INQUIRY RE: ISSUANCE OF LEGIS. SUBPOENAS

Dana Strommen

From: Tillery, Craig J (LAW) [craig.tillery@alaska.gov]

Sent: Tuesday, February 03, 2009 9:09 AM

To: Rep. Kurt Olson

Cc: Rep. Jay Ramras

Subject: House Judiciary Committee information request

Dear Representative Olson,

At the House Judiciary Committee overview for the Department of Law, you asked how much time and money was spent by the attorney general's office fighting the legislative subpoenas. Our records indicate that the Department of Law spent 101.6 hours, at a cost of $13,784, on litigation and other activities related to the legislative subpoenas.

Craig J. Tillery
Deputy Attorney General
Alaska Department of Law
1031 W. 4th Avenue, Suite 200
Anchorage, AK 99501
(907) 269-5200
craig.tillery@alaska.gov

Sec. 24.25.010. Issuance and form of subpoena.

(a) A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness before either house of the legislature may be issued by the president or the speaker.

(b) A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness before a standing or special committee of the legislature may be issued by the chairman of a committee when authorized to do so by a majority of the membership of the committee and with the concurrence of the president or the speaker, or with the concurrence of the house or the senate.

(c) A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness before an interim committee established by either house of the legislature, or by both, may be issued by the chairman of a committee when authorized to do so by a majority of the membership of the committee and with the concurrence of the president or the speaker.

(d) The subpoena is sufficient if

(1) it states before whom the proceeding is held;

(2) it is addressed to the witness;

(3) it requires the attendance of the witness at a time and place certain;

(4) it is signed

(A) by the president or the speaker under (a) of this section, or

(B) by the committee chairman with the concurrence of the president or the speaker under (b) and (c) of this section.

(e) This section does not apply to the legislative council or to the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee.

Sec. 24.25.020. Service of subpoena.

A person over the age of 19 years who is competent as a witness in the state courts may serve the subpoena. The person's affidavit that the person delivered a copy to the witness is evidence of service.

AS
Sec. 24.25.030. Disobeying subpoena or refusing to testify.

If a witness neglects or refuses to obey a subpoena, or neglects or refuses to testify or to produce upon reasonable notice any material and proper books, papers, or documents in the possession or under the control of the witness, the senate or house of representatives may by resolution entered on its journal commit the witness for contempt. If contempt is committed before a committee, the committee shall report the contempt to the senate or house of representatives, as the case may be, for such action as may be considered necessary.

Sec. 24.25.040. Arrest for disobedience to subpoena.

A witness who neglects or refuses to attend in obedience to subpoena may be arrested by the sergeant-at-arms and brought before the senate or house of representatives, as the case may be. The only warrant or authority necessary authorizing arrest is a copy of a resolution of the senate or house of representatives signed by the president of the senate or speaker of the house of representatives, as the case may be, and countersigned by the secretary of the senate or the clerk of the house of representatives, as the case may be.

Sec. 24.25.050. Witness fees and mileage.

A person appearing before either house, or both, or a legislative committee in response to a subpoena is entitled to $20 for each day's attendance, and for the time necessary in coming and returning to the person's place of residence and mileage at the rate of 15 cents a mile for the distance traveled in going to and returning from the place of attendance. The witness fee and mileage fee shall be paid out of the state treasury upon presentation of a certificate of attendance and mileage due, signed by the presiding officer of the house that authorized issuance of subpoena.

Sec. 24.25.060. Oath and penalty for violation of oath.

The president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives and the chairman of every committee of either body may administer an oath to a witness appearing before the respective bodies. A person who wilfully swears or affirms falsely concerning any matter material to the subject under investigation or inquiry is guilty of perjury and upon conviction is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years.

Sec. 24.25.070. Grant of immunity on claim of privilege of self-incrimination.

(a) A person called as a witness before the senate, house of representatives, or a committee of either or both, who refuses to answer any question or to produce any book, paper, or document relating to the matter under inquiry, on the ground that the answer or the production may tend to incriminate the person, may be granted immunity from punishment for the offense to which the question or evidence relates by resolution of the house that is conducting the inquiry. The resolution shall be entered upon its journal, and the witness may then be compelled to answer the question or produce the evidence.

(b) If a witness is granted immunity and compelled to testify or produce evidence after claiming the privilege of self-incrimination, the witness may not thereafter be prosecuted in any court for the offense to which the question or evidence relates.

Sec. 24.25.080. Punishment for disobedience to subpoena or refusal to testify.

A person subpoenaed as provided in this chapter who fails, neglects, or refuses to attend at the time and place where the person's presence is required, or fails, neglects, or refuses to produce the books, papers, or instruments or other evidence designated in the subpoena, or who having attended in response to the subpoena, or having appeared voluntarily, refuses to testify as to any material and proper matter within the power of the senate, house of representatives, or a committee to investigate, upon conviction, is punishable by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than 30 days nor more than six months.

West's Alaska Statutes Annotated Currentness
Title 44. State Government
Chapter 23. Department of Law
→ § 44.23.020. Duties; and powers; waiver of immunity

(a) The attorney general is the legal advisor of the governor and other state officers.

(b) The attorney general shall

(1) defend the Constitution of the State of Alaska and the Constitution of the United States of America;

(2) bring, prosecute, and defend all necessary and proper actions in the name of the state for the collection of revenue;

(3) represent the state in all civil actions in which the state is a party;

(4) prosecute all cases involving violation of state law, and file informations and prosecute all offenses against the revenue laws and other state laws where there is no other provision for their prosecution;

(5) administer state legal services, including the furnishing of written legal opinions to the governor, the legislature, and all state officers and departments as the governor directs; and give legal advice on a law, proposed law, or proposed legislative measure upon request by the legislature or a member of the legislature;

(6) draft legal instruments for the state;

(7) make available a report to the legislature, through the governor, at each regular legislative session

(A) of the work and expenditures of the office; and

(B) on needed legislation or amendments to existing law;

(8) perform all other duties required by law or which usually pertain to the office of attorney general in a state; and

(9) prepare, publish, and revise as it becomes useful or necessary to do so an information pamphlet on landlord and tenant rights and the means of making complaints to appropriate public agencies concerning landlord and tenant rights; the contents of the pamphlet and any revision shall be approved by the Department of Law before publication.

(c) Before January 1, 1999, the attorney general may, in a case that involves the state's title to submerged lands, or in any case in which the state seeks to allocate fault to the federal government or a federal employee under AS 09.17.080, waive the state's immunity from suit in federal court provided under the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The expiration on January 1, 1999, of the attorney general's authority to waive the state's Eleventh Amendment immunity does not affect existing waivers in ongoing cases.

(d) The attorney general may, subject to the power of the legislature to enact laws and make appropriations, settle actions, cases, and offenses under (b) of this section.

(e) There is established within the Department of Law the function of public advocacy for regulatory affairs. The attorney general shall participate as a party in a matter that comes before the Regulatory Commission of Alaska when the attorney general determines that participation is in the public interest.

(f) The attorney general shall designate not less than one-half attorney position in the Department of Law for the purpose of prosecuting actions for fraudulent acts related to workers' compensation under AS 23.30.

(g) The attorney general may, in cases that involve compliance, discharge, or enforcement of responsibilities assumed by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities under AS 44.42.300, waive the state's immunity from suit in federal court provided under the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

NOTES OF DECISIONS

Actions for administration or enforcement of charitable trusts 7
Common law powers 3
Defense duties 4
Distribution of governmental powers 1
Negligence of subordinates 6
Powers and duties, generally 2
Special prosecutors 5

1. Distribution of governmental powers

Under the separation of powers doctrine, court does not have power to control the exercise of the Attorney General's discretion as to whether he will take any action in any particular cases of contempt for nonsupport of child. AS 44.23.020. Public Defender Agency v. Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 1975, 534 P.2d 947. Constitutional Law ⚿ 2543

2. Powers and duties, generally

Attorney general had standing to sue corporations from which Multiple-Beneficiary-Permittees (MBPs) purchased gaming supplies and leased facilities, alleging that corporations violated state's gaming laws by charging member charities of MBPs unreasonably high expenses; although Department of Revenue had statutory authority to administer state's gaming law, and to issue orders prohibiting acts in violation of those provisions, Department of Revenue lacked statutory power to prosecute offenses against gaming laws. AS 05.15.010, 05.15.060, 44.23.020(b)(4). Botelho v. Griffin (2001) Alaska, 25 P.3d 689. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Reading of statutory authorization for Department of Law operations suggests intent to leave offices and their functions broad, general and flexible, even when circumstances do not involve disqualification of Attorney General, and demonstrate that the legislature contemplated retention of services of counsel outside the Department of Law. AS 36.30.015, 36.30.850(b)(32), 44.23.050. State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

In light of the substantial state interest in the enforcement of child support orders, contempt of such an order is a violation of state law within meaning of statute providing that the Attorney General shall prosecute all cases involving violation of state law. AS 09.55.210, 11.35.010, 11.35.090, 25.25.010 et seq., 44.23.020, 47.25.310 et seq. Public Defender Agency v. Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 1975, 534 P.2d 947. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Attorney General's discretionary control over the legal business of the state, both civil and criminal, includes the initiation, prosecution and disposition of cases. AS 44.23.020. Public Defender Agency v. Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 1975, 534 P.2d 947. Attorney General ⚿ 7

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

United States Attorney General and district attorneys have authority to prosecute all suits in which United States are concerned. U.S. v. Lynch, 1927, 7 Alaska 568, Unreported. Attorney General ⚿ 7; Descent And Distribution ⚿ 9

3. Common law powers

Department of Revenue's authority to proceed administratively against gaming law offenses does not limit the attorney general's statutory and common law authority to bring suit to uphold the state's gaming laws. AS 05.15.010, 05.15.060, 44.23.020(b)(4). Botelho v. Griffin (2001) Alaska, 25 P.3d 689. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Under the common law, the attorney general has the power to bring any action which he thinks necessary to protect the public interest, a broad grant of authority which includes the power to act to enforce Alaska's statutes. Botelho v. Griffin (2001) Alaska, 25 P.3d 689. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Generally, an attorney general has those powers which existed at common law except where they are limited by statute or conferred upon some other state official. AS 44.23.020(b)(8). Botelho v. Griffin (2001) Alaska, 25 P.3d 689. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Attorney General has common-law power to bring any action which he thinks necessary to protect public interest. Berger v. State, Dept. of Revenue, 1996, 910 P.2d 581. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Record did not show that Attorney General lacked consent of the principal so as to bar appointment of special prosecutor by Attorney General under common-law doctrine of delegatus non potest delegare. State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Under the common law, an Attorney General is empowered to bring any action which he thinks necessary to protect the public interest and possesses the corollary power to make any disposition of the state's litigation which he thinks best. AS 44.23.020. Public Defender Agency v. Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 1975, 534 P.2d 947. Attorney General ⚿ 7

Generally, an Attorney General has those powers which existed at common law except where they are limited by statute or conferred upon some other state official. AS 44.23.020. Public Defender Agency v. Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 1975, 534 P.2d 947. Attorney General ⚿ 6

4. Defense duties

The Attorney General is authorized to appear either individually or through United States Attorneys and their assistants and defend civil and criminal actions against government officials, employees and military personnel for acts done in performance of their official duties. 5 U.S.C.A. §§ 309, 316. Swanson v. Willis, 1953, 14 Alaska 399, 114 F.Supp. 434, affirmed 15 Alaska 501, 220 F.2d 440. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Governor has a duty to defend a law that was enacted through the people's initiative powers and that duty is executed by the Attorney General. Alaskans for a Common Language, Inc. v.

Kritz (2000) Alaska, 3 P.3d 906, on remand 2002 WL 34220502. Attorney General ⚿ 6; States ⚿ 41

Department of Law has responsibility of defending laws passed by the legislature against constitutional attack. Gray v. State, 1974, 525 P.2d 524. Attorney General ⚿ 6

5. Special prosecutors

Special prosecutor hired by Attorney General did not exceed the scope of his authority in securing indictments of target of investigation; appointment letter authorized special prosecutor to investigate other related matters and to serve as special counsel in "other matters that may arise in the course of the investigation," and Attorney General made it clear that special prosecutor had acted within the scope of authority intended. AS 44.23.020(b)(3). State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Even if special prosecutor appointed by Attorney General were found to have technically exceeded the scope of his appointment, special prosecutor was a de facto officer and indictments obtained by him remained valid pursuant to that authority, absent showing of prejudice by the person indicted; special prosecutor had at least a fair color or right of title and acted for such length of time as to afford presumption of appointment, appointment process was reported publicly, target of investigation himself urged state to get on with the investigation, and questions regarding special prosecutor's authority had no demonstrated bearing on grand jury's determination to return indictments. AS 44.23.020. State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Person who was investigated by special prosecutor and against whom indictments returned did not have the same standing as the Attorney General to challenge whether special prosecutor exceeded the scope of his appointment by the Attorney General. State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

State Constitution and applicable statutes did not express or imply restriction on Attorney General's authority to properly delegate certain duties of the office, by appointing special prosecutor, where Attorney General maintained appropriate supervision, direction and control over special prosecutor, who was required to submit claims for services to the Department of Law and who was subject to termination by the Attorney General at any time. Const. Art. 3, § 22; AS 44.17.010, 44.17.040, 44.23.020(b)(3, 7). State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

Appointment of special prosecutor by Attorney General as remedy to Attorney General's perceived conflict of interest was both appropriate and authorized pursuant to statute; Attorney General is obligated under statute to investigate and prosecute law violations, and if Attorney General and Department of Law are disqualified, Attorney General is nevertheless "required by law" to ensure that investigation and prosecution are conducted by someone who is qualified, whether that person is denominated special counsel, special prosecutor, or some other title. AS 44.23.020, 44.23.020(b)(3, 7). State v. Breeze, 1994, 873 P.2d 627. Attorney General ⚿ 6

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

6. Negligence of subordinates

Governor and attorney general could not be held liable for negligence of their subordinates unless they had actually cooperated in alleged acts. Bujaki v. Egan, 1965, 237 F.Supp. 822. Attorney General ⚿ 6; States ⚿ 79

7. Actions for administration or enforcement of charitable trusts

Even if charities that were members of Multiple-Beneficiary-Permittees (MBPs) did not consent to attorney general acting on their behalf in asserting claim against corporations from which MBPs purchased gaming supplies and leased facilities, alleging that corporations violated state's gaming laws by charging member charities of MBPs unreasonably high expenses, attorney general's authority to enforce charitable trusts gave him power to bring such action if charities' trustees dismissed or compromised charities' claims for less than charities were due under state's gaming laws. AS 05.15.160(a, c, d), 44.23.020(b)(4); Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 391. Botelho v. Griffin (2001) Alaska, 25 P.3d 689. Charities ⚿ 50

MEMORANDUM January 23, 2009

SUBJECT: Legislative investigations and power of subpoena
(Work Order No. 26-LS0418)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane W. Pierson

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director TBC

(1) What is a scope of the power of the legislature to issue subpoenas?

The legislature enjoys broad investigative power, but it is limited to obtaining information on matters that fall within its field of legislative action. (Mason's Manual, Secs. 795(6) and 797(7)) Lawmaking is the central legislative activity, but there are others that may justify investigatory pursuits. It is stated in Mason's Manual, Sec. 795(10): "An investigation into the management of the various institutions of the state and the departments of the state government is at all times a legitimate function of the legislature." The Supreme Court of Alaska has specifically acknowledged that the legislature has broad powers of investigation relating to its lawmaking activities and also has specifically identified the confirmation power as carrying with it an implied power and duty to investigate both the status of the relevant appointed offices and the qualification of individuals appointed to fill them. (Cook v. Botelho, 921 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1996)) In addition to the two legislative activities recognized by the court, based on the reasoning of the case, it is expected that other legislative activities also carry with them the implied power to investigate. (See for example, art. X, sec. 12 (power of the legislature to disapprove certain local boundary changes); art. II, sec. 20 (power of the legislature to impeach civil officers of the State))

The power of the legislature to issue subpoenas coincides with the power of the legislature to investigate. Mason's Manual points out in Sec. 795(5):

> The inherent and auxiliary power reposed in legislative bodies to conduct investigations in aid of prospective legislation carries with it the power in proper cases to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers by means of legal process. Also, the legislature has the power to institute and carry to the extent of punishment, contempt proceedings in order to compel the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence as may be legally called for in > the course of such proceedings, whether conducted by the legislative body or a branch thereof, directly or through its properly constituted committees.

The power of the legislature to investigate was recently recognized again in Alaska. Certain legislative plaintiffs sought a temporary injunction and to restrain the Legislative Council and other named defendants from conducting an investigation into Governor Sarah Palin's removal of Walter Monegan from his position as Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Public Safety on the grounds that the investigation exceeded the Legislative Council's statutory authority and violated principles of separation of powers and due process. Executive branch plaintiffs challenged the validity of subpoenas issued pursuant to the investigation. The two cases were consolidated and the Superior Court denied the motions and dismissed the action, concluding that many of the issues raised by the plaintiffs involved procedures of the legislative branch and were, thus, nonjusticiable. The court further found no constitutional due process or fair and just treatment violation. (Keller v. French, Case No. 3AN-08-10489CI; Kiesel v. Seven Subpoenas, Case No. 3AN-08-10780CI; Consolidated, Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Order dated October 2, 2008) The order of dismissal by the Superior Court was affirmed by the Supreme Court. (Keller v. French, Supreme Court No. S-13296, Order dated October 9, 2008) The Supreme Court has not yet issued an opinion in that case.

(2) May an attorney advise a client not to respond to a legislative subpoena?

It strikes me that an attorney might do so under certain circumstances, such as when the attorney has a good faith belief there is a legitimate question regarding the validity of the subpoena, especially if the attorney is making an effort to quash the subpoena. The attorney also has a responsibility to explain to the client the risk entailed in failing to respond to a legislative subpoena. (See AS 24.25.030 and AS 24.25.080) Probably the attorney has a duty to explain all options to the client, so that the client may participate in the final decision.

Ms. Jane Pierson has asked me to consider Rule 503(d)(1) of the Rules of Evidence, Alaska Court Rules. It states that there is no attorney/client privilege: "If the services of the lawyer were sought, obtained or used to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit what the client knew or reasonably should have known to be a crime or fraud." However, failure to abide by an invalid subpoena is not a crime nor is it fraud. Consequently, it is possible that this Rule will not apply when the validity of a subpoena is in question. Note that the Evidence Rules Commentary to Rule 503(d)(1) observes: "The provision that the client knew or reasonably should have known of the criminal or fraudulent nature of the act is designed to protect the client who is erroneously advised that a proposed action is within the law." Determining the exact scope of the advice given is, itself, a sensitive task. The Commentary goes on to explain:

> While any general exploration of what transpired between attorney and client would, of course, be inappropriate, it is sometimes feasible, either at the discovery stage or during trial, so to focus the inquiry by specific > questions as to avoid any broad inquiry into attorney-client communications. In some cases it will not be possible to probe without substantially invading the privileged area. When these cases arise, the court may require that a prima facie case of wrongdoing be established by independent evidence before the privilege is denied. Even where the perimeter of the privileged relationship can be analyzed without probing too deeply into confidential communications, such analysis will not be necessary if independent evidence of wrongdoing is available.

(3) What amendments would strengthen AS 24.25.010?

AS 24.25.010, setting out the process for issuing subpoenas, could be clarified with respect to the treatment of the subpoena power of the permanent interim committees, which is dealt with in other statutes. However, the public policy issue presented by this statute is whether and to what extent the power of committees to investigate should be clarified. A committee of the legislature exercises only those powers conferred upon it by the legislature. The power of committees to investigate is implied from the grant of the subpoena power to committees. Ought the power to investigate be made specific and, if so, to what extent should committees be granted the power to investigate by statute? To what extent should investigatory procedures by committees be addressed in statute? An example of a specific grant of the authority to investigate, along with specific procedures to be used, can be found in AS 24.60.170 - 24.60.178, involving proceedings before the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. (See Mason's Manual, Sec. 799, legislative investigating committees)

The Honorable Kim Elton

State Capitol, Room 506
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Re: Legislative Investigation re Office of the Governor

Dear Senator Elton:

The purpose of this letter is twofold: First, to explain why the Department of Law decided not to proceed with the depositions of Department of Administration employees last week and why, unless the current manner of pursuing the investigation changes, the Department of Law may find it necessary to move to quash subpoenas issued to compel the testimony of those witnesses and seek other relief from the courts. And second, to express our concerns with the conduct of this investigation.

First, with respect to our decision to not proceed with the depositions. Within the past week the project director appears to have adopted an incorrect interpretation of law regarding access to state employees' personnel files under the State Personnel Act. This incorrect interpretation could lead the witnesses to believe that they could face criminal prosecution for what is actually legal conduct. An improper threat of potential prosecution is totally inconsistent with the constitutional requirement that the "right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed." Alaska Const. art. I, sec. 7.[1]

[1] The framers explained the reason for this provision as follows:

> The McCarthy hearings brought out the great issue that existed here a couple years ago. McCarthy was making charges against people under the exercise of the powers of a congressional legislative committee. The people, individuals were sorely abused under the guise of the exercise of the power of the legislature to investigate. The only subject that a legislature is supposed to investigate upon is something that will bear upon the state code or prospective legislation that might be under consideration. But under the guise of looking into legislative matters they call hearings and then maybe subject people to very bad treatment and ruin their reputations and assassinate them from a character standpoint....

On September 2, 2008, Senator French apparently publicly expressed his view that if the Governor's Office obtained confidential information from Trooper Wooten's personnel file, "it would be a violation of state law." "October Surprise Over Palin Investigation?" ABC News, Sept. 2, 2008. On September 3, 2008, Senator French also apparently disclosed that the scope of the investigation has now expanded to include whether other persons within the Palin administration have abused power. "Palin Seeks Review of Monegan Firing Case," Anchorage Daily News, Sept. 3, 2008.

If, as Senator French's comments indicate, he believes that the governor and her staff members may not review executive branch employees' personnel files, the Department of Law disagrees. It does not violate the State Personnel Act for Department of Administration staff to provide confidential personnel information to the governor or her staff – or for the governor or her staff to receive that information – in the course and scope of their official duties.

The governor has supervisory authority over all executive branch employees. The Alaska Constitution provides that "[t]he executive power of the State is vested in the governor," that all executive and administrative offices must be allocated by law within principal departments, that the governor is "responsible for the faithful execution of the laws," and that "[e]ach principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor." Alaska Const. art. III, secs. 1, 16, 22, 24. Likewise, Alaska's statutes provide that "the governor is the appointing authority for all officers and employees of the executive branch," and she may delegate that authority. AS 39.25.020(a)(2).

As the supervisory chief of the executive branch, the governor has a right of access to information in the personnel files of employees in the branch she supervises. Her right of access extends also to the staff members who assist and advise her, including heads of the principal departments. AS 44.17.040.

The governor or her staff may, in the course and scope of their official duties, review a confidential personnel file to ensure, for example, that an employee is adequately supervised, appropriately evaluated, and appropriately disciplined. In appropriate cases, the governor may also direct the termination of a state employee. These powers are inherent in the governor's constitutional authority – and duty – to supervise the executive branch.

The framers of our constitution gave these broad powers to the governor because they intended to have a strong governor. Delegate Lundborg explained that intent as follows:

> We in our Committee felt that it would be the wishes of the majority of the Convention to have a strong executive. By that we did not mean a dictator, one who would get into power and be the absolute power in the state, but one who through appointive powers would be able to select his > co-workers down through the various offices so that when the state's functions would be successful we could say that we had a good governor, and when they would not be successful we would know who to blame and could vote accordingly at the next election.

Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention at 2222. See also Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 3 n.3 (Alaska 1975).

The Department of Law agrees that state employees' personnel records are confidential. The State Personnel Act provides that such records "are confidential and are not open to public inspection." AS 39.25.080(a). But that does not mean that the governor or her staff cannot review those records or receive information contained in them. Review by the governor or her staff of a confidential personnel file in the course and scope of their official duties is neither a violation of employee confidentiality nor a public inspection.

To the extent that, in the course and scope of their official duties, any employees of the Department of Administration disclosed Trooper Wooten's personnel file or any information contained in the file to the governor or her staff, that disclosure was both lawful and consistent with the Department of Administration's regulations. See 2 AAC 07.910(c)(5).

All that being said, the Department of Law recognizes the possibility that a confidential personnel file could be handled inappropriately. If the contents of a confidential personnel file were disclosed inconsistently with the applicable statutes and regulation, including 2 AAC 07.910, the Department of Law agrees that it would violate the State Personnel Act. At this point, the Department of Law knows of no evidence that suggests that any Department of Administration employees violated the State Personnel Act in handling Trooper Wooten's personnel file.

Generally speaking, the Department of Law has no objection to the legislature seeking to ascertain the facts with respect to how Trooper Wooten's personnel file was handled. The Department of Law does object, however, to the project manager's current implication that appropriate disclosures of an employee's confidential personnel information to the Office of the Governor violate the law.

That implication concerns us because the stakes for these Department of Administration employees are high. If Senator French's apparent legal view is correct, it is theoretically possible that these employees could be subjected to criminal prosecution and forfeiture of their jobs if they are determined to have committed a willful violation of the State Personnel Act. AS 39.25.900. It also raises serious questions about the Department of Law's ability to continue to provide them with legal representation.

If Senator French's reading of the law is incorrect, then conducting these depositions under an improper threat of potential prosecution is unfair. It fails to accord these persons the fair and just treatment that the Alaska Constitution guarantees them.

To represent the Department of Administration employees adequately, the Department of Law wishes to confirm that the Legislative Council agrees with the department's reading of the law. If we cannot reach agreement on the proper interpretation of the State Personnel Act, the Department of Law is prepared to seek declaratory judgment in court on this issue. But if the Legislative Council will acknowledge in writing its agreement with the Department of Law's interpretation, the Department of Law will drop its objections and the depositions may proceed without subpoenas.

We shall now turn to our concerns regarding the manner in which this investigation is being conducted. The Department of Law has endeavored, consistent with its legal obligations, to cooperate with the legislature's investigation. But at this point, we think the Legislative Council may wish to review this investigative process and consider the following seven concerns.

1. Selection of the Investigator: On July 30, 2008, at the outset of this investigation, we expressed a concern to the project manager and the Chair of Legislative Council that an investigative process that did not use established procedures could run the risk of violating due process. Moreover, we recommended that consideration be given to selecting an investigator with an unquestioned reputation for objectivity and political neutrality, such as a retired judge. Our suggestion was dismissed, and the response we received was that a prosecutor would be selected and that a prosecutor's primary duty is to seek justice.

2. Investigative Tactics: Unfortunately, as we have watched this process unfold, it appears our fears have been realized. At present the investigation is using such tactics as a tipline and secret depositions in which witnesses are asked under oath to testify to rumor and gossip. Those tactics raise questions about the scope and true purpose of the investigation. These tactics also appear to violate legislative procedures established by statute which require the Legislative Council to conduct depositions in the same manner as required by court rules. See AS 24.20.060(2).

3. Investigative Targets: The investigation now apparently has new and unidentified targets. We have two concerns in this regard. First, from a basic due process perspective, the persons who are the new targets of this investigation have a right to know whether they are targets. Second, the process used by legislative committees is not well suited to protecting the rights of persons suspected of committing a crime. This is recognized in Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure, where a rule of procedure is established that "[t]he legislature has no right to conduct an investigation for the purpose of laying a foundation for the institution of criminal proceedings." Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure, sec.797(2) (2000). We urge caution in these matters and counsel you to consider deferring to ongoing means of investigation that provide adequate due process.[2]

4. Threats of Criminal Prosecution: Even if the purpose of the investigation is not to lay the foundation for criminal proceedings, as noted above, the project director has apparently made comments that mistakenly characterize legal conduct as potentially criminal conduct. An improper threat of potential prosecution is inconsistent with the due process requirement that legislative investigations accord fair and just treatment to all persons. Alaska Const. art. I, sec. 7.

5. Prejudgment of the Matters Being Investigated: We are also concerned about indications that the project director may have prejudged the outcome of this investigation. Before this investigation began, Senator French stated publicly that this was a personnel matter that "just went way out of bounds" and characterized the conduct at issue as a "huge mistake." KUDO interview, July 21, 2008. More recently, Senator French apparently stated publicly that the investigation report will be damaging to the governor. "October Surprise Over Palin Investigation?" ABC News, Sept. 2, 2008. Can such statements possibly reflect a process that accords "fair and just" treatment to the governor? We are highly concerned with the prejudicial nature of such statements, particularly given the fact that the project director is the direct supervisor of the investigator and this investigation. We doubt that it is possible to retract these statements in a manner that will alleviate their prejudicial impact on the conduct and outcome of this investigation.

6. Delegation of Authority to Investigator: We believe that there are serious legal defects in the manner in which the Legislative Council has purported to delegate its investigative authority to a private investigator. Alaska Statute 24.25.060(2) only permits the Legislative Council to issue subpoenas to compel attendance at a public hearing before the Legislative Council. We understand that under this delegation the standing Judiciary Committees of the legislature will meet to consider issuing subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses. We ask you to carefully consider whether there is authority in the state constitution, state statutes or the Uniform Rules for these committees to validly issue subpoenas at this time. We also question the basic premise whether the Legislative Council may delegate its investigative powers to a single legislator acting through a private investigator. After detailing these issues for your consideration we continue to recommend that our clients cooperate with the investigation in the belief that the Legislative Council will not completely abrogate its responsibilities.

[2] We note that on July 21, 2008, prior to the Legislative Council's authorization of this investigation, Senator French stated publicly that the investigation would be conducted in the same manner as the investigation of a "complex crime." KUDO interview, July 21, 2008.

But we reserve the right to revisit whether the public interest is truly being served by the manner in which this investigation is currently being conducted.

7. Timing of the Investigation: The timing of this investigation has been suspect. The original due date of October 31 for the investigation report was highly suspect because it comes so close to the November election date. The new due date of October 10 is really no less suspect. It only heightens the original perception that this process is a rush to judgment for ends that may have little to do with justice. Our concern regarding timing has been heightened even further with the recent news that there are approximately 1.3 million e-mails that the executive branch has preserved for purposes of this investigation. It will take time, potentially a significant amount of time, to search through these to find the e-mails that are pertinent to this investigation, and ensure that appropriate security and confidentiality are preserved, that privileges are maintained, and, if such privileges are to be waived, that they be waived in a knowing and informed manner.

Unchecked investigative enthusiasm is not consistent with our foundational principle of due process and the Alaska Legislature's consistent practice of providing fair treatment of persons appearing before legislative committees. Bluntly and to the point, we think there is a legitimate concern that this investigation is no longer being conducted in a fair manner—and therefore is potentially violative of Alaska's constitutional due process safeguards.

The eyes of the nation have now turned upon us. If this investigation is to continue, the governor, the people of Alaska, and the people of this country deserve a process that is entirely consistent with the foundational principle of due process.

We request that you carefully consider our concerns.

Sincerely,

TALIS J. COLBERG

MEMORANDUM January 25, 2005

SUBJECT: Civil Process Immunity (Work Order No. 24-LS0439)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: James P. Crawford
Assistant Revisor

I am responding to the immunity-based question you posed to Ms. Tam Cook at the end of last week. As an initial matter, the question was phrased in terms of "legislative immunity from civil process," and you should be aware that these are, strictly speaking, two separate immunities. One is "legislative immunity," and the other is "civil process immunity."[1] Both immunities protect legislators and the legislative process, but there are distinctions between the two immunities, and each has its own jurisprudence. The gist of your question suggests that "civil process immunity" is the immunity at issue.

Civil process immunity arises from Art. II, sec. 6, among other places. Section 6 provides that "[m]embers attending, going to, or returning from legislative sessions are not subject to civil process and are privileged from arrest except for felony or breach of the peace."[2] You ask whether there are any circumstances under which a legislator may participate in proceedings from which the legislator would normally be protected by civil process immunity.[3] The answer is "yes," but several notes of caution are in order.

First, although they usually fly under everyone's radar, proceedings against legislators, legislative committees, or the legislature do arise. Early on, such proceedings may initially appear innocuous or, at worst, faintly irritating, only to mutate later into something far more serious in terms of reputation, political, economic, or criminal considerations. The course a given proceeding may ultimately take is not predictable, which should be taken into account in deciding to forgo immunity's protections.

[1] There is also a "privilege" from arrest, which does not appear to be relevant presently.

[2] In Alaska, there are actually three sources of immunities: (1) the common law, originally handed down from England where immunity was developed before and especially during the reign of Queen Elizabeth I; (2) AS 24.40.010; and (3) the constitution, as noted above.

[3] Although you did not specifically ask, the ultimate conclusion of the AG Opinion cited in your request is sound: civil process immunity is absolute and may not be waived -- while it lasts. Its absolute nature makes it similar to the other immunity -- legislative immunity.

Second, if a legislator is observed to be embroiled in one otherwise avoidable (but voluntarily submitted to) proceeding, enterprising litigants-at-large may assume that the "brakes are off" as a general matter and thus become emboldened to pursue additional proceedings against the legislator. The sources of suits against legislators are legion and include other legislators and various entities in the executive branch or municipal government. Even if such suits are disposed of quickly through a motion to dismiss under Civil Rule 12, the resources and expense consumed in producing a stream of such motions could quickly mount.

Admittedly, the scenario presented here would probably most likely arise in the context of proceedings implicating legislative immunity (the other immunity), but this office nonetheless counsels taking advantage of all immunities. It is true that civil process immunity only delays proceedings until a time following legislative sessions, but it could well be the case in a given situation that a delay would be critically important.

Third, though other courts have ruled on the non-waivability of legislative and civil process immunity, the Alaska Supreme Court has not yet done so.[4] From a legislative perspective, no impediments to the court reaching that non-waivability conclusion should be erected. The issue of waiver in the immunities context is very important and is intertwined with the issue of the personal and subject matter jurisdiction of the courts, or more particularly, the limits of jurisdiction.

In the immunity context, these jurisdictional limit issues relate to checks on the power of courts being raised against the legislative branch, whether in criminal or civil proceedings, and whether raised against a legislator directly (e.g., a proceeding against a legislator, including suits for damages, injunctions, or declaratory judgments) or indirectly (e.g., subpoenaing a legislator to be a witness in a case against someone else). Historically, immunity arose when judges were merely appointed lackeys of the Tudor and Stuart monarchs engaged in a struggle against parliament; today, it is a separation of powers boundary across which the power of the judicial branch may not be extended to disrupt the legislative branch.

That immunity is not waivable means, among other things, that separation of powers protections cannot be mistakenly or improvidently surrendered. It also means that if an attorney not familiar with immunity fails to assert it at trial, it may still be raised for the first time on appeal. This happens frequently; non-waivability has saved many legislators. It also means that immunity may, in a second, separate case, provide the basis for a collateral attack on a first case decided against a legislator, even if the first case proceeded all the way through the appellate process to a final decision without [4] As you are aware, the Department of Law views the immunity as not being subject to waiver. Additionally, the argument that immunity cannot be waived has been worked into briefing filed by attorneys in the Office of Legal Services in at least five different lawsuits. Each time, however, the argument was essentially a subsidiary one to a separate, main argument, and each time, the case in question was resolved without mentioning, much less reaching and resolving, the non-waiver issue.

If legislators begin to make a habit of waiving, trying to waive, or engaging in conduct that is analogous to waiving immunity, the Alaska Supreme Court might be persuaded not to follow the lead of other states when the issue reaches the court and instead hold that immunity can actually be waived. A great deal would be lost by such a ruling. Legislator-driven encouragement of it should be avoided if at all possible.[5] Again, much of this reasoning applies mainly to legislative immunity, but a ruling by our court that civil process immunity may be waived makes a ruling that the arguably more important legislative immunity may be waived all the easier to reach, and vice versa.

Turning now to the answer to the question asked, after careful consideration by a legislator and discussion with the legislator's lawyer, a legislator could indeed attempt to participate in a proceeding against which immunity would normally provide a shield. Participation could occur simply by the legislator not asserting the immunity to which the legislator is entitled. If no one else raised the immunity issue, it would likely be a non-factor. However, the legislator should not mention -- in court or out -- the term "waiver" in conjunction with or in explanation of the legislator's considered and always-discussed-with-an-attorney-before-hand decision to appear in a proceeding normally subject to immunity.[6]

[5] The list of reasons set out in this memo for not waiving immunity is not intended to be exhaustive.

[6] Civil process and legislative immunities protect legislators, legislative committees, and the legislature. All of these players have an interest in immunity issues and in the course of the development of immunity jurisprudence. All of them could be affected to some degree by a precedent restricting the scope of immunity or allowing waiver of immunity. This gives any one of the players a general interest in any case in which a legislator is choosing to not assert an available immunity, whether through an affirmative attempt to waive it or through silence coupled with actual attendance. In addition, the specifics of a given "non-assertion" case may give any of the players a second, more particularized interest in the case. Either type of interest may lead any of the legislative players to attempt to intervene in the case as a party or to participate as an amicus and raise the non-waiver issue. If so, it is likely that the courts would consider any immunity-related arguments presented by a player wishing to be heard. Because immunity protects the legislative process generally, even a constituent wishing to be heard might get the courts to listen.

SUBJECT: Oath and subpoena of witness before a standing committee

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

May an oath be administered to a person testifying before a standing committee of the legislature?

The matter is addressed in AS 24.25.060 which states in full (emphasis added):

> Sec. 24.25.060. Oath and penalty for violation of oath. The president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives and the chairman of every committee of either body may administer an oath to a witness appearing before the respective bodies. A person who wilfully swears or affirms falsely concerning any matter material to the subject under investigation or inquiry is guilty of perjury and upon conviction is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years.

It is my impression that when a standing committee chair has administered an oath the form that has been used is that used in court: "Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you are about to give in this matter will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth so help you God?"

May a standing committee or the chair of a standing committee issue a subpoena?

Again the matter is addressed by statute. Provisions dealing with the subpoena process are found at AS 24.25.010 - 24.25.080. With respect to your precise question, AS 24.25.010(b) states in full:

> (b) A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness before a standing or special committee of the legislature may be issued by the chairman of a committee when authorized to do so by a majority of the membership of the committee and with the concurrence of the president or the speaker, or with the concurrence of the house or the senate.

Attached is a copy of a proposed committee subpoena form.

MEMORANDUM October 17, 2006

SUBJECT: Meetings of standing committees during the interim (Work No. 25-LS0128)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

(1) May a standing committee subpoena the governor to appear at a meeting to be held after the legislature has adjourned sine die?

Mason's Manual states in sec. 445(5): "Committees, specially authorized, may sit after adjournment sine die." (See also, sec. 622) Uniform Rule 21(c) grants to standing committees the power to meet between sessions. A committee that meets between sessions may consider "any legislative matter which is consistent with the jurisdiction of the committee."

It is my understanding that you are interested in the possibility of the House Judiciary Committee conducting an investigative meeting to determine whether the Governor intends to execute a contract dealing with construction of a natural gas pipeline without submitting the contract to the legislature for its approval. It is clear that the legislature has broad authority to investigate and that the investigation may be conducted through a committee. (Mason's Manual, sec. 795) However, I must caution that Uniform Rule 20(a) does not specifically grant jurisdiction to the Judiciary Committee to conduct investigations, nor has the House referred the pipeline contract matter to the Judiciary Committee. Indeed, it appears that under Uniform Rule 20(a) the State Affairs Committee may have a claim to jurisdiction over the pipeline contract since it is charged with "programs and activities of the Office of the Governor" and that the Resources Committee might also have a claim to jurisdiction. Nonetheless, it is consistent with the past practice of the legislature for legal issues, such as those involving separation of powers, to be considered by the Judiciary Committee. Consequently, it is unlikely that the Judiciary Committee would be deemed to be acting outside of its authority to meet between sessions under Uniform Rule 21(c) if it conducting a hearing to ascertain the status of the pipeline contract.

A standing committee has broad statutory power to subpoena a witness under AS 24.25.010(b). Note that the subpoena must be authorized "by a majority of the membership of the committee and with the concurrence of . . . the speaker . . ."

(2) May a standing committee place a person under oath at a meeting held during the interim?

The chair of a standing committee has broad authority to administer an oath at any meeting of the committee. AS 24.25.060 states in part: "the chairman of every committee of either body may administer an oath to a witness appearing before the respective bodies. A person who willfully swears or affirms falsely concerning any matter material to the subject under investigation or inquiry is guilty of perjury and upon conviction is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years."

MEMORANDUM September 9, 2008

SUBJECT: Inquiry regarding issuance of subpoenas in legislative investigations

TO: Representative Max F. Gruenberg, Jr.

FROM: Jack Chenoweth
Assistant Revisor

In conjunction with the current legislative investigation initiated by the Legislative Council, I looked back to January 1975 for examples of use of subpoenas issued in conjunction with legislative inquiries or investigations.

The Sheffield impeachment provides the chief example of authorization of subpoenas. Enclosed are the minutes, from the Senate Journal of the Special Session, setting out the authorization for subpoenas by the Senate Rules Committee in July 1985 in conjunction with that effort. As you can see, the authorization is "generic" in that it does not specifically name a witness or witnesses to whom the subpoenas are to be addressed.

There is, in the public record, a 1980 Opinion or memo of the Attorney General to former Representative Alvin Osterback concerning issuance of legislative subpoenas that also provides guidance. A copy of the memo is provided.

If I am able to find any other examples in the days to come, I will make copies and send them along. However, this office would not be involved in or necessarily be aware of a committee action to issue a subpoena. Nor is that fact likely to find its way into House or Senate Journals.

MEMORANDUM September 10, 2008

SUBJECT: Legislative Council Investigation (Work Order No. 26-LS0098)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

(1) Does the Legislative Council have the authority to initiate and maintain the investigation under the contract authorized during the last special session?

A committee generally may perform those functions that have been delegated to it or referred to it by the full legislative body. No statute or Uniform Rule grants specific authority to a committee to conduct investigations, nor does a statute or rule restrict the power of investigation. The legislative council has been assigned certain powers and duties by law and, arguably, those grants of authority carry with them the implied power to conduct investigations necessary to carry out those functions. Indeed, the grant of the power to depose witnesses and to issue subpoenas under AS 24.20.060 is evidence of a direct rather than implied grant of investigatory power to the legislative council. Probably the legislative council can investigate any matter that falls within its duty to provide administrative services to the legislature (AS 24.20.061) as well as its power to participate in the lawmaking function through the introduction of legislation (AS 24.08.060(b)).

The legislative council does not have explicit authority to investigate activities of executive branch agencies or officers. However, lawmaking is a central legislative activity that justifies broad investigatory pursuits. It is stated in Mason's Manual, sec. 795(10): "An investigation into the management of the various institutions of the state and the departments of the state government is at all times a legitimate function of the legislature." The legislative council contract directs the consultant to "investigate the circumstances and events surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan and potential abuses of power and/or improper actions by members of the executive branch" and to prepare a report that includes "any recommendations for action by the Legislature . . . ." (Clause I, Statement of Work) It is possible, for example, that the recommendations contained in the report prepared under the investigation contract will consist of proposed legislation and fall squarely within the lawmaking function exercised by the legislative council when it considers the introduction of legislation or that the recommendations contained in the report will fall under the council's administrative duties which could include bringing matters involving public policy and the administration of state government to the attention of the legislature for what actions it chooses to take if any.

(2) Is this, in fact, an investigation being conducted by the Senate or House Judiciary Committees that is supported by Legislative Council funding, the Legislative Council being the entity that has general responsibility for legislative matters generally when the legislature is not in session?

The Legislative Council has entered into a contract for the investigation. It is the Council that can terminate the contract. The final report by the consultant is to be submitted to the Council, not to another committee, and it is the Council that must determine whether to release the report or portions of it to the public. It must be concluded that this is an investigation by the Legislative Council.

(3) Does the use of one or more Judiciary Committees to issue subpoenas in connection with the investigation amount to an internal decision within the legislative branch as to how best to initiate and maintain the investigation which is nonjusticiable?

The method whereby the activities of the consultant are to be supported through the issuance of subpoenas appears to be a nonjusticiable question based on principles of separation of powers. The court has shown a willingness to examine legislative procedures in some detail and to invalidate a legislative action when the court finds that the legislature fails to comply with constitutionally mandated procedure or requirements. (Plumley v. Hale, 594 P.2d 497 (Alaska 1979); State v. A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary, 606 P.2d 769 (Alaska 1980)) However, the court will not consider questions regarding the procedure of the legislature itself because of separation of powers considerations. (Malone v. Meekins, 650 P.2d 351 (Alaska 1982)) This is true even when the legislature does not follow procedures for the legislature that are set out in statute. (Abood v. League of Women Voters of Alaska, 743 P.2d 333 (Alaska 1987))

(4) Does the Speech and Debate provision, the first sentence of Art. II, sec. 6 of the state constitution, provide a basis to contend that no other forum may inquire as to the legislature's decision regarding the methods used to conduct this investigation, particularly given that the decision to initiate the investigation was taken by the legislative council during a special session?

Yes. Article II, sec. 6 states in part: "Legislators may not be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement made in the exercise of their legislative duties while the legislature is in session."

However, legislative immunity applies when legislators are acting in the scope of legislative duties. Unconstitutional acts may not be protected because they are not in the scope of legislative duties. (But, for the breadth of legislative immunity see State v. Dankworth, 672 P.2d 148 (Alaska App. 1983).

Note in this regard that in addition to the constitutional provision, legislative immunity is a matter of statute. AS 24.40.010 provides somewhat broader protection than the constitutional provision in that it extends immunity to a "legislator attending, going to, or returning from a meeting of an interim standing or special committee of the legislature of which the legislator is a member." Furthermore, legislative immunity has been recognized to be part of the common law. (Tenny v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 71 S. Ct. 783, 91 L.Ed. 1019 (1951)) The common law is made part of state law under AS 01.10.010. Accordingly, in Alaska immunity is also part of Alaska's common law. Common law immunity is broader than the constitutional immunity. (In re the Subpoena Issued to Kevin Jardell, S-10457, Dec. 20, 2001, Order on Original Application for Relief; wherein the court unanimously extended legislative immunity to state legislative employees involved in the performance of legislative duties during the interim)

SUBJECT: Legislative investigation: claims of executive privilege; disposition and enforcement of subpoenas

TO: Representative Max F. Gruenberg, Jr.

FROM: Jack Chenoweth
Assistant Revisor

These are responses to the several questions set out below.

1. THE ADMINISTRATION'S PRIVATE COUNSEL HAVE INDICATED THAT THEY MAY INTERPOSE AN "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE" OBJECTION TO SUBPOENAS ISSUED THAT ARE ADDRESSED TO EXECUTIVE BRANCH EMPLOYEES REQUIRING THEM TO TESTIFY BEFORE THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S INVESTIGATOR.

CONSIDERING COURT DECISIONS IN THIS JURISDICTION AND OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, WHAT IS THE EXTENT OF "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE" DOCTRINE UNDER THE LAW OF THIS STATE?

The genesis of contemporary executive privilege analysis as a qualified executive privilege is United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705 - 713 (1974).

State judicial recognition of the executive privilege doctrine first appears in Doe v. Alaska Superior Court, Third Judicial Dist., 721 P.2d 617 (Alaska 1986), a defamation action brought by a medical doctor who had been unsuccessful in gaining appointment to the State Medical Board; the doctor sought production of the governor's file compiled when the doctor's nomination was under consideration by the executive. Having already noted the existence of the separation of powers principle, the court concluded that the public policy rationale that applies to give recognition to the privilege in the federal and certain other state courts was equally valid in this state. The privilege, the court said, as applied in other courts:

> . . . is only a qualified one, is applicable to internal advice, opinions and recommendations, and is intended to protect the deliberative and mental processes of decision-makers.

721 P.2d at 623. Moreover, the court was prepared to apply the doctrine only as to "internal communications," that is, communications involving or initiated by persons engaged within the executive branch:

> In cases such as [those in other jurisdictions that the court cited in its analysis], the requested disclosure involved either internal communications stating the opinions and recommendations of state employees, or information directly solicited by government officials. In such cases the rationale underlying the executive privilege doctrine -- the need to encourage candid opinions and debate among government officials during the decision-making process -- is directly applicable. Furthermore, there often is an express or at least an implied understanding of confidentiality attached to such communications.

721 P.2d at 625. Letters from the public were therefore necessarily excluded from the doctrine's coverage.

Thereafter, the court summarized its understanding of the doctrine:

> The doctrine of executive privilege recognizes that chief executives sometimes have a qualified power to keep confidential certain internal governmental communications "so as to protect the deliberative and mental processes of decision-makers." Doe, 721 P.2d at 622-23 (footnote omitted). The doctrine is designed to ensure the availability to executive decision-makers of candid advice.

Anchorage v. Anchorage Daily News, 794 P.2d 584, 593 (Alaska 1990) (citing United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 708, 94 S. Ct. 3090, 3107-08, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1039, 1064 (1974)) and the statement in that opinion that "the primary impetus for the qualified privilege is the need to protect '. . . [t]he public interest in candid, objective, and even blunt or harsh opinions in presidential decision making. A president and those who assist him must be free to explore alternatives . . . and to do so in a way many would be unwilling to express except privately.'"

Two other court decisions warrant mention. Capital Information Group v. Office of the Governor, 923 P.2d 29 (Alaska 1996), examined the distinction between the separation of powers-based doctrine of executive privilege and the common law-grounded deliberative process privilege in the context of public access to budget impact statements and legislative proposals forwarded for the governor's consideration. This distinction was amplified in Gwich'in Steering Committee v. Office of the Governor, 10 P.3d 572, 578 - 579 (Alaska 2000):

> We stated in Capital Information Group v. State, Office of the Governor that we considered the terms "executive privilege" and "deliberative process privilege" to be synonymous for purposes of that > discussion. But the two terms are not identical. Instead, the deliberative process privilege is a "branch" of a broader group of governmental privileges. The roots of the deliberative process privilege lie in the common law; it protects the mental processes of government decision makers from interference, not constitutional notions of separation of powers. Therefore, the question is not whether the communication relates to a duty mandated in article III of the Alaska Constitution, but whether disclosure of the communication sought would affect the quality of governmental decisionmaking.

The Department of Law identified "executive privilege" as a device by which to protect assertedly confidential information against public disclosure about two years in advance of the Doe decision, but did so in the context of protection for executive branch decision making:

> [A] privilege that has been recognized by courts is the "executive privilege," which protects from public disclosure those predecisional documents prepared by governmental agencies that reflect the "decisionmaking" or "deliberative process" of the agency. This privilege has received most attention from the federal courts, in cases addressing the issue of whether documents are exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1966). The privilege has yet to be recognized by the Alaska Supreme Court, but there is little reason to believe that the court will not do so, at least to some extent, when presented with the issue.

1984-1 Op. A.G. (Inf.), June 25, 1984, at 5. With respect to the more recent opinions of the attorney general treating with executive privilege, the distinction first drawn by the court between "executive privilege" and "deliberative process privilege" breaks down. The analysis offered in two opinions, Op. A.G. 1993 (January 1, 1993), No. 221-92-0553, and 1994 Op. A.G. No. 1 (November 24, 1994), seems almost to eliminate the distinction between the two. Both opinions were prepared and issued before the decisions in Capital Information Group and Gwich'in Steering Committee, so their value may be considered questionable.[1]

[1] For the record, a recent (2007) "Comment" in Capital University Law Review, "Stifling Gubernatorial Secrecy: Application of Executive Privilege to State Executive Officials," 35 Cap. U. L. Rev. 983, notes that the doctrine applies in these jurisdictions: Alaska (Doe v. Alaska Super. Ct., 721 P.2d 617, 623 (Alaska 1986)); California (Times Mirror Co. v. Super. Ct., 813 P.2d 240, 250-52 (Cal. 1991)); Delaware (Guy v. Jud. Nominating Comm'n, 659 A.2d 777, 785 (Del. Super. Ct. 1995)); Kentucky (Courier-Journal v. Jones, 895 S.W.2d 6, 8-9 (Ky. Ct. App. 1995)); Maryland (Hamilton v. Verdow, 414 A.2d 914, 924 (Md. 1980)); New Jersey (Nero v. Hyland, 386 A.2d 846, 853 (N.J. 1978)); New Mexico (N.M. ex rel. Attorney General v. First Jud. Dist. Ct. of N.M., 629 P.2d 330, 333 (N.M. 1981)); Vermont (Killington, Ltd. v. Lash, 572 A.2d

The author of the Capital University Law Review cited in this memo suggests that the court's analysis in Capital Information Group modifies the qualified executive privilege into something approximating a deliberative process privilege examination, at least in the first instance:

> At first glance, the Alaska Supreme Court appears to have adopted the chief executive communications privilege recognized in Nixon. Using the separation-of-powers rationale in Nixon, the court explained: "While we have not had occasion to address the executive privilege doctrine in the context of Alaska's Constitution, the doctrine has been widely recognized by both federal and state courts based on their respective constitutions." The Doe Court, citing Nixon, found that executive privilege presumptively attached upon a formal and particularized claim.
> A detailed analysis of the court's decision in Doe, however, reveals the implementation of a series of strict procedural requirements analogous to those required by the deliberative process privilege. First, the burden of proof lies with the government to "specifically identify and describe the documents sought to be protected and explain why they fall within the scope of the executive privilege." To meet this burden, the government must introduce affidavits based on a "personal examination of the documents by the affiant official." Once these procedural requirements are satisfied, the court must engage in the balancing test elucidated in Nixon. Finally, upon a sufficient showing of need, the trial court must engage in an in camera review of the documents to determine whether disclosure is appropriate.
> Nearly a decade later, the Alaska Supreme Court clarified its holding regarding executive privilege in Capital Information Group v. State. Initially, the court acknowledged its prior acceptance of the constitutionally based executive privilege articulated in Nixon. Then, it stated: "[T]he term 'executive privilege' in Doe encompasses what other commentators have called the deliberative process privilege." In doing so, the court adopted the substantive requirements underlying the deliberative process privilege--namely, that the materials be both deliberative and predecisional. Accordingly, purely factual material falls outside the scope of the privilege unless disclosure "'would reveal the deliberative process, 1368, 1375 (Vt. 1990)); and Virginia (Taylor v. Worrell Enters., Inc., 409 S.E.2d 136, 139 (Va. 1991)). The same source also relates that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has refused to recognize any form of executive privilege. Babets v. Sec'y of Exec. Office of Human Servs., 526 N.E.2d 1261, 1266 (Mass. 1988). 35 Cap. U.L. Rev. at 985, note 7. > or if the facts are "inextricably intertwined" with the policymaking process.'"

> At this point, the strict procedural requirements imposed by Doe apply. If a formal and particularized privilege claim is asserted, "there is a presumption in favor of nondisclosure and the party seeking access to the document must overcome that presumption." In essence, the Alaska Supreme Court [has] adopted a skeleton of the deliberative process privilege . . . .

35 Cap. U. L. Rev. at 999 - 1001 (notes omitted).

Alaska's recognition of the privilege, as in the other jurisdictions, does not treat it as one that is absolute. The procedural requirements that attach to claim of the privilege direct that the privilege be asserted with specificity. Once requisite specificity has been demonstrated, the presumption of the privilege applies and the court will look at the executive's asserted need for confidentiality against the opposing party's claim for production.

WOULD THE CLAIM OF "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE" PROVIDE A VALID DEFENSE OR SHIELD THAT WOULD PERMIT AN EXECUTIVE BRANCH EMPLOYEE FROM ANSWERING QUESTIONS PUT TO HIM OR HER IN A LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATION OR FROM PROVIDING COPIES OF RECORDS UNDER A SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM IN A LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATION?

If the claim is to operate at all, it probably would operate only in a narrowly limited sphere.

First, while the judicial decisions of the courts in this state speak in terms of "communications," leaving open the possibility that a claim of executive privilege might be asserted as to verbal communications, the Doe decision, by its terms, describes the privilege as applicable only to "internal governmental communications" and discusses the privilege in terms of the considerations bearing on the eventual examination and production of physical evidence:

> . . . we find the state's claim of privilege potentially valid with respect to the internal memoranda and "miscellaneous papers" in the appointment file. We do not know their exact content. However, at least some of the documents clearly are internal communications, and they may contain advisory opinions and recommendations. If so, they would constitute the type of internal deliberative communication the privilege is designed to protect.

721 P.2d at 625 (emphasis added). If the purpose of the subpoena is to elicit testimony (as distinct from a document or record), the claim of executive privilege is probably not available.

Second, at least in the context of its operation in the federal courts, the executive privilege applies only as to communications running between the president and his or her principal subordinates:

> . . . the public interest is best served by holding that communications made by presidential advisers in the course of preparing advice for the President come under the presidential communications privilege, even when these communications are not made directly to the President. Given the need to provide sufficient elbow room for advisers to obtain information from all knowledgeable sources, the privilege must apply both to communications which these advisers solicited and received from others as well as those they authored themselves. The privilege must also extend to communications authored or received in response to a solicitation by members of a presidential adviser's staff, since in many instances advisers must rely on their staff to investigate an issue and formulate the advice to be given to the President. We are aware that such an extension, unless carefully circumscribed to accomplish the purposes of the privilege, could pose a significant risk of expanding to a large swath of the executive branch a privilege that is bottomed on a recognition of the unique role of the President. In order to limit this risk, the presidential communications privilege should be construed as narrowly as is consistent with ensuring that the confidentiality of the President's decisionmaking process is adequately protected. Not every person who plays a role in the development of presidential advice, no matter how remote and removed from the President, can qualify for the privilege. In particular, the privilege should not extend to staff outside the White House in executive branch agencies. Instead, the privilege should apply only to communications authored or solicited and received by those members of an immediate White House adviser's staff who have broad and significant responsibility for investigating and formulating the advice to be given the President on the particular matter to which the communications relate. Only communications at that level are close enough to the President to be revelatory of his deliberations or to pose a risk to the candor of his advisers.

In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 751 - 75 (D.C. Cir. 1997). Again, based on federal court precedents, the claim of executive privilege does not apply to "communications of staff outside the White House in executive branch agencies that were not solicited and received by such White House advisers." Judicial Watch v. Department of Justice, 365 F.3d 1108 (D.C.Cir. 2004), at 1116 (citing In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d at 752) (emphasis added); see In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d at 752 ("[T]he privilege should not extend to staff outside the White House in executive branch agencies."). Thus, "the privilege become[s] more attenuated the further away the advisers are from the President operationally," Judicial Watch, 365 F.3d at 1114-15, and, in the event of a challenge, determining how far down the line of advisors constitutional protection provided by the executive privilege doctrine should extend in the context of balancing the needs of the executive and the Congress will be a fact-intensive inquiry. If the same test were to be applied in the application of executive privilege under the doctrine as identified by the state court, the test could eliminate assertions of executive privilege by commissioners and subordinates in the 14 principal executive departments.

Finally, at least under my review of the line of federal decisions, the executive privilege, whether applied to a conversation with the president or to fact gathering in preparation for that sort of conversation, is intended to promote candid communications by and with the president concerning the execution of his Article II duties--and nothing more:

> See Nixon, 418 U.S. at 705 (referring to "the nature of the privilege of confidentiality of Presidential communications in the exercise of Art. II powers"); Id. at 708 (President and advisers "must be free to explore alternatives in the process of shaping policies and making decisions"); Id. at 711 (privilege covers communications "in performance of the President's responsibilities"); In re Sealed Case, 326 U.S. App. D.C. 276, 121 F.3d 729, 744 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (privilege can be invoked when subpoenaed documents "reflect presidential decisionmaking and deliberations"); 121 F.3d at 742 (privilege protects "the confidentiality of conversations that take place in the President's performance of his official duties") (quoting Nixon v. Sirica, 159 U.S. App. D.C. 58, 487 F.2d 700, 717 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (en banc)); see also Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 137 L. Ed. 2d 945, 117 S. Ct. 1636, 1649 n.39 (1997) ("special caution is appropriate if the materials or testimony sought by the court relate to a President's official activities"). Like a President's immunity from particular civil damage suits, executive privilege is "grounded in 'the nature of the function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it.'" Jones, 117 S. Ct. at 1644 (quoting Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 229, 98 L. Ed. 2d 555, 108 S. Ct. 538 (1988)); . . . . Executive privilege applies to executive acts -- not to private acts undertaken by the individual who is (in the words of the Supreme Court) "the current occupant of that office." Jones, 117 S. Ct. at 1639.

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7735 (D.D.C. May 26, 1998). See also Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 449, 53 L. Ed. 2d 867, 97 S. Ct. 2777 (1977) (noting that the privilege is "limited to communications 'in performance of [a President's] responsibilities,' 'of his office,' and made 'in the process of shaping policies and making decisions'".

The comparable application to the state's chief executive under the Alaska constitution is, of course, the performance of article III duties, and it is possible that the court might provide the parameters of the privilege a measure of greater latitude if the governor should assert that the communications involved action identified under article III, section 16:

> Governor's Authority. The governor shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws. [The governor] may, by appropriate court action or proceeding brought in the name of the State, enforce compliance with any constitutional or legislative mandate, or restrain violation of any constitutional or legislative power, duty, or right by any officer, department, or agency of the State or any of its political subdivisions. . . . .

IS THE "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE" DOCTRINE AVAILABLE AS A DEFENSE OR SHIELD IN AN IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDING? IF IT IS NOT, IS THERE THE BASIS FOR AN ARGUMENT THAT, BECAUSE THE DOCTRINE IS NOT AVAILABLE AS A DEFENSE IN AN IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDING, IT OUGHT NOT ALSO BE AVAILABLE IN A PRELIMINARY LEGISLATIVE INQUIRY SEEKING TO DETERMINE WHETHER THERE MAY BE A REASONABLE BASIS TO UNDERTAKE A FORMAL IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDING?

Judicial decisions suggest that a claim of executive privilege is weakest in conjunction with an actual impeachment and that executive privilege may be attenuated or eliminated when an impeachment proceeding has been initiated. So, for example, in Office of the Governor v. Select Comm. of Inquiry, 271 Conn. 540, 583 (Conn. 2004), the Connecticut Supreme Court wrote regarding a separation of power-based challenge brought by the governor to a subpoena issued in conjunction with the impeachment of the state's chief executive:

> . . . precisely because the present case is related to the impeachment process, the legislature is acting at the height of its powers and the plaintiff's [governor's] claim to categorical immunity is at its nadir. Thus, we believe that alleged misconduct of a chief executive that is sufficient to warrant an impeachment inquiry should not, as the plaintiff's contention suggests, present a reason for exempting him from accountability; rather, it should have the opposite effect. "The impeachment power necessarily implies a congressional power to inquire about presidential wrongdoing, as well as a corresponding obligation on the part of the president to respond to such inquiries." F. Bowman III & S. Sepinuck, "'High Crimes & Misdemeanors': Defining the Constitutional Limits on Presidential Impeachment," 72 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1517, 1539 (1999); see M. Gerhardt, "The Constitutional Limits to Impeachment and its Alternatives," 68 Tex. L. Rev. 1, 93 (1989) ("the president is not above the . . . law, there is no sound reason for exempting him from accountability, especially in the impeachment process"); A. Cox, "Executive Privilege," 122 Penn. L. Rev. 1383, 1435 (1974) ("history gives no affirmative support to presidential > claims of privilege to withhold information from the House of Representatives while it is considering impeachment").

Office of the Governor v. Select Comm. of Inquiry, 858 A.2d 709 (Conn. 2004), at 738 - 739. Since separation of powers principles underpin the claim of executive privilege, Doe, 721 P.2d at 623, we may hope that an Alaska court would follow the reasoning of the Connecticut decision and reach the same result.

DOES GOVERNOR PALIN'S ASSERTED EXPRESSION OF WILLINGNESS TO COOPERATE VOLUNTARILY EFFECTIVELY WAIVE ANY LATER CLAIM THAT SHE MAY HAVE REGARDING "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE"?

Very unlikely. A general expression, even from the chief executive, would likely be treated as insufficient to constitute a general waiver. Courts have been hesitant to impute a waiver of executive privilege and have generally applied a case- or document-specific standard:

> The President's privilege cannot, therefore, be deemed absolute. . . . [A]pplication of executive privilege depends on a weighing of the public interest protected by the privilege against the public interests that would be served by disclosure in a particular case. . . . [T]he President asserts that the tapes should be deemed privileged because of the great public interest in maintaining the confidentiality of conversations that take place in the President's performance of his official duties. This privilege [is] intended to protect the effectiveness of the executive decision-making process . . . .
> We recognize this great public interest, and agree with the District Court that such conversations are presumptively privileged. . . .
> In his public statement of May 22, 1973, the President said: "Executive privilege will not be invoked as to any testimony concerning possible criminal conduct or discussions of possible criminal conduct, in the matters presently under investigation, including the Watergate affair and the alleged cover-up." We think that this statement and its consequences may properly be considered as at least one factor in striking the balance in this case. Indeed, it affects the weight we give to factors on both sides of the scale. On the one hand, the President's action presumably reflects a judgment by him that the interest in the confidentiality of White House discussions in general is outweighed by such matters as the public interest . . . . Although this judgment in no way controls our decision, we think it supports our estimation of the great public interest that attaches to the effective functioning of the present grand jury. . . .

Nixon v. Sirica, 487 F.2d 700, 716 - 718 (D.C. Circ. 1973) (notes and citations omitted) (emphasis added).

2. IN A LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATION, HOW DOES THE LEGISLATURE OR A LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE SECURE ENFORCEMENT OF ITS SUBPOENAS? IS IT AN AUTHORITY THAT IS SELF-EXECUTING (I.E. ENFORCEMENT WITHIN THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH) OR MUST THE LEGISLATURE REFER THE RECALCITRANT WITNESS TO THE GRAND JURY OR THE PROSECUTOR TO INITIATE JUDICIAL ENFORCEMENT OF THE CONTEMPT AUTHORITY?

Because the state statutes on this matter, AS 24.25, roughly parallel federal enactments, let me start by examining the federal law.

As recently as 1971, the United States Supreme Court acknowledged an inherent legislative right to protect the legislature's own process and existence by punishing contemptuous conduct:

> The past decisions of this Court expressly recognizing the power of the Houses of the Congress to punish contemptuous conduct leave little question that the Constitution imposes no general barriers to the legislative exercise of such power. E.g., Jurney v. MacCracken, 294 U.S. 125 (1935); Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204 (1821). There is nothing in the Constitution that would place greater restrictions on the States than on the Federal Government in this regard. See Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 199 (1881).

Groppi v. Leslie, 404 U.S. 496, 499 - 500 (U.S. 1972). The Groppi decision went on to note that:

> Legislatures are not constituted to conduct full-scale trials or quasi-judicial proceedings and we should not demand that they do so although they possess inherent power to protect their own processes and existence by way of contempt proceedings. For this reason, the Congress of the United States, for example, no longer undertakes to exercise its contempt powers in all cases but elects to delegate that function to federal courts.

Id. Consequently, currently, at the Congressional level, for the House of Representatives,[2] the remedy is entirely statutory. Under 2 U.S.C. 192:

> Refusal of witness to testify or produce papers. Every person who having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any joint committee established by a joint > or concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

A federal appellate court decision, Fields v. United States, 164 F.2d 97 (D.C. App. 1947), cert den (1948) 332 U.S. 851, 92 L.Ed. 421, 68 S.Ct. 355, reh den (1948) 333 U.S. 839, 92 L.Ed. 1123, 68 S.Ct. 607, relates that the Congress was only implementing conceded power when it enacted this section, that the section serves to supplement contempt power implied to the two houses of Congress, enforcement of which, prior to enactment of § 192, involved a procedure that apparently was cumbersome and troublesome; and that the section's objective was to facilitate gathering of information deemed pertinent to purpose of an investigating committee. 164 F.2d at 100.

Enforcement of the federal statute contemplates a criminal prosecution. In Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 166 (1955), the United States Supreme Court determined as follows:

> Section 192, like the ordinary federal criminal statute, requires a criminal intent -- in this instance, a deliberate, intentional refusal to answer. This element of the offense, like any other, must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Petitioner contends that such proof was not, and cannot be, made in this case.
> Clearly not every refusal to answer a question propounded by a congressional committee subjects a witness to prosecution under § 192. Thus if [a witness] raises an objection to a certain question -- for example, lack of pertinency or the privilege against self-incrimination -- the committee may sustain the objection and abandon the question, even though the objection might actually be without merit. In such an instance, the witness' refusal to answer is not contumacious, for there is lacking the requisite criminal intent. Or the committee may disallow the objection and thus give the witness the choice of answering or not. Given such a choice, the witness may recede from his position and answer the question. And if he does not then answer, it may fairly be said that the foundation has been laid for a finding of criminal intent to violate § 192. In short, unless the witness is clearly apprised that the committee demands his answer notwithstanding his objections, there can be no conviction under § 192 for refusal to answer that question.

Quinn, noting In re Chapman, 166 U.S. 661 (1897), directed attention to an earlier Congressional initiative to lend support for enforcement of the contempt authority:

> The history of Congressional investigations demonstrates the difficulties under which the two Houses have labored, respectively, in compelling unwilling witnesses to disclose facts deemed essential to taking definitive action, and we quite agree with Chief Justice Alvey, delivering the opinion of the Court of Appeals, "that Congress possessed the constitutional power to enact a statute to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to make disclosure of evidence to enable the respective bodies to discharge their legitimate functions"; and that it was to effect this that the act of 1857 was passed. It was an act necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested in Congress and in each House thereof. We grant that Congress could not divest itself, or either of its Houses, of the essential and inherent power to punish for contempt, in cases to which the power of either House properly extended; but, because Congress, by the act of 1857, sought to aid each of the Houses in the discharge of its constitutional functions, it does not follow that any delegation of the power in each to punish for contempt was involved; and the statute is not open to objection on that account.

Finally, under 2 U.S.C. 194, Congress determined that prosecutions under 2 U.S.C. 192, above, were to be initiated by grand jury indictment:

> Certification of failure to testify or produce; grand jury action. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 [2 USCS § 192] fails to appear to testify or fails to produce any books, papers, records, or documents, as required, or whenever any witness so summoned refuses to answer any question pertinent to the subject under inquiry before either House, or any joint committee established by a joint or concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, or any committee or subcommittee of either House of Congress, and the fact of such failure or failures is reported to either House while Congress is in session, or when Congress is not in session, a statement of fact constituting such failure is reported to and filed with the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, it shall be the duty of the said President of the Senate or Speaker of the House, as the case may be, to certify, and he shall so certify, the statement of facts aforesaid under the seal of the Senate or House, as the > case may be, to the appropriate United States attorney, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for its action.

The federal scheme contemplates certification of the circumstances giving rise to the contempt as a prerequisite to possible prosecution.

The comparable state statutes are not dissimilar to these federal models. Conceding under the Groppi analysis that the state has inherent authority to punish, the punishment provision appears in AS 24.25.080 which, because of similarity of language to the federal Act, I assume our courts would also treat as a criminal statute:

> Punishment for disobedience to subpoena or refusal to testify. A person subpoenaed as provided in this chapter who fails, neglects, or refuses to attend at the time and place where the person's presence is required, or fails, neglects, or refuses to produce the books, papers, or instruments or other evidence designated in the subpoena, or who having attended in response to the subpoena, or having appeared voluntarily, refuses to testify as to any material and proper matter within the power of the senate, house of representatives, or a committee to investigate, upon conviction, is punishable by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than 30 days nor more than six months.

The certification requirement appears in AS 24.25.030:

> Disobeying subpoena or refusing to testify. If a witness neglects or refuses to obey a subpoena, or neglects or refuses to testify or to produce upon reasonable notice any material and proper books, papers, or documents in the possession or under the control of the witness, the senate or house of representatives may by resolution entered on its journal commit the witness for contempt. If contempt is committed before a committee, the committee shall report the contempt to the senate or house of representatives, as the case may be, for such action as may be considered necessary.

Note that the section's concluding language ("for such action as may be considered necessary") suggests that the outcome shall be determined or directed collectively by the body, typically by adoption of a resolution.

There are no reported cases construing or applying the two state statutes. The federal experience would probably provide useful guidance to a state court.

Possible legislative remedies for contempt may include referral for criminal prosecution under AS 24.25.080, censure, or impeachment if the witness is a civil officer of the state. The practicality of these remedies aside, there is also authority for the proposition that a house of a legislature may imprison, for the duration of the legislature, a witness who refuses to testify. Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204 (1821). For discussions of this and related issues, see McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135 (1927) and Eastland v. U.S. Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975).

3. IN A LEGISLATIVE INVESTIGATION, MAY A WITNESS PROCEED TO TRY TO QUASH A SUBPOENA AND, IF SO, HOW MAY HE OR SHE DO SO?

In other jurisdictions, the process typically is initiated by or involves a motion submitted to the appropriate trial court or, in some instances, a separate action initiated to enjoin implementation of the subpoena. A court may refuse to grant the motion to quash based on speech and debate clause, Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (U.S. 1975), or other separation of powers considerations.

I trust this is useful for your purposes.

MEMORANDUM September 29, 2008

SUBJECT: Power of a committee to investigate after adjournment sine die (Work Order No. 26-LS0098)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

(1) To what extent is the holding in Dickinson v. Johnson, 117 Ark. 587, 176 S.W. 116 (Ark. 1915) likely to be followed in Alaska?

The Dickinson case involved concurrent resolutions passed, before the Legislature adjourned sine die, that authorized the presiding officers to appoint two joint committees for the purpose of investigating certain state activities. The committees were to make their final report to the Governor. The court recognized that an investigation into the management of state agencies is "at all times" a legitimate function of the Legislature. However, the court noted that a committee dies when the body creating it dies, unless the committee is continued by law. Therefore, the court concluded that a committee could not be empowered by resolution to conduct an investigation after adjournment sine die, although the legislature could authorize a committee to do so by enacting law.

This case has been followed in several other states. The Supreme Court of California held that a House resolution could not lawfully create a legislative investigating committee with power to sit after the legislature adjourned sine die. (The Special Assembly Interim Committee on Public Morals of the California Legislature v. Southard, 90 P.2d 304 (Cal. 1939); see also Petition of Special Assembly Interim Committee on Public Morals of California Legislature, 83 P.2d 932 (Cal. 1938))

The Supreme Court of Montana also agreed with the holding in the Dickinson case and went further, holding that the Legislature could not create by statute a committee with authority to act after adjournment of the body. (State ex rel. Mitchell v. Holmes, 274 P.2d 611 (Montana 1954)) Significantly, three years later, portions of the holding in that case was specifically overruled. In upholding a statute establishing an interim committee, the court noted ". . . investigative power exists in the legislative branch which may be exercised after final adjournment as well as during the session." (State ex rel. James v. Aronson, 324 P.2d 847 (Mont. 1958))

When confronted with the argument that the Legislature is without authority to establish by resolution any committee to function after adjournment sine die, the Supreme Court of Washington decided that the Legislature has inherent power to investigate and that, in the absence of a constitutional restriction, the Legislature has the power to establish an investigatory committee by resolution to act after adjournment of the Legislature. (State ex rel. Robinson v. Fluent, 191 P.2d 241 (Wash. 1948); see also State v. James, 221 P.2d 482 (Wash. 1950), cert denied 341 U.S. 911, 95 L.Ed 1348, 71 S.Ct. 615 (1951), rehearing denied 341 U.S. 937, 95 L.Ed 1365, 71 S.Ct. 851 (1951))

While it is yet to be determined how a court in this state will respond to the holding in the Dickinson case, it is safe to say that the case has not been uniformly followed on other states. In addition there are several factors that distinguish the situation in this state from that in Arkansas. Article II, sec. 11, Constitution of the State of Alaska provides in part: "There shall be a legislative council, and the legislature may establish other interim committees. The council and other interim committees may meet between legislative sessions." In addition to establishing several interim committees by statute, apart from the Legislative Council, arguably the Legislature has conferred interim powers on standing, special and joint committees under Uniform Rule 21(c) which states in part:

> A standing committee may meet between sessions. A special or joint committee may meet during the session or between sessions, or both, as authorized by the resolution which establishes the committee. A standing, special, or joint committee which acts between legislative sessions may consider any legislative matter which is consistent with the jurisdiction of the committee. A standing, special, or joint committee which acts between legislative sessions constitutes a subcommittee of the Legislative Council for administrative purposes. A special or joint committee may expend money only in accordance with an appropriation made for the work of the committee.

Also, it should be noted that the Legislature in Alaska may call itself into special session even after it adjourns from regular session sine die. (Art. II, sec. 9) This is not true in Arkansas. While it is usual in state constitutions for the Governor to have the power to call a special session, at the time the Alaska Constitution was under consideration, the Legislature had the power to call itself into special session in only ten states: Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Virginia, and West Virginia. (Constitutional Studies 1955, prepared on behalf of the Alaska Statehood Committee for the Alaska Constitutional Convention, Volume 2, page 23) The proposition that the Legislature is terminated after adjournment sine die and, therefore, cannot authorize a committee to work after that point seems less powerful when the Legislature retains the power to reconstitute itself by calling itself into special session.

Finally, I note that the court in the Dickinson case, while holding that an interim investigatory committee could not be established by resolution, also agreed that the committee could be established by statute. The Legislative Council is constitutionally mandated and is established by statute. Under Uniform Rule 21(c) the Judiciary Committees are subcommittees of the Legislative Council for administrative purposes when they meet during the interim. Therefore, a reasonable argument can be made that the Legislative Council may investigate a matter during the interim and that it may rely on the Senate Judiciary Committee, in its capacity as a subcommittee for administrative purposes and which has the statutory power to issue subpoenas, to issue subpoenas that may be needed to further the investigation. In any case, in view of the power of the legislature to adopt its own rules and in view of separation of powers considerations, it may be that it is up to the Legislature rather than the courts to restrain a committee that exceeds the investigatory authority granted to it by the Legislature. (Art. II, sec. 12; Malone v. Meekins, 650 P.2d 351 (Alaska 1982); Abood v. League of Woman Voters, 743 P.2d 333 (Alaska 1987))

(2) Is there any discussion in the Constitutional Proceedings of the meaning of "between sessions" as used in Art. II, sec. 11 which authorizes the Legislature to establish interim committees that "may meet between legislative sessions"?

That section is discussed in the Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings, part 3, at pages 1698 - 1701, attached. I found in the historical records only one thing pertinent to your question. The Alaska Constitutional Convention Commentary on the Legislative Article states:

> (Sec. 10. Legislative Council and Interim Committees)
> Provision for these is also now almost standard. Their authorization is desirable lest a question be raised about the legislature's constitutional ability to designate committees to act when the legislature is no longer in session.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL MEETING TRANSCRIPT

July 28, 2008 Legislative Council Meeting Transcript

Time indicators correspond to the Gavel to Gavel archive file available at www.ktoo.org

Senator Elton: We are now under other business.

Represnative Dahlstrom: Mr. Chair, I move the Legislative Council delegate their authority to the council chairman to solicit, award and expend Legislative Council funds in an amount not to exceed $100,000 for the purpose of contracting for legal services to investigate the circumstances and events surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Monegan and potential abuses of power and/or improper actions by members of the executive branch and prepare a report. Senator Hollis French will serve as the project director for the contract. It is the intent of the Legislative Council that the investigation be professional, unbiased, independent, objective and conducted at arms length from the political process. The report shall be submitted to the Legislative Council, Senate Judiciary committee and the House Judiciary committee in a timely manner.

Speaker Harris: I'm going to object for the purpose of discussion anyway.

Senator Elton: Speaker Harris.

Speaker Harris: Are we going to, under this motion, are we going to allow subpoena powers or any other kind of powers necessary to get the information needed?

Senator Elton: To the speaker, it is going to be an initial decision that will be made by the project director if subpoenas are issued it would have to be through either one of the judiciary committees.

Speaker Harris: Ok, thank you. I remove my objection to the (inaudible).

Senator Elton: Senator Wilken.

Senator Wilken: Thank you Mr. Chair, just a couple of questions. This is something that this committee doesn't do very often, certainly not since I've been on the committee, I wonder just for all of our comfort that if I could ask someone with a legal background the authority under which this council can undertake this type of an action, just put that on the record. Then my second question is what do we expect as a deliverable, what is the end of this, what will we get, what is going to come back to us, what do we think that is going to be? So those are two questions if I could.

Senator Elton: Thank you Senator Wilken. Tam, could you sit at the end of the table for us at the mic, then introduce yourself for the record.

Tam Cook: Mr. Chair and members of the committee, I'm Tamara Cook and I'm the director of the Legislative Affairs Agency Legal Services division.

Senator Elton: And Tam, did you hear the first component of the question, under what legal authorities are we stepping forward?

Tam Cook: Right. The first part goes to the issue of whether Leg. Council has the power to, I believe the motion will be to prepare a report. Leg. Council has the power to conduct investigations, including to issue subpoenas itself, and to compel the testimony of witnesses, and administer an oath, but if you look at the statement of the powers and duties of Leg. Council, those powers are limited to carrying out actions that the Leg. Council has to undertake under its own statutory references which have to do with providing bill drafting services, administrative services, etc. So Leg. Council does not have broad, open ended investigatory powers, it has the ability to investigate with respect to administrative duties. However, in this case, apparently we are going to be considering entering into a contract for the purpose of hiring someone to look into a situation and to prepare a report , as such the council will not be conducting an investigation. The report could include items that the council can participate in, such as a recommendation for amendments to legislation. Leg. Council has the authority to introduce legislation to the Rules committee. I think there is a good question about whether Leg. Council could itself conduct an investigation into a matter that is outside of its jurisdiction entirely, I believe that this would not be an administrative matter of the legislature.

Senator Elton: Thank you. Before we proceed, and it looks like the Senator has a follow up question. I'd like to welcome a member, Representative Stoltze, should also note in the audience and I hope I don't miss anybody, Senators French, Senator Ellis, Senator Therriault, Representative Ramras, Representative Wilson, Senator Stedman, Representative Mike Kelly... I hope I haven't missed anybody. Was I correct in assuming that you have a follow-up question, Senator Wilken?

Senator Wilken: Yes, thank you Mr. Chair. So Tam, what I am hearing you say is that the motion that we are voting on is within the purview of the Legislative Council to move ahead to hire someone to conduct this investigation?

Tam Cook: Senator, through the chair, yes, I think that the council can conduct some, can hire someone to look into the matter and to prepare a report. If as a result of the report, for example, the council was faced with a recommendation that the legislature conduct an actual investigation into one or more issues that are uncovered as a result of the report, I doubt that Leg. Council would be the body that could conduct the investigation. At that point, it strikes me, the report would need to be turned over by Leg. Council to the house and the Senate to take appropriate action... Either the House or the full Senate has the power to investigate, and fundamentally the standing committees of each body have constitutionally based powers of investigation, but the Leg. Council's power to investigate is a limited one.

Senator Wilken: Thank you Tam. The next question was, and I'm not sure it was for Ms. Cook, but it is certainly for all of us. What is the deliverable, what are we going to get back in the process, and when do we expect that to happen?

Senator Elton: To Senator Wilken, the motion itself reads in a timely manner. I think we've struggled with what would be an appropriate amount of time, and that gets to the first part of your question, what the deliverable will be. The first paragraph of the motion speaks to what the investigator will be doing. I think it is difficult to presuppose what the report will be, and quite frankly, I think that the intent here is to make sure that, as much as possible, that that direction comes from the person who is doing the review rather than from the legislature itself.

Senator Wilken: Will the report come back to all of us, just to the chairs, and will it be confidential?

Senator Elton: And I'm kind of looking at Tam Cook in response to the question, this is Kim Elton again, the motion provides that the report will be made to the Legislative Council, made available to the Legislative Council, will be made available to both the House and the Senate Judiciary committees, and so it will have a broad distribution and I don't think, and I'm... this may be an opportunity for further discussion. I don't think it should be a confidential report.

Senator Wilken: I don't know one way or another, other than we probably want to talk about that before we get a report back, about how broadly it is spread. It is obviously a personnel issue in some respects, and we always guard those quite closely, so, I just throw it on the table so we go through it before we start.

Senator Elton: I think that is a good point, I mean I guess it'd probably be something that, if in fact there were personnel issues, we'd have to sit down with the project director and with Legislative Council.

Tam Cook: If I may, through the chair, to the extent that the report identifies specific information such as personnel information that is confidential by law, it would be necessary for that portion of the report not to be included in whatever the public portion might be, and it would probably be necessary for Leg. Council to receive that portion of the report in executive session.

Senator Elton: Representative Coghill

Representative Coghill: Actually, the second question was my question. Thank you.

Senator Elton: Further discussion?

Senator Wilken: Should we put in the motion, then, something about that fact? So that two months, or four months from now, there isn't any discussion of whether or not parts of it are kept confidential? That will put us in a very difficult spot if we make that decision later rather than now.

Senator Green: What was the question? I'm sorry.

Senator Wilken: What part of the report, all or, what part of the report will be confidential, or will any of it be confidential, or will all of it be confidential.

Senator Elton: Senator Green.

Senator Green: My understanding about the initial report will just come in with, you know, findings, and then if there is anyone being questioned that will not cooperate with the investigator, we might have to go under, you know, be sworn in, and that of course is public. And so the initial report, I don't think, is the critical piece of having it public, it's the follow-up that will be the thing, and then there will be a final action or report, and uh...

Senator Elton: I guess my initial response is this report will not be contrary to any law, and if in fact there is a personnel issue that would otherwise be confidential, in working with Legislative Council I think we can ensure that the call is correct and the report will not be contrary to law.

Senator Wilken: And that is good, and should there be an amendment to this motion that says that, so we don't have to wrestle with that months from now?

Senator Elton: To Senator Wilken, I don't know that there needs to be, I think that if we have it on the record here, and if there is no objection, I'm not sure that we need to figure out the wordsmithing. Representative Coghill?

Representative Coghill: So that brings to mind one of the questions of the deliverable, then. Are we looking for information that says there should be further action, or is this the further action contemplated that it would be a report that would automatically go to the Judiciary committees that would require action. So, when I first heard the motion, I was thinking, ok, this would come back to advise us if there was further action needed, but it would be automatic: There would be no Council action necessary or would it go directly to the Judiciary committees for their consideration?

Senator Elton: I'm going to respond, and if other people want to jump into the discussion, I mean there is nothing that precludes one avenue over another. It could be a two step process, it could be a three step process, it could be a one step process, and to some extent it may be difficult to codify in the motion, what that process is not knowing at this point in time where we are going. I think that everybody has noticed that, in the motion, it designates a project director, somebody who has been a prosecutor, and somebody that I think will be working closely with the contractor, and I guess I'm comfortable that if in fact there are significant decisions that seem to vary from this, that they are going to be coming back to me, and I will bring it to the Council. But right now it is relatively difficult, I guess, Representative Coghill, to answer your question not knowing, before we take the first step, not knowing what the second, third or fourth step is.

Representative Coghill: Then I may object to the motion, because it seems to me that I would rather have us come before the committee a report that said there is reason to proceed, than to give the Judiciary committee an expectation that they must proceed, based on a preliminary report. So, that is kind of how, when I first saw the motion, I just thought it was going to be a preliminary look to see if there is anything, and then my next question is going to be why do we need $100,000 to do that, or up to $100,000? But just to make sure that it is a clean process where, if there is something that is worthy of further investigation, then those committees that do have subpoena power would get clear direction from the Council. Absent that, I don't know if this language helps me in that, because what we are saying is that we are going to turn that over to the Judiciary committee of each body before we even know what the report is, and there is the expectation then that the Judiciary committees will probably have to proceed before we really understand that report as brought before the Council. So, maybe some further discussion on that aspect of it.

Senator Elton: So, just two responses, and I'm going to speak to the second one first, and that it is the $100,000 dollars. I certainly hope that this can be accomplished for a lot less than that, and that is my expectation. One of the things, and this gets to both points, one of the things that I think is of concern is, you'll notice in the motion that we have, we will be doing this in a timely manner. I don't think anybody wants to create a recipe for the review that could push us, for example, into the holiday season, and certainly I don't think that it would be wise, certainly, to get this done well before the seating of the next legislature. So I guess some of the thought behind this is, on both the amount of money, which I expect is more than enough, and a two step process is the timeliness issue.

[Brief at ease - 19:20 of recording to 19:26 of recording]

Senator Elton: We are coming back to order. There were a couple of side bar conversations going on at the time. At some point here, the next person on the list is Representative Wilson and then we will ask the named project director to take a seat next to [inaudible]. And it was mentioned during one of the side bar conversation that it is probably important that we know that the project director will not be paid for his additional duties [laughter]... that question came up, and so sorry Senator French! Representative Wilson?

Representative Wilson: Well, I kind of have a little bit of concern that Representative Coghill does. If this turns out to be a personnel issue that that is totally confidential, and it automatically goes to both Judiciary committees without us designated, at least going over it and deciding whether we should proceed or not, I have a concern that how many people this is going out to, so, uh, anyway, I just do have a concern about it.

Unidentified: You need to move closer to your mic, they are having trouble hearing you.

Senator Elton: I'm looking towards the end of the table, to the point that Representative Wilson has made, and I'm looking at Ms. Cook. I am assuming that any report that is given to Leg. Council and to the Judiciary Committees will have, if there are questions of law about what can be revealed, that those parts of the report will be redacted. If any of the committees wish to know what was in the redacted component, that it would require the meeting of one of the committees, and they would then go into executive session for the purpose of discussing matters which are otherwise prohibited by law from being done in a public meeting. Is that correct?

Tam Cook: I think, Mr. Chairman, that that is essentially what would have to occur is that if the report actually does contain information that is confidential by law, and certain personnel information is made confidential by law, that information cannot be included in the body of a report that is going to be made public. It would have to be in a separate, confidential addendium. The confidential material, when it involves a consideration of a matter that has been made confidential by law, requires... A committee is authorized at that point if it wishes to consider it, to go into executive session for that purpose. And that would be, I would think, the way that both the Leg. Council would consider it in the first instance, and any other committee that was interested in the subject would need to consider the confidential part by going into executive session.

Senator Elton: Thank you. During one of the sidebar questions we were asked to bring the named project director to the table in case there were questions that people had of the project director. Representative Stoltze.

Representative Stoltze: Thank you Mr. Chairman. I just had to grab a copy of the uniform rules to refresh myself, and just which committee if the presiding officers were making a jurisdictional referral of an issue, and State Affairs has the activities of the office of the Governor, as well as public safety. Did, uh, was State Affairs considered as an appropriate referral in both bodies? Just following our Uniform Rules... Rule 20.

Senator Elton: To my knowledge, no. Senator Green.

Senator Green: It is not unprecedented for items of this type to be sent to the Judiciary, in the past.

Speaker Harris: Thank you. Just on a point surrounding the issue. I think it should be made very clear that, because there have been conversations about personnel matters, that the issues really that we are dealing here is not the termination of the Public Safety commissioner. I think every one of us understand all those commissioners serve at the pleasure of the governor, and they can be terminated for just about any reason they want to be terminated for. I think what it really gets down to is, after the comma ends, potential abuses of power and improper actions is really, I think, what we are looking at, not, or, at least, proposing to look at, not the termination of the commissioner. Certainly in my view that is what we are looking at because I'd be the first one to say that the governor has every authority to terminate their commissioners for whatever reason they want to, and wouldn't look at that at all, its just, are there abuses of power that may have occurred above and beyond that termination.

Senator Elton: Senator Wilken.

Senator Wilken: Thank you Mr. Chair. I guess I'd ask Senator French, and throw onto the table for discussion, would it be more manageable and more precise if we, in the motion, eliminated the Judiciary committees from the motion. So what would happen is this report would be done, channeled through Senator French, to us, and we would get the first look at it, the report, and if any, the redacted information. We would then be able to send that out to the appropriate bodies if there was some action that we thought should be taken, so I guess I'd ask Senator French if it helps us to broadcast this out to three different groups, or if it is better to just bring it back to where it started for a first review.

Senator French: Through the chair, Senator Wilken, and for the record my name is Hollis French, I represent Senate District M in the State Senate, I think it depends on how complete you want the report to be and how many phases you see it being conducted in. The way it is structured now, I think you have the flexibility to do this in one sort of process if you will. Delegate, you know, the power of the chair to hire someone, hire that individual, send that person out to conduct interviews, and what is likely to happen in the process of conducting those interviews is that some people will not be willing to speak without having them subpoenaed. And so at that point you are going to need a proper venue, if you will, for the taking of that testimony under subpoena. And what that venue is is suggested in the motion as being the Judiciary committees, because, as Ms. Cook made clear, those standing committees have the authority to conduct investigations which may be outside the purview of this committee.

Senator Wilken: So would it be more helpful to just bring the report, whatever form it is in, just back to this table, before sending it out to other committees, so that we got first look at it?

Senator French: Through the chair, it is possible that I misunderstood your question, and I think that is a question for the committee. You know, where the report goes once it is completed, that is a question for the committee.

Senator Elton: I will attempt a short, brief answer to Senator Wilken's question also. I mean, it certainly is one way of doing things. I mean, it would require an action by the committee, and because we are trying to do this in a relatively timely way, I guess the concern would be that trying... given what is happening the rest of the year, and given the political nature of what is happening the rest of the year, as well as all of the other things that are happening, including family vacations that have been postponed because of this special session, I'm worried about timeliness, I'm worried about the ability of getting a quorum for the Legislative Council, so that we could then take the necessary action to further distribute the report. Representative Stoltze?

Representative Stoltze: Thank you Mr. Chairman. Have there been any official complaints filed against the Governor under the executive ethics act and taken up by the personnel board yet?

Senator Elton: Representative Stoltze I'm going to attempt to answer and somebody may have better knowledge than I. It is my understanding that if in fact those kind of actions have been filed they are confidential, and so we wouldn't have access to that kind of information. I'm looking to see if I getting a nod of agreement from our Legislative Counsel at the end of the table, she is nodding in the affirmative.

Representative Stoltze: Mr. Chairman, affirmative that something has been filed or that we wouldn't know. When we are nodding I get confused.

Senator Elton: Representative Stoltze, I think what I was saying is that if an action has been filed or a complaint has been filed we would have no way of knowing that because that action is confidential within the executive branch. Representative Stoltze?

Representative Stoltze: Normally, the experiences similar to previous complaints against the executive branch and legislative branch there is usually a press release that goes along with that... that... so, I'll nod on that one I guess... I'm just, wondering if... I want to get to the bottom of anything that is inappropriate but sometimes, I just want to make sure that we take the right route and definitely, when we ever get to the motion I'd sure like to maybe start this and then find out what it is actually going to cost and prepare a budget. I remember back in the Sheffield impeachment there was a lot of, I mean, we had one senator that wanted to hire the top, you know, was trying to hire one of the Watergate prosecutors and we found he was a great guy but only dead, you know... I mean, you know, sometimes these get on a life and I just don't want our branch... I have a lot of confidence in Senator French's expertise and knowing what this is going to take to pursue something, I don't know if it is in the scope of $100,000 or $20,000 or $200,000... I'd be very comfortable if we start him off with authority and then him come back with a budget.

Senator Elton: Just in, Representative Stoltze, I think your concern is a very valid concern, and I don't know if this helps or not...

Representative Stoltze: Which one?

Senator Elton: Your concern about kind of an open ended amount of money, and I don't know if this allays your concern at all, but the first act of my serving as chairmanship is to prove that I am fiscally prudent, and it is also my understanding that the contract is a public document that people can review. Is that correct Ms. Cook?

Unidentified Voice: mhmm.

Representative Stoltze: And Mr. Chairman, just, I think I have just about a perfect attendance record, I'm just probably the biggest nitpicker on every issue, I'm not picking this one, I've probably voted against more issues...

Senator Elton: We appreciate your work Representative Stoltze. Tam, is my representation about the public nature of the contract correct?

Tam Cook: Mr. Chair, all contacts essentially that are by Leg. Council are public and the billings are normally made public. There has been one or two exceptions where we have entered into contracts, this is not of that type, but where we have had to enter into a contract where the person that was providing this service... this occurred in a publication contract. One of their clauses required us to keep some portions of the contract confidential as a trade secret or proprietary evidence. And in that case we actually have a contract with an addendum that we collected all the confidential parts that were covered by the trade proprietary evidence issue, and put it into a separate document. So even as to that contract, the contract itself, except for the addendum and the billings is made public on request.

Senator Elton: Further discussion? Representative Guttenberg?

Representative Guttenberg: Thank you Mr. Chairman. Talking about the fiscal conservative nature of the contract and trying to keep the parameters, I'm also concerned about where this investigation issue can go in the event that there are other things that can be discovered that are not on this point. Is it your intent that, if we get a report back that deals with this situation that is solely on this issue or if there are other potential abuses or things that are noted can that be an addendum to this?

Senator Elton: Representative Guttenberg, that is a good question, and I am going to attempt to answer, I mean I think that what Alaskans want to know is what the purview of this review is going to be. The purview is in paragraph 1. It is my anticipation that if in fact there is something that requires a secondary decision, that it is going to have to, it should come back to me as the contract administrator, and it would come back to me if the project director, and I've worked with the project director on many different issues and I'm sure he would come back to me if he had any questions. And this is not a review that is being conducted by Senator Hollis French or Senator Kim Elton this is an authorization from Legislative Council to work on the issues as outlined here. If there is a broader issue that is of significant import, absolutely I think it needs to come back here. Speaker Harris?

Speaker Harris: Just for clarificiation, at least so I am clear and I understand. Earlier in the conversation we talked about there being an effort then to go out and find information and to come back to the Legislative Council with a statement I guess from whomever French or whoever else is involved saying whether or not there is actually if they find any reason they find then to move forward. In other words, if they look at what they have seen to that point and say it doesn't look like there is anything out there that is worth spending any more money investigating they are going to come forward and say that, and at that point in time, if that is what comes forward we are dropping this... is that right?

Senator Elton: Speaker Harris, if I understood your question, if the report comes back that there is no need for further action absolutely. At that point I would view the contract as having been terminated.

Speaker Harris: That, but what I am saying is is there not two parts to this, Mr. Chairman? In other words, we have said an amount not to exceed $100,000, but we also have said that we want this investigator, under the direction of Senator French and the Judiciary committee I assume, to notify us whether they think there is something that is serious and probably something that would need to be dealt with in executive session, or we then say, yeah go ahead and keep going and, you know, spend the whole $100,000 if that is what it takes to do your job.

Senator Elton: Yes, Speaker Harris, if I am missing the essence of the question I apologize. Under the situation that you are describing, it would seem to me there are a couple decisions that need to be made. The first by the project director and the second by me, and potentially a third by Leg. Council. And not knowing kind of what the fact situation is, that is kind of the progression that I see on the issue. The challenge or the mandate that we are giving to the investigator is encompassed in paragraph 1 of the motion, and so I view that as kind of the mandate that is being given to the director and to the investigator, but I guess I am stopping short of trying to identify a point at which things get kicked back to the Council, not knowing where that point would be or what the fact situation might be. Senator French, do you to...

Senator French: If I could, thank you Mr. Chairman... Let's just play it out a little bit. We are going to hire an investigator, we're going to turn that person loose, that person is going to have the ability to gather evidence, and if necessary, come back to a joint House and Senate Judiciary committee for the issuance of subpoenas. Some people just won't talk without a subpoena. At the end of that process, that person is going to write a report, and I think the report is going to take, you know, one of three forms: No evidence of wrongdoing, some evidence of wrongdoing, clear evidence of wrongdoing. That will come back to us, to your committee, and at that point the body has to make a decision, much like a district attorney makes a decision: Is this evidence strong enough to proceed on or not? But it is going to come back to us for our ultimate action, right? The investigator doesn't have that authority, I don't have the authority, and I don't think the committee does.

Senator Elton: Speaker Harris.

Speaker Harris: Can I cross examine the witness here for just a second? [laughter] So what you are saying is that the $100,000 dollars in this motion is the maximum amount that could be gotten under that, under that scenario that you have put forward.

Senator French: Through the chair, that is correct.

Senator Elton: Senator Davis.

Senator Davis: Back to the motion then, would it be appropriate to make an amendment at this time? And if it is I'd like to amend the motion to say that we delete Senate Judiciary committee and House Judiciary committee and you would end with the report shall be submitted to the Leg. Council in a timely manner.

Senator Elton: And, a question of the maker of the motion... That would not preclude me as chair of Legislative Council from providing the report to either committee? Or is the intent of your motion, ah...

Senator Davis: Through the director he would, uh, the project director would let you know if they need to subpoena, they'd have the authority to do that. You don't have to give them the report to do that. The final report is all we address in there... will come strictly to Leg. Council and no one else. Because the way you have it here it is going to three different bodies.

Senator Elton: I will respond just briefly under discussion on the motion that I think that kind of the thought of including the Judiciary committees, this council is a bipartisan committee, a bipartisan council, um, part of the discussion was where is an appropriate committee for subpoenas to be issued since as, I hope I'm not misrepresenting this, Ms. Cook has indicated that the subpoena power for this council is relatively limited to administrative matters. So at that point it was decided that the Judiciary committees in both bodies, maintaining the bicameral authorities of each body, would have the ability to do that, and so I think that is how the Judiciary committees got involved, and at this point I think I should also point out that it didn't make sense and we have talked to the member of the Judiciary committee in the other body, it did not make sense to have two project directors, and I think there was a comfort level that both of them had that this would work having just one member from one body being the project manager. I'm not sure that I answered everything, but that is how the Judiciary committees got included in the distribution of the report.

Senator Davis: I understand that, I know that is how they got included, and taking them out of the receiving the report will not keep them from issuing subpoenas if we should decide it has to be done. It doesn't have to be with here in the report will go to them. The report will go to us and then we will decide at that point if it should be turned over to them.

Senator Elton: Ok, under debate on the motion, Representative Stoltze.

Representative Stoltze: Yes, thank you, on Senator Davis motion to delete those committees from this motion, my question is, are we precluded from... I think we are, if we get an investigation product, I mean, it could have a lot of places to go, it might be the Attorney General's office, it might be Senate, the Personnel Board, I think we preclude ourselves by setting that, and I think it interjects what some see as a political process, and its, uh, lets find the facts and then, before the conclusion, and I think it could head in a lot of different directions, even a dead end to serious issues, and I think by naming that committee jointly to start talking about subpoenas, as much as we all want to get the answers, lets let the investigation, I think that is more in the purview of this committee to delegate, and find out what that yields before we see what step B is, and so that would lead me to support Senator Davis's motion.

Senator Elton: Representative Wilson, then Representative Samuels.

Representative Wilson: Thank you Mr. Chairman. My question – can I ask Ms. Cook a question?

Senator Elton: Uh, yeah, right now were under debate on the motion.

Representative Wilson: Yes, uh, this will make a difference how I vote on the motion.

Senator Elton: Please.

Representative Wilson: Tam, can we right now, if those words are taken out, so that the report only goes to Leg. Council, do they still have the authority if they can't, if they need to subpoena somebody, that they can go and get that done?

Tam Cook: Under the form of the motion, through the chair, there is nothing that prohibits the investigator that I'm aware of, unless the contract is written in some restrictive fashion, from requesting the aid of, say, the Senate Judicary committee or some other standing committee in issuing the subpoenas pursuant to preparing that report.

Representative Wilson: Then, uh, having that information I agree that we probably do not need to have that wording in there, and that [static] we then decide whether we are going to go forward or not, and then where its going to go.

Senator Elton: I would just repeat, I would like as people consider the motion, to think about the timeline, because I think that one of the things that we don't want to get into is we don't want to get into a situation in which the recipe itself pushes the timeline for a couple of reasons: one is we're coming up on the holiday season and we're coming up on a new legislature, and I think that in fairness to all of the parties, working on this in a timely manner. So, just a quick response. Can we have a brief at ease for a moment, and then we will come back to Representative Samuels and Senator Hoffman.

[At ease 44:12 of recording, back on record at 44:21 of recording]

Senator Elton: The council will come back to order. During the at ease a question came up, Ms. Cook, that you can help us. If we were going to the last sentence in the motion... If we put a period after council and say the final report shall be submitted to the Legislative Council, does that in any way inhibit the ability of either of the Judiciary Chairs from issuing a subpoena?

Tam Cook: I'm sorry I missed the last bit of your sentence.

Senator Elton: If in fact we strike the language, we put a period after council and we say the final report shall be submitted to the Legislative Council, does that in any way inhibit the ability of the Judiciary Chairs from issuing subpoenas to compel testimony from those who may prefer to give testimony under a subpoena?

Tam Cook: No. If I may, through the chair, if you are talking about subpoenas that might be issued in the course of preparing the report, versus any following up on any recommendation that results from the report, I don't see anything in the motion that prevents the investigator from requesting the assistance of a standing committee in issuing subpoenas if the investigator chooses to do so, and if the project director is in agreement. Once the report, if you were to put a period there, then the report would only go to Leg. Council. That would not prevent any member of the public or legislator or legislative chair of any committee from obtaining a copy of the report with respect to the public portion. With respect to the confidential portion, I don't believe that that would prevent a legislative committee from, if there is a confidential portion, I don't believe that a legislative committee would be prevented from getting a copy of the confidential portion also at its own request if it chose to do so, as long as it took the matter up under executive session. Now, the third possibility is that if you have a period at the end of Leg. Council and you get a recommendation that seems to be directed to further action on the part of the legislature, the council itself as a formal matter, could elect to take no action, or could formally, with a cover letter, submit the report to either the two presiding officers for whatever interest each of the bodies may have in the recommendation, or to the appropriate committees that Leg. Council finds might have an interest in the contents of the report. Leg. Council could, in fact, I suppose, include its own recommendation as to whether or not whatever this recommendation is in the report ought to be followed or ought not to be followed as far as that goes. So it is a question possibly of just the formality of whether Leg. Council wishes to reserve to itself the opportunity to comment on the report, if it elects to send it to another legislative entity.

Senator Elton: And, Ms. Cook, if I could ask a follow-up question. Are we better off, then, in the last sentence modifying the report by saying the final report? Does that make the latitudes that you just described easier to apply?

Tam Cook: I don't think that it is significant – I presume the report refers to the report that is being contracted for which would be the final report. The only issue that I see is whether or not there is a question in someone's mind about the role of one of the standing committees in issuing a subpoena in conjunction with the preparation of the report, and at this point, unless that is somehow other restricted, I think that the investigator could make that request.

Senator Elton: I would just note that, in response to Ms. Cook's final comment, I mean I think because it is the intent of the Legislative Council that the investigaton be professional, unbiased and independent, objective, I think that the thought behind that was that the Judiciary committees would not be involved in helping to draft the report... Is that the understanding that the other members of the council have? [Silence] OK. So, I'm speaking now to the maker of the motion, Senator Davis do you have a problem with the form of your motion being that in the final sentence it reads the final report submitted to the Legislative Council period?

49:27

Senator Davis: Your question was? That was what I meant.

Senator Elton: So that conforms to the intent of your motion?

Senator Davis: Yes.

Unknown: Mr. Chairman, was it our intent to delete in a timely manner as well?

Senator Elton: In that motion, in a timely manner is deleted. It would be simple to just say the final report shall be submitted to the Legislative Council in a timely manner.

Unknown: That was your motion right?

Senator Davis: That was my motion. [Laughter]

Senator Elton: We'll consider that, then, a friendly amendment. Is there further discussion? Representative Samuels, I'm sorry, we never did get to you.

Representative Samuels: Thank you Mr. Chairman, my point was going to be in a far less articulate manner the same as Ms. Cook's thing: Once it goes public it is public, and if any elected official wants to see the redacted portions, if any, then they are going to do that. So it all becomes a bit of a moot point to me. I believe that the best way to keep politics out of it as best you can, is to set up the process going as far down the road as you can. If we think that if the report comes out and says, you know, this is, there is nothing here, don't worry about it, then it dies. And if it says you might want to investigate a couple of other things the further we go down with saying here is our process, from day one here is our process, we're not going to get to day twenty and say, well now, because the report said this it is going to go here go there. I think we are better off as a legislature setting up the process now. We know where this report is going to go, and as far down the road as it goes, it could stop here, it could stop after the next thing if something happens we don't know what is going to be said, but I think that we are better off keeping politics out of it as best we can, I mean it is a political arena we are in, but we're better off having the language as is, saying here is what our process is going to be, and come back and change it, but don't be accused of playing politics with that thirty days from now saying well I did this because the report said that. Doesn't matter what the report says, here is our process. So I'm going to maintain an objection to the motion.

Senator Elton: I'm going to use the prerogative of the chair here and speak to a member not of the council. There is a meeting scheduled for two o'clock in this room, I'm going to give my best guestimate that it is not necessary to delay that meeting for a long period of time, I sense that we are getting close to a vote on the motion, and then close to a vote on the final motion. With that sense, and since I see nobody shaking their head vigorously back and forth, I'm just going to suggest that it is not going to be much longer for the next committee. Does everybody understand the motion? Further discussion on the motion?

[The Council then voted on the amendment proposed by Senator Davis, as modified by Senator Elton in the friendly amendment, to the motion. Amendment adopted 11-1. Elton read the final paragraph, and the final vote was taken – 12-0.]

Senator Elton: And before I call for adjournment, I just want to put in the minutes something that is not included in the motion, and that is that there is a request that the Governor instruct her employees to cooperate as fully as possible with the investigator.

[Meeting adjourned.

(Consol.)

Order on Motion to Dismiss and Temporary and Preliminary Injunction

Two now consolidated cases seek to stop a legislative investigation.

The court finds that Malone v. Meekins, 650 P.2d 351 (Alaska 1982), is dispositive. Much of what the plaintiffs raise is not justiciable, that is, it is business to be left to the legislative branch. The issues of constitutional merit which the court may review are that of due process and construction of the Alaska Constitution's fair and just treatment clause. The court finds no due process or fair and just treatment violation.

The motion to dismiss the action for declaratory judgment is granted. The motions for a temporary restraining order and the application for a permanent injunction are denied and the case is dismissed.

I. Facts

This case concerns the investigation of the Alaska Legislature into Governor Sarah Palin's discharge of Public Safety Commissioner Walter Monegan. On July 28, 2008, the Legislative Council passed a motion approving "an amount not to exceed $100,000 for the purpose of contracting for legal services to investigate the circumstances and events surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Monegan, and potential abuses of power and/or improper actions by members of the executive branch." Senator Hollis French, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, was chosen by the Legislative Council to act as Project Manager. French selected former state prosecutor, Stephen Branchflower, as Special Counsel. Branchflower was asked to produce a report by October 31, 2008. The date was later moved to October 10, 2008.

Two cases have been consolidated on this motion for a temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction, and motion to dismiss. In the first case, Alaska State Senators and Representatives are asserting claims against the Alaska Legislative Council, Senator Hollis French, Senator Kim Elton, and investigator Stephen Branchflower. In the second case, employees of the state of Alaska who have been subpoenaed to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee are asserting claims against Senator Hollis French, Senator Lyda Green, and the Senate Judiciary Committee.

II. Analysis

A. Can the Legislature Engage in This Investigation?

Plaintiffs claim the legislature does not have investigative power over the conduct of the governor in the management and operation of the executive branch and its departments. Monegan, as the head of the Department of Public Safety, serves "at the pleasure of the governor." Alaska Const. Art. III, § 25. However, Monegan, as Commissioner of Public Safety, is subject to confirmation by the Alaska Legislature. Alaska Const. Art III, § 25. It is legitimately within the scope of the legislature's investigatory power to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the termination a public officer the legislature had previously confirmed. This investigation may lead to changes in the confirmation process or other actions within the legislature's power such as proposing constitutional amendments.

B. Did the Legislative Council Have the Authority to Investigate?

Article II, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution expressly creates "a legislative council" and authorizes it to "perform duties and employ personnel as provided by the legislature."

The Alaska Legislative Council is a permanent interim committee of the legislature. AS 24.20.010. The Alaska Statutes govern the affairs of the Legislative Council. See AS 24.20.010-140. The Plaintiffs assert that these statutes do not grant the Legislative Council power to initiate an investigation over this matter. The statutes, however, grant the Legislative Council broad powers. See, e.g., AS 24.20.060(1) ("organize and adopt rules for the conduct of its business"); AS 24.20.060(2) ("to hold public hearings, administer oaths, issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and production of papers, books, accounts, documents, and testimony, and to have the deposition of witnesses taken"); AS 24.20.060(4)(C) ("to execute a program for the oversight of the administration and construction of laws by state agencies and the courts through regulations, opinions, and rulings"); AS 24.20.060(4)(E) ("to do all things necessary to carry out legislative directives and law, and the duties set out in the uniform rules of the legislature"); AS 24.20.120 ("submit memorandum reports to the legislature on matters referred to it or coming before it").

These statutes relate to the internal organization of the legislature. In Malone v. Meekins, the Supreme Court of Alaska was asked to determine whether members of the Alaska House of Representatives violated several Alaska Statutes and Uniform Rules. 650 P.2d 351, 353 (Alaska 1982). The court found the statutes at issue related "solely to the internal organization of the legislature, a subject which has been committed by our constitution to each house." Id. at 356; see also id. at 359. The Alaska Supreme Court did not mean the court was powerless to consider constitutional violations. The court noted, "the judicial branch of government has the constitutionally mandated duty to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Alaska Constitution, including compliance by the legislature." Id. at 356.

Thus, under the Malone rationale, the court can only evaluate whether the Legislative Council is complying with the Alaska Constitution. The constitution authorizes the Legislative Council to "perform duties and employ personnel as provided by the legislature." Alaska Const. Art II, § 11. It is clear that the constitution intended the Legislative Council to be governed internally by the legislature. Under Malone, this is a matter for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

C. Is It Improper for Senator French to Manage the Investigation Created by the July 28, 2008 Motion?

Consistent with the Malone decision, this issue is not justiciable. As noted in Part II.A, the investigation is a proper function of the legislative branch. Because the constitution does not speak to this issue, if there are any violations of the internal rules, that is a matter for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

D. Did the Legislative Council Authorize the Senate Judiciary Committee to Investigate?

Consistent with the Malone decision, this issue is not justiciable. As noted in Part II.A, the investigation is a proper function of the legislative branch. Because the constitution does not speak to this issue, if there are any violations of the internal rules, that is a matter for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

E. Does the Legislative Council Have the Authority to Delegate the Investigation to the Senate Judiciary Committee?

Consistent with the Malone decision, this issue is not justiciable. As noted in Part II.A, the investigation is a proper function of the legislative branch. Because the constitution does not speak to this issue, if there are any violations of the internal rules, that is a matter for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

F. Does the Senate Judiciary Committee Have the Authority to Meet in an Interim Session?

Consistent with the Malone decision, this issue is not justiciable. As noted in Part II.A, the investigation is a proper function of the legislative branch. The constitution governs when the legislature can meet in regular session. Alaska Const. Art. II, § 8. However, the constitution gives the legislature the power to establish interim committees which may meet between legislative sessions to perform duties provided by the legislature. Alaska Const. Art. II, § 11. It is clear that the constitution intended to give the legislature discretion in this matter. If the Senate Judiciary Committee is violating the boundaries the legislature has given it, that is a matter for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

G. Did the Senate Judiciary Committee Authorize Senator French to Issue Subpoenas to the Plaintiffs Requiring Them to Bring All Relevant Material?

AS 24.25.010(b) gives the Senate Judiciary Committee subpoena power: "A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness before a standing or special committee of the legislature may be issued by the chairman of a committee when authorized to do so by a majority of the membership of the committee and with the concurrence of the president or the speaker, or with the concurrence of the house or the senate." Two sections, AS 24.25.010-020, govern the form and service of subpoenas. The plaintiffs do not assert the subpoenas were deficient on their face or that service was improper. If they were, the Malone decision would not apply to this argument. Malone provided some applicable limiting language: "However, except in extraordinary circumstances, as where the rights of persons who are not members of the legislature are involved, it is not the function of the judiciary to require the legislature follow its own rules." Malone, 650 P.2d at 359 (emphasis added).

Instead, the issue before the court is that the process within the legislature was deficient. Because the committee has subpoena power and the legislature is operating within the constraints of the constitution, Malone applies for the reasons stated in Part II.B. Thus, this issue is also not justiciable.

Plaintiffs have pointed to this limiting language to assert that Malone also would not apply to any violation of the legislature's internal rules because these violations ultimately affected the subpoenaed individuals. This rationale ignores the purpose of the rules in question. Any internal rules, such as those involving delegation or scope of authority within the legislature, that may have been violated exist primarily to structure the internal operations of the legislature. This is not true of AS 24.25.010 governing legislative subpoenas. This rule governs both the internal operations of the legislature and provides notice to parties outside the legislature. When a legislative rule creates no right for an outside party, its violation does not fall within the Malone limitations.

H. Are the Subjects of the Subpoenas Outside the Jurisdiction of the Senate Judiciary Committee?

AS 24.25.010 gives the legislature and the Senate Judiciary Committee's subpoena power. Because the investigation is a proper subject for the legislature, any allegation that the Senate Judiciary Committee has stepped outside its boundaries is, under Malone, an issue for the legislative branch, not the judicial branch.

I. Does the Investigation Violate the Constitutional Prohibition Found in Article I, Section 7?

The plaintiffs allege that the Legislative Council's investigation is being managed by Senator French and conducted by Branchflower in violation of the due process clause of the constitution, specifically the "[t]he right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative ... investigations." Alaska Const. Art. I, § 7. Defendants argue that the power to interpret this provision is solely within the province of the legislature. This position is incorrect. "It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803).

Plaintiffs allege that the investigation is being handled in violation of the constitutional right to fairness of those actually being investigated. It is not claimed that the subpoenas issued to the plaintiffs do not comply with AS 24.25.010. It appears that the due process claim is that the wrong committee was assigned to the task. But even if the process leading up to the issuance of the subpoenas, such as the delegation of the authority within the legislature or the boundaries within which certain committees can act, were in fact violated, it is still within the constitutional bounds of the legislature to subpoena these witnesses.

The constitution guarantees the right to "fair and just treatment" in legislative investigations. The idea of fairness is an ambiguous and subjective concept. Fairness must be evaluated in the context of the investigation taking place. Because the legislature is a political branch, the expectations of fairness are not the same as the expectations of fairness when dealing with the judicial branch. In evaluating claims of unfair treatment by the legislature, the court must carefully balance the rights of the individuals being investigated while still respecting the province of the legislature. Where reasonable minds may differ as to whether individuals are being treated fairly, the court should defer to the legislature. The violation must also be of a sufficient magnitude to warrant judicial intervention. Surely the constitution would not authorize the judicial branch to enjoin a legislative investigation because, e.g., an investigator treated them rudely.

The appearance of impropriety is what plaintiffs argued was the violation of the right to fairness of those actually being investigated. Assuming that the plaintiffs have standing to assert such claims, the court finds the conduct of Senator French, Senator Elton, and investigator Branchflower do not rise to the level of a violation of the any individuals' right to fairness. Fairness within a legislative context is different than fairness within a judicial context. It is expected that legislators will belong to some party and will support the positions of their party, often publicly. The legislature is, by its nature, a political branch. It would be assumed that review, e.g., of Wall Street's financiers might be founded on a strongly held and expressed belief that somebody did something wrong. In this case, the allegations of the appearance of partiality among the individuals involved in the investigation do not rise to the level of a constitutional violation.

J. Does the Appointment of Certain Individuals Violate the Prohibitions on Conflicts of Interest and Unethical Conduct?

Plaintiffs have alleged that the individuals associated with the investigation are engaging in unethical conduct. More specifically, plaintiffs have alleged violations of AS 24.60.030 which states:

> (2) use public funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for a nonlegislative purpose, for involvement in or support of or opposition to partisan political activity, or for the private benefit of either the legislator, legislative employee, or another person....

Even if there had been a violation under this statute, this is not an issue for the court. AS 24.60.030 belongs to a chapter entitled Standards of Conduct. See 24.60.010-995. AS 24.60.010(8) notes "the purpose of this chapter is to establish standards of conduct for state legislators and legislative employees and to establish the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics to consider alleged violations of this chapter and to render advisory opinions to persons affected by this chapter." Thus, any remedy for such violations is within the province of the legislature, not the courts.

III. Conclusion

The motions for a temporary restraining order and the action for a preliminary injunction are denied. The case is dismissed.

Trial Court Case # 3AN-08-10489CI

Before: Matthews, Eastaugh, Carpeneti, and Winfree, Justices. [Fabe, Chief Justice, not participating.]

Appellants are six legislators who claim that the Alaska Legislative Council's investigation into the dismissal of Public Safety Commissioner Walter Monegan is unlawful and should be enjoined. The superior court denied the appellants' Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and granted the Motion to Dismiss submitted by the Alaska Legislative Council and the other defendants.

At the request of the appellants for a decision no later than today, October 9, 2008, we heard the appeal on an expedited basis. On consideration of the October 6, 2008 appellants' brief, the October 6, 2008 amicus curiae brief, the October 7, 2008 appellees' brief, and the oral argument held on October 8, 2008,

IT IS ORDERED: The order of the superior court issued on October 2, 2008 granting the Motion to Dismiss is AFFIRMED. An opinion will follow.

Entered at the direction of the full court.

OPINION BY: BRYNER

OPINION

BRYNER, Justice.

During a special session, the Alaska legislature overrode Governor Tony Knowles's veto of a bill that it had passed in regular session. The governor sued the Legislative Council, claiming that the legislature's override [2] vote was untimely and did not affect his veto. The superior court agreed, declaring the override vote invalid and the veto effective. The Council argues that the Alaska Constitution barred the governor from filing this suit and that the superior court thus erred in deciding the governor's claim on its merits. We conclude that the Council's argument has merit. Though formally filed in the governor's name against the Council, this suit is in substance an action brought in the name of the state against the legislature. Because article III, section 16 of the Alaska Constitution expressly forbids such actions, we vacate the judgment and direct the superior court to dismiss the action.

I. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

On April 26, 1996, during its second regular session, the Nineteenth Alaska Legislature passed Committee Substitute for Senate Bill (C.S.S.B.) 162, an act relating to land used for agricultural purposes. [1] On May 7, after the regular session expired, the governor called a special session, which convened the next day. On May 14 the legislature recessed its special session until June 3. Before recessing, it delivered C.S.S.B. 162 to Governor Knowles for his consideration. [3] Governor Knowles vetoed the bill on May 30, transmitting his veto message to the legislature a day later. On June 6 the legislature, having resumed its special session, voted to override the governor's veto.

1 C.S.S.B. 162(FIN), 19th Leg. 2d Sess. (1996). The act was printed as Ch. 1, FSSLA 1996.

These events set the stage for the present controversy. The day after the legislature voted to override his veto, Governor Knowles, acting in his own name as governor of Alaska, filed a complaint in superior court alleging that the legislature's vote to override his veto of C.S.S.B. 162 had been untimely under article II, section 16 of the Alaska Constitution. [2] The complaint requested a judgment declaring that the governor's veto of the bill remained in effect and named as defendants the Legislative Council and fourteen individual legislators who compose it. [3] The Council counterclaimed against the governor, seeking a declaration that the override vote was valid.

2 Article II, section 16 of the Alaska Constitution, provides:

> Upon receipt of a veto message during a regular session of the legislature, the legislature shall meet immediately in joint session and reconsider passage of the vetoed bill or item. Bills to raise revenue and appropriation bills or items, although vetoed, become law by affirmative vote of three-fourths of the membership of the legislature. Other vetoed bills become law by affirmative vote of two-thirds of the membership of the legislature. Bills vetoed after adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature shall be reconsidered by the legislature sitting as one body no later than the fifth day of the next regular or special session of that legislature. Bills vetoed after adjournment of the second regular session shall be reconsidered by the legislature sitting as one body no later than the fifth day of a special session of that legislature, if one is called. The vote on reconsideration of a vetoed bill shall be entered on the journals of both houses.

3 The Legislative Council is a permanent interim committee of the Alaska Legislature created under article II, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution and comprises fourteen legislators. See Alaska Const. art. II, § 11; AS 24.20.020.

All parties eventually filed dispositive motions: The governor moved for summary judgment, the Council cross-moved for summary judgment, and all of the defendants -- the individually named legislators and the Council -- moved for dismissal.

The superior court granted the individual legislators' dismissal motions, concluding that the legislators were entitled to legislative [*606] immunity under article II, section 6 of the Alaska Constitution. [4] But because the court believed that neither this constitutional grant of legislative immunity nor article III, section 16 -- which prohibits the governor from suing the legislature -- barred a suit against the Council, the court denied the Council's motion to dismiss.

4 Article II, section 6 of the Alaska Constitution provides:

> Legislators may not be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement made in the exercise of their legislative duties while the legislature is in session. Members attending to, going to, or returning from legislative sessions are not subject to civil process and are privileged from arrest except for felony or breach of the peace.

[5] Moving to the merits raised in the competing motions for summary judgment, the court ruled in favor of the governor, declaring that the legislature's override vote was untimely, that the governor's veto remained in effect, and thus that C.S.S.B. 162 had not been enacted into law. [5]

5 Specifically, the court, construing the "fifth day" clause of article II, section 16 of the Alaska Constitution (set out above in footnote 2), ruled that when the governor delivers a vetoed bill to the legislature after a first special session convenes, the legislature can override the veto within five days of delivery -- even if the deadline falls after the fifth day of the first special session. But the court also ruled that the five-day deadline is not tolled by a recess or adjournment that does not terminate the special session. Because the legislature had not voted by the fifth day after delivery of the vetoed bill -- June 5, 1996 -- the court concluded that its override vote was untimely and that C.S.S.B. 162 had not been enacted into law. Our disposition of this appeal makes it unnecessary to consider the superior court's analysis or the parties' arguments concerning the proper interpretation of article II, section 16.

[6] The Council appeals these rulings; the governor cross-appeals.

II. DISCUSSION

A. The "Public Interest" Exception to the Mootness Doctrine Applies to the Issue of Whether Article III, Section 16 of the Alaska Constitution Bars the Governor's Suit against the Council.

At the outset, we confront the issue of mootness. In 1997, the year after this controversy arose, the legislature enacted and the governor signed into law a bill covering essentially the same subject matter as C.S.S.B. 162. [6] Thus the question of whether C.S.S.B. 162 was validly enacted is technically moot.

6 See Ch. 20, SLA 1997.

But this court has long recognized a "public interest" exception to the mootness doctrine. [7] In determining whether to apply the public interest exception, we consider three factors designed to identify issues whose importance and ability to evade review justify an immediate decision, despite technical mootness:

7 See Department of Health & Soc. Servs. v. Alaska State Hosp. & Nursing Home Ass'n, 856 P.2d 755, 766 (Alaska 1993); Doe v. State, 487 P.2d 47, 53 (Alaska 1971).

[7] 1) whether the disputed issues are capable of repetition, 2) whether the mootness doctrine, if applied, may repeatedly circumvent review of the issues and, 3) whether the issues presented are so important to the public interest as to justify overriding the mootness doctrine.[8]

8 Department of Health & Soc. Servs., 856 P.2d at 766.

The primary constitutional issue presented here -- whether article III, section 16 forbids the governor's suit against the Council -- easily meets the first and third criteria for an exception. This issue is certainly capable of repetition. And it is also unquestionably an issue of great public importance, for it goes to the heart of the delicate constitutional balance between the powers of two coordinate branches of government. [9]

9 See Thomas v. Rosen, 569 P.2d 793, 795 (Alaska 1977) (granting review under the public interest exception of whether the governor's exercise of a line-item veto was constitutional, commenting that it "pits the political branches of our state government in a fundamental separation of powers confrontation").

[8] The second factor's presence is not as obvious. It is of course conceivable that the question of whether article III, section 16 bars the governor from suing the Council [*607] over the timeliness of a veto could arise again and be decided before being mooted by new legislation. But the express harm that the constitution protects against in barring the governor from bringing actions "in the name of the State . . . against the legislature" [10] occurs when the action is brought, not when it is concluded.

10 Alaska Const. art. III, § 16.

Considering the importance and unique nature of the protection embodied in article III, section 16, we conclude that the question of whether this section applies in the circumstances presented here merits an exception to the mootness doctrine.

B. Article III, Section 16 Bars This Suit by the Governor against the Council. [11]

11 We review constitutional issues independently, giving no deference to the trial court's decision. See Hickel v. Cowper, 874 P.2d 922, 926 (Alaska 1994). In construing a constitutional provision, we must give it a "reasonable and practical interpretation in accordance with common sense" and consonant with "the plain meaning and purpose of the provision and the intent of the framers." ARCO Alaska, Inc. v. State, 824 P.2d 708, 710 (Alaska 1992).

[9] Section 1 of article III of the Alaska Constitution vests the executive power of the state in the governor. [12] Article III, section 16 gives the governor broad power to sue in the name of the state but at the same time bars the governor from turning this power against the legislature:

12 Article III, section 1 of the Alaska Constitution provides: "The executive power of the State is vested in the governor."

> The governor shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws. He may, by appropriate court action or proceeding brought in the name of the State, enforce compliance with any constitutional or legislative mandate, or restrain violation of any constitutional or legislative power, duty, or right by any officer, department, or agency of the State or any of its political subdivisions. This authority shall not be construed to authorize any action or proceeding against the legislature.

In concluding that this provision did not forbid the governor to sue the Council, the superior [10] court reasoned that "plaintiff brought this lawsuit in the name of the Governor as head of the executive branch of state government and not in the name of the State of Alaska" and that "[a] suit against the Legislative Council, a permanent interim committee with separate legal existence under Article II, § 11 of the Alaska Constitution, is not a suit against the Legislature."

The Council disputes both bases of the superior court's ruling, arguing that the governor should not be allowed to evade article III, section 16's restrictions by simply altering the form of his complaint. The Council asserts that although the governor has sued in his own name as governor of Alaska, this is in substance an action brought in the name of the state. Similarly, it asserts that by opting to proceed against a functional equivalent of the legislature -- the Council -- the governor has effectively sued the legislature itself.

The governor responds that article III, section 16 "was not intended to prevent the governor from protecting his power from usurpation by the legislature." In the governor's view, "the Court must have jurisdiction to determine the rights of the coordinate branches of state [11] government." Insisting that the Council reads section 16's language barring actions against the legislature too broadly, the governor urges us to hold the constitutional bar inapplicable here because this suit "was brought in the Governor's capacity as head of the executive branch of state government," "did not request [that] the legislature . . . be enjoined or compelled to do anything," and "was brought not against the legislature but its agent the Council."

We find the Council's arguments persuasive.

1. Although filed by Tony Knowles, as "Governor for the State of Alaska," this suit is an action brought in the name of the state.

This suit does not confine itself to internal matters concerning only the governor, the governor's office, or the executive [*608] branch of government. Rather, as we have indicated above in Part II.A., it raises important constitutional questions of the allocation of powers among coordinate branches of government. Because the suit tests the basic constitutional structure of Alaska's tripartite system of government, it necessarily involves a matter of general public importance -- one that transcends the executive branch's parochial interests and implicates [12] interests common to all Alaska citizens. And although article III, section 16 authorizes the governor to sue in the name of the state, it confers no express power to sue in any narrower capacity. No other provision in article III expressly empowers the governor to raise issues of general public importance by suing in the name of the governor's office or of the executive branch. By any realistic measure, this suit involves the interests of the state as a whole.

Moreover, the governor asks for a ruling "that the Nineteenth Alaska Legislature . . . did not have authority under art. II, sec. 16 of the Alaska Constitution to consider a vote to override CSSB 162(FIN)," "that CSSB 162(FIN) cannot become law until the legislature properly exercises the veto override provisions of art. II, sec. 16 of the Alaska Constitution," and "that Governor Knowles'[s] veto of CSSB 162(FIN) remains in effect." By making these requests, the governor plainly seeks to enforce compliance with a constitutional mandate and to restrain violation of a constitutional power.

By so concluding, we necessarily reject the governor's suggestion that declaratory judgment actions are categorically exempt from the strictures [13] of article III, section 16 because such actions merely seek judgments declaring the law without directly enforcing compliance or enjoining or compelling conduct. To determine whether an action or proceeding is brought to enforce compliance with a constitutional provision or restrain violation of a constitutional power in violation of article III, section 16, we must consider the practical goal of the action rather than the procedural path it employs to attain that goal.

Using substance rather than form as a measure of constitutional compliance, we hold this suit to be an "action or proceeding brought in the name of the State [to] enforce compliance with . . . [a] constitutional . . . mandate, or restrain violation of [a] constitutional . . . power." [13]

13 Alaska Const. art. III, § 16.

2. Although filed against the Council, this suit is an action against the legislature.

The remaining question is whether by naming the Council and its individual legislator-members as defendants, the [14] governor evades section 16's third sentence, which prohibits him from bringing actions in the name of the state "against the legislature." Again, the question pits form against substance, and again, we conclude that substance must prevail.

The Alaska Constitution establishes the Council to "meet between sessions" and "perform duties . . . as provided by the legislature." [14] Under law, the Council comprises legislators from both houses, [15] who exercise a broad range of legislative powers and serve as the legislature's embodiment between sessions. [16] The Council's members also supervise a permanent staff, headed by an executive director, [17] that performs an array of administrative services for the legislative branch and the general public. [18]

14 Alaska Const. art. II, § 11.
15 See AS 24.20.020.
16 See AS 24.20.060.
18 See AS 24.20.060(4).

The governor asserts that this [15] suit escapes section 16's prohibition because it names the Council not in its interim legislative capacity but only in its service-agency capacity. [19] But the governor's pleadings belie this assertion. Neither the original nor the amended complaint gives any indication that the governor [*609] named the Council as a defendant in its limited capacity as a service agency. Both complaints name the Council as a defendant only in its capacity as "a permanent interim committee of the legislature." And both also name individual legislators only in their general capacity as legislators and Council members.

19 See AS 24.20.010 ("The Alaska Legislative Council is established as a permanent interim committee and service agency of the legislature.").

More significant is that the complaints assert no particular service-related acts or functions as a basis for proceeding against the Council or its individual legislator-members. By asserting that "the legislature's vote to override the governor's veto of CSSB [16] 162(FIN) is in violation of art. II, sec. 16 of the Alaska Constitution," the complaints aim beyond the Council, targeting an act of the legislature that is purely and quintessentially legislative.

An action of this kind falls squarely within the originally intended scope of section 16's prohibition. Delegate Victor Rivers, Chairman of the Constitutional Convention's Committee on the Executive Branch, described the relationship between the broad grant of authority given to the governor under the second sentence of section 16 and the restriction of that authority set out in the section's third sentence. He explained that despite the governor's power by appropriate actions or proceedings in the court, brought in the name of the state[] to enforce compliance with any constitutional or legislative mandate[,] . . . [the governor] has no authority . . . to act in that manner in any proceeding against the legislature. The legislature is the supreme elected body and as such [the governor] is answerable to [it] and to [its] interpretations and handling of matters of law.[20]

[17] By directing against the legislature's interim alter ego an action questioning the propriety of a purely legislative act, the governor effectively seeks to hold the legislature itself "answerable" to him for its "interpretations and handling of matters of law." [21] The substance of this suit thus infringes upon the legislature's constitutional domain in precisely the manner that the Constitution's drafters intended to prohibit.

We readily acknowledge the legitimacy of the governor's expressed interest in preserving the broad powers of litigation "that, in essence, makes him the strong executive that the framers intended." But in our view, the governor could have asserted these powers readily and effectively without directing a suit across the clear constitutional line that separates legislative and executive powers. [22] We would ignore the constitution's intended meaning if we held, in circumstances like these, that the governor could successfully evade section 16's restrictions [18] by suing the Council instead of the legislature.

22 For example, as the Council observes in its briefs, "The Governor could have sued the commissioner responsible for enforcing the law, as was done in State ex rel Hammond v. Allen, 625 P.2d 844 (Alaska 1981) . . . ."

III. CONCLUSION

We therefore hold that this suit is an action brought "in the name of the State" and "against the legislature." Because article III, section 16 forbids such actions, we VACATE the superior court's order declaring C.S.S.B. 162 invalid and REMAND for entry of an order of dismissal. [23]

23 Our conclusion that under the circumstances presented in this case a suit against the Council is equivalent to a suit against the legislature also compels dismissal of the suit as to individual legislators named in their capacity as Council members. We do not understand the suit to name these Council members as parties solely in their capacity as legislators. Accordingly, we need not consider whether dismissal of Council members would independently be required under article II, section 6, which provides legislators with immunity in performing their legislative duties: "Legislators may not be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement made in the exercise of their legislative duties while the legislature is in session."

Our disposition also makes it unnecessary to address the timing issues raised by the governor under article II, section 16 of the Alaska Constitution. Although the timing issues that the Council affirmatively raised before the superior court in its counterclaim and that it now asserts before this court on cross-appeal might not be barred by article III, section 16, the governor's declaratory judgment action obviously prompted the Council's assertion of these issues; at oral argument, the Council consented to our treatment of its affirmatively raised timing arguments as a contingent cross-appeal.

