On the days of departure and return, the traveler receives a prorated M&IE based upon scheduled flight (or other common carrier) departure and actual return times as follows:

Departure Time	Before 9:01 AM	Before 2:01 PM	Before 11:01 PM
M&IE	Full day	Lunch & Dinner	Dinner
Return Time	12:00 PM (Noon)	Before 5:00 PM	After 4:59 PM
M&IE	Breakfast	Breakfast & Lunch	Full day

This table factors in a two-hour check-in period for departures and one hour for luggage retrieval upon arrival. In circumstances where the traveler is required by the carrier to report to the terminal more than two hours prior to departure (such as for international flights), the traveler is to note in the travel authorization the additional time required by the airline and the traveler's actual check in time. In the above table, this additional time (beyond two hours) is added to the departure time to determine the allowable prorated M&IE. For example, if required check in time is three hours before flight time, "Before 9:01 AM" departure time would be adjusted to "Before 10:01 AM."

When travelers drive to a destination, on the days of departure and return, the travelers are entitled to prorate M&IE when they are in travel status at least three consecutive hours during a normal meal period.

Travel Status Less Than 24 Hours, More Than 12 Hours

Travelers who are in travel status less than 24 hours but more than 12 hours and who return to their residence and/or duty station rather than obtaining overnight lodging at their travel destination, may be entitled to an M&IE allowance. For air travel, the M&IE allowance is calculated using the departure and return times presented in the prorated M&IE table above. If the scheduled flight (or other common carrier) departure is before 9:00 a.m., the travelers are entitled to the breakfast M&IE. Travelers may be entitled to the M&IE for lunch and dinner if they are in travel status for at least three consecutive hours during these meal periods.

A traveler, who travels by means other than common carrier, must be in travel status at least three consecutive hours during a meal period to be entitled to the M&IE for that meal.

Travelers who are normally scheduled to work more than ten hours per day must be in travel status at least two hours more than their regular scheduled workday to be eligible for the M&IE allowance. See AAM 320 for details on taxability of such an allowance.

Meals Provided to Travelers

Occasionally, a traveler is provided a meal while at a conference, training, seminar, etc., or as part of a lodging package such as at bed and breakfast inns (where the state is paying for actual lodging costs). When a traveler is provided a meal in these or similar circumstances, the traveler is not eligible for the related M&IE allowance unless sufficient justification is provided by the traveler and approved to obtain the M&IE allowance.

AAM 60.260 Contracting for Subsistence (07-05)

The state may enter into agreements with restaurants, hotels, and lodging houses to furnish subsistence to a traveler or groups of travelers when in the best interest of the state (AS 36.30). A contract for subsistence must comply with appropriate procurement regulations. Such agreements require the vendor to provide itemized invoices for services.

The Alaska Supreme Court is asking for a new superior court judge in Anchorage. The judge would be assigned to civil cases.

An additional judge is needed because Anchorage superior court judges have the highest caseloads in the state and a combination of devoting more time to Child in Need of Aid (CINA) cases and an ever-increasing number of unrepresented litigants has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Although judges' workloads are increasing, some of the additional work is the result of the court system doing a better job meeting the needs of those who come before it. This is particularly true with CINA cases.

Prior CINA practice was to have standing masters preside over all phases of a case with the exception of contested hearings. If a hearing was contested it would be assigned to an available superior court judge who would resolve the contested issue and then return the case to the standing master. Although that practice saved superior court time, it led to other problems.

The new practice begins the same as the old; a CINA case starts with a master until there is a contested issue. However, once that occurs, the case is permanently assigned to a superior court judge; it does not return to the master. Having a judge permanently assigned to the case is a better model in a number of ways, one of which is that it eliminates shuffling the family back and forth between a standing master and any number of superior court judges.

In addition to CINA cases, another prime driver behind the current workload is the prevalence of unrepresented litigants in domestic relations cases. Although we do not have historical statistics that track these cases, Alaska judges, like judges from across the country, have seen a significant increase over the past several years. What we know from current data is that when first filed about 37% of the cases have attorneys for both parties, 25% have an attorney for only one party and in 37% of the cases neither party has an attorney. The percentage of litigants appearing without counsel increases as the cases progress and increases significantly once litigants are filing motions after the initial decree is entered. Most of these post-judgment motions relate to child custody disputes.

Judges cite a list of time-consuming challenges that arise when counsel is absent from one side or both sides. Frequent motion practice, arguments unrelated to the relevant legal issues, delays stemming from the failure to submit needed information and judicial time spent calculating child support awards are some of those challenges. However, even though these litigants take more time, their cases are as important as those where the parties have lawyers and the judiciary is committed to ensuring that they too can meaningfully access the court.

Adding one new judge will not significantly reduce the workload of the Anchorage superior court (more judges will likely be needed in the very near future), but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage that workload. Thank you for considering this request.

Dear Senator French:

The Alaska Supreme Court respectfully requests that the House Judiciary Committee schedule a hearing on SB 246, which creates a new superior court judge position in Anchorage. The judge will handle civil cases.

An additional judge is needed because Anchorage superior court judges are the busiest in the state and a combination of more time being devoted to Child in Need of Aid cases and an ever-increasing number of unrepresented litigants has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Adding one new judge will not solve this problem (more judges will likely be needed in the very near future), but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage the workload.

Senator Hollis French
State Capital, Room 417
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Senator French:

Senate Bill No. 249 ("SB 249") would amend laws regarding access to public records. The Department of Law supports the attempt in SB 249 to remove unnecessary inconsistencies in the definitions of "public record" and "record" and to partially codify the Email Retention Policy issued by the Department of Administration on August 7, 2009. The bill, however, raises some significant legal and policy issues.

We are concerned that sections 4 and 5 of SB 249 create substantial, unfunded monetary burdens for all Alaska public agencies in responding to Alaska Public Records Act requests. State and municipal agencies already absorb the cost of reviewing records for privileged and confidential information.[1] The personnel time required for these tasks is often vastly greater than that required to search for and copy the requested records. As discussed in section A, below, the bill seeks to add to public agencies' fiscal burden the labor and overhead costs of copying records. And, apparently, it would require them to cover the cost of providing electronic services and products when the time needed to do so does not exceed five-person hours in a calendar month: under current law, the requester pays this cost.

In addition, as explained below, we have several additional concerns. The definitions (in sections 1, 3, and 7) of "public record" and "record," including the definition of "electronic transmission" (which is also in section 2), are not clear or are overly broad or both. The intended scope of the proposed Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act amendment (in section 2), which would prohibit certain electronic transmissions, is not clear and could substantially impede state business; also, the proposed amendment does not seem appropriate for inclusion in the Ethics Act. Finally, the proposed Public Records Act amendment (in section 6), which would add a provision making tampering with or otherwise affecting the availability of a public record an undefined criminal offense, is incomplete and also might impede state business.

A. The Proposed Amendments Would Fiscally Burden State and Municipal Agencies.

The Alaska Supreme Court has characterized public access to records as a fundamental right. But who should bear the cost of responding to record requests is not clear. For example, providing persons copies of their own medical records without charge seems reasonable, but should limited state and municipal revenues be used to cover the cost of responding to extremely broad requests of large corporations for records that are sought for commercial uses? And if public agencies are to bear more of the expense of responding to record requests, the legislature should consider what source of funds the agencies should use to cover the additional costs. Addressing these issues is especially important given the following: the exponential growth in public records because of the increase in the number of electronic records; the numerous locations where electronic and non-electronic records are stored; and the increased public awareness of the availability of, and interest in obtaining, government records. Also, if the cost to a requester of obtaining records decreases, requests for records will likely increase.

Accordingly, sections 4 and 5 of SB 249 raise significant concerns because they would amend the Public Records Act to shift more of the cost of responding to record requests from requesters to state and municipal agencies: i.e., the amendments would require public agencies to use additional government revenues to respond to the requests of any requesters regardless of the commercial or non-commercial use of the records or the electronic services and products.[2]

Section 4 would shift costs to public agencies by amending AS 40.25.110(b) to limit the fees that are chargeable for copying records to the "cost of materials and supplies used to duplicate the records": "the labor costs or overhead costs associated with the duplication" would not be recoverable.[3] Thus, section 4 would shift from requesters

[2] Under the Public Records Act, "'public agency' means a political subdivision, department, institution, board, commission, division, authority, public corporation, council, committee, or other instrumentality of the state or a municipality; 'public agency' includes the University of Alaska and the Alaska Railroad Corporation." AS 40.25.220(2).

to each public agency the personnel cost and the proportionate share of the overhead costs of operating copy machines and printers that are incurred when responding to public record requests. And section 4 would do so without regard to the breadth of a request, how many times a requester has made requests, and whether a request is likely to serve a commercial or personal interest, as opposed to a public interest. And if personnel and overhead costs are paid with government revenues, even less incentive will exist for requesters to narrow their requests and to choose to review records at the agencies, rather than request copies.

Also, excluding personnel costs from the costs that are recoverable when a public agency copies records would conflict with AS 40.25.110(c), which provides that, "[i]f the production of records for one requester in a calendar month exceeds five person-hours, the public agency shall require the requester to pay the personnel costs required during the month to complete the search and copying tasks;" personnel costs are defined as "the actual salary and benefit costs for the personnel time required to perform the search and copying tasks."

Section 5 would amend AS 40.25.115(a) to delete the reference to AS 40.25.110(c) and therefore would shift costs of responding to requests for electronic services and products to public agencies: under current law, the requester pays those costs. AS 40.25.115(a) now provides that, "[n]otwithstanding AS 40.25.110(b) — (d) to the contrary, upon request and payment of a fee established under (b) of this subsection, a public agency may provide electronic services and products involving public records to members of the public." By removing the reference to AS 40.25.110(c), section 5 seems to require agencies to absorb costs that are now recoverable when a public agency provides electronic services and products: i.e., to make the costs of responding to an AS 40.25.115 request recoverable only "[i]f the production . . . for one requester in a calendar month exceeds five person-hours." AS 40.25.110(c).

By shifting to each public agency the cost of providing electronic services and products when the time needed to respond to a request is five-person hours or less in a calendar month, section 5 could very substantially increase the cost to public agencies of complying with the Public Records Act. This is so because of the likelihood that public agencies will be asked to respond to a great number of AS 40.25.115 requests, and because the agencies cannot recover the cost to review records for information that is protected from disclosure by a common law privilege or a constitutional or statutory source of confidentiality.[4] For example, when (in the next few months) the state completes the conversion to the Symantec Enterprise Vault email archiving system, any or all of the contents of any state executive branch employee's email account will be producible in five person-hours. Under the law now, a requester will be required to pay almost $300 for the work. If this fee is statutorily waived by the enactment of section 5, no reason will exist for members of the public not to seek all of the emails in the email account of any public agency employee; and each month, a requester could make such a request, or any number of requesters could make such requests.

While SB 249 would commit even more of the limited revenues of the state and municipalities to responding to Public Records Act requests, the legislature may wish to consider requiring requesters to pay the cost of reviewing records for protected information, especially where the requester is a corporation, other entity, or individual who is not a resident of, and otherwise has no substantial contacts with, Alaska; seeks records for a commercial purpose; is not seeking records concerning himself or herself (such as medical records); or has made an extremely broad request for records.[5]

B. The Definitions of "Public Record" and "Record" Raise Several Concerns.

Section 1 of SB 249 would amend the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) definition of "public record" that is used in the state's criminal statutes; section 3 would amend the AS 40.21.150(6) definition of "record" that is used in the state's records retention statute; and section 7 would amend the AS 40.25.220(3) definition of "public record" that is used in the Public Records Act. Significant problems exist with each of these proposed amendments.

Records Act. The vast majority of the work involved reviewing records for privileged and confidential information.

[5] Depending on certain factors—such as the amount of search time, number of copies, and intended use of the records—the federal government and some states, including Michigan and Mississippi, require or permit public agencies to seek reimbursement for the cost of reviewing records for protected information. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(ii)(I) (providing that "fees shall be limited to reasonable standard charges for document search, duplication, and review, when records are requested for commercial use"); M.C.L. § 15.234; Miss. Code Ann. § 25-61-7.

1. The Definition of "Electronic Transmission" Is Vague and Overly Broad.

Sections 1, 3, and 7 of SB 249 would include "electronic transmissions" in the definitions of "public record" and "record."[6] The definition of "electronic transmission" would cover electronic mail and "any other form of communication . . . that creates a record that can be retained, retrieved, and reviewed by a recipient of the communication and that can be reproduced in paper form through an automated process." This definition is so broad that it would require that telephone conversations be treated as "public records" and as "records" under the state's criminal, records retention, and access-to-records laws: telephone conversations on state landlines are digitized and, therefore, can be retained and reviewed and can be reproduced in paper form through the use of speech recognition software.

Also, the SB 249 definition of "electronic transmission" includes text and instant messages, but public agencies are unable to capture text messages and cannot efficiently capture instant messages. Third-party vendors provide these services. Text messages can be retrieved only from a cell phone's internal storage or the vendor's server or backup storage, and therefore retrieving text messages depends on the vendor and is subject to its charges. Also, the state is aware of no software for automatically retaining instant messages. To save instant messages, users must manually store them, which defeats the purpose of using this communication tool. And even if text and instant messages could reasonably be stored and retrieved, given the exponential increase in their use, the costs of storing, searching, reviewing, and producing such messages would be very substantial now and continue to grow. If the definitions of "public record" and "record" are amended to cover instant and text messages, public agencies might well be forced to ban the use of such forms of communication because of the costs of—and potential to violate the law by not—saving and producing them, regardless of the effects of such a ban on government efficiency.

[6] The same definition of "electronic transmission" is in sections 1, 3, and 7. Section 2 of SB 249 also includes a definition of "electronic transmission"; this definition—unlike the one in sections 1, 3, and 7—includes the clause "whether the recipient is the state or any other person the sender intended to receive the electronic transmission"; regardless, the same problems with the definition of "electronic transmission" in sections 1, 3, and 7 apply to the definition of "electronic transmission" in section 2.

2. SB 249 Does Not Make the Definitions of "Public Record" and "Record" Consistent.

In several respects, SB 249 does not remove unnecessary inconsistencies in the definitions of "public record" and "record."

a. Section 1 retains in the definition of "public record" "staff manuals and instructions to staff that affect the public." These records are not explicitly referenced in the AS 40.21.150(6) definition of "record" (section 3) or the AS 40.25.220(3) definition of "public record" (section 7). The need to expressly reference these records in AS 11.81.900(b)(53) and the reason for not doing so in AS 40.21.150(6) and AS 40.25.220(3) are not clear.

b. Sections 3 and 7, but not section 1, would add "electronic record" to the AS 40.21.150(6) definition of "record" and the AS 40.25.220(3) definition of "public record." This term should be added to the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) definition of "public record."

c. Section 3, but not sections 1 and 7, excludes from the definition of "record" "library and museum material developed or acquired and preserved solely for reference, historical, or exhibition purposes, extra copies of documents preserved solely for convenience of reference, or stocks of publications and process documents." This exclusion should be added to the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) and AS 40.25.220(3) definitions of "public record" and expanded to encompass all other "readily available" records, as that term is defined in 2 AAC 96.100(b); the definition of "readily available" should also include all records that are available on the Internet.

d. Section 7, but not sections 1 and 3, excludes from the definition of "public record" "proprietary software programs." This exclusion should be added to the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) and AS 40.21.150(6) definitions of "public record" and "record."

3. The Phrase "Or Appropriate for Preservation" Is Unnecessary.

Sections 1, 3, and 7 would amend the definitions of "public record" and "record" to cover records "preserved, required by law to be preserved, or appropriate for preservation." If a record is not subject to an approved (under AS 40.21) records retention schedule and a public agency is not otherwise legally required to retain it, it would not be "appropriate for preservation": only records that are "preserved" (for their informational value or as evidence of the organization or operation of the agency) or that a public agency is legally required to retain should be "public records" in the context of the state's criminal and access-to-records statutes and "records" in the context of the state's records retention statute. Accordingly, the phrase "appropriate for preservation" should be deleted from the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) definition of "public record" and the AS 40.21.150(6) definition of "record."

4. The Phrase "Under Law" Is Unnecessary

Section 7 would amend the Public Records Act definition of "public record" to include the phrase "under law": "'public record' . . . means each of the following developed or received under law or in connection with the transaction of official business . . . ." The phrase would add nothing to the AS 40.25.220(3) definition of "public record": records developed or received by a public agency "under law" are developed or received "in connection with the transaction of official business." Accordingly, this phrase should be deleted from the AS 11.81.900(b)(53) definition of "public record" and the AS 40.21.150(6) definition of "record."

5. A Means of Paying for Private Contractor's Records Is Not Identified.

Section 7 would not change the following language in the definition of "public record" in the Public Records Act: "developed or received . . . by a private contractor for a public agency." AS 40.25.220(3). The Act does not, however, expressly address the recovery of the costs contractors charge to respond to record requests: i.e., to search for records, review records for protected information, and duplicate records. The Act should be amended to make clear whether—even in response to extraordinarily broad requests that serve only commercial interests—the public agencies or requesters must bear these costs.

C. The Proposed Ethics Act Amendment Might Impede State Business and Raises Other Concerns.

Section 2 of SB 249 would amend the Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act, AS 39.52, to provide that, "[w]hen taking or withholding official action, a public officer may not send or cause another to send information by electronic transmission within a system for electronic delivery unless the system is operated and maintained by the state"; and the section would amend the Ethics Act to provide that a covered electronic transmission is "a public record under AS 40.25." The intended scope of this prohibition—which includes no exceptions, even for covered communications regarding any law enforcement or emergency matters—is unclear, and the prohibition might substantially impede state business.

The amendment has been described as prohibiting certain state officers from using email systems other than the state email system to conduct state business. However, given the terms used, the amendment appears to have a much broader reach. It would not simply codify the part of the Department of Administration's Email Retention Policy that requires executive branch employees to use (whenever feasible) their state email accounts to conduct state business. The phrase "electronic transmission within a system for electronic delivery" appears to encompass more than email.[7] The term "public officer" includes all state employees, regardless of classification, and all members of boards and commissions subject to the Ethics Act.[8] And the term "official action" is also broadly defined: it includes not only what would be considered a final state action, but also advice, participation, and assistance leading to the action.[9] Accordingly, the prohibition in section 2 would arguably apply to participation by any public officer in a matter of

[7] The definition of "electronic transmission" is vague and overly broad for the reasons explained above. The meaning and scope of the phrase "within a system for electronic delivery" is also vague: e.g., does it include the computer and, therefore, prohibit a public officer from sending an "electronic transmission" from a home computer? And may the electronic delivery system be operated and maintained by a contractor of the state?

[8] Testimony has suggested that this prohibition will not apply to every "public officer" as that term is defined in the Ethics Act at AS 39.52.960(21), but no restriction appears in the bill.

[9] "'[O]fficial action' means advice, participation, or assistance, including, for example, a recommendation, decision, approval, disapproval, vote, or similar action, including inaction, by a public officer." AS 39.52.960(14).

state business. Thus, the prohibition on sending an "electronic transmission within a system for electronic delivery" that is not "operated and maintained by the state" would result in consequences such as the following:

1. public officers would be prohibited from requesting that others—including state contractors and other non-state personnel—send information to other third-parties' electronic mail addresses or facsimile machines;
2. public officers would be prohibited from sending facsimiles from any non-state equipment to any non-state equipment (e.g., from a state contractor's office to a federal government office), even if the facsimile were also sent to a state office;
3. public officers would be prohibited from leaving messages on social media, such as Twitter and Facebook, for state business;
4. public officers would be prohibited from leaving voicemail messages on any system not operated and maintained by the state;
5. public officers would be prohibited from engaging in telephone conversations with any non-state person with the capacity to record and transcribe (through an automated process) such conversations; and
6. the state would need to provide state email accounts to all volunteer members of state boards and commissions.

The prospect of inadvertently committing a violation of the Ethics Act or a provision of the criminal code would likely cause state officers to avoid the use of accepted and efficient means of modern communication.

Also, if section 7 is enacted, no need exists for proposed subsection AS 39.52.135(b), which provides that an "electronic transmission" under the proposed subsection AS 39.52.135(a) is "a public record under AS 40.25." Section 7 includes "electronic transmissions" in the AS 40.25.220(3) definition of "public records."

Finally, section 2 does not seem to fit within the Ethics Act. Generally, the Ethics Act seeks to preserve the integrity of state action by prohibiting conduct or the misuse of state resources that results in personal gain (e.g., benefits a personal or financial interest of a public officer), provides an unwarranted benefit to another, or otherwise suggests an intention to improperly influence state action. The prohibition in section 2—i.e., on sending "information by electronic transmission within a system for electronic delivery" that is not "operated and maintained by the state"—does not appear to be based on the same premise. Also, in the Ethics Act, the legislature mandates a focus on substantial and material conflicts and misconduct and recognizes that minor conflicts are unavoidable. The Ethics Act standards in AS 39.52.110(b) for making the relevant determination would not apply to the conduct prohibited by section 2 because the use of "a system for electronic delivery" that is not "operated and maintained by the state" does not arise from a public officer's outside interests and would likely always have an insignificant effect on a matter of state business. Thus, section 2 seems inappropriate for inclusion in the Ethics Act.[10]

D. The Proposed Criminal Provision Is Critically Vague and Might Well Substantially Impede State Business.

Section 6 is critically vague. It would amend AS 40.25.125 to subject a person who tampers with or otherwise affects the availability of a public record to "prosecution for a criminal offense, including an offense under AS 11.56.815 and AS 11.56.820." Other than AS 11.56.815 and AS 11.56.820, however, section 6 does not identify what crime and what degree of the crime that person would be guilty of.[11]

Also, section 6 would likely substantially impede state business. First, given that "public records" include records "that are developed or received . . . by a private contractor for a public agency," the section could make retaining contractors substantially more difficult and expensive. AS 40.25.220(3). Second, the section would make public agency employees extremely reluctant to discard records in compliance with record retention schedules, resulting in extraordinary records management problems. Third, it would make public agency employees extremely reluctant to participate in efforts to respond to public record requests because of a concern that their involvement would lead to charges that they somehow unlawfully attempted to affect the availability of a public record when, for example, their search for a record was unsuccessful; they withheld a record on the grounds that it is privileged or confidential; they misunderstood the request; or they accidentally overlooked a record.

[10] The prohibition would seem to be more consistent with AS 39.25.160, which is part of the State Personnel Act.

[11] A provision—if any—making a violation of the Public Records Act a criminal offense should apply only to actions intended to prevent the state from substantially complying with its statutory obligations and, accordingly, should be limited to the period between when a sufficiently clear request is received (triggering the duty to preserve and produce or identify records) and all opportunities to appeal have expired or been exhausted. Also, it should not apply in connection with any record that is identified as privileged or confidential: a public officer should not fear prosecution for protecting privileged or confidential information.

We are available to answer any questions you have regarding our comments on SB 249 and to work with the Judiciary Committee and Senator Ellis to address our concerns.

SPONSOR STATEMENT – SENATE BILL 249

SB 249 – An Act relating to official action by electronic transmission, to records, and to public records.

SB 249 clarifies and strengthens current law regarding the preservation of and access to public records. Our public records statutes are made up of three chapters, relating to the preservation and maintenance of records, and a criminal statute to set out potential punishments. Inconsistencies and variations between the three have led to confusion and controversy on the part of the public in its attempts to access records they are entitled to, and the agencies in their efforts to preserve and maintain records while balancing open government with personal privacy and legal limits.

As technology advances and government and society are forced to adapt, it becomes essential for our Public Records statutes to keep up with current practices in order to fulfill their original purpose. Alaska's original public records law was adopted as a part of the Organic Act of 1913. Over the years, it has been revised and expanded to keep up with changes in government practice and technological advances. However, the original statute provides a powerful statement of intent: "Every person has a right to inspect any public writing or record . . . and every public officer having the custody thereof is bound to permit such inspection. . ."

The bill makes the following changes:

- Applies a consistent definition to the term 'public record' throughout the Alaska statutes.
- Clarifies that electronic transmissions, including text messages, instant messages, email, or other forms of electronic communication are included within that definition.
- Clarifies the duty of state agencies to preserve records, and the ability of the public to access records which are required by law to be preserved.
- Amends the Executive Branch Ethics Act to codify in statute Commissioner Kreitzer's policy which requires state employees to use state electronic systems in order to take official actions so that emails about state business can be included in the public records systems.
- Limits the fees that may be charged to members of the public who wish to access public records to the actual costs of materials and supplies needed to provide the records.
- Explains that impeding either the preservation of or access to public records is a violation of existing criminal law.

SB 249 preserves the ability of Alaskans to keep their government open and accountable. I urge you to join me in support of ethical and transparent government.

Focus: State of Alaska Executive Branch Employees	State of Alaska Department of Administration Office of the Commissioner Chief Information Officer
Authority: AS 44.21

POLICY

Emails, including attachments, are subject to the same records retention requirements that apply to any other electronic or non-electronic records. Like paper records, if an email is subject to multiple records retention requirements, it must be archived for the longest applicable period. The applicable records retention requirements are the State of Alaska executive branch records retention schedules imposed pursuant to AS 40.21 and any implementing regulations, and the requirements imposed pursuant to a notification of a legal hold in connection with judicial or administrative litigation, or imposed because of a request under the Alaska Public Records Act, AS 40.25.100 - 40.25.220.

Accordingly, all executive branch employees are responsible for archiving into the designated executive branch email archiving system their sent and received emails (including any attachments) in accordance with the policy identified here.[I])

ALL EXECUTIVE BRANCH EMPLOYEES

When executive branch employees conduct state business through email they must, whenever feasible, use the state's electronic mail system. In some circumstances, employees may need to use, or may inadvertently use, private email accounts to conduct state business. In those instances, employees must send copies of those messages to their state email accounts.

Under no circumstance may State of Alaska personally identifiable information (PII) be sent to or from an executive branch employee's private email account. PII is defined in AS 45.48.590(4).[2]

Employees are required to follow the executive branch email policy. Failure to do so may result in discipline up to and including dismissal.

EXECUTIVE EMPLOYEES

Any email sent or received by an executive employee[3]) may be deleted within 90 days unless the email is subject to a records retention requirement, public records request or legal hold. If within that 90-day period a sent or received email becomes subject to a records retention requirement, public records request or legal hold then it cannot be deleted unless the requirement, request, or hold is lifted before the end of the period. All email not deleted within 90 days will be automatically archived.

NON-EXECUTIVE EMPLOYEES

AS 45.48.590(4): "personal information' means (A) an individnal's passport number, driver's license number, state identification number, bank account number, credit card number, debit card number, other payment card number, financial account information, or information from a financial application; or (B) a combination of an individual's (i) name; and (ii) medical information, insurance policy number, employment information, or employment history ....."

[3] Definition of Execntive Employee:
The following persons are executive employees: (I) the Executive Branch employees defined as "public officials" in AS 39.50.200(a)(9); and (2) the persons employed in the following job classifications:

Assistant Commissioner
Executive Director
Assistant Director
Labor Relations Manager
State Accountant
State Leasing and Facilities Manager
Department of Public Safety Liaison

Veterans Affairs Administrator
Administrator, Violent Crimes Compensation Board
Administrator, Highway Safety Planning Agency
Marine Highway Transportation Services Manager

Positions placed in the partially exempt service under AS 39.25.130(a)(I) or (2) will be added to this list.

If a records retention requirement applies to a sent or received email of a non-executive employee, then within 90 days after the email was sent or received, it must be archived into the state's designated email archiving system in accordance with the records retention requirement. If an email is subject to multiple records retention requirements, it must be archived for the longest applicable period. Any email not archived within 90 days after it was sent or received will be automatically deleted.

EDUCATION

All employees with an email account must be educated on the executive branch email policy. Any new employee with an assigned email account must be educated on the policy before the account is activated. The education portion of this policy does not take effect until the state implements the email archiving system.

Our view: Private e-mails

Court says loophole is OK; legislators, governor should act

(08/14/09 21:17:14)

Judge Jack Smith says there is no state law requiring state employees to do their state business on the state e-mail system. With the ruling, employees may still potentially hide messages from public scrutiny by using private e-mail accounts, as Gov. Sarah Palin and her staff did. OK, then, it's time to pass a state law.

State Rep. Mike Doogan offered one such bill last year, HB195. It went nowhere, though. Doogan is stuck in the House minority, with relatively little power.

In any event, it will be months before the Legislature can close this gap in the state public records law. Lawmakers don't convene again until January.

In the meantime, Gov. Sean Parnell can help immensely by taking a more forceful approach to this question.

His spokeswoman Sharon Leighow said last week that Gov. Parnell stands by a previous directive from Gov. Palin's chief of staff, who said any private e-mails concerning state business must be copied into the state's e-mail system.

However, that directive was issued only to the governor's office staff, rather than to all state government employees. Leighow said in an e-mail Thursday that a new state policy is due out soon and will deal with this issue.

Gov. Parnell needs to issue a clear, unambiguous order to all state employees and ensure that all e-mails about state business appear in the state e-mail system. That way, the e-mails can be properly archived for possible public access until the Legislature has time to write this requirement into state law.

BOTTOM LINE: E-mails about state business need to be in the state e-mail system.

CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 252(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered: Referred:

Sponsor(s): SENATE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the crime of failure to appear; relating to arrest for violating certain conditions of release; relating to release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal; relating to material witnesses; relating to temporary release; relating to release on a petition to revoke probation; relating to the first appearance before a judicial officer after arrest; relating to service of process for domestic violence protective orders; making conforming amendments; amending Rules 5 and 41, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 206 and 603, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) with criminal negligence does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security for any appearance of the person that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458].

* Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours' written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; the defendant shall notify the surety; and

Please draft the following amendments to SB252:

1. Add criminal negligence mental state to failure to appear section 1 and in any other sections as needed to conform.

2. On page 4 at line 18, delete the first sentence in (e).

3. On page 7, at line 18, change (B) to be felony crimes against a person – both charged and previously convicted. Change (C) to felony offenses. Add a new section for charged with felony level DUI.

4. On page 10 line 29 – we need language in addition to telephone for other technology (for instance, courtrooms are beginning to use Skype).

5. In section 12, at line 25 delete the words "the person" and subsititue "it is" established so that the sentence reads "if it is established by…"

6. In section 24, change language to the amendment attached.

(c) Separate Bonds. If a performance bond is required, it must be enforced separately from an appearance or bail bond.

(1) Appearance in court may not be a condition of a performance bond. A court may not order an appearance bond be concurrent with an appearance bond in a pending case unless the surety who posted the first appearance bond approves.

(2) The court may not change a performance or appearance bail requirement, without agreement by the surety, unless;

(A) the surety waives the requirement for agreement in advance and in writing or;

(B) the court, in writing, finds that the change in the condition of bail poses no increase in risk of loss to the surety and the court sets forth in writing the reason for finding that there is no increase in the risk of loss to the surety.

Hello Cindy. We would still like to see the removal of lines 22 through 25 on page 4. That is the section that requires the defendant to sign a release agreement and file it with the clerk of court before he or she may be released from custody. I have not pushed this with the Department of Law, though they know of our concerns. What I have been trying to ascertain is how often we already do this. We do this in many locations and we apparently do it in all cases with a third party custodian. However, one of our goals is to move away from those practices that require clerks to copy and fax documents. This goes in the opposite direction.

The court system is currently changing our computer system so that clerks enter the conditions of release into the computer (which are then electronically available to law enforcement) and then simply print off the required number of forms (e.g. one for the defendant, one for defense counsel, one for the prosecutor, one for the court file, etc.) Everyone gets a copy off of the printer in the court room and the clerk does not have to make additional copies on the copy machine and does not have to fax copies anywhere. This is the kind of process we want to move to in as many cases as possible. The trouble with the signature requirement is that it keeps us stuck in the copy and fax process.

It is not that we can't do this, it is that it keeps us from streamlining our process. And, the defendant's signature is not required. Defendants are subject to their conditions of release regardless of whether they sign them. I have no reason to believe that a defendant who would otherwise violated those conditions will be less likely to violate had they signed a release agreement promising not to. So, this provision keeps us from improving our in-court practices without creating any corresponding benefit.

We also need to fix the problem with getting surety permission to change conditions of release found in section 24 on page 18 at lines 25-27. I have been working with the Department of Law on this. Our concern is that the current language seems to require the entity posting an appearance bond to agree to any changes to the conditions of release. That is a problem.

Yesterday I spoke with Fred's Bail Bonds (who do the vast majority of all appearance bonds in Alaska) about the provision. They do not care what the conditions of release are. Getting their permission would be a waste of time for them and for the entire system. They do, however, care about the practice of concurrent bail. That is the practice of a judge adding a new charge to an existing bail bond. Section 24 was requested by the Division of Insurance because they believe that the practice of concurrent bail violates contract law and they oversee bail bonding companies. I agree that prohibiting concurrent bail is a good idea. With the help of Judge Steinkruger, I have proposed the following language to fix that problem:

Subject: SB 252 Bail Bill

Hello Cindy. Here is a description of one of the concerns that the court system has with SB 252. We have gone over this with the Department of Law; they may or may not agree to remove this provision. I will be sending more issues to you later today and tomorrow, but I am getting behind on this and decided not to wait until I have it all written down before I send anything.

Probably the biggest single change we would like to see is the deletion of lines 14 through 16 on page 4. That is the provision that directs the court clerk to issue a report that describes any previous criminal charges against the person and the person's history of compliance with conditions of release that are in the records of the court. There are several reasons why we would like to see this section removed.

1) The information is largely redundant. The parties should have already provided the court with the defendant's criminal history. If not presented at the original bail hearing (and one of the reasons for increasing to 48 hours the time for a defendant's first appearance is to allow the prosecutor to get more information for the first bail hearing), then it certainly would have been presented at the first bail review hearing.
2) If the bill anticipates court clerks searching through volumes of paper records looking for the defendant's history then the proposal is all but unworkable. Many defendants have boxes of case files. I think that the sponsor contemplates a search through our computer reports, which is possible, but still objectionable.
3) To the extent that the bill contemplates a computer records search and those records have some information that are not found in other databases, then, since March of 2009, both the prosecutor and the defense counsel have the same access as the court to those records. If the parties believe that there is information in those reports that are relevant they can search them and bring that information to the court's attention.
4) In an adversarial system it is the responsibility of the parties to bring all relevant information to the court's attention. It is not a proper role for the court to do its own fact-finding research.
5) Finally, there is no connection between gathering this information and the decision to hold a bail review hearing. The court can't hold a hearing until it has the report, but nothing in the report has any bearing on whether to hold the hearing. It is a procedural requirement that serves no procedural purpose.

This work takes time and will affect hundreds of cases. We would very much like to see this removed from the bill. Thanks, Doug Hello all. Today I spoke with Annett, who is the office manager from Fred's bail bonds. They are not interested in conditions of release and don't want to have to be involved in issues related to conditions of release. They are, obviously, interested in concurrent bail.

As you know, our concern with the current proposed amendment to Criminal Rule 41(c) is that it is too broad and would require Fred's to consent to any change in conditions of release. So, how about if we try this:

> The court may not order concurrent bail or bond unless the surety who posted the surety is in agreement. Concurrent bail or bond is when the same bail or bond applies to two different cases of the same defendant.
> Whenever a performance bond has been posted, any modifications to the conditions of release will result in the remand of the defendant until a new performance bond has been posted. No remand is necessary if, prior to the modification, the surety agrees to the modification.

This prohibits concurrent bail (which is the concern of the Division of Insurance and the appearance bond providers), and it prohibits changes to conditions of release, which addresses the concerns of those who post performance bonds.

Still the performance bond issue seems to be a minor one. Out of 3,303 performance bonds issued in FY 09, a total of 231 were forfeited with 26 of those being reinstated. That works out to about 6% of performance bonds being forfeited. We have no way of knowing how many (if any) were forfeited due to a condition that was added after the bond was posted.

Let me know what you think. Doug

Subject: SB 252 Bail Bill

Hello Cindy. Lines 10 and 11 on page 2 allows a person charged with failure to appear to offer an affirmative defense if he or she contacted the court or judicial officer orally and in writing prior to the scheduled hearing. We do not want defendants calling judges, either at home or in their offices. We would like to see the removal of "judicial officer" on line 10.

The court would like to see the removal of lines 22 through 25 on page 4. That section requires the defendant to sign a release agreement and file it with the clerk of court before he or she may be released from custody. Although some courts already do this in many cases, it creates real problems when the defendant is not in the courtroom and the hearing is conducted telephonically. It would require more work for clerks and more work for corrections (as conditions of release are faxed to corrections, signed by the defendant and then faxed back to the court) and would come with very little, if any, benefit. The defendants already have their conditions of release explained to them and they are bound by them whether they sign anything or not. It is not clear that a defendant who signs his or her conditions of release is any more likely to abide by them.

Section 5 deals with third party custodians. Lines 8 and 9 on page 11 require a third party custodian to appear in court. Like other provisions in this bill, that does not work for telephonic hearings. Many times the third party is in a village and cannot fly to the courthouse in another community. If this section remains in the bill it will mean that many very good third party custodians will not be able to serve.

We need to do more work on two provisions related to (1) notice to a surety prior to changes in bail conditions and (2) notice to and consent from a surety prior to making a change. Those provisions are found on page 4, line 17 and on page 18, lines 25 – 27 respectively. Although the court understands the problem being addressed in these two sections (the court changing the bail conditions in a way that may impact the surety's decision to remain a surety without telling or getting consent from the surety), as drafted, these two provisions will add considerable time to the bail process. We will continue to work on this issue.

Thanks, Doug

Re: Senate Bill 252 – Bail Reform

Dear Chairman French:

Thank you for the thoughtful and thorough hearing that you held for SB 252 (sexual assault and abuse) today and for our meeting on other criminal law legislation. I am writing to ask that you consider scheduling Senate Bill 252, the bail reform bill, for a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee as soon as practical. I hope you will not think this is presumptuous, but there are good reasons to hear the bail bill: in addition to protection of the public and other victims, victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence will greatly benefit from the passage of the bill. Although bail reform is not directly targeted at sexual abuse or domestic violence in the state, the bill would provide additional protection to victims of these crimes.

Our bail laws date back to 1966. It is clear that when the legislature adopted these statutes, times were not as difficult as present. For example, unless a person has been convicted of an unclassified felony or a class A felony, our bail laws allow a person found guilty of any other crime, either by plea or by verdict, to be released pending the imposition of sentence or during an appeal. The following scenarios are only a few of many examples of the danger that can result from the application of the current law.

> Larry Berryhill, IJU-07-992 CR, was convicted of two counts of Sexual Abuse of a Minor in the Second Degree for having sexual contact with a young boy who worked for him at his lodge in Gustavus. After being found guilty, and over the state's objection, the court released him on an unsecured signature bond, in lieu of posting bail, in the amount of $25,000. Mr. Berryhill did not appear for his sentencing. Alaska State Troopers and law enforcement agents from other states (Mr. Berryhill had committed similar crimes in other states) found that Mr. Berryhill had fled to Argentina, and was vacationing in New Zealand and Europe when he should have appeared in court for his sentencing. Mr. Berryhill died before the Troopers were able to arrest him. He did not spend a single day in jail for his sexual abuse of that young boy.

Michael Williams, 3AN-10-166 CR, has been convicted of a felony five times, two of the felonies were federal armed bank robbery convictions from the late 1980s. In January, 2008, he was charged with Robbery in the First Degree for a home invasion robbery with multiple victims. The state proceeded with the prosecution under the three strikes law – with a 99 year sentence possible if convicted. This potential sentence is higher than most people convicted of homicide would receive. Over the state's objection, bail was set at $5,000 cash appearance bond and a third party custodian was appointed. The state requested several times that his bail be increased, but was unsuccessful. Mr. Williams skipped out soon after release, and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. He has not been found.

James Spencer, 3AN-09-2113 CR, was charged with Robbery in the First Degree after confronting a Carr's employee with a handgun. Over the state's objection, his bail was set at $1,000 cash performance bond, and $5,000 cash or corporate appearance bond. Last month, Mr. Spencer was arrested and charged with a new Robbery in the First Degree for an armed robbery at the Burger King (3AN010-2471 CR).

Jack Lee Espinoza, Jr., 3AN-10-2113 CR, was charged with two counts of Robbery in the First Degree. He had been convicted of more than 10 crimes in the past, several of them were felonies. Over the state's objection, Mr. Espinoza had been released on bail of $2,500 cash or corporate appearance bond and ankle monitoring. Within 48 hours of his release, Mr. Espinoza had cut off his ankle monitor, and with another person, committed another armed robbery at a trailer in Anchorage. The victim was shot, allegedly by the other person, during the robbery.

How SB 252 will help avoid these problems

Section 10 of SB 252 (page 13, beginning at line 26) provides that a person found guilty of a sexual felony may not be released pending imposition of sentence or appeal. The legislature has raised the maximum term of imprisonment for a person convicted of a sexual felony to 99 years; with that maximum term the danger of flight is high. Additionally, the danger of sex offenders victimizing others is significant. Mr. Berryhill would not have been released after being found guilty of sexual abuse under SB 252.

SB 252 is similar to federal law in part because it would adopt a presumption, that is rebuttable, that no combination of conditions or monetary bail would ensure the safety of the public and the appearance of the defendant in cases where the person is either charged with an unclassified or a class A felony (similar to current law), or the defendant is a higher risk of flight or danger to the public (new in SB 252). The bill provides that other persons with higher risk include the following:

- persons charged with a felony who have a prior felony conviction and less that five years have elapsed since unconditional release for the prior felony;
- persons charged with a crime committed while the person was on release for another charge or conviction;
- persons charged with a domestic violence crime if the person has a conviction for a domestic violence crime within the previous five years;
- persons arrested in connection with a felony charge or conviction out of state and the person is a fugitive from the other jurisdiction.

The individuals described in the scenarios above (except for Mr. Berryhill) would have the burden of going forward, under SB 252, with suggestions for release conditions. For example, Mr. Williams would have to present information and suggestions for conditions of release that would satisfy a judicial officer that he would not be a danger to the public and he would not be a flight risk. Mr. Williams still has the constitutional right to have bail set for him.

Additionally, SB 252 would adopt standards for third party custodians so that, for example, a person charged with crimes, a person who is on probation, or a person with recent convictions could not act as a third party custodian. SB 252 would require a judicial officer to do basic screening of a person before appointing the person as a custodian. Defendants have taken advantage of third party custodians in the past. There have been advertisements on Craig's list for third party custodians (see attached).

Misconceptions about SB 252

We have heard several comments about SB 252 that are simply not accurate. For example, the bill changes the deadline for the first appearance before a court of a person arrested from 24 to 48 hours. This change has been described as contrary to the practice of a majority of other states. As can be seen by the attached memorandum and chart, Alaska is one of only three states that require a first appearance within 24 hours. The remaining states have later deadlines. There are many good reasons to change this deadline. It would give all parties a chance to gather information for better informed bail hearings. Even more important is that victims in Alaska have a constitutional right to appear at arraignments and bail hearings. Often we are unable to notify them of a hearing that must be held within 24 hours of arrest; other times the victim is still in the hospital at this time. The change to a 48 hour deadline will help the system make the victim's right to be present much more meaningful. It also allows for a cooling down time in many cases.

We also have heard people say that SB 252 would prohibit certain people from being released on bail. This is not correct. Defendants have a constitutional right to have bail set for their release. SB 252 simply changes certain procedures for the courts to follow in setting bail. In doing so, it would protect the public and discourage bail jumping much better than does current law.

The Honorable Hollis French
Chair, Senate Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Senator French:

Following the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on March 19th you asked me to gather statistics on the number of cases each year that would be subject to the provisions found in sections 4 and 12 of SB 252 (the governor's bail bill). Those sections establish a rebuttable presumption that for certain offenders "no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community."

Section 4 of the bill applies this rebuttable presumption to those charged with certain offenses and those with certain criminal histories. Section 12 applies this presumption to all those who appear in court on a petition to revoke probation. Here is a breakdown of the number of defendants who fell into each of the section 4 categories in FY 09.

(A) Number of people charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony: 602 (See attached for charge specific breakdown.)

(B) Number of people charged with a felony (other than a felony listed in section (A) above) who were convicted of a felony in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, and less than five years have elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the immediately preceding offense and the commission of the present offense: 1,403.

Note, because the court system's computer system tracks only state cases, this number does not include those who would be subject to the presumption because of a prior conviction from another jurisdiction.

(C) Number of people charged with an offense committed while the person was on release under AS 12.30 for a charge or conviction of another offense: 1,505

(D) Number of people charged with a crime of domestic violence and who have been convicted in the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction: 919

Note, as with subsection (B) above, this number does not include those who would be subject to the presumption because of a prior conviction from another jurisdiction.

(E) Number of persons arrested in connection with an accusation that the person committed a felony outside the state or is a fugitive from justice from another jurisdiction, and the court is considering release under AS 12.30: 96

Section 12 applies the rebuttable presumption to all those who appear in court on a petition to revoke probation. In FY 09 there were between 18,000 and 19,000 such petitions.

It is important to note that there is overlap between the various categories of offenders subject to the rebuttable presumption. For example, a person who commits a felony and who has a prior felony conviction within the stated number of years would also likely be subject to a petition to revoke probation. For this reason we cannot simply add up all the categories to arrive at the number of people subject to the presumption each year. For purposes of the court system's fiscal note, I used the most conservative estimate of 18,000 cases a year, which is the low-end number for the number of people in court on a petition to revoke probation. This necessarily undercounts the number of cases, but assures that the note does not double-count any cases.

I hope that this answers your question. Please let me know if I can provide any additional information.

Sincerely,

Doug Wooliver

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)
6 states - 24 hours, calculated excluding weekends and holidays (AZ, CT, DE, ID, MA, NH)

1 state - 36 hours, calculated excluding day of arrest, Sundays and holidays (MN)

7 states- 48 hours, including weekends and holidays (AL, AR, GA, HI, MS, NE, TX)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Sunday, holiday, and days when court not in session (CA)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (ME)
1 state - 48 hours if 1st appearance is combined w/prob. cause hearing (court decision) (WI)

2 states - 72 hours, including weekends and holidays (NJ, WY)
1 state - 72 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (LA)
1 state - 72 hours is "without delay", if probable cause w/in 48 hours (court decision) (TN)
21 states - "without unnecessary delay" (CO, IL, IA, KS, KY, MI, MT, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, OH, OK, OR, PA, RI, SD, UT, VT, WV)

2 states - "forthwith" (SC, VA)

1 state - "promptly" (repealed a 24- hour rule in 1995) (IN)

1 state - person must be released if not "charged" within 20 hours, but no provision for first appearance (MO)

Subject: Additional Concerns Re: SB 252

Further Concerns Re: SB 252

1. Petitions for Review of Bail Conditions Are Needlessly Encumbered by This Bill

Section Three proposes a series of limitations on how and when the accused can challenge the terms of his release. The access of detained individuals to the court to contest the conditions of release and the amount of bail required is hampered by the bill. The constitutional rule is that "[i]n our society, liberty is the norm, and detention prior to trial or without trial is the carefully limited exception." United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 755 (1987).

The rule proposed by SB 252, Sec. 3, subsection (d), would improperly hamper access to the courts. The bill proposes that, after bail is initially set, the defendant can only have his bail reviewed once as a matter of right. For subsequent review, the court cannot even hear a petition for bail review unless the defendant states in his application that new evidence will be presented, the court receives a report relating to criminal history and bail history for the defendant (a step over which the defendant has no control), the prosecutor gets 48 hours notice of the hearing, and more than seven days have passed since the last bail hearing. These procedures unreasonably encumber a defendant's right to be released before trial.

2. Section Ten Unlawfully Restricts the Rights of Prisoners Held Awaiting Sentence or Appeal

Section Ten of the bill proposes to absolutely prohibit the granting of bail to those awaiting sentence or appeal for a class A, class B, unclassified, or sexual felony. The courts have addressed the rights of prisoners awaiting sentence or appeal previously and found that, while these prisoners have diminished interests in liberty, the freedom of these individuals should not be lightly infringed. In Walker v. State, the opinion mentions that a defendant convicted of rape and awaiting sentencing had been ruled by the federal district court to be entitled at least to a bail hearing under the principle of Equal Protection. 652 P.2d 88, 90 (Alaska 1982).

Notwithstanding the constitutional issues at stake and the instructions of the courts, the proposed bill would absolutely deny a bail hearing to the defendant in Walker, who had been ordered to receive a bail hearing by the federal district court. Completely precluding any hearing for these defendants leaves no room for an exceptional case, even one who has demonstrated his innocence. Were this bill enacted, a judge would have no power to release defendant who had been convicted of a serious felony but for whom subsequent DNA testing had convincingly proved his innocence. A demonstrably innocent defendant who had filed an appeal or application for post-conviction relief would have to sit in jail until the matter is actually heard and decided.

Re: Senate Bill 252
Constitutional Issues

Chair French:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding Senate Bill 252. The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska ("ACLU) represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. From that perspective, we have several concerns with the proposed legislation.

Section 4 Unconstitutional Restrictions on Pre-Trial Release

Section Four of the Bill proposes a new section AS 12.20.011 with a myriad of constitutional infirmities.

The Alaska Constitution states that "an accused is entitled . . . to be released on bail, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great." Alaska Const., Art. I, Sec. 11. Subsection (d) of Section 4 of the Bill, however, proposes that for a wide group of defendants the court should presume, subject to rebuttal by the defendant, that no amount of bail and no conditions of release will ensure the appearance of the defendant and protect the victim and the public. The language used for the presumption, that "no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure" public safety or the defendant's appearance, is a phrase used to describe the basis by which a judge can deny bail entirely to a defendant. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3142(e)(1); Pa. Const. Art. 1, § 14.

While the proposed new statutory language does not specifically state that those who cannot be safely released shall be held without bail, the language leaves no clear alternative. Thus it proposes to impermissibly negate the dictates of the Alaska Constitution and to deny bail entirely to many defendants, while imposing on them the burden to refute the denial of bail. The categories of defendants to whom this denial would apply includes those arrested for class A or unclassified felonies, any sexual felony, anyone previously convicted of a felony except if the complete term (including any parole or probation term) had terminated more than five years ago, anyone also under charge in another case, anyone arrested for a domestic violence charge who had previously been convicted of a domestic violence charge within the last five years, or anyone arrested "in connection with" an allegation of commission of an offense outside the state or being a fugitive from justice in another state.

The Alaska Supreme Court has clearly and unequivocally held that the outright denial of bail violates the Alaska Constitution. Martin v. State, 517 P.2d 1389 (Alaska 1974) (holding that the refusal of bail to a person arrested on a charge of forgery who had three outstanding cases of forgery against him violated both Alaska statutes and Article I, Section 11 of the Alaska Constitution). In fact, the Martin court discussed a very similar argument by the Department of Law in these terms:

> "The State urges that these amendments [to the bail statutes] permit the detention of defendants without bail when the judicial officer determines that the defendant 'will pose a danger to other persons and the community.' . . . The legislature could not, of course, infringe upon the constitutional right of bail. . . . [A] legislative enactment expressly permitting the detention of persons without right to bail would be unconstitutional unless a constitutional amendment were adopted." Martin, 517 P.2d at 1396-97 (emphasis added).

Should the plain language of Article I, Section 11 be insufficient to inform the State that pretrial bail is a right not subject revocation by the legislature or the courts, the history of the enactment of the bail clauses to the Alaska Constitution should make clear that any and all defendants should receive a bail hearing. Victor Fischer, delegate to the Constitutional Convention, commented during the convention that the phrase "when the proof is evident and the presumption great" had been enacted in Alaska, as in other states, to show that even defendants in capital offenses should generally be eligible for bail: "The actual determination of when a person is released on bail, if charged with a capital offense, is still up to the judge." 2 Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention 1344-45 (Jan. 6, 1956) cited in State v. Wassillie, 606 P.2d 1279, 1282 (Alaska 1980).

If the Constitutional Convention drafted Article I, Section 11 with the intent that even those charged with capital cases should receive a bail hearing, then the Governor's bill that defendants charged with felonies should be presumed not to be eligible for bail must surely violate the terms of the bail clauses of the Alaska Constitution. The proposed amendments in Section 4 of H.B. 324 do not pass constitutional review, as they contradict both the language of Article I, Section 11, which vests all defendants except those in capital cases with the right to bail, and the Supreme Court's analysis in Martin.

Even were a finding that "no condition or combination of conditions" support release somehow constitutional, the burden-shifting provision of the statute is inappropriate in the context of a bail hearing conducted within hours of arrest. These hearings may be conducted in the absence of counsel; even where the defendant obtains counsel within a few hours of arrest, defense counsel will not likely be capable of carrying the burden to show that the defendant is not a danger and not likely to fail to appear. See Stack v. Boyle, 342 U.S. 1, 11 (1951) (stating that an initial bail hearing "must be done in haste – the defendant may be taken by surprise, counsel has just been engaged, or for other reasons the bail is fixed without that full inquiry and consideration which the matter deserves," Jackson, J., concurring). Bearing that burden would require witnesses and documentation on the defense side, resources likely impossible for even a privately retained counsel.

The ACLU of Alaska requests that this Committee delete or appropriately revise these clearly unconstitutional provisions in SB 252.

Section 4 Improper Proposed Expansion of Court Authority

The primary purpose of bail is to ensure the appearance of the accused. A judge may consider public safety or the safety of individuals in setting conditions for release. However, beyond specific findings relating to an individual defendant and specific reasons for concern that he may fail to appear or endanger others, a judge does not have more interest in supervising an arrestee, who is presumed innocent, than he does over a member of the general public. U.S. v. Scott, 450 F.3d 863, 874 (9th Cir. 2006).

Thus, certain provision in Section Four, subsection (b) of S.B. 252 violate the constitutional protections regarding granting of bail. Subsection (b)(9) permitting a judge to "require the person to maintain employment, or if unemployed, actively seek employment" has no bearing on either the likelihood of the individual to appear in court nor on any danger posed to the victim or the public. Pretrial supervision is not a period of "pre-probation" when the State may broadly supervise an accused. The State's legitimate interests are limited to ensuring public safety and ensuring the appearance of the accused. These kinds of provisions infringe on the right of the defendant to be considered an innocent person. Excessive bail conditions, unjustified by traditional state interests, resemble probationary supervision and thus constitute unconstitutional punishment prior to adjudication.

While other provisions in subsection (b) could have conceivable use in specific individual cases, the long list of bail conditions set forth essentially invites judges to overuse them. Prohibitions on the use of alcohol and entry to licensed premises, for instance, are currently imposed excessively and frequently without the individualized inquiry required in Scott. Overuse of alcohol-related restrictions for Alaska Native defendants has been a basis of criticism for ethnic disparities in the criminal justice system. Instead of minimizing these existing disparities, S.B. 252 would institutionalize them.

Another area of particular concern in the enumerated bail conditions are two provisions relating to health care, subsections (b)(15) and (b)(16) which purport to permit a judge to require a defendant to adhere to courses of psychiatric and medical treatment and to compel a defendant to take prescription medications. The right to bodily privacy is an integral part of the right to privacy under the Alaska Constitution. Allowing the criminal justice system to shortcut the elaborate existing framework by which a person may be committed to psychiatric care would present serious constitutional problems. For instance, in a commitment proceeding, the individual has a right to notice of what treatment specifically has been proposed and then may line up appropriate experts to contest the treatment plan. Under this statute, the defendant has no notice of such a request, no opportunity to bring appropriate experts to court, and thus no way to contest whether the proposed plan of treatment is proper or not. The bill also invites an infringement of the right to privacy in one's medical information and records, since a judge must naturally inquire into the current medical and psychiatric treatment of the accused in order to ensure that the orders are carried out. In order to make sense, the provisions relating to medical care presuppose exposure of the accused's sensitive medical information in open court.

Again, given these important constitutional interests, the ACLU recommends the Committee delete or revise Section 4, subsection (b) of SB 252.

Section One's Proposed Addition of AS Sec. 11.56.730
Offends the Due Process Clause of the Alaska Constitution

Section One of S.B. 252 proposes creation of the offense of "failure to appear," and requires the state to show no mental state other than the knowledge that one should have been in court. Thus, a person could be convicted of a serious felony for inadvertently or accidentally failing to appear.

Generally, the criminal law requires "not only the doing of some act by the person to be held liable, but also the existence of a guilty mind during the commission of the act." Speidel v. State, 460 P.2d 77, 80 (Alaska 1969) (emphasis added). The Alaska courts have held that, for major felonies, a mental state requirement is mandatory, while some minor offenses, such as hunting or public health related offenses may be strict liability offenses without a mental state requirement. Speidel, 460 P.2d 77 (holding that the statute declaring the failure to return a car to be a crime, regardless of mental state, violated due process); see also State v. Guest, 583 P.2d 836 (Alaska 1978); State v. Fremgen, 914 P.2d 1244 (Alaska 1996). In some cases, the courts have avoided declaring a statute unconstitutional by creating a mental state requirement where a statute has no provision for mental state. Kimoktoak v. State, 584 P.2d 25 (Alaska 1978); Alex v. State, 484

P.2d 677 (Alaska 1971). However, given the explicit statement that no mental state is required in Section One, the courts would not be able to avoid the constitutional conflict and must rule the statute unconstitutional.

On a policy basis, the legislature should consider the impact of S.B. 252 on the prison population of the state. The ACLU of Alaska's recent review of the prison system showed that over the past seven years the population of prisoners in custody for most types of crimes (e.g., property offenses, offenses against the person, sex offenses) has remained largely stable. The expansion of the prison population from 2002 to 2008 was due exclusively to the tripling of the number of prisoners incarcerated for two types of offenses: for violations of probation and parole and for public order and administration offenses. Public order and administration offenses include victimless offenses relating to criminal justice administration, and the largest group of these offenders consists of those serving time for failure to appear in court. The state can hardly argue in the face of a tripling of the number of offenders incarcerated on those types of offenses that the judiciary has been too lenient on those who fail to appear. Passing this bill will ensure an even greater expansion in the Alaska prison population as a result of more prosecutions and more convictions for failures to appear.

The legislature should also take note that the equivalent federal rule, as well as many state rules, requires a showing that the defendant "deliberately" or "willfully" missed court. Hutchison v. State, 27 P.3d 774, 777-79 (Alaska App. 2001) (noting that the federal bail statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3150, as well as Connecticut, California, and Illinois statutes, require a showing of "willful" failure to appear). Given that the federal court system and several large state court systems do not find themselves facing large numbers of non-appearing defendants, even when only "willful" failures to appear are prosecuted, the current, stricter Alaska standard of "knowing" failure to appear should adequately ensure appearance of defendants.

The legislature should also consider the potential negative effects of this policy on judicial efficiency. As the law stands now, a defendant who misses court through neglect or confusion has a strong interest in appearing in court immediately upon realizing the mistake to have his bench warrant lifted, since that response will tend to show an innocent mental state and a sincere desire to participate in the court process. Under the proposed bill, a defendant who misses court through neglect or confusion will face the same penalty for turning himself in the next day as if he disappears for the next six months. Creating a stiffer penalty and eliminating any meaningful defense will encourage those who do miss court to absent themselves from court indefinitely. No policy or penalty is ever going to prevent neglect, mistake, and confusion. A flexible, and in some cases forgiving, policy will serve judicial efficiency best.

Problematic Extension of Time for Bail Hearing

Section Three proposes to extend the window of detention prior to a bail hearing to 48 hours. Under current Alaska law, a defendant must be brought before a judicial officer within 24 hours.

Under Gerstein v. Pugh, a probable cause hearing must be held without unreasonable delay. 420 U.S. 103 (1975).

After a standard of 24 hours was adopted by most states and most circuits, a narrowly divided US Supreme Court stated that the initial appearance must be made only within 48 hours. Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44 (1991). However, Riverside does not bind the states in their interpretation of their own constitutions. In one accounting of state responses to Gerstein, most states had concluded that 24 hours was the appropriate term under the case, and only seven states explicitly permitted more than 24 hours prior to an initial hearing. Jenkins v. Chief Justice of Dist. Court Dept., 619 N.E.2d 324, 333-34 (Mass. 1993).

Since Alaska has guaranteed a 24-hour window for initial appearances for 18 years since the Riverside decision, the state courts may be hard pressed to see why a 48-hour window would not likely permit "unreasonable delay." The Alaska courts have not yet had a chance to rule on the dimensions of the "speedy trial" provision of Article I, section 11 as it relates to initial appearances, since Rule 5 has long guaranteed a 24-hour window of appearance. The Supreme Court could very well decide that the state constitutional provisions relating to speedy trial and due process require a 24-hour window prior to initial appearance, just as the Massachusetts Supreme Court did in Jenkins.

Given that the currently existing rules of criminal procedure already provide an exception for defendants arrested far from urban centers and allow the prosecution to request a delay to gather more information where necessary for a bail hearing, the state's success over the last 18 years in providing a hearing within 24 hours strongly suggests that a delay of more than 24 hours would represent unnecessary delay, making the statute unconstitutional.

Unconstitutional Imposition of Warrantless Search

Section Four's proposed addition of A.S. Sex.12.30.016 seeks to allow unconstitutional warrantless searches. Subsections (b)(2). (c)(2). Compared to probationers and parolees, the rights of pretrial defendants against unreasonable search and seizure are strong.

While comparatively little case law exists in Alaska courts, a recent Ninth Circuit case strongly endorsed the rights of pretrial defendants against warrantless searches. In United States v. Scott, the defendant had been arrested on drug charges and his release was conditioned on his "consent" to suspicionless search of his home and random drug tests. 450 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2006). After a positive urine test for methamphetamine, officers searched his home and found a shotgun. Id. at 866. The Ninth Circuit held that his consent was not valid, as he would have been placed in custody if he had declined. Id. at 870. Most importantly, the court said: "if a defendant is to be released subject to bail conditions that will help protect the community from the risk of crimes he might commit while on bail, the conditions must be justified by a showing that defendant poses a heightened risk of misbehaving while on bail. The government cannot, as it is trying to do in this case, short-circuit the process by claiming that the arrest itself is sufficient to establish that the conditions are required." Id. at 874.

Creating a blanket rule that a court may impose bail conditions that violate rights against unreasonable search without requiring any kind of individualized finding would violate the rule enunciated in Scott. A provision that states that such conditions may only be imposed after a written finding of the reasons particular to the individual defendant as to why such bail conditions are necessary may render this section constitutional.

Overly Broad Imposition of Third Party Custodians

Section 5 of the Bill unconstitutionally proposes to limit a pre-trial defendant's liberty. A pretrial defendant enjoys a right to be considered innocent; he also enjoys a default right to his liberty. Stack v. Boyle, 342 U.S. 1. ("This traditional right to freedom before conviction permits the unhampered preparation of a defense, and serves to prevent the infliction of punishment prior to conviction. Unless this right to bail before trial is preserved, the presumption of innocence, secured only after centuries of struggle, would lose its meaning."). No showing of proof, no adversarial proceeding is required for the filing of a complaint. As such, the court should require a showing from the prosecution to impose a condition of bail on the accused. Yet the third-party custodian provision imposes no restraint on the court's authority.

Contrast, for instance, the language from Section 5, "a judicial officer may appoint a third-party custodian if the officer finds that the appointment will, singly or in combination with other conditions, reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community" to the language from Section 4, "the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance." The term "least restrictive," or any sense that a bail condition should be "necessary" rather than simply the court's preference, is missing from Section 5.

Arguably, the imposition of a third party custodian requirement would enhance the likelihood of any defendant's appearance in court. However, the courts are not free to impose any quantity of bail they like or to impose any conditions that seem like a good idea. Such conditions may be imposed only when found to be necessary.

The legislature should note that in a recent Alaska Judicial Council survey on the criminal justice system, excessive and arbitrary use of the third-party custodian requirement was one of the most frequent complaints. The original purpose of the third-party requirement – to ensure that impoverished defendants incapable of making cash bail could be released in a manner that assured community safety and court appearance – has been almost totally lost. A third-party custodian is now often imposed as a matter of course, rather than after specific findings, and in addition to, not in lieu of, cash bail. To prevent more abuse, a court should be required to make specific, written findings as to why a third-party custodian is necessary.

Conclusion

We hope that the Judiciary Committee will note these are just some of the constitutional infirmities in Senate Bill 252.

While the ACLU of Alaska supports appropriate revisions to the criminal justice system to address the special circumstances of our State, and evolving needs, this Bill is not well-crafted to vindicate the state's purposes.

The sections we have identified present substantial Constitutional problems and will likely entangle the state in litigation, should S.B. 252 pass as currently written.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share our concerns. And please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information.

TITLE 18 > PART II > CHAPTER 207 > § 3142

§ 3142. Release or detention of a defendant pending trial

(a) In General.— Upon the appearance before a judicial officer of a person charged with an offense, the judicial officer shall issue an order that, pending trial, the person be—

(1) released on personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, under subsection (b) of this section;

(2) released on a condition or combination of conditions under subsection (c) of this section;

(3) temporarily detained to permit revocation of conditional release, deportation, or exclusion under subsection (d) of this section; or

(4) detained under subsection (e) of this section.

(b) Release on Personal Recognizance or Unsecured Appearance Bond.— The judicial officer shall order the pretrial release of the person on personal recognizance, or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the court, subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release and subject to the condition that the person cooperate in the collection of a DNA sample from the person if the collection of such a sample is authorized pursuant to section 3 of the DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act of 2000 (42 U.S.C. 14135a), unless the judicial officer determines that such release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community.

(c) Release on Conditions.—

(1) If the judicial officer determines that the release described in subsection (b) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community, such judicial officer shall order the pretrial release of the person—

(A) subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release and subject to the condition that the person cooperate in the collection of a DNA sample from the person if the collection of such a sample is authorized pursuant to section 3 of the DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act of 2000 (42 U.S.C. 14135a); and

(B) subject to the least restrictive further condition, or combination of conditions, that such judicial officer determines will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, which may include the condition that the person—

(i) remain in the custody of a designated person, who agrees to assume supervision and to report any violation of a release condition to the court, if the designated person is able reasonably to assure the judicial officer that the person will appear as required and will not pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community;

(ii) maintain employment, or, if unemployed, actively seek employment;

(iii) maintain or commence an educational program;

(iv) abide by specified restrictions on personal associations, place of abode, or travel;

(v) avoid all contact with an alleged victim of the crime and with a potential witness who may testify concerning the offense;

(vi) report on a regular basis to a designated law enforcement agency, pretrial services agency, or other agency;

(vii) comply with a specified curfew;

(viii) refrain from possessing a firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon;

(ix) refrain from excessive use of alcohol, or any use of a narcotic drug or other controlled substance, as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802), without a prescription by a licensed medical practitioner;

(x) undergo available medical, psychological, or psychiatric treatment, including treatment for drug or alcohol dependency, and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose;

(xi) execute an agreement to forfeit upon failing to appear as required, property of a sufficient unencumbered value, including money, as is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required, and shall provide the court with proof of ownership and the value of the property along with information regarding existing encumbrances as the judicial office may require;

(xii) execute a bail bond with solvent sureties; who will execute an agreement to forfeit in such amount as is reasonably necessary to assure appearance of the person as required and shall provide the court with information regarding the value of the assets and liabilities of the surety if other than an approved surety and the nature and extent of encumbrances against the surety's property; such surety shall have a net worth which shall have sufficient unencumbered value to pay the amount of the bail bond;

(xiii) return to custody for specified hours following release for employment, schooling, or other limited purposes; and

(xiv) satisfy any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required and to assure the safety of any other person and the community.

In any case that involves a minor victim under section 1201, 1591, 2241, 2242, 2244 (a)(1), 2245, 2251, 2251A, 2252 (a)(1), 2252 (a)(2), 2252 (a)(3), 2252A (a)(1), 2252A (a)(2), 2252A (a)(3), 2252A (a)(4), 2260, 2421, 2422, 2423, or 2425 of this title, or a failure to register offense under section 2250 of this title, any release order shall contain, at a minimum, a condition of electronic monitoring and each of the conditions specified at subparagraphs (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), and (viii).

(2) The judicial officer may not impose a financial condition that results in the pretrial detention of the person.

(3) The judicial officer may at any time amend the order to impose additional or different conditions of release.

(d) Temporary Detention To Permit Revocation of Conditional Release, Deportation, or Exclusion.— If the judicial officer determines that—

(1) such person—

(A) is, and was at the time the offense was committed, on—

(i) release pending trial for a felony under Federal, State, or local law;

(ii) release pending imposition or execution of sentence, appeal of sentence or conviction, or completion of sentence, for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

(iii) probation or parole for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

(B) is not a citizen of the United States or lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a)(20)); and

(2) such person may flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community; such judicial officer shall order the detention of such person, for a period of not more than ten days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and direct the attorney for the Government to notify the appropriate court, probation or parole official, or State or local law enforcement official, or the appropriate official of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. If the official fails or declines to take such person into custody during that period, such person shall be treated in accordance with the other provisions of this section, notwithstanding the applicability of other provisions of law governing release pending trial or deportation or exclusion proceedings. If temporary detention is sought under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, such person has the burden of proving to the court such person's United States citizenship or lawful admission for permanent residence.

(e) Detention.—

(1) If, after a hearing pursuant to the provisions of subsection (f) of this section, the judicial officer finds that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, such judicial officer shall order the detention of the person before trial.

(2) In a case described in subsection (f)(1) of this section, a rebuttable presumption arises that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community if such judicial officer finds that—

(A) the person has been convicted of a Federal offense that is described in subsection (f)(1) of this section, or of a State or local offense that would have been an offense described in subsection (f)(1) of this section if a circumstance giving rise to Federal jurisdiction had existed;

(B) the offense described in subparagraph (A) was committed while the person was on release pending trial for a Federal, State, or local offense; and

(C) a period of not more than five years has elapsed since the date of conviction, or the release of the person from imprisonment, for the offense described in subparagraph (A), whichever is later.

(3) Subject to rebuttal by the person, it shall be presumed that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of the community if the judicial officer finds that there is probable cause to believe that the person committed—

(A) an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or chapter 705 of title 46;

(B) an offense under section 924 (c), 956 (a), or 2332b of this title;

(C) an offense listed in section 2332b (g)(5)(B) of title 18, United States Code, for which a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years or more is prescribed;

(D) an offense under chapter 77 of this title for which a maximum term of imprisonment of 20 years or more is prescribed; or

(E) an offense involving a minor victim under section 1201, 1591, 2241, 2242, 2244 (a)(1), 2245, 2251, 2251A, 2252 (a)(1), 2252 (a)(2), 2252 (a)(3), 2252A (a)(1), 2252A (a)(2), 2252A (a)(3), 2252A (a)(4), 2260, 2421, 2422, 2423, or 2425 of this title.

(f) Detention Hearing.— The judicial officer shall hold a hearing to determine whether any condition or combination of conditions set forth in subsection (c) of this section will reasonably assure the appearance of such person as required and the safety of any other person and the community—

(1) upon motion of the attorney for the Government, in a case that involves—

(A) a crime of violence, a violation of section 1591, or an offense listed in section 2332b (g)(5)(B) for which a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years or more is prescribed;

(B) an offense for which the maximum sentence is life imprisonment or death;

(C) an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or chapter 705 of title 46;

(D) any felony if such person has been convicted of two or more offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph, or two or more State or local offenses that would have been offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph if a circumstance giving rise to Federal jurisdiction had existed, or a combination of such offenses; or

(E) any felony that is not otherwise a crime of violence that involves a minor victim or that involves the possession or use of a firearm or destructive device (as those terms are defined in section 921), or any other dangerous weapon, or involves a failure to register under section 2250 of title 18, United States Code; or

(2) upon motion of the attorney for the Government or upon the judicial officer's own motion in a case, that involves—

(A) a serious risk that such person will flee; or

(B) a serious risk that such person will obstruct or attempt to obstruct justice, or threaten, injure, or intimidate, or attempt to threaten, injure, or intimidate, a prospective witness or juror.

The hearing shall be held immediately upon the person's first appearance before the judicial officer unless that person, or the attorney for the Government, seeks a continuance. Except for good cause, a continuance on motion of such person may not exceed five days (not including any intermediate Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday), and a continuance on motion of the attorney for the Government may not exceed three days (not including any intermediate Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday). During a continuance, such person shall be detained, and the judicial officer, on motion of the attorney for the Government or sua sponte, may order that, while in custody, a person who appears to be a narcotics addict receive a medical examination to determine whether such person is an addict. At the hearing, such person has the right to be represented by counsel, and, if financially unable to obtain adequate representation, to have counsel appointed. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present witnesses, to cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing, and to present information by proffer or otherwise. The rules concerning admissibility of evidence in criminal trials do not apply to the presentation and consideration of information at the hearing. The facts the judicial officer uses to support a finding pursuant to subsection (e) that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community shall be supported by clear and convincing evidence. The person may be detained pending completion of the hearing. The hearing may be reopened, before or after a determination by the judicial officer, at any time before trial if the judicial officer finds that information exists that was not known to the movant at the time of the hearing and that has a material bearing on the issue whether there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of such person as required and the safety of any other person and the community.

(g) Factors To Be Considered.— The judicial officer shall, in determining whether there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, take into account the available information concerning—

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, including whether the offense is a crime of violence, a violation of section 1591, a Federal crime of terrorism, or involves a minor victim or a controlled substance, firearm, explosive, or destructive device;

(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(3) the history and characteristics of the person, including—

(A) the person's character, physical and mental condition, family ties, employment, financial resources, length of residence in the community, community ties, past conduct, history relating to drug or alcohol abuse, criminal history, and record concerning appearance at court proceedings; and

(B) whether, at the time of the current offense or arrest, the person was on probation, on parole, or on other release pending trial, sentencing, appeal, or completion of sentence for an offense under Federal, State, or local law; and

(4) the nature and seriousness of the danger to any person or the community that would be posed by the person's release. In considering the conditions of release described in subsection (c)(1)(B)(xi) or (c)(1)(B)(xii) of this section, the judicial officer may upon his own motion, or shall upon the motion of the Government, conduct an inquiry into the source of the property to be designated for potential forfeiture or offered as collateral to secure a bond, and shall decline to accept the designation, or the use as collateral, of property that, because of its source, will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.

(h) Contents of Release Order.— In a release order issued under subsection (b) or (c) of this section, the judicial officer shall—

(1) include a written statement that sets forth all the conditions to which the release is subject, in a manner sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide for the person's conduct; and

(2) advise the person of—

(A) the penalties for violating a condition of release, including the penalties for committing an offense while on pretrial release;

(B) the consequences of violating a condition of release, including the immediate issuance of a warrant for the person's arrest; and

(C) sections 1503 of this title (relating to intimidation of witnesses, jurors, and officers of the court), 1510 (relating to obstruction of criminal investigations), 1512 (tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant), and 1513 (retaliating against a witness, victim, or an informant).

(i) Contents of Detention Order.— In a detention order issued under subsection (e) of this section, the judicial officer shall—

(1) include written findings of fact and a written statement of the reasons for the detention;

(2) direct that the person be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for confinement in a corrections facility separate, to the extent practicable, from persons awaiting or serving sentences or being held in custody pending appeal;

(3) direct that the person be afforded reasonable opportunity for private consultation with counsel; and

(4) direct that, on order of a court of the United States or on request of an attorney for the Government, the person in charge of the corrections facility in which the person is confined deliver the person to a United States marshal for the purpose of an appearance in connection with a court proceeding.

The judicial officer may, by subsequent order, permit the temporary release of the person, in the custody of a United States marshal or another appropriate person, to the extent that the judicial officer determines such release to be necessary for preparation of the person's defense or for another compelling reason.

(j) Presumption of Innocence.— Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying or limiting the presumption of innocence.

Martin v. State

Term

517 P.2d 1389, 75 A.L.R.3d 941

Supreme Court of Alaska.
Max Ray MARTIN et al., Appellants, v.
STATE of Alaska, Appellee.

No. 1785.
Jan. 2, 1974.

Herbert D. Soll, Public Defender, Larry A. Jordan, Asst. Public Defender, anchorage, for appellants.

John E. Havelock, Atty. Gen., Juneau, Seaborn J. Buckalew, Jr., Dist. Atty., Anchorage, Stephen G. Dunning, Asst. Dist. Atty., Anchorage, for appellee.

Before RABINOWITZ, C. J., and CONNOR, ERWIN, BOOCHEVER and FITZGERALD, JJ.

OPINION

FITZGERALD, Justice.

These cases come to us as a consolidated appeal seeking declarations of the rights of the defendant in criminal proceedings to bail under the constitution and laws of Alaska and the constitution of the United states. Although the factual circumstances of each case are somewhat different, all three cases challenge the concept of preventive detention.

On June 7, 1972, appellant Richard Snyder was arraigned in the superior court on a charge of forgery. At the time of this arraignment, Snyder was free on bail following three indictments issued previously on other charges.[FN1]

> FN1. The appellant was charged in a four-count federal indictment for conspiracy, robbery, and possession of firearms by a convicted felon, a one-count Alaska indictment for burglary not in a dwelling, and a nine-count Alaska indictment for burglary not in a dwelling. Both state indictments postdated the alleged date for commission of the forgery.

At his arraignment and at a later hearing for plea, Snyder requested the court to set bail on the forgery charge. The trial court refused to set bail finding that Snyder was 'a danger to society.' On August 10, 1972, a notice of appeal was filed on the decision denying bail. However, on November 9, 1972, the court on the motion of the prosecutor dismissed the forgery charge against Snyder.[FN2]

FN2. On September 14, 1972, Snyder filed a motion pro se with this court requesting release on his own recognizance. By order dated November 17, 1972, Justice Boochever denied the motion on the basis that the intervening dismissal of charges rendered the question moot.

Appellant Max Martin was arraigned August 3, 1972 in the superior court on a petition to revoke probation. Almost two years earlier, Martin had been convicted of larceny in a building. For that offense he received a five-year sentence, but four years were suspended upon conditions of probation.

At his arraignment and at a hearing four days later, Martin requested the court to set bail for his release pending the revocation hearing. The court refused to set bail, reasoning that there was a high probability of truth in the allegations, and that it was within the court's discretion to deny bail after conviction.

Notice of appeal from the denial of bail was filed on August 10, 1972. On September 18, 1972, Martin's probation was revoked, and he was ordered to serve the remaining four years on his larceny conviction.

Appellant Aloyisus Fabian was arraigned in the superior court on May 18, 1972, on a charge of burglary not in a dwelling. Following arraignment, he was released on his own recognizance to participate in the Salvation Army alcoholic rehabilitation program. On May 25, 1972, the state moved that Fabian's recognizance release be revoked, and that bail be set at $500 because he was no longer participating in the Salvation Army program. Fabian, through his counsel, admitted violating the conditions of his release but requested to be released again on recognizance, contending that his financial status would make any bail amount prohibitive.

Rejecting the suggestion that Fabian reenroll at the Salvation Army, the court offered to release him to the custody of the Anchorage Native Program for Alcoholic and Drug Abuse. Fabian's counsel agreed to attempt to enroll him in the native program, and the appellant was incarcerated in the meantime. Attempts to enroll him in the native program failed. Since his counsel did not reapply for bail, the appellant remained in jail until his trial.

Notice of appeal from the ruling of the superior court was filed August 10, 1972. On October 3, 1972, Fabian appeared in superior court and was convicted upon his plea of guilty and was sentenced to a term of one year of confinement.

The appellants claim a substantive right to bail arising from the Alaska Bail Reform Act,[FN3] from Article I, sections 11 and 12 of the Alaska Constitution, and from the eighth amendment of the United States Constitution.

FN3. AS 12.30.010 et seq.

We cannot ignore, however, the preliminary procedural difficulties which these cases present. In each case before us, it is argued that the issues arising on appellant's application for bail have been mooted by either a subsequent dismissal, a conviction, or a revocation of probation. An application for review of an order of the trial court denying bail should be promptly filed. The Alaska procedures for review of a denial for bail are designed to ensure speedy consideration at the appellate level. [FN4] Although in this appeal the slower appellate process was utilized, we undertake to consider the substantive claims raised by appellants because they involve important recurring issues of law which may be capable of evading review. [FN5]

FN4. See App.R. 23, 24. The need for rapid re-review of bail orders is also reflected in the Alaska Bail Reform Act of 1966, AS 12.30.030:'(a) A person who remains in custody after a review provided for in s 20 (f) of this chapter may move the court having original jurisdiction over the offense to amend the order. The motion shall be determined promptly.(b) When a court denies a motion under (a) of this section or conditions of release have been imposed by the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over the court denying the motion or imposing the conditions subject to the rules of the Supreme Court of Alaska, and the District Court Rules of Criminal Procedure. The order of the lower court shall be affirmed unless it is found that the lower court abused its discretion. If it is held that the lower court did abuse its discretion, the appellate court may modify, vacate, set aside, reverse, remand the action for further proceeding, or remand the action directing entry of the appropriate order, which may include ordering the person to be released under s 20(a) of this chapter. The appeal shall be determined promptly.'

Appellants would have us interpret the eighth amendment of the federal constitution to create a right to bail.[FN6] The eighth amendment provides in pertinent part: 'Excessive bails shall not be required . . ..' Appellants' argument raises two questions for consideration: 1) whether the fourteenth amendment due process clause[FN7] incorporates[FN8] the excessive bail provision of the eighth amendment; 2) whether the excessive bail provision includes the unqualified right to bail.

FN6. U.S.Const. amend. VIII.

FN7. U.S.Const. amend. XIV, s 1.

FN8. For literature on the application of the federal bill of rights to the states through the fourteenth amendment see Emerson, Haber & Dorsen, Political and Civil Rights In The United States 1379-80 (3d ed. 1967). See also Countryman, The Role of a Bill of Rights in a Modern State Constitution, Why a State Bill of Rights?, 45 Wash.L.Rev. 453, 454-474 (1970).

As to the first question, the United States Supreme Court has not ruled on whether the eighth amendment bail provision applies to the states through the fourteenth amendment.[FN9] The most recent discussion on this subject by the Supreme Court occurred in Schilb v. Kuebel, 404 U.S. 357, 92 S.Ct. 479, 30 L.Ed.2d 502, reh. denied, 405 U.S. 948, 92 S.Ct. 930, 30 L.Ed.2d 818 (1971). In Schilb the issue before the Supreme Court related to the constitutionality of Illinois' bail statutes which permitted a defendant in some instances to post 10% of the bail directly to the court, of which the state retained 10% of the posted security as administrative 'bail bond costs.' Justice Blackmun, in the course of defining the issue before the court, stated:

FN9. In Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 82 S.Ct. 1417, 8 L.Ed.2d 758 (1962), the Supreme Court held that a California statute, which made addiction to the use of narcotics a criminal offense, inflicted a cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the eighth and fourteenth amendments. The court has yet to rule whether the provision against excessive bail is similarly incorporated by the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment.

'Bail, of course, is basic to our system of law . . . and the Eighth Amendment's proscription of excessive bail has been assumed to have application to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment. . . . But we are not at all concerned here with any fundamental right to bail or with any Eighth Amendment-Fourteenth Amendment question of bail excessiveness.' 404 U.S. at 365, 92 S.Ct. at 484, 30 L.Ed.2d at 511 (citations omitted).

The question of incorporation by the fourteenth amendment would seem to await a more definitive answer in future adjudication.

There remains a substantial controversy over the eighth amendment's inclusion of an unqualified right to bail.[FN10] Much of the discussion on the issues appears prompted by the District of Columbia Court Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970. The Act allows courts of the District to detain a defendant without bail for up to 60 days prior to trial if the court concludes that the defendant's release would constitute a danger to the community. D.C.Code Ann. ss 23-1321 to 23-1332 (1973).

FN10. For a discussion of this controversy see Foote, The Coming Constitutional Crisis in Bail (pts. 1-2), 113 U.Pa.L.Rev. 959, 1125 (1965); Meyer, Constitutionality of Pretrial Detention, 60 Geo.L.J. 1140 (1972); Mitchell, Bail Reform and the Constitutionality of Pretrial Detention, 55 Va.L.Rev. 1223 (1969); Tribe, an Ounce of Detention: Preventive Justice in the World of John Mitchell, 56 Va.L.Rev. 371 (1970).

Perhaps the most widely cited case for supporting a right to bail under the eighth amendment is Stack v. Boyle, 342 U.S. 1, 72 S.Ct. 1, 96 L.Ed. 3 (1951). [FN11] Stack, however, is not convincing authority for supporting an unconditional eighth amendment right to bail. Although the opinion speaks to the right of release before trial, this discussion relates to federal statutes providing a right to bail following arrest for a noncapital offense. [FN12] Once this statutory right to bail is recognized, then the eighth amendment excessive bail provision assures a reasonable bail.

FN11. In Stack, twelve petitioners were charged with violating the Smith Act, 18 U.S.C. ss 371, 385 (1970). Bail was first set for each defendant in varying amounts ranging from $2,500 to $100,000. Subsequently, bail was uniformly fixed at $50,000. In an effort to reduce bail, petitioners presented uncontroverted evidence concerning financial resources, family relationships, prior criminal records and other information. The government, on the other hand, presented evidence showing that four persons previously convicted under the Smith Act had forfeited bail. In vacating the lower court order denying petitioners' writs of habeas corpus, the Supreme Court held that the lower court had not followed proper criteria delineated in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure in fixing a reasonable bail.

FN12. It is clear from the opinion that this right to bail referred to the Federal Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. 73, 91 and Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 46(a)(1), not the eighth amendment.

In Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S. 524, 72 S.Ct. 525, 96 L.Ed. 547 (1952) the Supreme Court in a case involving the deportation of certain aliens classified as dangerous held that in such circumstances, the eighth amendment did not require the petitioners to be released on bail.

'The bail clause was lifted with slight changes from the English Bill of Rights Act. In England that clause has never been thought to accord a right to bail in All cases, but merely to provide that bail shall not be excessive in those cases where it is proper to grant bail. When this clause was carried over into our Bill of Rights, nothing was said that indicated any different concept.' 342 U.S. at 545, 72 S.Ct. at 536, 96 L.Ed. at 563 (footnotes omitted).

Carlson, however, is a special case involving the Internal Security Act of 1950, 8 U.S.C. s 137 (1970).

It is, however, not necessary in this appeal to decide whether appellants were entitled to bail under the eighth amendment to the United States Constitution.

Article I, s 11 of the Alaska Constitution provides:

'In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of twelve, except that the legislature may provide for a jury of not more than twelve nor less than six in courts not of record. The accused is entitled to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be released on bail, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.' (emphasis supplied)

Article I, section 11 was originally introduced as section 12 of Committee Proposal No. 7, offered by the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights to the Alaska Constitutional Convention in December, 1955.[FN13] Section 12 of the committee proposal read in part:

FN13. 6 Alaska Constitutional Convention, Minutes, Appendix V. at 65 (1963) (hereinafter cited as Minutes).

'The accused is also entitled to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be released on bail, except for capital offenses . . ..'

The commentary attached to the proposal indicated that section 12 was intended to give defendants 'the opportunity to be released on bail except in capital offenses.'[FN14] When the committee's proposal was discussed on the Floor of the convention, Delegate Victor Fischer introduced an amendment to qualify the right to bail in cases involving capital offenses by adding the words 'when the proof is evident or the presumption great.'[FN15] The delegate's comments on this amendment clearly indicate the guarantee of a right to bail:

FN15. 2 Minutes, supra, at 1344.

'The language in the Federal Constitution reads generally to the effect that excessive bail shall not be required. A number of states have changed that language to provide more or less the language we have, that the accused may be released on bail except for capital offenses. But in practically every case where this new language is used, the words, 'when proof is evident and the presumption great' and that is a necessary protection for the accused and we shall follow the majority of the states in this case. It has proven a desirable practice. The actual determination of when a person is released on bail, if charged with a capital offense, is still up to the judge.'[FN16]

FN16. 2 Minutes, supra, at 1344-345. See American Law Institute, Code of Criminal Procedure 338-41 (1930) which indicates that 40 States had similar constitutional provisions providing for the right to bail except in capital offenses. See also Application of Corbo, 54 N.J.Super. 575, 149 A.2d 828, 833 (1959).

Our study of Article I, section 11 thus compels a conclusion that the Alaska Constitution without doubt guarantees to every accused person the right to be released on bail except for capital offenses[FN17] where the proof is evident or the presumption great.[FN18] Some jurisdictions with similar bail provisions [FN19] have created an implied limitation on this constitutional right. But in Alaska such an implied limitation would necessarily contravene both the plain language of this constitutional provision and its intended purpose as stated at the constitutional convention.

FN17. Sections 66-16-43 and 66-16-44, ACLA 1949, which provided for the death penalty were repealed by the territorial legislature in 1957. Ch. 132, SLA 1957. Repeal, of course, does not preclude the legislature from ever establishing capital offenses, but since there are no capital offenses in Alaska at this time, every criminal offense carries the right to bail.

FN18. 'The early common law did not permit bail in felony cases; later on bail was permitted before trial, but not during trial. When bail was permitted, it was a matter of discretion with the court, not a matter of right. . . .Most states have limited the judicial discretion of the common law by guaranteeing, by constitutional or statutory provision, that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties except in certain cases.' 8 Am.Jur.2d Bail and Recognizance ss 22, 23, at 796-797 (1963) (footnotes omitted).

FN19. See, e. g., State v. Johnson, 61 N.J. 351, 294 A.2d 245, 250 (1972). New Jersey has a similar constitutional bail provision to that of Alaska. There the court said in part:'Expressed in pragmatic terms this right to bail means that the accused has the right to pretrial liberty on such bond in such amount as in the judgment of the trial court under the circumstances of the case will insure his appearance at the trial. If, however, the court is satisfied from the evidence presented on the application for bail that regardless of the amount of bail fixed, the accused if released will probably flee to avoid trial, bail may be denied.'

In Reeves v. State, 411 P.2d 212 (Alaska 1966), we held that indigent defendants did not have an absolute right to be released on personal recognizance prior to trial. In Reeves, the defendant was charged in a four count indictment of serious offenses, including first degree murder, burglary and robbery. The trial court first set bail at $50,000, which was later reduced to $10,000. On appeal, the issue was limited to a claim that all indigent defendants were entitled to pretrial release as a matter of right. We rejected this contention as unsound and approved the rationale of Pilkinton v. Circuit Court, 324 F.2d 45 (8th Cir. 1963).[FN20] Reeves, however, as was pointed out in Doe v. State, 487 P.2d 47 (Alaska 1971), should not be taken as denying the right to bail provided under Article I, section 11.

FN20. Pilkinton provided that a state may require bail in some amount and that the eighth amendment excessive bail provision does not provide a right of pretrial release if the defendant is unable to post bail.

Doe v. State was a delinquency proceeding involving a child. His attorney requested a continuance on a hearing. The court continued the case briefly but ordered the child detained during the interim. In considering the child's right to remain free pending an adjudication, this court discussed the right to bail as it is expressly provided in the Alaska Constitution:

'Under the Alaska Constitution, all persons accused of a criminal offense are entitled to be released on bail except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great.' 487 P.2d at 51 (footnote omitted).

Apart from Article I, section 11, one additional provision of the Alaska Constitution has to do with bail. Article I, section 12 of the Alaska Constitution provides in part:

'Excessive bail shall not be required, not excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.'

This section was originally section 9 of Committee Proposal No. 7 introduced by the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights to the Alaska Constitutional Convention in December, 1955. [FN21]

FN21. The commentary to the proposal indicated that section 9 was identical with the excessive bail provision of the eighth amendment to the United States Constitution. 6 Minutes, supra, Appendix V, at 72.

It is not necessary to determine whether or not Article I, section 12 of the Alaska Constitution guarantees a right to bail and, indeed, such an interpretation would be superfluous in view of the right to bail provision found in Article I, section 11. It is enough to say that the excessive bail provision insures the fixing of a reasonable bail and is to be considered in conjunction with the right to bail provision of Article I, section 11.

We note that California's constitutional provisions for bail are substantially identical with those of Alaska. The Supreme Court of California, applying that state's constitutional provisions, recently rejected the so-called 'public safety' exception for bail:

'Our constitutional language expressly providing that all persons shall be bailable except for a capital offense was consciously added to the 'no excessive bail' language adopted from the Eighth Amendment in order to make clear that, unlike the federal rule, all except the one class of defendants were to be bailable. As pertinent statutory provisions may not be read to impose greater limits on the right to bail as guaranteed by the California Constitution, there is no validity in the argument that there is an implied 'public safety' exception in statutory or other provisions guaranteeing the right to bail and we hold that such an exception does not exist in view of the clear direction of article I, section 6. 'If the constitutional guaranties are wrong, let the people change them-not judges or legislators."

FN22. In his dissent Justice Burke suggests that since the Constitution of California recognizes the inalienable right of all men 'to enjoy and defend their life and liberty, and to protect their property, and to pursue and obtain safety and happiness', the courts should exercise an inherent power to achieve a suitable balance between society's rights and the defendant's right to bail. This suggestion rests wholly on the questionable assumption that man's inalienable rights are incompatible with the constitutional right of an accused to bail.An additional argument for the 'public safety' exception advocated by the dissent is that courts may accomplish the same result when the judge fixes an amount of bail which the particular defendant is unable to furnish. According to Justice Burke, this merely evades the issue and does indirectly what may not be done directly, and moreover violates the prohibition against excessive bail. Such an argument furnishes little support for the central thesis in Justice Burke's contentions. To the extent it suggests that difficulty in application of a constitutional principle provides justification for its rejection, the argument itself evades the issue.

In addition to the constitutional guarantee of bail, a right to bail is found in the Alaska statutes. AS 12.30.010 provides that

The defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to be admitted to bail before conviction as a matter of right.

This section was part of the original Alaska Bail Reform Act [FN23] and has remained unchanged. In 1966 AS 12.30.020(a) and (b), read as follows:

FN23. SLA 1966, Ch. 20, s 1.

'(a) A person charged with an offense shall, at his first appearance before a judicial officer, be ordered released pending trial on his personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the judicial officer unless the officer determines that the release of the person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.

(b) If a judicial officer determined under (a) of this section that the release of a person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person, the judicial officer may

(1) place the person in the custody of a designated person or organization agreeing to supervise him;

(2) place restrictions on the travel, association, or place of abode of the person during the period of release;

(3) require the person to return to custody after daylight hours on designated conditions;

(4) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash or other security, a sum not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the bond; the deposit to be returned upon the performance of the condition of release;

(5) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash; or

(6) impose any other condition considered reasonably necessary to assure the defendant's appearance as required.' (emphasis added)

Since both sections, AS 12.30.010 and AS 12.30.020, were part of the Alaska Bail Reform Act Section 12.30.020 must be taken to recognize and to implement the right to bail afforded by AS 12.30.010.

Subsection (a) of AS 12.30.020 requires a defendant to be released on his personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond 'unless the officer determines that the release of the person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.' The 'unless' clause relates only to denial of personal recognizance or an unsecured appearance bond and not to the right of bail. Subsection (b) provides that in the event the judicial officer should determine that a personal recognizance release or an unsecured appearance bond would not reasonably assure the appearance of a defendant, the judicial officer could impose other requirements to assure the presence of the defendant. Section (b)(6) authorizes a judicial officer to impose any other reasonable conditions to assure the defendant's appearance. But this may not be interpreted so as to empower a judicial officer to absolutely deny the right to bail. Such a construction would not only be inconsistent with the basic purpose of the Bail Reform Act but would be unconstitutional under Article I, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution.

In 1967 the Alaska legislature amended AS 12.30.020 by Ch. 112, SLA 1967. The 'unless' clause of subsection (a) was amended to read 'unless the officer determines that the release of the person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required, or will pose a danger to other persons and the community.' Subsection (b)(6) was amended as follows:

'If a judicial officer determines under (a) of this section that the release of a person will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person, or will pose a danger to other persons and the community, the judicial officer may . . .

(6) Impose any other condition considered reasonably necessary to assure the defendant's appearance as required and the safety of other persons and the community.'

The State urges that these amendments permit the detention of defendants without bail when the judicial officer determines that the defendant 'will pose a danger to other persons and the community.' To support this argument the State refers to the Judiciary Committee Report on House Bill No. 166:

'This bill provides that a judge in determining the amount of bail to be posted for release of an individual accused but not yet tried may consider the amount necessary to guarantee his appearance for trial and also the safety of other persons and the community. The concept of the safety of other persons and the community is a new matter. This reason may be used to set higher bail or even to refuse bail.' 1967 Alaska H.R. Jour. 339.

The Committee's intent seemingly was to permit a judicial officer to consider 'danger to the community' as a factor in setting bail. The legislature could not, of course, infringe upon the constitutional right of bail.

Thus the amendment to subsection (a) of AS 12.30.020 operates to add another factor to be considered in determining whether an accused person is entitled to be released on personal recognizance or on an unsecured appearance bond. This amendment does not amount to a repeal of the right to bail found in AS 12.30.010. In like manner, the amendment to paragraph (b)(6) of AS 12.30.020 added another factor to consider in determining whether additional conditions should be imposed on a defendant. Neither provision may be read as empowering a judicial officer to deny bail. In reaching this construction, we consider it significant that the legislature did not undertake to amend AS 12.30.010 which we have noted remains as in the original Alaska Bail Reform Act and expressly provides for right to bail. Although the trial court may not deny bail to an accused, the trial judge can consider danger to the community as a factor in assessing the amount of bail or fixing the terms of a conditional release. [FN24] We hold therefore that the 1967 amendments, Ch. 112, SLA 1967, to the Bail Reform Act do not permit the detention of persons without bail. Moreover, a legislative enactment expressly permitting the detention of persons without right to bail would be unconstitutional unless a constitutional amendment were adopted.[FN25]

FN24. Other factors to take under consideration are enumerated in AS 12.30.020(c).'In determining the conditions of release under (b) of this section the judicial officer shall take into account(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged,(2) the weight of the evidence against the person,(3) the person's family ties,(4) the person's employment,(5) the person's financial resources,(6) the person's character and mental condition,(7) the length of the person's residence in the community,(8) the person's record of convictions,(9) the person's record of appearance at court proceedings,(10) the flight of the accused to avoid prosecution or his failure to appear at court proceedings.

FN25. Note, Preventive Detention, 79 Harv.L.Rev. 1489, 1500 (1966). 'In those states (which guarantee the right to bail in noncapital cases), denial of bail in a noncapital case for preventive purposes, no matter how great the dangers posed by release, would be permissible only by constitutional amendment.' (footnote omitted)

It follows that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the right to bail to appellant Richard Snyder afforded by Article I, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution any by the Alaska Bail Reform Act.

It is true unfortunately that crimes including those involving assaults, robbery and the theft of property are all too commonplace. Public safety has become a matter of the most serious concern to all law-abiding citizens. But alternatives other than preventive detention of an accused must be examined in the efforts to achieve reasonable and adequate public safety. [FN26]

FN26. Criminal Rule 45 requires a trial within four months from the 'date the defendant is arrested, initially arraigned, or from the date the charge (complaint, indictment, or information) is served upon the defendant, whichever is first.' This rule is intended to make effective the right of the accused to a speedy trial as well as bringing about a prompt disposition permitting incarceration of a dangerous offender hopefully for rehabilitation. In recognition of this policy, trial courts should grant continuances of criminal trial sparingly and only when necessary.

In the case of appellant Aloyisus Fabian, the trial judge offered to release the defendant to the custody of the Anchorage Native Program for Alcoholic and Drug Abuse. However, efforts to enroll Fabian in the program failed. He remained in jail because his counsel, for reasons unexplained, failed to reapply for bail. In this instance the trial judge afforded an opportunity for defendant to be released. Under these circumstances, the trial court did not deny Fabian his right to bail.

The case of Max Ray Martin presents different considerations. Article I, section 11, as we have said, guarantees the accused in a criminal prosecution the right to bail. However, a probation revocation hearing is not a criminal prosecution looking toward an adjudication of guilt or innocence.[FN27] Although this court in Hoffman v. State, 404 P.2d 644 (Alaska 1965), required the appointment of counsel to indigent probationers in a revocation hearing, that decision rested on a statutory interpretation of AS 12.55.110[FN28] consistent with the equal protection clauses of both the Federal and Alaska Constitutions. Hoffman does not hold that probation revocation hearings are to be equated to a criminal prosecution.[FN29]

FN27. Trumbly v. State, Opinion No. 957, 515 P.2d 707 (1973). Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 414, 93 S.Ct. 1756, 1759, 36 L.Ed.2d 656, 651-662 (1973) (Probation revocation, like parole revocation, is not a stage of a criminal prosecution, but does result in a loss of liberty.' (footnote omitted)). Cf., Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S.Ct. 2593, 33 L.Ed.2d 484 (1972).

FN28. AS 12.55.110 governs revocation of probation proceedings.

FN29. Efforts to broadly interpret Hoffman as eliminating the technical classifications between administrative and criminal proceedings for purposes of the double jeopardy clause, were rejected by this court in Alex v. State, 484 P.2d 677 (Alaska 1971). We rejected this argument by noting that Hoffman only involved an equal protection analysis, not the expansion of any substantive rights as claimed by the defendant.

We do not interpret Article I, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution to extend the right of bail to probation revocation proceedings. While the Alaska Constitution and statutes insure to the accused in all criminal prosecutions a right to bail, Martin was not the accused in a criminal prosecution at the time he requested bail from the trial court.[FN30]

FN30. Cf. In re Law, 10 Cal.3d 21, 109 Cal.Rptr. 573, 513 P.2d 621 (1973) (where the California Supreme Court denied a parolee's right to bail pending a hearing investigating alleged violations of parole).

Nor do we find that appellant was entitled to bail under the Alaska Bail Act. His reliance on AS 12.30.010 is misplaced, because the right to bail under this statute is guaranteed prior to conviction. When a defendant reaches the status of a probationer, he can no longer claim the right to bail protected by AS 12.30.010. Nor can he claim bail under the probation statutes,[FN31] since they fail to mention bail, and AS 12.30.040, which provides for release after trial is limited in application to convicted persons awaiting sentence or whose appeal is pending.

FN31. AS 12.55.080 and AS 12.55.110.

While we hold that appellant Max Ray Martin was neither entitled to bail under the Alaska Constitution nor the Alaska Bail Act, we suggest bail should be withheld pending revocation proceedings only in unusual cases. Trial judges have wide latitude in imposing suitable conditions for prehearing release, other than the denial of bail. The denial of bail may constitute a needless disruption of the probation process negating the program's objectives of rehabilitation and eventual integration into society. Furthermore, the recent expansion in the area of probationer's rights by the United States Supreme Court in Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 93 S.Ct. 1756, 36 L.Ed.2d 656 (1973) suggests the granting of bail. In Gagnon, the Court, inter alia, required as a matter of due process that a probationer be afforded a prompt preliminary hearing to determine whether probable cause exists to believe a violation of probation has occurred. Following this preliminary hearing, a final hearing must be allowed prior to an ultimate determination concerning the revocation of probation.

The Gagnon due process requirements were adopted by this court in Trumbly v. State, Opinion No. 957, 515 P.2d 707 (1973). Both Trumbly and Gagnon evinced a concern for considering the rehabilitative treatment afforded by probation as a factor in determining whether probationary status should be revoked. As this court stated in Trumbly,

'The requirement that probation revocation follow after a showing of 'good cause' requires the trial judge to find that continuation of probationary status would be at odds with the need to protect society and society's interest in the probationer's rehabilitation. Revocation should follow violation of a condition of probation when that violation indicates that the corrective aims of probation cannot be achieved.' Trumbly v. State, Opinion No. 957, 515 P.2d 707 (1973) (footnotes omitted).

In Martin's case, there has been no showing that there was abuse of the trial judge's discretion in refusing to allow Martin's release on bail pending a revocation hearing.[FN32]

FN32. We note that federal probationers are by court rule provided with an opportunity for release pending a hearing. Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 32(f).

We conclude that appellant Richard Snyder was entitled to bail. The appeals of Aloyisus Stephan Fabian and Max Ray Martin are dismissed.

SENATE BILL 252
Sectional Analysis

Section 1 of the bill moves the crime of failure to appear at a court appearance from Title 12 to Title 11. The proposed law is similar to current law with one exception -- it provides that if a person knows that he or she is required to appear, the prosecution does not have to prove an additional culpable mental state regarding the conduct of not appearing. It also provides an affirmative defense that the defendant, due to unforeseeable circumstances outside his or her control, was prevented from appearing at the hearing, and that the defendant notified the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

The penalties are the same as under current law, except that the bill adopts a violation for failure to appear in connection with a violation.

Section 2 includes a conforming amendment to AS 12.25.030(b). It changes the standard for a law enforcement officer to make an arrest without a warrant in certain cases from "reasonable cause" to "probable cause". The standard in AS 12.25.030(b) would then be the same as in AS 12.25.030(a). Reasonable cause and probable cause are similar.

Section 2 also allows a law enforcement officer to arrest a person for violation of conditions of release if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has violated conditions in connection with release under AS 12.30. Law enforcement supports this change because it avoids, for example, an officer having to get an arrest warrant for a person if the person is ordered not to drink alcohol and is found intoxicated.

Section 3 adopts a new section, AS 12.20.006, that describes release procedures for a person charged with a crime. Although the procedures are similar to those provided under various sections of existing law, there are a few differences, which include:

- Before the third and subsequent bail hearings, current law and the bill require that certain prerequisites are met – such as seven days elapsing between bail hearings unless certain other factors are present. Current law requires 48 hours notice to the prosecuting authority, and the bill requires the same notice, but it also requires 48 hours notice to any surety involved so that the surety has an opportunity to attend the hearing.

- The bill specifically requires the person being released to sign a release agreement that describes the terms of the release and includes the person's promise to abide by the terms.

- The bill eliminates a provision in current law that allows a judicial officer to change, add to, or eliminate conditions of release at any time. The law already provides a process for asking the court to change conditions, and allowing a change at any time, without following the required procedures, has the potential of being unfair to the defendant, the prosecuting authority, or to the victim.

Section 4 revises the law addressing release before trial of a person charged with a crime. Proposed AS 12.30.011 adopts standards and conditions for release in general, and AS 12.30.016 adopts standards and conditions for release for specific crimes.

Proposed AS 12.30.011 first adopts conditions that must he imposed on all persons released pending trial. They are very general – including a requirement that the person obey all laws, appear in court when ordered, and keep in contact with the person's attorney.

- Subsection (b) provides conditions that a court may impose on a person charged with a crime if, in the court's discretion the condition will reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community. Many of these conditions are in current law. Others are included in federal bail law. Several were suggested by a retired judge who is doing contract work for the court system. There is also a general authorization for additional reasonable conditions.

- Subsection (c) describes the various circumstances that the court should consider in deciding what conditions are reasonable to impose on the person. These are similar to current law.

- Subsection (d) provides the evidentiary burdens that a court must apply in making a decision about the release of a person. Generally, the burden of proof is on the prosecuting authority to establish that particular conditions are reasonable to assure the defendant's appearance and the safety of the victim and others. However, the bill proposes a rebuttable presumption, that may be overcome by a preponderance of evidence, that no condition or combination of conditions will assure the defendant's appearance or the safety of the victim or others if (1) the defendant is charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony; (2) the person is charged with a felony, has a previous conviction for felony, and less that five years have elapsed since his or her unconditional release for the prior conviction; (3) the offense was committed while the defendant was on release for another offense; or (4) the charge is for a crime involving domestic violence, and the defendant has been convicted within the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence.

Proposed AS 12.30.016 adopts conditions that may be imposed in particular cases. These conditions are in addition to the general conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011(a) and (b). Most of these additional conditions are found in current law.

- Subsection (b) provides additional conditions that may be imposed on persons charged with Title 04 violations such as selling alcohol without a license or bootlegging, and with drunk driving and refusal to submit to a breath test. These conditions include, for example, a judicial officer ordering a person to submit to a breath test when requested to do so by a law enforcement officer.

- Subsection (c) provides additional conditions that may be imposed on a person charged with violation of the drug laws, and include, for example, prohibiting the person from entering or remaining in a place where a controlled substance is being used, manufactured, grown, or distributed.

- Subsection (d) is a provision that was enacted in 2006, that adopts a mandatory requirement of $250,000 cash bond for a person charged with manufacturing methamphetamine, unless the defendant proves to the court that his or her role was only as an aider or abettor and that the defendant did not stand to gain financially from the offense.

- Subsection (e) adopts specific conditions for a person charged with stalking that is not a crime involving domestic violence. The conditions are similar to those in current law.

- Subsection (f) adopts specific conditions that a court may impose on a person charged with a sex offense. The conditions are similar to current law, except that it adds a condition that the court may order the defendant to have no contact with person under 18 years of age, except for contact made during the normal course of business in a public place. It requires the court, as does current law, to assure that the victim has been notified of the hearing or reasonable efforts to do so have been made, and to consider the victim's comments in making a release decision.

Section 5 adopts standards for the appointment of a third-party custodian for a person released before trial. It requires a court to obtain information about the proposed custodian including the person's ties to the community and his or her relationship with the defendant. It also sets minimum standards for custodians such as requiring the person to be physically able to perform the duties of custodian, and requires the person to agree to report immediately if the defendant has violated conditions. The bill also prohibits a person from acting as third-party custodian under certain circumstances, such as if the person may be called as a witness in the case, or the person has recent charges or a conviction for violating the law.

Section 6 amends the statute addressing the general release conditions of a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence by conforming it to the language used in the newly adopted sections of the bill. It does not include a substantive change.

Section 7 amends the law that prohibits a court from allowing a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence from returning to the residence of the victim or to the residence of a person who has a protective order directed at the defendant. This prohibition was found to violate equal protection of the law in Williams v. State, 151 P.3d 460 (Alaska App. 2006). This se0ction is in response to Williams, and would overturn it to the extent that it would prohibit a person from returning to the residence of the victim unless certain conditions were met. These include requiring that 20 days have elapsed since the arrest, the victim or petitioner consents to the return, the defendant does not have a prior conviction for a domestic violence crime against a person, and the defendant establish by clear and convincing evidence that the return to the residence does not pose a danger to the victim or petitioner.

Section 8 rewrites the provision addressing appeal from conditions of release. Current law and the bill provide specific procedures for requesting the court to change conditions of release. The bill does not reenact the provision in current law that allows the court from hearing at any time a motion to amend the release order. Rather, the bill requires the person to follow the procedures adopted for asking the court to amend conditions.

The appeal procedure from the trial court's bail decision is similar in the bill to current law. The standard for review is the same as current law – the appellate court shall affirm the lower court unless it finds that the lower court abused its discretion. The bill allows the appellate court to modify the order, remand the case for further proceedings, or to direct the entry of an appropriate release order. This is also similar to current law.

Section 9 adds a new section addressing the temporary release of a person for an emergency such as the death of a family member. It is similar to current law under AS 12.30.010(a).

Section 10 addresses the release of persons who have been found guilty but not yet sentenced or whose conviction is being appealed. It allows release under the general provisions of AS 12.30, but it requires the person seeking release to establish by clear and convincing evidence that the release sought will reasonably assure the person's appearance and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

Under current law certain defendants may not be released after being found guilty, including a person convicted of an unclassified or class A felony. The current statute also prohibits release of persons convicted of class B or C felonies if they have a previous conviction for certain serious felonies. This later category was found by the court of appeals to violate the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of law. Bourdon v. State, 28 P. 3d 319 (Alaska App. 2001). The bill would prohibit release of a person found guilty of all sexual felonies, and a person found guilty of a class B or C felony who has been convicted of a felony in the prior 10 years. It avoids the problem in Bourdon by applying the prohibition to all persons convicted of class B or C felonies who have a prior conviction of a felony in the previous 10 years.

Section 11 makes clarifying changes to the law for the retention or release of a material witness who is not expected to respond to a subpoena to appear. The bill does not change the substance of current law to a great degree. It does, however, specify that the court may order a material witness who is not expected to respond to a subpoena to be arrested and released under the bail law. As does current law, it allows a material witness to be detained for enough time to take a deposition and then released, unless justice requires the person be personally present at trial.

Section 12 specifies that a person who is in custody in connection with a petition to revoke probation does not have a right to release under AS 12.30. This is the same as current law. Burt v. State, 823 P.2d 14 (Alaska App. 1991). However, a probationer may request release under AS 12.30. The bill provides that the probationer must establish by clear and convincing evidence that conditions on his or her release will reasonably assure the appearance of the probationer and the safety of the victim, other persons, and the community.

Section 13 is a conforming amendment to current law.

Section 14 provides that for purposes of the bail statutes, a conviction occurs at the time a person is found guilty, either by verdict of by plea.

Section 15 adds definitions to in the bill.

Sections 16 – 18 are conforming amendments.

Section 19 provides that service of domestic violence protective orders on respondents need not by made by law enforcement officers if the respondent has already been served with the protective order on the record in court.

Sections 20 and 21 amend Rule 5, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure. Current law requires a person who has been arrested to be brought before a judicial officer within 24 hours of being arrested. The bill changes this from 24 hours to 48 hours. Although the preferred procedure is to have persons arrested be brought as soon as possible before a judicial officer, the change in the deadline will give prosecutors and the police more time to gather information to provide the court in making a release decision, and allow more time to locate and inform the victim of the right to be present at release procedures.

Sections 22 and 23 are conforming amendments.

Section 24 amends Rule 41(c), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, by providing that a court may not change or add to a bond requirement without the agreement of the surety.

Section 25 is a conforming amendment.

Section 26 amends Rule 603(b), Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure, to clarify that release of a person whose conviction is being appealed may be allowed as provided by the provisions of AS 12.30.

Sections 27 – 29 include the repealers, the applicability sections, and the effective date provision.

RELEASE BEFORE TRIAL AND AFTER CONVICTION
Sectional Analysis of Proposed Legislation

- Section 1 of the bill moves the crime of failure to appear at a court appearance from Title 12 to Title 11. The proposed law is similar to current law with one exception -- it provides that if a person knows that he or she is required to appear, the prosecution does not have to prove an additional culpable mental state regarding the conduct of not appearing. It also provides an affirmative defense that the defendant, due to unforeseeable circumstances outside his or her control, was prevented from appearing at the hearing, and that the defendant notified the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

  The penalties are the same as under current law, except that the bill adopts a violation for failure to appear in connection with a violation.

- Section 2 includes a conforming amendment to AS 12.25.030(b). It also changes the standard for a law enforcement officer to make an arrest without a warrant in certain cases from "reasonable cause" to "probable cause". The standard in AS 12.25.030(b) would then be the same as in subsection AS 12.25.030(a). Reasonable cause and probable cause are similar.

  Section 2 also allows a law enforcement officer to arrest a person for violation of conditions of release if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has violated conditions in connection with release under AS 12.30. Law enforcement supports this change because it avoids, for example, an officer having to get an arrest warrant for a person if the person's custodian reports that the person has violated his or her release conditions.

- Section 3 adopts a new section that describes release procedures for a person charged with a crime. Although the procedures are similar to those provided under various sections of existing law, there are a few differences, which include:

  - Before the third and subsequent bail hearings, current law and the bill require that certain prerequisites are met – such as seven days elapsing between bail hearings unless certain other factors are present. Current law requires 48 hours notice to the prosecuting authority, and the bill requires the same notice, but it also requires 48 hours notice to any surety involved so that the surety has an opportunity to attend the hearing.

  - The bill specifically requires the person being released to sign a release agreement that describes the terms of the release and includes the person's promise to abide by the terms.

- The bill eliminates a provision in current law that allows a judicial officer to change, add to, or eliminate conditions of release at any time. The law already provides a process for asking the court to change conditions, and allowing a change at any time, without following the required procedures, has the potential of being unfair to the defendant, the prosecuting authority, or to the victim.

- Section 4 rewrites the law addressing release before trial of a person charged with a crime. Proposed AS 12.30.011 adopts standards and conditions for release in general, and AS 12.30.016 adopts standards and conditions for release for specific crimes.

  - Proposed AS 12.30.011 first adopts conditions that must he imposed on all persons released pending trial. They are very general – including a requirement that the person obey all laws, appear in court when ordered, and keep in contact with the person's attorney.

    1. the prior conviction; (3) the offense was committed while the defendant was on release for another offense; or (4) the charge is for a crime involving domestic violence, and the defendant has been convicted within the previous five years of a crime involving domestic violence.

- Proposed AS 12.30.016 adopts conditions that may be imposed in particular cases. These conditions are in addition to the general conditions authorized under AS 12.30.011(a) and (b). Most of these additional conditions are found in current law.

  1. - Section 6 amends the statute addressing the general release conditions of a person charged with a crime involving domestic violence by conforming it to the language used in the newly adopted sections of the bill. It does not include a substantive change.

Re: Senate Bill 252 – Bail Reform

Dear Senator French:

I am writing to respectfully request that you schedule Senate Bill 252 for a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. SB 252 is one of several bills that the Governor has introduced to confront and help reduce the alarming and discouraging rate of sex offenses and crimes involving domestic violence in our state. This bill specifically relates to bail including bail in sex and domestic violence offenses.

This bill makes several important changes in Alaska's law relating to bail. In 1966 the Alaska Legislature enacted the Alaska Bail Act modeled after SB 1357, 89 Congress First Session. There have been only piecemeal revisions to this nearly 50 year old law. In 1984, the Federal government revised their bail statutes. This bill requires a person charged with a serious sex offense to prove that release conditions before trial will protect the victim and the public. It adopts standards for persons who may be appointed as third party custodians for the person released on bail. The bail prohibits a person found guilty of a serious sex offense from being released before sentencing or during an appeal of a conviction. It protects victims of domestic violence by setting standards that the court must find before allowing a perpetrator of domestic violence to return to the victims' residence. Additionally, it allows more time between a defendant's arrest and first appearance in court so that the police can investigate more fully, so that the prosecutor can make informed charging decision, present of better information and bail arguments in court and more time to contact the victim so he or she can appear at the bail hearing.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each provision of the bill.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Daniel S. Sullivan

Senate Bill 257

Youth Court Funding

Youth Courts are one of Alaska's most effective crime prevention programs. For more than 20 years, youth courts have boasted an eight percent recidivism rate – dramatically lower than the traditional juvenile justice system. Youth courts save our state money, and deliver on the constitution's promise of a trial by one's peers. SB 257 provides a stable source of state investment.

Alaska has one of the strongest Youth Court statutes in the United States. It allows nonprofit and municipal youth courts to handle cases in which youths are accused of misdemeanors, violations, and alcohol crimes. A minor accused of breaking the law is tried, represented, and adjudicated by the minor's peers, with assistance and oversight from volunteer attorneys.

A comprehensive mix of state support, municipal grants, private sector funds, volunteers and federal money keep Alaska's youth courts functioning. SB 257 designates a source for state dollars to go to youth courts: criminal fines. Today, criminal fines are spent on the general administration of state government. SB 257 would require government to account separately for these fines, and allow the legislature to appropriate up to 25 percent of the funds to support youth courts.

Alaska's 12 youth courts operate in communities from Ketchikan to Nome. Alaska's youth courts are tailored to their local communities. Some only sentence youths who have admitted guilt. Others take cases from shortly after arrest through jury trials. But all Alaska Youth Courts relieve a tremendous burden from the traditional juvenile justice system. By providing significant attention to even the smallest infractions, young offenders are held accountable in a meaningful way. By diverting minor offenses, youth courts free highly trained youth corrections staff at the Department of Health & Social Services to focus valuable time and energy on turning around the hard cases.

Youth courts provide a valuable service to Alaskan and are a wise investment. Using criminal fines to pay for crime prevention makes sense.

To whom it may concern:

I am writing in support of legislation that would provide sustainable funding for youth court programs in Juneau and other communities in Alaska. For over a decade Juneau Youth Court has provided a vital and important service to the City and Borough of Juneau.

Juneau Youth Court is a diversion program that removes young people who are first time offenders from the traditional juvenile justice system and handles the case in a court of peers. The program works with families to ensure that teens are held accountable for their actions and that consequences are constructive and tailored to the individual youth thereby benefiting both the young person and the community at large. Last year Juneau Youth Court ordered over 600 hours of community work service that were completed at Zach Gordon Youth Center, the American Red Cross, Meals on Wheels, the Glory Hole, the Salvation Army, and at schools throughout Juneau School District.

On average Juneau Youth Court serves 50 youth each year handling referrals from both District Court and Juvenile Justice Probation Officers. This frees up the court and probation officers to handle more serious offenders and helps to reduce their large caseloads. Youth Courts have the additional advantage of educating the youth who volunteer for the program. Youth Court advocates reap the benefits of learning about the legal system, performing meaningful community service, and gaining the opportunity to help their peers.

Juneau Youth Court operates on a very small budget of $35,000 per year with one part time paid staff person, two dozen volunteer student advocates, a community advisory board including representatives from the Police Department, the Division of Juvenile Justice, the legal community, and community partners. The program offers an important service to the community at a very low cost.

Juneau Youth Court is just one example of a successful diversion program known as youth court. Around the state Youth Courts are doing important work for Alaska by addressing juvenile crime in its earliest stage. I strongly urge you to support legislation that would provide sustainable funding to support these community-based programs.

Sincerely,

Laury Scandling

The Juneau Youth Court Community Advisory Board supports House Bill 331 and Senate Bill 257, "an Act relating to funding for youth courts; and relating to accounting for criminal fines". This legislation would appropriate 25 percent of the court fines imposed under AS 12.55.035 to established and operating youth courts. Federal funding will not be available after this year and the future of the Alaska Youth courts depend upon state and local ownership.

A recent study shows Alaska Youth Courts to be among the most effective in the nation. According to the Urban Institute's Evaluation of Teen Courts Project, which was based on four teen court programs studied in four different states (Alaska, Maryland, Arizona, and Missouri), the six-month recidivism figures among the programs ranged from 6 percent to 9 percent. Alaska's recidivism rate was the lowest of these four states, and compared to the recidivism rate of 18 percent for the regular juvenile justice system, shows that youth who go through youth courts are significantly less inclined to re-offend within the following year.

The primary function of youth court programs is to determine a fair and restorative sentence for young offenders. Youth courts are programs in which youth sentence their peers for minor delinquent and status offenses and other problem behaviors. According to the National Youth Court Database, in 1994 there were only 78 youth court programs in operation; as of October, 2006, there were over 1127 youth court programs in operation in 49 states and the District of Columbia.

The Alaska Youth Courts is a vital form of community justice and reweaves the fabric of community by forging a partnership between local governmental entities, the private sector, and community groups to facilitate the performance by private citizens of the functions that were once performed by the extended family, neighborhood, and school.

Dear Beth:

I am writing to express my appreciation for the work done by the Juneau Youth Court. The Youth Court is an integral sentencing option for students under the age of 18 who are charged with consuming or possessing alcohol for the first time.

As you know, students who choose the Youth Court option are given the opportunity to have their District Court case dismissed if they successfully complete the Youth Court requirements. For some, this brief involvement in the criminal justice system is a turning point. Those who choose Youth Court and succeed are far less likely to return to District Court on other criminal charges. The students benefit because they end up with no conviction on their record. And the community benefits because the Youth Court graduates are contributing to the community rather than causing harm to themselves and others.

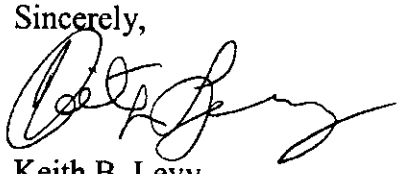
The Youth Court is the only diversion program available in District Court to enable individuals to have their cases dismissed without resulting in a criminal record. The trust the program has earned from both the District Court and the prosecution is a testament to the value and integrity of the program.

I appreciate that you or another representative of the Youth Court always attends the arraignment hearings for minor consuming. The information you provide to the students about Youth Court is invaluable and helps them understand their options in the justice system.

Finally, the Youth Court program provides an opportunity for students to be judged by their peers. I believe this is valuable because the students in the program have far more information about the defendants than is provided to me in formal sentencing proceedings. The Youth Court is able to impose consequences that are more meaningful than the limited options I have when sentencing.

Thanks again for the important service the Youth Court provides to the community.

Sincerely,



Keith B. Levy

Dear Ms. McCloy:

As the Magistrate for the Ketchikan Trial Courts, I am the judicial officer who most frequently deals with school age teenagers charged by the State of Alaska and the City of Ketchikan with violations of laws or ordinances prohibiting possession or consumption of alcohol by minors, establishing curfews, and prohibiting possession or use of tobacco products by minors. The existence of and the programs offered by the Ketchikan Youth Court provide me with a meaningful sentencing alternative in dealing with these cases.

The KYC process teaches teens referred by the court to KYC about the court process itself, and provides a group of same-age and same-interests teens for these youthful defendants to work with. The resolution of cases through KYC requires engagement of both the defendant and that teen's parents, ultimately strengthening the family abilities to deal with problems a defendant is having as expressed through these quasi-criminal charges. The Court System sees fewer recidivists among those teens who are referred to and who successfully complete the KYC program.

KYC has added the Prime for Life alcohol information classes, and has agreed to make the class available to teens other than those actively participating in the full KYC program. This is a good program, and adds significantly to the resources available within Ketchikan.

I fully support Ketchikan Youth Court.

Sincerely,

Mary P. Treiber

RE: Support for Senate Bill 260 – Permitting Electronic Voting for Cooperatives

Honorable Senator Menard:

Homer Electric Association, Inc. (HEA) would like to join several other cooperatives in support of SB 260. The ability for cooperatives to use the Internet to improve member participation is a worthwhile goal.

HEA appreciates that the language in SB 260 is not mandatory, but rather provides the option to institute electronic voting should our members decide to move in that direction. Member participation is crucial to the success of our cooperative and it is possible that allowing electronic voting will improve the ability of our members to cast their vote during elections.

I urge support of this bill and its passage from your committee at the earliest time.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me at any time.

SPONSOR STATEMENT: Senate Bill 260

Senate Bill 260 puts in statute the ability for telephone or electric cooperatives to allow members to vote by electronic transmission as specified by the coop's by-laws.

Currently, coop members may only vote in person or via the postal service. This method, however, is outdated and could be having a negative impact on member participation in elections and other important matters.

By allowing telephone and electric coops to permit voting via electronic transmission approved in its by-laws, the Legislature will make it so common 21st century practices may be applied to important public involvement matters.

There is a zero fiscal note with this bill, and coops in every corner of Alaska will be enthused the Legislature has had the foresight to pass legislation important to their public process. This bill does not make electronic transmission voting mandatory, and cooperatives choose whether they want to partake or not.

Already, however, Matanuska Telephone Association (MTA) members have voted to adopt a new bylaw allowing electronic transmission voting. All MTA, and other coops, need is for the Legislature amends the statute to allow these coops to do so.

Please help me in facilitating the quick passage of SB 260.

You have requested a sectional summary of SB 260, a bill relating to electronic voting procedures for electric and telephone cooperatives.

Please note that a sectional summary of a bill is not an authoritative interpretation of a bill. The bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill allows for members of electric or telephone cooperatives to vote on matters by electronic transmission if the bylaws so provide.

Section 2 of the bill adds an electronic transmission option for determining a record date for notice to members of an electric or telephone cooperative.

Section 3 of the bill adds electronic transmission to the prohibited means of voting for a member or district delegate at a meeting and allows for voting for the district directors by electronic transmission.

Section 4 of the bill allows for electronic voting as an option for voting on an amendment to the articles of incorporation for an electric or telephone cooperative.

Section 5 of the bill provides for an immediate effective date.

POWERING ALASKA'S FUTURE

February 15, 2010

Senator Linda Menard, Chair

Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Senator Menard:

I am writing to express Chugach Electric Association's support for SB 260. Chugach is very much in favor of AS 10.25 being changed to allow cooperatives the option of electronic voting in their co-op elections.

As drafted, SB 260 makes electronic transmission of a ballot optional for those cooperatives whose members vote to change their bylaws to permit it. Chugach agrees making this voting method optional and member driven is the right approach. It is also important to note the bill allows each cooperative to determine voting procedures that are appropriate for their organization, thereby providing the flexibility for each co-op to decide how best to implement electronic voting. Once again, we think that is the right way to proceed. We understand that not all cooperatives might want to offer electronic voting, and those that do, might want to limit the means of transmission in order to ensure a secure and efficient election process.

Electronic voting is a choice that we believe many members will appreciate. Chugach members already voted several years ago to change the bylaws to permit electronic voting when state law is changed.

Chugach urges legislative support of SB 260.

RE: SB 260 – Electric/Telephone Cooperatives Voting

Dear Senator Menard:

I'm writing to ask for your support on SB 260 "An Act relating to electronic voting procedures for electric and telephone cooperatives: and providing for an effective date".

As you know, the internet has changed forever the way we communicate and do business. Alaskans have more than embraced this new world and currently lead the country as the most Internet-connected state in America. Matanuska Telephone Association (MTA) is very proud of the work we have done, to bring the future to those we serve, by building a state-of-the-art telecommunications network capable of providing a high speed broadband connection to 98% of our member/owners.

Given this connectivity and the efficiency and effectiveness it can bring, MTA proactively presented to its membership in 2007 a proposed bylaw change to allow electronic voting and to send and receive documents electronically. In the balloting process, we explained that before implementation could take place, the Alaska Legislature would need to amend State cooperative law to allow for electronic voting. Our membership voted overwhelmingly to adopt the new bylaw allowing electronic voting, as determined by MTA's Board of Directors.

It goes without saying that electronic voting can be faster and more efficient for MTA and its members. It will also save considerable postage costs, make counting votes in our elections more efficient and help reduce wasted paper. But, more importantly, MTA believes this method of balloting promotes members ability to have every option available to them to participate in their cooperative elections.

On behalf of MTA's membership and our Board, I ask for your support of the Senate Bill 260 to allow electronic voting for our members.

Thank you for your consideration.

Re: Support for SB 260: Permitting Electronic Voting for Cooperatives

Dear Senator Menard:

Alaska Power Association supports Senate Bill 260, electronic voting for electric and telephone cooperatives. Alaska Power Association is the statewide trade association for the electric utilities that supply power to more than a half-million Alaskans in communities from Barrow to Unalaska and down the Inside Passage.

Member representation through the exercise of voting rights is a cornerstone of the principles of cooperatives. Voting is permitted under the cooperative statute in person and by U.S. mail if the cooperative's bylaws allow it. The Internet has made it possible for secure and private activity to be conducted via electronic means.

Alaska Power Association urges and supports amendments to the Alaska Statutes that would allow cooperative members to exercise their voting rights via the Internet if their bylaws so allow.

We urge support of this bill and its passage from your committee at the earliest time.

Re: Support for SB 260 – Permitting Electronic Voting for Cooperatives

Dear Mr. Rovito,

Please convey to Sen. Menard and the Senate State Affairs Committee Alaska Village Electric Cooperative's strongest support for SB 260.

The language in SB 260 is not mandatory, but rather permissive, allowing cooperatives that have been so directed by their members, through their bylaws, to institute electronic voting on matters that may come before the membership.

In this modern age, where communication via the postal service has become almost archaic, it is only logical that the communication channels that are most used by most individuals should be permitted for the conduct of commerce. Indeed, it is now impossible to deal with some state agencies, such as APOC, by any other method, since it is simply not allowed!

I urge support of this bill and its passage from your committee at the earliest time.

Subject: Support for SB 260 – permitting electronic voting for cooperatives

Honorable Menard:

Golden Valley Electric Association, Inc. supports Senate Bill 260. Golden Valley is in favor of AS 10.25 being changed to allow cooperatives the option of electronic voting in their co-op elections.

Currently, Golden Valley is in the process of conducting a membership bylaw election which will amend our bylaws to permit electronic voting. Allowing this option acknowledges that the Internet has become a universal platform for sharing information. It offers co-op members a choice in submitting their ballot. Electronic submission will also save on cooperative mailing & handling costs.

Using the Internet as a universal medium to conduct business does not preclude our traditional means of operating and communicating with our members, but offers an additional option. I look forward to your support of this bill and its passage from your committee. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Dear Senator Menard:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide a letter of support for SB 260, Electric and Telephone Cooperatives' Voting.

Matanuska Electric Association, Inc. (MEA) is the oldest and second largest electric utility cooperative in the state. MEA serves more than 54,000 customers in the Matanuska-Susitna Valley and Chugiak-Eagle River areas of Alaska.

MEA supports SB 260 which specifies in state law that telephone and electric co-ops would be permitted to provide for electronic voting in their elections. MEA is currently working on a bylaw amendment to allow electronic voting, as well as analyzing the internal processes and procedures required to implement an electronic voting system.

While this bill will not require co-ops to provide electronic voting procedures, it will permit co-ops to voluntarily implement such procedures. It is important for each co-op to individually determine if electronic elections are practical and beneficial to their membership.

If you would like more information from MEA, please contact me directly at (907) 761-9212.

MEMORANDUM March 1, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary of the 2010 Revisor's Bill
(CSSB 265(JUD); Work Order No. 26-LS1220\P)

TO: Senator Charlie Huggins
Chair of the Senate Rules Committee
Attn: Deborah Grundmann

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Assistant Revisor

This is a sectional summary of the 2010 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the Legislative Affairs Agency, working in cooperation with the Revisor of Statutes

> . . . shall make recommendations to the legislative council concerning deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions in and the need for reorganization or revision of the statutes, and, at the direction of the legislative council, shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state. . . .

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Sections that delete, repeal, or update obsolete provisions: 12, 21, 22

Sections that correct errors or oversights: 1, 4, 5, 10, 11, 16, 17, 27

Sections that improve the form or substance of the law: 2, 3, 6 - 9, 13 - 15, 18 - 20, 23 - 26, 28

Bill section 1. Amends the definition of "public aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(15). This definition was originally adopted in sec. 1, ch. 123, SLA 1949, prior to statehood. In the session laws, the definition read:

> "Public Aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service with reference to the United States, and the Territorial Government.

However, in the first revised statutes published in 1962, the definition, then AS 02.15.270(12), read as it does now:

> (15) "public aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service of the United States and the state government;

The changes in the definition, necessitated by the transition to statehood, presumably occurred in the course of the bulk formal revision of the statutes, adopted as the law of Alaska in 1963. See AS 01.05.006.

In its original form, the definition referred to both the government of the United States and the territorial government. The "with reference to" phrasing would have included an aircraft used in the service of either governmental entity. The wording of the revised version retains the "and" used in the original, but does not include the "with reference to" phrasing, suggesting that a particular aircraft would need to be used in both federal and state governmental service to fall within the definition. This seems inconsistent with the original definition, which appeared to be disjunctive. Also, the disjunctive form is more consistent with the definition of "civil aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(8), which reads

> (8) "civil aircraft" means any aircraft other than a public aircraft;

Together, it seems clear that these definitions were intended to cover all aircraft. To include an aircraft used only in the service of the state government and not the federal government in the definition of "civil aircraft" would require a strained reading of that definition. For these reasons, the conjunction "and" is replaced with "or" in this section.

Bill section 2. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 06.55.407(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 3. This section amends a reference to unsworn falsification in AS 06.60.580 to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree.

From the revision of the criminal code in 1978 until 2006, the crime of unsworn falsification, a class A misdemeanor, was codified at AS 11.56.210. In 2006, the legislature enacted AS 11.56.205, making unsworn falsification on a permanent fund dividend application a class C felony. Unsworn falsification in other contexts, still punishable under AS 11.56.210, became unsworn falsification in the second degree. In the 2006 bill, most statutory references to "unsworn falsification" were amended to read "unsworn falsification in the second degree."

AS 06.60.580 was enacted in 2007 with a reference to "unsworn falsification" that did not specify degree. Because the section relates to claims from the originator surety fund, AS 11.56.205 has no relevance here. The amendment adds the words "in the second degree" to correct an oversight.

Bill section 4. This section deletes the phrase "the supervision required by AS 08.04.023" in AS 08.04.450. This phrase is a non sequitur because AS 08.04.023 does not contain any supervision requirement; it is extraneous and without legal effect. Inclusion of the phrase was a drafting error made by the legal services division.

Bill section 5. Changes "planning" to "planing" in AS 08.32.110(a). Although an Internet search reveals references to both "root planning" and "root planing," it appears that "root planing" is the more common usage for the therapy for periodontal disease performed by dental hygienists, and the word "planing" does some more accurately descriptive of the procedure, which involves smoothing the surface of a tooth's root. Also, the term "root planing" is used by the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services[1] and the American Dental Association.[2]

Bill section 6. Amends the definition of "limited liability partnership" in AS 08.48.341(10), the definition for statutes relating to the professional registration of architects, engineers, and land surveyors.

In 2000, the legislature passed an act adding limited liability companies and limited liability partnerships to the organizations that may practice architecture, engineering, and surveying. It included a new section defining the term "limited liability partnership" with reference to AS 32.05.415 and 32.05.990. That Act, ch. 38, SLA 2000, took effect August 9, 2000. During the same session, the legislature also passed an act repealing AS 32.05, the Uniform Partnership Act, and replacing it with a new version of that Act. The new provisions in that Act, ch. 115, SLA 2000, took effect January 1, 2001. The repeal of AS 32.05 took effect January 1, 2004.

Chapter 115, the Act enacting the new Uniform Partnership Act, did not make conforming changes to AS 08, as amended by chapter 38. As a result, since the repeal of AS 32.05 in 2004, the definition in AS 08.48.341(10) has pointed to two statutes that no longer exist. The changes made in this section direct the reader to the definitions in the new Uniform Partnership Act, which, under sec. 10, ch. 115, SLA 2000, has applied to all limited liability partnerships since January 1, 2004.

Bill section 7. Inserts the word "has" at the beginning of AS 08.65.140(d)(14) to improve the readability of the paragraph, and for consistency with the remainder of the subsection.

Bill section 8. Amends AS 12.55.035(c) by deleting "greater" (the comparative form of the adjective) and inserting "greatest" (the superlative form). This change is suggested because the comparative is generally used for comparing two things and the superlative is used for comparing three or more things. Since the rest of the sentence asks the reader to choose among three options, the superlative form is preferable here.

Bill section 9. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 12.65.140(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 10. Amends AS 13.26.344(j) to add a missing part of the verb. This change makes the provision parallel to other subsections of AS 13.26.344.

Bill section 11. Changes a reference to a federal regulation in AS 13.27.030, part of the Uniform Adult Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act enacted in 2008. The statute now refers to "protected health information as defined in 45 CFR 164.504." However, that section of the CFR does not include a definition of the term "protected health information." The term is defined for purposes of 45 CFR 164.504 and the rest of subchapter C, subtitle A, title 45 in 45 CFR 160.103.

Alaska's statute used the reference included in the model act. Through the attorney general's office, we have received confirmation from the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws that the cite in section 105 of the model act was erroneous, and that the correct cite is 45 CFR 160.103. This corrects the error.

Bill section 12. Amends AS 14.43.930(e)(2) to reflect the current name of the Northwest Association of Accredited Schools, which was formerly the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges. The Association changed its name in 2004.

Bill section 13. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 17.37.010(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 14. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 18.65.087(e) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 15. Codifies at AS 26.23.240 a short title for AS 26.23.010 - 26.23.240 and 26.23.900 -- the "Alaska Disaster Act." This term has frequently been used by the Attorney General as a shorthand reference to AS 26.23 (see Op. Atty Gen. file nos. 883-03-0070 (June 2, 2003), 663-93-0425 (July 8, 1993), and 663-92-0494 (January 13, 1993) for example). The term was employed by the Alaska Supreme Court in City of Seward v. Afognak Logging, 31 P.3d 780, 785 (Alaska 2001).

The phrase "Alaska Disaster Act" was used as a chapter heading when AS 26.23 was originally enacted, in sec. 3, ch. 104, SLA 1977. In 1990, two sections were added to the chapter: AS 26.23.300, creating a disaster relief fund, and AS 26.23.400, creating a fuel emergency fund. Each of these was created as a new article, and the definitions section, formerly AS 26.23.230, was renumbered as AS 26.23.900. In 2002, the Emergency Management Assistance Compact was enacted (AS 26.23.135 - AS 26.23.136), replacing the former Interstate Civil Defense and Disaster Compact, which was repealed. "Alaska Disaster Act" has been retained as the article title for Article 1 of AS 26.23.

In codifying the short title, the question arises whether it should apply only to the sections enacted in 1977, or to the 1990 additions as well. The drafting manual advises that a short title "should be used only with a bill that contains a cohesive body of proposed law dealing comprehensively with a particular subject." Manual at 23. For the sake of consistency with the existing article heading and usage by the Alaska Supreme Court and the Attorney General, the revisor's bill applies the short title only to Article 1 of AS 26.23 and the definitions section, AS 26.23.900, which was part of the original material designated as the Alaska Disaster Act in the 1977 legislation.

Bill section 16. Amends AS 29.65.050(b) to conform the usage to the term defined in AS 29.65.130(10) -- "vacant, unappropriated, unreserved land." Since the subsection in which the phrase "land that was vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved" was adopted in the same 1985 revision of the municipal code as the definition in AS 29.65.130(10), it is assumed that the inconsistency is a drafting error or oversight.

Bill section 17. Amends AS 29.65.060(a). Currently, the statute reads "vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved land as defined in this chapter" (emphasis added). The "or" is deleted to conform the usage with the phrase that is actually defined in the chapter.

Bill section 18. Amends AS 34.45.320(b) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications.

AS 34.45.280(b) specifies that reports of abandoned personal property are to be made on a form which gives notice that statements on the form are made under penalty of unsworn falsification. Since this section relates to reports of unclaimed property rather than permanent fund dividend applications, unsworn falsification in the second degree under AS 11.56.210 is clearly the applicable statute. This section predates the 2006 changes to the law of unsworn falsification, and it is not clear why the reference was not changed in the 2006 bill. Although the general reference may suffice -- "under penalty of unsworn falsification" is not wrong, it is merely imprecise -- a reference that includes "in the second degree" is more accurate here. For further explanation, see the discussion in bill sec. 3, above.

Bill section 19. Amends AS 34.45.380(a) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications. See bill sec. 18, above; the only difference is that AS 34.45.380(a) relates to abandoned property claim forms (rather than report forms).

Bill section 20. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 40.25.220 to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 21. Amends AS 41.21.506(b)(2) to remove an exception added in sec. 2, ch. 61, SLA 2009 relating to AS 16.40.260 and 16.40.270 on the date that those two sections are repealed. The repeal will take effect January 1, 2011, under sec. 8, ch. 70, SLA 2004 as amended by sec. 3, ch. 61, SLA 2009, unless that section is further amended.

Bill section 22. Corrects a reference to the United States Code in AS 42.40.430. In 2002, 40 U.S.C. 471 was renumbered as 40 U.S.C. 401 in a general revision of federal laws relating to public property. According to the statement of purpose for the revision Act, P.L. 107-217, sec 5(b)(1), "[t]his Act makes no substantive change in existing law and may not be construed as making a substantive change in existing law."

Bill section 23. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.455(d) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 24. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.475(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 25. Adds a short title at AS 44.62.319 for AS 44.62.310 - 44.62.312, which is commonly referred to as "the open meetings act." See for example Abood v. League of Women Voters, 743 P.2d 833 (Alaska 1987), Hickel v. Southeast Conference, 846 P.2d 38 (Alaska 1992), Griswold v. City of Homer, 55 P.3d 64 (Alaska 2002), and 1995 Op. (Inf.) Atty Gen. Alas. 317, file no. 663-95-0524 (August 21, 1995).

Bill section 26. In AS 46.14.500(c), changes a parenthetical reference to the Clean Air Act to make the form similar to that used for other United States Code citations cited in the Alaska Statutes.

Bill section 27. Moves the phrase "the facility may" in AS 47.30.695 from the introductory text into the text of paragraph (1). This is necessary because the phrase "the facility may" cannot be applied to paragraph (2), since paragraphs (1) and (2) are disjunctive ("or" is the conjunction), and (2) has a different verb phrase ("the treating physician may").

Bill section 28. Instructs the revisor to conform references to the Open Meetings Act to reflect the short title codified in sec. 25 of the bill.

Bill section 29. Makes the effective date for sec. 21 of the Act conditional; this section should only take effect if the sections referred to are actually repealed.

Bill section 30. Provides an effective date for sec. 21, if sec. 21 takes effect under sec. 29.

Bill section 31. Provides an effective date for the remaining sections of the bill.

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary of the 2010 Revisor's Bill (SB 265; Work Order No. 26-LS1220\S)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Assistant Revisor

This is a sectional summary of the 2010 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the Legislative Affairs Agency, working in cooperation with the Revisor of Statutes

> . . . shall make recommendations to the legislative council concerning deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions in and the need for reorganization or revision of the statutes, and, at the direction of the legislative council, shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state. . . .

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Sections that delete, repeal, or update obsolete provisions: 12, 21, 22

Sections that correct errors or oversights: 1, 4, 5, 10, 11, 16, 17, 27

Sections that improve the form or substance of the law: 2, 3, 6 - 9, 13 - 15, 18 - 20, 23 - 26, 28

Bill section 1. Amends the definition of "public aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(15). This definition was originally adopted in sec. 1, ch. 123, SLA 1949, prior to statehood. In the session laws, the definition read:

> "Public Aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service with reference to the United States, and the Territorial Government.

However, in the first revised statutes published in 1962, the definition, then AS 02.15.270(12), read as it does now:

> (15) "public aircraft" means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service of the United States and the state government;

The changes in the definition, necessitated by the transition to statehood, presumably occurred in the course of the bulk formal revision of the statutes, adopted as the law of Alaska in 1963. See AS 01.05.006.

In its original form, the definition referred to both the government of the United States and the territorial government. The "with reference to" phrasing would have included an aircraft used in the service of either governmental entity. The wording of the revised version retains the "and" used in the original, but does not include the "with reference to" phrasing, suggesting that a particular aircraft would need to be used in both federal and state governmental service to fall within the definition. This seems inconsistent with the original definition, which appeared to be disjunctive. Also, the disjunctive form is more consistent with the definition of "civil aircraft" in AS 02.15.260(8), which reads

> (8) "civil aircraft" means any aircraft other than a public aircraft;

Together, it seems clear that these definitions were intended to cover all aircraft. To include an aircraft used only in the service of the state government and not the federal government in the definition of "civil aircraft" would require a strained reading of that definition. For these reasons, the conjunction "and" is replaced with "or" in this section.

Bill section 2. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 06.55.407(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 3. This section amends a reference to unsworn falsification in AS 06.60.580 to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree.

From the revision of the criminal code in 1978 until 2006, the crime of unsworn falsification, a class A misdemeanor, was codified at AS 11.56.210. In 2006, the legislature enacted AS 11.56.205, making unsworn falsification on a permanent fund dividend application a class C felony. Unsworn falsification in other contexts, still punishable under AS 11.56.210, became unsworn falsification in the second degree. In the 2006 bill, most statutory references to "unsworn falsification" were amended to read "unsworn falsification in the second degree."

AS 06.60.580 was enacted in 2007 with a reference to "unsworn falsification" that did not specify degree. Because the section relates to claims from the originator surety fund, AS 11.56.205 has no relevance here. The amendment adds the words "in the second degree" to correct an oversight.

Bill section 4. This section deletes the phrase "the supervision required by AS 08.04.023" in AS 08.04.450. This phrase is a non sequitur because AS 08.04.023 does not contain any supervision requirement; it is extraneous and without legal effect. Inclusion of the phrase was a drafting error made by the legal services division.

Bill section 5. Changes "planning" to "planing" in AS 08.32.110(a). Although an Internet search reveals references to both "root planning" and "root planing," it appears that "root planing" is the more common usage for the therapy for periodontal disease performed by dental hygienists, and the word "planing" does some more accurately descriptive of the procedure, which involves smoothing the surface of a tooth's root. Also, the term "root planing" is used by the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services[1] and the American Dental Association.[2]

Bill section 6. Amends the definition of "limited liability partnership" in AS 08.48.341(10), the definition for statutes relating to the professional registration of architects, engineers, and land surveyors.

In 2000, the legislature passed an act adding limited liability companies and limited liability partnerships to the organizations that may practice architecture, engineering, and surveying. It included a new section defining the term "limited liability partnership" with reference to AS 32.05.415 and 32.05.990. That Act, ch. 38, SLA 2000, took effect August 9, 2000. During the same session, the legislature also passed an act repealing AS 32.05, the Uniform Partnership Act, and replacing it with a new version of that Act. The new provisions in that Act, ch. 115, SLA 2000, took effect January 1, 2001. The repeal of AS 32.05 took effect January 1, 2004.

Chapter 115, the Act enacting the new Uniform Partnership Act, did not make conforming changes to AS 08, as amended by chapter 38. As a result, since the repeal of AS 32.05 in 2004, the definition in AS 08.48.341(10) has pointed to two statutes that no longer exist. The changes made in this section direct the reader to the definitions in the new Uniform Partnership Act, which, under sec. 10, ch. 115, SLA 2000, has applied to all limited liability partnerships since January 1, 2004.

Bill section 7. Inserts the word "has" at the beginning of AS 08.65.140(d)(14) to improve the readability of the paragraph, and for consistency with the remainder of the subsection.

Bill section 8. Amends AS 12.55.035(c) by deleting "greater" (the comparative form of the adjective) and inserting "greatest" (the superlative form). This change is suggested because the comparative is generally used for comparing two things and the superlative is used for comparing three or more things. Since the rest of the sentence asks the reader to choose among three options, the superlative form is preferable here.

Bill section 9. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 12.65.140(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 10. Amends AS 13.26.344(j) to add a missing part of the verb. This change makes the provision parallel to other subsections of AS 13.26.344.

Bill section 11. Changes a reference to a federal regulation in AS 13.27.030, part of the Uniform Adult Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act enacted in 2008. The statute now refers to "protected health information as defined in 45 CFR 164.504." However, that section of the CFR does not include a definition of the term "protected health information." The term is defined for purposes of 45 CFR 164.504 and the rest of subchapter C, subtitle A, title 45 in 45 CFR 160.103.

Alaska's statute used the reference included in the model act. Through the attorney general's office, we have received confirmation from the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws that the cite in section 105 of the model act was erroneous, and that the correct cite is 45 CFR 160.103. This corrects the error.

Bill section 12. Amends AS 14.43.930(e)(2) to reflect the current name of the Northwest Association of Accredited Schools, which was formerly the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges. The Association changed its name in 2004.

Bill section 13. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 17.37.010(a) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 14. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 18.65.087(e) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 15. Codifies at AS 26.23.240 a short title for AS 26.23.010 - 26.23.240 and 26.23.900 -- the "Alaska Disaster Act." This term has frequently been used by the Attorney General as a shorthand reference to AS 26.23 (see Op. Atty Gen. file nos. 883-03-0070 (June 2, 2003), 663-93-0425 (July 8, 1993), and 663-92-0494 (January 13, 1993) for example). The term was employed by the Alaska Supreme Court in City of Seward v. Afognak Logging, 31 P.3d 780, 785 (Alaska 2001).

The phrase "Alaska Disaster Act" was used as a chapter heading when AS 26.23 was originally enacted, in sec. 3, ch. 104, SLA 1977. In 1990, two sections were added to the chapter: AS 26.23.300, creating a disaster relief fund, and AS 26.23.400, creating a fuel emergency fund. Each of these was created as a new article, and the definitions section, formerly AS 26.23.230, was renumbered as AS 26.23.900. In 2002, the Emergency Management Assistance Compact was enacted (AS 26.23.135 - AS 26.23.136), replacing the former Interstate Civil Defense and Disaster Compact, which was repealed. "Alaska Disaster Act" has been retained as the article title for Article 1 of AS 26.23.

In codifying the short title, the question arises whether it should apply only to the sections enacted in 1977, or to the 1990 additions as well. The drafting manual advises that a short title "should be used only with a bill that contains a cohesive body of proposed law dealing comprehensively with a particular subject." Manual at 23. For the sake of consistency with the existing article heading and usage by the Alaska Supreme Court and the Attorney General, the revisor's bill applies the short title only to Article 1 of AS 26.23 and the definitions section, AS 26.23.900, which was part of the original material designated as the Alaska Disaster Act in the 1977 legislation.

Bill section 16. Amends AS 29.65.050(b) to conform the usage to the term defined in AS 29.65.130(10) -- "vacant, unappropriated, unreserved land." Since the subsection in which the phrase "land that was vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved" was adopted in the same 1985 revision of the municipal code as the definition in AS 29.65.130(10), it is assumed that the inconsistency is a drafting error or oversight.

Bill section 17. Amends AS 29.65.060(a). Currently, the statute reads "vacant, unappropriated, or unreserved land as defined in this chapter" (emphasis added). The "or" is deleted to conform the usage with the phrase that is actually defined in the chapter.

Bill section 18. Amends AS 34.45.320(b) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications.

AS 34.45.280(b) specifies that reports of abandoned personal property are to be made on a form which gives notice that statements on the form are made under penalty of unsworn falsification. Since this section relates to reports of unclaimed property rather than permanent fund dividend applications, unsworn falsification in the second degree under AS 11.56.210 is clearly the applicable statute. This section predates the 2006 changes to the law of unsworn falsification, and it is not clear why the reference was not changed in the 2006 bill. Although the general reference may suffice -- "under penalty of unsworn falsification" is not wrong, it is merely imprecise -- a reference that includes "in the second degree" is more accurate here. For further explanation, see the discussion in bill sec. 3, above.

Bill section 19. Amends AS 34.45.380(a) to specify unsworn falsification in the second degree (under AS 11.56.210), which is generally applicable, as opposed to unsworn falsification in the first degree (under AS 11.56.205), which relates only to permanent fund dividend applications. See bill sec. 18, above; the only difference is that AS 34.45.380(a) relates to abandoned property claim forms (rather than report forms).

Bill section 20. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 40.25.220 to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 21. Amends AS 41.21.506(b)(2) to remove an exception added in sec. 2, ch. 61, SLA 2009 relating to AS 16.40.260 and 16.40.270 on the date that those two sections are repealed. The repeal will take effect January 1, 2011, under sec. 8, ch. 70, SLA 2004 as amended by sec. 3, ch. 61, SLA 2009, unless that section is further amended.

Bill section 22. Corrects a reference to the United States Code in AS 42.40.430. In 2002, 40 U.S.C. 471 was renumbered as 40 U.S.C. 401 in a general revision of federal laws relating to public property. According to the statement of purpose for the revision Act, P.L. 107-217, sec 5(b)(1), "[t]his Act makes no substantive change in existing law and may not be construed as making a substantive change in existing law."

Bill section 23. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.455(d) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 24. Amends the spanned reference to the Alaska Public Records Act in AS 43.05.475(b) to include the new short title section (added in 2008).

Bill section 25. Adds a short title at AS 44.62.319 for AS 44.62.310 - 44.62.312, which is commonly referred to as "the open meetings act." See for example Abood v. League of Women Voters, 743 P.2d 833 (Alaska 1987), Hickel v. Southeast Conference, 846 P.2d 38 (Alaska 1992), Griswold v. City of Homer, 55 P.3d 64 (Alaska 2002), and 1995 Op. (Inf.) Atty Gen. Alas. 317, file no. 663-95-0524 (August 21, 1995).

Bill section 26. In AS 46.14.500(c), changes a parenthetical reference to the Clean Air Act to make the form similar to that used for other United States Code citations cited in the Alaska Statutes.

Bill section 27. Moves the phrase "the facility may" in AS 47.30.695 from the introductory text into the text of paragraph (1). This is necessary because the phrase "the facility may" cannot be applied to paragraph (2), since paragraphs (1) and (2) are disjunctive ("or" is the conjunction), and (2) has a different verb phrase ("the treating physician may").

Bill section 28. Instructs the revisor to conform references to the Open Meetings Act to reflect the short title codified in sec. 25 of the bill.

Bill section 29. Makes the effective date for sec. 21 of the Act conditional; this section should only take effect if the sections referred to are actually repealed.

Bill section 30. Provides an effective date for sec. 21, if sec. 21 takes effect under sec. 29.

Bill section 31. Provides an effective date for the remaining sections of the bill.

CIRI

March 18, 2010

The Honorable Lesil McGuire
Alaska State Senate
Alaska State Capitol, Room 125
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Senator McGuire:

I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the criticisms and concerns raised in its letter dated March 8, 2010, by the Alaska Power Authority (APA) regarding Senate Bill 277, on behalf of Cook Inlet Region, Inc. (CIRI) as a potential independent power producer (IPP). While I will respond in a point-by-point fashion I will start with a higher level response that the APA's criticisms are generally a misunderstanding of the relationship between IPPs and their regulated public utility customers.

The APA fundamentally misunderstands the respective roles of an IPP and its utility customers, and the resulting relationship. Unlike a regulated public utility that has a certificated, monopoly service area granted by the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA), an IPP has only wholesale customers obtained by arms-length commercial negotiations. The resulting differences are profound.

The essence of the issue is that Alaska has very few for-profit entities involved in the development and operation of electric power projects, and even fewer IPPs. The emergence of IPPs developing renewable energy projects has raised the possibility of a different model of developing projects in Alaska. Most of the comments in the APA's letter either result from a misunderstanding of the relationship between IPPs and their public utility customers or reflect an apparent mistrust of anything that is not a cooperative or municipally-owned public utility. We believe that the exemption proposed by SB 277 encourages and supports negotiated and commercially-reasonable relationships between IPPs and public utilities, and, as such, is good public policy.

I will now address the specific, numbered concerns raised in the APA's letter.

General Concerns

1. The exemption proposed by SB 277 is necessary.

   Obtaining a Qualified Facility designation under federal law does not simply provide an exemption from state regulation. A QF designation also provides the IPP with a default option of putting power onto public utilities in a non-consensual manner by selling to the utilities at avoided cost. CIRI does not believe that it would be appropriate or desirable to enter a market as small as Alaska's Railbelt in a non-consensual manner, even if it is possible under federal law. Moreover, the promise of renewable energy is to decouple the cost of power from the cost of fuel over time ultimately making renewable power cheaper than its fuel-fired alternative. Selling renewable power at avoided cost does not pass this promise on to the ultimate ratepayer. Perversely, selling renewable power at avoided cost allows an IPP to keep that benefit as profit, something you would think the APA would not suggest as its preferred public policy.

The option of applying to the RCA for a regulatory exemption is also an undesirable and impractical option for several reasons. The RCA has shown itself to be a slow, expensive and unpredictable regulatory body. Unlike public utilities who can recover the expense of their RCA practice in their respective rate bases and who have a state-sponsored monopoly against which to pursue project development, IPPs often have limited market windows in which to put together all of the necessary pieces to successfully develop private power projects, including successful negotiation of one or more power purchase agreements. The uncertainty, delay and expense of asking for a project exemption from the RCA layers an additional and significant project risk on private project development.

More importantly and fundamentally, however, the RCA has shown itself to be a partial and biased forum in which to seek the exemption from regulation for a project sponsored by a private, for-profit project proponent. A sitting RCA commissioner has privately questioned CIRI's motives in supporting SB 277 and has surmised that CIRI's motivation is trying to obtain out-sized returns—implying that being a for-profit entity makes CIRI an untrustworthy project proponent. Similarly, staff for the RCA has publicly testified in a prior Senate committee hearing on SB 277 that exempting a private, for-profit project from direct regulatory oversight could never be in the public interest, or words to that effect. These recent public and private sentiments demonstrate that the RCA is a potentially biased body from which a fair and impartial hearing cannot be obtained by a private, for-profit project proponent.

