The request which arises from the human heart in the supreme confrontation with suffering and death, especially when faced with the temptation to give up in utter desperation, is above all a request for companionship, sympathy and support in the time of trial.

Responding to unjust abortion and euthanasia laws

The value of democracy stands or falls with the values which it embodies and promotes....The basis of these values cannot be provisional and changeable majority opinions, but only the acknowledgment of an objective moral law, the natural law written in the human heart....Even in participatory systems of government, the regulation of interests often occurs to the advantage of the most powerful, since they are the ones most capable of maneuvering not only the levers of power but also the formation of consensus. Democracy easily becomes an empty word.

Laws which legitimize the direct killing of innocent human beings through abortion or euthanasia are in complete opposition to the inviolable right to life proper to every individual; they thus deny the equality of everyone before the law.

Laws which authorize and promote abortion and euthanasia are therefore radically opposed not only to the good of the individual but also to the common good; as such they are completely lacking in authentic juridical validity.

Abortion and euthanasia are thus crimes which no human law can claim to legitimize. There is no obligation in conscience to obey such laws; instead there is a grave and clear obligation to oppose them by conscientious objection. From the very beginnings of the Church, the apostolic preaching reminded Christians of their duty to obey legitimately constituted public authorities (see Rom 13:1-7; 1 Pt 2:13-14), but at the same time it firmly warned that "we must obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29).

Build a 'new culture of life'

On the eve of the Third Millennium, the challenge facing us is an arduous one: Only the concerted efforts of all those who believe in the value of life can prevent a setback of unforeseeable consequences for civilization.

What is urgently called for is a general mobilization of consciences and a united ethical effort to activate a great campaign in support of life. All together, we must build a new culture of life: new, because it will be able to confront and solve today's unprecedented problems affecting human life; new, because it will be adopted with deeper and more dynamic conviction by all Christians; new, because it will be capable of bringing about a serious and courageous cultural dialogue among all parties. ■

Subject: CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE RAMRAS,

I UNDERSTAND YOUR COMMITTEE IS STUDYING HOUSE BILL #9 REGARDING THE REINSTITUTION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.
I WOULD LIKE TO ADD MY VOICE TO THE MANY VOICES OF THOSE WHO FIND THE TAKING OF LIFE, IN ANY MANNER (EXCEPT IN SELF-DEFENSE OR IN DEFENSE OF OUR COUNTRY) TO BE A VIOLATION OF GOD'S LAW AND THE BASIC HUMANE LAW. PEOPLE ARE NOT ANIMALS TO BE EUTHANIZED. HARDENED CRIMINALS CAN LIVE OUT A LIFE'S SENTENCE WITHOUT PAROLE AND IN THIS WAYKEEP SOCIETY SAFE FROM THEIR PREDATORY NATURE. KILLING HAS NEVER SOLVED A PROBLEM NOR BROUGHT COMFORT AND SOLACE TO THE FAMILY WHO WERE VICTIMIZED BY LOSING A LOVED ONE THROUGH VIOLENT MEANS. REVENGE IS NOT A SOLUTION BUT A CONTINUANCE OF THE VIOLENCE. I HOPE IN YOUR DELIBERATIONS YOU WILL TAKE INTO ACCOUNT AND VOTE AGAINST REINSTATING THE DEATH PENALTY.

THANK YOU.

February 23, 2009

I am dismayed to think that there are Alaskans who still consider the death penalty to be the solution to dealing with those who commit the serious crime of murder. I know there are dangerous people we do not want roaming the streets, but existing laws that allow such people to be sentenced to life in prison without possibility of parole are more than adequate to ensure the public safety.

I believe adoption of this legislation would unjustly impact minorities that are disproportionately represented in Alaska's prisons. And there is the matter of individuals being falsely convicted, and subsequently found innocent. Most of us are aware of the many such cases that have come to light in recent years in other states, resulting in many states putting a moratorium of executions. You will hear others who will speak to these issues, and to the matter of excessive cost to the state to implement this change in the statutes.

I am opposed to capital punishment on moral and religious grounds. I believe it is a violation of the sacredness of human personality, no different that the crimes it seeks to punish; that it disregards the fundamental capacity of all persons to respond to right influences. The death penalty removes all opportunity for the offender to repent for his or her offense, or for those falsely convicted a chance for their innocence to be discovered. Even the most hardened criminal with God's help, may come to recognize the error of his ways.

It is morally wrong for the state to enact laws based on revenge or wrongs committed. The death penalty makes criminals of us all. The violence and brutality of capital punishment is as reprehensible as the crimes it seeks to prevent. It can bring us no security from the actions of criminals. In pretending to support a reverence for life, it in reality destroys it.

I urge you to reject this legislation as morally indefensible and totally unacceptable to the people of Alaska.

Kenai River Quakers Minute Regarding the Proposed Alaskan Death Penalty

The society we build is a reflection of us all and is a model for our children. In this time of economic upheaval, with horrors presented as entertainment pushed at us by the media, and the newspapers headlining atrocities in other lands, it is easy to feel our fear grow. It is somewhat predictable, at this time of insecurity, that the death penalty would be put before us, yet again.

The death penalty is promoted in many ways--as fair revenge; as punishment that will deter future crime; and, as a way to protect society against the acts of violent individuals, and so make our lives safer. We have thought about each of these.

As revenge, the death penalty seems to be a shotgun approach; often the people who are hurt most are family members of the convicted or the people who must sentence and kill the convicted in our name. Also, the inequality between rich and poor, black and white, educated and uneducated, in our legal system belie the idea of our revenge being fair.

Some people hope that by killing the killer, crime will be deterred. Those who kill once in an act of rage, with thinking deadened by drugs or alcohol, do not take time to consider the consequences. Those who live lives of violence, where the threat of injury or death is constant, will not be deterred by threats of more violence. By killing the killer, we take away the killer's chance to atone, to make restitution, to teach his or her children not to kill. By killing the killer, we take away our chance of forgiving, atoning, or making restitution for our mistakes.

We all want to make our lives safer. We fear for the safety of our children most of all. Children often model their behavior after what we do, not what we say. If we do not teach our children the sanctity of life, how do we make them safer? If our society models killing, who will our children be?

Historically, certain people and groups have been sacrificed to collective fear. It is precisely now, in times of uncertainty, that we must reaffirm the sanctity of human life.

As Quakers, we believe that of God is within us all. We seek traditions that will teach our children about justice and the value of human life. An Alaskan death penalty will do neither.

With the introduction of death penalty legislation in the State Legislature, Alaska stands at a historic turning point. The State has not carried a death penalty since Territorial days. We of the Anchorage Friends Meeting (Quakers) urge all Alaskans to think carefully about the repercussions that would be brought by a death penalty in our state, and what our collective decision says about us as a society. The criminal sanctions we embrace not only reflect our deepest values and beliefs, but also shape the community we become.

For more than 300 years, Quakers have sought to answer that of God in every person, and have therefore sought to address injustices and inequalities in our own lives and in the societies to which we belong. That our country's justice system is subject to human error, leading to the conviction of innocent people, is a matter of public record. That it is subject to human blindness, leading to disturbing racial disparity in the application of capital punishment, has been amply demonstrated. In recent decades, the death penalty has been suspended or abolished in many states, in recognition of errors in conviction and racial disparity in application.

These and many other compelling arguments speak volumes against capital punishment on purely rational grounds, and we urge all citizens to consider the excellent information put together by Amnesty International, Alaskans Against the Death Penalty, and American Friends Service Committee, among others. For us, it is a matter that goes even further. Even if our court system was flawless, and there were no conceivable questions of error, innocence, or equality, we would still uphold the sanctity of each human life: that of God in every person and the possibility of redemption and reconciliation. We cannot escape the conclusion that the death penalty, as an instrument of any government, and perhaps especially a democratic government, brutalizes and degrades that society which it strives to protect.

We of the Homer Friends Meeting (Quakers) affirm the value and dignity of human life. We stand with people who seek to make their communities safe. We do not believe, however, that capital punishment provides the safety and order which it seems to promise. We oppose the death penalty as an affront to the value of life, a step backward in the administration of justice, and an arbitrary, ineffective, and uneconomic form of law enforcement. We urge other Alaskans, our legislature, and our governor to reject it.

We find several compelling reasons to oppose the death penalty.

- We live in an imperfect society with an imperfect legal system. When that system assumes the power to take life, it leads to the inevitable taking of innocent life, and to disturbing racial and class disparities in its application.
- Although always represented as an action of the state, capital punishment is a delegated action that requires specific state employees to premeditatedly kill a human being, and to do so at a moral and psychological peril to themselves that neither they nor the state can calculate in advance.
- Attention and energy is focused away from healing and help for victims, for offenders, and for families and communities affected by crime.
- Capital punishment is certainly not cheaper than life imprisonment - nor has it been shown to reduce the murder rate.
- We feel that capital punishment is not justice but vengeance - akin to "taking an eye for an eye," or cutting off the hand of a thief - acts most Alaskans would find reprehensible as cruel and unusual. It is murder for murder, and as such, has, in fact, a debasing effect on the community. It produces the very brutality it seeks to prevent.

For more than 350 years, the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) have sought to answer that of God in every person, and therefore to address injustices and inequalities in our own lives and in the societies to which we belong. We believe the role of government is to alleviate the roots of violence. We urge the Alaska Legislature to table further discussions of the death penalty and resume consideration of measures which will better exemplify this role.

ır Representative Ramras, ough you, let me thank the Judiciary Committee for allowing me the privilege to speak to the issue of House Bill Unanimous among all whom I spoke with afterwards was gratefulness for the even tenor of the proceedings, respect paid to all who offered their testimony. This note is simply to reiterate three points:

. state whose law enforcement and investigative resources are stretched beyond the breaking point—where many ıles throughout the state have no VPSO or police or trooper presence whatsoever—how can it be that the proper ɛstigative resources can be brought to bear in those locales in a timely manner when dealing with capital crimes ch bear the potential of a final solution—death to the convicted perpetrator?

ondly, in my experience, there is less, not more resolution for the victim's family upon the occasion of an cution. There is a satisfaction of vengeance, sometimes, but the potential for anything else—even documented ɛs of reconciliation—are lost. Mourning the loss of their loved one, families also mourn over time for lost sibilities of making it clear to the perpetrator the depth of their loss and any hope of understanding the mind of perpetrator.

l thirdly, related to the second, addressing what Representative Coghill intimated by his comment about "the e bearing the sword" is the point that we law-abiding citizens have surrendered our absolute freedom to the will . governed society specifically and especially to be guided—even protected by this government of laws away n our baser motives of vengeance and retribution, especially when that vision is clouded by unimaginable and earable pain—and an irresistible desire for vengeance. The gentleman from Kodiak testified specifically to this ıt: "If someone murdered my wife I would want vengeance, absolutely, but it is still wrong." We law abiding ɛens depend upon you to keep us from this wrong, and to curb our desires when we cannot ourselves.

l if I may now slip in a fourth which caused me a pause in my testimony—a pause of emotion which was a imony in itself: The conversation about the efficacy of the death penalty does not stop when a law allowing h is passed. It is debated with a ferocity born of desperation each and every time another human being is put to th by the state. I have witnessed this desperation over and over at the gates of San Quentin, and the vitriol which ɜons the social fabric of our community life for weeks before and after each execution.

ɛre are of course dozens of reasons besides these few which I might make against the passage of HB 9, but I ɾe those to more eloquent voices, and review only the testimony you were so kind to allow me. Please know that and each of the Committee remain in our prayers. Every blessing and kindness;

Dear Honorable Representatives Ramras and Dahlstrom,

I am writing to oppose HB9, which I find to be bad public policy, financially unwise and morally objectionable.

Given the rural and urban disparities in resources to investigate, and prosecute capital crimes, I believe such a system will become unmanageable, fundamentally unjust and untrustworthy.

At a time when we need increasingly broad public confidence in the efficiency and fairness of our criminal justice system, the adoption of capital punishment will be most counterproductive.

My own Christian denomination, The Episcopal Church, has a long-standing opposition to the death penalty. This highly public stance was first declared by our General Convention in 1958, and subsequently reaffirmed in 1969, 1979, and 1991. For over fifty years, members of our church have worked to educate their fellow citizenry and promote alternatives that nurture a culture of life in response to even the most heinous of crimes.

I stand alongside so many others from our churches and faith communities in opposing this bill.

Sincerely,

I am John David Thacker, pastor of Prince of Peace Mennonite Church in Anchorage. I speak on behalf of my congregation and all the Mennonites across Alaska. We oppose House Bill 9 and the death penalty. We believe that following Jesus Christ requires us to make peace, to love our enemies, to seek reconciliation and to practice forgiveness. We have chosen life over death and we ask you to do the same.

Mennonite Church USA has adopted many resolutions calling upon its members to work for the abolition of the death penalty. In this effort, we join with millions of other Christians in this nation who have also called upon our government to abolish the death penalty. This list includes Catholics, Lutherans, Methodists, Quakers, Brethren, Baptists, Episcopalians, Orthodox, Moravians, Presbyterians, Reformed and many more.

We believe that capital punishment is ineffective, inequitable, irreversible, and inhumane. True restorative justice works to rehabilitate the offender, to address the needs of the victims and to restore the community. An execution cannot rehabilitate. It cannot make the victims whole, and it cannot heal our communities.

We are deeply grateful that the State of Alaska has refused to kill its own citizens. We urge the members of this committee to preserve Alaska as a state free of the death penalty.

Mr. Chairman, and members of the Judiciary Committee, Thank you for giving the public the opportunity to comment on HB #9

My name is Dale Kelley and I am the pastor of First Christian Church here in Anchorage. My own denomination – along with over 29 other faith communions, including the US Catholic Conference and the American Jewish Committee – have issued strong statements opposing the death penalty on all counts. It stands in opposition to all that we believe about the sacredity of all life –

In ~~most~~ all of these statements you will find ~~very~~ adamant positions in opposition. And not only religious opposition has surfaced. Of the 37 states which still have the death penalty, some states are even now reviewing the efficacy of this position and are looking to abolish it. ~~Almost 200 persons~~ a # of persons have been executed who were later found to be innocent. The death penalty is fraught with errors, and issues of racism.

I believe It is ludicrous for a caring, thinking population to seek to end violence through the sheer use of violence. Why do we continue to kill people to teach people that killing people is wrong? Where is the logic in that? - It has never been shown to be a deterrent.

Aside from the moral bankruptcy of such a belief, there is the purely financial considerations that threatens to bankrupt our state of Alaska – if and when we might choose to pour millions upon millions into to re-creating a vastly new legal code – BEFORE we even have the first capital case on the docket.

I respectfully ask you — How will you ~~Try~~ explaining to your constituents that you are going to chose to take millions of dollars away from critical and barely funded ~~UNFUNDED~~ needs for them, their towns and villages. How will you ~~Try~~ telling them that YOU are instead choosing to put upwards of $50 million plus dollars into setting the stage for the first case to be tried.

I respectfully urge you to re-consider voting down this barbaric practice and re-focus your attention to the REAL needs of our Alaska citizens.

Thank you very much for your time

Dear Chairman Ramras:

On behalf of the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN), thank you for holding the recent public hearing on Alaska State House Bill 9, "An Act relating to murder; authorizing capital punishment, classifying murder in the first degree as a capital felony, and allowing the imposition of the death penalty for certain murders; establishing sentencing procedures for capital felonies; and amending Rules 32, 32.1, and 32.3, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 204, 209, 210, and 212, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure."

Founded in 1966, AFN is the largest statewide Alaska Native organization in Alaska. Its membership includes 178 villages (both federally-recognized tribes and village corporations), 13 regional Native corporations and 12 regional nonprofit and tribal consortiums that contract and run federal and state programs. The mission of AFN is to enhance and promote the cultural, economic and political voice of the entire Alaska Native community. AFN and its members are concerned with and advocates for equitable treatment of Alaska Natives within the judicial system of the State of Alaska. For more information on AFN, please visit our website at www.nativefederation.org.

Due to time constraints, I was unable to submit my comments on behalf AFN regarding HB 9 during the public hearing on HB 9. For the record, AFN is opposed to HB 9 for reasons expressed by the whereases of the attached Alaska Federation of Natives Board of Directors Resolution 09-01 entitled "OPPOSING THE REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY IN ALASKA;" the AFN Board passed this resolution unanimously when they met in Juneau on February 11, 2009. It was my intend to submit this resolution into the public hearing record on HB 9 as it reflects AFN's absolute opposition to this bill and other HB 9 type of bills.

For the record, please allow me to excerpt some of the key elements of the attached resolution and our opposition on HB 9:

1. In Alaska, eighteen (18) percent of Alaska's total of population of 655,435[1] people is composed of the American Indians and Alaska Natives, the highest proportion of the total population of any state in the United States of America.[2]

2. The Alaska Native population is disproportionately represented in the correctional system in that Alaska Natives represent between 30% and 40% of the state's inmate population at any given point in time.[3]

3. There is significant evidence of racial bias toward economically disadvantaged members of ethnic minorities in the administration of death penalty in other jurisdictions.

4. There is substantial concern among the Alaska Native Community, and there is no evidence to the contrary, that in all likelihood the Alaska system of criminal jurisprudence is not capable of avoiding racial bias in the trail process.

5. The majority of Alaska Natives and people residing in rural areas of the State of Alaska do not have the means to acquire adequate legal defense counsel when charged with serious crimes.

Please incorporate this letter and the attached AFN Board of Directors Resolution 09-01 into the public hearing record of HB 9. Again, AFN is opposed to HB9.

Thank you for your consideration, if you have any questions regarding this letter or the attachment, please call me at 907-274-3611.

A RESOLUTION OPPOSING AN ALASKA DEATH PENALTY

WHEREAS: the Native Village of Ambler (hereinafter "Tribe") is a sovereign Traditional Government of the aboriginal Kuuvanmiut Nation in Northwest Alaska predating the United States Constitution and the State of Alaska; and,

WHEREAS: the Native Village of Ambler is a federally recognized Tribe with responsibilities inherent in a sovereign government; and,

WHEREAS: the Ambler Traditional Council is the governing body of the Native Village which is the modern day successor to the historical sovereign tribe for the region; and,

WHEREAS: the death penalty has been shown to be disproportionately imposed on minorities. According to the Federal Death Penalty Resource Counsel Project, between 1988 and June 28, 2006, 73% federal government death penalty prosecutions were against minority population; and,

WHEREAS: the death penalty was used exclusively against Alaska Natives and ethnic minorities between 1903 and 1957 in Territorial Alaska, although most murders were committed by white men; and,

WHEREAS: there has been little research into criminal justice issues impacting rural off-reservation Indigenous Peoples as described in Archambeault, William G., "Government Reductionism and Academic Bias in Criminal Justice Research on American Indian Crime and Justice Issues "Indigenous Policy, Journal of The Indigenous Policy Network, Vol. XVIV, No. 2 Summer, 2008; and,

WHEREAS: Alaska Natives already suffer prosecution and incarceration rates far beyond their representation in the Population; and,

WHEREAS: Alaska Natives are entitled to protections of International law pertaining to discriminatory state actions Against indigenous peoples.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that we oppose laws subjecting indigenous Alaskans to the death penalty.

Capital Punishment
March 1, 2009

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to testify on HB No. 9 Capital Punishment.

My name is Alfred McKinley, Sr., residence is Juneau, Alaska. I am an Executive Committee Member of Grand Camp Alaska Native Brotherhood. A delegate to Central Council Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska, and I serve on the Judiciary Committee. Served in the U.S. Army from December 21, 1950 to December 20, 1957.

During the territory era our people were discriminated against, that's one of the reason our Alaska Natives and other citizens voted to abolish capital punishment. Its no different today, our Alaska Natives are being discriminated against. Only the minority will be affected.

For example the Alaska Native receive longer sentence and we have no money to defend ourselves. There are no police officers in the rural villages to maintain peace or control on drugs and alcohol being shipped to the rural communities that prohibit the aforementioned.

I visited Frank C. White, Sr. who I grew up with in Hoonah, Alaska. Frank served in the U.S. Marine Corp. Force Recon outfit. Frank retired as Chief Police Officer, and is also the leader of the Eagle Wolf clan.

This is what my wife recorded during our visit on February 28, 2009.

Recording: Visitation: Frank White, Sr. We will be getting some information on the death penalty during the territorial days of why this was discontinued.

When a minority is coming out of a bar the police arrested him right in public. A legislature saw what was happening and wanted prove if this action was a misdemeanor. So he went down town and waited until police were present and watching the bar - He then came out of the bar and urinated right on the side walk and then on the police car. The legislature was a white man that wanted to do away with this misdemeanor.

The cops arrested anybody that stunk. That's the same way when a guy kills someone that was not determined whether it was premeditated. A premeditated murder to kill is an automatic death penalty because he plan on it - this happened spontaneously - it drops down to second degree, third degree, fourth degree. Anytime a minority kills someone it was automatic premeditation - whether it happened in a bar fight or elsewhere - if a guy died in the fight the guy had it because he is a minority. So it shows right there that a minority gets the death penalty. It was not determined that it was a first degree, second degree murder.

Another example: A young girl was adopted from my tribe by a white man. She was taken to their mine at Admiralty Island. She was abducted and killed and found her lying in the bushes. A couple of young warriors went looking for her. After the tribe took her to Ground Hog Bay and buried her, the tribal warriors went to the mine to kill all the miners, except for one.

The warriors got in a canoe and went to Skagway, the territorial jail was there, the pen.. And turned themselves in to the U.S. Marshall. The U.S. Marshall did not know what to do with the three men. The one guy that was spared his life told a different story- as a result - all got executed. The face value - they were going to hang all three of them.

Nobody explained to them of the white man law. This is why I do not like capital punishment.

In conclusion of the testimony we oppose Capital Punishment because of above reference.

RE: Results of changes in death penalty law

DATE: March 17, 2009

On February 25, I offered oral testimony by telephone before your committee regarding a bill to reinstate the death penalty in Alaska. During the questioning following my testimony, one of the Representatives (whom I could not identify because I was not physically present) asked whether there were individuals who had been executed in the United States in the past but who could not be executed today because of Supreme Court decisions. I indicated that there certainly were such individuals, but that I did not have an exact count and would provide the Committee with additional information at a later time. This memo addresses that question.

One of the most sweeping Supreme Court decisions on the death penalty occurred in 1972 in Furman v. Georgia in which the Court overturned approximately 600 death sentences because the death penalty was being applied in an arbitrary and capricious manner. Thousands of executions had occurred prior to this decision, but it would be difficult to determine exactly when the punishment moved from one which was regularly and constitutionally applied to one in which its rarity and lack of guidance made it arbitrary and unconstitutional.

I suspect that the thrust of the Representative's question was about the modern application of the death penalty after 1972, when every state that wished to adopt capital punishment re-wrote their death penalty laws. Since then, there have been two decisions that clearly excluded future defendants from the death penalty who had been subjected to execution after 1972. One decision involved defendants with mental retardation (Atkins v. Virginia (2002)) and the other involved those who were under the age of 18 at the time of their crime (Roper v. Simmons (2005)). From the time of these respective decisions, no could be executed with either of those characteristics, regardless of when they were sentenced to death. But some defendants in each category were executed between 1972 and the date of the decisions.

Mentally Retarded

According to Dr. Denis Keyes, William Edwards, Esq., & Robert Perske, "People with Mental Retardation are Dying - Legally: At least 44 have been executed," Mental Retardation, Vol. 3, June 2002, pp. 243-44, there were 44 executions of people with mental retardation between 1972 and 2002. The article lists the names of the defendants and in most cases their IQ scores on tests indicating mental retardation.

Juveniles

According to Victor L. Streib, "The Juvenile Death Penalty Today: Death Sentences and Executions for Juvenile Crimes January 1973 - December 31, 2004" (2005), there 22 executions of defendants under the age of 18 at the time of their crime between 1972 and 2005.

Other Decisions

The Supreme Court has issued many other decisions restricting the death penalty, but it is difficult to know whether earlier executions would have been excluded by these rulings since many of the decisions depend on how the law would be applied to the facts presented in the case. No such determination is made by courts after a person has been executed. For some decisions, no executions under the issue decided occurred in the modern era, before or after the decision. Some of the more prominent decisions restricting the death penalty have been:

Coker v. Georgia (1977) – no death penalty for the crime of rape of an adult (no such executions in the modern era had occurred)

Enmund v. Florida (1982) – no death penalty for a defendant only indirectly involved in a felony who did not kill, or intend to kill the victim (no such executions in the modern era had occurred, and cases would depend on the facts)

Ford v. Wainwright (1986) – no death penalty for the insane (probably no such executions in the modern era had occurred, though defendants had not been routinely given adequate hearings to determine insanity)

Ring v. Arizona (2002) – defendant entitled to a jury to determine if he is eligible for the death penalty (executions occurred in the modern era prior to this decision, but the decision only entitled the defendant to a new hearing with a jury, not the permanent removal of the death sentence)

Wiggins v. Smith (2003) – for a defense attorney to be effective, a full investigation of the defendant's social history to determine the existence of mitigating factors is required (whether a prior case would have been affected by this decision would depend on an interpretation of the facts of that case)

Panetti v. Quarterman (2007) – clarifying the conditions that might lead to a judgment of insanity (whether a prior case would have been affected by this decision would depend on an interpretation of the facts of that case)

Kennedy v. Louisiana (2007) – no death penalty for the crime of child rape or other offenses against an individual other than murder (no such executions in the modern era had occurred)

I hope this memo is of assistance to your Committee. I would be happy to try to answer any other questions members of the Committee might have.

Thank you for your consideration of this important matter.

Summary of Testimony of Robert C. Bundy

Alaska State House Judiciary Committee

House Bill No. 9

Capital Punishment

February 25, 2009

I. Introduction

I am an attorney in private practice in Anchorage. I was admitted to practice law in the State of Alaska in 1972. I was a prosecutor for almost half of my career. I served as an Assistant District Attorney in Anchorage, District Attorney in Nome and United States Attorney for the District of Alaska. In my duties as United States Attorney I had occasion to take part in three cases in Alaska involving the federal death penalty.

After careful thought I have come to oppose the institution of a death penalty in Alaska for a number of reasons, including the problems of cost, prioritization of criminal justice resources and racial disparity. Those issues have been well documented and discussed by other witnesses. I wish to discuss another issue particularly relevant to my experience: the possibility of wrongful convictions and executions.

II. The Problem of Wrongful Convictions

For the past several years I have been working with the Innocence Project, which is an organization founded to assist persons in proving their innocence through post-conviction DNA testing.

- To date, there have been 220 men and women exonerated by post conviction DNA testing nationwide.

- 17 had been sentenced to death.
  30 more were eligible cases
- 85% of convictions on serious charges do NOT involve biological evidence susceptible to DNA testing, meaning that exonerations achieved through the use of DNA testing represent only a small proportion of wrongful convictions occurring in the system.

Post-Conviction DNA testing has demonstrated that the risk of convicting an innocent is much greater than even the most cynical expected, as is the risk of executing an innocent. In addition to exonerations of the convicted, DNA has revealed other data that points out the frequency of error in the system.

- FBI exclusion data. In the Department of Justice's National Institute of Justice survey of DNA exclusions, the FBI reported that since it began conducting DNA testing in 1989, it found that in at least 24% of the cases in which it gets results – ordinarily matters in which a suspect has been arrested or indicted on non-DNA evidence – the defendant was excluded. (Remember, 85% of cases do not involve DNA evidence.)

- Pre-conviction/post indictment exclusions. Although no system exists for tracking data, law enforcement officials across the country acknowledge that in thousands of cases, including many homicides, arrests and indictments based on seemingly compelling proof like detailed confessions and multiple eyewitnesses, have been dismissed and the real assailant identified before conviction based on DNA testing.

- Governor Warner's Virginia Experiment. When an unexpected cache of specimens of biological evidence from cases resulting in convictions on serious crimes was found in Virginia archives, Gov. Warner ordered DNA testing (that was not available at the time of conviction) of evidence used to convict. Out of the first 29 randomly selected cases, there were two exonerations (and in one case the real assailant was identified)—close to a 7% exoneration rate. See, "Follow the DNA to Find the Truth," The Roanoke Times, 12/16/05.

III. Causes of wrongful convictions are exacerbated by the death penalty.

- A number of Innocence Project exonerations came in cases in which the defendant pleaded guilty. These guilty pleas were the result of a plea bargain in which an innocent man plead guilty to a homicide and a life sentence to avoid the prospect of a death sentence. - at least 4 guilty pleas to be exonerated

- Death penalty eligible cases are usually the most heinous crimes committed against the most sympathetic victims charged against the least sympathetic defendants - with the most publicity. Police and prosecutors (and judges) become emotionally invested in convicting the person they think is guilty. A theme running through almost every case in which a person convicted of a heinous crime is later exonerated is the problem of "tunnel vision." Tunnel vision is a natural human tendency that has particularly pernicious effects in the criminal justice system. It is the group of mistakes and logical fallacies to which we are all susceptible, that leads actors in the criminal justice system to focus on a suspect, select and filter the evidence that will build a case for conviction, while ignoring or suppressing evidence that points away from guilt. Evidence inconsistent with the chosen theory is easily overlooked or dismissed as irrelevant, incredible, or unreliable. Tunnel vision is more the product of the human condition and institutional and cultural pressures than of maliciousness or indifference. The problem of tunnel vision in the justice system is thoroughly discussed in "The Multiple Dimensions of Tunnel vision in Criminal Cases" 2006 WISCONSIN LAW REVIEW 291. See also, Dianne L. Martin, Lessons About Justice from the "Laboratory" of Wrongful Convictions: Tunnel Vision, the Construction of Guilt and Informer Evidence, 70 UMKC L. REV. 847 (2002); Samuel R. Gross et al., Exoneration in the United States, 1989 through 2003, 95 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 523 (2005).

- The details of cases in which individuals were exonerated by post-conviction DNA testing are found on the Innocence Project web site: www.innocenceproject.org. The facts of many of these cases are startling. Many of the cases involve multiple eyewitnesses, confessions, guilty pleas and/or forensic science. Before the DNA testing, reviewing courts on appeal or in post-conviction proceedings often characterized the evidence as overwhelming. Nonetheless DNA testing proved innocence often after years of imprisonment, some on death row.

ALASKA HISTORY SHOWS US THAT THE TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE WAS RIGHT TO ABOLISH THE DEATH PENALTY IN 1957.

Respectfully submitted to the members of the House Judiciary Committee: Chair Jay Ramras; Vice-Chair Nancy Dahlstrom; Members John Coghill, Jr., Carl Gatto, Bob Lynn, Max Gruenberg, and Lindsay Holmes, on February 25, 2009, in reference to House Bill 9.

My name is Averil Lerman. I speak to you today to ask that you reject any bill authorizing the death penalty in Alaska.

I come before you today as a legal historian, who spent many years studying the history of the death penalty in Territorial Alaska between 1900 and 1957. My research has included extensive documentary review, in archives, libraries, and private collections. I also collected an oral history from more than 50 people who were involved with or affected by the hangings in the territory.

My research shows that Alaska communities who used the death penalty later came to reject it. In Fairbanks, there were three hangings in the 1920's. After that decade, not one more person was hanged, although homicide in Fairbanks continued. The same thing happened in Juneau, where there were three hangings between 1939 and 1950, and then no further hangings, although homicide in Juneau also continued.

Why did the Territorial Legislature abolish the death penalty in Alaska in 1957? Why did the hangings stop?

My answer is that the reality of the death penalty is very different that what people say it will be. People who don't personally experience all the special things that happen in a death process often think that maybe capital punishment is a good thing -- maybe it will help us reduce violent crime; maybe it is fair to take a life for a life; Maybe it is plain justice. I used to be a person who had no particular exposure to the death penalty - and I used to think the death penalty might be a good idea.

But people who live with a death system in their community start to change their minds after being exposed to it for a while. That's what happened here in Alaska.

Some people change their minds about the death penalty when they see that only the poor go to death row. Rich men don't hang from that rope, or drop from that needle. In Territorial days, rich murderers like Guy Prince and Harry de Groot in Juneau never got a death sentence. The same is true in death states today.

Some people change their minds about the death penalty when they see that non-white people and other minorities are much more likely to go to death row than white people. In Territorial Alaska, the only people hanged after 1904 were non-white or ethnic minorities, although 75% of all murder was committed by white men.[1] The Fairbanks hangings executed two Alaska Natives and one foreign man from Montenegro, who was perceived as an ethnic minority. The Juneau hangings executed one Indian (probably from the Puget Sound area) and two African-Americans.

Some people change their minds when they see that, although the death penalty is intended initially only for the most heinous murderers, it ends up being imposed on many other criminals as well. In 1929, Constantine Beaver was sentenced to die for killing his good friend during a drunken brawl. Beaver loved his friend, and was overwhelmed with remorse. U.S. Deputy Frank P. Young described hanging Beaver in Fairbanks as "the saddest affair I have had to witness," and resigned shortly thereafter. No further executions were held in Fairbanks.

Some people change their minds when they see what administering death to other people does to the people who have to actually turn the levers of the death process. Even 50 years after participating in one of the Juneau death cases, the people I spoke to were emotional about what had happened to them, and upset about being asked about it. I talked to a man who had, as a young Juneau policeman, been involved with an execution. When I asked if the condemned man had been shaking, he answered angrily, "Not any more than the rest of us." The wife of another patrolman asked me, "Doesn't anyone think about the people who have to do these things?" The same question was raised by jurors at he trial of Eugene LaMoore, who asked the judge if he could decide on the sentence, instead of them, and found out he could not. The death system puts a heavy weight on the backs of a lot of average people, for life.

One person who changed his mind about the death penalty was Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun. This is what he said:

> Twenty years have passed since this court declared that the death penalty must be imposed fairly and with reasonable consistency or not at all, and despite the effort of the states and courts to devise legal formulas and procedural rules to meet this...challenge, the death penalty remains fraught with arbitrariness, discrimination...and mistake..."
> From this day forward, I no longer shall tinker with the machinery of death. For more than 20 years I have endeavored...to develop...rules that would lend more than the mere appearance of fairness to the death penalty endeavor...Rather than continue to coddle the court's delusion that the desired level of fairness has been achieved...I feel...obligated simply to concede that the death penalty experiment has failed. It is virtually self-evident to me now that no combination of procedural rules or substantive regulations ever can save the death penalty from its inherent constitutional deficiencies... [2]

The same decision was reached by the Alaska Territorial Legislature in 1957. It was a good decision. We should not change it.

Alaska as a state has never had a death penalty. However, in Alaska's territorial days, eight men were executed under civil authority between 1900 and 1957. This article provides an account of the last three executions in Territorial Alaska between 1939 and 1950: Nelson Charles, Austin Nelson, and Eugene LaMoore.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT I

The Last Three Executions

Research for Averil Lerman's Capital Punishment in Territorial Alaska, was supported with grants from the Alaska Humanities Forum and the National Endowment for the Humanities and assistance from the Alaska Native Justice Center. In addition to studying the documentary record of these cases, which all took place in Territorial Alaska between 1939 and 1950, the author conducted over fifty interviews.

ALASKA HAD A DEATH PENALTY UNTIL 1957, when it was abolished by the Territorial Legislature. Between 1900 and 1957, eight men were legally executed in the Territory, each convicted of murder. Most of the murders were committed by white men,[1] but most of the men who hanged were non-white,[2] and after 1904, all of the men hanged were of minority status. Three were Alaska Natives, two were African-American, and one was a foreigner from Montenegro, viewed as a minority by the citizens who tried him.[3]

In 1957, the Territorial Legislature abolished the death penalty in Alaska, after a prolonged debate and an impassioned speech by abolition sponsor Warren Taylor. According to Vic Fischer, who was the junior sponsor of the abolition bill, one of the factors motivating abolition was concern about the apparent race bias in the application of the death penalty.[4]

The death penalty was rare in Territorial Alaska, although murder was not uncommon, and the communities that did experience several capital trials and executions appear to have spontaneously refused to impose further executions. In the 1920s, three men were hanged in Fairbanks. After 1929, no other hanging occurred in Fairbanks, although it appears that murder there continued. The same thing happened in Juneau where three men were hanged between 1939 and 1950, but none after that.

Perhaps in these small communities everyone was touched by the crime, the trial, or the hanging, either directly or through a friend, neighbor, or family member. The process was not carried out by some unknown strangers, and that may have influenced the manner in which the communities of Fairbanks and Juneau experienced the use and then the non-use of the death penalty. Many of the people who were interviewed for this article recalled their experiences with some bitterness, sadness, or uncertainty.

This article discusses the last three executions that took place in Territorial Alaska. They were all in Juneau. One of the executed men was native and the other two were black.

JIM ELLEN FOUND MURDERED IN STORE

BODY FOUND, THROAT CUT, EAR TO EAR

Negro Arrested Soon After Slaying Is Discovered—Formal Charge Made

Nelson Charles

NELSON CHARLES was a Ketchikan fisherman. Charles, described in the newspaper accounts as "an Indian" perhaps from the Puget Sound area, had been tried and convicted in Ketchikan for the 1938 murder of his mother-in-law. The crime was committed when both he and his victim had been drinking heavily. Charles himself had summoned the police immediately after the killing, and had taken them to the hillside where the stabbing had occurred. Cecilia Johnson, his victim, had been stabbed in the back and the chest, and had been sexually molested.

Charles was represented at trial by well-known Ketchikan lawyer, A.H. Ziegler, who was appointed by the court on behalf of the indigent defendant. Ziegler is remembered as an intelligent and well-respected attorney,[5] with a sardonic sense of humor.[6] Ziegler, a Democrat, was viewed as "very conservative" on social issues, and was an unlikely champion for an Indian charged with murder.[7] He had served three terms in the Territorial Legislature, and was elected mayor of Ketchikan in the same year as Nelson Charles's trial.[8]

Ziegler was appointed to the case only one week before the trial was to begin. The trial jurors were all white. The defense called no witnesses at the trial aside from the defendant. The jury deliberated for only four hours before returning a guilty verdict, with a finding that Charles should be punished by death rather than by life in prison.

It does not appear that Ziegler did much pretrial investigation.[8] After his client was sentenced to hang, however, Ziegler tried to compensate for the lack of pretrial work by submitting the affidavit of William H. Caswell, a retired U.S. marshal, who stated that Charles was ordinarily a peaceable man, and that "when not under the influence of liquor he is a quiet, peaceful and polite person and I have never known him to even have an argument or get into trouble of any kind." Caswell continued, stating that he had seen Charles a few days before the murder, and that he had the same bulging of the eyes and stare and had every appearance of an insane person; that from my experience with the man, my observation of his action and conduct when drunk I am convinced that intoxication produces a condition in his mind of insanity . . .

THE EVIDENCE was too little, too late. Ziegler's request for a new trial was denied, and Charles was sentenced to hang. No appeal was filed; there was no provision for appointed lawyers on appeal, and like most of the men hanged in Alaska, Nelson Charles had no money, and thus could not afford to bring any appeal from his conviction. Unsuccessful efforts for clemency were made on his behalf by the Alaska Native Brotherhood, through a petition to President Roosevelt.

While Charles was attempting to avoid the scaffold, the U.S. marshal's office in Juneau was trying to figure out how to build a scaffold. The U.S. marshal was William Mahoney. Like others in his position during Territorial times, he was a political appointee, and his second-in-command, Walter Hellan, was often delegated the important tasks. George Sundborg, a young reporter for a local weekly called The Juneau Independent recalls seeing the marshal and his deputies pore through the manuals in order to learn their new duty:

They of course had never conducted a hanging, and I think they got a few books out of libraries somewhere, probably from the U.S. Marshal Service, to tell them how a hanging was to be set up and carried through. And I know that they had done some dry runs with the trap that they built, and had carefully calculated the weight of the victim — of the accused, so that he wouldn't be dropped so far as to behead him, which sometimes happens in a hanging, I learned at that time.[9]

Sundborg also learned that, like a firing squad where one of the squad has a blank cartridge, the marshal's deputies were to be insulated from individual responsibility for the act of executing Nelson Charles. Sundborg explained:

And so Walter Hellan, who was in charge of all of this, had told me that, so that the person who actually sprung the trap would not know that he had done it, they set up several, I think four, different ropes that would pull a pin that dropped the trap. And three of them would be false, and one would be the one that actually did it. And so the four men, all of whom were deputy marshals — the one who did it would not know that it was he who had pulled the one that actually caused this man's death.

THE SCAFFOLD was constructed in a stairwell of the building which housed both the Federal Jail and the marshal's residence. According to Sundborg:

It was a large building which previously had been the capitol. And it was a wooden building but very large, and quite attractive. But it had grown old and it had been supplanted by the federal building, which was across the street from it. It had outside stairways, that is, one was out in the open when going from the second floor to the third floor, and so on. And [the marshal's office] had decided that they would do the hanging under one of these stairways because there was an open space there with quite a drop. And so we went in and they had set up a floor in the place with a trap in the middle of it.

The plan was to permit a drop of four and one-half feet below the level of the trapdoor. Construction of the scaffold was started three days before the hanging.[11]

Charles faced his imminent death calmly. According to the local newspaper, Charles left behind 13 letters of farewell, one of which was addressed to Marshal Mahoney, stating that the marshal "had treated him kindly and that he did not hold Mahoney in any way to blame for what was about to happen to him."[12] The paper also reported on Charles's condition on the night before his death: "Nelson Charles was calm throughout the night, jailers said, and ate a hearty breakfast. He slept about an hour and a half."[13]

The law required the execution to take place in front of 12 witnesses selected by the marshal. Those selected included three journalists, a priest, a minister, two doctors, men from the marshal's office, and several others who had no professional connection to the process (including one man who worked for the Internal Revenue Service).

A rope had been hung from the bottom of the second floor landing to the trapdoor structure that had been built over the open area into which the lower stair descended.

The witnesses were seated on benches beneath the ascending staircase. The marshal came out of the door, and told everyone that there was to be no talking once Nelson Charles came out. Al Anderson, one of the journalists present, recalled hearing someone say, "Jesus Christ, what a way to make a living."

Nelson Charles was brought out of the jail by Mahoney and a deputy. He was a small, dark-skinned man, wearing blue serge trousers, a white shirt, a carefully knotted necktie, and black shoes. Charles's arms and hands were bound tightly to his sides with white straps. As the witnesses watched, Mahoney took another strap and bound Charles's legs together.

Another of the journalists present, John Gaffney, wrote a remarkable essay shortly after the execution, in which he recorded details of the event, and some of his reactions to it.[14] He recounts,

As [Mahoney] finished his task, he stepped back a little: is there anything you'd like to say, Nelson? he asked. We listened as we had never thought a man could listen, listened till our ears would burst, listened while we expected him to say nothing, but hoped he would; we expected a brief negative nod of the dark head. But he spoke, his voice a half-sob, whispering, barely more: I am innocent of killing my mother-in-law, he murmured. I don't want to hang; I still say I am innocent. His head was bowed forward, you could feel if not see the hot tears in his eyes, you could feel his trembling in your own body.

Mahoney pulled a black knit hood over Charles's head, and then took the noose off a peg on the wall, and placed it over Charles' hooded head. Then he stepped back a step, and raised his arm, and softly said, "OK."

Gaffney recorded his own thoughts at that moment:

Had I any thought of a man, a criminal, about to pay for his crime? Any thought of a disreputable and dangerous killer about to give his life for one he had taken? No; nothing like that. Only that a man was about to die; that there, almost within reach, was a man, a man like ourselves; a young man who somewhere had a wife, who had once slept an untroubled sleep, had only the day before laughed and hoped for life. I was aware of some feeling as I sat there then, some unusual feeling that was strange to me; then it was vague, and there was not time to fathom it. But now I know: it was the certainty, the sureness of it. I knew for the only time in my life that within minutes this man who now lived as I lived would be dead, a stone, lifeless, cold and stiff. Men have been stricken with fatal diseases and we have known they will die; we have held our buddies in our arms at the front and watched the last breaths spend themselves; but even then there has been hope, and when not hope, the awareness that death might stay away yet awhile. Would it come now, or later, perhaps? But none of that now; nothing less than a miracle can save this fellow, and there are no miracles in this life; we know no other. Soon he will be a stone.

Deputy Marshal Walter Hellan flipped a switch on the wall and there was a clicking sound. Gaffney recalled:

Then, the clicking stopped with the louder sound of the trap's springing. There it was: the square of wood on which he stood fell away and he fell toward the pit, fell then swung. Not a movement, just swung, turning, turning, now right, now left; like a stone on a string, a bit of paper on a cord, held in the air for a kitten to leap at.

The marshal went downstairs to help the doctors climb up a pile of boxes from the floor below to determine whether or not Nelson Charles was still alive. "Dead," was all the second doctor said. The witnesses left.

Al Anderson remembered what happened after the hanging, dropping his voice to quote Mahoney:

And afterwards, I'll never forget, the United States marshal congratulating Walter Hellan on the '... smooth job, well done.' And I think after that, I went downtown to a bar and had a good stiff drink, then came back to my office at the Alaska Daily Press, wrote the story, and everybody stayed away from me because they knew I had enough on my mind.

Juneau, Alaska April 14th, 1950

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, and residents of Juneau, Alaska do hereby certify that we witnessed the execution of Eugene LaMoore by hanging at the Federal Jail in Juneau, Alaska, on April 14th, 1950 at 5.16 A.M.

GEORGE SUNDBORG recalled emerging after the execution from the dark jail into the rainy daylight, and seeing a "... very striking scene, one of the greatest, most striking scenes of my life." There was a ring of several hundred people around the jail:

I was dumbstruck to see that the entire ring — it was on a hillside, and every point of vantage where a person could stand was filled with a Native Alaskan, an Indian. You've probably seen the movies in the old days where the wagon trains are going through a valley, and all of a sudden an Indian will appear on the horizon, and then there would be nothing but Indians all the way around. Well, that was the way it was on the day of the execution.

The crowd was "absolutely silent."

Nelson Charles had asked that any funeral be conducted by the Salvation Army. He was buried in an unmarked grave in Evergreen Cemetery. His wife was in Ketchikan at the time of the hanging. According to the newspaper, she was serving time on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. He left behind a young daughter as well.

Austin Nelson and Eugene LaMoore

AUSTIN NELSON AND EUGENE LAMOORE were separately convicted of the 1946 murder of a Juneau convenience store owner named Jim Ellen. Both Nelson and LaMoore were African-American.

Jim Ellen owned a small grocery and liquor store on Willoughby Avenue, in the rougher area of Juneau. He lived in the back room of the store premises. A 53 year-old bachelor, he was a Greek immigrant who had come to the United States as a child in 1909, and had been in Juneau since about 1925. Ellen was a veteran of World War I and a member of the American Legion and the Juneau Elks Lodge. He was a hardy man, and powerful. Stores like his were then, as now, a common target of thieves.[14] The local newspaper reported several previous robberies of Ellen's store in 1937, 1938, and 1944. In one of those instances, Ellen had successfully resisted two armed robbers, who he chased away after a struggle.[15]

The murder of Jim Ellen hit a nerve in post-war Juneau. One former resident, Isabelle McLean, recalled anxiety in the town:

It was just after the war, you know, and there had been a lot of unsettled feeling in Juneau because there were many strangers, many people who had worked various construction jobs during the war, were drifting in and out.[17]

ELLEN'S BODY was found on the floor of his store, on the morning of December 22, 1946. His throat had been cut. Merchandise was scattered around the store, and all of the paper money from the cash register was gone, with one exception. The robber had left on the store counter a check signed over to Jim Ellen by one "Austin Nelson." Austin Nelson was a 24 year-old black man, who had worked at various odd jobs around Juneau. Nelson was immediately arrested on suspicion of murder.

Trial was set for April 10, 1947. Because it was a homicide and Alaska still a territory, the investigation was done by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Agents interviewed twenty witnesses, and forwarded evidence to a scientific laboratory in Washington, D.C. for testing and analysis. FBI records show that agents sent a radiogram to Washington, stating that they wanted to secretly record conversation between the accused man and his lawyer, which wouldn't be hard, they said, because the elderly lawyer was very deaf, and any conversation with him would have to be pretty loud. Washington responded that the request was ill-advised.

Austin Nelson, in contrast, had no opportunity to conduct an investigation into the charges filed against him. Counsel was not appointed to represent him until ten days before the scheduled trial. Because it was a capital case, the court could appoint two defense lawyers. The first appointment was Henry Roden, one of the grand old men of Alaska Law, who had himself served as the compiler of law in the territory. At 73, however, Roden was past his prime, too frail, by one report, to walk up the steep hill to the jail to see his client. Roden told the Court that eight days would be long enough for him to prepare his client's defense, but asked that the court appoint someone to assist him. Joseph A. McLean, who had passed the bar exam just two months earlier, was appointed as his co-counsel. McLean had studied for the bar by serving for a period of years as an intern to Herbert "Bert" Faulkner, a preeminent attorney in Juneau.

NELSON'S TRIAL BEGAN ON APRIL 14, 1947, with the picking of the jury. Seven of the twelve jurors who were chosen for the trial had just served together on another murder jury the week before. Argument by the United States Attorney and introduction of evidence began on the next day, and consumed a total of four days.

"Like most of the men hanged in Alaska, Nelson had no money with which to pay for an appeal, and there was no provision for a public lawyer for appeal."

The main evidence against Nelson was the testimony of a woman named Marguerite "Dolly" Silvers. Silvers had, in fact, been held in jail for a month before the Nelson trial on a high bond, on the grounds that she was a material witness. Such an arrest was extremely unusual, according to one former territorial prosecutor.[18] The basis for it in this case is not known.

Silvers testified at Nelson's trial that she had seen Austin Nelson in Ellen's shop late on the night of the murder, when she was walking back home after the bars had closed.

Other witnesses testified that Nelson had once owned a straight-edged razor, that a case for such a razor had been found in his rented room, that he had small bloodstains on his clothes, and that he had been seen on Willoughby Avenue on the night of the killing. The government submitted as evidence for the jury's examination a photograph of Ellen lying in a pool of his own blood with his throat cut, a photograph of Ellen lying in the morgue, the blood soaked shirt and pants that Ellen had died in, and a glass vial containing Ellen's blood. The evidentiary value of the vial of blood is unknown.

Henry Roden made no opening argument on behalf of his client. Nelson put forward an alibi defense to the effect that, although he had been downtown that Saturday night, and had been walking on Willoughby Avenue, he had nothing to do with Ellen's death. One of the witnesses gave highly persuasive testimony in support of Nelson's alibi. He stated that Nelson had been with him for much of the evening, spending some time at a downtown bar, and visiting friends for a drink at a local hotel, and walking down the Avenue to try to collect a debt from a friend. That witness was Eugene LaMoore, a black, 42 year-old fisherman married to a Juneau Tlingit woman with whom he had three young children. As remembered by one of the jurors at Nelson's trial, LaMoore's testimony was detailed and credible:

He made a tremendous witness. He was just straightforward. Looked at everybody, looked the prosecuting attorney right in the eye, straightforward answers, no hesitation, very sincere. You couldn't help but believe him.[19]

But LaMoore's credibility with the jury was short-lived. Without advance notice, the prosecutor asked LaMoore if, twenty years before, he had been convicted of a felony in California. LaMoore denied it. The next morning, LaMoore returned to the courtroom and corrected his testimony of the previous day, admitting to a 1927 conviction. As a young man, LaMoore had, in fact, been convicted of robbery.

LaMoore's failure to admit the conviction, however, destroyed his credibility with the jury regarding everything else he had said about Austin Nelson. Even 50 years later, the scene was vivid in the mind of one of the men who served on Nelson's jury:

As far as LaMoore was concerned, I think the rest of the jury felt like I did. They were stunned when [United States Attorney] Gilmore brought him back in because I think we believed the guy when he testified the first time around. He was just ... — if anybody could have saved this guy's neck, it was [LaMoore].

Nelson's lawyers argued that the case was purely circumstantial, that the Government had never explained the problematic facts that none of the money taken from the store was found, that no murder weapon had been found, and that the murderer's bloody footprints, which had been found on the linoleum floor of the store, and cut out by the police, had never been introduced by the prosecutor.

AFTER FOUR HOURS of deliberation on Friday, April 18, the jury returned with a verdict of guilty. As required by law, the jury was also charged with deciding whether Nelson should be sentenced to life in prison or sentenced to hang. The jury's verdict was death.

Before imposing sentence, Judge Pratt asked Austin Nelson if he had anything to say on the subject. Nelson's answer was transcribed by the court reporter:

Yes I have, your Honor. Your honor, I was prosecuted and condemned for a crime I have not committed. I haven't the least idea of what it is all about. I knew nothing about it. I guess I have been prosecuted for somebody else. I am innocent. That is all. ... If it is possible for a new trial, there is an attorney I can get to take the trial. He isn't here, but I am positive he will take it to prove my innocence, because I absolutely don't know anything about it.

Forced to respond to this disconcerting dialogue, Judge Pratt answered:

The jury has found you guilty, Mr. Nelson, and they made that finding without the recommendation that you were guilty without capital punishment. Having so found you guilty, there is only one sentence the Court can pronounce, and that is the sentence of death.

Therefore, it is the sentence and judgment of the Court that you suffer the death penalty by hanging by the neck until dead, upon the 1st day of July, 1947. Please sit down.

Nelson persisted:

Your honor, is there no way for me to get a new trial whatsoever?

The Judge told him to ask his attorney, and, again, to sit down.

Nelson's conviction was not appealed. Like most of the men hanged in Alaska, Nelson had no money with which to pay for an appeal, and there was no provision for a public lawyer for appeal.

ON THE DAY Eugene LaMoore came back into court to change his testimony regarding the conviction twenty years earlier, he was arrested by the U.S. marshal and charged by the local FBI agent with committing perjury. The fact that he had retracted that statement the following day was disregarded. Bond on the perjury charge was set at $10,000, a very high bond in 1947.[20]

LaMoore was incarcerated in the federal jail, in a cell by himself, shackled in leg irons - a short length of chain with iron bracelets on each side which were locked around each of his ankles, and later shackled to a ball and chain. He was repeatedly interviewed by the FBI agent and by local law enforcement authorities, not about the perjury charge for which he had been charged and imprisoned, but about the murder of Jim Ellen. LaMoore denied any involvement.

The government attorneys and investigators continued to interrogate LaMoore, who had no attorney nor any ability to obtain an attorney. Shortly before Nelson was to be hanged, they brought Nelson and LaMoore together in the jail for the first time since LaMoore's arrest. Their efforts paid off: On July 1, 1947, the day that Austin Nelson was supposed to die, Eugene LaMoore signed a typed confession stating that he, too, had participated in the robbery of Jim Ellen, and that, during the robbery, Nelson had killed Ellen, although LaMoore had begged him not to.

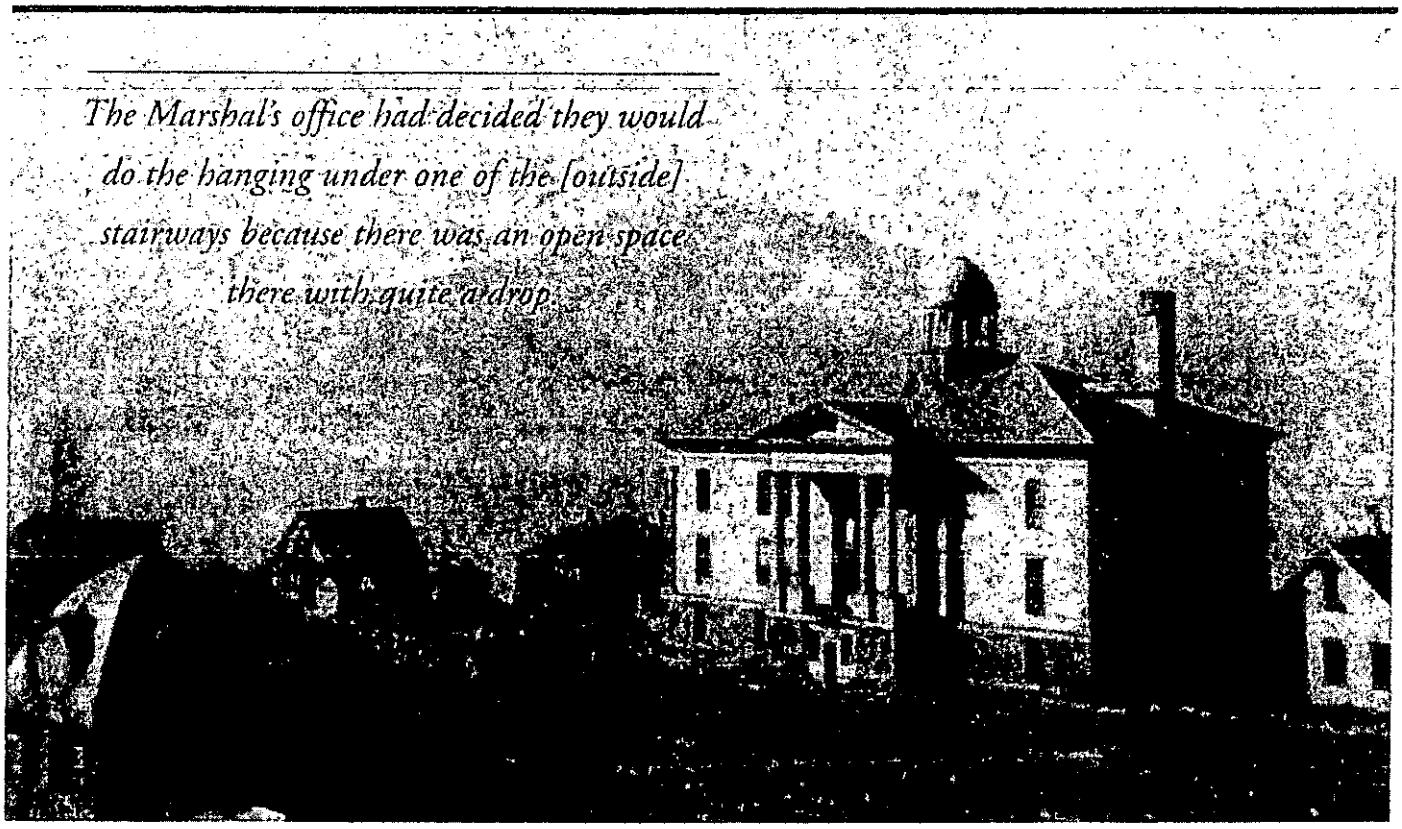
Nelson's hanging was postponed; the Government said that he was now a necessary and material witness against LaMoore, who was charged with first degree murder. A grand jury indicted LaMoore for murder on January 6, 1948, nine months after he had been jailed on the perjury complaint. On January 12, Henry Roden and Joseph McLean, the same two lawyers who had represented Austin Nelson, were appointed to represent LaMoore. LaMoore's trial began two weeks later, on February 2, 1947. It took three days.

The government's case against LaMoore hinged completely on the confession he had given at the federal jail. No murder weapon was introduced. No money from the robbery was introduced. Two witnesses testified that, on the night of Ellen's murder, LaMoore was wearing a coat that he didn't have any longer. One policeman testified that there had been bloody footprints on the floor of Ellen's store, which looked to be about the same size as LaMoore's feet. But the linoleum flooring with those footprints that had been cut out by the police on the day of the murder was never introduced by the government, and there was no explanation offered for its absence.

The only critical evidence against LaMoore was the confession. But at trial LaMoore retracted the confession. He testified that after he had been implicated by Nelson (which only occured in the final days before Nelson's scheduled hanging), the two had been brought together in the jail, and Nelson had burst into tears, apologized for telling lies, and had begged for help saving his life:

[Nelson] would not sit down. He stood behind his chair and cried and called himself many dirty names. He told me to forgive him, 'but help me save my life.' It hurts me to say this. He said, 'Help me save my life. It will come out all right.'[21]

The Marshal's office had decided they would do the hanging under one of the [outside] stairways because there was an open space there with quite a drop.



The old capital building housed the federal jail and the marshal's residence. It was eventually torn down to make room for the new state office building.

LaMoore said that he decided to help Nelson. At trial, in response to questioning by the prosecutor about whether or not his confession was true, the following exchange took place:

Q: You told [Deputy U.S. Marshal Hellan] a lie, did you?
A: That was a lie. He asked me to swear to it, and I refused.
Q: Did you mean to lie to him?
A: To help that boy save his life if possible.
Q: And your admitting to Mr. Hellan that you participated with him in the robbery and the murder, you thought you helped Austin Nelson by that?
A: He is alive, isn't he?
Q: Well, yes.
A: It undoubtedly helped.
Q: Your making that statement got him a stay of execution?
A: That man was framed, and you know it.
Q: Just answer the questions.[22]

Then the prosecutor asked:

Q: Didn't you think you were taking a chance to help?
A: I take a chance walking across the streets.
Q: You were willing to take that chance?
A: I have took chances before.[23]

"I remember it was not a nice day. There was a feeling of malaise, or dourness, or maybe the best word is the German word, angst. "

LaMoore also claimed that his confession was obtained by a ruse. His defense attorneys put forth uncontroverted evidence that LaMoore's confession was only obtained after Hellan called on one of the most prominent lawyers in Juneau to come down to the jail and talk to LaMoore in connection with the unfiled murder charge. That lawyer was Herbert L. "Bert" Faulkner. Bert Faulkner was probably the most famous lawyer in Juneau at the time: he represented the banks, fish processors, and other big businesses. Before he had entered the practice of law, Faulkner had been a deputy U.S. marshal. He was close friends with George Folta, the newly appointed federal judge, and he had close ties with the federal prosecutor's office.

According to LaMoore's testimony, Bert Faulkner met with LaMoore privately, and then they called in Hellan, and Bert Faulkner sat down with LaMoore and typed the statement that LaMoore dictated.

LaMoore testified that he had believed Faulkner to be his attorney, and that when Faulkner told him to give the statement, he did so.

Faulkner denied LaMoore's testimony. He testified that he told LaMoore he would not be his attorney, but that he was just coming to see him because he had been requested to do so.

LaMoore's junior attorney, Joseph McLean, had expected that Henry Roden would take on the venerable Mr. Faulkner, since Faulkner was a close friend of McLean's father, as well as McLean's teacher and mentor. But when the moment for cross-examination came, Roden poked McLean in the side with his elbow, and told him to "go to it." McLean asked a few weak questions of his teacher, and sat down.[24] He never got before the jury the fact that Faulkner was a close friend of Deputy Marshal Walter Hellan, and

EUGENE LAMOORE HANGED

Convicted Slayer Goes to Gallows Here Pleading He Is Innocent

Pleading his innocence to the last, Eugene La Moore alias Austin Rollin, 42-year-old convicted slayer, went to the gallows at the Federal Jail here this morning for his part in the murder and robbery of grocaryman Jim Ellen.

La Moore, a slim 5 feet 10 inch tall Negro, was dropped through the trap at 5:1d a.m., as Protestant and Catholic ministers spoke final words of prayer for his soul. The condemned man faced his hangman bravely and calmly as he made his final peace with God.

"I did not kill Jim Ellen," he began his final speech. "I have never taken innocent blood," he declared but indirectly implied that he had killed on other occasions. La Moore had a long and colorful criminal record.

Law enforcement officers explained that La Moore honestly believed that he had not killed Ellen at the victim's grocery store on Willoughby Avenue, Dec. 22, 1946 They said, however, that all evidence proved that he had hit Ellen on the head and that his partner Austin Nelson, had done the actual killing by slitting the victim's throat with a knife. Nelson had implicated La Moore in the crime before he himself, went to the gallows here on March 1, 1948.

La Moore was convicted by a local Federal District Court jury in February 1948 but his execution was delayed until today by the long process of appeal. The execution was final at 5:31 a.m., when Dr. C. P. Carter pronounced him officially dead. He is survived by a wife and three children, all residents of Juneau.

Administering the last rites were Rev. Ralph E. Baker, of the Bethel Tabernacle and the Rev. Leo J. Sweeney and the Rev. John E. Carr both of the Catholic Church. Interment later today was private.

La Moore was the ninth man to be legally executed in the history of U. S. government in Alaska. This was the third in Juneau.

that Faulkner had close ties with the marshal's office from his own early years as a deputy marshal, or that Faulkner had close ties with the prosecutor's office even then.

Dolly Silvers, the witness who had been jailed for a month before the Nelson trial to make sure she was available, was called by LaMoore's attorney to testify. She stated that she had walked down Willoughby Avenue on that night, and had seen into the lighted windows of Jim Ellen's store, where she saw Jim Ellen with only one other man, Austin Nelson. No one else was there, she said. This was the same thing she had stated at the request of the prosecutor at Nelson's trial. Now, however, the same testimony was unwelcome by the prosecutor. He attacked her, suggesting that she was a drunk, and unreliable.

Austin Nelson had been kept alive at the request of the prosecutor on the grounds that "... it would be impossible to prove a murder charge against LaMoore without the testimony of said Austin Nelson."[25] He was expected to be "the Government's star witness" by the Juneau newspaper, in its first report of the LaMoore trial.[26] Although he was alive in the federal jail across the street from the courthouse in which LaMoore's trial was held, Nelson was never called to testify at the trial by the government.[27] No explanation for his absence was made. The government never told the jury (and apparently never told the defense either) that after Nelson's trial, Nelson directed agents to $1,151 in the bathroom ceiling in Austin Nelson's rooming house. The FBI also found a straight-edged razor there. LaMoore's lawyers could have used this information to argue that Nelson, having all the money in his possession, was the sole perpetrator.

During deliberations the jury sent the judge a note asking whether or not the judge could decide on the punishment. Judge Folta responded with a note stating that the jury had to do that. A death verdict was returned five hours later. On hearing the verdict, Eugene LaMoore burst into tears.[28]

On February 10, less than a week after the end of the LaMoore trial, the court scheduled the execution of Austin Nelson for March 1.

Nelson was hanged in the federal jail at 5:40 on the morning of March 1, 1948. He fought all the way from his cell to the scaffold, according to witnesses, and blacked the eye of Deputy U.S. Marshal Sidney Thompson. Walt Sinn, a city policeman who assisted with the execution, recalled how Thompson was behind Nelson, and leaned forward when Nelson leaned forward, and then was surprised by Nelson's suddenly throwing his head backward, to strike Thompson in the face.

After Nelson was put on the scaffold, Sinn descended into the basement, below the scaffold. He waited for Marshal Mahoney to touch a switch above him, which illuminated a light bulb below. At that signal, Sinn was to pull the rope opening the trapdoor.

When the light bulb flashed, Sinn tripped the trapdoor. He recalled that Nelson dropped down right in front of him.

There was no reflex action whatsoever, except I can remember hearing fluid hit the floor, and it turned out of course that he was .... urinating. It was very quiet except for that.

He remembered being surprised at how long it took before Nelson's heart stopped beating:

A doctor, I can't remember if it was Doctor Whitehead or another of the local doctors was there with a stethoscope and remained there, and as I remember, the heart beat for quite some time it seems to me, eleven minutes or something? I was surprised at what good condition that man was, he was a strong and young man, so possibly that was why.

One woman, a young social worker in Juneau at the time, whose husband would later be one of the first State Troopers in Alaska, remembered the day on which Nelson was hanged:

To me, it seemed that the hanging cast a pall over the whole town. I remember it was not a nice day. There was a feeling of malaise, or dourness, or maybe the best word is the German word, angst. That was my impression at the time.[29]

NELSON WAS BURIED in an unmarked grave in Evergreen cemetery. One man, now a hundred years old, remembers the burial.

I was pallbearer for both of those boys [Nelson and LaMoore]. The funeral was right out there in that little cemetery in Juneau. There was a priest or a minister. Nelson, he was Catholic. Eugene LaMoore, I don't know what religion he was. But they buried him out there.

We didn't take the Catholic in church. When we goes up there, my car was taking the pallbearers. The hearse had the body. The priest said, 'There's no need taking them in the church, nobody's there except the hearse driver.' We gets in my car and goes out there, and the father puts cross on his grave. And that's the truth.[30]

AN UNSUCCESSFUL APPEAL was brought from Eugene LaMoore's conviction by Joseph McLean, who received no fee or reimbursement of the cost for traveling to San Francisco to argue the case.

LaMoore was hanged in the federal jail on April 14, 1950, just after 5:00 a.m. Two of the men who assisted in the hanging were drafted from the Juneau city police beat that they usually walked at night. "Was LaMoore trembling?" I asked one of the former patrolmen. He answered, with what seemed like a touch of remembered bitterness, "Not any more than the rest of us." Even Marshal Mahoney looked shaken up, he said. Once LaMoore was standing on the scaffold, the two city patrolman both retreated down the corridor to the furthest point from the actual execution, unwilling witnesses to the final act."[1] The widow of the other patrolman who had been there that night recounted how disturbing the whole thing had been to her husband. She asked, "Doesn't anyone think about the people who have to do these things?"[2]

After the hanging of Eugene LaMoore, the U.S. marshal's office made arrangements with the State of Washington. If there were to be any more executions, they would be done there, and not in Juneau. The marshal's office had had enough.[3]

Like Nelson Charles and Austin Nelson, Eugene LaMoore was buried in an unmarked grave in Evergreen Cemetery. His wife put her two sons and daughter into an orphanage. Her family in Juneau would have nothing to do with them. She died young, perhaps of alcohol-related complications. According to the recollection of LaMoore's daughter, LaMoore's sister adopted two of the children, but her request to adopt the third child was denied, on the grounds that the third child was so light-skinned as to appear white, and she was black.

BETWEEN 1939, when Nelson Charles was hanged, and 1950, when Eugene LaMoore was hanged, there were many other homicides in Juneau and in Southeast Alaska, but none of the other wrongdoers was executed. Forrest Smith was sentenced in 1939 to serve 20 years for murder in a dispute related to Smith's wife. Guy Prince, a rich man who lived off the income of a trust fund set up for him by his wealthy California family, got 20 years for strangling his wife with a nylon stocking in 1946. George Meeks, convicted of the robbery and murder of a construction worker, was sentenced to life in prison in 1948. All of these men were white.

There were no more hangings in Juneau or anywhere else in the Territory, even during the seven year period before the death penalty was abolished by the Legislature in 1957. ■

REPORT CRITICIZES SCIENTIFIC TESTING AT F.B.I. CRIME LAB

By DAVID JOHNSTON

The Justice Department's inspector general said today that the Federal Bureau of Investigation's renowned crime laboratory was riddled with flawed scientific practices that had potentially tainted dozens of criminal cases, including the bombings of the Federal Building in Oklahoma City and the World Trade Center in New York.

The inspector general, Michael R. Bromwich, announced his findings after an 18-month investigation that he said had uncovered "extremely serious and significant problems" at a laboratory that for more than six decades, since its founding by J. Edgar Hoover in 1932, has been a symbol of the F.B.I.'s cutting-edge scientific sleuthing.

The investigation found that the laboratory's explosives, chemistry-toxicology and materials analysis units were rife with substandard performance that had forced F.B.I. officials to review several hundred past and current cases to determine how many might have been jeopardized by faulty work.

The findings are expected to give added impetus to defense lawyers in scores of cases, including the defense in the Oklahoma City bombing case, which served notice in pretrial hearings months ago that it intended to challenge the integrity of the F.B.I. investigation and analysis of physical evidence in the case.

The inspector general's report recognized the central role played by a chemist in the explosives laboratory, Frederic Whitehurst, who was single-handedly responsible for the investigation after filing numerous complaints since 1989 about the laboratory's poor performance and the failings of his colleagues.

The report represented another blow to the reputation of the F.B.I. and its Director, Louis J. Freeh, who took over the bureau in September 1993 as the seriousness of the laboratory's problems began to emerge. In recent months, Mr. Freeh's competence has been under attack in Congress in connection with a botched interview with a suspect in the Olympic Centennial Park bombing in Atlanta last July and the release of F.B.I. background files to the White House.

Although Mr. Freeh has tried to improve the laboratory, that attack continued today. Senator Charles E. Grassley, Republican of Iowa, said the report demonstrated that the bureau "needs better leadership."

Mr. Bromwich recommended the censure, transfer or other discipline of five agents who worked in the laboratory, including the agent who first asserted that it had problems. He said the inquiry had found numerous instances in which F.B.I. agents who work as scientific examiners had prepared sloppy reports, exaggerated their findings against defendants and inadequately documented their test results.

Moreover, the report found that supervisors had failed to supervise the examiners adequately, had allowed indefensible conclusions to go unchallenged and had left too much discretion to subordinates who reached findings that were unsupported by scientific evidence. The report suggested that the laboratory had maintained its reputation for years even as its managers clung to outmoded methods and failed to respond to internal complaints.

The bureau's Deputy Director, William J. Esposito, expressed regret and acknowledged the criticism of the laboratory's performance. He said the F.B.I. would focus "on how did we get to this point, and address these problems so they don't reoccur."

The problems seemed most serious in two major cases: the bombing on Feb. 26, 1993, of the World Trade Center, which killed 6 people, and the bombing on April 19, 1995, of the Oklahoma City Federal Building, which killed 168 people. A group of Muslim fundamentalists was convicted in the World Trade Center case. Two men are now on trial in Denver or are scheduled to be tried for the Oklahoma City bombing.

In the World Trade Center case, the report said an examiner in the explosives laboratory, David R. Williams, "gave inaccurate and incomplete testimony and testified to invalid opinions that appeared tailored to the most incriminating result."

Mr. Williams's testimony in the case, the report said, "exceeded his expertise, was unscientific and speculative, was based on improper nonscientific grounds and appeared to be tailored to correspond with his estimate of the amount of explosive used in the bombing."

Mr. Williams was also assigned to the Oklahoma case, and the inspector general concluded that "many of the same errors committed by Williams in the World Trade Center case were repeated in the Oklahoma City case – principally that Williams based some of his conclusions not on a valid scientific analysis, but on speculation from the evidence associated with the defendants."

Mr. Williams's findings, the report concluded, were "tilted" to incriminate the defendants. For example, he determined that the Oklahoma City bomb was composed of ANFO, ammonium nitrate and fuel oil, not from chemical analysis but from a speculative judgment based on "the fact that one of the defendants purchased ANFO components."

The report found that Mr. Williams's supervisor, J. Thomas Thurman, failed to review his subordinate's work properly and that both agents should be singled out for "special censure" for their roles in the Oklahoma City case because of the "enormous national significance" of the prosecution.

Mr. Williams, who was transferred along with Mr. Thurman and two other agents in January in response to the inspector general's findings, said in a reply to the report that he had tried to provide rapid scientific evaluations based on information available to him at the time. But he acknowledged that he had "overstated" his conclusions in a report on the Oklahoma City bombing.

The report made public today reported similar lapses in less well known cases, including the 1989 bombing of an Avianca Airlines jet that exploded after taking off from Bogota, Colombia, killing all 107 people on board, including 2 Americans.

Mr. Bromwich said he had not found any instance in which laboratory examiners had committed a crime or had intentionally faked forensic evidence, obstructed justice or lied about their findings in court. He said his inquiry had not reached any conclusions about whether the flaws were damaging enough to overturn the outcome of any case.

So far, Attorney General Janet Reno said, prosecutors have identified 55 cases in which examiners might have committed errors serious enough to warrant advising defense lawyers of potentially exculpatory evidence. Of these, prosecutors have decided to turn over data to defense lawyers in 25 cases. In 13 of these cases that have gone to trial, Ms. Reno said, "there has been no change in the outcome of the case."

The Attorney General added, "Today's report does identify significant instances of testimonial errors, substandard analytical work and deficient practices." But she said the laboratory was capable of performing or providing "unbiased analyses that will help solve crimes, punish the guilty and exonerate the innocent."

The report contained a mixed review of the accuracy of Mr. Whitehurst's assertions. Mr. Bromwich said that many of Mr. Whitehurst's criticisms were confirmed but that his most sensational charges, including fabrication of evidence and perjury, was unsubstantiated.

A lawyer for Mr. Whitehurst, Stephen M. Kohn, maintained that Mr. Whitehurst's main charges had been sustained. "If you look at the report, it validates every major allegation he made," Mr. Kohn said, adding that the dismissal of Mr. Whitehurst's most sweeping assertions was unfair. "What they did is shoot the messenger," Mr. Kohn asserted.

Mr. Bromwich said an F.B.I. internal inquiry into some of Mr. Whitehurst's complaints in 1992 was a rapid effort that uncovered no wrongdoing because it failed to dig deeply enough to unearth problems when they were first reported.

Mr. Esposito said the bureau had accepted the criticism and was putting into effect each of the 40 recommendations, including the hiring of a scientist from outside the F.B.I. as a supervisor and instituting a number of organizational and procedural changes at the laboratory.

New Doubt Cast on Testing in Houston Police Crime Lab

By ADAM LIPTAK AND RALPH BLUMENTHAL; MAUREEN BALLEZA CONTRIBUTED REPORTING FOR THIS ARTICLE.

The police crime laboratory in Houston, already reeling from a scandal that has led to retesting of evidence in 360 cases, now faces a much larger crisis that could involve many thousands of cases over 25 years.

Six independent forensic scientists, in a report to be filed in a Houston state court today, said that a crime laboratory official -- because he either lacked basic knowledge of blood typing or gave false testimony -- helped convict an innocent man of rape in 1987.

The panel concluded that crime laboratory officials might have offered "similarly false and scientifically unsound" reports and testimony in other cases, and it called for a comprehensive audit spanning decades to re-examine the results of a broad array of rudimentary tests on blood, semen and other bodily fluids.

Elizabeth A. Johnson, a former director of the DNA laboratory at the Harris County medical examiner's office in Houston, said the task would be daunting.

"A conservative number would probably be 5,000 to 10,000 cases," Dr. Johnson said. "If you add in hair, it's off the board."

The official whose testimony was challenged, James Bolding, said in a telephone interview that he did not recall the particular case. But Mr. Bolding said that both his scientific work and his testimony were always careful and professional. When he testified in 1987, he was the supervisor of the laboratory's serology unit. He later became the head of its DNA unit.

His testimony helped convict George Rodriguez, who has served 17 years for raping a 14-year-old girl in 1987. DNA results have now cleared him, according to court-ordered testing, and the papers to be filed today will seek his release. As in many of the 146 DNA exonerations across the country, the new information also calls into question the scientific evidence used to convict Mr. Rodriguez in the first place.

A re-examination of the work by the Houston crime laboratory is already under way, but only of the DNA evidence used to convict people. That effort involves hundreds of cases and has produced a staggering workload, prosecutors in Houston say. One man has been exonerated, and significant problems have arisen in at least 40 cases.

The discovery of flawed work in the laboratory that led to the Rodriguez conviction would seem to require similar reviews of its work, legal experts said, but prosecutors would not immediately say what they will do or whether they will oppose Mr. Rodriguez's release.

Barry Scheck, one of Mr. Rodriguez's lawyers, said that Harris County was the worst place in America for a crime laboratory scandal.

"We know already that they couldn't do DNA testing properly," Mr. Scheck said. "Now we have a scandal that calls into question many thousands more cases. And this jurisdiction has produced more executions than any other county in America."

Since the death penalty was reinstated in 1976, Texas has executed 323 people, 73 for crimes in Harris County.

A state audit of the crime laboratory, completed in December 2002, has found that DNA technicians there misinterpreted data, were poorly trained and kept shoddy records. In many cases, the technicians used up all available evidence, making it impossible for defense experts to refute or verify their results. Even the laboratory's building was a mess, with a leaky roof contaminating evidence.

The DNA unit was shut down soon afterward, and it remains closed.

Police officers and prosecutors vowed to retest DNA evidence in every case where it was used to obtain a conviction. The size of that job, far smaller than the one called for by experts in the Rodriguez case, has involved many thousands of hours.

"It's massive," said Marie Munier, the assistant district attorney supervising the re-examinations. "If you had asked me when it happened would it take us over two years to complete this, I would have said: 'You're crazy. No way.'"

"Maybe if they'd gotten 50 or 100 people," she added, "they could have gotten it done faster."

Ms. Munier said retesting had resulted in one exoneration, that of Josiah Sutton, who was released last year after serving more than four years for a rape he did not commit.

Though DNA is often thought of as a tool for exonerations, prosecutors in Mr. Sutton's case had used it to convict him, submitting false scientific evidence asserting that there was a solid match between Mr. Sutton's DNA and that found at the crime scene. In fact, 1 of every 8 black people, including Mr. Sutton, shared the relevant DNA profile. More refined retesting cleared him.

Ms. Munier said her office had overseen retesting in 360 DNA cases so far. "In 18 cases, they were unable to confirm the original H.P.D. results," she said, referring to the Houston Police Department. "In 21 cases, I am told by H.P.D. that additional testing is in progress because the first tests did not confirm the original results. In six cases, the retests confirmed the original inclusion or exclusion, but the H.P.D.'s statistical analysis was off."

She said that defendants and their lawyers were being told of these results, and that they were free to file motions contesting their convictions.

That approach has critics.

"In Harris County," said William C. Thompson, a professor of criminology at the University of California, Irvine, who has followed the crime laboratory scandals closely, "defendants were prosecuted with flawed scientific evidence and defended by court-appointed lawyers who lacked the knowledge and resources to challenge it and complain about the injustice. Now that the scandal has come to light, the system is relying on the same inept, timid lawyers to make it right."

There were signs of problems in Mr. Rodriguez's case from the start.

On Feb. 24, 1987, two men abducted and raped a 14-year-old girl. One, Manuel Beltran, confessed. Mr. Beltran and his brother Uvaldo said the second rapist was Isidro Yanez. Mr. Yanez's car was used in the abduction. The victim selected Mr. Yanez and Mr. Rodriguez from photographs before identifying Mr. Rodriguez as the second rapist.

Mr. Rodriguez had an alibi: he was working at a factory that made bed frames at the time of the rape, and his boss swore to that in court.

So it was Mr. Bolding who provided the crucial testimony against Mr. Rodriguez. He said Mr. Yanez's blood type categorically excluded him as a possible rapist.

"Is he a possible donor of the semen?" a prosecutor, Bill Hawkins, asked at the trial, referring to Mr. Yanez.

"No, sir," Mr. Bolding responded, "he is not."

In his opening and closing statements, Mr. Hawkins hammered this point home. "Scientific evidence really nails this man to the wall," he said of Mr. Rodriguez. It "shows beyond a doubt that Isidro Yanez could not have committed the offense."

Yet recent court-ordered DNA testing shows that Mr. Yanez's DNA profile matches a pubic hair recovered at the crime scene.

Mr. Hawkins did not respond to a message seeking comment. Nor did Jack Roady, the prosecutor who has been supervising the retesting in the Rodriguez case, or Chuck Rosenthal, the Harris County district attorney. Through a prison spokeswoman, Mr. Yanez, who is serving time for kidnapping, declined a request for an interview.

Mr. Bolding's misstatement was fundamental and egregious, the experts' report said.

"There is absolutely no scientific basis for Bolding's testimony that Isidro Yanez could not have been the donor of the semen samples," the scientists wrote.

Dr. Johnson, the former DNA laboratory director, agreed. "That's kindergarten stuff," she said.

Mr. Bolding, speaking generally, said his conclusion was scientifically defensible. "You can have as many experts as you want," he said.

Mr. Rodriguez, now 43, said his 17 years behind bars had ruined his life and torn his family apart. He has four daughters and a son, though he has not seen anyone in his family for many years.

"My mom came to visit me a couple of times," he said in a telephone interview. "I'd say about four or five times since I been locked up. Of course, that was back in the early 90's."

Now, though, he said, he is growing optimistic.

"It feels good to me to know what's going on and to prove my innocence," he said.

Mr. Bolding retired in 2003 after police investigators recommended that he be terminated for various professional and supervisory failures, including submitting false information to auditors in 2000 and 2001.

Last month, a judge in Midland, Tex., dismissed perjury charges against Mr. Bolding, saying the statute of limitations had expired. In that case, Mr. Bolding was accused of overstating his academic credentials in a 2002 sexual assault trial. He said a court reporter had transcribed his testimony incorrectly.

Science Found Wanting in Nation's Crime Labs

By SOLOMON MOORE

Forensic evidence that has helped convict thousands of defendants for nearly a century is often the product of shoddy scientific practices that should be upgraded and standardized, according to accounts of a draft report by the nation's pre-eminent scientific research group.

The report by the National Academy of Sciences is to be released this month. People who have seen it say it is a sweeping critique of many forensic methods that the police and prosecutors rely on, including fingerprinting, firearms identification and analysis of bite marks, blood spatter, hair and handwriting.

The report says such analyses are often handled by poorly trained technicians who then exaggerate the accuracy of their methods in court. It concludes that Congress should create a federal agency to guarantee the independence of the field, which has been dominated by law enforcement agencies, say forensic professionals, scholars and scientists who have seen review copies of the study. Early reviewers said the report was still subject to change.

The result of a two-year review, the report follows a series of widely publicized crime laboratory failures, including the case of Brandon Mayfield, a lawyer from Portland, Ore., and Muslim convert who was wrongly arrested in the 2004 terrorist train bombing in Madrid that killed 191 people and wounded 2,000.

American examiners matched Mr. Mayfield's fingerprint to those found at the scene, although Spanish authorities eventually convinced the Federal Bureau of Investigation that its fingerprint identification methods were faulty. Mr. Mayfield was released, and the federal government settled with him for $2 million.

In 2005, Congress asked the National Academy to assess the state of the forensic techniques used in court proceedings. The report's findings are not binding, but they are expected to be highly influential.

and law professor at Arizona State University who presented fundamental weaknesses in forensic evidence to the academy. "But it will be used by others who will make law or will argue cases."

Legal experts expect that the report will give ammunition to defense lawyers seeking to discredit forensic procedures and expert witnesses in court. Lawyers could also use the findings in their attempts to overturn convictions based on spurious evidence. Judges are likely to use the findings to raise the bar for admissibility of certain types of forensic evidence and to rein in exaggerated expert testimony.

The report may also drive federal legislation if Congress adopts its recommendations. Senator Richard C. Shelby, Republican of Alabama, who has pushed for forensic reform, said, "My hope is that this report will provide an objective and unbiased perspective of the critical needs of our crime labs."

Forensics, which developed within law enforcement institutions — and have been mythologized on television shows from "Quincy, M.E." to "CSI: Miami" — suffers from a lack of independence, the report found.

The report's most controversial recommendation is the establishment of a federal agency to finance research and training and promote universal standards in forensic science, a discipline that spans anthropology, biology, chemistry, physics, medicine and law. The report also calls for tougher regulation of crime laboratories.

In an effort to mitigate law enforcement opposition to the report, which has already delayed its publication, the draft focuses on scientific shortcomings and policy changes that could improve forensics. It is largely silent on strictly legal issues to avoid overstepping its bounds.

Perhaps the most powerful example of the National Academy's prior influence on forensic science was a 2004 report discrediting the F.B.I. technique of matching the chemical signatures of lead in bullets at a crime scene to similar bullets possessed by a suspect. As a result, the agency had to notify hundreds of people who potentially had been wrongfully convicted.

In its current draft report, the National Academy wrote that the field suffered from a reliance on outmoded and untested theories by analysts who often have no background in science, statistics or other empirical disciplines.

Although it is not subject to significant criticism in the report, the advent of DNA profiling clearly set the agenda. DNA evidence is presented in less than 10 percent of all violent crimes but has revolutionized the entire science of forensics. While DNA testing has helped to free more than 200 wrongfully convicted people, "DNA was a shock to police culture and created an alternative scientific model, which promoted standardization, transparency and a higher level of precision," said Paul Giannelli, a forensic science expert at Case Western Reserve University School of Law who presented his research to the National Academy. Enforcement officials, Mr. Giannelli said, "chose to say they never make mistakes, but they have little scientific support, and this report could blow them out of the water."

Peter J. Neufeld, a co-director of the Innocence Project, a nonprofit group that uses DNA evidence to exonerate the wrongfully convicted, presented to the academy a study of trial transcripts of 137 convictions that were overturned by DNA evidence and found that 60 percent included false or misleading statements regarding blood, hair, bite mark, shoe print, soil, fiber and fingerprint analyses.

The courts have long struggled with the proper role of scientific evidence. In a 1993 landmark decision, Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, the Supreme Court held that scientific testimony had to meet an objective standard. Federal courts have occasionally excluded evidence like handwriting and hair analysis.

Donald Kennedy, a Stanford scientist who helped select the report's authors, said federal law enforcement agencies resented "intervention" of mainstream science — especially the National Academy — in the courts.

He said the National Institute of Justice, a research arm of the Justice Department, tried to derail the forensic study by refusing to finance it and demanding to review the findings before publication. A bipartisan vote in Congress in 2005 broke the impasse with a $1.5 million appropriation.

Mr. Shelby also accused the National Institute of Justice of trying to infiltrate the forensic study panel with lobbyists for private DNA analysis companies, who were seeking to limit the research to DNA studies.

The National Institute of Justice said it would not comment until the report was released. But a preview of potential turf wars played out in the presentations to the National Academy in December 2007. A forensic expert from the Secret Service blasted the F.B.I. for developing questionable techniques "on an ad-hoc basis, without proper research."

He said the Secret Service wanted the National Academy "to send a message to the entire forensic science community that this type of method development is not acceptable practice."

Everyone interviewed for this article agreed that the report would be a force of change in the forensics field.

One person who has reviewed the draft and who asked not to be identified because of promises to keep the contents confidential said: "I'm sure that every defense attorney in the country is waiting for this report to come out. There are going to be challenges to fingerprints and firearms evidence and the general lack of empirical grounding. It's going to be big."

Testimony on HB 9 before House Judiciary – February 25, 2009

My name is Sue Johnson and I am the Executive Director of the Alaskans Against the Death Penalty.

I became involved with this group when former Senator Robin Taylor tried to move legislation on this around 10 years ago. Since that time, I have donated money to AADP and attended occasional events. When they asked me to come and work for them a year ago, I accepted.

Since HB 9 was pre-filed and the article came out in the Daily News, our membership has grown exponentially. I am gaining a large number of new members every day.

The importance of personal education about the death penalty cannot be overstated. The more I learn about the DP, the more fascinated I am with it. At first I could not believe the unfairness in all aspects of the DP could be true in America. So, I conducted my own on-line research, read several books, and viewed a number of films, met with many exonerees, law enforcement officials, clergy, doctors, MVFM and others who had firsthand knowledge of the intricacies involved in the DP.

I read about former Governors of DP states who continue to be haunted by the people they killed and who said that was the absolute worst part of their job, politicians who regret having voted to support the death penalty especially when they later discovered they may have killed innocent people. I learned about states pouring millions of dollars in building a death house that was never used. If we are to pour millions of dollars in a death house in Alaska – I doubt it will be used and if it is it will be 25 years from now and we may have an entirely different group of lawmakers who will be stuck having to do the killing. So, after all that research, I've concluded that the DP is wrong for hundreds of reasons – many of which I am sure you will hear about through other testimony.

Alaskans Against the Death Penalty feels confident the majority of Alaskans supports our side of the issue and opposes the DP.

Finally, I would like to mention that I had a friend who was murdered by her husband after many years of torture and abuse and her body was tossed out in an Anchorage Park. She left 3 babies behind.

I sat through some of the trial hoping to lend support to her parents. Watching her parents go through the gory details of the murder of their only daughter tore my heart out. The man is in prison for life and the grandparents are raising the children. I never talked with her parents about the DP, but I remember thinking as much as I disliked this man, I was glad there was not a DP in this state because I am not sure her parents would be able to go through all those trials and hearings again and again as is apparently the norm in DP cases. Not to mention dealing with the press on this issue.

In closing, it the morality of this issue is not enough, cost issues in these economic times should persuade anyone still on the fence. Reliable data shows a state faces a far greater cost in litigating a DP case through all the appellate levels than even the cost of lifetime incarceration.

Thank you.

I am a board member of Alaskans Against the Death Penalty. I am a founding member of the World Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty. I have been a board member of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty since 1996, serving as chair from 2005-2008. I am a founding and present board member of Murder Victim's Families for Human Rights. I am a cofounder, President and Chairman of the board of the Journey of Hope...from Violence to Healing. I have written a book with the same name and I will be presenting a copy to this committee.

The Journey of Hope is an organization led by murder victim's family members who are opposed to the death penalty in all situations. We conduct speaking tours throughout the country and around the world. We share our stories of from violence to healing. We talk about how the death penalty has absolutely nothing to do with the healing that murder victim family members need after a loved one has been killed and how in fact it continues the cycle of violence and creates more murder victim family members.

On our tours we are joined by death row family member, some who have loved ones on death row, and some whose loved ones have been executed. They share with the audiences the pain that the death penalty brought to their family. Exonerated death row survivors also join us. They share what they and their families went through after being sentenced to death for crimes of murder for which they were innocent. Over 130 people have been sentenced to death by various states in this country since the death penalty was reinstated in 1976 for crimes they didn't commit. Fortunately they were able to prove their innocence before their executions took place.

Each one of them will tell you that they were not saved by the system; they were saved in spite of the system. As long as you have human beings making these decisions we are going to make mistakes. When it comes to the death penalty there is no room for mistakes.

My grandmother was brutally murdered in 1985 when four teenage girls entered her home on the pretext of taking Bible lessons that she taught. One of the girls, Paula Cooper who was fifteen-year-old at the time of the crime was sentenced to die in the electric chair by the state of Indiana. Although I originally supported her death sentence I became convinced that my grandmother would have been appalled that this girl was on death row and that so many people wanted to see her burn. I was convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that she would have in fact had love and compassion for Paula and her family.

I felt my grandmother wanted someone in my family to have that same sort of love and compassion and I felt it fell upon my shoulders. I didn't have any love or compassion for this girl, but so convinced that is what Nana would have wanted I begged my God to give me love and compassion for Paula Cooper and her family.

That prayer was answered, and when it was I knew I could no longer wanted her to die. You cannot have compassion for someone and want to see them put into the death chamber. It is impossible. The answer is not the death penalty; the answer is love and compassion for all of humanity.

Marietta Jaeger Lane, a Journey of Hope cofounder, made this statement concerning the kidnapping and murder of her precious seven-year-old daughter. "No amount of retaliatory deaths will make up for Susie's murder. To say the death of one malfunctioning individual will repay the inestimable value of my little girl is insulting. It's really an insult to our loved ones."

Chair Ramras and Committee Members,

I am writing to urge you not to support HB 9 which will be heard by the Judiciary Committee on Monday.

HB 9 is a death penalty bill. Killing criminals satisfies our desire for revenge. It serves no other purpose. My basic, emotional objection to the death penalty is that it is wrong to kill people. I simply do not want my government in the business of killing people or deciding which people are worthy of killing and which are not.

There are other, logical reasons to oppose the death penalty. First, it is a known fact that some people are wrongly convicted. It doesn't happen often, but it does occur more often than any one would like. Unfortunately, DNA evidence is not always available to prove innocence and there is no way to ensure that we will never kill an innocent person who has been wrongly convicted. Life in prison for an innocent person isn't a wonderful alternative, but it is better than death.

Second, the current method of administering lethal substances is not perfect, and occasionally has caused extreme pain, agony, and suffering. I don't want my government torturing anyone, not even a murderer.

Third, the cost of a death penalty prosecution is enormous. When a life is at stake, the defense spares no expense, and the prosecution must meet the challenge and also do its best. Since many of these cases will involve the Public Defender's Office, the State will be paying for both sides of a very expensive criminal case. It makes little sense to add this large financial burden on to the Public Defender and the District Attorney's offices.

Fourth, there are very few instances of people convicted of 1st degree murder being released (or escaping) from prison who go on to kill another person. When this happens, it is highlighted in the media, so it seems like it occurs more often, but it is truely very rare.

Fifth, there is no evidence that the existence of capital punishment deters murder. People who commit first degree murder don't think they are going to be caught, so they don't think about what the punishment might be if they are caught.

Capital punishment is emotionally satisfying for some people. But the measure of our justice is in how we treat the most reprehensible and evil people. Redemption and forgiveness should be available for all people, not just those who we like or who we can sympathise with. It is not our place to take that possibility away from anyone.

Thank you for your consideration.

Lindsey - I understand that the death penalty bill is coming to the Judiciary committee this week. Please take a hard stand against such a bill. I have always been proud of the fact that Alaska was a civilized place and did not engage in barbaric acts such as the death penalty. As the testing for such things as DNA evolves, we are having it clearly brought home that many times, innocent people are sent to jail and the death of even one of those innocents is too much to trade for a death penalty. It is a reprehensible bill - that the government thinks that it has the power to put people to death, for whatever reason. We have jails and we can keep people who kill there away from society and for society's protection. But who will protect the people of the society that thinks that it can adopt mores that continence the killing of others by the government itself? Please vote no and speak out to protest this barbaric bill. Thank you. Penny Zobel.

Dear Lindsey,

As one of your consituents, I wanted to write to express my intense opposition to the institution of the death penalty in Alaska. I am a lawyer and have worked on both state and federal death cases in other jurisdictions. My objections to the death penalty are multiple. First, I believe that the death penalty is morally wrong. Second, I agree with the ABA and the European Community that the death penalty is cruel and should not stand in a civilized society. Third, the possibility of error in the charging, trial, and sentencing process is all too great, which results in wrongful executions of innocent people. Finally, in this economic climate, the cost of capital punishment is too great for the state to bear. I urge you to reject any proposal that would bring the death penalty to our state.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dear Lindsey,

I believe you are correct that many people will be talking about the death penalty. I am writing to you this evening as a representative of Church Women United. At our last business meeting our members discussed several reasons we are against the death penalty. The two most common reasons being that we fear an innocent person may be but to death and that the death penalty is not a deterrent to violent crime.

With this facts in mind I respectfully request that you oppose any legislation that would bring the death penalty to Alaska.

Dear Rep. Holmes:

The death penalty does not deter capital crimes. It is much more expensive than life imprisonment. It is increasingly considered a violation of the International Declaration of Human Rights at the United Nations. The direction among the States of the US is away from the death penalty for many good reasons. One is that it has been disproportionately used against minorities. Of the 8 executions by federal authority in Alaska during the first half of the 20th Century, 2 were for Whites and the 6 others were for Alaska Natives and Blacks.

To legalize the death penalty in Alaska would be taking a giant step backwards. So may HB 9 and any other legislation of this kind quickly find the way to the trash bin (and the paper recycled).

Please take care when voting on the upcoming bill on capital punishment, HB 9.

In the past 35 years, 130 inmates were found to be innocent and released from death row. How Many Innocent Victims are Too Many?

The vast majority of those executed are poor. About 90% cannot afford a lawyer when they go to trial. They have to rely upon an over worked, under paid, court-appointed lawyer.

Relatively few other developed countries in the world impose the death penalty. Japan and South Korea are the only established democracies in the world, other than the U.S., which still conduct executions. The execution rate in Japan is a small fraction of that in the U.S.

The homicide rate in Canada has been gradually dropping since executions were stopped. Though it has never been convincingly proven that there is a relationship between the decrease in homicides and the cessation of the death penalty, this phenomenon has been observed in many other countries who have abandoned the death penalty.

Recent Cost Studies:

A 2003 legislative audit in Kansas found that the estimated cost of a death penalty case was 70% more than the cost of a comparable non-death penalty case. Death penalty case costs were counted through to execution (median cost $1.26 million). Non-death penalty case costs were counted through to the end of incarceration (median cost $740,000).

(December 2003 Survey by the Kansas Legislative Post Audit)

In Tennessee, death penalty trials cost an average of 48% more than the average cost of trials in which prosecutors seek life imprisonment.

(2004 Report from Tennessee Comptroller of the Treasury Office of Research)

In Maryland death penalty cases cost 3 times more than non-death penalty cases, or $3 million for a single case.

(Urban Institute, The Cost of the Death Penalty in Maryland, March 2008)

In California the current system costs $137 million per year; it would cost $11.5 million for a system without the death penalty.

The greatest costs associated with the death penalty occur prior to and during trial, not in post-conviction proceedings. Even if all post-conviction proceedings (appeals) were abolished, the death penalty would still be more expensive than alternative sentences.

The death penalty diverts resources from genuine crime control measures. Spending money on the death penalty system means:

Reducing the resources available for crime prevention, mental health treatment, education and rehabilitation, meaningful victims' services, and drug treatment programs.

Diverting it from existing components of the criminal justice system, such as prosecutions of drug crimes, domestic violence, and child abuse.

There are many matters to consider when deciding this particular issue. Please take all into consideration. In my opinion the financial factor cannot be ignored. In this time of economic uncertainty, it becomes more difficult to justify adding something so costly and controversial to our agenda. Please vote no on HB 9.

Hi, Representative Holmes. It's my understanding that HB 9 will be discussed this coming week and I would like to take this opportunity to express my concern about it to you, as my representative in the State House. As I'm sure you've noticed, we are in the middle (well, let's hope in the middle and not still in the beginning) of a recession and Representative Chenault wants to change the punishment of first degree murder to the death penalty, which is far more expensive than a life sentence. Although, there are some murderers who have committed crimes that are so heinous that I dread the idea of them ever being released from prison, I know that Alaska has a much longer average life sentence than the rest of the U.S. When I took criminology in 2003, the average life sentence in Alaska was 23 years, compared to the 7 year average life sentence nation wide. I'm not sure if that has changed at all in the past 6 years, but it's clear to me that in Alaska, we're pretty good about keeping people locked up a good long time and economically the death penalty is not a very good idea. It is much cheaper to keep a person in prison for 23 years or so than to pay for all the automatic appeals required with capital punishment. If it weren't so expensive, I might be okay with allowing the death penalty in Alaska as punishment for first degree murder, but it is extremely expensive and apparently there's no way to get around all those expensive appeals. From the quick skim I did of the HB 9, it seemed to allow capital punishment from crimes other than first degree murder, which I am not okay with at all. It's silly enough to demonstrate how wrong it is to kill people, by killing people. To give people a death sentence for assault and battery is just ridiculous. Please vote against HB 9 and encourage your fellow legislators to do the same, because this bill is not good for the state of Alaska. At best, it would just be a frivolous expense added to a shrinking budget. Thank you.

Testimony in Opposition to House Bill 9

I am opposed to HB 9 and I support holding a person who commits murder accountable for his or her actions. In many ways, the current legal punishment of life in prison is a more severe sentence because the period of suffering is long and intense.

I have conducted meditation sessions, as a volunteer, for a cumulative period of two years in the Lemon Creek Correctional Center and I can personally attest to the fact that imprisonment is an excruciatingly painful experience.

My objection to HB 9 is about whether certain specific acts of murder should result in another form of killing, a form of killing that is ritualized, sanitized and sanctioned through public policy.

I have heard people argue in favor of a death penalty by asking, "did the murderer have any sympathy for his/her victim?" My answer would be that the murderer may not have felt sympathy for the victim. HB 9 does not address an emotional issues such as sympathy. The issue HB 9 poses for me is one of, how do we treat one another so that our actions are aligned with values that will in turn support healthy communities?

HB 9 sends the wrong message in regards to people killing people. Opposition to HB 9 is about taking a stand against violence while holding individuals accountable for their actions.

I recently heard someone quote a statewide poll that indicated that 65% of Alaskan adults are opposed to capital punishment. The survey was not identified so it is not possible to evaluate the accuracy of such a poll but, intuitively this seems right. Most people are not comfortable with acts of killing whether it done through state sanction or by an individual.

The introduction of HB 9 asks us citizens to consider what kind of world do we want to create for ourselves. People found guilty of murder are punished according to the type of murder and aggravating and mitigating factors. Making a law to kill murderers is not going to undo the harm, will not support healthy human values, nor will such a law make us any safer.

Dear Representative Ramras,

As a State, Alaska has never had the death penalty, and we don't need it now.
As your constituent, I ask you not to support HB 9 which seeks to authorize capital punishment. This is a huge step backward into medieval punitive politics.
Capital punishment:
- does nothing to protect people from crime;
- seriously harms the survivors of homicide victims; and
- would cost Alaska far more than life imprisonment without release.
The administration of the death penalty is fraught with error and results in the conviction and execution of the innocent. In the past 35 years, 130 inmates were found to be innocent and released from death row. And, while DNA testing has exonerated a lot of prisoners locked up for crimes they didn't commit, it isn't a fail-safe that will prevent the innocent from being executed.

The United States remains the only advanced Western democracy that fails to recognize capital punishment as a profound human rights violation and as a frightening abuse of government power.

Perhaps there are people I or others believe "deserve to die for what they have done." But who other than God should make such a decision?? Let alone the government!

While our governmental employees do their best to do what is right, we all know the government makes mistakes. How and why would we empower the government to kill its own citizens? I just don't understand.
Other states are backing away from the death penalty because its implementation is so plagued with problems.
I also believe that lifetime imprisonment is a worse punishment than death, as the guilty has to live with their deeds everyday (death would be the easy way out). This also allows the state to release them should they later be found innocent - which is too often the case.

Representative Ramras:

While I applaud your efforts to alleviate shortages in western Alaska and to keep our wandering governor on task in Alaska, I am appalled by your co-sponsorship of HB 9 which would reinstate the death penalty in Alaska. It is inconceivable to me that when much of the world has recognized the barbarity and miscarriages of justice surrounding the death penalty, you are proposing that Alaska adopt such a penalty.

There are no winners in capital punishment executions and nothing is restored by the death of another human being. Killing another human being is simply inhumane and when it is sanctioned by the state, it diminishes us all.

A simple and obvious solution to Representative Chenault's concern that "People who commit the most monstrous of crimes will not have the opportunity to reoffend . . ." is to impose a sentence of "life in prison with no possibility of parole, medical, or compassionate release."

Chairman Ramras,

I'm contacting you in regards to House Bill 9, which would authorize capital punishment in Alaska. I am, like many Alaskans (and many Republicans who actually believe in limited government), vehemently opposed to the death penalty, and would be ashamed if my state were to re-institute state-sanctioned murder. It would be an incredible step backward.

The death penalty simply doesn't work and is often unfairly applied to racial minorities. Compound this with the reality that our criminal justice system is far from perfect, and you can understand my concerns. Too many people, even those condemned to die, have been wrongfully convicted. Further, prosecuting capital cases, and going through the necessary appeal process, is incredibly expensive. More so, the families of victims are denied closure for years, as the appeals process is exhausted. Finally, just look at the statistics: tates that regularly execute their residents tend to have higher murder rates than those that have moved beyond such archaic forms of "justice."

Killing someone - for killing someone - to demonstrate that killing is wrong, is asinine. Our justice system should not resort to blood lust. We deserve better than that.

Please do the right thing, and not shame our state.

RE: HB 9 The Death Penalty

I am opposed to the death penalty. I don't think killing another person is the right solution. That is also an easy way out for the criminal. More punishing would be life imprisonment without parole!

Knowing that there are many in prison who are not guilty, it would be possible later to free those wrongly convicted if they had not been put to death. In addition, it is difficult and expensive to actually get to the final stage where a death sentence is carried out.

I ask you not to pass HB 9 and instead use life without parole for the worst offenses.

RE: HB 9

I am Julia Smith, former Administrator of the Sitka Pioneers' Home. I live at 4775 Halibut Point Road, Sitka Alaska. As a thirty-year citizen of the State of Alaska, I have always been proud of our state in part because we prohibit capital punishment. I was very dismayed to learn that HB 9 is being considered to authorize capital punishment.

It is my believe that the cost of Capital punishment:

- does nothing to protect people from crime;
- seriously harms the survivors of homicide victims; and
- would cost Alaska far more than life imprisonment without release.

The administration of the death penalty is fraught with error and results in the conviction and execution of the innocent. In the past 35 years, 130 inmates were found to be innocent and released from death row. And, while DNA testing has exonerated a lot of prisoners locked up for crimes they didn't commit, it isn't a fail-safe that will prevent the innocent from being executed.

The United States remains the only advanced Western democracy that fails to recognize capital punishment as a profound human rights violation and as a frightening abuse of government power.

Thank you for allowing me to testify.

Dear Representatives,

I pray that you will oppose HB9, the Death Penalty bill. For the last twenty-five years that I've lived in Alaska, I was always so proud that we don't resort to state-sanctioned murder like they do in backward places like Mississippi and Alabama. Now I feel like something that set our state apart from others -- something that made me proud of this state and it's people -- is being flushed down the toilet.

Sure, there are a lot of ignorant, vicious people who would love nothing better than to pack a picnic basket and attend a public execution on a Sunday afternoon -- and I guess that's who this bill is supposed to satisfy -- but think about what you are getting into:

> How are you going to feel when you realize that legislation you've supported has resulted in the execution of an innocent person. This WILL happen. Won't you have their blood on your hands? How will you be able to sleep at night, knowing you opened this Pandora's box?
> How will we explain this to our kids??? I remember seeing the electric chair at the New Mexico state penitentiary when I was four. It shook me up for days and I lost a lot of trust in adults, knowing that they felt they had to resort to murder in order to prevent murder. Even a child can see that it's wrong.
> How does this square with what we want to become as a people? Who do you admire most? The Amish who practice radical forgiveness or the gang of brutes who threw a necktie party for Saddam Hussein....and the reason we killed Saddam was because he killed other people. Where does it all end?
> Think about the moral and emotional burden you are going to be placing on the people who actually have to conduct these executions. Are you personally willing to get involved in the actual process? If you aren't willing to do this personally, how can you, in good conscience, make this a condition of employment for some of the folks in the Department of Corrections.
> Even as a taxpayer, I object to this because it's more expensive to execute someone than it is to keep them behind bars.
> Last, capital punishment completely violates my Christian beliefs. By shutting down an execution of an adulteress, Christ taught us that there is a better way.

I appeal to the noble, high-minded reaches of your heart to turn your back on state-sanctioned murder! It may be very popular among certain constituencies but as our representatives, we rely on you to draw a distinction between what might be most popular and what is the right and proper thing to do. Please show some courage and oppose this bill....

Dear Rep. Ramras: We do not support the great State of Alaska sanctioning capitol punishment. The death penalty does nothing to reduce crime, does not comfort victims and families and is frankly barbaric. When a person is convicted of a crime to which the death penalty would be applied we should simply incarcerate that person for life and make that existence as difficult as possible.

Comments on House bill 9

On February 24, 2003 at 4:44am I received a phone call informing me of a problem at my Sister in laws home. I got dressed and arrived at the Wrangell Police dept a few minutes later.
The events of the day have changed my families' life for ever. My Sister in Law Sheryl Nelson 43Yrs, my niece Adriane Nore 24yrs, and my niece Shandelle Nelson 19yrs had all been murdered. The gunman had committed suicide.
One cannot fathom the emotions and turmoil that one goes through when faced with a tragic event as overwhelming as this was to us. It not only sent shock waves to our family members, but also to the City of Wrangell as a whole. News media invaded our town as this became a state wide event.
In a town of some 2000 people there was 1500 that attended the Funeral Services. The Episcopal Bishop of Alaska came to Wrangell from Fairbanks to officiate and all Wrangell Churches helped in the proceedings.
I am a God fearing man and I believe that a power greater than all of us will have the final judgment, but I also believe we in our human frailties need to build safe guards for society. I do not envy you your task at hand but feel you need information from a family that has experienced such an event.
I look at the death penalty as a deterrent, and do not feel that housing a person for the remainder of there natural lives are doing fair justice to society. We need deterrents such as this (especially for our first responders) to help in some way to protect them in the execution of their duties. I thank you for having this bill brought forward and encourage you to reinstate this penalty.
Please remember that murder will affect the remaining family members for the remainder of their lives.

Respectfully Submitted

Dear Representative Ramras,

As a State, Alaska has never had the death penalty, and we don't need it now.

As your constituent, I ask you to strongly oppose HB 9 which seeks to authorize capital punishment.
Perhaps there are people I or others believe "deserve to die for what they have done." But who other than God should make such a decision?? Let alone the government!

While our governmental employees do their best to do what is right, we all know the government makes mistakes. How and why would we empower the government to kill its own citizens? I just don't understand.
Other states are backing away from the death penalty because its implementation is so plagued with problems.
I also believe that lifetime imprisonment is a worse punishment than death, as the guilty has to live with their deeds everyday (death would be the easy way out). This also allows the state to release them should they later be found innocent - which is too often the case.

The administration of the death penalty is fraught with error and results in the conviction and execution of the innocent. In the past 35 years, 130 inmates were found to be innocent and released from death row. Representative Ramras,

My name is Yael Hickok. I am a registered voter in Anchorage and I am strongly against HB-9. I am totally against the idea of my government getting into the business of killing. I recognize there are horrible offenses committed by some very disturbed individuals, and I do not want my state leaders doing the same thing. A lifetime sentence is the responsible and appropriate choice for criminals who cannot be rehabilitated. Capital punishment trials are far too lengthy and costly for our over-burdened judicial system, and they do not serve as a deterrent. What criminal would actually stop their crime because they think capital punishment might await them versus a life sentence?! And as we all know our judicial system is not perfect. Juries make mistakes, and offenders with more money or influence can sometimes have an advantage. So why set up a punishment is not reversible; that cannot be re-examined later with new evidence? Please vote no on HB-9. Thank you for your service, and your time in reading my letter.

Subject: House Bill 9

Dear Representatives of the Judicial Committee:

I am writing you to voice my opposition to House Bill 9 and urge you to vote "NO" on that bill as it stands before you. I have always been proud that Alaska has been free of the death penalty since before we were a state, and I believe that the moral and financial stakes are far too high to backtrack now.

As you have probably heard by now, Colorado, Kansas, Maryland, Montana, New Hampshire, Nebraska, and New Mexico are actively looking to abolish their death penalty systems, primarily due to the high cost of operating such a system in this faltering economic climate. Most of the estimates I have seen claim that killing someone on behalf of the state costs 14-21 times the amount of money that would be spent to keep someone in prison and attempt to rehabilitate them or to house them for the remainder of their life. As a state reintroducing the death penalty, we would also have to look at the costs of creating a death penalty infrastructure that we do not have. In this faltering economic climate, with falling oil prices, a hiring freeze in place for most SOA positions, and our government trying to hash out what programs we are going to be able to afford and what needs to be cut, introducing a program that is more costly than our current system is fiscally irresponsible at best and financially catastrophic at worst.

The moral cost is far higher. Nationwide, scores of people have been executed for crimes they have not committed, and they have only been exonerated posthumously. Forensic science is not perfect; like any other human pursuit, there is always a margin of error, and I don't feel that death penalty cases are a gamble we can take. The National Academy of Sciences just released a study last Wednesday calling for a total overhaul of the nation's crime labs, citing the wide variation in quality of practice for tests that many cases hang on, and which judges and jurors have often believed to be infallible. Not only is someone's innocence or guilt on the line, their very life hangs in the balance. If we make a mistake in incarcerating them, we can't give them back the years we took, but we can give them their freedom and make restitution. If we make a mistake in executing someone, we can never give them their life back. Beyond any of these faults in the system, how can we possibly claim the moral high ground and say killing is wrong if we turn kill ourselves? If someone stabs another person, we do not stab them; we put them in jail for a certain period of time, attempt to rehabilitate them, and they pay restitution. If someone steals, we do not steal from them; we put them in jail for a certain period of time, attempt to rehabilitate them, and they pay restitution. If someone rapes another person, we do not rape them; we put them in jail for a certain period of time, attempt to rehabilitate them, and they pay restitution. Why should murder be any different in this way? It is a crime, but it should punished as any other crime: put them in jail for a certain period of time, attempt to rehabilitate them, and they pay restitution.

Killing a murderer corrects very little; we as a society cannot obviously rehabilitate a corpse, and it does not bring the victims back. Some families may feel a sense of relief knowing the person who took their loved one's life is also dead, but some families have also come forward to say that did not receive the relief they were expecting from the death of a killer, or that they don't wish anyone to die - not even the killer of a loved one. Through incarceration, we at least have a chance at helping the criminal become a contrite and contributing member of society.

Reinstating the death penalty is little more than reinstating revenge killing. As a just society, we cannot make our decisions based on feelings of anger and revenge on behalf of the few. Killing in the name of society is not the kind of justice I want to see in my home state. Please vote "NO" on House Bill 9.

Sincerely,

Richard James Morrison

Subject: The Thoughts and Concerns of a Lifelong Alaskan

Hello,

I hope this email is read. I am afraid that each of you will simply delete it the moment you see that it isn't something "truly" urgent or even important. I can only hope you have more ethical integrity than that.

I value human life -- all human life. This value is an integral part of what our country stands for. I never thought I would see the day that my home state, my favorite state in the country, might begin to question this value. It has been mentioned in the ADN's coverage of the proposal to reinstate the death penalty that no one actually expects it to go through, but that it is part of a plan to change the values of Alaskans. Why do we want this? I am all for conversation, so please, those of you who support capital punishment, begin a dialog with me. I know you are all very busy and maybe you don't have time (or don't care enough) to engage in a conversation with every person in Alaska on your beliefs. But I want to know why. If you have good reasons for wanting Alaskans to support the death penalty, please do share. All I ask in return is that you consider and respond to my response to your reasons.

I am not alone in feeling sickened at the idea that killing a person is ever the right course of action. You may gain a lot of insight into the perspectives of most Alaskans through a conversation with me. This can only be a good thing for a representative, I hope.

Please give this issue some serious, soul-searching thought,

Lindsey Meyn

I am testifying today to oppose HB 9, the bill to reinstate the death penalty in Alaska. I cannot understand why in these times you would introduce this legislation except for your own political interests. Numerous studies have shown that the death penalty has been used to unfairly against non-whites, that it costs more to administer and that it turns government which exists for public safety into a public executioner. See, e.g. http://justice.uaa.alaska.edu/death/alaska.html; http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/FactSheet.pdf.

Even you -- Rep. Chenault admit that the death penalty does not act as a deterrent. http://www.iht.com/articles/ap/2009/02/24/america/NA-US-Death-Penalty-Alaska.php. I strongly urge you to drop pursuit of this legislation and use your time and skills for legislation that would best help Alaskans.

Members of House Judiciary Committee

Thank you for this opportunity to add my voice of dismay. Alaska is a leader. New Mexico, Montana and Maryland are working to join us; New Jersey decided last year to become death penalty free.

Chair Ramras is correct: there are many more critical, crucial and pressing matters for which your time and expertise are sorely needed this legislative session. I am puzzled by those who do not trust government with our personal matters who say they are willing to allow government to kill its own citizens!

Many others have provided studies, data and personal stories. I was taught not to kill, not to hit in anger and to work (and it is work) for understanding.

I ask that you hold this bill in your committee as Alaska needs to remain death penalty free.

The Honorable Jay Ramras, Chair

Dear Representative Ramras:

I am writing in advance of testifying on HB 9—a bill authorizing capital punishment here in Alaska. The primary reason I am against the death penalty is because it is simply unnecessary and unjustified in a civilized society. The government should not be in the business of deciding who is to live and who is to die. In your own testimony (as reported in the Anchorage Daily News) you expressed your own belief that capital punishment was not a deterrent to crime. I share that belief. If deterrence is not the reason for reinstituting the death penalty, then we must carefully examine the rationale for taking this action. To think that we can protect human life by taking it is an illusion and an argument that is without merit.

For over 30 years, the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, (the national organization for Catholic bishops in the United States) has taught that our nation should forgo the use of the death penalty for four reasons:

- The sanction of death, when it is not necessary to protect society, violates respect for human life and dignity;
- State-sanctioned killing in our names diminishes all of us;
- Its application is deeply flawed and can be irreversibly wrong, is prone to errors, and is biased by factors such as race, the quality of legal representation, and where the crime was committed;
- We have other ways to punish criminals and protect society.

Regarding the first and last point, in the United States where many of our jails have become "high tech" there is no longer a need to put someone to death to protect society. Those who have committed heinous crimes can serve a life sentence without parole in an environment that ensures the safety of those around them. I have been assured that in Alaska we have jails (and are building a new jail that will have) the capability of segregating offenders to ensure they serve out a life sentence for their crime without the possibility of harming others again. No matter how heinous the crime, if society can protect itself without ending a human life, it should do so. We have other ways to punish criminals.

In Alaska a large percentage of the population does not support the death penalty. I have serious concerns about violating the conscience of people that might be called on to perform the act. Our US Supreme Court in its decisions has held that all jurors who sit in judgment on a federal death penalty case must agree prior to being seated on a jury that they have no objection to the death penalty. While Alaska's law would need to conform to Supreme Court precedent, it does not allow for others to be released from having to carry out the jobs associated with the death penalty, including the Commissioner of Corrections, correctional employees and medical personnel. I can not support a law that requires people who believe in the sanctity of life to be placed in a position violating their conscience because of their chosen career path.

My final concern is the demographic that traditionally become victims of the death penalty. The people most likely subjected to the death penalty are the poor and marginalized in our society and people who are unable to afford good legal representation. Prior to the death penalty being outlawed in the territory of Alaska, fifteen men were put to death either under territorial laws or under what were known as "miner's laws". Of these, seven were Alaska natives, two were identified as black, three were Caucasian and two were of unknown race. These statistics should concern us all. Fundamental fairness ought to cause us to consider the uneven and perhaps biased manner in which capital punishment has been applied.

In these reflections, I have not addressed particular elements of the proposed legislation several of which are seriously flawed. For example, section 12.58.320 (b) relating to a pregnant woman on death row. Stating in unclear language that the pregnant mother will not be executed prior to the end of the pregnancy leaves the option open to pressure the woman to have an abortion thus creating a double rather than single execution. The horror of a child growing up and living its life knowing its birth was the occasion of his mother's execution is hard to imagine.

Rather than promoting a culture of death in Alaska, we should focus our energy on promoting ways to respond to violent crimes that act out of justice for everyone. We should work to find ways to protect society and hold accountable the truly guilty in a way that reflects our society's best values. The death penalty simply does not do this. Its application makes us all complicit in the death of another human being and in the process cheapens the sacredness of all human life.

Thank you for your time and consideration of my position.

Sincerely yours in Christ and Mary,

Dear Representative Ramras; I cannot express strongly enough my opposition to the in-statement of the Death Penalty here in Alaska. I am shocked and concerned that you would be supporting such an endeavor.The Death Penalty is an outdated, inhumane, and particularly uncivilized method of dealing with offenders, and has no place in our State.It does not reduce crime.The United States is to my knowledge the only modern industrialized nation that retains this onerous penalty and it should be to our embarrassment that we do. Fortunately most States have seen fit to do away with this aberration, not wanting to find themselves on equal footing with countries like Iran, Sudan and China.We should not be defiling ourselves by joining those that have not.
As an Indigenous person I am well aware of the racial inequities that exist in our State's justice system. It chills my blood to think that this system, already so poorly balanced, might ever have the power to impose the ultimate penalty of death on anyone who must pass through it.
I hope and pray that you will reconsider your support for House Bill 9.

Dear Members,

I have been a resident of Alaska for 34 years and a Licensed Marriage and Family therapist in private practice here in Juneau. I have been employed by numerous social service agencies and have also worked under contract.

There are many reasons that I am happy to live in this state and, especially, in this city. I consider it was an enlightened move when Alaska abolished the death penalty. Why any legislator would choose to reverse this action five decades afterwards is not rational. Not a deterrant. Not financially responsible. And, I believe, morally reprehensible.

I want to describe some of my own experience relating to the state prison system. In 1985 I wrote a grant proposal and developed the Substance Abuse Treatment Program at Lemon Creek Correctional Center here in Juneau. I facilitated the education classes and conducted both individual and group therapy sessions for inmates in this maximum security prison. At that time, Lemon Creek was the only facility in the State for those convicted of the most serious and violent crimes — rapes, assaults, armed robbery, murders.

Sometimes I felt uneasy leading a group in a distant room near the gymnasium, with no staff oversight or ability to call for help. But I was never threatened and actually had more hostility and obstructive behavior directed at me from guards who believed that prisons were for punishment only. They resented and interfered with college teachers, counselors and even chaplains. The idea of rehabilitation was generally scorned. I was disturbed by this attitude.

Also disturbing was the disproportionate numbers of Alaska Native inmates. Though the population statewide was about 17 percent, it was about 40% at this penal institution. I heard many devestating personal stories, especially from persons from the more remote villages. One young man, aged 24, told of being responsible for the care of his six brothers and sisters, at the age of twelve. His father had died in a snowmobile accident while under the influence and his mother was an alcoholic and wasn't at home for the children. He scrounged for food. Another man described his inability to attend school because of the demands and beatings by both his mother and father who drank excessively and fought all the time. Alcohol seemed to have played a part in most of the offenses committed.

Some inmates in my program had sentences so long they had no anticipation of being released within their lifetime. This prison was so far away from home village and family that they never had any visitors either. If they were deemed too dangerous to return to the "Street", life sentence without parole would certainly protect the public.

At any rate, the Substance Abuse Treatment Program seemed to offer them a welcome break in an otherwise dismal routine and they were active participants. Work in the kitchen or an opportunity to make furniture or grow plants was earned by a lucky few.

As a family counselor, I have worked with residents from Halfway Houses, co-led mens' Anger Management groups, both in-patient and out-patient substance abuse clients, counseled both victims and perpetrators of domestic violence, young people who have dropped-out or run away from dysfunctional family systems. There is a great unmet need for additional funding for educational and social services, for both preventive programs and rehabilitation programs.

Alaska should fund more in-state facilities and programs. The money it would take to construct new buildings, staff and train additional correction officers and establish many more public defenders to provide for reinstatements of the death penalty could be directed toward a much more effective community health and safety expenditure of public funds.

I urge you to kill House Bill No. 9 — not human beings.

Yours sincerely,
Dixie A. Hood

Dear Rep. Ramras:

The death penalty does not deter capital crimes. It is much more expensive than life imprisonment. It is increasingly considered a violation of the International Declaration of Human Rights at the United Nations. The direction among the States of the US is away from the death penalty for many good reasons. One is that it has been disproportionately used against minorities. Of the 8 executions by federal authority in Alaska during the first half of the 20th Century,
2 were for Whites and the 6 others were for Alaska Natives and Blacks.

To legalize the death penalty in Alaska would be taking a giant step backwards. So may HB 9 and any other legislation of this kind quickly find the way to the trash bin (and the paper recycled).

Subject: HB #9

Hello Mr. Ramras,
I am an MSW student at UAA taking a social policy course. An assisgnment this semester is to choose a bill and follow it through the legislative process. I have selected a bill you are sponsoring, HB # 9 " An act relating to murder; authorizing capital punishment, classifying murder in the first degree for certain murders; establishing sentencing procedures for capital felonies; and amending Rules 32, 32.1, 32.3, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, and Rules 204, 209, 210, and 212, Alaska Rules of Apellate procedure."

I would be interested in receiving correspondence from you regarding this bill. I understand that Senator Robin Taylor tried unsuccessfully to get a vote to bring back the death penalty in 1997 and I would like to know what you feel may have changed in our state that would lead you to believe this bill might be more successful in 2009. I would also be interested in understanding if you feel the death penalty is a deterrant to murder and other serious offenses.

I do not support this bill for the following reasons:

No violent criminal put in prison for the rest of his life has ever re-offended outside prison walls again either.

The death penalty does not dissuade the irrational from committing crimes.

The death penalty costs society more than life imprisonment.

The death penalty has resulted in the death of those innocent of the crimes they have been accused of.

The death penalty is an act of violence that perpetuates violence in society.

We don't need it. It's a bad idea.

My name is Jim Betts, I am a resident of Alaska, a Catholic and a Knight of Columbus, an organization of over 1.8 million men with 1800 members in Alaska. As Advocate for the Alaska State Council of The Knights of Columbus I wish to have my feelings and those of this great organization heard today. Together with the Knights of Columbus, I am opposed to the passage of House Bill 9.

Perhaps it is good that Representatives Chenault and Ramras have brought forward House Bill 9 imposing the death penalty for certain offenses in the State of Alaska. Through this process, the voice of the people of Alaska will again be heard in an overwhelming response to reject capital punishment; the imposition of death by lethal injection. Let us bury only one item in this procedure today. Bury this bill, not another body. There has been only one death to save the lives of others that I can recall and Jesus is definitely among us here today.

House Bill 9 must be defeated. It should not even leave the House Judicial or Finance Committee hearing rooms. Remember that we are an evolving creation, that we, as humans, are mandated to improve, not diminish the human condition. The idea that we might deprive another human of their life as a quid pro quo; i.e. "an eye for an eye" is an old and untenable cliché. The idea that the death penalty is a deterrent; we are not convinced. We must not live in a "Culture of Death" where we create another wrong if we execute one person who may be innocent

We have alternatives. Life imprisonment without the possibility of parole speaks volumes to the journey we have made from crude logic, barbarism, and brutality. Let us evolve our actions, set the bar of human response above the base of animal instinct, to leave the cruelty with the neoliths and move to a world where we turn our cheeks to knee jerk punishment solutions.

Now is the time to be heard, unabashed, certain and resolved that life in any form is to be cherished. Life is precious from the womb to the tomb and as such we turn away from the "Culture of Death" and create instead a "Culture of Life". Death and death alone will be the time for final reckoning. All humans will reconcile with God and that judgment is His and His alone.

Sincerely,

James C. Betts

Dear Rep. Ramras

As an Alaskan resident and taxpayer, I strongly oppose HB 9 and the reinstatement of the death penalty in Alaska.

There is no good argument for the death penalty, and many good ones against it. Life imprisonment is less costly to the taxpayer than execution with all its attendant appeals, and reversible if the convicted person is later found to be innocent. Execution, on the other hand, lowers each and every member of the citizenry to the inhumane level of criminals who commit heinous acts against their fellow humans.

I urge your opposition to this proposed legislation which will smear Alaska's reputation in the rest of the civilized world. We Alaskans are better than this!

The death penalty

Saving lives and money

Mar 12th 2009 | NEW YORK
From The Economist print edition

States plagued by fiscal woes rethink their stance on the death penalty

AN EYE for an eye, or at any rate a death for a death, is the type of justice that most states still embrace. Only 14 of the 50 states have banned capital punishment. But that may change with the recession. As state governments confront huge budget deficits, eight more states have proposed an unusual measure to cut costs: eliminate the death penalty.

The states considering abolition, including Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico and New Hampshire, have shifted the debate about capital punishment, at least in part, from morality to cost. Studies show that administering the death penalty is even more expensive than keeping someone in prison for life. The intensive jury selection, trials and appeals required in capital cases can take over a decade and run up a huge tab for the state. Death row, where prisoners facing execution are kept in separate cells under intense observation, is also immensely costly.

A recent study by the Urban Institute, a think-tank, estimates that the death penalty cost Maryland's taxpayers $186m between 1978 and 1999. According to the report, a case resulting in a death sentence cost $3m, almost $2m more than when the death penalty was not sought.

In an age of austerity, every million dollars counts. Proponents of the abolition bills describe the death penalty as an expensive programme with few benefits. There is little evidence that the death penalty deters. In fact, some of the states that most avidly execute prisoners, such as Texas and Oklahoma, have higher crime rates than states that offer only life in prison without parole. There is also the danger that innocent people may be put to death. So far, more than 130 people who had been sentenced to death have been exonerated.

Colorado, one of the states that has introduced a bill to overturn the death penalty, intends to spend the money it will save each year by eliminating capital punishment on an investigations unit. According to Paul Weissman, the state House majority leader and the bill's co-sponsor, around 1,400 murders are still unsolved in the state. Eliminating the death penalty will finance the new unit and leave an extra $1m for other state programmes. Other states are trying to free up funding to help offset their huge deficits. Savings from abolishing the death penalty in Kansas, for example, are estimated at $500,000 for every case in which the death penalty is not sought.

Many other states, including Texas, which last year carried out almost half of all executions in America, have no plans to follow suit. But a prolonged recession may change a few Texan minds.

Thank you for your kind remarks during today's hearing on HB 9. You asked a question about something, and I answered that I didn't know. That demonstrates that I am rusty at giving testimony! I actually believe I do know, even though as I said, I am not an attorney. You asked how it can be that an dangerous offender can get an appeal for a sentence modification downward, and yet I don't support the strongest measure, the death penalty.

I think I was on the right track in the answer I gave, but it was incomplete. I said something to the effect that the laws are very narrow in who, and under what circumstances an offender might qualify for a sentence modification hearing...that the laws are so narrow, in fact that there are death row offenders in other states who have been proven innocent by DNA test, and yet they remain incarcerated because there is no mechanism to get them to a sentence review hearing. (In fact the laws are quite different from state to state on the ways to get back into court after having been found guilty and sentenced to whatever.)

On the larger scale, it occurs to me after the fact of the hearing of course: the US system of justice is based upon presumption of innocence - on the rights of the accused to have a fair trial ---on the right to confront accusers --that the STATE is on the hook to prove guilt, and the accused presents defense to that accusation. Not the other way around. All that because, the founding fathers were acutely aware of how the law could be used against innocents and how out of proportion sanctions sometimes were for those found guilty, innocent or not really so innocent---so, they built the system to provide strong protections for the accused. Tie goes to the runner.

Had to get this off my chest - thanks for reading, and thanks again for a nicely run hearing.

RE: OPPOSE HB 9
(INTRODUCTION OF THE DEATH PENALTY IN ALASKA)

Dear Members of the House Judiciary Committee:

I appreciate that these epistles are best kept to a paragraph or two, but because HB 9 would put state government in the business of killing its citizens, I beg your greater indulgence.

I have been practicing law throughout Alaska, but primarily in Anchorage, for approximately 33 years. I am an Alaska charter member of the American Board of Trial Advocates, as well as a former and future president of that organization. I am currently a member of the board of the Alaska Association for Justice, formerly a president of that organization, and formerly one of its two delegates to the American Association for Justice Board of Governors. I am admitted to all the state and federal courts in Alaska, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and to practice before the United States Supreme Court. In 2002, I received the Alaska Bar Association's Professionalism Award. I have prosecuted misdemeanor criminal cases for Yakima County, Washington, as an intern decades ago, and I have defended and tried dozens of criminal cases as a private attorney in the first three or four years of my practice. I have a deep and boundless admiration for our legal system and the role it plays in making America the greatest country in the history of the human race. The foregoing "resume" is only offered to support that I have an equally deep and broad appreciation for our system's imperfections. I also want to make it clear that my opinions in this letter are my own. They are not made on behalf of other organizations. Nor do I have a dog in this fight. I am not personally charged with an offense of any kind, let alone one that would qualify me for the death penalty if this bill were adopted. I am not representing anyone in those unfortunate circumstances, nor do I have any relatives or friends subject to such charges, or likely to be in the future. I have not defended a criminal case in three decades.

Statutes are rules applicable to our society. Rules, themselves, are notions of general application. Please keep this trite, but very important, concept in mind as you read the paragraphs that follow and consider this bill. Once we establish the rule, that a certain class of offense is entitled to the death penalty, that rule will be enforced where there is absolutely no moral doubt about a defendant's guilt, just as it will be enforced where there is a very high level of doubt about a defendant's guilt. This is exactly why we see so many cases of "actual innocence." These, as you know, are those cases where defendants convicted of capital offenses ultimately are able to prove to a scientific and moral certainty that they were innocent of the crime for which they were convicted.

I note that Sections 14 and 15 of the bill appear to be "the guts" of the matter. Section 14 would allow the imposition of the death penalty applying no more than "the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof" at sentencing. I respectfully suggest that this standard, by itself, invites the sort of errors that have left morally blameless men and women to the helplessness and hopelessness of death row, and, ultimately, to their unjust execution in those states in America that retain this unfortunate vestige of Old Testament philosophy.

If we fail to learn from history, we will be doomed to repeat it. America's love affair with the death penalty, viewed from hindsight, teaches us that:

1. The remedy is horrifically expensive in terms of dollars of cents.

2. The remedy is horrifically expensive in terms of the personal and psychological costs to those employees of the government whose curse it is to carry out this remedy.

3. The remedy has invariably been inflicted disproportionally on minority cultures and races.

4. The remedy has invariably resulted in the innocent being put to death.

As long as we have a system of justice run by people, human imperfection will, as the night follows the day, assure that the problems I have outlined above will visit themselves on our state should it adopt this ill-considered measure. I want to make it clear that I do not doubt the good faith, or commitment to good public policy, of this bill's sponsors. I only ask that they seriously reconsider their position. This debate may be valuable, but this bill will be a self-inflicted wound for our state.

I strongly urge each of you, including the bill's sponsors, to oppose this bill.

Yours very truly,

Rep. Jay Ramras, House Judiciary Committee

Dear Rep. Ramras:

I am strongly opposed to HR9. The judicial system is not perfect. The innocent are sometimes convicted. How many executions of innocent people are we willing to accept as a reasonable price for the questionable benefits of killing some prisoners?

When I was a girl, a young woman in a nearby town was raped and murdered. Two brothers were charged with the crime. They never stopped maintaining their innocence right up until their execution. Several years later another man confessed to the crime. Not much comfort to their mother.

In Texas a man on death row was cleared by DNA evidence. The Attorney General decreed that this man was to be executed anyway because he had been legally convicted. Gov. Richards fired the A.G. This man's life was spared not by the evidence, but by the good sense of the governor. What if someone else had been governor?

DNA evidence has resulted in convictions of men on death row being overturned. How many men did DNA evidence come too late for?

We cannot know what new techniques will be developed that will result in more accurate legal findings. We must not kill people who might eventually establish their innocence.

I have a friend whose son was charged with murder. She knew he was innocent because they were together in her car and out of town at the time. She was not allowed to testify for him because in Utah a mother is not allowed to testify for her child (or wasn't at that time). She was told, "We're going to convict him and we're going to execute him." Fortunately, more evidence surfaced and he was released. My friend has suffered from heart trouble ever since.

No one is safe from a false accusation. Let us not be killing people in order to hide judicial errors.

Then there are the overly ambitious prosecutors, who care only about winning. Not many perhaps, but just one is too many. Live people can be released.

Please do not allow our Alaska to degenerate to the level of Texas and Utah.

Sincerely,

Sera Baxter

Re: H.B. 9 (regarding the death penalty)

Please oppose moving H.B. 9 out of the Judiciary committee.

Society can now protect against perpetrators of heinous crimes by utilizing life imprisonment. Killing criminals when not necessary diminishes respect for human life, which adversely affects all members of society.

A significant percentage of those executed have been later proven to be innocent, a terrible tragedy. Thomas Jefferson ~~who~~ said he would rather 100 men go free than have one be executed who was innocent.

There is no credible evidence that killing criminals by execution deters crime. In fact, it perpetuates violence as a way of life.

Statistics concerning higher percentages of minorities receiving the death penalty are troubling and suggest injustice in the application of the system.

It is questionable whether the death penalty saves society any money, since executions themselves involve enormous expense in legal defenses.

Thank you for your consideration.

Dear Alaskan Legislator:

I am an Alaskan resident of nearly 30 years. We raised our boys here, worked in the public service sector, and donated our money to help make this a better, kinder place to live.

House Bill 9—a bill authorizing capital punishment—is a move in the wrong direction for us Alaskans. This proposed LAW is anything but a legal regulation for this state. Over and over the material I read about capital punishment states that it will not deter any one or any action. Yes, I know that the violence in our home town has seen periods of increase; but adopting a violent response is never a thoughtful and just move. For government body to approve killing criminals is just another addition to the culture of death that exists today.

How many times over the last five years have we fans of NPR heard a story about a death-row convict being released from prison after a legal group championed his/her story and followed up with the newest technical research and discovered innocence? I strongly refuse to be a part of any legislative action that would seek to take another person's life.

Besides all this, we have other ways to punish criminals and protect society.

I urge you, a dedicated public servant, to work to find ways to hold accountable the truly guilty in a way that reflects our state's and our society's best values.

Subject: John Novak's testimony was misleading

Dear Sue:

I was present at the Legislative Information Office in Anchorage on Monday, March 2, 2009, and heard John Novak testify that the death penalty should be reinstated because it would protect innocent people from being murdered by people who had already been imprisoned for murder, and who then killed again. Mr. Novak cited to the cases of Raymond Cheely and Douglas Gustafson, and to the case of Carl Abuhl, to support his argument.

Cheely and Gustafson were two young men who killed a motorist on the Glenn Highway, and then, after trial, killed the father of a man who testified against them, with a mail bomb. Carl Abuhl was a man who beat his roommate to death, and then, after his trial, killed a cellmate in prison.

Mr. Novak implied that, if these people had been sentenced to death the first time around, they could not have killed again.

What Mr. Novak failed to mention is that neither Cheely nor Gustafson nor Abuhl had been convicted of first-degree murder for their initial crime. Cheely, Gustafson, and Abuhl were each charged with and tried on first-degree murder. In each of those cases, however, the defendants were found not guilty by the jury of first-degree murder, and were convicted instead of second-degree murder. Alaska jurors, sitting in long and hard cases, made these decisions.

Thus, even if Alaska had had a death penalty at the time of their trial, none of them could have received it, and thus the public would have been no safer that it was without the death penalty. Mr. Novak never mentioned that these men had not been convicted of first-degree murder, so far as I recall.

The death penalty is such an important matter that it is imperative to understand what it is – and what it isn't – with correct facts.
The facts of these cases are set out in: Gustafson v. State, 854 P.2d 751 (Alaska App. 1993) and Abuhl v. State, 2004 WL 2020346 (Alaska App. 2004).

Representative Ramras,

Thank you for your service.

I have heard that you are in favor of a death penalty law. I hope this is untrue! Many of us believe that such a law is subject to abuse-- an aspect of all laws that should always be considered. Citizens must be aware that power can be misplaced, and that individuals can misuse punitive laws politically in the future.