Article 1. Purpose and Applicability.

Section

10. Legislative findings and purpose
20. Applicability; relationship to common law and other laws

Sec. 24.60.010. Legislative findings and purpose. The legislature finds that

(1) high moral and ethical standards among public servants in the legislative branch of government are essential to assure the trust, respect, and confidence of the people of this state;

(2) a fair and open government requires that legislators and legislative employees conduct the public's business in a manner that preserves the integrity of the legislative process and avoids conflicts of interest or even appearances of conflicts of interest;

(3) the public's commitment to a part-time citizen legislature requires legislators be drawn from all parts of society and the best way to attract competent people is to acknowledge that they provide their time and energy to the state, often at substantial personal and financial sacrifice;

(4) a part-time citizen legislature implies that legislators are expected and permitted to earn outside income and that the rules governing legislators' conduct during and after leaving public service must be clear, fair, and as complete as possible; the rules, however, should not impose unreasonable or unnecessary burdens that will discourage citizens from entering or staying in government service;

(5) in order for the rules governing conduct to be respected both during and after leaving public service, the code must be administered fairly without bias or favoritism;

(6) no code of conduct, however comprehensive, can anticipate all situations in which violations may occur nor can it prescribe behaviors that are appropriate to every situation; in addition, laws and regulations regarding ethical responsibilities cannot legislate morality, eradicate corruption, or eliminate bad judgment;

(7) compliance with a code of ethics is an individual responsibility; thus all who serve the legislature have a solemn responsibility to avoid improper conduct and prevent improper behavior by colleagues and subordinates;

(8) the purpose of this chapter is to establish standards of conduct for state legislators and legislative employees and to establish the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics to consider alleged violations of this chapter and to render advisory opinions to persons affected by this chapter. (§ 1 ch 36 SLA 1984; am § 1 ch 127 SLA 1992)

Sec. 24.60.020. Applicability; relationship to common law and other laws.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, this chapter applies to a member of the legislature, to a legislative employee, and to public members of the committee. This chapter does not apply to

(1) a former member of the legislature or to a person formerly employed by the legislative branch of government unless a provision of this chapter specifically states that it applies;

(2) a person elected to the legislature who at the time of election is not a member of the legislature.

(b) The provisions of this chapter specifically supersede the provisions of the common law relating to legislative conflict of interest that may apply to a member of the legislature or a legislative employee. This chapter does not supersede or repeal provisions of the criminal laws of the state. This chapter does not exempt a person from applicable provisions of another law unless the law is expressly superseded or incompatibly inconsistent with the specific provisions of this chapter.

Effect of amendments. — The 1998 amendment, effective January 1, 1999, rewrote this section.

The 2007 amendment, effective July 10, 2007, inserted "the committee, the Alaska Public Offices Commission" and made stylistic changes in the first sentence of subsection (a), substituted the last three sentences of subsection (b) for the last sentence, which provided for the confidentiality of advisory opinions.

Sec. 24.60.165. Use of information submitted with request for advice.

The committee may not bring a complaint against a person based upon information voluntarily given to the committee by the person in connection with a good faith request for advice under AS 24.60.158 or 24.60.160, and may not use that information against the person in a proceeding under AS 24.60.170. This section does not preclude the committee from acting on a complaint concerning the subject of a person's request for advice if the complaint is brought by another person, or if the complaint arises out of conduct taking place after the advice is requested, and does not preclude the committee from using information or evidence obtained from an independent source, even if that information or evidence was also submitted with a request for advice.

Sec. 24.60.170. Proceedings before the committee; limitations.

(a) The committee shall consider a complaint alleging a violation of this chapter if the alleged violation occurred within five [TWO]years before the date that the complaint is filed with the committee[AND, WHEN THE SUBJECT OF THE COMPLAINT IS A FORMER MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE, THE COMPLAINT IS FILED WITHIN ONE YEAR AFTER THE SUBJECT'S DEPARTURE FROM THE LEGISLATURE]. The committee may not consider a complaint filed against all members of the legislature, against all members of one house of the legislature, or against a person employed by the legislative branch of government after the person has terminated legislative service. However, the committee may reinstitute proceedings concerning a complaint that was closed because a former employee terminated legislative service [OR BECAUSE A LEGISLATOR LEFT THE LEGISLATURE] if the former employee[OR LEGISLATOR] resumes legislative service, whether as an employee or a legislator, within five [TWO] years after the alleged violation. [THE TIME LIMITATIONS OF THIS SUBSECTION DO NOT BAR PROCEEDINGS AGAINST A PERSON WHO INTENTIONALLY PREVENTS DISCOVERY OF A VIOLATION OF THIS CHAPTER.] changed language*: effective January 1, 2009

(b) A complaint may be initiated by any person. The complaint must be in writing and signed under oath by the person making the complaint and must contain a statement that the complainant has reason to believe that a violation of this chapter has occurred and describe any facts known to the complainant to support that belief. The committee shall upon request provide a form for a complaint to a person wishing to file a complaint. Upon receiving a complaint, the committee shall advise the complainant that the committee or the subject of the complaint may ask the complainant to testify at any stage of the proceeding as to the complainant's belief that the subject of the complaint has violated this chapter. The committee shall respond to a complaint concerning the conduct of a candidate for election to state office received during the campaign period in accordance with (o) of this section. The committee shall treat a complaint concerning the conduct of a candidate for election to state office that is pending at the beginning of a campaign period in accordance with (p) of this section. The committee shall immediately provide a copy of the complaint to the person who is the subject of the complaint.

(c) When the committee receives a complaint under (a) of this section, it may assign the complaint to a staff person. The staff person shall conduct a preliminary examination of the complaint and advise the committee whether the allegations of the complaint, if true, constitute a violation of this chapter and whether there is credible information to indicate that a further investigation and proceeding is warranted. The staff recommendation shall be based on the information and evidence contained in the complaint as supplemented by the complainant and by the subject of the complaint, if requested to do so by the staff member. The committee shall consider the recommendation of the staff member, if any, and shall determine whether the allegations of the complaint, if true, constitute a violation of this chapter. If the committee determines that the allegations, if proven, would not give rise to a violation, that the complaint is frivolous on its face, that there is insufficient credible information that can be uncovered to warrant further investigation by the committee, or that the committee's lack of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the complaint, the committee shall dismiss the complaint and shall notify the complainant and the subject of the complaint of the dismissal. The committee may ask the complainant to provide clarification or additional information before it makes a decision under this subsection and may request information concerning the matter from the subject of the complaint. Neither the complainant nor the subject of a complaint is obligated to provide the information. A proceeding conducted under this subsection, documents that are part of a proceeding, and a dismissal under this subsection are confidential as provided in (l) of this section unless the subject of the complaint waives confidentiality as provided in that subsection.

(d) If the committee determines that some or all of the allegations of a complaint, if proven, would constitute a violation of this chapter, or if the committee has initiated a complaint, the committee shall investigate the complaint, on a confidential basis. Before beginning an investigation of a complaint, the committee shall adopt a resolution defining the scope of the investigation. A copy of this resolution shall be provided to the complainant and to the subject of the complaint. As part of its investigation, the committee shall afford the subject of the complaint an opportunity to explain the conduct alleged to be a violation of this chapter.

(e) If during the investigation under (d) of this section, the committee discovers facts that justify an expansion of the investigation and the possibility of additional charges beyond those contained in the complaint, the resolution described in (d) of this section shall be amended accordingly and a copy of the amended resolution shall be provided to the subject of the complaint.

(f) If the committee determines after investigation that there is not probable cause to believe that the subject of the complaint has violated this chapter, the committee shall dismiss the complaint. The committee may also dismiss portions of a complaint if it finds no probable cause to believe that the subject of the complaint has violated this chapter as alleged in those portions. The committee shall issue a decision explaining its dismissal. Committee deliberations and vote on the dismissal order and decision are not open to the public or to the subject of the complaint. A copy of the dismissal order and decision shall be sent to the complainant and to the subject of the complaint. Notwithstanding (l) of this section, a dismissal order and decision is open to inspection and copying by the public.

(g) If the committee investigation determines that a probable violation of this chapter exists that may be corrected by action of the subject of the complaint and that does not warrant sanctions other than correction, the committee may issue an opinion recommending corrective action. This

(o) The committee shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of a candidate for state office received during a campaign period to the complainant unless the subject of the complaint permits the committee to assume jurisdiction under this subsection. If the committee receives a complaint concerning the conduct of a candidate during the campaign period, the committee shall immediately notify the subject of the complaint of the receipt of the complaint, of the suspension of the committee's jurisdiction during the campaign period, and of the candidate's right to waive the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection. The candidate may, within 11 days after the committee mails or otherwise sends notice of the complaint to the candidate, notify the committee that the candidate chooses to have the committee proceed with the complaint under this section. If the candidate does not act within that time or if the candidate notifies the committee that the candidate is not waiving the suspension of committee jurisdiction, the committee shall return the complaint to the complainant with notice of the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection and of the right of the complainant to file the complaint after the end of the campaign period.

(p) When the committee has a complaint concerning the conduct of a candidate for state office pending before it at the beginning of a campaign period that has not resulted in the issuance of formal charges under (h) of this section, the committee may proceed with its consideration of the complaint only to the extent that the committee's actions are confidential under this section. The committee may not, during a campaign period, issue a dismissal order or decision under (f) of this section, issue an opinion under (g) of this section, or formally charge a person under (h) of this section. If the committee has formally charged a person under (h) of this section and the charge is still pending when a campaign period begins, the committee shall suspend any public hearings on the matter until after the campaign period ends. The parties to the hearing may continue with discovery during the campaign period. If a hearing has been completed before the beginning of a campaign period but the committee has not yet issued its decision, the committee may not issue the decision until after the end of the campaign period. Notwithstanding the suspension of public proceedings provided for in this subsection, a candidate who is the subject of a complaint may notify the committee in writing that the candidate chooses to have the committee proceed with the complaint under this section.

(q) A campaign period under this section begins on the later of 45 days before a primary election in which the legislator or legislative employee is a candidate for state office or the day on which the individual files as a candidate for state office and ends at the close of election day for the general or special election in which the individual is a candidate or on the day that the candidate withdraws from the election, if earlier. For a candidate who loses in the primary election, the campaign period ends on the day that results of the primary election showing that another individual won the election are certified.

(r) At any point in the proceedings when the subject of a complaint appears before the committee, the subject of a complaint may choose to be accompanied by legal counsel or another person who may also present arguments before the committee. The choice of counsel or another person is not subject to review and approval or disapproval by the committee. The choice by the subject of a complaint to be accompanied under this subsection does not constitute a waiver of any confidentiality provision of this chapter.

Chapter 39.52. ALASKA EXECUTIVE BRANCH ETHICS ACT

Article 01. DECLARATIONS

Sec. 39.52.010. Declaration of policy.

(a) It is declared that

(1) high moral and ethical standards among public officers in the executive branch are essential to assure the trust, respect, and confidence of the people of this state;

(2) a code of ethics for the guidance of public officers will

(A) discourage those officers from acting upon personal or financial interests in the performance of their public responsibilities;

(B) improve standards of public service; and

(C) promote and strengthen the faith and confidence of the people of this state in their public officers;

(3) holding public office or employment is a public trust and that as one safeguard of that trust, the people require public officers to adhere to a code of ethics;

(4) a fair and open government requires that executive branch public officers conduct the public's business in a manner that preserves the integrity of the governmental process and avoids conflicts of interest;

(5) in order for the rules governing conduct to be respected both during and after leaving public service, the code of ethics must be administered fairly without bias or favoritism;

(6) no code of conduct, however comprehensive, can anticipate all situations in which violations may occur nor can it prescribe behaviors that are appropriate to every situation; in addition, laws and regulations regarding ethical responsibilities cannot legislate morality, eradicate corruption, or eliminate bad judgment; and

(7) compliance with a code of ethics is an individual responsibility; thus all who serve the state have a solemn responsibility to avoid improper conduct and prevent improper behavior by colleagues and subordinates.

(b) The legislature declares that it is the policy of the state, when a public employee is appointed to serve on a state board or commission, that the holding of such offices does not constitute the holding of incompatible offices unless expressly prohibited by the Alaska Constitution, this chapter and any opinions or decisions rendered under it, or another statute.

Article 02. CODE OF ETHICS

Sec. 39.52.110. Scope of code.

(a) The legislature reaffirms that each public officer holds office as a public trust, and any effort to benefit a personal or financial interest through official action is a violation of that trust. In addition, the legislature finds that, so long as it does not interfere with the full and faithful discharge of an officer's public duties and responsibilities, this chapter does not prevent an officer from following other independent pursuits. The legislature further recognizes that

(1) in a representative democracy, the representatives are drawn from society and, therefore, cannot and should not be without personal and financial interests in the decisions and policies of government;

(2) people who serve as public officers retain their rights to interests of a personal or financial nature; and

Sec. 39.52.250. Advice to former public officers.

(a) A former public officer may request, in writing, an opinion from the attorney general interpreting this chapter. The attorney general shall give advice in accordance with AS 39.52.240(a) or (b) and publish opinions in accordance with AS 39.52.240(h).

(b) A former public officer is not liable under this chapter for any action carried out in accordance with the advice of the attorney general issued under this section, if the public officer fully disclosed all relevant facts reasonably necessary to the issuance of the advice.

Sec. 39.52.260. Designated supervisor's report and attorney general review.

(a) A designated supervisor shall quarterly submit a report to the attorney general which states the facts, circumstances, and disposition of any disclosure made under AS 39.52.210 - 39.52.240.

(b) The attorney general shall review determinations reported under this section. The attorney general may request additional information from a supervisor concerning a specific disclosure and its disposition.

(c) The report prepared under this section is confidential and not available for public inspection unless formal proceedings under AS 39.52.350 are initiated based.on the report. If formal proceedings are initiated, the relevant portions of the report are public documents open to inspection. The attorney general shall, however, make available to the public a summary of the reports received under this section, with sufficient deletions to prevent disclosure of a person's identity.

(d) The attorney general shall submit to the personnel board a copy of the quarterly reports received from designated supervisors under (a) of this section together with a report on the attorney general's review conducted under (b) of this section.

Sec. 39.52.270. Disclosure statements.

(a) A public officer required to file a disclosure statement under this chapter shall meet the requirements of this subsection in making the disclosure. When the public officer files a disclosure statement under this chapter, the public officer signing the disclosure shall certify that, to the best of the public officer's knowledge, the statement is true, correct, and complete. The disclosure must state that, in addition to any other penalty or punishment that may apply, a person who submits a false statement that the person does not believe to be true is punishable under AS 11.56.200 - 11.56.240.

(b) A designated supervisor who receives a disclosure statement under AS 39.52.110 - 39.52.220 shall review it. If the designated supervisor believes that there is a possibility that the activity or situation reported in a disclosure statement filed under AS 39.52.110 - 39.52.190 may result in a violation of this chapter, the designated supervisor shall take appropriate steps under AS 39.52.210 - 39.52.240. Failure of the designated supervisor to proceed under AS 39.52.210 - 39.52.240 does not relieve the public officer of the public officer's obligations under those statutes.

(c) In this section, "disclosure statement" means a report or written notice filed under AS 39.52.110 - 39.52.220.

Article 04. COMPLAINTS; HEARING PROCEDURES

Sec. 39.52.310. Complaints.

(a) The attorney general may initiate a complaint, or elect to treat as a complaint, any matter disclosed under AS 39.52.210, 39.52.220, 39.52.250, or 39.52.260. The attorney general may not, during a campaign period, initiate a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for election to state office.

(b) A person may file a complaint with the attorney general regarding the conduct of a current or former public officer. A complaint must be in writing, be signed under oath, and contain a clear statement of the details of the alleged violation.

(c) If a complaint alleges a violation of AS 39.52.110 - 39.52.190 by the governor, lieutenant governor, or the attorney general, the matter shall be referred to the personnel board. The personnel board shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for election to state office as provided in (j) of this section if the complaint is initiated during a campaign period. The personnel board shall retain independent counsel who shall act in the place of the attorney general under (d) - (i) of this section, AS 39.52.320 - 39.52.350, and 39.52.360(c) and (d). Notwithstanding AS 36.30.015(d), the personnel board may contract for or hire independent counsel under this subsection without notifying or securing the approval of the Department of Law.

(d) The attorney general shall review each complaint filed, to determine whether it is properly completed and contains allegations which, if true, would constitute conduct in violation of this chapter. The attorney general may require the complainant to provide additional information before accepting the complaint. If the attorney general determines that the allegations in the complaint do not warrant an investigation, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint with notice to the complainant and the subject of the complaint.

(e) The attorney general may refer a complaint to the subject's designated supervisor for resolution under AS 39.52.210 or 39.52.220.

(f) If the attorney general accepts a complaint for investigation, the attorney general shall serve a copy of the complaint upon the subject of the complaint, for a response. The attorney general may require the subject to provide, within 20 days after service, full and fair disclosure in writing of all facts and circumstances pertaining to the alleged violation. Misrepresentation of a material fact in a response to the attorney general is a violation of this chapter. Failure to answer within the prescribed time, or within any additional time period that may be granted in writing by the attorney general, may be considered an admission of the allegations in the complaint.

(g) If a complaint is accepted under (f) of this section, the attorney general shall investigate to determine whether a violation of this chapter has occurred. At any stage of an investigation or review, the attorney general may issue a subpoena under AS 39.52.380.

(h) A violation of this chapter may be investigated within two years after discovery of the alleged violation.

(i) The unwillingness of a complainant to assist in an investigation, the withdrawal of a complaint, or restitution by the subject of the complaint may, but need not in and of itself, justify termination of an investigation or proceeding.

(j) The personnel board shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for state office received during a campaign period to the complainant unless the governor or lieutenant governor, as appropriate, permits the personnel board to assume jurisdiction under this subsection. If the personnel board receives a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate during the campaign period, the personnel board shall immediately notify the subject of the complaint of the receipt of the complaint, of the suspension of the personnel board's jurisdiction during the campaign period, and of the candidate's right to waive the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection. The candidate may, within 11 days after the personnel board mails or otherwise sends notice of the complaint to the candidate, notify the personnel board that the candidate chooses to have the personnel board proceed with the complaint under this section. If the candidate does not act within that time or if the candidate notifies the personnel board that the candidate is not waiving the suspension of jurisdiction, the personnel board shall return the complaint to the complainant with notice of the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection and of the right of the complainant to file the complaint after the end of the campaign period.

(k) A campaign period under this section begins on the later of 45 days before a primary election in which the governor or lieutenant governor is a candidate for state office or the day on which the individual files as a candidate for state office and ends at the close of election day for the general or special election in which the individual is a candidate or on the day that the candidate withdraws from the election, if earlier. For a candidate who loses in the primary election, the campaign period ends on the day that results of the primary election showing that another individual won the election are certified.

Sec. 39.52.320. Dismissal before formal proceedings.

If, after investigation, it appears that there is no probable cause to believe that a violation of this chapter has occurred, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint. The attorney general shall communicate disposition of the matter promptly to the complainant under AS 39.52.335(c) and to the subject of the complaint.

Sec. 39.52.330. Corrective or preventive action.

After determining that the conduct of the subject of a complaint does not warrant a hearing under AS 39.52.360, the attorney general shall recommend action to correct or prevent a violation of this chapter. The attorney general shall communicate the recommended action to the complainant and the subject of the complaint. The subject of the complaint shall comply with the attorney general's recommendation.

Sec. 39.52.335. Summary of disposition of complaints and review by personnel board.

(a) When the attorney general initiates or receives a complaint under AS 39.52.310, the attorney general shall immediately forward a copy of the complaint to the personnel board.

(b) Each month, the attorney general shall file a report with the personnel board concerning the status of each pending complaint and the resolution of complaints that have been closed since the previous report.

(c) If a complaint is dismissed under AS 39.52.320 or resolved under AS 39.52.330, the attorney general shall promptly prepare a summary of the matter and provide a copy of the summary to the personnel board and the complainant. The summary is confidential unless the

(1) dismissal or resolution agreed to under AS 39.52.320 or 39.52.330 is public; or

(2) superior court makes the matter public under (h) of this section.

(d) Within 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, a complainant may file comments with the personnel board regarding the disposition of the complaint.

(e) At its next regular meeting that begins more than 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, the personnel board shall review the summary and comments, if any, filed by the complainant. The personnel board may compel the attendance of the subject of the complaint or the complainant at the meeting and may compel the production of documents. Attendance may be by teleconference. The attorney general or the attorney general's designee shall be available to respond to questions from the personnel board concerning the disposition of the complaint.

(f) After review of the summary, the personnel board may issue a report on the disposition of the complaint. If the matter is confidential and the board determines that

SENATE RULES COMMITTEE

INQUIRY INTO THE JULY 1, 1985 GRAND JURY REPORT

Dear Mr. President:

Pursuant to your instruction of July 15, 1985, the Senate Rules Committee has inquired into the July 1, 1985 Grand Jury Report and reports back as follows:

1. On July 2, 1985, the Superior Court, First Judicial District released a Grand Jury Report regarding the circumstances surrounding a state lease of the Fifth Avenue Center in Fairbanks. That Grand Jury had been investigating the lease since April 24, 1985.

2. The Grand Jury Report stated that the evidence disclosed 'serious abuse of office by Governor William Sheffield and his Chief of Staff'. The Grand Jury made eight specific recommendations. The first of these recommendations was that the Alaska Legislature be called into Special Session to consider the evidence for the express purpose of initiating impeachment procedures against the governor.

3. In response to this clear call by the Grand Jury, the Alaska Legislature convened in special session on July 15, 1985. Alaska's Constitution charges the State Senate with the responsibility of originating a motion for impeachment and the House of Representatives with the responsibility of trial on impeachment. The Constitution provides that 'the motion for impeachment shall list fully the basis for the proceeding' and requires a two-thirds vote for passage. The impeachment process is difficult as it rightfully should be difficult.

4. Impeachment is unprecedented in our state and rare in the history of our nation. It is a matter of utmost importance and the Senate approached this matter with the gravity that it deserved. Acting on the limited precedent provided by the expulsion of a former state senator from the legislature, the Senate President referred the matter to the Senate Rules Committee. The Senate retained the services of Samuel Dash, one of the most knowledgeable attorneys it could find in this rare area of legal expertise, to act as Chief Counsel.

5. As a first order of business, the Rules Committee adopted rules of procedure. It was determined that all twenty senators would be invited to attend and participate in all meetings. Although the Constitution does not expressly require that a Governor be allowed to participate in Senate impeachment hearings, the committee voted to allow the Governor and his counsel full participation, in order to assure due process in every stage of the hearing.

6. The Committee then adopted a burden of proof of 'clear and convincing evidence' and narrowed the scope of the inquiry to matters referred to the Senate by the Grand Jury. The chairman made plain that a wide latitude of debate and questioning concerning areas mentioned in the Grand Jury Report would be allowed. The last major item of procedural business by the committee was to adopt a definition of impeachable offenses. The Committee defined impeachable offenses as 'serious misconduct in office, such as treason, malfeasance, misfeasance, corruption or perjury'.

7. In their search to determine the truth in this matter, members of the Senate have reviewed twelve volumes of Grand Jury transcripts, which include almost 3,000 pages and the testimony of forty-four witnesses. We have reviewed the transcripts of statements by witnesses obtained during the investigation and considered numerous legal briefs and oral arguments by counsel to the Senate, counsel to the Governor and the Legislative Affairs Agency. We have heard testimony by nine witnesses, including Governor Sheffield, and developed our own printed record of more than 3,000 pages over twelve days of hearings.

8. Although the financial and civic costs of this special session have been high we believe that in the long run it will serve Alaska's public well. Some costs were inevitable due to the timing of the Grand Jury's action, such as the need for convening a special session of the Legislature rather than taking up the matter during a regular Legislative session. We also believe that the national attention given Alaska's impeachment proceedings and the importance of our inquiry as a legal precedent required the retention of expert legal advice. The benefits of this experience may not be seen immediately but will be felt in years to come in the form of solving existing problems brought to light through this process and avoidance of future public expenses.

9. Probably every one of the twenty senators has his or her own opinion of exactly what happened to cause us to have to sit together in this unhappy judgment. None of us can look inside another's heart or mind, however, and Governor Sheffield says he cannot remember a number of the events, the recollection of which would have clarified his personal involvement in this matter and made our judgment easier.

10. It is the opinion of a majority of the Rules Committee that the evidence that an impeachable offense occurred, though substantial, does not rise to the level of 'clear and convincing evidence'. The Rules Committee also believes that sufficient support to approve one or more articles of impeachment is not available in the full Senate.

11. We therefore offer this report as an affirmation to the members of the public and those state employees who came forward and put their careers in jeopardy and as a condemnation of those within the state system who have, according to the record we ourselves have developed, abused the public trust and brought discredit upon themselves and this administration.

12. A lack of a recommendation to impeach the governor should not be interpreted, however, as in any way condoning the standard of behavior that has brought us here. The Governor's Chief of Staff has admitted to lying to prosecutors and destroying evidence. There is also testimony that other evidence was directed to be destroyed. There is a clear pattern of persons in the Governor's Office being more concerned with deniability than accountability. We find that there was clear failure on the part of the Governor to set the tone for his administration: a failure to declare standards of appropriate conduct for his appointees in achieving the Governor's goals.

13. This report should not be viewed in any way as critical of Governor Sheffield's expressed goal of state office consolidation in our major urban areas. We believe these goals are in the broadest public interest, and we feel this affair should not stop or delay future consolidation. However, the manner in which the Fairbanks office consolidation lease contract was awarded is absolutely unacceptable and we urge that all future efforts in this direction be above reproach.

14. There is direct evidence that at the Governor's request, a request for proposals was sent to a member of a partnership which was a potential bidder on the Fairbanks Office Consolidation lease, giving that bidder a definite competitive advantage over other potential bidders. While release of the R.F.P. is not in itself a criminal offense it is clearly contrary to the standards and practices for contracting of the Division of General Services & Supply, Department of Administration. Political or personal relationships are not a justification for the advanced release of any information in state government. We recommend that the regulations of the Governor's office in this area be promptly modified to include this common-sense principle with specific exceptions left to the individual departments.

15. There is further evidence that at a later date the competitive bid process was changed to a sole source contract. This change to a sole source contract could well have been rationalized with public policy goals, but the Governor's total lack of memory of a key meeting precipitating this change, even after hearing detailed accounts of it by the other participants, raises serious doubts to his credibility.

16. In fact the whole pattern of the Governor's memory lapses is disturbing. During his testimony, the Governor exhibited almost verbatim recall of conversations and events that were favorable to him and a substantial lack of recall of events that might reflect upon him unfavorably.

17. The Grand Jury Report states: 'The evidence from a substantial number of witnesses also indicates that employees in the Department of Administration and the Department of Law may have eventually acquiesced in the intervention by the Governor's Office in part because they perceived that this was not an isolated instance but one that followed a series of other such episodes'. In the process of the Senate hearings on impeachment, a number of other issues of concern were touched on but it was not appropriate to follow up these issues because of the established scope of the hearings, the resources of the committee and the time available. It is recommended that the Department of Law review the transcripts of the Senate Rules hearings to determine whether other items, such as the Anchorage Office Lease and the Frontier Office Building lease might be appropriate subjects for separate review or investigation.

18. In this connection, we believe that the Attorney General was remiss in failing to insist upon direct access to the Governor, when the subject matter directly or potentially involved members of the Governor's Office staff.

19. In addition to its first recommendation regarding impeachment, the Grand Jury made seven additional recommendations. The Grand Jury's eighth recommendation was that the state lease of the Fifth Avenue Center be voided. On July 2, 1985, the Attorney General issued an opinion stating the lease should be voided.

20. The remaining six recommendations of the Grand Jury are: an executive branch code of ethics, adoption of revised procurement procedures, state employee awareness of ethical obligations, legislative review of problems presented by access to government officials to promote private pecuniary interests, implementation of procedures to promote the competitive bidding process, and adoption of standards pertaining to bid waivers. We strongly endorse these recommendations and believe that the legislative and executive branches must work together to achieve them. The impeachment hearings have emphasized the need for an executive branch code of ethics. They have also made evident the need for improved campaign financing laws, a subject currently under intensive study by the Senate State Affairs Committee.

21. The Constitution of Alaska provides: 'The power of grand juries to investigate and make recommendations concerning the public welfare or safety shall never be suspended'. The committee believes that this power has served the public and State well and will continue to do so in the future. However, it is also believed that the Senate Rules Hearings have made evident that a better understanding about the limits of the powers of a Grand Jury would have made it easier to devote our attention to the relevant issues during the hearings. In particular, the Grand Jury should have been instructed that impeachment is a political process and not a substitute for judicial remedies.

22. It is our hope that these matters will be taken up as a matter of highest priority, at the beginning of the Second Session of the Fourteenth Alaska Legislature. To help facilitate this we urge the full Senate to pass the attached resolution calling for the President of the Senate to appoint a select interim committee on procurement practices and procedures. We also recommend that a resolution requesting Judicial Council recommendations on grand jury investigative procedures be approved.

23. The committee agrees with the Grand Jury that, '...government officials must always aim for what is best for the public, not merely for what might be 'okay'. Every public official has a duty of loyal, faithful and honest service which is clearly inherent in the responsibilities of public office at all levels'.

24. The 15 citizens sitting on the Grand Jury have expressed goals that everyone in public service must aspire to but were plainly lacking in the conduct of some of the Administration officials involved here. Alaskans will not tolerate those who violate this duty.

"Supplemental Report of Senator Josephson

I have concurred in the majority report because I agree with the operative result of the report, and especially the recommendations for the adoption of the two resolutions to which the report referred.

I am noting, however, my specific nonconcurrence with significant proportions of numbered paragraphs 10-16 of the majority report, and accordingly, I submit herewith my separate or supplemental views.

Governor Sheffield should not be impeached.

It has been said that any impeachment hearing has about it an aura of sadness. But I also see reasons to be hopeful about Alaska's future as a result of these proceedings.

First, Alaskans have seen State government in close-up. Interest in government is increased, and the constituency for statutory reforms is enlarged.

Second, our legal system, displayed in these proceedings through good research, cross-examination and advocacy, has proved again its great value for truth-finding.

Third, the Legislature has received information and gained insights that will help in assessing legislation relating to ethics, procurement practices, and grand jury procedures.

Fourth, an undercurrent of gossip, rumors, and innuendo has been replaced by truth.

A. The Grand Jury Report.

The Grand Jury report called on the Senate to consider impeachment. The Senate has responded, and considered the report and other materials and testimony. To conclude that impeachment is not appropriate, and that Governor Bill Sheffield committed no impeachable offense, is not to reflect adversely upon the grand jurors or their work.

The grand jurors, the record shows, were serious, diligent, and thoughtful. But they did not know the whole story. It is no criticism of the prosecutors to note that grand juries are not, and never were, created for the purpose of providing full and fair hearings that go to the merits of a charge. That is why a Grand Jury indictment, even when rendered -- and there was no indictment here -- is nothing more than an accusation, and why a person indicted is presumed to be innocent of the accusation unless convicted after trial.

The grand jurors were told to consider impeachment, but they were never told what constitutes an impeachable offense, under the historical precedents or the debates in the Alaska Constitutional Convention.

The grand jurors heard arguments of lawyers, but they never heard the arguments of Governor Sheffield's attorneys or the mature reflections of Senate Chief Counsel Sam Dash.

The grand jurors saw documents, but they did not see all the documents that the Rules Committee saw.

And at least some of the witnesses before the Grand Jury, including Anselm Staack and Bill Sheffield, were directed to answer the questions that would satisfy the prosecutors' notions of relevancy and materiality rather than the witnesses' desire to give a full and balanced account of the surrounding circumstances and the context in which events or conversations took place.

Apart from the question of impeachment, the Grand Jury made legislative recommendations, pointing out the need to reassess the existing statutes involving conflict-of-interest, ethics, procurement practices (including bid waivers and sole source procurement), and employee awareness of ethical obligations.

The record of these proceedings confirms the urgency of these recommendations. They reflect that existing laws and regulations are confusing, inconsistent, insufficient, and obscure. The Senate should establish a Select Interim Committee to address these problems forthwith.

B. The Fifth Avenue Center Procurement.

Since the Rules Committee has voted to narrow the scope of the inquiry to the question of perjury, little comment is necessary about the procurement process which led to the State's lease of office space at the Fifth Avenue Center in Fairbanks.

However, a brief commentary is in order. I find no impeachable conduct. I do not find by clear and convincing evidence that the conduct of Chief of Staff, John Shively, prior to the commencement of the criminal investigation by Prosecutor Hickey, was improper.

Mr. Shively was confronted with a bureaucratic element well practiced in what Mr. Staack called 'end run', 'slow roll', and 'creeping commitment' techniques for thwarting administrative policy. Mr. Shively, and Governor Sheffield, came to government as doers and movers and as action-oriented leaders. Mr. Shively conveyed strong views to the Department of Administration, but that is the job of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. Shively knew that Governor Sheffield favored the consolidation of office space for certain state agencies in Fairbanks, in the downtown area. He never interfered in the negotiation of the lease, either by dictating or pressuring for prices favorable to the owners or for the owners' desire for a lease of more square footage. He acquiesced in recommendations by the Department of Law and the Department of Administration for a bid waiver procedure, and was personally involved in the decision to reject the 'footprint' for the smallest qualifying zone for lease space which Mr. Arsenault presented on October 2. Finally, it appears that the ultimate result, the lease itself, gave the State high-quality space at a fair price in the area of town where local civic groups and community leaders had recommended the consolidation to be.

Assuming, for purposes of discussion only, that John Shively acted improperly in his contacts with the Department of Administration with regard to the Fairbanks consolidation project, the evidence did not show that his improper actions came at the direction of Governor Sheffield. On the contrary, the evidence is clear that Mr. Shively himself never considered that he was acting upon the Governor's instructions or directions -- except for the appropriate general direction to keep forward progress on the consolidation project and to secure consultation and reaction to the 'footprint' or development zone presented by Mr. Arsenault on behalf of the owners.

It is true, of course, that any elected official must be answerable to the electorate for the actions of his or her subordinates. That is only fair; since politicians take credit for the good that subordinates do, they must also be prepared to take the blame for subordinates' mistakes.

But that is a political consideration, and is fittingly raised in traditional give and take of free, robust debate of the political process.

For impeachment purposes, an official is not responsible for the actions of subordinates unless those actions came about through the active participation of the official, or at the official's instructions or directions.

'Serious misconduct', as defined, includes 'misfeasance' and 'malfeasance', not nonfeasance or a failure of supervision.

In summary, I find that the Chief of Staff did not intervene improperly with respect to the Fifth Avenue Center, and that even if he did, his conduct is not imputable to Governor Sheffield for purposes of impeachment without a showing of 'serious misconduct', 'misfeasance', or 'malfeasance' on the part of Governor Sheffield, established by clear and convincing evidence. Accordingly, there was no impeachable conduct.

C. Perjury

From the outset, I determined that perjury constitutes an impeachable offense. A democratic society cannot operate effectively if its chief executive were to knowingly lie to a grand jury under oath. If clear and convincing evidence established that Governor Sheffield committed perjury before the Grand Jury, I would have voted to impeach Governor Sheffield without hesitation.

But there is no such clear and convincing evidence. Reviewing the Governor's testimony, former Attorney General Gorsuch found 'confusion' and possible 'inconsistency' with Mr. Gorsuch's own recollections; those findings, if believed, do not establish perjury.

I will not debate here at length all of the reasons for my conclusion that clear and convincing evidence was not presented to establish perjury. But some of the reasons follow:

1. By the time the Governor testified, he had received a detailed briefing about the investigation by Prosecutor Hickey. Therefore, the Governor must have had great difficulty in sorting out, as he testified, those matters that he knew from his own memory and those matters that he knew from the briefing only. Obviously, it would have been improper and inappropriate for the Governor to tell the Grand Jury propositions of fact which had been recited to him in the briefing, unless he had personal knowledge of the same matters. (Criminal Rule of Procedure 6(r); see 'Memorandum Concerning Norman Gorsuch's Testimony And the Questioning of the Governor Before the Grand Jury' by Messrs. Conway and Lacovara.)

2. It is clear from the testimony of Mr. Shively and Mr. Arsenault that nothing occurred at the October 2, 1984, meeting they attended with Governor Sheffield which was improper, or which involved a direction or instruction from Governor Sheffield to 'rig' the Fairbanks lease. Therefore, there is no motive ascribable to the Governor that would explain a deliberate falsehood.

3. Governor Sheffield acknowledged with candor that it was 'highly probable' that the October 2 meeting took place, and he added that he was 'not doubting' that the meeting occurred and that the subject of Mr. Arsenault's requests were discussed. (GJ Tr. 1762).

4. Persuasive extrinsic evidence to corroborate the notion that Governor Sheffield deliberately and knowingly lied with respect to any issue was not presented. In fact, as Professor Dash said in his closing statement, the whole case against the Governor rested on circumstantial evidence only. While evidence of a fact can be circumstantial as well as direct, the record reveals at least as many circumstances to suggest that Governor Sheffield attempted to tell the truth to the Grand Jury as there were to suggest the contrary.

D. Recommendations.

From these hearings, many lessons can be learned. The legislative branch, as noted above, needs to address the public policy issues raised by the Grand Jury, in a thorough review of procurement practices, conflict-of-interest laws, proposals for a code of ethics for the executive branch, and related subjects. In addition, legislation is needed to require that future grand jury reports, when released, meet the tests applied by Judge Sirica when he authorized delivery to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives in Congress of a Watergate grand jury report, or to assure that any unindicted officer who is the subject of such a report will be given a simultaneous opportunity to comment upon its contents, as required under federal law since 1970.

The executive branch needs to learn lessons, too.

The bureaucracy has an especially difficult task. On the one hand, it must bring to the attention of competent higher authority concerns about possible misunderstandings or violations of applicable laws, regulations and policies. The government of Alaska is still relatively small; it is certainly not a military or paramilitary organization, and even in the armed forces, procedures exist to bring problems to the attention of those at the highest level of the command chain. Accordingly, Governor Sheffield and his immediate advisors must reiterate their willingness to hear and consider the advice of the bureaucracy, and the bureaucracy must be willing to give that advice.

But on the other hand, the bureaucracy must understand the distinction between legal constraints and mere policy difference. It must respect the right of the people, who are sovereign, to impose their will on the bureaucracy through the people's elected officials. When the policies are set, and violate no laws or regulations, the bureaucracy must respond. When laws are enacted, they must be implemented.

Governor Sheffield came to office determined to have an 'open door' operation and an open government. I find from this record that this determination has always existed. For example Governor Sheffield testified that he told John Shively that the files on the Fairbanks office lease case should be given to the News-Miner, whether or not it contained 'politically embarrassing' materials. But around the Governor, there developed an atmosphere of over protectiveness. The trauma of these proceedings give the administration a new opportunity to implement the spirit of the Governor's determination for open government.

The Grand Jury report closed by noting that 'government officials must always aim for what is best for the public, not merely for what might be 'okay'.'

I concur. If we do not aspire to the best, we will not attain the good.

At the same time, let us never be so righteous, or self-righteous, as to think that we will have, or that we are entitled to have, an infallible government. In a free nation, government is people, and people are fallible.

Probably the greatest executive the American nation has seen was Abraham Lincoln. He was also the most villified leader we have ever had.

Abraham Lincoln held no malice towards those who criticized him. He said: 'I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors; and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views.'

And I hope it is a comfort to Governor Bill Sheffield to recall Lincoln's peace of mind in the secure knowledge that he was doing the best he could:

> 'If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business.'
> 'I do the very best I know how -- the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference.'

In closing, I want to commend Chairman Kelly of the Rules Committee for the manner in which he conducted the proceedings in these difficult days. The people of Alaska can be satisfied, whatever their conclusions or their views, or their political affiliation, that all points of view have been expressed, and that Governor Sheffield received due process of law.

"SENATE FLOOR STATEMENT
DUE PROCESS: RIGHTS OF THE ACCUSED
SENATOR FRANK R. FERGUSON
MONDAY AUGUST 5, 1985

Up until Saturday, August 3, the Senate Rules Committee proceedings were open and fair because the accused had an avenue for presenting facts to challenge the validity of certain documents.

However, during the Saturday hearing, the Rules Committee 'failed' to give the accused the opportunity to challenge the validity of the Draft Rules Committee Reports and/or Resolutions.

Since these proceedings were an investigation, the Senate Rules Committee had a constitutional obligation to allow the accused to have direct access to the Rules Committee meeting to challenge the validity of various accusations which is exactly what the Grand Jury failed to do.

'Two wrongs....don't make a right'

Even a governor is entitled to due process of the law especially under legislative investigations as required by the State Constitution. The fact in point is the 'Declaration of Rights' Article I, Section 7: DUE PROCESS

Quote - 'No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed'. End Quote

This clause in the 'Declaration of Rights' has been elevated to a prominent principle of justice and fair play that may never be violated by any branch of government.

The Alaska Constitutional delegates incorporated novel language in this section by explicitly extending the due process principle to both legislative and executive investigations. This was done in reaction to the blusterous 'anti-communist' investigations of Senator Joseph McCarthy in the mid-1950's that offended the public sense of fair treatment by government investigations.

While I find nothing wrong with a grand jury, when authorized, to release a report containing recommendations concerning the public welfare and safety, I find the legal basis of allowing a grand jury to issue a report naming a public official without returning an indictment to be deliberately or unprofessionally negligent.

I cannot support this report in good conscience because we did not give the accused due process in the final segment of the Senate Rules Committee's Legislative Investigation as envisioned by the framers of the Alaska State Constitution."

Congressional Investigations: Subpoenas and Contempt Power

Summary

When conducting investigations of the executive branch, congressional committees and Members of Congress generally receive the information required for legislative needs. If agencies fail to cooperate or the President invokes executive privilege, Congress can turn to a number of legislative powers that are likely to compel compliance. The two techniques described in this report are the issuance of subpoenas and the holding of executive officials in contempt. These techniques usually lead to an accommodation that meets the needs of both branches. Litigation is used at times, but federal judges generally encourage congressional and executive parties to settle their differences out of court. The specific examples in this report explain how information disputes arise and how they are resolved.

When conducting investigations of the executive branch, congressional committees and Members of Congress generally receive the information required for legislative needs. If agencies fail to cooperate or the President invokes executive privilege, Congress can turn to a number of legislative powers that are likely to compel compliance. The two techniques described in this report are the issuance of subpoenas and the holding of executive officials in contempt. The specific examples in this report explain how information disputes arise and how they are resolved.

Congressional Investigations

Although the congressional power to investigate is not expressly provided for in the Constitution, the framers understood that legislatures must oversee the executive branch. Under British precedents, lawmakers were expected to hold administrators accountable. James Wilson, one of the framers and later a Justice on the Supreme Court, expected the House of Representatives to "form the grand inquest of the state. They will diligently inquire into grievances, arising both from men and things."[1] In an essay in 1774, he described members of the British House of Commons as "grand inquisitors of the realm. The proudest ministers of the proudest monarchs have trembled at their censures; and have appeared at the bar of the house, to give an account of their conduct, and ask pardon for their faults."[2]

At the Philadelphia Convention, George Mason emphasized that Members of Congress "are not only Legislators but they possess inquisitorial powers. They must meet frequently to inspect the Conduct of the public offices."[3] Charles Pinckney submitted a list of congressional prerogatives, including: "Each House shall be Judge of its own privileges, and shall have authority to punish by imprisonment every person violating the same."[4] The Constitution, however, provided no express powers for Congress to investigate, issue subpoenas, or to punish for contempt. What was left silent would be filled within a few years by implied powers and legislative practice.

Early Precedents

During the First Congress, the House debated a request from Robert Morris to investigate his conduct as Superintendent of Finance during the period of the Continental Congress. The matter was referred to a select committee consisting of three Members.[5] The Senate adopted a different approach, preferring to authorize President George Washington to appoint three commissioners to look into the matter and report the results to Congress.[6] The House persisted with its committee, which issued a report on February 16, 1791.[7] The House committee investigation did not produce a total collision between the two branches because the area of inquiry concerned activities that occurred during the previous Continental Congress. Nevertheless, the House inquiry is significant because the House decided, as noted by James Madison, that it was necessary for Congress to acquire information in order to "do justice" to the country and to public officers.[8]

A 1790 request from Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton to Congress, seeking financial compensation for Baron von Steuben, triggered an early executive-legislative clash over access to documents. Although Hamilton initially withheld some materials from Congress, lawmakers received sufficient access to documents to permit passage of a bill for Steuben.[9] In this confrontation the leverage of Congress was formidable. Without cooperation from the Administration, Congress could refuse to pass the bill.

In 1792, the House conducted a major investigation by appointing a committee to inquire into the heavy military losses suffered by the troops of Maj. Gen. Arthur St. Clair to Indian tribes. The committee was empowered "to call for such persons, papers, and records, as may be necessary to assist their inquiries."[10] According to the account of Thomas Jefferson, President Washington convened his Cabinet to consider the House request. The Cabinet considered and agreed, > first, that the House was an inquest, and therefore might institute inquiries. Second, that it might call for papers generally. Third, that the Executive ought to communicate such papers as the public good would permit, and ought to refuse those, the disclosure of which would injure the public: consequently were to > exercise a discretion. Fourth, that neither the committee nor the House had a right to call on the Head of a Department, who and whose papers were under the President alone; but that the committee should instruct their chairman to move the House to address the President.[11]

The Cabinet concluded that "there was not a paper which might not be properly produced."[12] The House committee examined papers furnished by the executive branch, listened to explanations from department heads and other witnesses, and received a written statement from General St. Clair.[13] The general principle of executive privilege had been established because the President could refuse papers "the disclosure of which would injure the public." The injury had to be to the public, not to the President or his associates.

The first use of the investigative power to protect the dignity of the House occurred in 1795. William Smith, a Representative from South Carolina, announced that a Robert Randall had confided in him a plan to seek a grant of some twenty million acres from Congress, to be divided into forty shares. More than half that amount would be reserved to lawmakers who assisted him. The House passed a resolution directing the Sergeant at Arms to arrest Randall and one of his associates, Charles Whitney.[14] On January 6, 1796, the House concluded that Randall had been guilty of contempt and a breach of House privileges by attempting to corrupt the integrity of its Members. He was brought to the bar of the House, reprimanded, recommitted to custody, and released a week later.[15]

Four years later, the Senate opened an investigation into material published by William Duane, editor of the Aurora newspaper.[16] The Federalist Senate, voting 20 to 8 along party lines, regarded language in the newspaper as "false, defamatory, scandalous, and malicious; tending to defame the Senate of the United States, and to bring them into contempt and disrepute, and to excite against them the hatred of the good people of the United States."[17] Duane was ordered to appear at the bar of the Senate to defend his conduct. He appeared and asked for the assistance of counsel, which the Senate granted. He then refused to return, explaining that he was "bound by the most sacred duties to decline any further voluntary attendance upon that body, and leave them to pursue such measures in this case as, in their wisdom, they may deem meet."[18]

It was for that action, and not the published material, that the Senate voted 16-12 to hold him in contempt.[19] A warrant was issued for his arrest, but Duane managed to stay a step ahead of the Sergeant at Arms.[20] The Senate adopted a resolution (13 to 4) requesting the President to prosecute Duane in the courts. He was indicted by a federal grand jury, but after several postponements was never convicted.[21]

The first committee witness punished for contempt of the House was Nathaniel Rounsavell, a newspaper editor, charged in 1812 with releasing sensitive information to the press. After being held in custody, he admitted that part of the source of his story was overhearing a conversation between Members of the House, but refused to identify the lawmakers or say where the conversation took place. In a letter he disclaimed any intention of showing disrespect to the House. Rep. John Smilie then identified himself as the Member who Rounsavell overheard, stating that the information that appeared in the newspaper was "of no importance" and that if the House wanted a victim he offered himself as a substitute for Rounsavell. The Speaker asked Rounsavell whether he was willing to answer questions put to him. After he agreed that he was, the House voted that he had purged himself of contempt and he was released.[22]

Judicial Guidelines

The Supreme Court first placed limits on congressional investigations in Anderson v. Dunn (1821). Rep. Lewis Williams informed the House that a Col. John Anderson had offered him $500 if he would reciprocate with certain favors. The House ordered the Sergeant at Arms to take Anderson into custody. After interrogation by the Speaker, the House voted Anderson in contempt and in violation of the privileges of the House. The Speaker reprimanded him and released him from custody.[23] The Supreme Court upheld the House action as a valid exercise in self-preservation. Without the power to punish for contempt, the House would be left "exposed to every indignity and interruption that rudeness, caprice, or even conspiracy may mediate against it."[24] However, the Court ruled that the power to punish for contempt was not unlimited. The House had to exercise the least possible power adequate to fulfill legislative needs (in this case, the power of imprisonment), and the duration of punishment could not exceed the life of the legislative body. Thus, imprisonment had to cease when the House adjourned at the end of a Congress.[25]

As a result of this decision, it would be possible for someone to violate the dignity of the House in the closing days of a Congress and be punished only for the remaining period. To handle such situations, Congress passed legislation in 1857 to enforce the attendance of witnesses on the summons of either House. If an individual fails to appear or refuses to answer pertinent questions, that person can be indicted for misdemeanor in the courts.[26] Witnesses can invoke their Fifth Amendment right not to incriminate themselves.

Initially the Court defined the legislative power to investigate somewhat narrowly. In 1881, it spoke of Congress investigating only with "valid legislation" in mind.[27] That particular case concerned the power of Congress to investigate the affairs of private citizens engaged in a real-estate pool. If the individuals committed a crime or offence, the Court said the judiciary would be the proper branch to act. The Court worried about "a fruitless investigation into the personal affairs of individuals."[28]

Later judicial rulings came to recognize a much greater sweep to congressional authority. In 1927, the Court faced a situation where Congress looked not into the activities of people in the private sector but rather the conduct of the executive branch, particularly the administration of the Justice Department. The Court first stated that "the power of inquiry—with process to enforce it—is an essential and appropriate auxiliary of the legislative function."[29] Congress could not legislate "wisely or effectively in the absence of information."[30] Unlike the decision in 1881, the Court in 1927 did not confine congressional investigations to "valid legislation." Congress had a right to seek information "for legislative purposes."[31] The Court recognized that the Senate resolution that launched the investigation of the Justice Department > does not in terms avow that it is intended to be in aid of legislation; but it does show that the subject to be investigated was the administration of the Department of Justice—whether its functions were being properly discharged or were being neglected or mistreated, and particularly whether the Attorney General and his assistants were performing or neglecting their duties in respect of the institution and prosecution of proceedings to punish crimes and enforce appropriate remedies against the wrongdoers—specific instances of alleged neglect being recited.[32]

It was enough, said the Court, that the subject of investigation "was one on which legislation could be had and would be materially aided by the information which the investigation was calculated to elicit."[33] That is, a potential for legislation was sufficient. A congressional investigation could have legislation as a possible, but not a necessary, outcome. Investigation as pure oversight into the operations of the executive branch was adequate justification.

To accomplish the purpose of legislation or oversight, each House is entitled to compel witnesses to provide testimony pertinent to the legislative inquiry.[34] Even the "potential" theory too narrowly circumscribes legislative investigations. Courts recognize that committee investigations may take researchers up "blind alleys" and into nonproductive enterprises: "To be a valid legislative inquiry there need by no predictable end result."[35]

Subpoenas

The Supreme Court has described the congressional power of inquiry as "an essential and appropriate auxiliary to the legislative function."[36] The issuance of a subpoena pursuant to an authorized investigation is "an indispensable ingredient of lawmaking."[37] This section describes how committee subpoenas are used to force testimony and the release of documents, and how Congress can grant immunity to individuals who exercise their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. The particular examples of subpoena power selected here include these actions: Rep. John Moss arrayed against the Federal Trade Commission, a House subcommittee requesting documents regarding Justice Department policy on seizing suspects abroad, a conflict between a House committee and the Justice Department involving the Inslaw affair, and a Senate committee seeking documents on Whitewater.

Issuing a Subpoena

Lawmakers and their committees usually obtain the information they need for legislation or oversight without threats of subpoenas. They understand that committee investigations have to satisfy certain standards. Legislative inquiries must be authorized by Congress, pursue a valid legislative purpose, raise questions relevant to the issue being investigated, and inform witnesses why questions put to them are pertinent.[38] Congressional inquiries may not interfere with adjudicatory proceedings before a department or agency.[39] Other arguments may be offered to resist a subcommittee subpoena, such as the need to protect confidential trade secrets or to protect information within the Justice Department,[40] but those justifications can be overridden by legislative needs.

Federal courts give great deference to congressional subpoenas. If the investigative effort falls within the "legitimate legislative sphere," the congressional activity—including subpoenas—is protected by the absolute prohibition of the Speech or Debate Clause, which prevents Members of Congress from being "questioned in any other place." In a 1975 case, the Supreme Court ruled that such legislative activities are immune from judicial interference.[41] A concurrence by Justices Marshall, Brennan, and Stewart did not agree that "the constitutionality of a congressional subpoena is always shielded from more searching judicial inquiry."[42] In a dissent, Justice Douglas rejected the majority's position regarding broad legislative immunity from judicial review.[43]

As a tool of legislative inquiries, both Houses of Congress authorize their committees and subcommittees to issue subpoenas to require the production of documents and the attendance of witnesses regarding matters within the committee's jurisdiction. Committee subpoenas "have the same authority as if they were issued by the entire House of Congress from which the committee is drawn."[44] If a witness refuses to testify or produce papers in response to a committee subpoena, and the committee votes to report a resolution of contempt to the floor, the full House or Senate may vote in support of the contempt citation.

Committees and subcommittees are authorized to request, by subpoena, "the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as it considers necessary." For a committee or subcommittee to issue a subpoena, a majority must be present, although the power to authorize and issue subpoenas may be delegated to the committee chairman.[45] Committee rules can vary the procedures for issuing subpoenas.

A congressional subpoena identifies the name of the committee or subcommittee; the date, time, and place of the hearing a witness is to attend; and the particular kind of documents sought. A subpoena may state that if the documents are delivered by a particular date, the person who has custody over the documents need not appear. Congressional subpoenas are typically served by the U.S. Marshal's office or by committee staff. The Senate has statutory authority to seek civil enforcement of its subpoenas over private individuals.[46] The House relies on its rules and criminal contempt statutes.[47]

It is rare for an executive official to wholly sidestep a congressional subpoena. In 1989, a House subcommittee issued a subpoena to former Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel Pierce. He appeared, but invoked his constitutional right not to incriminate himself. He became the first former or current Cabinet official to invoke the Fifth Amendment since the Teapot Dome scandal of 1923.[48] In 1991, Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher became the first sitting Cabinet officer to refuse to appear before a congressional committee to explain why he would not comply with a subpoena.[49]

In 1981, Attorney General William French Smith issued an opinion that analyzed how the Administration should respond to a congressional subpoena. He concluded that when Congress issues a subpoena as part of a "legislative oversight inquiry," access by Congress has less justification than when it seeks information for legislative purposes.[50] He acknowledged that Congress "does have a legitimate interest in obtaining information to assist it in enacting, amending, or repealing legislation." Yet "the interest of Congress in obtaining information for oversight purposes is, I believe, considerably weaker than its interest when specific legislative proposals are in question."[51] This distinction between legislation and oversight is not so crisp. It is well established that Congress has as much constitutional right to oversee the execution of a law as to pass it. Moreover, even if such a distinction could be created, Congress could easily erase it by introducing a bill to "justify" every oversight proceeding.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION MINUTES

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the messenger please bring the proposed amendment to the Secretary's desk? Would the Chief Clerk please read the proposed amendment?

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of a person to due process of law shall not be infringed by use of the Legislature's investigative power.'"

PRESIDENT EGAN: What is your pleasure, Mr. Rivers?

V. RIVERS: I move for the adoption of the amendment.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers moves the adoption of the proposed amendment.

McCUTCHEON: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The matter is open for discussion, Mr. Taylor.

TAYLOR: Mr. President, I would just like for the purpose of information, ask Mr. Rivers to explain the reason for the amendment.

V. RIVERS: I would be glad to do that. I was intending to do that, Mr. President. It has been my observation that in the later years there has been a great deal of congressional and legislative investigation throughout the states and some in Alaska in which the right of the individual has been infringed, in that he is publicly brought into a body by accusation of certain things, is indicted, and then by sensationalism in the press is condemned, without any fair previous hearing or consideration as to whether he should be subject to that type of thing or not. It has been particularly noticeable that the investigative power of congressional groups and committees has been extremely abused in the last ten years. It seems to me that I would not want to limit the investigative power of the legislature but would I like to see them do it in an orderly manner. In such a way that individuals are not castigated and character is not assassinated without properly knowing that the individual has some grounds upon which to approach the individual as to his presumed guilt. It seems to me that there is a drastic field for abuse unless it is curbed in some manner by proper legislative procedure established by law, that there can be an abuse again by the right of the individual subject to the legislative investigative power. Does that answer your question?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Johnson.

JOHNSON: I would like to ask Mr. Rivers a question. "Don't you think, Mr. Rivers, that under the section as it now stands that those guarantees could still be secured? You referred to legislative processes and guaranteeing the rights of people before legislative investigations, and I am wondering if under this provision as it now stands whether that same right is not already given or protected?

V. RIVERS: All I can answer that is by saying is this, that under similar provisions in other constitutions the right of the individual to due process in legislative investigations has not been protected and many of the areas in which investigations have been held have been held under similar clauses and it has not applied.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Davis.

DAVIS: I am sorry I did not get the proposed amendment.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the Chief Clerk please read the amendment. Read it slowly.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of a person to due process of law shall not be infringed by use of the Legislature's investigative power.'"

PRESIDENT EGAN: Is there further discussion of the proposed amendment? Mr. Barr.

BARR: I certainly see eye to eye with Mr. Rivers on this. It is true that our rights are protected in the Federal Constitution and other state constitutions in a general way, but I must point out that the trend in recent years has been to give more power to the state on investigations and they seem to abuse that power in certain cases. I believe in spite of any other guarantees in the constitution that we should mention that, only I would go a little further than Mr. Rivers. He said that the people should be protected from the legislative investigative power. I should say from the "investigative power of the state" because we do have certain departments that investigate persons of it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: I don't want to take up too much time, but I did want to say that I thought the words "legislative investigative power", the investigative power in any event would have to be delegated by the legislature to either a committee or agencies or departments of government and that it would all be inclusive under the term "legislative power". That was my thought in the matter.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Buckalew.

BUCKALEW: Mr. President, speaking as a lawyer, I don't think that clause means anything. I don't think it is going to reach Mr. Rivers' point, what he is trying to do. Apparently he is trying to require the legislature to set up certain rules of evidence, certain procedures by which a witness could be entitled to counsel, but "due process" does not mean that. I would like to hear from Mr. McLaughlin. That is my opinion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. McLaughlin.

McLAUGHLIN: I have no ideas. I am frankly puzzled by the amendment. I think this was taken obviously from the 14th Amendment of the Constitution. I believe the wording is exactly the 14th Amendment. We have a mess of cases, probably more cases decided under the due process clause than under any other clause of the constitution, except possibly the interstate commerce clause, and I am puzzled, frankly, Mr. Rivers, by the amendment.

V. RIVERS: It seems to me that on the basis of past and present you might not have a case that applies in this particular instance. Do you not believe that suitable laws could be established by the legislature to protect the right of the individual in appearing before investigative committees or investigative departments of the legislature or departments to which their power had been delegated so that they were not castigated publicly before they were indicted or before they were convicted. Do you think that is beyond the realm or the power of or scope of our law to do such a thing?

McLAUGHLIN: I do not think it beyond the scope of our law, but my recollection is that there are certain members of this Convention who were obviously desirous of securing an opinion from the Attorney General, in substance, to determine whether or not they could libel in this legislative power. I don't know how we could curb the power of the hearings from blasting any individual or any group of individuals right on the floor of the house. He would be subject to the castigation apparently we are attempting to avoid. I think the intent is good, but I think you could not possibly curb your legislature to such an extent that they could not say anything nasty about anyone until they were present with counsel. That is why I am puzzled.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Ralph Rivers.

R. RIVERS: I can see the problem. Depriving a person of life, liberty or property points squarely to the judiciary process. A man cannot be required to testify against himself where he is charged with a crime and they cannot take his property, say like under an eminent domain proceedings without due process of law. There is a real problem. The McCarthy hearings brought out the great issue that existed here a couple of years ago. McCarthy was making charges against people under the exercise of the powers of a congressional legislative committee. The people, individuals were sorely abused under the guise of the exercise of the power of the legislature to investigate. The only subject that a legislature is supposed to investigate upon is something that will bear upon the state code or prospective legislation that might be under consideration. But under the guise of looking into legislative matters they call hearings and then maybe subject people to very bad treatment and ruin their reputations and assassinate them from a character standpoint, and unless some thought is flagged, even though not too much could be done with this thought, the thought would be there that our constitution is warning the legislature under the guise of its power to investigate; that it shall observe some type of due process and respect for the individual. Now that is the problem. Whether Mr. Rivers' particular brief amendment would clearly pave the way to accomplish that purpose, I don't know, but at least it flags the present abuse.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Miss Awes.

AWES: I am perfectly sympathetic to what Mr. Rivers is trying to achieve, but I am doubtful that this language does it. Frankly, I have read this amendment over several times, and I don't know what the language used does mean.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Taylor.

TAYLOR: Mr. President, this is a matter I think we should all concern ourselves with because as Mr. Rivers has said, over the past number of years we have seen some very shameful episodes in the national life which was more clearly exemplified by the actions of a man whose name very seldom appears in the newspapers anymore, Senator Joe McCarthy. We feel there was a pattern laid by that, I was going to call him a gentlemen, but I will not do so, which we should not allow to be emulated by any department of the Territory. There was a pattern set by him that under the guise of a legislative procedure, or investigation, he indulged in vilification, character assassination, and an intimation of guilt by association. I understand we had some legislative assistant or head of the legislative investigating committee in Alaska who attempted in his own feeble way to emulate that ignoble example set by McCarthy. I don't know as Mr. Rivers' amendment goes far enough, but if it will go to any extent to curb such activities and prevent such shameful episodes from occurring in the Territory of Alaska, I will go along with it. We can't tell but what we might have some "McCarthy" showing up here sometime that wants to bask in the limelight and he will attempt to follow those methods as set by Mr. McCarthy.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Johnson.

JOHNSON: Mr. President, I am still puzzled about my original inquiry. I don't see that the rights Mr. Rivers seeks to protect cannot be obtained under the law as it now stands because certainly there is no prohibition in the Constitution or in Section 6 that would prevent the legislature from setting up a set of rules of procedure for its own investigations and, after all, that is the problem, and I don't see that adding this language will strengthen or detract from that rule.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Ralph Rivers.

R. RIVERS: I thought I tried to clarify that in response to your inquiry when I said that it is now directed only to depriving a man of his life, liberty or property. We know that the congressional committees don't put a man in jail, and they don't take any property away from him, they just ruin him period. I don't think the present language reaches the problem we are trying to solve.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Buckalew.

BUCKALEW: I just want to caution the body that there is no point in voting on anything if we don't know what it means. I am going to vote against it. I am opposed to these legislative examining committees and I might add that the latest expression of the people of Alaska was to abolish the so-called Stringer Committee by an overwhelming vote, so the problem really does not exist in Alaska.

R. RIVERS: There is one other amendment that is being rewritten submitted by Mr. Riley, and I think this could bear a little thought and go over it and be held over. I am not too satisfied with the wording "due process" which has to do with judicial proceedings, although it could be applied in a broad way. I think we have to study that a little bit more. I would ask unanimous consent that this go over until such time as we take up the matter after lunch.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Ralph Rivers has asked unanimous consent that we hold this particular amendment in abeyance until after the noon recess. Is there objection? If there is no objection, the particular amendment then of Mr. Victor Rivers will be held in abeyance until the afternoon session. Mr. Kilcher.

KILCHER: I have an amendment.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the Sergeant at Arms bring Mr. Kilcher's proposed amendment forward. The Chief Clerk may read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 14, line 8, strike the comma and the words 'invasion or imminent peril' and substitute the words 'or actual and imminent invasion'."

PRESIDENT EGAN: What is your pleasure, Mr. Kilcher?

KILCHER: I move and ask unanimous consent that the amendment be adopted.

McCUTCHEON: I object.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Objection is heard. Is there a second to the motion?

BUCKALEW: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is open for discussion. Mr. Robertson.

ROBERTSON: May we have it read, Mr. President?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the Chief Clerk please read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 14, line 8, strike the comma and the words 'invasion or imminent peril' and substitute the words 'or actual and imminent invasion'."

PRESIDENT EGAN: Is there discussion on this proposed amendment? Mr. Taylor.

TAYLOR: Just for the purpose of clarification, I would like to state that I believe the two words "imminent" and "actual" are inconsistent. A thing cannot be imminent and actual at the same time. If it is imminent there is a possibility it will occur shortly. If it is actual, it is actually there. It can't be actual and imminent both.

KILCHER: I am afraid that might be the case. I was in doubt myself whether it should be "and actual or imminent", or whether it should be "and imminent or actual". I think that is a matter of Style and Drafting, that is the substance of it, the amendment. I admit that yesterday there was a similar amendment, not quite the same, had been on the floor, and I would like to read Section 14 as it would read as amendment. "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion, or actual and imminent invasion the public safety requires it." There are several state constitutions who never want their habeas corpus suspended. Several others have a saving clause that only in rebellion and invasion may it be suspended. I am afraid that this here Section 14 as it stands now, with the words "imminent peril" in it as a vague clause, that with many others if we don't think thoroughly we will open the road of invasion not of a foreign enemy but of an internal one. It is to me that the clause "imminent peril" in times of turmoil, political restlessness, and so on, can be abused and can be construed to mean almost anything. I am surprised in thinking over, I have given it quite a bit of thought since yesterday, in going over this in my mind, over Mr. Hellenthal's flowery but not quite logical speech of yesterday, where he worried not enough about the right of the people's habeas corpus, and today he seems to worry very much about people's privacy. Personally, I am worrying about both, but if I had a choice, I would worry more about the habeas corpus than about people's privacy in other matters. This imminent peril clause can be construed, and that is what we have to worry about. It can be construed to be almost everything and in case of rebellion, invasion, actual or imminent, that should be the only exceptions to the right of habeas corpus. We have solid precedent, but with all the other constitutions, the imminent peril clause is dangerous and should be stricken.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mrs. Sweeney.

SWEENEY: When Mr. Kilcher read Section 14, I am wondering if he put in some language that we did not adopt yesterday. I did not follow him. He was putting in words that he did not include in the amendment he was offering now. At least, I did not get them.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the Chief Clerk please read the section as it would appear if Mr. Kilcher's amendment were adopted.

CHIEF CLERK: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion, or actual and iminent invasion, the public safety requires it."

AWES: I wonder if Mr. Kilcher would amend his amendment by changing the word "and" to "or".

KILCHER: I think it would make better sense, and I ask unanimous consent.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Kilcher asks unanimous consent to change the word "and" to "or". If there is no objection, the proposed amendment to the amendment is ordered adopted. Mr. Hurley.

HURLEY: I have a distinct feeling that this section as it stands now is subject to two different interpretations and as it seeks to be amended, and I think with the "or" it definitely sets it up with one interpretation, although as I recall yesterday, we cleared that thing up and then voted down the amendment, but I certainly think something should be done to this to decide whether we want the writ of habeas corpus suspended in the event of imminent peril or only want it in the event of imminent peril of invasion. If I am convinced that this amendment takes care of it, I am in favor of it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Buckalew.

BUCKALEW: Mr. President, I can see now where the Committee left it open for some doubt. In Committee, the majority of the Committee understood that the courts in construing invasion and the expression "imminent peril" would have to consider the two together; "imminent peril" and "invasion" go together. Delegate Hellenthal is a lawyer and his interpretation of what this section meant was strange and novel to me, and I can see where the court could have the same interpretation as Mr. Hellenthal, and for that reason I am going to support Delegate Kilcher's amendment. I think it is an excellent amendment because I don't think that the right of habeas corpus should be suspended unless danger of invasion by a foreign enemy.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Miss Awes.

AWES: I would like to say that I agree with Mr. Buckalew, with what he has just said. When the Committee adopted this language it was personally my understanding that it meant just about what Mr. Kilcher's amendment says, but from what was said on the floor yesterday, evidently even the Committee was not in agreement, and I am still inclined to think that Section 14 could be interpreted, but I think Mr. Kilcher's amendment would clarify the matter and I am in favor of it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is, "Shall the proposed amendment as amended and offered by Mr. Kilcher be adopted by the Convention?" All those in favor of the adoption of the proposed amendment will signify by saying "aye", all opposed by saying "no". The Chief Clerk will call the roll. The shouting confuses the Chair very often.

Yeas: 30 - Armstrong, Awes, Boswell, Buckalew, Coghill, Collins, H. Fischer, V. Fischer, Gray, Harris, Hermann, Hilscher, Hurley, Kilcher, Knight, Lee, Longborg, McNees, Marston, Nerland, Nolan, Peratrovich, Poulsen, R. Rivers, V. Rivers, Smith, Stewart, Sundborg, VanderLeest, Mr. President.

Nays: 23 - Barr, Cross, Davis, Doogan, Hellenthal, Hinckel, Johnson, King, Laws, McCutcheon, McLaughlin, McNealy, Metcalf, Nordale, Reader, Riley, Robertson, Rosswog, Sweeney, Taylor, Walsh, White, Wien.

CHIEF CLERK: 30 yeas, 23 nays, and 2 absent.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The "yeas" have it and the proposed amendment is ordered adopted. Are there other amendments? Mr. Riley, your amendment has not been mimeographed?

RILEY: I prefer to put it off rather than to recess now to consider it again.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Are there other amendments other than to Section 11 at this time? Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: May I ask a question, Mr. President? It seems to me that this is the day in which the body by their rules have foreclosed themselves from introducing individual proposals.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The 8th is Sunday. The understanding of the Chair was that after we discovered that it was a Sunday that it would be held over until Monday. Is the Chair correct in recalling that?

UNIDENTIFIED DELEGATE: Yes.

GRAY: If there are no further amendments, I would like to have about ten minutes privilege of the floor.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection you may be granted the floor. The subject is on apportionment.

(Mr. Gray spoke after being granted the privilege of the

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Nerland.

NERLAND: Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have quite a long week coming up next week with the evening sessions, etc., in order to give the delegates time to take care of personal affairs in view of the fact they will not have evenings next week available, I will move and ask unanimous consent that we stand adjourned until 9 a.m. Monday.

TAYLOR: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is, "Shall the Convention stand adjourned until 9 a.m. Monday?" The Chief Clerk will call the roll.

Yeas: 17 - Barr, Boswell, Collins, Cross, H. Fischer, Johnson, McLaughlin, McNealy, McNees, Nerland, Nolan, Poulsen, R. Rivers, V. Rivers, Robertson, Taylor, Wien.

Nays: 36 - Armstrong, Awes, Buckalew, Coghill, Davis, Doogan, V. Fischer, Gray, Harris, Hellenthal, Hermann, Hilscher, Hinckel, Hurley, Kilcher, King, Knight, Laws, Lee, Londborg, McCutcheon, Marston, Metcalf, Nordale, Peratrovich, Reader, Riley, Rosswog, Smith, Stewart,.Sundborg, Sweeney, VanderLeest, Walsh, White, Mr. President.

Absent: 2 - Cooper, Emberg.)

LONDBORG: May I change my vote to "no".

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Londborg asks that his vote be changed to "no".

CHIEF CLERK: 17 yeas, 36 nays,and 2 absent.

PRESIDENT EGAN: So the "nays" have it and the Convention has not adjourned. Mr. Sundborg.

SUNDBORG: Mr. President, I move and ask unanimous consent that we recess until 1:30 p.m. today.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Sundborg moves and asks unanimous consent that the Convention recess until 1:30 p.m. today. Is there objection? If there is no objection, it is so ordered, and the Convention will stand at recess.

RECESS

PRESIDENT EGAN: The Convention will come to order. Mrs. Sweeney.

SWEENEY: Mr. President, in the report of the Juneau hearings in the section concerning apportionment, we heard from Mr. Curtis G. Shattuck and the report states he is submitting a written statement. The written statement just reached me and I am filing this with the Secretary of the Convention and copies have been distributed among the committee members on the Apportionment Committee so anyone who would like to see them can.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Thank you, Mrs. Sweeney. Would the Chief Clerk read the communication. Are there other communications to be read at this time? Would you desire that this be read or filed?

SWEENEY: No, just have it filed for the information of the delegates.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Miss Awes has requested that this information which was in her possession and it relates to this section that we will soon be on, if there is no objection it can be read. It is one page.

(The Chief Clerk read a memorandum from the Alaska

Department of Health regarding Section 1 of Proposal No. 7,

Health, Education and Welfare and Section 19 of Proposal

No. 5 on the Legislative Branch, prohibiting the expenditure of public funds for the direct aid or benefit of religious or private institutions.)

CHIEF CLERK: There are three attachments. Do you want those read?

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection, the communication can be filed.

RILEY: I think it would be of interest to the delegates to know the names of the institutions.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The Chief Clerk may read them.

(The Chief Clerk read the tables showing the hospitals receiving aid.)

PRESIDENT EGAN: The communication will be filed and it will be available to any delegates who wish to see it. Are there other communications?

ARMSTRONG: Mr. President, I have here a letter from Don Dafoe, Commissioner of Education, relative to the hearings in Juneau, particularly on the section on education, Section 1 on Health, Education, and Welfare, pertinent to public education. I shall file this with the Clerk, and if anyone cares to read it, I think it should be there for the record and then transmission to Miss Awes, Chairman of the Committee on Bill of Rights.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection, that is the way it will be handled. Mr. Buckalew.

BUCKALEW: I would like to have it read. We have read the other.

V. FISCHER: I would like to suggest that we defer the reading of this letter until we come to that particular proposal. We will probably get to it later today or Monday.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would that be in line with what you had in mind, Mr. Buckalew? Perhaps we might bring up both of these communications at that time.

BUCKALEW: I will concede.

PRESIDENT EGAN: We will proceed with Committee Proposal No. 7. The Chief Clerk will read the proposed amendment as offered by Mr. Riley?

RILEY: This is offered by a number of people whose names appear on the amendment. I might add that those of the members who have it before them, should have inserted four additional words to be in the form submitted. That is on the fourth line from the bottom, following the word "searched" there should be inserted "the information sought or".

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Riley, the proposal I have has no name on it.

RILEY: The names are Robertson, Davis, Hellenthal, R. Rivers, Mrs. Nordale and Riley.

PRESIDENT EGAN: What was the wording?

RILEY: Fourth line from the bottom following the word "searched" there should be inserted "the information sought or" and the word "and" is stricken.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection that will be included in the proposed amendment, and the Chief Clerk may read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 11. The right of the people to privacy and to be secure in their persons, houses and other property, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches, seizures, or other invasions of privacy shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, the information sought or the persons or things to be seized. Information secured in violation of this section shall not be admissible evidence in any judicial or other proceeding."

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Robertson, what is your pleasure? Mr. Riley, would you care to move the adoption of the amendment?

RILEY: Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment as read.

WHITE: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is open for discussion. Mr. Riley.

RILEY: Mr. President, I think that this amendment is not so positive in its terms, not so rigid in its terms, and that it is not so short term in its application or its knowledge of the particular problem that confronts us in its knowledge of technological advance that could perhaps put an absurd twist on a recital of various devices that we may be concerned about. I think as such that it meets many of the objections raised this morning in simply adapting Section 11 by extension of the right of privacy of the individual. The underscored matter on the amendment before you is all new matter. Otherwise, the section is as it appeared originally coming from the Committee.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Kilcher.

KILCHER: Mr. President, I don't think that the section has been improved very much. If anything, I think it has been further confused or a veil thrown over some of the facts that I pointed out this morning. In bunching together the invasion of the home for purposes of arrest and search for material things and in bunching together with it the obtaining of other information and not mentioning the devices, it does not simplify the matter which in itself would be commendable but it confuses the matter by putting together incompatibles in my opinion. This morning on the floor and in several recesses we have discussed this matter and not due consideration has been given to those among us delegates who said we would like to see the search warrants as of old applied to things that they have always applied for, but the specific search warrant for obtaining information should not by all means be treated by any other search warrants to be applied by anybody, district judge, inferior judge, etc. That should be treated separately, if permissible at all. Unless such an amendment will be offered, I think I can only vote against it and advise everybody else to do the same because there are hidden dangers in here. It makes it too easy in times of confusion, in times of public panic or mentality to exert pressure upon the lower courts, and it is tantamount to giving up our most precious civil rights.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Riley, if the Chair might just ask one question, and that would be in considering the wording, "or other invasions of privacy". Do you think that could or ever would be interpreted in the courts as meaning for instance taking a photograph of someone could be considered invading the rights of privacy?

RILEY: I would not think that any responsible court would think that a casual photograph or snapshot such as was suggested this morning would enter the picture here at all.

McCUTCHEON: Mr. President, on the contrary, if such a casual photograph shows a person to their derogation, it is an invasion of their private rights, and the courts have held on many occasions.

WHITE: I think "unreasonable" applies to searches or seizures or invasion of privacy.

BUCKALEW: Mr. President, I have only one thing to say about this amendment, and I am not being funny even though the flower of the Alaska Bar is supporting this proposed amendment. I challenge any lawyer that put his name on this to explain to this Convention the extent of this amendment. It is dangerous and ought to be voted down now.

GRAY: Mr. Chairman, I kind of feel the same way. I don't know what we have here. I hesitate fully to take 15 minutes and write a bill of rights. The previous established bill of rights we have read and read them. We know what they are, but I am hesitant of all this new material, this projection in the future. I read these things over, I am an ordinary person, we are all ordinary, we don't know what they mean. We are projecting in the future. It might be perfectly all right, but I would like to see more than 15 minutes deliberations on such a subject.

HELLENTHAL: I will try to answer any questions, Mr. Gray.

GRAY: What is the extent of privacy?

HELLENTHAL: The courts during the last 50 years have started a trend of decisions which has reached its culmination in defining the right of privacy. It is a well-defined right. Any unreasonable interference with your personal privacy, if you were, has been held illegal by the courts, and under this constitutional amendment, the practice would be sanctioned in the new State of Alaska. Privacy means precisely what it says, the right to be alone, to be secure in your home, you and your family; the right to be free from interference by unauthorized people, people looking over your transom, those people invade your right of privacy. People who photograph you without authority, they invade your right of privacy, people who break into your yards, climb over your fence, those people invade your right to privacy. Courts have had no difficulty in defining this right. Now it is true, you could ask someone what is an unreasonable seizure and people could spend hours sitting and citing examples of what were unreasonable seizures. I don't think they could tell you all of them. Each one depends on the particular facts of the unreasonable seizure, but courts have had no trouble with that. For 200 years unreasonable seizures have been defined as the need arose by the courts. No one has been concerned about it at all. As the need arises the definitions are amplified and the same thing would happen here. The courts are the protectors of our liberties. We have had faith in our courts for 200 years. They have not let us down and they won't in the future.

BUCKALEW: Question.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Doogan.

DOOGAN: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate but I feel that I have to make a statement again. I am wondering what this group is thinking of. What do they mean when they mean the invasion of privacy. It appears to me that most of the people that are worried about their invasion of privacy are worried because of some overt act that they may commit. Myself, I have no worry about there being any invasion of my privacy because at the moment I don't intend that I am going to do anything that is going to cause the law to come into my place and make a search or a seizure. However, if something does happen, they are welcome to come in. To me it is just exactly like being caught speeding. There is nothing wrong with speeding as long as you get away with it, but you are against the marshal that arrests you because he caught you. It seems to me we are beginning to beg the question quite a little on all of this argument that goes on. As long as we provide for the fundamental rights in the constitution, let us leave it at that and let's put some faith in our legislature and in our police officers and any other administrative officials that we might have to see that we are protected.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Davis.

DAVIS: Mr. President, in answer to what Mr. Doogan has said, I consider the right to privacy a fundamental right. That is one of the fundamental rights, and I intend, so far as I am concerned at least, that if this amendment is adopted, that is going to try to get at the same problem that we tried to reach this morning when we were talking about wire tapping and use of other devices to invade a person's home, I can't agree with Mr. Doogan that I am going to leave everything to the police and I can't agree with him that only people who expect to do something wrong are going to object to having their privacy invaded. The difficulty is that a police officer in a police state figures that he is carrying out the will of the state and the rights of the individual don't matter and that is what I am trying to get away from here. Now it is very true that as of today our police cannot invade our private lives to the extent that they do in a totalitarian state, but that is what we are trying to preserve. It is only a question of time if police officials or government officials can eavesdrop on what is done in a person's home in the privacy of his home. It's only a question of time until we don't have any liberties left, one step after another. Eventually everything will be in the hands of the government and our whole theory of government here is that the people are bigger than the government and the people control the government and the whole tendency of the government is to try to invade those rights little by little and each case the invasion is made for a proper purpose supposedly. We talk about kidnapping. We talk about subversives. We talk about that sort of thing and we are all against it, but what we don't realize is that when we nibble away here and there, after awhile there is no liberty left. I consider that the right to privacy in a person's home, in his papers, in his effects, is just as much a fundamental right as the right to free speech. Now certainly, had this problem been before the framers of the United States Constitution they would have had to deal with it because they were conscious of searches and seizures that had been made by the King's men prior to the Revolution. That is why they were so conscious of the right to assemble, the right to petition, the right not to have their persons or their homes violated. Now, as was pointed out this morning, under the present state, a scientific development, anybody including government officials, can invade my home and your home without even coming near the home. That is something that was not envisioned at the time the Federal Constitution was adopted, and it is something that we should protect against now.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Buckalew.

BUCKALEW: I want to say one more thing. I feel that I should say it and I don't believe that the proponents of this amendment have answered the question in my opinion. As a lawyer, it completely destroys the protection provided us by the Fourth Amendment of the Federal Constitution and our Section 11 was extracted almost in toto from the Federal Constitution. This is a novel innovation that allows police officers to get search warrants to secure information, as I read it, and you talk about playing in the hands of a totalitarian state, you are not nibbling at it, you are taking one great big gulp and handing the people's privacy to persons in authority.

MARSTON: May I ask Mr. Davis a question?

PRESIDENT EGAN: You may, Mr. Marston.

MARSTON: Does this Proposal No. 7 protect people as you have talked on here?

DAVIS: Mr. Marston, in my opinion it does.

BUCKALEW: Mr. President, could I ask Mr. Davis a question?

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection you may rise and ask the question.

BUCKALEW: Mr. Davis, under this article in your opinion does it give police officers permission and authority to tap a wire for example for any type of crime if they make a search showing to the court?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Davis, do you care to answer that?

DAVIS: Well, I will try to answer it. I think probably it would if they made the proper showing to the court and if they got the proper warrant, the same as the same individual can have his house invaded upon a showing and the issuance of a warrant by the proper court.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Kilcher.

KILCHER: If this amendment here is defeated, where are we at then? I am getting confused.

PRESIDENT EGAN: We are back to the original Section 11 if this amendment would be defeated. Mr. Harris.

HARRIS: Mr. President, I would like to point out one thing I think we are overlooking here. We keep talking about searches and seizures. I would like to point out that that is one house, when you tap a telephone in one house you have tapped every telephone in any place in the United States that have called that house. You are not tapping one phone but all of them.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. McNees.

McNEES: I find the same fault with this amendment that I have found with most of the others presented on this same section. I had no particular quarrel originally with the section as it came out of Committee. However, I do feel there is a certain amount of legislation written into it. I am wondering what the thinking of the Committee would be, also I am asking the same question of the proposers of this particular amendment now, what would your particular thinking be if we terminated this particular amendment on the 4th line following the word "violated" and inserted a clause "except as provided specifically by law". The same thing could be done to the original article following the word "violated" giving the same effect that is apparent in my thinking. I feel that here we are trying to legislate against the many evils of our private affairs where perhaps we should, if we are going to legislate at all, legislate specifically against particular evils or violations. Therefore, I would say leave it up to the legislature to provide the specific times and means, the particular instance if you please, whereby the search, the seizure, the violation of a private individual's rights might be made.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Miss Awes.

AWES: Mr. McNees asked what the Committee thought of the suggestion which he had to stop after the word "violated" and add "except as provided by law". As I recall, Section 11 was taken word for word from the Federal Constitution. That particular section in the Federal Constitution has stood for quite a number of years, it has been interpreted by the courts. We know what it means and as long as it means what we want it to say, I think it would be just as well to use it and not change it. Also, I think there is objection to Mr. McNees' section because if you say "except as provided by law", I think that phrase is broad enough to give the legislature authority to pass such exceptions that you would practically nullify the section. You might as well not have it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Hurley.

HURLEY: Mr. President, how I yearn for the days when I had simple decisions to make, such as if the voters should be 17, 18 or 19. This morning I was against the amendment that was submitted, primarily for the reason that the mentioning of these electronic devices frightened me. In going over this thing as carefully as I have had time to do, I do not share Mr. Buckalew's fears and I think that it is a proper recognition of a privacy which was not recognized in days gone by, and I therefore support the amendment.

BUCKALEW: Question.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no further discussion, the question is, "Shall the proposed amendment as offered by Mr. Riley and other delegates be adopted by the convention?"

JOHNSON: May we have a roll call?

PRESIDENT EGAN: The Chief Clerk will call the roll.

Yeas: 27 - Armstrong, Coghill, Cross, Davis, V. Fischer, Hellenthal, Hermann, Hilscher, Hinckel, Hurley, King, Marston, Nerland, Nordale, Peratrovich, Poulsen, Reader, Riley, R. Rivers, V. Rivers, Robertson, Rosswog, Smith, Stewart, Sundborg, Walsh, White.

Nays: 21 - Awes, Boswell, Buckalew, Collins, Doogan, Gray, Harris, Johnson, Kilcher, Knight, Laws, Lee, Londborg, McCutcheon, McLaughlin, McNees, Metcalf, Nolan, Sweeney, VanderLeest, Mr. President.

Absent: 7 - Barr, Cooper, Emberg, H. Fischer, McNealy, Taylor, Wien).

CHIEF CLERK: 27 yeas, 21 nays, and 7 absent.

PRESIDENT EGAN: So the "yeas" have it and the proposed amendment is ordered adopted. The Chair would like to state at this time that it is not in good courtesy for other delegates, when a delegate's name is called, to attempt to tell him how to vote and the Chair has noted that on several occasions, and undoubtedly it at times confuses delegates to have other delegates do that thing, and the Chair would request that that not happen again, if possible to avoid it. Are there other amendments to Section 11? The Chief Clerk may read the proposed amendment.

V. RIVERS: Mr. Chairman, this is a revision of the amendment submitted before recess.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of the people to be protected from unjust abuse in the course of legislative investigations shall not be infringed, to this end the legislature shall prescribe adequate investigative procedures.'"

DOOGAN: Point of order. It seems to me that that is identical to the question we have already acted upon.

PRESIDENT EGAN: We held it over, Mr. Doogan, as the Chair recalls. This was a new amendment, was it not, Mr. Victor Rivers? Would you ask unanimous consent that your original amendment be withdrawn?

V. RIVERS: I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the original amendment and substitute this in its place in lieu of the other one.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers asks unanimous consent to withdraw the original amendment and substitute this amendment in its place in lieu thereof. Mr. Boswell.

BOSWELL: Could we have this read more slowly, Mr. President?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Is there objection to withdrawing the original amendment as proposed by Mr. Victor Rivers? If not, that amendment is ordered withdrawn. The Chief Clerk may read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of the people to be protected from unjust abuse in the course of legislative investigations shall not be infringed, to this end the legislature shall prescribe adequate investigative procedures.'"

PRESIDENT EGAN: What is your pleasure, Mr. Victor Rivers?

V. RIVERS: I will move that the amendment be adopted.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers moves that the amendment be adopted. Is there a second to the motion?

R. RIVERS: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is open for discussion. Mr. Ralph Rivers.

R. RIVERS: The last sentence there is to this end that the legislature shall prescribe adequate procedures. There should be a period ahead of the word "to".

V. RIVERS: I will accede to that.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection, that correction is ordered made. Mr. Ralph Rivers.

R. RIVERS: Mr. President, I consulted with some of the members of the bar in regard to the expression "due process" as it would apply to the legislature. We decided that "due process" actually focused squarely upon judicial proceedings, and it would not be applicable to a legislative operation. You would not have a judge sitting there passing upon the admissibility of evidence and making the other determinations that enter into, generally speaking, a type of hearing or proceedings which is characterized by the matters that are brought before a court of law. What we are trying to get at is that the legislature in the exercise of its powers to investigate could very well set up a code of ethics or rules of procedure which would adequately protect principles and witnesses from abusive treatment, such as has occurred in the past. We cannot, outside of leaving it to the legislature to prescribe such adequate proceedings, we cannot spell it our here. We can flag it. We can tell them to treat the citizens properly in a legislative investigating proceedings, so Mr. Rivers gave up the idea of trying to extend the due process to legislative proceedings and endeavored to simply highlight the point by asking that the legislature set up proper and adequate procedures to safeguard witnesses and principals against abusive treatment in legislative procedures. I might say that after the McCarthy hearings last year Congress itself appointed a committee or in some other manner initiated steps to set up some rules and ethics for the conduct of Congressional hearings. I don't know what happened to that, but I know that was Congress' thought and that is what we are trying to flag for our legislature here.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Hellenthal.

HELLENTHAL: Mr. Rivers, would it perhaps not be better to couch the proposed amendment in affirmative language and recite it as a right that, in other words, the right of a person to fair and just treatment rather than put in the negative provision?

R. RIVERS: I did not help Mr. Victor Rivers draft this. I refer the question to Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: I used the term "unjust abuses" and it would seem to me that perhaps Mr. Hellenthal's suggestion has merit. I used the term, I don't remember exactly the term, "The right of the people to be protected from unjust abuse in the course of legislative investigations shall not be infringed".

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Hellenthal.

HELLENTHAL: One more question. As a directive as to the scope of the amendment, it seems to me, I may be wrong, that there are also executive investigations which likewise, at which the witness should be treated fairly and justly.

V. RIVERS: Mr. President, I will ask for a two-minute recess.

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection, the Convention will stand at recess for two minutes.

RECESS

PRESIDENT EGAN: The Convention will come to order. Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: Mr. President, I have now placed the matter in the affirmative in a slightly different form. I will ask unanimous consent to substitute this amendment in lieu of the one previously discussed. The substance is the same.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers asks unanimous consent to substitute a new amendment in place of the original amendment. Is there objection? If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

STEWART: I did not hear what was said.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers asks unanimous consent that a new amendment be substituted for the original amendment. If there is no objection, it is so ordered and the Chief Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed.'"

V. RIVERS: Mr. President, I will move for the adoption of the amendment.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers moves that the amendment be adopted. Is there a second to the motion?

SMITH: I second the motion.

AWES: May we have that read once more?

PRESIDENT EGAN: The Chief Clerk will please read the proposed amendment.

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed.'"

PRESIDENT EGAN: Is there discussion of the proposed amendment? Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: Mr. President, I am merely trying to effectuate the statement I made this morning in regard to past experiences that we have had in the later years at least in the matter of legislative and governmental investigations. I think this covers it and would flag, as Ralph has said, the legislature to take the necessary action and set up adequate procedures to see that their rights under this clause were protected.

BUCKALEW: Mr. President, I feel sort of constrained to speak on this subject. It seems like when I do, it almost insures its passage. In my opinion this article is completely unenforceable and it has no meaning in law. It can afford no protection to anybody before these legislative and examining committees. What does it mean? Are we going to follow the rules of evidence as we know in our trial courts? It is a matter for the legislature, for the voters, and there is no way I know of in this short article that you can protect a citizen from some fireball, or whatever you want to call him, a legislator that is running one of these examining committees. The damage is going to be done, and then you are going to get a political question more or less before the courts and the courts are going to have to determine whether he had a fair hearing so to speak before this so-called committee and there is no way that anyone can mandamus the legislature to provide certain rules. I think it is just going to clutter up the bill of rights and my opinion is that it is just a lot of gibberish and is completely unenforceable and should be defeated.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Smith.

SMITH: I think Mr. Buckalew has pointed out very effectively how this very provision can be made effective. The fact that the legislature, as he has put it, once sets up the rules, or even if there should appear to be a violation of this particular provision, then once the courts have taken the matter in hand and made a ruling of any kind, then they have definitely established something under this provision.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Johnson.

JOHNSON: Mr. President, well, I am of the same opinion now as I was this morning regarding the first proposal. It seems to me that it is entirely unnecessary. A great deal of question was raised during the argument as to the meaning of the words, "due process of law". Well, many many years ago the Supreme Court of the United States settled it by pointing out that by the Fifth Amendment it was introduced into the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the national government and by the Fourteenth as a guarantee against encroachment upon an acknowledged right of citizenship by the legislatures of the states. Well, under that language certainly "due process of law" not only includes the procedure in our courts but would include any procedure involving the acknowledged right of citizenship, so I don't see but what there is under the proposal as it was originally framed by the Committee and as it is now contained in Section 6, I don't see why the very same protection cannot be afforded without the amendment, and certainly as Mr. Ralph Rivers points out, when there seems to have been an abuse created in a senatorial investigation, Congress immediately took steps to correct it, but it did not take an amendment to the Constitution to do that. The Congress operated under the exact language to correct that abuse by passing suitable legislation, and I think the legislature could certainly do the same thing.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Stewart.

STEWART: Mr. President, my recollection was that that abuse continued for several years before there was even an attempt to correct it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Victor Rivers.

V. RIVERS: Mr. President, in closing this discussion, I just want to say that I have sat in the legislature and on quite a number of investigations. Certain of those groups had fairly orderly procedures that were set up as they went along. Oftentimes it took the form originally of an executive session at which the information was discussed in a preliminary manner. There was no pattern set to follow, but I imagine there was no pattern set to follow when our founding fathers adopted the words "due process". I can look around any lawyer's office and see shelf after shelf of books in which they tried to effectuate, no doubt, the meaning of the term "due process". I can see how in the legislative body after the experiences we have gone through, that there will be revised and improved procedures for protecting the rights of individuals in investigative procedures of this kind, investigations by the legislature and the executive. I don't say you'd have a body of court of law set up, but I imagine that in due time there would be a body of precedence set up by which succeeding legislatures would learn one from the other the best method in which these matters had been handled before and how they could be improved in future handling. It seems to me that we are laying a cornerstone here to flag them and to bring to their attention the fact that we feel there has been an abuse of this legislative investigative power and asking them in a nice way to be sure that in a fair and just manner the abuses are not continued further. It seems to me the least we can do is to bring this forcibly to their attention and try and start this matter of investigative procedures on a healthy track.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Would the Chief Clerk please read the proposed amendment?

CHIEF CLERK: "Section 6, page 2, line 23, add to the section the following sentence: 'The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed.'"

PRESIDENT EGAN: The question is, "Shall the proposed amendment as offered by Mr. Victor Rivers be adopted by the Convention?" All those in favor of the adoption of the proposed amendment will signify by saying "aye", all opposed by saying "no". The "ayes" have it and the proposed amendment is ordered adopted. Are there other amendments to the article? Mr. Harris.

HARRIS: Mr. President, may I have the floor on a matter of personal privilege?

PRESIDENT EGAN: If there is no objection, Mr. Harris, you may have the floor on the matter of personal privilege.

(Mrs. Harris spoke on a matter of personal privilege.)

PRESIDENT EGAN: Are there other amendments to sections of the proposal on the bill of rights? If not, we will proceed to the section of the article that deals with questions of health, education and welfare. Mr. Victor Fischer.

V. FISCHER: I would like to make an inquiry, Mr. President. This is the second instance where the same committee has prepared two separate articles for the constitution. Would it not be a good idea to separate them henceforth both for purposes of engrossment and enrollment as well as for purposes of work by Style and Drafting and by the Convention in third reading, since they are proposed as separate articles of the constitution?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Fischer, it would take a complete change in the title and it would entail, as it were, a lot of mimeographing, a lot of work, and you would have to waive that in lieu of what we would feel would be the cumbersomeness of the present procedure, so you would run into a lot of work if you did it. Just how it happened in this form, it would entail more and we have it before us in this form. Mr. Doogan.

DOOGAN: I thought it was my understanding that when these matters got to Style and Drafting that it was the prerogative of Style and Drafting to take various sections and move them around in placement in regular order in the constitution. Is that not correct?

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Doogan, in a manner all right is what Style and Drafting will do, whether it applies to this particular thing, of course, the articles will follow each other probably in this case. Mr. Fischer.

V. FISCHER: Mr. President, the only thing I had in mind was possibly simplification so things could move a little faster through the remaining process. If it means the mimeographing of even one extra page, I am not in favor of it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Sundborg.

SUNDBORG: Mr. President, do I recall that several days ago when we had a similar double-barreled proposal that by consent, the first part when we had finished with it, went to the Engrossment and Enrollment Committee so they could start work on it?

PRESIDENT EGAN: You are correct, Mr. Sundborg.

SUNDBORG: If there are no more amendments to the preamble and bill of rights, I would ask unanimous consent that that process be followed with that part of it.

PRESIDENT EGAN: It went with this provision that if after we finish the article that is in the same proposal, if at that time anyone desired to amend the proposed article, that if it was sent to Engrossment and Enrollment before we were through with this, it would still be open for amendment.

SUNDBORG: With that proviso, I would like to make that request.

LONDBORG: Would there be any necessity of it? They can start work on it at their desk any time they want to.

PRESIDENT EGAN: In this manner, Mr. Londborg, the chairman of the committee could then call the committee together. It would be official. Mrs. Sweeney.

SWEENEY: Before we get onto this new section in Committee Proposal No. 7, I would like to move that we adjourn until 9 o'clock Monday morning rather than get started on something else. I so move.

V. FISCHER: I second the motion.

PRESIDENT EGAN: It has been moved and seconded that the Convention stand adjourned until 9 a.m. on Monday. The question is, "Shall the Convention stand adjourned until 9 a.m. on Monday?" The Chief Clerk will call the roll. Mr. Kilcher.

KILCHER: Point of order. There is quite a good possibility that notice might want to be given for reconsideration which had been, discussion leading up to that possibility discussions were expected to be held at the normal recess of 3 o'clock.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Kilcher, your notice of reconsideration is in order if you so desire to make it, even now after the motion to adjourn has been placed, if the question has not been put. Do you wish to make it?

KILCHER: What I am trying to drive at is this, in a short recess awhile ago the possibility has arisen that further discussion at the normal recess at 3:30 would lead up to a sound solid reconsideration if it is cut off now would be impossible.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Kilcher, that is up to the delegates. We have the motion to adjourn. However, under our rules, a motion of reconsideration or a reconsideration can be considered even at this time even if it is pending. Now, if the Convention voted to adjourn, it would cut off that reconsideration if you did not make it now.

KILCHER: Would a motion for a short recess be in order now?

PRESIDENT EGAN: No, it would not. Mr. Hurley.

HURLEY: In order to allay the fears, having voted on the prevailing side of the question of amending Section 11 by the adoption of Mr. Riley's amendment, I ask now that I be allowed to reconsider.

PRESIDENT EGAN: Mr. Hurley serves notice of his reconsideration of his vote on the adoption of the amendment to Section 11. The question is, "Shall the Convention stand adjourned until 9 a.m. on Monday?" The Chief Clerk will call the roll.

Yeas: 21 - Armstrong, Boswell, Coghill, Collins, Cross, Doogan, Harris, Johnson, Londborg, McLaughlin, Metcalf, Nerland, Poulsen, Reader, R. Rivers, V. Rivers, Robertson, Stewart, Sundborg, Sweeney, VanderLeest.

Nays: 26 - Awes, Buckalew, Davis, V. Fischer, Gray, Hellenthal, Hermann, Hinckel, Hurley, Kilcher, King, Knight, Laws, Lee, McCutcheon, McNees, Marston, Nolan, Nordale, Peratrovich, Riley, Rosswog, Smith, Walsh, White, Mr. President.

Absent: 8 - Barr, Cooper, Emberg, H. Fischer, Hilscher, McNealy, Taylor, Wien.)

CHIEF CLERK: 21 yeas, 26 nays, and 8 absent.

PRESIDENT EGAN: The "nays" have it and so the motion has failed of adoption. The Convention will come to order. Mr. Sundborg.

Dear Senator Green,

In two letters dated September 19, 2008 and September 26, 2008, you received notification from my office discussing the status of the subpoenas issued by the Senate Judiciary committee. These notifications were required under Alaska Statute 24.25.030 after many of the subpoenaed individuals failed to appear before the committee.

The purpose of this letter is to inform you that some subpoenaed individuals voluntarily provided answers to written interrogatories that related to the Legislative Council investigation. Their answers were received on Wednesday, October 8, 2008, two days before the report was released.

The individuals who submitted written interrogatories are:

1. Todd Palin
2. Randy Ruaro
3. Dianne Kiesel
4. Annette Kreitzer
5. Nicki Neal
6. Brad Thompson
7. Michael Nizich
8. Kris Perry
9. Janice Mason
10. Ivy Frye

This letter is not required by Alaska Statute 24.25.030, but I think it is only appropriate for the record to acknowledge the written responses that were provided during the final days of the investigation.

Sincerely,

Senator Hollis French

September 26, 2008

Dear Senator Green,

On September 12, 2008, the Senate Judiciary Committee authorized the issuance of fourteen subpoenas; thirteen were for witnesses and the last was for Mr. Frank Bailey's cell phone records. Senate President Lyda Green concurred in that action, thus satisfying the statutory requirements of Alaska Statute 24.25.010(b). The purpose of the subpoenas was to assist Mr. Stephen Branchflower in his investigation into the events and circumstances surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan.

Last week I reported to you on the status of these subpoenas. At that time, six of the witness subpoenas had been served and seven had not been served. Last week's report covered the six witness subpoenas that were served, and the document subpoena for Frank Bailey's cell phone records. Today I am reporting on the seven subpoenas that were not served.

The subpoenas that had not been served as of last Friday, September 19, 2008 were for Ms. Dianne Kiesel, Ms. Annette Kreitzer, Ms. Nicki Neal, Mr. Brad Thompson, Mr. Michael Nizich, Ms. Kris Perry and Ms. Janice Mason. Taking them in the order listed:

Ms. Dianne Keisel, was served with her subpoena on September 23, 2008, in Dutch Harbor, Alaska.

Ms. Annette Kreitzer was served with her subpoena on September 21, 2008, in Juneau, Alaska.

Ms. Nicki Neal was served with her subpoena on September 21, 2008, in Juneau, Alaska.

Mr. Brad Thompson was served with his subpoena on September 21, 2008, in Juneau, Alaska.

Mr. Michael Nizich was served with his subpoena on September 21, 2008, in Juneau, Alaska.

Ms. Kris Perry was served with her subpoena on September 23, 2008, in Wasilla, Alaska.

Ms. Janice Mason was served with her subpoena on September 21, 2008, in Juneau, Alaska.

All of the subpoenas listed above commanded the witness to appear here today, September 26, 2008, at 10:00 a.m., to give testimony to the Judiciary Committee. None of the witnesses have appeared.

Alaska Statute 24.25.030 sets out our procedure in this particular situation. The statute reads as follows: "If a witness neglects or refuses to obey a subpoena ... the senate or the house of representatives may by resolution entered on its journal commit the witness for contempt. If contempt is committed before a committee, the committee shall report the contempt to the senate or house of representatives, as the case may be, for such action as may be considered necessary." Please consider this letter as satisfying the dictates of the statute.

Sincerely,

Senator Hollis French

Re: Your September 19, 2008 Letter

Dear Senator Elton:

I understand the frustration expressed in your letter of September 19. But your expression of that frustration fails to account for the fact that, while lawyers may advise their clients, those clients must decide whether, for example, to appear and testify voluntarily. The Department of Law represents seven individual state employees, each of whom decided not to testify voluntarily under threat of subpoena. Given the circumstances, their choice is understandable.

I do not, of course, believe that responding to properly issued subpoenas is voluntary. But I do believe that subpoenaed persons have the right to challenge the validity of the subpoenas when that validity is suspect. We have stated our legal concerns about the validity of the Senate Judiciary Committee's subpoenas in other correspondence, most recently in the September 19 letter to Senator Wielechowski that you also received. We have also filed in superior court, on behalf of our seven subpoenaed clients, a complaint for declaratory relief, seeking a declaration on the validity of the subpoenas.

Contrary to the media reports you cited, the Department of Law did not contract with Mr. Van Flein because my contact with former Commissioner Monegan about Trooper Wooten created a conflict of interest. I have confirmed with bar counsel that my contact with former Commissioner Monegan did not create a conflict of interest.

Finally, as you noted in your letter, I did not respond to your questions concerning specific advice and conversations. As I hope you can appreciate, my obligations to my clients prevent me from disclosing such information.

Senate Judiciary Committee

September 19, 2008

Dear Senator Green,

On September 12, 2008, the Senate Judiciary Committee authorized the issuance of fourteen subpoenas; thirteen were for witnesses and the last was for Mr. Frank Bailey's cell phone records. By your signature on those subpoenas, you concurred in that action, thus satisfying the statutory requirements of Alaska Statute 24.25.010(b). The purpose of the subpoenas was to assist Mr. Stephen Branchflower in his investigation into the events and circumstances surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan.

Since that time, six of the witness subpoenas were served and seven were not. The subpoenas that were served commanded the witnesses to appear at 10:00 am today, September 19th, 2008, before the Judiciary Committee. Subpoenas were served on attorneys representing Mr. Frank Bailey, Ms. Ivy Frye, Mr. Todd Palin, Mr. Randy Ruaro, and Ms. Murlene Wilkes. By an agreement between Mr. Branchflower and Mr. Bailey's attorney, a copy of the sworn statement that Mr. Bailey gave to Mr. Thomas Van Flein has been given to Mr. Branchflower and will satisfy Mr. Bailey's obligation to comply with his subpoena. Mr. John Bitney was served personally by Mr. Branchflower and Mr. Bitney, accompanied by his attorney, elected to give a statement to Mr. Branchflower in his office, thus satisfying Mr. Bitney's obligation under his subpoena. The subpoena for Mr. Bailey's cell phone records was served on ACS, Inc., and that company has turned the records over to Mr. Branchflower. Finally, Ms. Wilkes, through her attorney, has agreed to give a statement to Mr. Branchflower this afternoon, thus satisfying her obligations under her subpoena.

Ms. Frye, Mr. Palin, and Mr. Ruaro, all having been served with subpoenas through their legal counsel, have neither given statements, nor appeared today in compliance with their subpoenas. Alaska Statute 24.25.030 sets out our procedure in this particular situation. The statute reads as follows: "If a witness neglects or refuses to obey a subpoena ... the senate or the house of representatives may by resolution entered on its journal commit the witness for contempt. If contempt is committed before a committee, the committee shall report the contempt to the senate or house of representatives, as the case may be, for such action as may be considered necessary." Please consider this letter as satisfying the dictates of the statute.

Subpoenas were not served on Ms. Dianne Kiesel, Ms. Annette Kreitzer, Ms. Nicki Neal, Mr. Brad Thompson, Mr. Michael Nizich, Ms. Kris Perry and Ms. Janice Mason. The reason that those seven subpoenas were not served is because Mr. Branchflower relied on the written offer of cooperation that Assistant Attorney General Michael Barnhill issued in a letter to Chairman of the Legislative Council Committee, Senator Kim Elton, dated September 9, 2008. Senator Elton accepted the offer in a letter sent to Mr. Barnhill on Friday, September 12, 2008, which was the same day the Senate Judiciary Committee issued its subpoenas. Mr. Barnhill spoke to Mr. Branchflower late that Friday afternoon, to begin scheduling depositions.

The next day, Saturday, September 13, 2008, Mr. Barnhill sent an e-mail to Mr. Branchflower, confirming the details of their phone conversation. The e-mail in relevant part reads as follows:

> Steve - this shall confirm our phone conversation of late yesterday afternoon.
> As a consequence of Sen. Elton's letter to me of 9/12/08, Law agrees that the depositions of the four Department of Administration employees, Annette Kreitzer, Dianne Kiesel, Nicki Neal and Brad Thompson, may proceed. Law appreciates the Legislative Council's willingness to agree with our interpretation of the laws governing confidential state employee personnel files as set forth in our letter of 9/9/08.
> Each of these four individuals has confirmed that they wish to proceed with their deposition without service of a subpoena, and that they have elected to have representation from Law at their deposition. Law will provide that representation.
> As I explained during our call, Tom van Flein requested on Friday (9/12) that the Department of Law resume representation of these employees in the Office of the Governor who have not sought private counsel. At this point, my understanding is those employees include Mike Nizich, Kris Perry and Janice Mason. When you return on Tuesday, please give me a call and I will report on the status of Law's representation of those employees within the Office of the Governor who have not secured private counsel and their availability for deposition.

That cooperation agreement was abrogated by the Tuesday, September 16, 2008, letter from Attorney General Talis Colberg. The Judiciary Committee's, and Mr. Branchflower's, reliance on the two written promises of the Department of Law is regrettable. Because the subpoenas were not served, there is no legal basis upon which to take any action today regarding them. The original, unserved subpoenas are still in the hands of Mr. Branchflower. He will begin the process of serving them on the seven remaining witnesses, with a return date of Friday, September 26, 2008.

Sincerely,

Senator Hollis French

Talis Colberg, Attorney General
Department of Law

Dear Attorney General:

I'm in receipt of your letter dated today. I expect that continued dialogue can lead to a quick resolution of the impasse.

I want to begin by thanking you for your straight-forward acknowledgement that I met the condition set by you on interpretation of law. I thank you also for your additional acknowledgement that you recognize that my acceptance constituted a deal that allowed state employees to testify.

You then note in today's letter: "However, a new circumstance intervened—supporting the Governor's decision to cooperate only with the Personnel Board investigation." That is a shorter reiteration of your statement in the September 16 letter. On September 16, you wrote:

> "As state employees, our clients have taken an oath to uphold the Alaska Constitution and for that reason they respect the legislature's desire to carry out an investigation in support of its law-making powers. However, our clients are also loyal employees subject to the supervision of the governor. Your subpoena places them in the difficult position of choosing either to support the Governor's decision to cooperate only with the Personnel Board investigation or to voluntarily comply with the subpoenas issued by the committee."

My short response is: 1) I hope you are not asserting that being a loyal employee subject to the supervision of the governor is of equal weight to the constitution or the rule of law; 2) I trust you really don't want to suggest to folks who are subject to the Department of Law's power to subpoena that response to any subpoena is voluntary in nature; and 3) I hope you have weighed the consequences of cancelling this written agreement and its potential chilling effect upon the willingness of other parties in the vast array of complex civil and criminal matters you deal with (if you can break this deal, can you break their deals?).

I'm very puzzled also by any argument that suggests you had to break the deal because a "new circumstance intervened." That circumstance, you say in today's letter, is "supporting the Governor's decision to cooperate only with the Personnel Board investigation." A September 2 press release from the law firm Clapp, Peterson, Van Flein, Tiemessen, Thorsness quotes the governor saying: "(L)ast night, I initiated a proceeding before the state personnel board because that is the agency charged by law with addressing the complaints about hiring and firing matters." The complaint filed by the governor the night before, on September 1, says the personnel board "is the only body in Alaska with the legal authority to do so."

So, prior to the consummation of our deal on September 12, you knew she felt the board was the agency she wanted to investigate the circumstances surrounding the dismissal of Commissioner Walt Monegan and you knew she was alleging the board was the only entity with the legal authority.

Your knowing, 11 days prior to consummating the agreement with the Legislative Council, that the governor felt the board was the only entity with legal authority makes it difficult to assert, as you do, that you need to break the deal because after the deal the governor decided to cooperate only with the board's investigation. Let me be absolutely clear—you made the deal 11 days after the governor made the claim that only the board had authority. Why would you argue you had to break a deal because that "new" circumstance intervened?

It's important I note here that I also disagree strongly with any assertion by the executive branch that limits the legislature's power in this instance. Our legal authority is clear.

At this point, I must raise a difficult issue so that I can better understand the nature and scope our correspondence. The Anchorage Daily News reported September 2 the Department of Law hired Thomas Van Flein "because Attorney General Talis Colberg has a potential conflict of interest and shouldn't represent the governor, Van Flein said Monday." The national news service Bloomberg reported September 11 that "Attorney General Talis Colberg, a Palin appointee, recused himself." And NBC news September 1 reported the "Department of Law had a potential conflict of interest, because Mr. Colberg, Attorney General Colberg, made contact with Mr. Monegan about Trooper Wooten, Van Flein said."

Given the analysis by Mr. Van Flein, an attorney first hired by the Department of Law, and given the reporting by Bloomberg—which is unchallenged as far as I know—that you recused yourself, I'm confused when you refer to the state employees in both the September 16 letter and the September 19 letter as "our clients."

I ask for clarification of your status without challenging your ability to fairly represent state employees. I understand that serving at the pleasure of the governor and statements made through the media by others can morph into extremely unfair character challenges. I have a visceral understanding of how difficult that can be given that I'm accused of bias in this matter. In short, I feel your pain but do think it is important to understand what may have changed since the comments about your conflict of interest were made.

Finally, I note that my letter dated September 17 asked for further information on two points: "when and where the governor, as you note in your letter, 'so strongly stated that the subpoenas issued are of questionable validity;'" and for any advice you may have given her that would raise a question of the validity of subpoenas. I trust you have set in motion a review of these two explicit requests and hope you can respond quickly.

Re: Your September 17, 2008 Letter

Dear Senator Elton:

We sincerely appreciate your clarification of a very important concern of this office—settling on the meaning and requirements of AS 39.25.080, which was being interpreted (wrongly in our view) to prohibit certain employees in the executive branch from viewing state personnel records. We were troubled by exposing Department of Administration employees to interviews with Mr. Branchflower when we were hearing misrepresentations in the media about the law's requirements with implicit threats that some of these employees may have criminal exposure. We communicated to you that once this point was clarified the four employees we then represented were willing and available to meet with Mr. Branchflower and would do so voluntarily.

However, a new circumstance intervened—supporting the Governor's decision to cooperate only with the Personnel Board investigation. Our September 16 letter to Senator French was an effort to communicate the difficult position this places our clients in—having to choose between supporting the Governor's position and voluntarily complying with the subpoenas. Withdrawing those subpoenas (and the demand for the interviews) would relieve our clients of that difficult choice. However, we made clear in our letter that we continue to have reservations about the validity of the subpoenas. These reservations exist—regardless of the level of cooperation you are provided.

I acknowledge our position has changed—because our clients are no longer willing to participate voluntarily in your process. In light of these circumstances, our clients' decisions should be understandable.

Talis Colberg, Attorney General
Department of Law
P.O. Box 110300

Dear Attorney General:

This is a response to your letter dated yesterday and received by my office via email at 3:27 p.m.

I want to remind you of previous correspondence from your office to me in my capacity as chair of Legislative Council. On September 9, Senior Assistant Attorney General Michael Barnhill signed a letter for you that made a substantive offer. That offer was:

> "(T)he Department of law wishes to confirm that the Legislative Council agrees with the department's reading of the law. If we cannot reach agreement on the proper interpretation of the State Personnel Act, the Department of Law is prepared to seek declaratory judgment in court on this issue. But if the Legislative Council will acknowledge in writing its agreement with the Department of Law's interpretation the Department of Law will drop its objections and the depositions may proceed without subpoenas."

That offer is clear—acknowledge in writing and depositions may proceed without the need for subpoenas. On September 12, as chair of the Legislative Council and on behalf of the Council, I noted in writing that, after consultation with the legal staff at Legislative Affairs, Legislative Council agreed with the legal analysis put forward by you in your capacity as attorney general. My precise response to the offer made by the Department of Law was:

> "I stipulate in my role as chair of the Legislative Council and on behalf of the Council, that your interpretation of the law is correct."

I further noted:

> "Given our agreement on this important point, and given your offer on page 4 of your letter to drop your objections and allow the depositions to > proceed 'if the Legislative Council will acknowledge in writing its agreement with the Department of Law's interpretation,' I'd appreciate it if you would contact Mr. Branchflower so that depositions may proceed in a timely manner."

Mr. Barnhill, after receipt of the letter and after the Senate Judiciary Committee issued subpoenas, on the same day contacted Mr. Branchflower so that depositions from the state employees could be scheduled. I was grateful for the breakthrough

Your letter yesterday quite clearly breaks that deal. Bluntly, I feel like Charlie Brown after Lucy moved the football.

Not only was the letter of September 9 explicit in its offer, it had further strength given the public pronouncements by the governor, including:

> "We would never prohibit, or be less than enthusiastic about any kind of investigation. Let's deal with the facts and you do that via an investigation;" and
> "I'm happy to comply, to cooperate. I have absolutely nothing to hide. No problem with an independent investigation."

Further, staff and others speaking for the governor said: the governor will fully cooperate and her staff will cooperate also (Leighow, July 29); the governor "has directed all her staff to cooperate fully with Branchflower" (press release, August 13); Frank Bailey will fully cooperate with the investigation (McAllister, August 19); that with Frank Bailey still a state employee the governor "can direct him to assist Mr. Branchflower, thereby fulfilling her pledge to Alaskans to cooperate fully with the investigation" (Leighow, August 20); and the governor's office welcomes the inquiry and will cooperate (the governor's private attorney, September 2).

Despite your previous offer, explicitly stated and accepted, and despite repeated assertions of cooperation, you now are not allowing state employees encouraged to cooperate to do so. In four paragraphs, you've broken a deal that was accepted by your office and received by Mr. Branchflower after the Senate Judiciary Committee issued subpoenas. Further, your brand new position eviscerates weeks of comments on the record by several parties, including the governor.

I'd note, also, that while subpoenas have been requested, the only witnesses served with subpoenas are witnesses not employed by the executive branch. I understood the legislature's investigator did not feel the need to serve them following his conversation with Mr. Barnhill. A decision to not serve the subpoenas made sense given the fact it was: not necessary; and, since it was unnecessary, could give the appearance of confrontation where none was apparent.

Given the statements of cooperation by you on September 9, by the governor, and by spokespeople for the governor, it may help me to understand when and where the governor, as you note in your letter, "so strongly stated that the subpoenas issued by (the Senate Judiciary Committee) are of questionable validity." If you have so advised the governor before she made a statement I don't recall, I'd appreciate it if you could make that advice part of the public record so that we can understand the rationale behind the statement.

Sincerely,

Sen. Kim Elton

Re: Executive Branch Subpoenas

Dear Senator French:

Your committee has subpoenaed certain employees of the executive branch of state government represented by the Office of the Attorney General. These persons serve within the exempt and partially exempt service at the will of their employer, the State of Alaska. As you know, the State Personnel Board has undertaken a separate ethics investigation into the same matter for which the subpoenas were issued. For this and other reasons, such as separation of powers, the Governor has declined to participate in the investigation initiated by the Legislative Council.

As state employees, our clients have taken an oath to uphold the Alaska Constitution and for that reason they respect the legislature's desire to carry out an investigation in support of its law-making powers. However, our clients are also loyal employees subject to the supervision of the Governor. Your subpoena places them in the difficult position of choosing either to support the Governor's decision to cooperate only with the Personnel Board investigation or to voluntarily comply with the subpoenas issued by the committee.

You can appreciate that this is an untenable position for our clients because the Governor has so strongly stated that the subpoenas issued by your committee are of questionable validity. Moreover, two lawsuits have been filed challenging the legitimacy of the investigation. On behalf of our clients, we respectfully ask that you withdraw the subpoenas directed to our clients and thereby relieve them from the circumstance of having to choose where their loyalties lie.

If the subpoenas are not withdrawn by the Senate Judiciary Committee, our clients will not appear in response to the subpoenas until either the Senate or the full legislature convenes to issue a resolution requiring their presence before the appropriate legislative committee.

Sincerely,

Talis J. Colberg

Dear Mr. Barnhill:

After receipt of your letter to me dated September 9, I asked the Legislature's Legal staff to review your interpretation with the law regarding the appropriate handling of state employee personnel records. I also shared a copy of your letter with Sen. Hollis French and investigator Stephen Branchflower.

Following this review of your legal analysis of the laws governing personnel records, I stipulate in my role as chair of the Legislative Council and on behalf of the Council, that your interpretation of the law is correct.

Given our agreement on this important point, and given your offer on page 4 of your letter to drop your objections and allow depositions to proceed "if the Legislative Council will acknowledge in writing it's agreement with the Department of Law's interpretation," I'd appreciate it if you would contact Mr. Branchflower so that depositions may proceed in a timely manner.

Re: Depositions of Department of Administration Personnel

Dear Mr. Branchflower:

The Department of Law has become increasingly concerned that the legislative investigation is no longer solely concerned with the reasons why Governor Palin terminated Commissioner Monegan, but rather whether the Alaska Personnel Act was violated. As you know, under AS 39.25.900, conviction of a willful violation of the Alaska Personnel Act carries the penalties of a misdemeanor and forfeiture of the employee's position.

In an August 16 phone call with me, you first raised the issue of whether Mr. Bailey had violated the Alaska Personnel Act. More recently, Senator French has apparently publicly expressed his view that if the Governor's Office obtained confidential information from Trooper Wooten's personnel file, "it would be a violation of state law." "October Surprise Over Palin Investigation?" ABC News, Sept. 2, 2008. Yesterday, the Anchorage Daily News reported Senator French disclosing that the scope of the investigation has now expanded to include whether other persons within the Palin administration have abused power. "Palin Seeks Review of Monegan Firing Case," Anchorage Daily News, Sept. 3, 2008.

The Alaska Personnel Act provides that personnel records "are confidential and are not open to public inspection." AS 39.25.080(a). The Department of Law believes that it is not a violation of the Alaska Personnel Act for the governor or members of the governor's staff within the course and scope of their official responsibilities to review a confidential personnel file. The governor is the ultimate employer of every employee in the executive branch. Review by the governor or members of the governor's staff within the course and scope of their official responsibilities of a confidential personnel file is not a violation of employee confidentiality nor does it constitute a public inspection.

It appears from Senator French's reported comments in the press that he disagrees with this reading of Alaska law and his legal opinion differs from that of the Department of Law. While we disagree with his legal position, to the extent that Senator French is correct, it would therefore follow that individuals within the Department of Administration who have disclosed matters related to an employee's personnel file to the Office of the Governor have potentially violated AS 39.25.080, and could theoretically have personal criminal exposure under AS 39.25.900.

Given the fact that the focus of this investigation has now apparently expanded beyond the governor's termination of Commissioner Monegan, the fact that Senator French appears to believe that the Office of the Governor may not review confidential employee files or perhaps even discuss matters pertaining to a state employee's employment, and the fact that this view of the law, if correct, could potentially expose individuals in the Department of Administration to criminal sanctions including forfeiture of their employment, we must inform you of the following:

- The Department of Law must re-assess this matter in order to determine whether Department of Administration employees should be advised to seek private counsel.
- All depositions of Department of Administration employees are cancelled until further notice.
- Unless we notify you otherwise, the Department of Law is, for purposes of your investigation, representing all Department of Administration employees who had involvement with Trooper Wooten's personnel or workers' compensation files.

I regret to inform you of these actions, but we believe we have no choice given the recent evolution of this investigation. The Department of Law will continue to work with you on your requests for records as we have previously discussed.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM September 3, 2008

SUBJECT: Investigations by the legislature (Work Order No. 26-LS0088)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director TBC

You have supplied me with a letter from Mr. Thomas V. Van Flein and Mr. John J. Tiemessen, who are representing the Governor and various staff members, and asked me to consider points raised in the letter.

To the extent that the thrust of this comment in the letter goes to the power of the legislature to investigate, I observe that the legislative power of investigation is limited to obtaining information on matters which fall within its field of legislative action. (Mason's Manual, Secs. 795(6) and 797(7)) Lawmaking is a central legislative activity, but there are other legislative activities that may justify investigatory pursuits. It is stated in Mason's Manual, sec. 795(10): [redacted]

The Alaska Supreme Court has acknowledged that the legislature has broad powers of investigation relating to its lawmaking activities and has also specifically identified the confirmation power as carrying with it an implied power and duty to investigate both the status of the relevant appointed offices and the qualification of individuals appointed to fill them. (Cook v. Botelho, 921 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1996)) [redacted] example, Art X, sec. 12 (power of the legislature to disapprove certain local boundary changes; Art. II, sec. 20 (power of the legislature to impeach civil officers of the State))

If this comment is intended to precisely apply to the power of the legislative council to investigate, [redacted]

as well as its power to participate in the law-making function through the introduction of legislation (AS 24.08.060(b)). The legislative council does not have explicit authority to investigate activities of executive branch agencies or officers. It is not clear to me whether the broad power to provide administrative services would be considered to be sufficient authority for the legislative council to undertake a preliminary investigation that might lead to the need for other actions on the part of the legislature or another legislative committee, but it might. In addition, it is possible that the recommendations contained in the report prepared under the investigation contract will consist of proposed statutory changes and fall squarely within the law-making function exercised by the legislative council when it considers the introduction of legislation.

(2) The legislature may lack jurisdiction to spend public monies to investigate a co-equal branch of government.

Clearly, expenditure of public money appropriated to the legislative branch must be used for a legislative purpose as well as for a public purpose. If the legislature does have the power to conduct the investigation in question, then it has the authority to spend money for that purpose. Mason's Manual notes in sec. 795(13) "In the exercise of its power to make investigations, a legislature may incur reasonable, necessary expenses payable out of the public funds."

(3) The general legislative power to issue subpoenas is clearly prohibited relative to the Legislative Council. (See AS 24.25.010(e))

It is correct that the legislative council is not authorized to issue a subpoena under AS 24.25.010. It has separate subpoena authority under AS 24.25.060(2). That power is granted "when consistent with the powers and duties assigned to the council by AS 24.20.010-24.20.140." As I previously noted, it is not clear whether the investigation at issue is consistent with those powers and duties.

(4) Art. I, sec. 7 entitles the Governor to "fair and just treatment" in the course of legislative investigations.

This is correct. I have attached a discussion of this provision from the Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings, Part 4, pages 1446 -1450 and pages 1464 - 1471. As you can see, the delegates did not reach an understanding of what "fair and just treatment" might be with regard to a legislative investigation. It appears that the expectation was that the legislature would adopt specific procedures that apply to ensure that investigations are fair or that, through court challenges based on actual legislative investigations, a body of law would evolve to clarify the matter. However, the legislature has not adopted specific procedures for investigations and the case law dealing with the last sentence of Art. I, sec. 7 that I found in a quick search has involved executive branch investigations (administrative procedures) rather than legislative branch investigations.

(5) A complaint has been filed with the Personnel Board under the executive branch ethics law which gives the Board jurisdiction over this investigation. Will you suspend your investigation pending the outcome of the Personnel Board investigation?

The investigation of an incident by one governmental entity does not normally deprive another governmental entity of authority to look into the matter also, although one of the entities might agree to curtail its activities out of deference to the other. Assuming that a complaint has been filed under the executive branch ethics law, both the complaint and all information regarding an investigation as a result of the complaint are confidential until the initiation of formal proceedings. (AS 39.52.340) An investigation can only involve alleged violations of the ethics law and there is no way to tell what the scope of the investigation in this situation might be. It certainly cannot be determined that the legislature's investigation will be identical with an investigation being conducted under the executive branch ethics law. [redacted] (Cook v. Botelho, 921 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1996) quoting from Barrett v. Duff, 217 P. 918 (Kan. 1923) pages 925 - 926)

I caution you not to mention any complaint or investigation that may be in progress under the executive branch ethics act in a letter you make public because these complaints are confidential. I have no comment with respect to whether the legislature should suspend its investigation.

(6) The letter calls into question keeping certain aspects of the legislative investigation secret.

It is usual for the investigatory stage to be conducted on a confidential basis before any formal charge is made or formal proceeding initiated. This protects the privacy of individuals who may be under investigation, of witnesses, and of the investigatory process itself. After all, an investigation may not uncover facts that lead to a formal proceeding. (See generally AS 40.25.120(a)(4); AS 45.50.521; AS 45.66.190; AS 47.30.845; AS 47.32.180) Under the public records law, in determining whether a particular record is subject to public disclosure, the court will weigh the public interest in disclosure against the interest in confidentiality. (Gwich'in Steering Comm. v. State Office of the Governor, 10 P.3d 572 (Alaska 2000); Fuller v. City of Homer, 75 P.3d 1059 (Alaska 2003)) A reasonable argument can be made for the proposition that the interest in protecting the legislature's investigatory function and the privacy interest of potentially innocent parties outweighs the public interest in disclosure, particularly when the investigation may not lead to any formal procedure.

(7) There is no reason to conduct ex parte interviews with represented parties.

This seems to be a fair assertion.

(8) Mr. Branchflower attempted to contact Mr. Todd Palin on a secure line which represents a security breach. The letter requests immediate disclosure of the names of persons who provided the secure phone number.

The letter suggests that the security breach may be reported to the Secret Service. I have no knowledge of federal security laws or how they may interface with an ongoing legislative investigation.

(9) If "you agree to submit to proper jurisdictional process, we can check the Governor's schedule to see when she and the First Gentleman are available for an interview."

Does this mean that, despite the objections in the rest of the letter, an interview will be granted in the course of the legislative investigation? I think you will have to consult with Mr. Thomas V. Van Flein on the meaning of his last two paragraphs.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

With respect to all this, I observe that if a person refuses to provide information to the investigator or to respond to a subpoena by a legislative committee, it may be that the lack of cooperation must simply be noted in the report. Because the power to investigate is a legislative power that has not been clearly delegated in this instance to a committee, ultimately, the House or Senate or legislature as a whole may have to decide whether to formally initiate an investigation through the adoption of a resolution charging a committee to conduct it.

[redacted] It may be that the legislature must use its own disciplinary powers; formal censure through adoption of a resolution or impeachment proceedings. (See AS 24.25.030) [redacted]

Re: In Re: Investigation Into The Termination Of Walt Monegan

Dear Mr. Branchflower:

As you are no doubt aware, Senator French sent a letter to our office on September 1, 2008. Although Senator French is an attorney, we do not believe a client can waive the prohibition on ex parte contact without confirmation from his counsel. Accordingly, please consider this letter a response to your client's September 1, 2008 letter. If you would prefer in the future that we correspond directly with Senator French, please advise in writing and we would be happy to do so. Until you confirm this, our correspondence will be with you.

As attorneys, we feel that it is our job to keep our clients focused on the objective goals of this process, finding out the truth about what happened. While our clients may have political differences, we would like to think that our offices can rise above those differences and remain focused on a fair, deliberate inquiry that is consistent with the laws and constitution of the State of Alaska and the principles of due process. Unfortunately, Senator French's letter seems to be advocating a different direction. We will rely on you to focus him in a more positive direction.

As you are now aware, a complaint has now been filed with the Personnel Board. This would seem to render Senator French's objection moot. Now that the complaint has been filed, it appears that the Board has jurisdiction over this matter. Will you suspend your investigation pending the outcome of the Personnel Board investigation or resolution of the jurisdictional issue? If not, please explain why. If the stated goal of the Legislative Council is a fair and neutral investigation, then we believe it will embrace the process the Legislature itself created.

While the Legislative Council does have some limited investigatory power, those powers seem to be limited to investigations related to proposed or current laws. We are not aware of any such proposed legislation. In fact, we are suggesting that the Legislature may lack jurisdiction to spend public monies to investigate a co-equal branch of the government. While Governor Palin does not have anything to hide, you certainly can appreciate why she would insist that the investigation be conducted fairly, consistent with Alaska Statutes, and free from even the suggestion of political influence. Senator French suggests that this position is somehow "at odds with our state's constitution." We are not aware of which provision of the constitution he refers to but would be happy to reconsider this position if you point us to it. In fact, Mr. French may have overlooked this part of the State Constitution:

> The right of all persons to fair and just treatment in the course of legislative and executive investigations shall not be infringed.

Art. I, Sec. 7. The Governor is a "person" and is entitled to "fair and just treatment" as part of this investigation. Following state law, including the personnel board process, would comply with the Constitution. However, even if the Legislative Council has some plenary power to conduct secret investigations—which it does not—due process is still required. The Governor is entitled to notice of the allegation, discovery, and subpoena powers (all set forth in the Legislative Council's statute, which as adopted the civil rules for its process). We remain perplexed why Mr. French would want a secret proceeding, in violation of the Legislative Council's own enacting statute.

As a further example, the general legislative power to issue subpoenas is clearly prohibited relative to the Legislative Council. See AS 24.25.010(e) ("This section does not apply to the legislative council or to the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee").

We believe that it would benefit the truth-seeking goal of any investigation if the parties disclosed witness statements and other information they independently gather. There is certainly precedent for this in the Civil Rules which would require such disclosure. However, it is our understanding that you have already agreed to informal sharing of information with the Attorney General's office. Surely you and Mr. French are not the sort of gentlemen where we must confirm agreements in writing. Again, if this understanding is in error, please advise.

We appreciate the scheduling problems that our recent appearance in this case may have caused. However, that is no reason to conduct ex parte interviews with represented parties. Simple professional courtesy as well as the prohibition against ex parte contact requires that these interviews and depositions be coordinated with all counsel and parties. Many of these staffers have their own counsel as well, and we need to coordinate with them.

Further, we are informed that Mr. Branchflower attempted to directly contact Todd Palin on a secure and confidential line. This represents a serious security breach that we may be obligated to report to the Secret Service. We ask that you immediately disclose the names of any person who provided you with Mr. Palin's secure phone number.

phone • 907-479-7776 email • fair@cplawak.com fax • 907-479-7966

We ask again that neither you nor any of your staff have ex parte contact with any represented parties as this is a significant violation of Alaska Rule of Professional Conduct 4.2. If you desire a formal list of the represented parties, we will provide one. Suffice it to say that we represent the Governor and the Office of the Governor and all persons associated with that office. Many staff members have private counsel with whom we need to coordinate.

Please confirm your willingness to shift this process to the Personnel Board. We can then use it's procedures to coordinate interviews. We understand that you have a self-imposed deadline of the Friday before the general election. In addition to complying with state law, we think that you would agree that the concerns of finding the truth and not violating anyone's right to counsel or due process trump any desire to create a pre-election media event.

Assuming you agree to submit to proper jurisdictional process, we can check the Governor's schedule to see when she and the First Gentleman are available for an interview. Per Senator French's letter, we will check on possible late September dates. In order to avoid some date conflicts, both I and Mr. Tiemessen will be available to attend these interviews. We will need your dates of availability also. We will also check the schedules of Mr. Nizich and Mr. Ruraro. It seems to make little sense to throw dates at you unless we know your schedule. Perhaps a conference call to schedule these would be the best way to coordinate these deposition and other jurisdictional and procedural concerns? We ask for your prompt cooperation.

Please do not hesitate to call if you have any questions or concerns.

Dear Mr. Van Flein:

I am in receipt of your letter dated August 29, 2008, sent to Stephen Branchflower on August 30, 2008. It's worth pointing out that we have not received any notice from the Department of Law that the Governor was retaining private counsel. Given the nature of your letter, it seemed more appropriate that I reply to it, rather than Mr. Branchflower.

You assert in your letter that you believe that the Personnel Board is "statutorily mandated to oversee these proceedings." I don't see it that way. The Personnel Board oversees complaints brought against the Governor under the state's ethics laws. While the Board may be engaged now in investigating an ethics complaint, that process is held confidential until the Board makes a finding of probable cause. Indeed, the Board would not have jurisdiction unless someone has filed a complaint. I am unaware of one being filed. Perhaps you know differently.

Your letter goes on to request that Mr. Branchflower work with you "in adhering to state law and submitting these issues to the body properly vested with primary jurisdiction." I confess that I may be misunderstanding your point. The Legislature, of course, has its own separate powers of investigation. I hope you are not suggesting that the Legislature does not have the authority to investigate potential violations of law by members of the Executive Branch. Governor Palin has repeatedly stated that she has nothing to hide and that she and her administration will cooperate fully with this investigation. Is your client aware that you seem to be challenging the Legislature's jurisdiction? Such a position is at odds with our state's constitution, and with your client's public statements.

Your letter also requests a copy of all witness statements that Mr. Branchflower has secured. I have instructed him to not comply with that request. I think you will agree that it would be highly unusual for an investigator to share information with one of the targets of the investigation. I am unaware of any precedent for such an arrangement. Furthermore, the Attorney General is conducting his own inquiry into this matter on behalf of the Governor. As the Governor's lawyer, I feel sure that you will have access to information developed through General Colberg's efforts.

