self select and significantly diminish the value that OTC medicines provide the healthcare system. More importantly, if products are moved behind the counter, consumers will not have the ability to read labels and compare ingredients when making purchasing decisions. Further restriction could also result in retailers removing these products from their stores entirely and lead to a widespread access problem, which would be of great concern especially in the more remote areas of Alaska.

Finally, adding a labeling requirement for these products could increase the cost to the consumer because manufacturers would need to produce special labels only for those products sold in Alaska. CHPA member companies have voluntarily adopted the StopMedicineAbuse educational icon, which appears on thousands of dextromethorphan-containing medicines, so there would be little added benefit from additional labeling.

As outlined above, the industry has taken an aggressive approach and invested significant resources to combat cough medicine abuse. With so many campaigns and initiatives, we have a number of assets already in place that are useful, cost-effective, and will make a great impact in Alaska, without unnecessary restrictions on consumer access. It is our sincere hope that these issues can be adequately addressed so that CHPA can lend its unequivocal support to this legislation. However, in its current form, CHPA respectfully opposes H.B. 327.

NACDS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CHAIN DRUG STORES

March 5, 2010

To the Honorable Members of the Alaska State House of Representatives Judiciary Committee
Juneau, Alaska

RE: House Bill 327 – Dextromethorphan (DXM) sales restrictions

Dear Members of the House of Representatives:

On behalf of the members of the National Association of Chain Drug Stores (NACDS) operating in the State of Alaska, I am offering this letter of opposition to House Bill 327 – sales restrictions on common cold products containing Dextromethorphan. Members of NACDS operating in Alaska include: Costco, Walgreens and Wal-Mart. These three companies operate 14 of the 45 chain pharmacies operating in Alaska. Collectively community pharmacy (chain and independents) employ over 8,300 full and part-time employees and pay in excess of $8 million in state and local taxes.

Dextromethorphan is a safe and effective ingredient found in over 100 over-the-counter cough and cold products. First approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in the 1950's, it is an effective, non-narcotic cough suppressant that works by raising the coughing threshold in the brain. It has no pain relieving properties and is not addictive.

With this in mind, the members of NACDS respectfully oppose the passage of House Bill 327 for the following reasons:

- DXM is vastly different from pseudoephedrine (PSE).
  - DXM is not addictive, and cannot be converted into an addictive substance.
  - DXM abusers usually do not commit crimes related to DXM abuse.
  - DXM is abused for a quick high that is not physically addictive.

- Unlike PSE, there is no practical alternative to DXM available.
  - There are no other FDA-approved over-the-counter cough suppressants available in the United States.

- The issue of teen substance abuse must be the focus of legislators, as DXM is not unsafe.
  - Parents must be involved in the actions of their children.
  - Legislators should focus on educating parents, teachers, coaches, and teens about the dangers of drug abuse, including DXM.
  - Teens are also known to abuse household aerosols, cleaning fluids, glue, gasoline and other products that produce a "high." Teen abuse is not limited to DXM only. The bigger picture of product abuse should be addressed.

- According to the Partnership for a Drug-Free America, children who "learn a lot about the risks of drugs" from their parents are up to half as likely to use them. Only 32% of teens "learn a lot about the risks of drugs" from their parents.
- According to the Partnership for a Drug-Free America, teens reasons for using DXM are "to get high" and "to deal with stress and depression."

❖ DXM is an inherently safe product. To experience a hallucinogenic effect, one must take a dose approximately 25 times the recommended adult dose.
- DXM has few side effects when taken in therapeutic doses.
- DXM is not addictive, even when taken in massive doses.
- DXM is used to suppress coughing in people of all ages, from infants to the elderly.
- DXM has very few contraindications. It can be taken by almost any patient suffering from almost any disease state.
- DXM interacts with very few medications; it can be taken safely by almost anyone taking almost any medication.
- Because it is non-addictive, DXM must be readily available for anyone with a cough or cold that has a problem with addiction to drugs or alcohol.

NACDS along with the Partnership for a Drug-Free America continues to work to educate parents and families as to the potential abuse of medicines containing DXM.

Please set this bill aside and assist us in promoting an educational component instead of taking away the ability to procure legitimate cold products in a timely fashion.

Sincerely,

Lis Houchen

Dear Representative Johansen:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing HB 327, an act relating to the scheduling and rescheduling of certain substances as controlled substances and to the sale of products containing dextromethorphan.

The APOA Executive Board's Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

We thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

RE: State Laws Regulating Salvia Divinorum
LRS Report 10.201

You asked for information on state regulation of salvia divinorum. According to a recent compilation by the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), at least 17 states criminalize some aspect of the use, possession, or distribution of this substance. We include this document as Attachment A.

Attachment B is a copy of "The Legal Status of Salvia Divinorum," by Daniel Siebert, an independent researcher who closely follows this issue. Mr. Siebert's article, last updated on March 4, 2010, identifies 19 states with laws addressing the legality of salvia divinorum. This article also provides further discussion of pending bills and passed legislation in states as well as in 20 countries that prohibit some aspect of the possession, sale, or use of the substance. For your convenience, we insert a table from Mr. Siebert's article here:

US States with Laws Prohibiting Salvia	Other Countries with Laws Prohibiting Salvia
Illegal (Schedule I)	Illegal to Possess or Sell
Delaware	Australia
Florida	Belgium
Hawaii	Croatia
Illinois	Denmark
Kansas	Germany
Mississippi	Italy
Missouri	Japan
Nebraska	Latvia
North Dakota	Lithuania
Ohio	Poland
Oklahoma	Romania
South Dakota	South Korea
Virginia	Sweden
Only Legal When Not Intended for Human Consumption	Illegal to Sell, but Legal to Possess
Louisiana	Chile
North Carolina	Spain
Tennessee	Illegal to Grow or Sell, but Legal to Possess
Legal for Adults, but Illegal To Sell to Minors	Russia
California	Treated as a Medicinal Herb that Requires a Doctor's Prescription
Maine (possession by minors also illegal)	Estonia
Illegal to Manufacture, Deliver, or Sell Salvinorin A, but Legal to Possess	Finland
Wisconsin	Iceland

State Laws on Salvia Divinorum

In recent years, the drug Salvia Divinorum, or Salvia, has gained the attention of state legislators. Since 2006, at least 17 states have passed laws regulating or controlling the drug.

Salvia is an herb related to mint that is known for its psychoactive effects. The plant is native to parts of Mexico, where historically it has been used as part of indigenous religious rituals. Common methods of ingestion include infusing leaves into a tea; smoking dried herbs; and chewing. In the United States, use of Salvia is most common among 18-25 year olds and to a much lesser extent among adolescents (see chart below).

Effects of Salvia

Salvia originally became popular as a legal alternative to marijuana. However, the effects are markedly different. The effects of Salvia are hallucinogenic and vary based on method of ingestion. For example, smoking Salvia can lead to strong, instantaneous effects, whereas chewing or drinking tea can lead to longer lasting scenarios, but less intense. Some common effects include uncontrollable laughter, visions, dysphoria, experiencing multiple realities, and loss of physical coordination. So far, there has been limited study into the long-term effects of Salvia or its potential for addiction or abuse or its potential medicinal benefits. Initial studies have found that since Salvia increases dopamine levels in the brain, it contains potential as an addictive substance. Other studies, though, have found that Salvia could have potential as a treatment for gastrointestinal disorders.

Legal Status

No Federal statutes control or regulate distribution of Salvia. So far, at least 17 states have felt the need to act, passing laws ranging from banning possession or sale for minors to outright bans. Some states have classified Salvia as a Schedule 1 substance, modeled after the federal Controlled Substances Act, where Schedule 1 substances are considered to have a high potential for dependency and no accepted medical use.

Re: HB 327 — Controlled Substances

Dear Representative Johansen,

The Advisory Board on Alcohol and Drug Abuse appreciates your recognition of the need to limit the availability of dangerous substances like salvia divinorum ("salvia") and dextromethorphan ("DXM"). Both pose a danger to Alaska's young people and should be regulated better.

Salvia is a hallucinogen — a drug that distorts perception of reality. It has been identified by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration and the U.S. Department of Justice Drug Enforcement Administration as an emerging chemical or drug "of concern." According to the National Survey on Drug Use and Health (NSDUH), salvia has emerged as an "herbal high" being used by young people. The 2006 NSDUH reflects that adolescents and young adults are using salvia at a rate higher than LSD or PCP, and nearly as high as Ecstasy. More than 750,000 people age 12 years and older reported using salvia in 2005. Some researchers do site that there could be possible medical applications for salvia in the future, and have concern that regulation may slow research. However, the effects of salvia are such that regulation is appropriate.

DXM is the active ingredient in cold medicines, like Tylenol. While it has benefits as an over-the-counter medicine, it can be deadly when misused or abused. The Alaska Injury Prevention Center reports that, of the 1,223 unique cases of hospitalization due to attempted suicide reviewed for 2001-2001, 77% involved an overdose by Tylenol or prescription medication. Of completed suicides, 11% are attributed to poisoning (defined primarily as overdoses).

With this information, we see that limiting access to these substances is in the best interests of our children. Thank you for your work, and please let us know if the Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse can assist in the effort to pass this important legislation.

House Bill 331

Youth Court Funding

For the past twenty years the Alaska Youth Court has emerged as one of Alaska's most effective crime prevention programs. It has provided youth offenders and volunteers a better understanding of our legal system with an emphasis on accountability. Youth Courts strategically operate in Alaska communities from Ketchikan to Nome. It is the only diversion program available in District Court to enable individuals to have their cases dismissed without resulting in a criminal record. For many this brief involvement in the justice system is a turning point.

Funding for this program comprises a mix of state funds, the private sector, municipal grants, and federal funds. To help ensure continuation of Alaska's Youth Court program HB 331 directs a source of funding from a portion of criminal fines. This bill will require the state to account separately for these fines which currently are spent on the general administration of state government. Consequently it will allow the legislature to appropriate up to 25% of criminal fines to support youth courts.

Each youth court is adapted to fit the needs of the individual community. Youth volunteers participate in various roles while youth offenders receive an alternative sanction from the formal justice system. In 2002 the Urban Institute, a non-partisan, policy research non-profit, studied teen courts in four states. The study compared recidivism outcomes for youth courts with youth handled by our regular juvenile justice systems. The results indicated only 6% of offenders in the Anchorage program were back in court within a six month period compared to 18% by the regular juvenile justice system.

Using criminal fines to pay for crime prevention makes sense for Alaska's future. HB 331 will provide a means for the legislature to allocate funds annually and support this effective, worthwhile, and cost efficient program.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if nece

HB 331 allows the legislature to appropriate 25 percent of the fines imposed under AS 12.55.035, collected and separately accounted for by the state under AS 37.05.142, to the Department of Health and Social Services for distribution to youth courts established under AS 47.12.400. The bill would provide an alternate source of funding for youth courts, which have been supported since FY2006 with a Congressional appropriation that will be exhausted by early FY2011. Youth courts are typically operated as nonprofit organizations or within municipalities. The Division of Juvenile Justice relies upon these courts as a community-based diversion response for low-risk juvenile offenders. In FY09, 13% of all delinquency referrals made to the division were referred to youth courts and other community-based diversion panels.

The division is submitting a zero fiscal note because no new authorization is necessarily invoked by passage of this bill.

1. Why do we need youth courts? It is impossible for the Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ), to respond fully to all delinquent acts committed by juveniles. Instead, incidents are prioritized and division resources are devoted to the most serious cases. Low-priority cases, such as first time shoplifting, may result either in no personal contact (a warning letter) or a referral for outside services. Youth who commit these offenses are left with the impression that their criminal actions are deemed acceptable, if there has been no consequence for the crime they committed. Studies indicate, however, that early intervention in lower-priority cases can be very effective in preventing more serious problems from developing in the future. There is an urgent need for communities to complement DJJ's services by providing responses to lower-priority cases. The community suffers each time a crime is committed. Youth courts are a method for the community to respond to delinquency. This voluntary alternative to the juvenile justice system is a form of early intervention designed to foster a sense of well being in the community. Back to the top

2. What are youth courts? Youth courts are innovative alternatives to the juvenile justice system. Youth volunteers participate in various roles (attorney, judge, bailiff, juror) while youth offenders are offered an alternative sanction from the formal juvenile justice system. Youth courts are implemented in response to the need or concerns of each community. Although the model may vary in style, substance and procedure, the recurring themes among youth court programs are:

Accountability
Youth courts ensure an offender is held accountable for their behavior, requiring them to make amends for the damage they have caused to the community. Offenders are called by peers, family, friends, school staff and/or other caring adults to answer for their crimes.

Significant Peer Influence
Youth volunteers send the message that they don't condone law-breaking behaviors. Positive peer influence!

Competency Skills
Youth court programs teach competency and leadership skills: listening, problem solving, communication, cooperation and conflict resolution. Youth courts also provide real-world career and criminal justice skills to youth volunteers who participate in the court process. Youth courts provide youth offenders and volunteers with a better understanding of the legal system, and also promote more positive attitudes towards law enforcement.

Empowering and Involving Youth courts allow youth to assume leadership roles and address the issues of crime in their communities.

3. Why do we need a state association? United Youth Courts of Alaska was incorporated in 1998 as a non profit corporation based on the fundamental principal that youth courts need to have the operational flexibility to accommodate the diverse communities throughout Alaska. While engaging the community in partnership with the juvenile justice system, UYCA works with Alaskan communities to increase awareness of youth court programs and to reduce juvenile crime in Alaska. The association provides education and training materials to established and emergent youth courts throughout Alaska. Youth court members will receive technical assistance and training. UYCA reduces the need to 'reinvent the wheel' by networking to create a united voice for Alaskan youth courts. Back to the top

4. How many youth courts are there? There are currently 12 established and emerging youth courts in Alaska, and others that are developing their programs! Nationally, there are around 1,200 youth courts in 49 states and the District of Columbia. Back to the top

10. There are 12 youth courts in Alaska: Anchorage, Bethel, Juneau, Kenai, Ketchikan, Kodiak, Mat-Su, Nome, North Star/Fairbanks, Sitka, Valdez, and Wrangell.
11. Nationally, there are 1200 youth courts in 49 states and Washington, D.C.

United Youth Courts of Alaska Fact Detail

1. 900 Cases Per Year

Based on FY2009 statistics compiled by the Division of Juvenile Justice, 12 youth courts in Alaska hear 900 real criminal cases each year. While programs throughout the state differ slightly, all of the youth courts in Alaska hear first time or non-habitual juvenile offenders for misdemeanors, violations, and infractions per State and Municipal laws.

2. 8% Recidivism Rate

Based on a study titled "The Impact of Teen Court on Young Offenders" by Jeffrey A. Butts, Janeen Buck, and Mark B. Coggeshall, the recidivism rate for juvenile offenders in the traditional court system is 23%.

Youth courts in our state consistently have an average recidivism rate of 8%, meaning that 92% of juvenile offenders served by youth court do not commit further crimes.

Additionally, youth courts in Alaska have a lower recidivism rate compared to those in other states, which may be due to our unique court structure that allows teens to be judged—literally—by their peers, not by adults. According to the study done by the Urban Institute (Butts, et al.):

"The [Evaluation of Teen Courts] Project located seven different theoretical perspectives that could be related to questions about the impact of teen court on youth recidivism. Although they are known by various names, the ETC Project identified the seven theoretical schools as follows:

1. Peer justice,
2. Procedural justice,
3. Deterrence,
4. Labeling

5. Restorative justice and repentance,
6. Law-related education, and
7. Skill building."

3. Savings Per Defendant

In the report, "Evidenced-Based Public Policy Options to Reduce Future Prison Construction, Criminal Justice Costs and Crime Rates" by the Washington State Institute for Public Policy, October 2006, Teen Courts were identified as an "effective program." Citing five evidence based studies, the Institute found that teen courts reduced crime rates by 11.1%, saving the state $10,145 per defendant based on the cost of crime on victims and taxpayers. The average cost of teen courts per defendant was $936, for a net benefit/savings of $9,208 per offender.

4. Volunteer Work Product

Statewide, youth courts sentence Community Work Service as part of sanctions to repair the harm for the crime that has been committed. The type of work done for CWS might be cleaning up litter and debris on roadways or public parks, helping at a soup kitchen, repairing damages caused by the crime, or helping elders in a nursing home. Based on statistics from the Division of Juvenile Justice, juvenile offenders successfully completed 20,550.25 hours of CWS in FY2009. The State of Alaska values CWS at $5.00 per hour, which means that the value of CWS completed through youth court last year was $102,751 at no cost to our communities or the State.

The work products of other sanctions are not taken into consideration for these figures, but are also valuable contributions to the health of the community. Examples of other sanctions include: restitution to victims, essays, behavior modification classes, apology letters, alcohol or drug classes and counseling, and mediation programs (see "6. Classes and Mediation Services").

5. Reducing Crime Rates

In 2006, the Washington Institute for Public Policy completed an exhaustive study of many adult and juvenile prevention and intervention programs. In the report, youth courts were identified as an effective program. Citing five evidence-based studies, the Institute found that youth courts reduce crime rates by 11%.

Youth courts have been proven to reduce crime and reduce recidivism, and they do it by linking the crime to swift, efficient consequences and offering "a continuum of community-based services" to address the issues underlying the crime (DJJ Annual Report, FY2004).

By providing diversion services for District and Superior Court Judges as well as Juvenile Probation Officers, youth courts allow these officials to focus on the more serious offenses or repeat offenders. Because of this and other reasons, judges, clerks, attorneys and Juvenile Probation staff across the state show their support for youth court by instructing classes, volunteering time, serving on Boards of Directors, and offering legal advice on cases.

6. Classes and Mediation Services

The 3 main principles of Restorative Justice are Accountability, Community Protection, and Competency Development—principles which have long been used in the field of juvenile justice to address the root causes of juvenile crime. Across the state, youth courts offer evidence-based and creative ways for offenders to educate themselves and end the cycle of crime. Some examples of these classes and mediation services follow.

- North Star Youth Court, located in Fairbanks, offers a comprehensive and year-round Mediation Program; the three types of mediation offered are victim-offender, parent-teen, and peer-to-peer. Mediation is based on the philosophy of Restorative Justice, the purposes of which are to put key decisions into the hands of those most affected by crime, to reduce the likelihood of further offenses and to provide closure for all parties and a strengthened community. North Star Youth Court also offers an Alcohol Awareness Class, as well as a Parent Information Class on MCAs.
- Mat-Su Youth Court offers a Juvenile Anti-Shoplifting class as part of sanctions for offenses involving theft and concealment of merchandise. MSYC also provides a peer-led Minor Consuming/Risk Factors class for youth defendants charged with alcohol and drug crimes. The class covers risk factors youth face every day that influence their future behavior.
- Ketchikan Youth Court provides a certified PRIME for Life® alcohol and drug prevention/intervention class for offenses involving alcohol or controlled substances. KYC also offers a Money Education Class for offenses involving theft, concealment of merchandise, or destruction of property; the goal is to provide an overview of community economics and discuss how each person's actions (spending, saving, stealing, etc.) affect other people financially.

- Anchorage Youth Court utilizes a variety of classes to address different issues within their client community. AYC classes include: Anti-Theft Class, Thinking Patterns, Victim Impact, Drug & Alcohol Assessment and Follow-up, Fire Stoppers, and Weapon Safety.
- Sitka Youth Court offers classes on Victim Impact and Anti-Theft.
- Nome Youth Court, in partnership with the court system, offers a certified PRIME for Life® alcohol and drug prevention/intervention class.

7. Training 2,300 Alaskan Youth Annually

Youth volunteers who are directly involved in the youth court process receive a minimum of 10 hours of legal training before they can begin working on cases. Throughout the time they volunteer for youth court, volunteers are required to attend workshops, CLEs (continuing legal education), and other trainings to enhance their skills. Most youth courts have a Bar Association that helps to facilitate these trainings and enforce court policies.

Some courts also require juvenile offenders to take these trainings, so that they can better understand the process of justice and perhaps become a part of youth court. Those individuals are often the most effective and compassionate judges, jurors, and attorneys.

8. Juvenile Population Increase

The juvenile population in our state is expected to increase by 27% by 2015 according to the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, which is the 4th largest increase in the entire U.S. With this dramatic projected change in the juvenile population, juvenile crimes will likely also increase, and thus the sustainability of youth courts is even more critical.

9. Youth Court Legislation in Alaska

Alaska was identified in another recent national study as the one state with the most comprehensive Youth Court legislation, in that our statute AS 47.12.400 specifically entrusts Youth Courts with adjudicatory as well as dispositional authority. (See "The Organization and Operation of Teen Courts in the United States, A Comparative Analysis of Legislation", Michele Heward, JD, Juvenile and Family Court Journal, Winter 2002.) The legislature has also entrusted Youth Courts with the authority to handle first time minor consuming alcohol violations under AS 4.16.050.

In 2003 and again in 2005, youth courts from around the state mobilized to introduce a bill into the state legislature. The Alaska State Legislature considered HB 303, a bill to secure sustainable funding for youth courts for the first time: "An Act relating to youth courts and to the recommended use of criminal fines to fund the activities of youth courts; and relating to accounting for criminal fines." HB 303 passed through the House Judiciary Committee, and every member of that committee added their name as co-sponsors. HB 303 made it to the House Finance Committee, but the session ended before it could be heard. During the 24th Legislative Session, HB 155, the second "Youth Court Bill", was approved through several committees and passed the Alaska House of Representatives in March 2005. The Senate version of that bill was handed over to the Finance Committee but never came up for a hearing.

10. Youth Courts in Alaska

There are 12 community-based youth courts in Alaska: Anchorage, Bethel, Juneau, Kenai, Ketchikan, Kodiak, Mat-Su, Nome, North Star/Fairbanks, Sitka, Valdez, and Wrangell. Many of these courts have been in operation over 10 years; Anchorage has the longest-standing youth court in the state, having been incorporated in 1989.

United Youth Courts of Alaska is a statewide organization which seeks to work in partnership with Alaskan communities and the formal juvenile justice system to develop and sustain innovative youth courts. All of the above named courts are members of UYCA, and use it as a platform to network and support each other's programs through conferences and technical assistance. For more information on UYCA and its members, visit www.alaskayouthcourt.org.

11. Youth Courts in the United States

There is only one state, Connecticut, that does not have youth courts due to their juvenile justice system. In 2006 more than 120,000 youths volunteered to hear more than 130,000 cases, and more than 20,000 adults volunteered to facilitate peer justice in youth court programs.

The National Association of Youth Courts (NAYC) was started with support from four federal agencies: Office of Juvenile Justice & Delinquency Prevention, U.S. Department of Education and the Corporation for National and Community Service, and the National Highway & Traffic Safety Administration. This effort was started in 2003 when OJJDP recognized the huge movement of youth court programs springing up all over the country due to studies showing their effectiveness.

NAYC became a 501(c)3 association in 2007. Some current objectives are:

- Encourage the development and expansion of youth courts and state associations of youth courts;
- Provide a forum for training youth and adult volunteers, sharing ideas, and providing 'best practices' and other critical resources for the operation of youth courts;
- Enhance connections to and relations with government agencies and community-based programs or organizations; and
- Educate public and private agencies, businesses and individuals on the benefits of youth courts.

Many youth courts choose to have membership in NAYC to stay abreast of national program trends and to attend conferences. Mat-Su Youth Court Co-Director Lisa Albert-Konecky is Alaska's representative on the NAYC Board of Trustees. Visit www.youthcourt.net for more information.

This is the first report of findings from the Evaluation of Teen Courts (ETC) Project, which was conducted by the Urban Institute and funded by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice.

The ETC Project studied teen courts in four States: Alaska, Arizona, Maryland, and Missouri. Researchers measured pre-court attitudes and post-court recidivism among more than 500 juveniles referred to teen court for non-violent offenses, such as shoplifting and vandalism. The study compared recidivism outcomes for teen court defendants with outcomes for youth handled by the regular juvenile justice system.

Hi Jesse, it looks like there were $350K in forfeitures last FY for the CourtView courts. We will not have the first district courts on CourtView until the end of calendar year 2010, but the majority of the forfeitures are likely originating from the Anchorage, Fairbanks, Palmer and Kenai courts – all of which are on CourtView.

In summary, you should use the $5.3 million as your ballpark number. Rhonda

Hi Jesse,

Here is the revenue that was deposited into the general fund for fine and forfeitures. We are working to 'unbundle' the forfeitures to see how much of the forfeitures were eventually applied to a fine and how much ended up simply being forfeited. It looks like in FY09, the amount of forfeitures was about $350K, but I am having the court reports person run additional stats as this seemed high to me. A good ballpark number would be $5.3 million (you can see that our revenues from year to year are fairly consistent) if waiting for us to ferret out this answer is causing you problems. (Sorry for the delay...) Rhonda

Attn: Beth Leban-Coordinator

Tuesday, January 26, 2010

Dear Beth:

I am writing to express my appreciation for the work done by the Juneau Youth Court. The Youth Court is an integral sentencing option for students under the age of 18 who are charged with consuming or possessing alcohol for the first time.

As you know, students who choose the Youth Court option are given the opportunity to have their District Court case dismissed if they successfully complete the Youth Court requirements. For some, this brief involvement in the criminal justice system is a turning point. Those who choose Youth Court and succeed are far less likely to return to District Court on other criminal charges. The students benefit because they end up with no conviction on their record. And the community benefits because the Youth Court graduates are contributing to the community rather than causing harm to themselves and others.

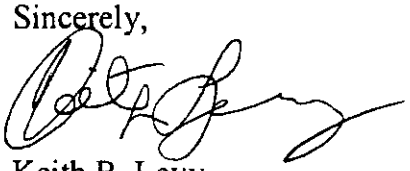
The Youth Court is the only diversion program available in District Court to enable individuals to have their cases dismissed without resulting in a criminal record. The trust the program has earned from both the District Court and the prosecution is a testament to the value and integrity of the program.

I appreciate that you or another representative of the Youth Court always attends the arraignment hearings for minor consuming. The information you provide to the students about Youth Court is invaluable and helps them understand their options in the justice system.

Finally, the Youth Court program provides an opportunity for students to be judged by their peers. I believe this is valuable because the students in the program have far more information about the defendants than is provided to me in formal sentencing proceedings. The Youth Court is able to impose consequences that are more meaningful than the limited options I have when sentencing.

Thanks again for the important service the Youth Court provides to the community.

Sincerely,



Keith B. Levy

To whom it may concern:

I am writing in support of legislation that would provide sustainable funding for youth court programs in Juneau and other communities in Alaska. For over a decade Juneau Youth Court has provided a vital and important service to the City and Borough of Juneau.

Juneau Youth Court is a diversion program that removes young people who are first time offenders from the traditional juvenile justice system and handles the case in a court of peers. The program works with families to ensure that teens are held accountable for their actions and that consequences are constructive and tailored to the individual youth thereby benefiting both the young person and the community at large. Last year Juneau Youth Court ordered over 600 hours of community work service that were completed at Zach Gordon Youth Center, the American Red Cross, Meals on Wheels, the Glory Hole, the Salvation Army, and at schools throughout Juneau School District.

On average Juneau Youth Court serves 50 youth each year handling referrals from both District Court and Juvenile Justice Probation Officers. This frees up the court and probation officers to handle more serious offenders and helps to reduce their large caseloads. Youth Courts have the additional advantage of educating the youth who volunteer for the program. Youth Court advocates reap the benefits of learning about the legal system, performing meaningful community service, and gaining the opportunity to help their peers.

Juneau Youth Court operates on a very small budget of $35,000 per year with one part time paid staff person, two dozen volunteer student advocates, a community advisory board including representatives from the Police Department, the Division of Juvenile Justice, the legal community, and community partners. The program offers an important service to the community at a very low cost.

Juneau Youth Court is just one example of a successful diversion program known as youth court. Around the state Youth Courts are doing important work for Alaska by addressing juvenile crime in its earliest stage. I strongly urge you to support legislation that would provide sustainable funding to support these community-based programs.

Sincerely,

Laury Scandling

The Juneau Youth Court Community Advisory Board supports House Bill 331 and Senate Bill 257, "an Act relating to funding for youth courts; and relating to accounting for criminal fines". This legislation would appropriate 25 percent of the court fines imposed under AS 12.55.035 to established and operating youth courts. Federal funding will not be available after this year and the future of the Alaska Youth courts depend upon state and local ownership.

A recent study shows Alaska Youth Courts to be among the most effective in the nation. According to the Urban Institute's Evaluation of Teen Courts Project, which was based on four teen court programs studied in four different states (Alaska, Maryland, Arizona, and Missouri), the six-month recidivism figures among the programs ranged from 6 percent to 9 percent. Alaska's recidivism rate was the lowest of these four states, and compared to the recidivism rate of 18 percent for the regular juvenile justice system, shows that youth who go through youth courts are significantly less inclined to re-offend within the following year.

The primary function of youth court programs is to determine a fair and restorative sentence for young offenders. Youth courts are programs in which youth sentence their peers for minor delinquent and status offenses and other problem behaviors. According to the National Youth Court Database, in 1994 there were only 78 youth court programs in operation; as of October, 2006, there were over 1127 youth court programs in operation in 49 states and the District of Columbia.

The Alaska Youth Courts is a vital form of community justice and reweaves the fabric of community by forging a partnership between local governmental entities, the private sector, and community groups to facilitate the performance by private citizens of the functions that were once performed by the extended family, neighborhood, and school.

To Whom It May Concern:

The Alaska Highway Safety Office supports the Juneau Youth Court as an alternative to the juvenile justice system and an opportunity for young people who are accused of breaking the law to be judged by their peers. The court consists of students who fill various roles from judge to juror to address juvenile crime in their community. Nationally, Youth Courts have found that sentences imposed by teen peers have a tremendous impact and effectively defer them from becoming repeat offenders.

The Alaska Highway Safety Office mission is to enhance the health and well being of Alaska's people through programs aimed at saving lives and preventing injuries on Alaska's highways. Federal funding is administered to data driven projects which focus on public outreach, education, enforcement, promotion of new safety technology, and the integration of public health strategies.

Priorities of the Alaska Highway Safety Office include impaired driving and teen driving. A recent study compared Alaska's 1995-1999 minor consuming cases with 1995-2006 DUI court cases and found that 24.4 percent of youth with minor consuming arrests go on to have DUI offenses before their 31st birthday. Although teens represent approximately 12 percent of Alaska's motor vehicle drivers, they are responsible for over 20 percent of the traffic fatalities and major injuries in Alaska. Nearly half of these deaths can usually be prevented by simply buckling-up or not drinking and driving. The Alaska Highway Safety Office supports the Juneau Youth Court because it is a data-driven, peer-led program that effectively addresses minor consuming.

Re: Wrangell Youth Court

The purpose of this letter is to express the continued support of the Wrangell Trial Courts for the Wrangell Youth Court program.

Since its inception ten years ago, the Wrangell Youth Court has been widely accepted and respected in the local community. Having youthful offenders appear before a group of their peers has had a very positive effect in this community. Most individuals appearing before the Youth Court successfully complete their requirements and never return to the court.

The youth court provides the added bonus of "hands on" knowledge of the justice system and public service opportunities for its members. They graduate with solid ethical standards and a commitment to public service and the administration of justice.

Although the success of a program is frequently measured by the number of cases or clients handled, that is not really an adequate standard in looking at a youth court program, particularly in a small town. If this court never heard another case, it would be a successful program based on the dedication and commitment of its members.

Thank you for your continued support of the Wrangell Youth Court program. We are looking forward to continuing to work with this program for the next ten years.

To whom it may Concern:

Wrangell Youth court is an innovative alternate traditional justice system and is empowered by the Alaska Statute 47.12.400 to make a positive difference in Alaskan communities.

Youth Court programs are rapidly advancing in goals of Restorative Justice, by developing programs that are not only cost effective but promote youth accountability by involving youth in obligations of taking an active role in their community. Youth are encouraged to connect in our community and in our State, where youth partner together, encourage and share information that enable youth with critical decisions making skills.

The purpose of the program is to decrease juvenile crime and the recidivism amongst juvenile offenders as well as to involve students in implementing restorative justice. Youth Court members learn valuable experiences in assuming the role and responsibility of a judge, prosecute or defend first-time juvenile offenders in a court of their peers.

The Wrangell Youth Court program eases the caseload of the district and superior courts, juvenile probation offices and schools district. We have found that this program is cost effective when you compare to the cost of one incarceration of a juvenile offender. Cost can be greater than $40,000 for a first time offense. If Wrangell Youth Court prevents one student from attending a youth detention facility it has paid for the entire year of the Wrangell Youth Court program.

In the year of 2000 the community of Wrangell, Alaska had a high juvenile crime rate and an even higher rate of minors consuming alcohol. In fact our community was 30% higher than another community similar in size and location. Since Wrangell Youth Court was established in 2001 the crime rate and rate of minors consuming alcohol has decreased greatly.

This program is a community base form of restorative justice that builds ties between youth, victims and other members of the community, offering youth the option to learn from their mistakes. Youth volunteers that participate, explore a variety of short and long term consequences of substance abuse, including cost to the individual and the community and its relation to other types of crime.

The Wrangell Youth Court has been nothing less than a success and has provided our youth with the opportunity to be involved and vision other career paths that they may had never seen. The training provided in the areas of legal and court procedures have offered a better opportunity to understand our Constitution and Bill of Rights and to actively give them a voice and feel valued, while at the same time engaging and bringing about social change.

Wrangell Youth Court not only mentors peers, has developed a positive relationship with the community, schools, business and other local communities.

Dear Representative Cathy Munoz:

I am writing to you to request your support in ensuring that Youth Courts remain a part of Alaska's legal system. They are invaluable and give so much more than initially may be seen.

Here in Bethel we have a very small youth court still struggling to get squarely off the ground. We have graduated only a handful of youth but I can tell you first-hand the impact such a small project has had on the youth in this area.

While to date we have only graduated a few students, each of those has at one point or another been enrolled at the Bethel Alternative Boarding School (BABS). Each of those youngsters has a unique learning style that makes it difficult for them to fit in or do well in mainstream schools. One of the youngsters was actually a drop-out. Despite those hurdles these teenagers came week after week to the 2 hour-long classes. They studied hard and took both a written final exam and an oral exam. These teenagers who fight so hard just to finish or stay in school actually excelled. They worked incredibly hard and it showed. Each of those teens gained confidence and a sense of accomplishment. A few were on the road to trouble with the law. They were bored, felt they had nothing to offer, and nowhere to go. Youth court changed that for them. It gave them a sense of purpose, a moral compass and a sense of belonging. These individuals will go further than they would have if youth court had not become a part of their lives.

Today I note that there appears to be a strong correlation between underage drinking and crime(s). There is also a strong correlation between underage drinking and trouble at school. Right now we do the best we can for these students via the Community Diversion Panel (CDP). While that is an amazing program that has provided a considerable amount to the community, it is only catching the tip of the iceberg. For many kids, by the time they come to the CDP their problems with alcohol have spiraled out of control. For others, alcohol comes much later in the process – they instead start with truancy and behavior problems at the school. These are the early cries for help. An active youth court would be able to intercede early enough to stem the upcoming tide. It would give minors an opportunity to start anew with the help and support of those whose input they seek the most: their peers.

There are some wonderful youth courts in other areas of Alaska which are at jeopardy as well: Anchorage, Kenai, and Fairbanks just to name a few. These programs have been around a while longer than Bethel's and have made even bigger impacts on the lives of minors. They have also reached out to lend support to those smaller youth courts still working to get established and on more solid ground. These programs are too valuable to lose.

If funding is an issue, I would urge you to consider a Bill that would add significant surcharges for Minor Consuming Alcohol (MCA) cases. The current slap on the wrist for a first MCA is so negligible that many minors view getting an MCA as a badge of honor and not something negative. The fines come from their PFD's and have little, if any, importance. Perhaps the surcharge, due much sooner, will make a bigger impact – at the very least it will generate income that will allow youth courts to continue operating.

I thank you for your consideration into this matter.

Sincerely,

Patty C. Burley
Magistrate

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to emphasize the importance of the Mat-Su Youth Court to the welfare of the Mat-Su community and to express my support for that organization.

In my almost 20 years on the bench, mostly as a magistrate and superior court master, recently as a district court judge, I have presided over literally thousands of cases involving teenagers. As the Mat-Su Valley population grew, the ability of the juvenile probation office (JPO) to handle all the cases involving teenagers was greatly diminished. Rightfully so, the JPO has to concentrate on the more serious crimes, such as burglaries and felony level assaults, that were committed by teenagers. As a result, many teens who committed lower level crimes, particularly shoplifting, either merely got a warning letter or their crimes were ignored all together.

Participation in lower level crimes leads to a disrespect of the law, of other people's rights in their person and their property, costs local storekeepers significant amounts of money, and often leads to greater criminal behavior if left undressed. Into this gap stepped the Mat-Su Youth Court. Many crimes that would not have been addressed because of the caseload of JPO are being handled by the Youth Court. The imposition of sanctions including restitution, community work service and letters accepting responsibility and apologizing for committing the crime all serve both the victim and the community as well as the defendant, who is more likely to grow to be a responsible citizen from the experience.

Over the years the Mat-Su Youth Court has added a program for first time offenders under the age of 18 convicted of Minor Consuming Alcohol. Not only is the program educational, but being run by a peer group, it sets the example that being clean and sober is an acceptable lifestyle that is respected by one's peers. Given that not only locally but nationally roughly 80% of adult crimes are somehow related to alcohol abuse, getting the message to an offender earlier in life may keep them from becoming part of that statistic as they grow older.

I wholeheartedly support and recommend the Mat-Su Youth Court program and urge others to do so, also.

Dear Mr. Stoltze,

I would like to express my support of HB331 and SB257 which would provide continued funding of State wide Youth Court Programs.

I fully support youth courts as statewide diversion programs that address first time juvenile offenses. These programs operate in twelve communities around the state. My current experience with youth courts is with the Mat-Su Youth Court (MSYC) program, which falls under the umbrella of the Wasilla Police Department and is funded wholly through grants. The Wasilla Police Department supports the MSYC with in-kind donations by providing office space and some supplies.

It is my firm belief that without MSYC operating in the Mat-Su Valley the police department would continue to see increased juvenile crime. Young offenders who do not suffer consequences as first time offenders will continue to commit crimes according to recent statistics.

Wasilla Police officers know that when they complete a report on a juvenile first time offender who has committed a low-level offense, that juvenile will not simply be given a letter from the State or a verbal warning from a Juvenile Probation Officer. Virtually every first time offense that is referred to the Division of Juvenile Justice office in the Mat-Su Valley gets referred to MSYC. MSYC takes action to insure the juvenile offender is made aware of what he/she did, who it affected in the community, and what to do to avoid repeating their conduct.

I support these bills to allow youth courts around the state to work on sustainability of their programs and to insure that they continue to address juvenile crime in the State of Alaska.

Dear Wendy,

I am writing to compliment you and the rest of the North Star Youth Court on the great job you are doing with Minor Consuming and Minor Operating After Consuming cases that are referred to the Youth Court by our court. It is important for our society to have a variety of options for the administration of criminal justice in order to promote rehabilitation and public safety, and to decrease recidivism. Youth courts are one such option. As you know, our referrals to your court are good for both the offender and for the public. I have seen that the confidentiality of your program is a real benefit to young offenders. Similarly, the public benefits in many ways, including through a reduced financial cost to the court system and law enforcement, through the Youth Court's focus on service to our community, and through the high rate of successful rehabilitation for offenders who complete the youth court program. It is my experience that offenders who are referred to your court are unlikely to return to ours.

Thank you very much for the work done by the young people and the adults of the North Star Youth Court. I would be happy to continue to work with the Youth Court to provide training for your judges, so please let me know when there is a Youth Court Judge who would like to shadow a Magistrate in the Fairbanks District Court or when you would like me to speak at a Youth Court Judge's training session.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide a letter supporting the Ketchikan Youth Court's efforts in Ketchikan.

I am a District Court Judge and have referred many cases to the Youth Court since its inception. The majority of the cases referred relate to minors consuming alcohol or tobacco.

Alcohol related crime and crimes committed by persons that are alcohol dependant make up the majority of criminal cases that come before the District Court in Ketchikan. Thus a coordinated approach between the Court System, treatment monitors and providers is the only practical response to assure public safety, rehabilitation and meaningful consequences for offenders.

The Ketchikan Youth Court is a vital tool in a coordinated approach to youth offenders. I am impressed with the dedication of the Youth Court members as well as the results. Youth that complete the Youth Court Program are much less likely to reoffend than those youth offenders that do not enter or complete the program.

Thank you again for the opportunity to provide this support letter, if you need any further information, please let me know.

The Juneau Youth Court is a pertinent and vital resource used by the Juneau Probation Office. The referral's that we send the youth court help free up time for Probation Officer's to deal with more serious and needy client's that frequent our large caseloads. The youth court also serves as the entry level in the continuum of services offered by probation and in many cases, helps divert juvenile's from committing further criminal acts. Client's that are non-compliant with the youth court process are showing probation that they need a more restrictive intervention and in that respect, the youth court acts as a litmus test. Please continue funding for this important piece of the juvenile justice system as it both important and necessary.

Dear Ms. McCloy:

As the Magistrate for the Ketchikan Trial Courts, I am the judicial officer who most frequently deals with school age teenagers charged by the State of Alaska and the City of Ketchikan with violations of laws or ordinances prohibiting possession or consumption of alcohol by minors, establishing curfews, and prohibiting possession or use of tobacco products by minors. The existence of and the programs offered by the Ketchikan Youth Court provide me with a meaningful sentencing alternative in dealing with these cases.

The KYC process teaches teens referred by the court to KYC about the court process itself, and provides a group of same-age and same-interests teens for these youthful defendants to work with. The resolution of cases through KYC requires engagement of both the defendant and that teen's parents, ultimately strengthening the family abilities to deal with problems a defendant is having as expressed through these quasi-criminal charges. The Court System sees fewer recidivists among those teens who are referred to and who successfully complete the KYC program.

KYC has added the Prime for Life alcohol information classes, and has agreed to make the class available to teens other than those actively participating in the full KYC program. This is a good program, and adds significantly to the resources available within Ketchikan.

I fully support Ketchikan Youth Court.

Re: Youth Court Program

Dear Representative Munoz:

Our department supports legislative funding by money obtained from court fees to support the twelve Youth Court programs in the state of Alaska. These programs offer an option for youth who have had their first experience breaking the law – by having their cases removed from the traditional juvenile justice system by referral from juvenile probation officers and district court judges and diverted to a court of their peers.

The mission of the youth court programs in Alaska is to work in partnership with Alaskan communities and the formal juvenile justice system to develop and sustain innovative youth courts programs. Services offered by the programs in which youth are sentenced by their peers for minor delinquent status offenses and other problem behaviors frees state employees in the court system and the Juvenile Justice division.

The funding of the Youth Court program will serve the needs of Alaska citizens, state agencies, and law enforcement. Thank you for your consideration of this important matter.

Dear Representative Munoz,

The Kodiak Chamber of Commerce fully supports HB 331 "An Act relating to funding for youth courts; and relating to accounting for criminal fines"

The United Youth Courts of Alaska provide an extremely important function in the communities they serve. Their handling of approximately 900 cases per year reduces recidivism and crime rates in our State. In addition, savings to the State of Alaska is estimated at $10,145 per defendant. Youth courts in Alaska generate over $100,000 worth of Community Work Service product annually, at no cost to the communities or the State.

The juvenile population of our State is expected to increase by 27% by 2015. With this dramatic increase in the juvenile population, juvenile crimes will likely also increase, and thus the sustainability of youth courts is even more critical.

Thank you for the support of House Bill 331.

Letter in support of the Kodiak Teen Court,

I am writing to express my strong support for the Kodiak Teen Court and its ongoing efforts to enhance the court's sustainability.

As we all know, Juveniles are highly influenced by their peers. The Kodiak Teen Court takes advantage of this by having juveniles stand in judgment by their peers. Kodiak students make up the membership of the court and act as both attorneys and judges. In doing so, they learn valuable lessons about the legal process while have an opportunity to help their community. In addition, low-level, first-time offenders are given opportunity to have their case diverted from the juvenile justice system. This is a win-win situation.

Over the years, my office has referred a number of cases to the Kodiak Teen Court. The feedback I have received from the juveniles and their parents has been very positive. Few of these juveniles ever return to the system. This has allowed me to focus my attention on those juveniles who pose a more serious risk to the community.

I look forward to continuing the relationship between my office and the Kodiak Teen Court and strongly support your efforts to ensure its long-term sustainability.

Respectfully,

Kodiak Teen Court
610 Mill Bay Road
Kodiak, Ak. 99615

Dear Darlene:

I am writing to you today to express my heartfelt thanks and continued support for Kodiak Teen Court. Since the program started in 1995, it has enjoyed tremendous success in our community, giving hundreds of youthful offenders over the years an opportunity to have their cases taken out of the traditional juvenile court system and instead dealt with in a more informal, less intimidating and more meaningful atmosphere, as the teen defendants are literally tried by their own peers serving as teen prosecutors, represented by their own peers as teen defense attorneys and sentenced by their own peers serving as teen judges. Besides being dealt with in a courtroom where everyone else is their same age (who they can relate to more than adult judges and attorneys), the teen defendants are given an opportunity to come out of Teen Court with a clean record if they comply with the sentence given them by the teen judges. It is no wonder, then, that the rate of re-offending in youth courts in Kodiak and in other parts of the State is significantly lower than with those teens who stay in regular juvenile court. Additional benefits to our community include an emphasis on restorative justice, making the victim feel "whole" again, and the imposition of a meaningful amount of community work service that many non-profits organizations in Kodiak find very helpful. Finally, I have been told by all the juvenile probation officers throughout the last 15 years, past and present, that they appreciate Teen Court because it allows them to divert less troublesome teens from the regular juvenile justice system into Teen Court, thus giving them more time to devote to the more serious teen offenders on their heavy caseload that really need their help in the formal, structured setting of the traditional juvenile court system.

The Kodiak Teen Court is an asset to our community in another, very big way. As the program celebrates its 15th year in existence this year, I have had the distinct pleasure over these years to work with hundreds of fine outstanding teens at Kodiak High and in our middle schools who have served as teen judges, prosecutors and defense attorneys. These students are given a unique perspective on how our justice system works, they are tremendous ambassadors of the program and great role models to teens who have gotten themselves into trouble and come into the program. Many of these former Teen Court judges and attorneys have kept in contact with me, and are already doing well in their chosen field, whether it's teaching in graduate school at Notre Dame, working as a detective in Portland, serving as a soldier in Iraq or attending good law schools and medical schools across the United States, many of whom intend to someday return to Alaska and work.

Again, I thank you for the wonderful program!

Sincerely yours,

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to express my support of the Youth Court program in Alaska. I moved to Nome, Alaska from South Royalton, Vermont to work as a clerk and deputy magistrate at the Superior and District Court and had no idea I would also be involved with the Youth Court program. When I found out that I was to serve as Youth Court Legal Advisor I was ecstatic. Youth Court excited me because, as a former social studies teacher, I saw a program that raises students' knowledge of the law, legal process and their civic rights and duties and excites a new generation of responsible, active and thoughtful citizens.

Youth Court gives students many unique opportunities and learning experiences. Just the personal responsibility required by participants makes this program invaluable. Students between the ages of twelve and eighteen literally participate in the court process representing clients and handing down legally binding sentences. In doing so they acquire many social skills and thinking strategies. Students learn empathy and professionalism when dealing with clients. They learn public speaking and writing. They learn how to separate facts from belief and emotion, how to see all sides of an issue, and how to logically and carefully present these issues. Through zealous representation of clients students grow as citizens, people and community members.

Perhaps the most important part of Youth Court is the clients themselves. Youth Court is a diversionary program targeting at risk youth, who, if thrown into the court system at such an early age, hazard becoming the repeat offenders I often see at my job. Youth Court gives these young men and women a second chance. Anybody who has worked with teenagers knows how much weight is placed on the opinion of their peers. In the Youth Court process, defendants are tried and sentenced by their peers, not a mysterious adult. This reinforces lessons learned and allows defendants to feel that they have been fairly judged.

Most importantly, Youth Court is not about punishing these young offenders. Sentences are not handed out in retribution. Instead, sentencing is designed to show the defendant the error of their ways, to intervene and work with the defendant's specific personality so they may see the connection between their actions and the effects of those actions, and finally to benefit the community. As the saying goes, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The Youth Court program is many ounces of prevention.

The Alaska Youth Court program is one of the best and most innovative programs in the entire United States. Creating future active, intelligent, informed and free-thinking citizens cannot be measured by dollars or statistics. It would be a shame to see such a program falter for lack of funding. I fully support keeping this wonderful program alive and active.

Thank you for your time and support.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Davis, Esq.

Hi, my name is Fred Becker V, I am the loss prevention manager for the Abbott Road Fred Meyers in Anchorage, and a active board member for the Anchorage Youth Court.

I have worked in the Loss Prevention Profession for over 26 years in the Anchorage Area. I became concerned with the consequences the youth were receiving very early on in my career as I was apprehending the same individuals over and over again. After discussing with those that I did apprehend a second and third time what had happen to them after the first and second time I found that many had not had any contact with anyone in the judicial system. Most stated they received a letter from McLaughlin Youth Center advising them to stay out of trouble, and some said then did not hear from anyone.

Since the inception of the Youth Court in Anchorage I rarely apprehend a juvenile a second time. I strongly believe that Anchorage Youth Court has provided the consequences necessary to deter individuals from re-offending, and prevented many young adults from having a adult criminal recorded. Because without the Anchorage Youth Court most juveniles would continue with their criminal behavior into their young adult life.

I believe in the successes of AYC as a highly-effective juvenile alternative justice program and that we do transform the lives of over 600 anchorage youths per year. The 300 plus youth volunteers are trained and receive extraordinary experiences in real live judicial matters. The 300-350 juvenile offenders referred to Anchorage Youth Court each year are given an opportunity to make amends to the community and are held personally accountable for their actions. This is why I am honored to be a AYC board member.