There are many other good arguments against the death penalty in Alaska, among them being the fact that minorities are disproportionately arrested and convicted.

Re: Death Penalty

Representative Ramras:

I am against the Death Penalty and feel people should not be placed in a position contrary to their conscience because of this law.

Those who have committed a serious crime should serve a "Life Sentence With Out Parole", which would secure safety to society from such a person.

I believe we should focus on promoting ways to respond to serious crimes that will hold the guilty accountable in a way that reflects our values as HUMAN BEINGS. The death penalty does not do this.

I cannot/will not support a law or a candidate who votes for this law.

There are many reasons NOT TO ENDORSE the death penalty, spiritual, economic, & moral. The additional cost to the State of Alaska for the death penalty takes money from critical programs; police protection and child protection. Statistics don't support the death penalty as a deterrent. The murder rate per 100,000 is much lower where there is no death penalty. Please stop HB9 and other efforts to reinstate the death penalty now. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, and members of the Judiciary Committee, Thank you for giving the public the opportunity to comment on HB #9

My name is Dale Kelley and I am the pastor of First Christian Church here in Anchorage. My own denomination – along with over 29 other faith communions, including the US Catholic Conference and the American Jewish Committee – have issued strong statements opposing the death penalty on all counts. It stands in opposition to act that "belies ~~the~~ sacredity of all life –

In ~~most~~ all of these statements you will find ~~very~~ adamant positions in opposition. And not only religious opposition has surfaced. Of the 37 states which still have the death penalty, some states are even now reviewing the efficacy of this position and are looking to abolish it. ~~Almost 200 persons~~ a # of person have been executed who were later found to be innocent. The death penalty is fraught with errors, and issues of racism.

I believe It is ludicrous for a caring, thinking population to seek to end violence through the sheer use of violence. Why do we continue to kill people to teach people that killing people is wrong? Where is the logic in that? – DP has never been shown to be a deterr

Aside from the moral bankruptcy of such a belief, there is the purely financial considerations that threatens to bankrupt our state of Alaska – if and when we might choose to pour millions upon millions into to re-creating a vastly new legal code – BEFORE we even have the first capital case on the docket.

I respectfully ask you — How will you barely funded explaining to your constituents that you are going to chose to take millions of dollars away from critical and ~~UNFUNDED~~ needs for them, their towns and villages. How will you ~~telling~~ them that YOU are instead choosing to put upwards of $50 million plus dollars into setting the stage for the first case to be tried.

I respectfully urge you to re-consider voting down this barbaric practice and re-focus your attention to the REAL needs of our Alaska citizens.

Thank you very much for your time

Re: HB 9

Dear Representatives Ramras and Chenault:

I am testifying today to oppose HB 9, the bill to reinstate the death penalty in Alaska. I cannot understand why in these times you would introduce this legislation except for your own political interests. Numerous studies have shown that the death penalty has been used to unfairly discriminate against non-whites, that it costs more to administer and that it turns government which exists for public safety into a public executioner. See, e.g. http://justice.uaa.alaska.edu/death/alaska.html; http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/FactSheet.pdf.

Even you -- Rep. Chenault -- admit that the death penalty does not act as a deterrent. http://www.iht.com/articles/ap/2009/02/24/america/NA-US-Death-Penalty-Alaska.php. I strongly urge you to drop pursuit of this legislation and use your time and skills for legislation that would best help Alaskans.

Testimony on HB 9, Death Penalty Legislation

Chair Ramas and members of the House Judicary,

I thank you for this opportunity to present testimony. I am opposed to this legislation and hope you will vote against it leaving committee.

In principal, I am opposed because our judicial system is not a perfect one. People who have been convicted and served many years incarcerated are now found not to have committed the crime due to advancement in scientific procedure.

If I were called to sit on a jury with the death penalty as the outcome, I could not do so. And if I can not bring myself to make this decision, how could I ask others to do so?

Right now our state is facing a financial "crisis" and this legislation would require a great deal more in the budget for this procedure. The building of a separate facility which would be an additional cost we do not presently have. I am not certain of all the facts but I do believe it is more costly to provide attorneys for death penalty cases. Our state attorneys would be charged with enforcing the charge against the defendant and our pubic defender system would be used for the defendant. And, since the final outcome is death, the killing of another human being, the case would probably lengthy and the costs exstreme.

Please do not support this legislation if for no other reason than the cost.

- Does nothing to deter crime
- It is more costly the life imprisonment
- Our judicial system is fallible. The chance of innocent people being killed is always possible
- But most importantly to say that murder is justified in certain circumstances is unexceptable. I do not agree with anyone having that power to say someone must die.

To Members of the House Judiciary Committee regarding H.B # 9 authorizing capital punishment.

A death sentence is a primitive response to crime/murder and reflects long standing institutional decisions that are both racist and class biased.
Incarceration itself is burdened by a racist and class bias.
Our new Obama administration gives us hope that we may seek a kinder less punitive, less violent, culture in America and that hopefully moves our society forward in addressing the causes of crime, seeking the tools of healing and reconciliation.
Violence begets violence; retribution continues the chain of violence. To kill another, to murder, is repugnant, even more so for a state to retaliate in kind. Note well! That when a state seeks to retaliate by death, it actually condones by leadership that killing for revenge is OK.
• The state of Alaska needs to continue without the death penalty.
• The state of Alaska can continue to lead with the Obama administration seeking a less punitive, less primitive society.

• The state of Alaska needs to lead in a more advanced society by adressing the causes of violence and crime such as alcoholism, ignorance and racism.

Re: HB 9

Dear Chairman Ramras and Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

I am unable to attend the committee's hearing this afternoon on HB 9. By this letter, I would like to state my opposition to the bill.

I listened to the testimony as I waited to testify last Wednesday and echo many of the comments already made to you. There were many, more articulate than I, who spoke with their hearts of the myriad reasons the death penalty should never be reinstated in Alaska. The most compelling reason is that the bill can never do what the sponsor promises – ensure that no innocent person will ever be executed. The day the criminal justice system achieves perfection, I'll reconsider my position.

The sponsor of the bill, Rep. Chenault, states as a justification for the bill: "Most of us would sleep better at night knowing a criminal will never have the opportunity to harm another human being." I'm not sure why he believes life in prison doesn't meet this goal but I'm satisfied it does.

Looking at the fiscal notes submitted to this committee, I wonder how anyone can economically justify passage of this bill. The Department of Law's fiscal note surmises that approximately six defendants per year would face the kind of charges that would bring him/her within the ambit of the death penalty sentencing provision. To execute six people – people who would otherwise be spending the rest of their lives in prison - why would we as a State incur these staggering costs? If we have that kind of discretionary spending ability, why not, instead, spend that money working towards public safety? Let's put that money towards crime prevention; let's put that money towards hiring more police; let's put that money towards enabling the police to purchase the equipment they need; let's put that money into drug prevention programs; let's put that money into after school programs for kids to keep them off the streets and away from exposure to crime; let's put more money into domestic violence awareness; let's put more money into education so these kids have a chance....

I imagine a thousand better ways to spend this money – opportunities to improve the public's safety – that don't involve killing people, no matter how bad these people may be.

I implore you – stop this bill in committee. It's bad law and it's bad public policy. Thank you.

Thank you. Lisa Fitzpatrick

Dear Representative Ramras,

There are many very good reasons for not passing the Death Penalty Bill, such as too great a chance that the wrong person would be executed due to a fallible judicial system, excessive costs, or the fact we are one of the few democratic countries which still has the death penalty allowed anywhere within it.

But the overriding reason is that it is just wrong to take a life for another. We lower our society by murdering (or as you say "executing") a murderer. I further believe that there is "that of God in everyone," even a murderer, and by executing them we rob our society of benefiting from his/her possible redemption and possible gifts that could be given by that person to other inmates. We also rob our society of making at least some degree of amends if it is later found we have wrongly convicted him or her.

Please kill the Death Penalty Bill.

Dear Representative Ramras,

Once upon a time in a land far, far away (Texas), I was an ardent supporter of the death penalty. I believed in it wholeheartedly, believed in its justice, believed in its efficaciousness.

In the years since - even before I left to come to the great state of Alaska 18 years ago, in fact - I have come around 180 degrees. The more that I have read about it, studied it, examined the facts, the more I have come to the conclusion that while there may be some exceptions, overall the death penalty is riddled with problems. It is not a clear deterrent, it is consistently more expensive than life without parole, and it is disproportionately applied to minorities.

And beyond that, I came to see the inconsistency between my fervent pro-life position and my willingness to have others killed, whatever their crime. Everyone deserves the time on this earth granted by God - the time all of us need to be fully converted to His holy desire.

It is my hope that HB 9 will not pass out of the Judiciary Committee, and it will be soundly defeated before it can even be voted on in the House.

To: Alaska House of Representatives, Judiciary Committee
Testimony on House Bill 9, reinstating the death penalty for first degree murder.

Mr. Chairman, and distinguished committee members.

My name is Art Koeninger. I am currently a resident of Homer and have resided in Alaska since 1975. Thank you for this opportunity to speak to you in opposition to this bill.

This bill purports to better protect society from the most heinous of crimes, and to impart a more perfect justice, while protecting the rights of the innocent . I value and support those goals. However, this bill does little if anything that our existing system, with the possibility of life without parole, does not already offer with less expense, and less ~~violence~~ harm to our collective psyche. It is not enough to appear tough on crime. There are more cost-effective ways to be smart on crime.

I am not unfamiliar with with life and death issues, having served as a first responder, fire fighter, community association leader and businessman for 25 years in my former community in the Copper Valley. I have traveled and worked extensively throughout the state, particularly in small villages, most of them predominately Native.

I have known murderers and victims, and their families. They were my neighbors. As much as we might wish it to, more killing will not heal the pain of the victims' families, will create more pain for the perpetrators' families, who are just as innocent as their neighbors, and will not make us safer, any more than it will bring back the dead.

I am also not unfamiliar with capital punishment and the effects it has on corrections personnel tasked with its implementation, on victims' families as well as families of the executed, not to mention the larger community where it is carried out.

I hope that you were able to meet with Reverend Carroll Pickett, the former death house chaplain from Huntsville,Texas. If you did not have that opportunity, I encourage you to view the documentary film "At the Death House Door" about his experiences there, and his transformation from a supporter of the death penalty to an opponent.

I grew up literally in the shadow of that same prison. My father worked as the Director of the Bureau of Classifications for the Texas Department of Corrections, and taught sociology and criminology at the local college. As a criminologist with access to decades of statistical data on every prisoner admitted to Texas prisons, he grew to oppose the death penalty when his studies of the data demonstrated many of the glaring racial and class discrepancies inherent in the application of the death penalty.

Even today, a half-century later, our justice system is as imperfect as the humans administering it. I'm sure the Native Justice Center will give convincing reasons why this law will fall disproportionately on Alaska Natives. If my dear friend Rachel King, a former state defense attorney, were alive today, she would outline for you many of the ways that cultural and economic as well as geographical and logistical factors contribute to the higher incarceration rates of Alaska Natives, proportionate to their population. I encourage you to read her article "Bush Justice: The Intersection of Alaska Natives and the Criminal Justice System in Rural Alaska" in the Oregon Law Review, Volume 77, #1, Spring 1998., where she cites her own experiences as well as many studies and case law.

And though I know that you cannot remedy those inequities with one bill, that this one would perpetrate them terminally on the ethnically different and the poor,is particularly egregious.

Its irreversibility, once a person is executed, differentiates it radically from all other laws.

As you know, most developed western nations have stopped executing their citizens.

Other states are finding that their capital punishment systems are ineffective , the associated costs are becoming prohibitive, and they are beginning to rescind state sanctioned killing in practice as well as by law, New Mexico being the most recent.

Alaskans have gotten along without the death penalty for decades, and in time will rid themselves of this injustice again, should this bill pass.

HB9

Unfortunately, future changes in law, whether by legislation or by the courts, will be of no avail to the executed.

No amount of legal tweaking or rationalization can assure that the innocent will not be put to death. DNA cannot prove guilt, only innocence, and only a fraction of murder cases have DNA evidence.

The mere presumption that any one human or human system can adjudicate who is most heinous, unrepentant, or incapable of rehabilitation and is thus unworthy of living, disturbs me. To so designate a 16 -18 year old is doubly unthinkable to me.

The mere fact that many if not most murders are committed while under the influence of alcohol or other drugs, should give some hope that once they're cleaned up, they might be redeemable enough to spend their lives in prison.

The delegation of the responsibility to premeditatedly kill another human being is an abhorrent burden to state employees and medical personnel, and a violation of their oath to do no harm. Reverend Pickett spoke of the necessity of appointing extra guards to this duty because inevitably two or more of them would throw up or otherwise be incapable of carrying out their task.

This is a final solution we do not need.

I encourage you to table this bill, to turn from retributive justice, and focus on a restorative justice with real solutions that address the root causes of crime.

To help set you in that direction I will point you to a recent study of the Alaska corrections system by the Pew Center on the States. <http://www.adn.com/front/story/707881.html>

For $4 million/year extra in existing rehabilitation and prevention programs, we can reduce the prison population by 1,000 prisoners/year, saving $129/prisoner/day or $47,085,000/year according to the information below. At least some of those 1,000 would be murders that wouldn't happen.

Corrections report warns of underfunding rehabilitation

By STEVE QUINN
The Associated Press

Published: March 2nd, 2009 09:56 AM

JUNEAU -- Even as the state of Alaska prepares to break ground on a 1,500-bed, medium-security prison, a newly released national study says investments should be in rehabilitating prisoners instead of locking them up.

"We cannot build our way to public safety," says a report titled The Long Reach of American Corrections released today by The Pew Center on the States.

"With the costs of imprisonment rising and the benefits failing, our ability to keep communities safe depends more than ever upon our ability to better manage the 5 million offenders on probation and parole," says the report.

The study examined the number of people in the corrections system -- those incarcerated, on probation or on parole -- and the money spent on corrections from 1982-2007.

According to the report, 1 out of every 88 Alaskans is incarcerated in a state or federal prison, placing it 12th nationally.

The reports says 1 of every 61 Alaska adults is on probation or parole, placing the state 33rd nationally.

A separate study presented in January to the Alaska Legislature by the University of Alaska's Institute of Social and Economic Research -- or

ISER -- says Alaska's inmate population could to go from roughly 5,300 to 10,500 by the year 2030.

If the state spent an additional $4 million annually on existing rehabilitation and prevention programs, that population could be closer to 9,500, according to the ISER study.

Making those investments, however, is a tough economic sell in a state facing a financial crunch with the dropping price of oil and the public demanding immediate results, said Stephanie Martin, ISER's assistant professor of economics and public policy.

"The state wouldn't start to see any return for probably at least five years, but after that it becomes tremendous," Martin said. "It's just hard for people to think like that. It's easy to do on a computer, but politically it's tougher to do."

According to the Pew study:

• Alaska spent $240 million or 4.7 percent of its general fund on corrections last year, 2.2 percentage points less than the national average even though comparative state-to-state spending is difficult to pin down because of variances in calculations.

• The cost for one day spent in prison is nearly $129 per inmate, or the same amount for one prisoner's total costs for either 90 days of parole or 22 days of probation. The national average for prison is $79 per day, or 10 days of parole or 22 days of probation.

• For every dollar Alaska spent on prisons in 2008, it spent 6 cents on probation and parole. Only data from 34 states was available, but among those, 14 cents was spent on probation and parole for every dollar spent on prisons.

• Forty-one percent of those under correctional supervision -- be it probation, parole or incarceration -- was in prison or jail at the end of 2007.

Joseph Schmidt, the state's Department of Corrections commissioner, said he agrees with the study's assertions that corrections departments need to be proactive to ease the burden on the prisons. The department has a $246.3 million budget. Of that $13.1 million is spent on parole and probation programs.

Plans for the new prison in Palmer would enable Alaska to house 700 prisoners currently in Arizona facilities. The Alaska prison is scheduled to open in 2012.

"Confinement is the foundation of the system, but we are trying to move away from the philosophy that incarceration will solve the problem," Schmidt said.

One program launched two months ago at Spring Creek Correctional Center in Seward involves 264 inmates to be released within 6 to 18 months. The program closely follows a Federal Bureau of Prisons guide in helping inmates transition back to life outside prison.

Prisoners attend parenting and anger management classes, receive tutoring in life skills such as house hunting and job interviewing, and they work on getting vocational skills or a high school diploma.

"We are focusing on re-entering society, so they don't come back into the system," Schmidt said. "What we are hoping is that we don't grow our prison population to a point where we can't afford it."

Senate backs death-penalty repeal

Decision now moves to governor; 2008 election propelled vote, lawmakers say

By Steve Terrell | The New Mexican

Friday's decisive state Senate vote to repeal the death penalty in New Mexico was a direct result of November's election of several new lawmakers.

That's the opinion expressed both by a leading supporter and by a leading opponent of House Bill 285, which would replace the death penalty with a sentence of life in prison without possibility of parole.

The bill, which cleared the House 40-28 last month, passed the Senate 24-18 after a nearly three-hour debate. It now goes to Gov. Bill Richardson, who in recent days has said his support for capital punishment has softened and he hasn't decided whether he'll sign the legislation.

"I have met with many people and will continue to consider all sides of the issue before making a decision," said the Democratic governor, who called it "an extremely difficult issue."

New Mexico, one of 36 states with a death penalty, would be the first to ban executions since New Jersey in 2007.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Gail Chasey, D-Albuquerque, said Friday that she was able to get the bill through the Senate this year because the 2008 election added three more senators to the Democratic majority. In recent years, the bill had been stopped in the Senate Judiciary Committee. Last week that committee voted in favor of HB285 by a one-vote margin.

"The election gave us a more comfortable margin," Chasey said.

Lem Martinez, who is district attorney for the 13th Judicial District, has spoken against the repeal bill at committee hearings on behalf of the state District Attorneys Association. He said Friday that the Senate vote was the result of (President Barack) Obama's coattails. "Last November, the voters spoke," Martinez said.

Martinez said he intends to speak with Richardson to lobby for a veto of HB265.

Chasey said she also plans to talk to Richardson. "Our work's not finished yet," she said.

The Governor's Office set up a phone line for gathering the opinions of New Mexicans on the issue. The number is 505-476-2225. Those wishing to weigh in via e-mail can do so by visiting the governor's Web site at www.governor.state.nm.us and clicking on "Contact the Governor."

Richardson must act on the bill within three days after he receives it. A spokesman said he hadn't received the bill by the end of Friday but expects to get it today. That would make Wednesday the deadline for him to sign or veto the bill.

One person who intends to call that hot line is Colleen Gore, mother of the 9-year-old Artesia girl, Dena Lynn Gore, who was murdered in 1986 by Terry Clark. Clark was lethally injected in 2001, the most recent execution by the state of New Mexico.

Colleen Gore said in a telephone interview Friday that she was disappointed by the Senate vote. "I think it's kind of sad," she said.

"I think instead of repealing the death penalty they should be working on ways to shorten the appeals process," said Gore, who spent 15 years attending court hearings for Clark. Clark voluntarily stopped his appeals process shortly before he was executed.

"I got closure from the execution," Gore said.

Two men remain on death row: Timothy Allen, 47, of Farmington, who was sentenced to death in 1995 for the murder, kidnapping and attempted rape of 17-year-old Sandra Phillips, and Robert Fry, 35, of Bloomfield, who was condemned in 2002 for killing Betty Lee, 36, in 2000.

Technically, neither sentence would be affected if Richardson signs the law. However, the governor could lift their death sentences.

One death-penalty case is pending in Santa Fe — that of John La Bombard, 36, who confessed to the shooting death of Frank Segura, 39, in the Santa Fe National Forest.

During Friday's Senate debate, many of the arguments centered on questions of religion, morals and justice.

The death penalty is just, said Sen. Rod Adair, R-Roswell. "Six thousand years of recorded history confirms it is and 400 years of American Judeo-Christian tradition says it is."

But Sen. Jerry Ortiz y Pino, D-Albuquerque, argued, "In 6,000 years we've evolved. ... We shouldn't be relying on the lizard part of our brain as we did 6,000 years ago."

Sen. Kent Cravens, R-Albuquerque, argued that the death penalty puts the "fear of God" into those who commit terrible crimes. He disagreed with repeal supporters who have argued that most condemned killers would rather be executed than face years in prison. "Life in prison would be a picnic compared with (execution)," Cravens said.

Sen. Linda Lovejoy, D-Crownpoint, spoke about her native Navajo culture's attitude toward crime. The Navajo way, she said, puts more emphasis on healing and restoring harmony than retribution.

Senate Republican Whip Bill Payne of Albuquerque argued that getting rid of the death penalty for those who kill police and corrections officers would make it more dangerous for law-enforcement personnel.

Senate Majority Leader Michael Sanchez, D-Belen, who carried the bill, said it's been nearly 100 years since anyone in New Mexico was executed for killing a law-enforcement officer.

The 24 senators who voted for the bill were all Democrats. Three Democratic senators — Richard Martinez of Española, Tim Jennings of Roswell and John Arthur Smith of Deming — joined the 15 Senate Republicans in opposing the bill.

This was the first time since 2001 the Senate has voted on a death-penalty repeal. Martinez that year voted for the repeal, but Sen. Phil Griego, D-San Jose, who voted Friday for HB285, had voted against the similar bill in 2001.

Among those attending the Senate debate was Santa Fe screenwriter Dennis Yares, who recently wrote a screenplay for a book about a controversial, racially charged New Mexico execution in 1933. The book, Justice Betrayed by Ralph Melnick, deals with Thomas Johnson, the first person to die in New Mexico's electric chair. The book makes the argument that Johnson, a black man, was framed for the murder of Angelina Jaramillo.

Yares told a reporter that shooting for the feature film is scheduled to begin in Santa Fe this fall.

The Associated Press reports that repeal legislation has passed the state Senate in Montana and awaits a House hearing. The state Senate in Kansas is expected to debate a repeal bill Monday.

States weigh cost of death penalty

With executions in decline, some lawmakers want to abolish capital punishment, citing expenses as a factor.

By Steve Mills

March 14, 2009

Reporting from Chicago — To New Mexico Atty. Gen. Gary King, a prison guard's slaying cried out for the death penalty: Inmates had stabbed him two dozen times.

But when the defense ran out of money, the state Supreme Court ruled that King could not seek a death sentence until the lawyers were paid -- approximately $200,000 for each of the three defendants, King said. When state legislators refused to allocate more money, prosecutors dropped their pursuit of the death penalty.

In January, one of the inmates was sentenced to 54 years in prison.

"Unless the Legislature is willing to appropriate a lot of money for the defense, then I think that the death penalty is pretty well negated in New Mexico," King said in an interview.

"If we had death penalty cases on the horizon, there would be a big discussion about whether we could take a budget cut," he added. "We can't just absorb that in our standard budget."

Debate over the death penalty has undergone shifts over the years. During the last decade, the discussion has focused on accuracy and fairness, with exonerations of dozens of death row inmates sparking calls for reform and abolition. Now, with the nation's economy slumping, the issue is cost.

Several states have introduced measures to abolish the death penalty, many of them citing its cost. New Mexico's Legislature voted Friday to do so.

In Colorado, a bill would take money usually spent on capital cases and use it to help clear unsolved cases. In Kansas, a legislator wants to use money for capital cases to close a budget shortfall.

"In a way, we have life without parole, but we're paying more money to achieve it," said state Sen. Carolyn McGinn, a Republican, noting that Kansas has not executed an inmate in decades.

New Jersey cited cost as one factor when it abolished the death penalty in 2007, and a commission that studied the death penalty in Maryland recently cited cost as well.

In Georgia, the public defender system is underfunded and in crisis after the death penalty trial of a man convicted of killing a judge and three others during his 2005 escape from an Atlanta courthouse. The case cost more than $2 million. The man, Brian Nichols, received a life sentence.

In California, legislators are wrestling with the cost of maintaining the nation's largest death row even though the state has executed only 13 inmates since 1976. Officials are also debating construction of a new $395-million death row prison that many lawmakers say the state cannot afford.

And in Louisiana, the Orleans Parish district attorney's office has considered filing for bankruptcy protection after it was ordered to pay $15 million to John Thompson. He sued prosecutors after he was acquitted of murder and freed from death row; a jury found that prosecutors had engaged in misconduct.

"This is a time where if you have a government program and it's not producing a lot but it's costing a lot, then it's ripe for examination," said Richard Dieter, executive director of the nonprofit Death Penalty Information Center. "It's not like libraries, which you need, or other crucial programs. This is a program that's not really producing."

The scrutiny of the costs of capital punishment comes as the death penalty is in decline. Prosecutors are obtaining fewer death sentences -- in part because more states offer juries the option of life without the possibility of parole -- and states are carrying out fewer executions.

Many of the costs are built into the system and cannot be changed. They include the costs of specially trained defense lawyers, mental health and mitigation experts, and a longer course of appeals. And there are the many added costs of housing death row prisoners.

"As long as you have a death penalty system, you'll have regular expenses. And those expenses aren't getting cheaper," Dieter said. "There's a maintenance cost to the death penalty."

Death penalty cases can have an outsized effect in smaller counties, which tend to have smaller budgets. There, a case can cost hundreds of thousands of dollars -- close to $1 million if the issues are particularly complicated -- and force officials to cut programs to fund the prosecution.

Prosecutors say they have to take that into consideration, although it is not the only factor.

"Any good prosecutor is going to have to consider cost, especially in smaller, rural counties," said R. Lowell Thompson, district attorney for Navarro County in Texas, south of Dallas.

"But cost isn't the only consideration. Our job is to seek justice, and we have to carry that out."

The death penalty

Saving lives and money

NEW YORK

States plagued by fiscal woes rethink their stance on the death penalty

AN EYE for an eye, or at any rate a death for a death, is the type of justice that most states still embrace. Only 14 of the 50 states have banned capital punishment. But that may change with the recession. As state governments confront huge budget deficits, eight more states have proposed an unusual measure to cut costs: eliminate the death penalty.

The states considering abolition, including Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico and New Hampshire, have shifted the debate about capital punishment, at least in part, from morality to cost. Studies show that administering the death penalty is even more expensive than keeping someone in prison for life. The intensive jury selection, trials and appeals required in capital cases can take over a decade and run up a huge tab for the state. Death row, where prisoners facing execution are kept in separate cells under intense observation, is also immensely costly.

A recent study by the Urban Institute, a think-tank, estimates that the death penalty cost Maryland's taxpayers $186m between 1978 and 1999. According to the report, a case resulting in a death sentence cost $3m, almost $2m more than when the death penalty was not sought.

In an age of austerity, every million dollars counts. Proponents of the abolition bills describe the death penalty as an expensive programme with few benefits. There is little evidence that the death penalty deters. In fact, some of the states that most avidly execute prisoners, such as Texas and Oklahoma, have higher crime rates than states that offer only life in prison without parole. There is also the danger that innocent people may be put to death. So far, more than 130 people who had been sentenced to death have been exonerated.

Colorado, one of the states that has introduced a bill to overturn the death penalty, intends to spend the money it will save each year by eliminating capital punishment on an investigations unit. According to Paul Weissman, the state House majority leader and the bill's co-sponsor, around 1,400 murders are still unsolved in the state. Eliminating the death penalty will finance the new unit and leave an extra $1m for other state programmes. Other states are trying to free up funding to help offset their huge deficits. Savings from abolishing the death penalty in Kansas, for example, are estimated at $500,000 for every case in which the death penalty is not sought.

Many other states, including Texas, which last year carried out almost half of all executions in America, have no plans to follow suit. But a prolonged recession may change a few Texan minds.

▸ can score 70 points worse than their peers in Wyoming and receive the same grade. The Fordham Institute, a think-tank, measured the same 18 primary schools by different states' benchmarks. In rigorous Massachusetts, only one passed muster. In sloppy Wisconsin, 17 did. Mr Obama promised that, later this year, he would tie federal money to results. But he did not say how.

He correctly identified another problem: that while most American public schools are pretty good, a significant minority are atrocious. He put it more politely, of course, noting that a mere 2,000 high schools (out of 28,000) produce more than half of all dropouts. Dysfunctional schools are concentrated in the rougher parts of cities, such as Detroit and Los Angeles. Mr Obama offered some sensible small ideas, such as extra money for pre-school, and hinted at bigger reforms.

He urged the states, for example, to stop restricting the number of charter schools. These are publicly funded but autonomous schools that, freed from bureaucracy, typically educate poor children better for less money than nearby public schools do. Naturally, the bureaucrats hate them. Many states restrict the number that can be set up. "That isn't good for our children," said Mr Obama. But he cannot force the states to stop doing it.

Mr Obama called for longer school hours, which teachers' unions are not keen on, and merit pay, which they hate. Ever tactful, he avoided the incendiary word "merit". But he said that "good teachers will be rewarded with more money for improved student achievement". As for persistently bad teachers, he pointed out that "There's no excuse for [them] to continue teaching." Parents would love that; but no president has come close to achieving it.

Meanwhile, Democrats in Congress quietly voted to kill a voucher programme that allows around 1,700 students, mostly black, poor or both, to escape Washington, DC's, awful public schools and attend private ones. Mr Obama supports killing the programme, but his flacks say he wants the students currently enrolled in it, who include two at his daughters' excellent private school, to be allowed to complete their studies. How kind. ■

Africa policy

Don't expect a revolution

NEW YORK AND PRETORIA

Barack Obama may differ little from George Bush in his approach to Africa

IT MIGHT seem obvious that American policy towards Africa would change under America's first African-American president. But while the new man seems set to break with his predecessor in many other foreign-policy areas, changes towards Africa may be less substantial.

Though unloved in much of the world, George Bush is still popular in most of Africa. He vastly increased America's development aid towards the continent. He created the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), which was reauthorised last year with a budget of $48 billion over five years, to help stop the spread of HIV and to treat those infected. While PEPFAR has been less successful at prevention than its proponents had hoped, it has kept 2.1 people, most of them African, on life-saving antiretroviral treatment.

One much-criticised PEPFAR provision was an anti-prostitution pledge required of recipients, who had to swear that they would not "support" prostitution. This provision was retained when the plan was reauthorised last year, and Mr Obama could not change it without rewriting the bill. In any event, many anti-AIDS campaigners found ways of getting round Bush's restrictions. So beyond sacking the boss of PEPFAR, which he has just done, Mr Obama is unlikely to do much to change a policy that is working well.

Mr Obama brings with him some figures with strong opinions on one of America's bloodiest conflicts, in the Sudanese region of Darfur. Joe Biden, his vice-president, has called in the past for a threat of military action against the Sudanese government to stop the killings there. Mr Obama's ambassador to the UN, Susan Rice, has backed the threat of force to

JURIES ARE ALLOWED TO JUDGE THE LAW, NOT JUST THE FACTS

In order to guard citizens against the whims of the King, the right to a trial by jury was established by the Magna Carta in 1215, and it has become one of the most sacrosanct legal aspects of British and American societies. We tend to believe that the duty of a jury is solely to determine whether someone broke the law. In fact, it's not unusual for judges to instruct juries that they are to judge only the facts in a case, while the judge will sit in judgment of the law itself. Nonsense.

Juries are the last line of defense against the power abuses of the authorities. They have the right to judge the law. Even if a defendant committed a crime, a jury can refuse to render a guilty verdict. Among the main reasons why this might happen, according to attorney Clay S. Conrad:

When the defendant has already suffered enough, when it would be unfair or against the public interest for the defendant to be convicted, when the jury disagrees with the law itself, when the prosecution or the arresting authorities have gone "too far" in the single-minded quest to arrest and convict a particular defendant, when the punishments to be imposed are excessive or when the jury suspects that the charges have been brought for political reasons or to make an unfair example of the hapless defendant...

Some of the earliest examples of jury [illegible] refusals to convict people who had spoken ill of the government (they were prosecuted under "seditious libel" laws) or who were practicing forbidden religions, such as Quakerism. Up to the time of the Civil War, American juries often refused to convict the brave souls who helped runaway slaves. In the 1800s, jury nullifications saved the hides of union organizers who were being prosecuted with conspiracy to restrain trade. Juries used their power to free people charged under the anti-alcohol laws of Prohibition, as well as antiwar protesters during the Vietnam era. Today, juries sometimes refuse to convict drug users (especially medical marijuana users), tax protesters, abortion protesters, gun owners, battered spouses, and people who commit "mercy killings."

Judges and prosecutors will often outright lie about the existence of this power, but centuries of court decisions and other evidence prove that jurors can vote their consciences.

When the US Constitution was created, with its Sixth Amendment guarantee of a jury trial, the most popular law dictionary of the time said that juries "may not only find things of their own knowledge, but they go according to their consciences." The first edition of Noah Webster's celebrated dictionary (1828) said that juries "decide both the law and the fact in criminal prosecutions."

Jury nullification is specifically enshrined in the constitutions of Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Maryland. The state codes of Connecticut and Illinois contain similar provisions.

The second US President, John Adams, wrote: "It is not only [the juror's] right, but his duty...to find the verdict according to his own best understanding, judgment, and conscience, though in direct opposition to the direction of the court." Similarly, Founding Father Alexander Hamilton declared: "It is essential to the security of personal rights and public liberty, that the jury should have and exercise the power to judge both of the law and of the criminal intent."

Legendary Supreme Court Chief Justice John Jay once instructed a jury:

It may not be amiss, here, Gentlemen, to remind you of the good old rule, that on questions of fact, it is the providence of the jury, on questions of law, it is the providence of the court to decide. But it must be observed that by the same law, which recognizes this reasonable distribution of jurisdiction, you have nevertheless the right to take upon yourselves to judge of both, and to determine the law as well as the fact in controversy.

The following year, 1795, Justice James Iredell declared: "[T]hough the jury will generally respect the sentiment of the court on points of law, they are not bound to deliver a verdict conformably to them." In 1817, Chief Justice John Marshall said that "the jury in a capital case were judges, as well of the law as the fact, and were bound to acquit where either was doubtful."

In more recent times, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals unanimously held in 1969:

If the jury feels that the law under which the defendant is accused is unjust, or that extenuating circumstances justified the actions of the accused, or for any acquit, and the courts must abide that decision.

Three years later, the DC Circuit Court of Appeals noted: "The pages of history shine on instances of the jury's exercise of its prerogative to disregard uncontradicted evidence and instructions of the judge."

In a 1993 law journal article, federal Judge Jack B. Weinstein wrote: "When juries refuse to convict on the basis of what they think are unjust laws, they are performing their duties as jurors."

Those who try to wish away the power of jury nullification often point to cases in which racist juries have refused to convict white people charged with racial violence. As attorney Conrad shows in his book, Jury Nullification: The Evolution of a Doctrine, this has occurred only in very rare instances. Besides, it's ridiculous to try to stamp out or deny a certain power just because it can be used for bad ends as well as good. What form of power hasn't been misused at least once in a while?

The Fully Informed Jury Association (FIJA) is the best-known organization seeking to tell all citizens about their powers as jurors. People have been arrested for simply handing out FIJA literature in front of courthouses. During jury selections, FIJA members have been excluded solely on the grounds that they belong to the group.

FIJA also seeks laws that would require judges to tell jurors that they can and should judge the law, but this has been an uphill battle, to say the least. In a still-standing decision (Sparf and Hansen v US, 1895), the Supreme Court ruled that judges don't have to let jurors know their full powers. In cases where the defense has brought up jury nullification during the proceedings, judges have sometimes held the defense attorney in contempt. Still, 21 state legislatures have introduced informed-jury legislation, with three of them passing it through one chamber (ie, House or Senate).

Quite obviously, the justice system is terrified of this power, which is all the more reason for us to know about it.

THE POLICE AREN'T LEGALLY OBLIGATED TO PROTECT YOU

Without even thinking about it, we take it as a given that the police must protect each of us. That's their whole reason for existence, right?

While this might be true in a few jurisdictions in the US and Canada, it is actually the exception, not the rule. In general, court decisions and state laws have held that cops don't have to do a damn thing to help you when you're in danger.

In the only book devoted exclusively to the subject, Dial 911 and Die, attorney Richard W. Stevens writes:

It was the most shocking thing I learned in law school. I was studying Torts in my

YOUR VOTE COUNTS!

Your vote of NOT GUILTY must be respected by all other members of the JURY — it is the RIGHT and the DUTY of a JUROR to Never, Never, Never yield his or her sacred vote — for you are not there as a fool, merely to agree with the majority, but as an officer of the court and a qualified judge in your own right. Regardless of the pressures or abuse that may be heaped on you by any other members of the JURY with whom you may in good conscience disagree, you can await the reading of the verdict secure in the knowledge you have voted your own conscience and convictions — and not those of someone else.

YOU ARE NOT A RUBBER STAMP!

By what logic do we send our youth to battle tyranny on foreign soil, while we refuse to do so in our courts? Did you know that many of the planks of the "Communist Manifesto" are now represented by law in the U.S.? How is it possible for Americans to denounce communism and practice it simultaneously.

The JURY judges the Spirit, Motive and Intent of both the law and the Accused, whereas the prosecutor only represents the letter of the law.

Therein lies the opportunity for the accomplishment of "LIBERTY and JUSTICE for ALL." If you, and numerous other JURORS throughout the State and Nation begin and continue to bring in verdicts of NOT GUILTY in such cases where a man-made statute is defective or oppressive, these statutes will become as ineffective as if they had never been written.

"If we love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude better than the animating contest of freedom, go home from us in peace. We ask not your counsels or your arms. Crouch down and lick the hands which feed you. May your chains set lightly upon you, and may posterity forget that ye were our countrymen."[14]

JURY OF PEERS

Our forefathers felt that in order to have JUSTICE, it is obvious that a JURY of "PEERS" must be people who actually know the defendant. How else would they be able to judge motive and intent?

"PEERS" of the defendant, like the rights of the JURY have also been severely tarnished. Originally, it meant people of "equals in station and rank," (Black's 1910), "freeholders of a neighborhood," (Bouvier's 1886), or "A companion; a fellow; an associate. (Webster's 1828).

WHO HAS A RIGHT TO SIT ON A JURY?

Patrick Henry, along with others, was deeply concerned as to who has a right to sit on a JURY. Listen to our forefather's wisdom on the subject of "PEERS."

MR. HENRY

"By the bill of rights of England, a subject has a right to a trial by his peers. What is meant by his peers? Those who reside near him, his neighbors, and who are well acquainted with his character and situation in life." Patrick Henry, (Elliot, The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution, 3:579).

Patrick Henry also knew that originally the JURY of PEERS was designed as a protection for Neighbors from outside governmental oppression. Henry states the following, "Why do we love this trial by jury? Because it prevents the hand of oppression from cutting you off . . . This gives me comfort — that, as long as I have existence, my neighbors will protect me." (Elliot, 3:545, 546).

MR. HOLMES

Mr. Holmes, from Massachusetts, argued strenuously that for JUSTICE to prevail, the case must be heard in the vicinity where the fact was committed by a JURY of PEERS. ". . . a jury of the peers would, from their local situation, have an opportunity to form a judgment of the CHARACTER of the person charged with the crime, and also to judge of the CREDIBILITY of the witnesses." (Elliot, 2:110).

"The people are the masters of both Congress and courts, not to overthrow the Constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert it!" Abraham Lincoln

MR. WILSON

Mr. Wilson, signer of "The unanimous Declaration," who also later became a supreme Court Justice, stressed the importance of the JURORS knowing personally both the defendant and the witnesses. "Where jurors can be acquainted with the characters of the parties and the witnesses — where the whole cause can be brought within their knowledge and their view — I know no mode of investigation equal to that by a trial by jury: they hear every thing that is alleged; they not only hear the words, but they see and mark the features of the countenance; they can judge of weight due to such testimony; and moreover, it is a cheap and expeditious manner of distributing justice. There is another advantage annexed to the trial by jury; the jurors may indeed return a mistaken or ill-founded verdict, but their errors cannot be systematical." (Elliot, 2:516).

FREEDOM FOR WILLIAM PENN

"Those people who are not governed by GOD will be ruled by tyrants."

William Penn

Edward Bushell and three fellow JURORS learned this lesson well. They refused to bow to the court. They believed in the absolute power of the JURY, though their eight companions cowered to the court. The four JURORS spent nine weeks of torture in prison, often without food or water, soaked with urine, smeared with feces, barely able to stand, and even threatened with fines, yet they would not give in to the judge. Edward Bushell said, "My liberty is not for sale," though he had great wealth and commanded an international shipping enterprise. These "tumble heads", so the court thought, proved the power of the people was stronger than any power of government. They emerged total victors.

THE FIRST AMENDMENT

The year was 1670, and the case Bushell sat on was that of William Penn, who was on trial for violation of the "Conventicle Act." This was an elaborate Act which made the Church of England the only legal church. The Act was struck down by their not guilty vote. Freedom of Religion was established and became part of the English Bill of Rights and later it became the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. In addition, the Right to peaceful assembly was founded, Freedom of Speech, and also habeas corpus. The first such writ of habeas corpus ever issued by the Court of Common Pleas was used to free Edward Bushell. Later this trial gave birth to the prosecutor, William Penn most likely would have been executed as he clearly broke the law.

HE BROKE THE LAW!

Then there would have been no Liberty Bell, no Independence Hall, no city of Philadelphia, and no state called Pennsylvania, for young William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, and leader of the Quakers, was on trial for his life. His alleged crime was preaching and teaching a different view of the Bible than that of the Church of England. This appears innocent today, but then, one could be executed for such actions. He believed in freedom of religion, freedom of speech and the right to peaceful assembly. He had broken the government's law, but he had injured no one. Those four heroic JURORS knew that only when actual injury to someone's person or property takes place is there a real crime. No law is broken when no injury can be shown. Thus there can be no loss or termination of rights unless actual damage is proven. Many imposter laws were repealed as a result of this case.

IT IS ALMOST UNFAIR!

This trial made such an impact that every colony but one established the jury as the first liberty to maintain all other liberties. It was felt that the liberties of people could never be wholly lost as long as the jury remained strong and independent, and that unjust laws and statutes could not stand when confronted by conscientious JURORS. JURORS today face an avalanche of impostor laws. JURORS not only still have the power and the RIGHT, but also the DUTY, to nullify bad laws by voting "not guilty". At first glance it appears that it is almost unfair, the power JURORS have over [illegible] necessary when considering

FOR THE "COMMON GOOD"?

Where the people fear the government you have tyranny; where the government fears the people, you have liberty.

Politicians, bureaucrats and especially judges would have you believe that too much freedom will result in chaos. Therefore, we should gladly give up some of our RIGHTS for the good of the community. In other words, people acting in the name of government, say we need more laws and more JURORS to enforce these laws — even if we have to give up some RIGHTS in the process. They believe the more laws we have, the more control, thus a better society. This theory may sound good on paper, and apparently many of our leaders think this way, as evidenced by the thousands of new laws that are added to the books each year in this country. But, no matter how cleverly this Marxist argument is made, the hard fact is that whenever you give up a RIGHT you lose a "FREE CHOICE"!

This adds another control. Control's real name is BONDAGE! The logical conclusion would be, if giving up some RIGHTS produces a better society, then by giving up all RIGHTS we could produce the perfect society. We could chain everybody to a tree, for lack of TRUST. This may prevent a crime, but it would destroy PRIVACY, which is the heartbeat of FREEDOM! It would also destroy TRUST which is the foundation for DIGNITY. Rather than giving up RIGHTS, we should be giving up wrongs! The opposite of control is not chaos. More laws do not make less criminals! We must give up wrongs, not rights, for a better society! William Pitt of the British House of Commons once proclaimed, "Necessity is the plea for every infringement of human liberty; it is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves."

NATURAL RIGHTS!

NATURAL RIGHTS ARE THOSE RIGHTS such as LIFE (from conception), LIBERTY and the PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS eg. FREEDOM of RELIGION, SPEECH, LEARNING, TRAVEL, SELF-DEFENSE, ETC. Hence laws and statutes which violate NATURAL RIGHTS, though they have the color of law, are not law but impostors! The U.S. Constitution was written to protect these NATURAL RIGHTS from being tampered with by legislators.* Further, our forefathers also wisely knew that the U.S. Constitution would be utterly worthless to restrain government legislators unless it was clearly understood that the people had the right to compel the government to keep within the Constitutional limits.

In a jury trial the real judges are the JURORS! Surprisingly, judges are actually just referees bound by the Constitution!

*Lysander Spooner wrote as follows:

"Government is established for the protection of the weak against the strong. This is the principal, if not the sole motive for the establishment of all legitimate government. It is only the weaker party that lose their liberties, when a government becomes oppressive. The stronger party, in all governments are free by virtue of their superior strength. They never oppress themselves. Legislation is the work of this stronger party; and if, in addition to the sole power of legislation, they have the sole power of determining what legislation shall be enforced, they have all power in their hands, and the weaker party are the subjects of an absolute government. Unless the weaker party have a veto, they have no power whatever in the government and . . . no liberties . . . The trial by jury is the only institution that gives the weaker party any veto upon the power of the stronger. Consequently it is the only institution that gives them any effective voice in the government; or any guaranty against oppression."

Essay on the Trial by Jury

A JURY'S Rights, Powers and Duties:

The Charge to the JURY in the First JURY Trial before the supreme Court of the U. S. Illustrates the TRUE POWER OF THE JURY. In the February term of 1794, the supreme* Court conducted a JURY trial and said ". . . it is presumed, that the juries are the best judges of facts; it is, on the other hand, presumed that the courts are the best judges of law. But still both objects are within your power of decision."

"You have a right to take upon yourselves to judge of both, and to determine the law as well as the fact in controversy."

(State of Georgia vs. Brailsford, et al, 3 Dall. 1)

"The JURY has an unreviewable and unreversible power . . . to acquit in disregard of the instructions on the law given by trial judge . . ." (emphasis added)

U.S. vs. Dougherty, 473 F 2nd 1113, 1139 (1972)

Hence, JURY disregard of the limited and generally conviction-oriented evidence presented for its consideration, and JURY disregard for what the trial judge wants them to believe is the controlling law in any particular case (sometimes referred to as "JURY lawlessness")* is not something to be scrupulously avoided, but rather encouraged. Witness the following quotation from the eminent legal authority above-mentioned: "Jury lawlessness is the greatest corrective of law in its actual administration. The will of the state at large imposed on a reluctant community, the will of a majority imposed on a vigorous and determined minority, find the same obstacle in the local JURY that formerly confronted kings and ministers." (emphasis added)

(Dougherty, cited above, note 32, at 1130.)

*Supreme is not explained in the Constitution, however Believer is. Art. III.

*Jury lawlessness means willingness to nullify bad law.

The Right of the JURY to be Told of Its Power

Almost every JURY in the land is falsely instructed by the judge when it is told it must accept as the law that which is given to them by the court, and that the JURY can decide only the facts of the case. This is to destroy the purpose of a Common Law JURY, and to permit the imposition of tyranny upon a people.

"There is nothing more terrifying than ignorance in action."

Goethe

— engraved on a plaque at the Naval War College

"To embarrass justice by a multiplicity of laws, or to hazard it by confidence in judges, are the opposite rocks on which all civil institutions have been wrecked."

Johnson I — engraved in Minnesota State Capitol Outside the Supreme Court Chambers

". . . The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

II Corinthians 3:6

"It is error alone which needs the support of government. Truth can stand by itself."

Thomas Jefferson

The JURY'S options are by no means limited to the choices presented to it in the courtroom. "The jury gets its understanding as to the arrangements in the legal system from more than one voice. There is the formal communication from the 'judge.' There is the informal communication from the total culture — literature; current comment, conversation;

LAWS, FACTS AND EVIDENCE!

Without the power to decide what facts, law and evidence are applicable, JURIES cannot be a protection to the accused. If people acting in the name of government are permitted by JURORS to dictate any law whatever, they can also unfairly dictate what evidence is admissible or inadmissible and thereby prevent the WHOLE TRUTH from being considered. Thus if government can manipulate and control both the law and evidence, the issue of fact becomes virtually irrelevant. In reality, true JUSTICE would be denied leaving us with a trial by government and not a trial by JURY!

HOW DOES TYRANNY BEGIN? WHY ARE THERE SO MANY LAWS?

Heroes are men of glory who are so honored because of some heroic deed. People often out of gratitude yield allegiance to them. Honor and allegiance are nice words for power! Power and allegiance can only be held rightfully by trust as a result of continued character.

When people acting in the name of government violate ethics, they break trust with "WE THE PEOPLE." The natural result is for "WE THE PEOPLE" to pull back power (honor and allegiance).

The loss of power creates fear for those losing the power. Fearing the loss of power, people acting in the name of government often seek to regain or at least hold their power. Hence, to legitimatize their quest for control, laws and force are often instituted.

Unchecked power is the foundation of tyranny. It is the JUROR'S duty to use the JURY ROOM as a vehicle to stem the tide of oppression and tyranny. To prevent bloodshed by peacefully removing power from those who have abused it. The JURY is the primary

In Alaska very few clients get a fair hearing.
Ms. Brink you're quoted "If the client says fight, we fight." Not True + here is why.
Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct, hereby ARPC. Rules Lawyers sign an oath to uphold. Rules set up to go against the client. Rules set up to purposely lose cases Rules client do not know about before they hire the lawyer. Rules that are unfair + unjust.
Rules that lead to revenues for the adversary systems (Court systems) + law enforcement.
And the lawyer.

The following pages are points, questions + facts about the wording, sentence framing, gray areas, etc. about ARPC.

Cris Tyree ; Ronald C. Huckstep

ALASKA RULES OF PROFESSIONEL CONDUCT

1. Page 1, a lawyer is an officer of the legal system. Isn't this a conflict of interest? As officer of legal system, a lawyer's loyalties lie with the adversary system + it's revenues. Also this leads to protection of law enforcement (police, troopers, etc). So how is client fairly represented? Will you, the lawyer, discuss the client's affairs, case, evidence, etc with judges, court clerks, police, etc? Isn't this why several charges are made so client will plead to at least one, leading to revenue for court?
2. Page 1, "assure justice is being done" Why use the word "assure"? This is a gray area + allows for lawyer to go behind client's back. It gives "play room" for lawyer. No client "assumes", they "expect".
3. Page 1, "Virtually all difficult ethical problems arise from conflict between a lawyer's responsibilities to client, to the legal system, etc." Why is the legal system part of the conflict? Sometimes the legal system is the problem because they are violating ones' Constitutional Rights, so one may want to sue the legal system, but lawyer's can't represent a client well with lawyer's loyalties lying with adversary system + law enforcement. Why hire a lawyer?

4. Page 2, "close relationship between the profession, the processes of government + law enforcement." Again conflict of interest. If police lie or tamper with evidence, how can the lawyer serve his client + the police? Where is the fair hearing? Why the processes of government? In America we have the Constitution of the United States. Simple Law. So since the government + law enforcement are violating Constitutional Rights, where is the fair hearing? How can lawyer represent client in lawsuit against the government, fair + just? Again lawyer can not serve two masters.

5. Page 2, "Every lawyer is responsible for observance of ARPC. A lawyer should also aid in securing their observance by other lawyers." We live in America!! This is Nazi!! Let's definitly make sure client doesn't get great representation or fairness!! No Lawyer should have to watch another lawyer + have to "tattle tale."

6. Page 3, "The attorney-client privilege is that of the client, not the lawyers." Another gray area. Leaves room for indiscretion on lawyers end. The privilege is the lawyers's, for being hired by client.
7. Page 4, "The client shall be advised of the lawyer's limited knowledge in the field to which advice is sought." Are lawyer's really honest with the client on this? Do lawyers tell client the Constitution of the United States is not allowed in Alaska Courts? Do lawyers tell clients about Page 5, Rule 1.2c on limiting scope? Do lawyers explain Criminal Rule 11a + how they conned Alaska Representatives to pass as law? Do lawyers tell client about loyalties to adversary system + lawenforcement?
8. Page 5, lawyer discusses waiving jury trial + appeal. Why would client want to give up his Constitutionally secured right to a jury of his peers? Why mention appeal? Does lawyer know he's going to lose case?
9. Page 5, Rule 1.2c, limit scope. This is not in the interest of client. This is a basic right also secured in Constitution, Bill of Rights. Clients want all their evidence". Again this is conflict of interest, protecting law enforcement, not client. Which brings us to the Killer sentence in ARPC.

10. Page 9. "However, a lawyer is not bound to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client." This sentence says it all!! Do your lawyers share this with the client? As you are suppose to be honest, fair, truthful humans with morals, values & ethics.

11. Not in ARPC, but Alaska Bar Association (ABA) conning Alaska Representatives to pass Criminal Rule 16a. Why would ABA want this law passed when it goes against this clients best interest? Does this law show loyalty, honesty, truthfulness, ethics, values, morals, kindness, love from Alaska Bar Association (Lawyers, Judges), law enforcement & our fine Alaska Representatives? No, it shows their evilness. Their cruelty. Their GREED.

We have other points & questions on ARPC.

Lawmakers Cite Economic Crisis in Effort to Ban Death Penalty

A number of state legislators are citing the country's economic woes as a reason to overturn capital punishment laws

Colorado, Kansas, Maryland, Montana, New Hampshire, Nebraska and New Mexico are among those states actively considering abolishing executions as a way to cut costs.

In Alaska news, Governor Palin is interested in a new state crime lab. While I do not have enough information to debate this issue, it seems convenient that instituting the death penalty in Alaska would require new facilities. (see testimony from Monday's Judiciary hearing) Of course this could just be a coincidence.

Economic stimulus? Yes! Attorneys and support staff. New crime lab.

A step in the right direction – or a giant leap backwards?

Since I'm unable to tune in to the hearing today, I just hope and pray that your comfort level will not include our state choosing to enact this legislation. I know we "don't care how they do it Outside," but surely we can be open to learning a little and continuing to lead the country as the Territorial Legislature chose in 1957. Sometimes the wisdom of the past is just that – wisdom.

When people who might not be paying attention right now, realize that your committee is discussing when it's okay to execute a 16 year old or a pregnant woman or a retarded peson, I suspect you will be sitting in a very uncomfortable position.

The best way out is a quick "no." Please vote "no" on HB9.

1) In 1957 the Alaska Territorial Legislature outlawed the death penalty. Our wise forefathers felt strongly enough to do this – without the knowledge of "mistakes" that we have today. I am very sad that my state, with full knowledge of the execution of innocent people, is even considering HB9. With full knowledge and proof that innocent people have been killed in capital punishment states, HB 9 is still alive. Innocent people killed with the best intentions, fortified by jury decisions and all those safeguards. But none of these justifications can ever right a wrongful death. I strongly believe that this is only one reason why we should not be considering HB9 – but shouldn't it be enough?

2) Looking at this through the lens of Christ's teachings, I find it even more disturbing. "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," while being Old Testament wisdom, was overridden by Jesus' words and actions as he walked on this earth. You might remember that the New Testament testifies to his actually stopping an execution that was sanctioned by the laws of his time. This was NOT a popular action at the time, but it spoke loudly to who Jesus was and what he had come to teach us.

3) At a time of financial crisis, it is mind boggling to me that our legislators are looking in this direction. Statistics (and Speaker Chenault) show that the death penalty is not a deterrent. And it is incredibly expensive. And just at the time many other states are Reversing their views, we are spending valuable legislative time, effort & money to consider instituting the death penalty. From my perspective as a 39 year Super voter Alaskan and concerned citizen, it looks like a distraction from what should be the business at hand.

In closing, I'd like to summarize my points

1) Mistakes are irrevocable. - other states set up safeguards too
2) HB 9 does not represent my Christian values (or those of the United Methodist Church, of which I am a member)
3) It's bad economics (unless you're an attorney)
4) "It's not a deterrent." (Spkr Chenault 2/23/09)

Please do not misunderstand or misrepresent my views and intent. I strongly believe there are some people who should be imprisoned for life - without parole. It just saddens me that elected officials in my beloved state, faced with monumental fiscal issues affecting each one of us and our children & grandchildren, are wanting to take, what I believe is a giant leap — backwards!

I found the conversation abhorrent at the hearing today. "How do we choose whether to execute 16 year olds?" * We'll let pregnant women deliver and then execute them. Why are our Alaskan legislators involved in this?

I urge you to vote "no" on HB9, freeing up your time & energy on the pressing issues of our State.

Dear Judiciary Committee Members,
Although it was unlikely that I would have been able to testify yesterday, it was a disappointment when the power went out in Kenai during your first hearing. I trust you will take time to read my testimony as it was sent to you, with my apologies for not having it in print, having had to resort to handwriting.
When I was debriefing with friends last evening, they too were incredulous that our state could be having a discussion about which 16 year olds are executable and how to execute a pregnant woman. Our consensus is that a bill that leads us to developing protocols for letting the mother deliver and then killing her, takes us, as a people, to a place where we shouldn't be going. And frankly, if we took out the 16 year olds, the mentally retarded, and pregnant women, it still would reflect something to which we don't want to aspire.
Additionally, unless this is part of the economic stimulus program for attorneys and support staff and crime lab, it is an enormous financial undertaking at a time of serious financial hardship in so many places on our state.
I gathered many quotes yesterday but I would like to leave you with your member John Coghill's words, "when we start talking about the death penalty we rachet up the responsiblity of the state." There is much wisdom in this statement.
Please vote down HB9.

Dear Representative Ramras,

Through you, let me thank the Judiciary Committee for allowing me the privilege to speak to the issue of House Bill 09. Unanimous among all whom I spoke with afterwards was gratefulness for the even tenor of the proceedings, and respect paid to all who offered their testimony. This note is simply to reiterate three points:

In a state whose law enforcement and investigative resources are stretched beyond the breaking point—where many locales throughout the state have no VPSO or police or trooper presence whatsoever—how can it be that the proper investigative resources can be brought to bear in those locales in a timely manner when dealing with capital crimes which bear the potential of a final solution—death to the convicted perpetrator?

Secondly, in my experience, there is less, not more resolution for the victim's family upon the occasion of an execution. There is a satisfaction of vengeance, sometimes, but the potential for anything else—even documented cases of reconciliation—are lost. Mourning the loss of their loved one, families also mourn over time for lost possibilities of making it clear to the perpetrator the depth of their loss and any hope of understanding the mind of the perpetrator.

And thirdly, related to the second, addressing what Representative Coghill intimated by his comment about "the state bearing the sword" is the point that we law-abiding citizens have surrendered our absolute freedom to the will of a governed society specifically and especially to be guided—even protected by this government of laws away from our baser motives of vengeance and retribution, especially when that vision is clouded by unimaginable and unbearable pain—and an irresistible desire for vengeance. The gentleman from Kodiak testified specifically to this point: "If someone murdered my wife I would want vengeance, absolutely, but it is still wrong." We law abiding citizens depend upon you to keep us from this wrong, and to curb our desires when we cannot ourselves.

And if I may now slip in a fourth which caused me a pause in my testimony—a pause of emotion which was a testimony in itself: The conversation about the efficacy of the death penalty does not stop when a law allowing such is passed. It is debated with a ferocity born of desperation each and every time another human being is put to death by the state. I have witnessed this desperation over and over at the gates of San Quentin, and the vitriol which poisons the social fabric of our community life for weeks before and after each execution.

There are of course dozens of reasons besides these few which I might make against the passage of HB 9, but I leave those to more eloquent voices, and review only the testimony you were so kind to allow me. Please know that you and each of the Committee remain in our prayers. Every blessing and kindness;

Dear Representative Ramras,

I am writing this letter as written testimony for HB9 regarding the introduction of the death penalty to our great State of Alaska. I have lived in Nikiski for 20 years.

Theoretically the death penalty has a certain logic; however, what is theory and what is real is not always the same thing. Theoretically it would deter crime. In reality that does not appear to be the case. Please review the 2006 FBI Crime Report. Consistent with previous years, the regions of the country that have the highest execution rates continue to have the highest murder rates. In addition a nation wide survey of police chiefs, the majority did not see the death penalty as an effective tool in law enforcement. For the few (1%) that did, 3 times as many named reducing guns, 10 times as many named more police officers, 17 as many named jobs and better economy and 31 times as many named reducing drug abuse as the primary focus need to reduce violent crimes. Theoretically it would save money, as we wouldn't be housing those prisoners for life. The reality of states that do have the death penalty show a very different picture. In December 2003 the Kansas Performance Audit Report stated capital cases are 70% more expensive than non-capital offenses, including the costs of incarceration. In 2005 the LA Times reported California taxpayers pay $114 million per year beyond the costs of keeping convicts locked up for life for their death penalty system.

Sharing evidence that suggests the death penalty is extremely ~~and~~ expensive and ineffective, while important, is not my main reason for writing this testimony. My main reason is this: I believe our judiciary system is one of the best in the world, but it is dishonest for me to say it operates perfectly. Because it is a system operated by human beings and human beings are fallible, the system is fallible. There are cases where a person has been found guilty of a crime they ~~did not~~ committed by another. There are cases in our legal system where someone has been found guilty of a capital offense when they are innocent. Some of these cases have been discovered in time. Since 1973 over 120 people have been released from death row with evidence of their innocense. Since the turn of the millenia, there has been an average of 5 exonerations per year. Each year we've been able to identify approximately 5 people mistakenly put on death row. It is good to recognize and acknowledge that we have checks and balances which help us more accurately and fairly serve justice. It is what makes our justice system the best in the world. However, it should also remind us that our system is not infallible. If the death penalty becomes a part of our state's legal system, at some point, we the people of Alaska will sanction the killing of an innocent person. It is likely that we will do so unwittingly, but it will be inevitable. It would be a great and tragic irony to make it so important to kill wrongdoers for killing innocent people that we put ourselves at risk for doing that very wrong. Our great state has managed to avoid this tragic irony by being one of 14 states without the death penalty. Because of this, we are a more fair and just state than the majority in the union. My hope is that you will ~~continue to~~ have us continue to be so. Please do not let this bill out of the judiciary commitee.

To: Rep. Jay Ramras
Subject: RE: HB9 Opposition

Written Summary of Testimony by Barbara Brink before the House Judiciary Committee on February 23, 2008 HB 9

My name is Barbara Brink and I believe that House Bill 9 (the death penalty) is the wrong approach from a practical public policy point of view. My opinions have been shaped by my 23 years as a public defender in the state of Alaska, first as a trial lawyer, then for eight years as the Deputy Director, and nine years as the Director. As Representative Coghill wondered, based upon my experience, we do not have a system of justice that we can rely upon with confidence in the state of Alaska.

This is not to disparage the excellent people within criminal the system, from the eyewitnesses that report crime, to those that investigate, those that prosecute, those that defend, and those that conduct the trials in these cases. The point is that we are all human, and a human system of justice makes mistakes.

Since 1972, 124 death row inmates in 25 states were found to be actually innocent and exonerated. These were people who had their cases decided beyond a reasonable doubt by juries; people whose regular appeals had been exhausted; people who were scheduled to be executed by the government. Please do not think that these exonerations prove the system works. These people were exonerated despite the system, by the dedication of journalists and lawyers, family and friends, and advances in technology that fortunately occurred before the government killed them. At least 8 documented innocent people were not so fortunate, and were executed. If Alaska engages in the risky business of capital punishment, our state at some time will get it wrong and kill an innocent person.

Some people argue that current DNA technology will prevent any wrongful executions. However, technology is always advancing. Last week the National Academy of Science released a report casting serious doubt on the very types of "scientific" evidence that has been used for years to convict. All of these techniques were hailed at the time of their use as reliable and trustworthy. This includes fingerprint, firearm and bite mark identification, and blood spatter, hair and handwriting analysis. The study, ordered by Congress, found that evidence around the country tended to be handled by poorly trained technicians who exaggerated the accuracy of their methods and their findings in court, in part because of the universal alignment with law enforcement.

This is not a new discovery. In 2004 the FBI had to notify hundreds of people who were potentially wrongfully convicted that the technique of matching the chemical make up of bullets was in fact not reliable and that the scientific experts who had made such claims had "overtestified."

We can assume that technology will continue to advance. We cannot assume that the technology of today is infallible. And even as DNA technique becomes more and more refined, less than 10% of all violent crimes involve DNA evidence. As fallible as human beings are, we should neither give ourselves nor our government the power to decide who lives and who dies.

Trying to prevent an irreversible mistake in the capital system has resulted in an expensive and cumbersome system. I think adoption of this system is I bad idea from a practical public policy point of view. It simply costs more to kill a person than it does top keep them in prison for life. The fiscal notes of the Public Defender Agency and the Office of Public Advocacy are not an ideal. They are constitutionally required. The U.S. Supreme Court has set requirements for heightened due process when the result can be death. Two lawyers with death penalty experience are required for every case. A mitigation team and investigation is required for every case. Expert witnesses and a thorough appellate review is required in every case. This costs

States that have had the death penalty for years are considering abolishing it as they reassess the costs of the system versus the benefits.
New Jersey found it has spent 253 million dollars over and above regular criminal justice costs since 1983 and has as of yet executed no one in their capital punishment system. Many question what better uses that quarter of a billion dollars could have been put to in terms of more law enforcement personnel and public safety, and in terms of prevention such as schools, job training or drug treatment. Similar analysis has been conducted in Florida, Texas, California and Maryland as tough economic times force state to reconsider these huge expenditures. It is generally accepted that the death penalty does not deter murder. Nationally, the states and regions that do not execute their citizens have a lower homicide rate than those that do. States are also wondering if they could use these funds to actually assist murder victims' families more directly in the areas of restitution and grief counseling.

Maryland's former Speaker of the House, Casper Taylor Jr. , who spent 28 years in Maryland's House of Delegates, recently wrote an op-ed piece after a study of the capital system he helped to re-impose in 1978.
"Today, that vote haunts me, " he said. Since reinstatement, Maryland's 30 years of experience with the death penalty have been a colossal failure."

Please allow Alaska to benefit from the history and experience of the rest of the country. The establishment of capital punishment in Alaska would be a terrible mistake.

Dear Representative Ramras:

I am strongly opposed to the death penalty. Killing someone who has committed a crime, even a heinous crime, is deeply flawed. Each and every human being deserves the respect of life. If even one person is put to death in error because he/she was not guilty of the accused crime we have taken away every tidbit of dignity and decency that we, as humans, have.

I urge you and the other members of the Judiciary Committee to oppose moving HB 9 out of committee and allow all Alaskans to maintain respect for life.

HB 13 "An Act relating to property crimes"

The purpose of House Bill 13 is to raise the threshold amounts that distinguish felony theft from misdemeanor theft, and further distinguish class A misdemeanor theft from class B misdemeanor theft.

For example, it is a class C felony to commit theft of property valued at $500 or more (up to $25,000) under current law; it is a class A misdemeanor to commit theft of property valued under $500 (but over $50). These amounts were adopted in 1978 and, like the other threshold amounts, have not been adjusted for inflation since that time.

House Bill 13 would raise these threshold amounts to more accurately reflect their current value.

House Bill 13 raises the dollar amounts associated with a variety of property crimes. The increases that have the potential to impact the court system are those that raise from $500 to $1,500 the value of property that must be stolen or damaged before a felony crime is committed. These changes will impact the court if they result in a significant number of cases moving from the superior court, where the cost per case is high, to the district court, where the cost per case is lower. However, a review of available information shows that, because of the way these cases are prosecuted and processed, the majority of property crimes impacted by this bill are already resolved in the district court. Because of this, this bill will not have a measurable impact on the court system. What it will do, however, is change the way these cases are counted to more accurately reflect current workloads.

HB 13 raises the amount or value of property under the theft laws that are the thresholds between felony and misdemeanor theft, and between class A misdemeanor theft and class B misdemeanor theft. For example, under current law, the threshold between class C felony theft and class A misdemeanor theft is $500. HB 13 would raise this to $1,500.

It makes these changes to the various types of theft, including issuing a bad check and fraudulent use of an access device. It is anticipated this legislation will have no fiscal impact on the Department.

Passage of this legislation will increase the minimum amounts for property values associated with property thefts.

This legislation should impact the number of offenders incarcerated under this statute by changing what is currently a felony conviction to a misdemeanor conviction. As of December 31, 2008 there were 203 offenders incarcerated under the existing legislation but the department cannot determine which of those would be considered a misdemeanor under this revised legislation. Although the fiscal impact is indeterminate, it is anticipated that the overall impact should be a reduction in the total number and cost of incarcerated offenders. (continued on page 2)

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

At this time, data is not available for the department to calculate the number of offenders that would be now be sentenced as misdemeanors under this bill. The department will continue to work to determine the number of offenders that could potentially be impacted by passage of this legislation. A revised fiscal note may be submitted at a later date if appropriate.

Re: House Bill 13

Dear Representative Gruenberg, Jr. and Ms. Laffen:

I write in response to your request for comments on House Bill 13. I have reviewed the pending legislation and discussed it with senior victim's advocate, Katherine J. Hansen.

The Alaska Office of Victims' Rights ("OVR") only has jurisdiction to assist crime victims involved in felony level property offenses [See, Alaska Statue 24.65.100(a)].

Since House Bill 13 increases the dollar amount of property constituting a felony offense, the bill stands to potentially decrease the number of crime victims eligible for OVR assistance. Under the current law, for example, a crime victim who has had $800.00 worth of property stolen is eligible for OVR assistance; under House Bill 13, the victim would not be eligible since the crime would be a misdemeanor.

In addition, crime victims, like criminal defendants, tend to be disproportionately poor. See, U.S. Department of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Criminal Victimization in the United States, tbl. 14 (2006) (finding higher victimization rates at lower income levels). A $500.00 property offense (particularly during difficult economic times) could be considered a meaningful deprivation of a victim's property interest warranting felony level prosecution.

The categorization of property offenses in House Bill 13 stands to reduce collection resources available to crime victims. In general, misdemeanor property crimes in the Third Judicial District are prosecuted by the Municipality of Anchorage which has very limited resources to help victims collect restitution judgments. Lastly, misdemeanor probationers are unsupervised and thus less likely to pay restitution judgments.

If you have any questions or concerns regarding these comments please do not hesitate to contact me. The OVR stands ready to contribute positively to improving the administration of criminal justice throughout Alaska.

Respectfully submitted,

D. Victor Kester
Executive Director

HB 13 – Bad public policy

I recently learned of HB 13 which proposes increasing the dollar amounts assigned to degrees of Theft and Concealment of Merchandise offenses three to five times more than current law – raising the A Misdemeanor threshold from $50 to $250; and the Felony threshold from $500 to $1500.

Initially, I questioned what is to be accomplished by passage of the bill. I wondered if it was thought that changing current law would reduce the workload of police officers, prosecutors, or the courts. I wondered if it was proposed in order to make enforcement of law more efficient; somehow providing more effective protection for our communities; or, insuring greater vindication of citizens victimized by these crimes. Admittedly, I could find no positive conclusions to these questions. In effect, the only persons benefitted by HB 13 are criminals.

As an 18-year Alaska State Trooper I have charged numerous individuals with theft crimes. My experience has taught me that, although our Courts and District Attorneys are genuinely concerned that all cases are fully prosecuted, reality is that they cannot address their case loads without some dismissals and plea agreements. Consequently, a large number of B Misdemeanor cases are dismissed and many felony charges are reduced to misdemeanors. HB 13 does nothing to alleviate this problem and, in fact, will likely exacerbate it over time. By raising the A/B Misdemeanor threshold to $250 (five times current law), "petty" thefts or incidents of shoplifting will transform into financially crippling losses without legal recognition of their significance. Additionally, the Misdemeanor/Felony threshold increase significantly eases the consequences of theft due to plea agreements. This then, has high potential of increasing the number of these crimes because of the ease of obtaining large amounts of property with decreased consequence.

Criminal laws are, and should be, created to set parameters on socially unacceptable behavior by discouraging tendencies toward criminal thought and shielding from victimization. Often, property crimes are given low priority and little consideration is given to the emotions these victims experience. Feelings of anger, violence, vulnerability, retaliation, and being violated are among some of the strongest. When victims fail to see tangible results of an investigation or prosecution further frustration, distrust, and isolation can follow. Increasing the thresholds for these crimes will likely amplify this problem and leave potential victims at greater risk of larger losses.

Some may argue that raising the thresholds will prevent misguided youthful offenders from unnecessarily being labeled as felons. We must remember that it is not a felony charge, but rather a felony conviction, that carries the label. Additionally, those who offend under the age of 18 will realize a fresh start at that age. And, raising the thresholds may actually inhibit early intervention by dismissing serious misbehavior as an insignificant misdemeanor.

Others may argue that the thresholds addressed in HB13 should be reconsidered because of their age, I believe it is more important to remember the significance that $250 or $500 is to each of us. I dare say that all of us carefully budget before spending these amounts and when these amounts go missing due to loss, theft, or damage, there is significant impact upon us – particularly in today's economy. In short, HB13 simply attempts to inflation-proof these crimes. This should never be the motivator for altering and passing law.

Thank you for your consideration of these reasons to oppose HB 13.

Dear Representative Coghill:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I am writing regarding your introduction of House Bill 13, relating to property crimes.

The APOA Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and is unanimously opposed to this bill.

We oppose any effort to raise the amounts in property crimes. $500 is still a significant loss to many people. Raising the dollar amount of the felony level theft reduces the ability to charge individuals with a felony. Current law provides prosecutors the opportunity and flexibility to plea down to a misdemeanor in the interest of justice. With the current state of the economy, $500 is a reasonable threshold and we see no need to change it.

We urge you to reconsider this legislation. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515 if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Angella Long
State President

HB 15

"An Act relating to prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date."

Our automobile insurance rates illustrate the well-established fact that younger and less experience drivers have more vehicle accidents than older drivers. Today, a growing body of evidence shows that use of cell phones increases risk of accident for all drivers, but especially for younger ones.

Each year, Alaska sees an increase in the number of motor vehicle accidents involving the use of cellular phones by drivers. Between 2002 and 2006 there were 289 traffic accidents involving cell phones in Alaska. The largest group, about 35 percent, involved drivers between 16 and 20 years old, although they make up only about 7.6% of Alaskan drivers.

Additionally, people between 16 and 24 are the most frequent cell phone users. While drivers age 21 or older with cell phones are about equally likely to use their cell phones for outgoing calls as they are to take incoming calls, cell phone-using drivers age 16-20 are more likely to use their cell phones to take incoming calls than they are to make outgoing calls while driving.

Other statistics show:

- 16 and 17 year old drivers have the highest fatality rate in car crashes.
- For the 16-to-20 age group, the crash fatality rate in 2004 was nearly twice as high as other age groups
- Motor vehicle crashes are number 1 cause of death among teenagers

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) has gathered data that nearly 25% of all vehicle accidents directly involve the use of cell phones. By limiting a minor's use of a cell phone while driving, we can make our roads safer for everyone.

Please join me in supporting House Bill 15 to make our roads safer.

Science of Safe Driving Among Adolescents

Special Supplement to Injury Prevention

June 20, 2006

Teen Driver Facts

- Traffic crashes occur disproportionately among newly driving young adults with one in four crash fatalities in the US involving 16 to 24 year olds (FARS)[1].

- The crash fatality rate (crash fatalities/100,000 population) is highest for 16 to 17 year olds – with the first six months after licensure the most dangerous – and remains high through age 24[2].

- For the 16-to-20 age group, the crash fatality rate in 2004 was nearly twice as high as other age groups: 27deaths/100,000 population for 16 to 20 year olds, as compared with 15 for 25 to 34 year olds and 11 for those 55 to 64 and 18 for those 74 years and older[3].

- Approximately two-thirds (63 percent) of teen (13 to 19 year olds) passenger deaths occur when other teenagers are driving. Child passengers (under age 16 years) driven by teenaged (16 to 19 year olds) drivers have three times the risk of injury in a crash than children driven by adults. Overall, 9 percent of child fatalities occur with a driver under age 19[4, 5].

- US research demonstrates that the "overwhelming majority" of crashes involving teen drivers were due to failure to employ safe operating practices and failure to recognize the inherent risk rather than "thrill seeking" or deliberate risk-taking[6].

LEGISLATIVE RESEARCH REPORT

FEBRUARY 13, 2009

REPORT NUMBER 09.141

CELLULAR PHONE USE BY TEEN DRIVERS

PREPARED FOR REPRESENTATIVE BERTA GARDNER

BY TIM SPENGLER, LEGISLATIVE ANALYST

You asked for information about states that have enacted laws prohibiting cellular (cell) phone use by teenagers while driving. Specifically, you wanted to know the effectiveness of such laws.[1]

In 2003, the National Traffic Safety Board recommended that states limit or bar young drivers from using cell phones. As of January 2009, seventeen states and the District of Columbia have enacted legislation restricting novice drivers from talking on cell phones while driving.[2] Six states (California, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York, Utah, and Washington) ban the use of hand-held (as opposed to hands-free) cell phones by all drivers regardless of age. We include, as Attachment A, a table from the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS) that shows states' cell phone laws (not just for teenagers), including whether states specifically ban text messaging.[3] Also in Attachment A, we include a February 2009 question and answer sheet from the IIHS on cell phones and driving. It provides a thorough overview of the myriad issues surrounding this topic.

According to Dr. Anne McCartt, Senior Vice President of the IIHS, there has been no research on whether there are fewer accidents in jurisdictions where cell phone use by teen drivers have been banned.[4] She explains that such research would be nearly impossible to conduct as police crash reports do not reliably report drivers' cell phone use. Additionally, police must rely on the accounts of drivers, many of whom would be unlikely to report phone use prior to a crash—especially in jurisdictions where such use is illegal.

[1] Background for this report came from numerous sources including the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (www.iihs.org), the Highway Safety Research Center at the University of North Carolina (www.hsrc.unc.edu), the National Transportation Safety Board (www.ntsb.gov), and the National Conference of State Legislatures (www.ncsl.org).

[4] Anne McCartt can be reached at (703) 247-1534. All of our other sources concurred that no research has been conducted on the effectiveness of cell phone bans in limiting accidents.

The only study that has evaluated a cell phone law pertaining to teen drivers (it does not track accidents) was co-authored by Dr. McCartt. Entitled, "Short-term Effects of a Teenage Driver Cell Phone Restriction," the study was conducted jointly by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety and the Highway Safety Research Center at the University of North Carolina. The study examined whether teens in North Carolina changed their driving habits after that state enacted a cell phone ban for drivers younger than 18. The two-part study coupled researchers' observations of teenage drivers with telephone surveys of teens and their parents. The researchers found that the legislation did not lower the use of cell phone by teen drivers. One to two months prior to the ban's December 2006 start, 11 percent of teen drivers were observed using cell phone as they left school while driving automobiles. Five months after the ban took effect, almost 12 percent of teen drivers were observed using phones.[5] Clearly the law did not produce the intended effects. We include a copy of the study as Attachment B.

The study further found that lack of enforcement plays a significant role in the poor results observed in North Carolina. Most of the parents and teenagers surveyed for the study reported that they believed enforcement was rare or non-existent. Dr. McCartt asserts that law enforcement is supportive of legislative efforts to limit cell phone use by drivers but enforcing these laws is highly problematic. She puts it this way

> Cell phone bans for teen drivers are difficult to enforce. Drivers with phones to their ears aren't hard to spot, but it's nearly impossible for police officers to see hands-free devices or correctly guess how old drivers are.

The survey also found that about only around two-thirds of all teenagers and around 40 percent of adults even knew that the law had been enacted. Perhaps better public education would have improved compliance with the law.

Arthur Goodwin, Senior Research Associate at the Highway Safety Research Center, concurs with Dr. McCartt that the North Carolina study (in which he participated) clearly shows that the state's cell phone ban was not effective.[6] He does not believe such laws are without merit, however. Mr. Goodwin likened the situation to when seat belt laws came to the fore in the United States; it took quite a while to educate the public and for people to change their habits but eventually most did. He believes this may be the case with cell phone laws—that it will take time and continued efforts for these laws to become solidified in our national consciousness. Another aspect Mr. Goodwin stresses is the need for parents, rather than law enforcement, to be the prime enforcers of cell phone restrictions. This can be tricky, however, as parents generally want their sons and daughters to have cell phones with them for safety reasons, which of course allows them the opportunity to use the phones while driving. Legislating greater parental involvement is likely impossible.

While there are no data linking cell phone bans with lower accident rates, Mr. Goodwin directed us to a 2005 IIHS study from Western Australia that found drivers (not just teen drivers) who use cell phones increased their likelihood of being in a crash fourfold. In the study, cell phone billing

[5] Cell phone use remained steady at about 13 percent during this time period at comparison sites in South Carolina, where teen driver cell phone used is not restricted. Interestingly, although the law was not obeyed in North Carolina, it was supported verbally by 95 percent of parents, and 74 percent of teens when they were interviewed on the telephone.

records were used to verify phone use by drivers who had been in crashes.[7] According to Mr. Goodwin, the accident potential when driving while using a cell phone is roughly equivalent to the risk of a driver operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. We include the paper that examines the Australia study as Attachment C.

A 2006 report from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) found that drivers who are distracted (i.e. putting on makeup, disciplining children, eating lunch, talking on a cell phone) are three times more likely to be involved in a crash than drivers who are being attentive.[8] According to the study, the use of cell phones was the most common distraction. Additionally, the report found that drivers between 18-20 were four times as likely to be in a crash as drivers over 35. According to Jacqueline Glassman, acting administrator of the NHTSA when the study was released,

> This important research illustrates the potentially dire consequences that can occur while driving distracted or drowsy. It's crucial that drivers always be alert when on the road.

We include, as Attachment D, a bulleted summary from NHTSA that highlights the study's findings.[9]

Notwithstanding the lack of specific statistical evidence, all the experts with whom we spoke, and literature we reviewed, support states enacting laws restricting the use of cell phones while driving. While such legislation is difficult to enforce, it does send a message that the behavior is unsafe. It is clear from the Australian and NHTSA studies that restricting not just teenagers but all drivers from using cell phones while driving is likely to reduce roadway accidents.

We hope you find this information to be useful. Please let us know if you have questions or need additional information.

[7] According to our sources, the Australian study was consistent with a 1997 study from Canada that also utilized cell phone billing records. There have been no similar studies in the United States in part because law enforcement agencies (short of a subpoena) cannot access cell phone records to verify that a driver was using his or her call phone at the time of an accident.

[8] The Transportation Institute at Virginia Tech University was also involved in the study.

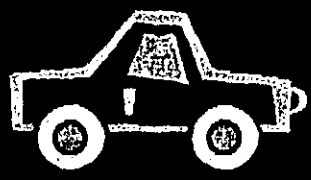
Cell Phones and Highway Safety



National Conference of State Legislatures

2006 State Legislative Update

By Matt Sundeen

March 2007

In 2006, cell phones in motor vehicles continued to be a significant traffic safety concern for state legislatures. However, although phones in cars grabbed the most headlines, many state lawmakers now have broadened the topic to include a wider variety of driver distractions and potential regulations. This report provides information about cell phones and driving and the larger driver distraction debate. It examines the latest statistics and studies, details relevant laws and legislative activity, and analyzes the most critical issues.

Driver Distraction and Cell Phones

Most experts agree that distracted driving is a substantial problem. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), in 2005, 43,443 people died and approximately 2.7 million people were injured in an estimated 6.16 million police-reported motor vehicle traffic crashes.[1] NHTSA estimates that each year, motor vehicle crashes cost Americans approximately $230 billion in economic damages.[2] Driver inattention is a leading factor in these crashes. A 2006 study published by NHTSA and the Virginia Tech Transportation Institute (VTTI) estimated that nearly 80 percent of crashes and 65 percent of near crashes involve some form of driver inattention.[3] As a percentage of national statistics, the NHTSA and VTTI estimate would mean that driver inattention causes as many as 4.9 million crashes, 34,000 fatalities and 2.1 million injuries each year and as much as $184 billion in economic damage.

Although many agree that driver awareness—or lack thereof—is a significant concern, there is little agreement over which distractions pose the most significant threat or what should be done about them. Driver distraction has been a potential problem since cars were invented. A virtually limitless number of events, activities and objects, both inside and outside the motor vehicle, can divert a driver from his or her primary task—the safe operation of the vehicle. A January 2007 survey by Nationwide Mutual Insurance found that 31 percent of respondents admitted they daydream while driving; 19 percent acknowledge that they fix their hair, text or instant message; 14 percent comfort or discipline children; and 8 percent drive with a pet in their lap. Surveyed drivers also confessed to changing seats with passengers, reading books, watching movies, writing grocery lists, nursing babies, putting in contact lenses, painting toenails, urinating out the car window, changing shoes and shaving while driving.

Recent interest in driver focus seems to stem almost exclusively from the introduction of cell phones into the driving environment. Two decades ago, cell phones were a novelty item in cars and a non-factor in traffic safety. Less than 900,000 people in the United States subscribed to wireless services, few people lugged around the pricey, shoebox-sized devices, and few traffic safety experts mentioned driver distraction as a safety concern.

Much has changed in 20 years. According to the wireless industry association, CTIA, the number of wireless subscribers in the United States has grown to more than 230 million.[4] Recent studies confirm something most of us already know—many people are using their phones in the driving environment, and their popularity in the car continues to grow. A December 2005 NHTSA observational survey estimated that, at any given daylight moment, approximately 10 percent of U.S. drivers are using some type of phone, whether hand-

Cell phone use by younger drivers also continues to be a popular target for state legislators. Lawmakers in 13 states—Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, New Jersey, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia—and the District of Columbia currently prohibit or restrict novice driver cell phone use. All current novice driver laws prohibit young drivers—those under age 18 or 21—who only hold a learner's or instructional driving permit from using any type of wireless device while operating a motor vehicle, except in emergency situations. In 2006, legislators in 28 states considered similar proposals, with new laws passing in Minnesota, North Carolina, Rhode Island and West Virginia. Although most of the 2006 bills linked novice driver restrictions to a learner's permit or intermediate license, several bills would have prohibited all teen drivers, regardless of license status, from using wireless devices.

Eleven states—Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Tennessee and Texas—and the District of Columbia prohibit school bus drivers from using phones while operating a school bus. Legislators in five states proposed school bus driver phone restrictions in 2004, while legislatures in seven states considered such measures in 2005.

State legislatures also are taking an active role in improving the collection of data and information about the involvement of cell phones and other wireless devices in crashes. At least 27 states and the District of Columbia now require some or all law enforcement officers to collect information about cell phone involvement in crashes, up from just two states in 1998 (see table 1). In many states, such data collection is required by statute. In addition, legislatures or individual legislators in at least nine states—California, Delaware, Louisiana, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Wisconsin—approved or asked for studies about the effects of wireless phones on traffic safety in their jurisdictions. The Pennsylvania General Assembly's Joint State Government Commission published a report on driver distraction and public safety in December 2001,[21] and a special legislative task force in Delaware published a report on driver distractions in 2003.[22] Washington passed a bill in 2005 that requires state police to track in accident report forms information about the involvement of wireless communication devices in motor vehicle crashes. The measure also requires the state police to include this information in its annual report of traffic safety statistics.

States also are moving to assert authority over the distracted driving issue. Legislatures in 10 states have moved to restrict local cell phone laws. Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon and Utah preempt local jurisdictions from restricting cell phone use while driving. This move was significant in Florida, where several local communities, including Miami-Dade County, had prohibited the use of hand-held phones while driving. Utah's law, enacted in 2006, pre-empted a prohibition on hand-held phones in Sandy, Utah.

Four other states—California, Florida, Illinois and Massachusetts—have enacted measures related to cell phone use while driving. California requires that rental cars with embedded cell phone equipment provide written instructions on the safe use of the cell phone. Florida and Illinois require that drivers who use headsets with their phones can use only a headset that blocks sound to one ear. Massachusetts generally allows cell phone use, provided the driver keeps at least one hand on the steering wheel at all times. Other states have considered legislation to increase driver negligence for being involved in a crash while using a cell phone; however, no state has passed such a proposal.

An emerging trend in legislation is to address multiple behaviors—not only cell phone use—on the road. Washington, D.C., prohibits several potential distracted driver behaviors, including reading, writing, personal grooming, interacting with pets or unsecured cargo, using personal communications technologies, or engaging in other activities that cause distractions. Connecticut's cell phone law, enacted in June 2005, includes a broad distraction provision that prohibits drivers from engaging in any activity not related to the actual operation of a motor vehicle in a manner that interferes with the safe operation of such vehicle on any highway. Seven other states considered broad distraction bills in 2006.

Other state legislatures have examined driver use of televisions and DVD players (see appendix B). At least 38 states restrict or prohibit televisions in motor vehicles. California and Louisiana restrict the placement of DVD players and similar entertainment devices to locations out of the vision of the driver. Illinois prohibits any visual media technology, other than a navigational system, to be located at points forward of the driver's seat. Tennessee and Virginia forbid the display of pornographic videos in cars. In addition, Virginia prohibits the display of a video or motion picture in front of the driver's seat or within view of the driver. Legislatures in 14 states in 2006 considered legislation related to the use of televisions, DVD players or videos in cars.

Federal Action

As of February, 2007 the federal government had not acted on the distracted driving issue. Legislation considered by Congress in 2003 and 2001 failed to make it out of committee. Several federal agencies have studied the effects of wireless phones on traffic safety. In June 2003, the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) issued a report about a 2002 crash in Maryland that involved a young driver who was using a cell phone. According to the NTSB analysis, the crash involved multiple risk factors, and the NTSB could not determine the exact extent of the role of distraction due to wireless phone use. However, NTSB concluded that, " ... current State laws are inadequate to protect young, novice drivers from distractions that can lead to accidents."[23] The NTSB recommended that the states that do not have restrictions for young drivers enact legislation to prohibit holders of learner's permits and intermediate licenses from using interactive wireless communication devices while driving.

In the same report, NTSB recommended improvements in driver education. The NTSB concluded that the public may not be aware of the risks associated with using the wireless phone while driving. NTSB urged that, " ... all drivers should be educated about the risks of distracted driving, including the cognitive demands associated with use of interactive communication devices."[24] NTSB also urged states to improve data collection by including codes for interactive wireless communications devices on their traffic accident investigation forms.

NHTSA has long studied driver distraction and traffic safety but has not issued any regulations to address the topic. In 1997, NHTSA published a report—An Investigation of the Safety Implications of Wireless Communications in Vehicles—that summarized driver distraction research. In 2000, NHTSA conducted a driver distraction online forum and accepted public comments on driver distraction issues. NHTSA also has published several observational surveys in an attempt to document driver cell phone use.

A policy statement regarding cellular phone use while driving, posted on NHTSA's website, warned drivers of potential cell phone risks. According to the statement, " ... the primary responsibility of the driver is to operate a motor vehicle safely. The task of driving requires full attention and focus. Cell phone use can distract drivers from this task, risking harm to themselves and others. Therefore, the safest course of action is to refrain from using a cell phone while driving."[25]

Several federal agencies, national organizations, and state and local government agencies also have worked to improve data collection. In June 2003, the national Governors' Highway Safety Association released a revised edition of the Model Minimum Uniform Crash Criteria (MMUCC), which included changes intended to help gauge the effects of driver distractions. The criteria, which were developed in collaboration with NHTSA, the Federal Highway Administration, the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration, and numerous state and local agencies, describe what kinds of information states need to collect at crash scenes. The changes to the MMUCC are intended to help policymakers paint a more accurate picture of the role of cell phones and other distractions in motor vehicle crashes.

Local Action

Many counties, cities, towns and municipalities across the United States have considered restrictions on cell phone use while driving. The largest community—Chicago, Illinois—prohibits motorists from using hand-held phones while driving. More than two dozen local jurisdictions—in Florida, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Utah—have enacted similar restrictions. Local jurisdictions that have passed ordinances include: •

USA states breakdown

State	Banned?	Notes
Alabama	No
Alaska	No
Arkansas	Partial	School bus drivers are banned from using a cell phone.
Arizona	Partial	A bill to introduce a ban was lost by a 4-3 vote in the Senate Transportation Committee. Bus drivers are banned from using a cell phone
California	Yes	Beginning July 1, 2008, violators face a US$20 fine for a first offense and a US$50 ticket for subsequent infractions. Law passed Sept 2007 bans all under-18s from using a phone at all, even with handsfree kit. Text messaging while driving (inc emails) banned with effect from Jan 1st 2009.
Colorado	No	Teens with restricted licenses are banned - but can only be stopped for another violation first
Connecticut	Yes	Banned with effect from Oct. 2005 - teens are also forbidden from using handsfree kits while moving
Delaware	No	A driver can already be prosecuted for "inattentive driving" - which can include using a cell phone. Studies into the issue have been requested
District of Columbia	Yes	Banned from July 2004
Florida	Partial	State Attorney General said that cities can set local regulations - July 2001. Overturned by Governor Bush..
Georgia	Partial	School bus drivers banned from using cell phones while driving. DeKalb County has fines when crashes can be attributed to driving while using a cellphone.
Hawaii	Being debated	A bill has been introduced in Hawaii's legislature by Sen. Joseph Souki, D-Wailuku-Waiehu.
Idaho	No
Illinois	Partial	School bus drivers are banned - Chicago and Gary City Council have passed local laws banning driving without a hands-free kit.
Indiana	No	Ban proposed by State Sen. Rose Antich Carr - Jan 2004
Iowa	Being debated
Kansas	No	Bill to introduce ban failed in 2000

Kentucky	No
Louisiana	Partial	Teenagers and new drivers are banned - all drivers banned from text messaging only.
Maine	Partial	Minors and those on learner driving licenses may not use a cell phone while driving
Maryland	No	Bill to ban dropped Feb. 2001. New proposal in the House, proposed by Delegates Arnick and Mandel
Massachusetts	Partial	Bill for most users pending - but bus drivers already banned. Drivers required to keep at least one hand on the steering wheel while holding a phone.
Michigan	No
Minnesota	Partial	Teenagers and provisional drivers are banned - $100 fine plus delays in license upgrades for offenders
Mississippi	No	Legislation prevents local councils enacting their own ban.
Missouri	No
Montana	No
Nebraska	No	Bill planned by State Sen. Jim Cudaback - Jan 2004
Nevada	No	State bill to introduce ban failed April 1999. Local bill in Clark County also blocked Nov. 2001. Nevada state passed bill banning local regulations, March 2003.
New Hampshire	Partial	Not explicitly banned, but you can be prosecuted if using a cellphone when involved in an driving accident.
New Jersey	Yes	Banned from 2004, updated from March 2008 - fine US$100. Bill extended June 2008 to include text messaging.
New Mexico	Partial	Being debated - local ban in the cities of Santa Fe, Albuquerque, Taos, and Las Vegas
New York	Yes	Ban effective from Nov. 2001
North Carolina	Being debated	Study into the effects of cell phone usage while driving being carried out.
North Dakota	Being debated	Bill proposed by Sen. Harvey Tallackson, D-Grafton, Feb 2005
Ohio	Partial	The City of Cleveland is discussing a ban. Ban in place in Brooklyn.
Oklahoma	No	Bill to introduce ban failed in May 1999. Legislation prevents local councils enacting their own ban.
Oregon	Partial	Ban applies to teenagers only.
Pennsylvania	Partial	Local cities have their own laws - state legislation pending
Rhode Island	No	Governor Almond rejected a ban - July 2001. School buses are banned from using a cell phone. Proposal for a ban being debated, April 2004.

South Carolina	Partial	Bill to ban holders of a beginner's permit, conditional or special restricted driver's license passed by House committee, April 2008
South Dakota	No
Tennessee	Partial	School buses are banned from using a cell phone
Texas	No	Senate Bill 154 proposed. If passed would come into effect from 2008. A previous attempt in 2005 failed
Utah	No	Bill to introduce ban failed March 1998. Highland city planning a ban - Feb 2005
Vermont	No
Virginia	Partial	Bill banning minors passed Jan 2005. Bill banning 16-17yr olds with conditional licenses passed March 2007
Washington	Yes	Ban imposed, to come into effect from July 2008. Driving while sending text messages separately banned with effect from Jan 1st 2008
West Virginia	No	Bill proposed in 1999, but never debated
Wisconsin	No	Bill to introduce ban failed in April 1998. Bill to ban younger drivers only being debated.
Wyoming	No	Bill proposed by Rep. Floyd Esquibel but not debated

Q&As: Cellphones and driving

February 2009

Show all answers

1 | How many people use cellphones?

Cellphone use in the United States has grown quickly during the past decade. There were more than 262 million wireless cellphone subscribers, representing 84 percent of the US population, as of June 2008, according to the Cellular Telecommunications and Internet Association.[1] That's up 35 percent from 194 million in June 2005 and nearly three times more than the 97 million wireless subscribers in June 2000. Minutes of use have surged to more than 1 trillion in June 2008 from 195 billion in June 2000.

2 | Do drivers frequently use phones behind the wheel?

Yes, though it's hard to accurately determine just how many drivers use phones. Observational data from the federal government indicate that 6 percent of drivers in 2007 were using hand-held phones at any moment during the day. The 2007 use rate means that about 1 million passenger vehicles on the road at any moment during the day are driven by people talking on hand-held phones.[2]

3 | Who is most likely to talk on a cellphone while driving?

Female drivers across all age groups more frequently use hand-held cellphones than male drivers (8 percent vs. 5 percent), according to daytime observational surveys of drivers conducted nationwide in 2007. Young drivers ages 16-24 also are much more likely than other drivers to talk on hand-held cellphones. Nine percent of drivers ages 16-24 were observed talking on hand-held phones, compared with 6 percent of those ages 25-69 and 1 percent of drivers 70 and older.[2]

4 | Does using a cellphone while driving increase crash risk?

Yes. Two controlled studies now link talking on a cellphone directly to increased crash risk. A 2005 Institute study of drivers in Western Australia found cellphone users four times as likely to get into crashes serious enough to injure themselves.[3] The study used cellphone billing records to verify phone use of crash-involved drivers. Increased risk was similar for males and females, drivers younger than 30 and those 30 and older, and hands-free and hand-held phones. The findings were consistent with 1997 research that showed phone use among Canadian drivers was associated with a fourfold increase in the risk of a property damage crash. This study also used cellphone billing records.[4]

5 | Are hands-free cellphones safer?

No, at least not after the conversation begins. Both studies of crashes using cellphone billing records to verify phone use found about a fourfold increase in crash risk with conversing on both hands-free and hand-held phones.[3,4] The studies were unable to estimate crash risk from different types of hands-free devices. They also were unable to determine whether there was any benefit associated with hands-free devices while placing the call. Experimental research using driving simulators indicates that phone conversation tasks, whether using hand-held or hands-free devices, affect some measures of driving performance.[5,6] Hands-free phones may eliminate some of the physical distraction of handling phones, but the cognitive distraction from phone conversations remains.

6 | How does cellphone use affect driving performance?

An Institute review of more than 120 cellphone studies, about half of which were experimental studies using driving simulators or instrumented vehicles, found that nearly all reported that some measures of driver performance were affected by the cognitive distractions associated with cellphone tasks.[5] Phone conversation tasks typically decreased limiting nighttime driving and the number of passengers a novice driver can carry. Cellphone bans are being added to those restrictions.

See Q&A: Teenagers — graduated driver licensing

10 | Do teenagers comply with cellphone bans?

Young drivers often ignore cellphone restrictions, according to a 2008 Institute study of North Carolina's cellphone ban for young beginning drivers. The state bans the use of any telecommunications device by drivers younger than 18 under its graduated licensing system. Observed cellphone use by teenagers leaving high schools in the afternoon changed little from 1-2 months before and 5 months after the restriction took effect on Dec. 1, 2006. About 11 percent of teenage drivers were seen using phones before the law. That percentage rose slightly to 12 percent in the postlaw survey. Cellphone use remained steady at about 13 percent at comparison sites in South Carolina, which doesn't restrict teenage drivers' phone use. When observed postlaw, less than 1 percent of teenage drivers in North Carolina were using hands-free phones. About 2 percent were observed dialing or texting and about 9 percent were holding a phone to their ear.

The study coupled driver observations with telephone surveys of North Carolina parents and their teenagers. In postlaw surveys, about two-thirds of teenagers said they knew about their state's law, compared with 39 percent of parents. Three-quarters of teenagers and 95 percent of parents said they approved of the law. The proportion of teenagers who reported using phones while driving declined somewhat following the law. However, of those who owned a phone and admitted to ever talking on the phone while driving, about half admitted they used their phones, if they had driven, on the day prior to the interview. There was no evidence of focused enforcement or publicity of the law. Only 22 percent of teenagers and 13 percent of parents believed the ban was being enforced fairly often or a lot.[17]

11 | Is cellphone use more distracting to drivers than other tasks?

Evidence is mixed. For example, some experimental studies found that phone conversations are more disruptive than conversations with passengers or adjusting a radio.[6] However, two statistical analyses combining the results of multiple experimental studies found similar decrements in reaction time for conversation tasks with passengers and with hand-held or hands-free phones.[5,7] Two studies suggest that talking on cellphones or having a 0.08 percent blood alcohol concentration (BAC) — the legal threshold for impairment — has a comparable effect on some simulated driving tasks.[18,19] However, the risks associated with alcohol impairment accumulate over the entire duration of a trip, whereas the risks of cellphone use generally apply for only a portion of a trip. In addition, crash risk increases substantially at very high BACs, and the implications of the experimental studies for drivers in their own vehicles is unknown.

12 | Is texting while driving a problem?

Over 600 billion text messages were sent in 2008. This is up nearly 4 times from the number sent in 2006, according to the Cellular Telecommunications and Internet Association.[1] Among drivers 30 and younger who own cell phones, nearly 40 percent said they send or read text messages while driving, based on the findings from a survey by Nationwide Insurance. There hasn't been a lot of research on texting and driving, but two studies of young drivers using driving simulators all found that receiving, and especially sending, text messages, led to decrements in driving behavior, particularly reaction time and lane keeping ability.[20,21]

Teen Drivers

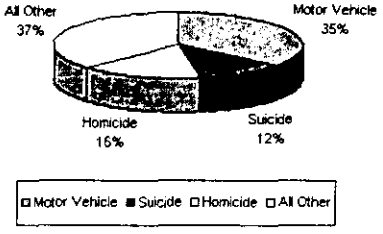
A Comprehensive Approach to Teen Driver Safety

NHTSA has developed a three-tiered strategy to prevent motor-vehicle-related deaths and injuries for teens: increasing seat belt use, implementing graduated driver licensing, and reducing teens' access to alcohol.

Leading Cause of Death for Teens

The heart of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's (NHTSA's) mission is keeping families safe on America's roadways. Young drivers, ages 15- to 20-years old, are especially vulnerable to death and injury on our roadways – traffic crashes are the leading cause of death for teenagers in America. Mile for mile, teenagers are involved in three times as many fatal crashes as all other drivers.

Leading Causes of Death for Teens



We Know the Causes

Research shows which behaviors contribute to teen-related crashes. Inexperience and immaturity combined with speed, drinking and driving, not wearing seat belts, distracted driving (cell phone use, loud music, other teen passengers, etc.), drowsy driving, nighttime driving, and other drug use aggravate this problem.

The Objective of this Site

We've designed this site to provide you with the fundamental resources and information you'll need to help promote what research clearly shows reduces teen crashes –

- Increasing seat belt use,
- Implementing graduated driver licensing, and
- Reducing teens' access to alcohol.

We've designed the template materials so they are quick and easy to customize to promote your teen program. You'll find talking points, earned media tools, collateral materials and various other marketing materials designed to be tailored to maximize your local outreach efforts to various key audiences.

Va. House To Teens: 'Hang Up And Drive'

Lawmakers Pass Ban on Cellphones

By Tim Craig and Amy Gardner
Washington Post Staff Writers
Thursday, February 22, 2007; A01

RICHMOND, Feb. 21 -- The Virginia House of Delegates approved a bill Wednesday that would prohibit teenagers from using their cellphones while driving, which safety advocates say would reduce accidents.

The Senate has approved a nearly identical measure, meaning that the cellphone ban proposal is likely headed to Gov. Timothy M. Kaine (D), who is expected to sign it, aides said. If Kaine does approve the ban, Virginia will join the District, Maryland and 11 other states that bar teens from using a phone while driving.

Under the bill, drivers ages 15, 16 and 17 would not be able to talk, send text messages or snap photos with a phone while on Virginia roads. The ban would also apply to hands-free devices but would allow teens to use a phone during an emergency.

The legislation originated with lawmakers in Northern Virginia.

"We are saying, 'Hang up and drive,' " said Del. Timothy D. Hugo (R-Fairfax).

Like Virginia's seat-belt law, the teenage cellphone ban would be considered a secondary offense, so an officer could cite a teenage driver only if he or she were pulled over for another moving violation.

Even so, safety advocates said that the 86 to 10 vote in the House was a milestone in Virginia, where legislators have historically been slow to embrace new traffic safety laws.

The proposal, sponsored by Sen. James K. "Jay" O'Brien Jr. (R-Fairfax), gained momentum after a spate of fatal accidents involving teenagers on Washington area highways.

Though the accidents were not necessarily caused by teens talking on cellphones, they spurred a regionwide debate about teen driving safety. Maryland passed a series of teen driving bills two years ago. The District requires all drivers to use hands-free devices to talk on the phone. O'Brien resisted efforts in Virginia to make exceptions for teenagers using hands-free devices.

"It doesn't matter if the phone is in their hands or hands-free," O'Brien said. "The distraction for the teen is the same. They're taking their concentration off the road and giving it to a conversation during a period when they have zero driving experience."

Some teenagers were split on their opinion of the ban. Pape Diop, 17, a senior at Annandale High School in Fairfax County who often chats on the phone while he's behind the wheel, said he thinks the ban would make him and his friends safer drivers.

"I think it's pretty reasonable, because we do have a tendency to talk on our phones a lot, and a lot of accidents happen," Diop said. "Even if I'm in the car with an adult, I see it distracts them."

But Andrew Supanich, 16, a sophomore at Stonewall Jackson High School in Prince William County, said he thinks that the ban is a bad idea but that if it does go forward, it should include adults. "It's not fair for them to take it away from teenagers when adults could be on the cellphone and could get in a car accident just as well," he said.

Supanich said he would use the phone for legitimate purposes. "If I was ever on my cellphone while driving, it wouldn't be just, 'I'm bored, and I want to talk to someone.' It would be if I was going to someone else's house and needed directions, or if my mom calls me to go to the grocery store," he said.

Several lawmakers said they were influenced by images of young drivers paying more attention to phone calls and text messages than the road. "It's a simple premise: Young people who do not have experience endanger not only themselves but other drivers," said Del. Adam P. Ebbin (D-Alexandria).

A few conservative lawmakers said they opposed the bill because parents -- not the state -- should be making rules for their children. Del. Terry G. Kilgore (R-Scott) said that there might be many items in a car that could distract a driver, such as a radio or purse. "I am the parent of a young driver, and the thing about this bill that concerns me is I can't call my daughter," he said. "There are a lot of times my wife and I would like to know where she is at."

Ebbin responded, "If parents have trouble reaching their kids, they should leave a message."

According to AAA Mid-Atlantic, which lobbied for the bill, the bans can greatly reduce the odds of a teenager being in an accident. A University of Utah study found that "young drivers who use cellphones at the wheel drive like the elderly -- with slower reaction times and an increased risk of accidents," according to AAA.

Kaine prohibits his 17-year-old son, Nat, from using a cellphone while driving. "It is the rule in the Kaine household," said Kevin Hall, spokesman for the governor. "Regardless of what he decides to do with this bill, the governor thinks this is a conversation that every parent should have with their teen driver."

(2) Complete studies of traffic operations of entire installations. (This can include long–range planning for future development of installation roads, public highways, and related facilities.)

(3) Assistance in complying with established traffic engineering standards.

e. Installation commanders should submit requests for traffic engineering services in accordance with applicable Service or agency directives.

4–2. Installation traffic codes

a. Installation or activity commanders will establish a traffic code for operation of motor vehicles on the installation. Commanders in overseas areas will establish a traffic code, under provisions of this regulation, to the extent military authority is empowered to regulate traffic on the installation under the applicable SOFA. Traffic codes will contain the rules of the road (parking violations, towing instructions, safety equipment, and other key provisions). These codes will, where possible, conform to the code of the State or host nation in which the installation is located. In addition, the development and publication of installation traffic codes will be based on the following:

(1) Highway Safety Program Standards (23 USC 402).

(2) Applicable portions of the Uniform Vehicle Code and Model Traffic Ordinance published by the National Committee on Uniform Traffic Laws and Ordinances.

b. The installation traffic code will contain policy and procedures for the towing, searching, impounding, and inventorying of POVs. These provisions should be well publicized and contain the following:

(1) Specific violations and conditions under which the POV will be impounded and towed.

(2) Procedures to immediately notify the vehicle owner.

(3) Procedures for towing and storing impounded vehicles.

(4) Actions to dispose of the vehicle after lawful impoundment.

(5) Violators are responsible for all costs of towing, storage, and impounding of vehicles for other than evidentiary reasons.

c. Installation traffic codes will also contain the provisions discussed below. (Army users, see AR 385–55.)

(1) Motorcycles and mopeds. For motorcycles and other self–propelled, open, 2–wheel, 3–wheel, and 4–wheel vehicles powered by a motorcycle–type engine, the following traffic rules apply:

(a) Headlights will be on at all times when in operation.

(b) A rear view mirror will be attached to each side of the handlebars.

(c) Approved protective helmets, eye protection, hard–soled shoes, long trousers, and brightly colored or reflective outer upper garment will be worn by operators and passengers when in operation.

(2) Restraint systems.

(a) Restraint systems (seat belts) will be worn by all operators and passengers of U.S. Government vehicles on or off the installation.

(b) Restraint systems will be worn by all civilian personnel (family members, guests, and visitors) driving or riding in a POV on the installation.

(c) Restraint systems will be worn by all military Service members and Reserve Component members on active Federal Service driving or riding in a POV whether on or off the installation.

(d) Infant/child restraint devices (car seats) will be required in POVs for children 4 years old or under and not exceeding 45 pounds in weight.

(e) Restraint systems are required only in vehicles manufactured after model year 1966.

(3) Driver distractions. Vehicle operators on a DOD installation and operators of Government owned vehicles will not use cell phones unless the vehicle is safely parked or unless they are using a hands–free device. The wearing of any other portable headphones, earphones, or other listening devices (except for hands–free cellular phones) while operating a motor vehicle is prohibited. Use of those devices impairs driving and masks or prevents recognition of emergency signals, alarms, announcements, the approach of vehicles, and human speech. The DOD component safety guidance should note the potential for driver distractions such as eating and drinking, operating radios, CD players, global positioning equipment, and so on. Whenever possible this should only be done when the vehicle is safely parked.

d. Only administrative actions (reprimand, assessment of points, loss of on–post driving privileges, or other actions) will be initiated against Service members for off–post violations of the installation traffic code.

e. In States where traffic law violations are State criminal offenses, such laws are made applicable under the provisions of 18 USC 13 to military installations having concurrent or exclusive Federal jurisdiction.

f. In those States where violations of traffic law are not considered criminal offenses and cannot be assimilated under 18 USC, DODD 5525.4, enclosure 1 expressly adopts the vehicular and pedestrian traffic laws of such States and makes these laws applicable to military installations having concurrent or exclusive Federal jurisdiction. It also delegates authority to installation commanders to establish additional vehicular and pedestrian traffic rules and regulations for their installations. Persons found guilty of violating the vehicular and pedestrian traffic laws made applicable on the installation under provisions of that directive are subject to a fine as determined by the local magistrate or imprisonment for not more than 30 days, or both, for each violation. Dear Representative Gardner:

I write to you in support of House Bill 15 (HB 15), an act relating to prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle.

As the statistics from the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration indicate, cell phones pose a significant distraction to drivers and distractions cause accidents. From my limited reading on the subject, it appears that cell phone usage by teen drivers is higher than the adult average.

As other states move toward protecting the public from distracted drivers, Alaskans should not be left behind. We, and our children, deserve those same protections. In particular, if we can assist young drivers form healthy driving habits through this measure, we will have started them on a course for a lifetime of safer driving.

Because this does not create a primary offense, I anticipate that it would not dramatically affect law enforcement budgets. In the meantime, it will be helpful in instructing young, impressionable drivers that the driver's seat is not the appropriate place for cell phone calls.

Thanks for your leadership on this important public safety issue.

Sincerely,

Matt Claman
Acting Mayor

Re: State Farm Support for HB 15 - Ban on Cell Phone Use by Minors While Driving

Dear Representative Gardner:

State Farm strongly supports a ban on cell phone use by minors while driving. There is no doubt this bill will in fact immediately begin to save lives and prevent injuries. Drivers between the ages 16 - 19 are four times more likely to be involved in a crash as other drivers. One in five of all auto deaths is attributed to teen driving. The leading causes of teen accidents include inexperience and distraction. A recent Research Report by the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and State Farm determined that 9 out of 10 teenagers reported teen use of cell phones while driving was common, and 7 out of 10 said they have observed teens driving while being emotionally upset using a cell phone. That same survey indicated legal prohibitions and restrictions were the top motivations teens said would keep them from using a cell phone while driving.

As the insurance industry representative on the Alaska Highway Safety Improvement Program, State Farm thanks you for sponsoring this bill. Through an alliance with Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, State Farm has access to a wealth of information and resources should you or other members of the Legislature desire. If we can provide you any information or assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely,

Dear Rep. Gardner,
I heartily support your bill to limit cell phone use, however, I wish it would extend to all ages.

On a sunny afternoon in late May 2008 I was riding my bicycle in a quiet old Turnagain neighborhood on broad streets with no traffic or parked cars when an 18 year old drove up fom behind me and turned into my immediate path. The vehicle became a wall a few inches in front of me. One of my first thoughts, as I lay on the ground before the ambulance came is that I was somehow invisible to this young woman even though there were no visual obstacles to her seeing me. Cell phone use was denied but is strongly suspected and records wlll be supheaoned in the legal proceedings.
Thank you for introducing this bill. I believe the age should be extended upward. At any rate, this is a very good start. I would hope that data is available in Alaska on cell phone related motor vehicle accidents to support passage of this type of legislation.

Sincerely,

I applaud your bill to ban cell phone use while driving. I am 48 years old, I drive, and I have a cell phone. The ban should apply to me also. Please work your magic to make driving and cell phone use (and texting, and tittering [what the heck is that?!]) illegal for everyone. I can't believe we have allowed it to continue as long we have; we all know that a person's driving is impaired while driving and talking on the cell phone. Thank you for putting this forth.

Good morning Representative Gardner,

I read in the paper today the bill you'll be putting forward about banning teenagers from using cell phones while driving. I fully support cell phone bans for everyone! Too many times I've witness people making careless decisions while driving only to discover – duh, they're on the cell phone. I would happily give up my cell phone while in my car – it is one of the last places for peace and quiet anyway.

Representative Berta Gardner
House of Representatives
State Capitol
Juneau AK 99801-1182

Dear Representative Gardner:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing HB 15, an act prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date.

The APOA State Board's Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and unanimously decided to offer conditional support of this bill. We'd ask that it be amended to include all drivers and not be restricted to just minors. There is now empirical data showing that cell phone conversations (whether handheld or not) put the driver and other motorists at significant risk. A number of other states have now passed legislation outlawing the practice for all drivers, regardless of age.

We thank you for addressing this issue and urge you to consider expanding the bill to include all drivers. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

Angella Long

Subject: Cell phone bill

Hi Berta:
I am especially interested in your bill to curb cell phone use while driving because, on February 21, 2006 I was hit by a car while crossing the street as a pedestrian. I had the green "walk" light, and the driver had a red light. She was talking on her cell phone and said that she looked left for oncoming traffic but didn't look right. I don't cross in front of a car at a crosswalk unless I know the driver has seen be -- and she looked right at me -- but said she didn't see me. She got a citation and I got a brain concussion!
Frankly, banning the use of cell phones while driving would suit me just fine. Your bill to prohibit drivers 18 or under from using cell phones is certainly a good first step.
Thank you!

Members of the Alaska State Legislature:

The Anchorage Police Department Employees Association represents over 450 rank-and-file employees of the Anchorage Police Department. As President of the APDEA, I am writing in support of HB 15, which would ban the use of cell phones by minors operating a motor vehicle.

APDEA members see first hand the fatalities, injury, and property damage resulting from vehicular cell phone use by minors. Minors not only have the highest crash rates of any drivers, they are also involved in a highly disproportionate number of fatal accidents. When you add to the mix that minors are the most frequent cell phone users, a dangerous combination is created.

There is now a huge body of research on cell phones and driving. Studies both in this country and from places such as Canada and Australia consistently show that talking on cell phones quadruples a driver's chances of being involved in an accident. A recent study in Utah demonstrated that individuals talking on cell phones performed about as well at driving as individuals with a blood alcohol level of .08 percent. Major corporations such as Exxon/Mobil, DuPont, and Shell have become so concerned about safety and liability that they banned on-road use of cell phones by their employees during work hours. The Harvard Center for Risk Analysis estimates that 2,600 deaths and 12,000 serious injuries occur each year in highway crashes caused by cell phone use.

Inexperienced drivers using cell phones only heightens the risk. APDEA members would love to never again respond to a serious accident involving a teenage driver talking on a cell phone. HB 15 would help achieve that goal.

Sincerely,

Derek Hsieh

Subject: HB 15: Ban Cell Phone Use by Minors When Driving

Dear Mr. Chairman, Madam Vice Chairman, and Members of the House Judiciary Committee:

I am contacting you to express my strong opposition to HB 15, "An Act relating to prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date." HB 15 unfairly targets a very small percentage of the cell phone-using drivers in Alaska. Even if HB 15 were amended to include cell phone-using drivers of all ages, it would do nothing to address the real problem: inattentive driving.

I believe that the following position statement (please see below) from the National Motorists Association (http://www.motorists.org/distracted/) states my opinion very eloquently. I hope you will take a moment to read this before taking any action on HB 15.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

NMA Position On Distracted Driving

Every state, to our knowledge has some form of law that addresses inattentive driving. The cause of the inattentiveness is largely irrelevant.

It doesn't matter that the driver is distracted by a conversation with another vehicle passenger, tuning the radio, eating a snack, or talking on a cell phone. If the level of distraction reaches a point that the driver is no longer safely and responsibly driving his or her car they are guilty of inattentive driving, and other violations that may result from their inattentiveness. Inattentive driving, in all its forms, can best be addressed through educational forums and to a limited degree, enforcement activities.

Ultimately, it has to be recognized that most people do not want to be involved in a traffic accident. If they are sufficiently and frequently forewarned that "inattentiveness" is the leading cause of all traffic accidents, the message may well take hold. Reinvesting public resources, that are now invested in "speed kills" campaigns and related enforcement excesses, into educational and public relations efforts focused on inattentive driving would be a far more productive use of these funds.

Pre-emptive laws that make otherwise innocent harmless acts illegal are pervasive and endemic in the United States. The girth and range of pre-emptive state and federal statutes are so extensive that it is literally impossible for the average citizen to function from day to day without violating multiple laws and regulations. This is particularly true for those persons driving motor vehicles on public roads.

Most of these pre-emptive laws are put in place for one of two reasons. The first is the belief that by making the innocent and harmless act illegal it will eliminate the possibility that this act will lead to another, actually harmful act. For example, the carrying of a concealed firearm actually harms no one. However, most states and local jurisdictions prohibit the carrying of concealed firearms under the theory that preventing the possession eliminates the possibility that the firearm would be used to cause harm.

The second reason, and the underlying reason for making the harmless use of cell phones illegal by vehicle operators, is ease of enforcement. A blanket prohibition of cell phone use by vehicle drivers is far easier to enforce than are inattentive driving laws. This eliminates the need for exercising thoughtful discretion and reasoned judgment. The issue appears black and white. That the cell phone user was causing no harm and endangering no one does not have to enter the decision making process. The NMA opposes this type of politically expedient enforcement practice. Innocent, harmless behavior, in and of itself, should not be illegal.

Letter Of Support for HOUSE BILL NO. 15

As a parent and Drivers Education Instructor I support the House Bill Number 15 banning and prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by persons less than 18 years of age when driving a motor vehicle.

Parents should support laws against their teenage children using cell phones while driving, but they will have to do more than expect police to enforce such laws, they have to do some "enforcement" themselves.

Young people may claim to be more adept at using electronic devices than their elders — and they probably are.

But they are also less experienced at driving, thereby increasing the danger of distractions, whether those distractions are talking on a cell phone, sending text messages, eating or selecting music while driving. In other words, parents can influence their teen's behavior — perhaps more than they realize. Therefore, it is important for parents to talk about phone use while driving, and also impose their own restrictions. Enforce that driving is a privilege not a right.

Motor Vehicle accidents are the fifth leading cause to all deaths in the country. Among teens however, motor vehicle accidents are the leading cause of death.

NSC (National Safety Council) says that while driving and talking on the phone puts drivers at four time's greater risk of a crash. NSC estimates that cell phone use while driving contributes to 6 percent of crashes.

Talking on a cell phone may be less distracting than other activities that people may engage in while driving, but the use of cell phones and texting is much more pervasive, making it more dangerous overall. As a parent I stand for this Bill to pass, we need to educate our teens. Even if that means putting them through a defensive driving course. Our children are the future. This change may not happen overnight but if parents and police enforce this law we will see that day when change has happened.

Dear Representative Gardner:

We are pleased to offer the National Safety Council's support of HB15, an Act prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors while driving a motor vehicle, to be considered by the Alaska Legislature during its 2009 session.

The National Safety Council applauds the Alaska Legislature for considering HB15. This Act's prohibition of cellular telephone use by teens while driving in Alaska would be a major step toward improving the safety of its citizens. As "novice" drivers, teens lack driving experience and tend to ignore risks; consequently, they are proportionately involved in twice as many fatal crashes as drivers 35-74 years of age. This is why the NSC and many other transportation safety leaders advocate that Graduated Driver Licensing (GDL) laws include a ban on teen driver cell phone and text messaging use while driving. At present sixteen states have a similar provision in their teen driver licensing law.

It is estimated that 80% of preventable motor vehicle crashes are caused in part by some form of driver inattention. Scientific research has determined that talking on a cell phone increases a driver's risk of a crash by four times. One study has reported that text messaging while driving increased the odds of a crash by six times. We invite the Alaska legislature to consider further action restricting the use of cell phones for all drivers and offer you the following links to scientifically reliable information for your reference should you wish to consider such action.

The National Safety Council is a non-profit organization that saves lives at work, at home, in communities and on the roads through leadership, research, education and advocacy. During the last forty years, the NSC has trained over sixty million drivers in defensive driving techniques. Please contact John Ulczycki, NSC's Group Vice President for Research, Communications, and Advocacy (john.ulczycki@nsc.org or 630-775-2160) if we may offer further assistance.

Dear Rep. Gardner:

Thank you for your support of HB 15. Allstate applauds your efforts to keep our teens and all of us safe by removing distractions from the road.

Mounting research indicates – and common sense supports – that that the use of cell phones while driving, especially among young drivers, is highly dangerous. A study published in the British Medical Journal found that cell phone use while driving resulted in a four-fold increase in crashes. Young drivers not only have the least experience but drivers between ages 16 and 24 also display the highest rates of cell phone use while driving, according to a study by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA).

In 2005, The Allstate Foundation conducted a national survey of teen driving attitudes and behaviors. In the survey, 56 percent of teens said they make and answer cell phone calls while driving, and 13 percent write and/or read text messages. With 12.5 million teen drivers in the U.S., that's 1.62 million drivers writing and/or reading text messages while operating their vehicle.

This is truly an issue where you can make a lifesaving difference for families in Alaska. We look forward to the opportunity to work with you.

ACCORDING TO SOME REPORTS THE USE of Cell PHONES CAUSES CANCER.

AS FOR THE USE OF Cell / PHONES WHILE driving - THERE IS ALREADY A LAW AGAINST driving W/ one HAND. I DON'T KNOW IF THAT'S STILL on THE BOOKS.

IT CAN be AMended TO MEAN Cell PHONE USE BY ANYONE WHILE driving. DOES ANYONE HAVE THE % OF ACCIDENTS WHILE driving & USING Cell PHONES?
I BELIEVE THE USE of Cell PHONES WHILE driving W/ 1 hand should be amended TO mean ANYONE not just minors.
I'd just like to ask why is there a focus on Minors? for example there

Supreme Court of Alaska.
Elijah COLEMAN, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, Appellee.
No. 2331.

July 14, 1976.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage District, Peter J. Kalamarides, J., of two counts of rape and one count of robbery, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Erwin, J., held that police officers acted reasonably in stopping defendant's automobile for investigation and thus evidence in plain view on floor of automobile was properly seized and admitted at defendant's trial; that indictment against defendant was not improper due to alleged irregularities which occurred during grand jury proceedings; and that ten-year sentence imposed by trial court was not excessive.

Affirmed.

Boochever, C. J., concurred with opinion in which Rabinowitz, J., joined.

Before BOOCHEVER, C. J., and RABINOWITZ, CONNOR, ERWIN and BURKE, JJ.
ERWIN, Justice.

Elijah Coleman appeals from a conviction on two counts of rape and one count or robbery. Three issues are presented in this appeal: first, whether the trial court erred in failing to suppress evidence which was utilized in securing Coleman's conviction; second, whether the indictment against Coleman should have been dismissed because of alleged irregularities which occurred during the grand jury proceedings; and third, whether the sentence imposed by the trial court was excessive.

In August, 1973, Mrs. S. was employed as a sales clerk in the Salvation Army Store at Sixth and H Streets in Anchorage, Alaska. Because the family car was being repaired, she normally took a bus to her job and, since she usually got off work after the buses had ceased running for the evening, walked to her home near the Russian Jack Springs area.

On the evening of August 15, Mrs. S. left the downtown area at about 7:45 p.m., carrying with her among other items a blue First National Bank money bag with approximately $18.00 of the Salvation Army's money for safekeeping. As she walked along a wooded ski trail through the Russian Jack Springs area, she was attacked from behind by a man, forced off the trial, pushed to the ground, and raped. Subsequently, the assailant asked Mrs. S. whether she had any money, and she surrendered the blue bank bag. Upon being released, she ran home and immediately reported the incident to the Anchorage Police Department by telephone.

The police dispatcher received her call at 9:30 p.m. and immediately relayed it by radio to Officers Walker and Swensen who were riding together on patrol about three-quarters of a mile from the Russian Jack Springs area. The message reached the officers as a 'Code 4' dispatch (indicating a crime in progress or one that has just occurred) to investigate a 'strongarm' robbery, i.e., a robbery accomplished by force but without weapons, which had just taken place near the Russian Jack Springs Golf Course. The dispatch also contained the following information: that the suspect was a short[FN1] black man wearing a white T-shirt and levis, carrying a blue bank bag containing stolen cash, who had left the scene of the crime in a northbound direction. The dispatch did not contain any information concerning the suspect's mode of transportation.

> FN1. Another account was that the dispatch described the suspect as either 5 6 or 5 7 tall, and Coleman states that his height is actually 5 11 .

Although the officers were dispatched to the victim's house, since it was such a short time after the call Officer Walker decided to swing through the Russian Jack Springs area to see if he could intercept the suspect. The officers proceeded to the turnoff to the Russian Jack Springs Golf Course, north of the scene of the crime, and arrived within 1 to 1 1/2 minutes after the police call. There they observed a yellow Fairlane automobile leaving an infrequently used area[FN2] east of the driveway, 43 headed west. As the two vehicles approached each other from opposite directions, the officers saw that the driver of the automobile, who was operating the car in a legal manner, was black, was wearing a white T-shirt, and 'looked short.' One of the officers noted that the driver's facial expression showed a marked reaction to the officers' observations. The officers then made a U-turn and halted the automobile in the manner of a routine traffic stop. The officers radioed that they had stopped the suspect; it was 9:32 p.m. The officers approached the car and the driver was asked for his driver's license. The suspect exited from his car, whereupon Officer Walker observed a blue bank bag on the front floor of the passenger seat. At that point the suspect, identified as Elijah Coleman, was arrested and the bag was seized as evidence.

> FN2. This area was not a parking lot, but rather a wide spot in the road that was sometimes, but not normally, used as a parking area.

The grand jury indicted Coleman for rape, sodomy and robbery. Prior to trial he brought motions to dismiss the indictment and to suppress the evidence of the stolen property. Both were denied. Coleman was tried by a superior court jury in April, 1974, and was convicted on the rape and robbery counts but acquitted of the charge of sodomy. Thereafter, he entered a plea of guilty to another charge of rape involving a different victim. The trial court sentenced him, in essence, to ten years imprisonment; and he now appeals from his conviction and sentence.

I. THE INVESTIGATIVE STOP

It is not disputed that probable cause to arrest Coleman existed once the police knew of the existence of the blue bank bag in the front seat of his vehicle. Coleman contends, however, that the police used constitutionally impermissible procedures in discovering the bank bag; specifically, he asserts that the officers had no right to stop his automobile in the first place. The State, on the other hand, argues that the officers' actions in halting Coleman's car were justified under the 'investigative stop' doctrine and thus the bag, which was in plain view when Coleman exited the vehicle, was properly seized.

In two previous cases involving investigative detention not at first amounting to an arrest, this court recognized the principle that a police officer with a reasonable suspicion that imminent public danger exists or serious harm that has recently occurred was caused by a particular person may stop that person. In Goss v. State,[FN3] a state police officer on patrol shortly after midnight just outside of Anchorage observed a car drive away from the side of a building where a distributorship business was located and proceed for about half a block without its headlights on. The officer followed the car, and after it had turned around and headed in the opposite direction, stopped it. The court concluded that the officer was in his lawful authority in making the stop:

When the officer stopped the car he was doing nothing more than conducting an investigation in response to circumstances that aroused his suspicions. Considering the lateness of the hour, the fact that the car was seen coming from the side of the building rather than from the parking lot in front, and that it was being driven without its headlights on, we believe the police officer had the right and the duty to make a prompt investigation, which required him as a matter of practical necessity to stop the car and question the occupants.[FN4]

In Maze v. State,[FN5] a city police officer observed the defendant standing on a window sill and holding onto the top of a metal grillwork on the window of a loan company office. The officer shined his flashlight on the defendant, who alighted and walked toward a nightclub. As the defendant neared the entrance of the club, the officer shouted and ran after him. The defendant had run into the club's outside44 entrance when the officer grabbed him. The officer asked him what he was doing on the window sill of the loan company, and the defendant said he did not know what the officer was talking about. The officer then noted that the window of the loan company office was broken and arrested the defendant. The court noted that cause existed for the stop and for the arrest, stating:

> FN5. 425 P.2d 235 (Alaska 1967).

In Goss v. State we held that police officers have the right to stop and question a person under suspicious circumstances, and if probable cause is then found to exist, the person may be arrested.[FN6]

> FN6. Id. at 238 (footnote omitted). The reasoning of Goss and Maze was grounded in Art. I, s 14 of the Alaska Constitution.

Subsequent to our decisions in Goss and Maze, the United States Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio[FN7] likewise adopted the 'investigative stop' concept. In Terry a Cleveland detective with 39 years of experience watched two men alternatively leave a corner on which the other was stationed, walk up a particular street, peer into the window of either a jewelry store or an airline office, and then return to the corner to converse with the other. This procedure was repeated several times by both men. During this time a third man approached the corner, spoke briefly with the two men, and departed. The two men then left the corner and again met the third man on another street. The detective was apprehensive about their actions and suspected them of planning a robbery or burglary. The detective approached the three men, identified himself, and asked for their names. Receiving only a mumbled response, he 'frisked' the men and discovered fully-loaded weapons on two of them. Both men were convicted of the offense of carrying a concealed weapon.

In upholding Terry's conviction[FN8] the court recognized,

> FN8. Following the grant of the writ of certiorari, the other petitioner died.

. . . that a police officer may in appropriate circumstances and in an appropriate manner approach a person for purposes of investigating possibly criminal behavior even though there is no probable cause to make an arrest.[FN9]

> FN9. Id. 392 U.S. 1, 22, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 1880, 20 L.Ed.2d 889, 906-07 (1968).

The court, however, rejected the notion that such an investigatory stop and limited search was not subject to the requirements of the Fourth Amendment. The court stated that the central inquiry under the Fourth Amendment is to 'the reasonableness in all the circumstances of the particular governmental invasion of a citizen's personal security.'[FN10]Thus the governmental intrusion is subject to the Fourth Amendment, and:

> FN10. Id. 392 U.S. at 19, 88 S.Ct. at 1878, 20 L.Ed.2d at 904.

'Search' and 'seizure' are not talismans. We therefore reject the notions that the Fourth Amendment does not come into play at all as a limitation upon police conduct if the officers stop short of something called a 'technical arrest' or 'full-blown search.'

In this case there can be no question, then that Officer McFadden 'seized' petitioner and subjected him to a 'search' when he took hold of him and patted down the outer surfaces of his clothing.[FN11]

FN11.Id.

The court refused to apply the requirement of 'probable cause' contained in the Fourth Amendment to such police actions. The court limited the requirement of probable cause to situations which historically have been and practically are subject to the warrant procedure.

But we deal here with an entire rubric of police conduct-necessarily swift action predicated upon the on-the-spot observations of the officer on the beat-which historically has not been, and as 45 a practical matter could not be, subjected to the warrant procedure. Instead, the conduct involved in this case must be tested by the Fourth Amendment's general proscription against unreasonable searches and seizures.[FN12]

Using the general test of balancing the governmental interest justifying the official intrusion against the invasion of the constitutionally protected interests of the private citizen, the court concluded that:

. . . the police officer must be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant the intrusion. . . . And in making that assessment it is imperative that the facts be judged against an objective standard: would the facts available to the officer at the moment of the seizure or the search 'warrant a man of reasonable caution in the belief' that the action taken was appropriate?[FN13]

FN13. Id. 392 U.S. at 21-22, 88 S.Ct. at 1880, 20 L.Ed.2d at 906 (footnote omitted).

Four years later the United States Supreme Court in Adams v. Williams[FN14] devoted some consideration to the justification for a 'stop' as a separate issue. In Adams a police officer was alone early in the morning in a high-crime area when a known informer approached his cruiser and told him that an individual seated in a nearby vehicle was carrying narcotics and a gun at his waist. After calling for assistance on his radio, the officer approached the vehicle to investigate the informant's tip. The officer tapped on the car window and asked the occupant to open the door. When the man rolled down the window instead, the officer reached into the car and removed a fully-loaded revolver from the occupant's waistband. He was then arrested for unlawful possession of the hand gun, and a search incident to the arrest disclosed that he was carrying heroin. The court concluded 'that the policeman's actions . . . conformed to the standards . . . laid down' in Terry.[FN15]

FN15. Id. 407 U.S. at 145, 92 S.Ct. at 1923,32 L.Ed. at 616.

Noting that

. . . Terry recognizes that it may be the essence of good police work to adopt an intermediate response (between an arrest based on probable cause and simply allowing a crime to occur), the intermediate response being a 'reasonable investigatory stop,' the court stated:

A brief stop of a suspicious individual, in order to determine his identity or to maintain the status quo momentarily while obtaining more information, may be most reasonable in light of the facts known to the officer at the time.[FN16]

> FN16. Id. 407 U.S. at 146, 92 S.Ct. at 1923, 32 L.Ed.2d at 617 (citations omitted).

With the foregoing in mind we proceed to the facts of the case at bar.[FN17]

> FN17. The only other case in which the United States Supreme Court has applied the 'stop and frisk' criteria is United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873, 95 S.Ct. 2574, 45 L.Ed.2d 607 (1975). In Brignoni-Ponce, the only issue presented was whether a roving patrol could stop a vehicle in an area near the border and question its occupants when the only ground for suspicion was that the occupants appeared to be of Mexican ancestry. Although the court ultimately held that the particular stop was unjustified, there was an extended discussion of the purpose and principles of the 'investigative stop' doctrine. The only post-Terry case arising in Alaska wherein the problem of investigative stops is touched upon is that of Mattern v. State, 500 P.2d 228 (Alaska 1972). In Mattern the majority opinion made the following observation at footnote 15:
> Our brother Erwin in his concurring opinion concludes that the police action in this case was legitimate under the stop and frisk doctrine enunciated by the Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). We do not feel that this case is a proper vehicle for discussion of the stop and frisk question. There is language in our opinion in Goss v. State, 390 P.2d 220 (Alaska 1964), which approves of the stop and frisk practice. However, we note that, unlike many jurisdictions which allow this practice, Alaska does not have a statute authorizing the police to forcibly stop a citizen on less than probable cause to arrest. It should also be noted that several members of the United States Supreme Court have begun to re-evaluate the Terry opinion. In a recent opinion Justice Brennan expressed the same concern of Judge Friendly that, unless it is held in check, there is a danger that 'Terry will have opened the sluicegates for serious and unintended erosion of the protection of the Fourth Amendment.' Adams v. Williams, 407 U.S. 143, 153, 92 S.Ct. 1921, 1927, 32 L.Ed.2d 612 (1972) (dissenting opinion).
> It is noted that the particular concern expressed by Justice Brennan and Judge Friendly, quoted in the Mattern opinion, was that the doctrine of stop and frisk enunciated in Terry should not be extended beyond situations requiring immediate police response to protect the public in serious cases where there is likelihood of imminent danger about to occur or where serious harm has recently been perpetrated to persons or property. While we agree with the view expressed by Justice Brennan and Judge Friendly, their concern is not applicable in the case at bar.

46 Within minutes after receiving information that a strong-arm robbery was in progress or had just occurred near the Russian Jack Springs Golf Course, the officers proceeded to the area in which the crime had been committed. Upon arriving at the scene less than two minutes later, they observed a vehicle exiting from Russian Jack Springs Park on a little-used side road, driven by a black man in a T-shirt who appeared to be short. Having been informed by the radio dispatch that the suspect had these physical characteristics, the officers stopped the car.

[1][2][3] In light of the facts known to the officers, we think that they 'had the right and the duty to make a prompt investigation which required (them) as a matter of practical necessity to stop the car and question'[FN18] Coleman. The stopping and questioning of Coleman by the officers was not an arrest but was a reasonable course of action in light of the circumstances confronting them; and being reasonable, it was lawful under the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Art. I, s 14 of the State Constitution.[FN19]

> FN19. Had Coleman been walking down the same street, we think it would have been reasonable for the officers to take the opportunity to question him about his activities in the area. We are unwilling to distinguish between persons who travel by auto and those who travel by foot. In fact, there might be more justification for a policeman stopping an automobile leaving the vicinity of a suspected crime, for in such a situation, if action is not immediately taken, there is not likely to be another chance.

[4] We do not believe that our rule permitting temporary detention for questioning in certain cases, i.e., cases where the police officer has a reasonable suspicion that imminent public danger exists or serious harm to persons or property has recently occurred, conflicts with the Fourth Amendment [FN20] or the State Constitution.

> FN20. The concept of an 'investigative stop' under suspicious circumstances is not a novel one, and there were a number of cases which predated our decisions in Goss v. State, 390 P.2d 220 (Alaska 1964), and Maze v. State, 425 P.2d 235 (Alaska 1967), and the United States Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). See U. S. v. It strikes a balance between a person's interest in immunity from police interference and the community's interest in 47 law enforcement. It wards off pressure to equate reasonable cause to investigate with reasonable cause to arrest, thus protecting the innocent from the risk of arrest when no more than reasonable investigation is justified.[FN21]

II. Grand Jury Proceedings

Although no provision of the United States or Alaska Constitutions specifically guarantees the right of an accused to be indicted by a grand jury free of prosecutor instigated prejudice, a strong historical basis exists for holding that the grand jury should operate to control abuses by the government and protect the interests of the accused.[FN22]

FN22. Johnston, 'The Grand Jury-Prosecutorial Abuse of the Indictment Process,' 65 J.Crim.L. and Criminology, 157-69 (1974).

Article I, s 7, of the Alaska Constitution provides that '(n)o person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.'The Hawaii Supreme Court in State v. Joao,[FN23] and the Arizona Court of Appeals in State v. Good,[FN24] have held that a defendant was denied due process of law when indicted by a grand jury prejudiced by the prosecutor.

FN24. 10 Ariz.App. 556, 460 P.2d 662 (1969).

The United States Supreme Court has not ruled on the issue but has inferred that a defendant is entitled to have an indictment returned by an impartial tribunal. In Lawn v. United States,[FN25] the Supreme Court said:

FN25. 355 U.S. 339, 349, 78 S.Ct. 311, 318, 2 L.Ed.2d 321, 330 (1958).

An indictment returned by a legally constituted nonbiased grand jury . . . is enough to call for a trial of the charge on the merits. (Emphasis added)
Then, in Beck v. United States,[FN26] the Supreme Court indicated that it may be willing to extend due process protections to the indictment procedures established by the states:

FN26. 369 U.S. 541, 546, 82 S.Ct. 955, 8 L.Ed.2d 98, 105 (1962).

It may be that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires the State, having once resorted to a grand jury procedure, to furnish an unbiased grand jury. . . .

Article I, s 8 of the Alaska Constitution states that '(n)o person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury.'Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(i) sets out the duties of the District Attorney during a grand jury proceeding as follows:

The prosecuting attorney shall prepare all indictments and presentments for the grand jury and shall attend to their sittings to advise them of their duties and to examine witnesses in their presence.

The same duties are stated in AS 12.40.070.

[6] It is the prosecutor's function to prepare indictments, present evidence thereon, and advise the grand jury.[FN27] It has been noted that the modern prosecutor in performing this function plays two, sometimes inconsistent, roles.[FN28] As an officer of the State, it is the prosecutor's duty to be an advocate; he must exert his best efforts to prosecute successfully those who had violated the criminal law. On the other hand, as an officer of the court, he is required to act as the grand jury's legal advisor, to aid but not interfere in its determination of the probability of guilt.