For these reasons, neither the federal QF nor the state RCA processes provides a reasonable and acceptable manner in which to exempt a IPP-sponsored renewable energy project from RCA regulation.

2. The fact that the RCA cannot second-guess the results of a commercial, arms-length negotiation between an IPP and a public utility is precisely the reason the exemption proposed by SB 277 is necessary. It is the public utility's job to ensure that the contract's rates, terms and conditions of service are fair and commercially reasonable. And it is a role that the public utilities are capable of fulfilling. It is unnecessary and unfair for an IPP, who bears all of the project development risk, to have to negotiate a commercial PPA with one or more utilities and then start over with a regulatory process in the RCA that can take up to 18 months to complete.

It is also inappropriate to suggest that the RCA, and thereby any other interested party because of the public nature of RCA proceedings, must have access to all documents and costs of a project in order to satisfy the public interest. Again, the role of validating costs and justifying returns is best handled in a commercial negotiation. The second guessing and potential gaming of comments and motives in the RCA process only serves to drive up delay, expense and risk after the conclusion of negotiations between the IPP and the public utilities.

3. The RCA is not a necessary forum in which to adjudicate disputes between an IPP and public utility. There are numerous alternative dispute resolution methods, such as mediation and arbitration, that can provide for timely and expert adjudication of disputes short of filing lawsuits in court.

4. The "obligation to serve" is inappropriate to apply to a IPP-sponsored project because it is a concept that derives from the monopoly service territory granted to public utilities. Suggesting that a private project should have an "obligation to serve" shows that the APA fundamentally does not understand the relationship between an IPP and its public utility customers.

   Taking the APA's suggestion that IPP-sponsored projects should have an obligation to serve at its literal face-value would mean that the project could not refuse to provide service to any inter-connected public utility. How would this work? Does this mean that the IPP would have an obligation to serve any interested public utility but would not have any contract negotiation mechanism to arrive at a workable relationship? Obviously, this would not work.

5. The financial fitness of an IPP is a matter that should be addressed by the purchasing public utility. If that utility does not believe that the IPP is sufficiently capable of developing and operating the project for any reason—financial, technical or operational—then that utility can refuse to purchase the project's power. Layering the RCA over the top of this process implies that the public utilities are incapable of protecting themselves through due diligence and contract negotiations. Moreover, the APA's reference to the "fit, willing and able" standard again misapplies the public utility, monopoly standard of operation to the IPP concept. The "fit, willing and able" standard applies to public utilities because of their state-granted monopoly service territories. Implicit under that standard is a public utility's capacity and competence to determine the fitness of and negotiate the commercial purchase of power generated by others, including IPPs. It is surprising that the APA would suggest that its own membership (comprised of public utilities) is incapable of performing one of the core competencies within their own respective certifications as public utilities.

The suggestion that the RCA provides additional comfort in a bankruptcy situation is a red herring. The bankruptcy statutes provide for the bankruptcy court and bankruptcy trustee to protect the public interest. To suggest otherwise is simply a scare tactic intended to illicit the fear of the lights going dark because of the financial insolvency of an IPP. This is not a realistic scenario. The APA's motives are further illustrated by the suggestion that developing a project in a subsidiary entity is inappropriate—"owner" is not a dirty word when it describes a subsidiary entity used to develop and own a project and to suggest otherwise is simply an indirect way to slander private, for-profit entities.

6. The APA's suggestion that the affected utilities must be able to comment on a PPA post-negotiation is precisely why the exemption proposed by SB 277 is necessary and appropriate. Allowing a utility that has negotiated a PPA to later come back through the regulatory process to renegotiate the contract suggests that bad-faith negotiations and gaming are an appropriate business practice. We do not agree. To suggest that other non-contracting utilities have some basis for reviewing and commenting on PPAs to which they are not a party is to invite the sort of regulatory busy-body filings that drive up the cost, delay and uncertainty of the RCA process.

Specific Concerns

1. The 65 megawatt size limit is not too large. The APA suggests that a 500 kilowatt limit is appropriate. While we agree that a .5 megawatt facility should be exempted, we believe that larger facilities should be exempted as well. IPPs need a predictable and fair process to negotiate for the commercial sales of their project power. Without predictability and fairness, the status quo—no IPPs on the Railbelt and no large commercial-scale renewable projects will likely persist.

2. The APA's suggestion that an IPP could cherry pick other non-electric utilities as customers is unrealistic. How would an IPP deliver the power to its non-electric utility customer without negotiating a transmission agreement with the existing electric utility? And how would the IPP deliver firm power (as opposed to the intermittent power produced by renewable power sources) without negotiating a firming agreement with the electric utility? These points illustrate the APA's principal concern: competition. CIRI believes that the discipline, efficiency and market competition demanded of IPPs, as for-profit enterprises, bring benefits to the cost of power and ultimately to the ratepayer. The APA obviously disagrees and prefers non-competitive, government-sponsored monopolies.

3. The APA again raises the "obligation to serve" notion addressed above. I will not address it again.

4. This point is a permutation of the "obligation to serve" point again. But it also raises for the first time the possibility of an IPP owning a regulated entity. The RCA already possesses the ability to look through ownership structures to sister and parent companies of regulated utilities. Thus, the RCA already possesses the authority and tools to address this potential issue.

5. This point highlights an APA inconsistency. In the General Concerns point number one, the APA suggests that an IPP can get certified as a Qualified Facility under federal law in arguing that SB 277 is unnecessary. In this point, it decries the "contentious experiences" of utilities who had to deal with developers who were attempting to force them to purchase power in a non-consensual manner—a veiled reference to the very QF program it suggests above as an available alternative. As stated above, we agree that non-consensual power sales are not in the ultimate interest of Alaska's public utilities. The exemption proposed by SB 277 fosters negotiated and consensual power sales between IPPs and incumbent utilities. This is exactly the point.

Re:: Senate Bill 277

Dear Senator McGuire:

The Alaska Power Association (APA) and its members have not yet had the opportunity to fully explore all of the potential impacts of the March 2, 2010, committee substitute for Senate Bill 277. However, based on its preliminary review, APA is concerned about the potential ramifications of this bill. At this point, APA cannot support SB 277 because of those concerns, but welcomes any opportunity to discuss those concerns with you or your staff. APA's concerns are summarized below:

General Concerns Regarding Statutory Exemption:

1. The exemption from RCA certification and regulation provided for in the bill may be unnecessary for the following reasons: First, under federal law, most renewable energy resource electric generation facilities that propose to sell power only to another electric utility can already become exempt from state regulation by becoming a "qualifying facility" ("QF"). See 18 C.F.R. § 292.602(c); 18 C.F.R. § 292.601(a), (b). Such facilities include all QFs that are a cogeneration facility, a geothermal or biomass small power production facility, or any other small power production facility (including hydroelectric, solar, and wind-power facilities) having a capacity of 30 megawatts (MW) or less. In general, all of the types of renewable energy resources facilities referenced in the bill would be eligible to become a QF. Such a facility can become a QF through a simple self-certification with FERC.

Second, regardless of whether a renewable energy resource facility is exempt as a QF, the facility can also become exempt from RCA certification and regulation through a petition to the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA) that demonstrates that the exemption is "in the public interest." See AS 42.05.711(d). In 2009, two small hydroelectric facilities obtained public interest exemptions from the RCA based on the facility's generation source and small size, the fact that the facility would sell power only to an electric utility, and the cost and burden of certification and regulation. See RCA Order Nos. U-08-102(2) and U-08-132(2) (attached).

2. The proposed statutory exemption would impair the RCA's ability to ensure that the facility's rates, terms, and conditions of service are just, reasonable, and non-discriminatory, particularly when the facility sells power to multiple electric utilities. Although the RCA would have to approve the purchasing utility's entering into a power purchase agreement with the facility, that so-called "indirect regulation" of the exempt facility would not give the RCA full access to the facility's cost and financial information.

3. The proposed statutory exemption would divest the RCA of jurisdiction to adjudicate complaints by the purchasing electric utility against the facility for failing to provide adequate, non-discriminatory service. In addition, if the facility were regulated and a dispute arose regarding a rate issue or service issue that the facility and the purchasing electric utility did not clearly contemplate in their long-term power purchase agreement, the RCA would have jurisdiction to resolve that dispute. Without RCA jurisdiction, the purchasing electric utility would be limited to filing a lawsuit in court to address those types of issues, which involves significantly more cost and delay (and less adjudicator expertise over the subject matter) than a complaint filed with the RCA.

4. RCA certification of a renewable resources facility imposes an "obligation to serve," which ensures that the facility cannot unreasonably refuse to provide service to a particular customer. The broad exemption proposed under the bill would preclude the RCA from enforcing such an obligation, thus allowing the facility to discriminate among potential power purchasers.

5. If a renewable resources facility is certificated and regulated by the RCA and the facility seeks bankruptcy protection, the RCA generally would have standing in the bankruptcy proceeding to help ensure that the public interest is protected. That measure of protection would not exist if the facility is categorically exempt from RCA jurisdiction by statute. That issue can be significant because a renewable energy resources facility may be (and likely will be) owned by a subsidiary corporation or subsidiary limited liability company in such a way that the effective, ultimate "owner" of the facility is shielded from all liability for the debts and obligations of the facility. That is one of the reasons that the RCA carefully considers whether the legal owner of a proposed public utility is, in fact, "fit, willing, and able" to provide public utility service when the RCA decides whether to certificate the utility, or when the RCA decides whether to grant a public interest exemption from regulation. Under the broad exemption provided for in the bill, the RCA would lack jurisdiction to review such matters, particularly after the purchasing electric utility obtains RCA approval of the power purchase agreement.

6. The proposed statutory exemption would preclude affected electric utilities from having input regarding whether the exemption of a particular facility is justified. The existing RCA public interest exemption process allows utility input and public input and allows the RCA to determine on a case-by-case basis whether the facts and circumstances justify exemption for a particular facility. Related to that, until a power purchase agreement and the associated rates, terms, and conditions of service are negotiated regarding a particular facility, the utilities that are intended to purchase power from the facility may not have enough information to know whether an exemption from RCA certification and regulation is justified. The broad statutory exemption provided for in the bill would preclude affected electric utilities from making that determination when the facts and circumstances associated with a particular facility are known.

7. There has not been adequate time for APA and its members to fully explore all of the unintended consequences of the type of broad, absolute exemption provided for in the bill.

More Specific Concerns Regarding SB 277:

1. The bill's 65 MW size restriction appears to be too high. The potential justification for exemption from RCA certification and regulation is very different if the exemption applies to a small 500 kilowatt (kW) renewable resources facility as opposed to a large 65 MW facility.

2. The bill would exempt a facility that sells its output to any type of regulated public utility, not just to a regulated electric public utility. That would allow the exempt facility to compete against the local electric utility for firm electric sales to non-electric utilities that are within the local electric utility's certificated service area.

3. The bill would exempt a facility that sells its output to multiple regulated electric utilities. Sales to multiple electric utilities raise concerns about preventing the facility from discriminating among customers with respect to rates, terms, or conditions of service.

4. The bill would exempt a facility even if it is closely affiliated with a regulated electric utility to which it sells power. That raises additional concerns about the potential for discriminatory preferences among the electric utilities that purchase power from the facility.

5. The bill would exempt cogeneration facilities because "renewable energy resources" under AS 42.45.045(l) include "wasteheat recovery." Electric utilities have had contentious experiences with developers attempting to force the utility into uneconomic power purchases from proposed cogeneration plants.

Again, APA and its members have had only a limited amount of time to attempt to review the potential ramifications and unintended consequences of SB 277. APA and its members will continue their review of the bill and may have other concerns as they review it in greater detail. In the meantime, APA stands ready to discuss its concerns with you or your staff whenever is convenient for you. We suggest you initiate a meeting with all interested parties as soon as possible so that we can have a discussion of all the issues.

Marilyn Leland

Sponsor Statement for Senate Bill 277

"An Act exempting from regulation by the Regulatory Commission of Alaska and by municipalities generators of electricity from renewable energy resources that sell electricity to regulated utilities."

The electric demand of the relatively small and dispersed population in Alaska has traditionally been served by regulated utilities. The Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA) is charged with certifying utilities, regulating their rates, resolving disputes and protecting consumers. Throughout most of the State, electric utilities are not-for-profit and/or member owned cooperatives that serve a defined geographic area and customer base. Regulation of these utilities, given their monopoly status may certainly be appropriate.

However, regulation can pose obstacles to investment. In many states, the generation of electricity has been deregulated in order to provide an avenue for private sector investment in the sector. In a traditionally regulated model, the investment risk is born by ratepayers where in a deregulated environment the risk is born by investors. In markets that have been deregulated, investment in renewable energy is significantly higher than in strictly regulated markets. A study by the U.S. Energy Information Administration shows that the annual growth of renewable penetration in restructured electricity markets is 11.3% while it is a mere .6% in highly regulated markets. Recognizing the regulatory impediment to the development of renewables, the Federal government has provided avenues for renewable generators to escape state regulation through an application to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Senate Bill 277 attempts to find a middle ground between a thoroughly deregulated market and the highly regulated environment in Alaska. SB 277 exempts renewable generation from RCA regulation only if the power is sold to a regulated utility. This compromise maintains RCA oversight over the power sales agreements and thereby provides a layer of protection to ratepayers. SB 277 opens Alaska's electricity market to private sector investment in renewables and will encourage investment in a cleaner energy future for Alaska.

Changes to SB 277 in CS SB 277: 26-LS1353\P

The changes to SB 277 in CSSB 277 are found in section 3 of the bill. The following changes were made to limit the exemption from RCA regulation provided by section 3. More broadly the exemption has been limited to the plant rather than the person. Specifically, the following limits apply in the P version:

1. The plant must be placed in service before January 1, 2016.
2. The plant may not generate more than 65 megawatts of electricity.
3. The person that owns the plant does not receive tax credits related to electricity generation or grants for the generation from the state.

MEMORANDUM February 12, 2010

SUBJECT: Definition of "public" in AS 42.05
(Work Order No. 26-LS1353\E)

TO: Senator Lesil McGuire
Attn: Mike Pawlowski

FROM: Brian J. Kane BJK
Legislative Counsel

You have asked the following: For the definition of "public" or "general public"[1] found at AS 42.05.990(3), does that definition include all three subparagraphs, (A), (B), and (C), so that all three must be satisfied to mean "public"? Or, are (A), (B), and (C) three different options for the meaning of "public," as in (A) or (B) or (C)?

Generally speaking, "and" should be used as a conjunctive and "or" as a disjunctive. Under ordinary circumstances, the literal meaning of the words "and" and "or" should be applied unless the literal meaning makes the statute inoperable or it becomes questionable. Sutherland Statutory Construction, sec. 21:14 (7th ed.). In the case at hand, though, it seems that using the word "and" as a conjunctive brings the subparagraphs in the definition into conflict. Assuming that all three things are required for the definition of "public," then you have a scenario where there is (1) a group of 10 or more customers, (2) one or more customers, and (3) a utility purchasing the product. If all three of these are a part of "public," then it is quite difficult to think of a situation where this definition would actually apply. On the one hand you are dealing with customers purchasing from a utility, and on the other hand you have a utility purchasing

[1] In full, AS 42.05.990(3) reads: (3) "public" or "general public" means

> (A) a group of 10 or more customers that purchase the service or commodity furnished by a public utility;
> (B) one or more customers that purchase electrical service for use within an area that is certificated to and presently or formerly served by an electric utility if the total annual compensation that the electrical utility receives for sales of electricity exceeds $50,000; and
> (C) a utility purchasing the product or service or paying for the transmission of electric energy, natural or manufactured gas, or petroleum products that are re-sold to a person or group included in (A) or (B) of this paragraph or that are used to produce the service or commodity sold to the public by the utility.

electricity to sell to a customer. These cannot both occur at once in order to fulfill the definition. Using the term "and" as a conjunctive appears to make this definition inoperable, as best I can surmise. Therefore, it appears that the second option for the definition that is offered is the correct interpretation for the definition of "public."Hence, the term "public" means (A), or it means (B), or it means (C).

In relation to the definition for "public utility" -- which has the line "furnishing, by generation, transmission, or distribution, electrical service to the public for compensation" -- you can, assuming that "and" is disjunctive, read "public" to mean any one of the three options available in (A), (B), or (C), which offers a more expansive inclusion into this section than a reading requiring all three paragraphs to be met.

The definition in question was amended in 1990.[2] Prior to 1990, the definition read as follows

> (3) "public" or "general public" means
> (A) any group of 10 or more customers that purchase the service or commodity furnished by a public utility as defined in (4) of this section; and
> (B) any utility purchasing the product or service or paying for the transmission of electric energy, natural or manufactured gas, or petroleum products which are re-sold to a group included in (A) of this paragraph or which are used to produce the service or commodity sold to the public by the utility.

With only two parts to the definition, it seems clearer that "public" either means what is described in (A) or it means what is described in (B). To fall under the definition of public, there does not have to be a scenario where there is a group of 10 or more customers and any utility purchasing the product. If that was the proper reading, then finding an entity that met that criteria would be very difficult. The change in the definition that occurred in 1990 added one more subparagraph to the definition (now (B)). Adding this third subparagraph did not change the definition to mean that the term "public" had to include all three paragraphs to be considered "public."

In conclusion, it appears that the term "public" can have the meaning listed in AS 42.05.990(3)(A) or (3)(B) or (3)(C) -- it does not have to meet all three at once. However, amending the definition to change the "and" to an "or" would relieve the definition of controversy.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

MEMORANDUM February 16, 2010

SUBJECT: Independent power producer (Work Order No. 26-LS1353\E)

TO: Senator Lesil McGuire
Attn: Mike Pawlowski

FROM: Brian J. Kane BJK
Legislative Counsel

As a follow-up to the memorandum I sent to your office on February 12, 2010, you have asked: If an independent power producer sells to less than 10 customers, would it be a utility and therefore subject to regulation under AS 42.05?

Assuming that the definition of "public" or "general public" in AS 42.05.990(3) is being read as (A) or (B) or (C), then the answer to your question is that it is possible the independent power producer described could be subject to regulation. AS 42.05.990(3) has an option for the definition of "public" that reads:

> (B) one or more customers that purchase electrical service for use within an area that is certificated to and presently or formerly served by an electric utility if the total annual compensation that the electrical utility receives for sales of electricity exceeds $50,000;

If an independent power producer has one or more customers but fewer than 10 and meets the other requirements of the definition in (B) -- namely receiving sales of electricity that exceed $50,000 -- then the independent power producer would be regulated under AS 42.05 since it sells to the "public." However, if the producer sells to fewer than 10 customers and does not exceed the $50,000 sales mark, then that producer is not subject to regulation under AS 42.05, as the producer would not be selling to the public, which is a requirement of AS 42.05.990(4)(A) to be a public utility.

(l) The commission may not evade the requirement of this section by terminating a proceeding in a docket and opening a proceeding in another docket on substantially the same matter.

(m) For purposes of this section, "final order" means a dispositive administrative order that resolves all matters at issue and that may be the basis for a petition for reconsideration or request for judicial review.

(n) For purposes of this section, an application, tariff filing, formal complaint, or petition is complete if it complies with the filing, format, and content requirements established by statute, regulation, and forms adopted by the commission under regulation.

Article 02. CERTIFICATE OF PUBLIC CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY

Sec. 42.05.221. Certificates required.

(a) A public utility may not operate and receive compensation for providing a commodity or service without first having obtained from the commission under this chapter a certificate declaring that public convenience and necessity require or will require the service. Where a public utility provides more than one type of utility service, a separate certificate of convenience and necessity is required for each type. A certificate must describe the nature and extent of the authority granted in it, including, as appropriate for the services involved, a description of the authorized area and scope of operations of the public utility.

(b) All certificates of convenience and necessity issued to a public utility before July 1, 1970, remain in effect but they are subject to modification where there are areas of conflict with public utilities that have not previously been required to have a certificate or where there is a substantial change in circumstances.

(c) A certificate shall be issued to a public utility that was not required to have one before July 1, 1970, and that is required to have one after that date, if it appears to the commission that the utility was actually operating in good faith on that date. Such a certificate is subject to modification where there are areas of conflict with other public utilities or where there has been a substantial change in circumstances.

(d) In an area where the commission determines that two or more public utilities are competing to furnish identical utility service and that this competition is not in the public interest, the commission shall take appropriate action to eliminate the competition and any undesirable duplication of facilities. This appropriate action may include, but is not limited to, ordering the competing utilities to enter into a contract that, among other things, would:

(1) delineate the service area boundaries of each in those areas of competition;

(2) eliminate existing duplication and paralleling to the fullest reasonable extent;

(3) preclude future duplication and paralleling;

(4) provide for the exchange of customers and facilities for the purposes of providing better public service and of eliminating duplication and paralleling; and

(5) provide such other mutually equitable arrangements as would be in the public interest.

(e) If the commission employs professional consultants to assist it in administering this section, it may apportion the expenses relating to their employment among the competing utilities.

Sec. 42.05.231. Application.

Application for a certificate shall be in writing and shall be in the form and contain the information required by the commission by regulation.

Sec. 42.05.241. Conditions of issuance.

A certificate may not be issued unless the commission finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able to provide the utility services applied for and that the services are required for the convenience and necessity of the public. The commission may issue a certificate granting an application in whole or in part and attach to the grant of it the terms and conditions it considers necessary to protect and promote the public interest including the condition that the applicant may or shall serve an area or provide a necessary service not contemplated by the applicant. The commission may, for good cause, deny an application with or without prejudice.

Sec. 42.05.250. [Repealed, Sec. 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Repealed or Renumbered

Sec. 42.05.251. Use of streets in municipalities.

Public utilities have the right to a permit to use public streets, alleys, and other public ways of a municipality upon payment of a reasonable permit fee and on reasonable terms and conditions and with reasonable exceptions the municipality requires. The fee may not exceed the actual cost to the municipality of the utility's use of the public way and of administering the permit program. A dispute as to whether fees, terms, conditions, or exceptions are reasonable shall be decided by the commission. The commission may require a utility to add the amount of any permit fee paid as a pro rata surcharge to its bills for service rendered at locations within the boundaries of any municipality that requires payment of a permit fee.

Sec. 42.05.253. Public utility regulatory cost charge. [Repealed, Sec. 36 ch 2 FSSLA 1992].

Repealed or Renumbered

Sec. 42.05.254. Public utility regulatory cost charge.

(a) A regulated public utility operating in the state shall pay to the commission an annual regulatory cost charge in an amount not to exceed the maximum percentage of adjusted gross revenue that applies to the utility sector of which the utility is a part. The regulatory cost charges that the commission expects to collect from all regulated utilities may not exceed the sum of the following percentages of the total adjusted gross revenue of all regulated public utilities derived from operations in the state: (1) not more than .7 percent to fund the operations of the commission, and (2) not more than .17 percent to fund operations of the public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020(e) within the Department of Law. An exempt utility shall pay the actual cost of services provided to it by the commission.

(b) The commission shall by regulation establish a method to determine annually the amount of the regulatory cost charge for a public utility. If the amount the commission expects to collect under (a) of this section and under AS 42.06.286 (a) exceeds the authorized budgets of the commission and the Department of Law public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020 (e), the commission shall, by order, reduce the percentages determined under (h) of this section so that the total amount of the fees collected approximately equals the authorized budgets of the commission and the Department of Law public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020 (e) for the fiscal year.

(c) In determining the amount of the regulatory cost charge imposed under (a) of this section,

(1) a utility selling utility services at wholesale shall modify its gross revenue by deducting payments it receives for wholesale sales;

(2) a local exchange telephone utility shall modify its gross revenue by deducting payments received from other carriers for settlements or access charges;

(3) an electric utility shall reduce its gross revenue by subtracting the cost of power; in this paragraph, "cost of power" means the costs of generation and purchased power reported to the commission.

(d) The commission shall calculate the total regulatory cost charges to be levied against all regulated electric utilities under this section. The commission shall allocate the total amount among the regulated electric utilities by using an equal charge per kilowatt hour sold at retail.

(e) The commission shall administer the charge imposed under this section. The Department of Revenue shall collect and enforce the charge imposed under this section. The Department of Administration shall identify the amount of the operating budgets of the commission and the Department of Law public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070(c) and AS 44.23.020 (e) that lapse into the general fund each year. The legislature may appropriate an amount equal to the lapsed amount to the commission and to the Department of Law public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020 (e) for operating costs for the next fiscal year. If the legislature does so, the commission shall reduce the total regulatory cost charge collected for that fiscal year by a comparable amount.

(f) The commission shall allow a public utility to recover all payments made to the commission under this section. The commission may not require a public utility to file a rate case in order to be eligible to recover the regulatory cost charge.

(g) The commission may adopt regulations under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act) necessary to administer this section, including requirements and procedures for reporting information and making quarterly payments. The Department of Revenue may adopt regulations under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act) for investigating the accuracy of filed information, and for collecting required payments.

(h) The commission shall by regulation establish a method to determine annually the maximum percentage of adjusted gross revenue that will apply to each regulated public utility sector and the maximum percentage of gross revenue that will apply to the regulated pipeline carrier sector. Other than the cost of services provided to exempt utilities, the method established shall allocate the commission's costs, and the Department of Law's certified costs of its public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020 (e), among the regulated public utility sectors and the regulated pipeline carrier sector based on the relative amount of the commission's annual costs and the Department of Law's certified costs that is attributable to regulating each sector. For purposes of this subsection, the Department of Law shall annually certify to the commission the costs of its public advocacy function under AS 42.04.070 (c) and AS 44.23.020 (e).

(i) In this section,

(1) "adjusted gross revenue" means the gross revenue of a utility as modified under (c) of this section, if appropriate.

(2) "exempt utility" means a public utility that is certificated by the commission under AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 but, in accordance with AS 42.05.711 , is exempt from other regulatory requirements of this chapter;

(3) "gross revenue" means the total operating revenue from intrastate services, as shown in a utility's annual report required by the commission by regulation;

(4) "regulated utility" means a public utility that is certificated by the commission under AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 and that is subject to the other regulatory requirements of this chapter;

(5) "wholesale sales" means sales to another utility for resale under circumstances that make revenue from the resale subject to the regulatory cost charge imposed under this section.

Sec. 42.05.260. [Repealed, Sec. 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Sec. 42.05.261. Discontinuance, suspension, or abandonment of certificated service.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a public utility may not discontinue or abandon a service for which a certificate has been issued by the commission unless upon the application of the public utility and if, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the commission finds that the continued service is not required by public convenience and necessity. Any interested person may file with the commission a protest or memorandum of opposition to or in support of discontinuance or abandonment. The commission may authorize temporary suspension of a service or of part of a service.

(b) Upon complaint or upon its own motion, the commission may reinvestigate a previously authorized discontinuance, abandonment, or suspension of a service of an operating public utility. If, after providing notice and an opportunity for a hearing, the commission finds that the public convenience and necessity require the service to be resumed, it may order the public utility to again provide the service.

Sec. 42.05.270. [Repealed, Sec. 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Sec. 42.05.271. Modification, suspension, or revocation of certificates.

Upon complaint or upon its own motion the commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, may amend, modify, suspend, or revoke a certificate, in whole or in part. Good cause for amendment, modification, suspension, or revocation of a certificate includes

(1) the requirements of public convenience and necessity;

(2) misrepresentation of a material fact in obtaining the certificate;

(3) unauthorized discontinuance or abandonment of all or part of a public utility's service;

(4) wilful failure to comply with the provisions of this chapter or the regulations or orders of the commission; or

(5) wilful failure to comply with a term, condition, or limitation of the certificate.

Sec. 42.05.280. [Repealed, Sec. 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Repealed or Renumbered

Sec. 42.05.281. Transfer of certificate.

A certificate may not be sold or leased, rented, transferred or inherited without the prior approval of the commission.

Sec. 42.05.290. [Repealed, 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Sec. 42.05.421. Suspension of tariff filing.

(a) When a tariff filing is made containing a new or revised rate, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or condition of service the commission may, either upon written complaint or upon its own motion, after reasonable notice, conduct a hearing to determine the reasonableness and propriety of the filing. Pending the hearing the commission may, by order stating the reasons for its action, suspend the operation of the tariff filing. For a tariff filing that does not change the utility's revenue requirement or rate design, the suspension may last for a period not longer than six months beyond the effective date established in the tariff filing unless the commission extends the period for good cause. For a tariff filing that changes the utility's revenue requirement or rate design, the suspension may last, unless the commission extends the period for good cause, for a period not longer than

(1) six months before an interim rate equal to the requested rate goes into effect and not longer than 12 months before a permanent rate goes into effect if the annual gross revenues of the utility making the filing are more than $3,000,000; and

(2) 150 days before an interim rate equal to the requested new rate goes into effect and not longer than one year before a permanent rate goes into effect if the annual gross revenues of the utility making the filing are $3,000,000 or less.

(b) An order suspending a tariff filing may be vacated if, after investigation, the commission finds that it is in all respects proper. Otherwise the commission shall hold a hearing on the suspended filing and issue its order, before the end of the suspension period, granting, denying or modifying the suspended tariff in whole or in part.

(c) In the case of a proposed increased rate, the commission may by order require the interested public utility or utilities to place in escrow in a financial institution approved by the commission and keep accurate account of all amounts received by reason of the increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf the amounts are paid. Upon completion of the hearing and decision the commission may by order require the public utility to refund to the persons in whose behalf the amounts were paid, that portion of the increased rates which was found to be unreasonable or unlawful. Funds may not be released from escrow without the commission's prior written consent and the escrow agent shall be so instructed by the utility, in writing, with a copy to the commission. The utility may, at its expense, substitute a bond in lieu of the escrow requirement.

(d) One who initiates a change in existing tariffs shall bear the burden to prove the reasonableness of the change.

Sec. 42.05.430. [Repealed, Sec. 5 ch 113 SLA 1970].

Sec. 42.05.431. Power of commission to fix rates.

(a) When the commission, after an investigation and hearing, finds that a rate demanded, observed, charged, or collected by a public utility for a service subject to the jurisdiction of the commission, or that a classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting the rate, is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the commission shall determine a just and reasonable rate, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be observed or allowed and shall establish it by order. A municipality may covenant with bond purchasers regarding rates of a municipally owned utility, and the covenant is valid and enforceable and is considered to be a contract with the holders from time to time of the bonds. The financial covenants contained in mortgages and other debt instruments of cooperative utilities organized under AS 10.25 are also valid and enforceable, and rates set by the commission must be adequate to meet those covenants. However, a cooperative utility that is negotiating to enter a mortgage or other debt instrument that provides for a times-interest-earned ratio (TIER) greater than the ratio the commission most recently approved for that cooperative shall submit the mortgage or debt instrument to the commission before the instrument takes effect. The commission may disapprove the instrument within 60 days after its submission. If the commission has not acted within 60 days, the instrument is considered to be approved.

(b) A wholesale power agreement between public utilities is subject to advance approval of the commission. After a wholesale power agreement is in effect, the commission may not invalidate any purchase or sale obligation under the agreement. However, if the commission finds that rates set in accordance with the agreement are not just and reasonable, the commission may order the parties to negotiate an amendment to the agreement and if the parties fail to agree, to use the dispute resolution procedures contained in the contract.

(c) Notwithstanding (b) of this section,

(1) a wholesale agreement for the sale of power from a project licensed by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on or before January 1, 1987, and related contracts for the wheeling, storage, regeneration, or wholesale repurchase of power purchased under the agreement, entered into between the Alaska Energy Authority and one or more other public utilities or among the utilities after October 31, 1987, and before January 1, 1988, and amendments to the wholesale agreement or related contract, and the wholesale agreement or related contract assigned by the Alaska Energy Authority to a joint action agency formed under AS 42.45.310 that purchases the project from the Alaska Energy Authority, are not subject to review or approval by the commission until all long-term debt incurred for the project is retired, or, for a wholesale agreement or related contract assigned to a joint action agency formed under AS 42.45.310 , until all long-term debt incurred to pay the purchase price to the Alaska Energy Authority is retired; and

(2) a wholesale agreement or related contract described in (1) of this subsection may contain a covenant for the public utility to establish, charge, and collect rates sufficient to meet its obligations under the contract; the rate covenant is valid and enforceable.

(d) Meetings between the Alaska Energy Authority and public utilities concerning a wholesale agreement for the sale of power or other matter exempted from review of the commission under (c) of this section must comply with AS 44.62.310 .

(e) Validated costs incurred by a utility in connection with the related contracts described in (c)(1) of this section must be allowed in the rates charged by the utility. In this subsection, "validated costs" are the actual costs that a utility uses, under the formula set out in related contracts described in (c) of this section, to establish rates, charges for services and rights, and the payment of charges for services and rights. This subsection does not grant the commission jurisdiction to alter or amend the formula set out in those related contracts.

(f) In the establishment of rates of a utility furnishing solid waste material collection and disposal service, the commission shall permit recovery of reasonable, net capital and operating costs relating to solid waste recovery and recycling services after considering the utility's recovery of revenue associated with the service.

(g) In the establishment of rates under this chapter, the commission shall promote cost-effective solid waste recovery and recycling services.

(h) When setting or reviewing rates for a public utility that sends or receives power over the power transmission interties between Fairbanks and Healy or between Anchorage and the Kenai Peninsula, the commission shall consider those costs that have not been directly assigned to other individual generating utilities by the utility responsible for the construction of the intertie to have been incurred for the system existing on August 11, 1993.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Sec. 42.05.691. Utility classes.

The commission may by regulation provide for the classification of public utilities based upon differences in annual revenue, assets, nature of ownership, and other appropriate distinctions and as between these classifications, by regulation, provide for different reporting, accounting, and other regulatory requirements.

Sec. 42.05.711. Exemptions.

(a) The provisions of this chapter do not apply to a person who furnishes water, gas or petroleum or petroleum products by tank, wagon, or similar conveyance, unless the person is thereby supplying water, gas, petroleum or petroleum products to a public utility in which the person has an "affiliated interest".

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection and in (o) of this section, public utilities owned and operated by a political subdivision of the state, or electric operating entities established as the instrumentality of two or more public utilities owned and operated by political subdivisions of the state, are exempt from this chapter, other than AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 and 42.05.385. However,

(1) the governing body of a political subdivision may elect to be subject to this chapter; and

(2) a utility or electric operating entity that is owned and operated by a political subdivision and that directly competes with another utility or electric operating entity is subject to this chapter and any other utility or electric operating entity owned and operated by the political subdivision is also subject to this chapter; this paragraph does not apply to a utility or electric operating entity owned and operated by a political subdivision that competes with a telecommunications utility.

(c) The ownership in whole or part, of the corporate stock of a public utility does not make the owner a public utility.

(d) The commission may exempt a utility, a class of utilities, or a utility service from all or a portion of this chapter if the commission finds that the exemption is in the public interest.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this chapter, any electric or telephone utility that does not gross $50,000 annually is exempt from regulation under this chapter unless the subscribers petition the commission for regulation under AS 42.05.712 (h).

(f) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this chapter, an electric or telephone utility that does not gross $500,000 annually may elect to be exempt from the provisions of this chapter other than AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 under the procedure described in AS 42.05.712 .

(g) A utility, other than a telephone or electric utility, that does not gross $150,000 annually may elect to be exempt from the provisions of this chapter other than AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 under the procedure described in AS 42.05.712 .

(h) A cooperative organized under AS 10.25 may elect to be exempt from the provisions of this chapter, other than AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281, under the procedure described in AS 42.05.712 .

(i) A utility that furnishes collection and disposal service of garbage, refuse, trash, or other waste material and has annual gross revenues of $300,000 or less is exempt from the provisions of this chapter, other than the certification provisions of AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281, unless the subscribers petition the commission for regulation under AS 42.05.712 (h). Notwithstanding AS 42.05.712 (b) and (g), if subscribers representing 25 percent of the gross revenue of the utility petition the commission for regulation, the utility is subject to the provisions of this chapter.

(j) The provisions of this chapter do not apply to sales, exchanges, or gifts of energy to an electric utility certificated under this chapter when the energy which is the subject of the sale, exchange, or gift is waste heat, electricity, or other energy which is surplus or the by-product of an industrial process. In an area in which no electric utility is certificated for service, energy provided by sale, exchange, or gift may be provided to any utility which is certificated for service to that area. A contract for the sale, exchange, or gift of energy exempt under this subsection does not make the supplier a public utility and does not transfer the responsibility to provide utility services from a certificated utility to any other person.

(k) A utility that furnishes cable television service is exempt from the provisions of this chapter other than AS 42.05.221 - 42.05.281 unless the subscribers petition the commission for regulation under the procedure described in AS 42.05.712 .

(l) A person, utility, joint action agency established under AS 42.45.310, or cooperative that is exempt from regulation under (a), (d) - (k), or (o) of this section is not subject to regulation by a municipality under AS 29.35.060 and 29.35.070.

(m) The collection and disposal, under AS 29.35.050 (c), by a municipality of waste material deposited at an intermediate transfer site is exempt from this chapter.

(n) Except as provided by AS 42.06.370 (c), the provisions of this chapter do not apply to a person who owns or operates a natural gas pipeline as a North Slope natural gas pipeline carrier, as that term is defined in AS 42.06.630 .

(o) A joint action agency established under AS 42.45.310 is exempt from regulation under this chapter, including the requirement to obtain a certificate of public convenience and necessity under AS 42.05.221, for the operation of, sale of power from, and other activities related to the power project the joint action agency purchases from the Alaska Energy Authority until the wholesale agreement and any related contract assigned by the authority becomes subject to review or approval by the commission under AS 42.05.431 . The exemption provided by this subsection extends to repairs and improvements to the power project the joint action agency purchases from the authority but does not extend to any other power project or other activity of the joint action agency.

(p) A regional solid waste management authority established under AS 29.35.800 - 29.35.925 is exempt from regulation under this chapter, except that a solid waste management authority is subject to this chapter if it directly competes with a utility subject to this chapter.

What is a Qualifying Facility?

(Note: Some of the links on this page are to external sites and you will be leaving FERC's website)

The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (PURPA) was implemented to encourage, among other things,

1. the conservation of electric energy,
2. increased efficiency in the use of facilities and resources by electric utilities,
3. equitable retail rates for electric consumers,
4. expeditious development of hydroelectric potential at existing small dams, and
5. conservation of natural gas while ensuring that rates to natural gas consumers are equitable.

One of the ways PURPA set out to accomplish its goals was through the establishment of a new class of generating facilities which would receive special rate and regulatory treatment. Generating facilities in this group are known as qualifying facilities (QFs), and fall into two categories: qualifying small power production facilities and qualifying cogeneration facilities.

A small power production facility is a generating facility of 80 MW or less whose primary energy source is renewable (hydro, wind or solar), biomass, waste, or geothermal resources. There are some limited exceptions to the 80 MW size limit that apply to certain facilities certified prior to 1995 and designated under section 3(17)(E) of the Federal Power Act (FPA) (16 U.S.C. § 796(17)(E)), which have no size limitation. In order to be considered a qualifying small power production facility, a facility must meet all of the requirements of 18 C.F.R. §§ 292.203(a), 292.203(c) and 292.204 for size and fuel use, and be certified as a QF pursuant to 18 C.F.R. § 292.207.

A cogeneration facility is a generating facility that sequentially produces electricity and another form of useful thermal energy (such as heat or steam) in a way that is more efficient than the separate production of both forms of energy. For example, in addition to the production of electricity, large cogeneration facilities might provide steam for industrial uses in facilities such as paper mills, refineries, or factories, or for HVAC applications in commercial or residential buildings. Smaller cogeneration facilities might provide hot water for domestic heating or other useful applications. In order to be considered a qualifying cogeneration facility, a facility must meet all of the requirements of 18 C.F.R. §§ 292.203(b) and 292.205 for operation, efficiency and use of energy output, and be certified as a QF pursuant to 18 C.F.R. § 292.207. There is no size limitation for qualifying cogeneration facilities.

What Are the Benefits of QF Status?

QFs may enjoy certain benefits under Federal, State and local laws. The benefits that are conferred upon QFs by Federal law generally fall into three categories: (1) the right to sell energy or capacity to a utility, (2) the right to purchase certain services from utilities, and (3) relief from certain regulatory burdens.

Right to Sell QF Energy or Capacity to a Utility

QFs have the right to sell energy and capacity to a utility (see 18 C.F.R. § 304), provided the purchasing utility has not been relieved from its QF purchase obligation (see 18 C.F.R. § 309-311). With limited exceptions, QFs generally have the option of selling to a utility either at the utility's avoided cost or at a negotiated rate. Avoided cost is the incremental cost to an electric utility of electric energy or capacity which, but for the purchase from the QF, such utility would generate itself or purchase from another source (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.101(b)(6)). QFs also generally have the option to sell energy either "as-available" (i.e., as the QF determines such energy to be available for such purchases) or as part of a legally enforceable obligation for delivery of energy or capacity over a specified term.

Right to Purchase Certain Services from Utilities

QFs have the right to purchase supplementary power, back-up power, maintenance power, and interruptible power at rates which are just and reasonable, based on accurate data and consistent system-wide costing principles, and that apply to the utility's other customers with similar load or cost-related characteristics (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.305), provided the selling utility has not been relieved from its QF sales obligation (see 18 C.F.R. § 312 - 313). QFs also have the right to interconnect with a utility by paying a nondiscriminatory interconnection fee approved by the State regulatory authority or a nonregulated electric utility (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.306).

The following categories of QFs are exempt from the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 2005 (PUHCA) (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.602):

- Cogeneration facilities of any size;
- Small power production facilities 30 MW or smaller;
- Geothermal and biomass small power production facilities of any size; and
- Small power production facilities of any size that are designated as "eligible" under section 3(17)(E) of the Federal Power Act (FPA).

The following categories of QFs are exempt from State laws and regulations respecting the rates and financial and organizational aspects of utilities (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.602):

- Cogeneration facilities of any size;
- Small power production facilities 30 MW or smaller;
- Geothermal and biomass small power production facilities of any size; and
- Small power production facilities of any size that are designated as "eligible" under section 3(17)(E) of the FPA.

The following categories of QFs are largely exempt from most sections (not including sections 205, 206 and certain other sections) of the FPA (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.601):

- Cogeneration facilities of any size;
- Small power production facilities 30 MW or smaller;
- Geothermal small power production facilities of any size; and
- Small power production facilities of any size that are designated as "eligible" under section 3(17)(E) of the FPA.

Energy and capacity sales made by the following categories of QFs are exempt from scrutiny under sections 205 and 206 of the FPA (see 18 C.F.R. § 292.601):

- QFs 20 MW or smaller;

How to Obtain QF Status for Your Facility

An owner or operator of a generating facility may obtain QF status by either submitting a self-certification or applying for and obtaining a Commission certification of QF status. The choice of whether to certify a facility through a self-certification or Commission certification is up to the applicant. In some instances, negotiations with a lender or utility purchaser may proceed more smoothly if the facility has been certified by the Commission.

A completed Form No. 556 must be submitted with each self-certification or application for Commission certification of QF status. Most types of QF filings also have an associated notice requirement; see the Commission's QF Notice Requirements website for more information.

There are two methods of making QF filings:

- eFiling
- By Mail

All QF self-certifications and applications for Commission certifications may be filed electronically, and applicants are strongly encouraged to use the electronic filing process. By filing electronically, you will reduce your filing burden, save paper resources, save postage or courier charges, help keep Commission expenses to a minimum, and receive a much faster confirmation (via an email containing the docket number assigned to your facility) that the Commission has received your filing.

When prompted, select one of the following filing types, as appropriate, from the Electric menu:

- (Fee) Application for Commission Cert. as Cogeneration QF
- (Fee) Application for Commission Cert. as Small Power QF
- Self-Certification Notice (QF, EG, FC)
- Self-Recertification of Qualifying Facility (QF)
- Supplemental Information or Request (use this selection if you are supplementing or correcting a filing, whether on your own initiative, or at the request of Commission staff)

If you are required to pay a fee, you will be prompted to submit your fee electronically during the electronic filing process. You can pay via credit card or electronic debit from a bank account. If you are eFiling an application which requires you to submit a draft Federal Register notice (see Notice Requirements page for information), you must upload your draft notice in a word processing format (DOC, RTF, WPD, etc.) during the eFiling process.

To file a hardcopy of your self-certification or application for Commission certification, make sure the filing is completed and signed, and send the filing (including original and 14 copies of the Form No. 556 and any required attachments) and a check for the filing fee (if applicable) to the Secretary at the address listed in the Contact Us - Official Communication section.

Self-Certification

A self-certification of QF status under 18 C.F.R. § 292.207(a) must include the following:

- A completed Form No. 556.
- If the self-certification is for a "new cogeneration facility" (as defined below), then the public will be given notice of the filing through an announcement in the Federal Register. Thus, self-certifications of "new cogeneration facilities" must be accompanied by a draft notice suitable for publication in the Federal Register. See the Commission's QF Notice Requirements page for more information. A "new cogeneration facility" is a cogeneration facility that was either not certified as a QF on or before August 8, 2005, or that had not filed a notice of self-certification, self-recertification or an application for Commission certification or Commission recertification as a qualifying cogeneration facility on or before February 1, 2006.

There is no fee for filing a self-certification.

Applicants will be notified of their docket number either by email (if their application is eFiled) or by U.S. mail (if their application is filed in hardcopy format). Keep this number for future reference. You will receive no other document from the Commission for self-certifications.

Applicants for self-certification who have not yet received their docket number from the Secretary can locate their filed documents and find their docket number by performing a New Dockets Search in eLibrary.

Application for Commission Certification

An application for Commission certification of QF status under 18 C.F.R. § 292.207(b) must include the following:

- A completed Form No. 556.
- For all applications for Commission certification, the public is given notice through an announcement in the Federal Register of the filing of applications for Commission certification. Thus, applications for Commission certification must be accompanied by a draft notice suitable for publication in the Federal Register. See the Commission's QF Notice Requirements page for more information.
- A check for the filing fee made payable to the Treasurer of the United States. Please visit our Filing Fees page for the most current filing fee. A filing date will not be assigned to an application unless it is accompanied by the proper fee.

After submitting an application, applicants can locate documents related to their application and find their docket number by performing a New Dockets Search in eLibrary.

Within 90 days of the filing of an application, the Commission will either inform the applicant that the filing is deficient, issue an order granting or denying the application, or act to postpone the date for issuing an order. Under 18 C.F.R., 292.207(b)(3), if the Commission has not acted upon the application within 90 days of the filing date, it shall be deemed granted.

PART 292—REGULATIONS UNDER SECTIONS 201 AND 210 OF THE PUBLIC UTILITY REGULATORY POLICIES ACT OF 1978 WITH REGARD TO SMALL POWER PRODUCTION AND COGENERATION

Browse Previous | Browse Next

Subpart C—Arrangements Between Electric Utilities and Qualifying Cogeneration and Small Power Production Facilities Under Section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978

Authority: Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978, 16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq., Energy Supply and Environmental Coordination Act, 15 U.S.C. 791 et seq. Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. 792 et seq., Department of Energy Organization Act, 42 U.S.C. 7101 et seq., E.O. 12009, 42 FR 46267.

Source: Order 69, 45 FR 12234, Feb. 25, 1980, unless otherwise noted.

(a) Applicability. This subpart applies to the regulation of sales and purchases between qualifying facilities and electric utilities.

(b) Negotiated rates or terms. Nothing in this subpart:

(1) Limits the authority of any electric utility or any qualifying facility to agree to a rate for any purchase, or terms or conditions relating to any purchase, which differ from the rate or terms or conditions which would otherwise be required by this subpart; or

(2) Affects the validity of any contract entered into between a qualifying facility and an electric utility for any purchase.

(a) Applicability. (1) Except as provided in paragraph (a)(2) of this section, paragraph (b) applies to each electric utility, in any calendar year, if the total sales of electric energy by such utility for purposes other than resale exceeded 500 million kilowatt-hours during any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1975, and before the immediately preceding calendar year.

(2) Each utility having total sales of electric energy for purposes other than resale of less than one billion kilowatt-hours during any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1975, and before the immediately preceding year, shall not be subject to the provisions of this section until June 30, 1982.

(b) General rule. To make available data from which avoided costs may be derived, not later than November 1, 1980, June 30, 1982, and not less often than every two years thereafter, each regulated electric utility described in paragraph (a) of this section shall provide to its State regulatory authority, and shall maintain for public inspection, and each nonregulated electric utility described in paragraph (a) of this section shall maintain for public inspection, the following data:

(1) The estimated avoided cost on the electric utility's system, solely with respect to the energy component, for various levels of purchases from qualifying facilities. Such levels of purchases shall be stated in blocks of not more than 100 megawatts for systems with peak demand of 1000 megawatts or more, and in blocks equivalent to not more than 10 percent of the system peak demand for systems of less than 1000 megawatts. The avoided costs shall be stated on a cents per kilowatt-hour basis, during daily and seasonal peak and off-peak periods, by year, for the current calendar year and each of the next 5 years;

(2) The electric utility's plan for the addition of capacity by amount and type, for purchases of firm energy and capacity, and for capacity retirements for each year during the succeeding 10 years; and

(3) The estimated capacity costs at completion of the planned capacity additions and planned capacity firm purchases, on the basis of dollars per kilowatt, and the associated energy costs of each unit, expressed in cents per kilowatt hour. These costs shall be expressed in terms of individual generating units and of individual planned firm purchases.

(c) Special rule for small electric utilities. (1) Each electric utility (other than any electric utility to which paragraph (b) of this section applies) shall, upon request:

(i) Provide comparable data to that required under paragraph (b) of this section to enable qualifying facilities to estimate the electric utility's avoided costs for periods described in paragraph (b) of this section; or

(ii) With regard to an electric utility which is legally obligated to obtain all its requirements for electric energy and capacity from another electric utility, provide the data of its supplying utility and the rates at which it currently purchases such energy and capacity.

(2) If any such electric utility fails to provide such information on request, the qualifying facility may apply to the State regulatory authority (which has ratemaking authority over the electric utility) or the Commission for an order requiring that the information be provided.

(d) Substitution of alternative method. (1) After public notice in the area served by the electric utility, and after opportunity for public comment, any State regulatory authority may require (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority), or any non-regulated electric utility may provide, data different than those which are otherwise required by this section if it determines that avoided costs can be derived from such data.

(2) Any State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) or nonregulated utility which requires such different data shall notify the Commission within 30 days of making such determination.

(e) State Review. (1) Any data submitted by an electric utility under this section shall be subject to review by the State regulatory authority which has ratemaking authority over such electric utility.

(2) In any such review, the electric utility has the burden of coming forward with justification for its data.

(a) Obligation to purchase from qualifying facilities. Each electric utility shall purchase, in accordance with §292.304, unless exempted by §292.309 and §292.310, any energy and capacity which is made available from a qualifying facility:

(1) Directly to the electric utility; or

(2) Indirectly to the electric utility in accordance with paragraph (d) of this section.

(b) Obligation to sell to qualifying facilities. Each electric utility shall sell to any qualifying facility, in accordance with §292.305, unless exempted by §292.312, energy and capacity requested by the qualifying facility.

(c) Obligation to interconnect. (1) Subject to paragraph (c)(2) of this section, any electric utility shall make such interconnection costs with any qualifying facility as may be necessary to accomplish purchases or sales under this subpart. The obligation to pay for any interconnection shall be determined in accordance with §292.306.

(2) No electric utility is required to interconnect with any qualifying facility if, solely by reason of purchases or sales over the interconnection, the electric utility would become subject to regulation as a public utility under part II of the Federal Power Act.

(d) Transmission to other electric utilities. If a qualifying facility agrees, an electric utility which would otherwise be obligated to purchase energy or capacity from such qualifying facility may transmit the energy or capacity to any other electric utility. Any electric utility to which such energy or capacity is transmitted shall purchase such energy or capacity under this subpart as if the qualifying facility were supplying energy or capacity directly to such electric utility. The rate for purchase by the electric utility to which such energy is transmitted shall be adjusted up or down to reflect line losses pursuant to §292.304(e)(4) and shall not include any charges for transmission.

(e) Parallel operation. Each electric utility shall offer to operate in parallel with a qualifying facility, provided that the qualifying facility complies with any applicable standards established in accordance with §292.308.

(a) Rates for purchases. (1) Rates for purchases shall:

(i) Be just and reasonable to the electric consumer of the electric utility and in the public interest; and

(ii) Not discriminate against qualifying cogeneration and small power production facilities.

(2) Nothing in this subpart requires any electric utility to pay more than the avoided costs for purchases.

(b) Relationship to avoided costs. (1) For purposes of this paragraph, "new capacity" means any purchase from capacity of a qualifying facility, construction of which was commenced on or after November 9, 1978.

(2) Subject to paragraph (b)(3) of this section, a rate for purchases satisfies the requirements of paragraph (a) of this section if the rate equals the avoided costs determined after consideration of the factors set forth in paragraph (e) of this section

(3) A rate for purchases (other than from new capacity) may be less than the avoided cost if the State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) or the nonregulated electric utility determines that a lower rate is consistent with paragraph (a) of this section, and is sufficient to encourage cogeneration and small power production.

(4) Rates for purchases from new capacity shall be in accordance with paragraph (b)(2) of this section, regardless of whether the electric utility making such purchases is simultaneously making sales to the qualifying facility.

(5) In the case in which the rates for purchases are based upon estimates of avoided costs over the specific term of the contract or other legally enforceable obligation, the rates for such purchases do not violate this subpart if the rates for such purchases differ from avoided costs at the time of delivery.

(c) Standard rates for purchases. (1) There shall be put into effect (with respect to each electric utility) standard rates for purchases from qualifying facilities with a design capacity of 100 kilowatts or less.

(2) There may be put into effect standard rates for purchases from qualifying facilities with a design capacity of more than 100 kilowatts.

(3) The standard rates for purchases under this paragraph:

(i) Shall be consistent with paragraphs (a) and (e) of this section; and

(ii) May differentiate among qualifying facilities using various technologies on the basis of the supply characteristics of the different technologies.

(d) Purchases "as available" or pursuant to a legally enforceable obligation. Each qualifying facility shall have the option either:

(1) To provide energy as the qualifying facility determines such energy to be available for such purchases, in which case the rates for such purchases shall be based on the purchasing utility's avoided costs calculated at the time of delivery; or

(2) To provide energy or capacity pursuant to a legally enforceable obligation for the delivery of energy or capacity over a specified term, in which case the rates for such purchases shall, at the option of the qualifying facility exercised prior to the beginning of the specified term, be based on either:

(i) The avoided costs calculated at the time of delivery; or

(ii) The avoided costs calculated at the time the obligation is incurred.

(e) Factors affecting rates for purchases. In determining avoided costs, the following factors shall, to the extent practicable, be taken into account:

(1) The data provided pursuant to §292.302(b), (c), or (d), including State review of any such data;

(2) The availability of capacity or energy from a qualifying facility during the system daily and seasonal peak periods, including:

(i) The ability of the utility to dispatch the qualifying facility;

(ii) The expected or demonstrated reliability of the qualifying facility;

(iii) The terms of any contract or other legally enforceable obligation, including the duration of the obligation, termination notice requirement and sanctions for non-compliance;

(iv) The extent to which scheduled outages of the qualifying facility can be usefully coordinated with scheduled outages of the utility's facilities;

(v) The usefulness of energy and capacity supplied from a qualifying facility during system emergencies, including its ability to separate its load from its generation;

(vi) The individual and aggregate value of energy and capacity from qualifying facilities on the electric utility's system; and

(vii) The smaller capacity increments and the shorter lead times available with additions of capacity from qualifying facilities; and

(3) The relationship of the availability of energy or capacity from the qualifying facility as derived in paragraph (e)(2) of this section, to the ability of the electric utility to avoid costs, including the deferral of capacity additions and the reduction of fossil fuel use; and

(4) The costs or savings resulting from variations in line losses from those that would have existed in the absence of purchases from a qualifying facility, if the purchasing electric utility generated an equivalent amount of energy itself or purchased an equivalent amount of electric energy or capacity.

(f) Periods during which purchases not required. (1) Any electric utility which gives notice pursuant to paragraph (f)(2) of this section will not be required to purchase electric energy or capacity during any period during which, due to operational circumstances, purchases from qualifying facilities will result in costs greater than those which the utility would incur if it did not make such purchases, but instead generated an equivalent amount of energy itself.

(2) Any electric utility seeking to invoke paragraph (f)(1) of this section must notify, in accordance with applicable State law or regulation, each affected qualifying facility in time for the qualifying facility to cease the delivery of energy or capacity to the electric utility.

(3) Any electric utility which fails to comply with the provisions of paragraph (f)(2) of this section will be required to pay the same rate for such purchase of energy or capacity as would be required had the period described in paragraph (f)(1) of this section not occurred.

(4) A claim by an electric utility that such a period has occurred or will occur is subject to such verification by its State regulatory authority as the State regulatory authority determines necessary or appropriate, either before or after the occurrence.

(a) General rules. (1) Rates for sales:

(i) Shall be just and reasonable and in the public interest; and

(ii) Shall not discriminate against any qualifying facility in comparison to rates for sales to other customers served by the electric utility.

(2) Rates for sales which are based on accurate data and consistent systemwide costing principles shall not be considered to discriminate against any qualifying facility to the extent that such rates apply to the utility's other customers with similar load or other cost-related characteristics.

(b) Additional services to be provided to qualifying facilities. (1) Upon request of a qualifying facility, each electric utility shall provide:

(i) Supplementary power;

(ii) Back-up power;

(iii) Maintenance power; and

(iv) Interruptible power.

(2) The State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) and the Commission (with respect to any nonregulated electric utility) may waive any requirement of paragraph (b)(1) of this section if, after notice in the area served by the electric utility and after opportunity for public comment, the electric utility demonstrates and the State regulatory authority or the Commission, as the case may be, finds that compliance with such requirement will:

(i) Impair the electric utility's ability to render adequate service to its customers; or

(ii) Place an undue burden on the electric utility.

(c) Rates for sales of back-up and maintenance power. The rate for sales of back-up power or maintenance power:

(1) Shall not be based upon an assumption (unless supported by factual data) that forced outages or other reductions in electric output by all qualifying facilities on an electric utility's system will occur simultaneously, or during the system peak, or both; and

(2) Shall take into account the extent to which scheduled outages of the qualifying facilities can be usefully coordinated with scheduled outages of the utility's facilities.

§ 292.306 Interconnection costs.

(a) Obligation to pay. Each qualifying facility shall be obligated to pay any interconnection costs which the State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) or nonregulated electric utility may assess against the qualifying facility on a nondiscriminatory basis with respect to other customers with similar load characteristics.

(b) Reimbursement of interconnection costs. Each State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) and nonregulated utility shall determine the manner for payments of interconnection costs, which may include reimbursement over a reasonable period of time.

§ 292.307 System emergencies.

(a) Qualifying facility obligation to provide power during system emergencies. A qualifying facility shall be required to provide energy or capacity to an electric utility during a system emergency only to the extent:

(1) Provided by agreement between such qualifying facility and electric utility; or

(2) Ordered under section 202(c) of the Federal Power Act.

(b) Discontinuance of purchases and sales during system emergencies. During any system emergency, an electric utility may discontinue:

(1) Purchases from a qualifying facility if such purchases would contribute to such emergency; and

(2) Sales to a qualifying facility, provided that such discontinuance is on a nondiscriminatory basis.

§ 292.308 Standards for operating reliability.

Any State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) or nonregulated electric utility may establish reasonable standards to ensure system safety and reliability of interconnected operations. Such standards may be recommended by any electric utility, any qualifying facility, or any other person. If any State regulatory authority (with respect to any electric utility over which it has ratemaking authority) or nonregulated electric utility establishes such standards, it shall specify the need for such standards on the basis of system safety and reliability.

(a) After August 8, 2005, an electric utility shall not be required, under this part, to enter into a new contract or obligation to purchase electric energy from a qualifying cogeneration facility or a qualifying small power production facility if the Commission finds that the qualifying cogeneration facility or qualifying small power facility production has nondiscriminatory access to:

(1)(i) Independently administered, auction-based day ahead and real time wholesale markets for the sale of electric energy; and

(ii) Wholesale markets for long-term sales of capacity and electric energy; or

(2)(i) Transmission and interconnection services that are provided by a Commission-approved regional transmission entity and administered pursuant to an open access transmission tariff that affords nondiscriminatory treatment to all customers; and

(ii) Competitive wholesale markets that provide a meaningful opportunity to sell capacity, including long-term and short-term sales, and electric energy, including long-term, short-term and real-time sales, to buyers other than the utility to which the qualifying facility is interconnected. In determining whether a meaningful opportunity to sell exists, the Commission shall consider, among other factors, evidence of transactions within the relevant market; or

(3) Wholesale markets for the sale of capacity and electric energy that are, at a minimum, of comparable competitive quality as markets described in paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) of this section.

(b) For purposes of §292.309(a), a renewal of a contract that expires by its own terms is a "new contract or obligation" without a continuing obligation to purchase under an expired contract.

(c) For purposes of §292.309(a)(1), (2) and (3), with the exception of paragraph (d) of this section, there is a rebuttable presumption that a qualifying facility has nondiscriminatory access to the market if it is eligible for service under a Commission-approved open access transmission tariff or Commission-filed reciprocity tariff, and Commission-approved interconnection rules. If the Commission determines that a market meets the criteria of §292.309(a)(1), (2) or (3), and if a qualifying facility in the relevant market is eligible for service under a Commission-approved open access transmission tariff or Commission-filed reciprocity tariff, a qualifying facility may seek to rebut the presumption of access to the market by demonstrating, inter alia, that it does not have access to the market because of operational characteristics or transmission constraints.

(d)(1) For purposes of §292.309(a)(1), (2), and (3), there is a rebuttable presumption that a qualifying facility with a capacity at or below 20 megawatts does not have nondiscriminatory access to the market.

(2) For purposes of implementing paragraph (d)(1) of this section, the Commission will not be bound by the one-mile standard set forth in §292.204(a)(2).

(e) Midwest Independent Transmission System Operator (Midwest ISO), PJM Interconnection, L.L.C. (PJM), ISO New England, Inc. (ISO–NE), and New York Independent System Operator (NYISO) qualify as markets described in §292.309(a)(1)(i) and (ii), and there is a rebuttable presumption that qualifying facilities with a capacity greater than 20 megawatts have nondiscriminatory access to those markets through Commission-approved open access transmission tariffs and interconnection rules, and that electric utilities that are members of such regional transmission organizations or independent system operators (RTO/ISOs) should be relieved of the obligation to purchase electric energy from the qualifying facilities. A qualifying facility may seek to rebut this presumption by demonstrating, inter alia, that:

(1) The qualifying facility has certain operational characteristics that effectively prevent the qualifying facility's participation in a market; or

(2) The qualifying facility lacks access to markets due to transmission constraints. The qualifying facility may show that it is located in an area where persistent transmission constraints in effect cause the qualifying facility not to have access to markets outside a persistently congested area to sell the qualifying facility output or capacity.

(f) The Electric Reliability Council of Texas (ERCOT) qualifies as a market described in §292.309(a)(3), and there is a rebuttable presumption that qualifying facilities with a capacity greater than 20 megawatts have nondiscriminatory access to that market through Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUCT) approved open access protocols, and that electric utilities that operate within ERCOT should be relieved of the obligation to purchase electric energy from the qualifying facilities. A qualifying facility may seek to rebut this presumption by demonstrating, inter alia, that:

(1) The qualifying facility has certain operational characteristics that effectively prevent the qualifying facility's participation in a market; or

(2) The qualifying facility lacks access to markets due to transmission constraints. The qualifying facility may show that it is located in an area where persistent transmission constraints in effect cause the qualifying facility not to have access to markets outside a persistently congested area to sell the qualifying facility output or capacity.

(g) The California Independent System Operator and Southwest Power Pool, Inc. satisfy the criteria of §292.309(a)(2)(i).

(h) No electric utility shall be required, under this part, to enter into a new contract or obligation to purchase from or sell electric energy to a facility that is not an existing qualifying cogeneration facility unless the facility meets the criteria for new qualifying cogeneration facilities established by the Commission in §292.205.

(i) For purposes of §292.309(h), an "existing qualifying cogeneration facility" is a facility that:

(1) Was a qualifying cogeneration facility on or before August 8, 2005; or

(2) Had filed with the Commission a notice of self-certification or self-recertification, or an application for Commission certification, under §292.207 prior to February 2, 2006.

(j) For purposes of §292.309(h), a "new qualifying cogeneration facility" is a facility that satisfies the criteria for qualifying cogeneration facilities pursuant to §292.205.

§ 292.310 Procedures for utilities requesting termination of obligation to purchase from qualifying facilities.

(a) An electric utility may file an application with the Commission for relief from the mandatory purchase requirement under §292.303(a) pursuant to this section on a service territory-wide basis. Such application shall set forth the factual basis upon which relief is requested and describe why the conditions set forth in §292.309(a)(1), (2) or (3) have been met. After notice, including sufficient notice to potentially affected qualifying cogeneration facilities and qualifying small power production facilities, and an opportunity for comment, the Commission shall make a final determination within 90 days of such application regarding whether the conditions set forth in §292.309(a)(1), (2) or (3) have been met.

(b) Sufficient notice shall mean that an electric utility must identify with names and addresses all potentially affected qualifying facilities in an application filed pursuant to paragraph (a).

(c) An electric utility must submit with its application for each potentially affected qualifying facility: The docket number assigned if the qualifying facility filed for self-certification or an application for Commission certification of qualifying facility status; the net capacity of the qualifying facility; the location of the qualifying facility depicted by state and county, and the name and location of the substation where the qualifying facility is interconnected; the interconnection status of each potentially affected qualifying facility including whether the qualifying facility is interconnected as an energy or a network resource; and the expiration date of the energy and/or capacity agreement between the applicant utility and each potentially affected qualifying facility. All potentially affected qualifying facilities shall include:

(1) Those qualifying facilities that have existing power purchase contracts with the applicant;

(2) Other qualifying facilities that sell their output to the applicant or that have pending self-certification or Commission certification with the Commission for qualifying facility status whereby the applicant will be the purchaser of the qualifying facility's output;

(3) Any developer of generating facilities with whom the applicant has agreed to enter into power purchase contracts, as of the date of the application filed pursuant to this section, or are in discussion, as of the date of the application filed pursuant to this section, with regard to power purchase contacts;

(4) The developers of facilities that have pending state avoided cost proceedings, as of the date of the application filed pursuant to this section; and

(5) Any other qualifying facilities that the applicant reasonably believes to be affected by its application filed pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section.

(d) The following information must be filed with an application:

(1) Identify whether applicant seeks a finding under the provisions of §292.309(a)(1), (2), or (3).

(2) A narrative setting forth the factual basis upon which relief is requested and describing why the conditions set forth in §292.309(a)(1), (2), or (3) have been met. Applicant should also state in its application whether it is relying on the findings or rebuttable presumptions contained in §292.309(e), (f) or (g). To the extent applicant seeks relief from the purchase obligation with respect to a qualifying facility 20 megawatts or smaller, and thus seeks to rebut the presumption in §292.309(d), applicant must also set forth, and submit evidence of, the factual basis supporting its contention that the qualifying facility has nondiscriminatory access to the wholesale markets which are the basis for the applicant's filing.

(3) Transmission Studies and related information, including:

(i) The applicant's long-term transmission plan, conducted by applicant, or the RTO, ISO or other relevant entity;

(ii) Transmission constraints by path, element or other level of comparable detail that have occurred and/or are known and expected to occur, and any proposed mitigation including transmission construction plans;

(iii) Levels of congestion, if available;

(iv) Relevant system impact studies for the generation interconnections, already completed;

(v) Other information pertinent to showing whether transfer capability is available; and

(vi) The appropriate link to applicant's OASIS, if any, from which a qualifying facility may obtain applicant's available transfer capability (ATC) information.

(4) Describe the process, procedures and practices that qualifying facilities interconnected to the applicant's system must follow to arrange for the transmission service to transfer power to purchasers other than the applicant. This description must include the process, procedures and practices of all distribution, transmission and regional transmission facilities necessary for qualifying facility access to the market.

(5) If qualifying facilities will be required to execute new interconnection agreements, or renegotiate existing agreements so that they can effectuate wholesale sales to third-party purchasers, explain the requirements, charges and the process to be followed. Also, explain any differences in these requirements as they apply to qualifying facilities compared to other generators, or to applicant-owned generation.

(6) Applicants seeking a Commission finding pursuant to §292.309(a)(2) or (3), except those applicants located in ERCOT, also must provide evidence of competitive wholesale markets that provide a meaningful opportunity to sell capacity, including long-term and short-term sales, and electric energy, including long-term, short-term and real-time sales, to buyers other than the utility to which the qualifying facility is interconnected. In demonstrating that a meaningful opportunity to sell exists, provide evidence of transactions within the relevant market. Applicants must include a list of known or potential purchasers, e.g. , jurisdictional and non-jurisdictional utilities as well as retail energy service providers.

(7) Signature of authorized individual evidencing the accuracy and authenticity of information provided by applicant.

(8) Person(s) to whom communications regarding the filed information may be addressed, including name, title, telephone number, and mailing address.

Students and serious practitioners of public utility regulation have long recognized what an imperfect institution it is. Grounded in the conception that these industries are naturally monopolistic—that is, that full achievement of their inherent economies of scale requires that they be organized as franchised monopolies—it followed that they had to be regulated in order to protect consumers from exploitation, while at the same time assuring investors recovery of their prudently (more precisely, in practice, their not-demonstrably-imprudently) incurred costs.

This essentially cost-plus system appeared to work well in electric power during the quarter century following the end of World War II, when technological progress and the progressive realization of economies of scale in generation and transmission, and the adoption of nuclear generation, converged to produce declining rates in real terms. In the decades following 1973, in contrast, two bouts of double-digit inflation in the economy at large, two quadruplings of the price of oil, sharp increases in the cost of capital—especially painful in so capital-intensive a business—and massive cost overruns in nuclear facilities all compelled dramatic rate increases throughout the 1980s, just when a slump in the real prices of oil and natural gas and the advent of combined-cycle gas generation made deregulation and competition look far more attractive to consumers than continued compliance with the historic regulatory bargain.

As this brief historical account demonstrates, the movement for deregulation in the last decades of the 20th century was clearly opportunistic—putting pressures on regulatory agencies to renege on their implicit promise to set rates sufficient to provide fair returns on invested capital—a "temptation of the kleptocrats," as I put it at the time.[1] Significantly, the pressures for deregulation were most insistent in states whose electric companies had invested heavily in nuclear plants and, at the other extreme, virtually nonexistent in states still relying heavily on coal, and particularly coal-fired generating plants that had long since been totally depreciated on the companies' books.

But, clearly, there were fundamental, not merely transient issues at stake as well. As I observed some seventeen years ago, in the context of reforming regulatory practice rather than deregulation:

> [A] consistent use of current competitive market valuations, for successful and unsuccessful investments alike, would be not only unobjectionable but desirable, because it would transfer the cost of failures, symmetrically with the profits of success, from ratepayers to investors.[2]

Manifestly, genuine deregulation would produce the same beneficent result.

Deregulation alone, however, would not take into account the especial importance, in this industry—in which only limited storage of its product is possible—of reliability of supply in the face of demand that fluctuates widely. Under regulation, this reliability was secured by requiring generators to maintain some stipulated margin of excess capacity sufficient to hold loss-of-load probabilities down to some acceptable minimum—the cost of which had to be distributed among all customer groups, since all benefited from it.

It was rarely recognized, however, that such a system was itself highly inefficient, because it failed to recognize that individual customers have widely differing needs for such assurances, because they differ correspondingly in the ability to adapt their consumption habits to the widely varying marginal costs. Only a system that provides customers with the choice of contracting with suppliers for such assurances as each of them requires—and its corollary, able instead to alter their consumption habits in response to changes in system marginal costs—can accomplish the purpose, on the one hand, of determining what margin of excess capacity is required in the aggregate and, second, how its costs will be distributed among customers. I commend to readers the authors' exposition of how restructured markets would, by confronting customers with prices varying hourly with contemporaneous marginal costs, give them the opportunity to react in real time, thereby giving each the opportunity to choose the level of reliability he or she wants and is willing to pay for.

Just as the move to restructuring was opportunistic, so too is the current sentiment to return to regulation a reaction to transient developments—in particular, the sharp increase in oil and gas prices—driving marginal costs above historic costs. But the choice of system should not be based, opportunistically, on transient events: the real defect of regulation is that rates set under it are based necessarily on averages—over time and among groups of customers. Ideally, the system would confront each customer with the proper price signals. And production efficiency is best realized when investors bear responsibility for investment decisions.

Policy makers confronting pressures to undo the restructuring of the electricity industry would be well advised to base their decisions on the longer-term benefits that will flow from properly implementing competitive markets, rather than on adventitious circumstances driving market prices temporarily above or below regulated rates.

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY[1]

State policy makers are reviewing past decisions to promote competition in electricity markets and, in some cases, are debating whether to reverse course. Competitive electricity markets, also known as "restructured electricity markets," refer to the organization of the electric industry in states where utilities no longer have the obligation to plan and build generating capacity, and have often divested generation ownership. The purpose of this paper is to present an objective review of both traditional regulation and competitive electricity markets in order to assist policy makers as they critically assess their policy options.

The end of transition periods featuring rate caps and the onset of market-based retail rates has resulted in price increases for some states. While many have attributed these price increases to a failure of competition, the timing of the price increases is a coincidence and does not equate to causality. Electricity prices, driven by fuel costs, have risen in all states, not just those that restructured their electricity markets. As a result of these price increases, some states are examining their experiences with electric industry restructuring.

Prices derived by competitive markets and rates derived by traditional regulation[2] are fundamentally different, and will produce different outcomes. Over time, competitive markets are widely held to produce the most efficient results in our economy, providing the lowest costs to customers. Markets reward innovation—the search for and discovery, development, adoption, and commercialization of new products, services, organizational structures, processes, and procedures—that meets market demand. In a competitive environment, customers have more control over what they consume and what they pay, price levels will encourage more efficient use of energy, and market prices will encourage more demand response. Economists and experienced regulators, as well as national electricity policy, favor reliance on competitive markets when workable competition is feasible. It is important to evaluate the attributes of the competitive and cost-based regulatory models, and to critically analyze the strengths and weaknesses of each.

[2] Traditionally regulated utilities have an obligation to serve under traditional cost-of-service regulation, and to make and implement long-term generation plans in order to provide efficient, safe, adequate, and reliable service over time. It is important to note that even in restructured states, where such a model has been abandoned, there are many residual elements of traditional regulation. Transmission and distribution delivery service prices are regulated, and while customers receive a market-based generation price, the market procurement method is regulated.

Competition facilitates the most efficient means of production. Competitive market pricing provides significant benefits not found under traditional regulatory pricing. Among these benefits are the following:

- Market-based price signals are transparent and can stimulate appropriate infrastructure investment, energy conservation, and demand response.
- Competition provides customers with choices—i.e., customer sovereignty. Customers can exercise their own choices with respect to long-term risks, environmental concerns, and even reliability levels.
- Competitive market pricing allows sellers to tailor products and services to their customers' needs, and use demand-side solutions to avoid supply-side investment where appropriate.
- By pricing at market, prices will be similar for proximate utilities.
- Competition shifts risks from customers to investors.
- Competition produces more efficient results because the investor, not the ratepayer, assumes the generation investment risk.
- In competitive markets, poor producers fail and are acquired or replaced by those with more skill, foresight, and industry.

The electric utility industry pursued competition not for academic reasons, but because regulation was producing unacceptable outcomes, including large price differences between proximate utilities, large plant cost overruns, rate shocks and phase-ins, and customer dissatisfaction with lack of control over their electricity costs. Some innovative pricing concepts were studied, but they were rarely implemented on a large scale, and offerings were limited to a few standard tariffs. New generation built under regulation was considered too risky by both customers and investors, and power plants, particularly nuclear generators, demonstrated poor operating performance.

The differences between cost-of-service regulated rates and prices derived from competition are predictable and certain, and include the following:

- Regulated rates are founded on utilities' and regulators' judgment about the attributes of the product (e.g., reliability, environmental impacts) rather than the discipline of market forces.
- Regulated rates result in utilities and regulators imposing their choices on customers.
- Cost-based regulation makes it difficult for customers to make choices based on their own preferences and responses to market price signals.

- Cost-based regulated prices distort price signals necessary for efficient consumption, and undermine incentives for conservation and demand response. This creates a need to develop complicated and expensive conservation programs that "correct" the price signals through administrative means, when efficient results are obtained with simpler programs and market-derived prices.

Before undoing competitive markets, either intentionally or inadvertently, policy makers should consider the following facts:

- Regulated-monopoly generation imposed huge cost burdens on customers. These burdens, to which customers were exposed under the last significant non-gas capacity expansion, are what led many "high cost" states to restructure. In many states, cost-based regulation failed to produce reasonably priced electricity in the 1980s.

- States continuing with the regulated monopoly model are providing, and must continue to provide, iron-clad cost recovery guarantees for new generation investment.

- Transparent market prices derived in competitive markets are encouraging penetration of energy efficiency (conservation) and facilitating responsive consumer demand, lowering investment needs and providing environmental benefits.

- Innovations in end-use efficiency can potentially be created when customers control their own choices based on available information, and the market provides creative solutions. This can happen to the full extent only in a competitive market.

- Competitive electricity markets have led the way in developing renewable generation.

- Recent price increases are largely driven by fuel price increases, and have occurred in both competitive and traditionally regulated states.

While the promotion of competitive markets may not have been implemented perfectly, the points above suggest that customers would be better served by regulatory efforts directed at refining and improving the competitive model, rather than returning to cost-of-service regulation.

II. INTRODUCTION

Over $400 billion of electric industry infrastructure investment in generating plants will be required between 2006 and 2030.[3] Investments will be needed not only to accommodate the growth in population and the economy, but to replace aging facilities,[4] reduce emissions, fund research and development of innovative technologies, and lessen dependence on the use of liquid fuels from politically unstable foreign sources. In addition, all of these factors must be viewed in the context of heightened interest in renewable energy.[5] With such a large investment at stake, efficiency must be maximized and customers' interests must be protected. A failure to make this investment in the most efficient manner will: (1) make it difficult to ensure affordable and reliable electricity supply; (2) threaten the global competitiveness of the United States; and (3) risk having the country fall short of achieving environmental objectives.

To induce the needed investment, two economic models—that are markedly different both in terms of how they work and the incentives that they provide—can be used. The first is competition. In competitive markets, investors evaluate alternatives, make investment decisions, and place their capital at risk to market forces. Poor investment decisions lead to investor losses, even if such decisions were reasonable at the time they were made. The second model is cost-of-service regulation. In traditionally regulated markets, decisions about the type and timing of generating plant additions are generally determined by utilities, which are overseen by utility regulators. A utility builds, owns, and operates its system subject to oversight by the regulator through an open process that allows for significant input by stakeholders. While utility investors assume a limited set of investment risks, customers assume more, as they ultimately fund and support the investments through the rates they pay. Customers typically bear the risk when the selected investment incurs relatively higher costs, leading to rates that exceed market levels—so long as the utility's actions were prudent, meaning the actions were reasonable given available information.

At the national level, electricity policy is clear. Federal law provides for competition in wholesale generation markets and open access to transmission facilities. While this policy accommodates wholesale competition, it does not mandate or promote competition at the retail level. States have the choice to rely on vertically integrated utilities to plan, build, and own generating plants; to require utilities to use their monopoly position to underwrite long-term contracts that provide cost recovery without regard to how costs compare to the market in the future;[6] or, to transfer the responsibility for investment decisions and the risk of investment decisions away from customers and on to investors by adopting a competitive model. These state decisions on whether to use cost-of-service regulation, competition, or some mix of the two are critical to achieving efficient investment, promoting environmental goals, and protecting customer interests.

[6] The key phrase here is "in the future." Regulated monopolies have to reasonably plan in this day and age, but the standard by which they are judged is whether their decisions were reasonable based on what a prudent utility

Choosing between competition and cost-of-service regulation is not easy. It can be difficult to fully appreciate the consequences of these two options. Given the long-lived nature of utility assets, the choice will have long-term financial and environmental consequences for energy customers. The United States, with its federal system of government, is unique among nations in reserving this major economic choice for the individual states. Policy makers undoubtedly face difficult challenges in the current environment, with price increases largely driven by input price increases, which have little to do with whether or not there are competitive power markets in the state.

management could have known at the time. If, in the future, the regulated utility's costs become uneconomic relative to the market price, the utility would still be able to recover its actual, prudently-incurred costs in rates.

III. THE CHOICE BETWEEN TRADITIONALLY REGULATED AND COMPETITIVE MARKETS IS CLEAR

Under competition, prices reflect the supply and demand conditions at the time, and customers have the ability to choose products and services that allow them to manage their individual electricity usage. Under cost-of-service regulation, customers enter into an ongoing long-term contract to support new generating investment through their local utilities, and have very little product choice. Prices reflect historical costs and historical investment decisions, not prevailing market prices.

Competitive market pricing provides many benefits not found under traditional regulatory pricing. First, because investors are compensated based on the market and not cost, they bear the risks and rewards of generation investment. Second, price signals are more accurate within competitive markets, and can stimulate appropriate infrastructure investment, energy conservation, and demand response. Markets use these price signals to evaluate solutions to current and future energy challenges. Third, competitive market pricing allows sellers to tailor products and services to their customers' needs, and use their ability to respond to prices in a way to avoid new investments where appropriate. Lastly, by pricing at market, prices will be similar for proximate utilities. Consequently, industries located in different utility territories will not be subject to arbitrary cost disadvantages relative to competitors, a balance that represents a change from cost-of-service regulation. Under the latter, if one utility decided to build a nuclear plant that resulted in a large but prudent cost overrun, while the neighboring utility decided on a coal plant that was built within budget, rates for the two utilities could differ sharply. This is not typical of functioning markets, and it is difficult for customers, particularly industrial competitors, to accept such arbitrary pricing.

Regulated prices are based on cost of service, and to the extent that different utilities make different investment decisions, prices for proximate utilities may be very different. Throughout the 1980s and 1990s, regulated prices were far above market. Once gas prices declined and technology developments in combined cycle generation lowered cost and heat rates, the cost of nuclear investments and Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (PURPA) qualifying facility (QF) contracts exceeded the cost of constructing and operating new combined cycle plants, or taking advantage of surplus capacity. Prices charged by proximate utilities differed based on the timing of their plant additions and construction cost outcomes.

Luck played a large factor in determining the rates that particular electricity customers paid. But one thing is certain: the major driver for the move to competitive electricity markets in the 1990s was the series of poor outcomes that occurred during the 1970s and 1980s, when the inclusion of "lumpy" investments in nuclear generating plants led to concerns about "rate shock," rate increase, phase-in plans, and automatic pass-through of fuel costs. Ratepayers and investors shared in the financial burden resulting from these investment decisions.[7]

[7] The economic losses resulting from the mistakes of the 1970s and 1980s may have cost as much as $100 billion. See: Wald, "Nuclear Plant Drain Put at $100 Billion for U.S.," New York Times, February 1, 1988, p. D1. This article was cited in Richard Goldsmith, "Utility Rates and 'Takings,'" Energy Law Journal, Vol. 10, No. 2, 1989, p. 241.

There is little reason to believe that a return to traditional regulation would lead to prices that would be continually below or at market levels. The only assured outcome is that cost-of-service regulated prices will reflect historical costs, not the market. Regulated prices could be administratively set to be relatively stable, but this may come at the cost of consistently failing to reflect the actual costs incurred. It makes little sense to attempt to choose between a traditionally regulated and a competitive model based on expectations of future price level differences, as such a choice would be speculative.

In competitive markets, where larger customers face hourly market prices (and smaller customers may elect to do so), electricity providers in many instances offer creative packages to satisfy customers. These are tangible differences between the traditionally regulated and competitive models that are predictable and certain. It is also certain that under competition, customers will have more control over what they consume and what they pay, that price levels will become known and encourage more efficient use of energy, and market prices will encourage the development of more responsive demand. Moreover, the same benefits apply to supply as well as to demand alternatives. For example, in a traditionally regulated model, wind resources will be viable only to the extent that a utility chooses to build or buy wind. In a competitive market, wind developers will have access to regional transmission organization (RTO) transmission and integration service, and will see market incentives to develop projects that provide maximum market benefits. Correspondingly, consumers may elect to buy more energy from wind and other renewable resources.

In competitive markets, generation investment decisions are made by investors in response to customer needs. Investors bear the risk of those decisions. This is a fundamental and important difference between competitive markets and cost-of-service regulation. It is important to consider that bearing risk does not equate to simply absorbing losses. There is an upside and a downside to risk. In return for bearing losses on unsuccessful investment decisions, investors realize gains on successful investments. That is the competitive model that prevails throughout the US economy.

There are other differences between cost-of-service regulation and competition that are predictable and certain. For instance, regulation requires utilities and, in turn, regulators, to substitute their judgment about the attributes of the product (e.g., reliability, environmental impacts) for that of the market, and this makes it difficult for customers to make choices based on their own preferences. Competition gives customers greater choice and control through market-based innovation. Customers can exercise their own choices with respect to environmental attributes, long-term risks, and even reliability levels. Regulated prices also typically distort price signals that are necessary for efficient consumption, and undermine incentives for conservation and demand response. Since the mid-1970s, traditionally regulated utilities have investigated innovative pricing and demand control. Progress has been limited, as regulated tariffs are standard and creative pricing schemes reflecting individual circumstances are hard to implement.

IV. ELECTRICITY COMPETITION WAS PURSUED AS A SOLUTION TO LONG-TERM PROBLEMS

Policy makers should consider that electricity markets were restructured because regulation was producing high prices and generally unacceptable outcomes for both customers and shareholders. This section will explain the cost-of-service regulation problems that began in the mid-1970s, which include price differences between proximate utilities, plant cost overruns, rate shocks and phase-ins, PURPA excess costs, and customer dissatisfaction with the lack of control over their electricity costs. Power plants, particularly nuclear plants, demonstrated poor operating performance.[8] Demand side measures and innovative pricing were frequently discussed but rarely implemented successfully in the traditionally regulated environment. By the mid- to late-1980s, there was substantial dissatisfaction with the outcomes of the regulatory process, which led policy makers to pursue competition in the 1990s.

These well-known regulatory problems, which began in the mid-1970s, created a strong impetus for the industry to restructure. A significant component to the problems was price, which, as Professor Paul Joskow of MIT notes, "reflected the high capital costs and poor operating performance of nuclear power plants commissioned during the 1970s and 1980s, the high prices reflected in PURPA/QF contracts, and the costs of excess capacity which got rolled into regulated prices."[9] It is reasonable to assume that the same or similar problems could arise in states that revert to a system akin to traditional regulation. Problems with traditional, cost-of-service regulation of generation are still relevant in many parts of the United States.

US power systems were, for the most part, developed by vertically integrated utilities. These utilities built, owned, and operated distribution, transmission, and generation facilities. Traditionally, these utilities had exclusive service territories and the right to exclude other entities from the use of their distribution and, to a lesser extent, transmission facilities. The generation investment by these utilities was made pursuant to an obligation to serve all loads in the service territory. The legal framework provided for the right to charge rates that allowed the utility a reasonable opportunity to recover all prudent investments and costs incurred to meet that obligation, and further protected that investment with an exclusive service territory and the right to exclude others from the use of distribution facilities.

Major nuclear plant cost overruns received a large amount of press in the 1970s and 1980s. Regulators no longer wanted to deal with overseeing ratemaking issues years after an investment had been made in a plant. To cite some examples:

- In Ohio, construction of the Zimmer nuclear power plant began in 1969, with an estimated in operation date of 1975. Cincinnati Gas & Electric, Dayton Power & Light, [8] Statistics show that there has been substantial improvement in nuclear operating performance in recent years. This is most easily represented by the increase in average capacity factor across the US nuclear power industry. The Nuclear Energy Institute provides public access to these statistics on its website. Please see: http://www.nei.org/resourcesandstats/nuclear_statistics/usnuclearpowerplants/ (Accessed 11/28/07).

and Columbus and Southern Ohio Electric made up the ownership group, which predicted that the total cost of construction would be $240 million. There were massive cost overruns after construction began, and the estimated total cost rose to $3.5 billion, while the operating date became uncertain. Following allegations of mismanagement and intervention by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the owners announced that the plant would be converted to a coal-fired unit with an estimated completion date of 1991 at an additional cost of $1.7 billion.[10]

- In Michigan, construction of the Midland nuclear power plant was expected to be completed by 1975 at a cost of $276 million. Instead, construction of the plant was halted in 1984, after total costs had risen to $4.2 billion. In 1986, the Michigan Public Service Commission decided that the plant should be converted to a gas-fired unit, with a conversion cost of $600 million.[11]

- In New York, construction of the Nine Mile 2 plant began in 1970. The total cost for this project was initially estimated to be under $400 million, and the facility was projected to be operating by 1977. These estimates changed dramatically after construction began, with total costs reaching $3.7 billion and a completion date of 1986. The total cost of the plant after completion in 1986 was $5.4 billion, of which $4.45 billion was deemed recoverable by the New York Public Service Commission.[12]

There are many other examples of cost overruns, which led to a great deal of regulatory frustration over how to better deal with the construction and financing of generation. These frustrations stemmed from problems with nuclear power plants that experienced huge cost overruns, the aftermath of the energy crises of the 1970s, sharply reduced electricity demand growth rates, and the basic fact, that under the traditional regulatory compact, customers bore the vast majority of the risk.

In response to the regulatory issues, state regulators began to emphasize long-term "integrated resource planning" (IRP), which sought to improve on traditional ex post regulation by adding an ex ante component.[13] IRP began with the best of intentions—to do utility regulation "right," before the fact. Some regulators decided to use a forward-looking regulatory planning process in an attempt to acquire the least costly resources. At the same time, there was a redoubled emphasis on ex post scrutiny of the prudence of generation construction programs before new plants were allowed into the rate base.

[13] Paul Joskow points out that PURPA was "accompanied by the creation of public 'integrated resource planning' (IRP) or 'least cost planning' (LCP) processes to determine 'appropriate' electric utility investment and contracting strategies which were eventually implemented with competitive bidding programs .... The rationale for and economic consequences of these programs were controversial." Joskow, supra note 9.

By the late 1980s, many utilities that needed new generation supply were required to procure this supply through competitive bid processes and IRPs. By 1990, 27 states had mandated or allowed the use of utility competitive bidding processes for generation resource procurement.[14] Utility participation in these bidding processes depended on state policy. In some cases, they were required to bid through an affiliate, submitting either a fixed-price bid or a proposal to build a rate-base generating facility, where the costs were not fixed. In either case, they would need to justify the selection of the winning bid to the regulator, and they were competing against non-utility providers.

Under traditional regulation, whether generation was built by the utility or by a new entrant, long-term commitments at ratepayer expense were provided to support the construction of long-term generating assets. If built by the utility, the assumption was that the asset would stay in the utility rate base until it was no longer used and useful, which could be 30-50 years. If built by an independent power producer under PURPA, with pricing based on avoided cost (the cost that the utility avoided by building the generation resource itself), the utility was frequently required to sign a long-term contract—sometimes as long as 15 to 30 years—to support the resource. Moreover, counter-party risk was not always adequately recognized, so the decisions that regulators made as part of the IRP process had major ramifications for utilities, new entrants, and electricity users over very long periods of time.

In addition to nuclear cost overruns, PURPA contracts were also burdening customers. As an example, Regulatory Research Associates notes that "[o]n March 10, 1997, NMK and 19 IPPs announced that a Master Restructuring Agreement was reached 'in principle' to restructure or terminate 44 purchased power contracts" and that "under the MRA, NMK would restructure or terminate the 44 power contracts in exchange for approximately $3.6 billion in cash and/or debt securities and 46 million common shares, representing about 25% of NMK's outstanding common shares."[15]

The experiences of the past are especially relevant today. Plant construction costs have escalated sharply as more utilities are adding generation, making it more important than ever that existing resources be used efficiently, and that demand response and energy efficiency programs be pursued when it is economical to do so. The expected cost of building a new nuclear plant, for example, is escalating as a result of "massive inflation in copper and nickel and stainless steel and concrete."[16] Part of the reason for the 25%-30% increase in the estimated cost of a coal-fired plant is the "huge price increases for the raw materials that plants are made from, including copper and nickel," as well as the cost of finishing those commodities into components.[17] Electricity prices are increasing and, just as in a competitive market, regulation does not shield customers from rising input costs. Though costs may be deferred for a period of time due to the regulatory process, they will be recovered so long as they were prudently incurred.

V. COMPETITION HAS CLEAR ADVANTAGES OVER TRADITIONAL REGULATION AND HAS ALREADY BEGUN TO PROVIDE EFFICIENCY AND ENVIRONMENTAL BENEFITS

Competitive electricity markets allow consumers to choose among providers and service options. This combination of open entry for suppliers and choice for customers provides the benefits of competitive markets (e.g., efficient resource allocation, accurate price signals, and incentives for innovation) and limits competitors' ability to exercise market power. Customers are protected from open-ended commitments to pay above-market costs that would not be passed through in a competitive market. This does not mean that entry into markets will be costless or easy, but rather that all actual competitors, incumbents and new entrants alike, will have made (and potential competitors could make) the investments and commitments necessary for them to compete in the market. Under this system, customers are free to manage long-term risk, which, for example, could include entering into long-term contracts with electricity suppliers.

Under traditional regulation, vertically integrated utilities build new generating plants in order to serve customer demand. Through the regulatory least-cost planning process, utilities are given permission to pursue resource procurement strategies, which effectively commit the regulator to pass the resulting costs through to customers so long as the utility has acted prudently in incurring those costs. This type of utility regulation includes both: (1) an ex ante component, requiring the utility to use least-cost integrated resource planning, and to get permission from the regulator before it commits to build or purchase new generating resources; and (2) an ex post component, requiring the utility to ask for a rate increase that puts the new plant into the rate base, and allows it the opportunity to earn its opportunity cost of capital on that rate base. Given the utility's obligation to serve, there is a corresponding regulatory obligation to pass through prudently incurred costs to customers, regardless of what those costs would have been in a competitive market.

Table 1 includes a listing of significant differences between firms that operate in competitive and traditionally regulated models that policy makers should consider when deciding how to move forward.

Table 1: Competitive Versus Traditionally Regulated Markets

	Competition	Traditional Regulation
Funding	Company funds investments with the expectation that it will be able to charge customers prices that justify those costs.	Ratepayers fund prudently incurred investments in rate base with a virtual certainty of recovering the costs.
Price Determination	Prices set in a market by supply and demand with open-ended possibilities for pricing structures, which means choice for consumers.	Prices set based on cost with limited menu of regulated tariffs.
Market Concentration	Multiple firms compete with one another, with potential competitors providing competitive pressure as well.	Generally one firm, once with a franchise.
What Is Built	Companies, in response to customer demand, will be more likely to invest in less traditional and more energy-efficient forms of generation, including renewables.	Regulators approve what utilities build. This may or may not be the lowest cost investment, and may or may not be technologically innovative.
Capital Structure	Less use of leverage perhaps, reflecting greater investment risk, but more potential for innovative financing arrangements.	Traditional utility regulation accommodates the use of more debt, but limits innovation.
Who Bears Risk of Bad Investments?	Investors.	Consumers.
Market Activity	The competitive environment is dynamic and subject to entry and exit. This creates a powerful incentive for firms to increase operating efficiency.	Static. Subject to bureaucratic process.
Cost Allocation	Value branding. Independent power companies have a greater opportunity to market different services to different customers.	Cost averaging. Through the regulatory process, costs incurred are averaged out when determining rates, and the ratepayers that incur specific costs may not necessarily pay for them.
Keys To Success	Ability to compete on price, terms, and non-price attributes such as billing arrangements and product innovation (such as green power).	Prudence and accountability in decision making; competence working with regulatory and political policy. Ability to overcome market failures.
Vertical Integration	Greater vertical separation of regulated and competitive activities.	Typically vertically integrated, subject to an internal system of command.
Ownership And Investment	Risk and return expectations will be relatively higher. This will affect what types of entities hold ownership stakes.	Risk and return expectations will be relatively lower. This will affect what types of entities hold ownership stakes.
Marketing	Increased need for marketing, and development of innovative products. Focused on meeting individual customer needs through innovation.	Reduced need for marketing and business development. Largely focused on providing one-size-fits-all solutions for customers.
Price Stability	If price stability is desired by customers, competitive retailers will make such a product available.	The regulatory process eventually allows recovery of all prudent costs. Rates can be slow to respond to changing conditions due to regulatory lag.
Price Signals	Prices tend to reflect marginal costs, the most accurate representation of opportunity cost.	Retail prices can become distorted from marginal costs through the ratemaking process.

This table demonstrates the disparate characteristics of competitive and traditionally regulated markets. The fundamentals of a competitive market, such as having more than one supplier, feasible entry and exit, and enhanced price transparency, create these differences. These factors allow competition to spur reductions in operating expenses and increases in innovation.

Traditional regulation, although based on prudently incurred costs, can yield inefficient results, primarily due to the requirement that utility ratepayers bear the majority of risks, rather than investors.

A. Competition Shifts the Risk to Investors

One of the benefits of restructured markets is that the investment risk for generation plants is shifting from consumers to investors. For instance, after restructuring, there was a huge initial burst of merchant construction in most areas of the country which, despite leading to excess capacity, did not cost customers a dime. This was an especially pertinent topic at the time of restructuring, as there were various notable examples of major cost over-runs in plant construction, especially with nuclear facilities.

Now, with many parts of the country expressing concerns about the adequacy of generation supply, certain states are pursuing policies aimed at providing incentives to build new generation. In competitive markets, wholesale prices provide the incentives to build new infrastructure, with customers free from the obligation to fund those investments. Many traditionally regulated states have recently passed laws providing for prior review of plant—cost recovery guarantees not available to merchant generators—and construction work in progress (CWIP) in rate base.[18] For example:

- Florida: In June 2006, legislation that affects several aspects of the state's energy policy was enacted. Senate Bill (S.B.) 888 exempts nuclear power plants from the requirement of a competitive bid and provides for recovery of pre-construction costs and a cash return on CWIP during the construction period of a nuclear power plant. A similar bill, House Bill (H.B.) 549, was enacted on June 12, 2007. This legislation authorizes deferred accounting for the pre-construction costs of integrated gasification combined-cycle (IGCC) plants, and these costs are to accrue a carrying charge equal to the utility's AFUDC rate. All prudently incurred pre-construction costs are recoverable through the utility's capacity cost recovery clause, as is a current return on CWIP.

- North Carolina: Senate Bill (S.B.) 3, which was enacted on August 20, 2007, facilitates the NCUC's ability to allow a cash return on CWIP by removing statutory language that had permitted utilities to earn a cash return on CWIP only "to the extent [...] such inclusion is in the public interest and necessary to the financial stability of the utility in question." As an example, the NCUC recently approved the recovery of pre-construction development costs for the proposed Duke Energy Lee Nuclear Station, stating that "to the extent the Commission finds, in a future general rate case proceeding, the specific activities involved in, and the costs of pursuing such Development Work to be prudent and reasonable (whether or not the Lee Nuclear Station is constructed), Duke may recover" the Development Work costs in rates.[19] These development costs are expected to total $125 million.

[18] CWIP in rate base, which provides cash before a plant operates, does not occur in competitive markets. For regulated utilities, there have been instances where commissions have allowed CWIP to be recovered when a regulated utility needs cash flow assistance or when Allowance for Funds Used During Construction (AFUDC) balances, which are "paper" earnings not "cash" earnings, grow large and become burdensome financially. Normally, however, CWIP in rate base is not allowed as the plant is not yet benefiting customers, but in order to induce utilities to build more states are formalizing CWIP allowances.

- Nevada: In 2004, the PUC adopted revised integrated resource planning rules that permit the Commission to approve an incentive mechanism for generation facilities designated as "critical." Under the rules, the PUC has the option to designate a project as critical if it protects reliability, promotes supply diversity, or utilizes renewable resources. For such a project, the utility may be awarded a financial incentive including: (1) an enhanced ROE on the designated critical facility over the life of the facility; (2) a cash return on CWIP associated with the facility; or (3) the deferral of costs incurred to construct the facility.

- Wisconsin: Through an ROE adder, the PSC generally allows a current return on 50 percent of a utility's electric and gas CWIP, except for major generation projects where the PSC generally allows a current return on 100 percent of the CWIP associated with that project.[20]

The trend is clear: the US needs to build new generating capacity, greatly increase energy efficiency, or initiate a combination of both in order to meet demand for electricity and diversify the supply mix away from old technology. Cost-of-service regulation could accomplish this, but going down that path will necessitate iron-clad cost recovery assurances for increasingly expensive generation assets.[21] Regulated entities may be volunteering to build new generation, but not without cost recovery guarantees and payments before plants are in service. While the prior building cycle proved that recovery assurances need to be provided to investors, the amount of price risk faced by consumers does not seem to have sunk in. Customers may not yet be aware of the long-term commitments that are being made on their behalf by utilities and their regulators.[22]

B. Economic Efficiency Gains

Reliance on competitive markets is based on the principle that firms with the most efficient production and the most value for consumers should and will prevail. Efficient competition leads to production at the lowest achievable costs in the long-term, which is a socially desirable outcome that results in an efficient use of society's resources. Currently, with [21] From May 2005 to October 2006, Duke Energy's estimate of construction costs for two new coal-fired plants at its Cliffside site went from $2 billion to $3 billion. The North Carolina Utility Commission ultimately approved a single plant for $1.8 billion, an 80 percent increase from the initial estimate—and that number is still just an estimate. Similarly, Entergy's cost to re-power its Little Gypsy site was estimated in April, 2007, to cost $1 billion; by July, 2007 this figure had increased by over 50 percent to $1.55 billion.

[22] We are not saying that such guarantees and cash flow allowances are unjustified or unnecessary. To the contrary they may be required in regulated situations. The point is that this is a major difference between the regulated and competitive solutions.

transition to competition periods beginning to end, it is too early to determine the ultimate success or failure of electricity competition—but it is possible to see some encouraging trends.

With competition, generation operators' incentives changed dramatically, leading to changes in microeconomic behaviour. Though they may not be immediately evident in prices, benefits are clear in non-price advantages such as greater service variety and the presence of a functioning market for capacity (which promotes efficient investment decisions).

Research papers that focus on measures of efficiency other than price, such as generator efficiency or operating cost reductions, offer a more complete indication of the impacts of competition in the current environment. Research has found that:

- Operating costs of generating plants in states that chose to restructure have been reduced relative to costs of generating plants in states that decided against implementing competition.[23] Plant operators affected by competition reduced labor and non-fuel expenses by about 3%-5% relative to other IOUs and 6%-12% relative to cooperatives or government-owned generation.[24] Similarly, divested generating plants and those subject to incentive regulation mechanisms improved their fuel efficiencies compared to their peers without high-powered incentives.[25]

- One of the benefits introduced by competition in generation was to improve the performance of previously existing generating assets in the face of competition. Availability, non-fuel operating costs, and heat rates improved significantly. Availability of generating capacity has increased over time in both New England and New York. Equivalent availability factors increased significantly in PJM from 1994 to 1998 and have been roughly constant since then with some year-to-year variability.[26] Relatively small efficiency gains—such as a two percent improvement in heat rates—can provide hundreds of millions of dollars of annual fuel savings.

Markets reward innovation—the search for and discovery, development, adoption, and commercialization of new products, services, organizational structures, processes, and procedures—that meets market demand. The role of competitors in the marketplace is to compete on the basis of price and value. While competing on the basis of price is obviously very important, successful competitors can also innovate and offer the customer something better than that offered by standard service. Some value-added services may be related to price, such as information services that improve a customer's ability to manage its energy usage. Value could also be provided in the form of green power, risk management (fixed prices for seasons or a year), bundling of services, or could take a form that is not currently anticipated.

C. Energy Efficiency and Renewables

Energy efficiency, distributed energy resources (DER) programs, and renewables (e.g., wind) all benefit from transparent markets and the competitive incentives that restructured markets provide. In a competitive situation (with an RTO or ISO), it is more likely that price signals for generation services (energy, capacity, and ancillary services) will be market based, and it is also more likely that service providers or retailers will be involved.

1. Market Transparency and Demand Response

Innovative RTO/ISO programs are providing incentives for a wide variety of needed generation and transmission-related resources. The ISO-RTO Council, made up of ISOs and RTOs serving two-thirds of the US market and half of the Canadian market, recently issued three reports documenting the success they have had in terms of managing demand response programs and encouraging renewable investment.[27] The reports note various ways in which RTOs can facilitate renewable development including clear, expeditious, and nondiscriminatory interconnection processes and market-based ancillary services.

Demand response programs that respond to real-time prices can also serve to moderate spot price spikes. Demand response programs work best in transparent markets, which eliminate the need to use an administered-type price, such as avoided cost pricing, which may give very misleading price signals. With a transparent market providing price signals, it becomes possible to fairly evaluate energy efficiency, demand response programs, and renewable resources. Furthermore, ISOs, by definition, have no stake in market outcomes. Because they own no generation, they are neutral with respect to the ownership and types of generating units that operate within their system. The same is not always true for utilities.

2. Availability of Information and Price Signals

It is imperative for potential investors in renewable sources of energy to have access to detailed pricing information so that they can judge the feasibility of their projects. In regard to this, and in support of competition, the ISO/RTO Council reported: "ISO and RTO wholesale markets provide price transparency to inform all market participants, including renewable generation owners, about the price and the value of their power."[28] In addition, the report notes: "[i]n wholesale electricity markets, developers have access to both historical data and forward price curves to estimate the future value of their generation."[29] This lies in stark contrast to projects not in ISO/RTO regions, where it is likely that the developer will negotiate price bilaterally with the utility, and will not have access to public price information.

The availability of time-based market prices and demand response capability can change the energy cost structure faced by certain utility customers during peak periods, resulting in increased consumer price responsiveness (i.e., elasticity). Thus, customers participating in demand response programs benefit from transparent market prices. Through the market process of numerous buyers and sellers making individual decisions, competitive markets allow consumer demands to be sorted out and aggregated by producers at the lowest possible cost. The price information provided by the market gives buyers and sellers the information they need to make their individual production and purchasing decisions. The Markets Committee of the ISO/RTO Council issued a positive review of ISO/RTO management of the demand response programs in the US and Canada, stating that:

> The markets these ISOs and RTOs administer, which represent approximately two-thirds of electricity demand across the United States and just over 40 percent in Canada, are playing an important and growing role in enabling demand response to reach its full potential. They provide visible price signals that will help consumers make rational decisions about expenditures on electricity in the same way they use market prices for deciding how to purchase other goods and services.[30]

Given the price signals provided by a transparent real-time spot market, demand response programs can be more effective in restructured jurisdictions. Efficiency investments are also spurred when customers see true market prices and can make decisions to use energy more efficiently based on those prices.

States with competitive markets can avoid relying heavily on administratively set credits that may not always adjust readily to reflect changes in costs. Administratively set credits have an important defect: they are static in nature, while wholesale power markets are inherently dynamic over time. In dynamic power markets, administratively set credits rapidly become stale and can trigger incorrect and outdated responses. One lesson from the implementation of PURPA in the 1980s is that, in the absence of market prices, setting avoided cost rates is a very difficult task to complete correctly. When wholesale market price information is readily available, these challenges are reduced.

3. Renewable Generation Growth

The records on prices that are maintained by ISOs and RTOs can serve as valuable information to companies deciding whether or not to invest in renewable generation assets. But what has actually happened in recent times, in terms of the growth in generation from renewable resources in restructured vs. traditionally regulated states?

Table 2: Growth of Renewable Generation in Restructured and Traditional States 2000-2005

	Growth Rate
Restructured States	11.3%
Traditional States	0.6%

Source: EIA.

Total renewable generation increased in both markets during the period of time between 2000 and 2005. However, renewable net generation in restructured states increased by approximately 11.3 percent, while there has been an increase of less than one percent in traditionally regulated states. This is not to say that restructuring was completely responsible for the relatively larger increase in renewable net generation in restructured states. To prove this, a multitude of other variables would have to be considered, including overall trends in electricity demand, and separate state policies regarding renewables. These statistics are important, however, given the expectation that independent power providers compete based on short term marginal cost, and that renewables would therefore not be viable competitors. In addition, utilities in restructured markets are not mandated to purchase power from PURPA qualifying facilities.[31] At the very least, the growth in renewable net generation in restructured states shows that the transparent market prices, customer choice, and renewable standards that are available in restructured markets help to provide a favorable environment for renewables.

There have been many recent examples of renewables gaining a stronger foothold in restructured markets. For instance, in Maine, a proposed mountain ridge wind farm has already sold its first 10 years of renewable energy.[32] This project is expected to power 44,000 households and reduce daily air emissions in the region by 430 tons a day. Harley Lee, President of Endless Energy in Yarmouth, issued a statement that highlighted Constellation's role as a power marketer, noting that "[o]ur region has lagged behind other parts of the country in the use of wind energy. A major reason has been the lack of a power marketer willing to sign long-term contracts."[33]

[31] As part of the Energy Policy Act of 2005, Congress substantially narrowed the applicability and scope of QF must-buy requirements. Thus, utilities in much of the US will be relieved from the Section 210 requirements applicable to new QF facilities, with a showing that a new QF has nondiscriminatory access to competitive wholesale markets that meet the applicable standard. For utilities that cannot show that the new QF has access to competitive wholesale markets that meet the Section 1253 standard, the PURPA "must buy" requirements will continue.

Other positive examples of renewable energy in restructured states include an agreement between Constellation and Horizon Wind Energy for an 18-year renewable energy power purchase agreement,[34] a contract between Epuron LLC (Conergy) and Exelon Generation for a 20-year power purchase agreement for the energy produced at a proposed 3 megawatt (MW) solar energy power station in Morrisville, Pennsylvania,[35] and the success of PECO Wind in Pennsylvania.

VI. CONCLUSION

State policy makers face a difficult situation. Restructuring transition periods have ended or are ending as prices are rising across the country. Prices have generally been rising over the past several years, regardless of market structure, primarily because of rising input fuel prices. At the same time, investment needs are growing and environmentally beneficial renewables are being mandated by legislation. Carbon emissions, which are not limited at all now, could be limited moving forward, which will further increase prices. Upward pressure on natural gas and oil prices show no signs of relenting. Even generation equipment costs are rising as the metals needed for their manufacture increase in price, and as demand drives up engineering and construction labor costs. Price increases are unpopular, and in the search for a villain, it is easy to blame competition. The facts, however, do not support the hypothesis that competition is the cause of price increases. The rise in oil and gas prices, equipment costs, impending carbon control costs, and the mandate to replace older and dirtier generation with alternative units are the primary factors behind these price increases. Both competitive and traditionally regulated states are seeing the impact of input price increases.

It is true that restructuring was misunderstood and, in many cases, unrealistic expectations may have been set. The implication that restructuring would always lead to lower prices was not accompanied by the obvious "all else being equal" or "over the long term" provisions. Abstracting from oil and gas prices, renewable mandates, equipment cost increases, and carbon reduction costs, it is likely that prices in restructured states would have declined as transition periods ended. But that did not happen, and industry structure cannot compensate for sharp increases in input prices.

In theory and in practice, restructured markets are superior in providing production efficiency incentives, in encouraging efficient demand side activity, and in encouraging investment in alternative forms of generation. We also know that in competitive markets customers bear much less risk. These factors all point to a policy that favors competition over cost-of-service regulation. Electricity generation is a capital intensive industry with long lead times, and the benefits of competition cannot be expected to be seen overnight.

We also know that cost-of-service regulation performed poorly during the last major generation building cycle. However, these lessons, while very relevant, may not stand out to current policy makers who were not involved in the industry in the 1970s and 1980s. Competition, with all its imperfections and transitional problems, is too often compared to an idealized version of regulation that may exist in theory but not in practice.

Before rushing to judgment on restructuring and undoing competitive markets, policy makers should consider the following facts:

- Competition and cost-of-service regulation are fundamentally different and competition will shift risk from customers to investors.

- The risks borne by customers and the outcomes they were exposed to under the last significant non-gas capacity expansion are what led states to restructure. In many states, cost-of-service regulation failed in the 1980s.

- States continuing in the cost-of-service regulated model are providing iron-clad cost recovery guarantees for new generation investment and prudence pre-approval.

- The market prices seen in competitive markets will encourage efficient penetration of energy efficiency (conservation) and facilitate demand response, lowering investment needs, and providing environmental benefits.

- Competitive markets have led the way in renewable energy development.

- Recent price increases are largely driven by input price increases, and have occurred in both competitive and traditionally regulated states.

While restructuring may not have been perfectly implemented and there will always be room for improvement, the facts above suggest that regulatory efforts would be better directed at refining and improving the competition model rather than returning to the cost-of-service regulated model.

REPORT NUMBER 10.189

REGULATION OF WHOLESALE TRANSACTIONS BY INDEPENDENT POWER PRODUCERS

PREPARED FOR SENATOR LESIL MCGUIRE

BY TIM SPENGLER, LEGISLATIVE ANALYST

You asked if other states regulate wholesale electric power transactions by independent power producers (IPPs) in the same way as does Alaska.[1] Specifically, you wanted to know if other states regulate power producers who sell to one or more customers and generate more than $50,000 in income from the sale of electricity, as provided in Alaska law.[2] Briefly, we could identify no states that regulate independent power producers in this way.

For our review, we queried all state utility commissions, conducted a search of the Westlaw database of state statutes, and contacted national experts on the topic. None of the 24 states that responded to our query report having any regulatory language similar to that in Alaska.[3] A frequent response that we received from states was that IPPs are subject to Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) regulations but not to state regulation.[4] A number of experts we contacted point out that utilities that purchase electricity from IPPs are subject to their respective state's public utilities commission regulations. We also communicated with lead staff from the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC), the Independent Power Producers Coalition of the West (IPPC), the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL),

[1] Independent power producers are entities that generate electric power for sale to utilities and end users. The producers are unaffiliated with the franchised utility in the area in which the IPP is selling power

[2] The Regulatory Commission of Alaska has statutory authority (under AS 42.05.141) to regulate every "public utility." Public utility is defined under AS 42.05.990(4) as an entity (including an individual) that furnishes electrical service to the "public" for compensation. AS 42.05.990(2)(b) defines "public" or "general public"— as "one or more customers that purchase electrical service for use within an area that is certificated to and presently or formerly served by an electric utility if the total annual compensation that the electrical utility receives for sales of electricity exceeds $50,000."

[3] Officials in the following 24 states responded to our query: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Virginia, and Washington.

[4] We spoke with FERC energy industry analyst, Saeed Farrokhpay, (916) 294-0322, who confirmed that IPPs' power transactions fall under FERC jurisdiction pertaining to rate regulation. The FERC is a federal agency, under the Department of Energy, with jurisdiction over interstate natural gas transportation and sale for resale rates, wholesale electric rates, hydroelectric licensing, oil pipeline rates, and gas pipeline certification (http://www.ferc.gov).

and the Colorado Independent Energy Association.[5] None of the experts from these entities with whom we spoke were aware of regulations in other states similar to those in Alaska. A common thread of the feedback we received was that regulating wholesale transactions of independent power producers would be a duplicative procedure as the utilities to which IPPs sell their electricity are already regulated by states. Such regulations would likely act as a disincentive for IPPs—including alternative or smaller energy producers—effectively discouraging such entities from engaging in business.

Below we highlight feedback we received from eight states that you may find to be of interest.

- Arkansas: According to Dave Stanton (501-682-1792), chief administrative law judge and chief of commissioners' staff, Arkansas Public Service Commission (APSC), the APSC only regulates "public utilities" and, therefore, has no regulatory authority over independent power producers. IPPs located in Arkansas are not subject to rate regulation but are subject to state and federal environmental regulations administered by the federal EPA and the Arkansas Department of Environmental Quality.

- Colorado: Colorado Public Utilities Commission does not regulate Independent Power Producers, according to Doug Dean (303-894-2007), director of the commission. IPPs are not allowed to provide retail electric services; they only provide electricity at the wholesale level. Only the investor-owned electric utilities, cooperative electric associations, and municipal utilities are permitted to provide retail electric service in Colorado. These entities are regulated by the state.

- Idaho: The state does not regulate independent power producers, regardless of size, according to Gene Fadness (208-334-0339), executive director, Idaho Public Utilities Commission (IPUC). The IPPs come under IPUC purview only when they contract with regulated utilities.

- Maine: Evelyn deFrees (207-287-6141), public information officer with Maine's Public Utilities Commission, relates that the state does not regulate power suppliers or producers, only transmission and distribution companies. The commission does license and oversee companies that sell at the retail level; at the wholesale level, however, the sale of electricity is not state regulated but is subject to FERC jurisdiction.

- Minnesota: The Minnesota Public Utilities Commission only has ratemaking authority over entities defined as public utilities, according to Janet Gonzales (651-201-2231), energy unit manager. Public utilities are (in part) defined in [5] We contacted the following individuals for this report: Christopher Mele, legislative director—energy, National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, (202) 898-2206. NARUC is an association representing state public service commissioners who regulate utility services, such as electricity, gas, telecommunications, water, and transportation, throughout the country (http://www.naruc.org); Robert Kahn, executive director, Northwest and Intermountain Power Producers Coalition (NIPPC), (206) 624-1235. NIPPC's website asserts that the organization will pursue informal and formal (i.e., laws, policies, rules, and regulations) avenues and forums to encourage a competitive electric power supply marketplace in the Pacific Northwest and Intermountain West (http://www.nippc.org); Keith Hay, energy program director, National Conference of State Legislatures, (303) 364-7700 (http://www.ncsl.org); Nicholas Muller executive director, Colorado Independent Energy Association, (303) 297-1970. Minnesota statue (§216B.02, subd. 4) in the following way: "No person shall be deemed to be a public utility if it produces or furnishes service to less than 25 persons." Minnesota does not regulate electric power providers based on revenues from electricity sales.

- New Jersey: Doyal Siddell (973-468-8515), public information officer, New Jersey Board of Public Utilities relates that power from New Jersey's independent power producers is dispatched to the state's regional transmission organization, PJM, whose rates are subject to FERC jurisdiction; the state has no jurisdiction.

- Oregon: Oregon does not regulate wholesale power transactions between independent power producers, according to Maury Galbraith (503-378-8718), electric rates and planning, Public Utilities Commission. Mr. Galbraith informs us that FERC has regulatory jurisdiction over this type of transaction across the country.

- South Dakota: John Smith (605-773-3201), general counsel, South Dakota Public Utilities Commission, informs us that their commission does not engage in utility regulation of independent power producers unless the IPPs sell to "ultimate consumers"—or, in other words, retail consumers.

Re:: Senate Bill 277

Dear Senator McGuire:

The Alaska Power Association (APA) and its members have not yet had the opportunity to fully explore all of the potential impacts of the March 2, 2010, committee substitute for Senate Bill 277. However, based on its preliminary review, APA is concerned about the potential ramifications of this bill. At this point, APA cannot support SB 277 because of those concerns, but welcomes any opportunity to discuss those concerns with you or your staff. APA's concerns are summarized below:

General Concerns Regarding Statutory Exemption:

1. The exemption from RCA certification and regulation provided for in the bill may be unnecessary for the following reasons: First, under federal law, most renewable energy resource electric generation facilities that propose to sell power only to another electric utility can already become exempt from state regulation by becoming a "qualifying facility" ("QF"). See 18 C.F.R. § 292.602(c); 18 C.F.R. § 292.601(a), (b). Such facilities include all QFs that are a cogeneration facility, a geothermal or biomass small power production facility, or any other small power production facility (including hydroelectric, solar, and wind-power facilities) having a capacity of 30 megawatts (MW) or less. In general, all of the types of renewable energy resources facilities referenced in the bill would be eligible to become a QF. Such a facility can become a QF through a simple self-certification with FERC.

Second, regardless of whether a renewable energy resource facility is exempt as a QF, the facility can also become exempt from RCA certification and regulation through a petition to the Regulatory Commission of Alaska (RCA) that demonstrates that the exemption is "in the public interest." See AS 42.05.711(d). In 2009, two small hydroelectric facilities obtained public interest exemptions from the RCA based on the facility's generation source and small size, the fact that the facility would sell power only to an electric utility, and the cost and burden of certification and regulation. See RCA Order Nos. U-08-102(2) and U-08-132(2) (attached).

2. The proposed statutory exemption would impair the RCA's ability to ensure that the facility's rates, terms, and conditions of service are just, reasonable, and non-discriminatory, particularly when the facility sells power to multiple electric utilities. Although the RCA would have to approve the purchasing utility's entering into a power purchase agreement with the facility, that so-called "indirect regulation" of the exempt facility would not give the RCA full access to the facility's cost and financial information.

3. The proposed statutory exemption would divest the RCA of jurisdiction to adjudicate complaints by the purchasing electric utility against the facility for failing to provide adequate, non-discriminatory service. In addition, if the facility were regulated and a dispute arose regarding a rate issue or service issue that the facility and the purchasing electric utility did not clearly contemplate in their long-term power purchase agreement, the RCA would have jurisdiction to resolve that dispute. Without RCA jurisdiction, the purchasing electric utility would be limited to filing a lawsuit in court to address those types of issues, which involves significantly more cost and delay (and less adjudicator expertise over the subject matter) than a complaint filed with the RCA.

4. RCA certification of a renewable resources facility imposes an "obligation to serve," which ensures that the facility cannot unreasonably refuse to provide service to a particular customer. The broad exemption proposed under the bill would preclude the RCA from enforcing such an obligation, thus allowing the facility to discriminate among potential power purchasers.

5. If a renewable resources facility is certificated and regulated by the RCA and the facility seeks bankruptcy protection, the RCA generally would have standing in the bankruptcy proceeding to help ensure that the public interest is protected. That measure of protection would not exist if the facility is categorically exempt from RCA jurisdiction by statute. That issue can be significant because a renewable energy resources facility may be (and likely will be) owned by a subsidiary corporation or subsidiary limited liability company in such a way that the effective, ultimate "owner" of the facility is shielded from all liability for the debts and obligations of the facility. That is one of the reasons that the RCA carefully considers whether the legal owner of a proposed public utility is, in fact, "fit, willing, and able" to provide public utility service when the RCA decides whether to certificate the utility, or when the RCA decides whether to grant a public interest exemption from regulation. Under the broad exemption provided for in the bill, the RCA would lack jurisdiction to review such matters, particularly after the purchasing electric utility obtains RCA approval of the power purchase agreement.

6. The proposed statutory exemption would preclude affected electric utilities from having input regarding whether the exemption of a particular facility is justified. The existing RCA public interest exemption process allows utility input and public input and allows the RCA to determine on a case-by-case basis whether the facts and circumstances justify exemption for a particular facility. Related to that, until a power purchase agreement and the associated rates, terms, and conditions of service are negotiated regarding a particular facility, the utilities that are intended to purchase power from the facility may not have enough information to know whether an exemption from RCA certification and regulation is justified. The broad statutory exemption provided for in the bill would preclude affected electric utilities from making that determination when the facts and circumstances associated with a particular facility are known.

7. There has not been adequate time for APA and its members to fully explore all of the unintended consequences of the type of broad, absolute exemption provided for in the bill.

More Specific Concerns Regarding SB 277:

1. The bill's 65 MW size restriction appears to be too high. The potential justification for exemption from RCA certification and regulation is very different if the exemption applies to a small 500 kilowatt (kW) renewable resources facility as opposed to a large 65 MW facility.

2. The bill would exempt a facility that sells its output to any type of regulated public utility, not just to a regulated electric public utility. That would allow the exempt facility to compete against the local electric utility for firm electric sales to non-electric utilities that are within the local electric utility's certificated service area.

3. The bill would exempt a facility that sells its output to multiple regulated electric utilities. Sales to multiple electric utilities raise concerns about preventing the facility from discriminating among customers with respect to rates, terms, or conditions of service.

4. The bill would exempt a facility even if it is closely affiliated with a regulated electric utility to which it sells power. That raises additional concerns about the potential for discriminatory preferences among the electric utilities that purchase power from the facility.

5. The bill would exempt cogeneration facilities because "renewable energy resources" under AS 42.45.045(l) include "wasteheat recovery." Electric utilities have had contentious experiences with developers attempting to force the utility into uneconomic power purchases from proposed cogeneration plants.

Again, APA and its members have had only a limited amount of time to attempt to review the potential ramifications and unintended consequences of SB 277. APA and its members will continue their review of the bill and may have other concerns as they review it in greater detail. In the meantime, APA stands ready to discuss its concerns with you or your staff whenever is convenient for you. We suggest you initiate a meeting with all interested parties as soon as possible so that we can have a discussion of all the issues.

Sincerely,

Marilyn Leland

Senator John Coghill

Senate Judiciary Committee

Sponsor Statement: Senate Bill 284 Campaign Expenditures

In the wake of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling, Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, the Senate Judiciary Committee has worked to determine the changes to Alaska's elections laws that will be needed. Corporations and labor unions have been banned from participating in Alaska's elections prior to this ruling. This means many of Alaska's laws regarding disclosure and disclaimers simply do not apply to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures to support or oppose specific candidates in elections.

Testimony from Legislative Legal Services attorneys and from the Alaska Department of Law indicated that changes would be needed to Alaska's campaign laws, and this bill was subsequently drafted to address the concerns raised by the attorneys and by committee members.

Senate Bill 284 amends state election laws to clarify that corporations and labor unions are covered by all applicable reporting requirements. It expands communication identification requirements to ensure accurate reporting of top contributors, to require the approval of the content by the principal officer of the corporation or union, and to require statements in each communication that its content has not been authorized or approved by the candidate. It also speeds reporting requirements for communications expenditures in the last nine days of the election so that expenditures over $250 must be reported within 24 hours.

Recent opinion surveys show broad disapproval by Americans across party lines for the decision reached by the U.S. Supreme Court. In order to retain Alaskans' trust in our system it is vital that legislation be passed this year to ensure that corporations and labor unions spending money to influence elections are at least required to disclose it in a timely fashion. I urge you to support Senate Bill 284.

MEMORANDUM February 22, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of Senate Bill No. 284
(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\A)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1. Amends language relating to the applicability of AS 15.13 (state election campaigns) to clarify that the chapter applies to all contributions, expenditures, and communications made for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election covered by the chapter.

Section 2. Amends language relating to the duties of the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) to clarify that the commission will assist all persons to comply with the requirements of AS 15.13.

Section 3. Amends AS 15.13.040(d) to clarify that every person making an expenditure must report to the commission unless the person is exempted from reporting by another provision of the chapter.

Section 4. Adds new requirements to the expenditure report required under AS 15.13.040(d) and specifies that the report must be filed in accordance with AS 15.13.110(g).

Section 5. Amends language in AS 15.13.040(h) to clarify that the reporting requirements of AS 15.13.040(d) do not apply to an expenditure made by certain individuals acting independently of any other person.

Section 6. Amends AS 15.13.040(p) to clarify that a person who is required to disclose contributions received by that person in an expenditure report under AS 15.13.040(d) must report the true source of the contributions as the "contributor."

Section 7. Amends AS 15.13.067 to allow any person who has registered under AS 15.13.050 to make an expenditure in a state election for public office.

Section 8. Provides that no person, other an individual exempt from reporting under AS 15.13.040(h), may make an expenditure unless the source of the expenditure has been disclosed.

Section 9. Amends language in AS 15.13.084 to clarify that a person may not make an expenditure anonymously unless it is made (1) for certain communications, (2) in connection with a ballot proposition as that term is defined by AS 15.13.065(c), and (3) by an individual acting independently of any other person.

Section 10. Amends language in AS 15.13.086 to conform with changes made by sec. 7 of the bill.

Section 11. Expands the communication identification requirements of AS 15.13.090 to apply to communications made by all persons, and additionally requires a person other than a candidate, individual, or a political party to (1) identify the person's principal officer, (2) include a statement from that officer approving the communication, (3) provide the address of the person's principal place of business, (4) identify the person's five largest contributors, and (5) in an election for elective office, state that the communication is not authorized or approved by a candidate.

Section 12. Requires expenditure reports filed under AS 15.13.040(e) to be filed within 10 days of the expenditure being made, except for an expenditure that exceeds $250 and that is made within nine days of an election must be reported to APOC within 24 hours of the expenditure being made.

Section 13. Amends the language of AS 15.13. 111(a) to oblige all persons who are required to report under AS 15.13 to preserve certain records for a period of six years.

Section 14. Removes language from AS 15.13.135 that permitted only individuals, groups, or nongroup entities to make independent expenditures in support or in opposition to a candidate for public office. Adds language requiring all persons making certain independent expenditures to comply with AS 15.13.090.

Section 15. Repeals AS 15.13.140(a), a provision that provided that AS 15.13 should not be interpreted to prohibit a person from making independent expenditures in support or in opposition to a ballot proposition or question. As the chapter now reads, there is no ambiguity as to whether the chapter prohibits persons from making independent expenditures relating to a ballot proposition or question.

Section 16. Gives the Act an immediate effective date.

Introduction

This brochure has been developed to help clarify the rules relating to the following types of special notices:

- Disclaimer notices;
- Federal election purpose notification;
- Best efforts notifications; and
- IRS disclosure notices.

Each notice may be required (as appropriate) when persons finance communications related to federal elections or solicit funds for federal political committees. [1] A section-by-section explanation of these rules is provided within.

Please be advised that this brochure is not intended to provide an exhaustive discussion regarding this area of the election law. The citations refer to the Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA), as amended by the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA), Federal Election Commission Regulations (11 CFR) and Advisory Opinions (AOs). Disclaimer Notices

What is a Disclaimer Notice?

For the purpose of this brochure, a "disclaimer" notice is defined as a statement placed on a public communication that identifies the person(s) who paid for the communication and, where applicable, the person(s) who authorized the communication.

When is a Disclaimer Required?

Basic Rule

Political Committees

Political committees must include a disclaimer on (1) all "public communications" (defined below), (2) bulk electronic email (defined as electronic mail with more than 500 substantially similar communications) and (3) web sites available to the general public, regardless of whether the communication expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, or solicits funds in connection with a federal election (i.e., contributions for a federal candidate or federal political committee). [2]

Individuals and Other Persons

A disclaimer must appear on any "electioneering communication" (defined below) and on any public communication by any person that expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate or solicits funds in connection with a federal election.

Application

Specific examples of public communications that would require a disclaimer include:

- Public communications coordinated with a federal candidate (i.e., in-kind contributions or coordinated party expenditures) that are paid for by a political committee or that contain express advocacy or a solicitation;
- Independent expenditures;
- Electioneering communications;
- A communication that solicits funds for a federal candidate or a federal political committee or that contains express advocacy; and
- Political committees' web sites.

Definitions

Public Communications

As defined in FEC regulations, the term "public communication" includes:

- Broadcast, cable or satellite transmission;
- Newspaper;
- Magazine;
- Outdoor advertising facility (e.g., billboard);
- Mass mailing (defined as more than 500 pieces of mail matter of an identical or substantially similar nature within any 30-day period);
- Telephone banks (defined as more than 500 telephone calls of an identical or substantially similar nature within any 30-day period); or
- Any other general public political advertising. General public political advertising does not include Internet ads, except for communications placed for a fee on another person's web site

11 CFR 110.11(a).

Electioneering Communications

As defined in FEC regulations, an "electioneering communication" is a broadcast, cable or satellite communication that fulfills each of the following conditions:

- Refers to a clearly identified federal candidate;
- Is publicly distributed within 30 days before a primary election or within 60 days before a general election; and
- In the case of Congressional candidates only, is "targeted to the relevant electorate"(can be received by 50,000 or more persons in the district or state the candidate seeks to represent)

11 CFR 100.29. See also Federal Register notice 2005-29 [PDF].

Independent Expenditures

An independent expenditure is an expenditure for a communication that expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate and is not made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate, authorized committee or their agents, or a political party committee or its agents. 11 CFR 100.16.

Coordinated Party Expenditures

Coordinated party expenditures are expenditures made by national or state party committees on behalf of their nominees in connection with the general election. Such expenditures may be coordinated with the candidate, but are reported only by the party committee that makes the expenditure. These expenditures are subject to a special monetary limit. 11 CFR 110.11(d)(1).

Exempt Party Activities

State and local party committees may engage in certain candidate-support activities without making a contribution or expenditure provided specific rules are followed. These "exempt" party activities refer to the three types of communications listed below:

- Registration and get-out-the-vote drives on behalf of the Presidential ticket;
- Campaign materials distributed by volunteers on behalf of federal candidates; and
- Certain slate cards, sample ballots and palm cards listing at least 3 candidates for public office.

11 CFR 100.80, 100.87 and 100.89; 100.140, 100.147 and 100.149; and 110.11(e).

What must the Disclaimer Say?

The actual wording of the disclaimer depends on the type of communication, as explained below. In each example, it is presumed that the ad qualifies as a "public communication" in connection with a federal election.

Messages Authorized and Financed by a Candidate

On a public communication that is authorized and paid for by a candidate or his/her campaign committee, the disclaimer notice must identify who paid for the message. 11 CFR 110.11(b)(1).

Example: "Paid for by the Sheridan for Congress Committee."

Messages Authorized but Not Financed by a Candidate

On a public communication that is authorized by a candidate or his/her campaign committee, but is paid for by another person, the disclaimer notice must identify who paid for the communication and indicate that the candidate authorized the message. 11 CFR 110.11(b)(2).

Example: "Paid for by the XYZ State Party Committee and authorized by the Sheridan for Congress Committee." [3]

Messages Not Authorized by a Candidate

On a public communication that is not authorized by a candidate or his/her campaign committee, the disclaimer notice must identify who paid for the message, state that it was not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee and list the permanent street address, telephone number or World Wide Web address of the person who paid for the communication. 11 CFR 110.11 (b)(3).

Example: "Paid for by the QRS Committee (www.QRScommittee.org) and not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee."

Coordinated Party Expenditures

Pre-nomination Period

On a public communication that is made as a coordinated party expenditure before a nominee is chosen, the disclaimer notice must identify the committee that paid for the message, but need not state whether the communication was authorized. 11 CFR 110.11(d)(1).

Example: "Paid for by XYZ State Party Committee."

Post-nomination Period

Once a candidate has been nominated for the general election, the disclaimer notice must also state who authorized the communication.

Example: "Paid for by the XYZ State Party Committee and authorized by the Sheridan for Congress Committee."

The committee that actually makes the expenditure is considered to be the person who paid for the public communication even when the committee is acting as the designated agent of a different party committee.

Exempt Party Activities

On exempt activity communications (for example, campaign materials) the disclaimer notice must identify the committee that paid for the message. 11 CFR 110.11 (e).

Example: "Paid for by the XYZ State Party Committee."

Return to top

How and Where must the Disclaimer Appear?

In order to give the reader sufficient notice about the person(s) paying for or authorizing a public communication regardless of its medium, the disclaimer notice must be "clear and conspicuous" on the committee's communications, solicitations and response materials. The notice will not be considered to be "clear and conspicuous" if:

- It is difficult to read or hear; or
- The notification is placed where it can be easily overlooked.

11 CFR 110.11(c)(1).

Additional requirements are described below.

Printed Materials

On printed materials, the disclaimer notice must appear within a printed box set apart from the other contents in the communication. The print must be of a sufficient type-size to be clearly readable by the recipient of the communication, and the print must have a reasonable degree of color contrast between the background and the printed statement. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(2)(i), (ii) and (iii).

Example:

> Paid for by the Save the Seahorses Committee and authorized by the McKay for Senate Committee.

As long as the disclaimer appears somewhere within the communication it does not have to appear on the front page or cover of multiple-paged documents. However, in the case of single-sided documents and billboards, the disclaimer must appear on the front. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(2)(iv).

Safe Harbor for "Clearly Readable"

The regulations contain a safe harbor that establishes a fixed, 12-point type size as a sufficient type size for disclaimer text in newspapers, magazines, flyers, signs and other printed communications that are no larger than the common poster size of 24 inches by 36 inches. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(2)(i). Please note, disclaimers for larger communications will be judged on a case by case basis.

Safe Harbor for "Reasonable Degree of Color Contrast"

The regulations additionally provide two safe harbor examples that would comply with color contrast requirement:

- The disclaimer is printed in black on a white background; or
- The degree of contrast between the background color and the disclaimer text color is at least as great as the degree of contrast between the background color and the color of the largest text in the communication.

11 CFR 110.11(c)(2)(iii).[4]

Packaged Materials

When communications are distributed in a package or as a group, the distributing entity must evaluate each item separately in order to determine whether a disclaimer notice is required on that item. A message or ad that would require a disclaimer notice if it were distributed separately must still display the notice when it is included in a package of materials. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(2)(v). Example: A campaign poster is mailed with a campaign brochure and solicitation letter. A disclaimer notice must appear on each of these items.

Radio and Television Communications Authorized by the Candidate

Radio

A radio broadcast must include an audio statement that is spoken by the candidate. The statement must identify the candidate, and state that he or she has approved the communication. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(3)(i).

Television

Like radio broadcasts, televised communications must include an oral disclaimer spoken by the candidate in which the candidate identifies himself or herself and states that he or she has approved the communication. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(3)(ii). [5]

This disclaimer can be conveyed in one of two ways:

- A full-screen view of the candidate making the statement (11 CFR 110.11(c)(3)(ii)(A)); or
- A "clearly identifiable photographic or similar image of the candidate" that appears during the candidate's voice-over statement. (11 CFR 110.11 (c)(3)(ii)(B)).

The communication must also include a "clearly readable" written statement that appears at the end of the communication "for a period of at least four seconds" with a "reasonable degree of color contrast" between the background and the disclaimer statement. 11 CFR 110.11 (c)(3)(iii).

Radio and Television Messages Not Authorized by the Candidate

Radio

The disclaimer notice must include the name of the political committee or person responsible for the communication and any connected organization. Example, "ABC is responsible for the content of this advertising." 11 CFR 110.11(c)(4).

Television

The disclaimer described above must be conveyed by a "full-screen view of a representative of the political committee or other person making the statement," or a "voice-over" by the representative. 11 CFR 110.11(c)(4) (ii) and 2 U.S.C. §441d(d)(2).

The disclaimer statement must also appear in writing at the end of the communication in a "clearly readable manner" with a "reasonable degree of color" contrast between the background and the printed statement "for a period of at least four seconds." 11 CFR 110.11(c)(4).

Return to top

When is a Disclaimer Not Required?

Although the FEC recommends that disclaimer notices be included on all campaign materials, the notices are not required in the following situations.

Disclaimer Placement is Inconvenient

In situations where a disclaimer notice cannot be conveniently printed, the notice is not required. This provision affects items such as pens, bumper stickers, campaign pins, campaign buttons and similar small items. Further, a disclaimer notice is not required for communications using skywriting, clothing, water towers or other forms of advertisement where it would be impracticable to display the disclaimer notice. 11 CFR 110.11(f) (See also AO 2002-9)

Internal Corporate/Labor Communications

A disclaimer notice is not required for solicitations or communications made by a separate segregated fund or connected organization to its "restricted class." [6] 11 CFR 110.11(f)(2).

Materials Used for Administrative Purposes Only

A disclaimer notice is not required on checks, receipts or similar items of minimal value that do not include a political message and are used only for administrative purposes. 11 CFR 110.11(f)(1)(iii).

Additional Statements Required in Fundraising Solicitations

Federal Election Purpose Notification

In order to deposit undesignated contributions into its federal account, a federal committee must inform donors that their contributions will be used in connection with federal elections or that they are subject to the limits and prohibitions of the Act. The committee may satisfy this requirement by including that information in its solicitation materials. 11 CFR 102.5(a)(2)(ii) and (iii).

Return to top

"Best Efforts" Notification

Under the Act and FEC regulations, political committees must report the name, address, occupation and employer of any individual who contributes more than $200 in a calendar year (or in an election cycle, in the case of an authorized committee) (11 CFR 104.3(a)(4)). Committees must make their "best efforts" to obtain and report this information.

To satisfy the "best efforts" requirement, a political committee must include a statement on its solicitations explaining that it is required to make its best efforts to obtain and report contributor information. This statement is referred to as the "best efforts" notification; two examples are listed below:

- Federal law requires us to use our best efforts to collect and report the name, mailing address, occupation and name of employer of individuals whose contributions exceed $200 in a calendar year, or
- To comply with Federal law, we must use our best efforts to obtain, maintain, and submit the name, mailing address, occupation and name of employer of individuals whose contributions exceed $200 per calendar year.

If the committee does not receive the required contributor information, it must make a follow-up request within 30 days. Any contributor information provided or otherwise available to the committee must be disclosed on FEC reports. In some cases, it may be necessary for the committee to amend previous reports. 11 CFR 104.7.

IRS Disclosure Requirements

Under the Internal Revenue Service Code (26 U.S.C. §6113), certain tax-exempt organizations that are not eligible to receive tax deductible charitable contributions, and whose gross annual receipts normally exceed $100,000, must disclose in an "express statement (in a conspicuous and easily recognizable format)" that contributions to the organization are not deductible for Federal income tax purposes as charitable contributions. For more information, contact the IRS at (800) 829-3676, (202) 622-7352.

Safe Harbor for "Format of Disclosure Statement"

  - "Contributions or gifts to [name of organization] are not tax deductible," or

- If the statement is spoken, it is in close proximity to the request for contributions; if the statement appears on the television screen, it is in large easily readable type appearing on the screen for at least five seconds.

- The solicitation includes whichever of the following statements the organization deems appropriate:
  - "Contributions or gifts to [name of organization] are not deductible as charitable contributions for Federal income tax purposes,"
  - "Contributions or gifts to [name of organization] are not tax deductible," or
  - "Contributions or gifts to [name of organization] are not tax deductible as charitable contributions";
- The statement is made in close proximity to the request for contributions during the same radio solicitation announcement.

These safe harbors will remain in effect until further notice from the IRS. Please refer to the IRS by phone at (800) 829-3676, (202) 622-7352 for changes to these safe harbors and with any questions you might have pertaining to the safe harbors.

Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission

The Impacts--and Lack Thereof--on State Campaign Finance Law

by Denise Roth Barber, March 02, 2010

Revised: March 2, 2010: The "Citizens United v FEC" ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court has no effect on campaign limits in place at the state and federal levels but may effectively overturn laws in 24 states that ban or restrict corporations from funding advocation for or against state candidates. In the 22 states that prohibit corporations from giving to candidates, individuals contributed about half of the money raised by candidates and non-individuals provided less than one-fourth. The reverse is true in the 28 states that allow corporate giving.

Commission Statement on Citizens United v. FEC

On February 5, 2010, the Commission announced that, due to the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. FEC, it will no longer enforce statutory and regulatory provisions prohibiting corporations and labor unions from making either independent expenditures or electioneering communications. The Commission also announced several actions it is taking to fully implement the Citizens United decision.

In Citizens United v. FEC, issued on January 21, 2010, the Supreme Court held that the prohibitions in the Federal Election Campaign Act (the Act) against corporate spending on independent expenditures or electioneering communications are unconstitutional. The Supreme Court upheld statutory provisions that require political ads to contain disclaimers and be reported to the Commission. Provisions addressed by the decision are described below:

- The Court struck down 2 U.S.C. §441b, which prohibits, in part, corporations and labor organizations from making electioneering communications and from making independent expenditures—communications to the general public that expressly advocate

Cao v. FEC

On January 27, 2010, the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana granted in part and denied in part the motion of Louisiana Congressman Anh "Joseph" Cao, the Republican National Committee (RNC) and the Republican Party of Louisiana (LA-GOP, formerly "RPL") (collectively, the Plaintiffs) to certify to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals challenges to the constitutionality of the coordinated party expenditure limits and party contribution limits. The court certified questions regarding whether the Plaintiffs had sufficient injury to create a constitutional case, whether certain coordinated expenditure and contribution limits as applied to coordinated communications violate the Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights and whether the $5,000 limit on contributions from political parties to candidate campaigns violates a political party's First Amendment rights because it is the same limit as for political action committees and the limit is not adjusted for inflation. The district court denied certification and granted summary judgment in favor of the FEC on all of Plaintiffs' other claims.

the election or defeat of clearly identified federal candidates;
- The Court upheld 2 U.S.C. §441d, which requires that political advertising consisting of independent expenditures or electioneering communications contain a disclaimer clearly stating who paid for such communication; and
- The Court upheld 2 U.S.C. §434, which requires certain information about electioneering communications and independent expenditures, and the contributions received for such spending, to be disclosed to the Commission and to be made public.

The Commission is taking the following steps to conform to the Supreme Court's decision:

- The Commission will no longer enforce the statutory provisions or its regulations prohibiting corporations and labor organizations from making independent expenditures and electioneering communications;
- The Commission is reviewing all pending enforcement matters to determine which matters may be affected by the Citizens United decision and will no longer pursue claims involving violations of the invalidated provisions. In addition, the Commission will no longer pursue information requests or audit issues with respect to the invalidated provisions; and
- The Commission is considering the effect of the Citizens United decision on its ongoing litigation.

The Commission intends to initiate a rulemaking to implement the Citizens United opinion. It is reviewing the regulations affected by the invalidated provisions, including but not necessarily limited to the following:

- 11 CFR 114.2(b)(2) and (3), which implement the Act's prohibition on corporate and labor organization independent expenditures and electioneering communications;
- 11 CFR 114.4, which restricts the types of communications corporations and labor organizations may make to those not within their restricted class;
- 11 CFR 114.10, which permits certain qualified nonprofit corporations to use their treasury funds to make independent expenditures and electioneering communications under certain conditions;
- 11 CFR 114.14, which places restrictions on the use of corporate and labor union funds for electioneering communications; and
- 11 CFR 114.15, which the Commission adopted to implement the Supreme Court's decision in Wisconsin Right to Life, Inc. v. FEC.

The Commission is also considering the effect of Citizens United on the ongoing Coordinated Communications rulemaking. 74 FR 53893 (Oct. 21, 2009). The Commission also issued a Supplemental Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (SNPRM) regarding issues presented by Citizens United. See page 7 for more information. The additional comment period closed on February 24, 2010. The Commission intends to hold a hearing on the Coordinated Communications rulemaking on March 2 and 3, 2010. The text of the SNPRM is available at [illegible].fec.gov/[illegible]/2009/no-[illegible].pdf.

Revisions to Commission reporting requirements, forms, instructions and electronic software may be required.

Corporations and labor organizations that intend to finance independent expenditures or electioneering communications should:

- Include disclaimers on their communications, consistent with FEC regulations at 11 CFR 110.11;
- Disclose independent expenditures on FEC Form 5, consistent with FEC regulations at 11 CFR 109.10; and
- Disclose electioneering communications on FEC Form 9, consistent with FEC regulations at 11 CFR 104.20.

The Commission notes that the prohibitions on corporations or labor organizations making contributions contained in 2 U.S.C. §441b remain in effect.

Background

On December 4, 2008, the Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana challenging the constitutionality of the party expenditure provision limits at 2 U.S.C. §§441a(d)(2)-(3) as applied to their planned coordinated party expenditures. The Plaintiffs alleged that the party expenditure provision of the Federal Election Campaign Act (the Act) and the $5,000 contribution limit at 2 U.S.C. §441a(a)(2)(A) are unconstitutional as applied to party coordinated expenditures that are not "unambiguously campaign related" (Buckley v Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 81 (1976)) or "functionally identical to contributions" (FEC v. Colo. Rep. Fed. Campaign Comm., 533 U.S. 431, 468 n.2 (2001)) ("Colorado II"). In addition, the Plaintiffs argued that the application of multiple coordinated expenditure limits for the same office is unconstitutional because it is ineffectual in preventing corruption and that the base amounts are too low. The Plaintiffs also challenged the constitutionality of the $5,000 contribution limit on the grounds that the same limits apply to parties as to political action committees, and argued that the limit is too low and not indexed for inflation. The original complaint was filed by the Plaintiffs on November 13, 2008.

Under the Act, a national party committee and state party committees may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaigns of federal candidates that are coordinated with these candidates. 11 CFR 109.30. Coordinated party expenditures do not count against the contribution limits, but are subject to a separate set of limits. 11 CFR 109.32.

The Act provides a formula for calculating coordinated party expenditure limits. For House candidates, the coordinated party expenditure limit is $10,000 increased by the Cost of Living Adjustment (COLA) or, in states with only one representative, the same as the Senate limit. For Senate candidates, the coordinated party expenditure limit is the greater of the number of the state voting age population multiplied by two cents and increased by the COLA, or $20,000 increased by the COLA. For Presidential candidates, the coordinated party expenditure limit is the number of the national voting age population multiplied by two cents and increased by the COLA. 11 CFR 109.32.

District Court Decision

The district court granted in part the Plaintiffs' Motion to Certify. Four questions were found non-frivolous and certified to en banc Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. The defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment was granted for all issues not certified to the Fifth Circuit.

Standing. The court found non-frivolous the question whether Plaintiffs had alleged sufficient injury to create a constitutional "case or controversy" within the judicial power of Article III. However, the court held that LA-GOP does not have standing to bring a Motion to Certify under §437h of the Act, as LA-GOP is neither a national committee of a political party nor an individual eligible to vote for President.

Unambiguously Campaign Related. The court found frivolous the Plaintiffs' arguments that several provisions of the Act are vague, overbroad or beyond Congress' authority to regulate because they allegedly restrict speech that is not "unambiguously campaign related." The provisions challenged under that theory were those that limit expenditures "in connection" with a candidate's campaign (§§441a(d)(2-3)), limit to $5,000 contributions from multicandidate political committees to any candidate (§441a(a)(2)(A)) and define expenditures "made in cooperation, consultation or concert" with a candidate as contributions (§441a(a)(7)(B)(i)).

Own Speech. The court found non-frivolous the Plaintiffs' argument that coordinated expenditures

Visit the FEC's Redesigned Web Site

FEC staff recently completed a significant upgrade of the Commission's web site, www.fec.gov. The redesigned site offers a wealth of information in a simple, clearly-organized format. Features include cascading menus that improve navigation and interactive pages that allow users to tailor content to their specific needs. Noteworthy among the new features is a search engine. This tool allows visitors to immediately access all pages on the site that contain a desired word or phrase. Another new feature, the Commission Calendar, helps users keep track of reporting deadlines, upcoming conferences and workshops, Commission meetings, comment deadlines and more.

The site also offers a robust new enforcement section that includes the Enforcement Query System, information on closed MURs, the Alternative Dispute Resolution and Administrative Fine programs and—for the first time—access to final audit reports issued by the Commission.

The Commission encourages the regulated community and the public to make use of this dynamic and interactive site by visiting [illegible].

Cindy,

Attached are my preliminary comments on the bill. Thank you for considering them.

Mike Frank

SENTATE BILL NO. 284 COMMENTS

Section 3. Section 3, amending AS 15.13.040(d), would require a "full report of expenditures." However, Section 4, amended AS 15.13.040(e), would require more than just a report of "expenditures." This minor inconsistency should be corrected so that it is clear that more than just a report of expenditures will be required.

Section 4. As I understand Section 4, the bill proposes to amend current law to require corporations, unions and the like which make expenditures both report both the source of contributions and the amount of the expenditures. This is similar to a proposal made by the Brennan Center for Justice (see http://www.brennancenter.org) and U.S. Senator Charles Schumer for federal elections.

What is missing from Section 4 and which is in Senator Schumer's bill, however, is a requirement that the person making expenditures keep a separate account for monies that the person intends to use to make such expenditures. This separate account requirement would enhance the ability of the State to audit corporate, union and NGO accounts to ensure there are no reporting violations.

Moreover, monies used for electioneering should not be treated as a deductible operating expense for tax purposes. An separate account requirement would segregate those funds so that federal, State or local taxing authorities can ensure that, to the extent allowed by current or future changes in tax codes concerning the deductibility of electioneering expenses, political expenditures are not illegally deducted as operating expenses.

In Section 4 an amended AS 15.13.040(e)(3) would require that the report provide "the name of the candidate or the title of the ballot proposition or question supported or opposed by each expenditure and whether the expenditure is made to support or oppose the candidate or ballot proposition or question... ." This support or oppose language may be problematical. For example, suppose an advertisement states "Candidate X supports free abortions for teenagers. Call candidate X and tell him you disagree with his position." Is that advertisement supporting or opposing candidate X? The example shows how easily the support or oppose language might be evaded. It might be better if the reporting requirement was triggered whenever the expenditure merely mentioned the candidate's name or the title of office up for election.

A similar problem relates to the proposed amendatory language in a new AS 15.13.040(e)(5), to wit, "the aggregate amount of all contributions made to the person, if any, for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election... ." How is the State to determine if the person making the expenditure had the requisite "purpose" or intent, i.e., the requisite mens rea? This will be very hard to determine. It might be better to say something like "the aggregate amount of all contributions made to the person, if any, and which contributions are either authorized by the contributor or otherwise which may be used by the person to make expenditures concerning an election."

Section 14. This Section would amend AS 15.13.135(a) to delete the following language (in caps in the text of the bill): "ONLY AN INDIVIDUAL, GROUP, OR NONGROUP ENTITY MAY MAKE AN INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURE SUPPORTING OR OPPOSING A CANDIDATE FOR ELECTION TO PUBLIC OFFICE." I presume this deletion is intended to make AS 15.13.135(a) consistent with the holding in Citizens United. I urge that this deletion not be made.

AS 15.13.135(a) became law in response to a 1995 initiative, which I authored, intended to reform Alaska's campaign finance laws. The initiative secured a place on the ballot but was taken off the ballot by Lieutenant Governor Fran Ulmer after she determined that the Legislature had passed a law substantially similar. A key provision of the initiative and new law was a ban on independent expenditures by corporations and unions in candidate (as opposed to ballot proposition) elections. Citizens United held that such a ban is unconstitutional, and therefore until the holding of that case is altered, the first sentence of the current AS 15.13.135(a) may, of course, not be enforced.

Citizens United, however, was a very sharply divided, extremely controversial, 5-4 decision. A change in the composition of the United States Supreme Court could easily change the holding of that case. Given the public anger about the decision and plans to challenge the decision already afoot, that change could happen in the very near future. If in the meantime, however, AS 15.13.135(a)'s ban on corporate and union independent expenditures is eliminated, a favorable change in the decision will have no impact in Alaska. If the holding of Citizens United is overturned, enacting a new ban would become necessary. That seems unlikely to happen unless the public forces a vote on it via the lengthy and expensive initiative process. Thus, I urge that no change be made to the first sentence of AS 15.13.135(a).

If, however, the conflict with the holding of Citizens United must be addressed, I suggest an amendment adding this or a similar phrase to the first sentence at the end of the sentence: "except to the extent such independent expenditures are otherwise authorized by federal law or the Alaska Constitution."

Notice and Consent. The holding of Citizens United was in part based on the First Amendment right of association. But ordinarily, corporate shareholders, and union and NGO members do not associate with the corporation, union or NGO in order to pursue political ends. Shareholder and member assets should not, therefore, be used for political purposes without their consent. (I should note that the majority in Citizens United specifically remarked that "corporate democracy" could provide a remedy for shareholders who do not want their funds used for electioneering purposes.)

Entities intending to make independent expenditures in candidate elections should be required to notify their shareholders or members and give them an opportunity to voice their objections, either by selling their shares, resigning their membership, or otherwise exercising whatever rights of protest they may have within the entity. This notice should be required well in advance of the election (say, 90 days). It should include adequate detail concerning the name of the candidates, the entity's intentions with respect to its advocacy concerning the candidates, and other details reasonably necessary to inform the shareholders and members. I urge that notice and consent requirements be added to SB 284.

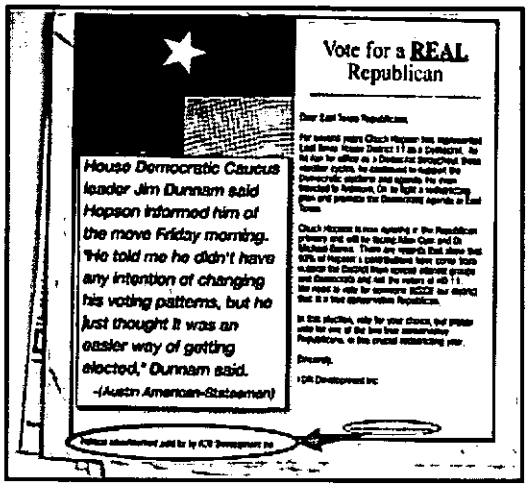
For more about the notice and consent issue, see the Brennan Center Ciara Torres-Spelliscy, Corporate Campaign Spending: Giving Shareholder's A Voice (Brennan Center for Justice, 1/27/2010), available at http://www.brennancenter.org/content/resource/corporate_campaign_spending_giving_shareholders_a_voice/.

Thank you for considering my comments.

THE TEXAS TRIBUNE

The First Corporate Ad

by Ross Ramsey
March 22, 2010



The KDR Development Inc. advertisement that ran in the Panola Watchman

The first political ads bought by a corporation in Texas appeared in East Texas newspapers just weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court effectively ended the state's ban on that kind of spending.

The ads appear to mark the first instance of a corporation directly playing in a Texas election since the nation's highest court lifted a century-old ban on political spending by corporations and labor unions. That January ruling — in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission — doesn't affect contributions to candidates, which remain restricted. But it does mean corporations and unions can spend money as they wish on politics and run all the ads they want, so long as they don't coordinate their efforts, messages and plans with the campaigns they're promoting or with other third-party groups that have similar political interests.

The ads in the Jacksonville Daily Progress, the Tyler Morning Telegram and the Panola Watchman took issue with the Republican bona fides of state Rep. Chuck Hopson of Jacksonville, a Democratic incumbent who jumped to the GOP in November and ran in a three-way race in the Republican primary this month. He got 61 percent of the vote, easily besting Michael Banks and Allan Cain.

The newspaper ads ran in Jacksonville and Tyler on the Sunday before the election and a week earlier in Panola, and they urged voters to choose anyone but Hopson. They were paid for by KDR Development Inc., a real estate company whose president, Republican Larry Durrett, lost to Hopson in 2006, when Hopson was still a Democrat. Durrett is also the president of Southern Multifoods, a Jacksonville-based company with dozens of franchised Taco Bell, KFC, Pizza Hut, A&W and Long John Silvers restaurants. The two companies are closely related, sharing addresses, officers and directors.

"I think we're on solid legal ground," Durrett said in an interview. "We checked it out every way from Sunday."

At least one paper — the Longview News-Journal — had reservations. "The disclaimer wasn't complete, and then we saw that it was a corporate ad," said Alan Todd, the paper's advertising director. "When we questioned it, [the buyer] pulled the ad."

Durrett wanted to run ads against Hopson and had been reading and hearing about the Supreme Court ruling on corporate politicking. He checked with a lawyer in Tyler, who sent him to a specialist in Austin, did "a significant amount of discussion about this," and then went to the papers with the ads. "My businesses do better under conservative people and not under people who aren't," he said. "There are an awful lot of folks on the Republican side of the House who aren't all that conservative, and that's an irritant." He felt the other two candidates were more conservative than Hopson.