As a member of the retail industry I am happy to be part of a program that is also a benefit to our ability to continue to employ about 300 employees per location with a total of about 3,300 employees in the state of Alaska. The Youth Courts around the state provided a restitution program that did not exist and by providing a deterrent program for juvenile offenders results in less individuals using the five finger discount at our locations. My board membership has also resulted in the financial backing of Fred Meyers to help support our community.

As a board member I feel that some times we are not afforded the opportunity to address some issues because we spend a lot of our productive time finding ways to raise funds to support the financial requirements of AYC. With a stable source of funding I feel the board could focus more of our efforts on making Anchorage Youth Court as beneficial to the community, members, and offenders as possible.

Thank you for your time and I would be happy to discuss further my personnel or business involvement with AYC to you.

Re: HB334

Today, the HJUD committee considered and passed a CS for HB334 (26-LS1310\S) with the following amendments:

Delete: "domestic violence against a spouse, a child, or a domestic living partner"
Insert:"a history of perpetrating violence"

Jean, is this inconsistent with other statutory language in child custody proceedings?

Also, the committee had trouble understanding page 2, lines 6-8, might you please clarify what expedited means, subject to an additional 10 days notice?

Please go final on a CSHB334(JUD).

Should you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at 465-4990.

Thank you.

MEMORANDUM March 9, 2010

SUBJECT: Expedited Hearings and Violence Standard (CSHB 334(JUD))
(Work Order No. 26-LS1310\P)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

You have asked two distinct questions about the above referenced bill: (1) how expedited hearings work under this bill and the court rules; and (2) whether the inclusion of "any violent behavior" in the best interest standard is consistent with current custody law.

Expedited Hearings.

The bill provides for mandatory expedited hearings on a motion filed by the deployed parent and requires an additional 10 days' notice at page two, lines 10 - 12. The committee heard testimony and comment alleging that this provision is inconsistent with Civil Rule 77(g) and may work to delay a hearing on a petition by a deployed parent seeking custody or visitation of the parent's child. The civil rule requires evidence to justify expediting a hearing and decision, a response time for the motion except in rare circumstances, and judicial discretion all of which is covered by the bill provision that requires expediting when a deployed parent requests it.[1]

---

[1] Rule 77(g), Rules of Civil Procedure, provides as follows:

> (g) Expedited Consideration. A party may move for expedited consideration of its principal motion by filing a second motion requesting relief in less time than would normally be required for the court to issue a decision.
> (1) The motion must be captioned "Motion for Expedited Consideration" and must have an appropriate order on the issue of expedited consideration attached.

(2) The motion for expedited relief must comply with other provisions of this rule, including paragraph (e) concerning any request for oral argument except as the provisions of this paragraph specify otherwise.

(3) The motion for expedited consideration must include an affidavit or other evidence showing the facts which justify expedited consideration, and the date before which a decision on the principal motion is needed.

(4) If the parties are represented by counsel, the motion for expedited consideration shall include a certification of counsel that a good faith effort has been made to resolve the issues raised with opposing counsel, but that these efforts were not successful; or, in the alternative, that it was not possible to attempt to resolve the issues with opposing counsel beforehand. The certification shall include a description of what efforts were made to resolve the issues for which expedited consideration is sought, or an explanation of why no efforts were made.

(5) The motion for expedited consideration must include proof of service; and, if the motion requests a decision before the usual time for response to the motion, must include a certificate indicating when and how the opposing party was notified of the motion, or, if the opposing party was not notified, what efforts were made to notify the opposing party and why it was not practical to notify the opposing party in a manner and at a time that a response could be made.

(6) The court may not grant the motion for expedited consideration prior to allowing the opposing party a reasonable opportunity to respond, either in person, by telephone or in writing, absent compelling reasons for a prompt decision and a showing that reasonable efforts were made to notify the opposing party of the motion for expedited consideration in time to allow a reasonable opportunity to respond.

(7) The court may not grant the principal motion prior to allowing the opposing party a reasonable opportunity to respond, either in person, by telephone or in writing, unless it clearly appears from the specific facts in the motion papers or court records that immediate and irreparable injury, loss or damage would result to the moving party before any reasonable opportunity to respond could be given. In no event will a decision be rendered on the principal motion without a response until at least 24 hours after the date of service of the principal motion or the date actual notice is given, whichever is sooner. However, this limitation does not preclude a decision in less than 24 hours on an application for relief made pursuant to Civil Rule 65(b) or any other rule or statute authorizing such action.

On the other hand, the bill as currently drafted would not allow a hearing to be held in less than 10 days (during which time a response opposing the motion could be filed) while the civil rule could result in an earlier hearing date, sometimes within 24 hours of the motion being filed, but only if the evidence is sufficient to justify that level of urgency. It is my understanding that the 10 days' notice provision was intended to avoid abuse of the mandated expedited hearing schedule when a parent may be unavailable and to take into consideration the complexity and importance of the custody decision under consideration. That is a policy call.

In any event, without being expedited, a custody hearing may be delayed for months, depending upon the court calendar, the case priority, and the response time of at least ten days in addition to time to file a reply and oral argument provided for motions, if requested, filed in the case.

If you wish to clarify for the court that any perceived inconsistency with the court rule should result in the statute being applied (to avoid a shorter time for the hearing allowed by the rule, for example), the bill should be amended to include an indirect court rule change. Let me know.

Violence Standard.

The incorporation of amendment S.1 that requires a court to consider "any history of violent behavior," excluding military actions, exhibited by a parent in making a determination of the best interests of the child. While the standard does not appear in current law describing the best interest factors under AS 25.24.150(c), that statute contains a catch-all for other relevant considerations that may be employed by a court to disallow custody or visitation with a parent exhibiting violent behavior. Other express factors in AS 25.24.150(c)(7) and 25.24.150(g) limit the consideration of a parent's violent behavior to that behavior that occurs in the custodial home or against a parent, child, or domestic living partner.

The standard is very broad and requires no criminal conviction so that the evidence of the violence must be clear on the record of the custody determination, as is provided for in the written findings requirement of the amendment. Even with the findings, however, it may be that a court would disregard the standard if it finds it to be unconstitutionally vague or otherwise infringe on a constitutionally protected right.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Sponsor Statement HB 334

"An Act establishing child custody, modification, and visitation standards for a military parent who is deployed; and amending Rule 99, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure."

For nearly a decade, the War on Terror has required Alaska to frequently deploy our active military, reserve, and National Guard troops. This high deployment tempo is putting even more pressure on our already strained military families. Children who are already in unusual circumstances due to their parents' military careers are being put in the situation of having to deal with a deployed parent. It is no wonder that the divorce rate for members in the military has been steadily rising for the past decade.

However, while the travesty of divorce is hard enough on all members of a family, the court system is also finding it difficult to balance the issues of deployment with child custody issues. A deploying family member now must fight a battle on two fronts, the one in the Middle East, and the one at home. HB 334 ensures that the court system has clear directive as to how it should deal with a deploying military member if they should find themselves in the midst of a child custody battle. It affords them the right to an expedited hearing so that matters can be taken care of before deployment, if necessary, and it also allows the member to delegate their visitation rights to another family member in order for the child to maintain all familial connections. Most importantly, HB 334 requires that a court not consider deployment when determining child custody. Our men and women are sacrificing enough for our country, their military service should not be a reason in itself for them to lose custody of their children.

In 2009, because of the potential for conflict with current states child custody laws, congress deemed military child custody to be the responsibility of individual states.

HB 334 includes the following items and restrictions:

- A definition of a military absence.
- Assurance that military duties cannot be considered when determining child custody.
- Allowance of expedited hearings with restrictions.
- The right to delegate visitation to another family member.
- Allowance of electronic testimony.
- Limitations on temporary custody orders.

In recognizing that the federal government should not legislate a Military Child Custody statute, that Alaska has many service-members, that the United States military currently has a high rate of deployment, and that military divorce rates continue to rise, now is a good time for the Alaska Legislature to address military child custody.

Sectional
HB 334
"An Act establishing child custody, modification, and visitation standards for a military parent; and amending Rule 99, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure."

Section 1: AS 25.20 adds a new section:

Sec. 25.20.095. Custody and visitation proceedings involving a military parent.
(a) Military service cannot be a factor in granting or denying a petition for custody or visitation.

(b) – (e) Upon receiving deployment orders a military parent shall receive an expedited hearing and the parent can delegate visitation rights to a family member if doing so is within a child's best interests. Any petition for custody or visitation will be given the same protections as afforded under the SCRA. Additionally, rights or protections regarding custody or visitation can only be waived in writing

(f) A court order entered under this section must require
(1) a child be made reasonably available during periods of leave
(2) the facilitation of written and electronic contact between the deployed parent and the child, preferably electronic contact with a video image
(3) the deployed parent provide timely leave information

(g) Factors in determining a child's best interests. Cross reference to AS 25.24.150(c) and AS 25.24.150(g)

(h) Definition of "deployment," "family member," and "military service"

Section 2: AS 25.20.110 is amended by adding new subsection to read:

(d) Except as provided in (e) – (h) military service cannot be a factor in finding a change of circumstances on a motion to modify child custody or visitation

(e) A court may provide for a temporary modification of a custody or visitation order to make reasonable accommodation for a deployment. The temporary order must include provisions for
(1) custody or visitation during periods of leave if doing so is within the child's best interests.
(2) termination of the temporary order within 10 days of notification of the deployed parent's ability to resume custody if doing so is within the child's best interests. The non-deployed parent shall bear the burden of proof.

(3) a hearing if a child of a deployed parent moved out of state and the non-deployed parent files a motion that alleges that resumption of the permanent custody order will result in immediate danger of irreparable harm to the child or that the presumption under AS 25.24.150(g) exists
(4) delegation of the deployed parent's visitation rights to a family member if doing so is within the child's best interests.
(5) immediate notification from the non-deployed parent of a change of address or contact information.

(f) A court shall expedite a hearing to modify custody or visitation on a motion made by a parent who is subject to deployment.

(g) Factors in determining a child's best interests. Cross reference to AS 25.24.150(c) and AS 25.24.150(g)

(h) Definition of "deployment," "family member," and "military service." Cross reference to AS 25.20.095

Section 3: AS 25.24.150 is amended by adding new subsection to read:

(l) Except as provided in AS 25.20.095 and 25.20.110 military service cannot be a factor in determining the best interest of the child under (c) of this section.

Section 4: The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

(a) Authorization for Telephonic, Video, or Internet Participation.
The court shall allow video or Internet testimony if the hearing or deposition involves the custody or visitation of a child of a parent who is deployed, as that term is defined in AS 25.20.095, at the request of the deployed parent.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

House Bill 334 changes some of the provisions that govern child custody in cases where a parent is a service member who is or recently has been deployed. Two provisions have the potential to impact the court system. The first is the right to a custody hearing within 10 days after a service member requests the hearing after returning from deployment. Courts already frequently set these hearings on an expedited basis and this change will probably not have a significant impact on current practices. However, should a significant number of heaings be sought soon after the return of a large number of deployed service members, this may create scheduling problems.

The second possible impact involves internet testimony when a deployed parent wishes to participate in a custody hearing. The court can currently use this technology in the courts most likely to hear these cases (Anchorage, Faribanks and Palmer). Any associated costs are likely to be minor and can be absorbed without the need for additional funding.

Military Divorce Rate Continues to Climb
The divorce rate in the armed forces continues to grow, despite efforts by the military to help struggling couples.

The Pentagon recently reported there were an estimated 27,312 divorces among roughly 765,000 married members of the active-duty Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps in fiscal year 2009.

That's a divorce rate of about 3.6 percent, compared with 3.4 percent a year earlier, according to figures from the Defense Manpower Data Center. Marriages among reservists failed at a rate of 2.8 percent compared to 2.7 the previous year.

The reported 3.6 percent rate is a full percentage point above the 2.6 percent reported in late 2001, when the U.S. began sending troops to Afghanistan in response to the Sept 11 terrorist attacks.

As in previous years, women in uniform suffered much higher divorce rates than their male counterparts: 7.7 percent compared to 3 percent for men in 2009.

The only comparable measure for civilian divorce rates is what the Centers for Disease Control said in 2005 that 43 percent of all first marriages end in divorce within 10 years.

Critics believe that the divorce rate reported by the Pentagon comes nowhere close to depicting the damage done to marriages and families by the two ongoing wars.

The Pentagon number doesn't count veterans, who divorce after leaving the services, let alone reflect other possible wartime consequences on families, such as increases in alcoholism or the toll on orphaned or emotionally stressed children of troops.

In an Army battlefield survey taken in Iraq in the spring, nearly 22 percent of young combat soldiers questioned said they planned to get a divorce or separation, compared to 12.4 percent in a survey conducted in 2003.

For deployed Vermont military, help with child custody

By Peter Hirschfeld Vermont Press Bureau - Published: January 20, 2010

MONTPELIER – For military parents deployed to war zones overseas, the toughest battle can often be the child-custody dispute awaiting them back home.

The call to duty, family-law experts told Vermont lawmakers on Tuesday, can be used in court against military parents who split custody of their children with a former spouse or partner. And the impacts, they said, can exacerbate the intense emotional trauma that long deployments inflict on troops and their children.

"We don't have a lot of horror stories here, but boy are they out there in the rest of the country," said Patricia Benelli, a family-law attorney from Chester. "And we're trying to avoid them here."

Lt. Col. Ellen Abbott, a judge-advocate general in the Vermont National Guard, said she had to assist a Vermont soldier who returned from a long deployment to Iraq only to find that his ex-partner had been granted full custody of their child in his absence. It took months of court proceedings and $23,000 in legal fees, Abbott said, for the man to regain custody of his child.

"It was a very difficult thing for this soldier to go through," Abbott said. "Had we had something in place to provide protections to him, it might have made things easier."

Lawmakers this session will consider a bill that supporters say would provide those protections by addressing the legal pitfalls into which at least some military parents fall. Without such reforms, Benelli said, the state risks "penalizing people in the military for serving their country."

Rep. Maxine Grad, a Waitsfield Democrat and vice-chairwoman of the House Judiciary Committee, introduced the legislation, which now has 88 co-sponsors. With more than 5,000 Vermonters serving as active members of the military, including 1,500 headed for Afghanistan next month, she said it's incumbent upon the state to protect the parental rights of servicemen and women.

When deployment orders come through, Abbott said, many military parents "are afraid to go to court because they're going to take their children away."

Indeed, legal experts said Tuesday, a military deployment can be construed by family-court judges as the "real, substantial and unanticipated change" required by Vermont statutes to amend child-custody arrangements.

Proposed legislation would prevent judges from using deployment-related separation as the sole reason for changing custody or visitation orders.

"I think this bill provides the framework to give assurances to military parents that they won't lose contact with their children either before, during or after their deployment," Abbott said.

The bill would also ensure that parents forced to cede custody or visitation during a deployment could appoint a friend or family member to assume those rights on their behalf. The measure is needed, lawyers said Tuesday, to ensure a continued bond with members of the deployed parent's family.

The legislation additionally ensures contact rights for deployed parents wishing to correspond with their children via telephone, e-mail or Web cameras. Abbott, who herself has been deployed to Iraq, said contact with children is important to sustaining soldiers' morale.

"Being over there I can tell you soldiers live for contact with their children," Abbott said. "We also have soldiers who are devastated when they get no response from their children – none whatsoever. It degrades their ability to focus on the mission and that's what we need – the ability to focus on the mission so they can come back."

The bill would also force family courts to make deployment-related custody hearings priority cases, and allow deployed soldiers to participate in those hearings via phone.

Deployed Troops Battle for Custody

Associated Press | May 07, 2007

She had raised her daughter for six years following the divorce, handled the shuttling to soccer practice and cheerleading, made sure schoolwork was done. Hardly a day went by when the two weren't together. Then Lt. Eva Crouch was mobilized with the Kentucky National Guard, and Sara went to stay with Dad.

A year and a half later, her assignment up, Crouch pulled into her driveway with one thing in mind - bringing home the little girl who shared her smile and blue eyes. She dialed her ex and said she'd be there the next day to pick Sara up, but his response sent her reeling.

"Not without a court order you won't."

Within a month, a judge would decide that Sara should stay with her dad. It was, he said, in "the best interests of the child."

What happened? Crouch was the legal residential caretaker; this was only supposed to be temporary. What had changed? She wasn't a drug addict, or an alcoholic, or an abusive mother.

Her only misstep, it seems, was answering the call to serve her country.

Crouch and an unknown number of others among the 140,000-plus single parents in uniform fight a war on two fronts: For the nation they are sworn to defend, and for the children they are losing because of that duty.

Alert: Tell your public officials how you feel about this issue.

A federal law called the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act is meant to protect them by staying civil court actions and administrative proceedings during military activation. They can't be evicted. Creditors can't seize their property. Civilian health benefits, if suspended during deployment, must be reinstated.

Understanding Military Legal Matters

And yet servicemembers' children can be - and are being - taken from them after they are deployed.

Some family court judges say that determining what's best for a child in a custody case is simply not comparable to deciding civil property disputes and the like; they have ruled that family law trumps the federal law protecting servicemembers. And so, in many cases when a soldier deploys, the ex-spouse seeks custody, and temporary changes become lasting.

Even some supporters of the federal law say it should be changed - that soldiers should be assured that they can regain custody of children after they return.

"Now, they've got a great argument when Johnny comes marching home that the child should remain where they are, even though it was a temporary order," says Lt. Col. Steve Elliott, a judge advocate with the Oklahoma National Guard, referring to non-deployed parents.

Military mothers and fathers, meanwhile, speak of birthdays missed. Bonds, once strong, weakened. Returning from duty not to joyful reunions but to endless hearings.

They are people like Marine Cpl. Levi Bradley, helping to fight the insurgency in Fallujah, Iraq, at the same time he battles for custody of his son in a Kansas family court.

Like Sgt. Mike Grantham of the Iowa National Guard, whose two kids lived with him until he was mobilized to train troops after 9/11.

Like Army Reserve Capt. Brad Carlson, fighting for custody of his American-born children in a foreign land after his marriage crumbled while he was deployed to the Middle East and his European wife refused to return to the States.

And like Eva Crouch, who spent two years and some $25,000 pushing her case through the Kentucky courts.

"I'd have spent a million," she says. "My child was my life ... I go serve my country, and I come back and have to go through hell and high water."

In the midst of World War II, back in 1943, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the soldiers' relief law should be "liberally construed to protect those who have been obliged to drop their own affairs to take up the burdens of the nation."

Shielding soldiers, after all, would allow them "to devote their entire energy" to the nation's defense, as the law itself states.

But in child custody cases, the opposite often happens.

"The minute these guys are getting deployed, the other parent is going, `I can do whatever I want now,'" says Jean Ann Uvodich, an attorney who represented Bradley. "If you have an ex who wants to take advantage, they can and will. The obstacle is that the judge needs to respect the law."

Bradley had already joined the Marines, and his young wife, Amber, was a junior in high school when their son Tyler came along in September 2003. With Bradley in training, Amber and the baby lived with Bradley's mother, Starleen, in Ottawa, Kan.

When the marriage fell apart two years later, Bradley filed for divorce and Amber signed a parenting plan granting him sole custody of Tyler and agreeing that the boy would live with Starleen while Bradley was on duty.

In August 2005, Bradley deployed to Iraq. A month later, Amber sought to void the agreement and obtain residential custody of Tyler. She didn't fully understand what she had signed, she said later.

Bradley learned of the petition in Fallujah, after calling his mom's house one night to say hello to his son. He was infuriated.

He worked during the day as a mechanic with the 8th Communications Battalion, then headed back to the barracks and, because of the time difference, waited until midnight to call his mother to hear the latest from court.

"My mind wasn't where it was supposed to be," he says. And the distraction cost him. One day he rolled a Humvee he was test-driving. Though he wasn't injured, Bradley was reprimanded.

Uvodich sought a stay under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, which provides for a minimum 90-day delay in proceedings upon application by an active duty service member. She argued that Bradley had a right to be present to testify.

But the judge refused to postpone the case, saying he didn't believe it was subject to the federal law because "this Court has a continuing obligation to consider what's in the best interest of the child," court records show.

After a November 2005 hearing, the judge awarded temporary physical custody to Amber. Last summer, that order was made permanent.

Bradley, now 22, is stationed at Camp Lejeune, N.C., awaiting his second deployment to Iraq later this year. He gets to Kansas on leave for about two weeks every six months, and sees Tyler for four days at a time.

"I fought the best I could," he says. "The act states: Everything will be put on hold until I'm able to get back. It doesn't happen. I found out the hard way."

Deployment News and Resources

Oregon Circuit Court Judge Dale Koch, president of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, said that as state court judges, those deciding custody cases are obligated to follow their family codes - and "in most states there is language that says the primary interest is the best interest of the child."

"We recognize the competing interests," he says. "You don't want to penalize a parent because they've served their country. On the other hand ... you don't want to penalize the child."

But what does "best interest" really mean? Koch mentions factors such as stability and considering who has been the child's main emotional provider, parameters that conflict directly with military service. So how do you balance those things against upholding a deployed parent's civil rights? When, too, should a temporary change mean just that?

Iowa Guardsman Mike Grantham thought he was serving the best interests of his children when he arranged for his son and daughter to stay with his mother before reporting for duty in August 2002. She lived a few blocks from the kids' school in Clarksville, Iowa, and he figured, "There wouldn't be much disruption."

He had raised Brianna and Jeremy since his 2000 divorce, when ex-wife Tammara turned physical custody over to him.

After mobilizing, Grantham was served with a custody petition from Tammara, delivered to his unit's armory. His lawyer tried twice to request a stay under the federal law. His commanding officer even wrote a letter stating that Grantham's battalion was charged with protecting U.S. facilities deemed national security interests and that his case would cause the entire command structure "to refocus away from the military mission."

The trial judge nevertheless held hearings without Grantham and temporarily placed the children with Tammara. A year later, though Grantham had returned from duty, the judge made Tammara the primary physical custodian.

An appeals court later sided with Grantham, saying: "A soldier, who answered our Nation's call to defend, lost physical care of his children ... offending our intrinsic sense of right and wrong."

But the Iowa Supreme Court disagreed, saying Tammara was "presently the most effective parent."

Now, Grantham says, his visitation rights mirror those that his ex-wife once had: every other weekend, Wednesdays, and certain holidays - Father's Day, for example.

"There ain't nothing you can do," he says. "Being deployed, you lose your armor."

Military and family law experts don't know how big the problem is, but 5.4 percent of active duty members - more than 74,000 - are single parents, the Department of Defense reports. More than 68,000 Guard and reserve members are also single parents.

Divorce among military men and women also has risen some in recent years, with more than 23,000 enlisted members and officers divorcing in 2005.

Army reservist Brad Carlson lived in Phoenix with his wife, Bianca, and three kids when he volunteered to deploy to Kuwait in 2003. His wife and children were spending that summer with her parents in Luxembourg and expected to remain there until he returned from duty.

A year later, after his wife indicated she wanted to end the marriage and remain in Luxembourg, Carlson filed for divorce in an Arizona court, seeking custody of Dirk, Sven and Phoebe, all American citizens.

The Arizona court dismissed the custody case after Bianca's lawyer argued that jurisdiction belonged in Luxembourg because the children had resided there for at least six months.

Again citing the Servicemembers Act, Carlson's attorney argued that the time the kids spent in Luxembourg shouldn't count toward residency because it came during Carlson's deployment.

A Luxembourg court awarded custody to Bianca, and the kids remain there to this day.

They call him "Bradley" now, he says, instead of "Daddy." They converse in German in stilted long-distance phone calls that provide few precious minutes for a father to absorb missed moments - soccer games, kindergarten, birthdays. On Dirk's 9th, Carlson stood beneath a rainbow-colored birthday banner and had a friend take a digital photo of him holding a sign: "Happy 9th Birthday Dirk!"

Tears fill his eyes when it hits him: "That's how I celebrate."

"I feel really betrayed," Carlson says. "To be able to send me into harm's way ... and my own country can't protect my child custody rights. Why aren't they looking out for me, when I'm looking out for the country?"

The solution, some say, lies in amending the federal law to specify that it does apply in custody cases, and to spell out that jurisdiction should rest with the state where the child resided before a soldier deployed.

Some states aren't waiting for congressional action.

In 2005, California enacted a law saying a parent's absence due to military activation cannot be used to justify permanent changes in custody or visitation. Michigan and Kentucky followed suit, requiring that temporary changes made because of deployment revert back to the original agreement once deployment ends.

Similar legislation has been proposed in Arizona, Florida, Oklahoma, Texas and North Carolina.

"These men and women need to know that when we deploy them, they don't have to worry about being ambushed in our family law court system," says Michael Robinson, a lobbyist who helped write the California and Michigan laws. "The insurgents are doing enough ambushing over there. The only difference between what's occurring there and here is ... it's an emotional bomb."

Crouch knows that all too well.

When she was mobilized back in 2003, Crouch considered having her mother come live in her Frankfort, Ky., home to care for 9-year-old Sara. But her ex-husband, Charles, wanted Sara with him, and Crouch agreed.

"You have to promise me you won't try anything funny," Crouch told him.

He promised.

They drew up a temporary order, moved Sara's belongings 2 1/2 hours east to her dad's place near Ashland, and Crouch headed out - to Iraq, she thought, although she wound up stateside at Fort Knox, providing personnel support to units shipping out.

The fortunate assignment allowed her to visit Sara most weekends, but no one ever brought up the idea of making the temporary situation permanent until Crouch returned.

"Right up until the day I came home there was every indication that I was picking her up," she says.

Charles Crouch says that's true, and acknowledges their agreement was supposed to be temporary. But when the time came for Sara to return to her mom, Charles says his daughter expressed a desire to stay with him. She liked her school, had made new friends.

"I had no intention of trying to talk her into staying or anything," he says. "All I wanted was what was best for my daughter."

Eva Crouch helped fight for the new Kentucky law. Last year, the state Supreme Court cited it in overturning the trial judge's decision granting custody to Charles.

Last September, she got Sara back.

Crouch knows she's one of the lucky few whose cases have happy endings. She's remarried now, and expecting another baby this August. But with 18 years in the military, she knows she could be mobilized again after she gives birth. One thing is clear to her now: Serving her country isn't worth losing her daughter.

"I can't leave my child again - regardless of whether or not I know when I come home, she comes home.

"Still," she says, "I can't."

The Honorable Sean Parnell
Governor of Alaska
State Capitol
P.O. Box 110001
Juneau, AK 99811-0001

Dear Governor Parnell:

I am writing to you about a matter that is of critical concern to me - the support of our Service members and their families in child custody disputes. I am deeply committed to preventing any inequitable treatment our deployed soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines may face in child custody disputes as a result of their service to the Nation.

I ask that you consider how your state can address the special difficulties facing military parents who must balance the demands of military service with the equally compelling demands of parenthood. These demands are often felt most acutely when military members must deploy and either lose visitation time or face challenges to existing custody orders by a parent to whom the military member is not married.

To date, thirty states have passed laws that address some aspect of the difficulties facing parents who must temporarily give up custody of their children or who must forgo visitation when called to take up the burdens of the nation. One possible legislative response could include the presumption that the prior custody agreement be restored upon the military member's return from deployment. Another legislative response could be to allow a parent with visitation rights the ability to delegate those rights to a third party during the deployment. I note that Alaska has not passed legislation to address military and visitation issues.

The Department recognizes the complexities of such cases and the difficulties in balancing the interests of the Service member against the best interests of the child. The Department also believes that the States are in the best position to balance the needs of both within the context of existing domestic relations laws.

Because of the potential impact this could have on the full spectrum of our military families, I am writing you directly to let you know that we stand ready to assist you with any additional information that you may need to address this issue. Mr. Ed Kringer, my staff contact, can provide a more detailed description about how other states have approached this issue. Your staff can contact him at 703-602-4949, ext. 114, or at ed.kringer@osd.mil.

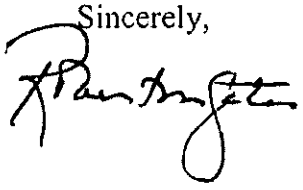
Thank you for all you do for our Service members and their families. Helping them with this extremely important family concern would provide a great service to our men and women in uniform, as well as to your State and the nation as a whole.

Sincerely,



Sean Parnell, GOVERNOR

Rep. Bill Thomas:

Members of the United States Armed Forces train very hard to meet the high standards we set as a nation for excellence. These standards are important to protect the lives of each individual member, but also to protect the fellow Soldiers, Airmen, Marines, and Seamen who go into battle together.

The members of the Armed Forces need to be focused on the mission they are about to execute and not have any distracters that could jeopardize the safety of the team or success of the mission. The number one distraction for deployed military members is family concerns. There is a loop-hole in Alaska Statute that allows child custody hearings to take place while a military member is deployed. This must be stopped.

I fully support the efforts of the Rep. Bill Thomas and the Veterans Caucus to correct this problem by sponsoring House Bill 334. Please protect the troops by allowing them to focus on the mission while deployed. Passing this bill will improve morale and allow families to deal with issues in person between deployments.

Sincerely,

Thomas H. Katkus

Jane,

If you think it is appropriate, I would like to show this 3 min news clip on Military Child Custody to the committee. I've never successfully done this (tried in MVA and the technology didn't work) so I really don't know what I am doing in regards to this. However, the video was shown in the Senate. It just helps illustrate the issue with a real live person who has been affected by it. I'll go with your advice though, if you don't think it would add anything to the bill presentation I'm fine with skipping it.

MEMORANDUM March 30, 2010

SUBJECT: Membership of the State Personnel Board
CSHB 348(JUD) (Work Order No. 26-LS1360\S)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the committee substitute described above. I have one comment.

The bill provides that the governor would be required to appoint nominees from a list of at least three qualified persons submitted by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. Note that this requirement, that the governor appoint board members from a list of persons selected by the chief justice, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations, raises a constitutional question as to whether the legislature may so constrain the governor's ability to choose whom to appoint to an executive board.

The power to appoint members of state boards, commissions, and councils is an executive function to be exercised by the governor. In Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 5 - 6 (Alaska 1976), the Alaska Supreme Court recognized that the Alaska constitution envisioned a strong executive and "that the appointment of executive officers is an executive function. . . ." The legislature may prescribe qualifications for the members of boards and commissions that are reasonably related to either the position or to the aim of the legislation and do not interfere with the governor's appointment power or with qualifications set out in the constitution. Various state courts have reached this same conclusion and have upheld legislative designations of qualifications for public offices, such as memberships on a board or commission. See, e.g., State v. Matassarin, 217 P. 930 (Kansas 1923); State v. Eischen, 76 N.W.2d 385 (Minn. 1956); Humane Society of the United States v. New Jersey Fish and Game Council, 362 A.2d 20 (1976); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); State v. Wells, 112 N.W.2d 601 (S.D. 1961); State v. Millsap, 605 S.W.2d 366 (Tex. App. 1980).

However, the Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups. The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; 1980 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-164-80), September 17.

Nonetheless, at least three Alaska attorney general opinions or letters of advice have accepted that the legislature may prescribe reasonable qualifications for gubernatorial appointments to boards or commissions. 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; Memorandum to Governor Hammond from R. Pegues, August 13, 1979; 1988 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. 883-88-0079), May 24.

In this instance, I cannot say how a court would interpret the reasonableness of a statutory requirement that the governor appoint members of the board from lists of nominees chosen by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court.

If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

 Section 1. AS 39.25.060(a) is amended to read:

(a) The personnel board is composed of five [THREE] members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature meeting in joint session. The governor may make an appointment only from a list of at least three nominees selected by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations. In appointing members under this subsection, the governor shall ensure that the board has at least one member of the political party that had the largest number of registered voters and one member of the political party that had the second largest number of registered voters at the time of the most recent general election at which a governor was elected. The term of office of a member is six years; however, notwithstanding AS 39.05.080(4), the member remains in office after expiration of the term until a successor is confirmed. A vacancy in an unexpired term shall be filled by appointment by the governor for the remainder of the term. The appointment is made from a list of nominees and subject to confirmation in the same manner as a full-term appointment.

 Sec. 2. AS 39.25.060(b) is amended to read:

(b) Members of the board may not be employees of the state. Not more than three [TWO] members of the board may be members of the same political party.

 Sec. 3. AS 39.25 is amended to by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 39.25.064. Prohibited conduct by board members. (a) A member of the personnel board may not, during the person's term of office,

(1) hold or campaign for elective office;

(2) be an officer of a political party or political group;

(3) lobby;

(4) employ a lobbyist; or

(5) assist in lobbying.

(b) In this section,

(1) "political group" has the meaning given to "group" in AS 15.13.400;

(2) "political party" has the meaning given in AS 15.13.400.

 Sec. 4. AS 39.25.070 is amended to read:

Sec. 39.25.070. Powers and duties of personnel board. In addition to the other duties imposed by this chapter, the personnel board shall

(1) approve or disapprove amendments to the personnel rules in accordance with AS 39.25.140;

(2) consider and act upon recommendations for the extension of the partially exempt service and the classified service as provided in AS 39.25.130;

(3) hear and determine appeals by employees in the classified service as provided in AS 39.25.170;

(4) establish its own rules of procedure; three [TWO] members constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and three [TWO] affirmative votes are required for final action on matters acted upon by the board;

(5) elect a chair from its membership;

(6) have the power to administer oaths, subpoena witnesses, and compel the production of books and papers pertinent to a hearing authorized by this chapter;

(7) employ staff members, who shall be in the classified service;

(8) carry out its powers and duties under AS 39.52.

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

MEMBERS OF PERSONNEL BOARD; TRANSITION; STAGGERED TERMS. Notwithstanding AS 39.25.060(a), as amended by sec. 1 of this Act, a member of the personnel board serving on the effective date of this Act remains in office for the duration of the term to which appointed and confirmed. Within 60 days after the effective date of this Act, the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court shall submit to the governor a list of at least six nominees for the two additional seats on the personnel board. The governor shall appoint one member to a five-year term and one member to a six-year term. The governor shall specify the term of each member appointed subject to this section.

Sponsor Statement for HB 348 (Version R)

"An Act relating to membership of the state personnel board."

By Representative Bob Lynn

HB 348 brings a broader representation to the Personnel Board so it can operate, or at least appear to operate, with greater independence when addressing complaints, and carrying out its other powers and duties under AS 39.52 Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act.

The bill increases board membership from three to five members, allowing the governor to make an appointment from a list of at least three nominees selected by the Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations. It also ensures that the board has at least one member of the two parties that received the most votes in a recent election.

The Personnel Board, as currently constructed, lends itself to criticism that it's a creature of the governor rather than an independent body when it comes to investigating Executive Branch ethics complaints. As we know, perception can be the same as reality in the public eye.

HB 348 also prohibits certain conduct by board members and board employees and contractors that can lead to conflicts of interest or at least an appearance of conflict, such as campaigning for elective office; being an officer of a political party, political committee, or group; or lobbying, employing, or assisting a lobbyist.

Like other ethics-related measures, the purpose of this bill is to build a better foundation of trust between the people of Alaska and those they elect to public office.

Sectional Analysis for HB 348 (Version R)

"An Act relating to membership of the state personnel board."

Section 1. Amends AS 39.25.060(a) to increase the membership on the Personnel Board from three to five members. The governor may make an appointment from a list of at least three nominees selected by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations. It ensures that the board has at least one member of the two parties that received the most votes in a recent election. It also requires that a member remains in office after expiration of term until a successor is confirmed.

Section 2. Amends AS 39.25.060(b) to increase the number of board members who can be of the same political party from two to three of the five-member board.

Section 3. Adds new section AS 39.25.064 that prohibits board members and board employees and contractors from certain activities that that relate to possible conflicts of interest or at least an appearance of conflict.

Section 4. Amends AS 39.25.070 to add conforming language stating that three members constitute a quorum and three affirmative votes are required for final action on matter.

Section 5. Amends the uncodified law by adding a new section stating that a member of the personnel board serving on the effective date of this Act remains in office for the duration of the term which appointed and confirmed. Within 60 days of the effective date, the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court shall submit to the governor a list of at last six nominees for the two additional seats on the personnel board. The governor shall appoint one member to a five-year term and one member to a six-year term.

MEMORANDUM March 16, 2010

SUBJECT: Reference to Political Party, Political Committee, and Political Group (CSHB 348(STA); Work Order No. 26-LS1360\E)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Chair of the House State Affairs Committee
Attn: Nancy Manly

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt

Enclosed is the final CS(STA) you requested. I have one comment. In sec. 3, reference is made to "political party, political committee, or political group." These terms are not defined in AS 39.25, although it appears that it might have been intended to reference similar terms that are defined in AS 15.13. In this regard, you may want to contact Alpheus Bullard to clarify this ambiguity.

Enclosure

Chapter 13: State Election Campaigns

Sec. 15.13.400. Definitions.

In this chapter,

(8) "group" means

(A) every state and regional executive committee of a political party; and

(B) any combination of two or more individuals acting jointly who organize for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of one or more elections and who take action the major purpose of which is to influence the outcome of an election; a group that makes expenditures or receives contributions with the authorization or consent, express or implied, or under the control, direct or indirect, of a candidate shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate; a group whose major purpose is to further the nomination, election, or candidacy of only one individual, or intends to expend more than 50 percent of its money on a single candidate, shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate and its actions done with the candidate's knowledge and consent unless, within 10 days from the date the candidate learns of the existence of the group the candidate files with the commission, on a form provided by the commission, an affidavit that the group is operating without the candidate's control; a group organized for more than one year preceding an election and endorsing candidates for more than one office or more than one political party is presumed not to be controlled by a candidate; however, a group that contributes more than 50 percent of its money to or on behalf of one candidate shall be considered to support only one candidate for purposes of AS 15.13.070 , whether or not control of the group has been disclaimed by the candidate;

(15) "political party" means any group that is a political party under AS 15.60.010 and any subordinate unit of that group if, consistent with the rules or bylaws of the political party, the unit conducts or supports campaign operations in a municipality, neighborhood, house district, or precinct;

Chapter 60: General Provisions

Sec. 15.60.010. Definitions.

In this title, unless the context otherwise requires,

(23) "party district committee" means the political party committee that performs the executive function for a region representing an area larger than a precinct and smaller than the state;

(24) "political group" means a group of organized voters which represents a political program and which does not qualify as a political party;

(25) "political party" means an organized group of voters that represents a political program and

(A) that nominated a candidate for governor who received at least three percent of the total votes cast for governor at the preceding general election or has registered voters in the state equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes cast for governor at the preceding general election;

(B) if the office of governor was not on the ballot at the preceding general election but the office of United States senator was on that ballot, that nominated a candidate for United States senator who received at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States senator at that general election or has registered voters in the state equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States senator at that general election; or

(C) if neither the office of governor nor the office of United States senator was on the ballot at the preceding general election, that nominated a candidate for United States representative who received at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States representative at that general election or has registered voters in the state equal in number to at least three percent of the total votes cast for United States representative at that general election;

MEMORANDUM February 8, 2010

SUBJECT: Membership of the State Personnel Board
(Work Order No. 26-LS1360\A)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Attn: Mike Sica

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the work order described above.

You asked for a bill that would make the appointment of Personnel Board (board) members under AS 39.25.060(a) similar to the manner in which public members are appointed to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics under AS 24.60.130(b). You asked that the bill also include provisions addressing (1) the removal of board members, (2) the filling of vacancies and unexpired terms, (3) conflicts of interest, and (4) alternate members. I have a few comments.

Board members; increased membership and a constitutional concern relating to member appointment

The draft increases the number of board members (from three) to five,[1] making the membership of the board more difficult to "capture," and provides that the governor would be required to appoint nominees from a list of at least three qualified persons submitted by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. Note that this requirement that the governor appoint board members from a list of persons selected by the chief justice, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations, raises a constitutional question as to whether the legislature may so constrain the governor's ability to choose whom to appoint to an executive board.

[1] Mike Sica of your staff clarified that the intent of the legislation related to making sure that the board did not operate, or appear to operate, as a rubber stamp in investigating and addressing complaints concerning the governor. More members makes it less likely that (1) a majority of the board would be appointed by a sitting governor and (2) that the membership of the board would be of a single mind in any board proceeding. Because I increased the number of board members, I did not include a provision for alternate members.

The power to appoint members of state boards, commissions, and councils is an executive function to be exercised by the governor. In Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 5 - 6 (Alaska 1976), the Alaska Supreme Court recognized that the Alaska constitution envisioned a strong executive and "that the appointment of executive officers is an executive function. . . ." The legislature may prescribe qualifications for the members of boards and commissions that are reasonably related to either the position or to the aim of the legislation and do not interfere with the governor's appointment power or with qualifications set out in the constitution. Various state courts have reached this same conclusion and have upheld legislative designations of qualifications for public offices, such as memberships on a board or commission. See, e.g., State v. Matassarin, 217 P. 930 (Kansas 1923); State v. Eischen, 76 N.W.2d 385 (Minn. 1956); Humane Society of the United States v. New Jersey Fish and Game Council, 362 A.2d 20 (1976); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); State v. Wells, 112 N.W.2d 601 (S.D. 1961); State v. Millsap, 605 S.W.2d 366 (Tex. App. 1980).

However, the Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups. The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; 1980 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-164-80), September 17.

Nonetheless, at least three Alaska attorney general opinions or letters of advice have accepted that the legislature may prescribe reasonable qualifications for gubernatorial appointments to boards or commissions. 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; Memorandum to Governor Hammond from R. Pegues, August 13, 1979; 1988 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. 883-88-0079), May 24.

In this instance, I cannot say how a court would interpret the reasonableness of a statutory requirement that the governor appoint members of the board from lists of nominees chosen by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court.

Quick notes
I included a provision, sec. 3 of the draft bill (prohibited conduct by board members and board employees and contractors), that relates to possible conflicts of interest and appearances of a conflict of interest. Is this what you had in mind? Please advise.

I did not prohibit a member appointed by the governor from participating in a proceeding that involved that same governor. Such a provision seemed unnecessary given that members are appointed from lists submitted by the chief justice.

I hope that this draft bill is consistent with your intent. If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Personnel board appointments get another look

By SEAN COCKERHAM
scockerham@adn.com
(03/16/10 18:11:01)

Alaska legislators are talking about changing the law so governors can no longer appoint whoever they want to the state personnel board, the panel that dismissed ethics complaints against then-Gov. Sarah Palin on "Troopergate" and many other matters.

Anchorage Republican Rep. Bob Lynn, who has been supportive of Palin, sponsored a bill that would make the governor pick from a list submitted by the chief justice of the state supreme court. Lynn said it would reassure the public.

"It helps protect and insulate the governor from what could be, and usually is, unfair criticism from the public that you have the fox watching the hen house," Lynn said Tuesday, as the bill passed its first committee.

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Les Gara, no fan of Palin's, favors Lynn's House Bill 348. Gara said he thinks some of the people filing ethics complaints against Palin went overboard. But he said the current system casts a lot of doubt about the rulings made by members of the Personnel Board, who he said could be political allies of the governor.

"I did not follow every complaint in any great detail. But you always do wonder whether a personnel board appointed by Republican governors is going to be objective when it looks at conduct by a Republican governor," Gara said.

The three members of the Personnel Board are charged in Alaska law with looking into ethics complaints made against the governor and other members of the executive branch. The current members were all appointed by Republican governors, although two of them aren't registered with a political party.

The board members have six-year terms and only one, Alaska Christian College President Keith Hamilton, was appointed by Sean Parnell, the current governor. Board member Debra English was reappointed by Palin in 2008 and Al Tamagni was appointed in 2006 by Frank Murkowski.

Lynn said he does not think there's been a problem with the Personnel Board. "But there's always the perception out there and, in politics, perception often becomes reality in the public mind," he said.

Current law says only that the board members can't be state employees and no more than two of the three of can be registered with the same political party. They are appointed by the governor and then confirmed by the Legislature.

Lynn's bill would expand the board to five members. He said that would provide more of a broad range of opinion. The panel would also need to include at least one member from each of the top two political parties in the state.

The governor would be required to pick from a list of at least three nominees from the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, although the governor could reject the entire list and ask the chief justice for another.

Gara said called that a loophole and said the governor shouldn't get to keep asking for new nominees over and over if he or she doesn't like the slate presented. But Lynn described it as a way to deal with potential separation of powers issues involved in the Legislature reducing a governor's ability to make appointments .

The attorney general's office raised the separation of powers issue Tuesday. But the Parnell administration didn't object to the bill as it passed from the House State Affairs Committee. The bill next goes to the judiciary committee, chaired by Fairbanks Republican Rep. Jay Ramras. Ramras last year deemed a "whitewash" the report commissioned by the personnel board that found Palin not responsible for any wrongdoing in the so-called Troopergate affair.

Zane Henning, who had two ethics complaints against Palin dismissed, last month testified to a legislative committee that elected officials rather than a governor's appointees should oversee the complaints. His concern seemed to resonate with some legislators. "I'm just wondering is there maybe too close of a relationship there," Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, asked during that hearing.

Assistant Attorney General Judy Bockmon said an independent counsel investigates ethics complaints against the governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general in an effort to separate the Personnel Board from those high-level officials.

The outcome of at least one Personnel Bard case from the Palin era remains a mystery. Independent Counsel Tom Daniel on July 14 found "probable cause" that Palin's legal defense fund violated state ethics law. But the board has taken no public action and the fund's Web site still solicits donations.

Palin critics question ethics rules proposals

PALIN ERA: New regulations would address traveling on the state's dime, paying legal bills.

By LISA DEMER
ldemer@adn.com

(02/08/10 22:44:25)

JUNEAU -- A legislative committee on Monday took up ethics issues that erupted during the Palin administration, but it's not clear whether the panel intends to take any action.

Attorney General Dan Sullivan has proposed state rules establishing when it's appropriate for the state to pay for the travel of family members of the governor or lieutenant governor. Another proposal sets out when the state should pay legal bills for state officials defending against ethics complaints.

Former Gov. Sarah Palin was hit with numerous ethics complaints during her 2 1/2 years in office. She said she quit in part because of what she called frivolous ethics complaints and personal legal bills amounting to an estimated $600,000.

Most of the ethics complaints against Palin were dismissed. But she settled one by reimbursing the state more than $8,000 for her children's air travel.

Some parts of the package Sullivan is proposing go beyond the Palin-era controversies. For instance, another proposed rule change would do away with a requirement for state officials to disclose as gifts any travel for state business paid by others. But they still would have to file travel reports, which would be public.

Sullivan is trying to make the changes through new state regulations, which don't need legislative approval.

Oversight comes from the joint House-Senate Administrative Regulation Review Committee, which examines regulations to make sure they are allowed under state law.

The panel agreed to hold a public hearing on the ethics measures after being pushed by Palin critic Andree McLeod. House leaders also requested it, said state Rep. Wes Keller, R-Wasilla, who is the committee chairman.

LEGAL FEES, FAMILY TRAVEL

Under the proposed rules, the state could cover the costs of defending a public official against ethics complaints if the official were exonerated, Assistant Attorney General Judy Bockmon told the committee.

Travel would be covered if the presence of a family member is required for state business or has a public purpose. The proposal says that would include a state-sponsored event that the family of the governor or lieutenant governor usually attends, or an event in which the family member is representing the state.

State Rep. David Guttenberg, D-Fairbanks, asked Bockmon whether state law gives any guidance on paying for family travel.

It doesn't, she said.

In that case, why try to decide when it's appropriate -- maybe it shouldn't be permitted at all, Guttenberg responded.

That's up to the Legislature, Bockmon said. There might be value to the state for the family to attend. It depends on the nature of the event.

State Rep. Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, said it might just save worry and time for a governor with young children to bring them along.

CRITICS TESTIFY

McLeod, who filed a number of ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, urged the committee to reject the changes.

"Are these changes valid? Do they improve the standards of public service? Do they promote the faith and confidence of the people in this state in their public officers? I submit that they do not," McLeod told the legislative committee.

McLeod said private citizens with questions about whether a public official has crossed a legal or ethical line can't get ethics opinions the way state employees can. So the public has no recourse except filing complaints to get answers, she said.

The Executive Branch Ethics Act is important, and the attorney general shouldn't be trying to change the law, another Palin critic, Zane Henning, told the committee. The Legislature should make any needed changes, he said.

"I object to the entire process that is being pushed through here," Henning said.

The ethics law needs reform, but not in the way the attorney general wants, Henning said. Elected officials, not the governor-appointed Personnel Board, should oversee ethics complaints against state officials, he said.

Both of his complaints against Palin were dismissed. One involved an interview about the vice presidential campaign that she gave to Fox News in her state office; the other concerned the fact she collected state expense payments while living in her own home in Wasilla.

ARM'S-LENGTH INVESTIGATORS

Henning's concerns about the Personnel Board seemed to resonate with legislators.

"I'm just wondering is there maybe too close of a relationship there," state Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, asked during the hearing.

Bockmon told the committee an independent counsel investigates ethics complaints against the governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general in an effort to separate the Personnel Board from those high-level officials.

The committee can't halt the regulations from taking effect during the annual legislative session, but can express disapproval and propose new laws to override any objectionable regulations.

The Department of Law has solicited public comment and held a hearing on the ethics changes, Bockmon said. The period for comment has ended and the department must now decide what to do. It could adopt the provisions as is or with minor changes, or let the matter drop with no action.

The committee hasn't yet decided how to proceed, Keller said.

Costs of dismissed Palin ethics complaints pile up

Personnel board member says tab is "close to about a third of a million dollars."

By SEAN COCKERHAM

The Alaska Personnel Board, clearly frustrated with the pile of ethics complaints filed against Gov. Sarah Palin, wants to publicize the cost of dealing with them.

The personnel board members decided at a Wednesday meeting to work with the attorney general's office on how to make public the cost of addressing each ethics complaint, without violating the board's confidentiality rules.

"We've spent pretty close to about a third of a million dollars, and it's getting to be really expensive," said Al Tamagni, a member of the board.

Also Wednesday, the three-member board dismissed another complaint, this one involving Palin and her political action committee, and heard testimony from a woman who asserted fear of retaliation has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor.