FN27. Alaska Criminal Rule 6(i).

FN28. See Comment, Grand Jury Proceedings, The Prosecutor, The Trial Judge, and Undue Influence, 39 U.Chic.L.R. 761-765 (1972).

48 The American Bar Association Standards characterize the prosecutor's function in the grand jury process as follows:

Relations with Grand Jury

(a) Where the prosecutor is authorized to act as legal advisor to the grand jury he may appropriately explain the law and express his opinion on the legal significance of the evidence but he should give due deference to its status as an independent legal body.

(b) The prosecutor should not make statements or arguments in an effort to influence grand jury action in a manner which would be impermissible at trial before a petit jury.

(c) The prosecutor's communications and presentations to the grand jury should be on the record.[FN29]

FN29. ABA Project on Standards Relating to the Prosecution Function and the Defense Function, s 3.5 at 87 (Approved Draft 1971). The commentary to this section notes that where the prosecutor must prosecute an indictment returned by the grand jury, it is especially important that he be free to express his opinion. A prosecutor who had conducted an adequate investigation and analyzed the evidence is in a position to furnish guidance to the grand jury on the law and the weight of the evidence and should be free to do so whether this leads to a determination to indict or not to in- dict.

The commentary cautions that the prosecutor should not 'take advantage of his role as an ex parte representative of the State before the grand jury to unduly or unfairly influence it in voting on charges before it.'Id. at 88.

[7] It is apparent that the grand jury proceedings cannot be turned into a minitrial. The grand jury is an accusatorial body operating without a judicial officer to pass on the admissibility of evidence, and as such is charged with a determination of the probability of guilt.[FN30]

[8] In the instant case, the grand jury's deliberation was interrupted by a request from the grand jury foreman to the district attorney. The following exchange took place:

THE FOREMAN: We haven't finished deliberating yet, but our question basically is, was there an examination of the victim in relationship to the rape charge and sodomy charge?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Yes.

THE FOREMAN: Can we get-is there anyone here without belaboring and looking for other witnesses, is there anyone here who can tell us what the results of these examinations were?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I can't tell you anything. It would have to be the doctor. He can give you the. . . .

THE FOREMAN: Well, it is in the police records?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I can give you the records, yes. I don't know if you can read it.

THE FOREMAN: No.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I mean you have them for whatever they're worth.

THE FOREMAN: No, but I mean can a-I don't feel during deliberations that the particular question that's being answered would warrant waiting to hear from a doctor. Can't the police department or one of the officers here indicate to us whether by examination there was indication of rape and sodomy or not?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: No, that would be hearsay.

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: The doctor is the only one that could present that testimony?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Yes. We can give you the lab sheets, but that's not going to tell you anything. I've looked at them.

THE FOREMAN: Can you tell us whether or not there was any indication from the. . . .

49 DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I can't tell you because that would be hearsay too and I'm not even testifying.

THE FOREMAN: Can you help us out in any manner, ways or means other than calling a doctor in. . . .

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: No.

THE FOREMAN: . . . as to the answering of our question?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I don't think calling a doctor is needed. I think you've heard enough to have this person tried. I don't think there's-well, I haven't talked to the doctor. I don't know anything but what I've seen from these reports. (Emphasis added)

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: I'd like to say something, but I don't know if I should or not. I don't think we're going to have justice in voting-or not justice really-I don't think we're going to get a proper vote if we don't hear from a doctor personally.

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Well, now you've got to remember you're not trying these people.

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: Well, I know it but we. . . .

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: And we can't go calling in experts on every case. You've heard a victim tell you this. If you don't-you know what the burden of proof is. If it's unexplained-or uncontradicted, if it would merit a conviction, then you come out with a true bill and you've heard her testimony and you found-you've had an officer testify he found the defendant right where she said he would be and he had the bag and I don't think it. . . .

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: Then it's up to him to disprove it, right?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Well, not that necessarily. We still have to show you enough proof here to warrant the indictment. He never has to come in and prove his innocence, but you can't expect us to put on the trial that we have put on in front of the petit jury. But now. . . .

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: If there were a trial. . . .

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: . . . you certainly have a right to call any witnesses you want.

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: If there were a trial the doctor would testify.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Oh, yes. (Emphasis added)

Coleman objects to two statements by the district attorney during this exchange: 'I think you've heard enough to have this person tried' and '. . . we can't go calling in experts on every case.'Both of these allegedly improper statements by the district attorney and the whole exchange set out above show undue prosecutorial influence over the grand jury, according to Coleman.

The Alaska case dealing most directly with undue prosecutorial influence is Anthony v. State.[FN31] The court did not rule on the issue since it was not raised at trial but stated in a footnote:

FN31. 521 P.2d 486 (Alaska 1974).

We note with disapproval comments made and solicited by the district attorney before the grand jury, referring to matters which would not have been admissible at trial. The district attorney emphasized Anthony's prior criminal record, adverted to the results of polygraph examinations, expressed his suspicion that Anthony was involved in Fairbanks drug traffic, related evidentiary details of the potential narcotics case being prepared by his office, introduced speculative testimony that a witness fled to New Orleans out of fear of Anthony, and stated, utterly without evidentiary support, that '(W)e know he's been given contracts (to kill). . . .' We cannot condone such conduct, and we direct the district attorney's attention to s 50 3.5(b) of the American Bar Association Standards Relating to the Prosecution Function (Approved Draft 1971): 'The prosecutor should not make statements or arguments in an effort to influence grand jury action in a manner which would be impermissible at trial before a petit jury.'[FN32]

FN32. Id. at 496, note 37.

The statements made by the district attorney in the instant case are clearly not as egregious as those condemned by this court in Anthony. After viewing the entire proceeding, we are unable to find the portion challenged by Coleman was an improper attempt by the prosecutor to influence the grand jury, particularly where the assistant district attorney immediately reinstructed the grand jurors on the standard for determining the sufficiency of the evidence as follows:

. . . You've heard a victim tell you this. If you don't-you know what the burden of proof is. If it is unexplained-or uncontradicted, it would merit a conviction, then you come out with a true bill-[FN33]

> FN33. Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(q) states in pertinent part: 'The grand jury shall find an indictment when all the evidence taken together, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would warrant a conviction of the defendant.'

UNIDENTIFIED JUROR: Then it's up to him to disprove it, right?

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Well, not that necessarily. We still have to show you enough proof here to warrant the indictment.

[9] We similarly find that the district attorney's failure to subpoena the examining physician was not error. Not all of the jurors felt the need to hear additional testimony from the examining physician. The jury foreman stated:

No, but I mean-I don't feel during deliberations that the particular question that's being answered would warrant waiting to hear from a doctor.

Furthermore, the district attorney specifically instructed the grand jurors that, 'You certainly have the right to call any witnesses you want.'A fair reading of the grand jury record demonstrates that, while not in the most prudent prosecutorial tradition, the actions of the prosecuting attorney cannot be said to have improperly influenced the grand jury.

[10] Coleman also contends that the district attorney commented to the grand jury on his exercise of his constitutional right to remain silent after arrest. The right not be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against oneself is secured by the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution and Art. I, s 9, of the Alaska Constitution. Implicit in this right is the notion that when an accused person chooses to exercise his right to silence, such silence may not be commented upon.[FN34]

> FN34. See, for example, Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 26(b)(6):
> If the accused in a criminal action exercises his or her privilege not to testify or to prevent another from testifying.
> (i) no person shall make any comment thereon, and
> (ii) no presumption shall arise with respect to the exercise of the privilege, and
> (iii) no adverse inference shall be drawn therefrom by the trier of fact.

The disputed comment arose in the following context when the district attorney was interrogating Officer Walker, the policeman who arrested Coleman:

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Did the man make any statement to you?

WALKER: No, he didn't say a word during the entire contact.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: I have no further questions.

THE FOREMAN: Do any of the grand jurors have any questions?

By Unidentified Jurors:

Q: He said what?

WALKER: He didn't say anything. Not-during the whole time I talked to 51 him. He didn't give me his name, didn't give me his address, nothing. I advised him of his rights and he didn't even acknowledge having been advised of them, just sat in the car.

Q: Was there ever a statement made?

WALKER: Not to my knowledge. Another officer transported him to the jail and booked him in and he didn't talk to that officer, wouldn't give him his address in there either.

Q: I don't quite understand. You mean the man has never been questioned on this charge?

WALKER: I didn't question him that night and there's nothing in the entire report to indicate that the investigators followed it up and questioned him. He was given an opportunity to talk, but he wouldn't say anything.

THE FOREMAN: What-excuse me. What's the law on that, Chuck, after they're advised of their rights? Apparently they don't have to say anything at all regardless of how much investigating or questioning, am I correct or . . ..

DISTRICT ATTORNEY: That's correct, yes.

THE FOREMAN: In other words he can sit there and not say anything, hum?

WALKER: That's right.

[11] Coleman faults the district attorney for presenting the arresting police officer as a witness without first ascertaining whether the accused had chosen to remain silent after the arrest. If informed that the accused had exercised his Fifth Amendment right to silence, Coleman contends that the prosecutor should not have questioned the officer on this issue before the grand jury. Coleman compares this to the situation where the prosecutor compels the appearance of an accused before the grand jury with prior knowledge that the accused will rely on his privilege not to testify. Standard 3.6(e) of the American Bar Association's Standards Relating to the Prosecution Function addresses itself to this situation:

The prosecutor should not compel the appearance of a witness whose activities are the subject of the (grand jury) inquiry if the witness states in advance that if called he will exercise his constitutional privilege not to testify.[FN35]

> FN35. ABA Project on Standards Relating to the Prosecution Function and the Defense Function, s 3.6 at 88 (Approved Draft 1971).

Coleman claims that by putting information about his silence after arrest before the grand jury, the district attorney prejudiced his case with evidence which would be inadmissible at trial. Coleman points to Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(r), which provides in part: 'Evidence which would be legally admissible at trial shall be admissible before the grand jury,' and he argues that this rule must be read to imply its inverse: evidence which would not be legally admissible at trial shall not be admissible before the grand jury. However, this proposition does not seem to be supported by Criminal Rule 6(r) itself:

Hearsay evidence shall not be presented to the grand jury absent compelling justification for its introduction. If hearsay evidence is presented to the grand jury, the reasons for its use shall be stated on the record.

Thus, Rule 6(r) permits in compelling circumstances the use of hearsay evidence which would not be admissible at trial. In State v. Parks,[FN36] this court upheld an indictment based entirely on hearsay. In Galauska v. State, [FN37] this court stated that hearsay evidence that would be inadmissible at trial could be introduced to the grand jury when there was a compelling justification. Thus, Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(r) would not seem to prohibit the admission of evidence of Coleman's52 silence after arrest on the sole ground that such evidence would not be admissible at trial.

FN37. 527 P.2d 459 (Alaska 1974).

[12] The State argues that the district attorney did not commit error by inquiring of the police officer whether Coleman had made any statement after arrest for the following reasons: Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(q) provides that the grand jury may require the prosecuting attorney to subpoena witnesses when it has reason to believe that other available evidence will explain away the charge.[FN38] In order to determine whether other available evidence will explain away the charge, the grand jury had the right to know if the defendant had made any exculpatory statements to the police. The district attorney properly questioned the police officer on this matter and immediately dropped the questioning when he was told that no statement had been made. It was the jurors who took up the questioning. Furthermore, questioning of the district attorney by the grand jury foreman showed that the latter understood that a defendant has a right to remain silent upon arrest. This understanding was reinforced for all the jurors by the district attorney.

FN38. Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(q) states in part:

When the grand jury has reason to believe that other available evidence will explain away the charge, it shall order such evidence to be produced and for that purpose may require the prosecuting attorney to subpoena witnesses.

We find, therefore, that there were no such irregularities which occurred during the grand jury proceeding as to warrant reversal.[FN39]

FN39. We take this opportunity to express the view that there is evidence that the grand jury indictment process may no longer be fulfilling its intended functions, and recommendations have been made that it should be replaced by the preliminary hearing procedure. In this regard, see Rubinstein, The Grand Jury in Alaska: Tentative Recommendations to the Judicial Council (1975).

III. Sentence Review

At the conclusion of the sentencing hearing, the trial judge imposed a sentence of ten years on each of the rape counts, and a sentence of seven and one half years on the robbery count, all sentences to run concurrently. Coleman contends that this sentence is excessive.

The presentence report reflects that Coleman was born in 1951, the oldest of four children. His youth was spent in Tuskegee, Alabama, where he was raised by his parents and grandparents. Coleman did not complete high school, having dropped out after the 11th grade, but he subsequently received his General Equivalency Diploma through a course in Alabama. In 1971 he joined the United States Army and received an honorable discharge in 1973. At sentencing, it was disclosed that Coleman, who was unemployed at the time the offenses in question occurred, did not have any prior record, was not a user of drugs, and was only a social drinker.

The presentence report which was furnished to the trial court prior to sentencing contains a written statement by Coleman which provides in part as follows:

I've never raped or robbed anybody in my entire life. But, I was convicted of something I didn't do. I didn't get an honest verdict from my jury. Any honest person could see that. I didn't rape either of those two women and nobody proved in court that I did.

In imposing what was in essence a term of ten years imprisonment, the trial judge stated:

Your attorney indicated that it would take some time for you, perhaps, to be rehabilitated and recommended to the court certain matters in which he felt that you could become rehabilitated and become a good citizen. I hope that you can be. But at the present time, because of the nature of the offense, I find that you are, in fact, a danger to this community. I will tell you that I would have unhesitatingly followed the recommendation made by your attorney if there was 53 but one count, with your background, your history, and no prior convictions; but we are not faced with merely one count here, we are faced with three. . . . It is further the recommendation of this court in both of these matters that you will be transferred to the Eagle River institution, with the further recommendation that any psychological evaluation be continued, with a view toward teaching you a skill or a craft so that you may become skilled, and that upon rehabilitation, be released from the said institution. As I stated before, I not only consider you at present a danger to the community, but I also feel because of your youth that there is hope for rehabilitation.

[13][14] As we have often stated, the primary responsibility for sentencing rests in the trial court. Our review of the record reveals that the trial judge carefully weighed the Chaney[FN40] objectives before imposing the sentence in question. In light of the nature of the crimes, herein, [FN41] the defendant's character, and the need for protecting society, we are unable to say that the trial judge was clearly mistaken[FN42] in imposing a sentence of ten years.

FN40. State v. Chaney, 477 P.2d 441, 443 (Alaska 1970). For a review of the rules that guide the court in applying the doctrine of Chaney, see Newsom v. State, 533 P.2d 904, 911 (Alaska 1975).

FN41. In State v. Chaney, 477 P.2d 441, 446 (Alaska 1970), we stated that '(f) orcible rape and robbery rank among the most serious crimes.'

FN42. This court has previously expressed the view that violent crimes involving physical injury to innocent people are to be regarded as our most serious offenses and are not to be treated lightly. See the following for rape cases where long-term sentences were affirmed: Newsom v. State, 533 P.2d 904 (Alaska 1975) (15 years); Ames v. State, 533 P.2d 246 (Alaska 1975) (8 years); Torres v. State, 521 P.2d 386 (Alaska 1974) (20 years); Newsom v. State, 512 P.2d 557 (Alaska 1973) (15 years); Gordon v. State, 501 P.2d 772 (Alaska 1972) (10 years). See also Lancaster v. State, 550 P.2d 1257 (Alaska 1976), where a sentence of two years was disapproved as being too lenient.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOOCHEVER, J., concurred with opinion in which RABINOWITZ, J., joined.BOOCHEVER, Chief Justice, with whom RABINOWITZ, Justice, joins, concurring

I concur in the majority opinion in all respects except for the discussion of the prosecutor's conduct in questioning Mr. Coleman before the grand jury about his silence after arrest. An inference of guilt may not be drawn from a failure to speak or to explain when a person has been arrested,[FN1] and evidence of silence in the face of custodial interrogation by police is not properly admissible in a trial.[FN2] Similarly, a prosecutor should not intentionally elicit evidence before a grand jury of an accused's silence at the time of his arrest.

FN1. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694, 695-96 (1966); Ivey v. United States, 344 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1965).

FN2. Doyle v. Ohio, - U.S. -, 96 S.Ct. 2240, 49 L.Ed.2d 91, 44 U.S.L.W. 4902 (June 17, 1976); United States v. Hale, 422 U.S. 171, 95 S.Ct. 2133, 45 L.Ed.2d 99 (1975); United States v. Impson, 531 F.2d 274, 19 Cr.L.Rptr. 2172 (5th Cir. 1976); Fowle v. United States, 410 F.2d 48, 50-51 (9th Cir. 1969); United States v. Nolan, 416 F.2d 588, 594 (10th Cir. 1969); United States v. Mullings, 364 F.2d 173, 175 (2nd Cir. 1966). The practice of commenting to a trial jury upon an accused's silence after arrest has been specifically disapproved by this court in Davis v. State, 501 P.2d 1026, 1031 (Alaska 1972).

A prosecuting attorney who has properly prepared his case for the grand jury will know whether the accused remained silent or offered exculpatory statements after arrest. If the district attorney knows of exculpatory statements made by an accused after arrest, it is his duty to bring this information before the grand jury. If he knows that the accused remained silent after arrest, the prosecutor should not seek to bring this out. If any member of the grand jury specifically raises this issue, the 54 prosecuting attorney should explain the constitutional right to remain silent in such circumstances.

I do not find that the prosecutor's conduct amounted to reversible error in this case because it appears from the transcript that the grand jurors were subsequently made aware of the accused's right to remain silent. I cannot agree with the majority, however, that the district attorney acted properly in questioning the police officer about Coleman's response after arrest.

HB 35 Parental Notification and Consent for a Pregnant Minor Aborting an Unborn Child

HB 35 requires parental consent unless the minor chooses a judicial bypass and enacts a notification process that the Court determined is the least restrictive means of achieving the State's compelling interest. It leaves intact the four exemptions from parental consent: married minors, minors who have been legally emancipated, minors who have entered the armed services of the United States, and minors who have become employed and self-subsisting.

On November 2, 2007 in State of Alaska v. Planned Parenthood of Alaska, the Alaska Supreme Court, in a 3 – 2 decision, has once again undermined a long history of social law, the intent of the Constitution, and the will of the people of Alaska.

The legislature passed the Parental Consent Act (PCA) in 1997. In July of that same year, Alaska Superior Court Judge Sen Tan ruled the law was unconstitutional because "the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution protects minors as well as adults." The Superior Court did not address whether or not the PCA violated the privacy clause. The State appealed the decision and the Supreme Court ruled that the privacy clause extends to minors unless there is a compelling state interest using the least restrictive means available. The Supreme Court remanded the case back to Sen Tan to hold an evidentiary hearing to determine if PCA furthered a compelling state interest.

In January 2003 the Superior Court held a bench trial spanning almost three weeks to hear evidence regarding the constitutionality of the PCA. In October 2003, Judge Sen Tan ruled the PCA was unconstitutional because it did not further a compelling state interest while using the least restrictive means available. In January 2004 the Superior Court enjoined the State from enforcing the PCA declaring the PCA was unconstitutional under the equal protection and privacy clauses of the Alaska Constitution.

On November 2, 2007, the court agreed with the State that "protecting minors from their own immaturity and aiding parents in fulfilling their parental responsibilities" are "compelling interests." So the issue at hand for the court was whether the PCA was the least restrictive means of achieving the State's compelling interests.

HB 35 addresses the legal issues of parental consent in a practical manner based on the historical beliefs of our forefathers. The Parental Consent Act of 1997 was fully compliant with the U.S. Supreme Court precedent Bellotti v. Baird, (443 U.S. 622 1979). In essence, the Alaska Supreme Court in its November 2, 2007 decision struck down a decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. Justice Carpeneti eloquently wrote the dissenting decision stating the following:

> "Because this court's rejection of the legislature's thoughtful balance is inconsistent with our own case law and unnecessarily dismissive of the legislature's role in expressing the will of the people, I respectfully dissent."

The dissent opinion brought to light the lack of consideration or recognition in case law that "children are not generally considered competent to consent to medical procedures." It brought to light the four exemptions in the PCA, "married minors, ... minors who have been legally emancipated, ...minors who have entered the armed services of the United States ,and ...who have become employed and self-subsisting." For those pregnant minors who did not fall into the four exempt categories a judicial bypass provision was provided for appropriate circumstances. It was a process designed to be speedy and cost-free to the child. The PCA called for a five-day response of the court; HB 364 calls for a three-day response. Failure by the court to respond in time would be construed as an act constructive authorization. The judicial bypass requires a sworn statement from the pregnant minor and an adult family member or state agent such as an Office of Children's Services caseworker or law enforcement officer.

Carpeneti discussed the fact that the Court quickly recognized that there was a compelling State interest but failed to "look closely at the nature of the state's and parents' interests" leaving "its constitutional 'balance' one-sided." Carpeneti continues in his dissent to outline case law that creates a judicial history of "treating minors differently from adults," "protecting twelve-year-olds from older teenagers and from their own immaturity in choosing to participate in harmful activity," prohibiting minors from making contract to "smoke cigarettes or drink alcoholic beverages or consent to sexual intercourse. Without a parent's consent they may not become licensed drivers or get married or obtain general medical or dental treatment."

> "In sum, the Alaska Parental Consent Act appears to be the product of a concerted effort to make certain that those pregnant girls who are sufficiently mature to make the decision to obtain an abortion on their own are allowed to do so while those who are not sufficiently mature either obtain a parent's consent or, in the case of parental abuse, a judicial determination that the procedure is in their best interest."

In his dissenting opinion, Carpeneti uses the litmus test for parental consent that is required for participation in school field trips to demonstrating the extent to which the State must go to terminate parental rights is his argument:

> "In addition to society's interest in protecting children from their own immaturity, we have long held that parents have a fundamental right in raising of their children."

Carpeneti's dissenting opinion determines that the State's compelling interest does outweigh the equal protection and privacy clauses because:

"In sum, the norm in American, and Alaskan, life and law is that the parents are a child's first and most important resource for assistance in decision-making. For that reason, the state's interest in protecting children from the consequences of their own immaturity, and in so doing protecting the health of its children, and its interest in supporting parents' right and duty to guide the upbringing of their children is particularly compelling."

I believe parental consent can still recognize the State's compelling interest in "protecting minors from their own immaturity and aiding parents in fulfilling their parental responsibilities." In addition to parental consent, HB 35 provides for a judicial bypass for sexual abuse cases using a lower standard than the 1997 PCA Act's clear and convincing provision, and a provision prohibiting the parents from coercing a pregnant minor to have an abortion.

SECTIONAL

House Bill 35
Parental Notification and Consent for a Pregnant Minor's Abortion

Section 1: AS 18.16.010(a) Abortions
This section amends the requirement that notice, along with consent, be given prior to an abortion being performed on a minor, except if a court has authorized the minor to consent to the abortion without parental notice.

Section 2: AS 18.16.010(g) Abortions
This section adds language to provide a defense for a physician or surgeon that performs an abortion on a minor because in their clinical judgment the minor was in serious risk to her life or physical health. This section defines the terms "clinical judgment" and "defense" and adds the words "medical instability caused by a" which broadens the definition of the term "medical emergency".

Section 3: AS 18.16.020 Notice and consent required before minor's abortion.
This section is repealed and reenacted to include notification to parents, legal guardian, or custodian prior to an abortion and address the needs of a minor that is a victim of abuse. The section states that before an abortion can be performed on a minor at least one of the following applies: (1) one of the minor's parents, legal guardian or custodian has been given notice of the planned abortion not less than 48 hours prior to the abortion and has consented in writing to the procedure; (2) a court issues an order; (3) court inaction results in constructive authorization for the minor to consent to the abortion without notice and consent; or (4) the minor is a victim of abuse and the abuse is documented, signed and notarized by the minor and certain other individuals. Additionally physicians are required to report suspected abuse, and when informed that a pregnancy resulted from sexual assault retain and preserve all products of conception and evidence for use by law enforcement.

Section 4: AS 18.16.030(a) Judicial by-pass for minor seeking an abortion.
This section adds conforming language "notice to" when a pregnant minor is filing a complaint with the superior court for authorization to the procedure without "notice or" consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian.

Section 5: AS 18.16.030(b) Judicial by-pass for minor seeking an abortion
This section adds "notice to or" regarding the statement submitted to the superior court when a minor is trying to get judicial by-pass in order to have an abortion without "notice or" consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian. .

Section 6: AS 18.16.030(c) Judicial by-pass for minor seeking an abortion
This section amends the number of days for the court to schedule a hearing from five to three business days. Conforming language "notice to or" has been added before consent because if a hearing is not held by the third business day it is considered a constructive order of the court authorizing the complainant to consent to an abortion without notice or consent.

Section 7: AS 18.16.030(j) Judicial by-pass for minor seeking an abortion
This section amends the number of days for the superior court to deliver a copy of an appeal to the supreme court from four days to three days after an appeal is filed. It also amends from four days to three days for the appellant to file a brief after the appeal is docketed. Conforming language "notice to or" has been added before consent because if the court fails to meet the timeframe set above the court's inaction is considered a constructive order authorizing the appellant to consent to an abortion without notice or consent.

Section 8: AS 18.16.030(n) Judicial by-pass for minor seeking an abortion
This section amends the information provided to a minor to include requesting the court to direct the school to provide the minor with an excused absence and directing the school not to notify the minor's parent, legal guardian, or custodian.

Section 9: AS 18.16: New Sections
AS 18.16.035 Coercion/emancipation
This section states that a person may not coerce a pregnant minor to have an abortion. Denial of financial support by a parent or guardian who has a legal duty of support for purposes of coercing a minor to have an abortion shall be sufficient evidence of emancipation status. "Coercion" means to restrain or dominate a minor by force, threat of force, or deprivation of food, support, or shelter.

AS 18.16.040 Reports
This section sets out the timeframe and information physicians are required to file reports with DHSS if they have performed an abortion on a minor. Reports filed under this section may not include any identifying information on the minor except her age.

Sections 10, 11, 13: Direct Court Rule Amendments
These sections deal with Scope, Petition, and Findings & Order and add in notice to and the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian to conform to the intent of this bill requiring notice and consent for a minor to get an abortion.

Sections 12 and 15: Direct Court Rule Amendments – Constructive Order
These sections provide "constructive orders" to Rules 220(h) and Rule 20(f) changing the time lines for the courts for entering an order and holding a hearing from [FIVE] to three days.

Section 16: SEVERABILITY:
This section discusses what happens to the remainder of the bill if any provisions are found to be invalid or unenforceable.

BELLOTTI, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MASSACHUSETTS, ET AL. v. BAIRD ET AL. APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS No. 78-329. Argued February 27, 1979. Decided July 2, 1979.*

[Footnote *] Together with No. 78-330, Hunerwadel v. Baird et al., also on appeal from the same court.

A Massachusetts statute requires parental consent before an abortion can be performed on an unmarried woman under the age of 18. If one or both parents refuse such consent, however, the abortion may be obtained by order of a judge of the superior court "for good cause shown." In appellees' class action challenging the constitutionality of the statute, a three-judge District Court held it unconstitutional. Subsequently, this Court vacated the District Court's judgment, Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, holding that the District Court should have abstained and certified to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court appropriate questions concerning the meaning of the statute. On remand, the District Court certified several questions to the Supreme Judicial Court. Among the questions certified was whether the statute permits any minors - mature or immature - to obtain judicial consent to an abortion without any parental consultation whatsoever. The Supreme Judicial Court answered that, in general, it does not; that consent must be obtained for every nonemergency abortion unless no parent is available; and that an available parent must be given notice of any judicial proceedings brought by a minor to obtain consent for an abortion. Another question certified was whether, if the superior court finds that the minor is capable of making, and has, in fact, made and adhered to, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion, the court may refuse its consent on a finding that a parent's, or its own, contrary decision is a better one. The Supreme Judicial Court answered in the affirmative. Following the Supreme Judicial Court's judgment, the District Court again declared the statute unconstitutional and enjoined its enforcement.

Held:

The judgment is affirmed. Pp. 633-651; 652-656.

450 F. Supp. 997, affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL, joined by MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, MR. JUSTICE STEWART, and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, concluded that:

1. There are three reasons justifying the conclusion that the constitutional rights of children cannot be equated with those of adults: the peculiar vulnerability of children; their inability to make critical decisions in an informed, mature manner; and the importance of the guiding role of parents in the upbringing of their children. Pp. 633-639.

2. The abortion decision differs in important ways from other decisions facing minors, and the State is required to act with particular sensitivity when it legislates to foster parental involvement in this matter. Pp. 639-642.

3. If a State decides to require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both parents' consent to an abortion, it also must provide an alternative procedure whereby authorization for the abortion can be obtained. A pregnant minor is entitled in such a proceeding to show either that she is mature enough and well enough informed to make her abortion decision, in consultation with her physician, independently of her parents' wishes, or that even if she is not able to make this decision independently, the desired abortion would be in her best interests. Such a procedure must ensure that the provision requiring parental consent does not in fact amount to an impermissible "absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto." Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 74. Pp. 642-644.

4. The Massachusetts statute, as authoritatively interpreted by the Supreme Judicial Court, unduly burdens the right to seek an abortion. The statute falls short of constitutional standards in two respects. First, it permits judicial authorization for an abortion to be withheld from a minor who is found by the superior court to be mature and fully competent to make this decision independently. Second, it requires parental consultation or notification in every instance, whether or not in the pregnant minor's best interests, without affording her an opportunity to receive an independent judicial determination that she is mature enough to consent or that an abortion would be in her best interests. Pp. 644-651.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, joined by MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, and MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, concluded that the Massachusetts statute is unconstitutional because under the statute, as written and as construed by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, no minor, no matter how mature and capable of informed decisionmaking, may receive an abortion without the consent of either both parents or a superior court judge, thus making the minor's abortion decision subject in every instance to an absolute third-party veto. Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, , controlling. Pp. 652-656.

REHNQUIST, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 651. STEVENS, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which BRENNAN, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 652. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 656.

Garrick F. Cole, Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts, argued the cause for appellants in No. 78-329. With him on the briefs were Francis X. Bellotti, Attorney General, pro se, and Michael B. Meyer and Thomas R. Kiley, Assistant Attorneys General. Brian A. Riley argued the cause for appellant in No. 78-330. With him on the brief was Thomas P. Russell.

Joseph J. Balliro argued the cause for appellees in both cases. With him on the brief was Joan C. Schmidt. John H. Henn also argued the cause for appellees in both cases. With him on the brief were Scott C. Moriearty, Sandra L. Lynch, Loyd M. Starrett, and John Reinstein.Fn

MR. JUSTICE POWELL announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE STEWART, and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST joined.

These appeals present a challenge to the constitutionality of a state statute regulating the access of minors to abortions. They require us to continue the inquiry we began in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976), and Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132 (1976).

On August 2, 1974, the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts passed, over the Governor's veto, an Act pertaining to abortions performed within the State. 1974 Mass. Acts, ch. 706. According to its title, the statute was intended to regulate abortions "within present constitutional limits." Shortly before the Act was to go into effect, the class action from which these appeals arise was commenced in the District Court[Footnote 1] to enjoin, as unconstitutional, the provision of the Act now codified as Mass. Gen. Laws Ann., ch. 112, 12S (West Supp. 1979).[Footnote 2]

Section 12S provides in part:

"If the mother is less than eighteen years of age and has not married, the consent of both the mother and her parents [to an abortion to be performed on the mother] is required. If one or both of the mother's parents refuse such consent, consent may be obtained by order of a judge of the superior court for good cause shown, after such hearing as he deems necessary. Such a hearing will not require the appointment of a guardian for the mother. If one of the parents has died or has deserted his or her family, consent by the remaining parent is sufficient. If both parents have died or have deserted their family, consent of the mother's guardian or other person having duties similar to a guardian, or any person who had assumed the care and custody of the mother is sufficient. The commissioner of public health shall prescribe a written form for such consent. Such form shall be signed by the proper person or persons and given to the physician performing the abortion who shall maintain it in his permanent files."

Physicians performing abortions in the absence of the consent required by 12S are subject to injunctions and criminal penalties. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann., ch. 112, 12Q, 12T, and 12U (West Supp. 1979).

A three-judge District Court was convened to hear the case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2281 (1970 ed.), repealed by Pub. L. 94-381, 1, 90 Stat. 1119.[Footnote 3] Plaintiffs in the suit, appellees in both the cases before us now, were William Baird; Parents Aid Society, Inc. (Parents Aid), of which Baird is founder and director; Gerald Zupnick, M. D., who regularly performs abortions at the Parents Aid clinic; and an unmarried minor, identified by the pseudonym "Mary Moe," who, at the commencement of the suit, was pregnant, residing at home with her parents, and desirous of obtaining an abortion without informing them.[Footnote 4]

Mary Moe was permitted to represent the "class of unmarried minors in Massachusetts who have adequate capacity to give a valid and informed consent [to abortion], and who do not wish to involve their parents." Baird v. Bellotti, 393 F. Supp. 847, 850 (Mass. 1975) (Baird I). Initially there was some confusion whether the rights of minors who wish abortions without parental involvement but who lack "adequate capacity" to give such consent also could be adjudicated in the suit. The District Court ultimately determined that Dr. Zupnick was entitled to assert the rights of these minors. See Baird v. Bellotti, 450 F. Supp. 997, 1001, and n. 6 (Mass. 1978).[Footnote 5]

Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts and Crittenton Hastings House & Clinic, both organizations that provide counselling to pregnant adolescents, and Phillip Stubblefield, M. D. (intervenors),[Footnote 6] appeared as amici curiae on behalf of the plaintiffs. The District Court "accepted [this group] in a status something more than amici because of reservations about the adequacy of plaintiffs' representation [of the plaintiff classes in the suit]." Id., at 999 n. 3.

Defendants in the suit, appellants here in No. 78-329, were the Attorney General of Massachusetts and the District Attorneys of all counties in the State. Jane Hunerwadel was permitted to intervene as a defendant and representative of the class of Massachusetts parents having unmarried minor daughters who then were, or might become, pregnant. She and the class she represents are appellants in No. 78-330. [Footnote 7]

Following three days of testimony, the District Court issued an opinion invalidating 12S. Baird I, supra. The court rejected appellees' argument that all minors capable of becoming pregnant also are capable of giving informed consent to an abortion, or that it always is in the best interests of a minor who desires an abortion to have one. See 393 F. Supp., at 854. But the court was convinced that "a substantial number of females under the age of 18 are capable of forming a valid consent," id., at 855, and "that a significant number of [these] are unwilling to tell their parents." Id., at 853.

In its analysis of the relevant constitutional principles, the court stated that "there can be no doubt but that a female's constitutional right to an abortion in the first trimester does not depend upon her calendar age." Id., at 855-856. The court found no justification for the parental consent limitation placed on that right by 12S, since it concluded that the statute was "cast not in terms of protecting the minor, . . . but in recognizing independent rights of parents." Id., at 856. The "independent" parental rights protected by 12S, as the court understood them, were wholly distinct from the best interests of the minor.[Footnote 8]

B

Appellants sought review in this Court, and we noted probable jurisdiction. Bellotti v. Baird, 423 U.S. 982 (1975). After briefing and oral argument, it became apparent that 12S was susceptible of a construction that "would avoid or substantially modify the federal constitutional challenge to the statute." Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 148 (1976) (Bellotti I). We therefore vacated the judgment of the District Court, concluding that it should have abstained and certified to the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts appropriate questions concerning the meaning of 12S, pursuant to existing procedure in that State. See Mass. Sup. Jud. Ct. Rule 3:21.

On remand, the District Court certified nine questions to the Supreme Judicial Court.[Footnote 9] These were answered in an opinion styled Baird v. Attorney General, 371 Mass. 741, 360 N. E. 2d 288 (1977) (Attorney General). Among the more important aspects of 12S, as authoritatively construed by the Supreme Judicial Court, are the following:

1. In deciding whether to grant consent to their daughter's abortion, parents are required by 12S to consider exclusively what will serve her best interests. See id., at 746-747, 360 N. E. 2d, at 292-293.

2. The provision in 12S that judicial consent for an abortion shall be granted, parental objections notwithstanding, "for good cause shown" means that such consent shall be granted if found to be in the minor's best interests. The judge "must disregard all parental objections, and other considerations, which are not based exclusively" on that standard. Id., at 748, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293.

3. Even if the judge in a 12S proceeding finds "that the minor is capable of making, and has made, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion," he is entitled to withhold consent "in circumstances where he determines that the best interests of the minor will not be served by an abortion." Ibid., 360 N. E. 2d, at 293.

4. As a general rule, a minor who desires an abortion may not obtain judicial consent without first seeking both parents' consent. Exceptions to the rule exist when a parent is not available or when the need for the abortion constitutes "`an emergency requiring immediate action.'"[Footnote 10] Id., at 750, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. Unless a parent is not available, he must be notified of any judicial proceedings brought under 12S. Id., at 755-756, 360 N. E. 2d, at 297.

5. The resolution of 12S cases and any appeals that follow can be expected to be prompt. The name of the minor and her parents may be held in confidence. If need be, the Supreme Judicial Court and the superior courts can promulgate rules or issue orders to ensure that such proceedings are handled expeditiously. Id., at 756-758, 360 N. E. 2d, at 297-298.

6. Massachusetts Gen. Laws Ann., ch. 112, 12F (west Supp. 1979), which provides, inter alia, that certain classes of minors may consent to most kinds of medical care without parental approval, does not apply to abortions, except as to minors who are married, widowed, or divorced. See 371 Mass., at 758-762, 360 N. E. 2d, at 298-300. Nor does the State's common-law "mature minor rule" create an exception to 12S. Id., at 749-750, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. See n. 27, infra.

C

Following the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court, appellees returned to the District Court and obtained a stay of the enforcement of 12S until its constitutionality could be determined. Baird v. Bellotti, 428 F. Supp. 854 (Mass. 1977) (Baird II). After permitting discovery by both sides, holding a pretrial conference, and conducting further hearings, the District Court again declared 12S unconstitutional and enjoined its enforcement. Baird v. Bellotti, 450 F. Supp. 997 (Mass. 1978) (Baird III). The court identified three particular aspects of the statute which, in its view, rendered it unconstitutional.

First, as construed by the Supreme Judicial Court, 12S requires parental notice in virtually every case where the parent is available. The court believed that the evidence warranted a finding "that many, perhaps a large majority of 17-year olds are capable of informed consent, as are a not insubstantial number of 16-year olds, and some even younger." Id., at 1001. In addition, the court concluded that it would not be in the best interests of some "immature" minors - those incapable of giving informed consent - even to inform their parents of their intended abortions. Although the court declined to decide whether the burden of requiring a minor to take her parents to court was, per se, an impermissible burden on her right to seek an abortion, it concluded that Massachusetts could not constitutionally insist that parental permission be sought or notice given "in those cases where a court, if given free rein, would find that it was to the minor's best interests that one or both of her parents not be informed . . . ." Id., at 1002.

Second, the District Court held that 12S was defective in permitting a judge to veto the abortion decision of a minor found to be capable of giving informed consent. The court reasoned that upon a finding of maturity and informed consent, the State no longer was entitled to impose legal restrictions upon this decision. Id., at 1003. Given such a finding, the court could see "no reasonable basis" for distinguishing between a minor and an adult, and it therefore concluded that 12S was not only "an undue burden in the due process sense, [but] a discriminatory denial of equal protection [as well]." Id., at 1004.

Finally, the court decided that 12S suffered from what it termed "formal overbreadth," ibid., because the statute failed explicitly to inform parents that they must consider only the minor's best interests in deciding whether to grant consent. The court believed that, despite the Supreme Judicial Court's construction of 12S, parents naturally would infer from the statute that they were entitled to withhold consent for other, impermissible reasons. This was thought to create a "chilling effect" by enhancing the possibility that parental consent would be denied wrongfully and that the minor would have to proceed in court.

Having identified these flaws in 12S, the District Court considered whether it should engage in "judicial repair." Id., at 1005. It declined either to sever the statute or to give it a construction different from that set out by the Supreme Judicial Court, as that tribunal arguably had invited it to do. See Attorney General, 371 Mass., at 745-746, 360 N. E. 2d, at 292. The District Court therefore adhered to its previous position, declaring 12S unconstitutional and permanently enjoining its enforcement.[Footnote 11] Appellants sought review in this Court a second time, and we again noted probable jurisdiction. 439 U.S. 925 (1978).

II

A child, merely on account of his minority, is not beyond the protection of the Constitution. As the Court said in In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 13 (1967), "whatever may be their precise impact, neither the Fourteenth Amendment nor the Bill of Rights is for adults alone."[Footnote 12] This observation, of course, is but the beginning of the analysis. The Court long has recognized that the status of minors under the law is unique in many respects. As Mr. Justice Frankfurter aptly put it: "Children have a very special place in life which law should reflect. Legal theories and their phrasing in other cases readily lead to fallacious reasoning if uncritically transferred to determination of a State's duty towards children." May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528, 536 (1953) (concurring opinion). The unique role in our society of the family, the institution by which "we inculcate and pass down many of our most cherished values, moral and cultural," Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503-504 (1977) (plurality opinion), requires that constitutional principles be applied with sensitivity and flexibility to the special needs of parents and children. We have recognized three reasons justifying the conclusion that the constitutional rights of children cannot be equated with those of adults: the peculiar vulnerability of children; their inability to make critical decisions in an informed, mature manner; and the importance of the parental role in child rearing.

A

The Court's concern for the vulnerability of children is demonstrated in its decisions dealing with minors' claims to constitutional protection against deprivations of liberty or property interests by the State. With respect to many of these claims, we have concluded that the child's right is virtually coextensive with that of an adult. For example, the Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee against the deprivation of liberty without due process of law is applicable to children in juvenile delinquency proceedings. In re Gault, supra. In particular, minors involved in such proceedings are entitled to adequate notice, the assistance of counsel, and the opportunity to confront their accusers. They can be found guilty only upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and they may assert the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. In re Winship, (1970); In re Gault, supra. See also Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 674 (1977) (corporal punishment of schoolchildren implicates constitutionally protected liberty interest); cf. Breed v. Jones, (1975) (Double Jeopardy Clause prohibits prosecuting juvenile as an adult after an adjudicatory finding in juvenile court that he had violated a criminal statute).

Similarly, in Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565 (1975), the Court held that children may not be deprived of certain property interests without due process.

These rulings have not been made on the uncritical assumption that the constitutional rights of children are indistinguishable from those of adults. Indeed, our acceptance of juvenile courts distinct from the adult criminal justice system assumes that juvenile offenders constitutionally may be treated differently from adults. In order to preserve this separate avenue for dealing with minors, the Court has said that hearings in juvenile delinquency cases need not necessarily "`conform with all of the requirements of a criminal trial or even of the usual administrative hearing.'" In re Gault, supra, at 30, quoting Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 541, 562 (1966). Thus, juveniles are not constitutionally entitled to trial by jury in delinquency adjudications. McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, (1971). Viewed together, our cases show that although children generally are protected by the same constitutional guarantees against governmental deprivations as are adults, the State is entitled to adjust its legal system to account for children's vulnerability and their needs for "concern, . . . sympathy, and . . . paternal attention." Id., at 550 (plurality

Second, the Court has held that the States validly may limit the freedom of children to choose for themselves in the making of important, affirmative choices with potentially serious consequences. These rulings have been grounded in the recognition that, during the formative years of childhood and adolescence, minors often lack the experience, perspective, and judgment to recognize and avoid choices that could be detrimental to them.[Footnote 13]

Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968), illustrates well the Court's concern over the inability of children to make mature choices, as the First Amendment rights involved are clear examples of constitutionally protected freedoms of choice. At issue was a criminal conviction for selling sexually oriented magazines to a minor under the age of 17 in violation of a New York state law. It was conceded that the conviction could not have stood under the First Amendment if based upon a sale of the same material to an adult. Id., at 634. Notwithstanding the importance the Court always has attached to First Amendment rights, it concluded that "even where there is an invasion of protected freedoms `the power of the state to control the conduct of children reaches beyond the scope of its authority over adults . . .,'" id., at 638, quoting Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 170 (1944).[Footnote 14] The Court was convinced that the New York Legislature rationally could conclude that the sale to children of the magazines in question presented a danger against which they should be guarded. Ginsberg, supra, at 641. It therefore rejected the

C

Third, the guiding role of parents in the upbringing of their children justifies limitations on the freedoms of minors. The State commonly protects its youth from adverse governmental action and from their own immaturity by requiring parental consent to or involvement in important decisions by minors.[Footnote 16] But an additional and more important justification for state deference to parental control over children is that "[t]he child is not the mere creature of the State; those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations." Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925). "The duty to prepare the child for `additional obligations' . . .

must be read to include the inculcation of moral standards, religious beliefs, and elements of good citizenship." Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 233 (1972). This affirmative process of teaching, guiding, and inspiring by precept and example is essential to the growth of young people into mature, socially responsible citizens.

We have believed in this country that this process, in large part, is beyond the competence of impersonal political institutions. Indeed, affirmative sponsorship of particular ethical, religious, or political beliefs is something we expect the State not to attempt in a society constitutionally committed to the ideal of individual liberty and freedom of choice. Thus, "[i]t is cardinal with us that the custody, care and nurture of the child reside first in the parents, whose primary function and freedom include preparation for obligations the state can neither supply nor hinder." Prince v. Massachusetts, supra, at 166 (emphasis added).

Unquestionably, there are many competing theories about the most effective way for parents to fulfill their central role in assisting their children on the way to responsible adulthood. While we do not pretend any special wisdom on this subject, we cannot ignore that central to many of these theories, and deeply rooted in our Nation's history and tradition, is the belief that the parental role implies a substantial measure of authority over one's children. Indeed, "constitutional interpretation has consistently recognized that the parents' claim to authority in their own household to direct the rearing of their children is basic in the structure of our society." Ginsberg v. New York, supra, at 639.

Properly understood, then, the tradition of parental authority is not inconsistent with our tradition of individual liberty; rather, the former is one of the basic presuppositions of the latter. Legal restrictions on minors, especially those supportive of the parental role, may be important to the child's chances for the full growth and maturity that make eventual participation in a free society meaningful and rewarding.[Footnote 17] Under the Constitution, the State can "properly conclude that parents and others, teachers for example, who have [the] primary responsibility for children's well-being are entitled to the support of laws designed to aid discharge of that responsibility." Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S., at 639.[Footnote 18]

III

With these principles in mind, we consider the specific constitutional questions presented by these appeals. In 12S, Massachusetts has attempted to reconcile the constitutional right of a woman, in consultation with her physician, to choose to terminate her pregnancy as established by Roe v. Wade, (1973), and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), with the special interest of the State in encouraging an unmarried pregnant minor to seek the advice of her parents in making the important decision whether or not to bear a child. As noted above, 12S was before us in Bellotti I, 428 U.S. 132 (1976), where we remanded the case for interpretation of its provisions by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. We previously had held in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976), that a State could not lawfully authorize an absolute parental veto over the decision of a minor to terminate her pregnancy. Id., at 74. In

Bellotti I, supra, we recognized that 12S could be read as "fundamentally different from a statute that creates a `parental veto,'" 428 U.S., at 145, thus "avoid[ing] or substantially modify[ing] the federal constitutional challenge to the statute." Id., at 148. The question before us - in light of what we have said in the prior cases - is whether 12S, as authoritatively interpreted by the Supreme Judicial Court, provides for parental notice and consent in a manner that does not unduly burden the right to seek an abortion. See id., at 147.

Appellees and intervenors contend that even as interpreted by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts 12S does unduly burden this right. They suggest, for example, that the mere requirement of parental notice constitutes such a burden. As stated in Part II above, however, parental notice and consent are qualifications that typically may be imposed by the State on a minor's right to make important decisions. As immature minors often lack the ability to make fully informed choices that take account of both immediate and long-range consequences, a State reasonably may determine that parental consultation often is desirable and in the best interest of the minor.[Footnote 19] It may further determine, as a general proposition, that such consultation is particularly desirable with respect to the abortion decision - one that for some people raises profound moral and religious concerns.[Footnote 20] As MR. JUSTICE STEWART wrote in concurrence in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, supra, at 91:

"There can be little doubt that the State furthers a constitutionally permissible end by encouraging an unmarried pregnant minor to seek the help and advice of her parents in making the very important decision whether or not to bear a child. That is a grave decision, and a girl of tender years, under emotional stress, may be ill-equipped to make it without mature advice and emotional support. It seems unlikely that she will obtain adequate counsel and support from the attending physician at an abortion clinic, where abortions for pregnant minors frequently take place." (Footnote omitted.)[Footnote 21]

But we are concerned here with a constitutional right to seek an abortion. The abortion decision differs in important ways from other decisions that may be made during minority. The need to preserve the constitutional right and the unique nature of the abortion decision, especially when made by a minor, require a State to act with particular sensitivity when it legislates to foster parental involvement in this matter.

The pregnant minor's options are much different from those facing a minor in other situations, such as deciding whether to marry. A minor not permitted to marry before the age of majority is required simply to postpone her decision. She and her intended spouse may preserve the opportunity for later marriage should they continue to desire it. A pregnant adolescent, however, cannot preserve for long the possibility of aborting, which effectively expires in a matter of weeks from the onset of pregnancy.

Moreover, the potentially severe detriment facing a pregnant woman, see Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S., at 153, is not mitigated by her minority. Indeed, considering her probable education, employment skills, financial resources, and emotional maturity, unwanted motherhood may be exceptionally burdensome for a minor. In addition, the fact of having a child brings with it adult legal responsibility, for parenthood, like attainment of the age of majority, is one of the traditional criteria for the termination of the legal disabilities of minority. In sum, there are few situations in which denying a minor the right to make an important decision will have consequences so grave and indelible.

Yet, an abortion may not be the best choice for the minor. The circumstances in which this issue arises will vary widely. In a given case, alternatives to abortion, such as marriage to the father of the child, arranging for its adoption, or assuming the responsibilities of motherhood with the assured support of family, may be feasible and relevant to the minor's best interests. Nonetheless, the abortion decision is one that simply cannot be postponed, or it will be made by default with far-reaching consequences.

For these reasons, as we held in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S., at 74, "the State may not impose a blanket provision . . . requiring the consent of a parent or person in loco parentis as a condition for abortion of an unmarried minor during the first 12 weeks of her pregnancy." Although, as stated in Part II, supra, such deference to parents may be permissible with respect to other choices facing a minor, the unique nature and consequences of the abortion decision make it inappropriate "to give a third party an absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto over the decision of the physician and his patient to terminate the patient's pregnancy, regardless of the reason for withholding the consent." 428 U.S., at 74. We therefore conclude that if the State decides to require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both parents' consent to an abortion, it also must provide an alternative procedure [Footnote 22] whereby authorization for the abortion can be obtained.

A pregnant minor is entitled in such a proceeding to show either: (1) that she is mature enough and well enough informed to make her abortion decision, in consultation with her physician, independently of her parents' wishes;[Footnote 23] or

(2) that even if she is not able to make this decision independently, the desired abortion would be in her best interests. The proceeding in which this showing is made must assure that a resolution of the issue, and any appeals that may follow, will be completed with anonymity and sufficient expedition to provide an effective opportunity for an abortion to be obtained. In sum, the procedure must ensure that the provision requiring parental consent does not in fact amount to the "absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto" that was found impermissible in Danforth. Ibid.

B

It is against these requirements that 12S must be tested. We observe initially that as authoritatively construed by the highest court of the State, the statute satisfies some of the concerns that require special treatment of a minor's abortion decision. It provides that if parental consent is refused, authorization may be "obtained by order of a judge of the superior court for good cause shown, after such hearing as he deems necessary." A superior court judge presiding over a 12S proceeding "must disregard all parental objections, and other considerations, which are not based exclusively on what would serve the minor's best interests."[Footnote 24] Attorney General,

371 Mass., at 748, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293. The Supreme Judicial Court also stated: "Prompt resolution of a [12S] proceeding may be expected. . . . The proceeding need not be brought in the minor's name and steps may be taken, by impoundment or otherwise, to preserve confidentiality as to the minor and her parents. . . . [W]e believe that an early hearing and decision on appeal from a judgment of a Superior Court judge may also be achieved." Id., at 757-758, 360 N. E. 2d, at 298. The court added that if these expectations were not met, either the superior court, in the exercise of its rulemaking power, or the Supreme Judicial Court would be willing to eliminate any undue burdens by rule or order. Ibid.[Footnote 25]

Despite these safeguards, which avoid much of what was objectionable in the statute successfully challenged in Danforth, 12S falls short of constitutional standards in certain respects. We now consider

(1)

Among the questions certified to the Supreme Judicial Court was whether 12S permits any minors - mature or immature - to obtain judicial consent to an abortion without any parental consultation whatsoever. See n. 9, supra. The state court answered that, in general, it does not. "[T]he consent required by [12S must] be obtained for every nonemergency abortion where the mother is less than eighteen years of age and unmarried." Attorney General, supra, at 750, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. The text of 12S itself states an exception to this rule, making consent unnecessary from any parent who has "died or has deserted his or her family."[Footnote 26] The Supreme Judicial Court construed the statute as containing an additional exception: Consent need not be obtained "where no parent (or statutory substitute) is available." 371 Mass., at 750, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. The court also ruled that an available parent must be given notice of any judicial proceedings brought by a minor to obtain consent for an abortion.[Footnote 27] Id., at 755-756, 360 N. E. 2d, at 297.

We think that, construed in this manner, 12S would impose an undue burden upon the exercise by minors of the right to seek an abortion. As the District Court recognized, "there are parents who would obstruct, and perhaps altogether prevent, the minor's right to go to court." Baird III, 450 F. Supp., at 1001. There is no reason to believe that this would be so in the majority of cases where consent is withheld. But many parents hold strong views on the subject of abortion, and young pregnant minors, especially those living at home, are particularly vulnerable to their parents' efforts to obstruct both an abortion and their access to court. It would be unrealistic, therefore, to assume that the mere existence of a legal right to seek relief in superior court provides an effective avenue of relief for some of those who need it the most.

We conclude, therefore, that under state regulation such as that undertaken by Massachusetts, every minor must have the opportunity - if she so desires - to go directly to a court without first consulting or notifying her parents. If she satisfies the court that she is mature and well enough informed to make intelligently the abortion decision on her own, the court must authorize her to act without parental consultation or consent. If she fails to satisfy the court that she is competent to make this decision independently, she must be permitted to show that an abortion nevertheless would be in her best interests. If the court is persuaded that it is, the court must authorize the abortion. If, however, the court is not persuaded by the minor that she is mature or that the abortion would be in her best interests, it may decline to sanction the operation.

There is, however, an important state interest in encouraging a family rather than a judicial resolution of a minor's abortion decision. Also, as we have observed above, parents naturally take an interest in the welfare of their children - an interest that is particularly strong where a normal family relationship exists and where the child is living with one or both parents. These factors properly may be taken into account by a court called upon to determine whether an abortion in fact is in a minor's best interests. If, all things considered, the court determines that an abortion is in the minor's best interests, she is entitled to court authorization without any parental involvement. On the other hand, the court may deny the abortion request of an immature minor in the absence of parental consultation if it concludes that her best interests would be served thereby, or the court may in such a case defer decision until there is parental consultation in which the court may participate. But this is the full extent to which parental involvement may be required.[Footnote 28] For the reasons stated above, the constitutional right to seek an abortion may not be unduly burdened by state-imposed conditions upon initial access to court.

Section 12S requires that both parents consent to a minor's abortion. The District Court found it to be "custom" to perform other medical and surgical procedures on minors with the consent of only one parent, and it concluded that "nothing about abortions . . . requires the minor's interest to be treated differently." Baird I, 393 F. Supp., at 852. See Baird III, supra, at 1004 n. 9.

We are not persuaded that, as a general rule, the requirement of obtaining both parents' consent unconstitutionally burdens a minor's right to seek an abortion. The abortion decision has implications far broader than those associated with most other kinds of medical treatment. At least when the parents are together and the pregnant minor is living at home, both the father and mother have an interest - one normally supportive - in helping to determine the course that is in the best interests of a daughter. Consent and involvement by parents in important decisions by minors long have been recognized as protective of their immaturity. In the case of the abortion decision, for reasons we have stated, the focus of the parents' inquiry should be the best interests of their daughter. As every pregnant minor is entitled in the first instance to go directly to the court for a judicial determination without prior parental notice, consultation, or consent, the general rule with respect to parental consent does not unduly burden the constitutional right. Moreover, where the pregnant minor goes to her parents and consent is denied, she still must have recourse to a prompt judicial determination of her maturity or best interests.[Footnote 29]

(3)

Another of the questions certified by the District Court to the Supreme Judicial Court was the following: "If the superior court finds that the minor is capable [of making], and has, in fact, made and adhered to, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion, may the court refuse its consent based on a finding that a parent's, or its own, contrary decision is a better one?" Attorney General, 371 Mass., at 747 n. 5, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293 n. 5. To this the state court answered:

"[W]e do not view the judge's role as limited to a determination that the minor is capable of making, and has made, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion. Certainly the judge must make a determination of those circumstances, but, if the statutory role of the judge to determine the best interests of the minor is to be carried out, he must make a finding on the basis of all relevant views presented to him. We suspect that the judge will give great weight to the minor's determination, if informed and reasonable, but in circumstances where he determines that the best interests of the minor will not be served by an abortion, the judge's determination should prevail, assuming that his conclusion is supported by the evidence and adequate findings of fact." Id., at 748, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293.

The Supreme Judicial Court's statement reflects the general rule that a State may require a minor to wait until the age of majority before being permitted to exercise legal rights independently. See n. 23, supra. But we are concerned here with the exercise of a constitutional right of unique character. See supra, at 642-643. As stated above, if the minor satisfies a court that she has attained sufficient maturity to make a fully informed decision, she then is entitled to make her abortion decision independently. We therefore agree with the District Court that 12S cannot constitutionally permit judicial disregard of the abortion decision of a minor who has been determined to be mature and fully competent to assess the implications of the choice she has made.[Footnote 30]

IV

Although it satisfies constitutional standards in large part, 12S falls short of them in two respects: First, it permits judicial authorization for an abortion to be withheld from a minor who is found by the superior court to be mature and fully competent to make this decision independently. Second, it requires parental consultation or notification in every instance, without affording the pregnant minor an opportunity to receive an independent judicial determination that she is mature enough to consent or that an abortion would be in her best interests.[Footnote 31] Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the District Court insofar as it invalidates this statute and enjoins its enforcement.[Footnote 32]

Affirmed.

FootnotesFootnote 1 The court promptly issued a restraining order which remained in effect until its decision on the merits. Subsequent stays of enforcement were issued during the complex course of this litigation, with the result that Mass. Gen. Laws Ann., ch. 112, 12S (West Supp. 1979), never has been enforced by Massachusetts.

Footnote 2 As originally enacted, 12S was designated as 12P of chapter 112. In 1977, the provision was renumbered as 12S, and the numbering of subdivisions within the section was eliminated. No changes of substance were made. We shall refer to the section as 12S throughout this opinion.

Footnote 3 The proceedings before the court and the substance of its opinion are described in detail in Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 136-143 (1976).

Footnote 4 Three other minors in similar circumstances were named in the complaint, but the complaint was dismissed as to them for want of proof of standing. That decision has not been challenged on appeal.

Footnote 5 Appellants argue that these "immature" minors never were before the District Court and that the court's remedy should have been tailored to grant relief only to the class of "mature" minors. It is apparent from the District Court's opinions, however, that it considered the constitutionality of 12S as applied to all pregnant minors who might be affected by it. We accept that the rights of this entire category of minors properly were subject to adjudication.

Footnote 6 In 1978, the District Court permitted postjudgment intervention by these parties, who now appear jointly before this Court as intervenor-appellees.

Footnote 7 As their positions are closely aligned, if not identical, appellants in Nos. 78-329 and 78-330 are hereinafter referred to collectively as appellants.

Footnote 8 One member of the three-judge court dissented, arguing that the decision of the majority to allow Mary Moe to proceed in the case without notice to her parents denied them their parental rights without due process of law, and that 12S was consistent with the decisions of this Court recognizing the propriety of parental control over the conduct of children. See 393 F. Supp., at 857-865.

Footnote 9 The nine questions certified by the District Court, with footnotes omitted, are as follows: "1. What standards, if any, does the statute establish for a parent to apply when considering whether or not to grant consent? "a) Is the parent to consider `exclusively . . . what will serve the child's best interest'? "b) If the parent is not limited to considering exclusively the minor's best interests, can the parent take into consideration the `long-term consequences to the family and her parents' marriage relationship'? "c) Other? "2. What standard or standards is the superior court to apply? "a) Is the superior court to disregard all parental objections that are not based exclusively on what would serve the minor's best interests? "b) If the superior court finds that the minor is capable, and has, in fact, made and adhered to, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion, may the court refuse its consent based on a finding that a parent's, or its own, contrary decision is a better one? "c) Other? "3. Does the Massachusetts law permit a minor (a) `capable of giving informed consent,' or (b) `incapable of giving informed consent,' `to obtain [a court] order without parental consultation'? "4. If the court answers any of question 3 in the affirmative, may the superior court, for good cause shown, enter an order authorizing an abortion, (a), without prior notification to the parents, and (b), without subsequent notification? "5. Will the Supreme Judicial Court prescribe a set of procedures to implement c. 112, [12S] which will expedite the application, hearing and decision phases of the superior court proceeding provided thereunder? Appeal? "6. To what degree do the standards and procedures set forth in c. 112, 12F (Stat. 1975, c. 564), authorizing minors to give consent to medical and dental care in specified circumstances, parallel the grounds and procedures for showing good cause under c. 112, [12S]? "7. May a minor, upon a showing of indigency, have court-appointed counsel? "8. Is it a defense to his criminal prosecution if a physician performs an abortion solely with the minor's own, valid, consent, that he reasonably, and in good faith, though erroneously, believed that she was eighteen or more years old or had been married? "9. Will the Court make any other comments about the statute which, in its opinion, might assist us in determining whether it infringes the United States Constitution?"

Footnote 10 Section 12S itself dispenses with the need for the consent of any parent who "has died or has deserted his or her family."

Footnote 11 The dissenting judge agreed that the State could not permit a judge to override the decision of a minor found to be mature and capable of giving informed consent to an abortion. He disagreed with the remainder of the court's conclusions: the best-interests limitation on the withholding of parental consent in the Supreme Judicial Court's opinion, he argued, must be treated as if part of the statutory language itself; and he read the evidentiary record as proving that only rarely would a pregnant minor's interests be disserved by consulting with her parents about a desired abortion. He also noted the value to a judge in a 12S proceeding of having the parents before him as a source of evidence as to the minor's maturity and what course would serve her best interests. See Baird III, 450 F. Supp., at 1006-1020.

Footnote 12 Similarly, the Court said in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 74 (1976): "Constitutional rights do not mature and come into being magically only when one attains the state-defined age of majority. Minors, as well as adults, are protected by the Constitution and possess constitutional rights."

Footnote 13 As MR. JUSTICE STEWART wrote of the exercise by minors of the First Amendment rights that "secur[e] . . . the liberty of each man to decide for himself what he will read and to what he will listen," Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 649 (1968) (concurring in result): "[A]t least in some precisely delineated areas, a child - like someone in a captive audience - is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees. It is only upon such a premise, I should suppose, that a State may deprive children of other rights - the right to marry, for example, or the right to vote - deprivations that would be constitutionally intolerable for adults." Id., at 649-650 (footnotes omitted).

Footnote 14 In Prince an adult had permitted a child in her custody to sell religious literature on a public street in violation of a state child-labor statute. The child had been permitted to engage in this activity upon her own sincere request. 321 U.S., at 162. In upholding the adult's conviction under the statute, we found that "the interests of society to protect the welfare of children" and to give them "opportunities for growth into free and independent well-developed men and citizens," id., at 165, permitted the State to enforce its statute, which "[c]oncededly . . . would be invalid," id., at 167, if made applicable to adults.

Footnote 15 Although the State has considerable latitude in enacting laws affecting minors on the basis of their lesser capacity for mature, affirmative choice, Tinker v. Des Moines School Dist., (1969), illustrates that it may not arbitrarily deprive them of their freedom of action altogether. The Court held in Tinker that a schoolchild's First Amendment freedom of expression entitled him, contrary to school policy, to attend school wearing a black armband as a silent protest against American involvement in the hostilities in Vietnam. The Court acknowledged that the State was permitted to prohibit conduct otherwise shielded by the Constitution that "for any reason - whether it stems from time, place, or type of behavior - materially disrupts classwork or involves substantial disorder or invasion of the rights of others." Id., at 513. It upheld the First Amendment right of the schoolchildren in that case, however, not only because it found no evidence in the record that their wearing of black armbands threatened any substantial interference with the proper objectives of the school district, but also because it appeared that the challenged policy was intended primarily to stifle any debate whatsoever - even nondisruptive discussions - on important political and moral issues. See id., at 510.

Laws Ann., ch. 119, 55A (West Supp. 1979) (waiver of counsel by minor in juvenile delinquency proceedings must be made through parent or guardian).

Footnote 18 The Court's opinions discussed in the text above - Pierce, Yoder, Prince, and Ginsberg - all have contributed to a line of decisions suggesting the existence of a constitutional parental right against undue, adverse interference by the State. See also Smith v. Organization of Foster Families, 431 U.S. 816, 842-844 (1977); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 708 (1977) (opinion of POWELL, J.); Moore v. East Cleveland, (1977) (plurality opinion); Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645, 651 (1972); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399 (1923). Cf. Parham v. J. R., (1979); id., at 621 (STEWART, J., concurring in result).

Footnote 19 In Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S., at 75, "[w]e emphasize[d] that our holding . . . [did] not suggest that every minor, regardless of age or maturity, may give effective consent for termination of her pregnancy."

Footnote 20 The expert testimony at the hearings in the District Court uniformly was to the effect that parental involvement in a minor's abortion decision, if compassionate and supportive, was highly desirable. The findings of the court reflect this consensus. See Baird I, 393 F. Supp., at 853.

Footnote 21 MR. JUSTICE STEWART'S concurring opinion in Danforth underscored the need for parental involvement in minors' abortion decisions by describing the procedures followed at the clinic operated by the Parents Aid Society and Dr. Gerald Zupnick: "The counseling . . . occurs entirely on the day the abortion is to be performed . . . . It lasts for two hours and takes place in groups that include both minors and adults who are strangers to one another . . . . The physician takes no part in this counseling process . . . . Counseling is typically limited to a description of abortion procedures, possible complications, and birth control techniques . . . . "The abortion itself takes five to seven minutes . . . . The physician has no prior contact with the minor, and on the days that abortions are being performed at the [clinic], the physician . . . may be performing abortions on many other adults and minors . . . . On busy days patients are scheduled in separate groups, consisting usually of five patients . . . . After the abortion [the physician] spends a brief period with the minor and others in the group in the recovery room . . . ." 428 U.S., at 91-92, n. 2, quoting Brief for Appellants in Bellotti I, O. T. 1975, No. 75-73, pp. 43-44. In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), we emphasized the importance of the role of the attending physician. Those cases involved adult women presumably capable of selecting and obtaining a competent physician. In this case, however, we are concerned only with minors who, according to the record, may range in age from children of 12 years to 17-year-old teenagers. Even the latter are less likely than adults to know or be able to recognize ethical, qualified physicians, or to have the means to engage such professionals. Many minors who bypass their parents probably will resort to an abortion clinic, without being able to distinguish the competent and ethical from those that are incompetent or unethical.

Footnote 22 As 12S provides for involvement of the state superior court in minors' abortion decisions, we discuss the alternative procedure described in the text in terms of judicial proceedings. We do not suggest, however, that a State choosing to require parental consent could not delegate the alternative procedure to a juvenile court or an administrative agency or officer. Indeed, much can be said for employing procedures and a forum less formal than those associated with a court of general jurisdiction.

Footnote 23 The nature of both the State's interest in fostering parental authority and the problem of determining "maturity" makes clear why the State generally may resort to objective, though inevitably arbitrary, criteria such as age limits, marital status, or membership in the Armed Forces for lifting some or all of the legal disabilities of minority. Not only is it difficult to define, let alone determine, maturity, but also the fact that a minor may be very much an adult in some respects does not mean that his or her need and opportunity for growth under parental guidance and discipline have ended. As discussed in the text, however, the peculiar nature of the abortion decision requires the opportunity for case-by-case evaluations of the maturity of pregnant minors.

Footnote 24 The Supreme Judicial Court held that 12S imposed this standard on the superior court in large part because it construed the statute as containing the same restriction on parents. See supra, at 630. The court concluded that the judge should not be entitled "to exercise his authority on a standard broader than that to which a parent must adhere." Attorney General, 371 Mass., at 748, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293. Intervenors argue that, assuming state-supported parental involvement in the minor's abortion decision is permissible, the State may not endorse the withholding of parental consent for any reason not believed to be in the minor's best interests. They agree with the District Court that, even though 12S was construed by the highest state court to impose this restriction, the statute is flawed because the restriction is not apparent on its face. Intervenors thus concur in the District Court's assumption that the statute will encourage parents to withhold consent for impermissible reasons. See Baird III, 450 F. Supp., at 1004-1005; Baird II, 428 F. Supp. 854, 855-856 (Mass. 1977). There is no basis for this assertion. As a general rule, the interpretation of a state statute by the State's highest court "is as though written into the ordinance itself," Poulos v. New Hampshire, 345 U.S. 395, 402 (1953), and we are obliged to view the restriction on the parental-consent requirement "as if [12S] had been so amended by the [Massachusetts] legislature." Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 514 (1948).

Footnote 25 Intervenors take issue with the Supreme Judicial Court's assurances that judicial proceedings will provide the necessary confidentiality, lack of procedural burden, and speed of resolution. In the absence of any evidence as to the operation of judicial proceedings under 12S - and there is none, since appellees successfully sought to enjoin Massachusetts from putting it into effect - we must assume that the Supreme Judicial Court's judgment is correct.

Footnote 26 The statute also provides that "[i]f both parents have died or have deserted their family, consent of the mother's guardian or other person having duties similar to a guardian, or any person who had assumed the care and custody of the mother is sufficient."

Footnote 27 This reading of the statute requires parental consultation and consent more strictly than appellants themselves previously believed was necessary. In their first argument before this Court, and again before the Supreme Judicial Court, appellants argued that 12S was not intended to abrogate Massachusetts' common-law "mature minor" rule as it applies to abortions. See 428 U.S., at 144. They also suggested that, under some circumstances, 12S might permit even immature minors to obtain judicial approval for an abortion without any parental consultation. See 428 U.S., at 145; Attorney General, supra, at 751, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. The Supreme Judicial Court sketched the outlines of the mature minor rule that would apply in the absence of 12S: "The mature minor rule calls for an analysis of the nature of the operation, its likely benefit, and the capacity of the particular minor to understand fully what the medical procedure involves. . . . Judicial intervention is not required. If judicial approval is obtained, however, the doctor is protected from a subsequent claim that the circumstances did not warrant his reliance on the mature minor rule, and, of course, the minor patient is afforded advance protection against a misapplication of the rule." Id., at 752, 360 N. E. 2d, at 295. "We conclude that, apart from statutory limitations which are constitutional, where the best interests of a minor will be served by not notifying his or her parents of intended medical treatment and where the minor is capable of giving informed consent to that treatment, the mature minor rule applies in this Commonwealth." Id., at 754, 360 N. E. 2d, at 296. The Supreme Judicial Court held that the common-law mature minor rule was inapplicable to abortions because it had been legislatively superseded by 12S.

Footnote 28 Of course, if the minor consults with her parents voluntarily and they withhold consent, she is free to seek judicial authorization for the abortion immediately.

Footnote 29 There will be cases where the pregnant minor has received approval of the abortion decision by one parent. In that event, the parent can support the daughter's request for a prompt judicial determination, and the parent's support should be given great, if not dispositive, weight.

Footnote 30 Appellees and intervenors have argued that 12S violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. As we have concluded that the statute is constitutionally infirm for other reasons, there is no need to consider this question.

Footnote 31 Section 12S evidently applies to all nonemergency abortions performed on minors, without regard to the period in pregnancy during which the procedure occurs. As the court below recognized, most abortions are performed during the early stages of pregnancy, before the end of the first trimester. See Baird III, 450 F. Supp., at 1001; Baird I, 393 F. Supp., at 853. This coincides approximately with the pre-viability period during which a pregnant woman's right to decide, in consultation with her physician, to have an abortion is most immune to state intervention. See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S., at 164-165. The propriety of parental involvement in a minor's abortion decision does not diminish as the pregnancy progresses and legitimate concerns for the pregnant minor's health increase. Furthermore, the opportunity for direct access to court which we have described is adequate to safeguard throughout pregnancy the constitutionally protected interests of a minor in the abortion decision. Thus, although a significant number of abortions within the scope of 12S might be performed during the later stages of pregnancy, we do not believe a different analysis of the statute is required for them.

Footnote 32 The opinion of MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, concurring in the judgment, joined by three Members of the Court, characterizes this opinion as "advisory" and the questions it addresses as "hypothetical." Apparently, this is criticism of our attempt to provide some guidance as to how a State constitutionally may provide for adult involvement - either by parents or a state official such as a judge - in the abortion decisions of minors. In view of the importance of the issue raised, and the protracted litigation to which these parties already have been subjected, we think it would be irresponsible simply to invalidate 12S without stating our views as to the controlling principles. The statute before us today is the same one that was here in Bellotti I. The issues it presents were not then deemed "hypothetical." In a unanimous opinion, we remanded the case with directions that appropriate questions be certified to the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts "concerning the meaning of [12S] and the procedure it imposes." 428 U.S., at 151. We directed that this be done because, as stated in the opinion, we thought the construction of 12S urged by appellants would "avoid or substantially modify the federal constitutional challenge to the statute." Id., at 148. The central feature of 12S was its provision that a state-court judge could make the ultimate decision, when necessary, as to the exercise by a minor of the right to an abortion. See id., at 145. We held that this "would be fundamentally different from a statute that creates a `parental veto' [of the kind rejected in Danforth.]" Ibid. (footnote omitted). Thus, all Members of the Court agreed that providing for decisionmaking authority in a judge was not the kind of veto power held invalid in Danforth. The basic issues that were before us in Bellotti I remain in the case, sharpened by the construction of 12S by the Supreme Judicial Court.

MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, concurring.

I join the opinion of MR. JUSTICE POWELL and the judgment of the Court. At such time as this Court is willing to reconsider its earlier decision in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, (1976), in which I joined the opinion of MR. JUSTICE WHITE, dissenting in part, I shall be more than willing to participate in that task. But unless and until that time comes, literally thousands of judges cannot be left with nothing more than the guidance offered by a truly fragmented holding of this Court.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, and MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN join, concurring in the judgment.

In Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, the Court held that a woman's right to decide whether to terminate a pregnancy is entitled to constitutional protection. In Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 72-75, the Court held that a pregnant minor's right to make the abortion decision may not be conditioned on the consent of one parent. I am persuaded that these decisions require affirmance of the District Court's holding that the Massachusetts statute is unconstitutional.

The Massachusetts statute is, on its face, simple and straightforward. It provides that every woman under 18 who has not married must secure the consent of both her parents before receiving an abortion. "If one or both of the mother's parents refuse such consent, consent may be obtained by order of a judge of the superior court for good cause shown." Mass. Gen. Laws Ann., ch. 112, 12S (West Supp. 1979).

Whatever confusion or uncertainty might have existed as to how this statute was to operate, see Bellotti v. Baird, , has been eliminated by the authoritative construction of its provisions by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court. See Baird v. Attorney General, 371 Mass. 741, 360 N. E. 2d 288 (1977). The statute was construed to require that every minor who wishes an abortion must first seek the consent of both parents, unless a parent is not available or unless the need for the abortion constitutes "`an emergency requiring immediate action.'" Id., at 750, 360 N. E. 2d, at 294. Both parents, so long as they are available, must also receive notice of judicial proceedings brought under the statute by the minor. In those proceedings, the task of the judge is to determine whether the best interests of the minor will be served by an abortion. The decision is his to make, even if he finds "that the minor is capable of making, and has made, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion." Id., at 748, 360 N. E. 2d, at 293. Thus, no minor in Massachusetts, no matter how mature and capable of informed decisionmaking, may receive an abortion without the consent of either both her parents or a superior court judge. In every instance, the minor's decision to secure an abortion is subject to an absolute third-party veto.1

In Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, supra, this Court invalidated statutory provisions requiring the consent of the husband of a married woman and of one parent of a pregnant minor to an abortion. As to the spousal consent, the Court concluded that "we cannot hold that the State has the constitutional authority to give the spouse unilaterally the ability to prohibit the wife from terminating her pregnancy, when the State itself lacks that right." 428 U.S., at 70. And as to the parental consent, the Court held that "[j]ust as with the requirement of consent from the spouse, so here, the State does not have the constitutional authority to give a third party an absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto over the decision of the physician and his patient to terminate the patient's pregnancy, regardless of the reason for withholding the consent." Id., at 74. These holdings, I think, equally apply to the Massachusetts statute.

The differences between the two statutes are few. Unlike the Missouri statute, Massachusetts requires the consent of both of the woman's parents. It does, of course, provide an alternative in the form of a suit initiated by the woman in superior court. But in that proceeding, the judge is afforded an absolute veto over the minor's decisions, based on his judgment of her best interests. In Massachusetts, then, as in Missouri, the State has imposed an "absolute limitation on the minor's right to obtain an abortion." id., at 90 (STEWART, J., concurring), applicable to every pregnant minor in the State who has not married.

The provision of an absolute veto to a judge - or, potentially, to an appointed administrator2 - is to me particularly troubling. The constitutional right to make the abortion decision affords protection to both of the privacy interests recognized in this Court's cases: "One is the individual interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters, and another is the interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions." Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599-600 (footnotes omitted). It is inherent in the right to make the abortion decision that the right may be exercised without public scrutiny and in defiance of the contrary opinion of the sovereign or other third parties. In Massachusetts, however, every minor who cannot secure the consent of both her parents - which under Danforth cannot be an absolute prerequisite to an abortion - is required to secure the consent of the sovereign. As a practical matter, I would suppose that the need to commence judicial proceedings in order to obtain a legal abortion would impose a burden at least as great as, and probably greater than, that imposed on the minor child by the need to obtain the consent of a parent.3 Moreover, once this burden is met, the only standard provided for the judge's decision is the best interest of the minor. That standard provides little real guidance to the judge, and his decision must necessarily reflect personal and societal values and mores whose enforcement upon the minor - particularly when contrary to her own informed and reasonable decision - is fundamentally at odds

In short, it seems to me that this litigation is governed by Danforth; to the extent this statute differs from that in Danforth, it is potentially even more restrictive of the constitutional right to decide whether or not to terminate a pregnancy. Because the statute has been once authoritatively construed by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, and because it is clear that the statute as written and construed is not constitutional, I agree with MR. JUSTICE POWELL that the District Court's judgment should be affirmed. Because his opinion goes further, however, and addresses the constitutionality of an abortion statute that Massachusetts has not enacted, I decline to join his opinion.4

[Footnote 1] By affording such a veto, the Massachusetts statute does far more than simply provide for notice to the parents. See post, at 657 (WHITE, J., dissenting). Neither Danforth nor this case determines the constitutionality of a statute which does no more than require notice to the parents, without affording them or any other third party an absolute veto.

[Footnote 3] A minor may secure the assistance of counsel in filing and prosecuting her suit, but that is not guaranteed. The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court in response to the question whether a minor, upon a showing of indigency, may have court-appointed counsel, "construe[d] the statutes of the Commonwealth to authorize the appointment of counsel or a guardian ad litem for an indigent minor at public expense, if necessary, if the judge, in his discretion, concludes that the best interests of the minor would be served by such an appointment." Baird v. Attorney General, 371 Mass. 741, 764, 360 N. E. 2d 288, 301 (1977) (emphasis added).

[Footnote 4] Until and unless Massachusetts or another State enacts a less restrictive statutory scheme, this Court has no occasion to render an advisory opinion on the constitutionality of such a scheme. A real statute - rather than a mere outline of a possible statute - and a real case or controversy may well present questions that appear quite different from the hypothetical questions MR. JUSTICE POWELL has elected to address. Indeed, there is a certain irony in his suggestion that a statute that is intended to vindicate "the special interest of the State in encouraging an unmarried pregnant minor to seek the advice of her parents in making the important decision whether or not to bear a child," see ante, at 639, need not require notice to the parents of the minor's intended decision. That irony makes me wonder whether any legislature concerned with parental consultation would, in the absence of today's advisory opinion, have enacted a statute comparable to the one my Brethren have discussed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, dissenting.

I was in dissent in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 94-95 (1976), on the issue of the validity of requiring the consent of a parent when an unmarried woman under 18 years of age seeks an abortion. I continue to have the views I expressed there and also agree with much of what MR. JUSTICE STEVENS said in dissent in that case. Id., at 101-105. I would not, therefore, strike down this Massachusetts law.

But even if a parental consent requirement of the kind involved in Danforth must be deemed invalid, that does not condemn the Massachusetts law, which, when the parents object, authorizes a judge to permit an abortion if he concludes that an abortion is in the best interests of the child. Going beyond Danforth, the Court now holds it unconstitutional for a State to require that in all cases parents receive notice that their daughter seeks an abortion and, if they object to the abortion, an opportunity to participate in a hearing that will determine whether it is in the "best interests" of the child to undergo the surgery. Until now, I would have thought inconceivable a holding that the United States Constitution forbids even notice to parents when their minor child who seeks surgery objects to such notice and is able to convince a judge that the parents should be denied participation in the decision.

With all due respect, I dissent.

I. INTRODUCTION

From time to time, we are called upon to decide constitutional cases that touch upon the most contentious moral, ethical, and political issues of our day. In deciding such cases, we are ever mindful of the unique role we play in our democratic system of government. We are not legislators, policy makers, or pundits charged with making law or assessing the wisdom of legislative enactments. We are not philosophers, ethicists, or theologians, and cannot aspire to answer fundamental moral questions or resolve societal debates.1 We are focused only on upholding the constitution and laws of the State of Alaska.

Today, we are once again called upon to decide a case that implicates the controversial issue of abortion; more specifically, we are called upon to decide whether the Parental Consent Act impermissibly infringes upon a minors fundamental right to privacy when deciding whether to terminate a pregnancy.

We decide today that the State has an undeniably compelling interest in protecting the health of minors and in fostering family involvement in a minors decisions regarding her pregnancy.

And contrary to the arguments of Planned Parenthood, we determine that the constitution permits a statutory scheme which ensures that parents are notified so that they can be engaged in their daughters important decisions in these matters. But we ultimately conclude that the Act does not strike the proper constitutional balance between the States compelling interests and a minors fundamental right to privacy.

This is the second time that this case has been before us, and we earlier held that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution extends to minors as well as adults and that the State may restrict a minors privacy right only when necessary to further a compelling state interest and only if no less restrictive means exist to advance that interest.2 The States asserted interest in protecting a minor from her own immaturity by encouraging parental involvement in her decision-making process is undoubtedly compelling. But by prohibiting a minor from obtaining an abortion without parental consent, the Act effectively shifts that minors fundamental right to choose if and when to have a child from the minor to her parents. There exists a less burdensome and widely used means of actively involving parents in their minor childrens abortion decisions: parental notification.3 The United States Supreme Court has recognized, in a different context, that notice statutes are not equivalent to consent statutes because they do not give anyone a veto power over a minors abortion decision.4 And many states currently employ this less restrictive approach. Because the State has failed to establish that the greater intrusiveness of a statutory scheme that requires parental consent, rather than parental notification, is necessary to achieve its compelling interests, the Parental Consent Act does not represent the least restrictive means of achieving the States interests and therefore cannot be sustained.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

In 1997 the Alaska Legislature passed the Alaska Parental Consent Act (PCA).5 The PCA prohibits doctors from performing an abortion on an unmarried, unemancipated woman under 17 years of age without parental consent or judicial authorization.6 The Act subjects doctors who knowingly perform abortions on minors without the required consent or judicial authorization to criminal prosecution.7 The parental consent requirement can be met through written consent from a parent, guardian, or custodian of the minor.8 The Act also includes a judicial bypass procedure whereby a minor may file a complaint in superior court and obtain judicial authorization to terminate a pregnancy if she can establish by clear and convincing evidence either that she is sufficiently mature and well enough informed to decide intelligently whether to have an abortion or that being required to obtain parental consent would not be in her best interests.9 If the court fails to hold a hearing within five business days after the complaint is filed, the courts inaction is considered a constructive order authorizing the minor to consent to terminate the pregnancy.10

On July 25, 1997, Planned Parenthood, Drs. Jan Whitefield and Robert Klem, and ten unidentified Jane Does filed a complaint in superior court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The complaint alleged that the PCA violates state constitutional rights to privacy, equal protection, and due process. On January 7, 1998, the plaintiffs filed a motion for summary judgment. The superior court granted that motion, concluding that the PCA violates the equal protection clause of the Alaska Constitution. The superior court also concluded that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution protects minors as well as adults. However, in light of its equal protection ruling, the superior court did not decide whether the PCA violates the Alaska Constitutions privacy clause.

The State appealed, and on November 16, 2001, we issued our decision in Planned Parenthood I.11 In that case, we concluded that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution extends to minors as well as adults and that the State may constrain a pregnant minors privacy right only when necessary to further a compelling state interest and only if no less restrictive means exist to advance that interest.12 We also reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether the PCA actually furthers compelling state interests using the least restrictive means available.13

On October 4, 2002, prior to the evidentiary hearing on remand, the plaintiffs again moved for summary judgment, this time arguing that the PCA violates the constitution by failing to exclude abortions performed in medical emergencies. On January 2, 2003, the superior court denied the motion for summary judgment.

From January 6 to January 24, 2003, the superior court held a bench trial to hear evidence regarding the constitutionality of the PCA. On October 13, 2003, the superior court issued a decision on remand holding that the PCA is unconstitutional because it fails to further compelling state interests using the least restrictive means available. On January 7, 2004, the superior court entered judgment declaring that the PCA was unconstitutional under the equal protection and privacy clauses of the Alaska Constitution and enjoining the State from enforcing the Act.

The State now appeals the superior courts judgment. The plaintiffs cross-appeal the superior courts denial of their motion seeking summary judgment based on the absence of a medical emergency exception.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

We review the superior courts factual determinations for clear error.14 We review constitutional questions de novo, adopting the most persuasive rule of law in light of precedent, reason, and policy.15 We uphold a statute against a facial constitutional challenge if despite any occasional problems it might create in its application to specific cases, [the statute] has a plainly legitimate sweep.16

IV. DISCUSSION

Under our case law, we begin our analysis in cases such as the one at hand by measuring the weight and depth of the individual right at stake so as to determine the proper level of scrutiny with which to review the challenged legislation.17 If this individual right proves to be fundamental, we must then review the challenged legislation strictly, allowing the law to survive only if the State can establish that it advances a compelling state interest using the least restrictive means available.18 In cases involving the right to privacy, the precise degree to which the challenged legislation must actually further a compelling state interest and represent the least restrictive alternative is determined, at least in part, by the relative weight of the competing rights and interests.19 As we have previously explained, the rights to privacy and liberty are neither absolute nor comprehensive . . . [and] their limits depend on a balance of interests.20

A. The Individual Right at Stake Is Fundamental.

The plaintiffs assert that the PCA burdens minors fundamental right to privacy under article I, section 22 of the Alaska Constitution.21 This section of the constitution maintains that [t]he right of the people to privacy is recognized and shall not be infringed. As we have previously explained, the primary purpose of this section is to protect Alaskans personal privacy and dignity against unwarranted intrusions by the State.22 Because this right to privacy is explicit, its protections are necessarily more robust and broader in scope than those of the implied federal right to privacy.23

Included within the broad scope of the Alaska Constitutions privacy clause is the fundamental right to reproductive choice. As we have stated in the past, few things are more personal than a womans control of her body, including the choice of whether and when to have children, and that choice is therefore necessarily protected by the right to privacy.24 Of course, our original decision concerning the fundamental right to reproductive choice specifically addressed only the privacy interests of adult women, but because the uniquely personal physical, psychological, and economic implications of the abortion decision . . . are in no way peculiar to adult women,25 its reasoning was and continues to be as applicable to minors as it is to adults.26 Thus, in Planned Parenthood I, we explicitly extended the fundamental reproductive rights guaranteed by the privacy clause to minors.27

In the case at hand, the PCA requires minors to secure either the consent of their parent or judicial authorization before they may exercise their uniquely personal reproductive freedoms. This requirement no doubt places a burden on minors fundamental right to privacy. As such, the PCA must be subjected to strict scrutiny and can only survive review if it advances a compelling state interest using the least restrictive means of achieving that interest.28

B. The States Asserted Interests Are Compelling.

The State asserts that the PCA works, on the most generalized level, to advance two interrelated interests: protecting minors from their own immaturity and aiding parents in fulfilling their parental responsibilities.29 We agree with the State that these are compelling interests.

Although the Alaska Constitution extends the right to privacy in equal measure to both minors and adults, it is not blind to the unique vulnerabilities and needs that accompany minority. As we noted in Planned Parenthood I, state interests that are inapplicable to adults may sometimes be compelling with regard to minors.30 And this is certainly the case with regard to the States asserted interest in protecting minors from their own immaturity. Lacking in experience, perspective, and judgment, minors often do not possess the capacity to make informed, mature decisions, and are therefore susceptible to a host of pitfalls and dangers unknown in adult life.31 As we have recognized in the past, the State has a special, indeed compelling, interest in the health, safety, and welfare of its minor citizens and may properly take affirmative steps to safeguard minors from their own immaturity.32

Insofar as and to the same extent that the State has an interest in protecting minors, so too does it have an interest in aiding parents to fulfill their parental responsibilities. A minor child is not [a] mere creature of the state,33 and the affirmative process of teaching, guiding, and inspiring34 a minor child is, in large part, beyond the competence of impersonal political institutions.35 Parents, therefore, have an important guiding role to play in the upbringing of their children.36 Indeed, it is the right and duty, privilege and burden, of all parents to involve themselves in their childrens lives; to provide their children with emotional, physical, and material support; and to instill in their children moral standards, religious beliefs, and elements of good citizenship.37 We thus echo the United States Supreme Courts statement that, [u]nder the Constitution, the State can properly conclude that parents . . . who have [the] primary responsibility for childrens well-being are entitled to the support of laws designed to aid [in the] discharge of that responsibility. 38

C. The PCA Is Not the Least Restrictive Means of Achieving the States Compelling Interests.

Having identified and weighed the rights and interests at stake, we now turn to the task of assessing whether the PCA advances the States compelling interests using the least restrictive means available.

We recognize that the legislature has made a serious effort to narrowly tailor the scope of the PCA by exempting seventeen-year-olds and other categories of pregnant minors from the Acts ban. It is true that the PCA is less restrictive than many other state statutes in terms of the scope of its coverage. But scope is only one of the important criteria that determine the extent to which a parental involvement law restricts minors privacy rights. The method by which the statute involves parents is also central to determining whether the Acts provisions constitute the least restrictive means of pursuing the States ends.

By prohibiting minors from terminating a pregnancy without the consent of their parents, the PCA bestows upon parents what has been described as a veto power over their minor childrens abortion decisions.39 This veto power does not merely restrict minors right to choose whether and when to have children, but effectively shifts a portion of that right from minors to parents. In practice, under the PCA, it is no longer the pregnant minor who ultimately chooses to exercise her right to terminate her pregnancy, but that minors parents. And it is this shifting of the locus of choice this relocation of a fundamental right from minors to parents that is constitutionally suspect. For a review of statutory schemes enacted around the nation reveals a widely used legislative alternative that does not shift a minors right to choose: parental notification.

Currently, fifteen states have parental notification statutes in place.40 Although the precise details of these statutes vary, they all prohibit minors from terminating a pregnancy until their parents have been notified and afforded an appropriate period of time to actively involve themselves in their minor childrens decision-making processes.41 Stated another way, these statutes seek to involve parents, not by giving them veto power, but by giving them notice and time to consult with and guide their daughters through this important decision. As such, although parental notification statutes undoubtedly burden the privacy rights of minors, they do not go so far as to shift a portion of those rights to parents.

Of course, as the dissent emphasizes, the PCA does include a judicial bypass procedure through which some minors may effectively regain the right to reproductive choice by obtaining judicial authorization to forgo parental consent.42 The State argues that judicial bypass is the means by which a girl can relieve herself of the burden of parental consent. (Emphasis in original.) But the State and its supporting amici fail to effectively rebut the trial courts express findings to the contrary. According to the superior courts findings, the PCAs bypass procedures build in delay that may prove detrimental to the physical health of the minor, particularly for minors in rural Alaska who already face logistical obstacles to obtaining an abortion. The trial court found that judicial bypass procedures will increase these problems, delay the abortion, and increase the probability that the minor may not be able to receive a safe and legal abortion. The State has not expressly challenged as clearly erroneous the superior courts findings on this point but dismisses these concerns, arguing that [r]ural

Alaskan girls will pursue bypass on the same trip to the same urban location where they must go to obtain their procedures. But not all minors possess the wherewithal to embark upon a formal legal adjudication during a time of crisis.

Moreover, the inclusion of this judicial bypass procedure does not reduce the restrictiveness of the PCA relative to a parental notification statute. Every state to enact a parental notification regime has opted to include either a judicial bypass procedure similar to the PCAs procedure or an even more permissive bypass procedure.43 As such, the PCAs inclusion of a judicial bypass procedure does not set the PCA apart from or reduce its intrusiveness relative to parental notification statutes.

Ultimately, because the PCA shifts the right to reproductive choice to minors parents, we must conclude that the PCA is, all else being held equal, more restrictive than a parental notification statute. The State has failed to establish that the greater intrusiveness of consent statutes is in any way necessary to advance its compelling interests. In fact, in its briefing before us, the State has not focused on the PCAs benefits as flowing directly from the parental veto power; instead, it has consistently suggested that the PCAs benefits flow from increased parental communication and involvement in the decision-making process. According to the State, the PCA protects minors from their own immaturity by increasing adult supervision; it protects the physical, emotional, and psychological health of minors, [p]articularly in the post-abortion context, [by increasing] parental participation . . . for the purposes of monitoring . . . risks; it ensures that minors give informed consent to the abortion procedure by making it more likely that they will receive counsel that a doctor cannot give, advice, adapted to her unique family situation, that covers the moral, social and religious aspects of the abortion decision; it protects minors from sexual abuse since once appr[]ised of a young girls pregnancy, parents . . . will ask who impregnated her and will report any sexual abuse; and it strengthens the parent-child relationship by increas[ing] parental involvement, parental consultation, and open and honest communication.

These expressed legislative goals increased parental communication, involvement, and protection are no less likely to accompany parental notification than the parental veto power. The dissent suggests that where a minor forgoes judicial bypass, parental consent guarantees a conversation. But it guarantees no more than a one-way conversation and allows parents to refuse to consent not only where their judgment is better informed and considered than that of their daughter, but also where it is colored by personal religious belief, whim, or even hostility to her best interests.44

Notification statutes protect minors by enhancing the potential for parental consultation concerning a [minors] decision.45 In fact, to the extent that parents who do not possess a veto power over their minor childrens abortion decision have a greater incentive to engage in a constructive and ongoing conversation with their minor children about the important medical, philosophical, and moral issues surrounding abortion, a notification requirement may actually better serve the States compelling interests.

In sum then, the PCA does not represent the least restrictive means of achieving the States asserted interests and therefore cannot be sustained. In reaching this decision, we go no further than the Alaska Constitution demands, and merely reaffirm that the State does not strike the proper constitutional balance between its own compelling interests and the fundamental rights of its citizens by adopting an unnecessarily restrictive statute.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons detailed above, we AFFIRM the superior courts decision striking down the Parental Consent Act as a violation of the Alaska Constitutions right to privacy.

CARPENETI, Justice, with whom MATTHEWS, Justice, joins, dissenting.

In 1997, faced with competing interests of the highest constitutional level an underage pregnant girls constitutional right to privacy in deciding whether to terminate her pregnancy, her parents constitutional right (and duty) to protect her best interests, and the states compelling interests in protecting children against their own immaturity the Alaska Legislature carefully crafted the Alaska Parental Consent Act in an effort to recognize and protect all of these interests. That law is fully consistent with United States Supreme Court precedent, yet todays opinion strikes it down. Because this courts rejection of the legislatures thoughtful balance is inconsistent with our own case law and unnecessarily dismissive of the legislatures role in expressing the will of the people, I respectfully dissent.

I. The Constitutional Framework

Before looking at the Parental Consent Act in detail to determine how it balances the strong competing interests involved, it is helpful to consider the analytical framework used by courts in deciding constitutional challenges of the kind involved in this case. In a series of cases, we have established a three-step process. We have first looked to the nature and extent of the individual right that is claimed. If we determine that the right is fundamental, we then examine whether the states interest in burdening the individual right is compelling. If the states interest is compelling, we look to make certain that there is a sufficiently close fit between the goals of the legislation and the means adopted by the state to reach those goals.

The individual right claimed in this case is the fundamental right of an unmarried pregnant minor to privacy in her decision whether to terminate her pregnancy. The compelling interest claimed by the state is multi-faceted, including protecting minors from their own immaturity (by recognizing the parents right (and duty) to guide their childrens upbringing) and protecting the health of minors. If both the individual right is fundamental and the states interest is compelling, the court must decide whether the law is tailored closely enough to achieve its intended purpose.

II. The Alaska Parental Consent Act

The hallmark of the Alaska Parental Consent Act (PCA or the Act) is the remarkable length to which the legislature went in order to accommodate all of the various, and at times competing, interests that are involved when an unmarried teenage (or pre-teen) girl is faced with pregnancy.1 In recognition of the primary role that parents are normally expected to play in the upbringing of their children, and in recognition of the fact that children are generally not considered competent to consent to medical procedures, the Act requires the consent of a parent in order for the child to undergo an abortion.2 In recognition of the fact that divulging her pregnancy to her parents may in some instances be unnecessary or inappropriate because the minor is sufficiently mature and intelligent to decide the question on her own or because her parent or parents have engaged in physical, sexual, or emotional abuse against her (or because obtaining their consent is otherwise not in the childs best interests) the Act provides for a confidential and speedy judicial bypass procedure in which a judge decides whether the minor is competent to decide for herself.3

The legislature engrafted multiple exceptions to the scope of the Act in an effort to create a law that was specifically targeted, to the greatest extent possible, at the population of underage pregnant girls who would be in greatest need of adult guidance in reaching the decision whether to terminate pregnancy. First, the legislature exempted from the scope of the Act all seventeen-year-old girls.4 The importance of this exemption can hardly be overstated. Studies consistently show that nearly half of all underage abortions are obtained by girls who have reached the age of seventeen.5 Moreover, only one state consent law exempts seventeen-year-olds from its scope,6 and only one state notification law does so.7 This exception also identifies the population of teenage girls most likely competent, by virtue of maturity and experience, to make the decision regarding abortion without adult assistance, and allows them to do so.

Second, the legislature exempted from the scope of the Act four additional classes of minors. Each exemption shows that the legislature was attempting to shape a law that would be applied only to those pregnant girls who would most be in need of adult help. Accordingly, the law does not apply to married minors,8 to minors who have been legally emancipated,9 to minors who have entered the armed services of the United States,10 and to minors who have become employed and self-subsisting.11

Third, in an apparent effort to make certain that the Act would not have coverage over any other underage pregnant girls who were capable of making the decision on their own, the legislature included a catch-all exception to the Act: any who had otherwise become independent from the care and control of [her] parent, guardian, or custodian.12

The legislature next created a judicial bypass procedure to cover those cases of underage pregnancy not covered by these exceptions. The judicial bypass procedure is designed to be confidential, speedy, cost-free to the child, and easy to use. The court system is directed to prepare forms for use by the child13 without charge14 and have them available at every court location in the state: superior court, district court, and magistrate.15 Counsel shall immediately be made available without charge to any minor who seeks judicial bypass16 and the forms shall contain this notification.17 There are no filing fees to be charged18 and no court costs assessed19 against the child.

The proceedings surrounding judicial bypass are strictly confidential: Courts are instructed to conduct all proceedings so as to preserve the anonymity of the child.20 Moreover, the Act specifically directs the court that it may not notify the parents, guardian, or custodian of the child that she is pregnant or seeks an abortion.21 All papers and records pertaining to the matter shall be kept confidential and are not public records under Alaska law.22

In deference to the need for speedy resolution of the consent question in cases where an abortion is sought, the Act provides for extremely short timelines. The court is directed to set the hearing at the earliest possible time and in any event not more than five business days after the complaint is filed.23 The court is directed to enter judgment immediately after the hearing is ended.24 If the hearing is not held by the fifth day after the case is filed, that failure will be considered to be a constructive authorization by the court for the child to consent to an abortion.25 Similarly short deadlines apply to an appeal.26

As to the substance of the inquiry that the judge must make, it is straightforward and simple: The court determines whether the child is sufficiently mature and informed to make the decision to have an abortion.27 (In those cases where the minor has alleged abuse by her parent or guardian, the court determines whether such abuse has occurred.28) If the child is sufficiently mature to make the decision (or if abuse has occurred and an abortion is in the minors best interest), the court authorizes her to consent to an abortion; if she is not sufficiently mature to decide on her own or if there has not been abuse, the case is dismissed.29

In sum, the Alaska Parental Consent Act appears to be the product of a concerted effort to make certain that those pregnant girls who are sufficiently mature to make the decision to obtain an abortion on their own are allowed to do so while those who are not sufficiently mature either obtain a parents consent or, in the case of parental abuse, a judicial determination that the procedure is in their best interest.

III. Analysis

Application of the three-part test for constitutionality (set out above in the discussion of the constitutional framework) has tended in this case to focus on the third part of the test: whether the means chosen by the legislature are sufficiently narrowly tailored to the goals of the legislation. I agree that this inquiry is the most difficult in this case. But I also believe that failure to focus carefully on the nature of the interests involved can lead to a failure to assess correctly the success of the legislatures effort to tailor the legislation to meet its goals. For this reason, I turn now to each step of the test for constitutionality.

A. The Individual Right To Exercise Autonomy in the Control of Ones Body, and in the Choice to Bear a Child Is Fundamental.

The individual right involved in this case is the right to privacy. While that right is often associated with the maintenance of secrecy or confidentiality with regard to ones affairs (and that is present to some extent in this case), the gravamen of the individuals concerns in this case is the right to exercise autonomy in the control of ones body. In Valley Hospital Association v. Mat-Su Coalition for Choice,30 we relied on the need for a woman to have control of her body, and the choice whether or when to bear children,31 in determining that reproductive rights are fundamental, and that they are encompassed within the right to privacy.32

But it is important to remember that Valley Hospital concerned the rights of adult women. Todays opinion relies on the courts statement in its earlier decision in this case that minors and adults start from the same constitutional footing,33 but it does not meet the promise of that earlier opinion fully to take into account the fact that the persons to whom the statute in this case is directed are children. In holding that [c]onstitutional rights do not mature and come into being magically only when one attains the state-defined age of majority,34 the courts earlier opinion in this case hastened to add:

> Of course this does not mean that evidence of the peculiar vulnerability of children [and] their inability to make critical decisions in an informed, mature manner has no place in determining whether the parental consent or judicial authorization act is constitutional. To the contrary, we have long emphasized the states special interest in protecting the health and welfare of children.[35]

The opinion then explained how this peculiar vulnerability of children was to be taken into account in the constitutional analysis: [A] statutes relationship to minors properly is employed in the constitutional calculus in determining whether an asserted state purpose or interest is compelling. 36 Indeed, in support of its conclusion that minors enjoy a constitutional right to privacy similar to that of adults, this court quoted Justice Marshalls dissent in H.L. v. Matheson37 that, rather than saying the minors privacy right is somehow less fundamental than an adults, the more sensible view is that state interests inapplicable to adults may justify burdening the minors right.38 But when the court looks to the states and parents interests in this case, it treats them in conclusory fashion. A fuller exposition is warranted.

B. The States Interests To Protect Children from Their Own Immaturity and To Protect Parents Rights and Duties To Raise Their Children Are Compelling.

Despite the promise of Planned Parenthood I to take into account the fact that children are involved during step two of the constitutional analysis the step that asks whether an asserted state purpose or interest is compelling the court today quickly passes over this step.

The courts cursory discussion of the nature of the states compelling interests at stake in this case is inconsistent with our case law on the right to privacy; moreover, it deprives the courts later means-to-ends analysis of any context. Let us consider each of these failings in turn.

In Sampson v. State,39 a privacy-based challenge to Alaska law precluding physician-assisted suicide, we set out the importance of carefully examining the nature of the competing interests involved. In upholding the ban on physician-assisted suicide, we said:

> This court has often emphasized the importance of personal autonomy under our constitution. Yet we have also recognized that the rights to privacy and liberty are neither absolute nor comprehensive that their limits depend on a balance of interests. The nature of the balance varies with the importance of the rights actually infringed.[40]

Because the nature of the balance varies with the importance of the rights involved and because in the context of the case before us now pregnant children who are considering abortion there are important rights on both sides of the equation, including the rights of parents to guide their children, it is particularly important that the court look closely at the nature of the states interests in the legislation.

The courts failure to look closely at the nature of the states and parents interests leaves its constitutional balance one-sided. Because the court has not fully and accurately set out the nature of societys compelling interest in the protection of children and of parents right and duty to raise their children, it is impossible to accurately gauge how close the law comes to meeting its objectives. As a detailed look at the states interest shows, it is multi-faceted and is served in many ways by Alaskas Parental Consent Law. It consists of at least two41 separate aspects.

First, society has longstanding and pervasive interests in protecting children from their own immaturity. The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized societys interest in protecting children from their own immaturity. In Hodgson v. Minnesota,42 the Court held: The State has a strong and legitimate interest in the welfare of its young citizens, whose immaturity, inexperience, and lack of judgment may sometimes impair their ability to exercise their rights wisely.43 The Court noted that [t]hat interest, which justifies state-imposed requirements that a minor obtain his or her parents consent before undergoing an operation, marrying, or entering military service, extends also to the minors decision to terminate her pregnancy.44 In Stanford v. Kentucky,45 Justice Brennan noted:

> [M]inors are treated differently from adults in our laws, which reflects the simple truth derived from communal experience that juveniles as a class have not the level of maturation and responsibility that we presume in adults and consider desirable for full participation in the rights and duties of modern life.
> . . . Adolescents are more vulnerable, more impulsive, and less self-disciplined than adults, and are without the same capacity to control their conduct and to think in long-range terms.[46]

State courts too have long recognized that children require protection from their own immaturity. Pennsylvania, for example, has noted that the states strong interest in protecting younger minors from the sexual aggressiveness of minors over sixteen is based on the immaturity and poor judgment of younger minors.47 Similarly, Florida upheld a law prohibiting consensual sexual contact between minors sixteen and older and those under thirteen because the state had a compelling interest in protecting twelve-year-olds from older teenagers and from their own immaturity in choosing to participate in harmful activity.48

As Justice Matthews set out in his dissent in our earlier consideration of this case, Planned Parenthood I:

> Childrens freedoms have long been constrained in ways that would not be permissible for adults. Constraints on children are imposed in order to protect them, and sometimes society as a whole, from the consequences of their immaturity. Thus children may not exercise the fundamental right to vote. They generally may not make contracts or smoke cigarettes or drink alcoholic beverages or consent to sexual intercourse. Without a parents consent they may not become licensed drivers or get married or obtain general medical or dental treatment. Alaskas parental consent/judicial bypass act is in the tradition of these constraints on childrens freedoms. . . . The act is designed to ensure that each child makes a decision that is best for her.[49]

The notion that parental consent laws further the state interest of protecting minors from their immaturity is neither novel nor surprising. As a matter of law society demands much of parents; it is expected that they will assist their children in making proper decisions until those children reach adulthood.

Parents of teenagers and younger children are familiar with the ubiquitous permission slips which must be signed before their children may go on a school field trip; and parental permission is routinely required before minors may join a sports team, before an under-seventeen minor may view an R-rated movie, and before a minor may even lift weights at the local gym.50 Parental involvement in the everyday decisions of their children enables parents to continue to help their children develop, even as the children grow older and more independent. The rights and obligations of parents to remain involved is intricately bound up with the rights of children to receive guidance and to be protected from their own immaturity. Courts have long recognized these interests: [T]he custody, care and nurture of the child reside first in the parents, whose primary function and freedom include preparation for obligations the state can neither supply nor hinder.51

For an immature pregnant minor, parental involvement is at least as important in the difficult decision concerning abortion as it is in the permission slip activities mentioned in the last paragraph. In Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (Akron II),52 a case concerning a parental notification requirement, the United States Supreme Court held that the requirement furthered the states interest in helping minors to make more mature decisions.53 Some minors may hesitate to seek parental advice if not required to by law because they are young and afraid. In those cases where a pregnant minor has been abused or fears an improper parental response, the PCA carves out a judicial bypass procedure whereby the minor may avoid all parental notification. However, it is improper for this court to assume that harmful parental responses will be a likely or typical response for the minors compelled to seek parental consent under the PCA. As Justice Kennedy noted in Akron II, [i]t is both rational and fair for the State to conclude that, in most instances, the family will strive to give a lonely or even terrified minor advice that is both compassionate and mature.54 Indeed, to prohibit states from ensuring that in most cases young women receive guidance from a parent when making this decision would deny all dignity to the family.55 Similarly, Justice Stevens noted that it is reasonable for a state legislature to conclude that most parents will be primarily interested in the welfare of their children, making the imposition of a consent requirement an appropriate method of giving the parents an opportunity to foster that welfare by helping a pregnant distressed child to make and implement a correct decision.56 Because pregnant minors in Alaska will normally benefit from the involvement of a parent in one of the most critical decisions they can ever make, the PCA furthers the state interests of protecting minors from their immaturity and preserving the rights of parents to raise their children.

The PCA seeks to protect a second compelling interest in abortion cases involving children. In addition to societys interest in protecting children from their own immaturity, we have long held that parents have a fundamental right in the raising of their children. In S.O. v. W.S.,57 we noted that when the state seeks to terminate the parent-child relationship, the result may be the involuntary deprivation of the fundamental natural right of parents to nurture and direct the destiny of their children.58 S.O. relied on and quoted Turner v. Pannick,59 in which Justice Dimond, in commenting on this fundamental right of parents to nurture and direct the upbringing of their children, stated: This is a truth which one discovers by reason, and has the status of knowledge rather than mere opinion.60 He noted that [the family] forms the basic unit of our society and is one of the oldest institutions known to mankind.61

In sum, the norm in American, and Alaskan, life and law is that parents are a childs first and most important resource for assistance in decision-making. For that reason, the states interest in protecting children from the consequences of their own immaturity, and in so doing protecting the health of its children, and its interest in supporting parents right and duty to guide the upbringing of their children is particularly compelling.

C. The Fit Between the States Interests and the Means Adopted To Reach Them Are Sufficiently Close To Pass Constitutional Muster.

We now reach the third part of the constitutional analysis. In order to survive constitutional scrutiny, the PCA must be narrowly tailored in meeting the states interests. Because the childs privacy interests are fundamental, there must be no less restrictive alternative available to the state.62 As the following shows, the PCA is narrowly tailored to its goals. In addition, the alternatives discussed by the superior court and todays opinion are either more restrictive than the PCA or ineffective at meeting the states interests, or both.

1. The PCA is narrowly tailored.

Before embarking on this analysis, however, it is important to address the majoritys assertion that the PCA bestows upon parents what has been described as a veto power over their minor childrens abortion decisions.63 Indeed, the claim that the PCA gives parents a veto power runs throughout todays Opinion,64 and this supposed veto power may fairly be seen as the fundamental weakness of the PCA in the courts view. But the claim is false as it applies to minors who are sufficiently mature to make the decision, and it relies on quotation of the United States Supreme Court taken out of context. The claim is false because a pregnant minor faced with the abortion decision may decide to obtain an abortion without parental consent by using the judicial bypass procedure.65 The quotation is taken out of context because the case it comes from, Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, restated the Supreme Courts clearly established precedent that, in order to prevent another person from having an absolute veto power over a minors decision to have an abortion, a State must provide some sort of bypass procedure if it elects to require parental consent.66 Thus, todays Opinions repeated assertions that the PCA gives parents a veto power over their childs abortion decision is simply not true as applied to children who are sufficiently mature to make the decision. And its implication that the United States Supreme Court would regard the PCA as giving parents a veto power is equally wrong: Because the PCA does provide a bypass procedure, > the Act in the language of the Supreme Court prevent[s] the parent from holding veto power.

The Parental Consent Act is very narrowly drawn to achieve its compelling state interests. To begin, as noted above, the PCA excludes all seventeen-year-olds.67 We have seen that the exclusion of seventeen-year-olds is particularly noteworthy because almost half of minor abortions are performed on seventeen-year-old minors,68 and thus by excluding seventeen-year-olds the legislature almost halved the pool to which the PCA applies. We have also seen that this narrowing of the minors covered by the Act is not arbitrary, but instead is tailored to eliminate those least likely to need the legislation: the most mature of the pregnant minors.

The use of age as a proxy for maturity is fundamental to our legal system and social culture. As the Supreme Court recently noted in Roper v. Simmons,69 the difference in maturity levels between adults and children is evidenced by both common sense and science:

> [A]s any parent knows and as the scientific and sociological studies . . . tend to confirm, a lack of maturity and an underdeveloped sense of responsibility are found in youth more often than in adults and are more understandable among the young. These qualities often result in impetuous and ill-considered actions and decisions. . . . Even the normal 16-year-old customarily lacks the maturity of an adult. . . . [A]dolescents are overrepresented statistically in virtually every category of reckless behavior. In recognition of the comparative immaturity and irresponsibility of juveniles, almost every State prohibits those under 18 years of age from voting, serving on juries, or marrying without parental consent.[70]

Age distinctions are not made with an expectation that they perfectly track maturity.71 All minors under age eighteen are prohibited from voting not because it is unfathomable that a seventeen-year-old is capable of responsibly exercising the right to vote, nor is the prohibition based upon the assumption that all adults vote responsibly. Rather, the legal system accepts lack of perfection in meeting the states interests in order to create a feasible, more convenient, and less intrusive system of governance. As Justice Holmes noted in Louisville Gas & Electric Co. v. Coleman:

> When a legal distinction is determined, as no one doubts that it may be, between night and day, childhood and maturity, or any other extremes, a point has to be fixed or a line has to be drawn, or gradually picked out by successive decisions, to mark where the change takes place. Looked at by itself without regard to the necessity behind it the line or point seems arbitrary. It might as well or nearly as well be a little more to one side or the other. But when it is seen that a line or point there must be, and that there is no mathematical or logical way of fixing it precisely, the decision of the Legislature must be accepted unless we can say that it is very wide of any reasonable mark.[72]

The Alaska Court of Appeals similarly noted in Allam v. State73 that [s]tatutes [that set the age for possession of tobacco, possession of alcohol, age of consent for sexual intercourse, etc.,] and the social policy decisions that underlie them, are within the province of the legislature. There is no legal requirement that the same age of majority apply to all activities and circumstances.74 By exempting seventeen-year-olds from the PCA, the legislature appropriately tailored the legislation to affect the less mature population of pregnant minors.

Significantly, this narrowing of the PCA based on age also makes it less restrictive than every other parental consent law but one[75] and less restrictive than all but one of the notification laws in effect in other states because all the rest apply to seventeen-year-olds,[76] as discussed in more detail below.

As noted, the legislature further tailored the PCA by excluding four additional categories of minors: legally emancipated minors,[77] married minors,[78] minors living independently,[79] and minors who are members of the armed services.[80] These are hallmarks of maturity in our society. By excluding identifiably mature minors age sixteen and under, the legislature went a long way towards assuring that the legislation would not be over-inclusive. Furthermore, in these respects the PCA is less restrictive than every other states notification laws that do not contain these exceptions.[81]

The final narrowing of the PCA is derived from the judicial bypass procedure. Although neither the superior court nor this courts majority analyze the bypass procedure under the least restrictive means test, the judicial bypass significantly narrows the effect of the law because it provides a way for mature minors who are not otherwise statutorily exempted to obtain an abortion without parental consent. As Justice Matthews recognized in Planned Parenthood I, the judicial bypass procedure satisfies all the criteria established by the United States Supreme Court in Bellotti v. Baird.[82] Indeed, the judicial bypass process was meticulously crafted with the minors need for confidentiality and an expedited decision incorporated into the system. The PCA errs on the side of granting the judicial bypass whenever delay is threatened: If the superior court fails to provide a hearing within five business days of a minor filing the petition, the delay operates as an automatic finding in the minors favor, resulting in a constructive waiver of the consent requirement. Similarly, if the minor loses in the superior court and the hearing on appeal is delayed more than five days after the docketing of the appeal, a constructive order must issue authorizing the minor to undergo the abortion.[83]

2. The PCA is the least restrictive means to achieve the states compelling interests.

The PCA not only furthers a compelling state interest in a manner narrowly tailored and in compliance with the federal constitution, but it is also the least restrictive means of doing so. The least restrictive means test is properly a difficult burden for the state to meet, as it protects fundamental rights against unnecessary state intrusion. However, it is not an impossible standard for the state to meet. A mere showing that the state might have taken less restrictive action, say, by enacting a notification statute instead, is not sufficient to defeat legislation absent a determination that the less restrictive action would effectively achieve the states compelling interests. Indeed, the least restrictive action that a state may take in every case is not to legislate at all.

In Treacy v. Municipality of Anchorage,[84] in upholding the constitutionality of an Anchorage curfew law imposed on minors under age eighteen, we found proposed less restrictive alternatives to be unavailing because they were not effective in meeting the municipalitys compelling interests.[85] Alternatives to the PCA which are less restrictive are therefore not bars to the constitutionality of the legislation unless such alternatives are effective in meeting the states compelling interests.

Todays opinion repeatedly proffers the alternative of parental notification rather than parental consent, (an approach followed by only fifteen state legislatures[86] in comparison to the twenty-six state legislatures[87] that have adopted consent statutes[88]).

But every one of these parental notification statutes that lacks exceptions for seventeen-year-olds and other mature minors is more restrictive than Alaskas PCA.89 More importantly, such parental notification statutes fail to achieve the same goals as consent laws, as discussed below.

The majority enthusiastically adopts the notion that a notice statute is less restrictive than the PCA because it does not give parents a veto power. But as shown above, the PCA does not create a veto power because it includes a judicial bypass provision. Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has upheld a parental consent statute containing a judicial bypass procedure but fewer statutory exceptions than those included in Alaskas PCA.90 Indeed, as Justice Matthews noted in Planned Parenthood I, [c]urrently it appears that all members of the United States Supreme Court believe that a judicial authorization procedure that meets the conditions of the second Bellotti case as the PCA does is constitutional.91 In Akron II, which todays opinion cites to support its conclusion that notice statutes are less restrictive than consent statutes, the Court limited its distinction between consent and notification statutes to the central requirement that in order to prevent another person from having an absolute veto power over a minors decision to have an abortion, a State must provide some sort of bypass procedure if it elects to require parental consent.92 The PCA provides such a procedure: judicial bypass.

Indeed, notification laws may present the worst case scenario by posing all the risks of privacy infringements of a consent/bypass statute with fewer of its mitigating effects. What could be further from the productive and supportive conversation that a consent statute aims to produce than the cold reality of parents receiving (perhaps after the abortion) a note in the mail informing them of their daughters pregnancy and decision to abort? It is certainly reasonable for a legislature to conclude that consent statutes are more likely to foster actual conversations and parental involvement rather than the one-way, limited flow of information called for in notification statutes. Thus, the existence of notification statutes in a minority of states should not lead to invalidation of Alaskas consent statute unless it is clear that a notification statute would further the states compelling interests.

3. The legislature could reasonably conclude that parental notification statues are not effective in protecting a pregnant girl against her own immaturity or in protecting her parents right and duty to aid in her upbringing.

Despite todays Opinions rosy assertion that all [notification statutes] prohibit minors from terminating a pregnancy until their parents have been notified and afforded an appropriate period of time to actively involve themselves in their minor childrens decision-making processes,93 it is truly questionable whether many notification statutes accomplish anything in the way of meaningful parental notification. Many do not even require that a parent be notified.

Thus, Delaware, identified by the majority opinion as a notification state, allows notification of a licensed mental health professional to substitute for parental notification.94 Maryland, ostensibly another notification state, allows the physician performing the abortion to dispense with notification to the childs parent if in the physicians judgment the child is mature and capable of giving informed consent or if notification would not be in her best interests.95 West Virginia, another notification state, allows the physician performing the abortion to dispense with notification if another doctor finds the child mature enough to make the decision for herself or that notification would not be in her best interests.96 In all states the waiting period is so short that in many instances it will be largely meaningless.97 Can it really be said that a requirement that written notification be sent to a childs parent, along with the presumption that notice is effective upon mailing and no waiting period (e.g., Maryland98) or a twenty-four hour waiting period (e.g., West Virginia with actual notice99) or even a forty-eight hour waiting period (e.g., West Virginia with constructive notice100), would in any way further the states interest in protecting the child against her immaturity and lack of judgment or protect the parents role in helping to raise their child? It often will be, in truth, little more than a note sent into the night.

The court asserts that the states compelling interests (it refers to them only as legislative goals) are no less likely to accompany parental notification than parental veto power. 101 Of course, as we have seen, there is no veto power in the PCA. But more importantly, only wishful thinking supports that conclusion. How can a statute that does not even require that parents be notified as in Delaware, which allows notification of a mental health professional enhance the potential for parental consultation? Or a statute that deems notice to be effective upon mailing and requires no waiting period or only a twenty-four hour waiting period? The court optimistically talks of giving [parents] notice and time to consult with and guide their daughters through this important decision,102 but this is not what notification statutes do. The longest waiting period in any current notification statute measured from the time of mailing of the notice is seventy-two hours.103 Most are substantially shorter.104 Under these circumstances, to conclude, as todays Opinion does, that a notification statute provides a better chance than a consent statute that parents will engage in a constructive and ongoing conversation with their minor children about the important medical, philosophical, and moral issues surrounding abortion105 is truly wishful thinking. At least under a consent statute, where the child opts not to seek judicial bypass, there must be a conversation. Under a notification statute, where the child opts not to seek judicial bypass, there is only a mailing. There is little reason to believe that notification statutes are effective in protecting minors from their own immaturity or effective in protecting parents rights (and duties) to help their children negotiate the difficult path to adulthood.

We should heed our admonition in Treacy: In analyzing the argument that a legislative solution is not the least restrictive one, courts must take care to require the challenger to demonstrate that the supposedly less restrictive alternative is actually effective in protecting the states (and parents) compelling interests. The court today fails to show that a notification statute will achieve the States compelling interests. This is because, as we have seen, notification laws are ineffective in so many ways in protecting children from their immaturity and in protecting parents rights and obligations to guide their childrens upbringing. And todays opinion declines even to say whether a parental notification approach would be constitutional.

IV. Conclusion

The Alaska Legislature carefully balanced the constitutional right of an underage pregnant girl to privacy and the states compelling interests in protecting children against their own immaturity and protecting parents constitutional right (and duty) to guide their children to maturity. Because the PCA is the least restrictive alternative which will effectively advance the states compelling interests while protecting the childs constitutional right, we should hold that the superior court erred in invalidating it. I respectfully dissent.

26 Id. (noting that [d]eciding whether to terminate a pregnancy is at least as difficult, and the consequences of such decisions are at least as profound, for minors as for adults).

27 Id.

28 The dissent appears to liken a minors decision of whether to terminate a pregnancy to decisions about attending school field trips, joining sports teams, viewing R-rated movies, and lifting weights at the gym. But this analogy overlooks the fundamental autonomy at stake in an adolescents control over her own body. And in other important ways, a minors decision to terminate a pregnancy is wholly unlike these decisions the immediacy of the need to address the situation, coupled with the lasting and profound consequences of the decision, make it utterly unlike the day-to-day decisions mentioned by the dissent.

29 More specifically, the State asserts that the PCA aims to (1) ensure that minors make an informed decision on whether to terminate a pregnancy; (2) protect minors from their own immaturity; (3) protect minors physical and psychological health; (4) protect minors from sexual abuse; and (5) strengthen the parent-child relationship.

42 AS 18.16.030(e)(f) provides that a minor may bypass the PCAs parental consent requirement if a court determines by clear and convincing evidence that she is sufficiently mature and well enough informed to decide whether to have an abortion or that parental consent would not be in her best interests.

41 The superior court actually identified six compelling state interests in its opinion. They were as follows: (1) State has a compelling interest in protecting minors from their own immaturity. (2) State has a compelling interest in protecting the physical, emotional, and psychological health of minors. (3) State has a compelling interest in ensuring that doctors obtain informed consent from their minor patients contemplating pregnancy related decisions. (4) State has a compelling interest in protecting minors from sexual abuse . . . . (5) The court finds that the state does have many interests, some of them compelling, in fostering and protecting the family structure . . . . (6) This court finds that protecting rights to a civil action is a compelling state interest.

50 Todays Opinion mistakenly asserts that the dissent appears to liken a minors decision of whether to terminate a pregnancy to decisions about attending school field trips, joining sports teams, viewing R-rated movies, and lifting weights at the gym and argues that the decision to terminate a pregnancy is wholly unlike these decisions. (Opinion 10, n.28) The Opinion misses the point entirely: Of course permission-slip decisions do not have the lasting and profound consequences (Opinion 10, n.28) of the abortion decision, and yet the law imposes the necessity of parental consent upon them. If society deems parental consent critical in such lesser matters, should not the parents play a similar role when the consequence to the child are so vastly greater? And in arguing that fundamental autonomy [is] at stake in an adolescents control over her own body, (Opinion 10, n.28) the Opinion ignores that parental consent is required for virtually every other medical procedure involving a child. See Hodgson v. Minnesota, 497 U.S. 417, 423 (1990) (recognizing the common-law requirement of parental consent for any medical procedure performed on minors.).

65 See AS 18.16.030. The judge in a bypass case must decide whether the child is sufficiently mature and well enough informed to decide intelligently whether to have an abortion. If she is, the court issues an order authorizing her to consent to the procedure without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian. AS 18.16.030(e). (If she is not, the court dismisses the case. Id. Presumably, a child found to be insufficiently mature to make such a decision should not make it.)

66 497 U.S. at 510-11 (emphasis added). Moreover, although the reference in todays Opinion to the use of veto power in the United States Supreme Courts opinions in H.L. v. Matheson and Ohio v. Akron Center is technically accurate (in the sense that the term appears in both opinions), it is also misleading. Ohio v. Akron Center, when it referred to Matheson, simply established that notice statutes are not equivalent to consent statutes for the purpose of constitutional analysis. Neither Matheson nor Akron Center directly addressed what types of bypass procedures are capable of curing the constitutionally fatal veto power found in consent statutes without bypass procedures. Instead, both Matheson and Akron Center dealt solely with the constitutionality of parental notification statutes.

77 AS 18.16.020 (applying the statute only to minors known to be unmarried . . . and unemancipated). The majority opinion notes that a minor must prove by clear and convincing evidence that she is sufficiently mature in order to obtain a judicial bypass, while the standard of proof for legal emancipation is a preponderance of the evidence. Because any minor who has established legal emancipation is already exempted from the scope of the PCA, however, the PCA is not over-broad on this account. Furthermore, it is logical that a minor who cannot prove that she is globally ready to be free from parental supervision may nonetheless be mature on the specific issue of the decision to terminate her pregnancy. This discrepancy in what must be proven negates an easy comparison regarding the burden of proof that a minor must satisfy.

U.S. Supreme Court

Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1979)

Bellotti v. Baird

No. 78-329

Argued February 27, 1979

Decided July 2, 1979*

443 U.S. 622

Syllabus

A Massachusetts statute requires parental consent before an abortion can be performed on an unmarried woman under the age of 18. If one or both parents refuse such consent, however, the abortion may be obtained by order of a judge of the superior court "for good cause shown." In appellees' class action challenging the constitutionality of the statute, a three-judge District Court held it unconstitutional. Subsequently, this Court vacated the District Court's judgment, Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U. S. 132, holding that the District Court should have abstained and certified to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court appropriate questions concerning the meaning of the statute. On remand, the District Court certified several questions to the Supreme Judicial Court. Among the questions certified was whether the statute permits any minors -- mature or immature -- to obtain judicial consent to an abortion without any parental consultation whatsoever. The Supreme Judicial Court answered that, in general, it does not; that consent must be obtained for every nonemergency abortion unless no parent is available; and that an available parent must be given notice of any judicial proceedings brought by a minor to obtain consent for an abortion. Another question certified was whether, if the superior court finds that the minor is capable of making, and has, in fact, made and adhered to, an informed and reasonable decision to have an abortion, the court may refuse its consent on a finding that a parent's, or its own, contrary decision is a better one. The Supreme Judicial Court answered in the affirmative. Following the Supreme Judicial Court's judgment, the District Court again declared the statute unconstitutional and enjoined its enforcement.

450 F.Supp. 997, affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL, joined by MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, MR. JUSTICE STEWART, and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST, concluded that:

1. There are three reasons justifying the conclusion that the constitutional rights of children cannot be equated with those of adults: the peculiar vulnerability of children; their inability to make critical decisions in an informed, mature manner; and the importance of the guiding role of parents in the upbringing of their children. Pp. 443 U. S. 633-639.

2. The abortion decision differs in important ways from other decisions facing minors, and the State is required to act with particular sensitivity when it legislates to foster parental involvement in this matter. Pp. 443 U. S. 639-642.

3. If a State decides to require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both parents' consent to an abortion, it also must provide an alternative procedure whereby authorization for the abortion can be obtained. A pregnant minor is entitled in such a proceeding to show either that she is mature enough and well enough informed to make her abortion decision, in consultation with her physician, independently of her parents' wishes, or that, even if she is not able to make this decision independently, the desired abortion would be in her best interests. Such a procedure must ensure that the provision requiring parental consent does not, in fact, amount to an impermissible "absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto." Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U. S. 52, 428 U. S. 74. Pp. 443 U. S. 642-644.

4. The Massachusetts statute, as authoritatively interpreted by the Supreme Judicial Court, unduly burdens the right to seek an abortion. The statute falls short of constitutional standards in two respects. First, it permits judicial authorization for an abortion to be withheld from a minor who is found by the superior court to be mature and fully competent to make this decision independently. Second, it requires parental consultation or notification in every instance, whether or not in the pregnant minor's best interests, without affording her an opportunity to receive an independent judicial determination that she is mature enough to consent or that an abortion would be in her best interests. Pp. 443 U. S. 644-651.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, joined by MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, and MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, concluded that the Massachusetts statute is unconstitutional because under the statute, as written and as construed by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, no minor, no matter how mature and capable of informed decisionmaking, may receive an abortion without the consent of either both parents or a superior court judge, thus making the minor's abortion decision subject in every instance to an absolute third-party veto. Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U. S. 52, controlling. Pp. 443 U. S. 652-656.

POWELL, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which BURGER, C.J., and STEWART and REHNQUIST, JJ., joined.

PETITION TO BYPASS
PARENTAL CONSENT

Clerk's Instructions: This is a confidential matter requiring immediate appointment of counsel and a hearing within 48 hours. No filing fee is required and no court costs may be assessed.

I request that the court issue an order authorizing me to consent to an abortion without asking for the consent of my parent, guardian or custodian. I swear or affirm under penalty of perjury that the following information is true.

1. I am pregnant.

2. I am unmarried, under 17 years of age, and unemancipated.

3. I wish to have an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian or custodian.

4. Parental consent should not be required because (check all that apply):

   ☐ a. I am sufficiently mature and well enough informed to decide intelligently whether to have an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian.

   ☐ b. One or both of my parents or my guardian or custodian has engaged in physical abuse, sexual abuse, or a pattern of emotional abuse against me.

   ☐ c. It is not in my best interest to require me to obtain the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian.

5. I ☐ do not have an attorney. I understand the court must appoint one for me.
   ☐ am represented by the following attorney:
   Attorney's Name:_____ Telephone_____
   Attorney's Address:_____

AS 18.16.030

Instructions For Requesting Judicial Permission To Bypass Parental Consent

If you are a woman under 17 years old and want to have an abortion in Alaska, you must first get the written consent of one of your parents or your guardian or custodian.[1] Apart from medical emergencies,[2] there are just three exceptions[3] to this Alaska law. You do not need parental consent if:

1. you are emancipated, or

2. you obtain a court order dispensing with parental consent for one of the reasons listed in the statute, or

3. you request the above court order but the court fails to hold the required hearing within five business days, thus "constructively authorizing" the abortion without parental consent.

Emancipation. You are "emancipated" for purposes of the abortion law[4] if any of the following are true: you are (1) married, (2) a member of the armed services of the United States, (3) employed and self-subsisting, (4) emancipated under Alaska Statute 09.55.590[5], or (5) independent from the care and control of your parents, guardian or custodian.

Court Order. The procedure for requesting this court order is described below. Your request will be kept confidential by the court. The court is not allowed to notify your parents or anyone else that you are pregnant or that you want to have an abortion. The court will provide the forms you need for your request and will appoint an attorney to represent you (at state expense) if you do not have an attorney. You will not be charged any fees or court costs.

How To Request A Court Order

To request a court order, do the following:

1. Fill out the attached form P-505, Petition To Bypass Parental Consent. Type or print clearly, using black ink.

   a. Leave the "AT" line at the top of the form blank. The court clerk will fill it in.

   b. On the next line, fill in your name as petitioner and your date of birth.

---

1 AS 18.16.010(a)(3)

2 See AS 18.16.010(g) for what constitutes a "medical emergency."

3 AS 18.16.020

4 AS 18.16.090(2)

5 AS 09.55.590 allows minors who are at least 16 years old to petition the superior court for emancipation. This can usually be done only with the consent of each living parent or guardian of the minor. The minor must be living separate and apart from the minor's parents or guardian, be capable of sustained self-support and be capable of managing his/her own financial affairs.

c. Leave the "CASE NO." line blank. The court clerk will fill it in.

d. In #4, check any of the boxes that apply to your situation.

e. In #5, check the first box if you do not have an attorney. The court will appoint one for you. Check the second box and fill in the information if you have hired your own attorney.

f. In #6, check the box (agreeing to call the court if you do not find out your hearing time and how to contact your attorney when you file your petition). (See #2 below.) Since the court may have no way of contacting you, you need to contact the court to get this information.

g. In #7, check the box if you want to participate in the court hearing by telephone instead of in person. The hearing will be held within 48 hours after you file your petition. You will not have to pay for the telephone call.

h. Your petition must be notarized, so you should wait to date and sign it until you get to the court clerk's office where a clerk can notarize it for you. If you do not plan to file your petition in person, see the discussion about notarization in paragraph 3 below.

i. If possible, please fill in a telephone number where court personnel can call you or leave a message for you. The court may need to contact you, for example, if the time of the hearing has to be changed. If you do not have a telephone number where the court can call you, you do not have to fill this in.

2. Bring your filled out petition to the clerk's office at your local court and tell the clerk you want to file it. The clerk will ask you to sign it under oath and will notarize it for you (at no charge). Please bring a photo ID (for example, your driver's license) with you because the clerk needs to see identification in order to notarize your petition. The clerk will ask you to wait a few minutes while the clerk schedules your court hearing and assigns an attorney to represent you. The clerk will give you a Notice form (P-510) with this information on it.

3. If there is no court in your community (or if you do not want to use the local court), you can mail or fax your petition to the nearest superior court. Addresses and fax numbers are listed on page 4. Before faxing or mailing the petition, you need to get it notarized locally by a notary public or postmaster. If there is no notary public or postmaster available, you must sign and date the petition and fill out the "Certification" section at the bottom.

   If you fax the petition, call the court to make sure they received it and to find out your hearing date and who your attorney will be.

   If you mail the petition, call the court and tell the clerk that you have mailed a petition. Ask the clerk how to find out the date and time of your hearing and how to contact your attorney.

4. Contact your attorney immediately. Because the hearing will be held so soon (within 48 hours), your attorney will need to talk to you as soon as possible.

5. Attend the court hearing. You can participate by telephone if you need to do so. To do this, you must give the court or your attorney a telephone number where the court can reach you at the time of the hearing.

   The hearing will be confidential (not open to the public).

6. At or immediately after the hearing, the court will issue an order granting or denying your request.

   If your request is denied, you can appeal this decision. Your court-appointed attorney will continue to represent you in the appeal. Form P-520, Notice of Appeal, should be used to file the appeal. This form is available at all court locations.

Constructive Authorization

If the superior court fails to hold a hearing on your request within five business days (not counting holidays and weekends) after you file your petition, the law[6] allows you to consent to the abortion without first obtaining the consent of one of your parents. If you need proof that no hearing was held, you can get a certificate from the court stating this. Your attorney can help you get the certificate.

Rule 20. Judicial Bypass Procedure to Authorize Minor to Consent to an Abortion

(a) Petition. An action for an order authorizing a minor under age 17 to consent to an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian is commenced by filing a petition. The petition must be under oath and must include the information required by AS 18.16.030(b). The petitioner is not required to provide an address or telephone number. Blank petition forms will be available at all court locations and will be mailed or faxed to a petitioner upon request. No fee will be charged for this service or other services provided to a petitioner.

(b) Filing. The petition may be filed in any district or superior court location in person, by mail, or by fax. No filing fee will be charged. If a petition is filed in a district court location, the clerk or magistrate shall immediately notify the clerk of the nearest superior court and fax the petition to that court, unless the local judicial officer has been appointed as a master to conduct these proceedings.

(c) Appointment of Counsel. If the petitioner is not represented by a private attorney, the clerk shall appoint the Office of Public Advocacy to represent the petitioner. The clerk shall immediately notify the Office of Public Advocacy of the appointment.

(d) Expedited Hearing. Upon receipt of the petition, the court shall schedule a hearing to be held within 48 hours, including weekends and holidays, after the petition is filed. At the hearing, the court shall follow the procedure specified in AS 18.16.030(e)-(g). Upon request, the petitioner will be allowed to participate telephonically at court system expense.

(e) Findings and Order. The court shall enter an order immediately after the hearing is concluded. The court shall grant the petition if the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that one of the statutory grounds for dispensing with parental consent exists. Otherwise, the court shall deny the petition. If the petition is denied, the court shall inform the petitioner of her right to an expedited appeal to the supreme court.

1051 (f) Constructive Order. If the court fails to hold a hearing within five days after the petition is filed, the presiding judge of the judicial district, or another judge designated by the presiding judge, shall issue a certificate stating that (1) no hearing was held within five business days after the petition was filed; and (2) under AS 18.16.030(c), the failure to hold a hearing constitutes a constructive order of the court authorizing the minor to consent to an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian. A certificate should not be issued if the hearing was not held because it was postponed at the petitioner's request or because the petitioner failed to appear at the hearing.

(g) Confidentiality. Petitions filed under AS 18.16.030 and all hearings, proceedings, and records are confidential. Court personnel are prohibited from notifying a minor's parents, guardian, or custodian that a minor is pregnant or wants to have an abortion, or from disclosing this information to any member of the public.

(h) Appeal. A petitioner may appeal an order denying or dismissing a petition to bypass parental consent by filing a notice of appeal in any district or superior court, or directly with the clerk of the appellate courts. If the notice of appeal is filed in a district or superior court, the clerk or magistrate shall immediately notify the clerk of the appellate courts that the notice of appeal has been filed.

Rule 220. Judicial Bypass Appeals

(a) Scope. This rule applies to an appeal from an order denying or dismissing a petition filed by a minor under age 17 to bypass parental consent to an abortion under AS 18.16.030. In such appeals, this rule supersedes the other appellate rules to the extent they may be inconsistent with this rule. It also supersedes the procedure for bypass appeals established by AS 18.16.030(j).

(b) Jurisdictional Limitation. This rule does not permit an appeal to be taken in any circumstances in which an appeal would not be permitted by Appellate Rule 202.

(c) Notice of Appeal.

(1) A minor may appeal an order denying or dismissing a petition to bypass parental consent by filing a notice of appeal in any district or superior court, or directly with the clerk of the appellate courts. The notice of appeal may be filed in person, by mail, or by fax, and must be accompanied by a copy of the order from which the appeal is taken. No filing fee will be charged. If the notice of appeal is filed in a district or superior court, the clerk or magistrate shall immediately notify the clerk of the appellate courts that the appeal has been filed.

(2) The notice of appeal must indicate that the appeal is being filed pursuant to this rule, but the court will apply this rule to cases within its scope whether they are so identified or not.

(3) Blank notice of appeal forms will be available at all court locations and will be mailed or faxed to a minor upon request. No fee will be charged for this service or other services provided to a minor in an appeal under this rule.

(d) Record on Appeal. The record on appeal consists of the superior court file, including all papers and exhibits filed in the superior court, and, unless otherwise ordered, a recording of the proceedings before the superior court. The clerk of the appellate courts shall request the record immediately upon receiving notice that the appeal has been filed. Upon receiving this request, the clerk of the trial court shall immediately transmit the record to the supreme court by overnight mail or in another manner that will cause it to arrive within 48 hours after the notice of appeal is filed.