Likewise, I have instructed Mr. Branchflower to adhere to the witness interview schedule that he has worked assiduously to set up. It is very important that the interviews take place as previously arranged by Mr. Branchflower. Delays in witness interviews will jeopardize the timely conclusion of this investigation. Indeed, delays would cause me to convene a meeting of the Judiciary Committee and ask that subpoenas be considered.

With regard to the Governor's deposition, Mr. Branchflower made his initial request for an interview with the Governor last Thursday morning. There has not been a response to his request. Clearly the Governor's new political role will make it more challenging for her to make time for this investigation. Nevertheless, her repeated promises to cooperate fully with the investigation, as well as her statements that her new role as the Republican Vice Presidential nominee will not interfere with the day-to-day functioning of state business, should result in a concrete willingness to schedule and conclude her deposition. In sum, I am requesting that you set a September date for the Governor's deposition, as well as the deposition of Mr. Mike Nizich, and Mr. Randy Ruaro, by the close of business this Friday, September 5, 2008.

I appreciate your stated willingness to cooperate with the Legislature's investigation. Please keep in mind that it was the initial cooperation from the Administration with regards to witness depositions that allowed us to avoid the issuance of subpoenas. I have stated publicly that while the Governor's new status raises the profile of this investigation, it does not change the steps we must go through to see to its completion. I trust that the Governor feels the same way.

Sincerely yours,

Hees R

Re: In Re: Investigation Into The Termination of Walt Monegan

Dear Mr. Branchflower:

We have been retained to represent the Governor and the Governor's Office relative to the Legislative Council's investigation into the termination of Mr. Monegan, the alleged Executive Branch Ethics violation, and the alleged Personnel Act violation.

We fully welcome a fair inquiry into these allegations, and believe that the Personnel Board is statutorily mandated to oversee these proceedings. We trust you have no objection to following state law in that regard and will work with us in adhering to state law and submitting these issues to the body properly vested with primary jurisdiction.

We have considerable information to review to get up to speed. The Attorney General is forwarding to us information it collected and already shared with you. It is my understanding that there is an informal agreement to share information the parties obtain through their own inquiries. Accordingly, I would appreciate a copy of all witness statements you have (if not transcribed, then we can copy the CD), all documentary evidence you have, any witness list you have, and a copy of the complaint or other charging document upon which you are basing your investigation. The obvious exception to this is I do not expect you to exchange your communications with Sen. French, as you no doubt would not expect, nor be entitled to, our communications that are protected by the attorney client privilege.

Further, please know that we intend to cooperate with this investigation and will reciprocate the exchange of information consistent with our duty to ensure compliance with due process and within constitutional parameters. I would like to review our calendars to schedule depositions of witnesses (and, of course, we need to coordinate with those witnesses as well, particularly as hunting season is here). For those witnesses outside of the Governor's Office, but within the employ of the State, we will have to coordinate with Mr. Barnhill as well, as those State employees are entitled to representation. I will be representing members of the Office of the Governor at any deposition.

If you are in town, I think a sit down meeting with you would be beneficial so we can map out the logistics. In the meantime, I would ask that you have no ex parte contact with members of the Governor's Office, and we will not contact Sen. French. If you consider anyone to be your client in addition to Sen. French, please identify them for us so we do not inadvertently have ex parte contact as we perform our own due diligence.

We are looking forward to resolving this matter as expeditiously and fairly as possible.

MEMORANDUM August 13, 2008

SUBJECT: Senate Judiciary Committee issuance of subpoenas relevant to the Legislative Council-initiated investigation of alleged improper actions of executive branch officers and employees.

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee

FROM: Jack Chenoweth
Assistant Revisor

The Legislative Council has authorized the above-captioned investigation and entered into an agreement with Stephen E. Branchflower to undertake it. The contract with Mr. Branchflower indicates that you are to serve as "project director," "authorized to oversee and direct the activities of [Mr. Branchflower] under [the] contract." I've been told, though it is not reflected in the draft minutes of the Council's July 28th meeting at which that activity was authorized, that the Legislative Council understood that the Senate Judiciary Committee would serve as the entity through which the Council's contractor could expect to secure and enforce the production of documentary evidence and witnesses relevant to the investigation.

Cindy Smith of your office has requested our consideration of each of the following questions in conjunction with the above-captioned matter.

1. May the Senate Judiciary Committee authorize issuance of one or more subpoenas for the production of records, some of which may be held in the custody of a state employee, relevant to the above-captioned investigation?

Yes. The legislature has broad authority to investigate and an investigation may be conducted through a legislative committee. [redacted] Additionally, Uniform Rule 21(c) grants to standing committees the power to meet between sessions. A committee that meets between sessions may consider "any legislative matter which is consistent with the jurisdiction of the committee." Alone among standing committees, Uniform Rule 20 declares that the standing Judiciary Committees have jurisdiction as to "the legal and substantive review of bills referred to it ... for that purpose," suggestive that the Judiciary Committee is the logical body by which to secure completion of a successful investigation.

Under AS 24.25.010(b), a legislative standing committee has broad statutory power to subpoena a witness including, under AS 24.25.030, a witness who can produce "upon reasonable notice any material and proper books, papers, or documents in the possession or under the control of the witness[.]" [redacted] "

2. May the Senate Judiciary Committee meet by teleconference to authorize issuance of the subpoena(s)?

Yes. Action by teleconference is authorized by AS 44.62.310(a), part of the so-called Open Meetings Act (AS 44.62.310 - 44.62.312). This provision is made applicable to standing committees of the legislature by AS 24.60.037's directive that legislative committees abide by open meetings guidelines. This office has consistently taken the position that, absent an explicit prohibition against a standing committee meeting by teleconference, consistent legislative practice has been to allow standing committees to conduct business by teleconference.

3. To avoid public disclosure of the identities of the person or persons to whom subpoenas may issue, may the committee act to authorize the subpoenas in executive session?

No. Certain matters may be considered in executive session:

> (c) The following subjects may be considered in an executive session:
> (1) matters, the immediate knowledge of which would clearly have an adverse effect upon the finances of the public entity;
> (2) subjects that tend to prejudice the reputation and character of any person, provided the person may request a public discussion;
> (3) matters which by law, municipal charter, or ordinance are required to be confidential;
> (4) matters involving consideration of government records that by law are not subject to public disclosure.

I'm assuming, for reasons examined and discussed later in this memo, that paragraph (c)(4) would provide the basis for an executive session in which committee members may discuss the propriety of authorizing subpoenas for specific witnesses and records. However, for purposes of legislative business, open meetings principles, applicable to legislative standing committees by AS 24.60.037, fairly require that the committee's decision and vote to approve or withhold issuance of a subpoena be conducted in public. Under AS 24.60.037(b), > (b) For purposes of the legislative open meetings guidelines, a meeting occurs when a majority of the members of a legislative body is present and action, including voting, is taken or could be taken, or if a primary purpose of the meeting is the discussion of legislation or state policy. . . . .

There must be a formal record that the authority for the committee chair to issue the subpoena was given "by a majority of the membership of the committee." AS 24.25.010(b). For each subpoena to be authorized, if you conduct the committee meeting by teleconference, you must call the roll of the yeas and nays of the committee members attending ["The vote at a meeting held by teleconference shall be taken by roll call." -- AS 44.62.310(a)]; if all committee members participating are physically present in one place, you may ask for and obtain the members' unanimous consent.

4. To avoid public disclosure of the identities of the person or persons to whom subpoenas may issue, may the committee issue the subpoena addressed in a way that does not name the person?

Unless the committee is prepared to act creatively, probably not. The procedural requirement relating to issuance of a subpoena, including a subpoena to a witness who can produce "upon reasonable notice any material and proper books, papers, or documents in the possession or under the control of the witness," is explicit. Under AS 24.25.010(d),

> (d) The subpoena is sufficient if
> (1) it states before whom the proceeding is held;
> (2) it is addressed to the witness;
> (3) it requires the attendance of the witness at a time and place certain;
> (4) it is signed
> (A) . . . , or
> (B) by the committee chairman with the concurrence of the president or the speaker under (b) . . . of this section.

As you well know, common practice is to enter the name of the person to whom the subpoena is addressed at the appropriate place on the face of the subpoena. I am not aware of any authority by which a subpoena may be issued "generically" ("to the person having custody of the following described records: ___") or using an identifier intended to mask the subpoena recipient's actual identity so as to prevent the subpoena recipient's identity from being otherwise disclosed.[1]

[1] I have had one thought about taking a public vote as to the issuance of the subpoena without identifying the person to whom the subpoena will issue. If each subpoena to be approved for service on a prospective witness were to have, in addition to

This conclusion may prompt the question as to whether a subpoena itself is to be considered and treated as a public record, disclosable to the press and public.

Among exceptions to the public records provisions, under AS 40.25.125(a)(6), certain "law enforcement related records or information" are exempt from disclosure:

> (6) records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes [are excepted from disclosure], but only to the extent that the production of the law enforcement records or information
> (A) could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings;
> (B) would deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or an impartial adjudication;
> (C) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of the personal privacy of a suspect, defendant, victim, or witness;
> (D) could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a confidential source;

the name of the witness, an identifying number unique to that witness subpoena, it might be possible, it seems to me, to have the committee's approval motion expressed in terms of approving subpoena number 1, or subpoena number 2, rather than referring to the name of the individual. In the public session, the motion would be expressed in terms of an approval of subpoena number ___ ("I move that the committee approve the issue of the subpoena identified as 'subpoena no. 1'") rather than by a motion expressing the names of the individual who would be served. This approach would work, however, only if you are able to reasonably ensure that committee members attending by teleconference have the drafted and numbered subpoenas at hand, so that each committee member would readily understand that the subpoena identified as number 1 or number 2, as appropriate, would be issued to a specific witness for production of specific materials ["Agency materials that are to be considered at the meeting shall be made available at teleconference locations if practicable." -- AS 44.62.310(a); "[a]ction taken contrary to this section is voidable." -- AS 44.62.310(f)]. At the conclusion of the meeting, it would be in order to collect from the participants the draft documents for disposal.

I have no idea whether this would be a practical solution, though I think it is legally defensible so long as the subpoena to be served does bear the identity of the witness on whom it is to be served.

You'd be well advised to consider this and any other reasonable alternatives with Mr. Branchflower; he has more experience in securing evidence under subpoena than I.

> (E) would disclose confidential techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions;
> (F) would disclose guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions if the disclosure could reasonably be expected to risk circumvention of the law; or
> (G) could reasonably be expected to endanger the life or physical safety of an individual[.]

While some may argue that subparagraph (6)(A) may provide the committee sufficient authority, none of these, in my judgment, would authorize an exception from disclosure for a document such as a subpoena. Additionally, it is not clear to me that records and information secured in the course of a legislative investigation would qualify as material "compiled for law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of the exception.

If the information compiled in the course of the committee's investigative efforts is to enjoy protection against disclosure as a public record, it appears that the protection would have to be provided under one or more constitutional provisions as suggested by a 1987 Opinion of the Attorney General. That opinion considered whether the file of a then-active Alaska Public Offices Commission investigation would be available for review by the press. The Attorney General's office declined the press request (except as to certain material that were made expressly available for review by statute or commission regulation), relying on state common law precedents. With apologies for its length, set out below is the text of the relevant portion of the opinion:

> As you know, AS 09.25.110 [now AS 40.25.110], commonly known as the "Public Records Act," provides generally that all records of an agency of state government "are public records and are open to inspection by the public under reasonable rules during regular office hours." A second statute, AS 09.25.120 [now AS 40.25.120], sets out limited exceptions to the general rule of disclosure. The only exception relevant here is for "records required to be kept confidential by a federal law or regulation or by state law . . . ." This office has consistently concluded that the phrase "state law" includes state common law. 1985 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. (Oct. 21; 366-202-84); 1985 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. (Sept. 24; 366-113-86); see City of Kenai v. Kenai Peninsula Newspapers, 642 P.2d 1316, 1319 (Alaska 1982); see also AS 01.10.010.
> The Alaska Supreme Court has recognized a common law exemption from disclosure where a demonstrable need for confidentiality outweighs the public's proprietary interest in public records and its interest in knowing what government officials are doing. Kenai Peninsula Newspapers, 642 P.2d at 1319. In our view, there are at least three demonstrable public and private interests which, at least in the aggregate, outweigh the public's right to have access to APOC's active investigation files.

First, numerous courts have recognized that the agency and the public have an interest in preserving the integrity and effectiveness of law enforcements investigations, and that that interest may be jeopardized by the release of active investigative files. State ex rel. City of Bartow v. Public Employees Relations Commission, 341 So. 2d 1000 (Fla. Ct. App. 1976); Stone v. Consolidated Publishing Company, 404 So.2d 678 (Ala. 1981); Church of Scientology v. City of Phoenix Police Department, 594 P.2d 1034 (Ariz. 1979); Grodjesk v. Faghani, 487 A.2d 759 (N.J. App. Div. 1985). Release of active investigation files creates the possibility that the subject of the investigation will interfere with the investigation by, among other things, destroying documents or discouraging witnesses from cooperating with the agency. Public Employees Relations Commission, 341 So. 2d 1000. In the agency's experience, witnesses contacted in the course of an active investigation are often reluctant to provide sworn testimony or agree to "go public" with their information unless they are satisfied that independent investigation by the agency tends to substantiate their testimony. Such witnesses would be more reluctant to provide information to the APOC if their information is immediately subject to public scrutiny. See People ex rel. Better Broadcasting Council, Inc. v. Keane, 309 N.E.2d 362, 364 (Ill. 1973); Lopez v. Fitzgerald, 390 N.E.2d 835 (Ill. 1979).

Second, the investigatory information you seek has not yet been subject to full administrative evaluation, and no decision has yet been made whether there is substantial evidence indicating that any laws have been violated. Release of such unevaluated information to the public may unfairly impair the reputation of the subjects of the investigation, and may come perilously close to violating their due process rights guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions. Lopez v. Fitzgerald, 390 N.E.2d at 840-41. The courts have recognized that "the public good is not served by disclosures which undermine the sense of security for individual rights." Lopez v. Fitzgerald, 390 N.E.2d at 840 (citing with approval Craemer v. Superior Court, 265 Cal. App. 2d 216, 222, 71 Cal. Rptr. 193, 199 (Cal. 1968)).

Third, we believe that Alaska's constitutional right to privacy requires APOC to use extreme caution in disclosing unverified or unevaluated charges or materials obtained by the agency in the course of an investigation. Lopez v. Fitzgerald, 390 N.E.2d at 840; see Falcon v. Alaska Public Offices Commission, 570 P.2d 469 (Alaska 1977); Messerli v. State, 626 P.2d 81 (Alaska 1980). The persons whose privacy rights are at stake can waive the right. In this case, the subjects of the investigation have declined to do so.

> In reaching the conclusion that the public and private interests in nondisclosure of these investigative files outweigh the public's interest in disclosure, we are influenced by the fact that, under 2 AAC 50.460(d), investigation reports will be prepared by the APOC staff upon conclusion of the investigations. Investigation reports are generally made available to the public, and are always provided to the persons whose complaints triggered an investigation. Because an investigation report will be produced in due course, we believe the public's interest in early disclosure of the information is not great. See Public Employees Relation Commission, 341 So. 2d 1000.

1987-1 Op. (Inf.) Atty. Gen. Alas. 291, April 30, 1987, at 2 - 6 (notes omitted). Although the Council-initiated investigation may not properly be characterized as one made for "law enforcement purposes," nonetheless the principles identified and discussed in the preceding opinion as warranting confidential treatment of an active investigation -- most significantly, considerations bearing on the release of "unevaluated information" as bearing on the due process rights of the investigation's subjects -- would appear to apply equally to the matter that the Council has under consideration. Significantly for your purposes, as with the outcome of the APOC investigation noted in the quoted portion of the opinion, the Council's contract with Mr. Branchflower anticipates completion of an investigative report and contemplates eventual release of the report in a form that may be disclosed to the public.

Anchorage Daily News (AK) - Friday, October 24, 2008

Author: TALIS J. COLBERG; Commentary

The "Bottom Line" of the October 20 Daily News editorial was that Alaskans do not need an elected attorney general. That conclusion may be correct, but along the way the editorial also found "plenty of reasons to criticize" me. Those reasons are not supported by the facts.

First, the editorial inappropriately suggests that the Department of Law may have tampered with witnesses by conducting an inquiry before Stephen Branchflower began his legislative investigation in the matter known as Troopergate. The facts show otherwise.

When Mr. Branchflower interviewed me as part of the Legislature's investigation, he said that the department's inquiry "resulted in material that (was) very helpful to (him) in doing (his) job," that it was "very much appreciated," and that "without (my) willingness to share that evidence ...the ultimate production of (his) report would have been delayed."

Second, the Department of Law did not hire a private lawyer to represent Governor Palin because of any perceived conflict of interest on my part. We did so because I was concerned that having state attorneys represent Governor Palin in the investigation would hamper the department's ability to effectively perform its other statutory duties.

By statute, the attorney general's duties include serving as legal adviser to state officers, representing the state in litigation, prosecuting violations of state law, and administering state legal services. Normally the attorney general gives legal advice both to the governor and to other state departments, including the Department of Public Safety. But the point of the Legislature's investigation was to consider whether Governor Palin used her public office for a personal purpose. Without separate counsel to represent the governor, the department's effectiveness as legal counsel to both the governor and other state agencies might have been impaired.

To address those concerns, the department hired Mr. Van Flein to represent the governor and other members of her office, expressly limiting the representation to their official actions. The department remained involved in the legislative investigation because its attorneys continued to represent employees of other state agencies.

Mr. Van Flein later expanded his representation to Governor Palin in her personal capacity and to Todd Palin. That work was never covered by his contract with the state. But because Mr. Van Flein assumed these new responsibilities, he decided that he could no longer represent other members of the governor's office, so the department resumed representation of those employees.

The editorial incorrectly asserts that I said at a press conference that Mr. Van Flein was no longer a state contractor. In fact, I confirmed at the press conference that Mr. Van Flein was still under contract to represent Governor Palin in her official capacity. I have never stated otherwise. (Editor's note: A correction on this point appeared Thursday on

Third, contrary to the editorial's assertion, I did not advise state employees that compliance with subpoenas is voluntary. Subpoenas are never mandatory until they are served. Before the employees were served with the subpoenas, the department asked legislators to consider withdrawing them. Once the subpoenas were served, the department filed a court action seeking a ruling on their validity. Although the editorial suggests that the department delayed in challenging the subpoenas, in fact the department filed the lawsuit just two days after service was completed.

Finally, the court in that case did not, as the editorial suggests, decide that the subpoenaed employees had no grounds for challenging the subpoenas' validity. Instead, the court declined to address that issue, concluding that the challenges must be resolved by the Legislature, not a court.

Bottom Line: The Daily News editorial was based on a distorted view of what actually happened.

Talis J. Colberg is attorney general of the State of Alaska.

Legislative subpoenas go unanswered

CONTROVERSY: Seven Palin aides follow attorney general's advice and refuse to be interviewed.

By SEAN COCKERHAM

With state officials again defying legislative subpoenas in the investigation of whether Gov. Sarah Palin abused her power, the war between state lawmakers and Alaska's attorney general is escalating.

The governor's chief of staff, Mike Nizich, and six other Palin aides didn't show up Friday to honor subpoenas ordering them to testify in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee chairman, Anchorage Democratic Sen. Hollis French, said they could be found in contempt when the full Legislature convenes in January, a finding that carries potential jail time.

Alaska Attorney General Talis Colberg, a Palin appointee, filed a lawsuit late Thursday asking the courts to declare the subpoenas invalid so the state employees would not be punished for ignoring them.

Colberg said his office has told the employees they had a choice to disobey the legislative subpoenas -- advice that has state legislators furious.

"We have advised people that is an option. And that we think the subpoenas have flaws," he said.

Fairbanks Republican Rep. Jay Ramras, chair of the House Judiciary Committee, charged "there is likely very irresponsible behavior coming from the attorney general."

Anchorage Democratic Sen. Bill Wielechowksi, a lawyer who is on the Judiciary Committee, said he is not impressed, either.

"I just can't imagine any attorney advising a client that a subpoena is voluntary," he said.

Colberg's lawsuit argues that the Judiciary Committee did not have the authority to issue the subpoenas, a claim contested by the legislators. Colberg on Friday asked the lawmakers to suspend their subpoenas until the court makes its ruling -- a process that could run well beyond the Nov. 4 election where Palin is on the Republican ticket for vice president. French refused, saying the attorney general didn't even ask the court for a quick ruling and "has put its lawsuit on a slow track."

Colberg said he didn't ask for a quick ruling on his lawsuit because it's the Legislature that has imposed a deadline for the investigation to be completed. The lawmakers can ask for an expedited ruling if they want, he said.

"If there is urgency, let it be on the other party to explain why this would be on par with, for example a child in need of aid or somebody in danger," he said.

GROWING CRITICISM

Steve Branchflower, the investigator hired by the Legislative council, is supposed to give his report on the investigation Oct. 10. At issue is whether Palin dismissed public safety commissioner Walt Monegan because he wouldn't fire a state trooper who went through an ugly divorce with her sister. The bipartisan Legislative Council passed a resolution that directs Branchflower "to investigate the circumstances and events surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Monegan, and potential abuses of power and/or improper actions by members of the executive branch."

Palin initially said she'd cooperate with the investigation -- then changed course after her nomination as vice president, saying the Legislature's investigation was politicized. Palin said the state personnel board, not the Legislature, has jurisdiction and she'd cooperate with its investigation.

That one is out of public view and may not be done before the election.

Colberg is coming under growing fire from legislators and other critics for how he's handled the battle between Alaska's legislative and executive branches. One of the stated aims of a planned "Hold Palin Accountable" protest to be held in Anchorage today is to demand the attorney general's resignation.

"There's talk of the AG, should he be disbarred and could he be disbarred, I just don't know," said Kenai Republican Rep. Mike Chenault.

North Pole Republican Sen. Gene Therriault -- who sides with Palin in the investigation -- told reporters that "it's my understanding somebody has lodged a complaint" against Colberg. Therriault had no confirmation. Such a complaint likely would be filed with the Alaska Bar Association, but those are confidential.

"I haven't been informed on (a complaint) yet," Colberg said. "But given the number of references to that type of thing I guess that's possible."

'GOOD LEGAL GROUND'

Colberg has defenders in the state Legislature, including North Pole Republican Rep. John Coghill, who said he believes the legislative investigation is tainted by politics and should be delayed until after the election.

"I think they have some good legal ground, I think the Legislature dangerously went beyond its authority," he said.

Anchorage talk radio has carped on Colberg for going on vacation last week as the controversy raged. Colberg said September is ordinarily a good time for a cabinet member to travel, and the Legislature is not in session.

Colberg said he obviously had no idea when he planned the trip that there would be an investigation or that Palin would be nominated for vice president.

"So in June, I had made arrangements to go on a personal vacation to the four states that I had never been to, focusing on Kansas. And I had made this arrangement with my college roommate of 30 years ago and we had talked about this for about three decades. ... So my trip for one week did occur and I did see all 50 states and I enjoyed the state of Kansas. It's a very nice place, at this time of year especially so," he said.

Colberg said he actually spent most of the trip on the phone dealing with what's become known as the Troopergate investigation.

Colberg said the Legislature's investigation is politicized. He said he's trying to insert some objectivity into the process by taking the subpoenas to court so a judge can sort it out.

WHO IS PAYING THE BILLS?

Colberg said an example showing how the investigation is flawed was lawmakers choosing not to subpoena former Palin chief of staff Mike Tibbles, now managing U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens' campaign for re-election.

"(Tibbles is) a key witness by any measure, and they said we won't subpoena you and the explanation that is given is -- 'there is no political will.' Now what does that say about the process?"' Colberg said.

The legislators also didn't subpoena Palin, saying they wanted to "de-escalate" the standoff with the governor. They did subpoena Palin's husband, Todd.

Todd Palin and two others refused last week to honor the Legislature's subpoenas.

Sarah and Todd Palin are both represented in the Troopergate investigation by an Anchorage attorney, Thomas Van Flein. There's some dispute over just whom Van Flein is working for. Colberg said Friday that Van Flein is on contract with the state to represent the governor, although the state has nothing to do with his representation of Todd.

But Van Flein, who has been getting advice from a lawyer working on the McCain-Palin campaign, insists he canceled the state contract on Sept. 12.

Colberg said he does not think Van Flein has received any money from the state. Palin's gubernatorial spokesman Bill McAllister said that's his understanding as well. Van Flein said the state is not paying his fees and that the Palins are responsible. But he wouldn't say whether they were paying directly, or if the money is coming from the McCain campaign or some other source.

Subpoenaed Palin aides could be found in contempt

WHO IS PAYING THE BILLS?

Colberg said an example showing how the Legislature's investigation is flawed was lawmakers choosing not to subpoena former Palin chief of staff Mike Tibbles, who is now managing U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens' campaign for re-election.

"(Tibbles is) a key witness by any measure, and they said we won't subpoena you and the explanation that is given is - 'there is no political will.' Now what does that say about the process?" Colberg said.

The legislators also didn't subpoena Palin, saying they wanted to "de-escalate" the standoff with the governor. They did subpoena Palin's husband, Todd.

Todd Palin and two others refused last week to honor the Legislature's subpoenas.

Sarah and Todd Palin are both represented in the Troopergate investigation by an Anchorage attorney, Thomas Van Flein. There's some dispute over just whom Van Flein is working for. Colberg said Friday that Van Flein is on contract with the state to represent the governor, although the state has nothing to do with his representation of Todd.

But Van Flein, who has been getting advice from a lawyer working on the McCain-Palin campaign, insists he canceled the state contract on Sept. 12.

Colberg said he does not think Van Flein has received any money from the state. Palin's gubernatorial spokesman, Bill McAllister, said that's his understanding as well. Van Flein said the state is not paying his fees and that the Palins are responsible. But he wouldn't say whether they were paying directly, or if the money is coming from the McCain campaign or some other source.

Wednesday, Sept. 17, 2008

ANCHORAGE, Alaska-- The battle over subpoenas issued to Palin administration officials raged on Wednesday, with accusations that the John McCain-Sarah Palin campaign has co-opted the state Department of Law.

There was reaction from the head of the Legislative Council, a day after Attorney General Talis Colberg announced state workers will not comply with subpoenas in the Legislature's investigation.

Legislative Council Chair Sen. Kim Elton accused the attorney general of breaking his word on a deal the attorney general proposed. And Colberg's rejection of the subpoenas is prompting allegations that the McCain-Palin campaign has taken over the state's Department of Law.

Days before investigator Steve Branchflower appeared before lawmakers seeking subpoenas in his probe into the governor's firing of Walt Monegan, the attorney general made an offer to Elton to protect state workers from criminal prosecution if they had looked at personnel files.

Senior Assistant Attorney General Mike Barnhill wrote to Elton on Sept. 9, saying, "If the legislative council will acknowledge in writing its agreement with the department of law's interpretation, the department of law will drop its objections and the depositions may proceed without subpoenas."

Then after the hearing with Branchflower, Elton wrote back to the Department of Law agreeing.

I stipulate in my role as a chair of the Legislative Council and on behalf of the council that your interpretation of the law is correct," Elton wrote.

Elton thought he had a deal until Tuesday night when Colberg announced state workers will not testify. Colberg did not cite any legal reason for ignoring the subpoenas.

And after the announcement, officials said Colberg hopped on a plane to Kansas for a vacation.

"It appears that the department is in complete disarray," said Sen. Bill Wielechowski. "It appears that the McCain campaign is co-opting our Department of Law and basically calling the shots and I think that's pretty clear from some of the actions we've seen over the past couple of days."

In a letter to Colberg Wednesday from Elton, Elton accuses Colberg of compromising the investigation.

"In four paragraphs, you've broken a deal that was accepted by your office and received by Mr.Branchflower after the Senate Judiciary Committee issued subpoenas," Elton writes. "Further your brand new position eviscerates weeks of comments on the record by several parties, including the governor."

The governor's office issued an additional statement Wednesday evening that said "the department of law remains separate and will continue to remain separate from the presidential /vice presidential campaign."

The House and Senate Judiciary committees are scheduled to meet Friday to discuss the status of the investigation.

Lawsuit Is Filed to Halt Alaska Dismissal Inquiry

By SERGE F. KOVALESKI and JO BECKER

ANCHORAGE — Five Republican state lawmakers on Tuesday filed a lawsuit seeking to halt an inquiry into Gov. Sarah Palin's dismissal of her public safety commissioner, arguing that the Legislature has exceeded its authority by conducting a "McCarthyistic investigation."

The lawsuit, filed in the state's Superior Court, comes as the McCain-Palin campaign has escalated its involvement in the bipartisan inquiry, providing Ms. Palin's lawyer with help and mounting a public relations offensive.

The legal action marks the most aggressive challenge yet to the two-month-old investigation, which Ms. Palin initially said she would cooperate with.

The campaign said Tuesday that it had no involvement in the decision to file the lawsuit.

The lawmakers are being represented by a local lawyer, Kevin G. Clarkson, and the Liberty Legal Institute, which is based in Texas and has a history of taking up conservative causes.

Hiram Sasser, director of litigation for the institute, said he had not spoken with anyone at the McCain campaign, but was contacted by Mr. Clarkson, who sought him out because of his constitutional expertise. Mr. Sasser's co-counsel in the case is Kelly J. Shackelford, who founded the institute. He told reporters at the Republican convention that Mr. McCain's selection of Ms. Palin "resurrected" the party's social conservative base.

The lawsuit, consisting of 26 pages, was filed against two Democrats, State Senator Hollis French, who is overseeing the investigation, and Senator Kim Elton, who is the chairman of the Legislative Council, which voted on July 28 to open the inquiry; and Stephen E. Branchflower, the independent investigator, a former Anchorage prosecutor who now lives in South Carolina.

The plaintiffs said they hoped to persuade the Legislative Council, a bipartisan body of House and Senate members who can convene to make decisions when the Legislature is not in session, to drop the inquiry by naming it in the lawsuit.

At the heart of the lawsuit is the argument that the inquiry exceeds the Legislature's constitutional power and that the process has been handled in a politically biased fashion intended to besmirch Ms. Palin's reputation and affect the outcome of the November elections.

"The defendants are conducting a 'McCarthyistic' investigation in an unlawful" and "partial and partisan political manner," the lawsuit said.

The ethics case has its roots in Ms. Palin's decision this summer to dismiss Alaska's public safety commissioner, Walt Monegan, who contends that he was dismissed for refusing to fire Ms. Palin's former brother-in-law, Mike Wooten, a state trooper.

Ms. Palin has denied that, saying his dismissal stemmed from his "insubordination" over budget matters.

Tuesday's lawsuit contends that the investigators have a "predisposition to make findings against Governor Palin" and are manipulating the timing of the inquiry "so as to affect the outcome of elections" by not agreeing to release the report after Nov. 4. Lawmakers have said the report would be completed by Oct. 10 to give both sides ample time to respond. "There is no nonpartisan reason that" the investigation "needs to be completed prior to the election on Nov. 4, 2008," the lawsuit said.

The lawsuit singles out Mr. French and Mr. Elton, pointing out that Mr. Elton gave $2,000 to the Obama campaign and citing comments in which Mr. French called Mr. McCain's selection of Ms. Palin a "bad choice." It also accuses Mr. Branchflower of having a conflict of interest because his wife once worked under Mr. Monegan. Mr. Elton said in a written statement that while the lawsuit is a distraction, the investigation would continue.

Among the five lawmakers who filed the suit was Representative Wes Keller, an elder in Ms. Palin's church whom she appointed to his seat.

The reaction among their Republican colleagues was mixed. The House Speaker, John Harris, asked the Legislative Council to convene a meeting within the week to discuss the status of the investigation. "What started as a bipartisan and impartial effort is becoming overshadowed by public comments from individuals at both ends of the political spectrum," Mr. Harris said in a letter to Mr. Elton.

State Senate President Lyda Green, a Republican who has frequently clashed with Ms. Palin over policy, said the lawmakers who filed it were all "step-by-step followers" of Ms. Palin.

"The McCain campaign is the one that has made this partisan," Ms. Green said. "This was 100 percent bipartisan effort on the part of the Legislature to ask questions that deserve to be answered."

The attorney general told lawmakers Tuesday that members of Ms. Palin's administration who had been subpoened would not cooperate with the investigation.

Ms. Palin's lawyer has sought to move the investigation to the state Personnel Board, whose members are appointed by the governor for four-year terms. But on Tuesday, Ed O'Callaghan, a former senior Justice Department official advising the campaign and Ms. Palin's lawyer, said that even if Ms. Palin succeeds she had not yet decided if she would testify.

A person briefed on the campaign activities in Anchorage also said outside lawyers in coordination with the campaign had volunteered legal advice to Ms. Palin's lawyer. One volunteer is currently in Anchorage, and one or two others have been here to plot legal strategy over the past few weeks, the source said. Taylor Griffin, a campaign spokesman, declined to identify the lawyers by name.

A handful of Alaskans, several of them prominent Republican donors, sought to have the investigation thrown out.

Michael Powell contributed reporting.

SENATOR KIM ELTON

Senator Elton Responds to Lawsuit

For Immediate Release: September 16, 2008

(JUNEAU) - The Judiciary, the third branch of government, is now part of the drama surrounding the Legislative Council's investigation into "the circumstances and events surrounding the termination of former Public Safety Commissioner Monegan and potential abuses of power and/or improper actions by members of the executive branch." Five legislators now are asking the courts to stop an investigation unanimously endorsed by the Legislative Council several weeks before Gov. Sarah Palin was elevated to the Republican national ticket as a vice presidential nominee.

The suit filed in the Superior Court of the State of Alaska seeks "declaratory and injunctive relief in the investigation," according to the attorney hired by Reps. Wes Keller, Mike Kelly, and Bob Lynn along with Sens. Tom Wagoner and Fred Dyson.

Named in the suit in addition to the Council were: Sens. Kim Elton, chair of the Council; Hollis French, project director for the investigation; and Steven Branchflower, the investigator hired by the Council.

"While the suit is a distraction," Sen. Elton said today, "I'm comfortable with the notion that the court will review the substance of the suit and find the Council acted properly and that the decisions made during the course of the investigation so far are appropriate and well within the mandate of the Council." He added the investigation will continue pending a ruling from the court.

"The silver lining in this action initiated by the five lawmakers," Elton said, "is that some of that debate now has been kicked to the judicial branch which, unlike the legislature and the governor's office, is more insulated from the red-hot passion of presidential politics."

Elton noted an attorney will be hired to represent the named parties in the suit though a decision on who that attorney will be has not yet been made.

Ethics Adviser Warned Palin About Trooper Issue

Letter Described Situation as 'Grave,' Called for Apology

By JIM CARLTON
September 11, 2008; Page A8

ANCHORAGE, Alaska -- An informal adviser who has counseled Gov. Sarah Palin on ethics issues urged her in July to apologize for her handling of the dismissal of the state's public safety commissioner and warned that the matter could snowball into a bigger scandal.

Associated Press

Alaska State Trooper Mike Wooten (right) answers questions about the 'Troopergate' investigation on Tuesday.

He also said, in a letter reviewed by The Wall Street Journal, that she should fire any aides who had raised concerns with the chief over a state trooper who was involved in a bitter divorce with the governor's sister.

In the letter, written before Sen. John McCain picked the Alaska governor as his running mate, former U.S. Attorney Wevley Shea warned Gov. Palin that "the situation is now grave" and recommended that she and her husband, Todd Palin, apologize for "overreaching or perceived overreaching" for using her position to try to get Trooper Mike Wooten fired from the force.

Mr. Shea was acting on his own in writing the letter, with no official capacity. In late 2006, Gov. Palin asked him to co-write an ethics report for Gov. Palin with then-House Democratic leader Ethan Berkowitz that recommended new financial-disclosure rules for elected and appointed officials in the statehouse. That report served as a key document for the ethics bill she later signed into law.

Read the letters from Wevley Shea to Gov. Palin and her aides.

After his initial letter in July, Mr. Shea followed up with another letter, dated Aug. 4, in which he told Gov. Palin that she probably couldn't legally shun a legislative investigation into the firing of Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan.

Gov. Palin has taken the opposite tack, hiring a private attorney to advise in a matter that has become known as "Troopergate." Seven Palin administration employees have refused to meet with the independent investigator. The McCain-Palin campaign has argued that the state legislature has no right to look into the matter. Palin spokesmen say the state personnel board is the appropriate investigative body, setting up a showdown between the state's legislative and executive branches.

The McCain-Palin campaign referred comment on the letters to the governor's office, which confirmed receipt of them. "While we can't always act on every idea, Gov. Palin thanks Mr. Shea for his counsel," Sharon Leighow, the governor's deputy press secretary, said in a statement.

Members of the House and Judiciary committees overseeing the probe -- which lawmakers want wrapped up by early October -- meet Friday to consider issuing subpoenas to the governor's staff.

Mr. Shea, in his Aug. 4 letter, warned Gov. Palin against taking her current approach. "My feeling is this is not a personnel matter. It doesn't have anything to do with the governing of the state of Alaska," he said in an interview this week.

The governor has denied any wrongdoing in the matter and said the commissioner was removed over an unrelated budget dispute. After bipartisan committees of the state legislature in late July approved $100,000 to hire an independent investigator to see if any laws were broken, Gov. Palin pledged the full cooperation of herself and her staff.

Palin May Move to Block Subpoenas in Trooper Case

Bloomberg.com

Timothy J. Burger and Tony Hopfinger
Thu Sep 11, 12:02 PM ET

Sept. 11 (Bloomberg) -- A top law enforcement official in Alaska Governor Sarah Palin's administration is considering steps to block a legislative probe into allegations she improperly fired the state's No. 1 police official.

The legislature's report on the conduct of Republican vice presidential nominee Palin may be released next month, just weeks before the presidential election.

Senior Assistant Attorney General Michael Barnhill, in a letter to Alaska lawmakers, questioned whether the investigation is biased and threatened to try to quash subpoenas for seven Palin administration officials who have refused to be interviewed in the probe. Legislative leaders meet tomorrow to consider issuing the subpoenas.

``The eyes of the nation have now turned upon us," Barnhill said in the letter. ``We think there is a legitimate concern that this investigation is no longer being conducted in a fair manner." The chief investigator ``may have prejudged the outcome," he said.

Barnhill's seven-page letter said Hollis French, a Democratic senator, has publicly commented that Palin or her aides may have broken the law by allegedly obtaining personnel files of the fired state public safety commissioner, Walt Monegan.

Attorney General Talis Colberg, a Palin appointee, recused himself in the case. Barnhill works for Colberg.

Delaying the Probe

The Sept. 9 letter to Alaska State Senator Kim Elton, a Democrat, and other lawmakers suggests Palin's supporters are trying to delay completion of the so-called Troopergate investigation until well past its Oct. 10 target date and the Nov. 4 election that will decide whether Palin becomes vice president under John McCain. French didn't return calls seeking comment.

Lawmakers are reviewing whether Palin dismissed Monegan on July 11 after he resisted pressure to fire a state trooper, Mike Wooten, who was involved in a contentious divorce from the governor's sister.

Monegan told the Anchorage Daily News that the pressure came from Palin, her husband, Todd, and some of her aides. Palin has denied exerting any pressure on Monegan and says she dismissed Monegan to take the department in a new direction.

Barnhill said issuing subpoenas would violate a clause in the state's constitution that protects individual reputations from McCarthy-like smear tactics. Alaska became a state in 1959, a few years after hearings led by Wisconsin Senator Joseph McCarthy ruined the careers of many government employees who were accused of having ties to the Communist Party.

McCarthy Hearings

Barnhill's letter cited a reference to the McCarthy hearings from the state's constitutional convention.

The moves by Palin's attorney general's office could precipitate a ``little mini constitutional crisis," Jay Ramras, a Republican representative who chairs the House Judiciary Committee, said in a phone interview. ``It's a shame because Alaska is going to air its dirty laundry in front of the national public in a politically charged environment."

``We have to prevent this because it is going to diminish the reputation of Alaska," Ramras said.

Since McCain picked Palin, seven of her aides have declined to be interviewed by an investigator hired by the Alaska legislature, according to the House and Senate Judiciary committees. The committees meet tomorrow in Anchorage to decide whether to issue subpoenas.

Reviewing Personnel Files

Barnhill said in the letter that it is legal and part of the governor's job for her and her staff to review personnel files, though such files could theoretically ``be handled inappropriately." He said, ``At this point, the Department of Law knows of no evidence that suggests that any Department of Administration employees violated the State Personnel Act in handling Trooper Wooten's personnel file."

Barnhill said he may take the matter to court if lawmakers don't give written assurance that they agree with his reading of the law -- and that the Palin administration isn't in danger of prosecution.

``The stakes for these" employees, Barnhill wrote, ``are high," because if French's ``apparent legal view is correct, it is theoretically possible that these employees could be subjected to criminal prosecution and forfeiture of their jobs" if found to have violated the law.

Barnhill also questioned the legislative investigation on an array of other grounds, including the selection of its investigator, its tactics, indications that it is broadening to ``new and unidentified targets," alleged prejudging of the case, and -- with the presidential election drawing near -- its timing.

``We continue to recommend that our clients cooperate with the investigation," assuming the Legislature doesn't ``completely abrogate its responsibilities," Barnhill wrote.

``But we reserve the right to revisit whether the public interest is truly being served by the manner in which this investigation is currently being conducted," he wrote.

Partisan flap

No need to change overseer of Legislature's Troopergate work

State Senate Judiciary Chairman Hollis French is still "project manager" for the legislature's investigation into Gov. Palin's Troopergage -- and there's nothing wrong with that.

A Republican attempt to remove the Anchorage Democrat from overseeing the investigation has fizzled. Led by North Pole Rep. Jack Coghill, a supporter of John McCain, it was a partisan overreaction to comments Sen. French made about where the investigation, now being done independently by a former prosecutor, might lead.

The key word there is "might."

Yes, Sen. French said things that, stripped of context, might sound like he prejudged the outcome. Early on, he mentioned the I-word -- the findings might lead to "impeachment." Recently, he said the final report might produce an "October surprise" in the presidential election.

The key word, again, is "might." He was discussing the full range of possibilities, from no wrongdoing by the governor to the possibility of removal from office.

When he used the I-word -- speaking to the Wall Street Journal -- he was talking about "a worst-case scenario," as the Journal's July 30 story indicated. It was a statement of possible outcomes, not a prediction.

Around the same time in July, Sen. French told the Daily News that accusations of wrongdoing by Gov. Palin are "not a slam-dunk. She's got a defense." (See our July 22 editorial.)

Sen. French realized from the beginning that politics could interfere with a responsible, objective investigation into the case. "We need to hand this off to someone," Sen. French said at the time -- and that's what the Legislature did. All the investigative work is being done by a respected former prosecutor, Steve Branchflower.

"Steve Branchflower is the one gathering facts and writing the report," Sen. French said Monday. "And facts are facts. I can't create them or destroy them."

One troubling fact is already out on the table -- because Gov. Palin herself put it there. She released the tape on which her aide Frank Bailey is telling a trooper lieutenant that "Sarah and Todd" can't figure out why her ex-brother-in-law is still a trooper. Bailey also refers to information about the brother-in-law that may have come from confidential personnel or workers compensation files.

When French told ABC News the Legislature's report on Troopergate is "likely to be damaging to the governor's administration," he was stating the obvious. It will include Bailey's phone call, which has already been "damaging" to her administration.

Nonetheless, Sen. French could have handled the national media frenzy over Troopergate better -- as he himself admits.

"I should have had my project director hat screwed on more tightly and kept my mouth shut," he said Monday.

Sen. French and his Republican colleagues running the House Judiciary Committee have tried to de-escalate the politically charged environment surrounding Troopergate.

They have moved up the target date for issuing investigator Branchflower's report, so it will come out several weeks before the November election. They told Gov. Palin the Legislature doesn't plan to subpoena her, in hopes she'll honor her promise to cooperate and agree to be interviewed.

Still, the McCain campaign and its allies at Fox News are on the attack against Sen. French. Tuesday, the campaign sent e-mails about a Fox News broadcast that echoes Republican Rep. John Coghill's partisan charges and fingers Sen. French as a partisan supporter of Barack Obama.

And their point is?

"It's not surprising each side is supporting the nominee of our party," French said Monday. "That's why I'm not doing the investigation. That's why Jack Coghill is not doing the investigation. That's why Steve Branchflower is doing the investigation."

BOTTOM LINE: Democrats and Republicans alike should chill out and let the Legislature's independent investigator do his work on Troopergate.

The state has hired a private lawyer to represent Gov. Sarah Palin's office in the Legislature's investigation into the firing of former Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan. The lawyer already has challenged whether lawmakers even have authority to oversee the inquiry.

The state Department of Law hired Thomas Van Flein, an Anchorage attorney with expertise in employment law and professional liability, because Attorney General Talis Colberg has a potential conflict of interest and shouldn't represent the governor, Van Flein said Monday.

His work started Aug. 21. He's being paid $185 an hour, lower than his usual rate, to represent Palin and others in the governor's office, he said. He is initially authorized to spend up to $95,000.

The state's Legislative Council, a bipartisan panel of senators and representatives, authorized the investigation last month and approved spending of $100,000. They've hired a special counsel, retired state prosecutor Steve Branchflower.

The investigation concerns whether Palin or others in her administration abused their power or improperly pressured Monegan to fire a state trooper who is Palin's ex-brother-in-law. Palin and her father have said Trooper Mike Wooten was a "loose cannon" who made threats against them. The investigation has received national attention since Sen. John McCain, the apparent Republican nominee for president, chose Palin as his running mate Friday.

A four-page backgrounder on the Wooten matter put out Monday by the McCain/Palin campaign says that Palin's husband, Todd, and members of her staff had made inquiries "about the appropriate Department of Public Safety procedures for dealing with someone they considered a dangerous person and rogue trooper."

Palin has denied pressuring Monegan. The campaign says she only recently became aware of efforts by Todd and others.

Because Colberg has acknowledged contacting Monegan about Wooten, he's a potential witness, Van Flein said Monday. So an outside law firm needed to be brought in to represent the governor's office, he said.

He said the governor's office welcomes the inquiry and will cooperate.

WHOSE JURISDICTION?

Van Flein said the investigation should be handled by the state Personnel Board, not the Legislature, because it's "statutorily mandated" to handle ethics cases. The three-member Personnel Board is appointed by the governor.

In a letter to Branchflower, Van Flein also asked for all witness statements, documents and other materials collected in the course of the investigation.

"No" to both requests, said state Sen. Hollis French, an Anchorage Democrat and former state prosecutor who is project director for the legislative investigation.

The Legislature has its own power of investigation, French wrote to Van Flein on Monday.

"Governor Palin has repeatedly stated that she has nothing to hide and that she and her administration will cooperate fully with this investigation. Is your client aware that you seem to be challenging the Legislature's jurisdiction?" French wrote.

As to witness statements, French said he had instructed Branchflower not to provide them. Colberg conducted a separate inquiry for the governor, and the governor can get statements from him, French noted.

"I think you will agree that it would be highly unusual for an investigator to share information with one of the targets of the investigation," French wrote. "I am unaware of any precedent for such an arrangement."

The back-and-forth quickly escalated.

"Our concern is that Hollis French turns into Ken Starr and uses public money to pursue a political vendetta rather than truly pursue an honest inquiry into an alleged ethics issue," Van Flein said in an interview.

"How does he explain the unanimous vote (to pursue the investigation) by the Republican-dominated Legislative Council?" French shot back.

Later in the day, French added, "It's too bad the governor has stooped to hiring a name-calling lawyer. That doesn't seem very open and transparent does it?"

WAITING FOR PALIN

Branchflower hasn't been able to set up an interview with Palin. French said the state will fly Branchflower to wherever Palin is on the campaign trail if needed.

"Clearly the governor's new political role will make it more challenging for her to make time for this investigation," French wrote. But Palin needs to be interviewed sometime in September, he said.

Van Flein said the investigation is "bad timing" in the middle of a presidential campaign. He said he couldn't guarantee her availability this month.

If witnesses aren't available, French wrote, he'll ask the Senate Judiciary Committee, which he chairs, to issue subpoenas.

Van Flein said several people from the McCain campaign contacted him about the Wooten matter as part of the vetting process, before Palin was announced as McCain's pick.

The lawyer said he thinks Palin will be vindicated.

"We have a governor that exercised her constitutional right to terminate a commissioner. We have a family concerned about their safety. We have them asking what do you do with a trooper ... who might pose a threat.

"We don't have any sex. We don't have any drugs. And there's no blue dress. Nor are there any shady real estate deals here," Van Flein said. "In the big picture, I think people are going to be disappointed that this is not a scandal."

GOVERNOR PALIN CALLS FOR FORMAL REVIEW OF REPLACEMENT OF COMMISSIONER MONEGAN

In 2005 and early 2006, State Trooper Mike Wooten was the subject of a court-imposed Domestic Violence Protective Order and, as I learned in 2008, an order suspending him from the Alaska State Troopers for violent behavior. Some of this violent behavior was directed against my family (including my sister, who was divorced from Trooper Wooten in 2006), and included threats against my father. Over the past several weeks, there has been a suggestion that these events are somehow connected to my decision in 2008 to replace Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan, whom I appointed to the position after becoming Governor and after the events involving Trooper Wooten had occurred. There is no such connection. To put these matters to rest, on Monday, September 1, 2008, I formally asked the Alaska Personnel Board to investigate the allegations that have been made in the media about my replacement of Walt Monegan.

Concerns about Trooper Wooten's behavior were aired both by members of my family and others before Mr. Monegan ever took office as Public Safety Commissioner. There is absolutely nothing improper about voicing concerns about Trooper Wooten -- including threats to "bring" the governor and family members "down" -- with Mr. Monegan or his predecessor—complaints about State Troopers are supposed to go to the Commissioner.[1] Nor is there anything wrong with Mr. Monegan or his predecessor receiving information about threats specifically directed at me or my family. Threats of violence against a public official, and his or her family, fall within the responsibilities of the Department of Public Safety. In any event, the details about Trooper Wooten's behavior are outlined in my filing, and I will not repeat them here. Suffice it to say that both the Anchorage Superior Court and the Department of Public Safety issued orders and findings concluding that he had engaged in serious, violent misconduct.

Neither my decision to appoint Walt Monegan as Public Safety Commissioner in 2006 nor my decision to replace him in 2008 had anything to do with Trooper Wooten. Mr. Monegan has publicly stated that "no one ever said fire Wooten. Not the governor. Not Todd. Not any of the other staff." The fact of the matter is that, while I was impressed with Mr. Monegan's abilities in many respects, he and I had differences of opinion on budget matters that have been a priority of my administration since the beginning, and I therefore decided to appoint a replacement commissioner and asked Mr. Monegan to take another leadership position in the government that was better suited to his skills and less prone to friction over budget matters. As Governor, I have the authority to hire and fire Public Safety Commissioners and other cabinet members and agency heads for any reason.[2] Mr. Monegan himself recognized as much in a letter he wrote at the time of his departure.

Last night, I initiated a proceeding before the state personnel board because that is the agency charged by law with addressing complaints about hiring and firing matters, and ethical issues in general, involving the Governor.[3] It is important to note that no one has actually filed a complaint against me, including Mr. Monegan, who would have had an obligation to notify the Personnel Board if he believed there had been misconduct in connection with his replacement.[4] Nonetheless, the people of Alaska—and of the nation—deserve to have a decision from the proper tribunal putting their minds at ease that suggestions of misconduct that have circulated on the Internet and in some media outlets are not true. I therefore am waiving the confidentiality that usually covers personnel board complaints,[5] and look forward to the personnel board's investigation and to moving forward with the people's business.

Palin hires attorney for public safety controversy

Anchorage, Alaska -- While Sarah Palin heads toward her official nomination at the Republican National Convention, she's taking steps here at home to get legal advice on the controversy over her firing of Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan.

Palin has hired an attorney, and he has a list of demands.

Her attorney, Thomas Van Flein wants to know what the investigator hired by the Legislature knows.

But Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, who is the project director for the investigation, said that's not going to happen.

It was back in August when the announcement came down.

"As a result of the inquiry by the Department of Law, I do now have to tell Alaskans that such pressure could have been perceived to exist, although I have only now become aware of it," Palin said in an August 13 statement.

Some allege the governor's staff pushed to get the governor's former brother-in-law, Trooper Mike Wooten, fired, and that Palin fired Commissioner Monegan because he wouldn't terminate Wooten.

Those allegations led to an investigation by the Legislature.

And, most recently, the governor hired a private attorney to represent her.

Thomas Van Flein now represents Palin and her office.

"The governor is entitled to representation through council, and her attorney general was unable to provide it in this case," Van Flein said. "There's nothing unusual or surprising about that."

Van Flein said he was hired by the Department of Law because Attorney General Talis Colberg is unable to represent Palin.

"The Department of Law had a potential conflict of interest, because Mr. Colberg, Attorney General Colberg, made contact with Mr. Monegan about Trooper Wooten," Van Flein said. "That would make him a potential witness, and thus there's a potential conflict."

But there are about 200 lawyers currently on the state pay roll that should be able to handle the matter, French said.

Van Flein wrote a letter asking to see what, if anything, the Legislature's investigator, Steve Branchflower, had uncovered.

But Van Flein was told that Blanchflower wouldn't be sharing anything.

"I've instructed Mr. Branchflower to not comply with that request," French said. "I think it's fairly unusual for the lawyer that's representing one of the targets of the investigation to ask to see the evidence, so we're -- Mr. Branchflower I don't think will be sharing evidence."

Van Flein said he was not surprised by French's response, but he is disappointed.

"It's starting to take on aspects of a secret proceeding, a political proceeding, much in the vein of Ken Star," Van Flein said.

French has other concerns, too, he said.

"The governor said over and over she has nothing to hide, she's open and transparent, she's willing to sit down and talk, but I'm concerned about some of the implications of the letter, about scheduling, working it out with this person or that person, or whether we're going to get some delays out of that," French said.

The investigation is certainly a challenge to a vice presidential contender, with an outcome expected just before the presidential election.

French said he expects Branchflower's findings by Oct. 31but hopes for it to be finished sooner.

Just for the record.....

On Tuesday, Governor Sarah Palin's appointed Attorney General sent a letter to state Sen. Hollis French, the Democrat overseeing the "Troopergate" investigation, and asked that the subpoenas that were issued last week to comple testimony be withdrawn.

Attorney General Talis Colberg also stated the employees would refuse to appear unless either the full state Senate or the entire Legislature votes to compel their testimony.

According to Colberg, the employees are caught between their respect for the Legislature and their loyalty to the governor, who initially agreed to cooperate with the inquiry but has increasingly opposed and has attempted to delay it since beoming John McCain's running mate.

"This is an untenable position for our clients because the governor has so strongly stated that the subpoenas issued by your committee are of questionable validity," Colberg wrote.

Last week, the Senate Judiciary Committee subpoenaed 13 people. They include 10 employees of Palin's administration and three who are not: her husband, Todd Palin; John Bitney, Palin's former legislative liaison who now is chief of staff for Republican House Speaker John Harris; and Murlene Wilkes, a state contractor.

> This is quite a change of tune for Colberg, who just a month ago came under questions for talking to potential witnesses ahead of special investigator Steve Branchflower.
> Both Palin and Colberg stated at the time he was gathering evidence to hand over to Branchflower for the investigation.

However today, four weeks later, both Colberg and Palin are questioning the validity of the investigation.

Also on Tuesday, the McCain campaign rolled out what they're calling their "Truth Squad", which consists of former Palin spokesperson Meg Stapleton and a New York lawyer named Ed O'Callahan.

During there initial press conference they claimed that Democratic State Senator Hollis French, manipulated the witness list by leaving off the name of Palin's former Chief of Staff Mike Tibbles.

However they were wrong; Franch had nothing to do with leaving Tibbles name of the list. The move was made by Republican Representative Jay Ramras who felt that Tibbles should be left off because he is now in the private sector and doesn't have the advantage of a state lawyer to defend himself.

So on their first day, the McCain truth squad came up with a false accusation.

> So just for the record, we'll share the actual truth with the Meg and Ed about this investigation so they'll know better next time:

Lawmakers seek outside inquiry of Monegan firing - KTUU-TV - July 18, 2008:

Some lawmakers are asking for more answers to the reasons Palin had for firing Monegan. Palin, in Wasilla for the Governor's Picnic, said she would not fight such an effort to look into this matter by an independent investigator.

"We would never prohibit, or be less than enthusiastic about any kind of investigation. Let's deal in the facts, and you do that via investigation," Palin said.

Senate will look into Monegan firing - KTUU-TV – July 19, 2008:

While the governor said there is no need for an investigation from an outside investigator, she said she will answer any questions from lawmakers, media and the public.

Public Safety already headed in 'new direction,' some say - Anchorage Daily News - July 22, 2008:

The governor denies any wrongdoing, and says she welcomes any questions on the matter.

Palin under fire – Legislature appears poised to appoint investigator - Aftermath of Monegan Dismissal, Anchorage Daily News - July 22, 2008:

"I've said all along, hold me accountable," Palin told reporters in Juneau. "And I'm telling the truth when I say there was never pressure put on Commissioner Monegan."

Lawmakers move to investigate Monegan ouster, KTUU-TV – July 24, 2008:

The governor says she welcomes the investigation. "I have absolutely nothing to hide and am happy to answer any questions," she said. "I'm happy to answer any questions between now and when they do conduct an investigation also."

Gov. Palin said last weekend that she did not think an independent investigator was needed. "That being the route that they choose, then so be it," she said. "I'm happy to comply, to cooperate. I have absolutely nothing to hide. No problem with an independent investigation."

Hired help will probe Monegan dismissal - $100,000: Legislators vote to have independent investigator look into controversial firing - Anchorage Daily News –July 29, 2008:

"The governor has said all along that she will fully cooperate with an investigation and her staff will cooperate as well," Leighow said.

Branchflower to investigate in Monegan firing - KTUU-TV – August 1, 2008:

"I've heard (Branchflower's) name, or course, over the years in Alaska," Palin said. "I know he's a prosecutor, probably a heavy duty prosecutor, and so that kind of puzzles us why we are going down that road when we are very, very open to answering any questions anybody has of me or administrators."

PRESS RELEASE: GOVERNOR TO TURN OVER FINDINGS - Office of the Governor – August 13, 2008:

Governor Palin has directed all her staff to cooperate fully with Branchflower.

Palin administration cooperating with investigator - KTUU-TV – August 15, 2008:

Lawmakers had wanted to know if Steve Branchflower needed them to issues subpoenas to require witnesses to talk to him about Gov. Sarah Palin's decision to fire Monegan and about the actions of her staffers. But State Sen. Hollis French says the meeting was cancelled because there's no need for subpoenas at this point.

Palin aide Frank Bailey placed on administrative leave - KTUU-TV – August 19, 2008:

"We figured, if there is an investigation going on with an unknown outcome – we don't know exactly what (special investigator) Mr. Branchflower is going to conclude – that Mr. Bailey just needed to step away from the situation, although be available to the investigator," [Palin spokesman] McAllister said. The governor's office also says that Bailey will cooperate fully with the investigation.

Palin aide put on leave in firing flap, BAILEY: Official who made all inquiring about trooper taken "out of the mix." - Anchorage Daily News – August 20, 2008:

Spokeswoman Sharon Leighow said that with Bailey still a state employee, Palin "can direct him to assist Mr. Branchflower, thereby fulfilling her pledge to Alaskans to cooperate fully with the investigation."

Re: Governor Palin and Trooper Investigation - McCain Campaign Press Release – August 30, 2008:

Governor Palin is an open book on this – she did nothing wrong and has nothing to hide. As a reformer and a leader on ethics reform, she has been happy to cooperate fully in the inquiry of this matter.

Attorney challenges Monegan firing inquiry – Anchorage Daily News – September 2, 2008:

He [Governor Palin's Lawyer Mr. Van Flein] said the governor's office welcomes the inquiry and will cooperate. Palin has made repeated public statements that she'll cooperate, and that hasn't changed at this point, Van Flein says.

http://abcnews.go.com/images/Blotter/Van%20Flein%20final%20reponse%20pdf.pdf  French says the McCain campaign failed to contact any of the Senators involved in the investigation during the vetting process of Gov. Palin. "If they had done their job they never would have picked her," said French. "Now they may have to deal with an October surprise," he said, referring to the scheduled release Oct. 31 of the committee's final report. The Alaska state senator running an investigation of Gov. Palin says the McCain campaign is using stall tactics to prevent him from releasing his final report by Oct. 31, four days before the November election. "It's likely to be damaging to the Governor's administration," said Senator Hollis French, a Democrat, appointed the project manager for a bi-partisan State Senate Legislative Counsel Committee investigation of claims that Palin abused her office to get the Alaska public safety commissioner, Walt Monegan, fired. ***

I have 2 serious questions:

Submitted by JJUS (not verified) on Wed, 2008-09-17 07:07.

(1) How can she credibly claim that Monegan was insubordinate when she previously praised his work and offered him another job on the Alcohol Control Board (ABC)? See KTVA 8-15-08 article, "Governor and staff's latest explanations leave more questions" (But weeks ago she praised Monegan for his abilities to solve those same issues when offering him a job as the director of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board. "I recognized Frank Bailey, Boards and Commissions Director that Walt's interests and strengths could be put to good use as he could concentrate exclusively on a couple of issues that were his interest, that be bootlegging and alcohol problems in rural Alaska," said Palin on July 17th.); see also Gov. Palin Press RELEASE No. 08-122 (7/17/08). (2) How can she claim she fired him because he wasn't doing enough to combat bootlegging and alcohol abuse problems, yet offer him a new job in precisely that field? See KTVA 8-15-08 article ("I was concerned also that we were not doing enough on continuing alcohol abuse issues that I wanted to see tackled, including the bootlegging issues in rural Alaska"); See also CNBC interview ('What does a VP do?' video) ("it was the Commissioner that we were seeking more results, more action to fill, uh, vacant trooper positions, to deal with bootlegging and alcohol abuse problems in our rural villages especially. Um, just needed some new direction, a lot of new energy in that position. That is why the replacement took place there of the Commissioner of public safety.") There are only 2 options here: (A) She is lying, and in the process willing to playing politics with state procedure and to smear the reputation of a well-respected police chief (not to mention lying about ever contacting or pressuring Monegan about Wooten); or (B) She is not lying, and she is so irrational that she offered a job to a guy to head up the ABC -- a task force she thinks is important (alcohol abuse/bootlegging, etc.) -- even though she claims she fired that same guy for failing to control alcohol abuse/bootlegging AND who she now accuses of insubordination. Which one is it?

Sara Leaves a Lot In Her Wake

Submitted by Anonymous (not verified) on Wed, 2008-09-17 06:35.

Another casuality of the Sara-normal behavior we are watching is that where I once enjoyed listening to radio hosts such as Rush, Hanity and Oreily I can now not stand to hear a word that comes out of their mouths. I always knew they each had their own bent and bias but thought they all were pretty intelegent men who did their research. They all sound like total idiots now as they discuss Sara Palin. I am someone who voted for Palin before I knew what a vicious wacko she really is. Just like Murkowski, Stevens, Young and Ruderich these radio hosts will realize they have been duped. Rush, Hanity and Oreily have not yet realized that Sara Palin despises them and every conservative value they hold. They are the "good old boys" she wants to throw under the bus and as others have said "it is getting really crowded under that bus".

Palin staff pushed to have trooper fired

Governor says she's learned calls were made about Wooten's ouster

By SEAN COCKERHAM
cockerham@adn.com

(08/14/08 01:34:27)

Gov. Sarah Palin on Wednesday revealed an audio recording that shows an aide pressuring the Public Safety Department to fire a state trooper embroiled in a custody battle with her sister.

Palin, who has previously said her administration didn't exert pressure to get rid of trooper Mike Wooten, also disclosed that members of her staff had made about two dozen contacts with public safety officials about the trooper.

"I do now have to tell Alaskans that such pressure could have been perceived to exist although I have only now become aware of it," Palin said.

But Palin said her decision to fire Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan last month had nothing to do with his refusal to dump trooper Mike Wooten.

The governor said evidence of what she called a "smoking gun" conversation, and other calls made by her aides, only recently surfaced as the attorney general started an inquiry at her request into the circumstances surrounding her firing of Monegan. Palin wanted the review because a special investigator hired by the Legislature is about to investigate the firing and a legislator has been quoted in a newspaper story talking about impeachment.

The majority of the calls came from Palin's chief of staff at the time, Mike Tibbles, according to information gathered by the state attorney general's office. Attorney General Talis Colberg and Palin's husband, Todd, also contacted Monegan about the trooper.

Palin said she'd only known about some of the contacts and never asked anyone on her staff to get in touch with state public safety officials about Wooten.

"Many of these inquiries were completely appropriate. However, the serial nature of the contacts could be perceived as some kind of pressure, presumably at my direction," she said.

Palin said the "most disturbing" was a phone call Frank Bailey, the governor's director of boards and commissions, made to trooper Lt. Rodney Dial in February. The Public Safety Department recorded the call, as it does routinely.

Palin, who said she'd only just learned of the call, released a recorded copy of it to the press on Wednesday. In it, Bailey clearly pressures the lieutenant.

'HORRIBLE RECRUITING TOOL'

Bailey told him during the conversation that Palin and her husband want to know why Wooten still has a job.

"Todd and Sarah are scratching their heads, 'Why on earth hasn't this, why is this guy still representing the department?' He's a horrible recruiting tool, you know," Bailey told the lieutenant.

Bailey made several accusations against Wooten in the call, including that he lied on his application. Dial asked Bailey how he knew about any issue with the application.

"I used to be a recruiter. I know a lot of times that information is extremely confidential," Dial told him.

Bailey replied he was reluctant to say but saw the application as part of Wooten's worker's compensation claim. Bailey, later in the call, then brought up Monegan again.

"I'm telling you honestly, you know, she really likes Walt a lot, but on this issue, she feels like it's, she doesn't know why there is absolutely no action for a year on this issue. It's very, very troubling to her and the family. I could definitely relay that," Bailey said.

Palin said Bailey wasn't speaking on her behalf and his comments were "just wrong."

Bailey said in a Wednesday interview that no one asked him to make the call and he doesn't know why he indicated in the call that he was speaking on behalf of the Palins. He said he was calling lieutenant Dial, who was the state troopers liaison to the Legislature and had volunteered on Palin's campaign, in order to try to get information about the troopers union and then brought up Wooten.

Bailey said he'd heard at a security briefing right after Palin was elected that Wooten had made a threat against Palin's family. He said he also had casual conversations with Todd Palin about the trooper. Bailey said Todd had expressed "general frustration with the situation" but never asked him to do anything about it.

"My fear was (Wooten) could fly off the handle and do something that was irreversible," Bailey said. "That concern, that fear, has always been in the back of my mind."

Palin said it's under discussion whether Bailey is going to keep his job in the administration.

COLBERG'S PHONE CALL

Attorney General Colberg also disclosed Wednesday that he'd made a call about Wooten. Colberg said he called Monegan several months ago after Todd Palin asked him about "the process" for when state troopers make death threats against the first family.

"I made an inquiry and was told by commissioner Monegan that there was a process in place and that it was handled and it was over. And I reported back to the first gentleman that there was nothing more that could be done," Colberg said.

Palin said her husband also contacted Monegan about a threat made by Wooten but backed off when Monegan indicated he couldn't get into the matter.

The family had alleged the threat in 2005, before Palin became governor. They said Wooten had told Palin's sister he would shoot their father if he got the sister a lawyer.

Wooten denied saying anything like that. But a trooper investigation concluded he did, although it wasn't a crime because he didn't threaten the father directly. Wooten's actions did violate trooper policy, the investigator found.

Palin said she was meeting with the investigator hired by the Legislature, Steve Branchflower, on Wednesday and would turn over everything gathered as part of the attorney general's inquiry. The Bailey phone call was the only one that Palin singled out as being wrong. Assistant Attorney General Mike Barnhill said all the calls from then-chief of staff Tibbles, who is now running Sen. Ted Stevens' re-election campaign, regarding Wooten looked to be appropriate.

"It's absolutely appropriate that a chief of staff was checking on staff issues and personnel, policy and procedure," Palin said.

Palin said no one from the Department of Public Safety -- including Monegan before his firing -- had complained they felt pressured regarding Wooten.

KOPP'S SEVERANCE PACKAGE

Colberg also disclosed Wednesday that Chuck Kopp, who Palin had appointed to replace Monegan as public safety commissioner, received a $10,000 state severance package after he resigned following just two weeks on the job.

It was in light of the fact that he left a comfortable 19-year career on the Kenai Peninsula and took a job that lasted less than two weeks," Colberg said.

Kopp, the former Kenai chief of police, resigned July 25 following disclosure of a 2005 sexual harassment complaint and letter of reprimand against him.

Monegan said in a Wednesday interview that he didn't get any severance package from the state.

WHY PALIN FIRED MONEGAN

Monegan was a Palin appointee, and she had a right to fire him for any reason. She's previously refused to say exactly why she got rid of him, but laid out several reasons Wednesday, saying she's decided to talk about it because Monegan is.

Palin said he wasn't doing enough to fill state trooper vacancies and battle alcohol abuse issues. She said he "did not turn out to be a team player on budgeting issues."

Palin said it's fine to have debates during cabinet meetings over the budget but Monegan went further and indicated to legislators she wasn't proposing enough spending. Palin's acting chief of staff, Mike Nizich, said Monegan asked legislators for spending that hadn't been authorized by the governor.

"The response he got was don't come to us and ask for more money when you cannot fill the 56 or 58 trooper positions that were vacant," Nizich said. "So he was making a pitch for additional funding when he couldn't even fill what he currently had available to him."

Monegan questioned that but declined to comment further, saying he's already started talking to the special investigator hired by the Legislature to look into his firing.

Question

Should Wooten be a trooper? Let's have an independent look

Published: July 22nd, 2008 11:10 PM
Last Modified: July 22nd, 2008 02:52 AM

That's a question Alaskans are asking after learning of trooper Mike Wooten's suspension in 2006 for illegally shooting a moose, giving his stepson a jolt with his state-issued Taser and drinking beer during the operation of a marked Alaska State Trooper patrol vehicle. For those offenses, substantiated by a trooper investigation, he received a 10-day suspension, later cut to five days.

The disciplinary letter, issued nine months before Gov. Palin took office, painted a harsh picture of trooper Wooten.

It cited "a significant pattern of judgment failures" and "a course of conduct totally at odds with the ethics of our profession."

"Your unacceptable conduct appears to have continued and even escalated."

Gov. Sarah Palin and her family have also accused the trooper of threatening her and her family. He's still in a bitter custody battle with the governor's sister. The troopers found that most of the allegations from Gov. Palin's family and friends -- which included verbal and physical abuse, intimidation, steroid use, irresponsible drinking, threats of physical violence and suggestions that he misused his position as a trooper -- were unfounded or unsustained by the evidence.

Should he have been fired?

The Alaska State Troopers didn't think so. They did their own investigation and concluded suspension sufficed, along with a warning that the suspension was Wooten's "last chance."

That investigation doesn't necessarily inspire total public confidence. The initial work was done by administrative investigator Sgt. Ron Wall. He dismissed two witnesses' report that Wooten was drinking during the operation of a marked trooper car as unfounded, but he didn't tape-record the interviews. Julia Grimes, then director of the troopers, re-interviewed the witnesses, found them credible and included the incident in her disciplinary report.

It's unclear whether troopers investigated a report that Wooten was dismissed from his post as an assistant football coach at Wasilla High School because of a profane outburst, directed at his niece, on school grounds. If he was not fit to coach youths, you'd have to wonder if he's also fit to carry a gun and use deadly force on behalf of the public.

Both Cox and trooper union executive director John Cyr paint a picture of Wooten that contradicts Gov. Palin, her family and others. Where the Palin family sees a dangerous, abusive man in a position of power, Cyr and Cox see what Cox called a trooper who is "gentlemanly, calm, confident." Guilty of some bad judgment, but a good trooper.

One the one side, you have a family rallying around a member in the middle of a messy divorce. On the other side, you have union officials defending one of their ranks.

The only third-party investigation into these conflicting claims was done by fellow troopers. That investigation found enough evidence to impose a stiff sanction, but not enough to fire him.

There's plenty of ground here for an independent investigation. It wouldn't be the first time a law enforcement agency went easy on its own.

Lawmakers appear ready to hire an independent investigator to examine the firing of Public Safety Commissioner Walt Monegan and the actions of Gov. Palin, family members and staffers and whether they pressured Monegan to fire Wooten.

An independent investigator should look at the troopers' review of Wooten as well. Alaskans need to know if an incurable bad apple is still in the ranks -- and if the troopers need more authority to fire those who are unfit.

There's a lot riding on this -- public faith in the integrity of the governor and the Alaska State Troopers. Did the governor abuse her position? Is Wooten fit to be a trooper? Is it too hard for the troopers to dismiss troublesome officers from their ranks?

Public interest trumps confidentiality here. It's time for transparency all the way around -- the kind that independent investigators can demand.

BOTTOM LINE: An independent investigator should look at the Wooten case.

Cowdery

A step in the right direction

Who was head of the council that will be responsible for a possible investigation of the governor's actions?

Oops: Sen. John Cowdery of Anchorage, who was indicted earlier this month on federal corruption charges.

He was chairman of the Senate-House Legislative Council until he resigned from the job Monday.

Cowdery is in poor health besides being under indictment. He cited his health when he relinquished the position.

Whatever the reason, he made the right choice for the state when he decided this week to step down as council chairman.

The council conducts the business of the Legislature between sessions, and the chairman will direct an investigation of the governor's actions regarding the Public Safety Department, if there is such an investigation.

Cowdery is accused of bribery and conspiracy for scheming with Veco Corp. executives to buy the vote of another senator on oil tax legislation.

While he has yet to be tried, it's already clear that his ethical compass is off base.

Cowdery has no business continuing to serve in the Legislature, much less as chairman of a committee with subpoena powers.

BOTTOM LINE: Sen. Cowdery's resignation as chair of the Legislative Council is the right move.

Investigation

Even if their is an investigation, nothing can be done, since Wooten was already punished. You can't punish a person and then 2-3 years down the road say "we relooked at his and you are now fired". He would be able to sue his employers (the State). Maybe we'd better keep the $500 million that they are planning to give Transalaska, just in case.

And who's doing the investigation?

I can count on my fingers the people in Alaska who could wend their way through the disciplinary processes under the PSEA contract with any confidence, and all of them are present or former employees of either the State or PSEA. Going Outside won't help because each state's laws and bargaining environments are unique, and you'll quickly find that Alaska's police discipline is generally more stric ...

I agree

Trooper Wooten's behavior should be reviewed independently. The following needs to be determined: Can the Troopers police their own; Can they investigate their own; Do they have the authority to get rid of unworthy candidates; Do they have the resources to retain worthy candidates; and, Does Trooper Wooten behave differently with men vs women.

Sept. 11 (Bloomberg) -- John McCain's choice of Sarah Palin as his running mate sent a signal that he would end business as usual and cronyism in government. Her record shows the Alaska governor engaged in some of the same practices she and McCain now condemn.

Palin's office approved a state job for a friend and campaign aide with whom she shared a land investment, financial records and interviews over the past two weeks show. She hired a former lobbyist for a pipeline company to help oversee a multibillion-dollar deal with that same company.

She named a police chief accused of harassment to head the state police. And she sent campaign e-mails on her city hall account while serving as mayor of Wasilla -- conduct for which she later turned in an oil commissioner on ethics charges.

These incidents raise ``some serious questions about her judgment and serious questions about her standards of ethics in public service," said James Thurber, director of American University's Center for Congressional and Presidential Studies in Washington. Suggesting a real estate investment partner for a job ``may be acceptable in Alaska; it would not be acceptable in Washington, D.C., a place whose norms she wants to change."

Palin defeated an incumbent governor, a fellow Republican, in 2006 charging that her party's old guard had committed ethical lapses and become too cozy with special interests, including oil companies. A central theme in this year's presidential campaign has been that Palin's record demonstrates the change a McCain administration would bring to Washington.

Recent statements by the governor may erode that claim. In her acceptance speech last week, she suggested that she opposed the infamous ``Bridge to Nowhere," a $223 million earmark for a bridge to an island where only 53 people lived.

For It, Against It

When Palin, 44, campaigned for governor, however, she said she was in favor of the bridge. In 2007, she canceled the project in the face of national outrage. The state never returned the money allocated by the federal government, with some of the funds going toward other state and local projects.

And as mayor of Wasilla, a job she held for six years until 2002, Palin hired lobbyists to get federal funding for local projects. Wasilla secured $27 million in earmarks for the town of about 9,000 that included a rail project and a youth center.

Shortly after she was elected governor, Palin's office signed off on hiring Deborah Richter -- who attended college for a year then worked in bookkeeping and finance jobs -- as director of a division that distributes dividends to Alaskans from the state's oil-wealth savings account.

Richter, who said she's known Palin for 13 years, was Palin's gubernatorial campaign treasurer and ran her inaugural committee.

Sharing an Investment

The Richters and Palins also shared an investment: 30 acres of rural property near a lake in Petersville, Alaska, worth $47,300, according to Matanuska-Susitna Borough data.

"It sounds like a patronage deal for someone who ran your campaign; that's pretty normal," said Bill Buzenberg, executive director of the Center for Public Integrity in Washington. "What's not normal is that they have business dealings together."

No evidence has emerged to suggest that laws were broken in the appointment, and Richter said she "didn't go in there with any promises from the governor or the chief of staff or anybody. I turned in my resume" to the governor's transition team "and I didn't know if anyone was going to call me."

"She was qualified," said Pat Galvin, commissioner of the Department of Revenue and Richter's boss. Galvin said he also interviewed other people for the job and that Richter has done well. He said Palin's office approved his selection of Richter.

Not Palin's Decision

Palin's gubernatorial spokesman, William McAllister, said the decision to hire Richter was Galvin's. "I have no knowledge of land ownership or college degrees," he said.

Deborah Richter gave up her share of the property last September in a divorce settlement that followed an affair with Palin's legislative director, John Bitney. Bitney and Richter both acknowledged the affair in interviews. Bitney said Palin fired him over it; Richter is still on the job. They are now married.

Last month, Palin signed a law granting TransCanada Corp., Canada's largest pipeline company, an exclusive state license and up to $500 million in subsidies to proceed with work on a $27 billion pipeline, which would carry natural gas from Alaska to other U.S. markets.

Once a Lobbyist

Marty Rutherford, the chief coordinator behind Palin's pipeline effort, once worked as an Alaska lobbyist for a TransCanada pipeline subsidiary, according to state records. Rutherford, deputy commissioner at the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, earned $40,200 as a lobbyist for 10 months in 2003 working for Foothills, the subsidiary.

Rutherford said in an interview that she only did consulting work for the company, including reviewing natural gas legislation. She said the work had no bearing on her future job as coordinator of Palin's pipeline team.

"I intended to leave state government when I went to Jade North, but as time went on I realized my heart was in government," she said, referring to the firm she briefly worked for.

Palin told the Anchorage Daily News last December that Rutherford's work with Foothills wasn't a conflict because it had been five years earlier.

Trooper Investigation

The governor already has triggered an investigation by the Alaska legislature into whether she fired the state commissioner of public safety, Walt Monegan, for not removing a state trooper involved in a contentious divorce from Palin's sister.

Palin has denied exerting any pressure on Monegan and said she dismissed him because she wanted to take the department in a new direction.

Since McCain picked Palin, seven Palin aides have declined to be interviewed on the matter by an investigator hired by the Alaska legislature, according to the House and Senate Judiciary committees.

Earlier this year, Palin found herself apologizing for her handling of Monegan's replacement. About six weeks before she learned McCain wanted her to be his vice president, she named Kenai, Alaska, police chief Charles Kopp to replace Monegan.

On July 25, two weeks after being appointed, Kopp resigned amid scrutiny over a 2005 sexual-harassment complaint against him while he was chief in Kenai. The complaint resulted in a letter of reprimand from the city, which Palin told reporters she never knew about and had believed that the allegations were unsubstantiated, according to the Anchorage Daily News.

Not a Harasser

In a July press conference, Kopp denied any harassment. ``I've always done every job I've ever done with honor and integrity,'' he said. ``There is one thing I am not. I am not a sex harasser.'' Attempts to reach him were unsuccessful.

Asked about these episodes in Palin's career, McCain campaign spokesman Tucker Bounds lauded her reform efforts. Bounds said Palin has allowed the public to scrutinize state financial information, ``cut wasteful spending by a quarter of a billion dollars just last year and ushered in landmark ethics legislation.''

The moment that crystallized her image as a reformer came when she turned in state Republican chairman Randy Ruedrich after discovering he was using his state e-mail account to conduct party business.

Palin and Ruedrich were serving together as commissioners on the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, a state regulatory agency, at the time. Ruedrich resigned from the commission in November 2003, and was later fined $12,000, according to a 2004 article in the Anchorage Daily News.

In 2006, Palin found herself asking forgiveness for a similar offense from her past, according to a July 28, 2006, article in the Anchorage Daily News. She had sent campaign e- mails from her Wasilla mayor's office in 2002, when she made an unsuccessful run for lieutenant governor.

``For any mistakes like that (were) made, I apologize,'' Palin said of the e-mail controversy in July 2006, according to the Anchorage Daily News.

McCain Ally in Alaska Criticizes Troopergate Investigation

Calls For Removal of Probe's Director

By MEGAN CHUCHMACH

Sept. 6, 2008—

On the same day Alaska state Sen. Hollis French announced he would speed up the investigation into whether Gov. Sarah Palin abused her power by firing a public safety commissioner, a top ally of Sen. John McCain in the Alaskan House called to unseat French as the head of the commission.

Representative John Coghill of North Pole, Alaska, said French, a Democrat, is "steering the direction of the investigation, its conclusion, and its timing in a manner that will have maximum partisan political impact on the national and state elections."

Coghill, a longtime McCain backer, said the McCain camp knew of his letter before it was sent to the legislative council (aides were "generally supportive," he said) and reiterated his support of the McCain-Palin ticket.

"I actually called them when Palin got picked and said, 'Hey, I'm your boy now," said Coghill. "I want to help them as much as I can now, but this is totally different from that."

Reached by phone in the North Pole Friday afternoon, Coghill accused French of stepping out of bounds by making what he said were politically-fueled comments.

Coghill cited French's recent interview with ABCNews.com, in which the senator said the report was going to be an "October surprise" and would "likely be damaging to the administration," as an example of what he considers to be the senator's bias.

"When we decided to look into this issue, everybody on the committee, including the chairman, agreed that we need to be an arms-length away from this," said Coghill, "and it's just ended up in the political arena because of Sen. French."

When asked about his involvement with McCain aides now, Coghill said he isn't working on the presidential campaign but plans on putting out a yard sign and passing out bumper stickers to help, even though, he said, his political support should not be confused with his pushing for French to step down.

"I will do whatever I can to help them, believe me," Coghill said. "I'm trying to separate this issue from that."

His call came the same day French announced that the investigation's findings will be delivered nearly three weeks early to avoid being too close to election day and that the governor will not be subpoenaed, a move Coghill said was a coordinated effort. He wanted the issues to be presented equally, he said, and had to rush to get his letter ready since he knew French was slated to make his announcement Friday morning.

"I wanted to make sure that I was bringing this issue up," Coghill said, adding that he wanted the messages to be presented together.

Coghill and French spoke Thursday, and French was aware that the letter was to be released, according to both men. But French said he has no plans to step down and said he'll attend a house and senate judiciary meeting Sept. 12 where the council will consider issuing subpoenas to witnesses who have cancelled depositions.

"The thing to keep in mind is that I'm not the investigator, Steve Branchflower is," French said, referring to the retired state prosecutor who is the lead investigator in the case. "He's working independently of me and everybody else. He's going to gather the facts, prepare a report, release the report and, ultimately, it will be him that defends the report."

The investigation began in July, months before it was announced that Palin would be the GOP vice presidential candidate.

Last week, the commissioner whose firing prompted the probe told ABC News that he was dismissed because he refused to fire the governor's former brother-in-law, a state trooper.

"I think that my unwillingness to take special action against her former brother-in-law was not well received," Walt Monegan said. The trooper, Mike Wooten, had gone through a messy custody battle with Palin's sister.

Palin has denied any wrongdoing and has retained private lawyers to represent her in the matter. She has said she dismissed Monegan over an honest disagreement over budget priorities.

An Anchorage judge three years ago warned Sarah Palin and members of her family to stop "disparaging" the reputation of Alaska State Trooper Michael Wooten, who at the time was undergoing a bitter separation and divorce from Palin's sister Molly.

Allegations that Palin, her husband Todd, and at least one top gubernatorial aide continued to vilify Wooten—after Palin became Alaska's governor and pressured state police officials to take action against him—are at the center of "Troopergate," a political and ethical controversy which has embroiled Palin's administration and is currently the subject of an official inquiry by a special investigator hired by the state legislature.

Court records obtained by NEWSWEEK show that during the course of divorce hearings three years ago, Judge John Suddock heard testimony from an official of the Alaska State Troopers' union about how Sarah Palin—then a private citizen—and members of her family, including her father and daughter, lodged up to a dozen complaints against Wooten with the state police. The union official told the judge that he had never before been asked to appear as a divorce-case witness, that the union believed family complaints against Wooten were "not job-related," and that Wooten was being "harassed" by Palin and other family members.

Court documents show that Judge Suddock was disturbed by the alleged attacks by Palin and her family members on Wooten's behavior and character. "Disparaging will not be tolerated—it is a form of child abuse," the judge told a settlement hearing in October 2005, according to typed notes of the proceedings. The judge added: "Relatives cannot disparage either. If occurs [sic] the parent needs to set boundaries for their relatives."

A spokesperson for the law firm that represented Palin's sister, now known as Molly Hackett, said Hackett's lawyer would have no comment because custody issues are still in litigation. Other lawyers representing Sarah Palin in connection with the state legislative investigation--which is examining whether she abused her powers as governor in trying to have Wooten fired or disciplined—had no immediate comment. Palin's official gubernatorial spokeswoman did not respond to e-mails and a phone message requesting comment.

Wooten's lawyer also did not respond to messages requesting comment. John Cyr, executive director of the State Troopers union, who testified at the divorce hearing and is acting as Wooten's spokesman, said Wooten has avoided giving media interviews because he wants to avoid criticizing his former relatives (to date, Wooten has granted just one interview, to CNN).

As the divorce case dragged on, the judge's concern about family "disparagement" appeared to deepen. In an order signed Jan. 31, 2006, which granted Palin's sister and Wooten a final divorce decree, Judge Suddock continued to express concern about attacks by Palin's family on Wooten. The judge even threatened to curb Palin's sister's child custody rights if family criticism of Wooten continued.

In monitoring how a joint-custody arrangement worked out, the judge said in his order that he would pay particular attention to problems noted by a "custody investigator," specifically "the disparagement of the father [Wooten] by the mother [Molly Hackett, Sarah Palin's sister] and her family members."

Comment: This is very relative to her being the VP of the USA and if you fail to see that then you have issues! This shows abuse of power in office, which has been ongoing for the past 7 years. I guess when you become accustomed to lies and abuse it is hard to stand for the truth. Take off the blinders and actually think for yourself. If you make over $250,000 a year then I guess you will vote to continue receiving your wonderful tax incentives and credits. For those who do not make over $250,000 or have family that is not in that income bracket will listen to true facts,not lies, and vote for true change. You were bamboozled into electing GWB for another 4 years and where did that get the USA???

Comment: Bravo. Well said. Unfortunately most of the Palinites are voting from the heart. not the head. Love your dress, so you'd be great in the white house. Our destiny has to come from knowing everything about who we are choosing and weighing it across the board (Hey Palin, why are you so scared to speak alone to the press? A McCain got your tongue, or is it another lobbyist) to getting us out of this mess we are in today. There is a lot to fix.

Alaska's Family Feud

Meddlesome Sarah Palin does not come off well.

Monday, October 13, 2008; Page A20

IN THE scheme of things -- that is to say, in the larger context of a financial meltdown -- the special counsel's report concluding that Sarah Palin engaged in an unethical abuse of power in trying to have her former brother-in-law fired as an Alaska state trooper is a relatively minor event. But the report nonetheless offers a revealing and relevant portrait of the governor. It shows her and her husband pursuing a personal vendetta against the trooper, Mike Wooten, despite repeated warnings that they were impermissibly intruding into internal -- and already concluded -- disciplinary issues. Likewise, Ms. Palin's decision to repudiate her earlier pledge to cooperate fully with the inquiry does not offer assurance about how she would conduct herself as vice president. The McCain-Palin campaign's response to the inquiry has been internally contradictory -- simultaneously assailing the investigation as a partisan witch hunt and mischaracterizing as vindication the report's finding that Ms. Palin was within her rights as governor to remove the commissioner who had refused to act against her former brother-in-law.

The amount of attention that the newly elected governor, her husband and her subordinates -- her personnel director, attorney general and chief of staff, among others -- devoted to getting Mr. Wooten fired was extraordinary. Within a few weeks of Ms. Palin's inauguration, her newly installed public safety commissioner, Walter Monegan, was summoned to a meeting with the governor's husband, Todd Palin, at which the "First Gentleman" pressed Mr. Monegan to reexamine the already concluded disciplinary case against Mr. Wooten. The governor herself called Mr. Monegan, e-mailed him and met with him in person to discuss her unhappiness with Mr. Wooten's continuation on the force. Equally extraordinary was the Palins' persistence in the face of warnings that their intervention could run afoul of personnel rules and risked creating precisely the kind of public uproar that ensued.

Ms. Palin's refusal to cooperate with investigator Stephen Branchflower reflects poorly on her. So, too, does Ms. Palin's mischaracterization of the report as finding that there was "no unlawful or unethical activity on my part" and "no abuse of authority at all in trying to get Officer Wooten fired." In fact, Mr. Branchflower concluded that Ms. Palin "knowingly permitted a situation to continue where impermissible pressure was placed on several subordinates in order to advance a personal agenda, to wit: to get Trooper Michael Wooten fired." Monegan lawyer responds to Petumenos report

After the Daily News ran this editorial on investigator Tim Petumenos' less-than-convincing exoneration of Sarah Palin in Troopergate, we received this further critique of the report from Walt Monegan's lawyer, Jeff Feldman.

FROM JEFF FELDMAN:

A close reading of the report issued by the investigator hired by the Alaska Personnel Board reveals a variety of errors and weaknesses. Some examples:

(1) The investigator's report omits discussion of and disregards substantial evidence, including multiple instances in which evidence seriously conflicted with statements made by the Governor (see discussion below)

(2) The investigator's report misapprehends the applicable law, and suggests that the relevant provision in the ethics statutes does not mean what, on its face, it says

(3) The investigator's report addresses only the direct evidence (and, at that, only some of the direct evidence). The report ignores critical circumstantial evidence. The law accords circumstantial evidence the same weight as direct evidence, so the absence of any analysis of the circumstantial evidence reflects a significant omission and weakness in the report. For example, the report ignores the number, sequence, timing, and content of communications by the Governor, her husband, her staff, and her cabinet officers to former Commissioner Monegan and others at the Department of Public Safety. But the fact that:

* Eight different individuals

* All of whom either were, worked for, or were related to the Governor

* Contacted Former Commissioner Monegan or other officials at the Department of Public Safety

* To complain about the fact that Trooper Wooten was still employed as a trooper

* More than three dozen times

* Over an 18 month period

* Frequently using the same words and relating the same stories and events

* And some of whom stated that they were speaking on behalf of the Governor would reasonably permit an inference that the Governor knew of and/or directed their activities, notwithstanding assertions to the contrary by the Governor and her staff.

It is possible that a neutral fact-finder would find the denials by the Governor and others (the direct evidence) to be the most persuasive evidence on this point. But it's also possible (and some might say, much more likely) that a neutral fact-finder would conclude that the denials are contradicted and outweighed by the inference that reasonably can be drawn from the circumstantial evidence that the Governor knew of and /or directed the various communications to Commissioner Monegan by her staff and husband. On that basis alone, there was more than sufficient evidence for a finding of probable cause.

(4) The investigator's report leaves important dots unconnected by failing to consider the evidence as a whole and by misapplying the legal standard of "probable cause" (see above). Consider the following illustration: The fact that an individual has a one-way ticket from Bogata to Miami might not be deemed, in itself, suspicious. Nor the fact that the individual was traveling alone. Nor that he carried no baggage. Nor that he went to the bathroom on the plane every hour. Nor that he was sniffling a lot and had some odd white power on his pants. Nor that he was perspiring and shifting in his seat and looking around a lot. But, taken in the aggregate, a person reasonably could conclude that those circumstances combined to establish probable cause to believe that the individual was engaged in criminal behavior. The report by the Personnel Board's investigator suffers the weakness of looking at the evidence in isolation and, as a result, of failing to see the broader picture.

(5) Consider one example of how the investigator's report misapprehended the evidence and failed to address obvious conflicts between the Governor's testimony and other available and credible evidence:

Former Commissioner Monegan testified that the Governor called him in January 2007 to talk about Trooper Wooten. Governor Palin denied that the conversation occurred. Both individuals testified under oath. The existence of the two conflicting statements, alone, normally would suffice for a finding of probable cause, with the final determination as to which version was most credible to be by a neutral fact-finder made at a formal hearing. But there was additional evidence available on this issue, beyond the two sworn statements by Governor Palin and Commissioner Monegan.

In the last paragraph on page 31 of the report, the investigator for the Personnel Board accepts at face value the Governor's claim that the call to Commissioner Monegan never occurred; the investigator points to Todd Palin's testimony (also taken at face value) as confirming the fact that Mr. Palin had never talked to the Governor about his meeting with Commissioner Monegan. The investigator's report states:
"Governor Palin, in any event, has testified under oath that she was unaware that Todd Palin made these early 2007 inquires to Commissioner Monegan. Todd Palin confirmed that he did not discuss either the Monegan meeting or Commissioner Monegan's follow up call with the Governor at any time until the matter became the subject of scrutiny in 2008."

But in making this finding, the investigator's report ignores an e-mail that the Governor sent to Former Commissioner Monegan on February 7, 2007, shortly after the date of the disputed phone call. In her February 7 e-mail, the Governor expressed her concern about the Wooten situation in terms that unequivocally establish: (1) the Governor's knowledge that Commissioner Monegan already knew of her own concerns, and (2) the Governor's knowledge that Todd Palin had already directly informed Commissioner Monegan of her family's concerns. The Governor's February 7 email states:

"Just my opinion - I know you know I've experienced a lot of frustration with this issue. I know Todd's even expressed to you a lot of concern about our family's safety after this trooper threatened to kill a family member - ..."

If the January phone call never occurred (as the Governor claimed in her deposition testimony), how did the Governor know on February 7 (when she sent her email) that Commissioner Monegan already knew of her frustration? And if the Governor truly was unaware of any contacts between Commissioner Monegan and Todd Palin, how could she claim to know that Mr. Palin had expressed the family's concern to Commissioner Monegan?

Even though the e-mail seriously undermines the Governor's denial of the January phone call and directly refutes her claim that she knew nothing of Todd Palin's communications with Former Commissioner Monegan, the report by the Personnel Board's investigator all but ignores the e-mail's contents. This omission and others like it raise a question whether the report reflects a careful and critical examination of all available evidence designed to discover the truth or merely a hasty review aimed at meeting an election-eve deadline.

(6) An example of another conflict left unaddressed by the investigator's report: The Governor claimed at one point that Todd Palin complained to her so frequently about the handling of the Wooten matter that she had to tell him to stop. How does that square with the contention in her deposition testimony that she was completely unaware of Mr. Palin's activities?

(7) An example of another conflict left unaddressed by the investigator's report: At page 13, the report states that the Palins met with representatives of the Alaska State Troopers in November of 2006, shortly after the Governor's election, and expressed their concern that Trooper Wooten presented a "security threat." The Personnel Board's investigator apparently accepted their statements about this discussion as true, without any acknowledgement or consideration of the substantial evidence to the contrary.

At page 44 of his report, Mr. Branchflower (the investigator for the Alaska Legislative Council) described the sworn testimony of Gary Wheeler, a witness who should possess substantial credibility by virtue of his position and longevity as an state trooper since 1981 assigned to protect to Governor of Alaska. No one has suggested that Mr. Wheeler has any motive or bias in connection with this matter. Mr. Wheeler recalled the November 2006 meeting the Palin's described, but he recalled it quite differently. Mr. Wheeler stated that he asked the Palins "whether they perceived any threats from any individual or were afraid of any individual" and that he received a negative response. Oddly, the Personnel Board's investigator did not interview Mr. Wheeler, himself. While the report states that the Personal Board's investigator carefully considered all of the testimony that Mr. Branchflower gathered and made available to the Personnel Board, the omission of this significant conflict in the evidence and the absence of reference to Mr. Wheeler's testimony strongly suggests the contrary.

(8) The Personnel Board's investigator criticized Mr. Branchflower for not interviewing certain witnesses, most notably the Palins. Putting aside for a moment the obvious observation that the only reason Mr. Branchflower did not talk to the Palins is because they refused to make themselves available to him, the criticism is misplaced because the personnel Board's investigator also failed to talk with a number of critical individuals -- including Audie Holloway and John Glass of the Alaska Department of Public Safety, both of whom were critical fact witnesses. Some individuals who were not contacted by the Personnel Board's investigator were direct recipients of communications about Trooper Wooten from the Governor or her husband and would have contradicted testimony provided by the Palins and relied on by the Personnel Board's investigator. John Glass, for example, testified that he told Todd Palin that Trooper Wooten had already been penalized for his actions [Branchflower Report, page 63]. But the Personnel Board's Report states that Todd Palin claimed that "he did not learn from anyone" that there was any consequence of significance imposed on Wooten, and the Report omits entirely that there was credible sworn testimony that directly contradicted that claim.

In light of these and other errors and omissions, there is substantial reason to question the conclusions drawn by the Personnel Board's Report.

Palin Offered Cooperation with Investigation – Media/Press Release Quotes

Lawmakers seek outside inquiry of Monegan firing - KTUU-TV – July 18, 2008:

> Some lawmakers are asking for more answers to the reasons Palin had for firing Monegan. Palin, in Wasilla for the Governor's Picnic, said she would not fight such an effort to look into this matter by an independent investigator.
> "We would never prohibit, or be less than enthusiastic about any kind of investigation. Let's deal in the facts, and you do that via investigation," Palin said.

Senate will look into Monegan firing - KTUU-TV – July 19, 2008:

> While the governor said there is no need for an investigation from an outside investigator, she said she will answer any questions from lawmakers, media and the public.

Public Safety already headed in 'new direction,' some say - Anchorage Daily News - July 22, 2008:

> The governor denies any wrongdoing, and says she welcomes any questions on the matter.

Palin under fire – Legislature appears poised to appoint investigator -Aftermath of Monegan Dismissal, Anchorage Daily News - July 22, 2008:

> "I've said all along, hold me accountable," Palin told reporters in Juneau. "And I'm telling the truth when I say there was never pressure put on Commissioner Monegan."

Lawmakers move to investigate Monegan ouster, KTUU-TV – July 24, 2008:

> The governor says she welcomes the investigation. "I have absolutely nothing to hide and am happy to answer any questions," she said. "I'm happy to answer any questions between now and when they do conduct an investigation also."
> Gov. Palin said last weekend that she did not think an independent investigator was needed. "That being the route that they choose, then so be it," she said. "I'm happy to comply, to cooperate. I have absolutely nothing to hide. No problem with an independent investigation."

Hired help will probe Monegan dismissal - $100,000: Legislators vote to have independent investigator look into controversial firing - Anchorage Daily News – July 29, 2008:

> "The governor has said all along that she will fully cooperate with an investigation and her staff will cooperate as well," Leighow said.

Branchflower to investigate in Monegan firing - KTUU-TV – August 1, 2008:

> "I've heard (Branchflower's) name, or course, over the years in Alaska," Palin said. "I know he's a prosecutor, probably a heavy duty prosecutor, and so that kind of puzzles us why we are going down that road when we are very, very open to answering any questions anybody has of me or administrators."

PRESS RELEASE: GOVERNOR TO TURN OVER FINDINGS - Office of the Governor – August 13, 2008:

> Governor Palin has directed all her staff to cooperate fully with Branchflower.

Palin administration cooperating with investigator - KTUU-TV – August 15, 2008:

> Lawmakers had wanted to know if Steve Branchflower needed them to issues subpoenas to require witnesses to talk to him about Gov. Sarah Palin's decision to fire Monegan and about the actions of her staffers. But State Sen. Hollis French says the meeting was cancelled because there's no need for subpoenas at this point.

Palin aide Frank Bailey placed on administrative leave - KTUU-TV – August 19, 2008:

> "We figured, if there is an investigation going on with an unknown outcome – we don't know exactly what (special investigator) Mr. Branchflower is going to conclude – that Mr. Bailey just needed to step away from the situation, although be available to the investigator," [Palin spokesman] McAllister said.
> The governor's office also says that Bailey will cooperate fully with the investigation.

Palin aide put on leave in firing flap, BAILEY: Official who made all inquiring about trooper taken "out of the mix." - Anchorage Daily News – August 20, 2008:

> Spokeswoman Sharon Leighow said that with Bailey still a state employee, Palin "can direct him to assist Mr. Branchflower, thereby fulfilling her pledge to Alaskans to cooperate fully with the investigation."

Re: Governor Palin and Trooper Investigation - McCain Campaign Press Release – August 30, 2008:

> Governor Palin is an open book on this – she did nothing wrong and has nothing to hide. As a reformer and a leader on ethics reform, she has been happy to cooperate fully in the inquiry of this matter.

Attorney challenges Monegan firing inquiry – Anchorage Daily News – September 2, 2008:

> He [Governor Palin's Lawyer Mr. Van Flein] said the governor's office welcomes the inquiry and will cooperate.
> Palin has made repeated public statements that she'll cooperate, and that hasn't changed at this point, Van Flein says.

ACTION NARRATIVE

CHAIR JAY RAMRAS called the House Judiciary Standing Committee meeting to order at 1:08:05 PM. Representatives Coghill, Samuels, Lynn, Holmes, Dahlstrom, and Ramras were present at the call to order. Representative Gruenberg arrived as the meeting was in progress. Representative Stoltze was also in attendance.

^CONFIRMATION HEARING(S)
^Attorney General

1:08:29 PM

CHAIR RAMRAS announced that the first order of business would be the consideration of the appointment of Talis Colberg to the position of Attorney General.

REPRESENTATIVE COGHILL asked Mr. Colberg whether he would be willing to draft a letter to the federal government asking it to address the issue of tribal status in Alaska.

1:11:02 PM

TALIS COLBERG, Appointee, Attorney General, indicated that he would draft such a letter but only if the governor asks him to do so, because that is her decision to make, not his.

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS asked Mr. Colberg what his legal advice to the governor would be should she decide to pursue that issue.

MR. COLBERG said he would endeavor to provide the governor with the best legal advice available that would support her policy choices to the extent that they are consistent with the law. In response to a comment, he opined that it is not inconsistent to provide legal advice to the governor and to the legislature on individual issues but still give deference to the person who appointed him.

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS asked whether he should assume that any legal advice he receives from the Department of Law (DOL) will simply coincide with the governor's policies.

MR. COLBERG opined that it would be wrong to assume that the attorney general will always say only what the governor wants to hear, and suggested that his advice to the governor concerning a university regent demonstrates that point.

1:21:40 PM

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS offered his understanding that in that situation, the governor had not publicly expressed a desire one way or the other, and surmised that if the governor does express an opinion publicly about a matter, then legislators would need to get separate counsel on that issue if they don't agree with her, because Mr. Colberg would simply be promoting the governor's viewpoint.

MR. COLBERG clarified that in the aforementioned situation, the governor only asked for his advice after she had already asked for the regent's resignation. In response to a question, he indicated that he still wishes to address the issues that arise between the Native and non-Native populations in Alaska.

CHAIR RAMRAS suggested that Mr. Colberg will bring a fresh perspective to the job. He then asked Mr. Colberg to speak about some of the disharmony that exists in both the Fairbanks and Anchorage district attorney offices - because he has been told that it stems from a morale problem rather than a compensation problem - what Mr. Colberg perceives as being some of the personnel issues, and what Mr. Colberg intends to do to resolve them.

The committee took an at-ease from 1:31 p.m. to 1:33 p.m.

MR. COLBERG said that Richard Svobodny - Chief Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division - would be looking into those issues for him. Mr. Colberg mentioned that Mr. Svobodny is currently in the Kenai office looking into why there is a disproportionate prosecution failure rate compared to the offices in rest of the state. Mr. Colberg said he is comfortable with Mr. Svobodny's efforts to constructively address members' concerns about the Anchorage and Fairbanks offices.

1:36:22 PM

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS pointed out that in addition to having sufficient legal expertise, an attorney general must have the ability to manage the 280 attorneys currently working for the DOL. He said that how the personnel issues pertaining to the two most recent previous directors of the Criminal Division have been handled gives him pause [and raises questions regarding] Mr. Colberg's management skills, particularly given that managing the personnel at the DOL is the bigger part of the job of attorney general. Representative Samuels sought assurance that Mr. Colberg's management skills are up to the task.

REPRESENTATIVE DAHLSTROM suggested that it is unreasonable to expect a candidate for confirmation to not take any action in his/her prospective role before being confirmed. She cautioned that many of the facts regarding the aforementioned situations are not yet known by either legislators or the public, and that for Mr. Colberg to disclose more information about those situations could breach confidentiality and the law.

REPRESENTATIVE COGHILL suggested that the committee merely wants to have a discussion regarding Mr. Colberg's management style.

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS concurred, reiterating his view that an attorney general's management skills are more important than his/her legal skills.

MR. COLBERG concurred, recounted his experience while serving on the Matanuska-Susitna (Mat-Su) Borough assembly, acknowledged that most of his management experience relates to offices with a small number of personnel, and assured the committee that he doesn't expect to have to hire a new director of the Criminal Division every few months.

REPRESENTATIVE LYNN observed that without knowing more about the situations that were presented to Mr. Colberg, it will be difficult for the committee to evaluate his actions.

CHAIR RAMRAS offered his understanding that the district attorney office in Fairbanks has lost many high-profile cases, including cases involving rape and murder, and yet the office appears to be pursuing many charges of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the sixth degree. He asked, therefore, whether Mr. Colberg feels that a reallocation of prosecutorial resources at the Fairbanks office would be in order. Chair Ramras also asked Mr. Colberg how he intends to address the issue of low morale in that office.

1:46:15 PM

MR. COLBERG offered his recollection that the district attorney office in Fairbanks has only lost one high-profile sexual assault case - two years ago - and that the aforementioned misconduct charges were not occurring independently but rather in tandem with other charges such as DUI. He suggested, therefore, that any morale problem which exists in that office has no correlation to the allocation of prosecutorial resources. He mentioned that he has been presented with information suggesting that any morale problems that exist in the various district attorney offices existed before the new administration took office, and reiterated that Mr. Svobodny will be addressing those problems. Mr. Colberg, on the question of prosecutorial resource allocation, surmised that the information he has received differs greatly from that which Chair Ramras has received, and offered his belief that resources are not currently being allocated in favor of the aforementioned misconduct charges.

CHAIR RAMRAS asked Mr. Colberg whether he is satisfied with the prosecutorial resource allocation in the Fairbanks office, and again asked Mr. Colberg what he intends to do about the low-morale situation to ensure that the district attorney offices do a better job of protecting the public.

MR. COLBERG said he will be relying on Mr. Svobodny's recommendations. He offered his understanding that at one office, the actual physical location of the building is contributing to low morale. In response to a question, Mr. Colberg said he has asked Mr. Svobodny to look into all the issues arising at the state's various district attorney offices.

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS asked whether there is a specific policy in place at the DOL wherein [legislators'] requests for information must be forwarded up the chain of command before being fulfilled.

MR. COLBERG said he has not established such a policy himself, but acknowledged that perhaps at one point there might have been a policy in place wherein DOL employees were supposed to document legislative contacts. Furthermore, perhaps some people simply feel that they should inform their supervisor when a legislator contacts them.

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES said she has recently come across individuals at the DOL who believe that there is a policy in place such as Representative Samuels described. She recommended, therefore, that Mr. Colberg make efforts to inform all of his staff that they are free to disseminate information to legislators when they request it.

CHAIR RAMRAS, notwithstanding Mr. Colberg's comments that he intends to rely on Mr. Svobodny's recommendations, opined that there is no substitute for a hands-on approach to managing a department.

MR. COLBERG agreed to issue a statement to his staff regarding how he would like them to deal with legislative requests for information.

CHAIR RAMRAS asked Mr. Colberg to comment on the issues raised as a result of the passage of certain ballot measures.

MR. COLBERG indicated that the DOL is establishing a new position that will deal with the legal issues which could arise from the "cruise ship initiative," and said he expects that [that initiative] will engender litigation. In response to a question, he indicated that he is not sure whether the same legal arguments could be raised regarding Washington's container tax as might be raised regarding the cruise ship initiative, should litigation result from either or both. In response to a further question, he said that the DOL's position would be to defend, to the best of its ability, what the voters passed.

2:07:07 PM

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUELS referred to an upcoming ballot measure pertaining to establishing a gaming commission, and asked Mr. Colberg whether he thinks gambling would be good for Alaska.

MR. COLBERG opined that gambling can be very corrosive to society. In response to further questions, he indicated that [the state] is currently involved in litigation regarding the interpretation of the aforementioned ballot measure, and explained that the National Indian Gaming Commission (NIGC) requires that the federal ordinances allowing for Indian gambling must stipulate that the tribe comply with its state's laws on gambling.

CHAIR RAMRAS, referring to the State v. Amerada Hess, et al. settlement money, asked Mr. Colberg what proactive approach he will take regarding any funds engendered by the "cruise ship head tax" and any ensuing litigation.

MR. COLBERG said he is not aware of any action pending on that particular tax.

CHAIR RAMRAS suggested to Mr. Colberg that he provide counsel to the legislature regarding that issue.

REPRESENTATIVE GRUENBERG asked Mr. Colberg to explain the status of possible litigation against the actuaries responsible for the Public Employees' Retirement System and Teachers' Retirement System (PERS/TRS) funds.

MR. COLBERG said the DOL has made a request for an appropriation of $12 million to pursue that litigation, and that the case is on hold pending funding. He added that the DOL feels that there is a good cause of action and recommends going forward with it. In response to a further question, he said that moneys appropriated thus far for that purpose have already been spent.

REPRESENTATIVE GRUENBERG indicated that he would want the State to not let the statute of limitations run out on that case.

MR. COLBERG, in response to a question regarding the McDowell v. State case, said, "I think the majority was right."

CHAIR RAMRAS asked Mr. Colberg whether he believes that the "advocacy section" that weighs in on the regulatory filing in front of the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA) should [continue to] be located within the Office of the Attorney General.

MR. COLBERG said yes. He opined that from an institutional perspective, it is a bad concept for agencies to develop their own separate legal departments, because doing so could create consistency problems.

2:26:04 PM

CHAIR RAMRAS referred to Mr. Colberg's 3/13/07 letter regarding the Alaska Gasline Inducement Act (AGIA), and asked Mr. Colberg to elaborate.

MR. COLBERG said:

> There's been a lot written on that. You have not only about a 31-page opinion from [former] Attorney General Marquez talking about that that's, in his view, citing many of the same cases, older even, that there are reasons to argue that fiscal certainty could be justified for 30-45 years, you have at the other end Senator French wrote a very long opinion saying that nothing over 2 years, beyond the term of any legislature, could be found legitimate. And then ultimately, almost all of the opinions agree that there's no certainty about the fiscal certainty short of a court decision.
> Now, what it gets into is, always, an interpretation of Article IX, Section 1, in tandem with Article IX, Section 4, [of the Alaska State Constitution]. And Alaska, like about almost 30 states, has this "do not surrender your taxing authority" coming out of an old, old, old Georgia case, which is perhaps more than 150 years old, where states anticipating issues arising from a surrender by one legislature of powers creating serious problems down the line.
> In the limited case law that's available in Alaska that gives hints about it and from the minutes of the [Alaska] Constitutional Convention, Delegate Nerland specifically talked about inducements, and for industry, and he used the word "inducements" in there, and the concept is that here, this is a 10-year period that is triggered by the initiation of giving something. It's not something that we're promising in advance of any commitment; it's in response to a commitment and investment made - it's for a limited duration.

MR. COLBERG continued:

> And can it be challenged? Of course. And who is going to decide? The precedent is pretty slim all the way around. But we think it's much more defensible to make, under the terms described, in the AGIA, a 10-year concept that's not promised before anything's done, but after there's been a commitment and an investment that can be justified and defensible in court. And ... even [former Attorney General Marquez's] opinion can be defended, we just think it's too much of a stretch.
> And so the opposite end is Senator French saying nothing over 2 years will prevail, and he laid out a very thorough set of arguments. But there is a qualifier in Article IX, Section 1, that leaves open the door for some exceptions, and if it had no purpose - and every word has a purpose in that type of thing is the presumption - there'd be no reason for that, and we think this ... fits into the gist of the comments made when it was created as to what's an appropriate use for that terminology.

MR. COLBERG, in response to a question regarding [Indian] gaming, offered his understanding that Kake and Klawock [are only requesting permission from the NIGC to offer] bingo and pull-tabs, both of which are currently allowed under state law.

2:31:16 PM

REPRESENTATIVE DAHLSTROM made a motion to advance from committee the nomination of Talis Colberg to the position of Attorney General. There being no objection, the confirmation was advanced from the House Judiciary Standing Committee.

The committee took an at-ease from 2:32 p.m. to 2:38 p.m.

HB 175 - EMINENT DOMAIN; RECREATIONAL STRUCTURES

2:38:17 PM

CHAIR RAMRAS announced that the final order of business would be HOUSE BILL NO. 175, "An Act relating to the prohibition of the exercise of the power of eminent domain against a recreational structure for the purposes of developing a recreational facility or project."

2:39:05 PM

REPRESENTATIVE CRAIG JOHNSON, Alaska State Legislature, sponsor, relayed that legislation last year set limitations on the exercise of eminent domain and elevated someone's personal residence such that eminent domain could not be exercised for the purpose of developing a recreational facility or project unless the homeowner consented to the taking of his/her residence. House Bill 175 would extend that limitation to a person's recreational structure, and establishes a limit regarding the amount of land that would be protected to a radius 250 linear feet around the recreational structure itself - the same amount of land that would apply in situations involving a residence; HB 175 would not interfere with a government entity's exercise of eminent domain for other legitimate purposes. He relayed that although last year's legislation struck a fine balance between all interested parties, recreational structures were not included, and so he is now bringing this issue forward because he believes that private ownership constitutes the greatest use of Alaska's land. He mentioned that HB 175 would not apply to recreational structures owned by partnerships or businesses.

2:43:12 PM

DAVE FEEKIN, Alaska Association of Realtors (AAR), spoke about last year's legislation, relayed that the property rights of "second home" owners is of key importance, and opined that HB 175 protects the values of those properties. Realtors have heard from many Alaskans about the importance of recognizing and protecting a key element for many families and their Alaskan lifestyles - the ownership and enjoyment of recreational properties and cabins. He concluded by asking the committee to support HB 175 and move the bill from committee.

CHAIR RAMRAS, after ascertaining that no one else wished to testify, closed public testimony on HB 175.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHNSON, in response to a question, said, "It is standard practice to have access to your land ...; I believe that that right-of-way does exist, and [the government] ... couldn't condemn the area to prohibit you from having access to your property ...."

REPRESENTATIVE GRUENBERG questioned whether the term, "recreational structure" could be construed to mean a structure that was constructed for just one season, and asked whether the bill ought to require some form of permanency with regard to recreational structures.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHNSON said it is not the intention of HB 175 to allow someone with recreational property to merely put up a tent and move it from place to place in order to protect all of the property; HB 175 is intended to protect the owner of a permanent recreational structure. He indicated that he doesn't have an objection to clarifying that point.

REPRESENTATIVE GRUENBERG indicated a willingness to offer a conceptual amendment that would alter Section 3 such that the concept of permanence would be incorporated into the definition of "recreational structure".

DICK MYLIUS, Acting Director, Central Office, Division of Mining, Land and Water, Department of Natural Resources (DNR), in response to a question, said that the department doesn't have any objection to [the bill or the aforementioned proposed change], and that the department has never exercised eminent domain in order to acquire recreational properties or access to recreational opportunities without the consent of the property owner. He opined that it would be good to better define the term, "recreational structure", particularly given that both tent camps and million-dollar structures are all considered to be recreational structures. In response to a further question, Mr. Mylius provided comments regarding a particular university land transfer.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHNSON, in response to a question, reiterated that the bill is intended to only protect the land that is within 250 linear feet of the structure, whether that structure is someone's personal residence or recreational structure. In response to a comment and question, he indicated that he would be amenable to an amendment that would clarify that point. In response to a further question, he said he intends for the protections afforded by the bill to apply only to a landowner who holds legal title to the recreational structure.

REPRESENTATIVE DAHLSTROM surmised that several members believe that the issue of how much land is going to be protected still needs to be clarified in the bill.

REPRESENTATIVE GRUENBERG suggested that the issues raised by the committee be addressed via a committee substitute.

[HB 175 was held over.]

ADJOURNMENT

There being no further business before the committee, the House Judiciary Standing Committee meeting was adjourned at 2:58 p.m.

INQUIRY RE: CONSENT DECREE BETW. STATE & CROWLEY

Consent Decree Questions

Questions to Transport Company

1. What are the differences between surcharges applied with fuel delivered in the Yukon-Kuskokwim and other regions such as Bristol Bay and the Norton Sound?
2. What are the factors involved that make the price differences?
3. How many deep water line haul barges are involved in the transport of fuel to the Yukon-Kuskokwim region, and are these same barges used in others? And what are the costs of these barges and what portion of the price of fuel is applied to the cost of these barges? How many are owned by the transport company and how many are contracted?
4. How many shallow draft barges are involved in the transport of fuel to the Yukon-Kuskokwim region, and are these same barges used in others? And what are the costs of these barges and what portion of the price of fuel is applied to the cost of these barges? How many are owned by the transport company and how many are contracted?
5. How many fuel transfers points are involved in the transport of fuel and what costs or surcharges are involved?
6. What moorage or port charges or fees are involved or added the surcharges?
7. How much is the quantity of fuel factor in the price of fuel charged to customers?
8. How does credit or ability to pay or any financing issues, if any factor in the price of fuel?
9. Do any seasonal conditions such as flooding and icing conditions factor in the price and delivery of fuel?
10. Does the size and availability of a port or moorage and equipment factor in the price of fuel and how much?
11. How much does distance factor in the price of fuel?
12. How much does navigation issues in transporting fuel factor in the price of fuel?
13. How much storage capacity has been made available to another competitor as owner of that storage capacity?
14. Has any land been made available and has there been any interest in land for developing additional storage capacity by a competitor?
15. How much competition is there in the market and how has this affected fuel pricing?

Questions to Representative of Impacted Customers

1. What are the levels of income of the people affected by the consent decree?
2. What is the percentage, or how many are low income?
3. What is the percentage of income dedicated to paying for fuel in villages?
4. What could be the impact on households and entire communities in the region as a result of the consent decree?

5. What has happened over the last year with fuel prices as they relate to households and village economies?
6. For those that are utilizing low income energy assistance is there additional fuel surcharges applied for buying fuel?

CITY OF BETHEL

Resolution # 09-16

REQUESTING THE STATE OF ALASKA HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE CONSENT DECREE BETWEEN THE STATE OF ALASKA AND CROWLEY MARINE SERVICES, INC. CROWLEY MARITIME CORPORATION; NORTHLAND FUEL, LLC; YUKON FUEL COMPANY; NORTHLAND VESSEL LEASING COMPANY LLC; AND YUTANA BARGE LINES, LLC., IN ACHIEVING ITS INTENDED GOAL OF PREVENTING A MONOPOLISTIC MARKET AND TO ALLOW FOR FAIR COMPETITION

WHEREAS, communities within Western Alaska like much of the country are facing exorbitant fuel charges, unfortunately the prices paid by communities within Western Alaska are established by a small number of distributers operating within this region;

WHEREAS, to insure a competitive market rate would be maintained and to prevent Crowley Marine Services from establishing market power over the regions fuel sources, a consent decree was produced and ordered;

WHEREAS, without an annual or bi-annual operational review and compliance verification of the consent decree, the communities affected by the transaction of fuel cannot be comfortable in knowing they are being charged fairly for the product;

WHEREAS, reviewing the market rate for storage and use, in conjunction with the consent decree will confirm the business practices between Crowley Marine Services and their only local competitor Delta Western, are in the fair interest of the communities they service;

WHEREAS, because of the market control Crowley Marine Services has on this region and its competitors it is in the best interest of every surrounding community to have a review of continued fulfillment of the consent decree;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the Bethel City Council hereby requests the State of Alaska House Judiciary Committee to inquire into the effectiveness of the Consent Decree between the State of Alaska and Crowley Marine Services, Inc.; Crowley Maritime Corporation; Northland Fuel, LLC.; Yukon Fuel Company; Northland Vessel Leasing Company LLC.; and

ATTEST:

for Laurie J. Walters
Lori Strickler, City Clerk

REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL REGARDING THE ACQUISITION OF YUKON FUEL COMPANY BY CROWLEY MARINE SERVICES.

I. Introduction.

In the fall of 2003, the Alaska Attorney General's Office became aware that Crowley Marine Services ("Crowley) made an offer to purchase all of the assets of Yukon Fuel Company ("Yukon"). Both Crowley and Yukon compete with each other for the sale, storage, and distribution of petroleum products in parts of Western Alaska. Concerns were raised by several individuals, communities, and businesses about the potential harm this transaction might have on the price of delivered petroleum products in the region. The Attorney General considered these concerns and began an informal review of the proposed transaction and its potential effects on competition for the sale and delivery of fuel in Western Alaska.

In response to this proposed transaction, the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, Inc., ("AVEC") and members of the Western Alaska Fuel Group ("WAFG")[1] filed a complaint on November 19, 2003 in the Alaska Superior Court in Nome. The primary allegation in the complaint is that the transaction will eliminate the existing competition between Crowley and Yukon for the delivery of fuel, leaving Crowley with monopoly power over fuel prices in Western Alaska.

After filing the complaint, the parties to the lawsuit continued their request that the Attorney General initiate a formal investigation of the transaction to determine whether it would violate Alaska's antitrust laws. In February 2004, the Attorney General held a meeting in Anchorage with the parties to discuss these concerns in more detail, and to determine whether the parties could take any action on their own to resolve the pending lawsuit. Following the meeting, the Attorney General decided further review by the state was warranted, and initiated a formal investigation to determine if the transaction would violate Alaska's antitrust laws.

II. Summary.

There are currently very few competing firms engaged in the sale of delivered petroleum products ("fuel") in Western Alaska. Some of the equipment and assets necessary for delivering fuel in this area is specialized. With the exception of small amounts of fuel delivered by air, all fuel is delivered by barge. Purchases by utility companies account for the majority of fuel sales. About 75% of all fuel in this region is purchased through the bidding process. Both AVEC and WAFG select the supplier of their fuel as a result of bidding. Once selected, the successful bidder usually enters a long term (two or three year) contract for supplying fuel.

In order for a competitor to bid on these contracts, it must have access to the necessary equipment and storage facilities to deliver fuel economically and profitably to the prospective customers. There are two primary components involved in the delivery of fuel by barge to a significant number of customers: (1) the barge, and (2) storage facilities. There are also two primary kinds of barges required to serve this market; (1) deep water (or "line haul") barges that can hold several million gallons of fuel, and (2) smaller barges capable of navigating shallow coastal and up-river locations, called "shallow draft" barges.

Most fuel delivered to Western Alaska locations originates from refiners in Anchorage. Bulk fuel is purchased by the barge company, loaded into line haul barges, then brought to Western Alaska for delivery to the customer. Some customers have storage tanks that can be accessed directly by a line haul barge. Other customers can only be reached by shallow draft barges. To make shallow draft deliveries, fuel must be transferred to a shallow draft barge directly from a line haul barge (called lightering), and it is then delivered directly to the customer, or stored in a storage tank for future delivery.

To maximize the efficiencies of delivering fuel, it is necessary for a competitor to own, or have access to, line haul barges, shallow draft barges, and storage facilities in key locations. Without all these elements, it is difficult to compete in this market. Currently, only Crowley and Yukon operate these kinds of assets in the immediate region. Thus, the proposed transaction creates a significant threat that Crowley would be the owner of all the assets necessary for delivering fuel in this market, and could exercise "market power" to increase prices.

Additionally, Crowley and Yukon each own a fuel storage facility in Bethel. Crowley recently constructed a new 5 million gallon facility in Bethel which became operational in December, 2003. Yukon owns a 10 million gallon facility that has served Bethel and the surrounding area for over 20 years. Allowing Crowley to own both facilities would eliminate this newly created competition for fuel sales in and around Bethel.

The state approached Crowley and Yukon with these issues, and expressed serious reservations about approving the transaction unless Crowley was willing to sell sufficient assets to another competitor to address the state's antitrust concerns. The state expressed to Crowley its goal of maintaining a competitive marketplace for the delivery of fuel that was consistent with Alaska's antitrust laws. After months of review and investigation, the state and Crowley agreed on the terms of a Consent Decree the state believes complies with Alaska law. The main features of the decree are:

1. The buyer of the assets is Delta Western, one of the largest and most experienced barge companies on the West Coast.

2. Crowley will sell Delta Western two sets of tugs and barges that are capable of navigating the shallow coastal and up-river waters in Western Alaska. Coupled with Delta Western's other tugs and barges, this will allow Delta Western to compete effectively in this market.

3. Crowley will divest four million gallons of fuel storage capacity to Delta Western in Bethel. Because Crowley also plans to remove one million gallons of storage capacity from the Yukon facility in Bethel, this amount approximates the current level of competition in Bethel. The term of the divestiture extends to a potential of 30 years, with an initial term of 10 years plus four 5-year options.

4. Crowley must offer Delta Western an option to purchase or lease certain property Crowley owns in Bethel. The location of this property will allow Delta Western the opportunity to construct new fuel storage facilities in the future if competitive forces require expansion.

5. Crowley must offer Delta Western 29% of any additional storage capacity Crowley adds to its existing facilities in Bethel. This will allow Delta Western to grow along with Crowley.

6. Crowley must allow Delta Western and others access to fuel storage facilities in Nome, Kotzebue, and St. Michael. Access to storage at these locations will allow Delta Western to compete more effectively in and around these areas without the need to construct its own storage facilities.

By agreeing to these conditions, the state believes any legitimate concern about a reduction in competition for delivered petroleum products is resolved. The resulting competitive environment will prevent Crowley from charging monopoly prices, or exercising market power.

III. Alaska's Antitrust Laws.

Alaska's antitrust statutes, AS 45.50.562 - .596, are patterned after federal antitrust laws. These laws are aimed at stopping conduct that prevents or inhibits competition in the free marketplace. In the United States, unlike other countries, our policy of encouraging competition among free enterprise is based on the notion that consumers will benefit from lower prices, higher quality, and greater choice than under a system where capital ventures are controlled by the government. This national policy of competition has made the United States economy one of the strongest in the world.

A primary goal of the antitrust laws is to ensure that consumer choice is not unreasonably restricted since consumer choice is a powerful incentive for sellers to keep prices low and quality high. To ensure consumer choice, the antitrust laws set two basic requirements; (1) companies cannot agree to limit competition in ways that hurt consumers, and (2) a single company cannot monopolize an industry through unfair practices. These principles are set forth in general terms in both state and federal antitrust laws, and courts are left to decide on a case-by-case basis whether any particular conduct is unlawful.

Application of the antitrust laws, however, can be very complicated. It is not always obvious whether conduct is unlawful under these complex standards. For example, monopolies that form as a result of superior marketing efforts or a superior product may be completely lawful. A company that offers a new product in a market where no other comparable products have been sold before will have a monopoly until a competitor decides to enter the market and compete. The antitrust laws do not prevent someone from gaining market power if it is acquired through legitimate business practices.

Another basic principle of antitrust law is to prevent the illegal accumulation of market power in a single entity.[2] If one entity was able to obtain market power, it could control prices. The ability to control prices through illegal conduct is something state and federal governments try very hard to prevent. The role of the Alaska Attorney General in enforcing the state's antitrust laws is to review proposed transactions, like the Crowley/Yukon transaction, to make sure the resulting entity is not left with this kind of market power.

[2] If a business has "market power" it has the ability to restrict competition or control prices. Thus, antitrust law does not distinguish between "how much" market power one business has. Any amount of market power is illegal.

A. Defining Markets.

The start of any antitrust investigation begins with determining what market is potentially affected by the alleged conduct. In this case, the state had to determine what markets would be affected by the sale of Yukon to Crowley. This is called the "relevant market." In general terms, the relevant market consists of two components: (1) a "product market" which consists of all the competing products sold by the merging companies plus any products that can be used as a reasonable substitute; and (2) a "geographic market" which consists of all the areas from which these products can be economically and profitably supplied.

In this case, the product market was determined to be "barge delivered petroleum products." The product market is not simply "petroleum products" because none of the competitors in this area actually own a source of fuel. Both Yukon and Crowley, for example, purchase all their fuel from a third party. The product is also not "barge services" because barge services by themselves are rarely purchased by customers. Fuel is typically purchased on a "delivered" basis.

There are no other reasonable substitutes for barge delivered petroleum products in this area. There are no roads that service Western Alaska, thus land transportation of petroleum is not possible. Some limited amounts of fuel are delivered by air. These deliveries are isolated, and not economical in large volumes. Other sources of energy, such as coal, hydro, and wind power, are also not economic alternatives to petroleum. None of the communities currently using petroleum products could quickly and economically switch to one of these alternative energy sources. Accordingly, the Attorney General defined the product market as "delivered petroleum products."

The geographic market was more difficult to define. To determine the relevant geographic market, antitrust law requires that you include all places a customer could go to get the relevant product at competitive prices. Courts have frequently, and consistently, defined geographic markets for barge transportation as generally broad, and have found them to include all waterways where there is no physical barrier to barge movement.

The area affected most by the proposed transaction is Western Alaska. Fuel can be economically delivered to Western Alaska by barge, however, from locations outside of Western Alaska. For example, a barge company from as far away as Southern California could bid on contracts to supply AVEC, the WFAG, and other customers. If successful, the bidder could arrange to purchase fuel in Anchorage, lease (or buy) line haul and shallow draft barges, then arrange necessary storage space to deliver the fuel to customers. Economic and profitable deliveries, however, depend on a variety of factors, including the volume of fuel sold, and the cost to position equipment in Western Alaska to make deliveries. Complicating this analysis is the unique geography of Western Alaska. The experience and knowledge required to operate here is unique and challenging.

Antitrust economists hired by Crowley determined that profitable fuel deliveries could be made by using a single set of tugs and barges from Southern California if the seller could obtain at least 2.1 million gallons of delivered fuel sales.

This estimate considered the cost of bringing a shallow draft tug and barge from San Diego to Alaska.

The analysis done by an expert economist hired by the state suggests the minimum volume necessary for deliveries to be made from California is probably higher than the volumes calculated by Crowley's economist. But under either analysis, it was clear that at some volume, fuel could be profitably delivered to Alaska from locations as far away as California, including locations in Oregon and Washington State. There is about 90 million gallons of bulk fuel sales annually in Western Alaska. Considering these volumes, the state concluded the geographic market for supplying barge delivered petroleum products includes all of Western Alaska and the West Coast of the United States.

B. Competitors in the Market.

The next step in analyzing the potential competitive effects of the proposed transaction required the state to identify competitors currently participating in the relevant market, and the amount of "market power" held by each. Knowing the number of competitors and each competitor's share of the market is critical to understanding how the elimination of one competitor may impact competition among the remaining competitors.

For barge delivered petroleum, the Western Alaska market has been recently dominated by three competitors. When a market has few competitors, it is considered "highly concentrated." Crowley and Yukon have been the major competitors in recent years making bids on contracts to supply fuel in shallow-draft markets. Delta Western and Crowley are the two dominant competitors bidding for contracts to supply fuel by line haul barge. Of all the barge companies actively operating in Western Alaska, Crowley is the only competitor with a mix of assets that allows it to serve both the shallow draft and line haul markets. Delta Western does not own any shallow draft barges in the Western Alaska region, and Yukon does not own any line-haul barges.

To get fuel to its smaller barges, Yukon contracts with other companies for the delivery of fuel by line haul barge. Recently, Yukon has contracted with Sirrius Maritime, Inc., a Seattle-based barge company, to deliver fuel by line haul barge to specific locations in Western Alaska where it is then loaded onto Yukon's storage facilities or barges. Sirrius does not have any other customers in Western Alaska.

There are no other "active" competitors supplying bulk fuel by barge to Western Alaska. Thus, this transaction would eliminate one of the three barge companies operating in Western Alaska, and eliminate the only other current competitor for shallow draft barge deliveries. This reduction in competition raises serious concerns, but is not entirely determinative of the actual competitive impact caused by this transaction. Because the fuel market is a "bidding market" all potential bidders must be considered as potential competitors, regardless of whether they have actually made any historic sales of fuel in the market.

C. Market Power.

Once the competitors in a market are identified, the "market power" of each competitor must be assessed. Market power is defined as the ability to raise prices or exclude competition. The most common basis for predicting a firm's ability to raise prices in the future is to calculate its historic percentage of sales in the relevant market. There are exceptions to this approach, however, when future sales are not dependent on past percentages, but are determined by independent events. In a bidding market, like the Western Alaska fuel market, past performance is not a good indicator of market power. Future sales depend on future bids, not past sales. Market power also cannot be inferred from high percentages of past sales in markets that are characterized by low entry barriers, as discussed more fully below. A firm with 100% of sales cannot profitably overcharge if doing so would simply attract new competition lured by the higher-than-competitive prices.

Because all competitors in a bidding market have an equal chance of winning future bids, each is assigned the same amount of market share. Even if a company makes no sales in one year, it still has an equal share of the market along with companies that made significant sales. The antitrust law requires consideration of these other "potential" or "uncommitted" competitors. These are competitors who are not currently participating in the market, but would likely enter the market in a timely manner if prices rose above competitive levels. This "threat" of competition is a strong deterrent to active competitors, and acts to keep prices from reaching monopoly levels. Thus, all potential bidders are assigned an equal share of the market.

D. Entry Barriers.

Federal regulators have often approved mergers and acquisitions that have left only one competitor in the market when evidence showed a strong likelihood that other competitors could easily enter the market. A merger or acquisition is not likely to create or enhance market power if entry into the market is so easy that market participants could not profitably maintain a price increase above pre-merger levels. Entry into a market is considered "likely" if it would be profitable at pre-merger prices, and those prices could be secured by the new entrant. In addition, to be "sufficient" under antitrust guidelines, the assets required for entry must be available so that entrants can respond fully to new sales opportunities.

To determine which potential competitors are likely to enter the market in response to a price increase, the barriers to entering the market must be identified. Entry barriers are defined to include potential obstacles that a new competitor would have to overcome that the current competitors did not have to deal with. Examples of entry barriers include new governmental regulations that impose new requirements (i.e. permits) that current competitors did not have to comply with. Another barrier could be the ownership of a necessary resource by an incumbent firm (such as land or a manufacturing plant) that a new competitor cannot obtain. If access to these necessary components are constrained, or controlled by the existing competitors, new competition is not likely to happen.

Applying these principles to the Crowley/Yukon transaction, the state identified the following as potential entry barriers. There is some reasonable debate about whether any of these items, standing alone, would prevent a potential competitor from entering the market. But taken together, these items present significant obstacles to anyone looking to compete in this market.

1. Shallow draft barges. The state's research showed that shallow draft barges are not readily available. Although there are some used shallow draft barges on the market, most are not suitable for use in Alaska waters without significant retrofitting. One of the largest barge brokerage firms in the world, Markon International, Inc., lists several shallow draft barges for sale on its web page. A competitor could acquire one of these barges and invest in the necessary modifications, but the cost to do so would approach over 50% of the cost of a new barge. New shallow draft barges can be built for as little as $1 million, and Crowley is currently completing construction of a state-of-the art barge for approximately $3 million. The building process takes less than one year to complete.

Regardless of the cost, any investment in a shallow draft barge would not be profitable unless the buyer could obtain sufficient fuel sales to warrant the investment. Shallow draft barges are designed for a specific purpose, and cannot be used for a broad range of tasks. There are a few river systems in the U.S. where these assets can be deployed, including, for example, the Columbia River and the Mississippi River systems. However, the Attorney General remains concerned that these shallow-draft vessels are not as freely available as, for instance, line-haul barges, and the market for shallow draft barges is limited.