The governor's office said it is the 13th ethics complaint against Palin or her staff that has been resolved without finding of an executive ethics act violation. But Palin has agreed to reimburse the state in order to settle an ethics complaint over 10 state-paid trips taken by her children. A "few more" complaints are pending a decision by the personnel board, the governor's office said.

Andree McLeod, an Anchorage activist who has filed multiple ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, said after the meeting that the board is trying to squash accountability by saying it costs too much.

"The whole way to mitigate all this is for Palin to behave ethically," said McLeod, who filed the complaint that was dismissed by the board on Wednesday.

Valerie Henning told the board that fear of a backlash has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor's practice of collecting per diem for time spent at her home in Wasilla. Henning's husband, Zane, earlier had an ethics complaint dismissed by the board. His complaint alleged Palin violated ethics law by holding national television interviews concerning her run for vice president from the governor's office.

Valerie Henning brought up to the board the statement that Palin's chief of staff, Mike Nizich, made on April 22 after the filing of an ethics complaint against Palin that was released to the press.

"I hope that the publicity-seekers will face a backlash from Alaskans who have a sense of fair play and proportion. I served six previous governors, and I've never seen anything like the attacks against governor Palin," Nizich said in a press release distributed by the governor's office.

Valerie Henning tried to get board members to suggest some alternative to making the ethics complaint, saying "I'm afraid of retaliation, basically."

Palin spokesman Bill McAllister said Nizich was simply asking that Alaskans who have a "sense of fair play and proportion" speak up about what's going on.

"I don't know what she means by retaliation, but certainly some people have been raising their voices in protest of this abuse of the ethics act," McAllister said. "People make these allegations against the governor and they keep getting dismissed and dismissed and dismissed, and some people are saying 'What's going on here?' "

Pro-Palin bloggers have assailed "ankle biter" ethics complainants in writing and KBYR talk radio host Eddie Burke has gone after McLeod on his show, saying he was going to hunt down evidence she was motivated by not getting a state job.

One of the personnel board members, Tamagni, last fall asked a state attorney if the board could charge attorney fees for Alaskans who file "a frivolous or meritless" ethics complaint. It's not clear how the state would judge a complaint frivolous, but charging for them would require changing the law.

Personnel board members spoke Wednesday about possibly pursuing changes in the law regarding their ethics complaint procedures -- such as changing the "thresholds for investigations."

Ethics complainants in the audience asked board chair Debra English for detail after the meeting, but she curtly brushed them off, saying the meeting was over and she wasn't going to say more.

English also refused to answer when a Daily News reporter asked what the board had in mind. She said the reporter should have come before the board and given public testimony in order to get any questions answered from its members.

Members of the personnel board are volunteers appointed by the governor, although all three of the current members were in place when Palin took office in 2006. Palin last year reappointed English to a six-year term but hasn't had a role yet in either of the two other positions, which have terms expiring in 2010 and 2012.

The governor also has the power to remove members of the personnel board, but only for cause.

Memorandum
TO: Representative Bob Lynn
FROM: Chuck Burnham, Legislative Analyst
RE: Background: Selection of Public Members for the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics
LRS Report 10.197

You asked about the history of the selection process for public members of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. Specifically, you asked why the Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, rather than the Legislature, appoints the five public members of the Committee.

As you know, pursuant to § 9 ch 113 SLA 1986, the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics (SCLE) was expanded from seven to nine members in order to increase the number of "public members" (non-legislators) from one to three.[1] Public membership was subsequently expanded pursuant to § 18 ch 127 1992 to comprise five of the nine members of the SCLE. Under the provisions of AS § 24.60.130(b)(3), public members are to be appointed by the Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to confirmation by two-thirds of both chambers of the Legislature.

Changes to the ethics regime of the Legislature, and specifically to the SCLE, in the mid-1980s appear to have been prompted by concerns over a number of investigations of certain Legislators' relationships with lobbyists and businesses seeking to win contracts from the state.[2] We include, as Attachment A, copies of five articles that appeared in the Anchorage Daily News (ADN) between January and July, 1986, that variously detail individual Legislators' financial involvement with lobbyists and to a number of Legislators receiving trips, flights, and other items of significant value by at least two companies seeking state contracts of substantial value.

Our review of committee minutes and newspaper reports from the period in which the expansion of the SCLE was being considered by the Legislature indicates that the increase of public membership was prompted by constituent concerns that the composition of the Committee at that time (six Legislators and one public member) did not sufficiently ensure that ethics violations would be vigorously investigated and punished. Attachment B is an article from the May 8, 1986, edition of the ADN that discusses the passage of the ethics legislation in question (HB 218) by the Senate Finance Committee. In that article, the bill's sponsor, Representative Pat Pourchot, indicates that the appointment of public SCLE members by the Supreme Court was intended to "remove the possibility of charges of 'legislative bias' by providing that public members are initially selected by the head of the judicial branch of government . . . "[3]

[1] Pursuant to AS § 24.60.130(c), "no more than one public member may be a former legislator and no more than two public members of the committee may be members of the same political party."

[2] These changes also occurred on the heels of an unsuccessful attempt to impeach Governor Bill Sheffield, and the Legislature's subsequent overhaul of the ethics laws of the executive branch. It appears reasonable to conclude that those recent activities played some role in both the public's desire for additional representation on the SCLE and the Legislature's willingness to have those members appointed by the Judiciary.

[3] John Lindback, "Senate Panel OKs Ethics Bill," Anchorage Daily News, p. C1, May 8, 1986.

Committee minutes for HB 218 show no significant discussion of or concern over the judicial appointment of public members of the SCLE. Concern over the constitutionality of the bill was briefly discussed in a March 3, 1985, meeting of the House State Affairs Committee. Specifically, members questioned whether the bill violated Article II, Section 12, of the Alaska Constitution, which in part provides that each house of the Legislature "is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members . . ." Representative Pourchot responded that he had obtained a legal opinion on that question and was assured that the bill conformed because, regardless of the composition of the SCLE, pursuant to AS § 24.60.174, sanctions recommended by the Committee require approval of the chamber in which the accused Legislator serves.

SENATOR DISCLOSES TIES TO LOBBYIST

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Tuesday, January 14, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

At the direction of the legislature's ethics committee, an Anchorage senator disclosed on the opening day of the legislative session his personal business ties to a lobbyist and a former municipal official.

Sen. Tim Kelly, a Republican from East Anchorage, disclosed that he holds a 2.5 percent business interest in the Old Anchorage Salmon Bake, a downtown tourist attraction serving seafood to summer visitors.

Ed Dankworth, a former state senator who now lobbies the legislature for Veco International, and Don Smith, a former Anchorage Assembly member, also own shares of the business, Kelly said. Smith owns 50 percent while Dankworth also owns a 2.5 percent share, he said.

Kelly disclosed the information after he sought a formal opinion from the ethics committee on whether he needed to make the business ties public. Information included in the opinion said Kelly purchased his share of the business last year for $5,000.

The Select Committee on Legislative Ethics is composed of three members of the Senate, three members of the House and one member of the public.

In a strongly worded opinion completed last September and released for the first time Monday, the committee said Kelly's business ties to Dankworth and Smith were sufficient to constitute a "substantial financial matter" under the state ethics code.

"I disagree with the opinion," Kelly said. He and Dankworth do not have any say in the business' management and they've never even met to talk about the business, he said.

"But I asked for the opinion,endered it and so I complied," Kelly said.

The committee ed that it is reasonable for its members to take a strict view of the ethics code requirements.

"It would be better to err on the side of requiring too much disclosure, rather than too little," according to the opinion.

The committee said his relationship with Smith, a veteran Anchorage Assembly member who lost a re-election bid last October, should be disclosed because municipal governments in Alaska can be construed as subsidiaries of the state. The ethics code requires disclosure by legislators of economic ties to officials from other branches of government.

"While municipalities may technically not be 'another branch' of government, they are in fact creatures of the state. Municipalities have no independent existence under the U.S. Constitution, as do the federal and state governments; they derive their existence and their powers solely from state government," the committee said.

The committee also argued that municipalities are dependent on the state for financial aide. "... There is frequent lobbying of legislators by municipal officials on behalf of their cities," the panel stated.

Two House members were the only other legislators to file disclosure statements on Monday -- a mostly uneventful opening day of the 1986 session.

Rep. Pat Pourchot, D-Anchorage, disclosed that he owns a partnership interest in a Juneau residence with oil company lobbyist Jim Palmer. Pourchot also said he and his wife, Alaska State Board of Education member Janie Leask, share ownership of bank accounts and property.

House Majority Leader Don Clocksin, D-Anchorage, reported that he is buying a house in Juneau from an employee of the Legislative Affairs Agency. He also mentioned that he and his wife, Alaska Women's Commission Chairman Betty Ramage, have numerous "close economic associations."

The filing of ethics code disclosure statements and showing up for opening day floor sessions in the House and Senate were the only real deadlines faced by legislators on Monday.

Floor sessions included the ceremonial actions of notifying the governor that the two houses had officially convened. Also, House Speaker Ben Grussendorf and Senate President Don Bennett referred new bills to committees for their consideration.

The 120-day session convened in an atmosphere of calm, with some legislators predicting that election-year politics may encourage a polite session. Most incumbents are expected to run for re-election to the legislature later this year. Two senators -- Bennett and Edna DeVries of Palmer -- have announced plans to run for lieutenant governor.

TRIP STIRS QUESTIONS ON ETHICS COMPUTER COMPANY HOSTING LAWMAKERS

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Saturday, March 22, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

Transalaska Data Systems, the company that is hosting two of Alaska's most powerful legislators in San Francisco this weekend, is trying to sell computer equipment to the state that could cost $1 million to $3.5 million.

Deputy Commissioner of Administration Jim Shea said Friday that he has been studying the purchase of a so-called "intelligence network" for the state's extensive computer system and that Transalaska is one of three companies offering such equipment.

An intelligence network allows different brands of computers to communicate quickly and easily. Purchase of the equipment could speed up communications between state workers whose departments have purchased different brands of computers, Shea said.

No competitive bidding process has started yet because it needs further study and the state's revenue picture has been uncertain, he said.

How much the system costs depends on how fancy a system the state wants or can afford, according to Shea. But he estimated that it could cost from $1 million to $3.5 million.

"We're in the process of learning about it and getting a good cost- benefit analysis on it before we move," he said.

House Finance Committee Chairman Al Adams and Senate Finance Committee Co- Chair John Sackett flew to San Francisco on Friday for a demonstration of the computer equipment. Also on the plane was Ray Gillespie, Gov. Bill Sheffield's chief of staff.

Because of the jobs they hold, all three men are considered to be highly influential in the state's budget process, including the insertion of funds in the budget for major equipment purchases of any type.

Transalaska is marketing the equipment in conjunction with Tandem Computers of California.

Adams was quoted before he took the trip as saying that Transalaska lobbyist Kim Hutchinson of Juneau handled the arrangements and would be paying his expenses.

Hutchinson has declined to say whether he or his employers are paying the bills for the legislators. But he did confirm that he invited all three men to attend the computer demonstration.

Gillespie, meanwhile, said he was treating the trip as a weekend off. He took leave from his job and paid his own way, according to John Greely, Sheffield's press secretary.

No state records were available Friday that showed state funds paid for Sackett and Adams. Aides to both legislators said they didn't know who paid the bills.

The state's ethics law for legislators says a lawmaker may not accept or receive a gift of travel if it is "intended as a reward or inducement" for an official action.

It also states that "a gift of travel and hospitality within the state received by a member of the legislature in obtaining information on matters of legislative concern is not prohibited ..." The law provides no specific exemption for a gift of travel out of state.

Neither the House nor Senate chairmen of the legislature's ethics committee would comment on the matter Friday.

Senate President Don Bennett and Rep. Mike Miller, D-Juneau, said they shouldn't comment in case a complaint about the trip is filed with the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

"If I gave my opinion now I'd have to disqualify myself if it came before the committee," said Bennett, R-Fairbanks. Miller agreed.

Transalaska officials could not be reached Friday for comment on the Adams and Sackett trip. President Robbie Mattson and Chairman Clint Pickett were reported to be out of Anchorage until Monday.

The trip to California is only part of Transalaska's lobbying effort this session.

Rep. H.A. "Red" Boucher, chairman of the House Committee on Telecommunications, said he attended a Feb. 6 dinner for legislators in Juneau hosted by Transalaska and Tandem Computers at the Baranof Hotel. No mention was made of the computer equipment but the two companies announced to legislators that they had formed an association with one another, Boucher said.

"I wasn't that excited about it" Boucher said, arguing that the state needs to carefully study its computer needs and past purchases before making a major new equipment buy. The dinner made so little an impression on him, Boucher said, that he couldn't remember for sure which other legislators atended.

His impression at the dinner was that he was being hosted by "just another outfit from Silicon Valley hustling Alaska," Boucher said.

PRIVATE JET, FREE RIDES : LEGISLATORS USE ENSERCH PLANE

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Sunday, April 6, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

Members of the Alaska Legislature quietly ride for free on a private jet owned by Enserch Corp., a Texas-based company that is a major player in state politics.

The chief pilot of the seven-passenger jet is Enserch's registered lobbyist, Dana Pruhs.

Enserch and its subsidiaries do millions of dollars worth of business with the state and local governments. The company, its subsidiaries and officers were the fourth biggest contributor to legislative candidates in 1984, giving almost $53,000 to 38 candidates.

Both company officials and legislators who have accepted free rides on the jet defended the practice. It is unclear whether any of the trips are legally or ethically questionable.

But concern about the legal or ethical aspects of the trips is one of the reasons legislators said they do not like to talk about the trips -- even with their colleagues. They also said the free travel could suggest a conflict of interest when they vote on legislation affecting the company.

Some recent examples of lawmakers taking advantage of the Enserch jet include:

Senate President Don Bennett and Senate Finance Committee Vice-chairman John Ringstad, both Fairbanks Republicans, flew from Juneau to Whitehorse, Y.T., and back on March 15 and 16.

Sen. Bettye Fahrenkamp, D-Fairbanks, a member of the Senate Resources Committee, said she has accepted three free rides from Ensearch in the past eight years.

Sen. Joe Josephson, D-Anchorage, said he has accepted free rides two or three times between Juneau and Anchorage.

Seven members of a legislative basketball team were given free trips aboard the Enserch jet this session to play charity games in Homer and Kenai.

Lobbyist Pruhs flies the Anchorage-based Dessault-Breguet Falcon 10 to Juneau numerous times each legislative session. Legislators said vacant seats are commonly available to them for trips in either direction.

"I don't see it as an attempt to buy favoritism with any legislators. That isn't company policy," said G. Wilson Hughes, president of Enserch Alaska Services Inc. The company is a subsidiary of Dallas-based Enserch Corp.

Pruhs said in a recent interview the free rides for lawmakers are clearly legal under the legislative ethics code.

Pruhs said the plane is a business tool. "We use it to go all over the state. We use it like a car."

Chris Christensen, a lawyer who worked for the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics last year, said he couldn't comment on the legality of the trips under the ethics code. He can provide such opinions only to legislators or legislative staffers covered by the law, he said.

The legislature passed the current ethics law in 1984. According to the code, legislators may not solicit or accept a gift of travel, entertainment or hospitality if the "gift was intended as a reward or inducement for an official action" by a legislator. But it also says a gift of travel within Alaska is allowed for legislators "obtaining information on matters of legislative concern."

Legislators said they frequently accept free rides on corporate aircraft to go to oil fields and remote mining areas. They do it, they said, when necessary to gather information in the absence of commercial transportation.

Bennett said he flew with Enserch on state business. He and an aide, Sandy Nussbaum, flew to Whitehorse for a conference between Alaska legislators and Yukon government leaders. The state paid the $160 round-trip commercial airfare of the other legislators who participated in the conference that weekend. Bennett said he saved the state money.

"I don't know of anybody in this arena whose vote would be influenced by accepting a ride," Bennett said.

Ringstad, who was aboard the same flight, said he and his girlfriend flew to Whitehorse for a weekend pleasure trip. Ringstad said they were invited by Pruhs. He and Pruhs are old friends who grew up together in Fairbanks, Ringstad said.

A free trip from Enserch wouldn't influence his vote on any matter of concern to the company, Ringstad said.

"You can try and legislate a lot of stuff but you're never going to legislate morality and honesty," he said.

Jane Barcott of the Alaska Public Offices Commission said legislators who receive free travel probably should claim it as income on their annual conflict of interest statements.

The conflict of interest forms of two legislators known to have taken rides last year -- Fahrenkamp and Josephson -- do not list the trips as income. Both said they were unaware of any requirement to report the trips.

Josephson said he rode the jet once this session and "once or twice" last year. He said the trips were "a matter of catching a ride when they're going in my direction."

Other legislators rode the plane with him, Josephson said, but he refused to identify them.

Josephson said free travel aboard the jet would not compromise his votes on matters of concern to Enserch. The company has never asked him for anything, he said.

"I once asked Dana what they were interested in," Josephson said. "He said, 'Susitna.' As you well know, I've been critical of Susitna."

A joint venture including Ebasco Services, an Ensearch subsidiary, has a $65.5 million state contract to work on the proposed Susitna hydroelectric project. The contract is likely to be drastically cut because the huge project appears dead, according to Alaska Power Authority spokeswoman Marnie Isaacs.

Ebasco has been paid about $14 million in other Alaska Power Authority contracts since 1981, according to APA records.

Fahrenkamp said she flew with Enserch on a fishing trip to Cold Bay last summer and has "bummed a ride" home to Fairbanks at other times. She said the Enserch jet recently helped her make a speedy exit from Juneau when she needed to see her dentist.

"It's so damned inconvenient to get in and out of this place," she said. In another case she took the ride because it was more convenient than the available commercial flight, she said.

"The plane was going and I took a ride on it. And I don't feel the least bit guilty," Fahrenkamp said.

Fahrenkamp, Josephson and the other legislators argued that their free trips saved the state money. A round-trip ticket between Juneau and Anchorage costs $352.

But other legislators are uneasy about accepting such trips.

Both Sens. Jan Faiks, R-Anchorage, and Vic Fischer, D-Anchorage, said they wouldn't accept the free rides. Constituents, they said, might think the trips could influence legislative actions.

"It just wouldn't look right," Faiks said.

Another legislator who was concerned about the trips was Rep. Steve Frank, R-Fairbanks. Frank was one of three legislators who flew with Enserch in early March to a basketball game in Homer. Traveling with Frank were Reps. Roger Jenkins, R-Anchorage, and Al Adams, D-Kotzebue.

Rep. Mike Navarre, D-Kenai, who organized the trip, said the game was to raise money for a community college building in Homer. He said donations from Alaska Airlines and MarkAir, as well as the use of the Enserch jet, were necessary.

Frank said he felt uncomfortable about accepting the free ride so he asked a lawyer for the legislature's ethics committee if it would be a conflict of interest.

"He said he didn't see any problem with it as long as it was for a charitable cause," Frank said.

But, he said, he wouldn't accept a ride on the jet just because a seat was available and it was going his way.

"I like to stay away from anything that would appear to be inappropriate," he said.

On March 13, the Enserch jet took Navarre, Jenkins, Rep. David Thompson, R-Kodiak, Rep. John Sund, D-Ketchikan, and Rep. Dick Shultz, R-Delta Junction, to Kenai for a benefit game against a team of Seattle Seahawks, Navarre said. The next day the plane brought them back to Juneau. The game was a benefit for a government education program for high school students, Navarre said.

He said he "considered the perception of this before I went around arranging it." Because Enserch was being asked to donate the use of its plane to a charitable cause, he decided it would be appropriate, Navarre said.

Frank didn't go to the Kenai game. Part of the reason, he said, was that he still didn't feel comfortable about riding on the Enserch jet.

Enserch Alaska President Hughes said his company and its subsidiaries have a business interest in any legislation or state spending that affects the construction and oil industries in Alaska. The company's interests include architectural, engineering and oil field service subsidiaries.

One subsidiary, Frank Moolin and Associates, designed and managed construction of the $363 million utilidor -- a sewer and water system -- in Barrow.

Enserch's generosity in providing plane rides to politicians made headlines in 1983 when newly elected Gov. Bill Sheffield accepted a free trip from Enserch to attend oil company fund-raisers in the Lower 48. After a public outcry over the trips, Sheffield reimbursed the company for the plane flight.

INVESTIGATIONS OF PIGNALBERI TAKE 2 TRACKS

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Wednesday, July 9, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

A legislative ethics committee investigation of Rep. Marco Pignalberi's secret loan from lobbyist Lew Dischner may well be delayed until after this year's elections.

But the Alaska Public Offices Commission is scheduled Thursday to discuss whether Pignalberi made complete and timely public disclosures of other business dealings.

Pignalberi, an Anchorage Republican seeking re-election to a House seat representing East Anchorage, is one of six candidates for public office this year whose conflict-of-interest statements are still considered to be incomplete, according to commission staff member Jane Barcott.

In the most serious cases, the public offices commission could ask Lt. Gov. Stephen McAlpine to remove a candidate's name from the Aug. 26 primary election ballot, Barcott said.

At issue for the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics -- scheduled to meet in Juneau today to begin deliberations on a complaint about the Pignalberi loan -- is a provision in the legislative ethics code that holds in abeyance investigations of complaints during the 60 days preceding state primary or general elections.

The 60-day period prior to the primary election began June 27, according to Hayden Kaden, a staff aide to the Select Committee. The complaint against Pignalberi, received by the committee just a few days before June 27, was filed by Anchorage resident Joseph Brewer.

According to legislators, the 60-day provision was included in the legislative ethics code to discourage the filing of politically motivated complaints during election seasons.

Kaden and members of the committee are prohibited by state law from speaking in public about cases pending before them.

But Kaden, commenting on his interpretation of the law and not on specifics of the Pignalberi case, said an investigation could be carried out within the 60-day period if the committee initiates a complaint of its own.

But because the legislature's ethics code calls for investigations and discussions of them to be conducted in closed meetings, no public announcement would be made if the committee takes such action, he said.

The fact that the committee is scheduled to discuss Pignalberi today should, by law, be confidential. But Brewer's complaint is the first formal complaint ever filed against a legislator under the 2-year-old ethics code and the public agenda for today's meeting states the committee will consider a formal complaint.

Pignalberi on Tuesday said he has considered asking the committee to delay its investigation but he needed to talk more about it with his lawyer. He also said that he had not thought yet about asking that proceedings before the ethics committee be conducted in public, which by law he can request.

"I really haven't thought about that," he said. "I've been busy trying to gear up for a campaign."

Rep. Pat Pourchot, one of three House members on the ethics committee, said the 60-day period would be in effect again right after the primary because the general election is scheduled for Nov. 4.

"I have a question whether it is ever physically possible to act on a complaint during elections," Pourchot said.

The Daily News on June 21 reported that Pignalberi, a week before the 1984 election, paid off two federal tax liens totalling $18,000 after receiving a secret loan from Dischner, a prominent lobbyist in Juneau.

Pignalberi, completing his first two-year term, twice failed to report the Dischner loan to the ethics committee as required by the ethics code. The code requires legislators each year to disclose for publication in House and Senate journals their financial ties to each other and to lobbyists.

In addition, Pignalberi didn't disclose the loan on conflict-of-interest statements he was required to file in 1985 and 1986 with the public offices commission. On June 20, he filed an amended financial statement with the commission after being asked about the Dischner loan by the Daily News. He listed Dischner as his creditor for those two years.

Pignalberi has declined to say under what terms he received the loan, though he said he paid it off "earlier this year."

At the same time as he filed his amendment about the Dischner loan he informed the public offices commission about his involvements in two businesses, Pacific Transporation Services and Pacific Consulting Services.

According to Barcott, the commission asked him to furnish a list of clients who did more than $100 worth of business with both his businesses. They have not received a reply and that is the reason he is on the agenda for Thursday's meeting, she said.

Tim Petumenos, Pignalberi's lawyer, said his client believes the information does not need to be filed with the commission until July 10. It will be filed by that date, Petumenos said.

Pignalberi on Tuesday said he is the primary stockholder of Pacific Consulting Services and that Pacific Transporation Services exists only on a business license.

DISCHNER FILES SUIT OVER LOAN LOBBYIST CLAIMS HE ACTED UNDER DURESS

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Tuesday, July 22, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

Lobbyist Lewis Dischner sued the Teamsters Federal Credit Union on Monday to stop it from making him pay $240,000 to retire a 1984 loan he cosigned for Anchorage Sen. Joe Josephson.

In a Superior Court lawsuit, Dischner alleges that when credit union officials asked him to guarantee the loan, they misrepresented the repayment terms and the collateral required of Josephson.

Dischner, who served as the Teamsters' lobbyist until 1985, claims he was pressured into cosigning the promissory note. He also suggests that money for the Democratic senator's loan came from Teamster pension funds in a financial arrangement that may violate federal law.

The suit says Dischner agreed to cosign the loan because he believed he would suffer "economic duress" if he did not.

Neither the credit union's lawyer, Michael Price of Anchorage, nor Josephson returned phone calls from the Daily News on Monday to answer questions about Dischner's claims.

The credit union, which earlier this year was taken over by federal regulators because of growing concern about problem loans, on July 2 demanded that Dischner pay $240,000 to recover the full amount of the note due, plus interest.

Although informal inquiries were made to Josephson about making a payment on the 2-year-old note, no such formal demand has ever been made of him, Josephson has said.

The senator first disclosed the matter on July 9, when he told the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics that Dischner guaranteed the Oct. 30, 1984, loan without his knowledge. He sent the letter to explain why he had not disclosed his financial tie to the veteran lobbyist, as required by law, on state conflict-of-interest forms or in the Senate Journal.

In an interview on July 9, Josephson said he needed the loan to pay for more than $150,000 in debt he assumed when his law firm dissolved. The credit union responded with a loan that requires him to make no payments until a formal demand is issued, but required him to pledge his house as collateral.

So far, Dischner has not disputed Josephson's claim that he didn't know anyone had cosigned the loan. According to Dischner's lawyer, Douglas Pope, the lobbyist says he signed the promissory note sometime in November or December, as long as two months after Josephson signed it.

At that time, Dischner "relied upon the intentional, reckless, negligent and|or innocent misrepresentations and omissions of representatives and agents" of the credit union, according to the suit.

As a result, Dischner should not be obligated to make any repayment and is instead entitled to damages exceeding $500,000, the suit states.

Dischner claimed that agents of the credit union approached him in late 1984 to cosign the loan on a temporary basis.

The agents told Dischner that the loan to Josephson "was not in compliance with certain lending requirements of the credit union and the law, insofar as the loan was undercollateralized, and that plaintiff's signature was needed for a limited period of time while the credit union made final arrangements for a long-term loan to Joe Josephson that met the lending requirements on collateral," according to the suit.

Credit union officials told Dischner that a long-term loan for Josephson had already been approved and that the note he should sign would be "rescinded when the long-term loan documents were executed," the suit states.

Dischner further claims he was told that the loan was made to refinance Josephson's house, that it was secured by a deed of trust to the senator's home, and that additional collateral would be pledged by Josephson at a later time.

"Defendant credit union specifically informed plaintiff at this time that no steps would ever be taken to enforce the note against plaintiff," the suit states.

Dischner claims that he was not notified that the credit union never converted the loan into a long-term arrangement.

"In addition, no steps were ever taken by defendant to remove plaintiff as a signatory to the note executed by Joe Josephson, nor to accept the pledge or assignment of additional collateral to secure the note," the suit states.

Pope was not willing Monday to provide specific details about two of the lawsuit's most significant claims -- that Dischner was pressured into cosigning the loan and that the funds could be traced back to Teamster pension money.

"Those are two things that will have to come out during the course of litigation," Pope said.

The lawsuit states that Dischner had "sufficient information to believe, and did reasonably believe, that if he did not agree to the proposal that he affix his signature to the note that ... he would suffer significant economic loss. Accordingly, plaintiff affixed his signature to the note under compulsion and economic duress."

At the time the note was signed, Dischner had been aligned with the Teamsters for years as their chief operative in Juneau. In addition to serving as Teamsters Local 959's lobbyist, he was a member of the union, a participant in its pension plan and a member of the credit union.

Josephson was not a member of the Teamsters.

Dischner has "sufficient information to believe, and does believe, that the funds utilized by the credit union to advance the amounts reflected in the note accepted from Joe Josephson, were funds earmarked from the Alaska Teamsters-Employer Pension Trust ...," according to the suit. "Had plaintiff been aware of this at the time of the transaction, he would have refused to affix his signature to the note."

The suit suggests that a loan cosigned by Dischner that also could be tied to Teamster pension money could be viewed as violating federal laws governing the investing of union pension funds. The laws are designed to protect workers' retirement funds -- the Teamster pension trust now holds more than $400 million -- from high-risk investments and opportunistic loans to "parties in interest," such as union officials and their investment advisers.

Jerry Allen, a comptroller for the Alaska Teamster Employer Service Corporation, said Monday that the pension trust occasionally purchased certificates of indebtedness from the credit union. The certificates, which were sold at terms ranging from 30 days to a year, provided a favorable interest return for the pension fund, Allen said.

Certificates of indebtedness are similar to conventional certificates of deposit in a bank, Allen said.

"We had no discretion as to how those monies were used," Allen said.

Allen suggested that Dischner's claim is probably not valid because the loan didn't directly come from the pension fund.

According to Allen, if Dischner's claim that he is a "party in interest" because of his relationship to the union is valid, it would apply to other Teamsters who received credit union loans at about the same time the pension fund bought certificates of indebtedness from the credit union.

Dischner's lawsuit is the latest development in a long list of recent controversies for the veteran lobbyist.

He has been identified as a principle target in an ongoing federal grand jury investigation of contract fraud and bid-rigging in the North Slope Borough. And a direct loan he made to another legislator, Rep. Marco Pignalberi of Anchorage, resulted in an order to strike Pignalberi's name from the August primary ballot.

Pignalberi didn't publicly disclose the loan for two years and the Alaska Public Offices Commission recommended that his name be removed from the ballot. A judge stayed Lt. Gov. Stephen McAlpine's order removing Pignalberi's name and that issue is still pending in court.

SENATE PANEL OKS ETHICS BILL

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Thursday, May 8, 1986

Author: JOHN LINDBACK Daily News reporter ; Staff

The Senate Finance Committee endorsed a House bill Wednesday that that would increase public representation on the legislative ethics committee.

The legislation, passed by the House last year, boosts the size of the committee from seven to nine members.

Currently the public is outnumbered by legislators 6-1 on the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. Under the bill, three of the nine committee members would be public citizens and six would be legislators.

The ethics committee is charged with conducting investigations of ethics violations by legislators and their employees and providing advisory opinions on ethical matters. When the ethics code was passed in 1983 advocates argued that more public membership was necessary to boost public confidence in the committee, especially since almost all of the committee's business is carried out in closed meetings.

Rep. Pat Pourchot, D-Anchorage and prime sponsor of the bill, argued that it will "accommodate public sentiment to expand public membership." In addition, he said, it calls for the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court to appoint the public members.

The current law allows the ethics committee itself to appoint the lone public member.

The bill will "remove the possibility of charges of 'legislative bias' by providing that public members are initially selected by the head of the judicial branch of government," Pourchot said.

Supreme Court Chief Justice Jay Rabinowitz wrote legislators last year and said that, although he did not seek the task, he did not object to appointing the public members.

"The role of chief justice in the selection process would not impair the ability to participate in any appeals deliberations which might be generated by the work of the committee," Rabinowitz said.

In addition to the public membership change, the bill would also reduce the penalty assessed against someone who knowingly files a false ethics charge against a legislator from a felony to a misdemeanor.

"The current penalty has been criticized as extreme and acting as a deterrent to the filing of legitimate complaints of possible violations," Pourchot said. "It is also ironic that while there exists a felony penalty for 'false' accusation, there is no statutory penalty for legislators violating the ethics law."

All six members of the Senate Finance Committee present at Wednesday's meeting recommended that the bill pass the full Senate on a floor vote. They are Co-Chairman Jan Faiks, R-Anchorage; Frank Ferguson, D-Kotzebue; Dick Eliason, R-Sitka; Paul Fischer, R-Soldotna; Rick Halford, R-Chugiak and Jay Kerttula, D-Palmer. Co-Chairman John Sackett, R-Ruby, missed the vote.

The Finance Committee's "do pass" recommendations are a signal that the bill is likely to pass the Senate if it reaches the floor before Monday, the last day of the legally limited 120-day session. A quick House concurrence on minor Senate changes to the bill would send it to the governor for his signature.

In past years Senate leaders have disagreed with the House, pushing for fewer public members than the House wanted. But Senate Rules Committee Chairman Tim Kelly, R-Anchorage, said Pourchot's bill will be sent to the floor before adjournment and it is likely to pass.

"The group of Senate leaders this year thinks there ought to be more public membership on the committee. It's that simple," Kelly said.

Sec. 39.25.060. Personnel board.

(a) The personnel board is composed of three members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature meeting in joint session. The term of office of a member is six years. A vacancy in an unexpired term shall be filled by appointment by the governor for the remainder of the term. The appointment is subject to confirmation in the same manner as a full-term appointment.

(b) Members of the board may not be employees of the state. Not more than two members of the board may be members of the same political party.

(c) A board member may be removed by the governor only for cause.

(d) A member of the board may receive a per diem allowance and transportation expenses incurred in carrying out the member's duties.

Sec. 39.25.070. Powers and duties of personnel board.

In addition to the other duties imposed by this chapter, the personnel board shall

(1) approve or disapprove amendments to the personnel rules in accordance with AS 39.25.140 ;

(2) consider and act upon recommendations for the extension of the partially exempt service and the classified service as provided in AS 39.25.130;

(3) hear and determine appeals by employees in the classified service as provided in AS 39.25.170 ;

(4) establish its own rules of procedure; two members constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and two affirmative votes are required for final action on matters acted upon by the board;

(5) elect a chair from its membership;

(6) have the power to administer oaths, subpoena witnesses, and compel the production of books and papers pertinent to a hearing authorized by this chapter;

(7) employ staff members, who shall be in the classified service;

(8) carry out its powers and duties under AS 39.52.

Sec. 39.25.080. Personnel records confidential; exceptions.

(a) State personnel records, including employment applications and examination and other assessment materials, are confidential and are not open to public inspection except as provided in this section.

(b) The following information is available for public inspection, subject to reasonable regulations on the time and manner of inspection:

(1) the names and position titles of all state employees;

(2) the position held by a state employee;

(3) prior positions held by a state employee;

(4) whether a state employee is in the classified, partially exempt, or exempt service;

(5) the dates of appointment and separation of a state employee;

(6) the compensation authorized for a state employee; and

(7) whether a state employee has been dismissed or disciplined for a violation of AS 39.25.160 (l) (interference or failure to cooperate with the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee).

(c) A state employee has the right to examine the employee's own personnel files and may authorize others to examine those files.

(d) An applicant for state employment who appeals an examination score may review written examination questions relating to the examination unless the questions are to be used in future examinations.

(e) In addition to any access to state personnel records authorized under (b) of this section, state personnel records shall promptly be made available to the child support services agency created in AS 25.27.010 or the child support enforcement agency of another state. If the record is prepared or maintained in an electronic data base, it may be supplied by providing the requesting agency with access to the data base or a copy of the information in the data base and a statement certifying its contents. The agency receiving information under this subsection may use the information only for child support purposes authorized under law.

Article 04. COMPLAINTS; HEARING PROCEDURES

Sec. 39.52.310. Complaints.

(a) The attorney general may initiate a complaint, or elect to treat as a complaint, any matter disclosed under AS 39.52.210 , 39.52.220, 39.52.250, or 39.52.260. The attorney general may not, during a campaign period, initiate a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for election to state office.

(b) A person may file a complaint with the attorney general regarding the conduct of a current or former public officer. A complaint must be in writing, be signed under oath, and contain a clear statement of the details of the alleged violation.

(c) If a complaint alleges a violation of AS 39.52.110 - 39.52.190 by the governor, lieutenant governor, or the attorney general, the matter shall be referred to the personnel board. The personnel board shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for election to state office as provided in (j) of this section if the complaint is initiated during a campaign period. The personnel board shall retain independent counsel who shall act in the place of the attorney general under (d) - (i) of this section, AS 39.52.320 - 39.52.350, and 39.52.360(c) and (d). Notwithstanding AS 36.30.015 (d), the personnel board may contract for or hire independent counsel under this subsection without notifying or securing the approval of the Department of Law.

(d) The attorney general shall review each complaint filed, to determine whether it is properly completed and contains allegations which, if true, would constitute conduct in violation of this chapter. The attorney general may require the complainant to provide additional information before accepting the complaint. If the attorney general determines that the allegations in the complaint do not warrant an investigation, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint with notice to the complainant and the subject of the complaint.

(e) The attorney general may refer a complaint to the subject's designated supervisor for resolution under AS 39.52.210 or 39.52.220.

(f) If the attorney general accepts a complaint for investigation, the attorney general shall serve a copy of the complaint upon the subject of the complaint, for a response. The attorney general may require the subject to provide, within 20 days after service, full and fair disclosure in writing of all facts and circumstances pertaining to the alleged violation. Misrepresentation of a material fact in a response to the attorney general is a violation of this chapter. Failure to answer within the prescribed time, or within any additional time period that may be granted in writing by the attorney general, may be considered an admission of the allegations in the complaint.

(g) If a complaint is accepted under (f) of this section, the attorney general shall investigate to determine whether a violation of this chapter has occurred. At any stage of an investigation or review, the attorney general may issue a subpoena under AS 39.52.380 .

(h) A violation of this chapter may be investigated within two years after discovery of the alleged violation.

(i) The unwillingness of a complainant to assist in an investigation, the withdrawal of a complaint, or restitution by the subject of the complaint may, but need not in and of itself, justify termination of an investigation or proceeding.

(j) The personnel board shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for state office received during a campaign period to the complainant unless the governor or lieutenant governor, as appropriate, permits the personnel board to assume jurisdiction under this subsection. If the personnel board receives a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate during the campaign period, the personnel board shall immediately notify the subject of the complaint of the receipt of the complaint, of the suspension of the personnel board's jurisdiction during the campaign period, and of the candidate's right to waive the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection. The candidate may, within 11 days after the personnel board mails or otherwise sends notice of the complaint to the candidate, notify the personnel board that the candidate chooses to have the personnel board proceed with the complaint under this section. If the candidate does not act within that time or if the candidate notifies the personnel board that the candidate is not waiving the suspension of jurisdiction, the personnel board shall return the complaint to the complainant with notice of the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection and of the right of the complainant to file the complaint after the end of the campaign period.

(k) A campaign period under this section begins on the later of 45 days before a primary election in which the governor or lieutenant governor is a candidate for state office or the day on which the individual files as a candidate for state office and ends at the close of election day for the general or special election in which the individual is a candidate or on the day that the candidate withdraws from the election, if earlier. For a candidate who loses in the primary election, the campaign period ends on the day that results of the primary election showing that another individual won the election are certified.

Sec. 39.52.320. Dismissal before formal proceedings.

If, after investigation, it appears that there is no probable cause to believe that a violation of this chapter has occurred, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint. The attorney general shall communicate disposition of the matter promptly to the complainant under AS 39.52.335 (c) and to the subject of the complaint.

Sec. 39.52.330. Corrective or preventive action.

After determining that the conduct of the subject of a complaint does not warrant a hearing under AS 39.52.360 , the attorney general shall recommend action to correct or prevent a violation of this chapter. The attorney general shall communicate the recommended action to the complainant and the subject of the complaint. The subject of the complaint shall comply with the attorney general's recommendation.

Sec. 39.52.335. Summary of disposition of complaints and review by personnel board.

(a) When the attorney general initiates or receives a complaint under AS 39.52.310 , the attorney general shall immediately forward a copy of the complaint to the personnel board.

(b) Each month, the attorney general shall file a report with the personnel board concerning the status of each pending complaint and the resolution of complaints that have been closed since the previous report.

(c) If a complaint is dismissed under AS 39.52.320 or resolved under AS 39.52.330 , the attorney general shall promptly prepare a summary of the matter and provide a copy of the summary to the personnel board and the complainant. The summary is confidential unless the

(1) dismissal or resolution agreed to under AS 39.52.320 or 39.52.330 is public; or

(2) superior court makes the matter public under (h) of this section.

(d) Within 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, a complainant may file comments with the personnel board regarding the disposition of the complaint.

(e) At its next regular meeting that begins more than 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, the personnel board shall review the summary and comments, if any, filed by the complainant. The personnel board may compel the attendance of the subject of the complaint or the complainant at the meeting and may compel the production of documents. Attendance may be by teleconference. The attorney general or the attorney general's designee shall be available to respond to questions from the personnel board concerning the disposition of the complaint.

(f) After review of the summary, the personnel board may issue a report on the disposition of the complaint. If the matter is confidential and the board determines that publication of the name of the subject is in the public interest, the report may include a recommendation that the matter be made public.

(g) If the summary is confidential under (c) of this section,

(1) comments filed by the complainant, if any, are confidential;

(2) the personnel board shall conduct the review of the summary in executive session; and

(3) the personnel board report, if any, is confidential; the personnel board shall make available to the public an expurgated copy of a confidential report with sufficient deletions and editing to prevent disclosure of the identity of the persons involved in the matter.

(h) If the disposition of a complaint is not made public and the personnel board report under (f) of this section includes a recommendation that the matter be made public, an interested party may file an action against the state in superior court requesting that the court make public the complaint, the attorney general's disposition of the complaint, and the personnel board report. The court may order the matter or portions of the matter made public if the court determines that

(1) the dismissal or resolution of the complaint was clearly contrary to the requirements of this chapter;

(2) one or more of the allegations in the information to be released is supported by substantial evidence;

(3) the matter concerns the public interest; and

(4) release of the information will not infringe on any protected rights or liberties of the subject.

Sec. 39.52.340. Confidentiality.

(a) Except as provided in AS 39.52.335 , before the initiation of formal proceedings under AS 39.52.350 , the complaint and all other documents and information regarding an investigation conducted under this chapter or obtained by the attorney general during the investigation are confidential and not subject to inspection by the public. In the case of a complaint concerning the governor, lieutenant governor, or attorney general, all meetings of the personnel board concerning the complaint and investigation before the determination of probable cause are closed to the public. If, in the course of an investigation or probable cause determination, the attorney general finds evidence of probable criminal activity, the attorney general shall transmit a statement and factual findings limited to that activity to the appropriate law enforcement agency. If the attorney general finds evidence of a probable violation of AS 15.13, the attorney general shall transmit a statement to that effect and factual findings limited to the probable violation to the Alaska Public Offices Commission. The attorney general and all persons contacted during the course of an investigation shall maintain confidentiality regarding the existence of the investigation.

(b) It is not a violation of this section for a person to contact an attorney or to participate in a criminal investigation.

(c) The subject of the complaint may, in writing, waive the confidentiality protection of this section.

Sec. 39.52.350. Probable cause for hearing.

(a) If the attorney general determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing violation of this chapter or a violation that cannot be corrected under AS 39.52.330 has occurred, or that the subject of a complaint failed to comply with a recommendation for corrective or preventive action, the attorney general shall initiate formal proceedings by serving a copy of an accusation upon the subject of the accusation. The accusation shall specifically set out the alleged violation. After service, the accusation is a public document open to inspection. Except as provided in AS 39.52.370 (c), all subsequent proceedings are open to the public.

(b) The subject of the accusation shall file an answer with the attorney general within 20 days after service of the accusation, or at a later time specified by the attorney general. If the subject of the accusation fails to timely answer, the allegations are considered admitted.

(c) If the subject of the accusation denies that a violation of this chapter has occurred, the attorney general shall refer the matter to the personnel board, which shall notify the chief administrative law judge (AS 44.64.010), who shall appoint an administrative law judge to serve as a hearing officer to conduct a hearing.

(d) If the subject of the accusation admits a violation of this chapter, the attorney general shall refer the matter to the personnel board to impose penalties under AS 39.52.410 , 39.52.440, and 39.52.450, as appropriate.

Sec. 39.52.360. Hearings.

(a) The hearing officer may convene a prehearing conference to set a time and place for the hearing, and for stipulation as to matters of fact and to simplify issues, identify and schedule prehearing matters, and resolve other similar matters before the hearing.

(b) The hearing officer may administer oaths, hold hearings, and take testimony. Upon application by a party to the hearing, the hearing officer may issue subpoenas under AS 39.52.380 .

(c) The attorney general shall present the charges before the hearing officer. At a hearing, the attorney general has the burden of demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that the subject of the accusation has, by act or omission, violated this chapter.

(d) The parties to a hearing are the attorney general and the subject of the accusation. The subject of an accusation may be represented by counsel. Each party has an opportunity to be heard and cross-examine witnesses, who shall testify under oath.

(e) The Administrative Procedure Act does not apply to hearings under this section, except as provided in AS 39.52.380 .

(f) Technical rules of evidence do not apply, but the hearing officer's findings must be based upon reliable and relevant evidence. All testimony and other evidence taken at the hearing must be recorded and the evidence maintained. Copies of transcripts of the hearing record are available to the subject of the accusation at the subject's expense; however, upon request, a copy of the recording of the hearing must be furnished without charge to the subject of the accusation.

(g) At the conclusion of the formal hearing, the hearing officer may direct either or both parties to submit proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation to be filed within 10 days after the conclusion of the hearing.

(h) Within 30 days after the conclusion of a formal hearing, the hearing officer shall serve a written report on the personnel board and the parties, unless the personnel board grants an extension of time. The report must contain the officer's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation. The hearing officer shall submit the record to the personnel board.

Sec. 39.52.370. Personnel board action.

(a) Within 10 days after receipt of the hearing officer's report, either party may protest the officer's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation, and, if a protest is filed, shall serve a copy on the other party. Oral argument before the personnel board must be provided only if requested by either party. The board chair shall set the deadline for submission of requests for oral argument, and set the dates for submission of briefs and oral argument before the board, if requested.

(b) The board may issue subpoenas under AS 39.52.380, and may, for good cause shown, augment the hearing record, in whole or in part, or hold a hearing de novo.

(c) The personnel board shall review each report submitted by a hearing officer and shall either adopt or amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation of the officer. Deliberations of the personnel board must be conducted in sessions not open to the public.

(d) If the personnel board determines that a violation occurred, it may impose the penalties in AS 39.52.410, 39.52.440, and 39.52.450, as appropriate. If the board determines that no violation occurred, the board shall issue a written order of dismissal.

(e) The personnel board secretary shall promptly notify the parties and the public officer's designated supervisor of the board's action.

(f) The subject of the accusation may appeal the personnel board's decision by filing an appeal in the superior court as provided in the Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Sec. 39.52.380. Subpoenas.

(a) As provided in AS 39.52.310 (g), 39.52.360(b), and 39.52.370(b), the attorney general, independent counsel retained under AS 39.52.310 (c), a hearing officer, the subject of an accusation, and the personnel board may summon witnesses and require the production of records, books, and papers by the issuance of subpoenas.

(b) Subpoenas must be served in the manner prescribed by AS 44.62.430 and Rule 45 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure. Failure or refusal to obey a subpoena issued under this chapter is punishable as contempt in the manner provided by law and court rule. The superior court may compel obedience to the subpoena in the same manner as prescribed for obedience to a subpoena issued by the court.

Sec. 39.52.390. Service.

Service of an accusation must be accomplished in accordance with Rule 4 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure. Service of any other pleading, motion, or other document must be accomplished in accordance with Rule 5 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure.

Article 05. ENFORCEMENT; REMEDIES

Sec. 39.52.410. Violations; penalties for misconduct.

(a) If the personnel board determines that a public employee has violated this chapter, it

(1) shall order the employee to stop engaging in any official action related to the violation;

(2) may order divestiture, establishment of a blind trust, restitution, or forfeiture; and

(3) may recommend that the employee's agency take disciplinary action, including dismissal.

(b) If the personnel board determines that a nonsalaried member of a board or commission has violated this chapter, it (1) shall order the member to refrain from voting, deliberating, or participating in the matter; (2) may order restitution; and (3) may recommend to the appropriate appointing authority that the member be removed from the board or commission. A violation of this chapter is grounds for removal of a board or commission member for cause. If the personnel board recommends that a board or commission member be removed from office, the appointing authority shall immediately act to remove the member from office.

(c) If the personnel board determines that a former public officer has violated this chapter, it shall

(1) issue a public statement of its findings, conclusions, and recommendation; and

(2) request the attorney general to exercise all legal and equitable remedies available to the state to seek whatever relief is appropriate.

(d) If the personnel board finds a violation of this chapter by a public officer removable from office only by impeachment, it shall file a report with the president of the Senate, with its finding. The report must contain a statement of the facts alleged to constitute the violation.

Sec. 39.52.420. Disciplinary action for violation.

(a) In addition to any other cause an agency may have to discipline a public employee, an agency may reprimand, demote, suspend, discharge, or otherwise subject an employee to agency disciplinary action commensurate with the violations of this chapter. This section does not prohibit the review of a disciplinary action in the manner prescribed by an applicable collective bargaining agreement or personnel statute or rule.

(b) An agency may initiate appropriate disciplinary action in the absence of an accusation under this chapter or during the pendency of a hearing or personnel board action.

Sec. 39.52.430. Actions voidable.

(a) In addition to any other penalty provided by law, a state grant, contract, or lease entered into in violation of this chapter is voidable by the state. In a determination under this section of whether to void a grant, contract, or lease, the interests of third parties who could be damaged may be taken into account. The attorney general shall give notice of intent to void a state grant, contract, or lease under this section no later than 30 days after the personnel board's determination of a violation under this chapter.

(b) In addition to any other penalty provided for by law, the state may require a state loan received in violation of this chapter to become immediately payable.

(c) Any state action taken in violation of this chapter is voidable, except that the interests of third parties and the nature of the violation may be taken into account. The attorney general may pursue any other available legal and equitable remedies.