656 (e) Brief. A brief is not required. However, the minor may file a typewritten memorandum in support of the appeal.

(f) Oral Argument. Unless the minor waives the right to oral argument in the notice of appeal, oral argument will be held within 72 hours, including weekends and holidays, after the notice of appeal is filed. Upon request, the minor will be allowed to participate telephonically at court system expense.

(g) Disposition. The court shall enter an order stating its decision immediately after oral argument or, if oral argument has been waived, within three days after the date the notice of appeal is filed. The court may issue an opinion explaining the decision at any time following entry of the order.

© 2008 Thomson Reuters/West. No claim to original U.S. Govt. works.

(h) Constructive Order. If the court fails to enter an order within five days after the date the clerk of the appellate courts receives the record on appeal, the clerk shall issue a certificate stating that (1) no order was entered within five days after the appeal was docketed; and (2) under AS 18.16.030(j), the failure to enter an order constitutes a constructive order of the court authorizing the minor to consent to an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian. For purposes of AS 18.16.030(j), an appeal is deemed to be docketed on the date the clerk of the appellate courts receives the record on appeal.

(i) Confidentiality. Documents and proceedings in an appeal under this rule are confidential. Court personnel are prohibited from notifying the minor's parents, guardian, or custodian that the minor is pregnant or wants to have an abortion, or from disclosing this information to any member of the public.

(j) Attorney. If the minor is not represented by an attorney, the clerk of the appellate courts shall appoint the Office of Public Advocacy to represent the minor in the appeal. If the Office of Public Advocacy was appointed to represent the minor in the trial court, the appointment continues through the appeal.

(k) Filing Defined. For purposes of this rule only, a document is deemed filed on the date it is received by the district court, the superior court, or the clerk of the appellate courts if the appeal is filed directly with the clerk.

HISTORICAL NOTES

NOTE

Under AS 18.16.030(j), the failure to enter a judgment in the appeal within five days after the appeal is docketed constitutes a constructive order of the court authorizing the appellant to consent to an abortion without the consent of a parent, guardian, or custodian.

There is no way to determine which minors enrolled in Medicaid had consent from a parent or guardian for abortions because the department does not require a consent form to process claims.

Expenditures for abortions are made from general fund dollars. These claims are paid pursuant to an Alaska Supreme Court decision that requires state funding of medically necessary abortions for low-income women eligible for Medicaid. (continued on page 2)

BILL NO. HB035

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

The only abortion services eligible for federal financial participation are those that the department is required to cover under the federal Hyde amendment. To qualify under the Hyde amendment, the abortion must be the result of rape or incest, or the life of the mother must be endangered if the pregnancy were carried to term. Hyde amendment qualifying abortion claims are rare—in FY 2008, there were no Hyde amendment claims.

2009 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB035

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

HB35 would amend existing state statutes regarding the requirement of parental notice and consent to be given if a person under age 17, who is unmarried, unemancipated, and pregnant, intends to obtain an abortion. The bill prohibits a person from performing an abortion unless the requisite parental notice and consent is provided or the person qualifies for an exception to those requirements. The bill also enacts new provisions of law regarding coercion of a minor who is pregnant and regarding certain reports that must be filed by physicians.

If this bill is enacted there would be a zero cost of implementation to the department. Should a legal challenge be mounted, especially of a constitutional nature, there would be costs in defending the provisions of this bill. Costs of defending legislation may arise with any legislature and often can not be anticipated; however, the department has previously defended the constitutionality of similar legislation. Those efforts approached $500,000 in addition to the payment of a court ordered award of $940,000 in costs and fees to the plaintiffs in the case.

(1) the legislature has passed similar laws to require expedited consideration of other disputes, examples of which include AS 18.66.120 (modification of protective orders) and AS 25.30.460 (enforcement of child custody decree);

(2) sec. 17 of this Act does not change any court rules, but expedited consideration resolves and harmonizes potential conflicts between several court rules and creates a limited exception to several rules; and

(3) even if the court finds that sec. 17 of this Act is beyond the scope of the legislature's authority under the Constitution of the State of Alaska, the legislature requests the court to expedite review of the constitutionality of any challenged provisions of AS 18.16.010 - 18.16.040 as a matter of comity."

Subject: HB35, Restoring Parental Rights

Honorable members of the House Judiciary Committee,

You have before you the opportunity to provide great help to parents in Alaska. Currently, a pregnant 13-year-old can be coerced into an abortion without the advice, knowledge or consent of either of her parents. Your daughter could be driven to the clinic by the 21-year-old coach, neighbor or teacher who impregnated her through statutory rape – unbelievable! If your underage daughter is raped by her older boyfriend, he is now able to hide his crime by coercing her into an abortion and you will never know until medical or emotional complications come forth.

As the father of a teenage daughter, I feel it is my responsibility to help her make the best medical decisions possible. Current law says that she can make these decisions alone, or worse, with only the coercive advice of the man who impregnated her. I ask that you correct this wrong by passing HB35 promptly in order to proved plenty of time for consideration by the full House and Senate.

Thank you,

Dear Representative Ramras:

I think parental consent is an important issue. It affirms the rights of parents to raise their children. A government entity that wants to become the parent and make generic decisions for parents creates a nanny state. How can a government write policy on "How to be a parent" ? Our traditions of raising children have for centuries have been handed down through the family. A recent invasion of government to dictate personal family matters can never replace a long history of parents making decisions for their families unless it was serfdom or slavery.

Values have been handed down through families. HB 35 Parental consent to abortion should be an easily understood bill. Parents consent is required for school field trips, visits to the hospital, medical treatment, tatoos, girl scout trips, athletic activities and many other events.

Parents need to know if their minor daughter is having an abortion. Sexual predators have accompanied young girls to abortion clinics to wipe out their crime. Young girls don't understand the side effects of various abortion pills. Young girls don't understand the aftereffects of abortions such as heavy bleeding that can last for weeks. I recently spoke to a legislative aide who had used a cocktail of birth control pills (how-tos found on web sites) to have an abortion. She said she wouldn't recommend it because of the extreme pain. A morning after pill given by an abortion clinic can be a deadly dose.

Sincerely,

Jennie Grimwood

Dear Rep. Ramras,

Thank you for sponsoring House Bill 35, the parental consent for a minor's abortion bill. Parents are society's best advocate for their children, are held legally responsible for their child's actions, and of course are morally responsible to God for raising them, not the State. The State has no right and no business to allow a dangerous, morally-laden medical and emotional decision to be remade by minors without parental involvement. Thank you for fighting to right an egregious violation of family rights and responsibilities. Please make this bill into law.

Thank you for taking public testimony regarding HB 35.

I understand this bill will be heard in the House Judiciary Committee this coming Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Please vote YES on this bill and support parental rights as they provide for, support, educate, and love their children. They - the parents - are, after all, responsible in every way for the well-being of their children - they certainly should have the information they need to guide their children in all areas.

I am not going to be able to testify regarding parental consent. I am at home with my kids for spring break. I did watch a portion of yesterday's testimony. Questions I have:

- My daughter cannot go on a field trip with ASD, or when she was in private school without my consent. My daughter cannot go to Providence without my consent. My daughter will be 13 in August, and how can receive a major medical procedure without my consent? How is that okay?
- Major complications with an abortion with my daughter who is going to pay for future medical issues? My child commits a crime… I am responsible for the damage my child commits. My daughter is hospitalized for infection from a bad abortion without my consent; who is going to pay for it?

These are my questions I have for the Dr. who is going to testify and examples.

Thank you.

I strongly support HB35 that would require parental consent for any health decision of a minor. It is a known medical fact that the front part of the brain that is responsible for relating consequences to actions, is not fully developed until later years. The weight of some medical decisions are so great and long lasting that a minor should not bear it alone without the support and consent of a parent. I strongly believe this is a fundamental right as a parent to be involved in all aspects of raising our children. I tried to call 888-295-4546 to voice my support for HB35 but all the teleconference lines were busy. The gentlement suggested I email my support to you. Thank you for your time. As a mom, I love my children very much + I want what's best for them. I realize there are abusive parents + this bill makes allowances for that. However, the vast majority of parents in Alaska are real people doing the best we can to help our children grow into adults who make wise decisions.

In regards to major medical decions in the life of a child, an adult will influence that child. It seems logical to have that adult be one or both parents, who are naturally going to have the child's best interests at heart.

Whether or not I agree with another parent's decision for their child, they have the right + responsibility to help their child make decisions, especially something as major as an abortion.

Please let parents help their children through this major medical decision.

I support HB35.

I support the Parental Consent Bill HB 35 and thank you for hearing it.

I am a parent and even if I were not a parent it is a "no-brainer" to understand that parents have the right to be involved in ALL medical decisions that involve their minor children. The dictionary defines parent as "A father or mother, he or she that produces young. The duties of parents to their children are to maintain, protect and educate them."

How can a parent protect their children if the law prevents medical information from being available to them? Some foes of parental consent may cite examples of abuse by parents. Examples can always be stacked up to satisfy different sides of a problem. Other foes such as representatives of planned parenthood or the ACLU think that they should have more power and influence over tweens, teens and minors than parents should.

If my teen has a medical decision to make and I am unaware of it, then how can I help them financially? As a parent how can I "pick up the pieces" of a procedure gone wrong if I don't know what is going on? What if that teen or younger dies in the process of a medical procedure and I had no knowledge that something was being done? Then what? I don't even get to say "good-bye" or have closure with my child.

If you are a legislator who remembers that we live in a Republic and what that means, then you also know that your decisions should be made based on principles of right and wrong under our Constitution, rather than polls, number of people testifying on one side or the other, or majority rule. The founding principles protect the family. It is wrong for the law to allow others to advise minor children but block bills like this one, which guarantee and reestablish parental rights.

Our family urges the passage of HB 35.

Please pass HB35. We are discussing children having the maturity to make a life changing decision without the help of their parents. Children, especially teenagers do not have the capacity needed to make medical decisions.

This is not about abortion but the rights of parents to do their job. We as parents are legally responsible for the actions of our minor children. All we as parents are asking is to give our rights back. Do not punish the good parents because of a few irresponsible ones. To: The Alaska State Legislature

We the undersigned Alaskan registered voters from Fairbanks encourage the passage of HB 35 to require parental consent for minors seeking abortions. We realize that children are often pressured into making decisions on life changing events without proper consideration of the consequences. Parental consent will help minors and parents to properly evaluate the long term ramifications of abortion.

Parental consent can recognize the State's compelling interest in "protecting minors from their own immaturity and aiding parents in fulfilling their parental responsibilities." In addition to parental consent, HB 35 provides for a judicial bypass for sexual abuse cases.

Parents are a child's first and most important resource for assistance in decision-making. For that reason, the state's interest in protecting children from the consequences of their own immaturity, and in so doing protecting the health of its children, and its interest in supporting parents' right and duty to guide the upbringing of their children is particularly compelling.

The Alaska Parental Consent Act attempts to ensure that pregnant minors who are sufficiently mature to make the decision to obtain an abortion on their own are allowed to do so while those who are not sufficiently mature either obtain a parent's consent or, in the case of parental abuse, a judicial determination that the procedure is in their best interest.

Having an abortion is a life-changing event with serious physical and emotional consequences for a minor child. By passing HB35, you are assuring that children remain under the protective umbrella of their parents. It is the parents, not Planned Parenthood or the ACLU, that have the child's best interest in mind. Who is best to guard the minor girl who thinks abortion is the only answer: the sperm donor, Planned Parenthood, or the ACLU? THE PARENTS!! Also, parents are the ones held legally accountable for their child's well-being.

The Supreme Court has maintained that parents possess a fundamental and constitutional right to direct the upbringing of their children. "Those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations." 1925 The Supreme Court, Pierce v. Society of Sister

Those who oppose HB35, are attacking parental rights and the fundamental child-parent relationship. The role of parents in a child's life is an irreplaceable one – instituted for the well-being and protection of the child!

Please support the right of minor children to be protected by their parents and the right of the parent to protect their children before receiving an intrusive medical surgery that kills the child's unborn baby. Vote Yes on House Bill 35!

I hope this is going to the right person. I participated in the 3/11/09 hearing regarding house bill 35 from my home in Anchorage. I forgot to state my overwhelming gratitude to have the chance to speak my opinions and beliefs and to be afforded that chance while staying in the privacy of my own home and caring for 3 children. I am truly blessed to be in this country and to be able to speak freely. Thank you for your time and consideration on this huge subject. My hope is that the decision will be made to grant parents the rights to have control over all medical care given to their children and that in regards to the other issues brought up such as issues of abuse and incest that other resources will be sought out and planning committees created to meet the needs of those girls in desparate situations. Crisis Pregnancy Center has a program that helps place a vulnerable pregnant teen into a caring home that will support her throughout her pregnancy and up to 6 weeks after the child is born. Just an example of a way to address the needs of the teen without undermining the authority of all parents in this great state.
Again, thank you for your time and consideration.

Dear House Judiciary Standing Committee,
Thank you for taking the time to read written testimony for the hearing on HB35.
My name is Mark Milligan, and I'm a resident of Moose Pass, AK. I would like to ask you to support HB35, which I believe is a critical piece of legislation in regards to both the safety and care of minors and in regards to parental rights.

Taking the parents out of this critical decision making process, is not a good solution for anyone.

Children, teenagers or otherwise, have an understood fundamental need for guidance. Therefore I am completely baffled at why the Parental Consent Act of 1997 was ever struck down in the first place. Parents have the fundamental responsibility to care for their children. An abortion is unarguably a medical procedure, and a decision to undergo an abortion is at least as important as the decision whether to get a prescription for a general illness such as a sinus infection! It is simply nonsense to regulate the decisions of teenagers in every area except in regards to their decision to obtain an abortion. It is unfair to remove from parents their rights to guide and direct their children.

I ask that you consider the safety of our minors and the responsibility of parents to oversee the decision-making of their children. Please support HB 35. Thank you for your time and consideration of my thoughts on this matter.

Sincerely,

My name is Wendy Milligan, and I'm a resident of Moose Pass, AK. I would like to ask you to support HB35, which I believe is a critical piece of legislation in regards to both the safety and care of minors and in regards to parental rights.

How do we as a society keep our children safe and healthy? Twelve, thirteen, and fourteen year olds are not given the license to drive, and for good reason. We, as a society, do not view children of that age as mature enough to handle the responsibility and decision-making crucial to safe driving. Children up through the teenage years do not, as a general rule, attend doctor and dentist offices unattended. Why? We view children of that age as too immature to make important medical decisions. They lack the understanding and experience to guide decisions regarding medical procedures. Pharmacies do not issue prescription drugs to teenagers for the same reason.

Teenagers lack the maturity and experience to successfully navigate a myriad of decision-making processes, from driving, to schooling, to medical decisions. Children have parents to help them navigate these processes, making decision for them until they are mature enough to make them on their own. Teenagers who lack parental figures are not left to their own devices; they are subject to the state through foster care or other means. Why? It is fundamentally understood that teenagers are still in need of guidance.

Children, teenagers or otherwise, have an understood fundamental need for guidance. Therefore I am completely baffled at why the Parental Consent Act of 1997 was ever struck down in the first place. Please vote Yes on this bill.

As the father of three teenagers, I am incredulous that they need parental permission (usually written or sometimes verbal) to take an over-the-counter cold medication at school, go on a field trip, go to the doctor, join a club, etc. -- yet my girls could have an abortion with my wife and I being completely out of the loop. This is appalling, and is so wrong, and it is so sadly representative of our throw-away society that favors the quick fix out-of-sight / out-of-mind solution over one's responsibility for one's actions.

Please vote for this bill.

Dear Representative Ramras:

Please vote YES on HB 35 "Parental Consent". Parental involvement in a minor child's medical treatment is an integral part of raising a child. It is a parent's right and responsibility.

Abortion is a major medical procedure that has life-long consequences for the woman involved as well as family and significant others in her life. Most women do not want to kill their unborn children through abortion but feel alone and unsupported, turning to abortion as a last resort. To protect the right of a parent to be involved in a daughter's life changing decision can lead to a choice for life for the baby and a life of fewer regrets for the young mother. This is the only good decision for the unborn baby, the family, and society as a whole.

Thank you.

Subject: Support for HB 35

Representative Ramras,

As an advocate for children in many forums in Eagle River, in Anchorage and throughout the state I am in support of this bill for several reasons. First, I am the mother of an unwed daughter who experienced an unplanned pregnancy and I could not imagine not having the ability to help make the best decision possible for her, only to have to leave that important decision up to the influence of her friends and the pro-abortion philosophy of abortion clinic personnel. It's reprehensible and sinister at its worst and lacking in plain old common sense at best.

Also, I am very involved with Heart To Heart Pregnancy Resource Center in Eagle River and in that office, we regularly see parents actively engaged in the decisions that their daughters face with an unplanned pregnancy. Teens are often scared to tell their parents but that feeling is no different than if they had to admit that they wrecked the family car. It's make that parental permission even more imperative.
Parents do step up to the plate and offer their opinion and guidance in assisting their daughter with her decision.

I believe from the testimony I've heard, that the controversy lies more with the abortion issue itself rather than the merits of this bill.
The fear of those who oppose this bill is based on speculating that any move of any kind to regulate abortion services would be a foot in the door of totally reversing the decision of Roe versus Wade. That is not the case here. This bill will only help to secure the right of any parent to be involved in the health decision of their minor child. Those opposing this bill are doing so not with any individual young woman in mind but with the fear of losing ground on the controversial issue of abortion in general.

One comment heard previously was in regard to how a teen might be intimidated by the court process were she to have to use the legal system to gain permission for the abortion should her parent not grant that permission and that that process might be too much to handle given the teen's emotionally unstable condition at the time. The same emotional instability experienced by any teen in the situation of an unplanned pregnancy is exactly why a teen must have the support and permission of the parent and exactly why the vast majority of parents will appropriately help the teen make the best decision for their situation.

There is a huge range of activities that children cannot engage in until they are considered of an age appropriate enough for that activity; getting a simple tattoo is one. For some things a child can only engage in an activity if the parent takes that responsibility.
For example, body piercing. For a child to receive immunizations, though they are required for attending public school, a parent must grant permission. In the Anchorage School District, for a student under the age of 18 to even participate in any after school sports parental permission is required. For a child to go on a field trip, parental permission is required. Obviously, the importance of such permission is recognized in a multitude of situations, so why would we not require permission for something as physiologically invasive as an abortion procedure? In a time when we're trying to make parents more responsible for their children, limiting that role in any way is counterproductive. Parents should not only have the right to help their daughter face this decision, but their permission for an activity such as an abortion is crucial and should be absolutely required.

Thank you!

Subject: HB 35 - please pass

Representative Ramras,

I am writing in support of HB 35.

There are three compelling facts that make HB 35 the right thing to do.

First, pregnancy is a very stressful experience, physically and emotionally. Even for a planned pregnancy, emotions run high. A young pregnant teen will certainly feel overwhelmed, confused.

Second, teens make bad choices, because they lack of life experience and a long- range vision for the future. They are highly vulnerable to outside influences. Every adult can recall at least one bad choice they made in those tumultuous teen years, when wisdom was minimal and opportunity plentiful.

So picture the situation - a young pregnant woman, maybe 13 years old, very stressed, confused, afraid, lacking the wisdom and experience to rationally consider options and make the best choices. This young teen is very vulnerable, and in need of guidance from someone caring about her well-being.

This brings us to the third compelling reason that HB 35 is the right thing to do - Parents have the responsibility, morally and legally, for the safety and well being of their child until adulthood. Parents fundamentally have best interest of their child in mind. Furthermore to deny a parent the authority to fully care for their child under age 17 denies the validity of the core unit of our society – the family.

Certainly there are a few exceptions to a good parent and HB 35 provides very adequate judicial bypass provisions for the situations where parents are absent, uninvolved or even abusers.

In summary, our society must preserve the parental authority to guide the young pregnant woman in an exceedingly stressful situation, in making wise decisions.

HB 35 is the right thing to do.

Regarding HB35

Parental consent should be mandated for every medical procedure involving a minor.
Parents are legally responsible for their own children until the age of 18. That legal authority extends to medical decisions regarding the minor children.
Children should not be given sole responsibility for their medical decisions.

Parents provide adult perspectives and guidance to their children until their children reach adulthood.
A child under the age of 18 has not reached adulthood and should not be given full adult responsibilities regarding medical decisions.

Regarding HB35

In the state of Alaska Persons under the age of 21 are not permitted to purchase or legally consume alcohol. Persons under the age of 19 are not permitted to purchase cigarettes.

I am sure that the reasons that these laws were created was intended to protect the children from the harmful effects that smoking and drinking would have on their young developing bodies.

Children under the age of 18 are not permitted to vote. This could suggest that they are not mentally mature enough to handle the responsibility of voting.
Yet these teens have been allowed the sole decision as to obtain the invasive medical procedure of abortion without their parent's (or legal guardian's) knowledge or consent.

These teens may not know that abortions cause long term psychological consequences such as depression, shame, remorse and a deep sense of loss that is associated with losing a child. Such long term consequences could be avoided with the proper parental intervention and support.

It is the parent's role to research and advise their children of the consequences of medical procedures, which medical professional may fail to mention to a child.

Parents are legally responsible for their children until they turn 18, therefore a person under the age of 18 is not solely responsible for their own medical decisions.

Medical staff should be required to obtain the consent of the child's legal custodian before any medical procedure can be performed on a minor.
It is the parent's responsibility to take care of their children. Medical professionals do not hold that responsibility, therefore they should not be permitted to allow children to make such an invasive decision as abortion without parental consent.

Sincerely,

Gina Schumacher.

Dear Representative Ramras,

Since I was unable to get through on the phone lines to testify today (I tried, waited an hour, and tried again), I was told by the gentleman who spoke with me to write my testimony to you and that you, as Chair, would make sure the other members received my comments. Thank you for that.

My name is Janine McCready, and I live in District 7. Thank you for hearing this bill. Parents are society's best advocate for their children, and are held legally responsible for their children's actions. It is widely recognized that medications and procedures cannot be done without parental consent. Schools require permission slips. Just this week a friend's sister, who is a minor, could not get her ears pierced in Fairbanks without a parent present to give permission. Why is abortion the exception to this? Abortion is an invasive, potentially dangerous medical procedure, with huge emotional and ethical complexity, that should not be made by minors without parental consent. If a teenager needs parental consent to go on a field trip, what makes the State think she doesn't need it for an abortion? That is a violation of parental rights and responsibilities.

Vote YES on House Bill 35.

Yours truly,

Janine McCready

This is an email I sent to Loren Lehman last year. Loren wanted me to document my son's story. In my opinion this physician was not acting in my, or my unborn child's best interest.

I do not believe that some teachers, nurses, or physicians may not act in the best interest of my child.

I am watching this hearing on Gavel to Gavel and really concerned about the physicians, and teachers.

The doctor from the YK delta misspoke. The YK delta's culture believes in life; like most rural villages. The villages take responsibility for their families. I do understand that there is a great deal of sexual abuse in the region. However, there is already checks and balances in place to protect the child.

I am growing more and more frustrated with continued attempt to take my parental rights away.

Hi Loren,

I have attached a picture of you and my kids. We have been fans for a long time. I too believe in a culture of life. The story of my unaborted son Van begins when I was hospitalized for my asthma back in 1997.

History:

I have been hospitalized (11 days) for my asthma while pregnant with each child. Dr. Stewart treated me on an outpatient basis with intervenous asthma steriods, narcotic cough syrup, and breathing treatments prior to each hospitalization. This is standard of care. I was under the care of Alaska's leading physicians in their field; Dr. James Bertleson (OB/GYN) and Dr. George Stewart (Asthma). Both children were delivered healthy. Lyndsey 9.5lbs, and Van 10.5lbs. The children continue to be extremely healthy, and happy.

Physician recommends abortion:

August 31, 1997 I was admitted to Alaska Regional by Dr. Burton Newton because my physicians were out-of-town for the Labor Day weekend. Dr. Newton admitted me, then took me off my asthma medicines. I thought I was going to die. He refused to contact Dr. Stewart's on-call physician. Dr. Gerboth (on-call physician) did come and visit me the following day and started me back on my previous regime. Both my doctors were back to work after the holiday weekend.

Dr. Newton came to visit me because he was visiting a patient of his. This was three days after he signed off on my case. He told me that I should seriously consider terminating the pregnancy, and I had three weeks in the State of Alaska to do so. I was so scared and mortified. I could not believe he said that to me. Luckily, Dr. Bertleson walked in while Dr. Newton was leaving. Dr. Bertleson explained to me that there was no need to terminate the pregnancy. He felt that even if it was to become an issue... it would be a conversation between me Dr. Stewart because asthma kills. Thank goodness I had good physicians taking care of me and my babies.

A father who was giving me communion everyday raced to see me because he had "a feeling." I explained to him what happened. His comment was "please do not think ill of him for being misinformed." That is a hard pill to swallow. However, I had to forgive, and move on. If I did not have a strong faith, and in the care of excellent physicians... I could of made a difference choice."

We welcomed Venanzio Raymond Brollini, III via c-section. Guess, who assisted Dr. Bertleson with the delivery? Dr. Newton!!!! I found out a few minutes before the surgery. They had to medicate me because I was going to get up and walk out. Baby Van was hard hard to push out. Dr. Newton needed to get up on the operating table, and push Van out. His comment "what a big baby." Had I not been medicated I would of said "that is the big baby you wanted to abort!"

In closing, it was good to tell you Van's story. He is a wonderful, loving, and caring child. I appreciate you speaking about the culture of life. This is an issue close to my heart. This was one of the reason's me and the kids waved signs with you at the corner of O'Malley and the Old Seward. Keep up the good work.

Warm regards,

Deborah Brollini

Good afternoon,

As I sat waiting to testify regarding House Bill 35, my phone connection was dropped. When I called back in, I was told that all the telephone ports were taken and to call back again in about 30 minutes to see if one comes open.

In case I am unable to get through on the phone, I submit my testimony here via email. Thank you for providing different avenues to express concerns and support.

Good Afternoon,

Thank you very much for the opportunity to testify. I strongly support HB 35. I am a parent of two children and testify as a private citizen: Diane Kardash, North Pole, Alaska, aksunny@gci.net, 907-378-8410

Our Alaska courts have upheld that the state has a compelling interest in protecting juvenile girls against their own immaturity and that parents have a constitutional right -- a duty -- to guide their children. However, in 2007, Planned Parenthood headed up the opposition to Alaska's law requiring minors to obtain consent before an abortion. This work by Planned Parenthood is disturbing and the reinstatement of legislation that requires consent before children under 17 years of age obtain an abortion is critical to the safety and well-being of these children.

The latest annual report from Planned Parenthood available on their website plannedparenthood.org shows the nation's largest abortion business has made over $1 billion in income for the first time in its history. Planned Parenthood currently has at least 5 clinics in our state.

Planned Parenthood has a strong financial incentive to provide abortion services to the people of Alaska. As a parent of two minor children in Fairbanks, I am very concerned about Planned Parenthood being the only counselor to my children should they seek an abortion without me. Our local Fairbanks Planned Parenthood clinic is convienently located nextdoor to the local movie theater giving this organization easy availability to minor children seeking help with an unplanned pregnancy.

Without the passage of House Bill no. 35, very young, pregnant teens may find themselves in a situation where their only adult counsel is from an abortion provider who stands to earn money based on the services provided. HB35's consent requirements ensure that a very young, pregnant teen is not left alone to decide on an abortion with her only adult counsel being the abortion provider.

In 2007, Lila Rose, of the Mona Lisa Project, posed as a pregnant 15- year old girl impregnated by a 23-year old boyfriend. She was counseled to lie about her age so that the Santa Monica California Planned Parenthood clinic would not have to report the statutory rape. In 2008, Rose exposed other unlawful counseling sessions by Planned Parenthood employees in Indiana and Arizona. I hope that that our local abortion providers are never exposed as counseling young girls unlawfully.

However, without the safeguards of HB 35, the abortion providers may be the only adult counselors for very young women alone with unplanned pregnancies. I ask for you to vote yes on HB 35 to provide more adult support for our young, pregnant Alaskan teens.

Thank you for reading my testimony and considering HB35. I am a mother of 5 children, 4 of which are daughters. I cannot imagine any medical decision being made for them without my involvement or consent. Any threat to my rights as a parent are very scary to me.

So many people act as if having a baby is such a bad thing, and abortion will solve the problems. I don't believe this is true. I believe the psychological and/or physical effect of having an abortion will be worse than actually carrying and having the baby. Abortion doesn't solve problems, it just creates more. Please support HB 35.

The Honorable John Coghill

Dear Representative Coghill:

I am writing you today regarding your bill, HB 35, relating to parental notification and consent when a minor is considering an abortion. As you might suspect, I strongly support your introduction of this bill and hope that the legislature will fast track the legislation this session.

I understand the bill was drafted with the Supreme Court opinion in mind after the courts struck down the 1997 Parental Consent Act. The legislation clearly has provisions to take into account emergency situations and situations where it would be better for a court to act in loco parentis for a minor. At the same time, the bill ultimately allows parents to be parents and be aware of life changing situations that their often immature children become involved in.

Over the course of my years as a priest and a bishop, I have heard many personal stories related to the devastating effects abortion has had on women's lives. Passage of this bill would ensure that parents are fully aware of the challenges their daughters would be facing if they did indeed go through with an abortion. In any situation, if they carry the baby to term and make an adoption plan or choose to raise the baby, or if they abort the fetus, they will need counseling and parental support. Finally, I was pleased to note that the bill also included a section that ensured the minor could not be forced into having an abortion once she told her parents.

I would be willing and pleased to testify on the bill or have a representative do so at the appropriate time. Please let Mary Gore in my office know at 297-7755 and I will try and arrange to be present.

Sincerely yours in Christ and Mary,

Representative Ramras,
Thank you for your sponsorship of HB 35. I support this legislation and would like to see it become law. Our minor children are legally prohibited from making major life decisions for good reason, and choosing abortion is a major life decision, regardless of which side of the abortion question a person is on. Passage of this bill will actually protect minors from coercion by others who have no moral, legal, or financial responsibility for their well-being or protection. Thank you for your attention to this issue.

To Whom It May Concern:

We are writing in support of HB 35. As parents of minor children, including two daughters, we are horrified at the thought of one of them going through the physical, mental and emotional trauma of abortion, and at the idea that they now have every right to discard one of our grandchildren without so much as our knowledge. Parents have every right to be involved in the medical care of their children, especially in decisions involving so much physical risk and emotional baggage. This law has been introduced to correct a grave, terrible wrong in our legal system, one which paves the way for destroying relationships, families, and preborn children.

To Members of the Legislature,

Thank you for your consideration of this testimony.

I have been an attorney and resident of the State of Alaska since 1969.

Since I am sure that the public hearing on this bill will be very crowded, I wanted to submit my brief testimony on this bill by email. I thank you for the appropriate distribution of this email.

I support parental notification/consent for the performance of an abortion on one of their children. Parental consent is required for any other medical procedure performed on a minor child. An abortion is a serious medical procedure, with particular emotional overtones. There is no reason that parental notification and consent should not be required as it is for ordinary medical procedures.

In the rare case where the matter cannot be dealt with between the parents and the child, HB 35 provides for judicial intervention. Whether or not you believe that the judiciary should be allowed to interfere in the intra-family relationships, this judicial oversight provision will help when HB 35 is enacted and then if it is challenged in Court.

In summary, I support HB 35. Thank you.

Subject: HB35 - Parental Consent Bill

Honorable Representatives:

An illness prevents me from testifying by phone. I sincerely hope that this form of communication will suffice.

I would like to thank the originators of this bill for supporting parents in their responsibilities, especially in the area of minors seeking an abortion. I implore the House to pass this bill as a positive step in restoring a parent's ability to parent. Most of us take this role seriously. We do so with immeasurable love and dedication, but there are no guarantees.

Parents need to be told when their child is in trouble and needs help, as much as a child needs to know the healing support of family. A careless act anywhere along the way may result in serious consequences: cheating on an exam ~ driving after drinking ~ an unplanned pregnancy.

Relating to this bill: A baby's life, planned or unplanned, is a gift. A young woman who finds herself in the difficult situation of carrying an unplanned child may respond impetuously to the situation with an abortion without thinking through the far-reaching ramifications of such a choice. Disallowing parents the opportunity to counsel, comfort, and reassure their own child with a decision of this magnitude presumes that a child has the maturity and wisdom to choose the future of the life she carries. Parents of minor children need and should have the responsibility to counsel and help their child make a competent decision.

The creators of this bill retained exceptions for emancipated minors, minors who are married. minors who live as productive, self-sufficient adults, and minors serving in the military. They maintain parental responsibility and opportunity of those minors under their protection. Please pass this bill.

Thank you.

Ladies and Gentlemen of the House,

As a mother of three I would ask that you please vote yes on HB 35. Children under eighteen are not capable of making a wise decision and weighing the consequences of their actions. The laws of the land have already established this premise.
It is a parents responsibility to nurture and protect their children. If we are not informed of the choices they are considering we cannot guide, counsel, or protect them. This bill upholds society's laws by not usurping our parental rights and protecting the next generation.

Thank you,
Desiree Buma

Attn: House Judiciary Chairman Ramras and Committee Members

There are approximately 1,200,000 abortions committed in the U.S. each year, and about 20% of those are committed on teens. That equates to about 240,000 teen abortions.

The pro-abortion Alan Guttmacher Institute estimates that approximately 40% of teenage abortions take place without parental involvement. (about 100,000) As a result, these teens' parents have no advance warning about the physical or emotional complications their children may experience. When the abortion causes subsequent emotional reactions that are not understood...such as depression, anger, and substance abuse...parents may react with anger and confusion, exacerbating the problems of the teen and her family.

The cost of such concealment can be deadly. Both 16-year-old Erica Richardson of Maryland and 13-year-old Dawn Ravanell of New York died from complications after they had abortions without telling their parents. Sandra Kaiser, a 14-year-old St. Louis girl with a history of psychiatric problems, committed suicide three weeks after her half-sister took her for an abortion without telling Sandra's mother.

Sadly, abortion advocates continue to fight laws that could help prevent tragedies like these.

Teenagers are more likely to report higher levels of feeling misinformed in pre-abortion counseling, and less satisfaction with abortion services and also, greater post abortion stress. They consider the abortion procedure itself to be stressful and associated with feelings of guilt, depression, and a sense of isolation.

Teenage abortion has been linked to a number of physical and psychological problems:

1). including drug and alcohol abuse.

2). Suicide or suicide attempts (studies show aborted teens are 2-4 times more likely to commit suicide)

3). In a study of teenage abortion patients, half suffered a worsening of psychosocial functioning within 7 months after the abortion. The immediate impact appeared to be greatest on the patients who were under 17 years of age and for those with previous psychosocial problems, Symptoms included: self-reproach, depression, social regression, withdrawal, obsession with need to become pregnant again, and hasty marriages. Teens are more likely to develop psychological problems, and are generally in need of more counseling and guidance pertaining to their abortion than adult women who obtain abortions. Aborted teens are nearly 3 times more likely to be admitted to mental health hospitals compared to adult women who've obtained abortions.

4). Teenage abortion patients are up to twice as likely to experience cervical lacerations during abortion compared to older women. (12.5% of first trimester abortions require stitching for cervical lacerations) Cervical damage is also caused because in order to commit the abortion, the cervix must be stretched open with a great deal of force. There is almost always microscopic tearing of the cervix muscles and occasionally severe ripping of the uterine wall, also. The cervical damage which results during the abortion frequently results in a permanent weakening of the cervix, and therefore an incontinent cervix, which causes the premature delivery of subsequent babies.

5). Teens are at higher risk for post-abortion infections. And because teens are less likely than adults to take prescribed antibiotics for infection, they are at greater risk for infertility, hysterectomy, ectopic pregnancy and other complications.

6). The abortion/breast cancer link is yet another injurious factor. The risk of breast cancer almost doubles after one abortion, and rises further with two or more abortions. As of 2006, 8 medical organizations recognize that abortion raises a woman's risk for breast cancer.

A pregnant teenager is in the most vulnerable time of her life; and in the most vulnerable situation she'll likely ever face in her entire lifetime. She's fearful, and uncertain, and in a fragile state of mind. There is no other time that she needs her parents more. To remove her parents involvement from the most life-changing decision she'll ever make, is beyond understanding. Parents, overwhelmingly, give loving guidance and solid advise to their children, especially in crisis situations.

And for the Courts, Planned Parenthood and others involved in the abortion industry, to believe that an underage child can bear the full burden of an abortion decision, and weight of guilt from that decision, along with life long damages incurred from the abortion, is simply outrageous and completely irresponsible. The Courts are designed to protect the people, not to contribute to their destruction.

It is the business of legislators to enact laws that will protect the citizens. And I applaud those of you legislators who are supporting this bill. It is good legislation and on behalf of myself and the tens of thousands of pro-life members of Alaska Right to Life, ask that the bill move forward. Thank you for hearing us.

Karen L. Lewis

From: Jackie Cason
Date: Friday, March 13, 2009

Dear Representative Holmes,

Though I gave oral public testimony on HB35 on Wed. 3/11/09, many legislators had already left the room. I am writing as well so that my story might inform the judiciary committee's decisions on this important legislation, and I hope you'll hear me out. The saddest part of my story is that it is an ordinary one. I am a survivor of child sexual abuse, and my story is the story of 1 in 5 young girls/women. I hope you will listen to it as a representative anecdote for many young women who experience similar abuse. (http://www.sciencefriday.com/pages/2005/May/hour1_051305.html. I will attach a recent article that suggests 20% of females are sexually abused.)

I grew up in a very ordinary family. My dad was the blue-collar breadwinner, and my mom remained at home all the way up passed my high school years. They were loving and attentive, interested in my life, not perfect, but I always knew they loved me. In spite of that, I was molested for 4-5 years, starting when I was 11 and had been menstruating for less than a year, so I was only recently passed from being a girl into a woman.

You might ask yourself, why didn't my parents or my family know? How do these things happen in ordinary families? Do all cases of abuse happen in families like the Pilgrims? My sister was working nights, doing piecework for Bell Helmets, putting fiberglass on motorcycle helmets. It was hard and dirty work. My parents were buying new property and developing it with five houses, still trying to run a business as usual. Everyone was occupied, and I was going to my sister's in the afternoon to help babysit her kids and get dinner started, before their dad came home from work. As a preteen, I was filling in the gap between the day shift and the swing shift as so many families do. You can imagine the rest, and it went on for years at different times. I was very shy, lacked some self-esteem, and felt physically incapable of sharing the secret.

How DO these things happen? You should realize that sexual predators are intelligent. They can spot weak and vulnerable victims for their purposes. They can gain access because they are trusted members of families. (He worked for my dad and was around frequently). Predators seek shy, less secure young people and then give them positive attention and flatter them frequently. These predators may groom their prey for months or years and will take advantage of a girl's natural self-consciousness about her emerging sexuality and will lead her to believe that her family would reject her if she told the secret. And victims sometimes believe and fear rejection. But mostly, it would be the feelings of shame that silence victims. This kind of story happens all the time, in unlikely places, to twenty-percent of the children, primarily females.

On the lucky side, at least I didn't get pregnant because the predator had already had a vasectomy. But pregnancy could happen to someone else in this all too ordinary scenario.

Had I gotten pregnant, could I have told my parents? I don't think so. You know, I've often played out alternative "what-if" scenarios, and I've asked what would have happened if I'd told. On the one hand, it might have saved my sister from many more years of domestic violence, which escalated after my dad died. I wonder if my dad would have killed him, literally. My dad was a hunter and had ready access to guns and the ability to use them decisively. Who wouldn't understand the passion that could drive a father to murder the man who was psychologically abusing one daughter and molesting a younger one? You might even want to acquit him of his revenge, but he wouldn't have been acquitted.

I couldn't tell my sister because her husband was the one molesting me. I couldn't tell my brothers because, I don't know, we just didn't talk about stuff like that. I might have gone to my middle sister who was 5 years older, but she was going through her own growing pains. Planned Parenthood or an organization like that might have been my only option.

Even now, I am uncomfortable talking or writing about this.

I come before you today healed, but not completely whole. The damage done to my spirit is permanent. But still, I am well enough to pursue happiness and a fulfilling life. I selected a mate who is generous and kind, I've been married 23 years, and I'm most proud of my three sons. Most importantly, I speak openly with them about human sexuality. They have attended the Our Whole Lives program, and we try to be sure the conversation stays open.

However, if I had borne a child from that horrific episode in my life, I would have been reminded of those many days and nights every time I looked that child in the eye. It would have harmed me further to force me to tell my parents, because I could not have brought myself to tell them. I would have waited, until I was past the first trimester. I would have delayed acting until it was too late. Though I'd like abortion to be rare, I think it should happen as early as possible in a situation like this. I might even have committed suicide. Though I can't be certain what I would have done, I can tell you that I discovered my cervix when I was 13. I didn't know what it was, and in my ignorance I imagined it to be a cancerous tumor that would certainly kill me by the time I was 18. The sad part is that I saw the justice in that. I thought that I deserved to die.

What would have changed my experience? Not HB35, because I never got pregnant. What might have enabled me to confide in my parents, who would have protected me from further assault? They might have reached me, and I might have reached out to them if they had begun a conversation about sexuality much earlier in life, a conversation free of shame and embarrassment. I would have known not only that what was happening was wrong but that I had recourse. I might have gone running into their arms, and they would never have considered rejecting me. I know that now. I didn't know that then. But I might also have seen my father spend his latter days in prison, at least a 50-50 chance I'm sure. My mom MIGHT have been able to stop him, but he could be violently tempered at times, and this would have been one of them.

If the state is going to compel a conversation in the event of a crisis pregnancy, then the state should go all the way and compel a lifelong conversation about healthy sexuality, age appropriate of course. Insist that parents accompany their minor children to human sexuality night at the community council or the local school. Force them to communicate, but don't lead them to believe that they can get away with near-silence on the topic and then rely on the state to force a conversation after it's too late. That might have saved me, and it might save young girls from being like me. It might empower them to embrace their sexuality as part of who they are, not feel shame, and allow them to grow comfortable talking about their bodies and the physiological changes that occur naturally through life. Who knows, they might even grow up to become healthy senior citizens who enjoy a sex life without shame. We're never too old to learn.

I know you are likely to vote against this legislation, but because you are my representative and on the judiciary committee, I wanted to write to your directly to ask you to emphasize my testimony, even though many had already left the room when I told my story.

Thank you for listening.

Subject: HB 35

Dear Jane,

As discussed on the phone yesterday, Friday 13, 2009, I'm emailing you to "officially" let Rep. Ramras and the rest of the House Judiciary Committee know that my husband, Raymond Rzeszut, and I are very much in favor of the legislature passing HB 35. As a mother and a grandmother I feel strongly that parents should be involved in all aspects of their children's lives. It is time for parents to stop trying to be their children's "friends" and start being parents. Parental wisdom and experience should be evident to all and affect the decisions they make.

Parental consent should be required for any medical procedure--I'm amazed that in this litigous society any procedure can be done without consent.

Have times changed so much that you don't even need a permission slip for your child to go on a field trip at school?

Please pass on this information to Representative Ramras, other members of the House Judiciary Committee, and our Representative, the Honorable Mike Hawker.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter. Please keep us informed about the progress of this bill.

Respectfully yours, Jeanne E. Rzeszut and Raymond A. Rzeszut, House District 32.

Arguments against HB 35

Economic consequences for minors:

- The economic effects of childbirth can be particularly severe when a teen drops out of high school and attempts to support herself and a child.
- Employment opportunities for teens and young adults are limited and typically low-wage jobs which often do not include any benefits such as health care (higher unemployment for teenagers)
- To have to care for a child at a young age saddles the teen with responsibilities that limit opportunities for education and limits a person's contribution to society

Health consequences for minors can also be harsh

- Maternal mortality and non-fatal complications from premature births and low weight babies are higher with women under 20 than with adult women
- Access to health care, including abortion is vital for pregnant minor women and being free of parental interference can be just as vital
- Parental notification may make girls vulnerable to physical and emotional violence
- Parental notification laws often frighten teenagers away from medical care, delaying counseling and abortion until later in pregnancy
    - This increases second and third term abortions obtained by teens. First term abortions are the safest
    - Increases the likelihood of illegal of teens seeking an abortion outside the health care system.
- Most professional medical societies, including the AMA - American Medical Association oppose parental notification laws

ALASKA PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Committed To Advancing Alaska's Public Health Since 1978

March 9, 2009

Jay Ramras, Representative
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol, Room Juneau , AK 99801

Dear Representative Ramras:

I am writing to express the Alaska Public Health Association (ALPHA) opposition to HB 35, NOTICE & CONSENT FOR MINOR'S ABORTION. The primary mission of the ALPHA is the enhancement of the public's health. In fulfilling that mission we oppose any efforts to limit women's access to safe abortion services.

Since 1973, the US Supreme Court's landmark Roe v. Wade decision has ensured that all women, throughout the US, have the right to abortion by allowing elective abortions before viability, or afterwards in order to preserve the health of the woman. ALPHA acknowledges that in the ideal, families provide a nurturing environment of open communication and support for its children. In the event of a teen pregnancy, many families are able to come together to assist a pregnant teen in making the difficult decisions of what is best for that situation, as well as obtain the necessary medical services. This, however, is not the case for too many of Alaskan teens. Too many families are impacted by substance and alcohol abuse, interpersonal violence and incest, making it unrealistic for the young woman to get parental consent. To require a judge's order for a woman who is pregnant, unmarried, under 17 years of age and unemancipated to have an abortion can and will result in delays in teens talking to anyone about a pregnancy and a delay in seeking medical services. Teens in troubled families are at greatest risk.

On behalf of the Alaska Public Health Association and Alaska's children, I strongly urge your opposition of SB35.

Sincerely,

Jayne E. Andreen, President
Alaska Public Health Association

Subject: House Bill 35

Dear Representative Ramras,

Please oppose House Bill 35 requiring notice and consent for a minor's abortion. House Bill 35/Senate Bill 6 has been reintroduced in direct response to a ruling, in 2007, by the Alaska State Supreme Court which ruled Alaska's parental Consent Act, passed in 1997, unconstitutional.

Teen pregnancy happens. In most situations the young women, when faced with the pregnancy receives support from a caring partner and parents committed to the wellbeing of their child, the unborn child and the child's partner. Together they determine the best course to be taken. There are however young women who truly cannot count on the support of their families or partner to help in a crisis pregnancy. Having mustered the courage to seek medical care and having learned of her choices, she should not be required to then seek her parent's consent or that of the courts to determine the course of her pregnancy. This is a decision that impacts the course of her life and ultimately, she alone should make that decision. Requiring parental or court consent for the teen seeking an abortion places undue barriers to her resolving her situation as quickly as possible.

Please vote no on House Bill 35.

Thank you.

Dear Representative Ramras,

Alaskan parents and families are relying on you this session to vote "NO" on House Bill 35 (Parental Consent and Notification).

As an Alaskan resident and voter, I think it is important that you know the facts about HB 35.

In Alaska, the majority of teens are talking to their parents and involving them in their lives, and life-changing decisions, like whether or not to have a baby.

Unfortunately, not all parents and families have good communication, and it is those few situations, and with those few teens where HB 35 will have a detrimental impact to the health and safety of Alaska's teens.

In a home where communication is not possible, desperate Alaskan teens will take desperate measures. Instead of navigating a crowded courthouse or face a judge in rural Alaska that she may be related to, I am worried that our Alaskan daughters will delay speaking to anyone about a pregnancy, will delay seeking medical services, resort to an unsafe or back alley abortion, or even contemplate suicide.

Our daughters don't need HB 35-they need counseling and quality medical care without delay.

Teens in troubled families, and in rural Alaska, where health care access is already an issue, are truly at risk. Politicizing the abortion debate at the expense of the health and safety of Alaska's teens is not good policy.

Vote "NO" on House Bill 35. Please help keep our teens safe.

Dear Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

I am writing to you today to encourage you to vote NO on House Bill 35 - Parental Consent and Notification. I feel strongly that if passed this would be a dangerous piece of legislation that would result in serious harm and possibly death to some of Alaska's young women. I can understand the idea that a parent would want to know if their daughter was planning to undergo a medical procedure. I can understand that a parent may feel the as a mom or dad they would have a right to know that information. I feel that for most Alaskan families parents do know when their children are sexually active, that they know when their daughters become unexpectedly pregnant, and that they know when their daughters decide not to continue a pregnancy because they have fostered open and honest communication with their daughter throughout her entire life. I sincerely believe that what this bill is trying to do is something that already happens in many Alaskan homes. I also feel that in the homes where this isn't the case it is for a good reason. Sadly, not all Alaskan young women have a home environment that is safe, loving, and supportive.
I work as a high school counselor and I see that too often, because it shouldn't happen at all. But, the reality is that there are young women in our state who when they find themselves unexpectedly pregnant do not feel that it is safe to tell their parents. And there are some who feel that sharing with their parents that they do not wish to continue the pregnancy could be a life threatening conversation. Even though this is a minority of Alaskan girls, these girls still should be entitled to safe and affordable medical care, even if that care includes an abortion. These young women are entitled to the same protections under the law and the same rights to reproductive privacy. I understand that HB 35 provides a means for a young woman to still access an abortion through court consent, but that is just a road block that keeps young women from being able to get the medical care they need and desire. Our teens generally don't have the cognitive or emotional tools needed to navigate their way through court proceedings, it is not reasonable to assume that this is access, it is not. This legislation would lead young women to find other means of ending a pregnancy, and that would be much more dangerous.

What really needs to happen in Alaska is we need to have statewide support for comprehensive, medically accurate, age appropriate sex education in our public schools. If we had that then perhaps we wouldn't find ourselves in a situation where teenagers are needing abortion services. We wouldn't have the high number of teen pregnancies that we have each year. We wouldn't have the high rate of sexually transmitted infections (1 in 4 Alaskan teens) that currently exists in our state. In this area we in the United States are truly a joke among the industrialized nations of the world. I think changing this image starting here in Alaska would be the best legacy our legislature could offer.

Thank you for your time. I urge you to vote NO on House Bill 35.

Sincerely,
Margaret Gadsden

Dear Representative Ramras,

I am a 31 year old, working mother and registered voter in South Anchorage. I was born and raised in Alaska and have spent the majority of my adult life living here in this great state. I am writing to you today to express my opposition to House Bill no. 35.

I became pregnant with my now 11-year-old son at the age of 19, a few years older than the teens that will be impacted by this bill, but because of my personal experience I empathize with the young Alaskan women who will be affected if this bill passes. An unintended pregnancy at a young age can be a confusing and scary experience for any young person. In my case, I had a loving, caring, accepting family that helped me through a difficult time and helped me to make the right choice for my personal experience. But my story is not typical of all teenage pregnancies. I grew up with friends here in Alaska who had abusive relationships with their parents, some of which would have been homeless if their parents had been informed of an unintended pregnancy. Thank goodness that at that time those women were able to get the help they needed from others outside of their family unit and had access to safe, accessible, and legal reproductive health services.

The truth of the matter is, that here in Alaska, we have high rates of child abuse and we have teens that do not feel safe or secure in talking to their parents or guardians about unintended pregnancies. As a parent, of course, I would want my son to talk to me about any and every difficult situation that comes his way, but the truth of the matter is, no matter how close we are and how understanding and open minded that I try to be, he may not want to talk to me about the issues in his life. My greatest fear would then be that he could not get access to the services that he needed, due to his fear of talking about those issues with me. Though I love him more than anything in this world and I want to be apart of all aspects of his life I know that there will come a day when he does not want to share all those aspects with me.

My concern with HB 35 is this; if a young woman must seek parental consent to receive a safe and legal abortion in Alaska, and feels that she cannot talk to her family about her pregnancy, for whatever reason, that she will then seek out an abortion in an illegal and unsafe way. I do not believe that a law can mandate family communication and the reality of the situation is that not all Alaskan families have open and positive lines of communication. For these reasons I oppose House Bill 35.

Thank you for your time and I appreciate all the positive work you do for Alaskans.

Sincerely,
Amy Devereux

Subject: I Oppose State House Bill 35

Thank you for your time. I was fortunate to testify on the phone Monday and appreciate the opportunity to do so. While waiting to speak I listened to those who spoke before me and heard alot of important input from people who are also againest this bill.

I oppose House Bill 35. You can not force children to talk to thier parents. I mentioned the case of Becky Bell in Indiana, she died from complications from a back alley abortion because she did not want her parents to know she got pregnant, she did not want to disappoint them. She was close to her parents, they were supportive and loved her, she died. This bill doesn't only hurt girls in situations of, incest and abuse it hurts all of them.

If a girl is going to talk to her parents about an unwanted pregnancy it isnt going to be because of a law.

This bill is not to determine the legality of abortion in the state of Alaska, it is legal. I feel some of the legislators seemed determined to discuss that issue and even tried to sway those giving testimony to their way of thinking.

I also found it very disrespectful when a Representative emplied that Doctors like Dr. Whitefield, who are advocates of quality womens health care, who offer women options and excellent medical services be questioned about thier financial motives. Dr. Whitefield delivered my daughter under challenging circumstances and was a very caring profesional who did a wonderful job bringing her safely into the world.

I think you need to keep your discussion to the direct implications of this bill and not try to bring in to it your beliefs about the rights or wrongs of abortion. That is not the discussion.
Again thank you for your time and please vote againest HB 35.

Re: Opposition to House Bill 35.

I am writing to you to express my opposition to House Bill 35. I am the mother of a 14 year old girl. Although I communicate with her about sex and the consequences of unprotected sex, I also know that she is a teenager. I would hope that she would communicate with us if she became pregnant, but a frightened teenager may not communicate if they think that mom and dad might be angry. Even though she knows she can talk to us, we cannot force her to. There are many teens who cannot talk to their parents so do not even have that choice. I want my daughter to know that she has choices. I also do not want any young girl to be forced to navigate the legal system – nor do I want any teen to feel they have no choice but to try to get a back alley abortion. Kids health needs must come first. No legislation can force kids to communicate with their parents or parents to communicate with their kids. House Bill 35, by requiring a minor to obtain parental consent for an abortion, will result in unnecessary health risks to teenage girls.

Thank you,

Janet Daley

Dear person in position of responsibility and power subjected to higher moral calling,

Alaskan parents and families are relying on you this session to vote "NO" on House Bill 35 (Parental Consent and Notification).

As a female Alaskan resident and voter, I believe it is your duty on a personal level, and a professional level to hear my concerns and act upon them. For this reason, I have taken time out of my intensely homework laden collegiate existence to compose this letter to you. Please do not simply ignore it, since you know as well as I do that your duty is to your constituents, which I am one of. Thus I am here to share my concerns and voice my disapproval of HB 35.

In Alaska, for the most part, teens and parents have decent communication. However, there are also a great deal of broken families held together only by the necessity for financial codependence. Unfortunately it is in these families that the parents are often so focused on themselves that the children are left by the wayside as the "adults" attempt to battle out their differences and become increasingly embittered. It is in these types of situations that kids are often NOT given the proper sexual education, NOT offered birth control, and NOT given the understanding that would allow a woman to make the right decision-- a decision NOT made to appease parents or save face for the family.

Parents tend to NOT see the desperation in these situations of unwanted pregnancy, and often the child is brought into the world to a mother who feels as though she was robbed of an adolescence and grandparents who seem to think they can raise a girl to be a mother in 9 short months, while they failed to raise her to be a responsible young adult in 16 years. You do see the problem...

In a home where communication is not possible, desperate Alaskan teens will take desperate measures. Instead of navigating a crowded courthouse and running the gauntlet of public humiliation, not to mention the scorns of radical Christian fundamentalists or face a judge in rural Alaska that she may be related to, I am worried that our Alaskan daughters will delay speaking to anyone about a pregnancy, will delay seeking medical services, resort to an unsafe or b ack alley abortion, or even contemplate suicide.

Us daughters don't need HB 35. We need proper sex education, free no-questions asked quality birth control, counseling and quality medical care without delay.

I feel that this issue runs a little too close to the hearts of some of our lawmakers, and they will not be making decisions for the public as much as they will be making decisions because they selfishly cannot imagine being unable to dictate their daughters' next 20 years. I feel that family issues--personal issues--should be left out of state law. While I am not elected to exercise discernment and power, YOU are and it is YOUR duty to do what is right in an objective perspective, and that is to allow women as much freedom as possible in their decisions.

Teens in troubled families, and in rural Alaska, where health care access is already an issue, are truly at risk. Politicizing the abortion debate at the expense of the health and safety of Alaska's teens is not good policy.

Subject: Opposition testimony re: HB35

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to testify in strong opposition to House Bill 35. This idealistic bill infringes on a young woman's fundamental right to reproductive freedom and opens the door for potentially dangerous practices and abuse.

As a former employee of Planned Parenthood of Alaska, I saw women of a range of reproductive ages seeking safe, legal abortion services, under a range of challenging circumstances. In most cases, teens under 16 years of age willingly notified their parents of their situation, even without a law mandating such communication. These teens were lucky enough to have parents they could trust, even in a difficult situation, who were not as risk of abuse as a result of their situation. Those who did not notify their parents of their situation had reasons for not doing so. Society has an obligation to protect the few teens who are unable to confide in their parents about their pregnancy, due to a two-way lack of communication, or potential abuse from their family members. While this bill may intend to protect teens, mandatory notification and consent laws could result in teens delaying or failing to receive medical services, or in the case of teens in troubled families, additional risk of abuse.

In addition, in states where parental consent laws have been enacted, the numbers of late term abortions (which are more expensive and pose greater physical risks to the woman) obtained by teens have increased. In Alaska, where late term abortions are not legal, this delay in seeking medical care would result in increased cost and travel to obtain legal abortions out of state, or else would result in teens attempting to remedy the situation through self-induced, potentially dangerous means.

Laws cannot mandate good family relationships and open communication between parents and teens. I strongly urge the House Judiciary Committee to oppose HB35.

Thank you, Kathleen West

Committee on HB 35, dated 3-11-09
Bill/Subject

So, what is HB35 all about?

HB35 is about undermining the legal foundations of Roe v. Wade. HB35 is one of a group of bills that are annually introduced in legislatures around the country and in Alaska. These bills seek to establish a legal precedent where a mother does not have the right to choose abortion or to establish the rights of personhood for a fetus. Once established, those laws could influence future judicial decisions on abortion.

HB35 is about religious belief. The Liberty Legal Institute (LLI) promotes and defends parental consent laws. It is associated with evangelical leader James Dobson's Focus on the Family, which lists its guiding principles as promotion of conservative Christian values. Those include the well-known doctrine that men will protect women and women will submit graciously in return. HB35 suggests that fathers will fairly protect their daughters' interests. But the cruel reality is that many Alaskan women and girls can't count on it. Consider these facts:

- The Dept. of Justice reports over 85% of domestic violence victims are women.

And the state of Alaska website states:
- "Alaska ranks among the top 5 states in the nation for per capita rates of domestic violence."
- "If the mother is not safe, neither are the children."
- "Alaska has 6 times the national average of reported child sexual assault."

When I think of parental consent laws, I think about the 17-year-old Valley high school student a few years back who chose suicide as the solution for her secret pregnancy. When others think about HB35 they tell me two words come to mind: Papa Pilgrim.

This anti-abortion bill places an undue burden on our girls and I oppose it.

2. violates the rights of the teenage girl.
3. makes teenage abortion less likely when abortion can make a positive effect on the girl's future life.
4. Increases the likelihood of another child living in poverty with less chance of a good life.
5. That it impedes reproductive freedom which is as important as freedom of speech.

Subject: House Bill 35 Testimony

Hello,

My name is Kiatcha Benson. I'm writing to oppose House Bill 35. I believe we should keep teens safe and healthy. If this legislation is passed it may deter some teens from seeking a medical abortion and they may take other means to remove the fetus. Especially in cases where there is abuse occurring in the family. Ultimately it is the choice of the individual over their own body.

We should respect another human beings ability to make their own decisions. You can not force communication between a child and their parent via legislation. Further more children are not owned by their parents but are merely on loan to us and we as parents should be there to guide and provide for them not control them.

Thanks, Kiatcha Benson

PARENTAL RIGHTS and RESPONSIBILITIES

What legal responsibilities do I have as a parent? A parent has two major responsibilities. They are:

1. to support your child by providing him or her with the necessities of life; and
2. to supervise and control your child.

What are the necessities of life? The necessities of life are more than just food, shelter, and clothing. They also include medical care, a safe and nurturing environment, an education, and legal help when required. NOTE: failure to provide the necessities of life for your child can be considered neglect.

How long does my duty to support my child last? The duty to support your child lasts until he or she reaches the age of majority, which is 18. There are some exceptions to this rule, they vary from state to state. They vary by such things as marriage of the child, and termination of parental rights.

I never married my child's other parent and my child does not live with me. Do I still have to support my child? Yes. The duty to provide support for your child is not affected by the marriage or absence of marriage between parents

What if I can afford to support my child, yet I don't? If the state is forced to support a child, the state is entitled to reimbursement from parents who are capable, but have refused, to provide for such support.

Does my duty to supervise and control my child mean that I, as a parent, will be held liable for any harm/damage caused by my child? Generally, parents are not held liable for the harm caused by their children. However, there are exceptions to this rule. For example, if you (a parent) knew or should have known of your child's propensities for engaging in improper behavior, or have aided or encouraged such behavior, you can be liable for harm/damage caused by your child. Additionally, there are specific statutes which make parents liable for the harm caused by their children under particular circumstances. Each state in the US has differing statutes. You can get information from your local library, or online at the state of Alaska website. (This is not meant to constitute legal advice, but is a brief overview of parental rights and responsibilities.)

PARENTAL RIGHTS and RESPONSIBILITIES

Do I have any rights as a parent? Yes, 4, listed below

1. The right to custody and control of your child. This means that as a parent you can make important decisions about your child's life. That a parent can decide where your child will live, with whom he or she will live, what he or she will do from day to day, what school he or she will attend, when he or she needs medical care, and what, if any, religion he or she will practice. (NOTE: The court maintains the right to stop you making decisions that would adversely affect the rights or welfare of the child.)

2. The right to cooperation and obedience from your child entitles you to just that: cooperation and obedience. This right translates into the right to discipline your child in a non-abusive and non-neglectful manner. NOTE: Your child does not have to obey you if you have ordered him or her to do something that is dangerous or illegal. In fact, if you have encouraged your child to commit dangerous or illegal acts you may be charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor, child abuse, or neglect.

3. The right to your child's earnings means that you as a parent can legally collect and keep the money that your child earns. However, there are limitations on this right. Your child's earnings will not be entirely available if you have exploited, neglected, or abandoned your child; if your child's income is the result of his or her special talent or athletic ability; or if your child's income is the result of a gift or inheritance. Furthermore, most parents allow their children to keep the money that they have earned.

4. The right to sue if someone wrongfully injures or kills your child enables you to recover costs such as medical and funeral expenses, as well as lost earnings, lost companionship, and pain and suffering in the event of your child's death or injury.

Do my rights as a parent ever cease?

Yes. When your child reaches the age of majority they do. (that is, 18). In addition, your rights and authority as a parent can be suspended or terminated in any of the following situations: the court appoints a guardian of the person over your child; your child gets married; the court suspends or terminates your parental rights due to abuse or abandonment; your child is made a ward of the juvenile court; has been emancipated by the court; or enlists in the military.

The Science of Child Sexual Abuse

Jennifer J. Freyd,[1]* Frank W. Putnam,[2] Thomas D. Lyon,[3] Kathryn A. Becker-Blease,[4] Ross E. Cheit,[5] Nancy B. Siegel,[6] Kathy Pezdek[7]

Child sexual abuse (CSA) involving sexual contact between an adult (usually male) and a child has been reported by 20% of women and 5 to 10% of men worldwide (1–3). Surveys likely underestimate prevalence because of underreporting and memory failure (4–6). Although official reports have declined somewhat in the United States over the past decade (7), close to 90% of sexual abuse cases are never reported to the authorities (8).

CSA is associated with serious mental and physical health problems, substance abuse, victimization, and criminality in adulthood (9–12). Mental health problems include posttraumatic stress disorder, depression, and suicide (13, 14). CSA may interfere with attachment, emotional regulation, and major stress response systems (15). CSA has been used as a weapon of war and genocide and is associated with abduction and human trafficking (2).

Much of the research on CSA has been plagued by nonrepresentative sampling, deficient controls, and limited statistical power (16). Moreover, CSA is associated with other forms of victimization (17), which complicates causal analysis of its role in adult functioning. However, associations in larger scale community and well-patient samples have been confirmed after controlling for family dysfunction and other risk factors (18, 19), in longitudinal investigations that measure pre- and post-CSA functioning (20), and in twin studies that control for environmental and genetic factors (12, 21).

Most CSA is committed by family members and individuals close to the child (1), which increases the likelihood of delayed disclosure (22), unsupportive reactions by caregivers and lack of intervention (8, 23), and possible memory failure [(24, 25), compare (26)]. These factors all undermine the credibility of abuse reports, yet there is evidence that when adults recall abuse, memory veracity is not correlated with memory persistence (27, 28). Research on child witness reliability has focused on highly publicized allegations of abuse by preschool operators and has emphasized false allegations rather than false denials (29, 30). Cognitive and neurological mechanisms that may underlie the forgetting of abuse have been identified (31–33).

Scientific research on CSA is distributed across numerous disciplines, which results in fragmented knowledge that is often infused with unstated value judgments. Consequently, policy-makers have difficulty using available scientific knowledge, and gaps in the knowledge base are not well articulated. We recommend interdisciplinary research initiatives and a series of international consensus panels on scientific and clinical practice issues related to CSA. This can promote (i) increased inclusion of CSA education in the curriculum in medical and mental health fields; (ii) improved education of the public, the media, and professionals who work with alleged CSA victims; (iii) greater visibility and improved dissemination of CSA research; (iv) increased focus on CSA by researchers in a range of disciplines; and (v) improved cost-benefit analyses of intervention, including prevention efforts.

We call on researchers from social science, medical, and criminal justice fields to gather better information on the prevalence (34), causes, consequences, prevention, and treatment of CSA. A 1996 report from the Department of Justice (35) estimated rape and sexual abuse of children to cost $1.5 billion in medical expenses and $23 billion total annually to U.S. victims. Whereas $2 is spent on research for every $100 in cost for cancer, only $0.05 is spent for every $100 dollars in cost for child maltreatment (36). The National Child Traumatic Stress Network is a federally funded network of 54 sites providing community-based treatment to children and their families exposed to a wide range of trauma. The network should be expanded to address the enormous public health consequences of child trauma, and supported to develop new forms of treatment. Even creation of a new Institute of Child Abuse and Interpersonal Violence within the NIH would be justified on the basis of the emotional and economic cost of these problems.

ACOG Statement of Policy

As issued by the ACOG Executive Board

ABORTION POLICY

The following statement is the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists' (ACOG) general policy related to abortion, with specific reference to the procedure referred to as "intact dilatation and extraction" (intact D & X).

1. The abortion debate in this country is marked by serious moral pluralism. Different positions in the debate represent different but important values. The diversity of beliefs should be respected.
2. ACOG recognizes that the issue of support of or opposition to abortion is a matter of profound moral conviction to its members. ACOG, therefore, respects the need and responsibility of its members to determine their individual positions based on personal values or beliefs.
3. Termination of pregnancy before viability is a medical matter between the patient and physician, subject to the physician's clinical judgment, the patient's informed consent and the availability of appropriate facilities.
4. The need for abortions, other than those indicated by serious fetal anomalies or conditions which threaten maternal welfare, represents failures in the social environment and the educational system.

   The most effective way to reduce the number of abortions is to prevent unwanted and unintended pregnancies. This can be accomplished by open and honest education, beginning in the home, religious institutions and the primary schools. This education should stress the biology of reproduction and the responsibilities involved by boys, girls, men and women in creating life and the desirability of delaying pregnancies until circumstances are appropriate and pregnancies are planned.

   In addition, everyone should be made aware of the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases and the means of protecting each other from their transmission. To accomplish these aims, support of the community and the school system is essential.

   The medical curriculum should be expanded to include a focus on the components of reproductive biology which pertain to conception control. Physicians should be encouraged to apply these principles in their own practices and to support them at the community level.

   Society also has a responsibility to support research leading to improved methods of contraception for men and women.

5. Informed consent is an expression of respect for the patient as a person; it particularly respects a patient's moral right to bodily integrity, to self-determination regarding sexuality and reproductive capacities, and to the support of the patient's freedom within caring relationships.

A pregnant woman should be fully informed in a balanced manner about all options, including raising the child herself, placing the child for adoption, and abortion. The information conveyed should be appropriate to the duration of the pregnancy. The professional should make every effort to avoid introducing personal bias.

6. ACOG supports access to care for all individuals, irrespective of financial status, and supports the availability of all reproductive options. ACOG opposes unnecessary regulations that limit or delay access to care.
7. If abortion is to be performed, it should be performed safely and as early as possible.
8. ACOG opposes the harassment of abortion providers and patients.
9. ACOG strongly supports those activities which prevent unintended pregnancy.

The College continues to affirm the legal right of a woman to obtain an abortion prior to fetal viability. ACOG is opposed to abortion of the healthy fetus that has attained viability in a healthy woman. Viability is the capacity of the fetus to survive outside the mother's uterus. Whether or not this capacity exists is a medical determination, may vary with each pregnancy and is a matter for the judgment of the responsible attending physician.

Intact Dilatation and Extraction

The debate regarding legislation to prohibit a method of abortion, such as the legislation banning "partial birth abortion," and "brain sucking abortions," has prompted questions regarding these procedures. It is difficult to respond to these questions because the descriptions are vague and do not delineate a specific procedure recognized in the medical literature. Moreover, the definitions could be interpreted to include elements of many recognized abortion and operative obstetric techniques.

ACOG believes the intent of such legislative proposals is to prohibit a procedure referred to as "intact dilatation and extraction" (Intact D & X). This procedure has been described as containing all of the following four elements:

1. deliberate dilatation of the cervix, usually over a sequence of days;
2. instrumental conversion of the fetus to a footling breech;
3. breech extraction of the body excepting the head; and
4. partial evacuation of the intracranial contents of a living fetus to effect vaginal delivery of a dead but otherwise intact fetus.

Because these elements are part of established obstetric techniques, it must be emphasized that unless all four elements are present in sequence, the procedure is not an intact D & X. Abortion intends to terminate a pregnancy while preserving the life and health of the mother. When abortion is performed after 16 weeks, intact D & X is one method of terminating a pregnancy.

The physician, in consultation with the patient, must choose the most appropriate method based upon the patient's individual circumstances.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), only 5.3% of abortions performed in the United States in 1993, the most recent data available, were performed after the 16th week of pregnancy. A preliminary figure published by the CDC for 1994 is 5.6%. The CDC does not collect data on the specific method of abortion, so it is unknown how many of these were performed using intact D & X. Other data show that second trimester transvaginal instrumental abortion is a safe procedure.

Terminating a pregnancy is performed in some circumstances to save the life or preserve the health of the mother.

Intact D & X is one of the methods available in some of these situations. A select panel convened by ACOG could identify no circumstances under which this procedure, as defined above, would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman. An intact D & X, however, may be the best or most appropriate procedure in a particular circumstance to save the life or preserve the health of a woman, and only the doctor, in consultation with the patient, based upon the woman's particular circumstances can make this decision. The potential exists that legislation prohibiting specific medical practices, such as intact D & X, may outlaw techniques that are critical to the lives and health of American women. The intervention of legislative bodies into medical decision making is inappropriate, ill advised, and dangerous.

Evaluation and Management of Abnormal Cervical Cytology and Histology in the Adolescent

ABSTRACT: The management of abnormal cervical cytology in adolescents differs from that for the adult population in many cases. Certain characteristics of adolescents may warrant special management considerations. It is important to avoid aggressive management of benign lesions in adolescents because most cervical intraepithelial neoplasia grades 1 and 2 regress. Surgical excision or destruction of cervical tissue in a nulliparous adolescent may be detrimental to future fertility and cervical competency. Care should be given to minimize destruction of normal cervical tissue whenever possible. A compliant, health-conscious adolescent may be adequately served with observation in many situations.

Background

The past decade has seen a remarkable increase in the knowledge of the natural history of cervical dysplasia, the role of human papillomavirus (HPV) in cervical cancer, and the development of new technologies for cervical cancer screening, specifically HPV testing and liquid-based cytology. This new information prompted the American Cancer Society (ACS) to develop new guidelines pertaining to cervical cancer screening (1). Based on the natural history data and the rarity of cervical cancer in the population of women younger than 21 years, the ACS recommendations for initial Pap testing changed, and the new criteria have been endorsed by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) (2). Adolescents should undergo their first Pap test approximately 3 years after the onset of vaginal intercourse or no later than age 21 years. The decision about the initiation of cervical cytology screening in an adolescent patient should be based on the clinician's assessment of risks, including 1) age of first sexual activity, 2) behaviors that may place the adolescent patient at greater risk for HPV infection, and 3) risk of noncompliance with follow-up visits. Obtaining a complete and accurate sexual history, therefore, is critical (3).

The new information also prompted ACOG to develop new guidelines on the management of abnormal cervical cytology and histology (4). Some of these guidelines are unique for adolescents. The objectives of this Committee Opinion are to 1) highlight when the management of abnormal cervical cytology in adolescents differs from that for the adult population and 2) identify characteristics of adolescents that may warrant special considerations. It is important to avoid aggressive management of benign lesions in adolescents because most cervical intraepithelial neoplasia (CIN) grades 1 and 2 regress. Surgical excision or destruction of cervical tissue in a nulliparous adolescent may be detrimental to future fertility and cervical competency. Care should be given to minimize destruction of normal cervical tissue whenever possible. A compliant, health-conscious adolescent may be adequately served with observation in many situations.

Natural History of Human Papillomavirus

Most women infected with HPV are asymptomatic. The virus is detected by an abnormal Pap test result, HPV test result, or the presence of clinically evident genital warts, and most likely will resolve without treatment. In natural history studies of adolescents with newly acquired HPV infection, the average length of detectable HPV is 13 months. In most adolescent patients with an intact immune system, an HPV infection will resolve within 24 months (5). Further evidence that the HPV infection will resolve without treatment comes from the high rates of resolution of CIN 1 and CIN 2, 70% and 50% respectively (6–9).

Managing Abnormal Cervical Cytology in Adolescents

The new guidelines provided by ACOG address the therapy of cytologic and histologic abnormalities. These guidelines are based on best evidence when possible and expert opinion when limited data are available. For some but not all of the abnormalities, the guidelines have specific recommendations for care of the adolescent population that may differ from recommendations for adults and are summarized in Table 1. The following recommendations are unique to the adolescent population and address the clinical situations that can be managed by cytologic follow-up, HPV testing, colposcopy, or a combination of these approaches. A positive HPV test result refers to the presence of high-risk HPV DNA as determined by Hybrid Capture II. Testing for low-risk HPV types has no role in cervical cancer prevention.

Management Considerations

Atypical Squamous Cells of Undetermined Significance

Atypical squamous cells of undetermined significance (ASC-US) is a cytologic abnormality that in many cases identifies a woman harboring HPV infection. In the adolescent population, the prevalence of HPV in ASC-US will be higher than its prevalence in the older population. The risk of invasive cancer in adolescents approaches zero, and the likelihood of HPV clearance is very high. The preferred method of triage for patients with ASC-US who have undergone liquid-based cytologic screening is testing for high-risk HPV and, for those with a positive test result, triage to colposcopy. The ACOG guidelines address the high rate of HPV clearance by allowing less expensive alternative care than immediate colposcopy for adolescents with ASC-US and a positive high-risk HPV test result. Adolescents with atypical squamous cells and high-risk HPV-positive results may be monitored with cytology twice at 6-month intervals or a single high-risk HPV test at 12 months. If repeat cytology test results are abnormal, or there is evidence of persistent HPV, colposcopy should be performed. These alternatives are equally sensitive for the detection of CIN 2, CIN 3, or cervical cancer; avoid the expense of colposcopy and biopsy; and allow for the clearance of CIN and HPV (10). Immediate colposcopy is an acceptable alternative for the management of the adolescent who tests positive for ASC-US and HPV. Adolescents with ASC-US who have an HPV test result negative for high-risk HPV DNA should have a Pap test in 12 months.

Low-Grade Squamous Intraepithelial Lesions or Atypical Squamous Cells: Cannot Exclude High-Grade Squamous Intraepithelial Lesions

The Atypical Squamous Cells of Undetermined Significance/Low-Grade Squamous Intraepithelial Lesions Triage Study (ALTS) has demonstrated that the patients with the cytologic report of low-grade squamous intraepithelial lesions (LSIL) and ASC-US behave in a very similar manner with regard to the clearance of HPV and the risk for developing CIN 2, CIN 3, or cervical cancer. Because of the similarity in natural history of these two reports, the ACOG recommendations for treatment of LSIL are identical to those for ASC-US-positive HPV. Adolescents with an LSIL test result can be monitored by repeat cytology at 6-month intervals or by a high-risk HPV test in 12 months. These individuals should undergo colposcopy for any cytologic abnormality or the persistence of HPV infection at 1 year. Immediate colposcopy is an acceptable alternative for adolescents with LSIL Fig.1).

No studies specifically address atypical squamous cells: cannot rule out high-grade squamous intraepithelial lesions (ASC-H) in adolescents. Because of a lack of specific evidence and the higher rate of CIN 2, CIN 3, and cervical cancer in individuals with ASC-H, the adolescent with ASC-H should undergo immediate colposcopic evaluation.

High-Grade Squamous Intraepithelial Lesions

High-grade squamous intraepithelial lesions (HSIL) are a significant cytologic abnormality that requires colposcopic evaluation because of a much higher rate of histologically confirmed CIN 2, CIN 3, or cervical cancer. Colposcopy with endocervical assessment is the recommended treatment for adult and adolescent women with HSIL. In the adult population, ACOG guidelines include a "see and treat" alternative for individuals with HSIL using a loop electrosurgical excision procedure (LEEP). Although this is an acceptable alternative in the adult, it should be avoided in the adolescent population. A significant number of adolescents with HSIL will have CIN 2 on biopsy. Because of the high rate of resolution of CIN 2 in adolescents and the low rate of cervical cancer, adolescents with biopsy-confirmed CIN 2 with adequate colposcopy and normal histology test results on endocervical assessment may be monitored without intervention. The specific method of follow-up should be individualized by the health care professional. A reasonable approach to the follow-up could be either cytology or colposcopy at 4–6-month intervals.

Postcolposcopy Diagnosis of CIN 1 or Less in an Adolescent With HSIL Cytology

Because interobserver variability is most pronounced in younger women (11), the risk of invasive cancer is extremely low, and the likelihood of spontaneous resolution of CIN 1 or CIN 2 is high, follow-up with colposcopy and cytology at 4–6 months may be undertaken (12), as long as the colposcopy is adequate and the endocervical assessment is negative. Excision is an acceptable alternative to colposcopic follow-up, but it is known to increase the risk of cervical stenosis and preterm labor.

Atypical Glandular Cells

The Bethesda 2001 system for reporting cytologic abnormalities separates atypical glandular cells (AGC) into "not otherwise specified" (NOS) and "favor dysplasia." The cytology report further classifies the abnormalities based on the probable location of the cell of origin (endocervix, endometrium, or unknown). The prevalence of AGC cytology in the adolescent population is very low, and most of these abnormalities will arise from the squamous component of the cervix (13). Because of the rare nature of this diagnosis, a gynecologist with expertise in managing cervical dysplasia should manage cases of AGC cytology in the adolescent. The adolescent with AGC should undergo a colposcopy and endocervical sampling. Endometrial sampling would not be used in most adolescents unless they are morbidly obese, they have abnormal uterine bleeding or oligomenorrhea, or there is a suspicion of endometrial cancer.

Treatment of Dysplasia in Adolescents

Cervical Intraepithelial Neoplasia 1

Depending on the time from HPV exposure to evaluation, the adolescent who is infected may have a normal cervix, a mildly abnormal cervix, or biopsy-confirmed CIN 1. Assuming that CIN 2 or greater has been ruled out by colposcopy, prospective studies of an adult population demonstrate that the risk of CIN 2 or greater developing over a 2-year period is 10% (10). In the adolescent population, the rate of resolution of CIN 1 is extremely high (greater than 85%). Therefore, management without therapy is the preferred recommendation for CIN 1 (14). This approach not only reduces the cost of delivering care to the adolescent but also avoids some of the potential risks of therapy, such as an increased rate of cervical stenosis, premature rupture of membranes, and preterm labor (15). The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists specifically states, "Observation provides the best balance between risk and benefit and should be encouraged" (4). Cervical intraepithelial neoplasia 1 in adolescents should be monitored using a protocol of either repeat cytologic testing at 6 and 12 months or of HPV DNA testing at 12 months. Colposcopy should then be performed for any abnormal cytology results or for positive high-risk HPV DNA results.

For those few individuals who require therapy for CIN 1, a variety of options are available. Randomized prospective clinical trials have demonstrated that cryotherapy, laser therapy, and LEEP are equally effective interventions for the treatment of CIN 1 (16). When therapy is required, the type of intervention is based on the geometry of the cervical lesion as well as the clinical recommendations of the clinician who is caring for the patient. Care should be taken to remove the least amount of cervical tissue that is necessary to eradicate the lesion.

Cervical Intraepithelial Neoplasia 2

Cervical intraepithelial neoplasia 2 is a significant abnormality that has classically required therapy. A variety of studies, including the ALTS trial, have demonstrated that this lesion may have a significant rate of resolution (up to 40%) in adults. This rate of resolution is suspected to be higher in adolescents. Based on these data and expert opinion, CIN 2 can be managed in adolescents with either observation or ablative or excision therapy. The adolescent patient who is monitored without therapy should be an individual deemed to be reliable regarding follow-up and have a good understanding of the nature of the abnormality and its risks. Follow-up can be individualized, with colposcopy or cytology every 4–6 months being a very conservative approach.

Cervical Intraepithelial Neoplasia 3

Cervical intraepithelial neoplasia 3 is a significant cervical abnormality. Despite the fact that cervical cancer is very rare in the adolescent population, the natural history of CIN 3 in this population has not been examined. Therapy is recommended for all women with CIN 3. Randomized prospective clinical trials have demonstrated that cryotherapy, laser therapy, and LEEP are equally effective interventions for the treatment of CIN 3. In one of the largest follow-up studies of women having undergone outpatient ablative therapy of CIN, four cases of microinvasive cervical cancer and five cases of frankly invasive cancer were subsequently diagnosed among 3,783 women (17). Because of these considerations, some authors have recommended that excision be used for the management of biopsy-confirmed CIN 3, especially for large lesions that are at increased risk of having microinvasive or occult invasive carcinoma. The type of intervention is based on the geometry of the cervical lesion as well as the clinical recommendations of the health care provider.

Special Considerations for Colposcopy

Consent

The minor undergoing a colposcopic examination represents a unique situation in that the abnormal Pap test result frequently is obtained during confidential screening for sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) or during counseling for contraception. Both interactions frequently occur without the knowledge of a parent or guardian.

Minors undergoing a colposcopic examination might find it helpful to have parental involvement for the procedure. However, colposcopic examinations are considered evaluation for STDs, and minors generally are allowed to consent for diagnosis of STDs (18). For that reason, parental consent, although preferred, should not be required. If parental consent is not obtained, consent for the examination should be obtained from the minor and indicated in the medical record.

The issues regarding parental consent for biopsy or therapy for cervical dysplasia are more complicated. The need for consent depends on whether the biopsy or therapy is considered part of STD evaluation and treatment and on the specifics of state law. Even if the minor legally can consent, the law may not ensure confidentiality. Some states allow minors to consent for STD care but give the health care provider discretion to disclose information to parents, particularly if it is necessary to protect the minor's health (18).

Biopsy and therapy for cervical dysplasia are more invasive than a colposcopic examination and carry a higher risk of complication. They also are likely to generate a bill, which can compromise confidentiality. These issues need to be considered when determining whether parental consent should be obtained, even if it is not legally required, before providing biopsy or therapy for a minor. Medical care providers throughout the United States provide such care without parental consent under the umbrella of the treatment of STDs. Any health care provider who delivers such care should be fully informed of their state laws and established local standards of care.

Screening for Sexually Transmitted Diseases

The adolescent population represents an at-risk population for cervical infection, specifically chlamydia and gonorrhea. Little evidence exists to support the routine screening of the cervix for chlamydia and gonorrhea before performing a colposcopy. Screening for STDs should be based on the ACOG guidelines for screening adolescents who are sexually active (19, 20).

ACOG Statement of Policy

As issued by the ACOG Executive Board

STATEMENT ON PROVIDING EFFECTIVE CONTRACEPTION TO MINORS

The never-married, never-pregnant, sexually involved female has not yet been reached with effective contraception. The laws of some states indirectly prohibit this service for minors and thereby prevent the gynecologist from serving them or place the physician in legal jeopardy if he does so.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists believes that:

1. The unmarried female of any age whose sexual behavior exposes her to possible conception should have access to the most effective methods of contraception.

2. In order to accomplish this, the individual physician, whether working alone, in a group or in a clinic, should be free to exercise his best judgment in prescribing contraception and therefore, the legal barriers which restrict his freedom should be removed.

3. These restricting legal barriers should be removed even in the case of an unemancipated minor who refuses to involve her parents. A pregnancy should not be the price she has to pay for contraception. On the other hand, in counseling the patient, all possible efforts should be made to involve her parents.

4. The contraceptive services should be offered whenever possible in a broad spectrum counseling context which would include mental health and venereal disease.

5. Every effort should be made to include male partners in such services and counseling.

The Science of Child Sexual Abuse

Jennifer J. Freyd,[1]* Frank W. Putnam,[2] Thomas D. Lyon,[3] Kathryn A. Becker-Blease,[4] Ross E. Cheit,[5] Nancy B. Siegel,[6] Kathy Pezdek[7]

Child sexual abuse (CSA) involving sexual contact between an adult (usually male) and a child has been reported by 20% of women and 5 to 10% of men worldwide (1–3). Surveys likely underestimate prevalence because of underreporting and memory failure (4–6). Although official reports have declined somewhat in the United States over the past decade (7), close to 90% of sexual abuse cases are never reported to the authorities (8).

CSA is associated with serious mental and physical health problems, substance abuse, victimization, and criminality in adulthood (9–12). Mental health problems include posttraumatic stress disorder, depression, and suicide (13, 14). CSA may interfere with attachment, emotional regulation, and major stress response systems (15). CSA has been used as a weapon of war and genocide and is associated with abduction and human trafficking (2).

Much of the research on CSA has been plagued by nonrepresentative sampling, deficient controls, and limited statistical power (16). Moreover, CSA is associated with other forms of victimization (17), which complicates causal analysis of its role in adult functioning. However, associations in larger scale community and well-patient samples have been confirmed after controlling for family dysfunction and other risk factors (18, 19), in longitudinal investigations that measure pre- and post-CSA functioning (20), and in twin studies that control for environmental and genetic factors (12, 21).

Most CSA is committed by family members and individuals close to the child (1), which increases the likelihood of delayed disclosure (22), unsupportive reactions by caregivers and lack of intervention (8, 23), and possible memory failure [(24, 25), compare (26)]. These factors all undermine the credibility of abuse reports, yet there is evidence that when adults recall abuse, memory veracity is not correlated with memory persistence (27, 28). Research on child witness reliability has focused on highly publicized allegations of abuse by preschool operators and has emphasized false allegations rather than false denials (29, 30). Cognitive and neurological mechanisms that may underlie the forgetting of abuse have been identified (31–33).

Scientific research on CSA is distributed across numerous disciplines, which results in fragmented knowledge that is often infused with unstated value judgments. Consequently, policy-makers have difficulty using available scientific knowledge, and gaps in the knowledge base are not well articulated. We recommend interdisciplinary research initiatives and a series of international consensus panels on scientific and clinical practice issues related to CSA. This can promote (i) increased inclusion of CSA education in the curriculum in medical and mental health fields; (ii) improved education of the public, the media, and professionals who work with alleged CSA victims; (iii) greater visibility and improved dissemination of CSA research; (iv) increased focus on CSA by researchers in a range of disciplines; and (v) improved cost-benefit analyses of intervention, including prevention efforts.

We call on researchers from social science, medical, and criminal justice fields to gather better information on the prevalence (34), causes, consequences, prevention, and treatment of CSA. A 1996 report from the Department of Justice (35) estimated rape and sexual abuse of children to cost $1.5 billion in medical expenses and $23 billion total annually to U.S. victims. Whereas $2 is spent on research for every $100 in cost for cancer, only $0.05 is spent for every $100 dollars in cost for child maltreatment (36). The National Child Traumatic Stress Network is a federally funded network of 54 sites providing community-based treatment to children and their families exposed to a wide range of trauma. The network should be expanded to address the enormous public health consequences of child trauma, and supported to develop new forms of treatment. Even creation of a new Institute of Child Abuse and Interpersonal Violence within the NIH would be justified on the basis of the emotional and economic cost of these problems.

History of parental consent law in Alaska

Published: February 27th, 2009 03:38 AM
Last Modified: February 27th, 2009 03:44 AM

1997: Passed by Legislature, became law over veto by then-Gov. Tony Knowles. Challenged immediately. Never went into effect. What it did: Required girls younger than 17 to get a parent's or judge's permission before obtaining an abortion.

1997: Appealed by ACLU, Planned Parenthood and local doctors.

1998: Superior Court Judge Sen Tan rules the law unconstitutional. The state appeals.

2001: Alaska Supreme Court orders Judge Tan to hear testimony and decide if the law furthers "a compelling state interest" using the "least restrictive means" available. This is a standard balancing test used to decide if something is important enough to the state that it should be allowed even if it might infringe on a citizen's rights.

2003: Superior Court trial held as ordered.

2003: Judge Tan rules the law does not meet the compelling state interest-least restrictive means test. He ruled it unconstitutional under the equal protection and privacy clauses of the Alaska Constitution.

2004: The state appealed Tan's ruling to the Alaska Supreme Court.

2005: Oral argument before the Supreme Court

2007: In a 3-2 vote, the Supreme Court rules the law unconstitutional on privacy grounds.

Changes in Alaska Supreme Court:

The votes to overturn the parental consent law in 2007 were cast by Justices Dana Fabe, Alex Bryner and Robert Eastaugh.

Justices Walter Carpeneti and Warren Matthews voted to uphold it.

The current make-up of the court: Fabe and Eastaugh remain on the bench.

Bryner has been replaced by Palin appointee Daniel Winfree.

Carpeneti remains on the bench. Matthews will soon be replaced by an upcoming Palin appointment.

Bill would require minors to get parental consent to use tanning beds

by Michelle Saxton
Daily Mail Capitol Reporter

CHARLESTON, W.Va. – Teenagers wanting a bronze, sun-kissed look in a pinch may have to get written consent from their parents before heading to the tanning salon under a bill pending with West Virginia lawmakers.

Senate Bill 488 would require parents or legal guardians to sign a statement granting permission for children under 18 who want to use a tanning facility. In cases where a child was under 14, parents or guardians would have to accompany them.

"There is so much skin cancer, and we know that tanning beds contribute," said Sen. Ron Stollings, a physician. "It's an add-on over years."

Stollings, D-Boone, introduced the bill last week. It is pending in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"From a business standpoint we don't want to close anybody down," said Stollings, whose district also includes Logan, Lincoln and part of Wayne counties. "We just want to make people aware of the risks.

"People are still going to go to the tanning bed, but at least we're trying to raise awareness that it's not a benign process," he said. "It's not like we don't know it's an issue or not - the studies are there. The more UV radiation you get, the more increased risk for skin cancer."

Signed consent forms would be valid for one calendar year and would state that "the parent or legal guardian has read and understood the warnings given by the tanning facility, and that they consent to the minor's use of the tanning device and agree that the minor will use protective eyewear," the bill says.

"It's a wonderful step in the right direction," said Erin Mulvey, communications director for the Skin Cancer Foundation in New York. The foundation ultimately hopes tanning salons will be illegal for minors, she said, and it is working to encourage young women and others to stop tanning through its Go With Your Own Glow public awareness campaign.

"The reason we feel so strongly is because of the direct link to skin cancer," Mulvey said. "We just want people to be healthy and take care of your skin.'

It is projected that more than 62,000 Americans were diagnosed in 2008 with melanoma, the deadliest form of skin cancer, according to American Cancer Society estimates. The estimated figure for new cases of melanoma in West Virginia last year is 440, according to the Skin Cancer Foundation.

Skin damage or burns can occur if you are careless, whether out in the sun or in a tanning bed, but salons provide a controlled environment where tanning time is monitored, some businesses say.

"At any age it's very bad for your skin to get a bad sunburn," said Krystle Smith, who co-owns Hot Spot Tanning in Charleston. "If parents are more involved, their children are more apt to be safe about it."

Hot Spot Tanning is among West Virginia salons that already require parental permission for minors.

Toni Richardson, who co-owns the salon with Smith, her daughter, has had parents sign for their children since starting the business in 1999.

"I think the bill is a great idea," Richardson said.

Richardson remembers one customer who had previously gone to a different tanning facility without her parents' knowledge, stayed too long under the tanning device and got burned.

Parental Rights on Tanning Beds

"I think that if her parents were aware maybe the mother would have said, 'Don't stay so long,' " Richardson said. "I do have a couple of parents that do that."

"It's important that parents know everything their children are doing," she said. "There's a lot of controversy on tanning. I think that the parents need to make the decision whether to let their children tan or not."

Hey teach...why don't you just make sure Johnny can read, write and add on an 8th grade level when they graduate High School like you've been doing and stop trying to save everyone from themselves by trampling on our civil liberties to push your socialist goodt two shoe utopian agenda.

I have had a member of my family pass with skin cancer and I still think this is the stupidest thing I have heard of...parents should know what their children do and do not need the government requiring it. I worried more about whether the young kids will have a job here in our state when they graduate than how many lay in the tanning beds. Heck what next make the parents sign a parental consent for the kids to go outside when the sun is shining?

Morning Sick - I guess you do not think skin cancer in an issue? The risk of cancer increases immensely if you start tanning early. Girls are tanning as early as middle school now. Think of the damage that will be done before they graduate college. Whether you want to believe it or not this is a MAJOR PROBLEM. I'm sure if you had someone in your family die from skin cancer you would think differently about this bill. BTW - In West Virginia we have something called Content Standards and Objectives. That is what teachers use to guide their teachings.

WVTEACH....I am so glad I do not have children in the public schools because public education is "child abuse". I would not want you indoctrinating my child with your "common sense"

ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE

REPRESENTATIVE KYLE JOHANSEN
MAJORITY LEADER

SPONSOR STATEMENT – HOUSE BILL 36

Alaska's lawmaking process is highly public and strives to be transparent. Shown by the passage of an omnibus ethics bill in 2006, Alaskan voters want to know who is contributing to candidate campaigns. Initiative-created law has the same authority and effect as law created by elected officials; therefore voters should be allowed to know who is making law through the initiative process. House Bill 36, also known as the Open and Transparent Initiative Act (OTIA), seeks to identify people and/or groups who financially contribute to initiative campaigns and requires all initiative groups to register with the Alaska Public Office's Commission. These guidelines are similar to those imposed upon elected officials. In addition, OTIA mandates that initiative sponsors hold public hearings in 30 house districts, limits signature-gathers to work one petition at a time, restricts the use of per-signature commission, and requires all of the language of a proposed ballot measure be published in the petition booklets so potential signers have the opportunity to read all of the language rather than a short summary.

Initiative committees in Alaska are not held to a high enough disclosure standard. There are loopholes in the current disclosure process that allow groups to hide contributors. There are signature-gathers without accountability. There is a lack of public hearings and input. There is financial information that is not disclosed until after the election. These shortcomings are not acceptable, and the Open and Transparent Initiative Act seeks to close these loopholes, repair the initiative process, and restore the faith of Alaskans in our election process.

CS FOR SPONSOR SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 36(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES JOHANSEN, MILLETT, AND WILSON, Johnson

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to ballot initiative proposal applications and to ballot initiatives."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 15.13.040(k) is amended to read:

(k) Every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group contributing a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of a proposition, and every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group contributing a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of filing an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020 or that has filed an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020, shall report the contribution or contributions on a form prescribed by the commission not later than 30 days after the contribution that requires the contributor to report under this subsection is made. The report must include the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report and the amount of the contribution, as well as the total amount of contributions made to that group by that individual, person, nongroup entity, or group during the calendar year.

 Sec. 2. AS 15.13.050(a) is amended to read:

(a) Before making an expenditure in support of or in opposition to a candidate or before making an expenditure in support of or in opposition to a ballot proposition or question or to an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020, each person other than an individual shall register, on forms provided by the commission, with the commission.

 Sec. 3. AS 15.13.065(c) is amended to read:

(c) Except for reports required by AS 15.13.040 and 15.13.110 and except for the requirements of AS 15.13.050, 15.13.060, and 15.13.112 - 15.13.114, the provisions of AS 15.13.010 - 15.13.116 do not apply to limit the authority of a person to make contributions to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition. In this subsection, in addition to its meaning in AS 15.60.010, "proposition" includes

(1) an issue placed on a ballot to determine whether

(A) [(1)] a constitutional convention shall be called;

(B) [(2)] a debt shall be contracted;

(C) [(3)] an advisory question shall be approved or rejected; or

(D) [(4)] a municipality shall be incorporated;

(2) an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

 Sec. 4. AS 15.13.110(e) is amended to read:

(e) A group formed to sponsor [AN INITIATIVE,] a referendum or a recall shall report 30 days after its first filing with the lieutenant governor. Thereafter, each group shall report within 10 days after the end of each calendar quarter on the contributions received and expenditures made during the preceding calendar quarter until reports are due under (a) of this section.

 Sec. 5. AS 15.13.110 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(g) An initiative committee, person, group, or nongroup entity receiving contributions exceeding $500 or making expenditures exceeding $500 in a calendar year in support of or in opposition to an initiative on the ballot in a statewide election or an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 shall file a report within 10 days after the end of each calendar quarter on the contributions received and expenditures made during the preceding calendar quarter until reports are due under (a) and (b) of this section. If the report is a first report, it must cover the period beginning on the day an initiative proposal application is filed under AS 15.45.020 and ending three days before the due date of the report.

 Sec. 6. AS 15.13.400(4) is amended to read:

(4) "contribution"

(A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate;

(ii) [, AND IN AS 15.13.010(b) FOR THE PURPOSE OF] influencing a ballot proposition or question; or

(iii) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 [, INCLUDING THE PAYMENT BY A PERSON OTHER THAN A CANDIDATE OR POLITICAL PARTY, OR COMPENSATION FOR THE PERSONAL SERVICES OF ANOTHER PERSON, THAT ARE RENDERED TO THE CANDIDATE OR POLITICAL PARTY];

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party;

 Sec. 7. AS 15.13.400(6) is amended to read:

(6) "expenditure"

(A) means a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate or of any individual who files for nomination at a later date and becomes a candidate;

(ii) use by a political party;

(iii) the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party of compensation for the personal services of another person that are rendered to a candidate or political party; [OR]

(iv) influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question; or

(v) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020;

(B) does not include a candidate's filing fee or the cost of preparing reports and statements required by this chapter;

(C) includes an express communication and an electioneering communication, but does not include an issues communication;

 Sec. 8. AS 15.45.080 is amended to read:

Sec. 15.45.080. Bases of denial of certification. The lieutenant governor shall deny certification upon determining in writing that

(1) the proposed bill to be initiated is not confined to one subject or is otherwise not in the required form;

(2) the application is not substantially in the required form; or

(3) there is an insufficient number of qualified sponsors.

 Sec. 9. AS 15.45.090(a) is amended to read:

(a) If the application is certified, the lieutenant governor shall prepare a sufficient number of sequentially numbered petitions to allow full circulation throughout the state. Each petition must contain

(1) a copy of the proposed bill [IF THE NUMBER OF WORDS INCLUDED IN BOTH THE FORMAL AND SUBSTANTIVE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL IS 500 OR LESS];

(2) an impartial summary of the subject matter of the bill;

(3) a statement of minimum costs to the state associated with certification of the initiative application and review of the initiative petition, excluding legal costs to the state and the costs to the state of any challenge to the validity of the petition;

(4) an estimate of the cost to the state of implementing the proposed law;

(5) the statement of warning prescribed in AS 15.45.100;

(6) sufficient space for the printed name, a numerical identifier, the signature, the date of signature, and the address of each person signing the petition; and

(7) other specifications prescribed by the lieutenant governor to ensure proper handling and control.

 Sec. 10. AS 15.45.110(c) is amended to read:

(c) A circulator may not receive payment or agree to receive payment [THAT IS GREATER THAN $1 A SIGNATURE], and a person or an organization may not pay or agree to pay an amount, based on the number of registered voters who sign a petition. This subsection does not prohibit a person or an organization from employing a circulator and

(1) paying an hourly wage or salary;

(2) establishing express or implied minimum signature requirements for the circulator;

(3) terminating the petition circulator's employment if the circulator fails to meet certain productivity requirements; or

(4) paying discretionary bonuses based on the circulator's reliability, longevity, and productivity [THAT IS GREATER THAN $1 A SIGNATURE, FOR THE COLLECTION OF SIGNATURES ON A PETITION].

 Sec. 11. AS 15.45 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 15.45.195. Public hearings. (a) At least 30 days before the election at which an initiative is to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor or a designee of the lieutenant governor shall hold two or more public hearings concerning the initiative in each judicial district of the state. Each public hearing under this section shall include the written or oral testimony of one supporter and one opponent of the initiative.

(b) The lieutenant governor shall provide reasonable notice of each public hearing required under this section. The notice must include the date, time, and place of the hearing. The notice may be given using print or broadcast media. The lieutenant governor shall provide notice in a consistent fashion for all hearings required under this section.

 Sec. 12. AS 15.58.010 is amended to read:

Sec. 15.58.010. Election pamphlet. Before each state general election, and before each state primary or special election at which a ballot proposition is scheduled to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor shall prepare, publish, and mail at least one election pamphlet to each household identified from the official registration list. The pamphlet shall be prepared on a regional basis as determined by the lieutenant governor.

 Sec. 13. AS 15.58.020(b) is amended to read:

(b) Each primary or special election pamphlet shall contain only the information specified in (a)(6) and (a)(9) of this section for each ballot measure scheduled to appear on the primary election ballot.

 Sec. 14. AS 24.05 is amended by adding a new section to article 4 to read:

Sec. 24.05.186. Review of initiatives certified by the lieutenant governor by standing committees of the legislature. (a) A standing committee of the legislature shall consider an initiative that the lieutenant governor has determined was properly filed under AS 15.45.160.

(b) A standing committee shall conduct reviews under this section within 30 days after the convening of the legislative session preceding the statewide election at which the initiative proposition must appear on the election ballot under AS 15.45.190.

 Sec. 15. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies only to an initiative, the application for which is filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 on or after the effective date of this Act.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS – HOUSE BILL 36

Section 1. Requires an individual, person, non-group entity, or group that contributes a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of influencing a bill proposed for inclusion on the ballot as an initiative under AS 15.45.020, to report the individual's, person's, non-group entity's, or group's contribution or contributions on a form prescribed by the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) not later than 30 days after the contribution is made.

Section 2. Provides that each person other than an individual shall register with APOC before making an expenditure in support of or in opposition to a proposed initiatives bill filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

Section 3. Expands the meaning of "proposition" under AS 15.13.065(c) to include an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

Section 4. Conforms subsection AS 15.13.110(e) to the enhanced initiative reporting requirements found in the bill's sec. 5.

Section 5. Establishes new reporting requirements for initiative committees, persons, groups, or non-group entities making certain contributions or expenditures in support of or in opposition to an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 or an initiative that has been approved for placement on the ballot.

Section 6. Expands the definition of "contribution" applicable to state election campaigns to include certain purchases, payments, promises, or obligations to pay, loans or loan guarantees, deposits or gifts of money, good, or services for which a charge is ordinarily made that is made for the purpose of supporting or opposing an initiatives proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

Section 7. Expands the definition of "expenditure" applicable to state election campaigns to include certain purchases or transfers of money or anything of value, or promises or agreements to purchase or transfer money or anything value, incurred or made for the purpose of supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

Section 8. Prohibits an initiative that is substantially similar to an initiative that has appeared on the ballot in the previous two years that was not adopted by the electorate.

Section 9. Requires that each initiative petition contains a copy of the proposed initiative bill.

Section 10. Prohibits paying initiative petition circulators on a per signature basis.

Section 11. Prohibits initiative petition circulators from gathering signatures for more than one initiative at a time.

Section 12. Provides that the affidavit required to accompany an initiative petition must state in substance that the person circulating the petition did not gather signatures for more than one petition at a time.

Section 13. Requires that initiative sponsors (1) hold hearings in at least 30 house districts before a petition is filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.140 and (2) provide reasonable notice of each public hearing. Provides that an initiative petition will not be placed on the ballot if the sponsors fail to hold, or provide proper notice of, the public hearings.

Section 14. Requires initiative sponsors to include a sworn affidavit, and proof acceptable to the lieutenant governor, that the initiative sponsors held public hearings in 30 house districts and provided proper notice of the hearings.

Section 15. Requires the lieutenant governor to review the affidavit provided under the bill's sec 14, and any accompanying proof submitted, at the time the lieutenant governor reviews the initiative petition.

Section 16. Adds initiative sponsors' failure to hold public hearings in 30 house districts or sponsors' failure to provide reasonable notice of hearings, to the bases upon which the lieutenant governor may determine that an initiative petition is improperly filed.

Section 17. Requires an election pamphlet to be prepared and mailed to each household for any special election at which a ballot proposition is scheduled to appear on the ballot.

Section 18. Provides that an election pamphlet for a special election at which a ballot measure is scheduled to appear on the ballot shall contain (1) the full text of the proposition, (2) the ballot title and summary of the proposition, (3) a statement of the costs to the state of implementing the law proposed in an initiative, (4) a neutral summary of the proposition, (5) statements submitted that advocate voter approval or rejection of the proposition not to exceed 500 words, and (6) any additional information on voting procedures that the lieutenant governor considers necessary.

Section 19. Requires that a standing committee of the legislature review initiatives that the lieutenant governor has approved for placement on the ballot.

Section 20. Provides that the provisions of the Act apply to an initiative proposed by filing an application with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 on or after the effective date of the Act.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill would impact the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) through changes to regulations, changes to the electronic filing program and increased workload for staff. Changes to regulations could be incorporated into a proposed contract to draft regulations at little or no increased cost. To the extent that the regulations expand reporting of contributions to groups supporting ballot measures, this would require changes to the existing reporting forms and to the proposed format of the electronic filing system. Additional costs generated by these changes are unknown at this time. Requiring that groups sponsoring initiative ballot propositions file earlier than currently required would generate increased filings, which would increase staff workload.

The League of Women Voters

A Voice For Citizens, A Force For Change

The League of Women Voters of Alaska is a non-partisan political organization that encourages informed and active citizen participation in government, works to increase understanding of major public policy issues, and influences public policy through education and advocacy. We write today to comment on SSHB 36, "An Act relating to ballot initiative proposal applications and to ballot initiatives." While there are provisions of the bill that would improve and strengthen the process in Alaska, others would effectively put the initiative process out of the reach of the average citizen.

Direct democracy through popular initiatives and referenda began a century ago as a grassroots, progressive reform aimed at circumventing corrupt legislatures, increasing civic involvement and wresting control of the state's political process away from well-heeled special interest groups. The initiative process places legislative power directly in the hands of the voters.

After exhaustive study, in 2001 the Alaska League adopted a position (attached) in support of the existing initiative process and made several recommendations for improvements. The League's official position supports "disclosure on each initiative petition of the names(s) or group(s) that is paying the gatherer and how they are paid, such as by signature or by the hour." For that reason, the League is in favor of the provision in SSHB 36 that requires individuals and groups to disclose their financial involvement in preparing and filing an initiative. Voters need to know all sources of support for a proposed ballot initiative in order to make an informed choice regarding support or opposition.

In addition, the League supports the provision in SSHB 36 that reforms the way in which initiative petition collectors are paid. The current practice of paying by the signature creates an incentive that contributes to fraud and erodes the people's trust and support of the initiative process.

The League cannot support three provisions in the bill that would create major barriers to citizen's participation of the initiative process. First, banning an unsuccessful ballot initiative for a two-year "election cycle" is overly restrictive and most likely unconstitutional. We do not believe the legislature has the right to dictate the behavior of citizens as they exercise their right to the law-making process. In addition, requiring a standing committee of the legislature to review the initiative language is intrusive and provides the opportunity for the legislature to kill an initiative with simple inaction. Finally, the provision that requires public hearings in 30 House districts would be a financial burden that only the most well resourced groups can successfully mount – this provision alone has the potential to kill access to the initiative process for the average Alaskan. We urge you to amend SSHB36 to remove these provisions.

Thank you for your consideration of our perspective. Please contact me at 452-4532 for further information pertaining to the Alaska League's positions.

Sincerely,

/s/ Marilyn Russell, President
League of Women Voters of Alaska

STATEMENT OF POSITION

The League of Women Voters of Alaska supports the existing initiative process and makes the following recommendations:

- Initiatives should be voted on only at General Elections, not special or primary elections.
- Support change that requires simplicity and clarity of the wording of initiative questions with a "yes" vote to indicate in favor of the measure and a "no" vote to indicate opposition to the measure.
- Support disclosure on each initiative petition of the name(s) or group(s) that is paying the gatherer and how they are paid, such as by signature or by the hour.
- Support the requirement for not less than 500 qualified voters as sponsors to the prospective petition with the Lieutenant Governor's office.
- Support the requirement for a number of valid signatures not less than ten (10%) percent of the total number of the votes cast in the preceding general elections.
- Support a formula for at least 50 signatures in each of two-thirds of the legislative districts in order to reflect statewide interest in a measure.
- Support the requirement an attorney general advisory opinion as to the constitutionality of each proposed initiative after it has qualified for the ballot, such opinion to be published in the State Election Pamphlet.
- Support the existing limit on time for collecting signatures to one year.
- Support the requirement for a cost analysis to be on each initiative petition.
- Support the requirement that signature gatherers be qualified voters of Alaska.

MEMORANDUM March 2, 2009

SUBJECT: Constitutional questions relating to initiatives, House Bill No. 36 (Work Order No. 26-LS0197\A)

TO: Representative Pete Petersen
Attn: David Dunsmore

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

You have asked a series of questions relating to House Bill No. 36 (HB 36). The bill contains a number of provisions relating to initiatives. You have inquired as to the constitutionality of some of the bill's provisions. Your questions are addressed below. I have also included some historical and constitutional context regarding the initiative in Alaska that may be helpful.

Constitutional context

The right of Alaska's people to petition to legislate through the initiative process is a right protected by the state constitution. Article XI, sec. 1 of the state constitution provides that "[t]he people may propose and enact laws by the initiative, and approve or reject acts of the legislature by referendum." Alaska courts have recognized the exercise of the initiative power as a right reserved to Alaska's people and that the constitutional and statutory provisions under which the people may propose and enact laws by initiative should be liberally construed. N.W. Cruiseship Ass'n of Alaska v. Office of Lieutenant Governor, Div. of Elections, 145 P.3d 573, 578 (Alaska 2006); Thomas v. Bailey, 595 P.2d 1, 3 (Alaska 1979); Anchorage v. Frohne, 568 P.2d 3, 8 (Alaska 1977); and Boucher v. Engstrom, 528 P.2d 456, 462 (Alaska 1974).

While previous cases have primarily addressed the question of appropriate subject matters for initiatives, it is my opinion that this principle of "liberal interpretation" is likely to be similarly applied by an Alaska court to the people's right "to initiative" secured by the state constitution. Given such an understanding, it is likely that some of the provisions of HB 36, together or in part, might be challenged as diminishing or restricting the people's initiative power reserved under the state constitution's art. XI, sec. 1.

At the Alaska Constitutional Convention, in sharing the commentary of the Committee on the Article of Initiative, Referendum, and Recall, Delegate Ernest B. Collins declared that "[t]his section reserves the authority of the people to initiate laws by petition and vote of the people directly" and "[t]he exercise of the initiative is a fundamental right of the people. . . ." Minutes of the Daily Proceedings, Alaska Constitutional Convention, p. 929. It is my legal opinion that these statements would be interpreted by a court as illustrative of an underlying legal premise held by the authors of our state constitution that "all political power is inherent in the people" (art. I, sec. 2), that a just government derives its power from the consent of the governed, and accordingly, that the initiative should not be understood as a right granted to the people, but a power reserved by them. See also Idaho Coalition United for Bears v. Cenarrusa, 342 F.3d 1073, 1076 (9th Cir. Idaho 2003) ("[t]he ballot initiative . . . is a basic instrument of democratic government . . .") quoting Cuyahoga Falls v. Buckeye Comm. Hope Found., 538 U.S. 188, 196 (2003) (quoting Eastlake v. Forest City Enters., Inc., 426 U.S. 668, 679 (1976)). For this reason, legislative efforts that can be interpreted to interfere with this right are likely to invite a constitutional challenge.

Prohibiting concurrent solicitation of signatures for more than one petition

Section 6 of HB 36 amends AS 15.45.110 (Circulation of petition; prohibitions and penalty) by adding a new subsection (g) that provides that "a circulator may not concurrently solicit signatures for more than one petition." This prohibition applies only to circulators soliciting signatures for initiatives.[1] It is my legal opinion that a court would interpret the phrase "concurrent solicitation of signatures for more than one petition" to mean that an initiative petition circulator may not collect signatures for more than one initiative at any one time and location.[2] If a petition circulator was found to violate this prohibition, any petition which that person circulated while soliciting signatures for another petition could be denied certification under AS 15.45.130.[3] If an individual petition is denied certification, the signatures on that petition would not be counted toward the requisite number of signatures required for an initiative to be placed on the ballot under AS 15.45.140.[4]

[1] The provisions of AS 15.45 that are proposed to be amended or added to by HB 36 apply only to initiatives.

[2] You have asked "[w]ould it be considered concurrent soliciting for a [petition circulator] to approach [a person] about signing one petition, and after [the person signs] that petition, the [petition circulator asks the person] if they would like to sign a different petition?" If your question is restricted to initiative petitions, it is my legal opinion that a court would interpret a petition circulator asking a person at the same time and in the same place to consider or sign two different petitions as concurrent solicitation for multiple petitions.

[3] Section 7 of HB 36 adds language to AS 15.45.130 that would require a petition circulator to state in substance that the circulator has not concurrently solicited signatures for more than one petition in the affidavit that the circulator must file with the petition.

[4] Courts have been sympathetic to states that refuse to count signatures on a petition because of a violation of certification requirements, and have found that certification

Whether a court would uphold a prohibition against petition circulators concurrently soliciting signatures for more than one initiative at a time is a separate question addressed below.

Legal framework

The legislature may statutorily regulate the initiative process in order to keep the process open, fair, and free of corruption. If any statute or regulation pertaining to initiatives is challenged, a court will scrutinize whether the statute or regulation impermissibly burdens constitutional rights or unreasonably restricts the availability of the initiative power to the people. A statute or regulation that burdens initiative sponsors' First Amendment rights of free speech and the right to petition will survive judicial scrutiny only if it is shown, at a minimum, to serve a significant and legitimate government interest and be a reasonably and narrowly tailored means of promoting the significant governmental interest without unnecessary abridgment of First Amendment rights.

The added prohibitions and requirements of HB 36 may be found unconstitutional by a court because they limit the people's right of initiative and burden initiative sponsors' fundamental First Amendment rights, by restricting the range of subjects that may be addressed through the initiative, and by imposing additional expenses that limit the availability of the initiative power to initiative sponsors of lesser financial means, without being narrowly tailored to significant and legitimate state interests. A court will ask what interests of the state are addressed by these requirements, what interests necessitate the burdening of the political speech and petition rights of initiative sponsors, and whether there are approaches to satisfying these same state interests that would not burden the sponsors' fundamental rights.

Prohibiting initiatives that are substantially similar to initiatives that have failed in the previous two years

It is my legal opinion that a court is likely to interpret art. XI, sec. 7 of the state constitution, which provides list of the subjects that may not be proposed by initiative, as delineating the entirety of subjects that may be restricted.[5] Article XI, sec. 7 provides, in relevant part: requirements are important to prevent fraud and preserve the integrity of the initiative process. See for example Loontjer v. Robinson, 670 N.W.2d 301 (Neb. 2003) (where sponsors failed to submit a sworn statement including the addresses of the sponsors, the initiative petition was held to be legally insufficient); Maine Taxpayers Action Network v. Sec'y of State, 795 A.2d 75 (Me. 2002) (where circulator lied about his identity, the veracity of other statements on his affidavit was called into question and invalidation of the signatures he collected was upheld).

[5] A court could arrive at this conclusion by applying the maxim of legal and statutory interpretation that holds that items that are not on a list are not to be included (expressio

> Restrictions. The initiative shall not be used to dedicate revenues, make or repeal appropriations, create courts, define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or enact local or special legislation. . . .

It is likely that an Alaska court "liberally construing" the right of initiative and interpreting art. XI, sec. 7 as providing the entirety of those subjects that may be restricted could find that sec. 3 of HB 36 (prohibiting the proposal of an initiative that is substantially similar to another initiative that failed to garner a majority of the votes cast in the previous two years) is an unconstitutional un-enumerated additional restriction of the initiative power.

If art. XI, sec. 7 is not interpreted to prohibit additional restrictions of the initiative power, it is still likely that a court would invalidate this restriction based on the people's right to petition and freedom of speech secured by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution[6] and art. I, secs. 5 and 6[7] of the state constitution. While First Amendment freedoms are not absolute, see Messerli v. State, 626 P.2d 81, 86 (Alaska 1981), "statutes attempting to restrict or burden the exercise of First Amendment rights must be narrowly drawn and represent a considered legislative judgment that a particular mode of expression has to give way to other compelling needs of society." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 611 - 612 (1973) (citations omitted). The prohibition against initiatives that are substantially similar to those that have failed in preceding election cycles is a content-based restriction on the political speech of ballot sponsors and the electorate. While a state may impose content-neutral restrictions on the time, place, or manner of speech, if the restrictions further a "significant and legitimate" government

Hammond, 553 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1976) (in a case relating to separation of powers and the branches of government, the court held that the lack of ambiguity in art. III, sec. 25 and 26 of the Alaska constitution mandated that these two constitutional provisions be interpreted to embody the maximum parameters of the delegation of the executive appointment power subject to legislative confirmation).

interest (see Consolidated Edison Company of New York, Inc. v. Public Service Commission, 447 U.S. 530, 535 (1980); Barber v. Municipality of Anchorage, 776 P.2d 1035, 1037 (Alaska 1989) (upholding application of content neutral ordinance banning portable signs)), such a content-based restriction on free speech must serve a "compelling" governmental interest. Mickens v. City of Kodiak, 640 P.2d 818, 821 (Alaska 1982) ("Laws prohibiting free expression, based on the content of the expression, are sustainable only for the most compelling of reasons."). I am unsure what legally sufficient arguments could be made that might support the prohibiting of initiatives that are substantially similar to those that have failed in the previous election cycle.

Constitutional issues relating to prohibitions and requirements relating to initiative petition circulators and initiative sponsors

You asked specifically about the constitutionality of prohibiting a petition circulator from concurrently soliciting signatures for more than one initiative petition and also whether other provisions of the bill might invite constitutional challenge. Those elements of HB 36 that (1) prohibit initiative petition circulators from collecting signatures for more than one ballot measure at a time, (2) prohibit initiative petition circulators from being paid per signature, (3) require initiative sponsors to hold hearings in at least 30 house districts within one year after the application is certified by the lieutenant governor, and (4) require initiative sponsors to pay to the lieutenant governor the cost of printing the full text of the initiative in election pamphlets are likely to be challenged on the same or similar constitutional grounds. A legal challenge to these provisions would likely characterize these statutory changes, together or in part, as hurdles placed in way of the people's ability to exercise their constitutional right to petition the government through the initiative process, infringements on initiative sponsors' First Amendment right of free speech and a denial of equal protection in access to the ballot.

Prohibiting petition circulators from gathering signatures for more than one petition at a time

If the provision in sec. 6 of HB 36 that prohibits petition circulators from gathering signatures for more than initiative petition at a time were challenged, a court will evaluate the evidence relating to the burden imposed on petition sponsors' political speech rights by the prohibition and the evidence as to the nature of the state's justification for the prohibition. Is the burden on petition sponsors offset by the benefits of reducing electoral fraud or voter confusion? Would such a procedure improve the reliability and integrity of the election process? Much would turn on the factual evidence. While this prohibition does not seem unreasonable on its face, it is difficult to predict whether a court would find it constitutional. In the words of Judge McKeague of the Sixth Circuit:[5]

[5] See Citizens for Tax Reform v. Deters, 518 F.3d 375 (6th Cir. 2008) (cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 596 (U.S. 2008) (affirming an earlier federal district court ruling that an Ohio law that prohibited paying petitioners by the signature was an unconstitutional abridgement of the First Amendment).

> [T]he First Amendment is a jealous mistress. It enables the people to exchange ideas (popular and unpopular alike), to assemble with the hope of changing minds, and to alter or preserve how we govern ourselves. But in return, it demands that sometimes seemingly reasonable measures enacted by our governments give way.

While a similar law is being considered in the Missouri House of Representatives,[9] I am not aware of any previous judicial scrutiny of such a requirement.

Requiring ballot sponsors to hold public hearings

Requiring initiative sponsors, at their own expense, to hold public hearings is unlikely to be interpreted as a narrowly tailored measure justified by a significant and legitimate state interest. If the electorate is poorly informed as to the potential effects of a proposed ballot measure, burdening the fundamental constitutional rights of the measure's sponsors is unlikely to be interpreted by a court as a narrowly tailored remedy. Even if the education of the electorate in regard to proposed ballot measures is found to be a compelling interest of the state, a court is unlikely to find that an initiative's sponsors are responsible for the task. While initiative sponsors presumably are motivated to inform the electorate as to the merits of their initiative, would public hearings serve to educate the electorate? Would the measure's sponsors be required to provide an opposing view as to the merits of their measure?

Prohibiting the paying of petition circulators by the signature

In Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988), the Supreme Court invalidated a Colorado statute that prohibited payment for the circulation of initiative petitions, finding that petition circulation is "core political speech" entitled to substantial First Amendment protection and that states may not impermissibly burden the exercise of the right to petition through use of the initiative. In the same decision, and in other decisions, the Supreme Court recognized the need for some substantial regulation of elections if they are to be fair, honest, and orderly. Subsequently, a number of courts have examined prohibitions against paying initiative petition circulators per signature, with disparate results.[10]

Idaho 2001) (the court found Idaho presented no evidence of fraud in the signature gathering process and thus struck down a ban on paying initiative petition circulators per signature as violating the First Amendment) and On Our Terms '97 PAC v. Sec'y of State of Maine, 101 F. Supp. 2d 19, 25 - 26 (D. Me. 1999) (the court found that a prohibition on paying petition circulators per signature burdened the signature gathering process and noted that Maine provided "no evidence whatsoever that fraud is more pervasive among

In five states (North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming), initiative sponsors are banned from paying petition circulators by the signature. North Dakota and Oregon's provisions have been upheld by the U.S. Eighth and Ninth Circuit Courts, respectively. Similar laws in Ohio, Idaho, Maine, Mississippi, and Washington have been found unconstitutional by federal district courts. In 2007, South Dakota and Montana passed pay per signature bans with language designed to balance the issue, and these are as yet untested. The "pay-per-signature" provision at sec. 5 of HB 36 is modeled on the South Dakota law. House Bill No. 36 prohibits initiative petition circulators from being paid by the signature, but does allow performance based incentives and productivity requirements. The provision is drafted to balance the competing concerns between (1) possible fraud resulting from paying petition circulators per signature and (2) initiative sponsors' ability to gather signatures without a significant increase in the costs and the time associated with obtaining the number of signatures required to qualify for the ballot.

If an Alaska court is called upon to determine whether the prohibition in HB 36 against paying petition circulators per signature is constitutionally permissible, it will evaluate the evidence relating to the burden imposed on petition sponsors' political speech rights by the prohibition and the evidence as to the nature of the state's justification for the prohibition. I am unaware of any prosecution of fraud relating to the gathering of initiative petition signatures in the state and do not know how an Alaska court would rule on the constitutionality of this provision.

Requiring ballot measure sponsors to pay the cost of printing the full text of the initiative in election pamphlets circulators paid per signature, or even that fraud in general has been a noteworthy problem in the lengthy history of the Maine initiative and referendum process"); but see Prete v. Bradbury, 438 F.3d 949 (9th Cir. 2006) (the court affirmed a lower court ruling that an Oregon law that prohibited initiative petition circulators from being paid by the signature did not (1) significantly diminish the pool of potential petition circulators, (2) increase the cost of signature gathering, or (3) increase the invalidity rate of signatures gathered; thus, the law did not burden the plaintiff party under the First Amendment. The court affirmed that the State of Oregon had an important regulatory interest in preventing fraud, and that the law was constitutional as applied.)

[11] Sec. 15.58.060. Charges for space in pamphlet.
(a) Each general election candidate shall pay to the lieutenant governor at the time of filing material under this chapter the following:
(1) President or Vice-President of the United States, United States senator, United States representative, governor, lieutenant governor, supreme court justice, and court of appeals judge, $300 each; costs associated with the inclusion of an initiative in the election pamphlet could be interpreted by a court as an unconstitutional restriction of the people's right to initiative under the state constitution's art. XI, sec. 1. This requirement would treat the sponsors of an initiative differently (1) from candidates, (2) from the legislature, when it puts a question before the voters, and (3) perhaps from the sponsors of another initiative that is of a different printed length. A court would examine this requirement in the same manner as the prohibitions and restrictions detailed above. Does the state's interest in reining in election material printing costs justify adding an additional expense to those citizens seeking to utilize the initiative process? Would such a requirement result in one initiative being treated differently from another because of its printed length? Does this state interest outweigh the resulting burden on the First Amendment rights of initiative sponsors?

End note

While the legislature may regulate the initiative process, a number of the provisions in HB 36 would appear to burden fundamental constitutional rights of initiative sponsors. Regulation of the initiative process is a dynamic and rapidly evolving area, with little applicable precedent in the state. It is my legal opinion that a court is unlikely to uphold a prohibition against initiatives that are substantially similar to those that have failed in the previous two years. I am not familiar with the arguments and facts that might be employed in support of HB 36's other provisions, consequently, whether a court would uphold the bill's other prohibitions and requirements relating to initiative sponsors and petition circulators is not clear to me.

MEMORANDUM March 30, 2009

SUBJECT: Constitutional questions relating to Sponsor Substitute for House Bill 36 (Work Order No. 26-LS0197\Q)E

TO: Representative Pete Petersen
Attn: David Dunsmore

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

You asked that I review the Sponsor Substitute for House Bill 36 (SSHB 36) and update, if appropriate, the legal opinion I'd provided to your office on March 2, 2009, relating to the constitutionality of House Bill No. 36. David Dunsmore, of your staff, clarified that you were interested only in the differences between the original bill and the sponsor substitute.

Differences between SSHB 36 and HB 36

The Sponsor Substitute for House Bill 36 contains new bill sections relating to (1) the identification of certain communications, (2) the disclosure of certain contributions and expenditures relating to initiative proposal applications, (3) publication of public hearings held by initiative sponsors, and (4) consequences for initiative sponsors' failure to hold or properly publicize public hearings. The Sponsor Substitute eliminates a provision in HB 36 that required initiative sponsors to bear the printing costs of including an initiative in election pamphlets.

Provisions relating to the identification of communications and the disclosure of contributions and expenditures pertaining to initiative proposal applications

The Sponsor Substitute for House Bill 36 moves the statutory boundary for the requisite identification of certain advertisements and the disclosure of certain contributions and expenditures from those that concern a ballot proposition as defined under AS 15.60.010 to those that relate to an initiative proposal application proposed for placement on the ballot under AS 15.45.020.

It is not clear to me how a court might interpret the expansion of contribution and expenditure disclosure requirements to those that relate to an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020. It seems likely that a court would interpret the government's interest in requiring contribution and expenditure disclosure in this context as different (if only by a matter of degree) from the government interest served by identification and disclosure requirements once an initiative proposition is on the ballot.

While funds spent to influence whether an issue is placed, or not placed, before the electorate may be characterized as different than funds spent to influence the manner in which the electorate will vote on an issue that is on the ballot, I am not familiar with any applicable precedent relevant to determining the boundaries of the government's interest in mandating disclosure in this context. Consequently, I am unsure at what point an Alaska court would determine that speech relating to an issue that may or may not appear on the ballot can be constitutionally required to be identified or disclosed.

The Alaska Supreme Court has analyzed expenditures made to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition in terms of "close[ness]" to pure political speech.[1] It is, therefore, likely that an Alaska court will analyze the constitutionality of the state's regulatory interest in requiring disclosures of certain funds spent that relate to an initiative proposed for placement on the ballot and the importance of the individual rights affected by SSHB 36's provisions on a sliding scale.[2] That analysis would concern itself with considering

[1] The key decision is Messerli v. State, 626 P.2d 81, 85 (Alaska 1980):

> [W]e believe that an expenditure for influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question comes far closer to pure political speech than does an expenditure advocating the election or defeat of a particular candidate. An individual's right of expression in the latter circumstances consists of giving the candidate funds to convey the candidate's message to the public. But in ballot proposition contests, the message is often the contributor's own. The contributor exercises the right of free speech directly on his own behalf, addresses whatever he sees as the merits of an issue, expresses his own opinions, and makes his own recommendations to the public. This is the essence of political speech.

[2] The Alaska Supreme Court has adopted a sliding scale approach to both the analysis of constitutional issues and statutory interpretation. For purposes of analyzing the equal protection clause, the Alaska Supreme Court adopted the following test:

> . . . [W]e have adopted a three-step, sliding-scale test that places a progressively greater or lesser burden on the state, depending on the importance of the individual right affected by the disputed classification and the nature of the governmental interests at stake: first, we determine the weight of the individual interest impaired by the classification; second, we examine the importance of the purposes underlying the government's action; and third, we evaluate the means employed to further those goals to determine the closeness of the means-to-end fit.

whether the political speech at issue relating to an initiative proposed for placement on the ballot may be more "pure" and less susceptible to constitutionally permissible regulation than is political speech intended to influence the vote of the electorate on an initiative that is on the ballot.

I do not know whether a court would hold that the stricter requirements of SSHB 36 are sufficiently tailored to be of use to "individual citizens seeking to make informed choices in the political marketplace." McConnell v. Federal Election Commission, 540 U.S. 93, 196 (2003) (quoting McConnell v. FEC, 251 F. Supp. 2d, 176, 237 (D.D.C. 2003). Content-based regulation of core political speech, the sort that is at issue here, must be "narrowly tailored to serve an overriding state interest" in order to survive scrutiny. American Civil Liberties Union of Nevada v. Heller, 378 F.3d 979, 993 (9th Cir. 2004), quoting McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334, 357 (1995). To survive constitutional challenge, the state would have to demonstrate that SSHB 36's provisions relating to the identification of disclosure of contributions and expenditures is justified by a compelling state interest that is superior to any resulting burden on the political speech of groups, nongroup entities, and individuals (see California Pro-Life Council, Inc. v. Randolph, 507 F.3d 1172 (9th Cir. 2007)).

Added provisions relating to public hearings held by initiative sponsors

House Bill 36 required that initiative sponsors hold public hearings in at least 30 house districts about the measure that they are proposing for inclusion on the ballot. The Sponsor Substitute adds sections that provide that (1) notice for these public hearings must be provided, and (2) an initiative petition will be determined to be improperly filed (and consequently be denied placement on the ballot) if the lieutenant governor finds that the initiative sponsors did not hold hearings in at least 30 house districts or that the initiative sponsors failed to provide reasonable notice of each public hearing.

As I indicated in my memorandum of March 2, requiring initiative sponsors, at their own expense, to hold public hearings is unlikely to be interpreted as narrowly tailored and justified by a compelling state interest. The Sponsor Substitute's additional bill sections relating to notice requirements for these public hearings and initiative petition disqualification (if the initiative sponsors do not hold the requisite number of hearings or fail to provide proper notice of the hearings) are likely to be interpreted to further restrict the fundamental First Amendment rights of initiative sponsors and the people's right to petition and legislate through the initiative process under the state constitution's art. XI,

Malabed v. North Slope Borough, 70 P.3d 416, 420 - 421 (Alaska 2003).

In interpreting statutes, Alaska's Supreme Court also employs a sliding-scale approach; the more plain the language of the statute, the more convincing the evidence of contrary legislative intent must be (see Interior Cabaret, Hotel, Rest. & Retailers Ass'n v. Fairbanks N. Star Borough, 135 P.3d 1000, 1011 fn. 8 (Alaska 2006)).

sec. 1. It is my legal opinion that an Alaska court is likely to find these provisions unconstitutional.

MEMORANDUM April 15, 2009

SUBJECT: Single subject requirement and ballot initiatives (Work Order No. 26-LS0197\E.9)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the amendment referenced above. Jane Pierson, of your staff, asked that I draft an amendment to Sponsor Substitute for House Bill 36 (SSHB 36) that would require the lieutenant governor to deny certification to a ballot initiative that was not confined to a single subject. The amendment makes this requirement explicit in that statutory section which provides the "[b]ases of denial of certification" (AS 15.45.080). I have two comments.

Please note that a proposed initiative is already required to be confined to a single subject under AS 15.45.040 ("[f]orm of proposed bill").

Please also note, notwithstanding AS 15.45.040, that it is not entirely clear that the legislature has the constitutional power to require an initiative to be confined to a single subject. While the law-making power of the legislature and the people (through the initiative) are equal,[1] and the single-subject requirement of the state constitution's art. II, sec. 13 applies to initiatives,[2] the Alaska Supreme Court has held "[i]n initiative cases decided since Boucher, we have consistently restated the language of Boucher that limits pre-election review to cases involving compliance with 'the particular constitutional and

[1] Article XII, section 11 states:

> Law-Making Power. As used in this constitution, the terms "by law" and "by the legislature," or variations of these terms, are used interchangeably when related to law-making powers. Unless clearly inapplicable, the law-making powers assigned to the legislature may be exercised by the people through the initiative, subject to the limitations of Article XI.

[3] Article XI, section 7 states:

> Restrictions. The initiative shall not be used to dedicate revenues, make or repeal appropriations, create courts, define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or enact local or special legislation. The referendum shall not be applied to dedications of revenue, to appropriations, to local or special legislation, or to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety.

[4] Notwithstanding legal arguments, it has been the practice of the lieutenant governor to deny placement on the ballot to initiatives that the Department of Law has found to violate the single-subject rule. For example, the lieutenant governor denied "[a]n Act establishing a program of public funding for campaigns for state elected offices, to be known as the Alaska Clean Elections Act, and amending the oil and gas production tax to levy and collect a surcharge on oil as a source of funding for that program" placement on the ballot on July 19, 2007, because the Office of the Attorney General determined that "the initiative application did not comply with the constitutional and statutory provisions governing the use of the initiative." Initiatives deserve same vetting as bills

By KYLE JOHANSEN

POINT OF VIEW

House Bill 36, also known as the Open and Transparent Initiative Act, is an attempt to tackle an enormous problem we have here in Alaska: Our initiative process is used as a way for special interests to maneuver around the lawmaking body to enact laws without regard for the public as a whole. The right to petition government belongs to the citizens of Alaska. It is imperative that the process be protected from abuse. HB36 offers those safeguards. I am taking this opportunity to review the changes I believe need to happen to protect our initiative process.

Currently, initiative sponsors are not required to hold public hearings. However, the Legislature is required to hold public hearings on all bills that are voted on as a body. Most bills receive multiple committee referrals and spend hours being publically vetted. Though bills passed by the Legislature and initiatives passed by the people have the same effect, they are not held to the same public-hearing requirements. Mandating a proposed initiative go through a public hearing process is an essential element for developing sound public policy. HB36 requires that a standing committee review the proposed initiative. This allows the affected state agencies to come forward and express how the initiative will affect their operations. When a bill is in front of the Legislature, the affected state agencies come before the appropriate committee and explain the implementation of the policy. Initiatives that are passed by the people are law, and the agencies that have to administer those laws should be afforded the same ability.

Prohibiting initiatives that are substantially similar to a failed initiative says that the people have spoken. We have seen the same initiatives proposed year after year, with a lack of regard for the public's will. If an initiative fails, the public has spoken. However, people's attitudes, beliefs, and perceptions can change. That is why I think it is appropriate that failed initiatives be restricted from the ballot for one election cycle to save the state money, time, and resources.

Signature-gatherers are commonly paid on a per-signature basis. In Alaska, they are not supposed to receive more than $1 per signature. Twenty-four states have an initiative process, and many have banned the practice of paying per signature because of fraud. Petition circulators in other states have been caught using disingenuous practices to gather more signatures to receive a bigger paycheck. If petition circulators did not collect payment based on the number of signatures, they would be less inclined to commit fraud.

Petition circulators are allowed to solicit signatures for more than one initiative at a time. This means that someone can have multiple clipboards outside the grocery store, shuffling them around while trying to convince you to sign their petitions. It is easy to confuse which petition was explained to you and which petition you have agreed to sign. Petition circulators should be allowed to collect signatures for only one initiative at a time to reduce confusion, deceptive practices, and misleading information.

Unlike the current initiative process, HB36 will go through many public committee hearings where it will be vetted, debated and amended. This is a chance for the public to weigh in on the bill, for lawmakers to ask questions and clarify issues of concern, for changes to be proposed, and many other aspects to be publicly debated so the best public policy is put forward. As a reminder, this is not required of initiative legislation. What you see is what you get, and unfortunately, what you don't see is what you get as well.

I encourage you to read the legislation yourself. Please form your own opinion based on the facts of the bill itself, rather than regurgitate information given to you by parties with their own agenda. HB36 can be found at www.legis.state.ak.us/basis.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

On December 7, 2001, the National Conference of State Legislatures assembled a task force to review the growing use of initiatives and referendums around the country and to examine their effect on representative democracy at the state level.

The Initiative and Referendum Task Force found that opportunities for abuse of the process outweigh its advantages and does not recommend that states adopt the initiative process if they currently do not have one.

The task force also developed recommendations that would enable initiative states to make their processes more representative. For states that are intent upon adopting an initiative process, the task force offers a set of guidelines to enhance the process and to avoid many of the pitfalls currently experienced by the initiative states. The task force urges such states to consider giving preference to a process that encourages citizen participation without enacting specific constitutional or statutory language—specifically, the advisory initiative or the general policy initiative.

The 34 recommendations contained in this report acknowledge that the initiative process has outgrown the existing laws that govern it. After listening to expert testimony from a wide variety of witnesses and compiling data from all 50 states, the task force concluded that the initiative has evolved from its early days as a grassroots tool to enhance representative democracy into a tool that too often is exploited by special interests. The initiative lacks critical elements of the legislative process and can have both intended and unintended effects on the ability of the representative democratic process to comprehensively develop policies and priorities.

As a result, the task force suggests that initiative states reform drafting, certification, signature-gathering and financial disclosure statutes; adhere to single subject rules; and improve practices regarding voter education. It also recommends that initiatives be allowed only on general election ballots.

It is the task force's intent that the discussion and adoption of the reforms in this report lead to a more thoughtful lawmaking process, improve interaction between initiative proponents and legislatures, and ultimately produce better public policy and reinforce representative democracy.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

The following 34 recommendations were adopted unanimously at the final meeting of the NCSL Initiative and Referendum Task Force in Denver, Colorado, on April 26-27, 2002.

The task force does not recommend that states that currently do not have an initiative process adopt one. The task force believes that representative democracy is more desirable than the initiative. The disadvantages of the initiative as a tool for policymaking are many, and the opportunities for abuse of the process outweigh its advantages. However, if a state is intent upon adopting an initiative process, the first four recommendations lay out the task force's view of an effectively structured process.

The remaining recommendations deal with specific elements of the initiative process and are intended as guidelines to improve existing procedures. The task force believes that the adoption of these recommendations will improve the initiative process to the benefit of both state government and voters and will result in improved public policy making via the initiative.

General Recommendations Regarding the Initiative Process

Recommendation 1.1: States that are considering adopting an initiative process should give preference to one that encourages citizen participation without enacting specific constitutional or statutory language. Specifically, states should consider:

A. First, adopting the advisory initiative; or
B. In the alternative, adopting the general policy initiative.

Recommendation 1.2: If states wish to adopt an initiative process and neither the advisory initiative nor the general policy initiative are adopted, they should adopt an indirect initiative process.

Recommendation 1.3: If states adopt a direct initiative process, they should adopt only a statutory initiative process, not a constitutional amendment initiative process.

Recommendation 1.4: If states adopt a constitutional amendment initiative process, they also should adopt a statutory initiative process.

Involving the Legislature in the Initiative Process

Recommendation 2.1: States that currently have a direct initiative process should consider adopting an indirect process as well, and provide incentives to encourage its use.

Recommendation 2.2: After a specified percentage of signatures has been gathered for an initiative petition, the legislature should provide for public hearings on the initiative proposal.