The current competitors, furthermore, had to obtain shallow draft barges to participate in this market, so the state's reliance on this obstacle is not fully supported by the antitrust law. Nonetheless, these barges are necessary assets to competition that only Crowley and Yukon have ready access to.[3] These considerations generate some concern about the willingness of a new competitor to enter this market.

2. Storage facilities. If the proposed transaction were allowed to proceed with no conditions, Crowley would own nearly all of the fuel storage facilities in Western Alaska, including all of the fuel storage facilities inland from the coast used for up-river deliveries. Of significant importance are the two facilities in Bethel. These facilities require heightened attention because there is current competition in the Bethel market for fuel that is directly tied to ownership of these facilities. There is an extremely limited opportunity for new competitors to build a storage facility in Bethel because there is a scarcity of suitable land, and the market simply does not justify adding additional storage capacity for the reasonably foreseeable future.

Storage facilities outside Bethel present less of a concern, but are still important. There appears to be fewer limitations on the ability to construct new facilities in necessary locations along the West Coast of Alaska. Historically, the common practice in the area has been for owners of these facilities to allow access to storage capacity by other competitors at a reasonable rate. Still, if one competitor owned all the necessary storage facilities, it could exercise control over its competitors in a harmful way. This presents some concerns for new competitors looking to compete in this market. It bears note, however, that the storage facilities in these other areas have not historically faced immediate competition, and that Crowley's acquisition will not consolidate competing resources.

[3] The state's research showed there was a readily available supply of tugs and line-haul barges.

3. Knowledgeable barge pilots. State and federal regulations require licensed pilots to have knowledge of the waters to be navigated. The coastal and river waterways in Western Alaska offer some of the most challenging navigation anywhere in the world. The only way to gain the experience required to operate shallow draft equipment in some of these remote waterways is to log hours of time with an experienced pilot. New competitors looking to operate shallow draft barges would need to locate and hire knowledgeable mariners with the requisite experience navigating the shallow waters of Western Alaska.

The current competitors had to face this obstacle as well, so any argument about finding qualified pilots as a "barrier to entry" in antitrust terms is subject to reasonable debate. This is particularly so in view of the ability of any new entrant to hire away pilots from Crowley or other incumbent barge companies operating around the State. Nonetheless, coupled with the other barriers to competition, this presents another potential deterrence to new market entrants.

Courts addressing entry barrier issues consistently agree that barge markets are typically open to new entry. While the State is unwilling to rely on this market mechanism entirely to resolve its concerns in this case, it is equally true that any monopoly "gouging" by Crowley would probably cause other barge companies to enter or consider entering the Western Alaska fuel market.

IV. Analyzing the Crowley/Yukon Acquisition.

Considering the above, the state's analysis of the Crowley/Yukon Acquisition involved a preliminary assessment of market power based on a proper definition of the relevant market, followed by an analysis of mitigating factors, such as the ease of entry into the market. Applying these principles to Crowley and Yukon, the attorney general concluded that the transaction, if allowed, would violate Alaska's antitrust laws that prohibit mergers or acquisitions if the effect of the merger will "substantially lessen competition." The Attorney General reached this conclusion based on the following three assessments:

1. Crowley could obtain monopoly power over nearly all fuel sales in Bethel. At the very least, there would be a significant lessening of competition in Bethel if Crowley were to own both of the existing fuel storage facilities in Bethel. The total volume market demand for fuel, coupled with the limited availability of land prevents a new competitor form entering this market easily and timely.

2. Crowley would obtain ownership of all other fuel storage facilities required for deliveries to some locations, particularly areas served by shallow draft barges. Obtaining control over these necessary assets for a significant portion of the market presents a dangerous probability that Crowley could exercise market power over fuel prices.

3. Crowley would obtain ownership of all the shallow draft barges currently used and available in Western Alaska for deliveries to shallow coastal and up-river locations. This would eliminate existing competition in areas where Crowley and Yukon currently compete for shallow draft deliveries. Although new competitors could purchase barges for use in these areas, there are significant obstacles to doing so.

The fact that Crowley would be in control of nearly all the assets currently used for barged delivered fuel, and would be the overwhelmingly dominant player, cannot be ignored. This alone presents serious concerns to the Attorney General.

V. The Remedy.

After concluding the transaction would violate Alaska's antitrust laws, the state was faced with only two options: (1) block the transaction, or (2) enter a consent decree that requires the parties to take affirmative steps to eliminate the potential for competitive harm. There are risks associated with each option. If the state filed a lawsuit to stop the transaction, Crowley and Yukon could litigate against the state to get the transaction approved. Crowley and Yukon argued vigorously that the transaction did not violate any state or federal antitrust laws, and the parties are confident they could get the transaction approved, without conditions, by a court.

The risk with a consent decree is that its terms may not adequately prevent the exercise of market power. Even though the Attorney General carefully reviewed the transaction, no one can predict the future. Events may occur that were not contemplated, or market conditions may change in ways not anticipated by a consent decree. Even so, the attorney general always retains the authority to take steps in the future if the intent and goal of a consent decree is not followed.

It is also important to recognize there are benefits that flow to the economy as a whole from mergers and acquisitions, and there are potential benefits to the economy of the state that can result from this merger. Here, Crowley will consolidate resources into a single firm that will be of a scope and scale sufficient to improve fuel delivery service and reliability, and also at a potentially lower cost due to the resulting efficiencies. Crowley's strong economic commitment to Alaska's maritime markets also ensure that a responsible owner will operate these resources, which is important for environmental and economic reasons. While the Attorney General is deeply committed to preventing anticompetitive conduct in the state's markets, the state is equally committed to promoting the benefits of economic activity.

Given the nature of this transaction and all the information reviewed by the state and its expert, the Attorney General decided to enter a consent decree that required Crowley to take certain steps to alleviate the concerns identified by its investigation. Those include:

1. Divesting significant amounts of storage capacity to a competitor under terms that position the competitor as tantamount to the owner of the capacity of that facility.

2. Selling at least two sets of shallow draft tugs and barges to a buyer willing and able to compete in the shallow draft market.

3. Making space available in key storage facilities on a non-discriminatory basis to any competitor who wants it.

4. Making land available in Bethel to a competitor for the purpose of constructing a new fuel storage facility.

5. Requiring the divestiture to a competitor of 29% of any additional storage capacity added by Crowley to the Bethel facility.

6. Finding a buyer for these assets with the economic ability and required experience to compete effectively in this market.

A consent decree was crafted with these goals in mind. After several weeks of negotiation, Crowley agreed to the terms of the decree. Providing all the terms are complied with, the attorney general believes the transaction will satisfy Alaska's antitrust law, and will encourage continued competition in the market for barge delivered petroleum.

VI. Further Proceedings and Opportunity to Comment.

The consent decree has been filed in the Superior Court in Nome, the same court in which the pending lawsuit is located. The consent decree must be reviewed and approved by the court before it is effective.

In addition to review by the court, Crowley and Yukon must file a notice with the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission that describes the transaction. These federal agencies will have an opportunity to review the transaction for antitrust violations, and may decide to initiate their own investigation.

Finally, any interested person can file an "exception" to the consent decree with the court in Nome. An exception must be filed with the court within 60 days of filing the consent decree. These exceptions can be mailed to the Nome Superior Court, Box 1110, Nome, Alaska, 99762. The court will consider these comments and objections when deciding to approve or disapprove the consent decree.

VII. Conclusion.

The Attorney General believes the proposed transaction, as modified by the conditions set forth in the consent decree, is lawful under applicable Alaska (and federal) law, the federal antitrust merger guidelines, and the judicial decisions that interpret these laws and guidelines. Under the proposed consent decree, the Attorney General believes the transaction will benefit consumers in Western Alaska by maintaining strong competition, and securing reliable sources of barge delivered fuel by reputable competitors.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT FOR THE STATE OF ALASKA

SECOND JUDICIAL DISTRICT AT NOME

STATE OF ALASKA, Plaintiff, v. CROWLEY MARINE SERVICES, INC.; CROWLEY MARITIME CORPORATION; NORTHLAND FUEL, LLC; YUKON FUEL COMPANY; NORTHLAND VESSEL LEASING COMPANY LLC, and YUTANA BARGE LINES, LLC, Defendants.	Case No.: 2NO-04- _____CIV

CONSENT DECREE

Preamble

Plaintiff State of Alaska filed its Complaint herein and defendants, CROWLEY MARINE SERVICES, INC. and CROWLEY MARITIME CORPORATION (collectively, "Crowley"), NORTHLAND FUEL, LLC ("Northland Fuel"); YUKON FUEL COMPANY ("YFC"), YUTANA BARGE LINES, LLC ("Yutana"), and NORTHLAND VESSEL LEASING COMPANY LLC ("NVLC")[1]; were duly served with the Summons and Complaint. Defendants, by and through their undersigned attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Consent Decree without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein. This Consent Decree does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party with respect to any issue of law or fact herein or in the Complaint.

RECITALS

WHEREAS, YFC is a wholly owned subsidiary of Northland Fuel, and owns and operates a business delivering and selling petroleum products to end users and other customers in Western Alaska, employing various barges, tug boats, storage facilities and other assets to this end;

WHEREAS, NVLC is a wholly owned subsidiary of Northland Fuel, and holds title to most of the barges and boats used in YFC's business, which NVLC bareboat charters to Yutana, and which Yutana then time charters to YFC;

WHEREAS, Crowley owns and operates a business similar to YFC's, employing similar assets, delivering and selling petroleum products into some of the same locales in competition with YFC, and bidding for some of the same contracts;

WHEREAS, concurrently with the filing of this Consent Decree, the Defendants have executed agreements (together, the "Crowley/Sellers Purchase Agreement"), a copy of each of which has been provided to the Attorney General, pursuant to which the Sellers have agreed to sell, and Crowley has agreed to purchase, all or substantially all of the assets of Sellers (the "Acquisition"),[2] subject to certain conditions set forth therein, including that the Court enter an order approving this Consent Decree;

WHEREAS, the Acquisition will combine under Crowley's sole ownership all of YFC's assets used for delivery of petroleum products in Western Alaska, and the

[2] Pursuant to the Crowley/Sellers Purchase Agreement, Crowley has also agreed to acquire from Northland Fuel all of the outstanding capital stock of Service Oil & Gas, Inc. ("SOG"). SOG operates a land-based fuel distribution business, primarily in South Central Alaska.

Attorney General believes that these assets when combined with Crowley's assets will constitute a significant portion of all assets currently located and available in Western Alaska that are necessary to compete in the relevant markets for delivered petroleum products;

WHEREAS, the Defendants claim the Acquisition will eliminate certain inefficiencies that Crowley and Sellers, operating separately, currently experience, including, among other things, (1) combining their diverse fleets to enable more efficient distribution of products during the relatively limited warm-weather periods during which such deliveries must be made in a timely fashion, (2) eliminating redundancies in their operations, and (3) combining the purchasing function and aggregating the quantities to be purchased from refineries;

WHEREAS, the State of Alaska ("State"), through its Attorney General, alleges in its complaint that the Acquisition is unlawful under Alaska and federal antitrust law (the allegations in the State's complaint are re-alleged and incorporated herein);

WHEREAS, the State has brought this action against Defendants on behalf of the people of Alaska, and in the State's capacity in parens patriae;

WHEREAS, prompt divestiture of certain assets is an essential element of the agreement among the parties to resolve this matter, and concurrently with the filing of this Consent Decree, Crowley and Delta Western, Inc. ("Delta Western") have executed agreements (collectively the "Crowley/Delta Western Agreement"), a copy of which has been provided to the Sellers and the undersigned Assistant Attorney General, pursuant to which Crowley has agreed to divest to Delta Western, and Delta Western has agreed to purchase from Crowley, assets described herein, subject to the Court's approval of this Consent Decree;

WHEREAS, Crowley and YFC own and operate the only tank farms in or immediately near the City of Bethel;

WHEREAS, Crowley's tank farm facility in the City of Bethel (the "Crowley Tank Farm") was recently put into operation in October of 2003, and has approximately five million gallons of capacity; and YFC's tank farm facility in the City of Bethel (the "YFC Tank Farm" and together with the Crowley Tank Farm the "Bethel Tank Farms") has approximately ten million gallons of capacity, of which approximately one million gallons is likely to be eliminated due to age irrespective of the proposed Acquisition;

WHEREAS, new or expanded competition in the relevant markets for marine-delivered fuel products to Western Alaska could be impeded by the limited availability of tank farm storage capacity in and near the City of Bethel;

WHEREAS, pursuant to the Crowley/Delta Western Agreement, Crowley has agreed to divest storage capacity from the Bethel Tank Farms in accordance with the terms of this Consent Decree in order to facilitate Delta Western's expanded sales in the region, subject to the Court's approval;

WHEREAS, Delta Western is one of the largest tug and barge companies on the West Coast of the United States and one of the most experienced tug and barge operators in the United States, including experience with operating in Western Alaska;

WHEREAS, the State has determined that Delta Western is adequately qualified to purchase and operate the assets described in this Consent Decree, and to provide strong competition in the delivery of petroleum products in the relevant market;

WHEREAS, neither the execution or entry of this Consent Decree nor the terms hereof are intended to alter, modify, supplement, or rescind in any way the respective rights or obligations of the Defendants related to the Acquisition;

WHEREAS, Defendants do not admit, and continue to deny, that such transaction is unlawful;

WHEREAS, the Court has made no determination of any violation of law;

WHEREAS, the State and Defendants wish to avoid litigation and to resolve the controversy on mutually acceptable terms;

WHEREAS, the Defendants have agreed to be bound by the provisions of this Consent Decree;

WHEREAS, the Attorney General believes the terms of this Consent Decree are fair and reasonable and in the public's interest.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED as follows:

I.

JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to AS 45.50.582 and over each of the parties hereto. Venue is proper in this Judicial District pursuant to Alaska Civil Rule 3. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the Defendants under Alaska antitrust law. The Attorney General of the State of Alaska, Gregg D. Renkes, has authority to bring this action pursuant to AS 45.50.580.

II.

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Consent Decree:

A. "Defendants" means the defendants listed in the State's complaint filed in this matter.

B. "Delta Western" means Delta Western, Inc.

C. "Crowley" means Crowley Marine Services, Inc. and Crowley Maritime Corporation, together.

D. "YFC" means Yukon Fuel Company.

E. "Yutana" means Yutana Barge Lines, LLC.

F. "Northland Fuel" means Northland Fuel LLC.

G. "NVLC" means Northland Vessel Leasing Company, LLC.

H. "Attorney General" means the Alaska Attorney General.

I. "Western Alaska" means the coastal regions of Alaska from Bristol Bay north to Point Hope, and inland regions west of Alaska's road system.

J. "Relevant Market" means the market for marine-delivered petroleum products in the relevant geographic area, which includes the State of Alaska or parts thereof.

III.

APPLICABILITY

A. The provisions of this Consent Decree apply to Defendants, their successors and assigns, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who shall have received actual notice of this Consent Decree by personal service or otherwise.

B. Nothing herein shall be deemed to have been created for the benefit of any third party and nothing herein shall be construed to provide any rights to third parties, specifically including, without limitation, plaintiffs Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, Inc.; Inn Electric Cooperative, Inc.; Kotzebue Electric Cooperative, Inc.; Naknek Electric Cooperative, Inc.; City of Nome d/b/a Nome Joint Utility System; Nushagak Electric and Telephone Cooperative, Inc.; and Unalakleet Valley Electric Cooperative,

Inc.; together who have filed a lawsuit titled Alaska Village Electric Co-op, et al. v. Crowley Marine Services, Inc. et al., Case No. 2NO-03-174 Civ., an action pending in Alaska Superior Court, in the Second Judicial District, at Nome.

IV.

DIVESTITURE OF ASSETS

A. Crowley is hereby ordered and directed, following the consummation of the Acquisition, to divest, absolutely and in good faith, two sets of tugs and barges designed and currently able to transport petroleum products in Western Alaska. These assets shall be in good condition, immediately available for use in Western Alaska, and have all applicable Coast Guard approvals and/or certificates necessary for the intended use of serving shallow-draft areas for deliveries of petroleum products in Western Alaska. The barges shall be of sufficient capacity to enable Delta Western to compete effectively for the delivery of fuel to these areas considering the availability of storage facilities, contract volumes necessary for profitable operations, and other factors. These assets shall be divested according to the following schedule:

1. Crowley shall close the aforesaid divestiture transaction and completely divest the assets within 60 days after approval of this Consent Decree.

2. If, notwithstanding the exercise of its good faith best efforts, Crowley is unable to close the transactions and divest the assets described herein within 60 days after approval of this Consent Decree, Crowley may apply to the Attorney General for additional time to close such transactions and divest the assets, as the Attorney General deems appropriate. The decision to grant any such additional extension of time rests within the sound discretion of the Attorney General and his decision upon such request shall be final.

B. The purpose of divesting these assets is to ensure their continued use in Western Alaska for delivered petroleum products and to remedy the lessening of competition that might otherwise result from the proposed Acquisition as alleged in the State's Complaint. This section shall be interpreted and construed to accomplish this intent to the fullest extent possible.

V.

DIVESTITURE OF STORAGE CAPACITY IN BETHEL

A. Crowley is hereby ordered and directed, following the consummation of the Acquisition, to divest four million gallons of fuel storage capacity in Bethel, on fair and reasonable terms, to Delta Western under the following conditions:

1. There shall be no restriction on the amount of fuel Delta Western may run through (or "throughput") the Bethel Tank Farms so long as Delta Western does not exceed four million gallons of capacity at any given time, unless agreed to by the parties;

2. Subject to the provisions hereof, Crowley shall allow Delta Western to store any combination of fuel types and in any amount requested by Delta Western, including but not limited to all grades of gasoline and diesel fuel, heating oil, aviation gas and Jet A; the storage requested by Delta Western shall be reasonably compatible with the overall storage capacity and tank assignments made from time to time by Crowley for annual throughput requirements, and Crowley shall be required to make its tank assignments in good faith taking due account of capacity commitments requested by Delta Western on a timely basis.

3. Subject to any contractual or other arrangements with the City of Bethel, Delta Western and Crowley shall have equitable, nondiscriminatory loading rights to the Bethel fuel dock so that each will have access to the dock when needed. Neither Delta Western nor Crowley shall interfere with the other's equitable access to the Bethel fuel dock.

4. Crowley shall allow Delta Western full access to the Bethel Tank Farms, including equitable access to all loading racks. Neither Delta Western nor Crowley shall interfere with the other's equitable access to ensure Delta Western has access to its fuel supply as if it were an owner of the Bethel Tank Farms.

5. Upon reasonable advance notice to Crowley, Delta Western may provide unused storage capacity to Crowley on terms and conditions mutually agreed upon by the parties. Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent Delta Western from selling, leasing, or assigning any part of its storage capacity to other third parties.

B. In addition to the initial storage capacity of four million gallons, Crowley shall give Delta Western the option of acquiring additional storage capacity at the Bethel Tank Farms under the following conditions:

1. If Crowley expands its storage capacity in Bethel beyond 14 million gallons, it shall give Delta Western the option of acquiring up to 29% of the additional capacity on substantially the same terms as the initial four million gallon divestiture.

2. Notwithstanding paragraph (B)(1), Crowley is not required to provide Delta Western with additional capacity if Delta Western has constructed its own storage facility in Bethel or has otherwise acquired rights to use any other such storage capacity In Bethel.

C. The storage capacity divestiture (including any such divestiture under paragraph B above) in Bethel shall be for an initial term of 10 years with four five year renewal options. The terms of the divestiture may include provisions that allow Crowley to adjust the amount charged to Delta Western upon each renewal to reflect additional operational costs incurred by Crowley during this time that are not already included in the original lease amount.

D. The storage capacity divestiture in Bethel shall terminate if Delta Western builds a competing facility in Bethel with at least 4 million gallons of storage capacity, or such other lesser amount of capacity as may be determined by the Attorney General to resolve competitive concerns.

E. It is the intent of this section to allow Crowley to charge an amount for storage capacity that equals its actual cost of providing the storage (including actual cost of construction and operation) plus a reasonable return. It is not the intent of this section to allow a storage charge that is excessive or unreasonable considering the goal of this Consent Decree to foster competition for the delivery of petroleum products.

VI.

DIVESTITURE OF STORAGE CAPACITY AT OTHER FACILITIES

A. Crowley is ordered and directed to make available, on a non-discriminatory basis, seasonal throughput storage capacity at its facilities in Nome, Kotzebue, and St. Michael under the following conditions. For purposes hereof, "seasonal throughput" means barge-in/barge-out temporary storage during open-water shipping season, and shall not include, among other things, storage for rack sale or delivery:

1. Upon reasonable notice, Crowley must allow other competitors to store fuel at these facilities, and may not refuse storage unless there is no space in the facility. Crowley will use its best efforts, consistent with good business practices, to consolidate its products to maximize the space available for storage by others. Crowley shall not shift its products or use these facilities in any manner that intentionally or unreasonably limits the amount of storage capacity available to others.

2. Crowley shall make its Kotzebue dock facilities available to all shippers of commercial quantities of petroleum products on a non-discriminatory basis. Crowley shall maintain the right to schedule the use of the Kotzebue dock facility, but may not exercise this right so as to make the facilities unavailable to Crowley's competitors under reasonable and normal business practices.

Nome Similarly Situated

3. Crowley may not charge more than the prevailing competitive market rate for seasonal throughput storage at these facilities and other facilities similarly situated, which at the time of the approval of this Consent Decree is approximately 6 cents per gallon. Nothing herein shall prevent Crowley from charging a lesser amount at its discretion, or a greater amount according to market conditions.

4. Crowley shall refrain from selling petroleum products from its storage facilities in Nome, Kotzebue and St. Michael at discriminatory rates. It is the intent of this paragraph that Crowley shall not discriminate against any of its customers because the customer is also a competitor of Crowley.

5. Crowley is not required to offer storage space at these facilities if the entity requesting storage builds a storage facility or otherwise acquires access to storage capacity in the area that can be used for the same purpose. It shall not constitute a violation hereof for Crowley to refuse to do business with any firm or individual that is not credit worthy in Crowley's reasonable judgment, or for legitimate safety concerns.

B. It is the intent of this section to facilitate competition in the delivery, transportation, storage, and sale of petroleum products to coastal and inland areas of Western Alaska. This section shall be interpreted and construed to accomplish this intent to the fullest extent possible. Crowley agrees that it will not use its ownership and control of these facilities in any manner that will restrain competition.

C. The terms of this Consent Decree shall replace and supercede the "Agreement regarding Crowley Maritime Corporation's Acquisition of Chevron Tank Farms in Nome and Kotzebue" executed on or about July 26, 1985, between the State and Crowley.

VII.
OPTIONS ON PROPERTY IN BETHEL

A. Crowley is the owner of certain property in Bethel identified as Lot 40 within U.S. Survey No. 4117. Crowley is ordered and directed to make this property available for sale at fair market value to Delta Western as part of this Consent Decree. If Delta Western declines to purchase the property, Crowley may offer the property for sale to third parties. Before completing the sale of the property to a third party, Crowley must provide Delta Western the opportunity to purchase the property on substantially the same terms and conditions offered by the third party. If the offer made by the third party is not a bona fide, good faith offer, Delta Western shall have the option of purchasing the property at the fair market value.

B. YFC is the lessee of a parcel of property located adjacent to the YFC tank farm, consisting of approximately 14.97 acres. YFC leases this property from William Hately under lease No. 01-ONC-01 (the "Hately lease"). The term of the lease is 25 years beginning on April 1, 2001. Subject to the receipt of all required third party consents, this lease will be assigned to Crowley as part of the Acquisition. Crowley is directed and ordered to give Delta Western the option to take an assignment of all of Crowley's rights and duties under this lease at any time in the next five years. If Crowley receives a bona fide, good faith offer from a third party to take an assignment of the lease after this time, Crowley must first give Delta Western the option to take an assignment of the lease, on the same terms and conditions contained in the original lease with YFC.

C. If for any reason Crowley is unable to obtain an assignment of the Hately lease, and therefore unable to offer Delta Western an option on the lease consistent with paragraph B above, the Attorney General retains the authority to consider and implement any appropriate remedy consistent with the intent of this Consent Decree to foster and insure competition.

D. Crowley agrees it will not unreasonably withhold its consent to give Delta Western all necessary easements, or to enter necessary agreements to access or traverse property owned by Crowley for the purpose of connecting new tank farm facilities constructed by Delta Western to the Bethel Dock or other loading/unloading facilities that are required for the operation of the newly constructed tank farm. It is the intent of this paragraph that Crowley will not use its property ownership status as a means to interfere with or impede the construction and practical use of new tank facilities in Bethel.

VIII.

OTHER REMEDIAL PROVISIONS

A. Crowley is ordered and directed, following the consummation of the Acquisition, to provide Delta Western with private office space at the combined facility of YFC and Crowley in Bethel. The office space provided must be of a size and configuration suitable for the daily management and operation of Delta Western's fuel business in Bethel. The space must be located so as to minimize the potential for illegal communications between Crowley and Delta Western concerning the marketing and sales strategy of each company.

Office Space

B. Crowley is ordered and directed, following the consummation of the Acquisition, to provide Delta Western with suitable space at the combined Crowley/YFC facility for the purpose of erecting or placing a sign of the same general size and nature as the largest sign used by Crowley at the combined facility. The location chosen must be at least as visible and noticeable as other prominent signs at the facility.

Signage

C. Crowley is ordered and directed, following the consummation of the Acquisition, to allow Delta Western to use its facilities in Bethel for tug and barge docking and loading/unloading in accordance with other provisions of the Consent Decree.

D. Crowley shall not engage in any conduct that directly or indirectly interferes with Delta Western's ability to operate its fuel business in a competitive manner consistent with the purpose and goals of this Consent Decree.

IX.

PROHIBITION ON ACQUIRING DIVESTED ASSETS

For a period of 20 years from the date this Consent Decree is entered, Crowley, either individually or jointly, shall not acquire any of the assets or the right to utilize fuel storage capacity divested pursuant to this Consent Decree without the prior approval of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall approve or disapprove a request to acquire divested assets or storage capacity within 60 days of receipt of a written request for approval. Failure to act within this time will be deemed an approval by the Attorney General.

X

SALE OF CROWLEY OR YFC TANK FARM

For the term of this Consent Decree, Crowley shall not dispose of the Bethel Tank Farms except in accordance with all applicable antitrust and other laws of the State of Alaska and the United States. Crowley agrees to provide the Attorney General with 30 days notice before executing a sale of the Bethel Tank Farms.

XI.

COMPLIANCE INSPECTION

A. For the purpose of determining or securing compliance with this Consent Decree, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, authorized representatives of the State, including consultants and other persons, shall, upon the written request of the Attorney General, and on reasonable notice to Crowley, be permitted:

1. Access during office hours to inspect and copy all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of Crowley, which may have counsel present, relating to this Consent Decree; and

2. Subject to the reasonable convenience of Crowley and without restraint or interference from them, to interview directors, officers, employees, and agents of Crowley, which may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

B. Upon written request, Crowley shall submit written reports as requested by the State concerning the matters contained in this Consent Decree.

C. No information nor any documents obtained by the means provided in this paragraph nor the Crowley/Sellers Purchase Agreement or the Crowley/Delta Western Purchase Agreement shall be divulged by any representative of the State to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Alaska Attorney General, except for the purpose of enforcing compliance with this Consent Decree, or as otherwise required by law or directed by the court.

XII.

RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction is retained by this court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Consent Decree to apply to this court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, implementation, or modification of any of the provisions of this Consent Decree, for the enforcement of compliance herewith, and for the punishment of any violations hereof.

IX.

OTHER RELIEF

A. If Defendants fail to comply with the terms of this Consent Decree, the Court may order appropriate relief pursuant to AS 45.50.580 on motion of the State for cause.

B. The State is awarded its expert fees of $17,500. Defendants shall pay this sum to the State within thirty (30) days of entry of this Consent Decree.

XV.

VOLUNTARY ACT OF THE PARTIES

The parties hereto expressly acknowledge and agree that this Consent Decree is voluntarily entered into as the result of arm's-length negotiation, and all parties hereto were represented by counsel in deciding to enter into this Consent Decree.

XVI.

PUBLIC COMMENT

This Consent Decree is being submitted by the parties to the court for approval pursuant to AS 45.50.584. In accordance with this procedure, the Consent Decree does not become final until 60 days after its filing. During this 60-day period, interested persons may file verified exceptions to the form or substance of the Consent Decree, and after a hearing on such exceptions, the court may approve or refuse to enter the Consent Decree. Copies of all such verified exceptions shall be served by the submitting person on the parties to the Consent Decree for their review, and each party may respond to such exceptions at the hearing as each party deems appropriate or as directed by the court. Defendants agree to publish, at Defendants' expense, notice, the form and contents of which are subject to the State's approval, of the execution and terms of the Consent Decree, the place or places at which members of the public may obtain copies of the Consent Decree and/or any summaries thereof or comments thereon prepared by the parties, and the procedure for submitting verified exceptions thereto. Such notice shall be published in the Anchorage Daily News, Fairbanks Daily News-Miner and the Juneau Empire on two occasions, the first being within ten (10) days after the lodging of this Consent Decree with the court, and the second between ten (10) and twenty (20) days after the lodging of this Consent Decree with the court. Other notice as necessary to inform residents in Western Alaska may also be required by the court.

XVII.

CONSUMMATION OF MERGER

The Acquisition may not be consummated prior to entry of an order by the court approving this Consent Decree.

XVIII.

TERMINATION

This Consent Decree will expire on the 30th anniversary of the date of its entry, or upon order of this court for good cause. This Consent Decree will automatically terminate upon any termination of the Crowley/Sellers Purchase Agreement without the consummation of the Acquisition.

XIX.

PUBLIC INTEREST

The terms of this Consent Decree are fair and reasonable and the entry thereof is in the public's interest.

Special session of Alaska State Legislature on natural gas issues
This past summer, the Alaska State Legislature approved a license to TransCanada for the construction of a natural gas pipeline running from the North Slope in Alaska to the Canadian province of Alberta. This license gives TransCanada access to $500 million in Alaska state funds for engineering and pre-construction work. Once completed, the pipeline would be capable of delivering more than 4 billion cubic feet of gas per day to U.S. markets--approximately 6 percent of total U.S. consumption. Econ One was retained several years ago by the Alaska State Legislature to serve as its economic advisor on issues relating to the State's attempts to commercialize North Slope gas resources. Barry Pulliam testified on two separate occasions this summer relating to the legislature's consideration of the TransCanada proposal and license. On the first occasion, Mr. Pulliam, who was the first witness to testify, outlined the TransCanada proposal, discussed the economics of the tariff structures proposed by TransCanada, and highlighted issues for consideration by the legislature. On the second occasion, Mr. Pulliam testified regarding the viability of alternative projects designed to export Alaska gas via LNG to Asian markets.

Gas sales agreements proposed by Enstar Natural Gas Company with ConocoPhillips and Marathon Oil
In this proceeding before the Regulatory Commission of Alaska, Enstar Natural Gas Company, a gas distribution company, proposed two new supply agreements that would set its prices for gas supply in Cook Inlet based on levels in the Lower 48 states. Econ One was retained by Chugach Electric Association, an intervenor in the proceeding, to review and comment on Enstar's economic justifications regarding the reasonableness of its pricing provisions. Jeff Leitzinger offered both prepared and direct testimony before the Commission stating that the pricing provisions in the two agreements (1) would reverse the long-standing price advantage enjoyed by Cook Inlet gas users relative to gas consumers in the Lower 48 states and (2) were not supported with any reasonable economic justifications for doing so.

Econ One has been retained by the Alaska Legislature to assist in the evaluation of a contract or contracts between the State and potential developers of a large-scale natural gas pipeline designed to move more than 4 billion cubic feet (bcf) per day from the North Slope of Alaska. Once constructed, the pipeline is expected to bring natural gas supplies totaling approximately 5% of U.S. demand and is expected to cost in excess of $13 billion. Econ One was initially retained by the legislature in the Spring of 2005. The Econ One consulting team includes energy economists and experts, including former senior executives with major oil and gas producers. Econ One has advised the legislature on issues including the role of Alaska gas in U.S. gas markets, the potential impact and consequences on the State of various contract provisions and the analysis of alternative projects. In addition to its work on gas line matters, Econ One has advised the Legislature over the course of the spring and summer of 2006 regarding the overhaul of Alaska's petroleum severance tax laws.

Merger review for the State of California

Tesoro acquired Shell Oil's Los Angeles refinery (100,000 barrels per day) and 278 retail gasoline stations in Southern California for $1.8 billion in the spring of 2007. Earlier in 2007, Tesoro also acquired USA Petroleum's 138 gasoline stations in California for $273 million. These two acquisitions resulted in a large increase in Tesoro's refining capacity in California and also dramatically increased its presence in retail gasoline operation within the state. Econ One was retained by the California Attorney General to assist the State in its review of these acquisitions. Barry Pulliam and Tony Finizza analyzed potential competitive issues associated with these transactions.

Barry Pulliam issued a study for the Alaska Department of Natural Resources (DNR)
His report examined valuation and royalty policies related to natural gas production on federal, state and provincial lands in both the U.S. and Canada. Alaska's interest in natural gas royalty policies had increased as the prospect of economically feasible development of its vast gas resources seems brighter. This report follows an earlier study (January 2002) for DNR concerning U.S. natural gas and NGL markets. Both reports are available at www.dnr.state.ak.us/.

Barry Pulliam presented testimony on behalf of the State of Alaska.
He appeared before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and Alaska Public Utility Commission at a joint hearing concerning the Quality Bank on the Trans Alaskan Pipeline (TAPS). TAPS utilizes the prices of both intermediate and finished petroleum products (including naphtha) in the operation of the system's Quality Bank. Mr. Pulliam testified as to the market value of naphtha produced on the West Coast of the U.S. and the ability of valuation methodologies proposed by the TAPS shippers to predict naphtha values. As part of his work on this matter, Mr. Pulliam analyzed more than 300 contracts entered into by West Coast refiners, all of which involved naphtha.

Barry Pulliam consulted with the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation of Sunoco, Inc.'s proposed acquisition of the Coastal Eagle Point refinery from El Paso Corporation. The investigation by the FTC focused on the potential for the acquisition of the New Jersey refinery to cause price increases in reformulated gasoline sold in Philadelphia (where Sunoco owns other refineries) and/or conventional gasoline delivered at points along the Laurel Pipeline, which extends from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh. Upon completion of its investigation, the FTC voted 5 to 0 to allow the acquisition to proceed.

Econ One consulted with the State of Alaska regarding the potential competitive impact of Crowley Marine Services Inc's acquisition of Yukon Fuels Both firms provided transportation services and sold petroleum products to a number of regional utilities and to cities and communities in Western Alaska, including the City of Bethel. After its investigation, the State of Alaska required the parties to divest some storage and distribution assets as part of a consent decree. The City of Bethel and eight utilities opposed the acquisition in Alaska Superior Court, arguing that the consent decree would not be sufficient to prevent price increases to consumers in Western Alaska. They argued that there were significant entry barriers involved in providing barge-delivered petroleum services to Western Alaskan cities and communities that would allow Crowley to dominate the market and raise prices. Barry Pulliam testified on behalf of the State of Alaska in support of the consent decree during a hearing in Superior Court in Anchorage. His testimony included the conclusion that the consent decree adequately addressed the competitive concerns identified in the investigation, including the potential entry barrier concerns. The Court ruled in favor of the State. After the hearing, the utilities attempted to obtain a temporary restraining order in Federal Court preventing the acquisition from proceeding. Their request was denied.

federal antitrust law.[1] Crowley Marine Services, Inc. ("Crowley"), a supplier of bulk fuel to Western Alaska, seeks to purchase Yukon Fuel Company ("Yukon"), a similar company.[2] Plaintiffs argue that the sale violates federal antitrust laws because its effect "may be substantially to lessen competition."[3]

Before the Court reaches the merits of whether a temporary restraining order should be granted, the Court must consider whether it may be involved in this dispute at all.

Plaintiffs' Motion for Temporary Restraining Order is not the first instance where a court has considered the potential antitrust ramifications of this sale. In November of 2003, Plaintiffs filed an antitrust lawsuit in Alaska State Court to stop the sale. In March of 2004, the Alaska Attorney General initiated a formal investigation of the contemplated transaction. The State Court stayed its action until completion of this investigation. The Attorney General's investigation included interviewing people involved in large transportation services, retaining an antitrust economist to review relevant documents, meeting with the City of Bethel, the utility groups, and Plaintiffs, and consulting with antitrust attorneys in other states and federal authorities. As a result, the Attorney General determined that modifying the sale was necessary to avoid state anti-trust violations. Thus, at the end of the eight month investigation, a consent decree was reached that allowed the sale of Yukon to go forward as long as Crowley divested certain assets and provided other accommodations to Delta Western, another supplier of bulk fuel in western Alaska. The consent decree was then published and subjected to a public comment period. The State then initiated its own complaint in State Superior Court alleging that the sale would be an antitrust violation, but that its proposed consent decree would remedy the violation.

After the expiration of the comment period, the State Superior Court proceeded to have a hearing[4] where Plaintiffs presented their arguments, the Assistant Attorney General presented [4] While the court limited its review to determine whether the settlement was within the reaches of the public interest, it was not a rubber-stamp and the court considered: "(1) the degree to which the decree achieves the relief sought in the complaint; (2) the nature of the case, including the size of the defendant, the scope and complexity of the proposed settlement, and the importance of the case to the economy as a whole; (3) the quantity and quality of information available to the court on which to base an evaluation of the decree, including the competitive impact statement, public comment and government responses, and any pretrial discovery and trial evidence actually presented; (4) any prior or current history of attempts by the same parties to evade public scrutiny of alleged anti-competitive practices." Clerk's Docket No. 12 at Ex. A at 6.

his comments, and expert economists were heard.[5] On August 25, 2005, State Superior Court Judge Ben Esch issued his opinion approving consent decree and allowing the sale to proceed. Judge Esch concluded that the sale was in the public interest. This Court has reviewed Judge Esch's opinion and found it thoughtful, thorough, and well-reasoned.

Plaintiffs now wish this Court to issue a temporary restraining order preventing the sale while it considers whether the sale, as modified by the consent decree, is a violation of federal antitrust law. In so doing, this Court would effectively prevent the judgment of the State Superior Court from taking effect. The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283, "precludes federal courts from enjoining state court actions unless (1) Congress has expressly authorized such relief by statute, (2) an injunction is necessary in aid of the court's jurisdiction, or (3) an injunction is necessary to protect or effectuate the court's judgments."[6] "In the interest of comity and federalism, these three exceptions must be strictly construed."[7] Therefore, "doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine the controversy."[8] The Act applies to any stage of state proceedings, including judgments and appeals.[9] Additionally, "[i]t makes no difference whether the injunction applies to the private litigants or is imposed directly on the State Court itself."[10]

[5] While Plaintiffs were not a party to the lawsuit, they were participants and were parties to a companion lawsuit that raised identical issues. Furthermore, the Attorney General provided them documentary evidence and they submitted formal objections to the court and participated in the hearing.

Here, Plaintiffs move for a temporary restraining order that would preclude the State Court's decision approving the sale from taking effect. Thus, the Act applies to prohibit this Court from so acting, unless an exception to the Act applies, which does not appear to be the case here. First, there has been no statutory authorization by Congress for the relief sought by Plaintiffs. Second, such an order is not necessary to aid the Court's jurisdiction. Third, such an order is not necessary to protect or effectuate a judgment of the Federal District Court. Thus, it appears that this Court is likely barred from granting the relief requested by Plaintiffs.

Moreover, after having reviewed the briefs and documentation supplied by the parties, and noting the extensive nature of the investigation and litigation that led to the consent decree and subsequent State Court decision, and without even considering the issue of collateral estoppel, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have not shown probable success on the merits or that there is a high degree of irreparable harm, which is critical to the issuance of a temporary restraining order.[1]

Therefore, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order.

This is not to say that Plaintiffs' complaint lacks merit or that Plaintiffs will ultimately fail. Indeed, although Defendants are not precluded from proceeding with the sales transaction, they do so with full knowledge of the pending litigation and its potential consequences.

Title 45. Trade and Commerce
Chapter 50. Competitive Practices, Regulation of Competition, Consumer Protection
Article 4. Monopolies; Restraint of Trade
→ § 45.50.562. Combinations in restraint of trade unlawful

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is unlawful.

§ 45.50.564. Monopolies and attempted monopolies unlawful

It is unlawful for a person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with another person to monopolize any part of trade or commerce.

§ 45.50.566. Transactions and agreements not to use or deal in commodities or services unlawful

It is unlawful for a person to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, or services, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, enjoyment, or resale, or fix a price charged for it, or discount from, or rebate upon, that price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser will not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodity or service of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, if the effect of the lease, sale, or contract for sale, or of the condition, agreement, or understanding may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

§ 45.50.568. Mergers and acquisitions unlawful when competition lessened

(a) It is unlawful for a person to acquire and hold, directly or indirectly, the whole or a part of the stock, or other share capital, or assets of any corporation after August 5, 1975 if the effect of the acquisition and holding may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce in the state or in a section of the state. This subsection does not apply to persons purchasing such stock solely for investment if it is not used by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. Nothing in this subsection prevents a corporation from causing the formation of subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions of it, or from owning and holding all or a part of the stock of the subsidiary corporation, when the effect of the formation is not substantially to lessen competition.

(b) When the court finds that the effect of the holding of such stock, share capital, or assets is substantially to lessen competition or tends to create a monopoly and no other remedy will eliminate the lessening of competition or the tendency to create a monopoly, the court shall order the divestiture or other disposition of the stock, share capital, or assets and shall prescribe a reasonable time, manner, and degree of the divestiture or other disposition of it.

(c) This section does not apply to mergers, acquisitions, or holding companies permitted by AS 06.05.235 or to a merger carried out in accordance with AS 21.69.590 - 21.69.600, or to mergers, acquisitions, or holding companies permitted and regulated by a regulatory agency of the United States having jurisdiction and control over those mergers and acquisitions.

§ 45.50.570. Interlocking directorates and relationships

(a) It is unlawful for a person to be at the same time a director, officer, partner, or trustee in any two or more firms, partnerships, trusts, associations, or corporations or any combination of them engaged in commerce, if these firms, partnerships, trusts, associations, or corporations or a combination of them, are by virtue of their business and location or operation, competitors and if the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

(b) A person may not by the use of a representative accomplish the result prohibited in (a) of this section.

(c) The validity or invalidity of an act of a director, officer, or trustee done by the director, officer, or trustee while occupying the position in violation of this section shall be determined by the statutory and common law of the state relating to corporations, trusts, or associations.

(d) The attorney general may bring an action at any time to cause a director, officer, or trustee who may be occupying such a position in violation of this section to vacate the office or offices to effect the termination of the prohibited interlocking relationship.

(e) A person affected by an act of a director, officer, or trustee may bring an action at any time to cause the director, officer, or trustee who may be occupying the position in violation of this section to terminate the prohibited interlocking relationship.

(f) The court, upon finding that a director, officer, or trustee is holding office in violation of this section, shall order the person to terminate the interlocking relationship, and, in the case of a trustee, the court may, when it considers it appropriate, order the trustee to vacate the office of the trustee. A remedy provided in this section does not limit and is in addition to any other remedy available under another section of this chapter or another law.

§ 45.50.572. Exemptions

(a) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not forbid the existence or operation of labor, agricultural, horticultural, or marine pilot organizations created for the purpose of mutual help, and not conducted for profit, or forbid or restrain members of those organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objectives of them; nor are these organizations or members illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the provisions of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596.

(b) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not forbid actions or arrangements authorized or regulated under the laws of the United States that exempt these actions or arrangements from application of the antitrust laws of the United States or under the following statutes of this state:

(1) AS 06.05.235 and 06.05.570;

(2) AS 10.15; and

(3) AS 31.05.110.

(c) AS 45.50.562--45.50.596 do not forbid persons engaged in the fishing industry as fishermen who catch, collect, or cultivate aquatic products from acting together in associations for the purpose of collectively catching, producing, preparing for market, processing, handling, and marketing their product. Associations may have marketing agencies in common and may make contracts and agreements necessary to achieve the purposes of this subsection. In this subsection, "association" means an association, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, that

(1) is operated for the mutual benefit of its members;

(2) does not deal in the aquatic products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than the association handles for its members; and

(3) either

(A) does not allow a member of the association more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital the member may own in the association; or

(B) does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of eight percent a year.

(d) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 apply to long distance telecommunications services provided by public utilities. AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not apply to other services provided by public utilities that have been issued a certificate of public convenience and necessity under AS 42.05.

(e), (f) Repealed.

(g) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not forbid activities expressly required by a regulatory agency of the state. Activities permitted by a regulatory agency of the state are not forbidden by this chapter if the regulatory agency has given due consideration to the possible anticompetitive effects before permitting the activities, and enforcement of the provisions of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 would be disruptive of the regulatory scheme.

(h) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not forbid actions or arrangements necessary to carry out the provisions of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. [FN1]

(i) AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 do not prohibit activities of the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation to stabilize the market price of and demand for residential housing in the state under AS 18.56.210.

(j) AS 45.50.562--45.50.596 do not forbid persons engaged in the fishing industry as fishermen, including fishermen acting through associations allowed under (c) of this section, from collectively agreeing with fish processors, including fish processors acting through associations of processors, on the (1) price paid to the fishermen for aquatic products; and (2) minimum price that fish processors will accept for the sale of processed aquatic products. Nothing in this subsection allows fish processors to agree among themselves on the price paid to fishermen or the minimum price that fish processors will accept for the sale of processed aquatic products if fishermen did not participate in the making of the agreement and are not a party to the agreement.

(k) AS 45.50.562--45.50.596 do not apply to action taken by a person to comply with AS 45.25 or to action refrained from by a person in order to comply with AS 45.25 (motor vehicle transactions).

(l) AS 45.50.562--45.50.596 do not forbid the existence or operation of organizations of physicians acting in accordance with AS 23.50, or forbid or restrain members of those organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objectives of them; nor are these organizations or members illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the provisions of AS 45.50.562--45.50.596.

[FN1] See 43 U.S.C.A. § 1601 et seq.

§ 45.50.574. Contracts voidable

A contract or agreement in violation of a provision of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 is voidable by either party as to future performance by either party; however, the court may, in its discretion, order payment for goods or services already received to prevent unjust enrichment.

§ 45.50.576. Suits by persons injured; treble damages; costs

(a) A person who is injured in business or property by a violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570, or a person so injured because the person refuses to accede to a proposal for an arrangement that, if consummated, would be a violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570, may bring a civil action

(1) for damages sustained by the person, and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded threefold the amount of damages sustained by the person, plus the costs of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees; and

(2) to enjoin the unlawful practice, and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff may be awarded costs of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees.

(b) If a home rule or general law city or borough or other governmental entity is injured by reason of a violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570, it may maintain an action in the same manner as prescribed in (a) of this section for an injured person, and the city, borough, or other governmental entity is entitled to the same relief as provided in (a) of this section.

(c) In a civil action brought under AS 45.50.562--45.50.570, if judgment is for the defendant, the defendant shall be awarded the defendant's costs of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees in accordance with rules adopted by the supreme court for awarding costs and attorney fees to prevailing parties in civil actions. If the plaintiff in a civil action brought under this section in which judgment is for the defendant is a class certified under Rule 23, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, any award of costs and attorney fees to the defendant

(1) may be satisfied only through funds, if any, that the class has collected from settlements with or judgments against other defendants; and

(2) is not a liability of any individual member of the class.

§ 45.50.577. Enforcement by attorney general

(a) The attorney general may bring a civil action in superior court to secure monetary relief as provided in this section on behalf of the state and its agencies injured either directly or indirectly by reason of any violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570.

(b) The attorney general may bring a civil action in superior court in the name of the state, as parens patriae on behalf of governmental entities or persons doing business or residing in this state, to secure monetary relief as provided in this section for injuries directly or indirectly sustained by persons by reason of any violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570.

(c) The court shall exclude from the amount of monetary relief awarded in an action under

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(a) or (b) of this section any amount of monetary relief that

(1) duplicates amounts that have been awarded for the same injury; or

(2) is properly allocable to persons who have excluded their claims under (e) of this section.

(d) The court shall award the attorney general as monetary relief three times the total damage sustained as described in (a) or (b) of this section and, additionally, the costs of the action, including reasonable attorney fees.

(e) In any action brought under (b) of this section, the attorney general, at the times, in the manner, and with the content the court directs, shall cause notice of the action to be given by publication. Any governmental entity or person on whose behalf an action is brought under (b) of this section may elect to exclude from civil action the portion of the state claim for monetary relief attributable to that governmental entity or person by filing notice of the election with the court within the time specified in the attorney general's notice given in accordance with this subsection.

(f) The final judgment in an action under (a) or (b) of this section is res judicata as to any claim under AS 45.50.576 by any governmental entity or person on whose behalf the action was brought and who fails to give notice of election to exclude under (e) of this section within the period specified in the attorney general's notice given under (e) of this section.

(g) An action under (b) of this section may not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of any proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given by publication at the times, in the manner, and with the content the court directs in accordance with (e) of this section and AS 45.50.584.

(h) Monetary relief recovered in an action under this section shall be (1) distributed in the manner the court, in its discretion, authorizes; or (2) deemed a civil penalty by the court and deposited in the general fund, and may be appropriated to the Alaska permanent fund (AS 37.13.010(a)) or for any other public purpose. A distribution procedure authorized by the court under this subsection must afford each governmental entity or person participating in the civil action a reasonable opportunity to secure that entity's or person's appropriate portion of the net monetary relief.

(i) Only the attorney general, in a suit brought under this section, may seek monetary relief for injury indirectly sustained for a violation of AS 45.50.562--45.50.570.

§ 45.50.578. Certain violations constitute misdemeanor

A person who violates AS 45.50.562 or 45.50.564 is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction is punishable, if a natural person, by a fine of not more than $20,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both; and if not a natural person, by a fine of not more than $50,000.

§ 45.50.579. Proof of aggregate damages

In a civil action brought by the attorney general under AS 45.50.577, the attorney general may recover aggregate damages by using statistical sampling or sampling methods, by the computation of illegal overcharges, or by a similar, reasonable system of estimating aggregate damages that the court, in its discretion, permits, without the necessity of separately proving the individual claim or amount of damage to governmental entities or persons on whose behalf the civil action was brought.

§ 45.50.580. Injunction by attorney general

(a) In addition to any other relief provided by AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, the attorney general may bring an action to enjoin a violation of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596. This action may be brought as a sole action or in conjunction with another action that the attorney general is authorized to bring.

(b) The court may make additional orders or judgments as may be necessary to restore to a person in interest any money or property, real or personal, that may have been acquired by an act prohibited by AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, and as may be necessary to prevent continuing or future violations of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596.

§ 45.50.582. Jurisdiction of court

An action arising under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 shall be brought in the superior court.

§ 45.50.584. Consent judgment

(a) In an action maintained under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, the parties to it may file with the court a consent judgment or decree. The consent judgment or decree shall set out the alleged violations, future obligations of the parties, if any, damages, or other relief, the defendant agrees to make, if any, and the reasons for entering into the consent judgment or decree.

(b) A consent judgment or decree does not become final until 60 days from its filing. During the 60-day period an interested party may file verified exceptions to the form or substance of the consent judgment or decree, and the court, upon a full hearing on those exceptions, may approve or refuse to enter the consent judgment or decree.

§ 45.50.586. Judgment in favor of the state as evidence in another action

A final judgment rendered in a civil or criminal action brought by the state under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 is prima facie evidence against the defendant in any other action under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 brought by another party, or by the state, a city, a borough, or other governmental entity; however, this section does not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered under AS 45.50.584.

§ 45.50.588. Limitation of actions

An action to enforce a claim arising under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596 is barred unless commenced within four years after the claim accrues, except that when an action is brought by the attorney general under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, the running of this period of limitation, with respect to every private right of action for damages that is based in whole or in part on a matter complained of in the action by the attorney general, shall be suspended during the pendency of the action brought by the attorney general. For the purpose of this section, a claim for a continuing violation is considered to accrue at any time during the period of the violation.

§ 45.50.590. Powers of the attorney general

If the attorney general determines, upon complaint or otherwise, that a person has engaged in, or engages in, or is about to engage in an act or practice prohibited or declared unlawful by AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, or that a person has assisted or participated in a plan, scheme, agreement, or combination of the nature described in AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, or when the attorney general believes it to be in the public interest, the attorney general may commence an investigation. The attorney general may compel production of documentary material and take testimony, under oath, before the institution of an action under AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596.

§ 45.50.592. Investigatory demand for documentary evidence

(a) If the attorney general determines that a person is in possession, custody, or control of a documentary evidence, wherever situated, that the attorney general believes to be relevant to an investigation authorized in AS 45.50.590, the attorney general may execute in writing and cause to be served upon that person an investigative demand requiring the person to produce the documentary material and permit inspection and copying.

(b) Each demand must

(1) state the specific statute the alleged violation of which is under investigation, and the general subject matter of the investigation;

(2) describe, with reasonable specificity so as fairly to indicate the material demanded, the documentary material to be produced;

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(3) prescribe a return date within which the documentary material is to be produced; and

(4) identify the state employees or representatives to whom the documentary material is to be made available for inspection and copying.

(c) A demand may not

(1) require the production of documentary material that would be privileged from disclosure if demanded by a subpoena duces tecum issued by a court of the state; or

(2) contain a requirement that would be unreasonable or improper if contained in a subpoena duces tecum issued by a court of the state; however, this does not limit the power of the attorney general to require production of documents located outside the state that pertain to matters affecting the state.

(d) The demand may be served by the attorney general or the designee of the attorney general by

(1) delivering a copy of it to the person to be served, or, if the person is not a natural person, to an officer of the person to be served;

(2) delivering a copy of it to a place of business in the state of the person to be served; or

(3) mailing by registered or certified mail a copy of it addressed to the person to be served at a place of business in the state, or, if the person has no place of business in the state, to principal office or place of business of the person.

(e) Documentary material produced pursuant to a demand, or copies of it, unless otherwise ordered by a superior court for good cause shown, may not be produced for inspection or copying by, nor may its contents be disclosed to, anyone other than an authorized employee of the state without the consent of the person who produced the material. However, under those reasonable terms and conditions the attorney general prescribes, copies of the documentary material shall be available for inspection and copying by the person who produced the material or an authorized representative of that person. The attorney general, or a designee, may use copies of the documentary material as the attorney general or designee considers necessary in the enforcement of AS 45.50.562-45.50.598, including presentation before a court; however, material that contains trade secrets may not be presented except with the approval of the court in which the action is pending after adequate notice to the person furnishing the material.

(f) At any time before the return date specified in the demand, or within 20 days after the demand has been served, whichever period is shorter, a petition to extend the return date for, or to modify or set aside a demand issued under (a) of this section, stating good cause, may be filed in the superior court for the judicial district where the parties reside. A petition by a person on whom a demand is served, stating good cause, to require the attorney general or another person to act in accordance with the requirements of (e) of this section, and all other petitions in connection with a demand, may be filed in the superior court for the judicial district in which the person on whom the demand is served resides.

(g) A person upon whom a demand is served under this section shall comply with the terms of the demand unless otherwise provided by an order of court issued in response to a petition filed under (f) of this section. A person who, with intent to avoid, prevent, or obstruct compliance, in whole or in part, with an investigative demand under this section, removes from any place, conceals, withholds, or destroys, mutilates, alters, or by any other means falsifies, a documentary material in the possession, custody, or control of a person which is the subject of a demand duly served upon any person, or who otherwise wilfully disobeys any such demand, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is punishable upon conviction by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or by both. Failure of the state to serve the demand properly under (d) of this section is a defense to prosecution under this subsection, but invalidity of the demand under (b) or (c) of this section is not a defense, and that invalidity may be tested only in an action under (f) of this section to modify or set aside the demand.

(h) Nothing in this section impairs the authority of the attorney general or a designee to lay before a grand jury of this state evidence concerning a violation of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596, to invoke the power of a court to compel the production of evidence before a grand jury, or to file a civil complaint or criminal information alleging a violation of AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596.

§ 45.50.594. Investigatory demand for attendance of witness

(a) In connection with an investigation authorized by AS 45.50.590, the attorney general may issue an investigative demand compelling the attendance of a person for examination under oath before the attorney general or before a court of record.

(b) Each demand shall

(1) state the specific statute the alleged violation of which is under investigation, and the general subject matter of the investigation;

(2) state the date, time, and place at which the examination is to take place.

(c) A demand may be served by the attorney general, or a designee, in accordance with the procedures prescribed in AS 45.50.592(d).

(d) If a person ordered to attend the inquiry fails to attend without good cause, the person is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction is punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both. If a person in attendance at the inquiry refuses to answer a question on the ground that the person may be incriminated by the answer, and if the attorney general, or a designee, in a writing directed to the person being questioned orders the person to answer the question, the person shall comply with the order. After complying, and if but for this section the person would have been privileged to withhold the answer given, the person may not be prosecuted for an offense or subjected to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of a transaction, matter or thing concerning which the person gave evidence. However, the person may nevertheless be prosecuted or subjected to penalty or forfeiture for a perjury, false swearing, or contempt committed in answering or failing to answer. If a person refuses to testify after being granted immunity from prosecution and after being ordered to testify, the person may be adjudged in contempt and committed to jail until the time the person purges the contempt by testifying. A grant of immunity does not prevent the attorney general from instituting civil contempt proceedings against a person who violates any of the above provisions.

§ 45.50.596. Definitions

In AS 45.50.562 - 45.50.596,

(1) "asset" includes any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal, or mixed and wherever located, and any other thing of value;

(2) "documentary evidence" includes an original or copy of a book, record, report, memorandum, paper, communication, tabulation, map, chart, photograph, mechanical tabulation, magnetic tape, or other computer data storage system, or other tangible document or recording;

(3) "trade" and "commerce" include but are not limited to, trade in goods, merchandise, natural resources, whether or not severed, extracted, harvested, or produced, agricultural products, produce, choses in action, commodities, and any other article of commerce; they include trade or business in service trades, transportation, banking, lending, advertising, bonding, and any other business whether or not that business furnishes a personal service.

§ 45.50.598. Short title

AS 45.50.562--45.50.598 may be cited as the Alaska Restraint of Trade Act.

Final Report June 2008

Abstract

This is a systematic analysis of components of delivered fuel prices in Alaska. Data for the analysis include limited publicly available Alaska fuel prices (fall 2007 prices), as well as information the authors gathered from extensive interviews with fuel retailers and transporters, communities, and agencies. We identify the individual components of delivered fuel costs—including world price of crude oil, refining costs, transportation costs, storage and distribution costs, taxes and financing costs—and investigate how these factors influence the final retail prices of home heating fuel and gasoline. Transportation, storage, and distribution costs appear to be the most variable factors driving the large retail fuel price differentials among Alaska communities. Therefore, we investigate how factors such as seasonal icing, the number of fuel transfers enroute to specific communities, local storage and delivery infrastructure, marine and river characteristics, and distance from refineries or fuel hubs influence fuel prices. We did an in-depth analysis of how those factors influence prices in ten case study communities around the state—Allakaket/Alatna, Angoon, Bethel, Chitina, False Pass, Fort Yukon, Lime Village, Mountain Village, Unalakleet, and Yakutat. Together, the quantitative data and information on Alaska fuel logistics provide a comprehensive analysis of Alaska's fuel prices.

I. Introduction

Purpose

This study is a systematic analysis and comparison of the components of delivered fuel prices in Alaska. The Alaska Energy Authority asked the Institute of Social and Economic Research (ISER), at the University of Alaska Anchorage, to do the study. The more Alaskans know about what drives fuel prices in various communities, the more it may be possible to identify opportunities for reducing or mitigating the high fuel prices many Alaskans face.

The framework underlying the analysis is that the delivered price of fuel in Alaska communities equals the sum of the following components:

- World price of crude oil
- Refining cost (Alaska, West Coast, other)
- Transportation cost (truck, railroad, barge, air)
- Storage and distribution costs
- Taxes (federal, state and local)
- Other (including subsidies and abnormal profits)

This framework holds true if the final component, "other," is calculated as the residual between total price and everything else. But the framework also serves as a research hypothesis: that the "other" component is generally small and/or readily identifiable as a bona fide cost. In other words, delivered prices ought to reflect identifiable costs.

Methods and report organization

We initially gathered information—mostly from existing sources—for 100 communities in Alaska. But we found that information was neither reliable enough nor consistent enough to use for statistical analysis. We therefore focused on comparative case studies of ten communities, reflecting as much as possible all the forces driving fuel prices around Alaska. Figure 1 shows locations of the study communities:

- Angoon
- Allakaket/Alatna
- Bethel
- Chitina
- False Pass
- Fort Yukon
- Lime Village
- Mountain Village
- Unalakleet
- Yakutat

In the rest of this section we provide some background discussion of fuel pricing and consumption in a national context. Section II covers world oil markets. In Section III we describe the refining process and refinery sources for Alaska fuel; we also present a statistical analysis of the relationship between crude oil prices and refined fuel prices. Section IV addresses product transportation and distribution—how fuel is transported and who stores, owns, and distributes the final products. Section V covers taxes, including federal excise taxes and state and local taxes. Subsidies and assistance programs are discussed in Section VI. Section VII reports the findings from the ten case studies. Section VIII concludes with a summary and discussion of some policy implications.

Background

"Petroleum" refers to crude oil or the refined products obtained by processing crude oil. Those include gasoline, diesel fuel, and heating oil.[1] Petroleum products are used in virtually every aspect of modern human life—heating our homes and offices, generating electricity, providing fuel so we can drive to the grocery store. Petroleum products are also used in plastics, foods, and medicines; they are part of things as diverse as tires, deodorant and ink.

[1] For more information on the physical characteristics of petroleum products, see: U.S. Energy Information Administration, Energy Basics 101, Petroleum Basics 101.
http://www.eia.doe.gov/basics/petroleum_basics.html

Fuel oil (also often called diesel) is one of several products distilled from crude oil and used for heating fuel or engine fuel. Alaskans use a number of petroleum products, including motor gasoline, diesel fuel #1, diesel fuel #2, aviation gasoline, and jet fuel. Motor gasolines are used in automobiles, small boats, and snowmachines; there are typically three grades of gasoline available (mostly in larger communities in Alaska). Diesel fuel #1 is a kerosene product used for heating fuel. Diesel fuel #2 is a light gas-oil used for home and commercial heating and as a motor fuel. Aviation gasoline and jet fuel are used to fuel aircraft, but a type of jet fuel is also often used for home heating. According to Crowley Marine, one of Alaska's largest fuel distributors, most of the diesel fuel in more populated areas like Southcentral Alaska and Fairbanks is ultra low sulfur diesel. Most villages in Western Alaska still use low sulfur diesel, because they are exempt from the ultra low sulfur diesel requirement until 2011.[2]

Alaska has the nation's highest per capita energy consumption, at 1,186 million Btu—almost four times the U.S. average of 342 million Btu—largely because so much jet fuel is consumed at the Anchorage and Fairbanks international airports.[3] Alaska produces more crude oil than any other state except Texas, but the prices of petroleum products in Alaska are among the highest in the country. According to state surveys, the average annual energy expenditure per household in rural Alaska is more than three times the U.S. average, while per capita income is less than 75% of the U.S. average. The burden of high energy prices falls particularly hard on remote communities, many of which also struggle with high unemployment, limited local economic bases, and local governments that are struggling to provide basic local services to residents and businesses.[4]

The Energy Information Administration has conducted research to determine the components of retail fuel prices. It believes the cost to produce and deliver fuel to consumers includes crude oil, refining, distribution and marketing, and taxes.[5] Figure 3 shows these components for gasoline and diesel prices as of September 2007.

Crude oil prices are determined by worldwide supply and demand and are influenced by natural and political events that affect or potentially affect supplies. Consumption of and demand for crude oil products have increased, putting intense pressure on world crude oil supplies.

Refineries in the U.S. have operated at over 90% capacity during the last 10 years. The refining cost component is calculated by EIA as the difference between the monthly average of the spot price of gasoline or diesel fuel at the refinery and the average price of crude oil purchased by refiners.

Distribution and marketing costs include bulk storage, tanker truck transport, and retail sales operations (such as gas stations). In addition to seasonal shifts in demand caused by the winter heating season, retail fuel prices tend to rise with increasing distance between retail locations and distribution terminals and refineries. Areas farthest from the Gulf Coast, which is the source of nearly half the diesel fuel produced in the U.S., tend to have higher prices. Finally, the cost of doing business depends on location—including sources of supply, other competitors, and number of employees.[6] This component is calculated as the difference between the average retail price of gasoline or diesel fuel and the sum of the other three components (taxes, crude oil and refining).

Federal excise taxes were 18.4 cents per gallon on gasoline and 24.4 cents per gallon on diesel for motor fuel as of 2007, while state excise taxes averaged about 21.8 cents per gallon. Some states, counties, and cities levy additional taxes. Fuel oil used for home heating—which is also often called diesel and is virtually identical to diesel used for motor fuel—is exempt from federal and state taxes but is subject to local sales taxes.

The components of the cost of both gasoline and diesel have increased rapidly over the past few years. EIA statistics show that the prices of both diesel and gasoline doubled between 2002 and 2006. The broad pattern of component costs is similar for both fuels and both time periods. But the component breakdowns for these prices (Table 1 and Table 2) reveal some interesting possible trends. Costs of crude oil and refining made up larger percentages of the retail price in 2006 and taxes a smaller percentage. Distribution costs made up less of the retail price of gasoline but more of the price of diesel in 2006.

II. Crude oil prices

World crude oil prices

- Crude oil is a global commodity and crude oil prices are determined by global supply and demand. Apart from an allowance for tanker transportation costs and quality differentials, it makes economic sense to speak of the world price of oil.
- The price of crude oil is one of the most significant factors determining the price of petroleum products. The prices of gasoline and diesel—and especially the changes in those prices—are largely determined by the worldwide demand for and supply of crude oil.
- World crude oil prices reflect the interactions of thousands of buyers and sellers, each with their own knowledge and expectations about the demand for and supply of crude oil and petroleum products. These interactions occur in both the physical and the futures markets, with the resulting prices reflecting both current and future expected supply and demand conditions.[7]
- Regional and local markets for refined products are also influenced by the level of competitiveness in these markets and the costs of distribution to end-users.

Petroleum products represent a critical source of fuel for the world's economy, with oil being the largest source of energy for the world economy. The value of crude oil is driven by demand for petroleum products, particularly for use in transportation. Petroleum products power most motor vehicles, aircraft, marine vessels, and trains worldwide. In total, products derived from oil, such as motor gasoline, jet fuel, diesel fuel, and heating oil, supply nearly 40 percent of the energy consumed by households, businesses, and manufacturers. Natural gas and coal, by comparison, each supply less than 25 percent of the world's energy needs.[8]

According to the American Petroleum Institute (API), current high world oil prices result from sustained, strong economic growth, notably including that in China. This economic growth resulted in stronger-than-anticipated global demand for these fuels, which reduced excess production capacity as well as the quality of the crude oil available in the marketplace. These changes in global supply and demand were compounded by unexpected losses in both crude oil production and refining capacity in the United States as a result of damage from hurricanes Katrina and Rita in 2005. Oil prices have risen sharply, particularly for better-quality crude oils. In summary, API attributes changes in world oil prices and subsequent prices of refined products to be driven largely by the forces of supply and demand.[9]

The Energy Information Administration (EIA) also attributes current oil prices and volatility to overall shifts in supply and demand, but to a number of specific international events as well. In 2000, real oil prices fluctuated between $20 and $30 per barrel (year 2006 dollars) and had been relatively stable since 1986 (Figure 4). The recession in the U.S. following the September 11, 2001 attacks reduced demand and caused oil prices to drop below $20 a barrel. In the following two years, however, the U.S. economy began to rebound, increasing energy demand and causing an upward trend in oil prices. The current upward trend of oil prices largely began in late 2003.

After the U.S. invaded Iraq, world oil prices began to escalate sharply. The war in Iraq proved to be more complicated than originally predicted, and energy market uncertainty was further exasperated in August 2003 when Iraqi insurgents began attacking an oil pipeline in northern Iraq.

In 2004, the price of oil reached $50 a barrel. In addition to the deteriorating security situation in Iraq and the regular attacks on pipelines, workers in oil-rich Nigeria launched a general strike to protest rising domestic fuel prices.

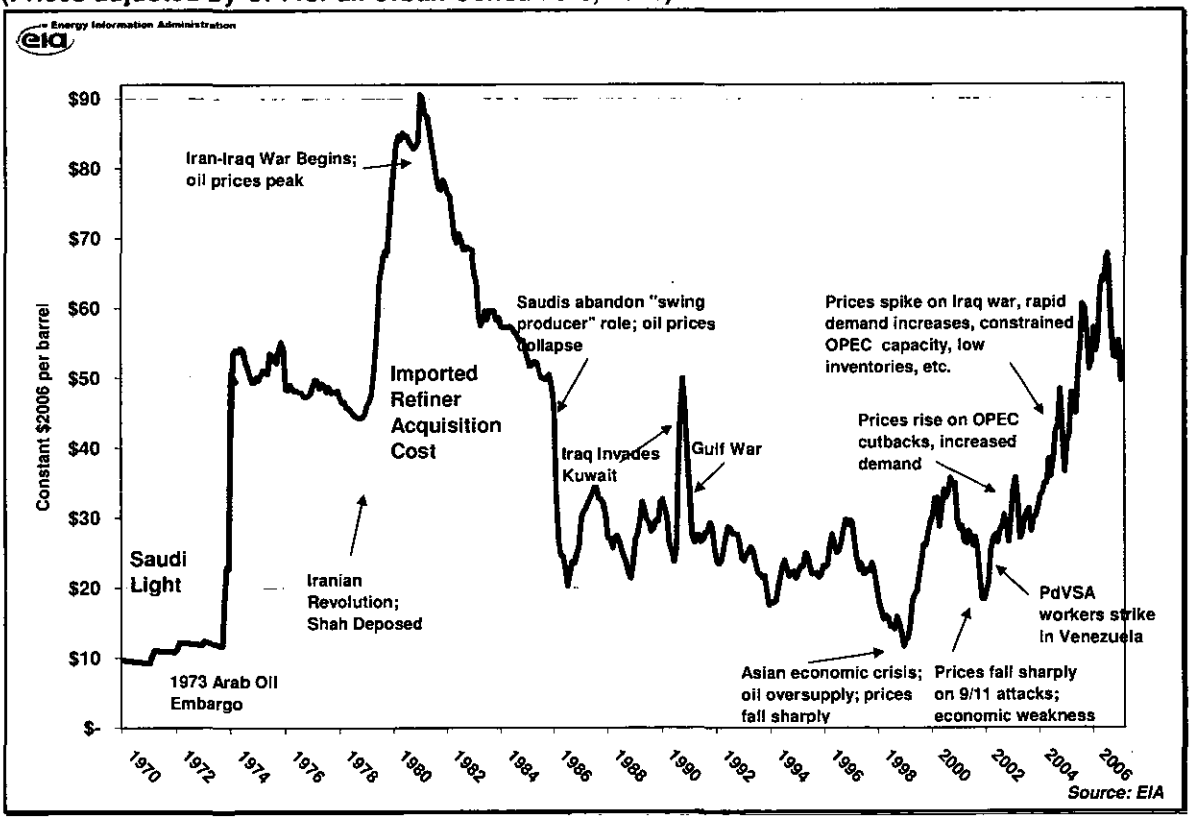
(Prices adjusted by CPI for all Urban Consumers, 2006)



By the end of 2005, oil prices hit $70 a barrel and then stabilized between $60 and $70. EIA blamed instability in Iraq, mounting ethnic unrest in Nigeria, concerns about Iran's nuclear program, and growing energy demand in China for the dramatic price increase. Contributing to rising oil prices was also Hurricane Katrina, which devastated the eastern coast of the Gulf of Mexico, damaging offshore oil rigs, disrupting supply, and affecting U.S. refining capacity.

These events were followed in 2006 by a number of other events—growing unrest in Iraq; Russia's temporary reduction of gas supplies to Europe; the threat of sanctions against Iran; an escalating ethnic insurgency in Nigeria's oil-producing region; a low-scale war between Israel and Lebanon; an attack on Saudi Arabia's Abqaiq oil facilities; and a temporary shutdown of a section of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline. EIA cites all these events as contributing to 2006 oil prices of over $80 a barrel. During October 2007, oil prices reached record highs—tied to growing fears that Turkey would invade northern Iraq, the weak U.S. dollar, and impending increased winter demand for energy. Prices have continued up throughout the first half of 2008, rising above $130 a barrel.

OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) blames the spike on geopolitical developments and speculation and maintains there is no supply shortage and no reason to boost production—but as of fall 2007 it held out the possibility of meeting to discuss additional supply boosts.[10] Table 3 shows the volatility in world oil prices and markets during fall 2007. Monthly Alaska North Slope oil prices from 1988 to 2007 are shown in Table 4.

Despite these higher prices, the world economy grew in 2004 and 2005. A worldwide recession in response to high oil prices would have dampened price increases, but sustained economic growth fueled continued demand. With the current geopolitical outlook, world oil prices are likely to continue to rise.[11]

Alaska crude oil prices

There is no price for Alaska crude oil on the New York Mercantile Exchange (NYMEX) or other commodity exchanges. The spot price of Alaska North Slope (ANS) crude oil is calculated by subtracting a market differential from the price of West Texas Intermediate (WTI) quoted on the NYMEX. Four different assessment services estimate that market differential and report a daily spot price for ANS.[12]

As can be seen in Table 4, month-to-month crude oil prices are volatile—monthly ANS West Coast prices ranged from $17.52 per barrel to $73.10 per barrel between 2002 and 2007 alone. But the trend has been up dramatically since 2002. As recently as December 1998, ANS prices dipped as low as $9.39.The 60-month moving average for the period from 1988 to 2007 was $42.62 per barrel.

III. Refining

Crude oil has to be refined to extract useful products. This section describes the refining process and the types of petroleum products produced; provides a list of the refineries that supply Alaska markets; examines the relationship between crude oil prices and refined product prices, including a comparison of refined product prices from different refineries; and describes some of the sources of refined petroleum product prices.

Refining process

Crude oil is a mixture of hydrocarbons that exists in liquid form in underground reservoirs. It may also include small amounts of gaseous hydrocarbons that are liquefied upon extraction, and some non-hydrocarbons such as sulfur and various metals.

Refining is the process of converting crude oil into various marketable petroleum products by separating component hydrocarbons. It can also involve chemical reactions and the blending of components and additives. The separation of hydrocarbons is most commonly achieved by fractional distillation. Fractional distillation is the process of heating a mixture to separate it into its component parts (fractions), each of which has a different boiling point. The mixture is boiled, transforming its components into vapor. Beyond the chamber in which the mixture is boiled is a distillation column with outlets at different heights, corresponding to where each fraction condenses after it rises and cools. The heavier fractions (those with higher boiling points) condense lower in the column, while the lighter fractions (those with lower boiling points) condense higher in the column. After condensation, the fractions exit the column in liquid form, each through a different outlet.

Types of refined petroleum products

After isolation, the various hydrocarbons may be mixed to produce a number of petroleum products, including motor gasoline, aviation gasoline, jet fuels, #1 distillate, #2 distillate, and asphalt, among many other potential products. Motor and aviation gasoline are difficult to produce and require complex refining equipment. Common petroleum products include:

- Motor gasoline is the type of fuel used in most vehicles with internal combustion engines. The production of the various grades of gasoline is complex, compared with other types of fuel, and requires expensive and sophisticated equipment. One 42-gallon barrel of crude oil produces about 20 gallons of gasoline.[13]
- Aviation gasoline is used in aircraft with reciprocating engines. It is subject to especially stringent specifications.[14]
- Jet fuel is a kerosene-based fuel used in aircraft with turbine engines. The two main types are Jet A and Jet B, which have the corresponding military designations JP-5 and JP-4. Jet-A is often sold in Alaska as fuel oil/heating oil at the price of #2 fuel oil. One reason why it is sometimes sold for heating fuel is that it has a low pour point—meaning that it won't gel until it reaches a very low temperature.[15]

- #1 distillate can be used as fuel oil/heating oil or as a diesel fuel for high-speed diesel engines that operate at frequently changing speeds, such as city buses.[16] It is available at various sulfur levels: high sulfur, low sulfur, and ultra low sulfur.
- #2 distillate can be used as fuel oil/heating oil or as a diesel fuel for high-speed diesel engines operating at relatively constant speeds and loads—like locomotives. It must meet different specifications, depending on how it's used. It's available in various sulfur levels: high sulfur, low sulfur, and ultra low sulfur.

Figure 5 shows, in broad categories, how much of each type of product is extracted from a barrel of crude oil. You may note that while a barrel contains 42 gallons of crude oil, the total output volume of refined product according to this figure is 44.6 gallons. This chart is based on data from the Energy Information Administration. Another source, the California Energy Commission, gives 48.43 gallons as the total output volume, on average, from a barrel of crude. This increase is called processing gain, and is due to the addition of various additives, such as alkylates. Also worth noting is that the latter source gives 51.4% as the percentage of output that is gasoline, rather than the 43.9% indicated by the EIA numbers. This is due partly to the addition of ethanol to gasoline at a level of 5.7% by volume, as required in California, which brings the total output volume up to 49.59 gallons for California refineries.

Diesel fuel sulfur content regulations

Diesel fuels are subject to new regulations regarding sulfur content. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) finalized the Highway Diesel Rule in January 2001, and the Non-road Diesel Rule in June 2004, mandating the use of cleaner-burning ultra-low-sulfur diesel (ULSD)—diesel with no higher than 15 ppm sulfur content), for road and non-road uses, respectively. This cleaner-burning fuel, along with new equipment on tailpipes and exhaust stacks that require it, will "dramatically reduce particulate matter and nitrogen oxides in diesel exhaust."[17] The Highway Diesel Rule took effect in 2006, and the Non-road Diesel Rule in 2007. However, because of the unique characteristics of rural Alaska, including its geography, economy, air quality, and distribution challenges, the effective dates were extended for rural areas of the state. They will be allowed to use diesel with uncontrolled sulfur content for all uses until 2010 beginning the transition to ultra-low-sulfur diesel on January , and finishing by December 1, 2010. Urban areas of Alaska (those served by the Federal Aid Highway System) were required to adhere to the same implementation schedule as the other states.[18]

The ULSD regulations do not apply directly to fuel used for home heating or jet fuel.[19] However, there will be indirect effects on heating fuel prices, because most fuel used for heating will probably be ULSD. That's because for many communities, it would be impractical to separately store both a less expensive type of fuel to use for heating (higher sulfur Jet A, #1 fuel oil, #2 fuel oil) as well as ULSD for other purposes—so they will have to use only ULSD. According to the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC), "The fuel storage and distribution infrastructure in rural Alaska is designed to handle a single grade of diesel fuel." In some communities, especially hub communities, there will be enough demand for Jet A for turboprop and turbojet aircraft that it may be purchased in large enough quantities to use for home heating as well.

The transition to ULSD will mean higher diesel and heating fuel prices for Alaska communities. It will also increase the cost of diesel-generated electricity, both because of the more expensive fuel and the more expensive equipment that will also be required by the regulations.

Sources of refined petroleum products sold in Alaska

Petroleum products consumed in Alaska come from refineries in Alaska and, to a smaller extent, out-of-state refineries. Table 5 lists Alaska's six refineries, along with their capacity, measured in barrels of crude oil input per day.

Table 5. Alaska petroleum refineries

	Total input capacity as of Jan. 1, 2007 (barrels/day)
Flint Hills Resources Alaska LLC (North Pole)	210,000
Tesoro Petroleum Corp. (Nikiski/Kenai)	72,000
Petro Star Inc. (Valdez)	48,000
Petro Star Inc. (North Pole)	17,500
ConocoPhillips Alaska Inc. (Kuparuk)	15,000
BP Exploration Alaska Inc. (Prudhoe Bay)	12,500
Total	375,000

Source: U.S. Energy Information Administration

Alaska crude oil production in 2006 was 741,000 barrels per day,[20] about twice the total input capacity of Alaska refineries. Also, Alaska refineries aren't currently producing at full capacity. Estimated total production from the Flint Hills, Tesoro, and Petro Star refineries in early 2008 was roughly 127,000 barrels per day.

The Flint Hills refinery in North Pole was originally built by Mapco in 1977 to coincide with the completion of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline and taps directly into the pipeline.[21] The refinery is the largest in Alaska with a current capacity of 210,000 barrels per day—more than half Alaska's total refinery capacity and more than three times the capacity of Tesoro's refinery in Nikiski. Flint Hills acquired the refinery in 2004. It produces gasoline, jet fuel, heating oil, diesel, gasoil, and asphalt. About 60 percent of its output is sold in the aviation market. It has terminals in Anchorage, to which fuel is transported by rail, and Fairbanks, to which fuel is transported by truck.[22]

A second refinery in North Pole along the oil pipeline was built by Petro Star in 1983. This refinery has a capacity of 17,500 barrels per day and produces commercial and military jet fuel, kerosene, diesel, and heating oil. Petro Star is owned by Arctic Slope Regional Corporation. It distributes its products to communities, military bases, and commercial customers in the Interior and the North Slope.[23]

Petro Star built another, larger refinery in Valdez that began operation in 1993. That refinery has a capacity of 48,000 barrels per day and produces commercial jet fuel, military JP-8 and JP-5 jet fuel, marine diesel, heating oil, and turbine fuel. Its primary market is in fuel for military and commercial aviation.

The Tesoro refinery in Nikiski was built in 1969 and was the second refinery built in Alaska, after Chevron's Nikiski refinery was built in 1963.[24] Chevron closed its refinery in 1991 due to "eroding profit margins and increasing liability risks."[25] These refineries were built to process crude oil discovered in Cook Inlet in 1957. The Tesoro refinery currently has a capacity of 72,000 barrels per day, making it the second largest refinery in Alaska.[26] With the completion of a diesel de-sulfurizer unit in May 2007, Tesoro became the first producer of ultra-low-sulfur diesel in Alaska. The unit has a capacity of 10,000 barrels per day.[27]

The ConocoPhillips refinery in Kuparuk and the BP refinery in Prudhoe Bay are topping plants that supply fuel to meet the North Slope oil producers' own needs and do not sell to the general public. ConocoPhillips recently cancelled a $300 million upgrade to its refinery that would enable the production of ultra-low-sulfur diesel, citing a lack of tax breaks under the new Alaska oil tax rules.[28]

Most of the fuel distributed to rural Alaska communities is produced by Alaska refineries, the exception being communities in Southeast Alaska, which receive a significant share of their fuel from refineries in Washington. Fuel distributed to Alaska customers in general also occasionally comes from refineries in Anacortes, Washington, and even places as distant as Korea and Russia. However, the cost of transporting the fuel over such long distances is usually greater than any savings from purchasing it from out-of-state refineries. For example, since 1983, adjusting for inflation, the average Alaska wholesale price for #2 distillate was only 4.4% higher than the average Washington price. Since 2000, the Alaska average was only 0.5% higher.[29] Table 6 ranks average wholesale prices for #2 distillate by region from 2000 to 2007.

There are two refineries in Anacortes: Shell Oil Products U.S., with a capacity of 145,000 barrels per day of crude oil input, and Tesoro West Coast, with a capacity of 120,000 barrels per day, for a total of 265,000 barrels per day (bpd).[30] South Korea, while it produces no crude oil, has a total refinery capacity of 2,577,000 barrels per day, ranking it fifth in the world. North Korea has a capacity of 71,000 bpd. Russia has a total refinery capacity of 5,339,000 bpd, ranking it second in the world. The U.S. ranks first, with a total capacity of 17,397,000 bpd.[31]

Relationship between crude oil prices and refined product prices

In addition to the Energy Information Administration (EIA), the Oil Price Information Service (OPIS) provides petroleum product price information for various locations around the world. OPIS prices are often used as a benchmark price for fuel suppliers when making price quotes. When a fuel supplier quotes a price to a community, this price is typically based on an OPIS price for the day of the quote, plus an additional amount to cover the service of handling and transporting the fuel, although often only a single quoted amount (the sum) is provided.[32]

The price data from EIA used in the analysis below comes from Form EIA-782A, Refiners'/Gas Plant Operators' Monthly Petroleum Product Sales Report. These data differ from the OPIS price data in several ways. The purpose of the EIA-782 survey, according to EIA, is to collect data "to fulfill legislative mandates from Congress and to provide comprehensive information for evaluating market behavior." OPIS is privately owned and is a paid subscription service, with historical data available for a fee, while EIA current and historical data is freely available to the public.

While EIA has broader coverage (the information is collected from a census of refiners, while OPIS data is collected from a sample), OPIS has much more detail and is a "real-time" service that serves a different purpose. OPIS updates prices daily, while EIA updates its data on a monthly basis. OPIS provides data by city, while EIA provides data by region (Petroleum Administration for Defense District, or PADD) and in some cases by state. OPIS also takes into account many variables that define specific types of fuel, to break fuel out into more subcategories.

There are a number of other differences between OPIS and the EIA-782 methodologies and purposes, but the prices they report track each other closely.[33] EIA price data are used in this analysis because of the free availability of historical prices, accessible and comprehensive documentation, and less complex categorization of fuel types.

Figure 6 and Figure 7 show the relationship of refiner acquisition cost of crude oil[34] and refinery wholesale prices. Numbers are adjusted for inflation to 2007 dollars. The rapid increase in prices in the past few years is clearly visible, as is the close relationship of crude oil prices to the prices of refined petroleum products. The difference between the cost of crude oil and the wholesale price of the product is mostly constant, rather than a percentage.

[34] The EIA's definition of "refiner acquisition cost of crude oil" is "The cost of crude oil, including transportation and other fees paid by the refiner. The refiner acquisition cost does not include the cost of crude oil purchased for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR)." The EIA provides costs for domestic and imported oil, as well as a composite cost. The composite cost is shown here.

From these figures, it appears that the primary source of variance in the prices at which refineries sell their products is the cost of their crude oil feedstock. Linear regression results over the monthly data points for gasoline, #1 distillate and #2 fuel oil, shown in Table 7, seem to confirm this tight relationship. The regression uses refiner acquisition cost, in cents per gallon, as the independent variable.

IV. Fuel Product Transportation

Fuel products in Alaska are transported in various ways, both from refineries to fuel terminals and from terminals to communities. Fuel is usually stored in communities before distribution to residents and businesses. This chapter describes fuel transportation (truck, barge, airplane), as well as storage and distribution methods, including how characteristics of each method influence fuel prices.

Refineries in Nikiski, Valdez, and North Pole make petroleum products that supply most of the Alaska market. (As discussed earlier, some products for Alaska also come from out-of-state refineries). Communities that are road accessible or connected via pipelines or railroad to these in-state refineries have lower costs of transportation than more remote locations. Anchorage is connected by pipeline and road to the refineries in Nikiski; Fairbanks is only a short truck trip from the North Pole refineries. In contrast, other Alaska communities are in remote locations, many without highway access and some even lacking navigable waterways. Transporting fuel to such communities is more complex and risky, and thus, more expensive. The widely differing circumstances of Alaska communities create widely varying fuel prices.

Refinery to terminals

The Tesoro refinery in Nikiski is able to ship refined product directly from its fuel terminal in Nikiski. It also transports refined product in a 72-mile long pipeline to Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport and to its fuel terminal at the Port of Anchorage. From the Anchorage fuel terminal, heating fuel can be trucked to homes or regional fuel hubs. Gasoline is also trucked from the fuel terminal to gas stations.

Fuel from the Flint Hills refinery in North Pole is either trucked to the fuel terminal in Nenana, to be barged to communities on the Yukon River; trucked to Fairbanks and other neighboring communities; or carried on the Alaska Railroad to the fuel terminal at the Port of Anchorage. Most of the refined fuel that comes by rail to Anchorage from North Pole is jet fuel used at Ted Stevens International Airport.

The Valdez Petro Star refinery ships its fuel directly out of the Port of Valdez. Most of the refined fuel produced at the Petro Star refinery in North Pole is directly transported to Eielson Air Force base or nearby communities.

Table 9 summarizes the imports and outputs of refined petroleum products for the region's fuel terminals and fuel hubs. Fuel refined in Tesoro's Nikiski plant is shipped directly from the Nikiski Port, as well as piped to Anchorage where it is shipped from the Port of Anchorage.

Refinery and terminals to communities

Truck

Of the most common methods of transporting fuel in Alaska, trucking is the least expensive and complex. All Alaska communities on the road system have fuel delivered by truck. Gasoline is generally delivered directly to gas stations. Heating fuel is delivered from the refinery to regional fuel hubs for distribution or by distributors directly to homes from refineries.

The transportation cost per gallon of fuel trucked is determined by the distance and the quantity of fuel delivered. Delivery prices vary with the quantity of fuel shipped because most of the delivery costs are fixed, regardless of the amount of fuel carried. So larger communities can order more fuel at a time, reducing delivery charges per gallon.

Having road access also lowers fuel costs, because communities have year-round access to fuel. Even the smallest road communities generally receive at least weekly fuel shipments. This reduces fuel storage and inventory costs.

Barge

Barging fuel to Alaska communities is an expensive, complex, and risky endeavor. Fuel transporters face a different set of delivery challenges and costs for each community. Thee are few fuel transport companies with the experience and capital needed to successfully deliver fuel to remote areas in Alaska. In addition to overcoming the physical challenges of barging fuel to Alaska communities, fuel transporters must correctly price their fuel transportation charges to fully recover the cost of delivery.

4949

Barge Transportation Regions

For this analysis we divided Alaska into five regions: ice-free southern coast, Kuskokwim River, Yukon River, Northwest and Kobuk River, and Arctic. All these regions have some common factors that influence the cost of fuel delivery.

Ice-Free Southern Coast

This region extends from Southeast Alaska, along the Gulf of Alaska and out the Aleutian Island chain. The defining characteristic of this region is that it is ice-free year round and the communities are coastal. These characteristics allow year-round delivery of fuel. Crowley, Delta Western, and Petro Marine Services deliver fuel in this region.

Fuel for this region may be shipped from refineries in Valdez or Nikiski; from the fuel terminal at the Port of Anchorage; or from refineries in Washington or California. It is either shipped directly to communities or to larger hub communities, where it is reloaded onto smaller barges. Sometimes fuel will be lightered directly off the barge into a smaller barge for delivery to a community, thus bypassing the fuel hub.

Kuskokwim River

The Kuskokwim River Region includes all the communities on the Kuskokwim River and its tributaries, as well as coastal communities near the mouth of the river. Bethel serves as the regional hub, and almost all fuel delivered to the region is at least temporarily stored in Bethel. Fuel from Bethel storage tanks must be loaded into smaller barges to navigate the Kuskokwim River upstream of Bethel. Approximately four million gallons of fuel are shipped out of Bethel each year.

Fuel for this region is transported from Anchorage on large barges and must be lightered before being unloaded at the Bethel fuel depot. Once at the Bethel depot, the fuel is loaded onto barges for delivery upstream or to surrounding coastal communities. Both Crowley and Delta Western have tank farms in Bethel and deliver fuel to the surrounding areas.

Seasonal icing and the need to deliver all fuel into storage tanks in Bethel increases transportation costs for the Kuskokwim River and surrounding area—because the fuel has to be loaded and unloaded more times. Many of the communities that receive fuel from Bethel are located in remote locations on the Bering Sea coast or on tributaries of the Kuskokwim River. Barging fuel to these locations takes longer and includes additional risks. Bethel's distance from its primary fuel supply terminals in Cook Inlet also increases the cost of delivered fuel.

Yukon River

Nenana serves as the fuel hub for the Yukon River. Fuel arrives at the Nenana hub from refineries in North Pole, or is carried from Anchorage on the Alaska Railroad or by truck. From Nenana, fuel is barged both upstream as far as Fort Yukon and downstream to the mouth of the Yukon River. Crowley is the dominant fuel transporter in the region. Recently, Ruby Marine started competing on a small scale with Crowley.

Occasionally fuel is shipped from the mouth of the Yukon from the Bethel or Nome fuel hubs. Generally the more direct route from the Nenana fuel terminal is less costly, even for communities near the mouth of the Yukon.

Many communities served by the fuel terminal in Nenana are on smaller tributaries of the Yukon River that are remote and present navigational hazards. The difficulty of accessing many of these communities, the varying conditions of marine headers and moorage, and seasonal icing all affect the price of delivered fuel to the Yukon River region.

Northwest and Kobuk River

This region is defined as the area served by fuel hubs in Kotzebue and Nome and consists of Norton Sound, Kotzebue Sound and the Kobuk River. Nome's port can accommodate large barges and does not require lighterage, while Kotzebue's port is shallow and does require fuel lightering.

Kotzebue is the fuel hub for communities on the Kobuk River. The cost of barging fuel on the Kobuk is high because of difficult navigation and hazards. Most other communities in the Northwest region are coastal and present less navigational difficulty but have shallow ports. The long distance of this region from its primary fuel terminals in Cook Inlet further increases fuel costs.

Arctic

Fuel delivery in the Arctic region is subsidized by the North Slope Borough and is not investigated in this report.

Factors Contributing to Fuel Barging Costs

Distance from the refinery to the fuel hub. The further the hub is from refineries, the greater the cost. Also, proximity to multiple refineries allows for purchases at the cheapest rack price. For example, transporters delivering to Southeastern hubs such as Ketchikan and Juneau can buy fuel from refineries in Cook Inlet, Valdez, British Columbia, and Washington in order take advantage of the lowest prices.

Storage at fuel hub. A community that does not have its fuel delivered directly from the refinery typically gets fuel through a fuel hub community. When fuel is unloaded at the fuel hub and then later re-loaded, the costs increase. The wharfage fees charged by the hub port and additional transportation from the hub to the community also add to costs.

Small and shallow ports require lighterage. Fuel transported from a refinery or fuel hub in an ocean-going vessel to communities without deep draft ports require lighterage. Lighterage causes a significant increase in costs, because the fuel is handled an extra time and because smaller barges cost more to operate on a per gallon basis.

Quantity of fuel purchased. Communities that purchase more fuel receive a bulk discount, because the fixed costs of delivering fuel are spread over more gallons.

Regulations on fuel and transportation. Under the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (OPA 90), all single-hulled fuel barges must be replaced with double hulled barges. The act also made the fuel transporter and storage facility owners liable for any pollution resulting from spills. These regulations are reflected in growing transportation costs. Single-hulled barges are still allowed in Alaska waters west of 155 degrees west latitude (approximately the west side of Kodiak Island).[35]

Shallow drafts are required for river transportation. To transport fuel on Alaska's western rivers, barges cannot draft more than 3.5 feet of water. The barges must be custom built for these rivers, also increasing fuel costs.

Ice can prevent winter deliveries. For communities in northern and northwestern Alaska, fuel cannot be delivered during the winter ice-over months. Barges typically travel to these communities twice a year—in the spring when the ice melts and in the fall before the river freezes. The rivers in northern Alaska are typically frozen from November to April. The barges needed to deliver fuel sit idle through the winter, and the fuel transporters must recover their capital costs during the short shipping season. Icing also creates incentives to invest in more storage and disincentives to upgrade moorage and marine header conditions.

Deficient or missing moorage. Many communities lack proper moorage. To compensate, fuel barges are often forced to execute risky maneuvers to offload fuel. Either the barge is nosed into the bank and propelled forward against the current, or it is held in place in by the fuel hose that is unloading the fuel.

Deficient or missing marine header. A marine header is a series of piping, valves, and pumps that receives fuel from a barge and pumps it into a storage tank. The slower a marine header pumps, the longer the barge takes to unload, increasing costs and risks of spills. If a community is missing a marine header, the fuel must be trucked off the barge.

Tides delay barge movement. Some communities are only barge accessible at high tide. If a barge is forced to sit idle waiting for a tide change, the cost of fuel increases.

Navigational hazards. Many stretches of river are difficult and risky to navigate. Prices increase with the extra risk—because of longer running time per mile, higher insurance costs, and higher crew costs. Stretches difficult to navigate also require extensive local knowledge, making it difficult for new firms to compete.

Air delivery

Flying fuel is the most expensive method for transporting fuel to rural Alaska villages. Communities will generally only fly in fuel if they do not have access to navigable water, or in emergencies when the river is frozen and the barges are unable to deliver. This can happen if a community did not have the cash or credit available to purchase a full winter season of fuel before freeze-up, or when a community sells all its fuel before spring break-up when the barges are able to return.

When fuel is flown in larger planes, the delivery cost is approximately $1.00 per gallon. Smaller planes flying only a few hundred gallons at a time charge closer to $2.00 per gallon. The size of the plane flying fuel largely depends on local runway length and

[35] Crowley Maritime Corp – CWLM Amended Annual Report
http://sec.edgar-online.com/2006/04/14/0000950123-06-004668/Section2.asp community population. One advantage of flying in fuel is that communities do not need to invest in large storage facilities, because fuel deliveries can usually be made year-round.

There are multiple commercial air services that fly fuel in Alaska. Everts Air Fuel is the largest. It operates four DC-6s and two C-46s equipped to carry 2,000 to 5,000 gallons of fuel per trip.[36]

Fuel delivery contracts

We examined publicly available fuel delivery contracts as one source of information about fuel transportation prices. A fuel delivery contract is an agreement between a fuel purchaser and a fuel supplier. Most fuel purchases involve a fuel contract. Fuel contracts are generally updated on a yearly or multi-yearly basis, in a competitive bidding process, with the contract being awarded to the lowest bidder. As a result of the competitive bid process, these contracts should provide a reasonable proxy for the costs of delivering fuel to specific ports with a reasonable return on investment and profits. The bids are generally broken into two components—the delivery cost and refinery price. The refinery cost component is the price paid at the refinery gate on the day the fuel is purchased at the refinery.

Table 10 shows the delivery cost component of 2003 and 2006 State of Alaska fuel contracts—that is, contracts for fuel for state-owned facilities. We combined the two fuel contract years and averaged costs for communities that received contracts in both years. For most communities with contracts in both years the delivery charge was similar.

It is clear the method of delivery is an important factor in determining transportation costs. Anchorage's delivery costs are negative, because the bidding transporter was expecting to be able to buy fuel at a lower cost than the indexed price.

Setting Delivery Prices

Fuel transporters face significant risk when determining their delivery price. If they place their price lower than their costs turn out to be, they will lose money when delivering fuel. If they set their price too high, they might be accused of price gouging, or competitors might undercut them and win the delivery bid. The ability to accurately assess the delivery costs to individual communities can be as important and require as much experience as delivering the fuel.

The structure of the fuel delivery prices is the same for most transporters. It includes a delivery charge, in addition to a refined fuel cost that is tied to a fuel price index—such as the OPIS Anacortes price. The refined fuel cost is set at the level of the fuel index on the day the fuel is purchased from the refineries.

Crowley personnel told us that the bid prices are reviewed in relation to cost experience every spring and fall by a team of employees, including those who deliver fuel. Prices are determined for each community based on the time and risks Crowley faces when delivering fuel. Fixed costs are estimated on a per gallon basis and require an estimate of how much fuel will be delivered to a particular community.

The amount of experience and expertise needed to accurately price fuel delivery costs presents two potential problems. The first is that new firms entering the market may lack the knowledge necessary to accurately reflect costs in the delivery charges they bid. It also makes it difficult to evaluate whether the delivery charge component (the price) is reasonable and reflects actual delivery costs.

Storage and distribution

In communities across Alaska, fuels must be stored in holding facilities for distribution to customers. Fuel storage requires a substantial capital infrastructure investment. The cost of the storage facility is sometimes paid for by communities (either city governments or village corporations) or by private companies that either have significant investment in specific communities as major storage or distribution points (e.g., Crowley or Delta Western) or are significant users of fuel, such as Peter Pan Seafoods in False Pass.

The storage capacity of tanks in various communities depends on many factors. These include the location of a community, and whether ports are ice-free in the winter, allowing fuel to be delivered anytime—as compared with communities that can only get fuel deliveries once or twice a year. Also, communities with harsher weather need to have storage facilities that are able to withstand that weather. All storage facilities must meet state and federal environmental regulations pertaining to leak or spill prevention and mitigation—such as having adequate liners.

For publicly owned facilities, communities can obtain assistance from the bulk fuel storage program administered by the Denali Commission. A report prepared for the Denali Commission in 2002 reported the following unit costs per gallon of storage capacity for bulk fuel projects in Alaska (Table 11).

Table 11. Bulk fuel project costs

Capacity	Benchmark Unit Costs
0 – 50,000 gallons	$18.00 to $14.00 per gallon
50,001 – 100,000 gallons	$14.00 to $12.00 per gallon
100,001 – 200,000 gallons	$12.00 to $9.50 per gallon
200,001 – 300,000 gallons	$9.50 to $8.50 per gallon
300,001 – 400,000 gallons	$8.50 to $7.50 per gallon
400,001 to 500,000 gallons	$7.50 to $6.50 per gallon
Greater than 500,000 gallons	$6.50 to $2.50 per gallon.

Source: Denali Commission. Final Denali Commission Project Cost Containment Assessment Projects in Various Alaska Villages, April 2002.

To determine these values, unit costs were calculated as the total project budget, divided by the total design storage capacity. In essence, a larger capacity project should relate to the lower end of the cost range for each capacity level.

Delivery or the distribution of the product in a community is another important component of total cost. Some communities charge a "delivery fee" if the product is delivered to the home. Some provide discounts if households order fuel to be delivered in bulk. In some communities, customers can pick up their fuel on an as needed basis. In other cases, the fuel is always delivered to the home and the "delivery charge" is included in the final fuel price. In these cases, the distribution charge is unknown.

V. Alaska Oil Taxes and Royalties

All oil and gas production in Alaska, except the federal and state royalty share and a small amount used for production, is subject to the state's production taxes and hazardous release surcharges that are levied only on crude oil. Alaska receives revenue from oil and gas production from the state's royalty share, production tax, corporate income tax, and property tax. This section provides a brief overview of these taxes.

Crude oil taxes

Petroleum Profits Tax

The Petroleum Profits Tax (PPT) is the production tax that was signed into law in 2006 and was reconsidered by the Alaska legislature during fall 2007. The PPT is a net value tax with tax credits designed to encourage investment in Alaska's petroleum sector, increase production, and increase long-term revenues.[37] The PPT replaced the Economic Limit Factor (ELF) severance tax.

Petroleum Property Tax

An annual tax is levied on the full and true value of property taxable under AS 43.56. The tax on oil and gas property is the only statewide property tax. The valuation procedure is for three distinct classes of property—exploration, production, and pipeline transportation. The pipeline transportation property tax is shared with local communities. The state tax rate is 20 mills, minus the local mill rate.

Petroleum Corporate Income Tax

Alaska levies two types of corporate income tax—one on oil and gas corporations and the other on all other corporations. An oil and gas corporation's Alaska income tax depends on the relative size of its Alaska and worldwide activities and the corporation's total worldwide net earnings. The corporation's taxable Alaska income is derived by apportioning its worldwide taxable income to Alaska, based on the average of three factors as they pertain to the corporation's Alaska operations: (1) tariffs and sales, (2) oil and gas production, and (3) oil and gas property.

Historically, oil and gas corporate income tax revenue has varied with oil prices and oil industry profits. In FY 1982, revenue from this tax was $668.9 million. As recently as FY 1994, the oil and gas corporate income tax generated only $17.8 million. For the past three years, revenues from the oil and gas corporate income tax have risen along with oil prices and oil industry profits, generating $661.1 million in FY 2006. This is the highest level for collections since the early 1980s.[38]

Oil royalties

Almost all Alaska oil and gas production occurs on state lands leased for exploration and development. As the land owner, the state earns revenue from leasing as: (1) upfront bonuses, (2) annual rent charges and (3) a retained royalty interest in oil and gas production.[39]

The State of Alaska receives a royalty of approximately 12.5 percent of the oil and gas produced from leases on state lands. The state may take its share of oil production "in-kind" or "in-value." When the state takes its royalty share in-kind (RIK), it assumes possession of the oil or gas. The commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources may sell the RIK oil or gas in a competitive auction or through a noncompetitive sale negotiated with a single buyer. When the state takes its royalty in-value (RIV), the producers market the state's share along with their own share of production. The lessees remit cash payments on a monthly basis for the state's RIV share.[40]

Over the last 30 years the state has taken about one-half its royalty oil as RIK. The state has sold nearly 800 million barrels of RIK oil during this time, most of it in-state. These in-state sales provide long-term supplies of oil to each of the state's four refineries.

Cook Inlet

In 1969 the commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources negotiated a sale of 100 percent of the state's royalty share from Cook Inlet to the Alaska Oil and Refining Company. Within months after that, Alaska Oil and Refining Company merged with the Tesoro Petroleum Company. Tesoro subsequently built a new refinery in Nikiski on the Kenai Peninsula, next to Chevron's refinery, built in 1964. Between 1969 and 1985 the state sold all its Cook Inlet royalty oil to the Tesoro refinery. By 1980, the production decline in Cook Inlet prompted Tesoro to negotiate the first of several sales contracts with the state for supplies of RIK oil from the North Slope. By the end of 1985 Tesoro had replaced its Cook Inlet RIK volumes with supplies of RIK from the North Slope.

In 1987 the state began to export Cook Inlet RIK oil to the Chinese Petroleum Company. These volumes were produced from fields on the west side of Cook Inlet, after the federal government exempted Cook Inlet production from export administration regulations. The state sold 97 percent of the royalty production from the McArthur River, Trading Bay, North Trading Bay, and Granite Point fields in a series of one-year competitive auctions. In 1991 deliveries under the last Chinese Petroleum contract were halted following the December 1989 eruption of the Mount Redoubt volcano. There have been no Cook Inlet RIK sales since that time.

North Slope

Over the past 25 years, the state has held nine RIK sales involving portions of its Alaska North Slope (ANS) royalty oil production. These sales are summarized in Figure 10. For detailed information on royalty oil sales, see the Division of Oil and Gas Annual Report.

What is significant for this study is that the State of Alaska has negotiated various terms into its royalty in-kind contract sales to Alaska refineries, including use of the Alaska Railroad to transport fuels and requirements to upgrade tank farms.

In addition to taxes collected to compensate the state for development of its publicly-owned oil resources, the state government also collects other oil-related taxes to offset the costs of specific programs. These include the Hazardous Release Surcharge assessed on crude oil production and motor fuel taxes assessed on refined products.

Hazardous release surcharge

The Oil and Hazardous Substance Release Prevention and Response Fund was created by the legislature in 1986 to provide a "readily available funding source to investigate, contain, and clean up oil and hazardous releases." An amendment in 1994 divided the fund into two separate accounts comprised of: (1) the Response Account, which is a surcharge on all oil production, except federal and state royalty barrels, that may be used to finance the state's response to an oil or hazardous substance release declared a disaster by the governor; (2) the Prevention Account, which is an additional surcharge on all oil production, except federal and state royalty barrels, that may be used for cleaning up oil and hazardous substance releases not declared a disaster by the governor; it can also be used to fund oil and hazardous substance release prevention programs in Alaska.

When the PPT was passed, the Response surcharge (AS 43.55.201) was changed from $.02 to $.01 and the Prevention surcharge (AS 43.55.300) was increased from $.03 to $.04. Both of these changes took effect April 1, 2006. The Response surcharge is suspended when the balance of the Response account is equal to or exceeds $50 million. As of February 28, 2007, the cumulative balance of the account was $42.4 million. The Response Surcharge was re-imposed effective April 1, 2007, by the Department of Revenue.[41]

Motor fuel taxes

For many years, fuel taxes and other revenues from highway users levied by the federal government and states have been a primary source of funds for federal and state highway programs. Nationally, a relatively small number of counties and municipalities also levy fuel taxes to finance road improvements, but these local governments rely primarily on general funds, property taxes, sales taxes, and other revenues unrelated to highway users to finance local road and street construction, maintenance, and operation.[42]

Federal fuel taxes, for the most part, are deposited in the Highway Trust Fund (HTF), which is used to fund highway construction projects. Alaska receives funds annually, and in excess of what Alaskans contribute to the fund, for road projects (Table 12). The Alaska fuel tax primarily pays for road operation and maintenance costs.

Historically, states and the federal government have viewed fuel taxes as an attractive revenue source for highway construction and maintenance programs for several reasons. First, the revenues from fuel taxes are linked, although imperfectly, with road use. In addition, fuel tax revenues historically have been relatively stable and predictable. Legislators or the electorate, in states other than Alaska, have been willing to increase the fuel tax rates when necessary to meet highway improvement needs. Fuel taxes are attractive revenue sources also because costs of administering the programs to collect fuel taxes are relatively low.

The Alaska motor fuel tax dates back to 1945, when the legislature imposed a tax of 1cent per gallon on all motor fuel. Over time, the legislature enacted separate tax rates for each of the fuel categories as they exist today.

Alaska levies the motor fuel tax on motor fuel sold, transferred, or used within Alaska. The Alaska Department of Revenue's Tax Division collects motor fuel taxes primarily from wholesalers and distributors who hold "qualified dealer" licenses. Current per gallon rates are 8 cents for highway use, 5 cents for marine fuel, 4.7 cents for aviation gasoline, 3.2 cents for jet fuel, and a rate of 8 cents or 2 cents for gasohol, depending on the season, location, and EPA mandate.

In addition to sales between qualified dealers, the following sales and uses are exempt from motor fuel tax:

- Heating
- Federal, state, and local government agencies
- Foreign flights (jet fuel)
- Exports
- Power plants/utilities
- Charitable institutions
- Gasohol (only fuel containing at least 10% alcohol, derived from wood or seafood waste)
- Bunker fuel (residual fuel oil or #6 fuel oil)

Consumers may claim refunds for the full Alaska tax rate if they used the fuel for exempt purposes; or for the difference between the tax rate and 2 cents per gallon, if they used the fuel off-highway. Resellers, usually retailers, may claim refunds for the full tax if they paid the tax and then sold the fuel for exempt use and did not collect the tax.

Most of the excise taxes credited to the HTF are not collected directly from the consumer by the federal government. They are, instead, paid to the Internal Revenue Service by the producer or importer of the taxable product (except for the tax on trucks and trailers, which is paid by the retailer, and the heavy-vehicle use tax, which is paid by the heavy-vehicle owner). As a result, most of the federal fuel taxes come from a handful of states—those where major oil companies are headquartered—and most tire taxes are paid from Ohio, the home of the U.S. tire industry. These taxes become part of the price of the product and are ultimately paid by the highway user.[43]

Table 12. Federal highway user taxes

In some cases, the federal motor-fuel tax has already been paid by the producer/ distributor or retailer on motor fuel that will ultimately be used by an exempt user or for an exempt purpose. In such cases, the end user may purchases fuel at a price that includes the tax and must apply for a refund of the tax. For sales of diesel fuel to state and local governments, and for tax exempt purposes such as heating, the wholesaler or retailer (the ultimate vendor) sells the fuel to the end user at a price excluding the tax and applies for the refund. The federal fuel tax refund is primarily done through the federal income tax process.[44]

Although fuel oil is not subject to state or federal taxes, diesel for motor fuel—a virtually identical product—is taxed. In other states, fuel oil is dyed to distinguish it from the taxable motor fuel. But because Alaska markets are so small, Alaska is not required to dye fuel oil, and the two products can be shipped together. Because the taxable and non-taxable fuels are typically mixed for shipment, it is possible that at times households may in fact pay taxes on fuel oil—because the taxes have been levied at some earlier point. In that case, households can apply for refunds on those taxes. But our research indicates that in most cases households do not pay federal and state taxes on fuel oil. Instead, wholesale or retail sellers (depending on the circumstances of the sale) determine which sales are exempt from federal and state taxes, and apply for refunds of any such taxes they paid on fuel ultimately sold for home heating.

Local Taxes

In addition to state and federal fuel taxes, some Alaska communities charge local sales taxes, and fuel taxes on a percentage or cents per gallon basis. Communities with these types of taxes are shown in Table 13 below. Specific sales tax revenues attributable to fuel sales are not reported or broken out.[45] According to Steve Van Sant, Alaska's state assessor, when a city or borough has a general sales tax, it is typically applied to all sales, including fuel, unless specifically exempted. He is not aware of any communities that have exempted fuel from their general sales tax.

Specific fuel taxes (note for example Bettles, Cold Bay, and Sitka in Table 13) are usually a fuel transfer tax that occurs when the fuel is transferred into or out of a city. The fuel transfer tax is not linked to final sales to households. Any new community fuel taxes would most likely be on bulk sales and are unlikely to be added in communities that already have a general sales tax on the books.[46] The places with specific fuel taxes appear to primarily be those that have large commercial users of fuel such as fishing boats or cruise ships . In addition to local sales taxes and fuel taxes, some communities may charge wharfage fees for port deliveries, including fuel deliveries. These charges most likely are included in the final retail prices charged to consumers and are not a tax per se. Fuel transfer taxes would be included in the final sales price charged to consumers by the retailer who paid the fuel transfer tax.

[44] Generally, diesel fuel and kerosene are taxed in the same manner as gasoline. However, special rules (discussed later) apply to dyed diesel fuel and dyed kerosene, and to undyed diesel fuel and undyed kerosene sold or used in Alaska for certain nontaxable uses and undyed kerosene used for a feedstock purpose.

VI. Subsidies and Assistance Programs

The cost of living is higher in Alaska, according to conventional wisdom. In fact, a report in the October 2007 issue of Alaska Economic Trends found that energy costs in Alaska posted one of the sharpest increases in 2006, at 13.9 percent. From 2002 to 2006, energy prices rose 51 percent.[47] In response to the increased cost of energy (including fuel prices), the State of Alaska created or increased funding for a number of energy financial assistance programs. These programs were developed to help communities and individuals pay for mounting fuel and energy costs. This includes the following energy assistance programs:

- Municipal Energy Assistance Program
- Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan Fund
- Power Cost Equalization (PCE)
- Low Income Energy Assistance Program
- Bulk Fuel Upgrades
- Rural Alaska Fuel Services (RAFS) program
- Citgo Program

These programs are discussed below.

Municipal Energy Assistance Program

Funding for the Small Municipality Energy Assistance Program[48] is a result of a special appropriation request by then-Governor Murkowski to address historically high fuel costs that created significant financial hardship for small municipalities and their residents. During the fiscal years 2006, 2007, and 2008, the program administered funds to numerous communities across Alaska. Funds are distributed to small villages, municipalities of various sizes, boroughs, and village and tribal councils. The grant funds must be used in the following order:

1. To repay any indebtedness of the city or borough to the Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan Fund, administered by the Alaska Energy Authority
2. To repay any indebtedness of the city or borough to a fuel company or fuel vendor
3. For the purchase of fuel by the city or borough.

Over $6.5 million was distributed among communities in fiscal year 2006, $48 million in 2007, and $48.7 million in 2008. Energy Assistance distributions to the ten case study communities are shown in Table 14.

Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan Fund

The Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan Program is administered by the Alaska Energy Authority. The fund was created to "assist communities, utilities or fuel retailers in small rural communities in Alaska in purchasing emergency, semi-annual or annual bulk fuel supplies." Loans are for the purchase of new fuel and are not provided for fuel already purchased, in the process of being used, or already consumed. An organized municipality or unincorporated village with a population under 2,000, or private individuals, corporations, or cooperatives, are eligible to apply as long as the applicant does not have any outstanding AEA bulk fuel loans. The bulk fuel loan may be used for:

- Municipal electrical power generators; municipal heavy equipment
- Heating fuel for the municipality, residents, and businesses
- Municipal, business and residential motor vehicles and for subsistence purposes

The fund does not cover the purchase of aviation fuel or other non-fuel related supplies. The loan is expected to be repaid within one year, and the terms of the loan are generally nine equal monthly installments. No interest is charged on the first bulk fuel loan and 5% interest is charged on the second loan. The third or subsequent loans are charged an interest rate equal to the average weekly yield of municipal bonds for the proceeding year.

Bulk fuel loans funded from 2006 to 2007 covered the purchase of diesel #1, diesel #2, and gasoline in various communities. Mountain Village was the only one of the ten case study communities to receive a bulk fuel revolving loan during fiscal year 2006 or 2007.

Power Cost Equalization (PCE)

The Power Cost Equalization program (PCE) was created to provide economic assistance to customers in rural areas of Alaska where the kilowatt-hour charge for electricity can be three to five times higher than the charge in more urban areas of the state. The program attemptss to equalize the power cost per kilowatt-hour statewide.

The PCE program is administered by the Alaska Energy Authority. Participating utilities must register with the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA). The RCA sets the PCE level for each utility, based on cost of electric generation. An eligible residential customer may receive PCE credit on the first 500 kWh consumed each month. The community also receives credit toward electricity used in community facilities, based on the population of the community.

Low Income Energy Assistance Program

The Low Income Energy Assistance Program was created with funds from the State of Alaska to help low-income households offset the high price of home heating. The grant program is administered by the Division of Public Assistance in the Department of Health and Social Services, and it's known as the Heating Assistance Program (HAP). The funds are available to any residents or households with incomes below the poverty level. The funds may be used to:

- Conduct outreach activities and provide assistance to low income households in meeting their home energy costs—"heating assistance"
- Intervene in energy crises—"crisis assistance"
- Provide low-cost residential weatherization and other cost-effective, energy-related home repair—"weatherization assistance"

The program provides funds on a household basis rather than on a community basis. Households in all ten case study communities received assistance in fiscal year 2007.

Bulk Fuel Upgrades

The Denali Commission and the Alaska Energy Authority (AEA) are working together to reduce the cost of energy by funding bulk fuel upgrades across Alaska. The Denali Commission funds the Bulk Fuel Upgrade while AEA does the planning and construction of the storage facilities. This benefits communities, because they then have more storage capacity and can order more fuel in bulk. And because the facilities are made compliant with environmental standards, they are more reliable and less prone to spills or leaks—which helps reduce the cost of fuel in rural villages.

The bulk fuel program does not provide funds to communities which are part of the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative (AVEC), are within the North Slope Borough, or are connected by roads. Among the ten case study communities, five are currently receiving or have received funds in the past for bulk fuel upgrades. The communities of Yakutat, Chitina, Bethel, Mountain Village, and Fort Yukon did not receive funds for bulk fuel upgrades. Mountain Village is an AVEC community; Chitina is on the road system; and Yakutat, Bethel, and Fort Yukon have bulk fuel facilities provided by large distribution companies such as Crowley or Delta Western. The communities of Allakaket/Alatna,

Lime Village, False Pass, and Angoon have completed bulk fuel upgrades through this program. Unalakleet is currently in the final construction phase of its bulk fuel facility.

Rural Alaska Fuel Services Program

Rural Alaska Fuel Services (RAFS) was created in 2004 as a non-profit corporation, organized to contract for operating and maintaining rural Alaska bulk fuel storage facilities construct by the Denali Commission and the Alaska Energy Authority. All bulk fuel facilities in Alaska must be maintained and operated in accordance with all applicable state and federal regulations. RAFS also offers the following services to rural communities in Alaska:

- Business planning
- Operations and management services
- Testing and inspections
- Operational training for employees
- Facility oversight
- Record-keeping and reporting
- Sustainability

One of the most important roles RAFS plays is advising communities on developing fuel pricing structures. RAFS helps communities determine the correct price, so they can recover their costs and avoid financial crises. RAFS has found that meeting with community residents to explain the components of fuel costs makes them more understanding about why they need to pay higher prices.

In the three years since RAFS was established, it has helped 30 Alaska communities. Of the ten case study communities, none of them have so far worked with RAFS.

Citgo

A Venezuelan owned oil company, Citgo, donated fuel to many rural Alaska villages during the winters of 2006 and 2007. The company paid for 100 gallons of fuel for every household in 151 villages in Alaska. This fuel was worth roughly $5 million—equating to a savings of more than $700 in fuel costs for each recipient household during the 2006 and 2007 winters.

VII. Comparative Case Study Results

Figures 11 and 12 summarize the components of gasoline and heating fuel prices in our ten case study communities. After that we look at the communities individually.

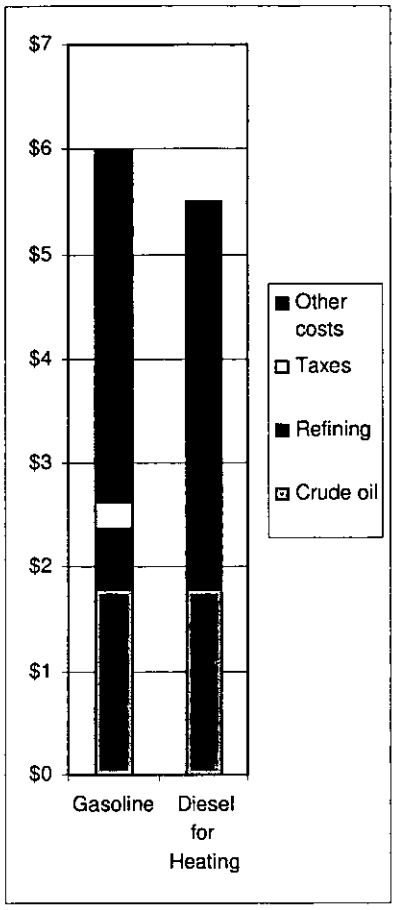
Allakaket/Alatna



Together, the neighbor communities of Allakaket and Alatna (across the Koyukuk River from each other) have a total population of about 125. They are in northern Alaska, above the Arctic Circle. They receive their fuel by airplane, because fuel barges can't navigate the upper Koyukuk River.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $6.00 per gallon and diesel for heating was $5.50 per gallon in Allakaket/Alatna. There is no local sales tax in either community. The "other" costs" for fuel in Allakaket/Alatna amounted to roughly $3.37 per gallon for gasoline and $2.95 for fuel oil in late 2007. Several factors tend to increase or ameliorate the "other" fuel prices in these places:

⇧ Only method of transportation is by air.

⇩ Long runway that could support larger airplanes carrying more fuel. However, because of small population, delivered quantities are small and so delivery charge is higher per gallon.

⇧ Storage capacity is only 16,000 gallons, but this does not seem to be a constraint on deliveries, because quantity delivered in 2007 was only 7,500 gallons.

⇩ There are at least two suppliers to the community, and barriers to entry in air transportation are low compared with those in barging—so there is potential for competition.

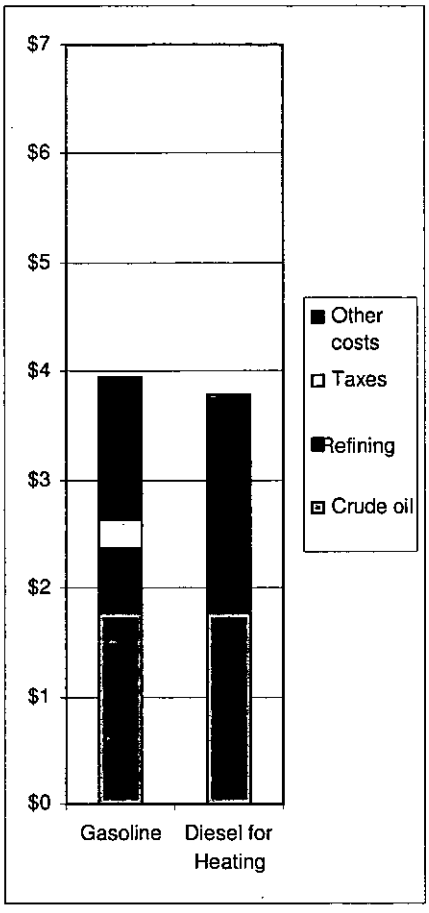
Angoon



Angoon is located on Admiralty Island in Southeast Alaska; south of the capital city of Juneau. Angoon has a current population of 497; the population has decreased over the past few years. All fuel is barged to Angoon by Petro Marine.

In November 2007, gasoline retailed for $3.96 per gallon and fuel oil for $3.79 per gallon. There is no local sales tax in the community. The "other" components of fuel prices in Angoon were roughly $1.33 for gasoline and $1.24 for fuel oil. Factors tending to increase or ameliorate these "other" costs include:

⇧ Only fuel delivery method is by barge.

⇩ Ice-free port in Southeast Alaska, roughly 900 miles from both Anacortes and Anchorage.

⇧ Fuel has to be lightered to community, typically from Ketchikan.

⇩ Fuel can be delivered any time; typically there are eight deliveries per year.

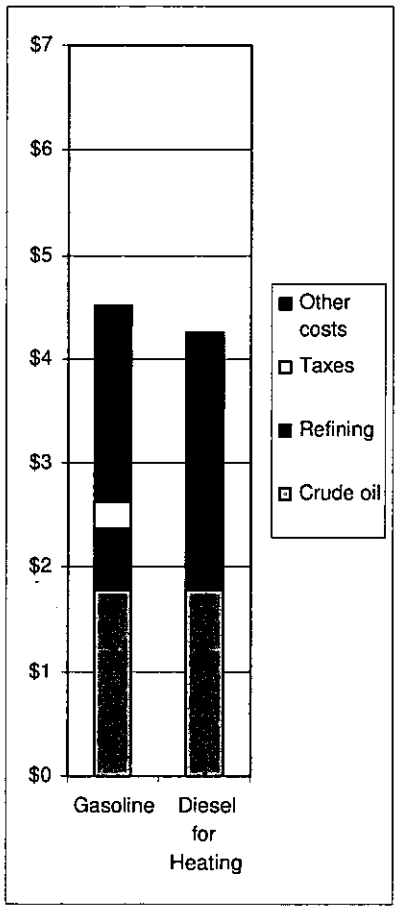
Bethel



Bethel is located at the mouth of the Kuskokwim River and has a population of 5,812. All fuel for Bethel is barged on the Kuskokwim River. It is a regional fuel distribution hub and has a storage capacity of 14 million gallons.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $4.52 per gallon and diesel for heating for $4.25 per gallon. There is no local tax on fuel in the community. The "other" costs for fuel in Bethel in late 2007 were roughly $1.89 for gasoline and $1.70 for fuel for heating. Factors affecting those extra costs include:

⇧ Only method of transportation is barge.

⇩ Large fuel hub community.

⇧ Port and river both freeze up in winter.

⇧ Fuel has to be lightered into community.

⇩ Can receive multiple shipments (10+) per year when river is not frozen.

⇧ Large storage facility owned by Crowley Marine. We don't know how much fuel stored in the community is distributed to other regional communities and how much goes to Bethel residents.

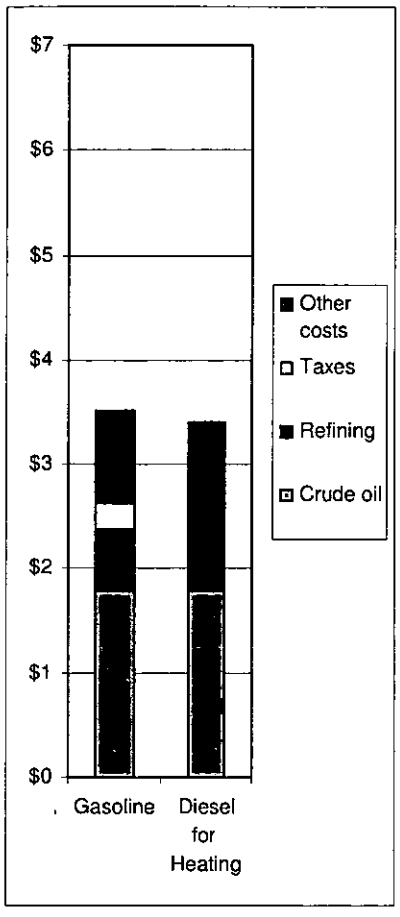
Chitina



Chitina is on the road system in southcentral Alaska. Chitina and has a population of 110. All fuel in Chitina is transported by road from Anchorage.

Gasoline retailed for $3.52 per gallon and diesel for heating is $3.41 per gallon in November 2007. There is no local tax on fuel in the community. The "other" costs contributing to fuel prices in Chitina in late 2007 were roughly $0.89 for gasoline and $0.86 for fuel for heating. Various factors tend to increase or decrease those other costs:

⇩ On the road system only 247 miles from Anchorage.

⇩ Can receive fuel any time; not weather dependent.

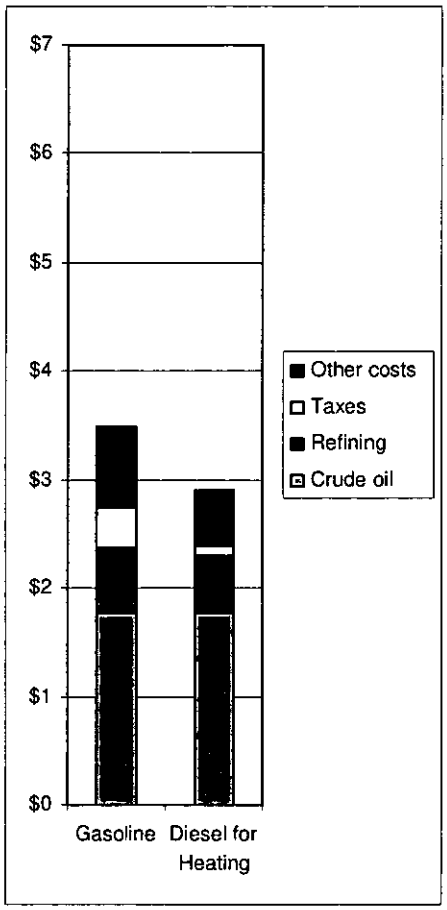
⇩ Fuel usually comes by truck.

⇩ Storage facility is publically owned;

⇩ There are many companies that could potentially deliver fuel, with relatively low cost of capital, skill and experience.

4973

False Pass



False Pass is on Unimak Island in the Aleutian Chain. It has a year-round population of about 54, the population increases when fishermen and fish processors arrive for the fishing season. All fuel for False Pass is barged in.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $3.49 per gallon and fuel oil for $2.90 per gallon. The community has a 3% sales tax that applies to fuel sales. The "other" fuel costs in late 2007 were roughly $0.75 for gasoline and $0.26 for fuel oil. Several factors tend to increase or hold down those other costs:

⇧ Can only receive fuel by barge.

⇩ Relatively close to large ports (Dutch Harbor and Anchorage).

⇧ Ice-free port.

⇧ Fuel has to be lightered to community.

⇩ Small marine distance from larger facilities.

⇩ Only receives one delivery per year but has a large storage capacity to serve many commercial fisherman and fish processors in the area.

⇩ Storage Facility is owned by Peter Pan Seafood, a private company. Large throughput due to fishing fleet and location near multiple fishing grounds.

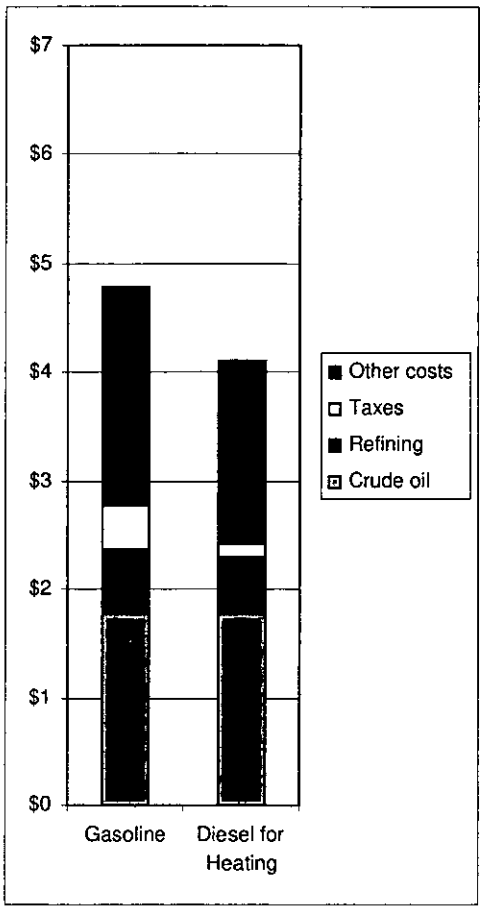
Fort Yukon



Fort Yukon is on the upper Yukon River northeast of Fairbanks and has a population of about 570. All fuel for Fort Yukon is barged upriver from Nenana by Crowley Marine.

Gasoline retailed for $4.79 per gallon and fuel oil for $4.12 per gallon in November 2007. Ft. Yukon has a 3% local sales tax that applies to fuel sales. Other costs adding to fuel prices, in addition to costs of crude oil and refining, were roughly $2.01 for gasoline and $1.44 for fuel oil in late 2007. Those other costs can largely be attributed to several factors:

- Fuel barged 400 river miles upriver from Nenana.
- River and port freeze up during winter.
- Fuel has to be lightered to community.

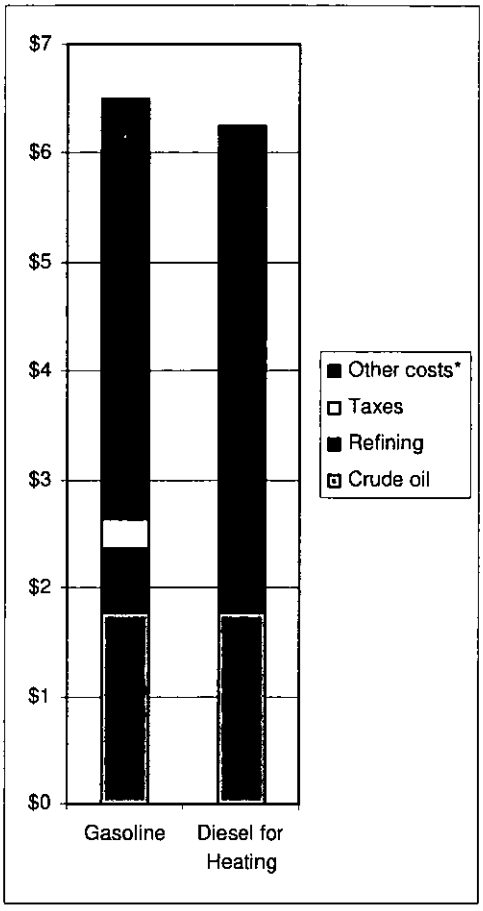
Lime Village



Lime Village is on the Stony River in the Kuskokwim Delta of western Alaska. It has a total population of just about 25; the population has declined over the past few years due to lack of jobs and the school closing. All fuel for Lime Village is shipped by air.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $6.50 per gallon and fuel oil for $6.25 per gallon. There is no local tax on fuel in the community. The "other" costs adding to the price of fuel in Lime Village in late 2007 were roughly $3.87 per gallon for gasoline and $3.70 for fuel oil. Several things make those other costs high:

⇧ All fuel has to come by air, because barges can't navigate the Stony River to Lime Village

⇧ Very short runway for airplanes; can only handle small shipments per trip.

⇧ Fuel is barged from Bethel to Sleetmute and then transferred to planes for delivery to Lime Village.

⇧ Can receive fuel shipments any time of the year but is very expensive.

⇧ Storage facility is publicly owned, but is very small (only 1,800 gallon capacity for the community).

⇧ Small population means delivery charges are spread over fewer gallons.

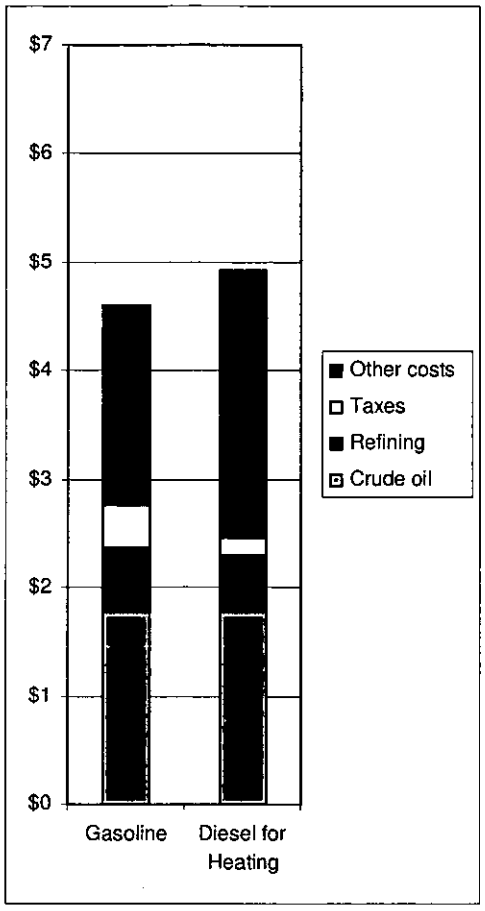
Mountain Village



Mountain Village is on the Yukon River in Northwest Alaska, close to Norton Sound and the Bering Sea. About 786 people live there. Most fuel for Mountain Village is barged down the Yukon River from Nenana, but occasionally deliveries are lightered from ocean-going vessels at the mouth of the Yukon and shipped upstream.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $4.60 per gallon and fule oil for $4.92 per gallon. The community has a 3% sales tax. The "other" costs of fuel in Mountain Village in late 2007 were roughly $1.83 for gasoline and $2.22 for fuel oil. Several things tend to increase or hold down those other costs:

⇧ Barging on the lower Yukon River is the only method of transportation.