(d) The attorney general may recover any fee, compensation, gift, or benefit received by a person as a result of a violation of this chapter by a current or former public officer. Action to recover under this subsection must be brought within two years after discovery of the violation.

Sec. 39.52.440. Civil penalties.

The personnel board may impose on a current or former public officer civil penalties not to exceed $5,000 for a violation of this chapter. A penalty imposed under this section is in addition to and not instead of any other penalty that may be imposed according to law.

Sec. 39.52.450. Payment of twice the financial benefit.

The personnel board may, in addition to the civil penalties described in this chapter, require a current or former public officer who has financially benefited a person in violation of this chapter to pay to the state up to twice the amount that the person realized from the violation.

Sec. 39.52.460. Criminal sanctions additional.

To the extent that violations under this chapter are punishable in a criminal action, that sanction is in addition to the civil remedies set out in this chapter.

SPONSOR STATEMENT AND BILL ANALYSIS
HB 355 – CRIMINAL FINES FOR ORGANIZATIONS

"An Act relating to criminal fines for organizations."

HB 355 closes a loophole. An organization may not be imprisoned for its criminal acts; only a fine may be levied as punishment. Under current law, the court may impose the greater of (1) the maximum fines set out in the schedule under AS 12.55.035(c)(1), (2) three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant, or (3) three times the pecuniary damage or loss caused by the defendant to another. Under the particular factual situations of some crimes, the treble penalties are not applicable. One instance would be if a corporation bribes legislators to stop a piece of legislation (such as tax legislation), but the legislation passes anyway. In this case, there is neither a loss to the government nor a gain to the corporation. HB 355 would allow the court to issue fines in the amount of three times the pecuniary gain sought by the defendant or three times the pecuniary damage or loss to another sought by the defendant. These would provide alternatives to statutorily set fines.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

HB 355 raises the potential fine for conviction of a crime by an organization. It does so by providing that the fine may be three times the pecuniary gain that was sought by the defendant or others by the crime, or three times the potential loss that the defendant sought by the commission of the offense. There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

*175 POLICING THE CORPORATE CITIZEN: ARGUMENTS FOR PROSECUTING ORGANIZATIONS

Abstract

Alaska's corporate criminal liability statute exposes organizations to criminal liability for the actions of their agents, as long as agents intended the organization to benefit from their actions. Organizations cannot disclaim liability through codes of conduct or corporate policies, and their liability extends beyond any merger, consolidation, or dissolution. This Article argues that criminally prosecuting an organization is advantageous because it allows greater criminal fines and carries collateral consequences. In addition, criminally prosecuting an organization may be easier than criminally prosecuting an individual because Fifth Amendment privileges and hearsay obstacles do not apply. Corporations accrue the knowledge of their agents, so proving specific intent may also be less difficult. Finally, this Article describes considerations that should be weighed when deciding whether to prosecute a particular organization. The author argues that Alaska's corporate criminal liability statute is a powerful tool that, where appropriate, should be used more often.

Conclusion 210

Introduction

When charging cases, Alaska prosecutors too often overlook crucial potential defendants: the organizations [FN1]--corporations, companies, partnerships, and other entities--on whose behalf individual wrongdoers act. Alaska law casts a wide net for liability by making organizations liable for the criminal conduct of their agents, [FN2] and by authorizing larger criminal fines against convicted organizations than 177 against convicted individuals. [FN3] These considerations beg the obvious question: why are organizations not investigated and prosecuted more frequently? The most likely explanation is that few prosecutors are aware of how far-reaching an organization's criminal liability extends. In addition, correctly or incorrectly, some prosecutors likely view the prosecution of an organization as an unwanted hassle--the prosecution would be different than their typical cases and may well involve high-paid corporate counsel unfamiliar with criminal practice. [FN4] Finally, some prosecutors might mistakenly believe that organizational prosecutions punish innocent shareholders rather than actual wrongdoers. [FN5] Thus, it has not been common practice in state prosecutor offices to charge organizations. [FN6]

The Author hopes this Article will change these views and encourage prosecutors to examine their caseloads for potential organizational defendants. There are significant benefits to be gained by charging organizations rather than individuals: courts will likely impose larger fines against organizations, prosecution of an organization may effect change within the organization, and negative publicity and other collateral consequences will pressure the organization to settle. Furthermore, should the case go to trial, the defense will not be able to protect organizations' records or utilize certain other evidentiary tools to hamstring the prosecution's presentation of evidence.

The aftermath of the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill provides a good illustration of why prosecuting an organization is often superior to prosecuting an individual wrongdoer. The 1989 grounding of the tanker Exxon Valdez spilled approximately eleven million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound. [FN7] Following the grounding, the State of Alaska prosecuted Joseph Hazelwood, the captain of the ill-fated vessel. [FN8] Hazelwood was convicted by a jury of negligent discharge of oil [FN9] but 178 received only a conditionally suspended sentence. [FN10] Conversely, the United States prosecuted Exxon, ultimately resulting in a negotiated plea agreement and a combined criminal fine of one hundred million dollars. [FN11] The latter was a better use of prosecutorial resources and obtained a better result. [FN12]

It is particularly common for organizations to be defendants in several niche areas of Alaska criminal law. For example, Title 4 criminalizes various aspects of alcohol-related behavior. [FN13] Bush pilots who knowingly or negligently allow passengers to carry alcohol aboard their flights can expose their air carrier to criminal liability. [FN14] Titles 8 and 16 criminalize violations of the state's hunting and fishing laws and regulations. [FN15] Fishing guides who assist their clients by knowingly or negligently violating state fishing regulations expose their employers, such as lodges or guiding outfits, to criminal liability. [FN16]

These principles also apply to the more "traditional" crimes defined in Title 11 of the Alaska Criminal Code. One well-publicized example of such a prosecution was that of Whitewater Engineering Corporation. [FN17] Gary Stone, a Whitewater employee, was killed in an 179 avalanche at a Whitewater jobsite near Cordova. [FN18] Prosecutors charged the corporation and its president, Thom A. Fischer, with manslaughter because key employees failed to heed avalanche warnings and failed to observe necessary safety precautions. [FN19] Although charges against Fischer were ultimately dismissed, the company pled no contest to a charge of criminally negligent homicide. [FN20]

This Article examines criminal liability of organizations under Alaska law. Part I begins with the historical development of organizational criminal liability in the United States and Alaska. Part II covers the current contours of organizational criminal liability, as codified in the Alaska Statutes and interpreted by Alaska courts. Part III discusses the various consequences typically flowing from a conviction. Additionally, Part IV explores practical considerations for prosecutors, and Part V explores charging considerations for prosecutors who decide to file charges against an organization. Within these sections and in the Conclusion, this Article explains why it is advantageous to prosecute organizations as opposed to solely prosecuting the individual wrongdoers.

I. Historical Underpinnings

Courts were the first to recognize corporations as legal entities capable of suing and being sued. [FN21] Early decisions established that corporations could be sued in tort. In Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore R.R. Co. v. Quigley, [FN22] the United States Supreme Court explained in detail the policy considerations that mandated this result. [FN23] Quigley sued the railroad for libel due to the conduct of one of its 180 employees. The company argued that a corporation could only act within the limits of its charter and therefore could not be held liable for any acts of its agents that exceeded those limits. The Court rejected this argument because it would allow corporations to do business and interact with the public while escaping liability when corporate agents, conducting corporate business, injure members of the public. [FN24] By the latter part of the nineteenth century, corporate tort liability was no longer in dispute and lawsuits against corporations were commonplace. [FN25] The law imputed tortious intent from the agent to the corporation, making the corporation liable for actual damages. The courts would not, however, impute the intent necessary to award punitive damages for any injuries absent a showing of wrongdoing by the corporation itself. [FN26]

Corporate criminal liability grew from these civil liability roots. Courts slowly acknowledged that corporations could be criminally liable for the conduct of their agents. For example, in Commonwealth v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge, [FN27] the Massachusetts Supreme Court upheld the indictment of a corporation for a public nuisance. [FN28] In 1899, the same court affirmed that corporations could be guilty of criminal contempt in Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Commonwealth. [FN29] Regarding corporate criminal liability, the court stated:

> 181 We think that a corporation may be liable criminally for certain offenses, of which specific intent may be a necessary element. There is no more difficulty in imputing to a corporation specific intent in criminal proceedings than in civil. A corporation cannot be arrested and imprisoned in either civil or criminal proceedings; but its property may be taken, either as compensation for a private wrong or as punishment for a public wrong. [FN30]

The United States Supreme Court affirmed the general principle of corporate criminal liability in New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. v. United States, [FN31] in which it upheld convictions of the railroad corporation for paying illegal rebates. [FN32] The Court applied the principles governing civil liability and held that the acts of agents are imputed to their employers, who may be penalized when the employees act within the scope of their employment. [FN33] Without expressly mentioning the legal concept of respondeat superior, the Court was using it to impute criminal liability to the corporation from the acts of its agents. Numerous Ninth Circuit cases have endorsed this principle. [FN34]

Courts in Alaska slowly recognized organizational criminal liability. The Alaska federal district court first addressed corporate criminal liability in United States v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n. [FN35] There, the court considered the defendant corporation's indictment for fishing violations. The corporation took the position that it could not be indicted for a felony because corporations cannot be imprisoned, a punishment for a felony. [FN36] The court disagreed, pointing out that a corporation may be fined just like an individual, [FN37] that such a penalty may be levied for 182 acts which would result in imprisonment for individuals, [FN38] and that there was no reason a corporation should escape such punishment. [FN39] Essentially, the district court came to the same conclusion that the Massachusetts Supreme Court reached fifty years earlier in Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge [FN40]-- criminal conduct and criminal intent can be imputed to an organization from its agents. [FN41]

The Alaska legislature codified organizational criminal liability in 1978 when it revised the state criminal code according to the recommendations of the Alaska Criminal Code Revision Commission. [FN42] The first version of section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes proposed by the Commission was very limited. [FN43] The Commission extended criminal liability only to corporations and only in instances when the alleged offense was a violation, a misdemeanor, or otherwise defined so as to clearly indicate a legislative intent to impose criminal liability on a corporation. [FN44] The statute also applied to a company if the conduct was "engaged in, authorized, solicited, requested, commanded or knowingly tolerated by" the corporation's board of directors or a "high managerial agent." [FN45]

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The Commission greatly expanded the scope of the preliminary draft in the course of its deliberations. Significantly, the Commission extended criminal liability to "organizations," [FN46] and the definition of the 183 term was nearly identical to the current definition of the term. [FN47] The Commission also changed the requirements for imposing liability under the first subparagraph to the disjunctive, thus imposing liability if the act was committed by the employee in the scope of his employment or to benefit the organization. [FN48] The legislature ultimately rejected this construction, however, and required that the act be committed both in the scope of the employment and to benefit the organization. The version of the statute ultimately passed by the legislature mirrors the current version of the statute. [FN49]

II. Current Contours of Organizational Liability

An organization, once constituted, has a legal identity distinct from its owners, officers and directors. [FN50] It is, by statute, an artificial, legal "person." [FN51] As such, an organization may commit crimes and may be charged as a defendant in criminal cases. [FN52] The criminal liability of organizations is defined in section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes:

> (a) Except as otherwise expressly provided, an organization is legally accountable for conduct constituting an offense if the conduct
> (1) is the conduct of its agent, and
> (A) within the scope of the agent's employment and in behalf of the organization; or
> (B) is solicited, subsequently ratified, or subsequently adopted by the organization; or
> (2) consists of an omission to discharge a specific duty of affirmative performance imposed on organizations by law.
> 184 (b) In this section "agent" means a director, officer, or employee of an organization or any other person who is authorized to act in behalf of the organization.

The Alaska Court of Appeals described the essence of this liability in State v. ABC Towing. [FN53] The decision contrasts the theories of organizational criminal liability, set forth in section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes, with the better known theories of accomplice criminal liability, set forth in section 11.16.110 of the Alaska Statutes. [FN54] In drawing this comparison, the court of appeals noted organizations face broader criminal liability than individuals because organizations are liable for conduct of their agents that owners, members, officers or directors do not know about until after the fact. [FN55]

The kinds of entities subject to such liability are also defined by statute: "'[O]rganization' means a legal entity, including a corporation, company, association, firm, partnership, joint stock company, foundation, institution, government, society, union, club, church, or any other group of persons organized for any purpose." [FN56] As such, organizations are broadly exposed to criminal liability for the acts of their agents. This poses an obvious problem for organizations, whose main purpose is to pool resources, maximize profit potential, and limit the liability of those individuals involved. [FN57] At cross purposes with this last principle, Alaska law imposes criminal liability in cases where individual conduct, when appropriately construed as corporate conduct, runs afoul of state criminal law.

Many critics question whether organizations should be prosecuted at all and argue that such prosecutions punish innocent shareholders rather than the actual wrongdoer. The Ninth Circuit provided a succinct rebuttal to that suggestion in United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp:

> Legal commentators have argued forcefully that it is inappropriate and ineffective to impose criminal liability upon 185 a corporation, as distinguished from the human agents who actually perform the unlawful acts . . . particularly if the acts of the agents are unauthorized. . . . But it is the legislative judgment that controls, and "the great mass of legislation calling for corporate criminal liability suggests a widespread belief on the part of legislators that such liability is necessary to effectuate a regulatory policy." [FN58]

The crux of the argument is that organizational criminal liability prompts organizations to more rigorously police their agents. Regardless of whether this is true, the existence of corporate and, more generally, organizational criminal liability is beyond debate. [FN59]

A. Alaska Jurisprudence

Most examples of organizational criminal liability in Alaska occur under section 11.16.130(a)(1)(A) of the Alaska Statutes--conduct of an agent that is done in the scope of the agent's employment and on behalf of the organization. [FN60]

The Alaska appellate courts have discussed the substance of organizational criminal liability only twice. [FN61] In State v. ABC Towing, [FN62] the court of appeals was called on to determine whether a towing company, formed as a sole proprietorship, could be prosecuted for violating a state pollution law, based on an employee's illegal discharge of gasoline. The issue for the court was whether a sole proprietorship is an "organization" as defined in section 11.81.900 of the Alaska Statutes. [FN63] The court held that it was not, because a sole proprietorship is the mere alter ego of the sole proprietor. [FN64] In other words, there is no legal 186 distinction between the sole proprietor and the proprietorship; to prosecute the proprietorship, the state must charge the proprietor. [FN65]

The court of appeals provided more recent guidance in State v. Greenpeace, Inc. [FN66] The State prosecuted and convicted Greenpeace, Inc. for bringing a Greenpeace ship, the ~~M/V Arctic Sunrise, into~~ state waters without a state-approved oil spill contingency plan or a certificate of financial responsibility. [FN67] Following the jury's guilty verdicts against the corporation, the district court granted a defense motion for acquittal and set the convictions aside. [FN68] The court of appeals affirmed the district court based on findings that Greenpeace, Inc., a United States corporation, was not in charge of the ship and did not control its operators. [FN69] According to the court, the prosecution charged the wrong parties. [FN70] The case involved Stichting Phoenix, [FN71] a Dutch foundation that owned the Arctic Sunrise, and Stichting Marine Services (SMS), a second Dutch foundation that operated it. [FN72] SMS chartered the ship to Greenpeace International, a third Dutch entity, that owns the name "Greenpeace." [FN73] Greenpeace International licenses this name to independent environmental organizations around the world including Greenpeace, Inc. in the United States. [FN74] In 2004, Greenpeace International agreed to let Greenpeace, Inc. use the Arctic Sunrise for an anti-logging campaign. [FN75] SMS supplied the crew and was also responsible for making sure the ship complied with all local regulatory requirements. [FN76] The prosecution argued that SMS and the Arctic Sunrise 187 captain were agents of Greenpeace, Inc. and, therefore, Greenpeace, Inc. was liable for the criminal conduct. [FN77] The court of appeals disagreed:

> A person or organization does not qualify as the authorized agent of a principal unless the principal controls or has the right to control the purported agent. The State offered no evidence that Greenpeace, Inc., controlled how (or if) SMS or [the captain] operated the Arctic Sunrise or complied with Alaska's requirements for nontank vessels. [FN78]

The prosecution also argued that Greenpeace, Inc. ratified or adopted the criminal conduct of SMS and the Arctic Sunrise and was therefore liable for their conduct. [FN79] Again, the court of appeals disagreed. The court held that adoption or ratification requires the principal's "awareness of the misconduct and some action to ratify or adopt the misconduct." [FN80] It found that the prosecution had not produced any evidence Greenpeace, Inc. knew of the illegal conduct or took any actions to ratify or adopt that conduct. [FN81]

Though the court does not explicitly say, its decision suggests that SMS, or arguably Greenpeace International, was the proper defendant. [FN82] This holding nevertheless begs the question of whether Alaska could effectively prosecute either of these foreign entities in state court. Service of process on these entities would be problematic, [FN83] and even if service were achieved, the entities would likely argue that the Alaska state 188 courts lack personal jurisdiction over them. [FN84] Finally, it is difficult to imagine how the state could effectively enforce any sentence ultimately imposed by its courts.

Collectively, ABC Towing and Greenpeace, Inc. confirm the existence of organizational criminal liability under state law. These decisions do little, however, to define the contours and limitations of that liability and, in fact, highlight problems with the existing laws. ABC Towing carves out an exemption for sole proprietorships. [FN85] Greenpeace is also problematic in that it illustrates the ease with which organizations might compartmentalize their operations or duplicate themselves and thereby thwart criminal prosecution. [FN86] These are shortcomings legislators need to address if the prosecution of organizations is to be effectively and consistently utilized.

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Given the paucity of pertinent Alaska jurisprudence regarding organizational criminal liability, Alaska courts would likely rely on relevant federal authority. [FN87] Federal cases frequently acknowledge that a 189 corporation can act only through its officers, agents, and employees. [FN88] Courts therefore hold that a corporation may be liable for the acts of its officers, employees, and other agents even though the questioned act may be illegal, contrary to specific company policy, or not expressly authorized beforehand by the corporation. [FN89]

B. Existence of Organization Policies Prohibiting the Criminal Conduct and the Requisite Quantum of Benefit

Federal cases hold that an organization may be found guilty of a criminal offense as long as the employee was motivated, at least in part, to benefit the organization. [FN90] It follows that organizations often attempt to absolve themselves of liability by relying on corporate policies that preclude criminal conduct. These attempts have generally been unsuccessful. The Ninth Circuit addressed such an effort in the context of Sherman Act prosecutions. [FN91] In Hilton Hotels Corp., [FN92] charges were premised on proof that the hotel's purchasing agent threatened a supplier with the loss of the hotel's business unless the supplier paid an assessment to a trade association of which the hotel was a member. [FN93] Hotel personnel testified that company policy required purchasing 190 supplies solely on the basis of price, quality, and service, and they had specifically instructed the purchasing agent not to boycott suppliers. [FN94] The Ninth Circuit held that the hotel could not insulate itself from criminal liability by adopting general instructions not to participate in a boycott if it did not take sufficient actions to enforce those instructions. [FN95] The fact remained that the hotel authorized a purchasing agent to act on its behalf and the agent exercised complete authority as to those responsibilities and, pursuant to that authority, added the hotel's buying power to the force of the boycott. [FN96] Other circuits have taken a similar position when employees act contrary to company policy. [FN97]

An important corollary is that courts generally permit defendants to admit evidence of corporate policies or instructions that forbid the conduct at issue to support an argument that an agent was acting outside the scope of employment or to the principal's detriment. The Ninth Circuit summarized this view:

> [A] corporation may be liable for acts of its employees done contrary to express instructions and policies, but that the 191 existence of such instructions and policies may be considered in determining whether the employee in fact acted to benefit the corporation. Merely stating or publishing such instructions and policies without diligently enforcing them is not enough to place the acts of an employee who violates them outside the scope of his employment. It is a question of fact whether measures taken to enforce corporate policy in this area will adequately insulate the corporation against such acts . . . [FN98]

Other courts have reached similar rulings. [FN99]

It is not necessary that the organization actually accrue a benefit from the agent's actions for criminal liability to attach. In Beusch, [FN100] the Ninth Circuit rejected a corporation's argument that it could not be liable if the criminal conduct did not in fact benefit the corporation. [FN101] The Fourth Circuit's decision in United States v. Automated Medical Laboratories, Inc. [FN102] is frequently cited on this point--the court affirmed a jury's conviction of American Medical Laboratories for falsifying logbooks and records required to be maintained by the Federal Drug Administration. [FN103] In Automated Medical Laboratories, the court held that benefit was an evidential fact, stating:

> [W]hether the agent's actions ultimately redounded to the benefit of the corporation is less significant than whether the agent acted with the intent to benefit the corporation. The basic purpose of requiring that an agent have acted with the intent to benefit the corporation, however, is to insulate the corporation from criminal liability for actions of its agents which be inimical to the interests of the corporation or which may have been undertaken solely to advance the interests of that agent or of a party other than the corporation. [FN104]192 These cases collectively illustrate that whether the agent's conduct benefits the organization is a question of fact for the jury. The cases also demonstrate that appellate courts will let convictions stand so long as there is some evidence that the organization gained some benefit. In comparison, criminal conduct by an agent falling outside the scope of employment will not be imputed to the organization where the conduct solely benefits the agent. Such was the case in Standard Oil Co. of Texas v. United States, [FN105] in which the Fifth Circuit reversed convictions against two corporate defendants because the criminal acts by the employees, while benefiting themselves, actually injured the corporation. [FN106]

Alaska cases contemplating the application of respondeat superior liability in the context of tort claims have echoed the holding of Standard Oil. Notable among these are Taranto v. North Slope Borough, [FN107] Northern Fabrication Co., Inc. v. Arco, Inc., [FN108] and Ondrusek v. Murphy. [FN109] All three cases apply the Restatement (Second) of Agency section 228 criteria to determine whether an agent acted in the scope of his employment. Pursuant to section 228, conduct is only in the scope of employment if--among other requirements--it is done at least in part to serve the employer. Thus, in Northern Fabrication Co., Inc., the Alaska Supreme Court reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant corporations and held that the corporations could only negate the plaintiff's claim of vicarious liability for the theft of equipment by the defendants' employees if the corporations could prove they did not control the employees' actions and the employees acted solely in furtherance of their own personal motives. [FN110]

These cases demonstrate that an organization cannot insulate itself from liability with general policies or guidance that forbid the conduct at issue. However, an organization can use policies or guidance in an effort to convince a jury that the organization took sufficient action to prevent the wrongful conduct and should not be liable for the actions of an agent. Moreover, the organization will not be liable for conduct that an agent takes solely for his or her own benefit, or that is inimical to the organization's interests.

*193 C. Collective Corporate Knowledge

For a time, specific intent crimes that require proof of knowing or intentional conduct were difficult to apply against large or diverse organizations. Organizations tend to compartmentalize their operations and decision-making between different units or divisions. Therefore the requisite mens rea or conduct is often not present in any one individual, making imputing mens rea to the organization difficult. Many courts have resolved this problem through the collective corporate knowledge theory best described by the First Circuit in United States v. Bank of New England. [FN111]

> The acts of a corporation are, after all, simply the acts of all of its employees operating within the scope of their employment. The law on corporate criminal liability reflects this. . . . Similarly, the knowledge obtained by corporate employees acting within the scope of their employment is imputed to the corporation. Corporations compartmentalize knowledge, subdividing the elements of specific duties and operations into smaller components. The aggregate of those components constitutes the corporation's knowledge of a particular operation. It is irrelevant whether employees administering one component of an operation know the specific activities of employees administering another aspect of the operation . . . [FN112]

This line of reasoning enables prosecutors to impute the summed knowledge of various employees to the organization as a whole. [FN113]

*194 D. Effect of Merger, Consolidation, and Dissolution

Any liability imputed to an organization will generally survive the organization's merger, consolidation, or dissolution. The common law analogized the dissolution of an organization (either directly, or by merger or consolidation) to the death of a natural person, [FN114] meaning that dissolved, merged, or consolidated organizations could not be prosecuted. [FN115]

State statutes that continue the legal existence of these entities have eroded this common law principle. It is now generally true that organizations can be prosecuted (or sued civilly) following their dissolution, merger or consolidation. In Melrose Distillers, Inc. v. United States, [FN116] the United States Supreme Court discussed this abrogation of the common law. Prosecutors indicted three related corporations for violations of the Sherman Act. [FN117] While the indictments were pending, the corporations dissolved and became new divisions in a single, separate corporation. [FN118] The district court and court of appeals held that the dissolution of the original corporations did not abate the indictments. [FN119] The Supreme Court affirmed, looking to both Maryland and Delaware law and finding that the states had statutes "saving" claims against dissolved corporations. [FN120] The Court interpreted these statutes to include criminal charges under the Sherman Act. [FN121] Other courts have come to the same conclusion respecting corporations and partnerships organized under the laws of other states. [FN122]

195 There is no analogous holding in Alaska case law. The closest case on point, Gossman v. Greatland Directional Drilling, Inc., [FN123] discusses the viability of civil claims brought against a dissolved corporation for negligent conduct during the corporation's existence. [FN124] Greatland dissolved in 1993 following the purchase of its assets by Anadrill, a distinct corporation. [FN125] In 1995, plaintiff Gossman was injured while working for Anadrill at one of the facilities Anadrill purchased from Greatland. [FN126] The injury was caused by a piece of equipment that had been negligently modified by a Greatland employee years before the corporation's dissolution. [FN127] In 1996, Gossman filed negligence claims against Greatland. [FN128] The Alaska Supreme Court looked to section 10.06.678 of the Alaska Statutes--a survival statute for claims against corporations--to determine whether any provision abrogated the common law abatement theory. [FN129] At the time (and currently), section 10.06.678, in pertinent part, provided:

> (a) A corporation that is dissolved voluntarily or involuntarily continues to exist for the purpose of winding up its affairs, defending actions against it, and enabling it to collect and discharge obligations, dispose of and convey its property, and collect and divide its assets. A dissolved corporation does not continue to exist for the purpose of continuing business except so far as necessary for winding up the business.
> (b) An action or proceeding to which a corporation is a party does not abate by the dissolution of the corporation or by reason of proceedings for winding up and dissolution of the 196 corporation. A corporation that is dissolved voluntarily or involuntarily may not commence a court action, except for a court action under [section] 10.06.675. [FN130]

The court reviewed the legislative history of section 10.06.678 and examined treatment of similar statutes in other jurisdictions before deciding claims do not abate against a dissolved corporation. [FN131]

Gossman does not address criminal prosecutions. However, the court's analysis in this civil case mirrors the analysis the Supreme Court used in Melrose Distillers in a criminal context. [FN132] There is no reason to believe an Alaska court would analyze the issue any differently in the context of a criminal case. Moreover, Alaska courts routinely rely on federal authorities when interpreting Alaska law that has no case precedent and is similar to federal laws. [FN133] A number of jurisdictions have adopted Melrose Distillers, [FN134] and Alaska courts have cited Melrose Distillers for other propositions. [FN135]

Further, as is discussed above, the Alaska Supreme Court in Gossman interpreted section 10.06.678 of the Alaska Statutes liberally to include claims that accrued after the dissolution of the corporation. [FN136] This suggests that the court would likewise liberally interpret the statute if faced with the question of whether the statute is inclusive of criminal charges. In short, dissolution, merger, and consolidation of a corporation should not foreclose the State's ability to prosecute the corporation, although it might make it more difficult to collect fines that are ultimately imposed. [FN137]

197 Alaska has similar survival statutes that are applicable to other organizations. However, some of the survival statutes--such as those that apply to non-profit corporations [FN138] or limited liability companies [FN139]--carry time limitations which may affect potential claims or charges.

III. Prosecutorial Consequences

A. Penalty Provisions

Organizations are not subject to the same penalties as individual defendants. While organizations can only act through their agents, organizations cannot be punished in the same way as their agents. [FN140]

Special penalty provisions exist for organizations based on the severity of the underlying crime. [FN141] In assessing a fine under these provisions the sentencing court considers:

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(1) measures taken by the organization to discipline an officer, director, employee, or agent of the organization;

(2) measures taken by the organization to prevent a recurrence of the offense;

(3) the organization's obligation to make restitution to a victim of the offense, and the extent to which imposition of a fine will impair the ability of the organization to make restitution; and

(4) the extent to which the organization will pass on to consumers the expense of the fine. [FN142]198 These considerations are in addition to statutory and common law factors Alaska courts consider in deciding any criminal sentence. [FN143] Generally, it is not difficult to frame these factors in a way to justify substantial fines under any of the penalty matrices available for use against organizations. If the organization is large, a substantial fine would be justified so that it has an appreciable penalty or deterrent impact on the organization's operations. The fine would likewise need to be large to cause other similarly situated organizations to take notice and action to ensure they do not commit similar errors.

Consider two examples. First, if a fishing lodge allows its clients to commit hunting and fishing violations to ensure they catch a lot of fish and have a good time, a small fine would not act as a sufficient deterrent. Because these lodges often have significant revenues, fines at the top of the penalty range set forth in section 12.55.035(c) of the Alaska Statutes would be necessary and justified. These are common sense arguments that are likely to have traction with the sentencing court. Second, imagine a service station operating as an LLC that knowingly functions with leaking underground fuel tanks. The situation comes to light when diesel range organics are discovered in a nearby creek. Investigation traces the fuel back to the service station and additional investigation produces evidence that the manager had been aware of the leak for several months. The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) hires a private environmental services firm to design and implement a clean-up and remediation plan for the polluted land and water and to monitor the water quality of the creek for five years. The total cost for these services exceeds a million dollars. Under section 12.55.035(c)(3) of the Alaska Statutes, the potential fine against the LLC could exceed three million dollars. This fine could be in addition to the restitution owed to the state for the cost of the clean-up and remediation work itself. Admittedly, the sentencing court, in imposing the fine, would have to consider how section 12.55.035(e)(3) of the Alaska Statutes would affect the company's ability to pay restitution to the DEC. However, if the company is large enough, it is easy to picture the court imposing the full fine. Penalties of this magnitude can 199 provide a strong incentive for organizations to resolve potential criminal liability quickly. [FN144]

Because criminal conduct exposes the organization to potentially substantial criminal penalties and negative publicity, an organization will often terminate or discipline the responsible employees, cooperate with investigating agencies, and may hire consultants for the design of new protocols to avoid similar mistakes in the future. These are all constructive steps moving forward from the misconduct and are factors a sentencing court is to consider in assessing a fine against an organization pursuant to section 12.55.035(e) of the Alaska Statutes.

B. Collateral Consequences

Collateral consequences triggered by a conviction will also be a powerful force shaping the course of many prosecutions. Organizations are generally required to report all pending liabilities in their annual financial statements. This typically includes pending criminal cases as well as any completed cases for which the organization is on probation. [FN145] Disclosure of a pending criminal case or conviction can be damaging to an organization's public image or reputation. The publicity from prosecution would likely tarnish the image of a company and undo any marketing efforts that the company previously undertook. Further, the prosecution would likely damage the company's image amongst stockholders, creditors and Wall Street analysts, causing significant financial repercussions.

Debarment is another significant collateral consequence. Both federal and state law allows the respective sovereigns to refuse to do business with organizations that have been convicted of or otherwise suspected of crimes or dishonest business practices. [FN146] At the federal level, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is particularly vigilant in debarring organizations that are convicted or suspected of 200 environmental crimes. [FN147] Debarment is damaging because a large percentage of Alaska companies are the recipients of federal or state contracts. [FN148] The loss of these contracts can be financially crippling to companies. The State of Alaska also has legislative authority to debar companies but, unfortunately, rarely uses that power. [FN149]

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

By way of an example, consider a small bush air service that transports mail year round and a steady number of government biologists as passengers during the summer. If the company knowingly allows passengers to transport alcohol to local option dry communities [FN150] on its flights, it could be prosecuted for violations of Alaska's alcohol importation laws. [FN151] A conviction could potentially trigger federal or state debarment and thereby jeopardize the air service's ability to retain the mail or biologist travel contracts. This could constitute another financial blow to the company in addition to the fines or consequences that flow from the prosecution. [FN152]

*201 IV. Practical Considerations for Prosecutors

A. No Fifth Amendment Privilege

Prosecutors gain several practical advantages by filing charges against organizations as opposed to individuals. The first, and perhaps most significant, is that an organization does not have a Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. A prosecutor can use organizational agents as witnesses to testify about corporate practices or records. [FN153] In Amato v. United States, [FN154] the First Circuit, relying largely on the Supreme Court's decision in Braswell v. United States, [FN155] explained why the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination does not protect corporate records. [FN156]

The Alaska Supreme Court subscribed to the collective-entity doctrine in Pratt v. Kirkpatrick. [FN157] Citing many of the same cases relied upon in Amato, the court held that a records custodian for the financial records of a limited partnership could not rely upon the Fifth Amendment or Article I, section 9 of the Alaska Constitution to resist a subpoena for the partnership's financial records. [FN158] Importantly, the court found the self-incrimination protections provided by the Alaska Constitution were no broader than protections provided by the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. [FN159]

Because of these principles, defense attorneys will be hard-pressed to successfully preclude the production of an organization's documents sought pursuant to a subpoena or search warrant. Organizations are prolific producers of documents, reports, memoranda, and email that evidence their decisions and actions. In the event of criminal conduct, *202 any such documents would be invaluable to the prosecution, as they may demonstrate the organization's knowledge or intent. At the very least, the documents can confirm the individual agent's intent or knowledge.

B. Avoiding Hearsay

Common hearsay problems can also be avoided if an organization rather than an individual is charged. Employee or agent statements regarding the conduct of the organization will be admissible against the organization should the declarant invoke a personal Fifth Amendment right not to testify or otherwise make him or herself unavailable for trial. The admissions of these agents are not hearsay if offered against the organization because the law imputes them to the organization itself; under Alaska Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2), the admissions are considered admissions of the party opponent. [FN160] This subsection excludes as non-hearsay statements that are made by an agent or servant concerning matters within the scope of that individual's agency or employment and made during the existence of the agency or employment relationship. This is a broadly interpreted exclusion [FN161] that encompasses a wide range of employee statements regarding employer practices, work conditions, and decision-making that frequently provide invaluable evidence for the prosecution.

C. Corporations Can Be Tried In Absentia

Corporations cannot ignore a summons to appear for arraignment. Pursuant to Rule 4(a)(3) of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, corporations that fail to appear may be tried in absentia. [FN162] The trial of an absent corporation would be a slam-dunk for the state. The prosecutor could admit evidence to the jury without objection. The *203 prosecutor could then ask the jury to convict a business which was perfectly happy to injure Alaska or Alaskans in some way but was unwilling to show up when invited to an Alaskan courtroom for its own trial. Assuming the prosecutor has presented sufficient evidence of the charged offenses, it is likely juries will feel little compunction in returning guilty verdicts. Upon conviction, the prosecutor could ask the judge to issue a judgment against the corporation and that judgment could be sent to the Attorney General's Collection Section for collection.

D. Organizations Engender Less Sympathy

The criminal jury instructions commonly employed in Alaska state courts invariably include an instruction that directs the jury to disregard any sympathy for the defendant during its deliberations. [FN163] Nevertheless, any prosecutor will tell you that jurors rarely dispatch their obligations without sympathizing to some degree with the defendant. If an employee engages in improper conduct to primarily benefit his or her employer (as opposed to directly benefiting him or herself) or if the employee engages in conduct at the behest of his or her employer, jurors may be loathe to find the individual guilty of the offense. This problem is largely eliminated if the company is tried. Regardless of the factual scenario involved, juries are far less prone to feel sympathy for an organization. [FN164] Most often, the organization is a for-profit company, and juries realize their decision, like the organization's decision to engage in the criminal conduct, is a decision about money. Juries seem to struggle far less with the question of whether an organization should pay a fine than the question of whether an individual should go to jail.

*204 V. Charging Considerations

A. Factors to Weigh

The foregoing discussion is meant to illustrate that organizational criminal liability is very broad and has potential application to many situations. Nevertheless, these prosecutions can be complex and time intensive, and the outcome of any such prosecution is seldom, if ever, certain. It follows that a prosecution may not be warranted or be the best use of limited resources in every instance. A number of practical considerations should inform any decision to prosecute or not prosecute an organization.

Assuming the prosecutor believes he or she can prove all the elements of the potential charges, the foremost consideration is the prosecution's objective in pursuing the criminal charges against this organization. Key to this concern is the question of punishment. Is the goal to punish the organization? Is the goal to achieve restitution? Or is the goal to ensure future compliance by this organization or similarly-situated organizations? Most often the answer is a mixture of all three, but that is not always the case. If the organization is one that has few assets or no longer exists, the prosecution may yield a conviction and a fine or restitution order that cannot be collected. Alternatively, if the organization continues to operate and the conduct at issue could reoccur, or involves an activity that has not been monitored or heavily regulated in the past, a better result may be achieved through less adversarial means. Instead of a criminal prosecution, perhaps there is an administrative or civil remedy. [FN165]

In answering these questions, the prosecutor should consider the following factors. [FN166] The first and foremost consideration is whether the prosecution is deserved. Multiple factors will weigh on this determination, including whether the injury was caused by egregious or intentional conduct or a rogue employee, and the degree to which management was complicit in causing the injury. It will also be important to determine whether the conduct was an isolated violation or part of a series of violations, and if the organization knew the conduct was prohibited.

*205 These factors beg the question: is a prosecution warranted? A corollary to this question is the recognition that a criminal prosecution carries a significant stigma and is not warranted or necessary in every circumstance. With respect to considerations of practicality, the following factors should be evaluated and go to the central question of what can and will be achieved by prosecuting the organization:

First, will prosecution deter this organization? Answering this question will require analyzing the likelihood of significant penalties such as fines or probation. It will also mean determining if any illegal gains will be returned, and if the conduct gave the organization an advantage over its competitors. [FN167]

Second, will prosecution deter other similarly-situated organizations? Determining this means researching whether similarly-situated organizations exist and if the potential penalties would deter them. The penalties may also impact the industry as a whole.

Third, will prosecution promote future compliance? Prosecutors must consider whether including a compliance program in the penalty would address the conduct at issue.

Fourth, is restitution owed to a broad range of entities or individuals? Considerations will include the necessity of prosecution to obtain restitution, the effectiveness of individual claims, and the ability of the organization to pay damages.

Finally, will a prosecution play well in the public's view? Prosecutors should determine whether the public will support legal action, an enforcement program more generally, and participate in such a program by reporting violations.

Depending on the answers to these questions, a prosecutor may determine that prosecution is not the best alternative. The best practice is to make this determination early and not to pursue prosecutions in situations not warranting the effort or resources.

To illustrate these points, consider as an example the potential prosecution of a bartender for selling alcohol to an underage patron. Faced with an underage "furnishing" crime, police officers will typically 206 cite the individual bartender for a Title 4 "furnishing" offense. [FN168] If convicted, and if a first-time offender, the bartender will likely receive a suspended imposition of sentence, a year's probation, and a small fine, assuming the prosecutor can convince a jury not to nullify the verdict. On the other hand, if there is a good reason to charge the bartender's employer--perhaps a large bar or restaurant--with the same Title 4 violation, that employer will face a much larger potential fine. If the employer has committed similar offenses through other employees, each of those incidents may be brought to the sentencing judge's attention and would powerfully bolster the prosecutor's sentencing case. Fines could be conditioned on the employer ensuring that its employees commit no further violations. The employer could also be affirmatively required to notify law enforcement officers of any and all future violations. [FN169] In addition, the court may require the employer to provide enhanced training for employees at their own expense. Prosecuting the employer is a better use of prosecutorial resources. Importantly, the prosecution of the employer provides a mechanism to prevent future, similar infractions by other employees. The employer will likely be more proactive in policing its employees and will be under an affirmative duty to report all future violations. Further, it is likely that other similar establishments or employers will take notice of the sentence and will likewise do a better job of policing their operations and employees. These would all be positive outcomes.

B. Case Study: Strategica Import-Export Financial Group, LLC

A four-defendant case recently prosecuted by the Office of Special Prosecutions, State v. Jeremy Oliver, [FN170] further illustrates why prosecutors should consider charging organizations and how they can use those prosecutions to achieve better case outcomes.

The case arose from a failed salmon processing facility in Ekuk, Alaska in 2004. [FN171] The failure was an economic disaster for the local economy. [FN172] None of the fishermen who had delivered fish to the facility 207 were paid for their catches and none of the workers who had worked at the facility were paid for their labor. [FN173] Jeremy Oliver, a young man with limited fishing and processing experience, had formed Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, LLC ("Wild Alaskan Seafood Company") for the purpose of the Ekuk processing venture. [FN174] Oliver was able to lease and open the Ekuk facility using financing brokered by Jay Enis, a Florida merchant banker. [FN175] Enis formed Strategica Import-Export Financial Group, LLC ("Strategica") for the purpose of financing the Ekuk salmon processing venture. [FN176] Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company hired dozens of workers to run the facility and accepted more than a million pounds of fish from the fishermen. [FN177] The venture failed before the fish could be processed, and very little of the fish was ever delivered to a purchaser. [FN178] The vast majority of the fish spoiled and ultimately had to be destroyed. [FN179] As a result, the fishermen and Ekuk processors were never paid. [FN180]

Alaska statutes criminalize the processing of adulterated seafood. [FN181] The offense is a class A misdemeanor. [FN182]

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The state prosecuted all four defendants--Oliver, Wild Alaska Seafood Company, Enis, and Strategica--for this offense, as well as several additional, related offenses. [FN183] Ultimately, Oliver, Wild Alaskan Seafood Company and Strategica each pled guilty to a charge. [FN184] The court sentenced Oliver to serve 180 days in jail (with 140 days suspended) and to pay, along with Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, more than $56,000 in restitution to the fishermen and workers. [FN185] Because Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood 208 Company have few assets, [FN186] it is unlikely that much of this restitution will ever be paid. Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company were prosecuted to punish them for their misdeeds rather than to make the injured fishermen and workers whole. [FN187] The court ordered Strategica to pay more than $180,000 in restitution. [FN188] The state agreed to dismiss the charges against Enis in exchange for Strategica's plea and payment. [FN189] The case against Strategica was meant to prosecute that company for its misconduct, as well as to provide at least some restitution to the fishermen and workers.

Oliver was clearly the primary culprit of this scheme. Oliver came up with the plan to operate the Ekuk facility and was in charge when it failed. Nevertheless, once the scheme failed, Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company lacked assets and would never be able to pay much in restitution. Enis and Strategica had assets but were not as directly involved in the management and operation of the Ekuk facility. Thus, the question for the Office of Special Prosecutions was whether it could prove Enis and Strategica were criminally liable for the Ekuk failure and, if so, whether they warranted criminal prosecution. The answer to both questions was "yes." [FN190]

Strategica's conduct was egregious. Enis and Strategica had no experience in the Alaska seafood industry. Nevertheless, with little due diligence and equally little oversight, Strategica provided Wild Alaskan 209 Seafood Company with $650,000 in financing for a risky venture [FN191] that would operate in a remote locale more than five thousand miles from Strategica's location in Miami. [FN192] Strategica enabled Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company by providing the financial means for them to launch the Ekuk facility. Thereafter, Strategica did little to oversee their operations or to ensure their success. This conduct was careless, it was intentional, and it had a devastating impact on the Ekuk fishery and the local economy.

Practical considerations also supported the decision to prosecute Strategica. Most importantly, the State believed prosecution would be the most effective way to collect restitution for the fishermen and workers. More than a hundred, perhaps more than two hundred, people were financially injured due to the Ekuk failure. [FN193] While some of these people filed civil actions against the defendants, those suits made little progress and, even if successful, stood to benefit a small number of individuals. In contrast, a criminal prosecution could recover restitution for all those who did not get paid. Of the potential defendants, only Enis and Strategica had any real financial resources. [FN194] Therefore, it was important that Strategica be prosecuted.

Additionally, the prosecution of Strategica would play well in the realm of public opinion. Strategica was a company that recklessly entered the state fishing industry to make a profit for out-of-state investors and ended up causing significant financial injuries to many Alaskans. In addition to the direct financial losses inflicted on the Ekuk fishermen and workers, Strategica's actions could have inflicted significant harm to the reputation of Alaskan salmon. The Alaska seafood industry relies on the high reputation of "wild Alaskan salmon" to market its product and has spent years and millions of public relations dollars to build up that reputation. [FN195] If some of the damaged Ekuk salmon had actually made it into the marketplace and sickened unsuspecting consumers, the reputation and marketability of Alaskan salmon would have been dealt a significant blow. Considering the 210 reckless manner in which Strategica acted to enable and finance Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, the State believed the Alaskans would overwhelmingly support Strategica's prosecution and the Department of Environmental Conservation's continued efforts to regulate seafood processing facilities.

Finally, the State believed prosecuting Strategica would serve as a deterrent to future reckless investment in the Alaska seafood industry by outside entities. The prosecution resulted in significant financial penalties-- the restitution payment--and would receive significant publicity. This result would certainly deter Strategica from future similar conduct and, it is hoped, would deter other similarly situated entities from doing anything similar.

Conclusion

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The ability to file criminal charges against an organization in addition to, or in lieu of, charges against individual agents is a powerful tool available to prosecutors. The prosecution of organizations must be considered, whenever feasible, to deter future wrongdoing. Furthermore, it is far more efficient to prosecute the organization that controls a large number of agents engaging in prohibited conduct rather than prosecuting each agent individually.

Prosecuting the organization makes sense for a variety of additional reasons. First, significant criminal fines can be imposed against organizations. Second, organizations--rational entities with a bottom line and a strong preference against negative publicity--tend to be prosecution averse. This fact is good news for the prosecution because it means a trial can be avoided and constructive changes can be implemented as part of any resolution. [FN196] Third, organizations enjoy fewer constitutional protections than do individual defendants and, as such, can make use of fewer evidentiary rules to limit the prosecution's evidence. Lastly, the prosecution of an organization as well as individual defendants could strengthen the prosecution's hand during plea negotiations. The organization may be persuaded to accept a plea in 211 return for dismissal against certain individual officers, or vice-versa. By charging both, the prosecution increases its options for a successful and beneficial resolution.

Several potential explanations for why Alaska prosecutors rarely charge organizations for the criminal conduct of their agents are proffered in the introduction. None satisfactorily explain this phenomenon. Yes, such prosecutions will likely differ in some respects from the prosecution of individual defendants. Yes, organizational defendants may hire experienced defense counsel. And yes, such prosecutions might, in some cases, penalize stockholders who did not know about the wrongdoing. But these drawbacks, to the extent they are legitimate at all, are insignificant compared to the potential benefits that such prosecutions can realize. Quite simply, prosecutors should file charges against organizations more frequently. Such change may not happen quickly; nonetheless, it is time to adjust course and to start looking more closely at organizational targets. Successful criminal prosecutions of organizations can be a significant deterrent that causes organizations to take significant steps to better monitor the behavior of their agents and to prevent criminal conduct in the course of their operations.

Interestingly, a Ninth Circuit court hearing an appeal on an Alaska case expressed some reservations about applying the theory of respondeat superior to impute criminal intent to a corporation. [FN56]. Alaska Stat. § 11.81.900(b)(43) (2006). The definition does not include "sole proprietorship." The court of appeals interprets this omission to mean the legislature did not intend to expose such entities to criminal liability in their own right. To the contrary, a sole proprietorship is the alter ego of the sole proprietor and therefore any charges must be alleged against the sole proprietor in his or her individual capacity. ABC Towing, 954 P.2d at 577-78.

[FN57]. 1 William Mead Fletcher et al., Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations §§ 1-5 (rev. vol. 2006). The common law fostered this purpose; it did not expose organizations to criminal liability. N.Y. Cent. & Hudson River R.R. Co. v. United States, 212 U.S. 481, 492-93 (1909).

The court continued: "Moreover, the strenuous efforts of corporate defendants to avoid conviction, particularly under the Sherman Act, strongly suggests that Congress is justified in its judgment that exposure of the corporate entity to potential conviction may provide a substantial spur to corporate action to prevent violations by employees." Id.

[FN60]. That this is the most typical mode of organizational criminal liability is not surprising. Most organizations, do not typically solicit, ratify, adopt criminal conduct, or fail to do something required by law. Alaska Stat. § 11.16.130(a)(1)(B)-(a)(2) (2006).

[FN65]. Further discussion regarding this holding is beyond the scope of this article. However, the author takes issue with the court's reasoning because it needlessly insulates sole proprietorships from criminal liability where one of its agents commits a wrong in furtherance of a business enterprise. The legislature should fix this omission by amending the "organization" definition to specifically include sole proprietorships. See supra note 60 and accompanying text.

[FN84]. In fact, Alaska's jurisdiction is quite broad. Under section 44.03.010 of the Alaska Statutes, state territorial jurisdiction extends to waters offshore and encompasses the "high seas" to the extent the United States exercises its jurisdiction. The Alaska Supreme Court has interpreted this provision broadly to include all ocean waters seaward of the Alaska coast. See State v. Jack, 125 P.3d 311, 315-16 (Alaska 2005) (allowing defendant to be prosecuted in Alaska for sexual assault that took place onboard an Alaska Marine Highway ferry while in Canadian waters during a voyage between Alaska and Washington). Arguably, both entities would have sufficient contacts with the State of Alaska, based on the sailing and operation of the Arctic Sunrise in Alaska waters, to make them subject to the personal jurisdiction of a state court. See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Wash., 326 U.S. 310, 317-19 (1945) (holding contacts exist when the in-state activities of the corporation give rise to the liabilities at issue, or the corporation fails to satisfy obligations that exist due to its in-state activities); Kuk v. Nalley, 166 P.3d 47, 51 (Alaska 2007) (explaining that International Shoe and its progeny significantly broadened the understanding of personal jurisdiction).

[FN85]. See 954 P.2d 575, 577-79 (Alaska Ct. App. 1998). The ABC Towing decision is unsatisfying. Id. The court of appeals favorably compared sole proprietorships and partnerships--both are the alter egos of the proprietor or partners, both exist solely to carry out the business purpose for which they were created, and both are not common law "legal entities." Id. Nevertheless, the court interprets the definition of "organization" in a way that treats the two entities differently, i.e., partnerships can be prosecuted, sole proprietorships cannot. Id. The ruling is defensible from a statutory construction standpoint, but it is unsatisfactory from a public policy standpoint. The same policy arguments that support the prosecution of partnerships for criminal offenses apply to sole proprietorships. See id. There is no reason these entities should be treated differently.