He used corporate money for a simple reason. "You take the money out of the pocket that's got some money in there," he said.

Durrett doesn't consider Hopson's win a complete loss for his side: "If you continue to point out that people aren't as conservative as you are, it moves them to the right."

The ad has a quote on one side, and the copy on the other is standard fare for a House race, written in the form of a letter.

The quote, from the Austin American-Statesman: "House Democratic Caucus leader Jim Dunnam said Hopson informed him of the move Friday morning. 'He told me he didn't have any intention of changing his voting patterns, but he just thought it was an easier way of getting elected,' Dunnam said."

The letter:

> Dear East Texas Republicans,
> For several years Chuck Hopson has represented East Texas House District 11 as a Democrat. As he ran for office as a Democrat throughout these election cycles, he continued to support the Democratic platform and > agenda. He even traveled to Ardmore, OK to fight a redistricting plan and promote the Democratic agenda in East Texas.

> Chuck Hopson is now running in the Republican primary and will be facing Allan Cain and Dr. Michael Banks. There are records that show that 90% of Hopson's contributions have come from outside the District from special interest groups and Democrats and not the voters of HD 11. We need to vote for someone INSIDE our district that is a true conservative Republican.
> In this election, vote for your choice, but please vote for one of the two true conservative Republicans, in this crucial redistricting year.
> Sincerely,
> KDR Development Inc

Before the Supreme Court ruling, that would have been an illegal ad in Texas, purely based on the corporate funding. So long as KDR didn't work with the campaigns or with anyone else on the copy, it now appears to be the sort of direct corporate expenditure the Supremes are protecting.

"It raised some issues with us, and I asked some people in the organization to look at it," said Amy Miller, publisher of the Daily Progress. In the end, the paper decided to accept the ad: "It's a pre-paid political ad, and I didn't see anything wrong with it."

The ad does bear some similarities to printed mailers sent by others. Cain, for instance, used that same quote from Dunnam in a mailer that also carried the "Hopson is not conservative" theme. Former state Sen. Drew Nixon, R-Carthage, paid for ads in the race, too, using that Dunnam quote again and a chart very similar to that used in Cain's flyer. Signed by three of the four GOP county chairs in the district, it was more direct in its hit on the party-switcher: "Make no mistake, Chuck Hopson is a Democrat."

But as long as the corporation wasn't in league with anyone else, they appear to be the first example of what might be possible under the court's ruling. The Texas Ethics Commission, which regulates these things, is still working on a full opinion of this new world of campaign finance. The agency posted its first impression online right after the court issued its ruling:

> "... We believe the Texas Legislature intended laws under our jurisdiction to prohibit political expenditures by corporations to the full extent allowed by the Constitution, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court. In light of the recently issued United States Supreme Court ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, it is our position that corporations are allowed to make all types of direct campaign expenditures ... It is also our > position that corporations are still prohibited from making political contributions unless specifically allowed..."

TEC now has a draft opinion in circulation — not yet voted out by its board — that goes further: "For the reasons stated in Citizens United, we cannot ... prohibit a corporation or labor organization from making a direct campaign expenditure or ... prohibit an individual or other association from making a direct campaign expenditure."

They can still block corporations and labor organizations from making contributions to candidates, but they can't do anything if those outfits want to spend money for or against the candidates' knowledge.

SUMMARY OF CITIZENS UNITED LEGISLATION

Introduced by Senator Charles E. Schumer & Congressman Chris Van Hollen

1. PREVENT FOREIGN INFLUENCE IN U.S. ELECTIONS

- The legislation prevents foreign governments, foreign companies and foreign nationals from influencing U.S. elections by banning corporations from spending money on U.S. elections if:

    - They have a foreign ownership of 20% or more;
    - A majority of their board of directors is foreign principals; or
    - Their U.S. operations, or their decision-making with respect to political activities, falls under the direction or control of a foreign entity, including a foreign government.

2. BAN PAY-TO-PLAY

- Prevent Government Contractors from Spending Money on Elections. Government contractors would be barred from making political expenditures.

- Prevent Corporate Beneficiaries of TARP from Spending Money on Elections. Corporations that received bailout funding from the federal government should not be permitted to use taxpayer money for political expenditures.

3. ENHANCE DISCLAIMERS TO IDENTIFY SPONSORS OF ADS

- Require Corporate CEO's To Identify that they are Behind Political Ads. If a corporation spends on a political ad, the CEO will be required to appear on camera to say that he or she "approves this message," just like candidates have to do now.

- For Shadow Groups, Require Top Corporate Donors To Appear in Political Ads They Funded. In order to prevent individuals and corporations from funneling money through shell groups in order to mask their activities, the legislation will include the following requirements:

    - The top funder of the advertisement must also record a stand-by-your-ad disclaimer.

    - The top five contributors to an organization for political purposes that purchases advertising will be listed on the screen at the end of advertisement.

4. ENHANCE REQUIREMENTS FOR DISCLOSURE OF POLITICAL EXPENDITURES

- The legislation ensures that the public will have full and timely disclosure of campaign-related expenditures made by corporations and labor organizations. The legislation imposes disclosure requirements that will mitigate the ability of corporate spenders to mask their electioneering activities through the use of intermediaries.

i. SETTING UP 'PAPER TRAILS' WITH THE FEC

- The legislation would require corporations, labor unions, and organizations organized under 501(c) 4, 5, or 6 laws—as well as 527 organizations—to, for the first time, establish separate "political broadcast spending" accounts to receive and disperse political expenditures.

- All funds received into these "political activities" accounts must be publicly reported to the FEC. The following information must also be disclosed:

    - Name of the individual who controls the account
    - Name of donors and transferors
    - Date of each donation and transfer in excess of $10,000,
    - Election or name of the candidate if the donation or transfer was so designated.

- All funds disbursed from the "political activities" accounts must be publicly reported to the FEC with the following information:

    - Name of the person making the disbursement
    - Amount of each disbursement of more than $ 200 during the required period, the election to which the disbursement is made
    - Independent Expenditure-related candidate and whether the expenditure is directed in support of or opposition to the candidate
    - Electioneering Communication-related candidate who is the subject of the communication and whether the candidate is being supported or opposed through the expenditure.
    - Certification by the CEO or the head of the entity responsible, that the independent expenditure or electioneering communication is not made in coordination with a candidate, candidate committee or party committee.

- All funds transferred from the "political activities" account for the purpose of a political expenditure, or that is not restricted for use for a political expenditure, must be publicly reported to the FEC with the following information:

    - Name of the transferor
    - Name of the recipient
    - Date and amount of the funds transferred
    - Whether the transferred funds are intended for use in a particular election or directed to a particular candidate and, if so, disclose the election and/or candidate.

ii. PROVIDING NOTICE TO SHAREHOLDERS DIRECTLY AND THROUGH SEC FILINGS

- All political expenditures made by a corporation should be disclosed within 24 hours on the corporation's website with a clear link on the homepage; disclosed to shareholders directly on a quarterly basis; and comprehensively disclosed within the corporation's annual report.

iii. REQUIRING LOBBYISTS TO DISCLOSE THEIR ACTIVITIES

- All registrants under the Lobbying Disclosure Act must disclose the following information:
    - Every campaign expenditure in excess of $1000
    - Date it was received
    - Recipient
    - Name of each "covered candidate" or political party expressly identified in any electioneering communication
    - Running total of the political expenditures.

5. PROVIDE LOWEST UNIT RATE FOR CANDIDATES AND PARTIES

- If a corporation buys airtime to run ads on broadcast, cable, or satellite television that support or oppose a candidate, then that candidate and political party or political party committee is allowed to receive the lowest unit rate for that media market.

- The broadcaster must also ensure that the candidate or political entity has reasonable access to airtime. This ensures that candidates and parties are not forced to run their advertisements at, say, 2:00 am when no one is watching, or be blocked from purchasing any advertising time at all.

6. PREVENT CORPORATIONS FROM COORDINATING THEIR ACTIVITIES WITH CANDIDATES AND PARTIES

- The legislation ensures that corporations and others are not allowed to coordinate campaign-related expenditures with candidates and parties in violation of rules that require these expenditures to be independent.

    - Current FEC rules bar corporations and unions from coordinate with candidates and parties about most ads distributed within 90 days of a House or Senate primary election or within 90 days of the general election. For Presidential contests, current FEC rules allow coordination on ads referencing a presidential candidate 120 days before a state's Presidential primary election and continuing in that state through the general election.

    - This legislation would do the following:
        - For House and Senate races, the legislation would ban coordination between a corporation or union and the candidate on ads referencing a Congressional candidate within 90 days of the primary through the general election.
        - For all federal elections, at any time before the 90- or 120-day window opens, it would ban coordination of ads between a corporation or union and the candidate when they promote, support, attack or oppose a candidate.

Abbreviations may be used to describe contributing entities if the full name of the entity has been clearly spoken previously during the broadcast advertisement.

Life After Citizens United

Updated March 1, 2010

The U.S. Supreme Court's January 21, 2010, ruling in Citizens United v. FEC is certain to have a profound effect on the laws governing corporate political activity in nearly half the states. The court ruled that the federal government may not prohibit direct corporate and union spending in advertising for candidate elections. While the ruling does not directly affect state laws, there are at least 23 states that currently prohibit or restrict corporate and union spending on candidate elections. It is very likely that these states will act to either repeal or re-write these laws, or face legal challenge under the new standard set by Citizens United. Furthermore, it is likely that states will elect not to enforce these laws from this point forward, which will radically change the political landscape as we head into the 2010 elections. It is important to note that the Citizens United decision does not strike down bans on corporate and union contributions to candidates, which currently exist in 23 states. Only the ban on direct corporate and union spending on campaign advertising is addressed by this decision.

States Respond to Citizens United

Connecticut, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania -- legislators and state officials are reviewing the case and have not yet decided how to proceed.

Alaska -- The Attorney General issued an opinion on February 22, stating that Alaska's ban on corporate and union independent expenditures are likely unconstitutional in view of Citizens United. These bills include HB 358, HB 401, HB 409, and SB 284. All would include independent expenditures by corporations and unions in the current disclosure requirements, and clarify attirbution requirements for advertisements.

Arizona - SB 1444, introduced on February 16, 2010, would require corporations and labor unions that make independent expenditures in candidate campaigns to register and file disclosure reports. HB 2788 is a companion bill.

Colorado governor Bill Ritter has asked the state's supreme court to evaluate the constitutionality of two provisions of the state's constitution that appear to be directly affected by Citizens United. Also, the state Republican Party has announced its intention to file suit against Colorado's law. It is possible that the suit could challenge a broader scope of the law than the two sections that are affected by Citizens United.

Iowa -- the director of the Ethics and Campaign Disclosure Board has sent an e-mail to legislators telling them that Citizens United effectively overturns Iowa law. SF 2354, introduced on February 15, 2010, requires corporations to obtain permission from a majority of their shareholders prior to making an independent expenditure, requires corporations to report their independent expenditures to the Ethics and Campaign Finance Disclosure Board, prohibits coordination between candidates and corporations, and requires certain attributions on corporate-funded advertisements.

Maryland -- HB 616, introduced on February 3, 2010, would require stockholder approval and public disclosure of corporate independent expenditures in excess of $10,000. HB 690 and SB 691 would prohibit government contractors from making independent expenditures. HB 986 and SB 570 would require board of director and stockholder approval for corporate independent expenditures, and would prohibit the distribution of material that is not true. HB 1029 and SB 543 would establish disclosure requirements for corporate independent expenditures. SB 601 would prohibit corporate contributions to candidates and corporate-funded independent expenditures. HB 1225 would require that corporate-sponsored ads include an attribution statement.

Michigan -- the secretary of state has posted SF a detailed description of how Citizens United affects the state, including an FAQ section.

Minnesota -- SF 2353, introduced on February 4, 2010, would repeal the ban on independent expenditures by corporations.

Montana -- the attorney general has said the state's ban on corporate expenditures will stay in place until it is challenged.

North Carolina -- the executive director of the State Board of elections has said that the law appears to be unenforceable, but they are still working to understand the full meaning of the decision.

Oklahoma -- the Ethics Commission is working on amendments to change and remove the relevant portions of state rules.

South Dakota - SB 165, which was deferred to the 41st legislative day (effectively killing the bill) on February 10, 2010, would have prohibited corporations from making political expenditures without shareholder approval.

Tennessee -- HB 3587 and SB 3118, introduced on January 27, 2010, and HB 3626 and SB 3303, introduced on January 28, would establish disclosure and attribution requirements for corporate-funded independent expenditures. HB 3182 and SB 3198 (introduced on January 27, 2010), HB 3714 and SB 3664 (iintroduced on January 28), HB 3715 and SB 3633 (introduced on January 28), and SB 3797 (introduced on January 28) would prohibit foreign corporations from using funds to aid either in the election or defeat of any candidate for office. Companion bills HB 3713 and SB 3672, and SB 3798, all introduced January 28, would create a Class B misdemeanor for the use of corporate funds to aid in the election or defeat of a judicial candidate.

West Virginia - HB 4647, introduced on February 22, 2010, repeals the ban on corporate express advocacy and applies detailed disclosure requirements for money spent by corporations on political advertising.

Wisconsin -- the Senate passed SB 43 just two days before the release of the Citizens United decision. This bill would ban corporate and union funding of electioneering bans and require greater disclosure. The bill's sponsors say they are hoping to salvage the disclosure portions of the bill. Also, the Government Accountability Board is considering rules that would require greater disclosure. SB 540, introduced February 17, 2010, repeals Wisconsin's ban on corporate independent expenditures. It also requires a corporation to file documentation of a vote of shareholders taken within the past two years approving campaign expenditures before making such an expenditure.

Wyoming -- HB 68, which would repeal the ban on independent expenditures by corporations, is pending in the Legislature.

Poll: Large majority opposes Supreme Court's decision on campaign financing

Washington Post Staff Writer
By Dan Eggen
Wednesday, February 17, 2010; 4:38 PM

Americans of both parties overwhelmingly oppose a Supreme Court ruling that allows corporations and unions to spend as much as they want on political campaigns, and most favor new limits on such spending, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News poll.

Eight in 10 poll respondents say they oppose the high court's Jan. 21 decision to allow unfettered corporate political spending, with 65 percent "strongly" opposed. Nearly as many backed congressional action to curb the ruling, with 72 percent in favor of reinstating limits.

The poll reveals relatively little difference of opinion on the issue among Democrats (85 percent opposed to the ruling), Republicans (76 percent) and independents (81 percent).

The results suggest a strong reservoir of bipartisan support on the issue for President Obama and congressional Democrats, who are in the midst of crafting legislation aimed at limiting the impact of the high court's decision.

"If there's one thing that Americans from the left, right and center can all agree on, it's that they don't want more special interests in our politics," Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), who is spearheading the legislative effort, said in a statement after the poll was released Wednesday.

"We hope we can get strong and quick bipartisan support for our legislation, which passes constitutional muster but will still effectively limit the influence of special interests."

Under legislation being drafted by Schumer and Rep. Chris Van Hollen (D-Md.), companies with foreign ownership or federal contracting ties would be limited in their ability to spend corporate money on elections.

The lawmakers also want to require companies to inform shareholders about political spending; to mandate special

Freedom of speech: Who's paying for it?

The following editorial appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer:

A proposal that would make it easier to find out who is paying for political ads in federal elections is needed after the damage caused by a recent Supreme Court ruling.

The measure from Democrats would require corporations, unions, and advocacy groups, now freed from restrictions against spending on individual races, to stand up for their ads by clearly identifying who paid for them.

Groups running ads for or against a candidate would be required to report their donors to the Federal Election Commission. They'd also need to identify the top five donors in the advertising. And, in some cases, a corporate CEO would have to appear on camera to say that he or she approves "this message," just as candidates do.

These proposed rules could be, and should be, in place in time for the general election this year.

This action is a necessary response to the Supreme Court's 5-4 ruling last month that allows corporations to spend money directly on political campaigns to advocate for or against specific candidates. Election-law loopholes that existed before the ruling would enable corporations now to fund campaign ads without disclosing who paid for them.

The impact of the court's decision isn't hard to imagine. The future could look a lot more like the current mysterious TV ad urging Sens. Bob Casey, D-Pa., and Arlen Specter, D-Pa., to vote against a bill that would regulate financial institutions.

This scare tactic calls the legislation a "new $4 trillion bailout for banks," although the bill is actually an attempt to reform Wall Street and create a new agency to protect consumers of financial products.

The ad was funded by something called the "Committee for Truth in Politics," a shadowy group that refuses to disclose any details of its spending to the FEC. It was created by a Republican operative in North Carolina. But it's impossible to tell from the ad itself who is paying for it, let alone for viewers to evaluate its substance.

The Supreme Court has allowed third parties to virtually take over individual elections with unlimited spending. The unfortunate fact is that there's very little Congress can do to control the new flood of money that corporations and unions can pour into campaigns.

But lawmakers can at least require these players to disclose their activities fully. That will help audiences judge for themselves the motivations behind such advertising.

Legislation sponsored by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., and Rep. Chris Van Hollen, D-Md., would require corporations to disclose political expenditures on their Web sites within 24 hours, and to inform shareholders quarterly.

There should be bipartisan support for their proposal. A new Washington Post-ABC News poll found that 85 percent of Democrats and 76 percent of Republicans oppose the Supreme Court's decision, and 72 percent of those polled favor new campaign-finance limits.

The court undermined decades of sensible election law, and the damage can't be easily undone. Greater transparency is the minimum required to start picking up the pieces of this harmful ruling.

Our view: Full disclosure

Lawmakers offer swift response to Supreme Court ruling

(02/20/10 18:21:43)

On Thursday, Jan. 21, the United States Supreme Court ruled that corporations and unions can spend freely to support or oppose a candidate for federal office right up to Election Day. On Friday, Feb. 19, lawmakers in the Alaska Legislature proposed bills that would require strict disclosure and disclaimer statements on such advertising.

Well done.

Sen. Hollis French, Rep. Les Gara and Rep. Scott Kawasaki led the way with this rapid response to the court's decision in Citizens United v. Federal Elections Commission. They're also backing a long-term response aimed at overturning the court's decision. That legislation would deny the status of personhood to corporations for the purpose of influencing elections. First, the rapid response.

STAND UP AND BE COUNTED

Identical bills in the House and Senate would require all "persons," the legal standing of corporations affirmed by the court's decision, to disclose in detail to the Alaska Public Offices Commission all contributions and expenditures on behalf of or against a candidate, a full list of the corporate officers and directors if applicable and the name of the ballot measure or candidate addressed.

In addition, any campaign advertising would have to include the "person's" principal officer and title, the address of the business and the names of the "person's" top five contributors to the campaign.

The disclaimer would have to make clear to anyone reading, hearing or viewing a campaign ad that the candidate in question does not authorize or endorse the ad.

These laws would become effective in Alaska immediately upon passage -- if they're passed this session, we'd keep any corporate and union spending right out in the light for the 2010 primary and general elections.

Disclosure must be an absolute in Alaska politics. We've had experience of bogus front groups masking large amounts of money aimed to help or hurt candidates and ballot initiatives. While the court's ruling left federal disclosure rules intact, it left Alaska open to nondisclosure because we didn't allow corporations to directly support or oppose candidates; hence we had no disclosure rules in place when the justices opened the door to corporate giving.

The message and the law needs to be strong and clear: If you want to participate in Alaska campaign politics, stand up and be counted -- by name, by number, by affiliation and by amount. We want to know who you are, how many you are, who you're with and how much you're contributing.

That way we can figure out where your interests lie -- and where the candidate you're backing may stand.

If you want anonymity, stay out of the game. Alaska politics should be secret in one place -- the voting booth.

These disclosure and disclaimer bills, Senate Bill 284 and House Bill 358, deserve expedited committee hearings and swift passage. They'll keep Alaska politics open and the political players out front where they belong.

TAKING ON THE COURT

The same lawmakers are backing short bills (Senate Bill 285, House Bill 359) that say simply that corporations are not persons when it comes to election spending. The aim here is to restore the authority of the federal government and the states to place limits on corporate power over elections and candidates.

The reason is simple. The largest corporations have enormous resources. And the plain truth -- the "common sense" referred to by Justice John Paul Stevens in his dissent from the January ruling -- is that effective free speech in a modern election is not free.

Thus, the organizations with the most money buy the most speech. With the court's ruling, that's more likely than ever before. Corporate interests could dominate radio, television and print advertising and have the power to drown out dissenting voices. Candidates -- despite any disclaimers -- could find themselves ever more beholden to corporate interests that outspend their own campaigns and claim credit for their victories.

A healthy representative democracy limits such power.

Given the Supreme Court's decision, such a law likely would be challenged. That's the idea. The sponsors want the court to rethink the Citizens United case.

Sen. French said these bills will take more time and are part of a national chorus of opposition to the court's ruling. Alaska's voice should be clear in that chorus. The court's January ruling is the law of the land for now. That's all the more reason to get tough disclosure laws on the books.

BOTTOM LINE: The Legislature should waste no time approving tough disclosure laws -- and provide the means to enforce them.

MEMORANDUM March 17, 2010

SUBJECT: Amendments E.4 and E.5 to CSSB 284(JUD)
(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\E)

TO: Senator Bill Wielechowski
Attn: Shelly Morgan

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TGB
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the amendments described above.

Amendment E.4
Amendment E.4 prohibits a foreign national from making directly, or indirectly, a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election.

The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) prohibits any foreign national from contributing, donating, or spending funds in connection with any federal, state, or local election in the United States, either directly or indirectly.[1] Because 2 U.S.C. 441e already clearly prohibits foreign nationals from making campaign contributions, expenditures, and independent expenditures in federal, state, and local elections, a state effort to legislate in this area may face a preemption challenge.

The Supremacy Clause, Art. VI, cl. 2 of the Constitution of the United States, provides:

> This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Alaska Supreme Court has noted that "[u]nder the Supremacy Clause of the federal constitution, state laws that interfere with federal laws are invalid." Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1161, n. 12 (Alaska 2009), quoting State v. Dupier, 118 P.3d 1039, 1049 (Alaska 2005). The court recently summarized federal preemption law as follows:

> There is a presumption against federal preemption of state law, and preemption doctrine "enjoin[s] seeking out conflicts between state and > federal regulation where none clearly exists." Additionally, "[w]here co-ordinate state and federal efforts exist within a complementary administrative framework, and in the pursuit of common purposes," . . . "the case for federal pre-emption becomes a less persuasive one." But where state law comes into conflict with federal law, the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution dictates that state law must always yield.

> There are three major types of federal preemption of state law: "express," "field," and "conflict" preemption. Express preemption occurs when Congress explicitly declares an intent to preempt state law in a particular area. . . .
> Field preemption is the term used when the federal law governing a particular area is so comprehensive and so complete that Congress is said to have completely occupied a field, leaving no room for state law. We "will not infer an intent to occupy the field where Congress has left some room for state involvement." . . .
> Conflict preemption occurs when a state law and a federal law are in conflict, either because compliance with both state and federal law is impossible or because the state law "stands as an obstacle to accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." . . .

Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1160 - 1161 (Alaska 2009) (citations and footnotes omitted).

The state clearly does not have authority to regulate contributions and expenditures in campaigns for federal office; that has been expressly preempted by federal law. 2 U.S.C. 453 (specifying that the provisions of the federal election campaigns act "supersede and preempt any provision of state law with respect to election to federal office."); 11 C.F.R. 108.7(b)(3) (federal law "supersedes state law concerning the . . . [l]imitation on contributions and expenditures regarding Federal candidates and political committees.").

Whether the state may regulate contributions and expenditures from foreign nationals in campaigns for state office is less clear. I am not aware of any federal statute or regulation which expressly preempts state regulation of foreign contributions and expenditures in campaigns for state office. However, field preemption may come into play here. To the extent a court found that the federal law governing contributions and expenditures by foreign nationals is so comprehensive and complete as to "occupy the field," it could invalidate state law attempting to cover the same ground. To the extent that the state and federal laws conflict, conflict preemption is also a possibility. Proposed AS 15.13.068(c) is an attempt to avoid conflicts with federal law as much as possible, but it may not succeed.

Amendment E.5 prohibits a person that is owned or controlled, in any part, by a foreign national from making an expenditure in connection with a state election. This amendment raises significant First Amendment issues. Given that that federal law already prohibits foreign nationals from directly or indirectly making contributions or expenditures in connection with a state election, I don't know what compelling state interest would serve as justification for such a prohibition. Because any large publicly traded domestic corporation is likely to have some foreign shareholders, a court is likely to interpret such a provision, if enacted, as an indirect prohibition against independent expenditures made by these persons, a violation of the First Amendment under Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. ___ (2010).

Because the amendment applies only to persons that are owned or controlled in some part by foreign nationals, whether the ownership interest be a majority interest or a de minimus minority interest, the amendment also raises equal protection issues. Alaska evaluates equal protection claims using a sliding scale.[2] There are several steps involved. First, the court determines the importance of the interest impaired by the challenged statute. Then the court looks at the purposes served by the statute. Finally, the court looks at how well the statutory means fits the purpose. "The common question in addressing equal protection cases is whether two groups of people who are treated differently are similarly situated and thus entitled to equal treatment."[3] In order for a classification to be valid under the state's equal protection test, it must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must bear a fair and substantial relation to a legitimate governmental objective. Wilson v. Municipality of Anchorage, 669 P.2d 569, 572 (Alaska 1983). Under the amendment, a domestic corporation with .005 percent foreign ownership, in which a foreign national or nationals are unable to exert any meaningful control, would be treated differently from a publicly traded corporation that, by chance, has no shares held by foreign nationals. A court is unlikely to interpret this disparate treatment of domestic corporations as reasonable, and I don't know what state interest could be articulated as justification for such a prohibition.

Audible Disclaimer Why it is important for Independent Expenditures:

1. Unlike regular ads, the money that can go into "independent expenditures" is Unlimited. Given the danger of unlimited spending by unions, corporations, environmental and business groups, stronger disclosure of who really is dumping money into an ad is important.
2. With the long "disclaimer (5 top contributors) – a 4 second flash on the screen of a very long "paid for" line won't be noticed by voters. The verbal disclaimer is really needed here.
3. Alpheus Bullard wrote the language (under current law, TV advertisers are given the OPTION of a written or verbal disclaimer) – he can testify if you have language questions.

MEMORANDUM March 12, 2010

SUBJECT: Political activities account amendment to SB 284
(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\A.4 to SB 284)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy French

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB
Legislative Counsel

I have one comment regarding amendment A.4.

If this amendment is to be incorporated into the bill, you may wish to consider further amending the bill to require a person to report to the Alaska Public Offices Commission (commission) when funds are deposited into, or expended from, the person's political activities account. Such a change would shift a number of the requirements of the current bill's expenditure report section (sec. 4 of SB 284, 26-LS1448\A) to the political activities account section added by this amendment. Reporting requirements for the political activities account would also have to be included.

Such a change is not legally or constitutionally required. At present, the bill requires a person making an expenditure under AS 15.13.040(d) to report the persons' contributors, if any, when making an expenditure report under AS 15.13.040(e). It may be more efficient for both persons making independent expenditures and the commission to have funds received into, and withdrawn from, a political activities account reported.

You may wish to confer with the appropriate personnel at the commission about the above suggestion.

If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

This memorandum accompanies the amendment described above. I have one comment.

In addition to the change you requested, I added the word "independent" to "expenditure" to clarify that the reporting requirements of AS 15.13.040(d) and (e) apply only to independent expenditures. In current law these provisions read "expenditure." However, it is the practice of the Alaska Public Offices Commission to require only the reporting of independent expenditures under these subsections. Candidates, groups, and nongroup entities report their expenditures under AS 15.13.040(a), (b), and (j) respectively.[1]

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Re: Response to your Inquiry Regarding Senate Bill 284

In response to Citizens United v. FEC, Senate Bill 284 (SB 284), as proposed, permits companies and labor unions to make expenditures in candidate elections. Companies and labor unions would still be restricted from making contributions directly to candidates. Arguably, the definitions of expenditure and contribution overlap. See AS 15.13.400(4); 15.13.400(6)(A)(iii). Consider clarification of these definitions.

SB 284 (Section 11) would require the company or labor union to disclose the top five contributors to the expenditure. Section 11 does not clarify the proper disclosure if several contributors contribute the same amount of money. For instance, the company or labor union would have no statutory guidance if its top 10 contributors all contribute equally to the expenditure.

SB 284 (Section 4) would require the company or labor union to disclose each officer or director of the company or labor union. SB 284 allows entities other than corporations and labor unions to make expenditures in candidate elections. It may be appropriate to expand this disclosure requirement to more than officers and directors.

These are my initial impressions and do not hesitate to contact me with further questions.

MEMORANDUM March 12, 2010

(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\A.5)

TO: Senator Hollis French

Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB
Legislative Counsel

You requested an amendment that would require "in addition to ads that specifically support or oppose candidates, all ads during an election season that refer to a candidate for office [to] disclose and use disclaimers." Section 11 of SB 284 requires certain information to be identified in all communications. Communication is defined under AS 15.13.400(3):

> "communication" means an announcement or advertisement disseminated through print or broadcast media, including radio, television, cable, and satellite, the Internet, or through a mass mailing, excluding those placed by an individual or nongroup entity and costing $500 or less and those that do not directly or indirectly identify a candidate or proposition, as that term is defined in AS 15.13.065(c)[.]

Any communication that directly or indirectly identifies a candidate is required to contain the disclaimer and information required by AS 15.13.090. The expenditure or independent expenditure made to fund the communication must be disclosed to the Alaska Public Office Commission under AS 15.13.040.

I have placed this amendment on hold, pending further instruction from your office. If I have misapprehended the nature of your request or if you would like to cancel the amendment, please do not hesitate to contact me.

MEMORANDUM March 1, 2010

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 284 and Attorney General's analysis of Citizens United and its effect on Alaska law (Work Order No. 26-LS1448\A)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB
Legislative Counsel

You asked whether Senate Bill 284 (SB 284) addresses the effects on AS 15.13 (state elections) of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. Federal Elections Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010), identified in the Attorney General's opinion of February 19, 2010.[1]

Citizens United implicates the state's existing statutory prohibition against labor unions and certain corporations making independent expenditures for the purpose of influencing state elections. The Attorney General's opinion identifies AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a)[2] as statutes that are likely invalidated by the ruling and recommends that certain state campaign finance laws relating to the identification of communications[3] and the disclosure of expenditures[4] be amended "to provide more clarity for Alaskans."

While the Attorney General's opinion does not prescribe how AS 15.13 should be amended to conform with Citizens United, SB 284 amends AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a) to no longer prohibit labor unions and corporations from making independent expenditures in state election campaigns and additionally amends, and adds to, the body of state law governing the reporting of expenditures and the identification of communications in state elections.

MEMORANDUM March 17, 2010

SUBJECT: Amendments E.4 and E.5 to CSSB 284(JUD)
(Work Order No. 26-LS1448\E)

TO: Senator Bill Wielechowski
Attn: Shelly Morgan

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TAB
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the amendments described above.

Amendment E.4
Amendment E.4 prohibits a foreign national from making directly, or indirectly, a contribution or expenditure in connection with a state election.

The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) prohibits any foreign national from contributing, donating, or spending funds in connection with any federal, state, or local election in the United States, either directly or indirectly.[1] Because 2 U.S.C. 441e already clearly prohibits foreign nationals from making campaign contributions, expenditures, and independent expenditures in federal, state, and local elections, a state effort to legislate in this area may face a preemption challenge.

The Supremacy Clause, Art. VI, cl. 2 of the Constitution of the United States, provides:

> This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Alaska Supreme Court has noted that "[u]nder the Supremacy Clause of the federal constitution, state laws that interfere with federal laws are invalid." Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1161, n. 12 (Alaska 2009), quoting State v. Dupier, 118 P.3d 1039, 1049 (Alaska 2005). The court recently summarized federal preemption law as follows:

> There is a presumption against federal preemption of state law, and preemption doctrine "enjoin[s] seeking out conflicts between state and > federal regulation where none clearly exists." Additionally, "[w]here co-ordinate state and federal efforts exist within a complementary administrative framework, and in the pursuit of common purposes," . . . "the case for federal pre-emption becomes a less persuasive one." But where state law comes into conflict with federal law, the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution dictates that state law must always yield.

> There are three major types of federal preemption of state law: "express," "field," and "conflict" preemption. Express preemption occurs when Congress explicitly declares an intent to preempt state law in a particular area. . . .
> Field preemption is the term used when the federal law governing a particular area is so comprehensive and so complete that Congress is said to have completely occupied a field, leaving no room for state law. We "will not infer an intent to occupy the field where Congress has left some room for state involvement." . . .
> Conflict preemption occurs when a state law and a federal law are in conflict, either because compliance with both state and federal law is impossible or because the state law "stands as an obstacle to accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." . . .

Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1160 - 1161 (Alaska 2009) (citations and footnotes omitted).

The state clearly does not have authority to regulate contributions and expenditures in campaigns for federal office; that has been expressly preempted by federal law. 2 U.S.C. 453 (specifying that the provisions of the federal election campaigns act "supersede and preempt any provision of state law with respect to election to federal office."); 11 C.F.R. 108.7(b)(3) (federal law "supersedes state law concerning the . . . [l]imitation on contributions and expenditures regarding Federal candidates and political committees.").

Whether the state may regulate contributions and expenditures from foreign nationals in campaigns for state office is less clear. I am not aware of any federal statute or regulation which expressly preempts state regulation of foreign contributions and expenditures in campaigns for state office. However, field preemption may come into play here. To the extent a court found that the federal law governing contributions and expenditures by foreign nationals is so comprehensive and complete as to "occupy the field," it could invalidate state law attempting to cover the same ground. To the extent that the state and federal laws conflict, conflict preemption is also a possibility. Proposed AS 15.13.068(c) is an attempt to avoid conflicts with federal law as much as possible, but it may not succeed.

Amendment E.5 prohibits a person that is owned or controlled, in any part, by a foreign national from making an expenditure in connection with a state election. This amendment raises significant First Amendment issues. Given that that federal law already prohibits foreign nationals from directly or indirectly making contributions or expenditures in connection with a state election, I don't know what compelling state interest would serve as justification for such a prohibition. Because any large publicly traded domestic corporation is likely to have some foreign shareholders, a court is likely to interpret such a provision, if enacted, as an indirect prohibition against independent expenditures made by these persons, a violation of the First Amendment under Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. ___ (2010).

Because the amendment applies only to persons that are owned or controlled in some part by foreign nationals, whether the ownership interest be a majority interest or a de minimus minority interest, the amendment also raises equal protection issues. Alaska evaluates equal protection claims using a sliding scale.[2] There are several steps involved. First, the court determines the importance of the interest impaired by the challenged statute. Then the court looks at the purposes served by the statute. Finally, the court looks at how well the statutory means fits the purpose. "The common question in addressing equal protection cases is whether two groups of people who are treated differently are similarly situated and thus entitled to equal treatment."[3] In order for a classification to be valid under the state's equal protection test, it must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must bear a fair and substantial relation to a legitimate governmental objective. Wilson v. Municipality of Anchorage, 669 P.2d 569, 572 (Alaska 1983). Under the amendment, a domestic corporation with .005 percent foreign ownership, in which a foreign national or nationals are unable to exert any meaningful control, would be treated differently from a publicly traded corporation that, by chance, has no shares held by foreign nationals. A court is unlikely to interpret this disparate treatment of domestic corporations as reasonable, and I don't know what state interest could be articulated as justification for such a prohibition.

MEMORANDUM March 17, 2010

SUBJECT: Committee questions of March 15, 2010 (CSSB 284(JUD))
(Work order No. 26-LS1448\E)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

As part of a legislative response to the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010), you requested a legal opinion as to whether the state could prohibit independent expenditures made in connection with a state election, by (1) foreign nationals, (2) American subsidiaries of foreign nationals, (3) domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, and (4) domestic corporations or entities not domiciled in Alaska.

Any statute prohibiting a person from making an independent expenditure in connection with a state election is likely to be challenged on First Amendment grounds. A state prohibition against independent expenditures made by foreign nationals, who are already prohibited from making contributions or expenditures in connection with federal, state, or local elections under federal law, raises federal preemption issues. Prohibiting independent expenditures by domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, and domestic corporations or entities not domiciled in Alaska raise additional constitutional issues.

First Amendment

The First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States protects freedom of speech and freedom of association.[1] Independent expenditures made in connection with state elections are protected speech under the First Amendment. See Randall v. Sorrell, 548 U.S. 230 (2006), and Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976).

[1] Note that the freedom of speech provision in article I, section 5 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska is more protective of speech than the United States Constitution's First Amendment. Mickens v. City of Kodiak, 640 P.2d 818, 820 (Alaska 1982); Messerli v. State, 626 P.2d 81, 83 (Alaska 1980).

An attempt to prohibit independent expenditures by any class or category of persons is likely to encounter constitutional problems associated with First Amendment protections of the rights of association and expression.

> The concept that government may restrict the speech of some elements of our society in order to enhance the relative voice of others is wholly foreign to the First Amendment, which was designed "to secure the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources," and "to assure unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people."

Buckley, 424 U.S. at 48 - 49 (quoting New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 266, 269 (1964) (citations omitted)). In State v. Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 978 P.2d 597 (1999), the Alaska Supreme Court observed that existing campaign finance jurisprudence was based on the threat of corruption. Id. at 606 - 607. The Supreme Court has recently concluded that "independent expenditures, including those made by corporations, do not give rise to corruption or the appearance of corruption." Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___, Slip op. at 42 (January 21, 2010).

Given that independent expenditures have not been found to present a risk of corruption or the appearance of corruption, a state effort to prohibit independent expenditures from any source may face significant First Amendment hurdles.

The state's interest in prohibiting independent expenditures made by nonresidents or persons domiciled outside the state

I am not aware of any applicable judicial decision holding that protecting state residents from nonresident domination or enhancing voter participation is a compelling state interest. See Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 978 P.2d at 615. Instructive, however, is VanNatta v. Keisling, 151 F.3d 1215 (9th Cir. 1998), in which the Ninth Circuit invalidated a geographically based restriction on political contributions enacted by initiative in Oregon. The court found:

> Measure 6 bans all out-of-district donations, regardless of size or any other factor that would tend to indicate corruption. Appellants are unable to point to any evidence which demonstrates that all out-of-district contributions lead to the sort of corruption discussed in Buckley. . . . Measure 6 is not closely drawn to advance the goal of preventing corruption and under this analysis fails to pass muster under the First Amendment.

Id. at 1221. The proponents of the initiated law in VanNatta also offered an alternate justification for the measure, apart from the corruption rationale. They argued that the measure protected the state's interest in the integrity of republican government by, in the court's words, "assuring that representatives are truly selected by their own constituents." Id. However, the court rejected this justification, observing that "[t]he right to a republican form of government has never been recognized as a sufficiently important state interest." Id., citing Whitmore v. Federal Election Comm'n, 68 F.3d 1212 (9th Cir.1995) (rejecting the same argument as a justification for a ban on out-of-state contributions in Alaska). A state law prohibiting independent expenditures made by persons who are citizens of, or who are domiciled in, other states would be similarly evaluated by a court, and absent some evidence showing the corrupting influence of non-resident expenditures, would be struck down by a court.

Privileges and immunities

Prohibiting independent expenditures from non-residents would also be subject to challenge under the privileges and immunities clause. The federal privileges and immunities clause restricts the state's ability to interfere with the fundamental rights of non-residents. See Robison v. Francis, 713 P.2d 259, 263 (Alaska 1986). The Alaska Supreme Court has summarized the effect of the privileges and immunities clause as follows:

> Article IV, section 2 prohibits discrimination against nonresidents "where there is no substantial reason for the discrimination beyond the mere fact that they are citizens of other states." No "substantial reason" will be found absent some showing that nonresidents are "a peculiar source of the evil" which the state's action is meant to remedy. In addition, the discrimination worked upon nonresidents must "bear a substantial relationship to the particular 'evil' they are said to present." Only if the challenged discriminatory action surmounts both of these hurdles will it survive privileges and immunities clause scrutiny.

Noll v. Alaska Bar Association, 649 P.2d 241, 244 (Alaska 1982) (quoting Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 396 (1948), and Hicklin v. Orbeck, 437 L.Ed.2d 397, 404 (1978); citations omitted). So, in addition to having to provide a "compelling justification" for the measure to satisfy the First Amendment, you would also need to show a "substantial reason" why a prohibition against independent expenditures should apply only to non-residents in order to withstand a privileges and immunities clause challenge.

If the state were to prohibit domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, or domestic corporations or other organizations not domiciled in the state from making independent expenditures in connection with a state election, the prohibition would likely also face an equal protection challenge. "The common question in addressing equal protection cases is whether two groups of people who are treated differently are similarly situated and thus entitled to equal treatment."[2] In order for a classification to be valid under the state's equal protection test, it must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must bear a fair and substantial relation to a legitimate governmental objective. Wilson v. Municipality of Anchorage, 669 P.2d 569, 572 (Alaska 1983). Alaska evaluates equal protection claims using a sliding scale.[3] There are several steps involved. First, the court determines the importance of the interest impaired by the challenged statute. Then the court looks at the purposes served by the statute. Finally, the court looks at how well the statutory means fits the purpose.

Because federal law prohibits foreign nations from making contributions or expenditures, directly or indirectly, in connection with a state election, it is not clear to me what state purpose any of these possible prohibitions would serve. Consequently, I do not know how a court would evaluate the state's interest in prohibiting domestic subsidiaries of foreign corporations, domestic corporations owned in part by foreign nationals, or domestic corporations or other organizations not domiciled in the state from exercising their First Amendment right recognized in Citizens United to make independent expenditures.

Preemption

In Citizens United, the Supreme Court neither considered nor overruled the existing federal law that prohibits a "foreign national" from making a direct or indirect expenditure in connection with a federal, state, or local election. The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) prohibits any foreign national from contributing, donating, or spending funds in connection with any federal, state, or local election in the United States, either directly or indirectly.[4] Because 2 U.S.C. § 441e already clearly prohibits foreign nationals from making campaign contributions, expenditures, and independent expenditures in federal, state, and local elections, a state effort to legislate in this area may face a preemption challenge.

The Supremacy Clause, Art. VI, cl. 2 of the Constitution of the United States, provides:

> This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Alaska Supreme Court has noted that "[u]nder the Supremacy Clause of the federal constitution, state laws that interfere with federal laws are invalid." Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1161, n. 12 (Alaska 2009), quoting State v. Dupier, 118 P.3d 1039, 1049 (Alaska 2005). The court recently summarized federal preemption law as follows:

> There is a presumption against federal preemption of state law, and preemption doctrine "enjoin[s] seeking out conflicts between state and federal regulation where none clearly exists." Additionally, "[w]here co-ordinate state and federal efforts exist within a complementary administrative framework, and in the pursuit of common purposes," . . . >

Allen v. State, 203 P.3d 1155, 1160 - 1161 (Alaska 2009) (citations and footnotes omitted).

The state clearly does not have authority to regulate contributions and expenditures in campaigns for federal office; that has been expressly preempted by federal law. 2 U.S.C. § 453 (specifying that the provisions of the federal election campaigns act "supersede and preempt any provision of state law with respect to election to federal office"); 11 C.F.R. 108.7(b)(3) (federal law "supersedes state law concerning the . . . Whether the state may prohibit independent expenditures from foreign nationals in campaigns for state office is less clear. I am not aware of any federal statute or regulation which expressly preempts state regulation of foreign expenditures in campaigns for state office. However, field preemption may come into play here. To the extent a court found that the federal law governing contributions and expenditures by foreign nationals is so comprehensive and complete as to "occupy the field," it could invalidate state law attempting to cover the same ground. To the extent that the state and federal laws conflict, conflict preemption is also a possibility.

MEMORANDUM March 15, 2010

SUBJECT: Drafting issues (CSSB 284(JUD)) (Work Order No. 26-LS1448\R)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the Committee Substitute you requested. I have three comments.

1. The requirement added by this draft's sec. 12 15.13.090(a)(2)(E), that "a person other than a candidate, an individual, or a political party shall clearly . . . state that [a] communication, if made to influence the outcome of an election for elective office, is not authorized or approved by any candidate[,]" is unnecessary. Existing AS 15.13.135(b)(2) already provides:

> (b) An individual, group, or nongroup entity who makes independent expenditures for a mass mailing, for distribution of campaign literature of any sort, for a television, radio, newspaper, or magazine advertisement, or any other communication that supports or opposes a candidate for election to public office . . . shall place the following statement in the mailing, literature, advertisement, or other communication so that it is readily and easily discernible:
> This NOTICE TO VOTERS is required by Alaska law. (I/we) certify that this (mailing/literature/advertisement) is not authorized, paid for, or approved by the candidate.

You may wish to consider an amendment to remove the redundant requirement of the bill's sec. 15.13.090(a)(2)(E).

2. The crime of campaign misconduct in the second degree is defined by AS 15.56.014. AS 15.56.014(a)(2) of that section provides that > handbill, paid-for television or radio announcement, or communication, as that term is defined in AS 15.13.400, intended to influence the election of a candidate or outcome of a ballot proposition or question without the words "paid for by" followed by the name and address of the candidate, group, or individual paying for the advertising or communication and, if a candidate or group, with the name of the campaign chair . . . (emphasis added).

The phrase "candidate, group, or individual" should be amended to "person" to correspond to the changes made by the bill to AS 15.13.090.

3. Under sec. 12 of the bill (AS 15.13.090), the "five largest contributors" to the person paying for a communication must be identified in communications made by the person. The phrase "largest contributors" could be interpreted to refer to the size of the contributor. "Largest contributor" might be best replaced with "contributors of the largest amounts." Also, Mr. Ptacin, of the Department of Law, has expressed concern that the bill does not address the possibility of a person paying for a communication having more than five contributors that donate exactly equal amounts. I do not know how likely it is that a person would have contributors of equal amounts. This may be an issue that the Alaska Public Offices Commission (commission) can address in regulation, or, if it is your intent, some mechanism could be provided in the bill to deal with this scenario. Whether or not further clarification is required may be a matter that you wish to discuss with a member of the commission.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

The term "director" means any director of a corporation or any person performing similar functi with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

MEMORANDUM March 12, 2010

SUBJECT: Expenditures, independent expenditures, and the effect of amendment 26-LS1448\A.8 to SB 284

TO: Senator John Coghill
Attn: Rynnieva Moss

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies amendment A.8 to SB 284.

This amendment would make explicit that the only expenditures that the bill permits, beyond those that are currently allowed, are the independent expenditures that the Court, in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010) (a case about independent election campaign expenditures made by corporations),[1] held could not be prohibited under the First Amendment.

The United States Supreme Court's Citizens United decision spoke in terms of "independent expenditures" in the course of an election campaign. Since the legal distinction between an "expenditure" on behalf of a candidate made by a corporation or labor union and a "contribution" from that corporation or labor union to the candidate is not entirely clear,[2] it seems best to follow the court's lead and to make explicit in the bill

[1] Because one of the statutes involved in this case and considered by the Court concerned labor unions, it also, arguably, is a case about independent election campaign expenditures made by labor unions, though that is not made explicit in the U. S. Supreme Court opinion.

[2] See definitions for "contribution" and "expenditure" at AS 15.13.400:

> (A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made and that is made for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of a candidate, and in AS 15.13.010(b) for the purpose of influencing a ballot proposition or question, including the payment by a person other than a candidate or that the only expenditures that may be made under AS 15.13 by a person that is not a candidate, individual, group, or nongroup entity, are independent expenditures.

political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that are rendered to the candidate or political party; . . .

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party;

(6) "expenditure"

(A) means a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate or of any individual who files for nomination at a later date and becomes a candidate;

(ii) use by a political party;

(iii) the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party of compensation for the personal services of another person that are rendered to a candidate or political party; or

(iv) influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question;

(B) does not include a candidate's filing fee or the cost of preparing reports and statements required by this chapter;

(C) includes an express communication and an electioneering communication, but does not include an issues communication;

As a drafting matter, amendment A.8 proposes to modify existing AS 15.13.067 to clarify that the only persons permitted to make an expenditure that is not an independent expenditure in a state election are those persons who are currently permitted to do so under state law. Because AS 15.13.067(c)(3) is to be retained, there is no need to repeal the reference to that section that appears in bill section 9. Since the remainder of bill section 9 consists of technical changes, this amendment eliminates bill section 9.

RE: Amendments to SB284

After speaking with Senator French, he would like the following amendments drafted for the committee's review tomorrow:

1. In section 3, clarify that it is full report of contributions and expenditures (per Mike Frank's suggestion).

2. Add language that makes it clear that a person making independent expenditures keep a separate account of funds used for this purpose.

3 The appropriate section or sections should be amended to clarify that in addition to ads that specifically support or oppose candidates, all ads during an election season that refer to a candidate for office must also disclose and use disclaimers.

4 Amend disclaimer language to include audio disclaimers, per attached language you drafted for the house bill.

MEMORANDUM March 10, 2010

SUBJECT: Constitutional Issues in CSHB 409(STA)
(Work Order No. 26-LS1495\S)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Chair of the House State Affairs Committee
Attn: Mike Sica

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the draft committee substitute you requested. I have some concerns about the constitutionality of some of its provisions.

1. Bill Section 8 (expenditures and contributions by foreign nationals).
The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) prohibits any foreign national from contributing, donating, or spending funds in connection with any federal, state, or local election in the United States, either directly or indirectly.[1] Whether the state may regulate contributions and expenditures from foreign nationals in campaigns for state office is not clear. Because 2 U.S.C. 441e already clearly prohibits foreign nationals from making campaign contributions, expenditures, and independent expenditures in federal, state, and local elections, a state effort to legislate in this area may face a preemption challenge. To the extent a court might find that the federal law governing contributions and expenditures by foreign nationals is so comprehensive and complete as to "occupy the field," it could invalidate state law attempting to cover the same ground.

2. Bill Section 10 (anonymous expenditures).
Conceptual amendment number 9 deleted a portion of AS 15.13.084 that permits an individual, acting independently of any other person, to make an anonymous expenditure to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition, if the expenditure is made for a (1) billboard, (2) sign, or (3) printed material, other than an advertisement in a newspaper or other periodical. In McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334 (1995), the United States Supreme Court recognized an individual's First Amendment right to anonymous speech. A statute that prohibits an individual from making any anonymous expenditure, no matter how small, in connection with a state election is unlikely to survive scrutiny under the First Amendment or art. I, sec. 5 of the state constitution.[2]

[1] See 2 U.S.C. § 441e, 22 U.S.C. § 611(b), and 11 C.F.R. 110.4.

[2] Note that the freedom of speech provision in article I, section 5 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska is more protective of speech than the United States' Constitution's

3. Bill Section 12 (precertification).
Subsection 15.13.090(c) requires the principal officer of a person (other than a candidate, individual, or political party) making a communication under AS 15.13.090 to certify to the Alaska Public Offices Commission that the officer has reviewed the communication and, based on the officer's knowledge, the communication is not defamatory and does not contain defamatory statements. This requirement burdens speech and may violate the First Amendment. Candidates, individuals, and political parties would not be required to provide these certifications, which creates a possible equal protection issue.

4. Bill Section 12 (identification of foreign ownership).
Subsection 15.13.090(e) requires a corporation or other person in which a foreign government holds a 10 percent ownership interest or more to identify the foreign government's ownership interest (in the person) in any communication under AS 15.13.090 paid for by that person. The regulation of foreign governments' involvement in state elections may be preempted by federal law (see 1., above). Requiring identification of a foreign government's ownership interest of 10 percent or more in a person paying for a communication under AS 15.13.090 also raises equal protection and First Amendment associational rights issues.

5. Bill Section 17 (severability).
This version of CSHB 409(STA) includes a severability provision. There is a general severability provision in the Alaska statutes (AS 01.10.030). Usually a severability clause is not included in a bill unless it is necessary to specify more details than are provided in AS 01.10.030.

Please note the changes to the title due to the inclusion of the adopted amendments.

The conceptual amendment to amendment #5 (26-LS1495\E.3) is located in a new subsection (f) to AS 15.13.090, found in sec. 12 of this draft.

Since the bill has passed out of your committee, please share the constitutional concerns identified in this memorandum with the next committee of referral. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

You requested an amendment that would require "in addition to ads that specifically support or oppose candidates, all ads during an election season that refer to a candidate for office [to] disclose and use disclaimers." Section 11 of SB 284 requires certain information to be identified in all communications. Communication is defined under AS 15.13.400(3):

> "communication" means an announcement or advertisement disseminated through print or broadcast media, including radio, television, cable, and satellite, the Internet, or through a mass mailing, excluding those placed by an individual or nongroup entity and costing $500 or less and those that do not directly or indirectly identify a candidate or proposition, as that term is defined in AS 15.13.065(c)[.]

Any communication that directly or indirectly identifies a candidate is required to contain the disclaimer and information required by AS 15.13.090. The expenditure or independent expenditure made to fund the communication must be disclosed to the Alaska Public Office Commission under AS 15.13.040.

I have placed this amendment on hold, pending further instruction from your office. If I have misapprehended the nature of your request or if you would like to cancel the amendment, please do not hesitate to contact me.

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB

I have one comment regarding amendment A.4.

If this amendment is to be incorporated into the bill, you may wish to consider further amending the bill to require a person to report to the Alaska Public Offices Commission (commission) when funds are deposited into, or expended from, the person's political activities account. Such a change would shift a number of the requirements of the current bill's expenditure report section (sec. 4 of SB 284, 26-LS1448\A) to the political activities account section added by this amendment. Reporting requirements for the political activities account would also have to be included.

Such a change is not legally or constitutionally required. At present, the bill requires a person making an expenditure under AS 15.13.040(d) to report the persons' contributors, if any, when making an expenditure report under AS 15.13.040(e). It may be more efficient for both persons making independent expenditures and the commission to have funds received into, and withdrawn from, a political activities account reported.

You may wish to confer with the appropriate personnel at the commission about the above suggestion.

If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

MEMORANDUM January 25, 2010

SUBJECT: Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission
(Work Order No. 26-LS1367)

TO: Representative Jay Ramras
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

You requested a legal analysis of the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, No. 08-205, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010), and its effect on Alaska law.

WHAT IS MOST SIGNIFICANT

The Court held that the government cannot suppress political speech on the basis of the speaker's corporate identity.

WHAT THE DECISION DOES NOT DO

This is a case about independent election campaign expenditures made by corporations. Because one of the statutes involved in this case and considered by the Court concerned labor unions, it also, arguably, is a case about independent election campaign expenditures made by labor unions, though that is not made explicit in the opinion. Laws regulating corporate and union contributions to candidates, party committees, and political action committees, whether direct or in-kind, are not directly affected by the ruling. Disclosure and disclaimer requirements for communications relating to elections for public office and laws requiring corporations and unions to identify the sources of money for their political activities are also unaffected.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL POSTURE

The case involved a documentary critical of the then potential presidential candidacy of Hillary Clinton. The documentary, "Hillary: The Movie," was produced by Citizens United, a nonprofit corporation. Anticipating that it would make the documentary available within a time period prohibited under the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA),[1] Citizens United sought declaratory and injunctive relief in the United

[1] 2 U.S.C. § 431 et seq. (also known as the McCain-Feingold Act (Pub. L. No. 107-155, 116 Stat. 81)).

States District Court for the District of Columbia seeking to prevent the Federal Election Commission (FEC) from enforcing provisions of the BCRA.[2] Citizens United argued that § 203 of the BCRA[3] violated the First Amendment on its face and as applied to the documentary and its related advertisements, and that §§ 201[4] and 311[5] of the Act, relating to disclosure, disclaimer, and reporting requirements were, as applied to the documentary, also unconstitutional.

The United States District Court denied the injunction, holding that under § 203 of the BCRA the documentary could not be shown on television in the 30 day period preceding the 2008 Democratic primaries. The court held that the BCRA prohibitions against corporate independent expenditures were constitutional, reasoning that the question had been answered by the Supreme Court in McConnell v. Federal Election Commission, 540 U.S. 93 (2003).[6] The United States District Court held that the documentary had no other purpose than to discredit Hillary Clinton and inform viewers that she was unfit for public office, and thus the provision of the BCRA relating to electioneering communications

[2] Citizens United v. Fed. Election Commission, 530 F. Supp. 2d 274 (D.D.C. 2008).

[3] Section 203 of the BCRA regulates "electioneering communications." Generally, these are broadcast, cable, or satellite communications made within 60 days of a general election or 30 days of a primary election. 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)(A)(i). Section 203 restricts corporations (other than media corporations) and labor organizations from funding electioneering communications from their general funds except under certain specific circumstances, e.g., get-out-the-vote campaigns. 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b)(2).

[4] Under § 201 of the BCRA, persons who disburse an aggregate of $10,000 or more a year for the production and airing of electioneering communications are required to file a statement with the Federal Election Commission (FEC) that includes the names and addresses of persons who have contributed in excess of $1,000 to accounts funding the communication. See 2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(1) and (2).

[5] Under the BCRA's § 311, the entity paying for a communication that is not authorized by a candidate or the candidate's political committee, must include in the communication a statement that the organization "is responsible for the content of this advertising." See 2 U.S.C. § 441d.

[6] In McConnell, the United States Supreme Court upheld § 203 as facially constitutional, reasoning that the justifications for regulating independent corporate expenditures constituting express advocacy "apply equally" to ads that are "the functional equivalent of express advocacy." Id. at 206. The Court held that the regulation of such independent expenditures was acceptable because the government has a compelling interest in countering the kind of "corrosive and distorting effect" identified in Austin. Id. at 205.

was not unconstitutionally applied. Lastly, the court ruled that the Act's disclosure, disclaimer, and reporting requirements were not unconstitutional as applied to the documentary or its advertisements.

Citizens United appealed the decision and the Supreme Court docketed the case on August 18, 2008,[7] hearing oral arguments on March 24, 2009. However, on June 29, 2009, the Supreme Court ordered the parties to reargue the case on September 9 after submitting briefs on the larger questions of whether the Court should overrule Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce, 494 U.S. 652 (1990)[8], that portion of McConnell 540 U.S. 93 (2003) that found § 203 of the BCRA to be facially valid, or both.

ANALYSIS

In Citizens United, 558 U.S. ___ (January 21, 2010), the Supreme Court considered (1) the validity of § 203 of the BCRA, which prohibits corporations and unions from using their general treasury funds to make independent expenditures for speech that is an "electioneering communication"; (2) the Court's prior holding in Austin that political speech may be banned based on the speaker's corporate identity; and (3) whether §§ 201 and 311 of the BCRA, which mandate disclaimer and disclosure requirements for Citizens United's ads, were constitutionally invalid.

Prohibitions on Independent Expenditures

The Court held that § 203 of the BCRA, which prohibits certain corporations and unions from using funds from their general treasuries[9] for certain independent expenditures made to influence the outcomes of elections for federal public office, was unconstitutional.[10] It

[7] Under § 403(a)(3) of the BCRA, the final decision of the district court in this case is "reviewable only by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States."

[8] In Austin, the Court upheld a Michigan law that barred corporations from using their general treasury funds to support or oppose any state candidate, even though the spending occurred independently of that candidate's campaign operation.

[9] Prior to the ruling, to spend money on "electioneering communications" under federal law, corporations and unions were required to establish political action committees (PACS) that had a separate legal identity from the corporation or union. PACS could receive limited donations from employees, shareholders, or organization members. Now, after the Citizens United decision, corporations and unions may spend money directly from their treasuries on independent expenditures to influence elections for public office.

[10] While § 203 of the BCRA applied equally to corporations and unions, independent expenditures made by unions were not an issue before the Court, and it is not explicit in the ruling that the BCRA's independent expenditure prohibition is lifted for unions.

determined that prohibitions on corporate independent expenditures are an impermissible "ban on speech," id. at 22, and that political speech does not lose First Amendment protection "simply because its source is a corporation," id. at 26.[11]

The Court held that the case could not be decided in an examination of the relevant provisions of the BCRA alone, because the fundamental legal rationale underlying the challenged provisions of the Act was itself unjustified by a sufficient governmental interest.[12] The Court held that this rationale, identified in Austin, the prevention of "the corrosive and distorting effects of immense aggregations of wealth that are accumulated with the help of the corporate form that have little or no correlation to the public's support for the corporation's political ideas," id. at 660, is inconsistent with the protections offered speech and speakers by the First Amendment.[13]

Precedent Overturned

The Court overruled Austin, and those portions of McConnell that upheld the BCRA's restrictions on independent expenditures made by corporations and labor organizations. It did so holding that "no sufficient governmental interest justifies limits on the political speech of nonprofit or for-profit corporations[,]" and "[g]overnment may not suppress political speech on the basis of the speaker's corporate identity." Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 50.[14]

---

[11] Of less immediate consequence, in the absence of acknowledgement by the Court of any permissible First Amendment distinctions between corporate and natural persons, the case raises questions relating to whether corporations' newly realized equality under the First Amendment will affect (1) the constitutionality of existing prohibitions against corporate contributions to candidates in elections for public office and (2) other corporate related constitutional jurisprudence. These remain for future litigation.

[12] "When constitutional questions are 'indispensably necessary' to resolving the case at hand, 'the court must meet and decide them.'" Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. at 4 of Roberts, C.J. (concurring opinion), quoting Ex parte Randolph, 20 F. Cas. 242, 254 (No. 11, 558) (CC Va. 1833) (Marshall, C.J.).

[13] The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . . ."

Given the Court's interpretation of the requirements of the First Amendment, existing distinctions between "express advocacy" versus "issue advocacy" and "independent expenditures" versus contributions to candidates are less clear. Citizens United does not address these distinctions, but the logic underlying the decision suggests that they may soon be revisited.

[14] In addition to overturning Austin, the Court dismissed arguments that independent corporate expenditures in elections for federal office give rise to corruption or its appearance (Citizens United at 41 - 45) and that the government has a compelling interest

Disclosure and Disclaimer Requirements

The Court upheld the BCRA's disclosure and disclaimer requirements which were applied to the documentary (§§ 201 and 311 of the Act), holding that such requirements "may burden the ability to speak, but they 'impose no ceiling on campaign-related activities,' [Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 64 (1976)] and 'do not prevent anyone from speaking,' McConnell, [540 U.S.] at 201." Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 51. Citing Buckley and McConnell, the Court held that these requirements bear a substantial relation to the government's interest in ensuring that the electorate is able to evaluate the arguments to which it is being subjected, and that Citizens United did not demonstrate that the requirements imposed a chill on the organization's (or the organization's members') speech or expression. Id. at 51 - 56.

EFFECT ON ALASKA LAW

1. Under existing AS 15.13.067 (who may make expenditures in an election for candidates for elective office) and AS 15.13.135 (independent expenditures for or against candidates), only individuals, groups, and nongroup entities, as these terms are defined under AS 15.13.400, are permitted to make independent expenditures supporting or opposing candidates in elections under AS 15.13.[15] The terms "individual," "group," and "nongroup entity" are defined at AS 15.13.400. Together, these provisions effectively prohibit independent expenditures by for-profit corporations, and are likely to be interpreted by a court as unconstitutional in light of this decision.[16]

2. For-profit corporations are currently prohibited from making independent expenditures for or against candidates in elections under AS 15.13. Because of that, existing state statutes relating to (1) disclosure of expenditures, (2) limitations on expenditures, (3) identification of communications, and (4) filing of reports[17] under AS 15.13 do not currently account for independent expenditures and communications by for-profit corporations. Given the silence of our state statutes, and the likelihood that our existing in regulating corporations' independent expenditures to protect dissenting shareholders from being compelled to fund corporate political speech. (Citizens United at 46 - 47).

[15] Under AS 15.13.010(a), AS 15.13 applies to elections for governor, lieutenant governor, a member of the state legislature, a delegate to a constitutional convention, and a judge seeking judicial retention, and to elections for municipal office in municipalities with a population of more than 1,000 inhabitants unless the municipality has exempted itself from the provisions of the chapter.

[16] These statutes remain the law for the State of Alaska. If left unchanged, will they be enforced? The state could attempt to enforce them; however, enforcement would likely be quickly curtailed once the aggrieved party petitioned the state's courts.

[17] See AS 15.13.040, AS 15.13.082, AS 15.13.090, and AS 15.13.110.

statutes will not be enforced following the Court's holding in Citizens United, there are now no limits on independent expenditures made by for-profit corporations and no statutory disclosure, identification, or reporting requirements for these expenditures.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

AS 15.13.040(e)(4) could benefit from expansive definitions. See Paragraph 3 of my letter last week. These definitions may help.

The term "officer" means a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer or principal financial of comptroller or principal accounting officer, and any person routinely performing corresponding functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

The term "director" means any director of a corporation or any person performing similar functi with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

Hi:

That is a valid concern re the top 5.

Defining director and officer:

To follow up on the letter I submitted, APOC could best administer the proposed legislation if "principle officer" and "director" were defined. I believe SB 284 Section 4 wants any person routinely performing the duties of an officer or director to be included on the APOC reporting form.

I believe that the phrase "any person performing similar functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated," or some variation of this language, would apply the reporting requirement to loosely affiliated groups, labor unions, LLC's, essentially to any organization not in the corporate form. It would assist APOC administration because it clarifies that anyone acting as a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer or principal financial officer, comptroller or principal accounting officer, etc., regardless of title, would need to report under Section 4 of the proposed legislation.

Hi John!

I am on the run and meant to get back to you yesterday - We looked at your idea for the 5-top contributors and I am not sure it will work. This is for a disclaimer in advertising and even doing 5 is pushing ad time! If there were more I don't see how it could be done. We're all still thinking about this requirement so I'll try to come up with something...

Do we have unincorporated corporations? Is that possible?

AS 15.13.040(e)(4) could benefit from expansive definitions. See Paragraph 3 of my letter last week. These definitions may help.

The term "officer" means a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer or principal financial officer, comptroller or principal accounting officer, and any person routinely performing corresponding functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

The term "director" means any director of a corporation or any person performing similar functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

Did you have any suggestions for how to handle multiple top contributors if there are more than 5?

I've sent your letter over to Alpheus to think about as well, but any suggested language is always helpful!

MEMORANDUM

STATE OF ALASKA
DEPARTMENT OF LAW

TO: Mike Nizich
Chief of Staff
Office of the Governor

DATE: February 19, 2010

FROM: Daniel S. Sullivan
Attorney General

SUBJECT: Analysis of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission and its Impact on Alaska Campaign Finance Laws

The following is our response to your request for an analysis of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission 558 U.S. ___, --- S.Ct. ---- (2010) and how that decision impacts Alaska's campaign finance laws. The ruling affects the balance between a government's interest in ensuring transparent and fair elections and the First Amendment rights of organizations, such as corporations and labor unions, to engage in political speech. In this memorandum we will describe the holding of the case as well as its direct and indirect effects on Alaska law.

I. Summary

Our analysis addresses two main points. First, under Citizens United, Alaska may not prohibit political speech by corporations and labor unions altogether.[1] As a result, our laws prohibiting independent expenditures by corporations and labor unions in a candidate election are likely unconstitutional.

Second, Alaska's laws regarding contributions to candidates, coordinated expenditures, disclaimers, and disclosures are not directly affected by Citizens United. Alaska's laws continue to regulate corporate and labor union political speech through disclaimer and disclosure requirements. However, some disclaimer and disclosure laws that provide specific standards for reporting and identification of expenditures do not currently apply to corporations and labor unions.

II. Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission

On January 21, 2010, the United States Supreme Court issued its opinion in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission.[2] The Court's main holding was that "the Government may regulate corporate political speech through disclaimer and disclosure requirements, but it may not suppress that speech altogether."[3] The particular federal law reviewed by the Court, part of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002,[4] prohibited corporations and unions from using their general treasury funds to make independent expenditures for speech that is an electioneering communication or for speech that expressly advocates the election or defeat of a candidate.[5] The Court held that this prohibition on corporate and labor union speech violated the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Because the First Amendment applies to states as well as the federal government, the ruling not only strikes down the federal requirement, it also calls into question similar provisions enacted by the State of Alaska.[6]

The Court further ruled that the disclosure and disclaimer laws under the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act are justified to provide the electorate with information about the sources of election-related spending and that disclosure assists citizens in making informed choices in the marketplace of political ideas.[7]

Under federal law, televised electioneering communications funded by anyone other than a candidate must include a disclaimer describing the entity responsible for the content of the ad. The required statement must be made in a clearly spoken manner and displayed on the screen in a clearly readable manner for at least four seconds. It must state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee and it must display the name and address of the person or group that funded the advertisement. Id. (citing 2 U.S.C. § 441d(a)(2)).

III. The Direct and Indirect Impacts of Citizens United on Alaska Laws

A. Overview

Alaska campaign finance laws regulate a majority of state elections, the ballot proposition process, lobbying, and the judicial retention process.[8] These laws regulate the conduct of candidates, political parties, individuals, lobbyists, corporations, labor unions, groups, and other entities. Both state and federal campaign finance laws make several important distinctions with respect to the application of such laws. For instance, Alaska campaign finance laws distinguish "contributions" from "expenditures." A contribution is basically a purchase, payment, or deposit rendered directly to a candidate or political party.[9] An expenditure is defined broadly to include several activities which are not direct contributions to candidates. Expenditures include direct payments for services but also include various communications.[10] An "independent expenditure" is a type of expenditure but is more limited in that it is made without any coordination with a candidate.[11]

Another important distinction is between disclosures and disclaimers. Certain campaign finance laws mandate public reporting of expenditures made. In campaign finance jurisprudence, these laws are referred to as disclosure laws. When a campaign finance law requires an identification to be placed on a communication, courts and campaign finance law commentators broadly refer to this as a disclaimer law. The Alaska Public Offices Commission enforces the legality of contributions and expenditures and also ensures that individuals and entities are properly disclosing and disclaiming their conduct as it relates to an election.[12]

[10] An expenditure is defined, in relevant part, as "a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of...influencing...[the outcome of an election]." Expenditures also include "express communications" and "electioneering communications." AS 15.13.400(6).

[11] An independent expenditure "means an expenditure that is made without the direct or indirect consultation or cooperation with, or at the suggestion or the request of, or with the prior consent of, a candidate, a candidate's campaign treasurer or deputy campaign treasurer, or another person acting as a principal or agent of the candidate." Citizens United directly implicates one key aspect of Alaska's campaign finance laws: Alaska's prohibition on independent expenditures by corporations or labor unions in candidate elections.[13] The decision does not directly call into question the constitutionality of any other contribution, expenditure, disclaimer or disclosure law. For example, Alaska's prohibition on direct contributions to candidates by corporations and labor unions is unaffected.[14] Candidates and their agents are still prohibited from accepting contributions from corporations and labor unions.[15] A corporation or labor union still may not directly or indirectly consult or cooperate with candidates or their agents when making an expenditure.[16] Individuals are still limited to contributing $500 per year to a candidate, and $5,000 per year to a political party,[17] and corporations and labor unions must continue to follow disclosure laws whenever applicable.[18] The current statutes and regulations that require that an independent expenditure in a candidate election be reported within 10 days will be applicable to a corporation or labor union that makes such an expenditure.[19] There must be some identification of corporations or labor

[16] AS 15.13.400(10). 2 AAC 50.270 provides guidance as to what constitutes an independent expenditure. Where an expenditure is based on information provided by the candidate or an agent of a group or nongroup entity, it is not an independent expenditure. An expenditure is not an independent expenditure if it is made based on data from a candidate's, group's, or nongroup entity's pollster or campaign consultant or any other person who receives compensation or reimbursement from the campaign. Solicitations to a candidate, group, or nongroup entity, or an expenditure made to finance distribution of campaign material provided by the candidate or his agents are not independent expenditures.

[18] See AS 15.13.400(14); AS 01.10.060. Because the relevant statutes define "person" to include a corporation or labor union, statutes and regulations that cover a "person" apply to any corporation or union making an independent expenditure in a candidate election.

[19] AS 15.13.040(d) states that "every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group making an expenditure shall make a full report of expenditures, upon a form prescribed by the commission, unless exempt from reporting." AS 15.13.040(e) states that "the report required under (d) must contain the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report, and an itemized list of expenditures. The report shall be filed with the commission no later than 10 days after the expenditure is made." The reporting requirement of AS 15.13.040(d) and (e) applies to all "persons" unions making an independent expenditure as they are subject to the requirement that such independent expenditures may not be made anonymously.[20]

B. Alaska's Prohibition on Expenditures – AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a)

Citizens United likely invalidates AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a) in their current form. Under AS 15.13.067, expenditures in candidate elections may only be made by candidates, individuals, groups, and nongroup entities. Under AS 15.13.135(a), "independent expenditures" in candidate elections may only be made by individuals, groups and nongroup entities. Because labor unions and corporations do not fall within the definitions of individual, group, or non-group entity,[21] AS 15.13.067 and AS 15.13.135(a) prohibit corporations and labor unions from making any expenditures in candidate elections. Alaska law defines expenditure broadly to include activities which are political speech.[22] After Citizens United, these specific prohibitions will not likely pass constitutional muster.

who make an expenditure. A person is defined to include corporations and unions. AS 15.13.400(14); AS 01.10.060.

Alaska regulations likewise require reporting of all independent expenditures. 2 AAC 50.270(c) provides that "a person making an independent expenditure must disclose the following on an independent expenditure report under AS 15.13.040 (d) and (e): (1) the date of the expenditure; (2) the amount of the expenditure; (3) the check number, if the expenditure is paid by check; (4) the name and address of the payee; (5) a description of items or services purchased; (6) identification of the candidate or ballot proposition the expenditure was intended to influence; (7) a statement as to whether the expenditure was intended to support or oppose the candidate or ballot proposition."

[20] AS 15.13.084 states that "a person may not make an expenditure anonymously," unless the expenditure is made by an individual acting independently and the expenditure is made for a billboard or sign, or printed material other than an advertisement in a newspaper or other periodical.

[22] Specifically, Alaska law prohibits corporations and labor unions from making express communications, electioneering communications, and any payment made to influence the outcome of a candidate election. AS 15.13.400(6)(A)(i);(C); see also AS 15.13.400(5), (7). Other parts of the expenditure definition do not implicate political speech. For example, expenditures include purchases made for the purpose of a political party or direct payment of personal services rendered to a candidate or political party. See, e.g., AS 15.13.400(6)(A)(ii)-(iii).

Accordingly, we recommend that these two statutes be amended to conform to the holding of Citizens United in order to clarify the extent to which corporations and labor unions may make independent expenditures.

C. Disclosure of Expenditures – AS 15.13.040(d) and (e)

The Supreme Court in Citizens United specifically upheld laws requiring the disclosure of independent expenditures. The Court found that the disclosure laws assisted the electorate in making informed choices in the marketplace of political ideas.[23] Accordingly, Citizens United does not suggest that Alaska's disclosure laws are in any way unconstitutional. Alaska Statute 15.13.040(d) and (e) is a disclosure law that broadly applies to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in a candidate election. It provides that any person making any expenditure must report the expenditure within 10 days. Because corporations and unions are deemed to be "persons" under Alaska law, this requirement applies to them as well.[24] Thus, the requirement to disclose is written broadly enough to require disclosure of expenditures made by corporations and labor unions.

D. Disclaimers For Communications – AS 15.13.084; AS 15.13.090; and AS 15.13.135(b)(2)

Citizens United upheld federal disclaimer laws.[25] Thus, the decision does not suggest that Alaska's disclaimer laws suffer from any constitutional infirmity. Alaska Statute 15.13.090 is a disclaimer law requiring certain communications to be identified by the words "paid for by" followed by the name of the candidate, group or nongroup entity paying for the communication. Alaska Statute 15.13.135(b)(2) is a disclaimer law which requires that certain independent expenditures contain a disclaimer that they are not authorized or paid for by a candidate. However, because corporations and labor unions were not permitted to make any expenditures in a candidate election, these specific statutes were not written to apply to them, and only refer to individuals, groups, and nongroup entities.

Corporations and labor unions are nevertheless subject to AS 15.13.084 which prohibits independent expenditures in a candidate election from being made anonymously; thus some identification is required.[26] This prohibition is very general and it is unclear how a corporation or labor union must identify itself when making the expenditure. This may create uncertainty among corporations and labor unions about how to proceed with speech protected under Citizens United. Therefore, consideration should be given to amending AS 15.13.084 to clarify how corporations or labor unions must identify themselves when exercising their right to make independent expenditures in an election. As discussed above, it would be constitutional to extend the requirements of AS 15.13.090 and AS 15.13.135(b)(2) to corporations and labor unions.

[24] See supra note 18. Cf 2 AAC 50.270(c) (reporting of independent expenditures applies to "persons," and thus to corporations and labor unions). Additionally, "persons," including corporations and labor unions, are required to preserve their expenditure records for up to 6 years after the expenditure is made. AS 15.13.111.

E. Other Reporting and Disclosure Issues – AS 15.13.110 and AS 15.13.086(2)

As stated above, Citizens United did not invalidate disclosure or disclaimer laws,[27] and Alaska statutes currently require all persons making independent expenditures to report those expenditures to The Alaska Public Offices Commission within 10 days.[28] However, policy makers should consider whether other forms of disclosure for corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in candidate elections are appropriate. For example, under AS 15.13.110, groups, nongroup entities, and candidates must file reports for election-related activity 30 days before an election, seven days before an election, and at year's end. The reporting requirements under AS 15.13.110 do not apply to "persons" and thus corporations and labor unions, like individuals, are exempt. Because corporations and labor unions were not allowed to make independent expenditures when this statutory scheme was created, we do not believe the drafters had corporations and unions in mind when this requirement was imposed only on candidates, groups and nongroup entities.

In addition to reporting expenditures, AS 15.13.110 requires groups,[29] nongroup entities,[30] and candidates[31] to include information regarding the source of all contributions in these reports. Under current Alaska law, corporations and labor unions would be required to report only their expenditures.[32] But as there is currently no Alaska law that requires a corporation or labor union to report the source of funds used to make expenditures, corporations and labor unions could receive funds for the purpose of making an independent expenditure in a candidate election. This situation was not contemplated at the time these reporting statutes were enacted due to the prohibition on expenditures by corporations or labor unions in candidate elections.

Additionally, while candidate contributions exceeding $250 made within nine days of the election must be reported to The Alaska Public Offices Commission within 24 hours of receipt by the candidate,[33] under current law, an independent expenditure made within 10 days of a candidate election does not have to be reported until after the election.[34] The latter timeline now likely applies to corporations and labor unions making independent expenditures in candidate elections after Citizens United.

F. Independent Expenditures by Foreign Corporations

Federal law currently prohibits expenditures made by foreign nationals and foreign corporations in state elections.[35] Citizens United did not invalidate this law, nor did it decide whether the federal government has a compelling interest in preventing foreign individuals or associations from influencing our nation's political process.[36] Alaska law does not have a corresponding prohibition on expenditures made by foreign nationals or foreign corporations in our elections.[37]

IV. Conclusion

Citizens United has had both direct and indirect impacts on Alaska campaign financing laws. We recommend that those laws directly impacted by the ruling, the prohibition on expenditures by corporations and labor unions, be amended to provide more clarity to Alaskans. We also identify, for your consideration, other areas of law regulating expenditures that were indirectly impacted by this decision.

Re: Response to your Inquiry Regarding Senate Bill 284

In response to Citizens United v. FEC, Senate Bill 284 (SB 284), as proposed, permits companies and labor unions to make expenditures in candidate elections. Companies and labor unions would still be restricted from making contributions directly to candidates. Arguably, the definitions of expenditure and contribution overlap. See AS 15.13.400(4); 15.13.400(6)(A)(iii). Consider clarification of these definitions.

SB 284 (Section 11) would require the company or labor union to disclose the top five contributors to the expenditure. Section 11 does not clarify the proper disclosure if several contributors contribute the same amount of money. For instance, the company or labor union would have no statutory guidance if its top 10 contributors all contribute equally to the expenditure.

SB 284 (Section 4) would require the company or labor union to disclose each officer or director of the company or labor union. SB 284 allows entities other than corporations and labor unions to make expenditures in candidate elections. It may be appropriate to expand this disclosure requirement to more than officers and directors.

These are my initial impressions and do not hesitate to contact me with further questions.

Blank lines may not be left between entries. A pawnbroker may not change a record in a register by obliteration, alteration, or erasure. A pawnbroker may correct a record in a register by drawing a line through the entry without destroying its legibility.

Sec. 08.76.200. Transaction agreement. A pawnbroker shall provide to a pledgor or seller a copy of the transaction agreement between the pawnbroker and the pledgor or seller. The agreement must clearly and conspicuously disclose

(1) the name and address of the pawnbroker and the name and mailing address of the pledgor or seller;

(b) A finance fee is considered to be earned on the day that the pawn transaction is entered into and on the first day of each subsequent 30-day period of the pawn transaction.

Sec. 08.76.220. Other charges allowed. (a) Except as provided in AS 08.76.280, a pawnbroker may charge a processing fee of not more than $5 for each pawn transaction for preparing and processing the pawn transaction documentation, providing law enforcement reports, paying expenses, providing other services, and for losses.

The agreement must clearly state the last day of the extension and the finance fee charged for the extension.

Sec. 08.76.260. Retention, storage, and lease. A pawnbroker shall store pledged property in a secure area and maintain the pledged property in an unaltered condition. A pawnbroker may not lease pledged property.

Sec. 08.76.270. Redemption. (a) Unless there is a hold order on the pledged property, the pledged property is subject to a claim under AS 08.76.370 or 08.76.380, or the property is returned to a lessor under AS 08.76.400, a pledgor may redeem pledged property by paying the amount financed and the finance fee in full before the pawnbroker's scheduled closing time on the maturity date.

(b) If a pledgor does not pay the amount financed and the finance fee in full before the pawnbroker's scheduled closing time on the maturity date, the pawnbroker shall hold the pledged property on the pawnbroker's business premises for a grace period of 30 days plus any extension allowed under AS 08.76.250. A pledgor may redeem the pledged property during the actual grace period by paying the amount financed and the finance fee, but a pledgor may not redeem pledged property after the pawnbroker's scheduled closing time on the last day of the actual grace period. In this subsection, "actual grace period" means the grace period plus any extension allowed under AS 08.76.250.

(c) If there is a hold order on pledged property, the pledgor may redeem the pledged property only when the hold order is released.

(d) If pledged property is subject to a claim under AS 08.76.370 or 08.76.380, the pledgor may redeem the pledged property only when the pledged property becomes available under AS 08.76.370 or 08.76.380 for redemption.

(e) If a pledgor does not redeem pledged property under (a) - (d) of this section, the title and all interest in the pledged property transfer to the pawnbroker.

(f) The holder of a transaction agreement is presumed to be the person who is entitled to redeem the pledged property that is the subject of the transaction agreement, and a pawnbroker shall deliver the pledged property to the person who presents the transaction agreement and pays the amount financed and the finance fee for the pawn transaction.

Sec. 08.76.280. Military personnel. A pawnbroker shall waive the unpaid amount financed and the finance fee due on a pawn transaction and hold, except as provided in AS 08.76.320 - 08.76.380, the pledged property that is the subject of the pawn transaction on the pawnbroker's business premises until 60 days after the pledgor, the pledgor's spouse, or the pledgor's dependent returns to the United States, if the pawnbroker receives a copy of military orders indicating that

(1) the pledgor, or the pledgor's spouse or dependent, is enlisted in the military service of a state or the federal government; and

(2) after the pawn transaction was entered into, the person was or is to be deployed abroad for service relating to a military conflict.

Sec. 08.76.290. Business operation method and hours. A pawnbroker may not engage in the business of being a pawnbroker

(1) by using a method, including a drive-through window, in which a person remains in a motor vehicle while conducting the pawnbroker transaction; or

Sec. 08.76.300. Waiver prohibited. A pawnbroker may not require or allow a person to waive a provision of AS 08.76.100 - 08.76.590.

Sec. 08.76.310. Employees. A pawnbroker may not knowingly employ a person to work in a pawnshop if, within five years before the employment begins, the person was convicted of, entered a plea of guilty to, entered a plea of no contest to, or had adjudication withheld for a felony, or for a misdemeanor involving dishonesty.

Sec. 08.76.320. Issuance of police hold order. (a) When a law enforcement officer has probable cause to believe that property in the possession of a pawnbroker at a pawnshop in the law enforcement officer's jurisdiction has been misappropriated, the law enforcement officer may issue a police hold order that directs the pawnbroker not to release or dispose of the property until the police hold order terminates or a court orders the release or disposal.

(b) Unless a pawnbroker or the pawnbroker's designee refuses to sign the police hold order, a police hold order begins when the pawnbroker or the pawnbroker's designee receives the police hold order. If the pawnbroker or the pawnbroker's designee refuses to sign the police hold order, the police hold order begins when the refusal occurs.

Sec. 08.76.330. Evidentiary hold order. (a) When property in the possession of the pawnbroker may be needed as evidence in a filed court action involving a criminal charge, a law enforcement agency may issue an evidentiary hold order to a pawnbroker that directs the pawnbroker not to release or dispose of the property until the evidentiary hold order terminates or a court orders the release or disposal.

(b) A pawnbroker who receives an evidentiary hold order under (a) of this section shall hold the property until the attorney general notifies the pawnbroker in writing of the disposition of the filed court action. The attorney general shall notify the pawnbroker within 15 days after the disposition of the filed court action for which the property may be needed as evidence.

Sec. 08.76.340. Contents and form of hold order. A hold order must be in writing and contain

(1) the name of the pawnbroker;

(2) if a police hold order, the name, title, and identification number of the law enforcement officer issuing the police hold order, and the name and address of the law enforcement agency for which the law enforcement officer is acting;

(8) the expiration date of the hold order.

Sec. 08.76.350. Duration of police hold order. (a) A police hold order may not exceed 30 days. However, a law enforcement officer may extend the police hold order for two additional successive 30-day periods by giving written notification to the pawnbroker before the expiration of each 30-day period.

(b) A law enforcement agency may not issue a new police hold order for the same property after the second additional 30-day period allowed under this section. However, the termination of the police hold order does not affect an existing evidentiary hold order on the same property or prevent the issuance of an evidentiary hold order for the same property.

(c) A law enforcement agency may release a police hold order before the end of a 30-day period by issuing a written release to the pawnbroker.

Sec. 08.76.360. Noncompliance with hold order. The department may suspend or revoke a pawnbroker's license if the pawnbroker knowingly fails to comply with a hold order.

Sec. 08.76.370. Claim notification. (a) If a person believes that property in the possession of a pawnbroker was misappropriated from the person, and if the person wants to obtain possession of the property from the pawnbroker, the person shall first notify the pawnbroker by certified mail, return receipt requested, of the person's claim.

(b) A notice under (a) of this section must contain a complete and accurate description of the property and must be accompanied by proof that the claimant owns the property and, if the claimant alleges that the property was stolen, a legible copy of a law enforcement agency's report indicating that the property was stolen.

(c) Except as provided in AS 08.76.380, a pawnbroker may not, for 30 days after the pawnbroker receives notice of the claim under this section, dispose of property that is the subject of a claim.

Sec. 08.76.380. Court action on claim. If a claimant and a pawnbroker do not resolve a claim within 10 days after the pawnbroker's receipt of a notice of the claim under AS 08.76.370, the claimant may bring an action in superior court to require the pawnbroker to return the property to the claimant. After a pawnbroker is notified that a court action has been filed, the pawnbroker may not dispose of the property until the court disposes of the court action, disposes of the property, or allows the pawnbroker to dispose of the property.

Sec. 08.76.390. Liability of pledgor. A pledgor or seller of property to a pawnbroker is liable to the pawnbroker for the full amount that the pledgor or seller received from the pawnbroker, all charges owed by the pledgor for the pawnbroker transaction, and attorney fees and other costs as allowed by the rules of court if, in an action under AS 08.76.380,

(1) the superior court determines that the pledgor or seller misappropriated the property from the claimant; and

(2) the superior court orders the pawnbroker to return the property to the claimant.

Sec. 08.76.400. Recovery of leased property. (a) If property in the possession of a pawnbroker was leased to a pledgor or seller when the pledgor or seller pledged or sold the property to the pawnbroker, but the property did not have a permanent label or other conspicuous mark identifying it as the lessor's property, the pawnbroker shall return the property to the lessor if the lessor

(1) provides the pawnbroker with evidence that the property was the lessor's property and was leased to the pledgor or seller at the time the property was pledged or sold to the pawnbroker; and

(2) pays the pawnbroker

Sec. 08.76.410. Law enforcement reports. (a) A pawnbroker shall provide a law enforcement officer with a law enforcement report in paper or in an electronic format on a weekly basis.

(b) A law enforcement report is confidential under AS 40.25.100 - 40.25.220, and a law enforcement officer and a law enforcement agency may only use a law enforcement report to investigate a crime involving the property that is the subject of the pawnbroker transactions of the pawnbroker.

Sec. 08.76.420. Contents of law enforcement reports. (a) A law enforcement report must contain

(1) a complete and accurate description of all property pledged to or purchased by the pawnbroker, including, as applicable, the property's

(A) brand name, model number, and manufacturer's serial number; and

(B) type of action and caliber or gauge, if the property is a firearm; and

(2) the number of the pawnbroker transaction document that the pawnbroker used to document the pawnbroker transaction.

(b) Notwithstanding (a) of this section, the description of the items under (a)(1) of this section is adequate if the description gives the quantity of the items and describes the type of the items if the pawnbroker transaction consists solely of multiple items that are of a similar type, do not have serial or model numbers, and do not contain precious metals or gemstones.

Sec. 08.76.430. Inspection by law enforcement entities. If a law enforcement agency provides the case number assigned to the investigation for which the inspection is being made, a pawnbroker may not refuse to allow the law enforcement agency to inspect during normal business hours the pawnbroker's register and the purchased property involved in the investigation or the unredeemed pledged property involved in the investigation.

Sec. 08.76.440. Discipline. (a) The department may, after notice to the licensee and reasonable opportunity to be heard, take the following disciplinary action against a licensee if the licensee or an officer, agent, or employee of the licensee violates AS 08.76.100 - 08.76.590:

(1) permanently revoke a license;

(2) suspend a license for a specified period;

(3) censure or reprimand a licensee;

Sponsor Statement SB292

"An Act relating to the registration and operation of pawnbrokers, to the exemption for pawnbrokers under the Alaska Small Loans Act, and to the exclusion of pawnbrokers under certain definitions in the Uniform Commercial Code; and providing for an effective date."

SB 292 institutes a regulatory framework for the operation of pawn shops in the State of Alaska. Currently, there is no codified regulation of this industry in statute – an oversight when it comes to consumer protection and protecting small businesses. Alaska is currently the only state without statewide regulation of the pawn shop industry.

Under present law, Alaska Statute 08.76.040 "The Disposition of Unredeemed Property" is the controlling language under which all pawnbrokers in Alaska currently conduct business. Under that statute, four paragraphs outline the redemption period, notices, and entitlements. SB 292 establishes a more robust structure that is easy for pawnbrokers to follow and effective for the state to regulate. This bill holds all pawn shops to the same transparent standard.

This legislation protects consumers as they will pay consistent rates and have specified rights throughout the State when utilizing pawn shops. It protects service-members who have pawned property and then been deployed, their interest will be frozen, and their property will be held until they return.

SB 292 helps business by providing a consistent regulatory framework under which to operate statewide. The legislation also assists local and state police forces by requiring a simple, but clear reporting system whereby all transactions are catalogued, inventoried and available to the authorities.

This legislation is not attempting to "fix a problem" that exists within the State. Rather it is a pro-active attempt to protect consumers and small businesses. I urge your support of this legislation

Cash America Statement

Why Alaska Should Regulate Pawnbrokers

SB 292 brings the pawn industry in Alaska into the 21st century. This bill marries the best of current regulation among the lower 48 states by instituting a regulatory framework for the operation of pawn shops in Alaska. Alaska is the only state in the nation without statewide regulation of pawn shops. This bill addresses this oversight and provides for needed consumer and business operator protections alike.

SB 292 is not attempting to fix a problem that exists currently. What it is trying to do is be proactive since current operators and their customers are vulnerable to unforeseen circumstances that could affect the industry. This proactive approach will protect both the consumer and business operator by instituting a regulatory framework under which to operate statewide.

Who pawnbrokers serve

In today's difficult economy, many people depend on pawnbrokers to help them meet daily financial needs not offered by other financial institutions. Pawn customers represent the working families of America who periodically experience an unexpected need for short-term funds. Pawn loans keep the electricity on, the rent paid and cars running with full tanks of gas. And pawn shops also provide a retail store environment where shoppers and sellers alike can save time and money by taking advantage of lower prices and favorable transaction terms.

Pawnshop customers have regular jobs, from working in hospitals to home construction. They support our economy by working in government, teaching our children and caring for the elderly, to name a few. Just like you, pawn customers have dreams; want better lives for their children and a stronger sense of security. However, they also have pressing bills and unforeseen financial issues.

According to GAO analysis of November 1999 Census, SIPP data, as many as 55 million people (28% of US adults) are un-banked. Pawn customers, therefore, use a pawn shop because they may or may not have a banking relationship and they find our pawnshops welcoming places to do business.

Average Pawn Customer

- Age: 36
- Household Income: $29,000
- 80% are employed
- 82% have high school diploma or GED
- 33% are homeowners
- All ethnicities

- Pawnbrokers are governed by all of the major federal laws that apply to other entities designated as financial institutions including:

- USA Patriot Act
- Truth-in-Lending Act
- Bank Secrecy Act and IRS regulations requiring reporting of certain cash transactions
- Trading with the Enemy Act and related Execute Orders and regulations
- Privacy provisions of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Financial Services Modernization Act
- FTC Privacy Rule
- FTC Safeguards Rule
- Fair Credit Reporting Act
- FTC Consumer Information Disposal Rule
- Equal Credit Opportunity Act
- Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

Highlights of SB 292:

- Regulated by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.
- Establishes a transparent operating structure for pawnbrokers to follow so customers know what to expect in any statewide shop.
- Holds pawnbrokers to a higher standard by strengthening the relationship between pawnbrokers and police agencies across the state.
- Assists law enforcement by providing for straight forward pawn transaction reporting requirements.
- Brings due process for misappropriated property to all parties involved.
- Allows our service members who have been deployed overseas the opportunity of not having to be concerned about any property that is in a pawnshop as this bill provides for the freezing of the interest charge and requires that items be held until their return.
- Standardizes the fee structure while maintaining the same rate cap.
- Allows customers who frequent a pawnshop for their financial needs an extra 30-day grace period upon the loan expiration date to retrieve their personal belongings.

RE: Senate Bill Number 297 – "An Act providing for the release of certain property in the custody of a law enforcement agency to the owner under certain conditions."

Dear Mr. Kopp:

The Alaska Office of Victims' Rights endorses Senate Bill Number 297 entitled, "An Act providing for the release of certain property in the custody of a law enforcement agency to the owner under certain conditions."

The Alaska Office of Victims' Rights appreciated the opportunity to speak with you directly on March 24, 2010 regarding the proposed legislation. The Alaska Office of Victims' Rights views this legislation as providing an important mechanism for crime victims to seek return of property seized during the course of a criminal prosecution.

It is the understanding of the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights that Senate Bill Number 297 is also endorsed by the Alaska Peace Officers Association and the Alaska Department of Law.

Thank you for the opportunity to meaningfully comment on Senate Bill Number 297.

SPONSOR STATEMENT

SB 297

An Act providing for the release of property in the custody of a law enforcement agency to the owner under certain conditions

All too often victims of theft and robbery are victimized a second time by bureaucracy. This is particularly true in cases of property crimes where demonstrable loss occurs to the victim's person or business as a result of property being held for a protracted period of time by a law enforcement agency, usually at the direction of prosecution, defense counsel and/or other interested parties.

SB 297 addresses the lack of a provision in the Alaska Code of Criminal Procedure that identifies a process for victims of property crime to petition the court for relief in recovering their property held as evidence. The law as currently written, provides discretionary authority to the prosecution for release of property, but does not clearly provide a right of hearing for a property owner to directly petition the court in those circumstances when property owners, prosecution and defense cannot come to agreement on return of property to the owner.

Victims of property theft often face the added burden of replacing stolen property. Small business owners who suffer property loss may face bankruptcy if the theft of property results in the inability to consummate a sale, continue their business operations, or the stolen property is uninsured or underinsured.

Property recovered by a law enforcement agency may be held as evidence for months or years. Property owners deserve protections in the law to ensure their property is held as evidence only as long as necessary for the prosecution and defense to physically retain the item, without jeopardizing the case.

SB 297 will provide property owners in the Alaska Code of Criminal Procedure, a clearly identifiable process to petition the court for the recovery of their property in those circumstances where they are otherwise not able to reach agreement with interested parties on the return of the property.

SENATOR FRED DYSON

SB 297 NOTES

1. Alaska Statutes - Title 12 Code of Criminal Procedure, Chapter 36 Disposition of Recovered or Seized Property, Sec. 20 Return of Property, provides the legal process for return of property.
2. 12.36.020(a) identifies those circumstances when a law enforcement agency may not return property to an owner.
3. 12.36.020(b) provides for the return of property to owners at the discretion of the prosecuting attorney where photographs are used as evidence in place of the property, stating the prosecuting attorney may release the property to the owner upon presentation of satisfactory proof of ownership.
4. 12.36.020(c) states that wrongfully taken or damaged property that is not properly photographed and authenticated under 12.45.086 Photographic evidence of property wrongfully taken or damaged, and used as evidence in a criminal or children's court proceeding, is to be returned to the owner within 60 days after the final disposition of the case.
5. Unfortunately, final disposition of the case may be protracted for a long period of time. The return of property to its rightful owner may be hindered by concerns of prosecution, defense, and/or other interested parties.
6. 12.45.086 Photographic evidence of property wrongfully taken or damaged, defines the process for admissibility of photographs as evidence in criminal and children's court proceedings. This section states that properly submitted photographs are to be regarded to the same extent as if the property itself was introduced as evidence. This sounds good, but in practice falls short of its intent. 12.45.086(c) seems to recognize this problem by singling out only the theft of commercial fishing gear as being property that shall be returned to the owner as soon as possible. Nearly all thefts of property from businesses should be returned to the rightful owners ASAP.
7. SB 158 (last session, endorsed by the Alaska Peace Officers Association) sought to amend 12.36.020(c) by providing an alternative to waiting for final case disposition, which can take years. This allowed for the possibility of a law enforcement agency controlling the property to consult with the prosecuting attorney and defense counsel to determine if the property is no longer required to be retained as evidence, and if agreed on by all parties, returned to the rightful owner. In retrospect, this language placed all the discretion with the criminal justice entities, and still left victim property owners powerless to recover their property.
8. SB 297 corrects that deficiency by providing directly to the property owner the right of a court hearing to recover possession of the owner's property, and requiring that the law enforcement agency prove to the court that another parties' interest in the property overrides the owner's interest in having it returned.
9. 12.36.090 Definitions of "law enforcement agency" includes the Office of District Attorney, Department of Law, as this is a public agency having one of its principal functions being the enforcement of the criminal law.

MEMORANDUM April 2, 2010

SUBJECT: CSSB 303( ) workers' compensation amendment (Work Order No. 26-LS1089\S)

TO: Senator Joe Paskvan
Chair of the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee
Attn: Jeff Stepp

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Removes a provision that requires a project owner to be liable for and secure payment for workers' compensation when the contractor fails to secure payment for the contractor's employees, or for subcontractor's employees.

If the employer is a subcontractor, the contractor is liable for securing payment of compensation for the employees of the subcontractor unless the subcontractor secures the payment.

Section 2. Amends the definition of a "contractor" for purposes of defining an employer's liability for workers' compensation by removing an exception that excludes a vendor who sells or leases tools, equipment, other goods, or property.

Section 3. Requires a subcontractor acting as an independent contractor who has no employees to secure payment for workers' compensation for the subcontractor, and to provide a certificate of workers' compensation insurance coverage for the project.

If a subcontractor fails to secure payment for workers' compensation causing a contractor to become liable for an additional premium, the subcontractor is liable to the contractor for the additional premium and penalties.

Section 4. Removes a definition of an "employer" that allows a person who is potentially liable for securing workers' compensation to benefit from the exclusive liability provisions of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.

Section 5. Repeals a specific definition of a "project owner."

Section 6. Gives the Act a January 1, 2011, effective date.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to a subcontractor's, contractor's, and project owner's liability for workers' compensation, to workers' compensation for independent contractors without employees, and excluding certain persons from liability for securing the payment of workers' compensation benefits to employees; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 23.30.045(a) is amended to read:

(a) An employer is liable for and shall secure the payment to employees of the compensation payable under AS 23.30.041, 23.30.050, 23.30.095, 23.30.145, and 23.30.180 - 23.30.215. If the employer is a subcontractor [AND FAILS TO SECURE THE PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO ITS EMPLOYEES], the contractor is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the subcontractor unless the subcontractor secures the payment [. IF THE EMPLOYER IS A CONTRACTOR AND FAILS TO SECURE THE PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO ITS EMPLOYEES OR THE EMPLOYEES OF A

SUBCONTRACTOR, THE PROJECT OWNER IS LIABLE FOR AND SHALL SECURE THE PAYMENT OF THE COMPENSATION TO EMPLOYEES OF THE CONTRACTOR AND EMPLOYEES OF A SUBCONTRACTOR, AS APPLICABLE].

 Sec. 2. AS 23.30.045(f)(1) is amended to read:

(1) "contractor" means a person who undertakes by contract performance of certain work for another [BUT DOES NOT INCLUDE A VENDOR WHOSE PRIMARY BUSINESS IS THE SALE OR LEASING OF TOOLS, EQUIPMENT, OTHER GOODS, OR PROPERTY];

 Sec. 3. AS 23.30.045 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(h) If a subcontractor fails to secure the payment required under (a) or (g) of this section and the contractor becomes liable for an additional premium because of the subcontractor's failure to secure payment, the subcontractor is liable to the contractor for the amount of the additional premium and associated penalties.

 Sec. 4. AS 23.30.055 is amended to read:

Sec. 23.30.055. Exclusiveness of liability. The liability of an employer prescribed in AS 23.30.045 is exclusive and in place of all other liability of the employer and any fellow employee to the employee, the employee's legal representative, husband or wife, parents, dependents, next of kin, and anyone otherwise entitled to recover damages from the employer or fellow employee at law or in admiralty on account of the injury or death. The liability of the employer is exclusive even if the employee's claim is barred under AS 23.30.022. However, if an employer fails to secure payment of compensation as required by this chapter, an injured employee or the employee's legal representative in case death results from the injury may elect to claim compensation under this chapter, or to maintain an action against the employer at law or in admiralty for damages on account of the injury or death. In that action, the defendant may not plead as a defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, or that the employee assumed the risk of the employment, or that the injury was due to the contributory negligence of the employee. [IN THIS SECTION, "EMPLOYER" INCLUDES, IN ADDITION TO THE MEANING GIVEN IN AS 23.30.395, A PERSON WHO, UNDER AS 23.30.045(a), IS LIABLE FOR OR POTENTIALLY LIABLE FOR SECURING PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.]

Sponsor Statement
Senate Bill 303
Workers' Compensation and Contractors

From statehood and for decades afterward, Alaska's workers' compensation statutes promoted safety in the workplace by providing for actions by injured employees against those on the jobsite, other than their own employer, whose fault caused the employee's injury.

Most Alaskans are shocked, then, to learn that the exclusive liability provisions of AS 23.30.055, established in 2004, protect a project owner or general contractor from any liability when a subcontractor's employee is injured or killed, even when the project owner or general contractor acts with criminal negligence, when that criminal negligence is defined, in part, as, "the risk must be of such a nature and degree that the failure to perceive it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the situation."

Senate Bill 303 seeks to return to the previous system which allowed for accountability and responsibility for wrongful conduct.

A fundamental principle when speaking to the concept of personal responsibility is: If you break it, you pay for it. This fundamental principle is thought of as a guiding standard and it is advanced as a family value worthy of passing from parent to child. We expect that if others do something wrong to us that the wrongdoer will be responsible and, correspondingly, if we do something wrong to another that we will be responsible.

In the common application of this fundamental principle to driving a vehicle, we expect that if we fail to stop for a red light and hurt someone that we will be responsible and that if someone else runs a red light that they will be responsible to us for the harm caused to a son, daughter, family member, or other loved one.

Just like responsible operators of motor vehicles know that they must follow the rules of the road (e.g., stopping for red lights), employers know that they must generally comply with state and federal codes, regulations, and laws relating to workplace safety, and are also subject to additional common law or statutory duties and responsibilities. Likewise, project owners, contractors and other entities have legal duties and responsibilities relating to the safety of workers.

Alaska has a system whereby the fault is apportioned so there can never be the worry that anyone will ever be responsible for more than their just share of the fault. However, where the project owner and/or contractor is at fault, but is nevertheless indemnified by the employer or granted immunity through legislation, the employer is left bearing the burden of the conduct of the project owner and/or contractor, and the project owner and/or contractor is not required to take any personal responsibility for its own actions.

Workers compensation has always been a system under which harm is only partially compensated. For example, if an unmarried worker without children is killed, the compensation benefits are modest funeral expenses only.

A common argument against the system prior to 2004 relates to the objection to "double dipping." However, prior to 2004, the monies recovered by the injured employee reimbursed the employer's compensation carrier for the benefits paid to the injured employee under the workers' compensation system; therefore, eliminating any notion of "double dipping."

I urge your support of this legislation.

This memorandum is in response to your request for a memo that provides short answers to the questions posed in the memorandum to your office dated March 23, 2010, and an additional question related to whether the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 apply when the actions of an owner or contractor constitute criminal negligence.[1]

1. May an owner or general contractor assert the exclusive remedy of the Alaska Workers Compensation Act, based on the last sentence of AS 23.30.055, to avoid liability for an injury to an employee of a subcontractor that occurs during employment?

The short answer is yes, based on the analysis in my prior memorandum.

2. Are the "intentional injury" and "illegally employed minor" exceptions the only recognized exception to the workers' compensation exclusive remedy statute?

The short answer is yes.[2]

3. Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect a project owner or general contractor from liability for the injuries to a subcontractor's employee if the owner or general contractor acts with criminal negligence?[3]

[1] My conclusions are based on existing law, not addressing the changes to AS 23.30.055 proposed in SB 303.

[2] My research of the Alaska case law did not reveal an additional exception to AS 23.30.055.

[3] The material provided describes criminal negligence as follows: "the risk must be of such a nature and degree that the failure to perceive it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the situation."

The short answer is yes.[4]

4. Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect an employer who intentionally injures an employee, or who violates child labor law?

The short answer is no, based on the analysis in my previous memo.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

[4] I am unable to locate caselaw, an administrative opinion, or an attorney general opinion in Alaska that addressed criminally negligent conduct in the context of a workers compensation claim. Absent intentional conduct, it is unlikely that a court would find criminally negligent conduct on the part of an employer to be the kind of conduct that should be outside of the operation of workers' compensation statutes. MEMORANDUM March 23, 2010

SUBJECT: Questions regarding workers' compensation exclusive remedy provisions (SB 303, Work Order No. 26-LS1089\R)

TO: Senator Joe Paskvan
Chair of the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee
Attn: Jeff Stepp

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey

This memorandum responds to your questions concerning the exclusive liability provisions of the existing Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.

May an owner or a general contractor assert the exclusive remedy provisions of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act to avoid liability for an injury to an employee of a subcontractor that occurs during employment?[1]

AS 23.30.055 sets out the exclusive liability provisions in the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act; the section reads:

> Sec. 23.30.055. Exclusiveness of liability.
> The liability of an employer prescribed in AS 23.30.045 is exclusive and in place of all other liability of the employer and any fellow employee to the employee, the employee's legal representative, husband or wife, parents, dependents, next of kin, and anyone otherwise entitled to recover damages from the employer or fellow employee at law or in admiralty on account of the injury or death. The liability of the employer is exclusive even if the employee's claim is barred under AS 23.30.022. However, if an employer fails to secure payment of compensation as required by this chapter, an injured employee or the employee's legal representative in case death results from the injury may elect to claim compensation under this chapter, or to maintain an action against the employer at law or in admiralty for damages on account of the injury or death. In that action, the defendant may not plead as a defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, or that the employee assumed the risk of the employment, or that the injury was due to the contributory negligence > of the employee. In this section, "employer" includes, in addition to the meaning given in AS 23.30.395, a person who, under AS 23.30.045(a), is liable for or potentially liable for securing payment of compensation.

Under AS 23.30.055, an employer's liability to secure workers' compensation under AS 23.30.045[2] is the exclusive liability of an employer for an injury to the employee. The last sentence of AS 23.30.055 adds to the definition of an "employer" a person who is potentially liable for securing workers' compensation payment. Under AS 23.30.045(a), a subcontractor, a contractor, or a project owner are each potentially liable for securing workers' compensation payments; therefore, any of them may assert the exclusive liability provisions of AS 23.30.055 as a defense.

Do the exclusive remedy provisions of AS 23.30.055 protect an employer who intentionally injures an employee or who violates child labor laws?

The Alaska Supreme Court has recognized an intentional injury exception to the exclusive remedy provisions in AS 23.30.055. The Alaska Supreme court has > held that [the] exclusive remedy provision does not apply where an employee commits an intentional tort against a fellow worker. We found that the "socially beneficial purpose of the work[ers'] compensation law

[2] AS 23.30.045 provides:

> Sec. 23.30.045. Employer's liability for compensation.
> (a) An employer is liable for and shall secure the payment to employees of the compensation payable under AS 23.30.041, 23.30.050, 23.30.095, 23.30.145, and 23.30.180 - 23.30.215. If the employer is a subcontractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees, the contractor is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the subcontractor. If the employer is a contractor and fails to secure the payment of compensation to its employees or the employees of a subcontractor, the project owner is liable for and shall secure the payment of the compensation to employees of the contractor and employees of a subcontractor, as applicable.

> would not be furthered by allowing a person who commits an intentional tort to use the compensation law as a shield against liability." We have permitted recovery for intentional torts "on the theory that the harm is not accidental and therefore not covered by the act."

Fenner v. Municipality of Anchorage, 53 P.3d 573, 575 (Alaska 2002) (internal cites omitted). The exception is limited to those cases where an employer has a specific intent to injure an employee. Id. at 577. See also Williams v. Mammoth of Alaska, 890 P.2d 581 (Alaska 1995) (exclusive remedy bars employee's common law tort claim against partner where partner's negligence arises within partnership business); Elliott v. Brown, 569 P.2d 1323 (Alaska 1977) (where employer hit and shoved employees, actions were intentional enough to take case outside workers' compensation system); Van Bien v. ERA Helicopters, Inc., 779 P.2d 315 (Alaska 1979) (aviation firm dispatching pilots without adequate sleep was gross negligence or wilful and knowing violation of FAA regulations, but not the type of intentional tort actionable outside of the workers' compensation system).

With regard to your question concerning the application of child labor laws to the exclusive liability provisions of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act, if an employer violates child labor laws, AS 23.30.055 does not bar a common law action for damages brought against an employer by a person who was employed in violation of child labor laws at the time of the injury. Whitney-Fidalgo Seafoods, Inc. v. Beukers, 554 P.2d 250 (Alaska 1976).

In the Beukers case, the Alaska Supreme Court found that the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act does not specifically address the question which remedies are available to illegally employed minors injured in the course of their employment. Id. at 252. However, the court held, as a matter of public policy, that > where an employer has knowingly entered into an illegal contract of employment with a child, in express violation of a statute, the employer will not be permitted to insist that a child is an "employee" within the terms of the workmen's compensation act, so that the child can no longer assert its common law rights against the employer.

DISPOSITION OF TERRITORIAL FUNDS.

The funds of the Territory have been deposited with various banks, and interest is being received upon them at the rate of two per cent. per annum, the funds being deposited as "open accounts." The banks of deposit have in all cases given bonds to the Territory for the safeguarding of the moneys in their hands.

TERRITORIAL MINING LAW.

The Territorial mining law (Chapter 74, Session Laws of 1913) has been and still is, a subject of much discussion for and against. It is urged by some that this law is confiscatory in some of its provisions and therefore should be repealed; others assert with equally strong convictions that the law is sound in principle and should be retained with some minor amendments. You come direct from the people and your course should be guided by what you believe will confer the greatest good upon the greatest number. Mining is the leading industry of the Territory and every legitimate encouragement should be afforded it. To handicap any industry by unjust or repressive restrictions is inimical to development, and upon the development of its resources will depend the growth and prosperity of the Territory and the consequent welfare of its people.

The report of the Territorial Inspector of Mines will be submitted to you, together with a number of recommendations, including amendments to the act relating to the inspection of mines in the Territory, and making the payment of wages to miners more secure and certain.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

What are known as workmen's compensation or employers' liability laws have been enacted by the Federal government and in many states, and are being favorably considered everywhere. Whether the time has come when this Territory should provide legislation for such compensation for industrial accidents, as may be considered just to both labor and capital, employer and employe, is a matter worthy of consideration, in view of our limited industries and the cost of administration that such law would entail. Of its advantages there can be no doubt, however, for in this way alone can the unfortunate employe, and sometimes the equally unfortunate employer, be protected from those who speculate upon the misfortunes of others. The subject must be approached in a spirit of fairness, with broad views of the dignity and importance of the laborer, aside from the labor that he performs, and also with a true conception of the rights of capital in its relation to industrial affairs. Each to a great extent, under our system of government, is dependent upon the other, but we must never forget the human equation. Money is for the use and support of the man; not to rule him. It is merely a measure of value, and those who have much of it should never be permitted to use it in such a way as to control the man, or the government which is established by him for his use and advancement.

AN EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

A law passed by the First session of the Legislature provides for an eight-hour day in all hard-rock and coal mines. This law I believe has been generally observed and has proved generally satisfactory. Under its operations placer mines are excepted, but there would seem to be no legitimate reason why the eight-hour day should not be extended to all kinds of underground and other mining. Speaking by and large, experience has demonstrated that a man who works eight hours a day will do as much work as he who works ten hours, and he will probably do it better.

ELECTIONS.

The need of a modified form of the Australian ballot system is imperative in this Territory. Under the present method many kinds of ballots are now used and it is frequently impossible for the voter to cast an independent ballot and maintain his sovereign right of citizenship. A simple, practical law that will meet present requirements is recommended. A law for the registration of voters in Territorial elections in all incorporated towns would be a logical concomitant of an improved ballot law.

In this connection I may be permitted to point out that a corrupt practices act would tend to promote purity of elections. Fortunately Alaska has been comparatively free from corruption in elections, but it has not been unknown.

Re: Senate Bill 303

Dear Senator Paskvan:

First let me thank you for your efforts in trying to correct an unfair provision in the worker's compensation law, passed during the corrupt reign of Bill Allen, which provides immunity to project owners or general contractors from fairly compensating a worker injured by the direct negligence of a project owner or general contractor.

My name is Pat Thompson, age 52, and I am an example of how this law you are trying to change can destroy a workingman's life.
I worked in the oil fields in Alaska my entire adult life and was proud to do so and was treated well.

On October 4 of 2006 I worked for PEAK Oilfield Services. On that day I was assigned a fire truck to help clean a Vac truck at the Beluga waste disposal facility that is owned and operated by Conoco Phillips. During the cleaning, I suffered a devastating electrical shock when I touched the Vac truck. These trucks are supposed to be grounded to protect against static electricity. Conoco failed to provide any kind of ground. If the ground had been provided, I would have used it.

I now live with a brain injury. My partner, Tory Sandoz, has helped me compose this letter, as I am unable to do this on my own. I am unable to provide a living for myself due to inability to organize, recall recent information, and physically move about for more than an hour or two without rest. I must take medicine to manage depression, nerve pain, stabilize mood. My relationships are suffering, as they are weary of my constant pain. I feel like I am an 80-year-old man.

As you know, the worker's comp system is pretty bad. I paid over $20,000 from my life savings to get a proper diagnosis and treatment from specialists in Chicago. The work comp matter grinds on with no help in sight. I have no income and must tap into my very rapidly dwindling retirement account.

God bless you and the other compassionate legislators for trying to undo this horrible legislative mistake.

Very truly yours,

Patrick A. Thompson

Re: Senate Bill 303

Dear Senator Paskvan:

This letter is to express concerns that the Alaska Timber Insurance Exchange has about Senate Bill 303.

Senate Bill 303 would weaken the exclusive remedy provision in the Alaska workers' compensation statutes. The exclusive remedy provisions currently in place prevent, in most instances, an employee of a subcontractor or a contractor from bringing a third party action against either a project owner or contractor that their employer is working for.

An entity that qualifies as a project owner under the Alaska workers' compensation statutes is considered an employer for exclusive remedy purposes for the employees of either a contractor or subcontractor working for them. This also applies to a contractor in relation to a subcontractor.

Senate Bill 303 would take away these exclusive remedy protections from project owners or contractors even if they were liable for the workers' compensation benefits of an injured employee of a contractor or subcontractor. Currently, a project owner or contractor can become liable for the workers' compensation benefits of a contractor or subcontractor's employees if the contractor or subcontractor does not have workers' compensation insurance.

Prior to the passage of Senate Bill 323 in 2004, project owners and contractors were not treated as employers for exclusive remedy purposes, i.e. an injured employee of a contractor or subcontractor could bring a third party action against a project owner that hired the contractor and subcontractor. Likewise, an injured employee of a subcontractor could bring a third party action against the contractor that hired their employer.

The Alaska Timber Insurance Exchange feels that the existing workers' compensation laws in Alaska provide fair benefits for injured workers without exposing employers, contractors or project owners to excessive liabilities. The proposed changes contained in Senate Bill 303 would add uncertainty and possible expense for those entities that hire contractors or subcontractors to do work for them.

Sincerely,

RE: SB 303

Chair Paskvan and Members of the Senate Labor & Commerce Committee,

The Alaska State Chamber in accordance with our legislative position opposes Senate Bill 303 regarding exclusive liability. This position was adopted at the annual legislative fly-in this past fall. This position supports the change regarding exclusive liability made by the legislature in 2004. For your review, please find attached our legislative position on the issue.

Current law obligates the immediate employer and other project participants to pay an injured employee's workers' compensation benefits regardless of fault. In the unfortunate circumstance of an injury, a worker has clear understanding about remedies being provided under the workers' compensation system. Prior to 2004, many subcontractors employed by a larger company (project owner) or employer, were not required to carry worker's compensation insurance. Under current law, which passed in 2004, all employees including subcontractors now carry worker's compensation insurance. This requirement now insures all workers working on the job regardless of who may be their direct employer. Correspondingly, workers' compensation benefits-the employers associated with the project-is the exclusive remedy for potentially liability

Prior to 2004, project owners, contractors and their subs were expending tremendous resources in segregating project and safety programs to defend against potential tort liability. Alaska courts have adopted of what is referred to as the retained control doctrine. Prior to the 2004 reform, parties other than an employee's immediate employer were liable in tort for any injury to an employee of an independent contractor if the party retains any amount of control over the work, including the right to review the contractor's safety practices. See for example, Moloso v. State, 644 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1982). In essence, injured employees used the retained control doctrine to support tort claims against the project owners and other parties that had done nothing more than try to enforce reasonable safety practices during the performance of a contractor's work.

In practice, project owners and contractors attempted to avoid tort liability by limiting their involvement with each other's safety programs and work performance. In other words, prior to 2004 the law actually discouraged project owners and other project participants from implementing and enforcing coordinated safe work practices.

Under current law, project participants can take an integrated approach to completion of a project and can integrate safety programs. That is, project owners, contractors and subcontractors work closely together to ensure that project specifications and safety standards are met and that all work is completed in a successful and safe manner.

Second, the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act is intended to provide injured workers with reasonable compensation for their work related injuries without regard to fault or the cause of the injury. Some may claim that without the risk of exposure to tort damages, the project owners and other project participants have had little incentive to implement and enforce safe work practices. As previously stated, the new law has allowed for increased safety awareness and coordinated safety programs interconnecting subcontractors and project owners together. The Alaska State Chamber of Commerce has been steadfast advocates of reducing workers' compensation (wc) expenses particularly wc insurance; however, continued improvement on insurance rates mean continued improvement on workplace safety.

The tort system is not the only available means to punish companies that violate safety practices. The Department of Labor, the Oil and Gas Commission and other State agencies have authority to fine companies that violate State safety standards. Those agencies also have the authority to shut down projects that pose a safety hazard to employees. When project owners, their contractors and subcontractors work in an integrated manner, all companies involved in the contracting chain are subject to the fines and other remedies of state agencies. This is a much more efficient, credible and cost effective means of policing job safety.

At this time and in accordance with our legislative position adopted this past fall, we cannot support SB 303.

Best Regards,

SENATE BILL 307 "An Act relating to residential shelters for runaway minors"

SB307 would allow emergency residential shelters like Covenant House Alaska to continue competing for federal grant funding. Covenant House Alaska has five programs that include emergency shelter, healthcare, job and educational assistance and transitional living. Covenant House Alaska served nearly 3,000 Alaskan youth in FY2009 and have been in Alaska over 20 years – serving literally tens of thousands of youth.

In 2007, Covenant House Alaska was awarded the federal Basic Center Grant (BCG) through the Administration for Children and Families. This competitive federal grant supplied Covenant House Alaska with $300,000 phased over three years to operate the Crisis Center - $100,000 per year. Recently, the Administration for Children and Families recently notified Covenant House Alaska the Crisis Center is technically out of compliance with federal grant requirements stated in the Homeless and Runaway Youth Act. Established through the Act, federal regulation 45 CFR 1351.18 (d) states the Basic Center Grant (BCG) may be awarded to facilities with a shelter capacity of 20 beds or less. Covenant House Alaska holds 40 beds.

However, the Act at 42 U.S.C Section 5712(b)(2)(A) states the shelter can have "a maximum capacity of not more than 20 youth, except where the applicant assures that the State where the center or locally controlled facility is located has a State or local law or regulation that requires a higher maximum to comply with license requirements for child and youth serving facilities." The Administration for Children and Families (ACF) concedes that states with statutes requiring them to operate a facility over 20 beds will meet the federal requirements. Supporting SB307 would allow a statutory change which would make it possible for emergency residential shelters like the Covenant House to continue competing for federal grants by operating under the terms of their license.

HHS publishes annually in the Federal Register a program announcement of grant funds available under the Runaway and Homeless Youth Program Act. The program announcement states the amount of funds available, program priorities for funding, and criteria for evaluating applications in awarding grants. The announcement also describes specific procedures for receipt and review of applications. An applicant should:

(a) Obtain a program announcement from the Federal Register or from one of HHS's 10 Regional Offices in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco, and Seattle;

(b) Obtain an application package from one of HHS's Regional Offices; and

(c) Submit a completed application to the Grants Management Office at the appropriate Regional Office.

§ 1351.18 What criteria has HHS established for deciding which Runaway and Homeless Youth Program grant applications to fund?

top

In reviewing applications for a Runaway and Homeless Youth Program grant, HHS takes into consideration a number of factors, including:

(a) Whether the application meets one or more of the program's funding priorities; (see §1351.12)

(b) The need for Federal support based on the number of runaway or otherwise homeless youth in the area in which the runaway and homeless youth project is or will be located;

(c) The availability of services to runaway or otherwise homeless youth in the area in which the runaway and homeless youth project is located;

(d) Whether there is a minimum residential capacity of four and a maximum residential capacity not to exceed 20 youth with a ratio of staff to youth sufficient to assure adequate supervision and treatment;

(e) Plans for meeting the best interests of the youth involving, when possible, both the youth and the family. These must include contacts with the families. This contact should be made within 24 hours, but must be made no more than 72 hours following the time of the youth's admission into the runaway and homeless youth project. The plans must also include assuring the youth's safe return home or to local government officials or law enforcement officials and indicate efforts to provide appropriate alternative living arrangements.

(f) Plans for the delivery of aftercare or counseling services to runaway or otherwise homeless youth and their families;

(g) Whether the estimated cost to the Department for the runaway and homeless youth project is reasonable considering the anticipated results;

(h) Whether the proposed personnel are well qualified and the applicant agency has adequate facilities and resources;

(i) Whether the proposed project design, if well executed, is capable of attaining program objectives;

(j) The consistency of the grant application with the provisions of the Act and these regulations.

§ 1351.19 What additional information should an applicant or grantee have about a Runaway and Homeless Youth Program grant?

top

(a) Several other HHS rules and regulations apply to applicants for or recipients of Runaway and Homeless Youth Program grants. These include:

(1) The provisions of 45 CFR part 74 pertaining to the Administration of Grants;

(2) The provisions of 45 CFR part 16, Departmental Grants Appeal Process, and the provisions of Informal Grant Appeal Procedures (Indirect Costs) in volume 45 CFR part 75;

(3) The provisions of 45 CFR part 80 and 45 CFR part 81 pertaining to nondiscrimination under programs receiving Federal assistance, and hearing procedures;

(4) The provisions of 45 CFR part 84 pertaining to discrimination on the basis of handicap;

(5) The provisions of 45 CFR part 46 pertaining to protection of human subjects.

The Honorable Bettye Davis

March 1, 2010

Dear Senator Davis,

Thank you for your long-standing support of Covenant House Alaska (CHA). CHA is the only shelter in Alaska specifically designed for homeless youth. Throughout our five programs including emergency shelter, healthcare, job and educational assistance and transitional living, CHA served nearly 3,000 Alaskan youth in FY09. CHA has been in Alaska for over 20 years and served literally tens of thousands of youth.

CHA was awarded the Basic Center Grant (BCG) through the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) in 2007. This competitive, federal grant supplied CHA with $300,000 phased over 3 years to operate the Crisis Center ($100,000 per year). ACF recently notified CHA that the Crisis Center is technically out of compliance with federal grant requirements stated in the Homeless and Runaway Youth Act. CHA will not be competitive for the new grant cycle starting in September 2010 if Alaska's state statute is not amended to comply with federal requirements.

Established through the Act, federal regulation 45 CFR 1351.18 (d) states that the BCG will be awarded to facilities with a shelter capacity of 20 beds or less. CHA's Crisis Center holds 40 beds. ACF concedes that states with statute requiring them to operate a facility over 20 beds will override the federal requirements. Through consultation with an attorney, CHA proposes the following change in Alaska statute to satisfy ACF's request:

Amendment to AS 47.10.310 to add a new subsection (e):

> (e) A program for runaway minors, which operates a residential shelter in the State of Alaska for runaway or homeless minors and which is required to obtain a license to operate pursuant to AS 47.10.330 – 47.10.390, is required to provide a shelter with the capacity designated in the approved license.

Since CHA is licensed to operated a shelter with 40 beds, this amendment would effectively require CHA to operate a facility that houses over 20 youth.

As the Chair of the Senate Health, Education and Social Services Committee, CHA is seeking your assistance in changing Alaska's statute. Our goal is to have a committee bill introduced this session in order to comply with the federal regulations by September 2010. Please contact me for additional materials if necessary, including ACF's findings.

Thank you for your consideration. Please contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Senate Joint Resolution 3

It is the intent of SJR 3 to show appreciation for the change in National Park policy that now allows park users to carry the firearms they need for personal protection in National Parks.

Alaskans, who have in their state over 75% of the National Park system, understand how important it is to have personal protection when in the wilderness. This bill affirms that progress that has been made in allowing the carrying of firearms under the previous administration and encourages the new Obama administration to continue with the policy and add improvements by allowing open carry in addition as concealed carry.

Whether it is for bear protection, obtaining food in a survival situation, or signaling for assistance when needed, firearms have been on the hips and in the arms of Alaskans since the frontier was first explored. Now the unbroken wilderness and inherent dangers have been exacerbated with the conditioning of animals to lose their natural tendency of avoiding humans. With the Parks Service's steady line of visitors who have no real experience in the true wilderness, the need for protection is more prudent now than ever before.

Interior Announces Final Firearms Policy Update

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks Lyle Laverty today announced that the Department of the Interior has finalized updated regulations governing the possession of firearms in national parks and wildlife refuges. The final rule, which updates existing regulations, would allow an individual to carry a concealed weapon in national parks and wildlife refuges if, and only if, the individual is authorized to carry a concealed weapon under state law in the state in which the national park or refuge is located. The update has been submitted to the Federal Register for publication and is available to the public on www.doi.gov.

Existing regulations regarding the carrying of firearms remain otherwise unchanged, particularly limitations on poaching and target practice and prohibitions on carrying firearms in federal buildings.

"America was founded on the idea that the federal and state governments work together to serve the public and preserve our natural resources," Laverty said. "The Department's final regulation respects this tradition by allowing individuals to carry concealed firearms in federal park units and refuges to the extent that they could lawfully do so under state law. This is the same basic approach adopted by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and the United States Forest Service (USFS), both of which allow visitors to carry weapons consistent with applicable federal and state laws."

On February 22, 2008, Interior Secretary Kempthorne responded to letters from 51 Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, as well as from the Chairman and Ranking Member of the House Natural Resources Committee, urging him to update existing regulations that prohibit the carrying of firearms in national parks and wildlife refuges. In his response, the Secretary directed Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks Lyle Laverty "to develop and propose for public comment by April 30 Federal regulations that will update firearms policies on these lands to reflect existing Federal laws (such as those prohibiting weapons in Federal buildings) and the laws by which the host states govern transporting and carrying of firearms on their analogous public lands."

Changes in the final regulations from those originally proposed in April were developed as the result of public comments. In particular, comments expressed concern about the feasibility of implementing regulations which directly linked the carrying of concealed firearms in national parks and wildlife refuges to the ability of an individual to carry a concealed firearm on analogous state lands. The final regulations remove that potential logistical hurdle.

The existing regulations, as currently in effect, were adopted in 1981 for national wildlife refuges and in 1983 for national parks. Since that time many states have enacted new firearms policies. Currently, 48 states have passed legislation allowing for the lawful possession of concealed weapons.

"The Department believes that in managing parks and refuges we should, as appropriate, make every effort to give the greatest respect to the democratic judgments of State legislatures with respect to concealed firearms," said Laverty. "Federal agencies have a responsibility to recognize the expertise of the States in this area, and federal regulations should be developed and implemented in a manner that respects state prerogatives and authority."

FAQ – Interior Firearms Policy Update

Q: Why is the Department of the Interior adopting this rule?

A: Our current firearm policies have been in place for some time, but they are now out-of-step with State law and thus need to be updated. Starting in the 1980's, a significant number of State Legislatures passed laws which allow law-abiding citizens to carry concealed firearms. Today, the overwhelming majority of States have enacted these laws. But the current National Park Service (NPS) and Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) regulations don't recognize these developments.

America was founded on the idea that the federal and state governments work together to serve the public and preserve our natural resources. The Department's final regulation respects this tradition by allowing individuals to carry concealed firearms in federal park units and refuges to the extent that they could lawfully do so under non-conflicting state law. This is the same basic approach adopted by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and the United States Forest Service (USFS), both of which allow visitors to carry weapons consistent with applicable federal and state laws.

Q: Why did the Department decide to reject the original "similar state lands" approach and instead adopt a more general reference to state law?

A: This change helped clarify the rule and make it easier to implement. During the public comment process, a number of entities and individuals, including the National Park Conservation Association, the State of Alaska, and employees of the FWS, suggested that the Department's reference to "similar state lands" in the proposed regulation was ambiguous and confusing since: (1) individual States often provide for various management regimes for their parks and refuges; and (2) these differences make it difficult to determine what areas are actually "similar". The Department agrees with this concern and has deleted this language in the final rule. The modified final language adopts the suggestion of commenters and incorporates state law in a similar manner to regulations adopted by other federal agencies regarding firearms on public lands.

Q: What if a State doesn't want individuals to carry a concealed firearm in a park or refuge within its borders? Can it take any action?

A: Yes. States with concealed carry laws routinely impose statutory prohibitions on the lawful possession of concealed handguns in certain locations. It is possible that a state may wish to prohibit an individual from possessing a concealed weapon on federal lands within state boundaries. In the event a state enacts such a law, the Department's final rule would respect the legislative judgment of the people of that State.

Q: Won't visitors and wildlife be endangered by allowing concealed firearms in parks and refuges?

Sponsor Statement

SJR 6

SJR 6 asks our congressional delegation to oppose and defeat HR 45, a bill that has been introduced in Congress that would significantly diminish Alaskans' right to keep and bear arms. Among other things, HR 45 would require anyone who possesses a firearm to obtain a federal license to do so; it would make it a felony to transfer a firearm to someone who does not have a license; it would also make it a felony to fail to timely report such a transfer or to fail to report the loss or theft of a firearm within 72 hours to the US Attorney General; it requires the Attorney General to establish and maintain a data base of firearm transfers.

With those who favor gun control becoming more active in our nation's Capital, I feel it is very important that our congressional delegation hear from the Alaska Legislature as soon as possible on this issue.

PLEASE FORWARD.

HR 45, Blair Holt Licensing and Record Act

This is provided as information that should alarm most of you. The air has not yet stilled from the peaceful change of power in this country and already the Democrats have marshaled the anti-gun forces to license and fingerprint you into a National Database of gun owners. Note that there is no National Database of Convicted Felons and those who have lost their citizen's rights to gun ownership, but there will be one that seeks to make you either a dupe or a felon if this law is passed.

I request and suggest that you contact your elected representatives to voice your opposition to this bill to abridge your Rights. Note that the original author of this bill is Rahm Emanuel.

Are you ready for the House Bill titled 'HR 45, Blair Holt Licensing and Record Act of 2009'. It will make it illegal to own a firearm unless it is registered with the database in Washington D.C. As a gun owner you will have to be finger printed, you will be required to provide your DL#, SS#, you must maintain a valid address at all times, submit to mental and physical health records being put on file, you will also be required to file any address changes and any ownership changes even if a private sale. Each update will cost $25 and if you fail to comply you will lose your right to own firearms. This bill and its language mirror almost completely one defeated last year in the House of Representatives by soon to be Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel. Will we the citizenry be as lucky this time?

Pass this on to everyone who believes in strict Constitutionalism and remember that laws only apply to those who obey them. Criminals by definition and nature do not abide by laws. New laws and restrictions only apply to the law abiding citizen and are not written with the criminal in mind. With guns, it is not about having laws on the books to prosecute individuals, it is about taking guns away from the people so that no one has them in the first place. One last item to note, when assuming power and creating a fascist state, Hitler was a proponent of strong gun laws because a disarmed populace was much easier to control than an armed one. The kings of old also outlawed weapons of any kind in any region that they conquered to quell the ability of the citizens to uprise against them.

The Founding Fathers of this nation understood all of the above and because of this they included the second amendment in the constitution. In fact, they knew that at some point in every society's life span that the need for the population to arise came about. To this end they made the right to keep and bear arms against a tyrannical state an absolute right that could not be revoked. They did this because the first thing tyrants and despots do is to remove a population's right to defend themselves. When this is done, the tyrants have no problem with the destruction of society as we know it.

Send this on to all true patriots! Protect your Second Amendment!

The following is a summary of the bill as provided by the Congressional Research Service. If you read the whole bill, you'll find it will effectively preclude the ownership of ANY firearms by law-abiding people unless licensed by the Attorney General. How long do you think THAT would take??

The following summary was written by the Congressional Research Service, a well-respected nonpartisan arm of the Library of Congress. GovTrack did not write and has no control over these summaries.

1/6/2009--Introduced. Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009 - Amends the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act to prohibit a person from possessing a firearm unless that person has been issued a firearm license under this Act or a state system certified under this Act and such license has not been invalidated or revoked. Prescribes license application, issuance, and renewal requirements. Prohibits transferring or receiving a qualifying firearm unless the recipient presents a valid firearms license, the license is verified, and the dealer records a tracking authorization number. Prescribes firearms transfer reporting and record keeping requirements. Directs the Attorney General to establish and maintain a federal record of sale system.

Prohibits: 1) transferring a firearm to any person other than a licensee, unless the transfer is processed through a licensed dealer in accordance with national instant criminal background check system requirements, with exceptions; (2) a licensed manufacturer or dealer from failing to comply with reporting and record keeping requirements of this Act; (3) failing to report the loss or theft of the firearm to the Attorney General within 72 hours; (4) failing to report to the Attorney General an address change within 60 days; or (5) keeping a loaded firearm, or an unloaded firearm and ammunition for the firearm, knowingly or recklessly disregarding the risk that a child is capable of gaining access, if a child uses the firearm and causes death or serious bodily injury. Prescribes criminal penalties for violations of firearms provisions covered by this Act. Directs the Attorney General to: (1) establish and maintain a firearm injury information clearinghouse; (2) conduct continuing studies and investigations of firearm-related deaths and injuries; and (3) collect and maintain current production and sales figures of each licensed manufacturer. Authorizes the Attorney General to certify state firearm licensing or record of sale systems.

ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE

SENATOR JOE THOMAS

SJR 10 - Urging the United States Congress to adopt S. 371, the Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act of 2009

Sponsor Statement

The right to keep and bear arms is one of the rights most cherished by Alaskans. Our history and culture is tightly bound to our outdoor and sporting heritage. Residents of Alaska and Vermont enjoy some of the greatest freedoms in the country with regards to concealed carry. Senate Joint Resolution 10 supports federal legislation that recognizes and protects our unique situation.

The Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act was introduced by U.S. Senators David Vitter (LA) and John Thune (SD). A House companion bill, H.R. 197, has been introduced by Representatives Cliff Stearns' (R-Fla.) and Rick Boucher (D-Va.) The bill would allow those American citizens who are licensed or otherwise authorized by their state government to carry a concealed weapon to lawfully carry concealed weapons in other states, in accordance with local laws. Provisions in the law ensure that residents of states like Alaska and Vermont, which have unique concealed carry laws, are not prohibited from enjoying the same rights as those residents from states with more common "conceal and carry" laws.

This piece of federal legislation respects state laws by requiring carriers of concealed firearms to follow all applicable state statutes governing concealed weapons. Currently, many states offer reciprocity agreements to other states with similar concealed carry laws. However, these agreements can change or lapse. For instance, North Dakota recently phased out the training requirement from the concealed carry-licensing process. This resulted in the lapse of several reciprocity agreements between North Dakota and other states. Such shifting agreements can make it difficult for a bearer of a concealed weapon to keep track of which states offer reciprocity.

Federal passage of the Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act would establish a nationwide reciprocity agreement, and place the duty to comply with local and state concealed carry laws squarely on the shoulders of the citizen. Individuals must follow the laws of the host state, including laws concerning specific locations where firearms may not be carried. Additionally, any individual prohibited by federal law from carrying a firearm will continue to be prohibited under the bill.

ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE

SENATOR JOE THOMAS

SJR 10 - Urging the United States Congress to adopt S. 371, the Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act of 2009

Bill Overview

The bill would not create a federal licensing system; it would require the states to recognize each others' carry permits, just as they recognize drivers' licenses and carry permits held by armored car guards.

• Today, 48 states have laws permitting concealed carry, in some circumstances. Forty states, accounting for two-thirds of the U.S. population, have RTC laws. Thirty-six have "shall issue" permit laws (including Alaska, which also allows carrying without a permit), three have fairly administered "discretionary issue" permit laws, and Vermont (and Alaska) allow carrying without a permit. (Eight states have restrictive discretionary issue laws.) Most RTC states have adopted their laws in the last decade.

• Citizens with carry permits are more law-abiding than the general public. Only 0.01% of nearly 1.2 million permits issued by Florida have been revoked because of firearm crimes by permit holders. Similarly low percentages of permits have been revoked in Texas, Virginia, and other RTC states that keep such statistics. RTC is widely supported by law enforcement officials and groups.

• States with RTC laws have lower violent crime rates. On average, 22% lower total violent crime, 30% lower murder, 46% lower robbery, and 12% lower aggravated assault, compared to the rest of the country. The seven states with the lowest violent crime rates are RTC states. (Data: FBI.)

• Crime declines in states with RTC laws. Since adopting RTC in 1987, Florida's total violent crime and murder rates have dropped 32% and 58%, respectively. Texas' violent crime and murder rates have dropped 20% and 31%, respectively, since its 1996 RTC law. (Data: FBI.)

• The right of self-defense is fundamental, and has been recognized in law for centuries. The Declaration of Independence asserts that "life" is among the unalienable rights of all people. The Second Amendment guarantees the right of the people to keep and bear arms for "security."

• The laws of all states and constitutions of most states recognize the right to use force in self-defense. The Supreme Court has stated that a person "may repel force by force" in self-defense, and is "entitled to stand his ground and meet any attack made upon him with a deadly weapon, in such a way and with such force" as needed to prevent "great bodily injury or death." (Beard v. U.S., 1895)

• Congress affirmed the right to guns for "protective purposes" in the Gun Control Act (1968) and Firearm Owners' Protection Act (1986). In 1982, the Senate Judiciary Committee Subcommittee on the Constitution described the right to arms as "a right of the individual citizen to privately possess and carry in a peaceful manner firearms and similar arms."

Please support Senator Thune and Senator Vitter's bill

"Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act"

Dear Colleague,

We are writing to invite you to cosponsor our legislation, which will allow individuals the right to carry lawfully concealed firearms across state lines, while at the same time respecting the laws of the host state.

Law-abiding citizens have a right to possess a firearm in order to defend against the threat of violence. A state's border should not limit a law-abiding individual's ability to defend themselves. At the same time, each state's laws deserve respect. The Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act strikes an appropriate balance between states' rights and the rights of individuals to lawfully carry concealed firearms outside of his/her respective state.

Our bill allows individuals to lawfully carry a concealed firearm across state lines if they either hold a valid state license or permit or if, under the state of their residence, they are entitled to carry a concealed firearm. These provisions ensure that residents of states like Alaska and Vermont, which have unique conceal carry laws, are not prohibited from enjoying the same rights as those residents from states with more common conceal and carry laws.

In order to protect states' rights, our bill does not allow conceal carry in states that do not already allow the practice. Individuals must follow the laws of the host state, including laws concerning specific types of locations in which firearms may or may not be carried. Additionally, if an individual is prohibited by federal law from carrying a firearm, they will continue to be prohibited under our bill.

We hope you join our efforts to give law-abiding citizens the freedom to carry concealed firearms across state borders, by cosponsoring our bill. If you would like to be added as a cosponsor to this legislation, please have your staff contact Adrian Arnakis at 8-5388 or Adrian_arnakis@thune.senate.gov , or Brent Furer at 8-5060 or brent_furer@vitter.senate.gov. "Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act"

Our bill is simple. It will allow our citizens the right to carry concealed carry permits in states that allow concealed carry permits with the exception that the laws of the host state be obeyed.

- Our bill protects residents of states like Vermont and Alaska, which have unique conceal carry permit laws, by allowing them to also have the right to conceal carry in other states.

- Also, our bill protects state rights by not mandating the right to conceal carry in states that do not allow the practice.

Does our bill violate the right of states to enact concealed carry laws?

- No. This bill does NOT establish national standards for concealed carry, nor does it provide for a national carry permit.

- This bill simply allows citizens who are able to carry in their home state, to also carry in states that have concealed carry permits with the exception that the laws of the host state must be followed.

- If anyone is prohibited by federal law from carrying a firearm they will continue to be prohibited under this bill.

- Our bill also respects state laws by requiring that state laws concerning specific types of locations in which firearms may not be carried be followed.

STATE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION

"A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. The individual right to keep and bear arms shall not be denied or infringed by the state or political subdivision of the State." Article 1, Section 19.

PURCHASE

No state permit is required to purchase a rifle, shotgun or handgun.

It is unlawful to sell or transfer a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person to anyone who has been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult. It is an affirmative defense that 10 years or more has elapsed since the unconditional discharge on the prior offense.

It is unlawful to knowingly sell or transfer a firearm to a person whose physical or mental condition is substantially impaired as a result of an intoxicating liquor or drug, or to sell a firearm to a person less than 18.

POSSESSION

No state permit is required to possess a rifle, shotgun or handgun.

It is unlawful for a person convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult to possess a "firearm capable of being concealed on his person" unless a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency.

It is unlawful to possess a firearm, without the permission of the chief administrative officer of the school or district or the designee of the chief administrative officer, on any public or private school property, on a school bus while being transported to or from school, or at a school-sponsored event, or while participating in a school-sponsored event, except that a person 21 years of age or older may possess an unloaded firearm in the trunk of a motor vehicle or encased in a closed container in a motor vehicle.

It is unlawful to possess a firearm in a courthouse or courtroom, grounds of a day care center or parking lot immediately adjacent to these structures, or within a domestic violence or sexual assault shelter.

It is unlawful to possess a firearm by a person who violates a domestic violence protective order. It is unlawful to possess a firearm while substantially impaired as a result of an intoxicating liquor or drug.

Loaded firearms may not be possessed in any place where intoxicating liquor is sold for consumption on the premises. Exempt from this prohibition is the owner or lessee or an employee in the course of his employment for the owner or lessee while on the business premise. A firearm is loaded if the firing chamber, magazine, clip or cylinder of the firearm contains a cartridge.

An unemancipated minor less than 16 years of age may not possess a firearm without the consent of his parent or guardian.

CARRYING

Any person 21 years of age or older may carry a handgun concealed on their person provided that, when contacted by a police officer, informs the officer of that possession and allows the police officer to secure the handgun for the duration of that contact.

A permit to carry a concealed handgun is available for those individuals who desire a means to carry a concealed handgun in states that honor Alaska's permit to carry. A person can obtain a permit to carry a concealed handgun if the person:

(1) is 21 years of age or older;

(2) is eligible to own or possess a firearm under state and federal law;

(3) has been a resident of the state for 90 days preceding application for permit;

(4) has not been convicted of two or more class A misdemeanors within the preceding six years;
(5) is not currently or has not within three years been ordered by a court to complete an alcohol treatment or substance abuse program;
(6) has demonstrated competence with handguns.

The Department of Public Safety shall issue a permit to a person who applies in person at an office of the Alaska State Troopers and is not prohibited from possessing a handgun. A completed application must be submitted under an oath; the applicant must provide two complete sets of fingerprints and two frontal view color photographs taken within 30 days prior to submitting application. An applicant must not suffer a physical infirmity that prevents the safe handling of a handgun.

The permit fee cannot exceed $99.00 and the renewal or a replacement permit fee may not exceed $30.00. A permit is valid for five years. Applications, permits, and renewals are not public records and can only be used for law enforcement purposes.

The Department shall either approve or reject an application within 30 days of receipt. If the department has not received necessary fingerprint eligibility information from another agency by the end of this 30-day period, and the applicant is otherwise eligible, the department shall issue a conditional permit to the applicant subject to immediate revocation if the fingerprint information subsequently discloses that the applicant is ineligible for a permit. The department shall notify the applicant in writing the reason for the rejection. A person whose application is rejected may appeal to the commissioner. If commissioner rejects the application, a person may seek judicial review.

A person shall apply in person for renewal of a permit to carry within 90 days before the expiration of the permit and shall present a complete renewal form under an oath. A permit to carry shall be immediately revoked if the permittee becomes disqualified to receive and hold a permit. A person whose permit is revoked may appeal to the commissioner. If the commissioner upholds the revocation, a person may seek judicial review. If the permit is revoked, such a person cannot apply for a permit until at least five years after it is revoked.

A person carrying a concealed handgun may not carry it into any place prohibited by state or federal law. When entering the residence of another person, one must notify the resident that they are carrying a concealed handgun.

A municipality may not restrict the carrying of a concealed handgun by permit.

A permit holder from with a valid permit from other jurisdictions is considered an Alaska permit holder.

MACHINE GUNS

A machine gun is defined as a firearm that is capable of shooting more than one shot automatically, without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger. It is unlawful to manufacture, possess, transport or sell a machine gun or a silencer, but it is an affirmative defense to possess such devices if they are legally registered and possessed in compliance with all federal laws. It is unlawful to possess any rifle with a barrel length of less than 16 inches, a shotgun with a barrel length of less than 18 inches, or any rifle or shotgun with an overall length of less than 26 inches.

ANTIQUES AND REPLICAS

Alaska statutes are silent on antique and replica firearms. They are treated as ordinary firearms for possession and carrying purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS

It is unlawful to remove, alter, cover, or destroy the manufacturer's serial number on a firearm with the intent to render the firearm untraceable or to possess such a firearm.

It is unlawful to discharge a firearm with reckless disregard of damage to property or risk of physical injury to persons.

It is unlawful to discharge a firearm from a vehicle while the vehicle is being operated. It is unlawful to discharge a firearm from, on, or across a highway.

A civil action to recover damages or to seek injunctive relief may not be brought against a person who manufactures or sells firearms or ammunition if the action is based on the lawful sale, manufacture, or design of firearms or ammunition. However, this section does not prohibit a civil action resulting from a negligent design, a manufacturing defect, a breach of contract, or a breach of warranty.

SJR 21 Const. Am: increase Number of Legislators

> " ....Each house district shall be formed of contiguous and compact territory containing as nearly as practicable a relatively integrated socio-economic area...." Alaska Constitution Article VI, Section 6, titled Legislative Apportionment.

SJR 21 will put a constitutional amendment before the voters in the 2010 general election that would increase the size of the legislature to 48 representatives and 24 senators. Upon voter approval, the measure would apply to the 2012 determination of election district boundaries.

In the first 50 years of statehood, Alaska has not changed the 20 senator, 40 representative size of its legislative body, the smallest bicameral legislature in the nation. In this time span, the population of the state has more than tripled. Most significantly, the population increase is disproportionate, strongly favoring large urban areas over rural and small community areas. The task then of applying the proscriptions of Article VI, above, has correspondingly become more difficult and contentious. Except for the 1960 reapportionment, all subsequent reapportionments have faced successful legal challenges, requiring boundary adjustments and on several occasions, a court constructed plan.

Federal protections of the U.S. Voter Rights Act of 1965 for large minority concentrations further complicate Alaska's reapportionment process. Indeed, they can act to counter the Section 6 requirements. Rural election district distortions are evident in the current plan. There is a probability that the new population distribution of the 2010 census cannot reconcile Section 6 and the Voter Rights Act without increasing the size of the legislature.

Between 1960 and 2006, twenty nine states have changed the size of their legislative body. For the nine states with small populations similar to Alaska (509,000 to 1,429,000), the average size of their legislative bodies is 134 members.

Another measure of the effect of the state's growth and complexity on the work of the legislature is its budget responsibilities. Legislative expenditures for government programs and projects has risen from a figure of $104 million in FY 61 to somewhere in the neighborhood of $7 billion currently. This is an increase from $2700 per capita in 1961 nominal dollars to $10,000 per capita today.

For these reasons, I believe putting a proposal to increase the size of the legislature before the voters has merit and is timely.

SOUTHEAST ALASKA CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

RESOLUTION NO. 2010-02

A RESOLUTION OF THE SOUTHEAST ALASKA CONFERENCE OF MAYORS SUPPORTING THE EXPANSION OF THE ALASKA STATE LEGISLATURE PRIOR TO REAPPORIONMENT

WHEREAS, Southeast Alaska has enjoyed a long and proud tradition in helping shape Alaska's future; and

WHEREAS, Alaska's rural and coastal communities deserve a voice in the legislative process; and

WHEREAS, Alaska's unique cultural, geographic and demographic characteristics require representation that is understanding of and closely connected to our communities ; and

WHEREAS, population trends in our state will surely render a reapportionment process that vests greater legislative power in communities not well positioned to understand the unique characteristics of our region

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE SOUTHEAST ALASKA CONFERENCE OF MAYORS supports legislation that increases the size of the Alaskan Legislature prior to the 2012 election.

Two legislative redistrictings - one in 2012 and perhaps another in 2014

Alaska could go through two legislative reapportionments after the 2010 census. The first would be the result of our own state districting process. Inclusive within this process will be contentious litigation that always results. And in Alaska, it has not been infrequent that the Court has taken control and redrawn the plan by appointed court masters.

Now comes the test! Any Alaska plan, or even election laws must be pre-cleared by the U.S. Justice Department civil rights division to ensure it complies with the requirements of the federal U.S. Voters Rights Act of 1965, and subsequent revisions. Alaska is in a special category with nine others states (all in the Old South). There were a number of reasons why we earned inclusion, but one was an "English language" test for voting in our state constitution. This was never implemented, and subsequently repealed. Note: In fact, Alaska did not even implement voter registration until the election of 1968.

Nevertheless, getting tangled up with U.S. Justice preclearance on the state 2012 plan could cause delay preventing resolution and implementation prior to the 2012 elections. The result of delay would be some kind of interim plan for 2012, i.e. use of the existing plan, the state proposed plan, or temporary court imposed plan.

The problem been with us since before statehood, and is built into the small size of our House and Senate

Alaska's increasingly skewered districting map is a natural result of a very small but fixed number of our 20 member Senate and 40 member House (smallest in the nation). The size of the House and Senate is fixed. However, the state's population has grown much faster in the urban areas, along the railbelt, and in coastal cities like Juneau, than in the smaller communities scattered along the extensive Alaska coastline and in the vast rural Interior of the state. This means districts in urban centers become more numerous and compact, but rural districts become fewer and must become huge and ungainly to gather sufficient population for a district, taking in regions completely unrelated and separated from each other.

For example, Sen. Johnny Ellis, D-Anchorage, can walk his downtown Anchorage district North and South, East and West, in just a few hours. Sen. Al Kookesh, D-Angoon, must catch a plane to Juneau (or ferry), catch Alaska Airlines to Anchorage, and then fly to Aniak of the Lower Kuskokwim or Holy Cross on the Lower Yukon. This district is half the size of Alaska.

We started with an enlarged hour of 40 districts that fit the Alaska socio-economic map perfectly

- Continued from previous page

At statehood our first district plan for the House fit the "constitutional socio-economics criteria" almost perfectly. We wonder whether constitutional crafters of this first plan (done at the 1955 Constitutional Convention) knew that an increase in the House from 24 members to 40 members would fit the existing socio-political map so well, making most happy. Nevertheless, it did just that "political job. It kept everyone happy, and that may have been especially important during the time of Congressional review and creation of the Statehood Act (as well as our own Alaska local vote on statehood).

> Note: The constitutional committee charged with drafting the scheme was not without its bit of controversy and regional politics, i.e. Anchorage against everyone else, the latter reportedly wanting a plan, at least partially, radiating out from turban centers.
> So, to avoid the "others," meaning Anchorage delegates, reportedly Fairbanks Delegate George Cooper and Nenana/Yukon Delegate Jack Coghill, put together a little mid-night caucus in Delegate George Cooper's basement. Meanwhile, one of their faith kept the Anchorage delegation busy at the Fairbanks Second Avenue Mecca Bar.

Note: As most states did at this time Alaska had a Senate based on regional geography.

This 1955 plan by "population count' was out-of-date by statehood, but another census was just around the corner. Further, everyone probably understood this, because the 1960 reapportionment plan had to do some serious revising, and yet produced little acrimony. It was the only plan that has escaped court review and litigation.

The point is that the first statehood districts fit the socio-economic map perfectly. However, from that day on every decennial redistricting forced the outlying and coastal districts into contortions, struggling to fit constitutional criteria and then the mandates of the ethnic criteria imposed by the 1965 U.S. Voters Right Act and subsequent revisions. Further, almost simultaneously the U.S. Supreme Court Tennessee case brought down the traditional regional Senates across the country. This was a political shock in itself

With a 20 member Senate and 40-member House, and a landmass that imposes huge barriers, we are now about out-of-gas in being able to meet the mandates of the U.S. Voters Rights Act. The issue is! Might the U.S. Justice Department question the size of our legislative bodies, and due to their small fixed size, our ability to provide ethnic representation required under the U.S. Voters Rights Act.

In re 2001 REDISTRICTING CASES.

No. S-10504.

March 21, 2002.

Petitions for review were filed as to superior court's orders regarding the Redistricting Board's proclamation plan. On consolidated petitions, the Supreme Court held that: (1) proposed House District 16 violated compactness requirement; (2) House District 5 was not constitutionally compact; (3) remand was required to permit Board to reconsider proposed House Districts 12 and 32; (4) unorganized geographic area had no constitutional right to be placed in a single house district; (5) dividing borough among two proposed house districts did not deny borough residents equal protection; (6) proposed Senate District S did not violate any group's equal protection rights; (7) provision of plan, under which the maximum population deviation in city was 9.5%, was unconstitutional; (8) Board failed to justify negative 6.9% deviation in House District 40; (9) Board did not violate the equal protection rights of military personnel by creating House District 18; and (10) assuming e-mail exchanges between some members of Redistricting Board violated Open Meetings Act, no remedy was appropriate.

Petitions for review granted; remanded with instructions.

Bryner, J., filed an opinion dissenting in part.

Carpeneti, J., filed a dissenting opinion.

1. States ⇐27(3)

Proposed House District 16, which contained a bizarrely-shaped appendage in the southwestern portion of the District, violated state constitution's compactness requirement; inclusion of appendage was unnecessary to further any other constitutional requirement and alternative plans considered by Redistricting Board contained more compact and otherwise constitutional versions of district. Const. Art. 6, § 6.

2. States ⇐27(3)

Absent finding that its current configuration was required by the Voting Rights Act, House District 5, which was substantially less compact than required by considerations of population equality and geography, would not be constitutionally compact. Voting Rights Act of 1965, § 2 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. § 1973 et seq.; Const. Art. 6, § 6.

3. States ⇐27(10)

Redistricting Board was mistaken in its interpretation of doctrine of proportionality, such that Board's range of choices was unduly limited and remand was required to permit Board to reconsider proposed House Districts 12 and 32.

4. States ⇐27(4.1)

An inference of discriminatory intent may be negated by a demonstration that the challenged aspects of a redistricting plan resulted from legitimate nondiscriminatory policies, such as constitutional requirements of compactness, contiguity, and socio-economic integration. Const. Art. 6, § 6.

5. States ⇐27(4.1)

Doctrine of proportionality did not bar joinder of parts of municipality and borough in a single congressional district, but Redistricting Board had to take a hard look at options that it may have ignored based on its misinterpretation of the doctrine of proportionality.

6. Constitutional Law ⇐225.3(3)

States ⇐27(7)

Unorganized geographic area had no constitutional right to be placed in a single house district, as dividing area did not violate the constitutional requirement that districts be socio-economically integrated so long as each portion is integrated, as nearly as practicable, with the district in which it is placed, and dividing area did not, without more, constitute sufficient evidence of an equal protection violation such that Board was required to justify its action. Const. Art. 1, § 1; Art. 6, § 6.

7. Constitutional Law ⇨225.3(8)
States ⇨27(7)

Dividing borough among two proposed house districts did not deny borough residents equal protection or result in one house district not being socio-economically integrated; board offered an uncontroverted, non-discriminatory motivation for its action, given need for population to complete a district, and made a reasonable decision to favor dividing borough over further fragmenting another borough. Const. Art. 1, § 1; Art. 6, § 6.

8. Constitutional Law ⇨225.3(3)
States ⇨27(4.1)

Proposed Senate District S did not violate any group's equal protection rights; Redistricting Board combined two house districts to form Senate District S, in part, as a consequence of its decision to join two other house districts in another senate district to preserve an effective Native senate district to comply with the Voting Rights Act. Voting Rights Act of 1965, § 2 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. § 1973 et seq.; Const. Art. 1, § 1.