Recommendation 2.3: When appropriate, the legislature should place an alternative legislative referral on the ballot with an initiative that appears on the ballot.

The Subject Matter of Initiatives

Recommendation 3.1: States should encourage the sponsors of initiatives to propose them as statutory initiatives when possible, rather than as constitutional amendments.

Recommendation 3.2: States should adopt the single subject rule to enhance clarity and transparency in the initiative process.

Recommendation 3.3: If an initiative measure is rejected by voters, states should prohibit an identical or substantially similar initiative measure from appearing on the ballot for a specified period of time.

The Drafting and Certification Phase

Recommendation 4.1: States should require a review of proposed initiative language by either the legislature or a state agency. The review should include non-binding suggestions for improving the initiative's technical format and content, and should be considered public information.

Recommendation 4.2: States should require the drafting and certification of a ballot title and summary for each initiative proposal. Ballot titles must identify the principal effect of the proposed initiative and must be unbiased, clear, accurate, and written so that a "yes" vote changes current law.

Recommendation 4.3: States should require the drafting of a fiscal impact statement for each initiative proposal. The statement should appear on the petition, in the voter information pamphlet, and on the ballot.

Recommendation 4.4: States should establish a review process and an opportunity for public challenge of technical matters, including adherence to single subject rules, and ballot title, summary and fiscal note sufficiency, to be made prior to the signature-gathering phase.

The Signature Gathering Phase

Recommendation 5.1: States should require that initiative proponents file a statement of organization as a ballot measure committee prior to collecting signatures. States should void any signature that is gathered before a statement of organization is filed.

Recommendation 5.2: States should provide for safeguards against fraud during the signature gathering process. Safeguards should include:

A. Prohibiting the giving or accepting of money or anything else of value to sign or not sign a petition.
B. Requiring a signed oath by circulators, stating that the circulator witnessed each signature on the petition and that to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are valid.
C. Requiring circulators to disclose whether they are paid or volunteer.

Recommendation 5.3: States should provide for an adequate but limited time period for gathering signatures. The deadline for submission should allow a reasonable time for verification of signatures before the ballot must be certified.

Recommendation 5.4: States should establish a limit on the length of time that verified signatures are valid.

Recommendation 5.5: States should require a higher number of signatures for constitutional amendments than is required for statutory initiatives.

Recommendation 5.6: To achieve geographical representation, states should require that signatures be gathered from more than one area of the state.

Recommendation 5.7: Each state should establish a uniform process for verifying that the required number of valid signatures has been gathered.

Voter Education

Recommendation 6.1: States should provide to the public a manual describing the initiative and referendum process.

Recommendation 6.2: States should encourage public education and discussion about measures on the ballot.

Recommendation 6.3: States should produce and distribute a voter information pamphlet containing information about each measure certified for the ballot.

Recommendation 6.4: In addition to a printed voter information pamphlet, states should consider alternative methods of providing information on ballot measures, such as the Internet, video and audio tapes, toll-free phone numbers, and publication in newspapers.

Financial Disclosure

Recommendation 7.1: States should require financial disclosure by any individual or organization that spends or collects money over a threshold amount for or against a ballot measure.

Recommendation 7.2: After a title has been certified for an initiative measure, states should require that proponents and opponents of the initiative measure file a statement of organization as a ballot measure committee prior to accepting contributions or making expenditures.

Recommendation 7.3: States should make the disclosure requirements for initiative campaigns consistent with the disclosure requirements for candidate campaigns.

Recommendation 7.4: States should prohibit the use of public funds or resources to support or oppose an initiative measure. This should not preclude elected public officials from making statements advocating their position on an initiative measure.

Voting on Initiatives

Recommendation 8.1: States should allow initiatives only on general election ballots.

Recommendation 8.2: States should adopt a requirement that creates a higher vote threshold for passage of a constitutional amendment initiative than for passage of a statutory initiative.

Recommendation 8.3: States should require that any initiative measure that imposes a special vote requirement for the passage of future measures must itself be adopted by the same special vote requirement.

Recommendation 8.4: States should ensure that statutory initiative measures require the same vote threshold for passage that is required of the legislature to enact the same type of statute.

Recommendation 8.5: States should adopt a procedure for determining which initiative measure prevails when two or more initiative measures approved by voters are in conflict.

INTRODUCTION

Initiative and referendum operated quietly in the background of state politics for much of the 20th century, but during the last decade, it has come back into vogue. More initiatives are circulated, more make it to the ballot, and more money is spent in the process than ever before. Consider the numbers: 183 statewide votes on initiatives in the 1970s, 253 in the 1980s, and 383 in the 1990s, more than double the total from the 1970s. California alone accounts for 130 of the total 819 measures during that 30-year period; Oregon can claim 107. Between them, these two states account for nearly 30 percent of all initiatives from 1970 to 1999. It is no wonder that people in California and Oregon are beginning to voice concerns about the initiative process.

Initiative advocates say the resurgence of the initiative is good for states—it means citizens are using it as a tool to implement new laws and reforms that the legislature is unable or unwilling to enact. Besides accomplishing policy change, supporters also say that initiatives increase citizen involvement with government—people are not only more aware of state policy issues, but they are also more likely to vote. For these reasons, movements have begun to establish an initiative process in some of the states that currently do not have such a process.

However, in some states where the initiative is heavily used, there is growing public frustration with initiatives, and some people are beginning to speak out against the process. Legislatures are struggling to find ways to prevent fraud in the signature-gathering process; disclose information about who pays for initiative campaigns; and add flexibility to the process to accommodate more debate, deliberation and compromise than presently exists. Equally concerning to many is the disadvantage that, unlike our legislatures' process of representative government, decisions made through the initiative process do not provide an opportunity to accommodate minority interests. Most importantly, initiatives ask voters to make simple yes-no decisions about complex issues without subjecting the issue to detailed expert analysis and without asking voters to balance competing needs with limited resources. In short, the initiative affects the ability of representative democracy to develop policies and priorities in a comprehensive and balanced manner.

The problems with the initiative process are not easy to solve for a number of reasons. The courts have made it difficult to regulate both petition circulators and initiative campaign finance, and almost any reform can be a difficult political issue because proponents of the initiative generally are hostile to legislative attempts to change the process.

The initiative is a vital and popular part of democracy in half the states (refer to appendix A for a list of initiative states), but it is clear that the initiative has outgrown the existing state laws governing it. NCSL's Initiative and Referendum Task Force set out to first gather the facts and data necessary to paint an accurate picture of how the initiative process works in each state. It identified and focused on problems in the process, then considered ways that the process might be made more open and flexible. The task force feels strongly that the changes it recommends in the initiative process would equally benefit both voters and the legislative process, and that, in the end, a reformed initiative process might produce better public policy.

The task force met three times during a five-month period. Meetings were held on:

- December 7-8, 2001, in Washington, D.C.;
- February 8-9, 2002, in Washington, D.C.; and
- April 26-27, 2002, in Denver, Colorado.

The task force took great care to ensure that it heard testimony from experts and activists on a wide array of issues and from as many points of view as possible. Presenters included both supporters and critics of the initiative process, citizens who use the initiative process, and election administrators. The experts who testified before the task force were:

David Broder, Washington Post, Washington, D.C.;
Lois Court, Save our Constitution, Colorado;
Neal Erickson, Office of the Secretary of State, Nebraska;
Wayne Pacelle, Humane Society of the United States, Washington, D.C.;
John Perez, Speaker's Commission on the California Initiative Process, California;
Honorable Joe Pickens, State Representative, Florida;
Larry Sokol, Speaker's Commission on the California Initiative Process, California;
M. Dane Waters, Initiative and Referendum Institute, Washington, D.C.; and Joseph F. Zimmerman, State University of New York-Albany, New York.

In addition to the experts who testified before the task force, the task force members themselves are experts on the initiative process. The perspectives and suggestions that each member brought to the table contributed to the extensive body of knowledge the task force developed about how the initiative works around the country. Finally, the task force also relied on a wide array of written materials on the initiative process. These include reports from earlier initiative reform commissions and task forces, and the many books and academic papers that are listed in appendix B and in the reference section of this report.

The task force adopted 30 recommendations for legislatures in the initiative states that are seeking guidance on how their initiative process might be improved. Four additional recommendations are meant for states that may be thinking about adopting an initiative process. Although the task force does not recommend that non-initiative states adopt such a procedure, these four recommendations are offered for those states that have, nonetheless, made the decision to go forward.

All the recommendations were based on a set of observations and conclusions about representative and direct democracy that were adopted by the task force at its first meeting. These principles reflect the task force members' belief that it is important to carefully balance the pure democratic impulse of the initiative with the deliberative, consensus-building practices of representative democracy. It also is the belief of task force members that the adoption of this set of recommended reforms by initiative states will lead to a more thoughtful lawmaking process, improved interaction between initiative proponents and legislatures, and ultimately, better public policy.

Observations and Conclusions About Representative and Direct Democracy

Adopted by the NCSL I&R Task Force on April 27, 2002

We offer in the following observations regarding representative and direct democracy.

1. Representative democracy is the foundation of America's system of government.

2. Representative democracy has provided a stable and flexible system of government that has served America well for more than 200 years.

3. Direct democracy, as envisioned in the initiative and referendum system, was first instituted as a check on representative democracy. It was meant to enhance representative government, not to supercede or abolish it.

4. As intended by its founders, the initiative and referendum process was meant to give citizens a tool to break what they perceived as the hold of special interests over some state legislatures.

5. In most of the 24 states where it exists, the initiative is a popular part of the lawmaking process.

6. The initiative brings to the fore issues that may not receive legislative attention or final action and engages citizens in a debate of important public policy issues.

Based on these observations, we draw the following conclusions about direct democracy.

1. The initiative has evolved from its early days as a grassroots tool to enhance representative government. Today, it is often a tool of special interests.

2. The initiative process, as it exists today, lacks some of the critical elements of the representative system of government, including debate, deliberation, flexibility, compromise and transparency.

3. The initiative process does not involve all the checks and balances that representative government does.

4. The initiative can affect the ability of representative democracy to develop policies and priorities in a comprehensive and balanced manner.

5. As the initiative process and the way it is used have evolved over time, a review of the laws governing it is merited.

Banning Payment-per-Signature for Initiative Petition Circulators
Updated May 28, 2008

It is common for initiative sponsors to pay circulators on a per-signature basis to gather petition signatures. Payments typically range from $1 to $3 per signature, and occasionally are as high as $10 per signature. Critics argue that this encourages fraud—since a circulator who collects more signatures will earn more money, circulators who are paid per signature are more likely to commit acts of fraud such as forging signatures or misrepresenting the content of the petition in order to encourage people to sign.

Presently, six states (Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota and Wyoming), have laws which ban initiative sponsors from paying petition circulators per signature. Instead, they may pay a flat fee or an hourly salary. These laws have been challenged in the courts with mixed results. North Dakota and Oregon's provisions have been upheld by the U.S. 9th and 8th Circuit Courts, respectively. However, similar provisions in Idaho, Maine, Mississippi, Ohio and Washington were held unconstitutional by federal district courts. The Ohio case was upheld by the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in March 2008.

Montana (MCA §13-27-102(2)(b))
"A person gathering signatures for the initiative, the referendum, or to call a constitutional convention...may not be paid anything of value based upon the number of signatures gathered" (2007 Mont. Laws, Chap. 481)

Nebraska (NRS §32-630(3)(g))
No person shall pay a circulator based on the number of signatures collected.
(2008 Neb. Laws, L.B. 39)

North Dakota (N.D. Cent. Code §16.1-01-12(11))
"It is unlawful for a person to...[p]ay or offer to pay any person, or receive payment or agree to receive payment, on a basis related to the number of signatures obtained for circulating an initiative, referendum, or recall petition. This subsection does not prohibit the payment of salary and expenses for circulation of the petition on a basis not related to the number of signatures obtained, as long as the circulators file their intent to remunerate prior to submitting the petitions..."
Upheld in 2001 by the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals, Initiative & Referendum Institute v. Jaeger.

Oregon (Or. Const. Art. IV §1b)
"It shall be unlawful to pay or receive money or other thing of value based on the number of signatures obtained on an initiative or referendum petition. Nothing herein prohibits payment for signature gathering which is not based, either directly or indirectly, on the number of signatures obtained. [Created through initiative petition filed Nov. 7, 2001, and adopted by the people Nov. 5, 2002]" Upheld in February 2006 by the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeaks, Prete v. Bradbury.

South Dakota (new section added to §12-13 during the 2007 legislative session, HB 1156)
No person may employ, reward, or compensate any person to circulate a petition for an initiated measure, referred law, or proposed amendment to the South Dakota Constitution based on the number of registered voters who signed the petition. Nothing in this section prohibits any person from employing a petition circulator based on one of the following practices:
(1) Paying an hourly wage or salary;
(2) Establishing either express or implied minimum signature requirements for the petition circulator;
(3) Terminating the petition circulator's employment, if the petition circulator fails to meet certain productivity requirements; and
(4) Paying discretionary bonuses based on reliability, longevity, and productivity.
Any violation of this section is a Class 2 misdemeanor.

Wyoming (Wyo. Stat. §22-24-125)
"A circulator of an initiative or a referendum petition or a person who causes the circulation of an initiative or a referendum petition may not receive payment for the collection of signatures if that payment is based upon the number of signatures collected. Nothing in this section prohibits a circulator of an initiative or a referendum petition or a person who causes the circulation of an initiative or a referendum petition from being paid a salary that is not based upon the number of signatures collected."

Dollar-Amount Limitations on Payment per Signature

In Alaska, circulators may not be paid more than $1 per signature (AS §15.45.110(c)).

House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, AK 99801

Chair Ramras and Members of the House Judiciary Committee,

The Alaska State Chamber of Commerce strongly supports sponsor substitute for House Bill 36. As one of our top five legislative priorities, ballot initiative reform legislation is of great interest to our membership. In order for a more fair initiative process to occur, the Chamber advocates for streamlined financial disclosure requirements and additional opportunities for public involvement within the initiative process. SSHB 36 appears to accomplish both of these tasks, which reflect our written policy encompassing this state chamber legislative priority.

For many, the initiative process has become a way of setting un-vetted state policy with little public input or for that matter, little transparency in whom is funding the initiative. For the business of Alaska and the general business of the state, we believe SSHB 36 makes a good attempt at making the initiative process more open with regards to financial disclosures while opening the initiative process up for general input.

We are hopeful this legislation will receive due diligence by your committee and be moved quickly through the legislative process. Please find our attached legislative priority encompassing most of the material found in SSHB 36.

Best Regards,

Wayne A. Stevens

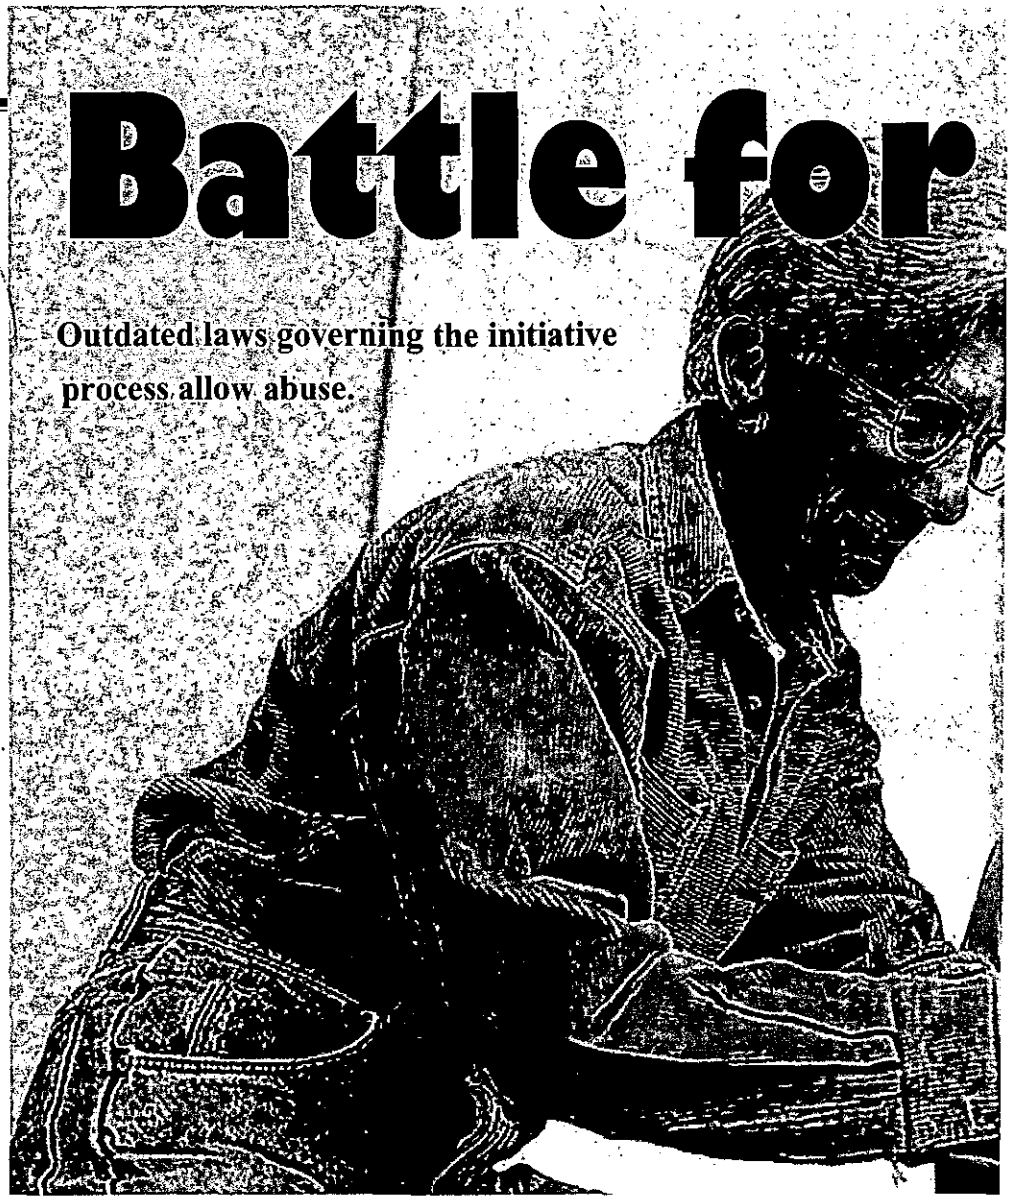
Battle for

Outdated laws governing the initiative process allow abuse.



BY JENNIE DRAGE BOWSER

One of the little-noticed stories of the 2008 election was the escalating tug-of-war between legislatures and activists over the rules governing the citizen initiative process.

The struggle has ramped up dramatically since the 2006 election. Legislatures in the 24 states that allow initiatives have shown a keen interest in improving the process ever since the use of the citizen petition to place issues on the ballot skyrocketed in the 1990s. And recent legislative activity has been higher than ever before.

States have passed about double the number of bills addressing the initiative process in the 2007-2008 biennium (a total of 47 so far, with legislatures still in session in a handful of states) compared to the previous two biennia (22 in 2005-2006 and 32 in 2003-2004).

Why the heightened interest?

The process has changed tremendously in the past two decades. The initiative "industry"—individuals and firms that make a living from the initiative process by researching and drafting proposals, gathering signatures or campaigning for or against initiatives—has exploded. The average number of initiatives on ballots nationwide has doubled from 31 a year in the 1970s to 62 a year in the 2000s. And laws governing the process haven't kept pace.

Some state laws, for example, do not specify which official has the authority to investigate and prosecute abuses, while others lack the capacity to verify that circulators meet the legal qualifications.

Colorado Representative Andy Kerr was one of the co-sponsors of an unsuccessful referendum on the 2008 ballot that would have made qualifying constitutional initiatives harder, but statutory initiatives easier.

REPRESENTATIVE ANDY KERR COLORADO

Jennie Drage Bowser is NCSL's expert on ballot measures.

He sees flaws in the initiative process, particularly in a state that had more measures on the ballot in 2008 than any other state.

"Citizens have a lot of power to change and propose laws and constitutional amendments," he says. "But the way the process is set up in Colorado, our constitution can be changed frequently without these amendments being fully vetted first."

HARD SELL

It is difficult, however, for legislatures to limit the number of initiatives qualifying for ballots, and whether or not they should is a controversial question. Increasing the number of signatures required, tinkering with time limits and restricting the subject matter involves amending state constitutions. And that requires voter approval.

It isn't always easy to convince voters that changing the process is a good idea, as Kerr learned in November.

Making the process more difficult rarely slows down well-funded petition efforts that can afford to hire and pay an army of circulators. It's the grassroots efforts, which depend on volunteers, that suffer from higher signature thresholds and shorter petition timeframes.

Details of the process in state law are what legislatures can, and with increasing frequency do, change without voter approval. States have clarified rules for petition formats, restructured timelines to allow for the added administrative burdens of processing a high volume of petitions, and spelled out more clearly the procedures for evaluating and counting signatures. Voter education is an area ripe for reform, too, particularly as technological advances make it easier to use multimedia and multi-lingual approaches to explain measures on the ballot.

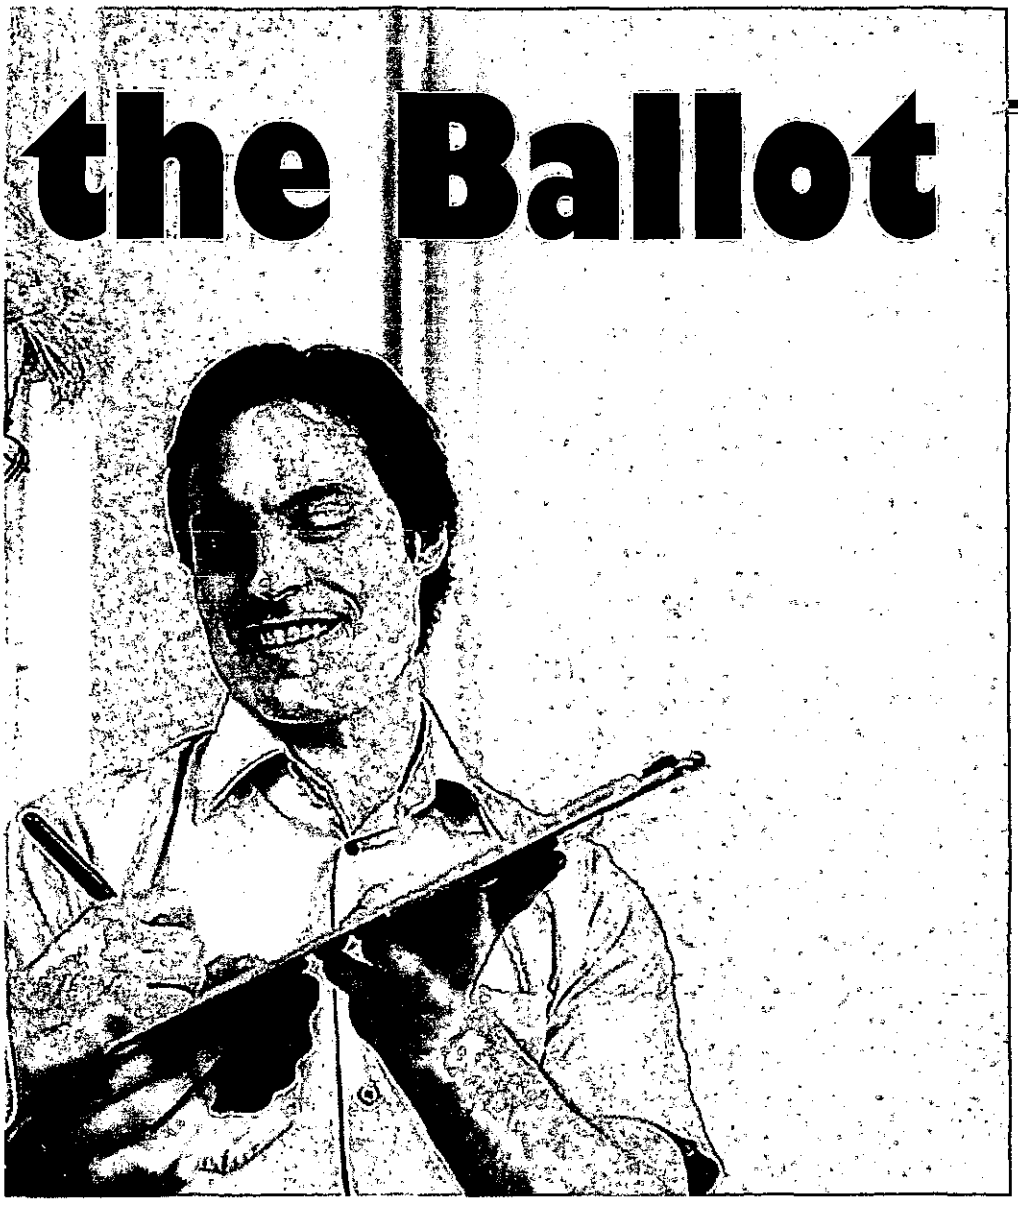
the Ballot



SIGNATURE-GATHERING FRAUD

Along with the explosion in the number of initiatives is the issue of fraud. The courts removed at least half a dozen measures from the ballot in 2006 for deceit in gathering signatures. In a Montana case, a court wrote that the "signature-gathering process was permeated ... by a pattern of deceit, fraud and procedural noncompliance."

Specific instances of fraud in Montana, Nevada and Oklahoma included circulators who opened the phone book and forged the signatures of listings onto their petitions. Others inserted carbon paper and a second petition beneath the one they asked voters to sign, thus obtaining a signature on another petition without the signer's knowledge. One circulator told voters they needed to sign in three different places if they supported the issue. In reality, they were unwittingly signing three separate petitions. And accusations of circulators who misrepresent or conceal the content of their petition are common.

Kristina Wilfore is executive director of the Ballot Initiative Strategy Center, which serves as a clearinghouse for progressive ballot measures. She says policing the process is tough.

"Part of the problem is that the state officials in charge of watching over the process aren't equipped, funded or modernized enough to catch the few bad apples that are responsible for the vast majority of what eventually gets on the ballot," she says.

Wilfore says that it was only a few years ago that she began to hear about extreme abuses in the process by a handful of signature-gathering companies.

Signature-gathering is now dominated by a few professional firms that hire people who make a living moving from state to state. In more than one initiative state, they are not required to register. That means they cannot be identified or prosecuted for fraud because signatures can't be traced to particular circulator. Wilfore calls the signature-gathering process "one of the most neglected areas" of the initiative process when it comes to state laws and regulations.

Efforts to curb abuse include new laws to ban paying signature gatherers on a per-signature basis, and instead require an hourly wage. Six states now prohibit payment-per-signature, with three of those laws adopted in the 2007-2008 legislative session. Other new laws require circulators to offer people a chance to read the proposal in full before signing, set age and residency requirements for circulators, and apply criminal penalties for forgeries and fraud in knowingly submitting a petition with invalid signatures.

ACTIVISTS STRIKE BACK

Initiative supporters are rarely happy when the legislature enacts changes that add to the cost or complexity of the initiative process. In some states, they have fought back by trying to get measures on the ballot that would make the initiative process easier.

But voters don't necessarily support them. In 2006, Colorado voters rejected Amendment 38, an initiative that would have significantly reduced regulation of the initiative process. And petitions easing regulation of the initiative process were circulated but failed to qualify this year in Arizona, Massachusetts, Oregon and Washington.

Legislatures started calling for reform of the initiative process in the early 2000s. It's not just state legislatures that are calling for reform these days, however. Cities and academic groups and even pro-initiative groups have joined the call for change.

Given the number of initiatives on statewide ballots over the past two decades, it's clear the initiative is not going away. It will continue to be a vibrant process in most of the states that allow it. But it's up to legislatures to ensure the process promotes ethical behavior among those involved, and that the rules surrounding it allow for as much transparency and deliberation as possible without restraining a process whose popularity is not likely to decline. It's not an easy task, and is certain to be one that legislatures grapple with well into the next decade.

Alaska's initiatives need review

Kyle Johansen

Published Wednesday, March 25, 2009

The Open and Transparent Initiative Act is an attempt to tackle an enormous problem we have in Alaska: Our initiative process is used as a way for special interests to maneuver around the lawmaking body to enact laws without regard for the public as a whole.

The right to petition government belongs to the citizens of Alaska. It is imperative that the process be protected from abuse. HB 36 offers those safeguards. I am taking this opportunity to review the changes I believe need to happen to protect our initiative process.

Initiative sponsors are not required to host public hearings. However, the Legislature is required to host public hearings on all bills that are voted on as a body. Most bills receive multiple committee referrals and spend hours being publicly vetted. Though bills passed by the Legislature and initiatives passed by the people have the same effect, they are not held to the same public hearing requirements. Mandating a proposed initiative go through a public hearing process is an essential element for developing sound public policy.

HB 36 requires that a standing committee review the proposed initiative. This allows the affected state agencies to come forward and express how the initiative will effect their operations. When a bill is in front of the Legislature, the affected state agencies come before the appropriate committee and explain the implementation of the policy. Initiatives that are passed by the people are law, and the agencies that have to administer those laws should be afforded the same ability.

Prohibiting initiatives that are substantially similar to a failed initiative says the people have spoken. We have seen the same initiatives proposed year after year with a lack of regard for the public's will. If an initiative fails, the public has spoken. However, people's attitudes, beliefs and perceptions can change. That is why I think it is appropriate that failed initiatives be restricted from the ballot for one election cycle to save the state money, time and resources.

Signature-gatherers are commonly paid on a per-signature basis. In Alaska, they are not supposed to receive more than $1 per signature. Twenty-four states have an initiative process, and many have banned the practice of paying per signature because of fraud.

Petition circulators in other states have been caught using disingenuous practices to gather more signatures to receive a bigger paycheck. If petition circulators did not collect payment based on the amount of signatures, they would be less inclined to commit fraud.

Petition circulators are allowed to solicit signatures for more than one initiative at a time. This means that someone can have multiple clipboards outside the grocery store, shuffling them around while trying to convince you to sign their petitions. It is easy to confuse which petition was explained to you and which petition you have agreed to sign.

Petition circulators should be allowed to collect signatures for only one initiative at a time to reduce confusion, deceptive practices and misleading information.

Unlike the current initiative process, HB 36 will go through many public committee hearings where it will be vetted, debated and amended. This is a chance for the public to weigh in on the bill, for lawmakers to ask questions and clarify issues of concern, for changes to be proposed and many other aspects to be publicly debated so the best public policy is put forward. As a reminder, this is not required of initiative legislation. What you see is what you get, and unfortunately, what you don't see is what you get as well.

I encourage you to read the legislation yourself.

Please form your own opinions based on the facts of the bill itself, rather than regurgitate information given to you by parties with their own agenda. HB 36 can be found at www.legis.state.ak.us/basis.

House Bill 49

"An Act further limiting the exercise of eminent domain"

HB 49 strengthens the individual's property rights by protecting privately owned recreational structures from the exercise of eminent domain for recreational purposes.

Eminent domain is an important right of the government. However, it should only be used for the most judicious of purposes, and every effort should be made to minimize its impact to the right of the individual to own private property.

AS 09.55.240 limits the government's authority to exercise eminent domain and seize personal residences by clearly outlining its legitimate use (namely the construction and/or expansion of roads, schools, and public buildings) and by prohibiting its exercise for the purpose of economic development or to generate increased government revenues.

HB 49 affords privately owned recreational structures the same protection from government seizure already granted to personal residences in AS 09.55.240.

The right to own private property is one of the most important rights of Alaskans. By prohibiting government seizure of privately owned recreational structures for recreational purposes, HB 49 strengthens that right and ensures the continued use of land in the greatest of ways – that of private ownership.

"An Act relating to the prohibition of the exercise of the power of eminent domain against a recreational structure for the purposes of developing a recreational facility or project."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.55.240(e) is amended to read:

(e) The power of eminent domain may not be exercised for the purpose of developing a recreational facility or project if the property to be acquired includes an individual landowner's personal residence or recreational structure or that portion of an individual's property attached to and within 250 linear feet of an individual landowner's personal residence or recreational structure unless the landowner consents either before or after a condemnation proceeding has been filed. In this subsection, "recreational structure" means a permanent structure that is used by the owner or beneficiary of a trust holding legal title to the structure as a dwelling for seasonal recreational purposes.

* Sec. 2. AS 09.55.240(h)(3) is amended to read:

(3) "personal residence" means a structure that is the dwelling place of an individual that

(A) must be used by the owner or beneficiary of a trust holding legal title to the structure as a dwelling unit, as opposed to a rental, storage, or other commercial space;

(B) must be inhabited by the owner, prior owner, or beneficiary of a trust holding legal title to the structure for at least 90 days during the 12-month period immediately before the date an action for the exercise of the power of eminent domain is filed;

(C) must constitute an ordinary home for general living purposes [, AS OPPOSED TO A DWELLING USED ONLY FOR SEASONAL RECREATIONAL OR TEMPORARY PURPOSES]; and

(D) may not have been constructed, placed, or occupied for the purpose of avoiding eminent domain proceedings;

RE: House Bill 49 - "An Act relating to the prohibition of the exercise of the power of eminent domain against a recreational structure for the purposes of developing a recreational facility or project."

Dear Representative Johnson,

The Alaska Association of REALTORS® with over 1,600 members statewide supports House Bill 49, which relates to eminent domain and recreational structures.

The Association supported HB 318, the eminent domain legislation which defined whether or not it is appropriate to take a person's private property for economic development and whether it is appropriate to take all or part of one's primary residence for recreational opportunities of another.

We favor this consumer protection legislation because it would change the definition of primary residences to include recreational structures and second homes which are very common throughout Alaska.

The Association encourages the passage of House Bill 49.

Sincerely,

Art Clark
AAR President

(f) Notwithstanding the limitations on the power of eminent domain in (d) and (e) of this section, the legislature may approve the exercise of eminent domain against private property in an Act, the subject of which is limited to the transfer of the property for a purpose otherwise restricted under (d) or (e) of this section.

(g) The power of eminent domain may only be delegated by statute.

(h) In this section,

(1) "common carrier" has the meaning given in AS 04.16.125;

(2) "economic development" means development of property for a commercial enterprise carried on for profit or to increase tax revenue, tax base, or employment;

(3) "personal residence" means a structure that is the dwelling place of an individual that

(A) must be used by the owner or beneficiary of a trust holding legal title to the structure as a dwelling unit, as opposed to a rental, storage, or other commercial space;

(B) must be inhabited by the owner, prior owner, or beneficiary of a trust holding legal title to the structure for at least 90 days during the 12-month period immediately before the date an action for the exercise of the power of eminent domain is filed;

(C) must constitute an ordinary home for general living purposes, as opposed to a dwelling used only for seasonal recreational or temporary purposes; and

(D) may not have been constructed, placed, or occupied for the purpose of avoiding eminent domain proceedings;

(4) "private person" means a person that is not a public corporation as defined in AS 45.77.020 or a government as defined in AS 11.81.900;

(5) "recreational facility or project"

(A) means a facility or project, the primary purpose of which is recreational;

(B) includes a park, trail or pedestrian pathway, greenbelt, amusement park, fresh water boat harbor, sports facility, playground, infrastructure, or other facility related to or in support of an indoor or outdoor recreational facility or project;

(C) does not include

(i) a highway, sidewalk, or path within the right-of-way of a highway;

(ii) a path, trail, or lane used as a safe route to a school program;

(iii) a wayside or rest stop;

(iv) a development, the primary purpose of which is not recreational, such as a path, trail, or lane developed to reduce congestion, or to encourage use of an alternate, gas-saving mode of transportation;

(v) a path or trail to or between villages or from a village to a facility or resource;

(vi) a stormwater retention or treatment facility or wetland, habitat, or other acquisition required to obtain a permit for a highway, airport, or other public project;

(vii) a taking under AS 19.05.110, 19.05.120, AS 19.22.020, AS 27.21.300, AS 35.20.040, 35.20.050, or AS 41.35.060;

(viii) a taking not prohibited by law before January 1, 2007, under AS 41.21; and

(ix) a path, trail, road, or site for which no reasonable alternative exists and which is necessary to preserve or establish public access to or along publicly owned land or water, if the use of the path, trail, road, or site itself is for transportation to or to facilitate use of publicly owned land or water. (§ 13.01 ch 101 SLA 1962; am § 2 ch 72 SLA 1972; am § 1 ch 62 SLA 1973; am § 24 ch 3 FSSLA 1973; am § 15 ch 59 SLA 1982; am §§ 2, 3 ch 84 SLA 2006)

Cross references. — For statement of legislative intent and findings for the 2006 amendment of (a) of this section and addition of (d) — (h) of this section, see § 1, ch. 84, SLA 2006, in the 2006 Temporary and Special Acts.

Effect of amendments. — The 2006 amendment, effective October 3, 2006, added "Except as provided in (d) and (e) of this section" at the beginning of subsection (a), inserted paragraph (a)(8), renumbering paragraphs (a)(8) — (12) as (a)(9) — (13), added subsections (d) through (h), and made a minor stylistic change.

Editor's notes. — Under § 6, ch. 84, SLA 2006, the 2006 amendment of (a) of this section and addition of (d) — (h) of this section apply "only to condemnation actions filed on or after October 3, 2006."

Opinions of attorney general. — The state may use its condemnation powers for a state office complex to be constructed by, and leased from, a private developer. In order to insure that the leasing arrangement clearly qualifies as a public use, however, the department should enter into a long-term lease with the developer, and should not grant the developer any sort of purchase option at the conclusion of the lease term. April 17, 1981, Op. Att'y Gen.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

I. General Consideration.
II. Power to Condemn.
III. Public Uses.
A. Generally.
B. Mines.
C. Tramway Lines.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Eminent domain proceedings are unique, and are governed by comprehensive rules of procedure applicable to condemnation actions alone. Stewart & Grindle, Inc. v. State, 524 P.2d 1242 (Alaska 1974).

Strict construction. — Eminent domain statutes are universally construed strictly, particularly where a different construction would render the act of doubtful validity. Northern Mining & Trading Co. v. Alaska Gold Recovery Co., 20 F.2d 5 (9th Cir. 1927).

Public subject matter. — The subject matter of eminent domain proceedings is one of public rather than of private interest. Alaska Gold Recovery Co. v. Northern Mining & Trading Co., 7 Alaska 386 (1926).

Questions to be considered by court. — Ordinarily the only questions to be considered by the courts in condemnation proceedings are: First, whether the petitioner has the power to exercise the right of eminent domain; second, whether the property itself is of a nature subject to condemnation; third, whether the property is being taken for a public or a private use; and fourth, whether the power is being used for taking an excessive amount of property. Town of Seward v. Margules, 9 Alaska 354 (1938).

Appropriation deemed exercise of power of eminent domain. — Neither the failure of the state to institute a condemnation action nor the owners' assertion of a claim based on the theory of trespass changed the essential nature of the state's action in appropriating the owners' property from one of the exercise of the power of eminent domain. State, Dep't of Highways v. Crosby, 410 P.2d 724 (Alaska 1966).

Improvements to right of way reserved in patent. — While the original reservation of a right-of-way and election provided for in former § 41-1-4 ACLA 1949 was without limitation as to initial choice on the part of either the federal government or Alaska, once the right-of-way has been selected and defined, later improvements necessitating the utilization of land upon which the road is not already located can only be accomplished pursuant to the condemnation and compensation provisions of this article. Hillstrand v. Alaska, 181 F. Supp. 219 (D. Alaska 1960), petition for interlocutory review denied, 282 F.2d 633 (1960).

Cited in Mount Juneau Enters., Inc. v. City of Juneau, 922 P.2d 768 (Alaska 1996).

II. POWER TO CONDEMN.

Inherent power in government. — The power of eminent domain is inherent in the government and does not depend upon the constitution. Alaska Gold Recovery Co. v. Northern Mining & Trading Co., 7 Alaska 386 (1926).

Constitution only acts as limitation on power. — See Alaska Gold Recovery Co. v. Northern Mining & Trading Co., 7 Alaska 386 (1926).

The right of a municipality to proceed in eminent domain is conferred, when this section is considered in connection with the express statutory grant of power to municipalities to provide for the location, construction, and maintenance of the necessary streets, alleys, crossings, sidewalks, sewers, and wharves. Ashby v. City of Juneau, 174 F. 737 (9th Cir. 1910).

The power to locate and construct a street can only be exercised by a municipality, and can only be made effective by invoking the power of eminent domain. Ashby v. City of Juneau, 174 F. 737 (9th Cir. 1910).

Borough. — A borough's authority to condemn land for a school can be inferred from the eminent domain statutory scheme. Greater Anchorage Area Borough v. 10 Acres More or Less, 563 P.2d 269 (Alaska 1977).

The express and exclusive authority to operate a school system, coupled with the statutory permission to condemn land for public buildings for school districts, conferred upon a borough the authority to condemn land for a school. Greater Anchorage Area Borough v. 10 Acres More or Less, 563 P.2d 269 (Alaska 1977).

Pipeline company as agent of state. — Although pipeline company could, upon delegation from state, exercise power of eminent domain through declaration of taking or otherwise, its statutory authority does not extend so far as to immunize it from liability for trespass if it has not initiated eminent domain proceedings. Ostrem v. Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co., 648 P.2d 986 (Alaska 1982).

Right of foreign or domesticated corporations to condemn lands. — See Miocene Ditch Co. v. Lyng, 138 F. 544 (9th Cir. 1905).

III. PUBLIC USES.

A. Generally.

"Public use" extends to use for public welfare. — The term "public use" has received enlarged scope and meaning, and the test is no longer confined to use by the public, but use for the public welfare. The power of a state to work out from the conditions existing in a mining region the largest welfare of its inhabitants has often been recognized. Alaska Gold Recovery Co. v. Northern Mining & Trading Co., 7 Alaska 386 (1926).

Question of public use is ultimately for jury. — The question whether the use is in fact public or not, so as to justify the taking without the consent of the owner, is, ultimately, one which the courts alone may determine. Alaska Gold Recovery Co. v. Northern

Sponsor Statement

House Bill 52

"An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony."

The jury system is a fundamental component of the American legal system. Jurors are asked to carry out a civic duty, yet there is the possibility of experiencing excessive levels of stress and no support is offered to help jurors cope with normal reactions to abnormal events, at its worse resembling a milder version of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. Categorized as secondary trauma, jurors become traumatized through the traumatic experience of victims.

House Bill 52 would allow judges to offer 10 hours of post-trial group counseling to a juror who serves in a criminal trial involving extraordinarily graphic, gruesome, or emotional evidence or testimony. This bill would not apply to every juror in every case. Counseling sessions are necessary in only a small percentage of trials but are nonetheless highly valuable when needed.

The public's impression of the administration of justice is largely based on jury service. Offering counseling to jurors will ensure that care it taken of citizens' welfare, while also enhancing positive public attitudes toward jury service. As the government compels citizens to report for jury duty, it should minimize the burden it places on jurors. With public trust and confidence as a fundamental goal of courts nationwide, judges, court administrators and court staff must be concerned with the juror experience and the effect of the experience upon those called to serve. Jurors are unprepared for some consequences and courts do not currently provide any assistance in finding help from mental health professionals. In order to protect the integrity of the legal system I think courts are obligated to help improve the jury experience, including addressing juror stress. Proper counseling helps people cope with their normal reactions to abnormal events and provides tools to adapt to those reactions. I greatly appreciate your support of House Bill 52.

House Bill 52 would allow a trial judge to offer a juror up to 10 hours of counseling services following a trial that involved extraordinarily gruesome or emotional testimony or evidence. This option would be available in homicide, felony assault and sex offense cases. The court system would contract with local counselors or psychologists for the counseling services. Although difficult to estimate, this note assumes that approximately 10 jurors a year would take advantage of the 10 hours of counseling and that the court system will be able to procure that counseling at an average rate of $150 and hour.

RE: Support for House Bill 52

Members of the Legislature,

First, I would like to thank the legislature for considering House Bill 52, which will grant some form of counseling for Jurors in a criminal trial. My reason for requesting and supporting this legislation is because of my experiences as a juror on a murder trial. I know I am not the only one who feels this way. Details of the trial are still painful to recall, but if my remembering can help even one future juror begin healing far earlier than I did through this early counseling/intervention, then that may bring me another measure of peace; to know something good can come from something so completely gruesome.

I have lived in Alaska for over 15 years. It is a place of peace and great beauty. However three years ago I answered a jury summons and, suddenly, for two weeks, my mind was saturated with facts no person should have to carry around. It was like watching a horror movie for seven hours (or so) a day and not being allowed out of the theatre except to sleep and get ready for the next day's movie.

I learned in great detail how two men plotted to torture an innocent woman to death. A woman, who served her community, loved her family and had no idea what awaited her. I sat in the same room with the murderers and experienced and watched a level of emotion in that court room that was intense and overwhelming. It was slow torture for me. Every night I cried at home and felt so alone because I had taken an oath as a juror and could not share any details of the horrors I was hearing even with my closest friend and confidant, my husband. For two weeks I took it in. Each night was a challenge to sleep and each morning a test in determination to stay strong and walk into the court room.

What did I learn from my court experience? That there are many ways to break into a house; that breaking a person's neck is not as simple as they make it on television; that you can never be sure what another person's distorted view of you could be; that someone could be lying in wait for you to come home alone so as to abduct you and burn you alive.

I also learned you cannot imagine the challenges you will face as a juror on a criminal trial. That even though what you hear in court did not happen to you, knowing that it did happen to someone, seeing the parties involved and having them see you are more intense than you can expect. That getting over it and moving on is not as simple in practice as it is in theory for a juror.

When the trial was over I approached our Judge, for whom I have great respect as she was the only saving grace of this awful experience. I asked if there was any form of counseling or other resources available to help in transitioning out of this trial. She stated the court system does not provide for counseling or any other kind of support following a criminal trial.

I asked her with tears in my eyes, how am I supposed to get all this out of my head? I feel like I have lived this event and I don't know what to do with it. I wanted my peaceful life back; I want to be able to feel the peace I had before the trial. She apologized and said there was nothing she can offer.

I believe if there had been some form of counseling available to provide jurors tools for processing and releasing the intense and graphic details of a criminal trial, then healing could have started a lot earlier for me and the people I served with. I tried to repress the experience. It wasn't until over a year later when the anxiety and stress became too overwhelming that I finally turned to counseling and was diagnosed with post traumatic stress disorder. Today, I am pleased to report, I have found better tools to help me move on and the beauty of Alaska has returned to my life.

As jurors we live through the details of these violent and disturbing trials essentially in silence. Trying very hard to rationalize and process what we're seeing and hearing. This has an impact... an impact on people such as what I am still dealing with today. I believe passing this bill is a very important step in supporting the jurors of violent trials and helping them find a path back to peace. I urge you to support House Bill 52 and the constituents who have or will serve on jury duty.

Again, thank you for your time and consideration.
Very Sincerely,

Mindy Lobaugh

Dear Representative Kerttula:

I'm writing to extend my utmost support for your legislation – HB 52 - "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony."

As a juror on the 2003 Joshua Wade trial in Anchorage, I can attest to the need for counseling after a trial involving a heinous crime against an individual. Unlike prime time TV where crimes are committed, investigated and solved in 60 minutes, real life murder trials are gruesome, disturbing and in our case, debated in a court room over the course of nearly four months. Blood spatter patterns, rape, death by repeated blows to the head with a rock, torture, dehumanization – I would argue that these may be things judges, prosecutors, police officers, forensic specialists are trained and equipped to psychologically handle, but the average citizen called to jury duty is not.

At the conclusion of our trial, we were given specific instruction on how to process the evidence, on how to deliberate, on how to come to deliver a verdict according to the instruction presented by the court. We were not however, given any instruction on how we might move past the sound of the victim's mother wailing in the courtroom; of the pictures that we were shown day after day of a woman's raped and beaten body; of the testimony from expert witnesses stating that for blood to have traveled "x" feet from a body, it would have had to have been beaten with "y" severity.

Fortunately, I have a friend and colleague who does trauma counseling. At the conclusion of the Wade trial, this individual did one group counseling session (gratis) for all of us; she then saw me (again, gratis) for several other sessions so that I could further process, and move beyond the prior 4 months. Not all jurors will be as fortunate to have access to free services.

Thank you for your leadership in recognizing and addressing the needs of ordinary citizens who find themselves on an extraordinary jury. While it is our duty to serve, I believe that it is also the duty of the court to provide a means of support at the conclusion of a particularly heinous trial.

With thanks,

Dear Representative Kerttula:

Thank you for sponsoring HB 52, "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony." Throughout my years of as an emergency responder and law enforcement professional, I have witnessed responder trauma caused by reactions to critical incidents. It is appropriate that jurors, as an important component of the law enforcement and judicial systems, become entitled to the same assistance enjoyed by other members of our law enforcement team.

Proper counseling prepares people for their normal reactions to abnormal events. It also provides tools to adapt to those reactions. Loss of sleep, reliving events and disruption of normal routines are just some of the examples of normal reactions to critical incidents that people may not intuitively understand. They may attribute their seemingly abnormal reactions weakness in their own character, or by misattributing their changed behavior to concurrent, yet unrelated events in their lives. Their normal coping skills may be ill prepared to help them, and may actually cause them to turn use mal-adaptive coping mechanisms such as self-medication, or withdrawal from their emotional support networks when they most need them. I can attest that some responders suffer negative life-altering changes by ignoring proper counseling.

Ultimately, the public benefit of providing counseling is the facilitation of jurors' orderly return to daily life, prepared to appropriately respond to their experience. And although they may remain forever changed by vicarious trauma, they will have the skill to properly deal with their reactions. Thank you for your efforts, you have my support.

Dear Representative Beth Kerttula:

Thank you for considering HB 52, "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony." We understand that certain criminal trials can generate serious levels of stress among jurors that can last weeks or months after the trial is over. Traditionally, jurors in a critical trial end their service without ascertaining whether or not the events of that trial have had any psychological impact. For years, there have been cases of post-trial jurors experiencing their own mental pain and difficulty focusing back on their daily lives. Symptoms of juror stress manifest themselves as a number of physical and psychological reactions, including increased anxiety and frustration, disrupted eating and sleeping routines, nausea, depression, and anger and hostility. In many instances, talking to jurors about their symptoms validates their feelings and helps them understand that what they are experiencing is normal and can in itself bring considerable stress relief.

After exposure to a highly graphic criminal case jurors can develop stress by having to relive the traumatic experiences of the victim. For some, it is difficult to suddenly step back into their own world without some form of closure. We believe this is a unique opportunity for courts to have a positive interaction with individuals from the communities they serve. A juror who is asked to fulfill their civic duty should be protected from the potentially negative health effects of the trial process.

In general, post-trial group counseling could reduce stress and offer information on mental health services for those who might need it, provide closure, promote confidence in the judicial system, and enhance satisfaction. We support HB 52 because it would offer traumatized jurors access to group counseling services to help counteract the negative effects which may result from jury service.

Sincerely,

Gerad Godfrey

Dear Representative Kerttula:

I believe this is an important bill. As a social worker, I often work through very emotionally difficult situations and problems with clients. This can lead to professional grief, a topic social workers are familiar with and so often form support networks to help them process the challenges of the profession. There are times when I have been very shaken and traumatized by the work I do and I lean on the supports I have developed. However, jurors might not even be aware of the concept of professional grief and likely won't have the networks they need to process what they have been through. I think professional grief can be due to cumulative stress or one particularly stressful event. I think that not only should the counseling be offered, but that jurors participating in traumatic cases should also be advised that counseling should be considered, even if they don't think they will need it.

Professional grief can bring about responses that might not seem to be associated with the cause of the grief. In addition, professional grief often takes the form of hidden grief and is internalized and unexpressed. Individuals experiencing it might feel irritable, angry, anxious, helpless, or guilty without relating it to the experience. Jurors should be made aware of the possibility of professional grief and the importance of working through it.

Please let me know if you have any other questions. Thank you and good luck!

Vicarious Traumatisation as a Consequence of Jury Service

NOELLE ROBERTSON, GRAHAM DAVIES and ALICE NETTLEINGHAM

Noelle Robertson is Senior Lecturer in Clinical Psychology, Graham Davies is Professor Emeritus and Alice Nettleingham is Graduate Student, School of Psychology, University of Leicester

Abstract: Recent research on past-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) has highlighted the adverse consequences of trauma, not just for victims, but also for those who interact with them: vicarious traumatisation. British citizens are required to sit on juries, where they may be exposed to gruesome exhibits and harrowing testimony: can such experiences also lead to vicarious traumatisation? Previous studies have demonstrated that some jurors do suffer both short- and longer-term trauma from jury service, both from hearing evidence and deliberation in the jury room. A first exploratory survey of British jurors confirms that a minority of jurors are so affected. The article calls for modifications to the current arbitrary allocation of jurors and for greater provision of information and guidance to minimise the negative consequences of an essential civic duty.

Keywords: juries; stress; vicarious traumatisation

To serve as a member of a jury is considered a civic duty, not only in Britain, but also in the United States and most Commonwealth countries (Vidmar 2000; Kaplan and Martin 2006). In England and Wales, following the Criminal Justice Act 2003, almost all citizens aged between the ages of 18 and 69 years are now eligible for jury service (the exceptions being those with serious mental health problems or significant criminal records). On average, some 390,000 citizens serve on juries each year, selected at random from those on the electoral role (Jury Central Summoning Bureau 2007). Once at court, all prospective jurors are shown a film briefly outlining their duties and allocation of jurors to particular trials is arbitrary. Some jurors will be selected to serve on cases involving crimes against the person and will be exposed to testimony from visibly distressed victims, which will frequently be graphic and shocking. They will be expected to handle exhibits and examine explicit and gruesome photographs. When they retire to the jury room, they will have to rehearse such evidence and weigh up its significance for the guilt of the accused before reaching a verdict. They may find themselves in a minority on the jury, trying to change the minds of others while resisting pressures to conform to the majority view. All these processes have the potential to lead to significant distress, both in the short and longer term, for the jurors concerned. Yet, despite its time-honoured tradition, little research has been conducted to date on the impact of jury service on jurors' mental health and well-being. This article reports a first exploratory study on the stresses experienced by jurors in England and Wales and raises the question as to whether current procedures could have serious long-term consequences for at least a minority of vulnerable citizens.

Research on the Impact of Stress and Trauma

In recent years, considerable research has been directed toward understanding the consequences of traumatic experience for an individual's mental health (Ozer et al.. 2003). Experiences yielding traumatic consequences include events with a direct threat to the person involved, such as sexual or physical assaults, and responses to disasters, both natural (the Boxing-Day Tsunami) and man-made (road traffic accidents; the King's Cross Fire). Most information, however, has been derived from studies of veterans of active military service; indeed, it was as a direct result of such research on US survivors of the Vietnam conflict that the condition of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) was formally recognised and defined in the psychiatric literature.

Symptoms shown by patients diagnosed with PTSD can include excessive arousal and irritability, behaviours to avoid reminders of traumatic material, emotional numbing, and impaired memory for the original events, which nonetheless intrude into consciousness as 'flash-backs', with all the vividness and intensity of the original experience (DSM-IV-TR 2004). A more recent development has been the recognition that traumatisation is not confined solely to the victims of overwhelming events: it can also affect those endeavouring to help them. Professionals such as the police, emergency services and medical personnel called to the scene, even the therapists who treat the victims and must empathise with the intensely distressing accounts offered by survivors, may all develop PTSD symptoms: so-called vicarious traumatisation (McCann and Pearlman 1990). The question arises as to whether jurors, too, can suffer such vicarious traumatisation through exposure to and empathy with victim accounts and gruesome evidence at trial. It can be argued that only in long and complex trials is their immersion likely to be prolonged, but the material with which they must grapple will often be shocking and vivid and may have relevance to their own experiences. Some support for this view comes from the limited previous studies which have explored juror stress.

Individual Juror Reactions: Jury Debriefing

Reports on the impact of stress on individual jurors have figured in many articles in the media (for example, Woolcock 2007; McAree 2004; Trafford and White 2003; Davies 2005) and at least one television programme. In Juror (BBC Television 1997), ordinary people involved in jury service in high-profile trials reflected on its impact on their lives. 'Jenny' reported that she had turned up at the court 'a happy, confident level-headed person' but after ten days of the trial, she was 'too frightened to open her front door'. Another juror reported: 'we all felt terribly vulnerable and exposed: stuck in a nightmare we could not get out of'. Other jurors felt that their experiences and reactions were not understood: 'I don't think they appreciate what it costs an ordinary person to do their civic duty'. The prohibitions on speaking to others embodied in the Law of Contempt had been impressed upon them and this served to increase their isolation: 'We were given clear instructions not to talk to anyone. I wanted desperately to talk to anybody, but I couldn't, not even my husband'.

These anecdotal reports are supported by more systematic accounts collected by psychologists and psychiatrists who have been called in to discuss with jurors their experiences and feelings after trials in which stress has been an issue. Such 'juror debriefing' is modelled on the controversial 'critical incident stress debriefing' sometimes offered to emergency service personnel after major incidents. Such debriefing for jurors is widely employed in the US, but rarely in the UK, although the jury in the Rosemary West serial murder case were offered counselling at the end of the trial (Lloyd-Bostock and Thomas 1999).

Feldmann and Bell (1993) were recruited to debrief the jury following the sensational trial of serial killer, Jeffrey Dahmer. Among symptoms reported by all jurors were sleep disturbances, intrusive thoughts, restlessness and agitation. Jurors attributed these symptoms to the graphic evidence to which they had been exposed, their lack of knowledge of legal procedure, and the insensitive and patronising way in which they were treated by the officers of the court and expert witnesses. Jurors reported that their difficulties were not exclusive to the evidence and exhibits, but also extended to the decision-making process (see also Feldmann and Bell 1991; Bell and Feldmann 1992). Kaplan and Winget (1992) interviewed 40 jurors who had deliberated in four high-profile trials including two murder cases. No fewer than 27 jurors reported stress-related symptoms including depression, sexual problems, headaches, eating disorders and somatic complaints: gastro-intestinal distress being the most frequently cited (ten jurors). Some seven jurors became physically ill during the course of the proceedings and at least one fulfilled DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of PTSD.

Clearly, these were high-profile trials, frequently featuring crimes involving extreme violence, where there was sufficient official concern over their impact on individual jurors to warrant professional intervention. While the long-term benefits of juror debriefing remain a matter of controversy (for example, Figley 1995), these studies provide ample evidence that jurors in these trials suffered significant amounts of stress and on occasion, longer-term trauma. However, it can be argued that such cases provide a poor guide as to the likely experiences of the average juror in a typical trial. For a more representative picture, it is necessary to look at surveys conducted on jurors in a wider range of cases, involving both person-centred and property offences.

Systematic Surveys of Perceived Levels of Juror Stress

Most of the published survey studies have been conducted with American jurors. In a pioneering study, Shuman, Hamilton and Daley (1994) secured questionnaires from 152 individuals who had served on juries in the Dallas area. Respondents had served on what were defined as traumatic (for example, murder; kidnapping; aggravated sexual assault) and non-traumatic trials (for example, burglary; credit card fraud; drug possession). They provided self-ratings of stress as a consequence of jury service, in addition to background information relating to the trial and themselves, including any pre-existing medical conditions to control for levels of pre-trial stress. Participants who had sat on trials classified as traumatic reported nearly three times as many PTSD-related symptoms as those in non-traumatic trials and overall, women reported significantly more symptoms than did men, but the symptoms persisted longer amongst the men. Deliberation emerged as a particular source of stress for all jurors with the effects being more persistent than for other stressors, such as shocking visual material. A later study by Bornstein et al. (2005) underlined the significance of deliberation as a source of stress, both at trial and post-trial as well as examining the impact of professional post-trial debriefing. Whilst the interventions were well received by jurors at the time, they had no noticeable impact on the severity of symptoms at a one-month follow-up, consistent with other evidence noting only transitory effects of debriefing (Arendt and Elklit 2001).

In the most comprehensive study of stress in American jurors, conducted by the National Center for State Courts (NCSC) (1998), judicial opinion was surveyed as well as the views of 401 jurors involved in diverse cases across six jurisdictions. Jurors completed three questionnaires. The Jury Duty Survey was modelled on the Impact of Events Scale routinely used in PTSD research (Horowitz, Wilner and Alvarez 1979) and required jurors to give a yes/no response to a series of statements covering jury service (for example, 'I look back on my jury with fondness'). The Jury Environment Scale covered various aspects of jury duty, including interactions with judges, court officials and fellow jurors. The Jury Duty Stress Scale required jurors to rate some 50 potential sources of stress at trial (for example, receiving summons; grisly evidence; media coverage) on a five-point scale; judges, too, completed this scale. In addition, judges were asked to recall their most recent trial where juror stress was an issue, to describe how they detected it and what, if anything, they did to minimise the problem.

The NCSC found that jurors involved in all types of trial reported significant amounts of stress. The highest numbers of respondents reported stress in cases concerning offences against the person, with murder trials involving a decision on the death penalty producing the highest of all (86%). Reported stress increased with length of trial, reaching 92% for cases which lasted for over eleven days. A common response of those under stress was to speak to others regarding their experiences, a reaction also noted in a smaller-scale study of US jurors by Kelley (1994). In general, jurors attributed higher levels of stress to their fellow jurors than they did to themselves. Again, jury discussions and reaching a verdict were rated the most distressing aspects of the trial, more so than harrowing aspects of the evidence.

This picture of widespread concern among jurors over their experiences may be contrasted with the perceptions of the judges, some 30% of whom could not recall a single trial in the preceding year where stress had been an issue. Over 90% of judges believed that fewer than 10% of jurors suffered as a consequence of jury service, but did acknowledge that it was their duty to minimise distress where it occurred. However, they failed to identify the widespread concern among jurors over the deliberative process and instead, singled out type of trial (child abuse; murder) as the principal cause.

It would be unwise to generalise these US findings to juries as a whole. American juries differ from those in the UK and Commonwealth countries on a wide variety of dimensions: for instance, means by which jurors are selected (the availability of peremptory challenge through the Voir Dire procedure); the rules on unanimity and their particular role in determining the death penalty in those states where capital punishment persists (Kaplan and Martin 2006). Once a trial is completed, American jurors in many states are not bound by the rules of confidentiality which constrain what questions can be asked by researchers regarding their experiences.

Two studies on juror stress which have been conducted in Canada and New Zealand underscore the differences as well as the similarities in juror concerns in different judiciaries. An unpublished dissertation by Chopra (2004) involved some 80 jurors who were solicited through newspaper advertisement in Vancouver and who completed the Jury Duties Stress Scale and an adapted version of the Impact of Events Scale. Patterns of stress in response to different aspects of the proceedings paralleled the NCSC study: deliberative processes generally received high ratings. Indeed, seven of the top ten concerns focused on aspects of group decision making. Levels of stress reported were generally much higher in the Canadian than in the US study and 11.3% of jurors reported a cluster of symptoms consistent with PTSD. Chopra attributes the higher reported stress levels to the lack of opportunity for Canadian jurors to discuss their experiences. However, the method of soliciting the sample may have attracted a disproportionate number of jurors who had negative experiences to disclose.

A government-sponsored study of New Zealand jurors (Young, Cameron and Tinsley 1999) included a number of questions designed to probe negative as well as positive aspects of jury service. While 82% of the sample had found the experience worthwhile, some 23% reported feeling tired and exhausted, which they attributed to the need to concentrate on the evidence during the day and loss of sleep at night. As in the US studies, some respondents reported symptoms of stress both during and after the trial: deliberation again figured as a difficulty, along with concern over intimidation from the accused and their associates, and links between their own personal experiences and aspects of the trial evidence. Counselling for jurors is available in New Zealand, but was rarely taken up.

Surprisingly then, no robust study has been undertaken to examine stress experienced by jurors in England, perhaps because of the prohibitions on questioning jurors embodied in Section 8 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981. A major study of the English jury undertaken for the Home Office (Matthews, Hancock and Briggs 2004) was careful to avoid any questions which might be construed as violating the provisions of the Act, but did include a question on juror stress. Matthews, Hancock and Briggs reported that 20% of women and 16% of men had suffered significant stress, with concerns highest among jurors in their 20s and lowest in those aged over 60 years. As in the North American studies, decision-making processes emerged as the greatest source of concern. The authors acknowledged stress as a significant issue, recommending that concerned jurors should have routine access to counselling services.

The current exploratory study examined the levels of stress among jurors serving in the English legal system. It used a novel technique for recruiting a sample of jurors – a web-based questionnaire – but like earlier research it attempted to establish the extent of distress, trauma symptoms and perceived sources of strain reported, in this study, by a representative sample of English jurors. Using and tailoring a range of measures which have been developed and validated in earlier studies, it aimed to compare and contrast the experiences of English jurors with those from other jurisdictions with rather different rules and conventions regarding the selection, duties and conduct of jurors.

The Leicester Study

The web-based questionnaire was compiled with each respondent requested to complete it in its totality. It covered the following:

(i) Personal information, including age, gender, ethnicity, educational level and employment status.

(ii) Information about the trial for which they had served as a juror, including the length of trial, time since participating and the nature of the charges against the defendant.

(iii) A measure of Trait Anxiety derived from the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (Spielberger, Gorsuch and Lushene 1970) consisting of a series of statements, such as: 'I am comfortable; tense; relaxed', for each of which participants were required to rate themselves, using a four-point Likert scale.

(iv) A Prior Trauma questionnaire which invited participants to volunteer any personal history of direct experience of a range of traumatic events (for example: sexual assault/abuse; a major fire).

(v) A Trauma Symptoms Check List (Briere and Runtz 1989) examining whether the juror had experienced any of a range of somatic symptoms (such as headaches, insomnia or weight loss) during and subsequent to the trial.

(vi) The Jury Duty Stress Scale (National Center for State Courts 1998) adapted for use in England. This asked jurors to rate 44 different facets of jury service (for example, disturbing grisly evidence; jury deliberation and

(vii) A measure of post-traumatic stress disorder derived from the Mini International Psychiatric Interview (Sheehan et al. 1998). Respondents were requested to consider their jury service and to respond to 15 questions, including: 'Have you noticed that your feelings are numbed?' and 'Have you had trouble recalling some important part of what happened?' A score of nine positive responses or more predicts the presence of PTSD.

(viii) A Jury Deliberation Questionnaire for which jurors were invited to comment on aspects of the jury process including the impact of being part of a long-term group and the role of foreman, where appropriate.

A pilot study revealed that the on-line questionnaire took typically between 30 and 45 minutes to complete. The questionnaire was also scrutinised by two senior legal academics with a working knowledge of the Contempt of Court Act 1981, to ensure that none of the content infringed the terms of the Act. All questionnaires were submitted on an anonymous basis and care was taken not to elicit information which might have led to the identification of either the juror or the trial on which they sat. Responses for all the clinical measures were assessed for internal consistency using Cronbach's alpha: coefficients ranging from 0.77 to 0.93, indicating robust reliability.

In order to generate interest in completion of the on-line questionnaire, a press release was produced, raising the general issue of whether jury service could be a significant source of stress and emphasising the lack of such studies in the UK. This generated considerable publicity in both the local and national media in which the web-address of the questionnaire featured prominently. In the event, some 64 jurors based in England and Wales fully completed the questionnaire during the four-month period in which it was available on the web.

Characteristics of the On-line Sample

The respondents consisted of 26 males and 38 females, all resident in the UK and all with jury experience. They ranged in age from 18 to 67 years with a mean age of 36.09 years (SD = 12.45 years) and 89% described themselves as of white British nationality. A high proportion (61%) worked in some form of public service and only 10% were retired or unemployed; just over half (56%) were married or cohabiting.

The great majority of participants (95%) had served on criminal trials, while the remainder sat on civil matters, and their jury experience dated from one to 25 months previously. Some 55% had been involved in trials lasting three days or less, but 22% sat on cases which lasted six or more days. They reported that 59% of the trials involved crimes against the person, of which allegations of rape, theft and grievous bodily harm were the most frequent; the remainder sat on trials involving property crimes, including arson, vandalism and burglary. In all, 54% of trials ended with a guilty verdict.

On the adapted version of the Impact of Events Scale, participants scored an average of 14.94 (SD = 16.41) which fell below clinical significance for the sample as a whole. However, 23% (n = 15) showed scores indicative of moderate to severe stress and 13% (n = 8), all female, scored above the cut-off point for severe clinical stress. Some 13 respondents acted as foremen: this role was generally associated with elevated stress levels, with four respondents reporting this as 'quite a bit' or 'extremely' stressful.

Female jurors experienced higher levels of stress than males, t (62) = 2.53, $p < 0.01$, and females who sat on a case relevant to a past trauma in their own lives reported particularly elevated levels, t (62) = 2.37, $p < 0.02$. Trials involving crimes against the person produced higher levels of stress than property crime, t (62) = 2.56, $p < 0.01$. The effects of levels of trait anxiety, t (62) = 1.67, $p < 0.10$, and prior juror experience, t (62) = 1.70, $p < 0.10$, approached significance in predicting an elevation and lowering respectively of stress levels, but age, education and professional background were not significant predictors. There was also a trend for jurors involved in longer trials to report higher levels of stress, but the difference did not reach significance due to inter-participant variability, F (2,61) = 1.80, ns.

Responses from the Trauma Symptoms Check List indicated that jurors experienced a range of symptoms of distress during and after the trial, of which restless sleep (22% during; 8% after); sadness (17% during; 6% after); feeling isolated (14% during; 3% after); headaches (13% during; 3% after); waking at night (11% during; 5% after); flashbacks (11% during; 5% after) and feeling tense all the time (11% during; 5% after) were the most common.

As to the particular sources of stress, the findings from the Jury Duty Stress Scale indicated that among the ten most frequently reported sources of stress (see Table 1), those relating to jury decision making were the most prominent, though listening to disturbing evidence and being sequestered for the entire trial were also significant sources of concern. There were also significant gender differences on some items: female jurors were more likely than males to highlight being distressed by dissension or differences among jurors, t (58) = 2.25, $p < 0.03$; answering questions in front of other people t (61) = 2.78, $p < 0.01$, or disturbing or grisly evidence t (33) = 2.69, $p < 0.01$.

As regards longer-term effects associated with PTSD, responses to the Mini International Psychiatric Interview indicated that 23% (seven male and eight female) of jurors reported having experienced, witnessed or had to deal with traumatic events in the course of their trial and 5% (three persons) reported that they had responded with intense fear, helplessness or horror. Principal symptoms reported were difficulty with sleeping (17%, n = 11) and concentration (19%, n = 12) and overall, one juror out of the total sample fulfilled the criteria for current PTSD with a score of 9.

Conclusions

These results from this first exploratory survey from the UK confirm that jury service can be a significant source of anxiety and for a vulnerable minority, can engender moderate to severe clinical levels of stress and in the longer term, lead to symptoms associated with PTSD. Trials involving crimes against the person are more likely to induce a stressful reaction than those involving property crimes. Women as a group appear to be more vulnerable than men, especially when the trial touches upon a past traumatic event that has been personally experienced. As regard sources of stress, those most widely shared were linked to the deliberative and decision-making phases of the trial. Dealing with repellent and horrific evidence was also highlighted as a significant area of concern, particularly so for women, who also attached greater stress to dealing with dissension and answering questions in the jury room.

Inevitably, caution needs to be exercised in drawing sweeping conclusions from a relatively small and self-selected sample of respondents, but many of the findings echo those of earlier studies conducted in other judiciaries. Studies in North America also found a greater impact of crimes against the person as opposed to property crime (National Center for State Courts 1998; Shuman, Hamilton and Daley 1994) and pointed to the deliberative phase as the most common source of stress in most trials (Bornstein et al. 2005; Chopra 2004). As regards the levels of stress within the jury population, the levels reported in the Leicester study were somewhat lower than those reported in North American studies, though still substantial for a minority of participants. Caution is required in extrapolating the figures obtained in the Leicester study to British jurors as a whole, given the size and self-selected nature of the sample; nonetheless, they confirm that jury service is a potent source of stress and for a small minority of jurors, an overwhelming one.

There is nothing in the current findings to suggest that jurors drawn from the general population should not, in principle, continue to play a valuable and essential role in Crown Court trials. Some moderate level of stress is inherent in the legal process, whether as defendant, witness or juror. Much has been done in recent years to provide additional support for witnesses, through the Witness Support organisation and improved facilities (Criminal Justice System 2008). There is much that could be done to improve support for jurors: more extensive preparation and briefing and such simple courtesies as clear directions and an assured parking space, something which is routine in many American judiciaries (for example, Floyd County 2008), but not elsewhere. Currently, those jurors who are troubled by their experiences have little external support: the law, for good legal reasons, precludes jurors from discussing their thoughts and feelings with others, even their loved ones, both during and after a trial. As Chopra (1994) and others have emphasised, this can only increase the sense of isolation experienced by the juror outside the jury room: one of the ten most often cited stressors for the Leicester sample. Undue levels of distress among jurors can also impair the effectiveness of decision making and thus undermine the whole rationale of the citizen juror (Flin et al. 1997). The availability at Crown Court Centres of a supporter for jurors, similar to the supporters now available for vulnerable witnesses, could play a useful role in being able to discuss the experiences with troubled jurors under the privileges engendered by a shared and binding legal oath.

The current study has replicated earlier findings from other judiciaries in finding that for a small minority of citizens, jury service may be a significant danger to their mental health. In particular, this study has highlighted the greatly increased levels of stress experienced by women who sit on trials where the events are relevant to their personal history. Currently, persons are allocated by lot to juries; a simple questionnaire focusing on past experiences would be sufficient to eliminate vulnerable jurors from potentially traumatic trials, to the benefit of the criminal justice system and the mental health of the individuals concerned. Finally, the current results replicate others in pointing to discussions and deliberations in the jury room as the single greatest source of stress for most jurors. There may be ways in which that stress can be mitigated without interfering with the independence and confidentiality of such deliberations, through the wider use of guidelines or decision heuristics as occurs in some Australian courts (Goodman-Delahunty and Tait 2006). Sadly, it is not possible to even begin to answer this question as long as social scientists in the UK are legally precluded from either talking to jurors about their experiences or observing juries at work.

Juror Stress: Symptoms, Syndromes, and Solutions

Laurence Miller
Independent Practice, Boca Raton, Florida

Abstract: As civic duties go, jury service can be among the most stressful experiences that a citizen can undergo. This article describes the common sources of juror stress, including jury summons, jury selection, understanding and coping with complex or disturbing evidence and testimony, jury deliberation, and the pressure to arrive at a just verdict. The article then goes on to delineate a number of intervention models for helping jurors manage stress reactions and prevent the development of more serious traumatic stress syndromes. Finally, some recommendations are offered for professionalizing jury service that would act in the interests of civil and criminal justice. [International Journal of Emergency Mental Health, 2008, 10(3), pp.203-218].

Key words: forensic psychology, criminal justice, juror stress, jury system, legal stress, stress management

Imagine you awaken one night with a mysterious pain. You make your way to the nearest emergency room and ask to see a doctor. You're told that, instead, you will be examined by 12 citizens who have been pulled off their jobs and ordered to the emergency room to decide your case. When you begin explaining your symptoms and medical history, someone in the back of the room stands up and objects that your past illnesses and treatments are irrelevant and that this medical decision panel must make their treatment decision based solely on their current examination findings. You're asked a series of yes-no questions and when you try to explain further, are told to only answer the question as it's been asked. After they've finished with you, the 12 citizens retire to a separate room to deliberate your case. When you try to protest that this is no way to practice medicine, they tell you to feel lucky to live in a country where you can receive a "fair" examination and have your diagnosis and treatment decided by 12 of your peers.

Sound ridiculous? Yet, these kinds of complex life-altering decisions are made every day in courts throughout the United States and many other countries by juries with no more knowledge of the law than the above hypothetical panel has of medicine. While the merit of this kind of justice system is a topic for another venue, this article will focus on what those 12 souls may go though in trying to do the best they can in negotiating the justice system. This article will delineate some of the major stresses and stress syndromes associated with jury service and offer some recommendations for helping jurors cope with the ordeals of their service and the pressures associated with certain kinds of trials.

Juror Stress: Scope of the Problem

A core feature of the American civil and criminal justice systems is the right of a defendant to a trial by jury. Serving as a juror is considered a civic duty and a citizen's failure to respond to this call may result in judicial sanctions and penalties. Other than the occasional traffic citation, jury service is one of the primary means by which the average, law-abiding citizen comes into contact with the American judicial system. Most jurors take their responsibilities seriously and carry out their jury service to the best of their abilities. But until recently, little consideration has been given to the psychological impact of jury service on the jurors themselves (Butler, 2007; Hafemeister, 1993).

Ironically, much of this attention has come from the observations of judges who have to deal with stressed-out juries on a regular basis and who are subject to their own judicial stresses and challenges (Miller et al., 2007; Zimmerman, 2006), which will be the subject of a future article in this series. On a practical level, heightened awareness of juror stress may result in a shrinking pool of citizens who are willing to report for jury service. As greater numbers of citizens manage to avoid jury service, juries become less and less representative of their communities, leading to a deterioration of public trust and confidence in jury verdicts, making still more people reluctant to serve, and so on, in a vicious cycle. In addition, extreme juror stress levels may compromise their ability to render a fair judgment or impel jurors to make premature decisions, resulting in the appeals of many more verdicts than necessary and, in some cases, the corruption of justice (Butler, 2007; Curridan, 1995; Hafemeister, 1993; Hafemeister & Ventis, 1992; Sturgess, 1990).

The Jury Process

The odyssey of jury service typically begins when a citizen receives a jury summons. The very term, "summons" can make the citizen feel like he or she is already guilty of something and conveys to the recipient that this service is not optional; indeed, failing to report for jury duty can result in the citizen being held in contempt of court, possibly fined and jailed, and ultimately being forced to appear. The summons either orders the citizen to report to the courthouse on a specific date or instructs them to call the courthouse over several days to see when their service is required. Some jurisdictions give citizens the option of postponing jury service for a limited period of time.

When arriving at the courthouse, prospective jurors are typically herded into a large auditorium where they are given a brief orientation, by video or live speaker, to the civil and criminal justice systems. They wait to be called for empanelment, which may be almost immediately or at any time throughout the day. In some jurisdictions, if a juror is not empaneled on that day, his or her service is done; in other jurisdictions, they must return day after day until selected for a jury or rejected during jury selection.

Jury selection involves the careful examination, or voir dire, of each prospective juror by the opposing attorneys in the case. Ostensibly, the goal is to select jurors who can make an impartial decision, free of personal biases that might taint their careful, objective weighing of the issues. In reality, voir dire often represents a way for attorneys from either side to "stack" the jury with individuals who most likely will be favorable to their case (Kressel & Kressel, 2002). Since a wide range of jury characteristics may affect their thinking about a given case, voir dire questions may range from opinions about points of law ("Do you believe the death penalty is ever an appropriate punishment?") to personal habits or preferences ("How many hours a week do you think is normal for someone to be looking at internet pornography?"). Typically, the initial weeding-out is accomplished by means of a written interrogatory, or questionnaire, and those prospective jurors who pass this first hurdle are then interviewed in vior dire. The law also allows a limited number of jurors to be rejected on a "peremptory" basis, which means the attorney doesn't have to give a reason, and which usually occurs to exclude a juror because of some personal feature such as ethnicity or social background. The acceptance/rejection ratio of jury selection explains the "cattle-call" nature of summoning vast numbers of potential jurors to the courthouse on any given day.

After a jury is empaneled, the case generally begins. Depending on the nature of the case, jurors spend anywhere from a few days to many weeks hearing complex and conflicting testimony from plaintiff and defendant (in a civil case), prosecutor and defendant (in a criminal case), fact witnesses (who have observed or have personal knowledge about something pertinent to the case), and expert witnesses (professionals with specialized training who can render opinions about technical issues of the case). Attorneys naturally try to present evidence that will be most favorable to their side of the case to "sway" the jury (Kressel & Kressel, 2002).

Traditionally, jurors are not allowed to take notes or ask questions and are supposed to process all this material in their heads to prepare for deliberation. Perhaps responding to the realities of human cognition, some jurisdictions now permit limited questions by jurors during the trial in order to help clarify crucial points that they will deliberate on. In most trials, jurors get to go home at the end of each day but are not allowed to discuss the case with anyone. In some high-profile cases, juries may be sequestered – literally isolated in a hotel room between court appearances, and deprived of newspapers, TV, or any contact with the outside world that might taint their view of the case.

After testimony and each attorney's closing statements are completed, the jury retires to a separate room for their deliberation, which may take a couple of hours or many days. Since, in most cases, verdicts must be unanimous, this can be an extremely grueling process, as jurors may change their minds several times throughout the deliberations and their decision-making processes may be influenced by anything from new insights on the case to what will get them out of there the quickest. Prior to deliberation, the judge usually provides a set of jury instructions as to which aspects of the case they just heard can be considered and which parts they should disregard; admittedly this kind of cognitive compartmentalization can be extremely difficult to accomplish ("Do not assign any weight to the bereaved mother's spontaneous crying and unsolicited comment about how she misses her murdered daughter.")

At any point in the trial prior to the actual reading of the verdict, the two sides of the case can arrive at an agreement that obviates the need for a jury. A number of juries have been in the position of sweating over a weeks-long trial, spending several more hectic days in heated deliberations, only to be told at the last moment that the case has been settled and "thank you for your service." It is hard to imagine a more frustrating set of circumstances than to have placed one's whole life on hold, to have had one's thoughts and emotions wrenched by days of testimony that ranged from the soporific to the horrific, to have deliberated earnestly and hard, only to be told, often at the brink of a unanimous decision, the judicial version of "never mind." Perhaps the only thing worse are cases where the judge "sets aside" the jury's verdict after it has been read because he or she decides that these 12 citizens could not possibly have reached this conclusion if they had properly considered all the pertinent facts and points of law in the case. In these circumstances, juries understandably feel like bad little schoolchildren who failed their class assignment. Even where the court accepts the jury's verdict, they know it's not over yet, because most serious verdicts are appealed.

Positive Aspects of Jury Service

Although this article will focus on the negative psychological effects of jury service, to be fair, a number of surveys and studies have found that most American and Canadian jurors view their service positively (Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Diamond, 1993). For many citizens, this is the most important thing they have done in terms of having a real impact on their communities. Individuals who may feel that they plod meaninglessly through life and receive scant acknowledgement for their efforts at their jobs or at home are suddenly thrust into a position of trust, treated like adults, and accorded great respect, with the weight of another human being's fate placed in their collective hands. Jurors often emerge with much enhanced respect for the legal system after seeing how seriously and carefully most cases are tried, with learned attorneys in expensive suits vying for their decision through meticulously researched and cogently presented arguments, all parties forced to follow strict rules of evidence under the watchful gaze of an enrobed judge sitting on high. This experience often inculcates in jurors a sense of empowerment and engagement with civic life; in fact, serving on a jury makes people more likely to vote. Many jurors surveyed say they would like to serve again (Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998).

However, some of the positive feelings reported on juror surveys may be the result of rationalization and cognitive dissonance: having been conscripted to legal servitude for days or weeks at a time, suffered loss of income and restrictions in their family time, many jurors may feel compelled to justify to themselves that this all must have been for some greater good in order not to feel like chumps (Butler, 2007). And, as will be discussed below, this positive perception of jury service is far from universal; indeed, from the results of other surveys and studies, one can only conclude that, for many jurors, their service amounts to a descent into hell.

Stresses of Jury Service

Even short of hell, many jurors experience stresses that range from mild to severe. While trials containing complex and/or grisly evidence may be understood to be inherently stressful, even more mundane cases can take a grueling toll.

For all the lip service about their noble mission, courts can be surprisingly unaccommodating to jurors who are often relegated to the bottom of the courtroom pecking order. This may be due to a strong social identification factor: Judges and lawyers share a common level of education, training, and experience; indeed, many judges were once practicing lawyers and career shifts in the other direction are not uncommon either. Thus, they understand that they are in a different social and demographic league than most jurors who tend to come from a more working-class and nonprofessional population – i.e. the type of people who cannot easily get out of jury duty. In addition, the same judges and lawyers tend to interact with one another repeatedly in the same kinds of cases, whereas jurors are here for one case, and then gone. Thus, it is easy for the courtroom "regulars" to unconsciously treat the newcomers as transients who are there to do their jobs and then scram (Butler, 2007; Curridan, 1995).

A survey by the National Center for State Courts (Casey, 1998) asked a large sample of jurors or alternate jurors from a wide range of civil and criminal cases (e.g. robbery, drunk driving, malpractice, and personal injury) to rate the level of perceived stress they experienced from a list of stressors. The top ten sources of stress for jurors serving on non-death-penalty cases were: deciding on a verdict; jury deliberations and discussions; disruptions to daily routines; fear of making a mistake; violent crimes; the jury selection process; crimes against children; answering questions in front of other people; sentencing a criminal defendant; and dissension/differences among jurors. Looking at the top items on the list should remind us that, even in relatively routine cases, most jurors take their responsibilities very seriously and are acutely aware that they are making decisions that will greatly affect people's lives, what Bornstein and colleagues (2005) refer to as the "burden of justice." It is this very sense of responsibility that often makes their jobs so stressful (Hafemeister, 1993).

But how stressful? Most surveys have found that about 40% of jurors report stress levels hovering around the mild to moderate range, but that clinically significant anxiety or depressive disorders are rare (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein, Miller, Nemeth, Page, & Musil, 2005; Casey, 1998; Kaplan & Winget, 1992; Kelly, 1994; Casey, 1998; Shuman, Hamilton, & Daley, 1994). So, even though most jurors aren't actually being "driven crazy" by their ordeal, the stresses of jury service can have a sufficient effect on their daily lives to demand serious attention.

Sources of Juror Stress

Jurors experience stressors from a variety of sources associated with their service. A review of the relevant literature (Antonio, 2006; Bell & Feldman, 1992; Bishop, 1992; Bornstein & Nemeth, 1999; Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Diamond, 1993; Fishfader, Howells, Katz, & Terese, 1996; Goleman, 1991; Greene & Bornstein, 2000; Hafemeister, 1993; Haney, Sontag, & Costanzo, 1994; Kelley, 1994; McAree, 2004; Miller, Flores, & Dolezilek, 2007; Mott, Hans, & Simpson, 2000; Rauch, 1992) suggests that these can be divided into two main categories, those associated with the judicial process of jury selection and empanelment, and those associated with the content and conduct of the trial itself.

Court Procedures

Physical setting. The physical environment in various courthouses throughout the country ranges from reasonably comfortable to atrocious. Stress factors cited by jurors include poor temperature controls, limited access to food and bathroom facilities, cramped and overcrowded waiting areas ("cattle pens"), and the inconvenience of getting to and from the courthouse (lack of public transportation, poor parking, courthouse in bad neighborhood).

Payment. For all the high-minded talk of how jurors are a vital component in our system of justice, the daily compensation rate for jurors – typically far below minimum wage – can only be seen as diluting the supposed high regard that the court has for them. "I couldn't get someone to clean my toilets for this kind of money," is a typical complaint. A few jurors have commented that they tore up the check when it came or sent it back with a nasty note.

Life disruption. A near-universal complaint of jurors and prospective jurors is the disruption of work and family schedules necessitated by their service. Under the mantle of civic responsibility, jurors may lose days or weeks from work and have to delegate childcare and other household responsibilities. Although employers, as an expression of good citizenship, are supposed to give their employees days off with compensation to attend jury duty, in most cases the worker absorbs a pay loss. Adding insult to injury, when the term of jury service extends more than a few days, the worker may return to find that his or her job has been filled by someone else.

For the self-employed, the situation can be even worse. Salespeople live by their commissions and most small businesses can't afford to close down for even a few days. Even in medium-sized companies, the worker may not have anybody to take his or her place if he or she is in court; clients and customers may quickly go elsewhere. Some jurors report that they have had their businesses ruined by a lengthy term of service.

And it's not just work. Time away from spouses and children strains family relationships; women jurors especially appear to feel the strain of isolation very acutely. Not being allowed to discuss the case when he or she comes home from court deprives the juror of a main source of tension reduction that most people have for unloading their daily stress, and further marginalizes the rest of the family who see their loved one in distress but are unable to do anything to help them (Feldman & Bell, 1991; Hafemeister, 1993; Slind-Flor, 1992).

As previously noted, in some high-profile cases, to avoid "contamination" of the jury by media, casual conversation, etc., jurors may be sequestered, which essentially amounts to enforced isolation during the trial. Because of state and local budgets, accommodations are rarely first-class. This heightened isolation from work, family, and friends may cause many jurors to feel that they are being treated like "criminals," "POW's," or "terrorists at Guantanomo Bay," as some jurors have put it. It is these conditions that most often lead some jurors to fear they are losing their minds (Antonio, 2006).

But, at least for American jurors, the ordeal is over when the trial ends, at which time they are free to talk, write books, or expound on TV about their role in a famous trial (although most jurors just want to go home and forget it). No such consideration is afforded their northern brethren, as the Canadian Criminal Code makes it an offense for their jurors to ever disclose information regarding jury proceedings. Canadian jurors cite this ban as one of the most difficult things to deal with (Butler, 2007; Hafemeister, 1993). On the other hand, this permanent gag order may free these jurors from the relentless media intrusion that often dogs American jurors in high-profile cases and which often seems designed to provoke a media-worthy lurid reaction from jurors.

For example, after the high-profile Rodney King beating trial, jurors were assailed by the press to the point that local police warned them not to remain in their homes because of all the publicity they were garnering. These jurors felt compelled to defend their decision to friends and family and felt that they were being condemned in the press for the rioting that took place after the verdict. One juror received a bomb threat at her workplace. Another juror bought a gun for protection, while still another slept with an axe. Many jurors compared their experience to having been raped; they suffered anxiety, hypervigilance, tearfulness, exhaustion, sleep and weight loss, and disruption of family relationships. A few of the jurors sought professional counseling, but most suffered in silence (Davis, 1993).

Jury selection process. For many jurors, especially those that value their privacy, filling out detailed questionnaires and answering sometimes very personal questions in front of a group of strangers can be extremely uncomfortable. Many jurors have reported feeling as if they were the ones on trial. For example, in financial fraud cases, lawyers may want to know what the juror's salary is or whether he or she has ever "thought about" cheating on their taxes. In sex-related cases, jurors may be queried about their sexual preferences or whether they have ever "thought about" cheating on their spouse. Simply refusing to answer could technically result in the juror being cited for contempt of court, but few judges would be willing to subject the juror to further duress. More commonly, embarrassed jurors will simply lie and tell the questioning attorney whatever they believe will make the lawyer move on. The result may be the empanelment of a jury containing several members who have been seated under false pretenses, thereby compromising the whole rationale of jury selection.

Perhaps for these kinds of reasons, while American lawyers can question potential jurors to screen out those they don't like during the voir dire process, in Canada this kind of jury selection process is considered prejudicial and all eligible jurors are assigned on a first-come-first-serve basis. The absence of a rigorous juror screening process has been found in surveys to increase stress on those Canadian jurors who are seated (Butler, 2007). It would be an interesting empirical question to see which system is associated with the greatest psychological morbidity and satisfaction with jury service.

Trial Factors

Death penalty cases. Understandably, the decision to find a defendant guilty of a crime warranting the death penalty is one that most American jurors take very seriously.

reflecting the "burden of justice" (Bornstein et al., 2005) that jurors feel more intensely, the more serious the trial (e.g., capital murder vs. grand larceny). In some jurisdictions, the jury determines guilt or innocence in a capital crime and the judge imposes a sentence. In other courts, the jury may first decide on guilt and then deliberate a second time to determine the sentence, usually either death or life imprisonment. Findings from the Capital Jury Project (Antonio, 2006) and other studies have shown jurors who render a death penalty verdict to suffer from a variety of stress reactions, including posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) at higher rates than those who render a life sentence.

Some jurors describe nightmares that replicate how the victim was killed or that relate to details of the crime scene, many of the images coming from photographs viewed at trial. Some jurors report feeling physically sick during and after the trial. Jurors may express regret at their final punishment decision, often feeling that the wrong decision was reached. In some cases, jurors regret the death sentence; but in a few others they wish death had been meted out instead of life imprisonment. Many jurors who harbor second thoughts post-trial feel they were pressured or "brainwashed" by other jurors to go along with the majority decision: "I should have stuck to my guns, but everybody else was so sure of their side and we all just wanted to get out of there."

Fear of reprisal by the defendant or his cohorts is a common theme reported among jurors serving on capital trials. Many report that the defendant would sit in court and stare intimidatingly at individual jurors during the trial. Nightmares of such possible reprisals by the defendant are commonly reported, more frequently by women. Other jurors are simply afraid of running into either the victim's or defendant's family in or around the courthouse. Some fear wider censure by their own families, friends, and communities for making the "wrong" decision in socially sensitive cases. Most jurors who have served on capital cases are determined not to repeat the experience.

Interestingly, in the Capital Jury Project study (Antonio, 2006), a number of jurors specifically expressed the need for some kind of post-trial counseling and half thought it should be made available by courts themselves. Others took the initiative and sought counseling on their own after the trial had ended, either from a family member, clergyman, or mental health clinician (Antonio, 2006).

Grisly evidence. One of the distressing aspects of murder trials or those where there has been significant bodily injury is the frequent necessity for juries to view gruesome hospital or crime scene photos depicting death and or mutilation, as well as to hear sometimes horrifying testimony of how victims were assaulted, tortured, raped, and/or killed (Bishop, 1992, Boone, 2008). Remember that police officers, criminal attorneys, judges, and specially trained mental health counselors who work with the court system all have years of experience dealing with disturbing evidence, yet, even in these hard-boiled veterans, particularly heinous crimes (often those involving child victims) may evoke destabilizing emotional reactions that require intervention in the form of critical incident debriefing or other mental health contact (Miller, 1998c, 1999, 2006a, 2006b, 2007a, 2007b, 2008a, 2008b, 2008c).

How much greater must the reaction be to this kind of evidence by untrained, inexperienced jurors who are being assailed by grisly evidence throughout the trial. This is frequently compounded by the fact that prosecution and defense counsel each have their own agendas that they may play off the jury. For example, the prosecution may specifically try to shock the jury by literally throwing the exhibit (crime scene photo, bloody clothing, murder weapon) in front of the jury precisely to spur an emotional reaction that will hopefully lead to a conviction (another variation of this is to abruptly display an image of the disturbing exhibit on a huge projection screen in the ominously darkened courtroom). For its part, the defense team will initially try to exclude evidence they consider "inflammatory" or, alternatively, if it is presented, may try keep it exposed as long as possible or present it repeatedly in order to try to desensitize the jury to its presence. Sometimes this works and jurors get used to seeing the bloody knife and the photographic stab wounds lying on the evidence table day after day. But sometimes the tactic backfires and the jurors grow increasingly sensitized, rather than immunized, with each exposure.

Studies are near-unanimous in reporting high rates of anxiety, depression, and PTSD symptoms in jurors sitting on capital murder, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated sexual assault, aggravated assault, and child abuse cases (Antonio, 2006; Feldman & Bell, 1993; Hafemeister, 1993). Some of this may relate to the concept of vicarious trauma, in which those who work frequently and closely with victims of violence come to empathically absorb and internalize some of the psychic pain and begin to show PTSD symptoms themselves (Davis & Friedman, 1985; Figley, 1983; Fullerton, Carroll, Ursano, & Wright, 1992; Miller, 1998a, 1998b, 2008c; Moon, 1999; Talbot, Dalton, & Dunn, 1995; White, Lawrence, Biggerstaff, & Grubb, 1985; Yassen, 1995). These kinds of reactions may have implications for adjudication of the case if jurors make extreme decisions based primarily on their emotions rather than on a rational analysis of the evidence, or if they become so numbed to the savagery of the crime through repetitive testimony or evidence presentation that they come to diminish the seriousness of the criminal act in their deliberations (Miller et al., 2007).

Complex Evidence. Another feature of murder trials or other violent felony trials is that they tend to be long and contain vast amounts of complex and ambiguous evidence. In most courts, jurors are forbidden to take notes or ask questions, although some jurisdictions are very recently beginning to allow limited forms of these activities. Thus, the juror is placed in the position of having to process complex technical information and conflicting eyewitness narratives presented by two different sides who are each trying to spin the evidence to the fullest extent that the court will allow, with the juror permitted to take no (or limited) notes and ask no (or limited) questions. Add to this the fact that much testimony is just plain boring or literally incomprehensible and there is evidence that jurors forget a great deal of what they hear in court (Rosehan, 1994). If this were a college course, what grade do you think the jurors would get? Yet, they are charged with the task of taking this information and using it to render what, in some cases, is literally a life or death decision about someone's fate.

Complicating the process is the fact that, in the case of a college course, the students are all more or less equivalent in background in terms of education, training, and native intelligence, and have probably all completed at least some prerequisite coursework for the present class. But jury members come from all walks of life and will have vastly differing levels of sophistication in handling complex testimony and in understanding the legal instructions they're given (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Miller et al., 2007; Steele & Thornburg, 1991). Because most professional people in their 30s to 50s, as well as most mothers with childcare responsibilities, can probably find some reason to get out of jury duty, most juries will contain a disproportionate number of very young, very old, less educated, and less family-grounded individuals. In deliberations, less comprehending jurors may feel intimidated by seemingly more savvy members who, for their part, may be frustrated with their slower compatriots' failure to grasp their arguments or see things their way.

Indeed, an entire industry of jury persuasion, often trafficking under the euphemism of trial consulting, has sprung up precisely to capitalize on juries' frequent cluelessness and to help attorneys use this to their own advantage (Kressel & Kressel, 2002; Posey & Wrightsman, 2005; Vinson & Davis, 1996). For example, we know from cognitive psychology and everyday experience that most people make decisions not by carefully weighing evidence and using inductive reasoning to arrive at a conclusion. Rather, they make an immediate judgment which is typically based on emotion and first impressions and lies within their pre-existing frame of reference and comfortable world-view. Then, they selectively scan the available data to cherry-pick information that will self-justifyingly support their original position. Hence, most jurors strive to reach verdicts which do not conflict strongly with the views they've held at the beginning of the trial; that is, they strive to reduce cognitive dissonance (Feigenson, 2000; Nisbett & Ross, 1980; Petty & Ciacioppo, 1986; Singer, 1998; Sunby, 1997).

Thus, lawyers know that it is good trial strategy to build your case around a small number of fundamental principles about which most jurors are surmised to feel strongly and that consequently act as screens or filters to interpret, distort, or reinforce information presented during the trial. Tactically, the more an attorney can frame his or her case in terms of the jurors' own personal experience, the greater the likelihood of winning the case (Kressel & Kressel, 2002; Murphy, Loveland, & Munsterman, 1992; Vinson & Davis, 1996). Finally, human beings form impressions about other human beings more strongly than they do about abstract data. When jurors can understand the content of the testimony, they usually factor this into their decisions. But when the complexity of the subject matter exceeds their comprehension, they rely on the perceived sincerity and persuasiveness of the witness (Cooper, Bennett, & Sukel, 1996).

Today's poor, benighted jurors may be forgiven their blunders if only because the complexity of the world as a whole has changed much in just a few centuries, while the human brain and human nature have not. No less an authority than retired Supreme Court justice Sandra Day O'Connor (2003) has lamented this modern state of affairs:

> The world is a very different place now than it was in 1220 or in 1789 or fifty years ago. We therefore should not be surprised to learn that aspects of the jury system that worked well in those times work less well today and need some repairs. What should surprise us is that so little of the necessary repair work has been done.

There are three aspects of the jury system that need particular attention. First, the conditions of jury service. When citizens are called for jury service, they often view it as a burden rather than a privilege. And for good reason: when they arrive at the courthouse they frequently are treated more like sheep than people, and the system can seem designed to disrupt their lives to a maximum degree. Second, jury selection. The process of selecting a jury out of the citizens called for jury service on a particular day has changed from a necessary safeguard against potentially biased jurors to a way for highly paid jury consultants to attempt to ensure a jury favorable to the side paying their fees. And third, the conduct of the trial itself. Too often, jurors are allowed to do nothing but to listen passively to the testimony without any idea what the legal issues are in the case, and without being permitted to take notes or participate in any way, finally to be read a virtually incomprehensible set of instructions and sent to the jury room to reach a verdict in a case they may not understand much better than they did before the trial began (O'Connor, 2003, pp. 217-218; cited in Posey & Wrightsman, 2005, pp. 218).

Jury deliberation. This is where it all comes together, where the jurors are supposed to put their heads together and come up with a decision that follows the law and respects the evidence in the case. They have already been instructed that there are specific things they are and are not allowed to include in their thinking about the case; they may or may not understand these rules. A number of surveys have shown that the interactions and dynamics of these 12 strangers, thrown together from diverse cultures and walks of life, with widely varying cognitive skills and personalities, can often be the biggest source of stress for jurors during the trial. While many jury deliberations proceed tolerably, and in some instances may even be enjoyably challenging, others are described by jurors as the worst experience they've ever had (Antonio, 2006; Butler, 2007).

The types of stresses during jury deliberation can be multiple and can range from little personal irritations from another juror's mannerisms or tone of voice, to a particularly obnoxious, ignorant, or intimidating juror who just ticks everybody else off and makes the process so much more unpleasant. Not to be overlooked is the physical setting, with poorly ventilated jury chambers resembling sweaty locker rooms after a few hours. The deliberation process itself can be contentious and the juror who evinces a minority opinion may find him- or herself reviled and alienated for "not letting us get on with this." Some jury deliberations have reportedly almost broken into fistfights, and breakdowns in decorum with inadvertent or intentional spewing of stereotypes and prejudices are not uncommon, as the mounting stress brings out the ugly side of the deliberators (Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998).

Juror Stress: Symptoms and Syndromes

Butler (2007) points out that if a research committee were to propose a study on the human stress response that incorporated the factors reviewed above, they would no doubt be fired from their university and banned from research for the rest of their lives. Another, perhaps more germane, way to look at it is that the kind of working environment that many jurors are subjected to during their service would be strictly illegal in all regulated American public and private organizations, and discovery of such conditions would subject the organization to civil penalties and criminal prosecution.

Juror stress symptoms can be conceptualized along three dimensions: (1) symptom type; (2) symptom severity; and (3) symptom time course.

Symptom Type

Juror stress symptoms tend to replicate those reported more generally in the stress and trauma literature (Antonio, 2006; Bell & Feldman, 1992; Bornstein et al., 2004; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Costanzo & Costanzo, 1994; Davis, 1993; Feldman & Bell, 1993; Kaplan & Winget, 1992; Kelley, 1994; Shuman et al., 1994) and include the following:

Physical symptoms. Impaired sleep, headaches, heart palpitation, high blood pressure, cutaneous reactions (hives and rashes), ulcers, impaired sexual functioning, muscle tension, tremors, chest pain, faintness.

Psychological symptoms. Intrusive recollections, nightmares, emotional numbing and detachment, anxiety, depression, increased alcohol consumption.

Symptom Severity

Juror stress appears to show the standard dose-response ratio seen with other stressors, that is, the greater the level of stress, the more severe the symptoms (Butler, 2007). For example, jurors serving on "traumatic" trials, including rape, murder, and aggravated kidnapping, were found to experience more severe symptoms than jurors on "non-traumatic" trials such as burglary or drug possession (Shuman et al., 1994). In particular, the jurors on traumatic trials were many times more likely to experience depression (Miller et al., 2007).

Symptom Time Course

In the Capital Jury Project (Antonio, 2006), jurors' stress reactions were found to occur in three main stages: during the trial; immediately after the sentence was announced; and in the days, weeks, or months after the trial ended.

During the trial. Interestingly, only a few of the jurors reported that the full impact of their jury experience was felt while the trial was occurring; most jurors seemed to go "on automatic" to function while the trial was in progress. The major source of stress at this time was determining the actual punishment decision. Other stressors included having to view disturbing crime scene evidence and the isolation of not being able to speak to their families about the case.

Immediately after the trial. In many cases, the stress response came as a "delayed reaction" right after the trial was over. Most of the jurors in this category reported crying at some point, either from the strain of their recent ordeal or out of sheer relief that it was over. Two female jurors in this sample were concerned about the effect the verdict would have on the victim's family.

Days, weeks, or months after the trial. Most of the jurors reported that serving in a capital murder trial affected them long after the trial ended. Some jurors experienced changes in their relationships and lifestyles. Many reported difficulty forgetting what they heard or saw during the trial, and a few reported classic symptoms of PTSD, including nightmares, intrusive recollection, and emotional numbing (Antonio, 2006).

Alleviating Juror Stress

Several authorities have proposed recommendations for making the juror system less stressful and more humane, based on their analyses of juror responses to surveys and general experience (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007; Nordgren & Thelen, 1999). I have divided these recommendations into procedural measures and clinical approaches.

Court Procedural Measures

These issues relate to changing the courtroom setting and the conditions of jury service (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007; Nordgren & Thelen, 1999) and include the following:

Improve jury notification and reporting for service. Provide sufficient time for prospective jurors to respond to jury summons. Many courts now provide the option of deferring jury service one or more times, as long as the summonee reports within a specified period of time (usually about 6 months). Giving jurors time to arrange their affairs provides a sense of control that may increase juror cooperation and motivation to participate. Provide basic information with regard to how to respond to the summons, where to report, directions, relevant phone numbers, etc. Provide safe transportation and security escort between the courthouse and transportation (parking lot, bus stop). Remember, anything the court can do that makes it easier, not harder, for jurors to report for jury duty will increase compliance rates. Consider adjusted compensation rates for self-employed jurors or jurors whose employers will not compensate the worker for his or her service time.

Explain the trial process. All too often, the initial orientation to the legal system consists of a short, prepackaged video played on a screen in a busy auditorium that may be all but incomprehensible to most of the stressed and harried audience in the pre-panel "cattle call" room. Felons' confessions may be thrown out if police cannot affirmatively demonstrate that the suspect made a knowing and informed waiver of his or her Miranda rights at the time of arrest. Similarly, considering that people's legal fates are at stake, shouldn't prospective jurors be required to demonstrate that they understand the relevant law and legal procedures? Judges should take the initiative to explain things to the jurors in a clear, understandable fashion and solicit their feedback with regard to their understanding.

Also, give jurors a head's-up as to what to expect in general from the trial on which they are being selected to serve. Obviously, the nature of the trial, whether criminal (murder, robbery, rape, drug possession) or civil (personal injury lawsuit, contract dispute, family law case), should be explained. Many jurors state that they would have liked to have been forewarned that the trial could include gruesome photographs, foul language, pornographic material, and/or graphic descriptions of criminal acts. This may be contested by some judges and attorneys who are leery of discussing any type of evidence that has not yet been determined admissible. Additionally, many attorneys may actually be counting on the emotional shock value of certain evidence to sway jurors' opinions and don't want them desensitized by previous discussion; other attorneys may not want to "tip their hand" about sensitive forthcoming evidence. Courts should strive to work out some compromise solution that preserves the rules of evidence while assuring that jurors will be in a proper mental state to hear the case.

Facilitate the jury selection process. One aspect of the trial system that should be clearly explained is the necessity for attorneys to ask jurors probing questions during voir dire. This should include an explanation of the purpose of the voir dire examination, an explanation of the difference between peremptory challenges and challenges for cause, introductory information on the particular case, an estimate of how long the trial may last, and an indication of whether the jury will be sequestered and, if so, for how long and why.

Be sensitive to jurors' privacy concerns. Responses from jurors indicate that some judges and attorneys may view voir dire as a fishing expedition to gain as much information as possible about each juror rather than just enough information to determine if a juror can be fair and impartial. Questions about mental illness, substance abuse, extramarital affairs, job and salary history, or past run-ins with the law may be shrugged off by some potential jurors but shocking to others. Many jurors may be understandably concerned about who will get their personal information or will have access to court records. Any juror questionnaires should be collected at the end of the selection process and the procedures for assuring juror privacy should be explained.

Basic, commonsense recommendations include reducing waiting time, providing comfortable accommodations, and endeavoring to treat prospective jurors with the kind of respect the court pays lip service to when intoning the sacred civic duty to uphold our system of justice.

Maintain control of the courtroom and trial process. When people are under pressure in an unfamiliar environment, they want the grownups to be in charge. Jurors report that much of their stress occurs when they perceive the judge as losing control of the courtroom. Intimidating, bickering, or grandstanding attorneys should be reined in, and TV cameras should be removed if they interfere with the trial process. Loud or obtrusive witnesses or courtroom audience members should be quieted or ejected. Taking control doesn't mean being a tyrant; judges should always be civil with attorneys, jurors, and witnesses, but they should make it clear that they will tolerate no breaches of procedure or decorum in their courtroom. Control also means keeping the trial process humming along so things don't bog down; ironically, boredom is often as much a threat to juror concentration as overstimulation. Finally, in high-profile cases, jurors should be given some guidance on how to deal with the media.

Modulate the presentation of disturbing evidence and testimony. As noted above, viewing grisly evidence or listening to emotionally disturbing testimony is reported by many jurors as being among the most stressful aspects of their service. Although gruesome evidence is typically associated with criminal trials, civil trials involving claims of negligent injury or medical malpractice often contain their share of hideous material. I recall testifying in one civil case where the plaintiff's claim of developing PTSD after seeing a loved one killed in a traffic accident was bolstered by full-color accident scene photos detailing what the speeding vehicle had done to the victim's head and body. Again, the purpose of preparing juries for disturbing testimony is not necessarily to lessen the import of the criminal or civilly negligent act, or to bias their view of the evidence in any way, but simply to alert them that such potentially disturbing material is coming. Indeed, juries who are shocked and overwhelmed by blatantly violent or pornographic material may be less capable of rendering a fair decision.

Allow greater juror participation in the trial process. Under traditional trial procedures, jurors are expected to play a passive role, quietly listening and absorbing the presented evidence and testimony in preparation for their deliberations. Recalling the point made at the beginning of this article, in no other field – medicine, law enforcement, emergency services, business and industry, government, the military – are critical decisions made in the context of deliberate restriction of relevant information. While certain aspects of a legal trial are unique, such as the importance of controlling bias, research on juror decision making increasingly shows that this passive role – no note-taking allowed, no questions asked by the jury – is unnatural and uncomfortable for most jurors, hindering their ability to remain objective, to concentrate on evidence and testimony, and to integrate new, unfamiliar material; just imagine trying to pass a high school or college course under these conditions. Conversely, studies show that juror comprehension and satisfaction are increased if jurors are allowed a more active role in trials (Cooper et al., 1996; Dann, 1993; Heuer & Penrod, 1994; Rosehan, 1994).

Accordingly, many courts are now permitting limited note-taking by jurors and the asking of limited questions. The latter usually takes the form of having the juror write the query on a piece of paper which is then passed to the judge for review. If he or she determines that it is an appropriate question, the judge will then read it to the witness (or sometimes have the bailiff or court reporter read it). In my experience, this has almost always occurred in the context of expert witness testimony, where the jury has a legitimate question concerning some technical matter that the expert has just expounded upon. Given that jury verdicts may well be determined by their understanding of such complex material, anything that will increase their understanding should well serve the purposes of a fair and just verdict.

Facilitate jury deliberations. Arguably, the jury deliberation process is the most critical aspect of juror activity in the trial because it is here that the fate of the stakeholders is decided. Most jurors rank the process of deciding on a verdict and the fear of making a mistake among the top sources of stress in their trials. One problem often cited is their lack of a clear understanding of the judge's jury instructions, and research has demonstrated generally low comprehension of juror instructions in general (Greene & Bornstein, 2000; Steele & Thornburg, 1991). Accordingly, it is crucial for judges to ascertain that their juries understand the relevant instructions.

After days of listening to complex, confusing, disturbing, and/or boring testimony, just throwing a group of strangers into a room and expecting them to arrive at a just decision may be more a reflection of naive optimism than reality. The conduct of jury deliberations can range from polite and civil to something resembling a dog fight. Most jurors report that they would have liked some guidelines for their deliberations. Especially in tense criminal trials or where jurors are having difficulty getting along, judges should be prepared to provide some guidelines for cooperative and collaborative deliberation, such as listening to one another's points without interruption, disagreeing respectfully, and not taking arguments about the case personally. Business people take hours of courses and training seminars on decision-making processes, conflict resolution strategies, and how to conduct productive meetings (Miller, 2008d) – shouldn't juries be given some guidance on this as well? If jury sequestration is a possibility in this trial, prepare jurors for this in advance, from the outset of jury selection.

Clinical Measures

The following recommendations entail more of an interface between judicial and mental health professionals in terms of providing specific interventions to help jurors cope with stress. There are some things that judges and court personnel can do; other approaches require the direct or consultative role of a qualified mental health professional (Antonio, 2006; Bienen, 1993; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; Dabs, 1992; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007).

Pre-trial interventions. This is the proactive aspect of juror stress management. The purpose of pre-trial interventions is to prepare jurors ahead of time for the stress they may experience during the course of a trial. These measures include informal discussions or prepared educational modules about the potential effects of stress, how to recognize symptoms, and how to utilize a range of coping techniques. The techniques themselves are familiar from stress management applications in other fields, such as law enforcement and emergency services (Miller, 2008a, 2008b).

Juror stress debriefing. Sometimes it may not be clear how stressful a trial has been until it has ended, at which time appropriate follow-up mental health services may be required (Goleman, 1991). Although court-sponsored services for crime victims exist in all 50 states (Miller, 2008c) and psychological services for law enforcement have existed in most jurisdictions for decades (Miller, 2006b), prior to 1990 there were few institutionalized programs through the courts for providing any kind of mental health services for jurors (McAree, 2004). Following several highly-publicized trials containing horrific evidence, including the Jeffrey Dahmer serial cannibalism trial, the trial of the Oklahoma City bombers, and the Pam Basu trial, in which a mother was dragged and mutilated during a carjacking, courts have begun offering psychological services to jurors (Bell & Feldman, 1992; Feldman & Bell, 1991, 1993; Hafemeister, 1993; Hafemeister & Ventis, 1992), largely in the form of one or more clinical varieties of critical incident stress debriefing (CISD) approaches, part of the larger domain of critical incident stress management (CISM), familiar to most readers of this journal (Everly & Mitchell, 1997; Miller, 1998c, 1999; Mitchell & Everly, 2003).

Developed in the field of public safety and emergency services, the debriefing model has now been applied to a wide range of crises, including crime victimization, natural disasters, and victims of terrorism (Miller, 1998c, 2008c). As developed in the emergency services field, CISD debriefing is a peer-led, clinician-guided process, usually consisting of one or more mental health professionals and one or more peer debriefers, i.e. fellow police officers, firefighters, paramedics, or crisis clinicians who have been trained in the CISD process and who may have been through critical incidents and debriefings in their own careers. The purpose of the debriefing is to normalize and detoxify the immediate traumatic stress reactions being experienced by the subjects and to strengthen resistance to further psychological disability. This is done through a semiformal seven-stage process, including the introduction, fact, thought, reaction, symptom, education, and reaction phases, designed to ease the process of ventilating distress, but then reseal psychological stability and encourage natural healing, aided, if necessary, by follow-up referral to additional mental health services.

Recent applications have expanded the use of CISD techniques with civilian groups. Bell & Feldman (1992) and Feldman & Bell (1991, 1993) developed a post-trial debriefing model specifically for jurors and other court personnel that is essentially similar to the crisis debriefings utilized for victims of crimes, natural disasters, or similar traumas. In general, effective debriefing sessions reduce stress, offer information on mental health services for those who might need it, provide closure, promote confidence in the judicial system, and enhance satisfaction.

As with most interventions, controversy exists. Bornstein and colleagues (2005) conducted a study that measured jurors' stress before and after a post-trial debriefing and found that, while jurors overwhelmingly said that they found the debriefing intervention helpful, their measured stress levels and symptom indices were similar at pre- and post-debriefing. Juror stress levels were lower at one month post-trial regardless of whether they had received the debriefing service or not. This, in fact, is an intriguing finding that runs through the stress debriefing efficacy literature: participants frequently say it helps, but formal measurements of distress or symptoms remain unchanged (Arendt & Elklit, 2001).

As with stress debriefing in other contexts, a major part of the problem with using this intervention with jurors probably relates to the appropriateness of its application; mental health clinicians who advise the courts should guide court officials to use this technique only where it is legitimately needed (Casey, 1998). For example, for trials that involve relatively low levels of stress, jurors may need only general discharge instructions from the trial judge prior to being dismissed. In general, informal meetings with the trial judge can provide a sense of closure for the jurors. In more stressful trials, the judge may choose to hold a more lengthy discussion with the jurors or bring in a mental health professional to conduct a formal debriefing. This may be the case in particularly gruesome trials or those which attract a great deal of media attention. However, surveys indicate that some judges like to handle these sessions on their own, only rarely calling in a mental health professional (Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004). Other judges seem to recognize that this is out of their league and are only too happy to find a mental health professional who will take over – if there are any available who do this kind of work (Miller et al., 2007).

Some recommendations for optimizing the juror debriefing session (Bornstein et al., 2005; Miller et al., 2007) include:

- Consider the best time of day for the debriefing. The afternoon the trial ends may leave jurors feeling drained; all they want to do is go home. Set up a separate day for the session, perhaps giving jurors a few days to recoup.
- Make the jurors feel comfortable. Debriefing should be voluntary and there should be no stigma attached. Nothing that goes on in the session should be on the record – the trial is over; this is solely for the jurors' well-being.
- Unlike public safety professionals, jurors may not quite know how to proceed, so prime the conversational pump to get people talking, but maintain control over the discussion, so that it helps, not hurts. Encourage productive venting, not unhealthy spewing or accusing. Keep the focus on the positive.
- Positive focus includes normalizing juror stress. This should be conceptualized as a normal reaction by normal people to an abnormally challenging situation. Reassure the jurors that they did their best at a difficult job in making a crucial decision.

- Cover any lingering questions jurors may have. Address concerns about safety and fears of retribution. Help jurors deal with the media. Seek juror feedback as to how things could be improved in the future so that they feel part of the solution.

In cases where the judge suspects that jurors are experiencing significant stress or showing symptoms of a serious mental disorder, they can refer the juror to a qualified mental health professional for more individualized counseling – again, courts should be proactive in identifying clinicians in the community who can serve as resources for these services.

Combined interventions. One criticism that has been leveled against debriefing-type interventions is that their standard, one-size-fits-all format lacks the flexibility to deal with diverse types of people and problems. While the CISM model continues to expand and adapt to new challenges, Nordgren & Thelen (1999) have developed a multifaceted intervention program they call Graduated Jury Stress Management (GJSM) which contains five intervention levels that are administered according to the stress level of the individual juror. Although GJSM is designed to be a post-trial intervention, some aspects of it (i.e. written instructions) could also be adapted as a pre-trial intervention:

- Level 1: Basic Information. Jurors who have not yet evinced any problems simply receive written educational materials about stress reactions and potential coping strategies.
- Level 2: Stress Management Instruction. This applies to jurors with mild stress levels. The judge individually gives these jurors basic stress management information along with the standard post-trial discharge instructions.
- Level 3: "Flexible Defusing." Jurors with moderate stress receive a 15-20 minute debriefing during which a mental health professional explains normal stress reactions, offers coping strategies, and assesses individual jurors to determine if further clinical services are necessary.
- Level 4: "Jury Stress Debriefing." This intervention is adapted from the CISD model commonly utilized with emergency workers and is applied to jurors who are showing significant levels of stress.
- Level 5: Individual Psychotherapy. This may range from a few sessions to ongoing treatment and is intended for jurors who are showing extreme stress reactions and/or clinical symptoms of a mental disorder. Not uncommonly, these may have been jurors who had difficulties in functioning prior to the trial and the trial stresses have exacerbated their preexisting or dormant psychopathology.

Clearly, Nordgren & Thelen's GJSM (1999) appears to formalize the stages of intervention that most clinicians would apply to the treatment of traumatic stress cases. But, as effective as these proactive and responsive clinical measures might be, and as best we may try to make procedural changes within the existing American jury system, perhaps real efforts to increase accuracy and efficiency and reduce stress within the jury system can only come when more fundamental changes are considered.

Conclusions and Recommendations

Based on a review of the literature and my own clinical and forensic experience, the following recommendations for improving the civil and criminal justice systems in the United States are offered.

Let judges judge. Just as we maintain strict training and credentialing criteria for authorizing people to call themselves doctors and attorneys and to practice medicine and law, we should do the same for those who practice jurisprudence; we should let the judges judge. Many countries already do this. In some court divisions, such as family court, judges, not juries, often decide cases. In many other cases, defendants have the option of waiving a jury trial and opting for a bench trial, which is having the judge hear the case and render a verdict.

Utilize professional jurors. Okay, even doctors have assistants to perform routine clinical tasks and lawyers use paralegals for similar purposes because there just aren't enough physicians and attorneys to go around. But these paraprofessional staff still receive some degree of training and certification to do what they do. So why not recruit reasonably intelligent and educated citizens on a voluntary basis, provide them with specialized training in the law, decision-making, and interpersonal skills, and credential them as Certified Jurors or some such appellation.

There could even be board-certified subspecialties within the Certified Juror field, such as "certified medical juror," "certified mental health juror," "certified business-economics juror," "certified industrial-mechanics juror," and so on. The next step would be to compensate them for their service (just as medical assistants and paralegals get paid a fair wage) and utilize them as part of a rotating pool of professional jurors who can objectively decide cases with a basic prerequisite of knowledge and training both in the law and in the subject matter of the case.

Meanwhile, professionals within the legal system, and the mental health clinicians who advise them, must strive to make jury service as efficient, accurate, and comfortable as possible. Whether in the emergency room or the courtroom, people's lives are at stake, in one way or another. We must assure that those who are called to make the crucial decisions are afforded the proper conditions to do so in a manner that serves justice.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 71( )

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES HOLMES, DAHLSTROM, MILLETT, AND KAWASAKI

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to a registry for advance health care directives."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 13.52.080 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(d) A health care facility or hospital is not subject to civil or criminal liability for

(1) acting in reliance on an advance health care directive obtained from the directive registry established under AS 13.52.310; or

(2) not checking the directive registry established under AS 13.52.310 to determine if a patient of the health care facility or hospital has filed an advance health care directive in the registry.

 Sec. 2. AS 13.52 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 13.52.310. Advance health care directive registry. (a) The department shall establish and maintain, or contract with a registry organization to establish and maintain, a registry for advance health care directives. The registry must consist of

(1) a list of the names of individuals who have made written directives

New Text Underlined [DELETED TEXT BRACKETED]

for themselves and who have filed them with the registry under (b) of this section; and

(2) scanned copies of the directives identified in (1) of this subsection.

(b) An individual who has made a written directive for the individual may file the directive with the registry.

(c) Except as provided in this subsection and by (d) of this section, the registry is confidential, and the department or a contractor may not use information in the registry for another purpose. The department may release by mail, facsimile, or secure Internet access,

(1) the name of an individual who filed a directive with the registry under (b) of this section and a copy of a directive in the registry to

(A) the individual who made the directive;

(B) the agent, guardian, or surrogate of the individual who made the directive; or

(C) a health care facility in this state or hospital in this state if the individual who made the directive is a patient of the health care facility or hospital;

(2) a copy of a directive in the registry to a hospital in another state if requested by the

(A) individual who made the directive; or

(B) agent, guardian, or surrogate of the individual who made the directive.

(d) The department shall make the registry accessible for viewing on the Internet 24 hours a day to a hospital in this state to determine if an individual who is a patient at the hospital has a directive or to obtain a copy of a directive for an individual who is a patient at the hospital.

(e) The department is not required to review a directive for validity or compliance with this chapter or another law before the directive is placed in the registry.

(f) The department shall remove a directive from the registry if the individual who made the directive requests in writing that the directive be removed.

(g) Not filing a directive with the registry does not affect the validity of the directive. Failure to notify the department that a directive in the registry has been revoked does not affect the validity of the revocation.

(h) The department may charge a fee to file a directive in the registry or provide a copy of a directive filed in the registry under this section, except that the department may not charge a fee for removing a directive from the registry or for answering an inquiry by a health care facility in this state or hospital in this state regarding whether an individual has a directive in the registry. The fee may not exceed the department's administrative costs of fulfilling the request.

(i) To protect the security of the directives and names on the registry, the department shall establish by regulation identification procedures and requirements for an individual, agent, surrogate, guardian, hospital, or health care facility to access the registry.

(j) The department shall establish by regulation criteria and procedures for the collection, storage, access, distribution, removal, and disposal of directives in the registry and a schedule for removing directives from the registry.

(k) The department and its employees are not liable for civil damages as a result of an act or omission in the establishment or maintenance of the registry or other implementation of this section.

(l) In this section,

(1) "directive" means a written advance health care directive;

(2) "registry" means the registry established under this section.

House Bill 71 Sponsor Statement
An Act relating to a registry for advance health care directives.

An advance health care directive is a document that allows a person to designate what health care they wish to receive and who can make medical decisions for them in the case that they are incapacitated. Alaska Statute 13.52.010 provides that anyone may fill out an advance health care directive, but it does not provide a system to store and access these important documents.

Medical emergencies can occur at any place at any time. A person may be on vacation and not have a copy of their advance health care directive with them, or family members may simply be too distraught to remember or find a copy of the directive. In cases like these, medical professionals and family members need an effective tool to locate and access information on a patient's health care wishes.

House Bill 71 would establish a voluntary registry of advance health care directives for the State of Alaska. The registry would be strictly voluntary—no person would ever be required to submit his or her advance health care directive to the registry, and directives not filed with the registry would remain every bit as valid. Other features of the registry include:

- Hospitals and similar health care facilities would have 24-hour online access to their patients' records in case of emergencies.
- A person or his or her agent, guardian or surrogate would be able to request copies of their directive.
- The Department of Health and Social Services would be able to charge modest fees to pay for administrative costs of the registry.
- All advance health care directives in the registry would be confidential.
- An individual could update or remove his or her advance health care directive from the registry at any time.

A number of other states already use an advance health care directive registry to ensure that patients' wishes are available to guide the decisions of doctors and loved ones during medical emergencies.

Please join me in helping to ensure that Alaskans' medical decisions are respected by supporting this legislation.

MEMORANDUM January 23, 2009

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of HB 71, a bill relating to a registry for advance health care directives (Work Order No. 26-LS0289\E)

TO: Representative Lindsey Holmes
Attn: James Waldo

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Protects a health care facility from civil or criminal liability for two listed types of actions related to the directive registry.

Section 2. Allows a hospital to make a reasonable search of the directive registry when the hospital refers an individual at or near death to a procurement organization.

Section 3. Makes a procurement organization's access to the department's records subject to the new directive registry provisions.

Section 4. This is the main authorizing section for the directive registry. Directs the department to maintain a registry for advance health care directives. Allows individuals to place their directives in the registry. Makes the registry confidential and indicates when the department may release information from the registry. Directs the department to make the registry accessible for viewing on the Internet 24 hours a day to a health care facility for the facility's patients. States that the department is not required to review a directive for validity or compliance with law before placing it in the registry. Directs the department to remove a directive from the registry and return it to the maker when requested by the maker or an agent, guardian, or surrogate of the maker. Requires the department to review the registry every five years and to remove directives of individuals deceased for six months or more. Provides that not filing a directive does not affect the directive's validity. Provides that failing to tell the department about a revocation does not affect the revocation. Allows the department to charge certain fees to implement the section. Directs the department to adopt regulations about identification procedures and requirements to protect the security of the registry.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

HB 71 Version C—Summary of Changes

To sum up:

1) We removed two sections that allowed access to department records by outside agencies. This was at department request.
2) We clarified that the registry would consist only of names and scanned copies of the directives.
3) We clarified that only an individual can ask the Department to remove their own directive from the registry.
4) Instead of mandating how and when the Department remove directives of deceased individuals, we have changed it to allow the Department to establish regulations for this.
5) We have exempted the Department from liability in operating the registry.

The long description of corresponding changes:

1) Removes sections 2 & 3 of the original bill. Those sections had allowances for procurement organizations to search departmental records for organ donor information. The department requested their removal.

Section 4 of the original bill, section 2 in the CS has had these four changes made.

2) First, 13.52.310(a) has been changed to clarify precisely what the registry will consist of—a list of the names of the individuals with directives on file and scanned copies of those directives.

3) Second, 13.52.310(f) was changed to tighten requirements for removing a directive from the registry. The original bill allowed an individual or their guardian, agent or surrogate to remove a directive from the registry. The CS requires that only an individual can request a directive be removed and that such a request must be in writing.

4) 13.52.310(g) of the original bill has been moved to 13.52.310(j) of the CS and it has been changed to give the department greater flexibility in establishing criteria and a schedule for removing old directives from the registry.

5) 13.52.310(k) has been added. It exempts the department from liability in the operation of the registry.

The bill is to construct an advance health care directive system by creating a central registry for access by health care facilities, hospitals, and individuals. Modeled after the State of Washington's Living Will Registry system, Alaska will contract with a national registry to maintain the data securely with 24/7 access. There will be no cost to the individual to register. Start up contractual costs of $56.0 include training, software, licensing, and system configuration. Ongoing, there is an annual license of $15.0 based on less than 749 participants. Actual costs vary slightly depending on the number of participants. One FTE, a Public Health Specialist II (R20, step C) at $111.4 will be necessary to establish a secure system, respond to toll-free hotline, support users with technical assistance, and travel to provide community outreach. Additional costs include office supplies and promotional materials. By the 3rd year, the program will be fully operational and outreach efforts can be scaled back to 0.75 FTE and level off at 0.5 FTE thereafter.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The bill is intended to more effectively honor and implement an individual's advance health care directive by creating a central registry for access by health care providers and procurement organizations. Information Technology Business Applications staff estimate that development of the registry, either by the state or a third party vendor, will require an estimated capital expenditure of $250K with an additional $50K to develop an interface with the Bureau of Vital Statistics. Two FTE personnel will be required to enter the documents into the registry and provide access to the information: Public Health Specialist II (R20, step C) at $100K and an Administrative Clerk III (R10, step C)at $56.1K. Work stations, lease, phone service, etc. is estimated to be $19K for the 2 employees . An additional contractual expenditure is system maintenance (10%), or $25K per year. Training expenditures for hospital and other personnel to access the registry is estimated at $6K per year, with a one-time travel increase in FY2011 to train hospital personnel. Supplies are estimated at $1.5K per year. The fund source amount includes the total anticipated operating and capital expenditures.

Title 13. Decedents' Estates, Guardianships, Transfers, and Trusts
Chapter 52. Health Care Decisions Act (Refs & Annos)
§ 13.52.010. Advance health care directives

(a) Except as provided in AS 13.52.173, an adult may give an individual instruction. Except as provided in AS 13.52.177, the instruction may be oral or written. The instruction may be limited to take effect only if a specified condition arises.

(b) An adult may execute a durable power of attorney for health care, which may authorize the agent to make any health care decision the principal could have made while having capacity. The power remains in effect notwithstanding the principal's later incapacity and may include individual instructions. The power must be in writing, contain the date of its execution, be signed by the principal, and be witnessed by one of the following methods:

(1) signed by at least two individuals who are personally known by the principal, each of whom witnessed either the signing of the instrument by the principal or the principal's acknowledgment of the signature of the instrument; or

(2) acknowledged before a notary public at a place in this state.

(c) Unless related to the principal by blood, marriage, or adoption, an agent under a durable power of attorney for health care may not be an owner, operator, or employee of the health care institution at which the principal is receiving care.

(d) A witness for a durable power of attorney for health care may not be

(1) a health care provider employed at the health care institution or health care facility where the principal is receiving health care;

(2) an employee of the health care provider providing health care to the principal, or of the health care institution or health care facility where the principal is receiving health care; or

(3) the agent.

(e) At least one of the individuals used as a witness for a durable power of attorney for health care shall be someone who is not

(1) related to the principal by blood, marriage, or adoption; or

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(2) entitled to a portion of the estate of the principal upon the principal's death under a will or codicil of the principal existing at the time of execution of the durable power of attorney for health care or by operation of law then existing.

(f) Unless otherwise specified in the durable power of attorney for health care, the authority of an agent becomes effective only upon a determination that the principal lacks capacity and ceases to be effective upon a determination that the principal has recovered capacity.

(g) Unless otherwise specified in a written advance health care directive, a determination that a principal lacks or has recovered capacity, or that another condition exists that affects an individual instruction or the authority of an agent, shall be made by

(1) the primary physician, except in the case of mental illness;

(2) a court in the case of mental illness, unless the situation is an emergency; or

(3) the primary physician or another health care provider in the case of mental illness where the situation is an emergency.

(h) An agent shall make a health care decision in accordance with the principal's individual instructions, if any, and other wishes to the extent known to the agent. Otherwise, the agent shall make the decision in accordance with the agent's determination of the principal's best interest. In determining the principal's best interest, the agent shall consider the principal's personal values to the extent known to the agent.

(i) A health care decision made by an agent for a principal is effective without judicial approval.

(j) A written advance health care directive may include the individual's nomination of a guardian of the individual.

(k) Except as provided in AS 13.52.247(a), an advance health care directive, including an advance health care directive that is made in compliance with the laws of another state, is valid for purposes of this chapter if it complies with this chapter, regardless of where or when it was executed or communicated.

(l) Notwithstanding the sample form provided under AS 13.52.300, an individual instruction that would be valid by itself under this chapter is valid even if the individual instruction is contained in a writing that also contains a durable power of attorney for health care and the durable power of attorney does not meet the witnessing or other requirements of this chapter.

Title 13. Decedents' Estates, Guardianships, Transfers, and Trusts
Chapter 52. Health Care Decisions Act (Refs & Annos)
→ § 13.52.020. Revocation of advance health care directive

(a) Except in the case of mental illness under (c) of this section, a principal may revoke the designation of an agent only by a signed writing or by personally informing the supervising health care provider.

(b) Except in the case of mental illness under (c) of this section and except as provided by AS 13.52.183, a principal may revoke all or part of an advance health care directive, other than the designation of an agent, at any time and in any manner that communicates an intent to revoke.

(c) In the case of mental illness, an advance health care directive may be revoked in whole or in part at any time by the principal if the principal does not lack capacity and is competent. A revocation is effective when a competent principal with capacity communicates the revocation to a physician or other health care provider. The physician or other health care provider shall note the revocation on the principal's medical record. In the case of mental illness, the authority of a named agent and an alternative agent named in the advance health care directive continues in effect as long as the advance health care directive appointing the agent is in effect or until the agent has withdrawn. For the purposes of this subsection, a principal is not considered competent when

(1) it is the opinion of the court in a guardianship proceeding under AS 13.26, the opinion of two physicians, at least one of whom is a psychiatrist, or the opinion of a physician and a professional mental health clinician, that the principal is not competent; or

(2) a court in a hearing under AS 47.30.735, 47.30.750, or 47.30.770 determines that the principal is gravely disabled; in this paragraph, "gravely disabled" has the meaning given in AS 47.30.915(7)(B).

(d) A health care provider, agent, guardian, or surrogate who is informed of a revocation shall promptly communicate the fact of the revocation to the supervising health care provider and to any health care institution at which the patient is receiving care.

(e) A decree of annulment, divorce, dissolution of marriage, or legal separation revokes a previous designation of a spouse as agent unless otherwise specified in the decree or in a durable power of attorney for health care.

(f) An advance health care directive that conflicts with an earlier advance health care directive revokes the earlier directive to the extent of the conflict.

(a) Except in the case of mental health treatment and except as provided by AS 13.52.173 and 13.52.193, a surrogate may make a health care decision for a patient who is an adult if an agent or guardian has not been appointed or the agent or guardian is not reasonably available, and if the patient has been determined by the primary physician to lack capacity.

(b) Subject to AS 13.52.055(b), a surrogate may make a decision regarding mental health treatment for a patient who is an adult if

(1) an agent or guardian has not been appointed or the agent or guardian is not reasonably available;

(2) the mental health treatment is needed on an emergency basis; and

(3) the patient has been determined to lack capacity by

(A) two physicians, one of whom is a psychiatrist; or

(B) a physician and a professional mental health clinician.

(c) Except as provided for anatomical gifts in AS 13.52.173, an adult may designate an individual to act as surrogate for that adult by personally informing the supervising health care provider. Except as provided by AS 13.52.173 or 13.52.193, in the absence of a designation, or if the designee is not reasonably available, a member of the following classes of the patient's family who is reasonably available, in descending order of priority, may act as surrogate:

(1) the spouse, unless legally separated;

(2) an adult child;

(3) a parent; or

(4) an adult sibling.

(d) Except as provided by (f) of this section or AS 13.52.173 or 13. 52.193, if none of the individuals eligible to act as surrogate under (c) of this section is reasonably available, an adult who has exhibited special care and concern for the patient, who is familiar with the patient's personal values, and who is reasonably available may act as surrogate.

Title 13. Decedents' Estates, Guardianships, Transfers, and Trusts
Chapter 52. Health Care Decisions Act (Refs & Annos)
§ 13.52.060. Obligations of health care providers, institutions, and facilities

(a) Before implementing a health care decision made for a patient, a supervising health care provider, if possible, shall promptly communicate to the patient the decision made and the identity of the person making the decision.

(b) A supervising health care provider who knows of the existence of an advance health care directive, a revocation of an advance health care directive, or a designation or disqualification of a surrogate shall promptly record its existence in the patient's health care record, shall request a copy if it is in writing, and shall arrange for its maintenance in the health care record if a copy is furnished.

(c) A supervising health care provider who makes or is informed of a determination that a patient lacks or has recovered capacity, or that another condition exists that affects an individual instruction or the authority of an agent, a guardian, or a surrogate, shall promptly record the determination in the patient's health care record and communicate the determination to the patient, if possible, and to any person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient.

(d) Except as provided in (e), (f), and (i) of this section and by AS 13.52.253, a health care provider, health care institution, or health care facility providing care to a patient shall comply with

(1) an individual instruction of the patient and with a reasonable interpretation of that instruction made by a person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient; and

(2) a health care decision for the patient made by a person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient to the same extent as if the decision had been made by the patient while having capacity.

(e) A health care provider may decline to comply with an individual instruction or a health care decision for reasons of conscience, except for a do not resuscitate order. A health care institution or health care facility may decline to comply with an individual instruction or health care decision if the instruction or decision is contrary to a policy of the institution or facility that is expressly based on reasons of conscience and if the policy was timely communicated to the patient or to a person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient.

(f) A health care provider, health care institution, or health care facility may decline to comply with an individual instruction or a health care decision that requires medically ineffective health care or health care contrary to generally accepted health care standards applicable to the provider, institution, or facility. In this subsection, "medically ineffective health care" means health care that according to reasonable medical judgment cannot cure the patient's illness, cannot diminish its progressive course, and cannot effectively alleviate severe discomfort and distress.

(g) A health care provider, health care institution, or health care facility that declines to comply with an individual instruction or a health care decision shall

(1) promptly inform the patient, if possible, and any person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient that the provider, institution, or facility has declined to comply with the instruction or decision;

(2) provide continuing care to the patient until a transfer is effected; and

(3) unless the patient or person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient refuses assistance, immediately cooperate and comply with a decision by the patient or a person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient to transfer the patient to another health care institution, to another health care facility, to the patient's home, or to another location chosen by the patient or by the person then authorized to make health care decisions for the patient.

(h) Except as provided for civil commitments under AS 47.30.817, a health care provider, health care institution, or health care facility may not require or prohibit the execution or revocation of an advance health care directive as a condition for providing health care.

(i) Notwithstanding the exception in (e) of this section for do not resuscitate orders, a health care provider may perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation or other resuscitative measures on a patient even if there is a do not resuscitate order for the patient if the condition requiring cardiopulmonary resuscitation or other resuscitative measures is precipitated by complications arising out of medical services being provided by the health care provider to the patient.

(j) The provisions of (i) of this section do not apply when a health care provider performs emergency medical services on a patient in the field, unless an online physician orders the health care provider to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation or other resuscitative measures; in this subsection,

(1) "health care provider" does not include a physician;

(2) "in the field" does not include in a health care facility, health care institution, hospital, or mental health facility;

(3) "online physician" means a physician who is immediately available in person or by radio or telephone, when medically appropriate, for communication of medical direction to health care providers.

Title 13. Decedents' Estates, Guardianships, Transfers, and Trusts
Chapter 52. Health Care Decisions Act (Refs & Annos)
→ § 13.52.300. Optional form

The following sample form may be used to create an advance health care directive. The other sections of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other writing used to create an advance health care directive. This form may be duplicated. This form may be modified to suit the needs of the person, or a different form that complies with this chapter may be used, including the mandatory witnessing requirements:

ADVANCE HEALTH CARE DIRECTIVE

Explanation

You have the right to give instructions about your own health care to the extent allowed by law. You also have the right to name someone else to make health care decisions for you to the extent allowed by law. This form lets you do either or both of these things. It also lets you express your wishes regarding the designation of your health care provider. If you use this form, you may complete or modify all or any part of it. You are free to use a different form if the form complies with the requirements of AS 13.52.

Part 1 of this form is a durable power of attorney for health care. A "durable power of attorney for health care" means the designation of an agent to make health care decisions for you. Part 1 lets you name another individual as an agent to make health care decisions for you if you do not have the capacity to make your own decisions or if you want someone else to make those decisions for you now even though you still have the capacity to make those decisions. You may name an alternate agent to act for you if your first choice is not willing, able, or reasonably available to make decisions for you. Unless related to you, your agent may not be an owner, operator, or employee of a health care institution where you are receiving care.