Purchases were made on the basis of specifications, but the purchasing agent exercised complete authority as to the source. He was in a unique position to add the corporation's buying power to the force of the boycott. [FN97]. In United States v. Potter, 463 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 2006), the First Circuit squarely rejected an argument that a corporation might fend off liability by adopting abstract rules that no agent can make an unlawful price-fixing contract or that no driver may exceed the speed limit. Id. at 25-26 (citing United States v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 770 F.2d 399, 406 & n. 5 (4th Cir. 1985)). Thus, a corporation may be charged and convicted, even if there is a specific company directive forbidding the questioned acts. The court explained that this is simply an extension of familiar agency law principles: the principal is held liable for acts done on its account by an agent which are customarily actions the agent is authorized to perform. Potter, 463 F.3d at 26 (citing H. Reuschlein & Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership 167 (1990) (footnote omitted)).

The Fourth Circuit adopted very similar reasoning in United States v. Basic Constr. Co., wherein it rejected a corporation's attempt to insulate itself from liability using evidence that the corporation had expressly forbidden the conduct at issue. 711 F.2d 570, 573 (4th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 956 (1983).

The Restatement (Second) of Agency explains the general rule these decisions expound by way of an illustration: P directs the salesman in selling guns, never to insert a cartridge while exhibiting a gun. A, a salesman, does so, and negligently harms a bystander. Notwithstanding P's instructions otherwise, the salesman's act is within the scope of employment. Polizzi, 500 F.2d 856, 906-09 (9th Cir. 1974) (Duniway, J., concurring) (noting that criminal charges against surviving corporation of a merger, formed when a former New York company merged into its New York parent corporation, that arose from the criminal conduct of the former subsidiary, did not abate under New York corporation law which contains a saving statute preserving claims against merged or consolidated corporations); United States v. San Diego Grocers Ass'n, Inc., 177 F. Supp. 352, 354-55 (C.D. The State would face a similar situation if it successfully prosecuted a dissolved corporation. Depending on how the corporation provided for its post-dissolution liabilities, the State may try to collect the penalties imposed against an insurance policy, against a successor corporation, or against a finite pool of assets set aside prior to the corporation's dissolution. In that final scenario, the assets might be insufficient, particularly if the corporation left numerous creditors, and the State could get stuck with a judgment it cannot collect (or not easily collect without some veil-piercing litigation).

[FN140]. Melrose Distillers, Inc. v. United States, 359 U.S. 271, 274 (1959) (holding that corporations cannot be sent to jail, they can only be fined).

[FN141]. Under section 12.55.035(c)(1) of the Alaska Statutes, an organization can be fined up to a million dollars for felony offenses or misdemeanor offenses that result in death, up to two hundred thousand dollars for Class A misdemeanor offenses, up to twenty five thousand dollars for Class B misdemeanor offenses, and up to ten thousand dollars for violations. Alternatively, greater fines can be imposed under sections 12.55.035(c)(2) or (3) of the Alaska Statutes, which allow for fines up to three times the pecuniary gain realized, or three times the damages caused by the offense.

[FN142]. Alaska Stat. §12.55.035(e) (2006).

[FN143]. The court considers a defendant's prospects for rehabilitation, the need to confine or isolate the defendant to prevent further public harm, the extent to which the sentence to be imposed will deter the defendant as well as other members of the community from future criminal conduct, and the extent to which the sentence will reaffirm societal norms or the community's condemnation of the conduct. See Alaska Stat. § 12.55.005; State v. Chaney, 477 P.2d 441, 443 (Alaska 1970).

[FN144]. Defense attorneys commonly argue that the State should not seek the full measure of fines authorized by section 12.35.055 of Alaska Statutes because doing so would preclude the organization from devoting resources to correct the problem that led to the violation, or to pay restitution. This is a fair argument in many instances.

[FN145]. Probation is imposed by the sentencing court and can be up to ten years. Alaska Stat. § 12.55.090(c) (2006).

[FN146]. In response to Congressional oversight hearings regarding the mismanagement of federal contracts, the Office of Management and Budget developed a government-wide debarment and suspension system in the early 1980s. See Brief History of EPA's Debarment Program, http:// www.epa.gov/ogdunix1/sdd/history.htm (last visited Oct. 9, 2008).

[FN147]. The EPA is statutorily required to debar companies convicted of violations of section 508 of the Clean Water Act or section 306 of the Clean Air Act. The EPA also has the discretionary authority to suspend or debar companies based on indictments, information or adequate evidence involving environmental crimes, contract fraud, embezzlement, theft, forgery, bribery, poor performance, non-performance, or false statements. See Suspension and Debarment Program, http://www.epa.gov/ogdunix1/sdd/debarment.htm (last visited Oct. 10, 2008.) Other executive branch agencies also have the authority to suspend and debar.

[FN148]. Based on the Author's anecdotal observations that the federal government is very active in Alaska and therefore contracts with many Alaskan companies for services and products.

[FN149]. While the state has legislative authority to debar entities, it rarely does so. State debarment is controlled by sections 36.30.635-36.30.685 of the Alaska Statutes. The grounds for debarment are set out in section 36.30.640 of the Alaska Statutes and include a broad range of unethical or fraudulent conduct. Nevertheless, these consequences are rarely, if ever, invoked. In response to an inquiry to the Alaska Department of Law, the Department told the Author of only one state suspension or debarment matter. In the Author's view, the State, by failing to more proactively utilize its debarment authority, forgoes a powerful deterrence tool.

[FN162]. The rule provides, "[i]f a defendant corporation fails to appear after being duly summoned, a plea of not guilty shall be entered by the court if the court is empowered to try the offense for which the summons was issued and the court may proceed to trial and judgment without further process." Alaska R. Crim. Proc. 4(a)(3). The rule does not define "corporation" and the author is not aware of any case that interprets this rule. Admittedly, a court could interpret "corporation" to be narrower than the term "organization" as it is used in section 11.16.130 (2006) of the Alaska Statutes. It is therefore unclear whether other types of organizations could be tried in absentia.

[FN163]. Alaska Pattern Jury Instruction 1.07, "Evaluation of Evidence," is one such example. It instructs jurors "not be influenced by sentiment, prejudice, passion or public opinion" in evaluating the evidence. Criminal Pattern Jury Instruction Committee, Pattern Jury Instruction 1.07, available at http://www.state.ak.us/courts/ins/1.07.doc.

[FN165]. To be sure, if such options exist, defense counsel will suggest it to the prosecution.

[FN166]. This list is not exhaustive or universally applicable. Depending on the circumstances, other factors not listed may be relevant and some listed factors may be irrelevant.

(2006). Such "suspended fines" are used as a "hammer" to force a defendant to comply with the conditions of probation the court imposes. If, during the probation period, the defendant does not comply with these conditions, the prosecution can petition the sentencing court to revisit the sentence and impose all or a portion of the sentence that was suspended. Those determinations are made by the trial judge pursuant to a preponderance of the evidence standard. See Wallace v. State, 829 P.2d 1208, 1210 (Alaska Ct. App. 1992); Andrew v. [FN187]. Though Oliver had few assets, there was a financial interest that the Author suspects prompted Oliver to plea the case on his behalf and on behalf of Wild Alaskan Seafood Company. When Oliver formed that company, he included his father Michael, a real estate agent in California, as a member. Information at 7, State v. Strategica Imp.-Exp. Fin. Group, LLC, 3DI-07-018CR (Nov. 26, 2007). Oliver's father had assets and was troubled about his potential financial exposure for the company's liabilities. The father signed off on the plea agreement for Wild Alaskan Seafood Company on the understanding that he would not be a prosecution target and would most likely not have to personally satisfy the restitution judgment entered against Wild Alaskan Seafood Company. Michael Oliver Aff., State v. Wild Alaska Seafood, LLC, 3DI-07-016CR.

[FN188]. State v. Strategica Imp.-Exp. Fin. Group, LLC, 3DI-07-018CR (Alaska Dist. Ct. judgment entered Nov. 26, 2007). Strategica's restitution was paid up-front. The plea agreement required Strategica to pay the total restitution amount prior to the company's change of plea and sentencing. Id.

[FN191]. Salmon processing is by its very nature a risky undertaking. Catches, and the market, vary from year to year and can always be impacted by factors--fish counts, weather events, economic uncertainties--that are beyond anyone's control.

[FN196]. For example, in pollution cases, resolutions often require defendant companies to implement environmental compliance management systems-- detailed plans that dictate the specific procedures and safety measures the company is required to implement for a period of time. These compliance agreements are typically more stringent than any planning or contingency plan requirements imposed by statute or regulation. In other words, to resolve the criminal charges, organizations will agree to be far more proactive in guarding against future infractions. Such agreements are not only helpful, but also provide good publicity for both the organization and the prosecution.

RE: Fines for Organizations Convicted of Criminal Offenses
LRS Report 10.204

You asked about fines for organizations convicted of criminal offenses. You were particularly interested in knowing such fines at the federal level and in a few other states.

The table on the following page presents maximum fines for organizations convicted of generalized levels of criminal offenses. As you will see, Delaware and Alaska appear to have the highest fines among states in this small sample. Unlike Alaska, however, neither Delaware nor Maine cap a fine for an offense resulting in death.

We attach the federal guidelines for sentencing of organization. As you will note, the sentencing scheme for organizations other than those deemed to exist for criminal purposes is far more complex than that in the states we identified. As such, we were unable to place federal fines within our matrix. We note, however, that the base for determining fines for organizations runs from the greatest of (1) $5,000 to $72,500,000 in fines, or (2) the amount of the pecuniary gain to the organization, or (3) the amount of the pecuniary loss caused by the organization, to the extent the loss was caused intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly.[1]

We hope this information is helpful. Please let us know if you have questions or need additional information.

FROM: Roger Withington, Legislative Analyst
RE: Adjusting the Fines for Organizations Provisions of Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D) for Inflation
LRS Report 10.206

You asked about the fines delineated in Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D). Specifically, you asked for us for a brief history of these provisions. You also asked us to adjust the fines for inflation from the date the fines became law. We summarize these amendments and adjustments in Table 1.

Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c) first became law by Section 12 Chapter 166 SLA 1978 and read as follows:

> (c) Upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of
> (1) $100,000; or
> (2) an amount which is three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant as a result of the offense.

Using Consumer Price Index Information (CPI) from the Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development, the fine stated in AS 12.55.035(c)(1), adjusted for inflation from 1978 through 2009, would be approximately $273,140.

Section 1 Chapter 142 SLA 1990 amended Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1) and created subsections A through D. This Session Law stated the following:

> (c) Upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of
> (1) an amount that is
> (A) $500,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;
> (B) $200,000 for a class A misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;
> (C) $25,000 for a class B misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;
> (D) $10,000 for a violation;

Again, adjusting these amounts from 1990 using Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development CIP information, today subsection A would be approximately $808,364; subsection B $323,346; subsection C $40,418; and subsection D $16,167.28.

Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1) was amended again by Section 2 Chapter 131 SLA 2002. This Session Law amended AS 12.55.035(c)(1)(A) to read:

> (A) $1,000,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;

Adjusting this amount from 2002, using Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development CIP information, subsection A would be approximately $1,212,035 today.

Table 1: Fines for Organizations Provisions of Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D), and Adjustments to These Fines to Account for Inflation

Section 12 Chapter 166 SLA 1978			Section 1 Chapter 142 SLA 1990			Section 2 Chapter 131 SLA 2002
Subsection	Initial Amount	Adjusted Amount	Subsection	Initial Amount	Adjusted Amount	Subsection	Initial Amount	Adjusted Amount
Section 1	$100,000	$273,139.6	A	$500,000	$808,364.25	A	$1,000,000	$1,212,035
			B	$200,000	$323,345.70
			C	$25,000	$40,418.21
			D	$10,000	$16,167.28

REPRESENTATIVE CRAIG JOHNSON
HOUSE DISTRICT 28

HB 366

The purpose of this legislation is to promote safety in the carriage of goods by motor carrier.

A motor carrier must generally comply with the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations while it is transporting goods, and is also subject to additional common law or statutory duties or responsibilities. Likewise, shippers or other parties frequently have legal duties and responsibilities to fulfill when they provide goods for transportation. More and more frequently, however, shippers are pressuring motor carriers to provide transportation under contracts in which the motor carrier contractually agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the shipper for the shipper's own failure to meet its legal duties and responsibilities.

The effect of these indemnification clauses is to eliminate the incentive for the shipper to meet its responsibilities and duties in a prudent and reasonable manner. In essence, such a clause makes the motor carrier the shipper's insurer. Such a shifting of liability through contract completely contradicts sound public policy. One of the primary reasons for assigning legal liability is to persuade the offending party to regulate its behavior. However, where the shipper is at fault but is nevertheless indemnified by the motor carrier, there is nothing the motor carrier can do to change its own behavior to make things safer. That ability lies solely with the shipper.

A similar problem with respect to public construction contracts has already been addressed by the legislature in AS 45.45.900.

This legislation voids contractual provisions in motor carrier transportation contracts that indemnify a shipper for the shipper's own negligent or intentional acts or omissions which lead to claims. It maintains the incentive for a shipper that is a party to a motor carrier transportation contract to perform its legal obligations and duties in a prudent and reasonably safe manner.

MEMORANDUM March 1, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary for HB 366 relating to indemnification agreements that relate to motor carrier transportation contracts (Work Order No. 26-LS1434\R)

TO: Representative Craig Johnson
Attn: Jeanne Ostnes

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Adds a new provision that prohibits indemnification by motor carriers.

Sec. 45.45.905(a) prohibits a motor carrier and a shipping person from entering into an indemnification agreement related to a transportation services contract. Covers the indemnification of the shipping person, the defense of the shipping person, and the holding of the shipping person harmless from liability for the shipping person's negligence, intentional acts, or intentional omissions.

Sec. 45.45.905(b) states that an agreement that violates (a) is void and unenforceable.

Sec. 45.45.905(c) defines terms used in the section. Defines "motor carrier," "motor vehicle," "shipping person," and "transportation services."

Section 2. States that this Act won't apply to an indemnification agreement unless the agreement is entered into on or after the bill's effective date.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

HB 366 provides statutory language that voids contractual provisions in motor carrier transportation contracts that indemnify a shipper for the shipper's own negligent or intentional acts or omissions which lead to claims. HB 366 does not void contractual provisions in which a motor carrier indemnifies a shipper for the motor carrier's own negligent or intentional acts or omissions. Further, HB366 does not establish any new duties or responsibilities for any party and It does not limit the parties' freedom to contract – except to improve safety.

We support HB 366 and request that the bill be heard in committee at the earliest opportunity.

We would like you to consider expanding the bill to cover other transportation providers performing services as a carrier, such as domestic freight forwarders.

Dear Representative Johnson,

I have read both HB 366 and the comments by Aves Thompson regarding it and want to commend you for what I believe is a very good piece of legislation. In our previous discussions I have mentioned how some of the bigger carriers and contractors in the business have the ability to challenge and push back and end up with contracts that are fair to both parties while smaller ones do not have that same ability. Ideally you end up with a true Knock for Knock document with each party responsible for their own actions.

We have been very successful in getting that type of result over the last few years but there are still major companies operating with the goal of transferring all liability to the carrier regardless of who creates the situation. I am currently in negotiations with a major US based drilling contractor who operates internationally and is trying to do that very thing. Basically indemnify themselves for any and all actions even if caused by their personnel and make the carrier responsible.

I wish you well in your efforts and certainly hope for a successful outcome. If I can be of assistance in any way please don't hesitate to contact me directly at 907-339-5101 or e-mail at deanmc@awe.lynden.com.

HB 366
Indemnification Agreements in Motor Carrier Contracts
House Transportation Committee Hearing
1:00 pm, March11, 2010
Aves D. Thompson, Executive Director
Alaska Trucking Association

Thank you. Madame Chair and members of the committee, I am Aves Thompson, Executive Director of the Alaska Trucking Association. The Alaska Trucking Association is a state wide organization representing the interests of our nearly 200 member companies from Barrow to Ketchikan. Freight movement represents a large chunk of our economy and impacts all of us each and every day. The simple truth is that "if you got it, a truck brought it."

One of the priorities of the Alaska Trucking Association is to achieve tort reform in the area of indemnification agreements in motor carrier transportation contracts.

Background: A motor carrier must generally comply with the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations while it is transporting goods, and is also subject to additional common law or statutory duties or responsibilities. Likewise, shippers or other parties frequently have legal duties and responsibilities to fulfill when they provide goods for transportation. More and more frequently, however, shippers are pressuring motor carriers to provide transportation under contracts in which the motor carrier contractually agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the shipper for the shipper's own failure to meet its legal duties and responsibilities.

The Committee Substitute for HB 366 provides statutory language that voids contractual provisions in motor carrier transportation contracts that indemnify either a shipper or the motor carrier for either the shipper's or the motor carrier's own negligent or intentional acts or omissions which lead to claims. We believe that this approach sets a level playing field where each party is responsible for their own actions. HB366 does not establish any new duties or responsibilities for any party and it does not limit the parties' freedom to contract – except to improve safety. This language allows each party to control their own employees or agents to improve any unsafe practices.

A similar problem with respect to public construction contracts has already been addressed by the legislature in AS 45.45.900.

What the legislation does:

- It voids contractual provisions in motor carrier transportation contracts that indemnify a shipper or a motor carrier for negligent or intentional acts or omissions of the other party which lead to claims.
- It maintains the incentive for a shipper and a motor carrier that is a party to a motor carrier transportation contract to perform its legal obligations and duties in a prudent and reasonably safe manner.

What the legislation does not do:

- It does not void contractual provisions in which a shipper or motor carrier indemnifies the other party to the contract for their own negligent or intentional acts or omissions.
- It does not establish any new duties or responsibilities for any party.
- It does not limit the parties' freedom to contract – except to improve safety.

We have worked with industry groups and in particular, BP, who agree that the committee substitute constitutes an equitable condition where both parties to the motor carrier transportation contract are responsible for their own negligent actions or inactions that lead to claims.

The Alaska Trucking Association supports this bill.

VIA E-MAIL

The Honorable Jay Ramras

Juneau, AK 99801

Re: URGENT – Alaska HB 366

Dear Chairman Ramras:

Please accept these comments regarding House Bill 366 which is now pending before the Judiciary Committee and is set to be considered on March 19, 2010. I am writing on behalf of the Ocean Carrier Equipment Management Association (OCEMA), an organization of 20 ocean-going common carriers that provide intermodal transportation of cargoes in the foreign commerce of the United States. OCEMA's members serve Alaska manufacturers, distribution centers, and retailers by way of rail and motor carriage of international intermodal shipping containers. Many thousands of OCEMA members' containers and chassis are interchanged to truckers annually for over-the-road transport to and from localities in Alaska.

We are concerned that HB 366, as written, could void the indemnity provisions in intermodal equipment interchange agreements and other intermodal transportation contracts which would severely disrupt transportation arrangements to and from Alaska businesses by jeopardizing insurance coverage. This would significantly impact intermodal transportation through and within Alaska. The insurance market for intermodal activity is very limited and coverage is often contingent upon effective risk management arrangements such as the indemnity provisions contained in interchange agreements.

The interchange of intermodal equipment between those who provide the equipment, notably ocean carriers or railroads, and motor carriers is typically achieved by way of private interchange agreements that have been negotiated by representatives of all the modes of transportation, as well as other interested parties such as terminal operators and equipment leasing companies. Currently, the majority, but not all, intermodal interchanges are conducted under the Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement (UIIA) administered by the Intermodal Association of North America (IANA). The UIIA is a standard industry contract that was developed with the participation of ocean, motor, and rail carriers in order to achieve efficiencies and streamline the interchange process. This type of arrangement is essential to the free flow of US export and import containerized goods.

The UIIA covers liability and other issues related to the interchange of intermodal equipment (i.e. containers, chassis, etc.) between the parties. It drastically reduces the paperwork burden for all parties involved by eliminating having to sign individual interchange contracts with each equipment provider that is participating in this agreement. It eliminates repeating these arrangements for each of millions of shipments. It also reduces the number of insurance filings for the motor carrier to provide proof of insurance. Only one certificate must be issued to the UIIA and this information is then disseminated to the individual Equipment Providers by IANA.

While there are over 5000 members of the UIIA, including motor carriers, water carriers, and railroads, not all ocean carriers and not all motor carriers use this agreement. Consequently, there are other interchange agreements in use, similar to the UIIA, which would likewise not be exempted from the scope of the bill. Moreover, should the UIIA be terminated or replaced, there would be no available alternative for intermodal transportation. While we applaud your efforts to improve public policy regarding indemnification agreements, we do not believe this is the intent of HB 366.

We support your efforts in Alaska as we have in other states. Most recently, we have supported similar legislation in Virginia, Maryland, Kansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Missouri, and Tennessee. By working with legislators in those states we were able to ensure that public policy in this area correctly protects all parties.

Accordingly, we would respectfully ask that you include an exception for intermodal transportation in HB 366 such as the following:

> This section shall not apply to the Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement administered by the Intermodal Association of North America or other agreements providing for the interchange, use or possession of intermodal chassis, containers or other intermodal equipment."

We believe this is consistent with the objectives and purposes of the bill. Thank you for your consideration of this matter. If there is any way we can be of help in this effort, please do not hesitate to contact the undersigned or Mr. Rob Freeman at (202) 463-2515.

Sincerely,

Chair Ramras and Members of the Judiciary Committee,

The Alaska State Chamber of Commerce has a long history of supporting tort reform legislation; therefore, we offer our support for CSHB 366, an Act relating to indemnification agreements that relate to motor carrier transportation contracts. The State Chamber firmly believes that CSHB 366 constitutes an equitable condition, where both parties of a motor carrier transportation contract, are held responsible for their own action or inaction regarding negligence.

CSHB 366 voids contractual provisions in motor carrier transportation contracts that indemnify a shipper or a motor carrier for negligent or intentional acts or omissions of the other party, which all too often lead to liability claims or court action. Additionally, the bill maintains the incentive for a shipper and a motor carrier to perform their legal obligations and duties in a prudent and safe manner.

More and more frequently, shippers are pressuring motor carriers to provide transportation under contracts in which the motor carrier contractually agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the shipper for the shipper's own failure to meet its legal duties and responsibilities. CSHB 366 attempts to accomplish this for all shippers and all motor carriers. CSHB366 does not establish any new duties or responsibilities for any party and it does not limit the parties' freedom to contract – except to improve safety. This language allows each party to control their own employees or agents to improve any unsafe practices.

Your support and passage from committee of CSHB 366 is appreciated.

Yours in economic prosperity,

§ 623.0155. Indemnification From Motor Carrier Prohibited

(a) A person may not require indemnification from a motor carrier as a condition to:

(1) the transportation of property for compensation or hire by the carrier;

(2) entrance on property by the carrier for the purpose of loading, unloading, or transporting property for compensation or hire; or

(3) a service incidental to an activity described by Subdivision (1) or (2), including storage of property.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to:

(1) a claim arising from damage or loss from a wrongful or negligent act or omission of the carrier; or

(2) services or goods other than those described by Subsection (a).

(c) In this section, "motor carrier" means a common carrier, specialized carrier, or contract carrier that transports property for hire. The term does not include a person who transports property as an incidental activity of a nontransportation business activity regardless of whether the person imposes a separate charge for the transportation.

(d) A provision that is contrary to Subsection (a) is not enforceable.

OPINION

[*18] SUPPLEMENTAL OPINION ON MOTION FOR REHEARING

This Court issued a supplemental opinion in this case on February 26, 2009. We withdraw that opinion and issue this one in its place.

Appellee, Empire Truck Lines Inc., filed a motion for rehearing asserting for the first time that section 623.0155 of the Texas Transportation Code renders the indemnification provision of the Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement unenforceable. See TEX. TRANSP. CODE ANN. § 623.0155 (Vernon 1999). In its motion for rehearing, Empire acknowledges that section 623.0155 "was not raised by either parties's brief to this Court, or in the summary judgment papers below." As a general rule, we do not address new arguments presented in a rehearing. See Tex. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ruttiger, 265 S.W.3d 651, 658 n.8 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 2008, pet. filed).

In our opinion and judgment issued December 4, 2008, we reversed the trial court's order and remanded the cause for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. We determined that, [2] under the terms of the Agreement, the Agreement provided that Maryland law shall govern the validity, construction, enforcement, and interpretation of the Agreement. We also held that the Agreement is enforceable under Maryland law. Other than the instruction that the trial court must conduct proceedings that are consistent with our opinion, we have not limited the issues that may be presented upon remand to the trial court. The implications, if any, of section 623.0155 have never been addressed by us or the trial court, and, upon proper presentation, may be addressed by the trial court upon remand. We therefore do not address the new argument concerning section 623.0155. See Port Neches-Groves Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Pyramid Constructors, L.L.P., 201 S.W.3d 679, 681 (Tex. 2006) (declining to review issue that was not presented to trial court because parties can [*19] develop record as they deem necessary upon remand to trial court).

We deny Empire Truck Lines Inc.'s motion for rehearing.

December 4, 2008, Opinion Issued

SUBSEQUENT HISTORY: Rehearing denied by CMA-CGM (Am.), Inc. v. Empire Truck Lines Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1316 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist., Feb. 26, 2009)

PRIOR HISTORY: [1]
On Appeal from the 113th District Court, Harris County, Texas. Trial Court Cause No. 2005-22806.

CASE SUMMARY
PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Appellant trucking company challenged an order of the 113th District Court, Harris County, Texas, which dismissed its crossclaim for indemnification against appellee equipment provider in a case concerning the terms of the parties' Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement that provided that the laws of Maryland would govern over the interpretation of the agreement.

OVERVIEW: An independent contractor for the trucking company was sent to transport cargo in a storage container leased by the equipment provider. The cargo was to be transported on an adjustable-length chassis, but the chassis broke apart while its length was being adjusted, causing the contractor to be injured. The court held that the agreement was enforceable under Maryland law, which was the law to be applied under the terms of the agreement. Applying Maryland law to the dispute did not violate the public policy of Texas because both Maryland and Texas allowed indemnification for a party's own negligence. The court concluded that the agreement was enforceable as an insurance contract. The terms of the agreement expressly provided that the trucking company would indemnify the equipment provider against any and all claims arising out of or related to the trucking company's use or maintenance of the equipment. The agreement was effectively an insurance contract, which was the exception to the general rule that contracts would not be construed to indemnify a person against his own negligence unless an intention to do so was expressed in those very words or in other unequivocal terms.

OUTCOME: The court reversed the trial court's order dismissing the equipment provider's crossclaim and remanded the cause to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with the court's opinion.

CORE TERMS: indemnification, indemnify, provider, indemnity, insured, interchange, enforceable, summary judgment, unequivocal, spoliation, chassis, general rule, own negligence, insurance contract, public policy, addendum, insurance policy, insurance

OPINION BY: Elsa Alcala

OPINION

[*11] This appeal concerns the terms of an Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement ("the Agreement") that provides that the laws of Maryland shall govern over the interpretation of the agreement. Appellant, CMA-CGM (America), Inc., appeals the trial court's dismissal of its claims for indemnification against appellee, Empire Truck Lines Inc. In three issues, CMA contends that the trial court erred by (1) applying Texas law to the Agreement; (2) ruling that the Agreement was not enforceable; and (3) finding that CMA spoliated evidence by losing the chassis made the subject of this suit. We conclude the Agreement is enforceable under Maryland law, which is the law to be applied under the terms of the Agreement. We also conclude that the issue concerning spoliation instruction is not preserved for appeal because [2] the sanctions order was in favor of a person who is not a party to this appeal and the trial court did not rule on the motion for summary judgment pertaining to the spoliation instruction. We reverse and remand.

Background

Hector Aguirre was an independent contractor truck driver for Empire. Empire sent Aguirre to transport cargo from Longview, Texas to the Port of Houston. The cargo was in a storage container leased by CMA. The cargo was to be transported on an adjustable-length chassis, but the chassis broke apart while its length was being adjusted, causing Aguirre to be injured. Aguirre sued Empire and CMA, as well as other defendants, alleging various causes of action.

CMA filed a cross-claim against Empire asserting the Agreement required Empire [*12] to insure, defend, and indemnify CMA for CMA's own legal fault.

The Agreement contains the following definitions:
4. Equipment: Equipment . . . includ[es] . . . chassis . . . .

5. Equipment Owner: The holder of beneficial title to the Equipment, regardless of the form of the title.

. . . .

8. Indemnitees: Provider, Equipment Owner and/or Facility Owner, as their interest may appear.

. . . .

11. Motor Carrier: The Party being granted access to the [3] Provider's facilities and/or having physical possession of the Equipment for the purpose of road transport or its designated agent or contractor.

. . . .

14. Provider: the Party authorizing delivery and/or receipt of physical possession of Equipment with a Motor Carrier.

Applying the definitions in the Agreement, Empire is the "Motor Carrier" and CMA is the "Equipment Provider," as well as an "Indemnitee."

Inserting the names of the companies in place of the general terms, Section F.4, "Liability, Indemnity, and Insurance," of the Agreement states,
4. Indemnity: [EMPIRE] AGREES TO DEFEND, HOLD HARMLESS AND FULLY INDEMNIFY [CMA], AGAINST ANY AND ALL CLAIMS, SUITS, LOSS, DAMAGE OR LIABILITY, FOR BODILY INJURY, DEATH, AND/OR PROPERTY DAMAGE . . . ARISING OUT OF OR RELATED TO [EMPIRE'S] USE OR MAINTENANCE OF THE EQUIPMENT DURING AN INTERCHANGE PERIOD; THE PERFORMANCE OF THIS AGREEMENT; AND/OR PRESENCE ON THE FACILITY OPERATOR'S PREMISES.

. . . .

6. Insurance: to the extent permitted by law, [Empire] shall provide the following insurance coverages in fulfillment of its legal liability and obligations contained in this Agreement:
a. A commercial automobile liability policy with a combined single [4] limit of $ 1,000,000 or greater, insuring all Equipment involved in Interchange including vehicles of its agent or contractors; said insurance policy shall name [CMA] as additional insured.

b. A commercial general liability policy with a combined single limit of $ 1,000,000 or greater[.]

c. [Empire] shall have in effect, and attached to its commercial automobile policy, a Truckers Uniform Intermodal Interchange Endorsement (UIIE-1), which includes the coverages specified in Section F.4. . . . .
The Agreement also expressly states, "If it is determined that, at the time of the interchange, [Empire] was not insured in accordance with Section F.6. of this Agreement, [Empire] shall have been in material breach of this Agreement . . . ." The Agreement also provides, "This Agreement, including its Addendum, but only to the extent that its terms do not conflict with this Agreement, contain[s] the entire Agreement of the Parties hereto." Finally, the Agreement states, "Governing Law: The laws of the state of Maryland, the location at the principal place of business of the Intermodal Association of North America shall govern the validity, construction, enforcement and interpretation [*13] of this Agreement [5] without regard to conflicts of law principles."

Before Aguirre settled his claims with Empire and CMA, he obtained an order from the trial court granting his motion for sanctions due to CMA's failure to produce the chassis and chassis documentation. The order was entitled, "Order on Plaintiff, Hector Aguirre's Motion for Sanctions Against CMA . . . ." The order provided that CMA would be prohibited from entering evidence of maintenance or repairs done to the chassis, other than as reflected in documents that were produced. The order further decreed that at the time of trial the jury would be given an instruction to presume that CMA "intentionally or negligently destroyed evidence that is harmful to their case and that the jury should presume that the missing evidence would have been harmful" to CMA's case.

When Aguirre settled with Empire and CMA, the only remaining controversy was CMA's cross-claim for indemnification from Empire. Empire filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting "[CMA] cannot maintain a claim against Empire." Empire also filed a supplemental motion for summary judgment asserting that, as a matter of public policy, it could not be liable for indemnification to CMA [6] for evidence spoliated by CMA. CMA filed a cross-motion for summary judgment asserting that it established all elements of its breach of contract action against Empire as a matter of law. At the hearing on the motions for summary judgment, the trial court stated that it was not ruling on the motions for summary judgment, but only construing the Agreement as a matter of law. The trial court did not expressly state that it was applying Maryland law, but, immediately before making its ruling, it referred to a case where Maryland law was applied. The trial court announced its decision by stating, "I agree with Empire. I do not think that the contract requires them to indemnify CMA for their own liability." After the hearing, the trial court entered an order stating,

On the 6th day of November, 2006, came on to be heard the motion of [Empire] to dismiss the cross-claim of [CMA] for indemnity because the indemnity agreement . . . was not enforceable, . . . the court being of the opinion that said indemnity agreement is not enforceable, it is ORDERED that the claims of defendant/cross-plaintiff [CMA], against defendant/cross-defendant [Empire], are dismissed with prejudice to the re-filing [7] of same.

Choice of Law

In its second issue, CMA contends that Maryland law should be applied to interpret the terms of this Agreement. CMA's second issue is premised on the assumption that the trial court applied Texas substantive law to the Agreement. The trial court did not specify whether it was applying Texas or Maryland law to the Agreement, although it appears from the trial court's comments that it was considering Maryland law. Empire responds that indemnity is a procedural issue that should be controlled by the law of the state of Texas, rather than a substantive issue to which the terms of the contract would apply. Empire also responds that applying Maryland law would violate the public policy of Texas because the public policy of the state of Texas limits the rights of parties to contract for indemnity.

HN1 ↑Under Texas procedural law, parties "may express in their agreement their choice that the law of a specified jurisdiction will apply to their contract." Nexen, Inc. v. Gulf Interstate Eng'g Co., 224 S.W.3d 412, 419 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, no pet.) (quoting Chase Manhattan [*14] Bank, N.A. v. Greenbriar N. Section II, 835 S.W.2d 720, 723 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1992, no writ)). [8] When, as here, "the parties reside or expect to perform their respective obligations in different jurisdictions, they may be uncertain about which jurisdiction's law will govern the construction and enforcement of the contract." Id. (citing Chase Manhattan, 835 S.W.2d at 723). "In an attempt to avoid this uncertainty, they may express in their agreement their choice that the law of a specified jurisdiction will apply to their contract." Id. (citing Chase Manhattan, 835 S.W.2d at 723). "Judicial respect for their choice promotes the policy of protecting their expectations." Id. (citing Chase Manhattan, 835 S.W.2d at 723) (internal citations omitted). Texas procedural law allows parties to choose the law to be applied in interpreting the substantive terms of an indemnity agreement. See id. at 419-20.

Although parties may express in their agreement their choice that the law of a specified jurisdiction will apply to their contract, they may not "thwart or offend the public policy of the state whose law would otherwise apply." Id. (citing Chase Manhattan, 835 S.W.2d at 723). The Texas Supreme Court has noted that "application of the law of another state is not contrary to the fundamental [9] policy of the forum merely because it leads to a different result than would obtain under the forum's law." DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 680 (Tex. 1990). "Moreover, the fact that the law of another state is materially different from the law of this state does not itself establish that application of the other state's law would offend the fundamental policy of Texas." Id.

Applying Maryland law to this dispute does not violate the public policy of Texas because both Maryland and Texas allow indemnification for a party's own negligence. HN2 In Texas, a party may be indemnified for its own negligence if the indemnification agreement meets the "express negligence" test. See Storage & Processors, Inc. v. Reyes, 134 S.W.3d 190, 192 (Tex. 2004) (citing Ethyl Corp. v. Daniel Constr. Co., 725 S.W.2d 705, 707 (Tex. 1987)). Maryland also allows such provisions to be enforced if they are "clear and unequivocal." See Mass Transit Admin. v. CSX Transp., Inc., 349 Md. 299, 708 A.2d 298, 308 (Md. 1998) (citing Heat & Power Corp. v. Air Prods. & Chems., Inc., 578 A.2d 1202, 1206-07, 320 Md. 584 (Md. 1990)). Here, neither party disputes that if the Agreement meets the appropriate test ("express negligence" in Texas [10] or "clear and unequivocal" in Maryland), then the indemnity provision of the Agreement is enforceable. Texas and Maryland have the same general rule, but the states differ in that Maryland recognizes an exception to the general rule, as explained more fully below. Although Maryland law is not identical to Texas law, the application of Maryland law would not "thwart or offend the public policy of" Texas because Texas and Maryland have the general policy to allow indemnification for one's own negligence. See Nexen, 224 S.W.3d at 419.

Because parties "may express in their agreement their choice that the law of a specified jurisdiction will apply to their contract," we hold that, in accordance with the terms of the Agreement entered into by the parties, Maryland law shall govern the validity, construction, enforcement and interpretation of this Agreement. See id. [1]

FOOTNOTES

1 We also note that parties may not "require that their contract be governed by the law of a jurisdiction which has no relation whatsoever to them or their agreement," but no one here challenges this Agreement on that ground. See Nexen Inc. v. Gulf Interstate Engineering Co., 224 S.W.3d 412, 419 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, no pet.) [11] (quoting Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A. v. Greenbriar N. Section II, 835 S.W.2d 720, 723 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1992, no writ)) .

We sustain CMA's second issue.

[*15] Enforceability of the Indemnity Provision Under Maryland Law

In its first issue, CMA contends the trial court erred by dismissing the suit on the grounds that the Agreement was not enforceable. We conclude that this Agreement is enforceable as an insurance contract.

HN3 In Maryland, the general rule is that "contracts will not be construed to indemnify a person against his own negligence unless an intention to do so is expressed in those very words or in other unequivocal terms." Mass Transit, 708 A.2d at 308 (quoting Heat & Power, 578 A.2d at 1206-07). However, the general rule does not apply to an insurance contract. Id. (citing Heat & Power, 578 A.2d at 1208).

In Mass Transit, the Maryland Supreme Court upheld an indemnity provision by concluding that the Mass Transit Administration (MTA) provided indemnification for the liability of CSXT for CSXT's own acts and omissions in "unequivocal terms." Id. at 304. The contractual language in the contract between MTA and CSXT stated,

(b) Indemnification by [MTA]

(1) [MTA] agrees to indemnify, [12] save harmless, and defend CSXT from any and all casualty losses, claims, suits, damages or liability of every kind arising out of the Contract Service under this Agreement, up to a maximum amount of One Hundred Fifty Million Dollars ($ 150,000,000), per occurrence, during the term of this Agreement, as excepted or limited by the terms of subsections (a), (c), (d), and (e), infra. This maximum indemnification amount shall include any expenses for outside manpower, for legal representation and for other extraordinary expenses of handling individual claims for [MTA].
Id. at 300. MTA agreed "to self-insure Five Million Dollars ($ 5,000,000) per occurrence of any casualty claim or loss for which it is responsible" under the contract. Id. MTA agreed, at its cost and expense, to procure and maintain "excess liability insurance coverage commonly provided by Railroad operations liability insurance" in the amount of $ 145 million in excess of the $ 5 million "self-insured retention." Id. The contract further provided: "This insurance shall cover liability assumed by [MTA] under this [contract] . . . and shall name the State of Maryland and [MTA] as insured. Such insurance policies shall [13] name CSXT as an additional insured for CSXT's operation of the Contract Service . . . ." Id.

The terms of the Agreement here are similar to the terms in the contract in Mass Transit by stating "[Empire] agrees to defend, hold harmless and fully indemnify [CMA], against any and all claims, suits, loss, damage or liability, for bodily injury, death, and/or property damage . . . arising out of or related to [Empire's] use or maintenance of the equipment . . . ." See id. We conclude that the terms of the Agreement expressly provide that Empire will indemnify CMA against any and all claims arising out of or related to Empire's use or maintenance of the equipment. See id.

[*16] We also determine, based on an examination of the purpose of the Agreement, that the Agreement here is similar to the contract in Mass Transit. See id. In Mass Transit, the court examined whether the party giving the indemnification was the hirer or the party performing the service. Id. at 303-04. The court noted that the party performing the service would more likely indemnify the party that hired it to perform the service to protect the hirer from vicarious liability. Id. The court explained,
Heat & Power involved a promise [14] by one who was hired to perform a service to indemnify the person for whom the service was to be performed. In that relationship the person for whom the service is to be performed incurs a risk that the conduct of the person providing the service will create vicarious liability on the part of the hirer, or that the conduct may involve a non-delegable duty. Consequently, we require that there be no ambiguity and that the indemnification, if intended to embrace the sole negligence of the indemnitee, be unequivocal. The indemnification provision in the instant matter, however, reverses the direction of the indemnification from that more commonly encountered. Here, the hirer of the service gives the indemnity, and the party performing the service is indemnified.
Id. (citations omitted). As in Mass Transit, this Agreement provides that Empire, the party performing the service and using the equipment, is to indemnify CMA, the party who is providing the equipment, in order to cover the risk of vicarious liability to CMA stemming from Empire's use of the equipment. See id.

In Mass Transit, the court also noted that the terms of the contract required self-insurance and excess liability insurance [15] to cover any claim or loss for which MTA was responsible under the contract. See id. at 300. Like the contract in Mass Transit, this Agreement requires Empire to provide "insurance coverages in fulfillment of its legal liability and obligations contained in this Agreement."

Our decision is in line with the courts that have analyzed Mass Transit to determine that the terms used in the Uniform Intermodal Interchange and Facilities Access Agreement provide for indemnification for the equipment provider's own acts or omissions. See Garcia v. Maersk, Inc., No. 03-CV-5697 FB RML, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12357, 2005 WL 1492380, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. June 24, 2005); Lopez v. Louro, No. 01 CIV 2490(JSM), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1020, 2002 WL 91273, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 23, 2002). Moreover, another federal court interpreting an agreement with language identical to the Agreement in this case determined that the agreement was one of insurance, stating,

> First, although the Interchange Agreement is not an insurance contract or policy, per se, it is an agreement pursuant to which [Motor Carrier] agreed to indemnify [Equipment Provider], defend [Equipment Provider] and procure insurance which would include [Equipment Provider] as an additional insured for claims, suits, [16] losses, damages or liabilities for bodily injury or death arising out of [Motor Carrier]'s use of the chassis or container owned by [Equipment Provider]. These obligations and the terms of art invoked therein are typically part of an insurance contract with an insurance company. Accordingly, the scope of the various obligations has been examined and interpreted by courts and agencies as a part of a body of "insurance law". Therefore, reference to decisions involving these same obligations as they arise in insurance policies is appropriate, as the clear intent of Section F of [*17] the Interchange Agreement is to sort through the insurance related obligations of the signatories. Indeed, Section F is titled "Liability, Indemnity and Insurance" and as provider of the indemnity, short of passing that obligation off to an insurance company, [Motor Carrier] is for all practical purposes an insurer and [Equipment Provider] the insured.

NYK Line v. P. B. Industries, Inc., No. TH02-0074-C-T/H, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13956, 2004 WL 1629613, at *4 (S.D. Ind. Apr. 20, 2004) (footnote omitted). This Agreement is effectively an insurance contract, which is the exception to the Mass Transit general rule that "contracts will not be construed [17] to indemnify a person against his own negligence unless an intention to do so is expressed in those very words or in other unequivocal terms." See Mass Transit, 708 A.2d at 303 (quoting Heat & Power, 578 A.2d at 1206-07).

Empire nevertheless contends Mass Transit is distinguishable and that the New York Federal District Court cases are in error because the agreement in the Mass Transit case "includ[ed] the requirement that MTA insure CSXT and a specific requirement that MTA add CSXT as an insured under MTA's insurance policy." See id. at 301. Empire contends the Agreement here did not require Empire to provide insurance for CMA. To support this contention, Empire refers to the addendum to the Agreement, a "Certificate of Liability Insurance" that includes an "Equipment Provider List." On this list, certain equipment providers have either a single or double asterisk next to their names. The addendum provides, "The [18] companies above indicated with a single asterisk require that you make them additional insured on your General Liability Policy. The companies above indicated with a double asterisk require that you make them additional insured on your Cargo and/or Trailer Interchange coverages." Empire asserts that because CGA does not have an asterisk by its name, it did not have to be named an additional insured and that Mass Transit therefore does not apply. As noted above, the Agreement provides that the addendum is part of the Agreement, "but only to the extent that its terms do not conflict with this Agreement." The plain language of the Agreement requires Empire to provide "insurance coverages in fulfillment of its legal liability and obligations contained in this Agreement." Under the Mass Transit analysis, this indicates a clear and unequivocal intention to indemnify CMA for its own acts or omissions. To the extent that the addendum conflicts with that clear and unequivocal intent, the Agreement provides that it is not binding upon the parties.

We hold that the Agreement is enforceable under Maryland law and that the trial court erred by dismissing the suit on the grounds that the Agreement [19] was not enforceable.

We sustain CMA's first issue.

Spoliation

In its third issue, CMA challenges the trial court's order imposing a spoliation instruction as a discovery sanction. CMA contends that the trial court erred by deciding that at the time of the trial of Aguirre's claims, it would prohibit CMA from entering certain evidence and instruct the jury that the missing evidence should be presumed to be harmful to CMA's case. However, Aguirre and CMA settled the case without a jury trial, and they asked the trial court to accept the settlement. To the extent that CMA is challenging the spoliation order granted in favor of Aguirre, CMA has waived any complaint because the case settled without [*18] a jury trial. See Baker v. Fed. Exp. Corp., 224 S.W.3d 390, 394 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, no pet.) (finding party waived complaint concerning spoliation instruction where trial court did not instruct jury and parties asked court to accept settlement agreement); see also Psych. Inst. of Am., Inc. v. O'Neill, 819 S.W.2d 805, 806 (Tex. 1991) (orig. proceeding) (holding mandamus concerning discovery dispute was rendered moot by settlement of underlying case).

In this appeal, CMA also asserts [20] that the spoliation ruling affects whether we should apply Texas law or Maryland law. That argument was raised in Empire's motion for summary judgment. However, the trial court expressly stated, and the parties agreed, that the trial court was only construing the Agreement as a matter of law and the court was not ruling on any of the issues raised in the motions for summary judgment. Because the trial court never ruled on the matter of whether the spoliation of evidence would affect which law should be applied, nothing is preserved for our review. See TEX. R. APP. P. 33.1(a)(2)(A); De Mino v. Sheridan, 176 S.W.3d 359, 373 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 2004, no pet.) (holding HN4 party must obtain ruling on motion to preserve error). Finding nothing preserved for our review, we overrule CMA's third issue.

Conclusion

We reverse the trial court's order dismissing CMA-CGM (America) Inc.'s cross-claim and remand this cause to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Jeanne,

E.2

The first one works best from our point of view as it is the same as what has been included in other states. This in our view will lead to less confusion down the road and insure consistency in maintaining insurance coverage as equipment moves from state to state. However, either amendment will work as both make clear that the new section does not apply to an agreement that provides for the interchange, use or possession of intermodal chassis, intermodal containers, or other intermodal equipment.

Again, thanks you your assistance on this and please let me know if you have additional questions.

CS for HB 381
SELF DEFENSE

The CS for HB 381 recognizes that Alaskan residents have right to use deadly force to protect their families, persons and property whether they are at home, work, or in any place they have a right to be present. It does this by expanding your right to stand your ground to where they have a right to be.

By expanding the rights of Alaskans to stand their ground to any place they are legally present we tell our residents that their decision to use deadly force to defend themselves and their families will not be second judged, and makes it clear that it is criminals who have a duty to retreat.

I believe that HB 381 strengthens the legal recognition of the basic human right of self defense and ask for your support.

MEMORANDUM February 26, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary - HB 381 (Work Order No. 26-LS1534\R)

TO: Representative Mark Neuman
Attn: Jim Ellis

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, please note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill -- the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill amends AS 11.81.335(b) by adding to the places or locations where a person can use deadly force in self-defense without having to first leave the area.

Section 2 of the bill amends AS 11.81 by adding a new section that establishes that certain situations constitute prima facie evidence that a person's belief that the use of deadly force was reasonable; and requires law enforcement to make a probable cause determination that the force used by a person was unlawful before the person may be arrested.

10-111.plm

Sec. 11.81.335. Justification: Use of deadly force in defense of self.

(a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who is justified in using nondeadly force in self-defense under AS 11.81.330 may use deadly force in self-defense upon another person when and to the extent the person reasonably believes the use of deadly force is necessary for self-defense against

(1) death;

(2) serious physical injury;

(3) kidnapping, except for what is described as custodial interference in the first degree in AS 11.41.320 ;

(4) sexual assault in the first degree;

(5) sexual assault in the second degree;

(6) sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree; or

(7) robbery in any degree.

(b) A person may not use deadly force under this section if the person knows that, with complete personal safety and with complete safety as to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area of the encounter, except there is no duty to leave the area if the person is

(1) on premises

(A) that the person owns or leases;

(B) where the person resides, temporarily or permanently; or

(C) as a guest or express or implied agent of the owner, lessor, or resident;

(2) a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment or a person assisting a peace officer under AS 11.81.380;

(3) in a building where the person works in the ordinary course of the person's employment; or

(4) protecting a child or a member of the person's household.

Sec. 11.81.340. Justification: Use of force in defense of a third person.

A person is justified in using force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to defend a third person when, under the circumstances as the person claiming defense of another reasonably believes them to be, the third person would be justified under AS 11.81.330 or 11.81.335 in using that degree of force for self-defense.

Sec. 11.81.350. Justification: Use of force in defense of property and premises.

(a) A person may use nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission by the other of an unlawful taking or damaging of property or services.

(b) A person may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission of arson upon a dwelling or occupied building.

(c) A person in possession or control of any premises, or a guest or an express or implied agent of that person, may use

(1) nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission by the other of criminal trespass in any degree upon the premises;

(2) deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be a burglary in any degree occurring in an occupied dwelling or building.

(d) [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 68 SLA 2006].