⇧ Can only deliver during times of the year when river is not frozen.

Fuel has to be transported in a shallow draft barge; Nenana is main hub port, roughly 1,200 miles upriver.

⇩ Publicly owned storage facility, with a capacity of 200,000 gallons.

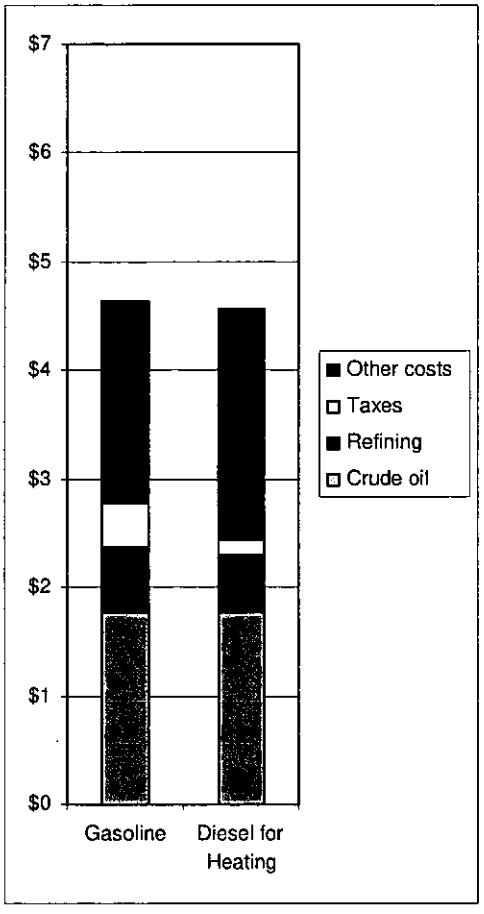
Unalakleet



Unalakleet is in northwestern Alaska, on Norton Sound. Unalakleet has about 710 residents. All fuel is first barged to Nome in a line-haul vessel and then transported to Unalakleet in a shallow draft lighterage vessel.

Gasoline retailed for $4.65 per gallon and fuel oil for $4.58 per gallon in November 2007. There is a 3% local sales tax that applies to fuel. The "other" costs, beyond crude oil and refining costs, for fuel in Unalakleet in late 2007 were roughly $1.88 for gasoline and $1.89 for diesel fuel. Several things tend to add to or hold down those other costs:

⇧ Barge is the only method of fuel delivery.

⇧ Norton Sound freezes in winter; deliveries only during certain months.

⇧ Fuel is transported from Nome in a lighterage vessel and pumped directly to a storage facility.

⇩ Community receives three or more shipments per year during ice-free months.

⇩ Publicly owned storage facility with a capacity of 420,000 gallons.

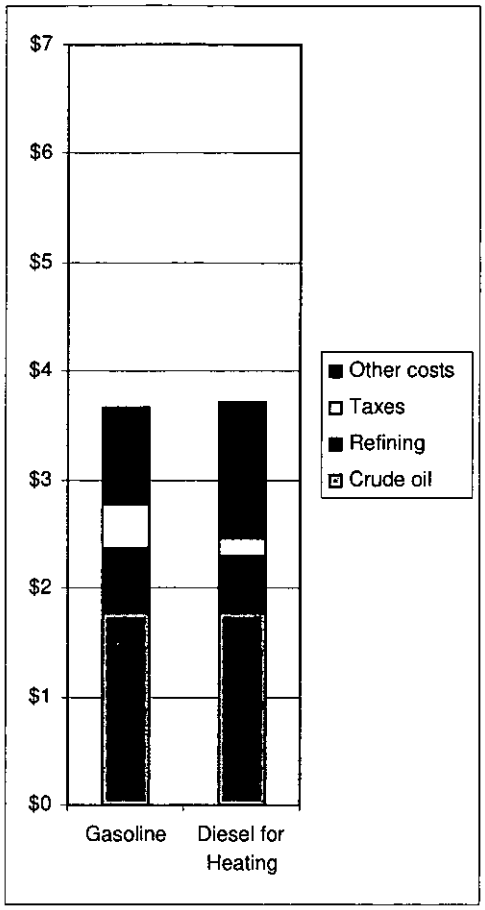
Yakutat



Yakutat is in Southeast Alaska, on the Gulf of Alaska north of the capital city of Juneau. Yakutat has about 619 residents. All fuel is barged to Yakutat by Delta Western, which also owns a 6.5 million gallon storage facility in the community.

In November 2007 gasoline retailed for $3.67 per gallon and fuel oil for $3.72 per gallon. There is a 4% local sales tax on fuel. The "other" costs in Yakutat are roughly $0.89 for gasoline and $1.02 for fuel oil. Fuel is less expensive in Yakutat than in many other places in Alaska because:

⇩ Fuel transportation method is by barge, but no river barging is required and Yakutat can receive shipments from Anchorage and Seattle.

⇩ Ice-free port and fuel deliveries can be made year round.

⇩ Deeper harbor accessible by larger shipments.

⇧ Work on the dock limited shipments to only four in 2007. As a result, fuel in late 2007 was priced higher than it would have been otherwise.

⇩ Large storage facility maintained by one transportation company. Large volume of fuel throughput due to Alaska Airlines' twice daily service to the community.

VIII. Summary and Policy Implications

Table 15 provides a summary matrix of the factors affecting fuel prices in the ten case study communities. The table makes it clear that many factors contribute to widely varying fuel prices.

Businesses consider a number of the costs that contribute to the final retail price of fuel proprietary, making it difficult to accurately quantify the components of fuel costs. In addition, there is limited competition is some markets; more competition tends to push prices down. And the number of businesses getting into the market may be limited due to the costs involved and skills required, or because the market size can only support a limited number of suppliers. Despite these limits, our analysis tells us a number of useful things about fuel prices.

- World and Alaska crude oil prices are set in the global market and reflect both crude oil supply and demand and international global events that influence the real and perceived stability of oil supplies.
- Alaska can do little (or nothing) to influence world crude oil prices. Therefore, these are a relative fixed component of overall fuel costs. In late 2007, costs of crude oil made up approximately $1.78 per gallon of final fuel prices.
- A significant portion of fuels used in Alaska are refined by in-state refineries. The balance is refined mostly in Washington.
- While the costs of fuel from Alaska refineries might be somewhat higher than from West Coast refineries, the additional transportation costs from West Coast refineries to Alaska appear to balance out the costs of in-state feedstock. As a result, the combined crude oil and refinery components tend to total the same amount, regardless of fuel refinery source.
- Refinery wholesale prices tend to closely track crude oil prices. The difference tends to be constant rather than a percentage, which suggests it is based on actual costs.
- The average refinery component for gasoline in September 2007 was about $0.59 and for #2 diesel was $0.53.
- State and federal taxes are a relatively constant component of fuel prices. Some communities charge local sales taxes, which increase final consumer prices.
- The mechanisms for charging federal fuel taxes are complex and obtaining refunds for federal taxes on exempt fuels is cumbersome for consumers.
- The "other costs" component of Alaska fuel prices is the most variable and reflects the wide variations among Alaska communities in distance from refineries, delivery methods, and many other factors.
- Communities closer to refineries and with road, pipeline, or railroad access enjoy the lowest fuel prices. Variations in prices in those locations tend to reflect market competition.
- Communities that rely on air delivery of fuel face the highest prices, with fuel delivery charges of $1.00 to $2.00 per gallon of fuel, depending on the community's population and runway length—which determines the gallons flown in per delivery.
- In general, distance and population are major factors in final fuel prices, because a number of the costs of delivering fuel are relatively fixed. Larger deliveries mean that fixed costs can be spread across more gallons.

- Communities that effectively enlarge their populations or increase their market size through fishing fleets or airline traffic offset the higher prices caused by small market sizes. Case study communities that strongly illustrate that point are False Pass and Yakutat.

- Barge fuel delivery tends to cause the most variability in fuel prices and reflects in part the complexities of delivery, with seasonal ice being a major component.
- Seasonal ice that limits deliveries also increases the need for storage capacity and the costs of maintaining inventories.
- In addition to seasonal ice that limits the number and timing of deliveries, the depth and characteristics of ports dictate the type of barge that can deliver to communities. The need for custom-built barges for deliveries to communities on shallow stretches of river that freeze up in the winter also increases delivery costs. The short season during which transporters need to recover the capital costs of these barges also increases fuel costs.
- It is unclear whether the lack of competition in fuel delivery shows that markets are too limited to support addition suppliers or that the cost of entry—in capital and skills—is too high. The information we would need to distinguish costs from profits is proprietary.
- The wide variation in final prices to communities suggests that prices at least in part reflect the differing costs of delivering and storing fuel.

Policy implications

Policy can't influence many of the components that go into final fuel prices. Butthere are a number of actions that may be able to influence prices. These include:

- The State of Alaska could provide crude oil feedstock to Alaska refineries through royalty oil sales at reduced prices, to lower the crude oil component of fuel prices. But without continued control of "downstream" cost components, it is not clear whether the lower crude oil feedstock prices would be passed on to final consumers or be taken in higher profits by all the "handlers" between the refinery and the end user. It is also unclear whether direct assistance to the communities and households with the highest fuel costs would be a more efficient and fairer practice, since state revenues to fund such programs also increase with the price of crude oil.
- Fuel prices tend to reflect market size, so cooperative buying to increase deliveries should reduce prices. It is unclear the extent to which communities coordinate deliveries, or whether entities within communities—such as electric utilities, schools, and others—coordinate their fuel purchases.
- The availability of cash to purchase fuels tends to be a limiting factor. The ability of a non-profit broker to coordinate and fund collective fuel purchases could further reduce prices.
- The equipment and infrastructure for fuel delivery—such as docks, moorages, and marine headers—influence the costs of delivery. Ownership of these facilities links a responsible party to fuel spills. Facilities tend to be lacking in some communities, in order to limit liability—but that results in higher delivery costs and inceased risks of spills. Addressing this issue could lower both prices and environmental risks.

Appendix. Community Case Study Summaries

Allakaket/Alatna

Alatna and Allakaket are located directly across from each other on the Koyukuk River. The two have a combined population of about 125. A state-owned 3,500 foot runway is accessible year-round in Allakaket. There is no barge service due to shallow water. The Koyukuk River is ice-free from June through October.

Fuel is delivered only by air to Allakaket. Both communities have fuel storage capabilities. Fuel is pumped directly from the plane into the communities' fuel tanks. Fuel is flown to the communities as needed year-round. Brooks Air is capable of flying 3,000 gallons of heating fuel, or 3,300 gallons of gasoline, at a rate of $2,400 per hour. Both Brooks Fuel and Everts Air compete to deliver fuel to these communities.

Brooks Fuel purchases its fuel from Alaska Aero Fuel in Fairbanks. As of November 2007, the company paid $3.01 per gallon for #1 heating fuel. On November 13, 2007 Brooks Fuel delivered 3,000 gallons of heating fuel at a landed price of $4.51 per gallon. The retail price for this fuel was $5.50, with a reported $40 per barrel, or $0.95 per gallon, charge for fuel delivery. Everts Air delivered 4,462 gallons of gasoline on November 6 at a landed price of $4.52 per gallon. This gasoline retailed at $6.00 per gallon. The price at which Everts Air purchased its gasoline is not known, but Brooks Fuel reports purchasing its gasoline from Alaska Aero fuel at $2.99 per gallon.

Angoon

Petro Marine Fuel Services delivers fuel to Angoon by barge. Angoon receives deliveries about every one and a half months. Angoon is in Southeast Alaska, and its port is ice-free year round. This allows year-round fuel delivery—which can be in smaller quantities, so Angoon requires fuel storage capacity.

Fuel is delivered to Angoon from two sources. Some fuel is loaded on a barge in Vancouver, British Columbia or Anacortes, Washington and transported to Petro Marine's storage tanks in Ketchikan. It is stored there until it is unloaded into smaller barges that take the fuel to Angoon. Petro Marine also purchases and transports fuel out of the Nikiski Tesoro refinery on the Kenai Peninsula. This fuel is generally carried directly to the Ketchikan fuel tanks. Occasionally it is unloaded from the barge out of Nikiski into smaller barges and delivered directly to Angoon. The path of fuel depends on refinery rack prices and the location of barges with the cheapest and easiest supply route being used.

In November 2007, heating fuel retailed for $3.40 per gallon in Ketchikan and $3.79 per gallon in Angoon. The $0.39 difference in price consisted primarily of the cost of transporting fuel from the tank farms in Ketchikan in small barges to Angoon. Lesser but significant costs are attributable to an increased proportion of overhead costs associated with selling smaller amounts of fuel.

Angoon Oil and Gas is the primary distributor of fuel in Angoon. It has capacity to store approximately 15,000 to 20,000 gallons of #1 heating fuel and 12,000 to 14,000 gallons of unleaded gasoline. The fuel tanks are owned by Angoon Oil and Gas. The Denali Commission had planned to finance a bulk fuel upgrade in Angoon, but during the initial phases of the project Angoon Oil and Gas decided to independently upgrade.

Gasoline is available for purchase directly at the Angoon Oil and Gas facility, and #1 heating fuel can be delivered by fuel trucks directly to the end users' tanks. Fuel delivery costs $0.10 per gallon. Angoon does not use a significant amount of diesel #2 for heating, because the Tlingit and Haida Central Council upgraded most households to high-efficiency furnaces that burn only #1 fuel oil.

Angoon faces higher delivered fuel prices than neighboring communities because of its small size, which prevents it from purchasing large amounts of fuel at a time. The lack of a "bulk discount" is increasing because Angoon's population has declined in recent years.

Angoon was selected to participate in the Citgo heating fuel program. Each household was given 100 gallons of heating fuel by the state-owned Venezuelan oil company. The fuel was purchased by the household and rebates were distributed by the Tlingit and Haida Central Council.

Bethel

Bethel is at the mouth of the Kuskokwim River, 40 miles inland from the Bering Sea. It has a population of 5,812 and is the regional fuel hub for communities along the Kuskokwim River and coastal communities near the outlet of the Kuskokwim River.

Crowley is the primary fuel supplier in Bethel. Crowley's Bethel tank farm holds a combined 14,830,000 gallons of petroleum products. Bethel serves as Crowley's fuel terminal for the Kuskokwim River region. In 2005 Crowley purchased Yukon Fuel, its major competitor in Bethel. This purchase doubled Crowley's presence in the region and allowed it to take advantage of increased economies of scale, but also raising concerns about potential monopoly market power.[49]

Fuel for the entire region usually goes into Bethel's tanks before being delivered to individual communities. It must be lightered off larger ocean-going barges in order to travel up the Kuskokwim River. Fuel is pumped directly from lighter barges into Bethel's two tank farms. The Port of Bethel levies a $0.04 wharfage fee per gallon on all fuel that enters its port. This wharfage fee increases the cost of fuel in Bethel and surrounding communities.

In November 2007 Crowley sold gasoline from its tanks at $4.52 per gallon and #1 heating fuel at $4.25. There are also multiple fuel truck companies in Bethel that transport fuel from Crowley's tanks for $0.25 to $0.35 per gallon. Crowley both transports the fuel and sells it in the community. It is not possible to break out the transportation and distribution component of fuel to Bethel, because the fuel does not change hands after transportation.

Chitina

Chitina is at the confluence of the Copper and Chitina rivers. Most important for fuel transportation costs, Chitina is located on the Edgerton Highway. Its 2006 population was 106. Chitina is the only one of our ten case study communities that is on the road system. Transporting fuel to Chitina on the highway via fuel truck is inexpensive, when compared with fuel transportation costs to the more remote case study communities.

Chitina 1 Stop is the primary seller of gasoline in Chitina. In the past it purchased fuel from Service Oil and Gas in Glennallen. Service Oil and Gas has since been purchased by Crowley. Most services have remained the same since the purchase. Chitina 1 Stop receives one delivery of gasoline per week and purchases as much as 2,500 gallons a week during the peak of the summer season. As of November 2007, Chitina 1 Stop was selling unleaded gasoline for $3.52 per gallon and reports a $0.05 mark up per gallon of gasoline that remains the same regardless of time of year.

Heating fuel is delivered to Chitina by Crowley and Fisher Fuel. Heating fuel #1 is delivered directly to homes in Chitina from fuel trucks. There is no heating fuel company in Chitina. Fisher Fuel operates out of Big Lake and Crowley out of Glennallen. Both companies deliver fuel to communities throughout the region. As of November 2007 Fisher fuel reported selling #1 heating fuel for $3.41 a gallon. This price includes a $0.25 to $0.30 a gallon delivery charge from the fuel's source in Anchorage. Communication with Crowley indicates it charges similar amounts.

Both companies primarily purchase fuel in Anchorage and truck it throughout the region. Chitina tends to face higher delivered fuel costs than other road-connected communities in the region, because its small size means fuel deliveries are also small, raising the fixed overhead costs per unit of fuel.

False Pass

False Pass is in the Aleutians, on the eastern shore of Unimak Island on the straight connecting the Pacific Ocean to the Bering Sea. It has a population of 54. It gets its name from the shallow waters on the Bering Sea side of the straight that prohibit large ships from passing.

This shallow water means large fuel barges can't deliver directly to False Pass. Instead fuel must be lightered onto smaller barges for delivery. Peter Pan Seafoods has a fish processing plant in False Pass that purchases and distributes fuel directly to local residents. Peter Pan generally sells 20,000 gallons of gasoline, 30,000 gallons of #1 heating fuel, and 200,000 gallons of #2 diesel annually. The #2 diesel is sold primarily to the commercial fishing fleet.

Fuel is pumped directly from the fuel barge into Peter Pan's fuel tanks via marine header. Fuel is delivered once a year, in September. Community residents purchase their fuel directly from the pump at the fuel tanks. There is no fuel delivery service within the community. Our contact with Peter Pan Seafoods was not able to reveal the retail markup on the delivered fuel price, other than to say it was determined by the home office in Seattle. In November 2007 gasoline was selling for $3.49 in False Pass and #1 heating fuel for $2.90.

Fuel is delivered by Crowley barges once a year to Peter Pan. Crowley also delivers about 30,000 gallons of #2 diesel to the City of False Pass for use in its electric generation plant. The Denali Commission built 60,000 gallons of bulk fuel storage for the electric generation plant. A stipulation of the Denali Commission's project is that the bulk fuel farm cannot be a retailer of fuel as long as private competition exists in the market. This prevents the city from entering the market as a seller of heating fuel or gasoline.

Fort Yukon

Fort Yukon is at the confluence of the Yukon and Porcupine rivers, about 145 air miles northeast of Fairbanks. It has a population of 596, and is accessible by barge during the summer months. There is a barge off-loading area, but no dock. Fort Yukon serves as a fuel terminal for Crowley.

Crowley delivers fuel during the summer months. It is barged from Crowley's fuel terminal in Nenana. Crowley owns 660,000 gallons of fuel storage capacity in Fort Yukon that is used to supply the community of Fort Yukon as well as other upper Yukon communities.

Number 1 heating fuel is delivered via truck to households. During November 2007, heating fuel sold for $4.12 per gallon, including the cost of delivery. Diesel #2 sold to the Gwitchyaa Zhee Utility for $3.65 per gallon. Gasoline is only sold by the barrel; the price was $4.79 per gallon in late 2007. The Gwitchyaa Zhee Utility also sells gasoline, with the November 2007 price at $5.10 per gallon. A local tax of 3% is also added to the price of fuel.

Breaking the cost of fuel into components is difficult for Fort Yukon, because Crowley is the transporter and seller of fuel and does not sell the fuel to itself at a "landed price". This lack of a landed price leaves us with only the retail price.

Lime Village

Lime Village is on the Stony River, 50 miles from its junction with the Kuskokwim River. Lime Village's estimated 2006 population was 25, but local residents indicate the number spending the winter in Lime Village was about 6. The population decline is attributed to the closing of the local school and the increasing cost of living—due primarily to rising energy costs.

Lime Village faces the highest fuel costs of the ten case study communities. As a result, wood has become the primary energy source for home heating. Lime Village has the highest fuel prices because it is not accessible by barge, its airstrip is too short to allow large planes to land, and its small population means it makes small fuel purchases.

Fuel is flown into Lime Village in two ways. In the past, almost all fuel was flown in by Henry Hill, a private fuel transporter in Sleetmute. That community gets fuel by barge from Bethel. Henry Hill would then fly fuel from Sleetmute into Lime Village, in a Cessna 206 with the capacity to carry four barrels of fuel (200 gallons) at a time. Henry Hill charges $425 an hour for flying fuel—so there is a $425 charge to transport 200 gallons of fuel, at a cost of $2.125 per gallon.

Last year Henry Hill was unable to deliver fuel to Lime Village because he was out of compliance with environmental fuel transport regulations. Lime Village's alternative was to contract Everts Air to fly fuel in from the Tesoro refinery in Kenai to the nearby Osprey Lodge. The Osprey Lodge airstrip is able to accommodate larger fuel planes. After the fuel was unloaded at the hunting lodge, the lodge owner, Gary Pogany, flew the fuel 200 gallons at a time the 15 miles into Lime Village. Pogany charged $1.00 a gallon and delivered his fuel for $5.90 per gallon during fall 2007.

Lime Village recently received a bulk fuel storage upgrade from the Denali Commission. It received two new fuel tanks and had old fuel tanks refurbished. These tanks had been used by the school, but were moved to the powerhouse after the school closed. Fuel is unloaded at the airfield and pumped into a holding tank. From there it is pumped to the powerhouse.

In November 2007, Lime Village reported gasoline priced at $6.50 per gallon and #1 heating fuel at $6.25 per gallon.

Mountain Village

Mountain Village is on the Yukon River and has a population of 796. In the summer it is connected to St. Mary's, Andreafsky, and Pitka's Point by a road.

Crowley transports fuel in a shallow draft barge down the Yukon River into Mountain Village, from Crowley's tank farm in Nenana. Rarely will fuel be transported up the Yukon River to Mountain Village, despite the fact that Mountain Village is located much nearer the mouth of the Yukon than it is to Nenana. Nenana serves as Crowley's Yukon River hub, because it is close to North Pole refineries.

Mountain Village generally receives a spring and fall fuel shipment. Azachorak Village Corporation owns the fuel tanks and sells fuel to the community. The corporation reports purchasing 80,000 to 100,000 gallons of both #1 heating fuel and gasoline. Mountain Village's electric utility is operated by AVEC and purchases over 180,000 gallons of #1 diesel to power its generators. The #1 diesel used for electric generation is the same product as #1 heating fuel, but is referred to as #1 diesel by electric utilities.

The community has a 90,000 gallon capacity for #1 heating fuel and 100,000 gallon capacity for gasoline. Azachorak holds a moose-hunt fuel sale every August. This sale serves two purposes. It gives discounts for up to 110 gallons of heating fuel and 165 gallons of gasoline to subsidize fall moose hunts, and it frees up storage capacity before the final barge of the season delivers fuel. For the 2007 moose hunt sale, #1 heating fuel prices were dropped by $0.50 per gallon and gasoline prices were dropped by $0.60 per gallon.

Residents of Mountain Village can pay $0.25 per gallon to have fuel trucked to their homes. If they purchase over 100 gallons they receive a $0.05 discount on the delivery price. In November 2007 Mountain Village reported a #1 heating fuel price of $4.92 and a gasoline price of $4.60. This includes a 30% mark-up on the delivered price.

Unalakleet

Unalakleet is a community of 727 on Norton Sound in Western Alaska. Its waters are generally ice free from May to October.

Unalakleet's fuel is usually delivered from Nome. Nome's deep-water port allows line haul barges to unload directly into the tank farms without lightering. The City of Nome charges $0.04 per gallon for fuel that passes through the Port of Nome. The fuel is pumped from Nome tank farms into lightering barges for delivery to Unalakleet. The fuel on the barge is pumped directly from the marine header into Unalakleet Native Corporation's tank farm.

Unalakleet Native Corporation is the primary fuel seller for the community. Two fuel deliveries were made to Unalakleet in 2007, totaling 155,696 gallons of #1 heating fuel and 104,509 gallons of gasoline. The landed price of #1 heating fuel was $2.83 per gallon and $3.08 for gasoline in November 2007, while the retail price for #1 heating fuel was $4.58 per gallon and $4.65 per gallon for gasoline. Fuel is not available for purchase at the tank farm. Instead it is trucked to households. The delivery charge is included in the retail price.

Fuel was delivered in 2007 by Delta Western and was financed through the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation (NSEDC) as part of a project to supply fuel for communities in the area. NSEDC acts as an agent on behalf of the participants, to coordinate the order, issue a Request for Proposal (RFP) to fuel suppliers, evaluate the proposals, award a contract, and act as a single point of contact for the supplier and communities. No interest or fees are charged to the participants for administration of the program.

Yakutat

Yakutat is a community of 634 people on the Gulf of Alaska, 225 miles northwest of Juneau and 220 miles southeast of Cordova. It is at the mouth of Yakutat Bay, one of the few refuges for vessels along this stretch of coast. Yakutat is ice-free year round. It gets fuel from Delta Western. Fuel comes either from Tesoro's Nikiski refinery, through the hub community of Anchorage, or from refineries in Anacortes, Washington. Delta Western has 6,480,000 gallons of fuel storage capacity in the community; much of that is used for fueling Yakutat's twice daily jet service. Delta Western delivers fuel four times per year and owns a fuel delivery dock that is currently being rebuilt.

As of November 2007, the price before tax for a gallon of unleaded gasoline was $3.678, #1 heating fuel was $3.729, and #2 diesel was $3.599. If 50 gallons or more are purchased there is a $0.10 per gallon discount. Heating fuel is delivered to homes in trucks and is not available directly from the fuel tank. The delivery charge is included in the price of fuel.

DIVISION OF COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL AFFAIRS REPORT TO THE DIRECTOR

CURRENT COMMUNITY CONDITIONS: FUEL PRICES ACROSS ALASKA

NOVEMBER 2007 UPDATE

INTRODUCTION

Retail fuel prices have remained high over the past year across Alaska. Increased energy prices have benefitted the State of Alaska through increased treasury revenues while simultaneously burdening households, small businesses, and communities – especially in remote locations. With harsh winter conditions and associated extreme low temperatures, rural Alaska communities and households reliant on fuel to heat their homes and buildings and to generate electricity are confronted with the challenge of paying high retail fuel prices to meet basic survival needs. The remote nature and limited size of the majority of Alaska's rural communities further compounds the issue due to increased transportation costs, limited storage capacity, and financial management considerations.

As a semi-annual update to the comprehensive fuel survey initiated during 2005 (Community Conditions: Fuel Prices Across Alaska), the Division of Community and Regional Affairs (DCRA) repeated a statewide survey of retail heating fuel and gasoline prices in a cross-section of 100 select Alaska communities during November 2007. This report, Current Community Conditions: Fuel Prices Across Alaska, November 2007 Update summarizes fuel survey findings, discusses changes in fuel prices during the past six months, and provides a national perspective of fluctuating fuel prices.

METHODOLOGY

The DCRA Research and Analysis Section, in consultation with the Local Government Assistance Section, developed the survey instrument and community sample frame during 2005. Communities were strategically selected to represent differing socioeconomic conditions and all Alaska regions including the Interior, North Slope, South Coastal, Southeast, and Western Regions. Selected communities had also generally been the recipient of an Alaska Energy Authority bulk fuel project during the recent past. Since a non-probability sampling method was utilized, this survey is considered a non-scientific study with results not generalizable to the entire population of rural Alaska communities. To accurately and consistently track longitudinal changes in fuel prices, the 2005 survey instrument and community sampling frame was used to collect 2006 and 2007 fuel information – the communities and questionnaire items remained the same from 2005 to 2007.

DCRA Research and Analysis staff implemented the survey instrument during November 26 – 30, 2007. In total, local fuel retailers from 100 communities were contacted (via telephone) and requested to provide current heating fuel (#1) and gasoline per gallon prices. Survey results are one-time measurements and representative of retail fuel prices on the particular day of contact. Heating fuel and gasoline prices may have changed between the time of contact and publishing of this report.

NATIONAL CONTEXT

The West Coast average spot price for a barrel of Alaska North Slope (ANS) crude oil climbed to a new record in November 2007 reaching $92.98, a robust 71% increase over November 2006 average ANS spot prices (Energy Information Administration, 2007). The State of Alaska's recently amended oil taxing structure combined with continuing record high ANS oil prices is projected to add an additional $1.5 billion to the State's General Fund in FY 2008. This estimate is not going unnoticed in struggling rural Alaska communities facing record gasoline and home heating fuel retail prices.

The high average price per barrel of crude oil is expected to result in continuing higher U.S. consumer prices for gasoline and home heating fuel (Figure 1).

During 2007, national gasoline prices averaged $2.81 per gallon compared with $2.58 per gallon in 2006, and reached a weekly peak of $3.11 during mid-November (Energy Information Administration, 2007). Since mid-November, a slight decline in crude oil prices has resulted in a ten cent per gallon decrease in gasoline prices. Nevertheless, energy analysts project by the middle of next spring gasoline prices will increase to over $3.40 per gallon as the driving season begins.

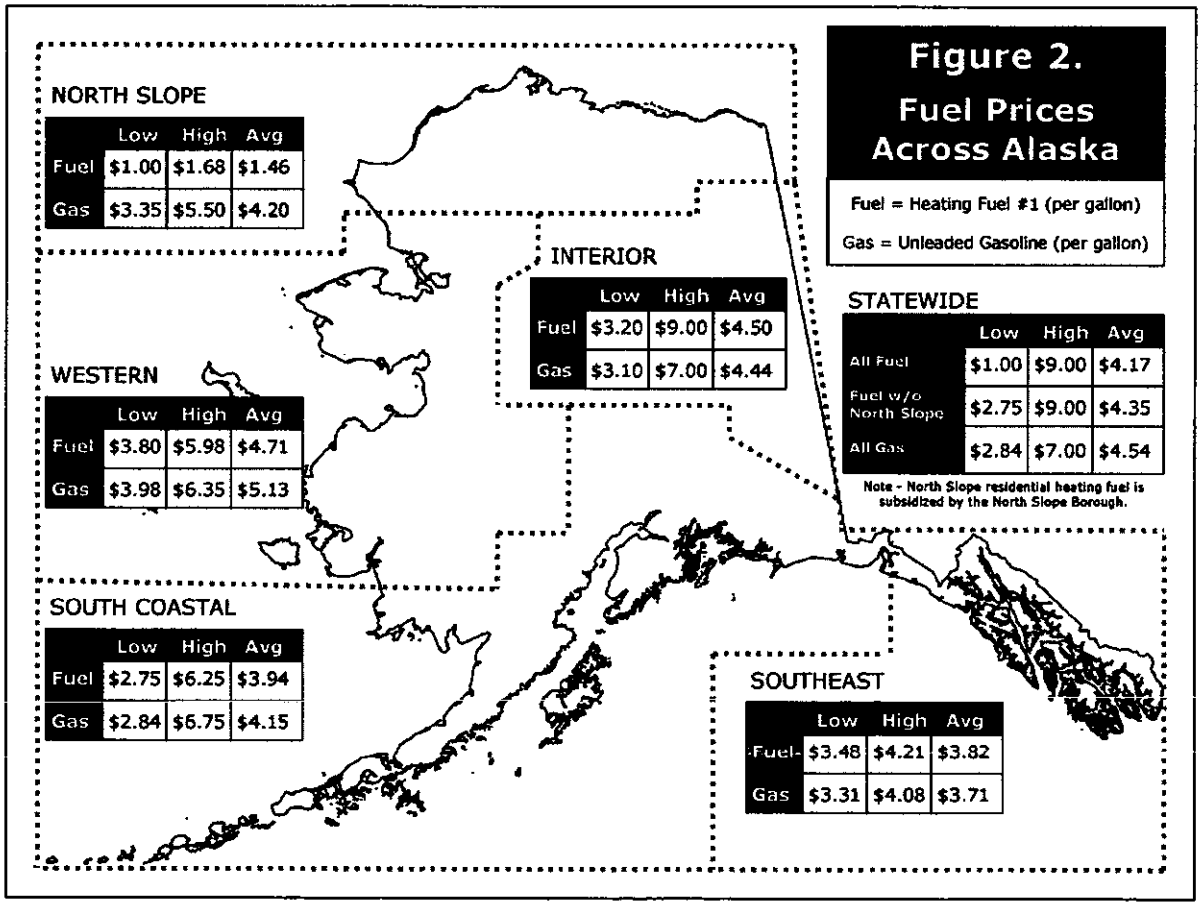
Source: Energy Information Administration, 2007

Residential heating fuel prices are projected to average $3.23 per gallon over the winter of 2007 (Energy Information Administration, 2007). This is approximately 19% above the current 2007 annual average residential heating fuel prices of $2.72 per gallon, and a 30% increase above the 2006 home heating season when prices averaged $2.48 per gallon.

Continuing tight supply and high demand is expected to keep crude oil prices elevated over the foreseeable future. For example, West Texas Intermediate (WTI) monthly crude oil prices averaged over $85 per barrel in October and $95 per barrel in November, reaching a record $98 per barrel before the month ended. These prices are up $27 and $36 per barrel respectively from the same time last year. By way of comparison, WTI prices averaged $66.02 per barrel in 2006, and $72.05 per barrel in 2007. Additionally, WTI monthly average prices are expected to exceed $80 per barrel through 2008 (Energy Information Administration, 2007).

CURRENT FUEL PRICES ACROSS ALASKA



PREPARED BY NICOLE GREWE, PH.D. AND ERIC CALDWELL
DIVISION OF COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL AFFAIRS, RESEARCH AND ANALYSIS SECTION DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, COMMUNITY, AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

As Figure 2 illustrates, average heating fuel prices per gallon vary across Alaska by region. Western Alaska communities report the highest average heating fuel retail price at $4.71 per gallon while North Slope communities report the lowest average retail price at $1.46 per gallon. Of noteworthy importance, the North Slope Borough provides free heating fuel for residential use through village corporations who distribute fuel to residents throughout the Borough, charging only a delivery fee on a per gallon basis. The North Slope Borough does not subsidize heating fuel for commercial use. Consequently, heating fuel retail price for commercial entities is significantly higher than residential use heating fuel (see Table 1). Compared to other regions, and excluding the North Slope, Southeast Alaska communities experience relatively lower heating fuel prices indicated by an average of $3.82 per gallon.

Table 1. North Slope Heating Fuel (#1) and Gasoline Retail Prices

Community	Community Retailer	Heating Fuel Retail Price		Gasoline Retail Price
		Residential	Commercial
Anaktuvuk Pass	Nunamiut Corporation	$1.00	$4.15	$5.50
Atqasuk	Atqasuk Corporation	$1.40	$4.10	$4.10
Barrow	BUEC, Inc.	Natural Gas	$4.90	$4.45
Kaktovik	Kaktovik Inupiat Corporation	$1.55	$4.95	$3.45
Nuiqsut	Kuukpik Corporation	$1.45	$4.90	$3.35
Point Hope	Tigara Corporation	$1.65	$5.05	$4.25
Wainwright	Olgoonik Corporation	$1.68	$5.11	$4.33

To accurately summarize statewide heating fuel prices, it is appropriate to exclude North Slope Borough communities due to the North Slope Borough subsidy for residential use heating fuel. When considering statewide heating fuel prices, the Arctic Village Traditional Council (Interior Region) reports the highest heating fuel retail price at $9.00 per gallon (see Appendix). In contrast, the City of Akutan in Akutan (South Coastal Region) reports the lowest heating fuel retail price at $2.75 per gallon. On average, heating fuel retail price is $4.35 per gallon across Alaska with 93 communities reporting heating fuel prices (excluding North Slope Region communities).

As Figure 2 illustrates, average gasoline prices per gallon also vary across Alaska by region. Western communities report the highest average gasoline retail price at $5.13 per gallon while Southeast communities report the lowest average retail price at $3.71 per gallon. Statewide retail prices indicate significant variation in gasoline retail price. Specifically, the Arctic Village Traditional Council in Arctic Village (Interior Region) reports the highest gasoline price at $7.00 per gallon. In contrast, City of Chignik in Chignik reports the lowest gasoline retail price at $2.84 per gallon. On average, gasoline retail price is $4.54 per gallon across Alaska with 100 communities reporting.

Method of transporting heating fuel and gasoline varies across Alaska with fuel retailers using barge, air, truck, or a combination to transport fuel into the community (Table 2). With 100 communities reporting, the wide majority (83%) report barging fuel into the community. In contrast, nine communities (9%) report trucking fuel into the community, four communities (4%) report air freighting fuel into the community, and four communities (4%) utilize multiple methods of transporting fuel into the community (i.e., barge/truck, barge/air, or truck/air). Fairbanks and Valdez do not transport heating fuel because of a local on-site refinery; gasoline is transported by truck and barge respectively.

Table 2. Fuel Transportation Method

CHANGE IN FUEL PRICES ACROSS ALASKA (6/2007 TO 11/2007)

During the past six months, heating fuel and gasoline retail prices have remained relatively stable with both experiencing only minor increases from June 2007 to November 2007. With 93 communities reporting (excluding North Slope Region communities), the statewide average heating fuel price increased from $4.14 to $4.35 per gallon (Table 3). The $0.21 per gallon average price increase represents a 5% increase in statewide average heating fuel per gallon price. With the exception of the Western Region, all Alaska regions experienced price increases ranging from 6% (North Slope Region) to 14% (Interior Region). Although the Western Region has the highest average heating fuel price ($4.71), it has remained stable during the past six months, actually dropping by two cents per gallon. During the June 2007 to November 2007 time period, no other region experienced an overall decrease in heating fuel per gallon average price.

With 100 communities reporting, the statewide average gasoline price increased from $4.49 to $4.54 per gallon from June 2007 to November 2007 (Table 4). The $0.06 per gallon average price increase represents a 1% increase in statewide average gasoline per gallon price. Interior, South Coastal, and Western Regions experienced a price increase of 2%. In contrast, North Slope and Southeast Regions experienced gasoline per gallon price decreases of 6% and 1% respectively.

Retailers were queried regarding whether market demand for heating fuel or gasoline had increased, decreased, or remained the same during the past 12 months. Retailers across the state report the same experience; despite record high prices, change in demand for heating fuel and gasoline has largely not changed during the past 12 months. In particular, demand for heating fuel and gasoline has decreased in only 21% and 11% of communities respectively during the past 12 months (Table 5). In contrast, three-quarters or more of communities suggest there has been no change in consumer demand for either heating fuel (71%) or gasoline (82%). Stable market demand for both heating fuel and gasoline despite record high prices is likely indicative of rural communities needing a consistent minimum quantity of both resources simply to meet basic survival needs.

Since November 2005, DCRA has conducted the statewide bulk fuel survey of 100 communities on a bi-annual schedule. Over the past two years, statewide heating fuel and gasoline retail per gallon prices have steadily increased (Figure 3). Specifically, statewide average heating fuel retail price has increased from $3.48 (November 2005) to $4.35 (November 2007). This $0.87 per gallon price increase represents an overall increase of 25%. Statewide average gasoline retail prices have also increased from $3.83 (November 2005) to $4.54 (November 2007), which represents an overall increase of 19% ($0.71).

Regional analysis suggests heating fuel and gasoline prices have increased in every region except the North Slope Region since 2005. In the North Slope Region, heating fuel decreased by 11% ($0.18) from $1.64 per gallon (November 2005) to $1.46 per gallon (November 2007) and gasoline decreased by 1% ($0.06) from $4.26 (November 2005) to $4.20 (November 2007).

Aside from the North Slope Region, from November 2005 to November 2007 the price of heating fuel has increased by at least 18% and the price of gasoline by at least 13% in every region. The Interior Region has experienced the most significant increase in heating fuel where the average price has increased from $3.34 (November 2005) to $4.50 (November 2007), which represents an overall increase of 35% ($1.16). The Western Region experienced the greatest increase in gasoline prices from $4.09 (November 2005) to $5.13 (November 2007), which represents an overall increase of 25% ($1.04).

SUMMARY

During November 2007, current retail heating fuel (#1) and gasoline prices were collected from 100 select communities located across rural Alaska. Heating fuel retail prices per gallon ranged from $2.75 (Akutan) to $9.00 (Arctic Village); statewide average price was $4.35 per gallon. Gasoline retail prices per gallon ranged from $2.84 (Chignik) to $7.00 (Arctic Village); statewide average price was $4.54. In general, heating fuel and gasoline retail prices have remained relatively stable during the past six months with statewide average prices of heating fuel increasing by 5% and gasoline increasing by 1%. Significantly increased fuel and energy costs combined with high unemployment rates, limited local economies, and local governments struggling to provide basic local services continue to present rural Alaska communities and households with challenging circumstances with no long-term solution in sight.

In response to current rural Alaska energy challenges, the State of Alaska has implemented a variety of assistance programs to meet rising fuel costs, provide emergency assistance for municipalities, and provide a state contribution to a federal program that helps low-income households pay for energy. The State of Alaska administers a variety of specific assistance programs focused on alleviating community and household impacts of increased retail fuel prices including: 1) Community Energy Assistance Program; 2) Bulk Fuel Revolving Loan Fund; 3) Fuel Bridge Loan Program; 4) Power Cost Equalization; 5) Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program; 6) Power Project Loan Fund; 7) Power, Fuel, and Hydro Training; and 8) Bulk Fuel Upgrades.

Wayne Anthony Ross was born 25 February 1943 in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He graduated from Marquette University High School in 1960.

EDUCATION: After attending the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee for two years, Mr. Ross transferred to Marquette University, where he graduated with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Business Administration in 1965, and a Doctor of Law (Juris Doctoris) Degree in 1968.

EMPLOYMENT HISTORY: Mr. Ross first came to Alaska in June 1967 between his junior and senior years of law school. He spent that summer serving as a law clerk for a local Anchorage attorney, and driving a sightseeing bus on weekends for American Sightseeing Company.

From 1968 to 1969, Mr. Ross served as an Assistant Attorney General for the State of Alaska. In 1969 he was appointed by Superior Court Judge Harold J. Butcher to be Court Trustee and Standing Master for the Family Court. During the next four years, sitting as a judicial officer, Mr. Ross heard over 90% of all dependency, child in need of supervision, and delinquency cases arising in the Third Judicial District, and also enforced child support orders entered by the Superior court. During Mr. Ross's tenure, a computerized system of collection was instigated, which has developed into the Child Support Services Division which exists today.

In 1973, Mr. Ross left State service to enter the private practice of law. He was an associate of Edward J. Reasor and Associates in Anchorage, Alaska and a partner in law firms in Cordova, Alaska and Glennallen, Alaska. In 1977, Mr. Ross opened his own office in Anchorage, Ross & Associates, now known as the law office of Ross & Miner, P.C. Mr. Ross's practice emphasizes family law, criminal defense, plaintiff's personal injury and business law. Some years ago, Mr. Ross obtained one of the highest settlements in a wrongful termination of employment case ever obtained in the United States.

BAR ADMISSIONS: Mr. Ross was admitted to the Wisconsin Bar in 1968 and the Alaska Bar in 1969. He is admitted to practice in the state courts of Wisconsin and Alaska and in the federal courts of the Eastern District of Wisconsin, the District of Alaska, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court.

MILITARY SERVICE: Mr. Ross was a Colonel in the Alaska State Defense Force. COL Ross was Commander of the Professional and Technical Detachment of the ASDF from 1986 to June 1987. He was Chief of Civil-Military Operations (G-5) from June 1987 until July 1988, and then took command of the Field Forces Teams. Several months later, he was appointed Judge Advocate General. From April of 1990 until May 1992, COL Ross was Chief of Operations and Training (G-3). In May, 1992, he was appointed Acting Chief of Staff. In March, 1993 he was appointed Chief of Staff. From July, 1994 until June 1996, he held the position of Inspector General. COL Ross was given command of the ASDF Rifle Team in September, 1989. COL Ross also served as Acting Commander, and was on the Officer Promotion and Selection Board. He participated in Mobex 88, Brimfrost 89, and Alcan Convoy 92 operations. Colonel Ross is now Area Defense Counsel for the ASDF. He founded, and was President of the 49th Territorial Guards Regiment, Inc. from 1987-1994, an organization established to support the Alaska State Defense force, its officers and soldiers, and was re-elected to that position in April, 1995, serving until August 1996. In 2007 he was again elected to the Regiment's Board of Directors and later elected to the position of Vice President and presently serves in that position.

COL Ross was awarded the Alaska State Service Medal, the Alaska State Defense Force Achievement Medal, the Alaska State Defense Force State Service Medal twice, the Alaska State Defense Force Drill Attendance Ribbon, the Alaska State Defense Force Training Achievement Ribbon, and the State

Guard Association of the United States Membership Ribbon. He was named 1988 Good Samaritan Attorney Of The Year by Veterans Living and Health, Inc. In 1990 he was knighted by the Polish Government and awarded the Commander's Cross of the Order of Polonia Restituta for services rendered to the cause of freedom.

TEACHING EXPERIENCE: Mr. Ross taught courses entitled "Juveniles and the Law" (1973-74) and "Introduction to Criminal Justice" at the University of Alaska, Anchorage, for several semesters. He has been a guest lecturer at Marquette University Law School, the University of Alaska, Anchorage, and at Wayland Baptist College. Mr. Ross served as a member of the Board of Trustees (Secretary) for Lumen Christi High School from 1999 to 2001.

POLITICAL EXPERIENCE: Mr. Ross first became involved in politics in 1960 when his father, Ray E. Ross, ran for the office of Alderman (City Councilman) of West Allis, Wisconsin's fourth largest city. Ray E. Ross was elected and held the Alderman's position for 3 four year terms. Wayne Ross was Campaign Chairman for two of those campaigns. He also participated in the Nixon campaign of 1960 and the Goldwater campaign of 1964 with less satisfactory results. Upon coming to Alaska, he was an alternate delegate to District 11's convention in 1972 and 1976. Mr. Ross has been involved in the Republican Party from precinct to national levels. Mr. Ross served as Parliamentarian at the 1980, 1982, and 1984 District 8 Republican Conventions and was Parliamentarian Pro Tem for the Republican State Central Committee in 1983. In 1984 he was Parliamentarian for the State Republican Convention and was an alternate delegate to the Republican National Convention in Dallas, Texas, where as a seated alternate, he was able to cast his ballot for Ronald Reagan for the Republican Party nominee for President of the United States. Mr. Ross was elected Vice Chairman of the District 8 Republican Party in 1982 and served as Chairman of that District from 1985 to 1988. As such, he was a member of the Alaska State Republican Party Central Committee. Mr. Ross was a member of that party's Elephant Club and was Chairman of the Rules committee from 1985-1988 and Co-Chairman of the 1988 State Convention's Candidate Recruitment Committee. In 1988, he was Alaska Chairman, Lawyers for Bush/Quayle. Mr. Ross was Republican Party National Committeeman, Alaska from 1992-1998. He attended the Republican National Convention in Houston 1992 as National Committeeman-elect and the 1996 National Convention in San Diego as National Committeeman. From 1995-1996, he served as Co-Chairman, Alaskans For Gramm. In 1997, Mr. Ross was a member of a delegation representing the United States and the Republican National Committee to the Republic of China (Taiwan's) 15th Kuomingtang National Congress in Taipei, Taiwan, China. Mr. Ross sat on the Republican State Central Committee from 2000-2001 as the Bonus Vote for District 18. He served as Secretary for Precinct 357 from 2000-2001. He also served as a member of the Republican Party Special Events Committee from 2000-2002. Mr. Ross was a Republican Candidate for Governor of Alaska in 1998 and 2002. In 2006 he served as Honorary Co-Chairman of the Sarah Palin for Governor campaign.

PUBLIC SERVICE: Mr. Ross was appointed to serve on the Alaska Land Use Council Advisors' Committee by the United States Department of Interior in January, 1984, and was re-appointed each year thereafter. In April, 1987, Mr. Ross was elected Chairman of that Committee. He served as Chairman from 1987-1988. He was elected Vice Chairman in 1988, and from 1989-1990, Mr. Ross held the position of Acting Chairman. Mr. Ross was appointed to the Advisory Council for the Commission On Privatizations and Delivery of Government Services by the Alaska Legislature in 1999, and assigned the Chairmanship of the Advisory Sub-committee to study the Office of the Governor.

Mr. Ross was appointed and served as an Alaskan Marriage Commissioner in 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1976, 1984, 1985, 1994, 1997, 2003, and 2005.

AWARDS: Mr. Ross and his law firm have received awards from the National Rifle Association of America, the Alaska Outdoor Council, and the Alaska Christian Sportsman's Club for services on behalf of sportsmen. Mr.

Ross has been awarded the NRA Affiliated Gun Collectors Award of Merit for the Promotion of Gun Collecting. Mr. Ross has also received patriotism awards from the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Alaska Sea Cadets, the National Commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Anchorage VFW Post 9981.

Mr. Ross is listed in Who's Who in American Law, 1st- 9th, 14th, and 20th editions; Who's Who in American Politics, 15th, 16th, 17th and 20th editions; Personalities of the West and Midwest, 8th edition; Who's Who in Society, 1st and 2nd editions; Who's Who in America, 46th-49th and 55th-57th editions; International Who's Who of Contemporary Achievement, 1984/85 edition; Marquis Who's Who in the West (1996-1997); and Who's Who in the World, 12th and 18th and 21st editions.

PUBLICATIONS: Mr. Ross was a biweekly columnist for the Anchorage Times (FROM THE ARENA, every second Sunday) from 1986 until 1992. He later wrote for the Voice Of The Anchorage Times in the Anchorage Daily News from 1992-1993, and for The Anchorage Chronicle in 2003. He served as contributing editor (firearms) for the Alaska Bar Rag, the official newspaper of the Alaska Bar Association for which Mr. Ross received the coveted Stanley Award for Heroic Journalism. Mr. Ross also has had outdoor and firearms articles printed in the Congressional Record, Alaska Outdoors, Supply Line, Soldier of Fortune, Wild Sheep, the Message, the Washington Arms Collectors Gun News, the Missouri Arms Collectors newsletter, the National Firearms Museum Quarterly, and Gun Week magazines. He also has written articles for Army Motors and was book review editor for that magazine.

HOBBIES AND INTERESTS: Mr. Ross was a holder of a Federal Firearms Dealers License for twenty-five years and specializes in collecting large caliber Colt and Smith and Wesson handguns. He has testified before Congressional Committees in Alaska and Washington, D.C. on lands and hunting issues, and has lobbied the Alaskan Legislature for equal access to fish and game for all citizens. He has also appeared on numerous television and radio programs supporting hunting and the Right to Keep and Bear Arms. Mr. Ross has conducted seminars and given speeches on hunting and gun collecting in many parts of the country. He is listed on the NRA Gun Collectors Speakers Bureau.

Mr. Ross's hobbies include hunting (especially with a .45 caliber handgun), fishing, and gun-collecting and he is a licensed assistant guide. He has taken two moose, and three caribou, with a .45 Colt revolver; three Sitka deer and a musk ox with a .45 semi-automatic pistol; and numerous other large game with a rifle including Dall sheep, whitetail deer, moose, caribou, sika deer, black bear, and brown bear. He has been qualified as an expert witness on firearms in both Alaska and Texas State Courts and in the Federal District court for the State of Alaska, both in Anchorage and Fairbanks. He is also a bibliophile, collecting books by Robert Service, Rex Beach, James Oliver Curwood, Don Blanding, and Theodore Roosevelt, as well as possessing the largest library on firearms in the State of Alaska.

RELIGIOUS PREFERENCE: Mr. Ross is a Catholic. He, along with his wife, Barbara, participated in the Anchorage Archdiocese Pre-Cana Program as instructors from approximately 1972 until 1985. In 1988, he was Advanced Gifts Chairman of the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Church building program. In 1991 he was Building Fund Committee Chairman for that church. In October, 1991, Mr. Ross and his wife were named, by the Vatican, to be a Knight and Lady in the Equestrian Order of the Holy Sepulcher of Jerusalem. In 1998, Mr. Ross was awarded the Saint Gabriel Possenti Medallion by the Saint Gabriel Possenti Society. Mr. Ross served as Secretary on the Board of Trustees of Lumen Christi High School, Inc. from 1999 until 2001 and helped in the transition of that school from a private corporation to a parish school under the auspices of the Catholic Archdiocese of Anchorage.

FAMILY INFORMATION: Mr. Ross was married to Barbara L. Froelich of Elkhart, Indiana in 1968. They reside in Anchorage and have four children: Gregory, age 38, Brian, age 35, Timothy, age 32, and Amy Katherine Ross, age 30 years, and six grandchildren. Gregory graduated from Pre-Law at Marquette University, was a commercial fisherman, obtained his masters degree in education from the University of Alaska, Anchorage, is now a teacher for the Anchorage School District and coaches high school hockey. For several years, he served on the Anchorage Fish and Game Advisory Committee. Greg is married to Shelli, and has one son, Oberon and two step-children, Ryan and Tristen. Brian graduated 13th in his class, the top Marine Corps officer (Class of 1994), from the United States Naval Academy, and is a Major in the U.S.

Marine Corps, having served 3 tours in Iraq. Brian recently obtained his Masters Degree at Marquette in Milwaukee and currently is assigned by the Marine Corps as an Instructor (Naval History) at the Naval Academy. Brian and his wife, Tracy, have two sons, Andrew Charles Ross and Matthew Edward Ross, and a daughter, Emily Louise Ross. Tim graduated with a degree in Mechanical Engineering from Marquette University and is working in Alaska as a project supervisor for ANC. Amy graduated from Gonzaga University in Spokane, Washington with a degree in Criminal Justice. She is police officer with the Spokane Police Department, and is a Spokane Police Department Firearms Training Officer. She was recently commissioned as a Special Deputy U.S. Marshall. Barbara and each of the Ross children and grandchildren are NRA Life Members. Barbara was the librarian at St. Elizabeth Seton Catholic Elementary School, was a member of that school's Service Club Board, and was President of its School Board. She worked for the Anchorage School District as a librarian's assistant, and is now retired. Sec. 44.23.010. Attorney general.

The principal executive officer of the Department of Law is the attorney general.

Sec. 44.23.020. Duties; and powers; waiver of immunity.

(a) The attorney general is the legal advisor of the governor and other state officers.

(b) The attorney general shall

(1) defend the Constitution of the State of Alaska and the Constitution of the United States of America;

(2) bring, prosecute, and defend all necessary and proper actions in the name of the state for the collection of revenue;

(3) represent the state in all civil actions in which the state is a party;

(4) prosecute all cases involving violation of state law, and file informations and prosecute all offenses against the revenue laws and other state laws where there is no other provision for their prosecution;

(5) administer state legal services, including the furnishing of written legal opinions to the governor, the legislature, and all state officers and departments as the governor directs; and give legal advice on a law, proposed law, or proposed legislative measure upon request by the legislature or a member of the legislature;

(6) draft legal instruments for the state;

(7) make available a report to the legislature, through the governor, at each regular legislative session

(A) of the work and expenditures of the office; and

(B) on needed legislation or amendments to existing law;

(8) perform all other duties required by law or which usually pertain to the office of attorney general in a state; and

(9) prepare, publish, and revise as it becomes useful or necessary to do so an information pamphlet on landlord and tenant rights and the means of making complaints to appropriate public agencies concerning landlord and tenant rights; the contents of the pamphlet and any revision shall be approved by the Department of Law before publication.

(c) Before January 1, 1999, the attorney general may, in a case that involves the state's title to submerged lands, or in any case in which the state seeks to allocate fault to the federal government or a federal employee under AS 09.17.080, waive the state's immunity from suit in federal court provided under the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The expiration on January 1, 1999, of the attorney general's authority to waive the state's Eleventh Amendment immunity does not affect existing waivers in ongoing cases.

(d) The attorney general may, subject to the power of the legislature to enact laws and make appropriations, settle actions, cases, and offenses under (b) of this section.

(e) There is established within the Department of Law the function of public advocacy for regulatory affairs. The attorney general shall participate as a party in a matter that comes before the Regulatory Commission of Alaska when the attorney general determines that participation is in the public interest.

(f) The attorney general shall designate not less than one-half attorney position in the Department of Law for the purpose of prosecuting actions for fraudulent acts related to workers' compensation under AS 23.30.

(g) The attorney general may, in cases that involve compliance, discharge, or enforcement of responsibilities assumed by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities under AS 44.42.300, waive the state's immunity from suit in federal court provided under the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Ross confirmation hearing testy at times

JUNEAU — State lawmakers on Wednesday grilled Gov. Sarah Palin's appointee for state attorney general, Wayne Anthony Ross, as Ross defended past controversial statements and said he believes that former state legislator Vic Kohring is innocent despite an Anchorage jury convicting him of corruption.

Wednesday was the first day of confirmation hearings for Ross, with the Legislature scheduled to vote April 16 on whether he should be the state's new attorney general.

"Nobody ever accused me of tippy toeing around the issues. Now I'm asking for this job of advocating for Alaska, for the state that I love almost as much as I love my wife," Ross said.

Ross was the original defense lawyer for Kohring, whom federal prosecutors accused of taking bribes when he represented Wasilla in the state Legislature. Ross maintained at the time that Kohring was innocent, and said Wednesday under questioning from Senate judiciary committee members that he still believes that's true, despite a jury in Anchorage federal court finding him guilty. Kohring was sentenced last year to serve three-and-a-half years in prison.

"Vic's main problem was that he was naive," Ross said.

Ross said Kohring didn't follow his legal advice and then hired another lawyer, John Henry Browne of Seattle. Ross, responding to questioning, said he thought Palin was wrong to call on Kohring to resign from the Legislature following his indictment.

Ross also said he thought the governor was wrong to call on Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens to step down from office in October after he was convicted — a conviction that a U.S. District Court judge dismissed on Tuesday. "I believe our system of justice should work first before somebody is publicly asked to resign," Ross said.

Anchorage Democratic Sen. Bill Wielechowski brought up previous Ross statements, including saying the idea of Native sovereignty is a 19th century principle, and using words like "immoral," and "degenerates" in a letter to the state bar association newsletter during a fight over gay rights in 1993.

"Some of the things that you've said are extremely divisive and I don't think help us as a state move forward. And I don't know that right now, at this time in our state, it's in our best interest to have such a divisive figure," he said.

Ross responded he had a different role in the past as a private attorney representing clients than he would as attorney general. "I want to represent all Alaskans, I'll have a different hat on ... If I have the job of advocate for the state of Alaska then I'm going to advocate for all the people of the state of Alaska," Ross said.

Most of the pointed questioning came from Democrats and lawmakers generally believe that Ross will end up being confirmed. Ross, a gun-rights advocate, has a lot of Republican support in the Legislature.

On other issues: Ross said he opposed the death penalty, which Palin supports, and believes that state youth workers are often too intent on taking kids from homes in cases of alleged abuse than in keeping families together when appropriate. "I've wondered whether it wasn't a matter of numbers, in other words, the more kids they could get into the system of foster homes, the more money they could come (to the Legislature) and justify getting," Ross said.

But Ross said that, as attorney general, his role wouldn't be to make policy. It's to follow the directions set by the governor and the state Legislature, he said.

"I'm the general, who carries out the campaigns. I'm not the guy who decides when to go to war," he said.

The most heated exchange came between Ross and Nome Democratic Sen. Donny Olson. "I'm concerned that, as the general, the casualties may indeed be those people that are out there in rural Alaska — the people that I represent. I've had torrents of e-mails and torrents of communication (from people), stating that they have difficulty with your appointment," Olson told him.

Olson singled out Ross's statements about the rural preference for subsistence hunting and fishing. Alaskans have been divided for years on whether residents of far-flung rural areas should enjoy more liberal hunting and fishing access than residents from more urban areas. At stake are longer seasons, higher catch limits and first crack at fish and wildlife during times of scarcity.

In 1989, Ross was co-counsel in a lawsuit that led to the Alaska Supreme Court tossing out the state's rural-preference law. Federal law calls for a rural subsistence preference and the state's unwillingness to comply led to a court-ordered federal takeover of subsistence hunting and fishing management across much of the state. When running for governor in 2002, Ross told a crowd in Kodiak that if elected he would hire a band of "junkyard dog" assistant attorneys general to challenge the federal rules or seek changes in the law through Congress.

Ross said the state Constitution says Alaska's assets belong to all state residents, and people should talk instead of going to the feds to get "more rights than other people."

"You don't invite the bear into your house and then expect not to get eaten up. We're being eaten up and we need to get together," Ross told the committee.

Olson objected.

"The bear that you call it is the United States government and that's what had to step in here because state law was starting to run over the rank and file little guy out there that is trying to make a living out in rural Alaska," Olson said.

Ross fired back.

"You're a senator, you represent all Alaskans and you should be working with other Alaskans to develop solutions rather than going out and crying to mama out somewheres else, and saying 'mom, you've got to help me,'" Ross said. "That's not necessarily directed at you. But we should have worked together to solve those problems, rather than get somebody else."

Anchorage Republican Sen. Lesil McGuire said Ross would be a passionate fighter for the state and she is inclined to support a governor's choice unless there is a huge reason not to. But McGuire said that, in response to public testimony, she needs to follow up with Ross about his stance on domestic violence issues.

Most of the pointed questioning came from Democrats and lawmakers generally believe that Ross will end up being confirmed. Ross, a gun-rights advocate, has a lot of Republican support in the Legislature.

On other issues: Ross said he opposed the death penalty, which Palin supports, and believes that state youth workers are often too intent on taking kids from homes in cases of alleged abuse than in keeping families together when appropriate. "I've wondered whether it wasn't a matter of numbers, in other words, the more kids they could get into the system of foster homes, the more money they could come (to the Legislature) and justify getting," Ross said.

But Ross said that, as attorney general, his role wouldn't be to make policy. It's to follow the directions set by the governor and the state Legislature, he said.

"I'm the general, who carries out the campaigns. I'm not the guy who decides when to go to war," he said.

The most heated exchange came between Ross and Nome Democratic Sen. Donny Olson. "I'm concerned that, as the general, the casualties may indeed be those people that are out there in rural Alaska — the people that I represent. I've had torrents of e-mails and torrents of communication (from people), stating that they have difficulty with your appointment," Olson told him.

Olson singled out Ross's statements about the rural preference for subsistence hunting and fishing. Alaskans have been divided for years on whether residents of far-flung rural areas should enjoy more liberal hunting and fishing access than residents from more urban areas. At stake are longer seasons, higher catch limits and first crack at fish and wildlife during times of scarcity.

In 1989, Ross was co-counsel in a lawsuit that led to the Alaska Supreme Court tossing out the state's rural-preference law. Federal law calls for a rural subsistence preference and the state's unwillingness to comply led to a court-ordered federal takeover of subsistence hunting and fishing management across much of the state. When running for governor in 2002, Ross told a crowd in Kodiak that if elected he would hire a band of "junkyard dog" assistant attorneys general to challenge the federal rules or seek changes in the law through Congress.

Ross said the state Constitution says Alaska's assets belong to all state residents, and people should talk instead of going to the feds to get "more rights than other people."

"You don't invite the bear into your house and then expect not to get eaten up. We're being eaten up and we need to get together," Ross told the committee.

Olson objected.

"The bear that you call it is the United States government and that's what had to step in here because state law was starting to run over the rank and file little guy out there that is trying to make a living out in rural Alaska," Olson said.

Ross fired back.

"You're a senator, you represent all Alaskans and you should be working with other Alaskans to develop solutions rather than going out and crying to mama out somewheres else, and saying 'mom, you've got to help me,"' Ross said. "That's not necessarily directed at you. But we should have worked together to solve those problems, rather than get somebody else."

Anchorage Republican Sen. Lesil McGuire said Ross would be a passionate fighter for the state and she is inclined to support a governor's choice unless there is a huge reason not to. But McGuire said that, in response to public testimony, she needs to follow up with Ross about his stance on domestic violence issues.

JUNEAU, Alaska - Confirmation hearings got off to a spirited start for Gov. Sarah Palin's choice for attorney general as a Senate committee Wednesday grilled Wayne Anthony Ross on his views regarding everything from family law to subsistence.

Unlike his mild-mannered predecessor Talis Colberg, a small town lawyer who'd specialized in worker's compensation claims up until he was appointed the state's top lawyer, the flamboyant Ross has generated plenty of controversy, from his newspaper columns to his two runs for governor, during his decades long career as an Anchorage attorney.

"I have got a binder full of things that you've said over the years and articles that you've written over the years," Sen. Bill Wielechowski, D-Anchorage, told Ross at the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing. "Some of the things you have said are extremely divisive and I don't know that right now, at this time in our state, it's in our best interests to have such a divisive figure."

Palin's nod to the National Rifle Association director was applauded by gun rights advocates but slammed by Alaska Native groups over his views on subsistence rights.

Ross acknowledged he took many controversial positions as a private attorney but said he would wear a different hat as the attorney general and take his cue from the state's policy makers. But he said he would welcome direction to resist outside interference in the state's affairs, such as the federal law that guarantees a subsistence hunting and fishing preference for rural residents.

"I'm just the general who carries out the campaign. My job is to win the war after you decide to carry out the war," Ross said.

Ross said his overarching duty would be to uphold the state constitution, and he said he would not want to see it amended in order for the state to regain management of subsistence on federal lands. He represented sport hunters in a 1989 lawsuit that overturned the rural preference, arguing that the federal law conflicts with that document's equal protection clause.

Donny Olson, D-Nome, said his constituents overwhelmingly oppose Ross' appointment.

"I'm concerned that as the general, the casualties may indeed be those people who are out there in rural Alaska that I represent, that I've had torrents of e-mails and torrents of communication from, stating that they have difficulty with your appointment," Olson said.

But Ross argued the federal law is a bad system, cutting out traditional subsistence users in the Native Village of Eklutna because they live too close to Anchorage while granting rights to well to do residents who happen to live in designated rural areas.

Committee Chairman Hollis French, D-Anchorage, grilled Ross on an article he wrote 18 years ago in which he criticized attorneys in the Office of Child Services, saying they were intent on destroying family unity.

Ross told the committee he thought they were trying to boost the numbers unnecessarily in order to win more funding from the state Legislature, but he said it appeared the system had improved since then.

Ross was also asked what he thought about former Rep. Vic Kohring, whom he briefly represented. Ross said he believes the Wasilla Republican who is currently serving jail time on corruption charges was "innocent but naive."

Ross also said he disagreed with Palin when she called on Kohring to resign before he had been tried. Ross said he disagreed when she made the same call regarding Sen. Ted Stevens upon his conviction.

"When you have a public official calling on someone to resign, it's like saying that person is guilty," Ross said.

Asked his views on the death penalty, Ross said he was opposed but if a bill passed to reinstate capital punishment in Alaska, "My job is to administer the law, so I would uphold the law."

Asked who would be his clients as attorney general, Ross said he would have quite a few people to advise from the governor to state officials. But he said his duty to the law would come first and it would be his job to defend the constitution and not the governor.

A public hearing on the confirmation drew testimony from all sides. Gay rights advocates panned the governor's pick.

In 1993 Ross wrote an article opposing a proposed Anchorage city ordinance barring discrimination on the basis of sexual preference, saying the bill gave "extra rights to those whose lifestyle was a crime only a few years ago, and whose beliefs are certainly immoral in the eyes of anyone with some semblance of intelligence and moral character."

Marcia Buck of Juneau questioned whether Ross would fairly represent all Alaskans.

"We need an attorney who would represent all Alaskans equally, including gay lesbian and transgender Alaskans," Buck said.

But Jake Jacobson of Kodiak praised Ross for his courage in doing the right thing even when it was unpopular and his devotion to the law.

"We need a lawyer, not a politician for attorney general," Jacobson said. "I know he will serve all Alaskans well."

The committee will allow Ross a chance to respond to the public comments on Monday.

He will face the House Judiciary Committee on Friday. The Legislature will decide on his confirmation on April 16.

Ross runs into resistance

Legislative hearings begin on attorney general confirmation

Native groups oppose Ross appointment

Friday, April 03, 2009
Juneau Empire

ANCHORAGE - Gov. Sarah Palin's choice for attorney general has been unanimously rejected by at least two Alaska Native groups.

An Alaska Federation of Natives committee voted Wednesday to oppose Wayne Anthony Ross.

The AFN plans to send Palin a letter formally opposing the appointment of Ross, an outspoken opponent of giving rural residents a preference when it comes to subsistence fishing and hunting.

Also on Wednesday, the Association of Village Council Presidents voted to pass a resolution of its own rejecting Ross.

The group represents Western Alaska villages.

Ross describes himself as "pro-Constitution" rather than "anti-subsistence."

State lawmakers have scheduled an April 16 confirmation vote for Palin's pick.

Juneau Native groups oppose confirmation of attorney general

Ross raises ire for views on subsistence

Wednesday, April 08, 2009
By Eric Morrison | JUNEAU EMPIRE

Alaska Native groups in Juneau voiced opposition to the nomination of Attorney General Anthony Wayne Ross and called on other Native groups to speak out against Gov. Sarah Palin's selection to head the Department of Law.

In a special session on Saturday, both Alaska Native Brotherhood and Alaska Native Sisterhood Glacier Valley Camp No. 70 passed a resolution asking the Grand Camp executive committee to oppose Ross' nomination, primarily because of his views on subsistence. The move was made after both the Alaska Federation of Natives and the Association of Village Council Presidents came out against Ross last week, ANB Camp No. 70 President Bradley Fluetsch said.

"We've been fighting long and hard for subsistence and this is one of the attorneys of the people that we've been fighting," he said. "So we know him and we don't trust him."

Ross said on Tuesday that none of the groups that have been speaking out against him have bothered to get in touch with him to find out what his positions are. He said he believes they are reaching conclusions that may be erroneous.

"I think subsistence is one of the things that makes Alaska great, makes Alaska interesting and makes Alaska unique," Ross said. "Certainly we have people in outlying areas that don't have access to grocery stores and have to live on the resources of the state to sustain themselves and I'm certainly in favor of that."

Ross said he believes it is the duty of the attorney general to uphold the Alaska Constitution, which stipulates that the state's resources belong to all Alaskans.

"When my mother used to have company for dinner and she had a pie to serve, she didn't say some people can have pie and some people can't, and she didn't say we're going to make the pieces smaller," he said. "She baked another pie."

Ross said he believes wise management of the state's resources can ensure there is sufficient game and fish to take care of all user groups in Alaska.

"But in times of shortage, we may have to have a preference for subsistence to take care of the people in the state of Alaska who rely on that," he said.

Ross did say the groups are correct in that he is against Native sovereignty. He said he believes Alaskans should be working together and not breaking the state into separate entities.

"However, I do believe that tribal government could be utilized under the auspices of the state of Alaska to provide more local control," he said. "So I think they have a mistaken impression of what my position is."

Fluetsch said the state has a record of litigating against Native Americans' federal rights, not realizing there is a special relationship defined in the U.S. Constitution.

"We need to get the state to be more unified, moving together, and it would be a whole lot simpler if we had an attorney general who understood and respected 150 years of federal law regarding Native Americans and Alaska Natives," he said.

Although Ross was appointed by Palin late last month and is presently on the job, he must still receive a majority vote of the Alaska Legislature to retain the position. The vote is scheduled for April 16. Ross replaced former Attorney General Talis Colberg, who resigned in February.

Fluetsch, who also is president of ANB Grand Camp, said there are enough members of the executive committee against the confirmation of Ross to pass a similar resolution. Fluetsch said he plans to testify as the president of both Grand Camp and Camp 70 against Ross during today's Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearing.

"Not only do we want Grand Camp to do it, but we also would like to see all the other camps in Southeast and around the state pass similar resolutions," he said.

"I'm sorry they feel that way," Ross said. "I could give them names of some good friends who are Natives who speak highly of me, I think. And I hope to get the job and prove that they have an erroneous impression of me in some areas."

"This is such a huge, unwieldy project," added Sen. Bill Wielechowski, who co-chairs the Senate Resources Committee with McGuire, at the Legislative Council hearing.

McGuire initially asked that a contract be awarded to the firm Cambridge Energy Research Associates, and later asked that the project go out to bid. But at the hearing, she stopped short of requesting a vote, citing "some dissention" between the House and Senate on the issue.

Legislative Council Chair Rep. John Harris noted the "less than resounding" support for the effort and appointed a subcommittee to consider the need.

On Tuesday, McGuire acknowledged that differing viewpoints between the two energy committees has contributed to their taking independent approaches. But she added that she met with Millett on Monday to discuss how to proceed and said she expects House and Senate members to meet jointly at least part of the time during the interim.

For now, the House committee can claim a stronger working relationship with Palin and her administration. Millett said she met with the governor on Saturday to talk energy policy, and on Monday, Palin quickly offered support—albeit conditional—for the committee's new legislation. "I share the intent of committee members to streamline and consolidate the state's energy programs, but with an expectation that efficiencies must be delivered," Palin said in a news release.

"We have a good working relationship with the Senate [and] a great working relationship with the administration," Millett said at a news conference.

On Monday, House Speaker Mike Chenault included an administration bill expanding ANGDA's mission in a list of bills he expects will pass. But otherwise, the Legislature has almost completely given up on passing any of the many energy-related bills introduced this year.

McGuire said she would have liked to see passage of her bills providing renewable energy tax credits (SB 31) and establishing an emerging energy technology fund (SB 150). But she said the Senate Finance Committee has put energy bills on hold until the state establishes a more comprehensive energy policy, a statement confirmed by staff to Senate Finance Co-chair Bert Stedman.

TRANSITIONS

Ross nomination sparks divergent reactions

Close to 400 Alaska lawyers who have had direct professional contact with Wayne Ross—the man Gov. Sarah Palin has picked to be the state's top lawyer—say his professional standards fall somewhere between deficient and acceptable. The attorneys twice rated him least qualified among those seeking judicial appointments. The polls, one in 2007 and another in 2008, were conducted by the University of Alaska Anchorage on behalf of the Alaska Judicial Council, a unit of the Alaska Court System.

In 2007 Ross was among 13 candidates for a seat on the Alaska Supreme Court, and in 2008 among 14 candidates for a place on the Alaska Court of Appeals. In each competition, and in each of the six characteristic respondents were asked to evaluate, Ross' score was the lowest.

The chart on page 15 summarizes the results of the two polls. Scores for Ross and each of the four other attorneys who applied in both competitions were generally consistent between the two polls. In preparing the chart we averaged their 2007 and 2008 scores [Full sets of names and scores for both years are available by request to rbraun@alaska.com.]

In a 2007 article in the Bar Rag, a newsletter published by the Alaska Bar Association, Ross attributed his low scores to a bias against conservatives among members of the bar, and to fallout from his 41 years as an aggressive litigator. "The often harsh realities of litigation are not designed to readily create long-standing friendships between adversaries."

Weren't the other candidates subject to that fallout?

No, Ross said yesterday in an interview. "None of those people have been in private practice as long as I have, and most of them have been state attorneys or public defenders."

"You tell me why I'm down at the bottom," Ross added, throwing up his hands: "I've made a good living practicing law for the past 40 years. ... I have people coming back. They're happy with their representation. That's the mark of a good attorney, I think."

Rep. Max Gruenberg, an Anchorage attorney, suggested another possible reason for Ross' low survey scores: the candidates against whom Ross competed were perhaps unusually well qualified.

Apart from the issue of his professional competence, Ross has alienated some with his outspoken views on social issues. In 1993, in another article published in the Bar Rag, he criticized efforts by a group called Lawyers Against Discrimination (LAD) supporting an Anchorage city ordinance barring discrimination on the basis of sexual preference: "This bill seems to give extra rights to those whose lifestyle was a crime only a few years ago, and whose beliefs are certainly immoral," Ross wrote. "You support degenerates. ... You collectively contribute $5000 to the cause of sexual perversion."

Sen. Hollis French, chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said he plans to ask Ross about that article at today's confirmation hearing. "Maybe in the intervening 15 years, as society has become more mainstream on this question, maybe he has as well."

But yesterday Ross said he stands by his 1993 statement: "I wrote it, and I haven't changed my mind."

"I think there is something unnatural about that [act]," Ross adds, "That doesn't mean I wouldn't invite somebody like that to dinner. But I might try to convert 'em."

Ross admits his flamboyant style may sometimes work against him, but says it serves a purpose. "You try to use colorful terms to catch people's eye," he said.

In an e-mail sent last evening, Brittany Goodnight, public affairs manager for the Alaska office of Planned Parenthood of the Great Northwest, urged supporters to testify at the confirmation hearing: "It is incredibly important that pro-choice supporters call and ask the legislature not to confirm Ross. [He] defended protesters who chained themselves to reproductive health clinic check-in counters a decade ago. This was more than an issue of choice, this was an issue of trespassing, privacy, and stopping Alaskan women from getting birth control and STD tests."

Goodnight's claim could not be verified by this newsletter's midnight deadline, but there is little doubt that Ross' long-time support of the right-to-life cause is a lighting rod.

More important from a political perspective is the opposition of Alaska Native organizations. In an April 2 press release the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) asked legislators to oppose Ross' confirmation based on what AFN termed his opposition to subsistence and what they say is his disregard for the legal principle of aboriginal land title. Ross represented sport hunters in a 1989 lawsuit that overturned as unconstitutional the state's subsistence preference for rural residents.

"They want to see Alaska balkanized into little fiefdoms where these self-proclaimed Native leaders will reign supreme with help from the Great White Father," Ross said of proponents of a rural subsistence preference in a 1997 interview with reporter Tom Kizzia.

"I don't think he is going to get much support from rural legislators," commented Sen. Lyman Hoffman on Monday. Hoffman, who represents the Bethel area in western Alaska and Rep. Reggie Joule, representing a vast area of Arctic Alaska, say they will oppose the nomination.

But many legislative leaders appear to support the nomination. "He is a man absolutely dedicated to doing the right thing," House Finance Co-chair Mike Hawker said in an interview Wednesday. Hawker, who served as Ross' campaign treasurer during Ross' second campaign for governor, added, "While he is characterized as flamboyant and controversial, I've always found him to be absolutely totally and completely dedicated to the Constitution and the rule of law."

Senate Rules Chair Charlie Huggins reported great enthusiasm about Ross' nomination at a gun show he recently attended in the Matanuska-Susitna area. "It's always been my feeling that unless there's some really big skeletons in the closet, the governor deserves her choice," he said.

Senate President Gary Stevens said he doesn't foresee major problems for Ross' confirmation.

French agrees. "In my belief, the body is going to approve Wayne Anthony Ross," he said in an interview yesterday. "There is nothing I could do or say that would change that, so I don't intend to be hammering on his anvil. I hope we get straight, short answers."

"I would say there is a strong likelihood that he will get [confirmed]," agreed Hoffman, speaking in a separate interview. But it's not a sure thing, suggested Hoffman. "If everybody, all the different factions get together and say, there's enough of us that have problems in different areas, he may have a challenge."

"There is a temptation with governors' appointments to just waive them through; you want to give the governor a certain amount of discretion to have her people in place," observed Anchorage Rep. Les Gara: "As I sit her in my seventh year, I think I've been burned on a few attorney generals, and I'm going to start looking a these things more closely. I think it was a big mistake when I voted for Gregg Renkes," who served as attorney general under former Gov. Frank Murkowski until he resigned amidst conflict-of-interest allegations.

"I have heard that Mr. Ross has said disparaging things about gay people. I don't know if that's true, but I want to find out the answer to that," Gara said. "I've some concerns about his strong stance against the right of Native Alaskans to a subsistence preference when necessary."

"And I'd like to hear answers from him on how he is going to unify the state, as opposed to divide it," Gara concluded.

Interview: Wayne Anthony Ross

Wayne Ross, 66, has been tapped by Gov. Sarah Palin to be her second attorney general, following Talis Colberg, who resigned in February [see Contempt finding, resignation climax Troopergate imbroglio, ALASKA BUDGET REPORT, February 12, 2009].

Ross faces a confirmation hearing this afternoon in the Senate Judiciary Committee, and on Friday before House Judiciary. ALASKA BUDGET REPORT's Gregg Erickson interviewed Ross yesterday in Juneau. Following is a partial transcript of that interview. An audio file (MP3 format) of the entire 33-minute interview is available to client-subscribers by request to rbraun@alaska.com.

Rep. Mike Hawker supports your confirmation, saying, "Nature abhors a vacuum, and Wayne Ross never met a vacuum he wasn't ready to fill." Do you and Gov. Palin have a common understanding of your role in her administration?

I was honorary co-chairman of Sarah's campaign when she ran for governor, so we see a lot alike. She gave me basically [four] tasks: protect Alaska's sovereignty, represent the people of the state of Alaska, help us develop our resources, and ... protect the right to keep and bear arms. ... She knows I'm not a yes-man; I'm loyal, but if somebody's doing something wrong, I'll tell 'em. So I think we'll work well together.

What about the death penalty?

I'm opposed to it. She's for it. If it gets passed, then I follow the law. But I hope it doesn't get passed because I've been a private attorney, practiced law for 42 years and I've seen how our beloved system of justice works. Sometimes it works well, and sometimes an innocent guy gets convicted. I've seen innocent guys get convicted three or four or five times in my career, and those are the cases that when I wake up in the middle of the night they gnaw at me because I wonder if I could have done something different. ... If the system of justice fails in a capital case and somebody gets executed that shouldn't have been, there's no way that you can make an appropriate apology.

The rate of plea bargains and trials are quite different from one district attorney's office to another. With a new prosecutor in Fairbanks, for example, fewer cases are going to trial. What role do you see for your office in managing criminal prosecutions?

I'm familiar with the Anchorage office, and there the trials are going up. ... Each office seems to be different, just like you say. Each of those offices spends state money, and one of the jobs of the attorney general's office is to get the most efficient work out of the various district attorneys' offices. It's my perception as a defense counsel that there are some good cases involving very evil people that haven't gone to trial that should have been taken to trial, and there's some very bad cases involving decent people that are being prosecuted. ... I haven't had much time to get a handle on it, but that's one of the things I'll do after confirmation. ... We're going to see if we can't get an overall policy in effect so we have the limited resources of the department focusing on getting the bad people off the streets. ... If I get confirmed as attorney general, Alaska Airlines stock will go up, because I intend to see to it that the gang members and the druggies and some of the miscreants of the state of Alaska see it in their best interests to head south.

Where will you be based?

My main base of operations is going to be Anchorage. I expect to come down to Juneau probably at least once a month. I hope to visit each of the outlying offices at least once in my tenure.

The department's headquarters is in Juneau. Do you see a problem managing from Anchorage?

So far, I haven't. They've got fabulous communications facilities. I've just got to get a handle on them.

Much of your practice is in the area of family law. Have you had professional contact with the attorneys in the Department of Law that handle child-in-need-of-aid cases?

Very much. I've very much represented parents involved in the system, and in many cases that I've been involved in, the department is overreaching. The Department of Health and Social Services has been doing a lot of overreaching, getting involved in families where they shouldn't, and then not getting involved with families where there is serious abuse. That's one of the areas that I intend to look at. ...

One of the best ways to clean up the problem is a provision that if a parent defends themselves successfully against the state trying to take over their kids, that the parent gets their attorney's fees back. Many parents can't afford to litigate against the full power of the state. There ought to be some kind of even ground there.

In 2003 Attorney General Renkes overturned 27 years of precedent, instructing officials at the Alaska Permanent Fund Corp. to start charging investment losses to the fund principal. I'm not asking you to respond on that particular issue, but as a general matter, what happens if you look at the department's position on an issue and decide you don't agree with it?

Then we'll probably issue a new opinion again. I'm not afraid to do that.

It's important, though, to look at precedent, and understand that people rely on precedent. ... You can't just change the law willy-nilly.

One of your charges from the governor is to protect the state's sovereignty. Does that include further challenges against federal law providing for a rural subsistence preference?

I'm not against subsistence or subsistence preference. I'm against any attempts to modify the Alaska Constitution, which says the resources belong to all the people. Now that doesn't mean you couldn't make a preference for subsistence, even under the Constitution, because subsistence is really something almost unique for Alaska. ...

I'm in favor of managing our resources so there's enough resources for everybody. When my Mom invited people to come for dinner and she made a pie, and we had more people come than we expected, she didn't say, some people get pie and some don't. She didn't say we're going to make everybody have a little piece of pie. She'd make another pie. That's what proper management of fish and game resources are, it's making another pie. ...

The next thing is I'd like to see our resources get back under management of the state of Alaska. We're the only state that the federal government manages our fish and game resources [on federal land]. It's my understanding that there is a bill introduced this year to have us take another look at that. If the Legislature decides that we want to regain, and we can afford to regain management of fish and game on federal lands, it will be the attorney general's job to go after it. ...

If the Legislature and governor direct me to do [that] I'll be happy, ... but Lord knows, there's enough work here on my desk in the first week that I'm not going to be some knight errant, roaming about the countryside looking at windmills to tilt at.

What's the biggest challenge facing you in that pile of work?

Learning how to work the computer. ...

When I started work in Alaska, my first job was with the Department of Law. That was in 1968. We had about 30 attorneys that did all the work for the state of Alaska. Now we have 300. It either means that maybe the new guys aren't doing as good a job as we did 40 years ago, or there's more laws.

What kind of cases did you handle in 1968, working as an assistant AG?

I handled fish and game cases, sunken vessels, setting adoptions aside, I handled just about everything. But the issues we faced then were nowhere near as complex as cases we face now.

What's the biggest organization for which you've had executive responsibility?

I've been a director of the NRA ... Other than that, I've managed a small law firm.

Balash: same job, bigger salary

Joe Balash, former special assistant to Gov. Sarah Palin, transferred on February 17 to the Department of Natural Resources, but in practical terms nothing has changed, Balash said. Asked if his job is any different since he transferred, he said Friday:

"Not that I've been able to tell. My keycards work in all the same places, I go to the same staff meetings, I still have my assistant."

One thing that did change is Balash's pay, which went from $95,640 annually to $125,000, an increase of 31 percent. The new position is a Range 26M with a salary override. Balash explained:

"I had an opportunity to go to the private sector and the governor asked me to stay. I did not require that the state meet the offer dollar-for-dollar, but I needed to see an increase in compensation to stay in state service." Balash confirmed that the offer was with Enstar, an Anchorage-based privately-owned public utility seeking to build an in-state natural gas pipeline.

Revenue Commissioner Pat Galvin attested to Balash's value: "Within the gas line team, Joe's value is recognized, and DNR stepped in to say we'll provide a position and we have the funds to pay Joe's salary. Between what he has done for DNR and the Department of Revenue, we've sort of shared his services."

Asked about his new title, "intergovernmental coordinator," Balash said, "Somebody made it up for me."

"I'm basically detailed to the governor," he added. "My understanding is this has happened before."

Balash has kept a low profile about the transfer. He responded to an e-mail query from a reporter in March asking if he'd transferred to DNR to coordinate in-state gas efforts with three words: "Just a rumor." As late as last week, Balash introduced himself for the record to the Senate Energy Committee as "a special staff assistant to Governor Palin for energy and resource issues."

Linda Perez, administrative services director for the Governor's Office, said there is no formal agreement between DNR and the governor's office concerning Balash:

"I understand that in his DNR position Joe works on REGA [Railbelt Energy Grid Authority], now known as GRETC [Greater Railbelt Energy and Transmission Corporation], energy issues and in-state gas. He is continuing to assist the Governor's Office on some key energy issues for the rest of the session. There is no agreement or [reimbursable services agreement] between the Governor's Office and DNR for Joe. We formally transferred positions and funding we received for the AGIA bill to DNR and I assume they are using one of the positions and some of the funding for Joe."

It appears somebody created not only a new title but an entire job class for Balash. According to Personnel Director Nicki Neal, there is only one person in Balash's job class, which is called "intergovernmental coordinator."

State personnel laws provide strict hiring rules and salary limitations, but governors past and present have used an obscure provision in the personnel act to bypass such rules. AS 35.25.110(9) allows special exempt positions to be created for "persons employed in a professional capacity to make a temporary or special inquiry, study or examination as authorized by the governor." [See Four years as a temp, ALASKA BUDGET REPORT, March 8, 2007.]

Art Chance, a former personnel director under Gov. Frank Murkowski, questioned whether Balash's duties qualified for the special exemption, but he added that Knowles and Murkowski availed themselves of the loophole as well. "It's the way to free friends of political figures from the surly bonds of the state Personnel Act and the state pay plan."

Correction

On page 13 of last week's issue we reversed the figures in our description of an operating budget amendment correcting an earlier amendment. The Senate floor amendment by Senate Finance Co-chair Lyman Hoffman increased from $450,000 to $450 million the amount of money to be transferred from the oil and gas tax credit fund to the general fund.

Wayne Anthony Ross Named Attorney General March 26, 2009, Anchorage, Alaska – Governor Sarah Palin today announced the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General. Ross, currently in private practice, will fill the vacancy created last month by the resignation of Attorney General Talis Colberg. The governor thanked Acting Attorney General Rick Svobodny for his support and counsel during this transition. Svobodny will resume his position as Deputy Attorney General for the Criminal Division. "Wayne Anthony Ross will be a great defender of Alaska and the people he serves," Governor Palin said. "With his vast legal knowledge, experience and integrity, he will make an exceptional Attorney General. I recognize the sacrifices our public servants make for Alaska and her people, and I am honored that Wayne is willing to make those sacrifices for the greater good." Ross received his Bachelor of Science and Doctor of Law degrees from Marquette University. He has been president of Ross & Miner, P.C. in Anchorage since 1977. "Theodore Roosevelt once said 'Aggressive fighting for the right is the noblest sport the world affords' – I subscribe to that philosophy," Ross said. "I sincerely appreciate the confidence placed in me by Governor Sarah Palin in choosing me to be our new Attorney General. I welcome the chance to now represent the best interests of our beloved state and its citizens. I look forward to working with Governor Palin and the Legislature in the good fight to help our state achieve its full potential." As Attorney General, Ross will work with the governor on issues surrounding development of Alaska's rich natural resources as the state continues its efforts to provide energy security for America and lower energy costs for Alaskans. As Attorney General, Ross also will help the governor protect Alaskans' right to bear arms, and he will work tirelessly to manage Alaska's fish and game resources for abundance through science and not politics. Governor Palin added, "Now more than ever, it is essential that Alaska's sovereignty be protected, that there is unity in Alaska, and that we all stand together to see Alaska's potential fulfilled with energy security contributions to ourselves and the nation, while protecting the Constitution." Ross is no stranger to public service. More than forty years ago, Ross began his distinguished career as Assistant Attorney General for the State of Alaska, and then as Court Trustee and Standing Master for Family Court. He ran for governor in 2002 in the Republican primary against then-U.S. Senator Frank Murkowski. Ross is also an educator, having taught several semesters at the University of Alaska Anchorage.

"I feel I have a good relationship with the good Lord (but) if I could overturn Roe vs. Wade, I figure I got my ticket, " he said.

HERO OF HIS OWN LIFE Like David Copperfield, Ross is determined to be the hero of his own life, painting his public portrait in extremes and reveling in the reaction. His personalized "WAR" license plate is instantly recognizable; directions to his home include reference to a drawbridge and "the moat, " neither of which is strictly true. (The moat is a slight ground depression encircling the house.) He admires the legend of Teddy Roosevelt and has been accused of cultivating a slight physical resemblance to the dead president.

He plays these games to advance causes he believes in, but also because it's his nature to be a showman. He enjoys confounding people and loves being the center of attention.

Take for example his dealings with attorney Allison Mendel. Ross and Mendel both do a lot of family-squabble law -- divorce, child custody, missed support payments, kids in trouble. She says he represents "the boy's point of view." Ross doesn't agree.

"He's arrogant and opinionated, " Mendel said. "He shows up (in court) with his cowboy boots and cowboy hat and doesn't stand up when the judge comes in. . . . He has a very definite view of the world."

During a fight several years ago over gay rights, Mendel helped organize Anchorage lawyers in support of an anti- discrimination ordinance. Ross wrote a nasty letter to the Bar Association newsletter, using words like "immoral, " "perversion" and "degenerates." The language went way beyond reasonable disagreement, Mendel and others said.

But months later, when Mendel found herself crosswise with a judge and facing a possible jail term for contempt, Ross publicly supported her and even sent a small check for her defense fund.

"He takes principled positions, " Mendel said, somewhat grudgingly. "I'd rather deal with him than someone who views it all as a shell game."

MAN OF 'INTEGRITY' People asked to summarize Ross's character almost always mention "integrity." He puts his time, which for a lawyer is the same as money, where his mouth is, said Pam Sigfried, an anti-abortion activist. He's been a free lawyer for anti-abortion activists for 23 years and, according to Sigfried, once took a trespass case all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court "for the price of the paper."

There's more to it than causes. For 25 years Ross has been the Anchorage version of a small-town family lawyer, banking a lot of goodwill with people who think "the system" is stacked against the little guy. His friend Close is an aircraft maintenance supervisor for the Air Force and a fellow gun collector. Years ago Ross represented Close in a successful battle with the state over whether his rebuilt pickup truck legally qualified for personalized license plates. The case won't make a splash in legal journals, but it mattered a great deal to Close, who remembers it as "Wayne and Rex taking on Goliath."

"I would do anything for that guy and his family, " Close said.

Judicial selection:

Anonymous hate mail should not be permitted

By Wayne Anthony Ross

I recently underwent the experience of applying for the vacant position on the Alaska Supreme Court caused by Justice Bryner's retirement.

The Application for Judicial Appointment consists of a 20-page questionnaire which asks for complete information about the applicant. The only thing I noticed missing was a question about my shoe size. It took several days to get together all the information requested by that questionnaire.

The Alaska Judicial Council is the state board charged with reviewing the applicants for judicial positions, and then recommending and forwarding several names to the Governor who then fills the vacancy from the recommended list. As part of its review, the Judicial Council surveys the members of the Alaska Bar Association.

Once the Bar survey is completed, the applicant receives a copy of the draft results of that survey. Included in those results are comments made about the applicant by members of the Bar, without attribution. I got my copy several weeks ago. I found it very interesting.

Initially, while deciding whether or not to apply, two matters concerned me and caused me to think long and hard before submitting my application: the Bar survey and the Judicial Council itself. Having practiced law in this state in one capacity or another for almost four decades, I anticipated that there would be a number of fellow members of the Alaska Bar who would relish the opportunity to, perhaps, settle old scores by trashing me in the survey. One cannot practice in our system of justice in the private sector without creating hard feelings from time to time because that system is generally geared to someone winning and someone losing.

One cannot practice in our system of justice in the private sector without creating hard feelings from time to time because that system is generally geared to someone winning and someone losing.

Unfortunately, over the years, when I took a position that differed from another attorney's position, sometimes that other attorney took offense. While I try not to make enemies, the often harsh realities of litigation are not designed to readily create long-standing friendships between adversaries.

The positive comments made about my candidacy were gratifying and much appreciated. The negative comments were not.

The negative comments ranged from perceptive through vicious, from fallacious to outrageous.

A sample of these negative comments include the following:

"...(A) likeable man who probably should not be on the Supreme Court."

"...(He has) deluded himself into believing (that he is Teddy Roosevelt)."

"...(M)yopic in his approach to the law... A terrible candidate."

"...(T)akes positions that aren't just unpopular, they are irresponsible."

"...(I)rrational and ...extremely arrogant..."

"...Briefs of his were borderline incompetent... (I have heard he once try {sic} to break up a rowdy party near his house by firing a shotgun in the air...).

"...(U)nreasonable, unnecessarily flamboyant, misrepresents and distorts the law on issues...(Would make the Supreme Court) a laughing stock..."

"...(He) purchased an automatic weapon for his five year old daughter or granddaughter for Christmas..."

"He doesn't understand the rules of evidence."

"Gun nut; loose cannon."

"...(H)e is basically a boor."

"An arrogant, obnoxious, unscrupulous buffoon..."

"A relic with respect to gender..."

All of the people I have spoken to, who have submitted judicial applications in the past, have reported receiving similar anonymous nasty comments...

If it is possible to enjoy negative comments about oneself, the best negative comment was "If there is a God she would not let this happen." Now, at least the person who wrote that comment had a sense of humor that I can understand. Most of the negative comments were, however, simply mean-spirted and scurrilous.

All of the people I have spoken to, who have submitted judicial applications in the past, have reported receiving similar anonymous nasty comments to varying degrees from some fellow members of the Bar. So, as I said, I felt concern about applying and going through a process simply some fellow members of the Bar. So, as I said, I felt concern about applying and going through a process simply to allow myself to be trashed in a Bar survey.

The second concern that I had was the Judicial Council itself. The Council is currently perceived by a large portion of the public as unwilling to forward to the Governor the name of any conservative candidate for consideration to a judicial appointment.

Having now gone through the process, I can say that, in my opinion, both of my concerns were justified.

The Bar survey proved to me that I have a lot of friends, for which I am grateful. It also proved that there are a number of attorneys with a vicious streak that causes them to attack someone by anonymously striking from the shadows. I won't call these folks enemies because I don't believe in having enemies. I'll just call them people who don't like me as much as I would want them to. But strike they did, and I wanted the Bar Rag readers to know how nasty and fallacious some of the comments were.

And as for my concern that the Judicial Council simply does not submit the name of conservatives for appointment to the judiciary, in view of the names submitted to the Governor, that concern continues to be apparently viable.

The best part of the process was the interview I had with members of the Judicial Council. The Council members were charming, the interview was enjoyable and I had fun with the give and take that took place.

All in all, however, the current process we have for picking our judges in Alaska lacks civility, at least from some members of our Bar and such members need to look deep in their heart about whether they are really helping, or actually hurting, our process of judicial selection.

roponents of abortion are doomed to lose

From the arena

By Wayne Ross

Few issues in America have arked as much debate as the ue involving abortion.

In 1973, the United States Su- eme Court, in a well-known de- ion called Roe v. Wade, in ef- ct legalized abortions through- t the United States.

Now 16 years later, that issue once more before the Supreme urt, and speculation is that e v. Wade may be overturned.

Proponents of abortion fear, ey say, "the loss of a woman's ht to control her own body" if ortions are again made illegal.

Opponents of abortion speak out the violation of the rights the unborn child if abortions e allowed to continue. The ue is one devoid of any possi- ity of compromise.

An examination of the issue d its debaters shows, however, at eventually abortions will ce again be declared illegal. his is so because, like the abor- nists of a century ago, the op- nents of abortion will never st until Roe v. Wade is over- rned. They will not rest be- use abortion foes believe that very abortion kills an innocent man life. Thus Right-to-Lifers e the issue as more than a legal ue, and more than a constitu- nal issue. They see it as a life death issue.

Proponents of abortion see the ue as a constitutional one. A nstitutional issue cannot possibly generate the fervor of a life and death issue. The proponents of abortion are therefore eventually doomed to lose, overwhelmed by the fervor of abortion foes.

This gradual turn of the tide against abortion is quite evident in Alaska.

Alaska legalized abortion in 1971 or 1972. Immediately a group called Alaska Right-to-Life was formed. The group has battled against abortion ever since. They are gradually winning.

In the mid-1970s the Catholic church was almost alone in preaching against abortion. Now most major religions publicly oppose abortions also.

In the late '70s, four pro-life activists chained themselves to abortion equipment at Humana Hospital in an effort to stop the abortions being performed there. They were convicted of trespassing, and appealed their case all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which declined to hear it. Now, however, almost 10 years later, Humana Hospital has declared it will no longer perform abortions.

Several years ago, after receiving complaints about the graphic depictions of aborted babies on a Right-to-Life booth at the state fair, the fair sued Right-to-Life seeking to have them evicted from the event. The pro-lifers argued freedom of speech and when the dust cleared from the courtroom, the fair paid Alaska Right-to-Life some $15,000 in attorney's fees and guaranteed them a booth at all future fairs.

Several years ago two Alaskan doctdors sued Alaska Right-to-Life over comments made about the doctors by the anti-abortionists to the governor and in their newsletter. After a seven-year legal battle that achieved national attention, all the doctors' complaints were dismissed and they were forced to pay the pro-life forces attorney's fees in excess of $50,000. One of the doctors has given up doing abortions and left the state to teach on the East Coast.

Now, in Alaska, and elsewhere, we are seeing even more zealous anti-abortion protests. In mass demonstrations against what they view as the killing of innocent human life, anti-abortionists are picketing, passing out leaflets, and even blocking doorways of businesses performing abortions. These pro-lifers are often arrested, charged with trespass, and other criminal offenses, and yet they return, time and again, to try to stop abortions from occurring. Some clinics continue to operate but have ceased doing abortions.

Whether one agrees with the protestors or not, one must admire their courage. Certainly it is not pleasant to be arrested, jailed and forced to face criminal charges. A number of those arrested have refused to post bail, and of those convicted, some have refused to pay their fines, choosing jail instead. They have vowed to continue these demonstrations until abortions are no longer legal in the United States.

They may not have to demonstrate much longer. The Supreme Court decision on this controversial topic is expected to be released in July.

On this Mother's Day of 1989, let us hope the Supreme Court decides the issue clearly, once and for all.

egislative session was typical, some good and some bad

It seems it's becoming 'we' vs. 'they' on Alaska issues

From the arena

by Wayne Anthony Ross

When I first came to Alaska that Centennial Purchase Year, 20 years ago, I was impressed by the people I met. They were Alaskans and proud of it.

There didn't seem to be the divisiveness that exists today. Maybe my memory has failed me over these many years, but it seems to me that important decisions were made on the basis of what was best for Alaska. Oh, there were differences of opinion, sure. But any differences of opinion were caused by differing viewpoints on what was best for Alaska. All parties agreed that their goal was what was best for the state. Sometimes, however, we differed on how best to achieve that goal.

A year or two after my arrival a friend, Ken Quade, from Pemberine, Wisconsin came for dinner. Ken had come to Alaska every year since the early 50s. Around 1960 he had walked from Seward to Fairbanks along the Alaska Railroad tracks. He had seen it all. "Alaska is changing," he said.

I disagreed. "You are the one who is changing Ken, not Alaska. You are just getting old."

We spent the evening discussing it. He didn't convince me. I didn't convince him.

Unfortunately, Ken Quade was right. Alaska and Alaskans are changing. Instead of advocating what was best for Alaska, more and more people seemed to be advocating what was best for themselves and the special interest groups they belonged to.

My first realization of this growing divisiveness came during the debate on the building of the Alaska pipeline. No reasonable, rational mind could argue that the discovery of oil on the North Slope wasn't a real break for Alaska. But how to get it to market? The only feasible method was a pipeline which would boost the economy and provide numerous jobs for Alaskans.

Every real Alaskan has a love of the out-of-doors. That love of wilderness (with a small w) is the reason we chose to live here. Instead of working, however, with other Alaskans who loved the land, to get the pipeline built while still ensuring that the environment would be protected, environmental groups did everything they could to prevent this project from being accomplished. As a result of lawsuits, legislative maneuvering and other roadblocks put up by environmentalists, the pipeline was delayed and its costs increased substantially.

There is no doubt that the environmentalists' efforts resulted in a pipeline that was less damaging to the environment itself. Still, one wonders whether the pipeline could not have even been better environmentally, if the environmentalists had worked with other Alaskans, rather than against them, on this project.

Most Alaskans were pleased when Congress passed the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. Sure, some grumbled because native peoples got almost a billion dollars and 44 million acres of land, when other Alaskans (non-natives) got nothing, but upon reflection, everyone realized this legislation would, in the long run, be good for Alaska. After all, who could really complain, when other Alaskans, the native peoples of the state, got money and land from the feds. It was about time the feds gave us something!

But then another divisive issue arose. Subsistence.

Under the Constitution of Alaska, fish and wildlife resources belonged to the citizens of the state. All citizens of the state. And almost everyone who lived in Alaska hunted and fished. It was part of the Alaskan lifestyle. It differentiated Alaskans, for example, from citizens from much of the rest of the country. We fed our families from the abundant wildlife resources this state had to offer. We also had fun doing it.

Suddenly, however, we had some Alaskans saying that they had more rights to fish and wildlife than the rest of us. And they succeeded in getting legislation passed that recognized that right. Alaskans became divided into "we," and "they." Instead of uniting to fight the federal bureaucracy that wanted to divide Alaskans on the allocation of their prized wildlife resources, some Alaskans sold out for their own advantage. "I've got mine!" became the phrase of the day.

More and more divisive issues have arisen. Now some Alaskans don't even wish to be Alaskans. Instead, they clamor for native sovereignty claiming that they want to be independent from other Alaskans, and even from other U.S. citizens.

What has happened to the pride that we once felt just by being an Alaskan, united with our fellow Alaskans to enjoy a unique lifestyle and heritage here on the Great Land, on our Last Frontier?

Is it gone forever? I hope not, for my sake. For my children's sake. For the sake of the Alaska I remember from years past.

We need to regain our pride. We need to stop fighting amongst ourselves. We need to remember we are all Alaskans.

Otherwise we might just as well live in Cleveland.

Average citizen finds legal system inaccessible

From the arena

By Wayne Ross

The American legal system is becoming inaccessible to the average citizen.

With minor exceptions, court proceedings consist of two major types, civil cases and criminal cases. In civil cases, one party sues another seeking either a court decision on a disputed matter or money damages for harm caused by the other person. In criminal cases, the government, be it federal, state, or local, files charges against someone, accusing him or her of violating a criminal law. Criminal cases seek to punish the wrongdoer, generally through fines and jail sentences. Unfortunately, they also punish the innocent.

Small cases — cases involving minor disputes — can be brought into small claims court, or in courts of limited jurisdiction such as Alaska's District Courts. Generally, in these courts, the rules and procedures are more relaxed and justice can be obtained at little expense. Indeed, most small claims cases do not even involve attorneys. The litigants square off in court, arguing the cases themselves. Attorney fees and court costs are negligible in such small court cases.

In District Court cases, attorneys are often involved. Still, costs and attorneys' fees are usually small because attorneys in these cases do not have to spend substantial time complying with numerous rules and complicated procedures. Instead, attorneys can get into court quickly, obtain a trial and decision for their clients, and wrap matters up in a relatively short period of time.

More substantial cases must be brought in courts of general jurisdiction; this is, in courts which have authority to act initially in all types of matters. In Alaska, the Superior Courts are the courts of general jurisdiction.

In serious criminal cases, it's sock-it-to-you time for average Americans accused of a crime. Indigents can receive free attorneys provided by the state. Thus, the state pays not only for the prosecution, but also for the defense. The average American, however, is not indigent. Thus, an average American who finds himself in the unfortunate position of being charged with a serious crime has to hire an attorney to defend himself or herself. Rich people can hire whatever attorney they wish. Average Americans cannot afford high-priced attorneys.

Even so, the average American often has to go substantially in debt, mortgage his or her home, and even sell property in order to pay for a proper defense. Even when he or she wins and charges are dropped, or he or she is found not guilty, the average person does not receive reimbursement from the state for the costs incurred in defending themselves. Many people face financial ruin after successfully defending themselves against a criminal case.

In certain civil cases, things are a bit better. Plaintiffs who seek money damages can often convince an attorney to take their cases on a contingent fee basis. That is, the attorney agrees to take a percentage of the money received, if the case is successful, and nothing, or a minimal fee, if the case is not successful.

Such contingent fee agreements provide access to the courts for people who otherwise would not be able to afford to go to the court and seek justice. In civil cases, people who are defendants often do not have to pay for attorneys to defend themselves, either, if they have insurance, and if the insurance covers whatever they are being sued for. In such cases, the insurance company pays for the defense.

In divorce cases, however, and cases where there is no insurance coverages, again it is sock-it-to-you time. In such cases, parties have to pay their attorneys on an hourly basis, and costs and attorneys fees can run into many thousands of dollars. Again, the average Ameican cannot afford these expenses without going substantially in debt.

In many cases, the substantial expense of litigation is not the fault of the attorney. Courts impose more and more procedural rules, ostensibly to guarantee a fair trial, and attorneys find they have to spend several years before they can get their clients into the courtroom. And, if the client then loses and wishes to appeal, the expense increases even more, with transcript costs, brief printing costs, and the additional attorney time need to process the appeal.

What is needed in order to reduce the costs of litigation is not tort reform. What is needed is procedural reform. What is needed are judges with common sense who expedite cases and get them to court quickly. What is needed are judges who do not make litigants and their attorneys jump through numerous and unnecessary procedural hoops which only increase the costs of obtaining justice. What is needed is simplification.

When our system of justice is simplified, then and only then can it really be considered "just" to the avereage American.

When it happened, the first, and most important problem, was to clean it up.

The response time of Alyeska and Exxon in acting to stop the spread of the oil was less than ideal. It became clear immediately that steps must be taken to ensure a more immediate response should another spill occur in the future.

But once Exxon got moving, it did a helluva job. Exxon rolled up its corporate financial sleeves and went to work. It hired thousands of workers and thousands of boats. It brought in every conceivable type of equipment. It paid hundreds of claims. It spent hundreds of millions of dollars. In short, Exxon did almost everything humanly possible to rectify the problem.

Why is it then, that many people, and major portions of the media, continue to cry over spilled milk?

We Alaskans, and the nation, have enjoyed the benefits of Big Oil for the last 20 years. Most of our state revenue comes from oil. Oil, however, especially the oil found in Alaska, needs to be transported from where it is found to where it can be used. In every type of human activity, there are risks. We knew the risks. Everybody knew the risks. We tried to lessen them, and then we chose to take those risks.

Unlike many other human tragedies, no one died in the Alaskan oil spill. We see almost everyday, however, the same films of what appears to be the same oil-soaked duck pulled out of the water. The state claims to have a number of refrigerated vans filled with about 30,000 carcasses of waterfowl killed by oil. No doubt some of these birds were casulaties of oil. But had several thousand people combed Prince William Sound for dead waterfowl during any prior summer, as they did in the summer of 1988, there is no doubt that an equal number of dead birds could have been accumulated. With the millions of birds that travel through Prince William Sound each year, natural attrition would account for tens of thousands of birds each summer. After all, birds don't live forever.

The loss of eagles, in particular, and sea otters seems to be better documented, and, because of the way we humans view things, more lamentable. But after the accident occurred, everything humanly possible was done to save marine and bird life.

Last week I ran into an attorney from "Outside" who had come to Alaska to represent clients damaged by the oil spill. He had signed up a number of them earlier in the summer, but now was lamenting the loss of many of these clients. "Exxon has paid off so many of my clients' claims," he said, "that most of them aren't interested in suing anymore." Somehow, I couldn't feel sorry for him.

An admiral from the Coast Guard told me that if an oil spill had to occur, it was a good think it happened to Exxon. "They were the best entity around to handle the problem," he said. The state and the Coast Guard had too many bureaucratic procedures that would have had to be followed, to handle the oil spill properly. "The state and the Coast Guard could not have gotten the job done as well as Exxon did. Exxon had the financial resources to handle the job."

We cannot let Exxon off the hook. We cannot stop trying to ensure that another such spill never occurs again. We cannot quit trying to restore Prince William Sound to what it once was. But we can, and should, give Exxon an "A" for its initial effort in cleaning up after its oil spill. And let's quit crying about it!

Equality for women still has considerable distance to go

By Wayne Ross

Recently Sen. Arliss Sturgelewski and I participated in a celebration of the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution in Homer, Alaska. We both spoke, first at the Homer High School, and later at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon.

Now Arliss and I don't agree on every issue. I tell her that she's right on most issues and that she's only wrong on the ones on which we disagree. But she's a good speaker and displays a warm, good humor that I've always enjoyed.

When she started speaking about womens' rights, I figured I'd be bored. After all, every modern thinking man believes in equal rights for all — men, women, white, black, etc.

But Arliss wasn't boring. In fact, she made me reflect on the history of women during the last two hundred years, and I suddenly realized why many women are concerned with womens' rights.

We speak of the founding fathers. Why no founding mothers? At the time our Constitution was written, women had few rights. Actually, married women were considered the property of their husbands, like land, horses, slaves, and children. They could not own property. They could not vote. Abigail Adams urged her president husband to draft laws ending the absolute power that men had over their wives. Virginia's Hannah Corbin argued that, though as a widow she held title to property subject to taxation, as a woman she could not vote, and therefore she was being taxed without representation.

It was 83 years before the 15th Amendment in 1870 gave black men the right to vote but not until 1920 did the 19th Amendment make it illegal to deny the vote "on account of sex." Indeed, by the end of World War I, only 15 states had given women the right to vote in general elections!

When I was in law school only five women law students in a class of a hundred. When I started practicing law here in 1968, I knew of only three women lawyers, Mahala Dickerson, Helen Simpson and Sheila Gallagher Jones.

Now, of course, many women are studying law. Many others are practicing in this state. A number of them sit as judges here.

What happened in 60 or 70 years? What has happened in only 20 years?

During the early years of this country, women, known as suffragettes, campaigned for the women's right to vote. They were not very well liked by men and were often heckled and ridiculed. Still, they persisted and were ultimately successful.

In the last 20 years, women, referred to, at times, as women's libbers or feminists, have strongly lobbied for more equality for women. Generally, these women also are not very well liked by men. But again, they are being successful because their cause is right. Strident feminists turn me off. Perhaps it is because they act too much like we men — pushy, loud and obnoxious.

But a personable, warm, good humored woman like Arliss reached me, and made me think.

A cigarette ad proclaims: "You've come a long way, Baby," and that statement is correct. But there still is a long way to go. And people like Arliss Sturgelewski will do far more for women's rights than any of her strident sisters.

She's still wrong on a few of the issues but she takes the time

ather Boyle taught schoolboys lessons in discipline

From the arena

By Wayne Ross

Father Jerome Boyle, S.J., has been gone from this earth for many, many years. I think of him often. He was the assistant principal of Marquette University High School, an all boys Jesuit college prep high school in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. MUHS was my alma mater.

It was hard to get into MUHS. They always had far more applicants than they had classroom space for. The school had been around for over a hundred years, and it was not uncommon for three or four generations of one family to have attended MUHS.

Father Boyle carried a wooden golf club. The club's head was cut off. I think it was a driver. The handle was made of hickory and whistled as it cut through the air. We whistled when I hit it on the poster. Father Boyle's command "Assume the position," generally meant we had somehow transgressed. When commanded to assume the position, we placed our hands on our knees and bent over. Punishment would vary from one to five swats. One was enough. Five swats at a time would not be involved in the type bedsheet, for only the very of shenanigans public school kids was reserved for students involved in. Father Boyle worst behaviors. If a student got, kept us on the straight and nar- was held in row. Our folks liked that at the awe by fellow students for a time. We all appreciated it in least a day, when I attended my high later life.

When I attended my 35th year reunion at my alma mater, Marquette University High School, I was asked to speak briefly about Father Boyle. I told the assembled group that I had always had a special fondness for Father Boyle because he was the only teacher who physically disciplined me. I told them that I had been a student in his homeroom for my freshman year and that I had been a pretty good student. I was not a behavior problem. I was not a discipline problem. I was not a problem. I was a student who was trying to do well in school.

Father Boyle was the most feared teacher in the school. His reputation preceded him. Everyone knew that Father Boyle was the disciplinarian. Everyone knew that Father Boyle would paddle you if you got sent to his office. Everyone knew that Father Boyle would paddle you if you got sent to his office twice.

I got sent to his office twice. The first time was for talking in study hall. The second time was for talking in study hall. I was not a troublemaker. I was not a bad kid. I was not a kid who was looking for trouble. I was a kid who was trying to do well in school

Family unit suffers from bureaucratic maze

From the arena

By Wayne Ross

The Alaska Division of Family and Youth Services, also known as the "Welfare" Department has a frightening group of social workers who regularly remove Alaskan children from their homes, over the objections of their parents, and, on many occasions, the children never return home again. They are aided in these endeavors by state assistant attorneys general and by several employees of the Office of Public Advocacy who are "appointed" by the courts as Guardian Ad Litem to "represent" the children.

When these people get together they are all too eager to believe the worst about men and fathers.

The ritual begins generally like this. Someone makes a complaint to the Welfare Department. These reports are privileged under the state law. They can be anonymous. The person making the report is immune from suit for making the report. Sometimes these reports are genuine and abuse has occurred. Other times the reports are made by overly concerned busybodies who wrongfully interpret what they see, or are malicious actions by people who want to break up family relationships.

The child is then contacted at school by the Welfare Department and interrogated without the knowledge or consent of the parents. If the social workers don't like what the child tells them, the child is not allowed to go home but is removed from school and put in a foster home. The parents then receive a call advising that their child has been taken into custody, that there will be a court hearing and that the parents can appear at that time to find out what is going on.

If the child is of less than school age, a social worker appears on the doorstep with several police officers and takes the child from the parents, telling them about the court hearing.

The court hearing is generally held 48 hours later. In the meantime, the social workers file a petition charging that the child needs state help, claiming somehow that the parents are at fault. Meantime, the social workers interview the child further and let others, including the police, interview the child. Many of these interviews are more brainwashing of the child than interviewing, the interviewer doing his/her best to convince the child that something bad has happened to them.

The first hearing is a "probable cause hearing" at which the court must decide whether there is cause to believe that the child needs state assistance. The social worker is allowed to testify as to what the child allegedly told her. Under normal rules of court, testifying what someone else said is hearsay evidence and not allowed. Normal rules of evidence don't apply in these types of cases, however. Generally the parents aren't even allowed to testify. The court then takes the easy way out. It doesn't want to take a chance that the child may really be abused so it places the child in the custody of the state while the state investigates the matter further. It restricts the parents' access to the child to tell the truth. Sometimes the child is ordered into counseling where other "professionals" convince the child that he or she actually is abused. The Welfare Department takes its own sweet time in investigating the matter. Months and months pass without the child returning home. Often the child is put in a foster home where the rules are less strict than in the parents' home. The child grows to like the less strict atmosphere and the power it feels over its parents. In such cases, the child never does return home.

In other cases, this group makes an offer to the child's mother. They will allow the child to return home if the father is not there. This forces the mother to choose between her husband and her child. Often the husband comes out second and is forced to find other lodging.

Although federal law requires the Welfare Department to look for other alternatives before removing a child from his home, and state law requires the department to work towards reuniting familes, this is seldom done. Instead, these people work together to destroy family unity.

It is clear from their actions that this group of people doesn't like the family unit, and likes men even less.

God help you if your child falls into their clutches.

OPINION

Chastity, adultery relegated to Dark Ages

Wayne Anthony Ross

I must have been raised in the Dark Ages.

Neither my father nor my mother ever gave me a talk about the "birds and the bees." Sex was something that wasn't talked about in our home. My parents left it up to the nuns in my grade school and the Jesuit fathers at my high school to educate me in the area of sex. But when I announced that I was intending to ask a girl out for what would be my first real date, my father sat me down and explained the facts of life to me, in his own way.

"The most important possessions that we parents have," my father said, "is our children. To a mother or father, a child is more important than life itself. I want you to realize that. When your date's mother and father let her go out with you, they are entrusting you with their most important possession. You have a duty to live up to their trust, and never make them sorry that they allowed their daughter to go out with you. It is a compliment to you that they would allow their daughter to go out with you on a date. You have to realize that and act accordingly. You must protect that girl from harm. You must see to it that others treat her properly and with respect, and you must see to it that you also treat her properly and with respect. Don't ever let me hear that you have treated any young lady entrusted to your care in an improper manner."

That was Dad's version of the facts of life. I knew what he was saying, and he knew I knew what he was saying.

The Jesuit priests said it in a different way, but they meant the same thing. They gave us guys a book called "Modern Youth and Chastity" to read. They made sure we read the book by having a surprise quiz now and then.

It was quite simple really. God had given us certain Commandments, which we were to abide by. One of these, the Sixth Commandment, "Thou shall not commit adultery," was pretty direct. The Jesuits made sure we knew that the Sixth Commandment also prohibited fornication, and that if we violated any of God's Commandments, He was not going to be very happy with us. Bad things could, and would happen. We could catch VD. We could get someone pregnant. We might even end up in Hell.

When I think of it now, I suppose I behaved myself not only because I didn't want to offend God, but also because I didn't want to offend my father. Dad had laid a heavy responsibility on me, the responsibility for treating someone else's daughter with respect and in a proper manner. And I didn't want to demonstrate, either to my Dad or to myself, that I was not up to the task.

The Jesuit fathers also laid a heavy responsibility on us. We all have a soul, they pointed out. That soul was created for the purpose of eventually enjoying eternal life in Heaven with God. We had a duty to ensure that our soul made it to Heaven by acting properly. We also had to look after our fellow human beings and do nothing to cause their eternal damnation. If we caused another person to lose their place in Heaven, by leading them astray, we could suffer the loss of our soul as well.

The Jesuits made sure we knew that the Sixth Commandment prohibited fornication, and that if we violated any of God's Commandments, He was not going to be very happy with us. Bad things could, and would happen. We could catch VD. We could get someone pregnant.

What we were being taught, of course, was responsibility. We were being shown that we were responsible for our own actions, and would face unpleasant consequences if we didn't act properly. But more than that, we were also responsible for the actions of others who might be influenced by us. Our duty was to influence others in a proper manner, and try to avoid causing them to harm themselves by acting improperly.

The Dark Ages are gone. In this Age of Enlightenment, parents now allow their children to go to school wearing condoms on their clothing as some sort of badge promoting "safe sex." The protection of one's soul seems to be of little concern to students, or to their parents, and the protection of another's soul even less so. Chastity is a word seldom heard, and the very mention of God is almost prohibited in our halls of learning.

I'm glad I was raised in the Dark Ages.

Defending the guilty: Our judicial system at its very

From the arena

by Wayne Anthony Ross

A question often asked of attorneys is, "How can you represent a person when you know he is guilty?"

To an attorney who believes in the American judicial system, the answer is, of course, "It's easy."

Under our system of laws, the accused is presumed innocent. As English jurist Baron George Bramwell once said: "A man's rights are to be determined by the Court, not by his attorney ..."

The Earl of Birkenhead, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain said: "The bar as a profession offers its services to all litigants. Counsel supports his client's case within the limits prescribed by personal and professional honour. He (the attorney) is not the judge to decide the merits; his function is to present his client's case ...

"If counsel usurps the duties of the judge (or jury), then two results follow. First, men are deprived of that legal assistance to which they are entitled. Secondly, the fact that counsel is known only to accept cases in which he personally believes may work injustice to those to whom he refuses."

Baron Thomas Erskine, another Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, argued: "If the (attorney) refuses to defend, from what he may think of the charge or of the defense, he assumes the character of the judge; nay, he assumes it before the hour of judgment, and in proportion to his rank and reputation, puts the heavy influence of perhaps a mistaken opinion into the scale against the accused."

Thus, in order to protect our system of justice, attorneys must sometimes represent those they know are guilty, simply to ensure that the system works fairly for all. By representing a guilty person, a lawyer insures the health of the judicial system and helps guarantee protection of the rights of all citizens — innocent or guilty — who become involved with that system.

Theoretically, of course, if the prosecutor, the defense attorney, the judge and/or the jury all do their jobs, the result should be truth and justice, i.e., a just decision.

In actuality, on account of the imperfections inherent in human nature, perfect truth and justice are not always attained in our system. Therefore, we read in the papers from time to time about unjust decisions which cause innocent men to be imprisoned for years or criminals to go free.

We must keep in mind, however, that literally thousands of just decisions are rendered by American judges and juries every day. Those few injustices we read about in the papers are written about simply because they are so unusual.

Our system, simply put, dispenses more real justice than any other judicial system in the world — principally because it recognizes and respects the rights of the individual, including the right to have an independent attorney to represent that individual at all stages of the proceeding.

It is easier for an attorney to represent a guilty client than an innocent one. When the guilty client is convicted, the attorney knows the client got a fair trial, his rights were protected and justice was served.

When a guilty client is not convicted, the attorney knows he has still done his job, alone against the full power and personnel of the state, and achieved a victory for his client against all odds.

Even with a "not guilty" verdict, no guilty person brought before the bar of justice ever escapes scot free. Generally, they have been arrested, their case has been publicized, they have had to go through the uncertainties of a trial and spouse, simply to gain an advantage in a custody battle. The consequences to innocent people from such false reports can be devastating.

In Alaska, all reports are required to be investigated by the Department of Health and Social Services. The department is all too willing to believe any and all reports involving suspected sexual abuse that come to its attention.

As a result, the presumption of innocence that an accused enjoys under our criminal law seems to evaporate into thin air in sexual abuse cases. Once an allegation of sexual abuse is directed against a particular person, that person cannot avoid being hurt. Even if they are eventually cleared of such allegations, people still look at them and wonder whether or not they might be guilty of what all of us view as a horrendous crime.

When allegations of sexual abuse of a child are made against a parent, the department often removes the child from the home. This is good when the abuse has actually happened. It is devastating, however, to the parents and to the child, if the abuse hasn't happened.

The department then puts the child into the hands of a sexual abuse investigator whose job it is to try and ascertain whether or not sexual abuse occurred. In some cases, however, the investigator seems more interested in trying to show that the abuse took place than to find out the real truth.

The investigator embarks on a series of interviews with the child. These interviews are often intense and repetitive. A child, even of tender years, is no dummy. The child doesn't really want to be there, and finally realizes just what it is that the investigator wants to hear.

If a child is asked 10 or 15 times whether dad has touched her, there

> It may be years, if ever, before a child is returned home. Hundreds of families are broken up each year by such judicial expediency.

and if each time the child answers "no" the question is repeated, a child eventually realizes that "no" is the "wrong" answer. The child, not realizing the consequences, may then decide to try answering "yes" to such a question, in an attempt to put an end to the interview.

Once a child says "yes" to such a question, the child's chances of returning home any time soon are substantially diminished. The parents then find themselves facing the loss of their child and even criminal charges, as a result of their own child's statements.

Even if a child recants and later says that the event never occurred, many investigators seem unwilling to believe that the incident of abuse did not happen.

Often, too, the interviews with the child are not recorded. A reviewing body, such as a court, thus has no way of telling whether the child's statements were spontaneous, or were the result of conscious or unconscious "coaching" by the investigator.

The department, and the court, often accept the investigator's report of what happened as "gospel" because they have no way to prove otherwise. Well-meaning judges, in an effort to protect a child, are simply unwilling to return the child to a possibly abusive home, and all too prone to put the child in a state foster home placement. It may be years, if ever, before a child is returned home. Hundreds of families are broken up each year by such judicial expediency.

Until methods for ascertaining sexual abuse improve and are implemented, our system may be hurting more children in the long run than it is protecting.

Runaway children: Solving the problem before it's too late

From the arena

by Wayne Anthony Ross

Recent reports indicate that Alaska has a substantial problem with children who run away from home. Sources estimate that there are more than 3,500 children in Anchorage alone who are classified as runaways.

Many people believe that children run away from home because they find conditions in their homes so intolerable that they would rather be anywhere else, even in the streets, than at home. These people point to the rise in the number of child abuse cases and argue that runaway children obviously are the result of abusive or neglectful parents.

Certainly some children leave home and refuse to return to their parents because of faults of the parents. Many other children, however, leave home despite the fact that they have good homes and good parents.

Children are subject to substantial peer pressure and other outside influences with which parents cannot always compete. Often a parent sees a child for only a few moments in the morning, before school and then not again until suppertime, and possibly for a few hours at most, in the evening. During the balance of the day, the average child is outside the penumbra of parental influence and subject to the influence of others whose standards of conduct and morality may be substantially different from those of the parents. When a child succumbs to those outside influences and misbehaves, that child may find it easier to remain away from home than to go home and "face the music."

Well meaning but misguided parents of friends of the child may give the child a place to stay, believing the child's "story" that Mom and Dad are abusive parents. Even more dangerous to children are "crash pads" around town that children learn about from others where they can stay for awhile, but where they often become the prey of adults who introduce them to stealing, drugs and sex.

Finally there is the questionable sanctuary provided by the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services (the welfare department) which is charged by law with dealing with runaways. Unfortunately, the welfare department lacks proper resources, funding, personnel and administration to handle the job. All too often the welfare department's appearance and subsequent interference in the family exacerbates the situation.

Some of the blame for the general increase in the numbers of runaway children must be placed on the Alaska Supreme Court and on the Alaska legislature.

Prior to 1971, a runaway could be apprehended by the police and returned home or, if the child was out of control, the child could be detained or even institutionalized in a secure facility. In 1971, the Alaska Supreme Court decided that no legal basis existed for allowing a runaway child to be incarcerated (490 P.2d 658).

Word of this decision circulated rapidly among youngsters and it is even well known today. Children tell their parents, social workers, and foster parents, "I can run away and there is nothing you can do about it." Sadly, the kids are right.

In the early 1970's, the legislature, led by former Rep. Genie Chance, revised Title 47 of the Alaska Statutes, despite testimony from then Family Court Judge Harold Butcher and others that what was proposed was detrimental to the integrity of the family. Judge Butcher was ultimately proven correct. The legislature's revisions, which exist in today's Alaska Statutes, have caused more heartache than any other legislation ever enacted in this state.

When a child is reported by his parents to the police as a runaway, under the present law, the police have no discretion. If they find the child, they must advise the child that he or she has a choice. The child can either return home or be taken to the welfare department rather than home to face an unhappy Mom and Dad. AS 47.10.142 then states

...a tiny spruce tree

...cactus found in the western deserts.

...the appropriation. It's why the legislature put the program under the Department of Administration instead of letting the bleeding hearts get it to "do good" with. When I say this, I'm thinking of the old families of Hawaii. The saying goes: "Their ancestors came to 'do good' and they did very well indeed."

The second reason that need was not a requisite part of the first legislation was simple. We wanted to keep as many of life's win-

Finally there is the questionable sanctuary provided by the decided that no legal basis existed for allowing a runaway child to be incarcerated (490 P.2d 856).

Word of this decision circulated rapidly among youngsters and it is even well known today. Children tell their parents, social workers, and foster parents, "I can run away and there is nothing you can do about it." Sadly, the kids are right.

In the early 1970's, the legislature, led by former Rep. Genie Chance, revised Title 47 of the Alaska Statutes, despite testimony from then Family Court Judge Harold Butcher and others that what was proposed was detrimental to the integrity of the family. Judge Butcher was ultimately proven correct. The legislature's revisions, which exist in today's Alaska Statutes, have caused more heartache than any other legislation ever enacted in this state.

When a child is reported by his parents to the police as a runaway under the present law, the police have no discretion. If they find the child, they must advise the child that he or she has a choice. The child can either return home or be taken to the welfare department rather than home to face an unhappy Mom and Dad. AS 47.10.142 then states the welfare department may take custody of the child after considering the wishes of the minor. Mom and Dad, anxiously waiting at home for their child, need not be even consulted.

Once a child falls into the clutches of the welfare department, it is almost impossible for the parents to get the child back. The child is often placed in a foster home or shelter with few, if any, restrictions placed on that child. The child learns to enjoy his or her new freedom and continues to refuse to return home. The child learns to manipulate the system, using it to achieve his or her desires, while punishing the parents who find themselves dragged into court by the state.

Many times the parents face allegations that they are abusive because they dared to attempt to discipline their child, or simply because the child lies after learning that the welfare personnel and the attorneys are willing to believe almost anything bad about parents.

What Alaska needs in order to solve its runaway problem is a major revision of its laws involving children. The state should only be allowed to interfere in a family's affairs when an abusive situation clearly exists. At all other times, the state should stand willing and able to back up Mom and Dad in their efforts to instill in their children proper values and behavioral standards. Only in this way can we parents ensure that when our children grow up they will be good citizens and contributing members of society.

the appropriation. It's why the legislature put the program under the Department of Administration instead of letting the bleeding hearts get it to "do good" with. When I say this, I'm thinking of the old families of Hawaii. The saying goes: "Their ancestors came to 'do good' and they did very well, indeed."

The second reason that need was not a requisite part of the first legislation was simple. We wanted to keep as many of life's winners as possible here in Alaska.

Fishing is an on and off thing, oil and timber depends on the fluctuations of international politics and world price. Of all incomes, retirement income tends to be more stable than most.

With exceptions, of course, most people over 65 are not into massing great fortunes. They spend their money either on their own comfort or on those around them. They don't cause problems with the police or their neighbors and they often have income retirement from a number of sources, be it teachers' retirement or railroad retirement as well as property amassed long years ago.

Be they rich or poor they are well worth keeping in Alaska.

: Think small

Why, then, should anyone think that last year's frogs will become this year's princes?

Several reasons. First, the normal flow of a bull market is for bonds to move first, followed by the big blue chips, followed by the second tier of large companies, followed by the broader market, followed by the absolute junk. The broader market notably lacked the enthusiasm of the big boys last year, and many think its turn is coming now. Historically, such a move, when it comes, can be enormous.

Lately, though, small growth companies have been beaten down to virtually no price-earnings premium over their larger brethren. Some historians think that alone is a "buy" signal for the little fellows — just as what they would regard as an excessive premium (say, twice as high) would be regarded by them as a "sell" signal.

Not everyone agrees, of course; otherwise, they couldn't open the market in the morning. But there is a growing sense among many top performers that if the stock market does make a sixth straight advance in 1987 it is likely to be — in every sense of the

Our liberty requires our vigilance

America has long been called the land of the free and the home of the brave. If our country is to stay that way, however, we must be constantly vigilant for unwarranted diminishment of our individual rights for the sake of public safety.

Recently, Attorney General Meese announced plans to require many Federal employees, especially those in "sensitive areas" to undergo drug screening tests. Some government agency would examine the employee's urine. If positive traces of drugs were found, counseling would be given. An employee refusing to undergo such drug screening tests could be fired.

In Anchorage, several FAA personnel are challenging these drug screening tests in court. If America is really the land of the free and the home of the brave, we may see many more people refuse such testing even though they have never used illegal drugs. These people are not sympathetic to drug abusers. Instead, they realize that for freedom to exist and thrive, we must have brave people who are willing to protest rules and regulations which result in diminishment of individual freedom simply for the claimed purpose of enhancing public safety.

In addition to fighting for individual liberty, those persons attacking the drug testing laws are fighting for their own personal integrity. Simply because these employees work in "sensitive areas," the federal government is labeling them as possible drug abusers without any basis for taking such a position.

Any real American would resent being labeled a possible drug abuser. Any real American would resent having to prove their innocence by taking and successfully passing a urine test.

If reasonable grounds exist to believe that an individual or group of individuals are using drugs and thereby endangering the rest of us, drug testing may be warranted. It is not warranted where the government is merely

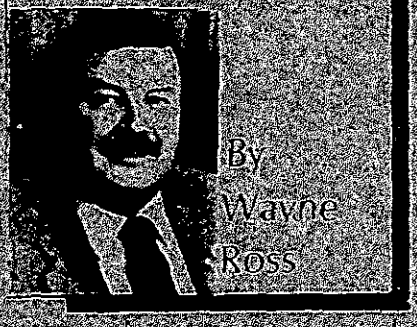
Is the justice system based on presumption of innocence?

From the arena



By Wayne Ross

Our criminal justice system operates on the principle that a person is presumed innocent of a crime. That presumption remains with a defendant unless, and until, that person is proven to have committed the crime by proof "beyond a reasonable doubt."

Unfortunately, the presumption of innocence and the requirement for proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not apply in other areas of law.

A case in point occurred recently on Elmendorf Air Force Base.

The military, like many other aspects of our society, is plagued by drug abusers. As a result, the military has enacted a program of random drug tests wherein a serviceman's urine is taken and tested for illegal drugs. If test results are positive, the serviceman faces involuntary discharge from the service. Many other government agencies, and private businesses also have such testing programs. Employees face loss of their jobs if their urine tests come out positive for illegal drugs.

image that peeks

The Elmendorf case involved a sergeant with 18 years of service to the U.S. Air Force. The man had an impeccable service record and was a family man with a loving wife and several children.

The sergeant's nightmare began last December, when he was summoned to undergo a urinalysis test. He produced a specimen. His later testimony indicated that Air Force regulations were violated. Air Force regulations require that the specimen remain in sight of the person providing the sample until the sample is properly sealed. The serviceman testified that this did not happen.

Instead, the specimen was removed by an orderly and was out of the sergeant's sight for up to 5 minutes before the sergeant left the bathroom. The sergeant did see a specimen, which he was told was his, sealed for shipment to the testing lab in Texas.

Weeks later, the sergeant was told that the test results were positive and that his urine showed traces of marijuana. The serviceman immediately had another test done at Humana Hospital. The results from this test were negative for illegal drugs.