9. Constitutional Law ⇨225.3(6)
States ⇨27(5)

Provision of Redistricting Board's plan, under which the maximum population deviation in city was 9.5%, violated constitutional standard of equality of population "as near as practicable;" although city was by definition socio-economically integrated, and its population was sufficiently dense and evenly spread to allow multiple combinations of compact, contiguous districts with minimal population deviations, Board failed to make any attempt to further minimize deviations. Const. Art. 6, § 6.

10. States ⇨27(5)

Redistricting Board failed to justify negative 6.9% deviation in House District 40 that resulted in a 12% statewide maximum population deviation in house districts; although House District 40 deviation was indirectly caused by Board's attempt to facilitate favorable review of its plan by the United States Department of Justice under the Voting Rights Act, Act did not require state to avoid retrogression of minority voting strength if doing so would create a maximum population deviation exceeding 10%. Voting Rights Act of 1965, § 2 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. § 1973 et seq.

11. Constitutional Law ⇨225.3(8)
States ⇨27(7)

Redistricting Board did not violate the borough's geographic equal protection rights by failing to award it strictly proportional representation in the legislature; although failure to keep borough's house districts together when forming senate districts provided some evidence of discriminatory intent, Board had a valid non-discriminatory justification based on its forming an effective Native senate district to avoid retrogression under the Voting Rights Act. Voting Rights Act of 1965, § 2 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. § 1973 et seq.; Const. Art. 1, § 1.

12. Constitutional Law ⇨225.3(3)
States ⇨27(6)

Redistricting Board did not violate the equal protection rights of military personnel by creating House District 18; neither military personnel nor members of any other group had any constitutional right to be divided among two or more districts to maximize their opportunity to influence multiple districts rather than control one. Const. Art. 1, § 1.

13. States ⇨67

Assuming e-mail exchanges between some members of Redistricting Board violated Open Meetings Act, public interest in requiring compliance with the Open Meetings Act did not outweigh the harm that would be caused to the public interest by voiding the entire Redistricting Plan on this basis and, thus, no remedy was appropriate. AS 44.62.310(f).

Order

In consideration of the consolidated petitions for review of the orders of the superior court, including its Memorandum and Order of February 1, 2002, and after hearing oral argument on these petitions on March 15, 2002.

IT IS ORDERED:

1. All petitions for review of the superior court's orders regarding the Redistricting Board's Proclamation Plan of June 18, 2001, are GRANTED.

2. This case is REMANDED to the superior court with instructions to further remand it to the board for formulation of a final plan which complies with this order. Article VI, section 11 of the Alaska Constitution directs that this court expedite its redistricting decisions, "affording them priority over all other matters...." This order is made in compliance with this directive in lieu of this court's traditional but more lengthy and time-consuming opinion format.

3. Except insofar as they are inconsistent with this order, the orders of the superior court challenged by the petitioners are AFFIRMED.[1]

4. The stay entered by the superior court February 1, 2002 is VACATED.

[1] 5. House District 16 violates the compactness requirement of article VI, section 6 of the Alaska Constitution. House District 16 contains a bizarrely-shaped appendage in the southwestern portion of the district. The inclusion of this appendage is unnecessary to further any other requirement of article VI, section 6, and alternative plans considered by the board contained more compact and otherwise constitutional versions of House District 16.[2]

[2] 6. House District 5 is non-compact. The Craig plaintiffs acknowledge that a district including Cordova and extending as far south as Baranof Island would be compact.[3] But they argue that extending the district beyond Baranof Island to the southern boundary of the state violates the compactness requirement. Although we have in the past invalidated Southeast Alaska districts that included Cordova,[4] current population figures justify Cordova's inclusion in House District 5 to prevent substantial deviations in Southeast Alaska. But we agree with the Craig plaintiffs that House District 5 is substantially less compact than required by considerations of population equality and geography. In argument before this court, counsel for the board suggested that House District 5 must remain unchanged to comply with the federal Voting Rights Act. But the board did not make findings justifying the district on this basis. On remand, the board should either correct House District 5 or expressly find that the district's current configuration is required by the Voting Rights Act. Absent such a finding on remand, House District 5 will not be constitutionally compact.

[3,4] 7. House Districts 12 and 32 must be reconsidered on remand because they are based on a mistaken legal premise that constrained the board's view of the permissible range of constitutional options for these ar-

1. We commend the superior court for giving prompt and thorough attention to the many issues raised below. Under extreme time pressures, the superior court ably dealt with pretrial and discovery issues, conducted a three-week trial, and issued a thoughtful and well-reasoned opinion of 121 pages.

We also thank all parties and amici and their attorneys for their helpful briefs, provided under an accelerated briefing schedule, and their flexibility in satisfying procedural requirements for submitting these cases to this court on an expedited basis.

2. In Hickel v. Southeast Conference, 846 P.2d 38 (Alaska 1992), we adopted and observed the following priorities relating to redistricting:

> Priority must be given first to the Federal Constitution, second to the federal voting rights act, and third to the requirements of article VI, section 6 of the Alaska Constitution. The requirements of article VI, section 6 shall receive priority inter se in the following order: (1) contiguousness and compactness, (2) relative socioeconomic integration, (3) consideration of local government boundaries, (4) use of drainage and other geographic features in describing boundaries.

Id. at 62. We adhere to these priorities in this order.

3. Board Plans 1 and 2 proposed such a district.

4. Carpenter v. Hammond, 667 P.2d 1204, 1215 (Alaska 1983) (holding that "inclusion of Cordova in House Election District 2" violated socioeconomic integration requirement, "[a]lthough the question [was] an extremely close one").

eas.[5] The board interpreted this court's decision in Kenai Peninsula Borough v. State[6] to preclude the board from pairing population from the Matanuska–Susitna Borough with the Municipality of Anchorage because both Anchorage and the borough had sufficient excess population to "control" an additional seat.[7] But Kenai Peninsula Borough does not entitle political subdivisions to control a particular number of seats based upon their populations. Kenai Peninsula Borough simply held that the board cannot intentionally discriminate against a borough or any other "politically salient class" of voters by invidiously minimizing that class's right to an equally effective vote.[8] Kenai Peninsula Borough recognizes that when a reapportionment plan unnecessarily divides a municipality in a way that dilutes the effective strength of municipal voters, the plan's provisions will raise an inference of intentional discrimination. But an inference of discriminatory intent may be negated by a demonstration that the challenged aspects of a plan resulted from legitimate nondiscriminatory policies such as the article VI, section 6 requirements of compactness, contiguity, and socio-economic integration.

Because the board was mistaken in its interpretation of the doctrine of proportionality, the board's range of choices was unduly limited. We therefore remand so the board can revisit the question of redistricting Southcentral Alaska unencumbered by this mistaken assumption.

[5] We do not direct the board to join parts of the Municipality of Anchorage and the Matanuska–Susitna Borough in a single district. We merely hold on the record before us that the doctrine of proportionality does not bar joinder. The board must take a hard look at options that it may have ignored based on its misinterpretation of the law.

[6] 8. The trial court correctly concluded that the Delta Junction area has no con-

5. Cf. Interior Alaska Airboat Ass'n v. State, Bd. of Game, 18 P.3d 686, 690 (Alaska 2001) ("[R]eview [of the reasonableness of a regulation] consists primarily of ensuring that the agency has taken a hard look at the salient problems and has genuinely engaged in reasoned decision making.").

6. 743 P.2d 1352 (Alaska 1987).

7. The Municipality of Anchorage has a population that would support 16.6 house seats. The Matanuska Susitna Borough's population would support 3.8 seats. Taken collectively, these municipalities—which by any measure meet article VI, section 6's relative socio-economic integration requirement—would support 20.4 seats. But under the board's interpretation of the doctrine of proportionality, the Municipality of Anchorage is entitled to control seventeen seats and the Matanuska–Susitna Borough is entitled to control four seats, for a collective total of twenty-one seats.

On remand it is likely that the board will consider whether to combine a portion of the excess population of these two municipalities to create a twentieth district. Doing so would leave a population excess of .4, and would raise the question what to do with that excess. One answer might be to overpopulate slightly each of the twenty districts, adding about 300 people to each district, a positive deviation from the ideal of about two percent. But this choice might be seen as undesirable, especially given the relatively high growth rate of the area, and if this choice is not taken, the question will be whether the .4 excess population can be combined with a neighboring area.

This would raise two issues. The first issue is whether this court's antidilution rule expressed in Hickel, 846 P.2d at 52, would permit such a combination. This rule holds that where possible the excess population of a municipality can only go to one other district. For example, in the scenario under discussion here (a joint Anchorage/Matanuska–Susitna district), the excess .4 populations of both municipalities would not fit into a single joint district, thus making it impossible to achieve literal compliance with the anti-dilution rule. We conclude, however, that this need to accommodate excess population would be sufficient justification to depart from the antidilution rule.

The second issue is whether any neighboring area that might be joined with the .4 excess population would be sufficiently integrated. Based on the briefs and oral arguments, it appears to us, under these circumstances, that any neighboring areas north, east, or south of the combined municipalities would meet the constitutional requirement of relative socio-economic integration.

8. See Kenai Peninsula Borough, 743 P.2d at 1370–73; see also Karcher v. Daggett, 462 U.S. 725, 754, 103 S.Ct. 2653, 77 L.Ed.2d 133 (1983) (Stevens, J., concurring) (explaining that group of voters must establish that it belongs to "politically salient class" as first element of claim of invidious discrimination); Gaffney v. Cummings, 412 U.S. 735, 754, 93 S.Ct. 2321, 37 L.Ed.2d 298 (1973) (recognizing potentially viable equal protection challenges "if racial or political groups have been fenced out of the political process and their voting strength invidiously minimized").

stitutional right to be placed in a single house district. Dividing the area does not violate the constitutional requirement that districts be socio-economically integrated so long as each portion is integrated, as nearly as practicable, with the district in which it is placed. Further, dividing an unorganized area such as the Delta Junction area does not, without more, constitute sufficient evidence of an equal protection violation such that the board must justify its action. Nevertheless, because this order requires reconsideration of the districts encompassing this area, on remand the board should take a hard look at alternatives, including constitutional alternatives that preserve socio-economically integrated areas.

[7] 9. Plaintiffs argue that dividing the Lake and Peninsula Borough among House Districts 36 and 37 denies the borough residents equal protection and results in House District 36 not being socio-economically integrated. Because the Kodiak Island Borough does not have enough population to support a house district, the board found it necessary to draw population from either the Lake and Peninsula Borough or the Kenai Peninsula Borough to form House District 36. The board's choice was permissible. The Upper Lakes region is as nearly as practicable socio-economically integrated with the Kodiak Island Borough through such links as their mutual membership in the Southwest Alaska Municipal Conference and their involvement in the commercial fishing industry. These areas have traditionally shared a senate district, and plaintiffs in this case requested that they continue to share a senate district due to the "close interaction and strong integration among all of the communities in Southwest Alaska."

Further, there is no equal protection violation. In Hickel v. Southeast Conference, we stated: "The division of a borough which otherwise has enough population to support an election district will be an indication of gerrymandering." [9] But this statement does not apply to this case because the Lake and Peninsula Borough falls far short of having enough population to support an election district. Moreover, the board offered an uncontroverted, non-discriminatory motivation for its action—it needed the population to complete District 36—and made a reasonable decision to favor dividing the Lake and Peninsula Borough over further fragmenting the Kenai Peninsula Borough.

[8] 10. Senate District S does not violate any group's equal protection rights. The board combined House Districts 37 and 38 to form Senate District S, and combined House Districts 35 and 36 to form Senate District R. This configuration split the historic Aleut/Alutiiq senate pairing and divided the Lake and Peninsula Borough into two senate districts. The board did this, in part, as a consequence of the board's decision to join House Districts 5 and 6 in Senate District C. This was necessary to preserve an effective Native senate district to comply with the Voting Rights Act. Although the board should not unnecessarily divide a borough between two senate districts, we conclude that the board offered acceptable reasons for doing so in this case.

[9] 11. The board failed to define Anchorage house districts that "contain a population as near as practicable to the quotient obtained by dividing the population of the state by forty." [10] Under the board's plan, the maximum population deviation in Anchorage—i.e., the sum of the absolute values of the two Anchorage districts with the greatest positive and negative deviations—is 9.5%.[11] Before article VI, section 6, was amended in 1998, maximum deviations below ten percent were insufficient, without more, to make out a prima facie case that a plan or part thereof was unconstitutional. Section 6 was amended in 1998 and the present constitutional

9. 846 P.2d 38, 51 n. 20 (Alaska 1992).

10. Alaska Const. art. VI, § 6. Under the federal equal protection clause, a state must make an "honest and good faith effort to construct districts, in both houses of its legislature, as nearly of equal population as is practicable." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 577, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506 (1964).

11. We further note that multiple combinations of Anchorage districts in the board's Proclamation Plan produce deviations ranging from 5.5% to 9.5%.

standard is equality of population "as near as practicable." Newly available technological advances will often make it practicable to achieve deviations substantially below the ten percent federal threshold, particularly in urban areas. Accordingly, article VI, section 6 will in many cases be stricter than the federal threshold. Here the board believed that deviations within ten percent in Anchorage automatically satisfied constitutional requirements; plaintiffs established that the board failed to make any attempt to further minimize the Anchorage deviations.

Because, as the board's counsel conceded at oral argument, the board made no effort to reduce deviations in Anchorage below ten percent, the burden shifted to the board to demonstrate that further minimizing the deviations would have been impracticable in light of competing requirements imposed under either federal or state law. We conclude that the board failed to offer an acceptable justification for the Anchorage deviations.

The board considered and rejected Anchorage plans with significantly lower maximum deviations, apparently because these plans did not respect the board's conception of neighborhood boundaries. But as we held in Groh v. Egan,[12] Anchorage neighborhood patterns cannot justify "substantial disparities" in population equality across Anchorage districts.[13] Anchorage is by definition socio-economically integrated, and its population is sufficiently dense and evenly spread to allow multiple combinations of compact, contiguous districts with minimal population deviations.[14] Accordingly, the Anchorage deviations are unconstitutional, and require the board on remand to make a good faith effort to further reduce the deviations.

[10] 12. The negative 6.9% deviation in House District 40 results in a 12% statewide maximum population deviation in house districts. The board has failed to justify this deviation. The board moved Pilot Station into House District 6 based upon the board's impression that House District 6 potentially needed a greater Native population to remain an effective Native district under the Voting Rights Act. The board then moved Shishmaref from House District 40 to House District 39 to make up the population shortfall resulting from the Pilot Station transfer. Thus, the House District 40 deviation was indirectly caused by the board's attempt to facilitate favorable review of its plan by the United States Department of Justice under section five of the Voting Rights Act.

But the Voting Rights Act does not require a state to avoid retrogression of minority voting strength if doing so would create a maximum population deviation exceeding ten percent.[15] The negative 6.9% deviation in House District 40 is therefore invalid and must be corrected.

[11] 13. The board did not violate the Matanuska Susitna Borough's geographic equal protection rights by failing to award it strictly proportional representation in the legislature. As explained above in paragraph seven, groups of voters are not constitutionally entitled to proportional representation absent invidious discrimination. Failure to keep a borough's house districts together when forming senate districts provides some evidence of discriminatory intent, just as failure to keep all of a borough's excess population in the same house district does.[16] But the board had a valid non-discriminatory jus-

[12] 14. The board did not violate the equal protection rights of military personnel by creating House District 18. Neither military personnel nor members of any other group have any constitutional right to be divided among two or more districts to maximize their opportunity to influence multiple districts rather than control one.

[13] 15. Assuming that the trial court was correct in finding that some of the board members' e-mail exchanges violated the Open Meetings Act,[17] we agree with the trial court that no remedy is appropriate. We hold that the superior court properly concluded that, based on the factors set out in AS 44.62.310(f), "the public interest[ ] in requiring compliance with the Open Meetings Act does not outweigh the harm that would be caused to the public interest by voiding the entire Redistricting Plan on this basis." Because we hold that the superior court permissibly refused to grant any remedy for the particular e-mail exchanges it found to violate the Open Meetings Act, we need not address whether these e-mail exchanges actually violated the Act. We further conclude that the superior court did not err by failing to find additional violations of the Act.

16. We hold that plaintiffs' due process challenges to the board's development of the Proclamation Plan have no merit.

17. Redistricting in Alaska is a task of "Herculean proportions." [18] The challenge of creating a statewide plan that balances multiple and conflicting constitutional requirements is made even more difficult by the very short time-frame mandated by article VI, section 10 of the Alaska Constitution. But these great difficulties do not absolve this court of its duty to independently measure each district against constitutional standards.[19]

The board, at great personal and professional sacrifice to individual members and staff, made extraordinary efforts in discharging its duties. This court's invalidation of some aspects of the board's plan should not be read as a general criticism of the board's work. On the contrary, the board is to be commended for its diligent, conscientious efforts to achieve the basic goal of redistricting—"adequate and true representation by the people in their elected legislature; true, just, and fair representation." BRYNER, Justice, dissenting in part.

I dissent from one aspect of the court's order: its conclusion that House District 5 cannot pass constitutional muster without further justification.

Although the issue is admittedly close, I believe that the proclaimed version of House District 5 and the earlier version proposed in Board Plans 1 and 2 are both constitutionally permissible alternatives. On the one hand, as today's order correctly observes, the version proposed in Board Plans 1 and 2 is undeniably more compact than the Proclamation Plan's version; but on the other hand, the Proclamation Plan's version could reasonably be seen as offering relatively superior socio-economic integration throughout Southeast Alaska. In my view, article VI, section 6, of the Alaska Constitution gives compactness and socio-economic integration equivalent stature as redistricting criteria; it thus seems to me that neither version of House District 5 can claim constitutional superiority. Because the board has broad discretion to select the most desirable among constitutionally permissible alternatives, I would uphold House District 5 as proclaimed.

In all other respects, I join in the court's order.

CARPENETI, Justice, dissenting.

The court today strikes down—directly or indirectly—over two-thirds of the election districts fashioned by the board.[1] I disagree with several individual aspects of today's Order, and discuss those points in this dissent. Fundamentally, though, I disagree with the Order because it fails to truly consider the statewide responsibilities of the board and the need for the board, at the end of the day, to prepare a plan that works across the entire state.

Proclamation House District 5

The Order invalidates Proclamation[2] House District 5 on the ground that it is noncompact. But Alaska's constitution "calls only for relative compactness;"[3] this is because the state's geography and population distribution make it impossible to draw conventionally compact districts that neatly approximate regular shapes like squares and circles. We have frequently allowed some departure from strict compactness in a given district in order to accommodate all of the constitutional criteria for all of the districts in the state.[4] We have previously noted the difficulty of drawing districts in Alaska and emphasized the need for flexibility so that all constitutional requirements may be satisfied as nearly as practicable: "'When Alaska's geographical, climatical, ethnic, cultural, and socio-economic differences are contemplated the task assumes Herculean proportions commensurate with Alaska's enormous land area. The problems are multiplied by Alaska's sparse and widely scattered population and the relative inaccessibility of portions of the state.'"[5]

In the "Board Plans"[6] advocated by the Craig plaintiffs and impliedly accepted as "compact" by today's Order, the proposed "Islands District" encompassing Prince of Wales Island begins at the Canadian border on the south, includes a 300-mile section of the mainland, almost all of Prince of Wales Island, all of Kupreanof and Kuiu Islands, almost all of Admiralty Island, about half of Chichagof Island, and then returns to the mainland to include a long, thin section of the mainland which ends in a long, thin appendage slicing the Haines Borough in two and incorporating Klukwan but bypassing Haines

1. The Order explicitly strikes down House Districts 5, 12, 16, 32, and the Anchorage Districts 17–31. Furthermore, the Order instructs the board to make changes to House Districts 6, 39, and 40, thereby directly striking down a total of twenty-two of forty House districts. These districts necessarily implicate twelve of twenty Senate Districts: District C (House Districts 5 and 6), District F (House District 12), District H (House District 16), District T (House Districts 39 and 40), and the Anchorage Districts I–P (House Districts 17–32).

This Order will indirectly necessitate changes to other districts, as well. With a conservative estimate of at least one other contiguous district being affected for each district explicitly struck down (not including the Anchorage districts, with the exception of District 32), four additional House districts are affected (District 1, District 35, District 36, and District 38). These four additional House districts affect another three Senate districts (District A, District R, and District S). In total, today's Order directly or indirectly affects forty-one of sixty districts. If the Order necessitates changes in all of the districts contiguous with those explicitly struck down, forty-seven of sixty districts are directly or indirectly affected.

2. Districts finally adopted by the Redistricting Board are called "Proclamation" districts.

on its way to Klukwan. Proclamation House District 5, extending west to include Cordova, is not "substantially less compact" than the "Islands District" in the plan advocated by the Craig plaintiffs. As the options before the board were all relatively compact, the board had the discretion to choose among the differing plans. As Judge Rindner found, the board's decision to keep smaller, rural communities together was a reasonable choice: Proclamation District 5 did not have the appendage problem of Board Plans 1 and 2 and public testimony from small communities urged the board to create a district that did not include them with larger, urban communities. Indeed, the board's plan enjoyed the distinction of being endorsed by every legislator—Republican and Democrat, urban and rural, Native and Caucasian—in all of Southeast Alaska.

Correctly viewing redistricting as a process that requires the board to constantly look beyond the borders of the district being fashioned, the board made a reasonable choice in drawing Proclamation House District 5. The district is substantially more compact than a number of districts in the state,[7] is easily as compact as Board Plans 1 and 2 because it avoids the Klukwan appendage problem that infects those alternative plans,[8] and is sufficiently socio-economically integrated. The superior court's affirmance of the board's action in creating Proclamation District 5 should be upheld.

Proclamation House Districts 12 and 32

Judge Rindner carefully analyzed the problems presented by the formation of Proclamation House Districts 12 and 32. He found that Proclamation District 12 could not survive close scrutiny because of insufficient socio-economic integration between the northern and southern halves of the district, separated as they were by the Alaska Range and long-established habits of economic and social activity. The evidence showed that the northern communities interacted with each other and the southern communities interacted with each other, with almost no interaction between the northern and southern halves of the district. Judge Rindner's similarly careful consideration of the evidence concerning Proclamation House District 32 led him to the opposite conclusion with regard to that district. He found that "[b]ased on all of the evidence, ... District 32 contains as nearly as practicable a relatively integrated socio-economic area." Applying the correct legal standard on review, he said, "It is clear that the Board gave careful consideration and extensive deliberation to this district and took a hard look at the factors both in favor and against such a pairing." He therefore struck down Proclamation District 12 and upheld Proclamation District 32. Because Judge Rindner correctly understood and applied the relevant law, I dissent from this court's holding that Proclamation House District 32 must be remanded for further consideration.

Under Kenai Peninsula Borough v. State,[9] strict proportionality is not a constitutional requirement.[10] However, "the interest of individual members of a geographic group or community in having their votes protected from disproportionate dilution by the votes of another geographic group or community" is a significant constitutional interest.[11] By definition, a borough is socio-economically integrated.[12] That integration, the contiguous, and often compact, nature of boroughs, and the significant constitutional interest in protecting the equally effective votes of residents of an organized geographic area requires the board to attempt to draw districts that allow communities to control the whole number of seats to which they are entitled. We have previously stated that "where possible, all of a municipality's excess population should go to one other district in order to maximize effective representation of the excess group."[13] This principle is even more compelling when the "excess" population could constitute the majority of a new district.

7. For example, Proclamation House District 40 covers the entire North Slope of the state; Proclamation House District 37 comprises the entire Aleutian Chain as well as part of the mainland; and Proclamation House District 6, the largest single district, extends from the Canadian border just north of Yakutat (a point about 350 miles east of Anchorage), reaches as far north as the Brooks Range and Arctic Village, encompasses almost all of the Yukon River drainage and most of the Kuskokwim River drainage, and extends as far west as Marshall and Russian Mission (to a point about 400 miles west of Anchorage). This district appears to be slightly larger than the State of Texas, which may be fitting given its horseshoe shape.

8. Indeed, a comparison of Proclamation House District 16—which the Order properly strikes because of an appendage that rendered it non-compact—and the "Islands District" in Board Plans 1 and 2—which the Order finds to be compact despite a substantially more prominent appendage—illustrates the correctness of the board's rejection of Board Plans 1 and 2 as an alternative to Proclamation District 5.

The board, therefore, was properly concerned about placing excess populations from Anchorage and the Mat–Su Borough—each of which was sufficient to constitute the majority of a district—into a single district. This legitimate concern resulted in the board's ultimate decision to create a plan that allowed Anchorage, with a population supporting 16.6 House seats, to have the excess population placed in a seventeenth district, and Mat–Su, with a population supporting 3.8 House seats, to have its excess population placed in a different district. Splitting either of these boroughs' excess population, members of a "politically salient class," would clearly have resulted in diluting the voting power of the "excess" voters of each borough. Such dilution would have constituted evidence that the individual voters' rights to geographic equal protection had been violated by the board, and predictably would have led to litigation.[14]

While the board's decision to attempt to draw districts that gave boroughs control over the whole number of seats to which they were entitled was reasonable, this consideration cannot be elevated over the constitutional mandates of one-person, one-vote, contiguity, compactness, and socio-economic integration. As Judge Rindner found, Proclamation House District 12 is not sufficiently socio-economically integrated. The board's decision to value proportionality does not justify the creation of a district that is not socio-economically integrated. Accordingly, I agree that this district is unconstitutional.

Proclamation House District 32, on the other hand, is sufficiently socioeconomically integrated. Judge Rindner found, and I agree, that "District 32 contains as nearly as practicable a relatively integrated socio-economic area. This integration is not minimal but significant." As Proclamation House District 32 is sufficiently socioeconomically integrated, the board's decision to create this district and thereby protect the effectiveness of the vote of the "excess population" involved, was rational. The board should not be required to reconsider Proclamation House District 32.

Anchorage House Districts

We have long held that population deviations under 10% are "minor deviations" that do not require further justification; they are presumptively constitutional.[15] The superior court found that the board's attempt to preserve neighborhood boundaries in Anchorage was not improperly motivated, a conclusion that this court accepts. Yet today's Order

15. Id. at 48; see also Groh v. Egan, 526 P.2d 863, 877 (Alaska 1974) ("[I]n the absence of a showing that the manner of reapportioning a state was improperly motivated or had an impermissible effect, deviations of up to ten percent require no showing of justification."). Indeed, the United States Supreme Court has upheld deviations over 16%, where such deviations were justified by legitimate considerations. Mahan v. Howell, 410 U.S. 315, 328–30, 93 S.Ct. 979, 35 L.Ed.2d 320 (1973).

invalidates sixteen house districts in Anchorage on the ground that the board did not make a sufficient effort to further reduce deviations that we have consistently said are minor and need no further justification.[16] The order attempts to justify this surprising result on two grounds. Neither survives scrutiny.

First, the Order suggests that the constitutional change adopted by the voters in 1999 justifies dramatically stricter standards in redistricting. But a simple comparison of the language of the former provision and the current provision shows that the change made the standard more flexible, not more strict. Article VI, section 6 previously provided: "Each area shall contain a population at least equal to the quotient obtained by dividing the total civilian population by forty." That provision literally required that each district contain the same number of civilians as every other district: Each had to be "at least equal" to every other; once any district contained an excess of population, another district would fail to have "at least" that many persons. Whatever might be said about the feasibility of meeting this standard, it is clear that the standard was very high. In 1998[17] the citizens of Alaska voted to adopt new language for article VI, section 6. The new language provides, "Each [house district] shall contain a population as near as practicable to the quotient obtained by dividing the population of the state by forty." Clearly, the new language—"as near as practicable"—created a more flexible standard than the language it replaced—"equal".[18]

Second, today's Order relies on Groh v. Egan[19] for the proposition that "Anchorage neighborhood patterns cannot justify deviations so close to the ten percent threshold." But in Groh v. Egan we were faced with a plan with a total deviation of 29%.[20] We addressed three Anchorage districts, which respectively were underrepresented by 5.9%, 6.5%, and 8.6%,[21] in the context of a total deviation of 29%. In holding that neighborhood patterns cannot justify "substantial disparities," we were unmistakably referring to total deviations over 10%. By comparison,

16. The Order is particularly puzzling in that it squarely places the burden on the board to justify de minimis deviations, Order at 9, effectively but silently reversing longstanding precedent from this court. Groh, 526 P.2d at 877 (stating that in the absence of a showing of improper motive or impermissible effect, "deviations of up to ten percent require no showing of justification") (emphasis added). We relied on federal law in announcing this rule, citing both the Court's opinion in White v. Regester, 412 U.S. 755, 93 S.Ct. 2332, 37 L.Ed.2d 314 (1973), and Justice Brennan's dissent in that case to the effect that "a line has been drawn at 10%—deviations in excess of that amount are apparently acceptable only on a showing of justification by the State; deviations less than that amount require no justification whatsoever." Id. at 776, 93 S.Ct. 2332 (Brennan, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

17. The new constitutional provision took effect January 3, 1999. Committee Substitute for Senate Bill (C.S.S.B.) 44, 20th Leg. 1st Sess. (1999).

18. The legislative history of the provision tends to confirm this view. A section-by-section analysis of the proposed constitutional amendment, prepared for the House Judiciary Committee, commenting on section 4 (which was to become article VI, section 6) stated, with regard to the "as nearly as practicable" language, "Since Alaska Supreme Court and U.S. Supreme Court decisions make clear that minor deviations from an ideal one-fortieth reapportionment per district are permissible, the 'as nearly as practicable' language is added." Sectional Analysis for HJR 44 0-LS0528/C, Original Bill File, House Judiciary Comm. (Feb. 4, 1998).

Virtually identical language is found in the Sectional Analysis prepared for the Senate Judiciary Committee on the same provision. With regard to the "as nearly as practicable" language, the analysis reads: "Since U.S. Supreme Court and Alaska Supreme Court cases make clear that minor deviations from an ideal one-fortieth of the state's population are permissible for house and senate districts, the 'as nearly as practicable' language is added." 19. 526 P.2d 863 (Alaska 1974).

20. Id. at 874, 878–79.

21. The Groh opinion does not divulge the Anchorage district with the greatest *over*representation. Accordingly, we do not know the "maximum population deviation in Anchorage" in the redistricting plan that Groh addressed. It is therefore not possible to construct the figure that would be comparable to the 9.5% "maximum population deviation in Anchorage" that today's Order describes. But it is likely that the comparable figure would have been substantially higher in the Groh case, for no Anchorage district in the present plan exceeds 4.8% deviation.

the greatest Anchorage deviation struck down today is 4.8%, and the maximum statewide deviation—a deviation figure that Anchorage has nothing to do with[22]—is 12%. Groh v. Egan simply does not support the court's invalidation of sixteen Anchorage house districts.

Here, the board's stated purpose of trying to maintain neighborhood boundaries within Anchorage, once it had fully complied with the one person, one vote requirement, resulted in the board's decision not to attempt to further minimize deviations within Anchorage below what we have previously determined to be de minimis.[23] It did so in order to preserve neighborhoods,[24] a proper motive.[25] It had no impermissible effect. In sum, I believe that the board's approach was entirely proper and conformed to all constitutional requirements. This court should uphold Judge Rindner's affirmance of the board.

Proclamation House District 40

Today's Order invalidates Proclamation House District 40 on the ground that the board incorrectly believed that the 6.9% population deviation in that district was required by the Voting Rights Act. Because I do not believe that is an accurate description of the reason that the board fashioned District 40 as it did, I dissent.

To understand what occurred in regard to District 40, some background information is necessary. Proclamation House District 40 encompasses a very large area—approximately 133,000 square miles—that is sparsely inhabited. The board had only two options to obtain sufficient population: adjoining District 6 or adjoining District 39.

The board considered but rejected the option of taking population from District 6, because District 6 is a majority Athabaskan district, whereas District 40 is a majority Inupiaq district. In Hickel v. Southeast Conference,[26] we recognized that combining these disparate populations may be "the single worst combination that could be selected if a board were trying to maximize socio-economic integration in Alaska."[27] Clearly, the board's decision not to take population from District 6 was reasonable and fully justifiable.

The board's other option was to take population from District 39. The closest community in that district is Shishmaref. But if the board were to have done that, the deviation in District 39 would have been −7.8%, greater than District 40's −6.9%.

The board could have lowered the 7.8% deviation by moving Pilot Station from District 6 to District 39 (its former district), but such a move would have increased the deviation in District 6 to −8.2%, again, a greater deviation.[28] Accordingly, the board conclud-

22. In this redistricting plan, the most overrepresented district is House District 40 (the North Slope) with a −6.89% deviation. The most underrepresented district is House District 33 (Kenai Peninsula), with a +5.06% deviation. Accordingly, the plan's statewide "total deviation" is 11.95%, rounded to 12%.

23. Groh, 526 P.2d at 877 ("We conclude that in the absence of a showing that the manner of reapportioning a state was improperly motivated or had an impermissible effect, deviations of up to ten percent require no showing of justification.").

24. The Order does not appear to challenge the conclusion that the board's purpose was to preserve neighborhoods, a conclusion that was supported by the evidence. For example, the board heard substantial expert testimony about the socio-economic characteristics of Anchorage neighborhoods, and a majority of the Anchorage Assembly endorsed, as the plan that best kept neighborhoods intact, a package of districts that became most of the final Proclamation districts.

25. Groh, 526 P.2d at 879 ("[Patterns of housing, income levels, and minority residency] may form a basis for districting.").

26. 846 P.2d 38 (Alaska 1993).

27. Id. at 53 (internal quotation marks omitted).

28. Attempts to lower the deviation in District 6 to acceptable levels were not feasible: District 6 is contiguous with the other effective Native districts, Districts 5 and 37 40. However, these districts are already underpopulated. While District 6 is also contiguous with the districts that include the urban areas of Kenai, Anchorage, Mat Su, and Fairbanks, these areas have minimal, if any, socio-economic integration with the Interior Rivers area, District 6. Given the higher population deviations that would have resulted from trying to reduce District 40's underpopued that District 40's population shortfall was justified by the difficulty of obtaining offsetting population blocks without violating the board's policies of achieving socio-economic integration and preserving political and Native corporation boundaries. Thus, while the board's initial concerns involved the Voting Rights Act, Judge Rindner found that "[a]ll Board members joined in the decision to approve the boundaries of House District 40, believing that this choice would result in the lowest population deviation." (Emphasis added.)

Judge Rindner found that the board's −6.9% deviation in Proclamation House District 40 was justified. As he concluded, "[b]oth the size and the unavailability of easily moved population blocks make this deviation acceptable [and] justified." Judge Rindner noted that the board moved Pilot Station out of District 39 into District 6 to increase the Native population in District 6. As a consequence, the resulting deviation of Proclamation House District 40 was the lowest possible deviation. Although Judge Rindner found that moving Pilot Station from District 6 to District 39 would have had Voting Rights Act implications—which in themselves would not have been enough to justify a total deviation in excess of 10%[29]—the reason for the move was not to satisfy the Voting Rights Act but to achieve the lowest population deviation consistent with other constitutional requirements, including socio-economic integration.

For these reasons, I believe today's Order misapprehends the impact of the Voting Rights Act on the board's actions. Even ignoring the federal act entirely, the board had few options and exercised one that is fully consistent with constitutional requirements. Finally, as a point of reference, the 12% total statewide deviation that the board's plan contained is the lowest deviation in any redistricting plan in Alaska's history. I would uphold Judge Rindner's affirmance of the board's Proclamation House District 40.

Conclusion

I fully agree with the Order's observations that redistricting presents formidable challenges to a citizen board that operates under extraordinary time pressures, and that this board should be "commended for its diligent, conscientious efforts to achieve the basic goal of redistricting." It is because the task is so difficult, the time so short, and the job on remand so remarkably heavy that this court should not strike down or otherwise throw into question two-thirds of the districts unless they are truly unconstitutional. Because I believe that only Proclamation Districts 12 and 16 fail to meet constitutional requirements, I dissent from those parts of today's Order that do not affirm the trial court. I would affirm the decision of Judge Rindner in all respects.

LETTER IN SUPPORT OF SJR 28,

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM FOR THE ECUMENICAL PATRIARCHATE

Chairman French, and distinguished members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

My name is Vasilios L. Copadis, I am a member of the Holy Transfiguration Greek Orthodox Church in Anchorage, AK. My wife and I have lived in Anchorage for over 32 years. We have been members of the Holy Transfiguration parish since the church reopened in 1984. In previous years I have served both as a member of the Parish Council and as Parish Council President. I was also a member of our church's Diocesan Council, which is an advisory board to the Bishop of our Diocese and is headquartered in San Francisco, CA. I am writing to you in support of Senate Joint Resolution 28, for the Religious Freedom for the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

The Ecumenical Patriarchate is located in Constantinople, which is modern day Istanbul, Turkey. Ever since the Treaty of Lausanne in 1923, the Turkish government has embarked on a series of maneuvers to rid the country of persons of Greek ethnicity, which is considered "ethnic cleansing". The treaty provided for the independence of the Republic of Turkey but also for the protection of the Greek Orthodox Christian minority and the mainly ethnically Turkish Muslin minority in the Thrace region of Greece. However, most of the Christian population of Turkey and the Muslim population of Greece had already been deported under the earlier exchange of populations between Greece and Turkey agreement which was signed by Greece and Turkey. Only the Greeks of Constantinople, the islands of Imvros and Tenedos were excluded (about 270,000 at that time), and the Turkish population of Western Thrace. Today only 2,000 to 3,000 Greek Orthodox citizens remain in Istanbul.

The Turkish State still does not recognize the "Ecumenical" title and status of the Patriarch and Patriarchate. This title was given to the Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople by the undivided Christian Church in the 6th century, and is purely an ecclesiastical title. The mission and jurisdiction of the Ecumenical Patriarchate has always been and always will be purely spiritual. Unfortunately, this title has been the source of much debate by the Turkish State, even though it is recognized and used by the rest of the world. The majority of the faithful under the immediate jurisdiction of the Ecumenical Patriarchate is outside of Turkey and encircles the globe, including more than 1.5 million Greek Orthodox faithful in the United States. The Ecumenical Patriarchate is also the First Church of the Orthodox Church worldwide, responsible for coordinating the Pan Orthodox affairs of the Orthodox Church. It is the spiritual center of 300 million Orthodox Christians worldwide.

More recently, the European Union (to which Turkey aspires to become a member of) under the 2003 EU-Turkey Accession Partnership, instructed the Turkish government to conform to European standards with respect to religious freedom and the protection of minorities. The Turkish State continues to violate the Lausanne Treaty by not legally recognizing the Ecumenical Patriarchate, and it has not made any progress towards the EU-Turkey 2003 Accession Partnership. Not having a legal identity is a major source of many other problems of the Ecumenical Patriarchate in Turkey, this includes no property rights.

Current government policies threaten the viability of the Patriarch's presence in Istanbul, and appear targeted to bring about the eventual exodus of the Greek Orthodox from Turkey entirely. The Turkish Authorities do not allow the Ecumenical Patriarchate to have any property rights in Turkey. Through various methods, the Turkish Authorities have confiscated thousands of properties including homes, apartment buildings, schools and land from Ecumenical Patriarchate and its community over the years. The most glaring property issue surrounds the Orthodox Theological School of Halki which was seized in 1971, when the Turkish Government nationalized all institutions of higher education.

The Theological School of Halki is the only institution of the Ecumenical Patriarchate for the training of its clergy. One cannot underestimate its importance for the survival of the Ecumenical Patriarchate. It's a "Catch 22" of sorts in the fact that in 1923 and again in 1970, the Governor of Istanbul illegally issued decrees imposing restrictions on the election of the Ecumenical Patriarch and the Metropolitans (Bishops) who elect him. These decrees stated that the Ecumenical Patriarch, and the hierarchs (Metropolitans and Archbishops) that vote for him, must be Turkish citizens! This would be akin to the country of Italy where the Vatican is located, decreeing that only Italian citizens can be elected Pope and that only Roman Catholic hierarchs who are Italian citizens can vote for someone to become Pope! It's ludicrous!!

Currently there are only 15 hierarchs in Turkey with Turkish citizenship. If the Halki Theological School is not allowed to reopen, then there can be no clergy trained. Without clergy, there will eventually be no one ascending to be hierarchs, and ultimately, there will be no one of Turkish citizenship left that can be elected as Patriarch....thus, Catch-22. In spite of numerous petitions and appeals to the Turkish government, including personal appeals by Presidents George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton, the government of Turkey still refuses to allow the school to reopen. Consequently, if the school remains closed, it will be a case of institutional genocide, as it will assure the governmental extinction of the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

Recently, the European Commission for Democracy has made a ruling urging Turkey to recognize the status of the Ecumenical Patriarchate and its historical role as it was already defined in the 6th Century. It also calls for the reopening of the Theological School of Halki, and also to change the rule by which the Metropolitans and other hierarchs must be Orthodox Christians of Turkish nationality in order to be elected as Patriarch.

In spite of numerous attempts by His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew to start a dialogue with the Turkish Authorities regarding all of the above mentioned issues, there have been very few meetings. Additionally, the Ecumenical Patriarchate has written and sent over 30 letters to the Prime Minister and other Ministers and authorities in Ankara about the problems of the Ecumenical Patriarchate and its community, but there has never been even one reply to any of these letters. Without the resolution of many of these problems, Turkey will not be demonstrating the religious freedom necessary to enter the European Union.

In closing, I urge the committee to join 25 other states that have passed similar resolutions and vote in favor of this resolution. Thank you for your time.

Vasilios L. Copadis

MY PERSONAL EXPERIENCE AT THE ECUMENICAL PATRIARCHATE

When I was serving as a priest in Greece, I was given the opportunity to serve as the "on duty" priest at the monastery of the Holy Trinity at the well known theological school on the island of Halki, (which has been closed since 1971), a half-hour ferry ride from the city of Constantinople. It was my privilege to serve there for seven weeks. I arrived during Bright week (the week after Easter) and left at Pentecost (50 days later), thus it was my blessing to serve the Pentecostarion (time between Easter and Pentecost) there.

Before I left for Halki, I was advised that I should dress in "street clothes," i.e., not in clerical clothing. The country of Turkey does not allow clerics, foreign or otherwise, to dress as clerics in public. For me, that meant no cassock or rasso. Way back then I still had a business suit tucked in a closet at home, why I am not sure, but it came in handy for the trip and I made sure I was wearing it when I arrived in Turkey. After ordination, I had no use for the suit any longer, but inertia being what it is, I still had it. It was a good looking suit and it fit well. I will admit, though, that after two-plus years as a presbyter, it felt very strange to be in a suit again and I looked rather odd wearing it with my very long hair and long beard.

The locals on the island of Halki made sure I was aware that obedience to the country's laws not be taken lightly. That is, if I were to be arrested for whatever reason, I could disappear and never be heard from again. There's no habeas corpus there.

I learned I could relax the suit idea and instead wear simple black trousers and matching black long sleeved t-shirt with my black kondo (vest). I gave the suit to a grateful young Armenian man who was employed at the defunct theological school at Halki. He related to me how he couldn't keep a job in the city once his employers found out that he was a Christian. Sadly, this problem was not just his.

Once I shed the suit, I ended up looking the part of an eccentric hippy instead of an uncomfortable, out-of-place presbyter. A researcher I met at Halki suggested I looked akin to a 19th century Russian peasant.

His All-Holiness, Bartholomew, would visit the school regularly, often with guests. I had the privilege to meet with his All-Holiness several times. I found him personable and easy to communicate with. He was very warm and kind to me during my stay.

All during my stay, I learned of the plight of the Patriarch, the Ecumenical Patriarchate and the Orthodox Church in Turkey from those who had lived there all their lives. I learned of property confiscations, vandalism, personal threats and riots against Christians. It was disheartening and shocking to learn that just a few Christians live in Constantinople these days—Constantinople, the great Byzantine city. Countless numbers of Christians have been forced from their lives there.

The librarian on Halki, George, befriended me. He was a former tour guide and exceptional musician, although I cannot now remember the name of the mandolin-like instrument that was his favorite—it may have been the Oud. George received a blessing to take me on a tour of Constantinople. Our first stop, of course, was the Church of Holy Wisdom--Agia Sophia. The scale of this church is immense and, once more, the personal experience is what communicates the grandeur, not to mention all the history and suffering that has taken place there since the fall of the city in 1453.

I stood in awe of the beauty and could only imagine what it must have been like when the Emperor of Rome was present before the Ottomans stormed the city on May 29, 1453. Imagine the Patriarch, a dozen visiting bishops, a small army of priests, seven or so deacons and two full choirs, perhaps two dozen or more in each, choir members with top-notch skills, adding to this the Emperor with all his retinue; billowing clouds of incense and bells. We have a description of what the envoys from Vladimir, Prince of Kiev, saw when visiting Agia Sophia, their report noted that the worship struck them as though they didn't know if they were in heaven or on earth. Even considering the current state of the Great Church, now held as a state museum, I could, in my mind's eye, envision their wonderment. George commented to me that it was against the law to pray in Agia Sophia. Only God knows how many silent, fervent prayers are offered there routinely.

I saw many beautiful and amazing sites in the city, but Agia Sophia always remains at the forefront of my mind. After the tour, George and I walked by the many shops that had been taken from Christians during some horrible uprisings against the Orthodox.

It is because of these firsthand experiences that I do not hesitate for a moment to testify for the adoption of the Alaska Senate Joint Resolution 28 this Friday, March 26, at 1:30PM. I encourage as many who feel sympathy and concord with the Patriarchate as I do, to follow suit. You can read more details of human and religious rights violations against the Ecumenical Patriarchate at http://archons.org/. The situation of the Patriarchate in Constantinople actually requires more than our sympathy, it requires our action as the continued existence of the Patriarchate is at stake. It is a sacred duty to speak in support of the Ecumenical Patriarchate. The Turkish government insists that it must approve of any new Patriarch and that candidate must be a Turkish citizen having served in the Turkish army. This cuts the field of candidates very thin indeed. How many unmarried Orthodox clergy can boast Turkish citizenship and military service?

As an aside, as I was leaving Constantinople by bus, I came across a twenty-something American couple who were leisurely traveling around the world. When I met them and we began to chat, I was attired in my "Russian peasant garb" and dark sunglasses. However, as soon as we crossed the Greek-Turkish border, I reached into my bag and pulled out my cassock and quickly attired myself properly. As is often the case with world travelers, we exchanged email addresses. Later, to my surprise, I read on their website that they had met a man who looked like a member of ZZ TOP and was suddenly transformed into an Orthodox priest before their very eyes. Now, I wonder who that might have been? +Fr. Leo

These state Religious Freedom resolutions are just one component of a multi faceted effort actively being undertaken by Orthodox Christians to preserve the existence of the Ecumenical Patriarchate.

In addition to this state initiative, active engagement is also taking place with the Office of the President, the United States Senate, the Unites States House of Representatives, the State Department, the European Union and the European Court of Human Justice. Every President since Jimmy Carter has called on the Turkish government to extend full religious freedom to the Ecumenical Patriarchate. Just last April, President Obama, in his address to the Turkish parliament, urged the government to re-open the Orthodox Christian Theological School of Halki, which the government closed in 1971.

These resolutions are an important part of our overall governmental and public affairs strategy. These resolutions represent the will of the citizens of our nation in all of these states and are a powerful statement to the Turkish government of the importance we place on religious freedom.

Later this year, sometime in the Fall, we will hand deliver all of the adopted resolutions to Secretary of State Clinton, who is also on record as calling on the Turkish government to extend religious freedom to the Ecumenical Patriarchate. In a separate trip in the Fall, we will hand deliver copies of the adopted resolutions to the Turkish Foreign Minister in Ankara.

The good news is that all of these efforts, especially including the adoption of these state resolutions, are beginning to produce positive results. The Turkish government has recently indicated that it will return a large orphanage to the Ecumenical Patriarchate which it confiscated a number of years ago. Also, there are positive signs that the government will soon allow the reopening of the Halki Theological School, which will enable the training of young men for the Priesthood in Turkey.

These resolutions are both a constant reminder and incentive to the Turkish government to fulfill its obligations for all of its citizens, so that they, as well as Orthodox Christians around the world, including Alaska, can enjoy full religious freedom. These resolutions are having a positive impact, and we hope to continue to secure their adoption until every state has done so.

Respectfully submitted,

SPONSOR STATEMENT FOR SJR 28

Relating to the Ecumenical Patriarchate and religious rights.

SJR 28 would urge the United States, the European Union, and the United Nations to encourage the government of Turkey to end its discrimination against the Ecumenical Patriarchate, one of the oldest Christian institutions in the world.

Just as the Pope is the spiritual leader of Roman Catholics worldwide, the Ecumenical Patriarch is the spiritual leader of Orthodox Christians. The Turkish government has expropriated Church property (including an orphanage the Church has held since 1902), closed the Orthodox Theological School of Halki, and prevented the Orthodox Christian Church from selecting any canonically eligible bishop throughout the world from becoming the Ecumenical Patriarch by requiring Turkish citizenship.

The Ecumenical Patriarchate is the spiritual home to approximately six million Orthodox Christians in the United States and 300 million worldwide. Alaskan Orthodox Christians have a strong relationship with the Ecumenical Patriarchate through their bishops. Russian Orthodoxy arrived in Alaska in 1794. There are currently 95 Russian Orthodox churches in the state with approximately 20,000 members. The Greek Orthodox Church in Anchorage was established in 1958 and currently has 200 members. There are three Antiochian Orthodox Churches located in Homer, Eagle River and Wasilla with a total of 440 members.

SJR 28 would ask that the Alaska State Legislature call on the government of Turkey to pledge to uphold the safeguard religious rights without compromise. To date, 25 State Legislatures have adopted similar resolutions.

Utah senators support Greek Orthodox Church leader

By Lisa Riley Roche
Deseret News
Published: Thursday, Feb. 5, 2009 11:46 a.m. MST

The Senate approved a resolution Wednesday urging the government of Turkey to recognize the spiritual leader of the Greek Orthodox Church.

The sponsor of SR1, Senate Minority Leader Pat Jones, D-Holladay, said she was asked to carry the resolution by the Greek Orthodox Church of Greater Salt Lake City because of the "repressive actions of the Turkish government that restrict religious freedom around the world" including Utah.

Jones said the Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew serves as the spiritual leader to the 300 million members of the Greek Orthodox Church just as Pope Benedict does to Catholics and LDS Church President Thomas S. Monson does to Mormons.

Her resolution, which passed unanimously, will be sent to President Obama, leaders of Congress and members of Utah's Congressional delegation, the U.S. ambassador to Turkey and Turkey's ambassador to the United States.

Rep. Greg Hughes, R-Draper, is carrying a similar resolution in the House.

Ancient faith faces an uncertain future

Published November 26, 2006

Imagine the Vatican surrounded in a fiercely secular yet very Muslim Italy.

The Christian community there has dwindled to only a few thousand after decades of ethnic cleansing. Much of the church's property has been seized. The government has closed the only seminary and refuses to reopen it.

A law has been passed: Any future Roman Catholic pope must be born on Italian soil, even though there is no seminary to train the young priests, even as the Christian community shrinks to a handful. A cold shadow falls on the Western church.

I asked you to imagine this because it's going on, right now, but not in Rome.

It is happening in Istanbul, where Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew I, patriarch of Constantinople and spiritual leader of the world's Orthodox Church, is facing extreme pressure by the Turkish government.

This week, Pope Benedict XVI will travel to Turkey and pray with Bartholomew, and witness the liturgy in the Church of St. George.

The focus will be on the pope relying on the patriarch to help make inroads with Muslims, after comments the pope made this year about violence and Islam.

But I hope his visit will also draw attention to the desperate plight of the Orthodox Church, which has been largely ignored. There are an estimated 250,000 Orthodox Christians in the Chicago area, enough, you might think, for attention to be paid, especially now.

The pope will hear the liturgy as it was sung more than a thousand years ago, when there was only one church, before the split into East and West.

"They will exchange the kiss of peace, and they will bless the people, and they will recite together the `Our Father' in Greek, the original [scriptural] language," said Archbishop Demetrios, leader of the Greek Orthodox Church in America, who will lead the American delegation.

"Then the two of them will go out to the elevated balcony, if you remember it, and bless the people who will be gathered in the courtyard," the archbishop told me.

I do remember. I was there, at St. George, at the patriarchate this past summer, watching the baptism of my nephew. We had the honor of visiting with Bartholomew, who said with a smile that he reads the Chicago Tribune online.

Obviously, I have strong, personal and religious feelings about this and can't pretend otherwise, yet I mean no disrespect to Turkey or to Islam.

The streets in that quarter of Istanbul are narrow. The bus stops at the bottom of the hill. You walk past a few shops, on up, and eventually, through the gates of the compound.

Once there, you begin to realize how central the patriarchate has been to Christianity, dating from about A.D. 300, when the Gospels of the New Testament were being selected, and later, when the Nicene Creed, a statement of faith recited by Catholics, Orthodox and other Christians, was created before the schism.

That the media ignores the patriarch's plight is astounding and hurtful to me. As is the realization that all that history could be gone if things don't change in Istanbul, in what was once called Constantinople, the heart of the Byzantine Empire.

At the patriarchate, one of the exterior doors is never opened. It has remained closed since 1821, when Greece fought for its independence from the Ottoman sultans, and the patriarch then was dragged out and hanged from that very doorway.

Today, Turkey is a fascinating, wonderful place, worthy of American tourism, worthy of American respect.

The people are friendly and hospitable, and the history is astounding. The Blue Mosque, the Topkapi Palace, the ancient covered market, still thriving. That it has remained a nation is testament to the intense will of Kemal Ataturk, founder of the modern secular Turkish state, which now must deal with growing Islamic fundamentalism.

All of this is important for Americans to grasp, as the West realizes, finally, that ignoring Islam is impossible.

For me, it was especially important to visit Hagia Sophia, literally, the Church of Divine Wisdom, the ancient domed structure that was turned into a mosque when the Turks took Constantinople in 1453.

It is an immense structure, larger even than its copy, St. Peter's Basilica in Rome, and is nearly 1,500 years old.

There, I thought of the worshipers fearfully singing the liturgy as the city walls were breached, as the slaughter began, as a Christian empire that had stood for more than 1,000 years perished.

Most icons were destroyed, but you can see the Virgin Mary on the wall near what had been the altar. A sign prohibits religious observance, but the guards don't stop you from praying.

Pope Benedict is also scheduled to visit Hagia Sophia, now tersely referred to as a museum.

As he visits there, the news images may be sent around the world to remind us of what was, and how what little is left is slipping away.

Sponsor Statement for HB 6

"An Act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or sexual activities as cruelty to animals."

HB 6 expands the current Alaska law on cruelty to animals to include "sexual conduct." The purpose of this bill is not just to protect animals from sexual assault but to protect children and other vulnerable humans from potential predators.

A compelling body of research confirms a link between animal cruelty and human violence. Studies also point to a connection between sexual abuse of animals and sexual abuse and other violent behavior toward humans. For example:

> High rates of sexual abuse of animals exist in the backgrounds of serial sexual homicide perpetrators, according to the FBI.
> Thirty-seven percent of sexually violent juvenile offenders have a history of animal sexual assault, according to a Utah State University study.
> Sexual relations with animals parallel sexual assault against women and children because in both instances there are issues of coercion, pain, and lack of consent, according to a University of Southern Maine study.

At least 35 other states outlaw acts of bestiality, with some classifying it as a felony, according to the Humane Society of the United States. Many states have language similar to HB 6.

This proposed "sexual conduct" offense would be a Class A misdemeanor, added to AS 11.61.140, Cruelty to Animals. This statute includes commonsense exemptions for conduct ranging from scientific research governed by accepted standards, to accepted veterinary and animal husbandry practices.

HB 6: Changes from Original Bill

"An Act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or sexual activities as cruelty to animals."

Three changes from the original Version A of House Bill 6.

Version A to Version R

Version R, which was heard by the House Judiciary Committee on Fri, March 20, 2009, narrowed the title by:

-- deleting in Version A, line 1: "An Act relating to cruelty to animals."
-- replacing it in Version R, with lines 1 and 2, "An Act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or activities as cruelty to animals."

Version R to Version E

Version E, which was adopted without objection by the House Judiciary Committee on Fri, March 20, 2009, added just one word to title by:

-- inserting in Version E, on line 1: the word sexual between the words or and activities

Version E to Version E.A

Version E was amended before passing unanimously 40-0 on the House Floor on April 17, 2009. Version E.A restructures and rewords Section 1 on page 2, to change the criminal standard from "knowingly" to "intentionally" (page 2, line 12-13) "permits sexual conduct with an animal to be conducted on any premises under the person's control."

FAQ for HB 6

"An Act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or sexual activities as cruelty to animals."

What prompted the filing of House Bill 6?

The Anchorage Daily News reported last spring that a child sex offender in Klawock allegedly taped the muzzle of a dog, tied it to a tree, and sexually assaulted it. Alaskans were shocked to learn there was no Alaska law prohibiting sex with animals. Ketchikan District Attorney James Scott was quoted in the news account as saying the state's "very real concern" was that, if a small child had been available and unattended at the time and place where this dog was taken, "that the small child would have been found taped (and) tied in the woods."

Is this really a problem in Alaska and the United States?

Chava Lee, the Executive Director of Gastineau Humane Society in Juneau, receives at least a handful of reports of humans having sex with animals every year. As the agency that enforces Alaska's animal cruelty law locally, Lee must tell complainants that, unless the animal is severely injured or killed, the mistreatment is not a crime. The population of Juneau is only about 30,000. Extrapolate the number of human-animal sex reports in Juneau across Alaska, where the population is more than 650,000, and there may be at least 100 incidents a year. If this mistreatment of animals was recognized as a crime, there would likely be even more reports in Alaska.

Nationally, examples of sexual molestation of animals connected to sexual crimes against humans can be found in news accounts across the country. An Animal Abuse Database found under the internet site, Pet-Abuse.Com, turns up an alarming number of horrific cases of sexual abuse and violence against humans co-occurring with acts of bestiality.

The evidence of humans engaging in sex with animals is overwhelming. Almost any internet search engine will lead you to page after page of very graphic and disturbing material describing and promoting human sexual abuse of animals. Detailed how-to-do-it guides for the sexual abuse of animals involving a variety of species can be found on the internet, along with information on laws, animal-transmitted diseases, personal advertisements, and "pro-zoophile" resources.

What exactly is animal sexual abuse?

Often referred to as "bestiality" or "zoophilia," animal sexual abuse is the sexual molestation of an animal by a human. This kind of animal abuse includes a wide range of behaviors such as vaginal, anal, or oral penetration; fondling; oral-genital contact; penetration using an object; and killing or injuring an animal for sexual gratification. Animal sexual abuse may or may not include physical violence other than sexual violation; and may or may not result in physical injury to the animal. Animal sexual abuse, like rape, is the eroticization of violence, control and exploitation.

Is it really animal abuse if there is no physical injury?

Yes. Many animals are physically restrained during the abuse. Not all cases of animal sexual abuse will involve physical injury to the animal, but all sexual molestation of an animal by a human should be considered abuse.

In his 1993 article, Dr. Frank Ascione, Professor of Sociology at Utah State University, stated "bestiality may be considered cruel even in cases when physical harm to an animal does not occur (this is similar to the case of adult sexual activity with a child where consent is presumed to be impossible)."

In a 1997 article, Piers Beirne, Professor of Criminology at the University of Southern Maine, points out, "for genuine consent to sexual relations to be present ... both participants must be conscious, fully informed and positive in their desires. Bestiality is by nature sexual coercion because animals are incapable of genuinely saying "yes" or "no" to humans in forms we can readily understand."

(more)

In human-animal relationships, the human has power and control over the animal, often in all aspects of the animal's care and well-being. Thus, a sexual "relationship" between human and animal cannot be considered consensual.

Is all this attention on animal abuse an intrusion on an individual's private sexual choices?

No. Unlike sexual interactions between consenting adult humans, animal sexual abuse is not simply about an individual's private sexual choice. As in the case of child sexual abuse and adult rape, animal sexual abuse is an activity in which one party has no choice and cannot consent or refuse. When he/she initiates a sexual activity in which the other partner has no choices and must participate, the sexual abuser leaves the realm of private action.

Is there a connection between animal sexual abuse and domestic violence, child abuse and other violent crimes?

Yes. The sexual abuse of animals is often linked to the sexual abuse of women and children (Kowal, 1998). According to Lenore Walker's (1984) interviews with battered women, bestiality was mentioned as one of the "unusual sex acts" desired by their partners. Child sexual abusers may also sexually abuse animals to enhance, expand or extend the abuse of the genuinely powerless and unsuspecting victim (Adams, 1994).

Research also indicates a connection between animal sexual abuse and other types of violent crimes. According to a 1986 study, 40 percent of the perpetrators of sexually motivated homicides, who had been sexually abused as children, also reported they have sexually abused animals (Ressler, et al. 1986).

Our interviews with Alaska officials who work in the areas of animal cruelty, law enforcement, corrections, domestic violence and sexual assault, confirm the compelling body of research that shows a connection between animal sexual abuse and human sexual abuse and violence.

Can animal sexual abuse be prosecuted under the existing Alaska animal cruelty law?

Only if the person knowingly inflicts severe and prolonged physical pain or suffering on an animal, or knowingly injures or kills an animal to intimidate, threaten, or terrorize another person.

Are there other Alaska laws that could be used to prosecute animal sexual abuse?

Only if the sexual abuse of an animal also involves a crime against a person (Unlawful Exploitation of a Minor), or involves the damage or loss of property (Criminal Mischief).

Is animal sexual abuse illegal in most states?

Yes. Thirty-five states outlaw acts of bestiality, with several classifying the crime as a felony, according to a database compiled by the Humane Society of the United States. Recent news reports indicate other states are also looking at criminalizing sexual abuse of animals.

Many states that currently outlaw acts of animal sexual abuse and bestiality have language that is similar to the wording in HB 6.

Why must the wording of this bill be so graphic?

Language must be precise so everyone understands exactly what constitutes the "sexual conduct" part of the crime being proposed under this bill. Although such language may be embarrassing and uncomfortable to read, words must be clear and concise when specifying a criminal offense.

What would be the penalty in Alaska under this bill?

Like most of the other offenses listed under the existing Cruelty to Animals statute, the crime of "sexual conduct" with an animal would be a Class A misdemeanor. Cruelty to Animals is a class C felony if the person is convicted three times under the statute within 10 years.

Will there be exemptions for accepted professional practices involving "sexual conduct" with animals?

Absolutely. The same defense to a prosecution under the current Cruelty to Animals law would apply to the offense proposed in HB 6. Such defensible conduct includes legitimate scientific research governed by accepted standards, the humane destruction of an animal, accepted veterinary and animal husbandry practices, and other behaviors listed under AS 11.61.140 (c).

Bob Lynn based on studies, research and interviews involving Alaska Legal Services, Alaska Legislative Research Services, Alaska departments of Corrections, Law, Public Health, Public Safety and Environmental Conservation, municipal police departments and law enforcement agencies involved in animal cruelty and domestic violence/sexual assaults, Alaska Farm Bureau, Gastineau Humane Society veterinary clinic in Juneau, Pet-Abuse.Com, Humane Society of the United States, American Humane, and various news accounts in Alaska and around the country, and other sources.)

The Honorable Bob Lynn
Alaska House of Representatives
State Capitol Room 104
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Representative Lynn:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide input on House Bill 6, "An Act Relating to the Cruelty of Animals." The connection between animal cruelty, including animal sexual abuse, and violence against people is well documented in the research and findings on domestic violence, sexual assault, child molestation and serial homicide. Although the Department of Corrections (DOC) does not yet have quantitative data on the sexual abuse of animals by sex offenders being managed in Alaska communities, there does appear to be information that is consistent with the research in this area.

Since the DOC began using the polygraph with sex offenders on probation and parole in March 2006, approximately 350 individuals have submitted to polygraph examination; however, we are still in the developmental stages of routine polygraph use. The bulk of our examinations to date (80%) have been for purposes of monitoring the offenders' current behaviors. This focus is for good reason, as these offenders are in the community and it is critical that we know everything we can about their current behaviors. Information about prior abuse of animals tends to come out during sex history polygraph examinations (sex history polygraph examinations are used to examine the offenders past sexual behavior). A routine question during these exams is whether the offender has had sexual contact with animals. Passing the sexual history polygraph examinations is directly tied to progress in treatment. As would be expected, comprehensive information about one's lifetime sexual behavior is not something that is provided without some motivation. The motivation to "come clean" on these issues usually comes as a function of making progress in treatment and sanctions applied for not passing the polygraph. Making progress in treatment tends to take a long time, particularly when treatment occurs only in the community and is less intense.

While DOC does not have a large quantity of data on this topic, we do have some information that is pertinent. The treatment providers and the polygraph examiners that currently provide services to sex offenders on supervision were queried. Three treatment providers were able to give percentages of offenders they had seen in their practices who had engaged in sexual behavior with animals. The range was from 4% to 18%. It should be noted that this information was gathered in the course of assessment and treatment sessions and did not include direct examination of the issue with polygraph. It's likely that more offenders would be identified as having animal victims if they were polygraphed on this issue. In a study of 180 sex offenders in community treatment, English, et al (2003) noted that 4.4% admitted to engaging in bestiality during the course of their lifetime pre-treatment and polygraph and 36.1% admitted post-treatment and polygraph. The sexual history polygraph exams resulted in 8.2 times more offenders admitting to bestiality. The authors have concluded that bestiality is far more prevalent than previously thought.

As noted, not very many sex history polygraphs have been completed. To date, there have been three cases in which the offender specifically admitted to sexually abusing animals (about 6% of the total sex history polygraphs done). Most likely, there are more cases that we have not yet identified. What was interesting to note, however, is that in all three cases the offenders not only had crossover behaviors involving animals, they had crossover behaviors into more than one age and/or gender group of humans. Specifically, one had both male and female child victims as well as adult male victims; a second had child and adult male and female victims; and a third had male and female child victims and also attacked incapacitated adult women. We know from the literature that some offender characteristics are associated with higher re-offense rates, including abuse of both genders and abuse of males. (Abel et al, 1988; Quinsey, et al, 1995).

It is important that sexual abuse of animals be given credence as a potential precursor to various forms of violence against humans. Our initial data would tend to suggest that offenders with a broader range of victim types have likely sexually abused animals at some point in their history. Generally speaking, the further away sexual offending behavior is from normative sexual behavior the higher the likelihood of recidivism. Once an offender crosses the line into bestiality there is little he won't do. Animals are vulnerable because they can't defend themselves and can't report an assault. Children and incapacitated or handicapped adults are also vulnerable and are likely targets for these offenders. Identifying men who sexually abuse animals will likely help DOC identify high risk sex offenders who target the most vulnerable in our communities.

If you require additional information or if we can be of further assistance, please feel free to contact my office.

Sincerely,

Joseph D. Schmidt
Commissioner

The further away the offender is from what is typical the higher the risk of recidivism in general. Other non-typical items with higher rates of recidivism include bestiality and sexual acting out in prison.

Dear Representative Lynn,

The Alaska Farm Bureau is committed to providing a safe and wholesome product to our consumers. Our farmers and ranchers raise their animals using good animal husbandry practices that provide a safe growing environment, free from cruel treatment.

We feel that all animals should be treated humanely and with respect. We, therefore, wholeheartedly support and endorse HB 6, protecting animals from sexual activity by humans.

We appreciate the specific references to accepted veterinary and animal husbandry practices being acknowledged as specific examples of normal treatment/conduct between humans and animals and not to be construed as sexual activity or cruelty to animals.

Thank you for keeping us involved with this legislation and giving our members a chance to speak to you abut this bill.

Please feel free to contact us at any time with questions and concerns regarding farming and ranching in Alaska.

Sincerely,

Bryce Wrigley,

Dear Representative Lynn and members of the Alaska State Legislature

Thank you for this opportunity to publicly extend my support of HB 6 "An act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or activities as cruelty to animals". This is a well crafted piece of legislation that speaks specifically to the crime of sexual misconduct and does not inhibit or criminalize veterinary practices or standard animal husbandry practices. I also wish thank Representative Lynn for introducing HB 6.

As the head of an animal control agency I can tell you that sexual deviancy against animals does exist. Alaska is unfortunately not unique in this behavior. In each case that has come to my attention, coercion, abuse, threat of physical harm or terrorizing a human during the practice of a sexual assault on an animal was present. The people who reported the crimes were afraid for their own safety or the safety of their children. The sexual abuse of the animal had been used to intimidate, threaten or terrorize them into submission.

The animal victims in each of these cases as well as those that happen throughout our state, had no choice and there was little that could be done to protect or defend them. Unfortunately because a crime in the legal sense was not committed, the human victims were also left with no voice, no advocate, and no recourse. There was no justice for either the abused animal or the humans who were threatened by the abuser.

Statistics gathered by the FBI, American Humane Association and other agencies who work with offenders show the high correlation between sexual abuse and torture of animals and sexual abuse and violence towards human beings. In fact, the statistics provided by Representative Lynn in the information packet are staggering.

While it is true that I work for an animal organization, and this piece of legislation is one that deals specifically with animals, there is no escaping the fact that this is a human issue as well. First and foremost, humans are the abusers. Further, statistics show that human abusers (who are often victims of abuse themselves), often began their own cycle of violence by abusing animals. Anything we can do to criminalize that act of abuse helps to break the cycle.

This piece of legislation will unfortunately not stop sexual abuse or sexual torture of animals simply by its passage. It will give the victims recourse under the law. Passing this piece of legislation is the right thing to do.

THE HUMANE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES

OFFICERS

February 25, 2009

Dear Legislator:

The Humane Society of the United States, on behalf of our more than 18,000 members and supporters in Alaska, strongly supports passage of HB 6 (Rep. Lynn, R-31), to criminalize the sexual assault of animals. In addition to protecting the animals themselves from cruel treatment, this bill is needed to give law enforcement additional tools to protect human victims from sexually deviant crime.

STAFF VICE PRESIDENTS

Several studies have highlighted the link between the sexual abuse of animals and sex crimes against human victims. For example:

- 96% of juveniles who had engaged in sex with nonhuman animals also admitted to sex offenses against humans and reported more offenses against humans than other sex offenders their same age and race. (Fleming, William M., Jory, Brian and Burton, David L. Characteristics of Juvenile Offenders Admitting to Sexual Activity with Nonhuman Animals. Society and Animals. Vol 10., No.1, pp.31-45. 2002)

- The FBI researched the backgrounds of serial sexual homicide perpetrators and found high rates of sexual assault of animals. (Ressler, R. K. et al Sexual homicide: patterns and motives. Lexington, Mass.: Lexington Books. 1988)

- Up to 37% of sexually violent juvenile offenders had a history of animal sexual assault. (Monique R. Frazier, Physically and Sexually Violent Juvenile Offenders: A Comparative Study of Victimization History Variables 99 (unpublished dissertation, Utah St. U. 1998) (on file with Utah St. U.).

Thirty-five states currently have criminal penalties for the sexual abuse of animals – twenty punish the crime as a felony.

HB 6 would make sexual conduct with an animal a Class A misdemeanor. Importantly, the bill would also provide penalties for inducing another person to engage in sexual conduct with an animal. Forcing another person to engage in sexual activity with an animal is one of the most abhorrent sex crimes imaginable, and such conduct fits the pattern of behavior common to sexually deviant criminals.

DIRECTORS

We strongly urge you to support passage of HB 6.

Sincerely,

Dave Pauli

AMERICAN HUMANE

Protecting Children & Animals Since 1877

February 25, 2009

To the Alaska Legislature:

On behalf of the American Humane Association, the nation's oldest non-profit organization dedicated to protecting animals and children from maltreatment, we thank Representative Bob Lynn for introducing House Bill 6, a critical initiative to make the crime of sexual conduct with an animal a Class A misdemeanor.

The Link® between violence to people and violence to animals, and the concept that children who harm animals can become desensitized to violence and go on to commit antisocial acts against people, formed the very basis of our organization more than 130 years ago. To this day, American Humane continues to directly address the Link® between animal abuse and other forms of societal violence. Our strong support for House Bill 6 reflects our commitment to this issue.

HB 6 was drafted to address the horror many Alaskans experienced upon hearing last April's Anchorage Daily News report of a registered child sex offender who allegedly taped the muzzle of a black Lab, tied it to a tree, and sexually assaulted it in the woods of Ketchikan. Because Alaska lacks a law that prohibits sexual molestation of an animal by a human, the alleged offender was merely charged with the low-level property tampering offense of criminal mischief

For the welfare of both humans and animals, the law must treat all acts of violence against animals seriously. Because HB 6 addresses the dynamic of violence, control, and exploitation prevalent in animal sexual abuse, it would be a grave mistake to view HB 6 as a bill that just protects animals. Deliberate abuse of companion animals rarely occurs in isolated instances. Instead, animal abuse is often part of a vicious cycle of violence that escalates to human abuse.

Studies illustrate a strong connection between sexual abuse and conduct with animals. The studies are so compelling that it hardly comes as a surprise that the American Psychiatric Association has labeled "abuse of animals" among the symptoms of conduct disorder[1] and the FBI has found high rates of animal sex assaults in the backgrounds of serial sex homicide offenders.[2]

[1] American Psychiatric Association, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM–IV) (Vol, 4, 1994). Among the symptoms listed for conduct disorder are those categorized under "aggression to people and animals" (which includes cruelty to people or to animals, stealing with confrontation of the victim, and forced sexual activity). See also Juvenile Justice Bulletin, Animal Abuse and Youth Violence, September, 2001, at [illegible]

A 2002 study of juvenile offenders reveals that 96% who admitted to engaging in sex with animals also admitted to committing sex offenses against humans.[3] Another study regarding the perpetrators of sexually motivated homicides reveals the perpetrators had not only been sexually abused as children, but also had sexually abused animals in the past.[4]

A 1998 study found that sexual abuse of animals is often linked to sexual abuse of women and children.[5] That same year, another study reported that bestiality was often forced upon several children who were also forced to participate in pornographic activities.[6] Additionally, a study of several interviews with battered women revealed that bestiality was the sex act of preference for 41% of the abusive partners seeking to further dominate and terrorize their victims.[7]

Sexual molestation of an animal by a human is not a matter of personal privacy. Not only is bestiality severely inhumane, it can cause extensive physical harm and even death to the animal. It is important to note that even in cases where such harm does not occur, bestiality is still a cruel activity because animals lack the ability to clearly consent or refuse. Dr. Frank Ascione, Professor of Psychology at the University of Utah, likens this dynamic to adult sexual activity with a child: "consent is presumed to be impossible."[8] Bestiality is no more a personal sexual activity than is sexual abuse of children or rape of adults.

It is time Alaska joined the thirty-three other states that currently prohibit and penalize bestiality as a form of cruelty toward animals.[9] To help ensure a more humane Alaska for future generations, please pass House Bill 6.

LEGISLATIVE RESEARCH REPORT

SEPTEMBER 1, 2008 REPORT NUMBER 09.004

STATE LAWS: BESTIALITY CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS

PREPARED FOR REPRESENTATIVE BOB LYNN

BY CHUCK BURNHAM, LEGISLATIVE ANALYST

You asked about bestiality laws among the states. Specifically, you wanted to know which states have laws against bestiality and the penalties for violating those laws.

Our research located laws in thirty-two states that outlaw acts of bestiality.[1] Table 1 lists those states, their relevant statutory citations, and the criminal classification and maximum punishments for each violation. We include copies of the statutes listed in Table 1 as an attachment.

As you can see, the criminal classifications and punishments for bestiality vary substantially among the states. For instance, "indecency with an animal," a class A misdemeanor in Nebraska, is punishable by a maximum fine of $500 and three months in jail. By contrast, an "abominable and detestable crime against nature" with an animal in Rhode Island—materially similar to the Nebraska offense—is an unclassified felony punishable by seven to twenty years imprisonment. Not surprisingly, a number of states—Arizona, Illinois, Indiana, and Kansas, for example—impose dramatically increased penalties for crimes of bestiality where a minor is forced to take part in or otherwise witness the act. Similarly, some states increase penalties for repeat violators, for filming or photographing acts of bestiality, or for committing the act in public or in the presence of others.

I hope you find this information useful. Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have questions or need additional information.

[1] "Bestiality," more technically known as "zoophilia," is variously identified in states' laws as "buggery," "sodomy," "sexual assault of an animal," and as a "crime against nature," among other terms. For the purposes of this report "bestiality" refers to any sexual contact between a human and an animal. Although we believe our research to be thorough, there may be other state laws prohibiting bestiality that were not located by our efforts due to variability in wording and construction.

"Alaska lawmakers consider outlawing bestiality
Anne Sutton/The Associated Press
Updated Friday, March 20, 2009 at 6:45 p.m.

JUNEAU, Alaska - State lawmaker Bob Lynn said he was compelled to introduce a bill outlawing sex with an animal after he read a news story last April about a 26-year-old Klawock man.

The man was spotted by a local woman coaxing a Labrador retriever, a local family's pet, into the woods near a ball field. There he allegedly tied it to a tree, taped its muzzle shut with duct tape and had sex with it, witnesses told police at the time.

It's a subject that makes many people uncomfortable and elicits a lot of nervous jokes, but for the people in this Southeast Alaska community of 800 people, it was no laughing matter, said Klawock Mayor Don Marvin at a Friday hearing on the bill.

"When this incident happened, we had a community that was scared," Marvin said.

The man was a registered sex offender who had been twice convicted of raping a young boy. More recently he had served probation for assault after lunging at a child.

And while the incident with the dog was reported to the police, Marvin said nothing happened for two days while fearful parents escorted their children home from school.

The state has no law against such an attack, and Ketchikan District Attorney James Scott eventually charged the man with two counts of criminal mischief, which was later changed to a theft charge.

In requesting a $10,000 bail, Scott told the court that the state was concerned that if a small child had been available and unattended that day, "the small child would have been found taped (and) tied in the woods."

Lynn, an Anchorage Republican, wants to make Alaska the 36th state to ban bestiality by expanding the state's animal cruelty law to include sexual conduct. His bill would make the offense a class A misdemeanor that's punishable by up to a year in jail and a $10,000 fine.

The measure is backed by the Department of Corrections, the Alaska Farm Bureau, the Humane Society of the United States and the Alaska Peace Officers Association.

Rachel Dzuiba, a veterinarian at the Gastineau Humane Society in Juneau, said it would not only protect animals but also protect the public against a cycle of abuse and violence.

"The act of forcing a living creature to engage in a sexual activity without the ability of consent cannot simply be viewed as a personal choice - no more than forcing a child or an impaired adult would be," Dzuiba told the House Judiciary Committee.

The society's executive director, Chava Lee, said she has received several complaints at the Juneau animal shelter about sexual deviancy against animals.

"In each case that has come to my attention, coercion, abuse, threat of physical harm or terrorizing a human during the practice of a sexual assault on an animal was present," Lee said.

According to the national Humane Society, several studies highlight the link between the sexual assault of animals and sex crimes against humans, including:

- FBI research on the backgrounds of serial sexual homicide perpetrators that uncovered high rates of sexual assault of animals,

- A report in the Journal of Forensic Psychiatry that said twenty percent of children who sexually abuse other children also have histories of sexually abusing animals,

- A Utah State University study showing 37 percent of sexually violent juvenile offenders have a history of animal sexual assault.

The committee also heard testimony from Klawock Chief of Police Cullen Fowler who said the dog that had been allegedly assaulted did not require veterinary care but appeared to have suffered.

Fowler said the pressure of the taped muzzle cause blood vessels to burst in its eyes and the dog was sensitive to the touch, jumpy and afraid for a long time after the incident.

Lynn's aide, Mike Sica, said the bill is modeled on a law in Washington state. Criminal classifications and punishments vary widely among the states that outlaw bestiality. In Nebraska, "indecency with an animal" is a class A misdemeanor punishable by a maximum fine of $500 and three months in jail. But Rhode Island punishes what it terms an "abominable and detestable crime against nature" with seven to 20 years in jail.

Though no one testified against the bill, several committee members had concerns. Rep. Lindsay Holmes, D-Anchorage, said she was worried that someone could be charged with encouraging the crime when they were merely joking and no one was hurt. She asked the Department of Law to study the matter.

The bill goes next to the House Finance Committee, though the Department of Law said it would not result in an additional cost to the state. The bill is House Bill 6."

"An Act relating to proscribing certain sexual conduct or sexual activities as cruelty to animals."

Please schedule a hearing for House Bill 6 in the Senate Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. The bill expands the animal cruelty law in Alaska to include "sexual conduct."

Attached is a copy of the latest version HB 6 and supporting documents.

Thank you for considering my request for a hearing on HB 6, which I believe not only protects animals from sexual assault but also protects children and other vulnerable humans from sexual predators.

(b) The standing committee selected jointly by the presiding officers of the house and senate under (a) of this section shall hold at least one hearing under this section within 30 days after the convening of the legislative session preceding the statewide election at which the initiative proposition must appear on the election ballot under AS 15.45.190.

* Sec. 16. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

MEMORANDUM April 14, 2010

SUBJECT: Membership of the State Personnel Board
CSHB 348(JUD) (Work Order No. 26-LS1360\S)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard RAB
Legislative Counsel

You asked that I address separation of powers concerns raised by the committee substitute described above.

CSHB36(JUD) provides that the governor would be required to appoint nominees from a list of at least three qualified persons submitted by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. This requirement, that the governor appoint board members from a list of persons selected by the chief justice, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations, raises a constitutional question as to whether the legislature may so constrain the governor's ability to choose whom to appoint to an executive board.

The power to appoint members of state boards, commissions, and councils is an executive function to be exercised by the governor. In Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 5 - 6 (Alaska 1976), the Alaska Supreme Court recognized that the Alaska constitution envisioned a strong executive and "that the appointment of executive officers is an executive function. . . ." The legislature may prescribe qualifications for the members of boards and commissions that are reasonably related to either the position or to the aim of the legislation and do not interfere with the governor's appointment power or with qualifications set out in the constitution. Various state courts have reached this same conclusion and have upheld legislative designations of qualifications for public offices, such as memberships on a board or commission. See, e.g., State v. Matassarin, 217 P. 930 (Kansas 1923); State v. Eischen, 76 N.W.2d 385 (Minn. 1956); Humane Society of the United States v. New Jersey Fish and Game Council, 362 A.2d 20 (1976); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); State v. Wells, 112 N.W.2d 601 (S.D. 1961); State v. Millsap, 605 S.W.2d 366 (Tex. App. 1980).

However, the Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups.[1] The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; 1980 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-164-80), September 17. However, courts in other states have held that statutes requiring a governor to make appointments to a state board from a list of nominees submitted by other parties are constitutional. Kentucky Association of Realtors v. Musselman, 817 S.W.2d 213 (Ky. 1991); Opinion of the Justices, 316 A.2d 174 (N.H. 1974); Seidenberg v. New Mexico Board of Medical Examiners, 452 P.2d 469 (N.M. 1969); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); Marks v. Frantz, 298 P.2d 316 (Kan. 1956); Ingard v. Barker, 147 P. 293 (Id. 1915).

Nonetheless, at least three Alaska attorney general opinions or letters of advice have accepted that the legislature may prescribe reasonable qualifications for gubernatorial appointments to boards or commissions. 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; Memorandum to Governor Hammond from R. Pegues, August 13, 1979; 1988 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. 883-88-0079), May 24.

In this instance, I cannot say how a court would interpret the reasonableness of a statutory requirement that the governor appoint members of the board from lists of nominees chosen by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court.

If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

The House has passed one bill. The Senate has passed the other. Each chamber should finish the work to guarantee an open elections process, one with all the money players identified and the issues laid out before everyone. The House approved House Bill 36, which covers initiatives. This bill:

- Requires reporting of contributions and expenditures by groups and individuals backing or opposing a ballot initiative.

- Requires signature gatherers for an initiative to carry a copy of the initiative so that prospective signers could read just what it is the sponsors are trying to get on the ballot.

- Requires the lieutenant governor to hold at least eight public hearings, two in each of the state's four judicial districts, to include pro and con testimony on the initiative and public questions and comments.

- Requires review by an appropriate legislative committee of any initiative approved for the ballot. Lawmakers would have no authority to change or reject an initiative, but would hold hearings for testimony about the effects and costs of any initiative.

This is all to the good. Disclosure requirements will force all the moneyed friends and foes of an initiative to stand up and be counted. No anonymous donors. No front groups.

Formal hearings should provide a further vetting of initiatives and their consequences, with plenty of opportunity for open debate across the state.

Whenever lawmakers amend the initiative process, there's a natural wariness that they may be limiting the access of Alaskans to their constitutional right to the initiative process. That's not the case here. The more disclosure, the better. And the more public vetting of an initiative, the better.

ADVERTISEMENT

The Senate has approved Senate Bill 284, which covers campaign disclosures by corporations, unions and any other group that got a green light for campaign spending in the Supreme Court's January decision affirming corporate personhood. This bill:

- Requires corporations and other groups -- as "persons" -- to report what they're giving and what candidate or cause they support or oppose, and the names or principal officers of the groups or any donors to the group.

- Requires names and addresses of corporations and other groups behind a campaign ad.

- Requires full disclosure on any ads about who the top five contributors to that ad or group sponsoring it are -- in print that's readable or audio that's easily understood.

- Prohibits foreign nationals from contributing to Alaska campaigns.

In light of the Supreme Court decision, this is necessary legislation to keep Alaska elections open. The court amplified corporate power. The least Alaska can do in response is to make sure we can identify the sources of that power and their interests as we decide how to vote.

Both bills have strong support. The House initiative bill passed 35-5; the Senate disclosure bill passed 19-1. But Alaskans shouldn't take final passage and the governor's signature for granted. Good legislation has gotten lost before in the last days of deal-making before adjournment.

Lawmakers should make sure these bills become law.

BOTTOM LINE: Campaign disclosure laws should be on the books this spring.

Re: HB-36, Ballot Initiative Process

Dear Senator French,

I am writing to urge passage of House Bill 36 dealing with the ballot initiative process. The use of the ballot initiative process during the past several years has shown that changes to this important law are needed.

As currently written, the law contains loopholes that do not provide effective disclosure to Alaskans of exactly who or what groups are seeking to change Alaska statues. In contrast to the lax rules of disclosure for ballot initiatives, the disclosure requirements for political campaigns and for lobbying are extensive. As currently written, State Statures can be proposed, funded and passed to become State Law without input or debate by the Legislature or the Administration, and without the public even being aware of who is behind the initiative.

We urge that HB-36 be passed at the earliest possible time.

Sincerely,

Steven C. Borell, P.E.

MEMORANDUM February 25, 2010

SUBJECT: Questions relating to CSSSHB 36(JUD)
(Work Order 26-LS0197\S)

TO: Representative Bill Stoltze
Co-Chair of the House Finance Committee
Attn: Ben Mulligan

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

You have asked three questions relating to the above-described bill.

1. Would a ban on paying ballot initiative circulators per signature be upheld by an Alaska Court?

The pay-per-signature prohibition contained in CSSSHB 36(JUD)[1] would, as drafted, likely be upheld by a state court against a challenge under the First Amendment.

[1] Section 10 of CSSSHB 36(JUD) amends AS 15.45.110(c) to read:

> (c) A circulator may not receive payment or agree to receive payment [THAT IS GREATER THAN $1 A SIGNATURE], and a person or an organization may not pay or agree to pay an amount, based on the number of registered voters who sign a petition. This subsection does not prohibit a person or an organization from employing a circulator and
> (1) paying an hourly wage or salary;
> (2) establishing express or implied minimum signature requirements for the circulator;
> (3) terminating the petition circulator's employment if the circulator fails to meet certain productivity requirements; or
> (4) paying discretionary bonuses based on the circulator's reliability, longevity, and productivity [THAT IS GREATER THAN $1 A SIGNATURE, FOR THE COLLECTION OF SIGNATURES ON A PETITION].

The circulation of initiative petitions involves core political speech, and is, therefore, protected by the First Amendment. The United States Supreme Court held in Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988), that a complete prohibition against paying petition circulators limited core political speech and severely burdened sponsors' First Amendment rights by (1) limiting the number of voices who could convey the petition sponsors' message, (limiting the size of the audience the sponsors would reach), and (2) making it less likely that the initiative petition's sponsors would garner the number of signatures necessary to place the matter on the ballot (limiting the sponsors' ability to make the matter the focus of statewide discussion). Id. at 423 - 424. Similarly, a prohibition against paying election-related petition circulators on any other basis than time worked was also found to create a severe burden on political speech in Citizens for Tax Reform v. Deters, 518 F.3d 378 (U. S. App. 6th Cir. 2008).

If the pay-per-signature prohibition in this bill is challenged, an Alaska court will review the evidence presented to determine the weight of the burden placed on initiative sponsors by the prohibition, and whether the state's interests justify the prohibition.[2] The bill's proposed prohibition prohibits only the "per-signature" method of paying petition circulators. It does not prevent initiative sponsors from establishing express or implied minimum signature requirements for the circulator, terminating the petition circulator's employment if the circulator fails to meet certain productivity requirements, or paying discretionary bonuses based on the circulator's reliability, longevity, and productivity. Because the prohibition is narrowly drafted to prohibit only a specific form of payment, it is likely to be interpreted by a court as imposing a lesser burden on the political speech of petition sponsors than the prohibitions at issue in Meyer or Citizens for Tax Reform. Like an Oregon prohibition against paying initiative circulators by the signature upheld in

[2] In Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351 (1997), the Supreme Court established the relevant framework for a court to employ in resolving these competing interests:

> When deciding whether a state election law violates First and Fourteenth Amendment associational rights, we weigh the character and magnitude of the burden the State's rule imposes on those rights against the interests the State contends justify that burden, and consider the extent to which the State's concerns make the burden necessary. Regulations imposing severe burdens on plaintiffs' rights must be narrowly tailored and advance a compelling state interest. Lesser burdens, however, trigger less exacting review, and a State's important regulatory interests will usually be enough to justify reasonable, nondiscriminatory restrictions. No bright line separates permissible election-related regulation from unconstitutional infringements on First Amendment freedoms.

Id. at 358 - 359 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

2. Can the legislature limit out-of-state contributions and expenditures for initiatives in the same manner as for candidates?

No. Imposing contribution limits for ballot initiatives, or prohibiting or limiting out-of-state contributions or expenditures made in support of or in opposition to ballot initiatives, would likely be interpreted by a court as an unconstitutional burden on the freedom of speech under the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and article I, section 5 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Campaign finance laws have been found permissible under the First Amendment because they address the problems of political corruption, and the United States Supreme Court has deemed this a sufficient reason to restrict speech. See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (upholding, in large part, the constitutionality of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971). However, campaign finance statutes that apply to initiatives and referenda in the same manner as candidate campaigns have been overturned, since an expenditure or a contribution made on behalf of an initiative campaign is not believed to pose the same potential for corruption as does a contribution to a candidate. "Speech relating to ballot initiatives (where quid pro quo corruption is not a significant danger) is entirely protected." State v. Alaska Civil Liberties Union, 478 P.2d 597, 606 - 607 (Alaska 1999). "[B]allot initiatives do not involve the risk of 'quid pro quo' corruption present when money is paid to, or for, candidates." Buckley v. American Constitutional Law Foundation, 525 U.S. 182 (1999), citing Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988), citing First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 786 (1978). Absent the threat of quid pro quo corruption, a court is unlikely to support any limitation on contributions and expenditures relating to an initiative no matter which state the contribution or expenditure is made from.[4]

[3] In this case, an Oregon court upheld an initiative pay-per-signature prohibition using the Timmons framework. The court examined the effect of the prohibition on (1) the pool of petition circulators, (2) the cost of gathering signatures, and (3) the invalidity rate of the signatures gathered. The court found that the prohibition did not severely burden initiative sponsors' speech because it (1) did not limit the pool of circulators, (2) restrict the size of the sponsors' potential audience, or (3) make it any less likely that the sponsors would be able to gather the necessary number of signatures to place their initiative on the ballot, and that this lesser burden was justified by the state's important regulatory interest in preventing fraud and its appearances in its electoral processes.

[4] A federal law, 2 U.S.C. 441(e), already prohibits a foreign national, directly or indirectly, from making a contribution or donation of money or other thing of value in connection with a federal, state, or local election.

3. Does CSSSHB 36(JUD)'s public hearing requirement create a constitutional issue?

The bill's public hearings requirement would present a constitutional problem if it burdened the First Amendment rights of an initiative proponent or an initiative opponent. However, nothing in the provision appears to either burden the speech of an initiative supporter or opponent.

The bill requires the lieutenant governor, or a designee of the lieutenant governor, to hold two or more public hearings concerning the initiative in each judicial district of the state.[5] Each hearing must include the written or oral testimony of one supporter of the initiative and one opponent of the initiative. No initiative proponent or opponent is required to appear. The hearings provide an opportunity for the public to hear testimony from a person supporting the initiative and a person opposing the initiative. Neither an initiative proponent nor opponent is required to participate. If an initiative proponent or opponent does desire to participate in a hearing held under the provision, the individual need not bear the costs and difficulties of attending the hearings, because the provision allows for testimony to be presented telephonically or in writing. No person's First Amendment right to speak on an initiative is burdened by the provision's hearing requirement.

SPONSOR STATEMENT – HOUSE BILL 36
Version C.A

Alaska's lawmaking process is highly public and strives to be transparent. Shown by the passage of an omnibus ethics bill in 2006, Alaskan voters want to know who is contributing to candidate campaigns. Initiative-created law has the same authority and effect as law created by elected officials; therefore voters should be allowed to know who is making law through the initiative process. House Bill 36, also known as the Open and Transparent Initiative Act (OTIA), seeks to identify people and/or groups who financially contribute to initiative campaigns by requiring disclosure earlier in the process than is currently required. These guidelines are similar to those imposed upon elected officials. In addition, OTIA mandates that the Lieutenant Governor hold at least 2 public hearings in each judicial district (8 hearings total) and requires signature-gatherers to carry a full copy of the proposed initiative so potential signers have the opportunity to read all of the language rather than a short summary.

Initiative committees in Alaska are not held to high enough disclosure standards. There are loopholes in the current disclosure process that allow groups to hide contributors. There is a lack of public hearings and input. These shortcomings are not acceptable, and the Open and Transparent Initiative Act seeks to close these loopholes, repair the initiative process, and restore the faith of Alaskans in our election process.

POINT OF VIEW

House Bill 36, also known as the Open and Transparent Initiative Act, is an attempt to tackle an enormous problem we have here in Alaska: Our initiative process is used as a way for special interests to maneuver around the lawmaking body to enact laws without regard for the public as a whole. The right to petition government belongs to the citizens of Alaska. It is imperative that the process be protected from abuse. HB36 offers those safeguards. I am taking this opportunity to review the changes I believe need to happen to protect our initiative process.

Currently, initiative sponsors are not required to hold public hearings. However, the Legislature is required to hold public hearings on all bills that are voted on as a body. Most bills receive multiple committee referrals and spend hours being publically vetted. Though bills passed by the Legislature and initiatives passed by the people have the same effect, they are not held to the same public-hearing requirements. Mandating a proposed initiative go through a public hearing process is an essential element for developing sound public policy. HB36 requires that a standing committee review the proposed initiative. This allows the affected state agencies to come forward and express how the initiative will affect their operations. When a bill is in front of the Legislature, the affected state agencies come before the appropriate committee and explain the implementation of the policy. Initiatives that are passed by the people are law, and the agencies that have to administer those laws should be afforded the same ability.

Prohibiting initiatives that are substantially similar to a failed initiative says that the people have spoken. We have seen the same initiatives proposed year after year, with a lack of regard for the public's will. If an initiative fails, the public has spoken. However, people's attitudes, beliefs, and perceptions can change. That is why I think it is appropriate that failed initiatives be restricted from the ballot for one election cycle to save the state money, time, and resources.

Signature-gatherers are commonly paid on a per-signature basis. In Alaska, they are not supposed to receive more than $1 per signature. Twenty-four states have an initiative process, and many have banned the practice of paying per signature because of fraud. Petition circulators in other states have been caught using disingenuous practices to gather more signatures to receive a bigger paycheck. If petition circulators did not collect payment based on the number of signatures, they would be less inclined to commit fraud.

Petition circulators are allowed to solicit signatures for more than one initiative at a time. This means that someone can have multiple clipboards outside the grocery store, shuffling them around while trying to convince you to sign their petitions. It is easy to confuse which petition was explained to you and which petition you have agreed to sign. Petition circulators should be allowed to collect signatures for only one initiative at a time to reduce confusion, deceptive practices, and misleading information.

Unlike the current initiative process, HB36 will go through many public committee hearings where it will be vetted, debated and amended. This is a chance for the public to weigh in on the bill, for lawmakers to ask questions and clarify issues of concern, for changes to be proposed, and many other aspects to be publicly debated so the best public policy is put forward. As a reminder, this is not required of initiative legislation. What you see is what you get, and unfortunately, what you don't see is what you get as well.

I encourage you to read the legislation yourself. Please form your own opinion based on the facts of the bill itself, rather than regurgitate information given to you by parties with their own agenda. HB36 can be found at www.legis.state.ak.us/basis.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

On December 7, 2001, the National Conference of State Legislatures assembled a task force to review the growing use of initiatives and referendums around the country and to examine their effect on representative democracy at the state level.

The Initiative and Referendum Task Force found that opportunities for abuse of the process outweigh its advantages and does not recommend that states adopt the initiative process if they currently do not have one.

The task force also developed recommendations that would enable initiative states to make their processes more representative. For states that are intent upon adopting an initiative process, the task force offers a set of guidelines to enhance the process and to avoid many of the pitfalls currently experienced by the initiative states. The task force urges such states to consider giving preference to a process that encourages citizen participation without enacting specific constitutional or statutory language—specifically, the advisory initiative or the general policy initiative.

The 34 recommendations contained in this report acknowledge that the initiative process has outgrown the existing laws that govern it. After listening to expert testimony from a wide variety of witnesses and compiling data from all 50 states, the task force concluded that the initiative has evolved from its early days as a grassroots tool to enhance representative democracy into a tool that too often is exploited by special interests. The initiative lacks critical elements of the legislative process and can have both intended and unintended effects on the ability of the representative democratic process to comprehensively develop policies and priorities.

As a result, the task force suggests that initiative states reform drafting, certification, signature-gathering and financial disclosure statutes; adhere to single subject rules; and improve practices regarding voter education. It also recommends that initiatives be allowed only on general election ballots.

It is the task force's intent that the discussion and adoption of the reforms in this report lead to a more thoughtful lawmaking process, improve interaction between initiative proponents and legislatures, and ultimately produce better public policy and reinforce representative democracy.

Task Force Recommendations

The following 34 recommendations were adopted unanimously at the final meeting of the NCSL Initiative and Referendum Task Force in Denver, Colorado, on April 26-27, 2002.

The task force does not recommend that states that currently do not have an initiative process adopt one. The task force believes that representative democracy is more desirable than the initiative. The disadvantages of the initiative as a tool for policymaking are many, and the opportunities for abuse of the process outweigh its advantages. However, if a state is intent upon adopting an initiative process, the first four recommendations lay out the task force's view of an effectively structured process.

The remaining recommendations deal with specific elements of the initiative process and are intended as guidelines to improve existing procedures. The task force believes that the adoption of these recommendations will improve the initiative process to the benefit of both state government and voters and will result in improved public policy making via the initiative.

General Recommendations Regarding the Initiative Process

Recommendation 1.1: States that are considering adopting an initiative process should give preference to one that encourages citizen participation without enacting specific constitutional or statutory language. Specifically, states should consider:

A. First, adopting the advisory initiative; or
B. In the alternative, adopting the general policy initiative.

Recommendation 1.2: If states wish to adopt an initiative process and neither the advisory initiative nor the general policy initiative are adopted, they should adopt an indirect initiative process.

Recommendation 1.3: If states adopt a direct initiative process, they should adopt only a statutory initiative process, not a constitutional amendment initiative process.

Recommendation 1.4: If states adopt a constitutional amendment initiative process, they also should adopt a statutory initiative process.

Involving the Legislature in the Initiative Process

Recommendation 2.1: States that currently have a direct initiative process should consider adopting an indirect process as well, and provide incentives to encourage its use.

Recommendation 2.2: After a specified percentage of signatures has been gathered for an initiative petition, the legislature should provide for public hearings on the initiative proposal.

Recommendation 2.3: When appropriate, the legislature should place an alternative legislative referral on the ballot with an initiative that appears on the ballot.

The Subject Matter of Initiatives

Recommendation 3.1: States should encourage the sponsors of initiatives to propose them as statutory initiatives when possible, rather than as constitutional amendments.

Recommendation 3.2: States should adopt the single subject rule to enhance clarity and transparency in the initiative process.

Recommendation 3.3: If an initiative measure is rejected by voters, states should prohibit an identical or substantially similar initiative measure from appearing on the ballot for a specified period of time.

The Drafting and Certification Phase

Recommendation 4.1: States should require a review of proposed initiative language by either the legislature or a state agency. The review should include non-binding suggestions for improving the initiative's technical format and content, and should be considered public information.

Recommendation 4.2: States should require the drafting and certification of a ballot title and summary for each initiative proposal. Ballot titles must identify the principal effect of the proposed initiative and must be unbiased, clear, accurate, and written so that a "yes" vote changes current law.

Recommendation 4.3: States should require the drafting of a fiscal impact statement for each initiative proposal. The statement should appear on the petition, in the voter information pamphlet, and on the ballot.

Recommendation 4.4: States should establish a review process and an opportunity for public challenge of technical matters, including adherence to single subject rules, and ballot title, summary and fiscal note sufficiency, to be made prior to the signature-gathering phase.

The Signature Gathering Phase

Recommendation 5.1: States should require that initiative proponents file a statement of organization as a ballot measure committee prior to collecting signatures. States should void any signature that is gathered before a statement of organization is filed.

Recommendation 5.2: States should provide for safeguards against fraud during the signature gathering process. Safeguards should include:

A. Prohibiting the giving or accepting of money or anything else of value to sign or not sign a petition.
B. Requiring a signed oath by circulators, stating that the circulator witnessed each signature on the petition and that to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are valid.
C. Requiring circulators to disclose whether they are paid or volunteer.

Recommendation 5.3: States should provide for an adequate but limited time period for gathering signatures. The deadline for submission should allow a reasonable time for verification of signatures before the ballot must be certified.

Recommendation 5.4: States should establish a limit on the length of time that verified signatures are valid.

Recommendation 5.5: States should require a higher number of signatures for constitutional amendments than is required for statutory initiatives.

Recommendation 5.6: To achieve geographical representation, states should require that signatures be gathered from more than one area of the state.

Recommendation 5.7: Each state should establish a uniform process for verifying that the required number of valid signatures has been gathered.

Voter Education

Recommendation 6.1: States should provide to the public a manual describing the initiative and referendum process.

Recommendation 6.2: States should encourage public education and discussion about measures on the ballot.

Recommendation 6.3: States should produce and distribute a voter information pamphlet containing information about each measure certified for the ballot.

Recommendation 6.4: In addition to a printed voter information pamphlet, states should consider alternative methods of providing information on ballot measures, such as the Internet, video and audio tapes, toll-free phone numbers, and publication in newspapers.

Financial Disclosure

Recommendation 7.1: States should require financial disclosure by any individual or organization that spends or collects money over a threshold amount for or against a ballot measure.

Recommendation 7.2: After a title has been certified for an initiative measure, states should require that proponents and opponents of the initiative measure file a statement of organization as a ballot measure committee prior to accepting contributions or making expenditures.

Recommendation 7.3: States should make the disclosure requirements for initiative campaigns consistent with the disclosure requirements for candidate campaigns.

Recommendation 7.4: States should prohibit the use of public funds or resources to support or oppose an initiative measure. This should not preclude elected public officials from making statements advocating their position on an initiative measure.

Voting on Initiatives

Recommendation 8.1: States should allow initiatives only on general election ballots.

Recommendation 8.2: States should adopt a requirement that creates a higher vote threshold for passage of a constitutional amendment initiative than for passage of a statutory initiative.

Recommendation 8.3: States should require that any initiative measure that imposes a special vote requirement for the passage of future measures must itself be adopted by the same special vote requirement.

Recommendation 8.4: States should ensure that statutory initiative measures require the same vote threshold for passage that is required of the legislature to enact the same type of statute.

Recommendation 8.5: States should adopt a procedure for determining which initiative measure prevails when two or more initiative measures approved by voters are in conflict.

INTRODUCTION

Initiative and referendum operated quietly in the background of state politics for much of the 20th century, but during the last decade, it has come back into vogue. More initiatives are circulated, more make it to the ballot, and more money is spent in the process than ever before. Consider the numbers: 183 statewide votes on initiatives in the 1970s, 253 in the 1980s, and 383 in the 1990s, more than double the total from the 1970s. California alone accounts for 130 of the total 819 measures during that 30-year period; Oregon can claim 107. Between them, these two states account for nearly 30 percent of all initiatives from 1970 to 1999. It is no wonder that people in California and Oregon are beginning to voice concerns about the initiative process.

Initiative advocates say the resurgence of the initiative is good for states—it means citizens are using it as a tool to implement new laws and reforms that the legislature is unable or unwilling to enact. Besides accomplishing policy change, supporters also say that initiatives increase citizen involvement with government—people are not only more aware of state policy issues, but they are also more likely to vote. For these reasons, movements have begun to establish an initiative process in some of the states that currently do not have such a process.

However, in some states where the initiative is heavily used, there is growing public frustration with initiatives, and some people are beginning to speak out against the process. Legislatures are struggling to find ways to prevent fraud in the signature-gathering process; disclose information about who pays for initiative campaigns; and add flexibility to the process to accommodate more debate, deliberation and compromise than presently exists. Equally concerning to many is the disadvantage that, unlike our legislatures' process of representative government, decisions made through the initiative process do not provide an opportunity to accommodate minority interests. Most importantly, initiatives ask voters to make simple yes-no decisions about complex issues without subjecting the issue to detailed expert analysis and without asking voters to balance competing needs with limited resources. In short, the initiative affects the ability of representative democracy to develop policies and priorities in a comprehensive and balanced manner.

The problems with the initiative process are not easy to solve for a number of reasons. The courts have made it difficult to regulate both petition circulators and initiative campaign finance, and almost any reform can be a difficult political issue because proponents of the initiative generally are hostile to legislative attempts to change the process.

The initiative is a vital and popular part of democracy in half the states (refer to appendix A for a list of initiative states), but it is clear that the initiative has outgrown the existing state laws governing it. NCSL's Initiative and Referendum Task Force set out to first gather the facts and data necessary to paint an accurate picture of how the initiative process works in each state. It identified and focused on problems in the process, then considered ways that the process might be made more open and flexible. The task force feels strongly that the changes it recommends in the initiative process would equally benefit both voters and the legislative process, and that, in the end, a reformed initiative process might produce better public policy.

The task force met three times during a five-month period. Meetings were held on:

- December 7-8, 2001, in Washington, D.C.;
- February 8-9, 2002, in Washington, D.C.; and
- April 26-27, 2002, in Denver, Colorado.

The task force took great care to ensure that it heard testimony from experts and activists on a wide array of issues and from as many points of view as possible. Presenters included both supporters and critics of the initiative process, citizens who use the initiative process, and election administrators. The experts who testified before the task force were:

David Broder, Washington Post, Washington, D.C.;
Lois Court, Save our Constitution, Colorado;
Neal Erickson, Office of the Secretary of State, Nebraska;
Wayne Pacelle, Humane Society of the United States, Washington, D.C.;
John Perez, Speaker's Commission on the California Initiative Process, California;
Honorable Joe Pickens, State Representative, Florida;
Larry Sokol, Speaker's Commission on the California Initiative Process, California;
M. Dane Waters, Initiative and Referendum Institute, Washington, D.C.; and Joseph F. Zimmerman, State University of New York-Albany, New York.

In addition to the experts who testified before the task force, the task force members themselves are experts on the initiative process. The perspectives and suggestions that each member brought to the table contributed to the extensive body of knowledge the task force developed about how the initiative works around the country. Finally, the task force also relied on a wide array of written materials on the initiative process. These include reports from earlier initiative reform commissions and task forces, and the many books and academic papers that are listed in appendix B and in the reference section of this report.

The task force adopted 30 recommendations for legislatures in the initiative states that are seeking guidance on how their initiative process might be improved. Four additional recommendations are meant for states that may be thinking about adopting an initiative process. Although the task force does not recommend that non-initiative states adopt such a procedure, these four recommendations are offered for those states that have, nonetheless, made the decision to go forward.

All the recommendations were based on a set of observations and conclusions about representative and direct democracy that were adopted by the task force at its first meeting. These principles reflect the task force members' belief that it is important to carefully balance the pure democratic impulse of the initiative with the deliberative, consensus-building practices of representative democracy. It also is the belief of task force members that the adoption of this set of recommended reforms by initiative states will lead to a more thoughtful lawmaking process, improved interaction between initiative proponents and legislatures, and ultimately, better public policy.

Observations and Conclusions About Representative and Direct Democracy

Adopted by the NCSL I&R Task Force on April 27, 2002

We offer in the following observations regarding representative and direct democracy.

1. Representative democracy is the foundation of America's system of government.

2. Representative democracy has provided a stable and flexible system of government that has served America well for more than 200 years.

3. Direct democracy, as envisioned in the initiative and referendum system, was first instituted as a check on representative democracy. It was meant to enhance representative government, not to supercede or abolish it.

4. As intended by its founders, the initiative and referendum process was meant to give citizens a tool to break what they perceived as the hold of special interests over some state legislatures.

5. In most of the 24 states where it exists, the initiative is a popular part of the lawmaking process.

6. The initiative brings to the fore issues that may not receive legislative attention or final action and engages citizens in a debate of important public policy issues.

Based on these observations, we draw the following conclusions about direct democracy.

1. The initiative has evolved from its early days as a grassroots tool to enhance representative government. Today, it is often a tool of special interests.

2. The initiative process, as it exists today, lacks some of the critical elements of the representative system of government, including debate, deliberation, flexibility, compromise and transparency.

3. The initiative process does not involve all the checks and balances that representative government does.

4. The initiative can affect the ability of representative democracy to develop policies and priorities in a comprehensive and balanced manner.

5. As the initiative process and the way it is used have evolved over time, a review of the laws governing it is merited.

Banning Payment-per-Signature for Initiative Petition Circulators

Updated May 28, 2008

It is common for initiative sponsors to pay circulators on a per-signature basis to gather petition signatures. Payments typically range from $1 to $3 per signature, and occasionally are as high as $10 per signature. Critics argue that this encourages fraud—since a circulator who collects more signatures will earn more money, circulators who are paid per signature are more likely to commit acts of fraud such as forging signatures or misrepresenting the content of the petition in order to encourage people to sign.

Presently, six states (Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota and Wyoming), have laws which ban initiative sponsors from paying petition circulators per signature. Instead, they may pay a flat fee or an hourly salary. These laws have been challenged in the courts with mixed results. North Dakota and Oregon's provisions have been upheld by the U.S. 9th and 8th Circuit Courts, respectively. However, similar provisions in Idaho, Maine, Mississippi, Ohio and Washington were held unconstitutional by federal district courts. The Ohio case was upheld by the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in March 2008.

Montana (MCA §13-27-102(2)(b))
"A person gathering signatures for the initiative, the referendum, or to call a constitutional convention...may not be paid anything of value based upon the number of signatures gathered" (2007 Mont. Laws, Chap. 481)

Nebraska (NRS §32-630(3)(g))
No person shall pay a circulator based on the number of signatures collected.
(2008 Neb. Laws, L.B. 39)

North Dakota (N.D. Cent. Code §16.1-01-12(11))
"It is unlawful for a person to...[p]ay or offer to pay any person, or receive payment or agree to receive payment, on a basis related to the number of signatures obtained for circulating an initiative, referendum, or recall petition. This subsection does not prohibit the payment of salary and expenses for circulation of the petition on a basis not related to the number of signatures obtained, as long as the circulators file their intent to remunerate prior to submitting the petitions..."

Oregon (Or. Const. Art. IV §1b)
"It shall be unlawful to pay or receive money or other thing of value based on the number of signatures obtained on an initiative or referendum petition. Nothing herein prohibits payment for signature gathering which is not based, either directly or indirectly, on the number of signatures obtained. [Created through initiative petition filed Nov. 7, 2001, and adopted by the people Nov. 5, 2002]" Upheld in February 2006 by the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeaks, Prete v. Bradbury.

South Dakota (new section added to §12-13 during the 2007 legislative session, HB 1156)
No person may employ, reward, or compensate any person to circulate a petition for an initiated measure, referred law, or proposed amendment to the South Dakota Constitution based on the number of registered voters who signed the petition. Nothing in this section prohibits any person from employing a petition circulator based on one of the following practices:
(1) Paying an hourly wage or salary;
(2) Establishing either express or implied minimum signature requirements for the petition circulator;
(3) Terminating the petition circulator's employment, if the petition circulator fails to meet certain productivity requirements; and
(4) Paying discretionary bonuses based on reliability, longevity, and productivity.
Any violation of this section is a Class 2 misdemeanor.

Wyoming (Wyo. Stat. §22-24-125)
"A circulator of an initiative or a referendum petition or a person who causes the circulation of an initiative or a referendum petition may not receive payment for the collection of signatures if that payment is based upon the number of signatures collected. Nothing in this section prohibits a circulator of an initiative or a referendum petition or a person who causes the circulation of an initiative or a referendum petition from being paid a salary that is not based upon the number of signatures collected."

Dollar-Amount Limitations on Payment per Signature

In Alaska, circulators may not be paid more than $1 per signature (AS §15.45.110(c)).

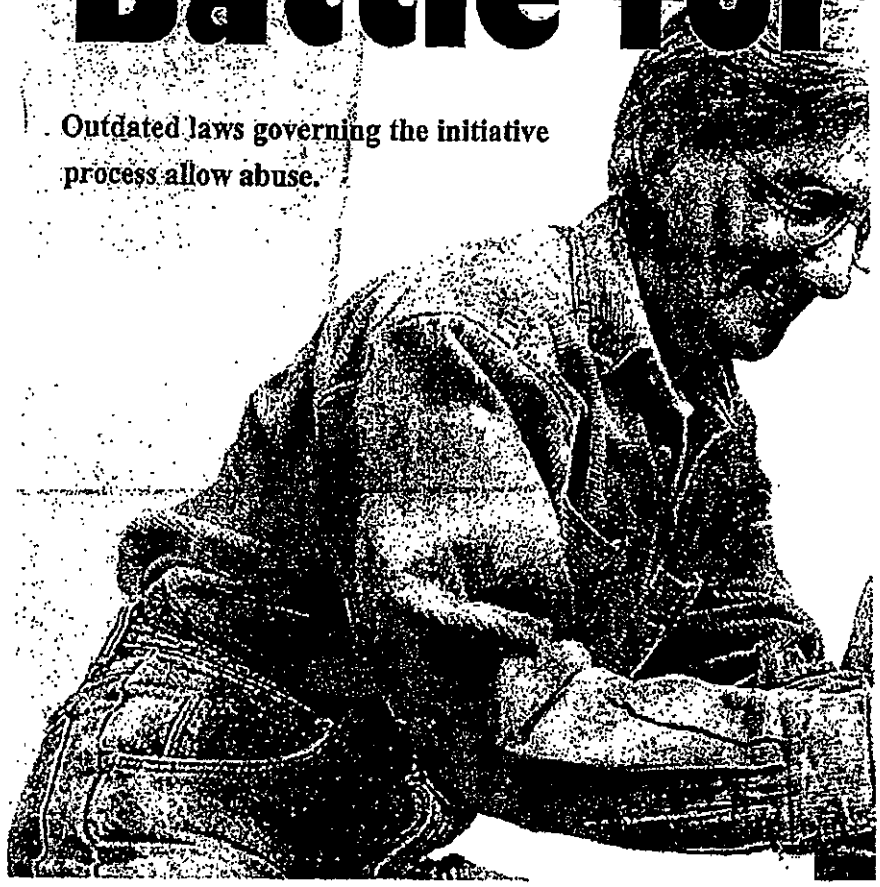
Battle for Outdated laws governing the initiative process allow abuse.



BY JENNIE DRAGE BOWSER

One of the little-noticed stories of the 2008 election was the escalating tug-of-war between legislatures and activists over the rules governing the citizen initiative process.

The struggle has ramped up dramatically since the 2006 election. Legislatures in the 24 states that allow initiatives have shown a keen interest in improving the process ever since the use of the citizen petition to place issues on the ballot skyrocketed in the 1990s. And recent legislative activity has been higher than ever before.

States have passed about double the number of bills addressing the initiative process in the 2007-2008 biennium (a total of 47 so far, with legislatures still in session in a handful of states) compared to the previous two biennia (22 in 2005-2006 and 32 in 2003-2004).

Why the heightened interest?

The process has changed tremendously in the past two decades. The initiative "industry"—individuals and firms that make a living from the initiative process by researching and drafting proposals, gathering signatures or campaigning for or against initiatives—has exploded. The average number of initiatives on ballots nationwide has doubled from 31 a year in the 1970s to 62 a year in the 2000s. And laws governing the process haven't kept pace.

Some state laws, for example, do not specify which official has the authority to investigate and prosecute abuses, while others lack the capacity to verify that circulators meet the legal qualifications.

Colorado Representative Andy Kerr was one of the co-sponsors of an unsuccessful referendum on the 2008 ballot that would have made qualifying constitutional initiatives harder, but statutory initiatives easier.

REPRESENTATIVE ANDY KERR COLORADO

Jennie Drage Bowser is NCSL's expert on ballot measures.

He sees flaws in the initiative process, particularly in a state that had more measures on the ballot in 2008 than any other state.

"Citizens have a lot of power to change and propose laws and constitutional amendments," he says. "But the way the process is set up in Colorado, our constitution can be changed frequently without these amendments being fully vetted first."

HARD SELL

It is difficult, however, for legislatures to limit the number of initiatives qualifying for ballots, and whether or not they should is a controversial question. Increasing the number of signatures required, tinkering with time limits and restricting the subject matter involves amending state constitutions. And that requires voter approval.

It isn't always easy to convince voters that changing the process is a good idea, as Kerr learned in November.

Making the process more difficult rarely slows down well-funded petition efforts that can afford to hire and pay an army of circulators. It's the grassroots efforts, which depend on volunteers, that suffer from higher signature thresholds and shorter petition timeframes.

Details of the process in state law are what legislatures can, and with increasing frequency do, change without voter approval. States have clarified rules for petition formats, restructured timelines to allow for the added administrative burdens of processing a high volume of petitions, and spelled out more clearly the procedures for evaluating and counting signatures. Voter education is an area ripe for reform, too, particularly as technological advances make it easier to use multimedia and multi-lingual approaches to explain measures on the ballot.

SIGNATURE-GATHERING FRAUD

Along with the explosion in the number of initiatives is the issue of fraud. The courts removed at least half a dozen measures from the ballot in 2006 for deceit in gathering signatures. In a Montana case, a court wrote that the "signature-gathering process was permeated ... by a pattern of deceit, fraud and procedural noncompliance."

Specific instances of fraud in Montana, Nevada and Oklahoma included circulators who opened the phone book and forged the signatures of listings onto their petitions. Others inserted carbon paper and a second petition beneath the one they asked voters to sign, thus obtaining a signature on another petition without the signer's knowledge. One circulator told voters they needed to sign in three different places if they supported the issue. In reality, they were unwittingly signing three separate petitions. And accusations of circulators who misrepresent or conceal the content of their petition are common.

Kristina Wilfore is executive director of the Ballot Initiative Strategy Center, which serves as a clearinghouse for progressive ballot measures. She says policing the process is tough.

"Part of the problem is that the state officials in charge of watching over the process aren't equipped, funded or modernized enough to catch the few bad apples that are responsible for the vast majority of what eventually gets on the ballot," she says.

Wilfore says that it was only a few years ago that she began to hear about extreme abuses in the process by a handful of signature-gathering companies.

Signature-gathering is now dominated by a few professional firms that hire people who make a living moving from state to state. In more than one initiative state, they are not required to register. That means they cannot be identified or prosecuted for fraud because signatures can't be traced to particular circulator. Wilfore calls the signature-gathering process "one of the most neglected areas" of the initiative process when it comes to state laws and regulations.

Efforts to curb abuse include new laws to ban paying signature gatherers on a per-signature basis, and instead require an hourly wage. Six states now prohibit payment-per-signature, with three of those laws adopted in the 2007-2008 legislative session. Other new laws require circulators to offer people a chance to read the proposal in full before signing, set age and residency requirements for circulators, and apply criminal penalties for forgeries and fraud in knowingly submitting a petition with invalid signatures.

ACTIVISTS STRIKE BACK

Initiative supporters are rarely happy when the legislature enacts changes that add to the cost or complexity of the initiative process. In some states, they have fought back by trying to get measures on the ballot that would make the initiative process easier.

But voters don't necessarily support them. In 2006, Colorado voters rejected Amendment 38, an initiative that would have significantly reduced regulation of the initiative process. And petitions easing regulation of the initiative process were circulated but failed to qualify this year in Arizona, Massachusetts, Oregon and Washington.

Legislatures started calling for reform of the initiative process in the early 2000s. It's not just state legislatures that are calling for reform these days, however. Cities and academic groups and even pro-initiative groups have joined the call for change.

Given the number of initiatives on statewide ballots over the past two decades, it's clear the initiative is not going away. It will continue to be a vibrant process in most of the states that allow it. But it's up to legislatures to ensure the process promotes ethical behavior among those involved, and that the rules surrounding it allow for as much transparency and deliberation as possible without restraining a process whose popularity is not likely to decline. It's not an easy task, and is certain to be one that legislatures grapple with well into the next decade.

Guest Opinion - Representative Kyle Johansen

Let's fix Alaska's ballot initiative process

A citizen's right to petition their government is a right reserved to the people of Alaska granted by Article 11 of the Alaska State Constitution. The concept of the initiative is based on the principle of direct democracy – the people's ability to change law and policy themselves rather than having to do so through their elected representative. This right is held so close to Alaskans, and it is important to guard this process from abuse.

In the past few election cycles, it has become wildly apparent to Alaskans that their initiative process does not serve the best interests of the people. Special interests have hijacked the citizen's initiative. Sources of funds are hidden. Contributor's identities are veiled. Alaskans deserve better. Alaskans deserve an open and transparent process.

I have introduced legislation that does just that. House Bill 36 will make the initiative process more open to the public, including public hearings and more financial disclosures. The current laws governing the initiative process are easy to skirt, and special interests have used the system to their advantage. The initiative process is a tool that belongs to the people of Alaska, and as such, it should be safeguarded from special interests with self-serving goals.

The financial disclosure process for initiatives is flawed. It is easy for groups to hide sources of money, and to the extent that the voters don't even know about the main funders behind an initiative until the election has come and gone.

This is completely unacceptable, and Alaskans should be outraged that this has been allowed to occur. Allowing financial disclosure loopholes of this magnitude undercut the integrity of our initiative process. House Bill 36 proposes changes to fix these flaws and repair the loopholes. House Bill 36 changes the date of when financial disclosures must begin. Rather than being able to collect money for months and months before having to disclose the source of funds, groups would have to begin financial disclosures as soon as they file their initial paperwork with the Lieutenant Governor's office. Although initiative groups have to collect a number of signatures in different regions before officially being declared a measure on the ballot, the groups are still influencing public policy. Initiative groups should be filing financial disclosures as soon as they receive their first red cent.

Signature gatherers are an instrumental part of the initiative process. They collect the constitutionally-required signatures necessary to qualify initiatives for the ballot. We often see them outside of the grocery store or any high-traffic zone. Their goal is to gather signatures. Period. They are often paid on a commission basis, so they are motivated to gather as many signatures as possible. They are not paid to answer questions or explain issues. If signature gatherers were paid on an hourly wage basis, they would be more open to take the time to explain the issue or answer questions posed by voters. House Bill 36 proposes that signature gatherers be paid on an hourly or salary basis so that they wouldn't be shuffling people as fast as they can to make their dollar. Restricting the use of per-signature commission is yet another attempt to promote the sharing of information so that voters can make the most informed decision at the ballot box.

Public hearings are a necessary and essential part of the political process. Public hearings are the venue where questions are posed, ideas are vetted, and information is freely shared. Public hearings are the foundation of the lawmaking process. All potential laws that govern our behavior, our property, and our interests are all vetted in a public forum, right? Wrong. There are no public hearing requirements for ballot measures. Laws created via the Legislature and laws created via initiative are equal – they are the laws we are required to live by. However, initiative-created law does not go through a public process that enables citizens to ask questions, criticize, give suggestions, or clarify issues.

Holding public hearings would greatly strengthen the initiative process because they would provide more information to the public. The public deserves to know the ins and outs of initiatives, just as the ins and outs of legislation are hashed out in committee meetings. House Bill 36 solves this problem by requiring public hearings throughout Alaska. Because of the geographical challenges and dispersed population of our state, a total of ten public hearings are required, two hearings per judicial district. These hearings provide a public forum so voters can ask questions, analyze the issues, and voice their support or opposition. These public hearings won't cost the initiative sponsors a dime; the venue can be provided by the state, and if initiative sponsors cannot afford to travel to the different districts to participate in the hearing personally, they can teleconference. House Bill 36 provides a win-win situation: more information provided to the public, while not costing the ballot measure groups anything but their time.

In addition to the public hearing requirement, House Bill 36 also requires a standing committee of the legislature to review ballot measures. This does not allow the legislature to change the ballot measure because that would be encroaching on a citizen's right to petition their government. Instead, the legislative review allows another public venue for questions to be asked and concepts to be discussed. Also, the legislative review provides a forum for the affected agencies to discuss how the proposed initiative would be administered.

The loopholes with the initiative process have become apparent all over the country, not just in Alaska. About half of the states in the Union have the initiative process, and many of those states are modifying their initiative process with tighter financial disclosures, public hearing requirements, and restructuring signature-gathering methods. These modifications are seen as ways to reinforce the citizen initiative process – to protect it – not to impose onerous and meaningless requirements.

Providing more information to the public is the purpose of House Bill 36. There is no fine print. There is no catch. House Bill 36 returns the power of the initiative back to the rightful owners: Alaskans.

"An Act further limiting the exercise of eminent domain"

HB 49 strengthens the individual's property rights by protecting privately owned recreational structures from the exercise of eminent domain for recreational purposes.

Eminent domain is an important right of the government. However, it should only be used for the most judicious of purposes, and every effort should be made to minimize its impact to the right of the individual to own private property.

AS 09.55.240 limits the government's authority to exercise eminent domain and seize personal residences by clearly outlining its legitimate use (namely the construction and/or expansion of roads, schools, and public buildings) and by prohibiting its exercise for the purpose of economic development or to generate increased government revenues.

HB 49 affords privately owned recreational structures the same protection from government seizure already granted to personal residences in AS 09.55.240.

The right to own private property is one of the most important rights of Alaskans. By prohibiting government seizure of privately owned recreational structures for recreational purposes, HB 49 strengthens that right and ensures the continued use of land in the greatest of ways – that of private ownership.

Dear Representative Johnson,

The Alaska Association of REALTORS® with over 1,600 members statewide supports House Bill 49, which relates to eminent domain and recreational structures.

The Association supported HB 318, the eminent domain legislation which defined whether or not it is appropriate to take a person's private property for economic development and whether it is appropriate to take all or part of one's primary residence for recreational opportunities of another.

We favor this consumer protection legislation because it would change the definition of primary residences to include recreational structures and second homes which are very common throughout Alaska.

The Association encourages the passage of House Bill 49.

Sincerely,

Sponsor Statement

House Bill 52

"An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony."

The jury system is a fundamental component of the American legal system. Jurors are asked to carry out a civic duty, yet there is the possibility of experiencing excessive levels of stress and no support is offered to help jurors cope with normal reactions to abnormal events, at its worse resembling a milder version of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. Categorized as secondary trauma, jurors become traumatized through the traumatic experience of victims.

House Bill 52 would allow judges to offer 10 hours of post-trial group counseling to a juror who serves in a criminal trial involving extraordinarily graphic, gruesome, or emotional evidence or testimony. This bill would not apply to every juror in every case. Counseling sessions are necessary in only a small percentage of trials but are nonetheless highly valuable when needed.

The public's impression of the administration of justice is largely based on jury service. Offering counseling to jurors will ensure that care it taken of citizens' welfare, while also enhancing positive public attitudes toward jury service. As the government compels citizens to report for jury duty, it should minimize the burden it places on jurors. With public trust and confidence as a fundamental goal of courts nationwide, judges, court administrators and court staff must be concerned with the juror experience and the effect of the experience upon those called to serve. Jurors are unprepared for some consequences and courts do not currently provide any assistance in finding help from mental health professionals. In order to protect the integrity of the legal system I think courts are obligated to help improve the jury experience, including addressing juror stress. Proper counseling helps people cope with their normal reactions to abnormal events and provides tools to adapt to those reactions. I greatly appreciate your support of House Bill 52.

The Honorable Bill Stoltze
Co-Chair, House Finance Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Representative Stoltze:

I spoke with Ben this morning about a scheduling conflict that I have this Friday. I need to be in the House Finance Committee in case there are questions about the court system's fiscal note on HB 52, which is Representative Kurttula's bill on post-trial juror counseling. At the same time, I need to be in the House Judiciary Committee for testimony about and amendments to HB 324, which is the governor's rewrite of the bail statutes. (Chris Christensen, who might otherwise be able to fill in for me, also has a conflict as he must be in the Senate Finance Committee during the time you will be hearing HB 52.)

Although I plan to be available to come to the House Finance Committee should there be questions on the court's fiscal note, I thought there might be fewer questions if I better explained the analysis behind the note.

As you probably know, HB 52 allows a judge to offer a juror up to 10 hours of psychological counseling, without charge, in certain specified cases following "extraordinarily graphic, gruesome, or emotional evidence or testimony." In order to assess the fiscal impact of this bill, I needed to estimate how often judges would be likely to offer counseling and what kind of counseling they would be likely to offer.

As I do with almost all legislation that may impact the court system, I circulated HB 52 among our trial court judges for their estimates of impact. For this bill, I asked them how often they see cases that meet the criteria set out in the bill. All of those who responded said that they did not see them very often. None thought they saw as many as one a year. Also, most noted that in those cases where the trial was particularly difficult, there tended to be only one or two jurors who were really impacted.

However, almost all judges remembered a few trials where some of the jurors were very distraught and for whom the judges would have offered counseling had it been available.

Based on that information, and for purposes of this note, I estimated that 10 jurors a year would receive 10 hours of individual counseling at an average cost of $150 an hour. But individual counseling is not the only type of counseling available, and, in some cases, may not be the most appropriate. Another option is group counseling.

A common type of counseling for groups who share a traumatic experience is called Critical Incident Stress Debriefing. This is much cheaper than individual counseling and involves a relatively brief session with the entire group that occurs immediately following the traumatic event, in this case at the conclusion of deliberations. These sessions last an hour or two and cost between $300 and $500 an hour. This group counseling might or might not be followed up with individual counseling for those who need further support.

But whichever counseling option courts select for particular cases, our estimate is that we will spend roughly $15,000 a year on juror counseling. And although this is necessarily an estimate, I believe that it is a reasonable one based on judicial comments and the counseling options available.

I hope that this is helpful. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Doug Wooliver

RE: Support for House Bill 52

Members of the Legislature,

First, I would like to thank the legislature for considering House Bill 52, which will grant some form of counseling for Jurors in a criminal trial. My reason for requesting and supporting this legislation is because of my experiences as a juror on a murder trial. I know I am not the only one who feels this way. Details of the trial are still painful to recall, but if my remembering can help even one future juror begin healing far earlier than I did through this early counseling/intervention, then that may bring me another measure of peace; to know something good can come from something so completely gruesome.

I have lived in Alaska for over 15 years. It is a place of peace and great beauty. However three years ago I answered a jury summons and, suddenly, for two weeks, my mind was saturated with facts no person should have to carry around. It was like watching a horror movie for seven hours (or so) a day and not being allowed out of the theatre except to sleep and get ready for the next day's movie.

I learned in great detail how two men plotted to torture an innocent woman to death. A woman, who served her community, loved her family and had no idea what awaited her. I sat in the same room with the murderers and experienced and watched a level of emotion in that court room that was intense and overwhelming. It was slow torture for me. Every night I cried at home and felt so alone because I had taken an oath as a juror and could not share any details of the horrors I was hearing even with my closest friend and confidant, my husband. For two weeks I took it in. Each night was a challenge to sleep and each morning a test in determination to stay strong and walk into the court room.

What did I learn from my court experience? That there are many ways to break into a house; that breaking a person's neck is not as simple as they make it on television; that you can never be sure what another person's distorted view of you could be; that someone could be lying in wait for you to come home alone so as to abduct you and burn you alive.

I also learned you cannot imagine the challenges you will face as a juror on a criminal trial. That even though what you hear in court did not happen to you, knowing that it did happen to someone, seeing the parties involved and having them see you are more intense than you can expect. That getting over it and moving on is not as simple in practice as it is in theory for a juror.

When the trial was over I approached our Judge, for whom I have great respect as she was the only saving grace of this awful experience. I asked if there was any form of counseling or other resources available to help in transitioning out of this trial. She stated the court system does not provide for counseling or any other kind of support following a criminal trial.

I asked her with tears in my eyes, how am I supposed to get all this out of my head? I feel like I have lived this event and I don't know what to do with it. I wanted my peaceful life back; I want to be able to feel the peace I had before the trial. She apologized and said there was nothing she can offer.

I believe if there had been some form of counseling available to provide jurors tools for processing and releasing the intense and graphic details of a criminal trial, then healing could have started a lot earlier for me and the people I served with. I tried to repress the experience. It wasn't until over a year later when the anxiety and stress became too overwhelming that I finally turned to counseling and was diagnosed with post traumatic stress disorder. Today, I am pleased to report, I have found better tools to help me move on and the beauty of Alaska has returned to my life.

As jurors we live through the details of these violent and disturbing trials essentially in silence. Trying very hard to rationalize and process what we're seeing and hearing. This has an impact... an impact on people such as what I am still dealing with today. I believe passing this bill is a very important step in supporting the jurors of violent trials and helping them find a path back to peace. I urge you to support House Bill 52 and the constituents who have or will serve on jury duty.

Again, thank you for your time and consideration.
Very Sincerely,

Mindy Lobaugh

Dear Representative Beth Kerttula:

Thank you for considering HB 52, "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony." We understand that certain criminal trials can generate serious levels of stress among jurors that can last weeks or months after the trial is over. Traditionally, jurors in a critical trial end their service without ascertaining whether or not the events of that trial have had any psychological impact. For years, there have been cases of post-trial jurors experiencing their own mental pain and difficulty focusing back on their daily lives. Symptoms of juror stress manifest themselves as a number of physical and psychological reactions, including increased anxiety and frustration, disrupted eating and sleeping routines, nausea, depression, and anger and hostility. In many instances, talking to jurors about their symptoms validates their feelings and helps them understand that what they are experiencing is normal and can in itself bring considerable stress relief.

After exposure to a highly graphic criminal case jurors can develop stress by having to relive the traumatic experiences of the victim. For some, it is difficult to suddenly step back into their own world without some form of closure. We believe this is a unique opportunity for courts to have a positive interaction with individuals from the communities they serve. A juror who is asked to fulfill their civic duty should be protected from the potentially negative health effects of the trial process.

In general, post-trial group counseling could reduce stress and offer information on mental health services for those who might need it, provide closure, promote confidence in the judicial system, and enhance satisfaction. We support HB 52 because it would offer traumatized jurors access to group counseling services to help counteract the negative effects which may result from jury service.

Sincerely,

Dear Representative Kerttula:

I'm writing to extend my utmost support for your legislation – HB 52 - "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony."

As a juror on the 2003 Joshua Wade trial in Anchorage, I can attest to the need for counseling after a trial involving a heinous crime against an individual. Unlike prime time TV where crimes are committed, investigated and solved in 60 minutes, real life murder trials are gruesome, disturbing and in our case, debated in a court room over the course of nearly four months. Blood spatter patterns, rape, death by repeated blows to the head with a rock, torture, dehumanization – I would argue that these may be things judges, prosecutors, police officers, forensic specialists are trained and equipped to psychologically handle, but the average citizen called to jury duty is not.

At the conclusion of our trial, we were given specific instruction on how to process the evidence, on how to deliberate, on how to come to deliver a verdict according to the instruction presented by the court. We were not however, given any instruction on how we might move past the sound of the victim's mother wailing in the courtroom; of the pictures that we were shown day after day of a woman's raped and beaten body; of the testimony from expert witnesses stating that for blood to have traveled "x" feet from a body, it would have had to have been beaten with "y" severity.

Fortunately, I have a friend and colleague who does trauma counseling. At the conclusion of the Wade trial, this individual did one group counseling session (gratis) for all of us; she then saw me (again, gratis) for several other sessions so that I could further process, and move beyond the prior 4 months. Not all jurors will be as fortunate to have access to free services.

Thank you for your leadership in recognizing and addressing the needs of ordinary citizens who find themselves on an extraordinary jury. While it is our duty to serve, I believe that it is also the duty of the court to provide a means of support at the conclusion of a particularly heinous trial.

With thanks,

Dear Representative Kerttula:

Thank you for sponsoring HB 52, "An Act authorizing psychological counseling for jurors serving in criminal trials who are traumatized by graphic evidence or testimony." Throughout my years of as an emergency responder and law enforcement professional, I have witnessed responder trauma caused by reactions to critical incidents. It is appropriate that jurors, as an important component of the law enforcement and judicial systems, become entitled to the same assistance enjoyed by other members of our law enforcement team.

Proper counseling prepares people for their normal reactions to abnormal events. It also provides tools to adapt to those reactions. Loss of sleep, reliving events and disruption of normal routines are just some of the examples of normal reactions to critical incidents that people may not intuitively understand. They may attribute their seemingly abnormal reactions weakness in their own character, or by misattributing their changed behavior to concurrent, yet unrelated events in their lives. Their normal coping skills may be ill prepared to help them, and may actually cause them to turn use mal-adaptive coping mechanisms such as self-medication, or withdrawal from their emotional support networks when they most need them. I can attest that some responders suffer negative life-altering changes by ignoring proper counseling.

Ultimately, the public benefit of providing counseling is the facilitation of jurors' orderly return to daily life, prepared to appropriately respond to their experience. And although they may remain forever changed by vicarious trauma, they will have the skill to properly deal with their reactions. Thank you for your efforts, you have my support.

Sincerely,

Dear Representative Kerttula:

I believe this is an important bill. As a social worker, I often work through very emotionally difficult situations and problems with clients. This can lead to professional grief, a topic social workers are familiar with and so often form support networks to help them process the challenges of the profession. There are times when I have been very shaken and traumatized by the work I do and I lean on the supports I have developed. However, jurors might not even be aware of the concept of professional grief and likely won't have the networks they need to process what they have been through. I think professional grief can be due to cumulative stress or one particularly stressful event. I think that not only should the counseling be offered, but that jurors participating in traumatic cases should also be advised that counseling should be considered, even if they don't think they will need it.

Professional grief can bring about responses that might not seem to be associated with the cause of the grief. In addition, professional grief often takes the form of hidden grief and is internalized and unexpressed. Individuals experiencing it might feel irritable, angry, anxious, helpless, or guilty without relating it to the experience. Jurors should be made aware of the possibility of professional grief and the importance of working through it.

Please let me know if you have any other questions. Thank you and good luck!

Hi Hannah,
I just now read this message from my friend Jeanette as I was out of town.
Hopefully it is not too late for input/feedback. I am a mental health clinician (MSW), and I also once participated in a murder trial as a juror three years ago.
I thought at the time that post-trial psychological counseling for jurors was a necessity, and I am very pleased to find out that Rep. Kerttula has introduced a bill to that effect.
I witnessed and experienced great distress from vicarious traumatization as a result of being exposed to graphic images and verbal renditions of the gruesome details involved in a very violent death. In addition, all of us jurors experienced a lot of pressure and stress from the many days of deliberation and from the civil responsibility of deciding of a man's fate. Many jurors were shaken and in tears when all of this was over, and I remember the strong feeling of disconnection I experienced when we were released from our duty after 3 weeks of intense involvement. I thought to myself, "we didn't sign up for this", and this was true, we were "chosen" participants. We were in some sort a "captive audience" trying to fulfill our civic responsibility, which involved being exposed to some disturbing evidences.
Vicarious traumatization can lead to Post Traumatic Stress Disorder,and as a result jurors can experience flashbacks,loss of sleep, nightmares or night terrors, and a heightened level of anxiety. Post-trial counseling would be a valuable means to preventing and reducing the trauma jurors of violent acts are subjected to, and it would only make sense for the Court system to prevent harm to citizens who are voluntarily exposing themselves to traumatic evidences out of civic duty.
I hope this bill passes,

Thanks,
Lina LePage

Juror Stress: Symptoms, Syndromes, and Solutions

Laurence Miller
Independent Practice, Boca Raton, Florida

Abstract: As civic duties go, jury service can be among the most stressful experiences that a citizen can undergo. This article describes the common sources of juror stress, including jury summons, jury selection, understanding and coping with complex or disturbing evidence and testimony, jury deliberation, and the pressure to arrive at a just verdict. The article then goes on to delineate a number of intervention models for helping jurors manage stress reactions and prevent the development of more serious traumatic stress syndromes. Finally, some recommendations are offered for professionalizing jury service that would act in the interests of civil and criminal justice. [International Journal of Emergency Mental Health, 2008, 10(3), pp.203-218].

Key words: forensic psychology, criminal justice, juror stress, jury system, legal stress, stress management

Imagine you awaken one night with a mysterious pain. You make your way to the nearest emergency room and ask to see a doctor. You're told that, instead, you will be examined by 12 citizens who have been pulled off their jobs and ordered to the emergency room to decide your case. When you begin explaining your symptoms and medical history, someone in the back of the room stands up and objects that your past illnesses and treatments are irrelevant and that this medical decision panel must make their treatment decision based solely on their current examination findings. You're asked a series of yes-no questions and when you try to explain further, are told to only answer the question as it's been asked. After they've finished with you, the 12 citizens retire to a separate room to deliberate your case. When you try to protest that this is no way to practice medicine, they tell you to feel lucky to live in a country where you can receive a "fair" examination and have your diagnosis and treatment decided by 12 of your peers.

Sound ridiculous? Yet, these kinds of complex life-altering decisions are made every day in courts throughout the United States and many other countries by juries with no more knowledge of the law than the above hypothetical panel has of medicine. While the merit of this kind of justice system is a topic for another venue, this article will focus on what those 12 souls may go though in trying to do the best they can in negotiating the justice system. This article will delineate some of the major stresses and stress syndromes associated with jury service and offer some recommendations for helping jurors cope with the ordeals of their service and the pressures associated with certain kinds of trials.

Juror Stress: Scope of the Problem

A core feature of the American civil and criminal justice systems is the right of a defendant to a trial by jury. Serving as a juror is considered a civic duty and a citizen's failure to respond to this call may result in judicial sanctions and penalties. Other than the occasional traffic citation, jury service is one of the primary means by which the average, law-abiding citizen comes into contact with the American judicial system. Most jurors take their responsibilities seriously and carry out their jury service to the best of their abilities. But until recently, little consideration has been given to the psychological impact of jury service on the jurors themselves (Butler, 2007; Hafemeister, 1993).

Ironically, much of this attention has come from the observations of judges who have to deal with stressed-out juries on a regular basis and who are subject to their own judicial stresses and challenges (Miller et al., 2007; Zimmerman, 2006), which will be the subject of a future article in this series. On a practical level, heightened awareness of juror stress may result in a shrinking pool of citizens who are willing to report for jury service. As greater numbers of citizens manage to avoid jury service, juries become less and less representative of their communities, leading to a deterioration of public trust and confidence in jury verdicts, making still more people reluctant to serve, and so on, in a vicious cycle. In addition, extreme juror stress levels may compromise their ability to render a fair judgment or impel jurors to make premature decisions, resulting in the appeals of many more verdicts than necessary and, in some cases, the corruption of justice (Butler, 2007; Curridan, 1995; Hafemeister, 1993; Hafemeister & Ventis, 1992; Sturgess, 1990).

The Jury Process

The odyssey of jury service typically begins when a citizen receives a jury summons. The very term, "summons" can make the citizen feel like he or she is already guilty of something and conveys to the recipient that this service is not optional; indeed, failing to report for jury duty can result in the citizen being held in contempt of court, possibly fined and jailed, and ultimately being forced to appear. The summons either orders the citizen to report to the courthouse on a specific date or instructs them to call the courthouse over several days to see when their service is required. Some jurisdictions give citizens the option of postponing jury service for a limited period of time.

When arriving at the courthouse, prospective jurors are typically herded into a large auditorium where they are given a brief orientation, by video or live speaker, to the civil and criminal justice systems. They wait to be called for empanelment, which may be almost immediately or at any time throughout the day. In some jurisdictions, if a juror is not empaneled on that day, his or her service is done; in other jurisdictions, they must return day after day until selected for a jury or rejected during jury selection.

Jury selection involves the careful examination, or voir dire, of each prospective juror by the opposing attorneys in the case. Ostensibly, the goal is to select jurors who can make an impartial decision, free of personal biases that might taint their careful, objective weighing of the issues. In reality, voir dire often represents a way for attorneys from either side to "stack" the jury with individuals who most likely will be favorable to their case (Kressel & Kressel, 2002). Since a wide range of jury characteristics may affect their thinking about a given case, voir dire questions may range from opinions about points of law ("Do you believe the death penalty is ever an appropriate punishment?") to personal habits or preferences ("How many hours a week do you think is normal for someone to be looking at internet pornography?"). Typically, the initial weeding-out is accomplished by means of a written interrogatory, or questionnaire, and those prospective jurors who pass this first hurdle are then interviewed in vior dire. The law also allows a limited number of jurors to be rejected on a "peremptory" basis, which means the attorney doesn't have to give a reason, and which usually occurs to exclude a juror because of some personal feature such as ethnicity or social background. The acceptance/rejection ratio of jury selection explains the "cattle-call" nature of summoning vast numbers of potential jurors to the courthouse on any given day.

After a jury is empaneled, the case generally begins. Depending on the nature of the case, jurors spend anywhere from a few days to many weeks hearing complex and conflicting testimony from plaintiff and defendant (in a civil case), prosecutor and defendant (in a criminal case), fact witnesses (who have observed or have personal knowledge about something pertinent to the case), and expert witnesses (professionals with specialized training who can render opinions about technical issues of the case). Attorneys naturally try to present evidence that will be most favorable to their side of the case to "sway" the jury (Kressel & Kressel, 2002).

Traditionally, jurors are not allowed to take notes or ask questions and are supposed to process all this material in their heads to prepare for deliberation. Perhaps responding to the realities of human cognition, some jurisdictions now permit limited questions by jurors during the trial in order to help clarify crucial points that they will deliberate on. In most trials, jurors get to go home at the end of each day but are not allowed to discuss the case with anyone. In some high-profile cases, juries may be sequestered – literally isolated in a hotel room between court appearances, and deprived of newspapers, TV, or any contact with the outside world that might taint their view of the case.

After testimony and each attorney's closing statements are completed, the jury retires to a separate room for their deliberation, which may take a couple of hours or many days. Since, in most cases, verdicts must be unanimous, this can be an extremely grueling process, as jurors may change their minds several times throughout the deliberations and their decision-making processes may be influenced by anything from new insights on the case to what will get them out of there the quickest. Prior to deliberation, the judge usually provides a set of jury instructions as to which aspects of the case they just heard can be considered and which parts they should disregard; admittedly this kind of cognitive compartmentalization can be extremely difficult to accomplish ("Do not assign any weight to the bereaved mother's spontaneous crying and unsolicited comment about how she misses her murdered daughter.")

At any point in the trial prior to the actual reading of the verdict, the two sides of the case can arrive at an agreement that obviates the need for a jury. A number of juries have been in the position of sweating over a weeks-long trial, spending several more hectic days in heated deliberations, only to be told at the last moment that the case has been settled and "thank you for your service." It is hard to imagine a more frustrating set of circumstances than to have placed one's whole life on hold, to have had one's thoughts and emotions wrenched by days of testimony that ranged from the soporific to the horrific, to have deliberated earnestly and hard, only to be told, often at the brink of a unanimous decision, the judicial version of "never mind." Perhaps the only thing worse are cases where the judge "sets aside" the jury's verdict after it has been read because he or she decides that these 12 citizens could not possibly have reached this conclusion if they had properly considered all the pertinent facts and points of law in the case. In these circumstances, juries understandably feel like bad little schoolchildren who failed their class assignment. Even where the court accepts the jury's verdict, they know it's not over yet, because most serious verdicts are appealed.

Positive Aspects of Jury Service

Although this article will focus on the negative psychological effects of jury service, to be fair, a number of surveys and studies have found that most American and Canadian jurors view their service positively (Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Diamond, 1993). For many citizens, this is the most important thing they have done in terms of having a real impact on their communities. Individuals who may feel that they plod meaninglessly through life and receive scant acknowledgement for their efforts at their jobs or at home are suddenly thrust into a position of trust, treated like adults, and accorded great respect, with the weight of another human being's fate placed in their collective hands. Jurors often emerge with much enhanced respect for the legal system after seeing how seriously and carefully most cases are tried, with learned attorneys in expensive suits vying for their decision through meticulously researched and cogently presented arguments, all parties forced to follow strict rules of evidence under the watchful gaze of an enrobed judge sitting on high. This experience often inculcates in jurors a sense of empowerment and engagement with civic life; in fact, serving on a jury makes people more likely to vote. Many jurors surveyed say they would like to serve again (Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998).

However, some of the positive feelings reported on juror surveys may be the result of rationalization and cognitive dissonance: having been conscripted to legal servitude for days or weeks at a time, suffered loss of income and restrictions in their family time, many jurors may feel compelled to justify to themselves that this all must have been for some greater good in order not to feel like chumps (Butler, 2007). And, as will be discussed below, this positive perception of jury service is far from universal; indeed, from the results of other surveys and studies, one can only conclude that, for many jurors, their service amounts to a descent into hell.

Stresses of Jury Service

Even short of hell, many jurors experience stresses that range from mild to severe. While trials containing complex and/or grisly evidence may be understood to be inherently stressful, even more mundane cases can take a grueling toll.

For all the lip service about their noble mission, courts can be surprisingly unaccommodating to jurors who are often relegated to the bottom of the courtroom pecking order. This may be due to a strong social identification factor: Judges and lawyers share a common level of education, training, and experience; indeed, many judges were once practicing lawyers and career shifts in the other direction are not uncommon either. Thus, they understand that they are in a different social and demographic league than most jurors who tend to come from a more working-class and nonprofessional population – i.e. the type of people who cannot easily get out of jury duty. In addition, the same judges and lawyers tend to interact with one another repeatedly in the same kinds of cases, whereas jurors are here for one case, and then gone. Thus, it is easy for the courtroom "regulars" to unconsciously treat the newcomers as transients who are there to do their jobs and then scram (Butler, 2007; Curridan, 1995).

A survey by the National Center for State Courts (Casey, 1998) asked a large sample of jurors or alternate jurors from a wide range of civil and criminal cases (e.g. robbery, drunk driving, malpractice, and personal injury) to rate the level of perceived stress they experienced from a list of stressors. The top ten sources of stress for jurors serving on non-death-penalty cases were: deciding on a verdict; jury deliberations and discussions; disruptions to daily routines; fear of making a mistake; violent crimes; the jury selection process; crimes against children; answering questions in front of other people; sentencing a criminal defendant; and dissension/differences among jurors. Looking at the top items on the list should remind us that, even in relatively routine cases, most jurors take their responsibilities very seriously and are acutely aware that they are making decisions that will greatly affect people's lives, what Bornstein and colleagues (2005) refer to as the "burden of justice." It is this very sense of responsibility that often makes their jobs so stressful (Hafemeister, 1993).

But how stressful? Most surveys have found that about 40% of jurors report stress levels hovering around the mild to moderate range, but that clinically significant anxiety or depressive disorders are rare (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein, Miller, Nemeth, Page, & Musil, 2005; Casey, 1998; Kaplan & Winget, 1992; Kelly, 1994; Casey, 1998; Shuman, Hamilton, & Daley, 1994). So, even though most jurors aren't actually being "driven crazy" by their ordeal, the stresses of jury service can have a sufficient effect on their daily lives to demand serious attention.

Sources of Juror Stress

Jurors experience stressors from a variety of sources associated with their service. A review of the relevant literature (Antonio, 2006; Bell & Feldman, 1992; Bishop, 1992; Bornstein & Nemeth, 1999; Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Diamond, 1993; Fishfader, Howells, Katz, & Terese, 1996; Goleman, 1991; Greene & Bornstein, 2000; Hafemeister, 1993; Haney, Sontag, & Costanzo, 1994; Kelley, 1994; McAree, 2004; Miller, Flores, & Dolezilek, 2007; Mott, Hans, & Simpson, 2000; Rauch, 1992) suggests that these can be divided into two main categories, those associated with the judicial process of jury selection and empanelment, and those associated with the content and conduct of the trial itself.

Court Procedures

Physical setting. The physical environment in various courthouses throughout the country ranges from reasonably comfortable to atrocious. Stress factors cited by jurors include poor temperature controls, limited access to food and bathroom facilities, cramped and overcrowded waiting areas ("cattle pens"), and the inconvenience of getting to and from the courthouse (lack of public transportation, poor parking, courthouse in bad neighborhood).

Payment. For all the high-minded talk of how jurors are a vital component in our system of justice, the daily compensation rate for jurors – typically far below minimum wage – can only be seen as diluting the supposed high regard that the court has for them. "I couldn't get someone to clean my toilets for this kind of money," is a typical complaint. A few jurors have commented that they tore up the check when it came or sent it back with a nasty note.

Life disruption. A near-universal complaint of jurors and prospective jurors is the disruption of work and family schedules necessitated by their service. Under the mantle of civic responsibility, jurors may lose days or weeks from work and have to delegate childcare and other household responsibilities. Although employers, as an expression of good citizenship, are supposed to give their employees days off with compensation to attend jury duty, in most cases the worker absorbs a pay loss. Adding insult to injury, when the term of jury service extends more than a few days, the worker may return to find that his or her job has been filled by someone else.

For the self-employed, the situation can be even worse. Salespeople live by their commissions and most small businesses can't afford to close down for even a few days. Even in medium-sized companies, the worker may not have anybody to take his or her place if he or she is in court; clients and customers may quickly go elsewhere. Some jurors report that they have had their businesses ruined by a lengthy term of service.

And it's not just work. Time away from spouses and children strains family relationships; women jurors especially appear to feel the strain of isolation very acutely. Not being allowed to discuss the case when he or she comes home from court deprives the juror of a main source of tension reduction that most people have for unloading their daily stress, and further marginalizes the rest of the family who see their loved one in distress but are unable to do anything to help them (Feldman & Bell, 1991; Hafemeister, 1993; Slind-Flor, 1992).

As previously noted, in some high-profile cases, to avoid "contamination" of the jury by media, casual conversation, etc., jurors may be sequestered, which essentially amounts to enforced isolation during the trial. Because of state and local budgets, accommodations are rarely first-class. This heightened isolation from work, family, and friends may cause many jurors to feel that they are being treated like "criminals," "POW's," or "terrorists at Guantanomo Bay," as some jurors have put it. It is these conditions that most often lead some jurors to fear they are losing their minds (Antonio, 2006).

But, at least for American jurors, the ordeal is over when the trial ends, at which time they are free to talk, write books, or expound on TV about their role in a famous trial (although most jurors just want to go home and forget it). No such consideration is afforded their northern brethren, as the Canadian Criminal Code makes it an offense for their jurors to ever disclose information regarding jury proceedings. Canadian jurors cite this ban as one of the most difficult things to deal with (Butler, 2007; Hafemeister, 1993). On the other hand, this permanent gag order may free these jurors from the relentless media intrusion that often dogs American jurors in high-profile cases and which often seems designed to provoke a media-worthy lurid reaction from jurors.

For example, after the high-profile Rodney King beating trial, jurors were assailed by the press to the point that local police warned them not to remain in their homes because of all the publicity they were garnering. These jurors felt compelled to defend their decision to friends and family and felt that they were being condemned in the press for the rioting that took place after the verdict. One juror received a bomb threat at her workplace. Another juror bought a gun for protection, while still another slept with an axe. Many jurors compared their experience to having been raped; they suffered anxiety, hypervigilance, tearfulness, exhaustion, sleep and weight loss, and disruption of family relationships. A few of the jurors sought professional counseling, but most suffered in silence (Davis, 1993).

Jury selection process. For many jurors, especially those that value their privacy, filling out detailed questionnaires and answering sometimes very personal questions in front of a group of strangers can be extremely uncomfortable. Many jurors have reported feeling as if they were the ones on trial. For example, in financial fraud cases, lawyers may want to know what the juror's salary is or whether he or she has ever "thought about" cheating on their taxes. In sex-related cases, jurors may be queried about their sexual preferences or whether they have ever "thought about" cheating on their spouse. Simply refusing to answer could technically result in the juror being cited for contempt of court, but few judges would be willing to subject the juror to further duress. More commonly, embarrassed jurors will simply lie and tell the questioning attorney whatever they believe will make the lawyer move on. The result may be the empanelment of a jury containing several members who have been seated under false pretenses, thereby compromising the whole rationale of jury selection.

Perhaps for these kinds of reasons, while American lawyers can question potential jurors to screen out those they don't like during the voir dire process, in Canada this kind of jury selection process is considered prejudicial and all eligible jurors are assigned on a first-come-first-serve basis. The absence of a rigorous juror screening process has been found in surveys to increase stress on those Canadian jurors who are seated (Butler, 2007). It would be an interesting empirical question to see which system is associated with the greatest psychological morbidity and satisfaction with jury service.

Trial Factors

Death penalty cases. Understandably, the decision to find a defendant guilty of a crime warranting the death penalty is one that most American jurors take very seriously, reflecting the "burden of justice" (Bornstein et al., 2005) that jurors feel more intensely, the more serious the trial (e.g., capital murder vs. grand larceny). In some jurisdictions, the jury determines guilt or innocence in a capital crime and the judge imposes a sentence. In other courts, the jury may first decide on guilt and then deliberate a second time to determine the sentence, usually either death or life imprisonment. Findings from the Capital Jury Project (Antonio, 2006) and other studies have shown jurors who render a death penalty verdict to suffer from a variety of stress reactions, including posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) at higher rates than those who render a life sentence.

Some jurors describe nightmares that replicate how the victim was killed or that relate to details of the crime scene, many of the images coming from photographs viewed at trial. Some jurors report feeling physically sick during and after the trial. Jurors may express regret at their final punishment decision, often feeling that the wrong decision was reached. In some cases, jurors regret the death sentence; but in a few others they wish death had been meted out instead of life imprisonment. Many jurors who harbor second thoughts post-trial feel they were pressured or "brainwashed" by other jurors to go along with the majority decision: "I should have stuck to my guns, but everybody else was so sure of their side and we all just wanted to get out of there."