(e) A person

(1) in a vehicle, or forcibly removed from a vehicle, may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be a carjacking of that vehicle at or about the time the vehicle is carjacked;

(2) outside of a vehicle may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the theft of that vehicle when another person, other than the perceived offender, is inside of the vehicle; this paragraph does not apply to a person outside of a vehicle who is involved in a dispute with a person inside of the vehicle who is a household member of that person; in this paragraph, "household member" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990 .

(f) A person justified in using force under this section does not have a duty to leave or attempt to leave the area of the encounter before using force.

(g) In (e) of this section,

(1) "carjacking" means a robbery involving the taking or attempted taking of a vehicle from a person in possession of the vehicle;

(2) "vehicle" means a "motor vehicle" as defined in AS 28.40.100 , an aircraft, or a watercraft.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

House Bill 381 expands the places from which a person need not retreat before using deadly force in self-defense to any place the person has a right to be. Thus, even though a person knows that with complete safety to oneself and others the person can leave the area of the encounter, the person is justified in using deadly force if the person is in a place the person has a right to be. There is no time limit when a person could use deadly force and be presumed to be acting in self defense.

HB 381 also adopts evidentiary presumptions that the use of deadly force is reasonable. The prosecution already is required to disprove self-defense beyond a reasonable doubt, and this will make that burden even higher.

This bill will make prosecution of homicide cases more difficult for the prosecution, and it will probably result in more jury trials. The Criminal Division anticipates it would need 2 new FTE attorney positions to handle the increased cases, to both screen referrals and prosecute those that are accepted.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill amends AS 11.81.335 (justification for the use of deadly force) by adding areas (exceptions) a person is not required to leave prior to the application of deadly force. This bill also adds a new section that provides prima facie evidence for the justification for the use of deadly force. Finally, this bill prohibits a law enforcement agency from arresting a person for using force permitted under AS 11.81.355.

Passage of this legislation will have no fiscal impact on the department.

Re: House Bill 381

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to express my serious concern over the current language in House Bill 381. Every experienced prosecutor with whom I have spoken about this bill uniformly agrees that it would promote violence and be a bad idea for our state. We believe that as drafted this bill will encourage unnecessary violence in our state. Whatever source one thinks our laws should be drawn from – the ten commandments which say "thou shall not kill," simple morality, utilitarianism principles of the greater good, or simply the concept that life is sacred –this bill would encourage the needless taking of human life.

AS 11.81.335(b) as currently written sets forth the duty to retreat before resorting to deadly force. It requires that if "with complete personal safety and with complete safety to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area" then the person must do so. This avoids the unnecessary loss of life and encourages our citizens to seek ways other than violence to resolve disputes. The addition of subsections 5 and 6 to this statute eradicates the duty to retreat - in fact should they be enacted, there would no longer be a duty to retreat in Alaska. That is to say if person A could avoid killing person B by walking away, he/she would no longer be required to do so, but instead would be authorized by law to kill person B. This does not promote the protection of our citizens or suggest that Alaska as a state places a high value on life itself. While this is highly unlikely to have been the goal of the bill's sponsors, it is nevertheless the result of what has been proposed. This is best explained by closely examing the language of the proposed changes and additions.

Section 1 of the bill proposes amending AS 11.81.335(b) by adding a subsection (5) that would say there would be no duty to retreat when the person is "in a vehicle" owned, leased, used, or even just occupied with the owner's consent. Here are but just three examples of how this would encourage violence:

First example:

A person picks up a hitchhiker, or offers a ride to someone, and, for whatever reason, a confrontation arises while in the vehicle such that deadly force could be used, but for the duty to retreat. Under the current law the hitchhiker must leave your vehicle if he knows he can do so safely. Under the proposed amendment, that hitchhiker would be authorized to kill the driver instead -- even if he could have simply walked away. These facts are similar of a recent murder trial in Anchorage, but they are close. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for second-degree murder. The case is now on appeal. Why would we want to say killing another person is okay when it could be avoided? Why would we want to authorize the taking of a life when one could walk away in complete safety?

Second Example:

Joe Smith drives to a party. At the party he gets into an altercation and is thrown out of the party. He goes to his car and gets inside to leave. Before leaving, Mr. Smith sees the person with whom he got into the altercation. Though Mr. Smith is in his car, behind the wheel and ready to leave, he fears the other guy may come after him. Instead of driving off – which he could do with complete personal safety, he gets out of his car and grabs a shotgun from the trunk and kills the other man. Again, these are facts similar to a recent murder trial in Anchorage. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for manslaughter. The case is now on appeal. This is yet another situation in which our current law requires our citizens to walk away if they can do so with safety, but this proposed change in the law would authorize killing another human being instead.

Third Example:

An occupant in car A points a gun at the occupant in car B. If the occupant in car B can drive away with complete safety, then under the current law he must do so. Under the proposed change, the driver in car B would be authorized by this bill to open fire instead of driving away. The law of self-defense in Alaska requires the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt a defendant's claim of self-defense is not true. It is difficult to prove a negative. If the state cannot prove the negative beyond a reasonable doubt, then at least the state can try to prove that the driver of car B had a duty to retreat and could have done so. This law would eliminate that duty. That is a recipe for inviting gang violence on our streets. These facts are in fact very similar to another case prosecuted by our department. In 2006 there was a shooting at Reka and Bragaw in Anchorage. Two vehicles with young men exchanging gunfire. One young man was killed and the two men in the other vehicle were convicted of murder. One of those cases is on appeal. This loss of life occurred for one of the participants. What about the innocent bystander? For example, there was the election day shooting in Anchorage when a campaign worker for former Gov. Murkowski was hit by a stray bullet at campaign HQ in Anchorage across from the Sears mall. That case involved two vehicles with young men – not in gangs, but still rivals – who opened fire on one another. While we did prosecute the shooters in that case, do so would have been impossible under this law.

This bill would unintentionally encourage such conduct by making it legal or at least offering a defense – which even if not true – could not be disproved. In each of the four examples the defendants were convicted, but this proposed change would make such prosecutions much harder, if even possible.

The proposed subsection (6) in AS 11.81.330(b) would almost completely eliminate the duty to retreat. That subsection says there is no such duty when a person is "in any place where the person has a right to be." That means in the Diamond Mall, Sears Mall, McDonalds, or any other public location a person is no longer required to walk away from a confrontation, but instead may kill another citizen even if they could have walked away with complete safety. This does not express a value for human life. This does not encourage finding a resolution for disputes other than violence. The only time there would be a duty to retreat is if the person is some place they have no right to be – they must be trespassing, or committing a burglary in order to have such a duty. With this change you might as well simply eliminate the duty to retreat completely from our statutes.

The bill also proposes adding a new section that whittles away some of the other protections put in place to prevent unnecessary taking of human life. Our current self- defense law is set up with both a subjective and objective test to determine when deadly force is authorized. The subjective test means the person using the force believes he/she needs to do so. The objective tests means the "reasonable person" would have concluded the same thing. The added section proposes to eliminate the objective test in several circumstances: burglary, carjacking, and kidnapping. That is it takes away from the jury the question of whether a reasonable person would view a particular event as unlawful force against a person that required a response of deadly force. At first blush this seems reasonable. However, when you examine what is proposed more closely, it becomes very disturbing. To understand why, you must first understand each of the three crimes it references.

Burglary is found in AS 11.46 and not AS 11.41 because it is a crime against property, not a person. Burglary requires a person to enter a building with the intent to commit a crime – theft, vandalism, and assault are all examples. What must be noted though is that no person needs to be in the building in order for this to be a crime. If a person breaks into a home or business to steal something, this is a burglary. If a student breaks into a school to vandalize it, this is a burglary. If a person breaks into a home to assault another person – even if no one is home, this is still a burglary because burglary only addresses the entry of premises with the intent to commit a crime (called a target crime) whether that (target) crime is committed or not. This is why burglary is classified as a crime against property and not against a person.

Under current law non-deadly force may be used to protect property, and deadly force is only authorized when terminating an arson or attempted arson on a dwelling or occupied building (See AS 11.81.350(b)), or when terminating a burglary upon an occupied building or dwelling if the person using the force is in possession or control of that premises, or is a guest. See AS 11.81.350(c)).

The current bill would now authorize deadly force against a person who burgles a dwelling whether anyone was home or not. Thus deadly force may be used even when no human life is at risk.

The proposed bill would also authorize any person to use deadly force as compared to only a person who is in possession or control of or is an invited guest in the dwelling. This means the guy driving down the street may kill a person he thinks is breaking into a home. The state must disprove defense of property, so the state must disprove that a victim was committing burglary. While this new section is fraught with the potential for misunderstandings to lead to the unnecessary loss of human life, there is another more serious problem with this section. This new section authorizes deadly force against a person who is currently committing or had committed a burglary. This language authorizes vigilantism. It authorizes deadly force against any person whom the person using the force "had reason to believe" had – past tense – had committed a burglary. This new section says such force is reasonable. The only question left is if the person using the force also thought it was "reasonable."

The section on carjacking does the same thing. It authorizes the use of deadly force against someone who had -- past tense -- taken a car by force. Even if no human life was at risk in the taking, this law would say it is okay to kill to keep your car from being taken from you or afterwards. That sounds like retaliation and vigilantism, not like a legislature enacting laws to protect our citizens and improve our lives.

The kidnapping subsection has the same issue with past tense. In each and every section this bill would legalize and authorize vigilantism.

Finally the bill also says no arrest may be made "unless the agency" determines that there is probable cause that the force that used was unlawful. This puts the police in a difficult position especially when confronting gang related violence. It is also unclear to whom "the agency" refers. This could potentially require magistrates and grand juries to start deciding if self-defense has been disproven. This in turn would require the state to act as defense counsel for the defendant to present such a defense only to have to then disprove it. This may sound confusing, and that is because this bill could cause serious problems in the criminal justice system with regard to self-defense law.

Thank you for your consideration of this letter.

Sincerely,

DANIEL S. SULLIVAN

76-2-402. Force in defense of person -- Forcible felony defined.

(1) A person is justified in threatening or using force against another when and to the extent that he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to defend himself or a third person against such other's imminent use of unlawful force. However, that person is justified in using force intended or likely to cause death or serious bodily injury only if he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to prevent death or serious bodily injury to himself or a third person as a result of the other's imminent use of unlawful force, or to prevent the commission of a forcible felony.

(2) A person is not justified in using force under the circumstances specified in Subsection (1) if he or she:

(a) initially provokes the use of force against himself with the intent to use force as an excuse to inflict bodily harm upon the assailant;

(b) is attempting to commit, committing, or fleeing after the commission or attempted commission of a felony; or

(c) (i) was the aggressor or was engaged in a combat by agreement, unless he withdraws from the encounter and effectively communicates to the other person his intent to do so and, notwithstanding, the other person continues or threatens to continue the use of unlawful force; and

(ii) for purposes of Subsection (i) the following do not, by themselves, constitute "combat by agreement":

(A) voluntarily entering into or remaining in an ongoing relationship; or

(B) entering or remaining in a place where one has a legal right to be.

(3) A person does not have a duty to retreat from the force or threatened force described in Subsection (1) in a place where that person has lawfully entered or remained, except as provided in Subsection (2)(c).

(4) For purposes of this section, a forcible felony includes aggravated assault, mayhem, aggravated murder, murder, manslaughter, kidnapping, and aggravated kidnapping, rape, forcible sodomy, rape of a child, object rape, object rape of a child, sexual abuse of a child, aggravated sexual abuse of a child, and aggravated sexual assault as defined in Title 76, Chapter 5, and arson, robbery, and burglary as defined in Title 76, Chapter 6. Any other felony offense which involves the use of force or violence against a person so as to create a substantial danger of death or serious bodily injury also constitutes a forcible felony. Burglary of a vehicle, defined in Section 76-6-204, does not constitute a forcible felony except when the vehicle is occupied at the time unlawful entry is made or attempted.

(5) In determining imminence or reasonableness under Subsection (1), the trier of fact may consider, but is not limited to, any of the following factors:

(a) the nature of the danger;

(b) the immediacy of the danger;

(c) the probability that the unlawful force would result in death or serious bodily injury;

(d) the other's prior violent acts or violent propensities; and

(e) any patterns of abuse or violence in the parties' relationship.

Title XLVI CRIMES

Chapter 776 JUSTIFIABLE USE OF FORCE

776.031 Use of force in defense of others.--A person is justified in the use of force, except deadly force, against another when and to the extent that the person reasonably believes that such conduct is necessary to prevent or terminate the other's trespass on, or other tortious or criminal interference with, either real property other than a dwelling or personal property, lawfully in his or her possession or in the possession of another who is a member of his or her immediate family or household or of a person whose property he or she has a legal duty to protect. However, the person is justified in the use of deadly force only if he or she reasonably believes that such force is necessary to prevent the imminent commission of a forcible felony. A person does not have a duty to retreat if the person is in a place where he or she has a right to be.

House Bill 386
Sponsor Statement

"An Act establishing a uniform format and procedure for citations for certain violations of state law; relating to the form, issuance, and disposition of citations for certain violations; relating to certain crimes and penalties for noncompliance with citations; and providing for an effective date."

House Bill 386 gives the Department of Public Safety necessary authority to prescribe a uniform citation format and process. Standardizing the citation process will improve efficiency and interdepartmental communications, facilitating electronic sharing of citation data between law enforcement, prosecution, courts and state and municipal collection departments.

By standardizing deadlines for payments, responses and paperwork filing by the citation issuer, HB 386 will also reduce confusion for citizens receiving citations and allow more fines to be paid through the courts' online e-payment system. A standard process is also an integral step in preparing for a statewide database and digital interoperability.

HB 386
Uniform Citations - Overview
Prepared by Representative Mike Hawker's Office

HB 386 establishes and requires the use of a uniform format, process and standard deadlines for citations issued in the state. The process is contained in sections 21 – 31 of the bill. The rest of the bill adopts the standard process for various citations.

Uniform Citation Process and Format contained in AS 12.25.175 – 12.25.230:

- 12.25.175 (new section of law) sets out requirements for the standard citation format, requires the commissioner of the Department of Public Safety to provide or prescribe the standard citation formats, and enables the commissioner to adopt regulations. Uniform citations must adhere to a statewide numbering system and contain specific information described in AS 12.25.200 (b). The citation issuer is also required to make an oath or affirmation, if authorized to do so, or make a statement under penalty of perjury that the citation was true and personally served on the person charged.

- 12.25.180 (existing law) clarifies when an officer can issue a citation instead of making an arrest. Most of the changes reword existing law for clarity and have no substantive effect.
  - In (a)(2), the requirement that the officer have "reasonable and probable cause to believe" that a person is a danger to self or others is replaced with "reasonably believes." Probable cause indicates there are certain elements that must be met, whereas a reasonable belief can be articulated more easily. Because it is within the officer's discretion to arrest or issue a citation, that determination should be based on a reasonable belief, rather than probable cause.
  - In (b)(2), the requirement that the person receiving the citation provide a written promise to appear in court is removed to facilitate electronic transmission of the citation. The required issuer's oath or statement that a copy of the citation was correctly served (required by AS 12.25.175) satisfies the intent of this statute.

- 12.25.190 (existing law) clarifies when a person shall be given a five-day notice to appear in court. Most of the changes are language repeals to accommodate the standard process adopted in this legislation and rewording for clarity.
  - The provision allowing a person to request a hearing earlier than five days after the citation is issued is repealed. Officers in the field cannot always forward a citation to the court for a hearing in fewer than five days.

- 12.25.195 (existing law) outlines the disposition of "scheduled offenses" – violations that have an established bail or fine amount. If a person doesn't contest the citation, there is a standard 30 day deadline for paying the bail or fine, regardless of the type of citation.

- 12.25.200 (existing law) specifies a format for citations. The changes to this section expand its applicability to all citations, instead of just those issued by law enforcement.

- 12.25.210 (existing law) outlines recordkeeping requirements for citation issuers. The changes to this section expand its applicability to all citations, instead of just those issued by law enforcement. This section also sets a 10 working day deadline for citations to be filed with the court and clarifies that missing the filing deadline does not negate the citation.

- 12.25.230 (existing law) outlines the penalties for failure to pay a fine or appear in court, as required by a citation. The current language is confusing. While having two sections implies that that each offense should have a different penalty, because the type of misdemeanor is not defined, they can be interpreted to apply the same penalty to both types of citation. Under HB 386, there would be a bright line between offenses that require a court appearance and "scheduled offenses" which carry a particular fine and can be paid by mail.

- 12.25.230 (a) states that the penalty for failing to appear to answer a citation that requires a court appearance would be a class A misdemeanor (see penalties above).
- 12.25.230 (b) states that the penalty for failing to appear or pay the bail or fine for a citation for a "scheduled offense" is a class B misdemeanor, which is punishable by up to a $2,000 fine and/or imprisonment of up to 90 days.

Statutory changes to implement the Uniform Citation Process and Format for various violations:

- Sections 1, 4, 7, 9, 14, 17, 34, 37, 38, 39, 40, 44, 45, 49, 56 and 57 are statutory references changed or added to reference the standard citation process and format:

- Sections 2, 5, 32, 35, 41, 54, and 56 reflect the standard deadline of 30 days for payment for a "scheduled offense" citation (see AS 12.25.195). These sections also add language specifying that this deadline is for violators who plead "no contest," since a person contesting the citation wouldn't be sending in a payment.

- Sections 3, 6, 33, 36, 42, 53, and 55 are individual penalty sections that are amended or repealed and reenacted to adopt the uniform penalties in AS 12.25.230.

- Sections 10, 14, 18, 45 and 49 remove the condition that a citation be "in writing" (see notes for AS 12.25.180 (b)(2)).

- Sections 11, 15, 19, 46, and 50 reflect the five day notice and repeal language allowing a person to request an earlier hearing (see notes for AS 12.25.190).

- Sections 12 and 51 reflect the 10 day deadline for a citation to be filed with the court by the citation issuer (see AS 12.25.210).

- Sections 13, 16, 20, 47, and 52 repeal language specifying what needs to be in particular citations and instead state that a citation that complies with the uniform format is considered to be a lawful complaint for the purposes of prosecution.

Miscellaneous Sections:

- Sections 8 and 24 ensure that the law is consistent after other previously enacted bills sunset. The language mirrors language found in sections 7 and 23, respectively.

- Section 43 allows citations to be given for violations in the Knik River Public Use Area.

- Section 48 allows DPS to establish regulations to implement standardized citations.

- Section 58 repeals statutes regarding citation formats that are made moot by adoption of the standardized format in this bill.

- Sections 59-63 provide applicability instructions, transitional provisions and effective dates.

Amendments to HB 386 (26-LS1525\A)

Add new sections:

- Sec. 16.05.165. Form and issuance of citation.
  (a) When a peace officer stops or contacts a person concerning a violation of this title except AS 16.51 and AS 16.52 or of a regulation adopted under this title except AS 16.51 and AS 16.52 that is a misdemeanor, the peace officer may, in the officer's discretion, issue a citation to the person as provided in AS 12.25.175 – 12.25.230 [AS 12.25.180].

- AS 46.06.080(f) is repealed and reenacted to read:
  (f) A person cited under this section is guilty of failure to obey a citation under AS 12.25.230 if the person fails to pay the fine or to appear in court as required.

Amend Existing Sections as follows:

- Page 2 line 29, through page 3, line 2: DELETE ALL MATERIAL AND INSERT:
  * Sec. 6. AS 04.21.065(j) is repealed and reenacted to read:
  (j) A person cited under this section is guilty of failure to obey a citation under AS 12.25.230 if the person fails to pay the bail amount established under (g) of this section or to appear in court as required.

- Please delete the sentence ""The citation is considered a summons for a failure to obey a citation under AS 12.25.230, and the court may issue a bench warrant." where it appears in the bill. Hopefully this is a comprehensive list:
  - Page 2, lines 14-16: AS 04.16.205 (f)
  - Page 10, lines 26-28: AS 16.05.165 (e)
  - Page 11, lines 14-16: AS 18.35.341
  - Page 12, line 30 – Page 13, line 1: AS 41.21.960(e)

This bill provides for statutory amendments and would require all citations issued in Alaska to be in the form designated by the Department of Public Safety. According to the new section, AS 12.25.175(b), DPS will either "provide or prescribe citation forms for use by...persons who are authorized by law to issue citations." The Department of Law does not anticipate a fiscal impact from this bill.

This bill would set a uniform standard for citations used by law enforcement agencies and facilitate the electronic transfer of information. This legislation will help eliminate the need for duplicative data entry and reduce data entry errors.

This legislation will have no fiscal cost and is expected to increase the productivity of the department in the long term.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to misconduct involving weapons."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.61.200(b) is amended to read:

(b) The provisions of [IT IS AN AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE TO A PROSECUTION]

(1) [UNDER] (a)(1) of this section do not apply to a person if [THAT]

(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;

(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or

(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(1) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory;

(2) [UNDER] (a)(2) or (10) of this section do not apply to a person if [THAT]

(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;

(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or

(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense and the date of the violation of (a)(2) or (10) of this section, and the prior conviction did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory.

 Sec. 2. AS 11.61.200(a)(12), 11.61.200(f), and 11.61.200(g) are repealed.

HB408 "An Act relating to misconduct involving weapons"

Under Alaska law, an individual who has been convicted of a felony can carry hand guns and have their right to bear arms restored by any of three occurrences: (1) a pardon, (2) the underlying conviction having been set aside under AS 12.55.085, or (3) by the passage of ten years time from an unconditional discharge.

However, the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Caron v. U.S., 524 U.S. 308 (1988), ruled that if a person who has been previously convicted of a felony is prohibited from possessing firearms, in any way, under state law, then they are prohibited from possessing firearms under federal law. While under state law a previously convicted ex-felon's right to possession of firearms is fully restored, there are still limitations on carrying concealed weapons. Ex-felons can carry concealed on their own property, while engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, or trapping, or when engaged in another lawful activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

However, the ATF and the FBI are interpreting this Alaska statute to be a restriction upon possession. Because of this interpretation, Alaskans who under state law are allowed to possess firearms are being threatened with prosecution for serious Federal offenses.

This bill addresses the language in AS 11.61.200, Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree. AS 11.61.200(a)(12) bars all people convicted of felonies from caring concealed weapons, while AS 11.61.200(g) sets out exemptions to (a)(12)'s blanket ban.

The Alaska State Legislature has made its own policy decision about how to handle the gun rights of ex-felons; however the Federal Government has stripped Alaska of the right to make its own judgments, excepting an all-or-nothing decision on gun rights for ex-felons. HB408 is one of many bills that have been drafted in this legislation session to bring this issue back before the Alaska State Legislature for consideration.

We appreciate your input and assistance in determining the direction of this important policy decision.

HB 408 proposes amendments to the law relating to misconduct involving weapons in the third degree. It changes the affirmative defense, for example, to the crime of a felon in possession of a concealable weapon. Under current law it is an affirmative defense to this charge if the person had received a pardon, the conviction was set aside, or 10 years had elapsed from the felony conviction and the felony conviction was not a crime against a person. The bill would provide that the crime of felon in possession of a concealable weapon would not apply to these persons, rather than that the circumstances give rise to an affirmative defense. Enactment of the bill is not anticipated to fiscally impact the Department of Law.

This legislation would amend AS 11.61.200(b) and repeal (f) and (g), (misconduct involving weapons in the third degree). This bill changes language from one that currently provides an affirmative defense to prosecution, to one that states this statue "does not apply" if certain qualifiers exist.

Passage of this legislation will have no fiscal impact on the department.

Background Information
House Bill 408
Restoration of Firearm Rights in Alaska

• Under Alaska State law, a person who has been convicted of a felony is NOT prohibited from possessing a rifle or shotgun. In effect, the person's right to possess such a firearm is restored by operation of law upon the person's release from incarceration.

• Under Alaska State law, a person who has been convicted of a felony IS prohibited from possessing a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(1)) and, separately, IS prohibited from possessing a firearm that is actually concealed on the person (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(12)).

• Alaska State law also provides, however, for an "affirmative defense" to a prosecution under either the felon-in-possession-of-a-concealable-firearm statute or the felon-in-possession-of-a-concealed-firearm statute if the person's civil rights have been restored as follows:

(1) For possession of firearms capable of being concealed, if the person has received a pardon or if the conviction has been set aside or if a period of ten years or more has elapsed since the date of the person's unconditional discharge (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(b)); and

(2) For possession of firearms that are actually concealed, if the person has received a pardon or if the conviction has been set aside or if a period of ten years or more has elapsed since the date of the person's unconditional discharge. The restoration of the right to possess a concealed firearm is further limited, however, to the following circumstances: in the person's dwelling, on land owned or leased by the person appurtenant to the dwelling or while the person is actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)).

• Further, it is important to note that under Alaska State law, restoration, by operation of law after the passage of time, of the right to possess either a firearm that is capable of being concealed or a firearm that actually is concealed is limited to persons who were NOT convicted of an offense against the person (Alaska Stat § 11.41).

• It is also important to note that under Alaska State law, the rights to vote (and, as a qualified voter, to hold public office) and to serve on a jury are lost upon conviction of a felony but automatically restored, by operation of law, immediately upon the person's unconditional discharge (Alaska Stat. §§ 09.20.020; 15.05.030(a); 33.30.241).

• Under Federal law, a person who has been convicted of a "crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year" may not possess a firearm (18 USC § 922(g)).

• Federal law also provides, however, that "any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction...UNLESS such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not...possess firearms" (18 USC § 921(a)(20)).

• In the case of Caron v. United States (524 U.S. 308 (1998)), the Supreme Court of the United States:

(1) Found that "nothing in the text of §921(a)(20) requires a case-by-case decision to restore civil rights" so restoration of such rights by operation of law is sufficient; and

(2) Interpreted the aforementioned "unless clause" found in 18 USC § 921 (a)(20). The Court held that an "all-or-nothing" test must be applied and that "a state weapons 'limitation' activates the uniform ban on possessing any firearm at all." In other words, a state must completely restore "all" of a person's rights and treat the person whose rights have been restored in the same manner that other law-abiding citizens are treated. If a person does not have "all" rights restored by the state then, for the purpose of federal law, the person has no rights. Subsequent cases have held that complete restoration of "all" rights includes, not only ALL firearm rights, but also the rights to vote, hold public office and serve on a jury.

• Alaska State law contains two "limitations" on persons who have had their right to possess firearms otherwise restored that are not imposed on persons who have never lost their rights and which, therefore, activate the federal ban on possessing any firearm at all:

(1) A person whose right to possess firearms has been otherwise restored can not possess a firearm concealed outside their dwelling, property or while engaged in a lawful outdoor activity (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)(2); and

(2) A person whose right to possess firearms has been otherwise restored would be in the position of having to raise an affirmative defense to a charge of either possessing a concealable firearm (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(b)) or carrying a firearm concealed (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)), while a person who never lost his or her rights cannot be charged with such a crime whatsoever.

• Unless the Alaska State Legislature amends existing law to modify these two limitations, the existing policy of the State of Alaska to allow for the restoration of firearm rights cannot be implemented without impacted persons being subject to felony prosecution under Federal law.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 97—6270

GERALD R. CARON, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

[June 22, 1998]

Justice Kennedy delivered the opinion of the Court.

Under federal law, a person convicted of a crime punishable by more than one year in prison may not possess any firearm. 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). If he has three violent felony convictions and violates the statute, he must receive an enhanced sentence. §924(e). A previous conviction is a predicate for neither the substantive offense nor the sentence enhancement if the offender has had his civil rights restored, "unless such ... restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not ... possess ... firearms." §921(a)(20). This is the so-called "unless clause" we now must interpret. As the ellipses suggest, the statute is more complex, but the phrase as quoted presents the issue for our decision.

The parties, reflecting a similar division among various Courts of Appeals, disagree over the interpretation of the unless clause in the following circumstance. What if the State restoring the offender's rights forbids possession of some firearms, say pistols, but not others, say rifles? In one sense, he "may not ... possess ... firearms" under the unless clause because the ban on specified weapons is a ban on "firearms." In another sense, he can possess firearms under the unless clause because the state ban is not absolute. Compare, e.g., United States v. Estrella, 104 F.3d 3, 8 (CA1) (adopting former reading), cert. denied, 521 U.S. ___ (1997) and United States v. Driscoll, 970 F.2d 1472, 1480–1481 (CA6 1992) (same), cert. denied, 506 U S. 1083 (1993), with United States v. Qualls, ___ F.3d ___, No. 95–50378, 1998 WL 149393, *2 (CA9, Apr. 2, 1998) (en banc) (intermediate position), and United States v. Shoemaker, 2 F.3d 53, 55–56 (CA4 1993) (same), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1047 (1994).

The Government contends the class of criminals who "may not ... possess ... firearms" includes those forbidden to have some guns but not others. On this reading, the restoration of rights is of no effect here, the previous offenses are chargeable, and petitioner's sentence must be enhanced. On appeal, the Government's position prevailed in the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, and we now affirm its judgment.

I

Petitioner Gerald Caron has an extensive criminal record, including felonies. In Massachusetts state court, he was convicted in 1958 of attempted breaking and entering at night and, in 1959 and 1963, of breaking and entering at night. In California state court, he was convicted in 1970 of assault with intent to commit murder and attempted murder.

In July 1993, petitioner walked into the home of Walter Miller, carrying a semiautomatic rifle. He threatened Miller, brandished the rifle in his face, and pointed it at his wife, his daughters, and his 3-year-old grandson. Police officers disarmed and arrested petitioner.

In September 1993, a federal agent called on petitioner at home to determine if he had other unlawful firearms. Petitioner said he had only flintlock or other antique weapons (not forbidden by law) and owned no conventional firearms. Federal law, the agent told him, forbade his possession of firearms and was not superseded by state law. In December 1993, agents executed a search warrant at petitioner's house, seizing six rifles and shotguns and 6,823 rounds of ammunition.

A federal jury convicted petitioner of four counts of possessing a firearm or ammunition after having been convicted of a serious offense. See 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). The District Court enhanced his sentence because he was at least a three-time violent felon, based on his one California and three Massachusetts convictions. See §924(e). Petitioner claimed the Court should not have counted his Massachusetts convictions because his civil rights had been restored by operation of Massachusetts law. Massachusetts law allowed petitioner to possess rifles or shotguns, as he had the necessary firearm permit and his felony convictions were more than five years old. Mass. Gen. Laws §§140:123, 140:129B, 140:129C (1996). The law forbade him to possess handguns outside his home or business. See §§140:121, 140:131, 269:10.

At first, the District Court rejected the claim that Massachusetts had restored petitioner's civil rights. It held civil rights had to be restored by an offender-specific action rather than by operation of law. The First Circuit disagreed, vacating the sentence and remanding the case. United States v. Caron, 77 F.3d 1, 2, 6 (1996) (en banc). We denied certiorari. 518 U.S. 1027 (1996). On remand, the District Court, interpreting the unless clause of the federal statute, disregarded the Massachusetts convictions. It ruled Massachusetts law did not forbid petitioner's possession of firearms because he could possess rifles. 941 F. Supp. 238, 251–254 (Mass. 1996). Though Massachusetts restricted petitioner's right to carry a handgun, the District Court considered the restriction irrelevant because his case involved rifles and shotguns. See ibid. The First Circuit reversed, counting the convictions because petitioner remained subject to significant firearms restrictions. We granted certiorari. 522 U.S. ___ (1998).

II

A federal statute forbids possession of firearms by those convicted of serious offenses. An abbreviated version of the statute is as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person-

"(1) who has been convicted in any court of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year;

. . . . .

"to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce." 18 U.S.C. § 922(g).

Three-time violent felons who violate §922(g) face enhanced sentences of at least 15 years' imprisonment. §924(e)(1). "Violent felony" is defined to include burglary and other crimes creating a serious risk of physical injury. §924(e)(2)(B)(ii). This term includes petitioner's previous offenses discussed above.

Not all violent felony convictions, however, count for purposes of §922(g) or §924(e). Until 1986, federal law alone determined whether a state conviction counted, regardless of whether the State had expunged the conviction. Dickerson v. New Banner Institute, Inc., 460 U.S. 103, 119–122 (1983). Congress modified this aspect of Dickerson by adopting the following language:

"What constitutes a conviction of such a crime shall be determined in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held. Any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of this chapter, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms." §921(a)(20).

The first sentence and the first clause of the second sentence define convictions, pardons, expungements, and restorations of civil rights by reference to the law of the convicting jurisdiction. See Beecham v. United States, 511 U.S. 368, 371 (1994).

Aside from the unless clause, the parties agree Massachusetts law has restored petitioner's civil rights. As for the unless clause, state law permits him to possess rifles and shotguns but forbids him to possess handguns outside his home or business. The question presented is whether the handgun restriction activates the unless clause, making the convictions count under federal law.

We note these preliminary points. First, Massachusetts restored petitioner's civil rights by operation of law rather than by pardon or the like. This fact makes no difference. Nothing in the text of §921(a)(20) requires a case-by-case decision to restore civil rights to this particular offender. While the term "pardon" connotes a case-by-case determination, "restoration of civil rights" does not. Massachusetts has chosen a broad rule to govern this situation, and federal law gives effect to its rule. All Courts of Appeals to address the point agree. See Caron, 77 F.3d, at 2; McGrath v. United States, 60 F.3d 1005, 1008 (CA2 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1121 (1996); United States v. Hall, 20 F.3d 1066, 1068–1069 (CA10 1994); United States v. Glaser, 14 F.3d 1213, 1218 (CA7 1994); United States v. Thomas, 991 F.2d 206, 212–213 (CA5), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1014 (1993); United States v. Dahms, 938 F.2d 131, 133–134 (CA9 1991); United States v. Essick, 935 F.2d 28, 30–31 (CA4 1991); United States v. Cassidy, 899 F.2d 543, 550, and n. 14 (CA6 1990).

Second, the District Court ruled, and petitioner urges here, that the unless clause allows an offender to possess what state law permits him to possess, and nothing more. Here, petitioner's shotguns and rifles were permitted by state law, so, under their theory, the weapons would not be covered by the unless clause. While we do not dispute the common sense of this approach, the words of the statute do not permit it. The unless clause is activated if a restoration of civil rights "expressly provides that the person may not ... possess ... firearms." 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20). Either the restorations forbade possession of "firearms" and the convictions count for all purposes, or they did not and the convictions count not at all. The unless clause looks to the terms of the past restorations alone and does not refer to the weapons at issue in the present case. So if the Massachusetts convictions count for some purposes, they count for all and bar possession of all guns.

III

The phrase "may not ... possess ... firearms," then, must be interpreted under either of what the parties call the two "all-or-nothing" approaches. Either it applies when the State forbids one or more types of firearms, as the Government contends; or it does not apply if state law permits one or more types of firearms, regardless of the one possessed in the particular case.

Under the Government's approach, a state weapons limitation on an offender activates the uniform federal ban on possessing any firearms at all. This is so even if the guns the offender possessed were ones the State permitted him to have. The State has singled out the offender as more dangerous than law-abiding citizens, and federal law uses this determination to impose its own broader stricture.

Although either reading creates incongruities, petitioner's approach yields results contrary to a likely, and rational, congressional policy. If permission to possess one firearm entailed permission to possess all, then state permission to have a pistol would allow possession of an assault weapon as well. Under this view, if petitioner, in violation of state law, had possessed a handgun, the unless clause would still not apply because he could have possessed a rifle. Not only would this strange result be inconsistent with any conceivable federal policy, but it also would arise often enough to impair the working of the federal statute. Massachusetts, in this case, and some 15 other States choose to restore civil rights while restricting firearm rights in part. The permissive reading would make these partial restrictions a nullity under federal law, indeed in the egregious cases with the most dangerous weapons. Congress cannot have intended this bizarre result.

Under petitioner's all-or-nothing argument, federal law would forbid only a subset of activities already criminal under state law. This limitation would contradict the intent of Congress. In Congress' view, existing state laws "provide less than positive assurance that the person in question no longer poses an unacceptable risk of dangerousness." Dickerson, 460 U.S., at 120. Congress meant to keep guns away from all offenders who, the Federal Government feared, might cause harm, even if those persons were not deemed dangerous by States. See id., at 119. If federal law is to provide the missing "positive assurance," it must reach primary conduct not covered by state law. The need for this caution is borne out by petitioner's rifle attack on the Miller family, in which petitioner used a gun permitted by state law. Any other result would reduce federal law to a sentence enhancement for some state-law violations, a result inconsistent with the congressional intent we recognized in Dickerson. Permission to possess one gun cannot mean permission to possess all.

Congress responded to our ruling in Dickerson by providing that the law of the State of conviction, not federal law, determines the restoration of civil rights as a rule. While state law is the source of law for restorations of other civil rights, however, it does not follow that state law also controls the unless clause. Under the Government's approach, with which we agree, the federal policy still governs the interpretation of the unless clause. We see nothing contradictory in this analysis. Restoration of the right to vote, the right to hold office, and the right to sit on a jury turns on so many complexities and nuances that state law is the most convenient source for definition. As to the possession of weapons, however, the Federal Government has an interest in a single, national, protective policy, broader than required by state law. Petitioner's approach would undermine this protective purpose.

As a final matter, petitioner says his reading is required by the rule of lenity, but his argument is unavailing. The rule of lenity is not invoked by a grammatical possibility. It does not apply if the ambiguous reading relied on is an implausible reading of the congressional purpose. See United States v. Shabani, 513 U.S. 10, 17 (1994) (requiring use of traditional tools of statutory construction to resolve ambiguities before resorting to the rule of lenity). For the reasons we have explained, petitioner's reading is not plausible enough to satisfy this condition.

In sum, Massachusetts treats petitioner as too dangerous to trust with handguns, though it accords this right to law-abiding citizens. Federal law uses this state finding of dangerousness in forbidding petitioner to have any guns. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is Westlaw.

Supreme Court of Alaska.
Joseph R. GABRIELLE, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY, Appellee.
No. S-11490.

May 18, 2007.

Background: Applicant sought judicial review of decision by Department of Public Safety to revoke permit to carry concealed handgun and to deny application to renew permit. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Sharon L. Gleason, J., affirmed, and applicant appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court held that:
(1) applicant was not eligible for permit to carry concealed weapon under state law, and
(2) federal statute prohibiting possession of firearm by convicted felon did not render applicant whose prior felony conviction was pardoned ineligible for permit to carry concealed weapon.

Affirmed.

OPINION

PER CURIAM.

Joseph R. Gabrielle appeals the Alaska Department of Public Safety's refusal to renew his permit to carry a concealed handgun as well as the department's decision to revoke his existing permit. The department concluded that Gabrielle was ineligible for a permit because he was convicted of a felony in 1983 and Alaska law forbids a felon to carry a concealed handgun. Gabrielle, who received a gubernatorial pardon in 1993, argues that he is entitled to a permit because the plain language of the licensing statute does not prohibit a felon from obtaining a permit, and because he has an affirmative defense to criminal liability. Because the legislature intended to bar felons from obtaining concealed handgun permits, and because it would be futile to issue Gabrielle a permit to carry a concealed handgun that would not give him the right to carry a concealed handgun beyond that which is available to all citizens, we affirm the department's decision.

APPENDIX

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT FOR THE STATE OF ALASKA

THIRD JUDICIAL DISTRICT AT ANCHORAGE

vs.

STATE OF ALASKA, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY, Appellee.

Case No. 3AN-03-07244 CI

MEMORANDUM DECISION ON APPEAL

This is an appeal from a decision of the Department of Public Safety (DPS), which revoked Mr. Gabrielle's concealed handgun permit and refused to renew it. For the reasons set forth below, the decision of the Department is AFFIRMED.

Facts and Proceedings

In January 2003, the Alaska State Troopers Division of DPS revoked Mr. Gabrielle's concealed handgun permit and refused to renew the permit because Mr. Gabrielle had been convicted of two felonies in the early 1980's. The State Troopers took this action even though Mr. Gabrielle had received a pardon from Governor Hickel for the felony convictions in October 1993. Mr. Gabrielle appealed the Troopers' decision to the Commissioner of the Department of Public Safety in February 2003. On March 7, 2003, the Commissioner issued a letter denying that administrative appeal, and indicated that based on DPS's interpretation of the applicable statutes, specifically AS 11.61.200(a)(12) and (g), pardoned felons were precluded from obtaining handgun permits. The Commissioner's letter indicated that it "is a final administrative decision" and that Mr. Gabrielle could "seek judicial review of this decision under AS 44.62.560-44.62.570 within 30 days of receipt of this letter." The record reflects that Mr. Gabrielle received the letter on March 12, 2003.

On March 22, 2003, Mr. Gabrielle submitted a request for reconsideration to the Commissioner of DPS. On April 29, 2003, the Deputy Commissioner summarily denied the request, indicating that "there is no process for administrative 'reconsideration' of denial of an appeal."

On May 5, 2003, Mr. Gabrielle filed this appeal.

1. Is Mr. Gabrielle "eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state"?

© 2008 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Alaska Statute 18.65.705 lists several requirements for a person to be qualified to receive and hold a permit to carry a concealed handgun. The parties dispute whether Mr. Gabrielle meets one of those requirements-whether he "is eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state and under federal law." [FN2] The State argues that Mr. Gabrielle is not eligible under either state or federal law to possess a handgun, and this statutory subsection therefore precludes the issuance of the permit to Mr. Gabrielle.

FN2. AS 18.65.705(2).

[1] The state and federal statutes regulating possession and ownership of handguns do not involve substantial agency expertise. Accordingly, in construing these statutes in this administrative appeal, this court will apply its independent judgment in determining their meaning, adopting the rule that is most persuasive in light of precedent, reason, and policy.[FN3]

FN3. Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co. v. DeShong, 77 P.3d 1227, 1231 (Alaska 2003) (citation omitted).

[2] Turning first to state law, the State argues that pursuant to AS 11.61.200(a)(12), Mr. Gabrielle is precluded from possessing a handgun. This statute provides that a person*815 commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person "knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony...."

The parties dispute whether AS 11.61.200(g), which establishes an affirmative defense to this statutory provision, operates to allow Mr. Gabrielle to possess a handgun. AS 11.61.200(g) provides:

> It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that
> (1) either
>
> (A) the defendant convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
> (B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
> (C) a period of ten years or more has elapsed between the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior offense ... and the date of the violation of (a)(12) of this section, and the prior conviction ... did not result from a violation of AS 11.41...; and
> (2) at the time of possession, the defendant was
> (A) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or
> (B) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

(Emphasis added).

Mr. Gabrielle asserts that as a result of his pardon, he has an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12), and is thus eligible to possess a concealed handgun under state law. The State argues that the affirmative defense in subsection (g) requires not only that Mr. Gabrielle receive a pardon or qualify under either of the other two components of subsection (g)(1), but that he must also meet the requirements of subsection (g)(2), which limits the places where the concealed handgun may be possessed as a precondition to this affirmative defense. In response to this argument, Mr. Gabrielle asserts that subsection (2) of the statute only modifies subsection (1)(C), and is not an additional requirement for a person who has been pardoned who falls within subsection (1)(A).

The State's reading is consistent with fundamental principles of statutory construction. To be entitled to the affirmative defense under AS 11.61.200(g), a criminal defendant would need to establish at least one of the components of subsection (1) and one of the components of subsection (2).

(Emphasis added).

Mr. Gabrielle asserts that as a result of his pardon, he has an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12), and is thus eligible to possess a concealed handgun under state law. The State argues that the affirmative defense in subsection (g) requires not only that Mr. Gabrielle receive a pardon or qualify under either of the other two components of subsection (g)(1), but that he must also meet the requirements of subsection (g)(2), which limits the places where the concealed handgun may be possessed as a precondition to this affirmative defense. In response to this argument, Mr. Gabrielle asserts that subsection (2) of the statute only modifies subsection (1)(C), and is not an additional requirement for a person who has been pardoned who falls within subsection (1)(A).

The State's reading is consistent with fundamental principles of statutory construction. To be entitled to the affirmative defense under AS 11.61.200(g), a criminal defendant would need to establish at least one of the components of subsection (1) and one of the components of subsection (2).

© 2008 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The State then notes that AS 11.61.220(b)(1) and (2) permits all citizens to carry a concealed weapon in the same two circumstances specified in AS 11.61.200(g)(2).[FN4] Therefore, as the State correctly notes, "the net result of the statutory scheme is that a pardoned felon can only carry a concealed handgun in those situations where an ordinary citizen would be able to carry a concealed handgun without a permit."

FN4. [This reference is to a prior version of AS 11.61.220. Following both the department's revocation and the superior court's decision, the statute was amended in ways not relevant here.]

Under the statutory scheme, a pardoned felon could be prosecuted under AS 11.61.200(a)(12) for misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the individual possessed a concealed firearm at any place other than the two statutory exceptions set out in AS 11.61.200(g)(2)(A) and (B). And, unlike a prosecution under AS 11.61.220(a)(1) for fifth degree misconduct, it would not be a valid affirmative defense to a prosecution for violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(12) that the individual was the holder of a valid permit to carry a concealed handgun.[FN5]

FN5. See former AS 11.61.220(b)(3).

And yet, as a pardoned felon, Mr. Gabrielle is eligible to own or possess a concealed handgun in at least some locations within the state-within his dwelling and while hunting and undertaking other specified outdoor activities. Moreover, as a pardoned felon, he cannot be prosecuted for violation of *816AS 11.61.200(a)(1) for "knowingly possessing a firearm capable of being concealed."[FN6]

FN6. *See*AS 11.61.200(b)(1)(A).

Harmonizing these different statutory provisions is a somewhat tortured process from any perspective. But resolution of these provisions is best determined, in this court's view, by assessing the consequences of issuing a concealed handgun permit to Mr. Gabrielle. Under the statutory scheme, possession of such a permit would constitute an affirmative defense to one of the bases for misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree. Under AS 11.61.220(a)(1), a person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree if the person "knowingly possesses a deadly weapon ... that is concealed on the person." Under AS 11.61.220(b)(3), it is an affirmative defense to the prosecution for that crime that the person was "the holder of a valid permit to carry a concealed handgun." However, possession of the permit would not constitute a valid affirmative defense to a prosecution for misconduct involving weapons in the third degree based on a pardoned felon's knowing possession of a concealed firearm under AS 11.61.200(a)(12). And, as the State correctly notes, a pardoned felon has the same affirmative defenses as any other citizen to prosecution for weapons violations if, at the time of possession, the defendant was at his dwelling or actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involved the carrying of a weapon for personal protection. In effect, the fifth degree misconduct weapons charge is a lesser-included offense to the third degree charge for pardoned felons, but the affirmative defense of a permit is not available to pardoned felons in a prosecution under the third degree charge.

Accordingly, issuance of a concealed handgun permit to Mr. Gabrielle would serve no lawful purpose since such a permit could not serve as an affirmative defense to a prosecution under AS 11.61.200(a)(12). Therefore, the court finds that Mr. Gabrielle should not be considered "eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state."[FN7] Since such eligibility is one of the necessary qualifications for issuance of a concealed handgun permit,[FN8] DPS's revocation of the permit and denial of the permit renewal was appropriate. Moreover, such a result is consistent with the legislative history regarding the concealed handgun permitting laws.[FN9]

FN8. *See*AS 18.65.705.

FN9. See Sen. Green, Sponsor Statement for Senate Bill 141, 20th Leg., 1st Sess. (April 23, 1997) (noting the bill was intended to "make clear that no felon, even a non-violent felon, would ever be able to apply for a concealed carry permit").

2. Mr. Gabrielle is not precluded from owning and possessing a handgun under federal law.

[3] The State also asserts that Mr. Gabrielle cannot be issued a concealed carry permit because he is ineligible to own and possess a handgun under federal law. 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) provides in pertinent part:

> It shall be unlawful for any person ... who has been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year ... to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

However, 18 U.S.C. § 921 provides in pertinent part:

> Any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of this chapter, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms.

(Emphasis added.) Mr. Gabrielle's pardon did not expressly provide that he could not possess firearms. Therefore, federal law is not a bar to Mr. Gabrielle's permit eligibility.

The State asserts that two federal cases have held that this exception does not permit *817 the carrying of handguns if state law forbids it.[FN10] But neither Brown nor Caron were pardoned. Mr. Gabrielle references United States v. Laskie,[FN11] which held that Mr. Laskie's prior conviction could not be used as a predicated conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) because Mr. Laskie had been honorably discharged and that discharge did not include a prohibition of firearm possession. Further, in United States v. Gallaher,[FN12] the Ninth Circuit held:

> FN10. See Caron v. United States, 524 U.S. 308, 118 S.Ct. 2007, 141 L.Ed.2d 303 (1998); United States v. Brown, 69 F.Supp.2d 925 (E.D.Mich.1999).
> FN11. 258 F.3d 1047, 1052-53 (9th Cir.2001).
> FN12. 275 F.3d 784, 792 (9th Cir.2001).

> Under our decisions in Laskie and [United States v.] Herron[45 F.3d 340 (9th Cir. 1995)], a criminal defendant cannot be charged with a federal crime after receiving a certificate restoring his civil rights that contains no express warning that he cannot possess firearms in spite of the restoration of his civil rights or that his state conviction may constitute an element of a crime if he is found in possession of a weapon.

Following this case law, Mr. Gabrielle is not subject to the prohibition under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) since he received a pardon for his convictions and his pardon did not contain an express warning that he cannot possess firearms.

3. Conclusion

Because this court concludes that Mr. Gabrielle was not "eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state," the decision of the Department of Public Safety is AFFIRMED.

MEMORANDUM February 16, 2010

SUBJECT: Misconduct Involving Weapons and Felons
(Work Order No. 26-LS1459\A)

TO: Representative Bill Stoltze
Attn: Ben Mulligan

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

Enclosed is the bill draft you requested. As I have previously informed Ben, I have a few comments.

1. History of AS 11.61.200

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) does not completely include all conduct prohibited under AS 11.61.200(a)(12).

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) and (12) provide:

> (a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person
> (1) knowingly possesses a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;
> . . .
> (12) knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) prohibits a felon from possessing a firearm capable of being concealed on the person.[1] An affirmative defense is provided to AS 11.61.200(a)(1) in (b)(1) of that section.