Unless the form you sign limits the authority of your agent, your agent may make all health care decisions for you that you could legally make for yourself. This form has a place for you to limit the authority of your agent. You do not have to limit the authority of your agent if you wish to rely on your agent for all health care decisions that may have to be made. If you choose not to limit the authority of your agent, your agent will have the right, to the extent allowed by law, to

(a) consent or refuse consent to any care, treatment, service, or procedure to maintain, diagnose, or otherwise affect a physical or mental condition, including the administration or discontinuation of psychotropic medication;

© 2009 Thomson Reuters/West. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(b) select or discharge health care providers and institutions;

(c) approve or disapprove proposed diagnostic tests, surgical procedures, and programs of medication;

(d) direct the provision, withholding, or withdrawal of artificial nutrition and hydration and all other forms of health care; and

(e) make an anatomical gift following your death.

Part 2 of this form lets you give specific instructions for any aspect of your health care to the extent allowed by law, except you may not authorize mercy killing, assisted suicide, or euthanasia. Choices are provided for you to express your wishes regarding the provision, withholding, or withdrawal of treatment to keep you alive, including the provision of artificial nutrition and hydration, as well as the provision of pain relief medication. Space is provided for you to add to the choices you have made or for you to write out any additional wishes.

Part 3 of this form lets you express an intention to make an anatomical gift following your death.

Part 4 of this form lets you make decisions in advance about certain types of mental health treatment.

Part 5 of this form lets you designate a physician to have primary responsibility for your health care.

After completing this form, sign and date the form at the end and have the form witnessed by one of the two alternative methods listed below. Give a copy of the signed and completed form to your physician, to any other health care providers you may have, to any health care institution at which you are receiving care, and to any health care agents you have named. You should talk to the person you have named as your agent to make sure that the person understands your wishes and is willing to take the responsibility.

You have the right to revoke this advance health care directive or replace this form at any time, except that you may not revoke this declaration when you are determined not to be competent by a court, by two physicians, at least one of whom shall be a psychiatrist, or by both a physician and a professional mental health clinician. In this advance health care directive, "competent" means that you have the capacity

(1) to assimilate relevant facts and to appreciate and understand your situation with regard to those facts; and

(2) to participate in treatment decisions by means of a rational thought process.

PART 1

DURABLE POWER OF ATTORNEY FOR

(address) (city) (state) (zip code)

(home telephone) (work telephone)

(2) AGENT'S AUTHORITY. My agent is authorized and directed to follow my individual instructions and my other wishes to the extent known to the agent in making all health care decisions for me. If these are not known, my agent is authorized to make these decisions in accordance with my best interest, including decisions to provide, withhold, or withdraw artificial hydration and nutrition and other forms of health care to keep me alive, except as I state here:

(Add additional sheets if needed.)

Under this authority, "best interest" means that the benefits to you resulting from a treatment outweigh the burdens to you resulting from that treatment after assessing

(A) the effect of the treatment on your physical, emotional, and cognitive functions;

(B) the degree of physical pain or discomfort caused to you by the treatment or the withholding or withdrawal of the treatment;

(C) the degree to which your medical condition, the treatment, or the withholding or withdrawal of treatment, results in a severe and continuing impairment;

(D) the effect of the treatment on your life expectancy;

(E) your prognosis for recovery, with and without the treatment;

(F) the risks, side effects, and benefits of the treatment or the withholding of treatment; and

(G) your religious beliefs and basic values, to the extent that these may assist in determining benefits and burdens.

(3) WHEN AGENT'S AUTHORITY BECOMES EFFECTIVE. Except in the case of mental illness, my agent's authority becomes effective when my primary physician determines that I am unable to make my own health care decisions unless I mark the following box. In the case of mental illness, unless I mark the following box, my agent's authority becomes effective when a court determines I am unable to make my own decisions, or, in an emergency, if my primary physician or another health care provider determines I am unable to make my own decisions. If I mark this box [ ], my agent's authority to make health care decisions for me takes effect immediately.

(4) AGENT'S OBLIGATION. My agent shall make health care decisions for me in accordance with this durable power of attorney for health care, any instructions I give in Part 2 of this form, and my other wishes to the extent known to my agent. To the extent my wishes are unknown, my agent shall make health care decisions for me in accordance with what my agent determines to be in my best interest. In determining my best interest, my agent shall consider my personal values to the extent known to my agent.

(5) NOMINATION OF GUARDIAN. If a guardian of my person needs to be appointed for me by a court, I nominate the agent designated in this form. If that agent is not willing, able, or reasonably available to act as guardian, I nominate the alternate agents whom I have named under (1) above, in the order designated.

PART 2

INSTRUCTIONS FOR HEALTH CARE

If you are satisfied to allow your agent to determine what is best for you in making health care decisions, you do not need to fill out this part of the form. If you do fill out this part of the form, you may strike any wording you do not want. There is a state protocol that governs the use of do not resuscitate orders by physicians and other health care providers. You may obtain a copy of the protocol from the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services. A "do not resuscitate order" means a directive from a licensed physician that emergency cardiopulmonary resuscitation should not be administered to you.

(6) END-OF-LIFE DECISIONS. Except to the extent prohibited by law, I direct that my health care providers and others involved in my care provide, withhold, or withdraw treatment in accordance with the choice I have marked below: (Check only one box.)

  Choice To Prolong Life

I want my life to be prolonged as long as possible within the limits of generally accepted health care standards; OR

  Choice Not To Prolong Life

I want comfort care only and I do not want my life to be prolonged with medical treatment if, in the judgment of my physician, I have (check all choices that represent your wishes)

  a condition of permanent unconsciousness: a condition that, to a high degree of medical certainty, will last permanently without improvement; in which, to a high degree of medical certainty, thought, sensation, purposeful action, social interaction, and awareness of myself and the environment are absent; and for which, to a high degree of medical certainty, initiating or continuing life-sustaining procedures for me, in light of my medical outcome, will provide only minimal medical benefit for me; or

  a terminal condition: an incurable or irreversible illness or injury that without the administration of life-sustaining procedures will result in my death in a short period of time, for which there is no reasonable prospect of cure or recovery, that imposes severe pain or otherwise imposes an inhumane burden on me, and for which, in light of my medical condition, initiating or continuing life-sustaining procedures will provide only minimal medical benefit;

[ ] Additional instructions: _____

(C) Artificial Nutrition and Hydration. If I am unable to safely take nutrition, fluids, or nutrition and fluids (check your choices or write your instructions),

[ ]I wish to receive artificial nutrition and hydration indefinitely;

[ ]I wish to receive artificial nutrition and hydration indefinitely, unless it clearly increases my suffering and is no longer in my best interest;

[ ]I wish to receive artificial nutrition and hydration on a limited trial basis to see if I can improve;

[ ]In accordance with my choices in (6)(B) above, I do not wish to receive artificial nutrition and hydration.

[ ]Other instructions:_____

(D) Relief from Pain.

[ ]I direct that adequate treatment be provided at all times for the sole purpose of the alleviation of pain or discomfort; or

PART 3

ANATOMICAL GIFT AT DEATH

(OPTIONAL)

If you are satisfied to allow your agent to determine whether to make an anatomical gift at your death, you do not need to fill out this part of the form.

(8) Upon my death: (mark applicable box)

  I give any needed organs, tissues, or other body parts, OR

  I give the following organs, tissues, or other body parts only _____

  My gift is for the following purposes (mark any of the following you want):

  transplant;

  therapy;

  research;

  education.

  I refuse to make an anatomical gift.

PART 4

MENTAL HEALTH TREATMENT

This part of the declaration allows you to make decisions in advance about mental health treatment. The instructions that you include in this declaration will be followed only if a court, two physicians that include a psychiatrist, or a physician and a professional mental health clinician believe that you are not competent and cannot make treatment decisions. Otherwise, you will be considered to be competent and to have the capacity to give or withhold consent for the treatments.

If you are satisfied to allow your agent to determine what is best for you in making these mental health decisions, you do not need to fill out this part of the form. If you do fill out this part of the form, you may strike any wording you do not want.

(9) PSYCHOTROPIC MEDICATIONS. If I do not have the capacity to give or withhold informed consent for mental health treatment, my wishes regarding psychotropic medications are as follows:

_____ I consent to the administration of the following medications: _____

_____ I do not consent to the administration of the following medications: _____

Conditions or limitations: _____

(10) ELECTROCONVULSIVE TREATMENT. If I do not have the capacity to give or withhold informed consent for mental health treatment, my wishes regarding electroconvulsive treatment are as follows:

_____ I consent to the administration of electroconvulsive treatment.

_____ I do not consent to the administration of electroconvulsive treatment.

Conditions or limitations: _____

(11) ADMISSION TO AND RETENTION IN FACILITY. If I do not have the capacity to give or withhold informed consent for mental health treatment, my wishes regarding admission to and retention in a mental health facility for mental health treatment are as follows:

_____ I consent to being admitted to a mental health facility for mental health treatment for up to _____ days. (The number of days not to exceed 17.)

_____ I do not consent to being admitted to a mental health facility for mental health treatment.

RE: HB 71 (Holmes, Dahlstom, Millett, Kawasaki)—Support

Dear Co-Chairs Keller and Herron:

On behalf of the members of AARP in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Health and Social Services Committee to support HB 71, authored by your Committee colleague Representative Lindsey Holmes and Representatives Nancy Dahlstrom, Charisse Millett, and Scott Kawasaki.

AARP encourages our 97,000 members in Alaska to prepare advance health care directives and to discuss their wishes with their family.

Unfortunately, all too often a serious illness or accident may strike when an individual does not have their directives on their person. It is also not uncommon for someone to arrive at a hospital and be unable to speak and express their wishes. This often results in a health care provider being unable to discern or to follow the preferences of a patient.

HB 71 would help alleviate this situation. HB 71 would establish a voluntary registry for health care directives which could be accessed by health care providers in time of need.

HB 71 offers everything we could ask for:

- Voluntary
- Confidential
- Available on a 24 hour basis
- Inexpensive
- Available for updating if the individual so chooses

Jennie Chin Hansen, President
William D. Novelli, Chief Executive Officer

If passed, AARP Alaska will encourage every one of our members to participate in the registry and to encourage their younger family members to do likewise.

AARP urges an "AYE" vote on HB 71.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Marie Darlin

My name is Lorilyn Swanson and I live at 3101 Riverwood Drive, Juneau, Alaska.

I have been the Manager of Fireweed Place an independent living senior apartment complex in Juneau for the last 15 years. I also sit on the Juneau Commission on Aging.

I am here today to testify in favor of the State of Alaska establishing and maintaining a registry for Advance Health Care Directives which will hopefully lead to incorporation into the National Health Care Directives Registry.

I support this for several reasons:

- Many of us have Advanced Directives and they are filed away in our home files – yes we know they are there but I ask you how many family members know where it is or how to access the information especially during an emergency. We live in the age of world travel – for those having an Advanced Directive they probably do not carry it with them I know I don't and I image that many of you do not as well. It is said well those persons can wear a medical alert bracelet – this is fine but many do not want to wear these bracelets and if they do it doesn't have the detailed information needed.

- I also see first hand the confusion that can be created by medical emergencies- I manage an apartment building for an aging senior population. A 911 call leads to emergency personnel being called to the building and one of the first questions I am usually asked if it is a life threatening emergency is do you know if this person has an Advanced Directive in place? I may know but unless it is lying on the table or in plain site in the apartment I do not feel comfortable answering that question unless that tenant has specifically instructed me to do so in case of an emergency and then I am still not comfortable with it.

In both of these cases should there be a State Registry with coordination to the National Registry any emergency personnel or institution would have computer access to this information immediately - this is why we all have an Advanced Directive in place so that it can be acted upon per our own personal wishes and instructions.

I would like to say, however, that I do not feel there should be a filing fee for registering. I feel that this would be a deterrent for many to not file – especially the low income.

We worked hard to have the Advance Directive recognized in this State and now it is time to make it work by establishing the State Registry.

Thank you

Sponsor Statement
HB 88
"An Act extending the termination date of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association; and providing for an effective date."

The Alaska Bar Association was established in 1955. The Bar Association's two primary functions are to screen applicants for admission, thereby ensuring all successful applicants are fit to practice law, and to provide discipline by investigating grievances against members of the Bar. The Bar Association also performs a wide variety of other functions including offering classes for continuing legal education, lawyer referral services, and fee arbitration.

The Board consists of twelve members, nine attorneys elected by the active membership of the Bar Association, and three non-attorney, public members appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Legislature.

The Division of Legislative Audit, in its November 4, 2008, report concluded that "the board, through the Alaska Supreme Court, protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. It also provides for the investigation of complaints and has established a disciplinary process designed to promote licensed individuals to act in a competent and professional manner." The Division of Legislative Audit further recommended that the termination date of the board be extended to June 30, 2017.

The Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association is currently scheduled to terminate on June 30, 2009, and would have one year to conclude its administrative operations unless the legislature acts this session. House Bill 88 will extend the termination date for the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association for another eight years.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This legislation would extend the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association to 2017. The board is governed by the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar. Accordingly, this legislation would not have a fiscal impact on any division of the State of Alaska.

Alaska Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 Alaska Bar Association Sunset June 30, 2009 recommends Alaska Bar Association extension. The Audit is online at http://www.legaudit.state.ak.us/pages/digests/2008/20057dig.htm

ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION SHOULD BE SUNSET JUNE 30, 2009 during Alaska 50th Anniversary of Statehood year for the foreseeable future while Alaska Legislature has time to analyze the two essential functions of admissions and discipline. Alaska has unique circumstances as the only state without a law school or any elected attorney. Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 is a "white wash." Sunset should be reevaluated by 26th Alaska Legislature 2nd Session. Please review the "Summary" of the Audit "four objectives of our report" including the termination date extension of Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association (Board), whether the Board is operating in the public interest, to determine if the Board has exercised appropriate oversight of licensed attorneys, and to provide current status on the recommendations made in the prior report. Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association demonstrate none of these objectives at the present time. Ms. Patricia Davidson, Alaska Legislative Auditor, is unable to write the essence of the lack of accountability of Alaska Bar Association as she is a public employee without legal recourse. Alaska Bar Association Audit is the most important of all the State of Alaska Audits done because if any other Alaska professional has a problem with licensure in his/her profession, the applicant must hire a licensed Alaska attorney in order to appeal. Only Alaska Legislature can create accountability of Alaska Bar Association. Major issues follow:

1. American and Alaskan Jurisprudence

Please specifically review Page 19 of Alaska Bar Association Audit #41-20057-08. Article I Section 3 of the Alaska Bar Association Bylaws sets out the purposes of the Alaska Bar which are:

"1. To cultivate and advance the SCIENCE OF JURISPRUDENCE." (Emphasis added.) "Jurisprudence is the philosophy of the law or science . . . which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based . . . (in order to) produce the greatest advantage to the community" according to Black's Law Dictionary. Please see "In Re Obermeyer II

8/23/00" and In the Matter of the Application of Thomas S. Obermeyer 717 Pacific Reporter 2d 382, 57 American Law Reports 4th 1195 (Alaska 4/18/86), both of which can be found at http://www.state.ak.us/courts "Appellate Courts" "Alaska Case Law Precedent since 1960," Thomson-West page, "By Party Name" "Obermeyer." THESE CASES ARE AMERICAN AND ALASKAN JURISPRUDENCE.

2. Alaska Bar Association Admission by Reciprocity Gives More Rights to Out of State Attorneys than Alaska Attorneys

The current Alaska Bar Rules of Alaska Bar Association give an Alaska law license to any applicant by reciprocity if he/she has been licensed by written Bar Exam in the 33 of 50 reciprocal states, pays $1,500, and gets three letters from clients in the preceding state that the applicant has practiced law there for 5 out of the last 7 years. Alaska Active Out of State attorneys number over 18% of the Total Alaska attorneys or 530 out of 2,938 per Todd Communications Alaska Directory of Attorneys Fall, 2008 Page 2. July, 2006-June, 2008 per the "Audit" Page 31, 45% of Alaska Bar Association admission has been by reciprocity – most of whom have never set foot on Alaska soil judging by their current addresses. Why do these out of state applicants want reciprocity here? Obviously, these attorneys are making money off Alaska. Another almost 30% of Alaska In State Active Attorneys work for the Government per Directory Spring, 2008 Page 64.

Alaska Bar Exam, "a test of minimal competency," has an average 63% passage rate July, 2006-June, 2008 per Page 31 of the Audit. Alaska has as high requirements as any state in the U.S. for sitting for this Alaska Bar Exam but presumably has the lowest passage rate of the 50 states of Bar Association applicants, all of whom went to American Bar Association accredited law schools.

If 45% of Alaska Bar admissions currently are by reciprocity to those who overwhelmingly are not Alaska residents, what will the number be if Alaska Legislature goes along with the Audit recommendation and continues Alaska Bar Association without review until June 30, 2017 or eight long years?

3. Current licensure by exam or reciprocity does not assure competence, ethical behavior, protection, or service to the public. Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association (Board) offers no alternatives.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has allowed a Massachusetts Bar applicant who graduated from an on-line law school owned by testing-prep company, Kaplan, Inc., to sit for Massachusetts Bar Exam. See Ross E. Mitchell vs. Board of Bar Examiners, SJC-10157, September 3, 2008 – November 20, 2008. The applicant was allowed to take and pass the California Bar Exam, a state which allows applicants to sit for this Exam from unaccredited law schools. What does this tell the Alaska public about bar exams? About competency to practice? About ethics? About dealing with clients, peers, and the courts in a timely and courteous way? If the practice of law boils down to one exam, one score on one sheet of paper, does it truly protect the public and inspire confidence, when a legal education was acquired at whatever rate of speed on-line? Mr. Mitchell has made both Alaska's licensure practices and American Bar Association accredited law schools' three years of Socratic Method teaching archaic. At Alaska Statehood 1959 and after, some attorneys and judges obtained Alaska law licenses by clerking for the court without having gone to law school at all. The on-line law degree points out that there are alternatives to practice that Alaska Bar Association is unwilling to visit.

Unlike all the other 49 states, Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors offers no alternative methods of admission like a possible clerkship at a law firm or for a judge, even after the Alaska Bar applicant has faithfully obtained American Bar Association 3 year law school education. Furthermore, the Alaska Bar Rule 2.2(b)(3) disallows admission by reciprocity if applicants have failed Alaska Bar Exam in the last five years even if licensed by written Bar Exam in a reciprocal state. This harms Alaska residents who live and work in Alaska and only highlights the unfairness of reciprocity applicants from 33 states who have never sat for the Alaska Bar Exam simply paying $1,500 to be licensed here. On point is Ms. Marla Greenstein, who as Executive Director, Alaska Commission of Judicial Conduct since 1982, was admitted by reciprocity in 1997 without having ever taken the Alaska Bar Exam. There are others including Ms. Angela O'Brien, licensed by reciprocity on September 30, 2008, who live in Alaska but have not taken Alaska Bar Exam. Alaskans currently would be fools to take Alaska Bar Exam with our low passage rate by going through our established Alaska Bar Association channels. The shrewd approach is to circumvent Alaska Bar Exam and become licensed in Alaska by reciprocity which is easier. Ms. Greenstein, Ms. O'Brien, and the others only had to have been licensed by written Bar Exam in a state that has reciprocity with Alaska and presumably proved in some perfunctory way that they had practiced five of seven years in their state of previous admission.

By contrast, Thomas S. Obermeyer, Alaska resident for 30 years and Attorney, licensed since 1990 by similar Missouri Bar Exam, a state that presumably has reciprocity with Alaska, has dedicated himself in good faith having paid for, studied for, and taken Alaska Bar Exam 34 times most recently "failed" on October 30, 2008 over an almost 25 year period in an effort to create fair Alaska law licensure. Tom has only chosen to go through the established process to obtain his Alaska law license and begin with his legal career. The lack of assistance given to Tom Obermeyer over such a long period of time shows how outrageously unfairly one Alaska Bar applicant could have been treated while seemingly everyone else is given favorable treatment.

4. Fairness to Alaska Bar Applicants for Admission

Please review attached "Draft Bill Authorizing Admission of Reciprocal Applicants to Alaska Bar Association" which can be downloaded at http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/26thAKLeg1stSess2009.pdf and the precedent, "Laws of Alaska 1966 HB 520 Chapter 144 An Act-Authorizing the Department of Labor to enter into reciprocal agreements with other states regarding wage claims; and providing for an effective date," that can be downloaded at http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/LawsofAK.pdf. The current practice of Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association penalizes local licensed attorneys who are admitted by Bar Exam in the 33 reciprocal states. "DRAFT Bill Authorizing Admission of Reciprocal Applicants to Alaska Bar Association" would change this practice that currently gives more rights to attorneys who have never landed on Alaska soil. Do Alaskans want those from other states to have more rights than we have? Does the "DRAFT Bill" protect the Alaska public?

5. The current Financial Position, Revenue, and Expense statements of Alaska Bar Association are jumbled and combined to confuse and hide actual expenses in the "ivory tower" Atwood Building #1900 in Anchorage.

The Audit fails to delineate details of operating expenses and personnel assigned to each activity, and it fails to list salaries of Executive Director, Bar Counsel, other attorneys and staff. RESULT: THE QUASI-GOVERNMENTAL ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION HAS NO GOVERNMENTAL SUPERVISION. Auditor Patricia Davidson did not so much as discuss the details of Alaska Bar Association Operating Budget information in her Appendices. The salaries and travel of the Alaska staff attorneys of Alaska Bar Association especially Ms. Deborah O'Regan and Mr. Stephen Van Goor, who have been employed at Alaska Bar Association since 1980 and whose salaries the Obermeyers have been paying since 1984, are not included. By contrast, when bills authorizing governmental activity are introduced in Alaska Legislature, attached are fiscal notes with personnel costs.

The Alaska Supreme Court should take over the Alaska Bar Association as a governmental body for the foreseeable future.

Admissions

If Alaska Supreme Court administers both exams and admission by reciprocity, there would be better communication between Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors and the Court, fewer admissions by reciprocity, more fairness and alternative options for admissions, better treatment of Alaska applicants, and more public trust. This would be an interim solution that should be tried for a year at a time with analysis by Alaska Legislature to see if it is working.

Alaska State Court justices/judges should be more fully scrutinized as well. I will update http://www.tobermeyer.info/asj.html which shows Alaska justices/judges got 50% salary increases per CSSB237 in 2006. Another increase was implemented by 25th Alaska Legislative 2nd Session SCS CSHB 417(FIN) Section 20 (a) (b) and (c). Research should be undertaken to analyze how many State of Alaska justice/judges are appropriate based on Alaska population and Alaska Bar Association membership. At the moment, becoming Alaska State Court justice/judge is much more coveted than actively practicing law as an Alaska attorney advocate. There is "Alaska Judicial Retirement System" through Alaska Retirement Management Board under Alaska Department of Revenue. Is there Alaska Judicial Retirement System Board? There should be more analysis of our Alaska State Court justices/judges by Alaska Legislature.

Discipline

Ms. Davidson indicates that discipline should be controlled by Alaska Supreme Court. Suspensions and disbarments are already submitted to the Supreme Court, but complete supervision of discipline should be imposed by the court. In many states there is a separate Office of the Disciplinary Counsel with a separate Board.

In the Alaska Bar Audit there is no discussion of "Citizen Complaints" against Alaska attorneys to Alaska Bar Association. The reader is expected to believe that there are no Alaska citizen initiated complaints at all to Alaska Bar Association. I have direct experience in this area per http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/VanGoor41505.pdf about the lack of any discipline whatsoever at Alaska Bar Association regarding the 30 lengthy complaints that I filed at Alaska Bar Association 1993-2003. I would be pleased to produce the three boxes of comprehensive timely stamped filings with lengthy transcripts of my 30 complaints against licensed Alaska attorneys which resulted in my worse treatment by more Alaska attorneys. In other words, I am positive today that every complaint I filed was used against me.

Regarding Alaska Attorney "Discipline Function" per Page 3 of the Audit, I am aware that very high profile Alaska attorneys who have been convicted in courts of law of criminal offenses after pleading "No Contest" have not been disciplined by Alaska Bar Association including Mr. Robert C. Ely and Mr. Mitchell Gravo. Former Alaska Attorney General Gregg Renkes resigned February 5, 2005 over a highly publicized conflict of interest but was never disciplined. He is a licensed Alaska Active Out of State attorney today. I have observed Board of Governors "throwing the book" at a handful of unknown Alaska attorneys in private practice whose ethical lapses are grave but these attorneys do not have criminal convictions from a court of law. I have not observed any semblance of consistency in "Attorney Discipline" for sanctions for similar offenses. All are approved by Alaska Supreme Court which is ultimately responsible for equitable fairness and justice in the practice of law.

The current discipline procedures of Alaska Bar Association are probably a primary reason why Alaska has the highest number of government attorneys in the U.S. in addition to the fact the Alaska attorney government employment is exceedingly lucrative offering excellent benefits and outstanding retirement packages. Alaska Legislature should get the salaries and benefits packages for the 576 or more State of Alaska attorneys out of a total 705 including State of Alaska, Municipal, and U.S. Government attorneys. State of Alaska attorneys are 82% of the total of all Alaska In State Government attorneys. In Spring, 2008 30% of the total of 2,395 Alaska In State attorneys were employed by the Government according to Todd Communications Alaska Directory of Attorneys. Fall, 2008 stopped publishing the number which probably exceeds 30% at this time.

Continuing Legal Education

So far, voluntary CLE in Alaska has been a farce. Regarding "Findings and Recommendations" of Audit #41-20057-08, no specific recommendation was made about how many hours of Mandatory Continuing Legal Education (MCLE) should be required for practicing Alaska attorneys. Ms. Davidson wrote on Page 7 of the "Audit" that 41 of the 50 states have MCLE. To date, 3 clock hours of Mandatory Ethics Continuing Legal Education (MECLE) began on January 1, 2008 and "has teeth" in that there are sanctions for non-compliance to be imposed after January 1, 2009 per Alaska Supreme Court Order No. 1640. Alaska Legislature should ask for a full report on how the newly concluded December 31, 2008 MECLE went. To my knowledge, all other professions in Alaska have much longer and expensive mandatory requirements for continuing licensure. Alaska Bar Association should do so as well. At least twelve hours of mandatory MCLE would improve the profession greatly in Alaska. It would also assure collegiality among lawyers and impose a sense of purpose and ethical public service. Ethics training is important but most attorneys know right from wrong long before they deviate from the norm.

I follow actively Alaska Bar Association activities and this Audit is the first I have known that a "Bar CLE Committee consisting of 15 members assists CLE director" Page 19 exists. What I know is that Ms. Barbara Armstrong, CLE Director since about 1980, was President, American Continuing Legal Education Association, about 10 years ago when Alaska Bar did not require Continuing Legal Education and many years prior to January 1, 2008 MECLE three clock hours implementation.

There is a Law Related Education (LRE) Committee of Alaska Bar Association which to my knowledge only gives money to K-12 education. I applied for three grants including "Keep the Kids in School Initiative Anchorage School District," "Alaska Permanent Fund Board Confirmation Committee," and "Fair Alaska Law Licensure" on January 10, 2007 to Ms. Barbara Hood, Alaska Teaching Justice Network. All were rejected by Ms. Barbara A. Jones, Chair, LRE Committee on January 31, 2007. In 2008 I was unable to find out when the LRE grant applications were due. I intend to apply again by January 16, 2009 but will be applying to Ms. Deborah O'Regan, Executive Director, instead of the Chair, LRE Committee. Ms. O'Regan is in control of the entire process.

Ethics Reform was presumably implemented in 25th Alaska Legislature 1st Session. There can be no Ethics Reform unless Alaska Bar Association is improved. I filed Complaint AGO File No. 661-08-0157 in September, 2007 which was a paper copy of Alaska Permanent Fund Board Confirmation Committee per http://www.apfboardconfirmation.org to Ms. Julia Bockmon, State of Alaska Attorney General's Office, requesting an investigation. Instead, I got a letter dated November 30, 2007 from Ms. Bockman copying Mr. Michael J. Burns, Attorney who has never attempted to be licensed to practice law in Alaska, former Chair, University of Alaska Board of Regents, and current Executive Director, Alaska Permanent Fund, stating "Further statements regarding the existence of your complaint or our investigation may result in penalties for violation of the Executive Branch Ethics Act." In other words, I was threatened with economic sanctions for filing the complaint.

Conclusion

Alaska Bar Association offices and personnel should become a State of Alaska governmental agency under direct supervision of Alaska Supreme Court with annual governmental budgets subject to Alaska Legislative scrutiny for the immediate future. This decision should be subject to review yearly.

Alaska Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 does little to dig into the details of the operation of the Alaska Bar Association. The Audit does not recognize that Alaska Bar Association fails in several of its intended purposes as stated on Page 19 because Alaska Bar has the benefit of governmental protection without direct daily governmental oversight. Alaska Bar does not advance jurisprudence and justice; increase public service and efficiency of the bar; promote reform in the law and procedure; or mandate substantive legal education. The Audit proposes more public notice and participation of public in teleconference meetings but the public is afraid of Alaska Bar so public notice and participation of the public in teleconferences will have no effect. Nothing could serve the public more than to make Alaska Bar functions a matter of total government control. Are the employees of the Alaska Bar Association staff, Bar Counsel, Executive Director, etc., the beneficiaries of State retirement and medical benefits? This should have been explained fully in the Audit but is not addressed.

Public participation currently is discouraged at all levels. When my husband, Thomas Obermeyer, Missouri Attorney since 1990, appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee in May, 2007 regarding sunset of the Alaska Bar Association, he was the only person to appear. Bar Counsel Stephen Van Goor was on line by teleconference. When Tom asked for time to contradict Mr. Van Goor's statements, Hollis French, still current Alaska State Senate Judiciary Chair, cut him off. The minutes of the meeting were never transcribed. Would anyone be more articulate than Tom Obermeyer who had in 2007 weathered 23 years and 30 Alaska Bar Exam "failures?" This was the same Hollis French who as a State of Alaska Prosecutor charged and prosecuted me in State of Alaska/Hilton Anchorage vs. Theresa Nangle Obermeyer 3AN-S98-2211 CR for over nine months until I was acquitted in a seven day jury trial on November 10, 1998. How much did that cost?

In my case, I have been defamed endlessly by Alaska corrupt media which is about 95% owned in many Lower 48 states because I continue to believe that I have a right to attend a public meeting. I was jailed over night in a set-up orchestrated by Ms. O'Regan and Mr. Van Goor when Board of Governors was at court on January 15, 1999. If a person dares to go to an advertised "public meeting," he/she is made to look foolish and is targeted. I have lived this fact for many years. Governor Sarah Palin nominated me December 2, 2008 http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/fbresponse.pdf for a position as a "Public Member" Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association. I hope that I will be appointed.

Alaska Bar Association has the best of both worlds – private and quasi-governmental. Currently, Alaska Supreme Court "rubber stamps" admissions and discipline actions and no Alaska State Agency oversees the Board's operations. This has to change. Alaska Bar dues are among the highest in the nation because Alaska attorneys do not want any competition. The Board allows the employees to lavish themselves with high salaries, travel, and plush offices as long as competition is limited. Alaska Active Out of State attorneys are very weak and totally depend on the handful of local Alaska attorneys who control everything that goes on in Alaska. Substantive truth and real numbers never surface.

This document is meant to create much more discussion about Alaska Bench and Bar. Alaska Legislature must send a strong message to Alaska Bar Association that "the light of day" will shine on its totally unaccountable practices that hurt all Alaskans.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE
ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION
SUNSET REVIEW

November 4, 2008

Audit Control Number
41-20057-08

The audit was conducted as required by AS 44.66.050 and under the authority of AS 24.20.271(1). Alaska Statute 44.66.050(c) lists criteria to be used to assess the demonstrated public need for a given board, commission, agency, or program subject to the sunset review process. Currently, under AS 08.03.010(c)(2), the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association is scheduled to terminate on June 30, 2009.

In our opinion, the termination date for this board should be extended. The regulation and licensure of attorneys contributes to the protection of the public's welfare. We recommend the legislature extend the termination date to June 30, 2017.

The audit was conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain sufficient, appropriate evidence to provide a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives. We believe that the evidence obtained provides a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives. Fieldwork procedures utilized in the course of developing the findings and discussion presented in this report are discussed in the Objectives, Scope, and Methodology.

OBJECTIVES, SCOPE, AND METHODOLOGY

In accordance with Title 24 and Title 44 of the Alaska Statutes (sunset legislation), we have reviewed the activities of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board). Under AS 44.66.050(a), the legislative committee of reference is to consider this report during the legislative oversight process to determine whether the board's termination date should be extended. Currently, AS 08.03.010(c)(2) requires the board to terminate on June 30, 2009. If the legislature takes no action to extend the termination date, the board will have one year from that date to conclude its operations.

Objectives

There are four central objectives of our report. They are:

1. To determine if the termination date for the board should be extended.

2. To determine if the board is operating in the public's interest.

3. To determine if the board has exercised appropriate oversight of licensed members of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar).

4. To provide a current status on the recommendations made in the prior report.

The assessment of the operations and performance of the board was based on criteria set in AS 44.66.050(c). Criteria set out in this statute relates to the determination of a demonstrated public need for the board.

Scope and Methodology

Our review focused on the continuing legal education requirement, discipline function provided by the Bar, as well as board proceedings. Our audit reviewed board operations and activities from July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008.

We reviewed and evaluated the following:

- Applicable statutes, Alaska Bar Rules, Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct, and Bar bylaws

- Board minutes

- Bar annual reports

- Attorney discipline files
- Audited financial statement of the board

In addition, we conducted interviews of the board president, staff, including the executive director, board counsel, director of continuing legal education, and comptroller.

ORGANIZATION AND FUNCTION

The practice of law in the State of Alaska is regulated by the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board). The board consists of 12 members including nine attorneys elected by the active membership of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) and three non-attorney public members that are appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature in joint session.

The powers and duties of the board are conferred by the Alaska Integrated Bar Act (AS 08.08), the Alaska Bar Rules, and the Rules of Professional Conduct which are promulgated by the Alaska Supreme Court. The purpose of the board includes the following: to cultivate and advance the science of jurisprudence, to promote reform in the law and in judicial procedure, to facilitate the administration of justice, to encourage continuing legal education (CLE) for the membership, and to increase the public service and efficiency of the Bar.

The two primary functions of the Bar are the admission and discipline of its members. To accomplish these and other functions, the Bar operated with a 2008 budget of $1,983,738. Funding is provided primarily by membership dues ($410 per year), admission fees, lawyer referral fees, CLE charges, administrative discipline fees, and interest income.

Admission Function The board is responsible for screening applicants for admission to the Bar. The board certifies to the Supreme Court that all successful applicants are fit to practice law. The board appoints an executive director who is responsible for directing all staff functions, including the oversight of the admissions function.

Discipline Function The board is responsible for investigating grievances against all members of the Bar. The board appoints the discipline counsel. This counsel is responsible for oversight of all disciplinary actions taken against the Bar's membership and provides an ethics course that is required for all applicants. The board selects hearing committee members from a group of individuals in each judicial district appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The board is also responsible for issuing reprimands when warranted, and for recommending the Supreme Court impose disbarment, suspension, probation, or public censure when appropriate.

Miscellaneous Functions The Bar also performs a wide variety of miscellaneous functions that include providing classes for and accrediting CLE providers, a lawyer referral service, client mediation, and fee arbitration with clients. In conjunction with the Alaska Legal Services Corporation, the Bar sponsors the Alaska Pro Bono Program. The Bar provides a number of other member services including attorney liability protection, group insurance, the Alaska Bar Rag, ethics opinions, and alcohol and drug counseling. In addition, the association provides grants through the Alaska Bar Foundation from earnings of interest on the lawyers trust account program. These grants are used to support legal services for the economically disadvantaged and improve the administration of justice.

The Bar's office is located in Anchorage and is currently staffed by 19 full-time and job-share employees.

The board's decision involving examination and discipline may be appealed to the Alaska Supreme Court. The Alaska Supreme Court issues the order of admission to the Bar and lawyer disciplinary sanctions involving disbarment, suspension, probation, and public censure.

REPORT CONCLUSIONS

In our opinion, the termination date of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) should be extended. The regulation and licensing of qualified attorneys contributes to the protection of the public's welfare.

The board, through the Alaska Supreme Court, protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. It also provides for the investigation of complaints and has established a disciplinary process designed to promote licensed individuals to act in a competent and professional manner. Chapter 58, SLA 2005 amended AS 08.03.020(c) to increase from four to eight years the period for which a board scheduled for termination may be continued or reestablished by the legislature. As such, we recommend that the legislature extend the termination date of the board to June 30, 2017.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

In the prior audit, Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association, Follow Up, September 15, 2006, (Audit Control No. 41-20050-06), there were three recommendations, one of which has been fully implemented. The implemented recommendation was to adopt a due date for timely issuance of annual reports. The recommendation was resolved at the board's September 7, 2006 meeting where the board voted to amend their Standing Policies, setting April 15 as the due date for the completion of the preceding year's annual report. Review of the 2006 and 2007 annual report documentation confirmed they were completed prior to the April 15 due date.

The recommendation to adopt mandatory minimum continuing legal education (CLE) for attorneys is partially implemented and is reiterated as Recommendation No. 1

The final recommendation, which relates to the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) developing a database of disciplined lawyers, has not been addressed and is reiterated as Recommendation No. 2. In addition, review of board meeting proceedings resulted in noted deficiencies. The deficiencies are further discussed in Recommendation No. 3

Recommendation No. 1

The board should recommend to the Alaska Supreme Court that mandatory minimum CLE for attorneys be adopted.

Prior Finding

CLE for attorneys is voluntary rather than required. The Supreme Court adopted voluntary CLE under Bar Rule 65 in 1999. It encouraged all active members of the Bar to complete at least 12 credit hours of approved CLE, including one credit hour of ethics. Incentives, such as reduction of Bar dues and eligibility to participate in the Lawyer Referral Service, are authorized to those who comply with the Bar rule.

Forty-one legal jurisdictions in the United States have a mandatory CLE requirement for attorneys desiring to practice law in their jurisdiction. Mandatory CLE requirements range from 8 to 27 credit hours per year with the majority of the jurisdictions requiring between 12 and 15 hours. Specific course requirements vary.

Most professions require continuing education to maintain licensure in Alaska. For example, Alaska-licensed dentists, doctors, pharmacists, and psychologists are required to meet minimum continuing education standards.

Overall, we believe a mandatory minimum CLE requirement will enhance the membership's continued professional competence and raise the public's confidence in attorneys. The board should encourage the Supreme Court to adopt an Alaska Bar Rule requiring mandatory minimum CLE.

Legislative Audit's Current Position

The board voted at their September 7, 2006 meeting to send the mandatory CLE rule, as published, to the Alaska Supreme Court. Based on this rule, the Alaska Supreme Court amended Alaska Bar Rule 65 through Supreme Court Order No. 1640, to require all members to complete three credit hours of mandatory ethics continuing legal education (MECLE) per year. In addition to MECLE, all members are encouraged to complete nine credit hours of approved voluntary continuing legal education (VCLE). Members must certify with the Bar that they have completed the required MECLE and provide the number or an estimated number of completed VCLE.

The Supreme Court Order No. 1640 also added Alaska Bar Rule 66 for the suspension of members who have not complied with completing the required MECLE or members who failed to report the MECLE and VCLE for the year. These rules became effective January 1, 2008.

The mandatory ethics requirement does not fully achieve the goal of promoting competency and professionalism in members of the Bar. Although ethics education is part of the goal, requiring CLE, as opposed to encouraging VCLE, will strengthen the public's confidence that attorneys are professional and competent. Therefore, we reiterate our prior recommendation.

Recommendation No. 2

The board should consider developing a database of disciplined lawyers in the Bar's website.

Prior Finding

While current procedures are adequate, the board could increase efficient and effective communication of lawyer discipline to the public by publishing their discipline list on the Bar's website.

Board procedures provide for public notice of all attorneys who have been disbarred, suspended, put on probation, publicly censured, or reprimanded. Currently, the board publishes the names of these attorneys in four major newspapers throughout the State, the local newspaper where the attorney practiced, the Alaska Bar Rag, and in the board's annual report. Notice of all disciplines imposed by the court, all orders granting reinstatements, and all public reprimands are also transmitted to the American Bar Association National Lawyer Regulatory Data Bank. These are long-standing means of providing public notice; however, 15 states currently also publish their lawyers discipline list on their websites.

The board should consider developing a database for the Bar's website of the disciplines imposed against lawyers. It would be an effective medium in addition to the others used to inform the public of lawyers who have been disciplined. It would enhance public notification and client protection through increased accessibility of discipline information.

Legislative Audit's Current Position

In their response to the prior recommendation, the board agreed that having public discipline information available on its website was a desirable goal and that they would work to that end. Although some steps have been taken towards the possible implementation of our recommendation, attorney discipline information is not yet available from the Bar's website.

The board stated in the prior recommendation that the new discipline module of the replacement database, including online reporting of public discipline would be operational in the summer of 2007. However, due to changing priorities, the Bar has not started implementing the discipline module, though it is tentatively scheduled for early 2009.

Legislative Audit's position remains unchanged. We continue to believe the board should develop a database of disciplined lawyers to which access is provided the public via the Bar's website.

Recommendation No. 3

The board should adhere to existing public notice requirements for all meetings or modify the bylaws to clearly address conference call board meeting procedures and public notice requirements.

The board, as the governing body of the Bar, is vested with the power and authority to adopt regulations and policies concerning activities, affairs, and organization of the Bar, as well as collect and disburse all monies of the organization. In order to achieve these responsibilities, the board meets at least four times during the year. In addition to the four regular meetings, the president may, or upon written request of three governors, call emergency meetings. Public notice for regular and emergency meetings must be provided at least thirty and three days prior to the meeting, respectively. The proceedings for these board meetings are outlined in the Bar bylaws under Article IV specific to the board.

Since June 30, 2006, there were eight regular and five conference call board meetings. None of the conference call meetings met the public notice requirements for board meetings. There appears to be some confusion by the board as to the public notice requirements for conference call meetings.

The bylaws do not identify conference call meetings as a unique type of board meeting with unique public notice requirements; therefore the board should adhere to the public notice requirements for regular board meetings. Adequate public notice of meetings is necessary to allow for maximum public participation in public activities.

If the board believes the conference call meetings are inherently different from regular meeting then the bylaws should be modified to clearly address conference call board meetings to ensure the appropriate procedures are followed and the public receives adequate notice for such meetings.

AUDITOR'S COMMENTS

The sunset process allows for an objective and independent review of various boards and commissions to determine if the public need for protection continues to exist and if the entity is satisfying that need. The overall conclusions of our review are that the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) is operating in the public interest and that there is a continuing public need for the attorney admission and discipline functions of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar). Nevertheless, an overall evaluation of the basic approach to these functions should be undertaken from time to time. Whether the discipline function is to be controlled by government or by attorneys is a policy-level determination that should be carefully considered by the Supreme Court, the board, and the legislature. The following comments are intended to assist in such consideration.

Self-regulation, whether by industry or profession, has always been viewed skeptically by the citizenry. There is often a perception of conflict of interest in whether actions are for the benefit of the organization's membership or for the citizens' benefit. The attorney discipline system of the Bar is a self-regulatory function that may suffer from this public perception.

The board is comprised of twelve members, of which nine are attorney members elected by the Bar's membership and three public members appointed by the governor. As the majority is elected by the membership, the Bar's discipline activities will likely be perceived as self-regulation.

We believe that the attorney discipline system in Alaska could be a government function. The American Bar Association concurs and, in fact has recommended that the disciplinary function of state bars be under the direct control of the Supreme Court. The American Bar Association's Model Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement, August 1993,[1] recommended the following:

> The disciplinary system should be controlled and managed exclusively by the state's highest court and not the state or local bar association...the disciplinary process should be directed solely by the disciplinary policy of the court and its appointees and not influenced by internal politics of the bar association... the disciplinary system should be free from even the appearance of conflicts of interest or impropriety.

The following options should be considered in a move away from attorney self-regulation:

- Disciplinary investigations performed by judicial branch employees.

[1] The Model Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement, August 1993 was amended on August 5, 1996, on February 8, 1999 and on August 12, 2002. The 1993 recommendation is in the commentary under Rule 2.

- Disciplinary function placed under the Supreme Court with a Disciplinary Board appointed by the court.

There should be no general fund net cost to either of these options. They would be paid for by attorney licensing fees, the same as they currently are, and as they are for other occupations. Fees are established such that full costs are recouped.

From a citizen's perspective, there are no advantages to allowing the legal profession to self-regulate. However, there will always be the disadvantage of at least the perception of inadequate discipline. In a move away from self-regulation, the legal profession and the State's citizens would likely benefit.

ANALYSIS OF PUBLIC NEED

The following analyses of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) activities relate to the public-need factors defined in AS 44.66.050(c). These analyses are not intended to be comprehensive, but to address the areas we were able to cover within the scope of our review.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or program has operated in the public interest.

The board admits applicants to practice law through an examination process that was designed in consultation with a national expert. The board also admits members by motion for reciprocity. This option is limited to attorneys in the active practice of law for five of the last seven years in states with which Alaska has a reciprocal agreement.[2]

Additionally, the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) also provides services that are more typically provided by professional associations rather than regulatory agencies. These include:

- The Bar has a committee to administer the Lawyers' Fund (fund) for Client Protection. This fund receives $10 from each active member's annual dues. The fund is used to reimburse clients for losses[3] caused by dishonest conduct[4] of a lawyer which is not covered by insurance or fidelity bond, whether of the lawyer or the client. The maximum amount payable to any individual is the lesser of $50,000 or 10% of the fund amount at the time of the award. The aggregate maximum amount that may be paid to all claimants under a fee arbitration case arising from the dishonest conduct of a particular lawyer is $200,000.

- Since 1976, the Bar has maintained a fee arbitration process allowing a client to resolve attorney fee disputes that have not been determined by statute or court rule or decision. For fee disputes of $5,000 or less, the process provides for a single arbitrator. Disputes over $5,000 are heard by a three-member panel that consists of two attorneys and one

[2] As of June 30, 2008, the Alaska Bar Association has reciprocal agreements with 33 states.

[3] Reimbursable losses are losses of money, property, or other things of value caused by the lawyer when: (1) acting in a fiduciary capacity customary to the practice of law, such as a administrator, executor, trustee, guardian or conservator; (2) acting as an escrow holder; or (3) filed within three years after the claimant knew or should have known of the dishonest conduct of the lawyer (Alaska Bar Rule 45).

[4] Alaska Bar Rule 45 defines dishonest conduct as, public member. Failure by an attorney to participate in this process may be grounds for disciplinary action.

> . . .wrongful acts committed by a lawyer in the manner of defalcation or embezzlement of money, or the wrongful taking or conversion of money, property or other things of value.

- The Bar also offers a mediation process that attempts to resolve the differences between attorneys and their clients. This process is not used when the issues are of a very serious nature such as allegations of intentional dishonesty, material misrepresentation, or the alleged conduct could lead to suspension or disbarment. Mediation requires the approval of both parties and the Bar counsel. The agreement is considered a contract and is legally enforceable in court.

- The Bar operates a lawyer referral service funded by enrollment fees from participating members. Members of the public can call an instate toll free number and obtain the names of three attorneys who have listed themselves as practicing law in a certain field. Lawyer referral service statistics are shown in Appendix D.

- The Bar provides grants to support legal services for the economically disadvantaged. Through the Alaska Bar Foundation, the earnings from the interest on Lawyers Trust Account are used to improve the administration of justice.

- The Bar jointly sponsors the Alaska Pro Bono Program with the Alaska Legal Services Corporation in which attorneys provide free legal advice to low-income Alaskans.

- The Bar also has a Lawyer Assistance Committee that provides assistance and counseling to members of the Bar, their families, or business associates when it appears a Bar member has substance abuse problems.

Determine the extent to which the operation of the board, commission, or agency program has been impeded or enhanced by existing statutes, procedures, and practices that it has adopted, and any other matter, including budgetary, resource, and personnel matters.

The operations of the board are funded entirely by the membership through dues, admission fees, continuing legal education charges, lawyer referral fees, convention fees, and interest income. In September 2005, the board adopted an amendment to Bylaw III, Section 1(a) which states that, "the annual membership fee for an active member is the amount approved by the board." Thus, the board can set the dues amount in accordance with the operating expenses and number of Bar members.

The 2008 budgeted revenue is $1,983,738. The Bar has cumulative net assets of $3,496,544 as of the end of calendar year 2007. The net assets include approximately $1.1 million for the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection. This fund is for clients who have suffered monetary losses as a result of dishonest acts by their lawyer. These funds are designed to protect the public and cannot be used for general operating expenses.

The maintenance of substantial net assets is not consistent with the other professions regulated by the State, under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development (DCCED) – Division of Corporations, Business, and Professional Licensing. Those professional fees are required by statute to be set so the total fee collections approximately equal the actual regulatory cost of the occupation. As the Bar is not included in DCCED's organizational structure, the ability to pool resources and meet funding shortages is not available. Although the Bar's funding needs are greater, the net assets are still substantial.

In order to address the cumulative net assets, the board voted at the end of 2007 to reduce the active members' due from $550 to $410, effective in the 2008 membership year. The Bar anticipates that with the reduction in membership dues net assets will be reduced by approximately $400,000 per year.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has recommended statutory changes that are generally of benefit to the public interest.

Although the board has a Statutes, Bylaws, and Rules Committee, consisting of 12 members responsible for drafting proposed revisions of the statutes, bylaws, and rules which govern the activities of the Bar, the board has not recommended any statutory changes during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008. However, the board has been active in the process of evaluating and revising the Alaska Bar Rules, bylaws, and Rules of Professional Conduct that govern Bar policies and procedures.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has encouraged interested persons to report to it concerning the effect of its regulations and decisions on the effectiveness of service, economy of service, and availability of service that it has provided.

The Bar's membership is involved in its operations. This operation may include service on one of the ten standing committees or five Alaska Bar Rules committees. It may include participation in one of 23 sections or groups of members with similar specialization (bankruptcy, criminal law, etc).

In addition to the above committees, members of the Bar may be appointed to serve in an adjunct organization, such as the Alaska Legal Services Corporation. Also, special committees are established from time to time by the president with the advice and consent of the board.

The Bar publishes all proposed changes to the Alaska Bar Rules in its quarterly publication, the Alaska Bar Rag, which is distributed to all members of the Bar and to interested members of the public. Members are asked to submit any and all comments on proposed rule changes for review by the board.

The board advertises board meetings on the Alaska Public Online Notice system and on the Bar's website. Members of the general public are encouraged to make comments and adequate time is allotted at all meetings.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has encouraged public participation in the making of its regulations and decisions.

In addition to the three public members who serve on the board, non-attorneys serve on disciplinary hearing committees and fee arbitration panels throughout the State.

As mentioned above, the Bar publicly advertises meetings of the board. Time is allotted at all board meetings for public comments. However, some board meetings did not have adequate public notice. Further discussion on public notice of the conference call board meetings is in Recommendation No. 3.

Determine the efficiency with which public inquiries or complaints regarding the activities of the board, commission, or agency filed with it, with the department to which a board or commission is administratively assigned, or with the office of victims' rights or the office of the ombudsman have been processed and resolved.

The Bar is an instrumentality of the State, but is not administratively assigned to any department. However, the Alaska Supreme Court exercises a great degree of oversight. Two complaints specifically involving the actions and activities of the board were filed with and investigated by the Office of the Ombudsman during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008. The investigations were closed due to the Ombudsman not having jurisdiction over the activities of the Bar.

There were no complaints filed with the Office of Victim's Rights against the board from July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008.

The board has a lawyer discipline process for investigation of grievances alleging attorney misconduct. If a grievance does not result in an investigation being opened by the bar counsel, the complainant may ask for that decision to be reviewed by the board discipline liaison. Additionally the Supreme Court may review decisions made by the bar counsel or the liaison, though this is done rarely.

Sanctions are imposed on those found in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The Supreme Court reviews only the most serious disciplinary actions, such as public censure, disbarment, suspension, or probation. Other disciplinary cases are not subject to Supreme Court review. These sanctions would include written private admonition and board reprimand. This process for professional discipline was developed through a cooperative effort of the Alaska Supreme Court, the board, Bar staff, and a review team from the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Professional Discipline.

The Bar receives an average of 228 complaints annually. Analyses of the complaints filed during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008 shows that all were reviewed, but relatively few were pursued beyond the initial investigation. Approximately 80% of the grievances received were not accepted for investigation due to lack of merit. The Bar estimates that 10 to 15 appeals are reviewed annually by the board discipline liaison, and 1 or 2 reviews by the Supreme Court.

Over 650 grievances were filed during 2006, 2007, and 2008,[5] resulting in 143 cases being opened and the remaining grievances were not accepted. The investigations resulted in thirty-two cases[6] with sanctions against a total of twenty-one attorneys. Four attorneys were disbarred, seventeen were suspended, three were publicly and two were privately reprimanded, five received private admonition, and one was publicly censured. Discipline statistics are shown in Appendix B. Closure of grievance cases with sanctions such as disbarment, suspension, public censure, public reprimand, and admonition appear reasonable.

Board procedures provide for public notice of all attorneys who have been disbarred, suspended, put on probation, publicly censured, or reprimanded. The names of these attorneys are published in four major newspapers throughout the State, the local newspaper where the attorney practiced, the Alaska Bar Rag, and in the board's annual report. Notice of all disciplines imposed by the court, all orders granting reinstatements, and all public reprimands are transmitted to the American Bar Association's National Lawyer Regulatory Data Bank. However, as discussed in Recommendation No. 2, the board does not publish the names of lawyers who were suspended, disbarred, publicly reprimanded or censured on their website.

Determine the extent to which a board or commission that regulates entry into an occupation or profession has presented qualified applicants to serve the public.

The board admits applicants to practice law through an examination process that was designed in consultation with a national expert. Admission is contingent on the following:

- Passing the Alaska Bar Examination.
- Passing the Multi-state Professional Responsibility Examination.
- Passing character investigation to determine if the applicant is of good moral character.
- Attendance[7] of a mandatory three hour ethics presentation by the board.

[5] Complaints received for 2008 include January 1 through June 30.
[6] A single attorney may have multiple cases filed against them.
[7] This requirement may be fulfilled by watching the ethics videotape and signing an affidavit.

The board also admits members by motion for reciprocity. This option is limited to attorneys in the active practice of law for five of the last seven years in the 33 states with which Alaska has a reciprocal agreement.

Examination and admission statistics are shown in Appendix C.

Per Bar Rule 65, in order to promote competence and professionalism, the Alaska Supreme Court and the Bar encourage all members to engage in continuing legal education (CLE).

Supreme Court issued Order No. 1640, which amended Bar Rule 65, to require all active Bar members to complete three credit hours per calendar year of approved mandatory ethics continuing legal education (MECLE). In addition, all active Bar members are encouraged to engage in nine hours per calendar year of approved voluntary continuing legal education (VCLE). This order became effective January 1, 2008.

The Supreme Court Order No. 1640 also added Alaska Bar Rule 66 for the suspension of members who have not complied with completing the required MECLE or members who failed to report the MECLE and VCLE for the year.

The Bar offers CLE for its membership and maintains an educational library. The majority of live CLE programs are presented and video taped in Anchorage. For lawyers located outside of Anchorage, the Bar has regularly scheduled video replays in Juneau, Fairbanks, and Kenai. Also available are DVDs and CLE materials for purchase through the Bar's online CLE library catalog.

In 2006, the Bar partnered with the online CLE provider LegalSpan to develop online CLE seminars and live webcasting of selected programs. The Bar presented 10 live webcasts in 2007. All of the video taped live seminars are also available as online CLE through LegalSpan.

Determine the extent to which state personnel practices, including affirmative action requirements, have been complied with by the board, commission, or agency to its own activities and the area of activity or interest.

The board allows special accommodations for applicants who have been determined to have disabilities.

We did not find any evidence that the board was not complying with state personnel laws, including affirmative action in qualifying applicants for licensure. In no instance did the board deny an applicant a license based on personal attributes.

Determine the extent to which statutory, regulatory, budgeting, or other changes are necessary to enable the agency, board, or commission to better serve the interests of the public and to comply with the factors enumerated in this subsection.

Please refer to the Findings and Recommendations and Auditor's Comments sections of this report.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has effectively attained its objectives and purposes and the efficiency with which the board, commission, or agency has operated.

Article I Section 3 of the Bar bylaws sets out the purposes of the Bar which are:

1. To cultivate and advance the science of jurisprudence.
2. To promote reform in the law and in judicial procedure.
3. To facilitate the administration of justice.
4. To encourage legal education for the membership.
5. To increase the public service and efficiency of the Bar.

To achieve these purposes, the Bar has established and maintains various committees and performs certain functions. For example, the Bar maintains a Law Related Education Committee to present programs to the community and school system to aid in the understanding of the law and legal system. The committee is divided into subcommittees in Anchorage, Fairbanks, Juneau, Kenai, Matanuska-Susitna, and other communities where the board president sees the need to appoint a subcommittee.

The board appoints three attorneys to serve staggered six-year terms on the Alaska Judicial Council (Council). The Council recommends candidates for judicial office and conducts studies for the improvement of the administration of justice in Alaska. Council members survey, investigate, and evaluate incumbent justices and judges standing for retention. The evaluation is published in the Lieutenant Governor's Official Elections Pamphlet. They are also involved in screening of applicants for the state public defenders' office.

The Bar's CLE committee, consisting of 15 members, assists the CLE director in overseeing the presentation of substantive legal education programs to educate Alaskan lawyers about developments in the field of law, and emphasize their ethical responsibilities. The Bar has conducted 68 live, 2 satellite, 15 webcasts, and 36 conventions for CLE presentations for 3,926, 4,820, and 1,976 attorney participants from calendar year 2006 through 2008,[8] respectively.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency duplicates the activities of another governmental agency or the private sector.

[8] Data is presented as of June 30, 2008.

The board does not duplicate the activities of another governmental agency. However, many of its activities are those typically performed by a professional association. As discussed earlier, some of these more typical private sector activities include such things as fee arbitration, referral services, and sponsorship of a pro bono program.

Alaska Bar Association
Funds

The Alaska Bar Association (Bar) maintains three separate funds for accounting and reporting purposes. These include a General Fund, the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection, and the Court System Library Fund. The following describes these funds and their purpose.

- General Fund – This fund is the Bar's operating fund. It accounts for the financial resources and transactions not accounted for in other funds.

- Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection – In accordance with Alaska Bar Rules promulgated by the court system, this fund is maintained solely for the purpose of making reimbursements to clients who have incurred non-insured losses of money or property as a result of dishonest conduct by attorneys. Related trustee counsel compensation may be paid from this fund under certain circumstances.

- Court System Library Fund – This fund is maintained by the Bar, pursuant to a cooperative agreement with the Alaska Court System and the Anchorage Bar Association. The purpose of the fund is to account for the portion of receipts generated from copying services provided in the Anchorage Law Library that are to be used for purchasing legal research resources for the Alaska Court Libraries as designated by the State Law Librarian.

The financial information of Bar funds is from the Bar's audited financial statements for 2007.

LEGISLATIVE AUDIT

Re: Preliminary Audit Report
Board of Governors of Alaska Bar Association
Sunset Review, November 8, 2008

Dear Ms. Davidson:

Thank you for the opportunity to offer a written response to the findings and recommendations contained in the above-referenced preliminary audit report. This response represents the views of the Administrative Office of the Alaska Court System (AOC).

The AOC takes no position on the findings and recommendations directed at the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association. We agree with the conclusion that the Board protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. We also concur in the recommendation to the legislature that the termination date of the Board be extended to June 30, 2017.

However, we take issue with the auditor's comments beginning on page 11. Those comments go beyond the scope of the audit by making conclusory observations about the merits of self-regulation by the Bar, and suggesting that attorney discipline in Alaska could be a government function. Specifically, it is suggested that the following options be considered:

- Disciplinary investigations performed by Alaska Court System employees
- Place disciplinary function under the Supreme Court with a Disciplinary Board appointed by the court

The historical record shows that attorney discipline has always been a matter of importance to the supreme court. In fact, when the supreme court first asserted control of the Bar over the Bar's strenuous objection in 1964, it did so by promulgating rules governing the discipline of attorneys, among other things. See In the Matter of an Application for an Order Vacating ALASKA SUPREME COURT ORDERS NO. 64, 68, 69, 70 and 71, and Other Relief, 395 P.2d 853 (Alaska 1964). Public confidence in the process of attorney discipline is essential.

Equally important, however, is the need to keep separate the prosecutorial and adjudicative functions inherent in attorney discipline. Under our system of government, it is imperative that those who have the duty of charging transgressors and proving their guilt do not have the final say in determining that guilt. As currently designed, the system of attorney discipline keeps a wall between those two roles. It is the Bar which has the duty to investigate and prosecute allegations of attorney misconduct, to make preliminary findings, and to recommend punishment. It is the supreme court which makes the final determination of guilt or innocence, and which makes the final determination regarding appropriate punishment.

The fundamental problem with placing the attorney discipline function within the court system is that the entity responsible for investigating and prosecuting attorney misconduct would also be the entity responsible for making the ultimate determination of guilt or innocence. As the final adjudicative body for cases decided under the Alaska Constitution, it is inappropriate for the supreme court to exercise both executive and judicial powers in disciplinary matters.

There may be other states in which the supreme court exercises both prosecutorial and adjudicative authority. However, that does not mean that it is good public policy to do so, or that doing so is consistent with the fundamental principles under which our system was intended to operate. Administrative convenience is not an adequate justification for this consolidation of government power.

If it is ever determined that the current system of attorney discipline does not work adequately and needs to be changed, a better model would be the one utilized by the Judicial Conduct Commission. This commission is part of the judicial branch of government, not the court system, and as such it is independent of the supreme court. The commission engages in investigatory and prosecutorial tasks when allegations of judicial misconduct are made, and makes recommendations to the supreme court. The supreme court exercises the judicial function, serving as the final arbiter of guilt or innocence.

It is true that a separate disciplinary entity such as this could be paid for by Bar dues and have no cost to the general fund at this time. However, the persons staffing said agency would be new state employees. The legislature has demonstrated an intent in recent years to limit the addition of permanent, full-time state employees, and absent concrete evidence that the current system does not adequately serve the public interest, it may be disinclined to create a new state bureaucracy.

Thank you for providing the opportunity to comment on this audit. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Very truly yours,

C. S. Christensen III
Deputy Administrative Director

LEGISLATIVE AUDIT

Pat Davidson
Legislative Auditor
c/o Division of Legislative Audit
4341 B Street, Ste. 400
Anchorage, AK 99503

Dear Ms. Davidson:

Thank you for the thorough sunset review of the Alaska Bar Association and the opportunity to respond to your preliminary audit report.

Sunset and Fiscal Note

The Board concurs with extending the sunset date of the Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors until June 30, 2017.

There will be no fiscal note attached to any bill filed with the legislature to extend the sunset date of the Board of Governors, as the Bar Association will not be seeking any state funding for its operational costs. The Bar Association has obtained state funding only during the limited time frame between 1981 and 1986, and only for the per diem and travel expenses of the three public members who sat on the Board. For the past 22 years, the Bar Association has paid those expenses without state funding.

As noted in the audit, the operations of the Bar Association are funded entirely by Bar members through bar dues, admission fees, Continuing Legal Education seminar fees, Lawyer Referral Service charges, convention fees, and interest income. Ironically, a decision to sunset the Bar would have a multi-million dollar fiscal impact to the state.

Response to Recommendation No. 1: The Supreme Court has adopted an MCLE rule and will review the program in three years.

The Alaska Supreme Court adopted an MCLE rule in December 2007, effective January 1, 2008. Bar Association members will be required to report for the first time by February 1, 2009.

The MCLE rule requires that all active Bar members complete at least three hours of ethics CLE per year and report that they have done so. Members must also report whether they have completed nine hours of general CLE, and if they have not done so, they must report the estimated hours of general CLE that they did complete.

In their commentary to the rule, the Supreme Court stated that "To protect the public, ensure that lawyers remain mindful of their obligations to their clients, and to address the area about which the Association receives the majority of questions from and complaints about lawyers, the Supreme Court is imposing a mandatory requirement for ethics CLE on all active Bar members."

The Court also stated that "At the end of three years, the Supreme Court will again assess the project's results, including recommendations and statistics provided by the Association, and will determine whether an expanded mandatory CLE program is necessary."

At the end of the three year period, the Association will have the benefit of its experience in administering the mandatory ethics and reporting program. It will be able to determine what issues and problems have arisen and will also allow the Association time to educate Bar members about complying with the educational and reporting requirements.

The Association has hired a part-time MCLE Administrator to administer the program. In addition, the Association is offering a free ethics CLE program on November 5, 2008, in accordance with the Supreme Court's wish that the Association provide at least three hours a year of ethics CLE at no cost to members. This program will be available in a variety of formats: live, via webcast or on DVD.

Response to Recommendation No. 2. We agree that Lawyer Public Discipline History should be available on the Alaska Bar Association website.

The legislative auditor notes that the Alaska Bar Association has joined a consortium of other state and local bars aimed at replacing our database with a new member management system. This will include a module specifically for lawyer discipline data. This system will provide a means to post public discipline information on the Bar's website.

It has been the Bar's goal since the website was first launched in 1998 to post public discipline information.

Like many computer programming projects, the implementation of the new database is taking longer than originally anticipated. Issues include the need to modify and test programs that are unique to Alaska. The new MCLE requirement also took priority over the implementation of other program modules, such as discipline.

In addition, the fact that only a minority of states publish their lawyers discipline list on their websites indicates the difficulty many states have in automating this information. Timeliness and accuracy are essential to this process.

The Board agrees that having public discipline information available on our website is a desirable goal and we will continue to work to that end. We anticipate that the new discipline module, including online reporting of public discipline, will be operational in the coming 12 – 18 months.

Response to Recommendation No. 3. We agree that the Bylaws of the Alaska Bar Association should be modified to specifically include conference call meetings of the Board and to provide for reasonable public notice of those meetings.

From time to time the Board of Governors finds it necessary to call meetings between regularly scheduled Board meetings to take up specific items which should not be delayed until the next Board meeting. The Board limits its action to those items listed in the call of the meeting.

Bar staff recognizes that the conference call meetings since June 30, 2006 did not meet the 30 day public notice requirement for Board meetings. However, the need for a conference call meeting of the Board is often realized only a week or two in advance, and therefore, it could not meet the 30 day notice requirement.

The staff will draft a proposed amendment to the Bylaws, to be taken up by the Board of Governors, to provide that the President may call a conference call meeting of the Board as appropriate to conduct business as necessary between regularly scheduled Board meetings. This will recognize conference calls as a unique type of Board meeting, and, in accordance with AS 44.62.310(e), the proposed Bylaw will state that "reasonable public notice" will be given.

The Bylaws will also be amended to clarify that Board of Governors meetings, as well as Association meetings, are governed according to Roberts Rules of Order, Newly Revised. The Board has operated under these rules, but this will be clearly stated in the Bylaws.

Matters "not accepted" for investigation.

Page 17 states that 80% of the grievances received were not accepted for investigation due to lack of merit. While formal investigations were not conducted, these matters were thoroughly reviewed by discipline section staff counsel with expertise in attorney grievance matters and both complainants and respondent attorneys were informed in writing of the reasons that the matters were not accepted for investigation.

Concluding Comments: Lawyer self-regulation has been effective and efficient in Alaska.

The overall conclusion of the audit is that the Board effectively serves the public interest through its lawyer admission and discipline process. We also believe that lawyer self-regulation is working very effectively and efficiently in Alaska. To its credit, the Alaska Bar Association has one of the most aggressive and effective discipline systems in the country.

In 2006, the Bar Association conducted an e-mail and phone survey of the members of the National Organization of Bar Counsel whose members staff disciplinary jurisdictions nationwide. Of the 48 states the Bar was able to contact, 26 indicated that they were not state government agencies.

As reported in our December 16, 2005 response, 13[1] jurisdictions, in addition to Alaska, indicated that they were not state government agencies under their supreme courts; 13[2] generally indicated that they were considered creations of their supreme courts, but either not considered state government agencies or state employees; and, 22[3] indicated that they were state government agencies under their supreme courts.

[1] Alabama, Arizona, Hawaii, Idaho, Kentucky, Montana, Nevada, North Carolina, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

[2] Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Based on this survey, Alaska is not unique in its approach to attorney discipline. Indeed, because the Bar Association performs these vital functions under the supervision of the Alaska Supreme Court, its system is similar to those in place in a significant number of other state jurisdictions.

We believe that there would be significant additional costs to both the court and the Bar Association if the attorney discipline system in Alaska was carried out by a government agency. Currently, the Bar Association has one bar counsel, two assistant bar counsel, one paralegal, two legal secretaries, and two other employees of the Bar who provide support to the discipline system in addition to their other Bar duties.

Currently these employees have the benefit of shared costs of office space, conference room, computer system, telephone system, copy machines, etc. with the rest of the Bar staff. In addition, the Bar's system administrator provides computer support to all Bar employees. If the discipline employees were split off from the Bar Association, they would lose the benefit of this shared functionality and they would have to purchase and maintain separate space and equipment.

Currently discipline hearings are heard by a members of a volunteer committee made up of attorneys and public members. If discipline were split off from the Bar Association, the state would need to staff this function with state hearing officers.

Currently bar counsel supervises the assistant bar counsel and discipline staff, as well as handling such other discipline matters as reinstatement, etc. He also handles approximately 800 calls a year giving informal ethics advice to members of the Bar. If a new state agency had less than three lawyers on staff, this valuable service would not be feasible and the current caseload would likely see a dramatic increase in processing time. The discipline section would also lose the assistance of the two staff persons who provide other support to the discipline section.

Meanwhile, the Board of Governors would still need to have its own staff counsel, so the Bar Association would still have the expense of a lawyer and legal secretary on its staff.

There would also be additional expense if there was a Disciplinary Board separate from the Board of Governors. Currently, the Board of Governors acts as the Disciplinary Board at its regularly scheduled board meetings. The budget for the Board travel is included in the Board of Governors budget, and is not included as part of the discipline budget, so Discipline Board meetings would be a new expense.

The cost to Bar members to support additional staff, separate offices and equipment and separate Boards would mean a significant increase in bar dues, the addition of a separate disciplinary assessment, or that these expenses come out of the state general fund.

We believe that the subjective benefit of splitting out the discipline function from the Bar is outweighed by the practical and economic realities.

It is also our belief that the present management system of the Bar provides a blend of private and governmental functions, insuring both accountability and good management. For example, the Bar is an instrumentality of the state and subject to legislative audits. Its meetings are open to the public. Members of the public sit on discipline hearings and fee arbitration panels as well as on the Board of Governors. Its rule making and discipline functions are overseen by the Supreme Court, which assures a sound investigative and judicial process of discipline. Finally, the statewide lawyer membership on the Board also ensures that the Bar Association is both responsive to the needs of its members, and qualified to address such issues as admission standards and peer review.

Reserves of the Alaska Bar

The Board has a policy to hold a working capital reserve in an amount equal to four month's expenses ($212,500/month or $850,000.) However it is not unusual for a non-profit association to hold a reserve in an amount equal to six to nine months of expenses. (Ranging from $1,275,000 - $1,912,000.)

Unlike state agencies, the Bar cannot request supplemental appropriations from the Legislature or pool resources if an unexpected event occurs which would incur significant financial expense. The Board also needs to be able to "save" for the financial viability of planned projects or events. For example, the Bar is in the process of replacing its entire database, a multi-year project that will cost nearly $200,000.

Between 1981 and 2005, Bar dues had only been raised twice: from $310 to $450 in 1994; and, from $450 to $550 in 2005.

At the October 2007 meeting, the Board of Governors approved the first bar dues reduction in the history of the Alaska Bar Association. To make the reduction, the Board voted to change a twenty-five year old budget policy that increased the unappropriated capital to offset future year deficits, deferring an increase in bar dues. Now the Board will budget on a "pay as you go" basis. This resulted in an approved draw down of the then $1.2 million unappropriated capital by approximately $400,000 for 2008. Active members of the bar saw their 2008 dues decrease to $410. 2008 inactive member dues were $135.

The Board reviewed the 2009 budget at the October 2008 meeting and voted to set 2009 active member bar dues at $450 (plus $10 for the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection) and inactve dues at $150. This will result in an estimated loss in 2009 of $340,697, leaving a projected estimate of unappropriated capital of $670,536 at the end of 2009.

Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection

Every year, Bar members each pays ten dollars to the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection. This is a trust fund which serves as a safety net primarily for clients who have suffered monetary losses as a result of dishonest acts by their lawyers. This Fund currently has $1,122,144. These funds are designed to protect the public and cannot be used for general operating expenses.

To date in 2008, $28,100 in claims was awarded to clients of attorneys who were found to be dishonest in their dealings with the clients. $127,235 was awarded in 2007 and $31,972 was awarded in 2006.

As an instrumentality that predates the ratification of the Alaska Constitution, the Alaska Bar maintains these funds under Article IX, Sec.

7 of the Alaska Constitution. It is unclear whether the Bar could continue to do so if portions of its powers were split to a state agency.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to comment on the audit report. We trust that our response has been helpful, and that it demonstrates the Board's continuing commitment to improving the legal profession and service to the public.

Sincerely,
Alaska Bar Association

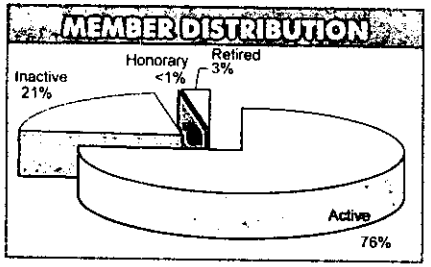
Introduction & Overview

In 2007, the Alaska Bar Association had 3,865 members in the following categories: 2,931 Active (2,406 In-state and 525 Outside), 825 Inactive, 108 Retired, and 1 Honorary. Its affairs are governed by a 12-member Board of nine attorneys and three non-attorney citizens. A (non-voting) New Lawyer Liaison also advises the Board.

Written guidelines for governance are contained in the Integrated Bar Act, the Alaska Bar Rules (promulgated by the Supreme Court of Alaska), the Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct, the Association's Bylaws and Regulations, the Board of Governors' Policy Manual, and a Personnel Manual.

The two most important functions of the Bar are the admission and discipline of its members, both of which are carried out under the supervision of the Supreme Court of Alaska.



There are presently 9 standing committees, 23 sections, 5 bar rule committees, and special committees as appointed by the Board. In addition, the Bar Association participates in a number of adjunct organizations and administers special projects, such as the Statewide Lawyer Referral Service. More than half of the membership participates, voluntarily and without remuneration, in the affairs of the association.

The staff of the Alaska Bar has grown from a part-time, volunteer executive secretary when it was founded in 1968, to 19 employees.

The association is primarily funded by its membership's annual dues, continuing legal education program registration fees, admissions, the annual convention, the Lawyer Referral Service, and interest income. The Association received no public monies in the 2007 fiscal year.

Principal Activities

• Bar Examination

The Alaska Bar Examination is conducted twice annually in Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau. It consists of: 1) one day of essay questions on Alaska law prepared by a permanent

Admissions

All applicants are required to attend a course on ethics as prescribed by the Board prior to admission.

All applicants must also submit an affidavit that they have read and are familiar with the Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct. (Bar Rule 64) committee of the Association known as the Alaska Law Examiners; 2) two half-days of objective, multiple choice questions (the Multistate Bar Examination or "MBE"), prepared by the National Conference of Bar Examiners (NCBE) and administered simultaneously in 48 states and D.C.; and 3) a half day of the performance test (the Multistate Performance Test or "MPT") prepared by NCBE.

In addition, a Multistate Professional Responsibility Exam (MPRE) is given separately three times a year (March, August, and November).

In 2007, 129 individuals took the Bar Exam and 78 passed the exam.

Admission Without Examination

Bar Rule 2, Section 2 provides an admission without examination rule, with reciprocity provisions. An applicant who has taken a written bar exam in a reciprocal jurisdiction and has engaged in the active practice of law for five of the previous seven years may be eligible for reciprocal admission.

In 2007, 43 applicants were approved for admission without examination.

• Discipline of Members

The Alaska Supreme Court has held that an attorney's license to practice law is "a continuing proclamation by the Court that the holder is fit to be entrusted with professional and judicial matters...as an officer of the courts." Investigation and recommendations for professional conduct matters have been delegated by the Court to the Bar Association.

Expenditures for the Discipline Section totaled $664,488 during 2007, a substantial allocation of Bar Association resources for the protection of clients, the public, and the legal system in Alaska.

2007 Grievances

The Discipline Section received 264 grievances in 2007, compared with 190 in 2006, representing a 39% increase. Summary statistical data related to discipline status are contained in the charts.

Summary of Public Discipline Actions in 2007

- The Alaska Supreme Court disbarred William S. Labahn effective September 14, 2007 and Mitchel J. Schapira effective November 21, 2007.
- The Court suspended Larry A. Wiggins for 180 days with 90 days stayed on conditions effective June 25, 2007.
- The Court issued a public censure to Anthony L. Strong effective August 22, 2007.
- The Court interimly suspended Mark J. Avery effective April 17, 2007.
- The Disciplinary Board publicly reprimanded James A. Wendt effective October 26, 2007.

> "The Bar Association, under the Alaska Bar Rules, maintains an Attorney Fee Dispute Review Committee to hear fee disputes between attorneys and clients."

Summary of Reinstatement Actions in 2007

A suspended or disbarred attorney may be reinstated by the Alaska Supreme Court, but only after the appropriate review procedures are followed.

The Court reinstated Eugene B. Cyrus effective March 23, 2007.

Summary of Disability Actions in 2007

The Rules of Disciplinary Enforcement also anticipate circumstances where the need for protection of the public arises from mental or physical infirmity, illness, or addiction to controlled substances.

Ronald W. Lorensen was transferred to disability inactive status due to a physical disability effective February 14, 2007. Unfortunately, Mr. Lorensen passed away on March 29, 2007. Clifford W. Holst was transferred to disability inactive status due to a physical disability effective March 30, 2007.

• The Attorney Fee Dispute Review Committee

The Bar Association, under the Alaska Bar Rules, maintains an Attorney Fee Dispute Review Committee to hear fee disputes between attorneys and clients where such disputes have not been determined by statute, court rule, or decision. Five subcommittees residing in Ketchikan, Juneau, Anchorage, Kenai and Fairbanks comprise the Committee. Each subcommittee consists of a "pool" of attorney and non-attorney members who serve for three years on a volunteer basis. From these subcommittees, a panel of two attorneys and one non-attorney is convened to hear a fee dispute. If the amount in dispute is $5,000 or less, a single panel member hears the matter.

• The Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection Committee

The Bar Association maintains a fund for the purpose of reimbursing attorneys' clients who have suffered non-insured losses of money, property, or other things of value, as a result of dishonest conduct by attorneys. Dishonest conduct is defined as acts of embezzlement, wrongful taking, or conversion of money, property, or other things of value. The fund also pays the cost of trustee counsel appointed by the superior court to close the practice of a deceased sole practitioner or a lawyer who has abandoned his or her practice. The monies of the fund come from yearly assessments on active members, paid concurrently with membership dues, as well as interest earned on the fund balance.

At the close of 2007, four (4) claims were pending before the LFCP Committee. The Committee and the Board of Governors took action on 21 claims during the year.

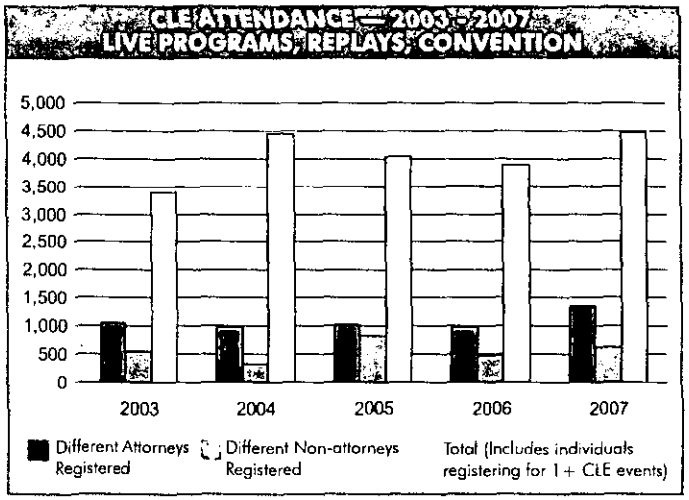
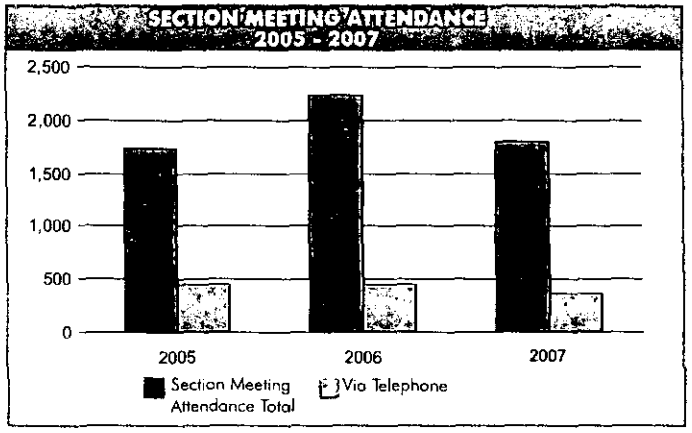
• Continuing Legal Education (CLE)

The Continuing Legal Education Committee and the Association's Director of Continuing Legal Education are responsible for presenting and administering all CLE programs and activities, including the CLE Library.

The substantive law sections of the Bar Association are responsible for sponsoring a minimum of one CLE seminar every two years. In 2007 there were 23 active substantive law sections, with a total membership of 2033 for all sections, an increase of 608 members over 2006 membership.

The majority of live CLE programs are presented in Anchorage, which has the largest concentration of lawyers in the state. All of these programs are videotaped.





Alaska Bar CLE Attendance

In 2007, registrations for CLE programs and events totaled 4,463.

Attendance at CLE programs totaled 2,110 (including 122 speakers), and 528 individuals attended one or more convention events.

Section Meeting Attendance

In addition, 1,439 attorneys attended in person and 359 participated by telephone in the Bar's substantive law sections' meetings. Attendance declined slightly in 2007 due to several sections opting to meet quarterly vs. monthly.

VCLE Compliance

A total of 1,096 active members of the Bar reported compliance with the VCLE Rule for the period of Jan. 1 - Dec. 31, 2007.

To provide CLE opportunities for attorneys practicing outside of Anchorage, the Bar has regularly scheduled video replays at law firms in Juneau, Fairbanks, and Kenai, as well having DVDs and CLE materials available for purchase through our online CLE Library Catalog. In 2006, the Bar began its partnership with the online CLE provider LegalSpan to develop online CLE seminars and live webcasting of selected programs. The Bar presented 10 live webcasts in 2007, and all of our videotaped live seminars are available 24/7 as online CLE through our online provider. The goal is to increase the number of programs we webcast live and to continue to add to our online CLE selections.

The Alaska Bar CLE program continues to work with Seattle University School of Law CLE and Summer Law School Programs. Faculty of the Seattle University's Summer Law Program at UAA meet with the Bar's substantive law sections, and section members make presentations to the law students enrolled in the program.

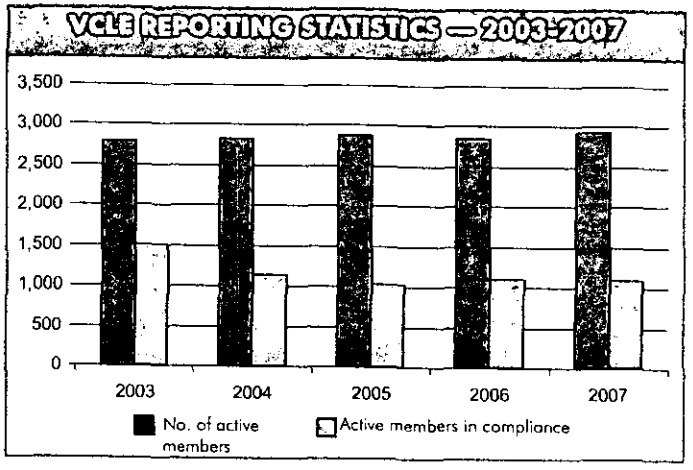
Group video replays are scheduled in the spring and fall in Anchorage, and admittees may also view the DVD individually.

• Voluntary Continuing Legal Education (VCLE) – Final VCLE Year

The Voluntary CLE Rule, originally a three-year pilot project, became effective on September 2, 1999 and recommended a minimum of 12 hours of approved CLE credit (including one in ethics) each calendar year. This incentive-based VCLE rule was adopted by the Alaska Supreme Court in response to the rule proposed by the Alaska Bar.

In May 2005, the Board of Governors appointed a Mandatory CLE Task Force, comprised of representatives of the Board, the Alaska Court System, and the Alaska Judicial Council, to study the issue of whether MCLE should be adopted in Alaska. The Task Force subcommittee reports were submitted to the Board of Governors for consideration in January 2006.



In September 2006, the Board of Governors voted to amend the Bar Rules to establish an MCLE program in Alaska, and to forward the proposed amendments to the Alaska Supreme Court for approval.

• Mandatory CLE Rule (MCLE)

In December 2007, the Alaska Supreme Court approved a Mandatory CLE Rule (MCLE) effective January 1, 2008. The new MCLE Rule requires all active Alaska Bar members to:

- Complete 3 hours of approved ethics CLE and report completion.
- Report whether the member has completed more than 9 hours of approved general (VCLE) CLE.
- Report an estimate of how many hours of approved general (VCLE) CLE completed if fewer than 9 hours completed.

• Lawyer Referral Service

The Bar Association operates a statewide Lawyer Referral Service for the purpose of providing the general public with names of enrolled active members of the Alaska Bar Association who are in good standing and are willing and able to accept referral clients at a reasonable fee.

Each caller requesting services is given the names of three lawyers in his/her geographic area who are listed in the category requested. Each lawyer pays a $4 surcharge to the Bar Association on each referral made, regardless of

• Pro Bono Services

The Alaska Bar Association's Pro Bono Director works in partnership with Alaska's legal service providers, the legal community, Pro Bono Services Committee of the Bar Association, and other organizations in Alaska to promote, educate, recognize and recruit attorneys and other professional services to assist low-income citizens. The program serves as an information clearinghouse for the membership regarding volunteer opportunities, resources, training, and other volunteer support services, as well as a point of contact for legal service providers.

Selected as an internship site by Seattle University School of Law since 2006, the program enjoyed the labor of a talented first year law student to help further the issues of pro bono needs in Alaska. Projects included volunteer attorney recruitment, legal literacy curriculum research and development, and organizational capacity building.

Through a partnership with the Anchorage Bar Association's Young Lawyer Section, the Pro Bono Director assisted in the creation, planning, and execution of a project to benefit Alaska's senior citizen population through the development of a legal resources guide. The project was one of eight selected for funding nationally by the American Bar Association and will be complete by July 2008.

In 2007, the Pro Bono Director, accompanied by the Bar President or a member of the Board of Governors traveled to seven communities—Kodiak, Nome, Kotzebue, Kenai, Soldotna, Homer, and Juneau—as an outreach function and to increase volunteerism in smaller communities. The director made presentations to 16 of the 23 substantive law sections, six community groups, assisted in the establishment of Alaska's only language interpreter center and served on the search committee for the organization's new director, spearheaded two community service projects in the areas of tax and estate planning, and presented at two swearing-in ceremonies of new attorneys to further educate them about the need for civil justice representation to Alaska's nearly 80,000 low-income citizens.

• Committees of the Alaska Bar

Substantial work is accomplished through the extensive committee structure of the Alaska Bar Association.

Governance is structured around the Board of Governors and its three major committees, with administrative and day-to-day activity as the responsibility of the Executive Director and staff.

Committees of the Bar include:

- The Bar Rules Committees, which include the Committee of Law Examiners, Area Disciplinary Hearing Committees, the Mediation Panel, the Attorney Fee Dispute Review Committees, the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection Committee, and Admission Waiver Programs.
- The Standing Committees, including Bar Polls and Elections, Continuing Legal Education, Ethics, Bar Historians, Law Related Education, Pro Bono Services, Lawyers' Assistance, Fair & Impartial Courts, and Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct.
- The Substantive Law Sections, comprised of 23 peer groups practicing in specific areas of the law.

Members and chairs of these committees and sections are found in the appendices.

Membership Services

In addition to services associated with CLE and other activity areas, the Bar Association provides other programs that assist members of the Bar in their practices. Complete information about these as well as other Bar programs and services can be found on the Bar's website at www.alaskabar.org.

Programs include:

- ALPS (Attorney Liability Protection Society). The Alaska Bar Association is a member of a multi-state, lawyer-owned insurance company. Membership in ALPS increases the availability of coverage to Alaska lawyers at rates that are predictable and which avoid dramatic fluctuations caused by policies and practices over which the lawyers have no control.

- Casemaker. This online legal research tool is available to all Alaska Bar members at no cost to members. It is included in bar dues. The Alaska Unreported Court Opinions Database will now be hosted by Casemaker. Alaska joined about 28 other states offering this web-based research library and search engine to their Bar members

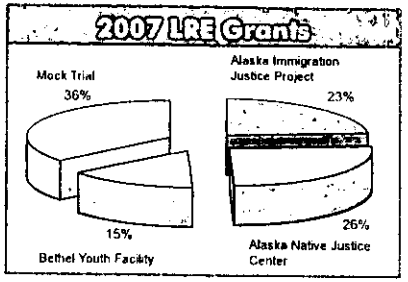
- Computerized Legal Research. The Bar Association sponsors a group program to provide members with access to LEXIS, a computer-assisted legal research service. Participating firms pay a $25 monthly subscription fee. Additionally, all members' use of LEXIS aggregates to take advantage of volume discounts.

- Free Downloading of Alaska Bar CLE Materials. All Alaska Bar CLE materials one calendar year old or older are available on the Bar website for free downloading. These materials are not searchable or linked.

- Group Insurance. The Bar Association sponsors a life insurance program for Bar members with LifeWise Assuance Company. All members of the Association and employees of their firms are eligible. The Bar Association

> "Substantial work is accomplished through the extensive committee structure of the Alaska Bar Association."

> In 2007, the Board of Governors distributed $6,930 for grants to organizations delivering Law Related Education (LRE) programs and materials. These annual grants are targeted to programs that offer practical or direct LRE programs in urban and Bush areas.



also sponsors a group medical program. Medical, dental, vision, life and disability coverage are available to firms ranging in size from sole practitioners to those with more than 100 employees. The plan is underwritten by Premera Blue Cross Blue Shield of Alaska. The Bar Association also sponsors a disability insurance program offered by Unimerica Insurance Co.

- The *Alaska Bar Rag. This quarterly periodical is the official publication of the Bar Association, with content provided by the Bar, attorneys, and organizations in the legal and justice communities. The editor is Thomas V. Van Flein.

- E-News. This weekly e-mail newsletter is sent to all members for whom the Bar has e-mail addresses, and contains announcements about Bar Association activities, court news, upcoming CLE programs, and other timely items of interest.

- Unreported Court Opinions Database. This database, formerly hosted on the Alaska Bar website, will now be available through Casemaker.

- Section News. This newsletter, containing notices of section meetings, CLE seminars, and information on new case law, is e-mailed monthly to 85% of substantive law section members. Members without e-mail are mailed a hard copy. Section meeting dates are posted on the website calendar, and the full newsletter is posted on the Bar website at www.alaskabar.org.

- Ethics Opinions. All Alaska Bar Ethics Opinions are published in the Alaska Bar Rag and online at the Bar's website at www.alaskabar.org.

- Public Copying Machines. The Alaska Bar Association and the Alaska Court System are continuing a cooperative agreement to provide copying services in the Anchorage Law Library. The Alaska Bar Association has a service agreement with the Anchorage Bar Association for the purpose of providing copiers in the Anchorage Law Library for the use of all library patrons. The revenue is divided as follows: Alaska Court System 40%; Anchorage Bar Association 50%; Alaska Bar Association 10%.

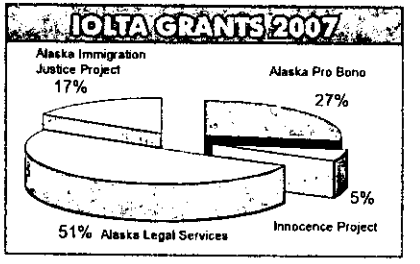
ADJUNCT INVOLVEMENT

The Alaska Bar Association cooperates, partners and supports with its membership a number of programs related to the Alaska legal and justice system:

- The Alaska Bar Foundation was established in 1972 for the purpose of fostering and maintaining the honor and integrity of the profession, improving and facilitating the administration of justice, promoting the study of law and continuing legal education, administering loans and scholarships, and maintaining a law library and research center.

- IOLTA is an opt-out Interest on Lawyers Trust Accounts program for the placement of client trust money into interest-bearing accounts. The interest earned on each account is paid periodically to the Alaska Bar Foundation for its charitable and public service work.

In 2007, the IOLTA program earned $161,415 from interest, and awarded grants totaling $140,000.



Foundation grants included: $71,000 to Alaska Legal Services Corp.; $38,000 to the Alaska Pro Bono Program; $23,500 to the Alaska Immigration Justice Project; and $7,500 to the Alaska Innocence Project.

- Alaska Law Review, edited by law students at Duke University School of Law in Durham, NC, includes articles by practicing attorneys, law professors, and notes and comments by Duke law students. The Bar publishes the law review semi-annually for the education of the legal community. Bar members receive the publication as part of their Bar dues benefits.

- Alaska Legal Services Corporation provides legal assistance to persons lacking the financial resources to obtain private counsel.

- Alaska Code Revision Commission, established in 1976, reviews and recommends revisions to the laws of Alaska.

- Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct includes three attorney members who have practiced law in Alaska for at least 10 years. They are appointed to the commission by the Governor from recommendations submitted by the Board of Governors.

- Alaska Judicial Council includes three attorneys who serve staggered, six-year terms. The council's purpose is to recommend candidates who are seeking judicial office and to conduct studies for the improvement of the administration of justice in Alaska.

- Other Relationships. The Bar Association maintains relationships with other, non-Alaskan organizations, usually with representation by a member of the Board of Governors or Bar executive staff. These include the American Bar Association, National Conference of Bar Presidents, Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference, National Association of Bar Executives, Association for Continuing Legal Education (ACLEA), CLEreg (MCLE Regulators), National Organization of Bar Counsel, National Conference of Bar Examiners, and Western States Bar Conference.

Financial Statements & Budget

The 2007 financial reports reflect total general fund revenue of $2,512,246, with total expenses of $2,234,380. The net gain of $277,866 was a slight decline from the 2006 gain of $280,251.

INDEPENDENT AUDITORS' REPORT

Board of Governors
Alaska Bar Association

We have audited the accompanying statements of financial position of the General Fund, the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection and the Court System Library Fund of the Alaska Bar Association as of December 31, 2007, and the related statements of activities, functional expenses, and cash flows for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Association's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the General Fund, the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection and the Court System Library Fund of the Alaska Bar Association as of December 31, 2006, and the changes in net assets and cash flows for the year then ended in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

APPENDIX A

Bar Bylaws and Regulations Added, Modified, or Repealed in 2007

Article VII, Section 1(a)(11)

September 2007: The Board amended Bylaws, Article VII, Section 1(a)(11) to change the name of the "Judicial Independence Committee" to the "Committee for Fair and Impartial Courts."

Article VII, Section 1(a)(3)

October 2007: The Board amended Bylaws, Article VII, Section 1(a)(3) to change the reference from the "Code of Professional Responsibility" to the "Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct."

Bar Rules Proposed to the Supreme Court in 2007

Alaska Bar Rules

January 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 39(a) correcting the Bar Association's address.

January 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 40(u) correcting the citations to the uniform arbitration acts.

February 2007: The Board proposed a new rule, Bar Rule 15.1, that would require lawyers to have their trust accounts only at institutions that agree to provide trust account overdraft notices to bar counsel.

February 2007: The Board proposed an addition to Bar Rule 13 that would provide for a challenge procedure to mediators and referral back to grievance investigation or fee arbitration if there is no response to scheduling requests.

February 2007: The Board proposed an addition to Bar Rule 38 that would provide for the appointment of a mediator to the Executive Committee of the Fee Dispute Resolution Program and making the President-Elect a non-voting member.

February 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 40 that would change the start of the time period for requesting modification of a fee arbitration decision from "delivery" to "service" of the decision and would change the start of the time period for objection from "receipt" of notice to "service" of notice.

February 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 61(a) that would remove the filing date for a petition to suspend for nonpayment of dues. In addition, the amendment would direct the petition to the entire Supreme Court rather than an individual justice.

October 2007: The Board proposed amendments to Bar Rule 44 regarding legal intern permit eligibility and renewal as well as permitted acts by a legal intern.

October 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 44.1(f)(2)(A) that would change the reference from the "Code of Professional Responsibility" to the "Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct."

November 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 63 that would require a nonlawyer who prepares or completes documents for compensation to obtain and maintain for five years a signed statement from the consumer that warns that the preparer is not a lawyer, that the document may not be legally enforceable, that the document should be reviewed by a lawyer admitted to practice in Alaska, and that the consumer may report any problems with the document to the Bar Association.

December 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 6, Section 7(b) that would delete the appeal provision relating to residency requirements since the residency requirement has been abolished.

December 2007: The Board proposed an amendment to Bar Rule 5, Section 3 that would allow any state or federal judicial officer to sign an order of admission if eligibility is certified and would permit any state or federal judicial officer or any person authorized to administer oaths to administer the oath of admission to the Bar.

Bar Rules Adopted by the Supreme Court in 2007

Alaska Bar Rules

Effective April 16, 2007: The Court amended Bar Rules 8(3) and 22(p) to clarify the contents of excerpts of record to be filed in admissions and discipline appeals.

Effective October 15, 2007: The Court amended Bar Rule 61(d) to correct the name of the "Child Support Enforcement Division" to the "Child Support Services Division."

Effective October 15, 2007: The Court amended Bar Rule 5, Section 1(b) to add the filing of the Bar Rule 64 affidavit to the requirement to file membership acceptance forms within 60 days of completion of certain admissions requirements.

Effective October 15, 2007: The Court added Bar Rule 43.2 permitting practice by Emeritus Attorneys for qualified legal services organizations.

Effective October 15, 2007: The Court amended Bar Rule 3, Section 6 to change the reapplication deadline for the July Alaska bar examination to June 15th.

Effective January 1, 2008: The Court modified Bar Rule 65 to provide for a mandatory ethics continuing legal education requirement of three hours per year and a voluntary continuing legal education recommendation of nine hours per year. In addition, the Court clarified activities that qualify for continuing education credit and other aspects of the program. The Court also amended Bar Rule 66 regarding suspension for failure to comply with the mandatory requirement. These modifications came as the result of a concerted effort on the part of the Court and the Board to achieve a meaningful program.

Effective April 15, 2008: The Court amended Bar Rule 29 to permit appeals or petitions for hearing in disciplinary reinstatement matters.

Sponsor Statement
HB 98

"An Act relating to minor consuming and repeat minor consuming; and providing for an effective date."

HB 98 fixes a problem that occurred with the enactment of HB 359, a bill that passed the House unanimously in the 25th Legislative Session. HB 359 originated due to the desire of Alaskan youths to join the military and not being able to due to probation restrictions from a minor consuming charge that may have occurred 5 years previously. Unfortunately, when the bill was drafted, it left a loop-hole in the repeat minor consuming law.

HB 98 fixes this loop-hole by amending the language of AS 04.16.050(c) to include in the list of predicate offenses for repeat minor consuming "previously granted suspended imposition of sentence", and "a prior conviction under AS 04.16.050(b)(2)."

This new language will now cover all repeat offenders, no matter how their previous minor consuming charges were adjudicated.

C

West's Alaska Statutes Annotated Currentness
Title 4. Alcoholic Beverages
Chapter 16. Regulation of Sales and Distribution
Article 1. Prohibited Acts
→ § 04.16.050. Possession, control, or consumption by persons under the age of 21

(a) A person under the age of 21 years may not knowingly consume, possess, or control alcoholic beverages except those furnished persons under AS 04.16.051(b).

(b) A person who violates (a) of this section and who has not been previously convicted or received a suspended imposition of sentence under (1) of this subsection is guilty of minor consuming or in possession or control. Upon conviction in the district court, the court

(1) may grant a suspended imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085 and place the person on probation for up to one year if the person has not been convicted of a violation of this section previously; among the conditions of probation, the court shall, with the consent of a community diversion panel, refer the person to the panel, and require the person to comply with conditions set by the panel, including counseling, education, treatment, community work, and payment of fees; in this paragraph, "community diversion panel" means a youth court or other group selected by the court to serve as a sentencing option for a person convicted under this section; or

(2) shall impose a fine of at least $200 but not more than $600, shall require the person to attend alcohol information school if the school is available, and shall place the person on probation for up to one year under (e) of this section; the court may suspend a portion of the fine imposed under this paragraph that exceeds $200 if the person is required to pay for education or treatment required under (e) of this section.

(c) A person is guilty of repeat minor consuming or in possession or control if the person was placed on probation under (b)(1) of this section or has been previously convicted once, and the person violates (a) of this section. Upon conviction in the district court, the court shall

(1) impose a fine of $1,000 and require at least 48 hours of community work;

(2) revoke the person's driver's license for three months;

(3) take possession of the person's driver's license; and

(4) suspend up to $500 of the fine and place the person on probation for up to one year under (e) of this section.

(d) A person is guilty of habitual minor consuming or in possession or control if the person was placed on probation under (c) of this section, or has been previously convicted twice, and the person violates (a) of this section. Habitual minor consuming or in possession or control is a class B misdemeanor. Upon conviction, the court may impose an appropriate period of imprisonment and fine and place the person on probation under (e) of this section for one year, or until the person is 21 years of age, whichever is later, and shall

(1) impose at least 96 hours of community work;

(2) revoke the person's driver's license for six months;

(3) within five working days, notify the agency responsible for the administration of motor vehicle laws of the revocation; and

(4) take possession of the person's driver's license.

(e) The court shall place a person sentenced under (b)(2), (c), or (d) of this section on probation for the appropriate period. The person may not refuse probation. The court may require the person to pay for and enroll in a juvenile alcohol safety action program, if one is available. The court shall impose the following conditions of probation:

(1) the person shall pay for and successfully complete any education or treatment recommended;

(2) the person may not consume inhalants or possess or consume controlled substances or alcoholic beverages, except as provided in AS 04.16. 051(b);

(3) the person shall timely complete any community work ordered, as provided in (f) of this section; and

(4) other conditions the court considers appropriate.

(f) A person ordered to perform community work under this section shall perform the work within 120 days of the entry of judgment for a conviction. The court may expand the time period for up to 30 days upon a showing of good cause. The person shall submit verification of completion of community work to the clerk of court on a form provided by the court. If the verification is not provided within the time period required by this subsection, the court shall, within 30 days, schedule further proceedings in the case to determine whether a violation of probation has occurred.

(g) The treatment recommended by a juvenile alcohol safety action program for a person placed on probation under (e) of this section may include a period of inpatient treatment if the judgment specifies the maximum period of inpatient treatment authorized. A person who has been recommended for inpatient treatment may make a written request to the sentencing court for review of the referral. A person shall make a request for review within seven days after the recommendation and shall specifically set out the grounds upon which the request for review is based. The court may order a hearing on the request for review.

(h) The juvenile alcohol safety action program to which a person is referred under this section shall inform the court or a minor's juvenile probation officer if the person fails to submit to evaluation or fails to complete successfully any education or treatment recommended. If the court finds that the person has failed to perform community work as ordered, to submit to evaluation, or to complete successfully the education or treatment recommended, the court may impose the suspended fine, and may impose any period of suspended incarceration. If the person was convicted under (c) or (d) of this section, the court shall revoke the person's driver's license for an additional six months beyond the revocation imposed under (c) or (d) of this section. A court revoking a person's driver's license under this subsection shall notify the agency responsible for the administration of motor vehicle laws of the revocation within five working days.

(i) When considering the financial resources of a minor for purposes of determining eligibility for court-appointed counsel under this section, the court shall consider the resources of both the defendant and the defendant's parent or guardian, unless the court finds good cause to treat the defendant's or the defendant's parent's or guardian's resources as being unavailable to the defendant.

(j) A driver's license revocation under this section is consecutive to a revocation imposed under another provision of law, but is concurrent with a revocation under another provision of law based on a prior conviction, adjudication of delinquency, or informal adjustment under AS 47.12.060.

(k) Notwithstanding (b), (c), and (e) of this section, a person sentenced under (b) or (c) of this section may make a motion to the court to terminate probation of that person before the end of the probationary period required under those subsections. The court may grant the motion if the court finds, by clear and convincing evidence, that

(1) the person completed any community work ordered under (f) of this section;

(2) the person has successfully completed any education or treatment program ordered by the court and, if required by the court, has either

(A) paid for the programs; or

(B) made a good faith effort to pay for the programs, agreed to have the debt reduced to a civil judgment, entered into a repayment plan with the provider or the state, and agreed that the civil judgment may be enforced in the manner provided for restitution and fines in AS 12.55.051;

(3) the person has either

(A) paid the fine; or

(B) made a good faith effort to pay the fine, agreed to have the remaining fine amount reduced to a civil judgment, entered into a plan with the state, and agreed that the civil judgment may be enforced in the manner provided for restitution and fines in AS 12.55.051; and

(4) the person has substantially complied with the other conditions of probation.

(l) In this section,

(1) "driver's license" has the meaning given in AS 28.90.990;

(2) "juvenile alcohol safety action program" means

(A) a juvenile alcohol safety action program developed and implemented or approved by the Department of Health and Social Services under AS 47.37;

(B) any other alcohol education or treatment program approved by the Department of Health and Social Services under AS 47.37 if a program described in (A) of this paragraph is not available in the community in which the person resides; or

(C) a program or counseling approved by the court if a program or treatment described in (A) of this paragraph is not available in the community where the person resides;

(3) "previously convicted" means a conviction or an adjudication as a delinquent for a violation of AS 11.71, AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, 28.35.280--28.35.290, or a law or ordinance in another jurisdiction with substantially similar elements.

1. Validity

Provision in statute prohibiting possessing, controlling, or consuming alcoholic beverages by a person under the age of 21, which provision requires younger offenders to stay on probation longer than older offenders by mandating that person convicted of violating statute be placed on probation for one year, or until the person reached 21 years of age, whichever is later, does not violate state equal protection clause; state has compelling interest in preserving health and welfare of minors and, given that younger offenders are more at risk than older offenders, challenged provision bears substantial relationship to legislature's goal of preserving minors' health and welfare by preventing unlawful underage drinking. Const. Art. 1, § 1; AS 04.16.050. State v. Morgan (2005) Alaska App., 111 P.3d 360. Constitutional Law ⚿ 3819; Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 19

Portions of statute imposing automatic "probation," which made statute unconstitutional in denying underage drinkers right to jury trial and appointed counsel on showing of indigency, could not be stricken, leaving rest of statute intact, where offensive potential punishments of custodial in-patient treatment and community service were clearly important to achievement of legislative goals, and even if offensive portions were removed, fact that underage drinker did not receive jury trial for first offense would prohibit imposition of increased penalties for subsequent offense, thus defeating legislative scheme of enhanced punishment for repeat offenders. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 6, 14; Const. Art. 1, § 11; AS 04.16.050. State v. Auliye (2002) Alaska App., 57 P.3d 711. Statutes ⚿ 64(6)

2. Nature of offense

Underage drinking violations are a class of quasi-criminal offenses which, while they are not serious, are to be disposed of within the criminal justice system. State v. Euteneier (2001) Alaska App., 31 P.3d 111. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 131

3. Search warrants

Underage drinking violations can be enforced by traditional criminal procedures, including the use of search warrants. State v. Euteneier (2001) Alaska App., 31 P.3d 111. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 249

4. Persons liable

Possibility that minor who purchases alcohol may drive automobile, and that alcohol-related accident may result, is well within scope of foreseeable risk, for purpose of determining liquor licensee's liability in negligence. AS 04.16.051, 04.21.020, 04.21.050. Loeb v. Rasmussen, 1991, 822 P.2d 914. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 288

4.5. Detention and custody

Police officers did not breach their duty to act reasonably in releasing intoxicated sixteen-year old to her parents, and thus city was not liable in wrongful death action brought by parents after sixteen-year old killed herself shortly after being released; officers initially and properly took sixteen-year old into custody based on their reasonable belief that she had violated law prohibiting minors from consuming alcohol, once officers detained sixteen-year old, they were then governed by statute that provided that the police must release a minor who has consumed alcohol to her parents unless there is a lawful reason not to do so, and parents did not show that there was a lawful reason to keep sixteen-year old in custody. Estate of Logusak ex rel. Logusak v. City of Togiak (2008) Alaska, 185 P.3d 103. Municipal Corporations ⚿ 747(3)

5. Defenses

Minor's willful misconduct in unlawfully purchasing and consuming alcohol, and in subsequently driving while intoxicated, did not bar recovery in negligence from owner of liquor store. AS 04.16.051, 04.21.020, 04.21.050. Loeb v. Rasmussen, 1991, 822 P.2d 914. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 295

6. Double jeopardy

Administrative revocation of a minor's driver's license for alcohol-related violation is not "punishment" for double jeopardy purposes; valid regulatory purpose exists in restricting or revoking driver's licenses of underage drinkers. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; Const. Art. 1, § 9; AS 04.16.050, 28.15.183. Rexford v. State (1997) Alaska App., 941 P.2d 906. Double Jeopardy ⚿ 24

7. Counsel for accused

Statute requiring revocation of driver's license of minor convicted of underage drinking or possession of alcohol was a punitive measure, entitling minors, under State Constitution, to jury trial and court-appointed counsel if indigent. Const. Art. 1, § 11; AS 04.16.050(a), 28.15.185. State v. District Court, 1996, 927 P.2d 1295. Criminal Law ⚿ 1715; Jury ⚿ 19.5

8. Presumptions and burden of proof

Exceptions in statute making it offense for person under age of 21 years to consume, possess, or control alcoholic beverages in those cases where beverages are furnished by parents, guardians, spouses, or licensed physicians or nurses were "defenses" to criminal liability, and thus, if defendant wished to invoke one of these exceptions, defendant had to affirmatively raise exception and point to some evidence from which reasonable jury could decide on issue in his or her favor; state was not required to disprove possibility that exception applied. AS 04.16.050, 04.16.051(b). Trout v. State, 1994, 866 P.2d 1323. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 224

9. Weight and sufficiency of evidence

Defendant charged with consuming alcohol while under 21 years of age failed to properly raise any of the statutory exceptions to criminal liability by failing to present some evidence from which reasonable jury could decide that issue in his favor, and thus, defendant was not entitled to judgment of acquittal or to jury instruction that would have required state to disprove exceptions to criminal liability. AS 04.16.050, 04.16.051(b). Trout v. State, 1994, 866 P.2d 1323. Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 236(1); Intoxicating Liquors ⚿ 239(2)

10. Probation

Trial court did not violate doctrine of separation of powers by requiring minor who was convicted of consuming alcoholic beverages to return to court every other week to report on her progress on probation; responsibilities for probation function were shared by executive and judicial branches, and legislative history of statute indicated that legislature wanted to assure that courts were part of the monitoring process for minors who were convicted of possessing or consuming alcoholic beverages. AS 04.16.050. Jackson v. State (2006) Alaska App., 127 P.3d 835, as amended. Constitutional Law ⚿ 2545(1); Infants ⚿ 225

Trial court's requirement that minor who was convicted of minor consuming alcoholic beverages return to court every other week to report on her progress on probation did not impermissibly relieve State's burden to prove a violation of probation, where trial court specifically stated that any petition to revoke minor's probation would have to be initiated by State, not by court. AS 04.16.050. Jackson v. State (2006) Alaska App., 127 P.3d 835, as amended. Infants ⚿ 225

Penalty of automatic "probation" for underage drinking, which permitted sentencing judge to order custodial in-patient treatment, community work service, and revocation of driver's license, were sufficiently severe that underage defendant was entitled to trial by jury and, if defendant was indigent, to counsel at public expense, where each of sentencing judge's permitted orders, if imposed as direct punishment, would have entitled defendant to trial by jury and right to appointed counsel upon finding of indigency. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 6, 14; Const. Art. 1, § 11; AS 04.16.050(e). State v. Auliye (2002) Alaska App., 57 P.3d 711. Infants ⚿ 68.4; Jury ⚿ 22(2)

Sponsor Statement
CS to HB 101 (JUD)

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy to satisfy a debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

This bill will provide people with better security and planning for their families after they have passed on. This bill exempts the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy or garnishment to satisfy a debt. The bill also includes an applicability section which states that it will apply only to a debt that is created on or after the effective date of the bill.

When fewer employers are offering retirement plans, the state can help offer families the opportunity to better plan for their future. People who are self-employed or working for an employer that does not offer a retirement plan can use annuities as a retirement plan and know that these funds are protected. With the uncertainty of social security, families need to be sure that they can provide for themselves and their survivors.

This bill encourages personal responsibility and protects the future of Alaskan families.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy to satisfy a debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.38.015(a) is amended to read:

(a) An individual is entitled to exemption of the following property:

(1) a burial plot for the individual and the individual's family;

(2) health aids reasonably necessary to enable the individual or a dependent to work or to sustain health;

(3) benefits paid or payable for medical, surgical, or hospital care to the extent they are or will be used to pay for the care;

(4) an award under AS 18.67 (Violent Crimes Compensation Board) or a crime victim's reparations act of another jurisdiction;

(5) benefits paid or payable as a longevity bonus under AS 47.45;

(6) compensation or benefits paid or payable and exempt under federal law;

(7) liquor licenses granted under AS 04;

(8) tuition credit or savings accounts under a higher education savings account established under AS 14.40.802 or an advance college tuition savings contract authorized under AS 14.40.809(a);

(9) a permanent fund dividend to the extent allowed under AS 43.23.065;

(10) [REPEALED

(11)] benefits paid or payable under AS 47.45.301 - 47.45.309;

(11) unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual.

 Sec. 2. AS 09.38.030(e) is amended to read:

(e) The following property, unless exempt without limitation under AS 09.38.015 or 09.38.017, upon receipt by and while it is in the possession of the individual, shall be treated as earnings, income, cash, or other liquid assets under this section:

(1) benefits paid by reason of disability, illness, or unemployment;

(2) money or property received for alimony or separate maintenance;

(3) proceeds of insurance, a judgment, or a settlement, or other rights accruing as a result of bodily injury of the individual or of the wrongful death or bodily injury of another individual of whom the individual was or is a dependent;

(4) proceeds or benefits paid [OR PAYABLE] on the death of an insured, if the individual was the spouse or a dependent of the insured; and

(5) amounts paid under a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing, annuity, or similar plan or contract, providing benefits by reason of age, illness, disability, or length of service.

 Sec. 3. AS 09.38.025(a) is repealed.

 Sec. 4. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 09.38.015(a), as amended by sec. 1 of this Act, and the repeal of AS 09.38.025(a) by sec. 3 of this Act apply to a debt that is created on or after the effective date of this Act from which an exemption is sought.

SECTIONAL
CS to HB 101 (JUD)

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contract from levy to satisfy a debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

Section 1: AS 09.38.015 Property exempt without limitation is amended to read:

(a) (11) adds unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual to the list of property exempt without limitation.

Section 2: AS 09.38.030 Exemption of earnings and liquid assets is amended to read:

(e) (4) proceeds or benefits paid [OR PAYABLE] on the death of an insured, if the individual was the spouse or a dependant of the insured; and

This section clarifies a potential ambiguity regarding trying to garnish someone's death benefit before that person has passed away.

Section 3: AS 09.38.025(a) is repealed because there is no longer any reason to have a section dedicated to the exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts since they now fall under the category of property exempt without limitation in AS 09.38.015.

Section 4: is an applicability section that states that this will only apply to a debt that is created on or after the effective date of this Act.

HOUSE BILL NO. 101

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE COGHILL

Introduced: 1/30/09
Referred:

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy to satisfy unsecured debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.38.025(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in this section or AS 09.38.017, an individual is entitled to exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual. [IF THE CONTRACTS HAVE ACCRUED DIVIDENDS AND LOAN VALUES AVAILABLE TO THE INDIVIDUAL AGGREGATING MORE THAN $10,000, A CREDITOR MAY OBTAIN A COURT ORDER REQUIRING THE INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR TO PAY THE CREDITOR, AND AUTHORIZING THE CREDITOR ON THE DEBTOR'S BEHALF TO OBTAIN PAYMENT OF, THE AMOUNT OF THE ACCRUED DIVIDENDS AND LOAN VALUES IN EXCESS

OF $10,000 OR THE AMOUNT OF THE CREDITOR'S CLAIM, WHICHEVER IS LESS.]

* Sec. 2. AS 09.38.030(e) is amended to read:

(e) The following property, unless exempt without limitation under AS 09.38.015 or 09.38.017, upon receipt by and while it is in the possession of the individual, shall be treated as earnings, income, cash, or other liquid assets under this section:

(1) benefits paid by reason of disability, illness, or unemployment;

(2) money or property received for alimony or separate maintenance;

(3) proceeds of insurance, a judgment, or a settlement, or other rights accruing as a result of bodily injury of the individual or of the wrongful death or bodily injury of another individual of whom the individual was or is a dependent;

(4) proceeds or benefits paid [OR PAYABLE] on the death of an insured, if the individual was the spouse or a dependent of the insured; and

(5) amounts paid under a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing, annuity, or similar plan or contract, providing benefits by reason of age, illness, disability, or length of service.

SECTIONAL
CS to HB 101

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contract from levy to satisfy a debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

The change in the title makes the debt term broader so as to include other circumstances, besides unsecured debt, in which exemptions apply.

Section 1: AS 09.38.025 Exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in this section or AS 09.38.017, an individual is entitled to exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual. [IF THE CONTRACTS HAVE ACCRUED DIVIDENDS AND LOAN VALUES AVAILABLE TO THE INDIVIDUAL AGGREGATING MORE THAN $10,000, A CREDITOR MAY OBTAIN A COURT ORDER REQUIRING THE INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR TO PAY THE CREDITOR, AND AUTHORIZING THE CREDITOR ON THE DEBTOR'S BEHALF TO OBTAIN THE PAYMENT OF, THE AMOUNT OF THE ACCRUED DIVIDENDS AND LOAN VALUES IN EXCESS OF $10,000 OR THE AMOUNT OF THE CREDITOR'S CLAIM, WHICHEVER IS LESS.]

Section 2: AS 09.38.030 Exemption of earnings and liquid assests is amended to read:

(e) The following property, unless exempt without limitation under AS 09.38.015 or 09.38.017, upon receipt by and while it is in the possession of the individual, shall be treated as earnings, income, cash, or other liquid assets under this section:

(4) proceeds or benefits paid [OR PAYABLE] on the death of an insured, if the individual was the spouse or a dependant of the insured; and

RE; House Bill 101

Dear Madams and Sirs,

NAIFA-Alaska supports House Bill 101.

In order for Alaskan's to protect their families, and to plan for retirements, we feel House Bill 101 is extremely important. We feel the safe passage of this Bill is a positive step in this security.

This protection IS already available in numerous other states. We would like to have this protection for Alaska's families as well.

We appreciate your support of this Bill. Thank you!!

Regards,

Kent S Kallander, LUTCF

CSHB 102(JUD) – UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

"An Act relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, to the general provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, to documents of title under the Uniform Commercial Code, to the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, and to lease-purchases of personal property; amending Rules 403 and 902, Alaska Rules of Evidence; and providing for an effective date."

The Uniform Commercial Code is a uniform act created with the objective of synchronizing the law of sales and other commercial transactions in all fifty states. The UCC is a joint project of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) and the American Law Institute (ALI). The UCC is not itself law, but provides recommendation of the laws that should be adopted by individual states. All fifty states have adopted the UCC in one version or another, and it is a major part of Title 45 of the Alaska Statutes.

The UCC was originally released in 1952; periodically, the NCCUSL and ALI revisit the UCC and make appropriate recommendations for revisions to states statutes. This bill reflects the recent revisions of Articles 1 and 7 of the UCC. The Alaska Uniform Law commissioners have recommended passage of these revisions this legislative session.

Article 1 provides definitions and general provisions for the UCC; the updates to Article 1 modernize and reflect changing business practices and developments in the law and are necessary to bring Article 1 up to date. Thirty-four other states have already adopted the revised Article 1 language.

Article 7 of the UCC pertains to warehouse receipts, bills of lading, and other documents of title. The revisions to Article 7 introduce new rules concerning electronic documents of title. The substantive revisions to Article 7 fall into four main categories: recognition of electronic documents of title; extension of the statute of fraud requirements to include electronic records and signatures as equivalent to paper documents and written manual signatures; establishment of the unique original in electronic form; and interchangeability between electronic and tangible documents of title. Thirty-one other states have already adopted the revised Article 7 language.

An expert from the NCCUSL will be available to testify and answer questions at the hearing, along with an Alaska Commissioner to the NCCUSL and Chief Administrative Law Judge Terry Thurbon. Should you have questions before the hearing, please do not hesitate to call legislative aide Allison Laffen at 465-2840.

MEMORANDUM February 24, 2009

SUBJECT: CSHB 102(JUD) relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, contractual duties, and liens (Work Order No. 26-LS0059\R)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

This memo accompanies a draft of the bill described above.

Single subject considerations. With the addition of just the lien language amendment in AS 34.35, the bill would have a single subject of "commercial transactions." With the addition of just the contract duty language amendment in AS 09.70.030, the bill would have to rely on a somewhat questionable single subject of "contracts." With the addition of both, the bill will have to rely on the somewhat questionable subject of "contracts."

Although I believe that this single subject would not ultimately be held to violate the constitutional single subject rule,[1] there is definitely an issue here. First, it is difficult to reduce the Uniform Commercial Code to "contracts," although that is the ultimate basis for its commercial transactions. The Supreme Court has held that the purpose of the constitutional provision is to guard against legislative log-rolling, "the practice of deliberately inserting in one bill several dissimilar or incongruous subjects in order to secure the necessary support for passage of the measure."[2] However, it is likely that the general perception, at least of the legal community, of the UCC, the contract duty in AS 09.70.030, and the lien provisions would be that they are logically related. So they may not be considered dissimilar or incongruously placed together in the bill. Second, it is not clearly spelled out in the AS 34.35 lien language that the transactions it covers are based on a contract. However, the treatment in AS 34.35 suggests that there was some kind of expectation or agreement that the other party would pay for the services provided.

[2] Evans v. State, 56 P.3d 1046, 1069 (Alaska 2002), quoting from State v. First National Bank of Anchorage, 660 P.2d 406, 415 (Alaska 1982).

Although some justices in dissents have expressed concern that the court's broad construction may possibly make the rule meaningless,[3] the Supreme Court has not overturned legislation because of a failure of the single-subject requirement. The Court has indicated that one meaning of the general subject is that all matters treated of should be so connected with or related to each other, either logically or in popular understanding as to be part of, or germane to, one general subject.[4] It appears logical to group the amendments and the original bill together as related to contractual relations. As mentioned earlier, it also appears likely that, at least in the legal community, the general perception of the items in the bill would be that they are logically related.

When construing the single-subject rule, the Court will "resolve doubts in favor of validity."[5] In order "to warrant the setting aside of enactments for failure to comply, the violation must be substantial and plain."[6] In this case, the possible lack of a single subject among the provisions is not plain and it does not appear to be substantial.

In light of all these factors, I would say that relying on the single subject of "contracts" probably would not be fatal for the legislation. However, it is an issue and I wanted you to be aware of it.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

EXPLANATION OF CHANGES – AMENDED 3/16/09

Changes between HB102 and CSHB102(JUD):

- Adds Section 1, which codifies in Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes a requirement already found in the common law of the state that all parties to a contract have a duty to act fairly and in good faith in the performance and enforcement of the contract. The Alaska Supreme Court has previously found that the duty of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every contract in Alaska, and has gone so far as to call the duty "a long-standing tenet of Alaska law." McConnell v. State, Dept of Health and Social Services, 991 P.2d 178, 184 (Alaska 1999). The covenant of good faith and fair dealing assures parties to a contract that no party "will do anything which will interfere with the right of [another] party to receive the benefits of the agreement." Guin v. Ha, 591 P.2d 1281, 1291 (Alaska 1979). The covenant is implied "in order to effectuate the reasonable expectations of the parties to the agreement." Ramsey v. City of Sand Point, 936 P.2d 126, 133 (Alaska 1997); see generally Casey v. Semco Energy, Inc, 92 P.3d 379, 384 (Alaska 2004); Keffer v. Keffer, 852 P.2d 394 (Alaska 1993); Municipality of Anchorage v. Gentile, 922 P.2d 248 (Alaska 1996). Since common law is more malleable than statutory law, codification through this legislation offers additional guarantees of the duty of good faith and fair dealing to all parties of a contract.
- Adds Sections 4-7, which modernizes the language of AS 34.35.200 and AS 34.25.225, relating to carrier, warehouse, and animal care liens, and clarifies that the remedies available under AS 34.35.225 and AS 45.07.210(g) are not mutually exclusive; an owner of property wrongfully disposed of has rights and remedies under each statute in the event both statutes apply. Adds Section 47 amending AS 45.07.210(g) clarifying that rights and remedies available under that section are in addition to rights and remedies under AS 34.35.225.

- Updates the language of Section 50, relating to AS 45.07.302. Professor William H. Henning, Distinguished Professor of Law at the University of Alabama School of Law, provide the following rationale for the change:

"The language in the uniform version of Section 7-302 was included because of the interface between state and federal law. At the time revised Article 7 was adopted by the Uniform Law Commission, federal law provided that performing or connecting carriers could not alter obligations if they were within the ambit of federal law regarding carrier obligations. The language in 7-302 designated what was outside that ambit and was included merely to point out what would have been true without the language - if the parties were outside federal law, the performing carrier COULD alter liability by agreement. Since the ULC adopted the act, much of federal law regarding carriers has been restated and reorganized and that exact formulation does not seem to be used. The new language that we suggested should be appropriate regardless of the scope of current federal law."

SECTIONAL ANAYLSIS
CSHB 102(JUD) – UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

"An Act relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, to the general provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, to documents of title under the Uniform Commercial Code, to the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, and to lease-purchases of personal property; amending Rules 403 and 902, Alaska Rules of Evidence; and providing for an effective date."

(Sections Making Substantive, Non-technical Changes)

Section 1 codifies in Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes a requirement already found in the common law of the state that all parties to a contract have a duty to act fairly and in good faith in the performance and enforcement of the contract.

Section 2 provides for the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (UETA) to apply to sections of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) concerning warehouse receipts, bills of lading and documents of title previously excluded from application of UETA.

Sections 4 – 7 modernizes the language of AS 34.35.200 and AS 34.25.225, relating to carrier, warehouse, and animal care liens, and clarifies that the remedies available under AS 34.35.225 and AS 45.07.210(g) are not mutually exclusive; an owner of property wrongfully disposed of has rights and remedies under each statute in the event both statutes apply.

Section 8 adds a short title, describes the scope, and adds rules of construction and severability provision for the UCC, and addresses modification of federal electronic signatures laws.

Section 9 adds several new sections to AS 45.01 to promote uniformity in UCC-covered transactions by revising or modifying general rules. These include: general definitions; standards for determining when someone has notice or knowledge; provisions on distinguishing between leases and security interests, what constitutes value given for rights, and determining whether actions are timely performed and what facts must be presumed; choice of laws; good faith; course of performance and dealings, and usage of trade; and various rights and remedies.

Note that this is a summary only. This sectional analysis should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Sections 15 & 17 amend payment requirement as it relates to delivery of goods and passage of title to goods to facilitate use of electronic documents of title.

Section 30 adds several new sections to AS 45.07 to modernize the UCC Documents of Title statutes, especially to reflect the use of electronic documents of title by the shipping and warehousing industries. These include: general definitions; negotiation of documents of title; use of alternative media (electronic versus tangible documents); and control of electronic documents of title.

Section 39 updates the language of warehouse lien provisions to include liens arising from storage agreements and clarifies (in this provision rather than by cross reference to another statute) the protection afford the rights of a person with a perfected security interest in the goods who did not entrust the goods/document of title.

Section 54 amends the lien provisions applicable to the carrier of goods to ensure that a carrier's lien extends to the proceeds of the goods, not just the goods themselves.

Section 61 modernizes the language of and clarifies the ability to limit a carrier's liability by specifically referring to bills of lading and transportation agreements at the source documents for limitation of liability provisions.

Section 68 modernizes the standards for negotiation of documents of title to address use of negotiable electronic documents.

Section 71 amends provisions on the rights arising from transfer of documents of title to address the rights of lessors and lessees.

Section 77 revises remedial provisions for dealing with lost or missing documents of title by changing the standards for require the posting of security before the courts order delivery of goods or of a substitute document, and eliminates archaic classification and tariff-related conditions from the standard for whether delivery of goods in good faith constitutes conversion.

Section 100 amends duties of secured parties who must respond to debtors' demands to include duties for a party with control over an electronic document of title to respond to such demands.

Sections 114 & 118 describe two indirect amendments of the rules of evidence and provide for those changes to take effect only if the necessary two-thirds majority vote is achieved.

Note that this is a summary only. This sectional analysis should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

SUMMARY

Revised Article 1 of the Uniform Commercial Code

Article 1 of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) provides definitions and general provisions which, in the absence of conflicting provisions, apply as default rules covering transactions and matters otherwise covered under a different article of the UCC. As other parts of the UCC have been revised and amended to accommodate changing business practices and development in the law, these modifications need to be reflected in an updated Article 1. Thus, Article 1 contains many changes of a technical, non-substantive nature, such as reordering and renumbering sections, and adding gender neutral terminology. In addition, over the years it has been in place, certain provisions of Article 1 have been identified as confusing or imprecise. Several changes reflect an effort to add greater clarity in light of this experience. Finally, developments in the law have led to the conclusion that certain changes of a substantive nature needed to be made.

The first substantive change is intended to clarify the scope of Article 1. Section 1-102 now expressly states that the substantive rules of Article 1 apply only to transactions within the scope of other articles of the UCC. The statute of frauds requirement aimed at transactions beyond the coverage of the UCC has been deleted. Second, amended Section 1-103 clarifies the application of supplemental principles of law, with clearer distinctions about where the UCC is preemptive. Third, the definition of "good faith" found in 1-201 is revised to mean "honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing". This change conforms to the definition of good faith that applies in all of the recently revised UCC articles except Revised Article 5. Finally, evidence of "course of performance" may be used to interpret a contract along with course of dealing and usage of trade.

Perhaps the most important change to Article 1, however, has to do with default choice-of-law provisions found in 1-301, which replaces previous 1-105. Under the Article 1 before the 2001 amendments, parties to a transaction may agree to be governed by the law of any jurisdiction that bears a reasonable relation to that transaction. Revised Article 1 provides a different basic rule that applies except for consumer transactions in certain circumstances.

With respect to all transactions, an agreement by the parties to use the law of any state (or in the case of an international transaction, country) is effective, regardless of whether the transaction bears a reasonable relation to that state. However, if one of the parties to a transaction is a consumer, such a choice-of-law provision in a contract may not deprive the consumer of legal protections afforded by the law of the state or country in which the consumer resides, or of the state or country where the consumer contracts and takes delivery of goods. Also, with respect to all transactions, an agreement to use the law of a designated state or country is ineffective to the extent that application would violate a fundamental public policy of the state or country which has jurisdiction to adjudicate a dispute arising out of the transaction. The forum state's law will govern the transaction if the contract is silent on the issue of choice of law.

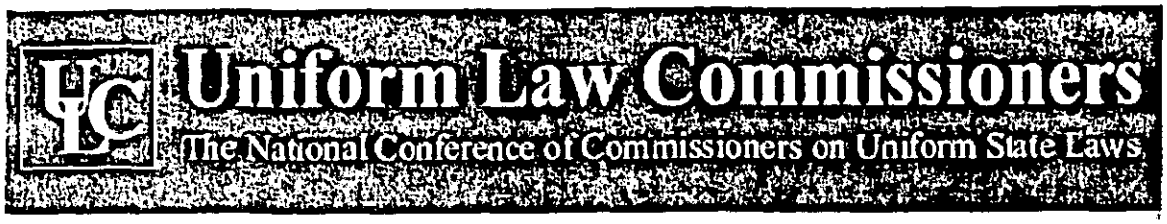
2009 INTRODUCTIONS:



SUMMARY

Uniform Commercial Code - Revised Article 7 (2003)

Revision in 2003

The original Article 7 of the Uniform Commercial Code, "Warehouse Receipts, Bills of Lading and Other Documents of Title," combined two earlier uniform acts, the Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act (1906) and the Uniform Bills of Lading Act (1909), with some principles from the Uniform Sales Act (which became Article 2-Sales of the UCC). Article 7 had not been revisited after the 1951 promulgation of the original Uniform Commercial Code until 2003, a period of 52 years. The longevity of the principles of warehouse receipts and bills of lading suggests very successful law and law-making as it pertains to the commercial storage and shipment of goods. The basic principles do not change basically in the 2003 revision. But there are reasons to readdress this area of the commercial law in 2003, which shall be discussed a little later. First, it is necessary to establish some of the basics.

Introduction to Documents of Title

The storage and shipment of tangible goods for commercial purposes has been going on for centuries. The physical side of the business is carried on by entities that provide warehouses (warehousemen) and entities that carry the goods from place of origin to destination (common carriers). These are tangible, visible businesses. What is not tangible and visible is the transfer of rights in the goods while they are stored and/or shipped. The common law provided the rules of bailment. The terminology of bailor and bailee is still incorporated in the Uniform Act. As the law developed, the transfer of rights came to depend upon the transfer of specific documents of title. The transfer of the documents from one person to another became the transfer of the rights. The title documents were warehouseman's receipts on the storage/warehouse side, and the bill of lading on the carrier side. The original uniform acts and the 2003 revision all incorporate these basics.

One of the important principles carried forward into the 2003 revision is that of negotiability. Free transfer of interests is an important policy norm throughout the UCC. In Article 7, documents of title may be negotiable. Whether a document is negotiable or non-negotiable depends upon how it identifies the transferee and how it is transferred. A negotiable document may be one of two kinds of paper documents, bearer paper or order paper. A document made out to bearer may be transferred from one person to another by simple delivery of possession. The delivery transfers the rights to the goods (therefore the title) to the transferee. Order paper is made out to a specific person. After initial delivery to the person named on the document, it may be negotiated to another person by the indorsement of the named person and delivery of possession to that other person. The rights to the goods (and therefore the title) pass with the negotiation to the transferee.

Documents of title may also be made non-negotiable. This is primarily done by a statement on the face of the instrument. Non-negotiable documents of title may also be assigned or transferred. The difference between negotiable and non-negotiable documents is the rights that they may transfer. A non-negotiable document of title transfers only the actual interests of the transferor. A negotiable document of title may transfer more than the actual interests of the transferor. If negotiated, for example, it transfers free of any claims against the issuer of the document. A non-negotiable document is not free of such claims.

Negotiation as a concept exists to make commerce in goods possible. Goods would not be transferred if the purchaser always has to look behind the transaction to see who may come after the goods after the transfer is complete. Negotiation erases the peril. The principle enunciated in Article 7 is consistent with other parts of the UCC governing notes, drafts, checks and investment securities.

Electronic Documents of Title

Article 7 governs other important aspects of the transfer of rights in goods when stored or shipped, such as the liens of warehousemen and carriers and their enforcement and allocation of risk of loss of the goods either in storage or transit, but the issue of negotiation has been its most important aspect, up to the revisions in 2003. Something very important has happened to change the way we look at the principle of negotiation. That something is computers, electronic communications and the ability to create electronic documents of title. Computers have been accused and applauded for their impact on commerce and business. Their impact on storage and shipment of goods is profound. Federal law has actually recognized electronic documents for some time, but electronic documents of title cannot be substituted one to one with tangible documents of title. Their characteristics in electronic form are not the same as their characteristics in tangible form.

The tangible form is a written document on paper with signatures of issuers and subsequent transferors. The individual document is a unique token of the rights and interests it represents. Even if there is a copy, there is always the original. This is not so with electronic documents. Originals and copies are indistinguishable from each other in electronic form. Signatures in the sense of an individual's scribing them uniquely on a piece of paper cannot be equally duplicated in an electronic document. Transferors and transferees, who are remote from each other when tangible documents are transferred, are not remote from each other in electronic media. Electronic communications can occur between any two persons anywhere in the world. Yet, it is difficult for each participant in an electronic communication to verify or authenticate the identity of the other party. To have the effective electronic documents that commerce demands, new concepts have to be introduced into the law. The concept of negotiation as we have known it in American law cannot apply in electronic media. The great addition to Article 7, therefore, is the new rules for electronic documents of title.

These rules must deal with distinct issues: recognition of electronic documents of title; statute of fraud extensions; establishment of the unique original in electronic form (sometimes thought of as authentication); and interchangeability between electronic and tangible documents of title. In addition, the rules for electronic documents of title must fit as seamlessly as possible into the existing system governing tangible documents of title. The law should avoid skewing the choice between tangible and electronic documents of title in the favor of either form. Only the actual marketplace should determine users' choices. Revised Article 7 deals with these issues and meets the test of seamless insertion into the existing law.

Recognition of Electronic Documents of Title

Recognition of electronic documents of title begins in the definition of "Document of Title:" "An electronic document of title is evidence by a record consisting of information stored in an electronic medium." Other definitions have been modified to accord with this root definition. For example, "Holder" is defined to include: "a person in control of a negotiable electronic document of title." Electronic documents of title become the equal to tangible documents of title.

Statute of Frauds Requirements

Revised Article 7 extends statute of fraud requirements to include electronic records and signatures. Any writing requirement that relates to enforceability of a document is a statute of frauds requirement. Article 7 treats electronic records and signatures as the equivalent of paper documents and written, manual signatures. This initially occurs in new definitions of "record" and "sign." A record is "information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form." The term "sign" is defined to "execute or adopt a tangible symbol" and "to attach or logically associate with the record an electronic sound, symbol or process." Within Revised Article 7, wherever the term "writing" or an equivalent may have been used before revision, the term "record" is uniformly used. When a document is required to be signed anywhere in Revised Article 7, electronic signing meets the test.

In addition, Revised Article 7 provides language stating expressly that it modifies, limits and supersedes the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. This express language, permitted in the federal act, avoids any issue of federal preemption. The federal statute allows specific tailoring for the purposes of incorporating electronic records and signatures into state law.

Establishing the Unique Token

It is not possible to transfer an electronic document of title in the same manner as a tangible document of title, particularly in terms of negotiating it. It cannot be guaranteed that a transfer directly from one person to the next by delivery and/or signature will transfer the authentic original document of title. An electronic alternative to the tangible system is necessary. To accomplish the equivalent system for electronic documents of title, Article 7 adapts the concept of "control" to the purpose. It is not a brand-new concept. It initially was developed in Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code for investment securities in the indirect holding system. The 1999 revisions to Article 9 adapted the concept further for secured transactions. Further adaptation of the concept occurred in Section 16 of the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act for promissory notes. This latter adaptation is most important for Revised Article 7, because the issues of negotiation for promissory notes are very similar to those for documents of title.

A person has control of a document of title for Article 7 purposes "if a system employed for evidencing the transfer of interests in the electronic document reliably establishes that person as the person to which the electronic document was issued or transferred." Such a system exists when it establishes a "single authoritative copy ...which is unique, identifiable and ... unalterable." The authoritative copy must identify the person in control or the next person to whom the document has transferred. The person in control determines to whom the document is next transferred. Further, the standard requires that copies that are not authoritative, including copies of the authoritative copy, must be readily identifiable as not being the authoritative copy.

There is more than one way to meet this set of standards, unlike negotiation of a paper document, which occurs in one way only. One way to establish the single authoritative document is to have a single custodian of the electronic record, who enters all transfers of the document and identifies the person in control on its records, records that for all who want to know is the source of the single authoritative copy. In such a system, the person in control notifies the custodian of any transfer or authorized change in the document, who then notates its records appropriately and notifies the person in control and other relevant parties of the action. A transfer would obviously shift control from transferor to transferee. The transferee would become the new person in control.

Encryption technology may provide other methods for meeting these standards. Some kind of hybrid system of encryption and custodian may arise. UCC Article 7 prescribes no system per se and more than one system may develop over time. It is not possible to predict what technology may finally bring to electronic transfer systems. Revised Article 7 allows the technology to develop without need to amend it later when a new kind of technology comes along.