Fear of reprisal by the defendant or his cohorts is a common theme reported among jurors serving on capital trials. Many report that the defendant would sit in court and stare intimidatingly at individual jurors during the trial. Nightmares of such possible reprisals by the defendant are commonly reported, more frequently by women. Other jurors are simply afraid of running into either the victim's or defendant's family in or around the courthouse. Some fear wider censure by their own families, friends, and communities for making the "wrong" decision in socially sensitive cases. Most jurors who have served on capital cases are determined not to repeat the experience.

Interestingly, in the Capital Jury Project study (Antonio, 2006), a number of jurors specifically expressed the need for some kind of post-trial counseling and half thought it should be made available by courts themselves. Others took the initiative and sought counseling on their own after the trial had ended, either from a family member, clergyman, or mental health clinician (Antonio, 2006).

Grisly evidence. One of the distressing aspects of murder trials or those where there has been significant bodily injury is the frequent necessity for juries to view gruesome hospital or crime scene photos depicting death and or mutilation, as well as to hear sometimes horrifying testimony of how victims were assaulted, tortured, raped, and/or killed (Bishop, 1992, Boone, 2008). Remember that police officers, criminal attorneys, judges, and specially trained mental health counselors who work with the court system all have years of experience dealing with disturbing evidence, yet, even in these hard-boiled veterans, particularly heinous crimes (often those involving child victims) may evoke destabilizing emotional reactions that require intervention in the form of critical incident debriefing or other mental health contact (Miller, 1998c, 1999, 2006a, 2006b, 2007a, 2007b, 2008a, 2008b, 2008c).

How much greater must the reaction be to this kind of evidence by untrained, inexperienced jurors who are being assailed by grisly evidence throughout the trial. This is frequently compounded by the fact that prosecution and defense counsel each have their own agendas that they may play off the jury. For example, the prosecution may specifically try to shock the jury by literally throwing the exhibit (crime scene photo, bloody clothing, murder weapon) in front of the jury precisely to spur an emotional reaction that will hopefully lead to a conviction (another variation of this is to abruptly display an image of the disturbing exhibit on a huge projection screen in the ominously darkened courtroom). For its part, the defense team will initially try to exclude evidence they consider "inflammatory" or, alternatively, if it is presented, may try keep it exposed as long as possible or present it repeatedly in order to try to desensitize the jury to its presence. Sometimes this works and jurors get used to seeing the bloody knife and the photographic stab wounds lying on the evidence table day after day. But sometimes the tactic backfires and the jurors grow increasingly sensitized, rather than immunized, with each exposure.

Studies are near-unanimous in reporting high rates of anxiety, depression, and PTSD symptoms in jurors sitting on capital murder, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated sexual assault, aggravated assault, and child abuse cases (Antonio, 2006; Feldman & Bell, 1993; Hafemeister, 1993). Some of this may relate to the concept of vicarious trauma, in which those who work frequently and closely with victims of violence come to empathically absorb and internalize some of the psychic pain and begin to show PTSD symptoms themselves (Davis & Friedman, 1985; Figley, 1983; Fullerton, Carroll, Ursano, & Wright, 1992; Miller, 1998a, 1998b, 2008c; Moon, 1999; Talbot, Dalton, & Dunn, 1995; White, Lawrence, Biggerstaff, & Grubb, 1985; Yassen, 1995). These kinds of reactions may have implications for adjudication of the case if jurors make extreme decisions based primarily on their emotions rather than on a rational analysis of the evidence, or if they become so numbed to the savagery of the crime through repetitive testimony or evidence presentation that they come to diminish the seriousness of the criminal act in their deliberations (Miller et al., 2007).

Complex Evidence. Another feature of murder trials or other violent felony trials is that they tend to be long and contain vast amounts of complex and ambiguous evidence. In most courts, jurors are forbidden to take notes or ask questions, although some jurisdictions are very recently beginning to allow limited forms of these activities. Thus, the juror is placed in the position of having to process complex technical information and conflicting eyewitness narratives presented by two different sides who are each trying to spin the evidence to the fullest extent that the court will allow, with the juror permitted to take no (or limited) notes and ask no (or limited) questions. Add to this the fact that much testimony is just plain boring or literally incomprehensible and there is evidence that jurors forget a great deal of what they hear in court (Rosehan, 1994). If this were a college course, what grade do you think the jurors would get? Yet, they are charged with the task of taking this information and using it to render what, in some cases, is literally a life or death decision about someone's fate.

Complicating the process is the fact that, in the case of a college course, the students are all more or less equivalent in background in terms of education, training, and native intelligence, and have probably all completed at least some prerequisite coursework for the present class. But jury members come from all walks of life and will have vastly differing levels of sophistication in handling complex testimony and in understanding the legal instructions they're given (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Miller et al., 2007; Steele & Thornburg, 1991). Because most professional people in their 30s to 50s, as well as most mothers with childcare responsibilities, can probably find some reason to get out of jury duty, most juries will contain a disproportionate number of very young, very old, less educated, and less family-grounded individuals. In deliberations, less comprehending jurors may feel intimidated by seemingly more savvy members who, for their part, may be frustrated with their slower compatriots' failure to grasp their arguments or see things their way.

Indeed, an entire industry of jury persuasion, often trafficking under the euphemism of trial consulting, has sprung up precisely to capitalize on juries' frequent cluelessness and to help attorneys use this to their own advantage (Kressel & Kressel, 2002; Posey & Wrightsman, 2005; Vinson & Davis, 1996). For example, we know from cognitive psychology and everyday experience that most people make decisions not by carefully weighing evidence and using inductive reasoning to arrive at a conclusion. Rather, they make an immediate judgment which is typically based on emotion and first impressions and lies within their pre-existing frame of reference and comfortable world-view. Then, they selectively scan the available data to cherry-pick information that will self-justifyingly support their original position. Hence, most jurors strive to reach verdicts which do not conflict strongly with the views they've held at the beginning of the trial; that is, they strive to reduce cognitive dissonance (Feigenson, 2000; Nisbett & Ross, 1980; Petty & Ciacioppo, 1986; Singer, 1998; Sunby, 1997).

Thus, lawyers know that it is good trial strategy to build your case around a small number of fundamental principles about which most jurors are surmised to feel strongly and that consequently act as screens or filters to interpret, distort, or reinforce information presented during the trial. Tactically, the more an attorney can frame his or her case in terms of the jurors' own personal experience, the greater the likelihood of winning the case (Kressel & Kressel, 2002; Murphy, Loveland, & Munsterman, 1992; Vinson & Davis, 1996). Finally, human beings form impressions about other human beings more strongly than they do about abstract data. When jurors can understand the content of the testimony, they usually factor this into their decisions. But when the complexity of the subject matter exceeds their comprehension, they rely on the perceived sincerity and persuasiveness of the witness (Cooper, Bennett, & Sukel, 1996).

Today's poor, benighted jurors may be forgiven their blunders if only because the complexity of the world as a whole has changed much in just a few centuries, while the human brain and human nature have not. No less an authority than retired Supreme Court justice Sandra Day O'Connor (2003) has lamented this modern state of affairs:

> The world is a very different place now than it was in 1220 or in 1789 or fifty years ago. We therefore should not be surprised to learn that aspects of the jury system that worked well in those times work less well today and need some repairs. What should surprise us is that so little of the necessary repair work has been done.

There are three aspects of the jury system that need particular attention. First, the conditions of jury service. When citizens are called for jury service, they often view it as a burden rather than a privilege. And for good reason: when they arrive at the courthouse they frequently are treated more like sheep than people, and the system can seem designed to disrupt their lives to a maximum degree. Second, jury selection. The process of selecting a jury out of the citizens called for jury service on a particular day has changed from a necessary safeguard against potentially biased jurors to a way for highly paid jury consultants to attempt to ensure a jury favorable to the side paying their fees. And third, the conduct of the trial itself. Too often, jurors are allowed to do nothing but to listen passively to the testimony without any idea what the legal issues are in the case, and without being permitted to take notes or participate in any way, finally to be read a virtually incomprehensible set of instructions and sent to the jury room to reach a verdict in a case they may not understand much better than they did before the trial began (O'Connor, 2003, pp. 217-218; cited in Posey & Wrightsman, 2005, pp. 218).

Jury deliberation. This is where it all comes together, where the jurors are supposed to put their heads together and come up with a decision that follows the law and respects the evidence in the case. They have already been instructed that there are specific things they are and are not allowed to include in their thinking about the case; they may or may not understand these rules. A number of surveys have shown that the interactions and dynamics of these 12 strangers, thrown together from diverse cultures and walks of life, with widely varying cognitive skills and personalities, can often be the biggest source of stress for jurors during the trial. While many jury deliberations proceed tolerably, and in some instances may even be enjoyably challenging, others are described by jurors as the worst experience they've ever had (Antonio, 2006; Butler, 2007).

The types of stresses during jury deliberation can be multiple and can range from little personal irritations from another juror's mannerisms or tone of voice, to a particularly obnoxious, ignorant, or intimidating juror who just ticks everybody else off and makes the process so much more unpleasant. Not to be overlooked is the physical setting, with poorly ventilated jury chambers resembling sweaty locker rooms after a few hours. The deliberation process itself can be contentious and the juror who evinces a minority opinion may find him- or herself reviled and alienated for "not letting us get on with this." Some jury deliberations have reportedly almost broken into fistfights, and breakdowns in decorum with inadvertent or intentional spewing of stereotypes and prejudices are not uncommon, as the mounting stress brings out the ugly side of the deliberators (Bornstein et al., 2005; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998).

Juror Stress: Symptoms and Syndromes

Butler (2007) points out that if a research committee were to propose a study on the human stress response that incorporated the factors reviewed above, they would no doubt be fired from their university and banned from research for the rest of their lives. Another, perhaps more germane, way to look at it is that the kind of working environment that many jurors are subjected to during their service would be strictly illegal in all regulated American public and private organizations, and discovery of such conditions would subject the organization to civil penalties and criminal prosecution.

Juror stress symptoms can be conceptualized along three dimensions: (1) symptom type; (2) symptom severity; and (3) symptom time course.

Symptom Type

Juror stress symptoms tend to replicate those reported more generally in the stress and trauma literature (Antonio, 2006; Bell & Feldman, 1992; Bornstein et al., 2004; Butler, 2007; Casey, 1998; Costanzo & Costanzo, 1994; Davis, 1993; Feldman & Bell, 1993; Kaplan & Winget, 1992; Kelley, 1994; Shuman et al., 1994) and include the following:

Physical symptoms. Impaired sleep, headaches, heart palpitation, high blood pressure, cutaneous reactions (hives and rashes), ulcers, impaired sexual functioning, muscle tension, tremors, chest pain, faintness.

Psychological symptoms. Intrusive recollections, nightmares, emotional numbing and detachment, anxiety, depression, increased alcohol consumption.

Symptom Severity

Juror stress appears to show the standard dose-response ratio seen with other stressors, that is, the greater the level of stress, the more severe the symptoms (Butler, 2007). For example, jurors serving on "traumatic" trials, including rape, murder, and aggravated kidnapping, were found to experience more severe symptoms than jurors on "non-traumatic" trials such as burglary or drug possession (Shuman et al., 1994). In particular, the jurors on traumatic trials were many times more likely to experience depression (Miller et al., 2007).

Symptom Time Course.

In the Capital Jury Project (Antonio, 2006), jurors' stress reactions were found to occur in three main stages: during the trial; immediately after the sentence was announced; and in the days, weeks, or months after the trial ended.

During the trial. Interestingly, only a few of the jurors reported that the full impact of their jury experience was felt while the trial was occurring; most jurors seemed to go "on automatic" to function while the trial was in progress. The major source of stress at this time was determining the actual punishment decision. Other stressors included having to view disturbing crime scene evidence and the isolation of not being able to speak to their families about the case.

Immediately after the trial. In many cases, the stress response came as a "delayed reaction" right after the trial was over. Most of the jurors in this category reported crying at some point, either from the strain of their recent ordeal or out of sheer relief that it was over. Two female jurors in this sample were concerned about the effect the verdict would have on the victim's family.

Days, weeks, or months after the trial. Most of the jurors reported that serving in a capital murder trial affected them long after the trial ended. Some jurors experienced changes in their relationships and lifestyles. Many reported difficulty forgetting what they heard or saw during the trial, and a few reported classic symptoms of PTSD, including nightmares, intrusive recollection, and emotional numbing (Antonio, 2006).

Alleviating Juror Stress

Several authorities have proposed recommendations for making the juror system less stressful and more humane, based on their analyses of juror responses to surveys and general experience (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007; Nordgren & Thelen, 1999). I have divided these recommendations into procedural measures and clinical approaches.

Court Procedural Measures

These issues relate to changing the courtroom setting and the conditions of jury service (Antonio, 2006; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007; Nordgren & Thelen, 1999) and include the following:

Improve jury notification and reporting for service. Provide sufficient time for prospective jurors to respond to jury summons. Many courts now provide the option of deferring jury service one or more times, as long as the summonee reports within a specified period of time (usually about 6 months). Giving jurors time to arrange their affairs provides a sense of control that may increase juror cooperation and motivation to participate. Provide basic information with regard to how to respond to the summons, where to report, directions, relevant phone numbers, etc. Provide safe transportation and security escort between the courthouse and transportation (parking lot, bus stop). Remember, anything the court can do that makes it easier, not harder, for jurors to report for jury duty will increase compliance rates. Consider adjusted compensation rates for self-employed jurors or jurors whose employers will not compensate the worker for his or her service time.

Explain the trial process. All too often, the initial orientation to the legal system consists of a short, prepackaged video played on a screen in a busy auditorium that may be all but incomprehensible to most of the stressed and harried audience in the pre-panel "cattle call" room. Felons' confessions may be thrown out if police cannot affirmatively demonstrate that the suspect made a knowing and informed waiver of his or her Miranda rights at the time of arrest. Similarly, considering that people's legal fates are at stake, shouldn't prospective jurors be required to demonstrate that they understand the relevant law and legal procedures? Judges should take the initiative to explain things to the jurors in a clear, understandable fashion and solicit their feedback with regard to their understanding.

Also, give jurors a head's-up as to what to expect in general from the trial on which they are being selected to serve. Obviously, the nature of the trial, whether criminal (murder, robbery, rape, drug possession) or civil (personal injury lawsuit, contract dispute, family law case), should be explained. Many jurors state that they would have liked to have been forewarned that the trial could include gruesome photographs, foul language, pornographic material, and/or graphic descriptions of criminal acts. This may be contested by some judges and attorneys who are leery of discussing any type of evidence that has not yet been determined admissible. Additionally, many attorneys may actually be counting on the emotional shock value of certain evidence to sway jurors' opinions and don't want them desensitized by previous discussion; other attorneys may not want to "tip their hand" about sensitive forthcoming evidence. Courts should strive to work out some compromise solution that preserves the rules of evidence while assuring that jurors will be in a proper mental state to hear the case.

Facilitate the jury selection process. One aspect of the trial system that should be clearly explained is the necessity for attorneys to ask jurors probing questions during voir dire. This should include an explanation of the purpose of the voir dire examination, an explanation of the difference between peremptory challenges and challenges for cause, introductory information on the particular case, an estimate of how long the trial may last, and an indication of whether the jury will be sequestered and, if so, for how long and why.

Be sensitive to jurors' privacy concerns. Responses from jurors indicate that some judges and attorneys may view voir dire as a fishing expedition to gain as much information as possible about each juror rather than just enough information to determine if a juror can be fair and impartial. Questions about mental illness, substance abuse, extramarital affairs, job and salary history, or past run-ins with the law may be shrugged off by some potential jurors but shocking to others. Many jurors may be understandably concerned about who will get their personal information or will have access to court records. Any juror questionnaires should be collected at the end of the selection process and the procedures for assuring juror privacy should be explained.

Basic, commonsense recommendations include reducing waiting time, providing comfortable accommodations, and endeavoring to treat prospective jurors with the kind of respect the court pays lip service to when intoning the sacred civic duty to uphold our system of justice.

Maintain control of the courtroom and trial process. When people are under pressure in an unfamiliar environment, they want the grownups to be in charge. Jurors report that much of their stress occurs when they perceive the judge as losing control of the courtroom. Intimidating, bickering, or grandstanding attorneys should be reined in, and TV cameras should be removed if they interfere with the trial process. Loud or obtrusive witnesses or courtroom audience members should be quieted or ejected. Taking control doesn't mean being a tyrant; judges should always be civil with attorneys, jurors, and witnesses, but they should make it clear that they will tolerate no breaches of procedure or decorum in their courtroom. Control also means keeping the trial process humming along so things don't bog down; ironically, boredom is often as much a threat to juror concentration as overstimulation. Finally, in high-profile cases, jurors should be given some guidance on how to deal with the media.

Modulate the presentation of disturbing evidence and testimony. As noted above, viewing grisly evidence or listening to emotionally disturbing testimony is reported by many jurors as being among the most stressful aspects of their service. Although gruesome evidence is typically associated with criminal trials, civil trials involving claims of negligent injury or medical malpractice often contain their share of hideous material. I recall testifying in one civil case where the plaintiff's claim of developing PTSD after seeing a loved one killed in a traffic accident was bolstered by full-color accident scene photos detailing what the speeding vehicle had done to the victim's head and body. Again, the purpose of preparing juries for disturbing testimony is not necessarily to lessen the import of the criminal or civilly negligent act, or to bias their view of the evidence in any way, but simply to alert them that such potentially disturbing material is coming. Indeed, juries who are shocked and overwhelmed by blatantly violent or pornographic material may be less capable of rendering a fair decision.

Allow greater juror participation in the trial process. Under traditional trial procedures, jurors are expected to play a passive role, quietly listening and absorbing the presented evidence and testimony in preparation for their deliberations. Recalling the point made at the beginning of this article, in no other field – medicine, law enforcement, emergency services, business and industry, government, the military – are critical decisions made in the context of deliberate restriction of relevant information. While certain aspects of a legal trial are unique, such as the importance of controlling bias, research on juror decision making increasingly shows that this passive role – no note-taking allowed, no questions asked by the jury – is unnatural and uncomfortable for most jurors, hindering their ability to remain objective, to concentrate on evidence and testimony, and to integrate new, unfamiliar material; just imagine trying to pass a high school or college course under these conditions. Conversely, studies show that juror comprehension and satisfaction are increased if jurors are allowed a more active role in trials (Cooper et al., 1996; Dann, 1993; Heuer & Penrod, 1994; Rosehan, 1994).

Accordingly, many courts are now permitting limited note-taking by jurors and the asking of limited questions. The latter usually takes the form of having the juror write the query on a piece of paper which is then passed to the judge for review. If he or she determines that it is an appropriate question, the judge will then read it to the witness (or sometimes have the bailiff or court reporter read it). In my experience, this has almost always occurred in the context of expert witness testimony, where the jury has a legitimate question concerning some technical matter that the expert has just expounded upon. Given that jury verdicts may well be determined by their understanding of such complex material, anything that will increase their understanding should well serve the purposes of a fair and just verdict.

Facilitate jury deliberations. Arguably, the jury deliberation process is the most critical aspect of juror activity in the trial because it is here that the fate of the stakeholders is decided. Most jurors rank the process of deciding on a verdict and the fear of making a mistake among the top sources of stress in their trials. One problem often cited is their lack of a clear understanding of the judge's jury instructions, and research has demonstrated generally low comprehension of juror instructions in general (Greene & Bornstein, 2000; Steele & Thornburg, 1991). Accordingly, it is crucial for judges to ascertain that their juries understand the relevant instructions.

After days of listening to complex, confusing, disturbing, and/or boring testimony, just throwing a group of strangers into a room and expecting them to arrive at a just decision may be more a reflection of naive optimism than reality. The conduct of jury deliberations can range from polite and civil to something resembling a dog fight. Most jurors report that they would have liked some guidelines for their deliberations. Especially in tense criminal trials or where jurors are having difficulty getting along, judges should be prepared to provide some guidelines for cooperative and collaborative deliberation, such as listening to one another's points without interruption, disagreeing respectfully, and not taking arguments about the case personally. Business people take hours of courses and training seminars on decision-making processes, conflict resolution strategies, and how to conduct productive meetings (Miller, 2008d) – shouldn't juries be given some guidance on this as well? If jury sequestration is a possibility in this trial, prepare jurors for this in advance, from the outset of jury selection.

Clinical Measures

The following recommendations entail more of an interface between judicial and mental health professionals in terms of providing specific interventions to help jurors cope with stress. There are some things that judges and court personnel can do; other approaches require the direct or consultative role of a qualified mental health professional (Antonio, 2006; Bienen, 1993; Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; Dabs, 1992; McAree, 2004; Miller et al., 2007).

Pre-trial interventions. This is the proactive aspect of juror stress management. The purpose of pre-trial interventions is to prepare jurors ahead of time for the stress they may experience during the course of a trial. These measures include informal discussions or prepared educational modules about the potential effects of stress, how to recognize symptoms, and how to utilize a range of coping techniques. The techniques themselves are familiar from stress management applications in other fields, such as law enforcement and emergency services (Miller, 2008a, 2008b).

Juror stress debriefing. Sometimes it may not be clear how stressful a trial has been until it has ended, at which time appropriate follow-up mental health services may be required (Goleman, 1991). Although court-sponsored services for crime victims exist in all 50 states (Miller, 2008c) and psychological services for law enforcement have existed in most jurisdictions for decades (Miller, 2006b), prior to 1990 there were few institutionalized programs through the courts for providing any kind of mental health services for jurors (McAree, 2004). Following several highly-publicized trials containing horrific evidence, including the Jeffrey Dahmer serial cannibalism trial, the trial of the Oklahoma City bombers, and the Pam Basu trial, in which a mother was dragged and mutilated during a carjacking, courts have begun offering psychological services to jurors (Bell & Feldman, 1992; Feldman & Bell, 1991, 1993; Hafemeister, 1993; Hafemeister & Ventis, 1992), largely in the form of one or more clinical varieties of critical incident stress debriefing (CISD) approaches, part of the larger domain of critical incident stress management (CISM), familiar to most readers of this journal (Everly & Mitchell, 1997; Miller, 1998c, 1999; Mitchell & Everly, 2003).

Developed in the field of public safety and emergency services, the debriefing model has now been applied to a wide range of crises, including crime victimization, natural disasters, and victims of terrorism (Miller, 1998c, 2008c). As developed in the emergency services field, CISD debriefing is a peer-led, clinician-guided process, usually consisting of one or more mental health professionals and one or more peer debriefers, i.e. fellow police officers, firefighters, paramedics, or crisis clinicians who have been trained in the CISD process and who may have been through critical incidents and debriefings in their own careers. The purpose of the debriefing is to normalize and detoxify the immediate traumatic stress reactions being experienced by the subjects and to strengthen resistance to further psychological disability. This is done through a semiformal seven-stage process, including the introduction, fact, thought, reaction, symptom, education, and reaction phases, designed to ease the process of ventilating distress, but then reseal psychological stability and encourage natural healing, aided, if necessary, by follow-up referral to additional mental health services.

Recent applications have expanded the use of CISD techniques with civilian groups. Bell & Feldman (1992) and Feldman & Bell (1991, 1993) developed a post-trial debriefing model specifically for jurors and other court personnel that is essentially similar to the crisis debriefings utilized for victims of crimes, natural disasters, or similar traumas. In general, effective debriefing sessions reduce stress, offer information on mental health services for those who might need it, provide closure, promote confidence in the judicial system, and enhance satisfaction.

As with most interventions, controversy exists. Bornstein and colleagues (2005) conducted a study that measured jurors' stress before and after a post-trial debriefing and found that, while jurors overwhelmingly said that they found the debriefing intervention helpful, their measured stress levels and symptom indices were similar at pre- and post-debriefing. Juror stress levels were lower at one month post-trial regardless of whether they had received the debriefing service or not. This, in fact, is an intriguing finding that runs through the stress debriefing efficacy literature: participants frequently say it helps, but formal measurements of distress or symptoms remain unchanged (Arendt & Elklit, 2001).

As with stress debriefing in other contexts, a major part of the problem with using this intervention with jurors probably relates to the appropriateness of its application; mental health clinicians who advise the courts should guide court officials to use this technique only where it is legitimately needed (Casey, 1998). For example, for trials that involve relatively low levels of stress, jurors may need only general discharge instructions from the trial judge prior to being dismissed. In general, informal meetings with the trial judge can provide a sense of closure for the jurors. In more stressful trials, the judge may choose to hold a more lengthy discussion with the jurors or bring in a mental health professional to conduct a formal debriefing. This may be the case in particularly gruesome trials or those which attract a great deal of media attention. However, surveys indicate that some judges like to handle these sessions on their own, only rarely calling in a mental health professional (Bornstein et al., 2005; Casey, 1998; McAree, 2004). Other judges seem to recognize that this is out of their league and are only too happy to find a mental health professional who will take over – if there are any available who do this kind of work (Miller et al., 2007).

Some recommendations for optimizing the juror debriefing session (Bornstein et al., 2005; Miller et al., 2007) include:

- Consider the best time of day for the debriefing. The afternoon the trial ends may leave jurors feeling drained; all they want to do is go home. Set up a separate day for the session, perhaps giving jurors a few days to recoup.
- Make the jurors feel comfortable. Debriefing should be voluntary and there should be no stigma attached. Nothing that goes on in the session should be on the record – the trial is over; this is solely for the jurors' well-being.
- Unlike public safety professionals, jurors may not quite know how to proceed, so prime the conversational pump to get people talking, but maintain control over the discussion, so that it helps, not hurts. Encourage productive venting, not unhealthy spewing or accusing. Keep the focus on the positive.
- Positive focus includes normalizing juror stress. This should be conceptualized as a normal reaction by normal people to an abnormally challenging situation. Reassure the jurors that they did their best at a difficult job in making a crucial decision.

- Cover any lingering questions jurors may have. Address concerns about safety and fears of retribution. Help jurors deal with the media. Seek juror feedback as to how things could be improved in the future so that they feel part of the solution.

In cases where the judge suspects that jurors are experiencing significant stress or showing symptoms of a serious mental disorder, they can refer the juror to a qualified mental health professional for more individualized counseling – again, courts should be proactive in identifying clinicians in the community who can serve as resources for these services.

Combined interventions. One criticism that has been leveled against debriefing-type interventions is that their standard, one-size-fits-all format lacks the flexibility to deal with diverse types of people and problems. While the CISM model continues to expand and adapt to new challenges, Nordgren & Thelen (1999) have developed a multifaceted intervention program they call Graduated Jury Stress Management (GJSM) which contains five intervention levels that are administered according to the stress level of the individual juror. Although GJSM is designed to be a post-trial intervention, some aspects of it (i.e. written instructions) could also be adapted as a pre-trial intervention:

- Level 1: Basic Information. Jurors who have not yet evinced any problems simply receive written educational materials about stress reactions and potential coping strategies.
- Level 2: Stress Management Instruction. This applies to jurors with mild stress levels. The judge individually gives these jurors basic stress management information along with the standard post-trial discharge instructions.
- Level 3: "Flexible Defusing." Jurors with moderate stress receive a 15-20 minute debriefing during which a mental health professional explains normal stress reactions, offers coping strategies, and assesses individual jurors to determine if further clinical services are necessary.
- Level 4: "Jury Stress Debriefing." This intervention is adapted from the CISD model commonly utilized with emergency workers and is applied to jurors who are showing significant levels of stress.
- Level 5: Individual Psychotherapy. This may range from a few sessions to ongoing treatment and is intended for jurors who are showing extreme stress reactions and/or clinical symptoms of a mental disorder. Not uncommonly, these may have been jurors who had difficulties in functioning prior to the trial and the trial stresses have exacerbated their preexisting or dormant psychopathology.

Clearly, Nordgren & Thelen's GJSM (1999) appears to formalize the stages of intervention that most clinicians would apply to the treatment of traumatic stress cases. But, as effective as these proactive and responsive clinical measures might be, and as best we may try to make procedural changes within the existing American jury system, perhaps real efforts to increase accuracy and efficiency and reduce stress within the jury system can only come when more fundamental changes are considered.

Conclusions and Recommendations

Based on a review of the literature and my own clinical and forensic experience, the following recommendations for improving the civil and criminal justice systems in the United States are offered.

Let judges judge. Just as we maintain strict training and credentialing criteria for authorizing people to call themselves doctors and attorneys and to practice medicine and law, we should do the same for those who practice jurisprudence; we should let the judges judge. Many countries already do this. In some court divisions, such as family court, judges, not juries, often decide cases. In many other cases, defendants have the option of waiving a jury trial and opting for a bench trial, which is having the judge hear the case and render a verdict.

Utilize professional jurors. Okay, even doctors have assistants to perform routine clinical tasks and lawyers use paralegals for similar purposes because there just aren't enough physicians and attorneys to go around. But these paraprofessional staff still receive some degree of training and certification to do what they do. So why not recruit reasonably intelligent and educated citizens on a voluntary basis, provide them with specialized training in the law, decision-making, and interpersonal skills, and credential them as Certified Jurors or some such appellation.

There could even be board-certified subspecialties within the Certified Juror field, such as "certified medical juror," "certified mental health juror," "certified business-economics juror," "certified industrial-mechanics juror," and so on. The next step would be to compensate them for their service (just as medical assistants and paralegals get paid a fair wage) and utilize them as part of a rotating pool of professional jurors who can objectively decide cases with a basic prerequisite of knowledge and training both in the law and in the subject matter of the case.

Meanwhile, professionals within the legal system, and the mental health clinicians who advise them, must strive to make jury service as efficient, accurate, and comfortable as possible. Whether in the emergency room or the courtroom, people's lives are at stake, in one way or another. We must assure that those who are called to make the crucial decisions are afforded the proper conditions to do so in a manner that serves justice.

HB 88
"An Act extending the termination date of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association; and providing for an effective date."

The Alaska Bar Association was established in 1955. The Bar Association's primary functions are to screen applicants for admission, thereby ensuring all successful applicants are fit to practice law, and to provide discipline by investigating grievances against members of the Bar. The Bar Association also performs a wide variety of other functions including offering classes for continuing legal education, lawyer referral services, and fee arbitration.

The Board consists of twelve members, nine attorneys elected by the active membership of the Bar Association, and three non-attorney, public members appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Legislature.

The Division of Legislative Audit, in its November 4, 2008, report concluded that "the board, through the Alaska Supreme Court, protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. It also provides for the investigation of complaints and has established a disciplinary process designed to promote licensed individuals to act in a competent and professional manner." The Division of Legislative Audit further recommended that the termination date of the board be extended to June 30, 2017.

The Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association is currently scheduled to terminate on June 30, 2009, and would have one year to conclude its administrative operations unless the legislature acts this session. House Bill 88 will extend the termination date for the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association for another eight years.

Members of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee:

In accordance with the provisions of Title 24 of the Alaska Statutes, the attached report is submitted for your review.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE
ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION
SUNSET REVIEW

November 4, 2008

Audit Control Number
41-20057-08

The audit was conducted as required by AS 44.66.050 and under the authority of AS 24.20.271(1). Alaska Statute 44.66.050(c) lists criteria to be used to assess the demonstrated public need for a given board, commission, agency, or program subject to the sunset review process. Currently, under AS 08.03.010(c)(2), the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association is scheduled to terminate on June 30, 2009.

In our opinion, the termination date for this board should be extended. The regulation and licensure of attorneys contributes to the protection of the public's welfare. We recommend the legislature extend the termination date to June 30, 2017.

The audit was conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain sufficient, appropriate evidence to provide a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives. We believe that the evidence obtained provides a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives. Fieldwork procedures utilized in the course of developing the findings and discussion presented in this report are discussed in the Objectives, Scope, and Methodology.

OBJECTIVES, SCOPE, AND METHODOLOGY

In accordance with Title 24 and Title 44 of the Alaska Statutes (sunset legislation), we have reviewed the activities of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board). Under AS 44.66.050(a), the legislative committee of reference is to consider this report during the legislative oversight process to determine whether the board's termination date should be extended. Currently, AS 08.03.010(c)(2) requires the board to terminate on June 30, 2009. If the legislature takes no action to extend the termination date, the board will have one year from that date to conclude its operations.

Objectives

There are four central objectives of our report. They are:

1. To determine if the termination date for the board should be extended.

2. To determine if the board is operating in the public's interest.

3. To determine if the board has exercised appropriate oversight of licensed members of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar).

4. To provide a current status on the recommendations made in the prior report.

The assessment of the operations and performance of the board was based on criteria set in AS 44.66.050(c). Criteria set out in this statute relates to the determination of a demonstrated public need for the board.

Scope and Methodology

Our review focused on the continuing legal education requirement, discipline function provided by the Bar, as well as board proceedings. Our audit reviewed board operations and activities from July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008.

We reviewed and evaluated the following:

- Applicable statutes, Alaska Bar Rules, Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct, and Bar bylaws

- Board minutes

- Bar annual reports

- Attorney discipline files
- Audited financial statement of the board

In addition, we conducted interviews of the board president, staff, including the executive director, board counsel, director of continuing legal education, and comptroller.

ORGANIZATION AND FUNCTION

The practice of law in the State of Alaska is regulated by the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board). The board consists of 12 members including nine attorneys elected by the active membership of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) and three non-attorney public members that are appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature in joint session.

The powers and duties of the board are conferred by the Alaska Integrated Bar Act (AS 08.08), the Alaska Bar Rules, and the Rules of Professional Conduct which are promulgated by the Alaska Supreme Court. The purpose of the board includes the following: to cultivate and advance the science of jurisprudence, to promote reform in the law and in judicial procedure, to facilitate the administration of justice, to encourage continuing legal education (CLE) for the membership, and to increase the public service and efficiency of the Bar.

The two primary functions of the Bar are the admission and discipline of its members. To accomplish these and other functions, the Bar operated with a 2008 budget of $1,983,738. Funding is provided primarily by membership dues ($410 per year), admission fees, lawyer referral fees, CLE charges, administrative discipline fees, and interest income.

Admission Function The board is responsible for screening applicants for admission to the Bar. The board certifies to the Supreme Court that all successful applicants are fit to practice law. The board appoints an executive director who is responsible for directing all staff functions, including the oversight of the admissions function.

Discipline Function The board is responsible for investigating grievances against all members of the Bar. The board appoints the discipline counsel. This counsel is responsible for oversight of all disciplinary actions taken against the Bar's membership and provides an ethics course that is required for all applicants. The board selects hearing committee members from a group of individuals in each judicial district appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The board is also responsible for issuing reprimands when warranted, and for recommending the Supreme Court impose disbarment, suspension, probation, or public censure when appropriate.

Miscellaneous Functions The Bar also performs a wide variety of miscellaneous functions that include providing classes for and accrediting CLE providers, a lawyer referral service, client mediation, and fee arbitration with clients. In conjunction with the Alaska Legal Services Corporation, the Bar sponsors the Alaska Pro Bono Program. The Bar provides a number of other member services including attorney liability protection, group insurance, the Alaska Bar Rag, ethics opinions, and alcohol and drug counseling. In addition, the association provides grants through the Alaska Bar Foundation from earnings of interest on the lawyers trust account program. These grants are used to support legal services for the economically disadvantaged and improve the administration of justice.

The Bar's office is located in Anchorage and is currently staffed by 19 full-time and job-share employees.

The board's decision involving examination and discipline may be appealed to the Alaska Supreme Court. The Alaska Supreme Court issues the order of admission to the Bar and lawyer disciplinary sanctions involving disbarment, suspension, probation, and public censure.

REPORT CONCLUSIONS

In our opinion, the termination date of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) should be extended. The regulation and licensing of qualified attorneys contributes to the protection of the public's welfare.

The board, through the Alaska Supreme Court, protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. It also provides for the investigation of complaints and has established a disciplinary process designed to promote licensed individuals to act in a competent and professional manner. Chapter 58, SLA 2005 amended AS 08.03.020(c) to increase from four to eight years the period for which a board scheduled for termination may be continued or reestablished by the legislature. As such, we recommend that the legislature extend the termination date of the board to June 30, 2017.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

In the prior audit, Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association, Follow Up, September 15, 2006, (Audit Control No. 41-20050-06), there were three recommendations, one of which has been fully implemented. The implemented recommendation was to adopt a due date for timely issuance of annual reports. The recommendation was resolved at the board's September 7, 2006 meeting where the board voted to amend their Standing Policies, setting April 15 as the due date for the completion of the preceding year's annual report. Review of the 2006 and 2007 annual report documentation confirmed they were completed prior to the April 15 due date.

The recommendation to adopt mandatory minimum continuing legal education (CLE) for attorneys is partially implemented and is reiterated as Recommendation No. 1

The final recommendation, which relates to the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) developing a database of disciplined lawyers, has not been addressed and is reiterated as Recommendation No. 2. In addition, review of board meeting proceedings resulted in noted deficiencies. The deficiencies are further discussed in Recommendation No. 3

Recommendation No. 1

The board should recommend to the Alaska Supreme Court that mandatory minimum CLE for attorneys be adopted.

Prior Finding

CLE for attorneys is voluntary rather than required. The Supreme Court adopted voluntary CLE under Bar Rule 65 in 1999. It encouraged all active members of the Bar to complete at least 12 credit hours of approved CLE, including one credit hour of ethics. Incentives, such as reduction of Bar dues and eligibility to participate in the Lawyer Referral Service, are authorized to those who comply with the Bar rule.

Forty-one legal jurisdictions in the United States have a mandatory CLE requirement for attorneys desiring to practice law in their jurisdiction. Mandatory CLE requirements range from 8 to 27 credit hours per year with the majority of the jurisdictions requiring between 12 and 15 hours. Specific course requirements vary.

Most professions require continuing education to maintain licensure in Alaska. For example, Alaska-licensed dentists, doctors, pharmacists, and psychologists are required to meet minimum continuing education standards.

Overall, we believe a mandatory minimum CLE requirement will enhance the membership's continued professional competence and raise the public's confidence in attorneys. The board should encourage the Supreme Court to adopt an Alaska Bar Rule requiring mandatory minimum CLE.

Legislative Audit's Current Position

The board voted at their September 7, 2006 meeting to send the mandatory CLE rule, as published, to the Alaska Supreme Court. Based on this rule, the Alaska Supreme Court amended Alaska Bar Rule 65 through Supreme Court Order No. 1640, to require all members to complete three credit hours of mandatory ethics continuing legal education (MECLE) per year. In addition to MECLE, all members are encouraged to complete nine credit hours of approved voluntary continuing legal education (VCLE). Members must certify with the Bar that they have completed the required MECLE and provide the number or an estimated number of completed VCLE.

The Supreme Court Order No. 1640 also added Alaska Bar Rule 66 for the suspension of members who have not complied with completing the required MECLE or members who failed to report the MECLE and VCLE for the year. These rules became effective January 1, 2008.

The mandatory ethics requirement does not fully achieve the goal of promoting competency and professionalism in members of the Bar. Although ethics education is part of the goal, requiring CLE, as opposed to encouraging VCLE, will strengthen the public's confidence that attorneys are professional and competent. Therefore, we reiterate our prior recommendation.

Recommendation No. 2

The board should consider developing a database of disciplined lawyers in the Bar's website.

Prior Finding

While current procedures are adequate, the board could increase efficient and effective communication of lawyer discipline to the public by publishing their discipline list on the Bar's website.

Board procedures provide for public notice of all attorneys who have been disbarred, suspended, put on probation, publicly censured, or reprimanded. Currently, the board publishes the names of these attorneys in four major newspapers throughout the State, the local newspaper where the attorney practiced, the Alaska Bar Rag, and in the board's annual report. Notice of all disciplines imposed by the court, all orders granting reinstatements, and all public reprimands are also transmitted to the American Bar Association National Lawyer Regulatory Data Bank. These are long-standing means of providing public notice; however, 15 states currently also publish their lawyers discipline list on their websites.

The board should consider developing a database for the Bar's website of the disciplines imposed against lawyers. It would be an effective medium in addition to the others used to inform the public of lawyers who have been disciplined. It would enhance public notification and client protection through increased accessibility of discipline information.

Legislative Audit's Current Position

In their response to the prior recommendation, the board agreed that having public discipline information available on its website was a desirable goal and that they would work to that end. Although some steps have been taken towards the possible implementation of our recommendation, attorney discipline information is not yet available from the Bar's website.

The board stated in the prior recommendation that the new discipline module of the replacement database, including online reporting of public discipline would be operational in the summer of 2007. However, due to changing priorities, the Bar has not started implementing the discipline module, though it is tentatively scheduled for early 2009.

Legislative Audit's position remains unchanged. We continue to believe the board should develop a database of disciplined lawyers to which access is provided the public via the Bar's website.

Recommendation No. 3

The board should adhere to existing public notice requirements for all meetings or modify the bylaws to clearly address conference call board meeting procedures and public notice requirements.

The board, as the governing body of the Bar, is vested with the power and authority to adopt regulations and policies concerning activities, affairs, and organization of the Bar, as well as collect and disburse all monies of the organization. In order to achieve these responsibilities, the board meets at least four times during the year. In addition to the four regular meetings, the president may, or upon written request of three governors, call emergency meetings. Public notice for regular and emergency meetings must be provided at least thirty and three days prior to the meeting, respectively. The proceedings for these board meetings are outlined in the Bar bylaws under Article IV specific to the board.

Since June 30, 2006, there were eight regular and five conference call board meetings. None of the conference call meetings met the public notice requirements for board meetings. There appears to be some confusion by the board as to the public notice requirements for conference call meetings.

The bylaws do not identify conference call meetings as a unique type of board meeting with unique public notice requirements; therefore the board should adhere to the public notice requirements for regular board meetings. Adequate public notice of meetings is necessary to allow for maximum public participation in public activities.

If the board believes the conference call meetings are inherently different from regular meeting then the bylaws should be modified to clearly address conference call board meetings to ensure the appropriate procedures are followed and the public receives adequate notice for such meetings.

AUDITOR'S COMMENTS

The sunset process allows for an objective and independent review of various boards and commissions to determine if the public need for protection continues to exist and if the entity is satisfying that need. The overall conclusions of our review are that the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) is operating in the public interest and that there is a continuing public need for the attorney admission and discipline functions of the Alaska Bar Association (Bar). Nevertheless, an overall evaluation of the basic approach to these functions should be undertaken from time to time. Whether the discipline function is to be controlled by government or by attorneys is a policy-level determination that should be carefully considered by the Supreme Court, the board, and the legislature. The following comments are intended to assist in such consideration.

Self-regulation, whether by industry or profession, has always been viewed skeptically by the citizenry. There is often a perception of conflict of interest in whether actions are for the benefit of the organization's membership or for the citizens' benefit. The attorney discipline system of the Bar is a self-regulatory function that may suffer from this public perception.

The board is comprised of twelve members, of which nine are attorney members elected by the Bar's membership and three public members appointed by the governor. As the majority is elected by the membership, the Bar's discipline activities will likely be perceived as self-regulation.

We believe that the attorney discipline system in Alaska could be a government function. The American Bar Association concurs and, in fact has recommended that the disciplinary function of state bars be under the direct control of the Supreme Court. The American Bar Association's Model Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement, August 1993,[1] recommended the following:

> The disciplinary system should be controlled and managed exclusively by the state's highest court and not the state or local bar association...the disciplinary process should be directed solely by the disciplinary policy of the court and its appointees and not influenced by internal politics of the bar association... the disciplinary system should be free from even the appearance of conflicts of interest or impropriety.

The following options should be considered in a move away from attorney self-regulation:

- Disciplinary investigations performed by judicial branch employees.

[1] The Model Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement, August 1993 was amended on August 5, 1996, on February 8, 1999 and on August 12, 2002. The 1993 recommendation is in the commentary under Rule 2.

- Disciplinary function placed under the Supreme Court with a Disciplinary Board appointed by the court.

There should be no general fund net cost to either of these options. They would be paid for by attorney licensing fees, the same as they currently are, and as they are for other occupations. Fees are established such that full costs are recouped.

From a citizen's perspective, there are no advantages to allowing the legal profession to self-regulate. However, there will always be the disadvantage of at least the perception of inadequate discipline. In a move away from self-regulation, the legal profession and the State's citizens would likely benefit.

ANALYSIS OF PUBLIC NEED

The following analyses of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association (board) activities relate to the public-need factors defined in AS 44.66.050(c). These analyses are not intended to be comprehensive, but to address the areas we were able to cover within the scope of our review.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or program has operated in the public interest.

The board admits applicants to practice law through an examination process that was designed in consultation with a national expert. The board also admits members by motion for reciprocity. This option is limited to attorneys in the active practice of law for five of the last seven years in states with which Alaska has a reciprocal agreement.[2]

Additionally, the Alaska Bar Association (Bar) also provides services that are more typically provided by professional associations rather than regulatory agencies. These include:

- The Bar has a committee to administer the Lawyers' Fund (fund) for Client Protection. This fund receives $10 from each active member's annual dues. The fund is used to reimburse clients for losses[3] caused by dishonest conduct[4] of a lawyer which is not covered by insurance or fidelity bond, whether of the lawyer or the client. The maximum amount payable to any individual is the lesser of $50,000 or 10% of the fund amount at the time of the award. The aggregate maximum amount that may be paid to all claimants under a fee arbitration case arising from the dishonest conduct of a particular lawyer is $200,000.

- Since 1976, the Bar has maintained a fee arbitration process allowing a client to resolve attorney fee disputes that have not been determined by statute or court rule or decision. For fee disputes of $5,000 or less, the process provides for a single arbitrator. Disputes over $5,000 are heard by a three-member panel that consists of two attorneys and one

[2] As of June 30, 2008, the Alaska Bar Association has reciprocal agreements with 33 states.

[3] Reimbursable losses are losses of money, property, or other things of value caused by the lawyer when: (1) acting in a fiduciary capacity customary to the practice of law, such as a administrator, executor, trustee, guardian or conservator; (2) acting as an escrow holder; or (3) filed within three years after the claimant knew or should have known of the dishonest conduct of the lawyer (Alaska Bar Rule 45).

[4] Alaska Bar Rule 45 defines dishonest conduct as,

> . . .wrongful acts committed by a lawyer in the manner of defalcation or embezzlement of money, or the wrongful taking or conversion of money, property or other things of value.

public member. Failure by an attorney to participate in this process may be grounds for disciplinary action.

- The Bar also offers a mediation process that attempts to resolve the differences between attorneys and their clients. This process is not used when the issues are of a very serious nature such as allegations of intentional dishonesty, material misrepresentation, or the alleged conduct could lead to suspension or disbarment. Mediation requires the approval of both parties and the Bar counsel. The agreement is considered a contract and is legally enforceable in court.

- The Bar operates a lawyer referral service funded by enrollment fees from participating members. Members of the public can call an instate toll free number and obtain the names of three attorneys who have listed themselves as practicing law in a certain field. Lawyer referral service statistics are shown in Appendix D.

- The Bar provides grants to support legal services for the economically disadvantaged. Through the Alaska Bar Foundation, the earnings from the interest on Lawyers Trust Account are used to improve the administration of justice.

- The Bar jointly sponsors the Alaska Pro Bono Program with the Alaska Legal Services Corporation in which attorneys provide free legal advice to low-income Alaskans.

- The Bar also has a Lawyer Assistance Committee that provides assistance and counseling to members of the Bar, their families, or business associates when it appears a Bar member has substance abuse problems.

Determine the extent to which the operation of the board, commission, or agency program has been impeded or enhanced by existing statutes, procedures, and practices that it has adopted, and any other matter, including budgetary, resource, and personnel matters.

The operations of the board are funded entirely by the membership through dues, admission fees, continuing legal education charges, lawyer referral fees, convention fees, and interest income. In September 2005, the board adopted an amendment to Bylaw III, Section 1(a) which states that, "the annual membership fee for an active member is the amount approved by the board." Thus, the board can set the dues amount in accordance with the operating expenses and number of Bar members.

The 2008 budgeted revenue is $1,983,738. The Bar has cumulative net assets of $3,496,544 as of the end of calendar year 2007. The net assets include approximately $1.1 million for the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection. This fund is for clients who have suffered monetary losses as a result of dishonest acts by their lawyer. These funds are designed to protect the public and cannot be used for general operating expenses.

The maintenance of substantial net assets is not consistent with the other professions regulated by the State, under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development (DCCED) – Division of Corporations, Business, and Professional Licensing. Those professional fees are required by statute to be set so the total fee collections approximately equal the actual regulatory cost of the occupation. As the Bar is not included in DCCED's organizational structure, the ability to pool resources and meet funding shortages is not available. Although the Bar's funding needs are greater, the net assets are still substantial.

In order to address the cumulative net assets, the board voted at the end of 2007 to reduce the active members' due from $550 to $410, effective in the 2008 membership year. The Bar anticipates that with the reduction in membership dues net assets will be reduced by approximately $400,000 per year.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has recommended statutory changes that are generally of benefit to the public interest.

Although the board has a Statutes, Bylaws, and Rules Committee, consisting of 12 members responsible for drafting proposed revisions of the statutes, bylaws, and rules which govern the activities of the Bar, the board has not recommended any statutory changes during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008. However, the board has been active in the process of evaluating and revising the Alaska Bar Rules, bylaws, and Rules of Professional Conduct that govern Bar policies and procedures.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has encouraged interested persons to report to it concerning the effect of its regulations and decisions on the effectiveness of service, economy of service, and availability of service that it has provided.

The Bar's membership is involved in its operations. This operation may include service on one of the ten standing committees or five Alaska Bar Rules committees. It may include participation in one of 23 sections or groups of members with similar specialization (bankruptcy, criminal law, etc).

In addition to the above committees, members of the Bar may be appointed to serve in an adjunct organization, such as the Alaska Legal Services Corporation. Also, special committees are established from time to time by the president with the advice and consent of the board.

The Bar publishes all proposed changes to the Alaska Bar Rules in its quarterly publication, the Alaska Bar Rag, which is distributed to all members of the Bar and to interested members of the public. Members are asked to submit any and all comments on proposed rule changes for review by the board.

The board advertises board meetings on the Alaska Public Online Notice system and on the Bar's website. Members of the general public are encouraged to make comments and adequate time is allotted at all meetings.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has encouraged public participation in the making of its regulations and decisions.

In addition to the three public members who serve on the board, non-attorneys serve on disciplinary hearing committees and fee arbitration panels throughout the State.

As mentioned above, the Bar publicly advertises meetings of the board. Time is allotted at all board meetings for public comments. However, some board meetings did not have adequate public notice. Further discussion on public notice of the conference call board meetings is in Recommendation No. 3.

Determine the efficiency with which public inquiries or complaints regarding the activities of the board, commission, or agency filed with it, with the department to which a board or commission is administratively assigned, or with the office of victims' rights or the office of the ombudsman have been processed and resolved.

The Bar is an instrumentality of the State, but is not administratively assigned to any department. However, the Alaska Supreme Court exercises a great degree of oversight. Two complaints specifically involving the actions and activities of the board were filed with and investigated by the Office of the Ombudsman during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008. The investigations were closed due to the Ombudsman not having jurisdiction over the activities of the Bar.

There were no complaints filed with the Office of Victim's Rights against the board from July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008.

The board has a lawyer discipline process for investigation of grievances alleging attorney misconduct. If a grievance does not result in an investigation being opened by the bar counsel, the complainant may ask for that decision to be reviewed by the board discipline liaison. Additionally the Supreme Court may review decisions made by the bar counsel or the liaison, though this is done rarely.

Sanctions are imposed on those found in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The Supreme Court reviews only the most serious disciplinary actions, such as public censure, disbarment, suspension, or probation. Other disciplinary cases are not subject to Supreme Court review. These sanctions would include written private admonition and board reprimand. This process for professional discipline was developed through a cooperative effort of the Alaska Supreme Court, the board, Bar staff, and a review team from the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Professional Discipline.

The Bar receives an average of 228 complaints annually. Analyses of the complaints filed during July 1, 2006 through June 30, 2008 shows that all were reviewed, but relatively few were pursued beyond the initial investigation. Approximately 80% of the grievances received were not accepted for investigation due to lack of merit. The Bar estimates that 10 to 15 appeals are reviewed annually by the board discipline liaison, and 1 or 2 reviews by the Supreme Court.

Over 650 grievances were filed during 2006, 2007, and 2008,[5] resulting in 143 cases being opened and the remaining grievances were not accepted. The investigations resulted in thirty-two cases[6] with sanctions against a total of twenty-one attorneys. Four attorneys were disbarred, seventeen were suspended, three were publicly and two were privately reprimanded, five received private admonition, and one was publicly censured. Discipline statistics are shown in Appendix B. Closure of grievance cases with sanctions such as disbarment, suspension, public censure, public reprimand, and admonition appear reasonable.

Board procedures provide for public notice of all attorneys who have been disbarred, suspended, put on probation, publicly censured, or reprimanded. The names of these attorneys are published in four major newspapers throughout the State, the local newspaper where the attorney practiced, the Alaska Bar Rag, and in the board's annual report. Notice of all disciplines imposed by the court, all orders granting reinstatements, and all public reprimands are transmitted to the American Bar Association's National Lawyer Regulatory Data Bank. However, as discussed in Recommendation No. 2, the board does not publish the names of lawyers who were suspended, disbarred, publicly reprimanded or censured on their website.

Determine the extent to which a board or commission that regulates entry into an occupation or profession has presented qualified applicants to serve the public.

The board admits applicants to practice law through an examination process that was designed in consultation with a national expert. Admission is contingent on the following:

- Passing the Alaska Bar Examination.
- Passing the Multi-state Professional Responsibility Examination.
- Passing character investigation to determine if the applicant is of good moral character.
- Attendance[7] of a mandatory three hour ethics presentation by the board.

[5] Complaints received for 2008 include January 1 through June 30.
[6] A single attorney may have multiple cases filed against them.
[7] This requirement may be fulfilled by watching the ethics videotape and signing an affidavit.

The board also admits members by motion for reciprocity. This option is limited to attorneys in the active practice of law for five of the last seven years in the 33 states with which Alaska has a reciprocal agreement.

Examination and admission statistics are shown in Appendix C.

Per Bar Rule 65, in order to promote competence and professionalism, the Alaska Supreme Court and the Bar encourage all members to engage in continuing legal education (CLE).

Supreme Court issued Order No. 1640, which amended Bar Rule 65, to require all active Bar members to complete three credit hours per calendar year of approved mandatory ethics continuing legal education (MECLE). In addition, all active Bar members are encouraged to engage in nine hours per calendar year of approved voluntary continuing legal education (VCLE). This order became effective January 1, 2008.

The Supreme Court Order No. 1640 also added Alaska Bar Rule 66 for the suspension of members who have not complied with completing the required MECLE or members who failed to report the MECLE and VCLE for the year.

The Bar offers CLE for its membership and maintains an educational library. The majority of live CLE programs are presented and video taped in Anchorage. For lawyers located outside of Anchorage, the Bar has regularly scheduled video replays in Juneau, Fairbanks, and Kenai. Also available are DVDs and CLE materials for purchase through the Bar's online CLE library catalog.

In 2006, the Bar partnered with the online CLE provider LegalSpan to develop online CLE seminars and live webcasting of selected programs. The Bar presented 10 live webcasts in 2007. All of the video taped live seminars are also available as online CLE through LegalSpan.

Determine the extent to which state personnel practices, including affirmative action requirements, have been complied with by the board, commission, or agency to its own activities and the area of activity or interest.

The board allows special accommodations for applicants who have been determined to have disabilities.

We did not find any evidence that the board was not complying with state personnel laws, including affirmative action in qualifying applicants for licensure. In no instance did the board deny an applicant a license based on personal attributes.

Determine the extent to which statutory, regulatory, budgeting, or other changes are necessary to enable the agency, board, or commission to better serve the interests of the public and to comply with the factors enumerated in this subsection.

Please refer to the Findings and Recommendations and Auditor's Comments sections of this report.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency has effectively attained its objectives and purposes and the efficiency with which the board, commission, or agency has operated.

Article I Section 3 of the Bar bylaws sets out the purposes of the Bar which are:

1. To cultivate and advance the science of jurisprudence.
2. To promote reform in the law and in judicial procedure.
3. To facilitate the administration of justice.
4. To encourage legal education for the membership.
5. To increase the public service and efficiency of the Bar.

To achieve these purposes, the Bar has established and maintains various committees and performs certain functions. For example, the Bar maintains a Law Related Education Committee to present programs to the community and school system to aid in the understanding of the law and legal system. The committee is divided into subcommittees in Anchorage, Fairbanks, Juneau, Kenai, Matanuska-Susitna, and other communities where the board president sees the need to appoint a subcommittee.

The board appoints three attorneys to serve staggered six-year terms on the Alaska Judicial Council (Council). The Council recommends candidates for judicial office and conducts studies for the improvement of the administration of justice in Alaska. Council members survey, investigate, and evaluate incumbent justices and judges standing for retention. The evaluation is published in the Lieutenant Governor's Official Elections Pamphlet. They are also involved in screening of applicants for the state public defenders' office.

The Bar's CLE committee, consisting of 15 members, assists the CLE director in overseeing the presentation of substantive legal education programs to educate Alaskan lawyers about developments in the field of law, and emphasize their ethical responsibilities. The Bar has conducted 68 live, 2 satellite, 15 webcasts, and 36 conventions for CLE presentations for 3,926, 4,820, and 1,976 attorney participants from calendar year 2006 through 2008,[8] respectively.

Determine the extent to which the board, commission, or agency duplicates the activities of another governmental agency or the private sector.

[8] Data is presented as of June 30, 2008.

The board does not duplicate the activities of another governmental agency. However, many of its activities are those typically performed by a professional association. As discussed earlier, some of these more typical private sector activities include such things as fee arbitration, referral services, and sponsorship of a pro bono program.

APPENDICES

Alaska Bar Association
Funds

The Alaska Bar Association (Bar) maintains three separate funds for accounting and reporting purposes. These include a General Fund, the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection, and the Court System Library Fund. The following describes these funds and their purpose.

- General Fund – This fund is the Bar's operating fund. It accounts for the financial resources and transactions not accounted for in other funds.

- Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection – In accordance with Alaska Bar Rules promulgated by the court system, this fund is maintained solely for the purpose of making reimbursements to clients who have incurred non-insured losses of money or property as a result of dishonest conduct by attorneys. Related trustee counsel compensation may be paid from this fund under certain circumstances.

- Court System Library Fund – This fund is maintained by the Bar, pursuant to a cooperative agreement with the Alaska Court System and the Anchorage Bar Association. The purpose of the fund is to account for the portion of receipts generated from copying services provided in the Anchorage Law Library that are to be used for purchasing legal research resources for the Alaska Court Libraries as designated by the State Law Librarian.

The financial information of Bar funds is from the Bar's audited financial statements for 2007.

LEGISLATIVE AUDIT

Re: Preliminary Audit Report
Board of Governors of Alaska Bar Association
Sunset Review, November 8, 2008

Dear Ms. Davidson:

Thank you for the opportunity to offer a written response to the findings and recommendations contained in the above-referenced preliminary audit report. This response represents the views of the Administrative Office of the Alaska Court System (AOC).

The AOC takes no position on the findings and recommendations directed at the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association. We agree with the conclusion that the Board protects the public by ensuring that persons licensed to practice law are qualified. We also concur in the recommendation to the legislature that the termination date of the Board be extended to June 30, 2017.

However, we take issue with the auditor's comments beginning on page 11. Those comments go beyond the scope of the audit by making conclusory observations about the merits of self-regulation by the Bar, and suggesting that attorney discipline in Alaska could be a government function. Specifically, it is suggested that the following options be considered:

- Disciplinary investigations performed by Alaska Court System employees
- Place disciplinary function under the Supreme Court with a Disciplinary Board appointed by the court

The historical record shows that attorney discipline has always been a matter of importance to the supreme court. In fact, when the supreme court first asserted control of the Bar over the Bar's strenuous objection in 1964, it did so by promulgating rules governing the discipline of attorneys, among other things. See In the Matter of an Application for an Order Vacating ALASKA SUPREME COURT ORDERS NO. 64, 68, 69, 70 and 71, and Other Relief, 395 P.2d 853 (Alaska 1964). Public confidence in the process of attorney discipline is essential.

Equally important, however, is the need to keep separate the prosecutorial and adjudicative functions inherent in attorney discipline. Under our system of government, it is imperative that those who have the duty of charging transgressors and proving their guilt do not have the final say in determining that guilt. As currently designed, the system of attorney discipline keeps a wall between those two roles. It is the Bar which has the duty to investigate and prosecute allegations of attorney misconduct, to make preliminary findings, and to recommend punishment. It is the supreme court which makes the final determination of guilt or innocence, and which makes the final determination regarding appropriate punishment.

The fundamental problem with placing the attorney discipline function within the court system is that the entity responsible for investigating and prosecuting attorney misconduct would also be the entity responsible for making the ultimate determination of guilt or innocence. As the final adjudicative body for cases decided under the Alaska Constitution, it is inappropriate for the supreme court to exercise both executive and judicial powers in disciplinary matters.

There may be other states in which the supreme court exercises both prosecutorial and adjudicative authority. However, that does not mean that it is good public policy to do so, or that doing so is consistent with the fundamental principles under which our system was intended to operate. Administrative convenience is not an adequate justification for this consolidation of government power.

If it is ever determined that the current system of attorney discipline does not work adequately and needs to be changed, a better model would be the one utilized by the Judicial Conduct Commission. This commission is part of the judicial branch of government, not the court system, and as such it is independent of the supreme court. The commission engages in investigatory and prosecutorial tasks when allegations of judicial misconduct are made, and makes recommendations to the supreme court. The supreme court exercises the judicial function, serving as the final arbiter of guilt or innocence.

It is true that a separate disciplinary entity such as this could be paid for by Bar dues and have no cost to the general fund at this time. However, the persons staffing said agency would be new state employees. The legislature has demonstrated an intent in recent years to limit the addition of permanent, full-time state employees, and absent concrete evidence that the current system does not adequately serve the public interest, it may be disinclined to create a new state bureaucracy.

Thank you for providing the opportunity to comment on this audit. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Very truly yours,

C. S. Christensen III

LEGISLATIVE AUDIT

Pat Davidson
Legislative Auditor
c/o Division of Legislative Audit

Anchorage, AK 99503

Dear Ms. Davidson:

Thank you for the thorough sunset review of the Alaska Bar Association and the opportunity to respond to your preliminary audit report.

Sunset and Fiscal Note

The Board concurs with extending the sunset date of the Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors until June 30, 2017.

There will be no fiscal note attached to any bill filed with the legislature to extend the sunset date of the Board of Governors, as the Bar Association will not be seeking any state funding for its operational costs. The Bar Association has obtained state funding only during the limited time frame between 1981 and 1986, and only for the per diem and travel expenses of the three public members who sat on the Board. For the past 22 years, the Bar Association has paid those expenses without state funding.

As noted in the audit, the operations of the Bar Association are funded entirely by Bar members through bar dues, admission fees, Continuing Legal Education seminar fees, Lawyer Referral Service charges, convention fees, and interest income. Ironically, a decision to sunset the Bar would have a multi-million dollar fiscal impact to the state.

Response to Recommendation No. 1: The Supreme Court has adopted an MCLE rule and will review the program in three years.

The Alaska Supreme Court adopted an MCLE rule in December 2007, effective January 1, 2008. Bar Association members will be required to report for the first time by February 1, 2009.

The MCLE rule requires that all active Bar members complete at least three hours of ethics CLE per year and report that they have done so. Members must also report whether they have completed nine hours of general CLE, and if they have not done so, they must report the estimated hours of general CLE that they did complete.

In their commentary to the rule, the Supreme Court stated that "To protect the public, ensure that lawyers remain mindful of their obligations to their clients, and to address the area about which the Association receives the majority of questions from and complaints about lawyers, the Supreme Court is imposing a mandatory requirement for ethics CLE on all active Bar members."

The Court also stated that "At the end of three years, the Supreme Court will again assess the project's results, including recommendations and statistics provided by the Association, and will determine whether an expanded mandatory CLE program is necessary."

At the end of the three year period, the Association will have the benefit of its experience in administering the mandatory ethics and reporting program. It will be able to determine what issues and problems have arisen and will also allow the Association time to educate Bar members about complying with the educational and reporting requirements.

The Association has hired a part-time MCLE Administrator to administer the program. In addition, the Association is offering a free ethics CLE program on November 5, 2008, in accordance with the Supreme Court's wish that the Association provide at least three hours a year of ethics CLE at no cost to members. This program will be available in a variety of formats: live, via webcast or on DVD.

Response to Recommendation No. 2. We agree that Lawyer Public Discipline History should be available on the Alaska Bar Association website.

The legislative auditor notes that the Alaska Bar Association has joined a consortium of other state and local bars aimed at replacing our database with a new member management system. This will include a module specifically for lawyer discipline data. This system will provide a means to post public discipline information on the Bar's website.

It has been the Bar's goal since the website was first launched in 1998 to post public discipline information.

Like many computer programming projects, the implementation of the new database is taking longer than originally anticipated. Issues include the need to modify and test programs that are unique to Alaska. The new MCLE requirement also took priority over the implementation of other program modules, such as discipline.

In addition, the fact that only a minority of states publish their lawyers discipline list on their websites indicates the difficulty many states have in automating this information. Timeliness and accuracy are essential to this process.

The Board agrees that having public discipline information available on our website is a desirable goal and we will continue to work to that end. We anticipate that the new discipline module, including online reporting of public discipline, will be operational in the coming 12 – 18 months.

Response to Recommendation No. 3. We agree that the Bylaws of the Alaska Bar Association should be modified to specifically include conference call meetings of the Board and to provide for reasonable public notice of those meetings.

From time to time the Board of Governors finds it necessary to call meetings between regularly scheduled Board meetings to take up specific items which should not be delayed until the next Board meeting. The Board limits its action to those items listed in the call of the meeting.

Bar staff recognizes that the conference call meetings since June 30, 2006 did not meet the 30 day public notice requirement for Board meetings. However, the need for a conference call meeting of the Board is often realized only a week or two in advance, and therefore, it could not meet the 30 day notice requirement.

The staff will draft a proposed amendment to the Bylaws, to be taken up by the Board of Governors, to provide that the President may call a conference call meeting of the Board as appropriate to conduct business as necessary between regularly scheduled Board meetings. This will recognize conference calls as a unique type of Board meeting, and, in accordance with AS 44.62.310(e), the proposed Bylaw will state that "reasonable public notice" will be given.

The Bylaws will also be amended to clarify that Board of Governors meetings, as well as Association meetings, are governed according to Roberts Rules of Order, Newly Revised. The Board has operated under these rules, but this will be clearly stated in the Bylaws.

Matters "not accepted" for investigation.

Page 17 states that 80% of the grievances received were not accepted for investigation due to lack of merit. While formal investigations were not conducted, these matters were thoroughly reviewed by discipline section staff counsel with expertise in attorney grievance matters and both complainants and respondent attorneys were informed in writing of the reasons that the matters were not accepted for investigation.

Concluding Comments: Lawyer self-regulation has been effective and efficient in Alaska.

The overall conclusion of the audit is that the Board effectively serves the public interest through its lawyer admission and discipline process. We also believe that lawyer self-regulation is working very effectively and efficiently in Alaska. To its credit, the Alaska Bar Association has one of the most aggressive and effective discipline systems in the country.

In 2006, the Bar Association conducted an e-mail and phone survey of the members of the National Organization of Bar Counsel whose members staff disciplinary jurisdictions nationwide. Of the 48 states the Bar was able to contact, 26 indicated that they were not state government agencies.

As reported in our December 16, 2005 response, 13[1] jurisdictions, in addition to Alaska, indicated that they were not state government agencies under their supreme courts; 13[2] generally indicated that they were considered creations of their supreme courts, but either not considered state government agencies or state employees; and, 22[3] indicated that they were state government agencies under their supreme courts.

[1] Alabama, Arizona, Hawaii, Idaho, Kentucky, Montana, Nevada, North Carolina, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

[2] Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Based on this survey, Alaska is not unique in its approach to attorney discipline. Indeed, because the Bar Association performs these vital functions under the supervision of the Alaska Supreme Court, its system is similar to those in place in a significant number of other state jurisdictions.

We believe that there would be significant additional costs to both the court and the Bar Association if the attorney discipline system in Alaska was carried out by a government agency. Currently, the Bar Association has one bar counsel, two assistant bar counsel, one paralegal, two legal secretaries, and two other employees of the Bar who provide support to the discipline system in addition to their other Bar duties.

Currently these employees have the benefit of shared costs of office space, conference room, computer system, telephone system, copy machines, etc. with the rest of the Bar staff. In addition, the Bar's system administrator provides computer support to all Bar employees. If the discipline employees were split off from the Bar Association, they would lose the benefit of this shared functionality and they would have to purchase and maintain separate space and equipment.

Currently discipline hearings are heard by a members of a volunteer committee made up of attorneys and public members. If discipline were split off from the Bar Association, the state would need to staff this function with state hearing officers.

Currently bar counsel supervises the assistant bar counsel and discipline staff, as well as handling such other discipline matters as reinstatement, etc. He also handles approximately 800 calls a year giving informal ethics advice to members of the Bar. If a new state agency had less than three lawyers on staff, this valuable service would not be feasible and the current caseload would likely see a dramatic increase in processing time. The discipline section would also lose the assistance of the two staff persons who provide other support to the discipline section.

Meanwhile, the Board of Governors would still need to have its own staff counsel, so the Bar Association would still have the expense of a lawyer and legal secretary on its staff.

There would also be additional expense if there was a Disciplinary Board separate from the Board of Governors. Currently, the Board of Governors acts as the Disciplinary Board at its regularly scheduled board meetings. The budget for the Board travel is included in the Board of Governors budget, and is not included as part of the discipline budget, so Discipline Board meetings would be a new expense.

The cost to Bar members to support additional staff, separate offices and equipment and separate Boards would mean a significant increase in bar dues, the addition of a separate disciplinary assessment, or that these expenses come out of the state general fund.

We believe that the subjective benefit of splitting out the discipline function from the Bar is outweighed by the practical and economic realities.

It is also our belief that the present management system of the Bar provides a blend of private and governmental functions, insuring both accountability and good management. For example, the Bar is an instrumentality of the state and subject to legislative audits. Its meetings are open to the public. Members of the public sit on discipline hearings and fee arbitration panels as well as on the Board of Governors. Its rule making and discipline functions are overseen by the Supreme Court, which assures a sound investigative and judicial process of discipline. Finally, the statewide lawyer membership on the Board also ensures that the Bar Association is both responsive to the needs of its members, and qualified to address such issues as admission standards and peer review.

Reserves of the Alaska Bar

The Board has a policy to hold a working capital reserve in an amount equal to four month's expenses ($212,500/month or $850,000.) However it is not unusual for a non-profit association to hold a reserve in an amount equal to six to nine months of expenses. (Ranging from $1,275,000 - $1,912,000.)

Unlike state agencies, the Bar cannot request supplemental appropriations from the Legislature or pool resources if an unexpected event occurs which would incur significant financial expense. The Board also needs to be able to "save" for the financial viability of planned projects or events. For example, the Bar is in the process of replacing its entire database, a multi-year project that will cost nearly $200,000.

Between 1981 and 2005, Bar dues had only been raised twice: from $310 to $450 in 1994; and, from $450 to $550 in 2005.

At the October 2007 meeting, the Board of Governors approved the first bar dues reduction in the history of the Alaska Bar Association. To make the reduction, the Board voted to change a twenty-five year old budget policy that increased the unappropriated capital to offset future year deficits, deferring an increase in bar dues. Now the Board will budget on a "pay as you go" basis. This resulted in an approved draw down of the then $1.2 million unappropriated capital by approximately $400,000 for 2008. Active members of the bar saw their 2008 dues decrease to $410. 2008 inactive member dues were $135.

The Board reviewed the 2009 budget at the October 2008 meeting and voted to set 2009 active member bar dues at $450 (plus $10 for the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection) and inactve dues at $150. This will result in an estimated loss in 2009 of $340,697, leaving a projected estimate of unappropriated capital of $670,536 at the end of 2009.

Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection

Every year, Bar members each pays ten dollars to the Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection. This is a trust fund which serves as a safety net primarily for clients who have suffered monetary losses as a result of dishonest acts by their lawyers. This Fund currently has $1,122,144. These funds are designed to protect the public and cannot be used for general operating expenses.

To date in 2008, $28,100 in claims was awarded to clients of attorneys who were found to be dishonest in their dealings with the clients. $127,235 was awarded in 2007 and $31,972 was awarded in 2006.

As an instrumentality that predates the ratification of the Alaska Constitution, the Alaska Bar maintains these funds under Article IX, Sec.

7 of the Alaska Constitution. It is unclear whether the Bar could continue to do so if portions of its powers were split to a state agency.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to comment on the audit report. We trust that our response has been helpful, and that it demonstrates the Board's continuing commitment to improving the legal profession and service to the public.

Sincerely,
Alaska Bar Association

Alaska Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 Alaska Bar Association Sunset June 30, 2009 recommends Alaska Bar Association extension. The Audit is online at http://www.legaudit.state.ak.us/pages/digests/2008/20057dig.htm

ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION SHOULD BE SUNSET JUNE 30, 2009 during Alaska 50th Anniversary of Statehood year for the foreseeable future while Alaska Legislature has time to analyze the two essential functions of admissions and discipline. Alaska has unique circumstances as the only state without a law school or any elected attorney. Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 is a "white wash." Sunset should be reevaluated by 26th Alaska Legislature 2nd Session. Please review the "Summary" of the Audit "four objectives of our report" including the termination date extension of Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association (Board), whether the Board is operating in the public interest, to determine if the Board has exercised appropriate oversight of licensed attorneys, and to provide current status on the recommendations made in the prior report. Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association demonstrate none of these objectives at the present time. Ms. Patricia Davidson, Alaska Legislative Auditor, is unable to write the essence of the lack of accountability of Alaska Bar Association as she is a public employee without legal recourse. Alaska Bar Association Audit is the most important of all the State of Alaska Audits done because if any other Alaska professional has a problem with licensure in his/her profession, the applicant must hire a licensed Alaska attorney in order to appeal. Only Alaska Legislature can create accountability of Alaska Bar Association. Major issues follow:

1. American and Alaskan Jurisprudence

Please specifically review Page 19 of Alaska Bar Association Audit #41-20057-08. Article I Section 3 of the Alaska Bar Association Bylaws sets out the purposes of the Alaska Bar which are:

"1. To cultivate and advance the SCIENCE OF JURISPRUDENCE." (Emphasis added.) "Jurisprudence is the philosophy of the law or science . . . which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based . . . (in order to) produce the greatest advantage to the community" according to Black's Law Dictionary. Please see "In Re Obermeyer II

8/23/00" and In the Matter of the Application of Thomas S. Obermeyer 717 Pacific Reporter 2d 382, 57 American Law Reports 4th 1195 (Alaska 4/18/86), both of which can be found at http://www.state.ak.us/courts "Appellate Courts" "Alaska Case Law Precedent since 1960," Thomson-West page, "By Party Name" "Obermeyer." THESE CASES ARE AMERICAN AND ALASKAN JURISPRUDENCE.

2. Alaska Bar Association Admission by Reciprocity Gives More Rights to Out of State Attorneys than Alaska Attorneys

The current Alaska Bar Rules of Alaska Bar Association give an Alaska law license to any applicant by reciprocity if he/she has been licensed by written Bar Exam in the 33 of 50 reciprocal states, pays $1,500, and gets three letters from clients in the preceding state that the applicant has practiced law there for 5 out of the last 7 years. Alaska Active Out of State attorneys number over 18% of the Total Alaska attorneys or 530 out of 2,938 per Todd Communications Alaska Directory of Attorneys Fall, 2008 Page 2. July, 2006-June, 2008 per the "Audit" Page 31, 45% of Alaska Bar Association admission has been by reciprocity – most of whom have never set foot on Alaska soil judging by their current addresses. Why do these out of state applicants want reciprocity here? Obviously, these attorneys are making money off Alaska. Another almost 30% of Alaska In State Active Attorneys work for the Government per Directory Spring, 2008 Page 64.

Alaska Bar Exam, "a test of minimal competency," has an average 63% passage rate July, 2006-June, 2008 per Page 31 of the Audit. Alaska has as high requirements as any state in the U.S. for sitting for this Alaska Bar Exam but presumably has the lowest passage rate of the 50 states of Bar Association applicants, all of whom went to American Bar Association accredited law schools.

If 45% of Alaska Bar admissions currently are by reciprocity to those who overwhelmingly are not Alaska residents, what will the number be if Alaska Legislature goes along with the Audit recommendation and continues Alaska Bar Association without review until June 30, 2017 or eight long years?

3. Current licensure by exam or reciprocity does not assure competence, ethical behavior, protection, or service to the public. Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association (Board) offers no alternatives.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has allowed a Massachusetts Bar applicant who graduated from an on-line law school owned by testing-prep company, Kaplan, Inc., to sit for Massachusetts Bar Exam. See Ross E. Mitchell vs. Board of Bar Examiners, SJC-10157, September 3, 2008 – November 20, 2008. The applicant was allowed to take and pass the California Bar Exam, a state which allows applicants to sit for this Exam from unaccredited law schools. What does this tell the Alaska public about bar exams? About competency to practice? About ethics? About dealing with clients, peers, and the courts in a timely and courteous way? If the practice of law boils down to one exam, one score on one sheet of paper, does it truly protect the public and inspire confidence, when a legal education was acquired at whatever rate of speed on-line? Mr. Mitchell has made both Alaska's licensure practices and American Bar Association accredited law schools' three years of Socratic Method teaching archaic. At Alaska Statehood 1959 and after, some attorneys and judges obtained Alaska law licenses by clerking for the court without having gone to law school at all. The on-line law degree points out that there are alternatives to practice that Alaska Bar Association is unwilling to visit.

Unlike all the other 49 states, Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors offers no alternative methods of admission like a possible clerkship at a law firm or for a judge, even after the Alaska Bar applicant has faithfully obtained American Bar Association 3 year law school education. Furthermore, the Alaska Bar Rule 2.2(b)(3) disallows admission by reciprocity if applicants have failed Alaska Bar Exam in the last five years even if licensed by written Bar Exam in a reciprocal state. This harms Alaska residents who live and work in Alaska and only highlights the unfairness of reciprocity applicants from 33 states who have never sat for the Alaska Bar Exam simply paying $1,500 to be licensed here. On point is Ms. Marla Greenstein, who as Executive Director, Alaska Commission of Judicial Conduct since 1982, was admitted by reciprocity in 1997 without having ever taken the Alaska Bar Exam. There are others including Ms. Angela O'Brien, licensed by reciprocity on September 30, 2008, who live in Alaska but have not taken Alaska Bar Exam. Alaskans currently would be fools to take Alaska Bar Exam with our low passage rate by going through our established Alaska Bar Association channels. The shrewd approach is to circumvent Alaska Bar Exam and become licensed in Alaska by reciprocity which is easier. Ms. Greenstein, Ms. O'Brien, and the others only had to have been licensed by written Bar Exam in a state that has reciprocity with Alaska and presumably proved in some perfunctory way that they had practiced five of seven years in their state of previous admission.

By contrast, Thomas S. Obermeyer, Alaska resident for 30 years and Attorney, licensed since 1990 by similar Missouri Bar Exam, a state that presumably has reciprocity with Alaska, has dedicated himself in good faith having paid for, studied for, and taken Alaska Bar Exam 34 times most recently "failed" on October 30, 2008 over an almost 25 year period in an effort to create fair Alaska law licensure. Tom has only chosen to go through the established process to obtain his Alaska law license and begin with his legal career. The lack of assistance given to Tom Obermeyer over such a long period of time shows how outrageously unfairly one Alaska Bar applicant could have been treated while seemingly everyone else is given favorable treatment.

4. Fairness to Alaska Bar Applicants for Admission

Please review attached "Draft Bill Authorizing Admission of Reciprocal Applicants to Alaska Bar Association" which can be downloaded at http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/26thAKLeg1stSess2009.pdf and the precedent, "Laws of Alaska 1966 HB 520 Chapter 144 An Act-Authorizing the Department of Labor to enter into reciprocal agreements with other states regarding wage claims; and providing for an effective date," that can be downloaded at http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/LawsofAK.pdf. The current practice of Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association penalizes local licensed attorneys who are admitted by Bar Exam in the 33 reciprocal states. "DRAFT Bill Authorizing Admission of Reciprocal Applicants to Alaska Bar Association" would change this practice that currently gives more rights to attorneys who have never landed on Alaska soil. Do Alaskans want those from other states to have more rights than we have? Does the "DRAFT Bill" protect the Alaska public?

5. The current Financial Position, Revenue, and Expense statements of Alaska Bar Association are jumbled and combined to confuse and hide actual expenses in the "ivory tower" Atwood Building #1900 in Anchorage.

The Audit fails to delineate details of operating expenses and personnel assigned to each activity, and it fails to list salaries of Executive Director, Bar Counsel, other attorneys and staff. RESULT: THE QUASI-GOVERNMENTAL ALASKA BAR ASSOCIATION HAS NO GOVERNMENTAL SUPERVISION. Auditor Patricia Davidson did not so much as discuss the details of Alaska Bar Association Operating Budget information in her Appendices. The salaries and travel of the Alaska staff attorneys of Alaska Bar Association especially Ms. Deborah O'Regan and Mr. Stephen Van Goor, who have been employed at Alaska Bar Association since 1980 and whose salaries the Obermeyers have been paying since 1984, are not included. By contrast, when bills authorizing governmental activity are introduced in Alaska Legislature, attached are fiscal notes with personnel costs.

The Alaska Supreme Court should take over the Alaska Bar Association as a governmental body for the foreseeable future.

Admissions

If Alaska Supreme Court administers both exams and admission by reciprocity, there would be better communication between Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors and the Court, fewer admissions by reciprocity, more fairness and alternative options for admissions, better treatment of Alaska applicants, and more public trust. This would be an interim solution that should be tried for a year at a time with analysis by Alaska Legislature to see if it is working.

Alaska State Court justices/judges should be more fully scrutinized as well. I will update http://www.tobermeyer.info/asj.html which shows Alaska justices/judges got 50% salary increases per CSSB237 in 2006. Another increase was implemented by 25th Alaska Legislative 2nd Session SCS CSHB 417(FIN) Section 20 (a) (b) and (c). Research should be undertaken to analyze how many State of Alaska justice/judges are appropriate based on Alaska population and Alaska Bar Association membership. At the moment, becoming Alaska State Court justice/judge is much more coveted than actively practicing law as an Alaska attorney advocate. There is "Alaska Judicial Retirement System" through Alaska Retirement Management Board under Alaska Department of Revenue. Is there Alaska Judicial Retirement System Board? There should be more analysis of our Alaska State Court justices/judges by Alaska Legislature.

Discipline

Ms. Davidson indicates that discipline should be controlled by Alaska Supreme Court. Suspensions and disbarments are already submitted to the Supreme Court, but complete supervision of discipline should be imposed by the court. In many states there is a separate Office of the Disciplinary Counsel with a separate Board.

In the Alaska Bar Audit there is no discussion of "Citizen Complaints" against Alaska attorneys to Alaska Bar Association. The reader is expected to believe that there are no Alaska citizen initiated complaints at all to Alaska Bar Association. I have direct experience in this area per http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/VanGoor41505.pdf about the lack of any discipline whatsoever at Alaska Bar Association regarding the 30 lengthy complaints that I filed at Alaska Bar Association 1993-2003. I would be pleased to produce the three boxes of comprehensive timely stamped filings with lengthy transcripts of my 30 complaints against licensed Alaska attorneys which resulted in my worse treatment by more Alaska attorneys. In other words, I am positive today that every complaint I filed was used against me.

Regarding Alaska Attorney "Discipline Function" per Page 3 of the Audit, I am aware that very high profile Alaska attorneys who have been convicted in courts of law of criminal offenses after pleading "No Contest" have not been disciplined by Alaska Bar Association including Mr. Robert C. Ely and Mr. Mitchell Gravo. Former Alaska Attorney General Gregg Renkes resigned February 5, 2005 over a highly publicized conflict of interest but was never disciplined. He is a licensed Alaska Active Out of State attorney today. I have observed Board of Governors "throwing the book" at a handful of unknown Alaska attorneys in private practice whose ethical lapses are grave but these attorneys do not have criminal convictions from a court of law. I have not observed any semblance of consistency in "Attorney Discipline" for sanctions for similar offenses. All are approved by Alaska Supreme Court which is ultimately responsible for equitable fairness and justice in the practice of law.

The current discipline procedures of Alaska Bar Association are probably a primary reason why Alaska has the highest number of government attorneys in the U.S. in addition to the fact the Alaska attorney government employment is exceedingly lucrative offering excellent benefits and outstanding retirement packages. Alaska Legislature should get the salaries and benefits packages for the 576 or more State of Alaska attorneys out of a total 705 including State of Alaska, Municipal, and U.S. Government attorneys. State of Alaska attorneys are 82% of the total of all Alaska In State Government attorneys. In Spring, 2008 30% of the total of 2,395 Alaska In State attorneys were employed by the Government according to Todd Communications Alaska Directory of Attorneys. Fall, 2008 stopped publishing the number which probably exceeds 30% at this time.

Continuing Legal Education

So far, voluntary CLE in Alaska has been a farce. Regarding "Findings and Recommendations" of Audit #41-20057-08, no specific recommendation was made about how many hours of Mandatory Continuing Legal Education (MCLE) should be required for practicing Alaska attorneys. Ms. Davidson wrote on Page 7 of the "Audit" that 41 of the 50 states have MCLE. To date, 3 clock hours of Mandatory Ethics Continuing Legal Education (MECLE) began on January 1, 2008 and "has teeth" in that there are sanctions for non-compliance to be imposed after January 1, 2009 per Alaska Supreme Court Order No. 1640. Alaska Legislature should ask for a full report on how the newly concluded December 31, 2008 MECLE went. To my knowledge, all other professions in Alaska have much longer and expensive mandatory requirements for continuing licensure. Alaska Bar Association should do so as well. At least twelve hours of mandatory MCLE would improve the profession greatly in Alaska. It would also assure collegiality among lawyers and impose a sense of purpose and ethical public service. Ethics training is important but most attorneys know right from wrong long before they deviate from the norm.

I follow actively Alaska Bar Association activities and this Audit is the first I have known that a "Bar CLE Committee consisting of 15 members assists CLE director" Page 19 exists. What I know is that Ms. Barbara Armstrong, CLE Director since about 1980, was President, American Continuing Legal Education Association, about 10 years ago when Alaska Bar did not require Continuing Legal Education and many years prior to January 1, 2008 MECLE three clock hours implementation.

There is a Law Related Education (LRE) Committee of Alaska Bar Association which to my knowledge only gives money to K-12 education. I applied for three grants including "Keep the Kids in School Initiative Anchorage School District," "Alaska Permanent Fund Board Confirmation Committee," and "Fair Alaska Law Licensure" on January 10, 2007 to Ms. Barbara Hood, Alaska Teaching Justice Network. All were rejected by Ms. Barbara A. Jones, Chair, LRE Committee on January 31, 2007. In 2008 I was unable to find out when the LRE grant applications were due. I intend to apply again by January 16, 2009 but will be applying to Ms. Deborah O'Regan, Executive Director, instead of the Chair, LRE Committee. Ms. O'Regan is in control of the entire process.

Ethics Reform was presumably implemented in 25th Alaska Legislature 1st Session. There can be no Ethics Reform unless Alaska Bar Association is improved. I filed Complaint AGO File No. 661-08-0157 in September, 2007 which was a paper copy of Alaska Permanent Fund Board Confirmation Committee per http://www.apfboardconfirmation.org to Ms. Julia Bockmon, State of Alaska Attorney General's Office, requesting an investigation. Instead, I got a letter dated November 30, 2007 from Ms. Bockman copying Mr. Michael J. Burns, Attorney who has never attempted to be licensed to practice law in Alaska, former Chair, University of Alaska Board of Regents, and current Executive Director, Alaska Permanent Fund, stating "Further statements regarding the existence of your complaint or our investigation may result in penalties for violation of the Executive Branch Ethics Act." In other words, I was threatened with economic sanctions for filing the complaint.

Conclusion

Alaska Bar Association offices and personnel should become a State of Alaska governmental agency under direct supervision of Alaska Supreme Court with annual governmental budgets subject to Alaska Legislative scrutiny for the immediate future. This decision should be subject to review yearly.

Alaska Legislative Audit #41-20057-08 does little to dig into the details of the operation of the Alaska Bar Association. The Audit does not recognize that Alaska Bar Association fails in several of its intended purposes as stated on Page 19 because Alaska Bar has the benefit of governmental protection without direct daily governmental oversight. Alaska Bar does not advance jurisprudence and justice; increase public service and efficiency of the bar; promote reform in the law and procedure; or mandate substantive legal education. The Audit proposes more public notice and participation of public in teleconference meetings but the public is afraid of Alaska Bar so public notice and participation of the public in teleconferences will have no effect. Nothing could serve the public more than to make Alaska Bar functions a matter of total government control. Are the employees of the Alaska Bar Association staff, Bar Counsel, Executive Director, etc., the beneficiaries of State retirement and medical benefits? This should have been explained fully in the Audit but is not addressed.

Public participation currently is discouraged at all levels. When my husband, Thomas Obermeyer, Missouri Attorney since 1990, appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee in May, 2007 regarding sunset of the Alaska Bar Association, he was the only person to appear. Bar Counsel Stephen Van Goor was on line by teleconference. When Tom asked for time to contradict Mr. Van Goor's statements, Hollis French, still current Alaska State Senate Judiciary Chair, cut him off. The minutes of the meeting were never transcribed. Would anyone be more articulate than Tom Obermeyer who had in 2007 weathered 23 years and 30 Alaska Bar Exam "failures?" This was the same Hollis French who as a State of Alaska Prosecutor charged and prosecuted me in State of Alaska/Hilton Anchorage vs. Theresa Nangle Obermeyer 3AN-S98-2211 CR for over nine months until I was acquitted in a seven day jury trial on November 10, 1998. How much did that cost?

In my case, I have been defamed endlessly by Alaska corrupt media which is about 95% owned in many Lower 48 states because I continue to believe that I have a right to attend a public meeting. I was jailed over night in a set-up orchestrated by Ms. O'Regan and Mr. Van Goor when Board of Governors was at court on January 15, 1999. If a person dares to go to an advertised "public meeting," he/she is made to look foolish and is targeted. I have lived this fact for many years. Governor Sarah Palin nominated me December 2, 2008 http://www.tobermeyer.info/pdfs/fbresponse.pdf for a position as a "Public Member" Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association. I hope that I will be appointed.

Alaska Bar Association has the best of both worlds – private and quasi-governmental. Currently, Alaska Supreme Court "rubber stamps" admissions and discipline actions and no Alaska State Agency oversees the Board's operations. This has to change. Alaska Bar dues are among the highest in the nation because Alaska attorneys do not want any competition. The Board allows the employees to lavish themselves with high salaries, travel, and plush offices as long as competition is limited. Alaska Active Out of State attorneys are very weak and totally depend on the handful of local Alaska attorneys who control everything that goes on in Alaska. Substantive truth and real numbers never surface.

This document is meant to create much more discussion about Alaska Bench and Bar. Alaska Legislature must send a strong message to Alaska Bar Association that "the light of day" will shine on its totally unaccountable practices that hurt all Alaskans.

Subject: HB 88 Senate Judiciary Committee April 19, 2009

Dear Senator French:

Alaska State Senate Judiciary Committee will take up HB 88 tomorrow at 10:00 A.M. I cannot recommend continuation of Alaska Bar Association after what I have watched for 25 years. I have reread the State House Committee Minutes of February 4, 2009 per http://www.legis.state.ak.us/basis/get_single_minute.asp?ch=H&beg_line=00207&end_line=00418&session=26&comm=JUD&date=20090204&time=1318 and regret that I was not privy to this meeting being held so I was not able to comment. I was pleased that Mr. Mitchell Seaver, current President, Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association, was present and hope he will be available tomorrow morning as well.

Ms. Jane Pierson, staff for Representative Ramras, told the House Judiciary Committee on February 4, 2009 according the minutes that "Alaska Bar Association has a one-year wind down period and so could continue to operate until 2010 should HB 88 not be enacted. "

Mr. Stephen Van Goor, Bar Counsel, according to the minutes of the February 4, 2009 House Judiciary Committee Meeting stated that Alaska Bar Exam is: "designed to illustrate minimal competence to practice law, knowledge of Alaska law, an ability to spot issues, and an ability to thgoroughly explain a legal problem in a manner expected of a lawyer." I hope that Mr. Van Goor will take this to heart when the next Alaska Bar Exam results come out on May 4, 2009 in Juneau before Alaska Bar Association Convention. On what basis can he possibly believe that he and his colleagues have had a right to deny Thomas S. Obermeyer, Attorney, licensed since 1990 by similar Missouri Bar Exam, a state that has reciprocity with Alaska, the right to practice law in Alaska for 25 years? Tom has paid for, studied for, and taken Alaska Bar Exam 35 times for 105 days of his life since February, 1984.

Also, Tom has the type of active Missouri law license that requires that he take 15 hours of Continuing Legal Education (CLE) yearly. Please compare Tom to Mr. Michael J. Burns, Executive Director, Alaska Permanent Fund, who is also licensed to practice law in Missouri but has a type of Missouri law license that does not require that he take CLE. Mr. Burns has never attempted to be licensed to practice law in Alaska; something that Tom Obermeyer has dedicated himself to for 25 years.

A few ideas State Senate Judiciary Committee to consider follow:

1. A one year probationary period;
2. An audit received at the beginning of 26th Alaska Legislature 2nd Session documenting:
   A. How many Alaska Bar Association applicants have been admitted by reciprocity and how many by Alaska Bar Exam in the last two years;
   B. The basis upon which Alaska Bar Association Board of Governors does not accept the admission of local attorneys who are licensed in reciprocal states by written bar exam:
   C. Information about how many local attorneys licensed in reciprocal states have attempted to be admitted to Alaska Bar Association in the last two years including completing the documentation required except for payment of $1,500 if Alaska Bar Association is not going to admit the local applicants licensed in reciprocal states:
   D. The results of the 3 clock hours of "Ethics" requirement of Mandatory Continuing Legal Education (MCLE):
   E. The response to the suggestion that a minimum of 12 hours of MCLE be enacted by Board of Governors Alaska Bar Association immediately.

I will call right before 10:00 A.M. tomorrow in the hope that I can address the Committee.

Sincerely yours,

Sponsor Statement
HB 98

"An Act relating to minor consuming and repeat minor consuming; and providing for an effective date."

HB 98 fixes a problem that occurred with the enactment of HB 359, a bill that passed the House unanimously in the 25th Legislative Session. HB 359 originated due to the desire of Alaskan youths to join the military and not being able to so due to probation restrictions from a minor consuming charge that may have occurred up to 5 years previously. Unfortunately, when the bill was drafted, it left a loop-hole in the repeat minor consuming law.

HB 98 fixes this loop-hole by referencing both suspended impositions of sentence under AS 04.16.050(b)(1) and a judgment of conviction under AS 04.16.050(b)(2).

This new language will now cover all repeat offenders, no matter how their previous minor consuming charges were adjudicated.

An amendment was added in the House Finance HB98 to also fix an issue as it relates to bootlegging. The new language will bring bootlegging penalties in line with felony DUI penalties.

HB98 – Explanation of Changes

A change from version A to version R, was made at the request of the Department of Law Section 3 of the bill was added. Section 3 corrects AS 04.16.200(h), which deals with penalties for possession for sales or importation of liquor into areas that have chosen to establish local option laws. This amendment brings bootlegging penalties into compliance with felony DUI penalties.

A change was made on the House Floor to version R that resulted in version R.A. This amendment made it clear that Minor Consuming and Repeat Minor Consuming are not misdemeanor crimes.

Dear Representative Ramras:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing HB 98, an act relating to minor consuming and repeat minor consuming; and providing for an effective date.

The APOA State Board's Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

We thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sec. 04.16.050. Possession, control, or consumption by persons under the age of 21.

(a) A person under the age of 21 years may not knowingly consume, possess, or control alcoholic beverages except those furnished persons under AS 04.16.051 (b).

(b) A person who violates (a) of this section and who has not been previously convicted or received a suspended imposition of sentence under (1) of this subsection is guilty of minor consuming or in possession or control. Upon conviction in the district court, the court

(1) may grant a suspended imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085 and place the person on probation for up to one year if the person has not been convicted of a violation of this section previously; among the conditions of probation, the court shall, with the consent of a community diversion panel, refer the person to the panel, and require the person to comply with conditions set by the panel, including counseling, education, treatment, community work, and payment of fees; in this paragraph, "community diversion panel" means a youth court or other group selected by the court to serve as a sentencing option for a person convicted under this section; or

(2) shall impose a fine of at least $200 but not more than $600, shall require the person to attend alcohol information school if the school is available, and shall place the person on probation for up to one year under (e) of this section; the court may suspend a portion of the fine imposed under this paragraph that exceeds $200 if the person is required to pay for education or treatment required under (e) of this section.

(c) A person is guilty of repeat minor consuming or in possession or control if the person was placed on probation under (b)(1) of this section or has been previously convicted once, and the person violates (a) of this section. Upon conviction in the district court, the court shall

(1) impose a fine of $1,000 and require at least 48 hours of community work;

(2) revoke the person's driver's license for three months;

(3) take possession of the person's driver's license; and

(4) suspend up to $500 of the fine and place the person on probation for up to one year under (e) of this section.

(d) A person is guilty of habitual minor consuming or in possession or control if the person was placed on probation under (c) of this section, or has been previously convicted twice, and the person violates (a) of this section. Habitual minor consuming or in possession or control is a class B misdemeanor. Upon conviction, the court may impose an appropriate period of imprisonment and fine and place the person on probation under (e) of this section for one year, or until the person is 21 years of age, whichever is later, and shall

(1) impose at least 96 hours of community work;

(2) revoke the person's driver's license for six months;

(3) within five working days, notify the agency responsible for the administration of motor vehicle laws of the revocation; and

(4) take possession of the person's driver's license.

(e) The court shall place a person sentenced under (b)(2), (c), or (d) of this section on probation for the appropriate period. The person may not refuse probation. The court may require the person to pay for and enroll in a juvenile alcohol safety action program, if one is available. The court shall impose the following conditions of probation:

(1) the person shall pay for and successfully complete any education or treatment recommended;

(2) the person may not consume inhalants or possess or consume controlled substances or alcoholic beverages, except as provided in AS 04.16.051(b);

(3) the person shall timely complete any community work ordered, as provided in (f) of this section; and

(4) other conditions the court considers appropriate.

(f) A person ordered to perform community work under this section shall perform the work within 120 days of the entry of judgment for a conviction. The court may expand the time period for up to 30 days upon a showing of good cause. The person shall submit verification of completion of community work to the clerk of court on a form provided by the court. If the verification is not provided within the time period required by this subsection, the court shall, within 30 days, schedule further proceedings in the case to determine whether a violation of probation has occurred.

(g) The treatment recommended by a juvenile alcohol safety action program for a person placed on probation under (e) of this section may include a period of inpatient treatment if the judgment specifies the maximum period of inpatient treatment authorized. A person who has been recommended for inpatient treatment may make a written request to the sentencing court for review of the referral. A person shall make a request for review within seven days after the recommendation and shall specifically set out the grounds upon which the request for review is based. The court may order a hearing on the request for review.

(h) The juvenile alcohol safety action program to which a person is referred under this section shall inform the court or a minor's juvenile probation officer if the person fails to submit to evaluation or fails to complete successfully any education or treatment recommended. If the court finds that the person has failed to perform community work as ordered, to submit to evaluation, or to complete successfully the education or treatment recommended, the court may impose the suspended fine, and may impose any period of suspended incarceration. If the person was convicted under (c) or (d) of this section, the court shall revoke the person's driver's license for an additional six months beyond the revocation imposed under (c) or (d) of this section. A court revoking a person's driver's license under this subsection shall notify the agency responsible for the administration of motor vehicle laws of the revocation within five working days.

(i) When considering the financial resources of a minor for purposes of determining eligibility for court-appointed counsel under this section, the court shall consider the resources of both the defendant and the defendant's parent or guardian, unless the court finds good cause to treat the defendant's or the defendant's parent's or guardian's resources as being unavailable to the defendant.

(j) A driver's license revocation under this section is consecutive to a revocation imposed under another provision of law, but is concurrent with a revocation under another provision of law based on a prior conviction, adjudication of delinquency, or informal adjustment under AS 47.12.060 .

Each violation is a separate offense.

(b) A suspension or revocation of a license ordered by the board under AS 04.11.370 (a)(4) and (5) shall be as follows:

(1) on first conviction the license of the premises involved may not be revoked, but may be suspended for not more than 45 days;

(2) on second conviction the license of the premises involved may not be revoked, but may be suspended for not more than 90 days;

(3) on third conviction the license of the premises involved may be suspended or revoked.

(c) In this section, the terms "second conviction" and "third conviction" include only convictions for violations that occur within five years of the first conviction. The terms refer to the cumulative number of convictions of a licensee of any combination of violations of the provisions of this title, regulations adopted under this title, or ordinances adopted under AS 04.21.010 . The terms "second conviction" and "third conviction" include a conviction of the agent or employee of a licensee of a violation of a law, regulation, or ordinance if the conviction constitutes a ground for suspension or revocation under AS 04.11.370(a)(5).

(d) This section does not affect the authority of the board to suspend or revoke a license when the board determines that continuance of activities under a license would not be in the best interests of the public.

This memorandum accompanies the draft Senate CS requested. The new CS requires a title change. Because the bill is in the second house, a concurrent resolution to waive the uniform rule provisions against adding material to a bill in the second house necessitating a bill title change will be required if the CS is adopted.

SCS HB 101(JUD) Exempting a Portion of Value of Life Insurance and Annuity Contracts from Levy to Satisfy Unsecured Debt
SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB 101 as originally written placed unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts under AS 09.38.015, "Property Exempt without limitation", repealing the $10,000 exemption for unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts from AS 09.38.025.

The Senate Committee Substitute for HB 101 being offered removes unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts from exempts without limitation and places a $500,000 exemption on unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts for levies for unsecured debts. Deceitful or fraudulent actions would be prosecuted.

There are several claims that are still enforceable against exempt property, the most significant being collection of child support, unpaid earnings of an employee for up to one month's compensation, and federal, state and local taxes.

There are a multitude of exemptions without limitation for retirement plans for public employees at the federal, state, and local levels. The blue collar workers, people who rely on social security for retirement and small business owners have few options to supplement their retirement plans. Unmatured life insurance policies and annuity contracts offer a sound investment for retirement.

HB 101 offers more security to people investing in unmatured life insurance policies and annuity contracts to provide for themselves and their families in their retirement years.

SECTIONAL
CS to HB 101 (JUD)

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contract from levy to satisfy a debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

Section 1: AS 09.38.015 Property exempt without limitation is amended to read:

(a) (11) adds unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual to the list of property exempt without limitation.

Section 2: AS 09.38.030 Exemption of earnings and liquid assets is amended to read:

(e) (4) proceeds or benefits paid [OR PAYABLE] on the death of an insured, if the individual was the spouse or a dependant of the insured; and

This section clarifies a potential ambiguity regarding trying to garnish someone's death benefit before that person has passed away.

Section 3: AS 09.38.025(a) is repealed because there is no longer any reason to have a section dedicated to the exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts since they now fall under the category of property exempt without limitation in AS 09.38.015.

Section 4: is an applicability section that states that this will only apply to a debt that is created on or after the effective date of this Act.

ATTACHMENTS: Chart on Garnishment of Federal Payments for Child Support Obligations

TO: State and Tribal IV-D Directors

FROM: Vicki Turetsky, Commissioner, Office of Child Support Enforcement

SUBJECT: Garnishment of Federal Payments for Child Support Obligations

Section 459 of the Social Security Act (the Act) provides for the garnishment of certain Federal payments to satisfy obligations for child support. A chart titled Garnishment of Federal Payments for Child Support Obligations is attached as a reference. It contains information regarding different payment types and authority citations.

QUESTION 1: What moneys are subject to garnishment from Federal employee pay?

RESPONSE 1: A Federal employee's compensation is subject to garnishment for child support payments with the exception of amounts listed under section 459(h)(2) of the Act. Compensation that is subject to garnishment includes wages, salary, commission, bonus, pay, allowances (including severance pay, sick pay, and incentive pay).

QUESTION 2: Are worker's compensation and other benefits subject to garnishment?

RESPONSE 2: Yes, benefits subject to garnishment include worker's compensation benefits paid or payable under Federal or State law, benefits paid or payable under the Railroad Retirement System, and special benefits for certain World War II veterans payable under title VIII of the Act.

QUESTION 3: Are Federal pensions, retirement or retired pay, and annuities subject to garnishment?

RESPONSE 3: Yes, benefits subject to garnishment include periodic benefits (including a periodic benefit as defined in section 228(h)(3) of the Act) or other payments under any system or fund established by the United States which provides for the payment of pensions, retirement or retired pay, annuities, dependents' or survivors' benefits, or similar amounts payable on account of personal services performed by any individual. Section 228(h)(3) of the Act defines the term "periodic benefit" as a benefit payable in a lump sum if it is a commutation of, or a substitute for, periodic payments.

QUESTION 4: Can child support be withheld from the pay of members of the uniformed services?

RESPONSE 4: Yes, moneys for the personal service of an obligor in the uniformed services are subject to garnishment; however, this does not include allowances for members of the uniformed services payable pursuant to chapter 7 of title 37, United States Code, as prescribed by the Secretaries concerned (defined by section 101(5) of such title) as necessary for the efficient performance of duty. Restrictions also apply for certain allowances and stipends. The attached chart outlines the payments to a member of the uniformed services that are subject to garnishment in 5 CFR §581.103(b) as well as the payments that are not subject to garnishment per §581.104(h)(2).

QUESTION 5: Are title II benefits subject to garnishment? (Title II refers to Federal old-age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits established under title II of the Act.)

RESPONSE 5: Yes, benefits subject to garnishment include periodic benefits (including a periodic benefit as defined in section 228(h)(3) of the Act) or other payments under the insurance system established by title II of the Act. In addition, benefits subject to garnishment include periodic benefits (including a periodic benefit as defined in section 228(h)(3) of the Act) payable under any other system or fund established by the United States which provides for the payment of pensions, retirement or retired pay, annuities, dependents' or survivors' benefits, or similar amounts payable on account of personal services performed by the individual or any other individual.

QUESTION 6: Are Federal "Black Lung" benefits subject to garnishment?

RESPONSE 6: Yes, benefits subject to garnishment include periodic benefits (including a periodic benefit as defined in section 228(h)(3) of the Act) or other payments under any Federal program established to provide

"black lung" benefits. A benefit as defined by 20 CFR §410.110(b) means the black lung benefit provided under part B of title IV of the Act to coal miners, to surviving widows of miners, to the surviving child or children of a miner, or of a widow of a miner, to the surviving dependent parent or parents of a miner, and to the surviving dependent brother(s) or sister(s) of a miner.

QUESTION 7: Are Veteran benefits subject to garnishment?

RESPONSE 7: Certain benefits are subject to garnishment including periodic benefits (including a periodic benefit as defined in section 228(h)(3) of the Act) or other payments by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs as compensation for a service-connected disability paid by the Secretary to a former member of the Armed Forces who is in receipt of retired or retainer pay if the former member has waived a portion of the retired or retainer pay in order to receive such compensation. Regulations under 5 CFR §581.103(c)(7) indicate that in such cases, only that part of the Department of Veterans Affairs payment that is in lieu of the waived retired pay or waived retainer pay is subject to garnishment.

In addition, as stated in 5 CFR §581.104(b) payments or portions of payments made by the Department of Veterans Affairs pursuant to sections 501–562 of title 38 of the United States Code, in which the entitlement of the payee is based on non-service-connected disability or death, age, and need are not subject to garnishment. Furthermore, 5 CFR §581.104 (f) indicates that education and vocational rehabilitation benefits for veterans and eligible persons under chapters 30, 31, 32, 35, and 36 of title 38, United States Code, and chapters 106 and 107 of title 10, United States Code are not subject to garnishment.

Benefits payable under title VIII of the Act, "Special Benefits for Certain World War II Veterans" are subject to garnishment. Every individual who is a qualified individual under title VIII section 802 of the Act shall, in accordance with and subject to the provisions of title VIII, be entitled to a monthly benefit paid by the Commissioner of Social Security for each month after September 2000 (or such earlier month, if the Commissioner determines is administratively feasible) the individual resides outside the United States. Except as otherwise provided in title VIII, a qualified individual has: (1) attained the age of 65 on or before the date of the enactment of this title; (2) is a World War II veteran; (3) is eligible for a supplemental security income benefit under title XVI for—(A) the month in which this title is enacted; and (B) the month in which the individual files an application for benefits under this title; (4) whose total benefit income is less than 75 percent of the Federal benefit rate under title XVI; (5) who has filed an application for benefits under this title; and (6) who is in compliance with all requirements imposed by the Commissioner of Social Security under this title, shall be a qualified individual for purposes of this title.

QUESTION 8: Are moneys paid as compensation for death under any Federal program subject to garnishment when the beneficiary is the noncustodial parent?

RESPONSE 8: Yes, section 459(h)(1)(A)(ii)(III) of the Act permits moneys paid as compensation for death under any Federal program to be collected to pay child support. Please refer to Q&A 5 for the exception to this.

QUESTION 9: Are Social Security Income (SSI) benefits subject to garnishment?

RESPONSE 9: No. Supplemental Security Income (SSI) for the aged, blind, and disabled pursuant to title XVI of the Social Security Act are not subject to garnishment; see 5 CFR §581.104(j).

Subject: Support for HB101 - Full Value Exemption for Life Insurance and Annuity Contracts

Dear Amanda,

I am writing in support of HB101 which will exempt the full value of unmatured life insurance policies and annuity contracts.

As an estate planning attorney, and President of the Socity of Financial Service Professionals, life insurance, annuities and asset protecion are issues which I deal with on a regular basis. At present, Alaska law only exempts up to $10,000 in cash value for the foregoing products, yet exempts an unlimited amount for most types of qualified plans (IRAs, 401(K)s etc). By passing HB101, those Alaskans who do not have qualified plans, but are investing in life insurance plans, will be able to save and protect their assets in the same way those with qualified plans may do so now.

In the long run, encouraging Alaskas to save and invest during their working years will be of great benefit to the state in that financially self-sufficient Alaskans will not need to rely on state or federal assistance in their post-work years.

Although Alaska has some excellent legislation in the areas of self-settled trusts, and LLCs, it is lagging far behind most states when it comes to exempt property. Passage of HB101 would therefore not only align the protections between Alaskans who have, and do not have, qualified plans, it will bring Alaska more in line with the exemption statutes of other states.

Finally, it will provide the average Alaska with a viable method to a reaonable amount of asset protection without the expense or complexity of creating and managaing self-settled trusts AND it will be a boost to the entire financial services industry insofaras many potential life insurance purchasers will now have the added feature of asset protection at no extra cost.

For these reasons I strongly support passage of HB101. Kenneth G. Robertson.

Subject: Support for HB101 - Full Value Exemption for Life Insurance and Annuity Contracts

Dear Amanda,

I am writing in support of HB101 which will exempt the full value of unmatured life insurance policies and annuity contracts.

As an estate planning attorney, and President of the Socity of Financial Service Professionals, life insurance, annuities and asset protecion are issues which I deal with on a regular basis. At present, Alaska law only exempts up to $10,000 in cash value for the foregoing products, yet exempts an unlimited amount for most types of qualified plans (IRAs, 401(K)s etc). By passing HB101, those Alaskans who do not have qualified plans, but are investing in life insurance plans, will be able to save and protect their assets in the same way those with qualified plans may do so now.

In the long run, encouraging Alaskas to save and invest during their working years will be of great benefit to the state in that financially self-sufficient Alaskans will not need to rely on state or federal assistance in their post-work years.

Although Alaska has some excellent legislation in the areas of self-settled trusts, and LLCs, it is lagging far behind most states when it comes to exempt property. Passage of HB101 would therefore not only align the protections between Alaskans who have, and do not have, qualified plans, it will bring Alaska more in line with the exemption statutes of other states.

Finally, it will provide the average Alaska with a viable method to a reaonable amount of asset protection without the expense or complexity of creating and managaing self-settled trusts AND it will be a boost to the entire financial services industry insofaras many potential life insurance purchasers will now have the added feature of asset protection at no extra cost.

For these reasons I strongly support passage of HB101. Kenneth G. Robertson.

Re: 26-LS0176\C - House Bill 101

I am requesting you consider a new CS for HB 101 that would delete the provision that makes exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts "property exempt without limitations" and sets a $500,000 exemption on unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts. I propose the following language.

Sec. 09.38.025. Exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts.

(a) Except as provided in this section or AS 09.38.017 , an individual is entitled to exemption of unmatured life insurance and annuity contracts owned by the individual. If the contracts have accrued dividends and loan values available to the individual aggregating more than $500,000 [$10,000], a creditor may obtain a court order requiring the individual debtor to pay the creditor, and authorizing the creditor on the debtor's be $500,000 [$10,000] or the amount of the creditor's claim, whichever is less.

While public employee retirement systems are already protected by federal law, many trade union workers rely on unmatured life insurance policies and annuity contracts to provide supplemental retirement benefits. People who are self-employed also depend on these sources of retirement income. This legislation strives to preserve any portion of those retirement benefits.

I read the minutes to the April 17, 2009 Senate Judiciary Meeting and there were two unanswered questions:

(1) Can the deceased's annuity contract be garnished to pay unpaid child support?

HB 101

"An Act exempting the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy to satisfy unsecured debt, and amending the description of earnings, income, cash, and other assets relating to garnishment of life insurance proceeds payable upon the death of an insured."

This bill will provide people with better security and planning for their families after they have passed on. This bill exempts the full value of life insurance and annuity contracts from levy or garnishment to satisfy unsecured debt.

When fewer employers are offering retirement plans, the state can help offer families the opportunity to better plan for their future. People who are self-employed or working for an employer that does not offer a retirement plan can use annuities as a retirement plan and know that these funds are protected. With the uncertainty of social security, families need to be sure that they can provide for themselves and their survivors.

This bill encourages personal responsibility and protects the future of Alaskan families.

P.S. Labor supports this! Also - Hawaii has the same protection requested in HB #101

Would you allow this bill out - I so believe in this bill. In my view, as a recent widow, (not in debt or owing creditors) I am concerned life ins or annuity contracts could be levied to satisfy debts. However, I respect your expertise. Linda

MEMORANDUM April 17, 2009

SUBJECT: SCS CSHB 102(JUD) relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, etc. (Work Order No. 26-LS0059\S)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Theresa Bannister

This memo accompanies the bill described above.

1. Single subject considerations. The bill combines lien language from and contract duty language amendment in AS 09.70.030 with provisions throughout the Uniform Commercial Code. The bill has to rely on a somewhat questionable single subject of "contracts" for its single subject.

Although I believe that this single subject would not ultimately be held to violate the constitutional single subject rule,[1] there is definitely an issue here. First, it is difficult to reduce the Uniform Commercial Code to "contracts," although that is the ultimate basis for its commercial transactions. The Supreme Court has held that the purpose of the constitutional provision is to guard against legislative log-rolling, "the practice of deliberately inserting in one bill several dissimilar or incongruous subjects in order to secure the necessary support for passage of the measure."[2] However, it is likely that the general perception, at least of the legal community, of the UCC, the contract duty in AS 09.70.030, and the lien provisions would be that they are logically related. So they may not be considered dissimilar or incongruously placed together in the bill. Second, it is not clearly spelled out in the AS 34.35 lien language that the transactions it covers are based on a contract. However, the treatment in AS 34.35 suggests that there was some kind of expectation or agreement that the other party would pay for the services provided.

[1] Art. II, sec. 13, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

[2] Evans v. State, 56 P.3d 1046, 1069 (Alaska 2002), quoting from State v. First National Bank of Anchorage, 660 P.2d 406, 415 (Alaska 1982).

Although some justices in dissents have expressed concern that the court's broad construction may possibly make the single subject rule meaningless,[3] the Supreme Court has not overturned legislation because of a failure of the single-subject requirement. The Court has indicated that one meaning of the general subject is that all matters treated of should be so connected with or related to each other, either logically or in popular understanding as to be part of, or germane to, one general subject.[4] It appears logical to group the amendments and the original bill together as related to contractual relations. As mentioned earlier, it also appears likely that, at least in the legal community, the general perception of the items in the bill would be that they are logically related.

When construing the single-subject rule, the Court will "resolve doubts in favor of validity."[5] In order "to warrant the setting aside of enactments for failure to comply, the violation must be substantial and plain."[6] In this case, the possible lack of a single subject among the provisions is not plain and it does not appear to be substantial.

In light of all these factors, I would say that relying on the single subject of "contracts" probably is not fatal for the legislation. However, it is an issue and I wanted you to be aware of it.

2. Title change. The change was made in the title from "animal care" to "livestock care." So, as you requested (unless not needed) we are preparing a concurrent resolution to waive the uniform rules for the title change. It is arguable that the change the committee made to the bill would not require the change to "livestock" because "animal" covers livestock and is not, therefore, misleading. However, because "animal" is broader than what is actually in the bill, it is safer to make the change and pass the resolution.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

EXPLANATION OF CHANGES – AMENDED 3/16/09

Changes between HB102 and CSHB102(JUD):

- Adds Section 1, which codifies in Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes a requirement already found in the common law of the state that all parties to a contract have a duty to act fairly and in good faith in the performance and enforcement of the contract. The Alaska Supreme Court has previously found that the duty of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every contract in Alaska, and has gone so far as to call the duty "a long-standing tenet of Alaska law." McConnell v. State, Dept of Health and Social Services, 991 P.2d 178, 184 (Alaska 1999). The covenant of good faith and fair dealing assures parties to a contract that no party "will do anything which will interfere with the right of [another] party to receive the benefits of the agreement." Guin v. Ha, 591 P.2d 1281, 1291 (Alaska 1979). The covenant is implied "in order to effectuate the reasonable expectations of the parties to the agreement." Ramsey v. City of Sand Point, 936 P.2d 126, 133 (Alaska 1997); see generally Casey v. Semco Energy, Inc, 92 P.3d 379, 384 (Alaska 2004); Keffer v. Keffer, 852 P.2d 394 (Alaska 1993); Municipality of Anchorage v. Gentile, 922 P.2d 248 (Alaska 1996). Since common law is more malleable than statutory law, codification through this legislation offers additional guarantees of the duty of good faith and fair dealing to all parties of a contract.
- Adds Sections 4-7, which modernizes the language of AS 34.35.200 and AS 34.25.225, relating to carrier, warehouse, and animal care liens, and clarifies that the remedies available under AS 34.35.225 and AS 45.07.210(g) are not mutually exclusive; an owner of property wrongfully disposed of has rights and remedies under each statute in the event both statutes apply. Adds Section 47 amending AS 45.07.210(g) clarifying that rights and remedies available under that section are in addition to rights and remedies under AS 34.35.225.

Note that this is a summary only. This sectional analysis should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

- Updates the language of Section 50, relating to AS 45.07.302. Professor William H. Henning, Distinguished Professor of Law at the University of Alabama School of Law, provide the following rationale for the change:

"The language in the uniform version of Section 7-302 was included because of the interface between state and federal law. At the time revised Article 7 was adopted by the Uniform Law Commission, federal law provided that performing or connecting carriers could not alter obligations if they were within the ambit of federal law regarding carrier obligations. The language in 7-302 designated what was outside that ambit and was included merely to point out what would have been true without the language - if the parties were outside federal law, the performing carrier COULD alter liability by agreement. Since the ULC adopted the act, much of federal law regarding carriers has been restated and reorganized and that exact formulation does not seem to be used. The new language that we suggested should be appropriate regardless of the scope of current federal law."

Note that this is a summary only. This sectional analysis should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

SECTIONAL ANAYLSIS
CSHB 102(JUD) – UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

"An Act relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, to the general provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, to documents of title under the Uniform Commercial Code, to the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, and to lease-purchases of personal property; amending Rules 403 and 902, Alaska Rules of Evidence; and providing for an effective date."

(Sections Making Substantive, Non-technical Changes)

Section 1 codifies in Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes a requirement already found in the common law of the state that all parties to a contract have a duty to act fairly and in good faith in the performance and enforcement of the contract.

Section 2 provides for the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (UETA) to apply to sections of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) concerning warehouse receipts, bills of lading and documents of title previously excluded from application of UETA.

Sections 4 – 7 modernizes the language of AS 34.35.200 and AS 34.25.225, relating to carrier, warehouse, and animal care liens, and clarifies that the remedies available under AS 34.35.225 and AS 45.07.210(g) are not mutually exclusive; an owner of property wrongfully disposed of has rights and remedies under each statute in the event both statutes apply.

Section 8 adds a short title, describes the scope, and adds rules of construction and severability provision for the UCC, and addresses modification of federal electronic signatures laws.

Section 9 adds several new sections to AS 45.01 to promote uniformity in UCC-covered transactions by revising or modifying general rules. These include: general definitions; standards for determining when someone has notice or knowledge; provisions on distinguishing between leases and security interests, what constitutes value given for rights, and determining whether actions are timely performed and what facts must be

"An Act relating to the Uniform Commercial Code, to the general provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, to documents of title under the Uniform Commercial Code, to the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, and to lease-purchases of personal property; amending Rules 403 and 902, Alaska Rules of Evidence; and providing for an effective date."

The Uniform Commercial Code is a uniform act created with the objective of synchronizing the law of sales and other commercial transactions in all fifty states. The UCC is a joint project of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) and the American Law Institute (ALI). The UCC is not itself law, but provides recommendation of the laws that should be adopted by individual states. All fifty states have adopted the UCC in one version or another, and it is a major part of Title 45 of the Alaska Statutes.

The UCC was originally released in 1952; periodically, the NCCUSL and ALI revisit the UCC and make appropriate recommendations for revisions to states statutes. This bill reflects the recent revisions of Articles 1 and 7 of the UCC. The Alaska Uniform Law commissioners have recommended passage of these revisions this legislative session.

Article 1 provides definitions and general provisions for the UCC; the updates to Article 1 modernize and reflect changing business practices and developments in the law and are necessary to bring Article 1 up to date. Thirty-four other states have already adopted the revised Article 1 language.

Article 7 of the UCC pertains to warehouse receipts, bills of lading, and other documents of title. The revisions to Article 7 introduce new rules concerning electronic documents of title. The substantive revisions to Article 7 fall into four main categories: recognition of electronic documents of title; extension of the statute of fraud requirements to include electronic records and signatures as equivalent to paper documents and written manual signatures; establishment of the unique original in electronic form; and interchangeability between electronic and tangible documents of title. Thirty-one other states have already adopted the revised Article 7 language.

An expert from the NCCUSL will be available to testify and answer questions at the hearing, along with an Alaska Commissioner to the NCCUSL and Chief Administrative Law Judge Terry Thurbon. Should you have questions before the hearing, please do not hesitate to call legislative aide Allison Laffen at 465-2840.

Why States Should Adopt the...

Revised Uniform Commercial Code
Article 1 - General Provisions (2001)

Article 1 serves all other articles of the Uniform Commercial Code with definitions and general provisions. Revised Article 1 improves old Article 1 in the following ways:

- Modernization. The UCC has entirely been amended or revised between 1985 and 2003. Most states have enacted these revisions and amendments. It is time to bring Article 1 as up-to-date as the rest of the UCC.
- Narrower Scope. The intentionally narrowed scope of the substantive rules in Article 1 prevent them from being applied outside the UCC with potentially serious unintended consequences.
- Clarifies When Non-UCC Rules Apply. Other law will clearly supplement, but does not supplant UCC rules. This reduces interpretation problems and the opportunities for litigation.
- Good Faith. Reasonable commercial standards will affect the determination of what is good faith in any given case for the entire UCC, not just individual articles. This is a fairer standard for courts to enforce and is the existing standard in most of the substantive articles of the UCC.
- Broader Choice of Law. Parties to transactions under the UCC may choose any law that best governs their transaction, except in a consumer transaction in which the choice of law would deprive a consumer of the protections of his or her own state's law. This amendment provides for greater flexibility in doing business interstate and is good for business.
- Course of Performance Added. Absent express terms, evidence of "course of performance" (a concept currently utilized only in Articles 2 and 2A of the UCC) may be used in court to interpret a contract along with course of dealing and usage of trade. Courts will have more complete evidence on the meaning of contracts and the intent of the parties to them.
- Statute of Frauds Deleted. General writing and signature requirements are deleted to make way for the specific provisions for electronic records and signatures that are contained in the substantive UCC articles.

UNIFORMITY

Modifications and revisions of other articles in the Uniform Commercial Code require the revision of Article 1 of the UCC. This required harmonization of Article 1 with the other revised articles as well as the need to reflect in Article 1 recent changes and developments in law are both expressed in Revised Article 1. It is important for every state to adopt Revised Article 1 of the Uniform Commercial Code.

SUMMARY

Revised Article 1 of the Uniform Commercial Code

Article 1 of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) provides definitions and general provisions which, in the absence of conflicting provisions, apply as default rules covering transactions and matters otherwise covered under a different article of the UCC. As other parts of the UCC have been revised and amended to accommodate changing business practices and development in the law, these modifications need to be reflected in an updated Article 1. Thus, Article 1 contains many changes of a technical, non-substantive nature, such as reordering and renumbering sections, and adding gender neutral terminology. In addition, over the years it has been in place, certain provisions of Article 1 have been identified as confusing or imprecise. Several changes reflect an effort to add greater clarity in light of this experience. Finally, developments in the law have led to the conclusion that certain changes of a substantive nature needed to be made.

The first substantive change is intended to clarify the scope of Article 1. Section 1-102 now expressly states that the substantive rules of Article 1 apply only to transactions within the scope of other articles of the UCC. The statute of frauds requirement aimed at transactions beyond the coverage of the UCC has been deleted. Second, amended Section 1-103 clarifies the application of supplemental principles of law, with clearer distinctions about where the UCC is preemptive. Third, the definition of "good faith" found in 1-201 is revised to mean "honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing". This change conforms to the definition of good faith that applies in all of the recently revised UCC articles except Revised Article 5. Finally, evidence of "course of performance" may be used to interpret a contract along with course of dealing and usage of trade.

Perhaps the most important change to Article 1, however, has to do with default choice-of-law provisions found in 1-301, which replaces previous 1-105. Under the Article 1 before the 2001 amendments, parties to a transaction may agree to be governed by the law of any jurisdiction that bears a reasonable relation to that transaction. Revised Article 1 provides a different basic rule that applies except for consumer transactions in certain circumstances.

With respect to all transactions, an agreement by the parties to use the law of any state (or in the case of an international transaction, country) is effective, regardless of whether the transaction bears a reasonable relation to that state. However, if one of the parties to a transaction is a consumer, such a choice-of-law provision in a contract may not deprive the consumer of legal protections afforded by the law of the state or country in which the consumer resides, or of the state or country where the consumer contracts and takes delivery of goods. Also, with respect to all transactions, an agreement to use the law of a designated state or country is ineffective to the extent that application would violate a fundamental public policy of the state or country which has jurisdiction to adjudicate a dispute arising out of the transaction. The forum state's law will govern the transaction if the contract is silent on the issue of choice of law.

SUMMARY

Uniform Commercial Code - Revised Article 7 (2003)

Revision in 2003

The original Article 7 of the Uniform Commercial Code, "Warehouse Receipts, Bills of Lading and Other Documents of Title," combined two earlier uniform acts, the Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act (1906) and the Uniform Bills of Lading Act (1909), with some principles from the Uniform Sales Act (which became Article 2-Sales of the UCC). Article 7 had not been revisited after the 1951 promulgation of the original Uniform Commercial Code until 2003, a period of 52 years. The longevity of the principles of warehouse receipts and bills of lading suggests very successful law and law-making as it pertains to the commercial storage and shipment of goods. The basic principles do not change basically in the 2003 revision. But there are reasons to readdress this area of the commercial law in 2003, which shall be discussed a little later. First, it is necessary to establish some of the basics.

Introduction to Documents of Title

The storage and shipment of tangible goods for commercial purposes has been going on for centuries. The physical side of the business is carried on by entities that provide warehouses (warehousemen) and entities that carry the goods from place of origin to destination (common carriers). These are tangible, visible businesses. What is not tangible and visible is the transfer of rights in the goods while they are stored and/or shipped. The common law provided the rules of bailment. The terminology of bailor and bailee is still incorporated in the Uniform Act. As the law developed, the transfer of rights came to depend upon the transfer of specific documents of title. The transfer of the documents from one person to another became the transfer of the rights. The title documents were warehouseman's receipts on the storage/warehouse side, and the bill of lading on the carrier side. The original uniform acts and the 2003 revision all incorporate these basics.

One of the important principles carried forward into the 2003 revision is that of negotiability. Free transfer of interests is an important policy norm throughout the UCC. In Article 7, documents of title may be negotiable. Whether a document is negotiable or non-negotiable depends upon how it identifies the transferee and how it is transferred. A negotiable document may be one of two kinds of paper documents, bearer paper or order paper. A document made out to bearer may be transferred from one person to another by simple delivery of possession. The delivery transfers the rights to the goods (therefore the title) to the transferee. Order paper is made out to a specific person. After initial delivery to the person named on the document, it may be negotiated to another person by the indorsement of the named person and delivery of possession to that other person. The rights to the goods (and therefore the title) pass with the negotiation to the transferee.

Documents of title may also be made non-negotiable. This is primarily done by a statement on the face of the instrument. Non-negotiable documents of title may also be assigned or transferred. The difference between negotiable and non-negotiable documents is the rights that they may transfer. A non-negotiable document of title transfers only the actual interests of the transferor. A negotiable document of title may transfer more than the actual interests of the transferor. If negotiated, for example, it transfers free of any claims against the issuer of the document. A non-negotiable document is not free of such claims.

Negotiation as a concept exists to make commerce in goods possible. Goods would not be transferred if the purchaser always has to look behind the transaction to see who may come after the goods after the transfer is complete. Negotiation erases the peril. The principle enunciated in Article 7 is consistent with other parts of the UCC governing notes, drafts, checks and investment securities.

Electronic Documents of Title

Article 7 governs other important aspects of the transfer of rights in goods when stored or shipped, such as the liens of warehousemen and carriers and their enforcement and allocation of risk of loss of the goods either in storage or transit, but the issue of negotiation has been its single most important aspect, up to the revisions in 2003. Something very important has happened to change the way we look at the principle of negotiation. That something is computers, electronic communications and the ability to create electronic documents of title. Computers have been accused and applauded for their impact on commerce and business. Their impact on storage and shipment of goods is profound. Federal law has actually recognized electronic documents for some time, but electronic documents of title cannot be substituted one to one with tangible documents of title. Their characteristics in electronic form are not the same as their characteristics in tangible form.

The tangible form is a written document on paper with signatures of issuers and subsequent transferors. The individual document is a unique token of the rights and interests it represents. Even if there is a copy, there is always the original. This is not so with electronic documents. Originals and copies are indistinguishable from each other in electronic form. Signatures in the sense of an individual's scribing them uniquely on a piece of paper cannot be equally duplicated in an electronic document. Transferors and transferees, who are remote from each other when tangible documents are transferred, are not remote from each other in electronic media. Electronic communications can occur between any two persons anywhere in the world. Yet, it is difficult for each participant in an electronic communication to verify or authenticate the identity of the other party. To have the effective electronic documents that commerce demands, new concepts have to be introduced into the law. The concept of negotiation as we have known it in American law cannot apply in electronic media. The great addition to Article 7, therefore, is the new rules for electronic documents of title.

These rules must deal with distinct issues: recognition of electronic documents of title; statute of fraud extensions; establishment of the unique original in electronic form (sometimes thought of as authentication); and interchangeability between electronic and tangible documents of title. In addition, the rules for electronic documents of title must fit as seamlessly as possible into the existing system governing tangible documents of title. The law should avoid skewing the choice between tangible and electronic documents of title in the favor of either form. Only the actual marketplace should determine users' choices. Revised Article 7 deals with these issues and meets the test of seamless insertion into the existing law.

Recognition of Electronic Documents of Title

Recognition of electronic documents of title begins in the definition of "Document of Title:" "An electronic document of title is evidence by a record consisting of information stored in an electronic medium." Other definitions have been modified to accord with this root definition. For example, "Holder" is defined to include: "a person in control of a negotiable electronic document of title." Electronic documents of title become the equal to tangible documents of title.

Statute of Frauds Requirements

Revised Article 7 extends statute of fraud requirements to include electronic records and signatures. Any writing requirement that relates to enforceability of a document is a statute of frauds requirement. Article 7 treats electronic records and signatures as the equivalent of paper documents and written, manual signatures. This initially occurs in new definitions of "record" and "sign." A record is "information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form." The term "sign" is defined to when the person in control surrenders control to the issuer, which then issues a tangible document of title containing a statement that it substitutes for the electronic document. The same kind of process will convert a tangible document to an electronic one. The person entitled to enforce a tangible document surrenders possession to the issuer. The electronic document must also state that it is a substitute for the tangible document. Without the ability to convert from tangible to electronic documents, this system would not work.

Other Benefits to Revision

The revisions to UCC Article 7, beyond making way for electronic documents of title, primarily update or clarify existing rules of law. There are references to tariffs and regulations in original UCC Article 7 that no longer exist with deregulation. These have been eliminated in the revision. There is nothing as significant as the rules for electronic documents of title. But these rules alone make it imperative for the states to enact the revision to UCC Article 7 as soon as practicable. Documents of title are fundamental to the transfer of goods in interstate commerce. The new rules are wholly commerce friendly and every state needs them as soon as possible.

Section 6. Adds new subsection to AS 34.20.070 (foreclosure by trustee).

Proposed 34.20.070(e) establishes when a person who holds a lien or non-possessory property interest that can be inferred from an inspection of the property is entitled to receive a notice of default for a foreclosure sale.

Proposed 34.20.070(f) explains that a lien or nonpossessory interest must be recorded or notice given to the beneficiary or trustee before the recording of the notice of default.

Proposed 34.20.070(g) allows a trustee additional time (after recording) to deliver the notice of default when the trustee delivers the notice personally to the property or to an occupant of the property. Allows the trustee to place the notice on the property or as close as practicable to the property under certain conditions.

Proposed sec 34.20.070(h) states that an affidavit signed by a trustee or another person who delivered notice personally under sec. 34.20.070(f) is prima facie evidence that the trustee complied with sec. 34.20.070(f). Establishes a conclusive presumption (as evidenced by the affidavit) after one year unless a court action is filed within the year to challenge the foreclosure for failure to comply with sec. 34.20.070(f)

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(i) establishes how a trustee may satisfy the notice requirements for a person known by the trustee to be deceased and for whom the trustee or the deed of trust beneficiary knows a personal representative has been appointed.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(m) states that when a court injunction action meets certain conditions, a court may impose conditions that it considers appropriate to protect the deed of trust beneficiary.

Proposed sec. 34.20.070(n) defines certain terms for AS 34.20.070

Section 7. AS 34.20.080(a) is amended to require that the proceeds from a foreclosure sale are placed in trust until disbursed. This section allows a trustee to accept foreclosure bids by telephone, the Internet, and electronic mail if certain conditions are met.

Section 8. Amends AS 34.20.080(b) Allowing the attorney or other agent of the trustee to conduct the sale. Additionally, allows the trustee to set reasonable rules for the conduct of the sale. Adds language that conforms the deed delivery requirements to the new provision in sec. 34.20.070(g) allowing the trustee to rescind the sale under certain circumstances.

Section 9. Amends AS 34.20.080(e) Limiting the postponement of a foreclosure sale to not more than 12 months unless a new notice of sale is given. Establishes that postponement for up to 12 months does not provide a basis for challenging the validity of the foreclosure because of how long the foreclosure has been pending.

Section 10. Adds a new subsections to AS 34.20.080(foreclosure sale).

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(f) indicates how any cash proceeds of the sale are to be distributed after delivery of a deed.

E-Mail Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(h) allows the trustee to reschedule a rescinded sale, establishes a minimum time that must elapse after the rescinded sale before the new sale may be held, and establishes the notice procedure that the trustee must follow for the rescheduled sale.

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(i) establishes that if a sale is not rescinded it completely terminates the rights of the trustor of the deed in the property.

Section 11. AS 34.20.120(a) is amended. Allowing the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest to execute and acknowledge the substitution of a trustee for certain trust needs.

Section 12. AS 34.20.120(b) is amended. Adds a requirement to the contents of a trustee substitution for a situation when the substitution is executed by the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest.

Section 13. Adds a new section AS 34.20.125(a) requiring a trustee to provide a surety bond before performing trustee duties under a deed of trust foreclosure.

AS 34.20.125(b) requires the bond to be terminable at any time by the surety by complying with certain requirements, indicates when the bond terminates, and indicates that the surety is not liable after termination for more than the face amount of the bond. States that a revision of the amount of the bond is not cumulative.

AS 34.20.125(c) gives notice requirements for a termination of the bond.

AS 34.20.125(d) requires a trustee to file evidence of a bond each year with the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Requires the department to verify that the evidence is satisfactory, keep an updated list of bonded trustees, and make the evidence and the list available to the public. Allows the department to charge the trustee a reasonable fee for the verification and maintenance of records.

AS 34.20.125(e) exempts state agencies from the bonding requirements.

AS 34.20.125(f) defines "department" in this section to mean the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development

Explanation of Changes Between SCCSHB108(L&C) 26-LS0318\T and Proposed CS version 26-LS0318\M

Sec. 2 AS 09.35.140(d)(2), Page 3. Lines 16-26, Deleted the following language "and has a total paid circulation or paid distribution of at least 500 copies or 10 percent of the total population of the judicial district, whichever is less" The circulation requirements were deleted since these are pervasively covered by the Second Class Mailing Permit. Hopefully, this will allow smaller papers to flourish and compete, and thus driving down the incredibly high price of legal notice publication.

Sec. 7 AS 34.20.080(a), Page 7, line 28. The word "escrow" was changed to "trust account." This is easier for trustees to follow.

Sec. 10. AS 34.20.080(g), Page 9, line 15 changes "five days" to "ten days". This allows more time to find and correct errors. This change is borrower-friendly since a property that goes to sale when it should not directly impact the borrower.

Sec. 13 AS 34.20.125(e), Page 11, lines 24-27, Deleted all language. This deletes the bonding exemption for title providers. Foreclosures involve complex procedures and large dollar amounts. Title agencies have no special expertise warranting an exemption. Only state agencies are now exempted.

Explanation of Previous Changes to HB108

Sec. 2. AS 09.35.140(b). New language expands the list of qualified Internet sites, to newspapers of general circulation provided they meet the requirements of proposed AS 09.35.140(d) and are free to the public. Thus, if a newspaper qualifies to run legal ads it will be qualified to run the internet publication.

Sec. 4. AS 34.20.070(b). Removed the requirement that the notice of default must include language that the payment to cure the default must be made two days prior to the sale date due to the fact that the default can now be cured up to the date of sale.

AS 34.20.070(e) adds new conforming language to AS 34.20.070(b)(9), and gives an exception for deeds that were entered into before the effective date of the Act and provided for a different time period to cure the default before the sale.

Sec. 6 AS 34.20.070(e) clarified the time to the time of sale for curing the default and sums that need to be paid.

AS 34.20.080(j) adds new language that states that, if a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the deed of trust foreclosed in the rescinded sale is restored to the validity and priority it would have had as though the sale did not occur.

 Sec. 4. AS 34.20.070(b) is amended to read:

(b) Not less than 30 days after the default and not less than 90 days [THREE MONTHS] before the sale, the trustee shall record in the office of the recorder of the recording district in which the trust property is located a notice of default setting out (1) the name of the trustor, (2) the book and page where the trust deed is recorded or the serial number assigned to the trust deed by the recorder, (3) a description of the trust property, including the property's street address if there is a street address for the property, (4) a statement that a breach of the obligation for which the deed of trust is security has occurred, (5) the nature of the breach, (6) the sum owing on the obligation, (7) the election by the trustee to sell the property to satisfy the obligation, [AND] (8) the date, time, and place of the sale, and (9) the statement described in (e) of this section describing conditions for curing the default. An inaccuracy in the street address may not be used to set aside a sale if the legal description is correct. At any time before the sale date stated in the notice of default or to which the sale is postponed under AS 34.20.080(e), if the default has arisen by failure to make payments required by the trust deed, the default may be cured and sale under this section terminated by payment of the sum then in default, other than the principal that would not then be due if no default had occurred, and foreclosure [PLUS ATTORNEY] fees and [OR COURT] costs actually incurred by the beneficiary and trustee due to the default. If, under the same trust deed, notice of default under this subsection has been recorded two or more times previously and the default has been cured under this subsection, the trustee may elect to refuse payment and continue the sale.

 Sec. 5. AS 34.20.070(c) is amended to read:

(c) Within 10 days after recording the notice of default, the trustee shall mail a copy of the notice by certified mail to the last known address of each of the following persons or their legal representatives: (1) the trustor [GRANTOR] in the trust deed; (2) the successor in interest to the trustor [GRANTOR] whose interest appears of record or of whose interest the trustee or the beneficiary has actual notice, or who is in actual physical possession of the property; (3) any other person actually in physical possession of [OR OCCUPYING] the property; (4) any person having a lien or interest subsequent to the interest of the trustee in the trust deed, where the lien or interest appears of record or where the trustee or the beneficiary has actual notice of the lien or interest, except as provided in (f) of this section. The notice may be delivered personally instead of by mail.

 Sec. 6. AS 34.20.070 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(e) The statement required by (b)(9) of this section must state that, if the default has arisen by failure to make payments required by the trust deed, the default may be cured and the sale under this section terminated if

(1) payment of the sum then in default, other than the principal that would not then be due if default had not occurred, and foreclosure fees and costs actually incurred by the beneficiary and trustee due to the default is made at any time before the sale date stated in the notice of default or to which the sale is postponed; and

(2) when notice of default under (b) of this section has been recorded two or more times previously under the same trust deed and the default has been cured under (b) of this section, the trustee does not elect to refuse payment and continue the sale.

(f) In (c)(4) of this section, if the existence of a lien or nonpossessory interest can only be inferred from an inspection of the real property, the person holding the lien or nonpossessory interest is not entitled to notice under (c) of this section unless the lien or nonpossessory interest appears of record or a written notice of the lien or nonpossessory interest has been given to the beneficiary or trustee before the recording of the notice of default.

(g) If the trustee delivers notice personally under (c) of this section to the property or to an occupant of the property, the trustee may, notwithstanding (c) of this section, deliver the notice up to 20 days after the notice of default is recorded. If there is not a structure on the property and a person is not present on the property at the time of delivery, the trustee may place the notice on the property, or as close as practicable to the property if

(1) there is not a practical road access to the property; or

(2) access to the property is restricted by gates or other barriers.

(h) If the trustee or other person who delivered notice under (g) of this section signs an affidavit for the delivery, the affidavit is prima facie evidence that the trustee complied with (g) of this section. After one year from the delivery, as evidenced by the affidavit, the trustee is conclusively presumed to have complied with (g) of this section unless, within one year from the delivery, an action has been filed in court to contest the foreclosure based on failing to comply with (g) of this section.

(i) If a person who is entitled to receive notice by mail under (c) of this section is known by the beneficiary or trustee to be deceased, the trustee may satisfy the notice requirements of (c) of this section by mailing the notice to the last known address of the deceased person and to the personal representative of the deceased person if the beneficiary or trustee knows that a personal representative has been appointed for the deceased person.

(j) If a person who is entitled to receive notice by mail under (c) of this section is known by the beneficiary or trustee to be deceased but the trustee and the beneficiary do not know that a personal representative has been appointed for the deceased person, the trustee may satisfy the notice requirements of (c) of this section by

(1) mailing the notice to the heirs and devisees of the deceased person

(A) whose names and addresses are known to the beneficiary or trustee; or

(B) who have recorded a notice of their interest in the property; and

(2) publishing and posting the notice of the foreclosure as provided by law for the sale of real property on execution, except that the notice must be titled "To the Heirs or Devisees of (insert the name of the deceased person)" and include in the body of the notice a list of the names of the persons who are known by the beneficiary or trustee to be the heirs and devisees of the deceased person.

(k) If notice is given as required by (i) and (j) of this section, an heir or devisee of the deceased person may not challenge the foreclosure on the ground that the heir or devisee did not receive notice of the sale, unless the heir or devisee challenges the foreclosure on this ground within 90 days after the sale.

(l) A person may bring an action in court to enjoin a foreclosure on real property only if the person is

(1) the trustor of the deed of trust under which the real property was foreclosed;

(2) a guarantor of the obligation that the real property is securing;

(3) a person who has an interest in the real property that has been recorded;

(4) a person who has a recorded lien against the real property;

(5) an heir to the real property;

(6) a devisee of the real property; or

(7) the attorney general acting under other legal authority.

(m) If a person brings an action under (l) of this section to stop a sale of real property, and if the sale is being brought because of a default in the performance of a nonmonetary obligation required by the deed of trust that the real property is securing, the court may impose on the person the conditions that the court determines are appropriate to protect the beneficiary.

(n) In this section, "devisee," "heir," and "personal representative" have the meanings given in AS 13.06.050.

 Sec. 7. AS 34.20.080(a) is amended to read:

(a) The sale authorized in AS 34.20.070 shall be made under the terms and conditions and in the manner set out in the deed of trust. The proceeds from a sale shall be placed in a trust account until they are disbursed. However, the sale shall be made

(1) at public auction held at the front door of a courthouse of the superior court in the judicial district where the property is located, unless the deed of trust specifically provides that the sale shall be held in a different place, except that a trustee may also accept bids by telephone, the Internet, and electronic mail if the trustee has taken reasonable steps to ensure that the bidding methods using the telephone, the Internet, or electronic mail are fair, accessible, and designed to result in money that is immediately available for disbursement; and

(2) after public notice of the time and place of the sale has been given in the manner provided by law for the sale of real property on execution.

 Sec. 8. AS 34.20.080(b) is amended to read:

(b) The attorney for the trustee or another agent of the trustee may conduct the sale and act in the sale as the auctioneer for the trustee. The trustee may set reasonable rules and conditions for the conduct of the sale. Sale shall be made to the highest and best bidder. The beneficiary under the trust deed may bid at the trustee's sale. Except as provided by (g) of this section, the [THE] trustee shall execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed to the property sold.

 Sec. 9. AS 34.20.080(e) is amended to read:

(e) The trustee may postpone sale of all or any portion of the property by delivering to the person conducting the sale a written and signed request for the postponement to a stated date and hour. The person conducting the sale shall publicly announce the postponement to the stated date and hour at the time and place originally fixed for the sale. This procedure shall be followed in any succeeding postponement, but the foreclosure may not be postponed for more than 12 months unless a new notice of the sale is given under (a)(2) of this section. A sale may be postponed for up to 12 months from the sale date stated in the notice of default under AS 34.20.070(b) without providing a basis for challenging the validity of the foreclosure process because of the length of time the foreclosure has been pending.

 Sec. 10. AS 34.20.080 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(f) After delivery of a deed under (b) of this section, the trustee shall distribute any cash proceeds of the sale in the following order to

(1) the beneficiary of the deed of trust being foreclosed until the beneficiary is paid the full amount that is owed under the deed of trust to the beneficiary;

(2) the persons who held, at the time of the sale, recorded interests, except easements, in the property, that were subordinate to the foreclosed deed of trust; the distribution under this paragraph shall be made according to the priority of the recorded interest, and a recorded interest with a higher priority shall be satisfied before distribution is made to the recorded interest that is next lower in priority; however, if a person holds a recorded interest that is an assessment, the person is entitled only to the amount of the assessment that was due at the time of the sale; in this paragraph, "recorded interest" means an interest, including a lease, recorded under AS 40.17;

(3) the trustor in the trust deed if the trustor is still the owner of the property at the time of the foreclosure sale, but, if the trustor is not still the owner of the property at the time of the foreclosure sale, then to the trustor's successor in interest whose interest appears of record at the time of the foreclosure sale.

(g) The trustee may withhold delivery of the deed under (b) of this section for up to 10 days after the sale. If, during the 10 days, the trustee determines that the sale should not have proceeded, the trustee may not issue the deed but shall

(1) inform the beneficiary, the otherwise successful bidder, and the trustor of the trust deed or the trustor's successor in interest that the sale is rescinded; and

(2) return to the otherwise successful bidder money received from the otherwise successful bidder as a bid on the property; return of this money is the otherwise successful bidder's only remedy if the trustee withholds delivery of the deed under (b) of this section.

(h) If a trustee rescinds a sale under (g) of this section and the obligation secured by the deed of trust remains in default, the trustee may, at the request of the beneficiary, reschedule the sale for a date that is not less than 45 days after the date of the rescinded sale. Not less than 30 days before the rescheduled sale date, the trustee shall

(1) mail notice of the rescheduled sale date by certified mail to the last known address of each of the persons identified by AS 34.20.070(c); and

(2) publish and post the notice of the rescheduled sale date as provided by law for the sale of real property on execution.

(i) Unless a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the sale completely terminates the rights of the trustor of the trust deed in the property.

(j) If a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the deed of trust foreclosed in the rescinded sale is restored to the validity and priority it would have had as though the sale had not occurred.

 Sec. 11. AS 34.20.120(a) is amended to read:

(a) The trustee under a trust deed upon real property given to secure an obligation to pay money and conferring no duties upon the trustee other than the duties that are incidental to the exercise of the power of sale conferred in the deed may be substituted by recording in the mortgage records of the recording district in which the property is located a substitution executed and acknowledged by

(1) all the beneficiaries under the trust deed, or their successors in interest; or

(2) the attorneys for all of the beneficiaries or the attorneys for all of the beneficiaries' successors in interest.

 Sec. 12. AS 34.20.120(b) is amended to read:

(b) The substitution must contain

(1) the date of execution of the trust deed;

(2) the names of the trustee, trustor, and beneficiary, and, if the substitution is executed by the attorney for the beneficiary or successor in interest to the beneficiary, the name, address, and Alaska Bar Association identification number of the attorney;

(3) the book and page where the trust deed is recorded or the serial number assigned to the trust deed by the recorder;

(4) the name of the new trustee; and

(5) an acknowledgment signed and acknowledged by the trustee named in the trust deed of a receipt of a copy of the substitution, or an affidavit of service of a copy of it.

 Sec. 13. AS 34.20 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 34.20.125. Trustee bond required. (a) Before performing the duties of a trustee under AS 34.20.070 and 34.20.080, a person shall obtain a surety bond in the amount of $250,000 to protect the trustors and beneficiaries of trust deeds against fraud or defalcation by the trustee in the performance of the duties.

(b) The bond required by (a) of this section must be a bond that is terminable at any time by the surety by sending written notice by first class United States mail to the obligee and the principal at the address for each that is last known by the surety, and to the department. The bond terminates when 45 days have expired after the date the notice is mailed. The surety is not liable for an act or omission of the principal that occurs after the termination. The surety is not liable after the termination for more than the face amount of the bond, regardless of the number of claims made against the bond or the number of years the bond remains in force. A revision of the amount of the bond is not cumulative.

(c) If a bond terminates under (b) of this section, the person who obtained the bond under (a) of this section shall give notice of the bond's termination to the department and may not act as a trustee until the person obtains another bond under (a) of this section.

(d) Each year, a trustee shall file evidence of the bond with the department. The department shall verify that the evidence is satisfactory to indicate the existence of the bond, keep an updated list of trustees who are bonded, and make the evidence and the list available to the public for inspection. The department may charge the trustee a reasonable fee for verifying the existence of the bond and maintaining the records required by this subsection.

(e) The bonding requirements of this section do not apply to a state agency, including the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation and the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority.

(f) In this section, "department" means the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.

Sponsor Statement
HB 108 - Property Foreclosures and Executions
(3/18/10)

Alaska's statutes on non judicial foreclosure of real property are antiquated, ambiguous and unclear, and therefore, prone to unnecessary litigation. House Bill 163 clarifies the present statutory language, by simplifying and modernizing the foreclosure process. The suggested changes benefit lenders, borrowers and title insurance companies by bringing clarity and certainty to the foreclosure process.

HB 108 would improve many aspects of the foreclosure process as they appear in Title 34. Some of these changes are:

- Clarifies how proceeds from a foreclosure auction are to be disbursed
- Assures that foreclosure trustees are fiscally responsible by imposing reasonable bond requirements
- Allows trustees to nullify sales when mistakes are made that negatively affect the integrity of the sale
- Sets up procedures to follow involving a deceased borrower
- Creates common-sense rules to govern times and methods for posting foreclosure properties
- Defines when one's rights are terminated in the foreclosure process
- Creates an Internet publishing requirement for non-judicial foreclosures
- Allows acceptance of foreclosure auction bids via email, internet, and telephone for greater accessibility

Passage of HB 108 will streamline and simplify the foreclosure language in Alaska statutes and provide for a more open, accessible and fair auction process, benefiting borrowers, lenders, and title insurers, as well as reducing unnecessary litigation.

Explanation of Changes Between SCCSHB108(L&C) 26-LS0318\T and Proposed CS version 26-LS0318\M

Sec. 2 AS 09.35.140(d)(2), Page 3. Lines 16-26, Deleted the following language "and has a total paid circulation or paid distribution of at least 500 copies or 10 percent of the total population of the judicial district, whichever is less" The circulation requirements were deleted since these are pervasively covered by the Second Class Mailing Permit. Hopefully, this will allow smaller papers to flourish and compete, and thus drive down the incredibly high price of legal notice publication.

Sec. 7 AS 34.20.080(a), Page 7, line 28. The word "escrow" was changed to "trust account." This is easier for trustees to follow.

Sec. 10. AS 34.20.080(g), Page 9, line 15 changes "five days" to "ten days". This allows more time to find and correct errors. This change is borrower-friendly since a property that goes to sale when it should not directly impacts the borrower.

Sec. 13 AS 34.20.125(e), Page 11, lines 24-27, Deleted all language. This deletes the bonding exemption for title providers. Foreclosures involve complex procedures and large dollar amounts. Title agencies have no special expertise warranting an exemption. Only state agencies are now exempted.

Explanation of Previous Changes to HB108

Sec. 2 AS 09.35.140(b). New language expands the list of qualified Internet sites, to newspapers of general circulation provided they meet the requirements of proposed AS 09.35.140(d) and are free to the public. Thus, if a newspaper qualifies to run legal ads it will be qualified to run the internet publication.

Sec. 4. AS 34.20.070(b). Removed the requirement that the notice of default must include language that the payment to cure the default must be made two days prior to the sale date due to the fact that the default can now be cured up to the date of sale.

AS 34.20.070(e) adds new conforming language to AS 34.20.070(b)(9), and gives an exception for deeds that were entered into before the effective date of the Act and provided for a different time period to cure the default before the sale.

Sec. 6 AS 34.20.070(e) clarified the time to the time of sale for curing the default and sums that need to be paid.

AS 34.20.080(j) adds new language that states that, if a sale is rescinded under (g) of this section, the deed of trust foreclosed in the rescinded sale is restored to the validity and priority it would have had as though the sale did not occur.

Section 7. AS 34.20.080(a) is amended to require that the proceeds from a foreclosure sale are placed in trust until disbursed. This section allows a trustee to accept foreclosure bids by telephone, the Internet, and electronic mail if certain conditions are met.

Section 8. Amends AS 34.20.080(b) Allowing the attorney or other agent of the trustee to conduct the sale. Additionally, allows the trustee to set reasonable rules for the conduct of the sale. Adds language that conforms the deed delivery requirements to the new provision in sec. 34.20.070(g) allowing the trustee to rescind the sale under certain circumstances.

Section 9. Amends AS 34.20.080(e) Limiting the postponement of a foreclosure sale to not more than 12 months unless a new notice of sale is given. Establishes that postponement for up to 12 months does not provide a basis for challenging the validity of the foreclosure because of how long the foreclosure has been pending.

Section 10. Adds a new subsections to AS 34.20.080(foreclosure sale).

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(f) indicates how any cash proceeds of the sale are to be distributed after delivery of a deed.

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(g) allows a trustee to withhold delivery of the deed for up to ten days, prohibits the trustee from issuing the deed under certain conditions, and describes what the trustee must do when rescinding the sale.

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(h) allows the trustee to reschedule a rescinded sale, establishes a minimum time that must elapse after the rescinded sale before the new sale may be held, and establishes the notice procedure that the trustee must follow for the rescheduled sale.

E-Mail Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

Proposed sec. 34.20.080(i) establishes that if a sale is not rescinded it completely terminates the rights of the trustor of the deed in the property.

Section 11. AS 34.20.120(a) is amended. Allowing the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest to execute and acknowledge the substitution of a trustee for certain trust needs.

Section 12. AS 34.20.120(b) is amended. Adds a requirement to the contents of a trustee substitution for a situation when the substitution is executed by the attorneys for the beneficiaries or their successors in interest.

Section 13. Adds a new section AS 34.20.125(a) requiring a trustee to provide a surety bond before performing trustee duties under a deed of trust foreclosure.

AS 34.20.125(b) requires the bond to be terminable at any time by the surety by complying with certain requirements, indicates when the bond terminates, and indicates that the surety is not liable after termination for more than the face amount of the bond. States that a revision of the amount of the bond is not cumulative.

AS 34.20.125(c) gives notice requirements for a termination of the bond.

AS 34.20.125(d) requires a trustee to file evidence of a bond each year with the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Requires the department to verify that the evidence is satisfactory, keep an updated list of bonded trustees, and make the evidence and the list available to the public. Allows the department to charge the trustee a reasonable fee for the verification and maintenance of records.

AS 34.20.125(e) exempts state agencies from the bonding requirements.

AS 34.20.125(f) defines "department" in this section to mean the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development

RE: House Bill 108 "An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deeds of trust."

To Whom It May Concern:

This letter is written in support of House Bill 108, relating to Deeds of Trust and Foreclosures.

I am Regional Counsel for First American Title Insurance Company. First American is the leading title insurer in the United States, and in Alaska. I am a 20 year member of the Alaska Bar, and a former long time resident of Alaska. In my capacity as an in-house attorney for First American, I have had many occasions to be involved in non-judicial foreclosure related issues and controversies, as First American has produced title insurance produces related to such foreclosures, and acted as trustee in many cases as well.

HB 108 would clarify a large number of issues relative to non-judicial foreclosure actions. It would fill in gaps in the current statutes relative to procedure. It would clarify issues which Alaska Supreme Court opinions over the years have made unclear. The result of passage of the bill would be a clearer pattern of conduct for the parties to the foreclosure, which should result in less litigation and higher bidding for the properties involved in the process. I urge your yes vote for the bill, and would be happy to answer any questions you may have regarding it.