The serviceman testified under oath that he had never knowingly used marijuana in his entire life. Over 40 people who knew him submitted statements to the effect that they had never seen the sergeant use marijuana, they did not believe he ever used marijuana, and that as long as they had known him, he had always expressed disgust with drug abusers.

The sergeant had undergone many previous drug tests without showing positive. Yet this time, test results showed traces of marijuana.

The sergeant is black. He and several of his co-workers testified that he had been subjected to racial slurs and harassment. His house had been painted with "N-I Go Home!" His tires were flattened. His car was sabotaged. Clearly, someone had been out to get him.

It is possible, of course, that when the sergeant testified he had never used marijuana, he lied. The improbability for this, however, was emphasized by the numerous people who testified Endangered Species Act. That would bring federal management of wolves to Alaska. This, in fact, is exactly what has already happened in all other states that still have wolves.

So what is the Game Board to do? Perhaps the most rational approach they could take would be to request that the Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADF&G) develop a statewide management plan for wolves. Such a plan would need to take into consideration the role of the wolf in nature, its many values to society and the need for differing management strategies depending on various land jurisdictions. Meaningful public participation would have to be provided for and as many public interests in the wolf satisfied as possible.

In the final analysis, all those who care about wildlife need to realize that the far most important issue is protection of wildlife populations and their habitats against the onslaught of an expanding civilization. By combining forces on the common ground, they can influence the outcome in a positive way. On the contrary, by remaining divided over such issues as wolf control, both the wildlife and the people who cherish them will be the eventual losers.

The sergeant is black. He and several of his co-workers testified that he had been subjected to racial slurs and harassment. His house had been painted with "N- Go Home!" His tires were flattened. His car was sabotaged. Clearly, someone had been out to get him.

It is possible, of course, that when the sergeant testified he had never used marijuana, he lied. The improbability of this, however, was emphasized by the numerous people who testified on his behalf. All indicated he was a very honest man and was known as a very truthful, religious person. It is possible, also, that the tests run in Texas were not done properly. Testimony, however, from the laboratory seemed to indicate the tests had been properly run. Only two other possibilities remain. Either the sergeant's urine sample was tampered with when it was out of his sight, or the sergeant had unknowingly consumed marijuana, perhaps by being given baked goods such as cookies or brownies laced with marijuana. Because of the long passage of time between the date the sample was given and the time the test results were announced, the sergeant could not remember eating anything unusual.

Despite the sergeant's protestations of innocence, and despite the fact that no one could testify that he knowingly used illegal drugs, the sergeant received Article 15 punishment, lost a stripe and faced dismissal from the service with resultant loss of his service pension. There apparently is no presumption of innocence in the U.S. Air Force.

The sergeant appealed, and at a recent discharge hearing, a panel of officers refused to restore his stripe, although they did recommend that he be allowed to stay in the service.

The sergeant is, of course, relieved that his military career did not come to a sudden end. He is, however, quite upset over the finding that he did abuse drugs, when he knows he did not. He intends to appeal further.

Unfortunately, cases like this happen every day, often with even more tragic results.

If you are required to undergo drug tests, have an independent test performed immediately, so you can defend yourself if the first test is performed improperly. Don't let the specimen out of your sight until it is properly sealed and marked. And don't partake of foods from anyone other than those you trust implicitly. The job you save could be your own.

Re: Letter Dated 7 April 2009 Purportedly From One Leah L. Burton

I am in receipt of a letter which purports to be from one Leah L. Burton. The letter is unsigned and I have been advised that it has been circulated to members of the Legislature. When I left my wife, Barbara, in Anchorage she cautioned me that "they are going to say bad things about you". "They will have to lie!" I responded, in an attempt to allay her fears. We have been happily married for more than forty years and like the tremendous lady she is, Barbara worries about me and doesn't like people criticizing her husband. (I thank the Lord for her every day.)

Apparently Barbara and I were both right. Not content to discuss my record, someone has now chosen to circulate this unsigned memo which is replete with totally false statements. I would call Ms. Burton a liar but, since the letter is unsigned and therefore may not have actually come from her, I will not do so. Instead, I am sending the response to you and referring to the letter, hereafter, as the "Burton" letter.

I believe I have heard of the Dads Against Discrimination and I have heard of a group known as the Alaska Family Support Group. Since I have practiced law in Anchorage in the private sector for over 35 years, I have given talks to many groups. I may have even spoken to this group although I do not recall having done so. If either group is the one I am thinking of, I had an unusual experience with one of its officers. On one occasion I received a call from a video store located on Lake Otis complaining about my "boorish behavior" to one of the store clerks. After ascertaining where and when this boorish behavior occurred, I advised the caller that I had never even been in his store. Intrigued by the caller's story, I asked if he had a videotape of the person who claimed to be Wayne Ross. It turned out that he had. I went to the store, viewed the video, and recognized the person who had claimed to the clerk that he was me. The imposter was, if I recall, one of the founders of the above referenced group.

I will leave it to your imagination as to what occurred in the "Come To Jesus" meeting I had with this fellow when I was able to track him down. To my recollection, that was the last time I ever heard of either of these groups. They avoided me and I them, thereafter.

If I recall correctly, the only time I ever addressed this group, if indeed I ever did address them, was at a Denny's restaurant on either Benson and Denali or on Dimond and the Seward Highway. To my best recollection the only time I have been in the Denny's on Benson and DeBarr was to attend meetings of the Armed Services YMCA (I served on its Board and later as its Chairman) or to provide legal training for several concealed carry classes given at that location.

I do not believe I know a Steve Strube or a John Grames. I don't recall ever hearing such names before the Burton letter.

I have never ever stated to anyone "If a guy can't rape his wife... who's he gonna rape?"

I don't talk like that!

I don't believe in that!

I totally abhor such a thought and I totally reject it!

Indeed, if I ever heard such a comment from anyone, that person would have faced a serious confrontation with me. Rape is a serious crime; it is not something to joke about; it is not something I joke about; and I have no sympathy with anyone who does. Indeed, as AG I intend to pursue rapists with the full power of my office and put them behind bars for as long a time as possible.

Nor have I ever stated "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut!"

Such an allegation that I uttered those words is outrageous! Indeed, it is almost as outrageous as the words themselves!

I confess that I am a bit old fashioned when it comes to women. My dad taught me that the greatest honor that a father could show another man was to let that man date his daughter. If a guy was granted that honor, the absolutely worst thing a guy could do was to breach the trust given to him by that father. I still believe that to this day. My wife and I learned about love-making only after we were married and we have been faithful to one another exclusively. She is my partner and I rely upon her completely.

The idea of "disciplining" a wife is outrageous! Wives are not children; they are partners (or at least should be). Any man who speaks to me about "disciplining his wife" deserves not to have one. And again, if I ever heard such a comment from anyone, that person would have faced a serious confrontation with me.

Both Barbara and I have "disciplined" our children. They have all turned out well. We are proud of them and they (all four of them) love their parents totally. Indeed, our children have turned out so well that I joke that they all take after their mother.

With regard to child support, I served as Court Trustee from 1969 to 1973. During my tenure, we developed the computerized system of collecting child support which has expanded into the Child Support Services Division with exists today. I have no patience or sympathy for any parent who fails to properly support his (or her) child.

In my practice of law when involved in divorce work, more often than not I represented the mother/wife. Ninety-five of my cases settled; only five percent went to trial. Divorces are sad situations for both spouses, and also for the attorneys who handle them. I have often said that the only reason I handled such cases is because I could go home at night to my beloved Barbara and realize how wonderful our life together is. I have always felt bad that many others cannot enjoy a marriage such as ours.

As I said above, I am old-fashioned. I take my hat off inside if a lady is present. I try to rise as often as possible when a lady enters the room. I always try to treat women like I would like my wife to be treated. Call me a dinosaur, if you will, but that is how I was raised.

I have had a good time during these conformation proceedings and I have met many interesting people. It matters not to me whether we agree or disagree on issues; what matters is that we can talk with one another and that we don't become disagreeable with one another.

The Burton letter, however, crosses the line. Now I am a bit angry! Whoever wrote that letter should be thoroughly ashamed of themselves. I do not deserve such treatment no matter how much the writer disagrees with me!

And since I am writing, let's deal with another issue. I am in receipt of a second memo dated 9 April 2009 referencing a lady who testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee on 8 April 2009.

The lady referenced my attendance at a UAA Forum in October 2005. She alleged that she heard me "argue that DV victims are liars".

I do not recall the date of such forum but I do recall attending such a forum. We were shown a movie about domestic violence. When it became my time to speak, I criticized the movie because it gave the misimpression that only men committed domestic violence on women.

I believed that I had been invited because of my years of experience in the field. I simply pointed out that men too could be victims of domestic violence. I also stated that on occasion people who sought domestic violence protective orders did so because they wanted to use the process "as a sword rather than as a shield". I said that in my experience I had seen cases in which people lied to get such protective orders and that our domestic violence system was sometimes abused.

Quite obviously the lady who attended the UAA forum heard only what she wanted to hear.

My remarks that day were accurate and based on almost four decades of experience in the field. The lady's recollection of the event, however, was not accurate.

Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Wayne Anthony Ross

I just want to be sure you have seen this following is a testimonial letter from Leah Burton. Realize as you are reading her words, she is talking about a man who would be, if Sarah Palin has her way, the Attorney General of our state; the highest law officer in the land. A man who condoned rape? WTF?

April 7, 2009

My name is Leah Burton. My father is former Commissioner of Public Safety, Richard L. Burton, who served under both Governor Hammond and Governor Hickel. I grew up in a law enforcement environment. Mr. Ross testimony today in response to Senator Hollis' questions about domestic violence and sexual assault victims enhances my testimony as to his prejudice on this very serious topic, especially given that, "Alaska rates among the top 5 states in the nation for per capita rates of domestic violence." (FBI/UCR 2007)

From 1989 through 1997 I lobbied on behalf of families and children in Alaska with regard to child support, custody, abuse, abandonment and neglect. In the course of that time my efforts put me in conflict with a group known then as the Dads Against Discrimination (DADS), and later renamed the Alaska Family Support Group.

Mr. Ross is one of the most successful attorneys in Alaska in his representation of the members of this organization and others who sought to avoid payment of child support through several means, not the least of which was to fight for custody.

In 1991, the DADS group held an area wide meeting at a Denny's Restaurant in Anchorage near DeBarr & Bragaw. I chose to go and sit in the main area of the restaurant near the opening of the meeting room where they convened so I was able to hear what they had to say and find out what plans they had for the upcoming legislative session.

At that point they still did not know what I looked like so I was able to sit there unnoticed. The meeting was well attended, Steve Strube was the head of the group at that time and another known member, John Grames (who Strube referred to as his Lt.), was also in attendance along with enough other members to fill the room. They were delighted to have Wayne Anthony Ross in attendance as a guest speaker.

Numerous comments were made that were appalling, not the least of which were remarks by Mr. Ross which included the following; "If a guy can't rape his wife... who's he gonna rape?" and "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut."

Other members made their own contributions such as, "We have the right to discipline our wives and children without the interference of government in our lives!"

These comments were greeted with laughter and affirmative responses by the group. Given the fact that they had referred to me in recent months as a "femi-nazi", the comments I was witness to at this meeting, while abhorrent, were unfortunately not surprising.

This announcement by Governor Palin is a slap in the face to all single parents who have no choice but to rely upon the State Department of Law to support court orders for child support, as well as those persons who need the Department to enforce criminal laws against sexual assault and domestic violence. Mr. Ross is the antithesis of the type of person that should be the Attorney General. This has been clearly demonstrated by his own words and actions in public.

In closing, I am not alone in my assessment that anyone who condones, and contributes to that type of hateful and harmful discourse clearly does not have the judgment necessary to represent the people of the State of Alaska as their Attorney General.

Subject: Ross Hearing

Dear Ms. Pierson:

These comments are for the House Judiciary Committee regarding Mr. Ross's Attorney General confirmation proceedings.

I listened to Leah Burton speaking on the radio about the 1991 meeting where Mr. Ross may have made the statements Ms. Burton claims she witnessed. I see no reason why Ms. Burton would make this up. She sounded very specific and credible to me. Did the meeting occur? Was Mr. Ross there?

I don't know if Ms. Burton is exclusively using her memory (she indicated there are things one never forgets and she will never forget what Mr. Ross said), or if she also took notes at the time. If she took notes and still has possession of the original notes, it may be possible to verify whether the notes are aged or new-- if paper and ink have aged since Ms. Burton wrote them, it would be extremely difficult or impossible to challenge the credibility of Ms. Burton's statements.

I hope your committee will give Ms. Burton ample time to describe the 1991 meeting (and Mr. Ross's remarks), and that Mr. Ross will have ample time to respond. Your committee may have access to experts who could help to advise them of specific questions that would help clarify credibility and who is telling the truth.

Thanks,

Sincerely,

Re: Ms. Leah L. Burton's letter dated April 7, 2009

Dear Committee Members:

For days now I have read numerous accusations against Mr. Wayne Anthony Ross, the governor's appointee for the position of Alaska's Attorney General. These accusations have seemed petty and ridiculous, and I hoped they would be given the attention they deserved. However, Ms. Burton's recent letter regarding Mr. Ross's character and beliefs was in a category of it's own.

It is my hope and belief that you want to hear the truth about Mr. Ross. To that end, I ask you to consider this letter.

For the past three years I have been employed as a paralegal in the office of Ross and Miner. During that time, we have been involved in many cases where domestic violence was an issue. Depending on the situation, I have seen Mr. Ross counsel these women to apply for domestic violence protective orders, advise them on safety measures, and tenaciously represent them in court. I have also observed Mr. Ross's frustration when a woman has chosen to dismiss her case and returned to her abuser.

I have even seen Mr. Ross in confrontations with the abusers. On one occasion office personnel were ready to call the police out of fear for Mr. Ross's safety. But I have never seen him back down when it has come to defending the rights of these women, nor have I heard him make any attempt to offer any excuse for their behavior.

If this is not enough to convince you that Ms. Burton's accusations are less than truthful, please consider my own experience with Mr. Ross. I came to Ross and Miner as a woman who had been out of the work force for many years. Not only did Mr. Ross give me a chance to prove myself, he encouraged me to grow in my profession and consistently pushed me to excel. He has not treated me according to my gender, but according to my ability.

Ms. Burton's accusations are completely contrary to the character of the man with whom I have worked for the past three years. While I am hesitant to call anyone a liar, I have no qualms about doing so in the present instance. Ms. Burton speaks of a group called "Dads Against Discrimination (DADS), and later renamed the Alaska Family Support Group" and claims that "Mr. Ross is one of the most successful attorneys in Alaska in his representation of the members of this organization and others who sought to avoid payment of child support through several means, not the least of which was to fight for custody." Yet, during the past three years, not one client has come to us claiming to be part of any such group. Indeed, I have never once heard of these organizations, if they do exist.

Nor have I ever seen Mr. Ross make any attempt to help any parent avoid paying child support. Our office holds the belief that the child's best interests are paramount, and I have seen cases turned down when the attorney felt the motivating factor in fighting for custody was to avoid paying child support.

In short, Mr. Ross is an honest, ethical man who is well qualified to fill the seat of Attorney General. Ms. Burton would do well to take a page from his rule book.

Sincerely,

Tamara Huffman

Thank you for the opportunity to give this testimony, Rep. Ramras.

I am Bob Bird, former president and current board member of Alaska Right to Life. I am a member of the Alaskan Independence Party, a former Republican and have known Mr. Wayne Ross for about 25 years.

I did note that Mr. Ross has been called "controversial" and "divisive" by Democratic and native members of the legislature.

This is utter hypocrisy. The accusations "controversial" and "divisive" are never leveled at liberal Democrats. At a time when our nation and state is being subjected to THE most divisive and controversial policies, many of which are not enacted by the legislative branch but through executive fiat and judicial decree, it is time to put an end to such absurd, whining complaints.

I noticed where a native leader expects Mr. Ross to be the attorney general of all Alaskans, but this native leader is apparently only expected to serve his own constituency, which I might add includes non-natives.

The historic McDowell case of 1989, with which Mr. Ross was intimately involved, demonstrates who is truly divisive in the matter of rural and urban subsistence. It is the federal government that has created such division and controversy. Mr. Ross was also acting in the interests of Alaska's urban natives. This has always been conveniently overlooked.

I did note that some Alaskan natives, like Senator Donny Olson, have looked upon the federal government as their protector. I would remind them of the sordid and inhumane history of the federal government towards America's natives. It is filled with broken treaties, manipulation, murder and injustice.

Such native leaders seem to have forgotten that federal interference in the states' social issues have given us Roe v. Wade. It is abortion-on-demand, given to us by the federal judiciary in an unconstitutional and illegal way, that has done more to destroy minority cultures and their future. It is this very ruling that Mr. Ross has fought with such courage and gallantry for nearly 40 years. Native leaders might want to explain to their constituencies why they have not opposed the culture of death that the federal government has pushed upon them with the same energy as has Mr. Ross.

I would also remind Alaska's native leadership that Mr. Ross has been a strong advocate for the right to keep and bear arms, a right that is under threat even as we speak from the so-called "protector", the federal government. When animal rights activists come to threaten the native subsistence lifestyle by imposing regulations on our land and seas, it will be Mr. Ross and not the justice department of Barack Obama, that will fly to their defense.

Mr. Ross is an completely transparent and honorable man. Men of his convictions make enemies. In my opinion, he has made all the right ones.

Governor Palin is a conservative, she has the right to place her type of people in office and unless

Mr. Ross were to be guilty of unethical practices of some sort, deserves to be approved.

Rep. Ramras, I thank you for this opportunity.

Dear Judiciary Committee,

We are unable to be involved in the public testimony time concerning Wayne Ross as Attorney General. We are in complete support of this appointment by Governor Palin as Mr. Ross has served us well in the interior on many Constitutional matters. It is not hard to realize he is the man for the job and he is not easily intimidated when pressured. He is a 2nd Amendment Rights advocate and is principled in every area of our lives. He works as an attorney for Individual Rights and stands firm on the Rule of Law--the Constitution.

Any of you who may have reservations do not know the backbone it takes to protect our state in matters of law but Mr. Ross will successfully do it where others will cower. You can be assured of security with him as attorney general.

Here in the Interior when our First Amendment Rights of peaceful assembly were going to be trampled, he stepped in and wrote a letter for us and gave us his phone number to let him know if it happened again. When our fair board was not going to let us have a pro-life booth even though there was a pro-abortion booth, he wrote a letter citing precedent and the case down in the Mat-su and the fair board backed off.

Most importantly, all it takes is a few good men to run the state government well and one of those needs to be Mr. Wayne Ross.

Sincerely,

Jon Ruth

26th Alaska State Legislature

Re: Ms. Leah L. Burton's letter dated April 7, 2009

Dear Legislator:

For days now I have read numerous accusations against Mr. Wayne Anthony Ross, the governor's appointee for the position of Alaska's Attorney General. These accusations have seemed petty and ridiculous, and I hoped they would be given the attention they deserved. However, Ms. Burton's recent letter regarding Mr. Ross's character and beliefs was in a category of its own.

It is my hope and belief that you want to hear the truth about Mr. Ross. To that end, I ask you to consider this letter.

For the past three years I have been employed as a paralegal in the office of Ross and Miner. During that time, we have been involved in many cases where domestic violence was an issue. Depending on the situation, I have seen Mr. Ross counsel these women to apply for domestic violence protective orders, advise them on safety measures, and tenaciously represent them in court. I have also observed Mr. Ross's frustration when a woman has chosen to dismiss her case and returned to her abuser.

I have even seen Mr. Ross in confrontations with the abusers. On one occasion office personnel were ready to call the police out of fear for Mr. Ross's safety. But I have never seen him back down when it has come to defending the rights of these women, nor have I heard him make any attempt to offer any excuse for the abuser's behavior.

If this is not enough to convince you that Ms. Burton's accusations are less than truthful, please consider my own experience with Mr. Ross. I came to Ross and Miner as a woman who had been out of the work force for many years. Not only did Mr. Ross give me a chance to prove myself, he encouraged me to grow in my profession and consistently pushed me to excel. He has not treated me according to my gender, but according to my ability.

Ms. Burton's accusations are completely contrary to the character of the man with whom I have worked for the past three years. While I am hesitant to call anyone a liar, I have no qualms about doing so in the present instance. Ms. Burton speaks of a group called "Dads Against Discrimination (DADS)... later renamed the Alaska Family Support Group" and claims that "Mr. Ross is one of the most successful attorneys in Alaska in his representation of the members of this organization and others who sought to avoid payment of child support through several means, not the least of which was to fight for custody." Yet, during the past three years, not one client has come to us claiming to be part of any such group. Indeed, I have never once heard of these organizations, if they do exist.

Nor have I ever seen Mr. Ross make any attempt to help any parent avoid paying child support. Our office holds the belief that the child's best interests are paramount, and I have seen cases turned down when the attorney felt the motivating factor in fighting for custody was to avoid paying child support.

In short, Mr. Ross is an honest, ethical man who is well qualified to fill the seat of Attorney General. Ms. Burton would do well to take a page from his rule book.

Sincerely,
Tamara Huffman

Dear Rep. Ramras,

I am writing to encourage you and all other legislators to confirm Wayne Ross as Alaska's next Attorney General. I have known Wayne personally for many years and he is a great person to fight for the Constitutional rights of All Alaskans equally. His tenacity and integrity make him the perfect choice at a time when mistrust and lack of integrity are rampant in government at all levels. I will hold any legislator who votes against Mr. Ross's confirmation accountable at election time and will use my influence to vote those legislators out of office who oppose this confirmation. Sincerely, Dr. Philip J. Klump, D.D.S.

I have been working For Mr. Ross for a year now in his Law Office as Receptionist. I also work with his wife Barb. I would like to state for the record that my experience working for them has been nothing but positive. I see nothing but respect, honor and love in the way he treats his wife. He treats all his employees and fellow Attorneys with respect and truly cares about them. As for his clients they always come out of his office grateful and pleased for what he does for them. Almost every appointment I set for new clients are people who have been referred to Mr. Ross by former or current clients. By what I have observed he and his wife are probably the most honest, ethical people I have worked for. I could NEVER imagine Mr. Ross ever saying the things Ms. Burton accuses him of either in public or private.

RE: Wayne Anthony Ross AG Confirmation – SUPPORT

On behalf of the tens of thousands of National Rifle Association members who live in the State of Alaska, I would like to register strong support for the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General.

The Right to Keep and Bear arms and the natural right of self-defense are fundamental. There are few issues of greater importance to citizens in the State of Alaska. Wayne Anthony Ross is a staunch defender of Constitutional freedom. Based on his proven dedication and passion for the Second Amendment, Alaskans can rest assured their firearm freedoms and hunting heritage will have a consistent defender in the State Attorney General's office.

The National Rifle Association has been quite surprised to hear some of the things alleged by those who have spoken out in their opposition to this confirmation. Particularly shocking are suggestions that the nominee would be weak in going after perpetrators of domestic violence. It is impossible to believe that Wayne Anthony Ross would coddle any criminals, domestic abusers or otherwise.

In closing I would just reiterate, on behalf of its members, the strong support of the National Rifle Association for the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross to the office of Attorney General for the State of Alaska.

Dear Representative Ramras:

I am writing to ask you to NOT approve Wayne Anthony Ross for the position of Alaska State Attorney General. By representing one of Sarah Palin's staff members in the "Troopergate" investigation he clearly shows his loyalty to the Governor. This loyalty precludes him from impartially serving the State of Alaska and upholding its constitution.

His declarations regarding his negative opinions of homosexuals (and more recently, his refusal to declare his stance) cause me great concern for his ability (or lack thereof) to sincerely and impartially act on behalf of, and for the benefit of ALL Alaskans, regardless of political party, religion, age, race, gender, or sexual orientation.

Mr. Ross's assertion that he can perform the job of Attorney General while keeping his personal opinions out of it is simply not believable. Our behavior is driven by our personal opinions and values, therefore I don't believe he can separate his from the job of Attorney General. His past behavior should be viewed as a predictor of future performance. As a concerned Alaskan, I feel he lacks the integrity required to do the job fairly and ethically.

Thank you for hearing my concerns.

THIS TESTIMONY WAS DELIVERED April 11, 2009 BY EMAIL OR COURIER

April 10, 2009

Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, AK 99801

Earlier this afternoon, Wayne Ross provided information as to how he evaluates people. For the record, and according to his measure, I am not a communist, I am not an anarchist, and I love Alaska. Again using Mr. Ross' words, I hope all of you will consider me courageous when I conclude my testimony before you.

My name is Barbara Bachmeier. As I am an 80% service-disabled veteran and because the VA in Anchorage does not provide the services I need, I'll be leaving soon on an extended trip to California. Today, I believe, will be my last testimony before the Alaska Legislature. I don't want to leave home, but I must. I'd certainly prefer not to give this testimony this afternoon, but I must. I flew in last night arriving at 9:30 p.m. in order to be here today. This matter is that important.

There was a time that I needed to hire an attorney in order to respond to a legal matter involving my expectation that students in Alaska's public high schools should be required to behave honorably and respectfully during the morning ritual recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance. It seems there were administrative personnel, one mother, and one student who disagreed. The mother contacted an attorney and suddenly I was in big legal trouble (civil not criminal).

Somebody suggested that I hire Wayne Ross. "You'll get your money worth from him", this person said. "He'll work hard for you". So, I met with Wayne Ross in his office and told him the facts of the case. My words and his questions took approximately ten minutes. After this, I listened to his response: rehearsed colorful stories and goofy analogies; considerable information about his successful law career; details about the successful career his son had in the US Marine Corps; his wife's excellent baking abilities; and attempted discussions about various souvenir-type items in his office. I discovered later that Mr. Ross charged me for the time he consumed with his unnecessary attempt at entertainment and his "This is my Life" monologue. My financial situation could only have been made worse if he had charged me at the "usual rate"; this experience caused me to realize that I could not afford even Mr. Ross' "military discount rate" given the way his time accounting served only to benefit him.

Either he observed my somatic clues or ran out of colorful expressions, he eventually stopped the "chit-chat", shifted gears, and presented the grand strategy he would employ in response to my legal problem. He told me he would arrange for hundreds of veterans to muster at a particular location as a "show of force" in support of my reasonable expectation for all Alaska public school students during the Pledge of Allegiance to our country.

Behaviorally, Wayne Ross carried himself as if he were a Flag Officer imposter. Perhaps sensing my response to his weird bravado, he assured me he had sufficient military clout to make such a "big deal" military formation take place. Although he did not discuss anything about the Alaska National Guard, he spoke with such effervescence that I fully expected him to propose the activation of the Alaska National Guard for a "Pass and Review" ceremony at someplace like the Anchorage Park Strip.

In Sean Cockerham's Anchorage Daily News article on April 9, 2009, Mr. Ross characterized himself as a " ... general who carries out campaigns." If I were to conduct a functional behavioral analysis of Wayne Ross (calling on my skills as a former SED special education teacher), there would be significant areas involving communications, interpersonal skills (including cheating), time management, and conflict resolution for which one would recommend intervention leading to improvement. I think Mr. Ross is less than he wants to be and makes every effort to overcompensate. During thoughts such as these and really wanting to run from his office, I focused on my need for an attorney that another veteran recommended. I stayed and wrote a check, but I should have followed my instincts.

Not long after I hired and paid Mr. Ross to serve as my attorney, perhaps when Vic Kohring realized he needed to get an attorney, Ross sent me a very brief note; I accepted it at face value although there was no signature (only initials). The quick note revealed that Wayne Ross had taken on "two serious criminal cases" and would no longer be available to help me with my case. He offered to return part of my retainer and recommended that I take my (good) case to another attorney. The problem with the alternative plan he crafted was that the returned portion of the hefty retainer caused me to have insufficient funds to hire a new attorney.

As I am a retired lieutenant colonel in military intelligence, I have seen lots of general officers. I served on military assignments from Camp Casey, Korea (within easy artillery range of North Korea) to the Pentagon. There were no officers at any rank that behaved as pompously as Wayne Ross did when we met that first time and seemingly continues to do in the present time. Wayne Ross is not the kind of individual that our state needs and deserves as her next attorney general. We need somebody who will observe his commitments, keep his word, and work for the common person like me. We need an Attorney General who will honor veterans and not take advantage of them for personal and professional glory. Using the words he chooses to connote high praise, Alaska needs an attorney general whose "word [one can take] to the bank".

Wayne Ross is not a role model for professional attorneys and Alaska does not need the "band of junkyard dog assistant attorneys general" that he would hire (according to the ADN article referenced above); he graduated in the bottom segment in his law school class; he was not selected for two judgeships for which he made application; he proudly uses "jury nullification" as a defense strategy when most other courts in the country expressly disallow it; as far as his skills, abilities, and competencies he demonstrated before me, was "smoke and mirrors"; and he does not keep his word.

In considering how Wayne Ross described Governor Palin as courageous when she took on her party only to get, initially, an unpleasant letter from the Alaska Department of Law, I ask this committee to hear my testimony and find it worthy of honest consideration. Please do not send me a "poison" letter like the rambling one sent to Leah Burton after she submitted written testimony; she is a credible journalist.

My being here this afternoon was the honorable thing to do in this matter. I may not be around to give in-person testimony to the legislature again, but I will keep up on what's happening with state government. Perhaps in the future you will hear from me in the form of my writings. I'll stay in touch.

Thank you for your consideration of my testimony. Wayne Ross called Leah Burton a liar and this is not true. It is appropriate for me to tell you that Wayne Ross absolutely lied to me. And to make matters worse, he cheated Alaskans as he cheated me.

Sincerely,

Barbara Bachmeier

Perhaps sensing my response to his weird bravado, he assured me he had sufficient military clout to make such a "big deal" military formation take place. Although he did not discuss anything about the Alaska National Guard, he spoke with such effervescence that I fully expected him to propose the activation of the Alaska National Guard for a "Pass and Review" ceremony at someplace like the Anchorage Park Strip.

In Sean Cockerham's Anchorage Daily News article on April 9, 2009, Mr. Ross characterized himself as a " ... general who carries out campaigns." If I were to conduct a functional behavioral analysis of Wayne Ross (calling on my skills as a former SED special education teacher), there would be significant areas involving communications, interpersonal skills (including cheating), time management, and conflict resolution for which one would recommend intervention leading to improvement. I think Mr. Ross is less than he wants to be and makes every effort to overcompensate. During thoughts such as these and really wanting to run from his office, I focused on my need for an attorney that another veteran recommended. I stayed and wrote a check, but I should have followed my instincts.

Not long after I hired and paid Mr. Ross to serve as my attorney, perhaps when Vic Kohring realized he needed to get an attorney, Ross sent me a very brief note; I accepted it at face value although there was no signature (only initials). The quick note revealed that Wayne Ross had taken on "two serious criminal cases" and would no longer be available to help me with my legal problem. He offered to return part of my retainer and recommended that I hire a different attorney to handle my good case. The problem with the alternative plan he crafted was that the returned portion of the hefty retainer caused me to have insufficient funds to hire a new attorney.

As I am a retired lieutenant colonel in military intelligence, I have seen lots of general officers. I served on military assignments from Camp Casey, Korea (within easy artillery range of North Korea) to the Pentagon. There were no officers at any rank who behaved as pompously as Wayne Ross did when we met that first time, and seemingly continues to behave in the present. Wayne Ross is not the kind of individual that our state needs and deserves as her next attorney general. We need somebody who will observe his commitments, keep his word, and work for the common person, like me. We need an Attorney General who will honor veterans and not take advantage of them for personal and professional glory. Using the words he chooses to connote high praise, Alaska needs an attorney general whose "word [one can take] to the bank".

Wayne Ross is not a role model for professional attorneys and Alaska does not need the "band of junkyard dog assistant attorneys general" that he would hire (according to the ADN article referenced above); he graduated in the bottom segment in his law school class; he was not selected for two judgeships for which he made application; he proudly uses "jury nullification" (persuading a jury to return a "Not Guilty" verdict despite its belief that the defendant is "Guilty" of the violation charged) as a defense strategy when courts throughout our country expressly disallow this practice; with regard to his skills, abilities, and competencies, what he demonstrated to me, was nothing but "smoke and mirrors" and a lot of extraneous joking around; and he is dishonest.

In considering how Wayne Ross described Governor Palin as courageous when she took on her party only to get, initially, an unpleasant letter from the Alaska Department of Law, I ask this committee to hear my testimony and find it worthy of honest consideration. Please do not send me a "poison" letter like the rambling one sent to Leah Burton after she submitted written email testimony (therefore explaining perhaps why Wayne Ross was confused by the lack of an official signature on the actual document. Ms. Burton is a professional writer and her work is regarded highly by her peers of all political persuasions.

My being here this afternoon was the honorable thing to do in this matter. I may not be around to give in-person testimony to the legislature again, but I will keep up on what's happening with state government. Perhaps in the future you will hear from me in the form of my writings. I'll stay in touch.

Thank you for your consideration of my testimony. Wayne Ross called Leah Burton a liar and this is not true. It is appropriate for me to tell you that Wayne Ross absolutely lied to me. And to make matters worse, he cheated Alaskans as he cheated me.

Sincerely,

Barbara Bachmeier

Additional points added April 11, 2009:

a) During the public testimony session on April 10, 2009, House Judiciary Committee Chairperson Ramras announced that he had received complaints of harassment directed at some people who earlier provided testimony by telephone from their home telephone numbers. Apparently, people in disagreement with the opposing testimony, responded by finding the telephone number of the persons offering opposing testimony and placing calls to these people for the sole purpose of engaging in harassing and controversial conversation against them. Ramras did not identify which side of the argument allegedly made the harassing telephone calls or which side received them, but instructed those responsible to stop this behavior forthwith.

b) Today, April 11, 2009, I heard from a legislative staff person that the persons receiving the harassing telephone calls were those who spoke in opposition to the confirmation of Wayne A. Ross. The people allegedly making the harassing telephone calls were supporters of Ross' confirmation.

c) I find this alleged behavior absolutely intolerable and unacceptable. I request an immediate investigation into this matter so as to determine whether egregious partisan harassment actually took place and, if so, valid consequences that would be in order.

Subject: Attorney General Confirmation:

Dear Representative Ramras,

RE: Wayne A. Ross AG Confirmation Hearings

After watching a couple hours of your and Senator French's questioning of Mr. Ross I am even more convinced that he would not be the best pick for AG. He speaks of "principles" and states that were a situation to come up where he felt "his" principles were at risk he would simply "go back to practicing law". This was in response to your question re: his character overshadowing the position of AG. I have a professional license, land surveying, and the "principles of practice" of my profession are mandated by statute. Certainly, I am expected to exercise my best professional judgment in the performance of my work but my personal "principles" have nothing to do with performing that work and should there be some conflict then my licensure would be at risk, plain and simple. The extent to which personal ethics and integrity influence an individuals work I think would have been a more appropriate line of questioning for Mr. Ross. Here's an example of Mr. Ross's "principles" getting in the way of his professional behavior/ethic; I don't remember the year but it was during the first years of the war in Iraq. There was a protest at the intersection of the Kenai Spur and Sterling Highways in Soldotna. As I recall, a woman's son had been killed in Iraq and she and several supporters were protesting the war. One of our local radicals took it upon himself to drive past a couple of times and shout obscenities at the woman for being "unpatriotic" and etc.. Then he had someone drive his pick-up truck past while he bombarded the woman and her group with water. He was arrested for assault and Mr. Ross defended him with his well known "passion" for such things. When he says that all his clients are innocent he is being disingenuous and devious in his defense of such behavior as just described above. Also, when he states, repeatedly, that he works for the people of the state and will uphold the constitution of the U.S. and Alaska I ask you to very carefully consider this; there is such a thing as "malicious compliance". As AG Mr. Ross, as he has so vigorously demonstrated over the years, will be in a position to make decisions based on the absolute letter of the law or, as in the case of the poached caribou for the old Native woman, not!

Obviously, I haven't been privy to all your questioning of Mr. Ross but some questions I haven't heard that would be among the first and very important to me as a legislator are as follows ;

1. What is your position/opinion re: powers of the legislative and executive branches of Alaska state government, specifically, if the legislature issued subpoenas to either an ordinary citizen or a state official, would you expect both/either to honor the summons and why or why not? Do you believe in the premise that all citizens are equal under the law and that the law should be exercised equally over all?

2. As AG would you personally give legal advice to an ordinary citizen or a state employee re:

an action of the legislature or high ranking state official if in so doing you would be acting in conflict with the stated intent of the legislature or official? As between the governor and the legislature who, in a conflict of authority, would you answer to first?.

3. Do you agree that the U.S. constitution provides both the right "to" and "from" religious belief? Given your repeated use of the word God and prayer in many of your answers and your stated position as a pro-life advocate can you envision a circumstance where your oath of office, in your professional opinion, would be in conflict with your personal "principles"? More specifically for example, what is your professional opinion re: the federal ruling that allows workers in the medical profession to deny or refuse "services" to an individual if providing those services would conflict with the providers religious belief? What is your personal opinion or principle re: this ruling?.

4. Chief Justice Warren E. Berger is quoted as having said this; "A lifestyle or behavior that is odd or even bizarre, that interferes with no right or interest of others, is not to be condemned because it is different". What is your opinion, as AG, of the Alaska supreme court ruling that partners of gay and lesbian state employees are entitled to certain benefits typically associated with married, heterosexual couples? What is your personal opinion of this ruling? Do you foresee any problem enforcing and upholding this ruling?.

5. Do you think the AG position should be an elected position or remain an appointment by the governor? Why?

6. You have stated several times that if your "principles" ever get in the way of performing your, presumably unbiased, duties as AG you will just go back to practicing law, which you love doing anyway and that you won't go hungry or need to apply for unemployment. This seems a bit capricious, flippant and speaks to your attitude re: the position of AG. Is there something on your mind that you would like to speak about with regard to this attitude? An example of this was in your response to the statement that governor Palin is "provocative", meaning that she provokes the legislature with her actions and words at times, but you replied that yes, she looked pretty good and then chuckled. This "attitude", if you will, seems inappropriate and contentious, please explain why it is not and should not be perceived as such to the casual observer?.

7. Your publicly stated position re: Native rights, subsistence hunting and fishing, are inconsistent with state and federal law. As AG you will be expected to uphold the "law" as written, do you see any conflicts with existing law and your "principles"?

8. General scientific consensus demonstrates certain irrefutable facts re: fish and game management, global warming and status of certain animal species in Alaska. Do you see yourself as someone in possession of legitimate credentials which qualify you to dispute current scientific findings re: these matters? and do you anticipate becoming involved or participating in official, formal discussion of these matters beyond a direction from the legislature or governor to pursue legal action on behalf of the state re: one or more of these issues?.

9. Going back to "malicious compliance"; you have stated your opinion that the law should be flexible, should not overly penalize someone who has broken the law but with, in your opinion, reasonable justification and that putting the "fear of God" in them would better serve the situation. Reversing the logic of this, would you anticipate exercising "discretionary authority" that is consistent with your personal principles in certain circumstances but applying the strictest letter of the law in others that don't meet your personal standards and you oppose? Would you extend this "discretionary authority", unconditionally, to everyone under your supervision in the AGs department?. Why/why not?.

I am no fan of governor Palin and I don't believe she is acting in the best interest of Alaska with her national political pursuits. Her recent behavior re: confirmation of Kim Elton's replacement is at once childish and petty in my opinion and should not be tolerated. Her appointment of Mr. Ross as AG is politically astute but hardly the best choice she could have, and should have, made for the state. Mr. Ross's confirmation hearings have convinced me beyond any shadow of a doubt that he is most likely one of the best defense attorneys available in the state but at the same time he is probably the worst choice for AG. We have seen what the "cowboys" are capable of over the past eight years in the national arena. Alaska does not need a cowboy AG working for a "maverick" governor who aspires to be president and has focused all her energy in that pursuit!

I'm not affiliated with any political party and wear no label. I was born in Alaska in 1948 and have seen some amazing things since. I sincerely hope the appointment of Mr. Ross as AG, especially in Sarah Palin's administration, will not be another!

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Dear Ms. Pierson:

Please forward this message addressed to Representative Ramras to the House Judiciary Committee:

Dear Mr. Ramras:

I watched today's House Judiciary Committee meeting, and I'm concerned your committee may not intend to adequately review Leah Burton's testimony, or any additional information she may provide, until after the joint legislative session's scheduled confirmation vote of Wayne Anthony Ross-- I'm concerned your committee, which has 5 republicans and only 2 democrats, may be steamrolling Alaska's interests beneath partisan bias.

You yourself seemed to leave open the possibility that Ms. Burton's statements may be true. I'd be even more concerned if Mr. Ross's claims, in his recent response to Governor Palin on this matter, were proven false.

I see no reason why questions raised by Ms. Burton should not be addressed and resolved before Mr. Ross's confirmation vote. Is your committee trying to hide something about Mr. Ross from Alaskans? Do you need to conceal facts from Alaskans in order to get Mr. Ross confirmed as Attorney General?

If your committee can't address the obvious questions raised by Ms. Burton in a timely and useful way, perhaps you should ethically disclose this to the legislature so it may consider alternate, better investigative options which may occur before the confirmation vote.

Sincerely,

Jim Behlke

Dear Senate President Stevens and House Speaker Chenault:

I'm concerned the Governor may be attempting to manipulate the legislature by holding up Senator Elton's replacement-- she apparently has not submitted any candidates that the democratic party agrees with.

It appears this matter may end up in court.

However, Juneau's senate seat (currently vacant) should have a say in the Attorney General nomination-- I'm concerned the Governor may be holding up the Senate replacement so there would be one less potential "no" vote at the joint session on Thursday.

I think it would only be fair to delay the Attorney General's confirmation vote until the Juneau senate seat has been acceptably filled.

I ask the legislature to delay the Attorney General's confirmation vote until all Alaskans, including Juneau residents, are equally represented-- even if a special session was required for a full confirmation vote to occur.

Apparently the Attorney General nominee has been advising the Governor on the nomination process for the Juneau senate seat-- if so, he may be influencing his own confirmation vote especially if his advice results in a delayed Juneau senate appointment.

Sincerely,

Jim Behlke

Subject: My testimony against Wayne Anthony Ross as AG

"Does [Wayne Anthony Ross] have the qualifications, ethical standards and temperament to be the state's top law enforcement official and run such an important, politically sensitive department?" asked an ADN editorial.

Qualifications

- Ross has been up for two separate Judicial advancements in the past two years, for the Alaska Supreme Court in 2007 and the Alaska Court of Appeals in 2008. He was not nominated by the Alaska Judicial Council either time. His mediocre Alaska Bar Association scores were cited as the reason he did not receive a nomination.
- In response, he wrote a letter to the Bar Association newsletter complaining about the judicial selection process and the negative comments made about him in the anonymous Bar Survey used to rate the applicants.

Ethics and Temperament

There is an extensive written record on Ross from his two unsuccessful runs for governor and his long history of political activism. His zealous support for a host of controversial causes and his insulting public statements about those who believe differently show intolerance, bad judgement and the inability to seek common ground. He has a long list of enemies, and even his attorney peers and NRA buddies don't want him in positions of power.

- He called on the governor to fire an Assistant Attorney General for her participation in a peaceful demonstration. ("Animal Activists Real Enemy")
- He threatened to sue the Permanent Fund Dividend division because they denied a check to his son Brian, who had not lived in Alaska for 14 years.
- During a talk on domestic violence, he said that the women's movement emasculated men and was the cause of domestic abuse.
- He promised to fight the federal law requiring rural subsistence, and opposes tribal sovereignty saying, "If the state wants to deal with tribes, it should treat them as it treats fraternal organizations rather than as governments."
- He did not support Mayor Wuerch for re-election because Wuerch refused to help Ross' friend get into the Anchorage Fire Department after the friend failed a required psychological test.
- He publicly stated that pro-choice people are "baby killers," and called gays and lesbians "degenerates" in a letter to the state Bar Association.
- He endorsed Rick Mystrom for mayor in 2003 "because he fights the unions."
- He represented without fee, and personally supported, a man who twice poured buckets of water from a passing pickup onto anti-war demonstrators.
- He was a founder of Alaska Right to Life and has provided free legal services to anti-abortion activists since 1972.
- He blamed moderate Republicans for the state's fiscal problems saying, "Moderates are mush."
- He is a former vice president of the National Rifle Association and was in line to become president, but was voted out of office by his peers.

- He is frequently described as "arrogant," uncompromising and attention-seeking.

Do we trust an arrogant political activist with mediocre professional ratings, zealous positions on sensitive state issues, and openly expressed prejudice against groups of Alaskan citizens to be "the state's top law enforcement official and run such an important, politically sensitive department?"

I know you will listen to the concerns of the citizens and do what is best for the state by denying his appointment. Thank you.

Sincerely,
E. Ross

Dear Senators and Representatives,

I am writing to ask you to consider voting "no" on the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross. I have listened to much of the confirmation hearings and came away thinking that he probably was not the strongest legal mind out available in Alaska, and probably he has strong opinions very "right of center", but was probably confirmable- and we only have a couple more years- what real harm could he do.

I changed my mind after his comments to the Anchorage Daily News reporter- in which he is quoted

""It seems to me the most important thing that can be done by the Senate is not argue with legal or illegal but to appoint somebody to represent Juneau," said Ross, ...

Now, that is an unbelievable statement for the "top legal authority" for the state of Alaska. First, the governor appoints, and then the Senate Democrats confirm. This is not the "wild west" we are in - but "civilized- law abiding" Alaska. Normal citizens want our top governmental officials to think following the law is the most important, not just when it is convenient.

Please consider voting no tomorrow. Thank you for your consideration.

I am writing this letter to voice my concerns about the appointment by Governor Palin of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General of Alaska.

His positions on the role of the federal government and subsistence, his comments on homosexuality, and his disregard for the serious issue of domestic violence in this state all speak to an inability to represent the interests of all Alaskans.

The Attorney General is the state's chief legal officer and is responsible for protecting the public interest of the state and its people. The Attorney General needs to be able to represent every one of us, Democrats, Republicans, rich, poor, white, black, no matter who you are. This position should be filed by someone whose focus is on the rights of all Alaskans, not just gun rights.

Please do not confirm Mr. Ross as Attorney General of Alaska.

First, I wish to thank you for your work to feed the needy, not just in your hometown, but also in Emmonak and the outlying villages during this past winter. I had the pleasure of living a total of 10 years in Fairbanks, from 1967 through Mid-May of 1979. Both of my children, Ginger Miller, nee: Dowling and Paul Dowling, attended University Park Elementary and the junior high (Ginger). I was grateful to attend and graduate from the University in 1977. People in Fairbanks know how to help others. They also know how important our decisions can be; the long lasting impact of both good and bad decisions.

Seldom does someone have a defining decision to make; such as the one, you will be making later today. You, and your colleagues in the Legislature, will be voting on whether or not to confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General. You will be asked to take a stand and be counted. This vote will be remembered for years to come.

During the hearings from both houses of the legislature, Mr. Ross was evasive, dismissive, and derisive, with a shade of contempt creeping through. Ross equated the legitimate role of the Legislature, in bringing forward questions about the Governor's actions, regarding the dismissal of the Public Safety Commissioner, Walt Monagan, whether or not these actions were ethical, with the persecutions that took place in the 1600's. Was he referring to the Inquisitions? As a devout Catholic, he should know the history of the Inquisitions.

Unfortunately, he was not pressured to answer the questions he was evading or simply blowing-off.

One question I would have liked to ask him:

Mr. Ross, do you believe The Holocaust took place?

Dear Representatives and Senators of the State of Alaska Judiciary Committee,

I belong to a very conservative family in the Mat-Su Valley and may be rocking the boat for some; however, in light of the testimony put forth during confirmation hearings for Wayne Ross for Attorney General, I'm compelled to urge you to ask the Governor to provide an alternate candidate that would prove capable of serving all Alaskans.

Some of the testimony given during the hearings is deeply disturbing especially the testimony of Leah Burton, but even if Ms. Burton's allegations turn out to be false other issues have also been brought to attention that cannot be disputed. This is an attorney that has in the past demonstrated a disregard for basic freedoms given to Americans through our constitution such as freedom of speech, and in all honesty his displays of general contempt towards other people, even during these proceedings, leads me to believe that this man is probably not the most stable person the Governor could have chosen for this position. In replacing Talis Colberg, Alaskans deserve better than Wayne Ross.

Dear Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

My name is Marsha Buck and I live in Juneau. I am unable to attend the Wayne Anthony Ross Nomination Hearing this afternoon due to a mandatory Juneau Pride Chorus dress rehearsal for our 7:00 p.m. performance at the Alaska Folk Festival this coming Wednesday at Centennial Hall, to which you are warmly invited. I would, however, like to provide testimony and would like my comments to be part of the record.

I am the Board President of Alaskans Together for Equality, Inc. which is a new statewide organization formed to advance the civil equality of all Alaskans with focus on equality for gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender Alaskans. I would like to testify briefly in opposition to the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General for Alaska. Mr. Ross's record of negative comments about gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender Alaskans make it difficult for me to imagine how he could uphold their constitutional rights fairly and without discrimination.

We need an Attorney General who respects ALL Alaskans equally – including gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender and intersex Alaskans as well as women and Native Alaskans. His public comments and legal record appear to indicate bias and a personal agenda rather than an open willingness to uphold the Alaska Constitution. I would, therefore, ask that you oppose Mr. Ross's nomination.

Testimony Against the Nomination of Wayne Allen Ross for Attorney General

I am here to oppose the nomination of Wayne Allen Ross for Attorney General. It has become quite obvious that Mr. Ross is a very divisive person. I do not believe that Mr. Ross will be able to represent ALL citizens of Alaska and therefore in my mind is not qualified to hold this very crucial position.

Mr. Ross obviously has very strong beliefs about the LGBT community and views members of that community as immoral and degenerates.

Mr. Ross will also not represent people that believe in women's rights. Wayne Anthony Ross defended protesters who chained themselves to reproductive health clinic check in counters. Because of the all of the services provided by this clinic this stopped women from also getting birth control and STD testing and is more of an issue with privacy and trespassing than anything else. Mr. Ross has made statements that appear to condone marital rape. Marital rape may be allowed in Afghanistan but not in the United States, it is NOT ACCEPTABLE. I understand that this afternoon this is being denied but I still find it troubling. And I do not consider MR Ross to be a strong advocate of women.
Mr. Ross is hostile to our native population. He is opposed to subsistence priority, tribal sovereignty and ANSCA.

Mr. Ross was among several candidates for the Alaska Supreme Court seat vacated by Justice Bryner in 2007, and for the Court of Appeals seat vacated by Judge Stewart in 2008. He did not make the "short list" of qualified applicants sent to the Governor for either seat. If he is not qualified to hold these seats. how can he possibly be qualified to serve as our next AG?

So, Mr. Ross is unlikely to represent women, natives and LBGT community members. Who will Mr. Ross represent? Apparently, white heterosexual males. This representation is fine if it is in the confines of his private business but not for the entire state of Alaska.

Sir:

I have watched the entire process as to the name of WAR being forwarded our Legislature as of yesterday. I have contacted all of you before, but feel I need to again.

To my generation, Wayne Anthony Ross, is called nothing more than a 'blow hard'! He talks so much on a personal level, about himself, that it has gotten him into big trouble throughout the years to which I suspect will continue should be be appointed AG.

When he replied to your question about Palin being in Arctic Fox garb, I was appalled at his response as to how good she looked! It was apparent to me that he was thinking of what the visual aspect of Palin brought to him vs her legality in donning the apparel, as Governor, for the occasion of her husband's race! He made me absolutely sick at the way he responded!

As previously mentioned, I have personal experience of this man through a girlfriend of marital abuse. Please, please, please review his stand on things and commentary made during his run for governor and on other many occasions. He is an evil man as I said before and I cannot believe you would find him fascinating and someone you'd like to get to know better because he is such a 'character'!

Sarah Palin is a disgrace as our governor and I feel Ross as AG will only bring more discord to Alaska!

I am writing to express my concerns about Wayne Anthony Ross's nomination to the post of Attorney General. Mr. Ross's history of questionable public statements on many important issues has raised significant questions as to his ability to act impartially in upholding the constitutional rights of all Alaskans. But I have become even more concerned after reading his views Wednesday on Governor Palin's recent handling of the replacement for Kim Elton. He seems to be expressing greater commitment to personal alliances before determining the legal status of the actions in question. This does not bode well for demonstrating a fair and balanced legal perspective on issues that may involve personal beliefs or associations.

I respectfully request that you cast a NO vote at his confirmation hearing today. Mr. Ross appears to be too divisive and controversial a figure for such an important post, and I believe the state needs to work towards more unison and unbiased cooperation given all the political division we've been witnessing recently, especially in the important decision for the appointment of our next attorney general.

To My Legislative Body,

It is a Saturday night and I have just come across this exchange. I am stunned. Outraged. Deeply offended and speechless.

Here is what Rep. Ramras asked of Mr. Ross on Friday:

Representative Ramras: "We have a Governor who is provocative in a lot of her actions. Recently it comes to mind when she was in Fairbanks for the finish line for the Iron Dog she was wearing Arctic Cat gear...Arctic Cat letters..."

And here is what Mr. Ross said in response:

Wayne Anthony Ross: "It was provocative, she looked very good in them, didn't she?"

If this statement alone does not give you complete justification for turning down this appointment, then each of you are not only condoning a blatant attitude of sexism and objectification but you're encouraging it as an acceptable languauge, dialogue and treatment of women. Where was the outrage at this comment? Do you not have wives, daughters, sisters?

I can't even find the words to espress myself right now. The wires in my mind are frying! How dare this man have the priviledge of serving in the top law enforcement position in this state! You think this is a casual comment:? Look at the PATTERN of testimony coming from those who oppose him!
These people don't know each other and yet their stories have a common thread. Here's one: sexist.

I tell you this, say yes to this man and you have just said so much more to the women, to the YOUNG WOMEN of this state.

What a sad, sad day this is.

I may be a day late and a dollar short in terms of confirmation deadlines, but I don't think Mr. Ross is qualified to be attorney general. Everyone is entitled to his or her personal opinions, but we need a person with great law credentials who isn't going to polarize our lives any more than they are now.

I am writing this to voice a very strong opinion regarding Governor Palin's appointee for Attorney General of the State of Alaska. I am strongly opposed to this appointment and sincerely hope that you will take my concerns into account.

First: I am a proud resident of the State of Alaska as well as a proud citizen of the United States of America. I have long felt that the state motto should be "Don't tell me what to do" because that seems to be the general feeling of the majority in this state. However, like it or not, we are part of a bigger community (both national and global). Whatever your personal feelings about our present administration of the United States, you should not support anyone who regards Washington DC as "the enemy". Nor should you support anyone who supports the right to form anti-government militias. Particularly for a position as important as Attorney General.

This brings me to my second point: The Attorney General of the State of Alaska should represent the people. He/she should not have any allegiance to the governor or any particular party politics. Mr. Ross's involvement in previous gubernatorial races simply hails back to the old adage "you scratch my back and I will scratch yours" and smacks of conflict of interest. This is exactly the kind of politics that I am sick of. No appointment to a job this important should be made in this way. I do not believe that this man can be objective. I do not believe that he would be any better than our previous AG at addressing ethics issues.

Thirdly: How can you consider someone who refers to the position as "The General"?

Fourth: A few questions:

Does he have any administrative experience?

Does he have any experience in natural resource, land or tax law?

Does he have any experience in commercial matters?

Will he listen to opposing points of view fairly? Even in his own offices?

Will he take into account political and ideological views that don't match his own when appointing career attorneys?

Fifth: His previous writings as well as his responses when questioned about such things as Child Welfare, women's rights, natives' rights, subsistence rights and the rights of those with a different sexual preference did not make me feel confident at all about his ability to put his own opinions aside and represent all of the people. Lima Beans???? What a bizarre analogy. Governor Palin looks "provocative"??? This pretty much says it all.

APR-14-2009 TUE 01:55 PM KENAI LIO FAX NO. 907 283 3075 P. 02

In closing: I do not feel that this man is capable of representing me in the post of Attorney General.

He may be "colorful" or "folksy" or whatever the latest adjective is, but I find him controversial, divisive and downright frightening. Please do not appoint this man simply because he is one of "the good ole boys club". He is not objective and no matter how many things he denies or how many times he says that he can put his very strong personal feelings aside, I do NOT believe him.

Surely there are less controversial, less partisan and more qualified attorneys out there, any of whom would be a better choice.

Subject: Hearings on Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General

Dear Members of the Alaska State House,

I am writing to urge that you not confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General for the State of Alaska. I have watched many hours of the hearings before the Judiciary committees and am afraid.

Mr. Ross has shown disrespect for the rights and traditions of Native Alaskans, a hatred of homosexuals, and a pre-liberation view of women in both current and past statements. When asked about any of these, he has either denied making such statements or said that as the Attorney General he would represent all Alaskans and his feelings would not enter into it. It's nice to say he will represent all Alaskans, but all Alaskans are rarely on one side of a litigation. In a suit of Natives to preserve rural subsistence rights, or in a suit to protect gays or women against employment discrimination, I do not believe he will fairly represent anyone in these subject groups. There is a reason the legislature is required to confirm important appointments and this is it. You will be held responsible if you vote to confirm someone who is clearly unqualified by either temperament or experience to defend the Constitution and all the people of Alaska.

As a Juneau resident currently unrepresented in the Senate because of our Governor's unwillingness to forward the name of anyone on the list provided by our local Democratic party, I suggest that the legislature turn down the appointment of Mr. Ross and begin conducting your own interviews for the position of Attorney General.

Subject: NO WAR for AG

Dear Legislature and Senators,
Although I am a non-Alaskan, I have heard that Sarah Palin supporters in the lower 48 are weighing in on WAR's appointment tommorrow. I have listened to the interviews yesterday on Gavel to gavel and they are greatly disturbing. First off, I think he's just saying what he needs to, to get appointed. His agenda is to involve himself with all kinds of issues that don't normally involved a AG. Such as Native issues, Predator issues, I'm horrified as I listened to him speak.
I urge you to go back and review his "answers" they are evasive, belligerent, and really he is a male version of Sarah Palin.
Please see Mudflats:
http://www.themudflats.net/2009/04/09/wayne-anthony-ross-in-his-own-words/

What kind of a statement is this?
"WAR: You don't go to Washington D.C. anymore. Washington D.C. is not friends with Alaska. The General's job is not to cause casualties with its own people. The General's job is to win the war against the enemy. "

No its not my imagination, I heard him say it with my own ears. In most other states the AG is voted in by the people. The governor is trying to forward her little cabal here. I urge you to be the party of "NO" to sarah Palin.
She is not looking out for the interests of Alaskans only herself. You know this guy will be fighting her Ethics complaints. And by the way, how many governors have racked up as many as her?
Please Do not confirm WAR as AG. I have also sent letters to CREW (Citizens for Ethics in WAshington) and Eric Holder Dept. of Justice.
This man WAR sounds like a sessonist or AIP 'er. And yesterday Meg Stapleton made a odd statement re: sarah palins (repub welfare) legal fund. She thanked the generoisity of Alaskan's and Americans....Ok last time I looked Alaskan's were American's. Do you see where this is headed?
Thank you for your consideration.

Dear HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

I have been following WAR proceedings very carefully, Leah Burton called in and submitted her letter Re: WAR for your consideration. Well here is a follow up to that letter posted on Shannyn Moores Blog from her (Leah's) Father to WAR and his flippent answer. It is of my opinion if WAR is confirmed you of Alaska will be opening yourselves up to major problems between Palin's Ethics complaints and WAR's arrogance. It is painfully apparant WAR will be following Palin's agenda and not the greater good of all Alaskan's. As you all know People all over are following Palin because of her Failed VP run and Possible 2012 run. So far I don't like what I see.

I also have a woman who is a top notch handwriting analyisis, profilier for the Secret Service, and her premlimary finding is this man has issues. Sexual issues/hang ups. I have told her that any sensitive findings. should be turned over to the FBI, US AG Eric Holder as WAR is possibilly about to be confirmed as Alaska's AG. If you care, to hear more I will give you her name. This is strictly unoffical on her part, but I have told her the importance of what her findings are MUST be turned over to appropriate Agencies.
The Legislature and Senate should enact a emergency bill to elect a Attorney General and take this out of the hands of a insane Governor.

Burton Letter Part Two — W.A.R.'s Response

http://shannynmoore.wordpress.com/2009/04/11/burton-letter-part-two-wars-response/

From Leah Burton's Dad:

Mr. Ross,

You may or may not remember the times when we met but I remember you very vividly. The purpose of this communication is over concern for my daughter first and your attempt to be confirmed as the Attorney General, a job for which I know you had long aspirations, as well as thinking you could be the Commissioner of Health and Social Services or the Commissioner of Public Safety, none of which you are qualified for.

I was told today that you deny knowing or associating with the Mad Dads group in Wasilla. Surely records of filings in the court must still be available so that you can produce proof of who you clients were . This, is the same group that my daughter witnessed you addressing and making sexist and demeaning comments in reference to spousal rape and domestic violence, which as I see it means physical abuse of the spouse by the husband. Considering the group to which you were speaking that is the only logical conclusion one could draw from such remarks. I'm also assuming that you may have made these remarks in order to appear as a macho man in front of such a gathering. First of all, I want to caution you on what you say but can't prove and to advise you that if this kind of slander and attacks on my daughter continue you may well meet a real attorney that knows how to win.

In over 30 years in law enforcement in Alaska, as a police advisor for the U.S State Dept and the Dept of justice, I have met and worked with many quality professionals in the field and let me say that you do not rank among this group. I worked the street as a young patrol officer starting in Ketchikan in 1954, joined the Alaska State Police in 1959 and ended my career by serving two separate terms as Commissioner of Public Safety for the 2 best Governor's in Alaska, Jay Hammond and Wally Hickel. (In the interest of brevity I will attach my resume for you perusal as I want to establish my bona fides for the remarks I am about to make).

You sir, speak and act like the kind of bully I met many times when responding to domestic violence calls, some of the most dangerous situations police officers are often in. Over the years I brought many an abused spouse and/or children to my own home for my wife to care for, because there was no place else to take them. As the state matured such offices came into being on a scale large enough to expand their services ,hich we in law enforcement welcomed. This was especially true in the "bush" rural areas of the state in which I worked as a roving patrol trooper or where I was stationed.

Contrary to what you recently told the Judiciary Committee about the Child Welfare workers being hell bent on taking kids away from their families my personal experience was just the opposite. I had to take many children into protective custody,. and even in the most dangerous of situations the welfare workers attitude was that a child was always better off staying with their natural parents regardless of the circumstances. Not a decision that I could always agree with. Therefore I am totally surprised as your comments and I challenge you to provide actual proof that supports that allegation.

Shortly after retirement in 1995 I served on a committee, hired by the Department of Law, with a former Deputy Attorney General and Commissioner of Corrections. we tasked to perform an investigation into the performance of the child protection unit, following a very unfortunate set of circumstances concerning the killing of an infant who was under the protection of the state at the time of his murder. The child should have been removed from the home but was allowed to stay there under very dangerous circumstances and was killed in a very bazaar and gruesome manner. The bottom line in this case we found that children were being left in home circumstances in many cases when the right thing to do would have been removal. This resulted in changes of the child protection statutes and policies of the agencies concerned which also included the relationship between children and adult probation sharing of information.

The only conclusion I have been able to come to concerning your remarks about the "frightening" case works is that you really don't know what you are talking about and are just talking to try to impress someone that you may have an some knowledge about the subject.

In light of the strong reaction from the native and rural communities of the state and your obvious position and bias relative to domestic and children's issues I find it hard to believe that you could be in charge of the department that is charged with enforcing laws in an impartial or effective manner. I think you should do the state a favor and withdraw your name from confirmation.

Richard L Burton

Commissioner of Public Safety (retired)

Representative,

I have my concern about Wayne Anthony Ross as General Attorney. After I heard people testifying, he is a divisive person among Alaskans and his comments against Alaskan Natives are abusive and discriminative. He opposes against Alaskan Natives subsistence and has a past record with Sarah Palin and Vick Koring. Please do not confirm this individual as Attorney General.

Teresa Sager-Albaugh, president of Alaska Sportsmen Outdoor Council and appointed by Sarah Palin, voted to kill more than 800 bears, voted in favor to use Carbon Monoxide to kill wolf pups in their dens, and voted in favor to snare brown and black bears including sows and cubs.A practice that has long been prohibited in Alaska. In order for there to be balance on the Board of Game we need to have diversity. Please do not confirm this individual to the BOG.

Thank You

I read that the legislature received a letter from a former lobbyist informing you of derogatory comments about women made by Wayne Anthony Ross at a dinner she attended.

When I saw your questioning of Mr. Ross about his relationship with Sarah Palin, I was shocked to hear him describe her as "provocative" followed by his statement that "She looked really good didn't she?" (in response to your question about her wearing Arctic Cat clothing while in an official role). I find this highly offensive. The fact that he readily said this in a confirmation hearing - at which one would assume he was on his "best" behavior - leads me to believe that Mr. Ross does indeed view women as sexual objects. As an Alaskan woman I do not want him representing me or my state. Please vote NO on his appointment.

Attorney General nominee Wayne Anthony Ross has a history - both written and spoken - of making inflammatory and derogatory remarks about women, Natives and gays. When asked during his confirmation hearing about specific statements he made referring to gays as "immoral" and "degenerates", he did not deny making such statements nor did he deny holding those beliefs, instead he responded,"My personal opinions have nothing to do with the job. The attorney general is not going to give his opinion on those sorts of things.." Alaskans should be deeply concerned by this line of reasoning.

Ross said he didn't believe in litmus tests for hiring, and then he went on to say, "Now if a guy was a rabid communist, I probably wouldn't hire him. If a guy hated Alaska I wouldn't hire him..." So Mr. Ross admits he will not hire people whose views diverge from his, even though it isn't illegal to be a communist or to hate Alaska. Would Mr. Ross hire - indeed has Mr. Ross ever hired - someone who is gay? Despite his assurances to the contrary, it is clear that Mr. Ross does not have a firewall between his personal views and his professional duties.

Mr. Ross may think what he likes in private but he has a public record of bigoted views. One must question Governor Palin's wisdom in even considering him to be the Alaska's Attorney General. I'm writing this letter to the legislature of the State of Alaska to urge you not to confirm Mr. Ross as Attorney General for the state of Alaska. My reasons are many. Listed are a few points that are of utmost importance to me.

1. He is controversial. Reams of paper have been written describing the many divisive issues that are on the coattails of this man.
2. He is not supported by his peer group. Not one legal group has stepped in to defend this man and his sought after position.
3. His views on subsistence for Alaskan Natives are against the people of our state that need it the most.
4. His views on the Federal government are so awful I can't believe an Attorney General nominee with this extreme vision toward our country's government would even be considered for this office.

If this individual is confirmed all I can believe is this legislature thinks what works for the governor works for us. Her type of right wing republicans are the only folks that matter. The rest of you Alaskans should be quiet, don't count, and should go along with the legislative body as we place marginal people in office with marginal performance for the good of the people.....oh yes for Sarah Palin... but not for me.....think of all Alaskans before you cast this important vote.

Thank you for your kind attention. If any additional information is desired, we will make every effort to meet your request.

Subject: Ross Confirmation

Dear Representative Ramras,

I strongly oppose Governor Palin's nominee for Attorney General. I am a politically active, voting citizen of Alaska. I am many things including a husband, a father of 2 beautiful daughters, a middle school teacher, and a Sunday school teacher. As a husband and a father, I am a staunch supporter of women's rights. As a teacher, one of the lessons that I want all of my students to learn, especially the young boys, is that no means no. In light of Ross's comments as reported by Leah Burton, I feel that it is an embarrassment that this man's candidacy even warrants consideration. How will the young people that are my charges hear my message if the top cop in the state holds this worldview? He is obviously a throwback to that age when women and children were considered to be the property of the husband. This man does not deserve the consideration that he is being given. I am already hyper-alert because of the dubious rape statistics in our state. My wife was raped last summer, and the investigating detectives appeared to be more interested in protecting the perpetrator because he had standing in the community than they were in finding out the truth. Because it was his word against hers, the case was dropped. It became clear to me that part of the reason for the terrible rape statistics in our state is the culture of the very people that are supposed to be serving and protecting we citizens. To put Ross in the position for which he has been nominated would do nothing to shift that culture, it would only entrench in further.

The rape comment is what has moved me to action, but I see parallels with other issues within our state. When I walk down the hallways of my school, I see the face of Alaska. I see a myriad of different peoples: differences in color, nationality, sex, gender, sexual orientation, etc. Mr. Ross would not represent all of these citizens equally. Clearly, he possesses that sense of false entitlement that gave rise to the perception of the Ugly American. He will not serve the people of the state unless they happen to be affluent white males. That's not what I see in the hallways of my school.

I understand that you must give him a hearing because he is what Governor Palin has offered to you; do not support her choice. Don't just vote "no", vote "hell no!"

Representative Jay Ramras: PLEASE DISTRIBUTE THIS IN RESPONSE TO REP. MAX GRUENBERGY'S REQUEST TO ME DURING YESTERDAY'S PUBLIC TESTIMONY. I TRIED COPYING THE OTHER MEMBERS BUT EACH ONE WAS REJECTED BY THE EMAIL SYSTEM, WHICH REFUSES TO CONFIGURE THEIR EMAIL ADDRESSES CORRECTLY. IT PERMITS ONLY YOURS TO BE CONFIGURED CORRECTLY TO REACH YOU. I APPRECIATE YOUR COOPERATION SINCE I DO NOT UNDERSTAND THE GLITCH THAT PREVENTS ME FROM EMAILING THE OTHERS DIRECTLY.

To House Judiciary Cmte members

Rep. Gruenberg asked me to send again the document that I referenced during my testimony against the confirmation of Wayne A. Ross for Attorney General of Alaska.
I am attaching the Letter to the Editor of the Bar Rag that I wrote in response to Wayne Ross's article in the Oct-Nov 2007 issue of the Bar Rag. It criticized his article as being poorly thought out and poorly articulated in his writing. I pointed out that I do not know Wayne Ross, so my only encounter with him was through responding to his article.
His thought process on critical issues seems to be quite seriously deficient. That is reflected in his 2007 Bar Rag article to which I responded. Moreover, reading news accounts of your confirmation proceeding yesterday leads me to believe that his resort to the "lima beans" analogy is further evidence of his inability to engage in critical thinking. The analogy itself is quite obviously an attempt to deflect from and to avoid the central question that was posed by one of your committee members. The avoidance technique leads plausibly to the inference that he does still adhere to such prejudiced and hate-filled attitudes toward other human beings. Of course, that he would analogize human beings with rights under law to a vegetable that he dislikes is revelatory of his utter failure to appreciate the obligations of the office for which he is nominated.
As I said during my testimony, gays and lesbians are no more degenerates than my wife and I are degenerates. It seems clear that he continues to adhere to his bigoted views of years ago. Wayne Ross continues to manifest the same deficiency in critical thinking skills that he manifested in his poorly articulated 2007 Bar Rag article in which he complained about his failure to obtain nomination for the state supreme court.

I appreciate the opportunity to testify against the nomination of Wayne Ross. Please vote against his confirmation as AG.

BAR RAG
Alaska Bar Association

I disagree with Wayne Ross' two major points—anonymous comments and AJC bias against conservatives—in the Bar Rag [31:4 Oct.-Dec. 2007]. He might have been more persuasive if he had adhered to a more principled critique by refraining from broad-brush criticism of four recent nominees as not conservative enough. After all, he failed to articulate a basis for such a statement by informing us whether he knows each nominee well enough to make such a statement. Even if he does know Justice Winfree, Judge Christen, Judge Bolger, and Andy Harrington, however, Ross failed to articulate any basis why an appellate judicial officer would take account of personal conservative outlook when adjudicating an appeal.

Ross' unexplained description of the four nominees undermines his criticism of anonymous comments on judicial selection surveys. The problem is not the anonymity but the inaccuracy, deliberate falsehood and intentional harm. If he had no basis for his description of the nominees as "not-conservative," then his comment is unjustified and indefensible even though he signed his name to it. Comments that are unjustified and indefensible should fall in the category of those that are inaccurate, false or intentionally harmful. He should practice what he preaches.

In practical terms, how would a conservative Justice Wayne Anthony Ross take account of his conservatism in adjudicating an appeal? Is he suggesting that he would not decide a case in a manner that violates his conservatism, regardless of the law or the facts of an appeal or the requirements of the state and/or federal constitution(s)? Is it correct to infer, therefore, that Ross believes that the sitting justices have violated their oaths of office by engaging in unprincipled decision-making based not on the law and the facts but on personal predilections, political or otherwise? Isn't that a serious charge that should be supported by facts or examples that would illustrate the point he is arguing? How can he justify such personal criticism in light of his dislike of unsubstantiated anonymous comments about himself? His comments are no better even though he signed his name.

Bar Rag Letters to the Editor
December 23, 2007

There may well be a place for anonymity in comments, which is why they should not be disfavored. Depending on what is communicated, an anonymous comment might be the safest means of communicating important, truthful but disturbing information about an applicant for nomination or retention. No doubt like many others, I have little idea how the AJC does what it does since so much of its work is not revealed. But it was embarrassing to Alaska recently that, two years after the AJC nominated someone as well qualified for a judgeship, the successful appointee was removed from the bench for cause. Was there a need for more comments, including even anonymous but truthful comments, that might have provided better insight into character and fitness? What does that failing tell us about the AJC's process and procedures? Has the AJC learned lessons from the experience and, if so, what lessons have been learned? Has it implemented the lessons learned? How would we know, as members of the public, that the AJC properly carries out its function of checking applicants for fitness and checking judges for retention?

Anonymity may be especially important with respect to commenting about the performance of judges. Unlike most applicants for initial appointment, judges are in position to retaliate in a meaningful way. To the extent that an anonymous comment is helpful in pointing to problematic performance by a judicial officer, so much the better. The writer might not have offered such comments without the perceived safety of anonymity. Since the judicial officer is accountable to the public, there is no reason not to take account of comments about performance to the same extent and in the same manner as criticism of performance of any other high ranking, influential state employee who is charged with the public trust.

I sign my name when I comment on bar surveys. So I am not defending anonymity as one who uses that technique. But I do recognize that in our less-than-ideal system in which half a dozen Alaskans get first-cut at judicial applicants, that is the only means of trying to influence the selection process. I should add that I do not know Wayne Ross except through his political advertising. I did not make any comments about him in the survey since I do not know him.

Apart from disagreeing with Ross' major points, I feel that he missed important points as well. His dismissive criticism of the four nominees as not conservative enough to suit his political disposition managed to dishonor their individual abilities and accomplishments. Of the four, the only one I do not know is Judge Morgan Christen. Like me, Justice Winfree and Andy Harrington are from Fairbanks. I litigated against Judge Bolger in Kodiak some years ago not long before his first judicial appointment. If Judge Christen is like the three that I know, it is safe to say that as a group, they can be characterized as exemplars of professionalism instead of being painted by inaccurate tones of political opportunism.

Bar Rag Letters to the Editor
December 23, 2007

It is worth commenting on another aspect that I feel is worth noting with greater concern than Ross' lament that the recent nominees—and presumably the current justices, too—are not conservative enough. Even though I do not know Judge Christen, I note that she has consistently topped the bar surveys every time she's in the running. She did so in this recent survey for Supreme Court. She did so not long ago in the survey for the federal district court appointment. Despite the obvious extremely high regard by the bar, however, she has not achieved her objective of advancing in the judiciary. For me, Judge Christen's pursuit raises a much more serious, broader concern about the prospects for women to achieve judgeships and to rise in the judiciary once appointed. What does a woman have to do in this state to be as competitive as men are for judicial appointments? I believe more women would apply if prospects of advancing were more promising. But the rate of appointments in recent years, particularly through a number of years under Governor Murkowski, has been dismal. It remains to be seen if matters will improve under Governor Palin. It is notable that, in the recent survey, Judge Christen's bar survey results were matched by another well-known, accomplished woman appellate practitioner who, like Wayne Ross, did not get the nod from the AJC. As for me, therefore, the concern is not whether our process will or will not advance those who are conservative enough to suit Wayne Ross but whether the large number of, and the high percentage of, women in our state bar will enjoy the same prospects for professional success and advancement as men enjoy presently.

Dear Representative Munoz,

Mr. Ross has made the argument that his personal views do not matter. He represents the Governor and people of Alaska and his opinion does not matter.

I beg to differ, Mr. Ross's personal views do matter, especially to the people who work for the Department of Law and both the prosecution and defense.

For instance, a young Native Attorney working for DOL, does Ross assign the "big" case that is a career maker to this Native Attorney, or maybe gay attorney?

Another instance in assigning a young eager attorney who wants to "prove" himself to the new AG and chooses to prosecute and therefore targets particular groups Mr. Ross has frequently publically denounced.

While Mr. Ross can argue he represents the people and Governor of Alaska and therefore his opinion does not matter, but in the reality of managing the Department of Law, there are far too many opportunities to skew the largest law enforcer in Alaska based on his own personal views. This is far more destructive to the fabric of our communities, and we have seen what a "rogue" DOJ can do, just ask Senator Ted Stevens.

We do not want any of Mr. Ross's personal or since he has run for Governor twice political influence established in the Department of Law, REJECT THIS NOMINEE!

Dear Ms. Pierson and Ms. Smith:
I have written to all the Senators and all but one of the Representatives, and am writing to you just in case those emails aren't read in time, somehow.

I am writing to add my voice to those who ask that the legislature NOT confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General for Alaska. I have been an Alaskan for almost thirty years. I am appalled by Mr. Ross's rhetoric, outlook, politics and lack of insight or even common decency - not to mention that even his legal credentials are unimpressive.

I have listened to portions of the senate hearings, and am concerned about Mr. Ross' very personal interpretation of the law to use it to condone racism, misogyny, domestic violence, anti-American violence, interpersonal violence, ecological violence, ignorance of all but his own narrow interests, and a disregard for — ironically — the rule of law.

I write to speak out against confirming Mr. Ross to take on this important position in Alaska's government. This is possibly one of the most important decisions the legislature will make this session, in my opinion. It is not a partisan issue, in spite of the current tendency to make everything partisan, and I fear that if it is viewed as such, without serious reflection, the state of Alaska and all of its people will suffer irreparable damage from making this choice by a partisan vote.

Senators, Representatives, please listen to Mr. Ross very carefully - and ask yourself if this man is the best, fairest, most level-headed, intelligent, virtuous and honest legal mind that you would choose to guide and represent the state of Alaska.

Sincerely,
Carol Ford

This announcement by Governor Palin to appoint Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General is a slap in the face to all single parents who have no choice but to rely upon the State Department of Law to support court orders for child support, as well as those persons who need the Department to enforce criminal laws against sexual assault and domestic violence. Mr. Ross is the antithesis of the type of person that should be the Attorney General. This has been clearly demonstrated by his own words and actions in public.

In closing, I am not alone in my assessment that anyone who condones, and contributes to that type of hateful and harmful discourse clearly does not have the judgment necessary to represent the people of the State of Alaska as their Attorney General.

Given his other special interests and his stated opposition to subsistence rights and other Alaska Native issues, I have brought this forth as yet another dimension of Mr. Ross' demonstrated inability to represent all the people of the State of Alaska fairly and impartially.

His clear racial and gender prejudice raise serious concerns with regard to his ability to represent all residents of the State of Alaska fairly and impartially as their Attorney General.

I respectfully request you NOT confirm W.A.R.

I have lived in Fairbanks, Alaska since 1974. I believe we should all be deeply concerned about the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for many reasons already presented to both Judiciary Committees. However, no behavior in front of either Judiciary Committee causes more concern and reflects more directly upon how Mr. Ross may perform at his job than the ethics exchange with Representative Ramras. I commended Rep. Ramras on his questioning of Mr. Ross, however, I thought Mr. Ross was condescending, flippant, sarcastic, dismissive and evasive in his response.

Phil Munger echoed my sentiments exactly in his Progressive Alaska post, "He [Ross] has learned, though, over the years to couch his once explicitly anti-Native stance in the false language of "fairness," constitutional dissonances and equal rights." Ethical Government should be a high priority for everyone but especially for the person whose job it is to lead the department of Law.

This is the 21st century and thanks or no thanks to Gov. Palin's failed attempt at being Vice President of the United States, Alaska is in a very bright spotlight. There is no place in contemporary, reasoned conversation for the antiquated, divisive, rude mutterings of Mr. Ross. I urge you to reject the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General.

Dear Rep. Ramras,
Regarding the possible confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross, you were quoted as saying, "But I think this foretells the larger-than-life relationship that he is going to have with the governor and with the state," he said. "We're in for a colorful, bumpy ride. We won't necessarily be coloring within the lines... There will be more of this to come."

I for one, would like the Attorney General to 'color within the lines.' I would like an AG who is not in the Governor's back pocket and the rest of Alaska can just twist in the wind. Please reconsider and vote no tomorrow.

Subject: Testimony/letter in opposition to Wayne Anthony Ross

Dear Representative:

I am writing on my own behalf to express my opposition to Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska Attorney General. Amongst other things, this letter provides substantiation for one of the claims made in public testimony by Paige Hodgson during the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on April 8 about Mr. Ross' opinions about domestic violence.

I oppose Mr. Ross' confirmation on several grounds:

* His biased and even misogynistic attitudes with regard to domestic violence, sexual violence, and violence against women and children, about which I have more to say below.

* His antigay attitudes, as expressed in his calling lesbians and gays "degenerates" in a letter to the Alaska Bar Association in 1992.
In his House Judiciary Committee testimony last week, he compared lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transsexual/transgender Alaskans to "lima beans," a vegetable he "hates" but would still "represent" if he was hired to be the advocate for "United Vegetable Growers." His un-apt and tortured analogy brings no reassurance to those of us who have already suffered the brunt of his antigay slanders.

* His longstanding opposition to Alaska Native sovereignty and subsistence rights, about which representatives of the Alaska Native community have testified.

* His lackadaisical attitude with regard to possible ethical violations by the Governor, as shown in his replies to Rep. Jay Ramras' questions on Friday in the House Judiciary Committee (regarding Gov. Palin's wearing of Arctic Cat gear, regarding her possible book tour, regarding other ethics-related questions). As has been pointed out by others, part of the Attorney General's job is to advise the Governor on questions of executive ethics. Mr. Ross' answers indicate he will more likely simply turn a blind eye.

* His qualifications as a practitioner of law. His middling scores on the Alaska Bar Association surveys when he applied for seats on the Alaska Supreme Court and Court of Appeals are not simply statistics, but indicative of the opinion those of his colleagues in the bar who have had direct professional experience with him have for his professional competence, integrity, fairness, judicial temperament, suitability for the position, and overall performance. Obviously candidates for Attorney General are not judged according to the same standards as used by the Alaska Judicial Council — but perhaps they should be. In any event, his mediocre scores are instructive.
Further evidence of Mr. Ross' capabilities as an attorney — particularly, I would say, with regard to temperament, and hence his ability to work productively with others — can be found in last Wednesday's public testimony by Vic Vitale, a retired attorney who reported having tried many cases against Mr. Ross. Mr. Vitale described Mr. Ross as "ill prepared in court," "bombastic," and "very rigid," and said that in his experience Mr. Ross "doesn't give credence to contrary arguments." The picture which begins to emerge is that of someone who has closed his mind and does not permit contrary evidence to sway him. Is this the person who should be appointed to direct the state's largest law firm?

I want now to go into further discussion of his views about violence against women and children.

By way of background, I am an 18-year staff member of the Justice Center at University of Alaska Anchorage, where I am responsible for the preparation and layout of research documents, including our quarterly, the Alaska Justice Forum (http://justice.uaa.alaska.edu/forum/). I'm also responsible for the design and maintenance of the by-now extensive Justice Center website.
As such, I am very familiar with the groundbreaking research conducted in recent years by the Justice Center's Dr. André Rosay and his research partners on sexual violence and violence against women in Alaska (http://justice.uaa.alaska.edu/vaw/index.html), and in fact helped to prepare most of the materials which Dr. Rosay presented to the Senate Judiciary Committee when he testified there on March 25 (http://uaajusticecenter.blogspot.com/2009/03/dr-rosay-presents-violence-against.html).

My familiarity with Dr. Rosay's research findings made me all the more alarmed when I heard the testimony at last week's Senate and House Judiciary Committee hearings on Mr. Ross' appointment. I mean not only the public testimony of Leah Burton to the House Judiciary Committee on the statements about spousal rape and domestic violence which Mr. Ross is alleged to have made at a DADS group meeting in the early 1990s — testimony I personally find credible — but also the public testimony last week to the Senate Judiciary Committee of Paige Hodgson, who discussed comments made by Mr. Ross at a panel discussion a few years ago at University of Alaska Anchorage. According to Ms. Hodgson, Mr. Ross, who was one of the panel presenter, remarked that domestic abuse was on the rise because the equal rights movement "emasculated men" and caused them in turn to beat their wives. He further insinuated that women lied about domestic violence in order to gain advantage in child custody cases. On questioning by the committee, Ms. Hodgson stated that she had asked the university to set up the panel discussion, and that it was organized by Dr. Sharon Araji. Dr. Araji was at that time a sociology professor at UAA but has since joined the faculty of University of Colorado in Denver. In an attempt to verify the testimony, I wrote to Dr. Araji last week, and today received an email in reply, in which Dr. Araji wrote:

Yes, he was on the panel that was a community workshop. Andre [Rosay] and Pam [Kelley] are well aware of this workshop as [the] Justice [Center] also participated in it. I think it was Fall of 2005 — it was in conjunction with the PBS documentary "Breaking the Silence". This was about children's experiences when they were given to abusive parents in contested custody battles. I don't remember what Wayne's words were exactly, but his attitude was quite cavalier and placed the blame anywhere but on the abusive husbands/partners.

Research on the UAA website confirms that the event, cosponsored by the UAA Sociology Department and the Justice Center, was held on the UAA campus on October 14, 2005 in advance of KAKM's broadcast of "Breaking the Silence: Children's Stories" the following week. The event included a showing of the documentary, followed by a panel discussion and discussion with the audience. Justice Center faculty member Pamela Kelley, J.D. was among the panelists, along with Dr. Araji and Mr. Ross. I spoke with Professor Kelley this afternoon about the panel. Like Dr. Araji, she has no recollection of a specific remark by Mr. Ross about the equal rights movement "emasculating men," but she indicated that Mr. Ross' comments on the panel were much as both Paige Hodgson and Dr. Araji characterized them, "hook line and sinker" taking an extremist "dads' rights" position that excused abusive men from any responsibility for domestic violence and abuse, and alleging that accusations of such crimes were generally fabricated in order to gain advantage in divorce or child custody battles — regardless of evidence to the contrary.

This should come as no surprise to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee and others who heard Mr. Ross' testimony last Wednesday, April 8, because many of his statements there echoed such opinions -- for example, Mr. Ross contended that Office of Children's Services workers, who are tasked with protecting children from abuse, are actually trying to remove children from families in order to "get money from the legislature" or that at least some people are accused of child abuse "just because they offended an OCS worker." Of course there are men who prove to be innocent of charges of abuse and domestic and sexual violence brought against them. But Mr. Ross, who claimed in his testimony that "all my clients are innocent" (by implication, even those who were found guilty in court), appears to have a strong bias against even entertaining the possibility of guilt on the part of a husband, boyfriend, or father accused of these serious crimes, regardless of the evidence. Mr. Ross also showed considerable ignorance of the facts regarding sexual violence in the state -- for example, that Alaska has the dubious distinction of having the highest rates of sexual assault in the nation. "I've heard that," he told the committee, "and I have no way to verify if that's correct." (Committee members, of course, had received ample proof just two weeks before when Dr. Rosay presented UAA research to them.) Asked by Sen. Lesil McGuire "how you intend to tackle and educate yourself" about these issues, Mr. Ross evaded the question, telling the committee how after his few days on the job so far, he now knew "where the men's room was" and was learning how to use the state email system, commenting that "learning new things" was part of the fun of the job. Once again the word "cavalier" comes to mind.

Is someone with such a proven bias qualified to take on the role of Alaska's chief law enforcement officer, and head of the department charged with prosecuting these crimes? Research shows that less than 30 percent of founded cases of sexual violence cases reported to the Alaska State Troopers actually result in a conviction (http://justice.uaa.alaska.edu/forum/25/1-2springsummer2008/b_attrition.html). Might we not expect conviction rates for founded cases to go down even further under an Attorney General who, biased to believe all the accused to be innocent regardless of evidence, might well pressure the district attorneys under his supervision to "pull their punches"?

Mr. Ross claims that he can fairly represent and protect the rights of all Alaskans, including all of those he has shown enmity, disregard, and contempt toward throughout his long career. I am not so confident.

I urge you to vote against Mr. Ross' confirmation as Attorney General.

Sincerely,

Melissa S. Green

Subject: Attorney General Nomination

Hello!

I am writing regarding the nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross for Alaska Attorney General. I vehemently oppose this person's nomination and confirmation. This person does not represent the views of the average Alaskan, republican or democrat or independent or libertarian. This person cannot carry out the duties of Attorney General. He has shown over the years his true colors. The appointment and confirmation of this person will serve to cement the view of the rest of the USA that Alaska is full of narrow minded individuals such as Mr. Ross and Ms. Palin. It would be a travesty of Justice to have this person serve when he has shown time and again that his opinions and beliefs color all of his statements, including those of his work, and he cannot be nonpartisan, nonjudgemental, unbigoted. He has gone on the public record as against Natives, women's rights, and sexual orientation as a protected status. His ideology is the same as that of the South in the early 20th century - exclusionary, self-rightous, bigoted, narrow minded, and holier-than-thou. Alaska deserves better than that!!

I hope that, as elected officials, you will search your hearts and make the choice that is best for Alaska: W.A. Ross should not be Alaska's Attorney General.

I appreciate you taking the time to read my statements.

Sincerely,

Lori Gregory

Subject: Confirmation hearings for Wayne A. Ross

Honorable members of the Alaska State Legislature,

I am writing about the confirmation hearings and proposed appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General of Alaska.

First, let me say that I am a resident of this great state, not someone from outside.

Second, while I am sure that Mr. Ross has some fine qualities, I don't believe that he should be confirmed as OUR Attorney General. I say OUR A.G. because, like all civil servants, we the citizens are his employers. As one of his employers, I think he is fundamentally incapable of equally representing the ALL of the citizens of Alaska, let alone ensuring that every citizens basic constitutional rights are not trampled on. Further, I believe that Mr. Ross is incapable of representing the citizens of this state whenever our rights contradict the chosen path of our Governor.

I find it intolerable that a person who has publically stated "If you can't rape your wife, who can you rape?" would be seriously considered for the position of A.G.

I find it unexplainable that a person who has publically supported a group that advocates committing domestic violence against their wives and children as a means of silencing and forcing familial compliance to avoid "governmental interference" (i.e. being forced to share custody and/or pay child support) would be seriously considered for this position.

I find it inexcusable that someone who has publically made racist comments about minorities would be considered for this position.

I find it unbelievable that a person who believes that the federal government is our enemy would be considered for this position.

I find it laughable that a person who has a long standing membership in a paramilitary group treading the narrow line between "self defense" and being a anti-government militia would be considered for a position within the government.

In short, please do not confirm this individual as OUR A.G. Alaska has no dearth of competent lawyers. Let's all encourage the Governor to choose one who is not a misogynist, domestic violence supporting, racist.

Thank you for your consideration and time,
Sincerely,
Lacy Hamner

How can a perspective Attorney General think it would be OK to say "our Legislators should IGNORE the law and do what the Governor wants"? That is not the Attorney General we need, his job is not to be the Governors "Yes Man" but to keep her and the State Out of Trouble. He obviously is not a good choice. Do Not confirm Wayne Anthony Ross, our State has been in the news for the wrong reasons enough.

Please add my comment below to the public record.

Dear Members of the House and Senate Judiciary Committees,

I am writing to urge you strongly to vote NO on the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General.

I have followed the political aspirations of Mr. Ross throughout the twenty years that I have lived in Alaska. I must say that I have been appalled many times by his divisiveness, his racist and misogynistic overtones, and with the degree of bullying language that he has often used. It is very clear that Mr. Ross has strong and sometimes extreme political beliefs, including those regarding native sovereignty rights, domestic violence issues, and gay rights.

A person who serves as Attorney General must protect the rights of ALL citizens of Alaska, without prejudice. Objectivity and deference to federal and state law are required of anyone serving in that capacity, by definition of the position. It is clear that Mr. Ross' personal beliefs would preclude his ability to be objective in that position. His appointment would disenfranchise a huge proportion of the Alaska population. The potential for the Attorney General to make politically-biased decisions and court appointments could undermine the rights of many citizens of this state.

I also take exception to this appointment based on the fact that Mr. Ross appears to have no previous administrative experience, and the fact that he does not seem to have experience in other areas of law, including tax law and land use law, which are issues primary to this state.

I hope that you will choose to uphold the rights and concerns of ALL the citizens of the state that you represent, and vote "NO" on this appointment.

Sincerely,
Barbara Hanson

Subject: Please vote "NO" on Wayne Anthony Ross Appointment

Please add my comment below to the public record:

Dear Members of the House and Senate Judiaciary Committee,

I am writing to urge you strongly to vote "NO" today on the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General.
Mr. Ross has alienated huge segments of the Alaska citizenry with his divisive and bombastic statements. It is clear that he would have a great degree of difficulty (at best) separating his political beliefs from the duty of Attorney General, which is to act as the legal representative of ALL Alaskans.

Just this week, Mr. Ross further displayed his appalling lack of fitness for this position by publicly downplaying the importance of Alaska State law as regards legislative appointments. He actually stated that the "legality or illegality" of the appointment was not important, but rather, the important thing was to have an appointment made. Is someone with this type of blatant disregard for the law REALLY going to be seriously considered for the top legal position in this state? In my opinion, this type of statement should get him disbarred from legal practice, much less for consideration as Alaska's Attorney General.

I also urge you to please look at the following weblink. It is a scan of the actual 1993 letter from Mr. Ross to the Bar Association Journal, in which he calls gays "degenerates". The letter actually goes well beyond that, as Mr. Ross states that the Anchorage Homosexual Rights Ordinance "gives extra rights to a group whose lifestyle was a crime only a few years ago". This certainly leads me to believe that he would not support the LEGAL rights of people whose lifestyle he does not personally approve of. He goes on to state that gay people's rights are "certainly immoral in the eyes of anyone with some semblance of intelligence and moral character". This type of language is absolutely obnoxious, and certainly not the type of discourse that I expect to hear from someone of the caliber of an Attorney General. If the Judiciary Committee approves of this appointment, I can only imagine the numerous lawsuits that this type of language and attitude by the Attorney General would provoke.

Dear Representative,

I urge you to vote NO on the confimation of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General. His record and his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee both indicate that he is unsuited to be the State of Alaska's chief legal officer.

He is unfit to serve as Attorney General because of

1. His opposition to the subsistence rights given to rural residents by ANILCA;
2. His characterization of the US government as Alaska's "enemy";
3. The racism expressed in his public statements over the past 20 years, including his statements to the Senate Judiciary Committee; and
4. His statements in public meetings that "If a guy can't rape his wife…who's he gonna rape?" and "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut." that indicate his prejudice against women, as quoted in the testimony of Leah Burton.

As Ms. Burton said, "His clear racial and gender prejudice raise serious concerns with regard to his ability to represent all residents of the State of Alaska fairly and impartially as their Attorney General." I concur with her conclusion, and ask you to vote against his confirmation as Attorney General.

Subject: Wayne Anthony Ross appointment

Hello

My name is James Helm. I live in Juneau. I wish to go on record as not supporting the nomination of Mr. Ross to state Attorney General. After having seen his stand on issues like subsistence and reviewing a number of cases that he under took while in private practice I do not think he is an appropriate choice for this important office.

His defense of Rep. Kohring indicates to me that he is not on the right side of the corruption issue. We need an Attorney General that will prosecute not defend government corruption. He may state that he was simply doing his job as a defense attorney but this should still be a red flag to anyone that is concerned with cleaning out governmental corruption.

My next issue is with him comes on his record of respecting personal rights of free speech and demonstration. The specific issue is again his defense of a man in Soldotna that threw water on peaceful anti-war protestors during winter. This man then thought is was so much fun he went back and repeated the action. This time he videoed the incident. This represents an unprovoked assault on people that were peacefully exorcising their constitutionally protected right. Again he may say that he was simply doing his job as a defense attorney, but this once more calls his personal views into question. I do not want an Attorney General that thinks that that kind of behavior in acceptable or defensible. It makes me wonder what he might think was reasonable action to take against people that are protesting actions of the state or it's governor.

I am also concerned about his stance on subsistence. I have not found a single native organization that supports his nomination. His refusal to see the importance and need for a rural priority in the subsistence program makes it seem to me that he does not have a good idea of what it means to live in the bush or to need those subsistence rights to survive. To me this means that he will not be able to truly represent all of the states residents equally. This is a critical issue to many of the villages in western Alaska as it the subsistence fishing and hunting problems as well as the high energy costs that are causing a true crisis in this area.

My final issue with the appointment of Mr. Ross to this post is that he has personally represented Gov. Palin in the past as a personal attorney. Given the number of ethics complaints that have been files against our current Governor and that the Attorney General is directly involved in this process is to me a conflict of interest. The Job of the Attorney General in the ethics process is to help decide if a complaint is valid on its merits, not to simply defend the governor regardless of what is alleged. This post should be totally non partisan and committed to the single purpose of enforcing state law regardless of who is involved. We have all seen what happens when this is not how a governmental legal system is not run this way. The fall out from the Bush justice department should be a clear warning against appointing someone to a post like this if there is any indication that partisan politics will play a part in the way that they run their office or select their staff. The information I have been able to gather on Mr. Ross and public statement that he has made make me worry that he would run his offices in exactly this partisan manner and this in not something that Alaska needs.

Please understand that my objection to Mr. Ross is not based on political party. I am registered as non-aligned / Independent (can't remember exactly how it is on the voter card) and have voted for both Republican and Democratic candidates in elections past. This is strictly about my own personal concerns that Mr. Ross will not be a fair and impartial enforcer of the law, and his possible conflict of interest with Gov. Palin due to prior representation.

Thank you for your time. I may be contacted at (907) 321-4334 if you have questions or would like further comment.

Wayne Ross???????
In the mid eighties I needed some legal advice on a boat I had bought. The attorney I had used previously crashed his plane and was killed. In rural Alaska it is easier to use an attorney that regularly visits your community they traveling to Anchorage and hiring one. This being the case I hired Wayne Ross. Shortly after that a friend told me that he had been in a local bar when Wayneís local secretary invited several people in the bar to continue the party at their office trailer. While at the trailer the secretary allowed the partygoers to go through the client files. He mentioned several facts, which he had gleaned from my file. The next day I had a heated exchange with one of Rossís attorneys and the secretary was fired.
A while later I was charged with a DUI. I hired Wayne Ross to defend me. The day of the trial arrived and no Ross. A guy came up to me and introduced himself as Allen Bailey whom Ross had sent down to handle the trial. This was news to me, as I had not been told that Ross was not going to handle the case. I discussed the case with Mr. Bailey and he refused to take any of my advice. He promptly lost the case. I felt he was in a hurry to make the plane back to Anchorage. I was puzzled. A few weeks later I opened the Anchorage paper and saw a photo of Mr. Bailey and he was listed as the Vice-President of the Anchorage Chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD). I was furious. As a member and officer of MADD it was a conflict of interest for Mr. Bailey to represent me on a DUI charge. Mr. Bailey and Wayne Ross both knew this. I was never told Mr. Bailey was going to be my attorney and certainly not told he was involved in MADD.
I feel Mr. Bailey and Wayne Ross conspired to violate my civil rights, namely my right to a fair trial.

I contacted another attorney on this matter. She felt this was a violation of attorney ethics. Six attorneys signed statements that what Mr. Bailey and Wayne Ross did were beneath the standards that attorneys set for themselves. At this point my father who was ill asked me to not follow through with this. As it turned out this was his dying wish as he passed away a short time later.
I feel Wayne Ross is morally and ethically unfit to be the Attorney General of the State of Alaska.

I have to laugh when Governor Palin claims that where ethics are concerned Wayne Ross is squeaky-clean. She must be talking about Republican ethics where if youíre not in prison youíre squeaky clean.

I am a former client of Wayne Ross. His firm failed to maintain client confidentality in my case. They also sent an attorney to represent me that had a major conflict of interest, which was not disclosed to me at the time.
I don't feel Mr. Ross had neither the moral fiber or the high standard of ethics required for someone to serve as Attorney General for the State of Alaska.

Subject: Wayne Anthony Ross' 4/10/09 letter to the legislature

April 14, 2009

Dear Senators and Representatives:

I testified telephonically to the Senate Judiciary Committee last Wednesday during the public testimony period on the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross as our state's Attorney General.

I came forward because I felt it was my responsibility as an Alaskan citizen, since the office of the Attorney General within the Department of Law is an extremely important one that will affect the lives of countless Alaskan's.

My main concern was Mr. Ross's attitudes towards women, domestic violence, divorce, child custody, child abuse and child protective services. I reiterated things he had spoken about at a 10/2005 community forum held at UAA on domestic violence and child custody which did not lead me to believe he had a good understanding of these issues, even after his being in family law practice for many years.

Some of Ross's statements indicated to me he had antiquated if not patronizing and sexist views of women, and held on to numerous harmful myths about domestic violence, not the least of which was his claims about rampant abuse of the protective order process and current child custody statutes both newer and older that the legislature intended to protect abuse victims. That claim simply is not borne out in statistics compiled by other citizen lobbyists on past DV bills, nor in the professional literature on the subject.

I did not know at the time of my testimony that a former lobbyist was coming forward recalling some very extreme statements he made about violence against women at a meeting of a father's rights group.
I also did not have time that day to hear the Senate Judiciary Committee's questions of Mr. Ross during the earlier confirmation hearing.

I have since learned that Mr. Ross wrote a letter to you including reference to me in his derision of former lobbyist Leah Burton.
The letter rambles for 4 pages about his intimate relationship with his wife, claims first to have never heard of Dads Against Discrimination (DADS), then admits on page 2 that he does recall addressing the group.
He is dismissive of me, referring to me as "the lady who attended the UAA forum" and claims not to recall the date of the forum.

I was not just "some lady" in attendance. I was instrumental in the concept for and the organization of that forum, obtaining and coordinating a pre-release of a PBS documentary on the issues with the producer and KAKM, coordinating the concept of the forum with UAA and the Domestic Violence Awareness Committee, and serving as a panelist following after Mr. Ross' talk while he listened on.

Some discussion that evening involved the recent passage of 2004 legislation that provided greater protections to domestic violence victims and their children during contested custody proceedings. I co-authored that legislation with a local family law attorney and former Municipal Prosecutor, it was sponsored by Sen. McGuire, and it passed unanimously through every committee hearing in both the House and Senate and passed unanimously in a full vote of both bodies. Believe me, I was listening very closely, not only because I felt responsible for the success of the event, but because I had to follow Mr. Ross in the panel discussion.

His rebuttal to my testimony in that letter and his answers to numerous questions posed to him by Senate Judiciary members on these issues only further serves to reinforce my recollections as accurate. In fact, his letter does nothing to deny his poor grasp of the issues.

I went back and listened to his own testimony from last Wednesday. Various members of the Senate Judiciary asked him multiple questions about domestic violence, child abuse, child protection workers/agencies, his family law practice, sex offenders and sexual assault. Every opportunity he had to answer their questions, instead of focusing on the needs of abuse victims, he spoke immediately to the needs of the accused with refrains of "false allegations", " vicious allegations", "all my clients are innocent", "litigants abusing the system", "racing to the courthouse", "I didn't have much sympathy for those kinds of cases" and themes of family preservation at the expense of child protection. These refrains are similar to those oft-repeated by father's rights groups, anti-Child Protection Service/Parent's Rights groups and their attorneys who speak out nationally against legislation, court reforms and programs that assist domestic violence victims and their children. I found his testimony very disturbing on these issues.

It has become painfully clear that it is Mr. Ross' own words that continue to cause Alaskans grave concerns about how he will handle and uphold the laws of the state when it comes to our most victimized populations. Given Alaska's horrid statistics on domestic violence, sexual assault and child abuse, we can not afford as a state to go backward in time.

I urge you not to vote for confirmation.

Sincerely,

Paige R. Hodson, SRA

Dear Representatives,

Please give Sarah Palin another chance to nominate/appoint another Attorney General. She is being advised by the new Chairman of the Republican Party to do the right thing. If you vote not to confirm Wayne Anthony Ross, she will be forced to appoint another person for this job. His actions and statements yesterday should prove to you that he would not serve the best interests of the State. He will serve the Governor's interests first. Our state has become a laughingstock to the world. Please do not allow your names to be associated with a truly abhorrent choice for our State's head attorney.

Committee on Confirmation: Attorney General, dated 4-10-09
bill # / subject — public hearing date

Members of the Judiciary Committee,

Please do not recommend the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General.

Did you know that according to national statistics:

• Approximately 4 million women are victims of domestic violence each year.

• Every 12 seconds, a woman is beaten by her husband or boyfriend.

• 25 percent of American women report being raped or physically assaulted by a husband or boyfriend at some point in their lives.

• Domestic violence is the leading cause of injuries to women ages 15-44, more common than automobile accidents, mugging, and cancer deaths combined.

• A boy who witnesses his father's domestic violence is 10 times more likely to engage in domestic violence than a boy from a nonviolent home.

• Studies show that child abuse occurs in 30-60% of family violence cases.

And.....

ALASKA RANKS NUMBER ONE IN THE NATION FOR RAPE

It has been reported that Mr. Ross made statements which encourage and promote the actions stated in these statistics. You have heard testimony from several individuals who heard Mr. Ross make statements like these:
"If a guy can't rape his wife...who's he gonna rape?" and "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut."
Appointing Mr. Ross as Alaska's Attorney General undermines Alaskan civil rights for women, Alaska natives, gays and children.
Appointing Mr. Ross as Alaska's Attorney General throws Alaska back into the dark ages.

Please do not confirm Mr. Ross's nomination.

I am writing to express my concerns about the appointment of Wayne A. Ross as Attorney General of Alaska. A confirmation of this appointment will be detrimental to the people of the State of Alaska. Please do not confirm this appointment.

1. Mr. Ross has taken a position that will undermine the subsistence rights of Alaska Natives.
2. Mr. Ross has taken a position that is not respectful of the rights of gay, lesbian and transgender Alaskans.
3. Mr. Ross has taken a position will perpetuate and perhaps increase the incidence of domestic violence in Alaska.

The people of Alaska --which include many different groups-- deserve better than the likes of Wayne Anthony Ross serving our interests as Attorney General.

Mr. Ross has a record of discrimination against gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender Alaskans and the Native community has spoken forcefully against his appointment because of Mr. Ross's poor record on subsistence issues and his divisiveness.

We do not appreciate Mr. Ross' statement in the state Bar Association newsletter referring to GLBT Alaskans as "degenerates" and describing being gay as a "perversion." This from a person being considered for the office of Attorney General? Such baseless and divisive statements are inflammatorily prejudicial and reflect poor reasoning skills as well as bad executive judgment..

Dear Representative Ramras,

I have listened with interest to the testimony of Wayne Anthony Ross in addition to those speaking both on his behalf and those with concerns.
During this process one thing has become crystal clear to me:

For the sake of all Alaskans, we do not need someone who creates such controversy as our Attorney General.

Whether you do or do not agree with Mr. Ross, it is apparent that a large number of Alaskans vehemently don't support him. We need a person in that position who has the trust of those he or she represents. All Alaskans must have faith that their Attorney General will make fair and equitable decisions.

Alaskans have to be pulled back together and not have a political wedge driven deeper between them. Please help by selecting a person for Attorney General who will have the confidence and faith of all instead of one as divisive as Wayne Anthony Ross. There is no good reason to appoint a person who raises such strong emotions and concerns. There are plenty of qualified, fair attorneys in our state who would do a fine job in that position.

Thank you for your time.

Dear Mr. Ramras,
I strongly believe that confirmation of the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross will expose the State of Alaska to serious liabilities because of Mr. Ross's outspoken nature and arrogant attitude.
Please reconsider your decision to confirm this man as the Attorney General for the State of Alaska.

OBJECTION TO: "Appointing Wayne A. Ross State Attorney General."

1. Mr. Ross has known Governor Palin for some time. How long has he known her? How many times has he helped her, as an Attorney?
2. How well does Mr. Ross know Governor Palin? Does he know about her experience in the Alaska Independence Party?
3. Does Mr. Ross agree with the Alaska Independence Party issues and goals?
4. Much of the Alaska Independence Party is intolerant and extreme, does Mr. Ross agree with them? On secession? On subsistence? On A.N.C.S.A.? On Alaska Statehood? On the Constitution?
5. If Mr. Ross became embroiled in a situation such as "Troopergate" would he be loyal to the State of Alaska or to Governor Palin?

The office of Attorney General has federal and State Laws to contend with, would an intolerant and extreme position on any issues be worth litigating? If litigation is a lose-lose formula, would Mr. Ross still litigate?

	Wayne Ross	George Wallace
	(1.) both are "populists."	"the people.
	(2.) equalitarian, the constitution, "all Alaskans."	The constitution, yet, opposed de-segregation.
	(3.) extreme: "he would hire a band of "junk yard dog" Assistant Attorney Generals to challenge the federal rules or seek changes in law in congress."	"Of course if I did what I'd like to do I'd pick up some thing & smack one of these federal judges in the head & then burn the court house down. But I'm too genteel."
	(4.) opposes established institutions, "I intend to challenge provisions of ANILCA."	Expressed contempt for establis institutions & procedures.

I've tried to show some similar characteristics of both men. In political science would be "counter-elites." populists, opposed to established order & its values, extremist, impatient with due process, equalitarian, contemptuous of law & authority and in favor of simplistic solutions. These are not qualities that would enhance the State Government of Alaska. I OBJECT TO: "the confirmation of Wayne A. Ross as Alaska's Attorney General."

A RESOLUTION IN OPPOSITION TO THE CONFIRMATION OF WAYNE ANTHONY ROSS AS ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR THE STATE OF ALASKA

WHEREAS, Kawerak, Inc. is a tribally authorized non-profit consortium whose mission is to assist, promote and provide programs and services to improve the social, economic, educational, and cultural well being of the people within the Bering Strait region; and

WHEREAS, the communities within the Bering Strait region include: Brevig Mission, Council, Diomede, Elim, Gambell, Golovin, King Island, Koyuk, Mary's Igloo, Nome, Savoonga, Shaktoolik, Shishmaref, Solomon, Stebbins, St. Michael, Teller, Unalakleet, Wales and White Mountain; and

WHEREAS, Governor Palin appointed Wayne Anthony Ross to serve as Attorney General for the State of Alaska on March 26, 2009 and the legislature will confirm or not confirm the appointment on April 16, 2009; and

WHEREAS, the Governor's news release, dated March 26, 2009 stated, "As Attorney General, Ross will work with the governor on issues surrounding development of Alaska's rich natural resources as the state continues its efforts to provide energy security for America and lower energy costs for Alaskans. As Attorney General, Ross also will help the governor protect Alaskans' right to bear arms, and he will work tirelessly to manage Alaska's fish and game resources for abundance through science and not politics. Governor Palin added, "Now more than ever, it is essential that Alaska's sovereignty be protected, that there is unity in Alaska, and that we all stand together to see Alaska's potential fulfilled with energy security contributions to ourselves and the nation, while protecting the Constitution"; and

WHEREAS, subsistence is central to our regions existence and vital to the health and welfare of regional residents; and

WHEREAS, Kawerak, Inc. supports a rural subsistence preference over sport and commercial interests to insure residents within the Bering Strait region can harvest fish and game for their health and welfare; and

WHEREAS, Subsistence has priority over sport and commercial interests in the State of Alaska; and

WHEREAS, Govenor Palin's Attorney General must insure that subsistence take priority over other interests as prescribed in law and regulation; and

WHEREAS, Wayne Anthony Ross, represented sport hunters in the 1989 lawsuit that overturned as unconstitutional the state's subsistence preference for rural residents; and

WHEREAS, in a Anchorage Daily News, August 13, 1998 article titled "Fed up, Ross stages battle for guns, family and Alaska pride," Wayne Anthony Ross was quoted as saying, "Rural preference is wrong and not necessary to ensure subsistence foods;" and

WHEREAS, tribal governments in Alaska are recognized under federal law: and

WHEREAS, tribal governments provide valuable leadership, resources, processes and tools to address the socio-economic, educational, and cultural needs of the Bering Strait region; and

WHEREAS, Governor Palin, with her authority to appoint key positions such as the Attorney General, has an opportunity to address rural concerns, namely the rural subsistence priority and tribal sovereignty; and

WHEREAS, Wayne Anthony Ross' stance regarding tribal sovereignty is reflected in his comments in the article titled "Indian Country: 2 Destinies, 1 Land" by Tom Kizzia in the Anchorage Daily News, June 29, 1997 in which Mr. Ross was asked to comment on the issue pending in the Venetie Indian Country case. He said "It's a giant leap backward into the 19th century...They want to see Alaska balkanized into little fiefdoms where these self-proclaimed Native leaders will reign supreme with the help from the Great White Father;" and

WHEREAS, Governor Palin's candidate for appointment of Attorney General should be an individual who exemplifies leadership skills that will seek collaboration with all local governments to resolve vital issues which would lead to safe, economically viable AND healthy communities; and

WHEREAS, Wayne Anthony Ross' record and professional stance on rural subsistence priority and tribal sovereignty exemplifies an extreme bias which will further exacerbate the process to resolve vital issues to our regional communities.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT the Kawerak Board of Directors oppose the confirmation and appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross to serve as Attorney General for the State of Alaska.

Dear Representative Ramras:

I respectfully ask you not to confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General. It has become painfully clear that his grasp of the law is limited, but his loyalty to Governor Palin is not.

Alaska has become the laughingstock of the United States, starting with the November election, continuing through People Magazine, and today with a major story in the New York Times.

Wayne Anthony Ross presents as a uneducated, bigoted and dangerous man. The Anchorage Daily News online comment sections indicate that others think so as well, with many comments opposing him and Governor Palin having been deleted.

Thank you for your consideration.

Subject: House Judiciary Committee Confirmation

To the House Judiciary Committee,
I would like to respectfully request that you do not confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General. The problems with Mr. Ross holding that office are many and in my opinion, as a life long Alaskan, he is too divisive to help bring this state together. We are already suffering a complete leadership void with the Administration and I would hate to think what would happen if Mr. Ross were suddenly in that sort of position.

Respectfully submitted,

Alaska Legislature

April 12, 2009

Dear Legislators:

Friday, April 10, 2009, I watched the House Judiciary Committee's interview with Wayne Anthony Ross, Governor Palin's appointee for the Alaska Attorney General position. I was surprised when, towards the end, Representative Ramras referenced the ethics complaint I submitted in March. I was then disgusted by Mr. Ross's response:

> Representative Ramras: "We have a Governor who is provocative in a lot of her actions. Recently it comes to mind when she was in Fairbanks for the finish line for the Iron Dog she was wearing Arctic Cat gear...Arctic Cat letters..."
> *Wayne Anthony Ross: "It was provocative; she looked very good in them, didn't she?"

The fact that Mr. Ross thought it appropriate to sexualize the issue on the floor of the House during his confirmation hearing is probably alarming enough by itself. It seemed to add credibility to the Senate and House public testimony from multiple individuals alleging disturbing past negative comments and attitudes from Mr. Ross towards women.

However, the focus of this letter is the cavalier way in which Mr. Ross seems to view charges that the Governor of Alaska has behaved unethically.

While this attitude is clearly obvious in the previous comment, it is also reflected farther into the exchange between Rep. Ramras and Mr. Ross:

> Representative Ramras: Presently, General, there are some concerns in this building about the focus of our chief executive because she's taken a speaking engagement in Indiana for a 36 hour period with only 72 hours to go in the Legislative Session. Although she's available by phone, there's a reason we have you here in front of us because we're not interested in doing the confirmation hearing telephonically. Nor are we interested in having a Governor available telephonically with only three days to go in the session.
> So my question for you...as the Governor's attorney as well as the chief attorney for the State of Alaska...how are you going to advise the Governor, with these lucrative offers she has on the table to write a biography and the requirement for anyone who writes a book to take a book tour across the country? Are you going to advise the Governor that this is something that is within her rights and purview or is that something that infringes upon the rights of all Alaskans?
> W.A. Ross: I don't know how I'm going to advise her because the question hasn't been made and I don't know all the facts.

Later on, Mr. Ross gives this response:

> W.A. Ross: ...Whether that's part of her job or not, I'm not making any decisions on that. Whether she should wear Arctic Cat or I should get in trouble for wearing a Steton, I'm not making any decisions on that. If the questions come to us maybe we'll have to make a decision at that time. I'm sure she feels appreciative that you guys are going to miss her for two days while she's outside giving a speech. She's never talked to me about it and I'm sure you'll be in her heart and mind the whole time.

Again, he is clearly not taking any of this seriously. He also states that he is not making any decisions on advising the Governor whether or not the above behavior is ethical.

Here is the rest of the exchange:

> Ramras: I would look forward to an opinion from the Department of Law on that point...whether the Dept. of Law will endorse a chief executive writing a book and making a multi-city book tour while she's serving in the capacity of the chief executive. On that point we would like to get an opinion from the Department of Law going forward as we have a new Attorney General.
>
> Ross: I think I have a lot more important issues as Attorney General then deciding whether or not the Governor should write a book.
>
> Ramras: I didn't ask you if she should write a book. I asked you if she may take prolonged absences from the State of Alaska on a book tour.
> Ross: I don't have all of the knowledge of the issues facing the Department of Law, but when it comes time that I have plenty of extra time for such things I will certainly devote the time appropriate to such an issue

I believe that Mr. Ross needs to read the job description for the State Attorney General a little closer. In a 2007 letter and attachments from the former Attorney General (page 6), Talis Colberg explains his role as AG to Governor Sarah Palin as the person who is supposed to assist her in understanding her responsibilities regarding her own ethical behavior:

> Since I serve as your designated ethics supervisor*, I want to remind you that the Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act requires that all state employees report to their designated ethics supervisors any outside employment or services benefiting their personal or financial interests by July 1 of each year.*

So, one of the functions of the Attorney General is to serve as the Governor's designated ethics supervisor, which not only has time-sensitive reporting requirements but would require him to properly advise her if there is a possibility she may be violating the Alaska Executive Ethics Act. I believe that requires Mr. Ross to take action on the issue of ethics whether he has "plenty of extra time for such things" or not. It's an important part of his job.

Further, the letter from the former AG lays out more specific guidelines for chief executives:

> However, the Ethics Act also precludes "the head of a principal executive department of the state" from engaging in "outside employment."[2] The Office of the Governor is a principal department of the state. Therefore, as head of that office, you may not be engaged in outside employment. We construe "employment" to have its ordinary meaning.

These definitions are explained in an attachment to the memo for the Governor (page 8), a list of Frequently Asked Questions that looks like it may be given to all new state employees. What's disturbing is that it very clearly raises questions as to the legality of the chief executive officer (Governor Palin) accepting "a book deal." Mr. Ross seems to be completely unaware of this:

> 3. What does "outside employment" include?
> - Any employment for which you are paid, but not your state employment.
> - Examples: a job with another employer, work as an independent contractor, and work in your own business.

Also, Mr. Ross seems to be unaware that established DOL criteria may already address the issue of leaving the state for extended travel on a book tour:

> *The statute (AS 39.52. 170(a» restricts public employees from providing services that benefit a personal interest if those services are incompatible or in conflict with the proper performance of official duties.

Mr. Ross discussed none of this when asked pointed questions by Representative Ramras. Instead, Mr. Ross gave flippant answers, seemed to dismiss the importance of Executive Ethics Act enforcement and didn't seem to understand the requirements of the Act himself. While I don't expect Mr. Ross to be up to speed on all the requirements of his potential job, I believe he should have at least a passing understanding of some of the more important duties. Keeping the Governor out of trouble is a VERY important duty and not something to be taken lightly.

Wayne Anthony Ross's disrespectful attitude during the ethics questioning concerns me for another reason. The Alaska Executive Ethics Act does require that the Personnel Board hire an independent investigator in place of the Attorney General when ethics complaints involve the Governor, the Lt. Governor or the AG him/herself. However, the AG is the head of the Department of Law which still the "gatekeeper"—Dept. of Law employees make the decision whether or not the ethics complaint meets the criteria and is sent to the Personnel Board at all. I am concerned that Mr. Ross may not take the process seriously enough to become well-informed and base the fate of ethics complaints upon unbiased legal criteria.

I believe we should all be deeply concerned about the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for many reasons already presented to both Judiciary Committees. However, no behavior in front of either Judiciary Committee causes more concern and reflects more directly upon how Mr. Ross may perform at his job than the ethics exchange with Representative Ramras. Ethical government should be a high priority for everyone but especially for the person whose job it is to lead the Department of Law. I urge you to reject the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General.

Dear Representative Holmes and Senator French,

I am a registered voter in the Spenard/Turnagain area of Anchorage. I'm writing to ask that you take action to ensure that the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross is not confirmed. I am fully supportive of "big" personalities and of our governor's right to appoint someone who shares her views on many issues, however I feel that Mr. Ross is not an acceptable choice for Alaska. I do not believe, as he claims, that he will be a different person representing the state versus private citizens.
A vote to confirm him would be an insult to women, Native Alaskans, indeed-- to all Alaskans. Please urge the governor to find a more suitable candidate.

Dear Representative Ramras,

I am writing to request you deny Wayne Anthony Ross the confirmation of Alaska's Attorney General. It is my understanding the House Judiciary committee is holding a public hearing on this matter April 10th at 1pm. I am, unfortunately, out of the state and am not able to attend, so I have decided to write to you and voice my disappointment.

Given the outcry from the Native community, and his historical opposition to subsistence preference for Alaska Natives, I see him as a dangerous and disrespectful choice. I think that we should honor and respect the indigenous people of Alaska. To the members of the House Judiciary committee, I am imploring you all to not confirm Ross as AG.

Thank you for your consideration and I look forward to not only see a "no" vote.

"She was provocative. She looked very good in it, didn't she?"

As a woman I am insulted and appalled by his continued disrespect to women. He is offensive and chauvinistic and if this is how Mr. Ross treats women in public, I fear for what he is capable of behind closed doors. I would hope that you to not approve his nomination for Attorney General. Surely, we can do so much better then Mr. Ross.

Rarely have I felt strongly enough to express my opinion in this manner, but Mr. Ross's history of very questionable public statements on many important issues make him too polarizing and divisive a figure. I do not believe he could be reasonably counted upon to uphold the constitutional rights of all Alaskans, without discrimination, when his personal statements and positions over many years show his personal agendas and entrenched beliefs so clearly. After reading his comments yesterday on the potential legal standing of Governor Palin's handling of the replacement for Kim Elton in Juneau, I have become even more unsettled, as he seemed to show more commitment to personal alliances than to the letter, or spirit, of the law.

Please do not confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as our next attorney general.

Honorable HJUD Chair Ramras and Committee Members,

I am writing to express my concern over the Governor's nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross for Alaska Attorney General. In my view, Mr. Ross is eminently unqualified for this important position.

Mr. Ross has gone to some lengths, over the years, to portray himself as outside the mainstream in his personal views and actions. Former legislators, Alaska news media and even the nominee himself have painted him with this brush. Mr. Ross gives the appearance in his word and deed of being out of step with much of the American public, even advocating discrimination and promoting ownership of concealed weapons. One has good cause to wonder if he will focus on these issues to the detriment of other aspects of the role of Attorney General.

Mr. Ross has served as counsel to the Governor in the past. I have concerns that the Governor may seek to use this to invoke attorney-client privilege to avoid or obstruct prosecution in her multiple ethics-related charges.

Mr. Ross has had some ethics quandaries of his own. As a director for the NRA, he was charged with ethics violations in using his role to promote Republican candidates who had not been endorsed by the NRA leadership. Though the charges were dismissed, certainly there are other, equally capable attorneys in Alaska without the taint of impropriety.

Do we need an Attorney General who has been variously termed by the media and legislators as "the hero of his own life", a "goober candidate" and "someone who hates to be wrong"? With all the scandal and mockery of Alaskan politics nationally and internationally, don't the people of Alaska deserve an Attorney General who remains above the fray, rather than being the source of it?

There have been hints that Mr. Ross has been less-than-favorably rated by the Alaska Bar. In trying to research more on this, I noted that although Mr. Ross touts his pro-bono work (much around gun ownership and advancing his own views) he has never been recognized for this by the bar. That seems interesting, considering Mr. Ross's claims.

Do we need an Attorney General who finds it seemly to debate constitutional issues in "Soldier of Fortune" magazine (and apparently, not entirely on the money when it comes to his interpretation).

I am concerned for the potential conflict-of-interest between Mr. Ross's duties as an Attorney General and that of an attorney for Governor Palin's personal matters. Mr. Ross's first duty is to the State, but he doesn't give reason for much confidence that he will exercise his responsibilities with the proper emphasis.

Mr. Ross's nomination has met with consternation by the Alaska Federation of Natives and the Council of Village Presidents, largely over his very public and long-standing opposition to subsistence. He has only recently said he would not make this a central issue if he was appointed to the Attorney General role. How convenient. I believe his appointment is an affront to Alaska Natives, and would oppose his appointment on this issue alone.

Mr. Ross should have reminded the Governor that he is not yet the Attorney General and the announcement on the State web pages are inappropriate at best.

We don't need an Attorney General who is "good enough". We need an Attorney General who is good, and who can help steer Alaska through the various challenges facing us in the upcoming years.

Respectfully,

Cynthia Lagoudakis

My name is Joseph Lapp, I live in Homer, and am here representing the organization Alaskans Together For Equality, Inc. Alaskans Together is a new, statewide group which promotes civil equality for all Alaskans, with a special emphasis on gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender equality.

I am requesting that this committee not recommend Wayne Anthony Ross for confirmation as State Attorney General. Mr. Ross' history of very negative public statements on the gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender community, his stance on native rights, and his views on women and domestic violence make him an incredibly polarizing and divisive figure, and one who we at Alaskans Together for Equality do not think could be reasonably counted upon to uphold our constituency's constitutional rights without discrimination.

Can someone who thinks of you in terms like "degenerate," "immoral," or "perverse," and feels comfortable enough to use those horrible terms in a public venue possibly put that loathing aside as easily as changing a hat between public and private life? I don't have confidence that Mr. Ross will be able to do that, and it's not a risk that I believe our state can take.

In his public comments Mr. Ross has said that this is a time in our state's history where we need to be getting together, and we agree, which is why we hope that this committee will reject Mr. Ross' confirmation because he can only possibly tear us further apart

Subject: Confirmation of prospective AG Wayne Ross

Legislators,

First, allow me thank all of you for your hard work this session. I know this has been a very frustrating and at times divisive legislative session. I appreciate your patience.

I am contacting you because I have serious concerns regarding Governor Palin's selection of Wayne Ross as the replacement for Talis Colberg as Alaska Attorney General. After conducting my own independent research into Mr. Ross's career and personal positions and history I have come to the conclusion that confirming Mr. Ross will not be in the best interests of our state.

Mr. Ross has shown time and again that he has very strong negative feelings toward certain groups who may not be in accord with his personal world view. In light of this I am concerned that Mr Ross's legal decisions will be shaped, at least in part, by his biases. Given his vociferousness in the past I think he will have difficulty administering justice in a fair and impartial manner.

Mr. Ross has stated that he will behave impartially as AG because he will be "wearing his AG hat" during his tenure. He has stated that he will not allow personal feelings and prejudices to effect his ability to equitably administer the law. I truly would like to believe Mr. Ross but he has shown throughout his career that his personal feelings and biases are strongly held indeed and, to a large extent, shape his actions. I honestly do not believe that Mr. Ross will be able determine where Wayne Ross the person with strong beliefs ends and Wayne Ross the AG begins. I fear that Mr. Ross will allow his personal prejudices to effect his office and the fair administration of the law.

Watching Mr. Ross undergo questioning by legislators during the confirmation hearing has only solidified my misgivings about his appointment. Mr. Ross's flippant responses to certain probing questions during his confirmation hearing gives me pause to wonder how seriously he takes the confirmation process and hence the office of the AG itself. And while I appreciate a well developed sense of humor Mr. Ross's repeated flippancy and cavalier attitude during the hearing and in recent correspondence are not in keeping with the gravity of the confirmation process nor indicative of the requisite seriousness necessary in one seeking to be Alaska's top cop.

I do not know Mr. Ross personally and certainly hold no ill will toward the man. I believe that Mr. Ross is absolutely entitled to hold his opinions and world view even though they are not congruent with my own. But the AG does not have the luxury of having a personal opinion. The law is the law. It is not to be shaped to conform to one's personal system of values.

Is Wayne Ross really the best person for the job that the Governor can come up with? I think not. I understand that the Governor is going to select someone sympathetic to her views. But I really believe that she can find someone who fits that bill but who is also more a more impartial attitude toward our diverse cultures and subcultures.

I do not support the confirmation of Wayne A. Ross as Alaska Attorney General and ask that you do NOT confirm him. The Governor surely can find someone else who takes a more balanced approach to Alaska's diverse population and at the same time is able to support the Governor's political positions (not that I'm at all sure that the Governor has a position on anything at this point).

Again, thank all for your hard work on behalf of the people of Alaska this session. I appreciate it very much.

Sincerely,

Dennis Loux

Subject: Wayne Ross confirmation

Rep. Ramras,

I contacted you a few days ago regarding my position on the confirmation of Wayne A. Ross as Alaska Attorney General and wish to add something further to support my opposition to his confirmation.

First let me say that if you do not support the confirmation of Mr. Ross I wish to express my heartfelt thanks for putting the welfare of Alaska above political expdiency. If you have not yet taken a position regarding Mr. Ross's confirmation I ask that you do not confirm. If you favor the confirmation of Mr. Ross I ask that your reconsider your position for the following reason, if nothing else:

Below is a quote from Mr. Ross that states his position regarding Governor Palin's latest actions in the process to fill the Juneau district Senate seat recently vacated by Kim Elton.

"It seems to me the most important thing that can be done by the Senate is not argue with legal or illegal but to appoint somebody to represent Juneau."

If all that has gone before during Mr. Ross's confirmation hearing (i.e. his history of divisiveness and bias, flippant and cavalier attitude toward legislator's questions and flat out non-responsiveness to questions) has not convinced you of Mr. Ross's unfitness to serve as Alaska Attorney General then the quote cited above should remove any doubt you may have.

Mr Ross is telling the legislative body, in effect, that our LAWmakers needn't trouble their little minds with minor details like what is legal or illegal. He and Sarah have determined it's OK so just do what Sarah wants and we will all be happy. I think we need look no farther to see that Mr. Ross possesses the same elastic approach to the law, accepted legislative proceedures and ethics that the Governor does.

If you do not feel the same sense of outrage over this latest slap in the face from the Governor's office that I do then you are not fit to serve in the office to which you have been elected by your constituents.

Sarah Palin has caused Alaska to become a laughingstock to the rest of the world. How long will you allow this farce to continue? We will be watching with interest.

Again I ask, no I beg, that you do not confirm Wayne A. Ross as Alaska Attorney General.

Thank you for hearing me on this matter.

Sincerely,

Dennis Loux

Subject: WAR confirmation

In September 2006 there was an event in Seward that featured WAR and his machine-gun club on private property in a residential area in Seward. There were machine guns aimed on exploding targets with shipyard toxic waste as a backstop very close to families and pets with no forewarning. There were many neighbors enraged by the risks of machine guns and explosives posed in our neighborhood for hours and hours. They were asked to stop by neighbors, but did not. They cited their second amendment rights. However by Alaska statute it became an illegal nuisance as soon as they were asked and declined to stop. In 2008 the neighbor again hosted a machine gun turkey shoot but this time instead of featuring Wayne Ross, Don Young was the guest of honor. WAR (and DY)exhibited a severe lack of judgement and by claiming their rights usurped ours certainly does not offer any confidence that he would properly interpret the law as AG. Please deny his confirmation.

http://dorenelorenz.blogspot.com/search?q=turkey+shoot

Dorene Lorenz removed WAR's photos from her website, but the public comments are still there and there are witnesses that WAR was indeed present and the guest of honor.

Subject: Wayne Anthony Ross- opposed to his confirmation

Dear Members of the House Judiciary Committee:

I am writing you today to ask that you consider voting NO on confirming Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General. I have read and listened to testimony, and I am appalled at his views regarding gay people, women, and Alaska Natives subsistence rights. Alaska deserves someone who will look after the rights of ALL Alaskans, not just those he agrees with. I recognize that confirmation hearings for appointments by a governor can become partisan in nature (whether the governor is Republican or Democrat). I also recognize that it is the governor's right to appoint someone who shares her political views and vision for the future of our state. I just don't see that someone who has the published attitudes about people he has will be good for Alaska.

Furthermore, Mr. Ross's response to the current situation going on between the governor and the Juneau Democrats trying to fill the seat vacated by Kim Elton is alarming in someone who is a lawyer and is being considered for the position of the ranking law enforcement individual in our state. His opinion based on the Legislature's lawyer that the governor is violated the law in her responses and picks to fill the vacant senate seat was: "It seems to me the most important thing that can be done by the Senate is not argue with legal or illegal but to appoint somebody to represent Juneau," - Ross. Based on this response alone, I would hope all partisan politics, all differences of opinion on ideology, would be irrelevant to you. The man who wants to be attorney general DOESN'T THINK THE SENATE SHOULD BOTHER WITH ISSUES OF LEGAL OR ILLEGAL. The same man who says he believes first and foremost in the Alaska Constitution is asking you, the Legislature, to ignore the law.

Alaskans deserves better than this. We are relying on you today to make sure we do not have an attorney general who believes the law is irrelevant when it doesn't suit his or the governor's agenda. We deserves someone who will support the Alaska Constitution for ALL Alaskans, regardless of whether or not he likes them or what they stand for.

Please vote NO on appointing Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's Attorney General.

Thank you

Subject: Please vote no on Ross

I am writing to ask you to please vote NO to Wayne Anthony Ross' confirmation as State Attorney General.

I opposed his nomination for many reasons:

1) He is a divisive character, to say the least. That is the LAST thing Alaska needs, further division.

2) He is a zealous conservative judicial activist and I do NOT believe he is capable of even-handed, ethical behavior that we need in the state's top attorney. I do not believe he has the heart of a public servant--and apparently the Alaska Judicial Council concurs since they have not once sent his name forward as a potential bench appointee.

3) I am strongly opposed to Mr. Ross' opposition to native subsistence rights. While I am wholeheartedly of the belief in equality. I believe that we have a MORAL obligation to ensure the ability of native Alaskans to pursue their subsistence hunting and fishing traditions. (We brought them alcoholism, drug abuse, sexually transmitted diseases and capitalism in exchange for fur, gold and oil--I feel it is the least we can do to give them first access to game/fish in the event of a shortage of said resources).

4) I am absolutely disgusted and mortified by his reported comments concerning women and domestic violence ("If a guy can't rape his wife...who's he gonna rape?" and "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut.") There is NO excuse for such foul, inappropriate, misogynistic comments. NO man--NO husband should need to "discipline" his wife. Women not children and not chattle!

5) I am outraged by his attacks on freedom of speech (defending the guy who poured water on the war protesters). As offensive and emotionally hurtful as his client may have perceived the protesters actions, they still have the right to free speech and peaceful assembly. One of my favorite quotes I discovered in my studies at UAF regarding freedom of speech:

"It is of no moment, in the First Amendment jurisprudence, that some ideas advocated by an association may to some, or to most of us be abhorrent, even sickening. The stifling of advocacy is even more abhorrent, even more sickening. It rings the death knell of a free society. Once used to stifle the thought that we hate.... it can stifle the ideas we love. It signals a lack of faith in people, in its supposition that they are unable to choose in a marketplace of ideas." - David Stivison

Please, PLEASE do NOT confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General. He is NOT the right person for the job and I believe this appointment reflects poorly on Governor Palin.

I know, as member of the House Judiciary Committee, you often have to determine the veracity of a witness, examining, among other things, the motive behind the person's testimony. In your evaluation of Ms. Leah Burton's written statement to legislators and her subsequent telephone testimony to the House Judiciary Committee regarding the shocking statements she says she personally heard Mr. Ross make about spousal rape and domestic violence and, not surprisingly, his denial of same, I trust you and your legislative colleagues will ask yourselves whom to believe, the daughter of Alaska's former Commissioner of Public Safety, Richard L. Burton, or Mr. Ross? I would submit that it is Mr. Ross, as the nominee for Attorney General, not Ms. Burton, who has the greater motive for being less than truthful.