> (b) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution
> (1) under (a)(1) of this section that
> (A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
> (B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
> (C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(1) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory . . . .

This affirmative defense allows the felon to possess a handgun if one of these requirements is met but does not necessarily allow the felon to carry the handgun concealed. The felon is prohibited from carrying the handgun concealed by AS 11.51.200(a)(12). An affirmative defense is provided to AS 11.61.200(a)(12) in (g) of that section.

> (g) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that
> (1) either
> (A) the defendant convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
> (B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
> (C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(12) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory; and
> (2) at the time of possession, the defendant was
> (A) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or

[1] For ease of discussion in this memorandum I will refer to "a firearm capable of being concealed on the person" as a handgun even though other firearms are capable of being concealed on the person.

> (B) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

This provision allows the felon to only carry a handgun concealed if the felon meets the requirements for possessing a handgun in the affirmative defense to (a)(1) and the felon is either in or on the felon's own property or otherwise engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity.

These provisions are different because one allows the handgun to be openly carried and the other sets a higher bar for the felon to carry the handgun concealed.

AS 11.61.220(a)(12) was enacted in 1998 as part of amendments to the concealed handgun permit laws. HCS CSSB 141(FIN) am H, by Senator Lyda Green, made substantial changes to the eligibility requirements to receive a concealed handgun permit and repealed almost all the restrictions on where a permittee could carry a concealed handgun. The rationale provided by Senator Lyda Green's staff was that anyone eligible to possess a handgun under state or federal law should be eligible to receive a concealed handgun permit and a person who has received a permit should be able to carry a concealed handgun anywhere not otherwise prohibited under state or federal law. To this end certain misdemeanor offenses that previously barred a person from receiving a permit were eliminated. In addition provisions relating to carrying a concealed firearm without a permit were strengthened and clarified while restrictions on where firearms could be possessed were mostly eliminated except for a few limited circumstances where those restrictions were applied generally to everyone (where previously the restrictions only had applied to persons holding permits to carry concealed weapons). As a part of this clarification AS 11.61.200(a)(12)[2] was enacted so that felons who possessed a handgun that was concealed were punished at a greater level than regular members of the public who carried a concealed handgun without a permit. And so a felon who might be permitted to possess a handgun due to the affirmative defense provided in AS 11.61.200(b)(1), would still be subject to a felony penalty if they carried that handgun concealed unless they (1) met the requirements to possess a handgun and (2) were in or on their own property or engaged in certain lawful outdoor activities.

In 2003 the Alaska Legislature enacted CSHB 102(STA) which removed restrictions on members of the public from carrying concealed deadly weapons, including firearms. CSHB 102(STA) made the concealed handgun permit system permissive; no longer would a permit be necessary to carry a handgun concealed.[3] Presumably at this time the legislature could have repealed AS 11.61.200(a)(12) and (g) as Alaska no longer

[2] As well as the affirmative defense of AS 11.61.200(g).

[3] Although a permit could still be obtained if a person wanted to avail themselves of reciprocity provisions of other states and carry concealed in those states.

distinguished between open or concealed possession of firearms. But the legislature did not. I cannot say that the legislature merely overlooked those provisions as I remember some concern by at least some members about extending the right to carry concealed to those that had committed felonies.

2. Do you want to allow all felons convicted of crimes outside of AS 11.41 to be able to carry concealed handguns?

To build on my comment #1 above, the changes in this bill draft would allow felons convicted of crimes outside of AS 11.41 to carry concealed handguns, if they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed from the felon's unconditional discharge for the offense. Felonies outside of AS 11.41 include unclassified felonies and class A through C felonies, such as arson, misconduct involving controlled substances (including engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise, delivering drugs to children and methamphetamine manufacture and delivery), burglary of a dwelling or while armed with a firearm, promoting prostitution, and distribution and possession of child pornography. Clearly, felons who have received a pardon should be treated differently and a change in current law is clearly warranted in this regard. To a lesser extent persons who have received a set aside under AS 12.55.085(e) are probably deserving of a change in current law. The question becomes whether felons who have not had someone pass upon their character, whether that be the governor in issuing a pardon or a judge when issuing a set aside, should be able to possess concealed handguns merely because of the passage of time.. If so, should this apply to all felonies, even felonies that are considered more egregious or comparable to crimes against a person under AS 11.41?

3. Changing affirmative defense to nonapplicability provision.

The bill draft changes the affirmative defense provided in AS 11.61.200(b) to a nonapplicability provision. This change may have an extreme impact upon the ability of the state to prosecute felons possessing concealable firearms. Currently an affirmative defense is provided for felons to show that they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed from their conviction for a felony other than a crime against a person. The reason this is an affirmative defense is because the information necessary to establish the defense is within the knowledge and control of the felon and may not be available to the prosecution. A felon knows if they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed while the prosecution does not always have access to this information.[4] By making this a nonapplicability section, the prosecution may be required to disprove the existence of a pardon or set aside, or prove that 10 years have not elapsed, prior to the case proceeding. In many cases this may not be possible.

Dear [redacted]

Several weeks ago, I furnished you some prosed draft legislation involving possession problems under Alaska law for persons who were pardoned or received suspended imposition of sentences for felony charges I have since run our proposed changes by the NRA attorneys and they have some improvements. As a result, I am resending this to you with what we originally sent along with the suggested improvements. This, then, is an updated version of what was sent previously. Please note the highlighted portions of the last paragraph.

The laws regarding possession of firearms in Alaska—laws which were contemplated and enacted by our own state legislature—are being attacked, gutted and rewritten by bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI. Attempts to correct these errors at the federal level have been ignored. It is now incumbent upon the Alaska legislature to take action to defend the rights of Alaskans. In this letter I will explain the source of the problem, illustrate particular grievances against the federal agencies involved, and offer the proper solution—a recrafting of Alaska Statute 11.61.200(g)(2).

Under Alaska law, an individual who has been convicted of a felony can have their right to bear arms restored by any of three occurrences: a pardon, a suspended imposition of sentence, or by the passage of ten years from unconditional discharge. The Alaska legislature, recognizing both the distinctions of life in Alaska and also the profound respect that the majority of Alaskans have for the right to bear arms, has made the decision to establish a means by which individuals who have previously been convicted of a felony may regain their right to bear arms. The bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI have subverted the goals of the Alaska legislature through the tortured and twisted application of limited U.S. Supreme Court cases to Alaska law. In doing so, these agencies have wrongfully deprived Alaskans of their rights.

In Caron v. U.S., the U.S. Supreme Court held that if a person who has previously been convicted of a felony is prohibited from possessing any type of firearm under state law, then they are prohibited from possessing all firearms under federal law.[1] Prior to this ruling, several states allowed previously convicted felons to regain the right to possess rifles and shotguns but prohibited them from possessing handguns.[2] Alaska law draws no distinctions among the types of firearms which a previously convicted felon may posses.[3] Alaska law allows an individual whose rights have been restored to possess rifles, shotguns and handguns. The only limit contained in our state law is upon the carrying of a concealed firearm by a person whose rights have been restored.[4] While the right of possession is fully restored, an individual who has previously been convicted of a felony may only carry a firearm concealed under limited circumstances - either while he is upon his own land or while he is engaged in outdoor activities that would "necessarily involve the carrying of a weapon for personal protection."[5]

An accurate reading of the Alaska statutes reveals that our state law should not be impacted by the Court's holding in Caron. Alaska law does not limit the "type" of firearms which a previously convicted felon may possess. Furthermore, the single limitation in place for previously convicted felons proscribes only their ability to carry a firearm in a concealed manner, and does not limit their right of possession in any way. The ATF and FBI are, however, interpreting the Alaska statute as a restriction upon possession. Because of this interpretation, Alaskans who have led productive lives, but who have convictions sometimes decades in their past, are being denied their right to own guns, and even being threatened with prosecution for serious Federal offenses.

[5] Id. The Alaska appellate courts have not established an objective test or enumerated specific criteria to consider when determining which activities Anecessarily involve the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.@

To better understand the plight of the individuals being affected by this law, I will offer some specific examples. In 1970, at the tender age of 19, R.S. made the mistake of getting caught up in recreational drug use. He was arrested for the possession of hallucinogens and convicted of a felony. As a first-time youthful offender, he was granted a suspended imposition of sentence, and given the opportunity to mend his ways. He is now a happily married 56-year-old father. He has worked, hunted and fished his entire life. He only learned recently, when he applied for the purchase of a new firearm, that he is now suddenly prohibited from owning firearms, despite having been granted a suspended imposition of sentence more than 30 years ago.

R.P. was convicted of a felony in 1992. After paying for his crime, he went straight to work helping the public. He became the director of the search and rescue organization for an Alaskan borough. Governor Murkowski granted him a full pardon, expressly for the purpose of allowing him to possess a firearm to help him fulfill his duties. He recently became aware of the fact that—despite the Governor's pardon—federal law prohibits him from possessing firearms.

The Federal law has stripped Alaska of the right to make its own decision on restoring gun rights to ex-felons. The overreaching actions of the bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI have left Alaska with a single option - to amend AS 11.61.200 to remove the disability on carrying a concealed weapon by a person convicted of a felony who has had their rights restored. By removing this disability in Alaska's law, the ATF and FBI will have no basis whatsoever to challenge Alaska's laws, and we can allow ex-felons who have proven their rehabilitation to participate in the full rights that all Alaskans enjoy.

I have included the text of two sample bills that would amend AS 11.61.200, and restore Alaska's policy of allowing rehabilitated ex-felons to own firearms. I had the proposed legislation reviewed by the NRA and the NRA still sees problems with our proposed solutions. I've enclosed a copy of the memo I received from the NRA outlining such problems and the NRA's suggested proposal. We would urge the Legislature to adopt these changes, as suggested by the NRA, to assure the continued support of the right of Alaskans to bear arms for the defense of themselves and others.

Memorandum

Re: Proposed legislation
File: 11.61.220 Project
Date: 9 September 2008

Several of our clients have experienced problems in either being denied an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit (CHP) or denied permission to purchase firearms during a "National Instant Criminal Background Check System" (NICS) check.

These problems stem from the language of AS 11.61.200, the Alaska Statute for Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree. AS 11.61.200(a)(12) bars all people convicted of felonies from carrying a concealed weapon, while AS 11.61.200(g) sets out the exceptions to (a)(12)'s blanket ban.

Because of the limited nature of subsection (g)'s exceptions, the Alaska Department of Public Safety takes the position, upheld by the Alaska Supreme Court in Gabrielle v. State of Alaska, that anyone with a felony conviction is ineligible for an Alaska CHP. Additionally, the FBI has taken the position that the limit on a felon's ability to carry a concealed weapon under AS 11.61.200(a)(12) & (g) activate the federal ban on the possession of any firearm under 18 USC §922(g), as intepreted in Caron v. U.S.

I shall attempt to describe how the particular provisions of Alaska and Federal law have created these twin problems, and what we can do to attempt to fix them by changing Alaska's law.

The Alaska CHP Issue

The Alaska Department of Public Safety has taken the position that anyone with a prior felony conviction, regardless of the time since the conviction or whether the conviction was set aside or pardoned, does not qualify for an Alaska CHP. They have based this determination on the limited scope of the exceptions in AS 11.61.200(g) to the total ban in 11.61.200(a)(12) of any felon carrying a concealed firearm.

AS 11.61.200(g) only allows a convicted felon to carry a concealed firearm if; (1) the conviction has been pardoned, (2) the conviction has been set aside, or (3) 10 years have elapsed since the conviction, and either (a) the person was in their home or on land immediately adjacent to their home, or (b) was engaged in an outdoor activity that necessitated carrying the weapon for personal protection. Thus, without both some evidence of rehabilitation in (1)-(3), and observing the limited conditions for carrying in (a)-(b), a person convicted of a felony is guilty of Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree if they carry a concealed weapon.

The Alaska Department of Public Safety's interpretation of AS 11.61.200 was upheld in Gabrielle v. State of Alaska.[1] There, the Supreme Court of Alaska held that a person with a felony record of any description, though not prohibited from applying for an Alaska CHP under the statutes and regulations governing eligibility for the permit, nevertheless was not entitled to an Alaska CHP because of the restrictions found in AS 11.61.200. Because this issue has been appealed to the highest court capable of deciding the issue, the only way to change this outcome is through legislation.

The NICS Check / 18 USC §922(g)(1) Issue

The FBI's National Instant Criminal Background Check System implements a federal requirement that all federally licensed firearms dealers conduct a background check on all prospective firearms purchasers. The background check screens those that have been disqualified from purchasing firearms through operation of federal law. Information is entered into the NICS system by multiple state and federal agencies, but the FBI determines whether the information provided disqualifies an individual from purchasing firearms.

Many of the federal restrictions on possession of firearms are found at 18 U.S.C. §922(g). §922(g)(1) prohibits anyone who has been convicted of a felony from possessing a firearm, however §921(a)(20) contains an exception for those felons who have had their civil rights restored (through operation of law, a pardon, or any similar means). The exception in §921(a)(20) has its own exception, however, prohibiting those convicted of a felony whose civil rights have been restored from possessing a firearm if state law prohibits them from possessing a weapon of any type.

The exception to the exception found in §921(a)(20) was interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court in Caron v U.S.[2] There, the Court faced a person whose civil rights had been restored under Massachusetts law, including the right to possess long guns and handguns. However, he was not allowed to carry handguns outside his home or business, though this right was afforded to non-felons. The Supreme Court found that this restriction, though not strictly a prohibition against of possession of handguns, was enough of a restriction to activate the exception to the exception found in §921(a)(20).

Applying Caron to Alaska law, the FBI has taken the position that the restrictions on ex-felons carrying concealed weapons found in AS 11.61.200(a)(12) & (g) are sufficient to activate the exception to the exception found in 18 U.S.C. §921(a)(20). Because of this interpretation, ex-felons in Alaska, even those who have had convictions set aside or pardoned, are barred from possessing any firearm by §922(g)(1).

[1] 158 P.3d 813 (Alaska 2007).

The FBI's interpretation of the effect of AS 11.61.200 on the application of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1) is contrary to the Alaska Supreme Court's interpretation in Gabrielle (which was not binding on the FBI), and has been questioned in other federal cases such as the unpublished U.S. v Flores.[3] However, given the similarity between Alaska law and the Massachusetts law at question in Caron (both allowed possession of all types of weapons, but restricted where and how handguns could be carried), the FBI's interpretation of the law is not clearly incorrect. It would be possible to challenge the FBI in court, but it is far from certain that we could obtain a favorable result.

The Common Factor

The common factor in both of these issues is AS 11.61.200, and the restriction on ex-felons carrying concealed weapons in Alaska, except under certain narrow exceptions. While Alaska has several statutes covering the crime of "Misconduct Involving Weapons," enumerating different degrees of the offense, no other iteration of the statute implicates the carrying or possession of weapons by ex-felons, and so would not impact either eligibility for an Alaska CHP or eligibility under the FBI's NICS system.

Likewise, Alaska's statutes and regulations governing Alaska's CHP program (AS 18.65.700-790, 13 AAC 30.010-900) set out eligibility requirements, including disqualifications if an applicant has had multiple recent misdemeanor offenses or has been ordered by a court to attend a drug- or alcohol-rehabilitation clinic. However, none of the requirements for a CHP touch on the status of the applicant as an ex-felon; pardoned, conviction set aside, or otherwise. Thus, none of these statutes or regulations need to be revised in addressing either the CHP or NICS issue.

Therefore, a legislative fix to this issue need only modify the restrictions on ex-felons carrying or possessing weapons that are found in AS 11.61.200.

The Possible Solutions

Alaska is unusually laissez-faire in its approach to gun rights (being one of two states that allows concealed carry of firearms without a permit). However, Alaska also tends towards a tougher stance on crime issues than other states. In attempting to change the policy embodied in AS 11.61.200 towards the gun rights of ex-felons, we will be working in the cross-currents of these two conflicting political priorities.

[3] 118 Fed. Appx. 49 (C.A.6 (Mich.)).

From a strictly political perspective, we could attempt to counter some of the turbulence of a legislative proposal by noting that it is federal law that has forced us to seek a modification of our state law, in order to allow us to pursue our own policy of granting forgiveness to, and restoring the rights of, ex-felons. Federal law has stripped Alaska of its right to make its own determination of how ex-felons are to exercise their gun rights, and leaves us only a simplistic all-or-nothing choice as to whether ex-felons should regain their gun rights.

There are several different methods we could pursue to change AS 11.61.200 so as to allow for ex-felons to apply for an Alaska CHP and to bypass the federal ban on possession found in 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1). The principal question in changing the restrictions found in AS 11.61.200, however, is how far to expand the re-enfranchisement of gun rights to ex-felons.

First, in order to permit ex-felons to apply for an Alaska CHP, or to possess a weapon under 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1) and Caron, we must remove the restrictions on where an ex-felon may carry a concealed weapon found in AS 11.61.200(g)(2) (I have attached two sample proposed bills with this memo for you to review). This would allow an ex-felon to carry a concealed weapon under the same circumstances that any other citizen would be able to. This would broaden the rights of ex-felons, as it allows them to carry concealed weapons where previously they were not allowed to. However, this is the only means of restoring their right to own weapons at all, given the FBI's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1).

As for how far to extend re-enfranchisement, currently AS 11.61.200(g) identifies three groups of ex-felons that it restores gun rights to; ex-felons who (1) received a pardon, (2) had their conviction set aside, or (3) had more than 10 years elapse since they finished serving their sentence and who had not committed a violent felony. There is a strong argument that all three groups should be granted full re-enfranchisement, as all three demonstrate some individualized showing of rehabilitation, rather than automatically granting an ex-felon gun rights as soon as they get out of jail.

Conclusion

Alaska has made its own policy decision about how to handle the gun rights of ex-felons, however the Federal Government has stripped Alaska of the right to make our own judgments except for an all-or-nothing decision on the gun rights of ex-felons. That message of Federal interference with Alaska's laws is the message we should emphasize in attempting to amend AS 11.61.200, in order to restore the gun rights of those denied them under the federal government's ban.

By certified mail with return receipt

Dear Mr. [redacted]

I received your e-mail dated April 6, 2008 appealing the denial of your application to obtain an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit, and have given careful consideration to your appeal. Your appeal is denied. An explanation of the reason for this denial is as follows.

In stating your case, you provide abundant evidence of your good character and legal standing, as well as expressing frustration with an action by this department which you feel unwarranted in your circumstances.

The original decision to deny your application was based upon your convictions for 2nd degree burglary. Sentencing for your convictions was suspended and eventually your convictions were set aside. Burglary in the second degree is a felony. A felony conviction disqualifies an applicant from obtaining an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit. A felony conviction that has been set aside is still a disqualifier for the issuance of an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit. State law (13 AAC 30.900(6)) defines a conviction as meaning "...that a person has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to, or has been found guilty by a court or jury of, a criminal offense, regardless of whether the judgment was after that set aside under AS 12.55.086 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, or was the subject of a pardon or other executive clemency..." (emphasis added) Consequently, because of your set aside felony convictions, we are prohibited, by law, from issuing you an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit.

Office of the Commissioner

Juneau Office – Voice (907) 465-4322 – Fax (907) 465-4362

Your message also indicates that you have not been denied a firearm transfer when presenting yourself for a NICS check. Although it is logical to assume that you are eligible to possess a firearm under federal law, an Alaska Concealed handgun permit may only be granted to those who are eligible to possess a handgun under both federal and state law. Alaska law (AS 11.61.200(a)(12)) prohibits you from carrying a concealable firearm. There is no unrestricted right to carry a concealed handgun for a convicted felon under Alaska law.

As a final administrative decision, the appeal to this action is denied.

You are reminded of your right to seek judicial review of this decision under Alaska Statute 44.62.560-570 within 30 days of receipt of this letter.

Sincerely,

John D. Glass

To whom it my Concern,

My name is [redacted] and I'm writing this letter in regards to the denial of a concealed carry permit that I applied for in the beginning of [redacted] of 2008.I have taken the concealed carry course and paid a considerable amount of money for that course to try and be a law abiding gun owner and carrier, even though in the state of Alaska it is not necessary to do so.

I'm a 36 year old father of [redacted] and a devoted husband,and I'm currently a superintendent for a multi-million dollar [redacted] and work year round at that job.I'm a tax payer,a voter and a yearly supporter of our Alaska Peace Officers and Public Safety Employee Association and a Member of the N.R.A. I'm a law abiding citizen that does not drink or do drugs and haven't even had a traffic violation in over ten years.

I was 17 years old when I found myself on the wrong side of the law for the first and only time in my life.
I was young and dumb as we've all been, and made a bad choice in my young life, I was involved in a non-violent crime in which a felony was charged.I plead no contest because I knew what I did was wrong and there was no sense in fighting it andwaisting the courts time.I did a short jail term and was ordered to payrestitution and do 3 years probation.And because I was so young and payed my restitution in full and did my probation with no problems or violations. I was given a S.I.S (Suspended Imposition of Sentencing) my conviction was Dropped, Dismissed by a federal judge.(I'm not concidreda felon.)So why put me in that category.

I was given a second chance and have made a great life with that second chance, I'm allowed to vote,buy and posses firearms and I"m a avid hunter and sportsman.(Because I'm not concidered a felon that is all possible.)

In the State of Alaska I'm allowed to carry a concealed weapon without a permit,but yet I can't get a concealed carry permit if I want one.It doesn't make sense, why you would not want me on paper to show law enforcement that I would carry a concealed weapon.I have court documents,F.B.I and N.I.C.S background checks to prove my eligibility to own a handgun. I have talked to people at the permits and licensing unit that agree and don't understand it either.

I ask of you to grant me the right and please allow me to get my concealed carry permit and to go on paper as a permit holder and to be able to give law enforcement officers the ability to know that I have a weapon on my person and to be a law abiding and safety trained citizen.

CERTIFIED RETURN RECEIPT

[redacted]

RE: Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit

Dear Mr. [redacted]

This is to notify you that your application for renewal of your Alaska Concealed Handgun permit is denied. Enclosed please find your cash in the amount of $25.00.

Upon receiving an application for renewal, we are obliged to review the eligibility status of the applicant. In your case we have determined that you are not eligible to hold a concealed handgun permit and that the original issue was done in error.

Effective immediately, your concealed handgun permit is revoked. You must surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer. We recommend that you surrender the permit at the nearest State Trooper office or police department.

We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause you but the law does not allow any other course of action.

Alaska statute 18.65.705 states that, in order to be eligible for a permit, an applicant "must be eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state and under federal law." We understand that your right to possess a firearm has been returned to you under federal law but Alaska law continues to bar you from unrestricted possession of a firearm. As a result, you may not be issued an Alaska concealed handgun permit.

Presidential Pardon!

Under Alaska statute 11.61.200, misconduct involving weapons in the third degree, it is a class C felony for a person to knowingly possess a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person or to knowingly possess a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

The same statute does provide for two affirmative defenses to a prosecution for these offenses but does not make it legal conduct for a convicted felon. In your case, your felony convictions will forever bar you from unrestricted possession of a firearm in Alaska even in light of the fact that the federal government has apparently restored your federal rights.

Presidential pardon!

The person who initially reviewed your eligibility status mistakenly interpreted the restoration of your federal rights to possess a firearm as restoring your state right as well. It does not. Pardons do not create an exception. Set asides, whether court ordered or statutory, do not create an exception.

Please surrender your permit immediately to insure compliance with Alaska law.

Alaska statute 18.64.740 provides that you may appeal this revocation decision to the commissioner of the Department of Public Safety. The appeal must be received in writing within 30 days after the date of the notice of revocation, and must set out the reasons for the appeal.

Sincerely,

Terrie Satterfield
Permits and Licensing Unit

Terrie,

Here is what I had this e-mailed to me on the Pardon. Here is what I was told:

I meet the requirements of AS 18.65.705
There was "no change" on the renewal application
I meet all Federal and State laws to own and posses a handgun
Pardon granted by President not Governor of State of Alaska
Per AS a "Pardon" is the only way to restore rights lost and remove disabilities under Alaska Law
The ACHP Rules .doc was an information paper created by someone in DPS, not the State Attorney's Office

I have no idea of all the all the AS that apply and have been told that several contradict one another. In several AS it states that when a Pardon is issued it is as though the conviction never occurred. I have had CCW permits in several states (including Alaska).

If this does not clear it up to everyones satisfaction, please forward me the appeal procedures so I may address this to the Commissioner of Public Safety.

Thank you for your patience with me! I really do appreciate all your help!

Respectfully,

[redacted]

back to him. He objected. A replevin petition was filed in the Circuit Court of Phelps County on June 1[illegible] 2005, seeking return of his revolver. On October 2[illegible], 2005, the Attorney General filed his answer. The state's position was that Mr. Troyer needs a permit to acquire a pistol prior to obtaining custody of the revolver. The court held a hearing on August 21, 2006. The parties subsequently signed on October 5, 2006, a stipulation for dismissal. Mr. Troyer agreed to drop his lawsuit and the police agreed to return the revolver to Mr. Troyer without requiring that he obtain a pistol acquisition permit. The revolver was returned.

MONTANA

Van der Hule, Frank (Montana). The issue is whether Montana's restoration of rights satisfies the requirements of 18 U.S. Code section 921(a)(20), or is it insufficient based on the holding in Caron v. United States, 118 S.Ct. 2007 (1998), which held a person cannot be convicted under federal law of being a felon in possession of a firearm stemming from a state felony conviction if the state law that removed the disability allows the person to possess all firearms (rifle, shotgun, pistol). On the other hand, a person may be convicted under federal law of being a felon in possession of a firearm stemming from a state felony conviction if state law allows such a person to possess only certain firearms, e.g., rifles and shotguns, but not pistols. In this case, Mr. Van de hule was denied permission to purchase a hunting rifle following a background check. A lawsuit was filed. Plaintiff subsequently filed a motion for summary judgment. The government likewise filed a motion for summary judgment. Mr. Van der hule filed his reply on November 6, 2006. Oral argument occurred on March 23, 2007. The court held on September 21, 2007, that Montana's refusal to grant a license to carry a pistol to a person whose civil rights have been restored meant that under Caron he could not possess any firearm under federal law. However, there is a possibility that Montana law grants a licensing official discretion to grant the carrying license to such a person. Therefore, the court certified the question to the Montana Supreme Court.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Lone Pine Hunter's Club, Inc. (New Hampshire). This is an effort to shut down a shooting range. New Hampshire has a range protection statute. The club has been operating a shooting range on the property since 1966. The case resulted in two reported decisions. Lone Pine Hunters' Club v. Town of Hollis, 149 N.H. 668, 826 A.2d 582 (2003), held that evidence was sufficient to uphold finding that the zoning board of adjustment's finding that, 34 years earlier, it merely decided that hunt club did not need a variance to build a proposed addition, rather than deciding that the club did not need a variance to use the property as a fish and game club. Consequently, under the 1999 zoning ordinance the club's use of the property could be approved as special exception. The club would have to cease and desist unless the club applied for a special exception and presented a site plan to the planning board depicting the nature of the club's entire operation. Residents Defending Their Homes v. Lone Pine Hunters' Club, Inc., 924 A.2d 366 (N.H. 2007), held that the range protection statute only protected a shooting range that was in lawful operation at its inception. The court held the club was not operating lawfully from its inception in 1966. Accordingly, the club must obtain approval from the town, in compliance with the zoning provisions allowing for a special exception as a shooting range.

Subject: FW: Gun Rights for Ex-Felons

Dear Mr. Ross:

Chris Conte, Brian Judy and I have reviewed your memo and draft legislation.

It appears to us that we will need to go a little farther than your drafts to fix the problem entirely.

Draft #2 completely repeals the limitation under which an ex-felon can only possess a gun on his own property, or while engaged in hunting, fishing, etc. This is the exception the Alaska Supreme Court relied on in Gabrielle, pointing out that under Alaska law at the time, "a pardoned felon [could] only carry a concealed handgun in those situations where an ordinary citizen would be able to carry a concealed handgun without a permit." 158 P.3d at 815. The flip side is that a pardoned felon couldn't carry a handgun anywhere else. This is similar to Caron, where (as Justice Thomas pointed out in his dissent) the ex-felon was only prohibited "from possessing only certain firearms (handguns) in only certain places (outside his home or office)." Getting rid of this limitation for all ex-felons would largely solve the Caron problem.

Draft #1 would reorganize AS 11.61.200(g) so that the property and hunting limitations only apply to persons whose rights are restored by operation of law after 10 years. This would help solve the problem for those whose rights are restored by a more particularized method (i.e., a pardon or set aside). Because there would be no limitations on gun possession by those people (and no problem with eligibility for carry permits), they would no longer be prohibited from possessing guns at the federal or state level. However, because the property and hunting limitations would still apply to those whose rights are restored by the passage of time, they would still be federally prohibited under Caron.

However, there is a potential problem with both drafts. AS 11.61.200(g) only creates an affirmative defense to prosecution under AS 11.61.200(a)(12). It is not a total exception, and therefore BATFE could argue that all pardons, set-asides, and 10-year restorations still limit ex-felons' right to possess firearms because they create a situation where the ex-felon can be arrested and put on trial before successfully raising his affirmative defense. BATFE would argue that if the Alaska legislature wanted to create a total exception, it knew how to do that; see, e.g., AS 11.61.200(e) (bans on possessing prohibited weapons and on discharging weapons from motor vehicles "do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.)" If any limit exists on gun possession by ex-felons, those felons would still be prohibited from possessing firearms under federal law, and therefore from getting an Alaska carry permit. To avoid this problem, it would be necessary to change the affirmative defense to a full-scale exception.

As an aside on the federal interpretation of these provisions, I would not rely on the Alaska Supreme Court's holding that Gabrielle wasn't prohibited from possessing a gun under federal law because he was pardoned, rather than receiving a restoration of rights. The language in the federal statute is parallel for pardons and restorations, and I think a federal court would likely take a different view than the Alaska Supreme Court did.

Fortunately, drafting a bill that will solve these problems is not difficult. All it needs to do is change the affirmative defense in AS 11.61.200(g) to an exception, and get rid of the property and hunting/fishing limitations. See attached, and please let us know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

John Frazer

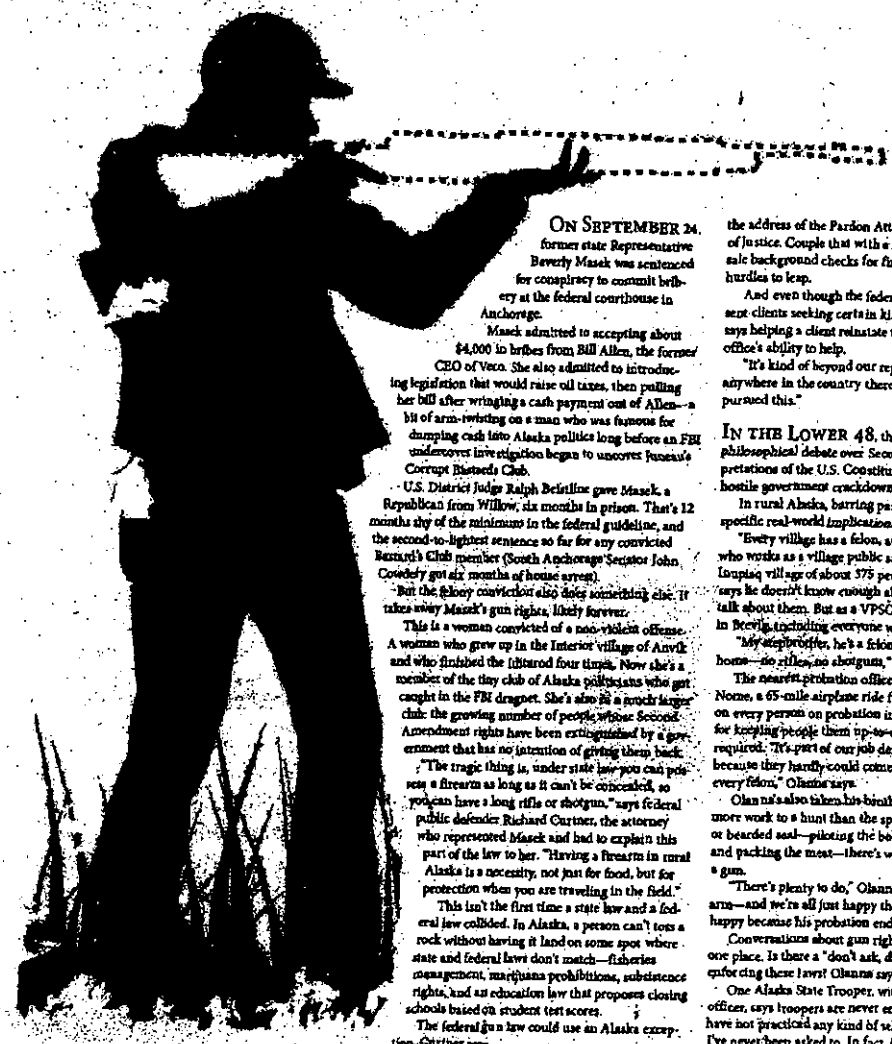
Hidden punishment

In rural Alaska, where gun rights matter most, there's no way for reformed felons—even non-violent ones—to get them back.

Story and photos by Scott Christianse



On September 24, former state Representative Beverly Masek was sentenced for conspiracy to commit bribery at the federal courthouse in Anchorage.

Masek admitted to accepting about $4,000 in bribes from Bill Allen, the former CEO of Veco. She also admitted to introducing legislation that would raise oil taxes, then pulling her bill after wringing a cash payment out of Allen—a bit of arm-twisting on a man who was famous for dumping cash into Alaska politics long before an FBI undercover investigation began to uncover Juneau's Corrupt Bastards Club.

U.S. District Judge Ralph Beistline gave Masek, a Republican from Willow, six months in prison. That's 12 months shy of the minimum in the federal guideline, and the second-to-lightest sentence so far for any convicted Bastard's Club member (Scotch Anchorage Senator John Cowdery got six months of house arrest).

But the felony conviction also does something else. It takes away Masek's gun rights, likely forever.

This is a woman convicted of a non-violent offense. A woman who grew up in the Interior village of Anvik and who finished the Iditarod four times. Now she's a member of the tiny club of Alaska politicians who got caught in the FBI dragnet. She's also in a much larger club: the growing number of people whose Second Amendment rights have been extinguished by a government that has no intention of giving them back.

"The tragic thing is, under state law you can possess a firearm as long as it can't be concealed, so you can have a long rifle or shotgun," says federal public defender Richard Curtner, the attorney who represented Masek and had to explain this part of the law to her. "Having a firearm in rural Alaska is a necessity, not just for food, but for protection when you are traveling in the field."

This isn't the first time a state law and a federal law collided. In Alaska, a person can't toss a rock without having it land on some spot where state and federal laws don't match—fisheries management, marijuana prohibitions, subsistence rights, and an education law that proposes closing schools based on student test scores.

The federal gun law could use an Alaska exception, Curtner says.

"But people convicted of crimes don't have any lobby. There are all kinds of exceptions written into law for banks and for corporations, but when you've done something wrong in your past, there's no lobbyist for that," he says.

The federal government has a process for reinstating civil rights. In the case of gun rights, a felon who has paid their debt to society or been exonerated by a presidential pardon, can file an application for reinstatement of rights with the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco Firearms and Explosives. The bureau's agents process the application, performing a background check to make certain the applicant qualifies.

But ATF agents don't do those background checks anymore, and haven't for the last 17 years. That's according to a form letter ATF sends in response to anyone who inquires about reinstatement of rights. The letter calls Second Amendment rights "federal firearms privileges" and says that ever since 1992, Congress has used the bureau's annual budget appropriation to prohibit the ATF from spending money to "investigate or act upon" any restoration of rights application. The letter also says the convict may seek a presidential pardon, and gives the address of the Pardon Attorney's Office at the U.S. Department of Justice. Couple that with a federal law that created strict point-of-sale background checks for firearms, and you have some tall legal hurdles to leap.

And even though the federal public defenders occasionally represent clients seeking certain kinds of post-conviction relief, Curtner says helping a client reinstate their gun rights would be outside his office's ability to help.

"It's kind of beyond our representation, and I don't know that anywhere in the country there is a case where (a public defender) has pursued this."

In the Lower 48, this issue might stand out as a mostly philosophical debate over Second Amendment rights, modern interpretations of the U.S. Constitution, or the hypothetical threat of a hostile government crackdown.

In rural Alaska, barring past felons from possessing a gun has specific real-world implications, ones that aren't just theoretical.

"Every village has a felon, at least one," says Winfred Olanna, who works as a village public safety officer in Brevig Mission, an Inupiaq village of about 375 people on the Seward Peninsula. Olanna says he doesn't know enough about federal firearms prohibitions to talk about them. But as a VPSO, he's tasked with knowing everyone in Brevig, including everyone who returns from prison.

"My stepbrother, he's a felon, so he can't have any firearms in his home—no rifles, no shotguns," Olanna says.

The nearest probation officer to Brevig Mission is based in Nome, a 65-mile airplane ride from the village. Olanna checks in on every person on probation in the village. He's even responsible for keeping people them up-to-date with drug testing, when it's required. "It's part of our job description to work with the P.O.s, because they hardly could come to every village twice a month for every felon," Olanna says.

Olanna's also taken his brother-in-law hunting. After all, there's more work to a hunt than the split-second it takes to shoot a caribou or bearded seal—piloting the boat, spotting animals, field dressing and packing the meat—there's work a hunter can do without holding a gun.

"There's plenty to do," Olanna says. "He just can't carry a firearm—and we're all just happy that he is following his probation. He's happy because his probation ends next year."

Conversations about gun rights in rural Alaska inevitably lead one place. Is there a "don't ask, don't tell" policy when it comes to enforcing these laws? Olanna says there isn't in Brevig Mission.

One Alaska State Trooper, with experience as a VPSO oversight officer, says troopers are never encouraged to let anyone slide. "I have not practiced any kind of selective enforcement like that, and I've never been asked to. In fact, just the opposite," says Trooper Terrence Shanigan.

Shanigan, who is 38, grew up in rural Alaska, in the Bristol Bay villages of Pilot Point and Ugashik. He remembers being one of the excited village kids who would run, not walk, to the airstrip when state trooper landed at Ugashik.

"I only knew him as 'trooper' but it was always exciting when he came to town," he says, adding troopers were plied with coffee and akutaq. He says a successful state trooper or VPSO must inser themselves into the community, making a point to attend potlatch and community events such as planning meetings.

Troopers are charged with enforcing state laws, and that's wher their focus is. Shanigan current patrols the Parks Highway from Talkeetna north to Cantwell. When he worked as a VPSO oversigh officer, he was sometimes assigned to villages with only on-and-off VPSO coverage, where he made frequent visits even though he couldn't be there every day. He's trained in wildlife enforcement, s he knows how to prosecute hunting and fishing violations.

Shanigan says it's possible that a trooper might come into conta with a felon on probation—someone the state law doesn't allow to armed—without the information on-hand to charge that person with a probation violation.

"When you go down to the river, well, everybody is packing firearms," Shanigan says, but the trooper may not know who on the river has had their rights revoked until he is back at the office, running names through databases. "Now someone with that knowledge might say, 'Hey, that trooper let somebody go'—but that's not really what they saw," he says.

Cops can be suspicious for all kinds of reasons, Shanigan says, but they have to be careful to not trounce on anyone's rights. "You have to make decisions based on what you know to be true," he says.

ALL OF THE COMPETING STATE and federal regulations are further complicated by something called the National Instant Criminal background Check System. NICS, as it's informally known, is the background check licensed gun dealers use to see if federal gun control laws allow a particular customer to purchase a gun. And the NICS system has flagged people who have their rights restored in their home state.

Anchorage attorney and gun rights activist Wayne Anthony Ross has represented people attempting to earn their gun rights back. Ross says the reason NICS flags all Alaska felons is fallout from a U.S. Supreme Court ruling called Caron v. U.S. The case was decided in 1993, and requires that a person have all gun rights restored before the federal government recognizes any of their gun rights. The FBI applies this "all-or-nothing" approach to managing NICS.

Alaska law allows for restoration of most, but not all, of a felon's gun rights. A state felon cannot have a concealed weapon, Ross says, unless the felon wears the weapon on private property. (His interpretation differs slightly from that of Curtner, who tells clients they can't own a "concealable" weapon.)

A state felon is also prohibited from receiving Alaska's concealed weapons permit. The permit itself is an odd-duck. It's no longer required in order to carry a concealed weapon in Alaska. Yet the state continues to offer them because gun rights activists want the right to carry in other states where Alaska has reciprocal agreements.

"The problem is that this Supreme Court case that says if there is any state prohibition on having firearms, no mater how minimal, then you can't own a firearm at all," Ross says. "So a guy who feeds his family through subsistence, and has paid his debt to society, isn't able to do that."

Ross believes changing state law can solve the NICS problem for some felons. He's even drafted model legislation, but it hasn't been introduced despite his efforts to recruit a legislator to sponsor it. "I've got clients who have received pardons. There is one guy who has received a presidential pardon and others are people who have completed their probation. So we have multiple classes of people who are affected by this," he says.

In a letter to state Senator Charlie Huggins, Ross identified two clients by their initials and related their stories. One was convicted in 1970, becoming a felon at age 19 after being caught with hallucinogenic drugs, Ross wrote. "He has worked, hunted and fished his entire life. He only learned recently, when he applied for purchase of a new firearm, tat he is now suddenly prohibited form owning firearms, despite having been granted a suspended imposition of sentence more than 30 years ago."

Ross's second example was a man convicted of felony assault in 1992 and granted a full pardon by Governor Frank Murkowski in 2006. The man was a search and rescue pilot who wanted to carry a weapon while performing his job.

FEDERAL GUN LAWS ARE STRONGEST when applied to felons in possession of weapons, or people accused of using a gun while committing a felony crime. A drug dealer or repeat violent offender can have up to five years added to their sentence if they have a gun in their home. Newsrooms often get press releases from the U.S. Attorneys office touting new indictments and sentences related to such charges.

"We use our discretion when applying the law," Assistant U.S. Attorney Frank Russo says. "Usually we are applying the law at the request of the local community."

The implication is there won't be hordes of FBI or ATF agents flying around Alaska and rappelling into hunting camps to check IDs and round up gun owners. But defense attorneys aren't really satisfied with that.

"A client might know that it's very unlikely that they would be charged (for being a felon in possession)," Curtner says. "But I can't tell my people that, to trust the government not to charge you. I can only advise the client on the law, and the law in this case says you can't own a weapon."

So that's what Curtner told Beverly Masek, and every other nonviolent offender he's represented who was found guilty. "We talked about it, and it's one of those things that's 'what are you going to do?'" Curtner says. "There is just no getting around it." ◆

TO: Representative Bill Stoltze
CC: Members of the House Judiciary Committee
FROM: Brian Judy, NRA-ILA Alaska State Liaison
RE: House Bill 408 – SUPPORT

I am writing on behalf of the National Rifle Association – Institute for Legislative Action to express support for House Bill 408. HB 408 would facilitate the implementation of the current Alaska state law that allows persons who have long-past felony convictions but whose rights have been restored to possess firearms in the state. Although the legislative fix necessary to solve this problem is simple, the reason it is necessary is quite a technical and complicated interaction between state law, federal law and a U.S. Supreme Court decision (attached is a detailed summary of the various issues at conflict).

While many advocates for the restoration of voting rights for persons with past felony convictions talk about dignity, with respect to the restoration of firearm rights there is not only the issue of dignity but of life and death. The nature of life in Alaska, especially in the rural areas, makes possession of firearms a necessity not only for food but for protection in the field.

Current Alaska State law provides for the restoration of roughly 95% of firearms rights to those former offenders who qualify. They can possess rifles and shotguns, they can possess handguns, they can carry handguns openly and they can carry handguns concealed in their home, on their property and while engaged in lawful outdoor activities out in public. The only thing they cannot do under state law is put on a coat and cover a handgun when they are somewhere other than those places previously listed.

The problem is that, based on the Court decision discussed in my attachment, because the State of Alaska does not restore 100% of an affected person's firearm rights, under federal law the person is considered to have NO rights whatsoever! In a Legal Services Memorandum dated April 1, 2009, Legislative Counsel Gerald Luckhaupt described the Court's conclusion as "obviously incorrect." While the NRA would completely agree with Mr. Luckhaupt, only three Supreme Court Justices shared such a view and the decision was 6-3 in this case.

As discussed in my attachment, there are two changes that must be made to State law: first, the restriction on concealed carry must be repealed and second, two affirmative defenses found in AS § 11.61.200 must be changed to exceptions. With these two changes, Alaska State law would treat persons who have had their rights restored exactly the same as those who have never lost their rights and the problem would be solved.

It is the hope of the National Rifle Association that legislators can get beyond the perceived stigma of "giving firearms to felons" and realize the legitimacy of allowing persons, who have long ago paid their debt to society, to attain the restoration of their rights already provided by the State of Alaska but extinguished by an "obviously incorrect" U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Please support House Bill 408.

Title 11. Criminal Law
Chapter 61. Offenses Against Public Order
Article 2. Weapons and Explosives

§ 11.61.200. Misconduct involving weapons in the third degree

(a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person

(1) knowingly possesses a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;

(2) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person to a person who has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;

(3) manufactures, possesses, transports, sells, or transfers a prohibited weapon;

(4) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm to another whose physical or mental condition is substantially impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into that other person's body;

(5) removes, covers, alters, or destroys the manufacturer's serial number on a firearm with intent to render the firearm untraceable;

(6) possesses a firearm on which the manufacturer's serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed, knowing that the serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed with the intent of rendering the firearm untraceable;

(7) violates AS 11.46.320 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a firearm when the person's physical or mental condition is impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into the person's body;

(8) violates AS 11.46.320 or 11.46.330 by entering or remaining unlawfully on premises or in a propelled vehicle in violation of a provision of an order issued or filed under AS 18.66.100-18.66.180 or issued under former AS 25.35.010(b) or 25.35.020 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;

(9) communicates in person with another in violation of AS 11.56.740 and, during the communication, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;

(10) resides in a dwelling knowing that there is a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person or a prohibited weapon in the dwelling if the person has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory, unless the person has written authorization to live in a dwelling in which there is a concealable weapon described in this paragraph from a court of competent jurisdiction or from the head of the law enforcement agency of the community in which the dwelling is located;

(11) discharges a firearm from a propelled vehicle while the vehicle is being operated in circumstances other than described in AS 11.61.190(a)(2); or

(12) knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

(b) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution

(1) under (a)(1) of this section that

(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;

(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or

(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(1) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory;

(2) under (a)(2) or (10) of this section that

(A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;

(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or

(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense and the date of the violation of (a)(2) or (10) of this section, and the prior conviction did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory.

(c) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(3) of this section that the manufacture, possession, transportation, sale, or transfer of the prohibited weapon was in accordance with registration under 26 U.S.C. 5801 - 5872 (National Firearms Act).

(d) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(11) of this section that the person was using a firearm while hunting, trapping, or fishing in a manner not prohibited by statute or regulation.

(e) The provisions of (a)(3) and (11) of this section do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.

(f) For purposes of (a)(12) of this section, a firearm on a person is concealed if it is covered or enclosed in any manner so that an observer cannot determine that it is a firearm without removing it from that which covers or encloses it or without opening, lifting, or removing that which covers or encloses it. A firearm on a person is not concealed if it is unloaded and is encased in a closed container designed for transporting firearms.

(g) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that

(1) either

tion;

(B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or

(C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(12) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory; and

(2) at the time of possession, the defendant was

(A) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or

(B) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

(h) As used in this section,

(1) "prohibited weapon" means any

(A) explosive, incendiary, or noxious gas

(i) mine or device that is designed, made, or adapted for the purpose of inflicting serious physical injury or death;

(ii) rocket, other than an emergency flare, having a propellant charge of more than four ounces;

(iii) bomb; or

(iv) grenade;

(B) device designed, made, or adapted to muffle the report of a firearm;

(C) firearm that is capable of shooting more than one shot automatically, without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger; or

(D) rifle with a barrel length of less than 16 inches, shotgun with a barrel length of less than 18 inches, or firearm made from a rifle or shotgun which, as modified, has an overall length of less than 26 inches;

(2) "unconditional discharge" has the meaning ascribed to it in AS 12.55.185.

(i) Misconduct involving weapons in the third degree is a class C felony.