Interchangeability

UCC Article 7 provides for an electronic system of transfer for electronic documents of title and for the traditional paper system of documents of title which includes negotiable documents of title. There are dual tracks. Control is the operative term with electronic documents and negotiation is the operative term for tangible documents of title. With respect to the transfer of rights in a particular group of goods, can electronic documents be converted to tangible documents and vice versa? UCC Article 7 provides for such conversions. An electronic document may be converted when the person in control surrenders control to the issuer, which then issues a tangible document of title containing a statement that it substitutes for the electronic document. The same kind of process will convert a tangible document to an electronic one. The person entitled to enforce a tangible document surrenders possession to the issuer. The electronic document must also state that it is a substitute for the tangible document. Without the ability to convert from tangible to electronic documents, this system would not work.

Other Benefits to Revision

The revisions to UCC Article 7, beyond making way for electronic documents of title, primarily update or clarify existing rules of law. There are references to tariffs and regulations in original UCC Article 7 that no longer exist with deregulation. These have been eliminated in the revision. There is nothing as significant as the rules for electronic documents of title. But these rules alone make it imperative for the states to enact the revision to UCC Article 7 as soon as practicable. Documents of title are fundamental to the transfer of goods in interstate commerce. The new rules are wholly commerce friendly and every state needs them as soon as possible.

HB 108 - Property Foreclosures and Executions
(3/27/09)

Alaska's statutes on non judicial foreclosure of real property are antiquated, ambiguous and unclear, and therefore, prone to unnecessary litigation. House Bill 163 clarifies the present statutory language, by simplifying and modernizing the foreclosure process. The suggested changes benefit lenders, borrowers and title insurance companies by bringing clarity and certainty to the foreclosure process.

HB 108 would improve many aspects of the foreclosure process as they appear in Title 34. Some of these changes are:

- Clarifies how proceeds from a foreclosure auction are to be disbursed
- Assures that foreclosure trustees are fiscally responsible by imposing reasonable bond requirements
- Allows trustees to nullify sales when mistakes are made that negatively affect the integrity of the sale
- Sets up procedures to follow involving a deceased borrower
- Creates common-sense rules to govern times and methods for posting foreclosure properties
- Defines when one's rights are terminated in the foreclosure process
- Allows acceptance of foreclosure auction bids via email, internet, and telephone for greater accessibility

Passage of HB 108 will streamline and simplify the foreclosure language in Alaska statutes and provide for a more open, accessible and fair auction process, benefiting borrowers, lenders, and title insurers, as well as reducing unnecessary litigation.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 108(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES RAMRAS, Gatto

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deeds of trust."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.35.140 is amended to read:

Sec. 09.35.140. Notice of sale on execution. Before the sale of property on execution, notice of the sale shall be given as follows:

(1) notice of the sale of personal property is given by posting a written or printed notice of the time and place of sale in three public places within five miles of the place where the sale is to be held, not less than 10 days before the day of sale; [ONE OF THE NOTICES SHALL BE POSTED AT THE POST OFFICE NEAREST TO THE PLACE WHERE THE SALE IS TO TAKE PLACE;]

(2) notice of the sale of real property is given by posting a similar notice particularly describing the property, including the property's street address if there is a street address for the property, not less than 30 days before the day of sale in three public places, as provided in (1) of this section, and publishing a copy of the notice four times, once a week for four successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest to the place of sale; an inaccuracy in the street address may not be used to set aside a sale if the legal description is correct [; IN THIS PARAGRAPH, "NEWSPAPER OF GENERAL CIRCULATION" MEANS A PUBLICATION THAT

(A) IS PUBLISHED IN NEWSPAPER FORMAT;

(B) IS DISTRIBUTED AT LEAST ONCE A WEEK FOR AT LEAST 50 WEEKS EACH YEAR WITHIN THE JUDICIAL DISTRICT, EXCLUDING A PERIOD WHEN PUBLICATION IS INTERRUPTED BY A LABOR DISPUTE OR BY A NATURAL DISASTER OR OTHER CASUALTY THAT THE PUBLISHER CANNOT CONTROL; AND HAS A TOTAL PAID CIRCULATION OR PAID DISTRIBUTION OF AT LEAST 500 COPIES, OR 10 PERCENT OF THE TOTAL POPULATION OF THE JUDICIAL DISTRICT, WHICHEVER IS LESS; IN THIS SUBPARAGRAPH, "JUDICIAL DISTRICT" MEANS THE JUDICIAL DISTRICT WHERE THE PLACE OF SALE IS LOCATED;

(C) HOLDS A SECOND CLASS MAILING PERMIT FROM THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE;

(D) IS NOT PUBLISHED PRIMARILY TO DISTRIBUTE ADVERTISING; AND

(E) IS NOT INTENDED PRIMARILY FOR A PARTICULAR PROFESSIONAL OR OCCUPATIONAL GROUP].

 Sec. 2. AS 09.35.140 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(b) In addition to the notice required by (a) of this section, notice of the sale of real property on execution shall be given by publishing a notice of the sale on an Internet website beginning at least 45 days before the date of the sale. The notice must be published for at least 30 days, including at least 10 of the last 15 days before the actual date of the sale. Giving notice under this subsection is not required unless there is an Internet website that qualifies under (c) of this section.

(c) To qualify as an Internet website on which notices of sale may be published under (b) of this section, an Internet website must,

(1) if operated by a newspaper of general circulation, be completely free to the public for viewing and not require a subscription; or

(2) if operated by a newspaper that is not covered by (1) of this subsection, or by another person,

(A) be available to any person;

(B) be completely free to the public for viewing and not require a subscription;

(C) be used primarily to advertise real property under foreclosure;

(D) have been in continuous operation for more than one year;

(E) have a viewership of at least 5,000 different visitors each month that is verified by an independent audit; and

(F) have an office in the state and the office has staff that includes a senior management person.

(d) In this section, "newspaper of general circulation" means a publication that

(1) is published in newspaper format;

(2) is distributed at least once a week for at least 50 weeks each year within the judicial district, excluding a period when publication is interrupted by a labor dispute or by a natural disaster or other casualty that the publisher cannot control; and has a total paid circulation or paid distribution of at least 500 copies, or 10 percent of the total population of the judicial district, whichever is less; in this paragraph, "judicial district" means the judicial district where the place of sale is located;

(3) holds a second class mailing permit from the United States Postal Service;

(4) is not published primarily to distribute advertising; and

(5) is not intended primarily for a particular professional or occupational group.

 Sec. 3. AS 09.35.142 is amended to read:

Sec. 09.35.142. Action to establish newspaper or Internet website status. A person who owns a publication may bring an action under AS 22.10.020(g) to establish that the publication is a newspaper of general circulation under AS 09.35.140. A person who owns an Internet website may bring an action under AS 22.10.020(g) to establish that the Internet website qualifies as an Internet website on which notices of sale may be published under AS 09.35.140(b) [AS 09.35.140(2)].

 Sec. 4. AS 34.20.070(b) is amended to read:

(b) Not less than 30 days after the default and not less than 90 days [THREE MONTHS] before the sale, the trustee shall record in the office of the recorder of the recording district in which the trust property is located a notice of default setting out (1) the name of the trustor, (2) the book and page where the trust deed is recorded or the serial number assigned to the trust deed by the recorder, (3) a description of the trust property, including the property's street address if there is a street address for the property, (4) a statement that a breach of the obligation for which the deed of trust is security has occurred, (5) the nature of the breach, (6) the sum owing on the obligation, (7) the election by the trustee to sell the property to satisfy the obligation, [AND] (8) the date, time, and place of the sale, and (9) the statement described in (e) of this section describing conditions for curing the default. An inaccuracy in the street address may not be used to set aside a sale if the legal description is correct. At any time up to two days before the sale date stated in the notice of default or to which the sale is postponed under AS 34.20.080(e), if the default has arisen by failure to make payments required by the trust deed, the default may be cured and sale under this section terminated by payment of the sum then in default, other than the principal that would not then be due if no default had occurred, and foreclosure [PLUS ATTORNEY] fees and [OR COURT] costs actually incurred by the beneficiary and trustee due to the default. If, under the same trust deed, notice of default under this subsection has been recorded two or more times previously and the default has been cured under this subsection, the trustee may elect to refuse payment and continue the sale.

 Sec. 5. AS 34.20.070(c) is amended to read:

(c) Within 10 days after recording the notice of default, the trustee shall mail a copy of the notice by certified mail to the last known address of each of the following persons or their legal representatives: (1) the trustor [GRANTOR] in the trust deed; (2) the successor in interest to the trustor [GRANTOR] whose interest appears of record or of whose interest the trustee or the beneficiary has actual notice, or who is in actual physical possession of the property; (3) any other person actually in physical possession of [OR OCCUPYING] the property; (4) any person having a lien or interest subsequent to the interest of the trustee in the trust deed, where the lien or interest appears of record or where the trustee or the beneficiary has actual notice of the lien or interest, except as provided in (f) of this section. The notice may be delivered personally instead of by mail.

 Sec. 6. AS 34.20.070 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(e) The statement required by (b)(9) of this section must state that, if the default has arisen by failure to make payments required by the trust deed, the default may be cured and the sale under this section terminated if

(1) payment of the following amounts is made at any time up to two days before the sale date stated in the notice of default, or two days before a date to which the sale is postponed:

(A) the sum then in default, other than the principal that would not then be due if no default had occurred; and

(B) foreclosure fees and costs actually incurred by the beneficiary and trustee due to the default; and

(2) when notice of default under (b) of this section has been recorded two or more times previously under the same trust deed and the default has been cured under (b) of this section, the trustee does not elect to refuse payment and continue the sale.

(f) In (c)(4) of this section, if the existence of a lien or nonpossessory interest can only be inferred from an inspection of the real property, the person holding the lien or nonpossessory interest is not entitled to notice under (c) of this section unless the lien or nonpossessory interest appears of record or a written notice of the lien or nonpossessory interest has been given to the beneficiary or trustee before the recording of the notice of default.

(g) If the trustee delivers notice personally under (c) of this section to the property or to an occupant of the property, the trustee may, notwithstanding (c) of this section, deliver the notice up to 20 days after the notice of default is recorded. If there is not a structure on the property and a person is not present on the property at the time of delivery, the trustee may place the notice on the property, or as close as practicable to the property if

(1) there is not a practical road access to the property; or

(2) access to the property is restricted by gates or other barriers.

(h) If the trustee or other person who delivered notice under (g) of this section signs an affidavit for the delivery, the affidavit is prima facie evidence that the trustee complied with (g) of this section. After one year from the delivery, as evidenced by the affidavit, the trustee is conclusively presumed to have complied with (g) of this section unless, within one year from the delivery, an action has been filed in court to contest the foreclosure based on failing to comply with (g) of this section.

(i) If a person who is entitled to receive notice by mail under (c) of this section is known by the beneficiary or trustee to be deceased, the trustee may satisfy the notice requirements of (c) of this section by mailing the notice to the last known address of the deceased person and to the personal representative of the deceased person if the beneficiary or trustee knows that a personal representative has been appointed for the deceased person.

(j) If a person who is entitled to receive notice by mail under (c) of this section is known by the beneficiary or trustee to be deceased but the trustee and the beneficiary do not know that a personal representative has been appointed for the deceased person, the trustee may satisfy the notice requirements of (c) of this section by

(1) mailing the notice to the heirs and devisees of the deceased person

(A) whose names and addresses are known to the beneficiary or trustee; or

(B) who have recorded a notice of their interest in the property; and

(2) publishing and posting the notice of the foreclosure as provided by law for the sale of real property on execution, except that the notice must be titled "To the Heirs or Devisees of (insert the name of the deceased person)" and include in the body of the notice a list of the names of the persons who are known by the beneficiary or trustee to be the heirs and devisees of the deceased person.

(k) If notice is given as required by (i) and (j) of this section, an heir or devisee of the deceased person may not challenge the foreclosure on the ground that the heir or devisee did not receive notice of the sale, unless the heir or devisee challenges the foreclosure on this ground within 90 days after the sale.

(l) A person may bring an action in court to enjoin a foreclosure on real property only if the person is

(1) the trustor of the deed of trust under which the real property was foreclosed;

(2) a guarantor of the obligation that the real property is securing;

(3) a person who has an interest in the real property that has been recorded;

(4) a person who has a recorded lien against the real property;

(5) an heir to the real property;

(6) a devisee of the real property; or

(7) the attorney general acting under other legal authority.

(m) If a person brings an action under (l) of this section to stop a sale of real property, and if the sale is being brought because of a default in the performance of a nonmonetary obligation required by the deed of trust that the real property is securing, the court may impose on the person the conditions that the court determines are appropriate to protect the beneficiary.

(n) In this section, "devisee," "heir," and "personal representative" have the meanings given in AS 13.06.050.

 Sec. 7. AS 34.20.080(a) is amended to read:

(a) The sale authorized in AS 34.20.070 shall be made under the terms and conditions and in the manner set out in the deed of trust. The proceeds from a sale shall be placed in escrow until they are disbursed. However, the sale shall be made

(1) at public auction held at the front door of a courthouse of the superior court in the judicial district where the property is located, unless the deed of trust specifically provides that the sale shall be held in a different place, except that a trustee may also accept bids by telephone, the Internet, and electronic mail if the trustee has taken reasonable steps to ensure that the bidding methods using the telephone, the Internet, or electronic mail are fair, accessible, and designed to result in money that is immediately available for disbursement; and

(2) after public notice of the time and place of the sale has been given in the manner provided by law for the sale of real property on execution.

 Sec. 8. AS 34.20.080(b) is amended to read:

(b) The attorney for the trustee or another agent of the trustee may conduct the sale and act in the sale as the auctioneer for the trustee. The trustee may set reasonable rules and conditions for the conduct of the sale. Sale shall be made to the highest and best bidder. The beneficiary under the trust deed may bid at the trustee's sale. Except as provided by (g) of this section, the [THE] trustee shall execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed to the property sold.

 Sec. 9. AS 34.20.080(e) is amended to read:

(e) The trustee may postpone sale of all or any portion of the property by delivering to the person conducting the sale a written and signed request for the postponement to a stated date and hour. The person conducting the sale shall publicly announce the postponement to the stated date and hour at the time and place originally fixed for the sale. This procedure shall be followed in any succeeding postponement, but the foreclosure may not be postponed for more than 12 months unless a new notice of the sale is given under (a)(2) of this section. A sale may be postponed for up to 12 months from the sale date stated in the notice of default under AS 34.20.070(b) without providing a basis for challenging the validity of the foreclosure process because of the length of time the foreclosure has been pending.

 Sec. 10. AS 34.20.080 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(f) After delivery of a deed under (b) of this section, the trustee shall distribute any cash proceeds of the sale in the following order to

(1) the beneficiary of the deed of trust being foreclosed until the beneficiary is paid the full amount that is owed under the deed of trust to the beneficiary;

(2) the persons who held, at the time of the sale, recorded interests, except easements, in the property, that were subordinate to the foreclosed deed of trust; the distribution under this paragraph shall be made according to the priority of the recorded interest, and a recorded interest with a higher priority shall be satisfied before distribution is made to the recorded interest that is next lower in priority; however, if a person holds a recorded interest that is an assessment, the person is entitled only to the amount of the assessment that was due at the time of the sale; in this paragraph, "recorded interest" means an interest, including a lease, recorded under AS 40.17;

(3) the trustor in the trust deed if the trustor is still the owner of the property at the time of the foreclosure sale, but, if the trustor is not still the owner of the property at the time of the foreclosure sale, then to the trustor's successor in interest whose interest appears of record at the time of the foreclosure sale.

(g) The trustee may withhold delivery of the deed under (b) of this section for up to five days after the sale. If, during the five days, the trustee determines that the sale should not have proceeded, the trustee may not issue the deed but shall

(1) inform the beneficiary, the otherwise successful bidder, and the trustor of the trust deed or the trustor's successor in interest that the sale is rescinded; and

(2) return to the otherwise successful bidder money received from the otherwise successful bidder as a bid on the property; return of this money is the otherwise successful bidder's only remedy if the trustee withholds delivery of the deed under (b) of this section.

(h) If a trustee rescinds a sale under (g) of this section and the obligation secured by the deed of trust remains in default, the trustee may, at the request of the beneficiary, reschedule the sale for a date that is not less than 45 days after the date of the rescinded sale. Not less than 30 days before the rescheduled sale date, the trustee shall

(1) mail notice of the rescheduled sale date by certified mail to the last known address of each of the persons identified by AS 34.20.070(c); and

(2) publish and post the notice of the rescheduled sale date as provided by law for the sale of real property on execution.

(i) Unless a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the sale completely terminates the rights of the trustor of the trust deed in the property.

(j) If a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the deed of trust foreclosed in the rescinded sale is restored to the validity and priority it would have had as though the sale had not occurred.

 Sec. 11. AS 34.20.120(a) is amended to read:

(a) The trustee under a trust deed upon real property given to secure an obligation to pay money and conferring no duties upon the trustee other than the duties that are incidental to the exercise of the power of sale conferred in the deed may be substituted by recording in the mortgage records of the recording district in which the property is located a substitution executed and acknowledged by

(1) all the beneficiaries under the trust deed, or their successors in interest; or

(2) the attorneys for all of the beneficiaries or the attorneys for all of the beneficiaries' successors in interest.

 Sec. 12. AS 34.20.120(b) is amended to read:

(b) The substitution must contain

(1) the date of execution of the trust deed;

(2) the names of the trustee, trustor, and beneficiary, and, if the substitution is executed by the attorney for the beneficiary or successor in interest to the beneficiary, the name, address, and Alaska Bar Association identification number of the attorney;

(3) the book and page where the trust deed is recorded or the serial number assigned to the trust deed by the recorder;

(4) the name of the new trustee; and

(5) an acknowledgment signed and acknowledged by the trustee named in the trust deed of a receipt of a copy of the substitution, or an affidavit of service of a copy of it.

* Sec. 13. AS 34.20 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 34.20.125. Trustee bond required. (a) Before performing the duties of a trustee under AS 34.20.070 and 34.20.080, a person shall obtain a surety bond in the amount of $250,000 to protect the trustors and beneficiaries of trust deeds against fraud or defalcation by the trustee in the performance of the duties.

(b) The bond required by (a) of this section must be a bond that is terminable at any time by the surety by sending written notice by first class United States mail to the obligee and the principal at the address for each that is last known by the surety, and to the department. The bond terminates when 45 days have expired after the date the notice is mailed. The surety is not liable for an act or omission of the principal that occurs after the termination. The surety is not liable after the termination for more than the face amount of the bond, regardless of the number of claims made against the bond or the number of years the bond remains in force. A revision of the amount of the bond is not cumulative.

(c) If a bond terminates under (b) of this section, the person who obtained the bond under (a) of this section shall give notice of the bond's termination to the department and may not act as a trustee until the person obtains another bond under (a) of this section.

(d) Each year, a trustee shall file evidence of the bond with the department. The department shall verify that the evidence is satisfactory to indicate the existence of the bond, keep an updated list of trustees who are bonded, and make the evidence and the list available to the public for inspection. The department may charge the trustee a reasonable fee for verifying the existence of the bond and maintaining the records required by this subsection.

(e) The bonding requirements of this section do not apply to

(1) a title insurance company authorized under AS 21.66 to transact a title insurance business in this state;

(2) a title insurance limited producer who is licensed as required by AS 21.66.270; or

(3) a state agency, including the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation and the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority.

(f) In this section, "department" means the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.

Explanation of Changes Between CSHB108(L&C) version 26-LS0318\R and Proposed CSHB108(JUD) 26-LS0318\P

Sec. 2 AS 09.35.140. Adds back into HB108 the requirement that the notice of execution of the sale of real property also be noticed on an Internet website. This new language expands the list of qualified sites, to newspapers of general circulation provided they meet the requirements of proposed AS 09.35.140(c). Thus if a newspaper qualifies to run legal ads, it will be qualified to run the internet publication. A new qualifier is that the site be free to the viewing public.

Sec. 4 AS 34.20.070(b). Adds a requirement under AS 34.20.070(e) that the notice of default served on the trustor include language stating that payment to cure the default must be made two days prior to the sale dated stated in the notice of default, or two days prior to the date to which the sale date is postponed. This will give the trustor full disclosure in the original notice of the two day cure period.

AS 34.20.070(e) new conforming language to AS 34.20.070(b)

Sec. 10. AS 34.20.080(j) adds new language that states that, if a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the deed of trust foreclosed in the rescinded sale is restored to the validity and priority it would have had as though the sale did not occur.

Sectional HB 108 Property Foreclosures and Executions

Section 1. AS 09.35.140 is amended –Removes the U.S. Post Office as a posting requirement.

Section 2. Amends AS 09.35.140 to add a new subsection. Adds a new section to AS 09.35 (execution on property) to require the notice of the execution sale of real property also be noticed on an Internet website, including newspaper websites. Also, Describes the requirements that the Internet websites must meet to qualify, and the Internet notice requirement for a non judicial foreclosure.

Section 3. Amends AS 09.35.142 to allow an Internet website owner to bring a court action to establish that the website qualifies under AS 09.35.140(b)

Section 4. Amends AS 34.20.070(b) to adjust to 90 days the minimum length of time that must elapse between recording a notice of default on a deed of trust and holding the foreclosure sale. Sets a limit of two days (before a foreclosure sale) when certain defaults on a deed of trust may be cured by a specific payment.

Section 5. Amends AS 34.20.070(c) requires that possession be actual physical possession where possession is required for certain persons to be entitled to receive a notice of default for foreclosure sale.

Section 6. Adds new subsection to AS 34.20.070 (foreclosure by trustee).

Proposed 34.20.070(e) establishes when a person who holds a lien or non-possessory property interest that can be inferred from an inspection of the property is entitled to receive a notice of default for a foreclosure sale.

Proposed 34.20.070(f) allows a trustee additional time (after recording) to deliver the notice of default when the trustee delivers the notice personally to the property or to an occupant of the property. Allows the trustee to place the notice on the property or as close as practicable to the property under certain conditions.

Proposed sec 34.20.070(g) states that an affidavit signed by a trustee or another person who delivered notice personally under sec. 34.20.070(f) is prima facie evidence that the trustee complied with sec. 34.20.070(f). Establishes a conclusive presumption

(as evidenced by the affidavit) after one year unless a court action is filed within the year to challenge the foreclosure for failure to comply with sec. 34.20.070(f)

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(h) establishes how a trustee may satisfy the notice requirements for a person known by the trustee to be deceased and for whom the trustee or the deed of trust beneficiary knows a personal representative has been appointed.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(i) establishes how a trustee may satisfy the notice requirements for a person known by the trustee to be deceased and for whom the trustee or the deed of trust beneficiary know that a personal representative has been appointed for the deceased person.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(j) states that an heir or devisee of a deceased person must challenge a foreclosure sale within 90 days if alleging non-receipt of notice and if the trustee gave notice as required by (h) – (i).

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(k) describes the persons who may bring a court action to enjoin a foreclosure sale.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(l) states that when a court injunction action meets certain conditions, a court may impose conditions that it considers appropriate to protect the deed of trust beneficiary.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(m) defines certain terms for AS 34.20.070

Section 7. AS 34.20.080(a) is amended to require that the proceeds from a foreclosure sale are placed in escrow until disbursed. This section allows a trustee to accept foreclosure bids by telephone, the Internet, and electronic mail if certain conditions are met.

Section 8. Amends AS 34.20.080(b) Allowing the attorney or other agent of the trustee to conduct the sale. Additionally, allows the trustee to set reasonable rules for the conduct of the sale. Adds language that conforms the deed delivery requirements to the new provision in sec. 34.20.070(g) allowing the trustee to rescind the sale under certain circumstances.

Section 9. Amends AS 34.20.080(e) Limiting the postponement of a foreclosure sale to not more than 12 months unless a new notice of sale is given. Establishes that postponement for up to 12 months does not provide a basis for challenging the validity of the foreclosure because of how long the foreclosure has been pending.

Section 10. Adds a new subsections to AS 34.20.080(foreclosure sale).

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(f) indicates how any cash proceeds of the sale are to be distributed after delivery of a deed.

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(g) allows a trustee to withhold delivery of the deed for up to five days, prohibits the trustee from issuing the deed under certain conditions, and describes what the trustee must do when rescinding the sale.

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(h) allows the trustee to reschedule a rescinded sale, establishes a minimum time that must elapse after the rescinded sale before the new sale may be held, and establishes the notice procedure that the trustee must follow for the rescheduled sale.

E-Mail Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(i) establishes that if a sale is not rescinded it completely terminates the rights of the trustor of the deed in the property.

Section 11. AS 34.20.120(a) is amended. Allowing the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest to execute and acknowledge the substitution of a trustee for certain trust needs.

Section 12. AS 34.20.120(b) is amended. Adds a requirement to the contents of a trustee substitution for a situation when the substitution is executed by the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest.

Section 13. Adds a new section AS 34.20.125(a) requiring a trustee to provide a surety bond before performing trustee duties under a deed of trust foreclosure.

AS 34.20.125(b) requires the bond to be terminable at any time by the surety by complying with certain requirements, indicates when the bond terminates, and indicates that the surety is not liable after termination for more than the face amount of the bond. States that a revision of the amount of the bond is not cumulative.

AS 34.20.125(c) gives notice requirements for a termination of the bond.

AS 34.20.125(d) requires a trustee to file evidence of a bond each year with the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Requires the department to verify that the evidence is satisfactory, keep an updated list of bonded trustees, and make the evidence and the list available to the public. Allows the department to charge the trustee a reasonable fee for the verification and maintenance of records.

AS 34.20.125(e) exempts certain persons from the bonding requirements.

AS 34.20.125(f) defines "department" in this section to mean the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development

Re: HB 108-An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deed of trust.

Dear Mr. Routh;

We are an association representing all thirteen credit unions doing business in Alaska, with a combined membership base of over 500,000.

Thank you for alerting us to this legislation. We think the changes proposed in the bill are well thought-out, necessary, and will benefit borrowers, financial institutions, and title agents. Much of the bill is housekeeping, which will reduce future litigation. Other parts are forward-thinking, like developing methods for internet advertising and bidding, that will tend to increase bidding at foreclosure auctions.

We are pleased to support this legislation.

Re: House Bill 108 "An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deeds of trust."

Dear Members of the Legislature,

I am a real estate lawyer, real estate broker and title insurance licensee.

I have had the opportunity to review HB 108, which updates the provisions of Alaska's foreclosure law. It contains many housekeeping items that clarify existing law, as well as some sections that will take Alaska solidly into the 21st century.

An outstanding provision is the requirement for publication on the Internet. Most folks look to the internet today for foreclosure information. Having this information on the web will improve dissemination of the sale information to the general public, and thus it should increase the number of bids above the offset bid.

Bids above the offset bid are in everyone's interest. The debtor receives the net proceeds of the sale. The lender does not have to take title, renovate and market the property. And the successful bidder is obviously happy.

I encourage you to adopt this bill. It is my understanding that, if adopted, this bill will become a model for legislation in other states. Please contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Kirk Wickersham

Dear Stephen;

The Alaska Mortgage Bankers Association is a trade organization composed of loan origination companies, servicing companies, and affiliated industry service providers. We have been serving Alaska's mortgage and housing industry since 1980. Our members adhere to a canon of ethics that calls for the use of sound and ethical business practices.

The Alaska Mortgage Bankers Association is dedicated to the preservation and improvement of the Mortgage Banking Industry through a proactive relationship with Federal and State legislators, industry agencies, and other housing trade organizations. Our members are kept informed about changes in mortgage laws and pending legislation.

Our standing committees provide seminars, meetings, and general information for the purpose of education for our members and the public.

The Association promotes public education, high ethical standards, sound business practices, and cooperation among legislators, regulators and other members of the industry.

Consistent with our mission, we are pleased to offer our support for HB 108. It will modernize Alaska Statutes, and make the foreclosure process more fair, transparent, and efficient. It will tend to reduce litigation, and encourage bidders to attend foreclosure auctions to the benefit of borrowers, lenders, and neighborhoods alike.

re: HB 108 – "A Bill Relating to Foreclosures, etc."
Our File No. 85-19-15

Dear Representative Olson:

I am writing on my own behalf, and on behalf of my law firm, to voice my opposition to the as-written version of HB 108 changing Alaska's laws relating to deed of trust foreclosures. While the majority of the bill contains beneficial changes, HB 108, as written, will create a requirement for Internet publication that will result in giving monopoly power to the law firm that wrote HB 108.

HB 108 requires publication on the Internet prior to a foreclosure. I have no objection to Internet publication as a general matter. In fact, current law requires that all default notices must be published in a newspaper, and most newspapers that publish default notices simultaneously publish the default notice on the newspaper's accompanying website. Every judicial district already has a newspaper of general circulation that publishes legal notices online. Therefore, almost all default notices in Alaska are already published on the Internet.

However, HB 108 goes further to provide that, to qualify as a website for publishing default notices, the website must have 5,000 unique visitors a month, be used primarily for advertising foreclosure properties, and have senior management within the state. Under this definition, almost no websites will qualify. The websites operated by the Anchorage Daily News, Alaska Journal of Commerce, Juneau Empire, and Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, among others, will not qualify because they are not "used primarily to advertise real property under foreclosure[.]" Websites such as Craigslist, which was mentioned favorably in the February 23, 2009 committee hearing, would not qualify because it is not used primarily for foreclosures, and because it does not have senior management in Alaska. Websites operated by banks will not qualify because they are not used primarily for foreclosures. Websites operated by local law firms will not qualify because they do not get 5,000 unique visitors a month. Finally, the State of Alaska's own website will not qualify because it is not used primarily to advertise foreclosures.

It is my belief that the only website that will qualify under the current HB 108 is USA-Foreclosure.com, which is half owned by Mr. Stephen Routh, whose law firm wrote HB108. Mr. Routh's law firm, with over 400 employees and offices in seven states, should not be granted monopoly power to conduct all foreclosures in Alaska.

I recommend the committee do one of two things with HB 108. I would recommend that all provisions relating to Internet advertising be eliminated. This is what happened last year with HB 163 and I recommend the same change be made now. Alternately, I recommend that proposed subsections AS 09.35.140(c)(3), (5) and (6) be eliminated. This would take away the requirement that a website "be used primarily to advertise real property under foreclosure", that the website have 5,000 unique visitors a month, and the website have senior management in Alaska. This would allow newspaper websites, bank websites, law firm websites, and Craigslist to qualify.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide information to the Committee on HB 108. If I can be of any further assistance, please don't hesitate to contact me.

Very truly yours,

BRYAN S. MERRELL
REGIONAL COUNSEL

February 5, 2009

RE: House Bill 108 "An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deeds of trust."

To Whom It May Concern:

This letter is written in support of House Bill 108, relating to Deeds of Trust and Foreclosures.

I am Regional Counsel for First American Title Insurance Company. First American is the leading title insurer in the United States, and in Alaska. I am a 20 year member of the Alaska Bar, and a former long time resident of Alaska. In my capacity as an in-house attorney for First American, I have had many occasions to be involved in non-judicial foreclosure related issues and controversies, as First American has produced title insurance produces related to such foreclosures, and acted as trustee in many cases as well.

HB 108 would clarify a large number of issues relative to non-judicial foreclosure actions. It would fill in gaps in the current statutes relative to procedure. It would clarify issues which Alaska Supreme Court opinions over the years have made unclear. The result of passage of the bill would be a clearer pattern of conduct for the parties to the foreclosure, which should result in less litigation and higher bidding for the properties involved in the process. I urge your yes vote for the bill, and would be happy to answer any questions you may have regarding it.

Very truly yours,

FIRST AMERICAN TITLE INSURANCE CO.

Sponsor Statement

HB 137

"An Act relating to an interstate compact on educational opportunity for military children; amending Rules 4 and 24, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

The purpose of House Bill 137 is to eliminate some of the barriers that face children of military personnel as they transition from one school system to another. The average student will move from six to nine times from kindergarten to 12th grade.

While the armed services has done much to ease the transition for children of military personnel, there is much that can be done at the state and local levels to ensure that these children are afforded the same opportunities for educational success as other children.

Alaska enjoys a close relationship with our service men and women and their families and recognizes the sacrifice and stress they face with frequent moves and deployment. There are 12,106 active duty children between the ages of five and 18 plus the children of active members of the guard and reserve that will benefit from this compact.

Eleven states in 2008 adopted this compact and presently 22 states have pending legislation to join the compact. Passing this legislation will help remove some of that stress by providing the children timely enrollment as the children move from one school district to another.

HB 137

"An Act relating to an interstate compact on educational opportunity for military children; amending Rules 4 and 24, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

Section 1: AS 14. Adds a new chapter:
Chapter 34. Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children

Article I – Purpose
This article describes the purposes of this compact which is to remove barriers to educational success for military children by facilitating enrollment, placement, and timely graduation; providing enforcement of rules, uniform collection and sharing of information; and promoting coordination, flexibility, and cooperation among member states.

Article II – Definitions
This article provides definitions for terms used throughout the compact.

Article III – Applicability
This article defines the children covered by this compact.

Article IV – Educational Records and Enrollment
This article outlines how sending and receiving states handle a military student's unofficial and official educational records. The Interstate Commission determines what information must be included in the records, and the time line for providing the records. It provides a 30-day grace period for immunizations. Kindergarten and first grade entrance is addressed for both grade level and age.

Article V – Placement and Attendance
This article describes course placement; education program placement, and special education services to address federal requirements for students with disabilities. Placement flexibility and absences related to deployment are also addressed.

Article VI – Eligibility
This article provides information on enrollment eligibility. It prohibits the student from being charged a tuition if the student lives in a different jurisdiction, and allows the student to continue to attend the school they were enrolled in while residing with the custodial parent. The military student shall have as many opportunities as possible to participate in extracurricular activities, even if they have missed the application deadlines.

Article VII – Graduation
This article facilitates on-time graduation by providing procedures for waivers, exit exams and transfers during a military student's senior year.

Article VIII – State Coordination
This article establishes requirement for creation of a State Council or other existing body to provide coordination among its government, local and military agencies. Membership requirements are also addressed.

Article IX – Interstate Commission on Ed Opportunity for Military Children
This article deals with creating the commission and its responsibilities, powers, and duties. It details membership, voting rights, meetings, executive committee, bylaws and rules, data collection, and a process for reporting alleged violations.

Article X – Powers and Duties of the Interstate Commission
This article lists the powers and duties of the Interstate Commission: Dispute resolution; promulgate rules; issue advisory opinions; enforce compliance; and other powers and duties related to establishing and running and supporting the state councils at a national level.

Article XI – Organization and Operation of the Interstate Commission
This article provides the structure for the Interstate Commission to organize, establish bylaws, set up executive and other committees, establish procedures for meetings, and providing for start-up rules for the initial administration of the compact.

Article XII – Rulemaking Functions of the Interstate Commission
This article gives the Interstate Commission rulemaking authority, and rulemaking guidelines and a provision for judicial review of a proposed rule.

Article XIII – Oversight, Enforcement, and Dispute Resolution
This article addresses oversight, enforcement and dispute resolution specifically. Oversight: Charges the executive, legislative and judicial branches of state governments regarding the purpose and intent of the Compact. It further states that the Interstate Commission shall receive all service of process and has standing to intervene. Further addresses consequences of default by a member state. Dispute Resolution: If requested the Interstate Commission will attempt to resolve disputes and provide rules for mediation and binding dispute resolution. Enforcement: The Interstate Commission shall enforce the rules and provisions of this compact and may initiate legal action to enforce compliance with the provisions of the compact.

Article XIV – Financing the Interstate Commission
This article provides a method for the Interstate Commission to pay its reasonable expenses by collecting annual assessments from each member state. There are limits on incurring obligations and the need for accurate accounting of all receipts and disbursements, and the requirement for a yearly audit by a certified or licensed CPA.

Article XV – Member States, Effective Date and Amendment
States are eligible to become members, the compact becomes effective when no less than 10 states enact the compact into law and the member state passes the law. Rules for how amendments become effective and binding.

Article XVI – Withdrawal and Dissolution
This article addresses how member states withdraw from the compact, what their responsibilities of notice, time, and responsibility for assessments. This article also addresses reinstatement, and compact dissolution.

Article XVII – Severability and Construction
Provisions of this compact are severable and any portion deemed unenforceable does not affect the remaining compact. The compact should be liberally construed, and nothing in this compact inhibits other interstate compacts.

Article XVIII – Binding Effect of Compact and Other Laws
Nothing in this compact prevents the enforcement of other laws that are not inconsistent with this compact. Conflicting laws are superseded by the compact to the extent of the conflict. All rules of the Interstate Commission are binding on the members states. Any provisions that exceed constitutional limits are ineffective to the extent of the conflict of the member state.

Sec. 14.34.020 Compact Administrator.
Establishing a compact administrator and the duties of that office.

Sec. 14.34.030 State Council.
Establishes the state council as a subcommittee of the membership.

Sec. 14.34.040 Regulations.
The board may adopt regulations to implement this chapter.

Sec. 14.34.090 Short Title.
Interstate Compact of Educational Opportunity for Military Children

Section 2: Uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section:

INDIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENTS. The changes made by Sec. 1 of this Act have the effect of changing Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure:

(1) Rule 4 – entitles the Interstate Commission to receive service of process of a judicial proceeding that pertains to a Compact provision or rule.

(2) Rule 24(b) - entitles the Interstate Commission to intervene in a judicial proceeding in which the validity of a compact provision or rule is at issue.

Section 3: Uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS.

Provisions set out in Section 1 concerning service of process and standing to intervene, take effect only if Section 2 receives two-thirds majority vote of each house required by the State Constitution.

Section 4: Uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT OF ACT; COMMISSIONER'S DUTY TO NOTIFY.

When Sections 1 and 2 of this Act will take effect and notification requirements when the 10 or more states have ratified this compact.

Section 5: Setting out the effective dates of this Act to be not less than 10 states other than this state ratify the Compact or July 1, 2009, whichever is later.

Case Study #1

Commissioned Personnel

Family of a Major General, United States Air Force; stationed in Virginia

Due to multiple reassignments for our family, my son attended ten different schools prior to graduating from high school. Though he was certified as academically advanced by previous school systems, he was denied advanced placement in one school system solely because he was not in that system for the required period of time. He was denied advanced placement in another system due to its different qualifying criteria as compared to previous jurisdictions. For one four year period during which we were reassigned each year, my son was required to read Romeo and Juliet for each of those four years despite having done so in each preceding state. He was denied the opportunity to participate in sports on more than one occasion because we were reassigned after team tryouts and he was told he was too late. Finally, we had to take the drastic measure of placing him in a private school after one reassignment because, in order for him to graduate on time from his assigned public school, he would have been required to stay in school for an extra year since the new school system refused to accept all of his credits that he had completed in the previous jurisdiction.

My daughter, currently a high school freshman, has attended seven different schools. She had an IEP (Special Education: Individual Education Plan) from one state that was not continued in the next state because her success out-scored their expectation of what her aptitude score indicated she could achieve. In our current state of residence, she is required to pass six course competency tests, even though she took some of those courses in a different state. Furthermore, the preparatory curriculum for these tests is different than in the last jurisdiction so her burden has been needlessly increased. What is most problematic is that, in order for her to graduate high school on time, she must pass an exit exam which is designed for students who have been in this particular state system for twelve years. For that reason, and because previously earned credits have not been accepted by the present jurisdiction, she must take summer school courses every summer for the next three years.

Case Study #2

Enlisted Personnel

Family of a Technical Sergeant, United States Air Force; stationed in Florida

My daughter is 10 years old and is in the 5th grade. Our family moved to Patrick AFB, Florida from Kirtland AFB in New Mexico last May on military orders. My husband is in the Air Force. We enrolled my daughter in elementary school in Florida during the summer and her new school requested her school records in August from her previous school in New Mexico. By the middle of October, the records had not yet been sent to the new school. After repeated written requests, phone calls and emails from Florida school officials and myself to her previous school in New Mexico, some of her records arrived in late October. However, her complete record did not arrive until November 19th.

When her records finally arrived, the school transferred her to the fifth grade QUEST class which is an advanced placement class for students who are gifted and talented. This is where she should have been placed at the beginning of the semester. However, due to the inexplicable delay in transferring her records, her new school placed her in a less challenging learning environment. Therefore, she spent almost a whole semester in an inappropriate classroom setting. The effects of this delay, which may seem to be of little consequence to adults, have been severe and profound for my 10 year old. She was miserable in school for months, forced to study material she had already mastered. She was bored and restless, and she sometimes got into trouble as a result. She is also not where she should be academically and has some catching up to do.

Despite this setback, now that she is in the proper class, she is back to being my happy, well behaved student. However, had legislation such as the proposed compact been in place in time for my daughter, we could have avoided this situation entirely.

Re: IN SUPPORT OF HB137
Hearing: Fri, 20 Mar 09 at 0800

Dear Representative Coghill and Committee Members

Partnership and collaboration are longstanding keystones for military and local community support to Alaska public school students. In this spirit, I provide my support to House Bill HB137 "Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children."

HB137 is groundbreaking legislation written specifically for the unique requirements of a transient student population. Issues such as enrollment, testing standards and graduation requirements are addressed through the interstate compact. These types of standards allow a military student to progress without fear of having to reaccomplish work to meet a new requirement after a move. Additionally, this compact provides an avenue for states to not only establish this list of standards but to collaborate on future issues as they arise.

I look forward to increased cooperation with those who set policy for and educate our children in Alaska. The changes implemented from HB137 will directly impact the social, emotional and academic experience of transitioning students who attend Hawaii public schools.

I personally appreciate the hard work and dedication of all those involved with HB137. Thank you for your submission and continued support of our military families.

Re: In SUPPORT of HB# 137 "Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children"

Dear Representative Coghill:

The United States Army, Pacific (USARPAC) would like to inform you of our support for the Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children (House Bill #137). When considering the number of school-age military children impacting each state, Alaska has approximately 12,000 school-age military dependents attending public, private, and homeschooling venues. As these students move from state to state, many of them encounter considerable challenges when dealing with enrollment, eligibility, placement, extra-curricular activities, and graduation requirements. Often, military students lose course credits due to multiple school transfers and are often improperly placed in courses due to the varying school requirements.

USARPAC appreciates all that Alaska public schools have done on behalf of our military children regarding transition and deployment issues. The Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children will only serve to compliment and augment what is already being done in the Alaska public schools. Additionally, this bill will join Alaska with other states in an effort to streamline the school transition process and create much needed uniformity between states.

For these reasons, USARPAC supports this compact and encourages the Alaska House of Representatives to pass House Bill #HB137. If you need additional information, please contact my Well Being/Education Specialist, Ruth Davis, at 808-438-4177 or E-mail nancy.ruth.davis@us.army.mil.

Dear Representatives:

Kodiak Island Borough School District wholeheartedly endorses House Bill 137. A substantial number of Kodiak Island students come to us from the United States Coast Guard as well as the United States Navy.

We eagerly join this compact's intent to remove the barriers to educational success imposed on the children of military families due to the frequent moves and deployment of their parents. We will be committed to supporting and enforcing the rules and provisions of this compact. It is our District's goal to provide uniform collection and sharing of information; and to promote coordination, flexibility and cooperation between educational systems and families in order to achieve educational success for the student.

We thank Representative Coghill for sponsoring House Bill 137. His concern is for the best interest of the children whose parents are serving this nation with such honor. We appreciate their service and this bill represents a small token of thanks as well as removes several obstacles that are imposed upon their children during their service to our country.

Re: IN SUPPORT of HB 137:
Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children
Hearing: Friday, March 20, 2009, 1:30 PM

Dear Representative Coghill and Education Committee Members:

The US Pacific Command wishes to formally register support for the Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunities for Military Children. With over 12,000 school-age military dependents, Alaska ranks 15th in the nation for the number of military students educated within the state. Representing the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines and Coast Guard, the children of our military families in Alaska come from and move to nearly every state in the country and numerous US Department of Defense schools around the globe. Each year, approximately one-third of our children transfer from Alaska and are replaced by incoming military-affiliated students. Because of the mobility imposed on families due to assignments and deployments, our children face significant educational challenges including enrollment, eligibility, placement, and graduation.

The passage of this bill allows Alaska to join with other states to create the Interstate Compact, a program that seeks to remove barriers to educational success due to the frequent military moves. The Interstate Compact provides a venue for states to work together which allows our military families to fulfill the mission of serving our country without penalizing the education of their children.

I wholeheartedly support and urge the passage of House Bill 137. Thank you for all you do for the children of military families who, in their own way, also serve our country.

Sincerely,

Stephen D. Tom

Chair Seaton and Members of the Education Committee,

I am writing to urge your support for this compact which will be heard by your committee Monday morning.

This compact will provide useful support to our military members and their families. Anchorage educates a large number of students of military families. Many of these families have major transitions during the year as parents are deployed or transferred to or from Anchorage. We work closely with Ft. Richardson and Elmendorf AFB to make these transitions easier, and this Compact will assist us in that process.

Dear ~~Representative~~ Paul Seaton:

Last night, the Anchorage School Board passed the enclosed resolution in support of the Interstate Military Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children. I am also enclosing the School Board memorandum which accompanied the resolution. The vote was unanimous. Our military representative strongly supported this resolution and testified in support of passage.

I am very grateful to Representative Coghill for introducing this important legislation. This compact reinforces our strong commitment to our military families and students and is more important now than ever as they serve our country in these uncertain times.

I hope that this legislation moves quickly through the House and on to the Senate during this legislative session.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at comeau_carol@asdk12.org or 907-742-4312.

Sincerely yours,

Carol

ASD MEMORANDUM # 252 (2008-2009) March 23, 2009

TO: SCHOOL BOARD

FROM: OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT Carol Comeau

SUBJECT: RESOLUTION IN SUPPORT OF THE INTERSTATE MILITARY COMPACT ON EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR MILITARY CHILDREN

RECOMMENDATION:

It is the recommendation of the administration that the School Board approve a resolution in support of the interstate military compact on educational opportunity for military children (attachment A). It is further recommended that the School Board and administration communicate the support of the Anchorage School District to the Alaska Legislature, the State Board of Education and Early Development, and the Governor.

PERTINENT FACTS:

The United States Departments of Education and Defense signed a historic agreement in June of 2008. This historic agreement set the state for a formalized working agreement to work collaboratively to ease the challenges of transitions for military dependent students. As of the beginning of the 2008-2009 school year, the following states have passed legislation in support of military compacts: Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, North Carolina, and Oklahoma. Other states have legislation pending. Subsequent to that action, the State Board of Education and Early Development discussed the military compact and expressed strong support for Alaska entering into this compact. This was communicated to the Alaska Legislature and to Governor Palin.

Subsequently, Representative John Coghill, filed HB 137, "An act relating to the Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children..." It is moving through the legislature during this first session of the twenty-sixth legislature. Representative Dahlstrom has attended meetings relating to this issue as part of her legislative responsibilities.

The administration has reviewed the military compact and the proposed legislation and urges the School Board to pass this resolution in support of its guiding principles. The administration supports this compact because it validates our close working relationships and current practices with our military installations and dependent families. The Mat-Su, Fairbanks, Kodiak, and Sitka school districts are in support of this compact and are in the process of supporting this action for their districts. The administration would like to work with our military representatives and members of the legislature on this important legislation.

An information packet provided to school districts provides general information to the School Board in support of this administrative recommendation and is included as Attachment B.

A RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE GUIDING PRINCIPLES OF THE INTERSTATE COMPACT ON EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR MILITARY CHILDREN

WHEREAS, military students are faced with numerous transitions during their formative years, and

WHEREAS, moves during the school years, particularly the high school years, present special challenges to learning and future achievement, and

WHEREAS, there is a large and growing military student population in the Anchorage School District, and

WHEREAS, the Anchorage School District can help ease the school transition challenges faced by its military students through awareness, flexibility and accommodations as reflected in the Interstate Compact on Educational Opportunity for Military Children,

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the Anchorage School Board endorses the guiding principles expressed on Attachment B of this document, and urges all employees to institute these practices no later than the beginning of the 2009-2010 school year.

SPONSOR STATEMENT HB 138
"An Act relating to cruelty to animals."

There is an unquestionable connection linking animal abuse and domestic violence. There is also credible evidence that individuals who practice violent acts against animals also present a danger to the public. Lets be honest, some people torture animals for amusement and fun. This activity is often seen associated with other serious crimes including drug offenses, gang activity, weapons violations, sexual assault and domestic violence—and can be one of the most visible parts of the entire history of antisocial behavior.

Studies in psychology, sociology, and criminology during the last 25 years have shown that violent offenders habitually have childhood and adolescent histories of serious and repeated animal cruelty. Even the FBI has recognized these connections since the 1970s when its analysis of the lives of serial killers suggested that most had killed or tortured animals as children. Criminal history often shows consistent patterns of animal cruelty previously existed among perpetrators of more widespread forms of violence, including child abuse, spouse abuse, and elder abuse. In fact, a leading Psychiatric Association considers animal cruelty one of the diagnostic criteria of conduct disorder.

Cruelty to animals is increasingly viewed as a significant issue by professionals in law enforcement and mental health—and certainly also the general public. Effective prosecution of animal abuse produces real benefits. It provides early and timely responses to those who are, or who are at risk of becoming, a threat to the safety of others. It provides an added tool for the protection of those who are victims of family violence. We cannot achieve a truly compassionate society, but we can do things that move us in that direction.

HB 138 strengthens animal cruelty laws while recognizing dog mushing as an Alaskan sport, allows for the humane destruction of dangerous animals as well as vermin and pests that threaten our structures and personal safety, and makes knowingly, deliberately, or intentionally inflicting severe and prolonged pain or suffering upon an animal a felony offence. Torture of an animal must be considered a felony if we are to do all we can to protect our children, elders and all of our citizens.

From: Representative Carl Gatto

Re: Explanation of Changes between HB 138 Original and (CS) for HB 138

The original version of HB 138 called for Cruelty to Animals in the First and Second Degree. Second degree cruelty to animals would have been a class A misdemeanor resulting from negligence or killing of an animal in an attempt to harass or intimidate another person. First degree cruelty to animals would have been a class C felony resulting from the second offense following cruelty to animals in the second degree, use of a decompression chamber, or use of poison.

The sponsor decided to alter HB 138 to make it a companion bill to SB 214. Under the new language in HB 138, criminal negligence in the care of an animal is a class A misdemeanor. The killing or injuring of an animal—except by torture, poison, or decompression chamber—in an attempt to intimidate or terrorize another is also a class A misdemeanor. Torturing or poisoning an animal, or placing it in a decompression chamber, is a class C felony under the new language. Again, these changes are meant to bring HB 138 in line with SB 214. In that same vein, the title of the bill has been changed from "an Act relating to cruelty to animals" to "an Act relating to penalties for cruelty to animals."

HB 138 expands the penalties for most cruelty to animals charges. The fiscal impact to the Department of Law is difficult to predict. In testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 2008 an animal shelter person from Fairbanks said they get 20 cases of cruelty to animals a month. This equals 240 cases a year for a population of 97,970 (US census date for 2008). The same date shows a state population of 686,293. This would mean an annual statewide caseload of approximately 1,608 for cruelty to animals. With the changes of many misdemeanors to a class C felony the state would need at least an additional four to five attorneys. Department of Law numbers should approximate four cases a year hence an indeterminate fiscal note.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

If passed, this legislation makes knowingly and intentionally inflicting severe prolonged pain or suffering upon an animal a felony. The Department of Corrections (DOC) does not have the data needed to quantify the impact of this legislation. We currently have three inmates with cruelty to animal convictions, however, for all three incarcerated individuals there are numerous other convictions in addition to cruelty to animals. For example, in addition to the cruelty to animal conviction, one inmate was convicted of: Theft 2, Murder 1, Vehicle Theft 1, Cruelty to Animals, Attempted Murder 1, and Murder 1 intent to cause death. If this legislation is passed, DOC will closely monitor the impact and could potentially request additional funding based on actual impacts.

Re: Letter of Support
HB 138 – An Act Relating to Animal Cruelty

Dear Representative Gatto:

On behalf of the eighteen domestic violence and sexual assault member organizations throughout the state that comprise the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence & Sexual Assault, we submit this letter of support for HB 138 - An Act Relating to Cruelty.

HB 138 changes the current Class A misdemeanor animal cruelty provision relating to a perpetrator who "knowingly kills or injures an animal . . . with the intent to intimidate, threaten, or terrorize another person" to a Class C felony, if the person has been previously convicted within the last 10 years.

The link between pet abuse and domestic violence is well-documented and has been a subject studied in increasing detail over the past ten years. Scholarly studies cited by the National Coalition to End Domestic Violence provide evidence of this:

- 71% of pet owners entering domestic violence shelters report that their batterer had threatened, injured, or killed family pets.
- 87% of batterer-perpetrated incidents of pet abuse are committed in the presence of their partners for the purpose of revenge or control.
- Similar to domestic violence, abusers often threaten, harm, or kill animals as a means of demonstrating power and control over the family.[i]

In order to understand how a perpetrator of domestic violence may abuse animals as a means of intimidating, threatening, or terrorizing another person, it may help to briefly consider the elements of domestic violence. Domestic violence is most commonly defined as a pattern of coercive behaviors by which one person tries to control another person. Perpetrators who wish to control their victims' behavior may use animals to demonstrate and confirm dominance over the family. For instance, a perpetrator might beat a dog, or even kill it, and then say to a victim:

"Don't make me do this to you." Perpetrators may even use animals to degrade the victim through involvement in the abuse; in fact, a March 2008 incident in Indiana illustrates this sobering dynamic all too vividly: in this case, a father was jailed after forcing his seven-year-old young daughter to stab the family cat. [ii]

Although Alaska-specific studies have not been conducted, anecdotal evidence from shelter advocates suggests a similar prevalence of these issues in our state. In addition, we know from our work that when family pets are used as a weapon of control and dominance, the situation has reached a high lethality level. In response to this reality, many shelter programs have cooperative agreements with their local humane society chapters. In Juneau, for example, representatives from Gastineau Humane Society serve on the local Domestic Violence Task Force, and the AWARE shelter has a cooperative agreement with GHS allowing shelter residents to board their animals free of charge.

Thank you for sponsoring HB 138. Making this specific provision of the animal cruelty statutes a Class C felony will hold perpetrators who use pets as weapons accountable, keeping victims safe by reducing the lethality in these serious domestic violence situations.

Sincerely,

Peggy Brown, Executive Director

THE HUMANE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES

OFFICERS

STAFF VICE PRESIDENTS

DIRECTORS

March 18, 2009

Dear Legislator:

On behalf of The Humane Society of the United States (The HSUS), the nation's largest animal protection organization with more than 18,000 members and constituents in Alaska, I am writing to urge you to support H.B. 138.

Last year, the Senate and the House Judiciary Committee passed legislation (S.B. 273) to make the worst types of animal cruelty a felony on the first offense. Unfortunately, on the last day of the session with time running out, the language was amended to require two prior convictions before felony penalties could be imposed, and substituted into another bill to ensure passage.

There are now five states without felony level penalties for the most malicious acts of animal cruelty. Alaska is one of only two states where only a third offense triggers the felony clause. Passage of H.B. 138 would fulfill the legislature's original intent to bring Alaska's cruelty code in line with the rest of the country, and protect Alaskan communities from the very worst animal abusers.

Strong laws against animal cruelty protect not only animals, but also our communities. An irrefutable body of research confirms the connection between animal cruelty and human violence. Animal cruelty is often a component of domestic violence, as pets are used to threaten or intimidate a spouse or child.

Numerous studies over the last 25 years have demonstrated that violent offenders frequently have childhood and adolescent histories of serious and repeated animal cruelty. The FBI has recognized the connection since the 1970s, when its analysis of the lives of serial killers suggested that most had killed or tortured animals as children. Other research has shown consistent patterns of animal cruelty among perpetrators of more common forms of violence, including child abuse, spouse abuse, and elder abuse. Newer studies show that 70% of animal abusers are involved in other crimes.

Passage of a first offense felony animal cruelty law is an essential initial step in halting the progression of violent crime—against humans and nonhumans. The HSUS strongly supports H.B. 138 and urges its quick passage through the Alaska legislature.

I am a full-time health care provider living and working in Eagle River. Having been involved in canine training for over thirty years, I have recently devoted a great deal of time and energy learning about animal behavior and animal behavioral medicine. Currently, on a limited basis, I do canine and feline behavior consultations; attempting to help owners with problematic behaviors. I have also become involved in training birds, primarily parrots and raptors.

I wish to express my support for HB 138.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I totally support HB 138 - an act relating to cruelty to animals. Although this bill is far from adequate, in my opinion, it is a step in the right direction. No one has the right to harm or neglect any animal. By prosecuting people who engage in these practices, we will also be able to minimize the number of spousal and child abuse cases. Alaska's reputation could certainly benefit from stricter laws and enforcement in this area.

Thank you.

Mat-Su man cited for inhumane dog care

LAZY MOUNTAIN: Borough takes in 25 animals it says were emaciated, dehydrated.

By T.C. MITCHELL
tcmitchell@adn.com

(05/08/08 00:26:24)

WASILLA -- Acting on complaints, the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Animal Care took in 25 emaciated dogs this week from two properties on Lazy Mountain, east of Palmer.

Many of Doug Bartko's dogs are so thin and dehydrated they needed intravenous fluids before they could stomach food, according to Patty Sullivan, borough public affairs director.

Bartko, who calls himself a recreational musher, was cited for five counts of interference with an investigation and 10 counts of failure to provide humane animal care.

He was also served notice that his kennel license could be revoked and that the borough intends to keep the seized animals. More charges are pending, including possible cruelty charges.

"This has turned into a nightmare," Bartko said from his home Wednesday. "I've been under some financial stress."

He said he had friends in Anchorage who had been giving him frozen fish for his dogs, about a ton once or twice a month. But he said his truck broke down and he was unable to get the fish.

"I had some fish and some commercial food," he said. "But I was down for about three weeks and some dogs dropped weight."

Officers contacted Bartko on Friday, but he refused to let them inspect the dogs, according to the borough. The officers left dog food with Bartko.

"I was appreciative of that," Bartko said. "I thought they were trying to work with me."

Monday the officers returned to Bartko's home on Lazy Mountain Drive with a search warrant and removed the dogs. They reported finding 12 malnourished dogs and three dead dogs that were tossed over an embankment on the property. The officers also found evidence that other dogs had been recently removed.

"I took some dogs to a different location to give them some care," Bartko said. "I didn't want to show them the remote place. They just did a hit job on me. There was some distrust there, I guess."

TIP LEADS TO MORE DOGS

A tip Tuesday led officers to another property off Wolverine Road where a dead dog was seen being removed, according to Sullivan. Nine dogs were seized there. All were emaciated, dehydrated and many had injuries.

Tuesday, officers tried to contact Bartko at his residence and found four more emaciated and dehydrated dogs.

The 25 husky-mix dogs are under veterinary care for a variety of untreated injuries, as well as dehydration, malnutrition and parasites, according to the borough. The cause of death for the one dog is under investigation.

Bartko, whose family he said has run dogs since the 1970s, was convicted in 2006 of animal cruelty. He said that conviction was a mistake because the dog was dying of cancer and not malnourished.

"We had her out front and were just saying our last goodbyes. Trying to make her comfortable."

He said the same relative who turned him this time, turned him in in 2006 as well.

Calls to the animal shelter Wednesday evening were not returned.

APD will start paying closer attention to animal cruelty

RESEARCH Studies indicate there's a link to domestic violence.

By JAMES HALPIN

(12/17/08 00:45:32)

Anchorage police plan to take a harder look around at the scenes of animal cruelty cases they respond to in the hopes of catching domestic violence offenders who beat man and beast alike.

The new effort, announced Tuesday, is part of a plan to partner with the Anchorage Animal Care and Control Center to investigate and prosecute animal cruelty cases, which can be a harbinger of abuse to come, police say.

"Research is showing more and more that there's a direct link between domestic violence and anger vented against animals," police Lt. Dave Parker said. "Recognizing that, and that it's supported by good, sound research, it makes sense for us to look at that as another avenue to help people as well as creatures."

According to the Humane Society of the United States, abusive family members sometimes threaten, injure or kill pets in their efforts to be controlling. The society backs up that assertion in part with a 1997 survey of 50 of the largest shelters for battered women in the United States, which reported that 85 percent of women and 63 percent of children entering shelters had witnessed pet abuse in the family.

At a conference discussing the link between cruelty to animals and domestic violence this fall, police, prosecutors and animal control officials saw that there was a need to coordinate their efforts, said Brooke Taylor, spokeswoman for animal control.

"In the past, cruelty cases weren't always a priority for APD and other parties involved," she said. "It got the dialogue going to say that not only do we need to prosecute these animal cruelty cases and really hold people responsible ... but that there's a larger issue here, that if we prosecute these cases it can bring to light other serious family problems."

Animal control will now be able to work with a single police contact, detective Jackie Conn, said.

Conn, who currently works theft cases, is being specially trained in animal cases and will provide expertise that the officers on the streets, who previously handled such cases, can draw from, Parker said.

All officers are also being asked to take a deeper look around when responding to cases of animal cruelty -- misdemeanors under city law -- to see if there are human victims as well, he said.

"Where there is an anger control issue, there's an anger control issue," Parker said. "If a person's anger is vented against a pet for whatever reason, often we find that that same kind of anger, that outburst, will be vented towards another person."

Man pleads no contest to charges in attack on dogs

By JULIA O'MALLEY

(02/12/09 12:46:25)

A Russian Mission man charged with stabbing four chained sled dogs, leaving two of them dead, pleaded no contest to animal cruelty Tuesday in a Bethel courtroom.

Carl Vaska, 20, was drunk on home brew the night of Dec. 7, when he took a knife and slashed the animals where they were chained in a yard, according to an affidavit from an investigating state wildlife trooper. Vaska's parents later found bloody gloves in his room.

The dogs' owners, Andrew and Christine Stephanoff, told wildlife trooper Dan Dahl that Christine went to feed the dogs the next day and "found two dead dogs and two that were really badly wounded."

"It was a really bad scene, a lot of blood of course," Dahl said.

Word got around the small village quickly. Vaska's parents confronted their son after they found the gloves and he admitted to the killing, Dahl said. The parents called the Stephanoffs to apologize right away, and put their son on the phone.

"I guess he was crying," Dahl said.

Vaska's dog, Bear, had been killed earlier in the year and he suspected someone in the village had done it Dahl said. In his drunken state, Vaska thought he was taking revenge on his dog's killer, he told Dahl. Vaska said he blacked out and couldn't remember the incident clearly.

One of the injured dogs is still unable to bark, Dahl said. The other is weak, but slowly improving.

Vaska faces up to a year in jail for each count of cruelty as well as a fine. He is scheduled to be sentenced Feb 25.

Sale and importation of alcohol are banned in Russian Mission, a village of about 300 people in Southwest Alaska about 70 miles northeast of Bethel.

Animal advocates fight neglect in the Bush

Spay and neuter services, vet care almost nonexistent

By DEBRA McKINNEY
dmckinney@adn.com

(02/25/09 21:58:53)

Finding half-dead puppies lying on the floor of a shed at 40 below with no food, water or bedding did not go over well with Kathy Sweeney of Aniak. But when this Yup'ik grandmother picked one up to check it over and part of its frozen tail fell off, that was the last straw.

No more silence. Now anyone who neglects or abuses an animal in her village is going to be hearing from her. The family responsible for these puppies did.

They'd gone upriver for several weeks, leaving their dog and her newborn pups to fend for themselves. Sweeney learned later there had been 14 in the litter. By the time she intervened, 10 had frozen to death.

This is often how it goes in remote areas of the state where people live closer to the edge -- places without regular access to veterinary care, animal control services and the resources to back up animal welfare and cruelty laws.

In Bush Alaska, where a sack of dog food can run $60 and spaying and neutering is uncommon in some villages, nonexistent in others, it's a matter of practicality to let nature take its course. That means unwanted dogs often freeze or starve to death, except for the lucky ones, relatively speaking, that get it over with quickly by being shot.

Aniak, like many villages, has an ordinance requiring dogs be contained or controlled, since dog bites, with the possibility of rabies, are a public health issue. Without animal control services, there really isn't much in the way of options other than "disposing" of them the old-fashioned way.

That's why people like Sweeney are taking matters into their own hands. As animal advocates, they hope to change the way people think about dogs and other domestic animals, and are doing what they can to save a few without going broke in the process.

After the puppy-tail incident, Sweeney and two friends -- Bev LeMaster and Sue Luchsinger -- put together a rescue group they call Canine Comfort in Aniak, a village of 600 or so about 90 air miles up the Kuskokwim River from Bethel. It's not an official nonprofit; it's just three women spreading the word on responsible pet ownership and saving some dogs along the way.

"We see a lot of dead dogs," said LeMaster, who's lived in Aniak going on 13 years. "They're expendable. If it doesn't work out, you shoot it or abandon it."

Canine Comfort raises money through bake sales and such to help pay for dog food and other rescue expenses. Last summer, Sweeney did a lot of scrounging for materials at the dump, pulling nails out of boards, for making dog houses since so many village dogs spend their lives on chains without any kind of shelter.

Aniak city manager Ron Powell is "100 percent supportive" of the team's efforts.

"They're rendering a service and not getting a lot of recognition for it," he said. "At least on my watch, we're going to do whatever we can to help them out."

The city has offered use of some land behind the public works shop, and the plan is to fence in an area for Canine Comfort's dogs. For now they go to Sweeney's place, and she's got 10 of her own as it is.

Jumping into the Bush dog issue takes some backbone. It's a touchy subject with no easy fix.

"They haven't had anything like this out here in the Bush, ever," Sweeney said. "And we are finding a lot of resistance and a lot of resentment. People have referred to us as 'those dog lovers.'

"I don't take that as an insult."

'I DON'T WANT TO KNOW'

Canine Comfort isn't alone.

In Kalskag, teacher Melanie Pitka got her ninth-grade homeroom students involved in a project they named Humane Humans after she took in a mother dog and pups that weren't being fed.

In her village, with no practical alternatives, unwanted dogs get "taken to the dump."

Meaning?

"I never questioned that too much," she said, "because I don't want to know."

Pitka has rescued a few village dogs and pups here and there, keeping some, finding homes for others, sending some into the animal shelter in Anchorage. A few of her students have done fundraising for dog food and supplies, and some girls built dog houses in shop class. But when the Kalskag school burned down last month, they went up in smoke along with everything else.

Pitka is discouraged but not giving up. She's looking forward to Operation Arctic Care, a roving, joint military project offering free health care for people and veterinary services for pets in remote parts of the state. It's headed to the Bethel area this spring.

In Galena along the Yukon River, Suzette LaPine-Rosecrans has rescued so many dogs the city manager dubbed her "the official unofficial dog catcher."

"When we first came here 11 years ago, I was just distraught," she said. "I was told puppy control was taking them to the dump and dropping them off, where they'd be bear bait.

"It doesn't have to be that way."

In a place where gasoline costs $7 a gallon, and a gallon of milk is $10, people are just trying to survive, she said. And Galena hasn't had a spay and neuter clinic since the last time itinerant vet Eric Jayne came to town two years ago.

The Bush Vet, as Jayne is widely known, is a spay and neuter crusader who will "fix" dogs on people's kitchen tables if that's all he has to work with -- and for cheap. Often for free. He's practicing out of state now, but still comes up to do Bush clinics, sponsored now and then by the Humane Society of the United States, according to Regional Director Dave Pauli, who has accompanied him on some of these runs, including one village-hopping trip down the Yukon.

A MISSION

Spaying and neutering is the big-picture solution to the Bush dog problem, advocates say.

Aniak gets a visiting vet once or twice a year, but a spay or neuter there costs up to $245. Families don't have that kind of money to spend on a dog, so Canine Comfort has also subsidized a couple of those surgeries. The Aniak rescuers wish they could do more, but it's not like those bake sales provide a huge budget for them to work with.

Robert Sept, who has practices in Chugiak and Bethel, is one of several veterinarians around the state who travel to rural Alaska, offering clinics. He said he's seen a "huge improvement" in animal care in the past 25 years. But there are still too many dogs nobody wants. And it's not just a village problem. Even in Anchorage, where people have access to low-cost spay and neuter programs, there are enough people who don't bother to fix their pets to keep animal shelters packed and rescue groups hopping.

Since resources are so thin, the rescue folks in Aniak, Kalskag and Galena have been sending batches of puppies and the occasional adult dog, along with a $20 surrender fee for each, to animal control in Anchorage and Fairbanks on air carriers willing to fly them in for free on a space-available basis.

Sweeney and the others can usually find someone heading into the city willing to do escort duty. Having someone pick up on the other end, take the dog to animal control and then return the pet carrier to the airport has been the hard part. And there's no guarantee the dogs will be adopted instead of euthanized at the pound. But at least they have a chance.

So far, Pitka's rescued puppies have been adopted within 24 hours, she said. LeMaster of Canine Comfort says her group has heard back from a few people who've adopted Aniak dogs, one of whom mentioned how happy the dog was to discover the couch.

This arrangement works for now because it's small scale, but it makes Anchorage Animal Care and Control Center officials a little nervous. There are more than enough irresponsible pet owners in Anchorage to keep its kennels full.

As Anchorage animal-control spokesperson Brooke Taylor puts it, the unfortunate reality is that when the shelter is full, "the difficult decision must then be made to euthanize adoptable animals."

In addition to pushing the spay and neuter solution, Sweeney would like to strengthen Alaska's animal-welfare laws. According to the Animal Legal Defense Fund, a national group working to toughen cruelty laws, our state could use that. Although Alaska is no longer close to dead last in terms of animal protection laws, the state merely inched from 48th to 42nd place after the Legislature made a third cruelty, abandonment or neglect offense a felony last year.

"This is something that's really important to me," Sweeney said.

"I used to wonder why I'm here on Earth. It didn't seem like I was doing anything productive for anybody but my family. Once we started Canine Connection, I felt like that empty spot in me has been filled."

Canine Comfort can be reached at canine.comfort@hotmail.com, or PO Box 242, Aniak, AK, 99557.

Animal Cruelty/Domestic Violence Fact Sheet

Why do batterers threaten, abuse, or kill animals?

- To demonstrate and confirm power and control over the family.
- To isolate the victim and children.
- To eliminate competition for attention.
- To force the family to keep violence a secret.
- To teach submission.
- To retaliate for acts of independence and self-determination.
- To perpetuate the context of terror.
- To prevent the victim from leaving or coerce her/him to return.
- To punish the victim for leaving.
- To degrade the victim through involvement in the abuse.

Why should we recognize animal abuse as a form of battering?

- Animal abuse exposes the deliberateness of battering rather than loss of control.
- Animal abuse and child abuse are closely related.
- Animal abuse is often a tool used by batterers to emotionally control or coerce victims.
- Threatening, injuring, or killing animals can indicate the potential for increased violence or lethality.
- Victims may postpone leaving out of fear for their pets' safety.
- Identifying animal abusers can help identify other victims of violence within the family.

What can victims of domestic violence do to protect their pets?

- Develop an emergency plan for sheltering the pets, themselves, and their children (Review a copy of the First Strike® planning guide, Making the Connection: Protecting Your Pet From Domestic Violence.)
- Establish ownership of the pets (obtain an animal license, proof of vaccinations or veterinary receipts in victim's name to help prove they own the pets).
- Prepare the pets for departure (collect vaccination and medical records, collar and identification, medication, bowls, bedding, etc.).
- Ask for assistance from law enforcement or animal care and control officers to reclaim the pets if left behind.

What are suggested intake questions regarding pets that should be asked by a domestic violence shelter?

- Do you now have a pet? If yes, how many and what kinds?
- Have you had a pet in the past 12 months? If yes, what kinds?
- Has your partner ever hurt or killed a family pet? If yes, describe.
- Has your partner ever threatened to hurt or kill a family pet? If yes, describe.
- Have you ever hurt or killed a family pet? If yes, describe.
- Have any of your children ever hurt or killed a family pet? If yes, describe.
- Was the animal considered the child's, yours, your partner's or the family's pet?
- Did your concern for a pet's welfare keep you from coming to a shelter sooner than now? If yes, explain.

- Did you leave the abusive partner because of the abuse of a pet? If yes, describe.

What can advocates do to raise awareness about the connection between animal cruelty and domestic violence in their communities?

- Take animal abuse seriously.
- Contact their counterparts in other agencies.
- Develop cross-training and cross-reporting among animal welfare, domestic violence, child abuse and other related agencies.
- Support strong anticruelty laws.
- Develop community anti-violence coalitions.
- Develop community based programs to promote empathy and humane education.
- Encourage research on the connection.
- Work with local animal shelters, veterinarians, veterinary schools and boarding kennels to develop emergency housing programs for pets.
- Collect data in their own agencies.
- Add questions to intake forms about animal cruelty.

What does The HSUS's First Strike campaign do to help other organizations?

- Provide First Strike materials and related information.
- Assist with outreach efforts (e.g., workshops, contacts, etc.).
- Provide information and contacts for model programs across the country.
- Provide advice, support, and technical assistance.
- Provide assistance on cases involving animal cruelty.
- Assist with legislative efforts.
- Help raise awareness of domestic violence, child abuse and other forms of human violence among animal protection organizations and activists.

Domestic Violence and the Animal Cruelty Connection

A cat or a dog is deliberately set on fire; kittens are placed in boxes and thrown out as garbage to be crushed alive by trash compactors; a dog is purposely starved to death to "teach it a lesson"; an angry man intent to hurt his wife and children beats and buries the family dog while it is still alive. Neighbors hear the crying dog and call the police who arrive to dig up a dead pet. Incidents such as these are often under-reported, but cruelty towards companion animals in domestic violence situations is slowly pushing its way into the common consciousness as more prosecutors, psychologists, and others are highlighting the dimensions of the problem.

"Historically, there's been a view that these types of crimes are just not as serious as crimes involving people, but I've seen over the 17 years that I've been a prosecutor that there's a very strong link between other violence and animal cruelty and abuse. To me it's just absolutely proven," said Gail Benda, a prosecutor in Ionia County. Her assessment is backed by three decades of studies on the human-animal connection that shows the clear link between animal cruelty, domestic violence, child abuse, and other criminal activity.

Findings from a 1997 national survey show that 85 percent of women seeking the services at safe houses have mentioned incidents of pet abuse. Sixty-three percent of children also spoke of animal abuse in the home. More often than not, many victims of domestic violence will remain in an abusive situation rather than leave their animal behind since companion animals provide support and comfort and are often regarded as family members. Such women will often risk their own safety to shield their animals.

A disheartening effect of this cycle is that children who come from abusive homes often imitate the violence by taking it out on helpless animals. Understanding this form of aggressive and antisocial behavior psychologists say, will add another "piece to the puzzle of understanding and preventing youth violence." Studies also indicate that a lot of animal cruelty takes place "below the radar." Three recent studies have been conducted to try to determine how common it is for children to commit serious acts of animal cruelty. The results show that between 10 and 34 percent of the male subjects said that they had "stabbed, burned, tortured, mutilated or killed" an animal as a child. Psychologists say most of these people never turn up in a crime report.

Oreo

At the extreme end of this violence spectrum are serial killers like Jeffrey Dahmer and Albert DeSalvo, also known as the Boston Strangler, who had histories of abusing animals before brutally killing their human victims. This "link" has long been recognized by The Federal Bureau of Investigation, which routinely incorporates animal cruelty as a factor in assessing the threat level a subject poses to society.

In Michigan, the primary anti-cruelty provision MCL 750.50b punishes the willful and malicious infliction of injury to animals without just cause or excuse. Injuries include killing, torturing, mutilating, maiming, disfiguring, or poisoning. The offense is a felony punishable by up to four years in prison. The Michigan Legislature has also enacted two other provisions that relate to cruelty to animals: a duty to provide care and a prohibition against animal fighting. Both carry misdemeanor and felony convictions depending on the case.

"Michigan is a strong state for anti-cruelty laws, well above the average," according to Professor David Favre from Michigan State University's DCL College of Law. He points out that while our laws are fairly good for companion animals, how judges sentence those that are found in violation of law is another issue altogether. "If a teenager sets a dog on fire, that's a clear violation of the intentional cruelty law. And if it's a second offense, it's potentially a four-year felony. Looking at the law you have no idea what the judge is going to do in a particular case. He may give him a suspended six-month sentence and not spend any jail time at all."

Often that's the case according to Bill Nemeth, a veterinarian for over 30 years who's now a fourth-year law student at the University of Detroit Mercy School of Law. Nemeth who worked for many years with the Michigan Humane Society said most of their cases that actually went to court were pled out, the agreement usually involving a misdemeanor, probation, no pet ownership, and some sort of fine or restitution. "I think they look upon these kinds of things as not being real problems. So they want to get it out of the way without taking up time in the docket and get the thing put aside and over with. If it's a really heinous thing like some of these dogfights and some of the felony situations, they'll pursue that a little more, especially if it gets in the press. But your average everyday cruelty thing—starving your dog to death or beating your dog to death, those things tend to get brushed over," Nemeth said.

Although Michigan has made great strides in keeping animals safe, there is always room for improvement according to Battle Creek Prosecutor John Hallacy who is advocating a change in the sentencing guidelines. "The variables used in determining the sentence do not specifically address animal abuse and neglect. Without such a variable, as a prosecutor, I believe it is difficult for an appropriate sentence to be fashioned in these cases," Hallacy said.

Prosecutors want stiffer penalties. Current sentencing guidelines treat animals as property and prosecutors have a problem with that. David Wallace from the Prosecuting Attorneys Association of Michigan says "pain has been caused and we feel that the sentencing guidelines should be readdressed to make it more of a significant issue especially in egregious cases where the dog, the cat, the animal has been significantly tortured. Right now the guidelines don't have that distinction." Benda echoes this view. "The majority of people treat their pet as a family member and not as property." She suggests changing the animal sentencing guidelines to reflect and take into account the psychological distress of families whose pet is tortured or killed.

Under the provisions of the cruelty statute, MCL 750.50 only the owner or person in control of the animal can be charged with the 93-day misdemeanor. "So if you had a cat or a dog and I came over and kicked it three or four times but didn't kill it, there's really no charge for that. It's your dog, your cat. There's no charge because it's not mine. I can't be charged with cruelty to an animal that's not my animal," Wallace explained.

Defense lawyers argue that overzealous prosecution presents some problems as well. "It really is a tough situation. I think that probably the judges who aren't giving tough enough sentences are doing so because their jails are full. If you've got somebody who is assaulting his wife and someone who is not taking care of their dog, the wife assaulter certainly deserves jail more than the dog abuser in most people's eyes. I think that judges are somewhat limited by what is available to them primarily because of economic constraints and the realistic limitation of jail cells," observed Dan Balice, an Ionia lawyer who recently defended a controversial case involving a client accused of cruelty to his pet horse.

"Is society prepared to allow the police and the prosecutor to prosecute you because you didn't have the heart to put your arthritic dog down?" asks Balice. In essence, that's what happened to his client—a man in his 50s whose horse had a hoof deformity, which looked like it had been abused. When Rusty the horse, which by many accounts was well-fed and well-cared for, wandered away from its pen one day, animal control and police were called in. Based on the report of a vet who said that the pony's deformed foot had been neglected and that the horse was living in pain, Rusty's owner was handcuffed and led to jail. Although efforts were made to "save the pony, they ended up euthanizing the horse. In the necropsy they found out that it [the hoof] was a congenital birth defect," Balice recounts. The case was dismissed without going to trial.

In 1990, only four states had felony provisions for serious acts of animal cruelty. Forty-one states now have those provisions, including Michigan, but they vary widely. In some states, the felony law may apply only to companion animals. In others, the felony provision is only enacted after the second or third offense. "It would be nice to have something in between the misdemeanor and felony charge. A lot of times what we have may seem like it needs more than just a 93-day misdemeanor but seems to fall short of the proofs necessary for the four-year felony," Benda said.

According to psychologist Dr. Marylou Randour, who's the Director of Education of the Doris Day Animal Foundation in Washington D.C., 27 states (including Michigan) have provisions for counseling for juveniles and adults convicted of animal cruelty. Dr. Randour, who lectures frequently to the legal community, says that although animals are legally defined as property, cruelty to animals has different psychological, social, and ontological implications than other property crimes. The FBI, she says, categorizes crimes against society, against persons, and against property. "If animal cruelty were re-categorized under 'crimes against society' it would help make the point that animal cruelty is a public safety issue and would encourage judges and prosecutors to assign a more appropriate weight to animal cruelty offenses than current sentencing guidelines allow."

Dr. Randour also points out that no crime statistics are kept at the juvenile or adult level on animal cruelty crimes. "This should change. If it doesn't, we have no way of understanding what the trends are, at what age animal cruelty is most likely to occur, whether it is increasing, what parts of the country, if any, have higher cases, etc. At the very least the juvenile justice community could institute a change so that animal cruelty adjudications are recorded with a separate category so they can be picked up later for analysis."

In this country, no state or government agency keeps systematic statistics on animal cruelty, but the problem is significant enough that some programs have emerged nationally. In Maryland and New York, programs stress hands-on interaction between juvenile offenders and animals. A safe shelter program—PetSafe was created in Maryland five years ago to house animals from abusive homes. Shelters in Lansing and East Lansing are also involved in these efforts. "We ask shelter residents at our intake about pet abuse and pet needs. We have a woman who takes in pets when she can, at no charge to the family staying in our shelter," said Holly Rosen, Safe Place director in East Lansing. Plans are also under way to establish a Michigan State University program to temporarily house the pets of domestic violence victims. Hillary Noyes, a veterinary medicine student at MSU who received a fellowship to establish PetSafe, will develop the logistics of the program cooperatively with the college, local shelters, and other emergency advocates in the area. It's expected to be in operation by early September 2004.

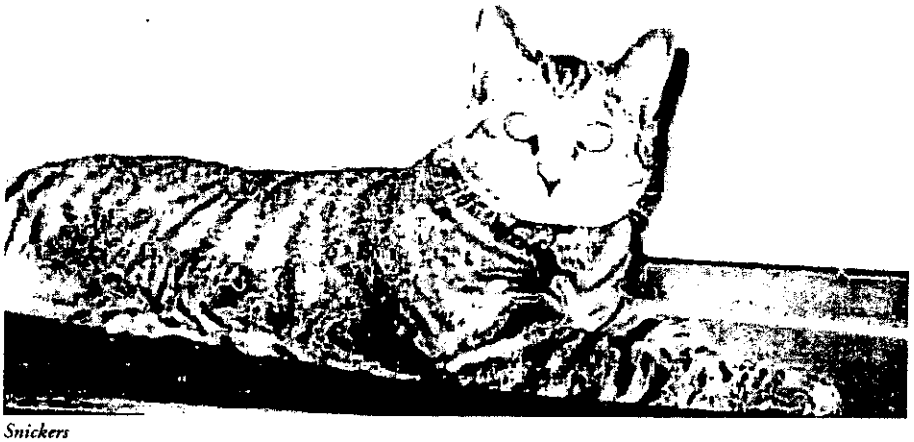
Balice, the Ionia lawyer, says that educating people is an important first step. People have an obligation to take care of their animals but he adds that "society also has an obligation not to turn good people into criminals by arresting them and charging them with crimes just because they had too much heart—because they didn't have the heart to put down their dog. And that's the danger."



Snickers

Bill Nemeth, the veterinarian in law school, attributes a lot of animal cruelty to ignorance of what needs to happen to take care of an animal. "It's not something you can truly legislate a solution to. There should be more education, stricter enforcement of current laws, and these kinds of things are going to have to get some more publicity so that the general public knows that there are consequences if you don't take care of your animals." ✦

THE CONNECTION BETWEEN ANIMAL ABUSE AND DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

By Susan J. Holland

A woman in another area recently wrote a letter to the editor pertaining to an animal welfare issue. Almost immediately she was met with negative rebuttals. One reader snidely remarked it was too bad the writer didn't care as much about aborted babies and abused children. Others supported the rebuttal with questions about human rights, poverty in America, and the list goes on.

Step back and take a deep breath. We need to care about animal cruelty and animal welfare. Why? We need to care because studies have proven a direct link between animal cruelty and domestic violence. Consider the following excerpt from Animal Cruelty, Breaking the Cycle of Abuse, a brochure from NAHEE, an educational division of HSUS.

"It is well documented that animal cruelty is a sign of serious psychological distress. It often indicates that a child (or adult) has either experienced violence firsthand or is at risk of becoming violent toward people. Many studies in psychology, criminology, and sociology have demonstrated that violent offenders frequently have childhood and adolescent histories of serious and repeated animal cruelty. As early as the 1970s, the FBI's analysis of the lives of serial killers revealed that most had, as children, killed or tortured animals. Other research has shown consistent patterns of animal cruelty among perpetrators of more common violence, including child abuse, spouse abuse and abuse of the elderly."

Facts cited from an article, Pet Abuse Disconnect, written by Tim White of The Fayetteville Observer: "The FBI sees animal cruelty as a predictor of violence and considers animal abuse when profiling serial killers. More than 80 percent of families in treatment for child abuse were also involved in animal abuse."

Sometimes people will say, "So what? It's only an animal." Take a minute to tell them why it is more than that. You don't have to be an animal lover to be against animal cruelty, animal neglect or disrespect for the quality of animal life. No, you don't have to be an animal lover. But you do need to care, because there is a very obvious parallel between animal cruelty and human behavioral dysfunction in a majority of cases.

Please review The Gadsden County Humane Society's Mission Statement.
"Our mission is to prevent cruelty and suffering to animals, and to create a humane world for all animals through education, advocacy and the promotion of respect and compassion." Capable professional speakers with informative Power Point Presentations are available for your club, group or organization. Additionally, a teacher certified through the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) is also available to present humane lessons in the classroom for all age groups. Lessons can be tailored to meet State of Florida education requirements in many subjects. For more information on our local education programs write to humaneeducation@tds.net. Carl Vaska, 20, was drunk on home brew the night of Dec. 7 when he took a knife and slashed dogs chained in the yard, according to an affidavit from an investigating state trooper. Vaska's parents later found bloody gloves in his room. Troopers said he admitted the attack and told them he blacked out.

The dogs' owners, Andrew and Christine Stephanoff, told troopers that part of the knife was found in one of the dead dogs.

After the attack, Vaska called the Stephanoffs to apologize, at his parents' urging, the affidavit said.

Vaska faces up to a year in jail for each count of cruelty as well as a fine. He is scheduled to be sentenced Feb 25.

Sale and importation of alcohol are banned in Russian Mission, a village of about 300 people in Southwest Alaska about 70 miles northeast of Bethel.

ANIMAL CRUELTY

There are many different reasons why individuals abuse animals. Animal cruelty covers a wide range of actions (or lack of action), so one blanket answer simply isn't possible. Each type of abuse has displayed certain patterns of behavior that we can use to help understand more about why people commit the crimes we encounter today.

Animal cruelty is often broken down into two main categories: active and passive, also referred to as comission and omission, respectively.

Passive Cruelty (Acts of Omission)

Passive cruelty is typified by cases of neglect, where the crime is a lack of action rather than the action itself - however do not let the terminology fool you. Severe animal neglect can cause incredible pain and suffering to an animal.

Examples of neglect are starvation, dehydration, parasite infestations, allowing a collar to grow into an animal's skin, inadequate shelter in extreme weather conditions, and failure to seek veterinary care when an animal needs medical attention.

In many cases of neglect where an investigator feels that the cruelty occurred as a result of ignorance, they may attempt to educate the pet owner and then revisit the situation to check for improvements. In more severe cases however, exigent circumstances may require that the animal is removed from the site immediately and taken in for urgent medical care.

Active Cruelty (Acts of Comission)

Active cruelty implies malicious intent, where a person has deliberately and intentionally caused harm to an animal, and is sometimes referred to as NAI (Non-Accidental Injury). Acts of intentional cruelty are often some of the most disturbing and should be considered signs of serious psychological problems. This type of behavior is often associated with sociopathic behavior and should be taken very seriously.

Animal abuse in violent homes can take many forms and can occur for many reasons. Many times a parent or domestic partner who is abusive may kill, or threaten to kill, the household pets to intimidate family members into sexual abuse, to remain silent about previous or current abuse, or simply to psychologically torture the the victims, flexing their "power".

CRUELTY CONNECTIONS

According to a 1997 study done by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) and Northeastern University, animal abusers are five times more likely to commit violent crimes against people and four times more likely to commit property crimes than are individuals without a history of animal abuse.

Many studies in psychology, sociology, and criminology during the last 25 years have demonstrated that violent offenders frequently have childhood and adolescent histories of serious and repeated animal cruelty. The FBI has recognized the connection since the 1970s, when its analysis of the lives of serial killers suggested that most had killed or tortured animals as children. Other research has shown consistent patterns of animal cruelty among perpetrators of more common forms of violence, including child abuse, spouse abuse, and elder abuse. In fact, the American Psychiatric Association considers animal cruelty one of the diagnostic criteria of conduct disorder.

If you break it down to its bare essentials:
"Abusing an animal is a way for a human to find power/joy/fulfillment through the torture of a victim they know cannot defend itself."

Now break down a human crime, say rape. If we substitute a few pronouns, it's the SAME THING.
"Rape is a way for a human to find power/joy/fulfillment through the torture of a victim they know cannot defend themselves."

Now try it with, say, domestic abuse such as child abuse or spousal abuse:
"Child abuse is a way for a human to find power/joy/fulfillment through the torture of a victim they know cannot defend themselves."

Do you see the pattern here?

The line separating an animal abuser from someone capable of committing human abuse is much finer than most people care to consider. People abuse animals for the same reasons they abuse people. Some of them will stop with animals, but enough have been proven to continue on to commit violent crimes to people that it's worth paying attention to.

Virtually every serious violent offender has a history of animal abuse in their past, and since there's no way to know which animal abuser is going to continue on to commit violent human crimes, they should ALL be taken that seriously. FBI Supervisory Special Agent Allen Brantley was quoted as saying "Animal cruelty... is not a harmless venting of emotion in a healthy individual; this is a warning sign..." It should be looked at as exactly that. Its a clear indicator of psychological issues that can and often DO lead to more violent human crimes.

Dr. Randall Lockwood, who has a doctorate in psychology and is senior vice president for anti-cruelty initiatives and training for the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, states "A kid who is abusive to a pet is quite often acting out violence directly experienced or witnessed in the home," Lockwood said, adding that about one-third of children who are exposed to family violence will act out this violence, often against their own pets.

Others either abuse pets or threaten to abuse them as a way to control an individual.

"So much of animal cruelty... is really about power or control," Lockwood said. Often, aggression starts with a real or perceived injustice. The person feels powerless and develops a warped sense of self-respect. Eventually they feel strong only by being able to dominate a person or animal.

Sometimes, young children and those with developmental disabilities who harm animals don't understand what they're doing, Lockwood said. And animal hoarding - the practice of keeping dozens of animals in deplorable conditions - often is a symptom of a greater mental illness, such as obsessive-compulsive disorder.

Just as in situations of other types of abuse, a victim of abuse often becomes a perpetrator. According to Lockwood, when women abuse animals, they "almost always have a history of victimization themselves. That's where a lot of that rage comes from."

In domestic violence situations, women are often afraid to leave the home out of fear the abuser will harm the family pet, which has lead to the creation of Animal Safehouse programs, which provide foster care for the pets of victims in domestic violence situations, empowering them to leave the abusive situation and get help.

Whether a teenager shoots a cat without provocation or an elderly woman is hoarding 200 cats in her home, "both are exhibiting mental health issues... but need very different kinds of attention," Lockwood said.

Those who abuse animals for no obvious reason, Lockwood said, are "budding psychopaths." They have no empathy and only see the world as what it's going to do for them.

History is full of high-profile examples of this connection:

- Patrick Sherrill, who killed 14 coworkers at a post office and then shot himself, had a history of stealing local pets and allowing his own dog to attack and mutilate them.
- Earl Kenneth Shriner, who raped, stabbed, and mutilated a 7-year-old boy, had been widely known in his neighborhood as the man who put firecrackers in dogs? rectums and strung up cats.
- Brenda Spencer, who opened fire at a San Diego school, killing two children and injuring nine others, had repeatedly abused cats and dogs, often by setting their tails on fire.
- Albert DeSalvo, the "Boston Strangler" who killed 13 women, trapped dogs and cats in orange crates and shot arrows through the boxes in his youth.
- Carroll Edward Cole, executed for five of the 35 murders of which he was accused, said his first act of violence as a child was to strangle a puppy.

- In 1987, three Missouri high school students were charged with the beating death of a classmate. They had histories of repeated acts of animal mutilation starting several years earlier. One confessed that he had killed so many cats he?d lost count. Two brothers who murdered their parents had previously told classmates that they had decapitated a cat.
- Serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer had impaled dogs? heads, frogs, and cats on sticks.

More recently, high school killers such as 15-year-old Kip Kinkel in Springfield, Ore., and Luke Woodham, 16, in Pearl, Miss., tortured animals before embarking on shooting sprees. Columbine High School students Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold, who shot and killed 12 classmates before turning their guns on themselves, bragged about mutilating animals to their friends.

As powerful a statement as the high-profile examples above make, they don't even begin to scratch the surface of the whole truth behind the abuse connection. Learning more about the animal cruelty/interpersonal violence connection is vital for community members and law enforcement alike.

THE WHOLE PICTURE

The fact is that the serial killer examples are only the ones that are sensational enough to make the news. These are the high-profile cases that some animal welfare organizations use to drive their point home, but the reality is that this pattern has shown itself over and over again in much less "news-worthy" cases. One might argue that they in fact, lessen the impact, because it makes this connection appear to be something that only exists in serial killers and "psychos", when in fact its very likely that everyone reading these words knows someone who has abused animals.

Surely you know at least one person who suffers from child-abuse, or is beaten by their spouse...

- In 88 percent of 57 New Jersey families being treated for child abuse, animals in the home had been abused.
- Of 23 British families with a history of animal neglect, 83 percent had been identified by experts as having children at risk of abuse or neglect.
- In one study of battered women, 57 percent of those with pets said their partners had harmed or killed the animals. One in four said that she stayed with the batterer because she feared leaving the pet behind.

Because the household pet is often used as a control device to keep the abused from seeking help, some shelters have developed programs to assist in these situations. Programs like Rancho Coastal Humane Society's Animal Safehouse Program allows victims to leave their animals in foster care while they seek medical attention, counseling and help. For a national listing of Animal Safehouse/Safe Haven organizations, visit the HSUS Safe Haven Directory.

What Can be Done?

Children who have abused animals should learn through teachers, social situations, and good parenting that abuse is wrong, and correct their behavior. This is a critical time, and if any one of those corrective elements is missing, that child is high risk for potentially becoming more abusive later on. As said by Anthropologist Margaret Mead, "One of the most dangerous things that can happen to a child is to kill or torture an animal and get away with it".

There are things that can be done. Be sure to stop by the Prevent section to read some of our suggestions on how you can get involved, and how small things you can do now will help to raise your children to be caring adults - and be sure to educate others about the abuse connection.

While animal abuse is an important sign of child abuse, the parent isn't always the one harming the animal. Children who abuse animals may be repeating a lesson learned at home; like their parents, they are reacting to anger or frustration with violence. Their violence is directed at the only individual in the family more vulnerable than themselves: an animal. One expert says, "Children in violent homes are characterized by ... frequently participating in pecking-order battering," in which they may maim or kill an animal. Indeed, domestic violence is the most common background for childhood cruelty to animals.

Subject: HB138 Testimony

Dear Representative Ramras,

I support HB138, the animal cruelty bill, and I hope you will see this issue through my eyes as I tell you my experience.

A few years ago I pulled into Russian Jack Park's parking lot right next to another parked car. I saw no one in the car and thought nothing of it. I opened my door and one dog, Sammy, jumped out. I could hear barking from inside the other car. The dog's owner jumped up and out of the car swearing and swinging as he charged me. I pulled away but Sammy looked up at the man quizzically and for that he was punched in the face. My other dog, still in the car went wild and the man then threw his Doberman pincher at my car perhaps hoping he would bite me or fight my dog. I was safe but Sammy lost vision in one eye and later the eye had to be removed. He also had migraines for a year. Sammy has never been the same and we think there was brain damage.

I reported the incident to the police. The officer I made my report to knew the man by name. He is a brutal man who had recently served 15 years in prison with no time off for good behavior. The car he emerged from had been reported as stolen but when the person learned who had taken his car he withdrew his complaint...he was too afraid to press charges.

I was very angry and I wanted to file a complaint but the officer said my complaint would not get this man off the street. My dog was considered property and below the cost that would have put this man back in jail. The officer was very sorry because he expected this man to hurt someone soon.

I have two thoughts on this. People who injure animal are highly likely to injure people too. That's why the Anchorage Police Department is now becoming pro-active on animal abuse. A co-dependant woman might not report her abusive partner and a child might be too afraid to complain but neighbors with injured animals could get the brute off the street and save human suffering.

My other thought is this...Sammy's injuries were meant for me. Had I been the victim, this man would be in jail. But my poor Sammy, who did nothing but stand still, is worth next to nothing under the law. How can this be justice?

Please pass HB138 out of Judiciary. It can save animal lives and humans too.

Thank you for reading my testimony.

Sec. 11.61.140. Cruelty to animals.

(a) A person commits cruelty to animals if the person

(1) knowingly inflicts severe and prolonged physical pain or suffering on an animal;

(2) with criminal negligence, fails to care for an animal and, as a result, causes the death of the animal or causes severe physical pain or prolonged suffering to the animal;

(3) kills or injures an animal by the use of a decompression chamber;

(4) intentionally kills or injures a pet or livestock by the use of poison; or

(5) knowingly kills or injures an animal, other than as provided in (1) or (3) of this subsection, with the intent to intimidate, threaten, or terrorize another person.

(b) Each animal that is subject to cruelty to animals under (a) of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

(c) It is a defense to a prosecution under this section that the conduct of the defendant

(1) was part of scientific research governed by accepted standards;

(2) constituted the humane destruction of an animal;

(3) conformed to accepted veterinary or animal husbandry practices;

(4) was necessarily incidental to lawful fishing, hunting or trapping activities;

(5) conformed to professionally accepted training and discipline standards.

(d) In (a)(2) of this section, failure to provide the minimum standards of care for an animal under AS 03.55.100 is prima facie evidence of failure to care for an animal.

(e) This section does not apply to generally accepted dog mushing or pulling contests or practices or rodeos or stock contests.

(f) Except as provided in (g) of this section, cruelty to animals is a class A misdemeanor. The court may also

(1) require forfeiture of any animal affected to the state or to a custodian that supplies shelter, care, or medical treatment for the animal;

(2) require the defendant to reimburse the state or a custodian for all reasonable costs incurred in providing necessary shelter, care, veterinary attention, or medical treatment for any animal affected;

(3) prohibit or limit the defendant's ownership, possession, or custody of animals for up to 10 years.

(g) Cruelty to animals is a class C felony if the person has been previously convicted on two or more separate occasions within 10 years of the date of the present offense of a crime under this section, AS 11.61.145(a)(1) or (2), or a law or ordinance of another jurisdiction having elements similar to those offenses. The court may also

(1) require forfeiture of any animal affected to the state or to a custodian that supplies shelter, care, or medical treatment for the animal;

(2) require the defendant to reimburse the state or a custodian for all reasonable costs incurred in providing necessary shelter, care, veterinary attention, or medical treatment for any animal affected;

(3) prohibit or limit the defendant's ownership, possession, or custody of animals for up to 10 years.

Sec. 11.61.145. Promoting an exhibition of fighting animals.

(a) A person commits the crime or offense, as applicable, of promoting an exhibition of fighting animals if the person

(1) owns, possesses, keeps, or trains an animal with intent that it be engaged in an exhibition of fighting animals;

(2) instigates, promotes, or has a pecuniary interest in an exhibition of fighting animals; or

(3) attends an exhibition of fighting animals.

(b) The animals, equipment, vehicles, money, and other personal property used by a person in a violation of (a)(1) or (2) of this section shall be forfeited to the state if the person is convicted of an offense under this section.

(c) In this section, "animal" means a vertebrate living creature not a human being, but does not include fish.

(d) Promoting an exhibition of fighting animals

(1) under (a)(1) or (2) of this section is a class C felony;

(2) under (a)(3) of this section is a violation for the first offense, a class B misdemeanor for the second offense, and a class A misdemeanor for the third and each subsequent offense.

To Whom It May Concern:

In October 2008, I asked that I be a point of contact for Animal Cruelty investigations and I was allowed to do this. I work closely with Anchorage Animal Care and Control to try to insure that Animal Cruelty complaints are followed up on and the suspects are prosecuted if at all possible.

There have been several studies that have shown that Animal Cruelty is statistically related to other crimes. Someone that commits cruelty to animals is also more likely to commit other crimes such as domestic violence or other violent crimes. It is also been statistically shown that people who commit animal cruelty will also more likely commit other crimes such as property crimes, drug crimes, and disorderly conduct. In a large majority of the cases I have investigated I have seen this in practice. They have many other police contacts and other criminal convictions.

Animal Cruelty is an important issue in our community. When there have been higher profile cases it is obvious by the response from the public, that this issue is important to our community. People are thankful that more is being done but some are also aware that more still needs to be done. There are statistics that show that in communities with better animal cruelty laws and better enforcement and prosecution of animal cruelty laws, the over all crime rate is lower. This makes sense taking into account the statistics that show the relationship between people who commit animal cruelty and other crimes.

I have been frustrated in some of the cases that I have investigated, that the ending result can only be a misdemeanor crime. My main job duty is investigating thefts. If I have a theft case in which someone steals something that is valued at $500 or more or if someone breaks a window of a vehicle and/or damages a vehicle to get into it to steal something, and the damage is $500 or more, I can charge that person with a C felony. If someone beats their pet to death, starves their pet to death, tortures their pet etc. the most I can charge them with is an A Misdemeanor. If someone accidentally runs into a dog with their car and kills it and they do not stop to try to render aid and find an owner, they can be charged with an A misdemeanor. Again if they torture their pet and kill it etc., the most I can charge them with is an A Misdemeanor.

I support the passage of this HB 138 and SB214. Animal Cruelty is a problem in our state. Having a felony level law will allow the worst offenders to have a possibility of a punishment that fits the crime better then it currently is. Because of the connection between Animal Cruelty and Domestic Violence and other crimes, I feel it will also help in identifying the people committing other crimes and hopefully help in intervening before innocent citizens became victims.

Thank you,

Detective Jackie Conn

Subject: Support of HB138 - Please share with the Judiciary Committee

February 25, 2010

To the Honorable Alaska Legislators of the Judiciary Committee,

I support HB 138, Cruelty to Animals. The Board of the Kodiak Humane Society, of which I am a member, has worked locally to try to enhance city codes to address animal cruelty and abuse. HB 138 would strengthen cruelty laws state-wide; not only protecting our animal friends, but, as stated in Rep. Gatto's Statement, would go after those individuals that have propensity for abuse of children, spouses, and others.

Alaska has fallen behind other states in recognizing the seriousness of animal cruelty. Stronger laws in Alaska means protection for those that are vulnerable and ultimately making our communities safer.

I urge you to pass HB 138.

Sincerely,

Linda Lance

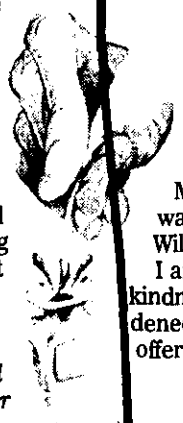
Lawmakers to be commended for animal cruelty measure

I write to commend Sen. Bill Wielechowski and Rep. Bob Lynn for their efforts to treat animal cruelty, in all its many forms, as a felony.

It's almost a foregone conclusion that those who abuse and torture animals inevitably don't treat their human counterparts any better. Many of us remember the case in Anchorage wherein a young man broke into a woman's home and stabbed her German Shepherd to death after the woman managed to escape. What might have happened to her if she was unable to get away?

Studies of serial killers (Ted Bundy, Jeffrey Dahmer, and others) have shown that they were animal torturers in their early years.



These bills do not put animals on a par with humans, but try to curtail or punish appropriately what should be unacceptable, criminal behavior in our society. Such behavior, if given "a pass," will lead to the equivalent of a jury setting free a repeat offender, just so that offender can repeat and accelerate his/her crimes. Everyone should be in support of these bills.

We are all human in the end

The fact that a man or woman serving their country and defending our freedom can be discharged from service if their sexual orientation is either discovered or disclosed seems rather nonsensical. Homosexual/bisexual/transexual Americans deserve the same rights as heterosexual Americans. I fail to see how someone's sexual orientation, no matter what it may be, impedes their ability to serve their country.

"Don't ask, don't tell" states that one could be discharged for disclosing information of a homosexual nature (i.e., marriage, relationships, family conditions). If this is so, it should be the same for heterosexuals who are serving. However, since everyone is assumed at birth to be heterosexual, we see it as acceptable to discuss openly about relationships of those nature.

Last time I checked, I was a human being just like everyone else attempting the American dream and the pursuit of happiness. I ask you, should it really matter if another fellow American's pursuit of happiness differs from yours?

Is community spirit dead?

On Feb. 9 I had the unfortunate incident of my car completely quitting on Minnesota Boulevard at 6:45 a.m. It just quit with no power at all; I could not even put on flashers. It was a dark and dangerous situation. Fire Chief Mark Hall stopped, set out flares and waited with me until APD Officer James Williams arrived.

I am deeply grateful to both men for their kindness and patience. I am deeply saddened by the people who drove rapidly by offering suggestions and obscenities. I grew up in Anchorage and there once was a time when other motorists would have stopped and given assistance. We could have had the car moved out of the way and not wasted the time of other commuters or public safety officers.

Come on, Anchorage, we can revive our community spirit.

SPONSOR STATEMENT
HB 139: ALLOW SCREEN DEVICES IN UTILITY VEHICLES

"An Act providing for an exception to allow drivers of public utility motor vehicles to operate those vehicles with certain screen devices operating and visible to the drivers."

HB 139 is a fix-it bill to correct an oversight in HB 88 that passed in the 25th Legislature. HB 88 prohibits the driver of an automobile from having a screen device, such as a television, video monitor, portable computer, or similar device, operating within their view while the automobile is in motion. Exceptions were made in HB 88 for cell phone usage for verbal communication, navigation or global positioning, maps, etc. HB 88 also recognized that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities may need to access a screen device in their automobiles while performing highway construction, maintenance or repair, and included an exception for those activities; however, HB 88 failed to include an additional exception for public utilities.

This legislation would provide public utilities with similar access for maintenance, repair, or data acquisition in order to perform their duties. As an example, meter readers for a gas company no longer physically exit their car to collect usage information; instead the information is collected by interrogating the meter as the meter reader drives past the location. The drivers need to verify as they drive by a home, for example, that the data is being collected. More importantly, if there is a gas leak, the driver will see on his screen device that there is a problem with the line as he drives by the point of leak. Finally, the drivers also receive messages from police and fire departments in the case of an emergency where a gas line would need to be shut off. Other public utilities, as defined in AS 42.05.990, have similar reasons for needing access to a screen device in performance of their duties.

HB 139 is intended to correct this oversight and provide public utilities an exception in order to allow them to fully perform their job functions.

AN ACT

Relating to televisions, monitors, portable computers, and similar devices in motor vehicles; relating to the definition of physical injury for the Alaska Uniform Vehicle Code; and providing for an effective date.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

THE ACT FOLLOWS ON PAGE 1

AN ACT

Relating to televisions, monitors, portable computers, and similar devices in motor vehicles; relating to the definition of physical injury for the Alaska Uniform Vehicle Code; and providing for an effective date.

 Section 1. AS 28.35 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 28.35.161. Driving a motor vehicle with a screen device operating; unlawful installation of television, monitor, or similar device. (a) A person commits the crime of driving with a screen device operating if

(1) the person is driving a motor vehicle;

(2) the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion; and

(3) the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving.

(b) A person may not install or alter equipment described in (a)(2) of this section that allows the images to be viewed by the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion.

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to

(1) portable cellular telephones or personal data assistants being used for verbal communication or displaying caller identification information;

(2) equipment that is displaying only

(A) audio equipment information, functions, and controls;

(B) vehicle information or controls related to speed, fuel level, battery charge, and other vehicle safety or equipment information;

(C) navigation or global positioning;

(D) maps;

(E) visual information to

(i) enhance or supplement the driver's view forward, behind, or to the sides of the motor vehicle for the purpose of maneuvering the vehicle; or

(ii) allow the driver to monitor vehicle occupants seated behind the driver;

(F) vehicle dispatching and response information for motor vehicles providing emergency road service or roadside assistance;

(G) vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport or freight or package delivery; or

(H) information for use in performing highway construction, maintenance, or repair or data acquisition by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities or a municipality.

(d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment installed in an emergency vehicle. In this subsection, "emergency vehicle" means a police, fire, or emergency medical service vehicle.

(e) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (b) of this section that the equipment installed or altered includes a device that, when the motor vehicle is being driven, disables the equipment for all uses except those described in (c) of this section.

(f) A person who violates (a) of this section is guilty of

(1) a class A misdemeanor, unless any of the circumstances described in (2) - (4) of this subsection apply;

(2) a class C felony if the person's driving causes physical injury to another person;

(3) a class B felony if the person's driving causes serious physical injury to another person;

(4) a class A felony if the person's driving causes the death of another person.

(g) A person who violates (b) of this section is guilty of a class A misdemeanor.

* Sec. 2. AS 28.90.990(a) is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(30) "physical injury" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900.

* Sec. 3. This Act takes effect September 1, 2008.

(5) "rate" includes each rate, toll, fare, rental, charge, or other form of compensation demanded, observed, charged, or collected by a public utility for its services;

(6) "service" means, unless the context indicates otherwise, every commodity, product, use, facility, convenience, or other form of service that is offered for and provided by a public utility for the convenience and necessity of the public;

(7) "tariff" means a rate, charge, toll, rule, or regulation of a utility relating to services furnished by the utility to the general public for compensation and every map, page, adoption notice, instrument, or other document filed with the commission setting out the terms and conditions under which utility services are offered to the public and instruments of concurrence and all other documents and data setting out the terms of a utility's business relations with another utility insofar as they affect the general public either directly or indirectly;

(8) "telecommunications" means the transmission and reception of messages, impressions, pictures, and signals by means of electricity, electromagnetic waves, and any other kind of energy, force variations, or impulses whether conveyed by cable, wire, radiated through space, or transmitted through other media within a specified area or between designated points.

NOTES OF DECISIONS

Franchises 2
Service 1

1. Service

Electric utility was not exempt from requirement that it had to obtain an additional certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Regulatory Commission prior to selling power outside its assigned geographical area, even though it argued it was selling a "commodity" rather than providing a "service," as the statutory definition of service included commodities. AS 42.05.221(a), 42.05.990(6). Chugach Electric Ass'n, Inc. v. Regulatory Com'n of Alaska (2002) Alaska, 49 P.3d 246. Electricity 8.1(2.1)

In determining whether to issue certificate of public convenience and necessity for coal-fired electric generation plant, Alaska Public Utilities Commission (APUC) was not required to consider costs associated with environmental externalities or public subsidies not paid by consumers as part of rate charged for service; language of statute governing issuance of certificate was limited specifically to "services," rather than construction of particular facility, and statutory requirement that APUC find applicant "fit, willing and able to provide the utility services applied for" only required APUC to focus on applicant. AS 42.05.221(a), 42.05.241. Alaska Federation for Community Self-Reliance v. Alaska Public Utilities Com'n, 1994, 879 P.2d 1015. Electricity 8.1(1)

Borough engaged in "collection" and "disposal" within meaning of AS 29.48.033(b) requiring certificate of public convenience and necessity when it opened large public dumping floor and transported garbage from there to final disposal site. Drake v. Fairbanks North Star Borough, 1986, 715 P.2d 1167. Environmental Law 369

Contracts which were awarded by city and which covered all hauling of refuse to sanitary landfills and maintenance and operation of transfer sites pertained to "collection and disposal," within statute precluding political subdivision from providing for waste collection and disposal service in any area, to extent it lies within area granted to waste carrier by certificate issued by Public Utilities Commission, until subdivision has purchased certificate, equipment and facilities of carrier or that portion which would be affected at fair market value; thus city was liable for fair market value of certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by Commission or that portion of certificate that would be affected. AS 29.48.033(b), 42.05.221(f). McClellan v. Kenai Peninsula Borough, 1977, 565 P.2d 175. Environmental Law 368

2. Franchises

Franchise agreements which originated in the form of municipal ordinances were in fact contracts, in that a "franchise" is a contract binding upon both parties regardless of method by which it comes into being, and thus, franchises were not "enactments" within meaning of statute superseding certain municipal "enactments." MEMORANDUM March 4, 2009

SUBJECT: HB 139 - Public Utility Exception
(Work Order No. 26-LS0573\A)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Allison Laffen

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have asked if the exception provided by this bill for public "utility construction, maintenance, [or] repair" would include dispatching and response information for those purposes. In my opinion it would include dispatching and response information as well as other activities related to "utility construction, maintenance, [or] repair." Of course if the utility companies are more concerned with providing an exception for public utility motor vehicle dispatching and response, then I would recommend removing the reference to "construction, maintenance, and repair" and just refer to dispatching and response for public utility purposes. Something like the following would suffice:

> vehicle dispatching and response information for public utility motor vehicles or information for use in performing data acquisition by a public utility.

Honorable Max Gruenberg
Alaska House of Represenatives
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Represenative Gruenberg,

I would like to thank you for sponsoring House Bill 139 "An Act providing for an exception to allow drivers of public utility motor vehicles to operate those vehicles with certain screen devices operating and visible to the drivers". ENSTAR Natural Gas Company is a leader in using new technology to provide better customer service in an attempt to hold down operating costs, thereby saving the consumer money. We currently provide automated meter reading and will soon be introducing a "Field Order System" (FOS) to provide real time information on work orders between field personnel, dispatch and customer service, thereby providing an improved customer experience.

ENSTAR would like to include a reference to "vehicle dispatching and response information" under the new subsection (I). There currently are references in existing statues to vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport, freight or package delivery. ENSTAR currently dispatches our service technician and distribution crews as a normal course of business, which includes gas leaks, fires and other emergency situations. ENSTAR is proud that our dispatch and response rate is ranked one of the highest in the nation.

However, without a reference in the bill to utility dispatching, it could be interpreted we are not in compliance with state law. Anything you could do to clarify the language would be greatly appreciated.

We appreciate your time and efforts in this matter.

Sincerely,

Curtis W. Thayer

Dear Rep. Gruenberg:

I am writing in support of your efforts to secure an appropriate utility amendment to the law addressing screen devices in vehicles. We believe House Bill 139 offers a reasonable exemption to allow Chugach to continue to safely conduct routine utility operations.

Thank you for seeking this amendment.

Sponsor Statement
HB 141

"An Act relating to the Interstate Compact for Juveniles; relating to the State Council for Interstate Adult Offender Supervision; amending Rules 4 and 24, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

This bill would enact the new Interstate Compact for Juveniles into law. This would replace the old compact which was created in 1955. The purpose of the Compact is to ensure the supervision of juvenile offenders and the return of runaways, escapees and absconders. The Compact provides the procedural means to regulate the movement of juveniles who are under court supervision across state lines. The Association of Compact Administrators estimates that the Interstate Compact on Juveniles is used in 20,000 to 30,000 transfer and supervision cases annually.

The new Compact ensures that all states will have identical language in their statutes which would help with compliance issues. The new Compact provides procedures for enforcement which the old Compact lacked. The Interstate Compact for Juveniles also provides for the collection of standardized information and information sharing systems.

This is a chance for the states to have the means to deal with state problems and enforce state solutions without having any federal intervention. 35 states have already passed this compact. If Alaska chooses not to enact this Compact the state would have to deal with every other state on a case-by-case basis which would cost the state more money than it would cost to implement the Compact.

The compact provides for the safety of the juvenile offender and the state as a whole. The importance of this compact cannot be overstated. This legislation is necessary to ensure the public safety and security of Alaskans. It will help ensure that Alaska receives notification about juveniles who are relocated or traveling to Alaska before they arrive here, and will expedite Alaska's ability to send juveniles from here to other jurisdictions.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

Since 1960, the Interstate Compact on Juveniles has provided states, including Alaska, with the procedural means to regulate the movement of court-supervised juveniles across state lines. Approximately 160 juveniles under the supervision of the Department of Health and Social Services leave or enter Alaska each year. This bill would place a new, extensively revised compact into Alaska statute replacing the current compact. The new compact seeks to correct deficiencies in the existing compact that have been identified at the national level with regard to administration, rules, enforcement procedures, financial management, communications and data sharing.

ANALYSIS CONTINUATION

Participation in the new compact requires that the state council implement and oversee compact functions. However, because some of the membership requirements for the juvenile compact council are the same as those required for the Alaska State Council for Interstate Adult Offender Supervision, the state intends to have a single state council oversee both compacts. Combining the two responsibilities under the authority of a single council will save the state the effort and duplication of creating and managing two councils with similar functions.

Being part of the new compact will create additional costs to the division. Costs include the following:

$13.0 Travel associated with membership participation, including travel to required meetings by staff
$27.0 Membership Dues, teleconferences, overhead costs that include chargeback, etc.
$ 5.0 Supplies for staff and required meetings

Dues to participate in the current compact are $400 per year. Dues to participate in the new compact are expected to be $14,000 per year.

The cost estimates for the participation in the state council only reflect those anticipated for the operations for the juvenile justice compact and do not include operational and other costs associated with the ongoing adult council activities. The existing adult council has not had in-person meetings for several years, and at least initially the division anticipates that such meetings will be necessary to address the added juvenile justice functions. The travel costs reflected in this fiscal note are again only intended to portray the costs for the juvenile compact activities. The travel costs also reflect the intent that council members represent all areas of the state.

A possible one-time additional cost to the division may also be incurred by adoption of this bill. The new compact will require use of a national database management system that may need to communicate with the division's MIS. The national system is still under development. Without knowing when the new system will be available, or how difficult it will be to link the two systems, we are not prepared to estimate a cost at this time. The division may need to make a specific request to meet this cost at some point in the future.

In addition, the division will be monitoring the amount of additional staff time required to participate in the new compact. At some point an increment request may be needed to fund a position if absorption of these duties is too challenging for our existing staff. The division needs to ensure we do not hamper our ability to research, apply for, and successfully win grants, such as the federal Re-Entry and Gang Prevention grants that have been invaluable in improving public safety and helping the state monitor and improve its response to gang issues. If the increase in workload forces staff to spend less time involved in the management of existing programs (these include the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Formula Program, the Enforcing Underage Drinking Laws program, Title V, Juvenile Accountability Block Grants, Bureau of Justice Assistance grant management, and Youth Court earmark) current federal funding that the division receives could be at risk.

Resolution of the Association of Juvenile Compact Administrators

"Interstate Compact for Juveniles"

Whereas, The Interstate Compact on Juveniles was established in 1955 and is the compact addressing the needs of juveniles within the juvenile justice system who move between states and has not been sufficiently amended in its forty-seven (47) year existence; and

Whereas, This compact is the only vehicle for the interstate supervision of juvenile offenders, the return of absconders and escapees, and runaways; and

Whereas, The complexities of the compact have become more difficult to administer, and many jurisdictions have expanded supervision and program expectations to include currently unregulated practices such as victim input and notification requirements, sex offender registration, and age related issues; and

Whereas, After national surveys and a detailed study by a task force appointed by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, the recommendation has been to rewrite the document to bring about an effective management capacity that addresses public safety concerns and juvenile accountability.

Be it therefore resolved, That the Association of Juvenile Compact Administrators hereby endorses and recommends adoption of the new compact entitled "Interstate Compact for Juveniles" by the fifty (50) states, the District of Columbia, and affected territories of the United States of America.

Adopted this 10th day of August, 2002.

RESOLUTION OF THE AMERICAN PROBATION AND PAROLE ASSOCIATION

"Interstate Compact for Juveniles"

Whereas, The Interstate Compact on Juveniles was established in 1955 and is the primary compact addressing the needs of juveniles within the justice system who move between states and has not been sufficiently amended in its 47-year existence; and

Whereas, This compact is the only vehicle for the controlled movement of juveniles released from custody or on probation across state lines; and

Whereas, The complexities of the compact have become more difficult to administer, and many jurisdictions have expanded supervision expectations to include currently unregulated practices such as victim input, victim notification requirements and sex offender registration; and

Whereas, After national surveys and a detailed study by a task force appointed by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, the overwhelming recommendation has been to amend the document to bring about an effective management capacity that addresses public safety concerns, offender accountability and effective treatment needs.

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED, That the Board of Directors of the American Probation and Parole Association hereby endorses and recommends adoption of the amended and newly titled Interstate Compact for Juveniles by the 50 states and affected territories of the United States of America.

RESOLUTION ON

THE INTERSTATE COMPACT FOR JUVENILES

WHEREAS, The Interstate Compact on Juveniles was established in 1955 and is the compact addressing the needs of juveniles within the juvenile justice system who move between states and has not been sufficiently amended in its forty-seven (47) year existence; and

WHEREAS, This compact is the only vehicle for the interstate supervision of juvenile offenders, the return of absconders and escapees, and runaways; and

WHEREAS, The complexities of the compact have become more difficult to administer, and many jurisdictions have expanded supervision and program expectations to include currently unregulated practices such as victim input and notification requirements, sex offender registration, and age related issues; and

WHEREAS, After exhaustive research and detailed study, the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention and The Council of State Governments convened an Advisory Group and Drafting Team to formulate recommendations and implement changes to the compact language to better address public safety, enforcement, accountability and communication concerns.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, That The Council of State Governments hereby endorses and recommends adoption of the new compact entitled, "Interstate Compact for Juveniles" by the fifty (50) states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and effected territories of the United States of America.

Dear Legislators:

The Alaska Juvenile Justice Advisory Committee (AJJAC) held an in-person meeting in Juneau on March 2-3, 2009. At the meeting Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) presented information on HB 141, which included the benefits of passing this legislation as well as the potential public safety issues if HB 141 does not pass.

After discussion, the AJJAC voted unanimously on March 2, 2009 to support HB 141, the Interstate Compact for Juveniles.

Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Sprague:

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the National District Attorneys Association I want to offer our support for the Interstate Compact for Juveniles. Our Board unanimously voted to support your effort during our recent meeting in Texas.

As local prosecutors we have to work daily with juveniles that require the attention of our court system and we recognize the need for interstate supervision of juvenile offenders and for the return of those who have escaped, run away or fail to live up to release expectations.

We also recognize that the changes in the complexities of our society have made many of the provisions of the compact badly out dated. Ideas such as community corrections, sexual predator registrations and victims rights provisions all impact on the how states must relate to each other in dealing with criminal offenders and in this instance, juveniles.

The Board of Directors considered the importance of addressing consistent treatment of juveniles in need of both consequences and treatment. The proposed Compact language provides states with the means of accomplishing these goals.

Dear Mr. Sprague:

The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) is pleased to support the proposed Interstate Compact Initiative for Juveniles. As an organization that provides services to runaway youth and their families, we are pleased that this enhanced initiative will ensure consistent use of those policies governing the Compact.

Although, primarily designed to assist those organizations working within the juvenile justice, and social service systems, the Compact will assist NCMEC in it's work to bring children back home by providing law enforcement professionals with clear guidelines and procedures once a missing youth is recovered.

As you work to implement this initiative throughout the 50 states, please do not hesitate to let us know if we can be of further assistance in this most important venture.

Dear Mr. Foster:

As one of participating entities, the National Juvenile Detention Association (NJDA) has been actively involved in the review and update of the Interstate Compact or Juveniles, originally established in 1955. The two-year effort to modernize the Compact has been thorough and comprehensive and has engaged the efforts of many practitioners from the juvenile justice field. The process addressed a multiplicity of issues regarding the Compact that have been identified as problematic or outdated in an effort to develop a document that meets the current needs of stakeholders in the signatory states.

The nation's detention centers deal with the Contract frequently as the entities responsible for housing juveniles found to be in violation of placement agreements or of state laws in the receiving states. The proposed modifications to the Compact should address many of the issues that have created problems for detention centers and will offer assistance to them in dealing with both sending and receiving states.

As the association serving juvenile detention nationally, NJDA supports the proposed changes to the Compact. The changes are designed to address the needs of the states, of the agencies within the states, and of the public in ensuring that placement agreements are complied with and community safety is ensured.

We are happy to offer assistance to you in your efforts to achieve adoption of the revised Interstate Compact for Juveniles.

Sincerely,

Earl L. Dunlap

The Honorable Jay Ramras
Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Alaska State Capitol
Juneau, AK 99811

Dear Representative Ramras:

In the House Judiciary Committee hearing held on March 27, 2009, Representative Max Gruenberg asked the following questions about House Bill 141 (Interstate Compact for Juveniles):

- When did the first state adopt the new Interstate Compact for Juveniles?

  We contacted Keith Scott, Director of the National Center for Interstate Compacts at the Council of State Governments, to answer this question; he reported that the first state to adopt the new Compact did so in March 2003 (North Dakota). The 35th state to adopt the Compact, Illinois, did so in August 2008. Adoption of the Compact by 35 states placed the Compact into "active" status, meaning that participating states are now developing the new rules that will govern interstate travel by juveniles. With the 35th state enacting the Compact, the first Interstate Commission meeting was held in December 2008. States that have not enacted the new Compact by December 2009 will not be able to transfer juveniles to and from states operating under the new Compact at that time, and will be required to develop individualized Memoranda of Agreement to transfer juveniles to and from those states.

- What are Hawaii's amendments to its bill on the Interstate Compact for Juveniles, noted in the materials provided by Rep. Coghill's office?

  To answer this question we contacted Hawai's juvenile compact administrator. She stated that Hawaii is currently considering two changes to the Compact:

  1.) In Article III, subsection (h)(7), deleting the phrase "regulated person or entity" and replacing it with the word "juvenile." The Hawaiian compact administrator said they believed the phrase "regulated person or entity" to be confusing.

2.) In Article VI of the Compact (found in Section 4 of Alaska's HB 141), deleting section (f), which reads: "The existing rules governing the operation of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles shall be null and void 12 months after the first meeting of the Interstate Commission created under this compact." The Hawaiian compact administrator said they made this change to ensure that Hawaii could continue to work with states that have adopted the new compact as well as states that continue to operate under the old compact.

We consulted with Jan Rutherdale and Deborah Behr at the Department of Law on these issues. Our two agencies agree that Hawaii's amendments are not needed in Alaska's bill and would only complicate what is intended to be a nationally uniform document. In the first case, we do not believe the term used in the Compact, "regulated person or entity," is confusing. It clearly refers to the individuals subject to the compact. In the second case, we believe Alaska's ability to work with other states, including those that do not adopt the new compact, is ensured in Section 12 of Alaska's HB 141, which reads:

> The Department of Health and Social Services may continue to implement the provisions of former AS 47.15.010 (the old Interstate Compact on Juveniles), as it read on the day before the effective date of this Act, to certain states that are compacting states to the Uniform Interstate Compact on Juveniles, but have not yet enacted the Interstate Compact for Juveniles, set out in AS 47.15.010, as repealed and reenacted by sec. 4 of this Act, or a substantially similar form of that compact.

- Have other states made amendents to the Compact?

To answer this question we contacted the Keith Scott, Director of the National Center for Interstate Compacts at the Council of State Governments. We asked Mr. Scott if he could provide a list of other states' amendments to the Interstate Compact for Juveniles. Mr. Scott said no such list has been assembled by the Council. While he has received occasional inquiries and provided feedback on potential amendments on the Compact from various states, he has not maintained a list of these inquiries and does not know which, if any, of these potential amendments have been adopted. To fully answer this question therefore would require us to contact individual states and review their legislation that enacted the Interstate Compact for Juveniles.

At the request of Acting Chair Nancy Dahlstrom we are sending a copy of this response to the members of the House Finance Committee, the next committee of referral for HB 141.

Sincerely,

Tony Newman

Sponsor Statement
HB144 - UNIFORM PROBATE CODE; TRUSTS, WILLS

Alaska passed the first piece of trust legislation in 1997. Other states have adopted similar pieces of legislation because they realize the effectiveness of Alaska's trust laws. The trust and estate planning community continuously recommends to the legislature updates and improvements to Alaska trust laws to make sure that Alaska stays on the leading edge of providing the best estate and financial planning solutions.

Alaska's trust laws have had a significant impact on Alaska's economy. The State of Alaska has directly received millions of dollars of insurance premium tax dollars that the state would not have received without our trust laws. Local banks have also benefited, for example Alaska Trust Company has over twenty-million dollars on deposit with local Alaska banks. Many jobs have also been created in the trust, banking, insurance and legal fields.

HB144 provides the following amendments to the Uniform Probate Code to facilitate the administration of wills and trusts in Alaska:

- Adds provisions allowing the settlor of a trust to designate a representative who can represent or bind an incapacitated person in future proceedings relating to the trust administration.

- Establishes that an augmented estate does not include property transferred to an irrevocable trust if the settlor is a discretionary beneficiary of the trust and if the transfer was made more than 30 days before marriage, or with the consent of the decedent's spouse. This provision is similar to statutory provisions adopted in Delaware.

- HB144 also creates a procedure for the establishment of will and trust validity before death. Situations arise where there is a question concerning a person's capacity to execute a will or trust, or whether the document was executed as the result of undue influence, duress, fraud, or mistake. The new procedure will allow these issues to be brought before the court while the testator or settlor is alive and when evidence is fresh. Similar procedures are allowed in three other states.

- HB144 also provides for venue of a probate proceeding if the decedent was not domiciled in Alaska, but significant assets are located within the state.

The passage of HB144 will ensure that Alaska stays the premier state in which to establish trusts and estates.

HB 144 - UNIFORM PROBATE CODE; TRUSTS, WILLS
SECTIONAL (26-LS0634\A 1.19.10)

Section 1. Amends AS 13.06.120(2), which lists the situations when persons are bound by orders binding others in proceedings under the Uniform Probate Code. Allows a person designated by a trust instrument to represent and bind a born or unborn trust beneficiary. Allows the settlor to designate the person in the trust in various ways. Generally does not allow a designated person serving as a trustee to represent and bind the beneficiaries. Generally does not allow the designated person to represent and bind a beneficiary if the designated person is also a beneficiary.

Also provides that certain persons who represent other persons under AS 13.06.120(2)(A)-(F) are not liable for good faith acts and omissions to the beneficiaries whose interests are represented or to persons claiming through those beneficiaries.

Section 2. Amends AS 13.12.201(b)(9). Makes grammatical and conforming amendments to the definition of "transfer" for certain provisions of the Uniform Probate Code that relates to the elective share of a surviving spouse.

Section 3. Amends AS 13.12.205, which relates to a decedent's nonprobate transfers to other persons. Deletes an irrevocable transfer in trust with a transfer restriction from the property that is included in the augmented estate.

Section 4. Adds AS 13.12.205(b). Provides that the augmented estate does not include property transferred to an irrevocable trust with a transfer restriction if two conditions relating to the trust's settlor and the transfer's timing are met.

Section 5. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.206(3).

Section 6. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.207(b).

Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

Section 7. Makes a conforming amendment for bill section 4 to a cross-reference in AS 13.12.209(b).

Section 8. Adds a new set of sections that provide for establishing the validity of wills and trusts before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.530. Allows certain persons to petition the court to determine the validity of a will before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.535. Allows certain persons to petition the court to determine the validity of a will before the testator's death.

Sec. 13.12.540. Establishes the venue for a petition to determine will or trust validity.

Sec. 13.12.545. Identifies what a petition for will validity must contain.

Sec. 13.12.550. Identifies what a petition for will validity must contain.

Sec. 13.12.555. Authorizes a court to declare a will or trust to be valid. Declares that the will has full legal effect and must be admitted to probate on request of the testator's death, unless modified or revoked after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.560. Makes the court's validity declaration binding on other persons.

Sec. 13.12.565. Directs the court to hold a hearing after a petition is filed. Requires the petitioner to notify the spouse, children, and heirs of the testator or settlor. For a will, also requires the petitioner to notify the testator, the personal representatives nominated in the will, and the devisees under the will. For a trust, also requires the petitioner to notify the settlor and parties in interest.

Sec. 13.12.570. Establishes the burden of proof for the petitions.

Sec. 13.12.575. Allows a testator to modify or revoke the will after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.580. Allows a trust to be modified, terminated, revoked, or reformed after the court's declaration.

Sec. 13.12.585. Establishes which records related to a petition are public, which are available only to certain persons, and which are confidential. Allows the court to order confidential records to be made available to other persons when good cause is shown.

Sec. 131.12.590. Defines terms used in the new article.

Section 9. Amends AS 13.16.410. Allows personal representatives to consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

Section 10. Amends AS 13.36.109. Allows trustees to consider discretionary distributions to a beneficiary as being made from capital gains realized during the year.

Section 11. Indicates how certain provisions in the bill amends court rules.

Section 12. States that those sections that amend the court rules only take effect if the bill section 11 is approved by a two-thirds vote.

Re: HB 144

Dear Representative Ramras:

I am writing in support of HB 144. I have worked as a will and trust attorney for nearly 25 years. If House Bill 144 becomes law, Alaska will be the first state to my knowledge that permits a testator to petition the court for an order regarding the validity of his or her will during the lifetime of the testator.

Under current law the validity of the will cannot be determined until after the death of the most important witness – the testator. This gives a procedural advantage to the party contesting the will and in my opinion is unfair. House Bill 144 will level the playing field and will allow a person to testify in court in order to establish the validity of his or her own will. This will allow the court to evaluate first hand the testator's competency and to determine whether the testator was unduly influenced into signing the will.

Thank you for sponsoring HB 144.

Sincerely yours,

Uniform Probate Code

The Uniform Probate Code (UPC) is a comprehensive statute that unifies, clarifies, and modernizes the laws governing the affairs of decedents and their estates, certain transfers accomplished other than by a will, and trusts and their administration. The UPC was originally approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association in 1969. The purpose of the UPC is to modernize probate law and probate administration and to encourage uniformity through the adoption of the code by all fifty states. The UPC, which has been amended numerous times, has been adopted in its entirety by sixteen states: Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Hawaii, Idaho, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, and Utah. The other thirty-four states have adopted parts of the UPC, but in general the UPC has not succeeded in providing a uniform body of substantive and procedural probate law.

The UPC contains seven substantive articles. Article I contains general provisions, definitions, and jurisdictional topics. Article II governs wills and intestate succession, which occurs when a person dies without leaving a will. Article III deals with the probate of wills and the administration of estates, article IV concerns the probating of estates in states other than the domicile of the decedent, article V extends protection to persons under disability and their property, and article VI governs nonprobate transfers of property. Article VII contains comprehensive provisions on trust administration.

The prime objective of the UPC is to simplify the probate process. For example, article III provides for supervised and unsupervised administration of probate. For estates with few assets and no disputes among the beneficiaries, the UPC allows unsupervised administration. In this case the executor of the will, who is called a Personal Representative in the UPC, handles the probating of the estate without direct supervision by the probate court. The personal representative handles every step of the probate process by filing a series of simple forms with the probate court. Unsupervised administration reduces the cost of probate and speeds up the process. Probate courts are freed from dealing with routine matters and may concentrate their efforts on estates with substantial assets or contested matters, where supervised administration is necessary.

The adoption of the UPC by state legislatures has been fought both by attorneys, who are opposed to unsupervised administration and to the overturning of current state laws governing probate, and by bonding companies, which stand to lose business because unsupervised probate does not require the posting of a bond. In light of this opposition, the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws have developed freestanding acts from similar provisions integrated into the UPC. This technique permits provisions, such as those involving powers of attorney and guardianship, to become law without disturbing other parts of a state's probate code.

This bill provides conformity between Alaska's elective share and testamentary proof provisions in Alaska's Uniform Probate Code with those adopted in the 2009 amendments to the official Uniform Probate Code. It ensures that irrevocable trusts with transfer restrictions are excluded from the augmented estate. Finally, it allows petitioners to determine the validity of wills and trusts prior to the death of the settler and establishes the procedures to be followed in accomplishing this.

HB 146 – AN ACT RELATING TO TRANSFER RESTRICTIONS ON TRUST INTERESTS
(26-LS0633\A)
1/19/10

HB146 aims to update and clarify Alaska trust laws making Alaska a better place for investors and families to invest in the competitive arena of trust management. This bill provides the following amendments to Alaska's current law:

- Clarifies the burden of proof which a creditor must meet to establish that a transfer in trust was done with the intent to defraud a creditor.
- Clarifies that a spendthrift provision will apply to a trust if distributions are made under the exercise of discretion by a trustee who is not the settlor, whether or not the exercise of the discretion is governed by a standard.
- Provides that the spendthrift provision in a trust will apply even though the trustee may distribute income or principal to the settlor or to pay income taxes.
- Clarifies that a beneficiary's interest in a trust, whether or not vested, is not considered a factor or economic circumstance in the division of property subject to division of property subject to divorce.

Sectional HB 146
"An Act relating to transfer restrictions on trust interests."

Sections 1 and 2 of the bill amend Alaska's statute by adopting the following provisions which have been adopted in other twelve other states:

- A creditor must establish by clear and convincing evidence that a transfer was made with intent to defraud a creditor. (This standard has been adopted by nine of the other twelve states);
- Distributions can be made under the discretion of a trustee pursuant to a standard, as well as with absolute discretion;
- The settlor may be reimbursed for income taxes attributable to the trust;
- The settlor can retain the power to replace a trustee/advisor with a non-related, non-subordinate party.

Section 3 of the bill clarifies existing Alaska law to provide that in the event of a divorce or dissolution of the marriage of a beneficiary of the trust, the beneficiary's interest, even though not vested, may not be considered a factor or economic circumstance in the division of property.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 146(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVE RAMRAS

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to transfer restrictions on trust interests."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 34.40.110(b) is amended to read:

(b) If a trust contains a transfer restriction allowed under (a) of this section, the transfer restriction prevents a creditor existing when the trust is created or a person who subsequently becomes a creditor from satisfying a claim out of the beneficiary's interest in the trust, unless the creditor is a creditor of the settlor and

(1) the creditor establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the settlor's transfer of property in trust was made with the intent to defraud that creditor, and a cause of action or claim for relief with respect to the fraudulent transfer complies with the requirements of (d) of this section; however, a settlor's expressed intention to protect trust assets from a beneficiary's potential future creditors is not evidence of an intent to defraud;

(2) the trust, except for an eligible individual retirement account trust, provides that the settlor may revoke or terminate all or part of the trust without the consent of a person who has a substantial beneficial interest in the trust and the interest would be adversely affected by the exercise of the power held by the settlor to revoke or terminate all or part of the trust; in this paragraph, "revoke or terminate" does not include a power to veto a distribution from the trust, a testamentary nongeneral power of appointment or similar power, or the right to receive a distribution of income, principal, or both in the discretion of a person, including a trustee, other than the settlor, or a right to receive a distribution of income or principal under (3)(A), (B), (C), (D), (E), or (F) [(3)(A), (B), (C), OR (D)] of this subsection;

(3) the trust, except for an eligible individual retirement account trust, requires that all or a part of the trust's income or principal, or both, must be distributed to the settlor; however, this paragraph does not apply to a settlor's right to receive the following types of distributions, which remain subject to the restriction provided by (a) of this section until the distributions occur:

(A) income or principal from a charitable remainder annuity trust or charitable remainder unitrust; in this subparagraph, "charitable remainder annuity trust" and "charitable remainder unitrust" have the meanings given in 26 U.S.C. 664 (Internal Revenue Code) as that section reads on October 8, 2003, and as it may be amended;

(B) a percentage of the value of the trust each year as determined from time to time under the trust instrument, but not exceeding the amount that may be defined as income under AS 13.38 or under 26 U.S.C. 643(b) (Internal Revenue Code) as that subsection reads on October 8, 2003, and as it may be amended;

(C) the transferor's potential or actual use of real property held under a qualified personal residence trust within the meaning of 26 U.S.C. 2702(c) (Internal Revenue Code) as that subsection reads on September 15, 2004, or as it may be amended in the future; [OR]

(D) income or principal from a grantor retained annuity trust or grantor retained unitrust that is allowed under 26 U.S.C. 2702 (Internal Revenue Code) as that section reads on September 15, 2004, or as it may be amended in the future;

(E) distributions that are made under the exercise of discretion by a trustee who is not the settlor, whether or not the exercise of the discretion is governed by a standard; or

(F) the transferor's potential or actual receipt of income or principal to pay, in whole or in part, income taxes due on income of the trust if the potential or actual receipt of income or principal is made under a provision in the trust instrument that expressly provides for the payment of the taxes and if the potential or actual receipt of income or principal would be the result of a trustee's acting in the trustee's discretion or under a mandatory direction in the trust instrument; distributions to pay income taxes made under a discretionary or mandatory provision included in a governing instrument referred to in this subparagraph may be made by direct payment to the taxing authorities; or

(4) at the time of the transfer, the settlor is in default by 30 or more days of making a payment due under a child support judgment or order.

 Sec. 2. AS 34.40.110(h) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(h) A transfer restriction is allowed under (a) of this section and is enforceable under (b) of this section even if the settlor has the authority under the terms of the trust instrument to

(1) appoint a trustee, a trust protector under AS 13.36.370, or an advisor under AS 13.36.375;

(2) remove a trustee or trust protector and appoint a replacement trustee or trust protector who is not a related or subordinate party; in this paragraph, "related or subordinate party" has the meaning given in 26 U.S.C. 672(c) (Internal Revenue Code); or

(3) remove an advisor and appoint a replacement advisor.

SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB149 – "An Act allowing appropriations to the civil legal services fund from court filing fees." (26-LS0624\A 3.12.09)

This bill is designed to help fund civil legal services for low-income Alaskans. House Bill 149 will provide a mechanism for funding the Alaska Legal Services Corporation (ALSC), by allowing the legislature to appropriate up to 25 percent of filing fees paid to the Alaska Court System during the previous fiscal year into the Civil Legal Services Fund. In the fiscal year of 2008, the Alaska Court System collected and turned over to the State of Alaska a total of $2,525,300.

The Alaska Legal Services Corporation was established in 1966 to address the civil legal aid needs of low-income Alaskans. ALSC is not a state agency, but is instead a nonprofit charitable 501(c)(3) whose funding comes from a variety of state, federal, and private sources. Over the last several years ALSC funding has dwindled, from $4.2 million as of 1987 to $3.1 million as of 2007, while it struggles to serve a larger number of poverty-level applicants. Appropriations from the State of Alaska that were once as high as $1.2 million in FY84 are currently at $200,000. House Bill 149 aims to correct this lack of funding and helps ensure civil legal representation for Alaska's most needy population.

Dear Representative Ramras,

I want to thank you again for having HB 149 introduced by the House Judiciary Committee. This bill if enacted into law can play a vital role in protecting the basic necessities of life for indigent Alaskans from jeopardy through civil legal proceedings.

Although I know that you understand this, it is not widely understood by the public at large that, although Alaskans who are charged with crimes are entitled to appointed attorneys, Alaskans who have civil legal problems are left on their own.

Thus, Alaskan families can face evictions or foreclosures forcing them out of their homes; garnishments or attachments raiding their bank accounts or paychecks; loss of health insurance coverage; victimization by domestic violence; and any number of other hazards, with none of the legal assistance or protections made available to an indigent Alaskan facing a criminal charge.

ALSC's mission is to provide meaningful access to justice in resolving legal problems for low-income clients through our civil justice system, thus promoting family stability and reducing the legal consequences of poverty.

ALSC provides this help with a cost-effectiveness that could not be equaled by any state agency. It recruits private attorneys to volunteer their time to represent indigent families for free, through its successful Volunteer Attorney Support program. Also, as a private charitable organization, ALSC salaries are considerably lower than either private practice or state employment. For example, a just-admitted law school graduate coming to work for ALSC would get about $32,000; the same attorney going to work for a state governmental agency would start at about $60,000.

In addition, providing indigent litigants with counsel helps our entire justice system. Pro se litigants require more judicial time, with attention to other cases postponed; pro se litigants are more apt to return to court repeatedly due to their lack of understanding; and presiding over pro se litigation frequently pushes the judge towards the role of educator, or advisor, to the pro se party, detracting from his/her role as neutral decision-maker.

It is for this reason that looking to civil case filing fees as a designated program receipt, to help provide the legal assistance that will yield more just results for indigent Alaskans, and will benefit our justice system as a whole, is an appropriate and salutary measure.

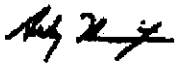
Last year, ALSC opened up slightly more than 1500 new cases, providing assistance to almost 4000 individuals through direct attorney-client relationships. Many more received help through attendance at ALSC classes and clinics, and through ALSC's self-help web site.

At the same time, though, ALSC has figures for those it has been unable to serve, or unable to serve completely. We turned down 900 applications, and of those, about 40% were turned down for inadequate staffing and resources within ALSC. We recorded another 680 inquiry calls that were not followed up with an application, and about 40% of those appeared to be in situations where the caller likely could have benefitted from ALSC assistance had ALSC been able to offer it. And of the 1500 cases where we did provide assistance, about 9% were situations in which the client wanted more than what ALSC was able to provide.

Thus, although ALSC stretches its resources to help as many as possible, there is a large amount of unmet need, and the above figures do not include persons who did not even contact ALSC, either because they did not know about the possibility of assistance or because they were too discouraged to do so. There is much work that still needs doing.

Again, thank you for you willingness to put HB 149 before the legislature; it is sorely needed, and we are greatly appreciative of your efforts.

Sincerely,



Andy Harrington
Executive Director

MEMORANDUM March 18, 2009

SUBJECT: Changes in HB 152 involving federal statutes
(Work Order No. 26-LS0158\E)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Assistant Revisor

Thank you very much for hearing this bill on Monday morning. After the hearing, I analyzed the 11 bill sections which change references to federal statutes. I offer this analysis as a supplement to the sectional summary.

Sections 18, 23, and 73 of the bill insert the word "former" in statutes where the federal section cited has been repealed. This insertion is particularly important in section 18, where the material referenced has been removed from the federal statute and different material inserted at that designation.[1]

[1] Section 18 inserts the word "former" before a cite to 20 U.S.C. 7703(f)(2)(B) in AS 14.17.990(5).

AS 14.17.990 defines terms for AS 14.17, which relates to financing of public schools. The term "eligible federal impact aid", defined in AS 14.17.990(5), is used in AS 14.17.410(b) and (e) in calculating state aid for school districts. This paragraph cites 20 U.S.C. 7703(f)(2)(B). That subparagraph no longer exists. The existing 20 U.S.C. 7703(f) was enacted as 20 U.S.C. 7703(h), and carried that designation when AS 14.17.990 was enacted in 1982. It was redesignated as 20 U.S.C. 7703(f) in 2000.

The current reference in the Alaska statute directs the reader to text that is obviously not that to which the legislature in 1982 intended to refer. Insertion of the word "former" in this instance alerts the reader not to rely on the text currently codified at 20 U.S.C. 7703(f) in interpreting this section.

In addition to this change, the legislature and the administration may wish to review whether the federal impact funding described in the former 20 U.S.C. 7703(f)(2)(B) is still forthcoming, and if so, if there is a more useful way to describe that funding.

Section 39 of the bill contains two changes. The first reflects a redesignation of a paragraph in the federal code.[2] The redesignation is a change in numbering only, not a change in the wording or the substance of the federal statute. The second change replaces a definition that has been repealed[3] with a different federal definition[4] that is very similar

---

[2] The first reference amended in this section is currently inaccurate because the paragraph in question was renumbered after the bill enacting AS 23.20.401 was passed, but before it took effect. August 13, 1981, 42 U.S.C. 654(20)(B)(i) was enacted, in sec. 2335, P.L. 97-35. On June 24, 1982, the governor approved CCSSB 552, which became ch. 115, SLA 1981. Section 18 of that Act, which enacted AS 23.20.401, took effect September 26, 1982. Meanwhile, at the federal level, sec. 171(b)(1)(C) of P.L. 97-248, dated September 3, 1982, redesignated 42 U.S.C. 654(20)(B)(i) as 42 U.S.C. 654(19)(B)(i). The content of the subparagraph was not changed in the redesignation, and has not been amended since.

[3] Former 42 U.S.C. 662(e) read:

> § 662. Definitions
> For purposes of section 459 [42 USCS § 659]--
> . . .
> (e) The term "legal process" means any writ, order, summons, or other similar process in the nature of garnishment, which--
> (1) is issued by (A) a court of competent jurisdiction within any State, territory, or possession of the United States, (B) a court of competent jurisdiction in any foreign country with which the United States has entered into an agreement which requires the United States to honor such process, or (C) an authorized official pursuant to an order of such a court of competent jurisdiction or pursuant to State or local law, and
> (2) is directed to, and the purpose of which is to compel, a governmental entity, which holds moneys which are otherwise payable to an individual, to make a payment from such moneys to another party in order to satisfy a legal obligation of such individual to provide child support or make alimony payments.

[4] 42 U.S.C. 659(i) provides:

> (i) Definitions. For purposes of this section--
> ...
> (5) Legal process. The term "legal process" means any writ, order, summons, or other similar process in the nature of garnishment--
> (A) which is issued by-- to the definition in the section cited.[5] In case the committee, after reviewing this memo, prefers not to substitute this definition, amendments 1) removing this change and leaving the first change intact (amendment E.3) and 2) substituting the text of the repealed definition for the reference (amendment E.5) are enclosed. The second amendment addresses the repeal, the first would leave it for another bill. Only one of the amendments should be used.

Section 66 reflects a recodification of federal law. According to the code, the recodification did not effect a substantive change to the underlying federal law.[6]

(i) a court or an administrative agency of competent jurisdiction in any State, territory, or possession of the United States;

(ii) a court or an administrative agency of competent jurisdiction in any foreign country with which the United States has entered into an agreement which requires the United States to honor the process; or

(iii) an authorized official pursuant to an order of such a court or an administrative agency of competent jurisdiction or pursuant to State or local law; and

(B) which is directed to, and the purpose of which is to compel, a governmental entity which holds moneys which are otherwise payable to an individual to make a payment from the moneys to another party in order to satisfy a legal obligation of the individual to provide child support or make alimony payments.

[5] The definition of "legal process" in a section, 42 U.S.C. 662, was repealed in 1996. The definition in 42 U.S.C. 659(i) is suggested as a replacement because, although it is not identical to the repealed definition, it is very similar. The department has indicated its support for this change. If the differences between the two definitions render 42 U.S.C. 659(i) unacceptable as a substitute, an alternate drafting approach would be to delete the reference and insert the text of the definition found in former 42 U.S.C. 662 into AS 23.20.401(b)(3). Either of these options would most likely be more useful to the reader than the current situation, which forces the reader to locate the text of former 42 U.S.C. 662 as it existed before the repeal.

[6] The federal laws cited, former 49 U.S.C. 1671, et seq. (Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968) and former 49 U.S.C. 2001, et seq. (Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979), were combined and recodified in 1994 in 49 U.S.C. 60101 et seq. The Act recodifying the sections specifically provided that the recodification was made without substantive change to the laws being recodified:

Sec. 6.(a) Sections 1-4 of this Act restate, without substantive change, laws enacted before July 1, 1993, that were replaced by those sections. Those sections may not be construed as making a substantive change in the laws replaced. Laws enacted after June 30, 1993, that are inconsistent with this Act supersede this Act to the extent of the inconsistency.

Section 70 fixes an apparent error in the Alaska Statutes. Please refer to the sectional summary for further information.

The changes made in the remaining five sections (secs. 7, 20, 46, 84, and 85) are more complicated, in that the underlying federal programs they refer to have changed since the enactment of the referring Alaska statute. If the legislature wishes to review the substance of the changes to the federal laws referred to, it may be preferable to leave the issues presented in these sections to be addressed in substantive bills. An amendment that would delete these five sections from the bill, amendment E.4, is enclosed.

Enclosures

P.L. 103 - 272, sec. 6(a), July 5, 1994, 49 USC prec. 101 note. For this reason, substitution of a cite to current federal law for the citations to former federal laws in AS 46.03.450 does not substantively change the law of the state. However, provision of the current citation should assist the reader in locating the relevant federal law.

MEMORANDUM March 13, 2009

SUBJECT: 2009 Revisor's Bill Sectional Summary - HB 152
(Work Order No. 26-LS0158\E)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz
Assistant Revisor

The following is a sectional summary of the 2009 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the revisor of statutes

> . . . shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state.

To assist the reader in understanding the bill, I have summarized the contents by listing sections that have similar purposes or effects.

Sections that delete, repeal, or update obsolete provisions: Sections 2 - 5, 7, 15, 18 - 21, 23, 28, 29, 35, 38, 39, 43, 44, 46, 52, 65 - 69, 73, 81, 84, 85, 88, 89, and 91 amend or repeal provisions that have become obsolete through other legislative action.

Sections that correct errors or oversights: Sections 8, 10, 13, 14, 16, 25, 26, 30 - 32, 40, 47, 54, 63, 70 - 72, 74 - 77, 80, 82, 83, 86, and 87 correct errors or oversights.

Sections that improve the form or substance of the law: Sections 1, 6, 9, 11, 12, 17, 22, 24, 27, 33, 34, 36, 37, 41, 42, 44, 45, 48 - 51, 53, 55 - 62, 64, 78, and 79 propose amendments to improve the form or substance of the statutory law of Alaska.

SECTIONAL SUMMARY

Bill section 1 substitutes a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture in AS 03.09.020(a). There is no statutorily created division of agriculture. Currently there is an administratively created division of agriculture within the Department of Natural Resources; however, that name could be changed administratively. The generic reference will apply no matter what name is given to the division administratively.

Bill section 2 substitutes a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences" in AS 03.22.010. The University no longer has an institute called the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences." According to the office of the Dean of the School of Natural Resources and Agricultural Sciences, what was the Institute of Agricultural Sciences is now known as the Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station.

Bill section 3 amends AS 03.22.020 by substituting a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences". See bill section 2.

Bill section 4 amends AS 03.22.040 by adding "and Forestry" to reflect the current name of the University of Alaska Agriculture and Forestry Experiment Station and makes the reference to the University generic for consistency with other references. See bill section 2.

Bill section 5 amends AS 03.22.050 by substituting a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences". See bill section 2.

Bill section 6 substitutes a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture in AS 03.47.040(2). See bill section 1.

Bill section 7 amends AS 03.58.010 to expand a spanned reference to the federal Organic Foods Production Act of 1990 to include a new section added in 2002.

Bill section 8 amends AS 08.36.246(a) to repeal subparagraph (B), which refers to "a specialty examination given by the Central Regional Examining Board" because there is no such exam given by that entity. The Chief Assistant Attorney General of the Legislation and Regulations section at the Attorney General's office is in accord with this change.

Bill section 9 inserts the word "acid" in AS 11.56.762 to reflect the full name of the system established in AS 44.41.035.

Bill section 10 corrects an apparent error by changing "adopted parent" to "adoptive parent" in AS 12.55.125(b). Although Alaska law provides a process for parents to adopt children, it does not provide for the adoption of parents by children.

Bill section 11 adds an "or" and changes "from" to "to" to improve the form and readability of AS 12.61.020(a).

Bill section 12 deletes two commas to improve the form and readability of AS 12.61.020(c).

Bill section 13 deletes "is" and inserts "are" to create agreement between the two subjects and the verb in the first sentence of AS 12.62.160(a).

Bill section 14 changes "heirs" plural to the singular "heir" in AS 13.06.050(21) to match the singular tense used elsewhere in the paragraph. Under AS 01.10.050, words in the singular include the plural. In this instance, use of the singular throughout improves readability.

Bill section 15 amends AS 14.03.075(g)(2) to delete a reference to the definition of "individualized education program team" in AS 14.30.350, since that definition was repealed in 2001. This section replaces the reference with a description.

Bill section 16 changes the phrase "counting period" in AS 14.17.600 to "count period" to match the usage in AS 14.17.420(a)(2) and 14.17.990.

Bill section 17 adds a new subsection to AS 14.17.920, providing that the Department of Education and Early Development shall, by regulation, define the term "school" for purposes of AS 14.17. This codifies sec. 40(b), ch. 83, SLA 1998. While the revisor has the power to codify uncodified law editorially, the significance of this provision suggests that public review would be a good idea. If the legislature determines that sec. 40(b), ch. 83, SLA 1998 was not intended to be of unlimited duration, instead of codifying this section, it could be repealed.

Bill section 18 amends AS 14.17.990(5) to reflect the repeal of 20 U.S.C. 7703(f)(2)(B), by inserting the word "former".

Bill section 19 deletes "by July 1, 1997," from AS 14.20.149(a), as the deadline has become obsolete.

Bill section 20 amends AS 14.30.174(b)(2) to update a reference to federal law. The sections at the end of the previous spanned reference (20 U.S.C. 7141 - 7142) were omitted in a 2002 revision of the law, however, similar provisions were added at 20 U.S.C. 7161 - 7165, under the heading of safe and drug-free schools and communities. Since additional sections may be added to the federal law, the change in this section is to "et seq."

Bill section 21 amends AS 14.35.025 by deleting a reference to the "United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare," which no longer exists (it has been superseded by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Education), and inserting a generic reference to "the appropriate federal agency."

Bill section 22 deletes the word "or" in one place in AS 14.40.826(a)(5), and adds commas and the word "have" in two places to improve the form and readability of the paragraph.

Bill section 23 amends AS 14.50.010 to indicate the repeal of 20 U.S.C. 401 - 602.

Bill section 24 amends AS 14.57.199 to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of state libraries, archives, and museums. The division is not created in statute and could be renamed or reorganized administratively.

Bill section 25 deletes "two-thirds" and replaces it with "three-fourths" in AS 15.45.160 and adds a provision relating to the minimum number of signatures per district to conform this section to AS 15.45.140 and article XI, sec. 3, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Bill section 26 deletes "two-thirds" and replaces it with "three-fourths" in AS 15.45.390 and adds a provision relating to the minimum number of signatures per district to conform this section to AS 15.45.370 and article XI, sec. 3, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Bill section 27 makes a conforming change in AS 17.37.070(6) to reflect the removal of the definition of "treatment facility" in AS 47.14.990(12). The term "treatment facility" is not used anywhere in AS 47.14, so a definition of the term does not belong in AS 47.14.990. The term "treatment facility" is used in AS 47.12, and a definition of the term identical to that in AS 47.14.990 appears in AS 47.12.990. AS 17.37.070(6) refers to the definition of "treatment facility" in AS 47.14.990. Since that term and the other terms defined by reference are also defined in AS 47.12.990, and those definitions are identical to the ones found in AS 47.14.990, a reference to AS 47.12.990 is substituted for the original reference here to preserve the content of the definitions for purposes of this section despite the removal of the definition of "treatment facility" in bill section 77.

Bill section 28 deletes material applicable only before October 1, 2006 from AS 19.15.025(a).

Bill section 29 deletes material applicable only before October 1, 2006 from AS 19.15.025(b).

Bill section 30 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.120(a) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 31 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.500(11) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 32 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.500(17) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 33 replaces a comma with the word "and" to improve the readability of AS 23.05.060(3).

Bill section 34 deletes "Alaska Workers' Compensation Board" in AS 23.05.067(a)(1)(B) and replaces it with "division of workers' compensation in the department." The reports referred to in AS 23.30.155(m) and (n) are made to the division.

Bill section 35 amends AS 23.20.175(c) to remove an obsolete date reference.

Bill section 36 is a conforming amendment to AS 23.20.276(b) that reflects the repeal of AS 23.20.525(a)(4) and (5) and the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 41.

Bill section 37 amends AS 23.20.277(c) to remove a paragraph that has become obsolete, as well as an obsolete date reference.

Bill section 38 is a conforming amendment to AS 23.20.278 that reflects the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 41.

Bill section 39 corrects a citation in AS 23.20.401(b)(2) to reflect a 1982 renumbering of the referenced paragraph in the U.S.C. It also replaces a citation to the definition of legal process in 42 U.S.C. 662 (which has been repealed), with a reference to the definition in 42 U.S.C. 659(i)(5).

Bill section 40 amends AS 23.20.408(h) to remove a reference to AS 23.20.408(g), since that subsection has not included the defined phrase since 1982.

Bill section 41 amends AS 23.20.525(a) to remove several obsolete date references, to repeal paragraphs (4) and (5) which have become obsolete, and to renumber the remaining paragraphs. Also makes a conforming change in AS 23.20.525(b).

Bill section 42 makes conforming changes required by the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 41. Replaces the words "newsboys" and "salesman" in AS 23.20.526(a) to avoid use of gender specific terms; the phrase "service performed by an individual under the age of 18", used to replace "newsboys", is found in 26 U.S.C. 3306(c)(15)(A). Deletes a grammatically incorrect occurrence of the word "some".

Inserts "United States" before "Secretary of Labor" and substitutes "that" for "which" to conform with current drafting style.

Bill section 43 makes conforming amendments in AS 23.20.526(d) required by the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 41.

Bill section 44 removes obsolete date references in AS 23.20.530(b), and changes the word "tax" to "taxation". Also substitutes "that" for "which" and semi-colons for commas to conform to current drafting style.

Bill section 45 amends AS 24.05.135(c) to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of state libraries, archives, and museums. The division is not created in statute and could be renamed or reorganized administratively.

Bill section 46 amends AS 25.27.125(a), which refers to federal incentive payments received by the state under 42 U.S.C. 658. However, 42 U.S.C. 658 was repealed in 1998. The current federal statute relating to incentive payments is 42 U.S.C. 658a, so after consulting with the Department of Law, we have substituted a reference to that section instead.

Bill section 47 shortens the descriptive phrase "voter approval of alteration or abolishment of service areas" in AS 29.10.200(46) to "service areas" to reflect the scope of AS 29.35.450. Under AS 29.35.450(d), all of AS 29.35.450 applies to home rule municipalities, not just subsection (c), which deals with voter approval of alteration or abolishment of a service area. This corrects a drafting error.

The section amends a reference in AS 29.10.200(50) to reflect the 1992 renumbering of AS 29.45.570 as AS 29.45.800.

This section also amends AS 29.10.200(57) to remove "construction" and insert "revenue bonds" to reflect the actual content of AS 29.47.260 as noted in the current catchline. The original catchline for AS 29.47.260 was "construction" and that has been changed editorially to "Applicability of AS 37.10.085", but the text of the section, which relates to revenue bonds, has not been changed. AS 37.10.085 relates to financial aid to corporations by the state or a political subdivision of the state.

Bill section 48 adds language to AS 29.46.010(b) indicating that the subsection applies to home rule municipalities. The subsection already appears on the list in AS 29.10.200 of limitations on home rule powers. The change brings this section into conformity with other sections on the list, which include applicability in the text of the section listed.

Bill section 49 changes the word "section" in AS 29.46.030(a) to "subsection", since only subsection (a) of that section refers to findings.

Bill section 50 amends AS 29.60.860(b) to resolve a contradiction between the first and second sentences of the subsection. The agency has indicated that the revised wording is consistent with the agency's interpretation of the statute.

Bill section 51 deletes a reference to AS 12.55.185 in AS 33.16.090(c)(1) and replaces it with a reference to AS 12.55.127. The definition referred to in AS 12.55.185 simply directs the reader to the definition in AS 12.55.127, so the change enables the reader to refer to the relevant section directly.

Bill section 52 amends AS 33.30.015 by deleting "on and after August 17, 1999", a phrase setting a date after which the commissioner of corrections may not perform certain actions. Since the date is long past, the phrase is no longer needed.

Bill section 53 amends AS 38.07.030 to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture, since that division is not created in statute and could be changed administratively. See bill section 1.

Bill section 54 amends AS 39.25.110(14) by adding the word "Alaska" before "Oil and Gas Conservation Commission", to conform to the statutory name of that commission created in AS 31.05.005.

Bill section 55 amends AS 41.10.100(b)(6) by substituting a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture. See the full explanation at bill section 1.

Bill section 56 amends AS 44.41.035(b) by inserting "identification" in two places in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 57 amends AS 44.41.035(l) by inserting the word "identification" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 58 amends AS 44.41.035(n) by inserting "identification" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 59 amends AS 44.41.035(p) by inserting "DNA" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 60 amends AS 45.07.309(a) to change "man" to "person" in order to avoid a gender specific reference, and "must" to "shall" since the subsection imposes a duty on a person.

Bill section 61 amends AS 45.10.220(6) to change the phrase "multiplied times" to "multiplied by" to conform to usage elsewhere in the Alaska Statutes.

Bill section 62, without changing the wording of the section, removes the subparagraph designators (A) and (B), making AS 45.14.403(a)(2) a unitary paragraph, rather than a paragraph with subparagraphs. This change is consistent with the Article 4A of the Uniform Commercial Code. It removes an inappropriate break following subparagraph (A) to clarify that the phrase "payment occurs when the credit is withdrawn or, if not withdrawn, at midnight of the day on which the credit is withdrawable and the receiving bank learns of that fact" applies to the material in (A) as well as (B).

Bill section 63 corrects a reference in AS 45.29.313(b) to reflect the content of the corresponding sections of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (secured transactions).

Bill section 64 removes an extraneous "or" from AS 45.29.314(a).

Bill section 65 amends AS 45.50.471(b)(34) to remove AS 08.66.200 - 08.66.250 from a spanned reference, since those sections were repealed in 2002.

Bill section 66 updates a reference to federal law in AS 46.03.450(8). The section cites 49 U.S.C. 1671 et seq.; following revisions to the federal code, those sections no longer exist. However, they formed the basis of the new 49 U.S.C. 60101 et seq., so those sections are cited instead.

Bill section 67 removes an outdated date reference from AS 46.06.090(a).

Bill section 68 removes an outdated date reference from AS 46.06.090(b).

Bill section 69 removes a reference to AS 46.14.170(b) from AS 46.14.170(c); this is a conforming amendment required by the repeal of AS 46.14.170(b). See bill section 88.

Bill section 70 changes a reference in AS 46.14.300(c) from "15 U.S.C. 631" to "15 U.S.C. 632." AS 46.14.300(c) refers to the definition of a "small business concern." 15 U.S.C. 631 is the first section of the federal Small Business Act, but it is a purpose section and does not contain a definition of "small business concern." Criteria for identifying a "small business concern" are listed in 15 U.S.C. 632, and that section is referred to as the source of the definition elsewhere in federal law. See sec. 2, 105 P.L. 135 (Small Business Reauthorization Act of 1997) ("the term 'small business concern' has the meaning given the term in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)").

Bill section 71 changes a reference in AS 46.14.990(24) from "15 U.S.C. 631" to "15 U.S.C. 632." See bill section 70 for further explanation.

Bill section 72 updates a reference in AS 46.15.035(c)(2) from AS 16.05.870 to AS 16.05.871. AS 16.05.870 was repealed and renumbered as AS 41.14.870 by Executive Order No. 107, and that section was in turn repealed and renumbered as AS 16.05.871 in Executive Order No. 114. This section inserts the current cite.

Bill section 73 amends AS 46.15.165(c) by inserting the word "former" before a reference to 43 U.S.C. 270-1 and 270-2, to reflect the 1971 repeal of those sections. The reference is to land for which the patent, deed, or certificate was issued under those sections, so the reference should be retained.

Bill section 74 adds two words to AS 46.30.080 to correct a reference to the name of the advisory board created in AS 46.30.020, consistent with other references to the board in AS 46.30.

Bill section 75 amends AS 47.10.396 to remove the word "nonprofit" in two places to conform to amendments made by ch. 107, SLA 1998 to AS 47.10.392, 47.10.398, and 47.10.399, which now refer to corporations rather than nonprofit corporations.

Bill section 76 adds a subsection to AS 47.14.100 defining the term "adult family member" for purposes of that section. This change is related to the repeal of AS 47.14.295(1). The phrase "adult family member" is not used in AS 47.14.205 - 47.14.295, and has not been since those sections were enacted in 2005. However, the term is also used, without benefit of definition, in AS 47.14.100(e), (f), and (m). It appears that the placement of the definition in AS 47.14.295(1) instead of where it would apply to AS 47.14.100 was a drafting error in ch. 64, SLA 2005. This section relocates the definition to where it is needed. For the repeal of AS 47.14.295(1), see bill section 88.

Bill section 77 removes the term "treatment facility" from AS 47.14.990(12), because that term is not used in AS 47.14. See bill section 27.

Bill sections 78 and 79 amend AS 47.30.660(b) and AS 47.30.662(c) to substitute a generic description for specific references to the division of mental health and developmental disabilities. The department no longer has a division with that name, and the former division's duties have been divided among other divisions.

Bill section 80 expands a citation in AS 47.30.772, enacted in 1984 and amended in 1992, to reflect the 2004 addition of AS 47.30.817 to the AS 47.30 article relating to patient rights.

Bill section 81 updates a spanned reference in AS 47.30.835(b), which now refers to "a determination of legal incapacity under AS 13.26.005 - 13.26.330." Since this section was enacted in 1981, AS 13.25.325 and .330, relating to powers of attorney and disability and incompetence, have been repealed. This bill section removes AS 13.25.325 and .330 from the scope of the spanned reference.

Bill section 82 changes the word "lead" in AS 47.30.838(b) to "led". Although the mistake appeared in the enacting law, the past tense is clearly more appropriate in this context.

Bill section 83 expands a citation in AS 47.30.855 to reflect the 2004 addition of AS 47.30.817 to the AS 47.30 list of patient rights.

Bill section 84 updates a citation in AS 47.80.040(a), deleting "20 U.S.C. 1482", which was repealed in 2000, and inserting "42 U.S.C. 15025", which contains similar provisions. It also deletes the word "planning", since the term "planning council" was used in 20 U.S.C. 1482, but 42 U.S.C. 15025 refers to "councils".

Bill section 85 updates several citations in AS 47.80.090. 42. U.S.C. 6024 and 42 U.S.C. 6022 have been repealed; 40 U.S.C. 15025 and 40 U.S.C. 15024 contain similar provisions. 20 U.S.C. 1483 - 1485 have been omitted from the U.S.C., so the spanned reference has been shortened accordingly. 42 U.S.C. 6000 - 6083 have been repealed and 42 U.S.C. 15001 - 15083 contain similar provisions.

Bill section 86 amends sec. 14, ch. 137, SLA 2002, which contains a delayed amendment to AS 16.43.970(b). The existing delayed amendment would sunset changes made to that section in 2002 effective December 30, 2013. An intervening amendment was made to AS 16.43.970(b) in sec. 16, ch. 42, 2006, adding the words "in the second degree" after "unsworn falsification" to conform to a change in AS 11.56.210 of the designation of that crime. The 2006 Act did not make a conforming change to the delayed amendment. This bill remedies that omission by adding the words "in the second degree" to the text of the delayed amendment scheduled to take effect in 2013. This will have the effect of retaining the intervening amendment. Note that the other changes indicated in the section, including deletion of "vessel interim-use permit, or vessel entry permit" are the changes made by the 2002 sunset provision. The only change being made in this bill is the addition of the words "in the second degree", which is a conforming amendment.

Bill section 87 amends sec. 12, ch. 50, SLA 2005 to remove the repeal of AS 14.25.070(b). AS 14.25.070(b) was enacted in 2005, and relettered as (c) that same year. AS 14.25.070 was repealed and reenacted July 1, 2008 by sec. 3, ch. 13, SLA 2008. This change corrects an oversight in sec. 3, ch. 13, SLA 2008. See bill section 89.

Bill section 88 repeals several sections.

- AS 08.36.246(a)(4)(B) appears to be obsolete since the Central Regional Examining Board does not offer a specialty examination.
- AS 31.05.080(b) was impliedly repealed by the enactment of AS 22.10.020(d), Allen v. Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, 147 P.3d 664, 667 - 668 (Alaska 2006); here, the repeal is made express.
- AS 44.88.180(b) was made obsolete by the 1982 amendment of AS 44.88.180(a), and was removed from the statutes when the changes to AS 44.88.180(a) were made, but was not expressly repealed by ch. 113, SLA 1982.
- AS 46.14.170(b) provides for "a phased schedule for acting on operating permit applications submitted within 12 months following the date on which the federal administrator approves the state program under 42 U.S.C. 7661a(d)". The federal administrator gave the final interim approval of the state program in 1996. See 61

Federal Register 64463-64475 (December 5, 1996). Full approval of the operating permit program was effective November 30, 2001. See 66 Federal Register 63,184 (December 5, 2001). Since well more than 12 months have passed since the federal approval, this subsection has become obsolete.

- AS 46.14.990(13) defines the term "fugitive emissions", which is not found anywhere else in the Alaska statutes. The term was used in the definition of "potential to emit" in AS 46.14.990(21), until that definition was repealed and reenacted in sec. 57, ch. 46, SLA 2003.
- AS 47.14.295(1) defines the phrase "adult family member" for purposes of AS 47.14.205 - 47.14.295, where it is not used. See bill section 76.
- AS 47.14.990(11) defines the phrase "serious offense", which does not appear in the chapter to which AS 47.14.990 applies.
- AS 47.20.390(4) defines the term "health care insurer". That term does not appear elsewhere in AS 47.20.300 - 47.20.390, so the definition is superfluous.
- Secs. 33 and 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, provide for the sunset of several changes to the state's unemployment compensation laws in case the federal law underlying those changes is held to be unconstitutional or is repealed. When these sections were enacted, in the spring of 1977, there was a live controversy about the constitutionality of 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6), as amended in 1976, which, among other things, required states to cover employees of the state and its political subdivisions in order to obtain federal certification of the state program and its concomitant tax and grant benefits. Other states challenged the constitutionality of the federal law, arguing that it constituted an impermissible infringement on state sovereignty under the Tenth Amendment to the federal constitution. In New Hampshire Department of Employment Security v. Marshall, 616 F.2d 240 (1st Cir. 1980), cert. denied 449 U.S. 806 (1980), the court held that the 1976 amendments to the federal unemployment tax act did not impair the sovereignty of New Hampshire. In County of Los Angeles v. Marshall, 631 F.2d 767, 769 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied 449 U.S. 837 (1980), the D.C. circuit adopted the first circuit's reasoning, holding that the "voluntary and wholly optional aspect" of the federal program defeated the argument that there was an "coercion and improper transgression upon the sovereignty of the state shielded by the Tenth Amendment." (emphasis in original). So, when the legislature enacted the changes necessitated by 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6) in 1977, there was an active controversy about whether the 1976 amendment to the federal act was constitutional. By the end of 1980, that controversy had been resolved in favor of the constitutionality of the federal statute, and the Supreme Court had declined to review the issue. However, the provisions of secs. 33 and 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, providing for the return of several sections of the Alaska Statutes to their pre-1977 state, remains. The first paragraph of sec. 34's contingency language appears to be obsolete, given the resolution of the constitutional controversy. The second paragraph, calling for the sunset of the changes to the Alaska statutes in case 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6) is repealed, could conceivably take effect. However, it seems likely that this second paragraph was inserted in the contingency in case the federal government decided to repeal the offending section rather than litigating the issue to its conclusion--which is not what happened. It is not clear that the 1977 legislature meant for the changes to the Alaska statutes to be reversed if the federal statute were repealed for some other reason more than 30 years later. Arguably, then, the entire contingency provision has become obsolete.

Bill section 89 repeals AS 14.25.070(e), which relies on AS 14.20.135, to reflect the repeal of AS 14.20.135 under secs. 12 and 15, ch. 57, SLA 2001, as amended by sec. 6, ch. 15, SLA 2003, and by secs. 10 and 17, ch. 50, SLA 2005.

Bill section 90 conditions the effectiveness of bill section 89 on the repeal of AS 14.20.135.

Bill section 91 repeals sec. 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, which is the effective date for sec. 33, ch. 122, SLA 1977. See bill section 88.

Bill section 92 provides an effective date for sec. 89.

Bill section 93 provides a special effective date for bill section 59, which amends AS 44.41.035(p), since that subsection will not take effect until July 1, 2009. The effective dates of the section and of the change made to the section in this bill should be the same.

Bill section 94 provides an immediate effective date for the bill, except sections 59 and 89.

Please give me a call if you have any questions about the above.

TEXT OF REPEALED PROVISIONS

AS 08.36.246(a)(4)(B):

> (B) pass a specialty examination given by the Central Regional Examining Board;

PROPOSED CHANGES TO THE OPEN MEETINGS ACT TO MAKE IT WORKABLE FOR ADVISORY BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS WHILE PRESERVING THE INTENT AND PURPOSE OF THE ACT

The proposed legislation attempts to solve two typical problems encountered by volunteer advisory boards and commissions when attempting to comply with the Open Meetings Act. The proposed changes make the law more workable while maintaining the intent and purposes of the Act.

1. The first issue arises because some municipal volunteer boards and commissions perform managerial and administrative functions. Examples include both fire and road service area commissioners who are responsible, once the assembly approves the service area budget, to supervise and manage the affairs of the service area. These include decisions concerning when to plow the streets, whether a pothole needs to be fixed, etc. In implementing these duties commissioners are really fulfilling the role of municipal employees.

Current state law exempts most administrative and managerial activities by exempting staff meetings and gatherings. This exemption recognizes that it would be impossible to apply the Act to the everyday transactions of governmental employees confronting day-to-day issues and problems. This exemption, however, does not currently extend to members of governmental bodies that also have administrative and managerial responsibilities. Thus, volunteer boards and commissions that try to supervise and manage the affairs of a governmental entity, like a service area, often find that they must choose between complying with the Act or providing delayed and unresponsive services.

Exempting these boards and commissions only when they meet only to fulfill their administrative and managerial functions allows them to effectively conduct business without harming any of the purposes or intent of the Open Meetings Act. These advisory bodies are still required to comply with the Act whenever they meet to make or discuss legislative or policy decisions, including recommending their annual budget and tax levy, adopting strategic plans, or discussing any other legislative policies.

2. The second issue arises due to an anomaly in state law. Although state law prescribes a minimum number of members necessary to constitute a meeting for policy-making bodies, this exception does not exist for advisory-only bodies. All that is required for a meeting of an advisory body is that the meeting be prearranged. Accordingly, a meeting exists under the Act if only two of a 12 member advisory body decide to meet to discuss to consider the business of the body. In this circumstance the rule for advisory bodies is more stringent than the rule governing actual policy-making bodies. The proposed change removes this anomaly by allowing two members of an advisory board to have a prearranged meeting as long as it does not result in a violation of the "three or a majority" rule applicable to policy-making bodies.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 153(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): HOUSE COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE BY REQUEST

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act exempting municipal service area boards from the requirements of conducting meetings open to the public when a meeting is administrative or managerial in nature; and amending the definition of 'meeting' as it relates to public governmental meetings."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 44.62.310(d) is amended to read:

(d) This section does not apply to

(1) a governmental body performing a judicial or quasi-judicial function when holding a meeting solely to make a decision in an adjudicatory proceeding;

(2) juries;

(3) parole or pardon boards;

(4) meetings of a hospital medical staff;

(5) meetings of the governmental body or any committee of a hospital when holding a meeting solely to act upon matters of professional qualifications, privileges, or discipline;

(6) staff meetings or other gatherings of the employees of a public entity, including meetings of an employee group established by policy of the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska or held while acting in an advisory capacity to the Board of Regents; [OR]

(7) meetings held for the purpose of participating in or attending a gathering of a national, state, or regional organization of which the public entity, governmental body, or member of the governmental body is a member, but only if no action is taken and no business of the governmental body is conducted at the meetings; or

(8) meetings of municipal service area boards established under AS 29.35.450 - 29.35.490 when meeting solely to act on matters that are administrative or managerial in nature.

 Sec. 2. AS 44.62.310(h)(2) is amended to read:

(2) "meeting" means a gathering of members of a governmental body when

(A) more than three members or a majority of the members, whichever is less, are present, a matter upon which the governmental body is empowered to act is considered by the members collectively, and the governmental body has the authority to establish policies or make decisions for a public entity; or

(B) more than three members or a majority of the members, whichever is less, are present, the gathering is prearranged for the purpose of considering a matter upon which the governmental body is empowered to act, and the governmental body has only authority to advise or make recommendations for a public entity but has no authority to establish policies or make decisions for the public entity;

Re: Support for HB 153

Dear Representatives Munoz & Herron:

The Fairbanks North Star Borough (FNSB) appreciates the House Community & Regional Affairs Committee for introducing House Bill 153, which will help make the Open Meetings Act more workable for volunteer advisory boards and commissions while preserving the intent and purpose of the Act.

The Open Meetings Act requires that all meetings of public bodies are open to the public and that the public body must provide reasonable notice of its meetings. The FNSB strongly supports maintaining the essence of the Act which is to protect the public's right to know.

Currently, there are provisions in the open meetings law that exempt meetings of juries, parole boards, staff meetings of public employees, etc. There is no exemption, however, for members of advisory bodies that also have administrative and managerial responsibilities. This is causing hardship to volunteer advisory board members – such as the FNSB's service area commissioners - who often find that they must choose between complying with the Act or providing delayed or unresponsive services. The FNSB supports the provision in HB 153 that would allow a further exemption for volunteer advisory bodies when meeting solely to act on matters that are administrative or managerial in nature, such as calling out snow plows, clearing brush or fixing potholes as needs arise.

With regard to the definition of "meeting" for advisory-only bodies such as the FNSB's service area commissions, the law is currently more stringent than the law governing policy-making bodies. Our service area commissions perform duties that are administrative and managerial in nature, requiring some discussion between commissioners, thus making compliance with current state law difficult to comply with. The FNSB supports the provision in HB 153 that will allow members of an advisory board to meet as long as it does not result in a violation of the "three or a majority" rule applicable to policy-making bodies.

The Fairbanks North Star Borough strongly supports HB 153 in its purpose to amend state law to allow volunteer advisory boards and commissions to effectively conduct business within their areas, while maintaining the basic intent of the Open Meetings Act.

Sincerely,

Jim Whitaker, Mayor

Fairbanks North Star Borough
Assembly Road Service Area Committee

RESOLUTION NO. 2008-C

A RESOLUTON OF THE ASSEMBLY ROAD SERVICE AREA COMMITTEE ASKING THE ASSEMBLY TO REQUEST A STATE LAW CHANGE TO THE OPEN MEETINGS ACT

WHEREAS, there are a variety of rules, regulations, and procedures in Alaska State Law governing the conduct of public meetings, which are intended to ensure that decisions made and actions taken are public knowledge and represent the will of the public that the governing body serves. One of these is the state's Open Meetings Act; and

WHEREAS, the Open Meetings Act requires that all meetings of public bodies are open to the public and that the public body must provide reasonable notice of its meetings. In essence, the Open Meetings Act protects the public's right to know. To accomplish this, the act requires that:

- All deliberations and action taken by a public entity must be done in public view, with limited exceptions;
- The public must be provided prior knowledge of all steps occurring in the decision making process, with limited exceptions; and
- Individual actions of an official are made known.

WHEREAS, in order for these requirements to have full effect, meetings must occur as provided in the notice; and, with few exceptions, the public must be allowed to involve itself in the meeting; the public must also have access to materials being considered during the meeting; and

WHEREAS, with regard to advisory only bodies such as the Fairbanks North Star Borough Road Service Area Commissions, current law dictates that a meeting is:

- a gathering
- of any number of members of the body
- prearranged
- for the purpose of considering any matter upon which the body is empowered to act; and

WHEREAS, Service Area Commissions have management and maintenance duties to perform, requiring some discussion between commissioners thus making compliance with current state law difficult to comply with; and

WHEREAS, exemption from and/or amendments to the following areas of the Act are requested:

- Specify the number of members of an advisory body required for action to constitute a meeting as defined in AS 44.62.310(h)(2)(B);
- Include an exemption in AS 44.62.310(d) when governmental bodies such as Service Area Commissions meet to act on behalf of the borough to supervise and manage the affairs of the service area, to implement policies and programs to protect the safety of the public and preserve the service area's capital assets in a fiscally prudent manner, and other duties considered managerial in nature;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the Fairbanks North Star Borough Assembly Road Service Area Committee requests that a recommendation be made to the Alaska State Legislature by the Fairbanks North Star Borough Assembly to amend state law to change the Open Meetings Act to allow Road Service Area Commissions to effectively conduct business within their areas.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a copy of this resolution shall be forwarded to the Fairbanks North Star Borough Assembly.

Open and effective

Published September 3, 2008

A request by some local road service area commissioners for greater leeway under the state open meetings law seems worthy of consideration. Newspapers usually opine in favor of greater openness in government and tighter rules to make it happen. Strict application of the current law, though, causes nearly impossible problems for the small, volunteer commissions that keep many of our borough roads passable.

Wet summers, such as the one just concluding, can make a mess of the roads, especially those with gravel surfaces. Potholes are unavoidable. Washouts and soft spots are common.

Some of these problems must be fixed rapidly to avoid accidents and damage to vehicles.

Legally, commissioners must discuss and make decisions at quarterly meetings that are open to the public and announced in advance. That's reasonable and advisable.

However, Mother Nature doesn't play by the same rules. Rain clouds don't advertise in the newspaper.

Those clouds can cause damage that requires immediate work. That work may be too expensive to fit within the agreed-upon plan. Commissioners cannot legally talk with each other to reach a consensus about what to do in such situations, though, without holding a public meeting.

The Fairbanks North Star Borough's guidelines for service area commissioners explain the rules: If you need to speak to each other, you have enough business for a public meeting. To discuss work and make decisions about what will be done in the service area outside of a public meeting is a violation of the Open Meetings Act.

Perhaps the problem could be solved by giving the commissions authority to delegate some actions. If not, the law may need some tweaking, because the current situation obviously doesn't provide the kind of flexibility that road service commissions need to do their jobs.

The revisions should be limited in scope, though. Not all road service areas are informal little neighborhood operations. Some spend large amounts of money. For those reasons, their actions should be not only effective but open to public scrutiny.

Open meeting rules hamper Fairbanks area road officials

By Rena Delbridge

Published Tuesday, March 31, 2009

JUNEAU — Road service area commissioners and municipal officials in Fairbanks urged legislators to approve a bill allowing commissioners to bypass open meeting law requirements when making routine decisions.

"Road service commissioners cannot have any discussion amongst themselves. ... without having a public meeting," said Ronald Illingworth, chairman of the 23-Mile Slough Road Service Area near Fairbanks.

Instead, the volunteers are forced to either comply with, ignore or figure ways to circumvent public meetings laws, he said.

"This should not be an acceptable practice," he testified before a legislative committee Monday. "This bill addresses those concerns."

Sen. Gene Therriault, R-North Pole, pre-filed Senate Bill 48 before the session started. Sen. Joe Thomas, D-Fairbanks, is a co-sponsor.

Most of the state's service areas are within the Fairbanks North Star Borough. Anchorage has several.

Therriault said the bill would offer some relief to service area commissioners when they need to consult one another on basic decisions — things like whether to call out a contractor to remove hard-packed snow or to replace a washed-out culvert.

That business is most effectively done with a phone call, an e-mail or a window-to-window chat stopped on the road, he suggested.

But under the Alaska Open Meetings Act, commissioners can't talk to each other, he said. Two or more elected officials talking official business constitutes a meeting.

His bill would offer leeway in carrying out basic tasks, but it would require the boards to conduct regular business, such as making policy and crafting budgets, in public meetings.

"Road service areas are a fact of life in our region," Illingworth said. "the current public meeting law makes it almost impossible to conduct routine business without breaking the law."

A committee of first referral expanded Therriault's plan to exempt a greater range of boards.

"There was some thought that was just too broad," he said.

The Alaska Municipal League supports the bill, director Kathy Wasserman said.

While the league respects the Open Meetings Act, Therriault's measure would "enable business to get done without having to call a meeting to plow a road," she testified.

Renee Broker, an attorney for the Fairbanks North Star Borough, said the measure would fix two "unintended consequences" of the meetings act without diluting public policy goals.

Commissioners, who are generally volunteers, can't keep within the act's bounds while performing day-to-day administrative work, she said.

"If it only takes two to have a gathering, then you've got a meeting," Broker said.

Sen. Bill Wielechowski, D-Anchorage, was hesitant to move fast on the bill.

"This is going to impact much more than just municipal service area boards," he cautioned.

Judiciary chairman Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, said the bill is "something we probably want to ponder, at least overnight," and held the bill for more deliberation. Therriault sits on Judiciary.

Versions passed through the Community and Regional Affairs and the Transportation committees.

(7) whether and to what extent the governmental body has, before or after the lawsuit was filed to void the action, engaged in or attempted to engage in the public reconsideration of matters originally considered in violation of this section;

(8) the degree to which violations of this section were wilful, flagrant, or obvious;

(9) the degree to which the governing body failed to adhere to the policy under AS 44.62.312(a).

(g) Subsection (f) of this section does not apply to a governmental body that has only authority to advise or make recommendations to a public entity and has no authority to establish policies or make decisions for the public entity.

(h) In this section,

(1) "governmental body" means an assembly, council, board, commission, committee, or other similar body of a public entity with the authority to establish policies or make decisions for the public entity or with the authority to advise or make recommendations to the public entity; "governmental body" includes the members of a subcommittee or other subordinate unit of a governmental body if the subordinate unit consists of two or more members;

(2) "meeting" means a gathering of members of a governmental body when

(A) more than three members or a majority of the members, whichever is less, are present, a matter upon which the governmental body is empowered to act is considered by the members collectively, and the governmental body has the authority to establish policies or make decisions for a public entity; or

(B) the gathering is prearranged for the purpose of considering a matter upon which the governmental body is empowered to act and the governmental body has only authority to advise or make recommendations for a public entity but has no authority to establish policies or make decisions for the public entity;

(3) "public entity" means an entity of the state or of a political subdivision of the state including an agency, a board or commission, the University of Alaska, a public authority or corporation, a municipality, a school district, and other governmental units of the state or a political subdivision of the state; it does not include the court system or the legislative branch of state government. (§ 1 art VI (ch 1) ch 143 SLA 1959; am § 1 ch 48 SLA 1966; am § 1 ch 78 SLA 1968; am § 1 ch 7 SLA 1969; am §§ 1, 2 ch 98 SLA 1972; am § 2 ch 100 SLA 1972; am § 1 ch 189 SLA 1976; am §§ 2, 3 ch 54 SLA 1985; am § 2 ch 201 SLA 1990; am § 7 ch 74 SLA 1991; am §§ 2 — 8 ch 69 SLA 1994; am § 7 ch 54 SLA 2000)

Cross references. — For provisions related to meetings of legislative bodies, see AS 24.60.037.

Effect of amendments. — The 2000 amendment, effective May 12, 2000, substituted "posting notice of a meeting on the Alaska Online Public Notice System as required by AS 44.62.175(a)" for "the publication required by AS 44.62.175(a) in the Alaska Administrative Journal" in the third sentence in subsection (e).

Opinions of attorney general. — The mental health lands working group is not a public body covered by the Open Meetings Act, and its meetings are not covered by the Open Meetings Act. That working group was not a formally established entity with a specific charge to take specific action or give specific advice, and the activities of the group were not financed by public money. It consisted of individuals, including state department heads, meeting merely to begin settlement discussions to resolve the legal issues in a lawsuit. January 1, 1992, Op. Att'y Gen.

The notice requirements of the Open Meetings Act require that the Museum Collections Advisory Committee publish a schedule of its fixed monthly meetings twice yearly, stating the date, time, and place of the meetings. For unscheduled meetings, the public may be notified by public service announcements on the radio, as long as there is confidence that the announcements will in fact be made; but regardless of the media used, at least three days notice should be given. December 30, 1992, Op. Att'y Gen.

The present practice of allowing boards and commissions to conduct routine business by mail does not violate the Open Meetings Act. It neither constitutes a meeting, nor is it motivated by an intent to circumvent the Open Meetings Act. Rather, mail voting is expressly authorized by statute. It also furthers sound policy by reducing both administrative costs and administrative burdens. July 5, 1994 Op. Att'y Gen.

AS 44.62.310(a) unambiguously provides for teleconference meetings. AS 44.62.310(e) also requires that all teleconferencing facilities be open to the public and that they be noticed. If undue hardship makes it impossible or impractical for a member to participate from a noticed public teleconferencing site, then the governmental body may allow that member to participate in deliberations and votes of that governmental body by telephone without giving public notice of him or her location. Aug. 21, 1995 Op. Att'y Gen.

Sec. 29.35.410. Extent of powers. Unless otherwise limited by law, a municipality has and may exercise all powers and functions necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the purpose of all powers and functions conferred in this title. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

The city may exercise implied authority in police control where the exigencies of municipal life seem to require more rigid regulation than is required in the state at large. Guidoni v. Wheeler, 230 F. 93 (9th Cir. 1916), decided under former, similar law.

Sec. 29.35.420. Enumeration of powers. A specific example in an enumerated power or function conferred upon a municipality in this title is illustrative of the object and not a limitation on or exclusion from the exercise of the power or function. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985)

Revisor's notes. — In 2008, "A specific example" was substituted for "Specific examples" to correct a manifest grammatical error.

Article 7. Service Areas.

Section
450. Service areas
460. Service area boards
470. Financing
480. Service areas in first class boroughs
490. Service areas in second and third class boroughs

Sec. 29.35.450. Service areas. (a) A service area to provide special services in a borough or unified municipality may be established, operated, altered, or abolished by ordinance, subject to (c) of this section. Special services include services not provided by the unified municipality or a higher or different level of services. Special services include services not provided by a borough on an areawide or nonareawide basis in the borough or a higher or different level of services than that provided on an areawide or nonareawide basis. A borough may include a city in a service area if

(1) the city agrees by ordinance; or

(2) approval is granted by a majority of voters residing in the city, and by a majority of voters residing inside the boundaries of the proposed service area but outside of the city.

(b) A new service area may not be established if, consistent with the purposes of Alaska Const., art. X, the new service can be provided by an existing service area, by annexation to a city, or by incorporation as a city.

(c) If voters reside within a service area that provides road, fire protection, or parks and recreation services, abolishment of the service area is subject to approval by the majority of the voters residing in the service area who vote on the question. A service area that provides road, fire protection, or parks and recreation services in which voters reside may not be abolished and replaced by a larger service area unless that proposal is approved, separately, by a majority of the voters who vote on the question residing in the existing service area and by a majority of the voters who vote on the question residing in the area proposed to be included within the new service area but outside of the existing service area. A service area that provides road, fire protection, or parks and recreation services in which voters reside may not be altered or combined with another service area unless that proposal is approved, separately, by a majority of the voters who vote on the question and who reside in each of the service areas or in the area outside of service areas that is affected by the proposal. This subsection does not apply

(1) to a proposed change to a service area that provides fire protection services that would result in increasing the number of parcels of land in the service area or successor service area if the increase is not more than six percent and would add not more than 1,000 residents;

(2) in a second class borough to abolishment of a road service area or consolidation of two or more road service areas if

(A) taxes have not been levied in the service area for road maintenance or construction during the last 12 months and there is no balance in any account available to pay for these road services for the service area;

(B) during the last 12 months, the service area board has not met with a quorum present and in accordance with law; or

(C) there are no road maintenance contracts in effect for the service area or the existing road maintenance contracts fail to provide for minimum road standards required by law that are necessary to protect the borough from civil liability;

(3) to require approval by the voters residing in a subdivision or parcel proposed to be added to a road service area if roads maintained by the service area provide the only access to the subdivision or parcel or provide access to the subdivision or parcel that is required by the subdivision plat or by other regulation or ordinance;

(4) to a change in the boundaries of a road service area to exclude a subdivision or parcel that does not rely on the use of roads maintained by the service area for the subdivision's or parcel's only access or for access that is required by the subdivision plat or by other regulation or ordinance.

(d) This section applies to a home rule or general law municipality. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985; am §§ 2, 3 ch 31 SLA 2001; am § 1 ch 29 SLA 2005; am § 1 ch 21 SLA 2007)

Effect of amendments. — The 2005 amendment, effective May 27, 2005, in subsection (c) added the last sentence in the introductory language, added paragraphs (1) — (3), and made stylistic changes.

The 2007 amendment, effective September 4, 2007, inserted the paragraph (c)(1) and (c)(2) designations, making related changes, and added paragraphs (c)(3) and (c)(4).

Opinions of attorney general. — While local emergency planning districts may have the same geographical boundaries as service areas, the districts and the LEPCs cannot take the form of service areas. May 29, 1992 Op. Att'y Gen.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

AS 29.05.021(b) is not in conflict with either subsection (b) or Alaska Const., art X, § 5; rather subsection (b), which follows the language of the Alaska Consitution is a limitation on the creation of new service areas and in contrast, AS 29.05.021(b) is a limitation on the incorporation of cities. Keane v. Local Boundary Comm'n, 893 P.2d 1239 (Alaska 1995).

Expansion of service area. — A municipality had the authority under its charter and ordinances to expand a police service area to include an area without a separate vote of that area's residents. Area G Home & Landowners Org., Inc. v. Anchorage, 927 P.2d 728 (Alaska 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1211, 117 S. Ct. 1694, 137 L. Ed. 2d 821 (1997).

Preference for incorporation of cities. — It is reasonable to interpret subsection (b) and Alaska Const., art. X, § 5 as preferring incorporation of a city over the creation of new service areas. Keane v. Local Boundary Comm'n, 893 P.2d 1239 (Alaska 1995).

service areas. The governing board changed from elected to appointed, which was an alteration in the administration of the service area, and the ordinance consolidated four service areas into one, which allowed the same powers to be exercised within the same areas. North Kenai Peninsula Rd. Maintenance Serv. Area v. Kenai Peninsula Borough, 850 P.2d 636 (Alaska 1993).

Sec. 29.35.460. Service area boards. The assembly may provide for an appointed or elected board to supervise the furnishing of special services in a service area. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985)

Sec. 29.35.470. Financing. (a) The assembly may levy or authorize the levying of taxes, charges, or assessments in a service area to finance the special services. If the assembly authorizes the levying of taxes, charges, or assessments, the rate of taxation and the issuance of bonds are subject to assembly approval.

(b) The assembly may by ordinance establish, alter, and abolish differential tax zones within a service area to provide and levy property taxes for a different level of services than that provided generally in the service area. Taxes levied within a differential tax zone that exceed the amount that would have otherwise been levied may only be used for the services provided in that zone. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985; am § 4 ch 31 SLA 2001)

Sec. 29.35.480. Service areas in first class boroughs. In a first class borough, the assembly may exercise in a service area any power granted a first class city by law. The assembly may exercise in a service area any nonareawide power that may be exercised by a first class borough. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985)

Sec. 29.35.490. Service areas in second and third class boroughs. (a) A second class borough may exercise in a service area any power granted a first class city by law or a nonareawide power that may be exercised by a first class borough if

(1) the exercise of the power is approved by a majority of the voters residing in the service area; or

(2) all owners of real property in the service area consent in writing to the exercise of the power if no voters reside in the service area.

(b) If the exercise of the power is approved by a majority of the voters residing in the service area, a third class borough may exercise in a service area any power not otherwise prohibited by law.

(c) A second or third class borough may establish a service area that includes only vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved land owned by the borough. A second or third class borough may establish a service area, with the concurrence of the commissioner of natural resources, that includes only vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved land owned by the state and classified for disposal to individuals. By ordinance a second or third class borough may provide the services in a service area established under this subsection necessary to develop state or municipal land as required by the planning, platting, and land use regulations of the borough. (§ 10 ch 74 SLA 1985)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

When voter approval not required. — Where a mayor and assembly are exercising the same powers within the same geographical area and are subject to the same constraints with respect to approval and appropriation that existed before the alteration, voter approval of an ordinance is not required. 14.02.010 Establishment of service area district councils.

There is hereby established six service area district councils with the geographic boundaries as shown on the map entitled "Service Area District Council Geographical Boundaries" in the clerk's office and further described as follows:

A. District 1 – Salcha. Commencing at the confluence of the Chena River flood control levee and the north bank of the Tanana River; thence northeasterly along the flood control levee to the Chena River; thence generally easterly along the center of the Chena River to the confluence with the east fork of the Chena River (also known as the middle fork); thence easterly along the center of the east fork of the Chena River to where its headwaters meet with the Fairbanks North Star Borough boundary; thence easterly along the FNSB boundary for approximately 25 miles until the boundary turns to the south; thence continuing to follow the FNSB boundary generally south for approximately 32 miles until the boundary turns to the west, which forms the southern FNSB boundary; thence continuing to follow the southern FNSB boundary generally west for approximately 70 miles to its intersection with the Tanana River; thence generally north-northwesterly along the north bank of the Tanana River for approximately 45 miles to the intersection with the Chena flood control levee and the point of beginning for this description.

B. District 2 – Badger. Commencing at the confluence of the Chena River flood control levee and the north bank of the Tanana River; thence northeasterly along the flood control levee to the Chena River; thence generally northwesterly along the center of the Chena River to its intersection with the section line between Sections 10 and 11, T1S, R2E; thence north along the eastern section line of Sections 10 and 3, T1S, R2E to the northeast corner of Section 3, T1S, R2E and the Fairbanks base line; thence west along the Fairbanks base line 6.5 miles to the intersection with the eastern boundary of the city of Fairbanks; thence generally southerly along the city of Fairbanks boundary to the intersection with the north bank of the Tanana River; thence generally east-southeast along the north bank of the Tanana River to the confluence of the Chena River flood control levee and the north bank of the Tanana River and the point of beginning for this description.

C. District 3 – Chena Hot Springs Road. Commencing at intersection of the Steese Highway and the Fairbanks base line, which coincides, with the northern boundary of the city limits of the city of Fairbanks; thence generally east along the northern Fairbanks city limits, through Section 36, T1N, R1W, and Sections 31, 32, and 33, T1N, R1E to Section 34, T1N, R1E; thence east along the north section line of Section 34 approximately 0.5 mile; thence south along the east boundary of the city of Fairbanks to the intersection with the Fairbanks base line; thence east along the Fairbanks base line 6.5 miles to the northeast corner of Section 3, T1S, R2E; thence south along the eastern section line of Sections 3 and 10, T1S, R2E to the intersection with the Chena River; thence generally easterly along the center of the Chena River to the confluence with the east fork of the Chena River (also known as the middle fork); thence easterly along the center of the east fork of the Chena River to where its headwaters meet with the Fairbanks North Star Borough boundary; thence generally west-northwest along the FNSB boundary for approximately 68 miles to an intersection with a ridgeline that separates the Chena River drainage from the Chatanika River drainage, located in the northwest quarter of Section 9, T5N, R8E; thence generally west along a ridgeline that separates the Chena River drainage from the Chatanika River drainage for a distance of approximately 35 miles to the intersection of the ridgeline with the corner of Sections 9, 10, 15, and 16, T3N, R3E; thence south along the eastern section line of Sections 16, 21, 28, and 33, T3N, R3E and Section 4, T2N, R3E to the southeast corner of Section 4; thence west along the southern section line of Sections 4 and 5, T2N, R3E to the southwest corner of Section 5; thence south along the eastern section lines of Sections 7, 18, 19 and 30, T2N, R3E to the southeast corner of Section 30; thence west along the southern section lines of Section 30, T2N, R3E and continuing along the southern section lines of Sections 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, T2N, R2E, and continuing along southern section lines of Sections 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29, T2N, R1E to the intersection with the Steese Highway; thence generally south along the centerline of the Steese Highway to the intersection of the Steese Highway and the Fairbanks base line and the point of beginning of this description.

D. District 4 – Farmer's Loop. Commencing at intersection of the Steese Highway and the Fairbanks base line, which coincides with the northern boundary of the city limits of the city of Fairbanks; thence generally north along the centerline of the Steese Highway to the intersection with Goldstream Road; thence west along the centerline of Goldstream Road to the crossing of Goldstream Creek; thence generally west along the center of Goldstream Creek to the intersection with the western section line of Section 24, T1N, R2W; thence south along the western section lines of Sections 24, 25, and 36, T1N, R2W to the intersection with Sheep Creek Road; thence generally east along the centerline of Sheep Creek Road to the intersection with Tanana Farm Road; thence continuing generally east along the centerline of Tanana Farm Road to the intersection with Tanana Loop Road; thence east along the centerline of Tanana Loop Road as it continues generally east, then turns north, continuing to the intersection with North Tanana Drive; thence east along North Tanana Drive to the intersection with the north section line of Section 6, T1S, R1W; thence east along the north section line of Sections 6 and 5, T1S, R1W to the intersection with College Road; thence east along the centerline of College Road until it coincides with the northern boundary of the city of Fairbanks; thence generally east along the north boundary of the city of Fairbanks to the intersection with the Steese Highway and the point of beginning of this description.

E. District 5 – North Borough. Commencing at the intersection of the Steese Highway and Goldstream Road; thence west along the centerline of Goldstream Road to the crossing of Goldstream Creek; thence generally west along the center of Goldstream Creek to the intersection with the western section line of Section 24, T1N, R2W; thence south along the western section lines of Sections 24, 25, and 36, T1N, R2W to the intersection with Sheep Creek Road; thence generally southeast along the centerline of Sheep Creek Road to the intersection with the Fairbanks base line; thence west along the Fairbanks base line approximately 23 miles to the western FNSB boundary; thence north along the western FNSB boundary to the northwest corner of the FNSB; thence generally east along northern FNSB boundary to the intersection with the Steese Highway; thence generally south along the

(Ord. 2004-69 § 2, 2004)

14.02.020 Service area district council membership and representation.

The chairperson of each service area located within the district council geographic boundaries shall appoint one of the service area's commissioners to serve on the district council who will then serve at the pleasure of the appointing service area commission. The chair of a service area may appoint a representative from their road service area who is not a member of the commission to represent that service area on the district council. There shall be no quorum requirements. (Ord. 2008-11 § 3, 2008; Ord. 2004-69 § 2, 2004)

14.02.030 Assembly road service area committee membership.

A member of each service area district council shall be appointed to serve on the assembly road service area committee. Each district council shall select a member of their district council to serve on the assembly road service area committee at the first district council meeting. If necessary, the chair of the district council may appoint a representative who is not a member of the council, if no member of the council is willing to serve on the assembly road service area committee. The selected member shall serve at the pleasure of the appointing district council. (Ord. 2004-69 § 2, 2004)

14.02.040 Powers and duties.

A. The assembly road service area committee shall have the following powers and duties:

1. The committee shall establish priorities and recommend allocation of service area matching grant funds to qualified road service areas. The allocations to road service areas shall be made in compliance with a matrix and scoring system process annually approved by the committee with notice to the assembly. Assembly consent shall be considered given if not vetoed within 60 days of the notice.

2. Funds allocated by the committee pursuant to the service area matching grant program shall require a 10 percent match from the service area. Funds borrowed from the road service revolving loan fund may be used for the required match.

3. To make recommendations to the assembly concerning road service area issues including ordinances and resolutions.

B. Each service area district council shall have the following powers and duties:

1. To examine and make recommendations to the mayor and assembly concerning necessary upgrade and maintenance needs within the district including a prioritization of those needs.

2. To examine and consider available cost-savings within the district through the combined use of contractors or other use of their collective purchasing power.

3. To make recommendations to the mayor and the assembly concerning needed changes or other solutions to problems experienced by service areas within the district.

4. To coordinate and facilitate communication within the service areas in the district and between the service areas and the mayor and assembly.

5. To communicate with other councils. (Ord. 2007-39 § 2, 2007; Ord. 2004-69 § 2, 2004)

14.02.050 Procedures and miscellaneous matters.

A. Chapter 2.21 FNSBC, Boards and Commissions, shall govern the service area district councils, except to the extent it may conflict with the requirements of this chapter. Each district council should hold meetings on at least a quarterly basis or, if meetings are held less regularly, agree upon a means through which their assembly road service committee member can provide the district council with written updates, a copy of which must be filed with the clerk's office.

B. The presiding officer, mayor and chair of the assembly road service area committee shall jointly schedule and hold an annual meeting each year with all service area commissioners to discuss service area concerns and provide necessary training. All assembly members and road service area committee members shall be invited to attend and participate in this informal meeting. (Ord. 2008-11 § 4, 2008; Ord. 2004-69 § 2, 2004)

REPRESENTATIVE MIKE CHENAULT
SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

SPONSOR STATEMENT
House Bill 170: "An Act repealing the authority for day fines."

House Bill 170 repeals the authority established for day fines. The legislation establishing day fines for certain misdemeanor offenses, House Bill 119, was passed into law in 1994 and became effective July 1, 1994.

One of the provisions in the legislation was for the Court System to adopt a day fine plan. As required by the bill, the Supreme Court created a committee to establish a fine schedule based on the guidelines of House Bill 119. The committee found several problems in adopting a day fine plan and requested the legislature to introduce a bill to solve those problems. Senate Bill 167 was introduced in 1995 but did not get out of the Senate. Without the changes requested by the Supreme Court, the court did not implement the provisions of House Bill 119.

According to the Court System, "some of the technical issues identified by the committee included concerns over which misdemeanors were included and excluded, significant time delays associated with judges making written findings, problems in determining defendant income, conflicts with ordering substance abuse treatment and concerns over he levels of fines imposed and the time allowed to pay them."

The committee also expressed concerns that the bill would not accomplish what the sponsor had intended. The sponsor statement stated the intent of the legislation was to improve fine collection and reduce the number of misdemeanor offenders who were sentenced to jail. The committee believed that because the misdemeanors that were excluded from the day fine provisions and because of the technical problems identified by the committee, the sponsor's goals would not be met.

Since these statutes are not in use and will not be used by the courts, I propose that we repeal the statutes that impose a day fine plan rather than keeping these statutes in the books.

House Bill 170 repeals the statutory provisions related to day fines and the court's authority to impose them. Because of problems with the original bill that authorized day fines, they have never been imposed. Because of this, passage of HB 170 will not have a fiscal impact on the court system.

The Honorable Robin Taylor
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
State Capitol - Room 30
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Taylor:

The 1994 Alaska Legislature passed a law that authorizes courts to impose day fines for certain misdemeanor offenses. The legislation went into effect July 1, 1994.

The day fine law directs the Alaska Supreme Court to adopt a "day fine plan." In June 1994, Chief Justice Daniel A. Moore appointed a committee of six judges and five representatives of other agencies to develop this plan. The committee met once a month from September through December and presented a plan to the supreme court on December 22.

In the course of developing the day fines plan, certain problems became apparent. Some of these problems could be rectified by simple amendments to the original day fines legislation. However, other problems are more fundamental. SB 167 addresses the more technical difficulties. This legislation does not address the fundamental problems, which are discussed in Part II below.

I. Technical Problems With Day Fines Law.

A. Classification of Misdemeanors.

AS 12.55.036(b)(1) requires the supreme court to adopt a day fines plan that includes "an assessment of the gravity of all misdemeanor offenses, which assessment must include the existence of prior offenses . . . ." It would take months to compile a comprehensive list of all the misdemeanor offenses in the Alaska Statutes and such a list would include many relatively obscure offenses that are never charged. The Day Fines Committee only ranked offenses that were charged ten or more times since January 1, 1990 and offenses for which a fine or imprisonment was imposed in FY 94. The committee also could not think of a simple way to make the ranking of offenses reflect the existence of prior offenses. Instead, the committee decided to treat prior offenses as an aggravating factor.

The committee has recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(1) be amended to require that the day fines plan include an assessment of common misdemeanor offenses and to delete the requirement that the assessment reflect the existence of prior offenses. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

B. Written Findings.

AS 12.55.036(c)(2) requires that the judge make written findings of the facts considered in determining the existence of aggravating and mitigating factors and in determining the defendant's income. Given the volume of misdemeanor sentencings in some court locations, it is not feasible for judges to make written findings in these cases. Therefore, the Day Fines Committee has recommended that the legislature eliminate AS 12.55.036(c)(2). This proposal is contained in section 3 of SB 167.

C. Felony Aggravators and Mitigators.

AS 12.55.036(b)(3) authorizes the court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalty for an offense if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor under AS 12.55.155(c) or a mitigating factor under AS 12.55.155(d). AS 12.55.155 lists the aggravating and mitigating factors that apply in felony cases. Because of the volume of misdemeanor cases, it is not feasible for judges to review the lists of felony aggravators and mitigators each time a defendant is sentenced. In addition, some of these factors are not applicable to the offenses for which a day fine may be imposed. In the proposed day fine plan, the Day Fines Committee recommended that a shorter, more general list be adopted that would be easier for judges to use. The committee recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(3) be amended to eliminate the references to AS 12.55.155. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

D. Set Aside of Convictions.

Many first and second misdemeanor offenders currently receive SISs and suspended sentences which are significantly less severe than the sentences they would receive under the proposed day fines plan. In order to increase the attractiveness of day fines in such cases, the Day Fines Committee recommended that courts be allowed to set aside convictions in appropriate cases upon payment of a day fine. Another benefit of this change in the law is that the possibility of eliminating the conviction from the defendant's record might increase the likelihood of payment. This proposal is contained in section 6 of SB 167.

E. Net Income Versus Gross Income.

AS 12.55.036(b)(4) requires the court to use the defendant's gross income to calculate the defendant's net daily income for purposes of day fines. However, unless they are carrying their pay stubs, people generally know only the amount of their take home pay. The Day Fines Committee recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(4) be revised so that the method of calculating net daily income is based on a defendant's net income after taxes instead of gross income. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

F. Additional Time to Pay.

AS 12.55.036(d) states that the court may permit day fines to be paid in installments over time, provided the entire fine is paid within 180 days. The Day Fines Committee recommends that the legislature amend AS 12.55.036(d) to allow courts to give defendants up to one year to pay. The committee believes that additional time is needed to allow for seasonal variations in income. In addition, the projected fine amounts are high enough that some defendants will not have enough discretionary income to pay their fine in full within a six-month period. This proposal is contained in section 4 of SB 167.

G. Access to Employment Information.

The Day Fines Committee recommended that the legislature amend AS 23.20.110 to authorize the Department of Labor to give the Department of Law Collections Unit access to confidential employment information (to the extent permitted by federal law). The purpose of this change is to improve collections by making it easier for the Department of Law to locate a defendant's places of employment. This proposal is contained in sections 7, 8, and 9 of SB 167.

H. Treatment.

The Day Fines Committee is concerned that day fines may not be used in cases involving alcohol or drugs because a day fine cannot be combined with an order for treatment. AS 12.55.015 lists the sentences judges can impose as direct court orders. This statute only authorizes the court to order treatment for defendants who are incarcerated. Therefore, the only way a judge can order treatment outside of prison is if a specific statute authorizes it (which very few do) or as a condition of probation. Since day fines cannot be combined with probation, judges will be unlikely to impose day fines when they believe treatment is necessary. The Day Fines Committee has recommended that the day fines law be amended to allow the court to enter a direct court order requiring a defendant who receives a day fine to participate in a treatment program related to the defendant's offense. This proposal is contained in section 1 of SB 167.

I. Biennial Reports.

AS 12.55.036(f) requires the court system to evaluate the use and effectiveness of day fines and report every two years to the legislature. This section specifies what the report must contain. The Day Fines Committee does not believe that certain information listed in this section can be collected given the current state of the various justice agencies' information systems. The committee has recommended that the Alaska Supreme Court invite the Alaska Judicial Council to work with the court system to develop appropriate evaluation criteria (given available information systems) and to design the information collection procedures necessary to make the reports to the legislature. To accommodate this, SB 167 amends AS 12.55.036(f) to reflect the fact that it is not yet possible to provide information on recidivism. This proposal is contained in section 5.

II. Fundamental Problems with Day Fines Law.

Now I would like to discuss the more fundamental problems that are not addressed in the attached bill.

The first problem relates to the legislature's intent in passing the law. In her March 10, 1993 memorandum transmitting the bill, Representative Fran Ulmer stated that the intent of the legislation was to decrease the number of misdemeanor offenders who are sent to jail and to increase fine collection rates. The day fines legislation as enacted will not achieve either of these objectives.

In the course of its work, the Day Fines Committee determined that the day fines law excludes most of the misdemeanors for which people are currently sentenced to jail. Therefore, the law will not result in a meaningful decrease in the jail population as the legislature intended.

Increased fine collection is also unlikely. Under the new law, a day fine is only one of several sentencing options available to a judge. A judge will not select this option unless the judge believes the fine will be collected. In reviewing the State's collection practices, the Day Fines Committee discovered that current fine collection rates are low. The day fines program will not be widely used - or increase fine revenues - unless the Department of Law receives additional collection tools and resources. (The Department of Law's Collections Unit is funded solely through program receipts.) An example of a new tool would be to make payment of fines a condition for state licenses. The Day Fines Committee recommended that the legislature consider prohibiting the issuance or renewal of state licenses and permits to persons who have unpaid fines and other obligations to the state.

A second fundamental concern pertains to the fine amounts that result from the day fines formula. In order to avoid separation of powers questions, the legislature specified in the statute the unit scale and general formula for computing day fines. This scale would have resulted in inappropriately high fine amounts for the misdemeanors that the legislature included in the day fines program. Even though the Day Fines Committee reduced the scale as much as they thought possible - from a maximum of 365 units to a maximum of 45 units - the formula still results in very high fine amounts for all but the poorest offenders. The supreme court is reluctant to proceed without further legislative review of the fines that would result under the formula prescribed in the law.

A third fundamental concern pertains to one of the largest categories of misdemeanors - fish and game offenses. After much deliberation, the Day Fines Committee excluded these offenses from its day fines plan. Unlike criminal law, which has a relatively clear statutory framework as a result of the classification system that went into effect in 1980, fish and game has no clear sentencing structure. Title 5 includes numerous penalty provisions and it is not always obvious which ones apply to particular offenses. In addition, because offense definitions overlap, the same conduct can be charged under different statutes and regulations, with different consequences. The committee was ultimately unwilling to impose another layer of complexity in this area until the underlying statutory and regulatory problems are resolved. Instead, the committee recommended that the legislature appoint a special legislative committee or an interagency group to assess and restructure fish and game penalty provisions and definitions of offenses.

III. Conclusion.

The attached bill addresses the problems described in Part I above. It does not address the Day Fines Committee's - and the supreme court's - more fundamental concerns discussed in Part II. Both the court and the committee question whether it is wise to proceed without addressing these concerns. It will require a significant commitment of resources in order to implement the day fines program. Without significant changes, the law is unlikely to result in the savings or the revenues that the legislature originally expected.

Sincerely,

Arthur H. Snowden, II
Administrative Director

SENATE BILL NO. 167

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

NINETEENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE BY REQUEST

Introduced: 4/25/95
Referred: JUD. FIN

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to day fines in certain criminal cases and release of employment information for use in the collection of criminal judgments."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 12.55.036(a) is amended to read:

(a) Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, other than a violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.56.740, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a day fine as authorized by this section. If a day fine is imposed under this section, the defendant may not be sentenced to pay a fine under AS 12.55.035, serve a term of imprisonment, or be placed on probation. However, the court may order a defendant to participate in or comply with a screening, evaluation, or treatment program related to the defendant's offense.

* Sec. 2. AS 12.55.036(b) is amended to read:

(b) The Alaska Supreme Court shall adopt a day fine plan that includes

(1) an assessment of the gravity of common [ALL] misdemeanor offenses [, WHICH ASSESSMENT MUST INCLUDE THE EXISTENCE OF PRIOR OFFENSES,] and the assignment of presumptive penalties to them in day fine units within the following ranges:

(A) for class A and unclassified misdemeanors, not to exceed 365-day fine units;

(B) for class B misdemeanors, not to exceed 90-day fine units;

(2) a schedule of the presumptive day fine penalties;

(3) procedures for a court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalties if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor [UNDER AS 12.55.155(c)] or a mitigating factor [UNDER AS 12.55.155(d)];

(4) a table for the conversion of a defendant's actual, potential, or estimated net [GROSS] income after taxes, less one-third for a defendant above the federal poverty guideline as determined by the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and less one-half for a defendant below the federal poverty guideline into net daily income amounts; the table must include adjustments for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant;

(5) procedures for a court to gather information about the defendant's occupation, actual, estimated, and potential income, number of dependents, and other facts necessary or relevant to sentencing a person to a day fine; a court may order the production of the financial or other records of a person it determines to be relevant to a determination under this section; the procedures must include a requirement that the facts shall be received

(A) under oath so that the defendant is subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.200; or

(B) in a writing or recording that bears notice that false statements made in it are punishable under AS 11.56.210; and

(6) other information the court determines to be necessary for implementing the day fine plan.

* Sec. 3. AS 12.55.036(c) is amended to read:

(c) The amount of a day fine shall be the product of the net daily income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant, times the day fine penalty. When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court shall

[(1)] state on the record the

(1) [(A)] presumptive day fine penalty for the offense, and whether the court is adjusting the presumptive day fine penalty for the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors;

(2) [(B)] net daily income of the income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant; and

(3) [(C)] amount of the day fine [;

(2) MAKE WRITTEN FINDINGS OF THE FACTS CONSIDERED IN

(A) FINDING THE EXISTENCE OF AGGRAVATING OR MITIGATING FACTORS AND IN ASSIGNING A VALUE TO THOSE FACTORS; AND

(B) DETERMINING THE DEFENDANT'S GROSS AND DAILY NET INCOMES].

* Sec. 4. AS 12.55.036(d) is amended to read:

(d) When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court may permit the payment of the day fine in specified installments or within a certain period of time, provided the entire day fine is paid within one year [180 DAYS] of imposition.

* Sec. 5. AS 12.55.036(f) is amended to read:

(f) The Alaska Court System shall evaluate and report every two years to the legislature not later than February 1 on the use of day fines and their effectiveness. The report must include

(1) a comparison of the number of defendants receiving a day fine as a sentence with the number of other defendants, eligible to receive a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(2) to the extent that recidivism information is available, a comparison of the recidivism rates between defendants receiving a day fine with other defendants,

(A) eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence; and

(B) not eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(3) the potential savings to the state from the number of defendants who are eligible to receive a sentence of imprisonment, and who receive a day fine, assuming those defendants would have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment;

(4) the amount of day fines collected, the success rate of collections, and the number of cases requiring civil process to collect the day fine; and

(5) recommendations concerning expansion or restriction of the use of day fines, including proposals for legislation.

* Sec. 6. AS 12.55.036 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(h) When there are mitigating circumstances, when the ends of justice will be served, and when the good conduct and reform of the defendant warrant it, the court may upon payment of the entire day fine within the time specified by the court set aside the conviction and issue to the defendant a certificate to that effect.

* Sec. 7. AS 23.20.110(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in (h), [AND] (i), and (l) of this section, the department shall hold information obtained from an employing unit or individual in the course of administering this chapter and determinations as to the benefit rights of an individual confidential and may not disclose them or open them to public inspection in a manner that [WHICH] reveals the identity of the individual or employing unit. A claimant or the legal representative of the claimant is entitled to information from the records of the department to the extent necessary for the proper presentation of the claim in a proceeding under this chapter. Subject to restrictions that [WHICH] the department prescribes by regulation, the information may be made available to an agency of this state or another state or federal agency charged with the administration of an unemployment compensation law or the maintenance of a system of public employment offices, or, for the purposes of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, to the Internal Revenue Service of the United States, or, for tax purposes, to the Department of Revenue. Information obtained in connection with the administration of the employment service may be made available to persons or agencies for purposes appropriate to the operation of a public employment service.

* Sec. 8. AS 23.20.110(j) is amended to read:

(j) Notwithstanding (h), [OR] (i), or (l) of this section, the department may not release information to an administrator under (h) of this section, [OR] on an employer's hiring practices under (i) of this section, or to the Department of Law as provided under (l) of this section if the United States Secretary of Labor rules that release of the information would be grounds to find that the state is in substantial noncompliance with 42 U.S.C. 503(a).

* Sec. 9. AS 23.20.110 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(l) The department shall make information obtained from an employing unit or an individual available on request to the Department of Law to assist the Department of Law in the collection of criminal judgments.

SENATE CS FOR CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 119(FIN)
"An Act authorizing a sentencing court to impose a sentence of a day fine instead of a sentence of imprisonment on a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor; directing the Alaska Supreme Court to develop and implement a day fine plan; requiring the Alaska Court System to report to the legislature on the use of day fines; amending Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 32; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 12.55.015(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as limited by AS 12.55.125 - 12.55.175, the court, in imposing sentence on a defendant convicted of an offense, may singly or in combination

(1) impose a

(A) fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.035; or

(B) a day fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.036, if the court does not impose a term of periodic or continuous imprisonment or place the defendant on probation;

(2) order the defendant to be placed on probation under conditions specified by the court that may include provision for active supervision;

(3) impose a definite term of periodic imprisonment;

(4) impose a definite term of continuous imprisonment;

(5) order the defendant to make restitution under AS 12.55.045;

(6) order the defendant to carry out a continuous or periodic program of community work under AS 12.55.055;

(7) suspend execution of all or a portion of the sentence imposed under AS 12.55.080;

(8) suspend imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085;

(9) order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of an offense described in AS 11.41, AS 11.46, AS 11.56, or AS 11.61;

(10) order the defendant, while incarcerated, to participate in or comply with the treatment plan of a rehabilitation program that is related to the defendant's offense or to the defendant's rehabilitation [,] if the program is made available to the defendant by the Department of Corrections.

* Sec. 2. AS 12.55.035(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon [UPON] conviction of an offense, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a fine as authorized in this section or as otherwise authorized by law.

* Sec. 3. AS 12.55.035(b) is amended to read:

(b) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon [UPON] conviction of an offense, a defendant who is not an organization may be sentenced to pay, unless otherwise specified in the provision of law defining the offense, a fine of no more than

(1) $75,000 for murder in the first or second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, kidnapping, or misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree;

(2) $50,000 for a class A, B, or C felony;

(3) $5,000 for a class A misdemeanor;

(4) $1,000 for a class B misdemeanor;

(5) $300 for a violation.

* Sec. 4. AS 12.55.035(c) is amended to read:

(c) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon [UPON] conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of

(1) an amount that is

(A) $500,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;

(B) $200,000 for a class A misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(C) $25,000 for a class B misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(D) $10,000 for a violation;

(2) two times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant as a result of the offense; or

(3) two times the pecuniary damage or loss caused by the defendant to another, or to the property of another, as a result of the offense.

* Sec. 5. AS 12.55 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.55.036. DAY FINES. (a) Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, other than a violation of AS 11.41 and 11.56.740, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a day fine as authorized by this section. If a day fine is imposed under this section, the defendant may not be sentenced to pay a fine under AS 12.55.035, serve a term of imprisonment, or be placed on probation.

(b) The Alaska Supreme Court shall adopt a day fine plan that includes

(1) an assessment of the gravity of all misdemeanor offenses, which assessment must include the existence of prior offenses, and the assignment of presumptive penalties to them in day fine units within the following ranges:

(A) for class A and unclassified misdemeanors, not to exceed 365-day fine units;

(B) for class B misdemeanors, not to exceed 90-day fine units;

(2) a schedule of the presumptive day fine penalties;

(3) procedures for a court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalties if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor under AS 12.55.155(c) or a mitigating factor under AS 12.55.155(d);

(4) a table for the conversion of a defendant's actual, potential, or estimated gross income, less one-third for a defendant above the federal poverty guideline as determined by the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and less one-half for a defendant below the federal poverty guideline into net daily income amounts; the table must include adjustments for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant;

(5) procedures for a court to gather information about the defendant's occupation, actual, estimated, and potential income, number of dependents, and other facts necessary or relevant to sentencing a person to a day fine; a court may order the production of the financial or other records of a person it determines to be relevant to a determination under this section; the procedures must include a requirement that the facts shall be received

(A) under oath so that the defendant is subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.200; or

(B) in a writing or recording that bears notice that false statements made in it are punishable under AS 11.56.210; and

(6) other information the court determines to be necessary for implementing the day fine plan.

(c) The amount of a day fine shall be the product of the net daily income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant, times the day fine penalty. When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court shall

(1) state on the record the

(A) presumptive day fine penalty for the offense, and whether the court is adjusting the presumptive day fine penalty for the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors;

(B) net daily income of the income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant; and

(C) amount of the day fine;

(2) make written findings of the facts considered in

(A) finding the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors and in assigning a value to those factors; and

(B) determining the defendant's gross and daily net incomes.

(d) When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court may permit the payment of the day fine in specified installments or within a certain period of time, provided the entire day fine is paid within 180 days of imposition.

(e) A sentence imposing a day fine shall be considered a civil judgment for the day fine. The Department of Law shall enforce the judgment and may utilize any procedure available for the enforcement of civil judgments. If the Department of Law uses the civil process of the court to enforce or collect a day fine, the department shall be awarded costs and attorney fees.

(f) The Alaska Court System shall evaluate and report every two years to the legislature not later than February 1 on the use of day fines and their effectiveness. The report must include

(1) a comparison of the number of defendants receiving a day fine as a sentence with the number of other defendants, eligible to receive a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(2) a comparison of the recidivism rates between defendants receiving a day fine with other defendants,

(A) eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence; and

(B) not eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(3) the potential savings to the state from the number of defendants, who are eligible to receive a sentence of imprisonment, and who receive a day fine, assuming those defendants would have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment;

(4) the amount of day fines collected, the success rate of collections, and the number of cases requiring civil process to collect the day fine; and

(5) recommendations concerning expansion or restriction of the use of day fines, including proposals for legislation.

(g) Money collected under this section shall be deposited into the general fund and separately accounted for under AS 37.05.142. The annual estimated balance in the account maintained under AS 37.05.142 for day fines collected under this section may be appropriated by the legislature as follows: (1) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault; (2) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Violent Crimes Compensation Board; and (3) the balance for any lawful purpose. Nothing in this subsection creates a dedicated fund.

* Sec. 6. CHANGE OF CRIMINAL RULE. AS 12.55.036, added by sec. 5 of this Act, has the effect of modifying the sentencing provisions of Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure 32, by establishing procedures for imposition of sentences of day fines.

* Sec. 7. AS 12.55.036(f), as enacted by sec. 5 of this Act, is repealed February 2, 2004.

* Sec. 8. This Act takes effect July 1, 1994.

Sec. 12.55.015. Authorized sentences; forfeiture.

(a) Except as limited by AS 12.55.125 - 12.55.175, the court, in imposing sentence on a defendant convicted of an offense, may singly or in combination

(1) impose a

(A) fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.035; or

(B) day fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.036 if the court does not impose a term of periodic or continuous imprisonment or place the defendant on probation;

(2) order the defendant to be placed on probation under conditions specified by the court that may include provision for active supervision;

(3) impose a definite term of periodic imprisonment, but only if an employment obligation of the defendant preexisted sentencing and the defendant receives a composite sentence of not more than two years to serve;

(4) impose a definite term of continuous imprisonment;

(5) order the defendant to make restitution under AS 12.55.045;

(6) order the defendant to carry out a continuous or periodic program of community work under AS 12.55.055;

(7) suspend execution of all or a portion of the sentence imposed under AS 12.55.080;

(8) suspend imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085;

(9) order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety or a municipal law enforcement agency of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of an offense described in AS 11.41, AS 11.46, AS 11.56, or AS 11.61;

(10) order the defendant, while incarcerated, to participate in or comply with the treatment plan of a rehabilitation program that is related to the defendant's offense or to the defendant's rehabilitation if the program is made available to the defendant by the Department of Corrections;

(11) order the forfeiture to the state of a motor vehicle, weapon, electronic communication device, or money or other valuables, used in or obtained through an offense that was committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal street gang;

(12) order the defendant to have no contact, either directly or indirectly, with a victim or witness of the offense until the defendant is unconditionally discharged.

(b) The court, in exercising sentencing discretion as provided in this chapter, shall impose a sentence involving imprisonment when

(1) the defendant deserves to be imprisoned, considering the seriousness of the present offense and the defendant's prior criminal history, and imprisonment is equitable considering sentences imposed for other offenses and other defendants under similar circumstances;

(2) imprisonment is necessary to protect the public from further harm by the defendant; or

(3) sentences of lesser severity have been repeatedly imposed for substantially similar offenses in the past and have proven ineffective in deterring the defendant from further criminal conduct.

(c) In addition to the penalties authorized by this section, the court may invoke any authority conferred by law to order a forfeiture of property, suspend or revoke a license, remove a person from office, or impose any other civil penalty. When forfeiting property under this subsection, a court may award to a municipal law enforcement agency that participated in the arrest or conviction of the defendant, the seizure of property, or the identification of property for seizure, (1) the property if the property is worth $5,000 or less and is not money or some other thing that is divisible, or (2) up to 75 percent of the property or the value of the property if the property is worth more than $5,000 or is money or some other thing that is divisible. In determining the percentage a municipal law enforcement agency may receive under this subsection, the court shall consider the municipal law enforcement agency's total involvement in the case relative to the involvement of the state.

(d) [Repealed, Sec. 1 ch 188 SLA 1990].

(e) If the defendant is ordered to serve a definite term of imprisonment, the court may recommend that the defendant serve all or part of the term

(1) in a correctional restitution center;

(2) by electronic monitoring.

(f) Notwithstanding (a) of this section, the court shall order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety or a municipal law enforcement agency of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of a crime involving domestic violence.

(g) Unless a defendant is ineligible for a deduction under AS 33.20, when a defendant is sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years or more, the sentence consists of two parts: (1) a minimum term of imprisonment that is equal to not less than two-thirds of the total term of imprisonment; and (2) a maximum term of supervised release on mandatory parole that is equal to not more than one-third of the total term of imprisonment; the amount of time that the inmate actually serves in imprisonment and on supervised release is subject to the provisions of AS 33.20.010 - 33.20.060.

(h) In addition to penalties authorized by this section, the court shall order a person convicted of an offense requiring the state to collect a blood sample, oral sample, or both, for the deoxyribonucleic acid identification registration system under AS 44.41.035 to submit to the collection of

(1) the sample or samples when requested by a health care professional acting on behalf of the state to provide the sample or samples; or

(2) an oral sample when requested by a juvenile or adult correctional, probation, or parole officer, or a peace officer.

(i) In this section "deadly weapon" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900.

Sec. 12.55.035. Fines.

(a) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a fine as authorized in this section or as otherwise authorized by law.

(b) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant who is not an organization may be sentenced to pay, unless otherwise specified in the provision of law defining the offense, a fine of no more than

(1) $500,000 for murder in the first or second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, kidnapping, promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), or misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree;

(2) $250,000 for a class A felony;

(3) $100,000 for a class B felony;

(4) $50,000 for a class C felony;

(5) $10,000 for a class A misdemeanor;

(6) $2,000 for a class B misdemeanor;

(7) $500 for a violation.

(c) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of

(1) an amount that is

(A) $1,000,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;

(B) $200,000 for a class A misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(C) $25,000 for a class B misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(D) $10,000 for a violation;

(2) three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant as a result of the offense; or

(3) three times the pecuniary damage or loss caused by the defendant to another, or to the property of another, as a result of the offense.

(d) If a defendant is sentenced to pay a fine, the court may grant permission for the payment to be made within a specified period of time or in specified installments.

(e) In imposing a fine under (c) of this section, in addition to any other relevant factors, the court shall consider

(1) measures taken by the organization to discipline an officer, director, employee, or agent of the organization;

(2) measures taken by the organization to prevent a recurrence of the offense;

(3) the organization's obligation to make restitution to a victim of the offense, and the extent to which imposition of a fine will impair the ability of the organization to make restitution; and

(4) the extent to which the organization will pass on to consumers the expense of the fine.

(f) In imposing a fine, the court may not reduce the fine by the amount of a surcharge or otherwise consider the applicability of a surcharge to the offense.

Sec. 12.55.036. Day fines.

(a) Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, other than a violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.56.740, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a day fine as authorized by this section. If a day fine is imposed under this section, the defendant may not be sentenced to pay a fine under AS 12.55.035, serve a term of imprisonment, or be placed on probation.

(b) The Alaska Supreme Court shall adopt a day fine plan that includes

(1) an assessment of the gravity of all misdemeanor offenses, which assessment must include the existence of prior offenses, and the assignment of presumptive penalties to them in day fine units within the following ranges:

(A) for class A and unclassified misdemeanors, not to exceed 365-day fine units;

(B) for class B misdemeanors, not to exceed 90-day fine units;

(2) a schedule of the presumptive day fine penalties;

(3) procedures for a court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalties if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor under AS 12.55.155(c) or a mitigating factor under AS 12.55.155(d);

(4) a table for the conversion of a defendant's actual, potential, or estimated gross income, less one-third for a defendant above the federal poverty guideline as determined by the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and less one-half for a defendant below the federal poverty guideline into net daily income amounts; the table must include adjustments for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant;

(5) procedures for a court to gather information about the defendant's occupation, actual, estimated, and potential income, number of dependents, and other facts necessary or relevant to sentencing a person to a day fine; a court may order the production of the financial or other records of a person it determines to be relevant to a determination under this section; the procedures must include a requirement that the facts shall be received

(A) under oath so that the defendant is subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.200; or

(B) in a writing or recording that bears notice that false statements made in it are punishable under AS 11.56.210; and

(6) other information the court determines to be necessary for implementing the day fine plan.

(c) The amount of a day fine shall be the product of the net daily income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant, times the day fine penalty. When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court shall

(1) state on the record the

(A) presumptive day fine penalty for the offense, and whether the court is adjusting the presumptive day fine penalty for the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors;

(B) net daily income of the income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant; and

(C) amount of the day fine;

(2) make written findings of the facts considered in

(A) finding the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors and in assigning a value to those factors; and

(B) determining the defendant's gross and daily net incomes.

(d) When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court may permit the payment of the day fine in specified installments or within a certain period of time, provided the entire day fine is paid within 180 days of imposition.

(e) A sentence imposing a day fine shall be considered a civil judgment for the day fine. The Department of Law shall enforce the judgment and may utilize any procedure available for the enforcement of civil judgments. If the Department of Law uses the civil process of the court to enforce or collect a day fine, the department shall be awarded costs and attorney fees.

(f) [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 79 SLA 1994].

(g) Money collected under this section shall be deposited into the general fund and separately accounted for under AS 37.05.142. The annual estimated balance in the account maintained under AS 37.05.142 for day fines collected under this section may be appropriated by the legislature as follows: (1) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault; (2) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Violent Crimes Compensation Board; and (3) the balance for any lawful purpose. Nothing in this subsection creates a dedicated fund.

"ALASKA FIREARMS FREEDOM ACT"

The United States Constitution gives Congress the authority to regulate Interstate Commerce between the states and 18 USC 922 makes it unlawful for any person not licensed as a manufacturer or dealer in firearms to engage in the business of manufacturing or dealing in firearms. Collectively, the Interstate Commerce Clause and 18 USC 922 are used by the federal government as a means to regulate firearms.

The Alaska Firearms Freedom Act addresses this by exempting firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition manufactured and retained in the state from all federal firearm control laws including registration, as firearms that meet these criteria shouldn't be regulated by the federal government because they have not traveled in interstate commerce. Firearms exempt from this Act must have the words "Made in Alaska" clearly stamped on a central metallic part such as the receiver or frame.

This bill frees certain firearms from federal regulation as long as certain conditions are met. It frees the state of Alaska from restrictive federal firearm regulation and allows the state to take responsible firearm regulation into her own hands. The federal government has historically used the Interstate Commerce Clause to regulate firearms and has consistently pursued legislation that imposes its will on states. Outdoorsmen, hunters, and Alaskans defending their families and property will benefit from the passage of HB 186.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act declaring that certain firearms and accessories are exempt from federal regulation."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

FINDINGS. The legislature finds that the authority for this Act is the following:

(1) the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees to the states and their people all powers not granted to the federal government elsewhere in the constitution and reserves to the state and people of Alaska certain powers as they were intended at the time that Alaska was admitted to statehood in 1959; the guaranty of those powers is a matter of contract between the state and people of Alaska and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Alaska and the United States in 1959;

(2) the Ninth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees to the people rights not granted in the constitution and reserves to the people of Alaska certain rights as they were intended at the time that Alaska was admitted to statehood in 1959; the guaranty of those rights is a matter of contract between the state and people of Alaska and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Alaska and the United States in 1959;

(3) the regulation of intrastate commerce is vested in the states under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, particularly if not expressly preempted by federal law; the United States Congress has not expressly preempted state regulation of intrastate commerce pertaining to the manufacture on an intrastate basis of firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition;

(4) the Second Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reserves to the people the right to keep and bear arms as that right was intended at the time that Alaska was admitted to statehood in 1959, and the guaranty of the right is a matter of contract between the state and people of Alaska and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Alaska and the United States in 1959;

(5) art. I, sec. 19, Constitution of the State of Alaska clearly secures to Alaska citizens and prohibits government interference with the right of individual Alaska citizens to keep and bear arms.

 Sec. 2. AS 44.99 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Article 5. Alaska Firearms Freedom Act.

Sec. 44.99.500. State policy, declarations, and requirements concerning certain firearms not in interstate commerce and not subject to federal regulation. (a) A personal firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured commercially or privately in this state and that remains in the state is not subject to federal law or federal regulation, including registration, under the authority of the United States Congress to regulate interstate commerce as those items have not traveled in interstate commerce.

(b) This section applies to a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured in this state from basic materials and that can be manufactured without the inclusion of any significant parts imported from another state. Generic and insignificant parts that have other manufacturing or consumer product applications are not firearms, firearm accessories, or ammunition, and their importation into this state and incorporation into a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured in this state does not subject the firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition to federal regulation. Basic materials, such as unmachined steel and unshaped wood, are not firearms, firearm accessories, or ammunition and are not subject to congressional authority to regulate firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition under interstate commerce as if they were actually firearms, firearm accessories, or ammunition. The authority of the United States Congress to regulate interstate commerce in basic materials does not include authority to regulate firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition made in this state from those materials. Firearm accessories that are imported into this state from another state and that are subject to federal regulation as being in interstate commerce do not subject a firearm to federal regulation under interstate commerce because they are attached to or used in conjunction with a firearm in this state.

(c) A firearm manufactured or sold in this state and not subject to federal regulation under this section must have the words "Made in Alaska" clearly stamped on a central metallic part, such as the receiver or frame.

(d) In this section,

(1) "firearm accessory" means an item that is used in conjunction with or mounted on a firearm but is not essential to the basic function of a firearm, including a telescopic or laser sight, magazine, flash or sound suppressor, folding or aftermarket stock and grip, speedloader, ammunition carrier, and light for target illumination;

(2) "generic and insignificant parts" includes springs, screws, nuts, and pins;

(3) "manufactured" means a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that has been created from basic materials for functional usefulness, including forging, casting, machining, or other processes for working materials.

 Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 44.99.500, added by sec. 2 of this Act, applies to firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition that are manufactured and retained in this state after October 1, 2009.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

This bill attempts to declare that firearms that are made in Alaska are exempt from any federal law or regulation. The bill also requires the Attorney General for Alaska to pursue a declaratory judgment action in federal court upholding this declaration, and requires the Attorney General to defend any Alaska citizen prosecuted for violating federal law regarding firearms. The bill has significant constitutional issues. These issues would most likely arise in the context of a state citizen being charged with a crime in federal court and could result in significant litigation in both state and federal court. While such litigation is likely, it is difficult to estimate with any certainty the costs that might be incurred and they are therefore indeterminate at this point.

RE: Sectional Analysis for blank CS for HB 186( )
(26-LS0627\E)

A sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill. The bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1.
Findings Section. The authority of this Act is the Second, Ninth, and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The Second Amendment reserves to the people the right to keep and bear arms, the Ninth Amendment guarantees to the people rights not granted in the constitution, and the Tenth Amendment guarantees to the states and their people all powers not granted to the federal government elsewhere in the constitution. The United States Congress has not expressly preempted state regulation of intrastate commerce pertaining to the manufacture on an intrastate basis of firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition. Article I, Section 19 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska secures to the citizens and prohibits government interference with the right of individual Alaska citizens to keep and bear arms.

Section 2.
(a) A personal firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured commercially or privately in this state and that remains in the state is not subject to federal law or federal regulation including registration under the authority of the United States Congress to regulate intrastate commerce.

(b) This section applies to a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured in this state from basic materials without the inclusion of significant parts imported from another state. Generic and insignificant parts that have other manufacturing or consumer applications are not firearms, firearm accessories, or ammunition and their incorporation into a firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured in this state does not subject them to federal regulation. Basic materials, such as unmachined steel and unshaped wood are not firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition and are not subject to federal regulation under intrastate commerce. Firearm accessories imported into this state from another state and are attached to or used in conjunction with a firearm in this state does not subject the firearm to federal regulation under intrastate commerce.

(c) A firearm manufactured or sold in this sate and not subject to federal regulation mush have the words "Made in Alaska" clearly stamped on a central metallic part, such as the receiver or frame.

(d) Definitions section.

"Firearm accessory" – an item that is used in conjunction with or mounted on a firearm but is not essential to the basic function of a firearm. This includes: a telescope or laser sight, magazine, flash or sound suppressor, folding or aftermarket stock and grip, speedloader, ammunition carrier, and light for target illumination.

"Generic and insignificant parts" – includes springs, screws, nuts, and pins.

"Manufactured" – means a firearm a firearm accessory, or ammunition that has been created from basic materials for functional usefulness, including forging, casting, machining, or other processes for working materials.

Section 3.
Applicability section. This Act applies to firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition that are manufactured and retained in this state after October 1, 2009.

SENATE BILL 1644

By Beavers

AN ACT to amend Tennessee Code Annotated, Title 4, relative to exempting from regulation under the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States a firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured and retained in Tennessee.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE:

SECTION 1. Tennessee Code Annotated, Title 4, is amended by adding Sections 2 through 6 of this act as a new chapter thereto.

SECTION 2. This chapter shall be known and may be cited as the "Tennessee Firearms Freedom Act".

SECTION 3. The general assembly declares that the authority for this chapter is the following:

(1) The tenth amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees to the states and their people all powers not granted to the federal government elsewhere in the Constitution and reserves to the state and people of Tennessee certain powers as they were understood at the time that Tennessee was admitted to statehood. The guarantee of those powers is a matter of contract between the state and people of Tennessee and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Tennessee and the United States;

(2) The ninth amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees to the people rights not granted in the Constitution and reserves to the people of Tennessee certain rights as they were understood at the time that Tennessee was admitted to statehood. The guarantee of those rights is a matter of contract between the state and people of Tennessee and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Tennessee and the United States.

(3) The regulation of intrastate commerce is vested in the states under the ninth and tenth amendments to the United States Constitution, particularly if not expressly preempted by federal law. Congress cannot preempt state regulation of intrastate commerce pertaining to the manufacture on an intrastate basis of firearms, firearms accessories, and ammunition;

(4) The second amendment to the United States Constitution reserves to the people the right to keep and bear arms as that right was understood at the time that Tennessee was admitted to statehood, and the guarantee of the right is a matter of contract between the state and people of Tennessee and the United States as of the time that the compact with the United States was agreed upon and adopted by Tennessee and the United States; and

(5) The Tennessee Constitution clearly secures to Tennessee citizens, and prohibits government interference with, the right of individual Tennessee citizens to keep and bear arms.

SECTION 4. As used in this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires:

(1) "Firearms accessories" means items that are used in conjunction with or mounted upon a firearm but are not essential to the basic function of a firearm, including but not limited to telescopic or laser sights, magazines, flash or sound suppressors, folding or aftermarket stocks and grips, speedloaders, ammunition carriers, and lights for target illumination;

(2) "Generic and insignificant parts" includes but is not limited to springs, screws, nuts, and pins; and

(3) "Manufactured" means creating a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition from basic materials for functional usefulness, including but not limited to forging, casting, machining, or other processes for working materials.

SECTION 5. A firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured commercially or privately in Tennessee is not subject to federal law or federal regulation, including registration, under the authority of congress to regulate interstate commerce. It is declared by the legislature that those items have not traveled in interstate commerce. This section applies to a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured in Tennessee from basic materials and that can be manufactured without the inclusion of any significant parts imported into this state. Generic and insignificant parts that have other manufacturing or consumer product applications are not firearms, firearms accessories, or ammunition, and their importation into Tennessee and incorporation into a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured in Tennessee does not subject the firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition to federal regulation. It is declared by the legislature that basic materials, such as unmachined steel and unshaped wood, are not firearms, firearms accessories, or ammunition and are not subject to congressional authority to regulate firearms, firearms accessories, and ammunition under interstate commerce as if they were actually firearms, firearms accessories, or ammunition. The authority of congress to regulate interstate commerce in basic materials does not include authority to regulate firearms, firearms accessories, and ammunition made in Tennessee from those materials. Firearms accessories that are imported into Tennessee from another state and that are subject to federal regulation as being in interstate commerce do not subject a firearm to federal regulation under interstate commerce because they are attached to or used in conjunction with a firearm in Tennessee.

SECTION 6. A firearm manufactured or sold in Tennessee under this chapter must have the words "Made in Tennessee" clearly stamped on a central metallic part, such as the receiver or frame.

SECTION 7. This act shall take effect upon becoming a law, the public welfare requiring it.

You asked for an analysis of HB 96, which relates to the use, possession, and criminality of marijuana in Alaska. Specifically, you wanted to know how this bill differs from the provision of AS 11.71.060(a)—regarding marijuana possession—that was recently found unconstitutional by the Alaska Court of Appeals. In addition, you asked about the costs to the state for mounting legal defenses for certain laws found to be unconstitutional. Specifically, you asked that we determine the costs for attorneys, support staff, and other significant expenses associated with defending the statutes and regulations that were found by the courts to be unconstitutional in the following cases:

- Noy v. State of Alaska; and
- Department of Health and Social Services, Karen Purdue Commissioner v. Planned Parenthood of Alaska, Inc., et al.

SUMMARY

In 1975 and 2003 Alaska courts issued rulings that found the possession of small amounts of marijuana—under four ounces—to be protected by privacy provisions of the state constitution. Nonetheless, both bodies of the Alaska Legislature are currently considering bills that would decrease the marijuana possession thresholds for the criminal charges of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth, fifth, and sixth degrees, respectively. To the extent that the governor's bills, HB 96 and SB 74, seek to criminalize the possession of less than four ounces of marijuana in private homes for personal use, the bills appear to contravene the rulings of Alaska's courts.

The significant measurable costs to the state of defending AS 11.71.060(a) in Noy v. Alaska were approximately $7,600. Because Noy began as a relatively routine misdemeanor case, the costs were relatively low. By contrast, the total costs to the state upon the 2001 final ruling in the civil case Department of Health and Social Services, Karen Purdue Commissioner v. Planned Parenthood of Alaska, Inc., et al were about $452,000.

In the remainder of this report we provide further information on state court rulings regarding marijuana possession, a brief analysis of HB 96, and details of the costs of defending the state's position in the Noy and Planned Parenthood cases.

BACKGROUND: LANDMARK ALASKA COURT RULINGS ON MARIJUANA POSSESSION

In 1975, the Alaska Supreme Court ruled in Ravin v. State that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution (Article 1, Section 22) protects the possession of marijuana in one's home for personal use. The court's decision is summarized in Lexis online as follows:

> The court held that privacy in the home was a fundamental right under both constitutions. However, the right had to yield when it interfered in a serious manner with the health, safety, or rights of others, or with the public welfare. The state had to meet a substantial burden of showing that proscription of possession of marijuana in the home was in the interest of public welfare. It did not meet that burden because the evidence presented did not prove that marijuana as presently used in the country was generally a danger to the user or others. The privacy of the home could not be breached absent a persuasive showing of a close and substantial relationship of the intrusion to a legitimate governmental interest. However, possession at home of amounts of marijuana indicative of intent to sell rather than for personal use was unprotected.[1]

Following the Ravin decision, Alaska laws were changed to allow possession of less than four ounces of marijuana by adults in their homes. Fifteen years later, in the 1990 general election, however, Alaska voters approved Ballot Measure 2, which criminalized possession of marijuana in any amount.[2] The initiative amended AS 11.71.060(a) to read as follows:

[1] Ravin v. State of Alaska, No. 2135, Supreme Court of Alaska; 537 P.2d 494; 1975 Alas. LEXIS 334.

[2] Initiative No. 88MARI: Marijuana Law Amendments, appeared on the November 6, 1990, general election ballot.

(a) Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the sixth degree if the person

(1) uses or displays any amount of a schedule VIA [including marijuana] controlled substance or possesses one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one-half pound containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; or

(2) refuses entry into a premise for an inspection authorized under AS 17.30.

The amended law effectively made possession of even very small amounts of marijuana a Class B misdemeanor punishable by up to ninety days in jail and a one-thousand dollar fine.[3]

In Noy v. State of Alaska (2003), however, the Alaska Court of Appeals, looking to the Supreme Court's decision in Ravin, determined neither the legislature nor the voters have the power to enact laws that criminalize possession of small amounts of marijuana. The court, therefore, found AS 11.71.060(a) to be unconstitutional to the extent that it prohibits possession of less than four ounces of marijuana in one's home for personal use.[4]

CHANGES TO POSSESSION LAWS PROPOSED IN HB 96

In the transmittal letter accompanying HB 96, Governor Murkowski identified the primary purposes of the bill as follows:

> This bill would provide a forum for the Legislature to hear expert testimony on the effects of marijuana and to make findings that the courts can rely on in cases where marijuana is an issue. In addition to educating the Legislature, courts, and the public about the harmful effects of marijuana, this bill would deter possession and use of marijuana by increasing criminal penalties for certain types of possession. It also would provide a fair and efficient process for determining the usable weight of live marijuana plants in criminal prosecutions.

Section 6 of the bill would amend AS 11.71.060(a)—the section found unconstitutional by the Alaska Court of Appeals—as follows (bolded, underlined text has been added; text in brackets is deleted):

> Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the sixth degree if the person
> (1) uses or displays any amount of a schedule VIA controlled substance;
>
> (2) [OR] possesses one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one ounce [ONE-HALF POUND] containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; [OR]
> (3) manufactures, delivers, or possesses with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one-half ounce containing a schedule VIA controlled substance;
> (4) possesses one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances containing a schedule VIA controlled substance while a passenger in a motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorized watercraft;

---

[3] Maximum fines for Class B misdemeanors were subsequently increased to $2,000.

[4] Noy v. State, 79 P.3d 1201, 2003 Alas. App. LEXIS 209 (Alaska Ct. App., 2003).

(5) being the driver or operator of a motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorized watercraft, knowingly permits a passenger to possess one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; or

(6) [(2)] refuses entry into a premise for an inspection authorized under AS 17.30.[5]

As you can see, the second provision of this section decreases the amount of marijuana required to justify a charge of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the sixth degree—a Class B misdemeanor. Amendments proposed in Sections 4 and 5 of the bill also decrease possession thresholds for the charges of misconduct with a controlled substance in the fourth and fifth degree, respectively. It appears that in criminalizing the possession of less than four ounces of marijuana in the privacy of one's home, Sections 5 and 6 of HB 96 may contravene the Courts' decisions in Ravin and Noy. Table 1 shows current possession thresholds and those proposed by HB 96, the criminal charges for those levels of possession, and the maximum punishment allowed for each charge.

Table 1: Current Statutory Language and Proposed Crimes of Marijuana Possession

Statute / HB 96 Section	Level of Crime	Possession Threshold		Maximum Sentence
		Current	Proposed: HB 96	Imprisonment	Fine
AS 11.71.040 / Section 4	Class C Felony	One pound or more	Four ounces or more	Five years	$50,000
AS 11.71.050 / Section 5	Class A Misdemeanor	One-half pound or more	One ounce or more	One year	$10,000
AS 11.71.060 / Section 6	Class B Misdemeanor	Less than one-half pound	Less than one ounce	Ninety days	$2,000

Notes: More serious charges involving marijuana are generally restricted to crimes involving selling the drug. In its ruling in Ravin v. State, the Alaska Supreme Court determined that selling marijuana, unlike possessing small amounts for personal use in the home, is not afforded constitutional protection.

LEGAL COSTS OF DEFENDING CERTAIN LAWS DETERMINED TO BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Kathryn Daughhetee, Administrative Services Director, Alaska Department of Law provided cost figures including salaries for attorneys and other staff and fees awarded by the court, where applicable.[6] Other costs, such as witnesses' fees and travel costs, which Ms. Daughhetee estimated to be relatively minimal, are not included. It is important to note that the primary attorneys representing the state in both of the cases were Department of Law staff. The Department does not consider the salaries of these attorneys and their support staff to be strictly associated with these cases. That is, had the attorneys and staff not been working on the cases in question, they would have, nonetheless, been drawing the same salaries while working on other cases. Nonetheless, for the purposes of this report, Department of Law staff salaries are included in the state's costs for these cases.

NOY V. STATE OF ALASKA

As we mentioned, Noy was a criminal case involving a misdemeanor charge of marijuana possession. Following a two-day trial in the Fourth District Court in Fairbanks, the defendant was convicted. On appeal, the Alaska Court of Appeals found that Mr. Noy was entitled to a new trial because the trial judge had incorrectly instructed the jury on how to determine the weight of marijuana plants. The Court of Appeals held unconstitutional the marijuana possession statute under which Mr. Noy was convicted, AS 11.71.060(a), because the state did not show a sufficient governmental interest in limiting Alaskans' right to privacy under the state constitution by criminalizing marijuana possession.[7]

The Criminal Division of the Alaska Department of Law does not track attorney and staff time by case. Nonetheless, the Department estimates that a total of 77.5 "billable" hours were dedicated to the case at an average rate of $98 per hour for attorney and staff salaries. The total of these costs to the state, therefore, was approximately $7,600.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES, KAREN PURDUE COMMISSIONER V. PLANNED PARENTHOOD OF ALASKA, INC., ET AL.

In 1998, Planned Parenthood of Alaska and two private practice physicians brought this civil suit challenging 7 AAC 43.140, which relates to Medicaid funding for abortions. Under the regulation, Medicaid funds could be used for abortions only in cases where the life of the mother was in danger or where the pregnancy was the result of rape or incest. In 2001, the Third District Superior Court found, and the Alaska Supreme Court affirmed, that the state, having undertaken a program to provide health care for poor Alaskans, was required to adhere to neutral criteria in distributing that care. It could not deny medically necessary services to eligible individuals based on criteria unrelated to the purposes of the public health care program. Moreover, the courts found that the regulation discriminatorily burdened the exercise of constitutional rights by poor Alaskan women by denying funding solely on political disapproval of a medically necessary procedure. In the view of the courts, this selective denial of medical benefits violated Alaska's constitutional guarantee of equal protection.[8]

The state was represented in the case by the Attorney General's office. In addition, the Legislature contracted with the Anchorage law firm of Brena, Bell & Clarkson to file an amicus brief in support of the regulation. Further substantial costs were incurred because, having prevailed against the state, the plaintiff was awarded full attorney's fees.[9] The total costs of attorneys, staff, fees, and the contracted amicus brief in this case was approximately $452,000. The components of this total amount are as follows:

- Department of Law costs $158,000
- Plaintiff's fees $269,000
- Contract for amicus brief $25,000

Please note, however, the Department of Law does not consider the costs for its attorneys and staff to have been incurred strictly due to this case because salaries for those positions would be paid regardless of the existence of this particular case.

[9] The criteria the court uses in weighing a plaintiff's private motivation against the extent of public interest involved appear among the annotations to Civil Rule 82 as follows: (1) Is the case designed to effectuate strong public policies? (2) If the plaintiff succeeds will numerous people receive benefits from the lawsuit? (3) Can only a private party have been expected to bring the suit? (4) Would the purported public interest litigant have sufficient economic incentive to file suit even if the action involved only narrow issues lacking general importance?

HOUSE BILL NO. 96

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-FOURTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

Introduced: 1/21/05
Referred: Judiciary, Finance

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act making findings relating to marijuana use and possession; relating to marijuana and misconduct involving a controlled substance; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

PURPOSE. The purpose of this Act is to protect the health and safety of persons in this state, and to provide legislative findings concerning this Act regarding marijuana and its effects in this state.

 Sec. 2. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

FINDINGS. The legislature finds that marijuana poses a threat to the public health that justifies prohibiting its use and possession in this state, even by adults in private. The legislature further finds that

(1) marijuana has been for many years and continues to be the most commonly used illegal controlled substance in the United States;

(2) marijuana has many adverse health and social effects, and there is evidence that it has addictive properties similar to heroin and other similar illegal controlled substances;

(3) in addition to concerns about marijuana use generally, the legislature is particularly concerned with the rates of use of marijuana by young people and Alaska Natives, which exceed national averages;

(4) early exposure of children to marijuana increases the likelihood of lifelong health and social problems, and makes it much more likely that the person will go on to use more potent illegal controlled substances;

(5) a high percentage of adults arrested in this state for domestic violence test positive for marijuana at the time of arrest;

(6) marijuana use by children is associated with an increased risk of attempting suicide;

(7) marijuana consists of over four hundred different chemicals and can affect almost every organ and system in the body, including the lymph system, the heart, and the lungs; marijuana can disrupt memory, attention, judgment, and other cognitive functions and can impair motor coordination, time perception, and balance, especially in children;

(8) marijuana smoke contains more carcinogenic hydrocarbons than tobacco smoke and a person who smokes several marijuana cigarettes a week may be taking in as many cancer-causing chemicals as someone who smokes a full pack of tobacco cigarettes every day;

(9) the potency of marijuana in the 1960s and 1970s was very low compared to the potency in 2005; the average amount of delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), the main psychoactive ingredient, nationwide, was less than one percent in the 1960s and 1970s, but has increased steadily in the 1980s and especially the 1990s, and by 2003 was more than six times that level, at 6.4 percent; in addition, marijuana grown in this state is often more potent than national averages, and has been tested with THC levels of over 20 percent; marijuana of the potency generally available in 2005 is a strong hallucingenic drug that can command hundreds of dollars per ounce on the illegal market; the increasing potency of marijuana corresponds to an increase in the number of persons seeking emergency medical care for marijuana-related incidents;

(10) several hundred adults and children in this state are admitted into treatment each year for marijuana abuse, with more than half of the admissions being children under the age of 18 and more than a third of the admissions being Alaska Natives; youth and Alaska Natives made up a disproportionate number of the total statewide treatment admissions for marijuana abuse in 2003;

(11) Alaska consistently ranks in the top 10 states, and occasionally in the top five states, nationwide, in the amount of marijuana illegally grown indoors, and large amounts of marijuana grown in this state are sold throughout the state and exported to other parts of the United States; the price of high-quality marijuana is hundreds of dollars per ounce and thousands of dollars per pound; testimony received by the legislature in 1999 and confirmed in 2005, shows that marijuana often sells for $500 or more per ounce;

(12) a large percentage of persons arrested in this state, including adults and juveniles who commit violent offenses, have marijuana in their system at the time of arrest;

(13) marijuana use by a parent has been, and will continue to be, a major contributing factor to children having easy access to and using marijuana;

(14) criminal penalties for marijuana possession and education efforts are effective in reducing marijuana use and limiting its access by children;

(15) possession of marijuana, even for personal, recreational use, has been, and continues to be, illegal under federal law;

(16) in Noy v. State, 83 P.3d 538 (Alaska App. 2003), the Alaska court of appeals adopted a statute enacted two decades ago that was repealed by the voters in 1990, and allows adults to possess up to four ounces as the constitutionally-protected amount of marijuana that each adult can have in their home; this decision usurped the legislature's and the voters' authority to change laws relating to health and safety;

(17) the Noy decision by the Alaska court of appeals also struck down the one-ounce possession limit in the medical marijuana law enacted in 1999, thus further usurping the legislature's and the voters' authority to change laws relating to health and safety;

(18) the Noy decision by the Alaska court of appeals also led this court in Crocker v. State, 97 P.3d 93 (Alaska App. 2004) to adopt unnecessary and unreasonable requirements for search warrants to investigate marijuana-growing in this state that inhibit law enforcement efforts to reduce the amount of marijuana illegally grown indoors and illegally sold or exported; and

(19) the potency of marijuana today, the profit to be made growing marijuana today, and the consequences to the health of Alaskans, make it necessary for the legislature to reconfirm by this Act that it is illegal to possess any amount of marijuana anywhere in this state, and to reassess the legislative lines that have been drawn in the past that classify marijuana possession as either felony or misdemeanor conduct; in taking this legislative action, the legislature has taken into consideration its duty to implement the right to privacy in art. I, sec. 22, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

 Sec. 3. AS 11.71.030(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the third degree if the person

(1) under circumstances not proscribed under AS 11.71.020(a)(2) - (4), manufactures or delivers any amount of a schedule IIA or IIIA controlled substance or possesses any amount of a schedule IIA or IIIA controlled substance with intent to manufacture or deliver;

(2) delivers any amount of a schedule IVA, VA, or VIA controlled substance to a person under 21 [19] years of age [WHO IS AT LEAST THREE YEARS YOUNGER THAN THE PERSON DELIVERING THE SUBSTANCE]; or

(3) possesses any amount of a schedule IA or IIA controlled substance

(A) with reckless disregard that the possession occurs

(i) on or within 500 feet of school grounds; or

(ii) at or within 500 feet of a recreation or youth center;

or

(B) on a school bus.

 Sec. 4. AS 11.71.040(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth degree if the person

(1) manufactures or delivers any amount of a schedule IVA or VA controlled substance or possesses any amount of a schedule IVA or VA controlled substance with intent to manufacture or deliver;

(2) manufactures or delivers, or possesses with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of one ounce or more containing a schedule VIA controlled substance;

(3) possesses

(A) any amount of a schedule IA or IIA controlled substance;

(B) 25 or more tablets, ampules, or syrettes containing a schedule IIIA or IVA controlled substance;

(C) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of three grams or more containing a schedule IIIA or IVA controlled substance;

(D) 50 or more tablets, ampules, or syrettes containing a schedule VA controlled substance;

(E) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of six grams or more containing a schedule VA controlled substance;

(F) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of four ounces [ONE POUND] or more containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; or

(G) 25 or more plants of the genus cannabis;

(4) possesses a schedule IIIA, IVA, VA, or VIA controlled substance

(A) with reckless disregard that the possession occurs

(i) on or within 500 feet of school grounds; or

(ii) at or within 500 feet of a recreation or youth center;

or

(B) on a school bus;

(5) knowingly keeps or maintains any store, shop, warehouse, dwelling, building, vehicle, boat, aircraft, or other structure or place that is used for keeping or distributing controlled substances in violation of a felony offense under this chapter or AS 17.30;

(6) makes, delivers, or possesses a punch, die, plate, stone, or other thing which prints, imprints, or reproduces a trademark, trade name, or other identifying mark, imprint, or device of another or any likeness of any of these upon a drug, drug container, or labeling so as to render the drug a counterfeit substance;

(7) knowingly uses in the course of the manufacture or distribution of a controlled substance a registration number that is fictitious, revoked, suspended, or issued to another person;

(8) knowingly furnishes false or fraudulent information in or omits material information from any application, report, record, or other document required to be kept or filed under AS 17.30;

(9) obtains possession of a controlled substance by misrepresentation, fraud, forgery, deception, or subterfuge; or

(10) affixes a false or forged label to a package or other container containing any controlled substance.

 Sec. 5. AS 11.71.050(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fifth degree if the person

(1) manufactures or delivers, or possesses with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of one-half ounce or more containing a schedule VIA controlled substance;

(2) manufactures or delivers, or possesses with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one-half ounce containing a schedule VIA controlled substance, for remuneration;

(3) possesses

(A) less than 25 tablets, ampules, or syrettes containing a schedule IIIA or IVA controlled substance;

(B) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than three grams containing a schedule IIIA or IVA controlled substance;

(C) less than 50 tablets, ampules, or syrettes containing a schedule VA controlled substance;

(D) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than six grams containing a schedule VA controlled substance; or

(E) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of one ounce [ONE-HALF POUND] or more containing a schedule VIA controlled substance;

(F) one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances containing a schedule VIA controlled substance while driving or operating a motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorized watercraft; or

(4) fails to make, keep, or furnish any record, notification, order form, statement, invoice, or information required under AS 17.30.

 Sec. 6. AS 11.71.060(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as authorized in AS 17.30, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the sixth degree if the person

(1) uses or displays any amount of a schedule VIA controlled substance;

(2) [OR] possesses one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one ounce [ONE-HALF POUND] containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; [OR]

(3) manufactures, delivers, or possesses with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances of an aggregate weight of less than one-half ounce containing a schedule VIA controlled substance;

(4) possesses one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances containing a schedule VIA controlled substance while a passenger in a motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorized watercraft;

(5) being the driver or operator of a motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorized watercraft, knowingly permits a passenger to possess one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures, or substances containing a schedule VIA controlled substance; or

(6) [(2)] refuses entry into a premise for an inspection authorized under AS 17.30.

 Sec. 7. AS 11.71.080 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.71.080. Aggregate weight of live marijuana plants. For purposes of calculating the aggregate weight of a live marijuana plant, the aggregate weight shall be one-sixth of the measured weight of the marijuana plant after the roots of the marijuana plant have been removed [THE WEIGHT OF THE MARIJUANA WHEN REDUCED TO ITS COMMONLY USED FORM].

 Sec. 8. This Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

OPINIONBY: MANNHEIMER

OPINION: [*545] ON REHEARING

MANNHEIMER, Judge.

In Ravin v. State, 537 P.2d 494 (Alaska 1975), the Alaska Supreme Court held that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution (Article I, Section 22) protects the possession of marijuana in one's home for personal use. In 1990, the voters of Alaska enacted AS 11.71.060(a), [*546] which purports to criminalize the possession of any amount of marijuana, even when the marijuana is possessed in one's home for personal use. In our initial opinion in this case [2] -- Noy v. State, Alaska App. Opinion No. 1897 (August 29, 2003) n1 -- we held that this statute is unconstitutional because it conflicts with the right of privacy recognized in the Ravin decision. However, we concluded that the statute could be preserved to the extent that it prohibits possession of four ounces or more of marijuana.

n1 80 P.3d 255, 2003 Alas. App. LEXIS 167, 2003 WL 22026345.

The State now seeks rehearing. In its petition for rehearing, the State argues that this Court's initial opinion is flawed in some half-dozen ways, but most of the State's arguments ultimately rest on one underlying assertion: that we misunderstood the nature of the Alaska Supreme Court's decision in Ravin.

In our initial decision in this case, we read the Ravin opinion to say that the privacy clause of the Alaska Constitution restricts the legislature's (and the voters') authority to enact laws prohibiting the possession of marijuana in one's home for personal use. The State [3] contends that this view of Ravin is fundamentally flawed -- that Ravin did not announce a constitutional restriction on the government's law-making power.

According to the State, Ravin did not hold that Article I, Section 22 of the Alaska Constitution restricts the government's authority to enact statutes that prohibit possession of marijuana in one's home for personal use. Rather, Ravin restricted the government's authority to enforce such statutes -- by creating an affirmative defense that individual defendants can raise if they are prosecuted for violating such a statute.

The State argues that this defense is similar to a claim of entrapment or selective prosecution, in that it does not rest on a claim that the defendant is innocent of wrongdoing, but rather on a claim that the government violated constitutional guarantees when it singled out this particular defendant as the target of prosecution.

According to the State, Ravin stands for the proposition that, in any prosecution for possession of marijuana in one's home, the defendant can assert that the possession was of a small amount for personal use. If the defendant raises such a claim, the matter [4] is decided (before trial) by a judge, not a jury. To defeat the proposed defense, the State would have to prove either (1) that the marijuana was not for personal use, or (2) that the government had a sufficient interest in prohibiting the possession of that particular amount of marijuana under the specific circumstances of that defendant's case.

In other words, the State argues that Ravin created a system in which the constitutionality of marijuana prosecutions would be decided by trial judges on a case-by- case basis -- and that, in these case-specific hearings, the State would repeatedly try to convince numerous different judges that there is a sufficient government interest to justify imposing criminal penalties on people who possess varying amounts of marijuana.

The State's proposed interpretation of the Ravin decision would seemingly put us on the road to legal chaos. Under the State's proposal, dozens of judges across the state would be required to issue potentially inconsistent rulings as to whether, under the facts of a particular defendant's case, the State had sufficient justification to criminalize the defendant's possession of 3.0 ounces, or 2.2 ounces, or [5] 1.4 ounces, or 0.6 ounces of marijuana.

However, our primary reason for rejecting the State's interpretation of Ravin is that the State's interpretation is inconsistent with Ravin itself.

The Ravin decision does not speak of an affirmative defense of the type proposed by the State in its petition for rehearing, nor does the Ravin opinion describe itself as establishing case-specific limits on the State's enforcement of marijuana statutes. Rather, in the opening sentence of Ravin, the Alaska Supreme Court described the issue before them as "the constitutionality of Alaska's statute prohibiting possession of marijuana". n2 [*547] Later in the opinion, after the supreme court held that Article I, Section 22 of our state constitution guarantees a right of privacy in one's home n3, the court declared that two major questions remained:

n2 Ravin, 537 P.2d at 496.

n3 Id. at 504.

Whether the State has demonstrated sufficient justification for [6] the prohibition of possession of marijuana in general ... and ... whether the State has met the greater burden of showing a close and substantial relationship between the public welfare and control of ingestion or possession of marijuana in the home for personal use.

Ravin, 537 P.2d at 504.

The supreme court then proceeded to analyze the scientific data concerning the uses and effects of marijuana. The court did not attempt to analyze the particular facts of Irwin Ravin's case; rather, the court assessed the legislature's overall justification for regulating any person's possession of marijuana in their home. n4 n4 See id., 537 P.2d at 504-511.

And when the Ravin court announced its conclusion, the court did not frame that conclusion in terms of whether the State had an interest in prohibiting the possession of marijuana under the particular facts of the case before it. Instead, the court framed its conclusion as a general restriction on the government's authority [7] to legislatively control this aspect of people's personal behavior:

We conclude that [the state has shown] no adequate justification for the state's intrusion into the citizen's right to privacy by its prohibition of possession of marijuana by an adult for personal consumption in the home[.] The privacy of the individual's home cannot be breached absent a persuasive showing of a close and substantial relationship of the intrusion to a legitimate governmental interest. Here, mere scientific doubts will not suffice. The state must demonstrate a need based on proof that the public health or welfare will in fact suffer if the controls are not applied.

The state has a legitimate concern with avoiding the spread of marijuana use to adolescents who may not be equipped with the maturity to handle the experience prudently, as well as a legitimate concern with the problem of driving under the influence of marijuana. Yet these interests are insufficient to justify intrusions into the rights of adults in the privacy of their own homes.

Ravin, 537 P.2d at 511.

In the years since Ravin was decided, there has been no suggestion (until now) that Ravin was something [8] other than normal constitutional litigation in which the supreme court adjudicated the constitutionality of a particular category of criminal statute. For example, six months after Ravin, in Belgarde v. State, the supreme court referred to Ravin as "[a] case [in which] we held that the state may not prohibit possession of [marijuana] by an adult in [their] home for personal consumption".

n5 In 1978, in State v. Erickson, the supreme court again declared that Ravin represented a restriction on the state's power to legislate:

n5 543 P.2d 206, 207 (Alaska 1975).

In Ravin v. State, this court held that the state could not bar the personal use and possession of marijuana in the home. In view of the relative harmlessness of the drug, the individual's right to privacy under the Alaska Constitution was found to outweigh the state interest in regulation.

574 P.2d 1, 21 (Alaska 1978) (footnote omitted). And more recently, in Luedtke v. Nabors Alaska Drilling, [9] Inc., the supreme court declared that "Ravin addressed the issue of whether the state could prohibit the use of marijuana in the home. We held that it could not." n6

n6 768 P.2d 1123, 1135 (Alaska 1989).

Based on this analysis of the Ravin decision and the later supreme court decisions construing Ravin, we are convinced that the State's interpretation of Ravin is wrong. Ravin did not create an affirmative defense that defendants might raise, on a case-by-case basis, when they were prosecuted for possessing marijuana in their home for personal use. Instead, both in the Ravin opinion itself and in the supreme court's later descriptions of Ravin, the Alaska Supreme [*548] Court has repeatedly and consistently characterized the Ravin decision as announcing a constitutional limitation on the government's authority to enact legislation prohibiting the possession of marijuana in the privacy of one's home.

Accordingly, we reject the State's suggestion that Ravin [10] left Alaska's marijuana statutes intact but created an affirmative defense to be litigated in each individual case.

Although this is not a factor in our interpretation of Ravin, we note that the Alaska Legislature took this same view of Ravin when they refashioned this state's drug laws twenty years ago. As we described in Walker v. State n7, the legislature responded to Ravin in 1982 by enacting a statute -- former AS 11.71.060(a)(4) -- that prohibited possession of four ounces or more of marijuana, even if the marijuana was possessed in one's home for personal use. In the commentary that accompanied this statute, the legislature declared:

N7 991 P.2d 799 (Alaska App. 1999).

This legislation is intended to clarify the law in Alaska concerning possession of marijuana, in light of the decision of the Supreme Court of Alaska in Ravin v. State, 537 P.2d 494 (Alaska 1975). Ravin held that Alaska's constitutional right to privacy protects the possession and use [11] of marijuana by an adult, in the home, in amounts indicative of personal use in a purely personal, non-commercial context. The approach taken in this Act is to define, for purposes of the decision in Ravin, an amount which is indicative of personal use, and to provide a clear line of demarcation of four ounces, so that citizens of this state will know precisely what conduct is prohibited.

Commentary and Sectional Analysis for the 1982 Revision of Alaska's Controlled Substances Laws (CCSB 190), p. 19 (quoted in Walker v. State, 991 P.2d at 802-03).

Thus, not only is the State's suggested interpretation of Ravin at odds with the supreme court's statements on this question, but it is also at odds with the Alaska Legislature's announced policy aims in this area of the law: the aim of "defining, for purposes of ... Ravin, [a specific] amount which is indicative of personal use", and the aim of "providing a clear line of demarcation ..., so that citizens of this state will know precisely what conduct is prohibited".

We now address certain other aspects of the State's petition for rehearing.

In our original decision in this case, we stated that because [12] the jury acquitted Noy of the charge of possessing eight ounces or more of marijuana, the State is barred from asserting, in any future litigation, that Noy did indeed possess eight ounces or more of marijuana. The State argues that this conclusion is mistaken for two reasons.

First, the State contends that the doctrine of collateral estoppel does not apply when the aggrieved party had no method of seeking appellate review of the adverse judgement. The State points out that the double jeopardy clauses of the federal and state constitutions preclude the State from seeking appellate review of a jury's verdict of acquittal. Thus, the State argues, the fact that Noy's jury acquitted him of possessing eight ounces or more of marijuana should not estop the State from continuing to assert that Noy possessed more marijuana than the jury found.

The problem with the State's argument is that it is directly contrary to the United States Supreme Court's holding in Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 445-46, 25 L. Ed. 2d 469, 90 S. Ct. 1189, 1195-96 (1970).

Second, the State argues that the jury's acquittal should not be considered conclusive because the jury was misinstructed on [13] how to calculate the weight of marijuana. The State asserts that, given the evidence presented at Noy's trial, it is obvious that Noy possessed at least eight ounces of marijuana, and therefore the jury's verdict of acquittal must have been the fruit of the flawed jury instruction.

But as we explained in our initial opinion, the State did not introduce the marijuana itself; instead, the State relied on photographs and testimony concerning the marijuana. The photographs showed that the marijuana contained stalks, not just leaves [*549] and buds. Even if the jury had been correctly instructed, they would have been told that stalks are not to be considered when assessing the weight of harvested marijuana. Although there may be a substantial possibility that the erroneous weight-calculation instruction influenced the jury's thinking when they assessed the weight of the marijuana, it is also possible that the jurors were not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the harvested marijuana, minus the stalks, weighed eight ounces or more. Thus, we must apply the collateral estoppel rule of Ashe v. Swenson. See our discussion of a related point in State v. McDonald, 872 P.2d 627, 660 (Alaska App. 1994) [14] .

Moreover, even if we assume that the erroneous jury instruction played an instrumental role in the jury's decision to acquit Noy of possessing eight or more ounces of marijuana, the State would still be bound by the jury's verdict. The law on this point is summarized in Wayne R. LaFave, Jerold H. Israel, and Nancy J. King, Criminal Procedure (2nd ed. 1999):

> If the jury reaches a verdict of acquittal or the judge grants a judgment of acquittal, double jeopardy bars a new trial even if it appears that the acquittal was based on an erroneous interpretation of the law.

Id., § 25.1(g), Vol. 5, p. 648. See also id., § 25.3(b), Vol. 5, pp. 666-68.

This view of the double jeopardy clause is borne out in the case law. See United States v. Martin Linen Supply Co., 430 U.S. 564, 571, 51 L. Ed. 2d 642, 97 S. Ct. 1349, 1354 (1977); Livingston v. Murdaugh, 183 F.3d 300, 301-02 (4th Cir. 1999).

Finally, the State argues for the first time that if we adjudicate the constitutionality of AS 11.71.060(a) in Noy's case, our decision will unfairly preclude the State from attempting to prove that Ravin should [15] be overruled or limited -- i.e., preclude the State from attempting to prove that there is sufficient justification for a criminal statute prohibiting any and all possession of marijuana, even possession of marijuana by adults in their home for personal use.

But our decision in this case merely implements the supreme court's constitutional ruling in Ravin. The State remains free in the future to challenge the continuing vitality of Ravin.

For all of these reasons, the State's petition for rehearing is DENIED.

SUPREME COURT OF ALASKA

28 P.3d 904; 2001 Alas. LEXIS 97

July 27, 2001, Decided

PRIOR HISTORY: [1] Appeal from the Superior Court of the State of Alaska, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Sen K. Tan, Judge. Superior Court No. 3AN-98-7004 CI.

DISPOSITION: The manner in which the State allocates public benefits is subject to constitutional limitation under Alaska's equal protection provision. The State, having undertaken to provide health care for poor Alaskans, must adhere to neutral criteria in distributing that care. It may not deny medically necessary services to eligible individuals based on criteria unrelated to the purposes of the public health care program. Moreover, the DHSS regulation in this case discriminatorily burdens the exercise of a constitutional right. Because we conclude that denial of Medicaid assistance to poor women who medically require abortions violates equal protection, we AFFIRM the decision of the superior court.

I. INTRODUCTION

Alaska's Medicaid program funds virtually all necessary medical services for poor Alaskans -- "regardless of race, age, national origin, or economic standing" n1 -- but it denies funding for medically necessary abortions. Alone among Medicaid-eligible Alaskans, women whose health is endangered [3] by pregnancy are denied health care based solely on political disapproval of the medically necessary procedure. This selective denial of medical benefits violates Alaska's constitutional guarantee of equal protection. Our conclusion is supported by the majority of jurisdictions that have considered comparable restrictions on state funding of medically necessary abortions: these state courts have concluded that, under their state constitutions, government health care programs that fund other medically necessary procedures may not deny assistance to eligible women whose health depends on obtaining abortions. n2