Additionally, I was appalled to learn today from listening to the archived audio testimony of Mr. Ross to the House Judiciary that I and many other Alaskans who do not support the Alaska Department of Fish & Game's disreputable and scientifically dubious predator control program are, in Mr. Ross's words, "enemies" of Alaska. This is my forty-fifth year living in Alaska, a state I love wholeheartedly. It is my home.

Like Governor Palin, Mr. Ross forgets conveniently that not all Alaskans share his views and hers regarding predator control. Yet, in his view and apparently the Governor's, that makes me and many thousands of Alaskans "enemies" of our beloved state. How patently absurd is that? And this man thinks he is fit to be Attorney General? In my view he clearly is not.

To the House and Senate Judiciary Committees:
I am writing this to say that I oppose the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross. I expect our attorney general to be someone who has a logical approach to the law, and who keeps in mind the best interests of the state and its citizens. Mr. Ross's past actions have shown him to be someone who will bend the law to his advantage to advance his own personal opinions, which are extreme compared to the majority of Alaskans. He appears to have a very low regard for a significant portion of the state's citizens, based on his comments about Natives and homosexuals, among others. He also seems to have little respect for peoples' protection under the law from the "freedom of expression" of other citizens, even when those expressions come in the form of harassment or physical aggression. He does not appear to have much respect for the federal government, which would make it difficult for him to deal with many of the state's legal opportunities and challenges. His seems to have experience with sensationalist cases that support his narrow sociopolitical agenda, but does not seem to have experience with big picture cases important to the functioning of our government and economy. I hope that you will not confirm Mr. Ross, but instead support someone who is more qualified as an objective interpreter of the law.

To the Senate & House Judiciary Committees of the State of Alaska,

I am writing this letter to voice my concerns about the appointment by Governor Palin of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General of Alaska. I sincerely hope that this appointment will not be confirmed.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to the subsistence rights of Alaska Natives.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to homosexuals.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to the issue of domestic violence.

I am a born and raised Alaskan who does not believe that the subsistence rights of Alaska Natives in any way infringe on my rights as an Alaskan or citizen of the United States of America. I do not believe that one person's choice of life partner infringes on my personal freedoms or ability to lead an honest, productive and happy life, nor does it infringe on that of my children.

However, words cannot express the concern that I have in regard to Mr. Ross' stated position in regard to domestic violence. Alaska leads the nation in domestic violence and rape statistics. How, in good conscience, can our leadership possibly justify having an Attorney General that holds the beliefs of Mr. Ross? How can our state expect to address and ameliorate these problems with Mr. Ross as our Attorney General?

Domestic violence is a generational problem; I speak as the granddaughter of a woman beaten and eventually killed by her husband. My mother, my aunts and uncles, my cousins and I have grown up without the love of my grandmother. Children are shaped by exposure to domestic violence. Families are changed forever. What is the cost to individuals and society when the cycle of domestic violence is not addressed and treated?

Should Mr. Ross be confirmed as Attorney General, Alaskans will get an Attorney General more concerned with undermining the rural subsistence rights of Alaskan Natives than with addressing the prejudices and challenges that they face daily. Should Mr. Ross be confirmed, Alaskans will get an Attorney General committed to abolishing the rights of gay, lesbian and transgendered Alaskans, rather than supporting the rights of each and every Alaskan regardless of their sexual orientation or religious beliefs. Finally, if Mr. Ross is confirmed as Attorney General, Alaskans will continue to reap the sorrows perpetrated and perpetuated by domestic violence and rape as he fights for gun rights instead of human rights.

Please do not confirm Mr. Ross as Attorney General of Alaska.

Sincerely,

Sheila Reynolds

Subject: Please Do Not Confirm Mr. Ross as Attorney General -- From an Eagle River resident

Dear Senators and Representatives of the State of Alaska,

I write, again, to ask that you not confirm Wayne Anthony Ross as the Attorney General of the State of Alaska.

His well-known and publicized marginalization of the concerns and lifestyles of Alaska Natives must be of critical concern to all Alaskans.

I am a born and raised Alaskan, and have been a registered Republican for most of my adult life. I am not an Alaskan Native. However, I care about all Alaskans, particularly those who are most at-risk due to the actions, or lack thereof, of our government, State, and Federal. The government of the State of Alaska must be part of the solution, not the problem. As such, it is imperative that we establish a course of action that ensures that the needs of all Alaskans are best served, a course of action that will lay a foundation for the best possible outcome for all Alaskans. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that Mr. Ross' narrow views and stated priorities will not serve the best interests of Alaska or Alaskans, but rather himself, the Governor who has chosen him, and their narrow-minded supporters.

I have already written to express my concerns about his views on domestic violence. I have met Mr. Ross, I have worked with Mr. Ross, and I can tell you that given my experiences with Mr. Ross, I find it quite credible that he would have made statements undermining women. Regardless of the comments that have made the rounds regarding his comments, some of which could be dismissed as heresay (though I am not saying that they should be dismissed as heresay), my own experience leads me to believe that interpersonal communication skills are not his forte, and that is putting it mildly. Is it in the best interest of Alaska and Alaskans to have a bombastic, dismissive, divisive Attorney General? I have worked with many attorneys in Alaska, and I have met very few who I would consider more potentially damaging to the short- and long-term interests of Alaska.

I am hopeful that the legislators of the State of Alaska will not only deny the confirmation of Mr. Ross as Attorney General of the State of Alaska, but will also ensure that the Governor understands that nominating an attorney for that position that meets her own personal & ideological criteria while undermining those of the best interests of the State is unacceptable.

Hi Jay,

I know you're busy, just a short note on the Ross confirmation hearings.
I am co-chair of a hunting and fishing organization that disagrees with some of Governor Palin's and Ross' opinions on wildlife management, but I'm writing now just speaking for myself.

I just wanted to get across, respectfully (I really respect he way you come across as a Representative, and we agree on much), that I think you really did a disservice to all Alaskans by saying today *prior *to public testimony that you looked forward to nominating Ross for AG. I have seen where the public process of input and testimony on various issues has been watered down. People don't feel their voice is really heard. And often it is because of statements like you made earlier today alluding that the public wouldn't have any influence inre your vote on confirmation.

I should say that I really respect Ross for speaking his mind. For being the type of man who doesn't ride the fence, even if I disagree with him on some issues. And even though I personally oppose him as AG. For me it is never personal.

This note isn't about whether or not I support or oppose Ross as AG; rather it is directed to you as a man I very much respect, as a legislator, to say that when you state you will vote for something before hearing the input of those you represent...you have taken our voice away, and I really have a hard time with that.

Hope to get with you sometime in Fbks. I'm up north, remote, in the bush, writing via satellite internet. I do appreciate your service to Alaska, really have a lot of respect for you. I hope you would in turn respect those you represent.
Sincerely,
Mark Richards

Dear Alaska Legislators,

I am writing to you as an Alaskan resident since 1956, as a woman, and as a Native American. I am a registered voter in Seward, and have voted faithfully in all local, state and national elections.

I urge all of you, in the strongest terms possible, to vote "NO" in the matter of the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General for the State of Alaska. I make this request in light of his testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, as well has his published statements and opinions. It is my opinion that Mr. Ross has clearly demonstrated his preference for flamboyancy over substantive, thoughtful, legal procedings. I am deeply concerned that his prediliction for divisiveness could have a negative impact on the well-being of the majority of Alaska citizens for years to come.

Please consider this carefully and vote "No".

Dear Representative,

This proposed AG candidate Mr. Ross will prove a terrible embarrassment to your state and your party. I urge you to reject the appointment and request that the governor pick someone fair and competent. If you alienate the women and the native people of the state, you may find the party majority endangered. This person does not appear qualified nor wise. Why accentuate the impression of Alaska as a political joke?

Dear Representative Ramras and members of the Alaska House Judiciary Committee;

I am a twenty-five year resident of Fairbanks, and a registered voter in the state of Alaska. I am writing to you regarding the nomination of one Wayne Ross to the position of Attorney General.

Given this candidate's own personality, history and documented positions on a wide range of issues, and considering the transparent agenda Governor Palin seeks to advance for her own interests, it would be irresponsible, ignorant and insulting to the residents of Alaska to allow this divisive and polarizing nominee to be confirmed.

On the other hand, given the political history of our elected officials, "Corrupt Bastards" behind closed doors etc. I, along virtually everyone else in my community, don't have much faith in the legislative process.

Please prove us wrong.

To Representatives Ramras, Dahlstrom, Coghill, Gatto, Lynn, Gruenberg, and Holmes:

I am writing to express my deep concern over the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross to the position of Attorney General.

Mr. Ross's behaviors over time seem to demonstrate a lack of professionalism coupled with at least an insensitivity to the needs of many people in our state whose values and views differ from his own. Unfortunately his actions may well represent intolerance and lack of respect for others. In many instances these are people who are relatively disempowered (e.g., victims of domestic violence) in the political system, and who require an advocate in the person of the Attorney General. Mr. Ross has given us serious reason to doubt his ability to represent the best interests of all Alaskans.

In addition, his antagonistic stance regarding the relationship between the United States Government and the State of Alaska indicates either an unwillingness or an inability to enter into productive, solution-focused dialogue on complex issues that impact the well-being of Alaskans.

I urge you to reject Mr. Ross's appointment to the position of Attorney General.

Thank you for your consideration of these concerns.

Subject: Please oppose WAR for our AG

Dear Representative Ramras,

I am emailing today to ask you to oppose Governor Palin's Attorney General nominee Wayne Anthony Ross. While in general, I believe the Governor should get her pick for appointed positions, I am concerned that W.A.R. is far too radical and ideological to effectively or fairly work for the people of Alaska.

As a gay Alaskan and respected member of the Fairbanks community, I am deeply offended that W.A.R. referred to gay Alaskans in a letter to the Alaska Bar Association as 'degenerates' and 'immoral.' I was born the way that God and nature made me – being gay is not a 'perversion' as W.A.R. stated in his letter. As a (fairly young) 34 year old Alaskan, Ross sounds like such a "wacko extremist" that it makes me laugh, but clearly such hateful speech is dangerous and even promotes discrimination and violence. To me and other reasonable Alaskans it would be a travesty to see such an extremist appointed to this important position. We need an Attorney General who will represent all Alaskans and our interests, not his own well documented extreme agenda.

Clearly Alaska Natives do not feel that WAR could fairly represent their interests and such a divisive figure would be very unhealthy to Native/non-Native relations in our state. Lets not go there.

W.A.R. has come up for two recent judicial advancements, but was not recommended by the Alaska Bar Association, who gave him only mediocre ratings.

Alaska deserves better! I urge you to oppose Wayne Anthony Ross for our Attorney General.

Subject: 6 Please Vote No on Ross as AG

Dear Representatives:
My name is Ronald T. Stanek, and I strongly oppose the nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska Attorney General!! Please Do Not Confirm His Appointment.
He does not represent me or my interests.
I have lived in Anchorage for over 30 years. I moved to Alaska for jobs related to my university degrees in wildlife and parks management.
I worked in those fields in the State and Federal governments for 29 years.
I am an avid outdoorsman, actively participating in hunting, sport and commercial fishing, shotgunning, hiking, birding, boating, and many other outdoor activities.
I am also knowledgeable in the human cultural characteristics of Alaska having been an applied anthropologist for almost all of my working career in Alaska, and additional time in Africa.

Mr. Ross' past actions and current views toward natural resource management have resulted in very damaging natural resource management practices and relationships among several public interest groups and Government agencies.
His (and his associates') actions in removing the Rural Subsistence Preference only in times of resource shortages have confounded both Federal and State management of sport and subsistence hunting and fishing activities .
Repealing the Rural Preference took away much of the State's right to manage its resources.
Doing so robbed the State of Alaska of Tens of Millions of dollars in Federal funding for wildlife management.
It created a cumbersome, and often confusing dual management system.
It drove a wedge between rural and urban residents akin to the discriminatory, racist practices that persisted in Alaska during the early part of the 1900s.
Other of Mr. Ross' and his associates' actions influenced the State Legislature to deprive the residents of Alaska the opportunity to their constitutional right to a free and fair VOTE on an issue- (amending the state constitution).
If you attribute these problems to provisions in ANILCA, that is wrong, the people passed the Subsistence Law and this reflects Alaskans' recognition of the importance of natural resources as FOOD and CULTURAL IDENTITY to rural and urban residents.
Mr. Ross and his associates (Mr.Rod Arno and others) claim to represent Alaska Sports Hunters and Fishermen. NOTHING COULD BE FARTHER FROM THE TRUTH. They certainly do not represent me and my hunting and fishing partners and my family. In this regard, by appointing Mr. Ross to the AGs office, you will be laying a red carpet for rabid anti-subsistence sorts to influence that office. As you know, or at least you should know or learn, the aforementioned people, and a few others like-minded sorts, have caused untold damage to resource management in Alaska through their positions and influence of committees and the Boards of Game and Fish and the legislature.
Lastly, Mr. Ross can not, as a result of his prejudices, be a fair and unbiased representative the interests of the people of Alaska. He does not currently, nor will he be, representative of even a significant fraction of Alaska residents, but rather of a small, very narrow-minded minority. A number of pending lawsuits challenge decisions made by the Boards of Game and Fish. I fear that

Mr. Ross will not adequately defend the Boards' decisions in these matters. Furthermore, it is likely that Mr. Ross will use the AGs office to advance an effort to remove subsistence provisions in ANILCA, this is wrong and not respectful of the needs of rural and urban residents.
Please vote against Mr. Ross's confirmation as AG. Strive to put forth someone who will fairly and equitably represent and defend the people and laws of Alaska.
Thank You!

Ms. Pierson,

I am appalled by the nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross to be our next Attorney General. Public statements he has made in the past (and during his confirmation hearings) make it plain that he will not follow our laws any more than the previous Attorney General did. Apparently, he and Governor Palin are not clear about what the job of Attorney General actually entails. The appointment of Mr. Ross is an affront to all Alaskans, especially natives and women. I strongly urge the judiciary committee to vote "No" on this nominee.

Representative Ramras:

Although I am not a resident of Alaska, I have followed your state's politics closely, due to Governor Palin's candidacy for Vice President. I am alarmed and deeply concerned about Ross' proposed appointment as Alaska's Attorney General.

For what I have read in many sources, as well as his own comments, I feel Ross is not only divisive, but discriminatory. He has made derogatory comments not only about gays/lesbians, but also about Native Alaskans and subsistence rights. Even more alarming are his views about men's rights in marriage; they seem to condone marital abuse. This is a person who would not uphold the laws that guarantee equal rights to all Alaskans; although Ross has said he would act differently if approved as Attorney General, I seriously doubt he would change such deeply held views.

I know there are other honorable, experienced Alaskan lawyers who would be fine candidates for Attorney General; I hope you and the other legislatures will insist on selecting one of them.

Thank you for listening to my opinion.

I read the testimony of Leah Burton since sending an email to my legislator and now have new reasons that I oppose Ross as AG. As a woman, Ross cannot represent me, because he condones rape and violence towards women. Also appointing a sexist and potentially misogynistic man to a position in Alaska's state government does nothing for women's progress in Alaska.

There is a culture of sexism and racism on our north slope oil fields that is not only fostered but encouraged. I don't know how many times I heard the joke "what do you tell a woman w/ 2 black eyes?" "nothing, you already told her twice." There are still contractors that hire out of The Bush Company. If you're an educated woman who's skilled in a trade? Forget it, if you survive the months or years of hazing they'll eventually find a way to lay you off. This culture will never change if men like Ross are appointed to positions of power in Alaska.

Please represent the hard working women of Alaska and reject this appointment.

But that nonsense has no place in the grown up business of running government.

Outside of the horrifying way it's carried out (aerial hunting and denning) I am opposed to it. W.A.R. makes it clear he views caribou and moose as 'resources' to be 'developed'. I disagree w/ that philosophy whole

Subject: OBJECTION TO: Appointment of New Attorney General

To the Senate & House Judiciary Committees of the State of Alaska,

I am writing this letter to voice my concerns about the appointment by Governor Palin of Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General of Alaska. I sincerely hope that this appointment will not be confirmed.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to the subsistence rights of Alaska Natives.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to homosexuals.

I am certain that you have already heard many constituents voice their quite justified concerns about the position that Mr. Ross has taken in regard to the issue of domestic violence.

I am a native alaskan who does not believe that the subsistence rights of Alaska Natives in any way infringe on any rights of Alaskan or citizen of the United States of America. I do not believe that one person's choice of life partner infringes on my personal freedoms or ability to lead an honest, productive and happy life, nor does it infringe on that of my children.

However, words cannot express the concern that I have in regard to Mr. Ross' stated position in regard to domestic violence. Alaska leads the nation in domestic violence and rape statistics. How, in good conscience, can our leadership possibly justify having an Attorney General that holds the beliefs of Mr. Ross? How can our state expect to address and ameliorate these problems with Mr. Ross as our Attorney General?

Domestic violence is a generational problem; What is the cost to individuals and society when the cycle of domestic violence is not addressed and treated?

Should Mr. Ross be confirmed as Attorney General, Alaskans will get an Attorney General more concerned with undermining the rural subsistence rights of Alaskan Natives than with addressing the prejudices and challenges that they face daily.

Should Mr. Ross be confirmed, Alaskans will get an Attorney General committed to abolishing the rights of gay, lesbian and transgendered Alaskans, rather than supporting the rights of each and every Alaskan regardless of their sexual orientation or religious beliefs. Finally, if Mr. Ross is confirmed as Attorney General, Alaskans will continue to reap the sorrows perpetrated and perpetuated by domestic violence and rape as he fights for gun rights instead of human rights.

Please do not confirm Mr. Ross as Attorney General of Alaska.

Dear Representative Ramras,
I am writing this letter on behalf of the Alaska Women's Lobby to express our concern with the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross to the position of Alaska's Attorney General and to urge you to vote against his confirmation. There are many reasons to object to this appointment.

Following his appointment, it was brought to our attention that at a panel discussion cosponsored by Alaska Moms for Custodial Justice and UAA, Mr. Ross' comments regarding domestic violence were anti-victim and lacked any compassion for the difficult situation many women in Alaska face. During this panel, held a few years ago, Mr. Ross made comments alluding to domestic violence being the fault of the women's movement and that many domestic violence victims were liars. We hope that you will ask Mr. Ross about this panel and specifically question his views on domestic violence. We also encourage you to have a conversation with the organizers to learn more about his comments. As you know, Alaska has alarmingly high rates of domestic violence and to have an Attorney General that does not fully understand the gravity of this situation would be a disservice to the citizens of our state.

In addition to this, it was recently reported in the Anchorage Daily News that "during a fight several years ago over gay rights, [Allison] Mendel helped organize Anchorage lawyers in support of an anti-discrimination ordinance. Ross wrote a nasty letter to the Bar Association newsletter, using words like 'immoral', 'perversion' and 'degenerates'. The language went way beyond reasonable disagreement, Mendel and others said." This public display of disrespect for members of our community is of great concern to the Women's Lobby and again, we ask that you question Mr. Ross regarding his feelings about gay rights and equal rights as protected by the constitution of our great state.

The Lobby is also concerned with Mr. Ross' pro-gun, anti-choice and anti-subsistence rights views. Throughout the confirmation process, we hope that you will take a close look at Mr. Ross' expressed views as they are divisive for the Office of Attorney General and may be harmful to our state.

We hope that you will be probing and methodical in your confirmation hearings for Wayne Anthony Ross. We feel strongly that voting to confirm Mr. Ross as Alaska's Attorney General would be a step backward. We believe his views are out of line with a majority of Alaskans and he is therefore not qualified to serve in this position. An appointment of someone with such extreme views is not appropriate for a position of such authority. We thank you for taking the time to look into this matter further and for thinking of the best interest of the state and all its' citizens while going through the confirmation process of Mr. Ross.

Sincerely,

Subject: Statement Re: AG Nominee Wayne Anthony Ross

Honorable Representatives of the Alaska Legislature:

Prior to the announcement of Gov. Palin's nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross as the Attorney General designee the major joke circulating around local work places & social gatherings was "Oh, she'll probably pick Wayne Anthony Ross", ... and then everybody would erupt in laughter knowing how ridiculous that had to be. Imagine the astonishment in those work places & social gatherings the day it was in fact a reality. Still stunned, I watched the confirmation hearing s of Mr. Ross in both the Senate and House Judiciary committees in an effort to dispel the "wild west" reputation he has proudly cultivated and to hopefully see someone who exhibited, at the very least, basic standards that reasonable minds would expect to see in a choice for such a consequential position. . . A person who is circumspect and judicious in their approach to legal issues. . . A person who has compassion for & is accepting of people of ALL types. . . A person who does not see an enemy behind every rock and every problem as a battle or a "war".

Instead I was troubled that the Governor has put forth a person who comes across more like a cartoon character, shooting from the hip and unable (or unwilling) to offer a clear, articulate response to pointed questions (of which there were too few) without digression into folksy yarns about the past. I was highly disturbed that he sees the US Government (among others) as "the enemy". As this legislature is poised on the brink of voting on whether to confirm this nominee I come away from these hearings with a heavy sense of disillusionment. Especially in light of Rep. Ramras' multiple comments indicating that it was pretty much a done deal that he would be confirmed. Has some deal been cut that we the people are unaware of? I had hopes for some semblance of intelligence & convention to begin to take place after this last year of bizarre politics & divisiveness. I had hopes for the legislature to expect & demand if necessary, that our Governor put forth nominees, not driven by personal ideology, but with the best interest of the state in mind. It is apparent to me after listening to Mr. Ross that he is there first & foremost to protect & promote Governor Palin personally as well as her agendas, with the state's interests coming in second. In the days since the hearings his public writings have also demonstrated an amazing lack of decorum, professionalism & sensitivity required in a high ranking government position. Frankly, they are an embarrassment.

One thing I did hear that I DO agree with Mr. Ross on is that the whole nation is very interested & paying attention to Alaska more than ever. It is imperative that Alaska and its government be taken seriously on a national level in this current economic situation. No good can come from becoming the laughingstock of the nation by elevating this person to a position of such importance & so far out of their league. I don't believe that Mr. Ross is the right person to represent Alaska in this role. We have some brilliant legal minds in this state. Please do not make us settle for less than we as a great state deserve.

I am a 20+ year voter in Alaska . Thank you for your consideration.

I am asking you to vote no to Wayne Anthony Ross' confirmation as State Attorney General.

I was shocked to learn about many of his positions especially when it comes to the abused children and women of our community. Moreover, the disdain in which he holds OCS case workers is appalling. One of my best friends worked for DFYS as a case worker and then supervisor. I know how desperately they need the full support of the State to do an impossible job.

His statements "If a guy can't rape his wife...who's he gonna rape?" and "There wouldn't be an issue with domestic violence if women would learn to keep their mouths shut." should disqualify him without any further examination.

Even if he has experienced a "Road to Damascus" conversion, his history is one of divisive politics. This will mean that he starts out without the confidence of the public. After the last 12 months, Alaska needs public servants who can do their job without the cloud of partisan fanaticism. We need to be able to trust that his priority is Alaska/ns and not an agenda. Mr. Ross has abrogated that trust..

Please vote "NO" on the Wayne Anthony Ross confirmation.

Thank you.

Dear Jay,

If this Thursday, April 16, the Alaska Legislature confirms Wayne Anthony Ross as Attorney General, his bluster, intemperate speech and embrace of extreme ideology will ensure that Governor Palin remains in the national spotlight.

His confirmation will also divide Alaskans and divert them from working together to solve our real, non-ideological problems.

On the plus side, if Wayne Anthony Ross is confirmed, his foolishness would provide months of amusement for Alaska and the nation and could help to elect a Democratic governor in the next election.

I remind you that the Legislature is not a mere rubber stamp for the Governor. When the Governor makes a serious mistake in an appointment the Legislature can come to her aid by rejecting the appointee.

Every Legislator who votes to confirm Mr. Ross carries the same responsibility as does the Governor for the future excesses of this man who has a long history of excesses.

Please keep me informed on this vote.

Dear Ms. McGuire & Representative Johnson:

I am writing you to request that you do not confirm Mr. Wayne Anthony Ross for the position of State Attorney General.

I believe that Mr. Ross does not have the disposition to be able to carry out the duties of the State Attorney General in a fair and impartial manner and for the benefit of ALL Alaskans. The obvious disdain with which Mr. Ross' holds people who disagree or who live lives unlike his own make it impossible to for me to think that he will carry out the responsibilities of the Attorney General.

Mr. Ross' opinion that there should be no subsistence preference bizarre and offensive, since there is literally no other way for people in rural Alaska to subsist. The opinions he has stated are one straw short of outright bigotry. His statements (for example testimony at yesterdays hearing) betray his view of the world: WAR. He likens the Federal government to a bear or giant out to devour Alaskans, and likens himself to a general at war (with the Feds?). He finds gays "degenerate," dismisses tribal sovereignty, and opposes the women's rights movement. If these are the people he does not represent, who are left? Is this really the best person Alaska can find to stand up and fight for our rights when we have been victims of violence or a miscarriage of justice?

Thank you for considering this opinion,

Subject: NO on Ross for AG

As a citizen of the Palmer, Alaska and a lifelong (61 yrs) Alaskan I am writing to urge you to vote AGAINST Wayne Anthony Ross for Alaska State Attorney General. I don't believe it is in the best interest of Alaska to have him as State Attorney General.

Mr. Ross is an EXTREMELY controversial and divisive individual. But not only that, he appears to be someone who scoffs at the law if it doesn't meet his opinion of what it sh ould be. I listened to some of the hearings and I was appalled at some of his responses. I have also re-read some of his editorial comments in the newspapers. His comments about the federal government being 'the enemy' shows that he has a definite hostility towards the federal government. He also seems hostile towards many members of the Alaskan citizenry as you should be aware of the many citations by people regarding what he has written or said. I am beyond calling Gov. Palin reasonable at this point, but I expect that reasonable law makers would rather the State's interests be represented by a more balanced, fair and articulate individual. I am afraid this is not the image Mr. Ross has cultivated his entire career. He has a long and very public record of making inflammatory statements regarding some very extreme political and social positions he holds. Most disturbingly to me, are his expressed views (in the past AND present) about child welfare, domestic violence and sexual assault. We have some of the highest rates for these crimes against women, and children in the nation. I for one, don't really care to be the laughing stock of the US, but not to address this urgent problem because you don't agree it is one, cannot be tolerated. We need a person who's first love is the law, and not some radical conservative ideologies. AND, since Gov. Palin has some kind of mental block about what is truth and what is ethical behavior and what isn't, although some may say have been small issues, like conflict of interest, whether she said Begich should resign, etc, treating her husband like a State official, Mr. Ross will be her main ethics advisor and he stated in the hearings that he had bigger things to worry about as a response to a question about the Governor's activities. We are a nation of laws, our rights and responsibilities are based upon the law. We cannot have the head of the 'law' in Alaska be someone who scoffs at the laws and wants to spend all of his energy challenging State and Federal law based upon what his extremist views of what he thinks it should be...

PS, Rep. Gatto, was quoted in the Anchorage Daily News as saying he gave the "Burton" letter no credibility. I guess he also gave Ms. Burton no credibility in her testimony as well. I suggest you read the highly circulated letter former Commissioner of Public Safety, Richard L. Burton's wrote to Mr. Ross regarding his daughter, Ms. Burton and his experience as a law enforcement officer and commissioner on issues that Mr. Ross has spoken openly about.

You were quoted as saying: "let's hope he grown since then"' Well, I for one don't believe he can grow out of his extremist views. I am not 'hoping' for anything in forming my opinion and I don't expect you to use your legislative position to make decisions based upon your 'hopes'.

Not a good man for top law man. He will be Palin's own Gonzales and tell her she can do anything she wants, just like he told you he wouldn't look into your question about writing a book, or like wearing husband's sponsor's clothing to public events as Governor.

It doesn't sound like someone who has grown to me. Sounds like a bully.

I am a life long Alaskan (61 years) and I am again urging you to vote AGAINST confirmation of Wayne Ross for AG.

TODAY, according to the adn.com Mr. Ross. said the Democrats should "not argue with legal or illegal but appoint somebody to represent Juneau" ...

The first thing that Mr. Ross needs to learn is he has been nominated to a job that is to uphold the law as the Attorney General of this state and EXPLICITLY NOT offer his opinions on what politicians should or shouldn't do.

This is ANOTHER REASON he is an inappropriate choice for AG. I trust that you and the rest of the lawmakers in Juneau can see the truth of this.

Having lived in Alaska since 1969, I can say with confidence that Mr. Ross would be the least effective Attorney General in our history. His long standing attitude of right wing representation bodes poorly for anticipating fairness and freedom for Alaskans from all walks of life.

He has been a strong advocate for very narrow interest groups through the years.

As a legislator, you have the opportunity to oppose this confirmation. As a legislator, you have the opportunity to ensure that all Alaskans have confidence they will be represented fairly and adequately in one of the highest offices in our state.

There are many attorneys in this state who would be heads above Mr. Ross as Attorney General. Please seek them out and encourage an appointment of someone who can be respected and can adequately lead the judicial branch of government.

Personally, I feel that this appointment was more of a revenge against legislators by the Governor. A "disagree with me, and I'll show you," type of response. It is a blatant power move on her part and also part of her "planned performance" as she seeks candidacy for a national office.

Please, do Alaskans a favor, and vote "NO!"

Thank you.

Subject: Wayne Anthony Ross Nomination

Dear Jay:

I am writing to urge you not to support the nomination of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska's next attorney general. For your information, this is the first nomination by any governor which has caused me to write to state legislators.

I am concerned about:

1. His position that some people are subhuman: Of great concern to me is his statement of a number of years ago that gays are ³degenerates² and ³immoral² As you know, he recently refused to answer questions at a Senate hearing as to whether that still represented his personal opinion.

The only reasonable conclusion one can draw from his refusal is that it does in fact represent his current thinking. That in and of itself should be enough to disqualify him to be the state's chief law enforcement officer and legal advisor to the governor.

Let's say for a moment that instead of gays he had been referring to Jews.
Would you be supporting him, especially under circumstances where he refused to tell you if a previous statement that Jews are "degenerates" represented his current thinking. I don't think you would.

2. Domestic Violence: Ross's record is replete with statements that indicate that he thinks the problem of domestic violence is overblown. The fact that, if confirmed, he will be in charge of rigorously enforcing domestic violence laws in a state with one of the highest rates of crimes against women and sexual abuse of minors frankly makes me nervous.

3. Ethics: I know that you are very concerned about executive branch ethics, and have been outspoken in this regard. Given Ross's statements, do you think he will enforce the spirit and letter of the law? I do not.

Do you think he would insist that legislative subpoenas be honored? I do not.

Jay, in conclusion, I think Alaska deserves better.

I am not a constituent but I am a concerned Alaskan and did recently stay at Pikes, and had a wonderful stay...I am writing to express my concern about Governor Palin's pick for Attorney General of Alaska. I believe he is an extremely controversial choice at a time when Alaska needs to pull together to address many challenging issues. I am particularly concerned about his comments regarding domestic violence, child protection, and rape. Your work with the Alaska Children's Trust and on the Fairbanks Mush for Kids demonstrates your personal concern regarding child abuse and neglect prevention. Ross's comments are diametrically opposed to those efforts. I also believe he will only exacerbate the urban-rural challenges. I hope you will NOT confirm Ross for AG. I appreciate your consideration of my thoughts. Thank you. Candace Winkler

Honorable Members of the Alaska House of Representatives
Juneau, Alaska

Dear Representatives:

I am writing in opposition to the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross as Alaska Attorney General.

At this time when we most need to be working together on the issues that face our state, Mr. Ross is a very divisive figure. He clearly has strong opinions on a number of issues, and from what I have heard from him during the course of the proceedings before the Judiciary Committee and from what is already in the public record, I am in agreement with the Alaska Natives, advocates for the abused, those in the gay community and others whose public testimony indicates their very reasonable fear he will not be able to set aside his personal bias sufficiently to represent the interests of all Alaskans fairly. As you know, perception is key in any public office, and it would be unwise to select a nominee who is already perceived by so many to be strongly against them and their interests.

In addition, it concerns me that when he has applied for judicial vacancies his peers have so poorly rated him. Our new attorney general should be someone highly respected by the members of his own profession. It does not appear Mr. Ross meets that criterion.

His reply to Leah Burton's letter and his response to the letter her father wrote afterwards were very unprofessional at best. If this is how he handles concerns from members of the public while he is on his best behavior hoping to be confirmed, I hate to think how he will handle citizen concerns and criticism later.

Alaska is fortunate to have many great legal minds whose fairness is not in question. It is my hope that you will reject Mr. Ross and insist on a better candidate.

It should be noted that I am a member of the Wasilla city council, but that the opinions expressed in this letter are solely my own as a private citizen and in no way reflective of the opinions of other council members or the City of Wasilla.

On that note, however, as a person who has been in public service I was appalled by the treatment of the members of the public who called in to testify before the House Judiciary Committee on Friday evening, April 10.

It has been my experience as a former member of the Mat-Su Borough planning commission, a current member of the Wasilla city council, and frequent attendee of the meetings of other local government bodies, that the fastest way to let the public know you don't care what they think is to announce you have already made up your mind before hearing all the testimony and to be disrespectful while they are testifying.

The chair of this meeting apparently forgot that during public testimony it is the chair's job to listen attentively, make sure time limits are observed, and ask clarifying questions of speakers if need be. It is not to tell speakers that he has already made up his mind, he believes the legislature has already made up their minds, or to be condescending, rude or argumentative with speakers who do not share his previously expressed views.

The other members of the committee had a duty to listen attentively, ask clarifying questions, and remind the chair that his opinions should be reserved for committee debate after the public testimony had all been heard. Instead, members were observed fiddling with papers and Blackberries, wandering around with a book, and even wandering in and out of the room, thus giving the impression that members of the public who took time out of their schedules to testify were simply wasting their time.

The next time this group holds a public hearing, I hope they remember that they are being televised and their constituents are watching and listening.

Sincerely,

Dianne Woodruff

Subject: the truth about General Campbell

Dear Senator Ellis, We are parents of an outstanding Alaska Guardsman and we are sick of the Alaska Guard politics and the lack of integrity by both General Campbell and Katkus. We have sent numerous e-mails exposing the corrupt leadership of their "good old boy club" and cronyism. There are many experienced professional NG members who have left or retired from the AKNG due to the conduct and lack of leadership by these two Generals.

These two Generals have been allowed to get away with doing unethical activities because of Campbell's close ties with Sarah Palin. She has ignored all negative correspondence about Campbell and Katkus's retaliations against Guard members who have filed complaints. Complaints by many have been filed by AKNG. EXAMPLES:

1. "Yes" men being promoted while experienced Officers and NCO's retire due to unprofessional conduct of others and the Generals.

2. Guardsmen are afraid to speak out for fear of retaliation.

3. Generals Campbell and Katkus's supported officers who have allegedly done the following: One was caught sleeping with a deployed enlisted soldier's wife resulting in her pregnancy. No investigation ever occurred and it was covered up by both Generals. A crony was promoted even though he had a history of DUI's. Two very competent officers got out so this crony could be promoted since he and Katkus are best friends. Another (married) officer, while deployed was caught sleeping with another married officer. This officer has been promoted since he is the hunting buddy of General Katkus and one of his cronies. Two officers were caught by the Generals falsifying their personnel records and were PROMOTED by these 2 Generals.

4. Other complaints filed about their unprofessional promotion boards where the most qualified are not promoted but those that either political assist them or are friends with the 2 Generals.

5. Air Guard and Army Guard morale is at its lowest. This reflects the poor standard of what the Alaska Guard was in the early 1990's when they did the High Tower report. So people are promoted who run an organization into the worst condition it has been historically. Sarah Palin has close ties with Campbell, but should he become your Lt. Gov. and should Katkus become your TAG? There certainly is no pride there. Alaska representatives need to have an in depth outside investigation on your National Guard and these Generals. I am a senior AF officer retired, Viet Nam Vet and have NEVER seen such a blatant abuse of inept leadership. Do you have pride? Your Guardsmen, at least most of them, are hard working men and deserve better.

Please think twice about promoting this tin star hypocrite to Lt. Gov.

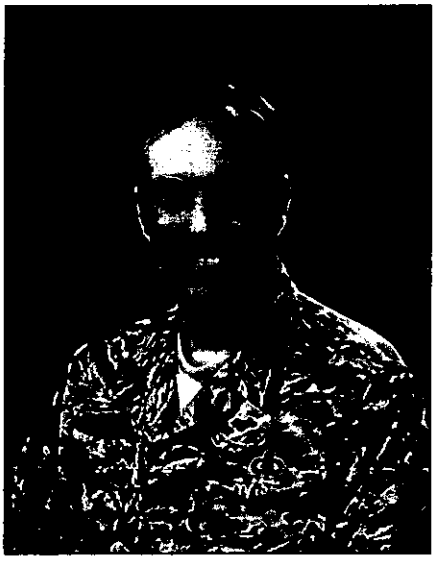
Commissioner Campbell Biography



Lieutenant General Craig E. Campbell
craig.campbell2@us.army.mil

Background:

Lieutenant General Craig E. Campbell is the Adjutant General for the State of Alaska, Commander of the Alaska National Guard and the Commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. He is responsible to provide Army and Air National Guard military forces, a State Defense Force, and a Navy Militia that are fully prepared to protect Alaska from any threat, disaster, or emergency. He is also responsible to ensure that Alaska's National Guard forces are ready to deploy worldwide and accomplish military missions in support of the national defense strategy. As Adjutant General and Commissioner for the State of Alaska, he is responsible for emergency services, homeland security, veteran affairs, a Counter-Drug Support Team, a Civil Support Team, and a Youth Challenge Program.

Lieutenant General Campbell received his commission in 1974 after graduating from the Reserve Officer Training Program at the University of Tulsa, where he earned a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science degree. Upon completion of the basic Air Traffic Control Officer Program, he was assigned to Travis AFB, where he received certifications in both the air traffic control tower and radar approach control operations. His subsequent assignments included numerous operational and staff positions in air traffic control at K. I. Sawyer AFB, Vandenberg AFB and Elmendorf AFB. He joined the California Air National Guard in 1981 as the Chief Air Traffic Control Operations Officer, 234th Combat Communications Squadron, Hayward ANGB. In 1990, he was selected as Commander, 168th Resource Management Squadron, Alaska Air National Guard, Eielson AFB. His career with the Alaska Air National Guard includes extensive accomplishments, including development of the Alaska Air National Guard 1998 Long Range Plan which was used as the basis for the 2004 Alaska Air National Guard Transformation Plan. Following graduation from Naval War College in 1999, he served as the Executive Support Staff Officer, Alaska Air National Guard until being selected in 2000 as the Vice Commander, 168th Air Refueling Wing, a position he held until 2003. On 3 January 2003, he was selected to serve as the Adjutant General of Alaska and Commissioner of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs. On 1 December 2006, he was selected by Governor Sarah Palin to retain these duties and be her trusted advisor.

Lieutenant General Campbell resides in Eagle River with his wife Anne Marie. They have two daughters, Amanda and Melanie and four grandchildren, Faith, Ellie, Kimberly and Emma.

MEMORANDUM July 14, 2009

SUBJECT: Committee hearing during the interim on confirmation

TO: Representative Max F. Gruenberg, Jr.

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

(1) May a standing committee hold a hearing during the interim on Governor Sarah Palin's designation of Lieutenant General Craig E. Campbell as successor to the office of lieutenant governor? If so, may the committee take any action?

Under Uniform Rule 21(c), standing committees have been given broad authority to meet between sessions. A standing committee could hold a hearing to consider the designation for the purpose of providing information to the committee members and others who may be in attendance.

Any question may be referred by a house of the legislature to one or more of its committees. As noted in Mason's Manual, sec. 378(2): "In legislative bodies it is good practice to refer every main question to a committee for its consideration unless immediate action is required." Referral of a question before a house is made while the legislature is in session, by the presiding officer or by motion of a member of the house. Since the legislature is not in session, the question of confirming a new designee to succeed to the office of lieutenant governor has not been referred to any committee. Therefore, there is no question before a standing committee upon which the committee may act by reporting the question back with its recommendations.

(2) Does the Judiciary Committee have jurisdiction over the question of confirming the governor's new designee?

Under Uniform Rule 20, the Judiciary Committee has jurisdiction over "the programs and activities of the Alaska Court System and the Department of Law, and the legal and substantive review of bills referred to it for that purpose". Along with the Court System and the Department of Law, the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee extends to bills on any subject that are referred to it. However, the confirmation issue is not a bill. The Judiciary Committee could be deemed to have jurisdiction over the confirmation of the Attorney General because of its responsibility for activities of the Department of Law, but it has no jurisdiction over the governor's appointment generally or over the Office of the Lieutenant Governor specifically. Indeed, no standing committee has specific jurisdiction over the Office of the Lieutenant Governor. Note that, under AS 44.19.010, the Office of the Governor includes the lieutenant governor.

On the other hand, the State Affairs Committee has, among other things, jurisdiction over "programs and activities of the Office of the Governor." Since confirmations generally involve consideration of an activity of the governor, exercise of the executive power of appointment, and this confirmation involves appointment of a designee to the lieutenant governor who is in the Office of the Governor rather than a commissioner or a board within a department that has been assigned to the jurisdiction of another committee, it would appear that the State Affairs Committee has jurisdiction under the rule over a confirmation involving a successor to the office of lieutenant governor.

In the House, Governor Palin's previous designee appointment of Talis Colberg was referred to the House State Affairs Committee. 2007 House Journal page 174 (February 7, 2007). Her designation of Joe Schmidt was handled by the House Judiciary Committee. 2009 House Journal page 300 (February 23, 2009).

Note that Uniform Rule 21(c) provides: "A standing, special, or joint committee which acts between legislative sessions may consider any legislative matter which is consistent with the jurisdiction of the committee." The rule provides broad authority for a standing committee to meet during the interim and, specifically, authority to consider matters consistent with its jurisdiction, but there is no specific authority for a standing committee to consider a matter that is not within its jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a committee may be broadly considered to consist of those matters that fall within its jurisdiction under Uniform Rule 20, bills and other matters that have been referred to the committee, and matters that that been assigned to a committee by statute, such as AS 24.05.182 (review of administrative regulations) or AS 24.08.060(a) (measures under consideration for introduction by the committee). However, as a matter of practice, a standing committee has rather freely considered matters of legislative concern that are not specifically within its jurisdiction and that practice has not often been objected to or curtailed.

MEMORANDUM July 7, 2009

SUBJECT: Filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Director

(1) How does the governor's designee for Lieutenant Governor vacate the office?

AS 44.19.040 deals with appointment of a successor to the Lieutenant Governor and states: "If the person designated and confirmed is removed from or vacates the appointment, the governor shall appoint a successor subject to confirmation in the same manner as the person initially appointed." The statute does not set out a method whereby the designee vacates the position, so any method that clearly indicates the intent of the designee to vacate the position as successor to the Lieutenant Governor is acceptable. However, it would be prudent for the designee to notify the Governor of his intention to vacate the office in writing so that there is no question that the designee has made that election.

On July 4, 2009, the current designee, Joe Schmidt, Commissioner of the Department of Corrections, is quoted at KTUU.com as saying, with respect to assuming the office of Lieutenant Governor: "I didn't officially decline, I just relayed some concerns that I had and I'm assuming that those concerns were shared." If Commissioner Schmidt has not and does not vacate the appointment, Governor Sarah Palin has clear authority to remove the designee. AS 44.19.040 provides that a designee who has been confirmed is in line for succession to the office of Lieutenant Governor "subject to the pleasure of the governor." Governor Palin has indicated that she has chosen Lieutenant General Craig Campbell, Commissioner of Military and Veterans' Affairs. Again it would be prudent that the removal of Commissioner Joe Schmidt, if that occurs, be in writing to avoid any question regarding the status of both commissioners. Under the statute, a new designee will ultimately have to be formally presented in writing by the seated Governor to the legislature for confirmation.

(2) What issues are raised if the Governor names a new designee for Lieutenant Governor?

Under art. III, sec. 11 of the state constitution, when there is a vacancy in the office of Governor the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor and serves for the remainder of the term. As a result of this succession, the office of Lieutenant Governor, in turn, becomes vacant. The state constitution does not directly provide for succession to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Instead art. III, sec. 13 states:

> SECTION 13. Further Succession. Provision shall be made by law for succession to the office of governor and for an acting governor in the event that the lieutenant governor is unable to succeed to the office or act as governor. No election of a lieutenant governor shall be held except at the time of electing a governor.

The statutes provide for succession to the office of Lieutenant Governor as the method for addressing the question of further succession under AS 44.19.040 - 44.19.046. AS 44.19.040 provides in full:

> Sec. 44.19.040. Appointment of successor to lieutenant governor. After taking an initial term of office, the governor shall appoint, from among the officers who head the principal departments of the state government or otherwise, a person to succeed to the office of lieutenant governor if the office of lieutenant governor becomes vacant. The appointment is subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature meeting in joint session. The person designated and confirmed is next in line for succession to the office of lieutenant governor, subject to the pleasure of the governor. If the person designated and confirmed is removed from or vacates the appointment, the governor shall appoint a successor subject to confirmation in the same manner as the person initially appointed.

Governor Sarah Palin has designated Joe Schmidt, Commissioner of the Department of Corrections as the successor to the office of Lieutenant Governor and Commissioner Schmidt has been confirmed. Consequently, when Sean Parnell is sworn in as Governor and the office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant, it is Commissioner Schmidt who would automatically assume that office under AS 44.19.042. However, Governor Palin has also indicated that she has chosen Lieutenant General Craig Campbell, Commissioner of Military and Veterans' Affairs, as the designated successor to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Note that, under AS 44.19.040, the designee serves in that capacity "at the pleasure of the governor," so Governor Palin may change her designee if she chooses to do so, but the successor designee is also subject to confirmation.

This brings up the question of whether a new designee may assume the office of Lieutenant Governor before being confirmed. If not, of course, the successor Governor, Sean Parnell, might elect to name a different person as designee. Based upon the evolution of the bill that ultimately resulted in the enactment of AS 44.19.040 - 44.19.046, it appears that the legislature considered the alternative and decided not to authorize recess appointments to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor before the designee is confirmed. In contrast, AS 39.05.080(3) and (4) provide that a person who is appointed to an office that is subject to confirmation exercises the duties of that office until the legislature declines to confirm or until the last day of the session if the legislature does not take the confirmation up. Note that AS 39.05.080 does not apply if a law relating to a particular position contains different provisions, so, as a matter of statutory construction, provisions in AS 44.19.040 prevail over contrary provisions in AS 39.05.080 and the designee may not assume the office of Lieutenant Governor until after confirmation.

Alas, the situation is somewhat muddied by the question of whether art. III, sec. 27 of the state constitution might apply because of the statutory requirement for confirmation of the Lieutenant Governor designee. It provides:

> SECTION 27. Recess Appointments. The governor may make appointments to fill vacancies occurring during a recess of the legislature, in offices requiring confirmation by the legislature. The duration of such appointments shall be prescribed by law.

Does the fact that the legislature by statute elected to require confirmation of a Lieutenant Governor designee mean that the governor has the power to make a recess appointment under the constitution, even though the legislature intended to preclude recess appointments to the office of Lieutenant Governor, or, in context, is section 27 confined to confirmations made under the preceding two constitutional sections: section 25, department heads, and section 26, certain boards and commissions? Is the requirement of confirmation applicable to a designee to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor enacted under the authority of article III, sec. 13, invalid under the reasoning of Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1985), holding that the power of confirmation is limited to the offices covered by article III, secs. 25 and 26? Given the broad authority granted under sec. 13 to provide for succession, it seems unlikely that art. III, sec. 27 or the Bradner v. Hammond decision applies, but these are unresolved questions.

Re: Succession to the Office of Lieutenant Governor

Dear Mr. Nizich:

We are providing this legal analysis in response to questions about proper constitutional and statutory procedures when the successor to the lieutenant governor is appointed during a legislative recess and the position of lieutenant governor subsequently becomes vacant.

I. Introduction/Background

Commissioner Joe Schmidt previously was appointed and confirmed as successor to the lieutenant governor under AS 44.19.040 (hereinafter "the second-in-line" position or appointee), and therefore was in line to assume the lieutenant governor's office if and when it was vacated. He resigned from the second-in-line position on July 6, 2009. Governor Palin then appointed General Craig Campbell to the second-in-line position – as she is clearly authorized to do under AS 44.19.040.[1] This statute states that the second-in-line appointee is subject to legislative confirmation.[2] However, the legislature is not in session to confirm this appointment, and with the recent announcement of Governor Palin's resignation, Lieutenant Governor Sean Parnell is scheduled to assume the governorship on July 26, 2009, leaving a vacancy in the position of lieutenant governor.

[1] AS 44.19.040 provides that if the second-in-line appointee is removed from or vacates the appointment, "the governor shall appoint a successor subject to confirmation . . . ."

This situation – a second-in-line appointment during a legislative recess and a subsequent lieutenant governor vacancy – raises questions about proper constitutional and statutory succession procedures. These are important issues for the State of Alaska, requiring consideration of executive and legislative responsibilities, including the powers of appointment and confirmation, and the implementation of constitutional and statutory procedures intended to ensure that there is no gap in the line of succession for the office of governor. Moreover, while the facts giving rise to these questions are unique and of first impression for the state, it is conceivable that the issues addressed below could arise in a number of similar situations.[3] Because the issues are challenging, capable of recurring, and of significant import to the lawful and smooth transition of Alaska's state government, I am issuing this advice as an Attorney General's Opinion.

II. Summary

As noted above, the issues addressed in this opinion are important for the State of Alaska, requiring consideration of executive and legislative responsibilities, including the powers of appointment and confirmation, and the implementation of constitutional and statutory procedures intended to ensure that there is no gap in the line of succession for the office of governor. In rare cases, it is conceivable that the critical public interest of ensuring continuity and a clear line of succession in the office of governor might not be aligned with the legislature's responsibilities and powers to confirm senior executive branch officials. We examine this important issue, on which there is no controlling case law, at length in this opinion. It is a close call on whether a recess appointee to the second-in-line position can assume the office of lieutenant governor when it becomes vacant without first being confirmed by the legislature. Nevertheless, we conclude in the affirmative.

Despite this conclusion, this opinion also distinguishes between what the executive branch has the legal authority to do, and what we recommend it should do. These are not always the same. In this case, it is important to seek consensus among different branches of government with regard to succession issues. Thus, the opinion examines and recommends other approaches. Specifically, it suggests that if there is no special session of the legislature to confirm General Campbell as the second-in-line appointee prior to the transition between the Palin and Parnell administrations, then he should be designated as temporary/acting lieutenant governor pursuant to Alaska statutes. We believe that this approach is consistent with Alaska's constitutional and statutory designs that clearly underscore the critical public interest of continuity in the principal executive offices of the state. It also preserves the legislature's interest and responsibilities in confirming General Campbell to the second-in-line position, at a later date.

[3] A similar situation would occur any time a governor vacates the office without a legislatively confirmed second-in-line appointee.

III. Legal Analysis of the Governor's Recess Appointment Power and the Legislature's Confirmation Responsibilities

A. Alaska Law Gives the Governor Significant Authority to Make Recess Appointments

The Alaska Constitution and statutes generally provide the Governor with broad powers to fill vacancies in senior executive branch positions during a legislative recess. Article III, § 27 of the Alaska Constitution states that "[t]he governor may make appointments to fill vacancies occurring during a recess of the legislature, in offices requiring confirmation by the legislature." Alaska Statute 39.05.080 reinforces this authority by providing that such recess appointees hold their offices with full authority pending confirmation: "[p]ending confirmation or rejection of appointment by the legislature, persons appointed shall exercise the functions, have the powers, and be charged with the duties prescribed by law for the appointive positions."[4] These constitutional and statutory provisions give the governor the authority necessary to keep the executive branch functioning fully when critical vacancies occur and the legislature is not in session.

B. AS 44.19.040 Seems to Require Confirmation in All Cases for the Second-in-Line Position

The governor's ability to make recess appointments is more complicated, however, when the second-in-line position becomes vacant. Under Alaska Constitution Article III, § 13, the legislature is specifically charged with enacting laws "for the succession to the office of governor and for an acting governor in the event the lieutenant governor is unable to succeed to the office or act as governor."

Alaska Statute 44.19.040 was one of the key laws enacted to effectuate this constitutional provision. It requires the governor to appoint a person to the second-in-line position as part of a two-step process. The governor first appoints a person to the second-in-line position. The statute then refers to the second step, confirmation:

> The appointment is subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature meeting in joint session. The person designated and confirmed is next in line for succession to the office of lieutenant governor, subject to the pleasure of the governor. If the person designated and confirmed is removed from or vacates the appointment, the governor shall appoint a successor subject to confirmation in the same manner as the person initially appointed.[5]

---

4 AS 39.05.080(4).

5 AS 44.19.040 (emphasis added).

The language of this provision suggests that the appointee becomes second in line only after being "designated and confirmed."[6]

Yet such a reading and interpretation of AS 44.19.040 raises an important policy concern. If the second-in-line position is not "in line for succession to the office" of lieutenant governor until such time as confirmed, then the lieutenant governor's seat could lie vacant until the legislature convenes, meets in full session, and confirms an appointed successor. In certain circumstances, this could mean the lieutenant governor's office would be left unoccupied for months. Such a result appears to contradict the intent of the constitutional delegates and the legislature that Alaska's government have two principal executive officers and that vacancies be filled as quickly as possible.[7]

C. AS 44.19.040 Read in Conjunction with Its Companion Statutes Suggests that Confirmation Is Not Always Mandated If a Vacancy Occurs First and a Succession Gap is Imminent

Alaska Statute AS 44.19.040 makes clear that the legislature has important statutory responsibilities and powers in confirming the second-in-line position. The critical question, however, is whether such powers and responsibilities override the constitutional and legislative imperative to avoid gaps in the line of succession to the office of governor.

Although AS 44.19.040 seems at first blush to require that a second-in-line appointee be confirmed before he or she can become lieutenant governor, when read in conjunction with other statutes, passed contemporaneously, that interpretation does not appear to be required in every situation. Indeed, AS 44.19.040 was enacted with

[6] It should be noted that Alaska case law calls into question whether the legislature has the authority to require confirmation for the second-in-line position. See Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1976) (holding that the legislature's authority to require confirmation of executive branch officials is limited to department heads subject to Alaska Const. art. III, §§ 25-26). However, we need not address this issue in this opinion.

[7] Alaska Const. art. III, §§ 9-13 and AS 44.19.040 - 44.19.046 demonstrate that the legislature intended that a plan of succession be in place at all times to minimize interruption in the continuity of the highest executive branch offices. Legislative history to AS 44.19.046 confirms that the intent of the legislation was to prevent succession gaps. "Succession of the executive should not be delayed until the legislature can act." See H. Judiciary Comm., Report on HB 5, 1st Sess., at 1 (Alaska 1959). Likewise, sec.1 of SCS CSHB 5 (STA) am (Alaska 1959) demonstrates that the legislative intent was to minimize unnecessary interruptions to the activities of the state.

AS 44.19.042 and AS 44.19.046 in 1959, in the same legislative bill.[8] Under these statutes, the ability of the second-in-line appointee to assume the lieutenant governor position differs depending upon the situation.

For example, AS 44.19.042 suggests that a second-in-line appointee need not have been previously confirmed in every instance to succeed to a vacant lieutenant governor position. This statute states that when a vacancy arises, the person "designated as next successor to the office of lieutenant governor as provided in AS 44.19.040" succeeds to office for the remainder of the term.[9] On its face, AS 44.19.042 appears to require less than AS 44.19.040 because the statutory language only mentions that the person must be "designated as next successor," without expressly requiring legislative confirmation as AS 44.19.040 seems to do. And while the reference in AS 44.19.042 to AS 44.19.040 could be interpreted to require compliance with all aspects of .040, including legislative confirmation, that would mean that "designated" has a different meaning in AS 44.19.042 than it does in AS 44.19.040. As a general rule, Alaska law does not support such a statutory interpretation. "It is a general principle of statutory construction that 'the same words used twice in the same act have the same meaning.'"[10]

Additionally, the omission of an express confirmation requirement in AS 44.19.042 reflects the different purposes of the two provisions. Read in context, the textual

---

[8] Secs. 2, 3, and 5, ch. 174, SLA 1959.

[9] AS 44.19.042 (emphasis added).

[10] See, e.g., Benner v. Wichman, 874 P.2d 949, 957 (Alaska 1994) (quoting 2A Norman J. Singer, Sutherland Statutes and Statutory Construction § 46.06 (5th ed. 1992)); see also 2A Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction § 47.16 (7th ed. 2008 rev) ("Where the meaning of a word is unclear in one part of a statute but clear in another part, the clear meaning can be imparted to the unclear usage on the assumption that it means the same thing throughout the statute.").

Moreover, in AS 44.19.040, "designated" clearly refers solely to the act of appointment by the governor, as it is distinguished from the act of confirmation: "the person designated and confirmed is next in line for succession to the office of lieutenant governor...." Interpreting "designated" in AS 44.19.042 to mean both "designated and confirmed" would be inconsistent with the language of AS 44.19.040. See 2B Singer, Sutherland Statutory Construction § 51.2 (7th ed. 2008 rev) (stating that where a statute with reference to one subject contains a given provision, the omission of such provision from a similar statute concerning a related subject is significant to show that a different intention existed).

discrepancy between the statutory sections is reconcilable.[11] Alaska Statute 44.19.040 applies when the lieutenant governor's office is not vacant and no exigent circumstances exist that would compel expediting a second in line to the lieutenant governor's office. In this situation, confirmation by the legislature provides a legislative check without leaving one of the highest state offices vacant for an open-ended period of time. Alaska Statute 44.19.042, on the other hand, describes what occurs when a vacancy arises and the need to fill the position of lieutenant governor is more compelling. In this situation, the person designated by the governor succeeds to the office without delay, whether or not confirmed.

The third of the three 1959 provisions, AS 44.19.046, further supports this interpretation. The statute mandates that "the person appointed under AS 44.19.040 succeeds directly to the office of acting governor until successors to the respective offices are elected in a special election."[12] Like AS 44.19.042, this provision refers to AS 44.19.040 and identifies an appointed successor without specifying that the successor must also be confirmed. This statute applies when vacancies occur simultaneously in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor – a situation that requires immediate action if the designated second-in-line official is unconfirmed. The legislature intended this succession to occur immediately in order to fill the leadership vacuum that would occur while the legislature convenes and confirms the second-in-line appointee. From a broad public interest standpoint, this appears to be the appropriate result. When the offices of both governor and lieutenant governor are vacant, circumstances are most compelling to expedite obtaining a successor to immediately fill the leadership void regardless of whether the successor previously has been confirmed.

Admittedly, the 1959 statutes at issue here could be more clearly drafted. But our interpretation best protects what are among the most important interests of the state. When the lieutenant governor's seat becomes vacant, the second-in-line appointee will nearly always have been previously confirmed, consistent with Alaskans' interest in governmental checks and balances and the legislature's responsibility and power to confirm senior executive branch officers. However, in the rare instance where the legislature's confirmation responsibility could result in a succession gap or a vacancy in the executive branch's highest offices, the legislative intent of AS 44.19.040-.046 appears to be for a succession to be made quickly even if legislative confirmation cannot take place.

[11] To determine whether two statutory provisions stand in conflict, the court interprets them together, in context with other pertinent provisions, rather than in isolation, with a view toward reconciling conflict to produce "a harmonious whole." Progressive Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 953 P.2d 510, 516 (Alaska 1988) (quoting 2 J. Sutherland, Statutes and Statutory Construction, § 4703 at 336-37 (Horrack ed., 3d ed.1943)).

[12] AS 44.19.046 (emphasis added).

IV. Alternative Statutory and Constitutional Approaches Should Be Considered

The foregoing interpretation emphasizes the critical public interest of ensuring that there will always be a clear and rapid line of succession to the office of governor. Yet it is an imperfect solution to a difficult problem because the legislature has no role confirming the second-in-line successor in exigent circumstances. Moreover, while we believe our interpretation to be the correct one, there is no controlling case law to provide guidance on interpreting these statutes. For institutional and other reasons, Alaska's current legislature may disagree with this analysis and conclusion. In the present case, disagreement with the legislature on these important issues, in which it traditionally has a well-defined and important role, should attempt to be avoided because any prolonged disagreement between the executive and legislative branches has the potential to create the succession gap problem that it is in Alaska's interest to avoid.

Accordingly, alternative statutory and constitutional approaches should be considered and implemented. Alaska Statute 44.19.026 expressly authorizes the designation of a temporary/acting lieutenant governor in the event the official lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of governor. Moreover, a special session of the legislature can be convened to confirm a governor's second-in-line appointment. We discuss these options below.

A. General Campbell Can Be Appointed Temporary/Acting Lieutenant Governor Under AS 44.19.026

Pursuant to 44.19.026, General Campbell can be appointed temporary/acting lieutenant governor. This statute authorizes the lieutenant governor to designate a head of a principal executive department to assume many of the duties of the office of lieutenant governor "during such time as the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of governor."[13] If this appointment under AS 44.19.026 is made prior to the date when Governor Palin leaves office, General Campbell will immediately become temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor when Lieutenant Governor Parnell assumes the governorship. Consequently, Governor Palin's intention to have General Campbell serve [13] AS 44.19.026 provides: "The lieutenant governor may designate a head of a principal executive department, or more than one such officer in the alternative, who shall temporarily be custodian of the state seal and perform the authenticating functions of the lieutenant governor during such time as the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of governor, acts as governor, is absent from the state, or otherwise is not available at the state capital to perform the above authenticating functions. The designation shall be in writing, signed by the lieutenant governor, and filed in the office of the lieutenant governor. The designation is effective until revoked by a later designation executed and filed in the same manner." (emphasis added).

in the office of lieutenant governor will be fulfilled – albeit in an acting and temporary capacity.[14] This approach, as set out in AS 44.19.026, does not require legislative confirmation, but preserves the legislature's interests and responsibilities in confirming General Campbell to the second-in-line position at a later date. It also safeguards against a potential succession gap in the office of governor. [15]

B. The Legislature Can Confirm General Campbell Under AS 44.19.040

As a second alternative approach, General Campbell can be legislatively confirmed to the second-in-line position in a special session before Lieutenant Governor Parnell assumes the office of governor. This approach would obviously moot any issues about whether General Campbell must be legislatively confirmed before he succeeds to the office of lieutenant governor under AS 44.19.042.

Although it might be preferable for such a confirmation to occur before the transition of power between Governor Palin and Lieutenant Governor Parnell, AS 44.19.026 – the temporary/acting lieutenant governor statute – does provide some degree of flexibility in the timing of such a session. That is, if a special session cannot be held before Lieutenant Governor Parnell becomes governor, General Campbell can be appointed as temporary/acting lieutenant governor under AS 44.19.026 and can serve in that capacity until the legislature convenes a special session to take up his confirmation.[16]

[14] General Campbell would retain his current position as Commissioner of Military and Veterans Affairs, pending his confirmation by the legislature as the second-in-line appointee. A temporary appointment under AS 44.19.026 avoids the prohibition against duel office holding. See Alaska Const. art. III, § 6.

[15] While by design the designation is temporary, many of the duties of the office of lieutenant governor would be covered by the designation without interruption. The statute states that the designee will temporarily be custodian of the state seal and "perform the authenticating functions of the lieutenant governor...." AS 44.19.026. This opinion does not analyze precisely what functions of the lieutenant governor might be characterized as "authenticating," but we believe the intent of this statute was to ensure that many of the significant duties of the office will be covered. In the event that certain duties are not covered, those can be delegated or assumed by the Governor. The Department of Law is continuing a detailed analysis of this issue.

[16] See Attachment 1 for procedural details of how such a process would work in a hypothetical case.

C. The Foregoing Ensures No Succession Gap

The benefit of these approaches is that succession is safeguarded, and the legislature's confirmation responsibilities can still be exercised. More broadly, it is important to note that Alaska statutes cover any future succession contingency regardless of whether General Campbell is: (a) designated as the second-in-line appointee, but not confirmed by the legislature (not the recommended approach of this opinion); (b) designated as the second-in-line appointee and is confirmed by the legislature; or (c) designated as temporary/acting lieutenant governor and is confirmed at a later date.[17]

Please contact me if we can be of further assistance with this matter.

Sincerely,

Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

Enclosure: Attachment 1

[17] Under any of these circumstances, if the office of governor would somehow become vacant during the Parnell Administration, Alaska statutes would mandate that General Campbell would succeed to "the office of acting governor" but only until a special election is held to fill the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. See AS 44.19.044 and AS 44.19.046.

Hypothetical Timeline

1. Commissioner Joe Schmidt is appointed and confirmed to the second-in-line position during the previous regular legislative session pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

2. Commissioner Schmidt resigns from the second-in-line position on July 6, 2009, pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

3. Governor Palin appoints General Campbell to the second-in-line position on July 7, 2009, pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

4. Governor Palin notifies legislative leadership of her appointment of General Campbell to the second-in-line position on July 7, 2009.

5. General Campbell is designated to fill the temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor position pursuant to AS 44.19.026. This designation, which is administratively performed by Lieutenant Governor Parnell, should occur prior to the Palin/Parnell administration transition. This designation only becomes effective when Lieutenant Governor Parnell succeeds to the office of governor.

6. Lieutenant Governor Parnell succeeds to the office of governor on July 26, 2009, pursuant to Alaska Constitution Article III, § 11. At that time, General Campbell immediately becomes temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor pursuant to AS 44.19.026.

7. A special session is called and convenes to confirm temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor Campbell to the second-in-line position pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

8. Temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor Campbell is confirmed by the legislature to the second-in-line position pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

9. Temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor Campbell immediately succeeds by operation of law to the lieutenant governor position pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

10. Lieutenant Governor Campbell simultaneously revokes the previous designation as temporary/acting Lieutenant Governor pursuant to AS 44.19.026.

11. Governor Parnell then appoints a new second-in-line appointee pursuant to AS 44.19.040.

The Constitution of the State of Alaska (Refs & Annos)
➞ Article III. The Executive
➞ § 1. Executive Power

The executive power of the State is vested in the governor.

§ 2. Governor: Qualifications

The governor shall be at least thirty years of age and a qualified voter of the State. He shall have been a resident of Alaska at least seven years immediately preceding his filing for office, and he shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least seven years.

§ 3. Election

The governor shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the State at a general election. The candidate receiving the greatest number of votes shall be governor.

§ 4. Term of Office

The term of office of the governor is four years, beginning at noon on the first Monday in December following his election and ending at noon on the first Monday in December four years later.

§ 5. Limit on Tenure

No person who has been elected governor for two full successive terms shall be again eligible to hold that office until one full term has intervened.

§ 6. Dual Office Holding

The governor shall not hold any other office or position of profit under the United States, the State, or its political subdivisions.

§ 7. Lieutenant Governor--Duties

There shall be a lieutenant governor. He shall have the same qualifications as the governor and serve for the same term. He shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law and as may be delegated to him by the governor.

§ 8. Election

The lieutenant governor shall be nominated in the manner provided by law for nominating candidates for other elective offices. In the general election the votes cast for a candidate for governor shall be considered as cast also for the candidate for lieutenant governor running jointly with him. The candidate whose name appears on the ballot jointly with that of the successful candidate for governor shall be elected lieutenant governor.

§ 9. Acting Governor

In case of the temporary absence of the governor from office, the lieutenant governor shall serve as acting governor.

§ 10. Succession: Failure to Qualify

If the governor-elect dies, resigns, or is disqualified, the lieutenant governor elected with him shall succeed to the office of governor for the full term. If the governor-elect fails to assume office for any other reason, the lieutenant governor elected with him shall serve as acting governor, and shall succeed to the office if the governor-elect does not assume his office within six months of the beginning of the term.

§ 11. Vacancy

In case of a vacancy in the office of governor for any reason, the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office for the remainder of the term.

§ 12. Absence

Whenever for a period of six months, a governor has been continuously absent from office or has been unable to discharge the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability, the office shall be deemed vacant. The procedure for determining absence and disability shall be prescribed by law.

§ 13. Further Succession

Provision shall be made by law for succession to the office of governor and for an acting governor in the event that the lieutenant governor is unable to succeed to the office or act as governor. No election of a lieutenant governor shall be held except at the time of electing a governor.

§ 14. Title and Authority

When the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of governor, he shall have the title, powers, duties and emoluments of that office.

§ 15. Compensation

The compensation of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall be prescribed by law and shall not be diminished during their term of office, unless by general law applying to all salaried officers of the State.

§ 16. Governor's Authority

The governor shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws. He may, by appropriate court action or proceeding brought in the name of the State, enforce compliance with any constitutional or legislative mandate, or restrain violation of any constitutional or legislative power, duty, or right by any officer, department, or agency of the State or any of its political subdivisions. This authority shall not be construed to authorize any action or proceeding against the legislature.

§ 17. Convening Legislature

Whenever the governor considers it in the public interest, he may convene the legislature, either house, or the two houses in joint session.

§ 18. Messages to Legislature

The governor shall, at the beginning of each session, and may at other times, give the legislature information concerning the affairs of the State and recommend the measures he considers necessary.

§ 19. Military Authority

The governor is commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the State. He may call out these forces to execute the laws, suppress or prevent insurrection or lawless violence, or repel invasion. The governor, as provided by law, shall appoint all general and flag officers of the armed forces of the State, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. He shall appoint and commission all other officers.

§ 20. Martial Law

The governor may proclaim martial law when the public safety requires it in case of rebellion or actual or imminent invasion. Martial law shall not continue for longer than twenty days without the approval of a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session.

§ 21. Executive Clemency

Subject to procedure prescribed by law, the governor may grant pardons, commutations, and reprieves, and may suspend and remit fines and forfeitures. This power shall not extend to impeachment. A parole system shall be provided by law.

§ 22. Executive Branch

All executive and administrative offices, departments, and agencies of the state government and their respective functions, powers, and duties shall be allocated by law among and within not more than twenty principal departments, so as to group them as far as practicable according to major purposes. Regulatory, quasi-judicial, and temporary agencies may be established by law and need not be allocated within a principal department.

§ 23. Reorganization

The governor may make changes in the organization of the executive branch or in the assignment of functions among its units which he considers necessary for efficient administration. Where these changes require the force of law, they shall be set forth in executive orders. The legislature shall have sixty days of a regular session, or a full session if of shorter duration, to disapprove these executive orders. Unless disapproved by resolution concurred in by a majority of the members in joint session, these orders become effective at a date thereafter to be designated by the governor.

§ 24. Supervision

Each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor.

§ 25. Department Heads

The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law. He shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and shall serve at the pleasure of the governor, except as otherwise provided in this article with respect to the secretary of state. The heads of all principal departments shall be citizens of the United States.

§ 26. Boards and Commissions

When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. They shall be citizens of the United States. The board or commission may appoint a principal executive officer when authorized by law, but the appointment shall be subject to the approval of the governor.

§ 27. Recess Appointments

The governor may make appointments to fill vacancies occurring during a recess of the legislature, in offices requiring confirmation by the legislature. The duration of such appointments shall be prescribed by law.

West's Alaska Statutes Annotated Currentness
Title 39. Public Officers and Employees
Chapter 05. Qualifications, Appointment, and Tenure
§ 39.05.080. Procedure for all appointments

Except as otherwise provided in a law relating to the positions or memberships on a specific board or commission, appointment to a position or membership shall be made in the following manner:

(1) Each governor shall present to the legislature the names of the persons appointed by that governor; each governor may present the name of a person appointed by a previous governor; only presentment that occurs during the time that the legislature is in regular session constitutes presentment under this section. The governor shall, within the first 15 days after the legislature convenes in regular session, present to the legislature for confirmation the names of the following persons: (A) persons appointed to a position or membership who have not previously been confirmed by the legislature, and (B) persons to be appointed to fill a position or membership the term of which will expire on or before March 1 during that session of the legislature. If an appointment is made after the first 15 days after the convening of the regular session but while the legislature is in regular session, the governor shall immediately present to the legislature for confirmation the name of the person appointed.

(2) When appointments are presented to the legislature for confirmation,

(A) the presiding officer of each house shall assign the name of each appointee to a standing committee of that house for a hearing, report, and recommendation; standing committees of the two houses assigned the same person's name for consideration may meet jointly to consider the qualifications of the person appointed and may issue either a separate or a joint report and recommendation concerning that person; then

(B) the legislature shall, before the end of the regular session in which the appointments are presented, in joint session assembled, act on the appointments by confirming or declining to confirm by a majority vote of all of the members the appointments presented.

(3) When the legislature declines to confirm an appointment, the legislature shall notify the governor of its action and a vacancy in the position or membership exists which the governor shall fill by making a new appointment. The governor may not appoint again the same person whose confirmation was refused for the same position or membership during the regular session of the legislature at which confirmation was refused. The person whose name is refused for appointment by the legislature may not thereafter be appointed to the same position or membership during the interim between regular legislative sessions. Failure of the legislature to act to confirm or decline to confirm an appointment during the regular session in which the appointment was presented is tantamount to a declination of confirmation on the day the regular session adjourns.

(4) Pending confirmation or rejection of appointment by the legislature, persons appointed shall exercise the functions, have the powers, and be charged with the duties prescribed by law for the appointive positions or membership. However, the duration of an appointment made during the time period between regular sessions of the legislature by a person who is not still the governor on the first day of the next regular session ends on the date during the next regular session that the sitting governor presents for confirmation an appointment to the office. For the purpose of applying laws that limit the number of terms or parts of terms that may be served by a member of a board or commission, the part of the term of office that is served under an interim appointment immediately before the member is reappointed under this paragraph is considered to be merged with the part of the term of office that is served immediately after reappointment so that the two periods of service constitute only one part of a term. The duration of an appointment made during a regular session of the legislature and not presented to the legislature by the governor during that session ends no later than the last day of that session. The duration of an appointment made during an interim by a governor who is not in office at the beginning of the next regular session of the legislature ends no later than the last day of that regular session unless the governor who is in office during that session presents the person's name for confirmation. The same governor may not appoint the same person to the same position or membership if the person's appointment ends because of the governor's failure to present the person's name for confirmation.

1. Appointments by prior governor

Governor's power to reconsider prior governor's appointment of defendant to vacant position on Alaska Public Utilities Commission (APUC) ended when defendant assumed powers of office, even though defendant's right to office was contingent upon confirmation by legislature; thus, governor could not remove defendant from office without complying with statutes governing removal from APUC. 2. Appointments during legislative recess

Neither Alaska Constitution nor appointment statutes prevented governor from appointing Alaska Public Utilities Commission (APUC) member to full term while legislature was in recess, nor did they prevent legislature from confirming such appointee. Const. Art. 3, § 27; AS 39.05.080(1). Cook v. Botelho, 1996, 921 P.2d 1126. Public Utilities ⚿ 142

Once governor named appointee to vacant position in Alaska Public Utilities Commission (APUC) during recess of legislature, legislature, upon reconvening, could confirm appointee without awaiting presentment of appointee by governor's successor. AS 39.05.080(1). Cook v. Botelho, 1996, 921 P.2d 1126. Public Utilities ⚿ 142

Lt. Col. Troy Dunn

I appear today because as a citizen of this great state I have become increasingly concerned about the ethical climate in state government. Ethical issues have and continue to plague our state government brought on by a lack of character and integrity of both elected and appointed officials. I feel I would be remiss in my duty to the people of this state if I failed to highlight serious ethical concerns about the newly proposed administration. I report on events of this past few years that call into question the ethical record of the man who has been appointed to serve as the next Lieutenant Governor of the State of Alaska – the current Adjutant General of the State of Alaska, Craig Campbell.

In June of 2005 I contacted the Secretary of the Air Force Inspector General office regarding the illegal use of government aircraft at the 168 Air Refueling Wing, Eielson AFB, Alaska. The commander of the Alaska Air National Guard, then Brig Gen Tim Scott was scheduling and utilizing USAF aircraft for personal convenience. This action was allowed and continued under the direction of the 168th Operations Group Commander, Colonel Donald Scott Wenke. I, along with the Squadron Commander briefed Col Wenke that his and Brig Gen Scott's actions were in violation of USAF and DOD regulations. Col Wenke ignored our concerns and even flew one of Brig Gen Scott's sorties himself when no other pilots in the unit would fly a mission to pick up Brig Gen Scott because it violated both USAF and DOD regulation.

In July of 2006 the Secretary of the Air Force Inspector General Office concluded its investigation into the fraud waste and abuse activities of Brig Gen Scott and Col Wenke. I quote from the Report of Investigation titled Case S6646P Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott and Col Donald S. Wenke dated April 2006; "that Brig Gen Scott committed fraud waste and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and /or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for his personal convenience was SUBSTANTIATED" "that Col Wenke committed fraud waste and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and /or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of Brig Gen Scott was SUBSTANTIATED"

The Inspector General of the Air Force is responsible to find the facts and either dispel or substantiate a case brought forward. They are not responsible for solving the wrongdoings in substantiated cases or in other words, providing punitive action. The facts and findings are forwarded to the command structure of the offending individual and left to the commander of how to handle the offense.

In the case of Col Wenke, his immediate commander was Colonel John Griffin, 168th Air Refueling Wing Commander. It is important to note that Col Wenke and Col Griffin were long friends and previously assigned together with the Idaho Air National Guard. Both recruited and hired by Brig Gen Tim Scott. Brig Gen Tim Scott's commander was the Adjutant General of the Alaska Guard, Maj Gen Craig Campbell.

As the members of the 168th Operation Group waited for some sign of action as to the substantiated fraud waste and abuse activities of Brig Gen Scott and Col Wenke, it became apparent that no action was to be taken by either Col Griffin or Maj Gen Craig Campbell.

I contacted the Investigating officer at the pentagon and was told that the report and its results were forwarded to the Alaska AG, Maj Gen Craig Campbell for action and they have received no reply as to what action he would take.

In October 2006 I sent the attached letter and supporting documents to candidates for Governor, Sarah Palin and Tony Knowles return receipt and confirmed verbally with their staff it's receipt.

In November 2006 I sent another letter to Governor Elect Palin explaining the lack of reply to the IG office by Maj Gen Campbell. After several documented phone calls through December 2007 with Governor Palin's Chief of Staff, Mr. Tibbles, I was told the matter was turned over to the head of the DMVA. When I told Mr. Tibbles that Maj Gen Campbell already had the complete report as provided by the SAF IG office and he has ignored the SAF IG office, Mr. Tibbles claimed that was all he could do. I then asked Mr. Tibbles if he agreed that I had done everything I could to inform Governor Palin of Maj Gen Campbell's inaction reference the substantiated abuses of Brig Gen Scott and Col Wenke. He agreed I did and I politely told Mr. Tibbles that I would take this problem further up the chain.

On Jan 8, 2008 I contacted Senator Stevens' office and forwarded my documentation. On 12 Jan I received the following e-mail: "Troy – I got word today from the Governor's office that action is being taken on this. Can't say more at this time, but I think it will be obvious when it occurs."

Within weeks, Brig Gen Scott announced his retirement. However, Col Wenke is not only still employed by the Alaska Air Guard, but has been promoted to the 168th Air Refueling Wing Commander under the watch of Lt Gen Craig Campbell.

I have over 50 pages of documentation substantiating the facts of this testimony that is available to anyone who requests it. In my opinion, Lt Gen Campbell not only violated the trust of the members of the Alaska Guard, but also the ethics of the office of which he currently holds. His lack of action regarding the substantiated fraudulent activities of two senior commanders in the Alaska Guard and furthermore, promoting Col Wenke to wing commander, is an affront to the men and women of the Alaska National Guard and demonstrates a complete disregard to the ethics and accountability that define our core values. This lack of character would not be tolerated in the active duty military, should not be tolerated in the Alaska Guard or any public office.

The citizens of Alaska require leaders that have demonstrated an ability to do the right thing; the facts do not support that trait in the Governors selection of her proposed Lt Governor. Thank you.

Governor-Elect Palin,

Prior to the election we sent your office information regarding substantiated complaints involving fraudulent activities by senior officials in the Alaska Air Guard. Perhaps with the events leading to the election you did not receive the information from campaign staff; therefore I am enclosing it here once again. Additionally, I have included the latest copy of Air Force Times highlighting another state's Air Guard, an issue you have the capability to prevent here in Alaska.

As of 13 November there has still been no reply by the current Adjutant General of the Alaska National Guard (Maj Gen Craig E. Campbell) to the IG as required by regulation.

The full details of the original complaint are available to you or your representative upon request.

Respectfully,

Troy R. Dunn, Lt Col, AKANG

Mrs. Palin,

Attached is a copy of a letter sent from the Inspector General (IG) of the Secretary of the Air Force. This letter validates a complaint made to the IG in regards to the fraudulent activities of Senior Leaders of the Alaska Air National Guard during the Summer of 2005.

The attached letter was sent on July 19, 2006. As stated in the letter, the Adjutant General of the Alaska National Guard (Maj Gen Craig E. Campbell) was informed of the results of this investigation at that time. According to the representative from the IG Office, the Adjutant General is required to report what action has been taken in response to this investigation. As of Oct 3, 2006, no action had been reported to the IG.

In the interest of the Alaska Air National Guard, the results of this investigation have been withheld from the public in the hopes that the situation could be handled discreetly. However, it has become apparent that no action will be taken. It is an affront to the men and women of the Alaska Air National Guard that the Senior Leadership have demonstrated complete disregard to the ethics and accountability that define our Core Values.

As a candidate for Governor, you may have the opportunity to influence the selection of those who will lead the Alaska National Guard through this very important period of Transformation. The members of the Alaska National Guard anticipate that those leaders will be worthy of their loyalty.

The full details of the original complaint will be made available upon request (approximately 50 pages).

Respectfully,

Troy R. Dunn, Lt Col, AKANG

Dear Colonel Dunn

This is in response to your October 2005 complaint transmitted through the Air Force Legal Services Agency at Eielson Air Force Base concerning various allegations against the Commander, Alaska Air National Guard, the Commander, 168th Air Refueling Wing, and the Commander, 168th Operations Group. Since your allegations involved an Air Force Senior Official, they were referred to the Senior Official Inquiries Directorate (SAF/IGS) within the Air Force Inspector General's Office.

Our first step was to conduct a complaint analysis into your allegations. As a result of that analysis, The Inspector General has directed a formal investigation into your case concerning these allegations:

1. That the Commander of the Alaska Air National Guard committed fraud, waste and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for his personal convenience.

2. That the Commander of the 168th Air Refueling Wing committed fraud, waste and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, by wrongfully approving and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of the Commander of the Alaska Air National Guard and himself.

3. That the Commander of the 168th Operations Group committed fraud, waste and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, by wrongfully approving and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of the Commander of the Alaska Air National Guard and the Commander of the 168th Air Refueling Wing.

4. That the Commander of the 168 Operations Group made a false official statement on an aircrew Mission Activity Report by documenting that he had completed a pilot proficiency sortie when in fact he had not, in violation of Article 107 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

An officer from the Senior Official Inquiries Directorate has been assigned as the investigating officer. You can expect that he will contact you within the next three weeks. If you have any questions in the meantime, please contact me at DSN 223-5032 or commercial 703-693-5032.

I hope this information is helpful.

Dear Colonel Dunn

We have completed our investigation into the matters addressed in your 27 Jun 05, 12 Aug 05, and 3 Nov 05 memorandums to the Inspector General, Department of Defense (DoD-IG) regarding fraud, waste, and abuse and falsification of official documents. As you are aware, DoD-IG referred these matters to SAF/IGS for investigation.

The Inspector General investigation confirmed certain aspects of the charges of fraud, waste, and abuse against the 168th Operations Group Commander (168 OG/CC) and the Alaska Air National Guard Commander (AKANG/CC) regarding use of government aircraft for personal convenience. Specifically, the investigation concluded that on at least two occasions training flights were conducted to McChord AFB primarily to facilitate travel requirements of the AKANG/CC.

Regarding the charge of falsification of official documents, the investigation found the available evidence insufficient to establish that the 168 OG/CC violated Article 107 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Please note that our office, like other Department of Defense organizations, must comply with the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act. For this reason, further documentation, including any disciplinary actions that may have been taken, is not releasable in order to protect the privacy rights of subjects and witnesses.

The Inspector General has approved the investigation and considers the matter closed. In addition, the Secretary of the Air Force and the Chief of Staff of the Air Force have been provided the results of this case for their review. We will maintain the Report of Investigation in our files for future reference.

Sincerely

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD

FROM: 168 OSF/CC

SUBJECT: Fraud Waste and Abuse Combined with Dereliction of Duty

1. The 168th OG/CC, Lt Col Donald S. Wenke, authorized a KC135 mission to McChord AFB on Saturday, 25 Jun 2005, to retrieve Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott and return him to Eielson AFB. The 168th ARS/CC, Lt Col Todd M. Mackinaw and myself engaged Lt Col Wenke numerous times showing him the directives that would be violated should this mission occur. Lt Col Wenke's only reply was that he knew the mission was illegal and that he had talked with Brig Gen Scott advising him against it. Lt Col Wenke stated that he had been directed by Brig Gen Scott to come get him anyway.

2. The background on the mission flown on 25 Jun begins with a request for night fighter air refueling at Luke AFB. The true objective of this off station training mission was to "legitimize" a request by Brig Gen Scott for travel to McChord AFB to participate in an AMC Rodeo event. This is in direct violation of DODD 4500.43 section 4.3, and ANGI 10-201 sections 1.8 and 1.10.

3. The return request for Brig Gen Scott was coordinated directly by him through the Chief of 168 ARS scheduling (See attached e-mail trail). The original plan was to justify the true purpose of the trip with an air refueling sortie. This request is also in violation of ANGI 10-201 section 1.10. Coordination was accomplished to refuel one C-17 on Thursday night, 23 Jun, flying out of McChord AFB. The legitimacy of this "training" sortie is further compromised by the fact that a week long TDY to Charleston AFB supporting C-17 night air refueling had been scheduled to depart on Sunday, 26 Jun. It would not be cost effective to spend unit funds for a three day TDY to McChord AFB for one C-17 night air refueling when the same training could be accomplished with multiple missions at Charleston AFB funded by AMC. This plan was scrapped later in the week due to a lack of aircraft at the 168th to support a Large Force Employment (LFE) Exercise at the 3rd Wing (Elmendorf AFB).

4. After the loss of the C-17 mission, a request was sent to National Guard Bureau (NGB) for a mission number to support an off station training flight (See attached e-mail trail). Incredibly, this request was approved by Maj Kevin P. Prom (ANG/XOXP). On 27 Jun, I asked Maj Prom what he was thinking when he approved this mission. He stated that as long as the Wing Commander approved a mission he would give the mission number. In essence, he stated he was absolved of any responsibility.

5. With a mission number from NGB, the last vestiges of integrity were tested when none of the 168th OG pilots would volunteer to fly the mission. Finally, with the mission in jeopardy, Lt

Col Wenke volunteered to fly the mission himself. In addition, he was able to convince Lt Col Tracy Saltmarsh, an instructor pilot, to fly the mission with him under the guise of accomplishing a Pilot Proficiency Sortie (identified as M010 in AFI 11-2KC135 Vol. 1).

6. According to the regulation (pp 96, 7.7.5.1), a minimum of 1.5 flying hours should be scheduled for an M010. The M010 will consist of the following: "...three instrument approaches, missed approach, and VFR traffic pattern (weather permitting). In addition, the following events should be accomplished when available: Holding pattern or procedure turn, circling approach, simulated engine-out landing (if applicable to aircraft type and weather permitting,...), simulated engine-out go-around or missed approach (if applicable to aircraft type and weather permitting,...), partial flap landing (if applicable), and engine failure take-off continued." There is also a note which states, "if circumstances prevent completion on one sortie, credit may be taken after a second IP-supervised sortie, provided the combined activity fulfills the intent of this event... Particular emphasis should be placed on simulated systems malfunctions, simulated engine-out operations and instrument procedures."

7. On the day of the mission to McChord AFB, the weather at Eielson AFB and McChord AFB was VFR with no restrictions. All of the instrument procedures were in place and functional to accomplish the events required to complete the M010. While reviewing the post-mission paperwork, I noticed that Lt Col Wenke had logged a pilot proficiency sortie (M010). However, he did not accomplish nor log all of the events required to credit the M010. Combining the events from two sorties, Lt Col Wenke logged three instrument approaches, one missed approach, two landings (one was simulated engine-out), and two takeoffs. There was no attempt to accomplish a VFR traffic pattern (even though weather was not a factor), nor were any of the additional items attempted (i.e. holding, circling approach, etc...). The events accomplished satisfy neither the definition nor the intent of the regulation.

8. After completing the mission review, I asked Msg Tina Wylie to remove the M010 from the Mission Accomplishment Report (MAR). I informed Lt Col Wenke that the events accomplished on the mission in question did not conform to the requirements to log an M010. I also informed him that I had removed the event from his MAR for the mission flown on 25 Jun. I was later informed by Msg Wylie that Lt Col Wenke had directed her to change the MAR to again credit the M010 on 25 Jun (see attached copies of MAR).

9. In the final analysis, the accomplishment of a pilot proficiency sortie (M010) became the justification for scheduling 6.5 hours of flying time to fly to McChord AFB to bring Brig Gen Scott back to Eielson AFB. The same event could have been accomplished at Eielson AFB on a normal duty day in 1.5 hours (see above). Ironically, even though the mission was scheduled to use over four times that recommended by regulation, the events to minimally complete the M010 were not accomplished.

10. The mission that flew to McChord AFB on 25 Jun 2005 and returned to Eielson AFB with Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott was planned and executed in direct violation of ANGI 10-201 section 1.8, 1.9.3, 1.10, AFI 11-401 section 1.9, DODD 4500.43 section 4.3, DOD 4515.13-R section C1.3 and DODD 4500.56 section E2.1. Additionally, unit flying hours had been cut to support the Global War on Terrorism (reference letter from NGB/CF). The 168th OG/CC and AKANG/CC inappropriately utilized 6.7 hours to pick up one individual. The mission used approximately 12,500 gallons of fuel. The overall cost to the taxpayer of this mission was approximately $76,842 (Based on the 2004 KC135R fleet wide hourly operating cost of 11,469 dollars/hour). A one-way ticket from Seattle (adjacent to McChord AFB) to Fairbanks was readily available all day Saturday, 25 June at a cost of approximately $700. A super-saver ticket (two week advance reservation) could have been purchased for less than $300.

11. Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott (AKANG/CC) and Lt Col Donald S. Wenke (168 OG/CC) knowingly and flagrantly violated the law and these actions warrant a full investigation into the fraudulent use of government aircraft and allocated flying hours.

SUBJECT: Conduct Unbecoming of an Officer and Falsification of Official Documents

1. It was brought to my attention by 168th OSF Aviation Resource Management personnel that Col Wenke had changed an input to his Mission Activity Report (MAR) for a flight accomplished on 25 Jun 2005. The background of this flight is well documented in the MFR dated 27 Jun 2005.

2. Col Wenke falsified an official document (Aircrew MAR) by logging the accomplishment of an event (M010) that was not completed in compliance with AFI 11-2KC135, Vol 1. This conduct is not acceptable and unbecoming of an Officer.

FROM: SAF/IG

SUBJECT: Appointment of Investigation Officer

In your capacity as an Investigative Officer assigned to the Secretary of the Air Force, Office of the Inspector General, Senior Official Inquiries Directorate (SAF/IGS), you are authorized to conduct investigations into all aspects of the facts and circumstances concerning allegations approved for investigation by this office. You may also investigate any other allegations that are raised during the approved investigation.

During this investigation, you should determine the facts and circumstances by reviewing records and correspondence; reviewing applicable laws, directives, and instructions; examining material evidence; and interviewing persons with relevant information. All records, files, and correspondence relative to the matter under investigation and controlled by the Air Force will be made available to you.

You are authorized to interview witnesses under oath, secure documents, and obtain the cooperation of appropriate commanders. Although you have no authority to summon witnesses, you may request that commanders do so on your behalf.

You should conduct a thorough investigation and prepare a report of investigation (ROI) in accordance with AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints. Submit to me the ROI and any other documents required by AFI 90-301.

Col Moe,

Looking for your approval for an off station training flight to McChord AFB on Thursday, 23 June @ 1735L. Purpose of training will be night C17 heavy refueling prior to arrival into McChord. The mission has been coordinated with McChord Rodeo Exercise Ops and Base Ops. Return will be on Saturday, 25 June @ 1430L. BG Scott will board the aircraft @ McChord for the flight back to Eielson on Saturday.

Request approval so we can get ANG/XOXP to issue an ANG Mission Number.

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD 3 Nov 2005

SUBJECT: Fraud Waste and Abuse/ Continuing occurrence Case ID # 97567

1. On 17 October 2005 one KC-135 was sent from Eielson AFB to Elmendorf AFB to pickup passengers for a conference at Hickam AFB. The crew was comprised of one technician pilot, one traditional pilot and 2 traditional boom operators. 168th ARW/CC Col Moe was placed on the flight orders, however he was not placed on the AFTO Form 781 nor did he fill out a Mission Activity Report (MAR). The aircraft and crew remained overnight at Elmendorf AFB and departed for Hickam AFB, HI on 18 Oct. According to records, 4 passengers were on board on the leg from Elmendorf AFB to Hickam AFB. The aircraft and crew flew a local air refueling sortie out of Hickam on 19 Oct. On 20 Oct the aircraft and crew departed Hickam AFB and returned to Eielson AFB with no passengers. A total of 13.7 flight hours were spent to get four people from Alaska to Hawaii to attend a conference. Space A passengers were not allowed on the Alaska to Hawaii legs by direction of the 168th ARW/CC. There were passengers requesting space A to Hawaii on this date.

2. On Sunday, 23 Oct 2005, one KC-135 was sent again from Eielson AFB direct to Hickam AFB to pick up the conference attendees. This crew was comprised of two traditional pilots and two traditional boom operators. The aircraft and crew did not fly on 24 Oct in Hawaii. On 25 Oct the aircraft and crew returned with 3 passengers from Hickam AFB to Elmendorf AFB. One passenger disembarked at Elmendorf AFB and the aircraft continued on to Eielson AFB with the remaining two passengers. This out and back spent 12.2 flight hours. There was no training accomplished on these two trips that could not be accomplished on any sortie on any day here at Eielson AFB. The sole purpose of the trip was to take PACAF War fighter conference attendees from Alaska to Hawaii. The 168th flying schedule stated the purpose of these flights was formation training with the HANG however that "training" was never accomplished nor was it ever required.

3. The 168th ARW leadership continues to use unit aircraft in direct and willful violation of ANGI 10-201, DODD 4500.43 and DOD 4515.13-R . Furthermore, the arrogance of not allowing space A passengers on the aircraft is indicative of the current leadership mentality that these aircraft are their personal assets. The decision to inappropriately use 25.9 flight hours to take 4 people from Alaska to Hawaii cost the taxpayers $297,049.17 based on the 2004 hourly operating cost of 11,469.08 for the KC-135R. This does not include the cost of paying the traditional (part time) crewmembers, per-diem and lodging. Commercial air was readily available on these dates. The activity on the above dates was conducted willfully with intent to deceive therefore it is criminal as well as fraudulent.

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD 28 Nov 2005

SUBJECT: Fraud Waste and Abuse/ Continuing occurrence Case ID # 97567

1. On 5 November 2005 a KC-135 assigned to the 168th ARW departed Eielson AFB and landed at Elmendorf AFB with approximately 6 duty passengers on board. The purpose of the stop at Elmendorf was to pick up additional duty passengers from the Alaska Air Guard and transport them to Andrews AFB the following day. This trip was scheduled and planned under the guise of an AMC funded Charleston Business Effort (night C-17 air refueling). The business effort was obtained and tailored to match the travel directive of Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott. The flight from Eielson AFB to Elmendorf AFB utilized a local 168th ARW mission number; however the crew per diem, travel and lodging was paid for by AMC. (Ref. TDY trip worksheet Charleston BE)

2. On 6 November the aircraft departed Elmendorf AFB enroute to Andrews AFB. The duty passengers were dropped at Andrews AFB and the aircraft and flight crew continued to Charleston AFB. The flight from Elmendorf AFB to Andrews AFB utilized an NGB mission number, however, the crew per diem and travel was paid by AMC. The flight from Andrews AFB to Charleston AFB utilized an AMC mission number.

3. On the nights of 7 and 8 November the crew and aircraft accomplished night C-17 air refueling departing and returning to Charleston AFB. On the night of 9 November the crew departed Charleston AFB and air refueled a C-17 then landed at Andrews AFB at 0049 local time 10 November. These missions were accomplished on an AMC mission number. This departure from the normal business effort contract (Monday through Friday) was to facilitate the travel desires of Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott. On 10 November at 1940L the aircraft departed Andrews AFB with the Alaska Air Guard duty passengers on board. The crew stated that they were late departing Andrews AFB due to the passengers arriving late to the aircraft. The aircraft arrived at Elmendorf AFB at 2315L 10 November dropping off duty passengers and departing Elmendorf AFB at 0000L 11 Nov. The aircraft landed at Eielson AFB at 0045L 11 Nov. The leg from Andrews AFB to Elmendorf AFB was flown on an NGB mission number, once again, the crew travel, per diem and lodging was paid for by AMC. The leg from Elmendorf to Eielson AFB was flown utilizing a local 168th ARW mission number.

4. It appears the intent of the 168th leadership was to utilize AMC dollars to transport members of the Alaska Air Guard from Alaska to Andrews AFB and return. The documentation problem arose when the aircraft landed at Eielson AFB at 0045L 11 Nov, now warranting an additional pay day for the part time (traditional) crewmembers. Maj Bradbury was paid by AMC for the entire trip. TSgt Richard Smith and MSgt Curt Gipson were paid by AMC for 5-10 Nov and given an Annual Training (AT) day for 11 Nov.

5. I do not have the resources to ascertain the legalities of traveling under an NGB and locally generated mission number and paying the crew with an AMC fund cite.

Regardless of legalities, it is wrong for AMC to pay for travel, per diem and lodging that is not related to their business effort. Three nights of Air Refueling in return for 6 days per diem and double lodging costs, due to late check outs from both Charleston and Andrews, is a fraudulent use of resources.

6. Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott and Col Donald S. Wenke did intentionally schedule this trip in willful violation of ANGI 10-201, DODD 4500.43 and DOD 4515.13-R.

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD 28 Nov 2005

SUBJECT: Fraud Waste and Abuse/ Continuing occurrence Case ID # 97567

1. It has been brought to my attention today that Brig. Gen Timothy W. Scott utilized an Alaska Air National Guard KC-135 from the 168th ARW on 6 April 2005 to take him to a Luncheon at McChord AFB and return to Eielson AFB. This sortie was scheduled as dedicated for the purpose of the Generals travel. This is in direct violation of ANGI 10-201, DODD 4500.43 and DOD 4515.13-R.

2. Copies of Crew Flight Authorization's, AFTO Form 781's and Mission Accomplishment Reports (MAR) attached. Note that no training was accomplished for the boom operator and the pilots only logged one takeoff, instrument approach and landing each. The travel of Brig Gen Scott was not incidental to an already scheduled training event as it was scheduled to transport him from Eielson AFB to McChord and return. 6.8 flying hours were spent supporting this illegal activity.

PRINCIPAL PURPOSE: Source document used to authorize aircrew members to preform in-flight duties for this aircraft and provide accountability for aircrew personnel on mission. Additionally used to validate aircrew duties for entitlement to flight time, operational flying duty credit, and flight pay entitlements.
DISCLOSURE IS VOLUNTARY: SSAN is needed to meet qualification for accountability, flight documentation, and flight pay entitlements. Failure to provide may prevent authorization to fly and result in a loss of records, qualification, and incentive pay entitlements.

Chapter 1

TRANSPORTATION POLICIES FOR USE OF ANG AIRCRAFT

1.1. Purpose. This section outlines transportation policy and the management of military airlift resources including those possessed by the ANG.

1.2. Joint Doctrine - Transportation. The Chairman Joint Chiefs of Staff (CJCS) outlines transportation doctrine and guidance in Joint Publication 4-01, Joint Doctrine for The Defense Transportation System.

1.2.1. The Defense Transportation System (DTS) is that portion of the nation's transportation infrastructure, which supports the DoD common-user transportation needs across the range of military operations.

1.2.1.1. Transportation procedures and responsibilities should be the same for peacetime and wartime. This standardization allows transportation forces to train during times of peace in the same manner in which they would operate during war or a contingency and provides flexibility to effectively and quickly support any type of military operation.

1.2.2. The foundation for transportation policy is based on two statutes of United States Code (U.S.C) of Law.

1.2.2.1. U.S.C., Title 31, Section 1344, Passenger Carrier Use, states that vehicles and aircraft of any United States (US) Government agency may only be used for official purposes.

1.2.2.2. U.S.C., Title 31, Section 1301, Anti-Deficiency Act, states that appropriated funds may only be used for the purposes intended, i.e., DoD resources specifically may only be used to support DoD mission requirements.

1.2.3. The CJCS assigns movement priorities in support of DoD components based upon capabilities reported by USTRANSCOM and adjudicates competing lift requirements.

1.3. DoD Transportation Policy. The Secretary of Defense (SECDEF) has designated the Commander, US Transportation Command as the DoD single manager for transportation (other than for Service-unique and theater assigned assets) during times of peace and war.

1.3.1. Department of Defense policy concerning the purposes on which DoD-owned or controlled aircraft can be used is set forth in DoD Directive DoDD 4500.56, DoD Policy on the Use of Government Aircraft and Air Travel.

1.3.1.1. DoDD 4500.56 specifies that within the CONUS, commercial transportation services shall be the primary method used for official passenger movement including travel for attending conferences, meetings, ceremonies, giving speeches, site visits, etc. OCONUS, commercial air transportation shall be used in accordance with the Joint Federal Travel Regulation (JFTR), Volume 1, and the Joint Travel Regulation (JTR), Volume 2, and travel is funded by the user's organization.

1.3.2. USTRANSCOM J3/J4 Division manages the Joint Operational Support Airlift Center (JOSAC) who has been designated by the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) as the executive agent for military air (MilAir) travel within the CONUS for official business.

1.3.2.1. National Guard OSA aircraft have agreed to provide availability to JOSAC for scheduling of CONUS missions.

1.3.2.2. Within the National Guard, each state is responsible to train at least one requestor/validator on the Joint Air Logistics Information System (JALIS) computer program.

1.3.2.3. National Guard customers interested in using ANG OSA aircraft for official travel within the CONUS must process their request through their state validator who will interface with JOSAC.

1.3.2.4. National Guard customers interested in using ANG OSA aircraft for official travel OCONUS must process their request through the Chief, NGB, Executive Travel Coordinator (NGB-ZAS). Follow the procedures listed in Chapter 5.

1.3.3. The DoD policy for passenger transportation eligibility on DoD owned or controlled aircraft is set forth in DoD 4515.13-R.

1.3.3.1. DoD 4515.13-R delineates who is eligible for DoD transportation and under what circumstance they may travel on DoD assets. If a passenger's eligibility is not specifically addressed, then the passenger must procure an approval through one of two processes. Applicant may seek approval pursuant to the Economy Act or as a waiver by the SECDEF.

1.3.3.2. It is DoD policy that commanders at all levels exercise prudent judgment to ensure that only authorized traffic is transported and that they do not misuse the authority delegated to them. All officials responding to requests for transportation not specifically authorized by DoD 4515.13-R shall make no commitments concerning prospective travelers or cargo until the potential user obtains all required approvals.

1.4. Passenger/Cargo Eligibility Options Outside Standard Channels.

1.4.1. Eligibility Pursuant to the Economy Act (31, U.S.C., 1535/1536). The Economy Act prohibits DoD from providing airlift for any non DoD activity unless it is: (1) of an immediate emergency/life-saving nature, (2) in direct support of the DoD mission, (3) specifically authorized by statute, or (4) it is requested by the head of an executive agency of the federal government pursuant to the Economy Act.

1.4.1.1. The Assistant Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Transportation Policy (ADUSD/TP) is the approving authority for transportation requests pursuant to the Economy Act.

1.4.1.2. Requests may not come from the user. They must originate with the head of an executive agency of the federal government and the request must contain the following four elements.

1.4.1.2.1. Element One: It must contain the pertinent details of the requested support.

1.4.1.2.2. Element Two: It must articulate how the support requested is in the national interest.

1.4.1.2.3. Element Three: It must certify that commercial transportation (including charter) is not available or is otherwise not satisfactory.

1.4.1.2.4. Element Four: It must include the fund cite or billing information to reimburse the DoD for the service performed.

1.4.1.3. Approved requests will be forward by ADUSD/TP to either USTRANSCOM for processing and scheduling through the DTS or to the NGB Military Support Branch (NGB-ARO-M) who eling Wing, Eielson AFB, AK; and 176th Wing, Kulis ANGB, AK, are Pacific Command Air Forces (PACAF) gained; and 189th AW, Little Rock AFB, AR, is Air Education Training Command (AETC) gained.

1.5.2. AMC as the air component to USTRANSCOM may authorize ANG units to fly missions under the DTS. AMC provides Military Personnel Appropriation (MPA) days and travel dollars to ANG units when flying AMC missions.

1.5.2.1. AMC will provide the unit with an AMC mission number and mission code for each mission flown. This AMC mission number and code are used for both flight following and funding purposes. ANG units will obtain an ANG mission number and ANG mission symbol to match each AMC mission number and code for administrative purposes within the ANG.

1.5.3. AMC's goal when providing airlift is that all AMC gained assets provide the best service possible to customers traveling by MilAir. AMC Policy Directive (AMCPD) 24-2, Policy for Passengers Aboard AMC Missions, establishes a passenger Bill of Rights with seven goals for every AMC mission.

1.5.3.1. Courteous service.

1.5.3.2. Accurate information.

1.5.3.3. Maximum opportunity to travel, compatible with mission requirements.

1.5.3.4. Safe flight.

1.5.3.5. Clean comfortable facilities during posted operating hours.

1.5.3.6. Transportation to and from aircraft.

1.5.3.7. Your baggage - right place, on-time, undamaged.

1.5.4. The Single Mobility System (SMS). USTRANSCOM in conjunction with AMC, ANG, and Air Force Reserve Command (AFRC), chartered a Tiger Team to develop a plan to use emerging technologies and innovative business protocols to maximize the capabilities of our airlift assets. SMS uses current web technology to provide users access to data from multiple systems through a single screen interface. It is primarily a planning tool designed to maximize the opportunity to match requirements with capabilities and provide visibility of USTRANSCOM, AMC, ANG, and AFRC missions and requirements.

1.5.4.1. The ANG will utilize SMS to assist the planning, allocation and management of mobility requirements, assets, and missions. ANG units may use SMS to volunteer for open airlift missions and access mission information during mission planning.

1.6. National Guard Bureau (NGB) Transportation Policy.

1.6.1. It is NGB policy to comply with DoD policy concerning the use of ANG organic airlift assets for transportation. Organic airlift is defined as military aircraft whose primary mission is other than carrying passengers but has the capability to carry passengers.

1.6.2. Each States Adjutant General (AG) will ensure that aircraft are used for official business only. ANG unit commanders and ultimately the State AGs are responsible for authorizing flights involving ANG aircraft.

1.8. Training Missions. The ANG must use our aircrew training hours in a manner that demonstrates good stewardship of the taxpayers' money. MAJCOMS justify these hours on the basis of maintaining wartime readiness, and Congress and the public expect us to use them accordingly. Each training mission must be structured to achieve maximum training. Any by-product airlift opportunity resulting from a previously scheduled training mission must not degrade the intended training in any way and must comply with applicable DoD directives and regulations. It is essential that all personnel at all levels prevent misuse of air mobility resources as well as the perception of their misuse.

1.9. The Mission Readiness Airlift (MRA) Program. The National Guard has established the MRA program, which utilizes the capacity available on ANG aircraft to support combat readiness training requirements while providing aircrew training.

1.9.1. The MRA program attempts to match aircrew off-station training requirements with National Guard customers seeking point-to-point transportation to meet combat readiness training requirements. The MRA program is not a guaranteed source for point-to-point transportation. National Guard customers planning to use MRA must be fully prepared to fund and source alternate means of transportation to complete their training requirements.

1.9.2. All National Guard units planning to use MRA will comply with this instruction and with any special instructions received from the flying unit or group providing the MRA.

1.9.3. Missions supporting conferences, conventions, staff assistance visits, meetings, and/or Morale, Welfare, and Recreation (MWR) events do not qualify for stand-alone missions under the Mission Readiness Airlift program.

1.10. Travel for Conferences, Conventions, Staff Assistance Visits, Meetings, and/or MWR Events. Travel for conferences, conventions, staff assistance visits, meetings, and/or MWR events by any size of group, whether the event is sponsored by the National Guard or not, does not qualify as combat readiness training under the MRA program. It may qualify as opportune airlift (Priority 6, paragraph 2.5.6.), which means that it may only be supported in conjunction with already validated and scheduled training without adding any additional cost. Personnel seeking transportation for this purpose are advised not to rely on opportune airlift as their primary means of travel because requests may not be filled. Users are encouraged to travel by commercial transportation or apply for OSA transport through JOSAC. (See paragraph 1.3.2.)

1.10.1. It is possible to travel to such events if it takes place in conjunction with already scheduled training missions. Training missions scheduled to transport National Guard members to non-mission readiness training events such as conferences, conventions, meetings, or MWR events are prohibited. Space available or opportune travel on training missions is only permitted if:

1.10.1.1. The aircraft is already scheduled for an official purpose.

1.10.1.2. Travel is on a non-interference basis.

1.10.1.3. The non-interference travel does not require a larger aircraft than needed for the official purpose.

1.10.1.4. Already scheduled official travelers or cargo is not displaced.

1.10.1.5. The travel results in negligible additional cost to the Government. Such travel is funded by the aircraft operator's organization.

1.10.2. It is important the travel is done in conjunction with already scheduled training rather than "training" missions being flown primarily for their transportation by-product. Flying hours flown should not exceed those required to meet legitimate training requirements.

1.11. Travel for Operational Readiness Inspections (ORIs). Units may request transportation to ORIs under the MRA system. Requests must meet the minimum MRA standard described in paragraph 2.4. Personnel groups that do not meet MRA minimum qualifications should make arrangements to travel by commercial transportation or apply for military OSA through the JOSAC system (See paragraph 1.3.2.). Since the MRA program is not a guaranteed point-to-point transportation program, units must be prepared to secure transportation through alternate means.

1.12. Public Affairs Airlift. NGB Public Affairs (NGB-PA) airlift is important to the National Guard although it is outside the MRA system. NGB-PA validates civic leaders and news media representatives requesting opportune airlift on previously scheduled missions.

1.12.1. Transportation for National Guard Bands. When traveling to conduct CONUS or OCONUS performances, National Guard bands are eligible to travel in conjunction with a scheduled military training mission in a manner that does not conflict with operational readiness and is at no additional cost to DoD. National Guard bands may travel as "opportune" passengers utilizing the excess capacity on validated MRA missions. National Guard airlift missions may not be dedicated for band performance travel.

1.12.2. Orientation Flights. ANG participation in orientation flights is governed by Air Force Instruction (AFI) 11-401/ANG Supplement 1, Flight Management. The ANG office of primary responsibility (OPR) for issues regarding orientation flights is the ANG Operations Support Forces Branch (ANG/XOOS).

1.13. Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (ESGR).

1.13.1. In a negotiated agreement with the MRA program, the National Committee Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (NCESGR) validates one MRA funded movement per state per year. All NCESGR missions validated for MRA will take place strictly within the CONUS. (Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands may also be validated for a mission within their state or territory.) NCESGR movements will be validated in accordance with DoD 4515.13-R, AFI 35-101, Public Affairs Policy and Procedures, and their internal office policy.

1.13.2. Detailed information on ESGR Employer Programs and Support Missions may be obtained at http://www.esgr.org.

1.14. State Adjutant Generals and Adjutant Generals Spouse Travel.

1.14.1. The Adjutant Generals (TAGs) may travel in State, space-required status on ANG aircraft only when the requirements outlined in DoD 4515.13-R are met.

1.14.2. Through NGB-PA, the Chief, NGB may approve AG spouse travel on a case-by-case basis.

1.15. Space - Available Passengers (Space - A). Per DoD 4515.13-R, space available passengers may occupy seats on DoD aircraft after all the space required passengers have been accommodated.

1.15.1. DoD aircraft shall not be scheduled to accommodate space available passengers.

1.8.4.1. Personnel who are on the aircraft for point-to-point travel, an orientation/familiarization flight or to only perform a proficiency jump (not performing aircrew duties for that mission) will be listed on the passenger manifest. For fighter-type aircraft, when a passenger manifest is not prepared, list individuals in the Remarks section of the Flight Authorization.

1.8.4.2. If ACMs or MEGPs are transported, IAW MAJCOM supplements, they may be listed on the flight authorization in the Remarks section (only). ACMs or MEGPs will not be listed on the AFTO Form 781, will not log time, and will not accrue OFDA credit.

1.9. Authorization for Using US Air Force Aircraft.

1.9.1. Commanders (including unit commanders) authorize aircraft flights to support command operations.

1.9.2. Commanders (including unit commanders) must ensure each flight is in the direct interest of government business and does not exceed flying hour allocations without specific approval. Commanders (including unit commanders) must not authorize flights for personal convenience or recreation.

1.9.3. The transportation of passengers and cargo will be in accordance with DoD 4515.13-R, Air Transportation Eligibility. The Deputy Chief of Staff/Installations and Logistics, Director of Transportation, Headquarters U.S. Air Force (HQ USAF/ILG), develops and publishes passenger policy to oversee passenger movement. AFI 24-101, Passenger Movement, provides guidance and procedures for arranging official transportation of Air Force personnel. Orientation flights may be approved as provided in DoD 4515.13-R and this instruction.

1.9.4. Commanders (including unit commanders) may use Air Force aircraft under their control to:

1.9.4.1. Perform tactical and combat operations.

1.9.4.2. Train aircrew personnel and evaluate aircrew performance.

1.9.4.3. Allow aircrews to meet the flying requirements of this instruction.

1.9.4.4. Further national health or safety interests, to include saving of human life if a medical officer indicates the situation involves possible loss of life, limb, or sight (DoD 4515.13-R).

1.9.4.5. Cooperate with foreign governments as directed by HQ USAF.

1.9.4.6. Perform other official missions as required.

1.9.4.7. Conduct the Air Force Orientation Flight and Public Affairs Travel Programs according to DoD 4515.13-R; AFI 35-101, Public Affairs Policies and Procedures; AFI 48-123, Medical Examinations and Standards, this instruction, and MAJCOM guidelines. Table 1.1. is a matrix of approval authorities for orientation/public affairs flights.

1.9.4.7.1. The USAF conducts orientation flights to reward and motivate individuals (incentive orientation flights only), ensure a better understanding of a particular weapon system and its role, or when the flight is determined to be in the best interest of the USAF.

1.9.4.7.1.1. Incentive Flights. Provide a visible reward to military personnel for outstanding service and motivate others to similar performance levels.

1.9.4.7.1.2. Distinguished Visitor (DV) Flights. Display USAF weapons systems to individuals so they gain a better understanding of the particular aircraft and mission.

E2. ENCLOSURE 2

POLICY GUIDANCE ON THE USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

E2.1. GENERAL POLICY

E2.1.1. Travel on military aircraft (MilAir) is a premium mode of travel involving high costs and limited resources. DoD senior officials and airlift authorizing officials should restrict travel by MilAir based on considerations such as purpose of the trip, method of transportation required, and priority of travel if using MilAir. Every effort should be made to minimize MilAir cost. In that regard, the type of aircraft used shall be based on minimum cost and size necessary to satisfy the mission requirement. Organizations shall not schedule training missions whose principal purpose is to accommodate the travel of senior DoD officials. Additionally, maximum advance planning is emphasized so that scheduling conflicts do not dictate the use of MilAir.

E2.1.2. The purpose of the travel is to be determined by the individual and his or her next level supervisor. DoD airlift authorizing officials shall ensure that an official, rather than personal, purpose is served by the travel. The purpose of travel determines the category, a designation that accords a traveler specific privileges and confers obligations. This enclosure addresses the categories of travel based on OMB Circular A-126 (reference (b)): for "required use," "other official travel," and "unofficial travel." This enclosure does not alter the space available travel policies, special procedures for military assistance advisory groups or military mission chiefs, and defense attaches, as in DoD 4515.13-R (reference (g)).

E2.1.3. The method of travel generally involves a choice between commercial transportation or MilAir. MilAir shall not be used if commercial airline or aircraft (including charter) service is reasonably available; i.e., able to meet the traveler's departure and/or arrival requirements in a 24-hour period, unless highly unusual circumstances present a clear and present danger, an emergency exists, use of MilAir is more cost-effective than commercial air, or other compelling operational considerations make commercial transportation unacceptable. Specific methods of air travel are addressed in enclosure 3.

E2.1.4. The priority of travel on MilAir is to be determined on the basis of this enclosure and on the basis of the traveler's mission. Rank, grade, or position alone is not sufficient to justify support of MilAir requests. Scheduling and approving officials shall follow this enclosure and the Airlift Priority System in DoD Directive 4500.43 (reference (h)).

2. APPLICABILITY

This Directive applies to the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), the Military Departments, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Combatant Commands, the Inspector General of the Department of Defense, the Defense Agencies, and the DoD Field Activities (hereafter referred to collectively as "the DoD Components").

3. DEFINITION

DoD Senior Officials . General or flag officers and civilian employees of the Senior Executive Service, or equivalent, and higher level employees.

4. POLICY

It is DoD policy that the use of DoD transportation resources is limited to official DoD requirements. It is essential that managers and commanders at all levels prevent misuse of transportation resources as well as the perception of their misuse. Enclosure 2 provides policy guidance for the use of airlift resources (fixed- and rotary-wing aircraft) by DoD officials and family members, non-DoD officials, and non-Federal travelers, for official and unofficial travel. Enclosure 3 provides a listing of air transportation resources that may be employed to support these travelers. The objective of this Directive is to make more effective use of DoD airlift resources and minimize costs.

5. RESPONSIBILITIES

5.1. The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology shall establish policies and provide guidance to the DoD Components concerning the efficient and effective use of DoD air transportation resources.

5.2. The Heads of the DoD Components shall ensure that regulations and implementing procedures governing the use and management of travel using DoD airlift resources are revised to ensure full compliance with this Directive.

C1.2.1. For revenue traffic procedures and the method of processing charges when revenue traffic is transported through aircraft missions financed through the DBOF-T, see AFR 76-8/AR 59-30/OPNAVINST 4630.16C/MCO 4630.13 and DoD 4000.25-7-M (references (g) and (h)).

C1.2.2. For policy and procedures concerning the U.S. Government rate tariff and its application, see AFR 76-11 and DoD 7220.9-M (references (e) and (i)).

C1.2.3. For policy and procedures concerning the non-U.S. Government rate tariff and its application, see AFR 76-28 (reference (f)).

C1.2.4. For administrative responsibilities and procedures for aeromedical evacuation, see AFR 164-5/AR 40-535/OPNAVINST 4630.9C/MCO P4630.9A (reference(j)).

C1.2.5. For criteria for assigning air movement priorities, see AFR 76-38/AR 59-8/OPNAVINST 4630.18E/MCO 4630.9D/DLAR4540.9 (reference (k)).

C1.2.6. For administration of Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) activities, see AFR 45-29, AR 145-1, and CNETINST 1533.12D (references (l), (m), and (n)).

C1.2.7. For policy on use of U.S.-owned foreign currencies for travel and transportation, see JTR volume 1, JTR volume 2, and DoD Instruction 7360.9 (references (b),(c), and (o)).

C1.2.8. For policy governing reimbursement for the use of U.S. Air Force aircraft assigned to Air Force sections of MAAGs, JUSMAG, Missions, and the MAP, or for other reimbursable purposes, see AFR 76-22 (reference (p)).

C1.2.9. For policies and procedures for administering the Uniformed Services Health Benefits Program, see AFR 168-6, AR 40-3, and BUMEDINST 6320.3B (references (q) through (s)).

C1.3. USE OF MILITARY AIRCRAFT, INELIGIBLE TRAFFIC, AND RESTRICTIONS

C1.3.1. Commanders' Responsibility. The commanders at all levels shall exercise prudent judgment to ensure that only authorized traffic is transported and that they do not misuse the authority delegated to them by this Regulation. The commanders and other officials responding to requests for transportation not specifically authorized by this Regulation shall make no commitments concerning prospective travelers or cargo until they receive all required approvals.

C1.3.2. Ineligible Traffic Procedures

C1.3.2.1. When an order or authorization for movement of traffic (passenger or cargo), which is neither authorized by this Regulation nor approved according to the procedures in this Regulation is presented, transportation shall be denied. The station making the determination shall document the case and forward it through channels to USTRANSCOM TCJ3/J4-LP, 508 SCOTT DRIVE, SCOTT AFB IL 62225-5357 for necessary action.

C1.3.2.2. Any traffic transported by DoD aircraft that is ineligible, even though documentation may have been issued, is liable for reimbursement at the non-U.S. Government rate tariff according to AFR 76-28 (reference (f)) for all transportation furnished. If any passenger or cargo is challenged for eligibility or authority, every effort shall be made to provide assistance short of delaying a scheduled aircraft.

C1.3.3. Restrictions on Use of Unit or Operational Support Aircraft. Unless requested and authorized under DoD Directive 4500.43 (reference (t)), unit aircraft shall not be utilized to transport DoD passengers and cargo. Similarly, the use of unit or operational support airlift aircraft to provide PCS transportation for DoD members or their dependents is not authorized.

C1.3.4. Pregnant and Post-Partum Mothers and Newborn Infants

C1.3.4.1. Pregnant women up to the 34th week of gestation may be accepted for air transportation unless medically inadvisable.

C1.3.4.2. Women who are 6 weeks, or more, post partum and infants at least 6 weeks old may be accepted for air transportation unless medically inadvisable. Infants under 6 weeks old and women who are less than 6 weeks post partum may be accepted if considered medically sound and so certified in writing by a responsible medical officer or civilian physician.

C1.3.5. Unaccompanied Minors. Restrictions on travel by unaccompanied minors vary with types of travel (see Chapters 2, 5, 6, and 7).

C1.3.6. Passengers on "Non-Transport-Type Aircraft." Aircraft not designed or normally configured for passenger (nonaircrew personnel) carrying capability, such as, but not limited to, fighter aircraft, are not to be used for passenger travel. This does

1.8.4.1. Personnel who are on the aircraft for point-to-point travel, an orientation/familiarization flight or to only perform a proficiency jump (not performing aircrew duties for that mission) will be listed on the passenger manifest. For fighter-type aircraft, when a passenger manifest is not prepared, list individuals in the Remarks section of the Flight Authorization.

1.8.4.2. If ACMs or MEGPs are transported, IAW MAJCOM supplements, they may be listed on the flight authorization in the Remarks section (only). ACMs or MEGPs will not be listed on the AFTO Form 781, will not log time, and will not accrue OFDA credit.

1.9. Authorization for Using US Air Force Aircraft.

1.9.1. Commanders (including unit commanders) authorize aircraft flights to support command operations.

1.9.2. Commanders (including unit commanders) must ensure each flight is in the direct interest of government business and does not exceed flying hour allocations without specific approval. Commanders (including unit commanders) must not authorize flights for personal convenience or recreation.

1.9.3. The transportation of passengers and cargo will be in accordance with DoD 4515.13-R, Air Transportation Eligibility. The Deputy Chief of Staff/Installations and Logistics, Director of Transportation, Headquarters U.S. Air Force (HQ USAF/ILG), develops and publishes passenger policy to oversee passenger movement. AFI 24-101, Passenger Movement, provides guidance and procedures for arranging official transportation of Air Force personnel. Orientation flights may be approved as provided in DoD 4515.13-R and this instruction.

1.9.4. Commanders (including unit commanders) may use Air Force aircraft under their control to:

1.9.4.1. Perform tactical and combat operations.

1.9.4.2. Train aircrew personnel and evaluate aircrew performance.

1.9.4.3. Allow aircrews to meet the flying requirements of this instruction.

1.9.4.4. Further national health or safety interests, to include saving of human life if a medical officer indicates the situation involves possible loss of life, limb, or sight (DoD 4515.13-R).

1.9.4.5. Cooperate with foreign governments as directed by HQ USAF.

1.9.4.6. Perform other official missions as required.

1.9.4.7. Conduct the Air Force Orientation Flight and Public Affairs Travel Programs according to DoD 4515.13-R; AFI 35-101, Public Affairs Policies and Procedures; AFI 48-123, Medical Examinations and Standards, this instruction, and MAJCOM guidelines. Table 1.1. is a matrix of approval authorities for orientation/public affairs flights.

1.9.4.7.1. The USAF conducts orientation flights to reward and motivate individuals (incentive orientation flights only), ensure a better understanding of a particular weapon system and its role, or when the flight is determined to be in the best interest of the USAF.

1.9.4.7.1.1. Incentive Flights. Provide a visible reward to military personnel for outstanding service and motivate others to similar performance levels.

1.9.4.7.1.2. Distinguished Visitor (DV) Flights. Display USAF weapons systems to individuals so they gain a better understanding of the particular aircraft and mission.

1.8.3. The flight authorization must include (minimum requirements):

1.8.3.1. A designated pilot-in-command, or formation flight leader of each flight or flight element.

1.8.3.2. Name, grade, and flight authorization duty code (Table A2.3.) of each crewmember, operational support flier, or any other official personnel (use the position designation established by the MAJCOM) required for the mission or flight.

1.8.3.3. Type, serial number, and call sign of aircraft or formation and mission symbol.

1.8.3.4. Place from which the flight will depart plus "on-or-about" departure date.

1.8.3.5. An itinerary and the phrase "Variations in itinerary authorized."

1.8.3.6. Provisions of AFI 65-103, Temporary Duty Orders, apply to temporary duty performed incidental to authorized flights. Include a statement to this effect on the flight authorization.

1.8.4. Flight authorizations will only include personnel on AOs (or contract aircrew personnel on a memorandum of agreement/contract) authorized to perform in-flight duties for that mission according to paragraphs 1.10. and 3.3. of this instruction. Except for non-interference members, individuals on the flight authorization should match those authorized to log time on the AFTO Form 781, ARMS Aircrew/Mission Flight Data Extract.

1.8.4.1. Personnel who are on the aircraft for point-to-point travel, an orientation/familiarization flight or to only perform a proficiency jump (not performing aircrew duties for that mission) will be listed on the passenger manifest. For fighter-type aircraft, when a passenger manifest is not prepared, list individuals in the Remarks section of the Flight Authorization.

1.8.4.2. If ACMs or MEGPs are transported, IAW MAJCOM supplements, they may be listed on the flight authorization in the Remarks section (only). ACMs or MEGPs will not be listed on the AFTO Form 781, will not log time, and will not accrue OFDA credit.

1.9. Authorization for Using US Air Force Aircraft.

1.9.1. Commanders (including unit commanders) authorize aircraft flights to support command operations.

1.9.2. Commanders (including unit commanders) must ensure each flight is in the direct interest of government business and does not exceed flying hour allocations without specific approval. Commanders (including unit commanders) must not authorize flights for personal convenience or recreation.

1.9.3. The transportation of passengers and cargo will be in accordance with DoD 4515.13-R, Air Transportation Eligibility. The Deputy Chief of Staff/Installations and Logistics, Director of Transportation, Headquarters U.S. Air Force (HQ USAF/ILG), develops and publishes passenger policy to oversee passenger movement. AFI 24-101, Passenger Movement, provides guidance and procedures for arranging official transportation of Air Force personnel. Orientation flights may be approved as provided in DoD 4515.13-R and this instruction.

1.9.4. Commanders (including unit commanders) may use Air Force aircraft under their control to:

1.9.4.1. Perform tactical and combat operations.

1.9.4.2. Train aircrew personnel and evaluate aircrew performance.

MEMORANDUM FOR:
All ANG Wing Commanders
All ANG Directors of Operations

From: NGB/CF
1411 Jefferson Davis Hwy
Arlington, VA 22202-3231

Subject: FY05 Mid-Year Flying Hour Allocation Adjustments

The Air Force had their flying hour programs significantly reduced in order to pay for other Air Force bills including GWOT and recent fuel increases. ANG was directed in the POM process by the Air Force Corporate structure to take risk in this years flying hour program. When we completed the latest BER process the funding levels were inadequate to support the program. Currently we are funded at approximately 83% of our programmed requirements. In addition, there is the potential for a further adjustment beginning in June due to another fuel price increase. MAJCOMs are not anticipating being reimbursed for this increase and may have to absorb it out of their existing FH budget. These events have forced all the commands to adopt immediate and in some cases drastic actions to deal with the shortage of flying hour funding. This situation is not smoke and mirrors, it's very real, and it will not go away before the end of the fiscal year. Also, there is a good chance that we will start FY06 with a reduced funding level.

We're asking each unit to manage their reductions in the most efficient manner possible, and then let us know when you can no longer keep your current readiness level. Our highest priority is preparation and spin-up of those units deploying to the AEF, then ORIs, formal training, etc. If it becomes necessary, we will pull hours from those units not participating in these high priority missions and flow them to the wings which are.

Commanders have to determine what they can and can't do, which staff aircrew members really need to fly, and what they need to give up, and then let us know when your drop dead date is, so we can use that information to explain the ANG position to the Air Force.

Here are the basic rules. At mid-year, you were provided funding for hours you projected to fly consisting of O&M training, TWCF airlift, and AEF contingency hours. The adjustments (cuts) were taken from the O&M bucket because that's where we lost our funding. Hours for TWCF airlift and contingencies were provided based on your forecasts and are only reimbursed back to the ANG if flown for those purposes. All hours flown in support of HHQ missions in support of the GWOT are reimbursable and do not count against your O&M training. You could actually fly as many TWCF airlift and contingency missions as you like, so long as you keep ANG/XOE appraised of your execution. Remember, reimbursable hours must be properly coded with a reimbursable mission symbol. Please be aware that if you fly a mission for another command and it's not tied directly to a contingency, then it will come out of your unit's training allocation, and those are hours you can't get back. The basic rule should be if an O&M flying does not provide your unit with the same training experience as your local training: do not fly it. If you fly them make sure that you benefit with valid training.

There is no need to attempt working requests for additional hours through my office; there is simply no money available to support any request that does not meet the priority missions as stated above. Mission stoppers need to directed to the flying hour program manager, Mr. John Wilmer. He will communicate every request and argument with the Director of Operations and me. Feel free to contact him at, John.Wilmer@ngb.ang.af.mil.

FLIGHT TRAINING CODE DESCRIPTIONS

F010 Formation Departure and Join-Up: Includes Buddy Departure

F020 Formation: At least 30 minutes of formaiton should be planned and accomplished. Log only one F020 per sortie.

F030 Large Formation Departure and Join-Up: 3 or more large aircraft in formation. Dual log with F010, must be flown through completion of level-off or join-up.

F040 Large Formation: In addition to F020 requirements, accomplish 30 minutes of formation with a flight of three or more large aircraft. Dual log with F020.

F060 AR Formation: 15 minutes of AR formation required. Consists of rendezvous and AR procedures.

M010 Proficiency Sortie: As a minimum, will consist of the following:

- Review of Boldface procedures
- Three instrument approaches
- Missed approach
- VFR traffic pattern (weather permitting)

In addition, the following should be accomplished when available and applicable:

- Holding pattern or procedure turn (to include entry)
- Circling approach
- Simulated engine-out landing (not applicable to co-pilots)
- Simulated engine-out go around or mised approach (not applicable to co-pilots)
- Partial flap landing
- EFTOC

M020 Unit Specific Training Sortie: Will be credited when any of the following events are accomplished:

F020	Formation
N010	Tanker Rendezvous
P020	Takeoff
P070	Instrument Approach
P190	Landing
R060	Tanker AR

N010 Tanker Rendezvous: Any rdzv accomplished using procedures in the AR TO. Pilots may dual log with Navigator.

R060 Tanker AR: Credit only one R060 for each receiver cell/ARCT regardless of number of aircraft. Additional Pilots or Bos may also log provided they actually accomplish a refueling in their primary position.

P020 Initial Takeoff or Takeoff following a touch and go landing

P040 Engine Failure, Takeoff Continued: Not required for co-pilots, reguires direct IP supervision. May dual log with P020, P190, and P192.

MEMORANDUM FOR 168 ARW/CC

FROM: LT COL TROY DUNN

SUBJECT: Conduct Unbecoming an Officer

1. Lt Col Douglas Kelsch did not attend UTA on 7 Aug 2005. On Tuesday, 9 Aug I asked Col Wenke why Lt Col Kelsch was not in attendance. Col Wenke stated that Lt Col Kelsh had been given a pass for the 7 Aug UTA period. He further stated that the pass had been issued on 6 Aug.

2. When I spoke with Lt Col Kelsch, he stated that Col Wenke was unaware that he had missed the 7 Aug UTA until 8 Aug. According to Lt Col Kelsch, on 8 Aug, he informed Col Wenke that he had not attended UTA on 7 Aug. At that time, Col Wenke directed Lt Col Kelsch to request a pass for 7 Aug. In my conversation with Lt Col Kelsch, he stated that he thought it curious that he should be given a pass for a date that had already expired.

3. I conducted further research to determine when the pass for Lt Col Kelsch had been requested. MSgt John Miller and SSgt Michele Fisher, of the 168th Operations Group Orderly Room, informed me that the pass dated 6 Aug for Lt Col Kelsch had been requested on 8 Aug. I informed Col Wenke what I had discovered and he again stated that he had made the request for a pass 6 Aug. Lt Col Kelsch was present during this conversation on 9 Aug.

4. I spoke with MSgt John Miller one more time, reiterating the importance of this issue. I asked him to confirm that there was no way he or anyone in the orderly room could have missed the pass request on 6 Aug. He stated, "no sir, the pass was requested on 8 August". Today, 12 Aug, Lt Col Kelsch stated to me that the statements made by Col Wenke on 9 Aug regarding the pass request "were a lie".

5. Col Wenke falsified an official document by backdating a pass for the 7 Aug UTA period that was not requested until 8 Aug. (See attached copy). Additionally, Col Wenke lied to fellow officers, myself and Lt Col Kelsch, when questioned about the aforementioned pass. This conduct is not acceptable and unbecoming of an Officer.

MEMORANDUM FOR LT COL DOUGLAS K. KELSCH
SSAN: [redacted]

FROM: 168 OG/CC
3129 Wabash Ave Ste 116
Eielson AFB, Alaska

SUBJECT: Special Pass Authorization

1. You are hereby authorized a special compensatory 1-day pass. Pass period will begin after normal duty hours on 6 Aug 2005 and terminate at the beginning of normal duty hours on 8 Aug 2005. This pass must originate and terminate in the local area. Local area is defined as the place from which you regularly commute to work. The following guidelines apply:

a. The authorized absence that exceeds the pass period is chargeable leave should you fail to return to duty within the designated period.

b. You are required to return to duty within a resonable time in the event of an operational mission requirement such as recall, unit alert, or unit emergency.

c. This special pass is not granted in conjunction with leave.

d. AF Form 988 (Leave Authorization) will be processed should you fail to return from pass and require unplanned leave.

e. This special pass is not in conjunction with or to extend any TDY period.

f. Safe Travel Guidelines: Members on non-duty status should use Operational Risk Management principles to assess all hazards and control risks prior to excessive or hazardous travel, especially by automobile. Applicable guidelines are stated in AFI 91-213, Operational Risk Management.

2. Privacy Act Notice: This document is covered under the Privacy Act of 1974. Information contained is not releasable to the public without consent of the individual concerned. AFI 37-131 and AFI 37-132 apply.

26 February 2006

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD

FROM: 168 AMXS/CC

SUBJECT: Perception of Fraud to collect ACIP Entitlement

1. In the Spring of 2000, the 168 ARW completed the conversion from the KC135R to the KC135R Block 30. The most significant impact of this conversion was the incorporation of an avionics suite that eliminated the Navigator position from the cockpit. While the Navigator position was officially retained in the 168 ARW until 1 Oct 2004, the intent was to allow the Wing time to reassign or attrit these individuals after the conversion was accomplished.

2. When the 168 ARW converted to the KC135R Block 30, the 168 ARW/CC (Col Timothy W. Scott) directed that any contingency Sortie would utilize a Navigator as an additional crewmember. In my capacity as 168 ARS/DOT (Chief of Training), it became my responsibility to train the Navigators in the Block 30. Initially, there were no Instructor Navigators in the Block 30, therefore Instructor Pilots were used to train the Navigators.