Validity 1/2
Validity of prior laws 1

1/2. Validity

Statute that prohibited a convicted felon from possessing a concealable firearm did not violate Alaska Constitution's provision guaranteeing an individual's right to keep and bear arms. Wilson v. State, 2009, 2009 WL 1424468. Weapons 3

1. Validity of prior laws

Term "gravity knife," which is included as prohibited weapon under statute making it a felony to possess such weapon, is not unconstitutionally vague; "gravity knife" is commonly understood as knife in which blade opens, falls into place, or is ejected into position by force of gravity or by centrifugal force, and "gravity knife" is included in statute in conjunction with switchblade knife, thus providing ordinary person with notice that "gravity knife" must be similar to switchblade in operating automatically or semiautomatically. AS 11.61.200(e)(1)(D). State v. Weaver, 1987, 736 P.2d 781. Weapons 3

2. In general

Legislature has considerable discretion in creating classifications denoting which former felons can possess firearm and classifications need not be perfect. AS 11.61.200(b); Const. Art. 1, § 6. McCracken v. State, 1987, 743 P.2d 382, dismissal of habeas corpus reversed 985 F.2d 573. Weapons 2

3. Equal protection

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Statute defining misconduct involving weapons in the first degree, requiring passage of five years from unconditional discharge on prior felony offense before a person can possess firearm, did not violate equal protection clause of State Constitution, even though statute provided that receipt of pardon for prior conviction or having conviction set aside was affirmative defense. AS 11.61.200(b); Const. Art. 1, § 6. McCracken v. State, 1987, 743 P.2d 382, dismissal of habeas corpus reversed 985 F.2d 573. Constitutional Law 3234; Weapons 3

4. Due process

State did not deny defendant due process under Alaska Constitution by convicting him on a felon in possession charge even though his underlying conviction was reversed on constitutional grounds. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Clark v. State, 1987, 739 P.2d 777. Constitutional Law 4509(25)

In prosecution of an ex-convict for possessing a concealable weapon, State was not required, as a matter of due process, to establish defendant's awareness of statute prohibiting such conduct. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14. Afcan v. State, 1986, 711 P.2d 1198. Constitutional Law 4694

5. Double jeopardy

Conviction in the Court of the Municipal Magistrate of Anchorage, Alaska, of the crime of carrying a concealed weapon, in violation of an ordinance of that city did not bar prosecution on the same facts under Alaska statute forbidding persons convicted of a felony involving assault and like crimes from carrying firearms capable of being concealed upon the person. Act March 3, 1899, §§ 107, 143, 146, 147, 30 Stat. 1296, 1301; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; Laws Alaska 1947, c. 70. U.S. v. Farwell, 1948, 11 Alaska 507, 76 F.Supp. 35. Double Jeopardy 187

6. Right of association

Statute prohibiting felon from residing in dwelling with knowledge that concealable firearm was kept there, unless permission had been given by court or local law enforcement, did not infringe upon felon's First Amendment right of association by prohibiting felon from living with his family, absent assertion that stepson who owned gun was unwilling to keep gun elsewhere or that felon had ever applied to court or law enforcement for permission to reside in dwelling with gun. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; AS 11.61.200(a)(10). Morgan v. State (1997) Alaska App., 943 P.2d 1208, denial of habeas corpus affirmed 242 F.3d 382. Constitutional Law 1443; Weapons 3

7. Right to keep and bear arms

Statute prohibiting felon from residing in dwelling with knowledge that concealable firearm was kept there, unless permission had been given by court or local law enforcement, does not violate right to keep and bear arms, guaranteed by state constitution. Const. Art. 1, § 19; AS 11.61.200(a)(10). Morgan v. State (1997) Alaska App., 943 P.2d 1208, denial of habeas corpus affirmed 242 F.3d 382. Weapons 3

8. Right to privacy

Statute which makes possession of "gravity knife" in one's home a felony does not violate right to privacy under State Constitution; legislature may properly prohibit possession of object which interferes in serious manner with health, safety, rights, and privileges of others, or with public welfare. AS 11.61.200(a)(3); Const. Art. 1, § 22. State v. Weaver, 1987, 736 P.2d 781. Constitutional Law 1225; Weapons 3

9. Nature and elements of offense

The state forbidding persons convicted of a felony involving assault and like crimes from carrying firearms capable of being concealed upon the person did not forbid consideration of felony committed in Oregon seven years earlier, the statute being otherwise valid. Laws Alaska 1947, c. 70. U.S. v. Farwell, 1948, 11 Alaska 507, 76 F.Supp. 35. Weapons 6

A .45 caliber Colt Automatic pistol was a "firearm capable of being concealed upon the person" within statute forbidding persons convicted of felony involving assault and like crimes from carrying a "firearm capable of being concealed upon the person." Laws Alaska 1947, c. 70. U.S. v. Farwell, 1948, 11 Alaska 507, 76 F.Supp. 35. Weapons 8

Defendants who either have entered guilty plea or have been found guilty of felony at trial are "convicted of a felony" for purposes of the felon in possession of a firearm statute. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Brant v. State (1999) Alaska App., 992 P.2d 590. Weapons 4

Felon can be convicted of violating statute prohibiting felon from residing in dwelling with knowledge that concealable firearm is kept there unless permission has been given by court or local law enforcement, even if felon was unaware of statute; it is widely known that felons are subject to variety of legal disabilities and restrictions, which thus makes it reasonable to hold felons to duty of inquiry concerning such restrictions. AS 11.61.200(a)(10), 11.81.620(a). Morgan v. State (1997) Alaska App., 943 P.2d 1208, denial of habeas corpus affirmed 242 F.3d 382. Weapons 4

Belated set aside of conviction, following completion of probation on suspended imposition of sentence, related back to date defendant was discharged from probation and, thus, previous conviction could not be used as basis for subsequent conviction of possessing weapon after having been previously convicted of felony. AS 11.61.200, 12.55.085; Rules Crim.Proc., Rules 11(h)(2), 35.2. Hansen v. State, 1992, 824 P.2d 1384. Weapons 4

Butterfly knife is not "switchblade or gravity knife" and therefore does not qualify as prohibited weapon. AS 11.61.200(a)(3), (e)(1)(D). Jacobson v. State, 1990, 786 P.2d 388. Weapons 4

"Butterfly" or "balisong knife" was not "switchblade" or "gravity knife" for purposes of statute making it felony to possess prohibited weapon which is defined to include switchblade or gravity knife. AS 11.61.200(a)(3), (e)(1)(D). State v. Strange, 1990, 785 P.2d 563. Weapons 4

Convicted felon's possession of partner's handgun for less than one-half hour for purpose of pawning it constituted "possession" within meaning of felon-in-possession statute. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Baker v. State, 1989, 781 P.2d 1368. Weapons 4

Prosecution was not required to prove that defendant had notice or knowledge that his conduct in possessing firearm constituted crime in order to convict defendant of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). McCracken v. State, 1987, 743 P.2d 382, dismissal of habeas corpus reversed 985 F.2d 573. Weapons 4

Defendant violated felon in possession law by possessing a concealable firearm while underlying conviction was on appeal, notwithstanding that underlying conviction was later reversed. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Clark v. State, 1987, 739 P.2d 777. Weapons 4

In prosecution of an exconvict for possessing a concealable weapon, State was not required to establish defendant's awareness of statute prohibiting such conduct. AS 11.81.620(a). Afcan v. State, 1986, 711 P.2d 1198. Weapons 4

Defendant could be convicted of being a felon in possession of a concealable firearm while predicate conviction was on appeal and sentence stayed. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Berg v. State, 1985, 711 P.2d 553. Weapons 4

Guilt of possession of gun by felon does not require actual possession and custody or control is sufficient, but knowledge is prerequisite to possession, control or custody. AS 11.55.030. Davis v. State, 1972, 499 P.2d 1025, certiorari granted 93 S.Ct. 1392, 410 U.S. 925, 35 L.Ed.2d 586, reversed 94 S.Ct. 1105, 415 U.S. 308, 39 L.Ed.2d 347. Weapons 4

Weapon is "concealed" if it is hidden from ordinary observation, and need not be absolutely invisible to other persons. AS 11.55.030. McKee v. State, 1971, 488 P.2d 1039. Weapons 10

10. Defenses

Applicant whose prior felony conviction was pardoned by governor would not have affirmative defense to unlawful possession of firearm by convicted felon, and thus, applicant was not eligible for permit to carry concealed weapon under state law, in that he would be subject to criminal liability if he carried concealed handgun in any place outside his dwelling or land appurtenant to dwelling or carried handgun while not engaged in lawful hunting, fishing or trapping, or other lawful activity. Gabrielle v. State, Dept. of Public Safety (2007) Alaska, 158 P.3d 813. Weapons 12

Defendant's alleged reliance on fact that probation officer failed to inform him of statute prohibiting felon from residing in home in which concealable firearm was kept did not present sufficient basis to assert statutory mistake-of-law defense to prosecution for violation of weapons statute. AS 11.61.200(a)(10), 11.81.420(a), (b)(1). Morgan v. State (1997) Alaska App., 943 P.2d 1208, denial of habeas corpus affirmed 242 F.3d 382. Criminal Law 32

Defendant's personal belief that he was not convicted for purposes of the felon in possession statute during the pendency of the appeal of the underlying conviction was not sufficient to establish the defense of mistake of law. AS 11.61.200(b)(1-3). Clark v. State, 1987, 739 P.2d 777. Criminal Law 32

Affirmative defenses provided under felon in possession statute arise only when the actions described therein occurred before the felon in possession offense was committed. AS 11.61.200(b)(1-3). Clark v. State, 1987, 739 P.2d 777. Weapons 4

11. Attorney discipline

Federal crime of aiding and abetting a convicted felon and mental defective in receiving ammunition is a "serious crime" within meaning of bar rule, which provides that an attorney convicted of a serious crime shall be suspended from practice pending final disposition of a disciplinary proceeding and which defines a "serious crime," in part, as including any crime that would be a felony in state, though state does not specifically prohibit furnishing ammunition to a convicted felon. State Bar Rules, rules 12, 16(c), 23, 23(d); 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 922(h); AS 11.55.030, 12.15.010. Matter of Robson, 1978, 575 P.2d 771. Attorney And Client 39

12. Arrest

Police officer had probable cause for warrantless seizure and search of contents of plastic box containing crack cocaine, which was found on defendant's person during search incident to arrest for possessing firearm while intoxicated; officer's knowledge that type of glass pipe found on defendant was commonly used to smoke cocaine and that people who smoke cocaine and possess pipe usually carry cocaine, furnished probable cause for arrest of defendant for unlawful possession of drugs as well as probable cause for search of contents of plastic box for cocaine, and officer's observations of defendant's erratic behavior while possessing firearm, provided probable cause for officer to believe that defendant was high and thus to search defendant's person for cocaine. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 11.71.040(a)(3)(A). Snider v. State (1998) Alaska App., 958 P.2d 1114. Arrest 71.1(6)

Where officer knew that hand guns and ammunition had been taken in recent burglary committed near where defendant was walking, he knew defendant had a criminal record, the hour was late, protrusions in defendant's coat were unusual and the position of his hand suggested that he was carrying a hand gun, officer was justified in stopping defendant and, when defendant kept his hand positioned so as to suggest that he was carrying unholstered gun, a search of defendant was also proper and gun uncovered by search should not be suppressed. AS 11.20.100, 11.55.010, 11.55.03 (Repealed); Const. Art. 1, § 14. Ozenna v. State, 1980, 619 P.2d 477. Arrest 63.5(5); Arrest 63.5(8)

13. Joint or separate trial

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying defendant's motion for severance filed on morning of trial on ground that it was not timely where misconduct involving weapons in first degree was properly joined to kidnapping and other charges since all the charges were based on the same act or transaction, severance of the misconduct involving weapons charged would have resulted in essentially the same evidence being presented twice to two different juries, defendant made no showing that his failure to move for a severance was in any way related to State's misconduct in making late discovery, there was no claim that counsel obtained any new information which would justify failure to move for severance at earlier time and where it appeared that there could have been strategic reasons for the fact that defendant did not make his motion to sever at an earlier time. Rules Crim.Proc., Rules 8(a), 12(b, c, e), 16(f)(3); AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.61.200(a). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Criminal Law 620(7)

Joint trial of defendant for not only crimes of burglary and larceny but also the crime of possession, by a person convicted of felony, of a firearm capable of being concealed on person was not so prejudicial as to require reversal of judgment and ordering of separate trials where jury was not told nature of prior conviction involved possession of firearm count and there was nothing inflammatory about way fact of prior conviction was presented to jury. Mead v. State, 1968, 445 P.2d 229, certiorari denied 90 S.Ct. 117, 396 U.S. 855, 24 L.Ed.2d 104. Criminal Law 1166(6)

14. Pleas

Refusing to let defendant withdraw guilty plea to charge of possessing weapon after having been convicted of felony was error given that defendant was entitled to set aside of previous conviction after completing probation on suspended imposition of sentence, and defendant was misinformed by his attorney when defendant entered his plea. AS 11.61.200; Rules Crim.Proc., Rules 11(h)(2), 35.2. Hansen v. State, 1992, 824 P.2d 1384. Criminal Law 274(4); Criminal Law 274(8)

15. Admissibility of evidence

Trial judge acted within his discretion, during prosecution for possession of altered firearm, in permitting police officer to testify as to why serial number would be removed from firearm; officer's testimony was not speculative, but was instead based on her experience and training with handguns. AS 11.61.200(a)(6). Collins v. State (1999) Alaska App., 977 P.2d 741. Criminal Law 474.5; Criminal Law 476.1

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction was admissible in prosecution for misconduct involving weapon, even though defendant had conceded existence of prior felony conviction and that his prior conviction precluded him from possessing concealable firearm, as jury had legitimate right to be informed of all elements of crime charged and of proof bearing on those elements so that jurors would not be misled to think that they were being asked to convict defendant for mere possession of firearm. AS 11.61.200(a)(1); Rules of Evid., Rule 404(b)(1). State v. McLaughlin, 1993, 860 P.2d 1270. Criminal Law 661

Any error in trial court's failure to withhold from jury evidence of defendant's prior convictions in light of his proffered stipulation, for purposes of charge of misconduct involving weapons in first degree, that he had prior felony conviction, was harmless, given strength of state's case against defendant on robbery, murder, assault, and attempted murder charges; defendant conceded that he was guilty of robbery, was in possession of handgun, and had previously been convicted of felony, defendant was arrested at scene, his identity was not in doubt, and evidence of intent in shooting at police officers was overwhelming. Rules of Evid., Rule 403; Rules Crim.Proc., Rule 47(a); AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Weitz v. State, 1990, 794 P.2d 952. Criminal Law 1168(2)

Admission of prior felony charge in prosecution of defendant for kidnapping and misconduct involving weapons in first degree did not result in such unfair prejudice to defendant that he was entitled to new trial in spite of fact that his motion to sever was untimely, where defendant stipulated to existence of prior felony, jury was not informed of nature of conviction, evidence of prior conviction came in with minimum emphasis, and there was no emphasis on existence of prior conviction during remainder of trial, notwithstanding that court failed to give limiting instruction that prior felony was admissible only for purpose of proving misconduct involving weapons charge. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.61.200(a). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Criminal Law 1169.11

In prosecution of defendant for kidnapping, assault, robbery and misconduct involving weapons, trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to admit testimony of defendant's proffered witness which was offered on narrow ground that pimp would not go to police if he had dispute with someone like defendant but that pimp and defendant would try to work things out, where defendant was able to introduce evidence through another witness' testimony that victim was a pimp, jurors could reason that pimp would prefer not to contact police and proffered witness' testimony would not have assisted jury in understanding defendant's case that victim was pimp who had disagreement with defendant and would be biased against him. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.41.300(a)(1), (a)(1)(E), 11.61.200(a); Rules of Evid., Rules 403, 702. Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Witnesses 374(1)

Eyewitness' testimony, in prosecution for being a convict in possession of a prohibited weapon, that defendant took knife from his pocket, described how he had stabbed and raped his sister-in-law, mentioned he was on parole, and kissed witness was admissible to explain why defendant would be the kind of person who would carry a concealed weapon in a public building and exhibit it to a virtual stranger. McKee v. State, 1971, 488 P.2d 1039. Weapons 17(3)

16. Instructions

Ambiguity of definition of constructive possession in defendant's trial for weapons offenses after the police recovered a pistol from under the passenger seat of the vehicle in which he was riding, was harmless; the defense was that defendant did not know the pistol was under the seat, but the alleged flaw in the instruction would make a difference only if defendant conceded he was aware of the pistol; moreover, defendant was also convicted of possession of firearm in furtherance of a drug felony, so jury necessarily found that defendant knowingly possessed the pistol in aid or in furtherance of his drug offense. AS 11.61.200(a)(1). Alex v. State (2006) Alaska App., 127 P.3d 847, rehearing denied, dismissal of post-conviction relief vacated 210 P.3d 1225. Criminal Law 1172.1(3)

Defendant was not entitled to instruction on defense of necessity in trial for misconduct involving weapons in the first degree, despite defendant's testimony that he received threats from relatives of victim of defendant's former felony offense, absent showing that defendant had taken reasonable steps, other than illegally purchasing concealable firearm, in order to defend himself. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 11.81.320. McCracken v. State, 1987, 743 P.2d 382, dismissal of habeas corpus reversed 985 F.2d 573. Weapons 17(6)

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

In prosecution of defendant for kidnapping and misconduct involving weapons in first degree, trial court's failure to give limiting instruction that prior felony was admissible only for purpose of proving the misconduct involving the weapons charge was not plain error where defendant never requested limiting instruction, although defendant was entitled to limiting instruction if he had requested one and better practice would have been for trial judge to have offered to give limiting instruction. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.61.200(a). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Criminal Law 1038.2

In prosecution of defendant for kidnapping, assault, robbery, and misconduct involving weapons, trial court did not err in refusing to give defendant's proposed instruction which summarized his theory of the case that victim voluntarily accompanied defendant, that victim had possessed the firearm involved and that victim was wounded as a result of his own actions in a struggle over the weapon, where instructions informed jury of elements of the crimes, law of self-defense and necessity, burden of proof, witness credibility and bias, defendant's theory of defense was adequately covered in the instructions which were given and defendant's attorney was able to argue the defense theory in closing argument. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.41.300(a)(1), (a)(1)(E), 11.61.200(a). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Criminal Law 829(4)

Where possession of concealable firearm by defendant, a convicted felon, was the only crime charged, where idea of obtaining firearm originated with defendant while he was in prison, where defendant retained exclusive control over firearm until it was later found by prison officials, and where defendant's cell mate shared no dominion and control over the gun, there was no basis from which jury could have reasonably inferred that cell mate was an accomplice, and thus trial judge did not err in refusing to give accomplice instruction to jury. AS 11.55.030; Rules of Criminal Procedure, rule 30(b)(2). Gordon v. State, 1975, 533 P.2d 25. Criminal Law 780(1)

Defendant charged with being a convict in possession of a prohibited concealed weapon was entitled to an instruction defining the term "concealed." AS 11.55.030. McKee v. State, 1971, 488 P.2d 1039. Criminal Law 800(2)

17. Sufficiency of evidence

Evidence that accused had been convicted of assault with intent to rob under the laws of Oregon and that at time of his subsequent arrest he had in his possession a .45 caliber Colt Automatic pistol justified conviction under Alaska statute forbidding persons convicted of a felony involving assault and like crimes from carrying a firearm capable of being concealed upon the person. Laws Alaska 1947, c. 70. U.S. v. Farwell, 1948, 11 Alaska 507, 76 F.Supp. 35. Weapons 17(4)

There was sufficient evidence that defendant possessed firearm knowing that its serial number had been altered with intent of rendering firearm untraceable to support his conviction for possession of altered firearm; defendant admitted that he purchased two handguns, including the altered handgun, on street from person he did not know for $50, the loaded handguns were found under mattress of bed in bedroom where defendant was found, and police officers testified that removal of serial number from weapon exhibited intent to render that firearm untraceable. AS 11.61.200(a)(6). Collins v. State (1999) Alaska App., 977 P.2d 741. Weapons 17(4)

In prosecution of an ex-convict for possessing a concealable weapon, State fully satisfied its burden of establishing defendant's culpable mental state by showing: that defendant knew he had been convicted of a felony; that he knew he had been discharged from probation for the felony within the past five years; and that he knew he was in possession of a concealable firearm. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 11.81.610(b)(2). Afcan v. State, 1986, 711 P.2d 1198. Weapons 17(4)

Evidence sustained conviction for possession of pistol by felon, despite claim that exclusive possession was not established and although pistol did not have clip. AS 11.55.030. Davis v. State, 1972, 499 P.2d 1025, certiorari granted 93 S.Ct. 1392, 410 U.S. 925, 35 L.Ed.2d 586, reversed 94 S.Ct. 1105, 415 U.S. 308, 39 L.Ed.2d 347. Weapons 17(4)

18. Sentence and punishment--In general

Imposition of maximum sentence upon conviction for misconduct involving weapons in first degree was not clearly mistaken where state proved that defendant's prior criminal history included repeated instances of assaultive behavior and that defendant had three or more prior felony convictions. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(e)(2), 12.55.155(c)(8, 15). Simmons v. State, 1995, 899 P.2d 931. Weapons ⚷17(8)

Sentence of 11 years in prison for combination of crimes consisting of first-degree burglary, second-degree theft, first-degree weapons misconduct, and forgery was not excessive, where trial court found that defendant was third felony offender who could not be deterred or easily rehabilitated, and maximum term for defendant's single most serious offense was ten years. AS 11.46.130(b), 11.46.300(b), 11.61.200(f); AS 12.55.185(9) (1990). Wesolic v. State, 1992, 837 P.2d 130. Burglary ⚷49; Forgery ⚷51; Larceny ⚷88; Weapons ⚷17(8)

Defendant's abuse of his landlord's trust by burglarizing locked bedrooms and garage of home while landlord was absent was proper factor to consider when judging seriousness of burglary for purposes of sentencing. AS 11.46.130(b), 11.46.300(b), 11.61.200(f), 12.55.155(c)(15, 20, 21), (d)(9); AS 12.55.185(9) (1990). Wesolic v. State, 1992, 837 P.2d 130. Burglary ⚷49

Defendant's prior sentences in Oregon for unauthorized use of motor vehicle and in Fairbanks for first-degree burglary and driving while intoxicated were sufficiently significant to support finding that defendant was danger to community, as basis for making defendant's sentence for misconduct involving weapons consecutive to defendant's sentences for first-degree burglary counts. AS 11.46.300(a)(2)(A), 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(d)(1), (e)(1), 12.55.155(c)(20). Ecklund v. State, 1986, 730 P.2d 161. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷602

Trial court should, prior to imposing sentence, inquire of defendant and his counsel and resolve any factual questions in dispute regarding defendant's credit for time served based on conditions of presentence release, and should expressly identify those periods of time for which credit is to be allowed. AS 11.41.220(a)(2), 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(e)(1). Ackermann v. State, 1986, 716 P.2d 5. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷354

In sentencing defendant on convictions of assault in the first degree, kidnapping, robbery in the first degree, and misconduct involving weapons in the first degree, trial judge was authorized to impose consecutive sentences and was also free to give little weight to mitigating factor that, except for misconduct involving weapons charge, defendant's former charges consisting of five prior felony offenses were less serious offenses that his current charges. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.41.300(a)(1), (a)(1)(E), 11.61.200(a); AS 12.55.155(d)(8)(Repealed). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷94; Sentencing And Punishment ⚷590

Three-judge panel could legitimately conclude that conduct of defendant, who was convicted of first-degree misconduct involving weapons on basis of his possession of a handgun, was not the least serious included in the definition of the offense; furthermore, review of defendant's entire criminal record supported finding by three-judge panel and by original sentencing judge that defendant's conduct exhibited contempt for the law and law enforcement warranting a substantial sanction. AS 11.61.200(a), 12.55.155(d)(9, 13). Shaw v. State, 1983, 673 P.2d 781, modified on rehearing 677 P.2d 259, appeal after new sentencing hearing 1985 WL 1078167. Weapons ⚷17(8)

Three-judge panel was not clearly mistaken in determining that presumptive sentence for misconduct involving weapons in the first degree was not manifestly unjust. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), (f). Shaw v. State, 1983, 673 P.2d 781, modified on rehearing 677 P.2d 259, appeal after new sentencing hearing 1985 WL 1078167. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷77

Defendant convicted of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree, with prior convictions for assault with dangerous weapon and felon in possession of weapon, could properly be sentenced as third offender, even though a prior conviction was necessary element of both the present charge of misconduct involving weapons and the prior conviction of felon in possession of a weapon; same conviction could be used to prove element of misconduct involving weapons as well as to trigger application of presumptive sentencing. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(e)(2), 12.55.155(c). Gilbreath v. State, 1983, 668 P.2d 1354. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷1349

Even though defendant's prior felony conviction was a necessary element of the offense involving violation of statute prohibiting felons from possessing any concealable firearm, such conviction could form basis for applying presumptive sentence applicable to second felony offender. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125, 12.55.155, 12.55.185(7). Fry v. State, 1983, 655 P.2d 789. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷94

In prosecution for assault in third degree and misconduct involving weapons in first degree, trial court erred in imposing sentence in excess of presumptive sentence absent finding of aggravating factors, even if excess term was suspended. AS 11.41.220, 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.155-12.55.175. McManners v. State, 1982, 650 P.2d 414. Assault And Battery ⚷100; Weapons ⚷17(8)

Fact that, with regard to process of determining sentence to be imposed for offense of being a felon in possession of a prohibited weapon, accused's prior "police contacts" not leading to convictions were discussed in ascertaining length of time he had served on a prior conviction and other matters did not prejudice accused, in view of indication that such police contacts were not a significant factor in trial court's decision to impose four-year sentence. AS 11.55.030, 11.55.040. Deveroux v. State, 1976, 548 P.2d 1296. Criminal Law ⚷1177.3(2)

Where plea bargain entered into by accused, who pled guilty to being a felon in possession of a prohibited weapon, entailed his admitting, for purposes of sentencing, a charge of larceny in a building, such charge could be considered for sentencing purposes, though the charge was dropped. AS 11.55.030, 11.55.040. Deveroux v. State, 1976, 548 P.2d 1296. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷98

Though some of accused's prior convictions of 11 criminal offenses and 13 traffic offenses were petty in nature, the number of such convictions warranted their consideration in determining sentence to be imposed for accused's offense of being a felon in possession of a prohibited weapon. AS 11.55.030, 11.55.040. Deveroux v. State, 1976, 548 P.2d 1296. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷95

Trial court, in stating that "there is no question in my mind that * * * [defendant] is a danger to society" and in indicating that court had considered and rejected the possibility of rehabilitation "at least * * * unless there is a complete change of attitude by the defendant," sufficiently articulated court's reasons for and purpose to be served by imposition of four-year sentence against defendant for offense of being a felon in possession of a prohibited weapon. AS 11.55.030, 11.55.040. Deveroux v. State, 1976, 548 P.2d 1296. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷373

19. ---- Aggravation and mitigation, sentence and punishment

Defendant's actions which formed the basis of his third-degree weapons misconduct conviction were not among the least serious forms of conduct encompassed by the crime of weapons misconduct, and thus was not a mitigating factor for sentencing purposes; court found that defendant was legally intoxicated and had concealed his loaded weapon under his clothing. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.155(d)(9). Brockway v. State (2001) Alaska App., 37 P.3d 427. Sentencing And Punishment ⚷66

Though offense of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree is defined in terms merely of knowing possession of a firearm, aggravating factor of directing the "conduct constituting the offense" at a law enforcement officer was shown by evidence that gun was pointing directly at officer when defendant first turned, that defendant refused at least three times to drop the weapon, and that defendant knew that person confronting him was a police officer. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.155(c)(13). Gilbreath v. State, 1983, 668 P.2d 1354. Sentencing And Punishment 124

Aggravating factor of directing "conduct constituting the offense" at a law enforcement officer was applicable, despite defendant's contention that offense of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree was "complete" when police officer first saw him with the gun, before defendant was even aware of officer's presence. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.155(c)(13). Gilbreath v. State, 1983, 668 P.2d 1354. Sentencing And Punishment 124

"Most serious conduct" aggravating factor with respect to offense of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree was shown by possession of concealable weapon by defendant, who was a felon, under circumstances indicating possible intent to use the weapon against a police officer or another. Finding of mitigating factor that harm caused by defendant's conduct was "consistently minor and inconsistent with the imposition of a substantial period of imprisonment" was not warranted, given circumstances of instant offense of misconduct involving weapon in the first degree and nature of defendant's original felony, an assault with a dangerous weapon in which victim was clearly placed in substantial fear. 21. ---- Sufficiency, sentence and punishment

Composite sentence of 20 years for 12 offenses in six separate criminal cases was not excessive; defendant could have been sentenced to a term of 20 years imprisonment alone for class A felony burglary, the most serious of the crimes committed by defendant, trial judge found that defendant had not responded to five years worth of prior rehabilitative efforts and that it would be fruitless to place defendant on probation, defendant conceded to two aggravating factors during sentencing, and defendant had been under State supervision since he was 12-years-old. Smith v. State (2008) Alaska App., 187 P.3d 511. Sentencing And Punishment 645

Sentencing defendant, for convictions of two counts of first-degree burglary and one count of first-degree misconduct involving weapons, to concurrent six-year terms with two years suspended for two burglaries and consecutive two-year term for weapons misconduct, was not clearly mistaken. AS 11.46.300(a)(2)(A), 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(d)(1), (e)(1), 12.55.155(c)(20). Ecklund v. State, 1986, 730 P.2d 161. Burglary 49; Weapons 17(8)

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Defendant's sentence totaling 53 years of imprisonment for convictions of assault in the first degree, misconduct involving weapons in the first degree, kidnapping, and robbery in the first degree was not excessive where trial judge could have properly given great weight to jury's finding that defendant kidnapped victim, intending to injure him and that defendant intentionally shot victim and then robbed him, defendant had record of five prior felony convictions, defendant had served sentences of greater than one year and had not been deterred by these former sentences, and defendant was on parole at time of the offenses and had just completed lengthy sentence four months before. AS 11.41.200(a)(1, 3), 11.41.300(a)(1), (a)(1)(E), 11.61.200(a). Wortham v. State, 1984, 689 P.2d 1133. Sentencing And Punishment 645

Sentence on charge of misconduct involving weapons in the first degree was illegal, since sentencing judge gave less than presumptive sentence of two years without finding any mitigating factors, and sentence therefore had to be vacated. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.125(e)(1), (g), 12.55.165. State v. LaPorte, 1983, 672 P.2d 466. Sentencing And Punishment 995

Sentence of five years with 18 months suspended, imposed on conviction of defendant for misconduct involving weapon in the first degree, with two aggravating factors, was not excessive. AS 11.61.200(a)(1), 12.55.155(c)(10, 13), (d)(13). Gilbreath v. State, 1983, 668 P.2d 1354. Weapons 17(8)

Imposition of four-year sentence for offense of being a felon in possession of a prohibited weapon was not clearly erroneous with regard to accused who had prior convictions for 13 traffic offenses and 11 criminal offenses including burglary, and who had recently committed a larceny in a building. AS 11.55.030, 11.55.040. Deveroux v. State, 1976, 548 P.2d 1296. Weapons 17(8)

22. Review

In determining meaning of terms "switchblade" and "gravity knife" that are included in definition of prohibited weapons which it is felony to possess, Court of Appeals had to look to general usage for meaning of terms, where neither of the terms was defined in statutes. Re: Probation/Parole Supervision

[redacted]

This letter is to serve as official notification that your probation/parole supervision has expired and contact with the Fairbanks Probation Office is no longer required.

Pursuant to AS 15.05.030, please be advised that you should re-register with the Division of Elections (P.O. Box 110017, Juneau, AK 99811-0017), now that you have been discharged from probation supervision. Also, please be advised that your right to vote (after contacting Division of Elections), your right to be a member of a jury, and your right to hold elected office are automatically restored.

Although your above rights have been restored [rights to vote, jury service, and to hold elected office], you should be aware that your right to possess firearms (all shotguns, rifles, as well as handguns) and ammunition remains restricted. Possession of any rifle, shotgun, rifle and/or ammunition could subject you to prosecution for a felony criminal offense under state or federal law. Even if you received a suspended imposition of sentence and an order has been issued setting aside the conviction, your right to possess firearms and ammunition has not been restored. You should contact your attorney if you have questions.

Thank you for your cooperation during your probation/parole supervision and best of luck to you in the future. If you have any questions concerning this subject or any other matter, please contact me.

Sincerely,

Case No. 4FA-S99-3528 CR

ORDER RE: DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR ORDER ALLOWING HIM TO POSSESS FIREARM

In December 1999, Allen Wilson was charged with one count of theft in the second degree (AS 11.46.130(a)), a Class C felony and 24 counts of unsworn falsification (AS 11.56.210(a)), a Class A misdemeanor in connection with false claims for unemployment compensation. A jury found him guilty on all counts. On December 8, 2000, this court sentenced Mr. Wilson to pay restitution to the Alaska Department of Labor in the amount of $7552, which Mr. Wilson paid in full the same day. In 2001, Mr. Wilson attempted to get his convictions set aside in order to get his permit to carry a concealed weapon reinstated. This court denied his request.

On January 18, 2005, Mr. Wilson wrote a letter to the court requesting that his right to possess a gun for hunting be restored so that he can hunt for subsistence purposes. This court has considered the letter and motion.

Discussion:

I. Can Allen Wilson Legally Possess a Firearm for Hunting at This Time?

Under AS 11.61.200, Mr. Wilson is prohibited from possessing a firearm, which is either concealed or is capable of being concealed on his person, for ten years after the date of unconditional discharge from the felony offense. The statute applies to all felony convictions, regardless of whether violence was involved in the offense. See AS 11.61.200. Therefore, the restriction applies to Mr. Wilson even though he was convicted of theft in a completely non-violent situation.

The term "unconditional discharge" requires "completion of any sentence of imprisonment, discharge from parole or probation, and release from any other restriction directly imposed as part of the judgment of conviction." Singleton v. State, 921 P.2d 636, 638 (Alaska App. 1996); AS 12.55.185(16); AS 11.61.200(h)(2). Mr. Wilson paid the restitution on the same day he was sentenced. No other restrictions were imposed by the judgment of conviction. Thus, Mr. Wilson was unconditionally discharged on December 8, 2000, and will be eligible to possess a firearm capable of being concealed on his person in December 2010.

Rifles or shotguns manufactured for hunting are generally too large to be considered "capable of concealment on one's person" under AS 11.61.200(a). Therefore, state law appears to permit Mr. Wilson to possess a firearm like a hunting rifle, so long as it is not covered or concealed.

Several other states along with Alaska have statutes that prohibit a convicted felon from possessing handguns or other concealable firearms while permitting them to possess rifles and shotguns. E.g., United States v. Qualls, 172 F.3d 1136, 1138-39 (9th Cir. 1999); New York v. Adams, 747 N.Y.S.2d 909, 912-15 (Sup. Ct. 2002).

Under federal law, a felon may be charged under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) and 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20) for possessing any firearm, including those permitted under state law. Caron v. United State, 524 U.S. 308, 313-317, 118 S. Ct. 2007, 2011-2012, 141 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1998); Adams, 747 N.Y.S.2d at 915; Qualls, 172 F.3d at 1138-39. The United States Supreme Court has interpreted the language in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20) to prohibit convicted felons from possessing all firearms of any type for as long as any state restriction on possession of any type of firearm due to the felony conviction remains. Caron v. United State, 524 U.S. 308, 313-317, 118 S. Ct. 2007, 2011-2012, 141 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1998).[1]

Conclusion:

State law prohibits Mr. Wilson from possessing a firearm concealed or capable of being concealed until December 8, 2010. Federal law prohibits Mr. Wilson from possessing any firearm until December 8, 2010. This court is without jurisdiction to grant Mr. Wilson permission to possess a firearm. The Motion is DENIED.

Dated this 25 day of May, 2005, at Fairbanks, Alaska.

Richard Svodony
Assistant Attorney General
PO Box 110300
Juneau, AK 99811

Dear Richard:

This letter is a follow-up to our recent conversation regarding the Lauterbach Amendment and your interpretation of the law.

Specifically, as indicated to you, the primary concern that I have is that the Department of Probation and Parole has apparently been advising individuals who have retained an SIS that they no longer have weapons rights. I believe that this is incorrect advice. I furthermore suggest that your office's interpretation of Judge Steinkruger's opinion is incorrect, as well. My analysis will follow shortly.

Recognizing that you indicated to me that the assistant attorney general for the state was essentially interpreting federal law, might I suggest that the state take an alternate position? Specifically, why cannot the state simply advise individuals that federal law may or may not impact their ability to own weapons, and that they should be aware that federal law may restrict the right to own weapons, but that the state law does not do so? This may solve the problem.

As indicated to you, the analysis of Judge Steinkruger in the case you referenced, I believe, contradicts your position as set forth to me on the phone. Specifically, I have reviewed a copy of the email communication between Assistant Attorney General John J. Novak and Assistant Attorney General John K. Bodick from April 3, 2009. In the email communication Mr. Novak opines that certain language regarding the right to keep and bear arms that is included in the restoration of rights letter typically distributed to offenders that successfully complete probation or parole is inaccurate. Respectfully, Mr. Novak's analysis is wrong for the following reasons:

First, Mr. Novak states that a felony conviction is a felony conviction even though the court grants an SIS that is later set aside. This is inaccurate. An SIS that is set aside is, by very definition, not a felony conviction, because in order to be a felony conviction a person must be found guilty and sentenced. A person who receives an SIS that is set aside is never sentenced, and is therefore never convicted. Moreover, 18 USC § 921(a)(20), provides that "any conviction which has been...set aside...shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of [lawful firearms possession]." Thus, an SIS that is later set aside is not a felony conviction under either state or federal law. Mr. Novak's assertion to the contrary is wrong.

Mr. Novak then states that a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a weapon in the third degree, in violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(12), by knowingly possessing a firearm concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony offense even when the court granted an SIS for the prior offense that was later set aside. Again, Mr. Novak's analysis is dead wrong, as he fails to mention AS 11.61.200(g)(1)(B) which states that "it is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085. Thus, AS 11.61.200 clearly states that it is not a crime to knowingly possess a concealed firearm if a person has been granted an SIS.

I submit that, Mr. Novak is also incorrect when he states that a person commits the federal offense of felony possession in violation of 18 USC 922(g)(1) by possessing a firearm or ammunition after having been convicted of a felony with the only exception being those cases where an Alaska Court granted an SIS between May 19, 1986, and April 14, 1998. It is truly baffling where this opinion comes from. As stated above, 18 USC § 921(a)(20) clearly states that a person who was granted an SIS is not a convicted felon for purposes of the felon in possession of a firearm statute. The date of the SIS is irrelevant, as 921 (a)(20) is not limited by date, and is currently valid federal law.

Perhaps, Mr. Novak's confusion is a misunderstanding of the interplay between federal and state law. As previously explained, once a felony conviction is set aside, there are no longer any restrictions under federal or state law for firearms possession. It is, however, true that, under federal law, once a person is released from probation or parole from a felony conviction (not an SIS) he may not possess any firearms whatsoever until 10 years has passed from the date of unconditional discharge, which is generally the date the person is released from probation and/or parole. Under state law, however, a person is still allowed to possess long guns, i.e., rifles and shotguns, upon being released from probation and parole since there is no state law prohibiting such. Under the Carone v. US decision, mentioned by Mr. Novak in his email, it is accurate that such possession, although not prohibited by state law, would still be a violation of federal law until the 10 year period has passed. Once the 10 year period has passed, even a convicted felon who did not receive an SIS can possess any firearm they choose in Alaska, concealable or not, under both state and federal law.

Thank you once again for your kind consideration of this matter.

Sincerely,

William R. Satterberg, Jr.

Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General
P.O. Box 110300
Juneau, AK 99811-0300

Dear Dan:

I enjoyed visiting with you briefly on July 26, 2009, when you were in Fairbanks. Unfortunately, time did not allow us to discuss a matter which I think is of rather serious concern.

Specifically, for many years, SIS sentences have been given out to felony offenders. Upon successful completion of the SIS, the offender has then been able to have their civil rights restored which, parenthetically, has included the right to commence hunting once again and owning firearms.

In April of this year, a decision was issued out of Anchorage as an Attorney General's opinion by Assistant Attorney General John Novak, copy attached, which essentially indicated that people who had an SIS record were still precluded from owning firearms because they "had been convicted" of a felony, even though the conviction had been set aside.

Needless to say, I disagree strongly with that decision, but the unfortunate byproduct is that the Department of Corrections is now taking the position based upon that letter of opinion that anybody who has an SIS conviction is still legally precluded from ever owning a firearm. I believe that this is incorrect, and I am also concerned that criminal charges may eventually be filed by somebody who has received advice either by defense counsel, or even the court, as well as from prior probation officers, that they are able to own a firearm once their rights have been restored, upon successful completion of the SIS.

Finally, it should be noted that one of the incentives for many individuals to plead guilty to a charge and obtain an SIS has been the understanding that they will be able to own a firearm at some future date, recognizing how important hunting is in Alaska. This latest decision, which may simply be further advocacy of gun control, is going to have a most chilling effect upon those decisions as well.

If possible, might you please consider having the decision reevaluated, and, if the decision is made to reverse your predecessor's position, taking appropriate steps? One of the important factors to this is that I am trying to avoid litigation which could be filed as a declaratory judgment action, to address the issue as well. If the Attorney General changes his position on the matter, however, the issue will be resolved.

Sincerely,

William R. Satterberg, Jr.

Please read the text below. It clarifies an important point for which we apparently have been providing misinformation for years. According to the Department of Law, those offenders with an SIS also lose their firearms rights, even if the conviction is later set aside. Make sure this is covered in the orientation. For those POs who supervise someone with an SIS, please cover this information with them and enter a chrono that you did so. Thanks.

Subject: Firearm Possession Following Completion of Felony Probation/Parole

John,

I recently spent a considerable amount of time researching and determining the law concerning the legality of possessing firearms in Alaska following a conviction for a felony offense. In my efforts, probation/parole officer Cris Sanders provided me a restoration of rights sample letter for an offender that successfully completed probation/parole. That letter contained the following text:

"Although your above rights have been restored [rights to vote, jury service, and to hold elected office], you should be aware that your right to keep and bear arms is automatically restored only if you received a suspended imposition of sentence and your record has been set aside. If you did not receive a SIS, your rights to keep and bear arms are subject to applicable state laws. Contact your attorney if you have questions."

This above quoted language is wrong. It is my suggestion that DOC restoration letters not include this erroneous language. I will attempt to briefly explain the law and why the above language is wrong.

First, a felony conviction - whether by plea or jury verdict - is a felony conviction, even when the court grants an SIS that is later set aside.

Second, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a weapon in the third degree (a class C felony) in violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(12), by knowingly possessing on or after April 14, 1998 (the effective date of the statute section) a firearm concealed on the person after having been convicted of any felony offense even when the court granted a SIS for the prior offense that later was set aside.

And third, a person commits the federal offense of felon in possession in violation of 18 USC 922(g)(1) in Alaska by knowingly possessing any firearm or ammunition (including all handguns, shotguns and rifles as well as all types of ammunition) after having been convicted of any felony, with the only exception being those cases where the Alaska court granted a SIS and where a set aside order was issued between the dates of May 19, 1986 and April 14, 1998. See, Caron v. United States, 524 US 308 (1998); United States v. Brown, 69 F Supp 2d 925 (E.D. Mich. 1999); and effective date of federal Firearms Owners Protection Act of 1988.

The bottom line is that in the vast majority of cases a person will commit a felony offense (whether under state or federal law) by possessing any firearm or any ammunition after having been convicted of a felony, regardless if a SIS was granted and a court later issued a set aside order.

I suggest the following language be included in "restoration letters":

"Although your above rights have been restored [rights to vote, jury service, and to hold elected office], you should be aware that your right to possess firearms (all shotguns, rifles, as well as handguns) and ammunition remains restricted. Possession of any rifle, shotgun, rifle and/or ammunition likely will subject you to prosecution for felony criminal offense under state or federal law even if you received a suspended imposition of sentence and an order setting aside the conviction has been issued. You should contact your attorney if you have questions."

I will leave it to you to pass this information on to the appropriate folks at DOC. If desired, I am happy to further discus this matter.

Dear Honorable House Judiciary Committee,

I Richard Patterson of Barrow, Alaska submit this in support HB408

I regret I am not able to testify today. I am piloting a rescue helicopter in remote austere conditions where help is days away if trouble arises. I am on a search for an overdue individual 60 NM south of Kaktovik on the Arctic Slope. Not far from where we shot and killed a 3 year old grizzly that mauled and consumed two persons a few years ago. Last night I assisted Pt. Hope whalers on floating sea ice pans that broke loose from shorefast in high winds.

Article 3, subpart 21 of the Alaska Constitution gives the power of clemency exclusively to the executive branch. The clemency process is long, difficult, thorough and exhausting. It is rarely granted and requires extraordinary circumstances. It also requires exemplary efforts at rehabilitation. I assure you the chances of criminal recidivism after earning a pardon are zero.

Below are some definitions and laws. It is clear that both Congress and the Alaska Legislature intended to provide restorative avenues for ex offenders regarding firearm possession. Needless to say today I do not have the survival tools I need to protect myself, family or those I serve. Even after earning a full unconditional pardon I am still being punished in the worst way. Inability to protect my own life. I pray you will rectify the law to allow its intended design ring true. Allow those that earn pardons have all punishment removed. Thank you for defending the Alaska Constitution and the unique lifestyles we live.

Federal law on firearms disability:

18 U.S.C. §921(a)(20) provides:

What constitutes a conviction of such a crime shall be determined in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held. Any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of this chapter, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly [or implicitly as a matter of state law] provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms.

Note: It is clear Congress intended for a restorative legal option. It also does not mention conceal has a limitation. This was added by the US Supreme court Caron split decision. (All or nothing)

Excerpt from the current State of Alaska Clemency handbook:

Pardons
A pardon is a form of Executive Clemency, which if full and unconditional, relieves an offender from further punishment and disabilities imposed by reason of a criminal offense. It is an act of grace which represents forgiveness for a particular crime.

Definition of a pardon from Black's Law Dictionary*:

In contrast to a reprieve or a commutation, a "pardon" releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 1113 (6th ed. 1990).

A pardon is usually an action that mitigates or sets aside punishment for a crime after a conviction. Black's Law Dictionary defines it as an 'act or an instance of officially nullifying punishment or other legal consequences of a crime' (ibid., at 1137).

Dear Honorable House Judiciary Committee,

I regret I am not able to testify today. I am piloting a rescue helicopter in remote austere conditions where help is days away if trouble arises. I am on a search for a overdue individual 60 NM south of Kaktovik on the Arctic Slope. Not far from where we shot and killed a 3 year old grizzly that mauled and consumed two persons a few years ago. Last night I assisted Pt. Hope whalers on floating sea ice pans that broke loose from shorefast in high winds.

Article 3, subpart 21 of the Alaska Constitution gives the power of clemency exclusively to the executive branch. The clemency process is long, difficult, thorough and exhausting. It is rarely granted and requires extraordinary circumstances. It also requires exemplary efforts at rehabilitation. I assure you the chances of criminal recidivism after earning a pardon are zero.

Below are some definitions and laws. It is clear that both Congress and the Alaska Legislature intended to provide restorative avenues for ex offenders regarding firearm possession. Needless to say today I do not have the survival tools I need to protect myself, family or those I serve. Even after earning a full unconditional pardon I am still being punished in the worst way. Inability to protect my own life. I pray you will rectify the law to allow its intended design ring true. Allow those that earn pardons have all punishment removed. Thank you for defending the Alaska Constitution and the unique lifestyles we live.

Federal law on firearms disability:

18 U.S.C. §921(a)(20) provides:

What constitutes a conviction of such a crime shall be determined in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held. Any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of this chapter, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly [or implicitly as a matter of state law] provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms.

Note: It is clear Congress intended for a restorative legal option. It also does not mention conceal has a limitation. This was added by the Caron decision, US Supreme court split decision.

Excerpt from the current State of Alaska Clemency handbook:

Pardons
A pardon is a form of Executive Clemency, which if full and unconditional, relieves an offender from further punishment and disabilities imposed by reason of a criminal offense. It is an act of grace which represents forgiveness for a particular crime.

Definition of a pardon from Black's Law Dictionary:

In contrast to a reprieve or a commutation, a "pardon" releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 1113 (6th ed. 1990).
See also, 1985 N.D. Op. Att'y Gen. 158 and 1988 N.D. Op. Att'y Gen. 65.

COMMENTARY

From Senate Journal Supp. No. 47, at 100-02 (June 12, 1978):

> Misconduct involving weapons in the first degree is the most serious weapons offense in the Code and is classified as a class C felony.
> Subsection (a)(1) prohibits felons from possessing firearms capable of being concealed on their person.
> Subsection (a)(2) expands existing law by covering the person who sells or transfers a firearm capable of being concealed on the person knowing that the transferee has been convicted of a felony. The transferor who acts with such knowledge is viewed as equally culpable and deserving of identical punishment as the transferee.

Sec. 11.61.200. Misconduct involving weapons in the third degree. (a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person

(1) knowingly possesses a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;

(2) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person to a person who has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;

(3) manufactures, possesses, transports, sells, or transfers a prohibited weapon;

(4) knowingly sells or transfers a firearm to another whose physical or mental condition is substantially impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into that other person's body;

(5) removes, covers, alters, or destroys the manufacturer's serial number on a firearm with intent to render the firearm untraceable;

(6) possesses a firearm on which the manufacturer's serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed, knowing that the serial number has been removed, covered, altered, or destroyed with the intent of rendering the firearm untraceable;

(7) violates AS 11.46.320 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a firearm when the person's physical or mental condition is impaired as a result of the introduction of an intoxicating liquor or controlled substance into the person's body;

(8) violates AS 11.46.320 or 11.46.330 by entering or remaining unlawfully on premises or in a propelled vehicle in violation of a provision of an order issued or filed under AS 18.66.100 — 18.66.180 or issued under former AS 25.35.010(b) or 25.35.020 and, during the violation, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;

(9) communicates in person with another in violation of AS 11.56.740 and, during the communication, possesses on the person a defensive weapon or a deadly weapon, other than an ordinary pocketknife;

(10) resides in a dwelling knowing that there is a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person or a prohibited weapon in the dwelling if the person has been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory, unless the person has written authorization to live in a dwelling in which there is a concealable weapon described in this paragraph from a court of competent jurisdiction or from the head of the law enforcement agency of the community in which the dwelling is located;

(11) discharges a firearm from a propelled vehicle while the vehicle is being operated in circumstances other than described in AS 11.61.190(a)(2); or

(12) knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

(c) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(3) of this section that the manufacture, possession, transportation, sale, or transfer of the prohibited weapon was in accordance with registration under 26 U.S.C. 5801-5872 (National Firearms Act).

(d) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(11) of this section that the person was using a firearm while hunting, trapping, or fishing in a manner not prohibited by statute or regulation.

(e) The provisions of (a)(3) and (11) of this section do not apply to a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment.

(f) For purposes of (a)(12) of this section, a firearm on a person is concealed if it is covered or enclosed in any manner so that an observer cannot determine that it is a firearm without removing it from that which covers or encloses it or without opening, lifting, or removing that which covers or encloses it. A firearm on a person is not concealed if it is unloaded and is encased in a closed container designed for transporting firearms.

(g) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that

(1) either

(A) the defendant convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