Very truly yours,

UTA
United Trustees Association

February 25, 2010

Honorable Hollis French
Chair, Senate Judiciary Committee
State Capitol, Room 417
Juneau, AK 99801

Re: HB 108

Dear Chairman French:

I write to you on behalf of the United Trustees Association and its members in regard to HB 108. The United Trustees Association ("UTA") is a nonprofit association whose membership consists of trustees, substitute trustees, foreclosure agents, posting and publishing companies and others in the deed of trust default services industry.

The latest version of HB 108 provides much-needed clarity and additional structure to the existing statutory scheme governing Alaska's nonjudicial foreclosures, and UTA generally supports the Bill. However, the UTA would like to bring the following concerns to your attention, as important matters that should be considered for revision in the final version of the Bill.

Period for Issuance of the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale

As specified in Section 10 of the Bill, the proposed new subsection of AS 34.20.080(g), provides that the time period within which a foreclosure trustee must issue a Trustee's Deed Upon Sale to a third party purchaser is five days. Presently, there is no maximum time period for issuance of the Trustee's Deed in Alaska. UTA believes that a five-day period is too short to allow bid funds to be remitted and/or cleared for deposit, for a final quality control review to be conducted, and for the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale to be generated and delivered to a third party purchaser. This is especially true when a foreclosure sale is cried in a remote borough and the auctioneer cannot make the afternoon overnight express mail cutoff so that the funds are not remitted to the trustee for processing until the second business day after the sale. In the case of any sale conducted after Wednesday, the intervening weekend would leave only three business days for the necessary action and delivery of the deed by the foreclosure trustee.

2030 Main Street, Suite 1300 • Irvine, CA 92614
Tel. 949.260.9020 • Fax 949.260.9021
www.unitedtrustees.com

Other Western states have much more lenient statutory periods within which a Trustee's Deed Upon Sale can be issued. California Civil Code section 2924h provides that the foreclosure sale is deemed perfected as of 8:00 a.m. on the day of the sale if the Trustee's Deed is recorded within 15 days of the sale. While this is not an absolute statutory deadline, it is a reasonable and desirable standard to enjoy the benefit of the sale date perfection. Nevada Revised Statutes provide that the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale must be recorded within 20 days of the sale. Arizona Revised Statutes section 33-811 requires that the trustee deliver or record the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale within seven days. Oregon Revised Statutes require that the Trustee's Deed be issued within ten days of the sale. Thus, the UTA would recommend that the time period in AS 34.20.080(g) as presently proposed be increased to ten days. It would not appear that there would be any substantial detriment to interested parties to increase the period to ten days, especially when there is presently no deadline. If the legislature is not inclined to amend the Bill to provide ten days, at a minimum, UTA would recommend that the five day period be defined in terms of business days, not calendar days.

Deposit of Sale Proceeds

The proposed language in Section 7 of the Bill regarding the process of conducting a sale, found in the second sentence of AS 34.20.080(a) provides: "The proceeds from a sale shall be placed in escrow until they are disbursed." This provision seems misplaced. UTA recommends that this provision be placed in AS 34.20.080(b), in Section 8 of the Bill, just before the sentence that reads, "trustee shall execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed to the property sold." The basis for this recommendation is that a trustee would not want to deposit the third party purchaser's funds into an escrow until it is determined that a Trustee's Deed Upon Sale will be issued, after quality control review and verification of the availability of the bid funds by the issuing bank.

UTA is also concerned with the use of the term, "in escrow." It is unclear whether this terminology would require trustees to open a separate escrow account with a licensed escrow company for each sale for the disbursement of funds, or if it would be sufficient to deposit the funds into the trustee's separate surplus funds or trust account pending disbursement. Requiring a separate escrow to be opened for the deposit of funds from every foreclosure sale would entail additional time, cost and expense in the post-sale processing of the sale proceeds. Presently, the sale proceeds are deposited by the trustee into an operating account so that the checks to the foreclosing lender for the total debt can be processed timely and the refund checks to the third party purchaser can be generated in time to deliver with the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale. UTA believes that requiring an "escrow" to be opened with a separate company would be unnecessary and detrimental to the current efficiencies required in processing the sale proceeds. Thus,

UTA suggests that the entire sentence "The proceeds from a sale shall be placed in escrow until they are disbursed," should be omitted from the Bill. However, to the extent that the legislature is concerned with the security of the funds in the event of the insolvency of the trustee, perhaps the language of the Bill could require deposit in a "trust account" as opposed to "in escrow." Without any revision to this provision as drafted, UTA feels that the required process is not clearly defined, and if the intent of the current terminology is that a separate escrow is required for each sale, this is unnecessary.

Respectfully submitted for your consideration.

Very truly yours,

Re: House Bill 108 "An Act relating to real property foreclosures, to the sale of property on execution, and to deeds of trust."

Dear Members of the Legislature,

I am a real estate lawyer, real estate broker and title insurance licensee.

I have had the opportunity to review HB 108, which updates the provisions of Alaska's foreclosure law. It contains many housekeeping items that clarify existing law, as well as some sections that will take Alaska solidly into the 21st century.

An outstanding provision is the requirement for publication on the Internet. Most folks look to the internet today for foreclosure information. Having this information on the web will improve dissemination of the sale information to the general public, and thus it should increase the number of bids above the offset bid.

Bids above the offset bid are in everyone's interest. The debtor receives the net proceeds of the sale. The lender does not have to take title, renovate and market the property. And the successful bidder is obviously happy.

I encourage you to adopt this bill. It is my understanding that, if adopted, this bill will become a model for legislation in other states. Please contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Kirk Wickersham

re: HB 108 – "A Bill Relating to Foreclosures, etc."
Our File No. 85-19-15

Dear Representative Olson:

I am writing on my own behalf, and on behalf of my law firm, to voice my opposition to the as-written version of HB 108 changing Alaska's laws relating to deed of trust foreclosures. While the majority of the bill contains beneficial changes, HB 108, as written, will create a requirement for Internet publication that will result in giving monopoly power to the law firm that wrote HB 108.

HB 108 requires publication on the Internet prior to a foreclosure. I have no objection to Internet publication as a general matter. In fact, current law requires that all default notices must be published in a newspaper, and most newspapers that publish default notices simultaneously publish the default notice on the newspaper's accompanying website. Every judicial district already has a newspaper of general circulation that publishes legal notices online. Therefore, almost all default notices in Alaska are already published on the Internet.

However, HB 108 goes further to provide that, to qualify as a website for publishing default notices, the website must have 5,000 unique visitors a month, be used primarily for advertising foreclosure properties, and have senior management within the state. Under this definition, almost no websites will qualify. The websites operated by the Anchorage Daily News, Alaska Journal of Commerce, Juneau Empire, and Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, among others, will not qualify because they are not "used primarily to advertise real property under foreclosure[.]" Websites such as Craigslist, which was mentioned favorably in the February 23, 2009 committee hearing, would not qualify because it is not used primarily for foreclosures, and because it does not have senior management in Alaska. Websites operated by banks will not qualify because they are not used primarily for foreclosures. Websites operated by local law firms will not qualify because they do not get 5,000 unique visitors a month. Finally, the State of Alaska's own website will not qualify because it is not used primarily to advertise foreclosures.

It is my belief that the only website that will qualify under the current HB 108 is USA-Foreclosure.com, which is half owned by Mr. Stephen Routh, whose law firm wrote HB108. Mr. Routh's law firm, with over 400 employees and offices in seven states, should not be granted monopoly power to conduct all foreclosures in Alaska.

I recommend the committee do one of two things with HB 108. I would recommend that all provisions relating to Internet advertising be eliminated. This is what happened last year with HB 163 and I recommend the same change be made now. Alternately, I recommend that proposed subsections AS 09.35.140(c)(3), (5) and (6) be eliminated. This would take away the requirement that a website "be used primarily to advertise real property under foreclosure", that the website have 5,000 unique visitors a month, and the website have senior management in Alaska. This would allow newspaper websites, bank websites, law firm websites, and Craigslist to qualify.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide information to the Committee on HB 108. If I can be of any further assistance, please don't hesitate to contact me.

Very truly yours,

CS for HB 129 (RLS) Revoking Real Estate Salesperson Licenses

CS for House Bill 129 (RLS) makes a simple, but needed, correction to existing law. Under current law, the Alaska Real Estate Commission must revoke the license of a real estate broker or associate broker if that person is convicted of a felony or other crime committed while licensed that, in the judgment of the commission, affects the ability of that person to practice as a broker or associate broker competently and safely or who is convicted of forgery, theft, extortion, conspiracy to defraud creditors, or fraud. Unfortunately this current law does not apply to real estate salespersons.

HB 129 simply adds "salesperson" to the statute and thereby enables the Real Estate Commission to likewise revoke the license of a salesperson who commits the same listed crimes. HB 129 also clarifies that the Alaska Real Estate Commission has the authority not only to revoke, but also to refuse to grant or renew the license of a salesperson who was convicted of the listed offenses at a time before the effective date of HB 129.

The need for this legislation came to the attention of the Real Estate Commission after a licensed real estate salesperson was indicted on five counts of bribery, money laundering, and importing a controlled substance. After reaching a plea agreement, all but the drug trafficking charges were dropped. After the guilty plea was entered on the drug trafficking charge, the Real Estate Commission discovered that they had no power to revoke this real estate salesperson's license and after serving the sentence imposed, the real estate salesperson continued to work in a field where customers place faith in their agent's trustworthiness and ability to follow the laws of the State of Alaska to the letter.

As of November 2008 there were 1460 real estate salespersons licensed in Alaska; compared to only 411 associate brokers and 483 brokers. With so many real estate salespersons licensed in Alaska, the urgency and need for this bill is clear. HB 129 empowers the Real Estate Commission to appropriately regulate its profession – including revoking a salesperson's license – and it protects the public interest.

Representative_Jay_Ramras@legis.state.ak.us

February 19, 2009

Dear Legislators:

The Alaska Real Estate Commission would like to express support for HB129. The current statute AS 08.88.071(10) only provides for a Broker or an Associate Broker to have their license revoked if convicted of a felony or other crime while licensed.

The Commission, through the Division of Corporations, Business and Professional Licensing issues three types of licenses: Broker, Associate Broker and Salesperson.

This proposed legislation would complete the process that would allow the Commission to also pursue the revocation of the salesperson license. The majority of the licensees are salespersons and therefore, an increased probability would exist that a felony would be committed by a licensed salesperson.

The Commission is tasked with the duty to provide for real estate practice that is conducted competently and safely. All licensees (Broker, Associate Broker and Salespersons) convicted of a felony should be licensed at the discretion of the Real Estate Commission in order to practice in Alaska.

We ask that you consider making the change by adding the license type, Salesperson, to the existing list of licenses in AS 08.88.071(10).

HB 141

"An Act relating to the Interstate Compact for Juveniles; relating to the State Council for Interstate Adult Offender Supervision; amending Rules 4 and 24, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

This bill would enact the new Interstate Compact for Juveniles into law. This would replace the old compact which was created in 1955. The purpose of the Compact is to ensure the supervision of juvenile offenders and the return of runaways, escapees and absconders. The Compact provides the procedural means to regulate the movement of juveniles who are under court supervision across state lines. The Association of Compact Administrators estimates that the Interstate Compact on Juveniles is used in 20,000 to 30,000 transfer and supervision cases annually.

The new Compact ensures that all states will have identical language in their statutes which would help with compliance issues. The new Compact provides procedures for enforcement which the old Compact lacked. The Interstate Compact for Juveniles also provides for the collection of standardized information and information sharing systems.

This is a chance for the states to have the means to deal with state problems and enforce state solutions without having any federal intervention. 35 states have already passed this compact. If Alaska chooses not to enact this Compact the state would have to deal with every other state on a case-by-case basis which would cost the state more money than it would cost to implement the Compact.

The compact provides for the safety of the juvenile offender and the state as a whole. The importance of this compact cannot be overstated. This legislation is necessary to ensure the public safety and security of Alaskans. It will help ensure that Alaska receives notification about juveniles who are relocated or traveling to Alaska before they arrive here, and will expedite Alaska's ability to send juveniles from here to other jurisdictions.

RESOLUTION OF THE AMERICAN PROBATION AND PAROLE ASSOCIATION

"Interstate Compact for Juveniles"

Whereas, The Interstate Compact on Juveniles was established in 1955 and is the primary compact addressing the needs of juveniles within the justice system who move between states and has not been sufficiently amended in its 47-year existence; and

Whereas, This compact is the only vehicle for the controlled movement of juveniles released from custody or on probation across state lines; and

Whereas, The complexities of the compact have become more difficult to administer, and many jurisdictions have expanded supervision expectations to include currently unregulated practices such as victim input, victim notification requirements and sex offender registration; and

Whereas, After national surveys and a detailed study by a task force appointed by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, the overwhelming recommendation has been to amend the document to bring about an effective management capacity that addresses public safety concerns, offender accountability and effective treatment needs.

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED, That the Board of Directors of the American Probation and Parole Association hereby endorses and recommends adoption of the amended and newly titled Interstate Compact for Juveniles by the 50 states and affected territories of the United States of America.

Dear Mr. Sprague:

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the National District Attorneys Association I want to offer our support for the Interstate Compact for Juveniles. Our Board unanimously voted to support your effort during our recent meeting in Texas.

As local prosecutors we have to work daily with juveniles that require the attention of our court system and we recognize the need for interstate supervision of juvenile offenders and for the return of those who have escaped, run away or fail to live up to release expectations.

We also recognize that the changes in the complexities of our society have made many of the provisions of the compact badly out dated. Ideas such as community corrections, sexual predator registrations and victims rights provisions all impact on the how states must relate to each other in dealing with criminal offenders and in this instance, juveniles.

The Board of Directors considered the importance of addressing consistent treatment of juveniles in need of both consequences and treatment. The proposed Compact language provides states with the means of accomplishing these goals.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Sprague:

The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) is pleased to support the proposed Interstate Compact Initiative for Juveniles. As an organization that provides services to runaway youth and their families, we are pleased that this enhanced initiative will ensure consistent use of those policies governing the Compact.

Although, primarily designed to assist those organizations working within the juvenile justice, and social service systems, the Compact will assist NCMEC in it's work to bring children back home by providing law enforcement professionals with clear guidelines and procedures once a missing youth is recovered.

As you work to implement this initiative throughout the 50 states, please do not hesitate to let us know if we can be of further assistance in this most important venture.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Foster:

As one of participating entities, the National Juvenile Detention Association (NJDA) has been actively involved in the review and update of the Interstate Compact or Juveniles, originally established in 1955. The two-year effort to modernize the Compact has been thorough and comprehensive and has engaged the efforts of many practitioners from the juvenile justice field. The process addressed a multiplicity of issues regarding the Compact that have been identified as problematic or outdated in an effort to develop a document that meets the current needs of stakeholders in the signatory states.

The nation's detention centers deal with the Contract frequently as the entities responsible for housing juveniles found to be in violation of placement agreements or of state laws in the receiving states. The proposed modifications to the Compact should address many of the issues that have created problems for detention centers and will offer assistance to them in dealing with both sending and receiving states.

As the association serving juvenile detention nationally, NJDA supports the proposed changes to the Compact. The changes are designed to address the needs of the states, of the agencies within the states, and of the public in ensuring that placement agreements are complied with and community safety is ensured.

We are happy to offer assistance to you in your efforts to achieve adoption of the revised Interstate Compact for Juveniles.

Sincerely,

Earl L. Dunlap

The Honorable Jay Ramras
Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Alaska State Capitol
Juneau, AK 99811

Dear Representative Ramras:

In the House Judiciary Committee hearing held on March 27, 2009, Representative Max Gruenberg asked the following questions about House Bill 141 (Interstate Compact for Juveniles):

- When did the first state adopt the new Interstate Compact for Juveniles?

We contacted Keith Scott, Director of the National Center for Interstate Compacts at the Council of State Governments, to answer this question; he reported that the first state to adopt the new Compact did so in March 2003 (North Dakota). The 35th state to adopt the Compact, Illinois, did so in August 2008. Adoption of the Compact by 35 states placed the Compact into "active" status, meaning that participating states are now developing the new rules that will govern interstate travel by juveniles. With the 35th state enacting the Compact, the first Interstate Commission meeting was held in December 2008. States that have not enacted the new Compact by December 2009 will not be able to transfer juveniles to and from states operating under the new Compact at that time, and will be required to develop individualized Memoranda of Agreement to transfer juveniles to and from those states.

- What are Hawaii's amendments to its bill on the Interstate Compact for Juveniles, noted in the materials provided by Rep. Coghill's office?

To answer this question we contacted Hawai's juvenile compact administrator. She stated that Hawaii is currently considering two changes to the Compact:

1.) In Article III, subsection (h)(7), deleting the phrase "regulated person or entity" and replacing it with the word "juvenile." The Hawaiian compact administrator said they believed the phrase "regulated person or entity" to be confusing.

2.) In Article VI of the Compact (found in Section 4 of Alaska's HB 141), deleting section (f), which reads: "The existing rules governing the operation of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles shall be null and void 12 months after the first meeting of the Interstate Commission created under this compact." The Hawaiian compact administrator said they made this change to ensure that Hawaii could continue to work with states that have adopted the new compact as well as states that continue to operate under the old compact.

We consulted with Jan Rutherdale and Deborah Behr at the Department of Law on these issues. Our two agencies agree that Hawaii's amendments are not needed in Alaska's bill and would only complicate what is intended to be a nationally uniform document. In the first case, we do not believe the term used in the Compact, "regulated person or entity," is confusing. It clearly refers to the individuals subject to the compact. In the second case, we believe Alaska's ability to work with other states, including those that do not adopt the new compact, is ensured in Section 12 of Alaska's HB 141, which reads:

> The Department of Health and Social Services may continue to implement the provisions of former AS 47.15.010 (the old Interstate Compact on Juveniles), as it read on the day before the effective date of this Act, to certain states that are compacting states to the Uniform Interstate Compact on Juveniles, but have not yet enacted the Interstate Compact for Juveniles, set out in AS 47.15.010, as repealed and reenacted by sec. 4 of this Act, or a substantially similar form of that compact.

- Have other states made amendents to the Compact?

To answer this question we contacted the Keith Scott, Director of the National Center for Interstate Compacts at the Council of State Governments. We asked Mr. Scott if he could provide a list of other states' amendments to the Interstate Compact for Juveniles. Mr. Scott said no such list has been assembled by the Council. While he has received occasional inquiries and provided feedback on potential amendments on the Compact from various states, he has not maintained a list of these inquiries and does not know which, if any, of these potential amendments have been adopted. To fully answer this question therefore would require us to contact individual states and review their legislation that enacted the Interstate Compact for Juveniles.

At the request of Acting Chair Nancy Dahlstrom we are sending a copy of this response to the members of the House Finance Committee, the next committee of referral for HB 141.

Sincerely,

Tony Newman

MEMORANDUM March 30, 2009

SUBJECT: 2009 Revisor's Bill Sectional Summary - CSHB 152(JUD)
(Work Order No. 26-LS0158\S)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KLC
Assistant Revisor

The following is a sectional summary of the 2009 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the revisor of statutes

> . . . shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state.

To assist the reader in understanding the bill, I have summarized the contents by listing sections that have similar purposes or effects.

Sections that delete, repeal, or update obsolete provisions: Sections 2 - 5, 14, 16 - 18, 20, 25, 26, 32, 35, 36, 40, 41, 48, 61 - 65, 69, 77, 82, 83, and 85 amend or repeal provisions that have become obsolete through other legislative action.

Sections that correct errors or oversights: Sections 7, 9, 12, 13, 15, 22, 23; 27 - 29, 37, 43, 50, 59, 66 - 68, 70 - 73, 76, and 78 - 81 correct errors or oversights.

Sections that improve the form or substance of the law: Sections 1, 6, 8, 10, 11, 19, 21, 24, 30, 31, 33, 34, 38, 39, 42, 44 - 47, 49, 51- 58, 60, 74, and 75 propose amendments to improve the form or substance of the statutory law of Alaska.

SECTIONAL SUMMARY

Bill section 1 substitutes a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture in AS 03.09.020(a). There is no statutorily created division of agriculture. Currently there is an administratively created division of agriculture within the Department of Natural Resources; however, that name could be changed administratively. The generic reference will apply no matter what name is given to the division administratively.

Bill section 2 substitutes a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences" in AS 03.22.010. The University no longer has an institute called the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences." According to the office of the Dean of the School of Natural Resources and Agricultural Sciences, what was the Institute of Agricultural Sciences is now known as the Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station.

Bill section 3 amends AS 03.22.020 by substituting a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences". See bill section 2.

Bill section 4 amends AS 03.22.040 by adding "and Forestry" to reflect the current name of the University of Alaska Agriculture and Forestry Experiment Station and makes the reference to the University generic for consistency with other references. See bill section 2.

Bill section 5 amends AS 03.22.050 by substituting a generic reference to "college or department of the University of Alaska responsible for the agricultural and forestry experiment station" for a specific reference to the "Institute of Agricultural Sciences". See bill section 2.

Bill section 6 substitutes a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture in AS 03.47.040(2). See bill section 1.

Bill section 7 amends AS 08.36.246(a) to repeal subparagraph (B), which refers to "a specialty examination given by the Central Regional Examining Board" because there is no such exam given by that entity. The Chief Assistant Attorney General of the Legislation and Regulations section at the Attorney General's office is in accord with this change.

Bill section 8 inserts the word "acid" in AS 11.56.762 to reflect the full name of the system established in AS 44.41.035.

Bill section 9 corrects an apparent error by changing "adopted parent" to "adoptive parent" in AS 12.55.125(b). Although Alaska law provides a process for parents to adopt children, it does not provide for the adoption of parents by children.

Bill section 10 adds an "or" and changes "from" to "to" to improve the form and readability of AS 12.61.020(a).

Bill section 11 deletes two commas to improve the form and readability of AS 12.61.020(c).

Bill section 12 deletes "is" and inserts "are" to create agreement between the two subjects and the verb in the first sentence of AS 12.62.160(a).

Bill section 13 changes "heirs" plural to the singular "heir" in AS 13.06.050(21) to match the singular tense used elsewhere in the paragraph. Under AS 01.10.050, words in the singular include the plural. In this instance, use of the singular throughout improves readability.

Bill section 14 amends AS 14.03.075(g)(2) to delete a reference to the definition of "individualized education program team" in AS 14.30.350, since that definition was repealed in 2001. This section replaces the reference with a description.

Bill section 15 changes the phrase "counting period" in AS 14.17.600 to "count period" to match the usage in AS 14.17.420(a)(2) and 14.17.990.

Bill section 16 amends AS 14.17.990(5) to reflect the repeal of 20 U.S.C. 7703(f)(2)(B), by inserting the word "former".

Bill section 17 deletes "by July 1, 1997," from AS 14.20.149(a), as the deadline has become obsolete.

Bill section 18 amends AS 14.35.025 by deleting a reference to the "United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare," which no longer exists (it has been superseded by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Education), and inserting a generic reference to "the appropriate federal agency."

Bill section 19 deletes the word "or" in one place in AS 14.40.826(a)(5), and adds commas and the word "have" in two places to improve the form and readability of the paragraph.

Bill section 20 amends AS 14.50.010 to indicate the repeal of 20 U.S.C. 401 - 602.

Bill section 21 amends AS 14.57.199 to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of state libraries, archives, and museums. The division is not created in statute and could be renamed or reorganized administratively.

Bill section 22 deletes "two-thirds" and replaces it with "three-fourths" in AS 15.45.160 and adds a provision relating to the minimum number of signatures per district to conform this section to AS 15.45.140 and article XI, sec. 3, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Bill section 23 deletes "two-thirds" and replaces it with "three-fourths" in AS 15.45.390 and adds a provision relating to the minimum number of signatures per district to conform this section to AS 15.45.370 and article XI, sec. 3, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Bill section 24 makes a conforming change in AS 17.37.070(6) to reflect the removal of the definition of "treatment facility" in AS 47.14.990(12). The term "treatment facility" is not used anywhere in AS 47.14, so a definition of the term does not belong in AS 47.14.990. The term "treatment facility" is used in AS 47.12, and a definition of the term identical to that in AS 47.14.990 appears in AS 47.12.990. AS 17.37.070(6) refers to the definition of "treatment facility" in AS 47.14.990. Since that term and the other terms defined by reference are also defined in AS 47.12.990, and those definitions are identical to the ones found in AS 47.14.990, a reference to AS 47.12.990 is substituted for the original reference here to preserve the content of the definitions for purposes of this section despite the removal of the definition of "treatment facility" in bill section 73.

Bill section 25 deletes material applicable only before October 1, 2006 from AS 19.15.025(a).

Bill section 26 deletes material applicable only before October 1, 2006 from AS 19.15.025(b).

Bill section 27 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.120(a) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 28 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.500(11) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 29 deletes the word "care" and inserts "insurance" in AS 21.54.500(17) to accurately reflect the title of the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996.

Bill section 30 replaces a comma with the word "and" to improve the readability of AS 23.05.060(3).

Bill section 31 deletes "Alaska Workers' Compensation Board" in AS 23.05.067(a)(1)(B) and replaces it with "division of workers' compensation in the department." The reports referred to in AS 23.30.155(m) and (n) are made to the division.

Bill section 32 amends AS 23.20.175(c) to remove an obsolete date reference.

Bill section 33 is a conforming amendment to AS 23.20.276(b) that reflects the repeal of AS 23.20.525(a)(4) and (5) and the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 38.

Bill section 34 amends AS 23.20.277(c) to remove a paragraph that has become obsolete, as well as an obsolete date reference.

Bill section 35 is a conforming amendment to AS 23.20.278 that reflects the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 38.

Bill section 36 corrects a citation in AS 23.20.401(b)(2) to reflect a 1982 renumbering of the referenced paragraph in the U.S.C.

Bill section 37 amends AS 23.20.408(h) to remove a reference to AS 23.20.408(g), since that subsection has not included the defined phrase since 1982.

Bill section 38 amends AS 23.20.525(a) to remove several obsolete date references, to repeal paragraphs (4) and (5) which have become obsolete, and to renumber the remaining paragraphs. Also makes a conforming change in AS 23.20.525(b).

Bill section 39 replaces the words "newsboys" and "salesman" in AS 23.20.526(a) to avoid use of gender specific terms; the phrase "service performed by an individual under the age of 18", used to replace "newsboys", is found in 26 U.S.C. 3306(c)(15)(A). Deletes a grammatically incorrect occurrence of the word "some". Inserts "United States" before "Secretary of Labor" and substitutes "that" for "which" to conform with current drafting style. Makes conforming changes required by the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 38.

Bill section 40 makes conforming amendments in AS 23.20.526(d) required by the renumbering of paragraphs in AS 23.20.525(a) in bill section 38.

Bill section 41 removes obsolete date references in AS 23.20.530(b), and changes the word "tax" to "taxation". Also substitutes "that" for "which" and semi-colons for commas to conform to current drafting style.

Bill section 42 amends AS 24.05.135(c) to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of state libraries, archives, and museums. The division is not created in statute and could be renamed or reorganized administratively.

Bill section 43 shortens the descriptive phrase "voter approval of alteration or abolishment of service areas" in AS 29.10.200(46) to "service areas" to reflect the scope of AS 29.35.450. Under AS 29.35.450(d), all of AS 29.35.450 applies to home rule municipalities, not just subsection (c), which deals with voter approval of alteration or abolishment of a service area. This corrects a drafting error.

The section amends a reference in AS 29.10.200(50) to reflect the 1992 renumbering of AS 29.45.570 as AS 29.45.800.

This section also amends AS 29.10.200(57) to remove "construction" and insert "revenue bonds" to reflect the actual content of AS 29.47.260 as noted in the current catchline. The original catchline for AS 29.47.260 was "construction" and that has been changed editorially to "Applicability of AS 37.10.085", but the text of the section, which relates to revenue bonds, has not been changed. AS 37.10.085 relates to financial aid to corporations by the state or a political subdivision of the state.

Bill section 44 adds language to AS 29.46.010(b) indicating that the subsection applies to home rule municipalities. The subsection already appears on the list in AS 29.10.200 of limitations on home rule powers. The change brings this section into conformity with other sections on the list, which include applicability in the text of the section listed.

Bill section 45 changes the word "section" in AS 29.46.030(a) to "subsection", since only subsection (a) of that section refers to findings.

Bill section 46 amends AS 29.60.860(b) to resolve a contradiction between the first and second sentences of the subsection. The agency has indicated that the revised wording is consistent with the agency's interpretation of the statute.

Bill section 47 deletes a reference to AS 12.55.185 in AS 33.16.090(c)(1) and replaces it with a reference to AS 12.55.127. The definition referred to in AS 12.55.185 simply directs the reader to the definition in AS 12.55.127, so the change enables the reader to refer to the relevant section directly.

Bill section 48 amends AS 33.30.015 by deleting "on and after August 17, 1999", a phrase setting a date after which the commissioner of corrections may not perform certain actions. Since the date is long past, the phrase is no longer needed.

Bill section 49 amends AS 38.07.030 to substitute a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture, since that division is not created in statute and could be changed administratively. See bill section 1.

Bill section 50 amends AS 39.25.110(14) by adding the word "Alaska" before "Oil and Gas Conservation Commission", to conform to the statutory name of that commission created in AS 31.05.005.

Bill section 51 amends AS 41.10.100(b)(6) by substituting a generic description for a specific reference to the division of agriculture. See the full explanation at bill section 1.

Bill section 52 amends AS 44.41.035(b) by inserting "identification" in two places in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 53 amends AS 44.41.035(l) by inserting the word "identification" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 54 amends AS 44.41.035(n) by inserting "identification" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 55 amends AS 44.41.035(p) by inserting "DNA" in order to make all references to the DNA identification registration system consistent.

Bill section 56 amends AS 45.07.309(a) to change "man" to "person" in order to avoid a gender specific reference, and "must" to "shall" since the subsection imposes a duty on a person.

Bill section 57 amends AS 45.10.220(6) to change the phrase "multiplied times" to "multiplied by" to conform to usage elsewhere in the Alaska Statutes.

Bill section 58, without changing the wording of the section, removes the subparagraph designators (A) and (B), making AS 45.14.403(a)(2) a unitary paragraph, rather than a paragraph with subparagraphs. This change is consistent with the Article 4A of the Uniform Commercial Code. It removes an inappropriate break following subparagraph (A) to clarify that the phrase "payment occurs when the credit is withdrawn or, if not withdrawn, at midnight of the day on which the credit is withdrawable and the receiving bank learns of that fact" applies to the material in (A) as well as (B).

Bill section 59 corrects a reference in AS 45.29.313(b) to reflect the content of the corresponding sections of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (secured transactions).

Bill section 60 removes an extraneous "or" from AS 45.29.314(a).

Bill section 61 amends AS 45.50.471(b)(34) to remove AS 08.66.200 - 08.66.250 from a spanned reference, since those sections were repealed in 2002.

Bill section 62 updates a reference to federal law in AS 46.03.450(8). The section cites 49 U.S.C. 1671 et seq. and 49 U.S.C. 2001 et seq. Those sections have been combined, and recodified (without substantive change) at 49 U.S.C. 60101 et seq., so 49 U.S.C. 60101 et seq. is cited instead.

Bill section 63 removes an outdated date reference from AS 46.06.090(a).

Bill section 64 removes an outdated date reference from AS 46.06.090(b).

Bill section 65 removes a reference to AS 46.14.170(b) from AS 46.14.170(c); this is a conforming amendment required by the repeal of AS 46.14.170(b). See bill section 82.

Bill section 66 changes a reference in AS 46.14.300(c) from "15 U.S.C. 631" to "15 U.S.C. 632." AS 46.14.300(c) refers to the definition of a "small business concern." 15 U.S.C. 631 is the first section of the federal Small Business Act, but it is a purpose section and does not contain a definition of "small business concern." Criteria for identifying a "small business concern" are listed in 15 U.S.C. 632, and that section is referred to as the source of the definition elsewhere in federal law. See sec. 2, 105 P.L. 135 (Small Business Reauthorization Act of 1997) ("the term 'small business concern' has the meaning given the term in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)").

Bill section 67 changes a reference in AS 46.14.990(24) from "15 U.S.C. 631" to "15 U.S.C. 632." See bill section 66 for further explanation.

Bill section 68 updates a reference in AS 46.15.035(c)(2) from AS 16.05.870 to AS 16.05.871. AS 16.05.870 was repealed and renumbered as AS 41.14.870 by Executive Order No. 107, and that section was in turn repealed and renumbered as AS 16.05.871 in Executive Order No. 114. This section inserts the current cite.

Bill section 69 amends AS 46.15.165(c) by inserting the word "former" before a reference to 43 U.S.C. 270-1 and 270-2, to reflect the 1971 repeal of those sections. The reference is to land for which the patent, deed, or certificate was issued under those sections, so the reference should be retained.

Bill section 70 adds two words to AS 46.30.080 to correct a reference to the name of the advisory board created in AS 46.30.020, consistent with other references to the board in AS 46.30.

Bill section 71 amends AS 47.10.396 to remove the word "nonprofit" in two places to conform to amendments made by ch. 107, SLA 1998 to AS 47.10.392, 47.10.398, and 47.10.399, which now refer to corporations rather than nonprofit corporations.

Bill section 72 adds a subsection to AS 47.14.100 defining the term "adult family member" for purposes of that section. This change is related to the repeal of AS 47.14.295(1). The phrase "adult family member" is not used in AS 47.14.205 - 47.14.295, and has not been since those sections were enacted in 2005. However, the term is also used, without benefit of definition, in AS 47.14.100(e), (f), and (m). It appears that the placement of the definition in AS 47.14.295(1) instead of where it would apply to AS 47.14.100 was a drafting error in ch. 64, SLA 2005. This section relocates the definition to where it is needed. For the repeal of AS 47.14.295(1), see bill section 82.

Bill section 73 removes the term "treatment facility" from AS 47.14.990(12), because that term is not used in AS 47.14. See bill section 24.

Bill sections 74 and 75 amend AS 47.30.660(b) and AS 47.30.662(c) to substitute a generic description for specific references to the division of mental health and developmental disabilities. The department no longer has a division with that name, and the former division's duties have been divided among other divisions.

Bill section 76 expands a citation in AS 47.30.772, enacted in 1984 and amended in 1992, to reflect the 2004 addition of AS 47.30.817 to the AS 47.30 article relating to patient rights.

Bill section 77 updates a spanned reference in AS 47.30.835(b), which now refers to "a determination of legal incapacity under AS 13.26.005 - 13.26.330." Since this section was enacted in 1981, AS 13.25.325 and .330, relating to powers of attorney and disability and incompetence, have been repealed. This bill section removes AS 13.25.325 and .330 from the scope of the spanned reference.

Bill section 78 changes the word "lead" in AS 47.30.838(b) to "led". Although the mistake appeared in the enacting law, the past tense is clearly more appropriate in this context.

Bill section 79 expands a citation in AS 47.30.855 to reflect the 2004 addition of AS 47.30.817 to the AS 47.30 list of patient rights.

Bill section 80 amends sec. 14, ch. 137, SLA 2002, which contains a delayed amendment to AS 16.43.970(b). The existing delayed amendment would sunset changes made to that section in 2002 effective December 30, 2013. An intervening amendment was made to AS 16.43.970(b) in sec. 16, ch. 42, 2006, adding the words "in the second degree" after "unsworn falsification" to conform to a change in AS 11.56.210 of the designation of that crime. The 2006 Act did not make a conforming change to the delayed amendment. This bill remedies that omission by adding the words "in the second degree" to the text of the delayed amendment scheduled to take effect in 2013. This will have the effect of retaining the intervening amendment. Note that the other changes indicated in the section, including deletion of "vessel interim-use permit, or vessel entry permit" are the changes made by the 2002 sunset provision. The only change being made in this bill is the addition of the words "in the second degree", which is a conforming amendment.

Bill section 81 amends sec. 12, ch. 50, SLA 2005 to remove the repeal of AS 14.25.070(b). AS 14.25.070(b) was enacted in 2005, and relettered as (c) that same year. AS 14.25.070 was repealed and reenacted July 1, 2008 by sec. 3, ch. 13, SLA 2008. This change corrects an oversight in sec. 3, ch. 13, SLA 2008. See bill section 83.

Bill section 82 repeals several sections.

- AS 08.36.246(a)(4)(B) appears to be obsolete since the Central Regional Examining Board does not offer a specialty examination.
- AS 31.05.080(b) was impliedly repealed by the enactment of AS 22.10.020(d), Allen v. Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, 147 P.3d 664, 667 - 668 (Alaska 2006); here, the repeal is made express.
- AS 44.88.180(b) was made obsolete by the 1982 amendment of AS 44.88.180(a), and was removed from the statutes when the changes to AS 44.88.180(a) were made, but was not expressly repealed by ch. 113, SLA 1982.

- AS 46.14.170(b) provides for "a phased schedule for acting on operating permit applications submitted within 12 months following the date on which the federal administrator approves the state program under 42 U.S.C. 7661a(d)". The federal administrator gave the final interim approval of the state program in 1996. See 61 Federal Register 64463-64475 (December 5, 1996). Full approval of the operating permit program was effective November 30, 2001. See 66 Federal Register 63,184 (December 5, 2001). Since well more than 12 months have passed since the federal approval, this subsection has become obsolete.
- AS 46.14.990(13) defines the term "fugitive emissions", which is not found anywhere else in the Alaska statutes. The term was used in the definition of "potential to emit" in AS 46.14.990(21), until that definition was repealed and reenacted in sec. 57, ch. 46, SLA 2003.
- AS 47.14.295(1) defines the phrase "adult family member" for purposes of AS 47.14.205 - 47.14.295, where it is not used. See bill section 73.
- AS 47.14.990(11) defines the phrase "serious offense", which does not appear in the chapter to which AS 47.14.990 applies.
- AS 47.20.390(4) defines the term "health care insurer". That term does not appear elsewhere in AS 47.20.300 - 47.20.390, so the definition is superfluous.
- Secs. 33 and 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, provide for the sunset of several changes to the state's unemployment compensation laws in case the federal law underlying those changes is held to be unconstitutional or is repealed. When these sections were enacted, in the spring of 1977, there was a live controversy about the constitutionality of 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6), as amended in 1976, which, among other things, required states to cover employees of the state and its political subdivisions in order to obtain federal certification of the state program and its concomitant tax and grant benefits. Other states challenged the constitutionality of the federal law, arguing that it constituted an impermissible infringement on state sovereignty under the Tenth Amendment to the federal constitution. In New Hampshire Department of Employment Security v. Marshall, 616 F.2d 240 (1st Cir. 1980), cert. denied 449 U.S. 806 (1980), the court held that the 1976 amendments to the federal unemployment tax act did not impair the sovereignty of New Hampshire. In County of Los Angeles v. Marshall, 631 F.2d 767, 769 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied 449 U.S. 837 (1980), the D.C. circuit adopted the first circuit's reasoning, holding that the "voluntary and wholly optional aspect" of the federal program defeated the argument that there was an "coercion and improper transgression upon the sovereignty of the state shielded by the Tenth Amendment." (emphasis in original) So, when the legislature enacted the changes necessitated by 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6) in 1977, there was an active controversy about whether the 1976 amendment to the federal act was constitutional. By the end of 1980, that controversy had been resolved in favor of the constitutionality of the federal statute, and the Supreme Court had declined to review the issue. However, the provisions of secs. 33 and 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, providing for the return of several sections of the Alaska Statutes to their pre-1977 state, remains.

The first paragraph of sec. 34's contingency language appears to be obsolete, given the resolution of the constitutional controversy. The second paragraph, calling for the sunset of the changes to the Alaska statutes in case 26 U.S.C. 3304(a)(6) is repealed, could conceivably take effect. However, it seems likely that this second paragraph was inserted in the contingency in case the federal government decided to repeal the offending section rather than litigating the issue to its conclusion--which is not what happened. It is not clear that the 1977 legislature meant for the changes to the Alaska statutes to be reversed if the federal statute were repealed for some other reason more than 30 years later. Arguably, then, the entire contingency provision has become obsolete. Sec. 33, ch. 122, SLA 1977, is repealed by this bill section. Because it relates to an effective date, sec. 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, is repealed in a different bill section, bill section 85.

Bill section 83 is a delayed repeal of AS 14.25.070(e), which relies on AS 14.20.135, to reflect the delayed repeal of AS 14.20.135 under secs. 12 and 15, ch. 57, SLA 2001, as amended by sec. 6, ch. 15, SLA 2003, and by secs. 10 and 17, ch. 50, SLA 2005.

Bill section 84 conditions the effectiveness of bill section 83, repealing AS 14.25.070(e), on the repeal of AS 14.20.135.

Bill section 85 repeals sec. 34, ch. 122, SLA 1977, which is the effective date for sec. 33, ch. 122, SLA 1977. See bill section 82.

Bill section 86 provides an effective date for sec. 83.

Bill section 87 provides a special effective date for bill section 55, which amends AS 44.41.035(p), since that subsection will not take effect until July 1, 2009. The effective dates of the section and of the change made to the section in this bill should be the same.

Bill section 88 provides an immediate effective date for the bill, except sections 55 and 83.

Please give me a call if you have any questions about the above.

HB 152 makes important technical changes to the Alaska statutes to correct deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions. It is believed there will be no fiscal impacts on the Department of Law if HB 152 is enacted into law.

REPRESENTATIVE MIKE CHENAULT
SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

SPONSOR STATEMENT
House Bill 170
"An Act repealing the authority for day fines."

House Bill 170 repeals the authority established for day fines. The legislation establishing day fines for certain misdemeanor offenses, House Bill 119, was passed into law in 1994 and became effective July 1, 1994.

One of the provisions in the legislation was for the Court System to adopt a day fine plan. As required by the bill, the Supreme Court created a committee to establish a fine schedule based on the guidelines of House Bill 119. The committee found several problems in adopting a day fine plan and requested the legislature to introduce a bill to solve those problems. Senate Bill 167 was introduced in 1995 but did not get out of the Senate. Without the changes requested by the Supreme Court, the court did not implement the provisions of House Bill 119.

According to the Court System, "some of the technical issues identified by the committee included concerns over which misdemeanors were included and excluded, significant time delays associated with judges making written findings, problems in determining defendant income, conflicts with ordering substance abuse treatment and concerns over the levels of fines imposed and the time allowed to pay them."

The committee also expressed concerns that the bill would not accomplish what the sponsor had intended. The sponsor statement stated the intent of the legislation was to improve fine collection and reduce the number of misdemeanor offenders who were sentenced to jail. The committee believed that because the misdemeanors that were excluded from the day fine provisions and because of the technical problems identified by the committee, the sponsor's goals would not be met.

Since these statutes are not in use and will not be used by the courts, I propose that we repeal the statutes that impose a day fine plan rather than keeping these statutes in the books.

Sec. 12.55.015. Authorized sentences; forfeiture.

(a) Except as limited by AS 12.55.125 - 12.55.175, the court, in imposing sentence on a defendant convicted of an offense, may singly or in combination

(1) impose a

(A) fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.035; or

(B) day fine when authorized by law and as provided in AS 12.55.036 if the court does not impose a term of periodic or continuous imprisonment or place the defendant on probation;

(2) order the defendant to be placed on probation under conditions specified by the court that may include provision for active supervision;

(3) impose a definite term of periodic imprisonment, but only if an employment obligation of the defendant preexisted sentencing and the defendant receives a composite sentence of not more than two years to serve;

(4) impose a definite term of continuous imprisonment;

(5) order the defendant to make restitution under AS 12.55.045;

(6) order the defendant to carry out a continuous or periodic program of community work under AS 12.55.055;

(7) suspend execution of all or a portion of the sentence imposed under AS 12.55.080;

(8) suspend imposition of sentence under AS 12.55.085;

(9) order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety or a municipal law enforcement agency of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of an offense described in AS 11.41, AS 11.46, AS 11.56, or AS 11.61;

(10) order the defendant, while incarcerated, to participate in or comply with the treatment plan of a rehabilitation program that is related to the defendant's offense or to the defendant's rehabilitation if the program is made available to the defendant by the Department of Corrections;

(11) order the forfeiture to the state of a motor vehicle, weapon, electronic communication device, or money or other valuables, used in or obtained through an offense that was committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal street gang;

(12) order the defendant to have no contact, either directly or indirectly, with a victim or witness of the offense until the defendant is unconditionally discharged.

(b) The court, in exercising sentencing discretion as provided in this chapter, shall impose a sentence involving imprisonment when

(1) the defendant deserves to be imprisoned, considering the seriousness of the present offense and the defendant's prior criminal history, and imprisonment is equitable considering sentences imposed for other offenses and other defendants under similar circumstances;

(2) imprisonment is necessary to protect the public from further harm by the defendant; or

(3) sentences of lesser severity have been repeatedly imposed for substantially similar offenses in the past and have proven ineffective in deterring the defendant from further criminal conduct.

(c) In addition to the penalties authorized by this section, the court may invoke any authority conferred by law to order a forfeiture of property, suspend or revoke a license, remove a person from office, or impose any other civil penalty. When forfeiting property under this subsection, a court may award to a municipal law enforcement agency that participated in the arrest or conviction of the defendant, the seizure of property, or the identification of property for seizure, (1) the property if the property is worth $5,000 or less and is not money or some other thing that is divisible, or (2) up to 75 percent of the property or the value of the property if the property is worth more than $5,000 or is money or some other thing that is divisible. In determining the percentage a municipal law enforcement agency may receive under this subsection, the court shall consider the municipal law enforcement agency's total involvement in the case relative to the involvement of the state.

(d) [Repealed, Sec. 1 ch 188 SLA 1990].

(e) If the defendant is ordered to serve a definite term of imprisonment, the court may recommend that the defendant serve all or part of the term

(1) in a correctional restitution center;

(2) by electronic monitoring.

(f) Notwithstanding (a) of this section, the court shall order the forfeiture to the commissioner of public safety or a municipal law enforcement agency of a deadly weapon that was in the actual possession of or used by the defendant during the commission of a crime involving domestic violence.

(g) Unless a defendant is ineligible for a deduction under AS 33.20, when a defendant is sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years or more, the sentence consists of two parts: (1) a minimum term of imprisonment that is equal to not less than two-thirds of the total term of imprisonment; and (2) a maximum term of supervised release on mandatory parole that is equal to not more than one-third of the total term of imprisonment; the amount of time that the inmate actually serves in imprisonment and on supervised release is subject to the provisions of AS 33.20.010 - 33.20.060.

(h) In addition to penalties authorized by this section, the court shall order a person convicted of an offense requiring the state to collect a blood sample, oral sample, or both, for the deoxyribonucleic acid identification registration system under AS 44.41.035 to submit to the collection of

(1) the sample or samples when requested by a health care professional acting on behalf of the state to provide the sample or samples; or

(2) an oral sample when requested by a juvenile or adult correctional, probation, or parole officer, or a peace officer.

(i) In this section "deadly weapon" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900.

Sec. 12.55.035. Fines.

(a) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a fine as authorized in this section or as otherwise authorized by law.

(b) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant who is not an organization may be sentenced to pay, unless otherwise specified in the provision of law defining the offense, a fine of no more than

(1) $500,000 for murder in the first or second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, kidnapping, promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), or misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree;

(2) $250,000 for a class A felony;

(3) $100,000 for a class B felony;

(4) $50,000 for a class C felony;

(5) $10,000 for a class A misdemeanor;

(6) $2,000 for a class B misdemeanor;

(7) $500 for a violation.

(c) Except as provided in AS 12.55.036, upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of

(1) an amount that is

(A) $1,000,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;

(B) $200,000 for a class A misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(C) $25,000 for a class B misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;

(D) $10,000 for a violation;

(2) three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant as a result of the offense; or

(3) three times the pecuniary damage or loss caused by the defendant to another, or to the property of another, as a result of the offense.

(d) If a defendant is sentenced to pay a fine, the court may grant permission for the payment to be made within a specified period of time or in specified installments.

(e) In imposing a fine under (c) of this section, in addition to any other relevant factors, the court shall consider

(1) measures taken by the organization to discipline an officer, director, employee, or agent of the organization;

(2) measures taken by the organization to prevent a recurrence of the offense;

(3) the organization's obligation to make restitution to a victim of the offense, and the extent to which imposition of a fine will impair the ability of the organization to make restitution; and

(4) the extent to which the organization will pass on to consumers the expense of the fine.

(f) In imposing a fine, the court may not reduce the fine by the amount of a surcharge or otherwise consider the applicability of a surcharge to the offense.

Sec. 12.55.036. Day fines.

(a) Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, other than a violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.56.740, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a day fine as authorized by this section. If a day fine is imposed under this section, the defendant may not be sentenced to pay a fine under AS 12.55.035, serve a term of imprisonment, or be placed on probation.

(b) The Alaska Supreme Court shall adopt a day fine plan that includes

(1) an assessment of the gravity of all misdemeanor offenses, which assessment must include the existence of prior offenses, and the assignment of presumptive penalties to them in day fine units within the following ranges:

(A) for class A and unclassified misdemeanors, not to exceed 365-day fine units;

(B) for class B misdemeanors, not to exceed 90-day fine units;

(2) a schedule of the presumptive day fine penalties;

(3) procedures for a court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalties if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor under AS 12.55.155(c) or a mitigating factor under AS 12.55.155(d);

(4) a table for the conversion of a defendant's actual, potential, or estimated gross income, less one-third for a defendant above the federal poverty guideline as determined by the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and less one-half for a defendant below the federal poverty guideline into net daily income amounts; the table must include adjustments for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant;

(5) procedures for a court to gather information about the defendant's occupation, actual, estimated, and potential income, number of dependents, and other facts necessary or relevant to sentencing a person to a day fine; a court may order the production of the financial or other records of a person it determines to be relevant to a determination under this section; the procedures must include a requirement that the facts shall be received

(A) under oath so that the defendant is subject to prosecution under AS 11.56.200; or

(B) in a writing or recording that bears notice that false statements made in it are punishable under AS 11.56.210; and

(6) other information the court determines to be necessary for implementing the day fine plan.

(c) The amount of a day fine shall be the product of the net daily income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant, times the day fine penalty. When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court shall

(1) state on the record the

(A) presumptive day fine penalty for the offense, and whether the court is adjusting the presumptive day fine penalty for the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors;

(B) net daily income of the income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant; and

(C) amount of the day fine;

(2) make written findings of the facts considered in

(A) finding the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors and in assigning a value to those factors; and

(B) determining the defendant's gross and daily net incomes.

(d) When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court may permit the payment of the day fine in specified installments or within a certain period of time, provided the entire day fine is paid within 180 days of imposition.

(e) A sentence imposing a day fine shall be considered a civil judgment for the day fine. The Department of Law shall enforce the judgment and may utilize any procedure available for the enforcement of civil judgments. If the Department of Law uses the civil process of the court to enforce or collect a day fine, the department shall be awarded costs and attorney fees.

(f) [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 79 SLA 1994].

(g) Money collected under this section shall be deposited into the general fund and separately accounted for under AS 37.05.142. The annual estimated balance in the account maintained under AS 37.05.142 for day fines collected under this section may be appropriated by the legislature as follows: (1) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault; (2) 25 percent of the annual estimated balance for grants and claims paid by the Violent Crimes Compensation Board; and (3) the balance for any lawful purpose. Nothing in this subsection creates a dedicated fund.

The Honorable Robin Taylor
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
State Capitol - Room 30
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Taylor:

The 1994 Alaska Legislature passed a law that authorizes courts to impose day fines for certain misdemeanor offenses. The legislation went into effect July 1, 1994.

The day fine law directs the Alaska Supreme Court to adopt a "day fine plan." In June 1994, Chief Justice Daniel A. Moore appointed a committee of six judges and five representatives of other agencies to develop this plan. The committee met once a month from September through December and presented a plan to the supreme court on December 22.

In the course of developing the day fines plan, certain problems became apparent. Some of these problems could be rectified by simple amendments to the original day fines legislation. However, other problems are more fundamental. SB 167 addresses the more technical difficulties. This legislation does not address the fundamental problems, which are discussed in Part II below.

I. Technical Problems With Day Fines Law.

A. Classification of Misdemeanors.

AS 12.55.036(b)(1) requires the supreme court to adopt a day fines plan that includes "an assessment of the gravity of all misdemeanor offenses, which assessment must include the existence of prior offenses . . . ." It would take months to compile a comprehensive list of all the misdemeanor offenses in the Alaska Statutes and such a list would include many relatively obscure offenses that are never charged. The Day Fines Committee only ranked offenses that were charged ten or more times since January 1, 1990 and offenses for which a fine or imprisonment was imposed in FY 94. The committee also could not think of a simple way to make the ranking of offenses reflect the existence of prior offenses. Instead, the committee decided to treat prior offenses as an aggravating factor.

The committee has recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(1) be amended to require that the day fines plan include an assessment of common misdemeanor offenses and to delete the requirement that the assessment reflect the existence of prior offenses. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

B. Written Findings.

AS 12.55.036(c)(2) requires that the judge make written findings of the facts considered in determining the existence of aggravating and mitigating factors and in determining the defendant's income. Given the volume of misdemeanor sentencings in some court locations, it is not feasible for judges to make written findings in these cases. Therefore, the Day Fines Committee has recommended that the legislature eliminate AS 12.55.036(c)(2). This proposal is contained in section 3 of SB 167.

C. Felony Aggravators and Mitigators.

AS 12.55.036(b)(3) authorizes the court to increase or decrease the presumptive day fine penalty for an offense if the court finds the existence of an aggravating factor under AS 12.55.155(c) or a mitigating factor under AS 12.55.155(d). AS 12.55.155 lists the aggravating and mitigating factors that apply in felony cases. Because of the volume of misdemeanor cases, it is not feasible for judges to review the lists of felony aggravators and mitigators each time a defendant is sentenced. In addition, some of these factors are not applicable to the offenses for which a day fine may be imposed. In the proposed day fine plan, the Day Fines Committee recommended that a shorter, more general list be adopted that would be easier for judges to use. The committee recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(3) be amended to eliminate the references to AS 12.55.155. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

D. Set Aside of Convictions.

Many first and second misdemeanor offenders currently receive SISs and suspended sentences which are significantly less severe than the sentences they would receive under the proposed day fines plan. In order to increase the attractiveness of day fines in such cases, the Day Fines Committee recommended that courts be allowed to set aside convictions in appropriate cases upon payment of a day fine. Another benefit of this change in the law is that the possibility of eliminating the conviction from the defendant's record might increase the likelihood of payment. This proposal is contained in section 6 of SB 167.

E. Net Income Versus Gross Income.

AS 12.55.036(b)(4) requires the court to use the defendant's gross income to calculate the defendant's net daily income for purposes of day fines. However, unless they are carrying their pay stubs, people generally know only the amount of their take home pay. The Day Fines Committee recommended that AS 12.55.036(b)(4) be revised so that the method of calculating net daily income is based on a defendant's net income after taxes instead of gross income. This proposal is contained in section 2 of SB 167.

F. Additional Time to Pay.

AS 12.55.036(d) states that the court may permit day fines to be paid in installments over time, provided the entire fine is paid within 180 days. The Day Fines Committee recommends that the legislature amend AS 12.55.036(d) to allow courts to give defendants up to one year to pay. The committee believes that additional time is needed to allow for seasonal variations in income. In addition, the projected fine amounts are high enough that some defendants will not have enough discretionary income to pay their fine in full within a six-month period. This proposal is contained in section 4 of SB 167.

G. Access to Employment Information.

The Day Fines Committee recommended that the legislature amend AS 23.20.110 to authorize the Department of Labor to give the Department of Law Collections Unit access to confidential employment information (to the extent permitted by federal law). The purpose of this change is to improve collections by making it easier for the Department of Law to locate a defendant's places of employment. This proposal is contained in sections 7, 8, and 9 of SB 167.

H. Treatment.

The Day Fines Committee is concerned that day fines may not be used in cases involving alcohol or drugs because a day fine cannot be combined with an order for treatment. AS 12.55.015 lists the sentences judges can impose as direct court orders. This statute only authorizes the court to order treatment for defendants who are incarcerated. Therefore, the only way a judge can order treatment outside of prison is if a specific statute authorizes it (which very few do) or as a condition of probation. Since day fines cannot be combined with probation, judges will be unlikely to impose day fines when they believe treatment is necessary. The Day Fines Committee has recommended that the day fines law be amended to allow the court to enter a direct court order requiring a defendant who receives a day fine to participate in a treatment program related to the defendant's offense. This proposal is contained in section 1 of SB 167.

I. Biennial Reports.

AS 12.55.036(f) requires the court system to evaluate the use and effectiveness of day fines and report every two years to the legislature. This section specifies what the report must contain. The Day Fines Committee does not believe that certain information listed in this section can be collected given the current state of the various justice agencies' information systems. The committee has recommended that the Alaska Supreme Court invite the Alaska Judicial Council to work with the court system to develop appropriate evaluation criteria (given available information systems) and to design the information collection procedures necessary to make the reports to the legislature. To accommodate this, SB 167 amends AS 12.55.036(f) to reflect the fact that it is not yet possible to provide information on recidivism. This proposal is contained in section 5.

II. Fundamental Problems with Day Fines Law.

Now I would like to discuss the more fundamental problems that are not addressed in the attached bill.

The first problem relates to the legislature's intent in passing the law. In her March 10, 1993 memorandum transmitting the bill, Representative Fran Ulmer stated that the intent of the legislation was to decrease the number of misdemeanor offenders who are sent to jail and to increase fine collection rates. The day fines legislation as enacted will not achieve either of these objectives.

In the course of its work, the Day Fines Committee determined that the day fines law excludes most of the misdemeanors for which people are currently sentenced to jail. Therefore, the law will not result in a meaningful decrease in the jail population as the legislature intended.

Increased fine collection is also unlikely. Under the new law, a day fine is only one of several sentencing options available to a judge. A judge will not select this option unless the judge believes the fine will be collected. In reviewing the State's collection practices, the Day Fines Committee discovered that current fine collection rates are low. The day fines program will not be widely used - or increase fine revenues - unless the Department of Law receives additional collection tools and resources. (The Department of Law's Collections Unit is funded solely through program receipts.) An example of a new tool would be to make payment of fines a condition for state licenses. The Day Fines Committee recommended that the legislature consider prohibiting the issuance or renewal of state licenses and permits to persons who have unpaid fines and other obligations to the state.

A second fundamental concern pertains to the fine amounts that result from the day fines formula. In order to avoid separation of powers questions, the legislature specified in the statute the unit scale and general formula for computing day fines. This scale would have resulted in inappropriately high fine amounts for the misdemeanors that the legislature included in the day fines program. Even though the Day Fines Committee reduced the scale as much as they thought possible - from a maximum of 365 units to a maximum of 45 units - the formula still results in very high fine amounts for all but the poorest offenders. The supreme court is reluctant to proceed without further legislative review of the fines that would result under the formula prescribed in the law.

A third fundamental concern pertains to one of the largest categories of misdemeanors - fish and game offenses. After much deliberation, the Day Fines Committee excluded these offenses from its day fines plan. Unlike criminal law, which has a relatively clear statutory framework as a result of the classification system that went into effect in 1980, fish and game has no clear sentencing structure. Title 5 includes numerous penalty provisions and it is not always obvious which ones apply to particular offenses. In addition, because offense definitions overlap, the same conduct can be charged under different statutes and regulations, with different consequences. The committee was ultimately unwilling to impose another layer of complexity in this area until the underlying statutory and regulatory problems are resolved. Instead, the committee recommended that the legislature appoint a special legislative committee or an interagency group to assess and restructure fish and game penalty provisions and definitions of offenses.

III. Conclusion.

The attached bill addresses the problems described in Part I above. It does not address the Day Fines Committee's - and the supreme court's - more fundamental concerns discussed in Part II. Both the court and the committee question whether it is wise to proceed without addressing these concerns. It will require a significant commitment of resources in order to implement the day fines program. Without significant changes, the law is unlikely to result in the savings or the revenues that the legislature originally expected.

Sincerely,

Arthur H. Snowden, II

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 12.55.036(a) is amended to read:

(a) Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, other than a violation of AS 11.41 and AS 11.56.740, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a day fine as authorized by this section. If a day fine is imposed under this section, the defendant may not be sentenced to pay a fine under AS 12.55.035, serve a term of imprisonment, or be placed on probation. However, the court may order a defendant to participate in or comply with a screening, evaluation, or treatment program related to the defendant's offense.

* Sec. 2. AS 12.55.036(b) is amended to read:

(b) The Alaska Supreme Court shall adopt a day fine plan that includes

(1) an assessment of the gravity of common [ALL] misdemeanor offenses [, WHICH ASSESSMENT MUST INCLUDE THE EXISTENCE OF PRIOR OFFENSES,] and the assignment of presumptive penalties to them in day fine units within the following ranges:

(A) for class A and unclassified misdemeanors, not to exceed 365-day fine units;

(B) for class B misdemeanors, not to exceed 90-day fine units;

(B) in a writing or recording that bears notice that false statements made in it are punishable under AS 11.56.210; and

(6) other information the court determines to be necessary for implementing the day fine plan.

* Sec. 3. AS 12.55.036(c) is amended to read:

(c) The amount of a day fine shall be the product of the net daily income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant, times the day fine penalty. When imposing a sentence of a day fine, the court shall

[(1)] state on the record the

(1) [(A)] presumptive day fine penalty for the offense, and whether the court is adjusting the presumptive day fine penalty for the existence of aggravating or mitigating factors;

(2) [(B)] net daily income of the income of the defendant, adjusted for the number of dependents actually supported by the defendant; and

(3) [(C)] amount of the day fine [;

* Sec. 5. AS 12.55.036(f) is amended to read:

(f) The Alaska Court System shall evaluate and report every two years to the legislature not later than February 1 on the use of day fines and their effectiveness. The report must include

(1) a comparison of the number of defendants receiving a day fine as a sentence with the number of other defendants, eligible to receive a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(2) to the extent that recidivism information is available, a comparison of the recidivism rates between defendants receiving a day fine with other defendants,

(A) eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence; and

(B) not eligible for a day fine, who receive another sentence;

(3) the potential savings to the state from the number of defendants who are eligible to receive a sentence of imprisonment, and who receive a day fine, assuming those defendants would have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment;

(4) the amount of day fines collected, the success rate of collections, and the number of cases requiring civil process to collect the day fine; and

(5) recommendations concerning expansion or restriction of the use of day fines, including proposals for legislation.

* Sec. 6. AS 12.55.036 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(h) When there are mitigating circumstances, when the ends of justice will be served, and when the good conduct and reform of the defendant warrant it, the court may upon payment of the entire day fine within the time specified by the court set aside the conviction and issue to the defendant a certificate to that effect.

* Sec. 7. AS 23.20.110(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in (h), [AND] (i), and (l) of this section, the department shall hold information obtained from an employing unit or individual in the course of administering this chapter and determinations as to the benefit rights of an individual confidential and may not disclose them or open them to public inspection in a manner that [WHICH] reveals the identity of the individual or employing unit. A claimant or the legal representative of the claimant is entitled to information from the records of the department to the extent necessary for the proper presentation of the claim in a proceeding under this chapter. Subject to restrictions that [WHICH] the department prescribes by regulation, the information may be made available to an agency of this state or another state or federal agency charged with the administration of an unemployment compensation law or the maintenance of a system of public employment offices, or, for the purposes of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, to the Internal Revenue Service of the United States, or, for tax purposes, to the Department of Revenue. Information obtained in connection with the administration of the employment service may be made available to persons or agencies for purposes appropriate to the operation of a public employment service.

* Sec. 8. AS 23.20.110(j) is amended to read:

(j) Notwithstanding (h), [OR] (i), or (l) of this section, the department may not release information to an administrator under (h) of this section, [OR] on an employer's hiring practices under (i) of this section, or to the Department of Law as provided under (l) of this section if the United States Secretary of Labor rules that release of the information would be grounds to find that the state is in substantial noncompliance with 42 U.S.C. 503(a).

* Sec. 9. AS 23.20.110 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(l) The department shall make information obtained from an employing unit or an individual available on request to the Department of Law to assist the Department of Law in the collection of criminal judgments.

Firearm freedom a priority for Fairbanks Rep. Kelly

by Christopher Eshleman/ceshleman@newsminer.com

FAIRBANKS — An Interior lawmaker said he'll push to curb federal regulation of guns built and sold solely within Alaska, saying his research has failed to convince him Congress can justify regulating, or requiring registration of, firearms built and sold within a single state's boundaries.

Federal commerce laws regulate firearm producers and dealers, limiting them to license-holders. The proposed Alaska Firearms Freedom Act, pitched by Rep. Mike Kelly, R-Fairbanks, seeks to preclude federal regulation of guns, ammunition, magazines or other accessories made and sold only within Alaska.

Kelly said federal rules should apply to firearms sold across state borders, where the federal government has clear constitutional authority to regulate interstate commerce. He cited, as justification of his plan, the Bill of Rights' protection of state and individual firearm rights.

"It says, 'Thank you just the same, but we'll control the things — powers — left to us as a state or as individual Alaskans,'" Kelly said.

The bill's presentation during last winter's legislative retreat coincided with, in Fairbanks and Outside, a wave of anti-federal government public sentiment. Kelly said he finds himself at least partly aligned with that movement and the act, along with a planned "health care freedoms" resolution, aim to reinforce Alaskans' rights in the face of federal initiatives.

The bill easily passed the state House of Representatives in April after picking up 11 co-sponsors. It now sits before the Senate Judiciary Committee, whose chairman is Anchorage Democrat Sen. Hollis French. French said Tuesday he'll schedule a committee hearing for the bill this winter, a hearing that likely will come relatively soon if sponsors have an accompanying information packet ready.

The act would allow unlicensed gun suppliers and dealers to make and sell firearms if the products remain in the state, according to Kelly's explanation.

The guns would need to prominently display the words "made in Alaska." The state attorney general's office would defend businesses prosecuted by the federal government for failure to hold a license.

The bill could insert Alaska into a broader national discussion about gun rights. Similar bills have passed in Montana and Tennessee. Fairbanks attorney Lynn Levengood said many gun rights advocates are closely following debate about gun rights following a shift in Congress and the White House to Democratic control.

"It's a fail-safe position," Levengood said. "If federal law tries to undo our Second Amendment rights, we've got a fail-safe."

Alan Gottlieb, founder of the Bellevue, Wash.-based Second Amendment Foundation, said he expects similar proposals to emerge in many states next year. Gottlieb said past court rulings could create hurdles as states look to protect intrastate gun trade. But he said if enough states jump on board, the momentum could force Congress to rethink the federal government's role in firearm regulation.

"The more states that join in, the more ammunition and clout it gives to the argument," Gottlieb said of firearm freedom laws.

Kelly's bill is House Bill 186.

Sponsor Statement – CSHB 186(FIN)

"ALASKA FIREARMS FREEDOM ACT"

The United States Constitution gives Congress the authority to regulate Interstate Commerce between the states and 18 USC 922 makes it unlawful for any person not licensed as a manufacturer or dealer in firearms to engage in the business of manufacturing or dealing in firearms. Collectively, the Interstate Commerce Clause and 18 USC 922 are used by the federal government as a means to regulate firearms.

The Alaska Firearms Freedom Act addresses this by exempting firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition manufactured and retained in the state from all federal firearm control laws including registration, as firearms that meet these criteria shouldn't be regulated by the federal government because they have not traveled in interstate commerce. Firearms exempt from this Act must have the words "Made in Alaska" clearly stamped on a central metallic part such as the receiver or frame. CSHB 186(FIN) also requires the Attorney General of Alaska to defend a citizen of this State who is prosecuted by the federal government under their authority to regulate interstate commerce for violating federal law regarding the manufacture, sale, transfer, or possession of a firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured and retained in this state.

This bill frees certain firearms from federal regulation as long as certain conditions are met. It frees the state of Alaska from restrictive federal firearm regulation and allows the state to take responsible firearm regulation into her own hands. The federal government has historically used the Interstate Commerce Clause to regulate firearms and has consistently pursued legislation that imposes its will on states. Outdoorsmen, hunters, and Alaskans defending their families and property will benefit from the passage of CSHB 186(FIN).

RE: Sectional Analysis for CSHB 186(FIN) – (26-LS0627\P.A)

A sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill. The bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1.
Findings Section. The authority of this Act is the Second, Ninth, and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The Second Amendment reserves to the people the right to keep and bear arms, the Ninth Amendment guarantees to the people rights not granted in the constitution, and the Tenth Amendment guarantees to the states and their people all powers not granted to the federal government elsewhere in the constitution. The United States Congress has not expressly preempted state regulation of intrastate commerce pertaining to the manufacture on an intrastate basis of firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition. Article I, Section 19 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska secures to the citizens and prohibits government interference with the right of individual Alaska citizens to keep and bear arms.

Section 2.
(a) A personal firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured commercially or privately in this state and that remains in the state is not subject to federal law or federal regulation including registration under the authority of the United States Congress to regulate intrastate commerce.

(b) This section applies to a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured in this state from basic materials without the inclusion of significant parts imported from another state. Generic and insignificant parts that have other manufacturing or consumer applications are not firearms, firearm accessories, or ammunition and their incorporation into a firearm, firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured in this state does not subject them to federal regulation. Basic materials, such as unmachined steel and unshaped wood are not firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition and are not subject to federal regulation under intrastate commerce. Firearm accessories imported into this state from another state and are attached to or used in conjunction with a firearm in this state does not subject the firearm to federal regulation under intrastate commerce.

(c) A firearm manufactured or sold in this sate and not subject to federal regulation mush have the words "Made in Alaska" clearly stamped on a central metallic part, such as the receiver or frame.

(d) Permits the Attorney General of Alaska to defend a citizen of the state who is prosecuted by the government of the United States under power to regulate interstate commerce for violating federal law concerning the manufacture, sale, transfer, or possession of a firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition manufactured and retained within this state.

(e) Definitions section.

"Firearm accessory" – an item that is used in conjunction with or mounted on a firearm but is not essential to the basic function of a firearm. This includes: a telescope or laser sight, magazine, flash or sound suppressor, folding or aftermarket stock and grip, speedloader, ammunition carrier, and light for target illumination.

"Generic and insignificant parts" – includes springs, screws, nuts, and pins.

"Manufactured" – means a firearm a firearm accessory, or ammunition that has been created from basic materials for functional usefulness, including forging, casting, machining, or other processes for working materials.

Section 3.
Applicability section. This Act applies to firearms, firearm accessories, and ammunition that are manufactured and retained in this state after October 1, 2009.

The Firearms Freedom Act (FFA) is sweeping the Nation.

January 15th, 2010 Leave a comment Go to comments

Originally introduced and passed in Montana, the FFA declares that any firearms made and retained in-state are beyond the authority of Congress under its constitutional power to regulate commerce among the states.

Since its passage in Montana, a clone of the Firearms Freedom Act has been enacted in Tennessee, and has been introduced in the legislatures of Alaska, Texas, South Carolina, Minnesota and Florida. Legislators in many other states have announced that they will introduce FFA clones when their legislatures next convene.

The FFA is primarily a Tenth Amendment challenge to the powers of Congress under the "commerce clause," with firearms as the object – it is a state's rights exercise.

Gun Groups File Lawsuit to Validate Montana Firearms Freedom Act

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Contact: Gary Marbut, 406-549-1252
Alan Gottlieb, 425-454-7012

MISSOULA - The Montana Shooting Sports Association (MSSA) and the Second Amendment Foundation (SAF) filed a lawsuit in federal court in Missoula today to validate the principles and terms of the Montana Firearms Freedom Act (MFFA).

The MFFA was enacted by the 2009 Montana Legislature, signed by Governor Schweitzer, and becomes effective today, Oct. 1.

Lead attorney for the plaintiffs' litigation team is Quentin Rhoades of the Missoula firm of Sullivan, Tabaracci & Rhoades, PC. The MFFA litigation team also includes other attorneys located in Montana, New York, Florida, Arizona and Washington.

"We feel very strongly that the federal government has gone way too far in attempting to regulate a lot of activity that occurs only in-state," explained MSSA President Gary Marbut. "The Montana Legislature and governor agreed with us by enacting the MFFA. It's time for Montana and her sister states to take a stand against the bullying federal government, which the Legislature and Governor have done and we are doing with this lawsuit. We welcome the support of many other states that are stepping up to the plate with their own firearms freedom acts."

"We're happy to join this lawsuit," said SAF founder Alan Gottlieb, "because we believe this issue should be decided by the courts."

The MFFA declares that any firearms made and retained in Montana are not subject to any federal authority under the power given to Congress in the U.S. Constitution to regulate "commerce ... among the several states." The MFFA relies on the Tenth Amendment and other principles to challenge Congress' commerce clause power to regulate a wide spectrum of in-state activities. This is a states' rights effort, using firearms as the object of the exercise. The MFFA exempts Montana-made and retained firearms, firearm accessories and ammunition from federal power, saying that if these items do not cross state lines, they are strictly INTRAstate commerce, not INTERstate commerce, and not subject to federal authority.

MSSA continues to strongly urge that no Montana citizen attempt to manufacture an MFFA-covered item, even after the law takes effect today, until MSSA can prove the principles of the MFFA in court. Until the courts rule in support of the MFFA, any such manufacturer could be subject to federal criminal prosecution.

This concept has caught national attention. Tennessee has passed a clone of the MFFA. Other clones have been introduced in Alaska, Texas, Florida, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Minnesota. Legislators in 20 other states have indicated that they will introduce MFFA clones in their states once their legislatures reconvene, Marbut said. Information about the Firearms Freedom Act movement is being accumulated and made publicly available at firearmsfreedomact.com.

This movement follows multi-state rejection of Washington-mandated Real ID, a law passed by Congress requiring state drivers licenses to conform to federal identification standards. The FFA movement also works in tandem with resolutions introduced or passed in many states asserting state sovereignty under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. As is the rest of the Bill of Rights, the Ninth and Tenth Amendments are limitations on federal power. The Ninth Amendment says: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." The Tenth Amendment declares: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Under our federated system of government in the U.S., Marbut noted, states and the federal government are widely recognized to share power and authority, with definite limits placed on federal power by the states, the creators of the federal government. The MFFA lawsuit is designed to test and define those limits, to assert states' authority, and to limit what many see as overbearing authority assumed by Congress and the federal government.

Beginning during the New Deal, federal courts have generally upheld federal commerce clause authority, initially in the 1942 case of Wickard v. Filburn and continuing recently with the 2005 case of Gonzales v. Raich. Raich was the Supreme Court case allowing federal regulation of medical marijuana in California. However, other cases such as the 1995 case of US v. Lopez suggest that federal commerce power is not infinitely elastic, that there are limits to federal commerce power, and that it has just not yet been determined what those limits may be. The MFFA litigation is structured to clarify and affirm those limits.

The modern era of dramatically-expanded federal commerce clause power was ushered in with the Wickard decision. The Supreme Court allowed this considerable expansion of federal commerce power under Wickard only after President Roosevelt threatened to pack the Court with cronies if the Court didn't cease declaring

Roosevelt's New Deal programs to be unconstitutional and beyond federal reach. (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Commerce_clause)

I am writing in support of the Alaska Firearms Freedom Act. I am a member of the Second Amendment Task force as well as a Founder of the Interior Alaska Conservative Coalition (IACC). I am in touch on a daily basis with Alaskans in the Interior who are committed to the restoration of all of our Constitutional Rights.

This bill will be a step in the right direction for a state that has many, many citizens who want their legislature to stand up for our liberty, state sovereignty and second amendment rights as well as the entire Constitution. We are simply insisting that all levels of government uphold the Law of the Land. Why do we even have to ask?

Sincerely,

Representative Kelly,

I wish to add my name to those who have written to you in support of this act. I know that there are many who do not believe Barack Obama can, could, or would do anything to "abridge" our 2nd Amendment Rights. The fact remains, however, that I do believe he/they (I include his 'friends') would like to curtail these rights and will do so if given the opportunity. I believe that, in these present circumstances, apathy and complacency are our Worst Enemies!

I've recently read where there are many in the current administration that wish for the United States to ratify a United Nations Treaty that would adversely affect the 2nd Amendment Rights of American Citizens. My question, sir, is how can the United States Federal Government enter into a Treaty in an Area that is NOT granted to it by the Constitution but is Reserved unto the States of the Union?

With Appreciation,

Mr. Kelly,

Thank you for the work you are doing to restore states' rights in Alaska and the USA. Our Federal Government has arrogantly usurped power not granted to it by the Constitution and as a result it has grown into a dangerous monster with a salacious appetite for more and more power. The Firearms Freedom Act is a big step in returning the power to the states and to the people as intended by the framers of our Constitution as they clearly stated in the 10th Amendment.

The Fire Arms Freedom Act is big step in the right direction, but it is only the first step. We have a long way to go to undo the damage that has and is being done.

God Bless you and all the men and women who are willing to take a stand for what is right rather than for what is convenient. You are in my prayers. Keep up the good work.

Dear Rep Kelly:

I wholeheartedly support the Fire Arms Freedom Act. For states like Alaska, firearms are an integral part of our lively hood. Hunting with all of the associated support is an important industry for our state. Shooting sports and all of us who are involved with the various ranges help cultivate the talented shooters who go on to UAF Nanooks Rifle Team and make us national champions.

Simply put, our second amendment rights shall not be infringed. Many have died to defend our Constitution. Currently, there are those who have never served in the military to defend our freedoms who are hell bent on taking them away. We must stand together to protect our rights.

Thank you for your service!

Montana Firearms Freedom Act

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The Montana Firearms Freedom Act, also known as Montana House Bill Number 246,[1] was introduced January 13, 2009 by Joel Boniek, Gerald Bennett, Edward Butcher, Aubyn Curtiss, Lee Randall and Wendy Warburton. The bill was signed in to law by Governor Brian Schweitzer on April 15, 2009 and became effective on October 1, 2009. On that effective date, supporters of the law filed suit as a test case in federal district court.

The law exempts firearms made and kept in the state of Montana from United States federal firearms regulations. It also has no requirements for registration, background checks or dealer licensing. It applies to firearms other than machineguns, along with ammunition and accessories such as silencers,[2] provided that these items are manufactured in the state, and do not leave the state.

It makes several references to a contract made between the United States and the state and people of Montana. It goes on to say the United States agreed to the compact and it was adopted by Montana and the United States in 1889.

Legislative declarations of authority

The legislature declares that the authority for this law is derived from the Second, Ninth and Tenth amendments from the Bill of Rights to the United States Constitution. This act reaffirms the right of the people to keep and bear arms. It guarantees to the people rights not mentioned in the constitution, as well as to the states and their people all powers not granted to the federal government elsewhere in the constitution. The law also states that Article II, section 12, of the Montana constitution prohibits government interference with the right of individual Montana citizens to keep and bear arms.

Definitions

This section defines, the borders of Montana, what firearms accessories, as well as, generic and insignificant parts are and defines what manufactured means in relation to this law.

Prohibitions

This law prohibits federal law or federal regulation on any personal firearm, a firearm accessory, or ammunition that is manufactured commercially or privately in Montana and that remains within the borders of Montana.

Exceptions

However, this law does not apply to a firearm that cannot be carried and used by one person, a firearm that has a bore diameter greater than 1½ inches and uses smokeless powder, ammunition that uses exploding projectiles or fully automatic firearms.

Marking of firearms

Applicable firearms must be clearly stamped "Made in Montana" on a central metallic part.

Codification

This law has been assigned Chapter 205 in Title 30, of the Montana Code Annotated.[3]

Applicability

This law became effective October 1, 2009 and applies to the items defined manufactured after that date.

Similar laws and expected challenges

The drafters of the law intend setting off a legal challenge with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.[4] Currently only Montana and Tennessee have passed these bills into law. However Texas, Alaska, Utah, Minnesota, Ohio, South Carolina and most recently Florida[5] have introduced similar bills.[4]

Supporters assert that the legislation is really about curbing excessive Federal regulation in areas such as education, animal management and intrastate trade.[4]

ATF response

On July 16, 2009, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives published an open letter to Montana Federal Firearms Licensees, clarifying the bureau's position on the Montana Firearms Freedom Act. According to this letter, "... because the Act conflicts with Federal firearms laws and regulations, Federal law supersedes the Act, and all provisions of the Gun Control Act and the National Firearms Act, and their corresponding regulations, continue to apply." The letter then summarizes ATF requirements for FFL holders.[6]

On August 24, 2009, the Montana Shooting Sports Association and the Second Amendment Foundation announced that they were planning on filing a lawsuit on October 1, 2009 — the date that the Montana Firearms Freedom Act became effective — to stop federal regulations from being enforced for the firearms covered under the new state law.[7]

Legal Challenge

Plaintiffs filed suit in support of the law, in federal district court, on October 1, 2009. These plaintiffs are the Montana Shooting Sports Association, the Second Amendment Foundation, and MSSA president Gary Marbut. The legal complaint states that Marbut "wishes to manufacture and sell small arms and small arms ammunition to customers exclusively in Montana, pursuant to the MFFA, without complying with the NFA or the GCA, or other applicable federal laws."[8][9][10][11] One firearms manufacturer in Kalispell, Montana has stated that because they cannot afford to litigate, they do not plan to sell their AR-15s or AR-10/AR-15 family receivers to private parties without a Form 4473. But they did state that they intend to do so, once a court ruling clears the way.[12]

MEMORANDUM April 8, 2009

SUBJECT: Interstate Commerce Clause and CSHB 186(JUD)
(Work Order No. 26-LS0627\S)

TO: Representative Lindsey Holmes

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

You have asked if the declarations in CSHB 186(JUD) regarding interstate and intrastate commerce would successfully prevent someone from being prosecuted for a firearms violation under federal law. In my opinion, CSHB 186(JUD) would not prevent the federal government from prosecuting someone for a firearms violation under federal law.[1]

The commerce clause is found at Article I, § 8, of the Constitution of the United States:

> The Congress shall have power . . . [t]o regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states and with the Indian tribes . . . .

The extent of the commerce clause was first interpreted to not apply to commerce "which is carried on between man and man in a State, or between different parts of the same State, and which does not extend to or affect other States."[2] Over the years, "certain categories of activity such as 'production,' 'manufacturing,' and 'mining' were within the province of state governments, and thus were beyond the power of Congress under the Commerce Clause."[3] As the interpretation of the commerce clause continued, the United States Supreme Court allowed incidental effects on purely interstate commerce if that regulation was necessary to regulate interstate commerce.[4] The development of the commerce clause continued as explained in this excerpt from United States v. Lopez:[5]

> In A. L. A. Schecter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 550 (1935), the Court struck down regulations that fixed the hours and wages of individuals employed by an intrastate business because the activity being regulated related to interstate commerce only indirectly. In doing so, the Court characterized the distinction between direct and indirect effects of intrastate transactions upon interstate commerce as "a fundamental one, essential to the maintenance of our constitutional system." Id., at 548. Activities that affected interstate commerce directly were within Congress' power; activities that affected interstate commerce indirectly were beyond Congress' reach. Id., at 546. The justification for this formal distinction was rooted in the fear that otherwise "there would be virtually no limit to the federal power and for all practical purposes we should have a completely centralized government." Id., at 548.
> Two years later, in the watershed case of NLRB v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1 (1937), the Court upheld the National Labor Relations Act against a Commerce Clause challenge, and in the process, departed from the distinction between "direct" and "indirect" effects on interstate commerce. Id., at 36-38 ("The question [of the scope of Congress' power] is necessarily one of degree"). The Court held that intrastate activities that "have such a close and substantial relation to interstate commerce that their control is essential or appropriate to protect that commerce from burdens and obstructions" are within Congress' power to regulate. Id., at 37.
> In United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100 (1941), the Court upheld the Fair Labor Standards Act, stating:
> "The power of Congress over interstate commerce is not confined to the regulation of commerce among the states. It extends to those activities intrastate which so affect interstate commerce or the exercise of the power of Congress over it as to make regulation of them appropriate means to the attainment of a legitimate end, the exercise of the granted power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce." Id., at 118.
> See also United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., 315 U.S. 110, 119 (1942) (the commerce power "extends to those intrastate activities which in a substantial way interfere with or obstruct the exercise of the granted power").

In Wickard v. Filburn, the Court upheld the application of amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to the production and consumption of home grown wheat. 317 U. S., at 128-129. The Wickard Court explicitly rejected earlier distinctions between direct and indirect effects on interstate commerce, stating:

"[E]ven if appellee's activity be local and though it may not be regarded as commerce, it may still, whatever its nature, be reached by Congress if it exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce, and this irrespective of whether such effect is what might at some earlier time have been defined as 'direct' or 'indirect.' " Id., at 125.

The Wickard Court emphasized that although Filburn's own contribution to the demand for wheat may have been trivial by itself, that was not "enough to remove him from the scope of federal regulation where, as here, his contribution, taken together with that of many others similarly situated, is far from trivial." Id., at 127-128.

Jones & Laughlin Steel, Darby, and Wickard ushered in an era of Commerce Clause jurisprudence that greatly expanded the previously defined authority of Congress under that Clause. In part, this was a recognition of the great changes that had occurred in the way business was carried on in this country. Enterprises that had once been local or at most regional in nature had become national in scope. But the doctrinal change also reflected a view that earlier Commerce Clause cases artificially had constrained the authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

But even these modern era precedents which have expanded congressional power under the Commerce Clause confirm that this power is subject to outer limits. In Jones & Laughlin Steel, the Court warned that the scope of the interstate commerce power "must be considered in the light of our dual system of government and may not be extended so as to embrace effects upon interstate commerce so indirect and remote that to embrace them, in view of our complex society, would effectually obliterate the distinction between what is national and what is local and create a completely centralized government." 301 U. S., at 37; see also Darby, supra, at 119-120 (Congress may regulate intrastate activity that has a "substantial effect" on interstate commerce); Wickard, supra, at 125 (Congress may regulate activity that "exerts a substantial economic effect on interstate commerce"). Since that time, the Court has heeded that warning and undertaken to decide whether a rational basis existed for concluding that a regulated activity sufficiently affected interstate commerce. See, e.g., Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S. 264, 276-280 (1981); Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 155-156 (1971); Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 299-301 (1964); Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 252-253 (1964).

Similarly, in Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183 (1968), the Court reaffirmed that "the power to regulate commerce, though broad indeed, has limits" that "[t]he Court has ample power" to enforce. Id., at 196, overruled on other grounds, National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833 (1976), overruled by Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985). In response to the dissent's warnings that the Court was powerless to enforce the limitations on Congress' commerce powers because "[a]ll activities affecting commerce, even in the minutest degree, [Wickard], may be regulated and controlled by Congress," 392 U.S., at 204 (Douglas, J., dissenting), the Wirtz Court replied that the dissent had misread precedent as "[n]either here nor in Wickard has the Court declared that Congress may use a relatively trivial impact on commerce as an excuse for broad general regulation of state or private activities," id., at 197, n. 27. Rather, "[t]he Court has said only that where a general regulatory statute bears a substantial relation to commerce, the de minimis character of individual instances arising under that statute is of no consequence." Ibid. (first emphasis added).

Consistent with this structure, we have identified three broad categories of activity that Congress may regulate under its commerce power. Perez v. United States, supra, at 150; see also Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., supra, at 276-277. First, Congress may regulate the use of the channels of interstate commerce. See, e.g., Darby, 312 U. S., at 114; Heart of Atlanta Motel, supra, at 256 (" '[T]he authority of Congress to keep the channels of interstate commerce free from immoral and injurious uses has been frequently sustained, and is no longer open to question.' " (quoting Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 491 (1917)). Second, Congress is empowered to regulate and protect the instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or persons or things in interstate commerce, even though the threat may come only from intrastate activities. See, e.g., Shreveport Rate Cases, 234 U.S. 342 (1914); Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U.S. 20 (1911) (upholding amendments to Safety Appliance Act as applied to vehicles used in intrastate commerce); Perez, supra, at 150 ("[F]or example, the destruction of an aircraft (18 U.S.C. § 32), or . . . thefts from interstate shipments (18 U.S.C. § 659)"). Finally, Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate those activities having a substantial relation to interstate commerce, Jones & Laughlin Steel, 301 U. S., at 37, i.e., > those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce. Wirtz, supra, at 196, n. 27.

> Within this final category, admittedly, our case law has not been clear whether an activity must "affect" or "substantially affect" interstate commerce in order to be within Congress' power to regulate it under the Commerce Clause. Compare Preseault v. ICC, 494 U.S. 1, 17 (1990), with Wirtz, supra, at 196, n. 27 (the Court has never declared that "Congress may use a relatively trivial impact on commerce as an excuse for broad general regulation of state or private activities"). We conclude, consistent with the great weight of our case law, that the proper test requires an analysis of whether the regulated activity "substantially affects" interstate commerce.

Lopez, at 554 - 559. The Wickard case is particularly relevant as it involved an individual farmer who grew his own wheat for his own consumption. As noted, Wickard was still subject to federal regulation even though as an individual his potential effect on interstate commerce was small but when combined with others the court noted that the potential effect on interstate commerce could be great.

In Lopez, the Court struck down 18 U.S.C. § 922(q), the "Gun Free School Zones Act of 1990," which made it a federal crime to possess a gun within a school zone. The Court found that > Section 922(q) is a criminal statute that by its terms has nothing to do with "commerce" or any sort of economic enterprise, however broadly one might define those terms. Section 922(q) is not an essential part of a larger regulation of economic activity, in which the regulatory scheme could be undercut unless the intrastate activity were regulated. It cannot, therefore, be sustained under our cases upholding regulations of activities that arise out of or are connected with a commercial transaction, which viewed in the aggregate, substantially affects interstate commerce.

> Second, §922(q) contains no jurisdictional element which would ensure, through case by case inquiry, that the firearm possession in question affects interstate commerce.
> . . . .
> The possession of a gun in a local school zone is in no sense an economic activity that might, through repetition elsewhere, substantially affect any sort of interstate commerce. Respondent was a local student at a local school; there is no indication that he had recently moved in interstate commerce, and there is no requirement that his possession of the firearm have any concrete tie to interstate commerce.

Id., at 561. See also United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000) (striking down the "Violence Against Women Act" that created civil liability for the commission of any gender based violent crime and noting that again there was no "express jurisdictional element which might limit its reach" to those acts connected with or affecting interstate commerce).[6]

The limits of the Lopez and Morrison decisions were found in the context of medical marijuana. In Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1 (2005),[7] the Court held the commerce clause authorized Congress to enact federal laws regulating and criminalizing activities involving controlled substances even if those activities were wholly intrastate and were pursuant to a state statutory scheme that authorized the activities.

> Unlike those at issue in Lopez and Morrison, the activities regulated by the CSA [Controlled Substances Act] are quintessentially economic. "Economics" refers to "the production, distribution, and consumption of commodities." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 720 (1966). The CSA is a statute that regulates the production, distribution, and consumption of commodities for which there is an established, and lucrative, interstate market. Prohibiting the intrastate possession or manufacture of an article of commerce is a rational (and commonly utilized) means of regulating commerce in that product. Such prohibitions include specific decisions requiring that a drug be withdrawn from the market as a result of the failure to comply with regulatory requirements as well as decisions excluding Schedule I drugs entirely from the market. Because the CSA is a statute that directly regulates economic, commercial activity, our opinion in Morrison casts no doubt on its constitutionality.
> . . .
> Second, limiting the activity to marijuana possession and cultivation "in accordance with state law" cannot serve to place respondents' activities beyond congressional reach. The Supremacy Clause unambiguously provides that if there is any conflict between federal and state law, federal law shall prevail. It is beyond peradventure that federal power over commerce is " 'superior to that of the States to provide for the welfare or necessities of their inhabitants,' " however legitimate or dire those necessities may be. Wirtz, 392 U.S., at 196 (quoting Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. United States, 266 U.S. 405, 426 (1925)). See also 392 U.S., at 195-196; Wickard, 317 U.S., at 124 (" '[N]o form of state activity can constitutionally thwart the regulatory power granted by the commerce clause to Congress' "). Just as state acquiescence to federal regulation > cannot expand the bounds of the Commerce Clause, see, e.g., Morrison, 529 U.S., at 661-662 (Breyer, J., dissenting) (noting that 38 States requested federal intervention), so too state action cannot circumscribe Congress' plenary commerce power. See United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 114 (1941) ("That power can neither be enlarged nor diminished by the exercise or non-exercise of state power").

Raich, id. at 25 - 26.

The Wickard and Raich cases seem especially relevant to CSHB 168(JUD). They clearly stand for the proposition that the Commerce Clause allows federal regulation of purely intrastate activities and products if Congress could rationally conclude that those activities could enter or affect interstate commerce. The production of wheat in Wickard and the production of marijuana in Raich could enter and could affect interstate commerce. Similarly, the production of a firearm, even if performed wholly intrastate and with materials found only in that state, could seemingly affect interstate commerce in firearms generally.

Indeed, this was the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Stewart, 451 F.3d 1071 (9th Cir. 2006).[8] Robert Stewart manufactured homemade machine guns and machine gun kits wholly within California and was convicted of possessing a machine gun in violation of federal law. Stewart appealed and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, based upon Lopez and Morrison, and before Raich was decided, initially reversed his conviction finding that the simple possession of homemade machines did not have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See United States v. Stewart, 348 F.3d 1132(2003). After the United States Supreme Court decided Raich, the Supreme Court vacated the decision of the Ninth Circuit and told the court to reconsider their opinion in light of Raich.[9] On remand, the Ninth Circuit found that Congress had the authority to regulate machine guns, including one's wholly a product of intrastate commerce. The court found that "[h]omemade guns, even those with a unique design, can enter the interstate market and affect supply and demand."[10]

OPEN LETTER TO ALL TENNESSEE FEDERAL FIREARMS LICENSEES

The purpose of this letter is to provide guidance on your obligations as a Federal firearms licensee ("FFL"). The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives ("ATF") is dedicated to your success in meeting your requirements as a Federal firearms licensee. The following guidance is intended to assist you in accomplishing this goal.

The passage of the Tennessee Firearms Freedom Act, H.B. 1796, 106th Leg. (Tenn. 2009) 1796 ("Act"), effective June 19, 2009, has generated questions from industry members as to how this State law may affect them while engaged in a firearms business activity. The Act purports to exempt personal firearms, firearms accessories, and ammunition manufactured in the State, and which remain in the State, from most Federal firearms laws and regulations. However, because the Act conflicts with Federal firearms laws and regulations, Federal law supersedes the Act, and all provisions of the Gun Control Act and the National Firearms Act, and their corresponding regulations, continue to apply.

As you may know, Federal law requires a license to engage in the business of manufacturing firearms or ammunition, or to deal in firearms, even if the firearms or ammunition remain within the same state. All firearms manufactured by a licensee must be properly marked. Additionally, each licensee must record the type, model, caliber or gauge, and serial number of each firearm manufactured or otherwise acquired, and the date such manufacture or other acquisition was made. The information required must be recorded in the licensee's records not later than the seventh day following the date such manufacture or other acquisition was made. Firearms transaction records and NICS background checks must be conducted prior to disposition of firearms to unlicensed persons. These, as well as other Federal requirements and prohibitions, apply whether or not the firearms or ammunition have crossed state lines.

If you have any questions regarding the Federal firearms laws and regulations, please contact your local ATF office. ATF works closely with the firearms industry and appreciates the important role the industry plays in combating violent crime. A listing of ATF office phone numbers can be found at http://www.atf.gov/contact/field.htm.

Manufacturers

1. Must a person who engages in the business of manufacturing and importing firearms have a separate license to cover each type of business?
2. May a person licensed as a manufacturer of ammunition also manufacture firearms?
3. May a person licensed as a manufacturer of firearms also manufacture ammunition?
4. Is a person who reloads ammunition required to be licensed as a manufacturer?
5. Must a licensed manufacturer pay excise taxes?
6. May a person engage in gunsmithing under a dealer's license (type 01), or do gunsmiths need to be licensed as "manufacturers" of firearms?

Q: Must a person who engages in the business of manufacturing and importing firearms have a separate license to cover each type of business?

Yes. A separate license is required to cover each of these types of businesses.

[27 CFR 478.41]

Q: May a person licensed as a manufacturer of ammunition also manufacture firearms?

No. A person licensed as a manufacturer of ammunition may not manufacture firearms unless he or she obtains a license as a firearms manufacturer.

Q: May a person licensed as a manufacturer of firearms also manufacture ammunition?

Yes. The person may also manufacture ammunition (not including destructive device ammunition or armor piercing ammunition) without obtaining a separate license as a manufacturer of ammunition.

Q: Is a person who reloads ammunition required to be licensed as a manufacturer?

Yes, if the person engages in the business of selling or distributing reloads for the purpose of livelihood and profit. No, if the person reloads only for personal use.

[18 U.S.C. 922(a) (i) and 923(a), 27 CFR 478.41]

Q: Must a licensed manufacturer pay excise taxes?

Yes. Licensed manufacturers incur excise tax on the sale of firearms and ammunition manufactured. See Item 17, "Federal Excise Tax" in the General Information section of this publication.

Q: May a person engage in gunsmithing under a dealer's license (type 01), or do gunsmiths need to be licensed as "manufacturers" of firearms?

Generally, a person engaged in gunsmithing requires only a dealer's license (type 01). There are circumstances in which a gunsmith might require a manufacturing license. Generally, a person should obtain a license as a manufacturer of firearms if the person is: 1. performing operations which create firearms or alter firearms (in the case of alterations, the work is not being performed at the request of customers, rather the person who is altering the firearms is purchasing them, making the changes, and then reselling them), 2. is performing the operations as a regular course of business or trade, and 3. is performing the operations for the purpose of sale or distribution of the firearms.

Below are examples of operations performed on firearms and guidance as to whether or not such operations would be considered manufacturing under the Gun Control Act (GCA). These examples do not address the question of whether the operations are considered manufacturing for purposes of determining excise tax. Any questions concerning the payment of excise tax should be directed to the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau, U.S. Department of the Treasury.

1. A company produces a quantity of firearm frames or receivers for sale to customers who will assemble firearms.

   The company is engaged in the business of manufacturing firearms and should be licensed as a manufacturer of firearms.

2. A company produces frames or receivers for another company that assembles and sells the firearms.

   Both companies are engaged in the business of manufacturing firearms and each should be licensed as a manufacturer of firearms.

3. A company provides frames to a subcontractor company that performs machining operations on the frames and returns the frames to the original company which assembles and sells the completed firearms.

   Both companies are engaged in the business of manufacturing firearms and should be licensed as manufacturers of firearms.

4. A company produces barrels for firearms and sells the barrels to another company that assembles and sells complete firearms.

   Because barrels are not firearms, the company that manufactures the barrels is not a manufacturer of firearms. The company that assembles and sells the firearms should be licensed as a manufacturer of firearms.

5. A company receives firearm frames from individual customers, attaches stocks and barrels and returns the firearms to the customers for the customers' personal use.

   The operations performed on the firearms were not for the purpose of sale or distribution. The company should be licensed as a dealer or gunsmith, not as a manufacturer of firearms.

6. A company acquires one receiver, assembles one firearm, and sells the firearm.

   The company is not manufacturing firearms as a regular course of trade or business and is not engaged in the business of manufacturing firearms. This company does not need to be licensed as a manufacturer.

7. An individual acquires frames or receivers and assembles firearms for his personal use, not for sale or distribution.

   The individual is not manufacturing firearms for sale or distribution and is not required to be a licensed manufacturer.

8. A gunsmith regularly buys military type firearms, Mausers etc., and â€œsporterizesâ€ them for resale.

   The gunsmith is in the business of manufacturing firearms and should be licensed as a manufacturer.

9. A gunsmith buys semiautomatic pistols or revolvers and modifies the slides to accept new Style f sights. The sights are not usually sold with these firearms and do not attach to the existing mounting openings.

   The gunsmith offers these firearms for sale. This would be considered the manufacturing of firearms and the gunsmith should be licensed as a manufacturer.

10. A gunsmith buys government model pistols and installs â€œdrop-inâ€ precision trigger parts or other â€œdrop-in partsâ€ for the purpose of resale.

    This would be considered the manufacturing of firearms, as the gunsmith is purchasing the firearms, modifying the firearms and selling them. The gunsmith should be licensed as a manufacturer.

11. A gunsmith buys surplus military rifles, bends the bolts to accept a scope, and then drills the receivers for a scope base. The gunsmith offers these firearms for sale.

    This would be considered the manufacturing of firearms and the gunsmith should be licensed as a manufacturer.

12. A gunsmith buys surplus military rifles or pistols and removes the stocks, adds new stocks or pistol grips, cleans the firearms, then sends the firearms to a separate contractor for bluing. These firearms are then sold to the public.

    This would be considered manufacturing of firearms and the gunsmith should be licensed as a manufacturer.

13. A company purchases surplus firearms, cleans the firearms then offers them for sale to the public.

    The company does not need to be licensed as a manufacturer.

TITLE 18 > PART I > CHAPTER 44 > § 922

§ 922. Unlawful acts

(a) It shall be unlawful—

(1) for any person—

(B) except a licensed importer or licensed manufacturer, to engage in the business of importing or manufacturing ammunition, or in the course of such business, to ship, transport, or receive any ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce;

(2) for any importer, manufacturer, dealer, or collector licensed under the provisions of this chapter to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce any firearm to any person other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, except that—

(A) this paragraph and subsection (b)(3) shall not be held to preclude a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector from returning a firearm or replacement firearm of the same kind and type to a person from whom it was received; and this paragraph shall not be held to preclude an individual from mailing a firearm owned in compliance with Federal, State, and local law to a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector;

(5) for any person (other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector) to transfer, sell, trade, give, transport, or deliver any firearm to any person (other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector) who the transferor knows or has reasonable cause to believe does not reside in (or if the person is a corporation or other business entity, does not maintain a place of business in) the State in which the transferor resides; except that this paragraph shall not apply to

(A) the transfer, transportation, or delivery of a firearm made to carry out a bequest of a firearm to, or an acquisition by intestate succession of a firearm by, a person who is permitted to acquire or possess a firearm under the laws of the State of his residence, and

(B) the loan or rental of a firearm to any person for temporary use for lawful sporting purposes;

(6) for any person in connection with the acquisition or attempted acquisition of any firearm or ammunition from a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, knowingly to make any false or fictitious oral or written statement or to furnish or exhibit any false, fictitious, or misrepresented identification, intended or likely to deceive such importer, manufacturer, dealer, or collector with respect to any fact material to the lawfulness of the sale or other disposition of such firearm or ammunition under the provisions of this chapter;

(7) for any person to manufacture or import armor piercing ammunition, unless—

(A) the manufacture of such ammunition is for the use of the United States, any department or agency of the United States, any State, or any department, agency, or political subdivision of a State;

(B) the manufacture of such ammunition is for the purpose of exportation; or

(C) the manufacture or importation of such ammunition is for the purpose of testing or experimentation and has been authorized by the Attorney General;

(8) for any manufacturer or importer to sell or deliver armor piercing ammunition, unless such sale or delivery—

(A) is for the use of the United States, any department or agency of the United States, any State, or any department, agency, or political subdivision of a State;

(B) is for the purpose of exportation; or

(C) is for the purpose of testing or experimentation and has been authorized by the Attorney General; [1]

(9) for any person, other than a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, who does not reside in any State to receive any firearms unless such receipt is for lawful sporting purposes.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector to sell or deliver—

(1) any firearm or ammunition to any individual who the licensee knows or has reasonable cause to believe is less than eighteen years of age, and, if the firearm, or ammunition is other than a shotgun or rifle, or ammunition for a shotgun or rifle, to any individual who the licensee knows or has reasonable cause to believe is less than twenty-one years of age;

(2) any firearm to any person in any State where the purchase or possession by such person of such firearm would be in violation of any State law or any published ordinance applicable at the place of sale, delivery or other disposition, unless the licensee knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the purchase or possession would not be in violation of such State law or such published ordinance;

(3) any firearm to any person who the licensee knows or has reasonable cause to believe does not reside in (or if the person is a corporation or other business entity, does not maintain a place of business in) the State in which the licensee's place of business is located, except that this paragraph (A) shall not apply to the sale or delivery of any rifle or shotgun to a resident of a State other than a State in which the licensee's place of business is located if the transferee meets in person with the transferor to accomplish the transfer, and the sale, delivery, and receipt fully comply with the legal conditions of sale in both such States (and any licensed manufacturer, importer or dealer shall be presumed, for purposes of this subparagraph, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have had actual knowledge of the State laws and published ordinances of both States), and (B) shall not apply to the loan or rental of a firearm to any person for temporary use for lawful sporting purposes;

(4) to any person any destructive device, machinegun (as defined in section 5845 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986), short-barreled shotgun, or short-barreled rifle, except as specifically authorized by the Attorney General consistent with public safety and necessity; and

(5) any firearm or armor-piercing ammunition to any person unless the licensee notes in his records, required to be kept pursuant to section 923 of this chapter, the name, age, and place of residence of such person if the person is an individual, or the identity and principal and local places of business of such person if the person is a corporation or other business entity.

Paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection shall not apply to transactions between licensed importers, licensed manufacturers, licensed dealers, and licensed collectors. Paragraph (4) of this subsection shall not apply to a sale or delivery to any research organization designated by the Attorney General.

(c) In any case not otherwise prohibited by this chapter, a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer may sell a firearm to a person who does not appear in person at the licensee's business premises (other than another licensed importer, manufacturer, or dealer) only if—

(1) the transferee submits to the transferor a sworn statement in the following form:

"Subject to penalties provided by law, I swear that, in the case of any firearm other than a shotgun or a rifle, I am twenty-one years or more of age, or that, in the case of a shotgun or a rifle, I am eighteen years or more of age; that I am not prohibited by the provisions of chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, from receiving a firearm in interstate or foreign commerce; and that my receipt of this firearm will not be in violation of any statute of the State and published ordinance applicable to the locality in which I reside. Further, the true title, name, and address of the principal law enforcement officer of the locality to which the firearm will be delivered are XXXXXXXXXXXX and containing blank spaces for the attachment of a true copy of any permit or other information required pursuant to such statute or published ordinance;

XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX

(2) the transferor has, prior to the shipment or delivery of the firearm, forwarded by registered or certified mail (return receipt requested) a copy of the sworn statement, together with a description of the firearm, in a form prescribed by the Attorney General, to the chief law enforcement officer of the transferee's place of residence, and has received a return receipt evidencing delivery of the statement or has had the statement returned due to the refusal of the named addressee to accept such letter in accordance with United States Post Office Department regulations; and

(3) the transferor has delayed shipment or delivery for a period of at least seven days following receipt of the notification of the acceptance or refusal of delivery of the statement.

A copy of the sworn statement and a copy of the notification to the local law enforcement officer, together with evidence of receipt or rejection of that notification shall be retained by the licensee as a part of the records required to be kept under section 923 (g).

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to sell or otherwise dispose of any firearm or ammunition to any person knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that such person—

(1) is under indictment for, or has been convicted in any court of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year;

(2) is a fugitive from justice;

(6) who [2] has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions;

(7) who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship;

(8) is subject to a court order that restrains such person from harassing, stalking, or threatening an intimate partner of such person or child of such intimate partner or person, or engaging in other conduct that would place an intimate partner in reasonable fear of bodily injury to the partner or child, except that this paragraph shall only apply to a court order that—

(A) was issued after a hearing of which such person received actual notice, and at which such person had the opportunity to participate; and

(B)

(i) includes a finding that such person represents a credible threat to the physical safety of such intimate partner or child; or

(ii) by its terms explicitly prohibits the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against such intimate partner or child that would reasonably be expected to cause bodily injury; or

(9) has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence.

This subsection shall not apply with respect to the sale or disposition of a firearm or ammunition to a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector who pursuant to subsection (b) of section 925 of this chapter is not precluded from dealing in firearms or ammunition, or to a person who has been granted relief from disabilities pursuant to subsection (c) of section 925 of this chapter.

(e) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to deliver or cause to be delivered to any common or contract carrier for transportation or shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, to persons other than licensed importers, licensed manufacturers, licensed dealers, or licensed collectors, any package or other container in which there is any firearm or ammunition without written notice to the carrier that such firearm or ammunition is being transported or shipped; except that any passenger who owns or legally possesses a firearm or ammunition being transported aboard any common or contract carrier for movement with the passenger in interstate or foreign commerce may deliver said firearm or ammunition into the custody of the pilot, captain, conductor or operator of such common or contract carrier for the duration of the trip without violating any of the provisions of this chapter. No common or contract carrier shall require or cause any label, tag, or other written notice to be placed on the outside of any package, luggage, or other container that such package, luggage, or other container contains a firearm.

(f)

(1) It shall be unlawful for any common or contract carrier to transport or deliver in interstate or foreign commerce any firearm or ammunition with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the shipment, transportation, or receipt thereof would be in violation of the provisions of this chapter.

(2) It shall be unlawful for any common or contract carrier to deliver in interstate or foreign commerce any firearm without obtaining written acknowledgement of receipt from the recipient of the package or other container in which there is a firearm.

(g) It shall be unlawful for any person—

(1) who has been convicted in any court of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year;

(2) who is a fugitive from justice;

(3) who is an unlawful user of or addicted to any controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802));

(4) who has been adjudicated as a mental defective or who has been committed to a mental institution;

(5) who, being an alien—

(ii) by its terms explicitly prohibits the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against such intimate partner or child that would reasonably be expected to cause bodily injury; or

(9) who has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

(h) It shall be unlawful for any individual, who to that individual's knowledge and while being employed for any person described in any paragraph of subsection (g) of this section, in the course of such employment—

(1) to receive, possess, or transport any firearm or ammunition in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce; or

(2) to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

(i) It shall be unlawful for any person to transport or ship in interstate or foreign commerce, any stolen firearm or stolen ammunition, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the firearm or ammunition was stolen.

(j) It shall be unlawful for any person to receive, possess, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any stolen firearm or stolen ammunition, or pledge or accept as security for a loan any stolen firearm or stolen ammunition, which is moving as, which is a part of, which constitutes, or which has been shipped or transported in, interstate or foreign commerce, either before or after it was stolen, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the firearm or ammunition was stolen.

(k) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport, ship, or receive, in interstate or foreign commerce, any firearm which has had the importer's or manufacturer's serial number removed, obliterated, or altered or to possess or receive any firearm which has had the importer's or manufacturer's serial number removed, obliterated, or altered and has, at any time, been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

(l) Except as provided in section 925 (d) of this chapter, it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to import or bring into the United States or any possession thereof any firearm or ammunition; and it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been imported or brought into the United States or any possession thereof in violation of the provisions of this chapter.

(m) It shall be unlawful for any licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector knowingly to make any false entry in, to fail to make appropriate entry in, or to fail to properly maintain, any record which he is required to keep pursuant to section 923 of this chapter or regulations promulgated thereunder.

(n) It shall be unlawful for any person who is under indictment for a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce any firearm or ammunition or receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

(o)

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any person to transfer or possess a machinegun.

(2) This subsection does not apply with respect to—

(A) a transfer to or by, or possession by or under the authority of, the United States or any department or agency thereof or a State, or a department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; or

(B) any lawful transfer or lawful possession of a machinegun that was lawfully possessed before the date this subsection takes effect.

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, import, sell, ship, deliver, possess, transfer, or receive any firearm—

(A) that, after removal of grips, stocks, and magazines, is not as detectable as the Security Exemplar, by walk-through metal detectors calibrated and operated to detect the Security Exemplar; or

(B) any major component of which, when subjected to inspection by the types of x-ray machines commonly used at airports, does not generate an image that accurately depicts the shape of the component. Barium sulfate or other compounds may be used in the fabrication of the component.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) the term "firearm" does not include the frame or receiver of any such weapon;

(B) the term "major component" means, with respect to a firearm, the barrel, the slide or cylinder, or the frame or receiver of the firearm; and

(C) the term "Security Exemplar" means an object, to be fabricated at the direction of the Attorney General, that is—

(i) constructed of, during the 12-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, 3.7 ounces of material type 17–4 PH stainless steel in a shape resembling a handgun; and

(ii) suitable for testing and calibrating metal detectors:

Provided, however, That at the close of such 12-month period, and at appropriate times thereafter the Attorney General shall promulgate regulations to permit the manufacture, importation, sale, shipment, delivery, possession, transfer, or receipt of firearms previously prohibited under this subparagraph that are as detectable as a "Security Exemplar" which contains 3.7 ounces of material type 17–4 PH stainless steel, in a shape resembling a handgun, or such lesser amount as is detectable in view of advances in state-of-the-art developments in weapons detection technology.

(3) Under such rules and regulations as the Attorney General shall prescribe, this subsection shall not apply to the manufacture, possession, transfer, receipt, shipment, or delivery of a firearm by a licensed manufacturer or any person acting pursuant to a contract with a licensed manufacturer, for the purpose of examining and testing such firearm to determine whether paragraph (1) applies to such firearm.

The Attorney General shall ensure that rules and regulations adopted pursuant to this paragraph do not impair the manufacture of prototype firearms or the development of new technology.

(4) The Attorney General shall permit the conditional importation of a firearm by a licensed importer or licensed manufacturer, for examination and testing to determine whether or not the unconditional importation of such firearm would violate this subsection.

(5) This subsection shall not apply to any firearm which—

(A) has been certified by the Secretary of Defense or the Director of Central Intelligence, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, as necessary for military or intelligence applications; and

(B) is manufactured for and sold exclusively to military or intelligence agencies of the United States.

(6) This subsection shall not apply with respect to any firearm manufactured in, imported into, or possessed in the United States before the date of the enactment of the Undetectable Firearms Act of 1988.

(q)

(1) The Congress finds and declares that—

(A) crime, particularly crime involving drugs and guns, is a pervasive, nationwide problem;

(B) crime at the local level is exacerbated by the interstate movement of drugs, guns, and criminal gangs;

(C) firearms and ammunition move easily in interstate commerce and have been found in increasing numbers in and around schools, as documented in numerous hearings in both the Committee on the Judiciary [3] the House of Representatives and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate;

(D) in fact, even before the sale of a firearm, the gun, its component parts, ammunition, and the raw materials from which they are made have considerably moved in interstate commerce;

(E) while criminals freely move from State to State, ordinary citizens and foreign visitors may fear to travel to or through certain parts of the country due to concern about violent crime and gun violence, and parents may decline to send their children to school for the same reason;

(F) the occurrence of violent crime in school zones has resulted in a decline in the quality of education in our country;

(G) this decline in the quality of education has an adverse impact on interstate commerce and the foreign commerce of the United States;

(H) States, localities, and school systems find it almost impossible to handle gun-related crime by themselves—even States, localities, and school systems that have made strong efforts to prevent, detect, and punish gun-related crime find their efforts unavailing due in part to the failure or inability of other States or localities to take strong measures; and

(I) the Congress has the power, under the interstate commerce clause and other provisions of the Constitution, to enact measures to ensure the integrity and safety of the Nation's schools by enactment of this subsection.

(A) It shall be unlawful for any individual knowingly to possess a firearm that has moved in or that otherwise affects interstate or foreign commerce at a place that the individual knows, or has reasonable cause to believe, is a school zone.

(B) Subparagraph (A) does not apply to the possession of a firearm—

(i) on private property not part of school grounds;

(ii) if the individual possessing the firearm is licensed to do so by the State in which the school zone is located or a political subdivision of the State, and the law of the State or political subdivision requires that, before an individual obtains such a license, the law enforcement authorities of the State or political subdivision verify that the individual is qualified under law to receive the license;

(iii) that is—

(I) not loaded; and

(II) in a locked container, or a locked firearms rack that is on a motor vehicle;

(iv) by an individual for use in a program approved by a school in the school zone;

(v) by an individual in accordance with a contract entered into between a school in the school zone and the individual or an employer of the individual;

(vi) by a law enforcement officer acting in his or her official capacity; or

(vii) that is unloaded and is possessed by an individual while traversing school premises for the purpose of gaining access to public or private lands open to hunting, if the entry on school premises is authorized by school authorities.

(3)

(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), it shall be unlawful for any person, knowingly or with reckless disregard for the safety of another, to discharge or attempt to discharge a firearm that has moved in or that otherwise affects interstate or foreign commerce at a place that the person knows is a school zone.

(B) Subparagraph (A) does not apply to the discharge of a firearm—

(i) on private property not part of school grounds;

(ii) as part of a program approved by a school in the school zone, by an individual who is participating in the program;

(iii) by an individual in accordance with a contract entered into between a school in a school zone and the individual or an employer of the individual; or

(iv) by a law enforcement officer acting in his or her official capacity.

(4) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as preempting or preventing a State or local government from enacting a statute establishing gun free school zones as provided in this subsection.

(r) It shall be unlawful for any person to assemble from imported parts any semiautomatic rifle or any shotgun which is identical to any rifle or shotgun prohibited from importation under section 925 (d)(3) of this chapter as not being particularly suitable for or readily adaptable to sporting purposes except that this subsection shall not apply to—

(1) the assembly of any such rifle or shotgun for sale or distribution by a licensed manufacturer to the United States or any department or agency thereof or to any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; or

(2) the assembly of any such rifle or shotgun for the purposes of testing or experimentation authorized by the Attorney General.

(1) Beginning on the date that is 90 days after the date of enactment of this subsection and ending on the day before the date that is 60 months after such date of enactment, it shall be unlawful for any licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer to sell, deliver, or transfer a handgun (other than the return of a handgun to the person from whom it was received) to an individual who is not licensed under section 923, unless—

(A) after the most recent proposal of such transfer by the transferee—

(i) the transferor has—

(I) received from the transferee a statement of the transferee containing the information described in paragraph (3);

(II) verified the identity of the transferee by examining the identification document presented;

(III) within 1 day after the transferee furnishes the statement, provided notice of the contents of the statement to the chief law enforcement officer of the place of residence of the transferee; and

(IV) within 1 day after the transferee furnishes the statement, transmitted a copy of the statement to the chief law enforcement officer of the place of residence of the transferee; and

(ii)

(I) 5 business days (meaning days on which State offices are open) have elapsed from the date the transferor furnished notice of the contents of the statement to the chief law enforcement officer, during which period the transferor has not received information from the chief law enforcement officer that receipt or possession of the handgun by the transferee would be in violation of Federal, State, or local law; or

(II) the transferor has received notice from the chief law enforcement officer that the officer has no information indicating that receipt or possession of the handgun by the transferee would violate Federal, State, or local law;

(B) the transferee has presented to the transferor a written statement, issued by the chief law enforcement officer of the place of residence of the transferee during the 10-day period ending on the date of the most recent proposal of such transfer by the transferee, stating that the transferee requires access to a handgun because of a threat to the life of the transferee or of any member of the household of the transferee;

(C)

(i) the transferee has presented to the transferor a permit that—

(I) allows the transferee to possess or acquire a handgun; and

(II) was issued not more than 5 years earlier by the State in which the transfer is to take place; and

(ii) the law of the State provides that such a permit is to be issued only after an authorized government official has verified that the information available to such official does not indicate that possession of a handgun by the transferee would be in violation of the law;

(D) the law of the State requires that, before any licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer completes the transfer of a handgun to an individual who is not licensed under section 923, an authorized government official verify that the information available to such official does not indicate that possession of a handgun by the transferee would be in violation of law;

(E) the Attorney General has approved the transfer under section 5812 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; or

(F) on application of the transferor, the Attorney General has certified that compliance with subparagraph (A)(i)(III) is impracticable because—

(i) the ratio of the number of law enforcement officers of the State in which the transfer is to occur to the number of square miles of land area of the State does not exceed 0.0025;

(ii) the business premises of the transferor at which the transfer is to occur are extremely remote in relation to the chief law enforcement officer; and

(iii) there is an absence of telecommunications facilities in the geographical area in which the business premises are located.

(2) A chief law enforcement officer to whom a transferor has provided notice pursuant to paragraph (1)(A)(i)(III) shall make a reasonable effort to ascertain within 5 business days whether receipt or possession would be in violation of the law, including research in whatever State and local recordkeeping systems are available and in a national system designated by the Attorney General.

(3) The statement referred to in paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) shall contain only—

(A) the name, address, and date of birth appearing on a valid identification document (as defined in section 1028 (d)(1) [4]) of the transferee containing a photograph of the transferee and a description of the identification used;

(B) a statement that the transferee—

(i) is not under indictment for, and has not been convicted in any court of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year, and has not been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence;

(ii) is not a fugitive from justice;

(iii) is not an unlawful user of or addicted to any controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act);

(iv) has not been adjudicated as a mental defective or been committed to a mental institution;

(v) is not an alien who—

(I) is illegally or unlawfully in the United States; or

(II) subject to subsection (y)(2), has been admitted to the United States under a nonimmigrant visa (as that term is defined in section 101(a)(26) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a)(26)));

(vi) has not been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions; and

(vii) is not a person who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced such citizenship;

(C) the date the statement is made; and

(D) notice that the transferee intends to obtain a handgun from the transferor.

(4) Any transferor of a handgun who, after such transfer, receives a report from a chief law enforcement officer containing information that receipt or possession of the handgun by the transferee violates Federal, State, or local law shall, within 1 business day after receipt of such request, communicate any information related to the transfer that the transferor has about the transfer and the transferee to—

(A) the chief law enforcement officer of the place of business of the transferor; and

(B) the chief law enforcement officer of the place of residence of the transferee.

(5) Any transferor who receives information, not otherwise available to the public, in a report under this subsection shall not disclose such information except to the transferee, to law enforcement authorities, or pursuant to the direction of a court of law.

(A) Any transferor who sells, delivers, or otherwise transfers a handgun to a transferee shall retain the copy of the statement of the transferee with respect to the handgun transaction, and shall retain evidence that the transferor has complied with subclauses (III) and (IV) of paragraph (1)(A)(i) with respect to the statement.

(B) Unless the chief law enforcement officer to whom a statement is transmitted under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(IV) determines that a transaction would violate Federal, State, or local law—

(i) the officer shall, within 20 business days after the date the transferee made the statement on the basis of which the notice was provided, destroy the statement, any record containing information derived from the statement, and any record created as a result of the notice required by paragraph (1)(A)(i)(III);

(ii) the information contained in the statement shall not be conveyed to any person except a person who has a need to know in order to carry out this subsection; and

(iii) the information contained in the statement shall not be used for any purpose other than to carry out this subsection.

(C) If a chief law enforcement officer determines that an individual is ineligible to receive a handgun and the individual requests the officer to provide the reason for such determination, the officer shall provide such reasons to the individual in writing within 20 business days after receipt of the request.

(7) A chief law enforcement officer or other person responsible for providing criminal history background information pursuant to this subsection shall not be liable in an action at law for damages—

(A) for failure to prevent the sale or transfer of a handgun to a person whose receipt or possession of the handgun is unlawful under this section; or

(B) for preventing such a sale or transfer to a person who may lawfully receive or possess a handgun.

(8) For purposes of this subsection, the term "chief law enforcement officer" means the chief of police, the sheriff, or an equivalent officer or the designee of any such individual.

(9) The Attorney General shall take necessary actions to ensure that the provisions of this subsection are published and disseminated to licensed dealers, law enforcement officials, and the public.

(t)

(1) Beginning on the date that is 30 days after the Attorney General notifies licensees under section 103(d) of the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act that the national instant criminal background check system is established, a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer shall not transfer a firearm to any other person who is not licensed under this chapter, unless—

(A) before the completion of the transfer, the licensee contacts the national instant criminal background check system established under section 103 of that Act;

(B)

(i) the system provides the licensee with a unique identification number; or

(ii) 3 business days (meaning a day on which State offices are open) have elapsed since the licensee contacted the system, and the system has not notified the licensee that the receipt of a firearm by such other person would violate subsection (g) or (n) of this section; and

(C) the transferor has verified the identity of the transferee by examining a valid identification document (as defined in section 1028 (d) of this title) of the transferee containing a photograph of the transferee.

(2) If receipt of a firearm would not violate subsection (g) or (n) or State law, the system shall—

(A) assign a unique identification number to the transfer;

(B) provide the licensee with the number; and

(C) destroy all records of the system with respect to the call (other than the identifying number and the date the number was assigned) and all records of the system relating to the person or the transfer.

(3) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to a firearm transfer between a licensee and another person if—

(A)

(i) such other person has presented to the licensee a permit that—

(I) allows such other person to possess or acquire a firearm; and

(II) was issued not more than 5 years earlier by the State in which the transfer is to take place; and

(ii) the law of the State provides that such a permit is to be issued only after an authorized government official has verified that the information available to such official does not indicate that possession of a firearm by such other person would be in violation of law;

(B) the Attorney General has approved the transfer under section 5812 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; or

(C) on application of the transferor, the Attorney General has certified that compliance with paragraph (1)(A) is impracticable because—

(i) the ratio of the number of law enforcement officers of the State in which the transfer is to occur to the number of square miles of land area of the State does not exceed 0.0025;

(ii) the business premises of the licensee at which the transfer is to occur are extremely remote in relation to the chief law enforcement officer (as defined in subsection (s)(8)); and

(iii) there is an absence of telecommunications facilities in the geographical area in which the business premises are located.

(4) If the national instant criminal background check system notifies the licensee that the information available to the system does not demonstrate that the receipt of a firearm by such other person would violate subsection (g) or (n) or State law, and the licensee transfers a firearm to such other person, the licensee shall include in the record of the transfer the unique identification number provided by the system with respect to the transfer.

(5) If the licensee knowingly transfers a firearm to such other person and knowingly fails to comply with paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to the transfer and, at the time such other person most recently proposed the transfer, the national instant criminal background check system was operating and information was available to the system demonstrating that receipt of a firearm by such other person would violate subsection (g) or (n) of this section or State law, the Attorney General may, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, suspend for not more than 6 months or revoke any license issued to the licensee under section 923, and may impose on the licensee a civil fine of not more than $5,000.

(6) Neither a local government nor an employee of the Federal Government or of any State or local government, responsible for providing information to the national instant criminal background check system shall be liable in an action at law for damages—

(A) for failure to prevent the sale or transfer of a firearm to a person whose receipt or possession of the firearm is unlawful under this section; or

(B) for preventing such a sale or transfer to a person who may lawfully receive or possess a firearm.

(u) It shall be unlawful for a person to steal or unlawfully take or carry away from the person or the premises of a person who is licensed to engage in the business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in firearms, any firearm in the licensee's business inventory that has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

(x)

(1) It shall be unlawful for a person to sell, deliver, or otherwise transfer to a person who the transferor knows or has reasonable cause to believe is a juvenile—

(A) a handgun; or

(B) ammunition that is suitable for use only in a handgun.

(2) It shall be unlawful for any person who is a juvenile to knowingly possess—

(A) a handgun; or

(B) ammunition that is suitable for use only in a handgun.

(i) in the course of employment, in the course of ranching or farming related to activities at the residence of the juvenile (or on property used for ranching or farming at which the juvenile, with the permission

(ii) with the prior written consent of the juvenile's parent or guardian who is not prohibited by Federal, State, or local law from possessing a firearm, except—

(II) with respect to ranching or farming activities as described in clause (i), a juvenile may possess and use a handgun or ammunition with the prior written approval of the juvenile's parent or legal guardian and at the direction of an adult who is not prohibited by Federal, State or local law from possessing a firearm;

(iii) the juvenile has the prior written consent in the juvenile's possession at all times when a handgun is in the possession of the juvenile; and

(iv) in accordance with State and local law;

(B) a juvenile who is a member of the Armed Forces of the United States or the National Guard who possesses or is armed with a handgun in the line of duty;

(C) a transfer by inheritance of title (but not possession) of a handgun or ammunition to a juvenile; or

(D) the possession of a handgun or ammunition by a juvenile taken in defense of the juvenile or other persons against an intruder into the residence of the juvenile or a residence in which the juvenile is an invited guest.

(4) A handgun or ammunition, the possession of which is transferred to a juvenile in circumstances in which the transferor is not in violation of this subsection shall not be subject to permanent confiscation by the Government if its possession by the juvenile subsequently becomes unlawful because of the conduct of the juvenile, but shall be returned to the lawful owner when such handgun or ammunition is no longer required by the Government for the purposes of investigation or prosecution.

(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term "juvenile" means a person who is less than 18 years of age.

(A) In a prosecution of a violation of this subsection, the court shall require the presence of a juvenile defendant's parent or legal guardian at all proceedings.

(B) The court may use the contempt power to enforce subparagraph (A).

(C) The court may excuse attendance of a parent or legal guardian of a juvenile defendant at a proceeding in a prosecution of a violation of this subsection for good cause shown.

(y) Provisions Relating to Aliens Admitted Under Nonimmigrant Visas.—

(1) Definitions.— In this subsection—

(A) the term "alien" has the same meaning as in section 101(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a)(3)); and

(B) the term "nonimmigrant visa" has the same meaning as in section 101(a)(26) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 (a)(26)).

(2) Exceptions.— Subsections (d)(5)(B), (g)(5)(B), and (s)(3)(B)(v)(II) do not apply to any alien who has been lawfully admitted to the United States under a nonimmigrant visa, if that alien is—

(C) Approval of petition.— The Attorney General shall approve a petition submitted in accordance with this paragraph, if the Attorney General determines that waiving the requirements of subsection (g)(5)(B) with respect to the petitioner—

(i) would be in the interests of justice; and

(ii) would not jeopardize the public safety.

(z) Secure Gun Storage or Safety Device.—

(1) In general.— Except as provided under paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer to sell, deliver, or transfer any handgun to any person other than any person licensed under this chapter, unless the transferee is provided with a secure gun storage or safety device (as defined in section 921 (a)(34)) for that handgun.

(3) Liability for use.—

(A) In general.— Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person who has lawful possession and control of a handgun, and who uses a secure gun storage or safety device with the handgun, shall be entitled to immunity from a qualified civil liability action.

(B) Prospective actions.— A qualified civil liability action may not be brought in any Federal or State court.

(C) Defined term.— As used in this paragraph, the term "qualified civil liability action"—

TITLE 18 > PART I > CHAPTER 44 > § 923

§ 923. Licensing

(a) No person shall engage in the business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in firearms, or importing or manufacturing ammunition, until he has filed an application with and received a license to do so from the Attorney General. The application shall be in such form and contain only that information necessary to determine eligibility for licensing as the Attorney General shall by regulation prescribe and shall include a photograph and fingerprints of the applicant. Each applicant shall pay a fee for obtaining such a license, a separate fee being required for each place in which the applicant is to do business, as follows:

(1) If the applicant is a manufacturer—

(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $1,000 per year;

(B) of firearms other than destructive devices, a fee of $50 per year; or

(C) of ammunition for firearms, other than ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $10 per year.

(2) If the applicant is an importer—

(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $1,000 per year; or

(B) of firearms other than destructive devices or ammunition for firearms other than destructive devices, or ammunition other than armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $50 per year.

(3) If the applicant is a dealer—

(A) in destructive devices or ammunition for destructive devices, a fee of $1,000 per year; or

(B) who is not a dealer in destructive devices, a fee of $200 for 3 years, except that the fee for renewal of a valid license shall be $90 for 3 years.

(b) Any person desiring to be licensed as a collector shall file an application for such license with the Attorney General. The application shall be in such form and contain only that information necessary to determine eligibility as the Attorney General shall by regulation prescribe. The fee for such license shall be $10 per year. Any license granted under this subsection shall only apply to transactions in curios and relics.

(c) Upon the filing of a proper application and payment of the prescribed fee, the Attorney General shall issue to a qualified applicant the appropriate license which, subject to the provisions of this chapter and other applicable provisions of law, shall entitle the licensee to transport, ship, and receive firearms and ammunition covered by such license in interstate or foreign commerce during the period stated in the license. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit a licensed manufacturer, importer, or dealer from maintaining and disposing of a personal collection of firearms, subject only to such restrictions as apply in this chapter to dispositions by a person other than a licensed manufacturer, importer, or dealer. If any firearm is so disposed of by a licensee within one year after its transfer from his business inventory into such licensee's personal collection or if such disposition or any other acquisition is made for the purpose of willfully evading the restrictions placed upon licensees by this chapter, then such firearm shall be deemed part of such licensee's business inventory, except that any licensed manufacturer, importer, or dealer who has maintained a firearm as part of a personal collection for one year and who sells or otherwise disposes of such firearm shall record the description of the firearm in a bound volume, containing the name and place of residence and date of birth of the transferee if the transferee is an individual, or the identity and principal and local places of business of the transferee if the transferee is a corporation or other business entity: Provided, That no other recordkeeping shall be required.

(1) Any application submitted under subsection (a) or (b) of this section shall be approved if—

(A) the applicant is twenty-one years of age or over;

(B) the applicant (including, in the case of a corporation, partnership, or association, any individual possessing, directly or indirectly, the power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of the corporation, partnership, or association) is not prohibited from transporting, shipping, or receiving firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce under section 922 (g) and (n) of this chapter;

(C) the applicant has not willfully violated any of the provisions of this chapter or regulations issued thereunder;

(D) the applicant has not willfully failed to disclose any material information required, or has not made any false statement as to any material fact, in connection with his application;

(E) the applicant has in a State

(i) premises from which he conducts business subject to license under this chapter or from which he intends to conduct such business within a reasonable period of time, or

(ii) in the case of a collector, premises from which he conducts his collecting subject to license under this chapter or from which he intends to conduct such collecting within a reasonable period of time;

(F) the applicant certifies that—

(i) the business to be conducted under the license is not prohibited by State or local law in the place where the licensed premise is located;

(ii)

(I) within 30 days after the application is approved the business will comply with the requirements of State and local law applicable to the conduct of the business; and

(II) the business will not be conducted under the license until the requirements of State and local law applicable to the business have been met; and

(iii) that the applicant has sent or delivered a form to be prescribed by the Attorney General, to the chief law enforcement officer of the locality in which the premises are located, which indicates that the applicant intends to apply for a Federal firearms license; and

(G) in the case of an application to be licensed as a dealer, the applicant certifies that secure gun storage or safety devices will be available at any place in which firearms are sold under the license to persons who are not licensees (subject to the exception that in any case in which a secure gun storage or safety device is temporarily unavailable because of theft, casualty loss, consumer sales, backorders from a manufacturer, or any other similar reason beyond the control of the licensee, the dealer shall not be considered to be in violation of the requirement under this subparagraph to make available such a device).

(2) The Attorney General must approve or deny an application for a license within the 60-day period beginning on the date it is received. If the Attorney General fails to act within such period, the applicant may file an action under section 1361 of title 28 to compel the Attorney General to act. If the Attorney General approves an applicant's application, such applicant shall be issued a license upon the payment of the prescribed fee.

(e) The Attorney General may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, revoke any license issued under this section if the holder of such license has willfully violated any provision of this chapter or any rule or regulation prescribed by the Attorney General under this chapter or fails to have secure gun storage or safety devices available at any place in which firearms are sold under the license to persons who are not licensees (except that in any case in which a secure gun storage or safety device is temporarily unavailable because of theft, casualty loss, consumer sales, backorders from a manufacturer, or any other similar reason beyond the control of the licensee, the dealer shall not be considered to be in violation of the requirement to make available such a device). The Attorney General may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, revoke the license of a dealer who willfully transfers armor piercing ammunition. The Secretary's [1] action under this subsection may be reviewed only as provided in subsection (f) of this section.

(1) Any person whose application for a license is denied and any holder of a license which is revoked shall receive a written notice from the Attorney General stating specifically the grounds upon which the application was denied or upon which the license was revoked. Any notice of a revocation of a license shall be given to the holder of such license before the effective date of the revocation.

(2) If the Attorney General denies an application for, or revokes, a license, he shall, upon request by the aggrieved party, promptly hold a hearing to review his denial or revocation. In the case of a revocation of a license, the Attorney General shall upon the request of the holder of the license stay the effective date of the revocation. A hearing held under this paragraph shall be held at a location convenient to the aggrieved party.

(3) If after a hearing held under paragraph (2) the Attorney General decides not to reverse his decision to deny an application or revoke a license, the Attorney General shall give notice of his decision to the aggrieved party. The aggrieved party may at any time within sixty days after the date notice was given under this paragraph file a petition with the United States district court for the district in which he resides or has his principal place of business for a de novo judicial review of such denial or revocation. In a proceeding conducted under this subsection, the court may consider any evidence submitted by the parties to the proceeding whether or not such evidence was considered at the hearing held under paragraph (2). If the court decides that the Attorney General was not authorized to deny the application or to revoke the license, the court shall order the Attorney General to take such action as may be necessary to comply with the judgment of the court.

(4) If criminal proceedings are instituted against a licensee alleging any violation of this chapter or of rules or regulations prescribed under this chapter, and the licensee is acquitted of such charges, or such proceedings are terminated, other than upon motion of the Government before trial upon such charges, the Attorney General shall be absolutely barred from denying or revoking any license granted under this chapter where such denial or revocation is based in whole or in part on the facts which form the basis of such criminal charges. No proceedings for the revocation of a license shall be instituted by the Attorney General more than one year after the filing of the indictment or information.

(A) Each licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, and licensed dealer shall maintain such records of importation, production, shipment, receipt, sale, or other disposition of firearms at his place of business for such period, and in such form, as the Attorney General may by regulations prescribe. Such importers, manufacturers, and dealers shall not be required to submit to the Attorney General reports and information with respect to such records and the contents thereof, except as expressly required by this section. The Attorney General, when he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this chapter has occurred and that evidence thereof may be found on such premises, may, upon demonstrating such cause before a Federal magistrate judge and securing from such magistrate judge a warrant authorizing entry, enter during business hours the premises (including places of storage) of any licensed firearms importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, licensed collector, or any licensed importer or manufacturer of ammunition, for the purpose of inspecting or examining—

(i) any records or documents required to be kept by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector under this chapter or rules or regulations under this chapter, and

(ii) any firearms or ammunition kept or stored by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, at such premises.

(B) The Attorney General may inspect or examine the inventory and records of a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer without such reasonable cause or warrant—

(i) in the course of a reasonable inquiry during the course of a criminal investigation of a person or persons other than the licensee;

(ii) for ensuring compliance with the record keeping requirements of this chapter—

(I) not more than once during any 12-month period; or

(II) at any time with respect to records relating to a firearm involved in a criminal investigation that is traced to the licensee; or

(iii) when such inspection or examination may be required for determining the disposition of one or more particular firearms in the course of a bona fide criminal investigation.

(C) The Attorney General may inspect the inventory and records of a licensed collector without such reasonable cause or warrant—

(i) for ensuring compliance with the record keeping requirements of this chapter not more than once during any twelve-month period; or

(ii) when such inspection or examination may be required for determining the disposition of one or more particular firearms in the course of a bona fide criminal investigation.

(D) At the election of a licensed collector, the annual inspection of records and inventory permitted under this paragraph shall be performed at the office of the Attorney General designated for such inspections which is located in closest proximity to the premises where the inventory and records of such licensed collector are maintained. The inspection and examination authorized by this paragraph shall not be construed as authorizing the Attorney General to seize any records or other documents other than those records or documents constituting material evidence of a violation of law. If the Attorney General seizes such records or documents, copies shall be provided the licensee within a reasonable time. The Attorney General may make available to any Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency any information which he may obtain by reason of this chapter with respect to the identification of persons prohibited from purchasing or receiving firearms or ammunition who have purchased or received firearms or ammunition, together with a description of such firearms or ammunition, and he may provide information to the extent such information may be contained in the records required to be maintained by this chapter, when so requested by any Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency.

(2) Each licensed collector shall maintain in a bound volume the nature of which the Attorney General may by regulations prescribe, records of the receipt, sale, or other disposition of firearms. Such records shall include the name and address of any person to whom the collector sells or otherwise disposes of a firearm. Such collector shall not be required to submit to the Attorney General reports and information with respect to such records and the contents thereof, except as expressly required by this section.

(A) Each licensee shall prepare a report of multiple sales or other dispositions whenever the licensee sells or otherwise disposes of, at one time or during any five consecutive business days, two or more pistols, or revolvers, or any combination of pistols and revolvers totalling two or more, to an unlicensed person. The report shall be prepared on a form specified by the Attorney General and forwarded to the office specified thereon and to the department of State police or State law enforcement agency of the State or local law enforcement agency of the local jurisdiction in which the sale or other disposition took place, not later than the close of business on the day that the multiple sale or other disposition occurs.

(B) Except in the case of forms and contents thereof regarding a purchaser who is prohibited by subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of this title from receipt of a firearm, the department of State police or State law enforcement agency or local law enforcement agency of the local jurisdiction shall not disclose any such form or the contents thereof to any person or entity, and shall destroy each such form and any record of the contents thereof no more than 20 days from the date such form is received. No later than the date that is 6 months after the effective date of this subparagraph, and at the end of each 6-month period thereafter, the department of State police or State law enforcement agency or local law enforcement agency of the local jurisdiction shall certify to the Attorney General of the United States that no disclosure contrary to this subparagraph has been made and that all forms and any record of the contents thereof have been destroyed as provided in this subparagraph.

(4) Where a firearms or ammunition business is discontinued and succeeded by a new licensee, the records required to be kept by this chapter shall appropriately reflect such facts and shall be delivered to the successor. Where discontinuance of the business is absolute, such records shall be delivered within thirty days after the business discontinuance to the Attorney General. However, where State law or local ordinance requires the delivery of records to other responsible authority, the Attorney General may arrange for the delivery of such records to such other responsible authority.

(A) Each licensee shall, when required by letter issued by the Attorney General, and until notified to the contrary in writing by the Attorney General, submit on a form specified by the Attorney General, for periods and at the times specified in such letter, all record information required to be kept by this chapter or such lesser record information as the Attorney General in such letter may specify.

(B) The Attorney General may authorize such record information to be submitted in a manner other than that prescribed in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph when it is shown by a licensee that an alternate method of reporting is reasonably necessary and will not unduly hinder the effective administration of this chapter. A licensee may use an alternate method of reporting if the licensee describes the proposed alternate method of reporting and the need therefor in a letter application submitted to the Attorney General, and the Attorney General approves such alternate method of reporting.

(6) Each licensee shall report the theft or loss of a firearm from the licensee's inventory or collection, within 48 hours after the theft or loss is discovered, to the Attorney General and to the appropriate local authorities.

(7) Each licensee shall respond immediately to, and in no event later than 24 hours after the receipt of, a request by the Attorney General for information contained in the records required to be kept by this chapter as may be required for determining the disposition of 1 or more firearms in the course of a bona fide criminal investigation. The requested information shall be provided orally or in writing, as the Attorney General may require. The Attorney General shall implement a system whereby the licensee can positively identify and establish that an individual requesting information via telephone is employed by and authorized by the agency to request such information.

(h) Licenses issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of this section shall be kept posted and kept available for inspection on the premises covered by the license.

(i) Licensed importers and licensed manufacturers shall identify by means of a serial number engraved or cast on the receiver or frame of the weapon, in such manner as the Attorney General shall by regulations prescribe, each firearm imported or manufactured by such importer or manufacturer.

(j) A licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer may, under rules or regulations prescribed by the Attorney General, conduct business temporarily at a location other than the location specified on the license if such temporary location is the location for a gun show or event sponsored by any national, State, or local organization, or any affiliate of any such organization devoted to the collection, competitive use, or other sporting use of firearms in the community, and such location is in the State which is specified on the license. Records of receipt and disposition of firearms transactions conducted at such temporary location shall include the location of the sale or other disposition and shall be entered in the permanent records of the licensee and retained on the location specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall authorize any licensee to conduct business in or from any motorized or towed vehicle. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, a separate fee shall not be required of a licensee with respect to business conducted under this subsection. Any inspection or examination of inventory or records under this chapter by the Attorney General at such temporary location shall be limited to inventory consisting of, or records relating to, firearms held or disposed at such temporary location. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Attorney General to inspect or examine the inventory or records of a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer at any location other than the location specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish in any manner any right to display, sell, or otherwise dispose of firearms or ammunition, which is in effect before the date of the enactment of the Firearms Owners' Protection Act, including the right of a licensee to conduct "curios or relics" firearms transfers and business away from their business premises with another licensee without regard as to whether the location of where the business is conducted is located in the State specified on the license of either licensee.

(k) Licensed importers and licensed manufacturers shall mark all armor piercing projectiles and packages containing such projectiles for distribution in the manner prescribed by the Attorney General by regulation. The Attorney General shall furnish information to each dealer licensed under this chapter defining which projectiles are considered armor piercing ammunition as defined in section 921 (a)(17)(B).

(l) The Attorney General shall notify the chief law enforcement officer in the appropriate State and local jurisdictions of the names and addresses of all persons in the State to whom a firearms license is issued.

The purpose of MSSA is to "support and promote firearm safety, the shooting sports, hunting, firearm collecting, and personal protection using firearms, to provide education to its members concerning shooting, firearms, safety, hunting and the right to keep and bear arms, to own and or manage one or more shooting facilities for the use of its members and or others, to conduct such other activities as serves the needs of its members." MSSA regularly lobbies the Montana Legislature, and its efforts were instrumental in the passage of the Montana statutes at issue in this civil action. MSSA has a genuine and viable interest in this case, as its goals and its existence depends upon the protection of the rights and interests of its members, and the enforcement of Montana law.

2. Plaintiff Second Amendment Foundation, Inc. ("SAF"), is a non-profit membership organization incorporated under the laws of Washington with its principal place of business in Bellevue, Washington.

SAF has over 650,000 members and supporters nationwide, including Montana. The purposes of SAF include promoting the exercise of the right to keep and bear arms, education, research, publishing and legal action focusing on the Constitutional right to privately own and possess firearms, and the consequences of gun control.

3. Plaintiff Gary Marbut is the President of MSSA, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of Missoula, Montana. Marbut is responsible for promoting and protecting the interests of MSSA and its members. Further, as an individual, Marbut desires to manufacture and sell small arms and small arms ammunition per the Montana Firearms Freedom Act.

4. Defendant, Eric H. Holder, Jr., is the appointed, qualified, confirmed, and acting Attorney General and head of the Department of Justice of the United States of America and, as such, is the official charged with administering the Unites States Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives ("BATFE"), and enforcement of both the National Firearms Act ("NFA"), and the Gun Control Act of 1968 ("GCA"). DEFENDANT maintains his offices as Attorney General in the District of Columbia.

5. This is an action for declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202, and 18 U.S.C. § 925A and is brought for the purpose of determining a question of actual controversy between the parties as more fully appears in the complaint below.

6. Jurisdiction of this action is based generally on 5 U.S.C. § 704 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Jurisdiction is expressly conferred on this court by 18 U.S.C. § 925A(2).

7. Venue for this action is proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because Plaintiff resides in this district and no real property is involved in this action.

8. The Montana Firearms Freedom Act ("MFFA"), House Bill 246 of the 2009 Montana legislative session, whose language is incorporated herein by this reference, becomes effective today. Its scope is limited to activity occurring exclusively within the state of Montana.

9. The activity authorized under the MFFA is primarily political. It has a commercial element, but the purpose is to allow Montanans who wish to avoid interference by the United States government in their legitimate activity (specifically, manufacturing and selling small arms and small arms ammunition), to do so if they strictly confine such activity to the political boundaries of their own state. Although there are commercial elements to the statutory scheme, they are incidental to the material purpose and function of the MFFA. Passage of the MFFA was an express exercise by the State of Montana of powers reserved to the states and to the people under the 10th Amendment of the United States Constitution. The MFFA is also authorized under the conditions of the compact with the United States that Montana entered upon admission to the union. The United States Congress therefore has no authority, under the limited powers granted to it by the United States Constitution, to preempt the MFFA.

10. PLAINTIFF MARBUT wishes to manufacture and sell small arms and small arms ammunition to customers exclusively in Montana, pursuant to the MFFA, without complying with the NFA or the GCA, or other applicable federal laws. MARBUT has sought permission and assurances from BATFE that he may proceed under MFFA without fear of criminal prosecution or civil sanction, so long as he strictly confines such activity to Montana.

11. PLAINTIFF MSSA and PLAINTIFF SAF have members, along with other Montana citizens, who wish to manufacture and sell small arms and small arms ammunition to customers in Montana, pursuant to the MFFA, without complying with the NFA or the GCA, or other applicable federal laws.

12. Like PLAINTIFF MARBUT, other members of PLAINTIFF MSSA and PLAINTIFF SAF, and other Montana citizens, have sought permission and assurances from BATFE that they may proceed under MFFA without fear of criminal prosecution or civil sanction, sanction so long as he strictly confines such activity to Montana.

13. BATFE refuses to give permission to Marbut or anyone else to proceed under MFFA, and instead, on September 29, 2009, it issued a letter to Plaintiff Gary Marbut contending that "to the extent the [MFFA] conflicts with Federal firearms laws and regulations, Federal law supersedes the MFFA, and all provisions of the GCA and NFA, and their corresponding regulations, continue to apply." (See copy attached hereto as Exhibit A.) This is consistent with an "open letter" BATFE issued to the general public on July 16, 2009, warning that MFFA conflicts with federal firearms law and regulations, and that federal law therefore supersedes the MFFA. (See copy attached hereto as Exhibit B.)

14. As a result of BATFE'S actions in issuing its July 16, 2009, "open letter," and in its September 29, 2009, letter to PLAINTIFF MARBUT, and its refusal to give other Montana citizens assurances or permission to exercise their rights under the MFFA, no Montanan who wishes to proceed under the MFFA can do so without fear of federal criminal prosecution and/or civil sanctions, including fines and/or forfeiture.

15. There is therefore a real and actual controversy between PLAINTIFFS and DEFENDANT regarding whether the United States Constitution confers power on Congress to regulate activities contemplated by the MFFA. Under the 10th Amendment, all regulatory authority of all such activities within Montana's political borders is left in the sole discretion of Montana. Federal law therefore does not preempt the MFFA and cannot be invoked to regulate or prosecute Montana citizens acting in compliance with the MFFA, so long as they do so solely within the political borders of Montana.

16. In addition, PLAINTIFFS face irreparable harm from DEFENDANT'S threat to enforce the NFA and/or the GCA and other federal laws and regulations through the prosecution of civil actions and criminal indictments against Montana citizens who proceed in compliance with MFFA. The threat of federal civil action and/or criminal prosecution faced under the circumstances effectively blocks PLAINTIFFS and all law abiding citizens from exercising their rights under and otherwise benefitting from the MFFA, a wrong for which they have no adequate legal remedy at law.

REQUEST FOR RELIEF

PLAINTIFFS respectfully request:

A. A declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 57 for the purpose of determining and adjudicating the questions of actual controversy between the parties as set forth above, that:

(i) The United States Constitution confers no power on Congress to regulate the special rights and activities contemplated by the MFFA;

(ii) Under the 10th Amendment of the United States Constitution, all regulatory authority of all such activities within Montana's political borders is left in the sole discretion of Montana; and

(iii) Federal law does not preempt the MFFA and cannot be invoked to regulate or prosecute Montana citizens acting in compliance with the MFFA.

B. A permanent injunction order enjoining DEFENDANT and any agency of the United States of America from prosecuting any civil action or criminal indictment or information under the NFA or the GCA, or any other federal laws and regulations, against PLAINTIFFS or other Montana citizens acting, solely within the political borders of Montana, in compliance with the MFFA.

C. An order awarding to PLAINTIFFS costs and a reasonable attorney fee under the private attorney general doctrine.

D. PLAINTIFFS request such other and further relief as may be proper in the circumstances.

Concealed Handgun Birthday Permit
HB 201

June 2003 Alaska Governor Frank Murkowski signed into law the bill allowing citizens to carry firearms concealed without getting a permit. The bill had 33 co-sponsors, from both chambers, and passed on a veto-proof vote of 28 to 12 in the House and 12 to 8 in the Senate.

The permit is still available for those who would want to travel to other states that have reciprocity with Alaska. Since the permit is not necessary in Alaska some permit holders forget the renewal date.

This bill changes the expiration date of a concealed handgun permit from five years from the date of issue to the person's birthday. The first year is a transitional year where the permit will be issued for a minimum of 4 year and how ever many months it is until the person's birthday. All permits after that will be for 5 years.

CSHB 251 – VEHICLE LINES/TOWING/STORAGE/TRANSPORT

Towing companies provide necessary service to Alaskans through the removal of abandoned, junked, and wrecked vehicles from public thoroughfares and private property. Alaskan towing companies follow prescribed laws in providing these towing services and in most cases are acting under the authorization or direction of public safety officers. Alaskan towing companies should be paid for providing these services to the public. Providing a statutory mechanism so that these small towing businesses are first in line for payment for delivered services will reduce business risk to these companies. House Bill 251 changes the priority in which payments may be made to provide for a fairer business environment to towing companies.

House Bill 251 prioritizes a possessory lien for services lawfully provided in conformity with AS 28.10.502, and requires towing companies to provide timely notification. The prioritization of the possessory lien gives first position to towing companies for the purpose of recouping costs for contractual vehicular towing and storage. HB 251 also adds a layer of consumer protection by requiring a towing company to notify the registered owner and primary lienholder of towing and storage of a vehicle within 7 business days from the date of service.

House Bill 251 corrects a current situation whereby some owners and lienholders may receive services from towing companies without paying for all or part of the charges. Current law does not specifically state a possessory lien has precedence over other perfected liens on a vehicle. Nonpayment for service situations could shift these costs to other Alaskans, raising prices for all. In extreme cases nonpayment may induce business hardships and cause business failure. This is unfair to Alaska's towing companies. Reducing unfair business risk to small companies is in the best interest of the state.

Alaska Towing Association

The Voice of Alaskan Towing Professionals

RE: Alaska Towing Association supports HB 251

Members of the towing industry in Alaska have begun to catch up with our counterparts in other states over the last decade, and many Alaskan towers are now on the leading edges of towing technology and practice. Towing in Alaska presents unique challenges, but our members meet those challenges, and towing entities both large and small provide daily professional support to our emergency services and law enforcement systems.

Unfortunately, the modernization of the towing industry across the state has increased costs for towing businesses almost exponentially in recent years as Alaskan towers have upgraded equipment to meet the demands of newer vehicles, improved response times, procedures and training to enhance public safety, and satisfied an ever-growing list of license and permit requirements from Federal, State and local municipalities.

These costs are of course passed on to consumers. Vehicle mishaps and subsequent towing frequently involves great financial liability for vehicle owners, their lenders, and/or their insurance companies. Alaska Statute AS 28.10.502 offers some measure of protection to towers, providing for a Towing and Storage Lien to be automatically placed on any vehicle lawfully towed and stored to ensure payment for the towers' services. This lien is most commonly applied to abandoned or wrecked vehicles removed from public or private property, or towed from public roadways at the request of law enforcement officials, and stored in secured lots at the expense of the towing company.

However, a court decision in the 3rd Judicial Court has determined that perfected liens supercede a tower's possessory lien based on AS 28.10.391, and this decision has effectively nullified the Towing & Storage Lien. Practically speaking, this means a tower may recover, tow, and store a vehicle at real cost to himself and his company, and then be denied payment, lose possession of the collateral, and have no real recourse for financial satisfaction for his loss. HB 251 will alleviate this discrepancy by prioritizing the Towing and Storage lien.

Most other states, if not all, have long resolved the issue between possessory liens and perfected liens on towed or stored vehicles in favor of prioritizing the tower's lien. The obvious fact of services rendered, and payment due for those services creates a reasonable and lawful expectation of payment. In no way does this financial obligation for services supercede the interest in collateral of a perfected lien, rather it merely prioritizes payment for services rendered.

Alaska's statutory disparity is unfortunate, and presumably unintended, but is a very real and expensive issue for Alaska Towing Association members. Towers respond to thousands of vehicle emergencies every year, and remove wrecked vehicles from Alaska's roadways every day. This kind of towing is an integral part of most small towing business models within Alaska. Each emergency tow can easily cost a tower several hundred dollars in labor, fuel, equipment, insurance and operating costs, depending on services rendered and length of time it must be secured and stored.

If the costs of these services cannot be reasonably recouped on even one vehicle simply because a perfected lien exists prior to the tow company's possessory lien, a financial hardship condition develops.

If towing companies continue to be effectively forced to provide their services for free, the current status quo for providing these services to law enforcement agencies at no cost to the agency may change, and State and local law enforcement jurisdictions may be placed into the position of hiring their own towing contractors or otherwise purchasing towing services.

Alaska has much work to do to improve and enhance the towing industry in our state. It has been largely unregulated and unmonitored for many years. Careful evaluation of the issues within the industry is necessary, and thoughtful legislation is required for the protection of both the public and the small businessmen and women within the industry.

The members of the Alaska Towing Association consider HB 251 one step in this direction. The small change to AS 28.10.502 presented in the bill will help protect industry providers from an effective theft of services. In turn, this will help ensure that the many small towing operators across the state remain in business, and ensure a competitive industry that continues to improve itself to meet the demands of the motoring public and Alaska's law enforcement agencies.

The Alaska Towing Association supports HB 251. If it is passed into law, towers can remain willing and available to respond to that next call from their local law enforcement dispatcher in the dead of night knowing they have the protection of the law to ensure they will be compensated for the service they provide.

HB 253 – Mechanic/Materialmen Liens

Under current law, contractors, material suppliers, and service people who have not been paid by property owner for labor or goods have 90 days from the date of completion of the work, or from the date the service ceases, to file a lien on the property to secure payment of that debt. See AS 34.35.068 (a).

House Bill 253 merely extends the time within which to file a lien to 120 days. This extra time will give contractors, material suppliers, and service people an additional 30 days to work with property owners to secure payment or to negotiate a reasonable payment plan between a creditor and debtor. The need for this bill was brought to Representative Ramras' attention by small business owners who suggested that it usually takes two billing cycles to discover that a property owner may not pay his or her debt, and another billing cycle to see if a payment plan or other compromise is working as planned.

All contractors and suppliers are entitled to payment for services and goods delivered, yet recording a lien on property is a severe remedy that encumbers a property owner's interest and that can be costly for the contractor or supplier to execute. HB 253 affords more time for the parties to negotiate before this remedy is employed.

Re: House Bill #253-Extension of Mechanic's Lien

Dear Mr. Ramras,

I wish to convey my enthusiastic support for House Bill #253, the bill extending by 30 days the amount of time allowed to file a Mechanic's Lien on a customer that has not paid their mechanical repair bill.

As a small business owner employing 16 Fairbanks families, prompt payment is imperative in order to keep the doors of Rocky's Heating Service open. However, the situation can arise where; because of the timing of our service at the beginning of the month, versus our end-of-the-month billing, almost thirty days can expire before our customers see their statement. While our customers are normally required to pay at the time of servicing, often times multi-day jobs or absent owners prevent us from collecting at the time of service. Because we realize many people feel they have thirty days from receipt of their statement to actually pay, now we easily have a scenario in which the work was performed at the beginning of one month, the statement sent at the end of that month, and the homeowner not even considering paying us until the end of the next month: we are now 60 days out from completion of the service.