3. In the Fall of 2001, Ltc Donald S. Wenke and Ltc (Select) Wendy B. Wenke were hired as Aircrew into the 168 ARW from the Idaho Air National Guard. Ltc Donald Wenke had served as an A10 Pilot and was hired into an AGR KC135R Pilot position. Ltc Wendy Wenke had been qualified as a Navigator in the KC135E (168 ARW) in 1990, but had retrained into the C130 in the Idaho Air National Guard. Wendy was hired into a KC135R Block 30 Traditional Navigator position.

4. Col Scott knowingly hired a senior Officer into a Navigator position that was being eliminated from the Unit Manning Document. At the time of this hiring, other Navigators assigned to the 168 ARW were being retrained (two were sent to UPT) or reassigned to non-flying positions throughout the Wing or State.

5. In October of 2001, I was directed by the 168 OG/CC (Col Lawrence N. Appel) to train Ltc Wendy Wenke as a Navigator in the KC135R Block 30. I advised Col Appel that training Ltc Wenke as a Navigator offered very little return on effort and resources to the 168 ARW. Col Appel stated that he had been directed by the 168 ARW/CC (Col Scott) to accomplish the training. In addition, I was directed to request a waiver of the Requalification Academic Course that is normally required for this type of training (see attachment 1). The waiver was approved by the ANG/DO on 19 Nov 2001.

6. I initiated a Training Program for Ltc Wendy Wenke on 27 Nov 2001 (see attachment 2). Maj Jessica L. Stealey was assigned as her Primary Instructor Navigator. Ltc Wenke did not fly her first Sortie until 28 March 2002 (I was her Instructor on that Sortie, see attachment 3).

Because her training was delayed for so long, an additional waiver was required to continue her training program (AFI 11-2KC135 V1 requires that training must be complete within 180 days without an OG/CC waiver). I advised Col Appel that the training should be terminated at the end of the 180 days, but was again directed to accomplish the training. I submitted the waiver on 28 May 2002 to Col Appel to extend the training program for an additional 60 days (see attachment 4). Ltc Wenke completed her training on 26 Jul 2002 and accomplished an Inflight Evaluation on 31 Jul 2002 (see attachment 5).

7. As a fully trained and qualified Navigator in the KC135R Block 30, Ltc Wendy B. Wenke flew exactly 3 Sorties (14.7 hours). Her last flight was accomplished on 18 Sep 2002 (see attachment 6). Ltc Wenke was subsequently hired as an AGR and reassigned as the 168 LRS/CC.

8. Recently, Msg Tina Wylie (Flight Records) was contacted by Col (Select) Wendy Wenke inquiring about her flying gates towards Aviation Career Incentive Pay (ACIP). Col (Select) Wenke asked Msg Wylie when her ACIP would be reinstated. Msg Wylie researched the Flying History Report and discovered that Col (Select) Wenke had indeed met the 18 year requirement by three months. On 15 Dec 2005 her ACIP was reinstated (see attached).

9. According to AFI 11-402 (Section 3.10.3.2, Note): When considering ARC Officers for hire, assignment to a rated position solely for the purpose of initiating AO/Flight Pay and then transferring the member to a nonrated billet is strictly prohibited.

10. The perception that fraudulent activity may have taken place in violation of both the spirit and letter of the AFI warrant further investigation into the actions of Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott and Col (Select) Wendy B. Wenke.

11-421, Chapter 5 and parachutists AFI 11-421, Chapter 6 for flight/jump requirements for entitlement to flight/jump incentive pay.

1.5.2. Accomplish annual flight physical within three months prior to the end of their birth month. For aircrew/parachutists on waivers or subject to frequent TDYs, accomplish within six months prior to end of their birth month. Duty Not Involving Flying (DNIF) aircrew/parachutists must still accomplish a physical, unless medical condition prevents accomplishment (validated by a flight surgeon).

1.5.3. Aircrew, Parachutists, and operational support members must notify the HARM office immediately when flight or jump incentive pay has not been terminated if:

1.5.3.1. Suspended from aviation/parachutist service.

1.5.3.2. Disqualified from aviation/parachutist service.

1.5.3.3. DNIF more than 365 days (rated officers and CEAs).

1.5.3.4. DNIF more than 120 days (Non-rated officers or non-CEA aircrew and parachutists).

1.5.3.5. Member is a rated/CEA aircrew member in conditional status or non-rated or non-CEA aircrew member no longer assigned to an active flying billet or X, K, or Q prefix Duty Air Force Specialty Code (DAFSC) (non-rated or non-CEA).

1.5.3.6. Member is a rated officer in the ARC, not on Extended Active Duty (non-EAD) assigned to an API 0 position for more than 24-months. This does not include Active Guard Reserve (AGR) officers considered a rated asset.

1.5.3.7. Member is a rated officer/CEA in conditional status and assigned to an inactive flying UMD position.

1.5.3.7.1. Member is a conditional flyer, assigned to an active flying position; however, was not performing flights, and continued to receive flight pay without meeting the DoD FMR requirements for entitlement.

1.5.3.8. Member is a parachutist authorized permissive jump status or a parachutist no longer assigned to a 1T2X1, 1C2X1, 13DX or "J" coded UMD DAFSC.

1.5.3.8.1. Member is a parachutist, assigned to a jump billet, however, was not performing jumps, and continued to receive jump pay without meeting the DoD FMR requirements for entitlement.

1.5.3.9. Member is a flight surgeon, non-rated or non-CEA aircrew member, or parachutist member double billeted against a UMD position and other incumbent is on aeronautical orders and receiving incentive pay.

1.5.4. Contact the local finance office for "rate of pay" discrepancies. Aircrew members must validate their years of aviation service match the "rate of pay" they are authorized to receive IAW the DoD Financial Management Regulation (DoD FMR) 7000.14R. The HARM will provide copies of the member's AO and Military Pay Orders (MPOs) to help the aircrew member rectify discrepancies with finance.

1.6. Specific Guidelines:

1.6.1. Air Force personnel are not entitled to flight/jump incentive pay unless they are on competent AOs, physically qualified, and required to perform specific in-flight/jump duties. AOs certify that an individual fulfills all requirements for aviation/parachutist service and are the official authorization to perform in-flight/jump duties.

1.6.2. Assigning anyone to an active flying/jump position solely for the purpose of accumulating Operational Flying Duty Accumulator (OFDA) credit or qualifying for incentive pay is contrary to public law and USAF policy.

1.7. Training.

1.7.1. Entrance into training for the rated force is voluntary. Once awarded an aeronautical rating, a rated officer must perform all aircrew and rated staff duties assigned. This includes additional flying training related to the officer's rated specialty.

1.7.2. Entrance into training for the CEA force is voluntary. Once awarded an Aircrew Operations AFSC, the CEA must perform all aircrew and staff duties assigned. This includes additional flying training related to the member's specialty.

1.7.3. Training for parachutists is voluntary. Once awarded the 1C2X1, 1T2X1, or 13DX AFSCs, a parachutist must perform all parachutist duties assigned. This includes additional jump training related to the member's specialty.

1.7.4. Non-rated officers, and non-CEA enlisted personnel, must volunteer to enter training that will qualify them to perform in-flight duties in an aircraft(s) as aircrew members or operational support flyers. Unless permanently disqualified, members who complete initial training remain available for flying duties and may be directed to perform such duties at any time.

1.8. Qualification and Disqualification.

1.8.1. Qualification for aviation/parachutist service is not a right; it rests within the sole discretion of the approval authority. Members remain qualified for aviation/parachutist service based on their qualifications and aircrew potential to obtain and maintain qualification in an aircraft (for aircrew).

1.8.2. Aircrew and parachutist members must maintain medical and professional qualification to remain qualified for aviation/parachutist service. Members with a substantiated record of drug abuse will not be entered into aviation/parachutist service duties except IAW AFI 36-2205, Applying for Flying Training, Air Battle Manager, and Astronaut Programs as it applies to initial Undergraduate Flying Training (UFT) applicants.

1.8.3. Air Force personnel may request voluntary disqualification from aviation/parachutist service. Approval is contingent on the best interests of the USAF. See Table 3.1. for approval authority.

1.8.4. Disqualification from aviation/parachutist service is an administrative action designed to remove an individual from aviation/parachutist service for cause. It is not a disciplinary action, nor a substitute for action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) or any other administrative directive. The USAF disqualifies a member when he or she is found medically or professionally unqualified to perform aviation/parachutist service according to this instruction. Disqualification terminates flight/jump incentive pay.

1.9. Documentation of Case Actions. At the conclusion of an aviation/parachutist service action, all documentation becomes a permanent part of the individual's master personnel record. Prepare all pack-

Instructor Comments

Describe mission scenario. Please elaborate on student strengths and weaknesses, identify problem areas, note unusual circumstances, and indicate trends.

Mission Scenario: Two-Ship (Two) Air Refueling Mission on AR 508E with 2XB2A receivers. UN Wenke was on board for S-1 of her Requal/Pacer CRAG training. Transition was accomplished in the local pattern at PAEI.

Mission Plan/Brief: Maj Stealey went through the mission planning process with UN Wenke. They produced the AF 200 flight plan, chart and 168 ARS Briefing Guide on the day prior to the scheduled sortie. In addition, the mission data card was preloaded on the Hot Bench Trainer.

Preflight/Engine Start/Taxi: Maj Stealey demonstrated the FMS preflight duties to LTC Wenke. In addition, she allowed LTC Wenke to complete the steps for Mode IV and Secure Voice while Jessica instructed.

Takeoff/Climb: Ltc Wenke observed while Maj Stealey coordinated the Takeoff/Climbout and join-up.

Cruise: Due to a failure of INU-2, an Airborne Alignment was required. Maj Stealey instructed Ltc Wenke in the procedure to align the INU-2. The system was slow to respond, but eventually the alignment was successful.

Air Refueling: Ltc Wenke observed while Maj Stealey accomplished the Enroute Rendezvous and Air Refueling.

Descent/Pattern: Multiple approaches were accomplished by the Pilot team. Maj Stealey continued to instruct Ltc Wenke throughout.

Recommendations: Ltc Wenke has an eagerness to learn the Pacer CRAG system. She has remarkable ability to grasp new concepts and will adapt quickly to the new systems.

Dear Colonel Dunn

This is in response to your 4 Jan 07, Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request received by the Air Force Inspector General Senior Official Inquiries Directorate (SAF/IGS) on 12 January 2007. In your letter, you requested "a copy of the substantiated SAF/IGS investigation case number S6646P involving Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott, Commander of the Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG/CC) and Col Donald S. Wenke.... I have determined to release to you a redacted copy of the report of investigation.

Portions of the information are exempt from disclosure and we have inserted notations in the attached documents to identify the portions deleted and the reasons therefore. The notations are explained as follows:

a. Exemption 6 pertains to information in personnel and medical files, as well as similar personal information in other files, that, if disclosed to the public, would result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. The authority for this exemption may be found in Title 5 U.S.C. Section 552(b)(6) and DoDR 5400.7-R, paragraph C3.2.1.6.

b. Exemption 7(C) pertains to all names and other personal information identifying individuals in Inspector General documents. These were withheld, as release of this information could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy. The authority for this exemption may be found in Title 5 U.S.C. Section 552(b)(7)(C) and DoDR 5400.7-R, paragraph C3.2.1.7.

You are receiving all responsive records and I am the official responsible for this determination. I have waived all processing fees. The volume of material provided is approximately 33 pages.

Should you decide that an appeal to this decision is necessary, you must appeal within 60 calendar days after the date of this letter. Include in your appeal the reference FOIA Case Number 07-0274, the reasons for reconsideration, and attach a copy of this letter. Please address your letter as follows:

I. INTRODUCTION

On 14 Nov 05, SAF/IGS received a case referral from the Inspector General, Department of Defense (DoD-IG) (#05-L97567) concerning an Air Force senior official, Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott, commander of the Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG). DoD-IG had received a complaint in early Oct 05 from the Area Defense Counsel's office at Eielson AFB, AK. The written complaint itself consisted of three Memos for Record from Lt Col Troy R. Dunn, former commander of the 168th Operations Support Flight (168 OSF) at Eielson. (Ex 1)

b7c

The first complaint memorandum, dated 27 Jun 05, stated allegations of fraud, waste, and abuse against Brig Gen Scott and Col Donald S. "Scott" Wenke, commander of the 168th Operations Group (168 OG) regarding the tasking of KC-135 aircraft within the 168th Air Refueling Wing (168 ARW). During the complaint analysis phase, the possible involvement of the 168 ARW Commander, Col [redacted], relative to the alleged fraud, waste, and abuse was uncovered and he was added as a subject. The second complaint memorandum, dated 12 Aug 05, further alleged that [redacted] Since the allegations against the three subjects are very closely linked, SAF/IGS elected to work the entire case, including the two colonels. The third complaint memorandum did not involve a senior official and was unrelated to the issues raised in the first two, and the complainant was informed that SAF/IGQ would be the appropriate office to file that specific complaint.

The Investigation Officer (IO) traveled to Eielson AFB, AK, 17-20 May 06. Seven witnesses and the three subjects were interviewed in person during this time. Nine additional witnesses had been interviewed telephonically prior to this travel.

During the conduct of the investigation, an additional complainant (Maj [redacted]) agreed with Lt Col Dunn's original allegations and made an additional allegation of fraud, waste, and abuse against Brig Gen Scott regarding the retraining of an unqualified navigator during the time that Brig Gen Scott was commander of the 168 ARW. (Ex 2) The scope of the investigation was expanded to determine the validity of the secondary allegation.

During the course of the investigation, it appeared that none of the subjects were guilty of criminal misconduct. Therefore, this investigator treated them as subjects and not suspects. It was not deemed necessary to read them their Article 31 rights.

II. SCOPE AND AUTHORITY

The Secretary of the Air Force has sole responsibility for the function of The Inspector General of the Air Force.[1] When directed by the Secretary of the Air Force or the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, The Inspector General has the authority to inquire into and report on the discipline, efficiency, and economy of the Air Force and perform any other duties prescribed by the Secretary or the Chief of Staff.[2] The Inspector General must cooperate fully with The Inspector General of the Department of Defense.[3] Pursuant to Air Force Instruction (AFI) 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, (8 February 2005), paragraph 1.11.2, The Inspector General directs and provides oversight for all IG investigations conducted at the level of the Secretary of the Air Force.

Pursuant to AFI 90-301, paragraph 1.11.3.1, the Director, Senior Official Inquiries Directorate (SAF/IGS), is responsible for performing special investigations directed by the Secretary, the Chief of Staff, or The Inspector General and all investigations of senior officials. AFI 90-301 defines senior official as any Air Force active duty, retired, reserve, or Air National Guard military officers in the grades of brigadier general-select and above; current and former civilians above the grade of general schedule- or general manager-15; current and former members of the Senior Executive Service; and current and former Air Force civilian Presidential Appointees.

The mission of The Inspector General of the Air Force is to maintain a credible inspector general system by ensuring the existence of responsive complaint investigations characterized by objectivity, integrity, and impartiality. The Inspector General ensures the concerns of all complainants and the best interests of the Air Force are addressed through objective fact finding.

On 14 Dec 05, The Inspector General approved a recommendation that SAF/IGS conduct an investigation into an allegation of misconduct by Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott, AKANG/CC; Col [redacted], 168 ARW/CC; and Col Donald S. Wenke, 168 OG/CC, all located at Eielson AFB, AK. The case was assigned to Col [redacted], who holds SAF/IG appointment letters dated 9 Dec 03 and 2 Mar 06 (Ex 3), and the investigation began on 2 Feb 06.

III. BACKGROUND

The complaint. The original complaint focuses mainly on alleged misuse of KC-135 tanker aircraft and resources. The complainant cites several instances in which he believes KC-135 aircraft were used primarily to transport Brig Gen Scott to/from various TDY locations. The complainant believes that such use of the aircraft constitutes fraud, waste, and abuse of government resources and is expressly prohibited by regulation.

The complainant also alleges that one of the subjects (Col Scott Wenke) falsified an official document dealing with aircrew training events – a document that was related to one of the alleged fraudulent flights in an effort to justify the flight for something other than transporting the general.

The second complaint centers on the KC-135 navigator requalification training of then Lt Col [redacted] in 2002. [redacted] is the wife of Col Scott Wenke.[4] The KC-135 aircraft of the 168 ARW had completed Pacer CRAG modification,[5] removing the requirement for the navigator position. The 168 ARW was actively transitioning existing navigators into other valid billets. The complainant alleges that despite the lack of a navigator requirement, then Col Scott,[6] 168 ARW Commander at the time, directed that a training program be developed to requalify Lt Col [redacted] in the KC-135. According to the complainant, this was done so that Lt Col [redacted] would accrue sufficient flying gate month credit to qualify for continuous Aviator Continuation Incentive Pay (ACIP),[7] in violation of regulations.

Chain of Command. This case involves the Alaska National Guard, which is led by a major general (currently Air Force) and is sub-divided into the AKANG and the Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG). The headquarters of the Alaska National Guard and its two components are located at Ft. Richardson near Anchorage.

The AKANG is led by a brigadier general and has two major operating units – the 176th Wing at Kulis ANG Base (Anchorage) and the 168 ARW at Eielson AFB (Fairbanks). The 168 ARW is commanded by a colonel, is responsible mainly for KC-135 operations and consists of four groups – Operations, Maintenance, Mission Support and Medical.

[4] Although [redacted] has since been promoted to colonel, all events relating to her within this report occurred while she was a lieutenant colonel. To avoid confusion with both her husband Col Scott Wenke (the 168 OG/CC and a subject in this case) and the documentary evidence, she will hereafter be referred to by her previous rank of lieutenant colonel.

[5] Pacer CRAG (Compass, Radar, And Global positioning system) is a flight deck avionics modernization program that, among other things, eliminated the navigator requirement for aircraft so modified. The modification was so extensive as to require "differences training" for remaining current KC-135 crewmembers before they would be qualified to fly the Pacer CRAG, Block 30 modified aircraft. Conversion of all 168 ARW was completed in 2000. (Ex 4:1) The 168 ARW was given until 1 Oct 04 to transition remaining navigators to other valid billets.

[6] Although some events relating to Brig Gen Scott occurred while he was a colonel, he will hereafter be referred to within this report by his current rank of brigadier general to avoid confusion.

The 168 OG currently has one squadron (168 ARS) dedicated to the KC-135 mission. Prior to this past fall, the Operations Support Flight (OSF) reported directly to the Operations Group, but it now falls underneath the 168 ARS.

Key Players. The following individuals play a key role in this case:

- Brig Gen Timothy W. Scott (subject) is the Commander of the Alaska Air National Guard and the Assistant Adjutant General for Air of the Alaska National Guard, positions he has held since Aug 03. (Ex 5) Although the AKANG headquarters is located at Ft. Richardson (Anchorage), Brig Gen Scott maintains his residence in the Fairbanks area and an office in the wing headquarters building on Eielson AFB. Brig Gen Scott is a navigator and not actively flying.

- Col [redacted] is the Commander of the 168 ARW at Eielson. He is a full-time Guard member (Technician), scheduled to retire in Oct 06.

- Col Donald S. Wenke (subject) is the Commander of the 168 OG at Eielson. He is responsible for the ANG KC-135 flying operations there. He has been on station for about three years and was hired by Brig Gen Scott from the ANG unit at Boise, ID. He is a pilot and is actively flying as a mission pilot. Evidence collected during this analysis indicates that Col Wenke often does not see eye-to-eye with Lt Col Dunn, and in fact, Col Wenke removed Lt Col Dunn from being the OSF commander in Aug 05.

- Lt Col Troy Dunn (complainant) is presently the Operations Officer of the 168 ARS and formerly was the Commander of the 168 OSF when that flight reported directly to the group commander. He is a pilot and actively flies. As stated before, he does not agree with Col Wenke on some issues and he firmly believes there has been widespread fraud, waste, and abuse of tanker resources by his wing.

b7c

[redacted]

- Lt Col [redacted] is currently the Executive Staff Support Officer (ESSO) for the Commander, Alaska Air National Guard (currently Brig Gen Scott)

- Lt Col [redacted] replaced Lt Col Dunn as 168 OSF/CC in Aug 05. Prior to that he was Chief of Scheduling within the 168 OSF.

- The 168 OSF Scheduling office is responsible for building and maintaining the flight schedules for the 168 ARS. It is staffed by three officers (Capt [redacted], Capt [redacted], and [redacted]) and two NCOs (SMSgt [redacted] and SMSgt [redacted]) who are subordinate to the 168 OSF/CC.

Mission Approval. Each 168 ARW tanker flight has a mission number. If the KC-135 stays inside the state of Alaska, the unit itself issues one of its own mission numbers to the flight. 168 ARW flights outside the state of Alaska require a mission number from another agency or headquarters. When flying a "business opportunity" mission with another command, such as flying an aerial refueling mission with a C-17, the unit will get a mission number from Air Mobility Command (AMC). Often, the 168 ARW will get a mission number from the National Guard Bureau, more specifically from the Guard's Readiness Center at Andrews AFB, MD. (Ex 36:3)

b7c

Maj [redacted], ANG/XOXP, explained that his office assigns the mission numbers to the tanker missions and does so based on the request of the wing or operations group commander. He stated that his office does not act "as policemen" and question the commander's request – they assume that a commander's request is a valid use of tanker resources. (Ex 6)

RODEO 2005, Air Mobility Command's international mobility competition, was held at McChord AFB, WA, from 19 – 24 Jun 05. AMC's RODEO competitions are held periodically to develop and improve mobility techniques and procedures and build esprit de corps within the command. Each RODEO has its own leadership in the form of a "commander" and two "vice-commanders," usually one each from the active duty Air Force, the Air Force Reserve, and the Air National Guard. For RODEO 2005, Brig Gen Scott was one of the vice commanders; however, the 168 ARW was not a participant. (Ex 7)

With regard to funding Brig Gen Scott's RODEO participation, AMC had set up a funding code that could be used for RODEO 2005-related travel and expenses. (Ex 8)

V. ALLEGATIONS, FINDINGS, ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

ALLEGATION 1. That Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for his personal convenience.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

- On or about 7 Apr 05, Brig Gen Scott was flown from Eielson AFB, AK, to McChord AFB, WA, aboard a 168 ARW KC-135, attended a RODEO meeting, and returned to Eielson several hours later via the same 168 ARW aircraft. (Ex 14:1-2,6)

- On or about 13 Jun 05, Brig Gen Scott was flown from Eielson AFB to McChord AFB on a 168 ARW KC-135 to participate in RODEO 05. The aircraft flew on to Luke AFB, AZ, for training. (Ex 15:1-2)

- On or about 25 Jun 05, the 168 ARW flew a KC-135 from Eielson AFB to McChord AFB and back. Brig Gen Scott returned to Eielson from the RODEO on this aircraft. (Ex 17:1-3)

- On or about 5 Nov 05, Brig Gen Scott and party were flown from Eielson AFB to Elmendorf AFB, AK, on a 168 ARW KC-135 and remained overnight. On the next day additional passengers joined the party and were flown to Andrews AFB, MD, to facilitate meetings at National Guard Bureau Headquarters. After dropping off Brig Gen Scott and party, the aircraft flew on to Charleston AFB, SC, for several days of refueling training with C-17s out of Charleston. (Ex 35:15; Ex 18:1)

- On or about 9 Nov 05, the same 168 ARW aircraft recovered to Andrews AFB to remain overnight. The following day Brig Gen Scott and party were flown back to Eielson AFB via Elmendorf AFB. (Ex 35:16-17; Ex 18:1)

STANDARDS.

AFI 90-301 defines the terms fraud, waste, and abuse as:

Fraud—Any intentional deception designed to unlawfully deprive the Air Force of something of value or to secure from the Air Force for an individual a benefit, privilege, allowance, or consideration to which he or she is not entitled.

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

Waste—The extravagant, careless, or needless expenditure of Air Force funds or the consumption of Air Force property that results from deficient practices, systems controls, or decisions. The term also includes improper practices not involving prosecutable fraud.

Abuse—Intentional wrongful or improper use of Air Force resources. Examples include misuse of rank, position, or authority that causes the loss or misuse of resources such as tools, vehicles, computers, or copy machines. (Ex 19:129, 133, 140)

Several regulations at varying levels address the prudent use of taxpayer resources with regard to transporting government employees and military members on military aircraft. The following directives, regulations and instructions all address the issue and leave no doubt as to their focus.

DODD 4500.43, Operational Support Airlift (OSA), 28 Oct 96, states:

4.3. OSA aircraft shall not be used for travel (other than those officials designated as "required use" travelers) if commercial airline or aircraft (including charter) service is reasonably available; i.e., able to meet the traveler's departure and/or arrival requirements in a 24-hour period, unless highly unusual circumstances present a clear and present danger, an emergency exists, use of military aircraft is more cost-effective than commercial air, or other compelling operational considerations make commercial transportation unacceptable. (Ex 20:3)

DODD 4500.56, DoD Policy on the Use of Government Aircraft and Air Travel, 2 Mar 97, states:

E2.1. GENERAL POLICY
E2.1.1. Travel on military aircraft (MilAir) is a premium mode of travel involving high costs and limited resources. DoD senior officials and airlift authorizing officials should restrict travel by MilAir based on considerations such as purpose of the trip, method of transportation required, and priority of travel if using MilAir. Every effort should be made to minimize MilAir cost. In that regard, the type of aircraft used shall be based on minimum cost and size necessary to satisfy the mission requirement. Organizations shall not schedule training missions whose principal purpose is to accommodate the travel of senior DoD officials. Additionally, maximum advance planning is emphasized so that scheduling conflicts do not dictate the use of MilAir.
E2.1.2. The purpose of the travel is to be determined by the individual and his or her next level supervisor. DoD airlift authorizing officials shall ensure that an official, rather than personal, purpose is served by the travel. The purpose of travel determines the category, a designation that accords a traveler specific privileges and confers obligations. This enclosure addresses the categories of travel based on OMB CircularA-126 (reference (b)): for "required use," "other official travel," and "unofficial travel." This enclosure does not alter the space available travel policies, special procedures for military assistance advisory groups or military mission chiefs, and defense attaches, as in DoD 4515.13-R (reference (g)).

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

E2.1.3. The method of travel generally involves a choice between commercial transportation or MilAir. MilAir shall not be used if commercial airline or aircraft (including charter) service is reasonably available; i.e., able to meet the traveler's departure and/or arrival requirements in a 24-hour period, unless highly unusual circumstances present a clear and present danger, an emergency exists, use of MilAir is more cost-effective than commercial air, or other compelling operational considerations make commercial transportation unacceptable. Specific methods of air travel are addressed in enclosure 3. (Ex 21:5)

DoD 4515.13-R, Air Transportation Eligibility, Nov 94, states:

C1.3.1. Commanders' Responsibility. The commanders at all levels shall exercise prudent judgment to ensure that only authorized traffic is transported and that they do not misuse the authority delegated to them by this Regulation. The commanders and other officials responding to requests for transportation not specifically authorized by this Regulation shall make no commitments concerning prospective travelers or cargo until they receive all required approvals. (Ex 22:24-25)

AFI 11-401, Aviation Management, 15 Dec 04 states:

1.9. Authorization for Using US Air Force Aircraft.
1.9.1. Commanders (including unit commanders) authorize aircraft flights to support command operations.
1.9.2. Commanders (including unit commanders) must ensure each flight is in the direct interest of government business and does not exceed flying hour allocations without specific approval. Commanders (including unit commanders) must not authorize flights for personal convenience or recreation. (Ex 23:14)

ANGI 10-201, Air Transportation, 29 Nov 04 discusses this subject of good stewardship of taxpayer monies in a couple of locations:

1.8. Training Missions. The ANG must use aircrew training hours in a manner that demonstrates good stewardship of the taxpayers' money. MAJCOMs justify these hours on the basis of maintaining wartime readiness. Congress and the public expect us to use them accordingly. Each training mission must be structured to achieve maximum training. Any by-product airlift opportunity resulting from a previously scheduled training mission must not degrade the intended training in any way and must comply with applicable DoD directives and regulations. It is essential that personnel at all levels prevent misuse of air mobility resources as well as the perception of their misuse.

1.10. Travel for Conferences, Conventions, Staff Assistance Visits, Meetings, and/or MWR events. Travel for conferences, conventions, staff assistance visits, meetings, and/or MWR events by any size of group, whether the event is sponsored by the National Guard or not, does not qualify as combat readiness training under the MRA program. It may qualify as opportune airlift (Priority 6, Paragraph 2.5.6.), which means that it may

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

only be supported in conjunction with already validated and scheduled training without adding negligible additional cost to the government. Personnel seeking transportation for this purpose are advised not to rely on opportune airlift as their primary means of travel because requests may not be filled. Users are encouraged to travel by commercial transportation or apply for OSA transport through JOSAC.
(See Paragraph 1.3.2.)

1.10.1. It is possible to travel to such events if it takes place in conjunction with already scheduled training missions. Training missions scheduled to transport National Guard members to non-mission readiness training events such as conferences, conventions, meetings, or MWR events are prohibited. Space available or opportune travel on training missions is only permitted if:

1.10.1.1. The aircraft is already scheduled for an official purpose.

1.10.1.2. Travel is on a non-interference basis.

1.10.1.3. The non-interference travel does not require a larger aircraft than needed for the official purpose.

1.10.1.4. Already scheduled official travelers or cargo is not displaced.

1.10.1.5. The travel results in negligible additional cost to the Government. Such travel is funded by the aircraft operator's organization.

1.10.2. It is important the travel is done in conjunction with already scheduled training rather than "training" missions being flown primarily for their transportation by-product. Flying hours flown should not exceed those required to meet legitimate training requirements. (Ex 24:9-10)

ANALYSIS.

Although ANGI 10-201 specifies in reference to opportune airlift that "it is important the travel is done in conjunction with already scheduled training rather than 'training' missions being flown primarily for their transportation by-product," the IO found an almost universal belief among witnesses that training missions were routinely scheduled to accommodate travel to specific locations at specific times – at Eielson and any other base for that matter. There was, however, a significantly different perception of abuse between missions that were scheduled well in advance, incorporated robust training opportunities, and transported groups of passengers versus those added on at the last minute, facilitating little or no training, and transporting a single passenger. Indeed, ANGI 10-201 seems to anticipate circumstances of the former. There are four specific flights or sets of flights highlighted by the complainant as being directed by Brig Gen Scott which violate the above regulations. Brig Gen Scott personally flew on three of these and Col [redacted] on the fourth. Two of these were of the type that were scheduled well in advance, and two were arranged on short notice. For purposes of this analysis, the IO has chosen to concentrate on the two "add-on" flights taken by Brig Gen Scott to and/or from McChord AFB for duties relating to the RODEO 05 competition.

b6
b7c

The first of these flights occurred on 7 Apr 05. A 168 ARW crew with Brig Gen Scott aboard flew from Eielson AFB to McChord AFB and back. The aircraft was on the ground at McChord for approximately 3.4 hours. (Ex 14:2,6) Brig Gen Scott testified that for a portion of this time he performed duties regarding the upcoming RODEO. (Ex 44:7) Other testimony indicates the crew ate lunch during this interval. (Ex 35:15; Ex 42:11) The IO was unable to accurately discern the specific training goals of the mission. According to Col Wenke's testimony the mission was scheduled for off station traffic pattern training. (Ex 42:11) Brig Gen Scott testified that an aerial refueling had been scheduled for the mission, but was not accomplished. (Ex 44:7,9) In fact, records indicate that each leg was flown to a full stop landing with no other training accomplished. (Ex 14:3-5; 7-9)

The origination of this specific mission was also open for debate. Brig Gen Scott testified that he was called by the scheduling shop and offered the ride to McChord; "...because scheduling called me and said, 'Hey, we've got a refueling going, do you want to... and you need to go to McChord, do you want to go?'" (Ex 44:7)

When asked how the scheduling shop would be aware that he had a need to travel to McChord, Brig Gen Scott testified that he had been attempting to get more ANG tanker participation in the RODEO and in prior conversations with the wing commander had asked about the possibility of the 168 ARW participating. Brig Gen Scott's testimony continued...

> ...and he said, "Well I'll check around," and when I get a call from scheduling offering me a ride to McChord and back, I'm not going to sit there and say, "Well now have you looked at the regs, is this legit, can you do this?" When I can go down, when I can take a three hour, a three hour flight to McChord, sit down, sit through a meeting and come back on the same day, and save a fifteen hundred dollar round trip ticket and two days of travel, hell yeah I'll do it, I'll do it in a heartbeat. But did I pick up the phone and talk, call the scheduler and say, "Hey, launch an airplane to McChord and put my happy butt on it"? You're smoking dope if you think I did that. (Ex 44:8)

In a follow-up exchange Brig Gen Scott added the following:

> IO2: ...have you ever or have you not ever called the scheduling shop directly to ask for mil air?
> W: I've asked for the availability.
> IO2: Okay, but you, and it's your testimony then that you've never said, "I need a plane to go, you know come pick me up down here or go there"?
> W: Never. (Ex 44:9)

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

This testimony is at variance with that of five members of the scheduling office:

> IO: I don't want to beat a dead horse, but I do need to ask this question again just so that I understand, when you say that it [the request for the 7 April mission to McChord] came in and it came in late, where does that come from in that case?
> W2: ...I'm trying to remember a year ago who took that call. It's not out of the ordinary for [Brig Gen Scott] to call straight into the scheduling shop.
> W3: Or walk in.
> IO2: And, and let me just narrow you in even further now, and I understand that it's not atypical for a General officer to call here and say, "Hey, have you got any opportune airlift?" But we're actually kind of focusing on the opposite. Because we have evidence to suggest, some testimony, that you all here called a particular person and said, "We have a planned mission on the 7th of April, would you like a ride?"
> Unison: No, no way.

Continuing on later in the testimony regarding whether anyone in the scheduling office called Brig Gen Scott to offer a ride on a previously scheduled training mission on 7 April, the schedulers stated:

> W2: Yeah, I would say the truth is, it's exactly 180 degrees out. That was, "You will take a plane to McChord..."

W2: The 7th was prior to the RODEO, it was a RODEO meeting I believe.

W4: This was a planning meeting and this was definitely not that we were going to McChord. We had nothing going to McChord.

W2: No, we had no intention of going to McChord.

W4: This was "You will go to McChord and you will..."

W1: ...as I said, our monthly product, which is created the month before, it is not in it and it is handwritten in there that McChord is added. (Ex 41:11:12)

Returning to the same general line of questioning later in the interview, members of the scheduling shop reiterated:

IO2: This goes back to whether Gen Scott has ever called the scheduling shop to ask for airlift to come and pick him up or do other things and you all have already testified that he's stopped in on occasion and looked at the board and utilizes the phone quite a bit to call. Dig back in your memory banks, specifically back to 2005 and give us kind of an indication on an average, how many times you estimate he may have called directly to the scheduling shop and/or stopped in to look at the board and say, you know, "Add me here, I need, you know I have something going on, on such and such a date."

W1: Well around those April, May, June timeframe, it was a couple of times a month, but then you wouldn't see him for like three months...

IO2: Okay so if someone, if, if for example, hypothetically if he were to say, you know, "I've never called the scheduling shop and asked for airlift," would that be something that would be...

W1: Incorrect?

W1: Absolutely incorrect

W2: That would be wrong.

W3: And laughable.

W1: And our long range planner has talked to him quite often. As a matter of fact when he calls, it's like "[redacted]! Scott's on the phone!"

W1: A lot of times he'll ask for him.

W1: Yeah, he works pretty close with Sgt [redacted]. (Ex 41:22-23)

One of the other points brought out by the scheduling shop involved the timing of the 7 Apr 05 mission. There are two large white boards on the walls of the scheduling office, each depicting planned missions for the calendar year. Photographs are taken of these boards at the end of the year for archival purposes. (Ex 25) Additionally, monthly and weekly schedules are published. The 7 Apr mission was never reflected on the planning board, nor did it originally appear in the monthly schedule. There is a handwritten margin note for that date on the monthly schedule stating, "McChord added." (Ex 26:2; Ex 41:12) The first positive reference to the mission appears in the weekly schedule, distributed on 31 Mar 05, but even in that case it was not listed in the cover letter listing Space Available opportunities. (Ex 27:2) It does, however list "DV PAX: BGen Scott" on the specific mission line. (Ex 27:3) All this, according to the schedulers' testimony, indicates that this mission was never contemplated in the long-range plan; but, rather, was added on by short notice request. Additionally, no evidence was found that there was any coordination accomplished with a potential air-refueling receiver, as would be necessary if the mission had been planned as an aerial refueling training sortie. (Ex 41:14)

b6
b7c

Finally, regarding the lack of apparent aerial refueling coordination, Lt Col [redacted] testified:

W2: Yeah, there was never any plan to have an air refueling on that. We were told "13:00, I want to step on the ramp at McChord. I have a three hour meeting. Three hours later, the plane will depart back here," and I'm like...

IO2: And let's, let's, I guess, cut to the chase on that, who were you told to make that happen? Who told you to make that happen?

W2: Gen Scott. (Ex 41:15)

The second short-notice training flight in question regarding this allegation was in conjunction with Brig Gen Scott's participation in the RODEO competition at McChord in Jun 05. Brig Gen Scott utilized a 168 ARW KC-135 as his transportation from Eielson to McChord, but in that case the crew and aircraft flew on to Luke AFB after dropping Brig Gen Scott off and conducted several nights of joint aerial refueling training with a unit there. (Ex 15:1-2) Testimony indicated that this training was particularly valid due to the limited hours of nightfall available in Alaska during the summer. Additionally, this mission was planned well in advance and the senior leader travel did not interfere with the significant training accomplished, therefore it is not a focus of this investigation. Brig Gen Scott's return flight to Eielson on 25 Jun 05 at the conclusion of the RODEO, however, did not meet this same standard.

Testimony indicated that the 168 ARW made several attempts to arrange a suitable training profile that would accommodate Brig Gen Scott's return from McChord, with each ultimately deemed unworkable due to the disruption at McChord caused by RODEO events. One of these involved an attempt to bring in a KC-135 on Thursday, 23 Jun, to conduct aerial refueling training with a McChord-based C-17. The plan was for it to return to Eielson on Saturday, 25 Jun, with Brig Gen Scott. (Ex 41:16; Ex 42:13) All the C-17s not participating in the RODEO, however, had been flown to alternate locations to free up aircraft parking ramp space for RODEO participants. Additionally, all lodging within a reasonable distance was saturated with RODEO competitors. (Ex 44:14) For these reasons, officials at McChord would not permit transient aircraft traffic. Another factor arguing against an Eielson based KC-135 remaining overnight during the week was that the 168 ARW was substantially involved in COPE THUNDER exercises in Alaska, and the wing could not spare the aircraft. (Ex 41:18)

As the departure date approached, several electronic mails (e-mails) were exchanged between Brig Gen Scott, Lt Col [redacted], and officials within the 168 ARW. One sent to Lt Col [redacted] from Brig Gen Scott on Thursday, 16 Jun, stated: "Does scheduling have some arrival and departure times for McChord? The ramp is filling up and the majority of competitors are departing Saturday. Please have them work it and let me know. t" Lt Col [redacted] forwarded this to the 168 ARS commander, Lt Col [redacted], asking him "could you work this?" Lt Col [redacted] passed the action to Lt Col [redacted], then the [redacted]. (Ex 16) Lt Col [redacted] testified that at that point there still was no suitable mission planned due to the inability to get permission to land at McChord, but if they could obtain landing permission, the wing would plan for an operational stop on Saturday, 25 Jun. He brought this to Lt Col [redacted] attention who relayed it to Brig Gen Scott. According to Lt Col [redacted] testimony, Brig Gen Scott's RODEO staff at McChord then coordinated an exception to the transient prohibition in place at McChord. (Ex 36:17) As he was working this issue, Brig Gen Scott responded to Lt Col [redacted] e-mail requesting the time he should be picked up: "I need a Saturday pick up with a noon-ish departure. Let me know who is working this and I'll put them in contact with the Rodeo schedulers. t" (Ex 16)

b7c

The schedulers reported significant difficulty finding an available crew to fly the mission due to the workload created by participation in the COPE THUNDER exercise. (Ex 41:19) The complainant testified that there were no volunteers because it was widely recognized that this was not going to be a legitimate training mission, and crews therefore wanted no part of it; however, the IO was unable to confirm this. Both the complainant and the chief scheduler each testified that they individually protested to Col Wenke that the mission as proposed violated ANGI 10-201. (Ex 35:3; Ex 36:7) Col Wenke's testimony acknowledged this encounter with the complainant, and added that he told the complainant that he disagreed. At that point, Col Wenke volunteered to take the mission himself, and an instructor pilot was found so that Col Wenke could accomplish a M010 training sortie during the mission. Col Wenke testified that this would be valid training since he rarely got an opportunity to fly off-station missions to unfamiliar fields. (Ex 42:10-11, 13-14)

It is clear from the evidence that the driving purpose of the mission was to facilitate Brig Gen Scott's return to Eielson. Though Col Wenke's point about unfamiliar pattern work being valuable for him is noted, it is also clear that absent the desire to pick up Brig Gen Scott, McChord was perhaps the least desirable location to attempt pattern work that day due to the difficulty obtaining landing clearance and the high volume of RODEO participant departures planned during that period. Indeed, according to Col Wenke's testimony the reason so few of the desired M010 training events were accomplished was that the McChord air traffic control tower directed his aircraft to land due to pattern congestion. (Ex 42:18) No attempt was made to conduct these events at other nearby airfields that would have been equally unfamiliar. Col Wenke further testified that he was unable to continue the practice emergency procedures upon arrival back at Eielson because these maneuvers are prohibited with a passenger (Brig Gen Scott) aboard. (Ex 42:22)

The preponderance of evidence indicates that both the 7 Apr 05 and 25 Jun 05 training missions to McChord AFB were added on the flying schedule at the last minute, accomplished minimal training, and were designed primarily to accommodate Brig Gen Scott's travel. There is evidence to suggest that Brig Gen Scott requested both flights. In the case of the 25 Jun mission, intervention, potentially on Brig Gen Scott's part, was required to obtain landing clearance from McChord officials.

CONCLUSION.

By a preponderance of evidence, based upon the findings of fact and sworn testimony, the allegation that Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for his personal convenience, was SUBSTANTIATED.

ALLEGATION 3. That Col Wenke committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of Brig Gen Scott and/or Col [redacted].

FINDINGS OF FACT.

- On or about 7 Apr 05, Brig Gen Scott flew from Eielson AFB, AK, to McChord AFB, WA, aboard a 168 ARW KC-135, attended a RODEO meeting, and returned to Eielson several hours later via the same 168 ARW aircraft. (Ex 14:1-2,6)

- During the period of 16-25 Jun 05, 168 ARW schedulers made multiple attempts to arrange a training mission into McChord AFB, but were repeatedly prevented due to congestion created by the ongoing RODEO competition. (Ex 36:17)

- Intervention by Brig Gen Scott's RODEO staff was required to obtain permission for a 25 Jun 05 168 ARW training mission to McChord due to the intense air traffic congestion created by scheduled RODEO participant departures. (Ex 36:17; 28:2)

- At least two members of the 168 ARW protested to Col Wenke that the 25 Jun 05 mission, as proposed, violated several Air Force regulations, including ANGI 10-201. (Ex 36:7; Ex 35:3)

- On or about 25 Jun 05, Col Wenke flew a 168 ARW KC-135 on a training mission from Eielson AFB to McChord AFB, remained on the ground approximately 1.6 hours, then returned to Eielson. Brig Gen Scott returned to Eielson from the RODEO on this aircraft. (Ex 17:1-3)

- Logging a total of 6.7 hours of flight time, Col Wenke accomplished the minimum number of training events possible to credit a M010 sortie. (Ex 17:3, 5)

ANALYSIS.

This allegation is essentially an extension of allegation 1, insofar as the complainant alleges that Col Wenke directed that certain 168 ARW training missions be flown primarily to facilitate the travel requests of Brig Gen Scott. Again, the IO will focus exclusively on the 7 April and 25 Jun 05 missions for this analysis.

There is little evidence to outline Col Wenke's involvement in the planning of the 7 Apr mission other than his role as Operations Group commander in approving the weekly flying schedule. This is consistent with the analysis in allegation 1 that indicates the mission originated with direct contact between Brig Gen Scott and the 168 ARW scheduling office. Col Wenke testified that the mission, as he approved it, included unfamiliar field transition training for the copilot, and that he was unaware that this had not been accomplished until the day prior to his testimony. (Ex 42:11)

When asked how he handled requests for airlift from senior leaders, Col Wenke described a process utilizing a locally produced request worksheet. (Ex 42:7-8) This form includes review/approval by the AKARNG Plans, Operations and Military Support Officer, the AKANG Director of Operations, the Operations Group Commander and ultimately the Wing Commander. The form is designed so that it may be utilized by either the 168 ARW or its sister wing in the AKANG, the 176 Wing. (Ex 29:1-3) Individuals in the 168 ARW scheduling office, however, testified that this form was utilized primarily by groups and individuals outside the AKANG. That testimony further asserted that senior leaders within the AKANG were never required to utilize this approval process. (Ex 41:4-5,22)

In contrast to the 7 Apr mission, Col Wenke's involvement in the planning, approval, and execution of the 25 Jun mission was indisputably significant. Though it is undetermined how active he was in the initial unsuccessful attempts to arrange a training mission to McChord that could be utilized by Brig Gen Scott for his return to Eielson, it is clear that he became increasingly involved as initial planning efforts failed. Ultimately, he flew the mission himself when schedulers experienced difficulty finding volunteers to take the mission. (Ex 42:13; Ex 36:17; Ex 35:5)

Both Col Wenke and the complainant agreed in individual testimony that the complainant protested to Col Wenke that the mission, as conceived, violated Air Force regulations, including ANGI 10-201. Col Wenke added in his testimony, however, that he disagreed with the complainant's interpretation of the regulations, and that he felt the mission met regulatory guidance. (Ex 42:10; Ex 35:3) Lt Col [redacted], then the [redacted], testified that he also protested to Col Wenke that the mission could not be accommodated within existing regulations. He added that when this protest was unsuccessful, he wasn't "going to color this any other color" (Ex 36:16) and used as justification for the off-station trainer when requesting the mission number from NGB headquarters: "We need an ANG Mission Number to land at McChord AFB and pick up BG Tim Scott. He's been heading up the RODEO Exercise there at McChord. Depart Saturday, 25 Jun, return 25 Jun 2005." (Ex 28:1) Lt Col [redacted] testified that it was his hope in doing this that NGB would refuse the mission number, and expressed dismay when the mission number was provided. (Ex 36:16)

b7c

As discussed in the analysis for allegation 2, the flights involving Col [redacted] do not appear to reach the threshold for FW&A. Therefore, there is insufficient evidence to support a conclusion that Col Wenke committed FW&A in directing flights for Col [redacted] personal convenience. This is not the case, however, regarding flights directed for Brig Gen Scott's benefit. As discussed in the analysis of allegation 1, the preponderance of evidence supports the conclusion that the driving reason for planning the 25 Jun mission to McChord was to accommodate Brig Gen Scott's return to Eielson. This conclusion is bolstered by the choice of McChord as the training location despite the difficulty in obtaining prior landing clearance due to the air traffic congestion anticipated with numerous scheduled RODEO participant departures during the same timeframe. Indeed, Col Wenke cited direction from the McChord air traffic control tower to land as the primary reason he was unable to accomplish more than the minimum training events required for the M010 sortie despite logging 6.7 hours of flying time. Additionally, evidence indicates that at least two senior members of his staff cautioned Col Wenke about the apparent regulatory impropriety of the mission.

CONCLUSION.

By a preponderance of evidence, based upon the findings of fact and sworn testimony, the allegation that Col Wenke committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of Brig Gen Scott and/or Col [redacted], was SUBSTANTIATED.

ALLEGATION 4. That Col Wenke made a false official statement on an aircrew Mission Activity Report by documenting that he had completed a pilot proficiency sortie when in fact he had not, in violation of Article 107 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

- On 25 Jun 05, Col Scott Wenke flew a KC-135 from Eielson AFB, AK, to McChord AFB, WA, logging 3.2 hours flying time enroute. After approximately 1.6 hours ground time, Col Wenke flew back to Eielson from McChord logging 3.5 hours enroute. Both sorties were conducted under the supervision of an instructor pilot. (Ex 17:3)

- On or about 25 Jun 05, Col Wenke filed a Mission Activity Report (MAR) for each of the sorties he flew to/from McChord on that day. Among the items logged on the first sortie were: B001, Boldface; P100, Precision Instrument Approach (x2); and P160, Missed Approach. Items logged on the second sortie included: B001, Boldface; and P110, Non-precision Instrument Approach. Additionally, Col Wenke credited himself with accomplishment of a M010 Proficiency Sortie on the second MAR. On neither of these MARs was a Visual Flight Rules (VFR) traffic pattern logged. (Ex 17:4-5)

- Observed weather was not suitable for VFR operations upon arrival at McChord. Ceiling and visibility was sufficient for VFR operations upon arrival back at Eielson, but the presence of thunderstorms within 7 miles of the base was noted in the observed weather closest to the actual Eielson arrival time. (Ex 30:1-2)

STANDARDS.

Under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) the Manual for Courts-Martial discusses false official statements in Article 107:

Article 107—False official statements

b. Elements.
(1) That the accused signed a certain official document or made a certain official statement;
(2) That the document or statement was false in certain particulars;
(3) That the accused knew it to be false at the time of signing it or making it; and
(4) That the false document or statement was made with the intent to deceive.
c. Explanation.
(1) Official documents and statements. Official documents and official statements include all documents and statements made in the line of duty.

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

(2) Status of victim of the deception. The rank of any person intended to be deceived is immaterial if that person was authorized in the execution of a particular duty to require or receive the statement or document from the accused. The government may be the victim of this offense.
(3) Intent to deceive. The false representation must be made with the intent to deceive. It is not necessary that the false statement be material to the issue inquiry. If, however, the falsity is in respect to a material matter, it may be considered as some evidence of the intent to deceive, while immateriality may tend to show an absence of this intent.
(4) Material gain. The expectation of material gain is not an element of this offense. Such expectation or lack of it, however, is circumstantial evidence bearing on the element of intent to deceive.
(5) Knowledge that the document or statement was false. The false representation must be one which the accused actually knew was false. Actual knowledge may be proved by circumstantial evidence. An honest, although erroneous, belief that a statement made is true, is a defense. (Ex 31:1-2)

AFI 11-2KC-135, Volume 1 defines an M010 pilot proficiency sortie as:

7.8.5.1. Pilots Must be accomplished with an IP (formal school instructors are exempt from the IP requirement). An IP should accomplish M010 with another IP on board the aircraft. Once the exercise commences, it should not be disrupted for any other type of training. A minimum of 1.5-hours (or as specified in MAJCOM supplement) should be scheduled for this event. As a minimum, a pilot proficiency sortie will consist of: Review of boldface emergency procedures; Three instrument approaches; missed approach; and VFR traffic pattern (weather permitting). In addition, the following events should be accomplished when available: Holding pattern or procedure turn (to include entry); Circling approach; Simulated engine-out landing (if applicable to aircraft type and weather permitting, not applicable to restricted copilots); Simulated engine-out go-around or missed approach (if applicable to aircraft type and weather permitting, not applicable to restricted copilots); Partial flap landing (if applicable); and Engine Failure Take-Off Continued.
NOTE: If circumstances prevent completion on one sortie, credit may be taken after a second IP-supervised sortie, provided the combined activity fulfills the intent of this event. Instructors should tailor each M010 to the individual pilot's needs. Particular emphasis should be placed on simulated systems malfunctions, simulated-engine out operations and instrument procedures. (Ex 32:2-3)

CONCLUSION.

By a preponderance of evidence, based upon the findings of fact and sworn testimony, the allegation that Col Wenke made a false official statement on an aircrew Mission Activity Report by documenting that he had completed a pilot proficiency sortie when in fact he had not, in violation of Article 107 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, was NOT SUBSTANTIATED.

ALLEGATION 5. That between on or about Nov 01 and Sep 02, Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, when he directed the 168th Operations Group Commander to enter another military member into KC-135 navigator re-qualification training when there was no longer a valid flying navigator requirement within the 168th Air Refueling Wing.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

- Approximately Sept 00, the 168 ARW completed an avionics modernization program on its KC-135 fleet called Pacer CRAG. A major component of this aircraft upgrade is that the navigator position was no longer required on modified aircraft. (Ex 4:1; Ex 44:17)

- The 168 ARW was given a transition period of approximately four years to reassign or otherwise draw down its personnel occupying flying navigator positions. (Ex 33)

- On or about 10 Oct 01, Lt Col [redacted] was assigned to a flying navigator billet within the 168 ARS. At the time, she was a current and qualified navigator in the C-130 flown by her former unit, but not in the KC-135 flown by the 168 ARS. (Ex 9:4,7)

- In the Oct-Nov 01 timeframe the 168 OG requested and received from National Guard Bureau approval to requalify Lt Col [redacted] as a KC-135 navigator through local training. (Ex 11)

b6
b7c

- On 27 Nov 01, a training folder was opened to requalify Lt Col [redacted] as a KC-135 navigator and train her on the Pacer CRAG system. (Ex 12:1)

- Between Mar and Jul 02, Lt Col [redacted] flew a total of nine training sorties. (Ex 12:2-10)

- On or about 31 Jul 02, Lt Col [redacted] apparently received a qualification checkride, though no supporting AF Form 8 was filed in her flight evaluation folder. (Ex 9:1; Ex 12:17)

- On or about 2 Aug 02, 168 ARS/DOT published a qualification and certification letter listing Lt Col [redacted] qualification as "FN." (Ex 12:17)

- Between 18 Aug and 18 Sep 02, Lt Col [redacted] flew three sorties as "FN." Flight records indicate that 18 Sep 02 was her last flight. (Ex 13:2,6)

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

- On or about 21 Oct 02, Lt Col [redacted] was assigned as the commander of the 168 LRS, a non-flying position. (Ex 45:19)

- On or about 15 Dec 05, Aeronautical Orders were cut by 168 ARW Flight Records authorizing continuous flight pay for Lt Col [redacted] until she reached 22 years of aviation service. (Ex 13:7, Ex 38:8-9)

STANDARDS.

AFI 90-301 definitions of the terms fraud, waste, and abuse are the same as articulated in allegation 1 above.

AFI 11-401 establishes criteria for aviation management and specifically eligibility requirements for receipt of Aviation Career Incentive Pay (ACIP), commonly referred to as "flight pay." Paragraph 1.10.1.1 states in part, "...Flying solely for the purpose of qualifying for incentive pay or Operational Flying Duty Accumulator (OFDA) credit is not authorized..." (Ex 23:21)

Table 2.3 of this regulation outlines flying requirements, or "gates" that must be met in order to be entitled to continuous ACIP. Notably for this case, it states that an aviator who falls under the Aviation Career Improvement Act of 1989, as Lt Col [redacted] does, must perform operational flying duties for 10 of the first 18 years of aviation service (or 120 months of OFDA credit) in order to be entitled to continuous ACIP until the 22nd year of aviation service. This is commonly referred to as the "2nd gate." (Ex 23:30, 42,44-45)

CONCLUSION.

By a preponderance of evidence, based upon the findings of fact and sworn testimony, the allegation that between on or about Nov 01 and Sep 02, Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, when he directed the 168th Operations Group Commander to enter another military member into KC-135 navigator re-qualification training when there was no longer a valid flying navigator requirement within the 168th Air Refueling Wing, was NOT SUBSTANTIATED.

VI. SUMMARY

ALLEGATION 1, that Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for his personal convenience, was SUBSTANTIATED.

- The preponderance of evidence indicates that both the 7 Apr 05 and 25 Jun 05 training missions to McChord AFB were added on the flying schedule at the last minute, accomplished minimal training, and were designed primarily to accommodate Brig Gen Scott's travel. Evidence suggests that Brig Gen Scott requested both flights. In the case of the 25 Jun mission, significant intervention, potentially on Brig Gen Scott's part, was required to obtain landing clearance from McChord officials.

ALLEGATION 2, that Col [redacted] committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of Brig Gen Scott and/or himself, was NOT SUBSTANTIATED.

ALLEGATION 3, that Col Wenke committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, by wrongfully directing and/or allowing KC-135 missions be flown primarily for the personal convenience of Brig Gen Scott and/or Col [redacted], was SUBSTANTIATED.

- The preponderance of evidence supports the conclusion that the driving reason for planning the 25 Jun mission to McChord was to accommodate Brig Gen Scott's return to Eielson. This conclusion is bolstered by the choice of McChord as the training location despite the difficulty in obtaining prior landing clearance due to the air traffic congestion anticipated with numerous scheduled RODEO participant departures during the same timeframe.

ALLEGATION 4, that Col Wenke made a false official statement on an aircrew Mission Activity Report by documenting that he had completed a pilot proficiency sortie when in fact he had not, in violation of Article 107 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, was NOT SUBSTANTIATED.

This is a privileged document. It will not be released (in whole or part), reproduced, or given additional dissemination (in whole or part) outside the Air Force without the approval of The Inspector General, SAF/IG.

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO)

ALLEGATION 5, that between on or about Nov 01 and Sep 02, Brig Gen Scott committed fraud, waste, and abuse as defined by AFI 90-301, Inspector General Complaints Resolution, 8 Feb 05, when he directed the 168th Operations Group Commander to enter another military member into KC-135 navigator requalification training when there was no longer a valid flying navigator requirement within the 168th Air Refueling Wing, was NOT SUBSTANTIATED.

- No evidence supported a connection between Brig Gen Scott and the decision to requalify Lt Col [redacted] in the KC-135; and, likewise, no evidence supported improper motives for the timing of Lt Col [redacted] subsequently ceasing flying.

2/11/10 OVERVIEW: SECURITY BREACH PERSONAL INFO...

SUMMARY OF STATE'S AGREEMENT WITH PRICEWATERHOUSE COOPERS LLP

- PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) has accepted responsibility for the loss of data.
- PwC has agreed to provide at least two years of credit monitoring and I.D theft protection OR a security freeze and adjustments to the security freeze (up to a total of $33) for each affected consumer.
- The identity theft protection and credit monitoring service may be extended for one year if there is evidence of identity theft from this loss of confidential data; if there is further evidence in the third year, the State and PwC may decide to extend for an additional period of time.
- PwC will establish a call support center that will enroll affected participants in the service they choose and provide credit counseling
- Consumer reimbursement. PwC will reimburse consumers for losses suffered as a result of identity theft caused by this breach. If an affected participant suffers damages from ID theft, the participant can submit a claim to PwC in arbitration. If the participant has enrolled in one of the options (identity theft protection and credit monitoring service or security freeze), they will get a rebuttable presumption that the ID theft was the result of PwC's loss of the confidential data.
- PwC will pay up to $100,000 to the State for notices to each affected participant.
- PwC will indemnify the State for any claims made against the state related to this incident.
- The settlement does not release any individual consumer claims. Each affected consumer can pursue any claims they may have against PwC.

PRICE WATERHOUSE COOPERS

SECURITY BREACH FACT SHEET

Who is affected by the breach?

Participants in the Public Employees' Retirement System and the Teachers' Retirement System, who were active or inactive employees, including retirees, in 2003 and 2004. If you are affected by this breach, you will be mailed a notice shortly with more detailed information about the breach, and instructions on how to sign up for free services pursuant to the settlement reached with PwC.

What information was lost?

The lost information contains names, social security numbers and dates of birth.

What should I do now?

You will receive a notice in the next few weeks that describes the protections PwC has agreed to provide to affected Alaskans. This will include free credit monitoring and identity theft protection, or placing a security freeze on your credit report. Details about what these protections entail and how you can sign up for them will be explained in the notice. The notice will also explain how you can make a claim for any damages you may incur if you become an identity theft victim.

In the meantime, there are other steps you can take to protect yourself against identity theft:

1. You can place a fraud alert on your credit report, even if you have credit monitoring in place. You can contact the three main credit reporting agencies below to place a fraud alert:

Equifax	1-888-766-0008	www.equifax.com
Experian	1-888-397-3742	www.experian.com
TransUnion	1-800-680-7289	www.transunion.com

A fraud alert will not prevent access to your credit report, but it will alert the reporting agency, and businesses checking on your credit, that your information has been compromised. If you have already placed a security freeze on your credit report, a fraud alert is not necessary.

2. Get a copy of your credit report and review it for suspicious activity. Under federal law, you are entitled to a free copy of your credit report from each of the three credit bureaus every year. To get your free copy, contact each of the credit agencies listed above, or go to www.annualcreditreport.com. Look for any accounts you do not recognize, and cancel them immediately.

3. Account monitoring. Check your monthly account statements carefully for suspicious charges, and notify your financial institution of all charges you do not recognize. Close any accounts that you think have been compromised.

4. Consumer Education. There are several consumer resources available that provide valuable information on identity theft, and how to avoid becoming a victim. The Federal Trade Commission maintains a website that contains a wealth of information on identity theft at www.ftc.gov/idtheft.

To Request your Credit Report by Phone:

Call 1-877-322-8228. You will go through a simple verification process over the phone.

Will credit monitoring or a credit freeze affect my credit score?

No. You have the right to monitor your credit without it affecting your credit score. If you request your own credit report it has no affect on your credit score. Placing a security freeze will also not affect your credit score, but it will prevent any activity -- both good and bad-- on your credit file.

Has my information been misused?

There is no indication that any of the missing information has been misused, and we have not received any reports of identity theft that can be related to this breach. But you should take precautions to guard against the possibility that your personal information may fall into the hands of an identity thief.

What are you doing now to protect my personal information?

This breach resulted from actions by a private company hired by one of the state's contractors. The state is continually upgrading and revising policies to address the ever changing demands on information security. The state implements security protocols aimed at protecting the personal information it receives from Alaska citizens. These actions include advanced firewalls and computer access restrictions to prevent unauthorized access to the state's electronic data; encryption requirements for data and information transmission; security requirements that restrict access to state offices by unauthorized personnel; and other requirements to ensure the state's confidential data and information is secure.

Does PwC still have my information?

Yes. PwC may still need this information in connection with the litigation we have filed against Mercer. However, PwC is aware that this information must be protected, and has taken every precaution to ensure it is not compromised. As soon as PwC does not need the information for any legitimate purpose, it will be destroyed or returned to the state.

Is my retirement affected?

No.

What are some of the things someone can do with my personal information?

Identity theft occurs in many forms. Here are some of the common ways identity thieves can misuse your information:

New account fraud: This happens when an identity thief uses your personal information to open up new accounts in your name, but will use a different address. Thus, you may not discover the new account for some time.

Existing account fraud: This occurs when an imposter uses your current account information to commit fraud. You can learn of this kind of fraud by reviewing your monthly account statements.

Debit or check card fraud: This occurs when a thief uses your debit or check card to remove money from your bank account. This is sometimes prevented if your accounts can only be accessed with a PIN, but there are ways to avoid this by making "off line" transactions.

Social Security number fraud: This happens when an imposter uses your SSN to gain employment, for tax reporting purposes, or other illegal transactions.

Criminal Identity Theft: This occurs when a criminal gives another person's name and personal information during an arrest. If the imposter then fails to appear in court, an arrest warrant can be issued with your name on it!

You can get information about these kinds of identity theft from several online resources, including the FTC's web site, www.ftc.gov/idtheft.

What's the difference between credit monitoring, identity theft protection, and a security freeze?

There is a significant difference between these:

1. "Credit monitoring" can be done on your own by regularly checking your credit reports for suspicious activity. There are also a number of services that will do this for you on a daily or weekly basis for a fee. If suspicious activity occurs, you are generally notified immediately via email. This will allow you to take action to close accounts that are not yours, and notify creditors that someone is using your name illegally. Credit monitoring will not prevent this kind of "new account" identity theft, but it will alert you promptly to the illegal conduct.

2. "Identity theft protection" is a service offered by several companies that provides insurance in the event you become a victim of identity theft. This is often offered in connection with credit monitoring services. Depending on the type of protection, it can reimburse you for damages you may suffer as a result of identity theft, and assist you in repairing your credit.

3. A "security freeze" locks your credit files at the three credit reporting agencies until you unlock your file with a password or PIN. In Alaska, this freeze can cost you up to $5 for each credit reporting agency. A freeze stops new accounts from being established by imposters. However, a security freeze will not stop misuse of existing bank or credit accounts, or some other kinds of identity theft. A security freeze will also prevent you from engaging in any transactions that require checking your credit report. You can request access to your credit report when a freeze is in place if you provide you PIN, and pay a $2 fee. You should consider the frequency with which you need access to your credit report before you decide to place a security freeze on you accounts.

What happens if I become a victim of identity theft?

The settlement we reached with PwC contains provisions that will likely reimburse you for damages you sustain if you become a victim of identity theft as a result of this breach. To get this protection, you will need to sign up for credit monitoring and identity theft protection under the terms of the settlement. More details about how to do this, and how to make a claim for damages, will be explained in the notice you will receive in a few weeks.

How was the information lost?

It is still unclear exactly how the information was lost. PwC kept the information in its office in Chicago. PwC discovered the information was missing in December.

Background – how did PwC get this information?

For many years, an actuarial firm was contracted by the state to perform actuarial services for the Department of Administration ("DOA"). The DOA would routinely provide the firm with information on current and former state employees that allowed the firm to predict the state's retirement obligations, and to calculate PERS and TRS pension and health care rates. As part of litigation against the firm, Price Waterhouse-Coopers LLC (PwC) was given information on Alaska retirement plan participants held by the actuary firm, including the confidential personal information that was subject to this breach.

Subject: Missing Personnel Records

Dear Representative Ramras,

My good friend, Bob Roses, suggested that I contact you and the other members of the Judiciary Committee concerning the State's responsibility for the missing employee and retiree information.

I am Tom E. Main, a 63-year resident of Alaska and a PERS retiree with 32 years State service and am retired under Tier I. I am presently in Southern California because my wife is receiving medical care. My phone number is [redacted]

Bob Roses told me that the Judiciary Committee was holding either a Hearing or a Discussion today (2/10/2010) with the State Department of Administration concerning the lost records.

The State is telling those employees/retirees that it is their responsibility to take whatever action is necessary to protect themselves from Identity Theft. I disagree.

I believe it is the State that erred and it is the State's responsibility to do whatever is necessary to protect the affected personnel. The State could contract with a Credit Monitor and ID Insurance provider much more easily than can 77,000 individual employees. In this case, I recommend that the State contract with a Credit Bureau and not a "sub-contractor".

I have the following questions:

1. Why did the State provide Mercer with Full Name, SSN, and Date of Birth when the actuarial analysis would need only Sex, Age, Years of Service and Tier?

2. The State recommends that the affected personnel invoke a Fraud Alert with the Credit Bureaus. A Fraud Alert is good for 90 days and can be extended for an additional 90 days.

Until the missing information is found and proven not to have been compromised, the personnel are at risk ad infinitum----maybe for the rest of their lives.

If the personnel must provide their own security, a Credit Freeze can be implemented for several years, but this requires validation by a police report. Are the Alaska State Troopers or other law enforcement agency going to provide 77,000 employees/retirees with such reports? A Credit Freeze is extremely inconvenient to the personnel involved. Their whole access to credit is affected.

3. I provided a Survivor's Benefit for my wife. Was her personal information also lost?

4. If the personnel do have to provide their own security, how do they get reimbursement for the cost (maybe forever).

5. The SECURITY BREACH FACT SHEET states, "The settlement we reached with PwC contains provisions that will likely (emphasis added) reimburse you for damages you sustain**"

Just what is meant by "likely".

What about time and inconvenience experienced by personnel because of the State's mistake?

What if PwC discovers that the cost is so great that they file for bankruptcy?

6. Is this the only information that is lost? E. g. If you have a direct deposit, was the Bank Account Number also lost?

7. With only the name, SSN, and age, a person's bank accounts and other personal accounts, information, etc. could be breached. How are we to protect ourselves from this?

Any assistance that you or the Judiciary Committee can provide will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

Tom E. Main

The Hon. Jay Ramras, Chairman
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska House of Representatives
State Capitol, Room 120
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Ramras:

The purpose of this letter is to provide an update to the testimony Deputy Commissioner Kevin Brooks offered during the February 11 House Judiciary Committee hearing regarding the security breach by Price Waterhouse Coopers (PwC) and to address the Committee's question about how the Department of Administration (Department), and specifically, the Division of Retirement and Benefits (DRB) plans to keep personally identifiable information secure in the future. The Department remains engaged in remediation of possible effects of the past event, and vigilant to prevent a similar future occurrence.

On February 12, 2010 more than 77,000 PERS and TRS members and former members affected by the PwC security breach were mailed a letter articulating the situation and including information about how to avail themselves of identity theft protections offered through the State's settlement with PwC. To date:

- Affected members have received information through mail notification;
- Over 16,800 members have signed up for an Equifax product;
- Some members (including State employees) have received additional emails and union newsletters;
- DRB answered over 7,000 phone calls regarding the event, to obtain information or to seek assistance in taking advantage of the negotiated settlement protections. Currently, the call volume is much lower – less than 10 per day and declining.
- Retirees will receive a reminder in DRB's quarterly newsletter to verify whether or not their information was affected and to avail themselves of identity theft protections provided by the settlement.

Additional communication tools that will be used to keep PERS and TRS employers and members informed include:

1. Annual PERS and TRS statements from DRB;
2. Quarterly PERS and TRS Newsletters from DRB;
3. Periodic envelope stuffers with benefit checks and advices;
4. Periodic emails to active State employees from DRB;
5. Periodic email newsletter, The Employer's Edge, to all PERS and TRS employers from DRB. Employers often forward pertinent information to their employees;
6. Quarterly account statements, with other investment and retirement information from the State's record keeper Great West Financial Services; and
7. Confirmation of password and investment change from Great West Financial services.

The Department takes very seriously its responsibility to protect individual's personally identifiable information. Currently, DRB protects personally identifiable information by securing the data behind firewalls, in multiple secured locations. Data flowing outside of DRB's system is encrypted using multiple tools designed for specific types of data transfer (file, internet, email, etc.). DRB uses a 'defense in depth' strategy. The State Security Office continuously monitors all DRB systems for network attacks, intrusion detection/prevention, and injection attacks. The DRB Information Systems Section ensures application security is properly implemented by using multi-tiered authentication and access control systems.

DRB is working to add additional "depth" to its security strategy by moving legacy applications under the myAlaska authentication layer by December of 2011. All new applications moved into production will use the myAlaska authentication layer as part of their standard architecture. Additionally, DRB is examining under what circumstances personally identifiable information is released to other agencies or third parties. Data flowing to our business associates, such as our actuary, is being examined to ensure compliance with statutes and to ensure there is a true business need for transferring any sensitive data. The Division recently turned down a request for information that included personally identifiable information from auditors working on behalf of another State department. DRB personnel are becoming very comfortable challenging the business need for this kind of information.

Please contact me if you or the Committee would like additional information.

Sincerely,

Annette Kreitzer

Biography of Alaska Attorney General
Daniel S. Sullivan

Federal Government Service

Prior to becoming Attorney General, Sullivan served as the U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Economic, Energy, and Business Affairs. His nomination by the President for this position was unanimously confirmed by the United States Senate in May 2006 and he served until January 2009. In this role, he was a senior advisor to the Secretary of State and other top U.S. government officials on the formulation and execution of international economic, energy, trade, finance, transportation, telecommunications and Arctic policies. Sullivan also led and managed the 200-employee State Department Bureau of Economic, Energy, and Business Affairs.

As the Assistant Secretary of State, much of Sullivan's work focused on international energy issues. He served as the U.S. Governing Board member of the Paris-based International Energy Agency – the world's premier energy security organization. He and the State Department bureau he led worked closely with the Office of the Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects on Alaska gas pipeline issues. Sullivan also was responsible for overseeing and leading several complex international negotiations of strategic importance to the United States, including serving as the primary negotiator for the President at the Group of Eight (G8) Summits.

Prior to serving as the Assistant Secretary of State, Sullivan was a Director in the International Economics Directorate of the National Security Council and National Economic Council staffs at the White House

Alaska Law Background

Sullivan is one of a select number of Alaska attorneys who has held judicial clerkships on both the highest state and highest federal courts in Alaska. He was a judicial law clerk for Judge Andrew Kleinfeld of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Fairbanks from 1997-98, and was a judicial law clerk for Chief Justice Warren Matthews of the Alaska Supreme Court in Anchorage from 1998-99. Following his clerkships, Sullivan joined the Anchorage office of Perkins, Coie, LLP. His practice focused on corporate transactions and commercial litigation, and he represented a variety of clients, including Alaska small businesses and Native corporations.

U.S. Military Service

Sullivan has served in the United States Marine Corps since 1993 on active duty and in the reserves as an infantry and reconnaissance officer, including with Second Battalion, Fifth Marines at Camp Pendleton, California, and for several years with Anchorage-based Echo Company, Fourth Reconnaissance Battalion – the Marine Corps Reserve's premier cold weather reconnaissance unit. In recent years, Sullivan has been recalled to active duty twice: in January 2009 to help draft a regional strategy report for the Commander of U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM) General David Petraeus, and from December 2004 until April 2006 to serve as a strategic advisor to CENTCOM Commander General John Abizaid. During this period, Sullivan spent substantial time deployed in the CENTCOM theater of operations.

Academic Background

Sullivan graduated magna cum laude from Harvard University, earning a bachelors degree in Economics, where he was a Harvard College scholar during each of his four years. Sullivan graduated cum laude from Georgetown University Law Center, earning a Juris Doctor and Masters of Science in Foreign Service joint degree. He was an articles editor on the Georgetown Law Journal and a contributing author to the Georgetown Criminal Procedure Project. During his final year at Georgetown, Sullivan worked as a law clerk for Judge James L. Buckley on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Awards, Honors, and Personal Information

Sullivan is the recipient of numerous professional, academic, and military awards, including the White House Fellowship, the National Security Council Outstanding Service Award, and the Defense Meritorious Service Medal. He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Sullivan was born in Fairview Park, Ohio. He has been married for 15 years to Julie Fate Sullivan of Fairbanks. They moved to Alaska in 1997, after Sullivan completed active duty service with the Marine Corps. They have three daughters, two of whom were born in Anchorage.

Note: All areas noted above, except materials which may be included in a strategic supply agreement, will be available for subcontract/purchase award. Actus Lend Lease LLC will not disqualify or preclude in any way the participation of a qualified, best value Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business, Small Disadvantaged Business, Woman-Owned Small Business and/or Local Business Concern throughout Alaska in the award process for any product and/or service available under this plan.

2. The following are procedures we will utilize and/or have utilized for award of subcontracts or purchase orders in our endeavor to obtain percentages for small business concerns, veteran-owned small business concerns, HUBZone small business concerns, small disadvantaged business concerns, woman-owned small business concerns and local business concern's throughout Alaska participation in the project.

   Actus Lend Lease maintains a database of small businesses, veteran-owned small businesses, small disadvantaged businesses, woman-owned small businesses, HUBZone small businesses and local businesses throughout Alaska which includes those who have participated on previous solicitations and projects. This database was utilized to develop the initial master bidders list during the CDMP verification stage and has been constantly updated with information obtained through a variety of sources, including summits, conferences, symposiums and forums.

Throughout the duration of the Initial Development Period, we will conduct additional summits, conferences, symposiums or forums to meet directly with local small businesses throughout Alaska to discuss and answer questions about the project. The names we obtain through these efforts will be added to our database, and those firms will be contacted for participation in the bidding/award process.

Each bidder will be requested to verify their business status as a large business concern, small business concern, small disadvantaged business concern, woman-owned small business concern, veteran-owned small business concern, HUBZone small business or local business concerns within Alaska when submitting their bid. This information will be evaluated along with qualifications and best value in our endeavor to achieve the subcontracting percentages for the total project.

Business concerns that express interest and do not submit a bid on the relevant components will be contacted to determine why no bid was submitted. This contact and information received will be documented and a file retained at the project office. Those business concerns, through the contact, who advised us they no longer have an interest in submitting bids will be deleted from the master bid list for the remaining components of the project. Business concerns, through the contact, who advise they were only interested in bidding a particular component, will be added only to such component's master bid list.

3. A description of the method we utilized to identify potential sources for solicitation purposes to assure small, veteran-owned small, HUBZone small, small disadvantaged, woman-owned small business and local business throughout Alaska participation (e.g., existing company source lists, the Procurement Marketing and Access Network (PRO-Net) of the Small Business Administration (SBA), the list of certified small disadvantaged business concerns of the SBA, the National Minority Purchasing Council Vendor Information Service, the Research and Information Division of the Minority Business Development Agency in the Department of Commerce, or small, veteran-owned small, HUBZone small, small disadvantaged, and woman-owned small business trade associations).

   Small Business, Small Disadvantaged Business, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business and Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska will be actively recruited through:

   (a) Contact with the U.S. Small Business Administration for updated mailing of qualified Small, Small Disadvantaged, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, or HUBZone Small Business Concerns in project vicinity.

   (b) Solicitations in local and construction specialty newspapers with specific reference of interest in qualified Small Business, Small Disadvantaged Business, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business and Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

   (c) Written solicitation to Small Business, Small Disadvantaged Business, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska requesting letters of interest of possible project participation.

(d) Contacts with Small Business, Small Disadvantaged, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business and Local Business Concerns' throughout Alaska applicable trade associations.

(e) Small business conferences/symposiums.

(f) Contact and forums with the Chamber of Commerce, Small Business Council, Building Industry Association and others to identify key labor and training concerns.

4. Indirect costs, including design and engineering cost, are included in the subcontracting percentages in this plan.

The Senior Construction Manager will monitor performance relative to achievement of the subcontracting percentages contained herein by:

(a) Maintaining master bidders lists of Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

(b) Including requests for Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business and Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska in solicitations for products or services they can provide and ensuring that all solicitations are structured to permit their maximum participation.

(c) Assuring inclusion of Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska in all solicitations for products or services, which they are capable of providing.

(d) Reviewing solicitations to remove statements, clauses, etc., which may tend to restrict or prohibit participation by Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

(e) Establishing and maintaining records of all solicitations and subcontract awards to ensure that the firm's members who review bidders' proposals record their reasons for selecting or not selecting a bid submitted by a Small Business, Small Disadvantaged Business, Woman-Owned Small Business, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business or Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

(f) Ensuring the establishment and maintenance of records of solicitations and subcontract award activity.

(g) Attending or arranging for attendance of company counselors at Business Opportunity Workshops, Minority Business Enterprise Seminars, Trade Fairs, etc.

(h) Monitoring performance achievement of proposed percentages.

(i) Preparing and submitting achievement semi-annual reports.

(j) Coordinating the conduct of contractor's activities involving its bidding and awarding process.

6. The following records will be maintained at the project office:

(a) Source lists (i.g., PRO-Net), guides, and other data that identify small business, veteran-owned small business, HUBZone small business, small disadvantaged business, woman-owned small business and local business concerns throughout Alaska.

(b) Organizations contacted in an attempt to locate sources that are small businesses, veteran-owned small businesses, HUBZone small businesses, small disadvantaged businesses, woman-owned small businesses and local businesses throughout Alaska.

(c) A bidder's list for each component will be maintained and annotated to indicate which business concerns submitted bids and reasons why business concerns did not submit a bid.

(d) Records of any outreach efforts to contact (A) trade associations, (B) business development organizations, and (C) conferences and trade fairs to locate Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

(e) Records of internal guidance and encouragement provided to buyers through (A) workshops, seminars, training, etc., and (B) monitoring performance to evaluate compliance with the programs' requirements.

7. Actus Lend Lease is committed to providing the maximum practical opportunity to Small Business Concerns, Small Disadvantaged Business Concerns, Woman-Owned Small Business Concerns, Veteran-Owned Small Business, HUBZone Small Business and Local Business Concerns throughout Alaska.

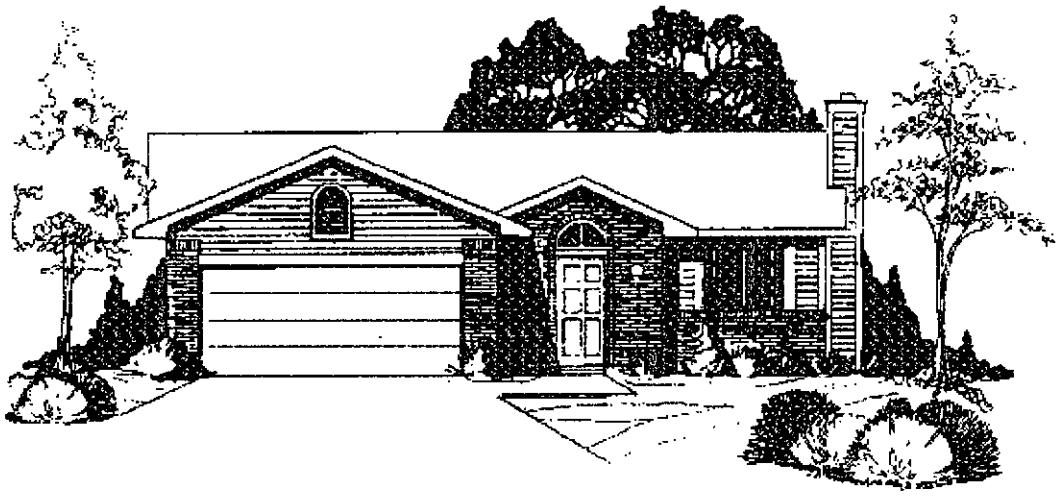
2005 HOUSING REQUIREMENTS ANALYSIS UPDATE

3 JANUARY 2006



FORT WAINWRIGHT
ALASKA

Headquarters, Department of the Army
Assistant Chief of Staff for Installation Management

Prepared by ROBERT D. NIEHAUS, INC.

5494

REQUIREMENTS SUMMARY – FORT WAINWRIGHT

BACKGROUND

This analysis updates the 2005 Housing Market Analysis (HMA) for Fort Wainwright (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005). This analysis uses current and projected total permanent-party military personnel from ASIP documents for Fort Wainwright (SAMAS of 29 June 2005) adjusted to reflect proposed changes due to realignment of units within the Army as of 17 August 2005 (Headquarters, Department of the Army, 2005). This report is based on criteria and methods approved by Headquarters, Department of the Army (2005), and reflects current guidance by the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) regarding requirements analyses for military housing.

KEY ASSUMPTIONS AND RESULTS

Table 1 summarizes this study's key assumptions and results.

Table 1. Government-Provided Military Housing Required and Key Assumptions, Fort Wainwright, 2010

1. Methodology Consistent with OSD Guidance for All Services
2. Personnel Based on 29 June 05 SAMAS Adjusted for Proposed Realignment of Units as of 17 Aug 05
3. Market Area is Based on a Safe 30-Minute Commute
4. Rental Mobile Homes are Inadequate for Military Members
5. 2005 Basic Allowance for Housing (BAH) and Community Rental Costs
6. One Bedroom Per Family Member for Accompanied, BAH Standard for Unaccompanied
7. Unaccompanied E1-E5 Housed On Post
8. Military Homeowners Estimated from 1997 VHA Survey and Adjusted for Recent Trends in Affordability
9. No Adjustments Made for Arctic Space Requirement for Off-Post Housing
10. Current 801 Units are Assumed to be 70 Percent Occupied by Military Personnel in 2010
11. Total Permanent-Party Military Personnel Number 4,696 in 2005 and 7,358 in 2010

	Accompanied	Unaccompanied
Total Effective Housing Requirement	4,156	2,974
Floor Requirement
On-Post Military Community (see note)	-	n.a.
Key and Essential Personnel	20	n.a.
Historic Housing	1	n.a.
Quality of Life	13	n.a.
Total Floor Requirement (see note)	33	2,826
Community Housing Shortfall	1,656	18
Initial Housing Requirement	1,689	2,844
On-Post Military Community Adjustment (see note)	-	n.a.
Government-Provided Housing Requirement
Total Military Housing Requirement	1,689	2,844
Percent of Total Effective Housing Requirement	41%	96%
Projected RCI End-State Inventory	1,409	TBD
Deficit/(Surplus)	280	TBD

Note: The on-post military community component of the accompanied floor requirement was initially assumed to be zero. The floor requirement for accompanied personnel reflects the greatest requirement among the other three categories on an individual grade basis. The on-post military community adjustment reflects any necessary increases when the initial housing requirement is less than 10 percent of the effective families on a grade by grade basis (see text). The floor requirement for unaccompanied personnel comprises all unaccompanied E1-E5 personnel.

Figure 1 displays the distribution of suitable current and projected housing units in the Fort Wainwright market area. The graph includes the number of on-post residents, occupancy of government-leased (section 801) units, the number of 801 units assumed to be captured by military families if these units became private-sector rentals, homeowners, those renters who can be suitably housed in the community, and the direct leasing and/or new construction to be provided by the post in order to meet the housing needs of Fort Wainwright families from 2006 to 2010.

Source: Estimates prepared for this study

The following points compare the results of this study to those of the 2005 HMA:

- The projected 2010 requirement is 1,689 family housing units, 432 less than the projected 2010 requirement of 2,121 units in the 2005 HMA.

- The projected number of military families in 2010 is 4,156, or 1,112 more than the projected 2010 count of 3,044 families in the 2005 HMA. This increase is due to an increase in projected personnel of 1,943 military members, from the 5,415 military personnel reported in the 2005 HMA to 7,358 military personnel in this Update.

- This Update does not make any adjustments based on an arctic space requirement for off-post housing. This difference in criteria is the primary reason the projected requirement is less in this Update than in the 2005 HMA, despite the increased number of families. Rental units were categorized based on the number of bedrooms alone and no adjustment was made regarding the size (square footage) of the rental units. In the 2005 HMA, rental units were distributed into bedroom categories based on the number of bedrooms as well as on the size of the unit. Due to the adjustment in the 2005 HMA, some units having two, three, and four bedrooms were designated as having one, two, and three bedrooms because they did not meet minimum size standards. As a result, there were some two-bedroom units that were in the one-bedroom distribution, some three-bedroom units that were in the two-bedroom distribution, and some four-plus-bedroom units that were considered three-bedroom units. In general, the greater the number of bedrooms, the greater the rent. Therefore, by including in the one-bedroom category those two-bedrooms that did not have enough square feet to meet the arctic space requirement, the price of one-bedroom units increased. By taking out the arctic space adjustment, the median price of one-bedroom, two-bedroom, three-bedroom, and four-plus-bedroom units has decreased relative to the rents presented in the 2005 HMA. At the same time, the number of two-bedroom, three-bedroom, and four-plus-bedroom units increased in this Update compared to the 2005 HMA.

- Currently, Fort Wainwright has 550 leased (section 801) units, comprising 150 units located off post (Walden Estates) and 400 on-post units (the Birchwood complex). Leases for these units are assumed to expire by 2010, as scheduled, at which time these units would convert to market-rate community housing. Because these leased units historically have been occupied by military members, upon conversion from government-controlled units to market-rate units it is expected the capture rate, or the military's market share, for these units would be greater than what would normally occur in the community. This Update assumes the military would capture 70 percent of the units in these complexes, or 385 suitable units in 2010. By comparison, the 2005 HMA projected that the military would capture about 150 suitable units in these complexes.

These results are based on the OSD-approved methodology for conducting housing requirements and market analyses. A principal assumption of the methodology is that military members obtain their proportionate share of rental housing within a market area. This proportionate share, or capture rate, is based on the percentage that military rental housing demand is of total rental housing demand within a market area. The capture rate, however, can be influenced by proactive off-post housing referral programs undertaken by the installation's housing office. These programs could effectively increase market shares in select housing segments, particularly in the two-bedroom apartment market segment in which units are most readily available and affordable to military personnel. Assuming these programs result in increased military market shares in the two-bedroom market segment, the requirement for on-post two-bedroom rental units would be reduced. This would result in a lower total requirement for on-post family housing.

HOUSING MARKET TRENDS

The housing market area for Fort Wainwright includes those communities within a safe 30-minute commute of the installation's principal work areas. Figure 2 shows the housing market area for Fort Wainwright. The market area includes most of Fairbanks proper to the west of the post and the unincorporated areas east of the post. This market area is identical to that reported in the Final 2005 HMA.

Key indicators of local housing demand (total population, household population, average household size, and owner- and renter-occupied housing units) are displayed in Table 2. The projections to 2010 are identified as "baseline" projections, and assume on-post housing is used at its recent actual rate. The current total population of the housing market area is estimated to be 51,046 persons, while the household population is estimated to total 49,755 persons. Population grew at an annual average rate of 0.6 percent between 2000 and 2005, and is projected to grow 0.8 percent per year through 2010 (Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development, 2004; and Fairbanks North Star Borough Community Research Center, 2004). Average household size has been decreasing since 1990, and this trend is expected to continue through 2010. The occupied housing stock is currently estimated to total 19,601 units, of which 11,044 units (56.3 percent) are estimated to be owner-occupied and 8,557 units (43.7 percent) are estimated to be renter-occupied.

Market area housing supply indicators (total housing units, single-family units, multiple-family units, and manufactured homes) are displayed in Table 3. The current housing stock is estimated to total 21,657 units, having increased by an average of 166 units (0.8 percent) annually since 2000. Single-family units represent 55.2 percent of the total, while multi-family units constitute 39.7 percent, and manufactured homes 5.1 percent, of the total.

Currently, Fort Wainwright leases 550 section 801 housing units, 400 on post (the Birchwood complex) and 150 off post (Walden Estates), for the exclusive use of military families. For the purposes of this study all leases are assumed to expire by 2010, as scheduled, at which time these leased units would convert from military housing to market-rate community housing. These units are included in the private-sector rental housing stock in 2010.

Housing units are forecast to continue increasing through 2010 at a rate of 1.5 percent per year, including the addition of the 550 units that are currently leased. Figure 3 plots the recent actual and future projected changes in the market area housing stock by type of structure.

Figure 4 plots the trend in building permits for the Fairbanks North Star Borough by type of unit from 1990 to 2005. The total number of units permitted increased substantially in 2003 and peaked in 2004.

Housing demand and housing supply together determine vacancy rates in the market area. Vacancy rates for key segments of the housing market are presented in Table 4. The total vacancy rate is currently estimated at 9.5 percent. Units for sale are estimated to have a current vacancy rate of 3.8 percent. The current rental vacancy rate is estimated to be 9.0 percent based on data provided by local property managers. The market area rental vacancy rate is lower than it was in 2000. Rental vacancy rates in the Fort Wainwright market area are also lower than the current U.S. average rental vacancy rate of 9.9 percent (U.S. Bureau of the Census, 2005). The vacancy rate for all other vacant units (units rented or sold but not yet occupied; held for seasonal, recreational, or other uses; reserved for migrant workers, or other vacant units) is currently estimated to be 3.6 percent.

Without the simulated military transition from government-provided housing into private-sector units, rental vacancy rates would increase to 13.9 percent in 2010. This increase reflects the addition of the 550 leased units to the market area rental housing stock. The data displayed in the tables are baseline projections which reflect conditions in the absence of the simulated transition of military families into private sector housing. The simulated transition of military families into the community is projected to reduce the 2010 rental vacancy rate to 9.0 percent, which is the estimated market-equilibrium vacancy rate.

HOUSING ALLOWANCES AND MAXIMUM ACCEPTABLE HOUSING COSTS

By OSD standards, to be suitably housed military members must pay no more than the Maximum Acceptable Housing Cost (MAHC) for a rental unit. This MAHC amount varies by pay grade and is equal, as of 2005, to the Basic Allowance for Housing (BAH) that military personnel residing in community housing receive in addition to basic pay. Table 5 displays the 2005 BAH (MAHC) amounts by grade and accompaniment status.

DISTRIBUTION OF MARKET AREA RENTAL UNITS

Table 6 and Table 7 present the distribution of the current and projected total rental housing supply (occupied and vacant-for-rent units) by monthly rental costs and number of bedrooms. The cost bands were established based on minimum, maximum, and median rental costs in the market area and the upper and lower bounds of BAH (MAHC). The allocation of the market area rental units among the rental cost bands is based on classified listings of apartments and houses for rent from the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, rental lists from area real estate agents and property managers, and the Fort Wainwright housing referral list. Utility costs were estimated from interviews with area property managers and data provided by the Interior Regional Housing Authority of Fairbanks (2004). Renter's insurance costs were estimated from quotes obtained from an area insurance provider, and are the same as those presented in the 2005 HMA.

The market area has a wide range of rental opportunities, which can be summarized as follows:

- Based on a sample of 1,203 rental units, with rents ranging from $265 to $1,200 per month, the estimated median rent for one-bedroom units is $776 per month. Utility costs are estimated to average $73 per month. Renter's insurance costs are estimated to be $19 per month. Median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance is thus estimated to be $868 per month for a one-bedroom rental. In the 2005 HMA, median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance for one-bedroom units was estimated at $992 based on a sample of 1,204 one bedroom units that met the size requirement as well as two bedroom units that were not large enough to meet the size requirement for two bedroom units as per the arctic space requirement (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005).

- Based on a sample of 1,322 rental units, with rents ranging from $425 to $1,800 per month, the estimated median rent for two-bedroom units is $922 per month. Utility costs are estimated at

$181 per month. Renter's insurance costs are estimated to be $21 per month. Median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance is thus estimated to be $1,124 per month for a two-bedroom rental. In the 2005 HMA, median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance for two-bedroom units was estimated at $1,226 based on a sample of 453 units that met the arctic space requirement (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005)

- Based on a sample of 394 rental units, with rents ranging from $590 to $2,250 per month, the estimated median rent for three-bedroom units is $1,045 per month. Utility costs are estimated to average $197 per month. Renter's insurance costs are estimated to be $22 per month. Median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance consequently is estimated to be $1,264 per month for a three-bedroom rental. In the 2005 HMA, median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance for three-bedroom units was estimated at $1,670 based on a sample of 89 units that met the arctic space requirement (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005)

- Based on a sample of 55 rental units, with rents ranging from $950 to $1,950 per month, the estimated median rent for units with four or more bedrooms is $1,425 per month. Utility costs are estimated to average $393 per month. Renter's insurance costs were estimated to be $26 per month, so median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance is estimated to be $1,844 per month for a rental unit with at least four bedrooms. In the 2005 HMA, median rent plus utilities plus renter's insurance for units with four or more bedrooms was estimated at $1,914 based on a sample of 36 units that met the arctic space requirement (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005)

This analysis uses an estimate of 19.2 percent of the rental inventory as unsuitable by DoD criteria, reflecting an average of the available published and interview data for market area communities compiled for the 2005 HMA (Robert D. Niehaus, Inc., 2005). This percentage was scaled across all market-area units such that the largest shares of poor-quality units were in the lowest cost ranges. Table 8 presents the percentage distribution of unsuitable units across bedroom types and cost band segments for market area rental units.

The suitable rental housing supply is the total rental supply (occupied and vacant units for rent) less the unsuitable rental housing supply less the suitable natural vacant units. Under current guidance for preparing housing studies for military installations, vacant units for rent are only included in the suitable rental housing supply to the extent the number of vacant units exceeds a natural, equilibrium, or "market-clearing" level of vacancies. There is a natural vacancy rate below which there is upward pressure on rental prices at a rate greater than the general rate of price inflation. Natural vacancies are not considered part of the available supply for market area households. In the Fort Wainwright market area, the current actual rental vacancy rate of 9.0 percent is at the equilibrium level.

In 2010, after the 550 units are added to the housing stock, but without the simulated transition of military families into private-sector units, the vacancy rate in the rental housing market is projected to be 13.9 percent. As military families transition, the rental vacancy rate is assumed to fall to the equilibrium level of 9.0 percent.

The distribution of the suitable rental housing supply in the Fort Wainwright market area by cost band and bedrooms is presented in Table 9 for 2005 and in Table 10 for 2010.

MILITARY PERSONNEL AND THEIR HOUSING REQUIREMENTS

Tables 11 and 12 display the military personnel data used in this analysis for 2005 and 2010 respectively. These data were derived from ASIP and G3 personnel reports provided by Headquarters, Department of the Army. The data from the ASIP reports (SAMAS as of 29 June 2005) for Fort Wainwright were adjusted for BRAC changes using data from the 17 August 2005 G3 Force File (Headquarters, Department of the Army, 2005). The G3 data added a net total of 949 soldiers to the personnel totals derived from the ASIP reports for the projected year (2010). Personnel counted for this study include those assigned to Fort Wainwright (station code 02955), and Fort Wainwright USARC (station code 0295C).

FLOOR REQUIREMENTS, ACCOMPANIED PERSONNEL

For accompanied personnel, current OSD guidance allows a projected minimum on-post housing requirement, or the floor requirement, as the greatest of four criteria for each pay grade:

- Military On-Post Community – Ten percent of the effective accompanied housing requirement, for each grade, with a minimum of one on-post housing unit for any pay grade for which there is an effective accompanied housing requirement of at least one unit. The floor requirement is initially calculated assuming there is no military community component (a zero percent factor rather than 10 percent). If the total requirement for on-post military family housing for any individual pay grade is less than 10 percent of the effective number of families in that grade, the total requirement in that grade is then increased so the total requirement is 10 percent of the effective number of families.
- Key and Essential Personnel – All key and essential, or Priority 1, personnel.
- Historic Housing – On-post family housing listed on or eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places under the National Historic Preservation Act.

- Quality of Life – Members whose Regular Military Compensation (RMC) falls below 50 percent of the median family income in the market area. Annual median family income as published by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (2005) for the Fairbanks North Star Borough is $69,700 in 2005. One-half of this amount is $34,850. Annual RMC by grade and the factors used to calculate RMC are presented in Table 13. The RMC for E1 personnel is below 50 percent of the estimated median family income in the housing market area and thus E1 families are included in the quality of life requirement.

COMMUNITY HOUSING REQUIREMENTS

Total potential community housing demand is defined for 2005 as those families in excess of the current occupants of government-controlled housing, and for 2010 as those families in excess of the projected floor requirement. An estimated 1,819 military families currently live in government-controlled housing. For 2010, only the 33 families comprising the floor requirement are assumed to reside on post. All families in excess of these on-post occupants are considered to be requirements for community housing (U.S. Department of Defense, 2003). Families seeking housing in the community are estimated to total 792 in 2005 and 4,123 in 2010 (Table 16 and Table 17).

The number of homeowners was estimated using data from the 1997 Variable Housing Allowance (VHA) Survey for the area adjusted for changes in housing affordability. Numerous factors determine the extent of homeownership at a military installation. Simple comparisons of housing allowances to home prices are not sufficient to explain changes in homeownership. A more precise measurement of affordability is needed. Table 18 presents a method for calculating changes in affordability of home ownership for Fort Wainwright personnel between 1997 (the data of the most recent VHA survey) and the present time. This method can then be used to adjust the survey data relationships to the present time. If all other factors – availability of jobs for spouses, attractiveness of the area for retirement or multiple tours of duty, expected home price appreciation, extent of favorable tax treatment of homeownership – remained the same between 1997 and the present, the adjustment for the change in affordability could potentially provide an accurate measure of current homeownership.

This adjustment has two components. First, it is necessary to determine how much the affordability of home ownership for military personnel has changed between 1997 and the present. This requires comparison of homeownership costs to housing allowances. Second, it is necessary to estimate how sensitive military homeowners are to any given change in affordability.

The pro forma analysis starts with an estimate of the annual change in home prices between 1997 and the present. The calculations shown in Table 18 use the median price of a single-family home in Fairbanks as reported by the Greater Fairbanks Board of Realtors (2005). Home prices have increased at an average rate of 6.4 percent per year from 1997 through 2005. Assuming a 10 percent down payment, it is possible to calculate the amount of the mortgage carried by the purchaser. The trend in home mortgage rates is determined using the annual average yield on new home mortgages as compiled by the Federal Reserve Board (note the reduction of 170 basis points between 1997 and the 2005). This reduction in borrowing costs makes it possible to afford a larger mortgage with any given budget in 2005 compared to 1997.

Assuming a 30-year fixed rate loan, it is possible to calculate monthly costs of principal and interest on the loan. Allowances are then made for property taxes, insurance, and utility costs to determine the total monthly cost of homeownership. Comparing this cost to the weighted average housing allowance in 1997 and 2005 for personnel with dependents allows calculation of an Affordability Gap in dollar terms. As shown in Table 18, this gap decreased from $252 in 1997 to $213 in 2005.

The Affordability Gap measured as a percent of the weighted average housing allowance is also shown. In 1997 Fort Wainwright personnel had to pay, on average, about 128 percent of the average housing allowance to cover the cost of owning a home. Since then, the weighted average housing allowance has risen faster than the cost of owning a home. As a result, the cost of owning a home in 2005 was about 115 percent of the average housing allowance. This is a decrease of 13 percentage points. The relative change in the Affordability Gap is a 10.4 percent decrease in this gap between 1997 and 2005 (see the Adjustment Factor shown as the last row in Table 18).

These factors are all forecast five years in advance to permit their use in the HMA. This requires assumptions about future interest rates, home prices, utility costs, and housing allowance escalation. Interest rates are assumed to increase moderately to 7.3 percent by 2010 following the interest rate trend forecast by the Congressional Budget Office (2005). Home prices are assumed to increase 4.0 percent per year, consistent with the projected rise in interest rates. Utility costs are assumed to increase 2.6 percent per year, consistent with the recent trend in the household utility component of the Consumer Price Index (CPI) for the Anchorage MSA (U.S Bureau of Labor Statistics, 2005). Weighted average housing allowances for Fort Wainwright military families increased 6.0 percent over the 1997 to 2005 period and are projected to increase at a rate of 5.3 percent over the forecast period.

Note that at Fort Wainwright the Affordability Gap as a percent of the military housing allowance increases by 2 percentage points over the period 2005 to 2010 (from about 115 percent of allowances in 2005 to about 117 percent of allowances in 2010). In other words, military homeownership is projected to be slightly less affordable in relative terms in 2010 than in 2005, due primarily to the projected increase in housing prices and mortgage rates from 2005 to 2010.

The purpose of the analysis shown in Table 18 is to calculate and forecast changes in affordability between 1997, the present, and the projection year. In addition, it is necessary to estimate how sensitive military home purchases are to these changes in cost. There is very little information available on which to base such an analysis. Therefore a formulaic estimate must be used until adequate data can be obtained. It is possible to calculate the change in homeownership propensities for each grade using the relative change in the affordability gap. Specifically, the share of off-post families that are not homeowners (that is, are renters) can be assumed to decline (or increase) proportionately with the relative affordability gap. Symbolically, this can be expressed as:

Current homeownership share = 1 – (1 – homeownership share in 1997) x
Relative affordability gap in the current year

This adjustment factor can then be applied to each grade's homeownership propensity as calculated from the 1997 VHA survey to estimate current homeowners. Applying the adjustment factor to 2010 data provides a projection of future homeowners given the assumed trends in home prices, housing allowances, and interest rates. Use of this formula is necessarily judgmental, and should be considered a preliminary measure subject to revision based on availability of better data (preferably a local survey of military personnel).

Military homeowners were estimated for Fort Wainwright using this formula. The adjustment factor based on the relative gain in the affordability of homes, applied to the 1997 VHA survey, increases the number of homeowners at Fort Wainwright in 2005. Using the pro forma analysis, in the current year 15.9 percent of all families are estimated to own a home (416 homeowners; Table 19). In contrast, using the unadjusted 1997 VHA survey data to estimate current year (2005) homeowners, there would be 377 homeowners (reflecting 14.4 percent of all families). Using E7 personnel as an example, in the 1997 VHA survey for Fort Wainwright, 60.6 percent of off-post accompanied E7 personnel were homeowners. The adjustment process results in a 2005 homeownership rate for off-post E7 families of 64.7 percent (1-(1-60.6%)*89.63% = 64.7%).

At Fort Wainwright the monthly cost of owning a home is projected to increase at a rate only slightly faster than housing allowances over the 2005 to 2010 period, yielding virtually unchanged military homeownership rates between 2005 and 2010 as a result. In 2010, using the pro forma analysis it is projected that 16.0 percent of all families will be homeowners (666 homeowners; Table 20). In 2010, using the 1997 VHA survey without any adjustments it is projected that 14.9 percent of all families would be homeowners.

Military homeowners projected for 2010 are not affected by the definition of the floor requirement. All military members living on the installation in 2005 are considered renters. Therefore those personnel simulated to be part of the transition from on-post housing into community housing between 2005 and 2010 are treated as renters – they are transitioning from "renting" on-post housing to renting community housing.

Tables 19 and 20 present military family homeowners for 2005 and 2010. All homeowners are considered to be acceptably housed, regardless of the characteristics of the residence.

COMMUNITY HOUSING SHORTFALL

Military renters compete with civilian households for adequate rentals in the community. The military community housing shortfall is determined as the difference between the military's share of adequate quality rental housing in the private sector and the military rental requirement. One of the key factors in the capture of adequate units is the share of poor quality housing in the community rental inventory. As stated previously, an estimated 19.2 percent of the rental stock is unacceptable in quality by Army standards. When there is insufficient private sector rental housing of adequate quality in a cost band/bedroom category, a community shortfall exists in that cost band/bedroom category.

The analysis simulates the ability of the communities near the installation to absorb the potential transition of military families into private-sector housing over the five year study period. For purposes of this analysis it is assumed that the development community would partially respond to the potential increase in off-post renters by building additional units each year over the projected pace of residential construction. Thus, the annual addition to the local community housing supply is assumed to expand by about 53 units per year over projected baseline growth in response to the transitioning families. Although this expansion creates additional units to absorb some of the families potentially transitioning into the private-sector, not all families are expected to find "suitable" units, since not all units in the market area are acceptable in quality by Army standards.

Another principal assumption of the methodology is that military members obtain their proportionate share of rental housing within a market area. This proportionate share, or capture rate, is based on the percentage that military rental housing demand is of total rental housing demand within a market area. By 2010, the 550 leased (801) units in the market area are assumed to become part of the private rental housing stock. For purposes of this analysis, since military families already occupy these units, it is assumed that 70 percent of the units would be occupied by military renters as soon as the units become part of the private rental housing stock.

Tables 23 and 24 display expected suitable rentals in 2005 and 2010.

Tables 25 and 26 display the shortfall of community housing for military family renters in 2005 and 2010. These are the renters who would not be successful in finding housing that meets all Army standards for affordability, location, quality, and number of bedrooms. The projected community housing shortfall is a critical component of the projected requirement for housing at the installation.

Table 29 displays the projected requirement for on-post family housing by criterion. The sum of the floor requirement (33 units) and the private-sector shortfall (1,656 units) yields an initial housing requirement of 1,689 units. This initial requirement was then compared to the 10-percent on-post military community factor on a grade by grade basis. The initial requirement was higher than the 10-percent on-post military community factor for all grades, thus no adjustment was necessary. Based on these calculations, the total military family housing requirement in 2010 is projected to be 1,689 units.

UNACCOMPANIED PERSONNEL HOUSING REQUIREMENTS

The analysis of the unaccompanied personnel housing requirement follows the same procedures as identified above for accompanied personnel. The total requirement is the sum of the floor requirement (defined for unaccompanied personnel as all E1-E5 personnel) and the community housing shortfall. Table 30 presents the total requirement for government-provided housing for unaccompanied personnel in 2005 and 2010, respectively.

The Honorable Mark Begich
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Senator Begich:

Thank you for your October 4, 2009, letter regarding Actus Lend Lease granting military housing contracts to out-of-state businesses.

To enhance communications with the Fairbanks business community, Actus Lend Lease recently hired Ms. Betsy Woolley, a life-long Fairbanks resident, as the communications coordinator for North Haven Communities. Ms. Woolley has spearheaded familiarization meetings with local organizations, businesses, and individuals including the Fairbanks Economic Development Corporation and the Fairbanks Downtown Association, with more meetings scheduled over the coming weeks. Ms. Woolley has met with most of the Interior Legislative Delegation, and appointments are scheduled with the remaining members.

Actus Lend Lease is also initiating actions to enhance communications during the bid process, which includes increasing the number of pre-bid workshops to educate local contractors and vendors on minimum bid requirements for future work; conducting safety seminars to raise awareness of Actus Lend Lease safety requirements; and providing timely bid advertisement, selection, and award process, including notification to all bidders regarding final decision and award criteria.

Actus Lend Lease will communicate with all stakeholders, including your office, on all future project ratios of Alaska-based expenditures and Alaska-based contractors, to out of state expenditures. The actions described above are designed to help position local construction companies and vendors to be part of all future opportunities.

Actus Lend Lease understands the concerns raised during the hearing of the State of Alaska Joint Services Committee, and with a 10-year track record of positive community engagement and successful local economic development practices, they are committed to ensuring the work in Alaska continues to follow these principles.

We will continue to monitor this situation and look forward to improvements in dealing with all contractors and suppliers.

Sincerely,

Joseph F. Calcara

Dear Secretary Calcara:

I am writing as a follow up to the September 14, 2009 hearing of the Alaska State Legislature's Joint Armed Services Committee held in Fairbanks. During the hearing, Fairbanks contractors raised a number of concerns regarding military housing contracts being granted to out-of-state businesses by Actus Lend Lease.

Actus Lend Lease has a contract with the U.S. Department of the Army to privatize housing at Forts Wainwright and Greely. The 50-year agreement includes construction, renovation and property management for more than 1,800 homes. I hope this effort will not only result in better housing for military families, but will also create good-paying, long-term jobs for local residents.

While I am pleased the Army has committed more than $420 million to Actus to build new homes on these two bases over the next six years, I am concerned by testimony at the hearing that Actus may be creating obstacles for local contractors and businesses seeking to compete for construction contracts at Fort Wainwright. Specifically, witnesses expressed a need for a better understanding of Actus' bidding process and for improved communications with Actus.

During the hearing, Actus pledged to notify bidders about outcomes in a more timely manner, reiterated its public promise to hire locally, and committed to improving communications with Fairbanks businesses. I strongly encourage you to follow up with Actus on this pledge and ensure local contractors and businesses have full, equal access to the bidding process. In addition, I urge you to work with Actus to create a public-private business community advisory board to facilitate better communication between Actus and the community.

I will forward the full Committee report for your review as soon as it is available. My staff will be reviewing it for additional recommendations to improve this situation. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me or have your staff contact Tom Moyer in my Fairbanks office at (907) 456-0261.

Dave,

It has come to our attention that the Privatization Housing contractor at Fort Wainwright may not be following the practice of using local hire or using local contractors as they promised in their presentation to the Department of the Army when soliciting the contract.

I am interested in hearing from your members about their direct experience in working with Atcus, both good and bad.

Please ask your members to email me any information that is pertinent to the issue.

Thank you for your assistance.

Hi Jim,

Had lunch today with Jim Schuster.....his company is Alaska Quality Insulators.....he said he had been awarded insulating work with Actus.....said that it was tough coming up to speed with their safety requirements, but otherwise he was fine with working with the. Also said he hasn't done any work yet, but has been told the work was awarded to him.....he said he might put together an email for us if he has time.

I am attaching a bid spreadsheet that we use to analyze and equalize bids to have an accurate comparison. It also includes areas for comments since we call every bidder that submits a bid and invite them in for an interview to clarify their numbers, make sure they know the scope. Anyway, I can't pass around the numbers but I wanted you to see who actually submitted bids so far.

My name is Brian Barney and I am Nenana Lumber Companies estimator. And boy, do I have some stories regarding Actus. I would be writing a book if I started from last January to today. I would rather have a meeting with you so you can hear some of our great experiences with Actus. I have a 4" binder full of emails with Actus. It would be my pleasure to sit down with you and "express" my experiences.

Dave,

We have not had a good experience with Actus. We met with them before the bid and they indicated that because they would be here for at least 50 years they wanted a proposal based on quality - not low price.

Back in June we gave them a very good proposal to do the ventilation work.

Since that time we have called them several times to meet and discuss our proposal. It's very difficult to get them to even return a phone call.

They did promise to put out bid results by the first part of July but that didn't happen.

Today we (finally) got a letter saying that we were not selected to do the work. We never did get a chance to discuss our proposal with them.

Even more disturbing was their apparent willingness to bring in outside contractors for this work.

We're not impressed with Actus.

i would caution people to be careful dealing with them.

Call if you need to discuss.

Thanks

Dave

We at Nenana Lumber Company have produced more bid to Actus than any other contractor in Alaska. We have yet to receive any award.

It is our opinion that Actus has a poor contract and does not have the funds to do the contract right and insure that they have a profit in the end. It appears that they are looking for any bidder that makes a mistake in the bid so that it falls within their cost level.

The only award that we know of was made to "Big Horn trucking". This was for excavation, building leveling and electrical power hook up. Big Horn has done none of these activities in the past and is clearly un-qualified. For the excavation, M&M was the only bidder on bid day. For the leveling and electrical, we have an e-mail stating that we were low bid on bid day. Yet, the contracts went to a firm that was not present on bid day and is clearly un-qualified per Actus standards.

We have invested about $100K into Actus bid preparations, Actus meetings, special safety consideration and so on. We need to receive several million dollars worth of contracts now just to break even.

We had thought the bid system would be done similar to all other bid opportunities. Actuus operates behind closed doors, with no printed rules and in a way that can easily be labeled " UNFAIR TO BIDDERS".

I do not think what they are doing is illegal but it is not acceptable, not a fair process, not open and public and will certainly lead to unrest in the bidding community. Most companies will stay away from this type process.

Dave,

I have tried to keep abreast of the Actus projects since they first came to town and started their campaign to solicit builders and subcontractors through the local building association. I have been to at least two meetings with the IABA where Actus representatives spoke of their upcoming work as well as attending I believe three meetings Actus has sponsored at the Westmark hotel. I also have been trying to keep in touch with Thom Antonovich via e-mail regarding their upcoming work proposals and when they get out on the street for contractors to bid on.....and numerous times, we were informed that Actus wanted small contractors, local contractors, to be part of the Actus program....we'll help you with safety, and insurance and getting hooked up and organized to their systems and programs...we need your talents and skills, so keep up with what will be happening over the next 4-5 years.....so that piqued my interest.... I haven't been bird-dogging them, but I have tried to stay informed.....so, here's what my experience has been.....

- 1st set of plans and info came out in February 09 while I was in the middle of my vacation....all we got was a CD disc, which my staff sent over to me in Maui...I tried to spend a little time getting into their plans, specs, safety requirements, and become familiar with their 1st project.... However, after trying to digest all of their information, it became clear that this was not a BID, but they were after "market pricing"....so, they were after cost information at our expense....I also discovered that any work over $100,000 would require payment and performance bonding.....that was never discussed or brought up before.....and suddenly, that leaves out most, if not but a precious handful, of the local small contractors...and, we were given just a very short time to accumulate numbers from subs....but we also discovered that all they really want is subs....they do not want a general contractor to take on a project....they want to break it down to just pieces of the pie....however, no scheduling, no discussion of who will be the "lead", no discussion of time frame to accomplish the work, none of that was discussed or disclosed.....do we plan on 40 hr work weeks or are you requiring 6/10's, or when are you going to start....is this summer work or winter work.....we got little or no information.....I declined to bid at that time....and I believe we had 65% drawings.....
- In mid May, the word is out that their 1st project now has 95% drawings, you need to be hooked up with their "lsqft" website to get all pertinent info in a timely manner, so we contacted them and requested we be on the "list" and get a password and code to be on "lsqft".....we contacted their office and made the request about the 14th of May.....and we were informed that the bid day was June 1.....we never received the password and hookup until May 25 or 26.....they also put the info on "the plans room" but they never added their addendums on that site (and there were numerous, pertinent addendums) so we finally got all of the info 5 days before bid day.....however, we got a bit of a reprieve when they extended bids till the 8th of June...
- So, we hustled through the process, read their "scope of work" and their specific spec sections for the "finish carpentry" as well as their "bid breakdown" sheet which did not match....and we also read all of the info on what needed to be turned in with the bid....specific required documents, that were not in the bid package for which we needed to call their office AND THEY had to find them , so we could turn in a "qualified bid"...I took it upon myself to develop a receipt from Actus once I hand delivered the bid package so I could prove it had been delivered on time.....that was June 8th at about 3:30 in the afternoon....to this date, they have not contacted me for an "interview" and review of my bid proposal.....I have contacted them every couple of weeks regarding the status of the project and the proposal I gave them.....so far, I do not know much else other than they are busy interviewing contractors and suppliers to" make sure" they understand the strict requirements of Actus....safety, safety, safety,...that's all I've heard about....no schedules, no plan, no logistical info.....two months have gone by and no word from Actus....
- The last item is the "latest" bid proposal on the street....Southern Cross on Wainwright.....the plans were not released from the blueprint shop until 7-28-09....with bids due on the 31st.....then extended till 8-7-09.....these folks have had months to develop these projects and then tell us we have 7-10 days to turn around a bid proposal.....interestingly, Thom Antonovich told me via e-mail that when this came out, I would be informed....unfortunately, the notice did not happen...another contractor called me about this project.....I declined to scramble and work up a price with little time to build a project plan for this 2nd project on the street for Wainwright.....
- I have asked about who has been awarded work on Gertsch Heights for civil, utilities, concrete, framing, etc. and to date, I have no response.....nor a schedule to attempt to plan from.....now Southern Cross is out....but little information of a "plan"...Summer work? Winter work? 40 hrs? 60 hrs? who's leading? This seems to be the status quo.....from Actus....

Needless to say, the information is scattered, delayed, short time frame turn-around on bidding, bonding is/may be required, so far it appears that a lot of people have stepped up to the plate once, maybe twice, but I see little or no activity towards actually getting some real work accomplished.....I believe a lot of contractors may have decided to quit wasting their time and effort if no real jobs are being put out for actual construction.....and it is unfortunate, because there is a lot of good talent in this town to handle the work load if good professional coordination would be in place....so, this is just one man's opinion....feel free to call with any questions or if you need further information.....

Respectfully,

Richard S. Tilly

Good Morning JASC Members,

In preparation for our meeting in Fairbanks on Monday, September 14th at 1:00 pm, I wanted to share a little background on the purpose of the meeting.

There is great concern among general contractors in the Fairbanks area regarding base housing contracts at Fort Wainwright and Eielson Air Force Base. A large company, Actus Lend Lease LLC, received the base housing contract from the Department of Defense. During the bidding process and even after they were awarded the bid, Actus said on numerous occasions that they would be hiring 90% local hire for the projects through subcontracting. They also stated this in their comments to the Department of the Army. This, however, has not happened.

Our committee has invited the local contractors, as well as Actus, and the Department of Defense to come before our committee and provide us with information and testimony on why this happened and how we can change the hiring for future contracts. This is an issue that we need to be aware of and continue to push for local hire in our state. If changes can be made to the contracting process it will have to be done on the federal level. Senator Murkowski has agreed to take the information we gather at our meeting and have her staff work the issue and possibly propose a change in Congress.

Attached are some documents for your review before the meeting. There will also be copies of them at the meeting as well. If you have any questions before the meeting, please call our office at (907) 622-3783. There are a few members I still have not heard back from. If you could get back to me at your earliest convenience, I would greatly appreciate it. Some of you have RSVPed that you will not be at the meeting; I am sending this e-mail to all members to keep everyone in the loop on this issue. For those members traveling to Fairbanks, you can book your airfare and car rental and get reimbursed after you return or you can contact LAA Accounting and have them make your flight reservation.

Laura

Jane:

I have found a weak spot in Actus bid processing. In the meeting this morning, and for the tenth time, Actus employees stated that they always award for best value, not low dollar. I asked to see the criteria that was used to determine best value. The COE has to publish that criteria in every bid. So much percent is for past performance, so much for technical approach and so on. Actus said they have no such thing. A group of people go behind closed doors and decide each time what might constitute best value to them at that time. I said this could be big advantage for a relative, someone from Tenn, or simple anyone from outside of Alaska. They had no answer. They will not publish bids because they do not use low dollar. They can not publish bids because the use best value. They do not publish any information that they use to determine best value. The bidders will always doubt the legitimacy of this process. This is not acceptable by any standard. They say they choose this system so that no one could ever find grounds to protest any of their selections. This iliminates a legal right to protest an award made for illegal reasons.

Instructions for Recipient

Form 1099-DIV (OMB No. 1545-0110)

Account number. May show an account or other unique number the payer assigned to distinguish your account.

Box 1a. Shows total ordinary (short term) dividends that are taxable. Include this amount on Line 9a of Form 1040 or 1040A. Also, report it on Schedule B (Form 1040) or Schedule 1 (Form 1040A), if required. The amount shown may be a distribution from an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP). Report it as a dividend on your Form 1040/1040A but treat it as a plan distribution, not as investment income, for any other purpose.

Box 1b. Shows the portion of the amount in box 1a that may be eligible for the 15% or 5% capital gains rates. See the Form 1040/1040A instructions for how to determine this amount. Report the eligible amount on line 9b, Form 1040 or 1040A.

Box 2a. Shows total capital gain distributions (long term) from a regulated investment company or real estate investment trust. Report the amounts shown in box 2a on Schedule D (Form 1040), line 13. But, if no amount is shown in boxes 2c-2d and your only capital gains and losses are capital gain distributions, you may be able to report the amounts shown in box 2a on line 13 of Form 1040 (line 10 of Form 1040A) rather than Schedule D. See the Form 1040/1040A instructions.

Box 2b. Shows the portion of the amount in box 2a that is unrecaptured section 1250 gain from certain depreciable real property. Report this amount on the Unrecaptured Section 1250 Gain Worksheet-Line 19 in the Schedule D instructions (Form 1040).

Box 2c. Shows the portion of the amount in box 2a that is section 1202 gain from certain small business stock that may be subject to a 50% exclusion. See the Schedule D (Form 1040) instructions.

Box 2d. Shows 28% rate gain from sales or exchanges of collectibles. If required, use this amount when completing the 28% Rate Gain Worksheet-Line 18 in the instructions for Schedule D (Form 1040).

Box 3. Shows the part of the distribution that is nontaxable because it is a return of your cost (or other basis). You must reduce your cost (or other basis) by this amount for figuring gain or loss when you sell your stock. But if you get back all your cost (or other basis), report future distributions as capital gains. See Pub. 550, Investment Income and Expenses.

Box 4. Shows backup withholding. For example, a payer must backup withhold on certain payments at a 28% rate if you did not give your taxpayer identification number to the payer. See Form W-9, Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification, for information on backup withholding. Include this amount on your income tax return as tax withheld.

Box 5. Shows your share of expenses of a nonpublicly offered regulated investment company, generally a nonpublicly offered mutual fund. If you file Form 1040, you may deduct these expenses on the "Other expenses" line on Schedule A (Form 1040) subject to the 2% limit. This amount is included in box 1a.

Box 6. Shows the foreign tax you may be able to claim as a deduction or a credit on Form 1040. See the Form 1040 instructions.

Boxes 8 and 9. Shows cash and noncash liquidation distributions.

Nominees. If this form includes amounts belonging to another person, you are considered a nominee recipient. You must file Form 1099-DIV with the IRS for each of the other owners to show their share of the income, and you must furnish a Form 1099-DIV to each. A husband or wife is not required to file a nominee return to show amounts owned by the other. See the 2007 General Instructions for Forms 1099, 1098, 5498, and W-2G.

Form 1099-INT (OMB No. 1545-0112)

Account number. May show an account or other unique number the payer assigned to distinguish your account.

Box 1. Shows taxable interest paid to you during the calendar year by the payer. This does not include interest shown in box 3. May also show the partial amount of the credits from clean renewable energy bonds and Gulf tax credit bonds that must be included in your interest income. These amounts are treated as paid to you during 2007 on the credit allowance dates (March 15, June 15, September 15, and December 15). For more information, see Form 8912, Credit for Clean Renewable Energy and Gulf Tax Credit Bonds.

Box 2. Shows interest or principal forfeited because of early withdrawal of time savings. You may deduct this amount to figure your adjusted gross income on your income tax return. See the instructions for Form 1040 to see where to take the deduction.

Box 3. Shows interest on U.S. Savings Bonds, Treasury bills, Treasury bonds and Treasury notes. This may or may not be all taxable. See Pub. 550, Investment Income and Expenses. This interest is exempt from state and local income taxes. This interest is not included in box 1.

Box 4. Shows backup withholding. Generally, a payer must backup withhold at a 28% rate if you did not furnish your taxpayer identification number (TIN) or you did not furnish the correct TIN to the payer. See Form W-9, Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification, for information on backup withholding. Include this amount on your income tax return as tax withheld.

Box 5. Any amount shown is your share of investment expenses of a single-class REMIC. If you file Form 1040, you may deduct these expenses on the "Other expenses" line of Schedule A (Form 1040) subject to the 2% limit. This amount is included in box 1.

deduction or a credit on your Form 1040. See your Form 1040 instructions.

Box 8. Shows tax-exempt interest, including exempt-interest dividends from a mutual fund or other regulated investment company, paid to you during the calendar year by the payer. Report this amount on line 8b of Form 1040 or Form 1040A. This amount may be subject to backup withholding. See box 4.

Box 9. Shows tax-exempt interest subject to the alternative minimum tax. This amount is included in box 8. See the instructions for Form 6251, Alternative Minimum Tax-Individuals.

Nominees. If this form includes amounts belonging to another person(s), you are considered a nominee recipient. Complete a Form 1099-INT for each of the other owners showing the income allocable to each. File Copy A of the form with the IRS. Furnish Copy B to each owner. List yourself as the "payer" and the other owner(s) as the "recipient." File Form(s) 1099-INT with Form 1096, Annual Summary and Transmittal of U.S. Information Returns, with the Internal Revenue Service Center for your area. On Form 1096 list yourself as the "filer." A husband or wife is not required to file a nominee return to show amounts owned by the other.

Form 1099-OID (OMB No. 1545-0117)

Original issue discount (OID) is the excess of an obligation's stated redemption price at maturity over its issue price (acquisition price for a stripped bond or coupon). OID is taxable as interest over the life of the obligation. If you are the holder of an OID obligation, generally you must include an amount of OID in your gross income each year you hold the obligation. Obligations that may have OID include a bond, debenture, note, certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness having a term of more than 1 year. For example, the OID rules may apply to certificates of deposit (CDs), time deposits, bonus savings plans, and other deposit arrangements, especially if the payment of interest is deferred until maturity. In addition, the OID rules apply to Treasury inflation-indexed securities. See Pub. 550, Investment Income and Expenses, for more information.

If, as the record holder, you receive Form 1099-OID showing amounts belonging to another person, you are considered a nominee recipient. Complete a Form 1099-OID for each of the other owners showing the amounts allocable to each. File Copy A of the form with the IRS. Furnish Copy B to each owner. List yourself as the "payer" and the other owner as the "recipient." File Form(s) 1099-OID with Form 1096, Annual Summary and Transmittal of U.S. Information Returns, with the Internal Revenue Service Center for your area. On Form 1096, list yourself as the "filer." A husband or wife is not required to file a nominee return to show amounts owned by the other. If you bought or sold an obligation during the year and you are not a nominee, you are not required to issue or file Form 1099-OID showing the OID or stated interest allocable to the seller/buyer of the obligation.

Account number. May show an account or other unique number the payer assigned to distinguish your account.

Box 1. Shows the OID on the obligation for the part of the year you owned it. Report the amount in box 1 as interest income on your income tax return. However, depending on the type of debt instrument, the issue or acquisition date, and other factors (for example, if you paid acquisition or bond premium, or the obligation is a stripped bond or coupon), you may have to figure the correct amount of OID to report on your return. See Pub. 1212, Guide to Original Issue Discount (OID) Instruments, for details on how to figure the correct OID.

Box 2. Shows other interest on this obligation for the year, which is an amount separate from the OID. If you held the obligation the entire year, report this amount as interest income on your tax return. If you disposed of the obligation or acquired it from another holder during the year, see Pub. 550 for reporting instructions. If there is an amount in both boxes 2 and 6, the amount in box 2 is interest on a U.S. Treasury obligation and is exempt from state and local income taxes.

Box 3. Shows interest or principal forfeited if you withdrew the money before the maturity date of the obligation, such as from a CD. You may deduct this amount to figure your adjusted gross income on your income tax return. See the instructions for Form 1040 to see where to take the deduction.

Box 4. Shows backup withholding. Generally, a payer must backup withhold at a 28% rate if you did not furnish your taxpayer identification number (TIN) or you did not furnish the correct TIN to the payer. See Form W-9, Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification, for information on backup withholding. Include this amount on your income tax return as tax withheld.

Box 5. Shows the identification number (CUSIP number) or description of the obligation. The description may include the stock exchange, issuer, coupon rate, and year of maturity.

Box 6. Shows OID on a U.S. Treasury obligation for the part of the year you owned it. Report this amount as interest income on your federal income tax return, and see Pub. 1212 to figure any appropriate adjustments to this amount. This OID is exempt from state and local income taxes and is not included in box 1.

Box 7. Any amount shown is your share of investment expenses of a single-class REMIC. If you file Form 1040, you may deduct these expenses on the "Other expenses" line of Schedule A (Form 1040) subject to the 2% limit. This amount is included in box 2.

1099-MISC (OMB No. 1545-0115)

Account number. May show an account or other unique number the payer assigned to distinguish your account.

income from self-employment is $400 or more, you must file a return and compute your SE tax on Schedule SE (Form 1040). See Pub. 334, Tax Guide for Small Business, for more information. If no income or social security and Medicare taxes were withheld and you are still receiving these payments, see Form 1040-ES, Estimated Tax for Individuals. Individuals must report as explained for box 7 below. Corporations, fiduciaries, or partnerships report the amounts on the proper line of your tax return.

Boxes 1 and 2. Report rents from real estate on Schedule E (Form 1040). If you provided significant services to the tenant, sold real estate as a business, or rented personal property as a business, report on Schedule C or C-EZ (Form 1040). For royalties on timber, coal, and iron ore, see Pub. 544, Sales and Other Dispositions of Assets.

Box 3. Generally, report this amount on the "Other income" line of Form 1040 and identify the payment. The amount shown may be payments received as the beneficiary of a deceased employee, prizes, awards, taxable damages, Indian gaming profits, payments made by employers to former employees who are serving in the Armed Forces or the National Guard, or other taxable income. See Pub. 525, Taxable and Nontaxable Income. If it is trade or business income, report this amount on Schedule C, C-EZ, or F (Form 1040).

Box 4. Shows backup withholding or withholding on Indian gaming profits. Generally, a payer must backup withhold at a 28% rate if you did not furnish your taxpayer identification number. See Form W-9, Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification, for more information. Report this amount on your income tax return as tax withheld.

Box 5. An amount in this box means the fishing boat operator considers you self-employed. Report this amount on Schedule C or C-EZ (Form 1040). See Pub. 334.

Box 6. For individuals, report on Schedule C or C-EZ (Form 1040).

Box 7. Shows nonemployee compensation. If you are in the trade or business of catching fish, box 7 may show cash you received for the sale of fish. If payments in this box are SE income, report this amount on Schedule C, C-EZ, or F (Form 1040), and complete Schedule SE (Form 1040). You received this form instead of Form W-2 because the payer did not consider you an employee and did not withhold income tax or social security and Medicare taxes. Contact the payer if you believe this form is incorrect or has been issued in error. If you believe you are an employee, call the IRS for information on how to report any social security and Medicare taxes or see Form 8919, Uncollected Social Security and Medicare Taxes on Wages.

Box 8. Shows substitute payments in lieu of dividends or tax-exempt interest received by your broker on your behalf as a result of a loan of your securities. Report on the "Other income" line of Form 1040.

Box 9. If checked, $5,000 or more of sales of consumer products was paid to you on a buy-sell, deposit-commission, or other basis. A dollar amount does not have to be shown. Generally, report any income from your sale of these products on Schedule C or C-EZ (Form 1040).

Box 10. Report this amount on line 8 of Schedule F (Form 1040).

Box 13. Shows your total compensation of excess golden parachute payments subject to a 20% excise tax. See the Form 1040 instructions for where to report.

Box 14. Shows gross proceeds paid to an attorney in connection with legal services. Report only the taxable part as income on your return.

Box 15a. Shows current year deferrals as a nonemployee under a nonqualified deferred compensation (NQDC) plan that is subject to the requirements of section 409A. Any earnings on current and prior year deferrals are also reported.

Box 15b. Shows income as a nonemployee under a NQDC plan that does not meet the requirements of section 409A. This amount is also included in box 7 as nonemployee compensation. Any amount included in box 15a that is currently taxable is also included in this box. This income is also subject to a substantial additional tax to be reported on Form 1040. See "Total Tax" in the Form 1040 instructions.

Boxes 16-18. Shows state or local income tax withheld from the payments.

Form 1099-B (OMB No. 1545-0715)

Brokers and barter exchanges must report proceeds from transactions to you and the IRS on Form 1099-B. Reporting is also required when your broker knows or has reason to know that a corporation in which you own stock has had a change in control or a substantial change in capital structure. You may be required to recognize gain from the receipt of cash, stock, or other property that was exchanged for the corporation's stock. If your broker reported this type of transaction to you, the corporation is identified in the box below your name and address on Form 1099-B.

Account number. May show an account or other unique number the payer assigned to distinguish your account.

Box 1a. Shows the trade date of the transaction. For aggregate reporting, no entry will be present.

Box 1b. For broker transactions, may show the CUSIP (Committee on Uniform Security Identification Procedures) number of the item reported.

Box 2. Shows the aggregate proceeds from transactions involving stocks, bonds, other debt obligations, commodities, or forward contracts. May show the proceeds from the disposition of your interest(s) in a widely held fixed investment trust. Losses on forward contracts and changes in control or substantial change in capital structure are shown in parentheses.

this box does not include proceeds from regulated futures contracts. The broker must indicate whether gross proceeds or gross proceeds less commissions and option premiums were reported to the IRS. Report this amount on Schedule D (Form 1040), Capital Gains and Losses. However, if box 12 is checked, you cannot take a loss on your tax return based on gross proceeds from an acquisition of control or substantial change in capital structure reported in box 2. Do not report this loss on Schedule D (Form 1040). The broker should advise you of any losses on a separate statement.

Box 3. Shows the cash you received, the fair market value of any property or services you received, and/or the fair market value of any trade credits or scrip credited to your account by a barter exchange. See Pub. 525, Taxable and Nontaxable Income, for information on how to report this income.

Box 4. Shows backup withholding. Generally, a payer must backup withhold at a 28% rate if you did not furnish your taxpayer identification number to the payer. See Form W-9, Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification, for information on backup withholding. Include this amount on your income tax return as tax withheld.

Box 5. Shows the number of shares of the corporation's stock that you held which were exchanged in the change in control or substantial change in capital structure.

Box 6. Shows the class or classes of the corporation's stock that were exchanged in the change in control or substantial change in capital structure.

Box 7. Shows a brief description of the item or service for which the proceeds or bartering income is being reported. For regulated futures contracts and forward contracts, "RFC" or other appropriate description may be shown.

Regulated Futures Contracts:

Box 8. Shows the profit or (loss) realized on regulated futures or foreign currency contracts closed during 2007.

Box 9. Shows any year-end adjustment to the profit or (loss) shown in box 8 due to open contracts on December 31, 2006.

Box 10. Shows the unrealized profit or (loss) on open contracts held in your account on December 31, 2007. These are considered sold as of that date. This will become an adjustment reported in box 9 in 2008.

Box 11. Boxes 8, 9, and 10 are all used to figure the aggregate profit or (loss) on regulated futures or foreign currency contracts for the year. Include this amount on your 2007 Form 6781.

Form 1099-C (OMB No. 1545-1424)

If a federal government agency, certain agencies connected with the Federal Government, financial institution, credit union, or an organization having a significant trade or business of lending money (such as a finance or credit card company) cancels or forgives a debt you owe of $600 or more, this form must be provided to you. Generally, if you are an individual, you must include all canceled amounts, even if less than $600, on the "Other income" line of Form 1040. If you are a corporation, partnership, or other entity, report the canceled debt on your tax return. See the instructions for your tax return.

However, some canceled debts are not includible, or fully includible, in your income, such as certain student loans (see Pub. 525), certain debts reduced by the seller after purchase (see Pub. 334), qualified farm debt (see Pub. 225), qualified real property business debt (see Pub. 334), or debts canceled in bankruptcy (see Pub. 908). Do not report a canceled debt as income if you did not deduct it but would have been able to do so on your tax return if you had paid it. Also, do not include canceled debts in your income to the extent you were insolvent. If you exclude a canceled debt from your income because it was canceled in a bankruptcy case or during insolvency, or because the debt is qualified farm debt or qualified real property business debt, file Form 982, Reduction of Tax Attributes Due to Discharge of Indebtedness (and Section 1082 Basis Adjustment).