If for some reason, either due to forgetfulness, unexpected bills that month, or a myriad of other reasons the customers do not send us the payment, now it gets put back in their queue, to be paid with the rest of their bills at the end of the next month. We are now 90 days out from the original service and unable to protect ourselves from possible non-payment. It happens that fast. We hear on a daily basis from someone who either forgot to send in their payment with the rest of last month's bills, or had unexpected expenditures leaving no additional monies to pay our bill; asking if we could wait till the next month when they get paid again.

Because we are understanding and want to work with our customers, we will often acquiesce, because lets face it, who hasn't forgotten a bill at some time in the past? However, to do so puts us at great risk if in fact someone is using this as a ruse to avoid having their home or business liened. Sadly there are many people who have taken advantage of our generosity, knowing full well the laws governing this action. These people have literally accounted for tens of thousands of dollars in lost revenue by our company alone. All it takes is just one time of "forgiving" our customer, and we have put ourselves in peril of not being able to attach their property. We, as entrepreneurs and job providers, should not be penalized for our generosity and willingness to work with our customers. I feel an additional 30 days in which to assess whether someone is sincere in their desire to pay or whether they are trying to avoid having their property attached would be a huge benefit to all mechanical repair shops. I feel the extra thirty days would allow us the small amount of extra time needed to fully assess the honest property owners, who may just be struggling that month, from out and out shysters who are using the current law to their advantage.

Realizing that a lien has a significant impact on one's credit rating, we do not take this action lightly. That is why we are often hesitant to file one on a customer who is literally begging us to not lien them, assuring us they will pay next month. Again, it is the repair shops who are now assuming the risk by allowing their customers to "slide" for just one month.

Because of the impact a lien can have on a customer's credit rating, I actually see House Bill 253 as a win-win scenario for both the mechanical service providers and their customers. The extra thirty day window will allow those honest customers the additional time needed to make good on their debt and not have their credit rating tarnished by a lien. We, the mechanical repair shops, can now allow them the extra time to make good on their debt and not be put at risk by doing so.

I strongly encourage the passage of House Bill #253.

Re: Mechanics Lien legislation

Mr. Ramas,

It has come to my attention that there will be a debate regarding legislation to extend the deadline to file a mechanics lien from 90 days to 120 days. As a mechanical contractor we have a vested interest in this legislation. I would ask you to review our point of view and take into consideration our comments during this debate.

This legislation would be beneficial to both our business and our customers in several respects.

1. Often times we are unable to meet the deadline due to billing delays and in these cases our accounts can and do become uncollectable.
2. In some cases we are forced to file a lien to protect our interest when a customer is unable to pay within 90 days. This increases the cost of doing business and reduces our job profitability as well as damages our customer's credit.
3. Filing a lien creates ill will between us and our customers, which in many instances is completely unnecessary.
4. Extending the deadline will allow us to extend credit to our customers, who in many cases need the extra time to pay their bills.

As a plumbing and heating company we often provide vital services to customers who are sometimes in financial situations that make it difficult for them to afford repairs on necessary items such as heat and running water. As a customer service oriented and community minded company we strive to do our best to assist those that need our services most. Being able to extend terms beyond 90 days would be greatly beneficial to both us and our customers. I sincerely hope that you will consider these issues when debating this legislation and seriously consider making the change for the benefit of all of those affected.

Representative Ramras:

This letter is to show support for extending the time to file a mechanics' lien from ninety days to one hundred twenty days. We use mechanics' liens quite often to force payment from customers that would probably not pay otherwise. We have found mechanic's lien very helpful in collecting when small claims and garnishments have been to no avail. We have been able to collect for work done when the property is sold.

We have found ninety days to file a bit restrictive. We often miss the deadline because most commercial customers take up to ninety days, sometime as long as one hundred twenty days to pay. By the time the terms are past, it is already too late to file a lien. We have also found out that with many contractors we subcontract for, we can not get paid until the contractor has finished the job. Most of the time, we have already finished the subcontract portion more than ninety days before the contractor has finished the job.

We support a filing deadline of one hundred twenty days for filing a mechanics' lien and we encourage your support on it as well.

Because we realize many people feel they have thirty days from receipt of their statement to actually pay, now we easily have a scenario in which the work was performed at the beginning of one month, the statement sent at the end of that month, and the homeowner not even considering paying us until the end of the next month: we are now 60 days out from completion of the service.

If for some reason, either due to forgetfulness, unexpected bills that month, or a myriad of other reasons the customers do not send us the payment, now it gets put back in their queue, to be paid with the rest of their bills at the end of the next month. We are now 90 days out from the original service and unable to protect ourselves from possible non-payment. It happens that fast. We hear on a daily basis from someone who either forgot to send in their payment with the rest of last month's bills, or had unexpected expenditures leaving no additional monies to pay our bill; asking if we could wait till the next month when they get paid again.

Because we are understanding and want to work with our customers, we will often acquiesce, because lets face it, who hasn't forgotten a bill at some time in the past? However, to do so puts us at great risk if in fact someone is using this as a ruse to avoid having their home or business liened. Sadly there are many people who have taken advantage of our generosity, knowing full well the laws governing this action. These people have literally accounted for tens of thousands of dollars in lost revenue by our company alone. All it takes is just one time of "forgiving" our customer, and we have put ourselves in peril of not being able to attach their property. We, as entrepreneurs and job providers, should not be penalized for our generosity and willingness to work with our customers. I feel an additional 30 days in which to assess whether someone is sincere in their desire to pay or whether they are trying to avoid having their property attached would be a huge benefit to all mechanical repair shops. I feel the extra thirty days would allow us the small amount of extra time needed to fully assess the honest property owners, who may just be struggling that month, from out and out shysters who are using the current law to their advantage.

Realizing that a lien has a significant impact on one's credit rating, we do not take this action lightly. That is why we are often hesitant to file one on a customer who is literally begging us to not lien them, assuring us they will pay next month. Again, it is the repair shops who are now assuming the risk by allowing their customers to "slide" for just one month.

Because of the impact a lien can have on a customer's credit rating, I actually see House Bill 253 as a win-win scenario for both the mechanical service providers and their customers. The extra thirty day window will allow those honest customers the additional time needed to make good on their debt and not have their credit rating tarnished by a lien. We, the mechanical repair shops, can now allow them the extra time to make good on their debt and not be put at risk by doing so.

I strongly encourage the passage of House Bill #253.

Sincerely,

Joe Copeland

SPONSOR STATEMENT
HB 287 – UNIFORM ACT: PROPERTY INTEREST DISCLAIMER

"An Act relating to the adoption of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, and to the disclaimer of property rights under the Uniform Probate Code."

HB 287 is a comprehensive collection of rules outlining the types of property interests eligible for disclaimer, the process by which property interests may be disclaimed, and the effect of a disclaimer on the interest itself.

The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act was promulgated in 1999 and has already been adopted in 16 other states. There do not appear to be any reported court cases construing this Act. There have been several law review articles discussing the pros and cons of the Uniform Act; Representative Gruenberg would be happy to provide copies of these articles to any interested parties.

EXPLANATION OF CHANGES

Changes between HB 287 and CSHB 287(JUD) (26-LS1300\S):

- On page 2, lines 6 and 13 of HB 287, the word "explicitly" was removed.

- Under proposed AS 13.70.030(b)(2) - page 2, lines 14-20 of the CS - the original bill allowed for a disclaimer by a "natural guardian" on behalf of a minor child. The proposed CS replaces the phrase "natural guardian" with "an individual having legal custody of a minor child" to conform to language typically used in Alaskan family law. An "individual having legal custody of a minor child" is defined on page 10, lines 25-27.

- Proposed AS 13.70.040(a)(3)(D) on page 3, line 29 through page 4, line 8, provides a default rule for the disposition of a disclaimed property interest. Under the original bill, the default rule was that the disclaimed interest would revert to the benefactor; under the CS, however, the disclaimed interest would instead pass by representation to the descendants of the disclaimant. This change is made to conform to the national Uniform Act.

- Stylistic changes were made on page 7, lines 3, 7, and 28, and page 8, line 4.

- On page 9, line 1, the word "or" was added after "disclaimed;" to clarify that the provisions under subsection (c) are disjunctive.

- On page 9, line 2, "non-judicial foreclosure" was added.

- On page 10, lines 11-13, a section regarding uniformity of application and construction (proposed AS 13.70.150) was added to conform to the national Uniform Act.

- Under proposed AS 13.70.190(4) on page 10, lines 22-23, "an individual having legal custody of a minor child" was added to the definition of "fiduciary."

- Under proposed AS 13.70.190(6) on page 11, line 6, "a limited liability partnership" was added to the definition of "person."

MEMORANDUM January 28, 2010

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of HB 287 relating to the adoption of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act
(Work Order No. 26-LS1300\R)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Gretchen Staft

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. This bill section creates a new chapter dealing with the disclaimer of property interests. This new chapter is based on the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act.

Sec. 13.70.010. States that AS 13.70 applies to the disclaimer of any interest in property. It does not matter when the disclaimer was created.

Sec. 13.70.020. States that, unless displaced by this chapter, the principles of law and equity apply. States that this chapter doesn't limit a person's right to waive, release, disclaim, or renounce an interest in or power over property under another law.

Sec. 13.70.030. States that a person may disclaim, in whole or part, conditionally or unconditionally, any interest in, or power over, property, including a power of appointment. Allows the disclaimer even if there is a spendthrift provision, a provision similar to a spendthrift provision, or a restriction, prohibition, or limitation on the right to disclaim. Provides that a disclaimer is unconditional and not subject to modification or revocation, unless the disclaimant expressly provides otherwise in the disclaimer.

Allows, if the fiduciary has court approval, a fiduciary to disclaim, in whole or part, any interest in or power over property. Indicates that, without court approval, a fiduciary may not disclaim, except under certain described circumstances, one of which involves natural guardians. Indicates how to determine who is the natural guardian.

Describes the formal requirements for a disclaimer. The disclaimer must be contained in a writing, declare that it is a disclaimer, describe the interest or power disclaimed, be signed by the person making the disclaimer, and delivered or filed as required by AS 13.70.100. Indicates how the portion of property disclaimed by a partial disclaimer may be described (e.g., fraction, percentage, amount, term of years, etc.).

Indicates when a disclaimer becomes irrevocable. States that a disclaimer is not a transfer, assignment, or release.

Sec. 13.70.040. Establishes, except for disclaimers governed by sec. 13.70.050 - 13.70.065 (relating to jointly held property, tenancies by the entirety, and trustee disclaimers), four rules that relate to when a disclaimer becomes effective and how a disclaimer passes.

A disclaimer takes effect when the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable, or at the intestate's death, if related to intestate succession. The disclaimed interest passes according to a provision in the instrument that created the interest. If there is no provision, the disclaimed interest passes under one of four listed alternatives. Establishes how certain future interests take effect when there is a disclaimer of a preceding interest; clarifies that the disclaimer does not accelerate the possession and enjoyment of a future interest held by the disclaimant.

Sec. 13.70.050. Establishes rules for disclaiming interests in jointly held property. Establishes what interest one surviving holder may disclaim on the death of another holder of jointly held property. Indicates when the disclaimer takes effect. States that the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant predeceased the deceased interest holder.

Sec. 13.70.060. Allows for a disclaimer of a survivorship interest in property held as a tenancy by the entirety. The deceased tenant's interest is considered to be an undivided one-half interest. Indicates when the disclaimer takes effect. States that the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant predeceased the deceased cotenant.

Sec. 13.70.065. Addresses the situation of a trustee who is allowed, by court order or the fiduciary instrument, to receive property into a trust. States that if the trustee disclaims an interest that would otherwise have become trust property, the interest does not become trust property.

Sec. 13.70.070. Establishes some general rules for disclaimers of a power of appointment or other power not held in a fiduciary capacity. These rules relate to when the disclaimer takes effect, and directs that the instrument creating the power be construed as if the power expired when the disclaimer became effective.

Sec. 13.70.080. Indicates when disclaimers by persons who may or do receive an interest in property through the exercise of a power of appointment take effect.

Sec. 13.70.090. Indicates when a disclaimer takes effect if a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity. Indicates the conditions when the disclaimer may be effective as to another fiduciary.

Sec. 13.70.100. Indicates how delivery of a disclaimer may be effected in general and in listed specific situations.

Sec. 13.70.110. Indicates that a disclaimer is permitted unless barred under this section. Permits a disclaimer even if the disclaimant is not solvent. States that a disclaimer is barred by a written waiver of the right to disclaim. States that a disclaimer is barred if certain listed events occur before the disclaimer occurs.

States that a disclaimer of the future exercise of a power held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by a previous exercise of the power. A disclaimer of the future exercise of a power not held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by the previous exercise of the power, unless the power is exercisable in favor of the disclaimant.

A disclaimer is barred and not effective to the extent that the disclaimant is in arrears in child support payments, or if the disclaimant is involved in a child support proceeding or in a proceeding to establish paternity of maternity. Indicates that a disclaimer that is barred by this section is ineffective. States that a barred disclaimer takes effect as a transfer of the interest to the persons who would have taken the interest under this chapter if the disclaimer had not been barred.

Sec. 13.70.120. Provides that a disclaimer or transfer is effective as a disclaimer under this chapter if, as a result of the disclaimer or transfer, the disclaimed or transferred interest is treated under federal tax law as never having been transferred to the disclaimant. Provides that a tax-qualified disclaimer under 26 U.S.C. (Internal Revenue Code) is subject to the time limits under 26 U.S.C., as amended, even though time limits are not specified under this chapter.

Sec. 13.70.130. Provides for a disclaimer to be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law if a transferring instrument (for the interest in or power over property) is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered. But a failure to do this does not affect the disclaimer's validity as between the disclaimant and the persons to whom the interest or power passes under the disclaimer.

Sec. 13.70.140. Generally provides that an existing interest or power may be disclaimed after the effective date of this chapter if the time for delivering or filing the disclaimer under law superseded by this chapter has not expired.

Sec. 13.70.190. Defines terms for the new chapter.

Sec. 13.70.195. Gives the chapter the short title of "Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act."

Section 2. Repeals AS 13.12.801, which is the current statute that deals with the disclaimer of property interests.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Re: House Bill 201—Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act

Dear Representative Gruenberg:

Thank you for your interest in sponsoring the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act. As you know, this act was initially introduced as House Bill 201 in the Twenty-Fifth Legislature by Representative LeDoux. Both Representative LeDoux and you asked our group to review the bill and provide our comments. Our group consists of an informal group of estate and trust attorneys who practice primarily in this area in Alaska. We have been working with the Legislature over the past 12 years to make recommendations that will improve Alaska's estate and trust statutes.

We have reviewed House Bill 201 and various articles which have been written suggesting certain changes to this uniform act. In addition, we have reviewed the recent changes to this uniform act enacted by the State of Florida. It should be noted that of the 12 states which have enacted this uniform act, ten states have enacted changes.

We have recommended the changes summarized below. These changes are contained in "CS For House Bill 201", designated "25-LS0615\N (Bannister) 3/17/08". These changes from the uniform act are as follows:

1. AS 13.70.030(a): Allows for conditional disclaimers;

2. AS 13.70.030(b): Requires court approval for a disclaimer by a fiduciary;

3. AS 13.70.030(b): Allows a parent to disclaim for a minor child if the child receives an interest because the parent has disclaimed;

4. AS 13.70.040(a)(3)(D): States that if the statute does not provide for an alternative disposition for an interest or power of appointment disclaimed during the benefactor's lifetime, the interest or power of appointment will revert to the benefactor;

5. AS 13.70.040(b)(1): Clarifies that a disclaimed interest is created at the death of the benefactor or such earlier time, if any, that the benefactor's transfer of the interest is a completed gift for federal gift tax purposes;

6. AS 13.70.040(b)(2): Treats disclaimers of interests in revocable trusts the same as disclaimers of interests in wills;

7. AS 13.70.060: Adds a provision covering disclaimers of property held as tenancy by the entirety;

8. AS 13.70.110(a): States the majority rule that a disclaimer is permitted even though the disclaimant is insolvent;

9. AS 13.70.110(f): States that a disclaimer of an interest or power over property is barred and not effective to the extent that the disclaimant is in arrears in child support payments.

10. AS 13.70.120(b): Adds a notice that the Internal Revenue Code provides time limits for qualified disclaimers;

11. AS 13.70.190: Adds definitions; and

12. AS 13.[ENTIRE STATUTE]: A number of drafting clarifications are added.

Enclosed with this letter is a copy of "CS For House Bill No. 201, 25-LS0615\N" and Legal Services' sectional summary, dated March 16, 2007. In our group's opinion, this bill is now ready for reintroduction and passage. It will make a solid improvement to Alaska's estate and trust statutes.

Thank you very much for your consideration of this legislation.

Sincerely,

David G. Shaftel

Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests

By William P. LaPiana

The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) approved the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act (UDPIA) on July 29, 1999. The new disclaimer act replaces three uniform acts promulgated in 1978 (the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, the Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act and the Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers under Nontestamentary Instruments Act) and will be incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) to replace current UPC § 2-801. UDPIA is the most comprehensive disclaimer statute ever written and is designed to allow every sort of disclaimer that is useful for tax planning purposes.

Nine Month Time Limit

UDPIA does not include a specific time limit for making any disclaimer and makes no reference to the nine month limit of Code § 2518. At the beginning of the drafting process, the NCCUSL drafting committee decided that the new act would reflect the basic concept underlying all disclaimers: no one can be forced to accept a gift. The only bar to a disclaimer, therefore, should be acceptance of the offer. This decision recognizes that, in almost all jurisdictions, disclaimers can be used for more than tax planning. A proper disclaimer will often keep the disclaimed property from the disclaimant's creditors. In short, the new act is a type of enabling act that prescribes all of the rules for refusing a proffered interest in or power over property and the effect of that refusal on the power or interest. UDPIA leaves the tax consequences of the refusal to tax law.

The drafting committee also believed that the decision not to include a specific time limit—to "decouple" the disclaimer statute from the time requirement for a "qualified disclaimer" under Code § 2518—would reduce confusion. The older uniform acts and almost all the current state statutes (many of which are based on those acts) were drafted in the wake of the passage of Code § 2518 in 1976. That gift tax provision replaced the "reasonable time" requirement of prior law with a requirement that a disclaimer must be made within nine months of the creation of the interest disclaimed if the disclaimer is to be a "qualified disclaimer"—one that is not regarded as a transfer by the disclaimant.

The statutes that were written in response to Code § 2518 reflected the nine month time limit that Code section established. Under most of these statutes (including the 1978 uniform acts and UPC § 2-801), a disclaimer must be made within nine months of the creation of a present interest. For example, a disclaimer of an outright gift under a will must be made within nine months of the decedent's death, corresponding to the requirement of Code § 2518. A future interest, however, may be disclaimed within nine months of the time that the interest vests in possession or enjoyment. For example, a remainder contingent on surviving the holder of the life income interest must be disclaimed within nine months of the death of the life income beneficiary. The time limit for disclaimers of future interests does not correspond to Code § 2518, which generally requires that a qualified disclaimer of a future interest be made within nine months of the interest's creation, no matter how contingent it may be.

The nine month time limit of the existing statutes really is a trap. Although it superficially conforms to Code § 2518, its application to the disclaimer of future interests does not. The UDPIA drafting committee hoped that, by removing all mention of time limits, the statute itself would signal that different law sets the requirements for a tax-qualified disclaimer.

Relates Back

UDPIA reads differently from current disclaimer statutes because it abandons the term "relates back." Courts have interpreted that term to mean that the disclaimer takes effect as a refusal at that time, thus preventing the disclaimant from transferring the interest. UDPIA adopts this interpretation. Rather than using the term "relates back," however, UDPIA makes disclaimers effective at the time when the offer of the gift is irrevocable. For example, a disclaimer of a gift under a will is "effective" when the will becomes irrevocable at the death of the testator. In addition,

3074 HeinOnline -- 14 Prob. & Prop. 57 2000

§ 4(f) states that a disclaimer "is not a transfer, assignment, or release." Taken together, the time of effectiveness provisions and § 4(f) clearly state the meaning of a disclaimer as a refusal.

Disclaimer of Trustee Powers

UDPIA creates rules not only for the disclaimer of interests in property, but also for the disclaimer of powers over property. The act includes sections devoted to the disclaimer of powers not held in a fiduciary capacity (powers of appointment) (§ 9) and of powers held in a fiduciary capacity (§ 11). Trustees may have tax motives for surrendering powers. For example, a trust for the primary benefit of a surviving spouse will not qualify for the marital deduction if the trustee has the power to invade principal for others. If the trustee effectively disclaims the power, the trust might then qualify for the marital deduction under Code § 2056. Trustees have, in general, had difficulty disclaiming powers. The courts usually decide that the trustee must accept the trust as created or decline to be trustee. In contrast, UDPIA gives trustees the ability to make such disclaimers. Any disclaimer by a trustee must, of course, comport with the trustee's fiduciary duty.

Disclaimer of Property Added to Trust

Disclaimers of additions of property to a trust are also the subject of innovative provisions. UDPIA § 5 allows trustees to disclaim property that would otherwise be added to a trust. Such disclaimers have been hampered by the same reasoning that has held back potentially useful disclaimers of fiduciary powers. For example, a trustee might wish to disclaim an addition to a trust that would otherwise lead to the imposition of the generation-skipping transfer tax. Again, any disclaimer of a property interest by a trustee must comport with the trustee's fiduciary duty.

Disclaimer of Interest in Jointly Held Property

The most important new provision dealing with the disclaimer of interests in property is § 7, "Disclaimer of Interest in Jointly Held Property." Although existing statutes usually mention the possibility of disclaiming jointly held property, they do not provide details. Any disclaimer of joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety property is an anomalous concept in property law terms. At the death of one joint holder, nothing really "passes" to the survivor. The traditional common law view is that the survivor has been "freed of the participation" of the other joint tenant. Nevertheless, courts have interpreted the existing disclaimer statutes as contemplating the disclaimer of at least the "accretive portion" of the joint tenancy—that part of the property that the decedent would have received had the tenancy been severed unilaterally. See Dancy v. Comm'r, 872 F.2d 84 (4th Cir. 1989); McDonald v. Comm'r, 853 F.2d 1494 (8th Cir. 1988); Kennedy v. Comm'r, 804 F.2d 1332 (7th Cir. 1986); In re Estate of Lamoureux, 412 N.W.2d 628 (Iowa 1987). Holdings such as these, of course, give little help to tenants by the entirety who cannot make a unilateral severance. IRS rulings have generally, albeit reluctantly, followed these cases, allowing the disclaimer of the severable portion. A surviving tenant by the entirety, of course, could not make a qualified disclaimer under these rulings.

The IRS ended the controversy in late 1997 when it promulgated new final regulations under Code § 2518. Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(c)(4)(i) allows a surviving joint tenant or tenant by the entirety to disclaim that portion of the tenancy to which he or she succeeds on the death of the first joint tenant (when there are two joint tenants), whether or not the tenancy could have been unilaterally severed under local law and regardless of the proportion of consideration that the disclaimant furnished. The regulations also create a special rule for joint tenancies between spouses created after July 14, 1988, when the spouse of the donor is not a U.S. citizen. In that case, the donee spouse may disclaim any portion of the joint tenancy includable in the donor spouse's gross estate under Code § 2040, which creates a contribution rule. Thus, the surviving non-citizen spouse may disclaim all of the joint tenancy property if the deceased spouse provided all of the consideration for the tenancy's creation.

Treas. Reg. § 25.2518-2(c)(4)(iii) also recognizes the unique features of joint bank accounts. The regulations permit the disclaimer by a survivor of that part of the account that the decedent contributed, so long as the decedent could have regained that portion during life by unilateral action. The regulations bar the disclaimer of that part of the account attributable to the survivor's contribution and explicitly extend the rule governing joint bank accounts to brokerage and other investment accounts, such as mutual fund accounts, held in joint name.

Section 7 was drafted to allow every sort of qualified disclaimer of jointly held property possible under the Treasury Regulations. Section 2(5) defines jointly held property to include joint tenancies and tenancies by the entirety as well as all other sorts of joint arrangements by stating: "'Jointly held property' means property held in the name of two or more persons under an arrangement in which all holders have concurrent interests and under which the last surviving holder is entitled to the whole of the property." A surviving holder of joint property may disclaim the greater of a fractional portion of the property, determined by dividing the number one by the number of joint holders immediately before the death of the holder giving rise to the opportunity to disclaim, and that portion of the jointly held property not attributable to the contribution of the disclaimant. A surviving spouse who contributed all the consideration for the purchase of the family home held in joint tenancy could disclaim one-half of the property. Had the surviving spouse contributed nothing, he or she could disclaim as much as all of the property, although a qualified disclaimer would be limited to one-half.

The surviving holder of a joint account who contributed nothing to the account could disclaim the entire account. The disclaimer would be a qualified disclaimer under the regulations so long as the other requirements of Code § 2518 are met. The disclaimant is deemed to have predeceased the last of the other joint holders to die. In the case of spousal joint tenants, the decedent then would be the deemed survivor. The disclaimed portion would pass through his or her estate and could help the estate take advantage of the unified credit.

The provisions of UDPIA dealing with the disclaimer of interests in property, other than disclaimers by trustees, also differ from previous statutes. Section 6 governs all such disclaimers, whether the disclaimed interest was created by will, under intestacy law or by a nontestamentary instrument. The old uniform acts, UPC § 2-801, and almost all state statutes deal separately with disclaimers of testamentary and nontestamentary interests. The separation reflects the need to select a time at which the disclaimant is deemed to have died to determine how the disclaimed interest passes, absent a direction in the instrument. For testamentary interests, the time has always been the death of the decedent. For other interests, the time is usually when the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable.

Effective Time of Disclaimer

Under UDPIA, unless the instrument provides for the disposition of the disclaimed interest should it be disclaimed or for the disposition of disclaimed interests in general (§ 6(b)(2)), the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had died immediately before the time of distribution of the interest under § 6(b)(3)(A). Section 6(a)(1) defines time of distribution as "the time when a disclaimed interest would have taken effect in possession or enjoyment." "Possession" and "enjoyment" are, of course, terms of art from the law of future interests and describe the time at which it is certain to whom property belongs. The terms do not mean that the person actually has the property in hand. For example, the time of distribution of present interests created by will and of all interests arising under the law of intestate succession is the date of the decedent's death. At that moment, the heir or devisee is entitled to his or her devise or share. It is irrelevant that time will pass before the will is admitted to probate and that actual receipt of the gift may not occur until the administration of the estate is complete. The time of distribution of present interests created by nontestamentary instruments generally depends on when the instrument becomes irrevocable. Because the recipient of a present interest is entitled to the property as soon as the gift is made, the time of distribution occurs when the creator of the interest can no longer take it back.

The time of distribution of a future interest is the time when it comes into possession. Previous uniform acts and UPC § 2-801 provided that a disclaimant would be treated as predeceasing the creation of the future interest (for example, the death of the decedent if the interest was in a testamentary trust). That approach leads to an ambiguity. Assume that T's will creates a testamentary trust for A, who is to receive all of the income for life. At A's death, the trust is to be distributed to T's descendants by representation. A is survived by T's son S and daughter D. S has two living children and D has one child. S decides that he would prefer his share of the trust to pass to his children and disclaims. The disclaimer must be made within nine months of T's death if it is to be a qualified disclaimer for tax purposes. Under prior acts and UPC § 2-801, the interest passes as if S had predeceased T.

A problem can arise if S is survived by children born after T's death. It is possible to argue that, had S predeceased T, the afterborn child would not exist and that D and S's two children living at the time of T's death are entitled to all of the trust property. Under § 6(b)(3)(A), however, S is deemed to have died immediately before A's death, even though under § 6(b)(1) the disclaimer is effective as of T's death. There is no doubt, therefore, that S's children living at the time of distribution, whenever born, are entitled to the share of the trust property he would have received.

In the above example, it is clear that S's children should receive exactly what S would have received had he not disclaimed. Section 6(b)(3)(A) ensures that result by requiring that the disclaimed interest pass as if the disclaimant had died. This provision in turn ensures that a disclaimer cannot alter the representational scheme of a multigenerational gift or the intestacy statute. The classic example is the disclaimer by an older generation representative whose children outnumber those of her deceased sibling. For example, X dies intestate, survived by daughter D, her three children and the only child of predeceased son S. D disclaims. Were D deemed simply to have predeceased X, her children could argue that they were entitled to three-fourths of the estate because all the heirs are now in the same generation. Courts have rejected this interpretation of deemed death, taking the position that the disclaimer should only allow the passing of what the disclaimant would otherwise have taken. See, e.g., Welder v. Hitchcock, 617 S.W.2d 294 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981); Estate of Fuenga, 347 N.Y.S.2d 150 (Surr. Ct. 1973). UDPIA agrees with that position.

"The regulations permit the disclaimer by a survivor of that part of the account that the decedent contributed, so long as the decedent could have regained that portion during life by unilateral action."

Preventing the use of a disclaimer to alter the shares of an intestate estate or of a multigenerational gift by limiting the effect of the disclaimer to the disclaimed interest solves one problem but creates another. In the example in the previous paragraph, if the disclaimed interest passes as if D predeceased X, S's child could claim one-fourth of the interest because, once again, all of the heirs would be in the same generation. UDPIA prevents that result by adapting language from UPC § 2-801, providing that if the disclaimant's descendants would have shared in the disclaimed interest had the disclaimant predeceased (in this example with their cousin, S's child), then the interest passes only to the disclaimant's descendants.

The concept of the disclaimer as a deemed death follows the approach that existing statutes take. Just as under those statutes, the result of a disclaimer of an interest created under a will is seldom in doubt under § 6. Even if the will does not provide for the death of the disclaimant before the testator, the doctrine of lapse and anti-lapse statutes will give a clear answer. The law of lapse as it applies to non-testamentary instruments and the interests they create is far less certain. In the absence of comprehensive lapse provisions like UPC §§ 2-603, 2-706 and 2-707, general principles may dictate the exact result of the disclaimer of an interest created in an instrument other than a will. Unfortunately, the exact application of those general principles to any particular situation may not be obvious.

Disclaimers by Corporations and Partnerships

Section 6(b)(3)(B) provides a rule for the passing of property interests disclaimed by persons other than individuals. Because § 8 applies to disclaimers by trustees of property that would otherwise pass to the trust, this paragraph principally applies to disclaimers by corporations, partnerships and the other entities listed in the definition of "person" in § 2(b). A charity, for example, might wish to disclaim property if acceptance of the property would be incompatible with its purposes.

Acceleration of Future Interests

Section 6(b)(4) continues the approach taken in prior uniform acts and UPC § 2-801 that provides for the acceleration of future interests on the making of a disclaimer. For example, Father's will creates a testamentary trust to pay income to his son S for his life, and on his death to pay the remainder to S's descendants then living, by representation. If S disclaims his life income interest in the trust, the remainder will immediately become possessory in S's descendants determined as of Father's death, just as if S really had not survived. It is immaterial that the actual situation at S's death might be different, with different descendants entitled to the remainder.

Disclaimers of Powers of Appointments

Section 9 deals with disclaimers by holders of powers of appointment and § 10 with disclaimers by appointees, permissible appointees and takers in default. A properly disclaimed power ceases to exist as of the time the disclaimer becomes effective, which in turn depends on what sort of power is involved and whether or not it has been exercised. If a holder disclaims a power before exercising it, the disclaimer takes effect at the time that the instrument creating the power became irrevocable and the disclaimer destroys the power. If the holder has exercised the power, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power. The power ceases to exist from that time forward, unless the power is a presently exercisable general power of appointment. Once exercised, such a power cannot be disclaimed. This is the only provision in UDPIA that makes a specific act sufficient to bar a subsequent disclaimer.

Section 10 makes a disclaimer by an appointee take effect as of the time that the instrument by which the holder exercises the power becomes irrevocable. Disclaimers by objects and takers in default take effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable. The effect of the disclaimer is the same as that of any disclaimer of an interest of property under § 6. The disclaimed interest will pass according to the explicit provisions of the instrument exercising or creating the power or under the default rule of

§ 6(b)(3)(A), which deems the disclaimant to have predeceased the time of distribution.

Delivery

The delivery provisions of § 12 are designed to ensure that the disclaimer reaches the person or entity having the responsibility to distribute the disclaimed interest. UDPIA does not require filing the disclaimer with a court unless there is no person or entity to whom delivery can be made. For example, a disclaimer of an interest in a decedent's estate must be filed with the court having the authority to appoint the personal representative, only if no personal representative is serving at the time.

Bars To Disclaimers

Section 13 of UDPIA is captioned "When Disclaimer Barred or Limited." Like existing statutes, this section recognizes that a waiver of the right to disclaim, as well as an assignment, conveyance, encumbrance, pledge, transfer or judicial sale of the interest sought to be disclaimed, will bar a disclaimer. In addition, the past exercise of a general power of appointment bars a disclaimer of the power. The section also includes three novel provisions. First, subsection (e) states that other law can bar or limit a disclaimer. This provision recognizes situations such as the cases holding that disclaimers are transfers in the context of Medicaid qualification or issues in dealing with federal tax liens. (The Supreme Court has granted certiorari in Drye v. U.S., 119 S. Ct. 1453 (1999), to resolve the tax lien question.) Second, subsection (f) provides that a disclaimer barred by § 13 takes effect as a transfer of the interest disclaimed to those who would have taken the interest had the disclaimer not been barred. This provision eliminates the ambiguity that would otherwise be caused by an ineffective refusal to accept property. Third, subsection (g) provides that any disclaimer that meets the requirements for a qualified disclaimer under Code § 2518 is a valid disclaimer under UDPIA.

Conclusion

UDPIA recognizes that disclaimers have a wide variety of uses. The act provides rules for all of those potential uses, while leaving policy questions on the effect of a proper refusal of property or rejection of a power to other law.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The bill allows beneficiaries of intestate, testamentary and nontestamentary (nonprobate) interests to execute a disclaimer of those interests. A disclaimer extinguishes the interest as if that interest had never been granted. The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act also makes it clearer that trustees and fiduciaries may use disclaimers and that powers of appointment may be disclaimed.

No fiscal impact on Department of Law.

Representative Lindsey Holmes

House Bill 307 Sponsor Statement
"An Act relating to sexual assault protective orders."

AS 18.65.850 authorizes the courts to grant protective orders in cases of stalking and sexual assault. This statute has been amended twice in recent sessions. In 2001, HB 1 extended protections to victims of stalking by persons other than their domestic partner. In 2006, SB 54 added sexual assault to the statute. While the clear intent of SB 54 was to exactly duplicate the effects of HB 1, namely, to grant jurisdiction to magistrate and district court judges to issue these orders, SB 54 did not explicitly amend AS 22.15.100 to achieve this.

Consequently, certain magistrate and district court judges have read the statute to mean that they do not have jurisdiction to issue protective orders in cases of sexual assault. This mirrors the situation prior to HB 1, in which claimants brought petitions that clearly required a protective order, but judges were unable to offer assistance.

This bill would amend AS 22.15.100 to explicitly grant magistrate and district court judges jurisdiction to grant protective orders in cases of sexual assault, in addition to stalking. This change is especially important given that many rural communities in Alaska only have access to magistrate or district courts.

Please join me in repairing this small gap in the statute and ensuring that all victims of sexual assault in our state are able to gain protection from their attackers.

RE: Sectional analysis of HB 307

The following is a sectional analysis of HB 307. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1: Amends AS 20.15.100 to give magistrate and district court judges jurisdiction to issue protective orders in cases of sexual assault under AS 18.65.850.

Hi Gayle,

I am writing to both introduce myself and ask you guys a question. I am a new staffer for Rep. Holmes this session.

Sen. Dyson sponsored legislation in 2006 relating to protective orders, namely amending AS18.65.850 to include sexual assault as well as stalking as cause for granting a protective order.

It has come to our attention that there are some magistrate / district court judges who are reading AS 20.15.100 to mean that they have jurisdiction to grant protective orders for stalking but NOT for sexual assault. Our understanding is that this has resulted in women in rural communities having to go to a superior court judge, which is obviously quite difficult in a lot of places. We have filed a bill to amend AS 20.15.100 to explicitly roll sexual assault protective orders into magistrate / district court jurisdiction. It looks like this was just a minor oversight in the 2006 bill, but I wanted to give you guys a heads up and see if you could confirm that the intent of SB 54 was in fact to grant district courts the ability to grant these orders.

Thanks,

Bill Edwards

Hello Bill,

Welcome to the Legislature. You and I are both in the "freshman" legislative aide category. It is going to be a great experience. To the point of your inquiry – Yes, the intent of the 2006 bill was to grant district courts the jurisdiction to issue stalking and sexual assault protective orders. Thanks for taking the initiative on amending AS 20.15.100 to make this clear.

Best regards,

Chuck

Excerpts from minutes on SB 54, 2005/2006.

Sen. Dyson Feb 17, 2005:

SENATOR FRED DYSON, prime sponsor, explained that under current law a victim may get a restraining order for domestic violence and stalking, but it doesn't mention restraining orders if you've been a victim of sexual assault. SB 54 adds sexual assault to the list that a judge or magistrate may draw from to grant a restraining order. Although some judges do grant restraining orders to victims of sexual assault it's not clear in statute and some have refused to do so. SB 54 would make it clear to judges that they have that authority.

He noted that in drafting the bill, Legislative Legal elected to replicate the language from the domestic violence restraining orders. According to the Department of Law, it would have been better to have replicated the language in existing statutes related to stalking. Because of that opinion, he asked the committee to hold the bill to provide time to draft a committee substitute (CS).

SERGEANT DAVE PARKER, special victims unit supervisor, Anchorage Police Department, said SB 54 would help the police protect victims of sexual assault. The problem has been that judges don't have clear direction. He described a case in which a neighbor raped a woman. When a detective took the victim to get a protective order the judge wouldn't issue the order because he said rape isn't a consensual sexual act.

SERGEANT PARKER emphasized no victim should be re-victimized with unwanted contact with the perpetrator and SB 54 will give sexual assault victims the same legal protection that domestic violence and stalking victims have now.

Hello Lindsey. Attached are several suggested amendments to HB 307. They each come with an explanation and recommended language. They are all aimed at technical jurisdictional clarifications and none are intended to be anything more than clean-up. If you are concerned that your bill will grow too cumbersome with all of them included, let me know and we can focus on the most important. Your bill seems to be on a blisteringly fast track. I had expected a little more time to go over these with you. Who knows, your bill may set a record for the least amount of time from introduction to final passage. I don't want to screw up your bill, but these changes would be helpful. Thanks, Doug

SPECIFIC SUGGESTIONS FOR POSSIBLE AMENDMENT

A. AS 22.15.110(1) pertaining to recording vital statistics.

The 1959 legislature charged magistrates and district court judges with the duty "[t]o record births, deaths and marriage certificates presented to them for record in the manner prescribed by law."[1] The following year, the legislature created the Bureau of Vital Statistics which was given responsibility for directing, supervising and controlling the statewide system of vital statistics.[2] Throughout the ensuing years, at the direction of and under the supervision of the Bureau of Vital Statistics, a number of courts have been recording vital statistics.

In 2005, the Alaska Court System Area Court Administrators and the State Registrar of Vital Statistics reached an agreement whereby all courts would cease recording vital statistics effective December 31, 2005. Courts still perform some vital statistics functions such as issuing marriage licenses. However, courts are no longer "recording" vital statistics as of January 1, 2006. Legislation deleting this as a duty required to be performed by district judges and magistrates would bring the statutes into conformity with current practice.

See Attachment 1 for suggested language.

B. AS 22.15.030 and 22.15.100(9) pertaining to the issuance of protective orders

As the statutes pertaining to the issuance of orders for the protection of victims of domestic violence and, more recently, of victims of stalking and sexual assault, have developed over the years, the jurisdictional statutes have not kept pace. Currently, there are two amendments needed to bring the jurisdictional statutes into step with the substantive provisions providing for these forms of relief. Specifically, an amendment to AS 22.15.030(a)(10) adding issuance of stalking and sexual assault protective orders to the general jurisdiction of the district court would make it consistent with the protective order statutes which provide that such petitions may be filed in the district court. Further, an amendment to AS 22.15.100(9) giving magistrates jurisdiction to issue protective orders in cases involving "sexual assault" would specifically allow magistrates to issue this type of order which many have already been doing for the last three years.

The failure of the legislature to amend the district court statutes to specifically give magistrates jurisdiction to issue "sexual assault" protective orders appears to be an oversight. However, in the meantime, this omission has given some magistrates great anxiety that it is beyond the scope of their jurisdiction to issue such an order.

The cure to bring the jurisdictional statutes into step with the protective order statutes is:

1) to amend AS 22.15.030(a) to grant the district court general civil jurisdiction "over cases involving protective orders for stalking and sexual assault under AS 18.65.850 – 18.65.870" in addition to cases involving domestic violence under; and

2) to amend AS 22.15.100(9) by adding a section granting district judges and magistrates the power to issue a protective order in cases involving "sexual assault."

See Attachment 2 for suggested language.

C. Possible amendments to the statutes granting district judges and magistrates criminal jurisdictional.

1. Clarification of the types of proceedings that fall within the general criminal jurisdiction of the district court.

Alaska Statute 22.15.060(a)(1) is the provision which gives the district court general criminal jurisdiction. It provides:

> Sec. 22.15.060. Criminal jurisdiction. (a) The district court has jurisdiction
> (1) of the following crimes:
> (A) a misdemeanor, unless otherwise provided in this chapter;
> (B) a violation of an ordinance of a political subdivision;
> (C) a violation of AS 04.16.050 or AS 11.76.105;[3]

There are several possible amendments the legislature may wish to consider with regard to this statute.

a. AS 22.15.060(a)(1) should be amended by substituting the word offenses for the word crimes in AS 22.15.060(a)(1)

Although section (1) refers to crimes, the contents of subsections (B) and (C) refer to violations. According to the definitions contained in Title 11, violations are not crimes. Substituting the word offenses for the word crimes in AS 22.15.060(a)(1) would rectify this inaccuracy.

Violations are defined in AS 11.81.900(b)(63) as follows:

> (63) "violation" is a noncriminal offense punishable only by a fine, but not by imprisonment or other penalty; conviction of a violation does not give rise to any disability or legal disadvantage based on conviction of a crime; a person charged with a violation is not entitled
> (A) to a trial by jury; or
> (B) to have a public defender or other counsel appointed at public expense to represent the person.

The term "crime," on the other hand, is defined in AS 11.81.900(b)(11) as follows:

> (11) "crime" means an offense for which a sentence of imprisonment is authorized; a crime is either a felony or a misdemeanor;

[3] AS 22.15.060(a)(1) (Italics added). Alaska Statute 04.16.050 prohibits the "possession, control, or consumption of alcohol by persons under the age of 21." Alaska Statute 11.76.105 prohibits possession of tobacco by a minor.

Because violations are not crimes, listing violations as types of crimes under AS 22.15.060(a)(1) is inaccurate, at best. The term "offenses," however, encompasses both crimes and violations. As AS 11.81.900(b)(11) provides:

> (39) "offense" means conduct for which a sentence of imprisonment or fine is authorized; an offense is either a crime or a violation;

Substituting the term "offenses" for "crimes" would provide greater accuracy in the statutory wording of AS 22.15.060(a). It also would harmonize the criminal jurisdiction statute with the criminal statutes themselves.

See Attachment 3 for suggested language.

b. AS 22.15.060(a)(1) should be amended to give the district court criminal jurisdiction over "minor offenses"

The construct of the district court jurisdiction statutes is to begin by giving the district court general powers. These are powers that are conferred on district court judges. Specific powers of magistrates and additional powers of district court judges are delineated in the latter part of the statutory scheme.

Alaska Statute 22.15.060 describes the general criminal jurisdiction of the district court. Under present language, the district court has general jurisdiction over all types of misdemeanors and certain specified violations, those being "violations of an ordinance of a political subdivision" and "violations of AS 04.16.050 or AS 11.76.105." What is absent from the general jurisdiction statutes is a grant of authority to the district court to hear other minor offenses. This absence stands in contrast to language in AS 22.15.120(a)(7) which gives magistrates jurisdiction to hear minor offenses." [4]

The term "minor offenses" is defined at AS 22.15.120(c) as follows:

> (c) In this section, "minor offense" means
> > (1) an offense classified by statute as an infraction or a violation;
> > (2) an offense for which a bail forfeiture amount has been authorized by statute and established by supreme court order; or

[4] Alaska Statute 22.15.120, which describes the proceedings magistrates may conduct, gives magistrates jurisdiction in subsection (a)(7) "to hear, try, and enter judgments in all cases involving minor offenses and violations of ordinances of political subdivisions." This provision was inserted in 1993 when the House Judiciary Committee introduced a bill at the request of Alaska Supreme Court to give magistrates jurisdiction over "minor offenses." According to the testimony offered by Deputy Administrative Director, Chris Christensen, the purpose of the request was to improve the operating efficiency of the court by redistributing some of the workload from district court judges to magistrates. It was obviously assumed that district judges already had jurisdiction over all "minor offenses." The bill passed and magistrates were granted jurisdiction to hear minor offenses in AS 22.15.120(a)(7).

(3) a statutory offense for which a conviction cannot result in incarceration, a fine greater than $300, or the loss of a valuable license.

Inclusion of similar language in the general district court jurisdiction statutes would clarify that district court judges also have jurisdiction over "minor offenses" which is not presently clear.[5]
If the legislature were to agree with this suggestion, the reference to AS 11.76.105 in AS 22.15.060(a)(1)(C) could then be deleted. Alaska Statute 11.76.105 makes possession of tobacco by a minor a "violation."[6] As a violation, this offense would fall within the definition of minor offenses.

See Attachment 3 for suggested language.

[5] AS 12.80.040 could be argued to confer jurisdiction on district court judges. However, this is a strained reading of that statute which provides:

> Sec. 12.80.040. Violations and infractions. Except as provided in AS 11.91.900(b) and AS 28.90.010(d), all laws of the state relating to misdemeanors apply to violations and infractions, including the powers of peace officers, the jurisdiction of courts, and the periods for commencing actions and for bringing a case to trial.

[6] AS 11.76.105 provides:

> Sec. 11.76.105. Possession of tobacco by a minor. (a) A person under 19 years of age may not knowingly possess a cigarette, a cigar, tobacco, or a product containing tobacco in this state. This subsection does not apply to a person who is a prisoner at an adult correctional facility.
> (b) Possession of tobacco by a minor is a violation.

2. The maximum fine amount contained in AS 22.15.120(c) is inconsistent with the maximum fine amount contained at AS 12.55.035(b)(7).

As explained in the preceding section, AS 22.15.110(a)(7) gives magistrates jurisdiction to hear minor offenses. Minor offenses are defined in AS 22.15.110(c)(3) as follows:

> (c) In this section, "minor offense" means
> (1) an offense classified by statute as an infraction or a violation;
> (2) an offense for which a bail forfeiture amount has been authorized by statute and established by supreme court order; or
> (3) a statutory offense for which a conviction cannot result in incarceration, a fine greater than $300, or the loss of a valuable license.

This fine amount contained in subsection (C)(3) is inconsistent with the fine amount contained in AS 12.55.035 which prescribes the maximum fine amounts for all types of offenses, including violations. This inconsistency came about as a result of a 2002 amendment by the legislature of AS 12.55.035. Until 2002, the maximum fine that could be imposed for a violation was $300. With the 2002 amendment, the legislature increased the limit on fines for violations to $500. When it did, it failed to update the language in AS 22.15.110(c)(3).

Amending the language in AS 22.15.110(c)(3) from $300 to $500 would render it consistent with the 2002 amendment of the maximum fine amount for violations.

See Attachment 4 for suggested language.

3. Amending AS 22.15.120(a)(7) would clarify magistrate jurisdiction to accept changes of plea and to sentence in cases which are not "crimes".

An additional minor change the legislature may wish to consider pertains to subsection (5) of AS 22.15.120. That language presently reads:

> Sec. 22.12.120 Limitations on proceedings which magistrate may hear. (a) A magistrate shall preside only in cases and proceedings under AS 22.15.040, 22.15.100, and 22.15.110, and as follows:
> > (5) To give judgment of conviction upon a plea of guilty by the defendant in all criminal proceedings within the jurisdiction of the district magistrate court;[7]

This provision is the statute magistrates rely upon to conduct changes of plea and sentencings in all cases otherwise within their jurisdiction. However, some magistrates have expressed concern in the past that the language "criminal proceedings" does not provide authority to conduct changes of plea in cases involving minor offenses or minor consuming alcohol which are not crimes. A simple shifting of the word "criminal" in the statute to precede the word "jurisdiction" would remedy this concern.

See Attachment 5 for suggested language.

[7] (Italics added).

D. Magistrate jurisdiction in cases involving the "possession, control, or consumption of alcohol by persons under the age of 21".

Alaska Statute 04.16.050 penalizes the "possession, control, or consumption of alcohol by persons under the age of 21" (MCA cases). As mentioned in section C above, AS 22.15.060(a)(1)(C) gives the district court jurisdiction of violations of AS 04.16.050. However, nothing in the jurisdictional statutes specifically gives magistrates jurisdiction to hear MCA cases. The legislature may wish to consider seeking an amendment to AS 22.15.120(a) that would specifically empower magistrates to hear MCA cases.

Alaska Statute 04.16.050, creates three tiers of offenders: first offenders, repeat offenders, and habitual offenders. The attendant penalties escalate the more aggravated the offense.[8] While the legislature specified in AS 04.16.050(d) that "[h]abitual minor consuming or in possession or control is a class B misdemeanor," it did not define or address the "class of offense" of first and repeat minor consuming convictions. In State v. Auliye, 57 P.3d 711 (Alaska App. 2002), however, the Court of Appeals analyzed the minor consuming statutory scheme,[9] and concluded that because of the severity of the possible penalties and collateral consequences of a conviction, even first offenders have a right to a jury trial and court-appointed counsel if indigent.[10] The result is that while first and repeat offenses are something less serious than a class B misdemeanor, they carry rights which make them more serious than violations or other minor offenses. They are an offense unto themselves.

From a jurisdictional standpoint, this produces an odd result. The district court has jurisdiction under AS 22.15.060(a)(1)(C) for violations of AS 04.16.050. A district court judge as well as a superior court judge[11] can hear cases involving a first, repeat or habitual offender. Magistrates, on the other hand, cannot try and enter judgment in cases involving first and repeat offenses because these offenses are neither minor offenses nor misdemeanors. However, with the consent of the defendant, magistrates can hear cases charged as "habitual offenses" because of their jurisdiction to hear misdemeanors under AS 22.15.120(a)(6).

As a practical matter, magistrates do conduct changes of plea and sentencings in all types of MCA cases. In doing so, they rely on AS 22.15.120(a)(5), discussed in the preceding section, which authorizes magistrates to "give judgment of conviction upon a plea of guilty or no contest by the defendant in a criminal proceeding within the jurisdiction of the district court." However, none conduct trials in cases involving first and [8] A person is a first offender if the person "has not been previously convicted or received a suspended imposition of sentence under (1) of this subsection is guilty of minor consuming or in possession or control." AS 04.16.050(b). A person is a repeat offender if the person previously "was placed on probation under (b)(1) of this section or has been previously convicted once." AS 04.16.050(c). A person is a habitual offender if the person previously "was placed on probation under (c) of this section, or has been previously convicted twice, and the person violates (a) of this section." AS 04.16.050(d).

[9] The statutory scheme has been amended since Auliye. However, for purposes here, magistrates and training judges alike continue to view the analysis in Auliye as being applicable in handling MCA cases..

[10] 57 P.3d 711 (Alaska App. 2002).

[11] The superior court has concurrent criminal jurisdiction.

repeat offenses and, in cases charged as a habitual offense, they do so only with the consent of the defendant as required by AS 22.15.120(a)(6).

An amendment to the jurisdictional statutes specifically giving magistrates jurisdiction to hear violations of AS 04.16.050 would give presiding judges greater flexibility in assigning these cases. Particularly in the Second Judicial District where there are no district court judges, it is a drain on judicial resources to have the least serious MCA cases tried by superior court judges.

House Bill 319
Sponsor Statement
Version: CS HB 319 (FIN)

"An Act relating to firearms."

In Alaska, anyone who is 21 years of age or older and legally allowed to own a firearm is allowed to carry it concealed without a permit. However, there are still people who obtain Alaska Concealed Handgun Permits (ACHP) for other reasons, including reciprocity with other states. In the past few years, a few glitches in the permit system have come to light.

House Bill 319 makes the following changes to the statutes regarding an ACHP permit:

- Clarifies that a permit does not have to be surrendered when it expires or when a permit holder moves out of the state;
- clarifies that an expired permit can be displayed, as long as the permit holder is not claiming that it is a valid permit;
- requires the Department of Public Safety to mail a notice to the permit holder at least 90 days prior to the expiration of a permit; and
- allows the Department of Public Safety to use electronic applications and post the regulations and statutes on its website, instead of providing paper copies.

HB 319 also requires the chief law enforcement officer (CLEO) in Alaska jurisdictions to complete, in a timely manner, the required certification on an application to the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (BATFE) for approval to transfer a firearm registered under the National Firearms Act (NFA) of 1934 to a person who is qualified under state law to possess the firearm.

The CLEO certification is a mandatory step in the BATFE transfer process and unjustified delays in processing or refusal to cooperate compromise Second Amendment rights.

House Bill 319 makes commonsense changes to our ACHP statutes and ensures that NFA firearms transfers are not inappropriately obstructed.

Section 1: Allows the Department of Public Safety to use an electronic application for an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit and to post the laws and regulations on its website, instead of providing a paper copy.

Section 2: Allows the Department of Public Safety to use an electronic application to renew an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit.

Section 3: Adds two new sections to AS 18.65.725 (Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit renewal):

(e) Clarifies that a person does not become ineligible to hold a permit and does not need to surrender the permit if he or she ceases to be a resident of the state. Alaska residency is still a requirement to obtain or renew a permit.

(f) Requires the department to send, via first class mail to the permittee, a notice that their permit is expiring. The notice must be sent at least 90 days prior to the permit expiration, which is the beginning of the renewal period.

Section 4: Clarifies that a person can display an expired permit, but cannot represent it as valid, and that an expired permit does not need to be surrendered to the department.

Section 5: Requires the local law enforcement certification section of a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives firearm transfer application to be executed by the appropriate law enforcement officer within 30 days of submission by a person who is legally qualified to own the firearm.

Section 6: Delayed effective date for section 3 (f).

Background Information
Prepared by Representative Mike Hawker's Office

Section 3 of House Bill 319 requires the local law enforcement certification section of a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (BATFE) firearm transfer application to be completed by the appropriate law enforcement officer within 30 days of submission by a person who is legally qualified to own the firearm. Attached is a copy of the BATFE firearm transfer application, also known as a "Form 4." Section 17 (highlighted on page 2 of the attached form) is the local law enforcement certification section that would have to be completed.

2. Preparation of Application

   a. Authority. As provided by 26 U.S.C. §§ 5811 and 5812, any person seeking to transfer a firearm tax paid must complete, in duplicate, an application on this form for each firearm. The transferor must furnish all the information called for on this application form.

   b. Federal Firearms Licensees. If the transferor or transferee is licensed under the GCA, the name, trade name (if any), and address shall be identified on the ATF Form 4 as they appear on the license. If item 6 is completed, the entity identified must be the same as the entity identified in item 5. For example, if item 5 identified a sole proprietor, item 6 cannot identify a corporation. This also applies for the completion of items 7 and 8.

   c. Transferee Qualifications. If the transferee is an individual and not licensed under the GCA, the questions in items 13 and 14 must be answered.

   d. Transferee Certification. Item 15 must be completed by the transferee if:

      (1) the firearm to be transferred is a machinegun, short-barreled rifle, short-barreled shotgun, or destructive device;
      (2) the transferor is licensed under the GCA to deal in such device or firearm; and
      (3) the transferee is not licensed under the GCA to deal in such device or firearm.

   e. Law Enforcement Certification. Item 17 must be completed for an individual transferee, unless the transferee is licensed as a manufacturer, importer, or dealer under the GCA and is a special (occupational) taxpayer under the NFA at the time of the submission of the application for transfer. The chief law enforcement officer is considered to be the Chief of Police for the transferee's city or town of residence; the Sheriff for the transferee's county of residence; the Head of the State Police for the transferee's State of residence; a State or local district attorney or prosecutor having jurisdiction in the transferee's area of residence; or another person whose certification is acceptable to the Director, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. If someone has specific delegated authority to sign on behalf of the Chief of Police, Sheriff, etc., this fact must be noted by printing the Chief's, Sheriff's, or other authorized official's name and title, followed by the word "by" and the full signature and title of the delegated person. The certificate must be dated no more than one year prior to the date of receipt of the application.

   f. Photographs and Fingerprints. An individual transferee, except if licensed as a manufacturer, importer, or dealer under the GCA, must (1) attach to Item 16, a 2 inch x 2 inch photograph of the frontal view of the transferee taken within 6 months prior to the date of the application and (2) attach two properly completed FBI Forms FD-258 (Fingerprint Card with blue lines) to the application. The fingerprints must be clear for accurate classification and taken by someone properly equipped to take them.

   g. Signatures. All signatures required on ATF Form 4 must be original in ink on both copies.

   h. Remittance. A check or money order, made payable to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, in the amount for the appropriate rate of tax (see instruction 2i) must be submitted with the ATF Form 4. Do not send cash.

   i. Rate of Tax. The tax on the transfer of any NFA firearm is $200.00, except that the tax is $5.00 on the transfer of a firearm classified as "any other weapon."

   j. Photocopies, Computer Generated Versions, or Downloaded Version from ATF Website. The ATF Form 4 may be photocopied, computer-generated (as long as it is in the same format and contains all required information), or downloaded from the ATF website (www.atf.gov). Please note the instructions on the website.

   k. Estates. If the firearm is being transferred from an estate, item 3a shall reflect: the executor's name, title (executor (or executrix, administrator, administratrix) of the estate of (name)), and the executor's address. Item 3c shall reflect the address of the decedent and the date of death. (see the ATF Internet website at www.atf.gov for additional information about transfers from estates.)

   l. Submission. All requested informtion must be entered in blue or black ink and must be legible. Send both copies of the ATF Form 4 and attachments to the address located in the upper right hand corner on the face side of the ATF Form 4. The return of the application or sending it to any other address will only delay the processing.

   m. State or Local Permit. If a State or local permit or license is required for the transferee prior to acquisition of the firearm, a copy of the permit must be included with the application.

3. Approval of Application. Upon approval of an application, the NFA Branch will affix the appropriate NFA transfer tax stamp, cancel it, and return the approved copy with the stamp affixed to the transferor for delivery with the firearm to the transferee. Since the approval of the application effectuates registration of the firearm to the transferee, the physical transfer of the firearm must be completed immediately; however, the transferor must not transfer the firearm until the application has been approved and received. If the physical transfer of the firearm cannot be completed immediately, the transferor must contact the NFA Branch with the specifics.

4. Withdrawal of Application. The transferor may withdraw an application prior to approval subsequent to a written request. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the taxpaid.

5. Cancellation of Approved Application. The transferor may cancel an approved application only if the physical transfer of the firearm has not been completed. The transferor must return the approved application with the tax stamp affixed with a written request for cancellation, citing the need and that the physicaltransfer of the firearm did not take place. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the tax paid.

6. Disapproval of Application. If the application is disapproved, the NFA Branch will note the reason for disapproval on the application and return one copy of the ATF Form 4 to the transferor. The NFA Branch will arrange for a refund of the tax paid.

7. Reasons for Disapproval. 26 U.S.C. § 5812 provides that applications shall be denied if the transfer, receipt, or possession of the firearm would place the transferee in violation of law.

   a. State or Local Law. If State or local law prohibits the receipt or possession of the firearm being transferred, the application will be disapproved.

   b. Persons Prohibited from Receiving a Firearm. The application will be disapproved if the transferee is a person prohibited from receiving a firearm by 18 U.S.C. § 922(g), which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person—

      (1) who has been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year;
      (2) who is a fugitive from justice;
      (3) who is an unlawful user of or addicted to any controlled substance;
      (4) who has been adjudicated as a mental defective or who has been committed to a mental institution;
      (5) who, being an alien, is illegally or unlawfully in the United States or except as provided in 18 U.S.C. 922(y)(2), has been admitted to the United States under a non-immigrant visa (as that term is defined in 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(26));
      (6) who has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions;
      (7) who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship;
      (8) who is subject to a court order that—

         (A) was issued after a hearing of which such person received actual notice, and at which such person had an opportunity to participate;
         (B) restrains such person from harassing, stalking, or threatening an intimate partner of such person or child of such intimate partner or person, or engaging in other conduct that would place an intimate partner in reasonable fear of bodily injury to the partner or child; and
         (C) (I) includes a finding that such person represents a credible threat to the physical safety of such intimate partner or child; or (II) by its terms explicitly prohibits the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against such intimate partner or child that would reasonably be expected to cause bodily injury, or

      (9) who has been convicted in any court of a crime of domestic violence; to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

8. Status Inquiries and Questions. Information relating to the NFA and other firearms laws is available at the ATF Internet website at www.atf.gov. Any inquiry relating to the status of an application to transfer an NFA firearm or about procedures in general should be directed to the NFA Branch at (202) 927-8330. Please be aware that any dissemination by ATF of information relating to the application to register an NFA firearm must conform with the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. § 6103. The opportunity provided in item 8 to authorize ATF to disclose information is intended to enable ATF to respond to inquiries by the transferee regarding the application. The failure to complete item 8 will be considered a declination of authorization to release the information.

9. Penalties. Any person who violates or fails to comply with any of the requirements of the NFA shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both. Any firearm involved in a violation of the NFA shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture. It is unlawful for any person to make or cause the making of a false entry on any application or record required by the NFA knowing such entry to be false.

10. Compliance with the Gun Control Act. All provisions of the GCA must also be complied with, including the recordkeeping requirements for licensees and the retention of ATF Form 4473 (5300.9) by licensees for dispositions to non-licensees.

MEMORANDUM April 15, 2010

SUBJECT: Conceptual Amendment to SCS CSHB 324(JUD)
(Work Order No. 26-GH2910\P)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

The SCS CSHB 324(JUD) that you requested is enclosed. As you requested, bill secs. 3 and 5 of CSHB 283(FIN) were added without change. Bill sec. 4 of CSHB 283(FIN) was added with your requested changes.[1] In addition to the changes noted in footnote 1, there was a conceptual amendment adopted to provide that a court could order a defendant to refrain from consuming "or purchasing" alcohol. Apparently, it was felt that this addition was needed to bring this new provision in line with AS 04.16.160(a), which deals with restrictions on purchasing alcohol. In my opinion, this change is not needed and the conceptual purpose of the amendment is already accomplished in the bill.

AS 04.16.160(a)[2] provides that persons who have "been ordered to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages" may not purchase alcoholic beverages. The existing

---

[1] In bill sec. 4 of CSHB 283(FIN), new paragraph AS 12.55.015(a)(13) was shortened considerably. Specifically, on p.3, line 16, following "time" the "," was replaced by "." and then remaining material on that line was deleted. Then the material on p.3, lines 17 - 29, was also deleted.

[2] AS 04.16.160(a) provides:

> (a) Except as otherwise provided by law, a person who is 21 years of age or older may not purchase alcoholic beverages if the person has been ordered to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages as part of a sentence for conviction of a crime under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance or as a condition of probation or parole from a conviction under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance. The restriction on purchasing alcoholic beverages applies during the period that the person is required to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages under the sentence or condition of probation or parole.

statute already ties a court order that restricts consumption[3] to a blanket prohibition on purchase. In bill sec. 4 of CSHB 283(FIN), when a court imposes an order restricting a person from consuming alcoholic beverages that person is automatically restricted from purchasing alcoholic beverages under AS 04.16.160.[4] The restriction on purchasing alcoholic beverages remains in effect for the period of time the person is restricted from consuming alcoholic beverages under the sentence. There is no need to add a separate provision providing that a court may order that a person not purchase alcohol when that is accomplished automatically by operation of law in AS 04.16.160(a) when the person is restricted from consuming alcohol.[5] Therefore, in accordance with your instructions, I have not added "or consuming" to bill sec. 4.

Enclosure

Bill sec. 3 of CSHB 283(FIN) amends this subsection by adding the new material of bill sec. 4 as follows:

> (a) Except as otherwise provided by law, a person who is 21 years of age or older may not purchase alcoholic beverages if the person has been ordered to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages under AS 12.55.015(a)(13) or as part of a sentence for conviction of a crime under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance or as a condition of probation or parole from a conviction under AS 28.35.030, 28.35.032, or a similar municipal ordinance. The restriction on purchasing alcoholic beverages applies during the period that the person is required to refrain from consuming alcoholic beverages under the sentence or condition of probation or parole.

[3] In connection with the person's conviction of a crime.

[4] As that section is amended by bill sec. 3 of CSHB 283(FIN).

[5] The only time a separate restriction on purchasing would be needed is if it was the committee's intent by the amendment to allow a court to allow a person to continue to consume alcohol but not to purchase alcohol. In that case, other amendments to AS 04.16 would be necessary. I have been informed that this was not the committee's intent.

Re: Senate Bill 252 – Bail Reform

Dear Chairman French:

Thank you for the thoughtful and thorough hearing that you held for SB 252 (sexual assault and abuse) today and for our meeting on other criminal law legislation. I am writing to ask that you consider scheduling Senate Bill 252, the bail reform bill, for a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee as soon as practical. I hope you will not think this is presumptuous, but there are good reasons to hear the bail bill: in addition to protection of the public and other victims, victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence will greatly benefit from the passage of the bill. Although bail reform is not directly targeted at sexual abuse or domestic violence in the state, the bill would provide additional protection to victims of these crimes.

The Problems with current law:

Our bail laws date back to 1966. It is clear that when the legislature adopted these statutes, times were not as difficult as present. For example, unless a person has been convicted of an unclassified felony or a class A felony, our bail laws allow a person found guilty of any other crime, either by plea or by verdict, to be released pending the imposition of sentence or during an appeal. The following scenarios are only a few of many examples of the danger that can result from the application of the current law.

> Larry Berryhill, IJU-07-992 CR, was convicted of two counts of Sexual Abuse of a Minor in the Second Degree for having sexual contact with a young boy who worked for him at his lodge in Gustavus. After being found guilty, and over the state's objection, the court released him on an unsecured signature bond, in lieu of posting bail, in the amount of $25,000. Mr. Berryhill did not appear for his sentencing. Alaska State Troopers and law enforcement agents from other states (Mr. Berryhill had committed similar crimes in other states) found that Mr. Berryhill had fled to Argentina, and was vacationing in New Zealand and Europe when he should have appeared in court for his sentencing. Mr. Berryhill died before the Troopers were able to arrest him. He did not spend a single day in jail for his sexual abuse of that young boy.

Michael Williams, 3AN-10-166 CR, has been convicted of a felony five times, two of the felonies were federal armed bank robbery convictions from the late 1980s. In January, 2008, he was charged with Robbery in the First Degree for a home invasion robbery with multiple victims. The state proceeded with the prosecution under the three strikes law – with a 99 year sentence possible if convicted. This potential sentence is higher than most people convicted of homicide would receive. Over the state's objection, bail was set at $5,000 cash appearance bond and a third party custodian was appointed. The state requested several times that his bail be increased, but was unsuccessful. Mr. Williams skipped out soon after release, and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. He has not been found.

James Spencer, 3AN-09-2113 CR, was charged with Robbery in the First Degree after confronting a Carr's employee with a handgun. Over the state's objection, his bail was set at $1,000 cash performance bond, and $5,000 cash or corporate appearance bond. Last month, Mr. Spencer was arrested and charged with a new Robbery in the First Degree for an armed robbery at the Burger King (3AN010-2471 CR).

Jack Lee Espinoza, Jr., 3AN-10-2113 CR, was charged with two counts of Robbery in the First Degree. He had been convicted of more than 10 crimes in the past, several of them were felonies. Over the state's objection, Mr. Espinoza had been released on bail of $2,500 cash or corporate appearance bond and ankle monitoring. Within 48 hours of his release, Mr. Espinoza had cut off his ankle monitor, and with another person, committed another armed robbery at a trailer in Anchorage. The victim was shot, allegedly by the other person, during the robbery.

How SB 252 will help avoid these problems

Section 10 of SB 252 (page 13, beginning at line 26) provides that a person found guilty of a sexual felony may not be released pending imposition of sentence or appeal. The legislature has raised the maximum term of imprisonment for a person convicted of a sexual felony to 99 years; with that maximum term the danger of flight is high. Additionally, the danger of sex offenders victimizing others is significant. Mr. Berryhill would not have been released after being found guilty of sexual abuse under SB 252.

SB 252 is similar to federal law in part because it would adopt a presumption, that is rebuttable, that no combination of conditions or monetary bail would ensure the safety of the public and the appearance of the defendant in cases where the person is either charged with an unclassified or a class A felony (similar to current law), or the defendant is a higher risk of flight or danger to the public (new in SB 252). The bill provides that other persons with higher risk include the following:

- persons charged with a felony who have a prior felony conviction and less that five years have elapsed since unconditional release for the prior felony;

- persons charged with a crime committed while the person was on release for another charge or conviction;

- persons charged with a domestic violence crime if the person has a conviction for a domestic violence crime within the previous five years;

- persons arrested in connection with a felony charge or conviction out of state and the person is a fugitive from the other jurisdiction.

The individuals described in the scenarios above (except for Mr. Berryhill) would have the burden of going forward, under SB 252, with suggestions for release conditions. For example, Mr. Williams would have to present information and suggestions for conditions of release that would satisfy a judicial officer that he would not be a danger to the public and he would not be a flight risk. Mr. Williams still has the constitutional right to have bail set for him.

Additionally, SB 252 would adopt standards for third party custodians so that, for example, a person charged with crimes, a person who is on probation, or a person with recent convictions could not act as a third party custodian. SB 252 would require a judicial officer to do basic screening of a person before appointing the person as a custodian. Defendants have taken advantage of third party custodians in the past. There have been advertisements on Craig's list for third party custodians (see attached).

Misconceptions about SB 252

We have heard several comments about SB 252 that are simply not accurate. For example, the bill changes the deadline for the first appearance before a court of a person arrested from 24 to 48 hours. This change has been described as contrary to the practice of a majority of other states. As can be seen by the attached memorandum and chart, Alaska is one of only three states that require a first appearance within 24 hours. The remaining states have later deadlines. There are many good reasons to change this deadline. It would give all parties a chance to gather information for better informed bail hearings. Even more important is that victims in Alaska have a constitutional right to appear at arraignments and bail hearings. Often we are unable to notify them of a hearing that must be held within 24 hours of arrest; other times the victim is still in the hospital at this time. The change to a 48 hour deadline will help the system make the victim's right to be present much more meaningful. It also allows for a cooling down time in many cases.

We also have heard people say that SB 252 would prohibit certain people from being released on bail. This is not correct. Defendants have a constitutional right to have bail set for their release. SB 252 simply changes certain procedures for the courts to follow in setting bail. In doing so, it would protect the public and discourage bail jumping much better than does current law.

MEMORANDUM

STATE OF ALASKA

From: Susan S. McLean SMc

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)
6 states - 24 hours, calculated excluding weekends and holidays (AZ, CT, DE, ID, MA, NH)

1 state - 36 hours, calculated excluding day of arrest, Sundays and holidays (MN)

7 states- 48 hours, including weekends and holidays (AL, AR, GA, HI, MS, NE, TX)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Sunday, holiday, and days when court not in session (CA)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (ME)
1 state - 48 hours if 1st appearance is combined w/prob. cause hearing (court decision) (WI)

2 states - 72 hours, including weekends and holidays (NJ, WY)
1 state - 72 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (LA)
1 state - 72 hours is "without delay", if probable cause w/in 48 hours (court decision) (TN)
21 states - "without unnecessary delay" (CO, IL, IA, KS, KY, MI, MT, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, OH, OK, OR, PA, RI, SD, UT, VT, WV)

2 states - "forthwith" (SC, VA)

1 state - "promptly" (repealed a 24- hour rule in 1995) (IN)

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 324(FIN)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE FINANCE COMMITTEE

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the crime of failure to appear; relating to arrest for violating certain conditions of release; relating to release before trial, before sentence, and pending appeal; relating to material witnesses; relating to temporary release; relating to release on a petition to revoke probation; relating to the first appearance before a judicial officer after arrest; relating to service of process for domestic violence protective orders; making conforming amendments; amending Rules 5 and 41, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, and Rules 206 and 603, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) with criminal negligence does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security for any appearance of the person that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458].

* Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless.

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours' written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; the defendant shall notify the surety; and

(3) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the requested review.

(e) A judicial officer may solicit comments by the victim or a parent or guardian of a minor victim who is present at the bail review hearing and wishes to comment. The judicial officer shall consider those comments and any response by the person before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

(f) The judicial officer shall issue written or oral findings that explain the reasons the officer imposed the particular conditions of release or modifications or additions to conditions previously imposed. The judicial officer shall inform the person that a law enforcement officer may arrest the person without a warrant for violation of the court's order establishing conditions of release.

(g) Information offered or introduced at a bail hearing to determine conditions of release need not conform to the rules governing the admissibility of evidence.

 Sec. 4. AS 12.30 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 12.30.011. Release before trial. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, a judicial officer shall order a person charged with an offense to be released on the person's personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, on the condition that the person

(1) obey all court orders and all federal, state, and local laws;

(2) appear in court when ordered;

(3) if represented, maintain contact with the person's lawyer; and

(4) notify the person's lawyer, who shall notify the prosecuting authority and the court, not more than 24 hours after the person changes residence.

(b) If a judicial officer determines that the release under (a) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community, the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance and protect the victim, other persons, and the community. In addition to conditions under (a) of this section, the judicial officer may, singly or in combination,

(1) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited into the registry of the court, in a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(2) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties or the deposit of cash;

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.56 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.56.730. Failure to appear. (a) A person commits the crime of failure to appear if the person

(1) is released under the provisions of AS 12.30;

(2) knows that the person is required to appear before a court or judicial officer at the time and place of a scheduled hearing; and

(3) does not appear before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing; in this paragraph, the person's act of not appearing is conduct that does not require a culpable mental state.

(b) In a prosecution for failure to appear under (a) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that unforeseeable circumstances, outside the person's control, prevented the person from appearing before the court or judicial officer at the time and place of the scheduled hearing, and the person contacted the court orally and in writing immediately upon being able to make the contact.

(c) A person who commits failure to appear incurs a forfeiture of any security for any appearance of the person that was given or pledged to the court for the person's release, and is guilty of a

(1) class C felony if the person was released in connection with a charge of a felony, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a felony;

(2) class A misdemeanor if the person was released in connection with a

(A) charge of a misdemeanor, or while awaiting sentence or appeal after conviction of a misdemeanor; or

(B) requirement to appear as a material witness in a criminal proceeding.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.25.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) In addition to the authority granted by (a) of this section, a peace officer

(1) shall make an arrest under the circumstances described in AS 18.65.530;

(2) without a warrant may arrest a person if the officer has probable cause to believe the person has, either in or outside the presence of the officer,

(A) committed a crime involving domestic violence, whether the crime is a felony or a misdemeanor; in this subparagraph, "crime involving domestic violence" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990;

(B) committed the crime of violating a protective order in violation of AS 11.56.740; or

(C) violated a condition of release imposed under AS 12.30.016(e) [AS 12.30.025] or 12.30.027;

(3) without a warrant may arrest a person when the peace officer has probable [REASONABLE] cause for believing that the person has

(A) committed a crime under or violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release before trial on misdemeanor charges brought under AS 11.41.270;

(B) violated AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements; however, unless there is a lawful reason for further detention, a person who is under [THE AGE OF] 18 years of age and who has been arrested for violating AS 04.16.050 or an ordinance with similar elements shall be cited for the offense and released to the person's parent, guardian, or legal custodian; or

(C) violated conditions imposed as part of the person's release under the provisions of AS 12.30 [BEFORE TRIAL ON FELONY CHARGES BROUGHT UNDER AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.458];

* Sec. 3. AS 12.30 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.30.006. Release procedures. (a) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person charged with an offense shall be released or detained under the provisions of this chapter.

(b) At the first appearance before a judicial officer, a person who is charged with a felony may be detained up to 48 hours for the prosecuting authority to demonstrate that release of the person under AS 12.30.011(a) would not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community.

(c) A person who remains in custody 48 hours after appearing before a judicial officer because of inability to meet the conditions of release shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them. If the judicial officer who imposed the conditions of release is not available, any judicial officer in the judicial district may review the conditions.

(d) If a person remains in custody after review of conditions by a judicial officer under (c) of this section, the person may request a subsequent review of conditions. Unless the prosecuting authority stipulates otherwise or the person has been incarcerated for a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious charge for which the person is being held, a judicial officer may not schedule a bail review hearing under this subsection unless

(1) the person provides to the court and the prosecuting authority a written statement that new information not considered at the previous review will be presented at the hearing; the statement must include a description of the information and the reason the information was not presented at a previous hearing; in this paragraph, "new information" does not include the inability to post the required bail;

(2) the prosecuting authority and any surety, if applicable, have at least 48 hours' written notice before the time set for the review requested under this subsection; the defendant shall notify the surety; and

(3) at least seven days have elapsed between the previous review and the time set for the requested review.

(e) Before a person may be released under this chapter, the person must sign and file a release agreement with the clerk of the court. The release agreement must describe the terms and conditions of the person's release and include the person's promise to abide by the terms and conditions.

(f) A judicial officer may solicit comments by the victim or a parent or guardian of a minor victim who is present at the bail review hearing and wishes to comment. The judicial officer shall consider those comments and any response by the person before making a decision concerning the release of the person.

(g) The judicial officer shall issue written or oral findings that explain the reasons the officer imposed the particular conditions of release or modifications or additions to conditions previously imposed. The judicial officer shall inform the person that a law enforcement officer may arrest the person without a warrant for violation of the court's order establishing conditions of release.

(h) Information offered or introduced at a bail hearing to determine conditions

(3) if represented, maintain contact with the person's lawyer; and

(4) notify the person's lawyer, who shall notify the prosecuting authority and the court, not more than 24 hours after the person changes residence.

(b) If a judicial officer determines that the release under (a) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person or will pose a danger to the victim, other persons, or the community, the officer shall impose the least restrictive condition or conditions that will reasonably assure the person's appearance and protect the victim, other persons, and the community. In addition to conditions under (a) of this section, the judicial officer may, singly or in combination,

(1) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount of cash to be deposited into the registry of the court, in a sum not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of the bond;

(8) require the person to avoid all contact with a victim, a potential witness, or a codefendant;

(9) require the person to refrain from the consumption and possession of alcoholic beverages;

(10) require the person to refrain from the use of a controlled substance as defined by AS 11.71, unless prescribed by a licensed health care provider with prescriptive authority;

(2) there is a rebuttable presumption that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person or the safety of the victim, other persons, or the community, if the person is

(A) charged with an unclassified felony, a class A felony, or a sexual felony;

(B) charged with a felony, was previously convicted of a felony in this state or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, and less than five years have elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the immediately preceding offense and the commission of the present offense;

The judicial officer may reduce this requirement if the person proves to the satisfaction of the officer that the person's only role in the offense was as an aider or abettor and that the person did not stand to benefit financially from the manufacturing.

The Honorable Hollis French
Alaska State Senate

Re: CSHB 348 (JUD)

Dear Senator French:

The Department of Law has had an opportunity to review CSHB 348(JUD). As was explained during testimony by Assistant Attorneys General Mike Ford and Bill Milks this morning at the Senate State Affairs Committee, there is a significant separation of powers issue that should be considered as it raises questions regarding the constitutionality of the bill. This issue is discussed below.

Section 1 of the bill provides that "(t)he governor may make an appointment only from a list of at least three nominees selected by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations." Additionally, Section 1 provides that in making appointments, "the governor shall ensure that the board has at least one member of the political party that had the largest number of registered voters and one member of the political party that had the second largest number of registered voters at the time of the most recent general election at which a governor was elected." Currently, under AS 39.25.060(a), members are appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature.

Article III of the Alaska Constitution provides that the executive power of the state resides with the governor. Sections 25 and 26 of Article III address the governor's power of appointment. Section 25 states:

> The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law. He shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and shall serve at the pleasure of the governor, except as otherwise provided in this article with respect to the secretary of state. The heads of > all principal departments shall be citizens of the United States. (Emphasis added).

Section 26 states:

> When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. They shall be citizens of the United States. The board or commission may appoint a principal executive officer when authorized by law, but the appointment shall be subject to the approval of the governor. (Emphasis added).

The Alaska Supreme Court addressed the issue of the governor's power of appointment and the extent to which the legislature can place restrictions on the governor's appointment of executive branch officials in Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 6-7 (Alaska 1976). In Bradner, the legislature passed a statute providing that the governor's appointments of deputy heads of each principal executive branch department and 19 specific directors of divisions were subject to legislative confirmation. The question before the Court was whether the statute's requirement that these officials be subject to legislative confirmation was unconstitutional. The Alaska Supreme Court held that the statute violated the separation of powers requirements of Alaska's Constitution because it infringed on the governor's power of appointment under Article III and exceeded the limited authority granted under the Constitution to the legislature in reviewing the appointment of executive officers.

The Court in Bradner held that "the appointment of executive officers is an executive function" and that "under Alaska's constitution confirmation is a specific attribute of the appointive power of the executive." Id. at 7. The Court considered whether or not Sections 25 and 26 of Article III "describe the outer limits of the legislature's confirmation authority." Id. The Court found that the provisions of Sections 25 and 26 "are clear and unambiguous" and that these provisions "delineate the full extent of the constitution's express grant to the legislative branch of checks on the governor's power to appoint subordinate executive officers." Id. The Court further commented that "sections 25 and 26 mark the full reach of the delegated, or shared, appointive function to Alaska's legislative branch of government." Id. at 7. Based on Bradner, it appears clear that the limitation on the executive's power of appointment in section 1 presents a significant constitutional issue.

The Department of Law is aware that there are a number of statutes that require that the governor make appointments to commissions or boards from lists of nominees. E.g., AS 41.21.163 (governor required to appoint members from nominations submitted by certain village and city councils); AS 23.15.550(a)(6)(governor required to appoint four representatives of organized labor from lists submitted by unions); AS 41.35.310(5)(governor required to appoint two persons from a list of recommended nominees submitted by Alaska Historical Society); AS 44.29.300(3)(D)(governor required to appoint one person recommended by Alaska Federation of Natives); AS 15.13.020(b)(governor required to appoint two members of each of the two political parties whose candidate for governor received the highest number of votes in recent election, based on a list submitted by each party).

The Department of Law, however, has issued opinions advising governors to resist legislative encroachment on their appointment power. In 1980, the Department of Law considered the nomination process for the Alaska Public Offices Commission: "The statutory requirement that the governor limit his choice of appointees to those nominated by the two major political parties clearly and unduly interferes with his power of appointment under section 26." 1980 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. No. J-66-749-80, 1980 WL 27763 (June 2, 1980) (citations omitted). In 1987, the Department opined that requiring boards and commissions appointees to be registered to vote was probably unconstitutional: "Both sections 25 and 26 of article III require only that appointees be United States citizens, not that they be Alaska citizens or registered voters of this state. Given that appointment is an executive function, the legislature is limited in its ability to restrict the governor's appointment power." 1987 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. No. 663-87-0555, 1987 WL 121097 (June 1, 1987). In 1996, an opinion of the Department revealed that for 21 years the governor's office had declined to comply with the statutory requirement of legislative confirmation for members of the Alaska Commission on Postsecondary Education in partial reliance on Bradner. 1996 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. No. 883-96-0063, 1998 WL 915884 (May 24, 1996). See also 1980 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. No. J-66-739-80 1980 WL 27759 (May 28, 1980) (Attorney General noted that if the council at issue was not largely advisory, the method by which appointments are made from nominees of village councils, a city council, and a non-profit corporation would likely be unconstitutional).

The Department of Law has determined in limited circumstances that restrictions on the appointment power of the governor are constitutional where the legislation provides that appointees possess reasonable relevant qualifications for a particular board or commission. For example, the Attorney General advised regarding legislation creating a council on domestic violence and sexual assault which contained some restrictions on individuals eligible for appointment to the council and stated that "reasonable qualifications may unquestionably be prescribed by law." 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 66-698-81, 1981 WL 38632 (April 23, 1981). In another case, the Attorney General addressed qualifications for appointees to boards and commissions and the requirements of Article III, section 26 and stated that it was probable "that technical, professional, occupational, or other like qualifications can be imposed without violating the constitution." 1979 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 663-80-0085, 1979 WL 23038 (August 13, 1979). A number of statutes establishing boards and commissions do contain requirements that members meet certain qualifications in order to be eligible for appointment. See e.g., AS 08.04.020(a); AS 37.10.270; AS 44.29.115(4); AS 47.45.200(b).

In conclusion, it appears clear based on the language of Article III, sections 25 and 26 and the Alaska Supreme Court's decision in Bradner that there is a very strong argument that the restrictions on the governor's power of appointment contained in this bill are unconstitutional. The restrictions on appointment to the personnel board do not involve establishing relevant qualifications for service on the board. Instead, the bill simply inserts the chief justice into the appointment process and mandates that the governor select from a list selected by the chief justice. Additionally, the bill requires that at least two members be appointed from particular political parties. For these reasons, the Department of Law wishes to inform the Committee of these important legal issues.

DANIEL S. SULLIVAN

MEMORANDUM April 14, 2010

SUBJECT: Membership of the State Personnel Board
CSHB 348(JUD) (Work Order No. 26-LS1360\S)

TO: Senator Hollis French
Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee
Attn: Cindy Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard RAB
Legislative Counsel

You asked that I address separation of powers concerns raised by the committee substitute described above.

CSHB 348(JUD) provides that the governor would be required to appoint nominees from a list of at least three qualified persons submitted by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. This requirement, that the governor appoint board members from a list of persons selected by the chief justice, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations, raises a constitutional question as to whether the legislature may so constrain the governor's ability to choose whom to appoint to an executive board.

The power to appoint members of state boards, commissions, and councils is an executive function to be exercised by the governor. In Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 5 - 6 (Alaska 1976), the Alaska Supreme Court recognized that the Alaska constitution envisioned a strong executive and "that the appointment of executive officers is an executive function. . . ." The legislature may prescribe qualifications for the members of boards and commissions that are reasonably related to either the position or to the aim of the legislation and do not interfere with the governor's appointment power or with qualifications set out in the constitution. Various state courts have reached this same conclusion and have upheld legislative designations of qualifications for public offices, such as memberships on a board or commission. See, e.g., State v. Matassarin, 217 P. 930 (Kansas 1923); State v. Eischen, 76 N.W.2d 385 (Minn. 1956); Humane Society of the United States v. New Jersey Fish and Game Council, 362 A.2d 20 (1976); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); State v. Wells, 112 N.W.2d 601 (S.D. 1961); State v. Millsap, 605 S.W.2d 366 (Tex. App. 1980).

However, the Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups.[1] The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; 1980 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-164-80), September 17. However, courts in other states have held that statutes requiring a governor to make appointments to a state board from a list of nominees submitted by other parties are constitutional. Kentucky Association of Realtors v. Musselman, 817 S.W.2d 213 (Ky. 1991); Opinion of the Justices, 316 A.2d 174 (N.H. 1974); Seidenberg v. New Mexico Board of Medical Examiners, 452 P.2d 469 (N.M. 1969); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); Marks v. Frantz, 298 P.2d 316 (Kan. 1956); Ingard v. Barker, 147 P. 293 (Id. 1915).

Nonetheless, at least three Alaska attorney general opinions or letters of advice have accepted that the legislature may prescribe reasonable qualifications for gubernatorial appointments to boards or commissions. 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; Memorandum to Governor Hammond from R. Pegues, August 13, 1979; 1988 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. 883-88-0079), May 24.

In this instance, I cannot say how a court would interpret the reasonableness of a statutory requirement that the governor appoint members of the board from lists of nominees chosen by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court.

If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sponsor Statement for CSHB 348(JUD)

"An Act relating to membership of the state personnel board."

By Representative Bob Lynn

CSHB 348(JUD) brings a broader representation to the Personnel Board so it can operate, or at least appear to operate, with greater independence when addressing complaints, and carrying out its other powers and duties under AS 39.52 Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act.

The bill increases board membership from three to five members, allowing the governor to make an appointment from a list of at least three nominees selected by the Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations. It also ensures that the board has at least one member of the two parties that had the largest number of registered voters in the most recent election for governor.

The Personnel Board, as currently constructed, lends itself to criticism that it's a creature of the governor rather than an independent body when it comes to investigating Executive Branch ethics complaints. As we know, perception can be the same as reality in the public eye.

HB 348 also prohibits certain conduct by board members that can lead to conflicts of interest or at least an appearance of conflict, such as: campaigning for elective office; being an officer of a political party or political group; lobbying; employing a lobbyist; or assisting in lobbying.

Like other ethics-related measures, the purpose of this bill is to build a better foundation of trust between the people of Alaska and those they elect to public office.

MEMORANDUM February 8, 2010

SUBJECT: Membership of the State Personnel Board
(Work Order No. 26-LS1360\A)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Attn: Mike Sica

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the work order described above.

You asked for a bill that would make the appointment of Personnel Board (board) members under AS 39.25.060(a) similar to the manner in which public members are appointed to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics under AS 24.60.130(b). You asked that the bill also include provisions addressing (1) the removal of board members, (2) the filling of vacancies and unexpired terms, (3) conflicts of interest, and (4) alternate members. I have a few comments.

Board members; increased membership and a constitutional concern relating to member appointment

The draft increases the number of board members (from three) to five,[1] making the membership of the board more difficult to "capture," and provides that the governor would be required to appoint nominees from a list of at least three qualified persons submitted by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. Note that this requirement that the governor appoint board members from a list of persons selected by the chief justice, subject to the right of the governor to request additional nominations, raises a constitutional question as to whether the legislature may so constrain the governor's ability to choose whom to appoint to an executive board.

[1] Mike Sica of your staff clarified that the intent of the legislation related to making sure that the board did not operate, or appear to operate, as a rubber stamp in investigating and addressing complaints concerning the governor. More members makes it less likely that (1) a majority of the board would be appointed by a sitting governor and (2) that the membership of the board would be of a single mind in any board proceeding. Because I increased the number of board members, I did not include a provision for alternate members.

The power to appoint members of state boards, commissions, and councils is an executive function to be exercised by the governor. In Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 5 - 6 (Alaska 1976), the Alaska Supreme Court recognized that the Alaska constitution envisioned a strong executive and "that the appointment of executive officers is an executive function. . . ." The legislature may prescribe qualifications for the members of boards and commissions that are reasonably related to either the position or to the aim of the legislation and do not interfere with the governor's appointment power or with qualifications set out in the constitution. Various state courts have reached this same conclusion and have upheld legislative designations of qualifications for public offices, such as memberships on a board or commission. See, e.g., State v. Matassarin, 217 P. 930 (Kansas 1923); State v. Eischen, 76 N.W.2d 385 (Minn. 1956); Humane Society of the United States v. New Jersey Fish and Game Council, 362 A.2d 20 (1976); Hurd v. Freeland, 442 P.2d 344 (Okla. 1966); State v. Wells, 112 N.W.2d 601 (S.D. 1961); State v. Millsap, 605 S.W.2d 366 (Tex. App. 1980).

However, the Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups. The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; 1980 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-164-80), September 17.

Nonetheless, at least three Alaska attorney general opinions or letters of advice have accepted that the legislature may prescribe reasonable qualifications for gubernatorial appointments to boards or commissions. 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. J-66-698-81), April 23; Memorandum to Governor Hammond from R. Pegues, August 13, 1979; 1988 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op. (file no. 883-88-0079), May 24.

In this instance, I cannot say how a court would interpret the reasonableness of a statutory requirement that the governor appoint members of the board from lists of nominees chosen by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court.

Quick notes

I included a provision, sec. 3 of the draft bill (prohibited conduct by board members and board employees and contractors), that relates to possible conflicts of interest and appearances of a conflict of interest. Is this what you had in mind? Please advise.

I did not prohibit a member appointed by the governor from participating in a proceeding that involved that same governor. Such a provision seemed unnecessary given that members are appointed from lists submitted by the chief justice.

I hope that this draft bill is consistent with your intent. If you have questions, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

House passes ethics panel bill without changes
By Jeremy Hsieh | The Associated Press

JUNEAU - Same bill, different outcome.

The Alaska House passed a bill dealing with an executive branch ethics panel without changes by a nearly 3-to-1 margin Wednesday. It failed Monday in a 19-18 vote, but the vote was held for reconsideration.

The bill now goes to the Senate.

The bill would limit a governor's selection of members to the Personnel Board to names forwarded to him by the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. The chief justice must nominate at least three people, but the governor can request more nominees indefinitely. It bars members from holding some political party and lobbyist roles. It also expands the board from three to five members.

It's intended to address possible conflicts of interest on the board, which arbitrates executive branch ethics complaints.

Reps. Max Gruenberg, D-Anchorage, and David Guttenberg, D-Fairbanks, flipped their votes at the last minute on Monday - stopping the bill - to try to bully through an amendment on reconsideration to further limit the governor's role in selecting board members. They weren't able to get enough votes to resurrect the failed amendment.

Minority Leader Beth Kertulla, D-Juneau, said putting restrictions on a governor's right to request unlimited nominees is important "for all of us who've lived through something similar."

It was a reference to former -Gov. Sarah Palin snubbing her last year. Palin refused to appoint Kertulla to fill an empty Senate seat after Democrats broke from tradition of nominating three candidates, sending only Kertulla's name to Palin for the open seat. Kertulla had been critical of the governor after Palin was chosen as Republican John McCain's running mate in the 2008 presidential election.

Juneau's Senate district went without representation for about half the legislative session as Palin cycled through additional nominees before naming Dennis Egan to the seat on the last day of the legislative session.

The failed amendment on the Personnel Board bill would have limited a governor to the chief justice's first set of at least three nominees and a second set of up to three nominees.

Bill sponsor Bob Lynn, R-Anchorage, said such a restriction leads to questionable legal territory regarding separation of powers.

"This is not a perfect bill, but is significant improvement over the status quo," Lynn said. "I'm going to vote a conservative and progressive 'yes' on this bill."

Rep. Mike Doogan, D-Anchorage, had initially proposed the failed amendment and broke from his party voting against the overall bill.

The Personnel Board primarily deals with lower-level state employees where the conflict of interest issue the bill addresses is irrelevant, Doogan said.

The executive branch's elected officials, the governor and lieutenant governor, don't fit, and a better solution may be to lump all elected officials under one ethics panel, he said.

Personnel board appointments get another look

By SEAN COCKERHAM
scockerham@adn.com
(03/16/10 18:11:01)

Alaska legislators are talking about changing the law so governors can no longer appoint whoever they want to the state personnel board, the panel that dismissed ethics complaints against then-Gov. Sarah Palin on "Troopergate" and many other matters.

Anchorage Republican Rep. Bob Lynn, who has been supportive of Palin, sponsored a bill that would make the governor pick from a list submitted by the chief justice of the state supreme court. Lynn said it would reassure the public.

"It helps protect and insulate the governor from what could be, and usually is, unfair criticism from the public that you have the fox watching the hen house," Lynn said Tuesday, as the bill passed its first committee.

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Les Gara, no fan of Palin's, favors Lynn's House Bill 348. Gara said he thinks some of the people filing ethics complaints against Palin went overboard. But he said the current system casts a lot of doubt about the rulings made by members of the Personnel Board, who he said could be political allies of the governor.

"I did not follow every complaint in any great detail. But you always do wonder whether a personnel board appointed by Republican governors is going to be objective when it looks at conduct by a Republican governor," Gara said.

The three members of the Personnel Board are charged in Alaska law with looking into ethics complaints made against the governor and other members of the executive branch. The current members were all appointed by Republican governors, although two of them aren't registered with a political party.

The board members have six-year terms and only one, Alaska Christian College President Keith Hamilton, was appointed by Sean Parnell, the current governor. Board member Debra English was reappointed by Palin in 2008 and Al Tamagni was appointed in 2006 by Frank Murkowski.

Lynn said he does not think there's been a problem with the Personnel Board. "But there's always the perception out there and, in politics, perception often becomes reality in the public mind," he said.

Current law says only that the board members can't be state employees and no more than two of the three of can be registered with the same political party. They are appointed by the governor and then confirmed by the Legislature.

Lynn's bill would expand the board to five members. He said that would provide more of a broad range of opinion. The panel would also need to include at least one member from each of the top two political parties in the state.

The governor would be required to pick from a list of at least three nominees from the chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court, although the governor could reject the entire list and ask the chief justice for another.

Gara said called that a loophole and said the governor shouldn't get to keep asking for new nominees over and over if he or she doesn't like the slate presented. But Lynn described it as a way to deal with potential separation of powers issues involved in the Legislature reducing a governor's ability to make appointments .

The attorney general's office raised the separation of powers issue Tuesday. But the Parnell administration didn't object to the bill as it passed from the House State Affairs Committee. The bill next goes to the judiciary committee, chaired by Fairbanks Republican Rep. Jay Ramras. Ramras last year deemed a "whitewash" the report commissioned by the personnel board that found Palin not responsible for any wrongdoing in the so-called Troopergate affair.

Zane Henning, who had two ethics complaints against Palin dismissed, last month testified to a legislative committee that elected officials rather than a governor's appointees should oversee the complaints. His concern seemed to resonate with some legislators. "I'm just wondering is there maybe too close of a relationship there," Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, asked during that hearing.

Assistant Attorney General Judy Bockmon said an independent counsel investigates ethics complaints against the governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general in an effort to separate the Personnel Board from those high-level officials.

The outcome of at least one Personnel Bard case from the Palin era remains a mystery. Independent Counsel Tom Daniel on July 14 found "probable cause" that Palin's legal defense fund violated state ethics law. But the board has taken no public action and the fund's Web site still solicits donations.

Palin critics question ethics rules proposals

PALIN ERA: New regulations would address traveling on the state's dime, paying legal bills.

By LISA DEMER
ldemer@adn.com
(02/08/10 22:44:25)

JUNEAU -- A legislative committee on Monday took up ethics issues that erupted during the Palin administration, but it's not clear whether the panel intends to take any action.

Attorney General Dan Sullivan has proposed state rules establishing when it's appropriate for the state to pay for the travel of family members of the governor or lieutenant governor. Another proposal sets out when the state should pay legal bills for state officials defending against ethics complaints.

Former Gov. Sarah Palin was hit with numerous ethics complaints during her 2 1/2 years in office. She said she quit in part because of what she called frivolous ethics complaints and personal legal bills amounting to an estimated $600,000.

Most of the ethics complaints against Palin were dismissed. But she settled one by reimbursing the state more than $8,000 for her children's air travel.

Some parts of the package Sullivan is proposing go beyond the Palin-era controversies. For instance, another proposed rule change would do away with a requirement for state officials to disclose as gifts any travel for state business paid by others. But they still would have to file travel reports, which would be public.

Sullivan is trying to make the changes through new state regulations, which don't need legislative approval.

Oversight comes from the joint House-Senate Administrative Regulation Review Committee, which examines regulations to make sure they are allowed under state law.

The panel agreed to hold a public hearing on the ethics measures after being pushed by Palin critic Andree McLeod. House leaders also requested it, said state Rep. Wes Keller, R-Wasilla, who is the committee chairman.

LEGAL FEES, FAMILY TRAVEL

Under the proposed rules, the state could cover the costs of defending a public official against ethics complaints if the official were exonerated, Assistant Attorney General Judy Bockmon told the committee.

Travel would be covered if the presence of a family member is required for state business or has a public purpose. The proposal says that would include a state-sponsored event that the family of the governor or lieutenant governor usually attends, or an event in which the family member is representing the state.

State Rep. David Guttenberg, D-Fairbanks, asked Bockmon whether state law gives any guidance on paying for family travel.

It doesn't, she said.

In that case, why try to decide when it's appropriate -- maybe it shouldn't be permitted at all, Guttenberg responded.

That's up to the Legislature, Bockmon said. There might be value to the state for the family to attend. It depends on the nature of the event.

State Rep. Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, said it might just save worry and time for a governor with young children to bring them along.

CRITICS TESTIFY

McLeod, who filed a number of ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, urged the committee to reject the changes.

"Are these changes valid? Do they improve the standards of public service? Do they promote the faith and confidence of the people in this state in their public officers? I submit that they do not," McLeod told the legislative committee.

McLeod said private citizens with questions about whether a public official has crossed a legal or ethical line can't get ethics opinions the way state employees can. So the public has no recourse except filing complaints to get answers, she said.

The Executive Branch Ethics Act is important, and the attorney general shouldn't be trying to change the law, another Palin critic, Zane Henning, told the committee. The Legislature should make any needed changes, he said.

"I object to the entire process that is being pushed through here," Henning said.

The ethics law needs reform, but not in the way the attorney general wants, Henning said. Elected officials, not the governor-appointed Personnel Board, should oversee ethics complaints against state officials, he said.

Both of his complaints against Palin were dismissed. One involved an interview about the vice presidential campaign that she gave to Fox News in her state office; the other concerned the fact she collected state expense payments while living in her own home in Wasilla.

ARM'S-LENGTH INVESTIGATORS

Henning's concerns about the Personnel Board seemed to resonate with legislators.

"I'm just wondering is there maybe too close of a relationship there," state Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, asked during the hearing.

Bockmon told the committee an independent counsel investigates ethics complaints against the governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general in an effort to separate the Personnel Board from those high-level officials.

The committee can't halt the regulations from taking effect during the annual legislative session, but can express disapproval and propose new laws to override any objectionable regulations.

The Department of Law has solicited public comment and held a hearing on the ethics changes, Bockmon said. The period for comment has ended and the department must now decide what to do. It could adopt the provisions as is or with minor changes, or let the matter drop with no action.

The committee hasn't yet decided how to proceed, Keller said.

Costs of dismissed Palin ethics complaints pile up

Personnel board member says tab is "close to about a third of a million dollars."

By SEAN COCKERHAM
scockerham@adn.com

(05/27/09 21:57:12)

The Alaska Personnel Board, clearly frustrated with the pile of ethics complaints filed against Gov. Sarah Palin, wants to publicize the cost of dealing with them.

The personnel board members decided at a Wednesday meeting to work with the attorney general's office on how to make public the cost of addressing each ethics complaint, without violating the board's confidentiality rules.

"We've spent pretty close to about a third of a million dollars, and it's getting to be really expensive," said Al Tamagni, a member of the board.

Also Wednesday, the three-member board dismissed another complaint, this one involving Palin and her political action committee, and heard testimony from a woman who asserted fear of retaliation has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor.

The governor's office said it is the 13th ethics complaint against Palin or her staff that has been resolved without finding of an executive ethics act violation. But Palin has agreed to reimburse the state in order to settle an ethics complaint over 10 state-paid trips taken by her children. A "few more" complaints are pending a decision by the personnel board, the governor's office said.

Andree McLeod, an Anchorage activist who has filed multiple ethics complaints against Palin and her staff, said after the meeting that the board is trying to squash accountability by saying it costs too much.

"The whole way to mitigate all this is for Palin to behave ethically," said McLeod, who filed the complaint that was dismissed by the board on Wednesday.

Valerie Henning told the board that fear of a backlash has prevented her from filing a complaint against the governor's practice of collecting per diem for time spent at her home in Wasilla. Henning's husband, Zane, earlier had an ethics complaint dismissed by the board. His complaint alleged Palin violated ethics law by holding national television interviews concerning her run for vice president from the governor's office.

Valerie Henning brought up to the board the statement that Palin's chief of staff, Mike Nizich, made on April 22 after the filing of an ethics complaint against Palin that was released to the press.

"I hope that the publicity-seekers will face a backlash from Alaskans who have a sense of fair play and proportion. I served six previous governors, and I've never seen anything like the attacks against governor Palin," Nizich said in a press release distributed by the governor's office.

Valerie Henning tried to get board members to suggest some alternative to making the ethics complaint, saying "I'm afraid of retaliation, basically."

Palin spokesman Bill McAllister said Nizich was simply asking that Alaskans who have a "sense of fair play and proportion" speak up about what's going on.

"I don't know what she means by retaliation, but certainly some people have been raising their voices in protest of this abuse of the ethics act," McAllister said. "People make these allegations against the governor and they keep getting dismissed and dismissed and dismissed, and some people are saying 'What's going on here?' "

Pro-Palin bloggers have assailed "ankle biter" ethics complainants in writing and KBYR talk radio host Eddie Burke has gone after McLeod on his show, saying he was going to hunt down evidence she was motivated by not getting a state job.

One of the personnel board members, Tamagni, last fall asked a state attorney if the board could charge attorney fees for Alaskans who file "a frivolous or meritless" ethics complaint. It's not clear how the state would judge a complaint frivolous, but charging for them would require changing the law.

Personnel board members spoke Wednesday about possibly pursuing changes in the law regarding their ethics complaint procedures -- such as changing the "thresholds for investigations."

Ethics complainants in the audience asked board chair Debra English for detail after the meeting, but she curtly brushed them off, saying the meeting was over and she wasn't going to say more.

English also refused to answer when a Daily News reporter asked what the board had in mind. She said the reporter should have come before the board and given public testimony in order to get any questions answered from its members.

Members of the personnel board are volunteers appointed by the governor, although all three of the current members were in place when Palin took office in 2006. Palin last year reappointed English to a six-year term but hasn't had a role yet in either of the two other positions, which have terms expiring in 2010 and 2012.

The governor also has the power to remove members of the personnel board, but only for cause.

The agency receiving information under this subsection may use the information only for child support purposes authorized under law.

Article 04. COMPLAINTS; HEARING PROCEDURES

Sec. 39.52.310. Complaints.

(a) The attorney general may initiate a complaint, or elect to treat as a complaint, any matter disclosed under AS 39.52.210 , 39.52.220, 39.52.250, or 39.52.260. The attorney general may not, during a campaign period, initiate a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for election to state office.

Notwithstanding AS 36.30.015 (d), the personnel board may contract for or hire independent counsel under this subsection without notifying or securing the approval of the Department of Law.

(d) The attorney general shall review each complaint filed, to determine whether it is properly completed and contains allegations which, if true, would constitute conduct in violation of this chapter. The attorney general may require the complainant to provide additional information before accepting the complaint. If the attorney general determines that the allegations in the complaint do not warrant an investigation, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint with notice to the complainant and the subject of the complaint.

(e) The attorney general may refer a complaint to the subject's designated supervisor for resolution under AS 39.52.210 or 39.52.220.

(f) If the attorney general accepts a complaint for investigation, the attorney general shall serve a copy of the complaint upon the subject of the complaint, for a response. The attorney general may require the subject to provide, within 20 days after service, full and fair disclosure in writing of all facts and circumstances pertaining to the alleged violation. Misrepresentation of a material fact in a response to the attorney general is a violation of this chapter. Failure to answer within the prescribed time, or within any additional time period that may be granted in writing by the attorney general, may be considered an admission of the allegations in the complaint.

(g) If a complaint is accepted under (f) of this section, the attorney general shall investigate to determine whether a violation of this chapter has occurred. At any stage of an investigation or review, the attorney general may issue a subpoena under AS 39.52.380 .

(h) A violation of this chapter may be investigated within two years after discovery of the alleged violation.

(i) The unwillingness of a complainant to assist in an investigation, the withdrawal of a complaint, or restitution by the subject of the complaint may, but need not in and of itself, justify termination of an investigation or proceeding.

(j) The personnel board shall return a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate for state office received during a campaign period to the complainant unless the governor or lieutenant governor, as appropriate, permits the personnel board to assume jurisdiction under this subsection. If the personnel board receives a complaint concerning the conduct of the governor or lieutenant governor who is a candidate during the campaign period, the personnel board shall immediately notify the subject of the complaint of the receipt of the complaint, of the suspension of the personnel board's jurisdiction during the campaign period, and of the candidate's right to waive the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection. The candidate may, within 11 days after the personnel board mails or otherwise sends notice of the complaint to the candidate, notify the personnel board that the candidate chooses to have the personnel board proceed with the complaint under this section. If the candidate does not act within that time or if the candidate notifies the personnel board that the candidate is not waiving the suspension of jurisdiction, the personnel board shall return the complaint to the complainant with notice of the suspension of jurisdiction under this subsection and of the right of the complainant to file the complaint after the end of the campaign period.

(k) A campaign period under this section begins on the later of 45 days before a primary election in which the governor or lieutenant governor is a candidate for state office or the day on which the individual files as a candidate for state office and ends at the close of election day for the general or special election in which the individual is a candidate or on the day that the candidate withdraws from the election, if earlier. For a candidate who loses in the primary election, the campaign period ends on the day that results of the primary election showing that another individual won the election are certified.

Sec. 39.52.320. Dismissal before formal proceedings.

If, after investigation, it appears that there is no probable cause to believe that a violation of this chapter has occurred, the attorney general shall dismiss the complaint. The attorney general shall communicate disposition of the matter promptly to the complainant under AS 39.52.335 (c) and to the subject of the complaint.

Sec. 39.52.330. Corrective or preventive action.

After determining that the conduct of the subject of a complaint does not warrant a hearing under AS 39.52.360 , the attorney general shall recommend action to correct or prevent a violation of this chapter. The attorney general shall communicate the recommended action to the complainant and the subject of the complaint. The subject of the complaint shall comply with the attorney general's recommendation.

Sec. 39.52.335. Summary of disposition of complaints and review by personnel board.

(a) When the attorney general initiates or receives a complaint under AS 39.52.310 , the attorney general shall immediately forward a copy of the complaint to the personnel board.

(b) Each month, the attorney general shall file a report with the personnel board concerning the status of each pending complaint and the resolution of complaints that have been closed since the previous report.

(c) If a complaint is dismissed under AS 39.52.320 or resolved under AS 39.52.330 , the attorney general shall promptly prepare a summary of the matter and provide a copy of the summary to the personnel board and the complainant. The summary is confidential unless the

(1) dismissal or resolution agreed to under AS 39.52.320 or 39.52.330 is public; or

(2) superior court makes the matter public under (h) of this section.

(d) Within 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, a complainant may file comments with the personnel board regarding the disposition of the complaint.

(e) At its next regular meeting that begins more than 15 days after receipt of a summary under this section, the personnel board shall review the summary and comments, if any, filed by the complainant. The personnel board may compel the attendance of the subject of the complaint or the complainant at the meeting and may compel the production of documents. Attendance may be by teleconference. The attorney general or the attorney general's designee shall be available to respond to questions from the personnel board concerning the disposition of the complaint.

(f) After review of the summary, the personnel board may issue a report on the disposition of the complaint. If the matter is confidential and the board determines that publication of the name of the subject is in the public interest, the report may include a recommendation that the matter be made public.

(g) If the summary is confidential under (c) of this section,

(1) comments filed by the complainant, if any, are confidential;

(2) the personnel board shall conduct the review of the summary in executive session; and

(3) the personnel board report, if any, is confidential; the personnel board shall make available to the public an expurgated copy of a confidential report with sufficient deletions and editing to prevent disclosure of the identity of the persons involved in the matter.

(h) If the disposition of a complaint is not made public and the personnel board report under (f) of this section includes a recommendation that the matter be made public, an interested party may file an action against the state in superior court requesting that the court make public the complaint, the attorney general's disposition of the complaint, and the personnel board report. The court may order the matter or portions of the matter made public if the court determines that

(1) the dismissal or resolution of the complaint was clearly contrary to the requirements of this chapter;

(2) one or more of the allegations in the information to be released is supported by substantial evidence;

(3) the matter concerns the public interest; and

(4) release of the information will not infringe on any protected rights or liberties of the subject.

Sec. 39.52.340. Confidentiality.

(a) Except as provided in AS 39.52.335, before the initiation of formal proceedings under AS 39.52.350, the complaint and all other documents and information regarding an investigation conducted under this chapter or obtained by the attorney general during the investigation are confidential and not subject to inspection by the public. In the case of a complaint concerning the governor, lieutenant governor, or attorney general, all meetings of the personnel board concerning the complaint and investigation before the determination of probable cause are closed to the public. If, in the course of an investigation or probable cause determination, the attorney general finds evidence of probable criminal activity, the attorney general shall transmit a statement and factual findings limited to that activity to the appropriate law enforcement agency. If the attorney general finds evidence of a probable violation of AS 15.13, the attorney general shall transmit a statement to that effect and factual findings limited to the probable violation to the Alaska Public Offices Commission. The attorney general and all persons contacted during the course of an investigation shall maintain confidentiality regarding the existence of the investigation.

(b) It is not a violation of this section for a person to contact an attorney or to participate in a criminal investigation.

(c) The subject of the complaint may, in writing, waive the confidentiality protection of this section.

Sec. 39.52.350. Probable cause for hearing.

(a) If the attorney general determines that there is probable cause to believe that a knowing violation of this chapter or a violation that cannot be corrected under AS 39.52.330 has occurred, or that the subject of a complaint failed to comply with a recommendation for corrective or preventive action, the attorney general shall initiate formal proceedings by serving a copy of an accusation upon the subject of the accusation. The accusation shall specifically set out the alleged violation. After service, the accusation is a public document open to inspection. Except as provided in AS 39.52.370 (c), all subsequent proceedings are open to the public.

(b) The subject of the accusation shall file an answer with the attorney general within 20 days after service of the accusation, or at a later time specified by the attorney general. If the subject of the accusation fails to timely answer, the allegations are considered admitted.

(c) If the subject of the accusation denies that a violation of this chapter has occurred, the attorney general shall refer the matter to the personnel board, which shall notify the chief administrative law judge (AS 44.64.010), who shall appoint an administrative law judge to serve as a hearing officer to conduct a hearing.

(d) If the subject of the accusation admits a violation of this chapter, the attorney general shall refer the matter to the personnel board to impose penalties under AS 39.52.410, 39.52.440, and 39.52.450, as appropriate.

Sec. 39.52.360. Hearings.

(a) The hearing officer may convene a prehearing conference to set a time and place for the hearing, and for stipulation as to matters of fact and to simplify issues, identify and schedule prehearing matters, and resolve other similar matters before the hearing.

(b) The hearing officer may administer oaths, hold hearings, and take testimony. Upon application by a party to the hearing, the hearing officer may issue subpoenas under AS 39.52.380 .

(c) The attorney general shall present the charges before the hearing officer. At a hearing, the attorney general has the burden of demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that the subject of the accusation has, by act or omission, violated this chapter.

(d) The parties to a hearing are the attorney general and the subject of the accusation. The subject of an accusation may be represented by counsel. Each party has an opportunity to be heard and cross-examine witnesses, who shall testify under oath.

(e) The Administrative Procedure Act does not apply to hearings under this section, except as provided in AS 39.52.380 .

(f) Technical rules of evidence do not apply, but the hearing officer's findings must be based upon reliable and relevant evidence. All testimony and other evidence taken at the hearing must be recorded and the evidence maintained. Copies of transcripts of the hearing record are available to the subject of the accusation at the subject's expense; however, upon request, a copy of the recording of the hearing must be furnished without charge to the subject of the accusation.

(g) At the conclusion of the formal hearing, the hearing officer may direct either or both parties to submit proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation to be filed within 10 days after the conclusion of the hearing.

(h) Within 30 days after the conclusion of a formal hearing, the hearing officer shall serve a written report on the personnel board and the parties, unless the personnel board grants an extension of time. The report must contain the officer's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation. The hearing officer shall submit the record to the personnel board.

Sec. 39.52.370. Personnel board action.

(a) Within 10 days after receipt of the hearing officer's report, either party may protest the officer's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation, and, if a protest is filed, shall serve a copy on the other party. Oral argument before the personnel board must be provided only if requested by either party. The board chair shall set the deadline for submission of requests for oral argument, and set the dates for submission of briefs and oral argument before the board, if requested.

(b) The board may issue subpoenas under AS 39.52.380, and may, for good cause shown, augment the hearing record, in whole or in part, or hold a hearing de novo.

(c) The personnel board shall review each report submitted by a hearing officer and shall either adopt or amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation of the officer. Deliberations of the personnel board must be conducted in sessions not open to the public.

(d) If the personnel board determines that a violation occurred, it may impose the penalties in AS 39.52.410, 39.52.440, and 39.52.450, as appropriate. If the board determines that no violation occurred, the board shall issue a written order of dismissal.

(e) The personnel board secretary shall promptly notify the parties and the public officer's designated supervisor of the board's action.

(f) The subject of the accusation may appeal the personnel board's decision by filing an appeal in the superior court as provided in the Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Sec. 39.52.380. Subpoenas.

(a) As provided in AS 39.52.310 (g), 39.52.360(b), and 39.52.370(b), the attorney general, independent counsel retained under AS 39.52.310 (c), a hearing officer, the subject of an accusation, and the personnel board may summon witnesses and require the production of records, books, and papers by the issuance of subpoenas.

(b) Subpoenas must be served in the manner prescribed by AS 44.62.430 and Rule 45 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure. Failure or refusal to obey a subpoena issued under this chapter is punishable as contempt in the manner provided by law and court rule. The superior court may compel obedience to the subpoena in the same manner as prescribed for obedience to a subpoena issued by the court.

Sec. 39.52.390. Service.

Service of an accusation must be accomplished in accordance with Rule 4 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure. Service of any other pleading, motion, or other document must be accomplished in accordance with Rule 5 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure.

Article 05. ENFORCEMENT; REMEDIES

Sec. 39.52.410. Violations; penalties for misconduct.

(a) If the personnel board determines that a public employee has violated this chapter, it

(1) shall order the employee to stop engaging in any official action related to the violation;

(2) may order divestiture, establishment of a blind trust, restitution, or forfeiture; and

(3) may recommend that the employee's agency take disciplinary action, including dismissal.

(b) If the personnel board determines that a nonsalaried member of a board or commission has violated this chapter, it (1) shall order the member to refrain from voting, deliberating, or participating in the matter; (2) may order restitution; and (3) may recommend to the appropriate appointing authority that the member be removed from the board or commission. A violation of this chapter is grounds for removal of a board or commission member for cause. If the personnel board recommends that a board or commission member be removed from office, the appointing authority shall immediately act to remove the member from office.

(c) If the personnel board determines that a former public officer has violated this chapter, it shall

(1) issue a public statement of its findings, conclusions, and recommendation; and

(2) request the attorney general to exercise all legal and equitable remedies available to the state to seek whatever relief is appropriate.

(d) If the personnel board finds a violation of this chapter by a public officer removable from office only by impeachment, it shall file a report with the president of the Senate, with its finding. The report must contain a statement of the facts alleged to constitute the violation.

Sec. 39.52.420. Disciplinary action for violation.

(a) In addition to any other cause an agency may have to discipline a public employee, an agency may reprimand, demote, suspend, discharge, or otherwise subject an employee to agency disciplinary action commensurate with the violations of this chapter. This section does not prohibit the review of a disciplinary action in the manner prescribed by an applicable collective bargaining agreement or personnel statute or rule.

(b) An agency may initiate appropriate disciplinary action in the absence of an accusation under this chapter or during the pendency of a hearing or personnel board action.

Sec. 39.52.430. Actions voidable.

(a) In addition to any other penalty provided by law, a state grant, contract, or lease entered into in violation of this chapter is voidable by the state. In a determination under this section of whether to void a grant, contract, or lease, the interests of third parties who could be damaged may be taken into account. The attorney general shall give notice of intent to void a state grant, contract, or lease under this section no later than 30 days after the personnel board's determination of a violation under this chapter.

(b) In addition to any other penalty provided for by law, the state may require a state loan received in violation of this chapter to become immediately payable.

(c) Any state action taken in violation of this chapter is voidable, except that the interests of third parties and the nature of the violation may be taken into account. The attorney general may pursue any other available legal and equitable remedies.

(d) The attorney general may recover any fee, compensation, gift, or benefit received by a person as a result of a violation of this chapter by a current or former public officer. Action to recover under this subsection must be brought within two years after discovery of the violation.

Sec. 39.52.440. Civil penalties.

The personnel board may impose on a current or former public officer civil penalties not to exceed $5,000 for a violation of this chapter. A penalty imposed under this section is in addition to and not instead of any other penalty that may be imposed according to law.

Sec. 39.52.450. Payment of twice the financial benefit.

The personnel board may, in addition to the civil penalties described in this chapter, require a current or former public officer who has financially benefited a person in violation of this chapter to pay to the state up to twice the amount that the person realized from the violation.

Sec. 39.52.460. Criminal sanctions additional.

To the extent that violations under this chapter are punishable in a criminal action, that sanction is in addition to the civil remedies set out in this chapter.

MEMORANDUM April 2, 2010

SUBJECT: Nominations to the state personnel board (Amendment "S.1" for CSHB 348(JUD)) (Work Order No. 26-LS1360\S.1)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Attn: Mike Sica

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the amendment you requested.

As I expressed in a phone conversation yesterday with Mike Sica, amendment S.1. exacerbates existing separation of powers issues raised by CSHB 348(JUD).[1]

As presently drafted, the bill provides that the governor may make an appointment to the state personnel board only from a list of at least three nominees selected by the chief justice, subject to the governor's right to request additional nominations. The constraint placed on the governor's ability to select a nominee only from a list of individuals selected by the chief justice is "subject to the governor's right to request additional nominations."

The requirement that nominees be selected by the chief justice in the existing bill can reasonably be interpreted as analogous to a "qualification" for appointment, because the governor may request, in theory, an infinite number of additional nominees from the chief justice. The amendment, which permits the chief justice to refuse to select and submit further nominees, changes the balance of power between the judicial and executive branches of government, in determining who is appointed to the board.[2]

[1] The separation of powers issues are identified in a February 8, 2010 memorandum to your office (10-062.ljw).

[2] The Department of Law, which has generally taken a position very protective of the governor's prerogatives, has asserted that the legislature may not restrict the governor's appointment powers, such as by requiring the governor to select from a list of names provided by particular groups. The Department of Law has repeatedly argued that such limitations on the governor's appointment power are unconstitutional infringements upon the governor's authority. Letter to Walter J. Hickel, Governor, from Charles E. Cole, Attorney General, June 11, 1991 (file no. 883-91-0071); 1981 Inf. Alaska Atty. Gen. Op.

If the chief justice refuses to select nominees beyond those on the justice's original list, a reasonable question is created as to whether it is the chief justice or the governor who has done more to determine who may be appointed (if the governor is to appoint anyone to fill the position on the board). The amendment shifts the weight of authority in determining who may be appointed to the board further toward the chief justice than what is currently provided by CSHB 348(JUD).

As a secondary issue, what happens if the chief justice elects not to select additional nominees? This eventuality should be addressed.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

"An Act relating to the membership of the state personnel board."

Please schedule a hearing for CSHB 348(JUD) in the Senate Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. Attached is the most recent version of the bill (26-LS1360\S).

Also included in the bill packet: a sponsor statement, a sectional analysis, and other background material.

Thank you for considering my request for a hearing on CSHB 348(JUD), which I believe will broaden representation on the Personnel Board so it can operate, or at the very least, appear to operate with greater independence when addressing complaints against Executive Branch officials.

SPONSOR STATEMENT AND BILL ANALYSIS
HB 355 – CRIMINAL FINES FOR ORGANIZATIONS

"An Act relating to criminal fines for organizations."

HB 355 does two things. First, it closes a loophole in existing law. An organization may not be imprisoned for its criminal acts; only a fine may be levied as punishment. Under current law, the court may impose the greater of (1) the maximum fines set out in the schedule under AS 12.55.035(c)(1), (2) three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant, or (3) three times the pecuniary damage or loss caused by the defendant to another. Under the particular factual situations of some crimes, the treble penalties are not applicable. One instance would be if a corporation bribes legislators to stop a piece of legislation (such as tax legislation), but the legislation passes anyway. In this case, there is neither a loss to the government nor a gain to the corporation. HB 355 would allow the court to issue fines in the amount of three times the pecuniary gain sought by the defendant or three times the pecuniary damage or loss to another sought by the defendant. These would provide alternatives to statutorily set fines.

Second, HB 355 increases the maximum fines that may be levied against a criminal organization under AS 12.55.035(c)(1). These fines are raised not only to keep up with inflation, but also because organizations potentially stand to gain extraordinary profits through criminal activity, and the increased fines will provide a meaningful deterrent against criminal activity by organizations.

If you have any questions about HB 355, please feel free to call my Legislative Aide, Gretchen Staft, at (907) 465-4940.

Memorandum

TO: Representative Max F. Gruenberg
FROM: Roger Withington, Legislative Analyst
RE: Adjusting the Fines for Organizations Provisions of Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D) for Inflation
LRS Report 10.206

You asked about the fines delineated in Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D). Specifically, you asked for us for a brief history of these provisions. You also asked us to adjust the fines for inflation from the date the fines became law. We summarize these amendments and adjustments in Table 1.

Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c) first became law by Section 12 Chapter 166 SLA 1978 and read as follows:

> (c) Upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of
> (1) $100,000; or
> (2) an amount which is three times the pecuniary gain realized by the defendant as a result of the offense.

Using Consumer Price Index Information (CPI) from the Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development, the fine stated in AS 12.55.035(c)(1), adjusted for inflation from 1978 through 2009, would be approximately $273,140.

Section 1 Chapter 142 SLA 1990 amended Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1) and created subsections A through D. This Session Law stated the following:

> (c) Upon conviction of an offense, a defendant that is an organization may be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding the greater of
> (1) an amount that is
> (A) $500,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;
> (B) $200,000 for a class A misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;
> (C) $25,000 for a class B misdemeanor offense that does not result in death;
> (D) $10,000 for a violation;

Again, adjusting these amounts from 1990 using Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development CIP information, today subsection A would be approximately $808,364; subsection B $323,346; subsection C $40,418; and subsection D $16,167.28.

Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1) was amended again by Section 2 Chapter 131 SLA 2002. This Session Law amended AS 12.55.035(c)(1)(A) to read:

> (A) $1,000,000 for a felony offense or for a misdemeanor offense that results in death;

Adjusting this amount from 2002, using Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development CIP information, subsection A would be approximately $1,212,035 today.

Table 1: Fines for Organizations Provisions of Alaska Statute 12.55.035(c)(1)(A through D), and Adjustments to These Fines to Account for Inflation

Section 12 Chapter 166 SLA 1978			Section 1 Chapter 142 SLA 1990			Section 2 Chapter 131 SLA 2002

RE: Fines for Organizations Convicted of Criminal Offenses
LRS Report 10.204

You asked about fines for organizations convicted of criminal offenses. You were particularly interested in knowing such fines at the federal level and in a few other states.

The table on the following page presents maximum fines for organizations convicted of generalized levels of criminal offenses. As you will see, Delaware and Alaska appear to have the highest fines among states in this small sample. Unlike Alaska, however, neither Delaware nor Maine cap a fine for an offense resulting in death.

We attach the federal guidelines for sentencing of organization. As you will note, the sentencing scheme for organizations other than those deemed to exist for criminal purposes is far more complex than that in the states we identified. As such, we were unable to place federal fines within our matrix. We note, however, that the base for determining fines for organizations runs from the greatest of (1) $5,000 to $72,500,000 in fines, or (2) the amount of the pecuniary gain to the organization, or (3) the amount of the pecuniary loss caused by the organization, to the extent the loss was caused intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly.[1]

We hope this information is helpful. Please let us know if you have questions or need additional information.

*175 POLICING THE CORPORATE CITIZEN: ARGUMENTS FOR PROSECUTING ORGANIZATIONS

Abstract

Alaska's corporate criminal liability statute exposes organizations to criminal liability for the actions of their agents, as long as agents intended the organization to benefit from their actions. Organizations cannot disclaim liability through codes of conduct or corporate policies, and their liability extends beyond any merger, consolidation, or dissolution. This Article argues that criminally prosecuting an organization is advantageous because it allows greater criminal fines and carries collateral consequences. In addition, criminally prosecuting an organization may be easier than criminally prosecuting an individual because Fifth Amendment privileges and hearsay obstacles do not apply. Corporations accrue the knowledge of their agents, so proving specific intent may also be less difficult. Finally, this Article describes considerations that should be weighed when deciding whether to prosecute a particular organization. The author argues that Alaska's corporate criminal liability statute is a powerful tool that, where appropriate, should be used more often.

Conclusion 210

Introduction

When charging cases, Alaska prosecutors too often overlook crucial potential defendants: the organizations [FN1]--corporations, companies, partnerships, and other entities--on whose behalf individual wrongdoers act. Alaska law casts a wide net for liability by making organizations liable for the criminal conduct of their agents, [FN2] and by authorizing larger criminal fines against convicted organizations than *177 against convicted individuals. [FN3] These considerations beg the obvious question: why are organizations not investigated and prosecuted more frequently? The most likely explanation is that few prosecutors are aware of how far-reaching an organization's criminal liability extends. In addition, correctly or incorrectly, some prosecutors likely view the prosecution of an organization as an unwanted hassle--the prosecution would be different than their typical cases and may well involve high-paid corporate counsel unfamiliar with criminal practice. [FN4] Finally, some prosecutors might mistakenly believe that organizational prosecutions punish innocent shareholders rather than actual wrongdoers. [FN5] Thus, it has not been common practice in state prosecutor offices to charge organizations. [FN6]

The Author hopes this Article will change these views and encourage prosecutors to examine their caseloads for potential organizational defendants. There are significant benefits to be gained by charging organizations rather than individuals: courts will likely impose larger fines against organizations, prosecution of an organization may effect change within the organization, and negative publicity and other collateral consequences will pressure the organization to settle. Furthermore, should the case go to trial, the defense will not be able to protect organizations' records or utilize certain other evidentiary tools to hamstring the prosecution's presentation of evidence.

The aftermath of the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill provides a good illustration of why prosecuting an organization is often superior to prosecuting an individual wrongdoer. The 1989 grounding of the tanker Exxon Valdez spilled approximately eleven million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound. [FN7] Following the grounding, the State of Alaska prosecuted Joseph Hazelwood, the captain of the ill-fated vessel. [FN8] Hazelwood was convicted by a jury of negligent discharge of oil [FN9] but *178 received only a conditionally suspended sentence. [FN10] Conversely, the United States prosecuted Exxon, ultimately resulting in a negotiated plea agreement and a combined criminal fine of one hundred million dollars. [FN11] The latter was a better use of prosecutorial resources and obtained a better result. [FN12]

It is particularly common for organizations to be defendants in several niche areas of Alaska criminal law. For example, Title 4 criminalizes various aspects of alcohol-related behavior. [FN13] Bush pilots who knowingly or negligently allow passengers to carry alcohol aboard their flights can expose their air carrier to criminal liability. [FN14] Titles 8 and 16 criminalize violations of the state's hunting and fishing laws and regulations. [FN15] Fishing guides who assist their clients by knowingly or negligently violating state fishing regulations expose their employers, such as lodges or guiding outfits, to criminal liability. [FN16]

These principles also apply to the more "traditional" crimes defined in Title 11 of the Alaska Criminal Code. One well-publicized example of such a prosecution was that of Whitewater Engineering Corporation. [FN17] Gary Stone, a Whitewater employee, was killed in an *179 avalanche at a Whitewater jobsite near Cordova. [FN18] Prosecutors charged the corporation and its president, Thom A. Fischer, with manslaughter because key employees failed to heed avalanche warnings and failed to observe necessary safety precautions. [FN19] Although charges against Fischer were ultimately dismissed, the company pled no contest to a charge of criminally negligent homicide. [FN20]

This Article examines criminal liability of organizations under Alaska law. Part I begins with the historical development of organizational criminal liability in the United States and Alaska. Part II covers the current contours of organizational criminal liability, as codified in the Alaska Statutes and interpreted by Alaska courts. Part III discusses the various consequences typically flowing from a conviction. Additionally, Part IV explores practical considerations for prosecutors, and Part V explores charging considerations for prosecutors who decide to file charges against an organization. Within these sections and in the Conclusion, this Article explains why it is advantageous to prosecute organizations as opposed to solely prosecuting the individual wrongdoers.

I. Historical Underpinnings

Courts were the first to recognize corporations as legal entities capable of suing and being sued. [FN21] Early decisions established that corporations could be sued in tort. In Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore R.R. Co. v. Quigley, [FN22] the United States Supreme Court explained in detail the policy considerations that mandated this result. [FN23] Quigley sued the railroad for libel due to the conduct of one of its 180 employees. The company argued that a corporation could only act within the limits of its charter and therefore could not be held liable for any acts of its agents that exceeded those limits. The Court rejected this argument because it would allow corporations to do business and interact with the public while escaping liability when corporate agents, conducting corporate business, injure members of the public. [FN24] By the latter part of the nineteenth century, corporate tort liability was no longer in dispute and lawsuits against corporations were commonplace. [FN25] The law imputed tortious intent from the agent to the corporation, making the corporation liable for actual damages. The courts would not, however, impute the intent necessary to award punitive damages for any injuries absent a showing of wrongdoing by the corporation itself. [FN26]

Corporate criminal liability grew from these civil liability roots. Courts slowly acknowledged that corporations could be criminally liable for the conduct of their agents. For example, in Commonwealth v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge, [FN27] the Massachusetts Supreme Court upheld the indictment of a corporation for a public nuisance. [FN28] In 1899, the same court affirmed that corporations could be guilty of criminal contempt in Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Commonwealth. [FN29] Regarding corporate criminal liability, the court stated:

> 181 We think that a corporation may be liable criminally for certain offenses, of which specific intent may be a necessary element. There is no more difficulty in imputing to a corporation specific intent in criminal proceedings than in civil. A corporation cannot be arrested and imprisoned in either civil or criminal proceedings; but its property may be taken, either as compensation for a private wrong or as punishment for a public wrong. [FN30]

The United States Supreme Court affirmed the general principle of corporate criminal liability in New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. v. United States, [FN31] in which it upheld convictions of the railroad corporation for paying illegal rebates. [FN32] The Court applied the principles governing civil liability and held that the acts of agents are imputed to their employers, who may be penalized when the employees act within the scope of their employment. [FN33] Without expressly mentioning the legal concept of respondeat superior, the Court was using it to impute criminal liability to the corporation from the acts of its agents. Numerous Ninth Circuit cases have endorsed this principle. [FN34]

Courts in Alaska slowly recognized organizational criminal liability. The Alaska federal district court first addressed corporate criminal liability in United States v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n. [FN35] There, the court considered the defendant corporation's indictment for fishing violations. The corporation took the position that it could not be indicted for a felony because corporations cannot be imprisoned, a punishment for a felony. [FN36] The court disagreed, pointing out that a corporation may be fined just like an individual, [FN37] that such a penalty may be levied for 182 acts which would result in imprisonment for individuals, [FN38] and that there was no reason a corporation should escape such punishment. [FN39] Essentially, the district court came to the same conclusion that the Massachusetts Supreme Court reached fifty years earlier in Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge [FN40]-- criminal conduct and criminal intent can be imputed to an organization from its agents. [FN41]

The Alaska legislature codified organizational criminal liability in 1978 when it revised the state criminal code according to the recommendations of the Alaska Criminal Code Revision Commission. [FN42] The first version of section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes proposed by the Commission was very limited. [FN43] The Commission extended criminal liability only to corporations and only in instances when the alleged offense was a violation, a misdemeanor, or otherwise defined so as to clearly indicate a legislative intent to impose criminal liability on a corporation. [FN44] The statute also applied to a company if the conduct was "engaged in, authorized, solicited, requested, commanded or knowingly tolerated by" the corporation's board of directors or a "high managerial agent." [FN45]

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The Commission greatly expanded the scope of the preliminary draft in the course of its deliberations. Significantly, the Commission extended criminal liability to "organizations," [FN46] and the definition of the 183 term was nearly identical to the current definition of the term. [FN47] The Commission also changed the requirements for imposing liability under the first subparagraph to the disjunctive, thus imposing liability if the act was committed by the employee in the scope of his employment or to benefit the organization. [FN48] The legislature ultimately rejected this construction, however, and required that the act be committed both in the scope of the employment and to benefit the organization. The version of the statute ultimately passed by the legislature mirrors the current version of the statute. [FN49]

II. Current Contours of Organizational Liability

An organization, once constituted, has a legal identity distinct from its owners, officers and directors. [FN50] It is, by statute, an artificial, legal "person." [FN51] As such, an organization may commit crimes and may be charged as a defendant in criminal cases. [FN52] The criminal liability of organizations is defined in section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes:

> (a) Except as otherwise expressly provided, an organization is legally accountable for conduct constituting an offense if the conduct
> (1) is the conduct of its agent, and
> (A) within the scope of the agent's employment and in behalf of the organization; or
> (B) is solicited, subsequently ratified, or subsequently adopted by the organization; or
> (2) consists of an omission to discharge a specific duty of affirmative performance imposed on organizations by law.
> 184 (b) In this section "agent" means a director, officer, or employee of an organization or any other person who is authorized to act in behalf of the organization.

The Alaska Court of Appeals described the essence of this liability in State v. ABC Towing. [FN53] The decision contrasts the theories of organizational criminal liability, set forth in section 11.16.130 of the Alaska Statutes, with the better known theories of accomplice criminal liability, set forth in section 11.16.110 of the Alaska Statutes. [FN54] In drawing this comparison, the court of appeals noted organizations face broader criminal liability than individuals because organizations are liable for conduct of their agents that owners, members, officers or directors do not know about until after the fact. [FN55]

The kinds of entities subject to such liability are also defined by statute: "'[O]rganization' means a legal entity, including a corporation, company, association, firm, partnership, joint stock company, foundation, institution, government, society, union, club, church, or any other group of persons organized for any purpose." [FN56] As such, organizations are broadly exposed to criminal liability for the acts of their agents. This poses an obvious problem for organizations, whose main purpose is to pool resources, maximize profit potential, and limit the liability of those individuals involved. [FN57] At cross purposes with this last principle, Alaska law imposes criminal liability in cases where individual conduct, when appropriately construed as corporate conduct, runs afoul of state criminal law.

Many critics question whether organizations should be prosecuted at all and argue that such prosecutions punish innocent shareholders rather than the actual wrongdoer. The Ninth Circuit provided a succinct rebuttal to that suggestion in United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp:

> Legal commentators have argued forcefully that it is inappropriate and ineffective to impose criminal liability upon 185 a corporation, as distinguished from the human agents who actually perform the unlawful acts . . . particularly if the acts of the agents are unauthorized. . . . But it is the legislative judgment that controls, and "the great mass of legislation calling for corporate criminal liability suggests a widespread belief on the part of legislators that such liability is necessary to effectuate a regulatory policy." [FN58]

The crux of the argument is that organizational criminal liability prompts organizations to more rigorously police their agents. Regardless of whether this is true, the existence of corporate and, more generally, organizational criminal liability is beyond debate. [FN59]

A. Alaska Jurisprudence

Most examples of organizational criminal liability in Alaska occur under section 11.16.130(a)(1)(A) of the Alaska Statutes--conduct of an agent that is done in the scope of the agent's employment and on behalf of the organization. [FN60]

The Alaska appellate courts have discussed the substance of organizational criminal liability only twice. [FN61] In State v. ABC Towing, [FN62] the court of appeals was called on to determine whether a towing company, formed as a sole proprietorship, could be prosecuted for violating a state pollution law, based on an employee's illegal discharge of gasoline. The issue for the court was whether a sole proprietorship is an "organization" as defined in section 11.81.900 of the Alaska Statutes. [FN63] The court held that it was not, because a sole proprietorship is the mere alter ego of the sole proprietor. [FN64] In other words, there is no legal 186 distinction between the sole proprietor and the proprietorship; to prosecute the proprietorship, the state must charge the proprietor. [FN65]

The court of appeals provided more recent guidance in State v. Greenpeace, Inc. [FN66] The State prosecuted and convicted Greenpeace, Inc. for bringing a Greenpeace ship, the M/V Arctic Sunrise, into state waters without a state-approved oil spill contingency plan or a certificate of financial responsibility. [FN67] Following the jury's guilty verdicts against the corporation, the district court granted a defense motion for acquittal and set the convictions aside. [FN68] The court of appeals affirmed the district court based on findings that Greenpeace, Inc., a United States corporation, was not in charge of the ship and did not control its operators. [FN69] According to the court, the prosecution charged the wrong parties. [FN70] The case involved Stichting Phoenix, [FN71] a Dutch foundation that owned the Arctic Sunrise, and Stichting Marine Services (SMS), a second Dutch foundation that operated it. [FN72] SMS chartered the ship to Greenpeace International, a third Dutch entity, that owns the name "Greenpeace." [FN73] Greenpeace International licenses this name to independent environmental organizations around the world including Greenpeace, Inc. in the United States. [FN74] In 2004, Greenpeace International agreed to let Greenpeace, Inc. use the Arctic Sunrise for an anti-logging campaign. [FN75] SMS supplied the crew and was also responsible for making sure the ship complied with all local regulatory requirements. [FN76] The prosecution argued that SMS and the Arctic Sunrise 187 captain were agents of Greenpeace, Inc. and, therefore, Greenpeace, Inc. was liable for the criminal conduct. [FN77] The court of appeals disagreed:

> A person or organization does not qualify as the authorized agent of a principal unless the principal controls or has the right to control the purported agent. The State offered no evidence that Greenpeace, Inc., controlled how (or if) SMS or [the captain] operated the Arctic Sunrise or complied with Alaska's requirements for nontank vessels. [FN78]

The prosecution also argued that Greenpeace, Inc. ratified or adopted the criminal conduct of SMS and the Arctic Sunrise and was therefore liable for their conduct. [FN79] Again, the court of appeals disagreed. The court held that adoption or ratification requires the principal's "awareness of the misconduct and some action to ratify or adopt the misconduct." [FN80] It found that the prosecution had not produced any evidence Greenpeace, Inc. knew of the illegal conduct or took any actions to ratify or adopt that conduct. [FN81]

Though the court does not explicitly say, its decision suggests that SMS, or arguably Greenpeace International, was the proper defendant. [FN82] This holding nevertheless begs the question of whether Alaska could effectively prosecute either of these foreign entities in state court. Service of process on these entities would be problematic, [FN83] and even if service were achieved, the entities would likely argue that the Alaska state 188 courts lack personal jurisdiction over them. [FN84] Finally, it is difficult to imagine how the state could effectively enforce any sentence ultimately imposed by its courts.

Collectively, ABC Towing and Greenpeace, Inc. confirm the existence of organizational criminal liability under state law. These decisions do little, however, to define the contours and limitations of that liability and, in fact, highlight problems with the existing laws. ABC Towing carves out an exemption for sole proprietorships. [FN85] Greenpeace is also problematic in that it illustrates the ease with which organizations might compartmentalize their operations or duplicate themselves and thereby thwart criminal prosecution. [FN86] These are shortcomings legislators need to address if the prosecution of organizations is to be effectively and consistently utilized.

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Given the paucity of pertinent Alaska jurisprudence regarding organizational criminal liability, Alaska courts would likely rely on relevant federal authority. [FN87] Federal cases frequently acknowledge that a 189 corporation can act only through its officers, agents, and employees. [FN88] Courts therefore hold that a corporation may be liable for the acts of its officers, employees, and other agents even though the questioned act may be illegal, contrary to specific company policy, or not expressly authorized beforehand by the corporation. [FN89]

B. Existence of Organization Policies Prohibiting the Criminal Conduct and the Requisite Quantum of Benefit

Federal cases hold that an organization may be found guilty of a criminal offense as long as the employee was motivated, at least in part, to benefit the organization. [FN90] It follows that organizations often attempt to absolve themselves of liability by relying on corporate policies that preclude criminal conduct. These attempts have generally been unsuccessful. The Ninth Circuit addressed such an effort in the context of Sherman Act prosecutions. [FN91] In Hilton Hotels Corp., [FN92] charges were premised on proof that the hotel's purchasing agent threatened a supplier with the loss of the hotel's business unless the supplier paid an assessment to a trade association of which the hotel was a member. [FN93] Hotel personnel testified that company policy required purchasing 190 supplies solely on the basis of price, quality, and service, and they had specifically instructed the purchasing agent not to boycott suppliers. [FN94] The Ninth Circuit held that the hotel could not insulate itself from criminal liability by adopting general instructions not to participate in a boycott if it did not take sufficient actions to enforce those instructions. [FN95] The fact remained that the hotel authorized a purchasing agent to act on its behalf and the agent exercised complete authority as to those responsibilities and, pursuant to that authority, added the hotel's buying power to the force of the boycott. [FN96] Other circuits have taken a similar position when employees act contrary to company policy. [FN97]

An important corollary is that courts generally permit defendants to admit evidence of corporate policies or instructions that forbid the conduct at issue to support an argument that an agent was acting outside the scope of employment or to the principal's detriment. The Ninth Circuit summarized this view:

> [A] corporation may be liable for acts of its employees done contrary to express instructions and policies, but that the 191 existence of such instructions and policies may be considered in determining whether the employee in fact acted to benefit the corporation. Merely stating or publishing such instructions and policies without diligently enforcing them is not enough to place the acts of an employee who violates them outside the scope of his employment. It is a question of fact whether measures taken to enforce corporate policy in this area will adequately insulate the corporation against such acts . . . [FN98]

Other courts have reached similar rulings. [FN99]

It is not necessary that the organization actually accrue a benefit from the agent's actions for criminal liability to attach. In Beusch, [FN100] the Ninth Circuit rejected a corporation's argument that it could not be liable if the criminal conduct did not in fact benefit the corporation. [FN101] The Fourth Circuit's decision in United States v. Automated Medical Laboratories, Inc. [FN102] is frequently cited on this point--the court affirmed a jury's conviction of American Medical Laboratories for falsifying logbooks and records required to be maintained by the Federal Drug Administration. [FN103] In Automated Medical Laboratories, the court held that benefit was an evidential fact, stating:

> [W]hether the agent's actions ultimately redounded to the benefit of the corporation is less significant than whether the agent acted with the intent to benefit the corporation. The basic purpose of requiring that an agent have acted with the intent to benefit the corporation, however, is to insulate the corporation from criminal liability for actions of its agents which be inimical to the interests of the corporation or which may have been undertaken solely to advance the interests of that agent or of a party other than the corporation. [FN104]192 These cases collectively illustrate that whether the agent's conduct benefits the organization is a question of fact for the jury. The cases also demonstrate that appellate courts will let convictions stand so long as there is some evidence that the organization gained some benefit. In comparison, criminal conduct by an agent falling outside the scope of employment will not be imputed to the organization > where the conduct solely benefits the agent. Such was the case in Standard Oil Co. of Texas v. United States, [FN105] in which the Fifth Circuit reversed convictions against two corporate defendants because the criminal acts by the employees, while benefiting themselves, actually injured the corporation. [FN106]

Alaska cases contemplating the application of respondeat superior liability in the context of tort claims have echoed the holding of Standard Oil. Notable among these are Taranto v. North Slope Borough, [FN107] Northern Fabrication Co., Inc. v. Arco, Inc., [FN108] and Ondrusek v. Murphy. [FN109] All three cases apply the Restatement (Second) of Agency section 228 criteria to determine whether an agent acted in the scope of his employment. Pursuant to section 228, conduct is only in the scope of employment if--among other requirements--it is done at least in part to serve the employer. Thus, in Northern Fabrication Co., Inc., the Alaska Supreme Court reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant corporations and held that the corporations could only negate the plaintiff's claim of vicarious liability for the theft of equipment by the defendants' employees if the corporations could prove they did not control the employees' actions and the employees acted solely in furtherance of their own personal motives. [FN110]

These cases demonstrate that an organization cannot insulate itself from liability with general policies or guidance that forbid the conduct at issue. However, an organization can use policies or guidance in an effort to convince a jury that the organization took sufficient action to prevent the wrongful conduct and should not be liable for the actions of an agent. Moreover, the organization will not be liable for conduct that an agent takes solely for his or her own benefit, or that is inimical to the organization's interests.

*193 C. Collective Corporate Knowledge

For a time, specific intent crimes that require proof of knowing or intentional conduct were difficult to apply against large or diverse organizations. Organizations tend to compartmentalize their operations and decision-making between different units or divisions. Therefore the requisite mens rea or conduct is often not present in any one individual, making imputing mens rea to the organization difficult. Many courts have resolved this problem through the collective corporate knowledge theory best described by the First Circuit in United States v. Bank of New England. [FN111]

> The acts of a corporation are, after all, simply the acts of all of its employees operating within the scope of their employment. The law on corporate criminal liability reflects this. . . . Similarly, the knowledge obtained by corporate employees acting within the scope of their employment is imputed to the corporation. Corporations compartmentalize knowledge, subdividing the elements of specific duties and operations into smaller components. The aggregate of those components constitutes the corporation's knowledge of a particular operation. It is irrelevant whether employees administering one component of an operation know the specific activities of employees administering another aspect of the operation . . . [FN112]

This line of reasoning enables prosecutors to impute the summed knowledge of various employees to the organization as a whole. [FN113]

*194 D. Effect of Merger, Consolidation, and Dissolution

Any liability imputed to an organization will generally survive the organization's merger, consolidation, or dissolution. The common law analogized the dissolution of an organization (either directly, or by merger or consolidation) to the death of a natural person, [FN114] meaning that dissolved, merged, or consolidated organizations could not be prosecuted. [FN115]

State statutes that continue the legal existence of these entities have eroded this common law principle. It is now generally true that organizations can be prosecuted (or sued civilly) following their dissolution, merger or consolidation. In Melrose Distillers, Inc. v. United States, [FN116] the United States Supreme Court discussed this abrogation of the common law. Prosecutors indicted three related corporations for violations of the Sherman Act. [FN117] While the indictments were pending, the corporations dissolved and became new divisions in a single, separate corporation. [FN118] The district court and court of appeals held that the dissolution of the original corporations did not abate the indictments. [FN119] The Supreme Court affirmed, looking to both Maryland and Delaware law and finding that the states had statutes "saving" claims against dissolved corporations. [FN120] The Court interpreted these statutes to include criminal charges under the Sherman Act. [FN121] Other courts have come to the same conclusion respecting corporations and partnerships organized under the laws of other states. [FN122]

*195 There is no analogous holding in Alaska case law. The closest case on point, Gossman v. Greatland Directional Drilling, Inc., [FN123] discusses the viability of civil claims brought against a dissolved corporation for negligent conduct during the corporation's existence. [FN124] Greatland dissolved in 1993 following the purchase of its assets by Anadrill, a distinct corporation. [FN125] In 1995, plaintiff Gossman was injured while working for Anadrill at one of the facilities Anadrill purchased from Greatland. [FN126] The injury was caused by a piece of equipment that had been negligently modified by a Greatland employee years before the corporation's dissolution. [FN127] In 1996, Gossman filed negligence claims against Greatland. [FN128] The Alaska Supreme Court looked to section 10.06.678 of the Alaska Statutes--a survival statute for claims against corporations--to determine whether any provision abrogated the common law abatement theory. [FN129] At the time (and currently), section 10.06.678, in pertinent part, provided:

> (a) A corporation that is dissolved voluntarily or involuntarily continues to exist for the purpose of winding up its affairs, defending actions against it, and enabling it to collect and discharge obligations, dispose of and convey its property, and collect and divide its assets. A dissolved corporation does not continue to exist for the purpose of continuing business except so far as necessary for winding up the business.
> (b) An action or proceeding to which a corporation is a party does not abate by the dissolution of the corporation or by reason of proceedings for winding up and dissolution of the *196 corporation. A corporation that is dissolved voluntarily or involuntarily may not commence a court action, except for a court action under [section] 10.06.675. [FN130]

The court reviewed the legislative history of section 10.06.678 and examined treatment of similar statutes in other jurisdictions before deciding claims do not abate against a dissolved corporation. [FN131]

Gossman does not address criminal prosecutions. However, the court's analysis in this civil case mirrors the analysis the Supreme Court used in Melrose Distillers in a criminal context. [FN132] There is no reason to believe an Alaska court would analyze the issue any differently in the context of a criminal case. Moreover, Alaska courts routinely rely on federal authorities when interpreting Alaska law that has no case precedent and is similar to federal laws. [FN133] A number of jurisdictions have adopted Melrose Distillers, [FN134] and Alaska courts have cited Melrose Distillers for other propositions. [FN135]

Further, as is discussed above, the Alaska Supreme Court in Gossman interpreted section 10.06.678 of the Alaska Statutes liberally to include claims that accrued after the dissolution of the corporation. [FN136] This suggests that the court would likewise liberally interpret the statute if faced with the question of whether the statute is inclusive of criminal charges. In short, dissolution, merger, and consolidation of a corporation should not foreclose the State's ability to prosecute the corporation, although it might make it more difficult to collect fines that are ultimately imposed. [FN137]

*197 Alaska has similar survival statutes that are applicable to other organizations. However, some of the survival statutes--such as those that apply to non-profit corporations [FN138] or limited liability companies [FN139]--carry time limitations which may affect potential claims or charges.

III. Prosecutorial Consequences

A. Penalty Provisions

Organizations are not subject to the same penalties as individual defendants. While organizations can only act through their agents, organizations cannot be punished in the same way as their agents. [FN140]

Special penalty provisions exist for organizations based on the severity of the underlying crime. [FN141] In assessing a fine under these provisions the sentencing court considers:

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

(1) measures taken by the organization to discipline an officer, director, employee, or agent of the organization;

(2) measures taken by the organization to prevent a recurrence of the offense;

(3) the organization's obligation to make restitution to a victim of the offense, and the extent to which imposition of a fine will impair the ability of the organization to make restitution; and

(4) the extent to which the organization will pass on to consumers the expense of the fine. [FN142]*198 These considerations are in addition to statutory and common law factors Alaska courts consider in deciding any criminal sentence. [FN143] Generally, it is not difficult to frame these factors in a way to justify substantial fines under any of the penalty matrices available for use against organizations. If the organization is large, a substantial fine would be justified so that it has an appreciable penalty or deterrent impact on the organization's operations. The fine would likewise need to be large to cause other similarly situated organizations to take notice and action to ensure they do not commit similar errors.

Consider two examples. First, if a fishing lodge allows its clients to commit hunting and fishing violations to ensure they catch a lot of fish and have a good time, a small fine would not act as a sufficient deterrent. Because these lodges often have significant revenues, fines at the top of the penalty range set forth in section 12.55.035(c) of the Alaska Statutes would be necessary and justified. These are common sense arguments that are likely to have traction with the sentencing court. Second, imagine a service station operating as an LLC that knowingly functions with leaking underground fuel tanks. The situation comes to light when diesel range organics are discovered in a nearby creek. Investigation traces the fuel back to the service station and additional investigation produces evidence that the manager had been aware of the leak for several months. The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) hires a private environmental services firm to design and implement a clean-up and remediation plan for the polluted land and water and to monitor the water quality of the creek for five years. The total cost for these services exceeds a million dollars. Under section 12.55.035(c)(3) of the Alaska Statutes, the potential fine against the LLC could exceed three million dollars. This fine could be in addition to the restitution owed to the state for the cost of the clean-up and remediation work itself. Admittedly, the sentencing court, in imposing the fine, would have to consider how section 12.55.035(e)(3) of the Alaska Statutes would affect the company's ability to pay restitution to the DEC. However, if the company is large enough, it is easy to picture the court imposing the full fine. Penalties of this magnitude can *199 provide a strong incentive for organizations to resolve potential criminal liability quickly. [FN144]

Because criminal conduct exposes the organization to potentially substantial criminal penalties and negative publicity, an organization will often terminate or discipline the responsible employees, cooperate with investigating agencies, and may hire consultants for the design of new protocols to avoid similar mistakes in the future. These are all constructive steps moving forward from the misconduct and are factors a sentencing court is to consider in assessing a fine against an organization pursuant to section 12.55.035(e) of the Alaska Statutes.

B. Collateral Consequences

Collateral consequences triggered by a conviction will also be a powerful force shaping the course of many prosecutions. Organizations are generally required to report all pending liabilities in their annual financial statements. This typically includes pending criminal cases as well as any completed cases for which the organization is on probation. [FN145] Disclosure of a pending criminal case or conviction can be damaging to an organization's public image or reputation. The publicity from prosecution would likely tarnish the image of a company and undo any marketing efforts that the company previously undertook. Further, the prosecution would likely damage the company's image amongst stockholders, creditors and Wall Street analysts, causing significant financial repercussions.

Debarment is another significant collateral consequence. Both federal and state law allows the respective sovereigns to refuse to do business with organizations that have been convicted of or otherwise suspected of crimes or dishonest business practices. [FN146] At the federal level, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is particularly vigilant in debarring organizations that are convicted or suspected of *200 environmental crimes. [FN147] Debarment is damaging because a large percentage of Alaska companies are the recipients of federal or state contracts. [FN148] The loss of these contracts can be financially crippling to companies. The State of Alaska also has legislative authority to debar companies but, unfortunately, rarely uses that power. [FN149]

By way of an example, consider a small bush air service that transports mail year round and a steady number of government biologists as passengers during the summer. If the company knowingly allows passengers to transport alcohol to local option dry communities [FN150] on its flights, it could be prosecuted for violations of Alaska's alcohol importation laws. [FN151] A conviction could potentially trigger federal or state debarment and thereby jeopardize the air service's ability to retain the mail or biologist travel contracts. This could constitute another financial blow to the company in addition to the fines or consequences that flow from the prosecution. [FN152]

*201 IV. Practical Considerations for Prosecutors

A. No Fifth Amendment Privilege

Prosecutors gain several practical advantages by filing charges against organizations as opposed to individuals. The first, and perhaps most significant, is that an organization does not have a Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. A prosecutor can use organizational agents as witnesses to testify about corporate practices or records. [FN153] In Amato v. United States, [FN154] the First Circuit, relying largely on the Supreme Court's decision in Braswell v. United States, [FN155] explained why the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination does not protect corporate records. [FN156]

The Alaska Supreme Court subscribed to the collective-entity doctrine in Pratt v. Kirkpatrick. [FN157] Citing many of the same cases relied upon in Amato, the court held that a records custodian for the financial records of a limited partnership could not rely upon the Fifth Amendment or Article I, section 9 of the Alaska Constitution to resist a subpoena for the partnership's financial records. [FN158] Importantly, the court found the self-incrimination protections provided by the Alaska Constitution were no broader than protections provided by the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. [FN159]

Because of these principles, defense attorneys will be hard-pressed to successfully preclude the production of an organization's documents sought pursuant to a subpoena or search warrant. Organizations are prolific producers of documents, reports, memoranda, and email that evidence their decisions and actions. In the event of criminal conduct, *202 any such documents would be invaluable to the prosecution, as they may demonstrate the organization's knowledge or intent. At the very least, the documents can confirm the individual agent's intent or knowledge.

B. Avoiding Hearsay

Common hearsay problems can also be avoided if an organization rather than an individual is charged. Employee or agent statements regarding the conduct of the organization will be admissible against the organization should the declarant invoke a personal Fifth Amendment right not to testify or otherwise make him or herself unavailable for trial. The admissions of these agents are not hearsay if offered against the organization because the law imputes them to the organization itself; under Alaska Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2), the admissions are considered admissions of the party opponent. [FN160] This subsection excludes as non-hearsay statements that are made by an agent or servant concerning matters within the scope of that individual's agency or employment and made during the existence of the agency or employment relationship. This is a broadly interpreted exclusion [FN161] that encompasses a wide range of employee statements regarding employer practices, work conditions, and decision-making that frequently provide invaluable evidence for the prosecution.

C. Corporations Can Be Tried In Absentia

Corporations cannot ignore a summons to appear for arraignment. Pursuant to Rule 4(a)(3) of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, corporations that fail to appear may be tried in absentia. [FN162] The trial of an absent corporation would be a slam-dunk for the state. The prosecutor could admit evidence to the jury without objection. The *203 prosecutor could then ask the jury to convict a business which was perfectly happy to injure Alaska or Alaskans in some way but was unwilling to show up when invited to an Alaskan courtroom for its own trial. Assuming the prosecutor has presented sufficient evidence of the charged offenses, it is likely juries will feel little compunction in returning guilty verdicts. Upon conviction, the prosecutor could ask the judge to issue a judgment against the corporation and that judgment could be sent to the Attorney General's Collection Section for collection.

D. Organizations Engender Less Sympathy

The criminal jury instructions commonly employed in Alaska state courts invariably include an instruction that directs the jury to disregard any sympathy for the defendant during its deliberations. [FN163] Nevertheless, any prosecutor will tell you that jurors rarely dispatch their obligations without sympathizing to some degree with the defendant. If an employee engages in improper conduct to primarily benefit his or her employer (as opposed to directly benefiting him or herself) or if the employee engages in conduct at the behest of his or her employer, jurors may be loathe to find the individual guilty of the offense. This problem is largely eliminated if the company is tried. Regardless of the factual scenario involved, juries are far less prone to feel sympathy for an organization. [FN164] Most often, the organization is a for-profit company, and juries realize their decision, like the organization's decision to engage in the criminal conduct, is a decision about money. Juries seem to struggle far less with the question of whether an organization should pay a fine than the question of whether an individual should go to jail.

*204 V. Charging Considerations

A. Factors to Weigh

The foregoing discussion is meant to illustrate that organizational criminal liability is very broad and has potential application to many situations. Nevertheless, these prosecutions can be complex and time intensive, and the outcome of any such prosecution is seldom, if ever, certain. It follows that a prosecution may not be warranted or be the best use of limited resources in every instance. A number of practical considerations should inform any decision to prosecute or not prosecute an organization.

Assuming the prosecutor believes he or she can prove all the elements of the potential charges, the foremost consideration is the prosecution's objective in pursuing the criminal charges against this organization. Key to this concern is the question of punishment. Is the goal to punish the organization? Is the goal to achieve restitution? Or is the goal to ensure future compliance by this organization or similarly-situated organizations? Most often the answer is a mixture of all three, but that is not always the case. If the organization is one that has few assets or no longer exists, the prosecution may yield a conviction and a fine or restitution order that cannot be collected. Alternatively, if the organization continues to operate and the conduct at issue could reoccur, or involves an activity that has not been monitored or heavily regulated in the past, a better result may be achieved through less adversarial means. Instead of a criminal prosecution, perhaps there is an administrative or civil remedy. [FN165]

In answering these questions, the prosecutor should consider the following factors. [FN166] The first and foremost consideration is whether the prosecution is deserved. Multiple factors will weigh on this determination, including whether the injury was caused by egregious or intentional conduct or a rogue employee, and the degree to which management was complicit in causing the injury. It will also be important to determine whether the conduct was an isolated violation or part of a series of violations, and if the organization knew the conduct was prohibited.

*205 These factors beg the question: is a prosecution warranted? A corollary to this question is the recognition that a criminal prosecution carries a significant stigma and is not warranted or necessary in every circumstance. With respect to considerations of practicality, the following factors should be evaluated and go to the central question of what can and will be achieved by prosecuting the organization:

First, will prosecution deter this organization? Answering this question will require analyzing the likelihood of significant penalties such as fines or probation. It will also mean determining if any illegal gains will be returned, and if the conduct gave the organization an advantage over its competitors. [FN167]

Second, will prosecution deter other similarly-situated organizations? Determining this means researching whether similarly-situated organizations exist and if the potential penalties would deter them. The penalties may also impact the industry as a whole.

Third, will prosecution promote future compliance? Prosecutors must consider whether including a compliance program in the penalty would address the conduct at issue.

Fourth, is restitution owed to a broad range of entities or individuals? Considerations will include the necessity of prosecution to obtain restitution, the effectiveness of individual claims, and the ability of the organization to pay damages.

Finally, will a prosecution play well in the public's view? Prosecutors should determine whether the public will support legal action, an enforcement program more generally, and participate in such a program by reporting violations.

Depending on the answers to these questions, a prosecutor may determine that prosecution is not the best alternative. The best practice is to make this determination early and not to pursue prosecutions in situations not warranting the effort or resources.

To illustrate these points, consider as an example the potential prosecution of a bartender for selling alcohol to an underage patron. Faced with an underage "furnishing" crime, police officers will typically *206 cite the individual bartender for a Title 4 "furnishing" offense. [FN168] If convicted, and if a first-time offender, the bartender will likely receive a suspended imposition of sentence, a year's probation, and a small fine, assuming the prosecutor can convince a jury not to nullify the verdict. On the other hand, if there is a good reason to charge the bartender's employer--perhaps a large bar or restaurant--with the same Title 4 violation, that employer will face a much larger potential fine. If the employer has committed similar offenses through other employees, each of those incidents may be brought to the sentencing judge's attention and would powerfully bolster the prosecutor's sentencing case. Fines could be conditioned on the employer ensuring that its employees commit no further violations. The employer could also be affirmatively required to notify law enforcement officers of any and all future violations. [FN169] In addition, the court may require the employer to provide enhanced training for employees at their own expense. Prosecuting the employer is a better use of prosecutorial resources. Importantly, the prosecution of the employer provides a mechanism to prevent future, similar infractions by other employees. The employer will likely be more proactive in policing its employees and will be under an affirmative duty to report all future violations. Further, it is likely that other similar establishments or employers will take notice of the sentence and will likewise do a better job of policing their operations and employees. These would all be positive outcomes.

B. Case Study: Strategica Import-Export Financial Group, LLC

A four-defendant case recently prosecuted by the Office of Special Prosecutions, State v. Jeremy Oliver, [FN170] further illustrates why prosecutors should consider charging organizations and how they can use those prosecutions to achieve better case outcomes.

The case arose from a failed salmon processing facility in Ekuk, Alaska in 2004. [FN171] The failure was an economic disaster for the local economy. [FN172] None of the fishermen who had delivered fish to the facility *207 were paid for their catches and none of the workers who had worked at the facility were paid for their labor. [FN173] Jeremy Oliver, a young man with limited fishing and processing experience, had formed Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, LLC ("Wild Alaskan Seafood Company") for the purpose of the Ekuk processing venture. [FN174] Oliver was able to lease and open the Ekuk facility using financing brokered by Jay Enis, a Florida merchant banker. [FN175] Enis formed Strategica Import-Export Financial Group, LLC ("Strategica") for the purpose of financing the Ekuk salmon processing venture. [FN176] Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company hired dozens of workers to run the facility and accepted more than a million pounds of fish from the fishermen. [FN177] The venture failed before the fish could be processed, and very little of the fish was ever delivered to a purchaser. [FN178] The vast majority of the fish spoiled and ultimately had to be destroyed. [FN179] As a result, the fishermen and Ekuk processors were never paid. [FN180]

Alaska statutes criminalize the processing of adulterated seafood. [FN181] The offense is a class A misdemeanor. [FN182]

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The state prosecuted all four defendants--Oliver, Wild Alaska Seafood Company, Enis, and Strategica--for this offense, as well as several additional, related offenses. [FN183] Ultimately, Oliver, Wild Alaskan Seafood Company and Strategica each pled guilty to a charge. [FN184] The court sentenced Oliver to serve 180 days in jail (with 140 days suspended) and to pay, along with Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, more than $56,000 in restitution to the fishermen and workers. [FN185] Because Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood *208 Company have few assets, [FN186] it is unlikely that much of this restitution will ever be paid. Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company were prosecuted to punish them for their misdeeds rather than to make the injured fishermen and workers whole. [FN187] The court ordered Strategica to pay more than $180,000 in restitution. [FN188] The state agreed to dismiss the charges against Enis in exchange for Strategica's plea and payment. [FN189] The case against Strategica was meant to prosecute that company for its misconduct, as well as to provide at least some restitution to the fishermen and workers.

Oliver was clearly the primary culprit of this scheme. Oliver came up with the plan to operate the Ekuk facility and was in charge when it failed. Nevertheless, once the scheme failed, Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company lacked assets and would never be able to pay much in restitution. Enis and Strategica had assets but were not as directly involved in the management and operation of the Ekuk facility. Thus, the question for the Office of Special Prosecutions was whether it could prove Enis and Strategica were criminally liable for the Ekuk failure and, if so, whether they warranted criminal prosecution. The answer to both questions was "yes." [FN190]

Strategica's conduct was egregious. Enis and Strategica had no experience in the Alaska seafood industry. Nevertheless, with little due diligence and equally little oversight, Strategica provided Wild Alaskan *209 Seafood Company with $650,000 in financing for a risky venture [FN191] that would operate in a remote locale more than five thousand miles from Strategica's location in Miami. [FN192] Strategica enabled Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company by providing the financial means for them to launch the Ekuk facility. Thereafter, Strategica did little to oversee their operations or to ensure their success. This conduct was careless, it was intentional, and it had a devastating impact on the Ekuk fishery and the local economy.

Practical considerations also supported the decision to prosecute Strategica. Most importantly, the State believed prosecution would be the most effective way to collect restitution for the fishermen and workers. More than a hundred, perhaps more than two hundred, people were financially injured due to the Ekuk failure. [FN193] While some of these people filed civil actions against the defendants, those suits made little progress and, even if successful, stood to benefit a small number of individuals. In contrast, a criminal prosecution could recover restitution for all those who did not get paid. Of the potential defendants, only Enis and Strategica had any real financial resources. [FN194] Therefore, it was important that Strategica be prosecuted.

Additionally, the prosecution of Strategica would play well in the realm of public opinion. Strategica was a company that recklessly entered the state fishing industry to make a profit for out-of-state investors and ended up causing significant financial injuries to many Alaskans. In addition to the direct financial losses inflicted on the Ekuk fishermen and workers, Strategica's actions could have inflicted significant harm to the reputation of Alaskan salmon. The Alaska seafood industry relies on the high reputation of "wild Alaskan salmon" to market its product and has spent years and millions of public relations dollars to build up that reputation. [FN195] If some of the damaged Ekuk salmon had actually made it into the marketplace and sickened unsuspecting consumers, the reputation and marketability of Alaskan salmon would have been dealt a significant blow. Considering the *210 reckless manner in which Strategica acted to enable and finance Oliver and Wild Alaskan Seafood Company, the State believed the Alaskans would overwhelmingly support Strategica's prosecution and the Department of Environmental Conservation's continued efforts to regulate seafood processing facilities.

Finally, the State believed prosecuting Strategica would serve as a deterrent to future reckless investment in the Alaska seafood industry by outside entities. The prosecution resulted in significant financial penalties-- the restitution payment--and would receive significant publicity. This result would certainly deter Strategica from future similar conduct and, it is hoped, would deter other similarly situated entities from doing anything similar.

Conclusion

© 2010 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The ability to file criminal charges against an organization in addition to, or in lieu of, charges against individual agents is a powerful tool available to prosecutors. The prosecution of organizations must be considered, whenever feasible, to deter future wrongdoing. Furthermore, it is far more efficient to prosecute the organization that controls a large number of agents engaging in prohibited conduct rather than prosecuting each agent individually.

Prosecuting the organization makes sense for a variety of additional reasons. First, significant criminal fines can be imposed against organizations. Second, organizations--rational entities with a bottom line and a strong preference against negative publicity--tend to be prosecution averse. This fact is good news for the prosecution because it means a trial can be avoided and constructive changes can be implemented as part of any resolution. [FN196] Third, organizations enjoy fewer constitutional protections than do individual defendants and, as such, can make use of fewer evidentiary rules to limit the prosecution's evidence. Lastly, the prosecution of an organization as well as individual defendants could strengthen the prosecution's hand during plea negotiations. The organization may be persuaded to accept a plea in 211 return for dismissal against certain individual officers, or vice-versa. By charging both, the prosecution increases its options for a successful and beneficial resolution.

Several potential explanations for why Alaska prosecutors rarely charge organizations for the criminal conduct of their agents are proffered in the introduction. None satisfactorily explain this phenomenon. Yes, such prosecutions will likely differ in some respects from the prosecution of individual defendants. Yes, organizational defendants may hire experienced defense counsel. And yes, such prosecutions might, in some cases, penalize stockholders who did not know about the wrongdoing. But these drawbacks, to the extent they are legitimate at all, are insignificant compared to the potential benefits that such prosecutions can realize. Quite simply, prosecutors should file charges against organizations more frequently. Such change may not happen quickly; nonetheless, it is time to adjust course and to start looking more closely at organizational targets. Successful criminal prosecutions of organizations can be a significant deterrent that causes organizations to take significant steps to better monitor the behavior of their agents and to prevent criminal conduct in the course of their operations.

[FN41]. Interestingly, a Ninth Circuit court hearing an appeal on an Alaska case expressed some reservations about applying the theory of respondeat superior to impute criminal intent to a corporation. In Empire Printing Co. v. Roden, 247 F.2d 8 (9th Cir. 1957), a case concerning libel claims brought by the former territorial governor, treasurer and highway engineer against a Juneau newspaper, the court provided dicta on point. [FN56]. Alaska Stat. § 11.81.900(b)(43) (2006). The definition does not include "sole proprietorship." The court of appeals interprets this omission to mean the legislature did not intend to expose such entities to criminal liability in their own right. To the contrary, a sole proprietorship is the alter ego of the sole proprietor and therefore any charges must be alleged against the sole proprietor in his or her individual capacity. ABC Towing, 954 P.2d at 577-78.

[FN57]. 1 William Mead Fletcher et al., Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations §§ 1-5 (rev. vol. 2006). The common law fostered this purpose; it did not expose organizations to criminal liability. N.Y. Cent. & Hudson River R.R. Co. v. United States, 212 U.S. 481, 492-93 (1909).

[FN84]. In fact, Alaska's jurisdiction is quite broad. Under section 44.03.010 of the Alaska Statutes, state territorial jurisdiction extends to waters offshore and encompasses the "high seas" to the extent the United States exercises its jurisdiction. The Alaska Supreme Court has interpreted this provision broadly to include all ocean waters seaward of the Alaska coast. See State v. an Alaska Marine Highway ferry while in Canadian waters during a voyage between Alaska and Washington). Arguably, both entities would have sufficient contacts with the State of Alaska, based on the sailing and operation of the Arctic Sunrise in Alaska waters, to make them subject to the personal jurisdiction of a state court. See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Wash., 326 U.S. 310, 317-19 (1945) (holding contacts exist when the in-state activities of the corporation give rise to the liabilities at issue, or the corporation fails to satisfy obligations that exist due to its in-state activities); Kuk v. Nalley, 166 P.3d 47, 51 (Alaska 2007) (explaining that International Shoe and its progeny significantly broadened the understanding of personal jurisdiction).

[FN85]. See 954 P.2d 575, 577-79 (Alaska Ct. App. 1998). The ABC Towing decision is unsatisfying. Id. The court of appeals favorably compared sole proprietorships and partnerships--both are the alter egos of the proprietor or partners, both exist solely to carry out the business purpose for which they were created, and both are not common law "legal entities." Id. Nevertheless, the court interprets the definition of "organization" in a way that treats the two entities differently, i.e., partnerships can be prosecuted, sole proprietorships cannot. Id. The ruling is defensible from a statutory construction standpoint, but it is unsatisfactory from a public policy standpoint. The same policy arguments that support the prosecution of partnerships for criminal offenses apply to sole proprietorships. See id. There is no reason these entities should be treated differently.

He was in a unique position to add the corporation's buying power to the force of the boycott. [FN97]. In United States v. Potter, 463 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 2006), the First Circuit squarely rejected an argument that a corporation might fend off liability by adopting abstract rules that no agent can make an unlawful price-fixing contract or that no driver may exceed the speed limit. Id. at 25-26 (citing United States v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 770 F.2d 399, 406 & n. 5 (4th Cir. 1985)). Thus, a corporation may be charged and convicted, even if there is a specific company directive forbidding the questioned acts. The court explained that this is simply an extension of familiar agency law principles: the principal is held liable for acts done on its account by an agent which are customarily actions the agent is authorized to perform. Potter, 463 F.3d at 26 (citing H. Reuschlein & Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership 167 (1990) (footnote omitted)).

The Fourth Circuit adopted very similar reasoning in United States v. Basic Constr. Co., wherein it rejected a corporation's attempt to insulate itself from liability using evidence that the corporation had expressly forbidden the conduct at issue. 711 F.2d 570, 573 (4th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 956 (1983).

The Restatement (Second) of Agency explains the general rule these decisions expound by way of an illustration: P directs the salesman in selling guns, never to insert a cartridge while exhibiting a gun. A, a salesman, does so, and negligently harms a bystander. Notwithstanding P's instructions otherwise, the salesman's act is within the scope of employment. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 230, illus. 1 (1958) (forbidden acts).

The State would face a similar situation if it successfully prosecuted a dissolved corporation. Depending on how the corporation provided for its post-dissolution liabilities, the State may try to collect the penalties imposed against an insurance policy, against a successor corporation, or against a finite pool of assets set aside prior to the corporation's dissolution. In that final scenario, the assets might be insufficient, particularly if the corporation left numerous creditors, and the State could get stuck with a judgment it cannot collect (or not easily collect without some veil-piercing litigation).

[FN141]. Under section 12.55.035(c)(1) of the Alaska Statutes, an organization can be fined up to a million dollars for felony offenses or misdemeanor offenses that result in death, up to two hundred thousand dollars for Class A misdemeanor offenses, up to twenty five thousand dollars for Class B misdemeanor offenses, and up to ten thousand dollars for violations. Alternatively, greater fines can be imposed under sections 12.55.035(c)(2) or (3) of the Alaska Statutes, which allow for fines up to three times the pecuniary gain realized, or three times the damages caused by the offense.

[FN143]. The court considers a defendant's prospects for rehabilitation, the need to confine or isolate the defendant to prevent further public harm, the extent to which the sentence to be imposed will deter the defendant as well as other members of the community from future criminal conduct, and the extent to which the sentence will reaffirm societal norms or the community's condemnation of the conduct. See Alaska Stat. § 12.55.005; State v. Chaney, 477 P.2d 441, 443 (Alaska 1970).

[FN144]. Defense attorneys commonly argue that the State should not seek the full measure of fines authorized by section 12.35.055 of Alaska Statutes because doing so would preclude the organization from devoting resources to correct the problem that led to the violation, or to pay restitution. This is a fair argument in many instances.

[FN145]. Probation is imposed by the sentencing court and can be up to ten years. Alaska Stat. § 12.55.090(c) (2006).

[FN146]. In response to Congressional oversight hearings regarding the mismanagement of federal contracts, the Office of Management and Budget developed a government-wide debarment and suspension system in the early 1980s. See Brief History of EPA's Debarment Program, http:// www.epa.gov/ogdunix1/sdd/history.htm (last visited Oct. 9, 2008).

[FN147]. The EPA is statutorily required to debar companies convicted of violations of section 508 of the Clean Water Act or section 306 of the Clean Air Act. The EPA also has the discretionary authority to suspend or debar companies based on indictments, information or adequate evidence involving environmental crimes, contract fraud, embezzlement, theft, forgery, bribery, poor performance, non-performance, or false statements. See Suspension and Debarment Program, http://www.epa.gov/ogdunix1/sdd/debarment.htm (last visited Oct. 10, 2008.) Other executive branch agencies also have the authority to suspend and debar.

[FN148]. Based on the Author's anecdotal observations that the federal government is very active in Alaska and therefore contracts with many Alaskan companies for services and products.

[FN149]. While the state has legislative authority to debar entities, it rarely does so. State debarment is controlled by sections 36.30.635-36.30.685 of the Alaska Statutes. The grounds for debarment are set out in section 36.30.640 of the Alaska Statutes and include a broad range of unethical or fraudulent conduct. Nevertheless, these consequences are rarely, if ever, invoked. In response to an inquiry to the Alaska Department of Law, the Department told the Author of only one state suspension or debarment matter. In the Author's view, the State, by failing to more proactively utilize its debarment authority, forgoes a powerful deterrence tool.

[FN162]. The rule provides, "[i]f a defendant corporation fails to appear after being duly summoned, a plea of not guilty shall be entered by the court if the court is empowered to try the offense for which the summons was issued and the court may proceed to trial and judgment without further process." Alaska R. Crim. Proc. 4(a)(3). The rule does not define "corporation" and the author is not aware of any case that interprets this rule. Admittedly, a court could interpret "corporation" to be narrower than the term "organization" as it is used in section 11.16.130 (2006) of the Alaska Statutes. It is therefore unclear whether other types of organizations could be tried in absentia.

[FN163]. Alaska Pattern Jury Instruction 1.07, "Evaluation of Evidence," is one such example. It instructs jurors "not be influenced by sentiment, prejudice, passion or public opinion" in evaluating the evidence. (2006). Such "suspended fines" are used as a "hammer" to force a defendant to comply with the conditions of probation the court imposes. If, during the probation period, the defendant does not comply with these conditions, the prosecution can petition the sentencing court to revisit the sentence and impose all or a portion of the sentence that was suspended. Those determinations are made by the trial judge pursuant to a preponderance of the evidence standard. See Wallace v. State, 829 P.2d 1208, 1210 (Alaska Ct. App. 1992); Andrew v. [FN196]. For example, in pollution cases, resolutions often require defendant companies to implement environmental compliance management systems-- detailed plans that dictate the specific procedures and safety measures the company is required to implement for a period of time. These compliance agreements are typically more stringent than any planning or contingency plan requirements imposed by statute or regulation. In other words, to resolve the criminal charges, organizations will agree to be far more proactive in guarding against future infractions. Such agreements are not only helpful, but also provide good publicity for both the organization and the prosecution.

amendment #1 adopted

HB 381

Suggestions for rewriting the last sentence

The bill would add a section to AS 11.81.335(b), which provides that a person has no duty to retreat if the person is:

(5) "in any place that the person has a right to be"

Could add the language below to following the word "be" at the end of (5):

(1) provided, that such person may use deadly force against an intruder or attacker in a place that is not his or her residence without a duty to retreat only if the person reasonably believes that he or she or another is in imminent danger of death or serious bodily harm from which he or she or another can only be saved by the use of deadly force against the intruder or attacker.

OR

(2) provided that such person may no use force unless the person has first asked the attacker to desist and has given verbal warning before using deadly force.

OR

Don't add (5), but add a section which reads

(3)

(c) In a prosecution in which a person used deadly force without retreating under circumstances other than those described in (b)(1) –(4), it is an affirmative defense that the person was in a place that the person had a right to be and was otherwise justified in using deadly force.

(d) Where a person raises an affirmative defense under (c) the jury may consider whether the failure to retreat was reasonable under the circumstances.

Re: HB 381 – Self-Defense

Dear Senator French:

Attached please find copies of the pattern jury instruction which is given in cases involving use of deadly force in defense of self or others. Since the instruction refers to the use of non-deadly force, I have also attached that instruction.

I wish to take this opportunity to clarify an earlier document which was sent to your committee. We had forwarded a letter from Assistant Attorney General John Skidmore to your committee. Mr. Skidmore's letter referenced an earlier version of HB 381. It is no longer relevant as to the portions of the bill which have been changed, and is pertinent only to the issues which remain regarding the duty to retreat. I apologize for any confusion this may have caused.

Sincerely,

DANIEL S. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY GENERAL

The law of self defense regarding the use of deadly force is as follows:

A defendant may use deadly force upon another person when and to the extent the use of non-deadly force in self defense is justified, and the defendant reasonably believes the deadly force is necessary for self defense against [death] [serious physical injury] [kidnapping] [sexual assault in the first degree] [sexual assault in the second degree] [robbery in any degree].[However, a defendant may not use deadly force in self defense if the defendant knows that, with complete personal safety and with complete safety as to others, the defendant can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by retreating. [This "duty to retreat" does not apply if the defendant is [on premises which the defendant owns or leases, and the defendant is not the initial aggressor] [a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment] [assisting someone whom the defendant reasonably believes is a peace officer in making an arrest or terminating or preventing an escape].]]

Unless the state has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not act in self defense, you shall find the defendant not guilty.

USE NOTE

This instruction must be given together with instruction 11.81.330 (use of nondeadly force in self defense).

The following terms are defined in other instructions:

"deadly force" – 11.81.900(b)
"force" - 11.81.900(b)
"leased" – 11.81.900(b)
"nondeadly force" - 11.81.900(b)
"peace officer" – 11.81.900(b)
"physical injury" – 11.81.900(b)
"premises" – 11.81.900(b)
"serious physical injury" – 11.81.900(b)

The decision about whether to instruct the jury on self defense belongs to the trial judge. The defendant bears the burden of producing some evidence in support of a claim of self defense before the court must give the instruction. The court need not give an instruction if the only basis for a self defense claim is speculation. Hamilton v. State, 59 P. 3d 760 (Alaska App. 2002). The "some evidence" burden, however, is not a heavy one, and is satisfied when the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the defendant, might arguably lead a juror to entertain a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt. Paul v. State, 655 P.2d 772, 775 (Alaska App. 1982). Even a weak or implausible self defense claim is a question for the jury, and the trial judge should not evaluate the credibility, strength, or weight of evidence in determining whether the burden has been met. Folger v. State, 648 P.2d 111, 113 (Alaska App. 1982); Paul v. State, 655 P.2d at 776. "Some evidence" may consist, for example, solely of the uncorroborated testimony of the defendant. Brown v. State, 698 P.2d 671, 674 (Alaska App. 1985). But the defendant need not testify so long as there is other evidence of self defense. Blackhurst v. State, 721 P.2d 645 (Alaska App. 1986).

In determining whether there is some evidence of self defense, the court must examine every element of the justification, depending upon the particular facts of the case. For example, the court must evaluate whether there is some evidence that (1) the defendant actually believed the use of nondeadly force was necessary, and (2) a reasonable person would have held such a belief under the same circumstances. Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119, 1121 (Alaska, 1984). Similarly, it may be necessary in a particular case to determine whether there is some evidence that the defendant was not an initial aggressor. Brown v. State, 698 P.2d 671, 673-74 (Alaska App. 1985).

The definition of "force" in AS 11.81.900(b) includes actual bodily impact, restraint, or confinement, as well as the threat of imminent bodily impact, restraint, or confinement. Thus, self defense may apply where a defendant reasonably perceived a threat of harm, so long as the perceived harm was imminent. Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184, 194 (Alaska App. 1995).

The reasonableness of a defendant's beliefs must be evaluated by the jury based on the circumstances of the situation facing the defendant, including any relevant knowledge the defendant had about the other person; physical attributes of all persons involved (including the defendant); and any prior experiences that could provide a reasonable basis for the defendant's beliefs. Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184, 194-95 (Alaska App. 1995). Reasonable belief means that a reasonable person would have held such a belief under the same circumstances. Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119, 1121 (Alaska 1984). A defendant's distorted perceptions due to mental illness, however, may not be a factor in evaluating the reasonableness of the defendant's beliefs. Ha v. State, 892 at 195-96.

This pattern instruction may require slight modification when a defendant claims that an act of self defense was prompted by the danger posed by a group of attackers, and not just the danger posed by the alleged victim named in the charging document. Under such circumstances, the defendant is entitled to have the jury assess the defendant's actions in light of the total danger posed (or apparently posed) by the group. Allen v. State, 51 P.3d 949, 958-59 (Alaska App. 2002).

The law of self-defense regarding the use of nondeadly force is as follows:

A defendant may use nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the defendant believes it is necessary for self-defense against what the defendant believes to be the use of unlawful force by the other person. The defendant's beliefs must be reasonable under the circumstances.

However, a defendant may not use nondeadly force in self-defense if

(1) the defendant used the force in mutual combat not authorized by law; or

(2) the defendant provoked the other's conduct with intent to cause physical injury to the other; or

(3) the defendant was the initial aggressor; or

(4) the force used was the result of using a deadly weapon or dangerous instrument the defendant possessed while [acting alone or with others to further a felony criminal objective of the defendant or one or more other defendants] [a participant in a felony transaction or purported transaction or in immediate flight from a felony transaction or violation of AS 11.71] [acting alone or with others in revenge for, retaliation for, or response to actual or perceived conduct by a rival or perceived rival, or a member or perceived member of a rival group, if the defendant, or the group on whose behalf the defendant is acting, has a history or reputation for violence among civilians.]

In any of these circumstances, the defendant may use nondeadly force if the defendant has withdrawn from the encounter and effectively communicated the withdrawal to the other person and the other person persists in continuing the incident by the use of unlawful force.

Unless the state has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not act in self-defense, you shall find the defendant not guilty.

USE NOTE

The following terms are defined in other instructions:

"deadly force" – 11.81.900(b)
"force" - 11.81.900(b)
"nondeadly force" - 11.81.900(b)

In circumstances where the exceptions set forth in the third paragraph are not applicable, those portions may be deleted.

The decision whether to instruct the jury on self-defense belongs to the trial judge. The defendant bears the burden of producing some evidence in support of a claim of self-defense before the court must

A defendant's distorted perceptions due to mental illness, however, may not be a factor in evaluating the reasonableness of the defendant's beliefs. Id. at 195-96.

This pattern instruction may require slight modification when a defendant claims that an act of self-defense was prompted by the danger posed by a group of attackers, and not just the danger posed by the alleged victim named in the charging document. Under such circumstances, the defendant is entitled to have the jury assess the defendant's actions in light of the total danger posed (or apparently posed) by the group. Allen v. State, 51 P.3d 949, 958-59 (Alaska App. 2002).

Re: House Bill 381

Dear Chairman French:

I am writing to express my serious concern over the current language in House Bill 381. Every experienced prosecutor with whom I have spoken about this bill uniformly agrees that it would promote violence and be a bad idea for our state. We believe that as drafted this bill will encourage unnecessary violence in our state. Whatever source one thinks our laws should be drawn from – the ten commandments which say "thou shall not kill," simple morality, utilitarianism principles of the greater good, or simply the concept that life is sacred –this bill would encourage the needless taking of human life.

AS 11.81.335(b) as currently written sets forth the duty to retreat before resorting to deadly force. It requires that if "with complete personal safety and with complete safety to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area" then the person must do so. This avoids the unnecessary loss of life and encourages our citizens to seek ways other than violence to resolve disputes. The addition of subsections 5 and 6 to this statute eradicates the duty to retreat - in fact should they be enacted, there would no longer be a duty to retreat in Alaska. That is to say if person A could avoid killing person B by walking away, he/she would no longer be required to do so, but instead would be authorized by law to kill person B. This does not promote the protection of our citizens or suggest that Alaska as a state places a high value on life itself. While this is highly unlikely to have been the goal of the bill's sponsors, it is nevertheless the result of what has been proposed. This is best explained by closely examing the language of the proposed changes and additions.

Section 1 of the bill proposes amending AS 11.81.335(b) by adding a subsection (5) that would say there would be no duty to retreat when the person is "in a vehicle" owned, leased, used, or even just occupied with the owner's consent. Here are but just three examples of how this would encourage violence:

First example:

A person picks up a hitchhiker, or offers a ride to someone, and, for whatever reason, a confrontation arises while in the vehicle such that deadly force could be used, but for the duty to retreat. Under the current law the hitchhiker must leave your vehicle if he knows he can do so safely. Under the proposed amendment, that hitchhiker would be authorized to kill the driver instead -- even if he could have simply walked away. These facts are similar of a recent murder trial in Anchorage, but they are close. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for second-degree murder. The case is now on appeal. Why would we want to say killing another person is okay when it could be avoided? Why would we want to authorize the taking of a life when one could walk away in complete safety?

Second Example:

Joe Smith drives to a party. At the party he gets into an altercation and is thrown out of the party. He goes to his car and gets inside to leave. Before leaving, Mr. Smith sees the person with whom he got into the altercation. Though Mr. Smith is in his car, behind the wheel and ready to leave, he fears the other guy may come after him. Instead of driving off – which he could do with complete personal safety, he gets out of his car and grabs a shotgun from the trunk and kills the other man. Again, these are facts similar to a recent murder trial in Anchorage. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for manslaughter. The case is now on appeal. This is yet another situation in which our current law requires our citizens to walk away if they can do so with safety, but this proposed change in the law would authorize killing another human being instead.

Third Example:

An occupant in car A points a gun at the occupant in car B. If the occupant in car B can drive away with complete safety, then under the current law he must do so. Under the proposed change, the driver in car B would be authorized by this bill to open fire instead of driving away. The law of self-defense in Alaska requires the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt a defendant's claim of self-defense is not true. It is difficult to prove a negative. If the state cannot prove the negative beyond a reasonable doubt, then at least the state can try to prove that the driver of car B had a duty to retreat and could have done so. This law would eliminate that duty. That is a recipe for inviting gang violence on our streets. These facts are in fact very similar to another case prosecuted by our department. In 2006 there was a shooting at Reka and Bragaw in Anchorage. Two vehicles with young men exchanging gunfire. One young man was killed and the two men in the other vehicle were convicted of murder. One of those cases is on appeal. This loss of life occurred for one of the participants. What about the innocent bystander? For example, there was the election day shooting in Anchorage when a campaign worker for former Gov. Murkowski was hit by a stray bullet at campaign HQ in Anchorage across from the Sears mall. That case involved two vehicles with young men – not in gangs, but still rivals – who opened fire on one another. While we did prosecute the shooters in that case, do so would have been impossible under this law.

This bill would unintentionally encourage such conduct by making it legal or at least offering a defense – which even if not true – could not be disproved. In each of the four examples the defendants were convicted, but this proposed change would make such prosecutions much harder, if even possible.

The proposed subsection (6) in AS 11.81.330(b) would almost completely eliminate the duty to retreat. That subsection says there is no such duty when a person is "in any place where the person has a right to be." That means in the Diamond Mall, Sears Mall, McDonalds, or any other public location a person is no longer required to walk away from a confrontation, but instead may kill another citizen even if they could have walked away with complete safety. This does not express a value for human life. This does not encourage finding a resolution for disputes other than violence. The only time there would be a duty to retreat is if the person is some place they have no right to be – they must be trespassing, or committing a burglary in order to have such a duty. With this change you might as well simply eliminate the duty to retreat completely from our statutes.

The bill also proposes adding a new section that whittles away some of the other protections put in place to prevent unnecessary taking of human life. Our current self- defense law is set up with both a subjective and objective test to determine when deadly force is authorized. The subjective test means the person using the force believes he/she needs to do so. The objective tests means the "reasonable person" would have concluded the same thing. The added section proposes to eliminate the objective test in several circumstances: burglary, carjacking, and kidnapping. That is it takes away from the jury the question of whether a reasonable person would view a particular event as unlawful force against a person that required a response of deadly force. At first blush this seems reasonable. However, when you examine what is proposed more closely, it becomes very disturbing. To understand why, you must first understand each of the three crimes it references.

Burglary is found in AS 11.46 and not AS 11.41 because it is a crime against property, not a person. Burglary requires a person to enter a building with the intent to commit a crime – theft, vandalism, and assault are all examples. What must be noted though is that no person needs to be in the building in order for this to be a crime. If a person breaks into a home or business to steal something, this is a burglary. If a student breaks into a school to vandalize it, this is a burglary. If a person breaks into a home to assault another person – even if no one is home, this is still a burglary because burglary only addresses the entry of premises with the intent to commit a crime (called a target crime) whether that (target) crime is committed or not. This is why burglary is classified as a crime against property and not against a person.

Under current law non-deadly force may be used to protect property, and deadly force is only authorized when terminating an arson or attempted arson on a dwelling or occupied building (See AS 11.81.350(b)), or when terminating a burglary upon an occupied building or dwelling if the person using the force is in possession or control of that premises, or is a guest. See AS 11.81.350(c)).

The current bill would now authorize deadly force against a person who burgles a dwelling whether anyone was home or not. Thus deadly force may be used even when no human life is at risk.

The proposed bill would also authorize any person to use deadly force as compared to only a person who is in possession or control of or is an invited guest in the dwelling. This means the guy driving down the street may kill a person he thinks is breaking into a home. The state must disprove defense of property, so the state must disprove that a victim was committing burglary. While this new section is fraught with the potential for misunderstandings to lead to the unnecessary loss of human life, there is another more serious problem with this section. This new section authorizes deadly force against a person who is currently committing or had committed a burglary. This language authorizes vigilantism. It authorizes deadly force against any person whom the person using the force "had reason to believe" had – past tense – had committed a burglary. This new section says such force is reasonable. The only question left is if the person using the force also thought it was "reasonable."

The section on carjacking does the same thing. It authorizes the use of deadly force against someone who had -- past tense -- taken a car by force. Even if no human life was at risk in the taking, this law would say it is okay to kill to keep your car from being taken from you or afterwards. That sounds like retaliation and vigilantism, not like a legislature enacting laws to protect our citizens and improve our lives.

The kidnapping subsection has the same issue with past tense. In each and every section this bill would legalize and authorize vigilantism.

Finally the bill also says no arrest may be made "unless the agency" determines that there is probable cause that the force that used was unlawful. This puts the police in a difficult position especially when confronting gang related violence. It is also unclear to whom "the agency" refers. This could potentially require magistrates and grand juries to start deciding if self-defense has been disproven. This in turn would require the state to act as defense counsel for the defendant to present such a defense only to have to then disprove it. This may sound confusing, and that is because this bill could cause serious problems in the criminal justice system with regard to self-defense law.

Thank you for your consideration of this letter.

Please support this Bill and fortify my ability for self protection, thus continuing to preserve the original content of the founders of the second amendment.

CSHB 381 (JUD)
SELF DEFENSE

The House Judiciary CS for HB 381 recognizes that Alaskan residents have right to use deadly force to protect their families, persons and property whether they are at home, work, or in any place they have a right to be present. It does this by expanding your right to stand your ground to where they have a right to be.

By expanding the rights of Alaskans to stand their ground to any place they are legally present we tell our residents that their decision to use deadly force to defend themselves and their families will not be second judged, and makes it clear that it is criminals who have a duty to retreat.

I believe that HB 381 strengthens the legal recognition of the basic human right of self defense and ask for your support.

Summary of Changes

CH for HB 381 (JUD)
Self Defense

The current form of HB 381 has a narrowed focus that only addresses the requirement to retreat when threatened with specific crimes.

The Judiciary CS removed all sections except for two lines that stated there was no duty to leave the area of a threat if a person had a right to be there.

This change was made to make the bill narrow in its effect and scope allowing for adequate discussion during the remaining legislative session.

Specific changes to the original bill text are as follows:

Section 2, deleted.

Section 1, subsection 6, renumbered as section 1, subsection 5.

(1) A person is justified in threatening or using force against another when and to the extent that he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to defend himself or a third person against such other's imminent use of unlawful force. However, that person is justified in using force intended or likely to cause death or serious bodily injury only if he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to prevent death or serious bodily injury to himself or a third person as a result of the other's imminent use of unlawful force, or to prevent the commission of a forcible felony.

(2) A person is not justified in using force under the circumstances specified in Subsection (1) if he or she:

(a) initially provokes the use of force against himself with the intent to use force as an excuse to inflict bodily harm upon the assailant;

(b) is attempting to commit, committing, or fleeing after the commission or attempted commission of a felony; or

(c) (i) was the aggressor or was engaged in a combat by agreement, unless he withdraws from the encounter and effectively communicates to the other person his intent to do so and, notwithstanding, the other person continues or threatens to continue the use of unlawful force; and

(ii) for purposes of Subsection (i) the following do not, by themselves, constitute "combat by agreement":

(A) voluntarily entering into or remaining in an ongoing relationship; or

(B) entering or remaining in a place where one has a legal right to be.

(3) A person does not have a duty to retreat from the force or threatened force described in Subsection (1) in a place where that person has lawfully entered or remained, except as provided in Subsection (2)(c).

RE: House Bill 381 – SUPPORT

I am writing on behalf of the National Rifle Association – Institute for Legislative Action to express support for House Bill 381. HB 381 is important self-defense legislation that would provide that a law-abiding person has "no duty to retreat" from an attack if the person is in any place the person has a legal right to be.

Existing Alaska law already provides that there is no duty to retreat if the person is on premises which the person owns or leases, where he or she resides or in a building where the person works. In any other place, however, if a person "knows" that he or she can safely retreat from an encounter, the person is legally required to do so.

Notwithstanding the question of retreat, a person using deadly force in self-defense must have justification and must consider that question in the split second she has to decide whether to respond with force. Removing the additional question as to whether or not the person can retreat with complete safety provides for one less thing a potential victim must concern herself with in the life-or-death split-second decision-making process. Removing the duty to retreat does not in any way change the fact that a person must be justified in using deadly force and must be lawfully in the place where the act of self-defense takes place.

The basic principle still remains that a person, in self-defense, may only use deadly force upon another person when and to the extent the person reasonably believes the use of deadly force is necessary for self-defense against death, serious physical injury, kidnapping, sexual assault or robbery. AS 11.81.335(a).

Under current law, a person who resists an aggressor bears the risk of a finding that, although the response was proportional to the reasonably-perceived threat, the person overestimated the difficulty of getting away unscathed and was therefore not justified in reacting with defensive force. Removing the retreat provision shifts some of the risk calculation back to the aggressor.

The opposition to HB 381 has suggested that the bill would encourage the needless taking of human life and violates the concept that life is sacred. Sanctity-of-life issues are somewhat less compelling, however, in circumstances in which the person whose life was taken was behaving in such a way that the person who took his life reasonably feared being raped or killed. A rapist isn't deterred by rape laws; but the hesitation of his law-abiding victim to employ defensive force while she still has the chance (but while she considers retreat capability) may mean the difference for her between life and death. The sanctity-of-life issue cuts both ways.

Victims should have the protection of law...not criminals! Law-abiding citizens should not fear criminal prosecution when they stand their ground and defend themselves without retreating from any place they have a legal right to be.

Please support House Bill 381!

Re: House Bill 381

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to express my serious concern over the current language in House Bill 381. Every experienced prosecutor with whom I have spoken about this bill uniformly agrees that it would promote violence and be a bad idea for our state. We believe that as drafted this bill will encourage unnecessary violence in our state. Whatever source one thinks our laws should be drawn from – the ten commandments which say "thou shall not kill," simple morality, utilitarianism principles of the greater good, or simply the concept that life is sacred –this bill would encourage the needless taking of human life.

AS 11.81.335(b) as currently written sets forth the duty to retreat before resorting to deadly force. It requires that if "with complete personal safety and with complete safety to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area" then the person must do so. This avoids the unnecessary loss of life and encourages our citizens to seek ways other than violence to resolve disputes. The addition of subsections 5 and 6 to this statute eradicates the duty to retreat - in fact should they be enacted, there would no longer be a duty to retreat in Alaska. That is to say if person A could avoid killing person B by walking away, he/she would no longer be required to do so, but instead would be authorized by law to kill person B. This does not promote the protection of our citizens or suggest that Alaska as a state places a high value on life itself. While this is highly unlikely to have been the goal of the bill's sponsors, it is nevertheless the result of what has been proposed. This is best explained by closely examing the language of the proposed changes and additions.

Section 1 of the bill proposes amending AS 11.81.335(b) by adding a subsection (5) that would say there would be no duty to retreat when the person is "in a vehicle" owned, leased, used, or even just occupied with the owner's consent. Here are but just three examples of how this would encourage violence:

First example:

A person picks up a hitchhiker, or offers a ride to someone, and, for whatever reason, a confrontation arises while in the vehicle such that deadly force could be used, but for the duty to retreat. Under the current law the hitchhiker must leave your vehicle if he knows he can do so safely. Under the proposed amendment, that hitchhiker would be authorized to kill the driver instead -- even if he could have simply walked away. These facts are similar of a recent murder trial in Anchorage, but they are close. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for second-degree murder. The case is now on appeal. Why would we want to say killing another person is okay when it could be avoided? Why would we want to authorize the taking of a life when one could walk away in complete safety?

Second Example:

Joe Smith drives to a party. At the party he gets into an altercation and is thrown out of the party. He goes to his car and gets inside to leave. Before leaving, Mr. Smith sees the person with whom he got into the altercation. Though Mr. Smith is in his car, behind the wheel and ready to leave, he fears the other guy may come after him. Instead of driving off – which he could do with complete personal safety, he gets out of his car and grabs a shotgun from the trunk and kills the other man. Again, these are facts similar to a recent murder trial in Anchorage. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for manslaughter. The case is now on appeal. This is yet another situation in which our current law requires our citizens to walk away if they can do so with safety, but this proposed change in the law would authorize killing another human being instead.

Third Example:

An occupant in car A points a gun at the occupant in car B. If the occupant in car B can drive away with complete safety, then under the current law he must do so. Under the proposed change, the driver in car B would be authorized by this bill to open fire instead of driving away. The law of self-defense in Alaska requires the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt a defendant's claim of self-defense is not true. It is difficult to prove a negative. If the state cannot prove the negative beyond a reasonable doubt, then at least the state can try to prove that the driver of car B had a duty to retreat and could have done so. This law would eliminate that duty. That is a recipe for inviting gang violence on our streets. These facts are in fact very similar to another case prosecuted by our department. In 2006 there was a shooting at Reka and Bragaw in Anchorage. Two vehicles with young men exchanging gunfire. One young man was killed and the two men in the other vehicle were convicted of murder. One of those cases is on appeal. This loss of life occurred for one of the participants. What about the innocent bystander? For example, there was the election day shooting in Anchorage when a campaign worker for former Gov. Murkowski was hit by a stray bullet at campaign HQ in Anchorage across from the Sears mall. That case involved two vehicles with young men – not in gangs, but still rivals – who opened fire on one another. While we did prosecute the shooters in that case, do so would have been impossible under this law.

This bill would unintentionally encourage such conduct by making it legal or at least offering a defense – which even if not true – could not be disproved. In each of the four examples the defendants were convicted, but this proposed change would make such prosecutions much harder, if even possible.

The proposed subsection (6) in AS 11.81.330(b) would almost completely eliminate the duty to retreat. That subsection says there is no such duty when a person is "in any place where the person has a right to be." That means in the Diamond Mall, Sears Mall, McDonalds, or any other public location a person is no longer required to walk away from a confrontation, but instead may kill another citizen even if they could have walked away with complete safety. This does not express a value for human life. This does not encourage finding a resolution for disputes other than violence. The only time there would be a duty to retreat is if the person is some place they have no right to be – they must be trespassing, or committing a burglary in order to have such a duty. With this change you might as well simply eliminate the duty to retreat completely from our statutes.

The bill also proposes adding a new section that whittles away some of the other protections put in place to prevent unnecessary taking of human life. Our current self- defense law is set up with both a subjective and objective test to determine when deadly force is authorized. The subjective test means the person using the force believes he/she needs to do so. The objective tests means the "reasonable person" would have concluded the same thing. The added section proposes to eliminate the objective test in several circumstances: burglary, carjacking, and kidnapping. That is it takes away from the jury the question of whether a reasonable person would view a particular event as unlawful force against a person that required a response of deadly force. At first blush this seems reasonable. However, when you examine what is proposed more closely, it becomes very disturbing. To understand why, you must first understand each of the three crimes it references.

Burglary is found in AS 11.46 and not AS 11.41 because it is a crime against property, not a person. Burglary requires a person to enter a building with the intent to commit a crime – theft, vandalism, and assault are all examples. What must be noted though is that no person needs to be in the building in order for this to be a crime. If a person breaks into a home or business to steal something, this is a burglary. If a student breaks into a school to vandalize it, this is a burglary. If a person breaks into a home to assault another person – even if no one is home, this is still a burglary because burglary only addresses the entry of premises with the intent to commit a crime (called a target crime) whether that (target) crime is committed or not. This is why burglary is classified as a crime against property and not against a person.

Under current law non-deadly force may be used to protect property, and deadly force is only authorized when terminating an arson or attempted arson on a dwelling or occupied building (See AS 11.81.350(b)), or when terminating a burglary upon an occupied building or dwelling if the person using the force is in possession or control of that premises, or is a guest. See AS 11.81.350(c)).

The current bill would now authorize deadly force against a person who burgles a dwelling whether anyone was home or not. Thus deadly force may be used even when no human life is at risk.

The proposed bill would also authorize any person to use deadly force as compared to only a person who is in possession or control of or is an invited guest in the dwelling. This means the guy driving down the street may kill a person he thinks is breaking into a home. The state must disprove defense of property, so the state must disprove that a victim was committing burglary. While this new section is fraught with the potential for misunderstandings to lead to the unnecessary loss of human life, there is another more serious problem with this section. This new section authorizes deadly force against a person who is currently committing or had committed a burglary. This language authorizes vigilantism. It authorizes deadly force against any person whom the person using the force "had reason to believe" had – past tense – had committed a burglary. This new section says such force is reasonable. The only question left is if the person using the force also thought it was "reasonable."

The section on carjacking does the same thing. It authorizes the use of deadly force against someone who had -- past tense -- taken a car by force. Even if no human life was at risk in the taking, this law would say it is okay to kill to keep your car from being taken from you or afterwards. That sounds like retaliation and vigilantism, not like a legislature enacting laws to protect our citizens and improve our lives.

The kidnapping subsection has the same issue with past tense. In each and every section this bill would legalize and authorize vigilantism.

Finally the bill also says no arrest may be made "unless the agency" determines that there is probable cause that the force that used was unlawful. This puts the police in a difficult position especially when confronting gang related violence. It is also unclear to whom "the agency" refers. This could potentially require magistrates and grand juries to start deciding if self-defense has been disproven. This in turn would require the state to act as defense counsel for the defendant to present such a defense only to have to then disprove it. This may sound confusing, and that is because this bill could cause serious problems in the criminal justice system with regard to self-defense law.

Thank you for your consideration of this letter.

Hello Representative Neuman,
Keep up the good work on this bill - Alaskans need this! I hope you can keep the teeth in the next version you submit. Please don't let it get watered down so much that it can't help protect someone that ends up in a situation like Phillip Mielke.

Thank you, Stewart Amgwert

CAPITAL BUDGET
It's been a busy few weeks here in Juneau, but soon, SB 230, the Capital Budget bill, will be heard. The first scheduled hearing is on April 1st at 9 AM in Senate Finance. After hearings in Senate Finance it will pass to the Senate Floor for a vote before it comes to the House for consideration.

FY10 SUPPLEMENTAL BUDGET
The Alaska State House unanimously passed House Bill 326, the Fiscal Year 2010 supplemental budget authorizing operating appropriations and fund transfers. The bill appropriates a total of $1,682.6 billion dollars, of which $1,520.5 billion is in fund transfers, $5.0 million for fund capitalization, and $157.1 million for agency operations.

HB 326 authorizes two significant fund transfers: $1.1 billion to forward-fund K-12 education for Fiscal Year 2011 and $401 million to fully repay past borrowings from the Constitutional Budget Reserve Fund, or CBR. The fund transfer to the CBR is a significant accomplishment representing a concerted effort by legislators over the past three years of high oil prices to repay the debt owed to the state's savings account.

I want to take a moment and thank you for responding to my previous email pertaining to Alaskans' Right to self defense. This morning I heard on AM700 that you have written a bill to change the requirements for the use of deadly force within our state. If I understand correctly your bill would eliminate the requirment to flee the area. If this description is accurate, I support you and this Legislation completly. How can I find out more info on this Legislation and spread the word to my fellow ALaskans?
Thank you for standing on RIGHT, and speaking out against WRONG. Has Carl Gatto come out to support this legislation?

House Bill 381, an important self-defense reform measure, is currently on the move in Juneau.

Simply stated, HB381, introduced by State Representative Mark Neuman (R-15), would remove the duty to retreat in Alaska. Under this bill, Alaskans would have the right to use force, including deadly force, for self-defense anywhere they have a right to be.

As rural Alaskans we are not afforded the same police protection as those in the city. We need to maintain the provisions that HB381 provides us. The legal ability under the law to protect our property and our personal well being.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. Keep me informed.

Honorable Mark Neuman,
Thank you for sponsoring HB 381 Alaskan Self Defense Reform. Many of us live in places that are remote from a timely response from law enforcement. My house is 6 miles from Wasilla and the one time I called Troopers for an emergency it took 25 minutes for them to get here. This is due to our geographical size in the Valley. It is comforting to know I will be able to defend myself without retribution if that unfortunate situation ever presents itself. You and Rep Keller need to keep up the great work. To the Honorable Alaska State Representantives.

I am writting you today to urge you all to pass House Bill 381, Rep Mark Neuman's "An Act relating to self defense in any place where a person has a right to be."

This Bill has personal importance to me as last year (June 10, 2009) I was assaulted by a drug dealer at work. I was getting a plate number off a vehicle being driven by the dealers wife. The dealer jumped out of the moving vehicle and struck me several times in the head and face as I tried to retreat back into the building. The Anchorage Police have been unable to locate this person or the vehicle since. I had to have an operation to repair my partially severed ear and a second operation to remove my eyeball from my sinus cavity and to repair my eye socket. I still have a sensitivity to light and now have to wear corrective lenses that were not needed prior to the attack. I missed 2 months of work, and as the percentage of my base pay that was paid in workmans compensation was minimal, and that I had to pay 2 months of medical, dental and life insurance premiums as soon as I went back to work, my family is still trying to recover financially from this incident.

As the current law requires a person to retreat if possible, I believe that this new legislation would prove to be a great deterent from future attacks of this sort in our state if passed and signed into law and then publicized to let the criminal elements in our society know that we as citizens will not be victimized anymore.

Please consider the following taken from www.crimemapping.com as provided by the Anchorage Police Department:

For the last week here are the statistics of crimes in the Anchorage bowl area:

4-1-2010: 79 crimes commited. 9 Assaults. 5 Robberies. 12 Disturbances/Disorderly Conduct. 5 Burglaries. 4 Drugs. 4 DUI. 10 Fraud/Forgery. 25 Theft. 2 Vandalism. 2 Vehicle Theft. 1 Weapons Offense.

Thank you all for your representation and help.

(3) the person claiming self-defense was the initial aggressor; or

(4) the force used was the result of using a deadly weapon or dangerous instrument the person claiming self-defense possessed while

(A) acting alone or with others to further a felony criminal objective of the person or one or more other persons;

(B) a participant in a felony transaction or purported transaction or in immediate flight from a felony transaction or purported transaction in violation of AS 11.71; or

(C) acting alone or with others in revenge for, retaliation for, or response to actual or perceived conduct by a rival or perceived rival, or a member or perceived member of a rival group, if the person using deadly force, or the group on whose behalf the person is acting, has a history or reputation for violence among civilians.

(b) A person who is not justified in using force in self-defense in the circumstances listed in (a)(1) - (3) of this section is justified in using force in self-defense if that person has withdrawn from the encounter and effectively communicated the withdrawal to the other person, but the other person persists in continuing the incident by the use of unlawful force.

Sec. 11.81.335. Justification: Use of deadly force in defense of self.

(a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who is justified in using nondeadly force in self-defense under AS 11.81.330 may use deadly force in self-defense upon another person when and to the extent the person reasonably believes the use of deadly force is necessary for self-defense against

(1) death;

(2) serious physical injury;

(3) kidnapping, except for what is described as custodial interference in the first degree in AS 11.41.320 ;

(4) sexual assault in the first degree;

(5) sexual assault in the second degree;

(6) sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree; or

(7) robbery in any degree.

(b) A person may not use deadly force under this section if the person knows that, with complete personal safety and with complete safety as to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area of the encounter, except there is no duty to leave the area if the person is

(1) on premises

(A) that the person owns or leases;

(B) where the person resides, temporarily or permanently; or

(C) as a guest or express or implied agent of the owner, lessor, or resident;

(2) a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment or a person assisting a peace officer under AS 11.81.380;

(3) in a building where the person works in the ordinary course of the person's employment; or

(4) protecting a child or a member of the person's household.

Sec. 11.81.340. Justification: Use of force in defense of a third person.

A person is justified in using force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to defend a third person when, under the circumstances as the person claiming defense of another reasonably believes them to be, the third person would be justified under AS 11.81.330 or 11.81.335 in using that degree of force for self-defense.

Sec. 11.81.350. Justification: Use of force in defense of property and premises.

(a) A person may use nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission by the other of an unlawful taking or damaging of property or services.

(b) A person may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission of arson upon a dwelling or occupied building.

(c) A person in possession or control of any premises, or a guest or an express or implied agent of that person, may use

(1) nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission by the other of criminal trespass in any degree upon the premises;

(2) deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be a burglary in any degree occurring in an occupied dwelling or building.

(d) [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 68 SLA 2006].

(e) A person

(1) in a vehicle, or forcibly removed from a vehicle, may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be a carjacking of that vehicle at or about the time the vehicle is carjacked;

(2) outside of a vehicle may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the theft of that vehicle when another person, other than the perceived offender, is inside of the vehicle; this paragraph does not apply to a person outside of a vehicle who is involved in a dispute with a person inside of the vehicle who is a household member of that person; in this paragraph, "household member" has the meaning given in AS 18.66.990 .

(f) A person justified in using force under this section does not have a duty to leave or attempt to leave the area of the encounter before using force.

(g) In (e) of this section,

(1) "carjacking" means a robbery involving the taking or attempted taking of a vehicle from a person in possession of the vehicle;

(2) "vehicle" means a "motor vehicle" as defined in AS 28.40.100 , an aircraft, or a watercraft.

776.031 Use of force in defense of others.--A person is justified in the use of force, except deadly force, against another when and to the extent that the person reasonably believes that such conduct is necessary to prevent or terminate the other's trespass on, or other tortious or criminal interference with, either real property other than a dwelling or personal property, lawfully in his or her possession or in the possession of another who is a member of his or her immediate family or household or of a person whose property he or she has a legal duty to protect. However, the person is justified in the use of deadly force only if he or she reasonably believes that such force is necessary to prevent the imminent commission of a forcible felony. A person does not have a duty to retreat if the person is in a place where he or she has a right to be.

Utah Code
Title 76 Utah Criminal Code
Chapter 2 Principles of Criminal Responsibility
Section 402 Force in defense of person -- Forcible felony defined.

76-2-402. Force in defense of person -- Forcible felony defined.

(1) A person is justified in threatening or using force against another when and to the extent that he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to defend himself or a third person against such other's imminent use of unlawful force. However, that person is justified in using force intended or likely to cause death or serious bodily injury only if he or she reasonably believes that force is necessary to prevent death or serious bodily injury to himself or a third person as a result of the other's imminent use of unlawful force, or to prevent the commission of a forcible felony.

(2) A person is not justified in using force under the circumstances specified in Subsection (1) if he or she:

(a) initially provokes the use of force against himself with the intent to use force as an excuse to inflict bodily harm upon the assailant;

(b) is attempting to commit, committing, or fleeing after the commission or attempted commission of a felony; or

(c) (i) was the aggressor or was engaged in a combat by agreement, unless he withdraws from the encounter and effectively communicates to the other person his intent to do so and, notwithstanding, the other person continues or threatens to continue the use of unlawful force; and

(ii) for purposes of Subsection (i) the following do not, by themselves, constitute "combat by agreement":

(A) voluntarily entering into or remaining in an ongoing relationship; or

(B) entering or remaining in a place where one has a legal right to be.

(3) A person does not have a duty to retreat from the force or threatened force described in Subsection (1) in a place where that person has lawfully entered or remained, except as provided in Subsection (2)(c).

HB 386
Uniform Citations - Overview
Prepared by Representative Mike Hawker's Office

HB 386 establishes and requires the use of a uniform format, process and standard deadlines for citations issued in the state. The process is contained in sections 21 – 31 of the bill. The rest of the bill adopts the standard process for various citations.

Uniform Citation Process and Format contained in AS 12.25.175 – 12.25.230:

- 12.25.175 (new section of law) sets out requirements for the standard citation format, requires the commissioner of the Department of Public Safety to provide or prescribe the standard citation formats, and enables the commissioner to adopt regulations. Uniform citations must adhere to a statewide numbering system and contain specific information described in AS 12.25.200 (b). The citation issuer is also required to make an oath or affirmation, if authorized to do so, or make a statement under penalty of perjury that the citation was true and personally served on the person charged.

- 12.25.180 (existing law) clarifies when an officer can issue a citation instead of making an arrest. Most of the changes reword existing law for clarity and have no substantive effect.
  - In (a)(2), the requirement that the officer have "reasonable and probable cause to believe" that a person is a danger to self or others is replaced with "reasonably believes." Probable cause indicates there are certain elements that must be met, whereas a reasonable belief can be articulated more easily. Because it is within the officer's discretion to arrest or issue a citation, that determination should be based on a reasonable belief, rather than probable cause.
  - In (b)(2), the requirement that the person receiving the citation provide a written promise to appear in court is removed to facilitate electronic transmission of the citation. The required issuer's oath or statement that a copy of the citation was correctly served (required by AS 12.25.175) satisfies the intent of this statute.

- 12.25.190 (existing law) clarifies when a person shall be given a five-day notice to appear in court. Most of the changes are language repeals to accommodate the standard process adopted in this legislation and rewording for clarity.
  - The provision allowing a person to request a hearing earlier than five days after the citation is issued is repealed. Officers in the field cannot always forward a citation to the court for a hearing in fewer than five days.

- 12.25.195 (existing law) outlines the disposition of "scheduled offenses" – violations that have an established bail or fine amount. If a person doesn't contest the citation, there is a standard 30 day deadline for paying the bail or fine, regardless of the type of citation.

- 12.25.200 (existing law) specifies a format for citations. The changes to this section expand its applicability to all citations, instead of just those issued by law enforcement.

- 12.25.210 (existing law) outlines recordkeeping requirements for citation issuers. The changes to this section expand its applicability to all citations, instead of just those issued by law enforcement. This section also sets a 10 working day deadline for citations to be filed with the court and clarifies that missing the filing deadline does not negate the citation.

- 12.25.230 (existing law) outlines the penalties for failure to pay a fine or appear in court, as required by a citation. The current language is confusing. While having two sections implies that that each offense should have a different penalty, because the type of misdemeanor is not defined, they can be interpreted to apply the same penalty to both types of citation. Under HB 386, there would be a bright line between offenses that require a court appearance and "scheduled offenses" which carry a particular fine and can be paid by mail.

- 12.25.230 (a) states that the penalty for failing to appear to answer a citation that requires a court appearance would be a class A misdemeanor (see penalties above).
- 12.25.230 (b) states that the penalty for failing to appear or pay the bail or fine for a citation for a "scheduled offense" is a class B misdemeanor, which is punishable by up to a $2,000 fine and/or imprisonment of up to 90 days.

Statutory changes to implement the Uniform Citation Process and Format for various violations:

- Sections 1, 4, 7, 9, 14, 17, 32, 35, 38, 39, 40, 41, 45, 46, 50, 57 and 59 are statutory references changed or added to reference the standard citation process and format:

- Sections 2, 5, 33, 36, 42, 55, and 57 reflect the standard deadline of 30 days for payment for a "scheduled offense" citation (see AS 12.25.195). These sections also add language specifying that this deadline is for violators who plead "no contest," since a person contesting the citation wouldn't be sending in a payment.

- Sections 3, 6, 34, 37, 43, 54, 56 and 58 are individual penalty sections that are amended or repealed and reenacted to adopt the uniform penalties in AS 12.25.230.

- Sections 10, 14, 18, 46 and 50 remove the condition that a citation be "in writing" (see notes for AS 12.25.180 (b)(2)).

- Sections 11, 15, 19, 47, and 51 reflect the five day notice and repeal language allowing a person to request an earlier hearing (see notes for AS 12.25.190).

- Sections 12 and 52 reflect the 10 day deadline for a citation to be filed with the court by the citation issuer (see AS 12.25.210).

- Sections 13, 16, 20, 48, and 53 repeal language specifying what needs to be in particular citations and instead state that a citation that complies with the uniform format is considered to be a lawful complaint for the purposes of prosecution.

Miscellaneous Sections:

- Sections 8 and 24 ensure that the law is consistent after other previously enacted bills sunset. The language mirrors language found in sections 7 and 23, respectively.

- Section 44 allows citations to be given for violations in the Knik River Public Use Area.

- Section 49 allows DPS to establish regulations to implement standardized citations.

- Section 60 repeals statutes regarding citation formats that are made moot by adoption of the standardized format in this bill.

- Sections 61-65 provide applicability instructions, transitional provisions and effective dates.

House Bill 386
Sponsor Statement

"An Act establishing a uniform format and procedure for citations for certain violations of state law; relating to the form, issuance, and disposition of citations for certain violations; relating to certain crimes and penalties for noncompliance with citations; and providing for an effective date."

House Bill 386 gives the Department of Public Safety necessary authority to prescribe a uniform citation format and process. Standardizing the citation process will improve efficiency and interdepartmental communications, facilitating electronic sharing of citation data between law enforcement, prosecution, courts and state and municipal collection departments.

By standardizing deadlines for payments, responses and paperwork filing by the citation issuer, HB 386 will also reduce confusion for citizens receiving citations and allow more fines to be paid through the courts' online e-payment system. A standard process is also an integral step in preparing for a statewide database and digital interoperability.

HB408 "An Act relating to misconduct involving weapons"

Under Alaska law, an individual who has been convicted of a felony can carry hand guns and have their right to bear arms restored by any of three occurrences: (1) a pardon, (2) the underlying conviction having been set aside under AS 12.55.085, or (3) by the passage of ten years time from an unconditional discharge.

However, the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Caron v. U.S., 524 U.S. 308 (1988), ruled that if a person who has been previously convicted of a felony is prohibited from possessing firearms, in any way, under state law, then they are prohibited from possessing firearms under federal law.

While under state law a previously convicted ex-felon's right to possession of firearms is fully restored, there are still limitations on carrying concealed weapons. Ex-felons can carry concealed on their own property, while engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, or trapping, or while engaged in other lawful activities that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

However, the ATF and the FBI are interpreting Alaska's statute to be a restriction upon possession. Due to this interpretation, Alaskans who under state law are allowed to possess firearms are being threatened with prosecution for serious Federal offenses.

This bill addresses the language in AS 11.61.200, Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree. AS 11.61.200(a)(12) bars all people convicted of felonies from caring concealed weapons, while AS 11.61.200(g) sets out exemptions to (a)(12)'s blanket ban.

The Alaska State Legislature has made its own policy decision about how to handle the gun rights of ex-felons; however the Federal Government has stripped Alaska of the right to make its own judgments, excepting an all-or-nothing decision on gun rights for ex-felons. HB408 is one of many bills that have been drafted in this legislation session to bring this issue back before the Alaska State Legislature for consideration.

MEMORANDUM February 16, 2010

SUBJECT: Misconduct Involving Weapons and Felons
(Work Order No. 26-LS1459\A)

TO: Representative Bill Stoltze
Attn: Ben Mulligan

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Legislative Counsel

Enclosed is the bill draft you requested. As I have previously informed Ben, I have a few comments.

1. History of AS 11.61.200

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) does not completely include all conduct prohibited under AS 11.61.200(a)(12).

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) and (12) provide:

> (a) A person commits the crime of misconduct involving weapons in the third degree if the person
> (1) knowingly possesses a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory;
> . . .
> (12) knowingly possesses a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony or adjudicated a delinquent minor for conduct that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

AS 11.61.200(a)(1) prohibits a felon from possessing a firearm capable of being concealed on the person.[1] An affirmative defense is provided to AS 11.61.200(a)(1) in (b)(1) of that section.

> (b) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution
> (1) under (a)(1) of this section that
> (A) the person convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
> (B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
> (C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the person's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(1) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory . . . .

This affirmative defense allows the felon to possess a handgun if one of these requirements is met but does not necessarily allow the felon to carry the handgun concealed. The felon is prohibited from carrying the handgun concealed by AS 11.51.200(a)(12). An affirmative defense is provided to AS 11.61.200(a)(12) in (g) of that section.

> (g) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that > (1) either
> (A) the defendant convicted of the prior offense on which the action is based received a pardon for that conviction;
> (B) the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085 or as a result of post-conviction proceedings; or
> (C) a period of 10 years or more has elapsed between the date of the defendant's unconditional discharge on the prior offense or adjudication of juvenile delinquency and the date of the violation of (a)(12) of this section, and the prior conviction or adjudication of juvenile delinquency did not result from a violation of AS 11.41 or of a similar law of the United States or of another state or territory; and
> (2) at the time of possession, the defendant was > (A) in the defendant's dwelling or on land owned or leased by the defendant appurtenant to the dwelling; or

---

[1] For ease of discussion in this memorandum I will refer to "a firearm capable of being concealed on the person" as a handgun even though other firearms are capable of being concealed on the person.

(B) actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.

This provision allows the felon to only carry a handgun concealed if the felon meets the requirements for possessing a handgun in the affirmative defense to (a)(1) and the felon is either in or on the felon's own property or otherwise engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping, or other lawful outdoor activity.

These provisions are different because one allows the handgun to be openly carried and the other sets a higher bar for the felon to carry the handgun concealed.

AS 11.61.220(a)(12) was enacted in 1998 as part of amendments to the concealed handgun permit laws. HCS CSSB 141(FIN) am H, by Senator Lyda Green, made substantial changes to the eligibility requirements to receive a concealed handgun permit and repealed almost all the restrictions on where a permittee could carry a concealed handgun. The rationale provided by Senator Lyda Green's staff was that anyone eligible to possess a handgun under state or federal law should be eligible to receive a concealed handgun permit and a person who has received a permit should be able to carry a concealed handgun anywhere not otherwise prohibited under state or federal law. To this end certain misdemeanor offenses that previously barred a person from receiving a permit were eliminated. In addition provisions relating to carrying a concealed firearm without a permit were strengthened and clarified while restrictions on where firearms could be possessed were mostly eliminated except for a few limited circumstances where those restrictions were applied generally to everyone (where previously the restrictions only had applied to persons holding permits to carry concealed weapons). As a part of this clarification AS 11.61.200(a)(12)[2] was enacted so that felons who possessed a handgun that was concealed were punished at a greater level than regular members of the public who carried a concealed handgun without a permit. And so a felon who might be permitted to possess a handgun due to the affirmative defense provided in AS 11.61.200(b)(1), would still be subject to a felony penalty if they carried that handgun concealed unless they (1) met the requirements to possess a handgun and (2) were in or on their own property or engaged in certain lawful outdoor activities.

In 2003 the Alaska Legislature enacted CSHB 102(STA) which removed restrictions on members of the public from carrying concealed deadly weapons, including firearms. CSHB 102(STA) made the concealed handgun permit system permissive; no longer would a permit be necessary to carry a handgun concealed.[3] Presumably at this time the legislature could have repealed AS 11.61.200(a)(12) and (g) as Alaska no longer distinguished between open or concealed possession of firearms. But the legislature did not. I cannot say that the legislature merely overlooked those provisions as I remember some concern by at least some members about extending the right to carry concealed to those that had committed felonies.

[2] As well as the affirmative defense of AS 11.61.200(g).

[3] Although a permit could still be obtained if a person wanted to avail themselves of reciprocity provisions of other states and carry concealed in those states.

2. Do you want to allow all felons convicted of crimes outside of AS 11.41 to be able to carry concealed handguns?

To build on my comment #1 above, the changes in this bill draft would allow felons convicted of crimes outside of AS 11.41 to carry concealed handguns, if they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed from the felon's unconditional discharge for the offense. Felonies outside of AS 11.41 include unclassified felonies and class A through C felonies, such as arson, misconduct involving controlled substances (including engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise, delivering drugs to children and methamphetamine manufacture and delivery), burglary of a dwelling or while armed with a firearm, promoting prostitution, and distribution and possession of child pornography. Clearly, felons who have received a pardon should be treated differently and a change in current law is clearly warranted in this regard. To a lesser extent persons who have received a set aside under AS 12.55.085(e) are probably deserving of a change in current law. The question becomes whether felons who have not had someone pass upon their character, whether that be the governor in issuing a pardon or a judge when issuing a set aside, should be able to possess concealed handguns merely because of the passage of time.. If so, should this apply to all felonies, even felonies that are considered more egregious or comparable to crimes against a person under AS 11.41?

3. Changing affirmative defense to nonapplicability provision.

The bill draft changes the affirmative defense provided in AS 11.61.200(b) to a nonapplicability provision. This change may have an extreme impact upon the ability of the state to prosecute felons possessing concealable firearms. Currently an affirmative defense is provided for felons to show that they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed from their conviction for a felony other than a crime against a person. The reason this is an affirmative defense is because the information necessary to establish the defense is within the knowledge and control of the felon and may not be available to the prosecution. A felon knows if they have received a pardon, a set aside, or 10 years have elapsed while the prosecution does not always have access to this information.[4] By making this a nonapplicability section, the prosecution may be required to disprove the existence of a pardon or set aside, or prove that 10 years have not elapsed, prior to the case proceeding. In many cases this may not be possible.

Background Information
House Bill 408
Restoration of Firearm Rights in Alaska

• Under Alaska State law, a person who has been convicted of a felony is NOT prohibited from possessing a rifle or shotgun. In effect, the person's right to possess such a firearm is restored by operation of law upon the person's release from incarceration.

• Under Alaska State law, a person who has been convicted of a felony IS prohibited from possessing a firearm capable of being concealed on one's person (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(1)) and, separately, IS prohibited from possessing a firearm that is actually concealed on the person (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(12)).

• Alaska State law also provides, however, for an "affirmative defense" to a prosecution under either the felon-in-possession-of-a-concealable-firearm statute or the felon-in-possession-of-a-concealed-firearm statute if the person's civil rights have been restored as follows:

(1) For possession of firearms capable of being concealed, if the person has received a pardon or if the conviction has been set aside or if a period of ten years or more has elapsed since the date of the person's unconditional discharge (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(b)); and

(2) For possession of firearms that are actually concealed, if the person has received a pardon or if the conviction has been set aside or if a period of ten years or more has elapsed since the date of the person's unconditional discharge. The restoration of the right to possess a concealed firearm is further limited, however, to the following circumstances: in the person's dwelling, on land owned or leased by the person appurtenant to the dwelling or while the person is actually engaged in lawful hunting, fishing, trapping or other lawful outdoor activity that necessarily involves the carrying of a weapon for personal protection (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)).

• Further, it is important to note that under Alaska State law, restoration, by operation of law after the passage of time, of the right to possess either a firearm that is capable of being concealed or a firearm that actually is concealed is limited to persons who were NOT convicted of an offense against the person (Alaska Stat § 11.41).

• It is also important to note that under Alaska State law, the rights to vote (and, as a qualified voter, to hold public office) and to serve on a jury are lost upon conviction of a felony but automatically restored, by operation of law, immediately upon the person's unconditional discharge (Alaska Stat. §§ 09.20.020; 15.05.030(a); 33.30.241).

• Under Federal law, a person who has been convicted of a "crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year" may not possess a firearm (18 USC § 922(g)).

• Federal law also provides, however, that "any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction...UNLESS such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not...possess firearms" (18 USC § 921(a)(20)).

• In the case of Caron v. United States (524 U.S. 308 (1998)), the Supreme Court of the United States:

(1) Found that "nothing in the text of §921(a)(20) requires a case-by-case decision to restore civil rights" so restoration of such rights by operation of law is sufficient; and

(2) Interpreted the aforementioned "unless clause" found in 18 USC § 921 (a)(20). The Court held that an "all-or-nothing" test must be applied and that "a state weapons 'limitation' activates the uniform ban on possessing any firearm at all." In other words, a state must completely restore "all" of a person's rights and treat the person whose rights have been restored in the same manner that other law-abiding citizens are treated. If a person does not have "all" rights restored by the state then, for the purpose of federal law, the person has no rights. Subsequent cases have held that complete restoration of "all" rights includes, not only ALL firearm rights, but also the rights to vote, hold public office and serve on a jury.

• Alaska State law contains two "limitations" on persons who have had their right to possess firearms otherwise restored that are not imposed on persons who have never lost their rights and which, therefore, activate the federal ban on possessing any firearm at all:

(1) A person whose right to possess firearms has been otherwise restored can not possess a firearm concealed outside their dwelling, property or while engaged in a lawful outdoor activity (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)(2); and

(2) A person whose right to possess firearms has been otherwise restored would be in the position of having to raise an affirmative defense to a charge of either possessing a concealable firearm (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(b)) or carrying a firearm concealed (Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(g)), while a person who never lost his or her rights cannot be charged with such a crime whatsoever.

• Unless the Alaska State Legislature amends existing law to modify these two limitations, the existing policy of the State of Alaska to allow for the restoration of firearm rights cannot be implemented without impacted persons being subject to felony prosecution under Federal law.

RE: House Bill 408 – SUPPORT

I am writing on behalf of the National Rifle Association – Institute for Legislative Action to express support for House Bill 408. HB 408 would facilitate the implementation of the current Alaska state law that allows persons who have long-past felony convictions but whose rights have been restored to possess firearms in the state. Although the legislative fix necessary to solve this problem is simple, the reason it is necessary is quite a technical and complicated interaction between state law, federal law and a U.S. Supreme Court decision (attached is a detailed summary of the various issues at conflict).

While many advocates for the restoration of voting rights for persons with past felony convictions talk about dignity, with respect to the restoration of firearm rights there is not only the issue of dignity but of life and death. The nature of life in Alaska, especially in the rural areas, makes possession of firearms a necessity not only for food but for protection in the field.

Current Alaska State law provides for the restoration of roughly 95% of firearms rights to those former offenders who qualify. They can possess rifles and shotguns, they can possess handguns, they can carry handguns openly and they can carry handguns concealed in their home, on their property and while engaged in lawful outdoor activities out in public. The only thing they cannot do under state law is put on a coat and cover a handgun when they are somewhere other than those places previously listed.

The problem is that, based on the Court decision discussed in my attachment, because the State of Alaska does not restore 100% of an affected person's firearm rights, under federal law the person is considered to have NO rights whatsoever! In a Legal Services Memorandum dated April 1, 2009, Legislative Counsel Gerald Luckhaupt described the Court's conclusion as "obviously incorrect." While the NRA would completely agree with Mr. Luckhaupt, only three Supreme Court Justices shared such a view and the decision was 6-3 in this case.

As discussed in my attachment, there are two changes that must be made to State law: first, the restriction on concealed carry must be repealed and second, two affirmative defenses found in AS § 11.61.200 must be changed to exceptions. With these two changes, Alaska State law would treat persons who have had their rights restored exactly the same as those who have never lost their rights and the problem would be solved.

It is the hope of the National Rifle Association that legislators can get beyond the perceived stigma of "giving firearms to felons" and realize the legitimacy of allowing persons, who have long ago paid their debt to society, to attain the restoration of their rights already provided by the State of Alaska but extinguished by an "obviously incorrect" U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Please support House Bill 408.

Dear Honorable House Judiciary Committee,

I regret I am not able to testify today. I am piloting a rescue helicopter in remote austere conditions where help is days away if trouble arises. I am on a search for an overdue individual 60 NM south of Kaktovik on the Arctic Slope. Not far from where we shot and killed a 3 year old grizzly that mauled and consumed two persons a few years ago. Last night I assisted Pt. Hope whalers on floating sea ice pans that broke loose from shorefast in high winds.

Article 3, subpart 21 of the Alaska Constitution gives the power of clemency exclusively to the executive branch. The clemency process is long, difficult, thorough and exhausting. It is rarely granted and requires extraordinary circumstances. It also requires exemplary efforts at rehabilitation. I assure you the chances of criminal recidivism after earning a pardon are zero.

Below are some definitions and laws. It is clear that both Congress and the Alaska Legislature intended to provide restorative avenues for ex offenders regarding firearm possession. Needless to say today I do not have the survival tools I need to protect myself, family or those I serve. Even after earning a full unconditional pardon I am still being punished in the worst way. Inability to protect my own life. I pray you will rectify the law to allow its intended design ring true. Allow those that earn pardons have all punishment removed. Thank you for defending the Alaska Constitution and the unique lifestyles we live.

Federal law on firearms disability:

18 U.S.C. §921(a)(20) provides:

What constitutes a conviction of such a crime shall be determined in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held. Any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of this chapter, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly [or implicitly as a matter of state law] provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms.

Note: It is clear Congress intended for a restorative legal option. It also does not mention conceal has a limitation. This was added by the US Supreme court Caron split decision. (All or nothing)

Excerpt from the current State of Alaska Clemency handbook:

Pardons
A pardon is a form of Executive Clemency, which if full and unconditional, relieves an offender from further punishment and disabilities imposed by reason of a criminal offense. It is an act of grace which represents forgiveness for a particular crime.

Definition of a pardon from Black's Law Dictionary:

In contrast to a reprieve or a commutation, a "pardon" releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 1113 (6th ed. 1990).
See also, 1985 N.D. Op. Att'y Gen. 158 and 1988 N.D. Op. Att'y Gen. 65.
A pardon is usually an action that mitigates or sets aside punishment for a crime after a conviction. Black's Law Dictionary defines it as an 'act or an instance of officially nullifying punishment or other legal consequences of a crime' (ibid., at 1137).

Dear [redacted]

Several weeks ago, I furnished you some prosed draft legislation involving possession problems under Alaska law for persons who were pardoned or received suspended imposition of sentences for felony charges I have since run our proposed changes by the NRA attorneys and they have some improvements. As a result, I am resending this to you with what we originally sent along with the suggested improvements. This, then, is an updated version of what was sent previously. Please note the highlighted portions of the last paragraph.

The laws regarding possession of firearms in Alaska—laws which were contemplated and enacted by our own state legislature—are being attacked, gutted and rewritten by bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI. Attempts to correct these errors at the federal level have been ignored. It is now incumbent upon the Alaska legislature to take action to defend the rights of Alaskans. In this letter I will explain the source of the problem, illustrate particular grievances against the federal agencies involved, and offer the proper solution—a recrafting of Alaska Statute 11.61.200(g)(2).

Under Alaska law, an individual who has been convicted of a felony can have their right to bear arms restored by any of three occurrences: a pardon, a suspended imposition of sentence, or by the passage of ten years from unconditional discharge. The Alaska legislature, recognizing both the distinctions of life in Alaska and also the profound respect that the majority of Alaskans have for the right to bear arms, has made the decision to establish a means by which individuals who have previously been convicted of a felony may regain their right to bear arms. The bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI have subverted the goals of the Alaska legislature through the tortured and twisted application of limited U.S. Supreme Court cases to Alaska law. In doing so, these agencies have wrongfully deprived Alaskans of their rights.

In Caron v. U.S., the U.S. Supreme Court held that if a person who has previously been convicted of a felony is prohibited from possessing any type of firearm under state law, then they are prohibited from possessing all firearms under federal law.[1] Prior to this ruling, several states allowed previously convicted felons to regain the right to possess rifles and shotguns but prohibited them from possessing handguns.[2] Alaska law draws no distinctions among the types of firearms which a previously convicted felon may posses.[3] Alaska law allows an individual whose rights have been restored to possess rifles, shotguns and handguns. The only limit contained in our state law is upon the carrying of a concealed firearm by a person whose rights have been restored.[4] While the right of possession is fully restored, an individual who has previously been convicted of a felony may only carry a firearm concealed under limited circumstances - either while he is upon his own land or while he is engaged in outdoor activities that would "necessarily involve the carrying of a weapon for personal protection."[5]

An accurate reading of the Alaska statutes reveals that our state law should not be impacted by the Court's holding in Caron. Alaska law does not limit the "type" of firearms which a previously convicted felon may possess. Furthermore, the single limitation in place for previously convicted felons proscribes only their ability to carry a firearm in a concealed manner, and does not limit their right of possession in any way. The ATF and FBI are, however, interpreting the Alaska statute as a restriction upon possession. Because of this interpretation, Alaskans who have led productive lives, but who have convictions sometimes decades in their past, are being denied their right to own guns, and even being threatened with prosecution for serious Federal offenses.

[5] Id. The Alaska appellate courts have not established an objective test or enumerated specific criteria to consider when determining which activities Anecessarily involve the carrying of a weapon for personal protection.@

To better understand the plight of the individuals being affected by this law, I will offer some specific examples. In 1970, at the tender age of 19, R.S. made the mistake of getting caught up in recreational drug use. He was arrested for the possession of hallucinogens and convicted of a felony. As a first-time youthful offender, he was granted a suspended imposition of sentence, and given the opportunity to mend his ways. He is now a happily married 56-year-old father. He has worked, hunted and fished his entire life. He only learned recently, when he applied for the purchase of a new firearm, that he is now suddenly prohibited from owning firearms, despite having been granted a suspended imposition of sentence more than 30 years ago.

R.P. was convicted of a felony in 1992. After paying for his crime, he went straight to work helping the public. He became the director of the search and rescue organization for an Alaskan borough. Governor Murkowski granted him a full pardon, expressly for the purpose of allowing him to possess a firearm to help him fulfill his duties. He recently became aware of the fact that—despite the Governor's pardon—federal law prohibits him from possessing firearms.

The Federal law has stripped Alaska of the right to make its own decision on restoring gun rights to ex-felons. The overreaching actions of the bureaucrats at the ATF and FBI have left Alaska with a single option - to amend AS 11.61.200 to remove the disability on carrying a concealed weapon by a person convicted of a felony who has had their rights restored. By removing this disability in Alaska's law, the ATF and FBI will have no basis whatsoever to challenge Alaska's laws, and we can allow ex-felons who have proven their rehabilitation to participate in the full rights that all Alaskans enjoy.

I have included the text of two sample bills that would amend AS 11.61.200, and restore Alaska's policy of allowing rehabilitated ex-felons to own firearms. I had the proposed legislation reviewed by the NRA and the NRA still sees problems with our proposed solutions. I've enclosed a copy of the memo I received from the NRA outlining such problems and the NRA's suggested proposal. We would urge the Legislature to adopt these changes, as suggested by the NRA, to assure the continued support of the right of Alaskans to bear arms for the defense of themselves and others.

Sincerely,

Re: Proposed legislation
File: 11.61.220 Project
Date: 9 September 2008

Several of our clients have experienced problems in either being denied an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit (CHP) or denied permission to purchase firearms during a "National Instant Criminal Background Check System" (NICS) check.

These problems stem from the language of AS 11.61.200, the Alaska Statute for Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree. AS 11.61.200(a)(12) bars all people convicted of felonies from carrying a concealed weapon, while AS 11.61.200(g) sets out the exceptions to (a)(12)'s blanket ban.

Because of the limited nature of subsection (g)'s exceptions, the Alaska Department of Public Safety takes the position, upheld by the Alaska Supreme Court in Gabrielle v. State of Alaska, that anyone with a felony conviction is ineligible for an Alaska CHP. Additionally, the FBI has taken the position that the limit on a felon's ability to carry a concealed weapon under AS 11.61.200(a)(12) & (g) activate the federal ban on the possession of any firearm under 18 USC §922(g), as intepreted in Caron v. U.S.

I shall attempt to describe how the particular provisions of Alaska and Federal law have created these twin problems, and what we can do to attempt to fix them by changing Alaska's law.

The Alaska CHP Issue

The Alaska Department of Public Safety has taken the position that anyone with a prior felony conviction, regardless of the time since the conviction or whether the conviction was set aside or pardoned, does not qualify for an Alaska CHP. They have based this determination on the limited scope of the exceptions in AS 11.61.200(g) to the total ban in 11.61.200(a)(12) of any felon carrying a concealed firearm.

AS 11.61.200(g) only allows a convicted felon to carry a concealed firearm if; (1) the conviction has been pardoned, (2) the conviction has been set aside, or (3) 10 years have elapsed since the conviction, and either (a) the person was in their home or on land immediately adjacent to their home, or (b) was engaged in an outdoor activity that necessitated carrying the weapon for personal protection. Thus, without both some evidence of rehabilitation in (1)-(3), and observing the limited conditions for carrying in (a)-(b), a person convicted of a felony is guilty of Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Third Degree if they carry a concealed weapon.

The Alaska Department of Public Safety's interpretation of AS 11.61.200 was upheld in Gabrielle v. State of Alaska.[1] There, the Supreme Court of Alaska held that a person with a felony record of any description, though not prohibited from applying for an Alaska CHP under the statutes and regulations governing eligibility for the permit, nevertheless was not entitled to an Alaska CHP because of the restrictions found in AS 11.61.200. Because this issue has been appealed to the highest court capable of deciding the issue, the only way to change this outcome is through legislation.

The NICS Check / 18 USC §922(g)(1) Issue

The FBI's National Instant Criminal Background Check System implements a federal requirement that all federally licensed firearms dealers conduct a background check on all prospective firearms purchasers. The background check screens those that have been disqualified from purchasing firearms through operation of federal law. Information is entered into the NICS system by multiple state and federal agencies, but the FBI determines whether the information provided disqualifies an individual from purchasing firearms.

Many of the federal restrictions on possession of firearms are found at 18 U.S.C. §922(g). §922(g)(1) prohibits anyone who has been convicted of a felony from possessing a firearm, however §921(a)(20) contains an exception for those felons who have had their civil rights restored (through operation of law, a pardon, or any similar means). The exception in §921(a)(20) has its own exception, however, prohibiting those convicted of a felony whose civil rights have been restored from possessing a firearm if state law prohibits them from possessing a weapon of any type.

The exception to the exception found in §921(a)(20) was interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court in Caron v U.S.[2] There, the Court faced a person whose civil rights had been restored under Massachusetts law, including the right to possess long guns and handguns. However, he was not allowed to carry handguns outside his home or business, though this right was afforded to non-felons. The Supreme Court found that this restriction, though not strictly a prohibition against of possession of handguns, was enough of a restriction to activate the exception to the exception found in §921(a)(20).

Applying Caron to Alaska law, the FBI has taken the position that the restrictions on ex-felons carrying concealed weapons found in AS 11.61.200(a)(12) & (g) are sufficient to activate the exception to the exception found in 18 U.S.C. §921(a)(20). Because of this interpretation, ex-felons in Alaska, even those who have had convictions set aside or pardoned, are barred from possessing any firearm by §922(g)(1).

[1] 158 P.3d 813 (Alaska 2007).

The FBI's interpretation of the effect of AS 11.61.200 on the application of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1) is contrary to the Alaska Supreme Court's interpretation in Gabrielle (which was not binding on the FBI), and has been questioned in other federal cases such as the unpublished U.S. v Flores.[3] However, given the similarity between Alaska law and the Massachusetts law at question in Caron (both allowed possession of all types of weapons, but restricted where and how handguns could be carried), the FBI's interpretation of the law is not clearly incorrect. It would be possible to challenge the FBI in court, but it is far from certain that we could obtain a favorable result.

The Common Factor

The common factor in both of these issues is AS 11.61.200, and the restriction on ex-felons carrying concealed weapons in Alaska, except under certain narrow exceptions. While Alaska has several statutes covering the crime of "Misconduct Involving Weapons," enumerating different degrees of the offense, no other iteration of the statute implicates the carrying or possession of weapons by ex-felons, and so would not impact either eligibility for an Alaska CHP or eligibility under the FBI's NICS system.

Likewise, Alaska's statutes and regulations governing Alaska's CHP program (AS 18.65.700-790, 13 AAC 30.010-900) set out eligibility requirements, including disqualifications if an applicant has had multiple recent misdemeanor offenses or has been ordered by a court to attend a drug- or alcohol-rehabilitation clinic. However, none of the requirements for a CHP touch on the status of the applicant as an ex-felon; pardoned, conviction set aside, or otherwise. Thus, none of these statutes or regulations need to be revised in addressing either the CHP or NICS issue.

Therefore, a legislative fix to this issue need only modify the restrictions on ex-felons carrying or possessing weapons that are found in AS 11.61.200.

The Possible Solutions

Alaska is unusually laissez-faire in its approach to gun rights (being one of two states that allows concealed carry of firearms without a permit). However, Alaska also tends towards a tougher stance on crime issues than other states. In attempting to change the policy embodied in AS 11.61.200 towards the gun rights of ex-felons, we will be working in the cross-currents of these two conflicting political priorities.

[3] 118 Fed. Appx. 49 (C.A.6 (Mich.)).

From a strictly political perspective, we could attempt to counter some of the turbulence of a legislative proposal by noting that it is federal law that has forced us to seek a modification of our state law, in order to allow us to pursue our own policy of granting forgiveness to, and restoring the rights of, ex-felons. Federal law has stripped Alaska of its right to make its own determination of how ex-felons are to exercise their gun rights, and leaves us only a simplistic all-or-nothing choice as to whether ex-felons should regain their gun rights.

There are several different methods we could pursue to change AS 11.61.200 so as to allow for ex-felons to apply for an Alaska CHP and to bypass the federal ban on possession found in 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1). The principal question in changing the restrictions found in AS 11.61.200, however, is how far to expand the re-enfranchisement of gun rights to ex-felons.

First, in order to permit ex-felons to apply for an Alaska CHP, or to possess a weapon under 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1) and Caron, we must remove the restrictions on where an ex-felon may carry a concealed weapon found in AS 11.61.200(g)(2) (I have attached two sample proposed bills with this memo for you to review). This would allow an ex-felon to carry a concealed weapon under the same circumstances that any other citizen would be able to. This would broaden the rights of ex-felons, as it allows them to carry concealed weapons where previously they were not allowed to. However, this is the only means of restoring their right to own weapons at all, given the FBI's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1).

As for how far to extend re-enfranchisement, currently AS 11.61.200(g) identifies three groups of ex-felons that it restores gun rights to; ex-felons who (1) received a pardon, (2) had their conviction set aside, or (3) had more than 10 years elapse since they finished serving their sentence and who had not committed a violent felony. There is a strong argument that all three groups should be granted full re-enfranchisement, as all three demonstrate some individualized showing of rehabilitation, rather than automatically granting an ex-felon gun rights as soon as they get out of jail.

Conclusion

Alaska has made its own policy decision about how to handle the gun rights of ex-felons, however the Federal Government has stripped Alaska of the right to make our own judgments except for an all-or-nothing decision on the gun rights of ex-felons. That message of Federal interference with Alaska's laws is the message we should emphasize in attempting to amend AS 11.61.200, in order to restore the gun rights of those denied them under the federal government's ban.

By certified mail with return receipt

Dear Mr. [redacted]

I received your e-mail dated April 6, 2008 appealing the denial of your application to obtain an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit, and have given careful consideration to your appeal. Your appeal is denied. An explanation of the reason for this denial is as follows.

In stating your case, you provide abundant evidence of your good character and legal standing, as well as expressing frustration with an action by this department which you feel unwarranted in your circumstances.

The original decision to deny your application was based upon your convictions for 2nd degree burglary. Sentencing for your convictions was suspended and eventually your convictions were set aside. Burglary in the second degree is a felony. A felony conviction disqualifies an applicant from obtaining an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit. A felony conviction that has been set aside is still a disqualifier for the issuance of an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit. State law (13 AAC 30.900(6)) defines a conviction as meaning "...that a person has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to, or has been found guilty by a court or jury of, a criminal offense, regardless of whether the judgment was after that set aside under AS 12.55.086 or a similar procedure in another jurisdiction, or was the subject of a pardon or other executive clemency..." (emphasis added) Consequently, because of your set aside felony convictions, we are prohibited, by law, from issuing you an Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit.

Your message also indicates that you have not been denied a firearm transfer when presenting yourself for a NICS check. Although it is logical to assume that you are eligible to possess a firearm under federal law, an Alaska Concealed handgun permit may only be granted to those who are eligible to possess a handgun under both federal and state law. Alaska law (AS 11.61.200(a)(12)) prohibits you from carrying a concealable firearm. There is no unrestricted right to carry a concealed handgun for a convicted felon under Alaska law.

As a final administrative decision, the appeal to this action is denied.

You are reminded of your right to seek judicial review of this decision under Alaska Statute 44.62.560-570 within 30 days of receipt of this letter.

Sincerely,

John D. Glass
Deputy Commissioner

To whom it my Concern,

My name is [redacted] and I'm writing this letter in regards to the denial of a concealed carry permit that I applied for in the beginning of [redacted] of 2008.I have taken the concealed carry course and paid a considerable amount of money for that course to try and be a law abiding gun owner and carrier, even though in the state of Alaska it is not necessary to do so.

I'm a 36 year old father of [redacted] and a devoted husband,and I'm currently a superintendent for a multi-million dollar [redacted] and work year round at that job.I'm a tax payer,a voter and a yearly supporter of our Alaska Peace Officers and Public Safety Employee Association and a Member of the N.R.A. I'm a law abiding citizen that does not drink or do drugs and haven't even had a traffic violation in over ten years.

I was 17 years old when I found myself on the wrong side of the law for the first and only time in my life.
I was young and dumb as we've all been, and made a bad choice in my young life, I was involved in a non-violent crime in which a felony was charged.I plead no contest because I knew what I did was wrong and there was no sense in fighting it andwaisting the courts time.I did a short jail term and was ordered to payrestitution and do 3 years probation.And because I was so young and payed my restitution in full and did my probation with no problems or violations. I was given a S.I.S (Suspended Imposition of Sentencing) my conviction was Dropped, Dismissed by a federal judge.(I'm not concidreda felon.)So why put me in that category.

I was given a seoond chance and have made a great life with that second chance, I'm allowed to vote,buy and posses firearms and I"m a avid hunter and sportsman.(Because I'm not concidered a felon that is all possible.)

In the State of Alaska I'm allowed to carry a concealed weapon without a permit,but yet I can't get a concealed carry permit if I want one.It doesn't make sense, why you would not want me on paper to show law enforcement that I would carry a concealed weapon.I have court documents,F.B.I and N.I.C.S background checks to prove my eligibility to own a handgun. I have talked to people at the permits and licensing unit that agree and don't understand it either.

I ask of you to grant me the right and please allow me to get my concealed carry permit and to go on paper as a permit holder and to be able to give law enforcement officers the ability to know that I have a weapon on my person and to be a law abiding and safety trained citizen.

CERTIFIED RETURN RECEIPT

[redacted]

RE: Alaska Concealed Handgun Permit

Dear Mr. [redacted]

This is to notify you that your application for renewal of your Alaska Concealed Handgun permit is denied. Enclosed please find your cash in the amount of $25.00.

Upon receiving an application for renewal, we are obliged to review the eligibility status of the applicant. In your case we have determined that you are not eligible to hold a concealed handgun permit and that the original issue was done in error.

Effective immediately, your concealed handgun permit is revoked. You must surrender the permit to the nearest peace officer. We recommend that you surrender the permit at the nearest State Trooper office or police department.

We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause you but the law does not allow any other course of action.

Alaska statute 18.65.705 states that, in order to be eligible for a permit, an applicant "must be eligible to own or possess a handgun under the laws of this state and under federal law." We understand that your right to possess a firearm has been returned to you under federal law but Alaska law continues to bar you from unrestricted possession of a firearm. As a result, you may not be issued an Alaska concealed handgun permit.

Presidential pardon!

Under Alaska statute 11.61.200, misconduct involving weapons in the third degree, it is a class C felony for a person to knowingly possess a firearm capable of being concealed on

Alaska Concealed Handgun Permits
5700 E. Tudor Road - Anchorage, AK 99507 - Voice (907) 269-0392 - Fax (907) 269-5609

one's person or to knowingly possess a firearm that is concealed on the person after having been convicted of a felony by a court of this state, a court of the United States, or a court of another state or territory.

The same statute does provide for two affirmative defenses to a prosecution for these offenses but does not make it legal conduct for a convicted felon. In your case, your felony convictions will forever bar you from unrestricted possession of a firearm in Alaska even in light of the fact that the federal government has apparently restored your federal rights.

Presidential pardon!

The person who initially reviewed your eligibility status mistakenly interpreted the restoration of your federal rights to possess a firearm as restoring your state right as well. It does not. Pardons do not create an exception. Set asides, whether court ordered or statutory, do not create an exception.

Please surrender your permit immediately to insure compliance with Alaska law.

Alaska statute 18.64.740 provides that you may appeal this revocation decision to the commissioner of the Department of Public Safety. The appeal must be received in writing within 30 days after the date of the notice of revocation, and must set out the reasons for the appeal.

Sincerely,

Terrie,

Here is what I had this e-mailed to me on the Pardon. Here is what I was told:

I meet the requirements of AS 18.65.705
There was "no change" on the renewal application
I meet all Federal and State laws to own and posses a handgun
Pardon granted by President not Governor of State of Alaska
Per AS a "Pardon" is the only way to restore rights lost and remove disabilities under Alaska Law
The ACHP Rules .doc was an information paper created by someone in DPS, not the State Attorney's Office

I have no idea of all the all the AS that apply and have been told that several contradict one another. In several AS it states that when a Pardon is issued it is as though the conviction never occurred. I have had CCW permits in several states (including Alaska).

If this does not clear it up to everyones satisfaction, please forward me the appeal procedures so I may address this to the Commissioner of Public Safety.

Thank you for your patience with me! I really do appreciate all your help!

Respectfully,

back to him. He objected. A replevin petition was filed in the Circuit Court of Phelps County on June 18, 2005, seeking return of his revolver. On October 20, 2005, the Attorney General filed his answer. The state's position was that Mr. Troyer needs a permit to acquire a pistol prior to obtaining custody of the revolver. The court held a hearing on August 21, 2006. The parties subsequently signed on October 5, 2006, a stipulation for dismissal. Mr. Troyer agreed to drop his lawsuit and the police agreed to return the revolver to Mr. Troyer without requiring that he obtain a pistol acquisition permit. The revolver was returned.

MONTANA

Van der Hule, Frank (Montana). The issue is whether Montana's restoration of rights satisfies the requirements of 18 U.S. Code section 921(a)(20), or is it insufficient based on the holding in Caron v. United States, 118 S.Ct. 2007 (1998), which held a person cannot be convicted under federal law of being a felon in possession of a firearm stemming from a state felony conviction if the state law that removed the disability allows the person to possess all firearms (rifle, shotgun, pistol). On the other hand, a person may be convicted under federal law of being a felon in possession of a firearm stemming from a state felony conviction if state law allows such a person to possess only certain firearms, e.g., rifles and shotguns, but not pistols. In this case, Mr. Van de hule was denied permission to purchase a hunting rifle following a background check. A lawsuit was filed. Plaintiff subsequently filed a motion for summary judgment. The government likewise filed a motion for summary judgment. Mr. Van der hule filed his reply on November 6, 2006. Oral argument occurred on March 23, 2007. The court held on September 21, 2007, that Montana's refusal to grant a license to carry a pistol to a person whose civil rights have been restored meant that under Caron he could not possess any firearm under federal law. However, there is a possibility that Montana law grants a licensing official discretion to grant the carrying license to such a person. Therefore, the court certified the question to the Montana Supreme Court.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Lone Pine Hunter's Club, Inc. (New Hampshire). This is an effort to shut down a shooting range. New Hampshire has a range protection statute. The club has been operating a shooting range on the property since 1966. The case resulted in two reported decisions. Lone Pine Hunters' Club v. Town of Hollis, 149 N.H. 668, 826 A.2d 582 (2003), held that evidence was sufficient to uphold finding that the zoning board of adjustment's finding that, 34 years earlier, it merely decided that hunt club did not need a variance to build a proposed addition, rather than deciding that the club did not need a variance to use the property as a fish and game club. Consequently, under the 1999 zoning ordinance the club's use of the property could be approved as special exception. The club would have to cease and desist unless the club applied for a special exception and presented a site plan to the planning board depicting the nature of the club's entire operation. Residents Defending Their Homes v. Lone Pine Hunters' Club, Inc., 924 A.2d 366 (N.H. 2007), held that the range protection statute only protected a shooting range that was in lawful operation at its inception. The court held the club was not operating lawfully from its inception in 1966. Accordingly, the club must obtain approval from the town, in compliance with the zoning provisions allowing for a special exception as a shooting range.

Richard Svodony
Assistant Attorney General
PO Box 110300
Juneau, AK 99811

Dear Richard:

This letter is a follow-up to our recent conversation regarding the Lauterbach Amendment and your interpretation of the law.

Specifically, as indicated to you, the primary concern that I have is that the Department of Probation and Parole has apparently been advising individuals who have retained an SIS that they no longer have weapons rights. I believe that this is incorrect advice. I furthermore suggest that your office's interpretation of Judge Steinkruger's opinion is incorrect, as well. My analysis will follow shortly.

Recognizing that you indicated to me that the assistant attorney general for the state was essentially interpreting federal law, might I suggest that the state take an alternate position? Specifically, why cannot the state simply advise individuals that federal law may or may not impact their ability to own weapons, and that they should be aware that federal law may restrict the right to own weapons, but that the state law does not do so? This may solve the problem.

As indicated to you, the analysis of Judge Steinkruger in the case you referenced, I believe, contradicts your position as set forth to me on the phone. Specifically, I have reviewed a copy of the email communication between Assistant Attorney General John J. Novak and Assistant Attorney General John K. Bodick from April 3, 2009. In the email communication Mr. Novak opines that certain language regarding the right to keep and bear arms that is included in the restoration of rights letter typically distributed to offenders that successfully complete probation or parole is inaccurate. Respectfully, Mr. Novak's analysis is wrong for the following reasons:

First, Mr. Novak states that a felony conviction is a felony conviction even though the court grants an SIS that is later set aside. This is inaccurate. An SIS that is set aside is, by very definition, not a felony conviction, because in order to be a felony conviction a person must be found guilty and sentenced. A person who receives an SIS that is set aside is never sentenced, and is therefore never convicted. Moreover, 18 USC § 921(a)(20), provides that "any conviction which has been...set aside...shall not be considered a conviction for purposes of [lawful firearms possession]." Thus, an SIS that is later set aside is not a felony conviction under either state or federal law. Mr. Novak's assertion to the contrary is wrong.

Mr. Novak then states that a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a weapon in the third degree, in violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(12), by knowingly possessing a firearm concealed on one's person after having been convicted of a felony offense even when the court granted an SIS for the prior offense that was later set aside. Again, Mr. Novak's analysis is dead wrong, as he fails to mention AS 11.61.200(g)(1)(B) which states that "it is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (a)(12) of this section that the underlying conviction upon which the action is based has been set aside under AS 12.55.085. Thus, AS 11.61.200 clearly states that it is not a crime to knowingly possess a concealed firearm if a person has been granted an SIS.

I submit that, Mr. Novak is also incorrect when he states that a person commits the federal offense of felony possession in violation of 18 USC 922(g)(1) by possessing a firearm or ammunition after having been convicted of a felony with the only exception being those cases where an Alaska Court granted an SIS between May 19, 1986, and April 14, 1998. It is truly baffling where this opinion comes from. As stated above, 18 USC § 921(a)(20) clearly states that a person who was granted an SIS is not a convicted felon for purposes of the felon in possession of a firearm statute. The date of the SIS is irrelevant, as 921 (a)(20) is not limited by date, and is currently valid federal law.

Perhaps, Mr. Novak's confusion is a misunderstanding of the interplay between federal and state law. As previously explained, once a felony conviction is set aside, there are no longer any restrictions under federal or state law for firearms possession. It is, however, true that, under federal law, once a person is released from probation or parole from a felony conviction (not an SIS) he may not possess any firearms whatsoever until 10 years has passed from the date of unconditional discharge, which is generally the date the person is released from probation and/or parole. Under state law, however, a person is still allowed to possess long guns, i.e., rifles and shotguns, upon being released from probation and parole since there is no state law prohibiting such. Under the Carone v. US decision, mentioned by Mr. Novak in his email, it is accurate that such possession, although not prohibited by state law, would still be a violation of federal law until the 10 year period has passed. Once the 10 year period has passed, even a convicted felon who did not receive an SIS can possess any firearm they choose in Alaska, concealable or not, under both state and federal law.

Thank you once again for your kind consideration of this matter.

Sincerely,

William R. Satterberg, Jr.

Attorney General

Dear Dan:

I enjoyed visiting with you briefly on July 26, 2009, when you were in Fairbanks. Unfortunately, time did not allow us to discuss a matter which I think is of rather serious concern.

Specifically, for many years, SIS sentences have been given out to felony offenders. Upon successful completion of the SIS, the offender has then been able to have their civil rights restored which, parenthetically, has included the right to commence hunting once again and owning firearms.

In April of this year, a decision was issued out of Anchorage as an Attorney General's opinion by Assistant Attorney General John Novak, copy attached, which essentially indicated that people who had an SIS record were still precluded from owning firearms because they "had been convicted" of a felony, even though the conviction had been set aside.

Needless to say, I disagree strongly with that decision, but the unfortunate byproduct is that the Department of Corrections is now taking the position based upon that letter of opinion that anybody who has an SIS conviction is still legally precluded from ever owning a firearm. I believe that this is incorrect, and I am also concerned that criminal charges may eventually be filed by somebody who has received advice either by defense counsel, or even the court, as well as from prior probation officers, that they are able to own a firearm once their rights have been restored, upon successful completion of the SIS.

Finally, it should be noted that one of the incentives for many individuals to plead guilty to a charge and obtain an SIS has been the understanding that they will be able to own a firearm at some future date, recognizing how important hunting is in Alaska. This latest decision, which may simply be further advocacy of gun control, is going to have a most chilling effect upon those decisions as well.

If possible, might you please consider having the decision reevaluated, and, if the decision is made to reverse your predecessor's position, taking appropriate steps? One of the important factors to this is that I am trying to avoid litigation which could be filed as a declaratory judgment action, to address the issue as well. If the Attorney General changes his position on the matter, however, the issue will be resolved.

Sincerely,

William R. Satterberg, Jr.

Case No. 4FA-S99-3528 CR

ORDER RE: DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR ORDER ALLOWING HIM TO POSSESS FIREARM

In December 1999, Allen Wilson was charged with one count of theft in the second degree (AS 11.46.130(a)), a Class C felony and 24 counts of unsworn falsification (AS 11.56.210(a)), a Class A misdemeanor in connection with false claims for unemployment compensation. A jury found him guilty on all counts. On December 8, 2000, this court sentenced Mr. Wilson to pay restitution to the Alaska Department of Labor in the amount of $7552, which Mr. Wilson paid in full the same day. In 2001, Mr. Wilson attempted to get his convictions set aside in order to get his permit to carry a concealed weapon reinstated. This court denied his request.

On January 18, 2005, Mr. Wilson wrote a letter to the court requesting that his right to possess a gun for hunting be restored so that he can hunt for subsistence purposes. This court has considered the letter and motion.

Discussion:

1. Can Allen Wilson Legally Possess a Firearm for Hunting at This Time?

Under AS 11.61.200, Mr. Wilson is prohibited from possessing a firearm, which is either concealed or is capable of being concealed on his person, for ten years after the date of unconditional discharge from the felony offense. The statute applies to all felony convictions, regardless of whether violence was involved in the offense. See AS 11.61.200. Therefore, the restriction applies to Mr. Wilson even though he was convicted of theft in a completely non-violent situation.

The term "unconditional discharge" requires "completion of any sentence of imprisonment, discharge from parole or probation, and release from any other restriction directly imposed as part of the judgment of conviction." Singleton v. State, 921 P.2d 636, 638 (Alaska App. 1996); AS 12.55.185(16); AS 11.61.200(h)(2). Mr. Wilson paid the restitution on the same day he was sentenced. No other restrictions were imposed by the judgment of conviction. Thus, Mr. Wilson was unconditionally discharged on December 8, 2000, and will be eligible to possess a firearm capable of being concealed on his person in December 2010.

Rifles or shotguns manufactured for hunting are generally too large to be considered "capable of concealment on one's person" under AS 11.61.200(a). Therefore, state law appears to permit Mr. Wilson to possess a firearm like a hunting rifle, so long as it is not covered or concealed.

Several other states along with Alaska have statutes that prohibit a convicted felon from possessing handguns or other concealable firearms while permitting them to possess rifles and shotguns. E.g., United States v. Qualls, 172 F.3d 1136, 1138-39 (9th Cir. 1999); New York v. Adams, 747 N.Y.S.2d 909, 912-15 (Sup. Ct. 2002).

Under federal law, a felon may be charged under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) and 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20) for possessing any firearm, including those permitted under state law. Caron v. United State, 524 U.S. 308, 313-317, 118 S. Ct. 2007, 2011-2012, 141 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1998); Adams, 747 N.Y.S.2d at 915; Qualls, 172 F.3d at 1138-39. The United States Supreme Court has interpreted the language in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20) to prohibit convicted felons from possessing all firearms of any type for as long as any state restriction on possession of any type of firearm due to the felony conviction remains. Caron v. United State, 524 U.S. 308, 313-317, 118 S. Ct. 2007, 2011-2012, 141 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1998).[1]

Conclusion:

State law prohibits Mr. Wilson from possessing a firearm concealed or capable of being concealed until December 8, 2010. Federal law prohibits Mr. Wilson from possessing any firearm until December 8, 2010. This court is without jurisdiction to grant Mr. Wilson permission to possess a firearm. The Motion is DENIED.

Dated this 25 day of May, 2005, at Fairbanks, Alaska.

Mr. Satterberg,

Sorry it's taken this long to get back to you regarding SIS and firearm rights. Here's what I have regarding that decision. The first email at the bottom is from John Novak, Assistant Attorney General. He explains his interpretation.

Please read the text below. It clarifies an important point for which we apparently have been providing misinformation for years. According to the Department of Law, those offenders with an SIS also lose their firearms rights, even if the conviction is later set aside. Make sure this is covered in the orientation. For those POs who supervise someone with an SIS, please cover this information with them and enter a chrono that you did so. Thanks.

Subject: Firearm Possession Following Completion of Felony Probation/Parole

John,

I recently spent a considerable amount of time researching and determining the law concerning the legality of possessing firearms in Alaska following a conviction for a felony offense. In my efforts, probation/parole officer Cris Sanders provided me a restoration of rights sample letter for an offender that successfully completed probation/parole. That letter contained the following text:

"Although your above rights have been restored [rights to vote, jury service, and to hold elected office], you should be aware that your right to keep and bear arms is automatically restored only if you received a suspended imposition of sentence and your record has been set aside. If you did not receive a SIS, your rights to keep and bear arms are subject to applicable state laws. Contact your attorney if you have questions."

This above quoted language is wrong. It is my suggestion that DOC restoration letters not include this erroneous language. I will attempt to briefly explain the law and why the above language is wrong.

First, a felony conviction - whether by plea or jury verdict - is a felony conviction, even when the court grants an SIS that is later set aside.

Second, a person commits the crime of misconduct involving a weapon in the third degree (a class C felony) in violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(12), by knowingly possessing on or after April 14, 1998 (the effective date of the statute section) a firearm concealed on the person after having been convicted of any felony offense even when the court granted a SIS for the prior offense that later was set aside.

And third, a person commits the federal offense of felon in possession in violation of 18 USC 922(g)(1) in Alaska by knowingly possessing any firearm or ammunition (including all handguns, shotguns and rifles as well as all types of ammunition) after having been convicted of any felony, with the only exception being those cases where the Alaska court granted a SIS and where a set aside order was issued between the dates of May 19, 1986 and April 14, 1998. See, Caron v. United States, 524 US 308 (1998); United States v. Brown, 69 F Supp 2d 925 (E.D. Mich. 1999); and effective date of federal Firearms Owners Protection Act of 1988.

The bottom line is that in the vast majority of cases a person will commit a felony offense (whether under state or federal law) by possessing any firearm or any ammunition after having been convicted of a felony, regardless if a SIS was granted and a court later issued a set aside order.

I suggest the following language be included in "restoration letters":

"Although your above rights have been restored [rights to vote, jury service, and to hold elected office], you should be aware that your right to possess firearms (all shotguns, rifles, as well as handguns) and ammunition remains restricted. Possession of any rifle, shotgun, rifle and/or ammunition likely will subject you to prosecution for felony criminal offense under state or federal law even if you received a suspended imposition of sentence and an order setting aside the conviction has been issued. You should contact your attorney if you have questions."

I will leave it to you to pass this information on to the appropriate folks at DOC. If desired, I am happy to further discus this matter.

Hidden punishment

In rural Alaska, where gun rights matter most, there's no way for reformed felons—even non-violent ones—to get them back.

Story and photos by Scott Christianse

ON SEPTEMBER 24, former state Representative Beverly Masek was sentenced for conspiracy to commit bribery at the federal courthouse in Anchorage.

Masek admitted to accepting about $4,000 in bribes from Bill Allen, the former CEO of Veco. She also admitted to introducing legislation that would raise oil taxes, then pulling her bill after wringing a cash payment out of Allen—a bit of arm-twisting on a man who was famous for dumping cash into Alaska politics long before an FBI undercover investigation began to uncover Pomeroy's Corrupt Bastards Club.

U.S. District Judge Ralph Beistline gave Masek, a Republican from Willow, six months in prison. That's 12 months shy of the minimum in the federal guideline, and the second-to-lightest sentence so far for any convicted Bastards Club member (South Anchorage Senator John Cowdery got six months of house arrest).

But that felony conviction also took something else: It takes away Masek's gun rights, likely forever.

This is a woman convicted of a non-violent offense. A woman who grew up in the Interior village of Anvik and who finished the Iditarod four times. Now she's a member of the tiny club of Alaska politicians who got caught in the FBI dragnet. She's also in a much larger club: the growing number of people whose Second Amendment rights have been extinguished by a government that has no intention of giving them back.

"The tragic thing is, under state law you can possess a firearm as long as it can't be concealed, so you can have a long rifle or shotgun," says federal public defender Richard Curtner, the attorney who represented Masek and had to explain this part of the law to her. "Having a firearm in rural Alaska is a necessity, not just for food, but for protection when you are traveling in the field."

This isn't the first time a state law and a federal law collided. In Alaska, a person can't toss a rock without having it land on some spot where state and federal laws don't match—fisheries management, marijuana prohibitions, subsistence rights, and an education law that proposes closing schools based on student test scores.

The federal gun law could use an Alaska exemption, Curtner says.

"But people convicted of crimes don't have any lobby. There are all kinds of exceptions written into law for banks and for corporations, but when you're done something wrong in your past, there's no lobbyist for that," he says.

The federal government has a process for reinstating civil rights. In the case of gun rights, a felon who has paid their debt to society or been exonerated by a presidential pardon, can file an application for reinstatement of rights with the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco Firearms and Explosives. The bureau's agents process the application, performing a background check to make certain the applicant qualifies.

But ATF agents don't do those background checks anymore, and haven't for the last 17 years. That's according to a form letter ATF sends to anyone who inquires about reinstatement of rights. The letter calls Second Amendment rights "federal firearms privileges" and says that from 1992-1997, Congress has used the bureau's annual budget appropriation to prohibit the ATF from spending money to "investigate or act upon" any restoration of rights application. The letter also says the convict may seek a presidential pardon, and gives the address of the Pardon Attorney's Office at the U.S. Department of Justice. Couple that with a federal law that created strict point-of-sale background checks for firearms, and you have some tall legal hurdles to leap.

And even though the federal public defenders occasionally represent clients seeking certain kinds of post-conviction relief, Curtner says helping a client reinstate their gun rights would be outside his office's ability to help.

"It's kind of beyond our representation, and I don't know that anywhere in the country there is a case where (a public defender) is pursued this."

IN THE LOWER 48, this issue might stand out as a mostly philosophical debate over Second Amendment rights, modern interpretations of the U.S. Constitution, or the hypothetical threat of a hostile government crackdown.

In rural Alaska, barring past felons from possessing a gun has specific real-world implications, ones that aren't just theoretical.

"Every village has a felon, at least one," says Winfred Olanna, who works as a village public safety officer in Brevig Mission, an Inupiaq village of about 375 people on the Seward Peninsula. Olanna says he doesn't know enough about federal firearm prohibitions to talk about them. But as a VPSO, he's tasked with knowing everyone in Brevig, including everyone who returns from prison.

"My stepbrother, he's a felon, so he can't have any firearms in his house—no rifles, no shotgun," Olanna says.

The nearest probation officer to Brevig Mission is based in Nome, a 45-mile airplane ride from the village. Olanna checks in on every person on probation in the village. He's even responsible for keeping people there up-to-date with drug testing, when it's required. "It's part of our job description to work with the P.O.s, because they hardly could come to every village twice a month for every felon," Olanna says.

Olanna also takes his brother-in-law hunting. After all, there's more work to a hunt than the split-second it takes to shoot a caribou or bearded seal—piloting the boat, spotting animals, field dressing and packing the meat—there's work a hunter can do without holding a gun.

"There's plenty to do," Olanna says. "He just can't carry a firearm—and we're all just happy that he is following his probation. He happy because his probation ends next year."

Conversations about gun rights in rural Alaska inevitably lead one place. Is there a "don't ask, don't tell" policy when it comes to enforcing these laws? Olanna says there isn't in Brevig Mission.

One Alaska State Trooper, with experience as a VPSO overnight officer, says troopers are never encouraged to let anyone slide. "I have not practiced any kind of selective enforcement like that, and I've never been asked to. In fact, just the opposite," says Trooper Terrence Shanigan.

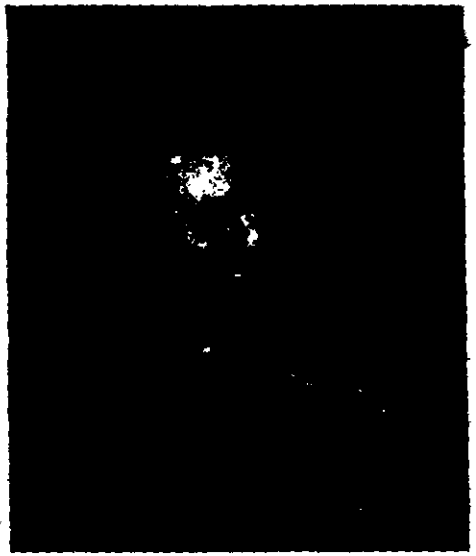
Shanigan, who is 38, grew up in rural Alaska, in the Bristol Bay villages of Pilot Point and Ugashik. He remembers being one of the excited village kids who would run, not walk, to the airstrip when state trooper landed at Ugashik.

"I only knew him as 'trooper' but it was always exciting when he came to town," he says, adding troopers were piled with coffee and aluminum. He says a successful state trooper or VPSO must insert themselves into the community, making a point to attend potlatches and community events such as planning meetings.

Troopers are charged with enforcing state laws, and that's where their focus is. Shanigan current patrols the Parks Highway from Talkeetna north to Cantwell. When he worked as a VPSO overnight officer, he was sometimes assigned to villages with only on-and-off VPSO coverage, where he made frequent visits even though he couldn't be there every day. He's trained in wildlife enforcement, so he knows how to prosecute hunting and fishing violations.

Shanigan says it's possible that a trooper might come into contact with a felon on probation—someone the state law doesn't allow to

3358



Alaska State Trooper Torrance Shanigan: "Someone with that knowledge might say, 'Hey, that trooper let somebody go'—but that's not really what they saw," he says.

armed—without the information on-hand to charge that person with a probation violation.

"When you go down to the river, well, everybody is packing firearms," Shanigan says, but the trooper may not know who on the river has had their rights revoked until he is back at the office, running names through databases. "Now someone with that knowledge might say, 'Hey, that trooper let somebody go'—but that's not really what they saw," he says.

Cops can be suspicious for all kinds of reasons, Shanigan says, but they have to be careful to not trounce on anyone's rights. "You have to make decisions based on what you know to be true," he says.

ALL OF THE COMPETING STATE and federal regulations are further complicated by something called the National Instant Criminal background Check System. NICS, as it's informally known, is the background check licensed gun dealers use to see if federal gun control laws allow a particular customer to purchase a gun. And the NICS system has flagged people who have their rights restored in their home state.

Anchorage attorney and gun-rights activist Wayne Anthony Ross has represented people attempting to earn their gun rights back. Ross says the reason NICS flags all Alaska felons is fallout from a U.S. Supreme Court ruling called Caron v. U.S. The case was decided in 1993, and requires that a person have all gun rights restored before the federal government recognizes any of their gun rights. The FBI applies this "all-or-nothing" approach to managing NICS.

Alaska law allows for restoration of most, but not all, of a felon's gun rights. A state felon cannot have a concealed weapon, Ross says, unless the felon wears the weapon on private property. (His interpretation differs slightly from that of Curtner, who tells clients they can't own a "concealable" weapon.)

A state felon is also prohibited from receiving Alaska's concealed weapons permit. The permit itself is an odd-duck. It's no longer required in order to carry a concealed weapon in Alaska. Yet the state continues to offer them because gun rights activists want the right to carry in other states where Alaska has reciprocal agreements.

"The problem is that this Supreme Court case that says if there is any state prohibition on having firearms, no matter how minimal, then you can't own a firearm at all," Ross says. "So a guy who feeds his family through subsistence, and has paid his debt to society, isn't able to do that."

Ross believes changing state law can solve the NICS problem for some felons. He's even drafted model legislation, but it hasn't been introduced despite his efforts to recruit a legislator to sponsor it. "I've got clients who have received pardons. There is one guy who has received a presidential pardon and others are people who have completed their probation. So we have multiple classes of people who are affected by this," he says.

In a letter to state Senator Charlie Huggins, Ross identified two clients by their initials and related their stories. One was convicted in 1970, becoming a felon at age 19 after being caught with hallucinogenic drugs, Ross wrote. "He has worked, hunted and fished his entire life. He only learned recently, when he applied for purchase of a new firearm, tat he is now suddenly prohibited form owning firearms, despite having been granted a suspended imposition of sentence more than 30 years ago."

Ross's second example was a man convicted of felony assault in 1992 and granted a full pardon by Governor Frank Murkowski in 2006. The man was a search and rescue pilot who wanted to carry a weapon while performing his job.

FEDERAL GUN LAWS ARE STRONGEST when applied to felons in possession of weapons, or people accused of using a gun while committing a felony crime. A drug dealer or repeat violent offender can have up to five years added to their sentence if they have a gun in their home. Newsrooms often get press releases from the U.S. Attorneys office touting new indictments and sentences related to such charges.

"We use our discretion when applying the law," Assistant U.S. Attorney Frank Russo says. "Usually we are applying the law at the request of the local community."

The implication is there won't be hordes of FBI or ATF agents flying around Alaska and rappelling into hunting camps to check IDs and round up gun owners. But defense attorneys aren't really satisfied with that.

"A client might know that it's very unlikely that they would be charged (for being a felon in possession)," Curtner says. "But I can't tell my people that, to trust the government not to charge you. I can only advise the client on the law, and the law in this case says you can't own a weapon."

So that's what Curtner told Beverly Marek, and every other nonviolent offender he's represented who was found guilty. "We talked about it, and it's one of those things that's 'what are you going to do?'" Curtner says. "There is just no getting around it." ◆

A RESOLUTION

Urging the United States Congress to reject H.R. 45, the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution enunciates a citizen's right to keep and bear arms, stating that that right shall not be infringed; and

WHEREAS art. I, sec. 19, Constitution of the State of Alaska, provides that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed and further states that the individual right to keep and bear arms shall not be denied or infringed; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 has been introduced in the United States Congress to require licensure of firearm owners and extensive recordkeeping of transactions that result in the transfer of certain firearms, including handguns and semiautomatic rifles; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45, referred to as the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, would make it a federal felony to possess a firearm without a license; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would also make it a federal felony to transfer a firearm to another person who is not licensed; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 directs the Attorney General of the United States to establish and maintain a federal system documenting the sale and transfer of firearms; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would make it a federal felony to fail to report the loss or theft of a firearm to the attorney general within 72 hours; and

WHEREAS, under H.R. 45, a firearm owner could be charged with a federal felony based on the actions of a juvenile who might gain access to the firearm; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 directs the attorney general to establish and maintain a firearm injury information clearinghouse, to conduct studies of firearm-related deaths and injuries, and to collect and maintain production and sales data from licensed firearm manufactures; and

WHEREAS the provisions of H.R. 45 cumulatively constitute a gun registration system and an assault on the Second Amendment rights of United States citizens; and

WHEREAS the private ownership of firearms has always been a key component of our national defense and constitutes a constructive notice to our enemies that Americans are a free people and a people free to defend themselves; and

WHEREAS H.R. 45 would diminish this traditional component of our national defense; and

WHEREAS there are other methods of addressing the problem of gun violence and gun-related deaths, such as increased education on the proper handling and use of firearms, that would be more effective and less intrusive into the private lives of American citizens and would not diminish a constitutionally guaranteed right;

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature opposes the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and Record of Sale Act of 2009, urges the United States Congress to reject H.R. 45, and further urges the members of the Alaska Congressional delegation to oppose and defeat H.R. 45; and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that members of the Alaska Congressional delegation are urged to support and expand federal funding of firearm education programs.

Committee Substitute for House Joint Resolution 17 (Judiciary)

Urging Congress to Reject H.R. 45, the Blair Holt's Firearm Licensing and record of Sale Act of 2009

House Joint Resolution 17 asks the United States Congress to oppose and defeat House Resolution 45, a measure that has been introduced in Congress that would significantly diminish Alaskans' right to keep and bear arms.

Among other things, HR 45 would require Americans to go through onerous federal licensure in order to possesses a firearm; it would make it a felony to transfer a firearm to someone who does not have a license; it would make it a felony to fail to timely report such a transfer or to fail to report the loss or theft of a firearm within 72 hours to the U.S. Attorney General; and, it requires the attorney general to establish and maintain a data base of firearm transfers.

It is important that Congress receive a message from the Alaska Legislature as soon as possible that Second Amendment rights to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 48

Urging the United States Congress to pass the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act.

Created by the Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) in 1984, the Crime Victims Fund provides critical funding for victim compensation and often life-saving direct services. Victim assistance programs, funded through state VOCA grants, help over four million crime victims every year, including victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, elder abuse and drunk driving, as well as family members of homicide victims. The Crime Victims Fund is financed entirely from a collection of criminal fines, forfeitures and special assessments, not taxpayer revenues. To ensure a stable level of program funding from a fund dependent on fluctuating deposits, Congress began capping annual obligations that can be made from the Fund starting in 2000. Under the VOCA statutory formula, state assistance grants receive whatever amount remains after all the other VOCA programs are funded. Unless the cap is high enough, increases in other VOCA programs and new costs reduce the amount available for state victim assistance grants. Despite unprecedented deposits into the Crime Victims Fund, state VOCA victim assistance grants were cut significantly between 2006 and 2008, creating a gap of at least $106 million between funding requests and funds available.

The Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act would preserve and enhance federal assistance to crime victims under the Victims of Crime Act. A new $705 million VOCA cap in 2010 will restore stable VOCA assistance funding and take a small first step in meeting the growing needs of victims. The direct services supported by VOCA grants include crisis intervention and counseling, emergency shelters, hotlines, legal advocacy and assistance in participating in the criminal justice system. Reduced funding has meant hundreds of thousands fewer crime victims received services in 2008 than the previous year. In Alaska, there was an $189,000 reduction from 2006 to 2008 in victim assistance grants.

The impact of VOCA assistance grant cuts is devastating to those who, through no fault of their own, have become victims of the most vicious crimes. Without this funding and the direct services it supports, crime victims go without advocacy, medical, mental health, and/or legal services, which are crucial in a victim's healing process. I appreciate your consideration of House Joint Resolution No. 48.

Dear Representative Kerttula:

On behalf of our organization, I want to thank you introducing a resolution urging the United States Congress to pass the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act. As a victim service provider, we have seen a clear increase in the number of victims of crime and the growing need for victim assistance and compensation. Although there has been an increase in recent years of criminal fines and penalties collected into the Crime Victims Fund, due to "capping" of Fund obligations, crime victim assistance requests typically far exceed available resources. The reduction in state assistance grant funding experienced by all states including Alaska, together with the current economic climate, has proved devastating to victim service providers, deeply affecting the well-being and recovery of many crime victims. The Crime Victims Fund is one of the main sources of money and support for crime victims and crime victim services; we believe the Fund can provide more help.

Congress has reaffirmed its commitment to stable program funding and has the ability to provide predictable growth. The Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act would establish a minimum funding level for programs under VOCA to ensure reasonable growth in victim services through FY 2014. Providing a stable funding stream will help states with their ongoing program efforts, as well as expansion of programs and outreach to a growing number of crime victims. The cost of this does not come from taxpayer funds but will come exclusively from Federal criminal fines and penalties. The additional funding is greatly needed right now and would be sincerely appreciated by victim service providers and the millions of victims they serve. This legislation is a small first step in meeting victims' needs.

Dear Representative Kerttula:

On behalf of the Council on Domestic Violence & Sexual Assault, I want to thank you for introducing a resolution urging the United States Congress to pass the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act. As the funding agency through which victim assistance is distributed in Alaska, we have seen an increase in the number of victims of crime and the growing need for victim assistance and compensation.

Although there has been an increase in recent years of criminal fines and penalties collected into the Crime Victims Fund, due to "capping" of Fund obligations, crime victim assistance requests typically far exceed available resources. The reduction in state assistance grant funding experienced by all states including Alaska, together with the current economic climate, has made it difficult for victim service providers to continue to offer the level of service necessary to meet all the needs of crime victims. The Crime Victims Fund is one of the main sources of money and support for crime victims and crime victim services, we believe the Fund can provide more help.

Congress has reaffirmed its commitment to stable program funding and has the ability to provide predictable growth. The Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act would establish a minimum funding level for programs under VOCA to ensure reasonable growth in victim services through FY 2014. Providing a stable funding stream will help states with their ongoing program efforts, as well as expansion of programs and outreach to a growing number of crime victims. Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009
S. 1340 and H.R. 3402
Fact Sheet

- The Crime Victims Fund is a special account made up entirely of fines and other penalties paid by convicted federal offenders and dedicated exclusively to a variety of services to help crime victims; there are no taxpayer dollars in the Fund.

- Grants to state VOCA victim assistance programs fund services to more than 4 million victims of all types of crimes, including, among others, domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, survivors of homicide victim, drunk driving crashes, stalking, identity theft, and elder abuse.

- Because of fluctuations in Fund deposits, Congress limits or "caps" annual obligations from the Fund, resulting in an accumulated "rainy day" balance to ensure stable funding for victim services.

- Because the VOCA cap did not keep pace with the costs of programs, state crime victim assistance grants were cut by $87 million (22 percent) from 2006 to 2008.

- During this same period, however, the Fund's "rainy day" balance increased by more than $700 million — from $1.3 billion in 2006 to $2 billion in 2008. Based on criminal fines that federal courts have already imposed but not yet collected, the balance is projected to grow even more through 2014.

- Crime victims' needs continue to increase. Although these prior cuts were restored by a combination of the 2009 Appropriations Act and the economic recovery act, the need to support crime victim services continue to increase. Examples:
    - According to U.S. Department of Justice Office for Victims of Crime, 366,000 fewer crime victims received VOCA funded victim assistance services in 2008 than in 2007.
    - The National Census of Domestic Violence Services reports that, on one day in 2008, nearly 61,000 adults and children sought support from local domestic violence programs. But on that same day, almost 9,000 requests were unmet due to lack of resources.
    - Calls to the National Crime Victim Hotline operated by the National Center for Victims of Crime have increased, especially for victims of a variety of frauds, such as work at home, secret shopper and investment schemes, mortgage and construction fraud.

- S. 1340 (introduced by Senators Patrick Leahy and Mike Crapo) and H.R. 3402 (introduced by Representatives Ted Poe and Jim Costa) are essential to preserving the Fund and meeting victims' needs. These bills will statutorily establish a minimum annual cap on VOCA through 2014. The caps will increase the VOCA cap by 23 percent each year yet leave a balance of at least $800 million, enough to ensure the Fund's sustainability.

- The bills will provide a steady, reasonable and predictable growth in victim services through 2014 without jeopardizing the Fund's ability to continue supporting victim services.

Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009
S. 1340 and H.R. 3402

S. 1340, introduced by Senators Patrick Leahy and Mike Crapo, and H.R. 3402, introduced by Representatives Ted Poe and Jim Costa, are bipartisan companion bills that establish a minimum funding level for VOCA programs for fiscal years through 2014. The minimum VOCA caps in the bills will ensure a reasonable growth in victim programs without jeopardizing the long-term sustainability of the Crime Victims Fund.

The Crime Victims Fund is a special account dedicated solely to supporting services to help crime victims. The money comes entirely from fines and other penalties paid by federal criminal offenders, not from taxpayers. Until 2000, all amounts deposited into Fund were distributed the following year according to a statutory formula. Because of large fluctuations in Fund deposits, Congress began delaying (capping) annual obligations from the Fund; this resulted in a balance ("rainy day reserve") being retained in the Fund to ensure stable funding for victim services in future years.

The annual VOCA cap has varied from year to year. Because of VOCA's allocation formula, grants for state victim assistance programs (that supports more than 4,000 local agencies that provide services to 4 million crime victims every year) are dependent on the size of the cap, and increases in the amount used for other VOCA funded program areas. Because the cap has not kept pace with these costs, funding for state victim assistance grants had been cut by $87 million (22 percent). During this same period, the Fund balance actually increased from $1.3 billion to $2 billion. Fortunately, these cuts were restored by the combination of the 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act and one-time Recovery Act funds.

Meanwhile, as the Fund's rainy day reserve continues to grow to unprecedented levels, victim programs' capacity to provide essential assistance to crime victims has eroded in the face of reduced overall funding and constantly growing unmet needs. According to the U.S. Justice Department, 336,000 fewer crime victims received VOCA assistance services in 2008 than during the previous year. The National Census of Domestic Violence Services reports that, on one day in 2008, nearly 61,000 adults and children sought support from local domestic violence programs. But on that same day, almost 9000 requests were unmet due to lack of resources.

S. 1340 and H.R. 3402 address these issues by establishing minimum caps on the Fund though fiscal year 2014. In so doing, the bill steadily draws down a portion of the accumulated Fund balance to be used exclusively for victim services as intended by Congress. The total amount to be released will ensure a steady, predictable and manageable growth to meet ongoing crime victims' needs.

Under the bills, the minimum funding level for 2010 will be $705 million and then increase by 23 percent through 2014 by amending the VOCA statute (42 U.S.C. 10601) to provide the following minimum cap amounts:

(a) $705,000,000 for fiscal year 2010;
(b) $867,150,000 for fiscal year 2011;
(c) $1,066,594,500 for fiscal year 2012;
(d) $1,311,911,235 for fiscal year 2013; and
(e) $1,613,650,819 for fiscal year 2014.

These funds will be allocated according to the current VOCA statute to support Children's Justice Act grants, set-asides for the U.S. Attorneys victim/witness coordinators, FBI victim assistance specialists, federal victim notification system, OVC discretionary grants for training, technical assistance and services for victims of federal crimes, state crime victim compensation grants and state victim assistance grants.

Based on currently known future Fund deposits, it is projected that even with these minimum caps, the Fund will have a balance of at least $1.3 billion at the end of 2014, thus ensuring the Fund's sustainability without the need for other revenue sources.

Crime victims continue to desperately need critical services. S. 1340 and H.R. 3402 will help meet these needs, without taxpayer funds, and as Congress intended.

Victims of Crime Act (VOCA)
Crime Victims Fund

Background Information

- Created by the Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) in 1984, the Crime Victims Fund provides critical funding that helps millions of victims of all types of crimes every year. The Fund comes from the collection of Federal criminal fines and penalties; not taxpayer revenues.
- The Office of Management and Budget estimates that the Crime Victims Fund will open 2011 with a $4.3 billion balance, with an additional $1 billion to be deposited during the year.
- VOCA-funded state victim assistance grants support direct services, such as emergency shelter, crisis intervention, counseling and assistance in participating in the criminal justice system, through 4,400 agencies to about 4 million victims of all types of crimes every year. VOCA-funded projects employ 13,500 FTE advocates, counselors and other direct victim service providers.
- 2008: Despite unprecedented deposits into the Crime Victims Fund, state VOCA victim assistance grants were cut by $86.5 million (22 percent) between 2006 and 2008. Because of reduced funding, 336,580 fewer crime victims received services in 2008 than during the previous year.
- 2009: Congress took important steps to reverse this downward trend by restoring $56 million for state VOCA victim assistance grants. Combined with one-time Recovery Act grants, these grants in 2009 were restored to the 2006 funding level (including inflation).
- 2010: The $705 million cap is expected to keep state VOCA victim assistance programs at roughly the same total amount available in 2009.
- Meanwhile, crime victims' needs for assistance continue to increase. The economic downturn has resulted in greater incidences of domestic and family violence; new types of crimes (e.g. identify theft, financial frauds, dating violence, stalking) have emerged and new types of services are required.
- The Administration's proposed 2011 VOCA budget raises the VOCA cap but the increase would be more than offset by new and expanded earmarks. These additional costs mean that state assistance grants could be cut by as much as $20 million in 2011.
- An $867 million cap would support core VOCA assistance grants with a 3.5 percent increase in real dollars over the amount received in 2006.

Programs currently supported by the Crime Victims Fund:

- Children's Justice Act grants
- U.S. Attorney's victim/witness coordinators (170 FTEs)

VOCA's Crime Victims Fund

- The Crime Victims Fund is a "separate account" made up entirely of "special and trust fund receipts" from Federal criminal fines, forfeitures and special assessments – not taxpayer revenues – which, by law, are to be used exclusively to support victim services.
- The Victims of Crime Act of 1984 originally created the Crime Victims Fund solely to support direct victim assistance services and state crime victim compensation programs. Over the years, additional programs and activities became dependent upon the Fund.
- From 1985 to 2009, $11.7 billion has been deposited into the Fund. According to OMB estimates, the Fund will have a balance of $4.3 billion at the beginning of 2011 with an additional $1 billion expected to be deposited during the year. Thus, $5.3 billion will be available to support VOCA programs in 2011.
- Since its inception, amounts deposited into the Fund in one year were distributed for victim services the next year. Because of fluctuations in Fund deposits, Congress in 2000 started delaying or "capping" the annual obligations that can be made from the Fund in order to ensure stable funding for victim services. By law, amounts not spent are kept in the Fund for victim services in future years.
- The VOCA statute sets out the formula for the annual distribution of VOCA funds. Under this formula, the amount available for state victim assistance grants is, in effect, whatever remains after the other programs are funded. (See next page.)
- Unless the annual cap on total VOCA spending is high enough, state grants for direct victim assistance are reduced as funding for other programs increase or other "under the cap" earmarks and costs are added.
- Between 2006 and 2008, state victim assistance grants were cut by $87 million (22 percent). The Office for Victims of Crime (OVC) reported that 336,580 fewer crime victims received VOCA assistance funded services in 2008 compared to 2007.
- In 2009, Congress raised the VOCA cap and added $100 million in Recovery Act funds for VOCA programs which, together, raised state assistance grants back to the 2006 level. 2010 grants are expected to remain level with the total 2009 funding, i.e. VOCA formula plus Recovery Act grants.
- While the Administration proposes a 2011 VOCA cap of $800 million, that is not enough to offset a new $100 million earmark for discretionary grants to support assistance for victims of violence against women, and significantly expanded use of VOCA to fund victim witness coordinators in United States Attorneys' Offices and victim assistance specialists in the FBI.
- Despite the proposed 13.5 percent increase in the total VOCA cap, the Administration's budget could cut state VOCA assistance grants by $20 million (5 percent).

A 2011 VOCA cap of $867 million will support state VOCA victim assistance grants with a 3.5 percent increase in real dollars over 2006 grants.

HOW THE CRIME VICTIMS FUND IS DISBURSED

The following amounts are allocated according to the VOCA statutory formula (42 U.S.C. 10601(d)):

Under the cap on annual obligations:

- The first $10 million to $20 million is used for formula grants to states to improve the investigation and prosecution of child abuse (Children's Justice Act);

- After that, funds are set aside for certain Federal victim services at levels specified by Congress:
  - Victim witness coordinators in U.S. Attorneys' offices (170 FTE);
  - Victim assistance staff in FBI offices (112 FTE);
  - Federal Victim Notification System ($5 million per year).

- Of the amount remaining, after the above allocations:
  - Five percent for discretionary grants administered by the Office for Victims of Crime for demonstration projects, training and technical assistance and services to victims of Federal crimes.
  - 47.5% of funds remaining under the cap are available for state crime victim compensation grants with each state receiving a grant based upon 60% of its state-funded compensation benefits.
  - 47.5% of funds remaining under the cap plus any amount not used for state crime victim compensation grants are allocated for formula grants to states to support direct assistance services to victims of crime (each state receives a base amount plus an amount apportioned on population).

Under this formula, the amount available for state assistance grants is, in effect, whatever remain after all the other VOCA programs are funded. For that reason, unless the cap is high enough, increases in the other VOCA programs or funding new programs under the VOCA cap reduce the amount otherwise available for state victim assistance grants.

In addition, according to the VOCA statute, up to five percent of amounts remaining in the Fund after the above annual allocations ("above the cap") may be used to replenish the Antiterrorism Emergency Reserve (AER) which is available to assist victims of international and domestic terrorism or mass violence and compensation to international terrorism victims.

2011 Administration Budget Proposal

The Administration's 2011 budget proposal would:

- Increase the annual cap on obligations from the Crime Victims Fund to $800 million—an increase of $95 million (13.5 percent).

- Create a new earmark from the Crime Victims Fund of $100 million in additional Office for Victims of Crime "discretionary grants for temporary shelter, transitional housing, and other assistance for victims of violence against women."

- Increase VOCA-funding for U.S. Attorney victim witness coordinators to $32.6 million to support 309 victim-witness services positions (including 139 new positions) and 240 FTE.

  The 2000 appropriations for U.S. Attorney victim witness coordinator positions was limited to 170 FTEs at $14.4 million a year, stating "the conferees expect that appropriate sums will be made available under this provision in succeeding fiscal years to continue this program at the current level." [Conf. Report 106-479] The 2011 request is an increase of 126 percent over the original appropriations.

- Increase VOCA-funding to $21.4 million to support 155 victim assistance specialist positions (including 33 new positions) and 155 FTE.

  VOCA funding for the FBI victim assistance positions was first provided in the 2001 appropriations and was limited to 112 FTEs at $7.4 million a year. [Conf. Report 106-1005]. The 2011 request is an increase of 189 percent over the original appropriations.

The Administration's 2011 budget proposal could reduce state VOCA victim assistance grants by as much as $20 million (5 percent).

A 2011 VOCA cap of $867 million will support state VOCA victim assistance grants with a 3.5 percent increase in real dollars over 2006 grants.

Stability of the Crime Victims Fund

There is more than enough money in the Crime Victims Fund to support state victim assistance grants without jeopardizing the Crime Victims Fund's long-term sustainability:

OMB estimates the opening 2010 balance in the Crime Victims Fund was $3.148 billion and that deposits will total $1.861 billion in 2010 and $999 million in 2011. Even with an $867 million VOCA cap, the Fund will continue to grow:

(in millions)	2010	2011

+ Deposits	1,861	999
Amount Available	5,009	5,303

VOCA funds more than 13,500 full-time equivalent paid jobs for victim advocates, counselors and others who provide direct victim assistance services. (Average salary for non-profit advocates is $25,000-30,000).

In addition, more than 36,000 volunteers (full time equivalent) donate their time and effort annually to provide direct services to crime victims through VOCA-funded projects.

IMPACT OF VOCA ASSISTANCE GRANT CUTS

Because of inadequate caps, state VOCA victim assistance grants experienced severe cutbacks from 2006 to 2008 which had a devastating impact on programs providing direct services to crime victims. The following is indicative of the impact of these cuts:

- 336,580 fewer crime victims received VOCA-funded assistance services in 2008 compared to 2007. This included 67,431 fewer victims of domestic violence, 12,673 adult victims of sexual assault and 38,409 child victims of physical and sexual abuse.

> "We are a bare-bones operation.... VOCA funding for staff and services is the only way most of our poor and homeless clients ever get assistance."
> –Nonprofit service provider (TX)

- The National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) 2008 census found that 60,799 crime victims were served a single day but 8,927 requests for services went unmet that day due to inadequate funding and resources.
- According to a survey of 1,000 providers conducted by the National Center for Victims of Crime (NCVC):
  - Nearly all respondents said that VOCA funding was "very important." This ranged from 91.5 percent for prosecutor-based programs to 99.5 percent for domestic violence programs.
  - Fifty-eight percent said they will have to serve fewer crime victims; 55 percent will reduce outreach to victim and 46 percent will provide fewer services.
  - Rural areas will be especially hard hit; many will have to close satellite offices and clients will have to travel 3 or 4 hours to receive services.
  - Many programs said they would use restored VOCA funding for services to elderly victims, teen victims, tribal victims, victims with disabilities, human trafficking, and homicide victims.

> "VOCA funding is the life-blood of an agency like ours dedicated solely to helping child victims of felony sexual and physical abuse crimes and their non-off ending family members."
> –Nonprofit service provider (AL)

- State VOCA assistance administrators reported that multiple funding cutbacks had severe cumulative impact. Examples --
  - Anticipated annual reductions in victim assistance subgrants of 8 percent in Washington State; 26 percent in Kansas; 27 percent in Pennsylvania; 16 percent in Iowa; 11 percent in Oregon; and 17 percent in Wisconsin.
  - Continued cuts in Minnesota's VOCA assistance grants meant the loss of the equivalent of five programs, eliminating services in five counties.
  - Since FY 2005, the number of Iowa victim service programs has decreased from 88 to 74.
  - Wyoming was unable to fund programs, such as Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners, Sexual Assault Response Teams and Child Advocacy Centers, that provide specialized crime victim services.
  - Massachusetts expects an across-the-board cut of 27 percent, reducing the number of funded programs from 90 to 65.

> "VOCA funding is vital in providing services to those who, through no fault of their own, have become victims of the most vicious of crimes. If this funding were not available, these victims would go without advocacy, medical, mental health, and/or legal services, which is crucial in a victim's healing process."
> –Nonprofit service provider (WV)

  - All states fear the loss of dedicated, experienced, and well-trained victim advocates because of the inability to pay a decent wage. The average annual salary for a victim service professional in South Carolina is $18,000-$24,000.
  - Oregon cut the number of victim advocate positions funded under its competitive VOCA projects from 18 FTEs to 4 FTEs.
  - Because of funding cuts in Pennsylvania, 20 percent of programs have waiting lists; 16.5 percent have discontinued programs; 22 percent imposed hiring freezes; 31 percent have decreased or eliminated staff and 13.7 percent implemented layoffs.
  - An Arizona sexual assault counseling service reported a five months' waiting period.

STATE ATTORNEYS GENERAL SUPPORT MORE FEDERAL FUNDING FOR THE VICTIMS OF CRIME ACT GRANTS

Washington, DC---Attorneys General from 54 states and territories signed a letter sent to members of Congress expressing their support for the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009 (S. 1340; HR 3402). The bill would increase the maximum amount of annual Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) grants to states over the next five years.

VOCA grants are allocated through the Crime Victims Fund, a special account dedicated to providing services to crime victims and made up entirely of fines and penalties paid by convicted federal offenders. The funds are crucial at the state level in educating victims, training for law enforcement, and administering programs providing compensation. The funds available to provide victims services have declined precipitously in recent years.

"Grants to state VOCA victim assistance programs fund services to more than four million victims of all types of crimes, including, domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, survivors of homicide victims, drunk driving crashes, stalking, identity theft, and elder abuse," the letter states.

The bill raises the cap on federal VOCA grants to $705 million for fiscal year 2010, and then increases the cap by 23 percent each year through 2014.

"...this reasonable and sustainable increase in federal support will help to ensure that we are able to continue to support victims at a high level and for years to come."

The standards and formula for allocating the funds will not change and the Crime Victims Fund is projected to maintain a sustainable balance of at least $800 million through 2014.

Dear Senators Leahy and Sessions and Representatives Conyers and Smith:

We, the undersigned Attorneys General, write to express support for, and ask for your help in passing, Senate Bill 1340 (companion, HR 3402). Also called the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009, the bill was introduced by Senators Patrick Leahy and Mike Crapo, and will increase the maximum amount of annual VOCA (Victims Of Crime Act) grants to states over the next five years.

As you know, VOCA grants provide much-needed support to victims and victim service agencies throughout the nation. The grants are allocated through the Crime Victims Fund, a special account dedicated to providing services to crime victims and made up entirely of fines and penalties paid by convicted federal offenders. States receive these grants and administer programs providing compensation and education for victims, and training for law enforcement. Grants to state VOCA victim assistance programs fund services to more than 4 million victims of all types of crimes, including, domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, survivors of homicide victims, drunk driving crashes, stalking, identity theft, and elder abuse.

Because annual VOCA caps have not kept pace with the costs of providing victim services, states have been doing more with less. Likewise, because the caps have not kept pace with income to the Crime Victims Fund, the balance in the fund has risen to $2 billion over the past two years. The Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009 will raise the cap on federal VOCA grants to $705 million for fiscal year 2010, and then increase the cap by 23 percent each year through 2014. The standards and formula for allocating the funds will not change, and even with the increased caps, the Crime Victims Fund is projected to maintain a sustainable balance of at least $800 million through 2014.

The funds available to provide victims services such as these have declined precipitously in recent years. Efforts are underway in the offices of VOCA state funds administrators to staunch that decline and to operate the Crime Victims Assistance and Prevention programming more efficiently. VOCA grants make up a large portion of this funding, and this reasonable and sustainable increase in federal support will help to ensure that we are able to continue to support victims at a high level and for years to come.

We urge you to preserve the intent of the offender-generated revenues and the assistance it provides to innocent victims by passing the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009.

Dear Chairman Mollohan and Ranking Member Wolf:

We are greatly appreciative of your subcommittee's efforts in the FY 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act to take important and positive steps to repair the serious erosion of support for critical services for victims of crime, and especially for your improvements regarding funding for the Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) through the Crime Victims Fund.

As you know, the Fund supports a wide range of important services for victims of crime. Some 4,200 agencies provide these services to more than 4 million victims of all types of crime every year, largely through the formula state victim assistance grants. Because of increases in other VOCA-funded program areas and lowered cap, these state grants were cut by nearly $90 million between 2006 and 2008.

For FY 2009, your committee recommended a significant increase in the annual limit of Fund obligations and recognized the inappropriateness of using the Crime Victims Fund (and other Office of Justice Program grant programs) for OJP management costs. We commend the subcommittee for these two steps that restored two-thirds of the previous reductions in VOCA funding for state victim assistance grants.

As work begins on the FY 2010 appropriations bill, we urge the subcommittee to continue this progress by further reflecting the growing needs for the important services that are supported with VOCA funds. We believe that a FY 2010 cap on Fund obligations of $705 million would complete the restoration of state assistance grants to the amount received in FY 2006, including inflation, and be a down payment to meet the growing needs of crime victims.

A recent survey of state VOCA victim assistance administrators demonstrates that additional funding is essential. Indeed, according to that survey, a minimum of $106 million in additional VOCA state victim assistance grants would be necessary to fill the identified gap in funding between requested funding needs and VOCA funds available. Our request for a $705 million cap in FY 2010 would meet just one-quarter of those additional needs.

We are also aware of the need to ensure that the Crime Victims Fund be able to sustain adequate funding levels for future victim services. Last year, OMB projected that the FY 2009 opening Fund balance would be $1.9 billion. We also know that based on public announcements of negotiated agreements in a number of Federal criminal cases, deposits into the Fund will increase significantly over the next several years. Thus, the Fund will be assured of maintaining a balance that can ensure adequate, stable support for VOCA victim services.

The original drafters of the VOCA legislation designed the Crime Victims Fund to be a self-sufficient source of support for victim services. Appropriators have consistently explained the purpose of the annual caps on VOCA obligations as a means to ensure a stable source of funding. Our request is consistent with both of these goals.

We also need to note that the previous four Presidential budgets sought to rescind the entire balance in the Fund. Congress has properly and resoundingly turned down those requests. Although lacking in details, the FY 2010 budget announced last month suggests that another Fund rescission proposal may in the works. Should that happen, we trust that Congress will again protect the Fund to ensure its continued availability to support victim services.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

POLICY RESOLUTION: Support of Passage of the "Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act"

COMMITTEE: Law and Criminal Justice

TYPE OF POLICY: Action

The National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) recommends to the Congress of the United States that an increasing minimum annual cap on obligations from the Crime Victims Fund be established as provided for in "The Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act of 2009."

WHEREAS, the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-473, 42 U.S.C. § 10601 et seq.) established the Crime Victims Fund, which is one of the main sources of money and support for crime victims and crime victims services all states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, U.S. Virgin Islands and territories; and

WHEREAS, the Crime Victims Fund provides critical funding for formula grants to states for victim compensation and victim assistance and for Federal discretionary grants, in addition to earmarks for Federal victim assistance within the United States Attorneys' Offices, FBI and Victim Notification System and the Children's Justice Act; and

WHEREAS, state compensation programs pay directly for medical care, counseling, lost wages and funerals for victims of domestic violence, child abuse, rape and homicide; and

WHEREAS, state victim assistance programs provide critical, often life-saving services, including crisis intervention, counseling, emergency shelter, child care and emergency transportation; and

WHEREAS, discretionary grants awarded by the Office for Victims of Crime to organizations fund demonstration projects, training and technical assistance to expand and improve the delivery of services to crime victims as well as support for services to victims of Federal offenses; and

WHEREAS, all funds placed in the Crime Victims Fund are derived from criminal fines and other penalties paid by offenders of Federal crimes and does not rely on any tax-generated revenues; and

WHEREAS, states may utilize compensation grants and victim assistance grants over a four-year period, thus enabling them to plan and manage the distribution of funds over time; and

WHEREAS, since 2000, Congress began capping annual obligations from the Crime Victims Fund which has limited the amount of funding that would otherwise have been available to support victim assistance services; and

WHEREAS, in the past eleven years, a total of nearly $9 billion has been deposited into the Crime Victims Fund while only $6 billion has been obligated resulting in an accumulated balance of nearly $3 billion in the Fund as of the beginning of 2010; and

WHEREAS, Congress has repeatedly affirmed that the cap was imposed to ensure that a stable level of funding remains available for use to fund crime victim programs in future years; and

WHEREAS, victim service programs in all states and jurisdictions are facing severe budgetary shortfalls because of cutbacks in other victim funding programs and private donations while the need for services continue to increase; and

[Note: should be S. 1340]

WHEREAS, the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act, S. 1304 introduced by Senators Patrick Leahy and Mike Crapo and H.R. 3402 introduced by Representatives Ted Poe and Jim Costa would establish increasing minimum caps on annual Crime Victims Fund obligations through the year 2014 which will significantly increase the amount available for state VOCA victim assistance grants and discretionary grants awarded by the Office for Victims of Crime without jeopardizing the long-term sustainability of the Fund; and

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED That the National Conference of State Legislatures fully supports purposes of the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act (S. 1304/H.R. 3402); and the purposes recommend that Congress enact the Crime Victims Fund Preservation Act; and

BE IT FINALLY RESOLVED that a copy of this resolution shall be sent to state legislative leaders, Congressional sponsors of S. 1304 and H.R. 3402, and members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Senate Committee on Appropriations, House Committee on the Judiciary, and the House Committee on Appropriations.
